P R E F A C E.

THE present edition of the Annotated Prayer Book has been carefully revised in every part, many additions have been made, and the form of the page has been so altered as to bring the references conveniently together, with letters of reference carried across the page through both columns in regular succession.

[1] THE HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION has been entirely rewritten, and much additional matter has been included. This is especially the case in the account of the Revision of 1661, where the constitutional manner in which the Ecclesiastical work of revision was ratified by the Civil authorities is now much more fully illustrated from the Journals of the Houses of Lords and Commons.

[2] THE NOTES ON THE MINOR FESTIVALS have also been entirely rewritten by their author, the Rev. Joseph Thomas Fowler of Durham, who has spared no pains in the endeavour to give them a critical value as trustworthy, though necessarily very condensed, accounts of the Saints commemorated on those days.

[3] THE GOSPELS AND EPISTLES have been printed at length, with some critical improvements which appear in the Manuscript of the Prayer Book, but which were unaccountably neglected in the Sealed Books and in subsequent editions. These improvements are more particularly referred to below.

[4] THE PSALMS have been revised in the same manner from the Manuscript of the Prayer Book and from the Great Bible. Brief historical notices of the Psalms have also been added to the Liturgical references given in former editions.

[5] THE INTRODUCTION TO THE ORDINAL has been much enlarged by the addition of Tables shewing, in as much detail as space will allow, the course of Ministerial descent and succession from our Lord and His Apostles to the living Clergy of the Church of England.

THE TEXT OF THE PRAYER BOOK in former editions was that of the Sealed Books, but care has been taken in this edition to bring it into exact agreement with that of the Manuscript subscribed by the Convocations of Canterbury and York, and annexed by Parliament to the Act of Uniformity. The Editor has made repeated applications for permission to collate this Manuscript; and, after much correspondence, the following final reply was received by him:—

“HOUSE OF LORDS, August 23rd, 1880.

SIR,—I am directed by the Clerk of the Parliaments to inform you that the Parliament Office Committee have had under consideration your request of the 8th of June last, for permission to correct the text of the forthcoming edition of your Annotated Prayer Book with the MS. Book formerly attached to the Act of Uniformity, and that the Committee are of opinion that your application should not be acceded to. I have further to inform you that the Report of the Committee has been agreed to by the House.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

ED. M. PARRATT.

The Editor had, however, by the kind permission of Lord Cairns, been permitted to make use of the Manuscript to some extent; and he is now able to say that the Text of the Annotated Book of Common Prayer, as printed in the following pages, faithfully represents that of the Manuscript except in respect to the conventional spelling and punctuation of the seventeenth century: and that where any important meaning depended on either spelling or punctuation they also have been faithfully reproduced.

Among the corrections of the Text which have been introduced into the present edition in consequence of this examination of the Manuscript, two are especially to be noticed; namely, the accurate reproduction of the Authorized Version of 1611 in the Gospels and Epistles; and of the “Great Bible” in the Psalms. For the Gospels and Epistles the Text of the Annotated Bible has been used, that Text being formed from a comparison of an Oxford Standard Text [minion, small 8vo, marg. ref.] with the Cambridge Authorized Version edited by Dr. Scrivener. The Italics have been carefully inserted as they appear in the same Text; and interpolated words, such as “Jesus said,” are distinguished from the actual Text by being printed within brackets. For the Psalms the Bible of 1539 has been used. The Italics of this (which are printed in Roman type in the original black-letter Bible) differ slightly here and there from those marked as such in the Manuscript of the Prayer Book; but as the intention of the Revisers of 1661 was to reproduce accurately the Psalter as it appears in “The Translation of the Great English Bible set forth and used in the time of King Henry the Eighth and Edward the Sixth,” it has been thought best to take Cranmer’s Bible, the Authorized Version of 1539, as the standard.

Since the original publication of the Annotated Prayer Book in 1866, many works have been published which help to throw light on the ancient devotional usages of the Church of England; and the Editor has made free use of these for the further improvement of this eighth edition. All these are included in the “List of Liturgical and Historical Authorities” printed at page xv, but particular mention should be made here of MESSRS. PROCTER AND WORDSWORTH’S edition of the Sarum Breviary; of Dr.

HENDERSON'S editions of the York Missal, Manual, and Pontifical, and of the Hereford Missal; of Mr. SIMMONS' admirably edited Lay Folk's Mass Book; of Mr. CHAMBERS' Worship of the Church of England in the Fourteenth and Nineteenth Centuries; and of the late Mr. SCUDAMORE'S Notitia Eucharistica.

During these seventeen years the Editor has also received many kind communications in which criticisms have been offered, corrections made, or improvements suggested. It would be impossible to refer to these in detail, but he desires to mention particularly the names of three special contributors to the original work, Professor Bright, the Rev. J. T. Fowler, and the Rev. T. W. Perry, as having rendered invaluable assistance towards weeding out errors and making the work generally more perfect. The Liturgical references to the Psalms were also revised with great care for a former edition by the Rev. C. F. S. Warren; and the enlarged Table of Ecclesiastical Colours has been contributed for this edition by the Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, Rector of Glaston. To other correspondents, both in England and America, the Editor begs to offer his sincere thanks for their communications, and to add that they have all received careful consideration, often with advantage to the work.

In conclusion, the Editor desires to say, that although he and his coadjutors have felt it to be their duty to go into much detail respecting ancient ritual, that the history of ritual might be the more effectually illustrated, it must not be supposed that the revived use of all such details is advocated in this work. So far as the Annotated Prayer Book may be supposed to exercise influence in any degree on a revival of ritual, the Editor's one great object has been that of assisting the Clergy and Laity of the Church of England in the establishment of a godly, manly, and rational system, by which He Who originally ordained and instituted ritual observances may be honoured, and by which they who offer them may be built up in faith and reverence.

October 1883.

PREFACE TO FORMER EDITIONS.

THIS work is an attempt to gather into one concise view all the most important information that is extant respecting the devotional system of the Church of England as founded on the Book of Common Prayer.

Much research and study have been expended upon this subject during the last quarter of a century ; and the Prayer Book has been largely illustrated by the works of Sir William Palmer, Mr. Maskell, and Archdeacon Freeman. Many smaller books than these have also been published with the object of bringing into a compact form the results of wide and learned investigations : the most trustworthy and complete of all such books being Mr. PROCTER'S excellent History of the Book of Common Prayer, with a Rationale of its Offices. But it has long seemed to the Editor of the present volume that a work of another kind was wanted, which (without superseding any previous one of established merit) should exhibit more concisely and perspicuously the connection between the ancient and the modern devotional system of the Church of England by placing the two side by side, as far as the former is represented in the latter : and which should also give a general condensed illustration of our present Prayer Book from all those several points of view from which it must be regarded if it is to be properly understood and appreciated.

Perhaps there is no one book, except the Holy Bible, which has been so much written about as the Prayer Book since the Reformation, and perhaps so much was never written about any one book which left so much still unsaid. The earliest class of commentators is represented by John Boys, who died Dean of Canterbury in 1619, and who had in earlier life published a Volume of Postils which were preceded by a diffuse comment on the principal parts of the Prayer Book. In these there is much ponderous learning, but a total absence of any Liturgical knowledge. Bishop Andrewes and Archbishop Laud began to open out the real meaning and the true bearing of our Offices, being well acquainted with the Greek Liturgies, and having some knowledge, at least, of the Breviaries and the Missals of the Church of England. L'Estrange, Sparrow, Cosin, and Elborow represent a still further advance towards a true comprehension of the Prayer Book ; Bishop Cosin especially being thoroughly familiar with the Sarum Missal, and perhaps with the Breviary and other Office-books of the old Church of England. In the latter part of the seventeenth century, Liturgical studies seem, indeed, to have been taken up by many of the Clergy, especially by the Nonjurors, and interleaved Prayer Books are preserved in the Bodleian and other libraries which testify to the industry that was shewn in illustrating its text, especially from the Greek Liturgies. None seem so thoroughly to have qualified themselves for the task of illustrating and interpreting the Book of Common Prayer as Fothergill, a nonjuror, whose interleaved Prayer Book in eleven large volumes, together with his unmatched collection of old English Service-books, is now in the Chapter Library at York.<sup>1</sup> But his notes and quotations were not digested into order: and although a work founded upon them would have been invaluable in days when there was no better authority than the superficial Wheatley, they have since been superseded by the publications of Palmer and Maskell.

The works of Comber, Wheatley, and Shepherd, were doubtless of great value in their way; but it is melancholy to observe that they tended in reality to alienate the minds of their readers from all thought of Unity and Fellowship with the Church of our Fathers, and set up two idols of the imagination, a Church originated in the sixteenth century, and a Liturgy "compiled," and in the main invented, by the Reformers. There is not a single published work on the Prayer Book previous to the publication of PALMER'S Origines Liturgicæ in 1832, which makes the least attempt to give a truthful view of it, so thoroughly was this shallow conceit of a newly-invented Liturgy ingrained in the minds of even our best writers.

Notwithstanding, therefore, the great abundance of works on the Book of Common Prayer, there seems to be still ample room for one like the present, in which the spirit of our Offices is illustrated from their origin and history as well as from their existing form; and in which a large body of material is placed before the reader by means whereof he may himself trace out that history, and interpret that spirit.

The object of the present work may be stated, then, to be that of illustrating and explaining the Devotional system of the Church of England by (1) a careful comparison of the Prayer Book with the original sources from which it is derived, (2) a critical examination of all the details of its history, and (3) a full consideration of the aspect in which it appears when viewed by the light of those Scriptural and primitive principles on which the Theology of the Church of England is founded.

For the plan of the work, the general substance of it, and for all those portions the authorship of which is not otherwise indicated, the Editor must be held responsible. For the details of the text and notes in those parts which have been contributed by others (excepting the Marginal References), the authors must, of course, be considered individually responsible. Circumstances have arisen which threw into the Editor's hands a larger proportion of the work than he originally intended to undertake, especially in connection with the Communion and the Occasional Offices; but he does not wish to claim any indulgence on this account, being fully assured that a commentary of the kind here offered ought to be judged solely by its merits as an authentic interpreter and guide. The Introduction to the Communion Service and the earlier portion of the Notes upon it are by the Editor.

In the Offices for the Visitation and Communion of the Sick, the Editor has to acknowledge valuable assistance from a friend who does not permit his name to be used. Those Offices have been treated in a rather more homiletic method than most of the collection of ancient Service-books, which, with the rest of his Library, he left to Skipwith parish, on condition of a room being built to receive them. This not being done, the widow applied to Chancery, and by a decree of that court the books were all handed over to York Minster. Mr. Fothergill also left an endowment of £50 a year for a catechist at Pontefract. His volumes shew that he was a most industrious reader others, in the hope that the Notes may assist in persuading both Lay and Clerical readers to desire a more pointed and systematic application of the Church's gifts in time of Sickness than that which is offered by the prayers ordinarily used.

The text is, of course, that of the Sealed Books; but some liberty has occasionally been taken with the punctuation, which, whether in the Sealed Books, or in the copies sent out by the Universities and the Queen's Printers, is in a most unsatisfactory condition. In the Psalms and Canticles, a diamond-shaped "point" has been used for the purpose of more plainly marking the musical division of verses, as distinguished from the grammatical punctuation. The spelling is also modernized throughout.

In conclusion, the Editor begs to tender his grateful thanks to many friends who have assisted him with their suggestions and advice. Those thanks are also especially due to the Rev. T. W. Perry, and to the Rev. W. D. Macray of the Bodleian Library, who have gone through all the proof-sheets, and have been largely instrumental in securing to the reader accuracy in respect to historical statements.

The Editor is indebted to the Rev. JOHN BACCHUS DYKES, M.A., and Doctor of Music, Vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham, and late Precentor of Durham Cathedral, for the Second Section of the Ritual Introduction, on THE MANNER OF PERFORMING DIVINE SERVICE.

The Third Section of the Ritual Introduction, on THE ACCESSORIES OF DIVINE SERVICE, is by the Rev. THOMAS WALTER PERRY, Vicar of Ardeleigh, Essex, author of Lawful Church Ornaments, etc. etc.

The Rev. JOSEPH THOMAS FOWLER, M.A., F.S.A., Hebrew Lecturer, and Vice-Principal of Bishop Hatfield Hall, Durham, is the writer of the Notes on the MINOR HOLYDAYS of the Calendar.

The Rev. WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Oxford, and author of A History of the Church from A.D. 313 to A.D. 451, Ancient Collects, etc. etc., is the writer of the INTRODUCTION TO, AND NOTES ON, THE LITANY. Also of the ESSAY ON THE SCOTTISH LITURGY in the Appendix.

The Rev. PETER GOLDSMITH MEDD, M.A., Rector of North Cerney, Gloucestershire, Canon of St. Albans, and late Fellow of University College, Oxford, co-Editor with Dr. Bright of the Latin Prayer Book, and author of Household Prayer, etc., is the principal writer of the NOTES ON THE COMMUNION OFFICE from the Church Militant Prayer to the end; and the compiler of the APPENDIX to that Office. Mr. Medd has also contributed the references to the hymns of the seasons.

The Rev. MACKENZIE E. C. WALCOTT, B.D., F.R.S.L., F.S.A., of Exeter College, Oxford, Precentor and Prebendary of Chichester Cathedral, and author of The English Ordinal, etc. etc., has contributed the INTRODUCTION TO, AND NOTES ON, THE ORDINAL.

The Editor also desires to acknowledge his obligations to the valuable libraries of the Cathedrals of Durham and York; to Bishop Cosin's Library, and the Routh Library, at Durham; and to the Hon. and Rev. Stephen Willoughby Lawley, M.A., formerly Rector of Eserick, and Sub-Dean of York, to whom the reader is indebted for some rare mediæval illustrations of the Occasional Offices, and whose courtesy has otherwise facilitated that portion of the work.

AN

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PRAYER BOOK.

THE Book of Common Prayer remained altogether unaltered for more than two centuries, the new Tables of Lessons of 1871 being the first change made since it was revised, after the great persecution of the Church by the Puritans, in 1661. But the various stages of its development from the ancient formularies of the Church of England extended through a period of one hundred and fifty years; and the history of that development is of the highest importance to those who wish to understand and use the Prayer Book, as well as of considerable interest to all from the fact of its being an integral part of our national history.

The Church of England has had distinctive formularies of its own as far back as the details of its customs in respect to Divine Worship can be traced. The earliest history of these formularies is obscure, but there is good reason to believe that they were derived, through Lyons, from the great patriarchate of Ephesus, in which St. John spent the latter half of his life. There was an intimate connection between the Churches of France and England in the early ages of Christianity, of which we still have a memorial in the ancient French saints of our Calendar; and when St. Augustine came to England, he found the same rites used as he had observed in France, remarking upon them that they differed in many particulars from those of Rome. It is now a well-established opinion that this ancient Gallican Liturgy came from Ephesus.<sup>1</sup> But there can be no doubt that several waves of Christianity, perhaps of Apostolic Christianity, passed across our island; and the Ephesine or Johannine element in the ancient Prayer Books of the Church of England probably represents but the strongest of those waves, and the predominating influence which mingled with itself others of a less powerful character.

It was in the sixth century [A.D. 596] that the great and good St. Augustine undertook his missionary work among the West Saxons. The mission seems to have been sent from Rome by Gregory the Great under the impression that the inhabitants of England were altogether heathen; and if he or Augustine were not unacquainted with what St. Chrysostom, St. Jerome, and others had said respecting the early evangelization of Britain, they had evidently concluded that the Church founded in Apostolic times was extinct. When Augustine arrived in England, he found that, although the West Saxons were heathen, and had driven the Church into the highlands of Wales by their persecution, yet seven bishops remained alive, and a large number of clergy, who had very strong views about the independence of the Church of England, and were unprepared to receive the Roman missionary except on terms of equality. The chief difficulty felt by St. Augustine arose from the difference just referred to between the religious system of Italy, the Church of which was the only one the missionary priests were at that time acquainted with, and the systems of France and England. This difficulty, a great one to a man so conscientious and simple-minded, he submitted to Gregory in the form of questions, and among them was the following one on the subject of Divine Worship: "Whereas the Faith is one, why are the customs of Churches various? and why is one manner of celebrating the Holy Communion used in the holy Roman Church, and another in that of the Gauls?" This diversity becomes even more prominent in the words which Augustine addressed to the seven Bishops of the ancient Church of England, when they met in conference at the place afterwards called St. Augustine's Oak. "You act," said he, "in many particulars contrary to our customs, or rather, to the customs of the universal Church, and yet, if you will comply with me in these three points, viz. to keep Easter at the due time; to perform the administration of baptism, by which we are born again to God, according to the custom of the holy Roman and Apostolic Church; and jointly with us to preach the Word of God to the English nation, we will readily tolerate all your other customs, though contrary to our own." The answer of St. Gregory contained wise and Catholic advice; and to it we owe, under Providence, the continued use of an independent form of Divine Worship in the Church of England from that day to the present. "You, my brother," said Gregory, "are acquainted with the customs of the Roman Church in which you were brought up. But it is my pleasure that if you have found anything either in the Roman or the Gallican or any other Church which may be more acceptable to Almighty God, you carefully make choice of the same; and sedulously teach the Church of the English, which is at present new in the Faith, whatsoever you can gather from the several Churches. For things are not to be loved for the sake of places, but places for the sake of good things. Select, therefore, from each Church those things that are pious, religious, and correct; and when you have made these up into one body, instil this into the minds of the English for their Use." [GREG. Opera, ii. 1151, Bened. ed.; BEDE'S Eccles. Hist. i. 27.] The Liturgy of the Roman Church spoken of in this reply is represented by the ancient Sacramentary of St. Gregory, to which such frequent references are given in the following pages: that of the Gallican Church is also partly extant,<sup>1</sup> and has been shewn (as was mentioned before) to be derived from the Liturgy of the Church of Ephesus. The words "any other Church" might be supposed to refer to an independent English Liturgy, but there is no reference to any in the question to which Gregory is replying, and he evidently knew nothing of England except through Augustine. From other writers it seems that the Liturgy of England or Britain before this time had been the same with that of France; but the native Clergy always alleged that their distinctive customs were derived from St. John.

Being thus advised by St. Gregory, the holy missionary endeavoured to deal as gently as possible with those whose customs of Divine Worship differed from his own; but his prepossessions in favour of the Roman system were very strong, and he used all his influence to get it universally adopted throughout the country.

Uniformity in all details was not, however, attainable. The national feeling of the ancient Church steadily adhered to the ancient rite for many years; while the feeling of the Church founded by St. Augustine was in favour of a rite more closely in agreement with that of Rome. As collision was the first natural consequence of this state of things, so some degree of amalgamation as naturally followed in course of time; that which was local, or national, mingling with that which was foreign in the English devotional system, as it did in the English race itself. Some attempts were made, as in the Council of Cloveshoo [A.D. 747], to enforce the Roman Liturgy upon all the dioceses of the country, but it is certain that the previous devotional customs of the land had an exceedingly tenacious hold upon the Clergy and the people, and that no efforts could ever wholly extirpate them.<sup>2</sup>

At the time of the Conquest another vigorous attempt was made to secure uniformity of Divine Service throughout the country, and with the most pious intentions. St. Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, and Chancellor of England,<sup>3</sup> collecting together a large body of skilled clergy, The "Use" of Salis- remodelled the Offices of the Church, and left behind him the famous Portiforium bury. or Breviary of Sarum, containing the Daily Services; together with the Sarum Missal, containing the Communion Service; and, probably, the Sarum Manual, containing the Baptismal and other "occasional" Offices. These, and some other Service-books, constituted the "Sarum Use," that is, the Prayer Book of the diocese of Salisbury. It was first adopted for that diocese in A.D. 1085, and

Bishop of Salisbury [A.D. 1078-1099] after the foundation of that diocese by the consolidation of the Sees of Ramsbury and Sherborne in A.D. 1058 and 1075. St. Osmund was the principal builder of the Cathedral of Old Sarum, a small fortified hill a few miles distant from the present city. This cathedral was taken down, and that of New Sarum, or Salisbury, the existing cathedral, built in the place of it, in A.D. 1225: the remains of St. Osmund being removed thither.

was introduced into other parts of England so generally that it became the principal devotional Rule of the Church of England, and continued so for more than four centuries and a half: "the Church of Salisbury," says a writer of the year 1256, "being conspicuous above all other Churches like the sun in the heavens, diffusing its light everywhere, and supplying their defects."<sup>1</sup> Other Uses continued to hold their place in the dioceses of Lincoln, Hereford, and Bangor, and through the greater part of the Province of York; though in the diocese of Durham the Salisbury system was followed. At St. Paul's Cathedral, and perhaps throughout the diocese of London, there was an independent Use until A.D. 1414. For about a hundred and fifty years before the Prayer Book era there was some displacement of the Sarum Use by Roman customs in Monasteries, Monastic Churches (though not at Durham), and perhaps in Parish Churches served by Monastic clergy: but the "Use" itself was not superseded to any great extent even in these. The Salisbury Use, that of York, and that of Hereford, are well known to modern ritualists.<sup>2</sup> They appear to be traceable to a common origin; but they differ in so many respects from the Roman Breviary, and even from the Missal (with which a closer agreement might have been expected), that they clearly derive their common origin from a source independent of the Roman Church. And, whatever quarter they may have been derived from in the first instance, it is equally clear that the forms of Divine Service now known to us under these names represent a system which was naturalized so many ages ago, that it had been entitled to the name of an independent English rite for at least a thousand years.

During all this time the public Services of the Church were said in Latin, for Latin had been during some ages the most generally understood language in the world, and was spoken vernacularly in France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy (the modern languages of all which countries were formed from it) down to a comparatively late time, as it is now spoken in Hungary. In England the Latin language was almost as familiar to educated persons as it was upon the Continent; but the poor and uneducated knew no other tongue than their native English, and for these the Church did the best that could be done to provide some means by which they might make an intelligent use of Divine Service.

From the earliest periods we find injunctions imposed upon the Clergy that they should be careful to teach the people the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments in their own tongue. Thus, in A.D. 740 there was a canon of Egbert, Archbishop of York, to the effect, "that every priest do with great exactness instil the Lord's Prayer and Creed into the people committed to him, and shew them to endeavour after the knowledge of the whole of religion, and the practice of Christianity."<sup>3</sup> About the same time, in the Southern Province, it is ordered "that they instil the Creed into them, that they may know what to believe, and what to hope for."<sup>4</sup> Two centuries later there is a canon of Ælfric, Archbishop of Canterbury, enjoining the clergy to "speak the sense of the Gospel to the people in English, and of the Pater noster, and the Creed, as often as he can, for the inciting of the people to know their belief, and retaining their Christianity."<sup>5</sup> Similar injunctions are to be found in the laws of Canute in the eleventh century, the constitutions of Archbishop Peckham in the thirteenth, and in the canons of many diocesan synods, of various dates in the mediæval period. Many expositions of the Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, and other principal formulæ, are also to be found in English, and these give testimony to the same anxious desire of the Church to make the most use possible of the language spoken by the poor of the day.<sup>6</sup> Interlinear translations of some, at least, of the Offices were also provided, especially of the Litany, just as the English and Welsh Prayer Book, or the Latin and English Missal of the Roman Catholics, are printed in parallel columns in modern times.

But in days when books were scarce, and when few could read, little could be done towards giving to the people at large this intelligent acquaintance with the Services except by oral instruction of the kind indicated. Yet the writing-rooms of the Monasteries did what they could towards multiplying books for the purpose; and some provision was made, even for the poorest, by means of horn-books, on which the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Angelic Salutation were written. The following is an

engraving made from one of two which were found by the present writer under the floor of Over Church, near Cambridge, in 1857. It is of a late date, and has had "In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," in the place of the Angelic Salutation; but it is given as an illustration of the traditional practice, and because it is of special interest from being found in a church.

While these horn-books were thus provided for the poor, the Scriptorium of the Monastery also provided Prymers in English and Latin for those who could afford the expensive luxury of a book. The Latin Prymers are well known under the name of "Books of Hours." Vernacular Prymers exist which were written as early as the fourteenth century, and many relics of old English devotion of that date still remain.<sup>1</sup> These English Prymers contained about one-third of the Psalms, the Canticles, the Apostles' Creed, with a large number of the prayers, anthems, and perhaps hymns. They continued to be published up to the end of Henry VIII's reign,<sup>2</sup> and, in a modified form, even at a later date: and they must have familiarized those who used them with a large portion of the Services, even when they did not understand the Latin in which those Services were said by the clergy and choirs.

The style of the language in which these early English Prayer Books were written varies with the age, and the following specimens will shew how much change our native tongue has undergone in the course of the thirteen hundred years during which we can trace it.

printer, at whose press many of the Breviaries and Missals used in England were printed. They say that, among other books, he had printed English Prymers for forty years, that is, from the end of the fifteenth century. [State Papers, Dom. Hen. VIII. i. 589.]

The ancient formularies had, however, by change of circumstances, become unsuitable in several respects for the Church of England. They had grown into a form in which they were extremely well adapted (from a ritual point of view) for the use of religious communities, but were far too complex for that of parochial congregations. When monasteries were abolished it was found that the devotional system of the Church must be condensed if it was to be used by mixed congregations, and by those who were not specially set apart for that life of rule and continual worship for which monastic communities were intended. The Latin Services had, indeed, never been familiar to the people of England, any more than they are to the Continental laity at the present day. In the place of Service-books the laity were provided with devotional expositions of the Services; sometimes in English rhyme, like the "Lay Folk's Mass Book,"<sup>1</sup> and sometimes in prose, like "Our Lady's Mirror."<sup>2</sup> When manuscript English Bibles became common in the fourteenth century, they usually contained a list of the Epistles and Gospels, and similar lists are also found in a separate form.<sup>3</sup> Such helps and guides would go far to remedy the inconvenience of a Latin Service to those who could or would use them: but probably the number of such persons was never very large.

There was, indeed, a popular service which was held about nine o'clock in the morning on Sundays and Festivals, consisting of the Aspersion with blessed, or holy, water, followed by the Bidding of Bedes, and a Sermon or Homily; and in this service the vernacular was used long before the disuse of Latin. The Aspersion Service, as given, with the musical notation, in a Breviary<sup>4</sup> belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, is as follows:—

"Remember your promys made in baptyng.
And chrystys mercyfull bloudshedyng.

In the library of St. John's College, Oxford, there is also a Processionale [MS. 167] with English rubrics, which once belonged to Sion, and was written in the middle of the fifteenth century. [Mirror, Introd. p. xlv.]

<sup>4</sup> This Breviary, perhaps the finest which has been preserved, belonged to the Parish Church of Arlingham in Gloucestershire, then in the Diocese of Worcester, and was written in the early part of the fifteenth century. The Aspersion Service was inserted at a later time, the writing being dated by experts of the highest authority as belonging to the middle of the century, from A.D. 1440 to 1460. There is a critical paper on this Aspersion by Mr., now Bishop, Kingdon, in the Wiltshire Archaeological Magazine for 1879, pages 62-70, with a photograph of the words and music.

While this anthem was being sung the priest, with the aquæ-bajulus, or holy water-bearer, and the choir walked in procession down the nave of the church, the former sprinkling the congregation with the water; and it is probable that the whole of the fifty-first Psalm was sung. After this followed the Bidding Prayer in English, several Collects in Latin, and then the Sermon.

But although this English Service was evidently in very general use, it does not seem as if the idea of entirely Vernacular Services spread very widely among the clergy and people of England until after the dissolution of the monasteries. Then the gradual but slow approximation to such a system received a great impetus, and Latimer found a very hearty response in the minds of the clergy when, speaking of baptism in his sermon before the Convocation of A.D. 1536, he exclaimed, "Shall we evermore in ministering it speak Latin, and not English rather, that the people may know what is said and done?" [LATIMER'S Sermons, i. 52, ed. 1824.] The assent to this change was in fact so unanimous among the clergy that Archbishop Cranmer wrote to Queen Mary respecting the Committee appointed for the revision of the Services by Henry VIII., that although it was composed of men who held different opinions, they "agreed without controversy (not one saying contrary) that the Service of the Church ought to be in the mother tongue." [JENKYN'S Cranmer's Rem. i. 375.] Ridley also writes to his chaplain that he had conferred with many on the subject, and "never found man (so far as I do remember), neither old nor new, gospeller nor papist, of what judgment soever he was, in this thing to be of a contrary opinion." [RIDLEY'S Works, p. 340.]

With this general inclination of the national mind towards the use of the national language alone in Divine Service there arose also that necessity for condensed services which has previously been referred to. There are no means of deciding how far the original Use of Salisbury differed from that which is known to us. The copies remaining belong to a much later period than the eleventh century, and there is reason to think that some accretions gathered around the ancient devotions of the Church of England from the prevalence of Continental influences during the reigns of the Norman and Angevin kings, and from the great increase of monastic establishments: the shorter and more primitive form of responsive public service being found insufficient, especially for those who formed themselves into societies for the purpose of carrying on an unceasing round of prayer and praise in the numerous Minsters which then covered the face of our land. But now that the "religious" of the Church were to be a separate body no longer, Divine Providence led her to feel the way gradually towards a return to the earlier practice of Christianity; the idea of a popular and mixed congregation superseded that of a special monastic one; and the daily worship being transferred from the Cloister to the Parish Church, its normal form of Common Prayer was revived in the place of the Prayers of a class or the solitary recitation of the Parish Priest. No blame was cast upon the former system for its complexity; but the times were changed, a new order of things was becoming established, and, although the principles of the Church are unchangeable, so entire a remoulding of society entailed of necessity a corresponding adaptation of her devotional practice, both for the honour of God and the good of souls, to the wants that had come to light.

Some slight attempts were made at a reformation of the Sarum Offices in editions of the Breviary which were printed in 1516 and 1531, and a Missal of 1509 is even described as "amended." There was little variation, indeed, from the old forms; but there was a distinct initiation of the principles which were afterwards carried out more fully in the Book of Common Prayer of 1549. The rubrics were somewhat simplified; Holy Scripture was directed to be read in order without omission; and in carrying out the latter direction the Lessons, which had been much shortened in actual use [see note to Table of Lessons], were restored to their ancient length.

tribution of the eulogia or blessed bread. The two are explained in the ninth of the Ten Articles of A.D. 1536 in the following words: "As concerning the rites and ceremonies of Christ's Church; . . . as sprinkling of holy water to put us in remembrance of our Baptism, and the blood of Christ sprinkled for our redemption upon the cross; giving of holy bread, to put us in remembrance of the Sacrament of the altar, that all Christian men be one body mysticall of Christ as the bread is made of many grains, and yet but one loaf: and to put us in remembrance of the receiving the holy sacrament and body of Christ, the which we ought to receive in right charity: which in the beginning of Christ's Church, men did more often receive than they use nowadays to do." [LOYD'S Formul. of Faith, p. 15.] The fourth of some injunctions issued by the King's Visitors in A.D. 1548, also orders both rites to be used every Sunday, with the words given above. "And in like manner before the dealing of the holy bread these words:

'Of Christ's body this is a token,
Which on the cross for our sins was broken;
Wherefore of his death if you will be partakers,
Of vice and sin you must be forsakers.'

And the clerk in the like manner shall bring down the Pax, and standing without the church door shall say boldly to the people these words: 'This is a token of joyful peace, which is betwixt God and men's conscience: Christ alone is the Peacemaker, Which straitly commands peace between brother and brother.' And so long as ye use these ceremonies, so long shall ye use these significations." [BURNET'S Reform. v. 186, Pocock's ed.]

In 1531 this revised edition of the Salisbury Portiforium or Breviary was reprinted, and two years later a revised Missal was published; in the latter special care being taken to provide an apparatus for enabling the people to find out the places of the Epistles and Gospels. And though no authorized translation of the Bible had yet been allowed by Henry VIII., Cranmer and the other Bishops began to revise Tyndale's translation in 1534, and encouraged the issue of books containing the Epistles and Gospels in English, of which many editions were published between 1538 and the printing of the Prayer Book.<sup>1</sup> A fresh impulse seems thus to have been given to the use of the old English Prymers, in which a large portion of the Services (including the Litany) was translated into the vulgar tongue, and also a third of the Psalms, and to which in later times the Epistles and Gospels were added.

In 1540 the Psalter was printed by Grafton in Latin and English [Bodleian Lib., Douce BB. 71], and there seems to have been an earlier edition of a larger size about the year 1534. The Psalter had long been rearranged, so that the Psalms were said in consecutive order, in some churches at least, according to our modern practice, instead of in the ancient but complex order of the Breviary. [See Introd. to Psalter.]

In 1541 and 1544 other amended editions of the Salisbury Breviary were published, in the title-pages of which it is said to be purged from many errors. By order of Convocation [March 3, 1541] the Salisbury Use was now also adopted throughout the whole Province of Canterbury, and an uniformity secured which had not existed since the days of Augustine. Nor is it an insignificant circumstance that the book was now printed by Whitechurch (from whose press issued the Book of Common Prayer), instead of being printed in Paris as formerly.

That these revisions of the ancient Service-books were steps towards a Reformed English Breviary or Portiforium is confirmed by the course of events. Something in the nature of a confirmation is also afforded by a comparison of these attempts with others of a similar kind which were made abroad towards obtaining a Reformed Roman Breviary. Some years after the Convocation of the Church of England had issued the 1516 edition of the Salisbury Use, Leo X. gave directions to Zaccharia Ferreri de Vicence, Bishop of Guarda, in Portugal, to prepare a new version of the Breviary Hymns. This was done, and the volume published under the authority of Clement VII. in 1525, with this prominent announcement of a Reformed Breviary on the title-page: "Breviarium Ecclesiasticum ab eodem Zach. Pont. longe brevius et facilius redditum et ab omni errore purgatum propediem exhibit." The promised reform was actually effected by Cardinal Quignonez, a Spanish Bishop, and was published under the same authority as the Hymnal, in 1535-36. But this Reformed Roman Breviary was intended chiefly, if not entirely, for the use of the clergy and monks in their private recitations; and its introduction in some places for choir and public use eventually led to its suppression in 1568. No provision whatever was made (as there had been in connection with the English reform) for adapting it to the use of the laity. During the whole forty years of its use there is no trace of any attempt to connect the Breviary of Quignonez with vernacular translations of Prayers or Scriptures. And, although it was undoubtedly an initiatory step in the same direction as that taken by our own Reformers (who indeed used the Breviary of Quignonez in their subsequent proceedings), yet it was never followed up, nor intended to be followed up; and the object of the Roman reform throws out in stronger light that of the English.<sup>2</sup>

A very decided advance towards the Prayer Book system had been made in 1536, when in the Province of York, and almost certainly in that of Canterbury also, an Archiepiscopal order was issued that "all curates and heads of congregations, religious and other, privileged and other, shall every holy-day read the Gospel and the Epistle of that day out of the English Bible, plainly and distinctly; and they that have such grace shall make some declaration either of the one or of both (if

<sup>2</sup> The Reformed Breviary of Cardinal Quignonez was begun under Clement VII.—"ejusque hortatu et jussu"—who excommunicated Henry VIII. It was afterwards approved and recommended to the clergy by Paul III. in a Bull dated in a Paris edition of 1536 as issued on February 3, 1535, but in an Antwerp black-letter edition in the Bodleian Library as issued on July 3, 1536. It appears to have gone through at least seventeen editions, being printed at Paris, Lyons, Antwerp, and Rome, in folio, quarto, octavo, and duodecimo. The latest edition was printed in 1566, and the Breviary was suppressed in 1568. The title-pages vary, and so do the prefaces, and if there are not two recensions of the Breviary, there certainly are two of the preface to it; which, as is shewn further on, was largely used by the writer of the Preface to the Prayer Book of 1549.

For a full account of Quignonez's Breviary, see CLAUDE JOLY'S De verbis Usuardi Dissertatio, Senonis, 1669, pp. 93-103; ZACCAR. *Bibl. the time may serve) every holy-day.”<sup>1</sup> In 1542 a further advance was made by the Convocation, which ordered that the Salisbury Breviary should be used all over England, a canon being passed which enacted “that every Sunday and Holy-day throughout the year, the curate of every parish church, after the Te Deum and Magnificat, shall openly read unto the people one chapter of the New Testament in English without exposition; and when the New Testament is read over then to begin the Old.”<sup>2</sup>

But all the measures which had been hitherto taken by the ecclesiastical authorities of England were plainly regarded as being only of a temporary nature. No more Service-books were allowed to be printed than were absolutely necessary for the performance of Divine Worship, as it was seen that a much more thorough alteration of them must take place, and in this session of 1542-43 Convocation entered upon that course of Liturgical revision which resulted in the Book of Common Prayer.

At one of its early meetings the president read Letters of Business from the Crown, in which His Majesty directed “that all Mass-books, Antiphoners, Portuises, in the Church of England should be newly examined, corrected, reformed, and castigated from all manner of mention of the Bishop of Rome’s name, from all apocryphas, feigned legends, superstitious orations, collects, versicles, and responses; that the names and memories of all saints which be not mentioned in the Scripture or authentical doctors should be abolished and put out of the same books and calendars, and that the service should be made out of the Scripture and other authentic doctors.” [WILKINS’ Concil. iii: 863.] The Convocation at once set to work on the business thus formally placed before them by the Crown; and so important was it considered, that no member was allowed to absent himself from their meetings without special leave of absence. A Committee was then appointed for carrying out the details of this work, the original members of it being Shaxton, Bishop of Salisbury, ex officio Precentor of the Province of Salisbury; Goodrich, Bishop of Ely; and six proctors of the Lower House. This Committee continued in existence for seven years, and its last work was the Book of Common Prayer published in 1549. But for part of the seven years its public action was restrained by the “Statute of Six Articles,”<sup>3</sup> which, in point of fact, made such labours highly penal. There is good reason to think that Henry VIII. was himself the author of this statute, and it was certainly passed by his influence. The Bishops had vigorously opposed it in the House of Lords with an eleven days’ debate, and their experience shewed them that any reformation of the ancient services must be carried on with extreme caution while this law was in operation under so despotic a monarch.<sup>4</sup> But as soon as Convocation met, after the death of Henry, a resolution was passed, “That the works of the Bishops

<sup>2</sup> WILKINS’ Concil. iii. 863. It is most likely that the Gospels and Epistles were read in Latin first and then in English. There is an interesting anonymous letter to the Duke of Norfolk, which shews that Cranmer had become acquainted with this plan in Germany: “Although I had a chaplain yet could I not be suffered to have him sing Mass, but was constrained to hear their Mass which is but one in a Church, and that is celebrated in form following. The Priest, in vestments after our manner, singeth everything in Latin, as we use, omitting suffrages. The Epistle he readeth in Latin. In the mean time the sub-deacon goeth into the pulpit and readeth to the people the Epistle in their vulgar; after they peruse other things as our priests do. Then the Priest readeth softly the Gospel in Latin. In the mean space the Deacon goeth into the pulpit and readeth aloud the Gospel in the Almaigne tongue. Mr. Cranmer saith it was shewed to him that in the Epistles and Gospels they kept not the order that we do, but do peruse every day one chapter of the New Testament. Afterwards the Priest and the quire do sing the Credo as we do; the secret and preface they omit, and the Priest singeth with a high voice the words of the Consecration. And after the Levation the Deacon turneth to the people, telling to them in Almaigne tongue a long process how they should prepare themselves to the Communion of the Flesh and Blood of Christ. And then may every man come that listeth, without going to Confession.” This letter was written from Nuremberg about 1530. [ELLIS’ Orig. Lett. III. ii. 192.]

either of six short statements which embodied the chief points of doctrine then brought into controversy. It formed the key of the position for the time; and, knowing this, Cranmer and other Bishops maintained the debate for eleven days in the hope of preventing the bill from passing, he himself arguing against it for three days. The penalties annexed to this Act were, for preaching or writing against the first article, burning (without pardon on recantation); imprisonment for life, with forfeiture, for preaching or writing against any of the others, with death for the second offence. In his reply to the Devonshire rebels, Archbishop Cranmer writes respecting this statute (which they wished to have restored), “If the King’s Majesty himself had not come into the parliament house, those laws had never passed.” [STRYPE’S Cranmer, ii. 515, Ecc. Hist. Soc.] and others, who by the command of the Convocation have laboured in examining, reforming, and publishing the Divine Service, may be produced, and laid before the examination of this house." This resolution was passed on November 22, 1547, and as some of the Clergy complained that it was not safe to do this while the Statute of Six Articles remained in force, Cranmer exerted himself, and successfully, to get it repealed, and so to set the Committee and the Convocation free.

<sup>4</sup> Yet Cranmer made a vigorous effort to persuade the King into authorizing the publication of their revision. On January 24, 1546, he sent Henry a draft of a letter to be addressed to himself by the King, in which it is referred to, and by which it was intended to put it in force. But the King would not adopt the suggestion. The Archbishop wisely pressed on these proposed reforms in the hope that they would be firmly rooted, if established by so vigorous a hand as that of Henry VIII. “It was better,” he said to his Secretary in 1547, “to attempt such reformation in King Henry the Eight his days than at this time, the King being in his infancy. For if the King’s father had set forth any thing for the reformation of abuses, who was he that durst gainsay it?” He probably foresaw that there would be Roman and Puritan schisms, and thought that they might have been prevented by the Church, when backed by the concentrated power of Henry, while there was little hope of stemming their force under his successors.

The first efforts of the Committee had been to prune down the complexity and superabundance of the existing Rubrics. This was so great that some pages of the Service-books contained many more words of direction in red letters than of prayers in black. The whole ceremonial of Divine Service was involved in this inquiry, including the ancient and venerable practices of the Church, as well as numberless recent and often superstitious ones. In 1543 they prepared a long Canon on "The Ceremonies to be used in the Church of England, together with an explanation of the meaning and significancy of them."<sup>1</sup> How far this was published at the time is not clear; but it is highly probable that the investigation which resulted in this document was also the foundation on which the Rubrics of 1549 were constructed.

The reconstructors of our devotional offices acted wisely in reducing the number of Rubrics, and generally moderating the ceremonial system of the Church of England. They said that "the great excess and multitude of them hath so increased in these latter days, that the burthen of them was intolerable," and they spoke with the experience of practical men, who were familiarly acquainted all their lives with that about which they wrote. But one inconvenience has arisen out of the manner in which they did their work, from which later generations have suffered more than they could foresee. They went upon the principle of expressing only the most essential things in the Rubric, and left many others to tradition. As Bishop Cosin states it,<sup>2</sup> "The book does not every where enjoin and prescribe every little order, what should be said or done, but takes it for granted that people are acquainted with such common, and things always used already." Many of these usages are referred to in the subsequent pages of this volume, and need not be mentioned now. It is sufficient to say that some of them dropped out of memory altogether during the persecution of the Church and the suppression of the Establishment under the rule of the Commonwealth; that others, from want of written authority, have become the subject of controversy; and that the ritual tradition, to which the Reformers trusted so much when they put forth their condensed form of Rubric, has only been partially recovered even in our own time.

The next point to which Convocation turned its attention was the revision of the old English Litany, which had long been known in the Prymers, having been in use among the laity for about a hundred and fifty years. The Processional, which contained other Litanies, was also translated, and there exists an interesting letter from Cranmer to Henry VIII. respecting it which throws much light on the manner in which the work of translation and revision was carried on. The date of this letter is October 7, 1544. [JENKYN'S Cranmer's Remains, i. 315.]

"It may please your Majesty to be advertised, that, according to your Highness' commandment, sent unto me by your Grace's Secretary, Mr. Pagett, I have translated into the English tongue, so well as I could in so short a time, certain processions, to be used upon festival days, if after due correction and amendment of the same, your Highness shall think it so convenient. In which translation, forasmuch as many of the processions, in the Latin, were but barren, as me seemed, and little fruitful, I was constrained to use more than the liberty of a translator: for in some processions I have altered divers words; in some I have added part; in some taken part away; some I have left out whole, either for bycause the matter appeared to me to be little to purpose, or bycause the days be not with us festival days" [having been abrogated in 1537]; "and some processions I have added whole, because I thought I had better matter for the purpose than was the procession in Latin; the judgement whereof I leave wholly unto your Majesty: and after your Highness hath corrected it, if your Grace command some devout and solemn note to be made thereunto (as is to the procession which your Majesty hath already set forth in English), I trust it will much excitate and stir the hearts of all men unto devotion and godliness. But in mine opinion, the song that shall be made thereunto should not be full of notes, but as near as may be for every syllable a note; so that it may be sung distinctly and devoutly, as be the Matins and Evensong, Venite, the Hymns Te Deum, Benedictus, Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, and all the Psalms and Versicles; and in the Mass, Gloria in Excelsis, Gloria Patri, the Creed, the Preface, the Pater Noster, and some of the Sanctus and Agnus.<sup>3</sup> As concerning the Salve festa dies, the Latin note, as I think, is sober and distinct enough; wherefore I have travailed to make the verses in English, and have put the Latin note unto the same. Nevertheless, they that be cunning in singing, can make a much more solemn note thereto. I made them only for a proof, to see how English would do in song. But by cause mine English verses lack the grace and facility that I would wish they had, your Majesty may cause some other to make them again, that can do the same in more pleasant English and phrase. As for the sentence" [the English sense], "I suppose it will serve well enough. Thus Almighty God preserve your Majesty in long and prosperous health and felicity. "To the King's most excellent Majesty."

From other transactions between the Archbishop and the King it may be inferred that the suggestion was first sent by the former, perhaps at the request of Convocation, to the latter, then returned in the form of an order from the Crown to the Archbishop as head of the Convocation; and that the above letter is the official reply to that order. It does not appear that the King permitted this English Processional to be published, and the MS. has not been discovered. The previous Procession alluded to by Cranmer in this letter was the English Litany nearly as it is now used, which received the final sanction of Convocation in March 1544, and was promulgated by a mandate of the Crown, dated June 11, 1544.<sup>1</sup>

But the sanction and promulgation of the English Litany for public use was the utmost that Henry VIII. could be prevailed upon to undertake in the direction of a vernacular Prayer Book. For the last three years of his reign the work ceased; and at the time of his death, on January 28, 1547, the Services of the Church of England were still the Latin Services of the Salisbury Breviary, Missal, and Manual, with the exception that the Litany was said in English, that Lessons in English were read after the Latin Lessons, that the Gospels and Epistles were read in English after they had been read in Latin, and that the popular services of the Aspersion with Holy Water, the distribution of Holy Bread, and the Bidding of the Bedes, were entirely or almost entirely, said in English.

After the death of Henry VIII. and the accession of Edward VI. [January 28, 1547] much caution was observed by the authorities in Church and State on account of the King's extreme youth, and for eleven months no changes whatever were made in the devotional system of the Church of England as it was left by Henry VIII. His young son was crowned with the Sarum rite on February 13, 1547, and on the 24th of that month the Privy Council, Archbishop Cranmer being present, resolved that the Masses which the late King had ordered in his will to be offered up for the good of his soul should be duly said in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. On June 20, 1547, Archbishop Cranmer, assisted by eight other Bishops, offered a requiem Mass for Francis I., King of France, all the Bishops being in their full pontifical attire, and Bishop Ridley preaching the sermon. A set of thirty-seven Royal Injunctions respecting the Church and Clergy was promulgated on July 31, 1547, but only three alterations were made by them in the Services of the Church; the first in respect to Altar Lights, the second in respect to the Lessons at Mattins and Evensong, and the third as regards the Litany. The slight character of the first two of these changes may be best seen by placing side by side the respective customs as authorized in the two reigns.

1. ALTAR LIGHTS.

From the 7th of Henry VIII.'s Injunctions of
A.D. 1538.

"Ye . . . shall suffer from henceforth no candles, tapers, or images of wax, to be set before any images or picture, but only the light that commonly goeth about the cross of the Church by the rood-loft, the light before the sacrament of the altar, and the light about the sepulchre: which for the adorning of the Church and Divine Service, ye shall suffer to remain still."

From the 4th of Edward VI.'s Injunctions of
A.D. 1547.

"They . . . shall suffer from henceforth no torches nor candles, tapers, or images of wax to be set before any image or picture, but only two lights upon the high altar, before the sacrament, which for the signification that Christ is the very true Light of the world, they shall suffer to remain still."

not consent to have it used in English as proposed by Cranmer.

2. THE LATIN AND ENGLISH LESSONS AT MATTINS AND EVENSONG.

Canon of Canterbury Convocation, February 21, 1543.

“Every Sunday and Holy Day throughout the year the Curate of every Parish Church, after the Te Deum and Magnificat, shall openly read unto the people one chapter of the New Testament in English without exposition, and when the New Testament is read over then to begin the Old.”

From the 22nd of Edward VI.'s Injunctions of A.D. 1547.

“Every Sunday and Holy Day they shall plainly and distinctly read, or cause to be read, one chapter of the New Testament in English, in the same place at Mattins, immediately after the Lessons: and at Evensong after Magnificat one chapter of the Old Testament. And to the intent the premisses may be more conveniently done, the King's Majesty's pleasure is, that when ix lessons should be read in the Church, three of them shall be omitted and left out, with the responds: and at Evensong time the responds with all the memories shall be left off for that purpose.”

3. PROCESSIONAL LITANIES.

“Also to avoid all contention and strife which heretofore hath arisen among the King's Majesty's subjects in sundry places of his realms and dominions, by reason of fond courtesy, and challenging of places in procession, and also that they may the more quietly hear that which is said or sung to their edifying, they shall not from henceforth, in any parish church at any time, use any proession about the church or churchyard or other place, but immediately before the High Mass the priests with other of the quire shall kneel in the midst of the church and sing or say plainly and distinctly the Litany which is set forth in English, with all the suffrages following. . . . And in the time of the Litany, of the Mass, of the Sermon, and when the priest readeth the Scripture to the parishioners, no manner of persons without a just and urgent cause shall depart out of the church.”

The 20th of the same Injunctions directs that no person shall “alter or change the order and manner . . . of Common Prayer or Divine Service, otherwise than is specified in these Injunctions,” until such changes shall be sanctioned by the authority of the Crown: and this was further enforced by a Proclamation of February 6, 1548, ordering the imprisonment and punishment of any person who should “change, alter, or innovate any Order, Rite, or Ceremony, commonly used and frequented in the Church of England, and not commanded to be left done at any time” in the reign of Henry VIII., or by Injunctions, Statutes, or Proclamations of his successor. [WILKINS' Concil. iv. 21.]

It was the second of these changes, that directed by the 22nd Injunction, which chiefly affected the Services of the Church: and its practical operation may be seen by the manner in which it was expanded by those to whom the Visitation of the various Dioceses was intrusted. The following directions, given by the Visitors of the Diocese of York, will illustrate this point. They appear never to have been printed, and are here copied (with the exception of the three last, which have no bearing on the subject) from Fothergill's MS. Collections in the Library of York Minster:—

“Injunctions given by the King's Majesty's Visitors in his Highness' Visitation to Robt. Holdgate Ld. A. B. the Dn. Chapter, and all other the Ecclesiastical ministers of and in the Cathedral Church of York, 26 8bris An. 1547.

[1] “Ye shall at all days and times when nine lessons ought or were accustomed to be sung, sing Mattins only of six Lessons and six Psalms with the song of Te Deum Landamus or Miserere, as the time requireth, after the six Lessons: and that dayly from the Annunciation of our Lady to the first day of October ye shall begin Mattins at six of the clock in the morning, and residue of the year at seven of the clock.

[2] “Item. Ye shall sing and celebrate in note or song within the said Church but only one Mass, that is to say, High Mass only, and none other, and daily begin the same at nine of the clock before noon.

[3] “Item. Ye shall daily from the said feast of the Annunciation to the said first day of October, sing the Evensong and Complin without any responds: and begin the same at three of the clock in the afternoon. The residue of the year to begin at two of the clock, or half an hour after.

[4] “Item. Ye shall hereafter omit, and not use the singing of any hours, prime, dirige, or commendations; but every man to say the same as him sufficeth or he is disposed.

[5] “Item. Ye shall sing, say, use, or suffer none other Anthems in the Church but these hereafter following, and such as by the King's Majesty and his most Honourable Council hereafter shall be set forth.

Anthem.

“Like as Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness, even so was our Saviour Jesus Christ lift upon the Cross, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have joy for ever. For God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that such as believe in Him should not perish, but have life everlasting.

“V. Increase, O Lord, our faith in Thee.

“R. That we may work His pleasure only.

Collect.

Let us pray.

“Most bountiful and benign Lord God, we, Thy humble servants, freely redeemed and justified by the passion, death, and resurrection of our Saviour Jesus Christ, in full trust of salvation therein, most humbly desire Thee so to strengthen our faith and illuminate us with Thy grace, that we may walk and live in Thy favour, and after this life to be partakers of Thy glory in the everlasting kingdom of Heaven, through our Lord Jesus Christ. So be it.

Another Anthem.

“Be it evident and known unto all Christians that through our Lord Jesus Christ forgiveness of sins is preached unto you, and that by Him all that believe are justified from all things from the which we could not be justified by the law of Moses. So be it.

“V. O Lord, for Christ's sake our Saviour.

“R. Accept and hear our humble prayer.

Let us pray.

“We sinners do beseech Thee, O Lord, to keep Edward the sixth, Thy Servant, our King and Governor; that it may please Thee to rule his heart in Thy faith, fear, and love; that he may ever have affiance in Thee, and ever seek Thy honour and glory. That it may please Thee to be his defender and keeper, giving him the victory over all his enemies, through our Lord Jesus Christ. So be it.

“The residue of the day ye shall bestow in virtuous and godly exercises, as in study and contemplation of God His most holy word.

“All which and singular Injunctions before mentioned the Lord Archbishop of this Church, his Chancellor, Archdeacons, or Official, shall publish and send, or cause to be published and sent and observed in to every Church, College, Hospital, and other ecclesiastical places within his Diocese.

[6] “Item. All Sermons, Collations,<sup>1</sup> and Lectures of Divinity hereafter to be had or made in visitations, Synods, Chapters, or at any other time or place, shall not be used in the Latin Tongue, but in the English, to the intent that every man having recourse thereunto may well perceive the same.”

These remarkable Injunctions shew that the authorities were taking up the reform of the Liturgy exactly where it had been laid down through the refusal of Henry VIII. to sanction the English Processional: for what are here called “Anthems” are exactly similar in character to those parts of the Service which were printed for each Festival in the Latin Processional of Salisbury, the variable part of the Litany, by which it was adapted to the different seasons of the Christian year. They were also used in the “Hours,” and seem to shew the original form of the “Anthem.”<sup>2</sup>

When the Convocation of Canterbury met on November 5, 1547, it was well known that the Statute of Six Articles (grimly called “The Whip with Six Cords”) would be repealed by Parliament, as it was, in fact, repealed by 1 Edw. VI. c. 12. Freedom of action being thus secured, Convocation at once began advancing towards the practical end of the Revision which had been in view for so many years. After two formal sessions on the day of meeting and on November 18th, the two Houses met for business on November 22nd, and the Clergy of the Lower House immediately sent up a petition to the Bishops requesting, among other things, the revival of the work of 1543. The words of the petition, so far as they concern this subject, are, “That whereas by the commandment of King Henry VIII. certain prelates and other learned men were appointed to alter the Service in the Church, and to devise other convenient and uniform order therein, who according to the same appointment did make certain books as they be informed; their request is, that the said books may be seen and perused by them, for a better expedition of Divine Service to be set forth accordingly.”<sup>3</sup>

THE ORDER OF COMMUNION OF A.D. 1548.

It was more than a year before the “perusal,” or revision, of these “books” ended in the publication of the Book of Common Prayer; but the Clergy had so far made up their minds about one great principle of that Book, the restoration of Communion in both kinds to the Laity, that the authorities were able to complete this act of reformation with great promptitude. Shortly before his death Henry

<sup>3</sup> The Acts of Convocation have been lost, but these are the words as given in Archbishop Cranmer's handwriting, and they are confirmed by a short Latin entry contained in his Register. [WILKINS' Concil. iv. 15; STILLINGFLEET'S Irenicon, p. 387; CARDWELL'S Synodalia, p. 420.]

VIII. had desired Archbishop Cranmer "to pen a Form for the alteration of the Mass into a Communion" [STRYPE'S Mem. of Cranmer, i. 311, Ecc. Hist. Soc. ed.], and the subject had therefore been under consideration for some time. Accordingly, on November 30, 1547, in its fifth session, "The Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation exhibited, and caused to be read publicly, a form of a certain ordinance delivered by the Most Reverend the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the receiving of the Body of our Lord under both kinds, viz. of bread and wine. To which he himself subscribed and some others." This does not appear to have been the Order of Communion itself, but simply a Resolution that the Cup should be restored to the Laity. Its final adoption was postponed until the next session, December 2nd, when the whole of those who were present, "in number sixty-four, by their mouths did approve the proposition made in the last session, of taking the Lord's Body in both kinds, nullo reclamante." [WILKINS' Concil. iv. 16; STRYPE'S Mem. of Cranmer, ii. 37.] This Act of Convocation was ratified by an Act of Parliament on December 24, 1547 [1 Edw. VI. c. i. § 7], and for a time the Clergy were left to use their own form of words for the administration of the Cup, the Sacrament being still celebrated according to the Sarum Missal. But it was soon found expedient that the principle of a Vernacular Service should be at once applied to the Communion of the Laity, and an "Order of Communion" was prepared in such a form that it could be used in combination with the otherwise unaltered Latin Service after the Communion of the priest. This "Order"—which is printed in the "Appendix to the Liturgy" further on in this volume—did not, of course, contain any form of consecration, but it anticipated some of the rubrical and hortatory parts of the English Communion Service; and there is reason to think that it was constructed by the Bishops and Clergy who were selected from among the members of Convocation for the full review and reconstruction of the Service-books. The new Service thus taking the form of a Canon of Convocation was (according to the settlement of 1534) promulgated by the Crown, this being done by a Proclamation dated March 8, 1548, soon after the rising of Parliament. Until the use of the Prayer Book itself was enforced by law on June 9, 1549, or permitted by law [see page 18] three weeks after its publication, the Holy Eucharist was still celebrated according to the ancient Use of Salisbury, but after May 8, 1548, with the English Form of Administration to the Laity superadded: this period comprehending the whole of the first and second years of Edward VI.'s reign, and four months of his third year; and thus for more than two years and four months the reforming Bishops and Clergy continued to use the ancient words, rites, and ceremonies of the unreformed Missal. [For further particulars, see the "Introduction to the Liturgy."]¹

THE PRAYER BOOK OF A.D. 1549.

The Committee of Revision had now been considerably enlarged, and since it occupies so important a position in respect to the subsequent history of England, it will be well to give the names of its members as they stood in 1547-48, and in 1549.²

From the Upper House of Convocation.

Thomas Cranmer . . . . .	Archbishop of Canterbury.
Thomas Goodrich . . . . .	Bishop of Ely [afterwards Lord Chancellor].
Henry Holbeck (or Raudes) . . . . .	Bishop of Lincoln.

¹ There is a curious and unique volume in the Library of the British Museum [Bible, O. T. Pss. C. 25 b.] which was printed about eight months before the Prayer Book of 1549, and which appears to have been intended as a temporary substitute for the Sarum Psalter or Daily Offices. The title of the book is "The Psalter or Boke of the Psalmes, where vnto is added the Litany and certayne other deuout prayers. Set forth wyth the Kynges moste gracious lycence. Anno Do. M. D. XLVIII. Mensis Julii." The Colophon is "Imprinted at London by me Roger Car for Anthonie Smyth dwelling in Paul's church yarde." The contents of this volume are—[1] The Psalms, in Coverdale's version: [2] The seven Canticles of the Sarum Psalter, with the Magnificat, Te Deum, and Quicunq; Vult, the Magnificat and Te Deum being in the version of Marshall's Prymer, and the Quicunq; Vult in that of Hilsey's Prymer: [3] The Litany of 1544: [4] The Prayer of St. Chrysaostom: [5] A prayer for men to say entering into battle: [6] A prayer for the King, the older and longer form of that now in use.

The special prayer relating to war suggests that the volume may have been prepared for the Duke of Somerset and his army, to be used during their invasion of Scotland.

² This list of names is taken from a contemporary entry of a "Parson of Petworth" in a Prayer Book of 1632 which is full of manuscript notes by Bishops Andrewes and Gandy [Bodl. Lib. Rawl. 241]. Heylin makes a quotation from "The Register Book of the Parish of Petworth" which bears upon the subject of the change of service [HEYLIN'S Hist. of Reform. p. 64, fol. ed., i. 132, Ecc. Hist. Soc. ed.], but no information can now be obtained respecting this register. The same list, omitting the name of May, occurs on a printed broadside within the cover of MS. 44 in Cosin's Library, Durham. It is corrected in the handwriting of Bishop Cosin, who adds against Redmayne's name "dubito," and before that of Cox "Deest Decanus Sti Pauli quisquis erat max. opinor."

The lives of these and other "compilers" of the Prayer Book were written at some length by Samuel Downes, Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and were published by an ancestor of the publishers of the present work, Charles Rivington, in 1722.

George Day . . . . .	Bishop of Chichester.
John Skip . . . . .	Bishop of Hereford.
Thomas Thirlby . . . . .	Bishop of Westminster.
Nicholas Ridley . . . . .	Bishop of Rochester [afterwards of London].

From the Lower House of Convocation.

William May . . . . .	Dean of St. Paul's.
Richard Cox . . . . .	Dean of Ch. Ch. and Chanc. of Oxford Univ. [afterwards Bishop of Ely].
John Taylor . . . . .	Dean of Lincoln [afterwards Bishop of Lincoln], Prolocutor.
Simon Heynes . . . . .	Dean of Exeter.
Thomas Robertson . . . . .	Archdeacon of Leicester [afterwards Dean of Durham].
John Redmayne . . . . .	Master of Trin. Coll., Camb.

In what manner the Convocation of the Province of York was represented is not on record; but from the proceedings of 1661 (which would be founded on strict precedent) there can be no doubt that its co-operation was obtained in some way; and the names of the Archbishop of York and his Suffragans are indeed contained in a list of Bishops who were indirectly or directly mixed up with those above recorded. There can be no doubt also that they acted under a Royal Commission. No records of their meetings are known, but they are found together on one occasion during the progress of their work, namely, on Sunday, September 9, 1548, when Farrar was consecrated Bishop of St. David's by Cranmer, Holbech, and Ridley, in the Chapel of the Archbishop's house at Chertsey. On that day the Archbishop celebrated Mass by the old Office, and used English words of administration: and the Archiepiscopal Register records that "there communicated the Reverend Fathers, Thomas [Goodrich], Bishop of Ely; Thomas [Thirlby], Bishop of Westminster; Henry [Holbech], Bishop of Lincoln; Nicholas [Ridley], Bishop of Rochester; and Farrar, the new Bishop; together with William May, Dean of St. Paul's; Simon Hains, Dean of Exon; Thomas Robertson and John Redman, Professors of Divinity, and others."<sup>1</sup> Beyond this happy glimpse of these Divines we know nothing of their movements; nor have any records been discovered which throw any light upon the details of their work. It appears, however, to have occupied them for several months, notwithstanding their previous labours; and there is every mark of deliberation and reverence in the result. The foundation of their work, or rather the quarry out of which they extracted their chief materials, was the Reformed Salisbury Use of 1516 and 1541: but some other books were evidently used by them, and it may be safely concluded that they did not end their labours before they had gone through a large amount of liturgical research. The following list may be taken as fairly representing the principal books which the Committee of Convocation had before them as the materials for their work of revision:—

The "Great" Bible.<sup>2</sup>

How far the Book of Common Prayer was influenced by these works will be shewn in the margin and the footnotes of the following pages. But even a superficial glance at the latter will make it apparent that the new book was, substantially, as it still remains, a condensed reproduction, in English, of those Service-books which had been used in Latin by the Church of England for many centuries before.

The Reformation in Germany was in active progress at this time (not having yet lost the impetus given to it by the strong-handed leadership of Luther), and Cranmer had been much in correspondence with Melancthon and some other German divines during the reign of Henry VIII. But these foreign reformers had scarcely any influence upon the Prayer Book of 1549; and were probably not even consulted during its progress towards completion. Melancthon and Bucer assisted the Archbishop of Cologne in preparing his "Consultation" (one of the books referred to), and they probably used Luther's version of the ancient Nuremberg offices. But this volume contributed little to our Prayer Book beyond a few clauses in the Litany, and some portions of the Baptismal Service; and it is somewhat doubtful whether in the case of the Litany our English form was not in reality the original of that in Hermann's book. Most likely the latter was translated and brought before Convocation with the hope that it would have much influence; but the Committee of Revision were too wise and too learned in Liturgical matters to attach much importance to it.<sup>3</sup>

It is, in some respects, unfortunate that we cannot trace the book of 1549 into any further detail during the time when it was in the hands of the Committee. We cannot even form any definite conjecture as to the parts respectively taken by its members in the work before them; nor can one of the original collects which they inserted be traced back to its author. And yet there is some satisfaction in this. The book is not identified with any one name, but is the work of the Church of England by its authorized agents and representatives; and as we reverence the architects of some great cathedral for their work's sake, without perhaps knowing the name of any one of them, or the portions which each one designed, so we look upon the work of those who gave us our first English Book of Common Prayer, admiring its fair proportions, and the skill which put it together; and caring but little to inquire whose was the hand that traced this or that particular compartment of the whole.

Although thus unable to trace out the work of each hand in this great undertaking, we can, however, by means of internal evidence, and a comparison with the older formularies, find out the nature of their labours, and something of the manner in which they went about them. It was made a first principle that everything in the new Prayer Book was to be in English; a principle respecting which, as has been shewn before, there seems to have been not the slightest doubt or hesitation. Their first labour was, then, that of condensing the old services into a form suitable for the object in view, and yet keeping up the spirit and general purpose of the original and ancient worship of the Church.

[1] A great step was made in this direction [by substituting a Calendar of Lessons referring to the Holy Bible for the Lessons at length as they had been hitherto printed in the Breviary. This made it possible to combine the Breviary [daily services], the Missal [Holy Communion], Epistles and Gospels (etc.), and the Manual [Occasional Offices], in one volume. A precedent for this was offered by a practice which had been adopted in the fifteenth century of printing the Communion Service (though not the Epistles and Gospels) as part of the Breviary.<sup>4</sup> The Marriage Service was also printed in the Missal, which was a precedent for introducing the other services of the Manual into the Prayer Book.

[2] The next step towards condensation was the adoption of a less variable system in the daily services, so that the Collect of the day, the Lessons, and the Psalms should be almost the only portions of Mattins and Evensong which needed to be changed from day to day, or week to week.

at the signe of the Resurrection, alytle above Holbourne Conduit. Cum gratia et privilegio imprimendum solum." This translation was probably the work of Coverdale.

<sup>3</sup> It may be added that Cranmer had married a niece of Osiander, who is said to have prepared the Nuremberg forularies for Luther, and who was also the original compiler of a Catechism for Nuremberg and Brandenburg, of which that of Justus Jonas is a Latin translation. John à Lasco is said to have had some influence with Cranmer, and he certainly lived with the Archbishop at Lambeth from September to February in the year 1548-49. But the Prayer Book was before Parliament on December 9, 1548, and was before the King in Council previously. It passed the Lords on January 15th, and the Commons on the 21st, 1549. Foreigners were very forward in interfering, but their suggestions were civilly put aside at this time.

<sup>4</sup> They are so printed, for example, in Sarum Breviaries of 1499, 1507, 1510, 1514, 1535, 1541; in the British Museum and Bodleian Libraries.

[3] Lastly, the several hours of Prayer were condensed into two, Mattins and Evensong, with a third added on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, in the form of the Litany. The ancient arrangement of the day for Divine Service was as follows:—

Nocturns or Mattins; a service before daybreak.

Lauds; a service at daybreak, quickly following, or even joined on to, Mattins.

Prime; a later morning service, about six o'clock.

Tierce; a service at nine o'clock.

Sexts; a service at noon.

Nones; a service at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Vespers; an evening service.

Compline; a late evening service, at bedtime.

These services were often, if not generally, “accumulated” in the Mediæval Church as they are at the present day on the Continent; several being said in succession, just as Mattins, Litany, and the Communion Service have been “accumulated,” in modern times, in the Church of England. But the different offices had many parts in common, and this way of using them led to unmeaning repetitions of Versicles and Prayers. This evil was avoided by condensing and amalgamating them, so that repetitions took place only at the distant hours of Morning and Evening. The services of Mattins, Lauds, and Prime, were thus condensed into Mattins; those for Vespers and Compline into Evensong. The three other hours appear (from a table of Psalms given in the Introduction to the Psalter) to have fallen out of public use long before the reformation of our offices; and they were probably regarded as services for monastic and private use only.<sup>1</sup> The general result of this process of condensation will be best seen by the following table, in which the course of the ancient Mattins, Lauds, and Prime, is indicated side by side with that of the Mattins of 1549; and in the same manner, Vespers and Compline are set parallel with Evensong. From this comparison it will be clearly seen that the Book of Common Prayer was framed out of the ancient Offices of the Church of England, by consolidation and translation of the latter, the same principles which have been above indicated being also extended to the Communion Service and the Occasional Offices. The details of the changes that were made will be found in the notes under each portion of the Prayer Book in the following pages.

When these learned Divines had completed their work, the Prayer Book was submitted to Convocation (which met on November 24, 1548), that it might go forth with the full authority of the Church.<sup>1</sup> It was then communicated to the King in Council, and afterwards laid before Parliament on December 9, 1548, that it might be incorporated into an Act of Parliament [2nd and 3rd Edw. VI. cap. 1]. This Act (including the Prayer Book) passed the House of Lords on January 15, and the House of Commons on January 21, 1549. It was the first Act of Uniformity, and it enacted that the Prayer Book should come into use in all churches on the Feast of Whitsunday following, which was June 9, 1549. The Book itself was published on March 7, 1549, thus allowing three months' interval, during which the Clergy and Laity might become acquainted with the new Order of Divine Service. But where it could be procured earlier it was permitted to take it into use three weeks afterwards, and thus, in London churches, it was generally used on Easter-Day, April 21, 1549.

The Book of Common Prayer thus set forth with the full authority of Church and State may very fairly be called an expurgated and condensed English Version of the ancient Missal which was used for the celebration of the Holy Communion, the ancient Portiforium or Breviary which was used for the Daily Prayers, and the ancient Manual which was used for the Occasional Services, such as Baptism and Marriage: these ancient or Mediæval Services being themselves elaborated forms of much more primitive ones. The Committee of Revision having followed the directions given to them in 1542 the Mediæval books had been "castigated from all . . . feigned legends, superstitious orations, collects, versicles, and responses," the services provided for "all saints which be not mentioned in the Scripture or authentical doctors" were "abolished and put out of the same books," and what was retained was "the Service . . . made out of the Scripture and other authentic doctors." The Seven Daily Offices were condensed into two, the system for the use of Psalms and Lessons was <sup>1</sup> Archbishop Bancroft, who was for many years Chaplain to Cox, Bishop of Ely, one of the Committee of Revision, writes that "the first Liturgy set forth in King Edward's reign was carefully compiled, and confirmed by a Synod." [COLLIER'S Ecl. Hist. vi. 277.] Archbishop Abbot says that "the more material parts were disputed and debated in the Convocation House by men of both parties." [ABBOT against Hill, p. 104.] Contemporary evidence respecting the confirmation of the Book by Convocation is also found in letters of the King and of the Privy Council.

[1] The Privy Council instructed Dr. Hopton, the Princess Mary's Chaplain, to say to her respecting the Prayer Book, "The fault is great in any subject to disallow a law of the King: a law of the realm by long study, free disputation, and uniform determination of the whole Clergy, consulted, debated, concluded." [FOX'S Acts and Mon. vi. 8, ed. 1838.]

[2] In the reply of Edward VI. to the demands of the

Devonshire rebels the King is made to say, "Whatsoever is contained in our book, either for Baptism, Sacrament, Mass, Confirmation, and service in the Church, is by our Parliament established, by the whole Clergy agreed, yea, by the Bishops of the realm devised, by God's Word confirmed." [FOX'S Acts and Mon. v. 734 ed. 1838.]

[3] The King and Council, writing to Bishop Bonner on July 23, 1549, say, "One uniform Order for Common Prayers and Administration of the Sacraments hath been and is most godly set forth, not only by the common agreement and full assent of the Nobility and Commons of the late session of our late Parliament, but also by the like assent of the Bishops in the same Parliament, and of all other the learned men of this our realm in their Synods and Convocations provincial." [FOX'S Acts and Mon. v. 726, ed. 1838.]

greatly simplified; and although the ritual system in general was retained, the rubrics were condensed throughout, and many details of ritual omitted. When all the changes are taken into account it may still be said that about nine-tenths of what is contained in the Prayer Book of 1549 came from the old Latin Service-books of the Church of England: and that the principal alteration after the excision of Mediæval novelties was that of adapting the Services to general use by the Clergy and Laity together, instead of leaving them in the complex form which was only suitable for the use of the Clergy and of Monastic communities. If it was in one sense new, they who had been engaged upon it felt so strong a conviction that it was substantially identical with the old, that in after days Cranmer offered to prove that "the order of the Church of England, set out by authority of Edward the Sixth, was the same that had been used in the Church for fifteen hundred years past."<sup>1</sup>

In the Act of Parliament which enacted the Book of Common Prayer, it was said to have been composed under the influence of the Holy Ghost; and there is, doubtless, an indication of this belief in the choice of the day on which it was enjoined to be used. So solemn were the views which those who arranged and set forth the Prayer Book took of their work, so anxious was their desire that it should be sealed with the blessing of God.

THE REVISED PRAYER BOOK OF A.D. 1552.

It was unfortunate for the peace of the Church of England that those who were in authority at this period were disposed to yield too much to the influence of foreigners whose principles were totally alien from those on which the English Reformation was based. That Reformation had been strictly Catholic in its origin and in its official progress, and the repudiation of foreign interference with the Church of England had been one of its main features. But foreign interference now arose from a different quarter, Calvin and his associates endeavouring, with characteristic self-assurance, to bias the mind of England towards Genevan Presbyterianism rather than Anglican Catholicity. Calvin himself thrust a correspondence upon the Protector Somerset, upon the young King, and upon Archbishop Cranmer.<sup>2</sup> A letter of his still exists in the State Paper Office, which was written to the Duke of Somerset on October 22, 1548, and in which he urges the Protector to push the Reformation further than it had hitherto gone. Others to the same purpose may be found in STRYPE'S Memorials of Cranmer [iii. 25]. Peter Martyr and Martin Bucer (neither of whom could understand the English language) were placed in the most important positions at Oxford and Cambridge by Somerset; John à Lasco, a Polish refugee, was quartered upon Cranmer for six months, and afterwards established in a schismatic position in London; and Poullain [Valerandus Pollanus] was, in a similar manner, established at Glastonbury.<sup>3</sup> These appointments shew the manner in which the Church of England was sagaciously leavened with foreign Protestantism by those who wished to reduce its principles and practices to their own low ritual and doctrinal level; and they are but a few of the many indications which exist that the Puritanism by which the Church was so imperilled during the succeeding hundred and twenty years arose out of foreign influences thus brought to bear upon the young Clergy and the Laity of that generation.

These influences soon began to affect the Book of Common Prayer, which had been, with so much forethought, learning, and pious deliberation, prepared by the Bishops and other Divines who composed the Committee to which reference has so often been made. It had been accepted with satisfaction by most of the Clergy and the Laity;<sup>4</sup> and had even been taken into use by many at Easter, although not enjoined to be used until Whitsunday, so desirous were they of adopting the vernacular service. It was, probably, the quiet acceptance of the Prayer Book by the Clergy which raised hopes in the foreign party of moulding it to their own standard of Protestantism. It is certain that an agitation had been <sup>3</sup> The same hospitable but unwise charity towards religious refugees was shewn by James I. in the case of Antonio de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalatro, and with most unfortunate results.

<sup>4</sup> Even Bishop Gardiner's official reply to the Privy Council on the subject was favourable to the Prayer Book. "He had deliberately considered of all the Offices contained in the Common Prayer Book, and all the several branches of it: that though he could not have made it in that manner, had the matter been referred unto him, yet that he found such things therein as did very well satisfy his conscience; and therefore, that he would not only execute it in his own person, but cause the same to be officiated by all those of his diocese." [HEYLIN'S Reformation, i. 209, Ecol. Hist. Soc.] Somerset, writing to Cardinal Pole, June 4, 1549, and sending him a Prayer Book, says that there was "a common agreement of all the chief learned men in the Realm" in favour of the new "form and rite of service." [State Papers, Dom. Edw. VI. vol. vii.] Edward VI.'s reply to the Devonshire rebels asserts the same thing.

going on, among the latter, from the very time when the Book of 1549 had been first brought into use. A Lasco, Peter Martyr, and Martin Bucer appear to have been continually corresponding about the Prayer Book, and plotting for its alteration, although they knew it only through imperfect translations hastily provided by a Scotchman named Aless, living at Leipsic, and by Sir John Cheke. Hooper, also, Chaplain first to the Duke of Somerset, then to the King, and afterwards Bishop of Gloucester, carried on a bitter opposition to it, having returned from Zurich, where he had been living for some years, just at the time that it came into use. Writing to Bullinger on December 27, 1549, he says: "The public celebration of the Lord's Supper is very far from the order and institution of our Lord. Although it is administered in both kinds, yet in some places the Supper is celebrated three times a day. . . . They still retain their vestments<sup>1</sup> and the candles before the altars; in the churches they always chant the hours and the hymns relating to the Lord's Supper, but in our own language. And that Popery may not be lost, the Mass priests, although they are compelled to discontinue the use of the Latin language, yet most carefully observe the same tone and manner of chanting to which they were heretofore accustomed in the Papacy." [Parker Soc. Orig. Lett. p. 72.] Preaching before Edward VI. in the following Lent, Hooper spoke of the Prayer Book as containing "tolerable things to be borne with for the weak's sake awhile,"<sup>2</sup> and urged immediate revision. He also told the King and Council that it was "great shame for a noble King, Emperor, or Magistrate, contrary unto God's word to detain and keep from the devil or his minister any of their goods or treasure, as the candles, vestments, crosses, altars." He also urged the young King to do away with kneeling at the Holy Communion, "sitting were in my opinion best for many considerations." [HOOPER'S Works, i. 534, 536, 554; Orig. Lett. p. 81.] Bucer was perhaps the most violent of all opponents of the Prayer Book, publishing a "Censure" of it in twenty-eight chapters just before his death in 1551, in which he condemns all ceremonies and customs derived from the ancient Services of the Church of England, from the Consecration of the Holy Eucharist to the ringing of church bells, of which, with the want of imagination and musical ear so common among his class of Reformers, he had a great abhorrence.

Meanwhile the Prayer Book had been brought under discussion in Convocation towards the end of the year 1550. The question was sent down to the Lower House by the Bishops, but was postponed until the next session. What was done further at that time does not appear, though it is probable that the consideration of the Thirty-nine Articles absorbed the whole attention of Convocation for several sessions, and that the proposition for a revised Prayer Book was set aside, as far as the official assembly of the Church was concerned. The young King had now, however, been aroused by the meddlesome letters of Calvin, by Hooper's preaching, and perhaps by some of the Puritan courtiers, to entertain a strong personal desire for certain changes in Divine Service; and not being able to prevail on the Bishops to accede to his wishes, he declared to Sir John Cheke—with true Tudor feeling, being then only a little over twelve years of age—that he should cause the Prayer Book to be altered on his own authority. [STRYPE'S Cranmer, ii. 663, Ecl. Hist. Soc. ed.]

No records remain to shew us in what manner or by whom this revision was ultimately made. It has been suggested by Dr. Cardwell [Two Liturgies of Edw. VI. xvii. n.] that the Convocation delegated its authority to a Commission appointed by the King, and that this Commission was the same with that which had set forth the Ordinal of 1550, consisting of "six Prelates, and six other men of this Realm, learned in God's law, by the King's Majesty to be appointed and assigned;" but of which only the name of Bishop Heath of Worcester is recorded. [See Introd. to Ordin. Services.] Archdeacon Freeman considers it to be "all but certain that it was the Ordinal Commission which conducted the Revision of 1552," especially because the Ordinal was affixed to the Act of Parliament by which the revised Book was legalized.<sup>3</sup> There is no certain proof that the Prayer Book of 1552, commonly called the Second Book of Edward VI., ever received the sanction of Convocation; yet it is highly improbable that Cranmer would have allowed it to get into Parliament without it.<sup>4</sup> Edward's

of England by the King's authority and the Parliament, concerning the manner and form of praying and ministering the Sacrament in the Church of England, likewise also the book of Ordering Ministers of the Church set forth by the foresaid authority, are godly and in no point repugnant to the wholesome doctrine of the Gospel, but agreeable thereunto, furthering and beautifying the same not a little: and therefore of all faithful ministers of the Church of England, and chiefly of the ministers of the Word, they ought to be received and allowed with all readiness of mind and thanksgiving, and to be commended to the people of God."

second Act of Uniformity [5 and 6 Edw. VI. ch. i.], with the revised Prayer Book attached, was passed on April 6, 1552, with a proviso that the book was to come into use on the Feast of All Saints following. Almost at the last moment, however, an attempt was made to carry the revision much further. Three editions of the book had been printed when, on September 27, 1552, an Order in Council<sup>1</sup> was passed forbidding any further issue of the book, ostensibly on the ground that many printer's errors had crept in. But the real reason is shewn by the Register of the Privy Council: for on the same day a letter was written to the Archbishop requesting him to correct the printer's errors, and directing him to call in several Divines for the purpose of perusing or revising the book once more, his attention being specially drawn to the rubric on kneeling at the Holy Communion. The letter itself is not preserved, but only the order directing the Secretary what to write: Cranmer's indignant reply is however among the State Papers [Dom. Edw. VI. xv. 15], and throws so much light on the circumstances under which the revised Prayer Book was issued that it is here printed at length, the italics, however, not being in the original, and the spelling being modernized:—

“Where I understand by your Lordships' letters that the King's majesty his pleasure is that the Book of Common Service should be diligently perused,<sup>2</sup> and therein the printer's errors to be amended. I shall travaile therein to the uttermost of my power—albeit I had need first to have had the book written which was past by Act of Parliament, and sealed with the great seal, which remaineth in the hands of Mr. Spilman, clerk of the Parliament, who is not in London, nor I cannot learn where he is. Nevertheless, I have gotten the copy which Mr. Spilman delivered to the printers to print by, which I think shall serve well enough. And where I understand further by your Lordships' letters that some be offended with kneeling at the time of the receiving of the sacrament, and would that I (calling to me the Bishop of London, and some other learned men as Mr. Peter Martyr or such like) should with them expend, and weigh the said prescription of kneeling, whether it be fit to remain as a commandment, or to be left out of the book. I shall accomplish the King's Majesty his commandment herein:—albeit I trust that we with just balance weighed this at the making of the book, and not only we, but a great many Bishops and others of the best learned within this realm appointed for that purpose. And now the book being read and approved by the whole State of the Realm, in the High Court of Parliament, with the King's majesty his royal assent—that this should be now altered again without Parliament—of what importance this matter is, I refer to your Lordships' wisdom to consider. I know your Lordships' wisdom to be such, that I trust ye will not be moved with these glorious and unquiet spirits<sup>3</sup> which can like nothing but that is after their own fancy; and cease not to make trouble when things be most quiet and in good order. If such men should be heard—although the book were made every year anew, yet it should not lack faults in their opinion. ‘But,’ say they, ‘it is not commanded in the Scripture to kneel, and whatsoever is not commanded in the Scripture is against the Scripture, and utterly unlawful and ungodly.’ But this saying is the chief foundation of the Anabaptists and of divers other sects. This saying is a subversion of all order as well in religion as in common policy. If this saying be true, take away the whole Book of Service; for what should men travel to set in order in the form of service, if no order can be got but that is already prescribed by Scripture? And because I will not trouble your Lordships with reciting of many Scriptures or proof in this matter, whosoever teacheth any such doctrine (if your Lordships will give me leave) I will set my foot by his, to be tried by fire, that his doctrine is untrue; and not only untrue, but also seditious and perilous to be heard of any subjects, as a thing breaking their bridle of obedience and losing from the bonds of all Princes' laws.

“My good Lordships, I pray you to consider that there be two prayers which go before the receiving of the Sacrament, and two immediately follow—all which time the people praying and giving thanks do kneel. And what inconvenience there is that it may not be thus ordered, I know not. If the kneeling of the people should be discontinued for the time of the receiving of the Sacrament, so that at the receipt thereof they should rise up and stand or sit, and then immediately kneel down again—it should rather import a contemptuous than a reverent receiving of the Sacrament. ‘But it is not expressly contained in the Scripture’ (say they) ‘that Christ ministered the sacrament to his apostles kneeling.’ Nor they find it not expressly in Scripture that he ministered it standing or sitting. But if we will follow the plain words of the Scripture we should rather receive it lying down on the ground—as the custom of the world at that time almost everywhere, and as the Tartars and Turks use yet at this day, to eat their meat lying upon the ground. And the words of the Evangelist import the same, which be ἀνακείμεναι and ἀναπίπτω, which signify, properly, to lie down upon the floor or ground, and not to sit upon a form or stool. And the same speech use the Evangelists where they sh(ew) that Christ fed five thousand with five loaves, where it is plainly expressed that they sat down upon the ground and not upon stools.

“I beseech your Lordships take in good part this my long babbling, which I write as of myself only. The Bishop of London is not yet come, and your Lordships required answer with speed, and therefore am I constrained in which it is said that the King had caused the former Book of 1549 to be “perused, explained, and made fully perfect.” It thus meant more than the correction of clerical errors.

<sup>3</sup> This seems to refer to Bishop Hooper. In the order for his execution at Gloucester a similar expression is used, “forasmuch as the said Hooper is, as heretics be, a rain-glorious person, and delighteth in his tongue.” [HOOPER'S Works, II. xxvii.] to make some answer to your Lordships afore his coming. And thus I pray God long to preserve your Lordships and to increase the same in all prosperity and godliness.

“At Lambeth, this 7th of October, 1552,

“Your Lordships to command,

“T. CANTR.”

What course Cranmer eventually took is not known, but the ultimate result is shewn by an entry in the Privy Council Register, dated October 27, 1552, which orders “a letter to the Lord Chancellor to cause to be signed unto the Book of Common Prayer, lately set forth, a certain Declaration signed by the King’s Majesty, and sent unto his Lordship, touching the kneeling at the receiving of the Communion.” [BURNET’S Reform. iii. 368, POCOCK’S Note 76.] The “Declaration” which has been commonly known as “the Black Rubric” was then inserted in some of the already printed copies on a fly-leaf, and the printing was again proceeded with. But this delay must have prevented the book from being circulated through the country for use at the time appointed, and as Edward died only eight months later, on July 6, 1553, it may be doubted whether the earlier Prayer Book, that of 1549, was ever superseded to any great extent except in London. The chief importance of the Book of 1552 is derived from the circumstance that it was made the basis of those further revisions which resulted in the Prayer Book of 1661.

THE REVISED PRAYER BOOK OF A.D. 1559.

The Acts of Uniformity passed in the reign of Edward were legally repealed by 1 Mary, sess. ii. c. 2, which was passed in October 1553. By this Act the Services of the Church of England were restored to the condition in which they were in the last year of Henry VIII. A proclamation was also issued, enjoining that no person should use “any book or books concerning the common service and administration set forth in English to be used in the churches of this realm, in the time of King Edward the VIth, commonly called the Communion Book, or Book of Common Service and Ordering of Ministers, otherwise called the Book set forth by the authority of Parliament, for Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments; but shall, within fifteen days bring or deliver the said books to the Ordinary, where such books remain, at the said Ordinary’s will and disposition to be burnt.” This Act and Proclamation were preceded, apparently, by an Act of Convocation of the same tenor; for the Upper House had been requested by the Lower (both being beyond doubt “packed” assemblies at the time) to suppress the “schismatical book called the Communion Book, and the Book of Ordering Ecclesiastical Ministers.” Thus the work which had been done with so much care and deliberation was, for a time, set aside; Divine Service was again said in Latin, and the customs of it reverted, to a great extent, to their mediæval form. As, however, the monasteries were not revived, the devotional system of Queen Mary’s reign must, in reality, have been considerably influenced in the direction of reformation. We have already seen that “the last year of the reign of Henry VIII.” (which was the standard professedly adopted) was a period when much progress had been made towards establishing the devotional system afterwards embodied in the Book of Common Prayer; and it seems likely that the services of the Church in the reign of Queen Mary were a modified form of, rather than an actual return to, the mediæval system which existed before the sixteenth century.

Queen Elizabeth succeeded to the throne on November 17, 1558, and for a month permitted no change to be made in the customs of Divine Service.

On December 27th of that year, a Proclamation was issued condemning unfruitful disputes in matters of religion, and enjoining all men “not to give audience to any manner of doctrine or preaching other than to the Gospels and Epistles, commonly called the Gospel and Epistle of the day, and to the ten commandments, in the vulgar tongue, without exposition or addition of any manner, sense, or meaning to be applied or added; or to use any other manner of publick prayer, rite, or ceremony in the Church, but that which is already used and by law received; or the common Litany used at this present in her Majesty’s own chapel;<sup>1</sup> and the Lord’s Prayer, and the Creed, in English, until consultation may be had by Parliament, by her Majesty and her three estates of this realm,<sup>2</sup> for the better see next note, which shews that this intention, as regards Convocation, could not have been carried out.

conciliation and accord of such causes as at this present are moved in matters and ceremonies of religion."

The first Act of Parliament in the reign of Queen Elizabeth restored to the Crown the supremacy over persons and in causes ecclesiastical, which had been taken away from it in the previous reign. But this does not seem to have been considered sufficient authority for dealing with the subject of Divine Service; nor does it seem to have been possible, at first, to place it in the hands of Convocation. An irregular kind of Committee was therefore appointed at the suggestion of Sir Thomas Smith, the Queen's Secretary, who were to meet at his house in Canon Row, Westminster, and who were "to draw in other men of learning and gravity, and apt men for that purpose and credit, to have their assents." This Committee consisted of the following persons:<sup>1</sup>—

Revision of Queen Elizabeth's reign.

Edmund Grindal,	"	Bp. of London, Abp. of York, and Abp. of Canterbury.

The last two were summoned to attend upon the Committee after its first appointment. It has been supposed, from a vindication of the changes made which was sent by him to Cecil,<sup>2</sup> that Guest was the person chiefly concerned in the revision, and that he acted for Parker, who was absent through illness. Cox and May were on the Committee of 1542-49.

While this Committee was engaged on its labours, an attempt was made to reconcile the extreme Romanist party by a Conference of Divines held before the Privy Council and others in Westminster Abbey; but the attempt failed through the impracticable temper of the leading men on the Romanist side: and thus the way was made clear for a new Act of Uniformity on the basis of those passed in Edward's reign.

The Queen and Cecil both appear to have desired that the original Prayer Book, that of 1549, should be adopted as far as possible; but the second Book, that of 1552, was taken by the Committee of Divines, and with a few alterations of some importance, submitted to the Queen to be set before Parliament.

[1] A Table of Proper Lessons for Sundays was prefixed.

[2] The "accustomed place" or Chancel, instead of "in such place as the people may best hear," was again appointed for the celebration of Divine Service.

[3] The ancient "Ornaments of the Church and the Ministers which had been in use under the first Book of Edward, but had been reduced to a minimum by the second, were directed again to be taken into use.

[4] The present form for administering the consecrated Elements to the Communicants was substituted for that ordered by the Book of 1552, which was the latter half only of that now used. As the first half of the words is the form that was used in the Book of 1549, the new form was thus a combination of the two.

[5] The declaration respecting kneeling, which had been inserted on a fly-leaf at the end of the Communion Service in the Book of 1552, was now omitted altogether.

Thus altered, the Book was laid before Parliament, which (without any discussion) annexed it to a new Act of Uniformity [1 Eliz. c. 2]. This Act was passed on April 28, 1559, and it enacted that the revised Prayer Book should be taken into use on St. John the Baptist's day following. It

<sup>1</sup> None of these were Bishops at this time. Parker, Grindal, Cox, and Sandys were consecrated in December 1559, Guest in March 1560, and Pilkington in March 1561. There is a letter of Sir T. Wilson's, written in 1559 [State Papers, Dom. Eliz. vii. 46], which states that the alterations were made "by the Convocation consisting of the same Bishops" who had returned after Queen Mary's death "and the rest of the Clergy." But the Convocation which sat from January 24th to May 8, 1559, was presided over by Bishop Bonner, with Nicholas Harpsfield, Dean of Canterbury, for Prolocutor. At the end of February 1559 they presented five Articles of the most Ultramontane character to the House of Lords, one of the Articles asserting Transubstantiation and another the Supremacy of the Pope: and such a Convocation would be too hostile to the Prayer Book to be intrusted with its revision.

was used, however, in the Queen's chapel on Sunday, May 12th, and at St. Paul's Cathedral on Wednesday, May 15th. After the appointed day had passed, a Commission was issued [July 19, 1559] to Parker, Grindal, and others for carrying into execution the Acts for Uniformity of Common Prayer, and for restoring to the Crown its jurisdiction in Ecclesiastical matters. [State Papers, Dom. Eliz. v. 18.] A Royal Visitation was also held in the Province of York, under a Commission dated July 25th. [Ibid. iv. 62.] It then appeared that the Prayer Book was so generally accepted by the Clergy, that out of 9400 only 189 refused to adopt it; this number including those Bishops and others of the most extreme Romanist party who had been appointed in Queen Mary's reign on account of what in modern times would be called their Ultramontane principles.

It is worth notice, however, that the Book of Common Prayer as thus revised in 1559 was quietly accepted by the great body of Romanist laity; and also that the Pope himself saw so little to object to in it that he offered to give the book his full sanction if his authority were recognized by the Queen and kingdom. "As well those restrained," said Sir Edward Coke, "as generally all the papists in this kingdom, not any of them did refuse to come to our church, and yield their formal obedience to the laws established. And thus they all continued, not any one refusing to come to our churches, during the first ten years of her Majesty's government. And in the beginning of the eleventh year of her reign, Cornwallis, Bedingfield, and Silyarde, were the first recusants; they absolutely refusing to come to our churches. And until they in that sort began, the name of recusant was never heard of amongst us." In the same Charge, Coke also states as follows: That the Pope [Pius IV.] "before the time of his excommunication against Queen Elizabeth denounced, sent his letter unto her Majesty, in which he did allow the Bible, and Book of Divine Service, as it is now used among us, to be authentick, and not repugnant to truth. But that therein was contained enough necessary to salvation, though there was not in it so much as might conveniently be, and that he would also allow it unto us, without changing any part: so as her Majesty would acknowledge to receive it from the Pope, and by his allowance; which her Majesty denying to do, she was then presently by the same Pope excommunicated. And this is the truth concerning Pope Pius Quartus as I have faith to God and men. I have oftentimes heard avowed by the late Queen her own words; and I have conferred with some Lords that were of greatest reckoning in the State, who had seen and read the Letter, which the Pope sent to that effect; as have been by me specified. And this upon my credit, as I am an honest man, is most true."<sup>1</sup> It may have been with the object of making the Pope acquainted with the real character of the Prayer Book that it was translated into Latin in the same year; and it is, possibly, to the work of translation that a document in the State Paper Office [Dom. Eliz. vii. 46] refers which, on November 30, 1559, mentions the progress made by the Convocation in the Book of Common Prayer.<sup>2</sup> The Latin Version (differing in no small degree from the English) was set forth on April 6, 1560, under the authority of the Queen's Letters Patent.

The only other change that was made in the Prayer Book during the reign of Elizabeth was in the Calendar. On January 22, 1561, the Queen issued a Commission to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, Dr. Bill, and Walter Haddon, directing them "to peruse the order of the said Lessons throughout the whole year, and to cause some new calendars to be imprinted, whereby such chapters or parcels of less edification may be removed, and other more profitable may supply their rooms."<sup>3</sup> This commission was issued by the authority given in the 13th clause of Elizabeth's Act of Uniformity, which is cited in its opening paragraph; and in the end of it there is a significant direction, "that the alteration of any thing hereby ensuing be quietly done, without show of any innovation in the Church." In the Calendar revised by these Commissioners the names of most of those Saints were inserted which are to be found in that of our present Prayer Book.

But although no further changes were made in the authorized devotional system of the Church during the remainder of the century, continual assaults were being made upon it by the Puritan party, extreme laxity was tolerated, and even sanctioned, by some of the Bishops (as, for example, at Northampton, by Bishop Scambler of Peterborough), and the people were gradually being weaned from their love for a Catholic ritual: while, in the meantime, a great number of the new generation were being trained, by continual controversy and by enforced habit, into a belief that preaching, either in the pulpit or under the disguise of extemporaneous prayer, was the one end and aim of Divine Service.<sup>1</sup> In 1592 the Puritans had grown so rancorous that they presented a petition to the Privy Council in which the Church of England is plainly said to be derived from Antichrist; the press swarmed with scurrilous and untruthful pamphlets against the Church system; and the more sober strength of this opposition may be measured very fairly by the statements and arguments of Hooker in his noble work, the Ecclesiastical Polity.

§ Some slight Changes made in the Prayer Book of 1559 by James I.

On the accession of James I. [May 7, 1603] the hopes of those who wished to get rid of the Prayer Book were strengthened by the knowledge that the King had been brought up by Presbyterians. A petition was presented to him, called the "Millenary Petition," from the number of signatures attached to it, in which it was represented that "more than a thousand" of his Majesty's subjects were "groaning as under a common burden of human rites and ceremonies," from which they prayed to be relieved by a reduction of the Prayer Book system to their own standard. The result of this petition was the "Hampton Court Conference," an assembly of orthodox and nonconforming Clergy, summoned by the King to meet in his presence at the Palace of Hampton Court, and discuss the grievances complained of. This Conference met on the 14th, 16th, and 18th of January, 1603-4, in the presence of the King and the Privy Council; but the former was so disgusted with the unreasonableness of the Puritan opponents of the Prayer Book, that he broke up the meeting abruptly on the third day, without committing the Church to any concessions in the direction they required. Under the same clause of the Act of Uniformity by which Queen Elizabeth had directed a revision of the Calendar, the King did, however, with the advice of a Commission of Bishops and Privy Councillors, cause a few changes to be made in the Prayer Book.<sup>2</sup> reign of James I.

[1] The words "or remission of sins" were added to the title of the Absolution.

[2] The "Prayer for the Royal Family" was placed at the end of the Litany; and also some Occasional Thanksgivings.

[3] Two slight verbal changes were made at the beginning of the Gospels for the Second Sunday after Easter and the Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.

[4] An alteration was made in one of the Rubrics for Private Baptism. [See the Office.]

[5] The title of the Confirmation Service was enlarged.

[6] The latter part of the Catechism, respecting the Sacraments, was added.

[7] Some slight changes were made in the Calendar.

The book, as thus altered, was authorized by a Royal Proclamation dated March 5, 1604, and it was afterwards sanctioned by Convocation in the 80th of the Canons passed in the same year [A.D. 1604], which ordered that "the churchwardens or questmen of every Church and Chapel shall, at the charge of the parish, provide the Book of Common Prayer, lately explained in some few points by his Majesty's authority, according to the laws and his Highness' prerogative in that behalf, and that with all convenient speed, but at the furthest within two months after the publishing of these our Constitutions."

In the following year a petition was presented to the King from ministers in the Diocese of Lincoln, in which fifty "gross corruptions" in the Prayer Book were enumerated: and they demanded its total abolition as the only means by which the land could be rid of the idolatry and superstition which it enjoined. But although the Puritans continued to oppose the devotional system of the Church of England in this spirit during the whole of the reigns of James I. and Charles I., it was forty years before they succeeded in bringing about, and then for a few years only, that total abolition of the Prayer Book which they so ardently desired.

§ The Suppression of the Prayer Book by the Puritans.

The temporary overthrow of the Church of England was effected by the Long Parliament, which met on November 3, 1640, and lasted until April 20, 1653; and the successive steps by which

156. See also CARDWELL'S Conf. 117-120, for a strong illustration of this in Convocation.]

this was accomplished are clearly stated by the Speaker of the House of Commons in the address which he made to the King from the bar of the House of Lords on May 19, 1662. "In order to this work," he said, "Church ornaments were first taken away; then the means whereby distinction or inequality might be upheld amongst ecclesiastical governors; then the forms of common prayer, which as members of the public body of Christ's Church were enjoined us, were decried as superstitious, and in lieu thereof nothing, or worse than nothing, introduced." [Journ. House of Lords, xi. 471.]

The first movements towards this end were taken in December 1640, when "a petition was brought complaining of the Church discipline in having Archbishops, Bishops, etc., using the cross in Baptism, kneeling at the Communion, as unuseful in the Protestant Church" [Perfect Diurnal, p. 12]; and when the House of Commons went to St. Margaret's Church as usual to receive the Holy Communion, they directed that the Communion Table should be brought down from the east end of the chancel and placed in the midst of them in the Presbyterian manner customary in Scotland. The House of Lords appointed a large Committee, consisting of ten Bishops and twenty lay peers, with power to add to their number, to consult respecting such alterations in the Prayer Book as would conciliate the Puritan ministers, who were persevering in their petitions for its abolition; but although this Committee held many sittings between March 1st and May 1641, their efforts at conciliation were soon found to be useless, a motion "to agree upon some alterations and new additions to be inserted in the Book of Common Prayer" being made and lost in September of the same year, and the opponents of the Church going steadily on with their measures for its destruction.<sup>1</sup> Shortly afterwards the House of Commons ordered that the Communion Table should everywhere be removed into the body of the church, that the rails should be taken away, and the raised east end of the chancel brought down to the same level as the rest of the church; and this was soon followed by "ordinances" against "innovations," as all the distinctive customs of the Church of England were called, which led to the removal of fountains from the churches, and to the wholesale destruction of Prayer Books, surplices, copes, organs, and all other "monuments of superstition," as these were called by the prevailing party in Parliament. Soon also, on December 29, 1641, most of the Bishops were thrown into prison, and in a few months the Puritans boasted that 8000 Clergy had already been turned out of their parishes. [PIERCE'S New Discoverer, p. 140.]

On July 1, 1643, the "Westminster Assembly of Divines" was convened by the Parliament, and after some negotiation with the General Assembly of the Scottish Kirk, it accepted from the latter the "Solemn League and Covenant," which was subscribed by the House of Commons in St. Margaret's Church on September 25th, and was afterwards sent to every parish in England and Wales to be used as a Test during the Reign of Terror which followed. This document, which was signed with the solemnities of an oath, pledged those who signed it to substitute Presbyterianism and the Scottish "Directory for Worship" for the Church of England and the Book of Common Prayer, in its first two Articles, which were as follows:—

"I. That we shall sincerely, really, and constantly, through the grace of God, endeavour, in our several places and callings, the preservation of the reformed religion in the Church of Scotland, in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, against our common enemies; the reformation of religion in the kingdoms of England and Ireland, in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, according to the Word of God, and the example of the best reformed Churches; and shall endeavour to bring the Churches of God in the three kingdoms to the nearest conjunction and uniformity in religion, confession of faith, form of church government, directory for worship and catechizing; that we and our posterity after us may as brethren live in faith and love, and the Lord may delight to dwell in the midst of us.

"II. That we shall in like manner, without respect of persons, endeavour the extirpation of Popery, Prelacy and abate some of the Ceremonies that were least material, for satisfying their consciences. And to this end they did meet together privately twice a week at the Dean of Westminster's house for the space of three months or more. But not long after that time, when Dr. Sanderson had made the Reformation for a view, the Church and State were both fallen into such a confusion that Dr. Sanderson's Model for Reformation became then useless" [WALTON'S Life of Sanderson, sign. c 3]. But this statement must be looked upon with some suspicion, for it appears as if Walton were erroneously attributing to Sanderson the work of the Lords' Committee.

(that is, Church government by Archbishops, Bishops, their Chancellors and Commissaries, Deans, Deans and Chapters, Archdeacons, and all other ecclesiastical officers depending on that hierarchy), superstition, heresy, schism, profaneness, and whatever shall be found to be contrary to sound doctrine and the power of godliness, lest we partake in other men's sins, and thereby be in danger to receive of their plagues, and that the Lord may be one, and His Name one, in the three kingdoms."

This pledge was not carried out by Parliament for more than a year, the House of Lords proving for some time an obstacle in the way of the House of Commons, and there being some difficulty in agreeing upon the form which the Directory was to take. At length, on January 3, 1645, the Directory passed through the two Houses of Parliament, and was issued under the title of "A Directory for the Public Worship of God throughout the three Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Together with an Ordinance of Parliament for the taking away of the Book of Common Prayer, and for establishing and observing of this present Directory throughout the Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales."<sup>1</sup> This Ordinance repealed the Acts of Uniformity, and enacted that the Book of Common Prayer should be "abolished" and the Directory "established and observed in all the Churches within this kingdom." But as this was not so generally obeyed as was intended, another Ordinance "for the more effectual putting in execution of the Directory" was passed on August 23, 1645, which forbade the use of the Prayer Book in any "Church, Chapel, or public place of worship, or in any private place or family within the Kingdom of England," and required all copies of the book to be given up. This Ordinance also imposed some severe penalties, enacting that any person who used the Book of Common Prayer in public or private should, for the first offence, pay a fine of £5, for the second offence a fine of £10, and for the third offence "suffer one whole year's imprisonment without bail or mainprize." The refusal to adopt the rules of the Directory was visited with a fine of £2 for each offence, and those who did or said anything against it were to be punished with a fine of not less than £5, and not exceeding £50. These penalties, which are similar in character to those imposed by the Tudor Acts of Uniformity, were rigorously exacted, as is shown by the Records of the period and by non-official histories.<sup>2</sup> For fifteen years the prayers of the Church of England could only be said in extreme privacy, and even then with danger of persecution to those who used them.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Directory was a book of Rubrics and Canons and not of prayers, the very few forms that are given being only given as examples of the kind of prayer to be used by the minister. In the place of the Burial Service of the Prayer Book appears the following direction: "When any person departeth this life let the dead body, upon the day of burial, be decently attended from the house to the place appointed for public burial, and there immediately interred without any ceremony." This is still the custom of the Scottish Presbyterian Kirk.

<sup>3</sup> It was the custom of some of those few Clergy who were permitted to retain their benefices to use the Prayer Book as their "Directory," introducing as much of its actual language as could be used with safety. This custom was vindicated by Bishop Sanderson in a letter to a friend in 1652, and entitled "Judgement concerning submission to Usurpers," in which he also explains that he only ceased to use the Prayer Book itself when he was deprived of it by a troop of soldiers who, "immediately after Morning Service ended," on a Sunday in November 1644, "seized upon the book and tore it all in pieces." [WALTON'S Life of Sanderson, 1678. SANDERSON'S Cases of Conscience, 1685, p. 157.] Bishop Jeremy Taylor published a "Collection of Offices" for the same purpose. The following narrative respecting Bishop Bull gives us a graphic picture of the course adopted by these good men:—

"The iniquity of the times would not bear the constant and regular use of the Liturgy; to supply, therefore, that misfortune, Mr. Bull formed all the devotions he offered up in public, while he continued minister of this place, out of the Book of Common Prayer, which did not fail to supply him with fit matter and proper words upon all those occasions that required him to apply to the throne of grace with the wants of his people. He had the example of one of the brightest lights of that age, the judicious Dr. Sanderson, to justify him in this practice: and his manner of performing the public service was with so much fervour and ardency of affection, and with so powerful an emphasis in every part, that they who were most prejudiced against the Liturgy did not scruple to commend Mr. Bull as a person that prayed by the Spirit, though at the same time they railed at the Common Prayer as a beggarly element, and as a carnal performance.

"A particular instance of this happened to him while he was minister of St. George's, which, because it sheweth how valuable the Liturgy is in itself, and what unreasonable prejudices are sometimes taken up against it, the reader will not, I believe, think it unworthy to be related. He was sent for to baptize the child of a Dissenter in his parish, upon which occasion he made use of the office of Baptism, as prescribed by the Church of England, which he had got entirely by heart; and he went through it with so much readiness and freedom, and yet with so much gravity and devotion, and gave that life and spirit to all that he delivered, that the whole audience was extremely affected with his performance; and notwithstanding that he used the sign of the cross, yet they were so ignorant of the offices of the Church that they did not thereby discover that it was the Common Prayer. But after that he had concluded that holy action, the father of the child returned him a great many thanks, intimating at the same time with how much greater edification they prayed, who entirely depended upon the Spirit of God for His assistance in their extempore effusions, than those did who tied themselves up to premeditated forms; and that if he had not made the sign of the cross, that badge of Popery, as he called it, nobody could have formed the least objection against his excellent prayers. Upon which Mr. Bull, hoping to recover him from his ill-grounded prejudices, shewed him the office of Baptism in the Liturgy, wherein was contained every prayer which he had offered up to God on that occasion; which, with farther arguments that he then urged, so effectually wrought upon the good man and his whole family, that they always after that time frequented the parish church, and never more absent themselves from Mr. Bull's communion." [NELSON'S Life of Bull, p. 31.]

THE REVISED PRAYER BOOK OF A.D. 1662.

It was quaintly said by Jeremy Taylor, comparing the fate of the Book of Common Prayer to that of the roll sent by Jeremiah to Jehoiakim, "This excellent Book hath had the fate to be cut in pieces with a penknife and thrown into the fire, but it is not consumed" [TAYLOR'S Coll. of Offices, Pref.], and his faith and foresight were rewarded by seeing its full and complete resuscitation. When the Republican form of government collapsed upon the death of Cromwell, the restoration of the ancient Constitution of the country involved the restoration of its ancient Church, and consequently its ancient system of devotion as represented by the English Offices that had been in use for nearly a century before the Revolution. When the time drew near for the return of Charles II. to the throne of his fathers, Prayer Books were brought from their hiding-places, printers began to prepare a fresh supply, and its offices began to be openly used, as in the case of the good and great Dr. Hammond, who was interred with the proper Burial Service on April 26, 1660. Before the end of 1660 the demand for Prayer Books had been so great, notwithstanding the number of old ones which had been preserved, that five several editions in folio, quarto, octavo, and a smaller size are known to have been printed.<sup>1</sup>

Charles II. landed in England on May 26, 1660, the Holy Communion having been celebrated on board the "Naseby" at a very early hour in the morning; probably by Cosin, the King's Chaplain, whose influence was afterwards so great in the revision of the Prayer Book. As soon as the Court was settled at Whitehall, Divine Service was restored in the Chapel Royal. On July 8th, Evelyn records in his Diary [ii. 152] that "from henceforth was the Liturgy publicly used in our Churches." Patrick is known to have used it in his church on July 2nd; and Cosin, who reassumed his position as Dean of Peterborough at the end of that month, immediately began to use it in his Cathedral. From Oxford, Lamplugh (subsequently Archbishop of York) writes on August 23, 1660, that the Common Prayer was then used everywhere but in three colleges,<sup>2</sup> shewing how general had been its restoration in the University Chapels, and perhaps also in the City Churches. By October 1661, Dean Barwick had restored the Choral Service first at Durham, and then at St. Paul's. The feeling of the people is indicated by several petitions which were sent to the King, praying that their ministers might be compelled to use the Prayer Book in Divine Service, the Mayor and Jurats of Faversham (for example) complaining that their Vicar, by refusing to give them the Common Prayer, is "thus denying them their mother's milk."<sup>3</sup> The nonconforming ministers at first allowed that they could use the greatest part of the Prayer Book; yet when requested by the King to do so, with the concession that they should omit such portions as offended their consciences, they declined;<sup>4</sup> but on the part of the Laity in general the desire for its restoration seems to have been much greater than could be supposed, considering how many had never (as adults) even heard a word of it used in church; and probably had never even seen a Prayer Book.

Before the King had left the Hague, a deputation of Presbyterian ministers, including Reynolds, Calamy, Case, and Manton, had gone over to him to use their influence in persuading him that the use of the Prayer Book having been so long discontinued, it would be most agreeable to the English people if it were not restored; and especially to dissuade him from using it and the surplice, in the Chapel Royal. The subsequent conduct of the House of Commons<sup>5</sup> shewed that this was a very daring misrepresentation of the state of the public mind on the subject; but the King appears to have been aware that it was so, for he declined, with much warmth, to agree to the impertinent and unconstitutional request, telling them in the end of his reply, that "though he was bound for the present to <sup>1</sup> The writer has examined eight copies of 1660 and one of 1661 in the Library of the British Museum, and also one of a very rare edition, similar to a copy which formerly belonged to Mr. Maskell [B. M. 3107, c], which was discovered at the bottom of the Parish Chest of Grasmere in the year 1878. The Museum Library possesses copies of all the sizes mentioned above.

Among the State Papers there is a record that John Williams and Francis Eglesfield printed an edition against the King's return, and what copies remained in their warehouse were seized by agents of Bill the King's printer on November 7, 1660. There is extant also a royal mandate to Bill, dated July 25, 1661, commanding him to restore to R. Royston, of Oxford, a quantity of Prayer Books which he had seized by mistake, supposing them to be falsely printed. [State Papers, Dom. Charles II. xxxix. 87; xlvii. 67.]

<sup>5</sup> The House of Lords proposed to insert a proviso in the Act of Uniformity making the use of the Surplice and Sign of the Cross optional as "things indifferent," but the House of Commons emphatically refused, on May 7, 1662, to accept this proviso, defending the use of it, and declaring that it was "better to impose no ceremonies than to dispense with any," and that it was very incongruous while settling uniformity to establish schism." [House of Lords' Journ. xi. 446.]

tolerate much disorder and indecency in the exercise of God's worship, he would never in the least degree, by his own practice, discountenance the good old order of the Church in which he had been bred."<sup>1</sup> As we have already seen, the Prayer Book was restored to use in the Chapel Royal immediately after the King's return.

On July 6, 1660, five weeks afterwards, there was a debate in Parliament respecting the settlement of religion. Some suggested that the restoration of the "old religion" was the only settlement required; but in the end it was agreed to pray the King that he would call an assembly of Divines for the purpose of considering the subject. The King, however, issued a "Declaration" on October 25, 1660, in which he refers to his letter from Breda, promising toleration to all opinions, and to the visit of the Presbyterian preachers; and complains of the intolerant spirit which is shewn towards himself by the Presbyterians in wishing to deprive him of the services in the Chapel Royal, and in much misrepresenting his words, acts, and motives. He states that it had been his intention to call a Synod at once to consider the affairs of the Church, but that personal feeling is so strong as to make such a step unwise for the present. Throughout this Declaration the King assumes that the Church is restored in its integrity; but promises that he will call an assembly of "learned Divines, of both persuasions," to review the "Liturgy of the Church of England, contained in the Book of Common Prayer, and by law established;" again exhorting those who cannot conscientiously use the whole of it, to use such portions as they do not object to.<sup>2</sup>

It was in fulfilment of this promise that a Royal Commission was addressed on March 25, 1661, to the following Divines, who constituted what is known as the "Savoy Conference," from its place of meeting, in the Master's lodgings at the Savoy Palace or Hospital in the Strand, the Master at that time being the Bishop of London:—

As this Conference was the last official attempt to reconcile what was afterwards called the "Low Church party" and Dissenters to the cordial use of the Catholic offices of the Church, it will be desirable to give a short account of its proceedings. The Letters Patent authorized the Commissioners "to advise upon and review the said Book of Common Prayer, comparing the same with the most ancient liturgies which have been used in the Church in the primitive and purest times; and to that end to assemble and meet together from time to time, and at such times within the space of four calendar months now next ensuing, in the Master's lodgings in the Savoy in the Strand, in the county of Middlesex, or in such other place or places as to you shall be thought fit and convenient; to take into your serious and grave considerations the several directions, rules, and forms of prayer, and things in the said Book of Common Prayer contained, and to advise and consult upon and about the same, and the several objections and exceptions which shall now be raised against the same. And if occasion be, to make such reasonable and necessary alterations, corrections, and amendments therein, as by and between you the said Archbishop, Bishops, Doctors, and persons hereby required and authorized to meet and advise as aforesaid, shall be agreed upon to be needful or expedient for the giving satisfaction unto tender consciences, and the restoring and continuance of peace and unity in the Churches under our protection and government; but avoiding, as much as may be, all unnecessary alterations of the forms and liturgy wherewith the people are already acquainted, and have so long received in the Church of England."<sup>1</sup>

This Commission met at the Savoy in the Strand on April 15th, and its sittings ended on July 24, 1661: the Session of Parliament and Convocation commencing on May 8th of the same year. "The points debated," writes Izaak Walton, "were, I think, many; some affirmed to be truth and reason, some denied to be either; and these debates being then in words, proved to be so loose and perplexed as satisfied neither party. For some time that which had been affirmed was immediately forgot or denied, and so no satisfaction given to either party. But that the Debate might become more useful, it was therefore resolved that the day following the desires and reasons of the Nonconformists should be given in writing, and they in writing receive answers from the conforming party." [WALTON'S Life of Sanderson, sign. l.] The "several objections and exceptions" raised against the Prayer Book were thus presented to the Bishops in writing, and they are all on record in two or three contemporary reports of the Conference, of which one is referred to in the footnote, being also printed at length in CARDWELL'S Conferences on the Book of Common Prayer. Some of these "exceptions" were of importance, one requiring that the whole of the responsive system of the Prayer Book should be abolished, even the Litany being to be made into one long prayer, and nothing said in Divine Service by any one except the Minister, unless it were Amen. Another required the abolition of Lent and Saints' Days. But most of the exceptions were of a frivolous kind, and the remarks which accompanied them were singularly bitter and uncharitable, as well as diffuse and unbusiness-like. It seems almost incredible that grave Divines should make a great point of "The Epistle is written in" being an untrue statement of the case when a portion of a prophecy was read and technically called an "Epistle;" or that they should still look upon it as a serious grievance when the alteration conceded went no further than "For the Epistle:." or again, that they should spend their time in writing a long complaint about the possibility of their taking cold by saying the Burial Service at the grave. Yet sheets after sheets of their papers were filled with objections of this kind, and with long bitter criticisms of the principles of the Prayer Book. The Bishops replied to them in the tone in which Sanderson's Preface to the Prayer Book is written, but they seem to have keenly felt what Sanderson himself expressed—mild and gentle as he was—when he long afterwards said of his chief opponent at the Savoy, "that he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities, in all his conversation."<sup>2</sup>

appeared to Dr. Sanderson to be so bold, so troublesome, and so illogical in the dispute as forced patient Dr. Sanderson, who was then Bishop of Lincoln and a Moderator with other Bishops, to say with an unusual earnestness, that he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities, in all his conversation." [WALTON'S Life of Sanderson, sign. l.3.]

Perhaps too they were reminded of Lord Bacon's saying respecting his friends, the Nonconformists of an earlier day, that they lacked two principal things, the one learning, and the other love.

The Conference was limited by the Letters Patent to four months' duration, but when that time had drawn to an end little had been done towards a reconciliation of the objectors to the use of the Prayer Book. Baxter had composed a substitute for it, occupying, as he states in his Life and Times, "a fortnight's time" in its composition; but even his friends would not accept it as such, and probably Baxter's Prayer Book never won its way into any congregation of Dissenters in his lifetime or afterwards. In Queen Elizabeth's time Lord Burleigh had challenged the Dissenters to bring him a Prayer Book made to fit in with their own principles; but when this had been done by one party of Dissenters, another party of them offered six hundred objections to it, which were more than they offered to the old Prayer Book. The same spirit appears to have been shewn at the Savoy Conference; and the principle of unity was so entirely confined to unity in opposition, that it was impossible for any solid reconciliation of the Dissenters to the Church to have been made by any concessions that could have been offered. After all the "exceptions" had been considered and replied to by the Bishops' side (replies again replied to by the untiring controversial pens of the opposite party), the result of the Commission was exhibited in the following list of changes to which the Bishops were willing to assent:—

§ 1. We are willing that all the epistles and gospels be used according to the last translation.

§ 2. That when any thing is read for an epistle which is not in the epistles, the superscription shall be "For the epistle."

§ 3. That the Psalms be collated with the former translation, mentioned in rubr., and printed according to it.

§ 4. That the words "this day," both in the collects and prefaces, be used only upon the day itself; and for the following days it be said, "as about this time."

§ 5. That a longer time be required for signification of the names of the communicants; and the words of the rubric be changed into these, "at least some time the day before."

§ 6. That the power of keeping scandalous sinners from the communion may be expressed in the rubr. according to the xxvith and xxviith canons; so the minister be obliged to give an account of the same immediately after to the ordinary.

§ 7. That the whole preface be prefixed to the commandments.

§ 8. That the second exhortation be read some Sunday or Holy Day before the celebration of the communion, at the discretion of the minister.

§ 9. That the general confession at the communion be pronounced by one of the ministers, the people saying after him, all kneeling humbly upon their knees.

§ 10. That the manner of consecrating the elements be made more explicit and express, and to that purpose these words be put into the rubr., "Then shall he put his hand upon the bread and break it," "then shall he put his hand unto the cup."

§ 11. That if the font be so placed as the congregation cannot hear, it may be referred to the ordinary to place it more conveniently.

§ 12. That these words, "yes, they do perform these," etc., may be altered thus: "Because they promise them both by their sureties," etc.

§ 13. That the words of the last rubr. before the Catechism may be thus altered, "that children being baptized have all things necessary for their salvation, and dying before they commit any actual sins, be undoubtedly saved, though they be not confirmed."

§ 14. That to the rubr. after confirmation these words may be added, "or be ready and desirous to be confirmed."

§ 15. That these words, "with my body I thee worship," may be altered thus, "with my body I thee honour."

§ 16. That these words, "till death us depart," be thus altered, "till death us do part."

§ 17. That the words "sure and certain" may be left out.

The Conference being ended, and with so little practical result, the work of Revision was committed to the Convocations of the two Provinces of Canterbury and York. On June 10, 1661, a Licence from the Crown had been issued to the Archbishop of Canterbury [Juxon], empowering the Convocation of his Province to "debate and agree upon such points as were committed to their charge."<sup>1</sup> Another was issued to the Archbishop of York [Frewen], of a similar tenor, on July 10th [or 23rd]. But little was likely to be done while the Savoy Conference was sitting, beyond preparation for future action. A fresh Licence was issued on October 10th, by which the Convocation of Canterbury was definitely directed to review the Book of Common Prayer and the Ordinal,<sup>2</sup> under the authority of the Commission sent to them on the 10th of June:<sup>3</sup> and on November 22nd a similar letter was sent to the Archbishop of York. This letter enjoined the Convocations to review the Prayer Book, and then to present it to "us for our further consideration, allowance, or confirmation."

It is probable that much consideration had been given to the subject during the five months that elapsed between the issue of the first Licence and that of the second, as a Form for the 29th of May had been agreed upon, and also the Office for Adult Baptism. When, however, the Convocation of Canterbury met on November 21, 1661, "the King's letters were read," and the revision of the Prayer Book was immediately entered upon with vigour and decision.<sup>5</sup> The Upper House appointed a Committee, consisting of the following

Matthew Wren,	Bishop of Ely.
Robert Skinner,	„ Oxford.
John Warner,	„ Rochester.
Humphry Henchman,	„ Salisbury.
George Morley,	„ Worcester.
Robert Sanderson,	„ Lincoln.
William Nicholson,	„ Gloucester.
John Cosin,	„ Durham.

The last named had been invited (with the Archbishop of York, and the Bishops of Carlisle and Chester) to be present and assist at the previous session of the Southern Convocation; and was now appointed on the Committee as the most learned ritualist among the Bishops. Wren, Warner, and Skinner had been Bishops in the Convocation of 1640.<sup>5</sup>

It was necessary that the co-operation of the York Lower House of Convocation should be secured: the Archbishop and three Bishops of that Province, the Bishops of Durham, Carlisle, and Chester, therefore wrote to Dr. Neile, the Prolocutor of York Convocation, saying that they sat in consultation with the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, and adding that as the time was very short for the work in hand, it would much facilitate its progress if some Clergy were appointed to act in the Southern Convocation as Proxies for the Northern. Eight such proxies were appointed, three of whom were members of the Lower House of Canterbury Province, the Prolocutor and the Deans of St. Paul's and Westminster, and five of the Lower House of York.<sup>7</sup>

The Committee of Bishops met at Ely House; and Sancroft, at this time Rector of Houghton-le-Spring, Prebendary of Durham, and Chaplain to Cosin, acted as their Secretary. Bishop Cosin had prepared a folio Prayer Book of 1619, in which he had written down in the margin such alterations as he considered desirable: and this volume, which is preserved in the Cosin Library, Durham [D. III. 5], has been thoroughly examined for the present work, all the alterations so made being either referred to or printed in the Notes.<sup>8</sup> This volume was evidently used as the basis of their work by the Bishops, although (as will be seen) they did not adopt all the changes proposed by Cosin, and introduced others which are not found in his Prayer Book. They were thus enabled to proceed rapidly with the work of revision, and on November 23rd sent a portion of their labours down to the Lower House, which returned it on the 27th. The whole Prayer Book was completed by December 20, 1661, and a form

<sup>5</sup> The Bishops returned to their seats in the House of Lords on November 20th, and from that time the junior Bishop said prayers daily as formerly. The Presbyterian minister had been "excused from attendance" on the House of Commons on October 7, 1660.

<sup>6</sup> Archbishop Juxon, Bishops Duppa, Piers, and Roberts, had also been Bishops in 1640. Four other Bishops in the Upper House of 1661, Sheldon, Floyd, Griffith, and Ironside, had been in the Lower House in 1640, and so had about twenty members of the Lower House of 1661.

<sup>8</sup> A fair copy of this volume, written by Sancroft in a Prayer Book of 1634, is preserved in the Bodleian Library [Arch. Bodl. D. 28], and has been collated with the original for the present work. Cosin had also written three sets of Notes on the Prayer Book; and had prepared a fourth, suggesting amendments which he considered to be necessary, several years before. These are collected in the fifth volume of his Works, published in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology. Some MS. Notes on the Prayer Book, Harl. MS. 7311, are also said to be his. [See p. 36, note.]

of Subscription was then agreed upon, of which a copy in Bishop Cosin's handwriting is inserted in his Durham Book, and which is also to be found, with all the names attached, in the Manuscript volume originally annexed to the Act of Uniformity.

Meanwhile Parliament was busily engaged in elaborating a new "Act for the Uniformity of Publick Prayers and Administration of Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies: and for establishing the Form of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the Church of England" [14 Car. II. c. 4], to which it was necessary to annex a Prayer Book, as in the case of preceding Acts of Uniformity, as the Book to which the Act referred and which was incorporated with it. There is thus not only an Ecclesiastical but a Parliamentary history of the Prayer Book, extending from June 25, 1661, to May 19, 1662; and it is very worthy of remark that the desire for the statutory restoration of the Church system of Divine Service was so great as to cause considerable impatience on the part of the Commons at the delay which occurred through the Savoy Conference and through the careful deliberation with which Convocation carried on the work of revision. This Parliamentary history of the Prayer Book is, however, of so much interest and importance that the details of it, as they appear on the Journals of the two Houses, must be referred to at some length.

On June 25, 1661, the House of Commons ordered, "That a Committee be appointed to view the several laws for confirming the Liturgy of the Church of England; and to make search, whether the original book of the Liturgy, annexed to the Act passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of King Edward the Sixth, be yet extant; and to bring in a compendious Bill to supply any defect in the former laws; and to provide for an effectual conformity to the Liturgy of the Church, for the time to come." The Bill was brought in on June 29th, and read a second time on July 3rd, a Prayer Book of 1604 being temporarily annexed to it. When the Bill was committed on the latter day an instruction was given to the Committee, a very large one, that "if the original Book of Common Prayer cannot be found, then to report the said printed book, and their opinion touching the same; and to send for persons, papers, and records." The search for the original Prayer Book proved fruitless, and when the Bill was read a third time on July 9th, "a Book of Common Prayer, intituled 'The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church of England,' which was imprinted at London in the year 1604, was, at the clerk's table, annexed to the said Bill, part of the two prayers, inserted therein before the reading psalms being first taken out, and the other part thereof obliterated." On the following day the Bill with the Book annexed was sent up to the House of Lords, and was not again sent back to the House of Commons until April 10, 1662, the delay being caused by the proceedings of the Savoy Conference and of the Convocation.

The Bill was read a first time in the House of Lords as long afterwards as January 14, 1662; and on the 17th it was read a second time and committed. A message was brought from the House of Commons on the 28th urging the Lords to expedition, but on February 13, 1662, the Earl of Dorset reported, "That the Committee for the Bill for Uniformity of Worship have met oftentimes, and expected a book of Uniformity to be brought in; but, that not being done, their Lordships have made no progress therein; therefore the Committee desires to know the pleasure of the House, whether they shall proceed upon the Book brought from the House of Commons, or stay until the other Book be brought in. Upon this, the Bishop of London signified to the House, 'That the Book will very shortly be brought in.'"

In the Letters Patent, under the authority of which the Convocations were acting, the latter were directed, when they had revised the Prayer Book, to present it to the King "for our further consideration, allowance, or confirmation." The revision had been completed on December 20, 1661, and the direction given in the Letters Patent was complied with by sending to the King the fairly written Manuscript copy of the new Prayer Book as it had been subscribed by the two Houses of Convocation on that day. It was not to be expected, however, that the King and his Council should collate every page of this volume with the Prayer Book formerly in use, and therefore a folio black-letter Prayer Book of 1636 was also sent, in which the changes were carefully entered by Sancroft.<sup>1</sup> Two tables had also been made, on a separate paper, the one of "Alterations" and the other of "Additions," in which the "Old" text and the "New" text were put in parallel columns: at the end of the first table this note being added, "These are all y<sup>e</sup> materiall Alterations, y<sup>e</sup> rest are onely verball or y<sup>e</sup> changeing of some Rubricks for y<sup>e</sup> better performing of y<sup>e</sup> Service or y<sup>e</sup> new moulding some of y<sup>e</sup> Collects."<sup>2</sup> A Privy Council was then summoned, at which four Bishops were ordered to be present. This met on February 24, 1662, the Bishops of London, Durham, Salisbury, Worcester, and Chester being present: "at which time the Book of Common Prayer, with the Amendments and Additions, as it was prepared by the Lords Bishops, was read and approved, and ordered to be transmitted to the House of Peers, with this following recommendation, signed by His Majesty:"—

"CHARLES R.

"His majesty having, according to his Declaration of the 25th of October, 1660, granted his commission under the great seal, to several bishops and other divines, to review the Book of Common Prayer, and to prepare such alterations and additions as they thought fit to offer: afterwards the convocations of the clergy of both the provinces of Canterbury and York were by his majesty called and assembled, and are now sitting. And his Majesty hath been pleased to authorize and require the presidents of the said convocations, and other the bishops and clergy of the same, to review the said Book of Common Prayer, and the book of the form and manner of making and consecrating of bishops, priests, and deacons; and that, after mature consideration, they should make such additions or alterations in the said books respectively as to them should seem meet and convenient; and should exhibit and present the same to his majesty in writing, for his majesty's further consideration, allowance, or confirmation. Since which time, upon full and mature deliberation, they the said presidents, bishops, and clergy of both provinces, have accordingly reviewed the said books, and have made, exhibited, and presented to his majesty in writing, some alterations, which they think fit to be inserted in the same, and some additional prayers to the said Book of Common Prayer, to be used upon proper and emergent occasions.

"All which his majesty having duly considered, doth, with the advice of his council, fully approve and allow the same; and doth recommend it to the House of Peers, that the said Book of Common Prayer, and of the form of ordination and consecration of bishops, priests, and deacons, with those alterations and additions, be the book which, in and by the intended Act of Uniformity, shall be appointed to be used, by all that officiate in all cathedral and collegiate churches and chapels, and in all chapels of colleges and halls in both the universities, and the colleges of Eton and Winchester, and in all parish churches and chapels within the kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and by all that make or consecrate bishops, priests, or deacons, in any of the said places, under such sanctions and penalties as the parliament shall think fit.

"Given at our court, at Whitehall, the 24th day of February, 1661" [New Style 1662].

The Journals add, "The book mentioned in his majesty's message was brought into this House; which is ordered to be referred to the committee for the Act of Uniformity." Lord Clarendon mentions that the Revised Book, that is, the MS. which the members of Convocation had subscribed, was "confirmed by his Majesty under the Great Seal of England;" and as, being Chancellor at the time, the Seal would have been affixed by his direction, it seems impossible that he should have been mistaken, though no trace of the Great Seal is now to be found in connection with the volume.

A few days afterwards, on March 3, 1662, a conciliatory explanation of the delay was given by the King himself to the House of Commons, as is shewn by the following entry in its Journals:—

"[The king having commanded the Commons to attend him in the banqueting-house, Whitehall, on Saturday, 1st March, they did so; and the speaker read his majesty's speech to the house, on the following Monday. In the course of it his majesty said:—]

"Gentlemen, I hear you are very zealous for the church, and very solicitous, and even jealous, that there is not expedition enough used in that affair. I thank you for it, since, I presume, it proceeds from a good root of piety and devotion: but I must tell you I have the worst luck in the world, if, after all the reproaches of being a papist, whilst I was abroad, I am suspected of being a presbyterian now I am come home. I know you will not take it unkindly, if I tell you, that I am as zealous for the church of England, as any of you can be; and am enough acquainted with the enemies of it, on all sides; that I am as much in love with the Book of Common Prayer, as you can wish, and have prejudice enough to those that do not love it; who, I hope, in time will be better informed, and change their minds: and you may be confident, I do as much desire to see a uniformity settled, as any amongst you: I pray, trust me, in that affair; I promise you to hasten the despatch of it, with all convenient speed; you may rely upon me in it.

"I have transmitted the Book of Common Prayer, with those alterations and additions which have been presented to me by the Convocation, to the House of Peers with my approbation, that the Act of Uniformity may relate to it: so that I presume it will be shortly despatched there; and when we have done all we can, the well settling that affair will require great prudence and discretion, and the absence of all passion and precipitation."

Parliament now proceeded to the completion of the Act of Uniformity without any further delay. The Lords' Committee reported to the House on March 13, 1662, and on that and the following two days the "alterations and additions" were read;<sup>1</sup> "which being ended, the Lord Chancellor, in the name, and by the directions of the House, gave the Lords and Bishops thanks, for their care in this business; and desired their Lordships to give the like thanks, from this House, to the other House of Convocation, for their pains herein." On the 17th the "House took into consideration the Bill concerning Uniformity in Public Worship, formerly reported from the committee. And, upon the second reading of the alterations and provisos, and considerations thereof, it is ordered, that this House agrees to the preamble, as it is now brought in by the committee. And the question being put, 'Whether this book that hath been transmitted to this House from the King shall be the book to which the Act of Uniformity shall relate?' it was resolved in the affirmative."

<sup>1</sup> In the original rough Minutes of proceedings taken by the Clerks it is stated that "after debate it was resolved that the amendments and alterations in the printed book should be read, which was this day begun accordingly, and so the Preface was read." This shews the purpose for which the "printed book" sent with the "fairly written" MS. was prepared. Both books are mentioned subsequently as being sent down to the House of Commons.

After the Act had been carefully considered clause by clause, it was read a third time and passed on April 9, 1662, and before holding a conference with the Commons on the following day "the House directed that the Book of Common Prayers, recommended from the King, shall be delivered to the House of Commons, as that being the Book to which the Act of Uniformity is to relate; and also to deliver the book wherein the alterations are made, out of which the other Book was fairly written; and likewise to communicate to them the King's message, recommending the said book; and lastly, to let the Commons know, 'That the Lords, upon consideration had of the Act of Uniformity, have thought fit to make some alterations, and add certain provisos, to which the concurrence of the House of Commons is desired.'"

The "book wherein the alterations are made" was the black-letter Prayer Book of 1536, which has already been mentioned; "the other book" which had been "fairly written" out of it was the Manuscript volume to which the members of Convocation had appended their subscriptions, and which was afterwards "joined and annexed" to the Act of Uniformity: both volumes being still preserved in the House of Lords.<sup>1</sup>

On April 11, 1662, the Act of Uniformity was again in the House of Commons, and on the 14th "the amendments in 'The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England,' sent from the Lords; the transcript of which Book, so amended, therewith sent, they desire to be added to the Bill of Uniformity, instead of the book sent up therewith, was, in part, read."

The reading was finished the same afternoon, and on the following day a Committee was appointed "to compare the Books<sup>2</sup> of Common Prayer, sent down from the Lords, with the book sent up from this House; and to see whether they differ in anything besides the amendments, sent from the Lords, and already read in this House, and wherein; and to make their report therein, with all the speed they can. And, for that purpose, they are to meet this afternoon, at two of the clock, in the Speaker's chamber."

The Committee sat late and early, and reported to the House on the afternoon of the 16th, receiving the special thanks of the House for their expedition. The question was then put, "Whether debate shall be admitted to the amendments made by the Convocation in the Book of Common Prayer, and sent down by the Lords to this House?" when ninety members voted for and ninety-six against a debate. Afterwards the question was put, "That the amendments made by the Convocation, and sent down by the Lords to this House, might, by the order of this House, have been debated, and it was resolved in the affirmative."<sup>3</sup>

Much further debate took place on the many clauses of the Act of Uniformity, and on the various amendments made or proposed, but the only other incident specially connected with the Prayer Book itself was the formal correction of a clerical error, which is thus recorded in the Journals of the House of Lords on May 8, 1662:—

"Whereas it was signified by the House of Commons, at the conference yesterday, 'That they found one mistake in the rubric of baptism, which they conceived was a mistake of the writer, "persons" being put instead of "children:"'

<sup>1</sup> Both these volumes were practically lost sight of for forty or fifty years, but were discovered in 1867 to have been all the while in safe custody, first on a shelf in the chamber where the original Acts of Parliament were preserved, and afterwards in the Library of the House of Lords.

<sup>3</sup> The constitutional respect of the two Houses for Convocation is strongly illustrated by an incident which occurred on one of these days. A strong desire had been expressed in the House of Commons that a proviso should be introduced into the Act of Uniformity "for being uncovered and for using reverent gestures at the time of Divine Service." This proviso was twice read, "but the matter being held proper for the Convocation," it was ordered that those members who managed the Conference with the Lords should intimate the desire of the House. This was done, and the following entry appears in the Journals of the House of Lords on May 8th:—

"Whereas it was intimated at the conference yesterday, as the desire of the House of Commons, 'That it be recommended to the Convocation, to take order for reverent and uniform gestures and demeanors to be enjoined at the time of divine service and preaching:'

"It is ordered by this House, and hereby recommended to the Lords, the Bishops, and the rest of the Convocation of the Clergy, to prepare some canon or rule for that purpose, to be humbly presented unto his majesty for his assent."

"The Lord Bishop of Durham acquainted the House, that himself, and the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, and the Lord Bishop of Carlile, had authority from the Convocation to mend the said word, averring it was only a mistake of the scribe. And accordingly they came to the clerk's table, and amended the same."<sup>1</sup>

The amendments proposed by the House of Commons in the Act of Uniformity all tended to raise the tone in which the Prayer Book was to be used, and to make the provisions of the Act more strict. They especially required, as has already been mentioned, that the Surplice, and the Sign of the Cross in Baptism, should continue to be used. These amendments were all agreed to by the Lords on May 10th; and thus the Prayer Book, as amended by Convocation, and the Act of Uniformity, as amended by Parliament, both received the Royal Assent on May 19, 1662.

In answer to inquiries from the House of Lords, the Bishops had guaranteed (on April 21st) that the Book should be in print and ready for use on August 24th, the Feast of St. Bartholomew, which was the day fixed by Parliament for the Act to come into operation. The printing was done in London by Bill and Barker, the King's Printers, and under the superintendence of Convocation, which, as early as March 8th, had appointed Dr. Sancroft to be Supervisor, and Messrs. Scattergood and Dillingham, Correctors of the press.<sup>2</sup> The following MS. entry on the fly-leaf of Bishop Cosin's Durham Book, in the Bishop's own hand, will shew how much anxious thought he had taken for this and all other matters connected with the Revision of the Prayer Book:<sup>3</sup>—

"Directions to be given to the printer.

"Set a fair Frontispiece at the beginning of the Book, and another before the Psalter, to be designed as the Archbishop shall direct, and after to be cut in Brass." [A proof copy of this is preserved in the same volume.]

"Add nothing. Leave out nothing. Alter nothing, in what Volume soever it be printed. Particularly; never cut off the Lord's Prayer, Creed, or any Collect with an etc.; but wheresoever they are to be used, print them out at large, and add [Amen] to the end of every prayer.

"Never print the Lord's Prayer beyond—'deliver us from evil. Amen.'

"Print the Creeds always in three paragraphs, relating to the three Persons, etc.

"Print not Capital letters with profane pictures in them.

"In all the Epistles and Gospels follow the new translation." [They are so written in the MS. annexed to the Act of Uniformity.]

"As much as may be, compose so that the leaf be not to be turned over in any Collect, Creed, Verse of a Psalm, Middle of a sentence, etc.

"Set not your own Names in the Title-page nor elsewhere in the Book, but only 'Printed at London by the printers to the King's most excellent Majesty. Such a year.'" [These names were erased from the Sealed Books.]

"Print [Glory be to the Father, etc.] at the end of every Psalm, and of every part of canticle. Psalm.

"In this Book:—

"Where a line is drawn through the words, that is all to be left out.

"Where a line is drawn under the words, it is to be printed in the Roman letter.

"Where a prick line is drawn under the words, it is not part of the book, but only a direction to the printer or reader.

<sup>1</sup> This correction was made both in the black-letter copy and in the manuscript, where it is still to be seen. An order for making it had passed Convocation on April 24th. [KENNETT'S Register, p. 666.]

A more curious slip of the pen is said to have been corrected with a bold readiness by Lord Clarendon. "Archbishop Tenison told me by his bedside on Monday, Feb. 12, 1710, that the Convocation book intended to be the copy confirmed by the Act of Uniformity had a rash blunder in the rubrick after Baptism, which should have run [It is certain by God's word, that children which are baptized dying before they commit actual sin are undoubtedly saved]. But the words [which are baptized] were left out, till Sir Cyril Wyche coming to see the Lord Chancellor Hyde found the book brought home by his lordship, and lying in his parlour window, even after it had passed the two houses, and happening to cast his eye upon that place, told the Lord Chancellor of that gross omission, who supplied it with his own hand." [Ibid. p. 643.] This story was fifty years old when it reached Bishop Kennett, but it has an air of probability; and such strange accidents in the most important matters have not unfrequently occurred. So the word "not" was once omitted from the seventh commandment in a whole edition [A. D. 1631] of the Holy Bible; the printers being heavily fined for the mistake. But there is no trace of the error in either the black-letter copy or the manuscript. If it ever existed it was probably in the copy prepared for the printers, of which nothing is now known.

<sup>2</sup> Among Archbishop Sancroft's MSS. in the Bodleian, there is a letter from one of Bishop Cosin's chaplains, written from Bishop Auckland on June 16, 1662, in which he says, "My lord desires at all times to know particularly what progress you make in the Common Prayer." There is also a mandate from Charles II. to the Dean and Chapter of Durham among the State Papers, dated June 16, 1662, likewise, and ordering them to dispense with Prebendary Sancroft's residence, as he "has been for some months, and still is attending the impression of the Liturgy;" and adding that "it is not the meaning of the statutes to require the residence of members of the Chapter when service of greater use to the Church requires them." [State Papers, lvi. 61.]

<sup>3</sup> It is very singular that Burton had alleged, in his Fryall of Private Devotions, that there was "in the great printing house at London a Common Prayer Book," altered with Cosin's hand, to shew "how he would have it altered." Prynne asserts something similar in his criticism of COSIN'S Devotions, printed in 1626 and 1627. [Brief Censure of Mr. Cosin's and his Cozening Devotions, pp. 92, 104.] These anticipations of Cosin's influence shew that he was marked out for a leader in the work of revision.

“Where this note [ is set, a break is to be made, or a new line begun.

“Where a double line is drawn under any words, they are to be printed in Capitals.”

From this memorandum, and from evidence supplied by the character of the printed copies used for the “Sealed Books” hereafter mentioned, it may be concluded that the “copy” sent to the printing office was a printed Prayer Book with the corrections written in, as in the volume which had been sent with the manuscript to the King and the Houses of Parliament: and it is to be observed that the “prickt” or dotted “line,” as well as the other marks spoken of above, all occur both in that volume and in the copy revised by Cosin’s own hand.

But although great care was used to print the supply of books required for present use according to the Text which had been prepared by Convocation, still greater care was necessary for the production of a printed Text that would so exactly correspond with the Manuscript volume which had been annexed to the Act of Uniformity as to be an accurate representative of the actual Record. While, therefore, the Act of Uniformity was passing through Parliament, the House of Commons inserted a clause which provided that “a true and perfect copy of this Act, and of the said Book annexed hereunto,” should be provided by the Deans and Chapters of every Cathedral or Collegiate Church before Christmas Day, obtained “under the Great Seal of England,” and also that similar copies should be delivered into the respective Courts of Westminster, and into the Tower of London, to be kept and preserved as records. It was also provided that these books should “be examined by such persons as the King’s Majesty shall appoint under the Great Seal of England for that purpose, and shall be compared with the original Book hereunto annexed.” These Commissioners were to have power “to correct, and amend in writing, any error committed by the Printer in the printing of the same book, or of any thing therein contained, and shall certify under their hands and seals . . . that they have examined and compared the said Book, and find it to be a true and perfect Copy.” The Prayer Books so certified and sealed with the Great Seal were then to be as good Records as the MS. itself.

These Commissioners were appointed by Letters Patent, which were issued on November 1, 1662, and were twenty-five in number, although seven or eight of them only signed the books when their work was completed. A special edition of the Prayer Book was printed for their use in a large folio size with wide margins, and in preparing this some oversights occurred, such as the old page headings instead of those in the Manuscript, together with some printer’s errors. Corrections were duly made by the Commissioners, but not with so minute an accuracy as was to be desired,<sup>1</sup> in every copy which was to receive the Great Seal, and a Certificate was appended to each volume, which was signed by the Commissioners on December 13, 1662. The Books so certified were afterwards ordered by the Crown to be passed under the Great Seal; and Letters Patent carrying the Seal were affixed to each of them by the Lord Chancellor on January 5, 1663.<sup>2</sup> One of the volumes was then sent to every Dean and Chapter throughout the country, one to each of the Courts at Westminster, and one to the Tower, to be preserved among the Records. Thus the Book of Common Prayer was carefully guarded through every stage of its preparation, that it might go forth to the people of England with all the authority that law can give, and that a perfect Record might never be wanting of the true document by which the system of Divine Service is regulated in the Church of England. Many of the Cathedral copies, probably all, are still in existence, that of Durham being as perfect as when first received, but the five which were formerly preserved in the Tower, the Courts of Chancery, Queen’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, have been transferred to the custody of the Master of the Rolls and are now in the Public Record Office.

The alterations and additions which were with so great care, exactness, and deliberation, made in the Prayer Book at this last Revision were too numerous to be mentioned in detail, but the more important of them were collected into two Tables, which were sent to the King and Privy Council, and, as has been shewn at p. 34, these Tables were read for the information of the two Houses of published the University of Cambridge began to print from it; but a sharp Mandate was sent to the Vice-Chancellor by the King on August 26, 1662, expressing his displeasure at the contempt of authority thus shewn, and directing him “to order” the University Printers “to forbear, to secrete the sheets of the said Books, that none may be disposed of, and to inquire why former orders were not obeyed.” [State Papers, Dom. Charles II. lviii. 42; lxi. 144; lxiii. 42.]

Parliament. They are here printed at length, both for the sake of their historical interest and also as giving a convenient view of the changes that were made.

§ Subsequent Dealings with the Prayer Book.

An attempt was made in the reign of William III. to remodel the Prayer Book on principles much less Catholic than those which had been adopted in 1549 and 1661; the two objects being to satisfy the Latitudinarians by watering down its Theology, and to bring the language of it into agreement with the so-called “elegant” English of the period; but happily the attempt was unsuccessful.<sup>1</sup>

In the year 1751 an Act of Parliament was passed “for regulating the commencement of the year, and for correcting the Calendar now in use” [24 Geo. II. c. 23], and the effect of this on the Calendar of the Prayer Book is shewn in the Introduction to the Calendar. In 1871 a new Table of Daily and Proper Lessons was compiled by a Royal Commission, approved by Convocation, and authorized by 34 and 35 Vict. c. 37. In 1872 an “Act for the Amendment of the Act of Uniformity” [35 and 36 Vict. c. 35] was also passed, sanctioning the use of a shorter form of Mattins and Evensong which had been prepared in a similar manner.

§ National Versions of the Prayer Book.

The English system of Divine Service was adopted by the Church of Scotland in the seventeenth century, and by that of the United States of America in the eighteenth: and although the Churches of both countries are but small bodies, when compared with the numbers of the population, the versions of the Book of Common Prayer adopted by them have an historical claim to be called national versions,—that of Scotland having been adopted under royal and ecclesiastical authority, while that of America was adopted under the most authoritative sanction of the ecclesiastical body to which the original English colonists of the continent belonged.

The Reformation was not carried forward in Scotland with the same calm, dispassionate, and humble reverence for the old foundations which was so conspicuous in that of the Church of England. For many years no uniform system of devotion took the place of the ancient offices, The Scottish Prayer Book. and it was not until the reign of James I. that any endeavour was made to put an end to that ecclesiastical anarchy which was thinly veiled by Knox’s miserable Book of Common Order. The General Assembly of 1616 agreed to the proposal that a national Liturgy should be framed: but King James wished to introduce the English Prayer Book, and it was used in his presence at Holyrood on May 17, 1617. Three years afterwards an Ordinal was published for the use of the Scottish Church; and the draft of a Liturgy was submitted to the King by Archbishop Spottiswoode. This was revived on the accession of Charles I., and in 1629 official measures were taken for obtaining its reconsideration and adoption by the Church of Scotland; although both the King and Laud were anxious to have the English Prayer Book introduced without alteration. Eventually the King gave way to the wish of the Scottish Bishops that a national form of Divine Service should be adopted: an episcopal committee was appointed (of whom Maxwell, Bishop of Ross, and Wedderburn, Bishop of Dunblane, appear to have been the most active), and they were engaged on the work for many months, some delay being caused, apparently, by the necessity of communicating with the King and the Archbishop of Canterbury, which had arisen from the altered relations of the two countries. The Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 was the result of these labours. It has been popularly connected with the name of Archbishop Laud, but it was the compilation of Scottish Bishops; and all the English Archbishop did was (as one of a commission of which Wren and Juxon were the other two members) to offer suggestions, prevent rash changes, communicate between the Crown and the Scottish Bishops respecting alterations, and facilitate the progress of the book through the press.

The Book of Common Prayer so prepared was not submitted to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. As the preceding pages have shewn, the English Book was, from first to last, the work of Convocation; and no doubt the Scottish book ought also to have had the sanction at least of the whole Scottish Church by representation, and not only of the Crown and the Bishops. In the year 1637 it was imposed upon the Church of Scotland by letters patent and the authority of the Bishops: but, as is well known, its introduction was vigorously opposed by a fanatical faction, which in the end became supreme, and both the Church and the Prayer Book of Scotland were suppressed. That now in use in the Scottish Church was introduced in later times; but the book of 1637 is so much connected with the history of the period, and has, besides, so much liturgical interest, that a fuller notice of it has been inserted in the Appendix at the end of this work.

Until the separation of the North American colonies from England, the English Book of Common Prayer was used without any alteration in the American Church. After they became independent, as The American Prayer Book. the United States, it was thought expedient for the Church to make some changes, especially as alterations were being introduced without authority, and there seemed danger of much disorder in Divine worship if a form were not adopted which could have some claim to be called national. The first step towards this was taken at the General Convention of the American Church held at Philadelphia in 1785: during the next four years the various Offices were gradually remodelled until they took the form in which they are now used, and which was authorized by the General Convention of 1789. Committees had been appointed to prepare an entirely new book: but in the end the English Prayer Book was taken as the basis to be adopted. The language was in many parts modernized, the Communion Office was restored to a form similar to that of 1549, a selection of Psalms was appointed as well as our daily order, the use of the Athanasian Creed was discontinued, and some other less important alterations were made. But the Preface declares that the American Church "is far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline, or worship, or farther than local circumstances require." A further account of this also will be found in the Appendix.

§ Translations of the Prayer Book.

The Book of Common Prayer arose, in no small degree, from a conviction, on the part of the Clergy and Laity of England, that Divine Service should be offered to God in the vernacular tongue of those on whose behalf and by whom it is being offered. The principle thus adopted in respect to themselves has been carried out as far as possible in all the missionary operations of the Church of England; and the establishment of her forms of Divine Service in countries where the English language is not freely spoken, has generally been accompanied by the translation of the Book of Common Prayer into the language of those who are being won over to the Church of Christ. A necessity has also arisen for translations into some European languages: while provision was made for rendering it into Welsh and Irish at the time of its first issue. An account of the Latin translation will be found under the rubric relating to the use of Divine Service in other languages than the English.

The following list contains the names of fifty-seven languages and dialects into which the Book of Common Prayer has been translated, but the number is constantly increasing as the missionary work of the Church is developed:—

Latin.	Irish.	German.	Dutch.
Greek.	Gaelic.	Spanish.	Danish.
Hebrew.	Manks.	Portuguese	Russian.
Welsh.	French.	Italian.	Polish.

Modern Greek.	Susu.	Singhalese.	Assamese.
Persian.	Amharic.	Indo-Portuguese.	Mandarin, Colloquial.
Turkish.	Telugoo.	Crec.	Swahili.
Armenian.	Chinese.	Malagasy.	Hangchow.
Armeno-Turkish.	Hawaiian.	Maori.	Sesuto.
Arabic.	Kafir.	Maltese.	Mota.
Bengali.	Bullom.	Ojibbeway.	Punjabi.
Hindi.	Yoruban.	Muncey.	Sindhi.
Burmese.	Malay.	Marathu.	Bechuana.
Mahratta.	Dyak.	Zulu.	Esquimaux.
Tamil.

Most of these translations have been produced under the auspices of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and of the Prayer Book and Homily Society; and some guarantee is thus given for accuracy. It should also be mentioned as a fact of interest and importance that the Hawaiian version was made in 1863 by the native king, Kamehameha IV., who annexed to it a Preface which shews a thorough knowledge of the principles of the Prayer Book.

RITUAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PRAYER BOOK.

SECTION I.

THE PRINCIPLES OF CEREMONIAL WORSHIP.

FORMS and ceremonies in Divine Service are bodily manifestations of spiritual worship, and the ordinary means by which that worship is expressed before God.

The whole scheme of Redemption is based on a principle which shews that God establishes communion between Himself and mankind to a great extent through the body and bodily acts, and not solely through purely mental ones, as the exercise of thought or will. For when a perfect and unimpeded spiritual intercourse was to be renewed between the Creator and His fallen creatures, God, Who "is a Spirit," took upon Him a bodily nature, "of a reasonable Soul and human Flesh subsisting," and by means of it became a Mediator, through Whom that intercourse could be originated and maintained. For the particular application, also, of the benefits of His mediation, Christ ordained Sacraments, which are outward and visible signs endowed with the capacity of conveying inward and spiritual grace to the soul through the organs of the body. "Hadst thou been incorporeal," says St. Chrysostom, "Christ would have given thee His incorporeal gifts pure and simple: but as the soul is bound up with a body, He gives thee spiritual things in sensible forms." [CHRYSOST. on Matt. xxvi.]

In analogy with this principle, Ceremonial worship, or Ritual, may be defined as the external body of words and actions by which worship is expressed and exhibited before God and man. As it is ordained that men shall tell their wants to God in prayer, although He knows better than they know themselves what each one's necessities are, so it is also ordained that spiritual worship shall be communicated to Him by words and actions, although His Omniscience would be perfectly cognizant of it without their intervention.

The Divine Will on this subject has been revealed very clearly and fully in the Holy Bible; from its earliest pages, which record the sacrifices of Cain, Abel, and Noah, to its latest, in which the worship of Heaven is set forth as it will be offered by the saints of God when the worship of Earth will have passed away.

Before the origination of the Jewish system of ceremonial, we find customs which indicate the use of certain definite forms in acts of Divine worship. The chief of these is Sacrifice, in which the fruits of the earth were offered to God, or the body of some slain animal consumed by fire on His altar. Such acts of sacrifice were purely ceremonial, whether or not they were accompanied by any words; and the account of Abraham's sacrifice, in Genesis xv. 9-17, illustrates very remarkably the minute character of the ritual injunctions given by God even before the time of the Mosaic system. The Divine institution of the outward ceremony of Circumcision is another instance of the same kind, and one of even greater force, from the general and lasting nature of the rite as at first ordained; a rite binding on the Jewish nation for nearly two thousand years. Another ceremonial custom to be observed in the Patriarchal times, is that of "bowing down the head" when worshipping the Lord [GEN. xxiv. 26, 48]; another, that of giving solemn benedictions, accompanied by laying on of hands [GEN. xxvii. 27-29; xxviii. 1-4; xlvii. 10; xlviii. 9-20]; another, that of setting up a pillar, and pouring oil upon it [GEN. xxviii. 18; xxxv. 14]; another, purification before sacrifice [GEN. xxxv. 2]; and, to name no more, one other, the reverent burial of the dead [GEN. xxiii. 19; xxxv. 19; l. 10], which even then was an act of reverence towards God, as well as of respect and affection towards the departed.

The introduction of a higher form of corporate worship than that of Patriarchal times was accompanied by a great development of ceremony or ritual. Of what was previously in use, we can only infer that it was divinely instituted; but the Divine institution of the Jewish system of ritual is told us in the most unmistakeable terms in the Holy Bible, and the narration of it occupies more than eight long chapters of the Book of Exodus [xxiv-xxxi.], together with the greater part of the twenty-seven chapters of Leviticus

This system of ritual (sometimes called "Mosaic," but in reality Divine) was revealed with circumstances of the utmost solemnity. After a preparation of sacrifices, Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the seventy elders, went up into the lower part of Mount Sinai, and from thence "they saw the God of Israel: and there was under His feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of Heaven in clearness." Moses was then commanded to go up to the summit of the mountain, "and a cloud covered the mount. And the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh day He called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud. And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel. And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him into the mount: and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights" [EXOD. xxiv. 9-18]. During this awful time of converse between God and His servant Moses, it appears that the one subject of revelation and command was that of ceremonial worship: the revelation of the moral law being recorded in the single verse, "And He gave unto Moses, when He had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God" [EXOD. xxxi. 18].

The revelation of God's will respecting forms and ceremonies thus awfully given to Moses, went into very minute particulars, which were chiefly respecting the construction of the Tabernacle, the dress of those who were to minister in it, the instrumenta of Divine Service, and the ceremonies with which that service was to be carried on. The architecture of the structure itself, the design of its utensils, and of the priestly vestments, and that kind of laws for the regulation of Divine Service which we now know as rubrics, were thus communicated to Moses by God Himself, and in the most solemn manner in which any revelation was ever given from Heaven. And when the revelation was completed, "the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah: and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship. . . . And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab, the son of Abisamach, of the tribe of Dan: and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee" [EXOD. xxxi. 1-6]. Thus Divine Inspiration was given to the principal architects and superintendents of the external fabric by means of which Divine Service was to be carried on, as well as a Revelation of its structure, and of the ceremonial itself; and no words can heighten the importance and value which Almighty God thus indicated as belonging to ceremonial worship.

Nor did this importance and value belong to ceremonial worship only in the early period of the Jewish nation's life. It was not given to them as a means of spiritual education, by which they should be gradually trained to a kind of worship in which externals should hold a less conspicuous position. Nothing whatever appears, in the revelation itself, of such an idea as this; but the ceremonial is throughout regarded as having reference to Him in Whose service it was used, looking to the Object of worship, and not to the worshippers. And accordingly, when the Jewish nation attained its highest pitch of prosperity, and probably of intellectual as well as spiritual progress, in the latter years of David and in the reign of Solomon, this elaborate system of ceremonial worship was developed instead of being narrowed. The magnificent preparations which David made for building the Temple are recorded in 1 Chron. xxii., xxviii., and xxix.; and those which he made for establishing the service there, in 1 Chron. xvi., xxiii-xxvi.: the descriptions of the structure and of the utensils being almost as minute and detailed as in the commandments of God on Sinai respecting the Tabernacle. In this more intellectual age of the Jewish nation, and for this developement of ceremonial worship, God vouchsafed to give inspiration to His servants for their work, as He had done to Bezaleel and Aholiab. When the Holy Bible gives the account of David furnishing Solomon with the designs for the Temple and its furniture, these significant words are added, "And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit." Even more striking are David's own words: "All this the Lord made me understand in writing by His hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern. . . . The Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the Lord" [1 CHRON. xxviii. 12, 19]. The fulfilment of this prophetic promise is indicated in a subsequent place by the words, "Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God" [2 CHRON. iii. 3]: and the Divine approval of all that was done is strikingly shewn in 1 Kings ix. 3; 2 Chron. v. 11-14; and vii. 1, 2. Nor should the fact be overlooked that the most costly and beautiful house of God which the world ever saw was built, the most elaborate and gorgeous form of Divine Service established, by one who was no imaginative enthusiast, but by one whose comprehensive knowledge and astute wisdom exceeded those of any man who had ever before existed, and were perhaps greater than any learning or wisdom, merely human, which have since been known. Solomon was a man of science, an ethical philosopher, and a statesman, and with all these great gifts and acquirements he was also a ritualist.

Thus the use of Ceremonial Worship in some form is shewn to have existed even in the simple Patriarchal ages; and to have been ordained in its most extreme form by God Himself in the times of Moses, David, and Solomon. Let it be reverently added, that it was this extreme form of Ceremonial Worship which our Lord recognized and took part in when He went up to Jerusalem to celebrate the great Festivals, and the restoration of which in its purity He enforced both at the beginning and end of His ministry by His "cleansing the Temple" from the presence of those who bought and sold there. The vain and empty private ceremonies which the Pharisees had invented met with the severe condemnation of our Lord; but there is not one act or word of His recorded which tends in the least towards depreciation of the Temple service; or which can lead to the supposition that the worship of God "in spirit and in truth" is to be less associated with forms and ceremonies when carried on by Christians, than when it was offered by Moses, David, Solomon, and the Old Testament saints of many centuries who looked forward to Christ.

The ritual practices of the Apostolic age are to some extent indicated in the New Testament, but as the Temple service was still carried on, and Jerusalem formed the religious centre of the Apostolic Church, it is clear that an elaborate ceremonial was not likely to be established during the first quarter of a century of the Church's existence. Yet this earliest age of the Church witnesses to the principle of ceremonial worship, as the Patriarchal age had done; and each foreshadowed a higher developement of it. A learned German ritualist has written thus on this subject: "On mature reflection, I am satisfied that the Apostles by no means performed the Divine Liturgy with such brevity, at least as a general rule, as some have confidently asserted. The faithful, whether converts among the Jews or Gentiles, were accustomed to ceremonies and prayers in their sacrifices; and can we suppose that the Apostles would neglect to employ the like, tending so greatly as these must do to the dignity of the service, and to promote the reverence and fervour of the worshipper? Who can believe that the Apostles were content to use the bare words of consecration and no more? Is it not reasonable to suppose that they would also pour forth some prayers to God, especially the most perfect of all prayers which they had learned from the mouth of their Divine Master, for grace to perform that mystery aright; others preparatory to communion, and again, others of thanksgiving for so inestimable a benefit?" [KRAZER, de Liturgiis, i. 1-3.]

But there are distinct traces of actual forms of service in the Acts of the Apostles, and in some of the Epistles. In the second chapter of the former, at the forty-second verse, it is said of the first Christians that they continued stedfastly in the doctrine [τῆ διδασχῆ] and in the fellowship [τῆ κοινωνία] of the Apostles; and in the breaking of the Bread [τῆ κλάσει τοῦ ἄρτου], and in the prayers [ταῖς προσευχαῖς]; the two latter expressions clearly indicating settled and definite ceremonial and devotional usages with which the writer knew his readers to be acquainted. St. Paul's reference to a Sunday offertory [1 Cor. xvi. 1]; to the observance of decency and order in the celebration of Divine Service [1 Cor. xiv. 40]; to the ordinances, or traditions, which he had delivered to the Corinthians, and which he had received from the Lord Himself [1 Cor. xi. 2]; and to the Divisions of Divine Service in his words, "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications [δέησεις], prayers [προσευχάς], intercessions [ἐντεύξεις], and Eucharists [εὐχαριστίας], be made for all men" [1 TIM. ii. 1],—these shew that an orderly and formal system was already in existence; while his allusion to "the traditions" [τὰς παραδόσεις], seems to point to a system derived from some source the authority of which was binding upon the Church. [See also Introd. to Liturgy.] Such an authority would attach to every word of our Blessed Lord; and when we know that He remained on earth for forty days after His Resurrection, and that during that period He was instructing His Apostles in "the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" [ACTS i. 3], it is most natural to suppose that the main points of Christian ritual were ordained by Him, as those of the Jewish ritual had been ordained during the forty days' sojourn of Moses on Sinai. It is to be remembered also that there are forms and ceremonies in use by the Church which were undoubtedly ordained by Christ, such as the laying on of hands in Ordination, the use of water and certain words in Holy Baptism, and the manual ceremonies at the Holy Communion.

At a later period, when the Temple service had nearly or quite come to an end, when the temporary dispensation of a miraculous Apostolate was drawing to a close, and when the Church was settling into its permanent form and habits, St. John (the last and most comprehensive of the Apostolic guides of the Church) wrote the Book of the Revelation; and several portions of it seem intended to set forth in mystical language the principles of such ceremonial worship as was to be used in the Divine Service of Christian churches. In the fourth chapter, the Apostle is taken up to be shewn, as Moses had been shewn, a "pattern in the Mount;" and as that revelation to Moses began to be made on the Sabbath of the Old Dispensation, so it was "the Lord's Day" on which St. John was "in the Spirit," that he might have this new revelation made to him. As, moreover, the revelation made to Moses was one respecting the ritual of the Jewish system, so there is an unmistakeable ritual character about the vision first seen by St. John; the whole of the fourth and fifth chapters describing a scene which bears a close resemblance to the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, as it was celebrated in the early ages of the Church, and as it is still celebrated in the East.

The form and arrangement of churches in primitive times was derived, in its main features, from the Temple at Jerusalem. Beyond the porch was the narthex, answering to the court of the Gentiles, and appropriated to the unbaptized and to penitents. Beyond the narthex was the nave, answering to the court of the Jews, and appropriated to the body of worshippers. At the upper end of the nave was the choir, answering to the Holy Place, for all who were ministerially engaged in Divine Service. Beyond the choir was the Bema or Chancel, answering to the Holy of Holies, used only for the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and separated from the choir by a closed screen, resembling the organ screen of our cathedrals, which was called the Iconostasis. As early as the time of Gregory Nazianzen, in the fourth century, this screen is compared to the division between the present and the eternal world [Carm. xi.], and the sanctuary behind it was ever regarded with the greatest reverence as the most sacred place to which mortal man could have access. "When," said St. Chrysostom in one of his sermons, "thou beholdest the curtains drawn up, then imagine that the heavens are let down from above, and that the Angels are descending." [CHRYS. in Eph. Hom. iii.] The veiled door which formed the only direct exit from it into the choir and nave was only opened at the time when the Blessed Sacrament was administered to the people there assembled, and thus the opening of this door brought into view the Altar and the Divine mysteries which were being celebrated there. And when St. John looked through the door that had been opened in Heaven, what he saw is thus described: "And behold a Throne was set in Heaven, . . . and round about the throne were four and twenty seats; and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold: . . . and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the Throne, . . . and before the Throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." Here is exactly represented an arrangement of the altar familiar to the whole Eastern Church, to the early Church of England, and to the Churches of Italy, France, and Germany at the present day, in which it occupies the centre of an apse in front of the seats of the Bishop and Clergy, the latter being placed in the curved part of the wall. And, although there is no reason to think that the font ever stood near the altar, yet nothing appears more likely than that the "sea of glass like unto crystal" mystically represents that laver of regeneration through which alone the altar can be spiritually approached.<sup>1</sup> Another striking characteristic of the ancient Church was the extreme reverence which was shewn to the book of the Gospels, which was always placed upon the altar and surmounted by a cross. So "in the midst of the Throne, and round about the Throne," St. John saw those four living creatures which have been universally interpreted to represent the four Evangelists or the four Gospels; their position seeming to signify that the Gospel is ever attendant upon the altar, penetrating, pervading, and embracing the highest mystery of Divine Worship, giving "glory and honour and thanks to Him that sat on the throne, Who liveth for ever and ever." In the succeeding chapter St. John beholds Him for Whom this altar is prepared. "I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the Throne, and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as It had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth." It cannot be doubted that this is our Blessed Lord in that Human Nature on which the septiformis gratia was poured without measure; and that His appearance in the form of "the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing," represents the mystery of His prevailing Sacrifice and continual Intercession. But around this living Sacrifice there is gathered all the homage of an elaborate ritual. They who worship Him have "every one of them harps," to offer Him the praise of instrumental music; they have "golden vials full of incense, which are the prayers of saints," even as the angel afterwards had "given unto him much incense that he should offer it with the prayers of the saints upon the golden altar which was before the Throne:"<sup>1</sup> they sing a new song, mingling the praises of "the best member that they have" with that of their instrumental music; and they fall down before the Lamb with the lowliest gesture of their bodies in humble adoration. Let it also be remembered that one of the Anthems here sung by the choirs of Heaven is that sacred song, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, Which was, and is, and is to come," the Eucharistic use of which is traceable in every age of the Church.

In his Additions and Corrections he also says, "There is a well open rather in front of the place where the altar once stood in the Church of St. Irene in the Seraglio at Constan-

These striking coincidences between the worship of Heaven revealed to St. John and that which was and is offered at the altars of the Church on earth, warrant us in considering this portion of the Revelation as a Divine treasury wherefrom we may draw the principles upon which the worship of earth ought to be organized and conducted. And the central point of the principles thus revealed is that there is a Person to be adored in every act of Divine Worship now, as there was a Person to be adored in the system which culminated in the Temple Service. This Person is moreover revealed to us as present before the worshippers. And He is further represented as our Redeeming Lord, the "Lamb that was slain," He Who said respecting Himself to St. John at the opening of the Apocalyptic Vision, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and am alive for evermore."

This Presence was promised by our Blessed Lord in words which the daily prayer of the Church interprets to have been spoken with reference not only to Apostolic or Episcopal councils, but also to Divine Service: "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them" [MATT. xviii. 20]. It is quite impossible to view this promise in the light of Holy Scripture, and especially of that part of the Revelation which has been referred to above, without seeing that its fullest and most essential meaning connects it with the Eucharistic Presence of Christ, the "Lamb as it had been slain." This truth so pervaded the mind of the ancient Church that in its primitive ages Divine Service consisted of the Holy Eucharist only;<sup>2</sup> and the early Liturgies speak to Christ in such terms as indicate the most simple and untroubled Faith in the actual Presence of our "Master" and Lord.<sup>3</sup> Hence the Ceremonial Worship of the early Church was essentially connected with this Divine Service; and to those who were so imbued with a belief in the Eucharistic Presence of their Lord the object of such ceremonial was self-evident. The idea of reflex action upon the worshipper probably never occurred to Christians in those times. Their one idea was that of doing honour to Christ, after the pattern of the four living creatures, the four and twenty elders, the angels, and the ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands who said "Worthy is the Lamb:" after the pattern of those who, even in Heaven, accompanied their anthems with the music of harps, and their prayers with the sweet odour of incense.

The mystery of our Lord's Presence as the Object of Divine Worship lies at the root of all the tinople. This church," he adds, "is a splendid specimen of Byzantine architecture, and contains three or four rows in the synthronus of the magnificent apse."

part of Christian worship. The "hours of prayer," now represented by our Mattins and Evensong, were derived from the Jewish ritual; and the Christians of Jerusalem evidently "went up to" those of the Temple Service while it lasted.

ceremonial practices of the Church: and a conviction that this Presence is vouchsafed chiefly through the Holy Eucharist causes the latter to become the visible centre from which all ritual forms and ceremonies radiate. It is true that there are some ceremonies which may be said to belong to the organization of Divine Service; but even that organization is linked on to acts of worship, since it is in the service of God, Who enjoins order, and exhibits it in all His works. But this latter class of ceremonies is not large, and scarcely affects the general principle which has been previously stated. There are, again, some ceremonies which may be called educational or emotional in their purpose, but they are so only in a secondary degree; and such a character may be considered as accidentally rather than essentially belonging to them.

The principles of Ceremonial Worship thus deduced from Holy Scripture may be shortly applied to some of the more prominent particulars of the ritual of the Church of England, leaving exact details for the two subsequent sections of this Introduction, and the Notes throughout the work.

1. The local habitation provided for the welcome of our Lord's mystical Presence is provided of a character becoming the great honour and blessing which is to be vouchsafed. It is the House of God, not man's house; a place wherein to meet Him with the closest approach which can be made in this life. Hence, if Jacob consecrated with the ceremony of unction the place where God made His covenant with him, and said of it, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven;" so should our churches be set apart and consecrated with sacred ceremonies making them holy to the Lord. So also, because they are to be in reality, and not by a mere stretch of language, the Presence chambers of our Lord, we must regard them as the nearest to heaven in holiness of all places on earth by the virtue of that Presence. And, lavishing all costly material, and all earnest skill upon their first erection and decoration, we shall ever after frequent them with a consciousness that "the Lord is in His holy Temple," and that all which is done there should be done under a sense of the greatest reverence towards Him.

2. Hence too, the furniture of the House of God, the utensils or instrumenta necessary for Divine Service, should all be constructed with a reverent regard to the Person in Whose service they are to be used. Costly wood or marble, precious metals and jewels, used for such an object, do not minister to luxury, and have no direct and primary reference at all to those who will use them or look upon them. But as ministering to the honour of Christ our Lord they cannot be too freely used: nor need we ever fear of expending wealth or skill too abundantly when we read of the manner in which God accepted all that Solomon had done for His holy Temple at Jerusalem, and all the beauty and splendour with which He is worshipped in Heaven. The same principle applies with equal force to the apparel in which the ministers of God carry on His Divine Worship; surplice and albe, cope and vestment, all being used in His honour, and for no other primary object whatever. If they are not necessary for the honour of God, the greater part of them are not needed at all.

3. The use of instrumental music, of singing, and of musical intonation, instead of colloquial modes of speech, are all to be explained on the same ground. Universal instinct teaches that the praises of God ought to be sung, and that singing is the highest mode of using in His service the organs of speech which He has given us. An orderly musical intonation is used by priest and people in their prayers, that they may speak to their Maker otherwise than they would speak to their fellow-men, acknowledging even by their tone of voice that He is to be served with reverence, ceremony, and awe.

4. And, lastly, the gestures used in Divine Service are used on similar principles. Kneeling in prayer, standing to sing praise, turning towards the East or the Altar when saying the Creeds, using the Sign of the Cross, humbly bowing the head at the Name of Jesus or of the Blessed Trinity,<sup>1</sup>—these are all significant gestures of reverence towards One Who is really and truly present to accept the

<sup>1</sup> "When I enter a place of common prayer, as y<sup>e</sup> choir of a collegiate church or the body of a parish church or chapel, I worship God by humbly bowing of my body towards His holy altar, where I have often experienced His most gracious and glorious presence, beseeching Him to bless and succeed me and my brethren in our joint and faithful devotion. In like manner, prayers being ended, I again worship in mind and body His eternal and only adorable Majesty, and render Him humble and cordial thanks for the assistance of His Holy Spirit in all bounden and public service through Jesus Christ our Lord. Hallelujah. I likewise lowly adore as often as I approach the board of our Lord beseeching His special aid, and grace on my self and whole congregation for the worthy and profitable performance of the Communion

Office, the most solemn service of the Church. This humiliation of my body and mind is due in public and in private for me a vile and miserable sinner to the Eternal, most holy, most worthy, and most glorious and most merciful Maker and Preserver of me and all mankind: Whom I can never too much, never enough adore, magnify, praise, serve, and honour. God accept me and my brethren. God forgive us our irreligion, our hasty, careless, cheap, indecent, and imperfect devotion." [Dr. BERNARD'S MS. Annotat. on Common Prayer, Bodl. Lib. D. 24.] Fuller notices that although Foxe was "no friend to the ceremonies," yet "he never entered any church without expressing solemn reverence therein." [FULLER'S Ch. Hist. ii. 475, ed. 1837.]

worship which they offer; One Who accepts such reverence from the holy Angels and the glorified Saints, and Who will not be otherwise than willing to receive it from His ministers and members in the Church on earth.

These, then, are the principles of Ceremonial Worship which pervade the Book of Common Prayer; and for the practical expression of which provision is made in the rubrics and in the ritual tradition to which the rubrics directly or indirectly point. They are principles which were originally laid down with the most awful solemnity by God Himself; which were not abrogated by any act or word of our Lord when He was upon earth; which were illustrated afresh on the first formation of the Christian Church in as solemn a manner as that in which they were originally enunciated; which were practically adopted by those Christians who lived nearest to the time of our Lord's ministry and teaching; and which have been followed out in our own Church from the most ancient days. The particular manner in which these Divinely revealed principles of Ceremonial Worship are practically applied to Divine Service as regulated by the present rules of the Church of England will be shewn in the following sections.

SECTION II.

THE MUSICAL PERFORMANCE OF DIVINE SERVICE.

The performance of Divine Service may be regarded in a twofold relation; as it affects the eye, and as it affects the ear. In other words, it may be considered as coming within the province, and under the superintendence of, one or other of the two representative Church officers, the Sacrist, who has charge of the Altar, Vestments, and other "Ornaments" of the Church and Ministers; and the Precentor, who is the "Chief Singer" of the Church, and whose duty it is to regulate and conduct Divine Service in its musical aspect. It is with the latter that this Section will deal: and in doing so it must be observed by way of introduction that although the directions of the Prayer Book respecting the musical performance of Divine Service are but few, they imply much more than they express; such a word as Evensong, or such brief injunctions as "here followeth the anthem;" "then shall be said, or sung;" "here shall follow;" "then shall be read;" "here the Priest and Clerks shall say;" "these Anthems shall be sung or said;" with many others, containing references to established practices, and requiring to be elucidated by historical explanations.

Before commenting upon the musical directions of the Prayer Book, it will be desirable, however, to say a few words respecting the ultimate foundation on which they rest; that is, respecting the Divine authority for the employment of instrumental and vocal music in the worship of God. For this we must go to Sacred History.

The earlier portions of that History may be passed over, as the notices of any definite and settled Ritual in Patriarchal times are but slight. We may pass over also the sojourn of the Chosen People in Egypt, their wanderings in the desert, and the unsettled period of their history in the Promised Land. "In Egypt," writes Hooker, "it may be God's people were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage, and there serve God upon their knees; peradventure, covered with dust and straw sometimes. . . . In the Desert, they are no sooner possessed of some little thing of their own, but a Tabernacle is required at their hands. Being planted in the land of Canaan, and having David to be their King, when the Lord had given him rest, it grieved his righteous mind to consider the growth of his own estate and dignity, the affairs of Religion continuing still in the former manner. What he did propose it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform; and perform in a manner suitable to their present, not to their ancient state and condition," etc. [Ecc. Pol. IV. ii. 4.] We must, therefore, look to the Davidic period of Sacred History as the earliest age in which the Church was able, through its outward circumstances, to give that full ritualistic form and expression to its worship which has ever since been so conspicuous a feature of it whether in the Temple or the Church.

The first great religious celebrations in David's reign took place in connection with the removal of the Ark from its place of banishment (after it had been captured by the Philistines in the time of Eli) to its resting-place on Mount Zion. There were two grand Choral Processional Services in connection with this removal. The former of these, in consequence of certain ritual irregularities which displeased God, came to a sad and untimely close [1 CHRON. xiii. 8-12; xv. 11-16]. The latter is the one which, as meeting with God's express approbation, especially demands our notice. It is in reference, then, to this second and successful ceremonial, that we read of David, by God's appointment, "speaking to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments of musick, psalteries and harps and cymbals, sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy." "Thus all Israel"—the narrative proceeds—"brought up the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps" [1 CHRON. xv. 28]. Nor was the work of Praise at an end. So soon as the solemn business of translating the Ark was over there was a special festival of Thanksgiving in commemoration of the auspicious event, and provision was also made for a continuous service of Praise. Hence David "appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the Ark of the Lord, and to record, and to thank and praise the Lord God of Israel;" some "with psalteries and harps;" some to make "a sound with cymbals;" besides "the priests with trumpets continually before the Ark of the Covenant of God."

Then it was that "David delivered first this Psalm to thank the Lord [Ps. cv.] into the hand of Asaph and his brethren: 'Give thanks unto the Lord; call upon His Name. . . . Sing unto Him, sing Psalms unto Him. . . . Sing unto the Lord, all the earth: shew forth from day to day His Salvation.'" And that the words of this Song should be practically realized, and the offering of Praise not cease with the festive occasion which had drawn forth the Psalm, we read of "Asaph and his brethren" being "left before the Ark of the Covenant to minister continually;" of "Heman and Jeduthun," and others, "who were expressed by name," "being chosen to give thanks to the Lord, with trumpets and cymbals, . . . and with musical instruments of God" [1 CHRON. xvi. 37, 41, 42]; of a great company of Levites being set by David "over the Service of Song in the House of the Lord, after the Ark had rest," who "ministered before the dwelling-place of the Tabernacle of the Congregation with singing" [1 CHRON. vi. 31, 32]; and of "the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, . . . who were employed in that work day and night" [1 CHRON. ix. 33]. So highly developed, indeed, did the musical department of the Divine Service become, that we find David, later in life, enumerating no fewer than "four thousand, who praised the Lord with the instruments which I made to praise therewith" [1 CHRON. xxiii. 5]. And lest we should deem these and kindred ritual arrangements of "the man after God's own heart," "the sweet Psalmist of Israel," to be mere private unauthorized exhibitions of strong musical and æsthetic taste on the part of an individual monarch, we are expressly told in one place, that "all these things were done according to . . . the commandment of The Lord by His Prophets" [2 CHRON. xxix. 25].

Solomon carefully perpetuated all the musical arrangements of his father, and after the completion of his glorious Temple, according to the pattern shewn him by God Himself, he transferred thither all the "instruments" which David had made for God's service; and there is abundant evidence in the magnificent ceremonial of the Temple Dedication, as well as in the account of his regulations for the subsequent maintenance of its Services, that he firmly established there an elaborate system of instrumental and vocal ritual. As to subsequent monarchs, in proportion as they neglected God, in that proportion did they cease to care for the Ritual of His House, and suffered the music of His Sanctuary to decline. And conversely, as any monarch was mindful of the Lord of Hosts, and zealous for His honour, so do we ever see one token of his zeal and devotion in his reverent attention to the Ritual and the Music of God's Holy Temple. Of Joash, of Hezekiah, of Josiah, the Holy Ghost recounts with special approbation their efforts for the restoration and encouragement of Church Music. When times grew darker, and when God's people fell away from Him, then they forgot that "God was their Strength, and the High God their Redeemer." Then followed the sad era of the Captivity when the harps of Sion were hung on Babel's willows. On the return from the Captivity we read of laudable and energetic attempts on the part of Ezra and Nehemiah to restore the ancient choral worship, and with a certain amount of success: but it may be doubted whether the services of the later Temple ever reached so high a standard as that which characterized them in the Temple of Solomon.

From this brief survey we learn that God's Church is emphatically "a singing Church;" that music, vocal and instrumental, is designed, by His express appointment, to constitute one essential element, one necessary feature, one integral part, of His public Ritual; that the absence of music and suitable ceremonial in the history of His ancient Church, is, in every case, not the result of His Will, but of man's sinful disregard of that Will; an infallible sign, not of the faithfulness, but of the unfaithfulness of His people.

Nor has Christianity introduced any change in this respect. At no time and in no manner has God ever given any word or sign to shew that He has altered His Will on this subject. Our Blessed Lord is not recorded to have said a word in disparagement of the general principle of Ceremonial Worship, or of the ancient Ritual, or Music, of God's Church. It was one of His chief earthly delights to take part in that worship Himself: and an elaborately Ceremonial Worship was the only public worship which He attended while sojourning here below. He was first discovered in His youth in His Father's Temple. His first-recorded words are, "Wist ye not that I must be ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Πατρὸς μου;" words which "remind the earthly mother that it was in the courts of His Heavenly Father's House that the Son must needs be found; that His true home was in the Temple of Him Whose glories still lingered round the heights of Moriah."<sup>1</sup> Do we not see Him here and elsewhere expressing in deed that which of old He expressed in word by the mouth of His "Sweet Singer,"—"Lord, I have loved the Habitation of Thy House. . . . My soul hath a desire and longing to enter into the Courts of my God"?

And even after the Ascension, while we read of our Lord's chosen ones meeting together for their private celebrations of the Blessed Eucharist in their own consecrated Oratory,<sup>2</sup> "the large Upper Room" (that sacred spot, hallowed first by the visible Presence of Christ, and then by the descent of the Holy Ghost), we find them exhibiting the effect of their Master's reverent example and teaching, by "continuing," none the less, "daily, with one accord, in the Temple," for the public worship of God.

Our Lord came, not to abolish, but to transfigure the old Ritual; not to diminish, but to increase its glory; to breathe into its dead forms a Divine and Life-giving Energy. Christian worship, at its first introduction, was not designed to supplant, but to supplement, the ancient Ritual. It was probably simple in outward character, as being only private; God's public worship being still intrusted to, and conducted by, the Ministers of the Old Dispensation. For a whole generation, the two went on simultaneously; the public worship of the Old, the private worship of the New Dispensation. The two were ultimately to be fused together: the outward and expressive forms of the Old, adapted, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, to clothe the august realities of the New.

It is plainly recorded when and where the first Christian Service took place; viz. on the eve of our Lord's Passion, and in "the large Upper Room"—hereafter to become the first Oratory of the Christian Church. Though outwardly, it may be, without pomp and show, as bearing on it the shadow of the great Humiliation to be consummated on the morrow, yet has the world never beheld, before or since, a Service of such surpassing dignity, sacredness, and significance. Here we witness the meeting-point of two Dispensations; the virtual passing away of the Law, and its transfiguration into the Gospel; the solemn Paschal close of the Old Economy, the Holy Eucharistic Inauguration of the New. Here we see the whole Representative Church assembled together with its Divine Head. And here we find every essential element of Christian Worship introduced and blessed by Incarnate God Himself. The grand central feature of the Service is the Holy Eucharist. Clustering round, and subsidiary to it, we find supplication, intercession, exhortation, benediction, excommunication, and Holy Psalmody: "after they had sung (ὕμνησαντες), they went out to the Mount of Olives." Here, in the solemn Eucharistic Anthem which accompanied the first Celebration;—the Celebrant, God Incarnate, "giving Himself with His own Hands;" and the Leader of the Holy Choir, God Incarnate, fulfilling His own gracious prediction, "In the midst of the Church will I sing praise unto Thee" (ὕμνησω σε)—do we behold the Divine Source of that bright and ever-flowing stream of "Psalms and Hymns, and Spiritual Songs," which was to "make glad the City of God."

In this august and archetypal Service, then, we see all those venerable essentials of Christian Worship which it would afterwards devolve upon the Church, under the guidance of the indwelling Spirit, to embody and express in her solemn Liturgies; and for the clothing and reverent performance and administration of which it would be needful for her, under the same Holy Teaching, to borrow and adapt from that Divine Storehouse of Ritual which God had provided in the ancient Ceremonial.

<sup>2</sup> The English version, "breaking bread from house to house" [ACTS ii. 46], would lead us to imagine, if it suggested the Eucharist at all, that this solemn Breaking of the Bread of Life—that "Bread which is the Communion of the Body of Christ"—took place irregularly, now in one private house, now in another. This is not, however, the meaning. Καὶ ὁκον is not at any house, but "at home," at one particular house, or home. And the then Home of the Infant Church was that Sacred Place where the Holy Ghost had descended,

"filling the whole House where they were sitting;"—the "Large Upper Room," where the first Eucharist had been celebrated, where our Lord had appeared on two consecutive Sundays—"the Upper Room" [τὸ ὑπερφῶν, ACTS i. 13], to which our Lord's chosen servants resorted after the Ascension in obedience to His command that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait there for His Promised Gift, and "where abode Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip," with the rest, who "all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the Mother of Jesus, and with His brethren."

But the chief point for us, at present, is this; that in the "Hymn" of our Ever-Blessed Redeemer we meet with a new, and, if possible, more constraining warrant for the use of Music in Divine Worship. We learn that the "Service of Song," ordained of old by God for His Church, and commended by so many marks of His approval, so far from being discountenanced by our Lord, was deliberately sanctioned, appropriated, perpetuated, re-consecrated, by His own most blessed practice and example. Music was henceforth, no less than of old, to form one essential element in Divine Worship. Nor must we fail to notice that, as music was doubtless intended to find its appropriate place throughout the entire offices of the Christian Church, even as the threefold division of Church Music into "Psalms, and Hymns, and Spiritual Songs,"<sup>1</sup> twice emphatically repeated by the Holy Ghost, would seem to indicate, so its special home is the Liturgy. Wherever absent, it should not be absent there: and the immediate juxtaposition of the Words of Institution, in both Gospels, with the mention of the Hymns, may be reverently conceived to teach this. So also does the Church seem instinctively to have felt: regarding the Holy Eucharist as the great centre round which her songs of praise should cluster and revolve; the great source from which they should take their rise, and flow forth. Pliny's mention of the early morning meetings of the first Christians to offer Divine Worship and sing hymns to Christ, probably refers to their Eucharistic assemblies. And Justin Martyr's expression must have a similar allusion, when he speaks of their offering up "solemn rites and hymns," Πομπὰς καὶ ὕμνους,—where the word Πομπὰς is interpreted by Græbius to denote the solemn prayers "in Mysteriorum Celebratione." [Apol. i. 13.]

With regard to the nature of the music used in God's Church in early times, we are utterly in the dark. Over the grand old Temple Music, in fact over the whole of the ancient Jewish Ritual Song, there is an impenetrable veil hanging. There are doubtless natural reasons which may, in a measure, account for the fact; especially this, that the ancient Jews seem to have possessed no musical characters; so that the melodies used in their services have been traditional, and as an inevitable consequence, more or less at the mercy of the singers. And we must further bear in mind that, ever since the woful time of the Captivity, the Holy Nation, instead of maintaining its ancient grand Theocratic independence, has been in subjection successively to all the great powers of the world; to the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Græco-Macedonian dynasties; then, in turn, to Egypt and Syria; then to the mighty power of Rome. When we consider this, and take into account also their intestine factions, their constant unfaithfulness to God, the gradual loss therefore of their inward strength and glory, and, with these, of the beauty and completeness of that perfect Ritual which at once clothed, expressed, enshrined, and preserved their Holy Faith; it is no matter for wonder that, even before their dispersion into all lands, the memory of much of their own ancient music had faded away, and their Church song had lost its character, under the ever-varying heathen influences to which it had so long been incidentally subjected.

From the modern Jewish music we can learn nothing. Music, we are told, has been authoritatively banished from the Synagogue ever since the destruction of Jerusalem; the nation deeming its duty to be rather to mourn over its misfortunes in penitential silence, until the Coming of Messiah, than to exult in songs of praise. Hence the music which still practically exists in so many Jewish congregations throughout the world is more or less arbitrary, and destitute of traditional authority.<sup>2</sup>

We are in equal doubt as to the nature of the ancient Christian music. All we know is, that anti-

In this threefold division it is scarcely possible to miss some special secret relation with the three several Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity. (1) The "Psalms," flowing to us from, and uniting us to, the Old Dispensation, primarily lead us up to, and reveal to us, "the Father of an infinite Majesty." (2) The "Hymns," originating, as we have seen, from the Eucharistic Hymn in the Upper Room, bring us into special connection with our Lord Jesus Christ. (3) The "Spiritual Songs," as their very name indicates, rather represent the free, unrestrained outbreathings in Holy Song of that Divine Spirit which animates and inspires the Body of Christ.

So that we find the first in our Psalters; the second chiefly in our Liturgical Hymns, "Gloria in Excelsis," "Ter Sanctus," and the like; the third in our metrical songs, or odes,—those songs in which Christian feeling has ever delighted to find expression.

The first class is rather occupied with God Himself; the second, with God in His dealings with man through the One Mediator; the third, with man in his dealings with God, through the Spirit of God quickening him. Reverence and devotion speak in the first; dogma finds utterance in the second; Christian emotion in the third.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Burney says that "the only Jews now on the globe who have a regular musical establishment in their Synagogue are the Germans, who sing in parts; and these preserve some old melodies or chants which are thought to be very ancient."

Padre Martini collected a great number of the Hebrew chants, which are sung in the different synagogues throughout Europe. Dr. Burney has inserted several of these in his History of Music. But, with a single exception, they shew not even the remotest affinity to the Gregorian system of melody; nor, in the sequence of their notes, any possible observance of the ecclesiastical modes or scales.

There is, however, one exception. One single melody bears so strange a resemblance (probably purely accidental) to a Church Chant, that it is worth preserving. Transcribed into modern notation, and written in a chant form, with simple harmony, it is as follows:—

phonal singing was at a very early period introduced: in fact, there can be no reasonable doubt that it was a heritage bequeathed to the Christian Church from her elder Jewish sister, and that the Author of it was none other than the "Chief Musician" Himself. It was at Antioch, however, that the practice seems first to have systematically established itself, and from thence it ultimately spread over Christendom. Antioch was a city of great importance in the history of Church Music, for the Church there was the one which, next in order after that of Jerusalem, rose to pre-eminence, and it was in a special way the mother and metropolis of Gentile Christendom. The account which Socrates gives of the beginning of antiphonal singing in this city is too interesting to be passed over.

"Now let us record whence the hymnes that are song interchangeably in the Church, commonly called Antemes, had their originall. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch in Syria, the third Bishop in succession from Peter the Apostle, who was conversant, and had great familiarity with the Apostles, saw a vision of Angels which extolled the Blessed Trinity with Hymnes that were sung interchangeably: and delivered unto the Church of Antioch the order and manner of singing expressed in the Vision. Thereof, it came to passe, that every Church received the same tradition. So much of Antemes." [SOCRAT. Ecccl. Hist. vi. 12, Hanmer's transl., 1636.]

Antioch, as capital of Syria, capital also of Roman Asia in the East, became a great intellectual as well as theological centre, and it appears to have been the city in which Church Song first worked itself into shape; where Jewish tradition and Gentile intelligence met and blended; where the ancient Hebrew antiphonal system of Psalm recitation, and the shattered fragments of the old Ritual Song, allied themselves with, and were subjected to the laws of, modern Grecian musical science. It seems almost certain that Church music is rather Greek than Hebrew in origin. Hellenism had long been doing a Providential though subsidiary work in preparing the world for Christianity. And though Greece had fallen under the iron grasp of the power of Rome, she had, in turn, subdued her conquerors to her literature, her language, and her arts. In the department of Christian Song, then, in the Church's first essays at giving musical expression to her sacred services, no doubt she would be mainly indebted to the science and skill of that nation which had already furnished her with a language, and which yet ruled the intellect of the world. The very names of the (so-called) ecclesiastical modes, or scales,—Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, Mixo-Lydian, etc.,—bear incidental testimony to this fact, but perhaps the Church's metrical hymn-music is that branch of her song which is most directly and immediately borrowed from ancient Greece. We find the old Greek and Roman metres freely employed in the ancient Christian hymns; and doubtless the music to which they were first allied bore no very remote resemblance to that used in the heathen temples.

Metrical hymns appear to have been first used (to any extent) by heretics, for the promulgation of their tenets; and then by the Church, with the view of counteracting heretical teaching, and popularizing the true faith. St. Chrysostom's attempts to overcome attractive Arian hymn-singing at Constantinople with more attractive orthodox hymn-singing, are well known. Socrates tells us of "the melodious concert and sweet harmony in the night season;" of the "silver candlesticks, after the manner of crosses, devised for the bearing of the tapers and wax candles," presented to the good Bishop by "Eudoxia the Empress," and used by him to add beauty to his choral processions.

It was shortly before this period that St. Ambrose had introduced into the West the system of Hymn-singing and Antiphonal Psalm-chanting. He is said to have learned it at Antioch, and to have brought his melodies thence. Responsive singing seems never to have been practised in the West till his time, and the circumstances attendant upon its introduction—for the purpose of relieving his people in their nightly services during the Arian Persecution—form an interesting episode in Church History. St. Augustine's touching account of the effect produced upon himself by the psalms and hymns in St. Ambrose's Church in Milan has often been quoted, and is well known. And it is in reference to the period just referred to that he informs us that "it was then ordained that Melody to the Title of the LI. and other Psalms, or Lamnatzeach, i.e. "To the Chief Musician," as sung by the Spanish Jews.

(Original Key, F.)

the Psalms and Hymns should be sung ‘secundum morem Orientalium partium;’ and that from Milan this Eastern antiphonal system spread throughout all parts of Western Christendom. [AUG. Conf. ix. 7.]

It is very difficult to ascertain accurately (and this is not the place to discuss) the exact nature and extent of the influence exerted by St. Ambrose over the Music of the Church in the West. That his influence was very considerable is shewn by the fact of the extended use of the term “Cantus Ambrosianus” for Church song generally. Possibly this wide use of the term may account for the title given to the old melody of the “Te Deum,” which—certainly, at least, in the form in which it has come down to us—cannot be of the extremely early date which its name, “The Ambrosian Te Deum,” would appear to imply.

But the name of St. Ambrose as a musical reformer was eclipsed by that of his illustrious successor St. Gregory, who flourished about 200 years after. As Church Song was all “Ambrosian” before his time, so has it, since, been all “Gregorian.” The ecclesiastical modes, or scales, were finally settled by him; until the time when Church Music broke through its trammels, rejected the confined use of modes and systems essentially imperfect, and, under the fostering influence of a truer science, developed its hidden and exhaustless resources.

Without entering into any detail respecting the ancient Church scales, it may not be out of place to state thus much:—

I. The four scales admitted by St. Ambrose, called the Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, Mixo-Lydian (modifications of the ancient Greek scales so named), were simply, in modern language, our respective scales of D, E, F, G, without any accidentals; the melodies written in each ranging only from the keynote to its octave, and ending properly on the keynote, thence called the “final.”<sup>1</sup>

Now each particular scale had its own reciting note (or “dominant”), generally a fifth above the final.

Thus (had there been no exception) we should have had:—

The respective “ finals ” of the 4 scales	}	D E F G	}	and their corresponding “ dominants ,” or notes for recitation	}	A B C D
--	---	------------------	---	---	---	------------------

But there was one exception. For some reason or other, B was not approved of as a recitation note; and hence, in the second scale, C was substituted for it.

II. To each of these four scales St. Gregory added a subordinate, or attendant scale—just as, in the ancient Greek system, each “principal” mode had two subsidiary, or “plagal,” modes; the one below ( $\acute{\upsilon}\pi\omicron$ ) it, and the other above ( $\acute{\upsilon}\pi\epsilon\rho$ ) it—beginning four notes below it, and therefore characterized by the prefix  $\acute{\upsilon}\pi\omicron$  (hypo, or under).

Thus, to St. Ambrose’s 1st (or Dorian) mode, St. Gregory added a Hypo-Dorian.

To his 2nd (or Phrygian)                   ”                   ”                   Hypo-Phrygian.

”    3rd (or Lydian)                       ”                   ”                   Hypo-Lydian.

”    4th (or Mixo-Lydian)               ”                   ”                   Hypo-Mixo-Lydian.

So that the number of the scales, instead of four, became eight.

Each added scale is essentially the same as its corresponding “principal” scale; the “final” (or keynote, so to speak) of each being the same. Thus, D, for instance, is the proper final note for melodies, whether in the Dorian or Hypo-Dorian mode.

The only points of difference between St. Gregory’s added, and St. Ambrose’s original, scales are these:—

1. That each added scale lies a fourth below its original.

Thus, while the melodies in the four primary scales lie respectively between D, E, F, G, and their octaves; the melodies in the “plagal,” or secondary, scales lie between A, B, C, D, and their octaves.

2. And next, that the recitation notes (or dominants) of the two sets of scales are different; those of the added scales being respectively F, A, A, C.

Thus the eight scales as finally settled by St. Gregory are as follows:—

Name.	Range of 8 notes, beginning from	"Final" (or Keynote).	"Dominant" (or Reciting note).
1st. Dorian	D	D	A
2nd. Hypo-Dorian	A	D	F
3rd. Phrygian	E	E	C
4th. Hypo-Phrygian	B	E	A
5th. Lydian	F	F	C
6th. Hypo-Lydian	C	F	A
7th. Mixo-Lydian	G	G	D
8th. Hypo-Mixo-Lydian	D	G	C

In strict Gregorian song the notes were all of uniform length; and the only accidental ever allowed was the B flat.

It was necessarily by slow degrees that Ritual song assumed its full proportions, and the Divine Service clothed itself, in all its parts, with suitable musical dress.

Monotonic Recitative forms the basis of "plain song." In fact, in early times it would appear that, except in the Hymns, Church Music was exceedingly simple in character. St. Augustine tells us that St. Athanasius strongly discouraged the use of much inflexion of voice and change of note in the saying of the Divine Office. He would even have the Psalms sung almost in monotone: a practice, however, with which St. Augustine's keen musical susceptibilities could not bring him wholly to sympathize.

From the simple monotone, the other portions of the plain song little by little develope themselves. The bare musical stem becomes ever and anon foliate: its monotony is relieved with inflexions recurring according to fixed rule. Then it buds and blossoms, and flowers into melodies of endless shape.

When the musical service of the Western Church became in a measure fixed, it consisted mainly of the four following divisions:

1. There was, first, the song for the prayers, the "Cantus Collectarum," which was plain monotone.<sup>1</sup>

2. Secondly, there was the song for the Scripture Lectures, the "Cantus Prophetarum," "Epistolarum," "Evangelii," which admitted certain inflexions. These inflexions were for the most part of a fixed character, and consisted (ordinarily) in dropping the voice,—a. at each comma or colon, a minor third ("accentus medius"); β. at each full-stop, a perfect fifth ("accentus gravis").<sup>2</sup>

The same rule was followed in intoning the versicles and responses, the versicle and response together being regarded as a complete sentence; the close of the former requiring the "mediate," the close of the latter the "grave" accent.<sup>3</sup>

3. The third division embraces the Psalm-chants. These seem originally to have followed the rule of the "Cantus Prophetarum;" to have consisted of plain monotone, relieved only by one of the "accents" at the close of each verse. In course of time the middle, as well as the end of the verse, came to be inflected. The inflexions became more varied and elaborate; the result being a whole succession of distinct melodies, or chants, following the laws of the several ecclesiastical modes.

4. As the third division admitted of far greater licence than either of the two former (ultimately, of very considerable melodic latitude), so was the fourth division more free and unrestrained than all.

A - men.

a. The "accentus medius"  gave way to the "accentus moderatus," or "interrogativus," β. And the "accentus gravis"  to the

"accentus acutus,"

It is noticeable that while the Church of England (following the lead of Merbecke) has retained the use of the "mediate" and "moderate" accents, she seems practically to have parted with the "grave" and the "acute;" but the acute is still used for the Preces in Lincoln Cathedral.

This embraces the music for the Hymns, metrical or prose; for Prefaces, Antiphons, and the like. From these any continuous recitation note disappears altogether, and an unrestricted melody is the result.

Church Song has passed through many vicissitudes; becoming at times viciously ornate, debased, and emasculate. So long as the people took part in the service, the music was necessarily kept very simple. When they ceased to participate, and the service was performed for them, the once simple inflexions and melodies became expanded and developed,—ten, twenty, or more notes being constantly given to a syllable; and the plain song became the very reverse of plain, and for purposes of edification wellnigh useless.

Many protests were from time to time issued; but it was not until the period of the Council of Trent, in the sixteenth century, that really effectual and energetic measures were taken to arrest the growing evil. At that time the laborious task of examining and revising the Plain Song of the Western Church was intrusted, by the musical commissioners appointed by the Council of Trent (one of them the great St. Carlo Borromeo), to Palestrina, who chose for his principal coadjutor the painstaking Guidetti.

But twenty years before Palestrina had set about his toilsome work a similar movement had been initiated in this country, in connection with our revised Office-books. When the great remodelling of our English Services took place, earlier in the same century; when the energetic and successful attempt was made to render them once more suitable, not only for private and claustral, but for public congregational use, and at the same time to disencumber them of any novelties in doctrine or practice which in the course of ages had fastened round them; when the old Mattins, Lauds, and Prime of the Sarum Breviary were translated into the vernacular, compressed, and recast into the now familiar form of our English "Mattins," or "Morning Prayer," and the Vespers and Compline into that of our "Evening Prayer," or "Evensong;" the question of the music for these rearranged Offices forced itself upon the notice of our Church rulers. And it is most interesting to note how the same wise conservative spirit, which had guided the changes in the words, manifested itself in the corresponding changes in the music with which those words were to be allied.

The Music of English Service-books.

Radical alteration in either department there was none, simplification being the main object. And thus, in the province of Church Music, the great aim was not to discard, but to utilize the ancient plain song, to adapt it to the translated Offices, to restore it to something more of its primitive "plainness," to rid it of its modern corruptions, its wearisome "neumas" and ornaments and flourishes; so that the Priest's part, on the one hand, might be intelligible and distinct, and not veiled in a dense cloud of unmeaning notes, and the people's part, on the other, so easy and straightforward as to render their restored participation in the public worship of the Sanctuary at once practicable and pleasurable.

It has been hastily imagined by some in modern days that our great liturgical revisionists of the sixteenth century designed to abolish the immemorial custom of the Church of God, alike in Jewish and Christian times, of saying the Divine Service in some form of solemn musical recitative, and to introduce the unheard-of custom of adopting the ordinary colloquial tone of voice. But such a serious and uncatholic innovation never appears to have entered into their heads. The most that can be said of our English Post-Reformation rule on this subject is, that in case of real incapacity on the part of the priest, or other sufficient cause, the ordinary tone of voice may be employed; but this only as an exceptional alternative. The rule itself remains unchanged, the same as of old.

The Rubrical directions, "read," "say," "sing," expressed in the old technical language, are substantially what they were before. The first of these words, "legere," was the most general and comprehensive; merely expressing recitation from a book, without defining the "modus legendi," or stating whether the recitation was to be plain or inflected. The usual modes of recitation are expressed in the words "say" and "sing;" the former ("dicere") pointing to the simpler, the latter ("cantare") to the more ornate mode. Thus the old "legere" might signify (and often did) ornate singing; and it might signify (and often did) plain monotone; and it is observable that the words "say" and "sing" are often employed interchangeably in the old rubrics, when their specific distinctions do not come into prominence.<sup>1</sup>

The same holds good as to our present Book: For instance, in one place we find a rubric ordering that the Athanasian Creed shall be "read here." Now, the point of this rubric being the particular position in which the Creed shall be recited, and not the particular mode of its recitation, the general term "legere" is employed. The "modus legendi" is determined by other rubrics, which prescribe that it may be "either said, or sung;" which allow (that is) of both modes of choral recitation, either the plain or the ornate; either the simple monotone, or the regular chant.

The same thing occurs in another rubric, which (like the former), dealing with the position, not the mode, orders the "Venite" to be "read" in a certain place. Now the general term "read" in this instance is obviously equivalent with the word "sing;" the Church of England always contemplating that the Psalms shall be not said on the monotone, but sung to regular chants.<sup>1</sup>

The two works which directly illustrate the mind of the English Church as to the musical rendering of her reformed Service are, 1st, the Litany published by Crammer with its musical notation (the first instalment of our Book of Common Prayer); and, 2ndly, the more important work containing the musical notation of all the remainder of that Book, edited (plainly under the Archbishop's supervision) by John Merbecke, and published "cum privilegio" in the same year with the first Prayer Book of Edward VI.

A word or two may be said respecting both these publications.

1. The Litany was published in 1544 in a work entitled "An exhortation unto praier thought mete by the King's Majestie and his clergie, to be read &c. Also a Litany with suffrages to be said or sung." Now this Litany was set to the beautiful and simple old Litany chant still used in most of our Cathedrals and Parish Churches where the service is chorally rendered. It was republished by Grafton, with harmonies in five parts, a month after its first appearance. Some twenty years afterwards it was again harmonized by Tallis; and it has been harmonized and set in different forms by many of our English Church musicians.

2. The other publication was entitled "The Booke of Common Praier noted," wherein "is conteyned so much of the Order of Common Praier as is to be song in Churches." Like the Prayer Book itself, it contains nothing absolutely new: the old English Service Music being simplified, and adapted to our revised and translated Offices. The adjustment of the musical notation is as follows:—

i. For the Prayers, the old "Cantus Collectarum," or simple monotone, is used.<sup>2</sup>

ii. For the Versicles and Responses, the old inflected "Cantus Prophetarum."<sup>3</sup>

iii. In the Scripture Lections, however, it seems manifest that it was not in contemplation to retain the use of this last-mentioned inflected song, which of old appertained to them. In the Pre-Reformation Service-books the "Capitula" and the Lections were generally very short; the latter being moreover broken and interrupted by Antiphons. Here, inflected musical recitative might not be inappropriate. But to sing through a long lesson from the English Bible in the same artificial method would be plainly wearisome, if not somewhat grotesque.<sup>4</sup> Hence our rubric ordered that "in such places where they do sing, then shall the lesson be sung in a plain tune, after the manner of distinct reading; and likewise the Epistle and Gospel."

Now here the emphatic word appears to be "plain," as opposed to "inflected;" and the object of the rubric, to recommend the substitution of the "Cantus Collectarum," or monotone, for the Lessons, Epistle, and Gospel, in place of the ancient "Cantus Prophetarum." It is needless to point out, by the way, in the face of a rubric which defines the mode in which even the lessons are to be "sung," how little idea there was on the part of our Liturgical Revisers of interfering generally with the ancient musical performance of Divine Service.

It may not be out of place here to remark, that the above rubric which ordered the "plain tune" for the lessons, was, after the lapse of above a century, ultimately withdrawn. The Puritans strongly urged its withdrawal at the Savoy Conference, prior to the last Review in 1661. Our Divines at first refused to yield, alleging that the objections urged against the use of monotone for Holy Scripture were groundless. However, they gave way at last: and it is, perhaps, happy that they did. For, while in the case of solemn public addresses to Almighty God, the grave, devout, unsecular, ecclesiastical recitative is alone appropriate; in the case of addresses to man, even though they are lessons of Holy Scripture, which are read for purposes of instruction, a freer and less formal mode of utterance seems alike suitable and desirable.

<sup>1</sup> "The Psalter, or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung (or said) in Churches." The Psalter, we see, is specially pointed for singing: the pointing itself plainly expressing the mind and wish of the Church. The "say" only gives a permissible alternative where there is no choir.

special peculiarity of the Sarum (as distinguished from the Roman) Rite, in the employment of the grave accent (see p. 56) on the last syllable of the collect preceding the "Amen."

iv. The Te Deum is set to the ancient Ambrosian melody, simplified and adapted to the English words from the version given in the Sarum Breviary.

v. The other Canticles and the Psalms are assigned to the old Gregorian chants. The Book does not actually contain the Psalter with its chants (just as it does not contain the Litany with its music, which had been already published). A simple Gregorian melody (8th tone, 1st ending) is given for the "Venite;" after which is added, "and so forth with the rest of the Psalms as they are appointed." The primary object of this was, probably, to keep the Book in a reasonably small compass, and avoid the great additional expense of printing a musical notation for each verse of the entire Psalter. But partly, no doubt, it was the uncertainty then felt (and even to the present day, to some extent experienced) as to the best mode of selecting and adapting the old chants to English words, which caused the editors instinctively to shrink from the responsibility of so soon determining these delicate points, and to prefer leaving it to the different Choirs and Precentors to make experiments, and adapt and select according to their own judgement. There is no proof that it was intended to fasten this particular book upon the English Church. It was probably of a tentative and experimental character. It was put forth as a companion to our Revised Service-book, as a practical explanation of its musical rubrics, and as also furnishing examples and specimens of the way in which the framers of our vernacular Offices originally contemplated that they should be allied with the old Latin Ritual Song.

vi. In the music for the Hallelujah ("The Lord's Name be praised"), for the Lord's Prayer in the Post-Communion, and for the Kyrie (the melody of the latter borrowed from the Sarum "Missa pro Defunctis"), we find merely the old Sarum plain song reproduced in simplified form.

vii. The Nicene Creed, the Gloria in Excelsis, and the Offertory Sentences appear to be all original settings, although they are, as is sufficiently evident, founded, to a considerable extent, on the old Church plain song.

From what has been said it will incidentally appear, 1st, how fully determined were our sixteenth-century Revisionists that the Offices in their new form should not lose their old choral and musical character; and thus that Divine Service should still continue what it had ever theoretically been, a "Service of Song;" and, 2nd, how earnestly anxious they were that the music should be of a plain and simple character, so that it might be a real aid in the great object they had before them, that of restoring to the people their long-suspended right of due and intelligent participation in the public worship of the Sanctuary.

In illustration of these points, Cranmer's letter to Henry VIII., dated Oct. 7, 1544, is interesting; and although it is printed entire at p. 21, it is necessary again to refer to it in connection with our present subject. After speaking of the English Litany already published with musical notation; and of certain other Litanies, or "Processions," which he had been preparing, and which he requests the King to cause to be set to music, on the ground that "if some devout and solemn note be made thereunto," "it will much stir the hearts of all men to devotion;" he proceeds to offer his opinion as to the kind of music suitable for these Litanies, as also for other parts of the Service:—

"In mine opinion the Song that shall be made thereunto would not be full of notes, but as near as may be for every syllable a note; as be, in the Matins and Evensong, 'Venite,' the Hymns 'Te Deum,' 'Benedictus,' 'Magnificat,' 'Nunc Dimittis,' and all the Psalms and Versicles; and, in the Mass, 'Gloria in Excelsis,' 'Gloria Patri,' the Creed, the Preface, the 'Pater noster,' and some of the 'Sanctus' and 'Agnus.' As concerning the 'Salve, festa dies,' the Latin note, as I think, is sober and distinct enough; wherefore I have travailed to make the verses in English, and have put the Latin note unto the same. Nevertheless, they that be cunning in singing can make a much more solemn note thereto. I made them only for a proof, to see how English would do in song."<sup>1</sup>

The last portion of this letter introduces a subject on which it is necessary to add a few words, viz. the use of Metrical Hymns in public worship.

Cranmer himself was most anxious to have retained the use of them, and with that view set about translating the Breviary Hymns. But he was so dissatisfied with his attempts, that eventually he gave up the idea. This loss was a serious one, and soon made itself experienced. Fervent Christian feeling must find means of expression; and if not provided with a legitimate outlet, such as the Hymns of the Church were intended to furnish, will vent itself in ways irregular, and, perhaps, in unorthodox language.

It is difficult to ascertain the exact time when the practice of popular Hymn and metrical Psalm singing established itself in connection with our revised Ritual, though independently of its direct authority. Such singing was in use very early in Elizabeth's reign, having doubtless been borrowed from the Protestants abroad. For the purpose of giving a quasi-official sanction to a custom which it would have been very unwise to repress (and thus, through a sort of bye-law, to supply a practical want in our authorized public Ritual), it was ordained, by a Royal Injunction in the year 1559, that, while there was to be "a modest and distinct song so used in all parts of the Common Prayers in the Church that the same might be understood as if it were read without singing;" (in other words, while the old traditional plain song, in its simplified form, is to be employed throughout the whole of the service; yet.) "for the comforting of such as delight in musick it may be permitted, that in the beginning or at the end of the Common Prayer, either at morning or evening, there may be sung an hymn or such like song to the praise of Almighty God, in the best sort of melody and musick that may be conveniently devised; having respect that the sentence [i.e. sense] of the hymn may be understood and perceived."

To this Injunction of Queen Elizabeth we owe our modern Anthem; on which it is necessary to add a few words.

The term itself is merely an Anglicized synonym of the word Antiphon. Its old spelling was Antem, Anteme, or Antempne.<sup>1</sup> Its origin is the Greek word ἀντίφωνον, or rather ἀντίφωνα (antiphona: neut. plur.), which is the old ecclesiastical term. From antiphona comes the Italian and Spanish antifona, as well as the old English form antephne, and the Anglo-Saxon antefn. Now, just as the Anglo-Saxon word stefn (the end, or prow, of a ship) became stem in English, so did Antefn become Antem. The further change of the initial ant into anth is merely parallel with the corresponding change of the old English te and ta into thee and that.<sup>2</sup>

From the fact of Barrow in one of his sermons spelling the word "Anthymn," Dr. Johnson and others have hastily inferred that its true origin is to be traced in ἀντι ὕμνος or ἄνθυμνος (anti-hymnus, or anthymnus), which would give it the meaning of a responsive hymn. And it is by no means improbable that the accidental similarity in sound between the final syllable of "Anthem" and the word "hymn," coupled with the fact of the intelligible, and in a measure correct, meaning which this plausible derivation would seem to afford, has not been without its influence in determining the popular sense of the word itself. But there is not a vestige of authority for this latter derivation, and it is certain that φωνή, not ὑμνος, is the root out of which "Anthem" grows.

In its earliest form, the Anthem, or Antiphon, seems to have been a single verse out of any Psalm repeated after the recitation of the Psalm (and, in later times, before its recitation also) with a view of fixing the keynote, so to speak, of the Psalm; of bringing into prominence, and fastening attention upon, some special idea contained within it. In course of time the Antiphons came to be selected from other Psalms than the particular ones to which they were affixed; and appropriate passages of Scripture from any book, and even short uninspired sentences in prose or verse, came to be similarly applied.<sup>3</sup>

When the use of a "Hymn, or such like song," was authoritatively permitted at the beginning or end of Common Prayer—not only with a view of adding dignity and interest to the worship of Almighty God, and rendering the Service of Praise more worthy of Him to Whom it was offered, but with the twofold secondary end also (1) of "comforting" musical people by allowing the strains of the Sanctuary a greater freedom of developement than the mere chant and plain-song intonations admitted, and thus (2) of encouraging amongst all classes the study and practice of music—our Church composers, in casting about for suitable words, seem first to have had recourse to the old Antiphons, many of which they set to music. Other similar brief and characteristic passages of Holy Scripture, Prayers, Hymns, and the

<sup>3</sup> From the fact of the Antiphon giving the keynote or leading idea of the Psalm to which it was attached, we find the word Anthem frequently used for the text of a sermon. It may be remarked, that as the idea of responsive music lies at the bottom of Antiphon, or Anthem (whence we find old writers speaking of the Psalms as sung Anthem-wise, i.e. responsively), so, in the actual and varied use of the word we find sometimes the responsive and sometimes the musical element coming into prominence: occasionally, one or the other element entirely disappearing. In the text of a sermon, for instance, there is nothing musical. In a modern Anthem there is nothing necessarily responsive.

like, were speedily selected for the same purpose; but the name "Anthems," whether they happened to have been used as Antiphons or not, equally attached itself to all.

Many have endeavoured to discover some definite ritual significance in the word itself, and in the position occupied by the Anthem in our Service, to account for its name. It has been regarded as the intentional "residuum" of the Antiphons of the old Service-books. But such theories, though interesting, are unsubstantial. It is all but certain that it was through a loose, accidental, popular application of an old term, the strict meaning of which was not a matter of much concern, rather than through any deliberate conviction of the modern Anthem being, practically or theoretically, identical with, or a legitimate successor and representative of the old Antiphon, that the name Anthem finally allied itself with that class of musical compositions or Sacred Motets which now form a recognized adjunct to our English Service.<sup>1</sup> It may be added that, in country parishes, where a trained choir could not be obtained, a metrical Psalm would be sung in the place of the Anthem, and fall under the same general designation.

The actual period of the introduction of the term in its familiar modern and popular sense, to denote a piece of sacred music for the use of the Church, may perhaps be approximately illustrated by a comparison of the titles of two successive editions of a very important musical work. Within the year after the publication of Queen Elizabeth's Injunction giving permission for the use of a "Hymn, or such like song," John Day printed his great choral work entitled, "Certain notes set forthe in 4 & 5 parts, to be sung at the Morning, Communion, & Evening Prayer, very necessary for the Church of Xt to be frequented & used. And unto them be added divers godly Prayers & Psalmes in the like form to the Honour and Praise of God." Five years later, this fine work, to which Tallis with other famous Church writers contributed, was reprinted, though with a somewhat different title: "Morning & Evening Prayer & Communion set forth in 4 parts, to be sung in Churches, both for men & children, with divers other godly Prayers & Anthems of sundry men's doings." In the second edition we thus have the word "Anthems" used, where in the first edition "Psalmes" had been employed.

An illustration of the early actual use of the Anthem in its modern English sense is afforded by Strype, in his description of the Lent Services which took place in the Chapel Royal, within a year of the time when the permissive Injunction for the use of "a Hymn, or such like song," was published, at the beginning of Elizabeth's reign.

"The same day" (he writes, i.e. Midlent Sunday, March 24, 1560), "in the afternoon, Bp. Barlow, one of King Edward's Bishops, now Bishop of Chichester, preached in his Habit before the Queen. His sermon ended at five of the clock: and, presently after, her Chapel went to Evening Song. The Cross as before standing on the Altar; and two Candlesticks, and two Tapers burning in them. And, Service concluded, a good Anthem was sung." [See also MACHYN'S Diary, 1560.]

Thus the place of the Anthem became practically settled after the third Collect, with which Morning and Evening Prayer at that time concluded; although it was not till above a hundred years after this period that there was any rubrical recognition of the Anthem, or direction concerning the time of its performance. When, however, at the last Review, in 1661, the concluding prayers were added, the Anthem was not removed to the end of the Service, as before, but was still allowed to retain its old traditional place after the third Collect. And it was with a view of fixing this position that the Rubric was inserted, "In Choirs and places where they sing, here followeth the Anthem."

But although this is the only place where the introduction of a "Hymn, or such like song," or "Anthem," is definitely authorized, yet custom has sanctioned a much freer interpretation of the Rubric than its words actually convey. Practical need has asserted and substantiated its claim. The Rubric, or rather the original Injunction on which the Rubric was based, has shewn itself conveniently expansive and elastic, and the word "Anthem" proved a pregnant and germinant one, covering at once the Hymn, the Introit, and the Anthem proper. The truth is, however, that it is to custom and necessity, not to Rubrics or Injunctions, that we owe the general introduction of Music, as distinct from Plain song, into our Revised Offices. Custom drew forth the Injunction of Queen Elizabeth; the Injunction subsequently gave rise to the Rubric. But as Music originally found its way into our musical meaning. "Antem ys as moche to say as a sownynge before. For yt ys begonne before the Psalmes yt is as moche to saye as a sownynge ageynste." [Our Lady's Mirror, p. 94. E. E. T. See. ed.]

Reformed Service independently of written authority, so, independently of written authority, does it continue. For the very necessity which received formal recognition in the Anthem-Rubric, refuses to be satisfied with or limited by the strict terms of that Rubric. The Anthem, in some shape or other, was a fact before ever any written authority called it into legal existence; and in like manner, Hymn-singing, over and above the Anthem, has been, and is, and will be, an actual fact, notwithstanding its apparent want of formal rubrical sanction.

The result of all is, that while "the Anthem" still retains its place, as a special offering to God of the firstfruits of sacred musical skill and science, "in choirs and places" where such an offering is possible, the additional introduction elsewhere of suitable Hymns, whether in the Eucharistic or other Offices, as aids and reliefs to the Services, is not only not thereby excluded, but practically and subordinately and implicitly sanctioned.

This Section may be concluded with some practical rules on the subject of which it has treated.

1. Although, as we have seen, there was no deliberate intention, on the part of our Liturgical Revisers, that the old Antiphon should be reproduced, or find an exact counterpart in the modern Anthem; still, on the other hand, it is most desirable that the Anthem should practically—by its appropriate character, by its responding accordantly to the Service of the day, bringing out and emphasizing its special theme—vindicate its right to the title it has obtained, and prove itself a legitimate successor and representative of the Antiphon.<sup>1</sup> Anthems or Hymns may thus become invaluable auxiliaries; imparting a freedom and variety to our Service which it would not otherwise possess, and rendering it susceptible of easy adaptation to the ever-changing phases of the Church's year. If the "Hymn, or such like song," does not possess any of this "Antiphonal" character, if it is regarded merely in the light of so much music interpolated into the Office by way of relief, it becomes simply an element of disintegration, splitting up the Service into several isolated fragments, instead of imparting a unity and consistency and character to the whole. Hence the need of due and reverent care in the selection of the Anthems and Hymns. Judiciously chosen, they may not only give new beauty and meaning to our Services, but may also prove most useful and delightful means of propagating and popularizing Church doctrine, and promoting the growth of genuine and healthy Church feeling.

2. As regards the position of the Hymns. The Elizabethan Injunction specifies the "beginning or end of Common Prayer;" and the Rubric says, "after the third Collect." So that we have three available places for "Hymns, or such like songs." The Hymn at the beginning of Common Prayer, although desirable on great Festivals, as a kind of Antiphon fixing the keynote of the whole succeeding Service, is somewhat inconsistent with the general penitential character of the Introduction to our Mattins and Evensong, and should not, therefore, be ordinarily employed.<sup>2</sup> During the Eucharistic Office, the singing of Hymns, independently of the Nicene Creed, and the great Eucharistic Hymn "Gloria in Excelsis," is most desirable. There may be (1) an introductory "Introit;" (2) a Hymn, or (as the alternative provided in Edward's first Prayer Book) the "Agnus Dei,"<sup>3</sup> after the Prayer of Consecration; and (3) a Hymn, or (as a very suitable alternative) the "Nunc Dimittis," when the Service is over, and the remains of the Consecrated Elements are being reverently consumed. In the Office for Holy Matrimony, the Order for the Burial of the Dead, and other occasional Offices, Hymns may be often most appropriately and happily introduced.

3. With regard to the exact nature of the music to be employed in the Psalms, Hymns, Canticles, Anthems, etc., it would be most unwise, even if possible, to lay down any strict rules. While it would be a great error to discard many of the ancient Hymn-tunes and Psalm-chants of the Church, it would be a no less serious error to keep exclusively to them. The Church must bring forth from her treasure-house "things new and old;" not only the severe (and to some ears uncouth) unisonous strains of bygone times, but also the rich, full harmonics of modern days. All must be freely, fearlessly

Anthems, Responds, Invitatories, and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture."

The "O Saviour of the world," after the Psalm in the "Visitation of the Sick," is strictly an Antiphon.

"O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us.

"O Lamb of God, etc., grant us Thy peace."

employed, according as taste, or special circumstances, or choral capability may dictate. Experiments must be made, mistakes perhaps braved; for many questions as to the best practical methods of linking together the "sphere-born, harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse" in the Service of the Sanctuary remain as yet undecided. Hasty dogmatism, and intolerant exclusiveness, in reference to the accessories of Divine Worship, are much to be deprecated, for in all matters of external apparatus the Church of England has yet much to learn. In putting forth the full strength of the Prayer Book, and developing its inward powers and energies, there will be also gradually disclosed outward features and graces which seem new and strange from their having been so long latent. But it is certain that all the resources of the Church, external as well as internal, are needed for modern times; and that all appliances, musical, ritual, æsthetic, should be brought to bear on the Services rendered to God by so cultivated an age, and set forth before men to win and help their souls. God having given all these outward aids—music, ritual, art—He means them to be employed for His glory, and in order to influence, and subdue, and attract mankind. As churches should be beautiful, and ritual beautiful, so music also should be beautiful; that it may be a more fitting offering to Him, and better calculated to impress, soften, humanize, and win. None of these Divinely-granted helps may be contemptuously laid aside. All should be reverently, humbly, piously used; used for God, not for self; used in full and fearless confidence that it is His own blessed Will that they should be used; used with the single eye to the glory of God, and the spiritual welfare of His people.

SECTION III.

THE ACCESSORIES OF DIVINE SERVICE.

Divine Service being, as the term implies, the act of Worship rendered to GOD, it follows from the consideration of His Majesty that the place where it is offered, and the persons engaged in conducting it, should be furnished with whatever is suitable to denote its reverent dignity. The practice of the Jewish Church in this respect, based as it was on a Divine command which prescribed even its minutest details, proves that such accessories are not in their own nature unacceptable to God, or inconsistent with the claims of a Spiritual Being to the homage of His rational creatures. Further, the sanction given by our Lord Jesus Christ and His Apostles to the Services of the Temple and the Synagogue, and the application made of the Jewish Ritual by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews, furnish indisputable authority for incorporating similar symbolic uses with Christianity, in order that it may present itself to mankind in a not less attractive form than the Religious System which it was designed to complete, but did in the end supersede. That such a Christian adaptation of other existing Religious Ritual Customs was considered to be right and desirable, is evidenced by the fact that the Christian Church, from its earliest days downwards, has everywhere exhibited, though in varying degrees, this combination of Symbolical Ritualism with the highest spiritual worship; and thus has practically enunciated a law—that Divine Service is to be accompanied with external accessories.

The RULE given by the Church of England in applying this principle is contained in the following general Rubric, which is placed in a prominent position at the beginning of the Prayer Book: "And here is to be noted, that such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof, at all Times of their Ministration, shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this Church of England, by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth."

A Rubric substantially, though not quite verbally, identical with this, first appeared in the Elizabethan Prayer Book of 1559: the necessity for which arose out of the determination, on Queen Elizabeth's accession, to abandon the Latin Service-books, which had been restored in Queen Mary's reign, and to revert to the form of Divine Worship arranged in the Second Prayer Book of King Edward VI. [A.D. 1552], though with some revisions which made it more conformable to the First Reformed Prayer Book [A.D. 1549]. This change in the Services necessarily required some adaptation in the Accessories of Divine Worship; and as these had also undergone alterations during the period in which the Prayer Books of 1549 and 1552 were employed, it was requisite to adopt some standard by which to regulate them. The standard chosen was the use which prevailed "by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth." The Rubric which declared this decision was also incorporated with the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity; it was retained in the very slightly revised Prayer Book of James I., and was re-enacted at the last revision in 1661. It will facilitate the comparison of these four directions, to place them in parallel columns, thus:—

Prayer Book, 1559.	Statute 1 Eliz. c. 2, § 25, 1558-59.	Prayer Book, 1603-4.	Prayer Book, 1662.
“And here is to be noted, that the Minister at the time of the Communion, and at all other times in his Ministration, shall use such Ornaments in the Church as were in use by authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth, according to the Act of Parliament set in the beginning of this Book.” [The Act of Parliament here referred to is that from which the clause in the next column is taken.]	“Provided always, and be it enacted, that such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof, shall be retained and be in use, as was in this Church of England by authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth, until other order shall be therein taken by the authority of the Queen’s Majesty, with the advice of her Commissioners appointed and authorized under the Great Seal of England, for Causes Ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this Realm.”	“And here is to be noted, that the Minister at the time of the Communion, and at all other times in his Ministration, shall use such Ornaments in the Church, as were in use by authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth, according to the Act of Parliament set in the beginning of this Book.” [The Act of Parliament here referred to is that from which the clause in the preceding column is taken.]	“And here is to be noted, that such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof at all times of their Ministration, shall be retained and be in use as were in this Church of England by the Authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth.”<sup>1</sup>

But it should be noticed that, though the first three of these directions furnished the primary and general Rule during the period from 1559 to 1662, there were issued contemporaneously other orders relating to the same subject: these occur (1) in the Elizabethan INJUNCTIONS of 1559; (2) in the Elizabethan ADVERTISEMENTS of 1564-65; (3) in the Jacobean CANONS of 1603-4; (4) in the Caroline CANONS of 1640. Of all these, however, it must be remembered that they were not designed to supersede the fuller direction given in the two Rubrics and in the Statute: but that the First were explanatory of the Rubric and Statute of 1559; the Second, Third, and Fourth were drawn out by the laxity of the times, which necessitated endeavours to secure something like a general and uniform decency in the conduct of Divine Worship, and in order to effect this, insisted only upon the fewest and simplest of the Accessories which were prescribed under the fuller Rule. But these four series of special ORDERS being sometimes cited as Directions advisedly contrariant to the general RULES, it is desirable to state somewhat more particularly their precise character and object.

1. The INJUNCTIONS of 1559. Such of these as related to the Accessories of the Services and Offices appointed in the Prayer Book of 1559 were demanded by the then existing condition of things. The Statute 1 Mary, Sess. 2, c. 2, A.D. 1553, had abolished the alterations made in the reign of Edward VI., and legally restored the Services (together with their Accessories) to the condition in which they were left “in the last year of Henry Eighth.” The consequence of this was, that the

<sup>1</sup> In Bishop Cosin’s Durham Prayer Book [COSIN’S Lib. Durham, D. III. 5] the Rubric is altered from its previous to its present form in his handwriting. At the end of the alteration is a note (not intended for printing, but underscored with a dotted line), “These are the words of the Act itself, v. Supra.” He also began to write a list, but gave over the task after writing the words “Surplice &c.” Probably he thought that to specify them might peril the Rubric itself; though it is clear that his wish was to name them, for, in his “Particulars to be considered, explained, and corrected, in the Book of Common Prayer,” he appends this note to the Rubric: “But what those ornaments of the Church and of the minister were, is not here specified, and they are so unknown to many, that by most they are neglected. Wherefore it were requisite that those ornaments, used in the second year of King Edward, should be here particularly named and set forth, that there might be no difference about them.” In another Prayer Book, which is interleaved and contains copious annotations by Cosin, there is also the following fuller note on this Rubric: and for the sake of exactness it is here printed with the original spelling:—

“And there were in vse not a Surplice and hood as we now vse, but a playne white Albe wth a Vestment or Cope ou’ it: and therefore according to this rubrick are wee all still bound to weare Albes and Vestm<sup>ts</sup>, as have bene so long time worne in the Church of God, howsoever it is neglected. For the disuse of these ornam<sup>ts</sup> we may thank them y<sup>t</sup> came from Geneua, and in the beginning of Q. Eliz. reigne beyng set in places of gou<sup>rn</sup>ment, suffred eu’y negligent priest to doe what him listed, so he wold but professe a difference and an opposition in all things (though neu’ so lawfull otherwise) ag<sup>t</sup> the Church of Rome, and the Ceremonies therein vsed. If any man shall answere that now the 58 Canon hath appointed it otherwise, and y<sup>t</sup> these things are alterable by the discretion of the Church wherein we liue, I answere, y<sup>t</sup> such matters are to be altered by the same authority wherewth they were established: and y<sup>t</sup> if y<sup>t</sup> authority be y<sup>e</sup> Convocation of the Clergy, as I think it is, (only that,) that the 14 Canon comands vs to observe all y<sup>e</sup> Ceremonies p<sup>r</sup>scribed in this book, I wold faine know how we shold obserue both Canons.” [Interleaved Prayer Book of 1619, COSIN’S Lib. Durham, C. I. 2.]

Injunctions of 1547 (whether then or previously having the force of an Act of Parliament or not is here immaterial) ceased to be of any authority, at least so far as they at all affected the character of the Services: nor do they seem to have subsequently regained their authority; for the reviving Statute, 1 Eliz. c. 1, A.D. 1558, does not touch them, and the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity could, at most, only very indirectly refer to them when restoring the book of 1552, "with the order of service," subject, however, to "the alterations and additions" made by the Statute of 1559. Probably indeed it was intended not to continue the Injunctions of 1547, whether they had lapsed or not, since the issuing of new Injunctions would furnish a more convenient method of altering the former ones, if requisite, than the mere publication of amendments. But however this may have been, the Marian period having legally reintroduced some of those practices which the Injunctions of 1547 had regarded as abuses, they could not be forbidden on the ground of being unlawful. The obvious plan therefore was to repeat the process of 1547, and thus define legally how much of the existing general custom was designed to be preserved, by distinctly specifying such particular items of it as were thought desirable to be abolished. This was done by the Elizabethan Injunctions, which were founded upon those of 1547, and were followed by certain "Interpretations and further Considerations:" and thus (except such of them as did not deal at all with any old, or authorized some new, practice in regard to Ritual and Ceremonial matters) they simply subtracted certain portions from the existing whole, and so enabled the Clergy and Laity of that day to know exactly which and how many of the Accessories of Divine Service then employed were to be regarded as coming within the terms of the Rubric and Statute—"in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth." Rather less was, however, abolished by the Injunctions of 1559 than by those of 1547—e.g. nothing was said about the removal of Images, though the second Injunction forbade to "set forth or extol the dignity of any images, robes, or miracles."

2. The ADVERTISEMENTS of 1564-65. The necessity for these sprang from the great and growing negligence of the anti-ritual party, and their opposition to the then existing law which regulated the Ritual and Ceremonial. To so great a height had this attained, that it provoked a letter of complaint from the Queen to Archbishop Parker, dated January 25, 1564-65, wherein Her Majesty said that—"We, to our no small grief and discomfort, do hear that . . . for lack of regard given thereto in due time, by such superior and principal officers as you are, being the Primate, and other the Bishops of your province, . . . there is crept and brought into the Church . . . an open and manifest disorder and offence to the godly wise and obedient persons, by diversity of opinions, and specially in the external, decent and lawful rites and ceremonies to be used in the Churches . . .:" and the Queen further declared that "We . . . have certainly determined to have all such diversities, varieties, and novelties . . . as breed nothing but contention, offence, and breach of common charity, and are also against the laws, good usages, and ordinances of our realm, to be reformed and repressed and brought to one manner of uniformity through our whole realm and dominions. . . ." [Parker Correspondence, p. 224.]

In consequence of this Royal Letter the Archbishop directed the Bishop of London (Grindal), as Dean of the Province, to inform the other Bishops of the Queen's commands, and also to direct them "that they inviolably see the laws and ordinances already established to be without delay and colour executed in their particular jurisdictions." [Parker Correspondence, p. 229.] Moreover, the varieties complained of were to be stated in returns which were to be sent to the Archbishop by the end of February.

But it was no easy task to deal with the prevalent disorder, encouraged as it was by a not inconsiderable body of persons (including many Clergy and some Bishops) who had a violent dislike of the prescribed Ritual and Ceremonial. Nor is it surprising to find that the Bishops, in order to promote uniformity, contented themselves with insisting upon the observance of only such of the existing requirements as they thought necessary for the decent conduct of Divine Worship. This minimum requirement was embodied in the Advertisements which, about a month later, were submitted to the Queen for her approval, that so they might be issued with the full force of Ecclesiastical Law. Yet, anxious as Her Majesty was to stop irregularities, the requisite authorization was absolutely refused; and when, after some delay, they were set forth by the Archbishop as a rule for the Province of Canterbury, they were enforced, so far as they could be enforced, solely by his authority and that of his suffragans, no sanction being ever given to them by the Crown or by Convocation. There does not appear to be any very precise information on the matter, but the little which is available seems to imply that the Queen (if not also some of her Council) was dissatisfied with so low a standard of conformity as the Bishops had set up: and also that there was an unwillingness to appear to supersede the Rubric on Ornaments, and its corresponding clause in the Act of Uniformity, by legalizing what probably it was then hoped would be no more than a temporary step towards attaining a further compliance with the Ecclesiastical Law under more favourable circumstances.<sup>1</sup>

3. The CANONS of 1603-4. The history of the thirty-eight years between the publication of the Elizabethan Advertisements and the accession of James I., is that of a continuous strife between the Ecclesiastical Authorities and the nonconforming party in the Church of England; the efforts of the latter being encouraged by the hope, or persuasion, that the new King's familiarity with Scottish practices might favourably incline him towards their Presbyterian prepossessions. The Hampton Court Conference, which was held within the first year of King James's reign, was an effort to convince them, and to remove, if possible, any reasonable ground of complaint; but its proceedings revealed the weakness of the objections, and terminated in a resolution that any changes ought to be in the direction, not of laxity, but of strictness; and so the few alterations which were made in the Book of Common Prayer were of the latter character, and served to bring out more distinctly some points of its Doctrine,—points, however, which were clearly implied in the Services.

But it was easier to make Doctrine more objective in the Formularies than to enforce Discipline, especially in Ritual and Ceremonial matters, which were peculiarly obnoxious to those of Presbyterian inclinations. The long acquiescence in a low standard of practice in these respects could hardly be other than fatal to any attempt to impose obedience to the larger legal requirements which still subsisted. So, while it was necessary, in the loose and fragmentary condition of many of the then existing Ecclesiastical Ordinances, to provide some complete code of discipline, it was nevertheless impossible to do more than re-enforce those more limited Orders which could not be dispensed with, unless the Clergy and Churches in England were to assume a garb little, if at all, distinguishable from the Ministers and Temples of the foreign Reformed bodies or of the Presbyterian Community in Scotland.

Accordingly, in the Book of Canons "collected by Bishop Bancroft out of the Articles, Injunctions, and Synodical Acts passed and published in the reigns of King Edward the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth," and passed by "both Houses" of Convocation [COLLIER'S Eccl. Hist. ii. p. 687], all that was deemed indispensable was embodied, and in virtue of the King's Letters Patent, which ratified these Canons, became Statutably binding upon the Clergy, and Ecclesiastically obligatory upon the Laity.

4. The CANONS of 1640. During the last twenty years of King James's reign, and the first fourteen years of his successor, King Charles I., there was a gradual improvement in the externals of Divine Service, due in part to the Canons of 1603, but more, probably, to greater vigilance among the Ecclesiastical Authorities, and to an increasing desire for the restoration of what had fallen into desuetude, though it was still upheld by Ecclesiastical enactments. But the Puritan leaven was still working in the Church of England, and its fermenting power was increased by Civil proceedings with which it came in contact. The effect of this was that accusations, vaguer or more specific, became current, and presented serious obstacles to those loyal and well-affected Churchmen who were doing what they could to rescue the worship of the Church from the ill condition to which a long period of negligence had reduced it.

It was for the purpose of defending generally this reformation, and of sanctioning particularly some of its more prominent features, that the Convocation of 1640 agreed to a small code of seventeen new Canons: their design being thus distinctly proclaimed in the Letters Patent which were prefixed to them:—

"Forasmuch as We are given to understand, that many of Our subjects being mislead against the Rites and Ceremonies now used in the Church of England, have lately taken offence at the same, upon an unjust supposal, that they are not only contrary to Our Laws, but also introductive unto Popish superstitions, whereas it well appeareth unto Us, upon mature consideration, that the said Rites and Ceremonies, which are now so much quarreled at, were not onely approved of, and used by those learned and godly Divines, to whom, at the time of Reformation under King Edward the Sixth, the compiling of the Book of Common Prayer was committed (divers of whom

It is remarkable that at a much later date, early in the eighteenth century, the Roman Catholic Ritual commentator Grancolas writes in a chapter on the Church of England of that day, "All these things the priests sing in the regular course of the seasons, vested in surplice, cope, and chasuble, in the Cathedrals. They have also a choir of boys, singers, and organs." [GRANCOLAS, Comm. Hist. in Brev. Rom. i. 12.]

suffered Martyrdom in Queen Maries days), but also again taken up by this whole Church under Queen Elizabeth, and so duly and ordinarily practised for a great part of her Reign, (within the memory of divers yet living) as it could not then be imagined that there would need any Rule or Law for the observation of the same, or that they could be thought to savour of Popery.

“And albeit since those times, for want of an express rule therein, and by subtile practices, the said Rites and Ceremonies began to fall into disuse, and in place thereof other foreign and unfitting usages by little and little to creep in; Yet, forasmuch as in our Royal Chapels, and in many other Churches, most of them have been ever constantly used and observed, We cannot now but be very sensible of this matter, and have cause to conceive that the authors and fomenters of these jealousies, though they colour the same with a pretence of zeal, and would seem to strike only at some supposed iniquity in the said Ceremonies: Yet, as we have cause to fear, aim at Our own Royal Person, and would fain have Our good subjects imagine that we Our Self are perverted, and doe worship God in a Superstitious way, and that we intend to bring in some alteration of the Religion here established. . . .”

“But forasmuch as we well perceive that the misleaders of Our well-minded people do make the more advantage for the nourishing of this distemper among them from hence, that the foresaid Rites and Ceremonies, or some of them, are now insisted upon, but only in some Diocesses, and are not generally revived in all places, nor constantly and uniformly practised thorowout all the Churches of Our Realm, and thereupon have been liable to be quarreled and opposed by them who use them not. . . .”

Therefore the King had “thought good to give them free leave to treat in Convocation: and agree upon certain other Canons necessary for the advancement of God’s glory, the edifying of His holy Church, and the due reverence of His blessed Mysteries and Sacraments:” and further “to ratifie by Our Letters Patent under Our Great Seal of England, and to confirm the same. . . .”<sup>1</sup>

From what has now been said with reference to these four Series of Ecclesiastical Ordinances, it will be seen that only the two latter have anything more than Historical authority: it is only to the Canons of 1603-4 and 1640 that any legal obligation still attaches: but even these no longer retain the force which they once possessed in limiting or defining or dispensing with in practice the larger and more general Rule prescribed in the Prayer Book; for the revision of that Book in 1661, sanctioned as it was by the Convocations of the two Provinces and legalized by the Act of Uniformity 13 and 14 Charles II. c. 4, provided the latest and most authoritative law for regulating the Services of the Church of England: so that if in any instance a direction of these Canons and a direction of the Prayer Book are found to be conflicting, the Canon must yield to the Rubric, the latter being of supreme authority.

The Rubric relating to the Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers, which stood in the Books of Elizabeth and James I., is retained, then, with certain verbal changes (not, however, affecting its former sense) in the Prayer Book of 1662, that at present in use. And, by travelling back to “the Second Year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth,” and fixing upon the Ornaments then in use “in this Church of England, by the authority of Parliament,” this Rubric passes over all changes and varieties subsequent to that year, and sets up a standard by which it is easy to decide what are now the proper Accessories of Divine Worship. It has been called “The Interpretation Clause” of the Prayer Book, and with much appropriateness; for it not only furnishes an exact mode of solving doubts which may arise as to the precise meaning of the directions which prescribe things to be used in Divine Service, but also it is a trustworthy guide in ascertaining whether anything not prescribed is needful or suitable in executing the Offices which the Prayer Book provides.

But though the present authority of this Rubric could not be disputed, the meaning of those words of it, “by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth,” had in recent times often been a subject of controversy prior to the year 1857. Then, however, the celebrated Ecclesiastical suits arising out of the opposition to certain Ornaments introduced into

<sup>1</sup> It has been thought that these Canons have ceased to possess authority, owing to the language of the 13 Charles II. c. 12, § 5, A.D. 1661, where it is stated that this Act is not “to abridge or diminish the King’s Majesty’s Supremacy in Ecclesiastical matters and affairs, nor to confirm the Canons made in the year One thousand six hundred and forty, nor any of them, nor any other Ecclesiastical Laws or Canons not formerly confirmed, allowed, or enacted by Parliament, or by the Established Laws of the land, as they stood in the year of our Lord One thousand six hundred and thirty-nine.”

But, on consideration, it will be seen that the words are cautionary, and were intended to prevent any misconception as to the force of this Act, which was passed “for explanation of a Clause contained in” 17 Charles I. c. 2. The Act merely excludes these Canons from any Parliamentary authority which it might be supposed to confer on them; but then it does precisely the same with “any other Ecclesiastical Laws or Canons not formerly confirmed, allowed, or enacted by Parliament:” this necessarily includes the Canons of 1603-4, yet their authority is admitted. The Act in no way affects the recognized authority derived by the Canons of 1640, or by any others, from Royal Letters Patent: on the contrary, it helps to confirm such authority by declaring that it was not meant “to abridge or diminish the King’s Majesty’s Supremacy in Ecclesiastical matters and affairs:” and of this the confirmation of Canons was made an important part by the Act of Submission 25 Henry VIII. c. 19.

the Churches of St. Paul, Knightsbridge, and St. Barnabas, Pimlico, led to a definitive judgement on this point by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In interpreting this Rubric, the Judges determined that "the term 'ornaments' in Ecclesiastical Law is not confined, as by modern usage, to articles of decoration or embellishment, but it is used in the larger sense of the word 'ornamentum,' which, according to the interpretation of Forcellini's Dictionary, is used 'pro quocumque apparatu, seu instrumento.' All the several articles used in the performance of the Services and Rites of the Church are 'ornaments.' Vestments, Books, Cloths, Chalices, and Patens, are amongst Church Ornaments; a long list of them will be found extracted from Lyndwood, in Dr. Phillimore's Edition of BURN'S Ecclesiastical Law (vol. i. pp. 375-377). In modern times Organs and Bells are held to fall under this denomination."

Having thus defined the term "Ornaments," the Court of Appeal then interpreted the expressions "Authority of Parliament" and "Second Year" as connected with the reign of Edward VI.: their conclusion being arrived at thus:—

After noticing the alterations in King Edward's Second Prayer Book (which diminished the number of the Ornaments prescribed in his First Book), and referring to the abolition of the Reformed Services by Queen Mary, they state that "on the Accession of Queen Elizabeth, a great controversy arose between the more violent and the more moderate Reformers as to the Church Service which should be re-established, whether it should be according to the First, or according to the Second Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth. The Queen was in favour of the First, but she was obliged to give way, and a compromise was made, by which the Services were to be in conformity with the Second Prayer Book, with certain alterations; but the Ornaments of the Church, whether those worn or those otherwise used by the Minister, were to be according to the First Prayer Book."

Then they compare the four Directions, as to the Ornaments, which occur in the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity and the Prayer Books of 1559, 1603-4, 1662 (given already at p. 64), declaring of them that "they all obviously mean the same thing, that the same dresses and the same utensils, or articles, which were used under the First Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth may still be used."

Further, they discuss an important question which was raised as to the date of the Royal Assent to the Act of Uniformity which legalized the Prayer Book of 1549, and they resolve that the "use" of the Book "and the Injunctions contained in it, were established by authority of Parliament in the Second Year of Edward the Sixth, and this is the plain meaning of the Rubric." It may indeed be questioned whether what can be gathered from the records of the time warrants this decision as to the date in question;<sup>1</sup> but if it be an error, it is practically unimportant in connection with their entire interpretation of the Rubric; for, whether 1547—the date of King Edward's Injunctions, or 1549—the date of the First Prayer Book, be the "Second Year" mentioned in the Rubric, the result is the same, because no change was made in the Ornaments between those years. Moreover, the Rubric has now been judicially interpreted by a court from which there lies no appeal, and therefore that interpretation, and that only, is the sole ground upon which the members of the Church of England can legally stand in endeavouring to carry out the requirements of the Rubric on Ornaments.

One thing more the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shewed in reference to the meaning of this Rubric, viz. that though it is prescriptive, it is not exhaustive: this opinion was arrived at from their consideration of the fact, that the Second Prayer Book of Edward VI. (like the First Book, and indeed the previous Service-books) "does not expressly mention" everything which, nevertheless, it is certain was used under it, e.g. the Paten (just as the First Book does not mention, e.g., the Lincen Cloth); and also from the circumstance that they had to decide whether the Credence-table (which is not prescribed nominatim) could be regarded as a Legal Ornament. The opinion of the Court is thus stated: "Here the Rubrics of the Prayer Book become important. Their Lordships entirely agreed with the opinions expressed by the learned Judges [i.e. of the Consistory and Arches Courts] in these cases, and in 'Faulkner v. Lichfield,' that in the performance of the services, rites, and ceremonies

The Third Year of Edward VI. was from Jan. 28, 1549, to Jan. 27, 1550.

Up to Dec. 24, 1547, the ancient Salisbury Use was alone sanctioned by law. On Dec. 24, 1547, the Act of Parliament was passed which gave legal force to the resolution of Convocation that the Holy Eucharist should be administered in both kinds. A Form for carrying out this Act was issued by Proclamation on May 8, 1548, and thenceforward until June 9, 1549, the ancient Salisbury Use with a supplementary English service for communicating the Laity [see p. 13] was the only form sanctioned by law for the celebration and administration of the Holy Communion. Thus during the whole of Edward VI.'s Second Year, the ancient Latin Service was retained, and until half of his Third Year had expired: and with the ancient Service the ancient "Ornaments" were also retained.

ordered by the Prayer Book, the directions contained in it must be strictly observed; that no omission and no addition can be permitted; but they are not prepared to hold that the use of all articles not expressly mentioned in the Rubric, although quite consistent with, and even subsidiary to the Service, is forbidden. Organs are not mentioned; yet because they are auxiliary to the singing they are allowed. Pews, cushions to kneel upon, pulpit-cloths, hassocks, seats by the Communion Table, are in constant use, yet they are not mentioned in the Rubric." So, as their Lordships further argued, there being a Rubric which "directs that at a certain point in the course of the Communion Service (for this is, no doubt, the true meaning of the Rubric) the Minister shall place the bread and wine on the Communion Table," in their judgement, "nothing seems to be less objectionable than a small side-table, from which they may be conveniently reached by the officiating Minister, and at the proper time transferred to the Communion Table."

One remark, however, may be made before quitting the consideration of this judicial rendering of the Rubric; and it is this—that although it so completely covered the whole debateable ground by deciding that "the same" things "which were used under the First Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth may still be used," it does not follow that all such things can be legally restored now quite irrespective of any differences in the Prayer Book of 1549 as compared with that of 1662,—the one at present in use. It may not be useless to say, that before any Edwardian Ornament is reintroduced, under the terms of this decision, it must first be inquired whether the particular Ministration in which it is proposed to employ it is now so essentially the same as it was in 1549 that the Ornament has the like symbolical or practical use which it had then. It will probably be found that very few indeed of those Ornaments are inapplicable at this time; but to determine this it is important to proceed now to ascertain—

First, What were the customary Ornaments of that period.

There are four sources from which it may be ascertained with considerable accuracy what "Ornaments were in the Church of England, by the authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth." These are—

I. The ancient Canon Law, which is held to have been then (as now) statutely binding upon the Church by the 25th Henry VIII. c. 19, in all points where it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with later Ecclesiastical Law.

II. The Salisbury Missal, which was the Liturgy chiefly<sup>1</sup> used, and of which a new edition was published by authority in 1541: the Bangor, Hereford, and York books (especially the latter) may also be appealed to as illustrative of or supplementary to the Salisbury book, for they had long been more or less in use. "The Order of the Communion" of 1548—which was an English supplement to the Latin Mass, to come in after the Communion of the Priest for the purpose of communicating the Laity in both kinds—expressly directed in its first Rubric that "until other order shall be provided," there should be no "varying of any other rite or ceremony in the Mass." Hence the ancient Service-books continued to be used during the whole of "the second year of Edward the Sixth," and until the First English Prayer Book was published in 1549. [See p. 13, and App. to the Liturgy.]

III. The directions, explicit or implicit, in the Prayer Book of 1549.

IV. The Inventories of Ornaments which were made in pursuance of Edward VI.'s Instructions to the Commissioners appointed in 1552 to survey the Church goods throughout the kingdom. These Inventories are very numerous, and for the most part are preserved in the Public Record Office: they do not indeed exhibit such full catalogues as would have been found in 1549, for many things had been sold (especially where they were duplicates) to meet Church expenses of various kinds; and some too had been embezzled. But they are thus the more trustworthy, as being likely to shew what Articles it was deemed needful to retain for the Services then authorized. Three of these Inventories (and they are by no means the richest which might have been chosen) are here selected for comparison, as affording a probably fair specimen of the rest, viz. a Cathedral, a London Parish Church, and a Country Parish Church.

Secondly, It must be determined what Ornaments, whether by express prescription or by plain implication, are now pointed out for use in the Ministrations of the Church of England.

<sup>1</sup> The preference which seems to have been given to the Rites of Sarum is illustrated by the circumstance that the Convocation of Canterbury decreed, March 3, 1541, that the "use and custom of the Church of Salisbury should be observed by all and singular clerics throughout the Province of Canterbury, in saying their canonical hours." [WILKINS' Concilia, iii. 861, 862.]

V. These Ornaments are to be sought in the Canons of 1603-4 and of 1640; also in the directions, explicit or implicit, of the present Book of Common Prayer.

Besides the “Ornaments” contained in this List, there are many others mentioned in the Inventories, which are merely Ornaments “in the sense of Decorations.” Such are the following: Curtains for the sides of Altars; Hangings for the wall behind the Altar and of the Chancel; Carpets for the Altar steps; Cloths and Veils for Lent.

There were also “Ornaments,” i.e. Articles “used in the Services,” which, on various grounds, are barely, or not at all, consistent with the character of the present Prayer Book Services, or with some of its directions. Thus we find: the Pyx, or Monstrance, with its covering and canopy for the Reserved Sacrament (the former of which could only be used in circumstances which really necessitated Reservation for the Sick); Bason and Towel for the Priest to wash his hands before Consecrating; Sanctus, Sacring, and other Bells; Light and Covering for the Easter Sepulchre; Vessels for Holy Water; the Chrismatory for the oil of Uction in Baptism and Visitation of the Sick; the Pax for the Kiss of Peace; the Reliquary.

It will be seen, by an examination of these comparative Tables of Ornaments, that very few indeed of those which are mentioned in the Inventories, the old English Canons, and the Sarum and other books, are not distinctly and by name shewn to be legally useable now if the combined authority of the Prayer Books of 1549 and 1662, together with that of the Canons of 1603 and 1640, is, as it must be, taken into account. Moreover, of those excepted, there is not one of which it can be fairly alleged that it is wholly incongruous with the letter and the spirit of those Services which, in the present Prayer Book, occupy the place of the older Services in connection with which these Ornaments were employed.

If it were necessary here to resort to a further mode of proving what Ornaments are now lawful in the Church of England, it would be desirable to adopt the test indicated by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as noticed at p. 68. The Judges referred to a List of Church Ornaments extracted from Lyndwood, in BURN'S Ecclesiastical Law: all which occur in one or other of three series of those old English Canons already summarized in the foregoing tables, viz. [1] Archbishop Grey's Constitutions, A.D. 1250; [2] Archbishop Peckham's Constitutions at Lambeth, A.D. 1281; and [3] Archbishop Winchelsey's Constitutions at Merton, A.D. 1305. These laws define what Ornaments the Parishioners were required to provide at those periods, and are really the basis of those Rules which professedly guide the Ecclesiastical Courts now in deciding the similar liability of Parishioners in the present day. These Constitutions are contained in JOHNSON'S English Canons: and a comparison of them would shew what was considered to be generally necessary for Divine Service under the old English Rituals, and so would materially aid in determining what is legally requisite now, so far as the present Services are in unison with the ancient ones.

In considering the legal requirements of the general Rubric on the Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers, it is very important to recollect that its retention in the present Book of Common Prayer was not the mere tacit permission for an existing direction to remain; for not only (as has been already shewn at p. 64) were certain verbal changes made in the Rubric, as it had been printed in the Books of 1559 and 1604, but the question of its retention or rejection was pointedly raised by the Presbyterian party at the Savoy Conference, and was then deliberately answered by the Bishops. The Presbyterians said, "Forasmuch as this Rubric seemeth to bring back the Cope, Albe, etc., and other Vestments forbidden by the Common Prayer Book, 5 and 6 Edw. VI., and for the<sup>1</sup> reasons alleged against ceremonies under our eighteenth general exception, we desire that it may be wholly left out." [CARDWELL'S Conf. p. 314.] The Bishops replied, "§ 2. rub. 2. For the reasons given in our answer to the eighteenth general, whither you refer us, we think it fit that the Rubric continue as it is." [Ibid. p. 351.] The "reasons" here referred to are as follows: "Prop. 18, § 1. We are now come to the main and principal demand as is pretended, viz. the abolishing the laws which impose any ceremonies, especially three, the surplice, the sign of the cross, and kneeling. These are the yoke which, if removed, there might be peace. It is to be suspected, and there is reason for it from their own words, that somewhat else pinches, and that if these ceremonies were laid aside, and these or any other prayers strictly enjoined without them, it would be deemed a burden intolerable: it seems so by No. 7, where they desire that when the Liturgy is altered, according to the rest of their proposals, the minister may have liberty to add and leave out what he pleases." [Ibid. p. 345.] In what light the excepting Ministers viewed this answer of the Bishops may be gathered from their "Rejoinder" (London, 1661), where, in noticing it, they reply, "We have given you reason enough against the imposition of the usual ceremonies; and would you draw forth those absolute ones to increase the burden?" [Documents relating to the Act of Uniformity, 1862. Grand Debate, etc., p. 118.]

It is plain, therefore, that, in the judgement of the Episcopal authorities at that time, it was considered desirable to legalize a provision for Ornaments which, if acted upon, would conform the appearance of the Churches and Services to those general features which they presented in the second year of the reign of Edward VI., i.e. as the Judicial Committee has decided, to that condition in which the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. designed to leave them. Indeed it seems highly probable that had Bishop Cosin, the chief reviser in 1661, been allowed entirely to guide his Episcopal brethren on this matter, he would have made the Rubric so detailed and explicit as to place it beyond the reach of controversy; for, as already noticed at p. 64,<sup>2</sup> in his "Particulars to be considered, explained, and corrected in the Book of Common Prayer," he says, with almost a prophetic instinct of subsequent and present controversies, "But what these Ornaments of the Church and of the Minister were, is not here specified, and they are so unknown to many, that by most they are neglected. Wherefore it were requisite that those Ornaments, used in the second year of King Edward, should be here particularly named and set forth, that there might be no difference about them." [COSIN'S Works, v. p. 507.] Moreover, as is also mentioned in the same note, he had begun to write a List of the Ornaments, but got no further than the word "Surplice."

There does not appear to be any explanation on record to shew why this suggestion, apparently so

valuable, was not acted upon. Probably the ground which had to be recovered after fifteen years' banishment of the Prayer Book from Churches which had also been more or less despoiled of their Ornaments, combined with the extensively adverse temper of the time and its special manifestation in the Savoy Conference, warned the Bishops that an authorized catalogue (whether in the Prayer Book or elsewhere) of all the Legal Ornaments of King Edward's Second Year might raise a too formidable barrier against endeavours to restore the use of any of them at that time. And so it may have been regarded as the more prudent course only to re-establish the general rule as to the Ornaments, trusting to an improved ecclesiastical tone to develop in time its actual details.

The Church Revival of the Nineteenth Century has been gradually realizing this probable expectation of a future development in a way and to an extent with which no previous period since 1662 can be at all compared: for, indeed, through a variety of causes, there had been a more or less continuous declension from even that standard of Ritual and Ceremonial which the Restoration practically raised, though in fact it was considerably lower than the one legally prescribed. The renewed understanding and appreciation of Doctrine—especially of Sacramental Doctrine—as embodied in the Formularies and taught by old and great Divines of the Church of England; the improved taste for Ecclesiastical Art; the deeper sense of the reverential proprieties with which the acts of Public Worship should be surrounded: these and other favourable circumstances have combined, notwithstanding much indifference and opposition, to produce a reaction in favour of Ceremonial and its corresponding Accessories more extensive probably than that which arose in the time of King Charles I., and, as it may reasonably be believed, of a far more stable character.

The present time, then, would seem to be a not unfavourable one for endeavouring to act upon Bishop Cosin's suggestion by specifying in this Annotated Prayer Book (though of course in a wholly unauthoritative way, except so far as the law itself is therein correctly represented), "what these Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers were" at the period referred to in the Rubric which orders that they "shall be retained, and be in use." The account already given in this Section will, it is believed, have described them with sufficient clearness and exactness: the three following Tables are designed to shew more explicitly the prescribed use or the inherent fitness of the several Ornaments in connection with those "all times of their Ministration" at which the Rubric directs the Clergy to employ them. Those which may be said to be Rubrically essential are distinguished from those which may be accounted as Rubrically supplemental by the latter being printed in Italics.

* * The Episcopal Ornaments are the same for Confirmation, Ordination, Consecration of Churches and Burial Grounds: perhaps the Rubric at the end of the First Prayer Book, in directing "a Surplice or Albe, and a Cope or Vestment," may have intended the use of the Albe and Vestment when the whole Communion Service was used.

In any consideration of the Ornaments to be used in Divine Service, it is not only unavoidable but important to consider such points as [1] their material, [2] their colour, [3] their form, particularly in reference to such of them as, by reason of long disuse, are but little known. The fact that those Ornaments which have been retained in use among us do exhibit mostly their ancient material, colour, and form, except as altered, for the better or the worse, by any subsequent fashions, may fairly be taken to indicate what would have been the case with those Ornaments which have fallen into disuse: and this view is strongly confirmed by the very general preservation of these ancient characteristics in the Royal, Noble, Civic, Legislative, Judicial, Military, and Naval Ornaments which (unlike so many of the Ecclesiastical) have never ceased to be employed among us. Furthermore, it is noteworthy that, in the very extensive modern restorations which have been accomplished, the permanent Decorations of Churches, the Altar-plate, and Altar-coverings have decidedly followed, for the most part, the ancient patterns and models which were familiar at the period selected as the Standard in the Rubric on Ornaments.

The English Church, while presenting in her Ornaments the same ordinary features which were common to the rest of Christendom, always had her own special usages, and those, too, somewhat diversified in details by several local varieties; as, indeed, was and is also the case in Kingdoms or Dioceses connected with other Branches of the Catholic Church. Though most has perished, enough remains in England of actual ancient specimens (besides the more abundant illustrations in old Illuminations) of Windows, Carvings, Monuments, Brasses, Seals, and the like, to furnish authoritative guidance, especially in regard to the Form of ancient Ornaments.

Moreover, in the Inventories of Church Goods, the descriptions of Material and Colour are so numerous and detailed as to supply what is, to a great extent, unavoidably lacking in these respects in the illustrations just named, owing either to the nature of them, e.g. Carvings which rarely exhibit Colours, or to errors which may be due, for instance, to the glass-painter or the illuminator who, perhaps, was at times less careful to give the actual colour of a Vestment in an Ecclesiastical Function than to furnish a picture in accordance with his own taste. The following Tables contain a summarized analysis of such contents of five Inventories as relate to the Vestments of the Ministers and the Choir, and also to the various Hangings or Articles employed in furnishing and decorating the Altars and Chancels: they are all of the date of 1552 and 1553, and so they exhibit accurately Ornaments which were preserved in the Churches at the very period to which the Rubric on Ornaments directs attention, when prescribing the general Rule as to the things which "shall be retained, and be in use" now in the Church of England. Three of these Inventories, viz. Holy Trinity Cathedral, Winchester, 1552; St. Martin, Outwich, London, 1552-53; and Stanford-in-the-Vale, Berks, 1553, have been used already to illustrate other points: the two additional ones now cited are St. Paul's Cathedral, 1552, and St. Nicolas, Cole Abbey, London, 1552.

[I.] MATERIAL OF VESTMENTS.

Cloth of Gold . . . . .	30	Sarsnett . . . . .	16	Fustian . . . . .	6
Cloth of Silver . . . . .	6	Bawdkyn . . . . .	226	Buckram . . . . .	2

A cursory inspection of these Lists of Ornaments shews at once that, as respects Material, the choice, while amply varied, ran very much upon the richer fabrics, whether of Home or Foreign Manufacture; Cloth of Gold, and Satin of Bruges, being the more costly, were, as might be expected, the most rare; but Velvet, Satin, Silk, Bawdkyn, and the like, were not uncommonly used; though such inferior stuffs as Taffeta, Chamlett, and Fustian often occur. The nature or quality of what was to be employed seems not to have been prescribed; indeed, had there been a desire to do so (which is very improbable) the varying pecuniary abilities of Parishes would have made it needful to avoid any rule on the subject, except requiring them to provide according to their means the essential (and if they could any supplementary) things appertaining to the Services of the Church.

The same principle is acted upon now in the Holy Eastern Church. A Priest of that Communion informs the writer that "there are no strict rules for the Material: when possible, silken and brocaded Vestments are to be preferred. Where the means are circumscribed, plain linen ones are worn, or of whatever Material, so long as it is clean, and made in the proper shape." With them doubtless it is, as the foregoing catalogue proves it to have been with us, that the instinct of natural piety, viz. the devotion of the best to God's service, is not relied upon in vain. Nor was the care and cost bestowed upon the Material limited to the foundation of the Vestments or Hangings; embroidery of all kinds was abundantly displayed in pattern or powdering, whether in Silk or Gold (not seldom in the much-valued Gold of Venice), so that the Sacred Name, the Crucifix, the Cross, Crowns, Angels, Imagery, Eagles, Herons, Lions, Dolphins, Swans, the Sun and Moon, Stars, Wheat-sheaves, Grapes, Flowers, and the like, adorned the Fabrics of which the Vestures were made; or composed the rich Orphreys, which were rendered all the more beautiful and costly by Pearls and Precious Stones; as though the donors desired to attain in the adornments of the Sanctuary to somewhat of the fulness of meaning contained in the Psalmist's words, "The king's daughter is all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold. She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework" [Ps. xlv. 13, 14].

[II.] So, again, as to Colour: the Inventories now under examination shew it to have been chiefly of six kinds, viz. White, Red, Blue, Green, Yellow, and Black; besides various combinations of all these. The proportions in which they existed are shewn in the following Table of Vestments which were in the five Churches at the date of the Inventories:—

COLOURS OF VESTMENTS.

	White.	Red.	Blue.	Green.	Yellow.	Black.	Various.	Totals.
Copes . . . . .	121	107	83	40	20	13	75	459
Chasubles . . . . .	28	34	24	10	7	15	37	155
Dalmatics . . . . .	22	33	23	6	6	13	13	116
Tunicles . . . . .	22	24	27	6	6	12	26	123
Totals . . . . .	193	198	157	62	39	53	151	853

It may be as well to remark here that all the Green Vestments in this list belonged to the two Cathedral Churches, except one Chasuble, Dalmatic, and Tunicle, which were in St. Martin, Outwich.

Green occurs much less frequently than other colours: it was an Exeter colour, and is also found in Lists of Vestments belonging to the Northern Province; but there seems very little to indicate with any certainty when it was used, though perhaps it served for ordinary week-days, especially in Trinity-tide.

So, again, with regard to Blue: while it appears to have been a much more usual colour, it is often very uncertain what kind of Blue is meant, whether Cerulean or some darker shade; frequently indeed the latter is indicated by the words "blodium" and "indicus," which mean a sort of hyacinthine and darker blue; but these must not be confounded with Purple, which is also found in the same or other Lists. The occasions, however, on which Blue or Purple was employed are somewhat conjectural, though there is more to guide: light Blue seems sometimes to have been used in Commemorations of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and a somewhat darker shade is to be seen in Illuminations of about the Fifteenth Century, in Copes used at Funerals.

A similar variety is found, both as to material and colour, in the Coverings and Hangings used for the Altars and Chancels: the annexed list exhibits their Colours:—

	Gold.	Blue.	Green.	White.	Red.	Black.	Various.
Altar Coverings	3	11	6	18	6	2	22
Altar Hangings	3	1	6	8	2	2	9
Altar Curtains	—	6	8	4	2	4	10
Chancel Hangings	—	2	—	2	5	—	—
Totals	6	20	20	32	15	8	41

Besides the colours already enumerated, others are sometimes mentioned, such as Brown, Tawney, Murrey, Pink, and Cheyney—perhaps Chestnut; also combinations of colours, viz. Red and Green, Paly of White and Green, Red and White, Blue and White, Blue and Yellow, White and Red chequered. These different colours, or mixtures of colours, are to be found alike in Vestments of the Ministers, or of the Altars, no less than in the Hangings of the Churches.

It is worth noticing that the more usual Ecclesiastical colours are those which may be especially accounted the Colours of England—Red, White, and Blue—being combined in the National Flag, and designating the Admirals of this Country's Fleets: possibly the close, though curious and apparently untraceable, relations which for several centuries subsisted between the Church and the Navy,<sup>1</sup> in the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts, may have tended to perpetuate this correspondence. It may also be mentioned, as probably indicating the effect which Ecclesiastical customs produced or helped to perpetuate, that Red, Violet, and Black are mentioned as colours worn on the Judicial Bench, according to the Term, in some Regulations made by the Judges in 1635. [Gent. Mag. Oct. 1768.] Green, also, appears to have been at one time a favourite colour with them. Moreover, the retention of Red, Purple, and Green—and especially the prevalence of Red—in the rich and decent, no less than (as was once too common) in the miserable and dirty coverings of handsome or unsightly Altar-tables in the churches, are in all likelihood the traditional use of these same colours which formerly were more commonly and more variously employed in the Services of the Church of England, and that, too, not without regard to some written or unwritten rule as to the Services and Seasons at which they should be used.

That a desire has long existed, and increases, again to adopt a greater variety of colour in the Ornaments of the Church, and especially in the coverings of the Altar, is plain from what has been accomplished and is still doing: one object of this wished-for variety is the very useful one of distinguishing, and so teaching, by outward tokens, the changes of the Church Seasons and the occurrence of Ecclesiastical Holydays. For lack of any existing rule on this subject in the Church of England, the rule of the rest of the Western Church has not unnaturally been followed in many cases, especially as the ancient English rule or practice was either not at all known, or not easily to be collected, even by those who were aware that some leading points of it were to be found without much difficulty. As the need of some guide in this matter is becoming more general, it may not be without a really practical use to compare the old English rules with those of the Roman and the Eastern Churches: by doing this a somewhat uniform principle will probably be found, sufficient also to furnish a general rule for those who, while rightly wishing to be not out of harmony with the rest of Christendom, would with equal propriety prefer to follow any older practice of the Church of England which would afford a satisfactory direction in the absence of any definite rule authorized by living Ecclesiastical Authority.

The Roman rule is laid down with precision: the old English rule can be ascertained with a near approach to accuracy, from the ancient Service-books, St. Osmund's Register, and the Inventories of Church goods. The Eastern Church, as a learned Priest of it states, does not give "in her Ritual books" any such "minute rules with regard to the colours of the Vestments, as are to be found in the Western Ritual. The Church enjoins her ministers to care more for the simple purity and propriety of the vestments than for their richness. In those cases where means are at hand, she bids the ministers to wear richer vestments of any colour for the joyful seasons of the year, and Black or Red ones for the times of fasting and sorrow. Thus, in Passion Week, and Great Lent, at Burials, etc., Black or Purple Vestments are worn. It is customary to wear White Silk Vestments (if possible) at Epiphany and Easter." In this description of the general and unspecific character of the Eastern rule, there is a considerable correspondence with the features of the Sarum rule just noticed.

The following Table may be considered as furnishing a fairly trustworthy view of these three Rules:—

III. Having thus given some description of the Material and Colour of the “Ornaments of the Ministers,” their Form may be understood by means of the accompanying descriptions and illustrations. The symbolical meanings which are added to the former are taken from the “Book of Ceremonies” or “Rationale,” drawn up under the direction of Archbishop Cranmer in the year 1542. The original manuscript of this “Rationale,” occasionally corrected by Cranmer’s own hand, is preserved in the British Museum [Cleop. E. 5, fol. 259 sqq.], and it may also be found in print in COLLIER’S

<sup>7</sup> At Lincoln, which otherwise followed Sarum, White was used on the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. This was also the Parisian colour, and it appears in Archbishop Chichele’s Pontifical in the Library of Trin. Coll. Camb. Purple was used at Lincoln by the celebrant in solemn obsequies about 1350.

Ecclesiastical History, v. 104, ed. 1852, and in STRYPE'S Ecclesiastical Memorials, I. ii. 411, ed. 1822. The full title of the work is "Ceremonies to be used in the Church of England, together with an Explanation of the Meaning and Significancy of them."

The Ornaments mentioned in the "Rationale" are those only which are worn by the Celebrant at the Altar, and are as follows: [1] The Amice; [2] the Albe; [3] the Girdle; [4] the Stole; [5] the Phanon, i.e. the Maniple or Sudarium as it was also called; [6] the Chasuble. The Rubric in the Prayer Book of 1549 specifies only—[1] the Albe; [2] the Vestment or Cope; [3] the Tunicle; but, of course, it does not exclude the others named in the "Rationale," and, in fact, the whole were in use under the First Prayer Book. These two lists, then, comprise eight Ornaments which are now to be described.

1. The AMICE, Amictus (the Armenian Vakass and, perhaps, the Eastern Omophorion seem to correspond to this, especially the former).—This is a broad and oblong piece of Linen with two strings to fasten it; in its more ornate form it is embroidered on the outer edge with a rich fillet or otherwise adorned. When used it is first placed on the head, then slipped down to and worn on the shoulders beneath the Albe; so that, when left somewhat loose, it has the appearance of an ornamental collar as shewn in the drawing, Plate II.

The "Rationale" says: "He putteth on the Amice, which, as touching the Mystery, signifies the veil with the which the Jews covered the face of Christ, when they buffeted Him in the time of His Passion. And as touching the Minister, it signifies faith, which is the head, ground, and foundation of all virtues; and therefore, he puts that upon his head first."

2. The ALBE, Alba (the Eastern Stoicharion and the Russian Podriznik).—This is a loose and long garment coming down to the feet and having close-fitting sleeves reaching to the hands. Anciently it appears to have been made usually of Linen, though in later times rich Silks of different colours were frequently used, while in the Russian Church Velvet is often employed. It was very commonly ornamented with square or oblong pieces of Embroidery called Apparels; these were stitched on or otherwise fastened to various parts of it, especially just above the feet and near the hands, where they had somewhat the appearance of cuffs. The Rubric of 1549 directs the use of "a white Albe plain;" this may have meant a Linen Albe without Apparels, yet Silk or similar material seems not to be forbidden provided it be white: Embroidery, such as shewn in the sketch, Plate I., appears sufficiently "plain" to be consistent with the language and intention of the Rubric. Old-fashioned Surplices are always thus ornamented about the shoulders, a tradition of ancient custom.

The "Rationale" says of the Minister that "he puts upon him the Albe, which, as touching the Mystery, signifieth the white garment wherewith Herod clothed Christ in mockery when he sent Him to Pilate. And as touching the Minister, it signifieth the pureness of conscience, and innocency he ought to have, especially when he sings the Mass."

The SURPLICE, Superpelliccum, Plate II. (whether with or without Sleeves, and the ROCHET, Rochetum, being both of them only modifications of the Albe, this language of the "Rationale" respecting it appears to apply equally to them.

3. The GIRDLE, Cingulum (the Eastern Poyass).—This is a Cord or narrow band of Silk or other material (usually white) with Tassels attached; or, as in the Eastern Church, a broad Belt (often of rich material) with a clasp, hooks, or strings. It is used for fastening the Albe round the waist.

The "Rationale" thus explains it: "The Girdle, as touching the Mystery, signifies the scourge with which Christ was scourged. And as touching the Minister, it signifies the continent and chaste living, or else the close mind which he ought to have at prayers, when he celebrates."

4. The STOLE, Stola (the Eastern Epitrachelion of the Priest, the Orarion of the Deacon, the Lention of the Sub-deacon).—This is a strip of Silk about three inches wide, and about eight and a half feet long; it may be plain or richly ornamented; especially at the ends, of which examples are given in Plate II. The Priest wears it hanging over his neck, and when he celebrates it is usually crossed on the breast and passed under the Girdle: the Deacon wears it suspended over the left shoulder; but, when assisting at the Celebration, he often has it brought across his back and breast and fastened at his right side. As used by the Greek Priest it has the appearance of two Stoles joined together, the upper end having a hole through which the head is put, and thus it hangs down in front.

The "Rationale" says thus of it: "The Stole, as touching the Mystery, signifieth the ropes or bands that Christ was bound with to the pillar, when He was scourged. And as touching the Minister, it signifieth the yoke of patience, which he must bear as the servant of God."

5. The MANIPLE, Manipulus, sometimes called Fanon or Phanon and Sudarium (the Eastern Epimanikia and the Russian Pórutchi; each of these are, however, a kind of Cuffs worn on both hands).—Originally it appears to have been a narrow strip of Linen, usually as wide as a Stole and about two and a half feet long [see Plate II.], and seems to have been employed as a kind of Sudarium for wiping the hands and for other cleanly purposes, whence it probably took one of its names. Subsequently, however, it became a mere ornament, being made of rich materials and often embroidered, or even enriched with jewels. It hangs over the left arm of the Celebrant and his assistants; it should be fastened near the wrist, in a loop, to prevent its falling off.

The “Rationale” describes its meaning together with the Stole in these words: “In token whereof” (îc. of patience), “he puts also the Phanon on his arm, which admonisheth him of ghostly strength and godly patience that he ought to have, to vanquish and overcome all carnal infirmity.

6. The CHASUBLE or VESTMENT, Casula (the Eastern Phelonion and the Russian Phelóné or Phalonion).—This vesture is worn over the Albe: originally it was nearly or entirely a circular garment, having an opening in the centre through which the head of the wearer passed; and thus it fell gracefully over the shoulders and arms, covering the entire person in its ample folds and reaching nearly to the feet both before and behind: at a later period it was made narrower at the back and front by reducing its circular form, and so it frequently terminated like a reversed pointed arch; the sleeve part also became shorter, reaching only to the hands, and thus avoiding the need of gathering it up on the arms. Ultimately, whether from economy, or bad taste, or supposed convenience, the sleeve parts were cut away to the shoulders in the Latin Communion; and even the Russian vestment has been so much reduced in the front that it covers little more than the chest: however, the older form has been for the most part retained in the rest of the Eastern Communion. The drawing on Plate I. shews the form which prevailed in the Church of England prior to the Reformation; it has the merit of being both elegant and convenient. The same picture shews the mode of ornamenting it, namely, by embroidering the collar and outer edge, and by attaching to it what is called the Y Orphrey; though very commonly the Latin Cross, and sometimes the Crucifixion, was variously embroidered on the back, only the perpendicular Orphrey (or Pillar, as it is termed) being affixed in the front.

The “Rationale” is thus given: “The overvesture, or Chesible, as touching the Mystery, signifieth the purple mantle that Pilate’s soldiers put upon Christ after that they had scourged Him. And as touching the Minister, it signifies charity, a virtue excellent above all other.”

7. The COPE, Cappa (the Armenian Phelonion is a similar Vestment, and is used instead of the Chasuble).—It is a kind of full, long Cloke, of a semicircular shape, reaching to the heels, and open in front, thus leaving the arms free below the elbows. Most commonly it has a Hood, as shewn in the drawing, Plate II.; where also is represented the Orphrey and an illustration of the mode of enriching the material by embroidery. The mode of fastening it by a Band, to which is often attached a rich ornament, called the Morse, is there also exhibited. It is worn over either the Albe or the Surplice.

The “Rationale” does not mention it; probably because it was not one of the Eucharistic Vestments then or previously in use. But that it might be used at the Altar (though probably not by the Celebrant when consecrating the Oblations) is plain from the fact that the Rubric of 1549 in naming “Vestment or Cope,” apparently allows a choice between it and the Chasuble; but it may only have been intended that, in a place where both are provided, the Chasuble alone should be worn where the whole Eucharistic Service was used; for a Rubric at the end of the Service specifies the Cope as the Vestment to be employed at those times when only the earlier portion of the Service is intended to be said, no Consecration being designed because of its being known that there would “be none to communicate with the Priest.” The 24th Canon of 1603 does indeed recognize the Cope as the Celebrant’s Vestment to be used in Cathedrals; but the Rubric of 1662, having later and larger authority, seems to point to the Chasuble of the Book of 1549 as the Vestment in which to consecrate.

8. The TUNICLE, Tunica; also called, as worn by the Deacon or Gospeller, DALMATIC, Dalmatica (the Eastern Stoicharion or Saccus of the Deacon).—This is a kind of loose coat or frock, reaching below the knees, open partially at the lower part of the sides; it has full, though not large, sleeves; in material and colour it should correspond with the Chasuble. Examples of its Orphreys and of the mode of embroidering it are shewn in the two illustrations on Plate I. The Deacon’s Dalmatic was usually somewhat more ornamented in the Western Church than was the Tunicle worn by the Sub-deacon or Epistoler.

This ornament, like the Cope, is not mentioned in the “Rationale” probably because, as was observed above, only the Vestments of the Celebrant are there specified.

THE TITLE OF THE PRAYER BOOK.

Common Prayer] This familiar term seems first to have been used authoritatively in a rubric to the English Litany of 1544: "It is thought convenient in this Common Prayer of Procession to have it set forth and used in the Vulgar Tongue, for stirring the people to more devotion." It is again found in the Injunctions of Edward VI., issued in 1546-7. But it is a very ancient term, being found in use as far back as A.D. 252, in St. Cyprian's Treatise on the Lord's Prayer; of which he writes, "Publica est nobis et Communis Oratio."

Common Prayer and Public Prayer are not theologically identical, although the terms are used in the same legal sense in the respective titles of the two Acts of Uniformity. In an exact sense, Common Prayer is defined by the authoritative words of our Lord, "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them." [Matt. xviii. 20.] The Name of God is an expression used with great frequency in Holy Scripture to denote the authority of God; in the same manner as we say, that the official agents of the Sovereign act in the Name of the Sovereign, when they engage in the duties of their office. To be met together in the Name of Christ is to be met together under His authority, not as an accidental or promiscuous assembly; and officially, that is, in the presence and with the aid of His authorized agents.

Thus, true Common Prayer is that which is offered in Divine Service in the Church, by a Bishop or Priest (or a Deacon as locum tenens in some cases), in the presence and with the aid of three, or at least two other Christian persons. Such prayer presupposes a reverent assent to our Lord's application of the words, "My House" shall be called the house of prayer," and to those already quoted. To it also may be applied the words of St. Cyprian:<sup>1</sup> "They continued with one accord in prayer, manifesting at the same time the instance of their praying, and the agreement. Because God, who 'maketh men to be of one mind in an house,' admits into the house divine and eternal those only among whom is unanimous prayer."

This kind of prayer is therefore the highest kind of all. Other prayer is exalted in kind, and probably in efficacy, in proportion as it connects itself with that which is Common: as it is offered in that sense in which we are taught to say Our Father; as it is offered under the conviction that Christian individuals stand not alone, each one for himself before God, but are parts of one Body whereof all the members are in communion one with another through the One Intercessor of Whom the ministers of the Church are the earthly representatives.

[and administration of the Sacraments] This does not exclude the Sacraments from Common Prayer. The corporate work of the Church is distinctly recognized in the administration of Baptism, and the Holy Communion is the root and apex of Common Prayer. But it puts forward prominently the idea of a never-ceasing round of Divine Service as distinguished from the occasional (however frequent) offering of the Holy Eucharist.

[other rites and ceremonies of the Church] These words claim, as a matter of course, that the substance of the Prayer Book is in accordance with the theological and devotional system of the Catholic Church: and, in connection with those which immediately follow, they plainly enunciate the principle set forth more at large in the Thirty-fourth Article of Religion, that while that system is binding on the whole Church, yet particular Churches have a right to carry it out in their own way, according to their own "use" as to detail and ceremonial.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The phrase "Rites and Ceremonies" is not at all equivalent to our modern words Ritual and Ceremonial: but refers to the minor services of the Church, such as the Communion, or the Chuching of Women. Archbishop Cranmer's fourth article of 1536 is a good illustration of the meaning intended: "IV. Of Rites and Ceremonies. As vestments in God's service; sprinkling holy water; giving holy bread; bearing candles on Candlemas Day; giving of ashes on Ash Wednesday; bearing of palms on Palm Sunday; creeping to the Cross, and kissing it, and offering unto Christ before the same on Good Friday; setting up the sepulchre of Christ; halloving the font, and other like exorcisms, and benedictions, and laudable customs: that these are not to be condemned and cast away, but continued, according to the use of the Church of England] This right was acted upon so freely in ancient days that there was a considerable variation in the details and ceremonial of Divine Service as it was celebrated in different parts of England. Each Prayer Book took its name from the place of its origin, and was thus called the "York use," the "Bangor use," the "Hereford use," the "Salisbury use," and so forth: but when uniformity of Common Prayer was established upon the basis of these old service-books, one "use" only retained its authority, that of the Church of England.

In modern Prayer Books the words "the United Church of England and Ireland" were, during about seventy years, substituted for the words "the Church of England," under an Order of Council, dated January 1, 1801; but such an exercise of the Royal authority goes beyond that permitted by the Act of Uniformity; and the change was very misleading.<sup>4</sup> The two Churches are, and always have been, in communion with each other, the interchange of friendly relations has always been very free, and they have been united in a common political bond since 1801. The formularies of the Church of England have also been adopted in the Church of Ireland, but a false gloss was put upon the real title of the Prayer Book when it was printed in the unjustifiable form referred to. The Church of England can alter its own "use," and so can the Church of Ireland, but neither can control the customs of the other: and, in fact, there are some important variations in the Prayer Books of the two countries which make the expression "the use of the United Church of England and Ireland" a misnomer. The Prayer Book as it now exists is an adaptation of ancient formularies made by the Church of England alone. Its adoption by other Churches cannot alter the fact, and therefore cannot justly influence the title. However much it may be adopted therefore in Ireland, Scotland, and other possessions of the English crown, America, the Book of Common Prayer is still "according to the use of the Church of England."<sup>5</sup>

But it is also to be observed that the Irish Act of Uniformity is entitled "An Act for the Uniformity of . . . in the Church of Ireland:" the declaration of assent and consent is to "The Book entitled, The Book of Common Prayer . . . according to the Use of the Church of Ireland;" and so the title is recited throughout the Act.

[together with the Psalter] In the earlier Prayer Books the Psalter was printed with a separate Title-page, as distinct from the Services. The first of Bishop Cosin's "Directions to be given to the Printer," is also, "Set a fair Frontispiece at the beginning of the Book, and another before the Psalter; to be designed as the Archbishop shall direct, and after to be cut in brass." Such an engraved Title-page is affixed to the Sealed Books, and a proof copy is bound up with Cosin's own volume: but that to the Psalter was not provided. The Ordinal was bound up with the Prayer Book for the first time in 1661.

The following Tables will illustrate some of the preceding remarks, and shew at a glance what changes have been authorized.

The Table of the Contents of the Prayer Book is not in itself of much interest, but it has been so freely handled by modern printers that a work like the present cannot go forth without an accurate copy of the authorized form. The successive changes made in it have a certain interest, and they are therefore arranged in parallel columns on the opposite page. There is thus given also a sort of bird's-eye view of the History of the Prayer Book.

to put us in remembrance of spiritual things. But that none of these ceremonies have power to remit sin." [STURGE'S Memorials of Cranmer, i. 89, Ecol. Hist. Soc. ed.]

A rubric at the end of the Elizabethan Prayer Books enjoins also that "every parishioner shall communicate at the least three times in the year, of which Easter to be one, and shall also receive the Sacraments and other Rites according to the order in this book appointed."

<sup>4</sup> The Act of Uniformity empowers the Sovereign to alter the names of the King, Queen, and Royal Family, as occasion shall require; but to alter the name of the Church itself was a very different thing. In Marriage Licences, and in Letters of Orders, the old form was used: but in many documents the alteration had been adopted. It is right to add that in the title-page of Edward VI.'s Injunctions he is called "in earth under Christ, of the Church of England and of Ireland the supreme head," and that Henry VIII. had been named by the same title in the Bidding of the Bedes, used in Ireland about the year 1538. [State Pap. Dom. Hen. VIII. ii. 564.]

<sup>5</sup> The distinctive title, "Church of England," is very ancient, being found in Magna Charta, where it appears to be used as a familiar phrase.

AN ACT

FOR THE

UNIFORMITY OF COMMON PRAYER,<sup>1</sup>

and Service in the Church, and Administration of the Sacraments,

Primo Elizabethæ. [1 Eliz. c. 2, A.D. 1559.]

WHERE at the death of our late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, there remained one uniform order of Common Service, and Prayer, and of the administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, which was set forth in one Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, Authorized by Act of Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of our said late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments; The which was repealed, and taken away by Act of Parliament, in the first year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lady Queen Mary, to the great decay of the due honour of God, and discomfort to the professors of the truth of Christs Religion :

Be it therefore enacted by the Authority of this present Parliament, That the said Statute of Repeal, and every thing therein contained, only concerning the said Book, and the Service, Administration of Sacraments, Rites, and Ceremonies contained or appointed in, or by the said Book, shall be void and of none effect, from and after the Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming : and That the said Book, with the order of Service, and of the Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies, with the alteration and additions therein added and appointed by this Statute, shall stand, and be, from, and after the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist, in full force and effect, according to the tenour and effect of this Statute : Any thing in the foresaid Statute of Repeal to the contrary notwithstanding.

<sup>1</sup> This is the third Act of Uniformity which was passed by Parliament. The first was that which passed the House of Lords on January 15, and the House of Commons on January 21, 1549, and to which the "First Prayer Book of Edward VI." was annexed. The original statute is called of the second and third year of that king, Edward's second year ending on January 27, 1549, and the royal assent not being given until the third year. It was repealed, among other Acts, by 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 2, in which it is called a statute of Edward's second year, and it is also said to have been "made in the second year of the King's Majesty's reign" in the fifth clause of Edward's second Act of Uniformity. The following is a summary of this Act:—

I. For a long time there have been "divers forms of Common Prayer" used in England, that is to say, "the use of Sarum, of York, of Banger, and of Lincoln; and besides the same, now of late much more divers and sundry forms and fashions have been used in the Cathedral and parish churches of England and Wales, as well concerning the Mattins or Morning Prayer and the Evensong, as also concerning the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass, with divers and sundry rites and ceremonies concerning the same, and in the administration of other Sacraments of the Church." Some have been pleased with the use of "rites and ceremonies in other form than of late years they have been used," and others greatly offended. The King, Protector, and Council have tried to stay such innovations, but without success; wherefore to the intent that a uniform, quiet, and godly order should be adopted, his Highness has appointed the Archbishop of Canterbury, with other bishops and learned divines, to arrange such an order, "having as well eye and respect to the most sincere and pure Christian religion taught by the Scripture, as to the usages in the Primitive Church." This "rite and fashion of Common and open Prayer and administration of the Sacraments, has been, BY THE AID OF THE HOLY GHOST, WITH ONE UNIFORM AGREEMENT, concluded by them, and is set forth in the Book of Common Prayer." This form of "Mattins, Evensong, celebration of the Lord's Supper, commonly called the Mass, and administration of each of the Sacraments, and all their common and open prayer," is therefore to be said and used from and after the Feast of Pentecost next ensuing, "and none other or otherwise."

II. Any clergyman refusing to use the Book of Common Prayer, or using any other forms than those set forth therein, shall, on conviction by verdict of a jury, forfeit one of his benefices, and suffer six months' imprisonment for the first offence; for the second offence be imprisoned for twelve months, and forfeit all "his spiritual promotions;" and for the third offence suffer imprisonment for life. Unbeneficed clergy to be imprisoned six months for the first offence, and perpetually for the second.

III. No "interludes, plays, songs, rhymes," or any other open words, are to be allowed to be spoken "in the derogation, depraving, or despising of the same Book, or of any thing therein contained, or any part thereof." No one shall forcibly compel a clergyman to use other forms than those of the Prayer Book, under penalties similar in character to those enacted in the second clause.

IV. Gives power to the Judges to inquire, hear, and determine all offences committed contrary to this Act.

V. Provides that any Archbishop or Bishop may associate himself with the Judge in the trial of such offences as have been committed within his own diocese.

VI. The Prayer Book may be used in Greek, Latin, or Hebrew, by such as understand those languages, with the exception of the Holy Communion.

VII. In "Churches, Chapels, Oratories, or other places," any Psalm or Prayer taken out of the Bible may be used, provided the proper service has been previously said.

VIII. That the books shall be bought at the charges of the parishioners, and where they have been obtained before Pentecost shall be put in use within three weeks afterwards.

The five following clauses are of a technical kind, and need not be noticed.

The following is also a summary of the second Act of Uniformity, to which the "Second Prayer Book of Edward VI." was annexed:—

§ 5 and 6 Edw. VI. c. 1. [A.D. 1552.]

I. The Book of Common Prayer, "a very godly order, agreeable to the Word of God and the primitive Church, very comfortable to all Christian people desiring to live in Christian conversation, and most profitable to the state of this realm," having been set forth by authority of Parliament, yet a great number of persons "following their own sensuality, and living either without knowledge or due fear of God," neglect to come to church on Sundays and Holy-days.

II. For reformation thereof, it is enacted that every person shall duly attend church, unless they have some reasonable hindrance. The two following clauses give authority to punish those who disobey the Act.

V. Doubts about the manner of using the Prayer Book having arisen, "rather by the curiosity of the minister and mistakers, than of any other worthy cause," the said book has, by command of the King, and with the authority of Parliament, been "faithfully and godly perused, explained, and made fully perfect," and a form for the consecration of bishops, and ordination of priests and deacons, has been annexed to it. The revised book is to be in force under the provisions of the former Act; and shall be put in use by all persons after the Feast of All Saints, under penalties such as those previously enacted: every Curate reading this Act on one Sunday in every quarter of a year; and enforcing the duty of Common Prayer in an exhortation to his people.

Both these Acts of Uniformity were repealed in 1553, and the authority of Parliament consequently withdrawn from both the Prayer Books, by the third Act of Parliament passed after Queen Mary's accession (1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 2). But this "Statute of Repeal, and every thing therein contained, only concerning the said Book," was made "void and of none effect" by the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity: the second book (subject to the alterations made in it by Elizabeth's Commissioners) being thus revived, but not either of the statutes themselves. The Act of Mary's reign was, however, entirely repealed by 1 James I. c. 25, and thus the two Acts of Edward were revived. They are also said to be made perpetual by 5 Anne, c. 5, and in the authoritative list of the statutes published in the year 1870 they are set down as still in force.

[2] And further be it Enacted by the Queens Highness, with the assent of the Lords and Commons of this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all, and singular Ministers in any Cathedral, or Parish-Church, or other place within this Realm of England, Wales, and the Marches of the same, or other the Queens Dominions, shall from and after the Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming, be bounden to say and use the Mattens, Evensong, celebration of the LORDS Supper, and administration of each of the Sacraments, and all other Common and open Prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the said Book, so Authorized by Parliament in the said fifth and sixth year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth; with one alteration, or addition of certain Lessons to be used on every Sunday in the year, and the form of the Letany altered, and corrected, and two sentences only added in the delivery of the Sacrament to the Communicants, and none other, or otherwise: and, That if any manner of Parson, Vicar, or other whatsoever Minister, that ought or should sing, or say Common Prayer mentioned in the said Book, or minister the Sacraments, from, and after the Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming, refuse to use the said Common Prayers, or to minister the Sacraments in such Cathedral, or Parish-Church, or other places, as he should use to minister the same, in such order and form, as they be mentioned, and set forth in the said Book, or shall wilfully, or obstinately standing in the same, use any other Rite, Ceremony, Order, Form, or manner of celebrating of the Lords Supper openly, or privily, or Mattens, Even song, administration of the Sacraments, or other open Prayers, than is mentioned, and set forth in the said Book, [Open Prayer in, and through this Act, is meant that Prayer, which is for other to come unto, or hear, either in Common Churches, or private Chappels, or Oratories, commonly called the Service of the Church] or shall preach, declare, or speak any thing in the derogation, or depraving of the said Book, or any thing therein contained, or of any part thereof, and shall be thereof lawfully convicted, according to the Laws of this Realm, by verdict of twelve men, or by his own confession, or by the notorious evidence of the fact; shall lose, and forfeit to the Queens Highness, Her Heirs, and Successors, for his first offence, the profit of all his Spiritual Benefices, or Promotions, coming, or arising in one whole year next after his conviction: And also that the person so convicted shall for the same offence suffer imprisonment by the space of six moneths, without Bail, or Mainprise: And if any such person, once convict of any offence concerning the premisses, shall after his first conviction, eftsoons offend, and be thereof in form aforesaid lawfully convict; That then the same person shall for his second offence suffer imprisonment by the space of one whole year, and also shall therefore be deprived ipso facto of all his Spiritual Promotions; and, That it shall be lawful to all Patrons, or Donors of all and singular the same Spiritual Promotions, or any of them, to present, or collate to the same, as though the person or persons so offending were dead: and That, if any such person, or persons, after he shall be twice convicted in form aforesaid, shall offend against any of the premisses the third time, and shall be thereof, in form aforesaid, lawfully convicted; That then the person so offending, and convicted the third time shall be deprived ipso facto of all his Spiritual Promotions, and also shall suffer imprisonment during his life: And if the person, that shall offend, and be convict in form aforesaid, concerning any of the premisses, shall not be Beneficed, nor have any Spiritual Promotion; That then the same Person, so offending, and convict, shall for the first offence suffer imprisonment during one whole year next after his said conviction, without Bail or Mainprise: And if any such person not having any Spiritual Promotion, after his first conviction, shall eftsoons offend in any thing concerning the premisses, and shall in form aforesaid be thereof lawfully convicted; That then the same person shall for his second offence suffer imprisonment during his life.

[3] And it is Ordained, and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any person, or persons whatsoever, after the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming, shall in any Enterludes, Playes, Songs, Rimes, or by other open words declare, or speak any thing in the derogation, depraving, or despising of the same Book, or of any thing therein contained, or any part thereof, or shall by open fact, deed, or by open threatnings compel, or cause, or otherwise procure, or maintain any Parson, Vicar, or other Minister in any Cathedral, or Parish-Church, or in Chappel, or in any other Place, to sing, or say any Common, or open Prayer, or to minister any Sacrament otherwise, or in any other manner, and form, than is mentioned in the said Book; or that by any of the said means shall unlawfully interrupt, or let any Parson, Vicar, or other Minister in any Cathedral, or Parish-Church, Chappel, or any other place to sing or say Common and open Prayer, or to minister the Sacraments, or any of them, in such manner, and form, as is mentioned in the said Book; That then every such person, being thereof lawfully convicted in form abovesaid, shall forfeit to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, Her Heirs, and Successors for the first offence an hundred marks: And if any person, or persons, being once convict of any such offence, eftsoons offend against any of the last recited offences, and shall in form aforesaid be thereof lawfully convict; That then the same person, so offending and convict, shall for the second offence forfeit to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, Her Heirs, and Successors Four hundred marks: And if any person, after he in form aforesaid shall have been twice convict of any offence concerning any of the last recited offences, shall offend the third time, and be thereof in form abovesaid lawfully convict; That then every person, so offending and convict, shall for his third offence forfeit to our Sovereign Lady the Queen all his Goods and Chattels, and shall suffer imprisonment during his life: And if any person or persons, that for his first offence concerning the premisses, shall be convict in form aforesaid, do not pay the sum to be paid by vertue of his conviction, in such manner and form, as the same ought to be paid, within six weeks next after his conviction; That then every person so convict, and so not paying the same, shall for the same first offence, in stead of the said sum, suffer imprisonment by the space of six moneths without Bail or Mainprise: And if any person, or persons, that for his second offence concerning the premisses shall be convict in form aforesaid, do not pay the said sum to be paid by vertue of his conviction, and this estatute, in such manner and form, as the same ought to be paid, within six weeks next after this said second conviction; That then every person so convicted, and not paying the same, shall for the same second offence, in the stead of the said sum, suffer imprisonment during twelve moneths without Bail or Mainprise: and, That from and after the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming, all, and every person and persons, inhabiting within this Realm, or any other the Queens Majesties Dominions, shall diligently and faithfully, having no lawful, or reasonable excuse to be absent, indeavour themselves to resort to their Parish-Church, or Chappel accustomed, or upon reasonable let thereof, to some usual place, where Common Prayer, and such service of God shall be used in such time of let, upon every Sunday, and other dayes ordained and used to be kept as holy days, and then, and there to abide orderly and soberly, during the time of Common Prayer, Preachings, or other Service of God there to be used and ministred, upon pain of punishment by the censures of the Church; and also upon pain, that every person so offending shall forfeit for every such offence twelve pence, to be levied by the Churchwardens of the Parish, where such offence shall be done, to the use of the poor of the same Parish, of the goods, lands, and tenements of such offender, by way of distress.

[4] And for due execution hereof, the Queens most excellent Majesty, the Lords Temporal, and all the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, doth in Gods Name earnestly require, and charge all the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they shall endeavour themselves to the uttermost of their knowledges, that the due and true execution hereof may be had throughout their Diocesse and Charges, as they will answer before God for such evils and plagues, wherewith Almighty God may justly punish His people for neglecting His good and wholsom law. And for their Authority in this behalf, Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular the same Archbishops, Bishops, and all other their officers, exercising Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, aswel in place exempt, as not exempt, within their Diocesse shall have full power and Authority by this Act to reform, correct and punish by censures of the Church, all, and singular persons, which shall offend within any of their jurisdictions, or Diocesse, after the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next coming, against this Act and Statute: Any other Law, Statute, Priviledge, Liberty, or Provision heretofore made, had, or suffered to the contrary notwithstanding.

[5] And it is Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Justice of Oyer and Determiner, or Justices of Assize shall have full power and Authority in every of their open and general Sessions to enquire, hear and determine all and all manner of offences, that shall be committed, or done contrary to any Article contained in this present Act, within the limits of the Commission to them directed, and to make process for the execution of the same, as they may do against any person being indicted before them of trespass, or lawfully convicted thereof.

[6] Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Archbishop and Bishop shall and may at all time and times at his liberty and pleasure, joyn and associate himself by vertue of this Act to the said Justices of Oyer and Determiner, or to the said Justices of Assize, at every of the said open and general Sessions, to be holden in any place within his Diocess for and to the inquiry, hearing, and determining of the offences aforesaid.

[7] Provided also, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Books concerning the said Service shall at the costs and charges of the Parishioners of every Parish, and Cathedral Church be attained, and gotten before the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist next following, and that all such Parishes and Cathedral Churches, or other places, where the said Books shall be attained and gotten before the said Feast of the Nativity of Saint John Baptist, shall within three weeks next after the said books so attained and gotten, use the said Service, and put the same in use according to this Act.

[8] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no person or persons shall be at any time hereafter impeached, or otherwise molested of or for any of the offences above mentioned, hereafter to be committed, or done contrary to this Act, unless he or they so offending be thereof indicted at the next general sessions to be holden before any such Justices of Oyer and Determiner, or Justices of Assize, next after any offence committed or done, contrary to the tenour of this Act.

[9] Provided always, and be it Ordained, and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular Lords of the Parliament, for the third offence above mentioned, shall be tried by their Peers.

[10] Provided also, and be it Ordained, and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Mayor of London, and all other Mayors, Bayliffs, and other Head-officers of all, and singular Cities, Boroughs, and Towns-corporate within this Realm, Wales and the Marches of the same, to the which Justices of Assise do not commonly repair, shall have full power and Authority by vertue of this Act, to enquire, hear, and determine the offences abovesaid, and every of them yearly, within fifteen days after the Feasts of Easter, and saint Michael the Archangel, in like manner and form, as Justices of Assise, and Oyer, and Determiner may do.

[11] Provided always, and be it Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular Archbishops, and Bishops, and every of their Chancellors, Commissaries, Archdeacons, and other Ordinaries, having any peculiar Ecclesiastical jurisdiction shall have full power and Authority by vertue of this Act, aswel to enquire in their Visitation, Synods, or elsewhere within their jurisdiction, at any other time, and place, to take accusations, and informations of all, and every the things above mentioned, done, committed, or perpetrated within the limits of their jurisdiction and Authority, and to punish the same by admonition, excommunication, sequestration, or deprivation, or other censures, and processes, in like form, as heretofore hath been used in like cases by the Queens Ecclesiastical Laws.

[12] Provided alwaies, and be it Enacted, That whatsoever person offending in the premisses shall for the first offence receive punishment of the Ordinary, having a testimonial thereof under the said Ordinaries seal, shall not for the same offence eftsoons be convicted before the Justices; and likewise receiving for the said first offence punishment by the Justices, he shall not for the same first offence eftsoons receive punishment of the Ordinary: Any thing contained in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

[13] Provided always, and be it Enacted, That such ornaments of the Church and of the ministers thereof shall be retained, and be in use, as was in this Church of England by the Authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth, until other order shall be therein taken by Authority of the Queens Majesty, with the advice of Her Commissioners, appointed and Authorized under the great seal of England for causes Ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this Realm: And also, That if there shall happen any contempt, or irreverence to be used in the Ceremonies, or Rites of the Church, by the misusing of the Orders appointed in this Book; the Queens Majesty may by the like advice of the said Commissioners, or Metropolitan, ordain and publish such further Ceremonies, or Rites, as may be most for the advancement of Gods glory, the edifying of His Church, and the due reverence of CHRISTs holy Mysteries and Sacraments.

[14] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, wherein, or whereby any other Service, Administration of Sacraments, or Common Prayer is limited, established, or set forth to be used within this Realm, or any other the Queens Dominions, and Countries, shall from henceforth utterly be void, and of none effect.

[A few alterations being made in the Prayer Book after the Hampton Court Conference [see p. 25], a Royal Proclamation was issued, on March 5, 1604, in which the reasons for making these alterations were stated, and the use of the new book enjoined. This Proclamation was printed after the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity in all Prayer Books of the reigns of James I. and Charles I., but was omitted by the Revisers of 1661, the Caroline Act of Uniformity being substituted for it in the printed Prayer Books of 1662 and all subsequent dates.<sup>1</sup> For the sake of historical completeness, and to illustrate the attitude of the Crown towards the Prayer Book on the accession of James I., the Proclamation is here printed entire.]

BY THE KING.

¶ A Proclamation for the authorizing of an uniformity of the Book of Common Prayer to be used thorowout the Realm.

ALTHOUGH it cannot be unknown to Our Subjects by the former Declarations wee have published, what our purposes and proceedings have been in matters of Religion since Our coming to this Crown: Yet the same being now by Us reduced to a settled Form, wee have occasion to repeat somewhat of that which hath passed: And now at Our very first entry into the Realm, being entertained and importuned with informations of sundry Ministers, complaining of the errors and imperfections of the Church here aswell in matter of Doctrine, as of Discipline: Although wee had no reason to presume that things were so farre amisse as was pretended, because wee had seen the Kingdom under that form of Religion which by Law was established in the dayes of the late Queen of famous memorie, blessed with a Peace and Prosperity, both extraordinary and of many yeers continuance (a strong evidence that God was therewith well pleased,) yet because the importunitie of the Complainers was great, their affirmations vehement, and the zeal wherewith the same did seem to be accompanied, very speecious: wee were moved thereby to make it Our occasion to discharge that duety which is the chiefest of all Kingly dueties, That is, to settle the affairs of Religion, and the Service of God before their own, which while wee were in hand to do, as the contagion of the sickness reigning in Our Citie of London and other places, would permit an assembly of persons meet for that purpose; some of those who misliked the state of Religion here established, presuming more of Our intents than ever wee gave them cause to do, and transported with humour, began such proceedings, as did rather raise a scandall in the Church, then take offence away. For both they used Forms of publike serving of God not here allowed, held Assemblies without authority, and did other things carrying a very apparent shew of Sedition, more then of Zeal: whom wee restrained by a former Proclamation in the moneth of October last, and gave intimation of the Conference wee intended to be had with as much speed as conveniently could bee, for the ordering of those things of the Church, which accordingly followed in the moneth of January last at Our Honour of Hampton Court, where before Our Self, and Our Privie Councell, were assembled many of the gravest Bishops and Prelates of the Realm, and many other learned men, aswell of those that are conformable to the State of the Church established, as of those that dissented. Among whom, what Our Pains were, what Our patience in hearing and replying, and what the indifference and uprightnesse of Our Judgement in determining, wee leave to the report of those who heard the same, contenting Our Self with the Sincerity of Our own heart therein. But Wee cannot conceal that the successe of that Conference was such as happeneth to many other things, which moving great expectation before they be entred into, in their issue produce small effects. For Wee found many and vehement Informations supported with so weak and slender proofs, as it appeareth unto Us and Our Councell, that there was no cause why any change should have been at all in that which was most impugned, the Book of Common prayer, containing the form of the publike Service of God here established, neither in the doctrine, which appeared to bee sincere, nor in the Forms and Rites, which were justified out of the practice of the Primitive Church. Notwithstanding, We thought meet, with consent of the Bishops, and other learned men there present, That some small things might rather be explained then changed, not that the same might not very well have been born with by men who would have made a reasonable construction of them: but for that in a matter concerning the Service of God Wee were nice, or rather jealous, that the publike form thereof should be free, not onely from blame, but from suspicion, so as neither the common Adversary should have advantage to wrest ought therein contained, to other sense then the Church of England intendeth, nor any troublesome or ignorant person of this Church be able to take the least occasion of cavill against it: And for that purpose gave forth Our Commission under Our great Seal of England to the Archbishop of Canterbury and others, according to the Form which the Lawes of this Realm in like case prescribe to bee used, to make the said Explanation, and to cause the whole Book of Common prayer with the same Explanations, to be newly printed. Which being now done, and established anew after so serious a deliberation, although we doubt not, but all Our Subjects, both Ministers and others, will receive the same with such reverence as appertaineth, and conform themselves thereunto, every man in that which him concerneth: Yet have wee thought it necessary to make known by Proclamation Our authorizing of the same, And to require and enjoyn all men, aswell Ecclesiasticall as Temporall, to conform themselves unto it, and to the practice thereof, as the onely publike form of serving God established and allowed to be in this Realm. And the rather, for that all the learned men who were there present, as well of ye Bishops as others, promised their conformity in the practice of it, onely making suit to Us, that, some few might be born with for a time. Wherefore Wee require all Archbishops, Bishops, and all other publike Ministers, as well Ecclesiasticall as Civill, to do their duties in causing the same to be obeyed, in punishing the offenders according to the Lawes of the Realm heretofore established, for the authorizing of the said Book of Common prayer. And wee think it also necessary, that the said Archbishops, and Bishops, do each of them in his Province and Diocesse take order: That every Parish do procure to themselves, within such time as they shall think good to limit, one of the said Books so explained. And last of all, wee doe admonish all men, that hereafter they shall not expect, nor attempt any further alteration in the Common Publike form of Gods service, from this which is now established, for that neither will we give way to any to presume, that Our own Judgement having determined in a matter of this weight, shall be swayed to alteration by the frivolous suggestions of any light spirit: neither are wee ignorant of the inconveniences that do arise in government, by admitting innovation in things once settled by mature deliberation: And how necessary it is to use constancie in the upholding of the publike determinations of States, for that such is the unquietnesse and unstedfastnesse of some dispositions, affecting every yeer new forms of things, as if they should bee followed in their unconconstancie, would make all actions of States ridiculous and contemptible: Whereas the stedfast maintaining of things by good advice established, is the weal of all Commonwealths.

Given at Our Palace of Westminster, the fifth day of March, in the first year of Our Reign of England, France, and Ireland, and of Scotland the seven and thirtieth.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

AN ACT

FOR THE

UNIFORMITY OF PUBLICK PRAYERS,

And Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies: And for establishing the Form of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the Church of England.

XIV. Carol. II. [14 Charles II. c. 4, A.D. 1662.]

WHEREAS in the first year of the late Queen Elizabeth there was one Uniform Order of Common Service and Prayer, and of the Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England (agreeable to the Word of God, and usage of the Primitive Church) compiled by the Reverend Bishops and Clergy, set forth in one Book, Entituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, and enjoyed to be used by Act of Parliament, holden in the said First year of the said late Queen, Entituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Service in the Church, and Administration of the Sacraments, very comfortable to all good people desirous to live in Christian conversation, and most profitable to the Estate of this Realm, upon the which the Mercy, Favour and Blessing of Almighty God is in no wise so readily and plentifully poured, as by Common Prayers, due using of the Sacraments, and often Preaching of the Gospel, with devotion of the hearers: And yet this notwithstanding, a great number of people in divers parts of this Realm, following their own sensuality, and living without knowledge and due fear of God, do wilfully and Schismatically abstain, and refuse to come to their Parish Churches and other Publick places where Common Prayer, Administration of the Sacraments, and Preaching of the Word of God is used upon the Sundays and other days ordained and appointed to be kept and observed as Holy days: And whereas by the great and scandalous neglect of Ministers in using the said Order, or Liturgy so set forth and enjoyed as aforesaid, great mischiefs and inconveniences, during the times of the late unhappy troubles, have arisen and grown; and many people have been led into Factions and Schisms, to the great decay and scandal of the Reformed Religion of the Church of England, and to the hazard of many souls: for prevention whereof in time to come, for settling the Peace of the Church, and for allaying the present distempers, which the indisposition of the time hath contracted, The Kings Majesty (according to His Declaration of the Five and twentieth of October, One thousand six hundred and sixty) granted His Commission under the great Seal of England to several Bishops and other Divines to review the Book of Common Prayer, and to prepare such Alterations and Additions, as they thought fit to offer; And afterwards the Convocations of both the Provinces of Canterbury and York, being by his Majesty called and assembled (and now sitting) His Majesty hath been pleased to Authorize and require the Presidents of the said Convocations, and other the Bishops and Clergy of the same, to review the said Book of Common Prayer, and the Book of the Form and manner of the Making and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons; And that after mature consideration, they should make such Additions and Alterations in the said Books respectively, as to them should seem meet and convenient; And should exhibit and present the same to His Majesty in writing, for his further allowance or confirmation; since which time, upon full and mature deliberation, they the said Presidents, Bishops, and Clergy of both Provinces have accordingly reviewed the said Books, and have made some Alterations which they think fit to be inserted to the same; and some Additional Prayers to the said Book of Common-Prayer, to be used upon proper and emergent occasions; and have exhibited and presented the same unto his Majesty in writing, in one Book, Entituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England, together with the Psalter, or Psalms of David, Pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons: All which His Majesty having duely considered hath fully approved and allowed the same, and recommended to this present Parliament, that the said Books of Common Prayer, and of the Form of Ordination and Consecration of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, with the Alterations and Additions, which have been so made and presented to His Majesty by the said Convocations, be the Book, which shall be appointed to be used by all that Officiate in all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches and Chappels, and in all Chappels of Colledges and Halls in both the Universities, and the Colledges of Eaton and Winchester, and in all Parish-Churches and Chappels within the Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, and by all that Make, or Consecrate Bishops, Priests or Deacons in any of the said Places, under such Sanctions and Penalties as the Houses of Parliament shall think fit: Now in regard that nothing conduceth more to the settling of the Peace of this Nation (which is desired of all good men) nor to the honour of our Religion, and the propagation thereof, than an Universal agreement in the Publick Worship of Almighty God; and to the intent that every person within this Realm, may certainly know the rule, to which he is to conform in Publick Worship, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and the manner how, and by whom Bishops, Priests, and Deacons are, and ought to be made, Ordained and Consecrated;

[2] Be it Enacted by the Kings most Excellent Majesty, by the advice, and with the consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all and singular Ministers, in any Cathedral, Collegiate, or Parish-Church or Chappel, or other place of Publick Worship within this Realm of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, shall be bound to say and use the Morning Prayer, Evening Prayer, Celebration and Administration of both the Sacraments, and all other the Publick, and Common Prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the said Book, annexed and joynted to this present Act, and Entituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England: together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, Pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the form or manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons: and That the Morning and Evening Prayers, therein contained, shall upon every Lords day, and upon all other days and occasions, and at the times therein appointed, be openly and solemnly read by all and every Minister or Curate in every Church, Chappel, or other place of Publick Worship within this Realm of England, and places aforesaid.

[3] And to the end that Uniformity in the Publick Worship of God (which is so much desired) may be speedily effected, Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every Parson, Vicar, or other Minister whatsoever, who now hath, and enjoyeth any Ecclesiastical Benefice, or Promotion within this Realm of England, or places aforesaid, shall in the Church, Chappel, or place of Publick Worship belonging to his said Benefice or Promotion, upon some Lords day before the Feast of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the year of our Lord God, One thousand six hundred sixty and two, openly, publickly, and solemnly read the Morning and Evening Prayer appointed to be read by, and according to the said Book of Common Prayer at the times thereby appointed, and after such reading thereof shall openly and publickly, before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned assent, and consent to the use of all things in the said Book contained and prescribed, in these words, and no other;

[4] I A. B. Do here declare my unfeigned assent, and consent to all, and every thing contained, and prescribed in, and by the Book intituled, The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites, and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England; together with the Psalter, or Psalms of David, Pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches, and the form, or manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons.

[5] And, That all and every such person, who shall (without some lawful Impediment, to be allowed and approved of by the Ordinary of the place) neglect or refuse to do the same within the time aforesaid, or (in case of such Impediment) within one Moneth after such Impediment removed, shall ipso facto be deprived of all his Spiritual Promotions; and That from thenceforth it shall be lawful to, and for all Patrons, and Donors of all and singular the said Spiritual Promotions, or of any of them, according to their respective Rights, and Titles, to present, or collate to the same; as though the person, or persons, so offending or neglecting were dead.

[6] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every person, who shall hereafter be presented, or collated, or put into any Ecclesiastical Benefice, or Promotion within this Realm of England and places aforesaid, shall in the Church, Chappel, or place of Publick Worship, belonging to his said Benefice or Promotion, within two Moneths next after that he shall be in the actual possession of the said Ecclesiastical Benefice or Promotion, upon some Lords day openly, publickly and solemnly Read the Morning and Evening Prayers, appointed to be Read by, and according to the said Book of Common Prayer, at the times thereby appointed, and after such Reading thereof, shall openly, and publickly before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned assent, and consent to the use of all things therein contained and prescribed, according to the form before appointed: and That all and every such person, who shall (without some lawful Impediment, to be allowed and approved by the Ordinary of the place) neglect or refuse to do the same within the time aforesaid, or (in case of such Impediment) within one month after such Impediment removed, shall ipso facto be deprived of all his said Ecclesiastical Benefices and Promotions; and That from thenceforth, it shall and may be lawful to, and for all Patrons, and Donors of all and singular the said Ecclesiastical Benefices and Promotions, or any of them (according to their respective Rights and Titles) to present, or collate to the same, as though the person or persons so offending, or neglecting, were dead.

[7] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in all places, where the proper Incumbent of any Parsonage, or Vicarage, or Benefice with Cure doth reside on his Living, and keep a Curate, the Incumbent himself in person (not having some lawful Impediment, to be allowed by the Ordinary of the place) shall once (at the least) in every month openly and publickly Read the Common Prayers and Service, in, and by the said Book prescribed, and (if there be occasion) Administer each of the Sacraments and other Rites of the Church, in the Parish Church or Chappel, of, or belonging to the same Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, in such order, manner and form, as in, and by the said Book is appointed, upon pain to forfeit the sum of Five pounds to the use of the poor of the Parish for every offence, upon conviction by confession, or proof of two credible Witnesses upon Oath, before two Justices of the Peace of the County, City, or Town-Corporate where the offence shall be committed, (which Oath the said Justices are hereby Impowred to Administer) and in default of payment within ten days, to be levied by distress, and sale of the goods and chattels of the Offender, by the Warrant of the said Justices, by the Church-wardens, or Over-seers of the Poor of the said Parish, rendring the surplusage to the party.

[8] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every Dean, Canon, and Prebendary of every Cathedral, or Collegiate Church, and all Masters, and other Heads, Fellows, Chaplains, and Tutors of, or in any Colledge, Hall, House of Learning, or Hospital, and every Publick Professor, and Reader in either of the Universities, and in every Colledge elsewhere, and every Parson, Vicar, Curate, Lecturer, and every other person in holy Orders, and every School-master keeping any publick, or private School, and every person Instructing, or Teaching any Youth in any House or private Family as a Tutor, or School-master, who upon the first day of May, which shall be in the year of our Lord God, One thousand six hundred sixty two, or at any time thereafter shall be Incumbent, or have possession of any Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professors-place, or Readers place, Parsonage, Vicarage, or any other Ecclesiastical Dignity or Promotion, or of any Curates place, Lecture, or School; or shall instruct or teach any Youth as Tutor, or School-master, shall before the Feast-day of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the year of our Lord One thousand six hundred sixty two, or at or before his, or their respective admission to be Incumbent, or have possession aforesaid, subscribe the Declaration or Acknowledgement following, Scilicet:

[9] I A. B. Do declare that it is not lawful upon any pretence whatsoever to take Arms against the King; and that I do abhor that Traiterous Position of taking Arms by His Authority against His Person, or against those that are Commissionated by him; and that I will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, as it is now by Law established. And I do declare that I do hold, there lies no Obligation upon me, or on any other person from the Oath, commonly called the Solemn League and Covenant, to endeavour any change, or alteration of Government, either in Church, or State; and that the same was in it self an unlawful Oath, and imposed upon the Subjects of this Realm against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.

[10] Which said Declaration and Acknowledgement shall be subscribed by every of the said Masters and other Heads, Fellows, Chaplains, and Tutors of, or in any Colledge, Hall, or House of Learning, and by every publick Professor and Reader in either of the Universities, before the Vice-Chancellor of the respective Universities for the time being, or his Deputy; And the said Declaration or Acknowledgement shall be subscribed before the respective Arch-bishop, Bishop or Ordinary of the Diocess, by every other person hereby enjoyned to subscribe the same, upon pain, that all and every of the persons aforesaid, failing in such subscription, shall lose and forfeit such respective Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professors place, Readers place, Parsonage, Vicarage, Ecclesiastical Dignity, or Promotion, Curates place, Lecture, and School, and shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same; and that every such respective Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professors place, Readers place, Parsonage, Vicarage, Ecclesiastical Dignity, or Promotion, Curates place, Lecture and School shall be void, as if such person so failing were naturally dead.

[11] And if any Schoolmaster or other person, Instructing or teaching Youth in any private House or Family, as a Tutor or Schoolmaster, shall Instruct or Teach any Youth as a Tutor or Schoolmaster, before License obtained from his respective Arch-bishop, Bishop, or Ordinary of the Diocess, according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, (for which he shall pay tweldepence onely) and before such subscription and acknowledgement made as aforesaid; Then every such School-master and other, Instructing and Teaching as aforesaid, shall for the first offence suffer three months Imprisonment without bail or mainprise; and for every second and other such offence shall suffer three months Imprisonment without bail or mainprise, and also forfeit to His Majesty the sum of five pounds.

And after such subscription made, every such Parson, Vicar, Curate, and Lecturer shall procure a certificate under the Hand and Seal of the respective Archbishop, Bishop, or Ordinary of the Diocess, (who are hereby enjoyned and required upon demand to make and deliver the same) and shall publickly and openly read the same, together with the Declaration, or Acknowledgement aforesaid, upon some Lords day within three months then next following, in his Parish Church where he is to officiate, in the presence of the Congregation there assembled, in the time of Divine Service; upon pain that every person failing therein shall lose such Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, Curates place, or Lecturers place respectively, and shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same; And that the said Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, Curates place or Lecturers place shall be void, as if he was naturally dead.

[12] Provided always, that from and after the Twenty fifth day of March, which shall be in the year of our Lord God, One thousand six hundred eighty two, there shall be omitted in the said Declaration or Acknowledgement so to be subscribed and read, these words following, scilicet,

And I do declare that I do hold there lies no obligation on me, or on any other person from the Oath, commonly called The solemn League and Covenant, to encourage any change, or alteration of Government either in Church or State; And that the same was in it self an unlawful Oath, and imposed upon the Subjects of this Realm against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom;

So as none of the persons aforesaid shall from thenceforth be at all obliged to subscribe or read that part of the said Declaration or Acknowledgement.

[13] Provided always, and be it Enacted, That from and after the Feast of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the year of our Lord, One thousand six hundred sixty and two, no person, who now is Incumbent, and in possession of any Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, and who is not already in holy Orders by Episcopal Ordination, or shall not before the Feast-day of Saint Bartholomew be ordained Priest or Deacon, according to the form of Episcopal Ordination, shall have, hold, or enjoy the said Parsonage, Vicarage, Benefice with Cure or other Ecclesiastical Promotion within this Kingdom of England, or the Dominion of Wales, or Town of Berwick upon Tweed; but shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same; and all his Ecclesiastical Promotions shall be void, as if he was naturally dead.

[14] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no person whatsoever shall thenceforth be capable to be admitted to any Parsonage, Vicarage, Benefice, or other Ecclesiastical Promotion or Dignity whatsoever, nor shall presume to Consecrate and Administer the holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper, before such time as he shall be Ordained Priest, according to the form and manner in, and by the said Book prescribed, unless he have formerly been made Priest by Episcopal Ordination, upon pain to forfeit for every offence the sum of One hundred pounds; (one moyety thereof to the Kings Majesty, the other moyety thereof to be equally divided between the poor of the Parish where the offence shall be committed, and such person, or persons as shall sue for the same by Action of Debt, Bill, Plaint, or Information in any of his Majesties Courts of Record; wherein no Essoign, Protection, or Wager of Law shall be allowed) And to be disabled from taking, or being admitted into the Order of Priest, by the space of one whole year then next following.

[15] Provided that the Penalties in this Act shall not extend to the Foreiners or Aliens of the Forein Reformed Churches allowed, or to be allowed by the Kings Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, in England.

[16] Provided always, That no title to confer, or present by lapse shall accrue by any avoidance, or deprivation ipso facto by vertue of this Statute, but after six months after notice of such voidance, or deprivation given by the Ordinary to the Patron, or such sentence of deprivation openly and publickly read in the Parish Church of the Benefice, Parsonage, or Vicarage becoming void, or whereof the Incumbent shall be deprived by vertue of this Act.

[17] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no Form, or Order of Common Prayers, Administration of Sacraments, Rites or Ceremonies shall be openly used in any Church, Chappel, or other Publick place of or in any Colledge, or Hall in either of the Universities, the Colledges of Westminster, Winchester, or Eaton, or any of them, other than what is prescribed and appointed to be used in and by the said Book; and That the present Governour, or Head of every Colledge and Hall in the said Universities, and of the said Colledges of Westminster, Winchester, and Eaton, within one month after the Feast of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the year of our Lord, One thousand six hundred sixty and two: And every Governour or Head of any of the said Colledges, or Halls, hereafter to be elected, or appointed, within one month next after his Election, or Collation, and Admission into the same Government, or Headship, shall openly and publickly in the Church, Chappel, or other Publick place of the same Colledge, or Hall, and in the presence of the Fellows and Scholars of the same, or the greater part of them then resident, Subscribe unto the Nine and thirty Articles of Religion, mentioned in the Statute made in the thirteenth year of the Reign of the late Queen Elizabeth, and unto the said Book, and declare his unfeigned assent and consent unto, and approbation of the said Articles, and of the same Book, and to the use of all the Prayers, Rites, and Ceremonies, Forms, and Orders in the said Book prescribed, and contained according to the form aforesaid; and that all such Governours, or Heads of the said Colledges and Halls, or any of them as are, or shall be in holy Orders, shall once at least in every Quarter of the year (not having a lawful Impediment) openly and publickly Read the Morning Prayer, and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be Read in the Church, Chappel, or other Publick place of the same Colledge or Hall, upon pain to lose, and be suspended of, and from all the Benefits and Profits belonging to the same Government or Headship, by the space of Six months, by the Visitor or Visitors of the same Colledge or Hall; And if any Governour or Head of any Colledge or Hall, Suspended for not Subscribing unto the said Articles and Book, or for not Reading of the Morning Prayer and Service as aforesaid, shall not at, or before the end of Six months next after such suspension, Subscribe unto the said Articles and Book, and declare his consent thereunto as aforesaid, or read the Morning Prayer and Service as aforesaid, then such Government or Headship shall be ipso facto void.

[18] Provided always, That it shall and may be lawful to use the Morning and Evening Prayer, and all other Prayers and Service prescribed in and by the said Book, in the Chappels or other Publick places of the respective Colledges and Halls in both the Universities, in the Colledges of Westminster, Winchester, and Eaton, and in the Convocations of the Clergies of either Province in Latine; Any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

[19] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no person shall be, or be received as a Lecturer, or permitted, suffered, or allowed to Preach as a Lecturer, or to Preach, or Read any Sermon or Lecture in any Church, Chappel, or other place of Publick worship, within this Realm of England, or the Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, unless he be first approved and thereunto Licensed by the Archbishop of the Province, or Bishop of the Diocess, or (in case the See be void) by the Guardian of the Spirituality, under his Seal, and shall in the presence of the same Archbishop, or Bishop, or Guardian Read the Nine and thirty Articles of Religion, mentioned in the Statute of the Thirteenth year of the late Queen Elizabeth, with Declaration of his unfeigned assent to the same; and That every person, and persons who now is, or hereafter shall be Licensed, Assigned, Appointed, or Received as a Lecturer, to preach upon any day of the week in any Church, Chappel, or place of Publick worship within this Realm of England, or places aforesaid, the first time he Preacheth (before his Sermon) shall openly, publickly, and solemnly Read the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be Read for that time of the day, and then and there publickly and openly declare his assent unto, and approbation of the said Book, and to the use of all the Prayers, Rites and Ceremonies, Forms and Orders therein contained and prescribed, according to the Form before appointed in this Act; And also shall upon the first Lecture-day of every month afterwards, so long as he continues Lecturer, or Preacher there, at the place appointed for his said Lecture or Sermon, before his said Lecture or Sermon, openly, publickly, and solemnly Read the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be read for that time of the day, at which the said Lecture or Sermon is to be Preached, and after such Reading thereof, shall openly and publickly, before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned assent and consent unto, and approbation of the said Book, and to the use of all the Prayers, Rites and Ceremonies, Forms and Orders therein contained and prescribed, according to the form aforesaid; and, That all and every such person and persons who shall neglect or refuse to do the same, shall from thenceforth be disabled to Preach the said, or any other Lecture or Sermon in the said, or any other Church, Chappel, or place of Publick worship, until such time as he and they shall openly, publickly, and solemnly Read the Common Prayers and Service appointed by the said Book, and Conform in all points to the things therein appointed and prescribed, according to the purport, true intent, and meaning of this Act.

[20] Provided alwaies, that if the said Sermon or Lecture be to be Preached or Read in any Cathedral, or Collegiate Church or Chappel, it shall be sufficient for the said Lecturer openly at the time aforesaid, to declare his assent and consent to all things contained in the said Book, according to the form aforesaid.

[21] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any person who is by this Act disabled to Preach any Lecture or Sermon, shall during the time that he shall continue and remain so disabled, Preach any Sermon or Lecture; That then for every such offence the person and persons so offending shall suffer Three months Imprisonment in the Common Gaol without Bail or mainprise, and that any two Justices of the Peace of any County of this Kingdom and places aforesaid, and the Mayor or other chief Magistrate of any City, or Town-Corporate, within the same, upon Certificate from the Ordinary of the place made to him or them of the offence committed, shall, and are hereby required to commit the person or persons so offending to the Gaol of the same County, City, or Town Corporate accordingly.

[22] Provided alwaies, and be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That at all and every time and times, when any Sermon or Lecture is to be Preached, the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be Read for that time of the day, shall be openly, publickly, and solemnly Read by some Priest, or Deacon, in the Church, Chappel, or place of Publick worship, where the said Sermon or Lecture is to be preached, before such Sermon or Lecture be Preached; And that the Lecturer then to Preach shall be present at the Reading thereof.

[23] Provided nevertheless, That this Act shall not extend to the University-Churches in the Universities of this Realm, or either of them, when or at such times as any Sermon or Lecture is Preached or Read in the same Churches, or any of them, for, or as the publick University-Sermon or Lecture; but that the same Sermons and Lectures may be Preached or Read in such sort and manner as the same have been heretofore Preached or Read; This Act, or any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

[24] And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the several good Laws, and Statutes of this Realm, which have been formerly made, and are now in force for the Uniformity of Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, within this Realm of England, and places aforesaid, shall stand in full force and strength to all intents and purposes whatsoever, for the establishing and confirming of the said Book; Eutituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England; together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, Pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the form or manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons; herein before mentioned to be joynd and annexed to this Act; and shall be applied, practised, and put in use for the punishing of all offences contrary to the said Laws, with relation to the Book aforesaid, and no other.

[25] Provided alwaies, and be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in all those Prayers, Litanies, and Collects, which do any way relate to the King, Queen, or Royal Progeny, the Names be altered and changed from time to time, and fitted to the present occasion, according to the direction of lawful Authority.

[26] Provided also, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That a true Printed Copy of the said Book, Entituled, The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England; together with the Psalter, or Psalms of David, Pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the form and manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, shall at the costs and charges of the Parishioners of every Parish-Church, and Chappelry, Cathedral Church, Colledge, and Hall, be attained and gotten before the Feast-day of Saint Bartholomew, in the year of our Lord, One thousand six hundred sixty and two, upon pain of forfeiture of Three pounds by the month, for so long time as they shall then after be unprovided thereof, by every Parish, or Chappelry, Cathedral Church, Colledge, and Hall, making default therein.

[27] Provided alwaies, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Bishops of Hereford, Saint Davids, Asaph, Bangor, and Landaff, and their Successors shall take such order among themselves, for the souls health of the Flocks committed to their Charge within Wales, That the Book hereunto annexed be truly and exactly Translated into the British or Welsh Tongue, and that the same so Translated and being by them, or any three of them at the least viewed, perused, and allowed, be Imprinted to such number at least, so that one of the said Books so Translated and Imprinted, may be had for every Cathedral, Collegiate, and Parish-Church, and Chappel of Ease in the said respective Diocesses, and places in Wales, where the Welsh is commonly spoken or used before the First day of May, One thousand six hundred sixty five; and, That from and after the Imprinting and publishing of the said Book so Translated, the whole Divine Service shall be used and said by the Ministers and Curates throughout all Wales within the said Diocesses, where the Welsh Tongue is commonly used, in the British or Welsh Tongue, in such manner and form as is prescribed according to the Book hereunto annexed to be used in the English Tongue, differing nothing in any Order or Form from the said English Book; for which Book, so Translated and Imprinted, the Church-wardens of every of the said Parishes shall pay out of the Parish-money in their hands for the use of the respective Churches, and be allowed the same on their Account; and, That the said Bishops and their Successors, or any Three of them, at the least, shall set and appoint the price, for which the said Book shall be sold; And one other Book of Common Prayer in the English Tongue shall be bought and had in every Church throughout Wales, in which the Book of Common Prayer in Welsh is to be had, by force of this Act, before the First day of May, One thousand six hundred sixty and four, and the same Book to remain in such convenient places, within the said Churches, that such as understand them may resort at all convenient times to read and peruse the same, and also such as do not understand the said Language, may by conferring both Tongues together, the sooner attain to the knowledge of the English Tongue; Any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding; And until Printed Copies of the said Book so to be Translated may be had and provided, the Form of Common Prayer, established by Parliament before the making of this Act, shall be used as formerly in such parts of Wales, where the English Tongue is not commonly understood.

[28] And to the end that the true and perfect Copies of this Act, and the said Book hereunto annexed may be safely kept, and perpetually preserved, and for the avoiding of all disputes for the time to come; Be it therefore Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the respective Deans and Chapters of every Cathedral, or Collegiate Church, within England and Wales shall at their proper costs and charges, before the twenty fifth day of December, One thousand six hundred sixty and two, obtain under the Great Seal of England a true and perfect printed Copy of this Act, and of the said Book annexed hereunto, to be by the said Deans and Chapters, and their Successors kept and preserved in safety for ever, and to be also produced, and shewed forth in any Court of Record, as often as they shall be thereunto lawfully required; And also there shall be delivered true and perfect Copies of this Act, and of the same Book into the respective Courts at Westminster, and into the Tower of London, to be kept and preserved for ever among the Records of the said Courts, and the Records of the Tower, to be also produced and shewed forth in any Court as need shall require; which said Books so to be exemplified under the Great Seal of England, shall be examined by such persons as the Kings Majesty shall appoint under the Great Seal of England for that purpose, and shall be compared with the Original Book hereunto annexed, and shall have power to correct, and amend in writing any Error committed by the Printer in the printing of the same Book, or of any thing therein contained, and shall certifie in writing under their Hands and Seals, or the Hands and Seals of any Three of them at the end of the same Book, that they have examined and compared the same Book, and find it to be a true and perfect Copy; which said Books, and every one of them so exemplified under the Great Seal of England, as aforesaid, shall be deemed, taken, adjudged, and expounded to be good, and available in the Law to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and shall be accounted as good Records as this Book it self hereunto annexed; Any Law or Custom to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

[29] Provided also, That this Act or any thing therein contained shall not be prejudicial or hurtful unto the Kings Professor of the Law within the University of Oxford, for, or concerning the Prebend of Shipton, within the Cathedral Church of Sarum, united and annexed unto the place of the same Kings Professor for the time being, by the late King James of blessed memory.

[30] Provided always, That whereas the Six and thirtieth Article of the Nine and thirty Articles agreed upon by the Arch-bishops, and Bishops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy in the Convocation holden at London, in the year of our Lord, One thousand five hundred sixty two, for the avoiding of diversities of Opinions, and for establishing of consent, touching true Religion, is in these words following, viz.

That the Book of Consecration of Archbishops, and Bishops, and Ordaining of Priests and Deacons, lately set forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, and confirmed at the same time by Authority of Parliament, doth contain all things necessary to such Consecration and Ordaining, neither hath it any thing that of itself is superstitious, and ungodly; And therefore whosoever are Consecrated or Ordered according to the Rites of that Book, since the second year of the aforementioned King Edward unto this time, or hereafter shall be Consecrated or Ordered according to the same Rites; We decree all such to be rightly, orderly, and lawfully Consecrated and Ordered;

[31] It be Enacted, and be it therefore enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all Subscriptions hereafter to be had or made unto the said Articles, by any Deacon, Priest, or Ecclesiastical person, or other person whatsoever, who by this Act or any other Law now in force is required to Subscribe unto the said Articles, shall be construed and taken to extend, and shall be applied (for and touching the said Six and thirtieth Article) unto the Book containing the form and manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in this Act mentioned, in such sort and manner as the same did heretofore extend unto the Book set forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, mentioned in the said Six and thirtieth Article; Any thing in the said Article, or in any Statute, Act, or Canon heretofore had or made, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

[32] Provided also, That the Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of this Church of England, together with the form and manner of Ordaining, and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons heretofore in use, and respectively established by Act of Parliament in the First and Eighth years of Queen Elizabeth, shall be still used and observed in the Church of England, until the Feast of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the year of our Lord God, One thousand six hundred sixty and two.

FOR THE

AMENDMENT OF THE ACT OF UNIFORMITY.

35 and 36 Victoria, c. 35. [A.D. 1872.]

WHEREAS by the Act of Uniformity it is enacted that all and singular ministers in any cathedral, collegiate, or parish church or chapel, or other place of public worship in England, shall be bound to say and use the Morning Prayer, Evening Prayer, celebration and administration of both the Sacraments, and all other the public and common prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the Book of Common Prayer annexed to the said Act :

And whereas in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine Commissioners were appointed by Her Majesty to inquire and consider, amongst other matters, the differences of practice which have arisen from varying interpretations put upon the rubrics, orders, and directions for regulating the course and conduct of public worship, the administration of the sacraments, and the other services contained in the Book of Common Prayer, with a view of explaining or amending the said rubrics, orders, and directions so as to secure general uniformity of practice in such matters as may be deemed essential, and to report thereon from time to time, having regard not only to the said rubrics, orders, and directions, but also to any other laws or customs relating to the matters aforesaid, with power to suggest any alterations, improvements, or amendments with respect to such matters or any of them :

And whereas the said Commissioners have by their Report dated the thirty-first day of August one thousand eight hundred and seventy recommended in manner therein mentioned :

And whereas Her Majesty was pleased to authorize the Convocations of Canterbury and York to consider the said Report of the said Commissioners, and to report to Her Majesty thereon, and the said Convocations have accordingly made their first reports to Her Majesty :

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

1. In this Act,—

The term "Act of Uniformity" means the Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, chapter four, intituled "An Act for the Uniformity of Public Prayers and Administration of Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies, and for establishing the Form of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the Church of England," and includes the enactments confirmed and applied by that Act to the Book of Common Prayer :

The term "Book of Common Prayer" means the book annexed to the said Act of the reign of King Charles the Second, and intituled "The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church according to the Use of the Church of England, together with the Psalter or Psalms of David pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches, and the Form or Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons :"<sup>1</sup>

The term "cathedral" means a cathedral or collegiate church in which the Book of Common Prayer is required by the Act of Uniformity to be used :

The term "church" means any parish church, chapel, or other place of public worship which is not a cathedral as before defined, and in which the Book of Common Prayer is required by the Act of Uniformity to be used.

2. The shortened Order for Morning Prayer or for Evening Prayer, specified in the schedule to this Act, may, on any day except Sunday, Christmas Day, Ash Wednesday, Good Friday, and Ascension Day, be used, if in a cathedral in addition to, and if in a church in lieu of, the Order for Morning Prayer or for Evening Prayer respectively prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer.

Use of shortened form of Morning and Evening Prayer.

3. Upon any special occasion approved by the ordinary, there may be used in any cathedral or church a special form of service approved by the ordinary, so that there be not introduced into such service anything, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the Holy Scriptures or Book of Common Prayer.

Special service for special occasions.

4. An additional form of service varying from any form prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer may be used at any hour on any Sunday or holy-day in any cathedral or church in which there are duly read, said, or sung as required by law on such Sunday or holy-day at some other hour or hours the Order for Morning Prayer, the Litany, such part of the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion as is required to be read on Sundays and holy-days if there be no Communion, and the Order for Evening Prayer, so that there be not introduced into such additional service any portion of the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion, or anything, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the Holy Scriptures or Book of Common Prayer, and so that such form of service and the mode in which it is used is for the time being approved by the ordinary ; provided that nothing in this section shall affect the use of any portion of the Book of Common Prayer as otherwise authorized by the Act of Uniformity or this Act.

Additional service on Sundays and holy-days.

5. Whereas doubts have arisen as to whether the following forms of service, that is to say, the Order for Morning Prayer, the Litany and the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Separation of services.

<sup>1</sup> This definition is of considerable importance as regards the Text of the Prayer Book, since it makes the MS. volume formerly annexed to the Act of Uniformity the ultimate authority for that Text. If, therefore, there should be any divergency between the text of the MS. and that of the Sealed Books, the latter must, it seems, give way to the former, notwithstanding the 25th clause in the Act of Uniformity itself.

Communion, may be used as separate services, and it is expedient to remove such doubts: Be it therefore enacted and declared that any such forms of service may be used together or in varying order as separate services, or that the Litany may be said after the third collect in the Order for Evening Prayer, either in lieu of or in addition to the use of the Litany in the Order for Morning Prayer, without prejudice nevertheless to any legal powers vested in the ordinary; and any of the said forms of service may be used with or without the preaching of a sermon or lecture, or the reading of a homily.

6. Whereas doubts have arisen as to whether a sermon or lecture may be preached without the common prayers and services appointed by the Book of Common Prayer for the time of day being previously read, and it is expedient to remove such doubts: Be it therefore enacted and declared, that a sermon or lecture may be preached without the common prayers or services appointed by the Book of Common Prayer being read before it is preached, so that such sermon or lecture be preceded by any service authorized by this Act, or by the Bidding Prayer, or by a collect taken from the Book of Common Prayer, with or without the Lord's Prayer.

7. Nothing in this Act shall affect the provision with respect to the chapels of colleges in the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, which is contained in section six of the Universities Tests Act, 1871.

8. The schedule to this Act, and the notes thereto and directions therein, shall be construed and have effect as part of this Act.

9. This Act may be cited as "The Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872."

SCHEDULE.

NOTE.—The Minister using the Shortened Order for Morning Prayer or for Evening Prayer in this schedule, may in his discretion add in its proper place any exhortation, prayer, canticle, hymn, psalm, or lesson contained in the Order for Morning Prayer or for Evening Prayer in the Book of Common Prayer and omitted or authorized to be omitted from such shortened order.

Each of the twenty-two portions into which the one hundred and nineteenth psalm is divided in the Book of Common Prayer shall be deemed, for the purposes of this schedule, to be a separate psalm.

SHORTENED FORMS OF SERVICE.

THE SHORTENED ORDER FOR MORNING PRAYER DAILY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR, EXCEPT ON SUNDAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, ASH WEDNESDAY, GOOD FRIDAY, AND ASCENSION DAY.

At the beginning of Morning Prayer the Minister shall read with a loud voice some one or more of these sentences of the Scriptures that follow.

When the wicked man, etc.

A general Confession to be said of the whole Congregation after the Minister, all kneeling.

Almighty and most merciful Father, etc.

The Absolution, or Remission of sins, to be pronounced by the Priest alone, standing; the people still kneeling.

Almighty God, the Father, etc.

The people shall answer here, and at the end of all other prayers, Amen.

Then the Minister shall kneel, and say the Lord's Prayer with an audible voice; the people also kneeling, and repeating it with him.

Our Father, Which art in heaven, etc.

Then likewise he shall say,

O Lord, open Thou our lips.
etc. etc. etc.

Here all standing up, the Priest shall say,

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Then shall follow one or more of the Psalms appointed. And at the end of every Psalm throughout the year, and likewise at the end of Benedicite, Benedictus, Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis, shall be repeated, Glory be to the Father, etc.

Then shall be read distinctly, with an audible voice, either the First Lesson taken out of the Old Testament as is appointed in the Calendar, or the Second Lesson taken out of the New Testament, except there be a Proper Lesson assigned for that day, in which case the Proper Lesson shall be read, and if there are two Proper Lessons each shall be read in its proper place; he that readeth so standing and turning himself as he may best be heard of all such as are present.

Note, that before every Lesson the Minister shall say, Here beginneth such a Chapter, or Verse of such a Chapter, of such a Book. And after every Lesson, Here endeth the Lesson, or the First or the Second Lesson.

And after the Lesson, or between the First and Second Lessons, shall be said or sung in English one of the following:

Either the Hymn called, Te Denm Landamus.

We praise Thee, O God, etc.

Or this Canticle, Benedicite, omnia opera.

O all ye works of the Lord, etc.

Or the Hymn following (except when that shall happen to be read in the Lesson for the day, or for the Gospel on Saint John Baptist's Day):

Benedictus. St. Luke i. 68.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, etc.

Or this Psalm.

Jubilate Deo.

O be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands, etc.

Then shall be sung or said the Apostles' Creed by the Minister and the people standing.

I believe in God the Father Almighty, etc.

And after that, the people all devoutly kneeling, the Minister shall pronounce with a loud voice,

The Lord be with you.

Answer. And with thy spirit.

Minister. Let us pray.

Then the Priest shall say,

O Lord, shew Thy mercy upon us,
etc. etc. etc.

Then shall follow three Collects. The first of the day, which shall be the same that is appointed at the Communion; the second for Peace; the third for grace to live well; and the two last Collects shall never alter, but daily be said at Morning Prayer throughout all the year, as followeth, all kneeling.

The second Collect for Peace.

O God, Who art the Author of peace, etc.

The third Collect for Grace.

O Lord, our heavenly Father, etc.

Here may follow an Anthem or Hymn:

Then these two Prayers following :

A Prayer of Saint Chrysostome.

Almighty God, Who hast given us grace, etc.

2 Corinthians xiii.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, etc.

Here endeth the Shortened Order of Morning Prayer.

THE SHORTENED ORDER FOR EVENING PRAYER DAILY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR, EXCEPT ON SUNDAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, ASH WEDNESDAY GOOD FRIDAY, AND ASCENSION DAY.

At the beginning of Evening Prayer the Minister shall read with a loud voice some one or more of these sentences of the Scriptures that follow :

When the wicked man, etc.

A general Confession to be said of the whole Congregation after the Minister, all kneeling.

Almighty and most merciful Father, etc.

The Absolution, or Remission of sins, to be pronounced by the Priest alone, standing ; the people still kneeling.

Almighty God, the Father, etc.

Then the Minister shall kneel, and say the Lord's Prayer ; the people also kneeling, and repeating it with him.

Our Father, Which art in heaven, etc.

Then likewise he shall say,

O Lord, open Thou our lips.

Here all standing up, the Priest shall say,

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Then shall be said or sung one or more of the Psalms in order as they be appointed. Then either a Lesson of the Old Testament as is appointed, or a Lesson of the New Testament as it is appointed, except there be a Proper Lesson assigned for that day, in which case the Proper Lesson shall be read, and if there are two Proper Lessons each shall be read in its proper place ; and after the Lesson, or between the First and Second Lessons, shall be said or sung in English one of the following :

Either Magnificat, or the Song of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in English, as follows :

Magnificat. St. Luke i.

My soul doth magnify the Lord, etc.

Or this Psalm (except it be on the nineteenth day of the month, when it is read in the ordinary course of the Psalms):

Cantate Domino. Psalm xcviii.

O sing unto the Lord a new song, etc.

Or Nunc dimittis (or the Song of Simeon, as followeth :

Nunc dimittis. St. Luke ii. 29.

Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant, etc.

Or else this Psalm (except it be on the twelfth day of the month):

Deus misericatur. Psalm lxxvii.

God be merciful unto us, and bless us, etc.

Then shall be said or sung the Apostles' Creed by the Minister and the people, standing :

I believe in God the Father Almighty, etc.

And after that, the people all devoutly kneeling, the Minister shall pronounce with a loud voice,

The Lord be with you.

Answer. And with thy spirit.

Minister. Let us pray.

Then the Priest shall say,

O Lord, shew Thy mercy upon us,

etc. etc. etc.

Then shall follow three Collects. The first of the day ; the second for Peace ; the third for aid against all perils, as hereafter followeth ; which two last Collects shall be daily said at Evening Prayer without alteration.

The second Collect at Evening Prayer.

O God, from Whom all holy desires, etc.

The third Collect for Aid against all Perils.

Lighten our darkness, etc.

Here may follow an Anthem or Hymn.

A Prayer of Saint Chrysostome.

Almighty God, Who hast given us grace, etc.

2 Corinthians xiii.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, etc.

Here endeth the Shortened Order of Evening Prayer.

THE PREFACE.

IT hath been the wisdom of the Church of England, ever since the first compiling of her Publick Liturgy, to keep the mean between the two extremes, of too much stiffness in refusing, and of too much easiness in admitting any variation from it. For, as on the one side common experience sheweth, that where a change hath been made of things advisedly established (no evident necessity so requiring) sundry inconveniences have thereupon ensued; and those many times more, and greater than the evils that were intended to be remedied by such change: So on the other side, the particular Forms of Divine worship, and the Rites, and Ceremonies appointed to be used therein, being things in their own nature indifferent, and alterable, and so acknowledged; it is but reasonable, that upon weighty and important considerations, according to the various exigency of times and occasions, such changes and alterations should be made therein as to those that are in place of Authority should from time to time seem either necessary or expedient. Accordingly we find, that in the Reigns of several Princes of blessed memory since the Reformation, the Church, upon just and weighty considerations her thereunto moving, hath yielded to make such alterations in some particulars, as in their respective times were thought convenient: Yet so as that the main Body and Essentials of it (as well in the

THE PREFACE. [A. D. 1662.]

This was placed before the Book of Common Prayer, with a special regard to the circumstances of the times, the country having just emerged from the Great Rebellion, and the Church of England from a very great persecution. Under such circumstances it is impossible not to admire the temperate and just tone which characterizes it throughout.

The writer of this Preface was Sanderson, Bishop of Lincoln, who was probably chosen on account of qualifications such as would fit him for composing in this tone an explanation of the course which it had been necessary to take, and which had been taken, with reference to the Book of Common Prayer. He is, and was then, well known for his works on Conscience, and on the Obligation of an Oath: and he was looked up to with great respect by all parties in those days of religious division.

"For the satisfying all the dissenting brethren and other," says Walton, in his Life of Bishop Sanderson, "the Convocation's reasons for the alterations and additions to the Liturgy were by them desired to be drawn up by Dr. Sanderson, which being done by him, and approved by them, was appointed to be printed before the Liturgy, and may be now known by this Title, The Preface, and begins thus, It hath been the wisdom of the Church, &c." In the Acts of the Upper House of Convocation it is recorded that "on Monday the 2nd of December, the Preface or Introduction to the Common Prayer Book was brought in and read." It was referred to a Committee composed of Wren, Bishop of Ely; Skinner, Bishop of Oxford; Henchman, Bishop of Salisbury; and Griffith, Bishop of St. Asaph, and some amendments were made in it as it passed through their hands.

[first compiling] This is a phrase which could hardly have dropped from Sanderson's exact pen. No doubt the period referred to is that of the Reformation; but as every page of the following work will shew, the change which then took place in the Divine Worship of the Church of England was founded on offices which were re-formed out of the old ones, not "compiled" in any true sense; and that the addition of "first" to the word adopted is calculated to misrepresent the true origin of our "publick Liturgy."

[in their own nature indifferent] This and other apologetic expressions of the Preface must be read by the light of contemporary history. But it is undoubtedly true that in their own nature, Rites and Ceremonies are "indifferent." Their importance arises from the relation in which they are placed with reference to God as the Object of worship, and man as the worshipper of God. That relation being established, what was indifferent in its own nature becomes of high import through the new character which is thus given to it.

[alterable] In the 34th Article of Religion this statement is more elaborately set forth: "Of the Traditions of the Church.—It is not necessary that Traditions and Ceremonies be in all places one, and utterly like; for at all times they have been divers, and may be changed according to the diversities of countries, times, and men's manners, so that nothing be ordained against God's Word. Whosoever through his private judgment, willingly and purposely, doth openly break the traditions and ceremonies of the Church, which be not repugnant to the Word of God, and be ordained and approved by common authority, ought to be rebuked openly, (that others may fear to do the like,) as he that offendeth against the common order of the Church, and hurteth the authority of the Magistrate, and woundeth the consciences of the weak brethren.

"Every particular or national Church hath authority to ordain, change, and abolish, ceremonies or rites of the Church ordained only by man's authority, so that all things be done to edifying."

[those that are in place of Authority] Who are the properly authorized persons may also be known from the 20th Article of Religion: "Of the Authority of the Church.—The Church hath power to decree Rites or Ceremonies, and authority in Controversies of Faith: And yet it is not lawful for the Church to ordain any thing that is contrary to God's Word written, neither may it so expound one place of Scripture, that it be repugnant to another. Wherefore, although the Church be a witness and a keeper of holy Writ, yet, as it ought not to decree any thing against the same, so besides the same ought it not to enforce any thing to be believed for necessity of Salvation."

As will be seen from the Historical Introduction to this volume, this principle was carried out by throwing the whole responsibility of revising the older Prayer Book on the Convocations of Canterbury and York, which officially represented the Church of England. Statutable authority was given to the work of the Church by the Crown in Parliament, in 14 Carol. II. c. 4. The principle is further enunciated in the succeeding words of the Preface, where the "Princes" or reigning Sovereigns are named, but the whole work of revision during their respective reigns is attributed to the Church, which "upon just and weighty considerations her thereunto moving, hath yielded to make such alterations in some particulars, as in the respective times of those sovereigns were thought convenient."

chiefest materials, as in the frame and order thereof) have still continued the same unto this day, and do yet stand firm and unshaken, notwithstanding all the vain attempts and impetuous assaults made against it by such men as are given to change, and have always discovered a greater regard to their own private fancies and interests, than to that duty they owe to the publick.

By what undue means, and for what mischievous purposes the use of the Liturgy (though enjoined by the Laws of the Land, and those Laws never yet repealed) came, during the late unhappy confusions, to be discontinued, is too well known to the world, and we are not willing here to remember. But when, upon His Majesty's happy Restoration, it seemed probable, that, amongst other things, the use of the Liturgy also would return of course (the same having never been legally abolished) unless some timely means were used to prevent it; those men who under the late usurped powers had made it a great part of their business to render the people disaffected thereunto, saw themselves in point of reputation and interest concerned (unless they would freely acknowledge themselves to have erred, which such men are very hardly brought to do) with their utmost endeavours to hinder the restitution thereof. In order whereunto divers Pamphlets were published against the Book of Common Prayer, the old Objections mustered up, with the addition of some new ones more than formerly had been made, to make the number swell. In fine great importunities were used to His Sacred Majesty, that the said Book might be Revised, and such Alterations therein, and Additions thereunto made, as should be thought requisite for the ease of tender Consciences: whereunto His Majesty, out of his pious inclination to give satisfaction (so far as could be reasonably expected) to all his subjects of what persuasion soever, did graciously condescend.

vain attempts and impetuous assaults] The unreasonable conduct of those who opposed the restoration of the Church and her devotional system was scarcely more conspicuous than the fierce energy by which it was characterized. For four months these "impetuous assaults" were carried on in the Savoy Conference; and abundant evidence was given that "private fancies and interests" had much stronger influence than the public good. Baxter, the chief leader of the opposition, composed a substitute for the Prayer Book which dissenting congregations could not be got to use, any more than the Church of England could be prevailed on to adopt it; and yet on such a private fancy as this most of that bitter opposition centred. Nor must it be forgotten that "private interest" was deeply concerned, since the constitutional restoration of the Church and the Prayer Book necessarily involved the restoration of the surviving clergy to the benefices which men who were not priests of the Church of England had wrenched out of their hands. These facts are referred to simply to shew that the expressions here used in the Preface are not those of bitterness or controversy, but plain historical statements of what actually occurred; and which it was necessary to mention for the sake of explanation, as ordered by Convocation.

The general attitude of the Puritans towards the Prayer Book is indicated by such words as these: "By daily familiarity and reading of this Book of Common Prayer, so corrupted and transformed by Bishops, we abate and cool in our devotion, cast water upon our zeal, quench the Spirit, practise a standard temptation, prove a sad occasion to the godly, build up that we have destroyed, and entangle ourselves again in the yoke of bondage." pamphlets, next to the Prayer Book itself, was "A Collection of Articles, Injunctions, Canons, Orders, Ordinances, and Constitutions Ecclesiastical, with other Public Records of the Church of England; chiefly in the times of K. Edward VIth, Q. Elizabeth, and K. James. Published to vindicate the Church of England, and to promote Uniformity and Peace in the same. And humbly presented to the Convocation." This collection was made by Dr. Sparrow, afterwards Bishop successively of Exeter and Norwich. It was published in 1661, and was a kind of legal or constitutional sequel to a well-known work which he had printed in December, 1660, "A Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer, wherein that Service is vindicated from the grand accusation of Superstition, by showing that it is a Reasonable Service, and so not Superstitious."

great importunities] This refers to the deputations sent to the King before and after he came into England, by the Presbyterians; which led to the Savoy Conference. The word "persuasion" was introduced at this time to indicate one or the other side of those who supported and those who opposed the Prayer Book.

for the ease of tender Consciences] It was the practice of the Puritans to represent that they had tender consciences, but that Churchmen had no consciences worth considering. The Bishops at the Savoy Conference took an opportunity of vindicating the supporters of the Prayer Book in the following plain-spoken language, which is a reply to the Exceptions of the Puritans against it:—

"It is no argument to say that multitudes of sober pious persons scruple the use of it, unless it be made to appear by evident reasons that the Liturgy gave the just grounds to make such scruples. For if the bare pretence of scruples be sufficient to exempt us from obedience, all law and order is gone.

"On the contrary, we judge that if the Liturgy should be altered, as is there required, not only a multitude, but the generality of the soberest and most loyal children of the Church of England would justly be offended, since such an alteration would be a virtual confession that this Liturgy were an intolerable burden to tender consciences, a direct cause of schism, a superstitious usage (upon which pretences it is here desired to be altered); which would at once both justify all those which have so obstinately separated from it, as the only pious tender-conscienced men, and condemn all those that have adhered to that, in conscience of their duty and loyalty, with their loss or hazard of estates, lives, and fortunes, as

In which review we have endeavoured to observe the like Moderation as we find to have been used in the like case in former times. And therefore of the sundry Alterations proposed unto us, we have rejected all such as were either of dangerous consequence (as secretly striking at some established Doctrine, or laudable Practice of the Church of England, or indeed of the whole Catholick Church of Christ) or else of no consequence at all, but utterly frivolous and vain. But such alterations as were tendered to us (by what persons, under what pretences, or to what purpose soever so tendered) as seemed to us in any degree requisite or expedient, we have willingly, and of our own accord assented unto: Not enforced so to do by any strength of Argument, convincing us of the necessity of making the said Alterations: For we are fully persuaded in our judgements (and we here profess it to the world) that the Book, as it stood before established by Law, doth not contain in it any thing contrary to the Word of God, or to sound Doctrine, or which a godly man may not with a good Conscience use and submit unto, or which is not fairly defensible against any that shall oppose the same; if it shall be allowed such just and favourable construction as in Common Equity ought to be allowed to all Human Writings, especially such as are set forth by Authority, and even to the very best Translations of the holy Scripture itself.

Our general aim therefore in this undertaking was, not to gratify this or that party in any their unreasonable demands; but to do that, which to our best understandings we conceived might most tend to the preservation of Peace and Unity in the Church; the procuring of Reverence, and exciting of Piety, and Devotion in the publick Worship of God; and the cutting off occasion from them that seek occasion of cavil or quarrel against the Liturgy of the Church. And as to the several variations from the former Book, whether by Alteration, Addition, or otherwise, it shall suffice to give this general account, That most of the Alterations were made, either first, for the better direction of them that are to officiate in any part of Divine Service; which is chiefly done in the Kalendars and Rubricks: Or secondly, for the more proper expressing of some words or phrases of ancient usage in terms more suitable to the language of the present times, and the clearer explanation of some other words and phrases, that were either of doubtful signification, or otherwise liable to misconstruction: Or thirdly, for a more perfect rendering of such portions of holy Scripture, as are inserted into the Liturgy; which, in the Epistles and Gospels especially, and in sundry other places, are now ordered to be read according to the last Translation: and that it was thought convenient, that some Prayers and Thanksgivings, fitted to special occasions, should be added in their due places; particularly for those at Sea, together with an office for the Baptism of such as are of riper years: which, although not so necessary when the former Book was compiled, yet by the growth of Anabaptism, through the licentiousness of the late times crept in men superstitious, schismatical, and void of religion and conscience." [CARDWELL'S Conf. p. 336.]

In which review WE have endeavoured] This is the language of men who were sure of the ground, constitutional and ecclesiastical, upon which they were treading. They could speak as the Church of England, because the Convocations of Canterbury and York faithfully represented her.

Catholick Church of Christ] This is one of many places in which the position of the Church of England towards the Catholic Church is taken for granted as sound and firm. Another such has been pointed out already in the Title-page of the Prayer Book.

frivolous and vain] It is very remarkable to see how trifling these objections, officially made at the Savoy Conference, often were. One of them was to the reading of any part of the Burial Service at the grave, as the minister was sure to catch cold by doing so. The Bishops replied that a cap would remedy this inconvenience; and this was the reply given by the Dissenting Ministers: which, though long, is inserted as being very characteristic of the tone of the whole objections that were offered: "We marvel that you say nothing at all to our desire (that it be expressed in a Rubrick, that prayers and exhortations there used, be not for the benefit of the dead, but only for the instruction and comfort of the living). You intend to have a very indiscreet Ministry, if such a needlesse Circumstance may not be left to their discretion. The contrivance of a Cap instead of a Rubr. sheweth that you are all unacquainted with the subject, of which you speak: and if you speak for want of experience of the case of souls, as you now do about the case of men's bodies, we could wish you some of our experience of one sort (by more converse with all the members of the flock) though not of the other. But we would here put these three or four Questions to you.

"1. Whether such of ourselves as cannot stand still in the cold winter at the grave, half so long as the Office of Burial requireth, without the certain hazard of our lives (though while we are in motion we can stay out longer), are bound to believe your Lordships, that a Cap will cure this better than a Rubr., though we have proved the contrary to our cost? and know it as well as we know that cold is cold. Do you think no place but that which a cap or clothes do cover, is capable of letting in the excessively refrigerating air?

"2. Whether a man that hath the most rational probability, if not a moral certainty, that it would be his death, or dangerous sickness (though he wore 20 caps) is bound to obÿe you in this case?

"3. Whether usually the most studious, laborious ministers, be not the most invaletudinary and infirm? and

"4. Whether the health of such should be made a jest of, by the more healthful; and be made so light of, as to be cast away, rather than a ceremony sometime be left to their discretion? And whether it be a sign of the right and genuine spirit of Religion, to subject to such a ceremony, both the life of godliness, and the lives of ministers, and the people's souls? Much of this concerneth the people also, as well as the ministers." [Grand Debate, p. 145.]

It is to be hoped the time can never return when such trifling and selfish arguments can be used on such a question.

the growth of Anabaptism] The effect of this upon the generation in which this Preface was written must have been very awful: and the necessity for the Service spoken of was strongly felt by the Convocation. In a work on the Bills of Mortality, written in 1665, there are some incidental remarks which strikingly corroborate those of this Preface: "The keeping of Parish Registers having been taken out of the hands of every Parish Minister, and committed to some inferior fellow elected by the people, and confirmed by the Justices of Peace, had been much neglected, and was again reduced into amongst us, is now become necessary, and may be always useful for the baptizing of Natives in our Plantations, and others converted to the Faith.

If any man, who shall desire a more particular account of the several Alterations in any part of the Liturgy, shall take the pains to compare the present Book with the former; we doubt not but the reason of the change may easily appear.

And having thus endeavoured to discharge our duties in this weighty affair, as in the sight of God, and to approve our sincerity therein (so far as lay in us) to the consciences of all men; although we know it impossible (in such variety of apprehensions, humours, and interests, as are in the world) to please all; nor can expect that men of factious, peevish, and perverse spirits should be satisfied with any thing that can be done in this kind by any other than themselves: Yet we have good hope, that what is here presented, and hath been by the Convocations of both Provinces with great diligence examined and approved, will be also well accepted and approved by all sober, peaceable, and truly conscientious sons of the Church of England.

better order. And till this year the account of Christenings had been neglected more than that of Burials; one and the chief cause whereof was a religious opinion against the baptizing of Infants, either as unlawful or unnecessary. If this were the only reason, we might, by our defects of this kind, conclude the growth of this opinion, and pronounce that not half the people of England between the years 1650 and 1660 were convinced of the need of baptizing. . . . Upon the whole matter it is most certain that the number of heterodox believers was very great between the said year 1650 and 1660, and so peevish were they as not to have the births of their children registered . . ."<sup>1</sup> It may well be believed that this privation of the grace of Baptism was one of the causes which led to such fearful profligacy and infidelity in the time of Charles II. and his immediate successors.

Convocations of both Provinces] For greater expedition in the work of revision certain Commissioners were appointed by the Convocation of York to sit in the Convocation of Canterbury as their representatives; and thus was accomplished a selection of representatives from the whole body of the Church of England clergy.

sober, peaceable, and truly conscientious sons] The last words of this Preface contain an appeal to other times than those in and for which they were written. The safe path which was marked out so wisely by the Reformers has proved to be one which has approved itself to all subsequent generations, and it was the effort of the 1661 Revisers to walk in it faithfully, by returning, wherever they could, to the original English Prayer Book of 1549. Had they attempted to do this to a greater extent, there might have been danger of their whole work being set aside. Sobriety in wild and fanatical times, peace in a controversial age, and conscientiousness when so many were unscrupulous, were wise watchwords.

CONCERNING THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH.

THERE was never any thing by the wit of man so well devised, or so sure established, which, in continuance of time hath not been corrupted: As, among other things, it may plainly appear by the Common Prayers in the Church, commonly called Divine Service. The first original and ground whereof if a man would search out by the ancient Fathers, he shall find, that the same was not ordained but of a good purpose, and for a great advancement of godliness. For they so ordered the matter, that all the whole Bible (or the greatest part thereof), should be read over once every year; intending thereby, that the Clergy, and especially such as were Ministers in the congregation, should (by often reading, and meditation in God's word) be stirred up to godliness themselves, and be more able to exhort others by wholesome doctrine, and to confute them that were Adversaries to the Truth; and further, that the people (by daily hearing of holy Scripture read in the Church) might continually profit more and more in the knowledge of God, and be the more inflamed with the love of his true Religion.

But these many years passed, this godly and decent Order of the ancient Fathers hath been so altered, broken, and neglected, by planting in uncertain Stories, and Legends, with multitude of

THE ORIGINAL PREFACE OF A. D. 1549.

This explanatory introduction is supposed to have been written by Cranmer. It was moved to this place when the present Preface was inserted in 1661. Two short sentences were also erased.

By whomsoever it was written, there can be no doubt that it was composed with the Reformed Roman Breviary of Quignonez lying open before the writer. The passages in the right-hand column are, with two exceptions, taken from an edition of 1537, belonging to Queen's College, Oxford, and the preface to this edition agrees with all the later copies. But the Paris edition of 1536 (probably following the Roman one of 1535) differs considerably.<sup>1</sup> Our English Preface is most like the later edition of Quignonez; but the paragraph enclosed in brackets appears to shew that the earlier one was also known to the reformers of our Services. There are six copies of this Breviary in the Bodleian Library, one at the British Museum, one at the Routh Library of Durham University, one in the Public Library at Cambridge, and one in Queen's College, Oxford; but none of these are earlier than 1537. Others are in private hands.

It has already been mentioned, in the Historical Introduction [p. 8], that this Reformed Roman Breviary exercised some influence upon the reformed English offices. It set us the example of compression in the services, and also of method. Quignonez removed the ancient Confession and Absolution to the beginning of the daily services, and in this too he was followed by our Reformers. His Breviary, again, established a system of two lessons on ordinary, or ferial days; the first of which was taken from the Old Testament, and the second from the New Testament. On festivals, a third lesson was added, which was generally a short passage from a homily of St. Gregory or some other patristic author. The two former were seldom entire chapters, but were taken in a regular succession, like our own daily lessons. In some respects the changes made by Cardinal Quignonez, and sanctioned by Paul III. in a Papal bull, were more sweeping in their character than those of our own reform. It is evident from his preface that others, beside himself, were engaged on the work of revision; and this, as well as the long time occupied over it, offers another point of comparison between the two reformed service-books, those of Rome and England.

[the ancient Fathers] This designation is used in its ordinary sense for the ancient writers of the Church antecedent to the Middle Ages. So the great collection of their minor writings in thirty folio volumes is entitled Bibliotheca Maxima Veterum Patrum, ed. 1677.

Responds, Verses, vain Repetitions, Commemorations, and Synodals; that commonly when any Book of the Bible was begun, after three or four Chapters were read out, all the rest were unread. And in this sort the Book of Isaiah was begun in Advent, and the Book of Genesis in Septuagesima; but they were only begun, and never read through: After like sort were other Books of holy Scripture used.

And moreover, whereas St. Paul would have such language spoken to the people in the Church as they might understand, and have profit by hearing the same; The Service in this Church of England these many years hath been read in Latin to the people, which they understand not; so that they have heard with their ears only, and their heart, spirit, and mind have not been edified thereby.

And furthermore, notwithstanding that the ancient Fathers have divided the Psalms into seven Portions, whereof every one was called a Nocturn: Now of late time a few of them have been lately said, and the rest utterly omitted.

Moreover, the number and hardness of the Rules called the Pie, and the manifold changings of the Service was the cause, that to turn the Book only was so hard and intricate a matter that many times there was more business to find out what should be read than to read it when it was found out.

These inconveniences therefore considered, here is set forth such an Order, whereby the same shall legendi erant more majorum . . . vix dum incepti omittuntur in alio breviario. Tum historiae sanctorum quaedam tam incultae, et tam sine delectu scriptae habentur in eodem, ut nec auctoritatem habere videantur nec gravitatem. [Ut exemplo esse possunt liber Genesis, qui incipitur in Septuagesima, liber Isaiae, qui in Adventu, quorum vix singula capitula perlegimus: ac eodem modo cetera Veteris Testamenti volumina degustamus magis quam legimus. Nec secus accidit in Evangelia, et reliquam Scripturam Novi Testamenti, quorum in loco successerunt alia, nec utilitate eum his, nec gravitate comparanda, quae quotidie agitatione linguae magis quam intentione mentis inculantur.]

. . . et psalmodum plerisque omissis, pauci singulis fere diebus repeterentur.

Accedit tam perplexus ordo, tanque difficilis precandi ratio, ut interdum paulo minor opera in requirendo ponatur, quam, cum inveneris, in legendo.

more majorum] Later on occur also the following words: "Ac illud ante omnia visum nobis est in consuetudinem revocare, ut Scriptura Sacra maxime omnium toto anno, et omnes psalmi singulis septimanis perlegerentur." Instead of "legendi erant," some copies read "erant perlegendi."

Ut exemplo] This passage is in the earlier edition of 1536, but not in that from which the rest is quoted. The writer has been obliged to quote it from Guéranger, not being able to meet with this edition in England.

Responds] These were short anthems, similar to that which is ten times sung during the reading of the passage of Scripture which contains the Ten Commandments. Theoretically they gave the keynote of the Lesson; but this principle was often deviated from, and the sense was frequently broken up rather than illustrated. The practice, in moderation, is a very excellent one.<sup>1</sup>

vain Repetitions] The same words being said over and over again; first, perhaps, in the Lesson, then in the Respond, and again in the Verse. A similar form of repetition may be seen in the Aspersio printed at p. 6.

Commemorations] Collects, or Collects and Versicles, commemorative of Saints or of Festivals.

Synodals] The provincial constitutions or canons which were read in parish churches after the conclusion of synods. The reading of them after the lessons was probably the origin of the corresponding custom of giving out notices after the Second Lesson.

the Pie] The following is exactly one-third of the Pica or Pie for a single Sunday, the first of Advent. Maskell observes that it was not possible for the same service to occur on the same Sunday of the year twice running; and it will be seen that Quignonez and our Reformers did not overstate the case in respect to the complexity of this ancient rule. In the Bodleian, York Minster, and Ripon Minster Libraries there are volumes containing the Pie only.

"Pica de Dominica Prima Adventus.

"LITÆ DOMINICALIS A.—Tertia Decembris tota cantetur Historia Aspiciens. Secundæ Vesperæ erunt de Sancto Osmundo, cum pleno servitio in crastino; et solennis memoria de octava, et de Dominica, et de Sancta Maria cum antiphona Ave Maria.—Feria 2 de S. Osmundo: ix. lectiones: omnia de Communi unius Confessoris et Pontificis. Sec. vesp. erunt de commemoratione, et mem. de Sancto, de octava, de Adventu, et de S. Maria, cum ant. Ave Maria.—Feria 3, 5, et sabbato, de commemorationibus, et Responsoria ferialia prætermittantur; et Missa de oct. S. Andreae dicitur in capitulo.

"LIT. DOM. B.—Quinto Cal. Dec. tota cantetur hist. Aspiciens, et mem. de S. Maria.—Fer. 2, 6, et sabb. de commem.—Fer. 3 de feria, et nihil de martyribus nisi mem. ad vesp. et ad matutinas de S. Maria. Missa de vigilia.—Fer. 4 de Apostolo, et solen. mem. de Adv. et de S. Maria.—Fer. 5 de fer. cum Resp. ferialibus, et mem. de oct. et Missa de 4 fer." And so on, through the seven Sunday Letters.

It was, perhaps, from the confused appearance which a page of Pica presents that printers came to call any portion of type which is in utter disorder through accident or otherwise by the name of "pie." The ecclesiastical use of the word is thought to have been derived from πῶαξ, an index, or table, from the wooden boards on which the directions for service were written out in primitive days. It is identical with "ordinale" and with "Directorium sacerdotum." The "Pica" type of later days is generally said to have taken its name from the large letters in which the pica of the Anglican Portiforia was printed: but no such large type was used for printing the Pie in the books which are now extant.

be redressed. And for a readiness in this matter here is drawn out a Kalendar for that purpose, which is plain and easy to be understood; wherein (so much as may be) the reading of holy Scripture is so set forth that all things shall be done in order without breaking one piece from another. For this cause be cut off Anthems, Responds, Invitations, and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture.

Yet, because there is no remedy, but that of necessity there must be some Rules; therefore certain Rules are here set forth; which, as they are few in number, so they are plain and easy to be understood. So that here you have an Order for Prayer, and for the reading of the holy Scripture, much agreeable to the mind and purpose of the old Fathers, and a great deal more profitable and commodious than that which of late was used. It is more profitable, because here are left out many things, whereof some are untrue, some uncertain, some vain and superstitious; and nothing is ordained to be read but the very pure Word of God, the holy Scriptures, or that which is agreeable to the same; and that in such a language and order as is most easy and plain for the understanding both of the readers and hearers. It is also more commodious, both for the shortness thereof, and for the plainness of the Order, and for that the Rules be few and easy.

And whereas heretofore there hath been great diversity in saying and singing in Churches within this Realm; some following Salisbury Use, some Hereford Use, and some the Use of Bangor, some of York, some of Lincoln; now from henceforth all the whole Realm shall have but one Use.

And forasmuch as nothing can be so plainly set forth but doubts may arise in the use and practice of the same; to appease all such diversity (if any arise), and for the resolution of all doubts concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in this Book; the parties

few and easy] The following passage was omitted from the Preface at the last revision: "Furthermore, by this order the Curates shall need none other books for their public service but this book and the Bible. By the means whereof the people shall not be at so great charges for books as in times past they have been." It was crossed out first by Bishop Cosin, and afterwards by the Committee of Revision; not, probably, from any idea that the passage was an unworthy one, but because it was so entirely out of date when the press had made the advance it had in 1661. Although, moreover, the passage was applicable to the case of poor parish churches, it was not so in that of richer ones and cathedrals, where as many books as formerly are required for the use of the choirs. There are practically in use by most of the clergy and choirs in one or other class of Churches, separate Breviaries, Missals, Manuals, Antiphonaries, "Service" Books, Psalters, and Lectionaries; the whole volume of the Holy Bible being now used for the latter, instead of those parts only which are needed for the daily and proper Lessons.

but one Use] Another part of the Preface erased at the suggestion of Cosin was this; which seems to have been copied from a passage in that of Quignonez:—

And if any will judge this way more painful, because that all things must be read upon the Book, whereas before, by the reason of so often repetition they could say many things by heart: if those men will weigh their labour, with the profit and knowledge which daily they shall obtain by reading upon the book, they will not refuse the pain, in consideration of the great profit that shall ensue thereof.

Si eni autem in hoc Breviario laboriosum videbitur pleraque omnia ex libro legi, cum multa in alio quæ propter frequentem repetitionem ediscentur memoriter pronuntientur, compenset cum hoc labore cognitionem Scripturæ Sacræ, quæ sic indes augeat; et intentionem animæ, quam Deus ante omnia in precantibus requirit: hanc enim majorem legentibus, quam memoriter prosequentibus adesse necesse est: et hujusmodi laborem non modo fructuosum, sed etiam salutarem indicabit.

that so doubt, or diversely take any thing, shall always resort to the Bishop of the Diocess, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and appeasing of the same; so that the same order be not contrary to any thing contained in this Book. And if the Bishop of the Diocess be in doubt, then he may send for the resolution thereof to the Archbishop.

the parties that so doubt] In the Act of Uniformity of the same year as that in which this Preface was written, the words corresponding to "the parties" are "the doers and executors of the same rites and ceremonies." [2 and 3 Edw. VI. sec. 1.] In the Elizabethan Latin Prayer Book [A. D. 1560] the passage is translated, "constitutum est, ut quoties dubia occurrunt aut incidunt inter ministros, deferatur res ad Episcopum Dioceseos." From this it appears that these words give no authority for reference to the Bishop in case of "doubts" or "diversely taking of any thing" on the part of the laity: "the parties" being the "ministers," or officiating clergy. This provision is illustrated by one of the Canons of A. D. 1604.

53. No public Opposition between Preachers.

If any Preacher shall in the Pulpit particularly, or namely of purpose, impugn or confute any doctrine delivered by any other Preacher in the same Church, or in any Church near adjoining, before he hath acquainted the Bishop of the diocese therewith, and received order from him what to do in that case, because upon such public dissenting and contradicting there may grow much offence and disquietness unto the people; the Churchwardens, or party grieved, shall forthwith signify the same to the said Bishop, and not suffer the said Preacher any more to occupy that place which he hath once abused, except he faithfully promise to forbear all such matter of contention in the Church, until the Bishop hath taken further order therein; who shall with all convenient speed so proceed therein, that public satisfaction may be made in the congregation where the offence was given. Provided, that if either of the parties offending do appeal, he shall not be suffered to preach pendente lite.

shall always resort to the Bishop] This does not relieve those who thus resort from their obligation to obey the rules laid down in the Prayer Book, as if the Bishop could relieve them of their responsibilities in that respect.

who by his discretion shall take order] That is if he is resorted to by the Clergy. But nothing is here said which imposes upon the Bishop the duty of intervening when he is not thus resorted to for the resolution of doubts or diversities among "the doers and executors of the same rites and ceremonies."

so that the same order be not contrary] The Bishop is thus kept as strictly within the four corners of the Prayer Book as the Priest. He has no authority to relax rubrics or to dispense with them; and is expressly forbidden to order anything which is contrary to them. He is the administrator, not the maker, of the ritual law of the Church.

And if the Bishop of the Diocess be in doubt] This provision for a rare emergency was added in 1552.

THOUGH it be appointed, That all things shall be read and sung in the Church in the English Tongue, to the end that the congregation may be thereby edified; yet it is not meant but that when men say Morning and Evening Prayer privately, they may say the same in any language that they themselves do understand.

THE LATIN PRAYER BOOK.<sup>1</sup>

In the first Act of Uniformity [2 and 3 Edw. VI. c. 1] the fifth clause was as follows: "Provided always, That it shall be lawful to any man that understandeth the Greek, Latin, and Hebrew tongue, or other strange tongue, to say and have the said prayers heretofore specified of Matins and Evensong in Latin or any such other tongue, saying the same privately as they do understand. And for the further encouraging of learning in the tongues in the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, to use and exercise in their common and open prayer in their Chapels, being no Churches or other places of Prayer, the Matins, Evensong, Litany, and all other prayers, the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass, excepted, in the said book prescribed in Greek, Latin, or Hebrew; any thing in this present Act to the contrary notwithstanding."

In the Act of Uniformity at present in force [14 Car. II. c. 4] this clause is also enacted: "Provided always, That it shall and may be lawful to use the Morning and Evening Prayer, and all other Prayers and Service prescribed in and by the said book, in the Chapels or other Publick Places of the respective Colleges and Halls in both the Universities, in the Colleged of Westminster, Winchester, and Eaton, and in the Convocations of the Clergies of either Province in Latine; Any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

Letters Patent were issued by Queen Elizabeth to the same effect, and printed at the beginning of the Latin Prayer Book issued by her authority in 1560; there being no limitation (as there is not in the present Act of Uniformity) with respect to the Communion Service.<sup>2</sup> Bishop Cosin added to the existing rule the words "especially in the Colleges and Halls of either University, and in the Schools of Westminster, Eaton, and Winchester," but the alteration was not printed.

The first Latin Version of the Book of Common Prayer was made in 1551 by a former Canon of St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, named Alexander Aless, and under the direction of Archbishop Cranmer.<sup>3</sup> As some provision would certainly be made by authority for carrying out the proviso of the Act of Uniformity, it is probable that the translation of Aless was made for this purpose; although, because Cranmer used it for giving Martin Bucer a knowledge of the English formularies, it is commonly said that he had it done expressly for that object. Bucer in his Censura distinctly says "librum istum Sacrorum, per interpretem, quantum potui, cognovi diligenter;" and a comparison of dates makes it almost certain that he gained what little knowledge he there had of our English services through an oral interpretation before he received the copy of Aless' version from Cranmer. But Aless was now a professor in a Lutheran, that is, a Presbyterian, university; and his Latin version is very far from being rendered with that bona fides so ostentatiously put forth on the title-page.

This version was, however, the foundation of that issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1560, having been revised by Walter Haddon.<sup>4</sup> But Queen Elizabeth's Latin Prayer Book differs considerably from her English one; and although in many respects it better represents the original Prayer Book of 1549, it can hardly be taken as having authority under our present Act of Uniformity. In addition to the ordinary services, there were also added to this Latin version an Office, "In commendationibus Benefactorum," and another, "Celebratio cenæ Domini, in funebribus, si amici et vicini defuncti communicare velint." These two offices were specially mentioned as "peculiariora quædam" in the Letters Patent. The book was reprinted in 1574 and in 1596, and is to be found in a modern reprint among the Parker Society's publications; and no doubt it was adopted for the private recitation of the Daily Offices in days when Latin was more freely used than it has been in later times. These words are to be found at the close of the Letters Patent: "Eadem etiam formulæ Latina preceandi privatim uti hortamur omnes reliquos Ecclesiæ nostræ Anglicanæ ministros, cujuscunque gradus fuerint, iis diebus, quibus aut non solent, aut non tenentur parochianis suis, ad eadem sacram pro more accedentibus, publice preces vernacula lingua, secundum formulam dicti Statuti, recitare." Which exhortation may be taken as a contemporary interpretation of the clause to which this note refers.

The Daily Services, the Psalter, and some additional Collects and Prayers were translated into Latin for the use of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1660.<sup>5</sup> But this is not a complete version of the Book of Common Prayer.

There are more than twenty editions of various Latin versions of the Prayer Book, but that most used until recently was one by the learned and orthodox Dean Durel, which was made shortly after its settlement at the Restoration.<sup>6</sup>

There is some reason for supposing that this version was intended to be authorized as the standard Latin Book of Common Prayer, although no record remains of its being placed before the Convocation. Durel was Canon of Durham when he published it, having been appointed to his stall by Cosin, the principal Reviser of the Prayer Book, who had probably made his acquaintance during their exile when both were living at Paris. But for some years after the Restoration, Durel was Chaplain of the Savoy<sup>7</sup> and Dean of Windsor, the one post seeming to associate him officially with the proceedings connected with the Restoration of the Church, and the other (as Confessor to the Sovereign) with King Charles II. Among Archbishop Sancroft's papers in the Bodleian Library there is also a letter from Durel submitting a specimen of his Latin version to the Primate for approval, and it is dedicated to the King in a very similar tone to that adopted by the last translators of the Holy Bible in their dedication of it to James I. These circumstances do not prove that Durel's Version had any actual authority given to it, but they seem to indicate that it was undertaken at the suggestion of men in high office and having great influence in ecclesiastical affairs; and it is not unlikely that further evidence may be discovered on the subject.

Dean Durel's Latin Version is a most excellent one, whether it is viewed as to scholarship, theology, or loyalty to the Church of England. The Psalms, Canticles, Epistles, and Gospels are all printed from the ancient Salisbury Use; and the expressions of the latter are often followed, and even retained, in the Prayers, although most of these have been retranslated from the English.

A new Latin version was made by two of the contributors to this work in 1865.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>3</sup> It was probably his connection with the French chapel of the Savoy which led Durel to translate the Prayer Book into French. This version has been used ever since in the Channel Islands, though others of a Protestant character have also been introduced in modern times. The following is its title: "La Liturgie, c'est à dire, Le Formulaire des Prières Publiques, de l'Administration des Sacraments, et des autres Cereémonies et Coutumes de l'Eglise, selon l'usage de l'Eglise Anglicane, avec le Psautier ou les Psalmes de David, Pontez selon qu'ils doivent estre ou chantez ou lèhs dans les Eglises. A Londres: Pour Jean Dunmore et Octavien Puleyn le Jeune à l'Épiscopie du Roy en la petite Bretagne, 1667."

<sup>2</sup> An authorized French translation was printed by Archbishop Cranmer's order in 1552. In a letter to Secretary Cecil (Sturyc's Memorials, iii. 698, Eccl. Hist. Soc.) the Archbishop says that this was first done by Sir Hugh Pamel's commandment (who was Governor of Calais), and overseen by the Lord Chancellor (Goodrich, Bishop of Ely) and others, being afterwards revised by a learned Frenchman who was a Doctor of Divinity. This revision was for the second book of Edward VI., and was printed in 1553.

And all Priests and Deacons are to say daily the Morning and Evening Prayer, either privately or openly, not being let by sickness or some other urgent cause.

And the Curate that ministereth in every Parish Church or Chapel, being at home, and not being otherwise reasonably hindered, shall say the same in the Parish Church or Chapel where he ministereth, and shall cause a Bell to be tolled thereunto a convenient time before he begin, that the people may come to hear God's Word, and to pray with him.

A Greek version of the Prayer Book was made in 1569 by William Whitaker, afterwards Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, who was a nephew of Dean Nowell, to whom the work is dedicated. This was printed by Wolf, and is dated "23 Maii 1569." But it contains only the Morning and Evening Prayer, the Litany, the Collects, and the Catechism. A complete Greek version was made by Dean Durel in 1664, and dedicated to Archbishop Sheldon. It was printed in very small-sized type and volume by Field, the University printer.

PRIVATE SAYING OF THE SERVICES DAILY BY THE CLERGY.

The second paragraph of the above Appendix to the Preface of 1549 enjoins the Clergy to say the Daily Offices constantly either privately or openly, unless hindered by some urgent cause. This direction has undergone the following changes:—

Neither that any man shall be bound to the saying of them, but such as from time to time, in Cathedral and Collegiate churches, parish churches, and chapels to the same annexed, shall serve the congregation.	And all priests and deacons shall be bound to say daily the Morning and Evening Prayer, either privately or openly, except they be letted by preaching, studying of divinity, or by some other urgent cause.	And all priests and deacons are to say daily the Morning and Evening Prayer, either privately or openly, not being let by sickness, or some other urgent cause.

In the Scotch Prayer Book of 1637 the words were added, "of which cause, if it be frequently pretended, they are to make the bishop of the diocese, or the archbishop of the province, the judge and allower." Bishop Cosin also added to "urgent cause," "which the Bishop of the Diocese shall approve." But the present form appears to be that which he ultimately adopted, and that which was accepted by the Committee of Revision. There were, however, in the original MS. of the Prayer Book, after "privately or openly," the words "when conveniently they may," and these words have been crossed out with the pen, on what authority, or by whom, is not known.

This rule was regarded by Bishop Cosin, as he tells us in his notes to the Prayer Book [Works, vol. v. p. 9], as a continuation of the ancient rule of the unreformed Church: and such has been the opinion of most sound writers since his time. The Letters Patent attached to the Latin Prayer Book of Queen Elizabeth confirm this view; and so also does the practice of many holy clergymen at every period since the Reformation. The principle of it is that the Clergy are bound to offer the prayers of the Church daily to the glory of God, and as intercessors for their flocks, whether any come to join them in the offering or not. Such private recitation of the daily offices is, however, only to be used when the better way of "open prayer" with a congregation cannot be adopted.

PUBLIC SAYING OF THE SERVICES DAILY.

The third paragraph of the above rule very clearly enjoins the use of Daily Service. Bishop Cosin wished to define the hours at which it was to be said within certain limits, by adding to "a convenient time before he begin,"—"which may be any hour between six and ten of the clock in the morning, or between two and six of the clock in the evening;" and although his alteration was not adopted, it serves to shew us what were then considered the canonical limits of the times for Mattins and Evensong.

The Laity should never allow their Clergy to find the House of God empty when they go there to carry out this most excellent rule of the Church. In the fifteenth Canon, which directs "the Litany to be read on Wednesdays and Fridays," there is an injunction which shews in what manner the practice of Daily Service ought to be kept up by the Laity as well as the Clergy: "The minister, at the accustomed hours of service, shall resort to the Church and Chapel, and, warning being given to the people by tolling of a bell, shall say the Litany prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer; whereunto we wish every householder dwelling within half a mile of the Church to come, or send one at the least of his household, fit to join with the Minister in prayers." It was undoubtedly the intention of the first Reformers, and of all who at any time revised our Services, to have them used daily, Morning and Evening, openly in the Church, by the Clergy and as many of the Laity as may be able to attend. Many endowments have been left for assisting to carry out this intention of the Church; and the practice has been kept up in some parish Churches (as well as in the Cathedrals) without any break, except during the persecution of the seventeenth century. In 1724, when the population of London was only one-sixth of what it is at the present time, there were seventy-five Churches open daily for Divine Service; and there are many proofs that the same diligence in prayer was used in the country as well as in large cities.

Such continual public acts of Divine Worship are expedient for various reasons. [1] It is due to the honour of Almighty God that the Church in every place consecrated to His service should begin and end the day by rendering Him a service of praise. [2] Each Church and parish being a corporate centre and corporate whole, prayer for God's grace and His mercy should be offered morning and evening, for the body which the Church and such congregation as can assemble represents. Thus the Divine Presence is drawn down to the Tabernacle that It may thence sanctify the whole Camp. [3] The benefit to the Clergy is very great, of offering Divine Worship, prayer, and intercession, in the presence of, and in company with, some of their flock. [4] There are advantages to those who frequently join in Divine Service which can only be fully known by experience, but which will then be appreciated as blessings not otherwise to be obtained. [5] The service of the Sanctuary is the most real and true form of that daily Morning and Evening worship for which Family Prayer has been originated as an imperfect substitute; for it is the true Common Prayer [see p. 82] of the Church offered in the Name of Christ by two or three gathered together under His authority, and according to His ordinance.

It may be noticed that the Act of Uniformity enjoins that the Common Prayer shall be said on Sundays and Holy Days, and on all other Days; and that the title of our Morning and Evening Service is, "The Order for Morning or Evening Prayer DAILY throughout the year." In the beginning of the "Form of Prayer to be used at Sea" there is also this rubric, "¶ The Morning and Evening Service to be used daily at Sea, shall be the same which is appointed in the Book of Common Prayer." And the next rubric is, "These two following Prayers are to be also said in Her Majesty's Navy every day."

OF CEREMONIES,

WHY SOME BE ABOLISHED, AND SOME RETAINED.

OF such Ceremonies as be used in the Church, and have had their beginning by the institution of man, some at the first were of godly intent and purpose devised, and yet at length turned to vanity and superstition: Some entered into the Church by indiscreet devotion, and such a zeal as was without knowledge; and for because they were winked at in the beginning, they grew daily to more and more abuses, which not only for their unprofitableness, but also because they have much blinded the people, and obscured the glory of God, are worthy to be cut away and clean rejected: Other there be, which although they have been devised by man, yet it is thought good to reserve them still, as well for a decent order in the Church (for the which they were first devised) as because they pertain to edification, whereunto all things done in the Church (as the Apostle teacheth) ought to be referred. And although the keeping or omitting of a Ceremony, in itself considered, is but a small thing, yet the wilful and contemptuous transgression and breaking of a common order and discipline is no small offence before God. Let all things be done among you, saith S. Paul, in a seemly and due order: The appointment of the which order pertaineth not to private men; therefore no man ought to take in hand, or presume to appoint or alter any publick or common order in Christ's Church, except he be lawfully called and authorized thereunto.

OF CEREMONIES.

This justification of the course taken at the Reformation with respect to the Ceremonial part of Divine Worship was probably written by Archbishop Crammer, being included in some early lists of his works. It was originally inserted at the end of the Prayer Book, and was followed by some ritual directions reprinted below. In 1552 the part "Of Ceremonies" was placed after the Preface, and these ritual directions were omitted.

"Certain Notes for the more plain Explication and decent Ministration of Things contained in this Book.

"In the saying or singing of Matins and Evensong, baptizing and burying, the Minister, in parish churches and chapels annexed to the same, shall use a surplice. And in all cathedral churches and colleges, the Archdeacons, Deans, Provosts, Masters, Prebendaries, and Fellows, being Graduates, may use in the quire, beside their surplices, such hood as pertaineth to their several degrees which they have taken in any university within this realm. But in all other places, every minister shall be at liberty to use any surplice or no. It is also seemly, that Graduates, when they do preach, should use such hoods as pertaineth to their several degrees.

"¶ And whensoever the Bishop shall celebrate the holy Communion in the church, or execute any other public ministration, he shall have upon him, beside his rochette, a surplice or albe, and a cope or vestment; and also his pastoral staff in his hand, or else borne or holden by his chaplain.

"¶ As touching kneeling, crossing, holding up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and other gestures, they may be used or left, as every man's devotion serveth, without blame.

"¶ Also upon Christmas Day, Easter Day, the Ascension Day, Whit-Sunday, and the feast of the Trinity, may be used any part of Holy Scripture hereafter to be certainly limited and appointed, in the stead of the Litany.

"¶ If there be a sermon, or for other great cause, the Curate, by his discretion, may leave out the Litany, Gloria in Excelsis,<sup>1</sup> the Creed, the Homily, and the Exhortation to the Communion."

<sup>1</sup> The omission of this is not quite so strange as it seems at first: "Ab Adventu Domini usque ad Nativitatem ejus [ab Septuagesima usque in Conam Domini, cap. xlvii.], Te Deum Laudamus, Gloria in Excelsis Deo, Ite missa est, dimittimus, quia major gloria Novi Testamenti, quam Veteris,

There was a rubric printed at the beginning of the Communion Service relating to the same subject: and as all three documents are of the same date [A.D. 1549], it also is here reprinted, so as to bring them under one view:—

"¶ Upon the day, and at the time appointed for the ministration of the holy Communion, the Priest that shall execute the holy ministry, shall put upon him the vesture appointed for that ministration, that is to say, a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope. And where there be many Priests or Deacons, there so many shall be ready to help the Priest in the ministration, as shall be requisite; and shall have upon them likewise the vestures appointed for their ministry, that is to say, albes with tunicles."

The subject of Ceremonies being dealt with at large in the Ritual Introduction, it is not necessary to go into much detail respecting this document; but a few notes are annexed pointing out the principles which actuated the Reformers of 1549 as they are indicated in their explanation or apology.

institution of man] The distinction implied in these words shews that Archbishop Crammer and his associates did not consider themselves at liberty to alter any ceremonies of Divine institution, such as the Laying on of Hands, or the breaking of the Bread in the Consecration of the Holy Eucharist.

turned to vanity and superstition] The primitive love-feasts and the kiss of peace are illustrations of this assertion; so also is the excessive use of the sign of the Cross, which provoked a recoil equally superstitious, leading to the too general disuse of it.

Some entered . . . by indiscreet devotion] Of such a kind were the ceremonies connected with images, and even with relics. These ceremonies were prompted, in the first instances, by the best of feelings; but, in the course of time, acts and words of veneration towards the saints of God became perverted into usages which can hardly be distinguished from idolatry, and thus "obscured the glory of God"<sup>2</sup> instead of presenting it more clearly to the eyes of His worshippers.

ejus typum infra Adventum Domini observamus." [MICROLOGUS de Ecc. Observat. cap. xxx.] It was likewise omitted in Septuagesima and on Innocent's Day. There was also a limitation of its use on Palm Sunday, "in Ecclesiis in quibus chrisma conficitur, et non in aliis" [DURAND. Ration. div. off. vi. 75. 2]: and one of the first rubrics in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory is, "Quando vero Litania agitur, neque Gloria in Excelsis Deo, neque Alleluia cantur."

And whereas in this our time, the minds of men are so divers that some think it a great matter of conscience to depart from a piece of the least of their Ceremonies, they be so addicted to their old customs; and again on the other side, some be so new-fangled that they would innovate all things, and so despise the old that nothing can like them but that is new: It was thought expedient, not so much to have respect how to please and satisfy either of these parties, as how to please God, and profit them both. And yet lest any man should be offended, whom good reason might satisfy, here be certain causes rendered why some of the accustomed Ceremonies be put away, and some retained and kept still.

Some are put away because the great excess and multitude of them hath so increased in these latter days that the burden of them was intolerable; whereof S. Augustine in his time complained that they were grown to such a number that the estate of Christian people was in worse case concerning that matter than were the Jews. And he counselled that such yoke and burden should be taken away as time would serve quietly to do it.

But what would S. Augustine have said if he had seen the Ceremonies of late days used among us, whereunto the multitude used in his time was not to be compared? This our excessive multitude of Ceremonies was so great, and many of them so dark, that they did more confound and darken, than declare and set forth Christ's benefits unto us.

And besides this, Christ's Gospel is not a Ceremonial Law (as much of Moses' Law was), but it is a Religion to serve God, not in bondage of the figure or shadow, but in the freedom of the spirit; being content only with those Ceremonies which do serve to a decent Order and godly Discipline, and such as be apt to stir up the dull mind of man to the remembrance of his duty to God by some notable and special signification whereby he might be edified.

Furthermore, the most weighty cause of the abolishment of certain Ceremonies was, That they were so far abused, partly by the superstitious blindness of the rude and unlearned, and partly by the unsatiable avarice of such as sought more their own lucre than the glory of God, that the abuses could not well be taken away, the thing remaining still. But now as concerning those persons which peradventure will be offended for that some of the old Ceremonies are retained still. If they consider that without some Ceremonies it is not possible to keep any Order, or quiet Discipline in the Church, they shall easily perceive just cause to reform their judgements. And if they think much that any of the old do remain, and would rather have all devised anew: Then such men granting some Ceremonies convenient to be had, surely where the old may be well used, there they cannot reasonably reprove the old only for their age, without bewraying of their own folly. For in such a case they ought rather to have reverence unto them for their antiquity, if they will declare themselves to be more studious of unity and concord than of innovations and new-fangleness, which (as much as may be with true

Some are put away because the great excess] The minute directions given in the rubrics of the old Service-books often occupy page after page, while the prayers to which they are annexed occupy only a few lines; and it must be a matter of grave doubt, whether any more than a small fraction of the ceremonies latterly used in the celebration of the Holy Eucharist were intelligible to any but experienced priests. Their excess had become insupportable both to the Clergy and the people, and the meaning of many had quite passed away. Nor is there any reason to doubt the assertion that many ceremonies were so abused through ignorance on the one hand, and corruption on the other, "that the abuses could not well be taken away, the thing remaining still;" a state of things had in fact grown up which required strong measures for its reformation.

whereof S. Augustine in his time complained] St. Augustine's words are as follows: "I cannot, however, sanction with my approbation those ceremonies which are departures from the custom of the Church, and are instituted on the pretext of being symbolical of some holy mystery; although, for the sake of avoiding offence to the piety of some and the pugnacity of others, I do not venture to condemn severely many things of this kind. But this I deplore, and have too much occasion to do so, that comparatively little attention is paid to many of the most wholesome rites which Scripture has enjoined; and that so many false notions everywhere prevail, that more severe rebuke would be administered to a man who should touch the ground with his feet bare during the octaves (before his baptism), than to one who drowned his intellect in drunkenness. My opinion therefore is that wherever it is possible, all those things should be abolished without hesitation which neither have warrant in Holy Scripture, nor are found to have been appointed by councils of bishops, nor are confirmed by the practice of the universal Church, but are so infinitely various, according to the different customs of different places, that it is with difficulty, if at all, that the reasons which guided men in appointing them can be discovered. For even although nothing be found, perhaps, in which they are against the true faith; yet the Christian religion, which God in His mercy made free, appointing to her sacraments very few in number, and very easily observed, is by these burdensome ceremonies so oppressed that the condition of the Jewish Church itself is preferable: for although they have not known the time of their freedom, they are subjected to burdens imposed by the law of God, not by the vain conceits of men. The Church of God, however, being meanwhile so constituted as to enclose much chaff and many tares, bears with many things; yet if anything be contrary to the faith or to holy life, she does not approve of it either by silence or by practice." [Aug. Ep. lv. 35.]

But now as concerning those persons] Extreme and superstitious opinions against ceremonies were beginning to be as great a trouble to the Church as the extravagant and superstitious use of them had been. The principles here enunciated against the enthusiasts who held them are: [1] That some ceremonies are absolutely essential to the order and decency of Divine Service. [2] That to invent new ones altogether would be as presumptuous as unnecessary. [3] That the old ones which were retained under the new system of the Church of England were of an edifying kind. [4] That the ceremonies retained were never likely to be abused as those which were set aside had been.

setting forth of Christ's Religion) is always to be eschewed. Furthermore, such shall have no just cause with the Ceremonies reserved to be offended. For as those be taken away which were most abused, and did burden men's consciences without any cause; so the other that remain are retained for a Discipline and Order, which (upon just causes) may be altered and changed, and therefore are not to be esteemed equal with God's Law. And moreover, they be neither dark nor dumb Ceremonies, but are so set forth that every man may understand what they do mean, and to what use they do serve. So that it is not like that they in time to come should be abused as other have been. And in these our doings we condemn no other Nations, nor prescribe any thing but to our own people only: For we think it convenient that every Country should use such Ceremonies as they shall think best to the setting forth of God's honour and glory, and to the reducing of the people to a most perfect and godly living, without error or superstition; and that they should put away other things which from time to time they perceive to be most abused, as in men's ordinances it often chanceth diversely in divers countries.

we condemn no other Nations] This excellent sentence strongly illustrates the temperate spirit in which the official work of the Reformation of the Church of England was conducted. Recognizing the right which a national Church possessed to make such changes as may be expedient (subject to the retention of Catholic essentials), the Reformers acted upon it; but they also recognized it for other Churches as well as for that of England, and claimed to be the advocates of change and reconstruction only within the bounds of their legitimate jurisdiction. So sound a principle deserves the highest respect, and should be acted upon at all times. Had it been adhered to by the foreign party as well as by the official guides of the Reformation, a great schism would have been prevented.

diversely in divers countries] No doubt there are many Ceremonies used in the Eastern Church, and in southern countries of Europe, which seem unprofitable, and even worse, to persons brought up under a different system, and under different circumstances: but to those who use them they may be a true vehicle of adoration as regards Him Whom they worship, and of wholesome religious emotion as respects themselves. St. Augustine's words on this point also might well have been quoted. "I am surprised," he wrote to Januarius, "at your expressing a desire that I should write anything in regard to those ceremonies which are found different in different countries, because there is no necessity for my doing this; and moreover, one most excellent rule must be observed in regard to these customs, when they do not in any way oppose either true doctrine or sound morality, but contain some incentives to the better life, viz. that wherever we see them observed or know them to be established, we should not only refrain from finding fault with them, but even recommend them by our approval and imitation, unless restrained by fear of doing greater harm than good by this course, through the infirmity of others." [Aug. Ep. lv. 34.]

THE ORDER

HOW THE PSALTER IS APPOINTED TO BE READ.

THE Psalter shall be read through once every Month, as it is there appointed, both for Morning and Evening Prayer. But in February it shall be read only to the Twenty-eighth or Twenty-ninth day of the Month.

And whereas January, March, May, July, August, October, and December have One-and-thirty days apiece; It is ordered that the same Psalms shall be read the last day of the said months which were read the day before: So that the Psalter may begin again the first day of the next month ensuing.

And whereas the cxixth Psalm is divided into xxii. Portions, and is overlong to be read at one time; It is so ordered that at one time shall not be read above four or five of the said Portions.

And at the end of every Psalm, and of every such part of the cxixth Psalm, shall be repeated this Hymn,

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

Note, that the Psalter followeth the Division of the Hebrews, and the Translation of the Great English Bible set forth and used in the time of King Henry the Eighth, and Edward the Sixth.

Full notes on the Psalter will be found in the Introduction to the Psalms.

THE ORDER

HOW THE REST OF HOLY SCRIPTURE IS APPOINTED TO BE READ.

THE Old Testament is appointed for the First Lessons at Morning and Evening Prayer, so as the most part thereof will be read every year once, as in the Calendar is appointed.

The New Testament is appointed for the Second Lessons at Morning and Evening Prayer, and shall be read over orderly every year twice, once in the morning and once in the evening, besides the Epistles and Gospels, except the Apocalypse, out of which there are only certain Lessons appointed at the end of the year, and thrice, besides the Epistles and Gospels; except the Apocalypse, out of which there are only certain proper Lessons appointed upon divers Feasts.

And to know what Lessons shall be read every day, look for the day of the Month in the Calendar following, and there ye shall find the Chapters and portions of Chapters that shall be read for the Lessons, both at Morning and Evening Prayer, except only the moveable Feasts, which are not in the Calendar, and the immoveable, where there is a blank left in the column of Lessons, the Proper Lessons for all which days are to be found in the Table of Proper Lessons.

If Evening Prayer is said at two different times in the same place of worship on any Sunday (except a Sunday for which alternative Second Lessons are specially appointed in the table), the Second Lesson at the second time may, at the discretion of the minister, be any chapter from the four Gospels, or any Lesson appointed in the Table of Lessons from the four Gospels.

Upon occasions, to be approved by the Ordinary, other Lessons may, with his consent, be substituted for those which are appointed in the Calendar.

And note, That whensoever Proper Psalms or Lessons are appointed, then the Psalms and Lessons of ordinary course appointed in the Psalter and Calendar (if they be different) shall be omitted for that time.

Note also, That upon occasions to be appointed by the Ordinary, other Psalms may, with his consent, be substituted for those appointed in the Psalter.

If any of the Holy-days for which Proper Lessons are appointed in the table fall upon a Sunday which is the first Sunday in Advent, Easter Day, Whitsunday, or Trinity Sunday, the Lessons appointed for such Sunday shall be read, but if it fall upon any other Sunday, the Lessons appointed either for the Sunday or for the Holy-day may be read at the discretion of the minister.

THE SYSTEM OF THE LESSONS.

There are many indications in the writings of the Fathers, in the Apostolical Canons and Constitutions, and in other Christian writings, that Scripture Lections or "Lessons" were in use in another form than in that of Eucharistic Gospels and Epistles, from the earliest ages of the Christian Church. It may almost be said to be inevitable that the possession of so rich a treasure as the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament should lead to its free use in public reading during Divine Service: but it would also be a custom derived from the Jewish Church, in which the Law and the Prophets were read every Sabbath Day, probably from the time of the Captivity.<sup>1</sup> The general system now used in the Western Church is substantially that which was reconstructed in the fifth and sixth centuries under the direction of Gelasius and St. Gregory the Great, by whom the Offices of the Church and its liturgical customs were brought into an uniform order. It may be traced in the ancient Breviaries, and in the works of liturgical writers, such as Rupertus Tuitensis [A.D. 1100] and Amalarius [A.D. 820-27], and is shewn in the following Table side by side with the Prayer Book system:—

As regards the more particular details of this arrangement, it may be said that the Breviary system of reading Holy Scripture was very similar in principle to that which the Prayer Book retains in the Communion Service. Short selections were made from different books of the Holy Bible, and these were read successively (sometimes three, and at others nine), "responds," or short anthems (intended to answer in character to the Lesson read), being sung after each. But the whole of the Lessons of the day were rarely taken from Holy Scripture, some being usually extracts from Patristic writings, or the Lives of Saints. Nor, probably, were the Scripture Lections often read to the end, for there was a rubric to the following effect: "Then let the same clerk who pronounces the Benediction" before the Lesson, "when enough at his discretion has been read, say, But Thou, and let the clerk-reader respond, O Lord, have mercy upon us; which shall be observed throughout the year." [CHAMBERS' Sar. Psalt. p. 48, from the Arlingham Breviary in Salisb. Cath.] The principal officiating minister thus used his discretion as to the length of the Lesson, stopping the reader as soon as he thought fit.

The responsory system of reading Holy Scripture is still retained in its old form in the case of the Ten Commandments when said at the Communion Service; but one of the principal changes made in 1549 was the substitution for it of longer and continuous Lessons,—generally whole chapters,—with responsory Canticles, sung at the end only. No doubt this was a return to ancient practice, as it is said to be in the original preface to the Prayer Book. The Breviary system in use in the fifteenth century appears to have been the result of attempts to refine the use of Scripture in the Offices of the Church to a degree of pointedness which it never really attained, and which perhaps it was almost beyond human

New Testament; and a third, generally from a Patristic Homily, for festivals. These were about the length of our Epistles and Gospels, or somewhat longer than most of them.

In the Prayer Book of 1549 our present system of Daily and Proper Lessons was established, both being indicated in the Calendar, except in the case of the moveable festivals, when the chapter and verse for Mattins were referred to before the Introit (which preceded the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel of the day), and for Evensong after the Gospel. There were no Proper Lessons for ordinary Sundays, the books of Holy Scripture being read continuously on those as well as on week-days: nor were there so many Proper Lessons for festivals as there now are.

When Queen Elizabeth restored the use of the Prayer Book

1 It is observable that the Sunday Proper Lessons again break up that orderly system of reading the books of Holy Scripture through which is spoken of in the Preface. More than a hundred chapters of the Old Testament are thus displaced and omitted every year.

in 1559, the Tables of Proper Lessons were introduced, which were nearly identical with those now in the Prayer Book; and they were settled in the form in which they remained for two centuries in 1661, all the changes being written in the margin of Bishop Cosin's Durham Prayer Book.

The cycle of the Sunday Proper Lessons appears to have been formed in illustration of God's dealings with the Church of the Old Testament, though this idea is sometimes subordinated to the season, as in the Lessons for some of the Sundays in Lent. That for the other Holydays (with a few exceptions) is made up out of the didactic books of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha, and is not connected in any way with the Sunday cycle. The accidental combination of the fixed cycle of Proper Lessons with the variable one of the Second Lessons sometimes throws a wonderful flood of light upon both the Old and New Testament Scriptures: and it may be doubted whether any equal advantage would be gained by the substitution of Proper Lessons from the latter for the present system of reading it in order.

THE TABLES AND RULES.

These were nearly all of them new insertions at the last revision of the Prayer Book in 1662, and a large portion of them were taken out of Bishop Cosin's Collection of Private Devotions. Previous editions of the Prayer Book contained "an Almanack for thirty-nine years," which was the same as our "Table of Moveable Feasts;" a "Table to find Easter for ever;" the list of days beginning "Septuagesima," but without Ascension Day, and without any prefix whatever; and a short list of Holydays. The general title, "Tables and Rules, etc.," is in the Durham Book in Bishop Cosin's handwriting: and all the ecclesiastical alterations and insertions appear to have been made by him. The chronological apparatus of the Calendar was, however, revised by Dr. John Pell (a very learned man, and a friend of Vossius<sup>1</sup>), in conjunction with Sancroft as secretary to the Committee of Revision. Of this chronological apparatus there is no trace whatever in Bishop Cosin's Prayer Book. In 1752 (24 Geo. II.) "an Act for regulating the commencement of the year, and for correcting the Calendar," was passed, and from this the present tables of the Prayer Book are printed, not from the Sealed Books.

§ Rules to know when the Moveable Feasts and Holydays begin.

These rules stand exactly as they do in Cosin's Devotions, as published in 1627: except that the day of the month is substituted for the words "Equinoctial of the Spring in March." The rule for finding Easter (founded on a decree of the Council of Nicæa) is not quite exactly stated. Instead of "Full Moon" it ought to say, "the 14th day of the Calendar Moon, whether that day be the actual Full Moon or not." In some years (as in 1818 and 1845) the Full Moon and Easter coincide, and this rule then contradicts the Tables.

There is a curious old rough and ready rule for finding Easter contained in a rhyme found in some old Sarum Missals:—

"In Marche after the first C [4 or new moon]
The next prime tell to me.
The thriddle sunday ful I wis Paske dai sikir [surely] hit is."

This seems as correct as it is easy to use, e.g. :—

	New Moon in March.	1st Sunday.	2nd Sunday.	Easter Day.
1786	Monday, 27.	April 2.	April 9.	April 16.
1860	Thursday, 22.	March 25.	April 1.	April 8.
1862	Sunday, 30.	April 6.	April 13.	April 20.
1865	Monday, 27.	April 2.	April 9.	April 16.
1882	Sunday, 19.	March 26.	April 2.	April 9.

Advent Sunday To this rule should be added, "or on that feast itself," as Advent Sunday occurs on November 30th about once in every seven years on the average.

<sup>1</sup> It was the strange fate of this learned man to be so poor that he could not get even pens, ink, and paper, and the necessaries of life: and he was buried by the charity of Dr. Busby in the Rector's vault at St. Giles's in the Fields.

§ The Table of Feasts.

This Table is not in Cosin's Devotions, though the days are all marked in the Calendar of the volume; but it is in MS. in the margin of his Durham Prayer Book. The remarks made by him in the Notes on the Prayer Book published in the fifth volume of his works shew that he had long wished to see a more complete list of the Holydays of the Church printed in the Calendar; and that he thought the abbreviated list of former Prayer Books was the fault of the printer.

But the same list that is now in the Prayer Book is found in an Act of Parliament of 1552-53 [5 and 6 Edw. VI. ch. 3, sec. 1] with the exception of the Conversion of St. Paul, St. Barnabas, and "All Angels" in association with St. Michael. The omission of these was probably accidental.

All the Feasts in this Table have their own Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, and notices of the days will be found in the footnotes appended to these in their proper places.

A TABLE TO FIND EASTER DAY, FROM THE PRESENT TIME TILL THE YEAR 1899 INCLUSIVE, ACCORDING TO THE FOREGOING CALENDAR.

Golden Number.	Day of the Month.	Sunday Letter.

and since (according to the accustomed habit of the Church) the Festival itself begins on the evening previous, the Vigil ends before that Evening Service (if there is more than one) which is observed as the first Vespers of the feast. That, in mediæval times, the whole of the day before the Festival was observed as the Vigil may be seen by the following Rubric for the first Sunday in Advent: "Non dicatur etiam per totum annum Te Deum laudamus in Vigilis, nec in quatuor temporibus, nisi in Vigilia Epiphaniæ quando in Dominica contigerit, et præterquam in quatuor temporibus hebdomadæ Pentecostes." The Te Deum was used at Mattins: the use of it here referred to must therefore be at the Mattins of the Vigil. Some remarks on the observance of Vigils may be found in Tracts for the Times, No. 66, pp. 11, 12.

The following Table will shew in what years festivals which are not moveable ones occur on Sundays:—

Sunday Letter.	Festivals.
G	Annunciation, Nat. St. John B., SS. Simon and Jude.
F	Epiphany, St. Matthias, St. Michael.
E	Purification, St. Peter, St. Bartholomew, St. Matthew, St. Andrew, St. Thomas, Innocents.
D	Conv. St. Paul, St. Luke, All Saints, St. John Evan.
C	St. Mark, St. James, St. Stephen.
B	SS. Philip and James, Christmas.
A	Circumcision, St. Barnabas.

Days of Fasting] These are the forty days of Lent and the Ember Days. Strictly regarded, these days are to be kept by refraining from food during the whole day or up to a certain hour, as noon.

or Abstinence] That is, "or days of Abstinence." These are the Rogation Days and all Fridays except a Friday on which Christmas Day occurs. Strictly regarded, these days are to be kept by abstinence from animal food: eggs, cheese, and butter not being included under that designation.

The accession of the Sovereign was first observed as a "Solemn Day" in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; but no mention of such a day was made in the Prayer Book until late in the last century. The above notice of the day has not therefore the authority of the Sealed Books, nor of the Act of 1752, but is printed in deference to Royal Proclamations dated June 21, 1837, and January 17, 1859.

This Table is an extract from the first three columns of the Calendar during the Paschal limits, or the period during which Easter Day must always fall. It was substituted in 1752 (with the succeeding one) for "a Table to find Easter for ever" which had been printed in previous Prayer Books, but which had been framed on a mistaken supposition respecting the perpetual application of the cycle of Golden Numbers to fixed days of the months. A change in the application of the cycle will be necessary in the year 1900 (provided for by another Table further on), when the above will be superseded for all future calculations.

The Golden Numbers and the Sunday Letters are explained in the notes to the General Tables for finding them.

These Tables are a solution of a difficulty about the determination of Easter Day, which caused considerable trouble to the Church when astronomy, and consequently chronology, was imperfectly understood. The Nicene Council [A.D. 325] endeavoured to settle this difficulty and the Quartodeciman

To make use of the preceding Table, find the Sunday Letter for the Year in the uppermost Line, and the Golden Number, or Prime, in the Column of Golden Numbers, and against the Prime, in the same Line under the Sunday Letter, you have the Day of the Month on which EASTER falleth that year. But Note, that the Name of the Month is set on the Left Hand, or just with the Figure, and followeth not, as in other Tables, by Descent, but Collateral.

controversy [see notes on Easter Day] by the following epistolary decrees:—

1. That the twenty-first day of March is to be taken as the vernal equinox.

2. That the full moon happening upon or next after the twenty-first day of March is to be taken for the full moon of the month Nisan.

3. That the next Lord's Day after that full moon is to be observed as Easter Day.

4. Unless the full moon happens upon a Sunday, when Easter Day is to be the next Sunday.

But to observe these rules it was necessary to ascertain the age of the moon: and although this could be done correctly for a period by means of a cycle of the moon discovered by Meton, an Athenian philosopher, which set forth the change of the moon for nineteen years, and which was supposed to repeat itself ad infinitum, yet a more accurate knowledge of astronomy shewed that this rule was subject to error, and that Easter Day was sometimes too early and sometimes too late to commemorate our Lord's Resurrection with the accuracy which was intended by the Nicene Council. This erroneous system was not corrected, however, until the introduction of the "New Style" by Pope Gregory XIII. in 1582; and the New Style was not introduced into England until 1752, when the Act of Parliament was passed from which the present Calendar is printed.

These Tables for finding Easter, together with those which follow, are part of the Act of Parliament referred to [24 Geo. II. c. 23], and have not received the same authority as the Prayer Book itself. Nor does there seem to be any practical necessity for binding them up with every edition of the Prayer Book as is the present custom, since they are of far too recondite a character to be of any use except to highly scientific students: and for ordinary use the Table of Movable Feasts is amply sufficient.

[N.B.—This Table is only a representative and not a facsimile of the Table in the Act of Parliament. The latter extends from 1752 to 1804. For dates belonging to the twentieth century, see the two Tables in the Appendix to this part of the Calendar.]

THE EPACT.

The difference between the length of the solar year and that of the lunar year is eleven days; the solar year being made up of 365 days, and the lunar year of twelve months or moons, of twenty-nine and a half days each, or 354 days in all. The last day of the lunar year being the last day of the twelfth moon, and the last day of the solar year being the 31st of December, the difference between these constitutes the Epact.<sup>1</sup> In the first year of the present cycle the lunar year and the solar year both commenced on the 1st of January; the Epact for the second year was therefore 11, for the third 22, for the fourth 33, and so forth in a regular succession. The whole months are not reckoned, however, and instead of 33, the Epact is taken as 3, instead of 36 as 6, and so forth.

A cycle of nineteen Epacts is thus formed which always runs parallel to the nineteen Golden Numbers in the following order:—

Golden Numbers	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19
Epacts	0	11	22	3	14	25	6	17	28	9	20	1	12	23	4	15	26	7	18

The Epact is used for calculating the age of the moon on any day in any year. To do this, [1] Add together the day of the month and the Epact; [2] If the month is one later on in the year than March, add also the number of months including March and the one for which the calculation is required. The result will give the moon's age within a fraction of a day. Thus:—

1865. October 10th.
 — 3 The Epact.
 — 13
 8 months from March to October, inclusive.
 Days 21 = approximate age of the moon.

The true age of the moon on October 10, 1865, at noon, being 20 days and 14 hours.

The use of the Epacts (in connection with the Sunday letters), for finding out Easter Day, may be thus illustrated for the year 1887. Find out the moon's age for some day on which Easter can fall, say April 1.

1887. April 1
 — 6 Epact.
 — 2 March and April inclusive.

Days 9 = age of the moon on April 1.

The Paschal Full Moon is the 14th day of the moon's age, and this will be April 6th. [2] Easter Day being the Sunday after the Paschal Full Moon, and B being the Sunday Letter for 1887, the first B after April 6th will shew that April 10th is Easter Day in that year.

NOTE, that in a Bissextile or Leap Year, the Number of Sundays after Epiphany will be the same, as if Easter Day had fallen One Day later than it really does. And for the same reason, One Day must, in every Leap Year, be added to the Day of the Month given by the Table for Septuagesima Sunday: And the like must be done for the First Day of Lent (commonly called Ash Wednesday), unless the Table gives some Day in the Month of March for it; for in that case the Day given by the Table is the right Day.

The order in which this Table follows the others makes its use sufficiently evident. The two first Tables being given for the purpose of finding the date of the Festival by which all the moveable Holydays are regulated, and a third added which sets forth all the moveable Holydays for many years to come, this Table is given as a means of finding out for any year, past or future, the respective dates of these days, according to that of Easter. The Note respecting Leap Year must not be overlooked when this Table is used.

The Golden Numbers in the foregoing Calendar will point out the Days of the Paschal Full Moons till the Year of our Lord 1900; at which Time, in order that the Ecclesiastical Full Moons may fall nearly on the same Days with the real Full Moons, the Golden Numbers must be removed to different Days of the Calendar, as is done in the annexed Table, which contains so much of the Calendar then to be used as is necessary for finding the Paschal Full Moons, and the Feast of Easter, from the Year 1900 to the Year 2199 inclusive. This Table is to be made use of, in all respects, as the first Table before inserted, for finding Easter till the Year 1899.

This Table is simply for revising the first and third columns of that portion of the Calendar which extends over the Paschal limits, i.e. those days in March and April that

Easter can possibly fall on. It will not come into use before the year 1900, and is then applicable for three hundred years.

To find the Dominical or Sunday Letter for any given Year of our Lord, add to the year its fourth part, omitting fractions, and also the number, which in Table I. standeth at the top of the column, wherein the number of hundreds contained in that given year is found: Divide the sum by 7, and if there is no remainder, then A is the Sunday Letter; but if any number remaineth, then the Letter, which standeth under that number at the top of the Table, is the Sunday Letter.

To find the Month and Days of the Month to which the Golden Numbers ought to be prefixed in the Calendar, in any given Year of our Lord consisting of entire hundred years, and in all the intermediate years betwixt that and the next hundredth year following, look in the second column of Table II. for the given year consisting of entire hundreds, and note the number or cipher which stands against it in the third column; then, in Table III. look for the same number in the column under any given Golden Number, which when you have found, guide your eye sideways to the left hand, and in the first column you will find the Month and Day to which that Golden Number ought to be prefixed in the Calendar, during that period of one hundred years.

The letter B prefixed to certain hundredth years in Table II. denotes those years which are still to be accounted Bissextile or Leap Years in the New Calendar; whereas all the other hundredth years are to be accounted only common years.

§ The Dominical or Sunday Letters.

The second column of the Calendar is occupied by the first seven letters of the alphabet, which are repeated throughout the year, beginning with A on the first of January. If the first of January is on a Sunday, A is the Sunday Letter for that year; if on a Saturday, B is the Sunday Letter, and so on in a retrograde order; the letter which indicates the first Sunday in the year indicating it throughout, except in Leap Year. In Leap Year the letter which indicates the first Sunday of the year indicates it up to the end of February only; and from March onward to the end of the year the next letter backward is taken, so that if B is the Sunday Letter for January and February in Leap Year, A is that for the succeeding months; and G for the year following. The days of the year recur on the same days of the week throughout only after the lapse of twenty-eight years. The cycle of Sunday Letters extends therefore over this period, as may be seen in "the Table of Moveable Feasts for the remainder of the nineteenth century." It is sometimes, but erroneously, called the "Solar Cycle," the name having doubtless arisen from "Dies Solis," as the cycle has no relation to the course of the Sun.

§ The Golden Numbers.

This title was given to the Lunar Cycle invented by Meton the Athenian [B.C. 432], which was called after him the Metonic Cycle, and was anciently written in letters of gold, and hence received its name. It extends over nineteen years, which are numbered respectively from 1 to 19. These were formerly marked throughout the year in the first column of the Calendar; but since 1752 they have been inserted only beside those days which are included within the Paschal Full Moon limits, i.e. between March 21st and April 25th. At the end of the cycle the phases of the moon begin to recur upon the same days of the month, in the same succession, with a difference of one hour and a half. This difference so far disturbs the application of the cycle of Golden Numbers that it will have to be readjusted in the year 1900, and one of the foregoing Tables is already provided for the purpose of making the necessary alteration.

The Golden Numbers in the Calendar indicate the day on which the Ecclesiastical Paschal Full Moon occurs; the Sunday Letter next after indicating (as has been already shewn) the Festival of Easter itself.

The three "General Tables" are only of use to those who have to make historical calculations, and all might well be left to the Act of Parliament, and to works on Chronology, but they have been printed here in deference to the custom which has placed them in all our Prayer Books for some time past.

APPENDIX.

The two following Tables are among the alterations of the Prayer Book suggested by the Convocation of Canterbury in 1879. It was proposed that they should be substituted for the "Tables to find Easter," and they are inserted here as a very useful apparatus for ascertaining the dates of Festivals for a long series of years.

Tables shewing the days upon which the Moveable Feasts have been observed or are to be observed from the Year 1500 to the Year 2000.

INTRODUCTION TO THE CALENDAR.

THE Ecclesiastical Calendar comprises two things: first, a table of the order of days in the year; and, secondly, a catalogue of the saints commemorated in the Church. To this, in the Book of Common Prayer, there is also annexed a table of the daily lessons throughout the year.

Calendars are known to have been in use at a very early date in the Church. One of the Church of Rome was printed by Bouchier in his Commentary on the Paschal Cycle [Antwerp, 1634], which was formed about the middle of the fourth century, or perhaps as early as A.D. 336; and another is given by Mabillon in his Analecta, which was drawn up for the Church of Carthage A.D. 483, and which is preserved in the Abbey of St. Germaine de Près, at Paris. Many others of early times are extant, and a number are printed by Martene in the sixth volume of his Collection of Ancient Writers.

The origin of Christian Calendars is clearly coeval with the commemoration of martyrs, which began at least as early as the martyrdom of Polycarp, A.D. 168. [EUSEB. Ecc. Hist. iv. 15.] The names of these, and their acts, were carefully recorded by the Church in Martyrologies; and Diptychs—tablets of wood or ivory—were inscribed with their names, to be read at the time when the memorial of the departed was made at the celebration of the Holy Eucharist. From one or both of these, lists of names would naturally be transcribed for use at other times, and as a memorial in the hands of private Christians, the names being placed against the day on which the martyrs suffered, or that (generally the same) on which they were annually commemorated. To these two columns of the days of the year and the names of the martyrs were afterwards added two others of Golden Numbers and Sunday Letters, the use of which has been explained in the notes to the Tables.

Several very ancient English Calendars exist in our public libraries; but the earliest known is one printed by Martene [Vet. Scrip. vi. 635], under the title “Calendarium Floriacense,” and attributed by him (with apparently good reason) to the Venerable Bede, with whose works it was found in a very old MS. at Fleury. Bede died at Jarrow, A.D. 735, so that this Calendar must date from the earlier half of the eighth century. There is a general agreement between this Calendar and the Martyrology of Bede which seems to shew that it is rightly attributed to him, and we may therefore venture to take it as the earliest extant Calendar of the Church of England, dating it from the latest year of Bede’s life. It is printed month by month in the first column of the Comparative View of the Calendar in the following pages.

In the course of ages the number of names recorded in the Martyrologies of the Church increased to a great multitude, as may be seen in the vast folio Acta Sanctorum, printed for every day of the year by the Bollandists, which was commenced more than two centuries ago, and is not yet nearly complete, though it extends to sixty large volumes. The Calendars of the Church also began to be crowded, although there was always a local character about them which did not belong to the Martyrologies. In the twelfth century the original method of recording the names of saints (which was by the Bishop of each Diocese in some cases, and in others by a Diocesan Council) was superseded by a formal rite of Canonization, which was performed only by the Popes; and from this time the names inserted in the Calendar ceased to be those of Martyrs or Confessors only.

The Calendar of the Church of England was always local in its character, and one of the eleventh or twelfth century, which is preserved in the Durham Chapter Library, seems to differ but little from another of the fifteenth century, which is contained in an ancient Missal of that Church, or from that which has been reprinted from a Missal of 1514, belonging to Bishop Cosin’s Library, in the following pages. Comparatively few names were added to the English Calendars during the mediæval period, though many were added to the Roman.

Some changes were made in the Calendar by the “Abrogation of certain Holydays” in the reign of Henry VIII., great inconvenience being found to arise from the number of days which were observed with a cessation from labour; and the two days dedicated to St. Thomas of Canterbury being especially obnoxious to the King were altogether expunged, though by very questionable authority.

When the English Prayer Book was set forth in 1549, it was thought expedient to insert only the chief of the names which had been contained in the Calendar of the Salisbury Use. Two of these were taken away (though the erasure of St. Barnabas was probably a printer’s error), and four others added in 1552. In the following year, 1553, the old Salisbury Calendar was reprinted (with three or four omissions) in the Primer of Edward VI., and in the “Private Prayers” of Queen Elizabeth’s reign, printed in 1584; but not in any Book of Common Prayer. In 1559 the Calendar of 1552 was reprinted with one omission. These successive changes (as far as is necessary to illustrate the transition from the ancient to the modern Calendar) are represented in the following Table:—

<sup>1</sup> In 1552 an Act of Parliament was passed “for the keeping Holydays and Fasting-days” (5 and 6 Edw. VI. c. 3). The preamble runs: “Forasmuch as at all times men be not so mindful to laud and praise God, so ready to resort and hear God’s Holy Word, and to come to the Holy Communion and other laudable rites which are to be observed in every congregation as their bounden duty doth require, therefore, to call men to remembrance of their duty, and to help their infirmity, it hath been wholesomely provided that there should be some certain times and days appointed, wherein Christians should cease from all other kind of labours, and should apply themselves only and wholly unto the aforesaid holy works properly pertaining unto true religion; . . . therefore as these works are most commonly, and also may well be called God’s service, so the times appointed specially for the same are called Holydays.”

The first clause then enacts “that all the days hereafter mentioned shall be kept and commanded to be kept Holydays, and none other; that is to say, all Sundays in the year, the days of the feast of the Circumcision of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the Epiphany, of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, of Saint Matthias the Apostle, of Saint Mark the Evangelist, of Saint Philip and Jacob the Apostles, of the Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the Nativity of Saint John the Baptist” [with all other Holydays as in the bracketed list above, until Innocents]. “Monday and Tuesday in Easter Week, and Monday and Tuesday in Whitsun Week, and that none other day shall be kept and commanded to be kept Holyday, or to abstain from lawful bodily labour.”

“II. And it is also enacted by the authority aforesaid that every even or day next going before any of the aforesaid days, or the feasts of the Nativity of our Lord, of Easter, of the Ascension of our Lord, Pentecost, and the Purification and the Annunciation of the aforesaid Blessed Virgin, of All Saints, and of all the said feasts of the Apostles (other than of Saint John the Evangelist, and Philip and Jacob) shall be fasted, and commanded to be kept and observed, and that none other even or day shall be commanded to be fasted.”

The fifth clause provides for the observance of Saturday as a fasted even when the feast falls on a Monday; and the seventh for the observance of the usual solemnities on St. George’s Feast.

It seems now to have been felt by persons in authority that greater reverence ought to be shewn for the names of those who had glorified God in a special manner by their deaths or their lives, and in the Latin Prayer Book of 1560 nearly every day of the year was marked by the name of a saint, the list being compiled from the old Salisbury Calendar and the Roman. This appears to have led to the appointment of a Commission, consisting of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, Dr. Bill, and Walter Haddon, the compiler of the Latin Calendar just referred to. This Commission met in 1561, and, with a few changes in the Tables and Rules, made also a revision of the list of Saints.

In making this revision the compilers evidently took the same course which had been taken with respect to the Prayer Book itself, going back to the Sarum Missal and selecting from the old Calendar such names of Festivals as they thought proper to be inserted in the new one.

As regards the days dedicated to our Lord, the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the Holy Apostles, little change was made. The only Festival of our Lord which they omitted was "The Feast of the Holy Saviour" [May 24th], a day which does not always occur in Sarum Calendars. Among the Festivals of the Blessed Virgin only that of the Assumption [August 15th] was left out. Of the days on which the Apostles and other Saints of the New Testament were commemorated before the Reformation there were omitted, St. Paul [June 29th], the Commemoration of St. Paul [June 30th], St. Peter's Chair [February 22nd], the Invention of St. Stephen [August 3rd], and St. Michael of the Mount [October 16th].

The Minor Holydays were, however, greatly diminished in number, for out of one hundred and fifty-one which occur in the Sarum Calendars of Henry VIII.'s reign only forty-eight were restored by the revisers of 1561. On what principle they went can only be judged by the result, which the following Table of our existing Calendar (which contains fifty-one Minor Holydays), will shew. It seems a singular omission that the names of two of our greatest national saints, St. Aidan and St. Cuthbert, should have been overlooked both in 1561 and in 1661. The omission of St. Patrick is almost as extraordinary; and it might have been expected that St. Thomas of Canterbury's name would have been restored when the bitterness of the Tudor times had passed away. The latter two names were always inserted in ordinary Almanacs which were not bound up with the Prayer Book, and are also found in some Calendars of Queen Elizabeth's time.

At the revision of 1661 the only change made was the insertion of the names of St. Alban, the Venerable Bede, and St. Enochus. These three names, together with the particular designations by which most of the Saints in the Calendar are now distinguished, are to be found in the Calendar prefixed to Bishop Cosin's Devotions; and as the first published edition of that work was printed in 1627, we may conclude that they were taken thence into the Book of Common Prayer at the Revision of 1661, as some of the Tables and Rules were.

In Calendars of the Church of England not printed in the Prayer Book, but published by the Stationers' Company under the authority of the Archbishop of Canterbury,<sup>1</sup> the following names are also to be found: St. Patrick, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and All Souls. King Charles the First was likewise included among the Martyrs in all English Calendars until the special Form of Prayer for the 30th of January was given up in 1659.

It will be seen that the whole number of individual Saints commemorated is seventy-three. Of these, twenty-one are especially connected with our Blessed Lord; twenty are Martyrs in the age of persecutions; twenty-one are specially connected with our own Church; and eleven are either great and learned defenders of the Faith, like St. Hilary and St. Augustine, or Saints of France, whose names were probably retained as a memorial of the ancient close connection between the Churches of France and England.

The Calendar itself was not in any way altered by the Act of Parliament of 1752 for the alteration of the style, the present tables of the months being a fairly exact reprint of those in the Sealed Books. They are here given from the Act, but are inserted after the Tables and Rules as in the Sealed Books. This order was evidently adopted with the object of making a definite Festival and Ferial division of this part of the Prayer Book, instead of confusing the two divisions together as in the Act; and while the improved text of the latter has been adopted, it has been thought better to take the more convenient and more ecclesiastical arrangement (in this respect) of the former.

In the "Comparative View" of each of the months, all the names in the Calendar of Bede, the Salisbury Use of 1514, and the Modern Roman, are represented; but a selection only has been made from the Oriental Calendar, as the great majority of Eastern Saints are unknown to English readers, and their names would convey no information whatever. Those selected are chosen for the object of illustrating the points of similarity between the Calendars of East and West; and they are taken from the Byzantine Calendar printed in NEALE'S Introduction to the History of the Holy Eastern Church, vol. ii. p. 768. Some remarkable coincidences may be observed between it and the Calendar of Bede, which help to confirm the theory of a direct connection between England and the Oriental Church.

In the Notes on the "Minor Holydays" great care has been taken to make them as complete as possible without occupying too much space, and the reader's attention has been drawn to history rather than legend, except where the latter is necessary in order to understand the special popularity or iconography of any saint. The authority for dedications of churches has been The Calendar of the Anglican Church Illustrated, J. H. PARKER, 1851, and nothing more than some approximation to the true numbers has been attempted. Those given will afford some idea as to the honour paid in England to different saints, especially in the middle ages, dedications since 1851 not being included. Eight Calendars have been selected for comparison: Sarum, 1514, 1521, 1556; York and Hereford, Surtees Soc. edd.; Aberdeen, 1510; Roman, 1582, collated with a MS. circ. 1400; Paris, 1543, printed by Granelas; Monastic, 1738; Austin Canons, 1546.

1] CIRCUMCISION OF OUR LORD.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Represented—By a circle, or a dove holding a ring in its mouth.

6] EPIPHANY OF OUR LORD.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Represented—By a star of Bethlehem; by the three kings, or by three crowns.

8] LUCIAN, PRIEST AND MARTYR.—This St. Lucian "of Beauvais" is not to be confounded with St. Lucian "of Antioch," priest and martyr, born, like the Roman satirist of the same name, at Samosata, a forerunner of St. Jerome in Biblical criticism, and occurring in the Roman Martyrology on January 7th. The Sarum Calendar is the only mediæval English one which contains either of them; there we find St. Lucian and his companions on January 8th, as in the Parisian. The Roman Calendar contains neither Lucian. The Roman Martyrology says that at Beauvais, in Gaul, the 8th is the day of the holy martyrs Lucian, a presbyter, Maximian, and Julian, of whom the two last were slain with the sword of the persecutors; but blessed Lucian, who had come into Gaul with St. Denys, not fearing openly to confess Christ, after much slaughter was beheaded. This was under Julian, the persecuting Roman governor in Gaul, about A.D. 290. Little else is known of St. Lucian. It is said that he, St. Denys, and St. Quintin were three Roman missionaries who went to Beauvais, Paris, and Amiens respectively. [Fabian, January 20th.] For the legend which would take St. Lucian back to sub-apostolic times, see St. Denys, October 9th. In a calendar of the ninth century he is called "Bishop," in accordance with which is the present tradition at Beauvais. Vincent of Beauvais, however [A.D. 1244], speaks of him as priest and martyr. His appearance in the Sarum Calendar has, perhaps, arisen out of the connection between the ancient British and Gallican Churches.

Calendars—Sarum, Paris.

Churches dedicated in his name—None.

Represented—Consecrating on his own breast; lying on potsherds in prison; carrying his head in his hand. [See October 9th.]

13] HILARY, BISHOP AND CONFESSOR.—Another French Saint, styled "of Poitiers," and not to be confounded with Hilary "of Arles," who has been thought by some to have drawn up the "Athanasian" Creed, and who died A.D. 449. He occurs in Sarum, York, and Hereford, as well as in the Roman Martyrology, on January 13th, but in the Roman Calendar on the 14th, having been transferred on account of the Octave of the Epiphany. Quignonez places him on the 31st; and some calendars, probably in reference to translations of his relics, on June 26th and November 1st. The particulars of his life are mostly to be gathered from his own writings. He was born at Poitiers, of heathen parents, and was converted and baptized in full age; after which, about A.D. 353, he was chosen Bishop of his native city. From the time of his ordination he lived apart from his wife. After the Arian Council at Milan [A.D. 355], which had condemned St. Athanasius, he wrote to the Emperor Constantius to remonstrate with him for his encouragement of heresy, but without success. Most of the Gallican Bishops, however, remained faithful. The rest held an Arian synod in Languedoc, where St. Hilary opposed them, refuting the Arian heresy. Thereupon the Emperor banished him to Phrygia in A.D. 356, and cruelly persecuted the Gallican clergy, but in A.D. 357 the Bishops wrote to assure St. Hilary of their fidelity. He also received a letter from his daughter Apra, whose touching story is related by Bishop Taylor in his Holy Dying. In A.D. 358 he wrote his work On Synods, in which he commends the orthodoxy of the British as well as of the Gallican Bishops. Then also he wrote On the Trinity, against the Arians, as well as some hymns. In A.D. 360 he was allowed to return to his diocese, where he was received by the faithful with great joy. After a journey into Italy, where he held a public disputation concerning the Faith, to which he had been invited by the Emperor Valentinian, he returned to Poitiers, and there died [A.D. 368]. The British Bishops had been, in common with their Gallic neighbours, his devoted admirers, and had looked to him for guidance against the Arians. The Sarum Breviary says he so abhorred the enemies of the Catholic Faith that he would not even salute them, but he did, in fact, speak gently of them, hoping to win them back.

"Hilary term" in the law courts used to begin on the 13th, after the Christmas vacation, but it now extends from January 11th to January 31st. Dean Boys quaintly remarks that "howsoever in the court of conscience there be some pleading every day, yet the godly make it Hilary term all the year round."

Calendars—All except Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—Three.

Represented—On an island among serpents; with three books, or a triangle, pen, staff, or trumpet; with a child, sometimes in a cradle, at his feet.

18] PRISCA, ROMAN VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—Prisca was a young Roman lady who suffered either under Claudius I. in the first century, or, more probably, under Claudius II. about A.D. 270. Her "Acts" are not genuine, but there seems to be ground for believing that she suffered cruel tortures rather than sacrifice to idols, and that she was finally beheaded. It is said that an eagle defended her body from dogs until the Christians came and buried it. Some true tale of Christian faith and fortitude no doubt underlies the uncertain accounts that have come down to us respecting those details of her sufferings which are commemorated in works of art. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. li. 9-12. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—None.

Represented—With an eagle near her dead body; with one or more lions near her, a sword, or a palm, in her hand; an idol falling.

20] FABIAN, BISHOP OF ROME AND MARTYR.—In most calendars St. Fabian occurs together with St. Sebastian the martyr, but they have no connection with each other beyond having the same "birthday." Eusebius says that Fabian was made Bishop of Rome in consequence of a dove alighting on his head while the election was going on; and that although he was then comparatively little known, the supposed sign from heaven determined the unanimous choice of both clergy and people [A.D. 236]. The incident of the dove is related of St. Gregory the Great and of other saints, and is perhaps a symbolical expression of belief in the presence of the Holy Ghost. Having governed the Church fourteen years, during which he sent St. Denys, Lucian, and Quintin into Gaul [see January 8th], St. Fabian suffered martyrdom under Decius A.D. 250, and according to an ancient Latin register was buried "in Callisti," i.e. in the Catacomb of Callistus, where his name is still to be seen with those of other early Bishops of Rome, thus: ΦΑΒΙΑΝΟΣ ΕΠΙ ΜΡ, Fabian, Bishop, Martyr. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Heb. xi. 33-39. St. Luke vi. 17-23.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—One (with St. Sebastian).

Represented—As a pope, with a dove, sword, or club; kneeling at a block.

21] AGNES, ROMAN VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—All calendars have also "S. Agnetis ii." on the 28th, which, though called "Octa. Agnetis" in the Austin Canons' Calendar, is not, according to Baronius, an ordinary octave, but rather relates to an apparition of St. Agnes to her parents. She was born of Christian parents, and while yet at school was seen by a Roman youth, who sought her love. His pleadings and his offers of costly presents were alike unavailing, and he fell sick. The physicians finding that his disappointment was the cause of his sickness, the case was reported to Symphronius the Prefect. He having tried in vain to induce Agnes to listen to the suit of the young man, said she should be a Vestal virgin, and had her dragged to the altar of Vesta, where instead of throwing on incense she made the sign of the Cross. Then she was exposed to public infamy, which, however, she escaped, only to be first put on a fire, and then beheaded. Such are the main points in her story as commonly accepted in very early times. St. Ambrose says that she preferred chastity to life; St. Jerome that she overcame both the cruelty of the tyrant and the tenderness of her age, and crowned the glory of chastity with that of martyrdom; St. Augustine that her name means chaste in Greek and lamb in Latin. As in the case of St. Prisca and of many others, it is impossible to know how much of truth underlies the mass of legend that has grown around her story. It is said that while her parents were praying at her tomb, probably in the Catacombs, she appeared to them with a choir of holy virgins to comfort them, hence her "second feast" referred to above. A church in Rome, built over her supposed resting-place, has acquired a kind of distinction from the Pope's going there each year on St. Agnes' Day to bless the lambs whose fleeces are to be made into the palls sent to Archbishops, one of which appears in the arms of the See of Canterbury lying upon the archi-episcopal cross. St. Agnes is mentioned in the Nobis quoque in the Canon of the Mass. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. li. 1-8. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Three (one with St. Anne).

Represented—With a lamb or an angel by her; with a lamb on a book; in a fire; angels covering her with their hair, or a garment; a sword in her hand or in her throat; a dagger; a palm; a short cross; a dove bringing a ring to her as a "bride of Christ."

22] VINCENT, SPANISH DEACON AND MARTYR.—St. Vincent was born at Saragossa, trained in the faith by Valerius, Bishop of that see, and by him, too, ordained deacon. The Bishop, having an impediment in his speech, gave himself to prayer and meditation, while Vincent under his direction undertook public teaching. Datian, governor under Diocletian and Maximian, was a fierce persecutor, and only too zealous in carrying out the imperial edict for the "Diocletian persecution." Valerius and Vincent being brought before Datian in chains, he first tried the usual way of persuasion in order to induce them to sacrifice to the gods. They both stood firm; and Valerius being unable to deliver a public address, Vincent made a noble profession of the faith in the name of both. Valerius was banished, but Vincent was put to the most horrible tortures. He was stretched on a rack, torn with hooks, beaten, put on an iron frame with sharp bars and a fire under, and laid on broken pots in a dungeon, while his feet were made fast in the stocks. Here he sang praises to God, and his jailer was converted. Datian chafed with rage, but now ordered him to be put to bed, either to recruit his strength for more tortures or to prevent his dying a martyr. But God took him. He departed in peace

January 22, A. D. 304. The rage of the persecutor followed his dead body, which though thrown into the sea was at last obtained and privately buried by the Christians. When the persecutions were over, it was removed and laid with great honour under the altar of the principal church in Valencia.

The "Acts" of St. Vincent are at least older than the time of St. Augustine, when they were read in the church of Hippo. His "passion" forms the subject of a hymn by Prudentius, and of sermons, etc., by St. Augustine, St. Leo, and other early fathers. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. xiv. 20, and xv. 4-6. St. John xii. 24-26.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Four.

Represented—As a deacon holding an iron hook, or a boat, or a palm; his bowels torn by a hook; burnt on a gridiron; angels breaking his chains; a wolf; a crow or raven, sometimes on a millstone.

25] CONVERSION OF ST. PAUL.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Seventy-two to St. Paul alone; with St. Peter, two hundred and thirty; with the Blessed Virgin, one.

Represented—St. Paul is represented with a sword and book, or with the three springs supposed to have gushed out at three places where his head fell upon the earth after decapitation.

30] KING CHARLES'S MARTYRDOM.—See "State Services" in Appendix.

Dedications of Churches—Six.

2] PURIFICATION OF MARY THE BLESSED VIRGIN.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Represented—At her purification, with a pair of turtle-doves. See March 25th.

3] BLAISUS, BISHOP AND MARTYR.—St. Blaise was Bishop of Sebaste in Armenia, and suffered martyrdom in the persecution of Licinius [A.D. 316], but we know scarcely anything about his life or death, his "Acts" being of late date and small authority. Some say he suffered in the Diocletian persecution. The Roman Martyrology states that he was scourged, hanged on a post or tree, and torn with iron combs, then cast into a most foul prison, then into a lake, and finally beheaded in company with two boys and seven women. One of the alleged instruments of his martyrdom has led to his being esteemed as the patron of wool-combers, and as such he is still remembered at Norwich, at Bradford in Yorkshire, and other places where hand-combing is or has been practised. The Council of Oxford [A.D. 1222] prohibited servile work on this day. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Heb. v. 1-6. St. Matt. x. 26-32.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Three, and one with St. Mary.

Represented—As a Bishop, with crosier and book, with wool-comb, or torch or taper; a pig's head near him, alluding to a legend of his restoring a dead pig; birds bringing him food.

5] AGATHA, SICILIAN VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—The story of St. Agatha or Agace is very like that of St. Agnes [January 21st]. She was a native of either Palermo or Catania, of a noble family, and consecrated to God from her earliest years. In the Decian persecution [A.D. 251], Quintianus the consul availed himself of the imperial edict to seize both her person and her estate. Being in the hands of her persecutors, she prayed, saying, "O Jesu Christ, Lord of all. Thou seest my heart, Thou knowest all my desire, do Thou alone possess all that I am. I am Thy sheep, make me worthy to overcome the Evil One." After the most infamous assaults on her chastity, and the usual horrible tortures, she sweetly slept in Jesus. Her name occurs in the Nobis quoque. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. li. 1-8. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Three.

Represented—Holding a breast cut off, in pincers; a knife at her breast; breasts in a dish, or on a book; an eye in pincers; a knife, or pincers, or hook in her hand; on a funeral pile, or with a chafing-dish of burning coals near her.

14] ST. VALENTINE, BISHOP AND MARTYR.—We find a St. Valentine on this day in the Sarum, and hence in the Aberdeen and Reformed English Calendars, styled bishop and martyr; in those of York, Hereford, and the Austin Canons, martyr only; in the Roman and Monastic, presbyter and martyr. The Roman Martyrology mentions two Valentines on February 14th—a presbyter of Rome and a bishop of Teramo, both martyrs. The former assisted other martyrs, and was condemned by Claudius II. to be beaten with clubs and beheaded about A.D. 270. His name is celebrated in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, and he is doubtless the person meant in all the calendars, "Bishop" in Sarum, etc., being a clerical error. The name was so common in the later days of the empire that there were at least eight martyrs of the same name, as well as three found in the Catacombs with the palm branch and bottle of blood. The sending of "Valentines" is supposed to be a survival of a heathen custom observed on or about this day. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxi. 8-11. St. Matt. xvi. 24-28.]

Represented—With halbert, sword, or axc; with a stone in his hand.

The Numbers here prefixed to the several Days between the twenty-first day of March and the eighteenth day of April, both inclusive, denote the Days upon which these full Moons do fall which happen upon or next after the twenty-first day of March, in those years of which they are respectively the Golden Numbers; And the Sunday Letter next following any such full Moon points out Easter Day for that year. All which holds until the Year of our Lord 1899 inclusive, after which Year the places of these Golden Numbers will be to be changed, as is hereafter expressed.

1] DAVID, ARCHBISHOP OF MENEVIA.—St. Dewi or David, patron of Wales, is styled Archbishop of Menevia from legendary accounts of him which were current in the earlier middle ages. The Welsh church of his time had no Archbishops. Very little is really known about his life, and his time has been put in the days of King Arthur. He appears to have taken part in the Synod of Llanddewi, and to have established a see at Mynyw or Menevia, now St. David's, which in its remote, barren, and rocky seclusion bears witness to the fact that the Celtic Bishops thought more of the eremitical than of the missionary life. He is said to have had, when dying, a vision of Christ, and to have expired with the prayer, "Lord, take me up after Thee!" The true date of his death is probably A.D. 601. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlii. 17, 20, 21-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Matt. xxv. 14-23.]

Calendars—Sarum, Hereford, Aberdeen. In York and Paris his place is occupied by St. Albinnus or Aubin.

Dedications of Churches—Nine, and one with St. Mary. In Wales about thirty-three, chiefly in the diocese of St. David's.

Represented—Preaching on a hill, a dove on his shoulder.

2] CEDDE OR CHAD, BISHOP OF LICHFIELD.—St. Ceadda or Chad was one of four brothers—Cedd, Bishop of the East Saxons, himself, and two priests. They were probably Anglians by birth, and were certainly trained under St. Aidan at Lindisfarne, in the Celtic traditions. Chad became Abbot of Lastingham in Yorkshire; and during the long absence of Wilfrid, when he went into France to be consecrated for the Bishopric of Northumbria, was elected Bishop in his place, and consecrated by Wini, Bishop of Winchester, and two British, probably Cornish, Bishops, about A.D. 665 or 666. As Bishop of York he was most exemplary. Wilfrid returning and finding the see occupied, retired and acted as Bishop in Mercia and in Kent. When Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of all England, visited Northumbria, he found that for three years Chad had been ruling the Church of York in a way which Bede calls "sublime," but from his strictly Roman point of view he noted flaws in Chad's position. He had been "irregularly" consecrated to a see which was not vacant. Chad at once retired in the most meek and humble manner to his seclusion at Lastingham. But, a Bishop being wanted for Mercia, Theodore asked King Oswy to give them Chad, supplied what was supposed to be wanting in his consecration, and sent him to resume episcopal work as fifth Bishop of Lichfield. Here he fulfilled the duties of his office no less faithfully than he had done in Northumbria. Bede tells us much of that profound religious awe which in Chad, as in Bede himself and other early Teutonic Christians, was so characteristic of their peculiar type of piety. He had ever been meek, humble, and obedient; he lived also in constant dread of the Divine judgements, though at the same time in "continual love and desire of the heavenly rewards." When his last illness came he foresaw his death seven days beforehand, and sent for the brethren who were in the minster to exhort them and ask their prayers. Having received his last Communion, he died March 2, A.D. 672, and was buried at Lichfield. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlv. 1-5. St. Mark xiii. 33-37.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford, Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—Thirty-one, all in the Midlands.

Represented—As a Bishop; sometimes with a church in his hand.

7] PERPETUA, MAURITIAN MARTYR.—St. Perpetua and St. Felicitas, the first a well-born lady, the second a slave, and both married, suffered with three men in the persecution by Severus, and, according to St. Prosper Aquitanus, at Carthage. The mention of Mauritania in the Roman Martyrology and in our Calendar is in that case inaccurate, unless the martyrs had come from that district. Their most valuable and genuine "Acts" are quoted by Tertullian and St. Augustine, and were read in the churches of Africa. If compared with the relations concerning some other early martyrs which may be seen at length in detailed "Lives," they strike the reader as consisting mainly of natural and unadorned statements. St. Perpetua had an infant at her breast when she and her companions were apprehended, and had to bear the further trial of repeated piteous appeals from her aged father that she should sacrifice for the prosperity of the emperors and escape martyrdom. She and Felicitas, the latter being pregnant, were tossed by a wild cow, and then Perpetua was slowly butchered by a timid and unskillful executioner [March 7, A.D. 203]. Their names occur in a Roman calendar of A.D. 354, and in the Nobis quoque of the Liturgy. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 1 Cor. vii. 25-34. St. Matt. xxv. 1-13.]

Calendars—All except York and Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—None.

Represented—With the wild cow.

12] GREGORY THE GREAT, BISHOP OF ROME AND CONFESSOR.—St. Gregory, surnamed the Great, was born at Rome, of noble, wealthy, and religious parents, about A.D. 540. His early training is spoken of by John the Deacon, his biographer, as having been that of a saint among saints; and that he had a liberal as well as a religious education appears from the statement of Gregory of Tours, his contemporary, that in grammar, rhetoric, and logic he was considered second to none in Rome, while, as befitted his high rank, he studied both civil and canon law. When a little over thirty years of age he was appointed praetor of the city, and paced its streets in silk attire, sparkling gems, and the purple-striped trabea; he was of ordinary stature and good figure, his face being "most becomingly prolonged, with a certain rotundity." But his heart was in the religious life, and after his father's death he founded and endowed six monasteries in Sicily, and one, dedicated to St. Andrew, on the site of his own house at Rome, where he himself became a monk at the age of thirty-five. Soon, however, he was obliged to reside at Constantinople as representative of the Pope, being first ordained one of the seven deacons of Rome. After some years he was able to return to his monastery, where he threw himself with great zeal into the religious life, corrected many real or supposed abuses, wrote theological treatises, and carried on correspondence with all parts of the Christian world. The well-known story of the Yorkshire boys in the slave-market belongs to this period, and he actually set off on a mission to England, but was recalled by the Pope, and chosen to be abbot of his own monastery. In A.D. 590 he was elected Pope, and during his Pontificate he did much towards consolidating the patriarchal supremacy of Rome over all the Latin Churches; carrying on the traditions which were ultimately made the basis of a still wider claim. In July A.D. 596 he resumed his plans for the conversion of England, sending St. Augustine [see May 26th] with forty companions, to whom, under God, we owe the conversion of our fathers in the southern parts of our land. During the rest of his life Gregory gave himself much to study, and revised the Divine Offices, paying much attention to their music, whence we have the terms Gregorian sacramentary and chants. He also wrote many of the Church's hymns. In these latter days of his life he suffered much from gout, but retained his remarkable energy and mental power, personally superintending choir-practices in his school, writing important letters, etc., even during his last illness, from which he was released March 12, A.D. 604. His body was buried in St. Peter's Church, where it still rests under St. Andrew's altar. He is esteemed as one of the Four Doctors of the Western Church. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlvii. 8-11. St. Matt. xxiv. 42-47.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Twenty-five, and one with St. Mary.

Represented—As a Pope, with double or triple crown and book; a dove at his ear; an eagle before him; chained to a rock; Christ appearing to him as he says mass; Christ and the Blessed Virgin appearing to him.

18] EDWARD, KING OF THE WEST SAXONS.—This Edward was chosen, being only thirteen years old, to succeed his father Edgar A.D. 975, before which time the West Saxon kingdom had grown into that of the English generally. He appears to have been a good young king, and beloved by his people. After a four years' reign he was cruelly murdered, probably by the contrivance of his stepmother Ælfthryth [Elfrida], whose son Ethelred was then elected king at the age of ten. The English Chronicles under the year 978 lament the crime without naming the criminal. "Here was Eadweard king slain at eventide at Corfes-gate, on xv. kal. Apr., and men buried him at Warham without any kingly worship. Never was done worse deed among Englishmen than this since first they sought Britain. Men murdered him, but God honoured him. He was in life an earthly king, he is now after death a heavenly saint," etc. Florence of Worcester charges Elfrida with the crime, and the story gathers fresh details in the hands of each succeeding chronicler. Among other things we are told that Elfrida beat the child Ethelred with wax candles because he wept for his brother, wherefore he hated the sight of wax candles for the rest of his life. The popular legend of Edward's being stabbed in the back is not found in the earliest accounts. The Sarum Breviary dwells much on his goodness, and he was popularly considered to have died a martyr. It may be noted that he is so called in the Sarum, but not in the Reformed Calendar. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxi. 8-11. St. Luke xiv. 26-33.]

Calendars—Sarum only.

Dedications of Churches—Twenty-one, either to him or to St. Edward the Confessor; that at Corfe Castle certainly to the "Martyr."

Represented—As a king, with dagger, falcon, or cup.

21] BENEDICT, ABBOT.—St. Benedict, who restored monastic discipline in the West, and founded the great Benedictine Order, was born of a good family at Norcia, in Umbria, about A. D. 480. He was educated in the great public schools in Rome, but was so shocked at the licentiousness of his fellow-students that he secretly betook himself to a cavern at Subiaco at the age of fifteen, and lived there as a hermit for three years, being supplied with food by Romanus, a monk. When distracted by temptations he used to roll himself in the briars, to which Bishop Taylor refers in his Holy Living. Some of the shepherds of the wild district round about were induced by him to become monks, and he was himself persuaded to become Abbot of Vicobarro, near Subiaco, where, as a reformer of abuses, he became so unpopular with some of the inmates that they tried to poison him. After praying to God to forgive them, he returned to his cave, where he had many disciples. He organized twelve religious houses, each with a superior and twelve monks, a number having reference to Christ and His twelve disciples. These were united in the Monastery of St. Scholastica, supposed to be the most ancient of the order. Benedict, having still many enemies, and being a man of peace, retired to Mount Cassino, where idolatrous rites still prevailed, and where stood an old temple of Apollo and a grove. He overthrew the temple and cut down the grove, founded two oratories on the site, and brought many to the faith of Christ. This was the beginning of the famous Monastery of Monte Cassino, where the present monastic system was organized, and whence proceeded the Benedictine Rule. Towards the close of Benedict's life his sister Scholastica came to reside near him, with a small community of religious women, and he used to visit her once a year. He died of a fever caught in visiting the poor. Feeling that his end was drawing near, he ordered his grave to be dug, and, supported by the brethren, contemplated it in silence for some time. Being then carried into the chapel, he there expired on the eve of Passion Sunday, March 21, A. D. 543. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxix. 5-9. St. Luke xi. 33-36.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Sixteen, unless any be dedicated to St. Benedict Biscop.

Represented—As a Benedictine monk; with devils; rolling in thorns; thorns near him; in a cave, food let down to him by a monk; a cup on a book; a cup breaking and spilling liquor; a cup with serpents on a book; a raven at his feet, or with a loaf in its bill; a stick in his hand, the raven on it; a sprinkler; a pitcher; a ball of fire; a book with the beginning of his Rule, AVSCVLTA FILII VERBA MAGISTRI.

25] ANNUNCIATION OF BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—About two thousand one hundred and twenty, and one hundred and two with other saints.

Represented—At her annunciation, praying or reading, the angel appearing to her with Ave Maria, etc., on a scroll, and between or near them a lily in a pot, generally with three flowers, to remind us that before, in, and after her motherhood she remained a pure virgin. This is her chief emblem. Often she is represented as a queen, with the Infant Christ in her arms; sometimes as "Our Lady of Pity," a sorrowing mother, with the dead Christ on her knees; sometimes as the "Mater Dolorosa," weeping, and with a sword passing through her heart [St. Luke ii. 35]. She is generally represented with a blue outer robe over a red under garment. The conventional fleur-de-lys is sacred to her.

3] RICHARD, BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.—Richard de la Wyeh, of the wyche or salt spring, is said to have been born at Droitwich, where his parents had an estate to which he was heir. Early in his life, and in the former half of the thirteenth century, he joined the new Order of the Dominicans, which was then attracting the most ardent and energetic minds in Western Europe. Having been educated at Oxford, Paris, and Bologna, he became public reader in Canon Law at the last place, and on his return Chancellor first of Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury [St. Edmund], and then of the University of Oxford. The see of Chichester falling vacant, the canons, in order to curry favour with Henry III., as was said, elected a chaplain of his, Robert Passelewe. But the Pope set aside this election ostensibly on account of Passelewe's want of learning, and himself consecrated Richard to the see during the Council of Lyons in 1245. Henry seized the revenues, and for two years the Bishop had to depend on other sources of maintenance; but at last the King restored them, having been threatened with excommunication by the Pope. When Richard was established in his see he amply justified the papal choice, affording in his life and conversation a pattern of episcopal virtues. In preaching, the strong point of the Dominican Order, and in visiting, he was indefatigable. He died April 3, 1253, at Dover, where he had rested while preaching the Crusade along the coast. His canonization was procured by the Dominicans in 1261, and in 1276 his relics were translated from their first resting-place in Chichester Cathedral to the shrine in which they remained until the Reformation. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccelus. xliv. 17, 20-23, and xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. John xv. 1-7.]

Calendars—Sarum, Hereford.

Dedications of Churches—One only, Aberford, in Yorkshire.

Represented—With a chalice at his feet, or kneeling with chalice before him, alluding to a legend that he fell with the chalice without spilling its contents.

4] ST. AMBROSE, BISHOP OF MILAN.—He was born about A. D. 340, in Gaul, where his father held the office of Prætorian Prefect. It is said that while he was a child a swarm of bees flew about his cradle, some settling on his mouth, which, as in the case of Plato, was thought to be a sign of future eloquence. He was educated at Rome, where he excelled in Greek and Civil Law, and was appointed Governor of Liguria. He also practised as an advocate; and displayed so much wisdom and judgement in this capacity during a contest between the orthodox and the Arians, relative to an appointment to the see of Milan, that although not yet baptized, he was strongly pressed and urged by general acclamation to take the office himself. He reluctantly consented, and, after baptism, was ordained and consecrated, December 7, A. D. 374. Having now embraced Christianity with his whole heart, and made over to the Church of Milan all his estates, he thoroughly devoted himself to his new duties. He had constant difficulties from the prevalence of the Arian and Apollinarian heresies, and wrote many theological treatises, both controversial and devotional. He is spoken of by St. Augustine in his Confessions with the most affectionate reverence, as having been greatly instrumental in his conversion. For the tradition about the Te Deum, see under Aug. 28. The saying, "When I am at Rome, I do as they do at Rome," is attributed to St. Ambrose, who thus replied to St. Augustine about the different modes of observing Saturday at Rome and Milan, it being then customary to fast on Saturday at the former but not at the latter place. On all matters of principle, however, he was immovable. When the Arian Empress Justina sent to ask him for the use of a church outside the city for herself and the Arians [A. D. 385], Ambrose replied that he could never give up the temple of God. After some days' struggle he carried his point, and the following year the same contention was renewed, with the same result. It is well known too how he excommunicated the Emperor Theodosius for a cruel abuse of power, and shut the Church of Milan against him, exhorting him with such effect that he became a true penitent. Like St. Gregory, he composed some beautiful hymns, and, like him also, paid great attention to church music and to the construction of the Liturgy and Offices. Hence the "Ambrosian rite," not yet wholly abolished at Milan, has a very distinct character of its own. He is reckoned as one of the four doctors of the Western Church. A few days before his last sickness he dictated an exposition of the 43rd [our 41th] Psalm, which he had to leave unfinished, as it has come down to us, nothing being said on the last two verses. After a long illness he died about midnight before Easter Eve, April 4, A. D. 397, aged about fifty-seven years, and his body still rests at Milan under the high altar of the church dedicated to him. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccelus. xvii. 8-11. St. Matt. xxiv. 42-47.]

Calendars—All. In the Roman and Monastic Calendars, however, as in the Eastern Church, his feast is on December 7th, the day of his ordination.

Dedications of Churches—One, Ombersley, in Worcestershire.

Represented—With scourge, or beehive; repelling the Emperor.

19] ALPHEGE, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—Elfheah, or Alphege, was a West Saxon of noble birth, who early in life left his paternal estate and his widowed mother to become a monk. Like many persons of high lineage, he was soon placed at the head of a monastery, and it is supposed that he was Abbot of Bath. By special favour of Dunstan he was made Bishop of Winchester A. D. 984, being only just thirty years old; and after presiding over that see for twenty-two years, he was translated to Canterbury. Soon after this he was taken captive by the Danes, and at first promised them a ransom, being kept in their ships in the Thames, near Greenwich, until it should be paid. On the Saturday after Easter, April 19, A. D. 1012, the Danes were holding drunken festival, and called on Alphege for the ransom; but he refused to have anything given for his life, and told them as he had sinned in promising, they might deal with him as they would. So they dragged him to their husting or assembly. Earl Thurkill, a Christian Dane, offered gold and silver, all that he had, save only his ship, to save the good man's life. But they pelted the Archbishop with stones, logs of wood, and the bones left from their feast, until one Thrum, a recent convert, clave his head with his axe out of sheer pity. And, says the chronicle, "his holy blood on the earth fell, his holy soul he to God's kingdom sent." The body, probably through Thurkill's influence, was allowed to be taken to London with all honour; it was buried in St. Paul's Minster, and afterwards translated to Canterbury by King Canute. Lanfranc disputed the claim made for Alphege to the title of martyr, but Anselm defended it on the ground that he died for Christian justice and charity, refusing to sanction the plundering of his people to save his own life. In the Sarum Calendar he is called martyr, but not in ours, as in the case of St. Edward, March 18th. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Heb. xiii. 9-16. St. John xv. 1-7.]

Calendars—Sarum, Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—Five, one being the parish church of Greenwich, on the supposed site of the murder; another is in London.

Represented—With stones in his chasuble: a battle-axe in his hand.

23] ST. GEORGE, MARTYR.—His name is in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, with Collects for his day. But his "Acts" are certainly apocryphal, as is the story of "St. George and the Dragon," contained in the Golden Legend, accepted by the uncritical clerks of the middle ages, and inserted in Breviaries, from which it was removed by Clement VII., 1523-34, when St. George was simply acknowledged as a martyr, reigning with Christ. Indeed, a MS. Roman Breviary of much earlier date contains a single lection, apparently from a martyrology, in which it is said that if his "Acts" be apocryphal, yet he was an illustrious martyr. It is impossible here even to refer to the various versions of his story, which may be seen in Baring-Gould's Life. Suffice it to say that the St. George who was recognized by St. Gregory was probably a martyr mentioned by Eusebius, without giving his name, as having pulled down and torn into shreds a decree of Diocletian against the Church in Nicomedia; and that he is by no means to be identified, as he is by Gibbon and Dean Stanley, with the Arian prelate George of Cappadocia, who died some forty-two years after a church had been dedicated to "St. George the Martyr," by Constantine the Great, in Constantinople. The Sarum Breviary of 1556 says he was of Cappadocia (as was generally supposed), and that he was martyred under Datian, but does not mention the Dragon story, on which St. George's great popularity in the middle ages mainly depended, though it doubtless arose out of some allegorical or symbolical representation. He was also honoured as having appeared against the Saracens at the head of a numerous army, carrying a red cross banner, whence he was regarded as the champion of Christendom, Our Lady's Knight, and the Patron of England. He is sometimes called "St. George of Lydda," from the place of his burial, according to some accounts. The Greek Church honours him with the titles of "Great Martyr" and "Trophy-bearer." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: St. James i. 2-12. St. John xv. 1-7.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—One hundred and sixty-two, and four with other saints.

Represented—As an armed knight, standing or on horseback, fighting a dragon with a spear; a cross on his armour and shield.

25] ST. MARK, EVANGELIST AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Thirteen.

Represented—As Evangelist, with a winged lion; as a Martyr, strangled with cords.

1] SS. PHILIP AND JAMES, APOSTLES AND MARTYRS.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Four ancient ones with the joint dedication; one to St. Philip and All Saints; about three hundred and fifty to one or other St. James, most of these, however, are probably to St. James the Greater; not one is known to be to St. James the Less alone.

Represented—St. Philip, holding a basket with or without bread visible; two or three loaves; a tall cross. St. James the Less, with a fuller's club.

3] INVENTION OF THE CROSS.—This day, sometimes called St. Helen's or Ellinmas Day, commemorates the supposed finding of the Cross on which our Lord suffered by the Empress Helena, about A. D. 326. But the date and details are involved in great obscurity. St. Cyril of Jerusalem speaks of the true wood being seen in his time [circa 350]. In 351 he speaks of its having been found in Jerusalem in the time of Constantine the Great. St. Ambrose [A. D. 395] relates its discovery by Helena, the mother of Constantine, while digging on Golgotha, and says that it was known from the thieves' crosses by the title. St. Chrysostom about the same time gives similar testimony, but does not mention Helena. Rufinus, however, also about the same time, says that Helena had to dig among the ruins of a temple of Venus, and that the title being separate, the true cross was identified by the miraculous healing of a sick person who was laid on it. As we get later the story runs into more and more minuteness of detail, and at last develops into a romance. Eusebius mentions Helena's journey into Palestine, but says not a word about the cross. According, however, to the generally received account, the Empress lodged the main part of the cross in the church which she and her son built in Jerusalem, sending other portions to Constantinople and Rome. To Rome also she sent the title, where part of it is still preserved. About twenty-five nails are shewn in different places. The Eastern commemoration is that of "the appearance of the Sign of the Cross" [the Labarum] to Constantine. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Gal. v. 10-12, and vi. 12-14. St. John iii. 1-15.] [See September 14th.]

Dedications of Churches—Possibly one, Dalling, in Norfolk.

6] ST. JOHN EVANGELIST ANTE PORT. LAT.—This festival commemorates the miraculous deliverance of St. John when, having been apprehended at Ephesus, he was carried to Rome and placed in a caldron of boiling oil before the Latin Gate after previous scourging. His remaining safe and sound was attributed to magic. Tertullian is the first to mention this miracle, and it rests mainly on his authority. St. John was afterwards banished to Patmos, where he had the visions recorded in the Apocalypse. The legend of the poisoned cup, of which he is said to have drunk unhurt, rests on no good authority, and has probably arisen out of representations of the Apostle holding a symbolical cup of snuffing, in allusion to our Lord's words, "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of?" etc. In St. Augustine's time there was a tradition that St. John was not dead, but sleeping alive in his grave at Ephesus, and would so remain till Christ came. [See St. John xxi. 23.] There has been a church at Rome on the spot where the miracle of the boiling oil is believed to have occurred ever since the time of the first Christian emperors. The day is kept as a great festival at St. John's College, Cambridge, and at St. John's, Hurstpierpoint. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. xv. 1-6. St. John xxi. 19-24.]

19] DUNSTAN, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—"Of whom," says Bishop Godwyn, "I know not how to write, that which is delivered of him is so infinite." He was born in Somerset, of noble parents, and was educated in Glastonbury Abbey. Thence, through the introduction of his uncle Athelm, Archbishop of Canterbury, he passed into the household of King Athelstan, and thence into that of Alphege the Bald, Bishop of Winchester, who persuaded him during an illness to take monastic vows. He accordingly became a monk at Glastonbury, the great Benedictine house in which he had been educated, and which now obtained with him all his paternal estate. Soon he became Abbot, and through the reigns of Edmund and Edred was a leading man in Church and State. At the coronation of Edwy in 955 he boldly rebuked the King for alleged profligacy; and partly this, partly his favouring the cause of the monks against the secular clergy, led to his being banished in 956, when he retired to the Abbey of St. Peter in Ghent, while in England monks were persecuted and abbeys devastated in all directions. In 957

Edgar was chosen by the Mercians as their Under-king, and Dunstan was recalled. Edwy dying in 958, Edgar held the sceptre of the whole kingdom, and about that time Dunstan was made Bishop of Worcester and of London together, from which sees he was translated to the primacy in 960. As Archbishop, his great object was to promote monasticism, and to compel the married secular clergy to put away their wives and live as celibates, believing as he did that thus he should best raise their spiritual tone and general character, which no doubt were often lamentably low. In short, he was an earnest and severereformer according to the light that he had. He went about preaching and instructing the people in the churches of his diocese, and sometimes retired to Glastonbury for rest and spiritual recreation. He had early become an able craftsman in various ecclesiastical arts as well as a skilful musician. When Edgar died in 975 he favoured the election of Edward ["St. Edward," March 18th], and during the reign of the child-king Ethelred, which followed the murder of Edward, he was as Jehoiada the high priest who watched over King Joash. He was indeed, though not strictly speaking a saint, yet a truly great and good man; and his name, though known to too many only in connection with a grotesque legend, ought rather to be had in remembrance as that of one of our noblest English prelates. Having preached thrice at Canterbury on Ascension Day, A. D. 988, he died on the Saturday following, and was buried in his own Cathedral. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. xlv. 17-20, 21-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Matt. xxv. 14-23. During Easter-tide, St. John xv. 1-7.]

26] AUGUSTINE, FIRST ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—Nothing is known of him until we find him "Præpositus" of St. Gregory's Monastery of St. Andrew in Rome [March 12th], when in A. D. 596 he was selected by Gregory to conduct the mission to England. The way had been prepared by the marriage of Ethelbert King of Kent with the Frankish princess Bertha, and by the supremacy of Kent among English kingdoms at that time. At the bidding of Gregory, who had long watched for and now saw his opportunity, Augustine set off from Rome with several others of his house, obedient and hopeful. But having travelled as far as into Provence, they became faint-hearted, and would have returned. So, staying probably in the Monastery of Lerins, they sent back Augustine to ask that they might be excused from so perilous, toilsome, and uncertain an enterprise. Gregory, however, well knew how best to "uphold the feeble knees;" and on July 23, 596, sent Augustine back to them with a kind and encouraging letter, writing also letters on their behalf to bishops and kings whom they might see on their way. They wintered in Gaul, and, soon after Easter in 597, crossed the Channel and landed at Ebbsfleet, in Kent. Augustine and Ethelbert, after interchanging messages, had a meeting in the open air. The King and his thanes took their seats, and saw some forty men approaching, with a silver cross borne before them, and a painted and gilt representation of our Lord, such as might have been seen before in the household of Bertha. They also chanted litanies as they walked, which, though in an unknown tongue, may well have had a striking effect. The King bade the strangers sit down, and a conference was carried on through a Gallic interpreter. He then not only allowed them freely to preach among his people, but invited them to follow him to Canterbury, where he assigned to them a dwelling. There they taught both by precept and by example: they sang the Psalms, prayed, celebrated, preached, baptized, and in the course of the summer Ethelbert himself believed and was baptized. His example told upon his subjects, and though none were compelled, many became Christians. The next step for Augustine was to obtain episcopal consecration, and for this purpose he went to Arles, and was consecrated by the Archbishop Virgilius and other Frankish prelates, November 16, A. D. 597. On his return he found a multitude of new converts; and, being established as Bishop, he received from the King a grant of his own palace and a general licence to restore paganized British churches. The following year he sent to have the mission recruited from Rome, and addressed a number of questions to Gregory; but for some reason Gregory did not find the men or answer the questions till June, A. D. 601, when he sent four men, full answers to the questions, sacred vessels, church furniture, and vestments, including the pall for the new Archbishop. By Gregory's advice Augustine now sought to form relations with the British Bishops yet remaining in the West, and they were induced to meet him at a trysting-tree near the Severn, called in Bede's time "Augustine's Oak." The Paschal question, the mode of baptism, and the form of the tonsure were discussed at great length, and a second conference was held, but both failed utterly in their object. Augustine returned in bitter disappointment and, in seeming despair of working with the British Bishops, established the Roman liturgy with comparatively little alteration, though Gregory had advised him to be eclectic as to liturgical practices and forms. Mellitus and Justus, two of the four missionaries who had last come from Rome, were his suffragans at London and Rochester. The date of his death is somewhat uncertain; it was in 604 or 605. Shortly before he died he consecrated his fellow-labourer Laurence to be his successor, an unusual step, for which he doubtless had good reason. His body received temporary burial, and eight years later was deposited in the north transept of the now destroyed Abbey Church of SS. Peter and Paul, which he had founded, which is generally known by his name, and where now "St. Augustine's College" trains missionaries, who carry to heathen lands that same Gospel which Augustine brought to us. 27] VENERABLE BEDE, PRIEST.—In the earliest known Calendars of the Church of England Bede is commemorated on May 26th, with St. Augustine. In a calendar in the Chapter Library at Durham, belonging to the early part of the twelfth century, the memorial of May 26th is, "Sei Augustini Archiepi & Bede cō." So also in a Saxon codex [circa 1031] in the British Museum [Vitell. E. xviii.] and in an Exeter calendar, temp. Hen. II. [Harl. MS. 843.] In the Kal. Salamense, written about 1000, there is "vij. kal. Junii, Depositio Augustini Confessoris, Bedæ Presbyteri." Mabillon notices at the end of an ancient hymn, "vj. id. Maii natalis S'ci Bedæ Presbyteri," which he supposes to be the day of his translation. In a Durham calendar of the fourteenth century [Harl. MS. 1804], May 27th, is entered "Comm. Bede." Although not in the ordinary Salisbury Calendars, the Saint is commemorated on this day in the "Enchiridion ad Usum Sarum, 1530."

We know very little of the quiet and uneventful life of the Venerable Bæda or Bede except from the brief autobiography at the end of his Ecclesiastical History. He was born A.D. 672 or 673 on the domain given by Egfrith for Wearmouth Abbey [begun A.D. 674]. At seven years old he was put under the care of Benedict Biscop, the Abbot of Wearmouth. He goes on to say: "I have passed all my life since then in the same monastery, and have given my whole attention to studying of the Scriptures, and in the intervals of my observance of the monastic discipline and of the daily occupation of chanting in the Church, I have always found interest in either learning, teaching, or writing." He was taught by Trumberht, and probably also by John the Archchanter, whom Benedict brought from Rome about A.D. 677. "In my 19th year," he says, "I was ordained deacon, and priest in my 30th, both at the hands of the most reverend Bishop John ['St. John of Beverley'], and at the bidding of Abbot Ceolfrith. From the time that I was ordained priest till now, when I am 58 years old, I have occupied myself with writing commentaries on the Holy Scriptures to suit my own needs and those of my brethren, gathered from the works of the venerable fathers, and either briefly given or as a paraphrastic interpretation of the sense." But he also wrote treatises on astronomy, meteorology, physics, music, philosophy, grammar, rhetoric, arithmetic, and medicine, as well as the Lives of St. Cuthbert and others. His most important work, however, was his Ecclesiastical History. Nearly all that we really know of the century and a half of English history which dates from the landing of St. Augustine, we know from him. He was the first English scholar, theologian, and historian, and, moreover, a statesman, as a letter written by him to Archbishop, then Bishop, Egbert clearly proves. At some time after the foundation of Jarrow in A.D. 682 he went thither, and there he died on the Eve of the Ascension, May 25, A.D. 735, and was buried in the Abbey Church of SS. Peter and Paul. A letter from one Cuthbert to Cuthwin, a brother monk, gives an affecting account, which cannot be abridged, and is too long to be inserted here, of the last hours of their old master. [See Sunday after Ascension.] Alcuin relates a beautiful anecdote of him in a letter to the monks of Jarrow. "There can be no doubt," he says, "that the holy places are frequented by the visits of angels. It is related that Bæda, our master and your blessed patron, used to say, 'I well know that angels visit the congregations of brethren at the canonical hours. What if they should not find me there among my brethren? Will they not say, Where is Bæda? Why comes he not with his brethren to the prescribed prayers?'" His bones were said to have been removed to Durham Cathedral in A.D. 1020; and a plain tomb in the Gahilee, where the shrine formerly stood, bears the well-known leonine verse, "Hæc sunt in fossa Bædæ Venerabilis ossa," in modern letters. There are three different legends professing to account for the title of "Venerable," which seems to have been assigned to Bæda about the ninth century.

30] This day is often mentioned as "St. Andrew's Day in May," and "The Day of the Translation of St. Andrew;" and is so called in several places in the churchwardens' account-book of St. Andrew Hubbard, Eastcheap, London, which were written about A.D. 1465.

1] NICOMEDE, ROMAN PRIEST [?] AND MARTYR.—His name is found in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory on September 15th, and in the most ancient Calendars. But no reliance can be placed on the contradictory accounts of the particulars of his martyrdom. According to one of these, found only in the fabulous "Acts" of SS. Nereus and Achilles, he was flogged to death with leaded whips A.D. 81, his body being thrown into the Tiber, rescued by his deacon, and buried in the catacomb that bears his name. According to another account, equally untrustworthy, he was drawn over iron spikes, flung into a furnace, and flogged as above described, about A.D. 285. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xiv. 20, and xv. 3-6. St. Matt. xvi. 24-28. During Easter-tide, St. John xv. 1-7.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris, and Austin Canons. On September 15th, the supposed day of his martyrdom, Roman, Monastic, and Hereford.

Dedications of Churches—None.

Represented—With spiked club or leaded whip.

5] BONIFACE, BISHOP OF MENTZ AND MARTYR.—Winfrith, afterwards named Boniface, was born about A.D. 680, at Crediton, in Devonshire. He early shewed great promise, and was intended by his parents for a secular career. But a visit of some monks to his father's house set him longing to embrace the religious life; and his father, though much opposed to such a step, sent him at seven years old to a monastic school at Exeter, whence he proceeded to Nntescelle, in Hampshire. Here he made such progress that he was appointed to teach others, and was ordained priest at thirty years of age. The adventurous mission of the Englishman Willibrord among the heathen Frisians was then much talked of in English monasteries, and Winfrith longed to join the noble band beyond the sea. In A.D. 716 he crossed over for that purpose, but he met with such opposition that he was obliged to return, whereupon he was made Abbot of Nntescelle much against his will. In two years' time he obtained a release, and in A.D. 719 went to Rome, whence he was sent by Gregory II. into Germany, where he had great success, as also in Friesland, Hesse, and Saxony, after which the Pope consecrated him missionary Bishop. Returning to his mission, he had to encounter not only utter Paganism, but a wild mixture of Paganism and Christianity. There was a venerable oak at Fritzlär, hallowed for ages to Thor the Thunderer; and Boniface, attended by his clergy, went forth and felled this tree, building out of its wood a chapel to St. Peter. He also founded many churches and a monastery, visited Rome twice again, and procured many missionaries from England. Having long laboured with great zeal and success, and obtained the titles of Archbishop and Primate of all Germany, he was at last attacked by a party of heathen ruffians, who fell upon him and several of his converts. The Archbishop, seeing that his hour was come, took a book of the Gospels and made it a pillow for his head, stretching forth his neck to receive the blow of one who beheaded him with a sword [June 5, A.D. 755]. Several of his letters and sermons are extant. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 1 Cor. iv. 9-14. St. Matt. x. 23-26. During Easter-tide, St. John xv. 5-7.]

Calendars—All except Roman, Paris, and Hereford.

Dedications of Churches—Two.

Represented—With book pierced with sword; a club; a scourge.

11] ST. BARNABAS, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Six.

Represented—With St. Matthew's Gospel in his hand, as it was a tradition (most improbable) that he carried about with him one written by the Evangelist's own hand; with a staff, or a stone, or stones.

17] ST. ALBAN, MARTYR.—During the persecution of Diocletian and Maximian, which began A.D. 303, according to Gildas and Bæda, though the English Chronicles date the martyrdom in A.D. 283, Alban, a Romano-British Pagan, sheltered a Christian cleric fleeing from persecution, and by him was instructed in the faith, converted, and doubtless baptized. After some days soldiers were sent to arrest the fugitive. Alban put on his teacher's cloak (amphibalus) and gave himself up in his place. The magistrate, indignant at his having shielded a "sacrilegious rebel," gave him the usual choice between sacrificing to idols and speedy death. Confessing himself a Christian, and refusing to sacrifice, he was beheaded outside the gate of the great Roman city Verulamium, on the rising ground where the Abbey and English town of St. Alban's afterwards arose. Many legendary additions grew up around this simple story; and the priest, whose name does not occur in the earliest accounts, nor in the latest Sarum Breviaries, was afterwards called "Amphibalus" from his cloak, figuring under that name in some martyrologies and in the York Breviary, and having a shrine at St. Alban's. The shrines of both St. Alban and St. Amphibalus were recovered in the year 1872; each being reconstructed out of fragments that had been used as walling material. St. Alban is honoured as the protomartyr of Britain, and in the later middle ages he was hailed in a hymn as "prothomartyr Anglorum, miles Regis Angelorum." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Wisd. iv. 7-11, 13-15. St. Matt. xiv. 24-28.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford, and Aberdeen on the 22nd, 17th in ours being a mistake.

Dedications of Churches—Eight.

Represented—As a layman, with a tall cross; with a sword.

20] TRANSLATION OF EDWARD, KING OF THE WEST SAXONS.—It is mentioned above [March 18th] that men buried St. Edward at Wareham without any kingly worship. Under the year 980 the Chronicles say, "Here in this year S. Dunstanus and Ælfere ealdorman fetched the holy king S. Eadward's body at Werham, and carried it with mickle worship to Scaftesbyrig" [Shaftesbury]. Florence of Worcester [anno 979] says that the body was uncorrupt. This translation is commemorated on the 20th of June. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxi. 8-11. St. Luke xiv. 26-33.]

Dedications of Churches—See March 18th.

24] NATIVITY OF ST. JOHN BAPTIST.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Three hundred and ninety.

Represented—With raiment of camel's hair, carrying the Agnus Dei standing on a book, or painted on a round disk, or with the Lamb near him.

29] ST. PETER, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Eight hundred and thirty, two hundred and thirty with St. Paul, and ten with some other saint.

Represented—With a key or keys, rarely one, generally two, sometimes three; sometimes as a Pope; sometimes with an inverted cross.

2] VISITATION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.—This festival originated in France in the middle of the thirteenth century, and commemorates the visit of the Blessed Virgin to her cousin Elisabeth, as recorded in the Gospel for the day. The Council of Basle decided that it should be celebrated throughout the Western Church in 1441, but it was added to the York Calendar by the Convocation of that province as late as 1526, and then placed at April 2nd. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Cant. ii. 1-4 and 10-14. St. Luke i. 39 and foll.]

Calendars—All. [York, April 2nd. Paris, June 27th.]

Represented—The two meeting and about to kiss or embrace one another. Elisabeth older than Mary.

4] TRANSLATION OF ST. MARTIN, BISHOP AND CONFESSOR.—St. Brice, the successor of St. Martin, built a chapel over his tomb within the present walls of Tours, but at that time five hundred and thirty paces from the city. St. Perpetuus, the sixth Bishop, about A.D. 470 founded a great basilica and monastery on the spot, and on July 4th translated St. Martin's remains to a sumptuous tomb behind the high altar. It is said that the body had been carried into Burgundy, as in England St. Cuthbert's body was borne from place to place, for fear of the Danes. The care of the tomb was committed to a fraternity which developed into the famous Chapter of St. Martin, of which the King of France was ex officio head under the title of Abbot. The Huguenots violated the tomb and burned the relics, with the exception of some portions which were recovered. The Sarum Calendar names also his consecration or "ordination" on this day, which is referred to in one of the lectures as "natalis episcopatus ejus." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccus. xlv. 17, 20, 21-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Luke xii. 32-34.]

Calendars—All except Roman and Monastic.

Dedications of Churches—See November 11th.

15] ST. SWITHUN, BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, TRANSLATION.—St. Swithun or Swithin was born in the kingdom of the West Saxons, and educated in the monastery attached to Winchester Cathedral, of which he became prior. Early in the ninth century he was ordained priest, and in A.D. 838 was consecrated to the See of Winchester. He devoted himself with great zeal to the work of his diocese, and was celebrated for his humility, austerity, and works of charity. He took great part in inducing King Ethelwulf to assign to the Church the perpetual donation of tithes. He died July 2, A.D. 862, and was buried at his own request on the north side of the church, in a mean place, where men might walk over him, and the rain water his grave. In A.D. 971 his bones were translated to a rich shrine within the church; but it is said that a most violent rain fell on the appointed day, and continued for thirty-nine days, whence St. Swithin, like St. Gervais in France [June 19th] and other saints in Belgium and other parts of Europe whose days fall in June and July, was supposed in some way to influence the weather. The Roman Martyrology mentions St. Swithin only on July 2nd, the day of his death; the Sarum Calendar only on the 15th, in honour of his translation. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Heb. vii. 23-27. St. Luke xii. 35-40.]

Calendar—Sarum only.

Dedications of Churches—Fifty-one, and one with St. Nicolas.

Represented—As a Bishop.

20] ST. MARGARET, VIRGIN AND MARTYR, ANTIOCH.—According to the ancient martyrologies, she suffered at Antioch in Pisidia in the last general persecution; but, like St. George, she is one of those saints who have been universally honoured, while of their history we know very little. It is certain that from early ages her feast has been observed with singular honour alike in East and West, and this must point to some true story now lost. Her "Acts" were generally accepted in later times, but are manifestly fabulous. The Greeks commemorate her on the 17th under the name of Marina. The legend of her being swallowed by a dragon and bursting through his body may have arisen out of allusions to her victory over Satan, or to symbolical representations of the same, possibly helped by pagan representations of Aphrodite rising out of a fish, mistaken in later times for the Christian sain. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccus. li. 9-12. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Two hundred and thirty-eight; six with other Saints. Some may be dedicated to St. Margaret of Scotland.

Represented—Crowned, piercing a dragon with a long cross or spear; with dragon and lamb; angel protecting her from dragon; with dragon chained; bursting through body of dragon, end of her robe in its mouth; trampling on dragon; grasping its head.

22] ST. MARY MAGDALEN.—The Western Church has generally assumed that Mary Magdalen, Mary of Bethany, and "the woman that was a sinner" were one and the same person, while the Eastern Church has held the three to be distinct. In the Roman Breviary the Office distinctly refers to all three. Sarum commemorates the penitent sinner as Mary Magdalen, using the text, "Mary hath chosen that good part," etc., perhaps only by way of adaptation. The Eastern view may have led to the removal of the Collect, with the Sarum Epistle and Gospel, from the First Book of Edward VI., and to the festival's ceasing to be one of the higher class. The Collect was, "Mercyfull father, geue vs grace, that we neuer presume to synne thorough the example of any creature, but if it shall chaunce vs at any tyme to offende thy diuyn maicstie: that then we may truly repent, and lament the same, after the example of Mary Magdalen, and by a lyuely faithe obtaine remission of all our synnes, throughe the onely merites of thy soune our Saniour Christ." In a Litany of Dunkeld [A.D. 873-893] "St. Mary Magdalen" comes at the head of the virgins and widows, and St. Martha next, as if they were the sisters of Bethany. In the Greek Church St. Mary Magdalen is esteemed as the equal of the Apostles, as having been the first witness of the Resurrection. She is supposed to have retired to Ephesus with the Blessed Virgin and St. John, and to have been buried there. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Prov. xxxi. 10-31. St. Luke vii. 36-50.]

Calendars—All except Paris.

Dedications of Churches—About one hundred and fifty.

Represented—With box of ointment; with boat and open book; with a skull; young, and with long hair.

25] ST. JAMES, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—About three hundred and fifty.

Represented—In a rough pilgrim's tunic, with staff, shell, hat, baldric, and wallet, sometimes with shells on his tunic, baldric, and wallet, in allusion to the pilgrimages made to his shrine at Compostella.

26] ST. ANNE, MOTHER OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.—Holy Scripture gives us no information respecting the parentage of the Blessed Virgin, except that she was "of the house and lineage of David." The first mention of St. Anne is in the Apocryphal Gospel of St. James, which states that St. Anne and St. Joachim were both well stricken in years, with no hope of children, when Mary was given to them. Procopius of Casarea, who lived in the early part of the sixth century, mentions a church dedicated to St. Anne, "whom some believe to be the mother of the Virgin, and the grandmother of Christ," at Constantinople. The Greeks have three days of St. Anne in the year: On September 4th, with Joachim; December 9th, her conception; July 26th, her death. The first mention of her "cultus" in the West is in a letter of Urban VI. to the English prelates in 1378; the Feast of St. Joachim was appointed by Julius II. [1503-13], but expunged by Pius V. [1566-72]. The Feast of St. Joseph was appointed by Sixtus IV. [1471-84], but does not appear in English Calendars. It is quite reasonable to suppose that the names at least of Joachim and Anne were traditionally known to the writer of the Apocryphal Gospel. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Prov. xxxi. 10-31. St. Matt. i. 1-16.]

Calendars—All except Roman of 1582, added about 1584, but found in some earlier Roman Calendars. [Paris on 28th.]

Dedications of Churches—Twenty-three, one with St. Agnes.

Represented—Teaching the Blessed Virgin to read.

1] LAMMAS DAY [ST. PETER AD VINCUA].—The English name of this day is undoubtedly a later form of "Loaf-mass," from its being a feast of thanksgiving for the firstfruits of the harvest, when bread made of the new wheat was offered at the Mass. The blessing of new fruits took place in both Eastern and Western Churches on the 1st or the 6th of August, and probably took the place of a heathen custom of a similar kind. Such explanations as Vincula-mass, Lamb-mass, etc., cannot stand against the form of the word in the oldest English, viz. Hláf-masse, i.e. "Loaf-mass," especially when it is taken in connection with the blessing of firstfruits. The old saying "At latter Lammas," i.e. never, is supposed to refer to the absence of an octave as compared with St. Peter's Day [June 29th]. The Western Church has long kept this day also in memory of the dedication of the famous Church of St. Peter ad Vincula in Rome, in which one of the chains which fell off St. Peter is said to be kept. St. Peter in Carcere is the dedication of another church in Rome over the Mamertine prison, where St. Peter is believed to have been confined.

Calendars—All have St. Peter ad Vincula with the Seven Maccabees, whose bodies are supposed to rest under the high altar of the Church of St. Peter ad Vincula in Rome.

Dedications of Churches—One, within the precincts of the Tower of London, to St. Peter ad Vincula.

6] TRANSFIGURATION OF OUR LORD.—This festival has long been kept in East and West, though not always on this day, in memory of the Transfiguration, and in the Greek Church it is called the Feast of Tabor, while our forefathers called it "The Overforming of our Lord on the Mount Tabor." Pope Calixtus III. issued a bull for its general observance on this day [A.D. 1457]. This festival has never ranked with the others of our Lord, being of much later institution, and its theological significance being less evident than that of the rest. The Transfiguration was, however, a type and earnest of our Lord's second coming in glory, and of the future glory of the risen bodies of His members. In the Sarum Missal the mass of the day is preceded by the blessing of the new grapes. There was a custom for the deacon to press a small quantity of fresh grape-juice into the chalice for Mass, probably a survival of an offering corresponding with that of Lammas Day [August 1st]. The Emperors of Constantinople, the Patriarch, and the members of the Court used to have a ceremonial presentation of grapes to one another in a vineyard. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 2 St. Pet. i. 16-19. St. Matt. xvii. 1-9.]

Calendars—All except Hereford. [Cologne, ninth century, July 27th.]

7] NAME OF JESUS.—This festival does not appear to have been generally observed until the beginning of the sixteenth century. In 1498 it was kept with the Transfiguration on August 6th. Portions of St. Bernard's well-known hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria," were sung in the Sarum Offices and Mass. The special point which this day sets before us is, the peculiar sanctity of that Name at which every knee should bow, a sanctity in some respects analogous to that of the Sacred Name by which God was known to His people of old, but representing to us the love of the Saviour rather than the self-existence of the Godhead. On the "Seven Names," see December 17th. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Acts iv. 8-12. St. Matt. i. 20-23.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Aberdeen.

Represented—By the monogram IHS or IHS, Latin forms of IHC, the beginning of the old Greek IHCOTC.

10] ST. LAURENCE, ARCHDEACON OF ROME AND MARTYR.—Nothing is certainly known of St. Laurence's early years, but the Spaniards claim him as their countryman. He was ordained deacon by Sixtus or Nystus II., and soon afterwards appointed chief of the seven deacons who served in the Roman Church. The Christians were at this time undergoing the eighth general persecution, that of Valerian, and Sixtus was led to martyrdom A.D. 258. Laurence, his deacon, made a most affecting appeal to be allowed to suffer with his "father," whom he had so often assisted in offering the Holy Sacrifice. This did not come to pass; but within a week he drew on himself the fury of his persecutors by distributing the property of the Church among the poor Christians, and when asked to deliver it up, shewing Christ's poor instead as the true treasure. He was then laid on an iron frame like a gridiron, and slowly burned to death over live coals. He suffered with marvellous fortitude, praying for the conversion of Rome. Prudentius in a beautiful hymn ascribes the conversion of that city to the martyr's intercession. He is named in the earliest known Roman Calendar, A.D. 354, and in the Communicantes in the Canon of the Mass. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 2 Cor. ix. 6-10. St. John xii. 24-26.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—About two hundred and fifty, and three with other Saints.

Represented—As a deacon, with gridiron, and with thrible, church and book, long cross-staff, or money-bag.

24] ST. BARTHOLOMEW, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—About one hundred and fifty.

Represented—With a flaying-knife in his hand; sometimes a human skin on his arm.

28] ST. AUGUSTINE, BISHOP OF HIPPO, CONFESSOR AND DOCTOR.—This great confessor and doctor of the Western Church was born at Tagaste, in Numidia, November 13, A.D. 354. His father was one Patricius, a pagan, and his mother the holy Christian Monica, commemorated as a saint in the Latin Church on May 4th. Augustine appears to have had a liberal education, but to have been early corrupted by theatres and other immoral influences in Carthage, whither he had been sent to learn rhetoric, etc. Here, at the age of eighteen, he became the father of a son named Adeodatus. Cicero's writings excited the philosophic spirit in his mind, and he at first thought he saw in Manichæism a solution of all difficulties. But it could afford him no lasting satisfaction. His discovery of the superficiality of Faustus the Manichæan prevented him from committing himself to Manichæism, and while in an unsettled state, he wrote, at the age of twenty-six, on "The Beautiful and the Fitting." In A.D. 383 he went to Rome to teach rhetoric, and there lived much among the Manichæes, whose heresy he at length quite abandoned, and joined the Academicians, only to find in the conflict of philosophies as much bewilderment as ever, and, on the whole, inclining to general scepticism. In A.D. 384 he removed to Milan, where he gradually fell under the influence of St. Ambrose, as also of his mother, who now came to live with him, with his friend Alypius, his brother Navigius, and his son Adeodatus. Her influence told for good on the young men in many ways. The mother of Adeodatus, with whom Augustine had so long lived, was cruelly sent back to Africa without her son at Monica's entreaty. Augustine had not yet found rest and strength in Christ, nor could he find them in Plato, whose works he read in a Latin translation. He could not long deny the existence of evil; the sins of which his own conscience was full cried out against such teaching. He consulted Simplician of Milan, listened to the discourses of St. Ambrose, conversed with Pontitian, an African Christian, studied St. Paul's Epistles, and went to church with Alypius. The story of St. Anthony went to the depths of his inmost soul. He felt that Christ and His Gospel were living powers. He longed for the pure and blessed life of those holy ones who followed Christ. But he had to struggle with his love of pleasure, his passions, his earthly ties. And as he lay down and wept, he heard a child's voice singing Tolle, Lege. The words went to his heart; he opened the roll of St. Paul's Epistles and read, "Not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof" [Rom. xiii. 13, 14]. This was the turning-point. On Easter Eve, April 25, A.D. 387, he was baptized by St. Ambrose at Milan, together with Alypius and Adeodatus, and on the following day they were admitted to their first Communion. The legend that St. Ambrose and St. Augustine together composed the Te Deum on this occasion may have some foundation in fact. However this may be, Augustine was now happy. As he says himself, the notes of the hymns and canticles of the Church flowed in at his ears, and God's truth revealed itself in his heart, and he wept for joy; it was well for him to be there. But soon probably he would be involved in the conflict between Ambrose and Justina [April 4th]. Monica died too about this time, and the loud weeping of Adeodatus was checked by Augustine, who thought such a display of sorrow inconsistent with Christian hope. At length, however, nature prevailed, and Augustine also wept. They found comfort in praying for Monica, and "the sacrifice of our ransom was offered for her." So far we are mainly indebted to St. Augustine's own Confessions for the particulars of his life; the rest is gathered from a life of him by his friend Possidius, and from scattered allusions in his epistles, etc. Want of space forbids more than a very hasty glance at the remainder of his history. He was at Rome A.D. 388, and in 391 was ordained priest by Valerius, Bishop of Hippo, the city of the Numidian kings, but now more famous as the See of Augustine.

Here he preached a great deal for Valerius, and corrected an abuse of the agape, a custom of which we perhaps have a survival in the panis benedictus distributed in France. In A.D. 395 he was consecrated Bishop, and soon was much occupied in the famous ecclesiastical controversy with the Donatists, and had a literary correspondence with St. Jerome. From 412 to 418 he had to combat the heresy of Pelagius, and was himself led into exaggerated statements of doctrine, and into a persecuting policy. He seems to have forgotten how by an exercise of his own freewill he had himself cast off the old man and his deeds, and was disposed to attribute to Divine Grace a constraining power destructive of human freedom, and to have laid down maxims most dangerous to morality. He wrote a letter to Sixtus, priest of Rome, which gave rise to much controversy, the Gallican Church especially combating his views. In A.D. 427 he published "Retractations,"—not a recantation, but a survey and revision,—the result of a calmer consideration of former statements. In June A.D. 430, Hippo was besieged by the Arian Vandals, but Augustine ceased not to preach and to work till in August he was prostrated by fever, and on August 30th he died in his seventy-seventh year. In his last hours he repeated the Penitential Psalms with many tears, and had them fixed on the wall opposite to his bed. His body was buried at Hippo, removed to Sardinia fifty-six years after by exiled African Bishops, and A.D. 710 redeemed from the Saracens by Luitprand, King of the Lombards. Since then it has been at Pavia, but in 1837 some portions were sent to a church in Algeria, on the ruined site of Hippo. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp. : Eccus. xlvii. 8-11. St. Matt. v. 13-19.]

29] BEHEADING OF ST. JOHN BAPTIST.—This minor festival of St. John Baptist commemorates his death as related in St. Matt. xiv. 1-12. It probably took place shortly before the Passover. The 29th of August is the day of the dedication of a basilica at Alexandria on the site of a temple of Serapis, in which basilica reputed relics of St. John Baptist were kept. Portions are shewn at Amiens, Rome, and elsewhere. One of the explanations of the name of "Halifax," the church of which parish is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is that the halig feax, or holy hair, of the Baptist was shewn at a hermitage there: a tradition embodied in the present arms of the town, though there are, perhaps, other explanations at least as probable. The nativity of St. John the Baptist [June 24th] is observed as his greater festival, because of its miraculous character and its connection with that of our Blessed Lord. [Prov. x. 28-32, and xi. 3, 6, 8-11. St. Mark vi. 17-29.]

1] GILES, ABBOT AND CONFESSOR.—The earlier part of the legend of St. Giles, or Ægidius, according to which he was an Athenian who came to Marseilles and became acquainted with St. Cæsarius of Arles, is given up by Mabillon and the Bollandists as fabulous. His "Lives" are all later than the eighth century, and are full of anachronisms and marvels. They contain a beautiful story which may be founded on fact, relating how one day Childebert III., King of the Franks [cir. A.D. 695-711], according to some, or Wamba, King of the Goths, according to others, was hunting in a forest, when the hunted doe fled for refuge into the cave of a hermit who had been nourished by her milk. They shot an arrow after the doe, and on entering the cave found Giles sheltering the poor beast, with the arrow in his own shoulder. Touched at the sight, the King had the wound dressed, became the hermit's friend, built a monastery on the site of the cave, and made Giles the Abbot. Afterwards the famous Charles Martel sent for him to Orleans to take refuge from the Saracens. In A.D. 721 they were driven back, and he returned to his abbey, where he died before A.D. 725. A considerable town called "St. Giles's" arose about the abbey, which was a great resort for pilgrims. The story of the hunted doe is given with the incident of the arrow in the Sarum, York, and Aberdeen Breviaries, without it in the Roman. St. Giles is esteemed as the patron of cripples from his alleged refusal to be cured of a lameness, hence churches dedicated to him are often at the original entrances to cities, where cripples were accustomed to gather together and beg. He was also the patron of Edinburgh, where a great image of him that had been carried in processions was destroyed by John Knox. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxix. 5-9. St. Luke xi. 33-36.]

Represented—With the hind and the arrow in various ways; with a milk-cup in his hand.

7] ENURCHUS, BISHOP OF ORLEANS.—The name of this Bishop as we have it is an erroneous reading of "Eurtius," found in the Calendar of 1604, and repeated in all subsequent editions. He is variously described as a martyr and as a confessor, and by Tillemont identified with Eortius, who subscribed the acts of the Council of Valence A.D. 374. In the Acta Sanctorum he is placed under Constantine, but there are no trustworthy accounts of him, and it is impossible to say how he found a place in our Calendar. The York Breviary has three lections to this effect—that he was a subdeacon of the Roman Church who came to Orleans at the time of a contested election to the see, and was designated as Bishop by a dove lighting on his head, the power of working miracles following on his consecration. When he perceived his end to be drawing near, he feared that the former dissension would be renewed after his departure, and so chose one Anianus as his successor.

Calendar—York.

Dedications of Churches—None.

Represented—With the dove.

8] NATIVITY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.—This festival, called "St. Mary's Mass in Harvest" [Laws of Alfred of St. Gregory, xx.], has a special Preface in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, and was very generally celebrated in the middle ages with octave and vigil. As to the parentage of the Blessed Virgin, see July 26th. Nicophorus gives a description of her personal appearance and character, purporting to come from St. Epiphanius, who in the fourth century derived it from a still more ancient source. See BARING-GOULD'S Lives of the Saints. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxiv. 17-22, and Wisd. iv. 1-7, alternately through the Octave, the latter being always read on Sunday and the Octave Day. St. Matt. i. 1-16 through the week, and on the Octave Day St. Luke xi. 27, 28.]

Calendars—All.

14] HOLY CROSS DAY.—This festival originally commemorated, as it has continued to do in the Eastern Church, that famous appearance of the "sign of the Son of Man in the heavens," which is said to have decided the conversion of the Emperor Constantine. But in Breviaries of the West the lections relate mainly to the recovery by the Emperor Heraclius [A.D. 629] of that supposed portion of the Cross which had been preserved in a richly-jewelled case at Jerusalem [see May 3rd], and carried away by Chosroes, King of the Persians. Heraclius entered Jerusalem barefoot and meanly clad, holding the precious reliquary in his arms. This being opened, the sacred wood was lifted up before the people, hence probably the feast is called the "Exaltation" of the Holy Cross, though some attribute both the name and the observance of the day to the original exposition of the wood in Constantine's new basilica, A.D. 335. In A.D. 635 Heraclius had to retreat before the Mohammedans; and he then, foreseeing the speedy ruin of Jerusalem, carried the sacred treasure to Constantinople, after which its history becomes obscure. In the days when relics were multiplied, supposed particles of it were attached to other pieces of wood to preserve them, and these pieces in time came to be venerated as portions of the true Cross. The English name of this day was "Holy Rood Day in September," to distinguish it from "Holy Rood Day in May." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Gal. v. 10-12, and vi. 12-14; St. John xii. 31-36.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—One hundred and six, two with St. Mary and one with St. Faith. Holyrood Abbey and Palace in Edinburgh are named from the famous "Black Rood of Scotland," fabulously reported to have come down from heaven.

17] LAMBERT, BISHOP AND MARTYR.—St. Landebert or Lambert was born of Christian parents of rank and wealth at Maestricht, where, after a careful education, he was committed to the charge of St. Theodard, the Bishop, at whose death he succeeded to the see. When Childeric II., King of France, was dethroned and murdered, A.D. 673, Lambert, who was known to be his friend, was driven from his see by Ebroin, "Mayor" of Maestricht, and retired to the Monastery of Stavelot, where he spent seven years in strict monastic obedience, while Faramond, a Canon of Cologne, was put in his place as Bishop. In A.D. 681, however, Ebroin was murdered, the intruding Bishop expelled, and Lambert restored to his see. Here he laboured in converting the barbarous heathen inhabitants of that land of marshes, peat-mosses, and willow-bolts, and multitudes came to his baptism. A hillock near the Meuse was long pointed out as a place where he used to sit and teach. About A.D. 709 Lambert's relations took it upon themselves to resent some invasion of the lands belonging to his see, and two members of a powerful family were put to death. Their relations in turn, resolving on revenge, and hearing that Lambert was at Liège, then a small place, fell upon him there and put him to death with a spear, as also his nephews Peter and Andeloc, who were trying to defend him. His sanctity of life led to his violent death being considered as a sort of martyrdom, as in the case of St. Edward the King [March 15th]. His body was sent in a boat to Maestricht, and buried in the Church of St. Peter. A church was built at Liège on the place of martyrdom, and thither his remains were translated A.D. 721 by his successor in the See of Maestricht, which see was now removed to Liège. Thus the village became a great city, as it is at this day. But the Cathedral Church of St. Lambert was utterly destroyed at the Revolution, and its site is now a market-place. In the present cathedral, formerly the Collegiate Church of St. Paul, part of the Saint's relics are preserved. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Heb. v. 1-6. St. Matt. ix. 35-38, and x. 7, 8, 16.]

Calendars—All except Roman.

Dedications of Churches—Two.

Represented—With spear or dart in his hand or at his feet; sometimes a palm-branch; stabbed with javelins; beaten with a club.

21] ST. MATTHEW, APOSTLE, EVANGELIST, AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Twenty-five.

Represented—With a money-box or purse; with a spear, axe, or carpenter's square. As Evangelist, with a winged man.

26] ST. CYPRIAN, ARCHBISHOP OF CARTHAGE AND MARTYR.—This festival was originally kept, together with that of St. Cornelius, Bishop of Rome, on September 14th, but on account of Holy Cross Day was transferred to the 16th both in East and West. In our reformed Calendar the great St. Cyprian occupies the place of another of the same name, a converted magician of Antioch. Thascius Cyprianus was born at Carthage about the beginning of the third century. His father was in a position to give him a liberal education, and he became a professor of rhetoric. At the persuasion of Cæcilius, a presbyter, he became a Christian, though not without a struggle that reminds us of St. Augustine. Like that distinguished convert, he finally embraced the Faith with all his heart, and was baptized. He sold his goods to feed the poor, and applied himself to the study of Holy Scripture and other sacred writings, particularly those of Tertullian. Assuming the name of his spiritual father, he was styled Thascius Cæcilius Cyprianus. Not long after his baptism he was ordained priest [A.D. 247], and soon after that was made Bishop of Carthage, not without the strenuous opposition of a small party headed by Novatus and Felicissimus. In the Decian persecution, A.D. 250, he used the liberty which our Lord had given [St. Matt. x. 23], and fled for the sake of his flock, in obedience, as he says, to a Divine intimation that he might thus at that time best glorify God. The heathen had furiously raged together, crying, "Cyprianus ad leones, Cyprianus ad bestias," also calling him Coprianus, from the Greek word for dung, thus fulfilling literally the words of St. Paul [1 Cor. iv. 13]. From his retirement he wrote many letters to his clergy and took a most active interest in the welfare of his people; and between the importunity of the lapsed to be at once restored to Church privileges, and the extreme doctrine of Novatian, that the lapsed could never be restored, he took so wise a course that many councils afterwards adopted it. He returned to Carthage after the Easter of A.D. 251, and held a synod, in which his own view was confirmed. During a dreadful pestilence which prevailed in A.D. 252 many blamed the Christians, and thought they could appease the gods by persecuting those who turned the people from them. But Cyprian won general goodwill and admiration by going about and doing works of charity among heathens as well as Christians. The African Church now had rest from without; but the endless question as to the lapsed was revived under countless perplexing forms; there was a dispute as to the age for infant baptism; and lastly, the important controversy as to the validity of baptism by heretics and schismatics. Cyprian held, and his doctrines were confirmed by a numerous council held at Carthage A.D. 255, that such baptisms were in all cases null and void, and hence his famous controversy with Stephen, Bishop of Rome, who held them to be valid if administered with the right words and matter. In all this we hear nothing of Papal Infallibility, or even Supremacy, nor of the Roman doctrine of "Intention." In A.D. 257 Cyprian was banished to Curubis, where he remained till the following year, when he was arrested in Carthage and commanded to sacrifice to the gods. On his refusal, the decree was read out that Cyprian should be slain with the sword, whereupon he responded, "Deo gratias." While he was led out to execution the people wept, and said they would be beheaded with him. Being brought into a field outside the city, he took off his outer garments, knelt down at the appointed place, and prayed. Soon his head was struck off by the sword, and the faithful took the clothes stained with his blood, and buried his body on the Mappalian Way. Two churches were afterwards built, one on the place of his burial, called Mappalia, the other on the place of his martyrdom, called Mensa Cypriana, because there, as in sacrifice, he had offered his life to God. In later times [A.D. 806] the body was removed to Arles, and later still to Compiègne, where it rested with that of St. Cornelius. The name of St. Cyprian is mentioned in the Communicantes in the Canon of the Mass. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Wisd. v. 15-19. St. Matt. x. 23-25.]

Calendars—All except the Austin Canons', with St. Cornelius, on the 14th. In Hereford and Paris a commemoration only, with St. Cornelius, on the 14th. [See above.]

Dedications of Churches—One, Chaddesley, in Worcestershire. Represented—With a gridiron and a sword.

29] ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—About six hundred.

Represented—St. Michael as an angelic warrior, often in armour, contending with the dragon; weighing souls in scales; with scales simply. The nine orders of angels have various characteristic attributes, for which we must refer to special works on Iconography. They generally, however, have the names of their orders on labels or otherwise. Those of greatest dignity have fully-developed crowns; while, to mark supposed degrees in rank, others have crowns less ornamented, or mere circlets with a single cross, or crosses over their foreheads only, or plain caps or wreaths on their heads.

30] ST. JEROME, PRIEST, CONFESSOR, AND DOCTOR.—St. Jerome was born in the earlier part of the fourth century, of Christian parents, somewhere on the confines of Dalmatia and Pannonia. He received a liberal education, and was designed for the legal profession. At Rome he was instructed by Donatus the famous grammarian, as well as by one Victorinus, whose conversion is related in St. Augustine's Confessions. At this time he was in the habit of attending the courts to hear the lawyers plead, and he also used to explore the catacombs. Strange to say, his baptism was deferred till he was quite a young man. Having been baptized, he made a journey into Gaul with his friend and fellow-student Bonosus, and passed some time at Treves, where he wrote his earliest works, and became impressed with deep religious feeling and earnest Christian zeal. From about A.D. 370 to 372 he was at Aquileia with his friend Rufinus. In A.D. 373 he suddenly set out for the East with three friends, passing through Thrace, Bithynia, Galatia, Pontus, Cappadocia, and Cilicia. At Cæsarea they saw the great St. Basil, and then journeyed to Antioch, where Jerome had a serious illness; and he was still suffering from ill-health there in the Lent of A.D. 374, when he did not consider himself exempted from the observance of the fast. He now abandoned the reading of profane authors, and gave himself to the study of divinity and the practice of asceticism, retiring with his books to a desert in Chalcis, where he severely chastised his body, and laboured hard to learn Hebrew. While he was yet in the desert the Meletian schism broke out. Jerome espoused the side of Paulinus, the Bishop recognized by Rome at Antioch, against that of Meletius recognized by the East. The East was distracted with controversy too as to the hypostasis; and being urged to accept the phrase, Jerome applied to Damasus, Bishop of Rome, early in A.D. 377, who in the following year sent an answer to Paulinus. The same year he came to Antioch, and was ordained priest by Paulinus on the strange condition that he should not be expected to act as such. In A.D. 380 he went to Constantinople, where he remained two or three years, pursuing his own studies, and hearing the eloquent instructions of Gregory Nazianzen. In A.D. 381 Meletius died, but his partisans carried on the old contention; and in A.D. 382 Damasus called Paulinus, with his followers and opponents, to Rome, where a council was held, and Jerome acted as secretary to Damasus. And now began that close friendship between the two which lasted till the death of the latter, at whose earnest request Jerome undertook that famous revision of the then received Latin versions of the Scriptures, which resulted in the Vulgate, as it afterwards came to be called, when some centuries after its author's death it had driven its elder rivals out of the field, and become the one recognized version of the Bible in the Latin churches. His growing fame drew around him a crowd of enthusiastic admirers, many of them noble ladies, to whom he represented as strongly as he could the heavenly graces of a single life. But he had so many enemies that he felt obliged to quit Rome after the death of Damasus in A.D. 384. He sailed in August A.D. 385 with several friends, and came to Antioch, having been hospitably received on the way by Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis. He was now joined by Paula, a wealthy Roman widow, who came with a number of religious maidens. The whole party made a tour of the Holy Land, visited Egypt, returned to Palestine in A.D. 386, and settled at Bethlehem. Here Paula founded four monasteries, three for women and one for men, over which last Jerome presided. Here he passed the remainder of his life, engrossed in his pursuits; while, unhappily, his declining years were, as his earlier years had been, embittered by fierce controversies. One serious dispute he had with St. Augustine; and but for the gentleness and forbearance of the holy Bishop, it must have led to a breach between them. He was also engaged in a long war against Origenism, involving a quarrel between himself and his old friend Rufinus, who would not condemn the errors of Origen. We are sometimes repelled by faults of temper and other defects in St. Jerome's character; while yet in his lifelong devotion to great objects, and especially that of giving to the Western Church the best possible version of the Bible, his character rises to true sublimity. But his life's work was comparatively little thought of in his own day. An armed band of Pelagian heretics attacked his monastery at Bethlehem; he escaped with difficulty, and remained in hiding over two years. He returned A.D. 418; but, broken in body and mind, gradually failed in both, and died September 30, A.D. 420. He was buried at Bethlehem, and his body is said to have been translated to Rome in the thirteenth century. He has always been esteemed as the most learned and eloquent of the Latin Fathers; and his familiarity with Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, with ancient history and philosophy, and with the manners and scenery of the East, were invaluable to him as a translator and an expositor of Holy Scripture. His one hundred and forty-seven extant and genuine epistles, his treatises and commentaries, and his translations, have indeed well earned for him his title of one of the four doctors of the Western Church. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Eccles. xvii. 8-11. St. Matt. v. 13-19.]

1] REMIGIUS, BISHOP OF RHEMES.—This saint, often called St. Remi, "Apostle and Patron of France," was born about A. D. 439, of noble parents, long after their other children, his birth having been foretold by one Montanus, a hermit. He received a suitable education, and was remarkable for holiness of life, so that he was made Bishop of Rheims in the twenty-third year of his age, and afterwards Primate of Gaul, whence Rheims became the Metropolitan See of France. He is chiefly known as having baptized Clovis, or Hlodwig, the first orthodox Christian King of the Franks, with such solemnity that the convert asked, "Patron, is this the kingdom of God?" At the fount the holy bishop said, "Bend thy head gently, Sicambrian, burn what thou hast worshipped, worship what thou hast burned." Hence subsequent French kings were styled "Eldest Son of the Church" and "Most Christian King." Clovis had been, previous to embracing the Faith, under the influence of his Christian Queen Clothild, as Ethelbert of Kent had been under that of Queen Bertha; and his conversion, as in the case of our own first Christian King, was speedily followed by that of great numbers of his subjects. [See May 26th.] Remigius proved a helpful counsellor to Clovis, and together they founded three French sees. He died a natural death, January 13, A. D. 533, having administered the Holy Eucharist to his people but a few days before. His body was laid in the little Church of St. Christopher, in a place corresponding to the entrance to the choir of the present great basilica which bears his name, and which was consecrated by Pope Leo the Great October 2, A. D. 1049, the body of St. Remi having been solemnly translated on the previous day, which thenceforth superseded January 13th as his festival. The legend of the sacred ampul of chrism brought down from heaven by a white dove for the baptism of Clovis, and used for the anointing of the French kings until it was destroyed at the Revolution, is not heard of till nearly four hundred years after the death of St. Remi. This venerable relic was publicly broken in 1793, but a particle of the glass and some of the chrism are believed to have been preserved, and are still shewn in the treasury at the Cathedral Church of Notre Dame in Rheims, together with a new ampul made in imitation of the old one. The body of the saint is still enshrined at the Church of St. Remi. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp. : Heb. vii. 23-27. St. Luke xii. 35-40.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Seven, unless any be to St. Remigius of Lincoln.

Represented—With the ampul, or a dove bringing it to him.

6] FAITH, VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—The story of St. Faith, or Fides, is very like that of other early virgin martyrs. She was horn of Christian parents, and while still very young brought to her trial. She suffered under the cruel Datian [see January 22nd] in the latter part of the third century at Agen, in Aquitaine. Refusing to sacrifice to Diana, she boldly confessed Christ notwithstanding the most horrible tortures, endeavouring, as she said, to shew herself worthy of her name. Having been beaten with rods, and bound to a brazen bed over burning coals, she was at last beheaded. Several spectators, rebuking the tyrant, and refusing to sacrifice, suffered with her. The Martyrologies mention another St. Faith under June 23rd as a martyr with her mother Sophia and her sisters Spes and Caritas. The three sisters were invoked in some York litanies. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp. Eccus. li. 9-12. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford, Aberdeen, and Paris.

Dedications of Churches—Sixteen, and one with All Saints; also the crypt of old St. Paul's.

Represented—The three sisters as children holding swords.

9] ST. DENYS, AREOPAGITE, BISHOP, AND MARTYR.—All we know from Scripture of Dionysius the Areopagite is that he was a certain man of Athens, converted by the preaching of St. Paul [Acts xvii. 34]. Eusebius makes him to have been first Bishop of Athens, and according to a later tradition he suffered martyrdom there. The remarkable philosophical works long supposed to have been written by him are now generally considered to be the productions of some Neo-Platonists of the sixth century. His place in our Calendar is the result of what was a popular belief for many centuries, that the Areopagite and St. Denys of France were the same person, formerly Bishop of Athens, who having come to Rome was sent by St. Clement to preach in Gaul. This is the tradition of the Greek as well as of the Western Church, and was embodied in the Offices of the Mediæval Churches generally. According to this legend, St. Dionysius had as companions in work and in martyrdom Rusticus, a presbyter, and Eleutherius, a deacon. It first appears in the middle of the fifth century. According to another version, the Dionysius sent by Clement, or the successors of the Apostles, was not the Areopagite; and according to Gregory of Tours, A. D. 570, he was sent to Paris under the consulship of Decius circa A. D. 253, and was slain with the sword, being Bishop of the Parisians circa A. D. 272, so that he was in that case a totally different person. The Angsburg Missal of 1555, the Paris Breviary of 1836, and probably other service-books, adopt this last account: while the present Roman Missal, Breviary, and Martyrology identify St. Denys of France with the Areopagite, the Breviary also attributing to him the Celestial Hierarchy and other works referred to above. The Eastern Church commemorates the Areopagite on October 3rd, on which day the Roman Martyrology mentions a Dionysius and his companions, who are identified with the Areopagite and his companions by Bede and others down to Alban Butler, who adopts the account which places SS. Denys, Lucian, Quintin, Crispin, and others with them, in the third century [see January 8th], without any reference to the Breviary. St. Denys was one of the most popular saints of the Middle Ages, particularly in France, in which country he was venerated as one of its greatest apostles. According to the "Acts," he was exposed to wild beasts at Paris, cast into a fiery furnace, crucified, and finally with Rusticus and Eleutherius beheaded on the "Martyrs' Mount," Montmartre. The later story that St. Denys carried his head in his hands from Montmartre to the site of the Abbey of St. Denys doubtless arose out of symbolical representations originally intended to convey nothing more than that he was beheaded. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp. : Acts xvii. 16-34. St. Luke vi. 17-23.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Forty-three.

Represented—Headless, and carrying the bare or mitred head in his hand; sometimes not decapitated, bare or mitred, but still carrying a head in his hand.

13] TRANSLATION OF KING EDWARD, CONFESSOR.—Eadward, or Edward, called "The Confessor," was elected to the English throne A. D. 1042, and died a natural death, January 5, 1066. The popular reverence for him, which culminated in his being regarded as the patron saint of England, was a matter of gradual growth, and arose in a great measure out of the mass of legend that gathered around his true history. At the same time he must have shewn personal qualities which won the affection of his people while he lived, and were remembered with reverence after his death. This popular esteem is the more noteworthy when we reflect that there was no one remarkable thing either in his life or in his death to account for it. Rather, in some respects, as, for example, in his strange love of hunting, he was not very saint-like. He was, however, devoted to religious exercises and to the founding of monasteries and churches. The great Abbey Church of St. Peter at Westminster was through him completed, and solemnly dedicated on the Feast of the Holy Innocents, A. D. 1065, but he was too sick to be present, and on the Eve of the Epiphany he died. On the following festival he was buried before the high altar in the new church, a great concourse of nobles and ecclesiastics being present. William I. adorned his tomb with silver and gold, and Archbishop Becket removed his body to a richer shrine, October 13, A. D. 1163. After the rebuilding of the church by Henry III. a sumptuous shrine was constructed; and the wreck of this, with later additions, still remains. The translation by St. Thomas is the one commemorated in the Calendar. The shrine was demolished by order of Henry VIII., and the body buried in the Abbey, but in 1557 it was replaced in the restored shrine with great pomp. The restoration of the festival of his former translation to our Calendar in 1561 shews the veneration in which his memory continued to be held, a veneration which was scarcely extinct even in 1760, when lying eulogists compared the devotion of George II. to that of St. Edward! Touching for the "king's evil" arose out of the belief that St. Edward could cure disease by his touch, and that the power remained with his posterity. It was last performed by Queen Anne, and a special Office for it is found in many Books of Common Prayer. The same power was attributed to the kings of France. A ring given by St. Edward in his last illness to the Abbot of Westminster was long preserved as a relic which could cure nervous diseases; a legend being attached to it. Succeeding kings blessed "cramp-rings" on Good Friday. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp. : Eccus. xxxix. 5-9. St. Luke xi. 33-36.] [See General Appendix.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford, Monastic.

Dedications of Churches—Twenty-one, either to him or to St. Edward the Martyr; one at Cambridge is to the Confessor.

Represented—With the ring, sometimes with a purse.

17] ETHELDREDA, VIRGIN.—Æthelthryth, Etheldreda, or Audrey, was one of four daughters of Anna, King of the East Angles, who were all esteemed to be saints, the others being Sexburga, Ethelburga, and Withburga. Of these Etheldreda was apparently the third. She was married against her will to Tunbert, an East Anglian prince, who bestowed on her the Isle of Ely as a dowry. The marriage remained merely nominal, and Tunbert soon died. His widow then retired to Ely in order to devote herself to the religious life. But in A.D. 660 she was obliged to become the wife of Prince Egfrid, son of Oswy, King of Northumbria. Nothing, however, would induce her to break her resolution of perpetual virginity; and when Egfrid came to the throne of his father, A.D. 670, he sought the help of the famous Wilfrid, or Wilfrith, to bring her over to his views. Wilfrid, however, appears to have secretly confirmed her in her own, and at last a divorce was effected. In A.D. 671 they parted, Egfrid to seek a more suitable wife, Etheldreda to take the veil at the hands of Wilfrid. Having continued for a year in the Monastery of Coldingham, she made her way to her best-loved Ely. She crossed the Humber at the Brough and Winteringham ferry, and stayed some little time at the adjacent village of West Halton, where her staff, as was believed, grew into the largest ash-tree in the neighbourhood, and where her memory is still preserved in the dedication of the church. Arriving at Ely, she established a religious house, over which Wilfrid made her Abbess. She now practised asceticism, as we learn from Bede, of the most rigid type, and at the same time made Ely a great religious centre for East Anglia. "She was taken to our Lord," says Bede, "in the midst of her flock, seven years after she had been made Abbess." A.D. 679, and she was buried, with those who had gone before, in a wooden coffin. In A.D. 695 her sister and successor St. Sexburga translated her body, placing it, entire and uncorrupt, in a Roman stone or marble coffin brought from Grantchester [Cambridge]. The body was afterwards enshrined in the existing cathedral; and on the 17th of October, the feast of her translation, pilgrims fared to her shrine from all quarters. Our word "tawdry" is said to be derived from pilgrims' "signs" or other objects bought at "St. Audrey's Fair." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 2 Cor. x. 17—xi. 2. St. Matt. xxv. 1-13.]

Calendars—Sarum, Hereford.

Dedications of Churches—Six, one destroyed. Ely Cathedral to her with St. Peter.

Represented—In monastic habit, but crowned, and with crozier, book, or budding staff.

18] ST. LUKE, EVANGELIST.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Seventeen, and one with All Saints.

25] CRISPIN, MARTYR.—Crispin and his brother Crispinian are celebrated among the band of missionaries who came from Rome with St. Denys, January 8th, 20th, and October 9th. Fixing their abode at Soissons, they preached and instructed the people by day, and when not so engaged exercised the trade of shoemaking for a maintenance. Hence they have been considered the tutelary saints or patrons of that craft, and of two famous societies in France called Frères Cordonniers. The two brothers were beheaded, October 25, A.D. 288, after severe tortures, under Riceius Varus, the Roman Governor of Soissons, during the progress of the Emperor Maximian through Gaul. In the sixth century a basilica was built and dedicated to them at Soissons, their probable place of interment, though there is a curious tradition in Kent that they were buried at Stones End, in that county. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: 1 Cor. iv. 9-14. St. Matt. x. 16-22.]

Calendars—All but Roman and Monastic.

Dedications of Churches—None.

Represented—Shoemaking; with shoemakers' tools, or strips of hide, or with a cornucopia full of boots and shoes.

28] SS. SIMON AND JUDE, APOSTLES AND MARTYRS.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Two in their joint names.

Represented—St. Simon with a fish or two, an oar, a fuller's bat, usually a saw. St. Jude with a boat, ship, club, bat, inverted cross, halbert, or carpenter's square.

1] ALL SAINTS' DAY.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Eleven hundred and forty-eight, also twenty-four with St. Mary, and eleven to other saints with All Saints.

5] See "State Services."

6] LEONARD, CONFESSOR.—This saint was born of noble Frankish parents in the court of Clovis, who stood sponsor for him at the font to do honour to his father. Having become a disciple of St. Remigius [October 1st], he resolved to embrace the religious life, notwithstanding the earnest dissuasion of the King. After remaining some time in the Monastery of Micy, near Orleans, he retired to a hermitage in a forest near Limoges, converting many on his way. He was not allowed to remain here alone, for many flocked to him, and a monastery arose on the spot, which was endowed by a successor of Clovis with as much of the forest as Leonard could ride round in a night on his ass. Here Leonard ruled at the head of a flourishing community till his death, about A.D. 559. He is said to have taken great interest in prisoners, and to have obtained leave from Clovis to release many; hence he is regarded as the patron of prisoners. He is also reputed to have been a deacon. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxix. 5-9. St. Luke xi. 33-36.]

Calendars—All except Roman and Paris.

Dedications of Churches—About one hundred and fifty, one with St. John, and one with St. Mary.

Represented—As a monk or abbot, with chains, fetters, etc.

11] ST. MARTIN, BISHOP AND CONFESSOR.—This famous saint was born early in the fourth century at Sabaria, in Pannonia [Hungary], but brought up at Pavia. Both his parents were Pagans, but Martin at ten years old used to frequent the Christian churches and ask to be made a catechumen. His father, a military tribune, enrolled him in the army at fifteen, and he remained in this condition of life nearly three years before his baptism, free from the common vices of soldiers, and full of good works. Once in winter he met a poor man begging outside the gate of Amiens, and seeing him barely clad, cut off half of his own military cloak with his sword, and gave it to the beggar. The next night he saw a vision of Jesus clad in the same portion of his cloak, saying to angels standing by, "Martin, yet a catechumen, hath covered Me with this garment." When he had been baptized, and had served in the army about five years, he sought his discharge, saying, "I am Christ's soldier;" but being taunted with cowardice, he offered to stand before the line unarmed, and to march into the ranks of the enemy in the Name of the Lord Jesus and protected by the sign of the Cross. The next day the enemy sued for peace and surrendered, whereupon Martin got his discharge. On leaving the army, he sojourned with Hilary of Poitiers [January 13th], who ordained him exorcist; but being warned in a dream, he went to visit his parents, and converted his mother to the Faith. Here he was publicly flogged by Arian heretics, and had to retire to an island, where he lived on roots; here he took hellebore by mistake, and narrowly escaped being poisoned. On St. Hilary's return from exile [January 13th], Martin followed him to Gaul, and established a monastery near Poitiers. In A.D. 371 he was much sought after to be first Bishop of Tours. The neighbouring Bishops objected, but had to give way to the voice of the people. Martin lived as a monastic Bishop in a secluded spot two miles from Tours, with eighty disciples, who were cave-dwellers, while he himself lived in a wooden hut. As Bishop he shewed great zeal in demolishing temples and trees consecrated to Pagan worship; and, like St. Boniface [June 5th], he cut down a sacred tree in order to satisfy the rustics as to the truth of his religion. He also boldly rebuked and withstood the usurping Emperor Maximus, who condemned to death the heretic Priscillian and his immediate followers on the ground that it was a new and unheard-of iniquity for a secular judge to decide an ecclesiastical cause. During the last sixteen years of his life he lived in close retirement, where he had many supernatural visions; and on November 9, A.D. 401, he died at Caudes, near Tours. On November 11th he was buried in a cemetery just outside Tours as it then was, and eleven years afterwards St. Brice, his successor, built a chapel over the tomb. [See July 4th.] St. Martin's cope [cappa] used to be carried into battle and kept in a tent where Mass was said, hence the term capella, chapel. In time a blue banner, divided to represent St. Martin's cloak, was carried instead, until it was superseded by the famous Oriflamme, the banner of St. Denys. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlv. 17, 20, 21-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Matt. xxv. 14-23.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—One hundred and sixty.

Represented—On horseback, dividing his cloak for the beggar; as a Bishop; a Martinmas goose by his side.

13] BRITTIUS, BISHOP.—St. Britius, or Brice, was brought up in St. Martin's Monastery near Tours, and was ordained deacon and priest by St. Martin. He had given much trouble by his disorderly conduct while young, and even after his ordination St. Martin had a mind to depose him; but he said, "If Christ endured Judas, why not I Brice?" and predicted that Brice would succeed him in the Bishopric, which came to pass. Even when he had become a Bishop grave charges were brought against him, and he either fled from Tours or was deposed for many years. The Sarum Breviary contains the legend that on his being accused of being the father of an infant, he adjured it by Christ to say if he were its father, and it replied, "Thou art not my father." And when the people ascribed this to magic he took burning coals in his birrus to St. Martin's tomb, saying, "As this vestment is unhurt by the fire, so is my body unpoluted." But the people of Tours would not believe him, and drove him from the Bishopric. He then went to Rome and related all to the Pope, was acquitted of the gravest charges, and returned to his see in the seventh year armed with Papal authority. In his latter days he acquired the reputation of a saint, and dying A.D. 444, was buried near St. Martin in the chapel he had himself built. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Wisd. x. 10-14. St. Luke xix. 12-28.] [July 4th, October 11th.]

Calendars—All except Roman and Monastic.

Dedications of Churches—One in England, viz. Brize Norton, and that of Llanverres in North Wales.

Represented—Carrying burning coals in his vestment; an infant on the ground near him.

15] MACHUTUS, BISHOP.—Maelog, Malo, Mawes, Maclon, Maclovius, or Machutus, was a native of Wales, but trained in a monastery at Aleth [now St. Malo], in Brittany, under St. Brendan, from whom, when he grew up, he received the habit. Afterwards he became Bishop of Aleth, and converted the neighbouring islet of Aaron into a monastery. But the opposition of the local chiefs obliged him to leave his see, and he went to Saintes, where Leontius, the Bishop, gave him a cell at Brie, and here he remained till recalled to Aleth. Soon he had to flee again, and this time he settled with some monks from Brittany at Archambrey, where he died November 15, A.D. 564. His relics were acquired by the Church of Aleth in the seventh century in a discreditable manner, and in A.D. 975 were taken to Paris, where they were lost at the Revolution. Many wonderful legends were related of him. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlv. 17, 20-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Luke xix. 12-28.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford, Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—St. Mawes, in Cornwall.

Represented—As a Bishop.

17] HUGH, BISHOP OF LINCOLN.—Hugh of Avalon, or de Grenoble, was born of a noble Burgundian family, A.D. 1140. His mother died when he was eight years old; and his father then entering a monastery of regular canons near his castle, dedicated the child Hugh in the same place, committing him to the care of an aged brother of the house, who instructed him in sacred and secular learning. Having been ordained deacon at the age of nineteen, he resolved to join the then new order of Carthusians, one of the reformed Benedictine orders. His brother canons having in vain tried to keep him back, he escaped, and was admitted into the Grande Chartreuse, the first house of the order. In process of time he was ordained priest, made procurator of the monastery, and sent to England to govern the first Carthusian house in this country, which had been founded A.D. 1181 by Henry II. at Witham, in Somerset, but unsuccessfully managed by two previous priors. Under the care of Hugh the monastery became very prosperous. "The King, who for the opinion he had of his holiness, used often," says Godwin, "privately to confer with him, remembering how great wrong he had done the Church of Lincoln in so long keeping it without a Bishop, determined to make amends by giving them a good one at last, and procured this Hugh before he understood of any such thing toward, to be elected Bishop of that see. He governed very stoutly and with great security, yet so, as he was more reuerenced and loved then feared. His excommunications were very terrible vnto all men, and the rather, for that it was noted, as I find deliuered, some notable calamity otherwise did lightly follow them. His Church of Lincolne he caused to be all new built from the foundation, a great and memorable worke, and not possible to be performed by him without infinite helpe." Indeed, as has been well said by another, "a more zealous and indofatigable prelate than was Bishop Hugh of Lincoln seldom, if ever, presided over a see of our own or any other Christian land." He yearly visited Witham for devout retirement, living as a brother, with no mark of distinction but the Bishop's ring. He was overtaken by his last sickness on his way back from one of these sojournings, and died in London, November 17, A.D. 1200, as they were singing in his hearing the Nunc dimittis in the Office of Compline. He was solemnly buried in Lincoln Minster, the journey from London having taken six days. King John of England and King William of Scotland met at Lincoln and helped to carry the bier, three archbishops and nine bishops being also present, with a multitude of abbots and priors. Eighty years afterwards his body was solemnly deposited within its golden shrine in the "angel choir" behind the high altar, Edward I. and his Queen, the Archbishops of Canterbury and Edessa, many bishops, and two hundred and thirty knights being present. St. Hugh was one of the most popular English saints, and the day of the accession of Queen Elizabeth [November 17th] was commonly called "St. Hugh's Day." [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlv. 1-5. St. Mark xiii. 33-37.]

Calendars—Sarum, Aberdeen.

Dedications of Churches—Quethiock, in Cornwall, unless it be to some local saint.

Represented—With a tame swan which he had; holding three flowers.

20] EDMUND, KING AND MARTYR.—This Edmund, or Edmund, the last of the native under-kings of East Anglia, was placed on the throne at the age of fifteen years, in 855; and when the Danes invaded that province in 870, he fought against them, but was beaten and taken prisoner. They then offered him his life and his kingdom if he would forsake Christianity and reign under them. When he refused, they tied him to a tree and shot him with many arrows, and at last cut off his head, which they flung into a thicket. The following year, when the Danes had retired, the body was recovered, and the head found among the brambles, guarded, it was said, by a great grey wolf. Over his relics rose the famous Abbey of Bury St. Edmunds; and no figure was more common in the painted glass and on the rood-screens of East Anglia than that of this martyred King. He could scarcely have died the death of a martyr unless his life had been that of a confessor for Christ; and what we are told is that though he was very young, he was distinguished as a model prince by his religion and piety, his restoration of ruined churches, his good government, and his determined hostility to everything mean and bad. He was never married, and, like many monks and other devout persons, he learned the psalter by heart, and the book which he was said to have used was shewn at Bury. His name is connected with much that is legendary, and the Sarum Breviary has a grotesque account of the finding of the head, etc. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxxi. 8-11. St. Luke xiv. 26-33.]

Calendars—Sarum, York, Hereford.

Dedications of Churches—Fifty-five (fifteen being in East Anglia), unless any be to St. Edmund the Archbishop.

Represented—Crowned and pierced by many arrows; bound to a tree as above; a wolf guarding his body or crowned head; an arrow in his hand.

22] CECILIA, VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—Cæcilia, a Roman lady, was venerated as a virgin martyr at a very early period, and the martyrdom of her and of her three companions is referred to in the Martyrology attributed to St. Jerome, and in the earliest Missals and Breviaries. Yet it is very difficult to find her true date and place, so conflicting are the accounts. According to the earliest, she suffered in Sicily A.D. 176-180; according to another, in Rome A.D. 230; while the Greek Menologies say at Rome, in the time of Diocletian, A.D. 284-305. Nor have we any authentic accounts of her life and history. There was a church dedicated to her at Rome, where Pope Paschal I. placed her supposed body, removed from the Catacombs, in 821, and provided that the praises of God should be sung around her tomb day and night. Hence probably arose the legends that connect her name with sacred music, there being nothing of the kind in the earliest accounts of her. One circumstance related in the legendary "Acts" is that by her prayers she brought an angel down to convince her newly-married husband that she ought to lead a life of perpetual virginity. The Acts of St. Cecilia, though not genuine, have been remarkably confirmed as to substance by discoveries in the Catacombs, including that of her original tomb, probably, in a cemetery with many epitaphs of members of the Cæcilian family. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. li.

9-12. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.] Her name occurs in the Nobis quoque in the Canon of the Mass.

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Two.

Represented—Crowned; bearing wreaths of roses or other flowers; a palm; a sword; an almond branch; a sprig of flowers; in later representations she is holding a portable organ or harp, or playing on an organ.

23] ST. CLEMENT I., BISHOP OF ROME AND MARTYR.—According to common tradition, the "fellow-labourer" mentioned by St. Paul [Phil. iv. 3] as having his name written in the Book of Life, is to be identified with the third of the Bishops of Rome, whose name is mentioned in the Communicantes in the Canon of the Mass. But so much legend has grown up around the name of Clement, and so little trustworthy information has come down to us, that we hardly know anything about him. From Rome the Roman Clement wrote his "First Epistle" to the Corinthians on the occasion of a schism towards the end of the first century, and is hence regarded as one of the "Apostolical Fathers." The second epistle ascribed to him is rather a homily, and must have been written at least a generation later than his time. Other epistles, and a mass of "Clementine literature," undoubtedly spurious, have been attributed to him. An account of his martyrdom, probably no earlier than the ninth century, tells how he was banished to the Crimea; and having converted the whole district by his miracles, was by Trajan's order cast into the sea with an anchor round his neck, an event pictured in frescoes of the tenth or eleventh century in the Church of St. Clement at Rome. So, too, the Sarum and Roman Breviaries. But no writer who speaks of the Bishop Clement describes him as a martyr until we come to Rufinus and Zosimus, about A.D. 400, and they do not mention the anchor story. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Phil. iv. 1-3. St. Luke xiv. 12-28.]

Calendars—All except the Parisian.

Dedications of Churches—Forty-seven, and one with St. Mary.

Represented—As Bishop or Pope, with double or triple cross; an anchor in his hand, to his neck, or at his feet; leaning on an anchor; a fountain springing up by him.

25] CATHARINE, VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—It would be hard to find a saint more generally revered than St. Catharine, or one of whom so little is really known, not one single fact related about her being reasonably certain. She has usually been identified with a nameless lady of Alexandria, of whom Eusebius [H. E. viii. 14] says that when she resisted the unhallowed advances of the Emperor Maximian he punished her with banishment and deprivation of goods. With reference to the once popular legends of St. Catharine, Baronius himself says that silence is better than falsehood mixed with truth. The Sarum Breviary contains many more marvels than does the modern Roman, but the Parisian of 1836 contains none. In the Sarum and Roman Breviaries we are told that Catharine combined the study of the liberal arts with fervent faith, and prevailed in argument over the most learned philosophers, kindling in them the love of Christ so that they were content to die for His sake. Then Maximian caused her to be scourged and bruised with leaded whips and kept in prison for eleven days without food. Next she was put on a wheel with sharp blades, but at her prayers the wheel was broken, and then she was beheaded on the 25th of November. Her body was marvellously borne by angels to Mount Sinai, in Arabia. The Sarum Breviary tells of a river of oil that was seen to flow from her tomb, etc. The angels are now explained by Alban Butler and other Roman Catholic writers to have been monks. Her extraordinary popularity in France and England dates from the bringing of alleged relics of her from Mount Sinai to Rouen by one Simeon, a monk, who died A.D. 1035. She is accounted the patron of secular, as St. Jerome is of theological learning. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. li. 1-8. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Fifty-one.

Represented—With a wheel or wheels, often spiked; with a sword, a book, a lamb, or a palm; carried by angels to Mount Sinai.

30] ST. ANDREW, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Nearly six hundred, and three with other Saints.

Represented—With a cross saltire, or sometimes an ordinary cross in his hand.

6] NICOLAS, BISHOP OF MYRA, IN LYCIA.—The great fame of St. Nicolas, like that of St. Catharine, is founded on a vast mass of picturesque legend rather than on anything we now really know about him. The earliest accounts of him which we have were written about five hundred years after his death, if, as is stated, it is to be placed A. D. 342. But the great veneration in which he was undoubtedly held in the Greek and Latin Churches in early times points to something extraordinary in his life and character. The Liturgy of St. Chrysostom contains a prayer in which his name is mentioned with that of other famous Eastern Saints, shewing in what honour he has long been held in the East, and he is still venerated in Russia next after the Holy Mother of God. Justinian built a church in his honour at Constantinople about A. D. 430, indeed he was titular saint of four churches there. The most remarkable legends concerning him are that when a new-born babe he stood up for two hours in an ecstasy, and on Wednesdays and Fridays refused to suck. Being left as a young man with a considerable fortune, he flung a bag of gold successively to each of three daughters, that they might marry honourably. When ordained priest he sailed for the Holy Land, and averted shipwreck by his prayers in a storm. About A. D. 325 he was elected Bishop of Myra, and by the sign of the Cross restored to health a burned child. He is traditionally reported to have been present at the great Council of Nicea, and is so represented in Eastern pictures of the Council. Here losing all patience with Arius, he dealt a violent blow at the jaw of that heretic, for which he had to undergo temporary deprivation and imprisonment. He is said to have obtained from the governor of Myra the release of three men imprisoned in a tower, the picture of which may have given rise to that of three children in a tub. The legend of his raising these children to life may be thus accounted for. He was much invoked by sailors, and accounted the patron of children. His tomb at Myra was much resorted to for a miraculous oil which flowed from it. In A. D. 1087 some merchants of Bari in southern Italy carried off the relics to their own city. The "Boy-bishop" pageants of the middle ages began on St. Nicolas' Day, and lasted till Childermas or Holy Innocents' Day. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xlv. 17-23; xlv. 6, 7, 15, 16. St. Matt. xxv. 14-23.]

Calendars—All.

Dedications of Churches—Three hundred and seventy-two, and seven with St. Mary, one with St. Swithun.

Represented—With three children in a tub, or kneeling before him; with three golden balls in various ways, sometimes on a book with three leaves; with an anchor, or a ship in the background.

8] CONCEPTION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.—The observation of this festival began in the East in early times, but did not become general in the West till the fifteenth century. As the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception became more developed in the Roman Communion, the festival was from time to time elevated in rank. The term "Immaculate" however, was not used in the Missal or Breviary till 1854, when Pius IX. made the doctrine of the "Immaculate Conception" an article of faith. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. xxiv. 17-22. St. Matt. i. 1-16.]

13] LUCY, VIRGIN AND MARTYR.—We know nothing of St. Lucy, as the sole authority for her story is her fabulous "Acts," a Christian romance similar to the "Acts" of some other virgin martyrs, though probably based on facts. She was highly honoured at Rome in the sixth century, as appears from the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, and her name occurs in the Nobis quoque of the Mass. St. Aldhelm wrote much about her, not only in prose, but in his poem De laude Virginitatis. The legendary account of her is that she was the daughter of a Christian lady in Syracuse, named Eutychia, and born in the latter part of the third century. Being asked in marriage by a young nobleman of Syracuse who was a Pagan, she declined his suit, having fully resolved to consecrate her virginity to God. Her mother was not aware of this, and wished her to marry the youth; but being restored from dangerous sickness after the prayers of her daughter at the tomb of St. Agatha at Catania [February 5th], she no longer advocated the marriage. Lucy then sold all her goods to feed the poor, and openly professed her dedication to Christ. Her former lover now hated her, and accused her to the Governor Paschasius in the Diocletian persecution. Coldly confessing Christ, she was condemned to infamy worse than death, but was delivered miraculously. Then they tried to burn her with the aid of pitch, oil, and fagots, but this attempt also failed. At last her throat was cut with a sword, and she died A. D. 303, predicting the peace of the Church, and announcing that Syracuse as well as Catania should have a virgin martyr. St. Lucy's Day regulates the Ember Days in December. [Sar. Ep. and Gosp.: Ecclus. li. 9-12. St. Matt. xiii. 44-52.]

Dedications of Churches—Two.

Represented—With eyes in a dish, or on a book; holding a dagger, pincers, or lamp; with a sword through her neck; in a caldron over a fire; oxen unable to drag her along; tormented by devils.

16] O SAPIENTIA.—The first of the seven antiphons of the Magnificat sung in preparation for Christmas. [See notes on Fourth Sunday in Advent.] The others were, on the 17th, O Adonai; 18th, O Radix Jesse; 19th, O Clavis David; 20th, O Oriens; 22nd, O Rex Gentium; 23rd, O Emmanuel (St. Thomas's Day having its own antiphon, O Thoma Didyme). These titles of Christ were sometimes called the "Seven Names." It has been maintained, with "much ingenuity," and more ignorance, that "O Sapientia" was a saint, one of the eleven thousand virgins alleged to have suffered with St. Ursula. [BRADY'S Clavis Calendaria, ii. 323.]

21] ST. THOMAS, APOSTLE AND MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Forty-five.

Represented—With a carpenter's square; with a spear or arrow. The square is associated with a legend of St. Thomas building a palace for an Eastern king.

Represented—The Nativity is pictured as having taken place in a stable; the ox and ass are invariably introduced [Isa. i. 3], also the "Star of Bethlehem" [St. Matt. ii. 9].

26] ST. STEPHEN, THE FIRST MARTYR.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Forty, and one with St. Mary.

Represented—As a deacon, holding one or more stones in various ways.

27] ST. JOHN, APOSTLE AND EVANGELIST.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—About two hundred and forty.

Represented—With a cup, out of which issue one or more serpents; with a palm branch; writing; as Evangelist, with an eagle; sometimes it holds his inkhorn in its beak as he writes.

28] INNOCENTS' DAY.—[See notes on Gosp. Ep. and Coll.]

Dedications of Churches—Four.

Represented—Being slain by Herod's executioners with swords or daggers, Herod seated in a throne looking on.

31] SILVESTER, BISHOP OF ROME.—Silvester succeeded Melchisedes as Bishop of Rome, January 31, A. D. 314. Constantine having defeated Maxentius two years before, and so gained political ascendancy for the Church. At his exhortation Constantine built many basilicas, and ornamented them in a splendid manner. The Roman Martyrology and Breviary say that Silvester baptized Constantine, which is an historical error not found in the Parisian or in the Sarum Breviary; the latter, however, does contain a curious legend of the Pagans making Silvester descend into a dragon's den in the Tarpeian rock, where St. Peter and other saints appeared to him, and he delivered Rome from the malignity of the dragon. There is no doubt that Silvester issued several regulations with regard to ritual, etc., but the famous "Donation of Constantine," which pretended to give the temporal sovereignty to Silvester and his successors, is well known to be a gross forgery of the eighth century. Silvester died December 31, A. D. 335, and was buried in the cemetery of Priscilla on the Salarian Way, whence his body was removed to a church dedicated to him in the seventh century. [Sar. ## AN INTRODUCTION

TO

MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER.

THE ordinary daily Offices of the Christian Church were derived from the Jewish economy; the celebration of the Holy Eucharist being the distinctive devotional characteristic of Christianity. As David sang, "Seven times a day do I praise Thee" [Ps. cxix. 164]; and as Daniel "kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God" [Dan. vi. 10], so down to that period during which the old and the new economy overlapped each other, a constant habit of praise and prayer in connection with the morning and evening sacrifice, and at other hours of the day, was maintained in the Temple at Jerusalem, and in the Synagogues elsewhere. The Apostles continued the practice of devout Jews, and are spoken of in the book of their Acts as being in the Temple at the hour of prayer, or as offering their prayers elsewhere at the same hour. It was while "they were all with one accord in one place" at "the third hour of the day" [Acts ii. 1, 15] that the Holy Ghost descended upon them: "Peter went up upon the house-top to pray about the sixth hour" [Ibid. x. 9]: "Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour" [Ibid. iii. 1]: "at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God" [Ibid. xvi. 25]: and in the early zeal of their first love all the believers "continued stedfastly . . . in the prayers" [ταῖς προσευχαῖς] "daily with one accord in the temple" [Ibid. ii. 42, 46], as a regular part of the system of that fellowship into which they had been baptized.

When the habits of the Church began to be settled, it appears that the opening and the close of each day were appointed as the principal hours of prayer; and that the three intermediate times, the third, sixth, and ninth hours, were still recognized, and marked by public worship. Tertullian, after giving the Scriptural examples cited above, goes on to say that though these "stand simply without any precept for their observance, yet let it be thought good to establish any sort of presumption which may both render more strict the admonition to pray, and, as it were by a law, force us away sometimes from our business to this service, (even as was the custom of Daniel also, according no doubt to the rule of Israel,) that so we should pray at least not seldomer than three times a day, we who are debtors to the Three, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, exclusive, that is, of the regular prayers which are due, without any admonition, at the beginning of day and night." [TERT. de Orat. ix. 26.] In his treatise on fasting he also calls the third, sixth, and ninth hours "Apostolic hours of prayer." St. Cyprian refers to the habits of Old Testament saints, and draws the rational conclusion that the events of the Gospel gave proof that there was a "sacrament," or mystery, in the ancient practice of righteous men offering prayers at these seasons, as if the spiritual instincts of good men were already moving in the light of the Cross. "But to us, dearest brethren," he says, "besides the hours of ancient time observed, both seasons and sacraments of prayer are increased in number. In the morning we must pray," not waiting, that is, for the third hour, "that the Resurrection of the Lord may be commemorated with an early worship. This of old the Holy Spirit set forth in the Psalms, saying, 'My King and my God, unto Thee will I cry: my voice shalt Thou hear in the morning; in the morning will I stand before Thee, and will look up.' [Ps. v. 2.] And again, by the prophet the Lord saith, 'Early in the morning shall they seek Me, saying, Come and let us return unto the Lord our God.' [Hosea vi. 1.] At sunset likewise, and the close of day, needful is it that we should again pray. For as Christ is the true Sun and the true Day, when at the going down of this world's sun and light we make prayer and petition that the day may again return unto us, we are petitioning for that coming of Christ, which will give to us the grace of the Light eternal." [CYPRIAN, de Orat. Dom. xxii.] In the Apostolical Constitutions the same habit of the Church is referred to in very distinct terms: "Ye shall make prayers. . . . In the morning giving thanks, because the Lord hath enlightened you, removing the night, and bringing the day: at the third hour, because the Lord at that time received sentence from Pilate; at the sixth hour, because in it He was crucified; at the ninth hour, because all things were shaken when the Lord was crucified, trembling at the audacity of the impious Jews, not enduring that their Lord should be insulted; at evening giving thanks, because He hath given the night for rest from our daily labours; at cock-crowing, because that hour gives the glad tidings that the day is dawning in which to work the works of light." [Apostol. Constit. viii. 34.]

No account has come down to us which tells exactly of what these Primitive daily Offices consisted; but St. Basil in the fourth century speaks of them as being made up of psalmody mingled with prayers, and specifies the nineteenth Psalm as one which was invariably used at the sixth hour. The fifty-first Psalm is also shewn, from him and other writers, to have been constantly used in the night service; and the sixty-third was called the "Morning Psalm," being used at the beginning of the early service. The "Gloria in Excelsis" is also spoken of by St. Chrysostom as "the Morning Hymn" [see note in Communion Service], and the repetition of the Kyrie Eleison many times seems to have formed another part of these ancient services.

The daily Offices of the Eastern Church are of greater antiquity than those of the Western, and there is little doubt that they represent, substantially, the form into which the Primitive Offices for the hours of Prayer eventually settled down.<sup>1</sup> Sufficient points of resemblance have been traced between these and the daily prayers used under the Jewish economy, to make it almost certain that the former were originally derived from the latter.<sup>2</sup> But there are also many particulars in which the Western daily Offices, and especially those of the English Church,<sup>3</sup> are analogous to those of the East; and although they cannot be traced higher, in their familiar form, than the rule of St. Benedict [A.D. 530], it can hardly be doubted that men like SS. Benedict and Gregory would build upon the old foundations of Primitive Services, such as those now represented by the hours of the Eastern Church. In the Ancient Sacramentaries there are several series of Collects for daily use: one set of twenty-three in that of St. Gregory being entitled "Orationes de Adventu Domini quotidianis diebus;" another, of twenty, apparently for Lent, being headed "Orationes pro peccatis;" a third of many more in number being called "Orationes quotidianæ." There are also other sets in the same Sacramentary, "ad Matutinos Increscente die," "Orationes Matutinales," "Vespertinales," and "ad Completorium." What place such Collects occupied in the daily Offices is not quite clear, but they plainly shew that the Primitive habit of the Church was kept up, and that daily prayers were continually being offered in the Western as well as in the Eastern Church. Lessons from Holy Scripture were only read in the Synagogue on the Sabbath Day; in the Temple none at all (except the Decalogue) were ever read. This custom was continued throughout the Church even until the time of St. Gregory : Epistles and Gospels being read at the Holy Communion, but no Lessons at the hours of Prayer. St. Gregory established a system which afterwards developed into that of the Breviary Lessons, but in the Eastern Church the Primitive practice of reading Holy Scripture at the celebration of the Eucharist, and on Sunday only at other offices, is still maintained.

In Mediæval times the daily Offices were developed into a very beautiful, but a very complex form ; being moulded exclusively to the capacities of Clergy and Laity living in communities, separated from the world especially for a work of prayer and praise, which was seldom interrupted by the calls of other avocations. Those used in England differed in several important respects from the Roman Breviary,<sup>1</sup> and are supposed to have had the same origin as the Communion Office, the lineage of which is traced in the Introduction to the Communion Service to the Church of Ephesus. Like those of the Eastern and Roman Churches, they consisted nominally of seven separate services or hours [see p. 17] ; but as in those churches at the present day these seven hours are aggregated into three, or even two services, so it is probable was the case, to a great extent, in the Mediæval Church of England, and the whole seven were only kept by a small number of the most strict among the Clergy and religious. The Reformers condensed the seven hours instead of aggregating them, and thus gave us Mattins and Evensong, as in the manner shewn by the Table at p. 17. At the same time, the publication of Edward VI.'s and Queen Elizabeth's Primers shewed that they by no means intended to hinder, but rather to encourage those who still wished to observe the ancient hours of Prayer : and the Devotions of Bishop Cosin, with other Manuals framed on the same model, have given many devout souls the opportunity of supplementing the public Mattins and Evensong with prayers at other hours that equally breathed the spirit of the ancient Church.

In making this change the Reformers were doubtless endeavouring to secure by a modification of the Services what the theory of the Church had always required, the attendance of the Laity as well as the Clergy at the Daily Offices of Praise and Prayer. From very early days the Church of England had enjoined the Laity to be present at them, as may be seen in the collection of Decrees and Canons on the subject printed by Maskell [Mon. Rit. Ang. III. xxv-xxxiv.] ; but these injunctions appear to have been little obeyed, and their constant absence led the Clergy to deal with the Breviary as if it was intended for their own use alone, its structure becoming so complex that none but those who had been long used to handle it could possibly follow the course of the services day by day. In forming out of these complex services such simple and intelligible ones as our present Morning and Evening Prayer, a new opportunity was offered to the Laity of uniting their hearts and voices with those of the Clergy in a constant service of daily praise and prayer.

Churches without such an offering of Morning and Evening Prayer are clearly alien to the system and principles of the Book of Common Prayer, if taken in their strict sense ; and to make the offering in the total absence of worshippers seems scarcely less so. But as every Church receives blessing from God in proportion as it renders to Him the honour due unto His Name, so it is much to be wished that increased knowledge of devotional principles may lead on to such increase of devotional practice as may make the omission of the daily Offices rare in the Churches of our land. Then indeed might the time come when the Church of England could say, "Thou, O God, sentest a gracious rain upon Thine inheritance ; and refreshedst it when it was weary." It might look for the development of a perennial vigour springing from that "third hour of the day" when the Apostles first went forth in the night of their supernatural endowments ; and it might hope to meet with answers from on high, as sure as that which was given to Elijah "about the time of the Evening Sacrifice."

Praised be the Lord daily : euen the God Who helpeth us, and poureth His benefits upon us.

Day by day we magnify Thee,

And we worship Thy Name : euer world without end.

THE ORDER FOR
MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

DAILY TO BE SAID AND USED THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

THE Morning and Evening Prayer shall be used in the accustomed place of the Church, Chapel, or Chancel; except it shall be otherwise determined by the Ordinary of the place. And the Chancels shall remain as they have done in times past.

And here is to be noted, That such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof at all times of their

the accustomed place of the Church, Chapel, or Chancel] The rubric determining the place in which Mattins and Evensong (as distinct from the Litany and the Holy Communion) are to be said or sung has remained unaltered since the revision of Queen Elizabeth's reign, A.D. 1559.

In the first English Prayer Book, that of 1549, the germ of this rubric stood at the head of Morning Prayer in the words, "The Priest being in the Quire, shall begin with a loud voice the Lord's Prayer, called the Pater noster;" the Quire being thus taken for granted as the place where Divine Service was to be said or sung.

In the second Prayer Book, that of 1552, the rubric was enlarged in this form: "¶ The Morning and Evening Prayer shall be used in such place of the Church, Chapel, or Chancel, and the Minister shall so turn him, as the people may best hear. And if there be any controversy therein, the matter shall be referred to the Ordinary, and he or his deputy shall appoint the place, and the chancels shall remain as they have done in times past."

At this time many Puritans, such as Bishop Hooper, desired to have the ancient custom altered, and the service said in the nave of the Church. "I could wish," said Hooper, "that the magistrates should put both the preacher, minister, and the people into one place, and shut up the partition called the chancel which separates the congregation of Christ one from the other." [HOOPER'S Serm. iv. on Jonah.] The practice of saying the service in the chancel was also declared to be "Antichristian" by Martin Bucer; and on this plea it was forbidden in Queen Elizabeth's reign by a few lawless Bishops, such as Scambler of Peterborough.

And the Chancels shall remain as they have done in times past] This does not mean that the chancels are not to be destroyed, but that their interior arrangement shall continue as "in times past," that is, in times before 1552, when the words were introduced into the rubric. A century later Archbishop Juxon's Visitation Articles inquire, "Do the chancels remain as they have done in times past, that is to say, in the convenient situation of the seats, and in the ascent or steps appointed anciently for the standing of the Holy Table?"

To meet the growing disposition to disuse and dismantle the chancels, some special directions were given among "Orders" issued in the latter part of 1561.<sup>1</sup> It was there ordered that Rood lofts which remained "untransposed shall be so altered, that the upper part of the same, with the Soller, be quite taken down, unto the upper parts of the vaults and beam running in length over the said vaults, by putting some convenient crest upon the said beam towards the Church, with leaving the situation of the seats (as well in the Quire as in the Church) as heretofore hath been used. Provided yet that where any parish of their own costs and charges by common consent will pull down the whole frame, and re-edifying the same in joiners' work (as in divers churches within the city of London doth appear), that they may do as they think agreeable, so it be to the height of the upper beam aforesaid. Provided also that where in any parish church the said Rood lofts be already transposed, so that there remain a comely partition betwixt the Chancel and the Church that no alteration be otherwise attempted in them, but be suffered in quiet. And where no partition is standing, there to be one appointed."

Up to a still later date there was, in fact, no other place provided for the Clergy to say the service from than the ancient seats in the chancel, and the "accustomed place" was the "pue" (beginning then to be so called) in which the Clergy and singers sat, and of which one was ordinarily situated on each side of the chancel.

In the Advertisements of 1565, to which the authority of the Crown could not be obtained, and which were issued by Archbishop Parker on his own responsibility for the Province of Canterbury only, it was directed "that the Common Prayer be said or sung decently and distinctly, in such place as the Ordinary shall think meet for the largeness and straitness of the church and choir, so that the people may be most edified." [CARDW. Docum. Ann. i. 291.] This shews the origin of the "reading-desk" in the nave of the church, which eventually became so common. Such a disuse of the chancel led to an important change in the character of Divine Service by the abolition of choral service, the "clerks" who were accustomed to sit in the chancel seats and sing the responsive parts of the service being reduced to one "clerk," who sat in a seat in front of the "reading-desk," and said them in a manner that was seldom befitting the dignity of Divine Service. Instead, moreover, of the chancels remaining as they had done in times past, they were too often looked on either as a kind of lumber-room, to be cleared out once a quarter for the administration of the Holy Communion; or as a part of the church where the most comfortable and honourable seats were provided for the richer laity. Such customs have tended to obscure the sense of the rubric, and are recalled to memory only for the purpose of explaining how it came to be so disregarded in modern times.

In Griffin v. Dighton, Chief-Justice Erle decided (on appeal in 1864) that the chancel is, by the existing law, the place appointed for the Clergyman and for those who assist him in the performance of Divine Service; and that it is entirely under his control as to access and use, subject to the jurisdiction of the Ordinary.

And here is to be noted, That such Ornaments of the Church] This has been popularly called "The Ornaments Rubric," and may also be fittingly regarded as the Interpretation Clause to the Ritual Law of the Church of England. It is commented upon at length in the third section of the Ritual Introduction, pages 63-80.

<sup>1</sup> "Orders taken the x day of October, in the third year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady, Elizabeth, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, etc. By virtue of her Majesty's Letters addressed to her Highness' Commissioners for Causes Ecclesiastical as followeth." [Brit. Mus. 5155 aa. They are printed in HEYVLIN'S Hist. Reform. Eccl. Hist. Soc. ed. 1849, ii. 360; and also in PERRY'S Laudful Church Ornaments, p. 276.]

in the second Year of the reign of King Edw. VI.] The year thus indicated extended from January 28, 1548, to January 27, 1549. [NICOLAS' Chron. Hist. 330, ed. 1833.] As the first Prayer Book of Edward VI.'s reign, with the rest of the Act of Uniformity, passed the House of Lords on January 15th, and the House of Commons on January 21, 1549, it is possible that it had received the Royal Assent, and had thus "the authority of Parliament" before the expiration of this "second year" of Edward VI. on the 27th; but there is no evidence known to shew that such was the case, and all the evidence which is known is to the contrary: moreover, the book was not published until March 7th, and its use was ordered to begin only on June 9, 1549, more than four months after that "second year" of Edward's reign had ended.

The "Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers thereof," which were in use in the Church of England by authority of Parliament from January 28, 1548, to January 27, 1549, the second year of Edward VI., must therefore be understood as meaning those which had been used before the publication of the Prayer Book in the third year of Edward VI., and these were such Ornaments as had been in use previously to that King's reign, subject to such omissions as were made necessary by changes effected under Statutory authority.

[The Order for Morning Prayer] The word "Order" in the sense here intended has almost passed out of use. It simply means regulation or ordinance, according to its derivation from the Latin word ordo. Morning Prayer was called by the ancient popular name of "Mattins" (abbreviated from Matutina), in the original English Prayer Book of 1549; and that convenient name is still retained in the three Tables of Proper Lessons and Proper Psalms, and also in the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity.

[the Minister] That is, the person who ministers, whether Bishop, Priest, or, perhaps, Deacon. In the Latin Rubrics the corresponding term is "Executor officii." In the Rubrics of the Confirmation Office of 1549 the Bishop is called "Minister." In the fourth Rubric at the beginning of the Communion Service of the same date the Celebrant is called "the Priest that shall execute the holy Ministry." In Queen Elizabeth's time the old Latin word was still in use, e.g. "Item. That the Ministers receiving the Communion at the hands of the Executor be placed kneeling next to the Table." [BISHOPS' Interpr. of Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions; CARDWELL, Doc. Ann. i. 206.] Other examples might be given.

In Bishop Cosin's revision he appended to the word "Minister" the following note: "That is, he who at that time ministereth or celebrateth Divine Service;" and although it was not deemed necessary at the time to print this note, it is valuable to us now as shewing the technical meaning which was attached to the word Minister when used in the Rubric.

THE SENTENCES.

The ancient Mattins of the Church of England began with, "In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (and the sign of the Cross), followed by an inaudible recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Priest who officiated. Then was said, "O Lord, open Thou my lips: And my mouth shall shew forth Thy praise." This opening of the service was retained in the 1549 Prayer Book, but the Lord's Prayer was directed to be said "with a loud voice," instead of secretò. In the 1552 Prayer Book, these Sentences, with the Exhortation, Confession, and Absolution, were prefixed to Morning Prayer, but not to Evening Prayer. This addition was suggested, probably, by the second reformed Breviary of Cardinal Quignonez, in which the ancient Confession and Absolution, hereafter given, were placed at the beginning of Mattins. But other reasons are also apparent for the change. In the first place, the full effect of the dissolution of Monasteries was making itself felt by ritualists, and a penitential prefix to the service was considered more appropriate for a mixed congregation than the previous mode of opening it, which was suitable for communities professedly spending nearly their whole time in the religious portion of a Christian's duty. And, in the second place, a relaxation of the rule about private Confession made it expedient to place a public Confession and Absolution within the reach of all, day by day.

The Sentences themselves (which had nearly all been previously in use as Capitula, during Lent) are a reproduction at the beginning of Divine Service of the Invitatories which were prefixed to the Venite in the ancient Mattins. In both cases the object is to give the keynote to the service which is to follow. In the Salisbury use two such Sentences, with a Versicle and Collect, were prefixed to Mattins on Easter Day. These were still ordered to be "solemnly sung or said" in the same place in the 1549 Prayer Book; but on the appointment of the Sentences now in use, the former were directed to be used instead of Venite, and are printed before the Easter Collect. It was in this light that the Sentences were viewed by Bishop Andrewes, who suggested some others in the following note: "Adde huc, quod ad invitandam pœnitentiam egregia sunt misericordiæ et longanimitatis encomia; Ps. lxxviii. 38; Jer. iii. 7, 12; Heb. iv."

As Invitatories intended to give the keynote to the Service, they may be advantageously used in the following, or some similar, order, appropriate to the various days and seasons:— Advent: "Repent ye." "Enter not." "O Lord, correct me."
Lent: "The sacrifices." "Reud your heart."
Fridays and Vigils: "I acknowledge."
Wednesdays: "Hide thy face."
Ordinary days: "When the wicked man." "I will arise."
"If we say."

Sundays, other holydays, and Eves: "To the Lord our God."

There is a well-known traditional practice of singing one of these Sentences as an anthem; "I will arise" being very frequently so used. Such a practice seems to be in strict keeping with their character as Invitatories, and in analogy with the use of the Easter Sentences referred to; as also with such a use of the Offertory Sentences in the Communion Service.

[read with a loud voice] This is an ecclesiastical or technical phrase, the explanation of which is to be found in a Rubric before the Te Deum in the previous editions of the Prayer Book: "Then shall be read two Lessons distinctly with a loud voice." "Then shall the Lessons be sung in a plain tone, after the manner of distinct reading; and likewise the Epistle and Gospel." It is the clara vox of older ritualists, and presupposes a musical intonation, with or without inflection, to be the customary way of reciting Divine Service.

The old use of the word is illustrated by two passages in an ancient treatise on Divine Service. "And this solempnyte asketh both inwarde besynes to haue deuocyon in harte, and also in syngyng and redyng with tongue." The writer, a little further on, ensures those who use their own private devotions while Divine Service is going on, or "whyle other syng yt or rede yt by note." [Mirror of our Lady, Blunt's ed. pp. 22, 23.]

Some may consider that the terms of the Rubric, both here and before the Offertory Sentences, strictly limit the recitation of them to the clergyman officiating. There is, however, no ritual principle by which they are so limited.

THE EXHORTATION.

There is an analogy between this Exhortation and some which were used, at the Holy Communion and in Lent, in the ancient services of the Church of England. There is also a trace of similarity between it and the opening of POUILLAIN'S L'Ordre des Prières Ecclésiastiques, printed for the use of the German refugees at Glastonbury, in 1552. The words of the latter are, "Mes Frères, qu'un chascun de vous se présente devant la face du Seigneur, avec confession de ses fautes et péchez, suyvant de tout son cuer mes [pa]rolles."<sup>1</sup> But there is too little resemblance between our Exhortation and these to give any critical ground for supposing that it was founded upon any of them; and it must be concluded that those who revised the Prayer Book in 1552 were entirely responsible for its composition.

It has been called a short homily on Divine worship; and may also be taken as following up the general Invitatory, as it was followed formerly by the Venite. It was probably inserted here under the impression that the people at large were extremely ignorant of the true nature of Divine worship at the time. Five principal parts of worship are mentioned in it: [1] Confession of sin; [2] Absolution; [3] Thanksgiving and Praise; [4] The hearing of God's Word; [5] Prayer for spiritual and bodily benefits. In this structure also it bears some analogy to the Venite.

The Minister celebrating Divine Service is directed to "say" this Exhortation, "saying" being the ritual term for reciting on one musical note, or "monotoning," as distinguished from "singing," which is reciting with musical inflections, and from "reading," which is a general term, including both methods. If the Exhortation is said from memory, and with the face turned towards the congregation, it becomes much more expressive of the intention with which it was placed here, than when said as a mere form for passing away a few seconds, while the congregation is settling into a devotional frame of mind.

humble voice] This represents the submissa vox of old Rubrics. It indicates a low pitch of voice within the reach of all; and where the service is musical the Confession is best said on E. after me] See the next note.

THE GENERAL CONFESSION.

after the Minister] Bishop Cosin erased the word "after"

<sup>1</sup> This book was also printed in Latin, perhaps before it came out in French. The French edition seems to be very rare.

DEARLY beloved brethren, the Scripture moveth us in sundry places to acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness; and that we should not dissemble nor eloke them before the face of Almighty God our heavenly FATHER; but confess them with an humble, lowly, penitent, and obedient heart; to the end that we may obtain forgiveness of the same, by His infinite goodness and mercy. And although we ought at all times humbly to acknowledge our sins before God; yet ought we most chiefly so to do when we assemble and meet together, to render thanks for the great benefits that we have received at His hands, to set forth His most worthy praise, to hear His most holy Word, and to ask those things which are requisite and necessary, as well for the body as the soul. Wherefore I pray and beseech you, as many as are here present, to accompany me with a pure heart and humble voice, unto the throne of the heavenly grace, saying after me;

† A general Confession to be said of the whole congregation after the Minister, "all kneeling.

ALMIGHTY and most merciful FATHER; We have erred, and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have in this Rubric, and substituted "with;" but the original word was carefully restored, shewing that a distinction was intended between the two words in their ritual use. "After the Minister" means, that each clause is to be said first by the Minister alone, and then repeated by "the whole congregation" alone—i.e. while the Minister remains silent, as in the case of a response after a versicle. "With" the Minister means simultaneous recitation by him and the congregation together, and is ordered in the Rubric before the Lord's Prayer. Perhaps this was for no other reason than that the formulary was a new one, and that the people, not commonly using Prayer Books, required to be "taught by the Priest" in this manner, according to the expression used in the Rubric prefixed to the giving of the ring in the Marriage Service.

all kneeling] The word "all" was also one of Bishop Cosin's additions, and is illustrated by his note in another volume: "Kneeling is the most fit gesture for humble penitents; and being so, it is strange to see how in most places men are suffered to sit rudely and carelessly on their seats all the while this Confession is read; and others that be in church are nothing affected with it. They think it a thing of indifferency forsooth, if the heart be right." This sitting posture during public confessions was one of the abuses that scandalized the Puritans; and they sought to have a Canon passed, enjoining all to kneel. The eighteenth Canon does indeed direct that "all manner of persons then present shall reverently kneel upon their knees when the general Confession, Litany, and other prayers are read . . . testifying by these outward ceremonies and gestures their inward humility. . . ."

The gesture of kneeling here and elsewhere is not only a mark of personal humility and reverence, but also one of those acts required of every one as an individual component part of the body which forms the congregation; and to neglect it is to neglect a duty which is owing to God and man in this respect, as well as the other. We have no right to conspicuous private gestures in a public devotional assembly; nor are the gestures which we there use (in conformity to the rules of the Church) to be necessarily interpreted as hypocritical because our personal habits or feelings may not be entirely consistent with them. As the Clergy have an official duty in church, irrespective of their personal characters, so also have the Laity. It may be added, that a respectful conformity to rules enjoining such official duties may often lead onward to true personal reverence and holiness.

As far as present researches shew, the general Confession appears to be an original composition of some of the revisers of 1552; but its principal features are, of course, represented offended against Thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done ; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done ; And there is no "health in us. But Thou, O LORD, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. Spare Thou them, O GOD, which confess their faults. Restore Thou them that are penitent ; According to Thy promises declared unto mankind in CHRIST JESU our LORD. And grant, O most merciful FATHER, for His sake ; That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life, To the glory of Thy holy Name. Amen.

in confessional formularies of the Ancient Church, the ideas being a common heritage of every age and country. It has not undergone any alteration since its first introduction into Morning Prayer.

It has been observed<sup>1</sup> that this general Confession appears to be founded on Romans vii. 8-25.

We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. Sin . . . wrought in me all concupiscence."

We have offended against Thy holy laws. The law is holy . . . but I am carnal, sold under sin.

But Thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me ?

According to Thy promises, declared unto mankind in Christ Jesu our Lord. I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

All the phrases of the Confession have, however, a Scriptural ring ; and it was very likely compiled almost verbatim from some old English version of the Bible, or else freely rendered (according to the habit of the day in sermons) from the Vulgate Psalms and other Scriptures.

The manner and spirit in which a general confession of sins may be made personally and particularly applicable, is pointedly set forth in a Rubric which precedes the Confession to be used on board ship when there is danger of shipwreck : "When there is imminent danger, as many as can be spared from necessary service in the ship, shall be called together, and make an humble Confession of their sin to God, in which every one ought seriously to reflect upon those particular sins of which his conscience shall accuse him, saying as followeth." That a confession so made can be otherwise than acceptable to the Good Shepherd and Physician of our souls it is impossible to doubt. That further and more detailed confession is also sometimes necessary, the provisions made by the Church for her penitents, and the private habits of all pious Christians, make equally certain.

The "Amen" is part of the Confession, and is to be said by the Minister as well as the people, as is indicated by the type in which it is printed.

THE ABSOLUTION.

to be pronounced] This is an authoritative and magisterial term, as is shewn by its use in the Marriage Service, where the Priest is directed to say, "Forasmuch as . . . I pronounce that they be Man and Wife, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." So also in the Communion Service we find the expression used respecting the final condemnation of sinners, "O terrible voice of most just judgement, which shall be pronounced upon them." In Scotch sentences of death the judge uses the words, "This I pronounce for doom."

by the Priest alone, standing] This Rubric stood in the form "by the Minister alone" until 1661. Bishop Cosin altered it to "by the Minister alone, standing, and all the people still kneeling," and his alteration subsequently developed into the existing words before the revision was completed. The reason for inserting the word "standing" was that some of the Clergy had been accustomed to read it on their knees; although, as Bishop Andrewes wrote, "because he speaks it authoritative, in the Name of Christ and His Church, the Minister must not kneel, but stand up," and this posture was observed by the majority. The other three words, "the Priest alone," have a history which fixes their meaning. At the Savoy Conference of 1661 the Presbyterians' eleventh "exception" to the Prayer Book was to the effect that as the word "Minister" was used in the Rubric before the Absolution, and not "Priest," or "Curate," therefore it should be used instead of those words throughout the book. To this it was replied by the Church of England Commissioners that it would be unreasonable to use the word Minister alone ; for "since some parts of the Liturgy may be performed by a Deacon, others by none under the order of a Priest, viz. Absolution, Consecration, it is fit that some such word as Priest should be used for those officers, and not Minister, which signifies at large every one that ministers in that holy office, of what Order soever he be." The word "Minister" had formerly been used as identical with "Priest," as may be seen by the 32nd Canon, which forbids Bishops to "make any person, of what qualities or gifts soever, a Deacon and a Minister both together upon one day." This distinctive meaning had now passed away, and "Ministers" was colloquially the name for Dissenting preachers, and for Clergymen of every Order. By the insertion of the new word, therefore, the whole Rubric was intended to enjoin, not only that the congregation are not to repeat the Absolution, as they have repeated the Confession, but also that it must not be said by a Deacon. If a Deacon says Morning or Evening Prayer in the presence of a Priest, the latter must say the Absolution ; and if no Priest is present, the Deacon may make a pause, to give opportunity for the offering up of a short secret prayer by himself and the congregation, and then pass on to the Lord's Prayer.

The Absolution was composed by the Revisers of 1552, evidently with the old form of Absolution, which was used in the Prime and Compline Services, before them. There is also some similarity between the opening words and those of a prayer which was placed at the end of the Litany in the Primer of 1535 ; and which again, from the prayer, "Forgive us now while we have time and space," seems to have been founded on the ancient Absolution, with its "spatium vera poenitentiae," though the first part is identical with a Lenten Collect of St. Gregory's Sacramental.

Some phrases, a good deal like those of our Absolution, are also found in the form of prayer got up by John à Lasco, or Laski, a Polish refugee, for the German congregation which he was allowed to gather together at Austin-friars in London; but the likeness is not such as to make it probable that the English form was derived from his Latin one, though it does rather indicate that both were in part derived from some such originals as those printed in the text above.

Two questions have been raised with respect to this form of Absolution. First, whether those who composed it, and placed it where it is, intended it for an Absolution of penitent sinners, or merely for a declaration of God's mercy. Secondly, whether, irrespective of their intention, it is so constructed as to be effective for the remission of sins.

[1] The first question is all but decided by the title. Here, in the Communion Service, and in the Prayers to be used at Sea, the same word, "Absolution," is used for designating two different forms; and in the Visitation of the Sick, the third form in use by the Church of England is spoken of in the direction "the Priest shall absolve him." It seems beyond all probability that this designation could have been used of all three forms without any verbal distinction, and yet that a real difference of meaning lay hidden under the use of it, and that to such an extent as to make it in one place contradictory of itself in another place. What the word "Absolution" in the rubrical title so far proves, is confirmed by the addition made to it at the Hampton Court Conference of 1604, when it was altered to the "Absolution, or remission of sins," clearly shewing what opinion the Divines there assembled held respecting the intention with which the form was inserted fifty-one years before. It is still further confirmed by a note of Bishop Andrewes (one already quoted), in which, after saying that the Absolution is pronounced authoritative, he adds, "For authority of Absolution, see Ezek. xxxiii. 12; Job xxxiii. 23; Numb. vi. 24; 2 Sam. xii. 13; John xx. 23." An examination of these passages of Scripture will shew that Bishop Andrewes (one of the most learned theologians and Scriptural scholars that the Church of England has ever had) must certainly have supposed that this was intended for an actual Absolution; and that, in his opinion, it was such.

[2] The Absolution itself is constructed on a similar principle to that on which Collects are formed; and as the precatory part of a Collect is sometimes very short and condensed, so here the actual words of Absolution are only "He pardoneth and absolveth all them that truly repent and unfeignedly believe His holy Gospel." The preceding portion is a statement of the antecedent reasons—God's mercy, and the delegation of His authority—for pronouncing Absolution; and what follows is an authoritative exhortation to follow up the words of temporary confession and absolution with prayer for perseverance and final pardon. The words which thus form the essence of the Absolution are of a declaratory kind, while those in the old Morning and Evening Services of the Church were precatory, as may be seen from the original Latin form printed above, and its English translation in the note below; but the change has rather strengthened than weakened the force of the form adopted. Nor must we be led away by the word "declaratory," so often used to distinguish this from the other two forms of Absolution used in the Prayer Book; for to "declare" God's pardon of sinners is to give effect to that pardon, as when the authorized subordinate of an earthly sovereign declares pardon in that sovereign's name. This form is, in fact, closely analogous to the formulary of Baptism used in the Eastern Church: "The servant of God (N.) is baptized in the Name of the Father, Amen, and of the Son, Amen, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen." And as these words are undoubtedly sufficient for fulfilling our Lord's words, "Baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," so are the absolving words of our Absolution sufficient to fulfil His other words, "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them."

The special form in which the Absolution is moulded was probably adopted from a careful consideration of the use which was to be made of it. It is an Absolution uttered, as Benedictions are uttered, over a mixed congregation, and yet it can only be efficacious towards those who have honestly said the Confession as it is intended to be said. The conditions of pardon are therefore distinctly expressed, that the impenitent may not be misled, and take to themselves a forgiveness to which they have no claim. And as it is a public Absolution, "He pardoneth and absolveth" is adopted in analogy with the "tribuat vobis omnipotens et misericors Dominus," rather than the positive form, "by His authority I absolve," as used in absolving individual penitents.<sup>2</sup>

The effect of this Absolution in the daily services of the Church is [1] to reconcile the Church, as a community, daily to her God, through the mercies of Christ; [2] to prepare each person present for the work of offering praise to Him; [3] to convey pardon of sin to an extent correlative with true contrition in those over whom it is uttered. As was said in the case of the general Confession, that it does not supersede a particular confession; so it must be remembered that the general Absolution does not supersede a particular one. But the necessity for absolution is so great, that the Church has provided against any one being without it by this daily utterance of it, in which it is cast abroad as the Sower sowed his seed, on the stony as well as the good ground, or as God sends His rain upon the just and the unjust. It is a ministration in close analogy with the continual superabundance of the mercies of God in Christ, which flow down even to the skirts of our High Priest's clothing. According to the words, "freely ye have received, freely give," the Church casts her bread upon the waters in faith, believing that God's word of absolution will not return unto Him void. And for its efficiency, in the words of a recent writer, "all that is needed is that there be fit, i.e. truly repentant recipients of it; that secured, wheresoever it touches, it blesses and heals."<sup>3</sup>

Nevertheless it is probable, for reasons given on the next page, that the Absolution was not intended to be invariably used at all week-day Services.

The Priest, looking towards the Altar,

I confess to God, the Blessed Mary, and all the Saints [turning to the Choir], and to you, that I have sinned exceedingly in thought, word, and deed, of my own fault [looking back to the Altar]. I beseech Holy Mary, all the Saints of God, and [looking back to the Choir] you to pray for me.

The Choir replies, turning to the Priest,

Almighty God have mercy upon you, and forgive you all your sins, deliver you from all evil, preserve and strengthen you in all goodness, and bring you to everlasting life. Amen.

Then the Choir, turning to the Altar,

I confess to God . . . to pray for me.

Then let the Priest say to the Choir, in the first person, if necessary,

Almighty God have mercy upon you . . . everlasting life. Amen.

The Almighty and merciful Lord grant you Absolution and Remission of all your sins, space for true repentance, amendment of life, and the grace and consolation of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

THE VERSICLES.

O Lord, open Thou] These versicles and responses have been used time immemorial as the opening of the daily service of praise which the Church continually offers to God. They are mentioned in the rule of St. Benedict (the great founder of the Benedictine order, which guarded and expressed the devotional system of the Church for so many ages, and who died in A.D. 543), as the prefatory part of the service; and he probably adopted them from the previous custom of the Church; the two Psalms from which they are taken having been used at the beginning of the daily Offices in the East from the earliest ages. Taken from such a source, with only the change from the singular to the plural number in the pronouns,<sup>1</sup> they form a most fitting prefix to the Psalmody which is so integral a portion of Divine Service. Except the Lord open our lips, we cannot shew forth His praise with the heart. They are the "Suscum Corda" of the Daily Service, and yet have a tone of humility, and even penitence, given to them by their derivation from the fifty-first and seventieth Psalms. It is probably to express this penitential tone that the musical note to which the first of them is said by the Priest is always a low one, being depressed as much as a fifth from the pitch in which the Lord's Prayer has been recited: and also that we continue kneeling till the Gloria Patri. The second versicle is a paraphrase of the "Hosanna,"—Save, Lord, we beseech Thee,—with which our Lord was led in triumph to the Temple.

GLORIA PATRI AND ALLELUIA

The beautiful dogmatic anthem which is here used for the first time in the service is of primitive origin: and, if not an independently inspired form, is naturally traceable to the angelic hymns in Isa. vi. 3 and Luke ii. 13, the Trinitarian form of it being equally traceable to that of the baptismal formula ordained by our Lord in Matt. xxviii. 19. Clement of Alexandria, who wrote before the end of the second century, refers to the use of this hymn under the form, Αἰνοῦντες τῷ μόνῳ πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, "giving glory to the one Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost," and a hymn of about the same date is printed by Dr. Routh, in which there is an evident trace of the same custom: ἑμοῦμεν πατέρα καὶ υἱόν, καὶ ἅγιον πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, "Praise we the Father and Son, and Holy Spirit of God." It is also referred to even earlier by Justin Martyr. The Arian heretics made a great point of using Church phraseology in their own novel and heretical sense; and they adopted the custom of singing their hymn in the form, "Glory be to the Father, by the Son, and in the Holy Ghost," by which they intended to evade the recognition of each Person as God. It thus became necessary for the Church to adopt a form less capable of such perversion; and in ancient liturgies it is found as it is still used in the Eastern Church, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, now and ever, world without end." In the Western Church, the second part, "As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end," has been used for nearly as long a period, being found ordered in the fifth Canon of the Council of Vaison, presided over by Caesarius of Arles, in A.D. 529. The use of the hymn in this place, after the Domine ad adjuvandum, is also recognized by the rule of St. Benedict a few years further on in the sixth century; and it is found so placed in the earliest English services, those which are usually called "Anglo-Saxon." It also occurs in the same position in the daily offices of the Eastern and the Roman Churches at the present day: so that the Church throughout the world opens its lips day by day with the same words of faith in the Blessed Trinity, and of devout praise to each Person; worshipping One God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity. The addition of the succeeding versicle and response gives to this unity of praise on earth a further likeness to the unity of praise which was revealed to St. John: "And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye His servants, and ye that fear Him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." [Rev. xix. 6.]

In the Prayer Book of 1549 the old usage of saying the "Hallelujah" from Easter to Trinity Sunday in this place was continued. It was expunged altogether in 1552; restored in the English form, "Praise ye the Lord," and for constant use, in the Elizabethan revision. The response to it, "The Lord's <sup>1</sup> This change of pronouns was made in 1552. A reason for retaining the singular is given in an old exposition of the Hours, "And take heed that all this verse, both that part that is said of one alone, and that that is answered of all together, are said in the singular number; as when ye say 'mine,' or 'me,' and not 'our,' or 'us,' in token that ye begin your praising and prayer in the person of holy Church, which is one, and not many. For though there be many members of holy Church, as there are many Christian men and women, yet they make one body, that is holy Church, whereof Christ is the Head." The same commentary explains that "O Lord, open Thou my lips," and its response, were used only at Mattins, because all the day after the lips should remain ready for God's praises. Name be praised," is first found in the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637, and was inserted here in 1661. The latter represents in an unvarying form the variable invitatories which used to precede the Venite in the old Latin services.

There are two ancient customs still kept up with respect to the Gloria Patri. The one is that of turning to the East, as in the recitation of a Creed, whenever it is said or sung in Divine Service; an usage enjoined in the ancient Psalter of the Church of England, and still observed in many Churches, as, for example, at Manchester Cathedral. The other custom is a more general one, that of reverently inclining the head during the first half of the hymn, as a humble gesture recognizing the Divine glory of each of the Three Persons, and in imitation of the gesture of the angels, who veil their faces with their wings when singing to the glory of the Trinity in the vision of Isaiah. An old Canon of the Church of England enjoins: "Quotiesque dicitur Gloria Patri et Filio et Spiritui Sancto, ad eadem verba Deo humiliter se inclinent." [WILKINS' Conc. iii. 20.] And in the Mirror there is the direction, "Ye incline at Gloria Patri."

Bishop Cosin wished to revive the use of Invitatories on Sundays, having inserted this Rubric in the Prayer Book which was laid before the Revisers of 1661, immediately after "Praise ye the Lord:" "And upon any Sunday, or Lord's Day, this commemoration of His rising from the dead shall be said or sung, 'Priest, Christ is risen againe,' etc. And upon the Feast of Easter, Christ, our Passover, is offered up for us. Therefore, let us keep the feast, etc., ut in die Pasch. Then shall be said or sung," the Venite as we now have it.

Then shall be said or sung] This Rubric, as altered by Bishop Cosin, has great historical value, for the illustration that it gives of the mode in which the Psalms were intended to be said or sung. It is as follows: "Then shall be said or sung this Psalm following (except on Easter Day, when another Anthem is appointed), one verse by the priest, and another by the people; and the same order shall be observed in all psalmes and hymns throughout this Book. But in colledges, and where there is a Quire, the same shall be sung by sides, as hath bin accustomed." In the third series of his notes on the Prayer Book there are also these remarks on the response, "And our mouth shall shew forth Thy praise:" "This is the answer of all the people. In the second book of Edward VI. the word 'Choir' is everywhere put for our word 'Answer;' and by making this answer, they promise for themselves that they will not sit still to hear the psalms and hymns read only to them, as matter of their instruction; but that they will bear a part in them with the priest, and keep up the old custom still of singing, and answering verse by verse, as being specially appointed for the setting forth of God's praise; whereunto they are presently invited again by the minister in these words, 'Praise ye the Lord.' So that our manner of singing by sides, or all together, or in several parts, or in the people's answering the priest in repeating the psalms and hymns, is here grounded; but if the minister say all alone, in vain was it for God's people to promise God, and to say that their mouth also should shew forth His praise." [COSIN'S Works, v. 445.]

VENITE EXULTEMUS.

This Psalm has been used from time immemorial as an introduction to the praises of Divine Service; and was probably adopted by the Church from the services of the Temple.<sup>1</sup> It was perhaps such a familiar use of it in both the Jewish and the Christian system of Divine Service which led to the exposition of it given in the third chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, where the Apostle is shewing the connection between the two dispensations, and the way in which all belief and worship centres in our Divine High Priest and perpetual Sacrifice.

In one of St. Augustine's sermons he plainly refers thus to the ritual use of the Venite: "This we have gathered from the Apostolic lesson. Then we chanted the Psalm, exhorting one another, with one voice, with one heart, saying, 'O come, let us adore, and fall down before Him, and weep before the Lord Who made us.' In the same Psalm too, 'Let us prevent His face with confession, and make a joyful noise unto Him with psalms.' After these the lesson of the Gospel shewed us the ten lepers cleansed, and one of them, a stranger, giving thanks to his cleanser." [ST. AUG. Serm. Ben. ed. 176, Oxf. trans. 126.] Durandus, in his Rationale of Divine Offices, says that this psalm was sung at the beginning of the service to call the congregation out of the churchyard into the church ; and that it was hence called the Invitatory Psalm ; but probably this was a local or temporary use of it, and does not represent the true spirit of its introduction into the Morning Service. It is far more likely that its comprehensive character, as an adoration of Christ, was that which moved the Divine Instinct wherewith the Church is endowed to place this psalm in the forefront of her Service of Praise.<sup>1</sup>

Until the translation of our Offices into English it was the custom to sing the Venite in a different manner from that now used ; with the addition, that is, of Invitatories. These were short sentences (varied according to the ecclesiastical season) which were sung before the first verse, after each of the five verses into which it was then divided, and also after the Gloria Patri at the end. Thus in Trinity Season, "Laudemus Jesum Christum ; quia Ipse est Redemptor omnium seculorum," would be sung before and after the first, and also after the third and fifth of the divisions indicated in the Latin version above. After the second, fourth, and Gloria Patri, would be sung "Quia Ipse est Redemptor omnium seculorum" only ; and at the conclusion the whole of the Response, as at the beginning. These Invitatories were altogether set aside, as regards the Venite, in 1549 ; and, as has been already shewn, the "Sentences" were substituted for them at the commencement of Divine Service in 1552. Thus reduced to its psalter simplicity, the Venite Exultemus is used before the Psalms every morning, except upon Easter Day, when a special Invitatory Anthem is substituted, which is printed before the Collect for the day. On the nineteenth day of every month it is sung in its place as one of the Mattins psalms, so as not to be twice used at the same service, which is a continuation of the old English usage.

An old custom lingers (especially in the North of England) of making a gesture of reverence at the words, "O come, let us worship and fall down ;" which is a relic of the custom of actual prostration as it was once made in many churches at these words.

The Rubrics between the Venite and the Te Deum were all rearranged in 1661 ; and the new arrangement, as we now have it, appears in MS. in Bishop Cosin's Prayer Book. The only changes of importance were these. [1] "He that readeth," and "He shall say," were substituted for "the minister that readeth," and "the minister shall say," in the direction about the Lessons. [2] This Rubric of the preceding books was erased, "And to the end the people may the better hear in such places where they do sing, there shall the lessons be sung in a plain tune, after the manner of distinct reading, and likewise the epistle and gospel."

An English version of the Venite about a century older than that of the Prayer Book will be found in the Mirror of our Lady. [Mirror, Blunt's ed. p. xli.]

THE PSALMS.

For notes relating to the ritual use of the Psalms, the reader is referred to the Introduction to the Psalter.

After the Psalms have been sung it is customary in many churches to play a short voluntary on the organ : this is mentioned by Archbishop Secker as having "long been customary" in his day ; and in a letter from Oxford in No. 630 of the Spectator. Perhaps it may be accounted for by a Salisbury Rubric between the Psalms and Lessons, "Deinde dicitur Paternoster et Credo in Deum a toto choro privatim." So at Durham a voluntary has also been substituted for the "Agnus Dei," which was once sung during the Communion of the Laity.

And at the end of every Psalm] Where the Psalms are said in alternate verses by the Minister and the people it is obviously proper that the first part of the Gloria Patri should always be said by the Minister.

THE CANTICLES.

The ritual use of Holy Scripture in Divine Service has always been connected with praise and thanksgiving. The short responds which were intermingled with the Lessons in the pre-Reformation Services were very ancient in their origin, although, no doubt, they had increased in number during the development of the Services for monastic use. Of a like antiquity is the "Glory be to Thee, O Lord," before, and the "Thanks be to Thee, O Lord," after the reading of the Gospel in the Communion Service. As will be seen in the account given of the Te Deum, the use of responsory hymns after the Lessons is also very ancient; and it probably arose out of the pious instinct which thus connected the idea of thanksgiving with the hearing of God's revelations to man. The Council of Laodicea [A.D. 367] ordered, in its seventeenth Canon, that Psalms and Lessons should be used alternately; and this Canon doubtless refers to a custom similar to ours.

A leading principle of all the Canticles appears to be that of connecting the written with the personal Word of God; and that as much in respect to the Old Testament Lessons as to those taken out of the Gospel or other parts of the New Testament. This is more especially true of those Canticles which are placed first of the two in each case, the Te Deum, the Benedictus, the Magnificat, and the Nunc Dimittis. The three latter of these were inspired hymns spoken at the time when the Eternal Word was in the act of taking our nature to redeem and glorify it; and the first is, if not inspired, the most wonderful expression of praise for the abiding Incarnation of our Lord that uninspired lips have ever uttered. It may also be observed that the Canticles are set where they are, not that they may apply to any particular chapters of the Holy Bible, though they often do so in a striking manner, but with reference to Divine revelation as a whole, given to mankind by God in His mercy and love, and therefore a matter for deepest thankfulness and most exalted praise.

The three New Testament Canticles are all taken from the Gospel of St. Luke; the sacrificial and sacerdotal gospel, the symbol of which is the "living creature like unto a calf" or "an ox;" and in which is chiefly set forth our Blessed Lord's relation to the Church as her High Priest offering Himself for sin, and originating from His own Person all subordinate ministrations of grace.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS.

This most venerable hymn has been sung by the whole Western Church "day by day" on all her feasts from time immemorial. It is found in our own Morning Service as far back as the Conquest; and its insertion in the Salisbury Portiforium by St. Osmund was doubtless a continuation of the old custom of the Church of England.

Very ancient ecclesiastical traditions represent the Te Deum as a hymn antiphonally extemporized by St. Ambrose and St. Augustine at the baptism of the latter, A.D. 386. The written authority for this tradition is traceable to an alleged work of St. Datus, a successor of St. Ambrose in the See of Milan, A.D. 552. But this work has been proved by Menard, Muratori, and Mabillon to be of much later date. There is also a Psalter in the Vienna Library, which was given by the Emperor Charlemagne to Pope Adrian I, A.D. 772, in the Appendix of which the Te Deum is found with the title "Hymnus quem Sanctus Ambrosius et Sanctus Augustinus invicem condiderunt;" and a similar title is found in other ancient copies. The title anciently given to it in the Psalter of our own Church was, "Canticum Ambrosii et Augustini," and in 1661 Bishop Cosin wished so far to restore this title as to call it "The Hymn of St. Ambrose;" but the ancient rubrical title was as it is at present. In the earliest mention that we have of it (i.e. in the rule of St. Benedict, framed in the beginning of the sixth century), it has the same title as in our present Prayer Book, the words of St. Benedict being "Post quartum Responsorium incipit Abbas Te Deum Laudamus, quo predicto legat Abbas lectionem de Evangelio . . ." It is also named in the rule of St. Casarius of Arles about the same date; being ordered to be sung at Mattins every Sunday in both systems. There is no reason to think that it was then new to the Church; but we may rather conclude that it was a well-known hymn which the great founder of the Benedictines adopted for the use of his order from the ordinary use of the Church at large.

But the authorship of this Divine hymn has been assigned to several saints both by ancient and modern authors, the earliest being St. Hilary of Poitiers, A.D. 355, and the latest, Nicetius, Bishop of Treves, A.D. 535. Some ancient copies, in the Vatican and elsewhere, give it the titles of Hymnus S. Abundii, and Hymnus Sisebuti monachi. It has also been attributed to St. Hilary of Arles, and to a monk of Lerins, whose name is not known ; the number of persons named shewing how much uncertainty has always surrounded the matter. It is scarcely possible that so remarkable a hymn should have originated in so remarkable a manner as that first referred to without some trace of it being found in the works of St. Ambrose or St. Augustine, especially the Confessions of the latter.<sup>1</sup> It may be that their names were connected with it because the one introduced it into the Church of Milan, and the other (taught by St. Ambrose) into the Churches of Africa.

For there is reason to think that the Te Deum Laudamus is much older than the time of St. Ambrose. So early as A. D. 252 we find the following words in St. Cyprian's Treatise "On the Mortality" that was then afflicting Carthage : "Ah, perfect and perpetual bliss ! There is the glorious company of the Apostles ; there is the fellowship of the prophets exulting ; there is the innumerable multitude of martyrs, crowned after their victory of strife and passion ;" and the striking parallel between them and the seventh, eighth, and ninth verses of the Te Deum seems certainly more than accidental. There are several coincidences also between words in the Baptismal and other offices of the Eastern Church and particular verses of the Te Deum, and the former are supposed to be of extremely ancient date. In the Alexandrine MS. of the Scriptures, a work of the fourth or fifth century, preserved in the British Museum, there is moreover a Morning Hymn which is written at the end of the Psalter, and which is still used in the daily services of the Greek Church. [See also GRAEVE'S LXX. 1709, p. 403.] The following is a translation :—

Glory to Thee, the Giver of light.

Glory to God on high, and on earth peace, good will towards men.

We praise Thee, we bless Thee, we worship Thee, we glorify Thee, we give thanks to Thee for Thy great glory.
O Lord, heavenly King, God, Father Almighty : O Lord, only-begotten Son Jesus Christ, and Holy Spirit.

O Lord God, Lamb of God, Son of the Father, that takest away the sin of the world ; have mercy upon us, Thou that takest away the sin of the world.

Accept our prayer : Thou that sittest at the right hand of the Father, have mercy upon us.

For Thou only art holy ; Thou only Lord Jesus Christ art in the glory of God the Father. Amen.

Day by day I bless Thee, and praise Thy Name for ever, and for ever and ever.

Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep me this day without sin.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord God of our fathers ; and praised and glorified be Thy Name for ever. Amen.

Lord, let Thy mercy be upon us, as our trust is in Thee. Ps. xxxiii. 22.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord : O teach me Thy statutes. Ps. cxix. 12.

Lord, Thou hast been our refuge, from one generation to another. Ps. xc. 1.

I said, Lord, be merciful to me, heal my soul, for I have sinned against Thee. Ps. xli. 4.

Lord, I fly to Thee ; teach me to do Thy will, for Thou art my God. Ps. cxliii. 2, 10.

For with Thee is the well of life ; in Thy light shall we see light. Ps. xxxvi. 9.

<sup>1</sup> In the latter we do indeed read " . . . we were baptized, and anxiety for our past life vanished from us. Nor was I satel in those days with the wondrous sweetness of considering the depth of Thy counsels concerning the salvation of mankind. How did I weep, in Thy Hymns and Canticles, touched to the quick by the voices of Thy sweet-attuned Church !" [Sr. Acta Conf. IX. vi. p. 166, Oxf. trans.] But this passage seems rather to indicate the use of Canticles already well known than the invention of any new one.

Shew forth Thy mercy to them that know Thee.

Ps. xxxvi. 10.

O holy God, O holy Might, O holy Immortal, have mercy upon us. Amen.

The first division of this hymn is identical with the Eucharistic Gloria in Excelsis, and the last verse is the Trisagion of the ancient Eastern Liturgies ; the remaining portion has clearly a common origin with the Te Deum. Verses 8 and 9 are the same as the 24th and 26th verses of the latter. The 11th is also identical with the last of the Te Deum, but it is taken from Psalm xxxiii. 22. Like the Te Deum, this ancient Morning Hymn of the Greek Church borrows largely from the Psalms in its concluding portion, and the verses chosen are of a supplicatory character in both, though otherwise they do not correspond.

The most probable conclusion to arrive at is, that this noble Canticle, in its present form, is a composition of the fourth or fifth century ; and that it represents a still more ancient hymn, of which traces are to be found in St. Cyprian and the Morning Hymn of the Alexandrine Manuscript.

The Te Deum is only known as connected with the ritual of the Church. It seems also from the first to have been connected with the reading of the Morning Lessons, the expression "Keep us this day without sin" being some evidence of this, though not convincing, as an analogous form is used in "Give us this day our daily bread." In the Salisbury Use, which probably represents the more ancient use of the Church of England, it was directed to be sung after the last lesson on Sundays and other Festivals, except during Advent and the Lenten season from Septagesima to Easter. Quignonez, in his Reformed Roman Breviary, directed it to be used every day even in Lent and Advent. The Prayer Book of 1549 ordered it to be used "daily throughout the year, except in Lent ;" and as Festivals were previously almost of daily occurrence, this was practically a continuance of the old rule. In 1552 the exception was erased, and has not since been restored ; but as the alternative Canticle, Benedicite, remains, some ritualists conclude that it is to be used in Lent, as originally directed by the First Book of Edward VI., and not the Te Deum.<sup>2</sup> Of ritual customs anciently connected with the singing of this hymn, one still retains a strong hold upon English people, viz. that of bowing at the words "Holy, Holy, Holy," with the same reverent gesture that is used in the Creed : a custom derived from the angelic reverence spoken of in Isaiah in connection with the same words. "And for bycause Angels praise God with great reverence, therefore ye incline when ye sing their song,"<sup>3</sup> says the Mirror. The same work also says, "And therefore, according to the angels, ye sing quire to quire, one Sanctus on the one side, and another on the other side, and so

<sup>2</sup> This is not the ancient practice of the Church, it must be remembered. During Advent the following was sung instead of Te Deum on all Festivals when the latter would otherwise have been used. It is the last of nine Responsories [Responsoria] used after the nine Lessons respectively.

Et pauperum suorum miseretur."

The ancient ritual use of the Benedicite was entirely festive ; though it was not indeed set aside from its place in Lauds during Lent and Advent.

In Monasteries the Te Deum was sung all the year round [Grancolas, cap. 33] ; and in Quignonez' Reformed Breviary it was ordered for Festivals even in Advent and Lent. But admirable substitutes for it at these seasons might be found in two other of the discontinued Lauds Canticles, the Song of Hezekiah [Isa. xxxviii] being exactly adapted for Lent, and that of Habakkuk [Hab. iii.] being equally suitable for Advent. The Salisbury version of the latter [from the Vulgate] had two beautiful renderings of the 13th and 18th verses : "Thou wentest forth for the salvation of Thy people : even for salvation with Thy Christ ;" and "Yet I will rejoice in the Lord : I will joy in God my Jesus."

We therefore pray Thee, help Thy servants : whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy precious blood.

“Make them to be numbered with Thy Saints : in glory everlasting.

O LORD, save Thy people : and bless Thine heritage.

Govern them : and lift them up for ever.

Day by day : we magnify Thee ;

And we worship Thy Name : ever world without end.

a Make Thy servants to be rewarded in endless bliss. [Mirror.]

forth of other verses.” The custom seems to have been to sing each Sanctus on one side of the quire only, the remainder of the verse on both sides, and then to proceed with the succeeding verses in regular antiphonal order.

Besides the use of the Te Deum in the Morning Service, there is a well-known custom of singing this triumphal hymn, by itself, arranged to elaborate music, as a special service of thanksgiving. It is directed to be used in this manner in “Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea, after Victory, or deliverance from an Enemy :” and at the conclusion of coronations it is always so used, as it has been, time immemorial, in England, and over the whole of Europe :—

“Which performed, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the Kingdom,
Together sing Te Deum.”

[Henry VIII. Act iv. sc. 1.]

The Sovereigns of England have been accustomed to go in state to the singing of the Te Deum after great victories, and Handel’s “Dettingen Te Deum” was composed for one of these occasions. Custom has also established this separate use of the Te Deum on other important occasions of thanksgiving.

The most ancient Christian music known has come down to us in connection with this Canticle ; being that known as the “Ambrosian Te Deum,” which is found in a work on Music written by Boëthius, a Roman Consul, in A.D. 487. This is, however, thought to be an adaptation of the Temple psalmody of the Jews, like the other ancient Church tones.

A very striking characteristic of this heavenly hymn is the strictly doctrinal form in which it is composed, which makes it a literal illustration of St. Paul’s words, “I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.” [1 Cor. xiv. 15.] It has been thought by some, from the singularity of the opening words, Te Deum, that it is throughout a hymn to Christ as God, representing, or analogous to, that spoken of by Pliny in his letter to Trajan. But the English version truly represents the Latin form, in which a double accusative is joined to the verb laudamus that could not be otherwise rhythmically translated. That the English Church has always considered the earlier verses of it to be addressed to the First Person of the Blessed Trinity is evidenced by the ancient Salisbury Antiphon to the Athanasian Creed, which is “Te Deum Patrem ingenitum, te Filium unigenitum, te Spiritum Sanctum Paracletum, sanctam et individuum Trinitatem toto corde et ore confitemur.” It has also been conjectured that the 11th, 12th, and 13th verses have been interpolated, but there is not the slightest ground for this conjecture, all ancient MSS. in Latin, Teutonic of the ninth century, and English from the ninth to the fourteenth, reading precisely the same ; and the hymn being rendered imperfect by their omission.

The first ten verses are an offering of praise to the Father Almighty, with the Scriptural recognition of the Blessed Trinity implied in the Ter Sanctus which Isaiah heard the Seraphim sing when he beheld the glory of Christ, and spake of Him. In the three following verses this implied recognition of the Three in One is developed into an actual ascription of praise to each, the Pater immense Majestatis, the Unicus Filius, and the Sanctus Paracletus Spiritus. In these thirteen verses the Unity and Trinity of the Divine Nature is celebrated in the name of the whole Church of God. The Militant Church, the various orders of holy Angels with which it has fellowship in the New Jerusalem, the Apostles, Prophets, and Martyrs of the Old and New Dispensation now gathered into the Church Triumphant, all thus adore God the Lord, the Lord God of Sabaoth, the Father Everlasting : and the holy Church gathers up its praises in a devout acknowledgement of each Person of the Blessed Trinity as the Object of Divine worship. Then begins that part of the hymn which glorifies God for the blessing of the Incarnation : the latter sixteen verses addressing themselves to our Lord and Saviour ; commemorating His Divine Nature and Eternal Existence, His Incarnation, Sacrifice, Ascension, and Session at the right hand of the Father. In the last verses, with a mixture of plaintiveness and triumph, the hymn follows the line marked out by the angels at the Ascension, looking to our Lord’s Second Advent as the true complement of His First. This concluding portion is as well fitted to express the tone of a Church Militant as the initial portion is to express that of a Church Triumphant : and the personal form of the last verse is a touching reminder of the individual interest that each of us has in the corporate work of praise and prayer of which Divine Service is constituted. Few uninspired compositions give so clear an echo of the spirit and depth of Holy Scripture.

There are three verses of the Te Deum which require special notice, with reference to the modern Latin and English in which they are given to us at the present day.

[1] The ninth verse, “Te Martyrum caudatus, laudat exercitus,” is very insufficiently rendered by “The noble army of Martyrs praise Thee.” In pre-Reformation versions it stood, “The, preieth the white oost of martiris ;” and considering the distinct connection between this verse and Rev. vii. 9, 14, it is strange that the Scriptural idea of “white robes” which have been “made white in the blood of the Lamb,” should have been superseded by the word “noble.” It is possible that the idea of something lustrous and pure was more expressed by “noble” in the early part of the sixteenth century than is conveyed by it to modern ears ;<sup>1</sup> but the change of the word from the old English “white,” and Anglo-Saxon “shining,” has gone far to obliterate the true sense of the original in our present version.

[2] In the sixteenth verse the ancient and modern English versions alike fail to give the full sense of the Latin. The former usually give, “Tu wert nozt skoymes [squeamish] to take the maydenes wombe, to delyver mankynde,” which is little different in sense from our present version. But it is clear that “Tu, ad liberandum, suscepturus hominem” includes a reference to the Incarnation, as much as “non horruisti Virginis uterum ;” and if the ordinary text of the Latin were received as correct, the verse would be more literally rendered, “Thou, being about to takemanhood upon Thee, to deliver it.”

But it is nearly certain that the received reading is a corrupt one. In the Utrecht Psalter, which is thought by some experts to have been written in the sixth century, the reading is “Tu ad liberandum suscepisti hominem ;” and in the Bangor Antiphony, written about the end of the eighth century, it is, “Tu ad liberandum mundum suscepisti hominem.” The author of the Mirror of our Lady gets very near to the first of these two readings in the version which is given above in the margin. The second might be given with a slight alteration of our present English version in the form, “When Thou tookest upon Thee manhood to deliver the world.”

It is not improbable that some early copyist having written the last letters of “liberandum,” took them, as he turned his eyes to his work after a pause, for the last letters of mundum, and went on at once to “suscepisti.” Afterwards, not earlier than the twelfth century, the verb may have been altered to “suscepturus” for the purpose of connecting “liberandum” with “hominem.”

[3] The twenty-first verse has been altered both in Roman Breviaries and in the English Prayer Book. All Latin MSS. previously to 1492 read “Æterna fac cum sanctis Tuis gloria munerari ;” and the equivalent of munerari is found in every known version of the Te Deum up to that time ; our own in the fourteenth century being, “Make hem to be rewarded with thi seyntes, in endles blisse.” The “numerari” reading appears to be an error of the early printers, arising out of the very slight difference presented by nun and nun in black letter ; and the easy occurrence of such an error is illustrated by a story which De Thou tells respecting the imprisonment of a Landgrave of Hesse by the Emperor. In the Landgrave's treaty of submission there was a condition that he should not suffer any imprisonment. "Nicht ein ring tag gefangen sein : " this the Emperor's minister read, "Nicht ein ring tag gefangen sein," that he should not suffer perpetual imprisonment. On this pretence they sent the Landgrave to prison directly on his arrival at the Emperor's court. [De Thou, iv. 13.] The word "in" is a modern insertion of the same date, and probably arose from confusion between the twenty-first and the eighteenth verses, in the latter of which occurs "in gloria Patris." Since our Lord said, "Great is your reward in Heaven," and "Himself shall reward you openly," the old English rendering of munerari is quite Scriptural ; but it may be pointed out that the sense of the Latin is rather that of free gift than reward, munerari, not re-munerari. Perhaps the original may be rendered, "Make them to be awarded with Thy saints : Thy glory everlasting," without departing from the sense of the original, or the familiar rhythm of our Prayer Book version. The received version, although not faithful to the original, is happily comprehensive ; for, to be "numbered with the children of God," and to have a "lot among the saints," is to receive the "great recompense of reward," the heavenly heritage of those who are joint heirs with Christ of His triumphant kingdom.<sup>1</sup>

THE BENEDICITE.

There is no doubt that this Canticle is of Jewish origin, although its claim to be part of the Canonical Book of Daniel is not recognized by the modern Church of England, which has placed it among the books of the Apocrypha. It has a great resemblance to the 148th Psalm, and is generally considered to be a paraphrase of it.

Several of the Fathers speak of the Benedicite as being used in the Services of the Church. [CYRIL, de Laps., de Orat. Dom. ; AUG. de Civ. Dei, xi. 9 ; CONC. TOLET. iv. can. xiii.] St. Chrysostom especially refers to it as "that admirable and <sup>1</sup> It should be added, however, that the Venerable Bede, who was almost contemporary with Gregory the Great, records some words of his which contain something very like this reading : "Sed et in ipsa missarum celebratione tria verba maxime perfectionis plena superadjeit, 'Diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab æterna damnatione nos eripi, et in electorum tuorum jubeas grege numerari.'" marvellous song, which from that day to this hath been sung everywhere throughout the world, and shall yet be sung in future generations." [CHRYSOST. Hom. de Stat. iv.] Rufinus speaks of it in the same manner (in defending its Canonical authority against Jerome),<sup>1</sup> as having been sung by holy confessors and martyrs, who would not have been permitted to sing that as Holy Scripture which is not so. It was used as one of the Psalms at Lauds as early as the time of St. Athanasius, and occupied the same position on Sundays in the ancient services of the Church of England. When the Psalter was restricted, in 1549, to the hundred and fifty psalms which go by the general name of the Psalms of David, the Song of the Three Children was placed after the Te Deum, to be used as a responsory canticle to the first Lesson, under the title "Benedicite, Omnia Opera Domini Domino." This use of it was not by any means novel, as it was said between the Lessons (according to Mabillon), in the old Gallican ritual which was once common to France and England.

When first inserted in its present place, this Canticle was ruled by the following Rubric prefixed to the Te Deum :

"¶ After the first Lesson shall follow throughout the year (except in Lent, all the which time, in the place of Te Deum, shall be used Benedicite Omnia Opera Domini Domino) in English, as followeth." This Rubric was altered to its present form in 1552, the object of the alteration being probably to allow greater freedom in the substitution of Benedicite for Te Deum. It was an ancient rule to use the former when any portion of the Prophet Daniel was read. In more recent times it has been customary to sing it when Genesis i., or when Daniel iii., is the first Lesson ; and on week-days during Lent and Advent.<sup>2</sup> The ordinary Doxology was substituted for the one proper to the psalm in 1549. The latter is, "O let us bless the Father, and the Son, with the Holy Ghost : let us praise Him, and magnify Him for ever. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, in the firmament of Heaven ; worthy to be praised, and glorious, and to be magnified for ever." Pope Damasus [A.D. 366] is said to have been its author ; but it is founded on the verse which precedes the words "Benedicite Omnia Opera."

sponsory canticle to the Gospel Lessons from very ancient times, being spoken of as so used by Amalarius [A.D. 820] ; and perhaps by St. Benedict, nearly three centuries earlier, since he speaks of a Canticum de Evangelio occurring here in Mattins. In the Salisbury Use it occupied a similar position, but was not so definitely connected with the Lessons themselves as it now is, being used after the Capitulum, at Lauds, on Sundays. It was the only Canticle appointed for use after the second Morning Lesson in 1549, and the Rubric by which it is preceded shews very clearly that it is intended to be the ordinary Canticle, the Jubilate being an exceptional one, inserted to avoid repetition on St. John Baptist's Day, or whenever the Benedictus occurs in the second Lesson itself. That it was the Canticle most used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is shewn by the Service-books of Cathedral choirs, in which it is much more frequently set to music than the Jubilate.

The position of this Canticle makes its ritual meaning self-evident. It is a thanksgiving to Almighty God for His mercy as exhibited towards mankind in the Incarnation of our Lord, whereof the Gospel speaks, and in the foundation of the Church in His blood, as recorded in the Acts of the Holy Apostles. It is the last prophecy of the Old Dispensation, and the first of the New, and furnishes a kind of key to the Evangelical interpretation of all prophecies under the one by which they are connected with the other. The Benedictus is a continual acknowledgement also of the Communion of Saints under the two Dispensations ; for it praises God for the salvation which has been raised up for all ages out of the house of His servant David, and according to the ancient covenant which He made with Abraham, "the father of them that believe, though they be not circumcised" [Rom. iv. 11] ; whose seed all are if they are Christ's, and heirs according to the promise. [Gal. iii. 29.] The use of the Benedictus by the Church indicates to us where we are to find true sympathy and communion with God's ancient people ; not in their outward relationship to Abraham, "for God can of these stones raise up children unto Abraham," but in their faithful acknowledgement of the Lord Jesus, as the Christ Whom the Old Testament Scriptures predicted.

THE JUBILATE.

This was the second of the fixed Psalms at Lauds on Sunday, and was adopted as a responsory Canticle in 1552. The object of its insertion here was to provide a substitute for the Benedictus on days when the latter occurs in the Lesson or Gospel, on the same principle which rules the omission of the Venite when it occurs in the Psalms of the day. The days on which it should be used are therefore March 25th, Lady Day, and June 24th, St. John Baptist's Day.

The general substitution of the Jubilate for the Benedictus is very much to be deprecated. There is, however, a prophetic reference to the Chief Shepherd of the Church, and to the service of praise offered to Him, which makes it well fitted for occasional use, as, for example, at Easter ; and Dean Comber says that it seems to have been used after the reading of the Gospel as early as A. D. 450.

For the LORD is gracious, His mercy is everlasting : and His truth endureth from generation to generation.

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON, and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall he ; world without end. Amen.

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

The use of a Creed in Divine Service is of very ancient origin, dating at least from the time of Peter the Fuller, about A. D. 470, and the Apostles' Creed has been used in the Daily Offices of the Church of England as far back as they can be traced. Under the old system it followed the Lord's Prayer (instead of preceding it) at Prime and Compline, and was recited in the same manner, the people joining in only at a repetition of the last two clauses. In the Reformed Breviary of Cardinal Quignonez an open recitation of the Apostles' Creed was directed on all days except Sunday: and this direction probably suggested our present custom.

The earliest occurrence of the Apostles' Creed exactly in the form in which we now use it at Morning and Evening Prayer, is in a treatise published by Mabillon, from an ancient MS., entitled "Libellus Pirminii de singulis libris canonicis scarapsus," or "scriptus." Pirminius died about A. D. 758, and appears to have lived some time in France, though he died in Germany. Hence it is extremely probable that the Creed contained in two several places of his treatise, and in both places in the same words, is the old Gallican form of the Apostles' Creed, identical with that afterwards adopted by St. Osmund into the Salisbury Use, from the more ancient services of the Church of England. How much older than the eighth century this exact form of the Apostles' Creed may be is not known ; but it has been so used, without variation, in the whole Latin Church, as well as in the Church of England, from that time until the present.

The substance of the Apostles' Creed is, however, very much older. It is extant, very nearly as we now use it, as it was used by the Churches of Aquileia and Rome at the end of the fourth century, when it was commented upon, and both forms indicated, by Rufinus, who was a priest of the former diocese. The two forms are here shewn side by side, the authority for each being HEURTLEY'S Harmonia Symbolica, pp. 26, 30 :—

At a still earlier period, A. D. 180, Irenæus wrote his great work against heresies ; for, even at that early date, these began to fulfil the prophecy of our Lord that the Enemy should sow tares among the wheat. In this book Irenæus gives the substance of Christian doctrine under the name of the "Rule of Truth," which every Christian acknowledged at his Baptism. This undoubtedly represents the Apostles' Creed, though probably not the exact words in which it was recited.

The Church throughout the world, spread out as she is to the ends of the earth, carefully preserves the faith that she received from the Apostles and from their disciples :—

Believing in one God the Father Almighty, Who made Heaven and Earth, the seas, and all that in them is ; and in one Christ Jesus, the Son of God, Who was incarnate for our salvation ; and in the Holy Ghost, Who by the prophets proclaimed the dispensations and the advents of our dear Lord, Christ Jesus : and His birth of a Virgin, and His suffering, and His Resurrection from the dead ; and the Ascension in the flesh into Heaven of the beloved Christ Jesus our Lord, and His coming from Heaven in the glory of the Father, to sum up all things, and to raise up all flesh of the whole human race.

That to Christ Jesus our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the good pleasure of the invisible Father, every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth ; and that every tongue should confess Him, and that He should pass righteous judgement upon all. That He may send spiritual wickednesses, and the angels who transgressed, and fell into apostasy, and the ungodly, and the unjust, and the lawless, and the blas-phemers among men, into eternal fire : but that on the righteous, and the holy, and those who have kept His commandments and persevered in His love, some from the beginning and some from the time of their repentance, granting the grace of life He may grant immortality, and surround them with eternal glory. [IREN. agt. Heres. i. 10.]

In two other parts of the same work there are other summaries of the Creed which are plainly based on the same formula as that of which the above contains a paraphrastic statement. [IREN. agt. Heres. iii. 4, iv. 33.]

Traces of the Creed are also to be found in the writings of Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Clemens Romanus, and Ignatius : and these approach so near to Apostolic times as to give good reason to think that the name by which the Apostles' Creed has been known for many centuries is one which belongs to it not merely because it accurately states the faith held by the Apostles, but also because it originated from them.

A very ancient tradition of the Church, as old as the time of Rufinus [A.D. 369-410], describes the Apostles as meeting together to consider about a common statement of doctrine before they parted for their several labours. A later tradition (attributed to St. Augustine, but probably of more recent date) adds to this statement that each Apostle in succession recited one Article of the Creed, implying that it was thus delivered by Inspiration. The first of these traditions, written down so near to the time of the Apostles, is worthy of great respect : and no objections have been made to it which have not been rationally answered. The second is not of high authenticity, but the objections brought against it are chiefly founded on the improbability of such a statement being true : yet if the inspiration of the Apostles for the purpose of writing special official letters is granted, it is difficult to see what there is improbable in a statement that implies their collective inspiration for the purpose of originating so important a document as the Creed, at a time when the New Testament Scriptures had not yet come into existence.

But, apart from these traditions, there is much evidence in the early Christian writings that there was a common and well-known formula containing the chief articles of Christian faith. There are also frequent statements that the tradition of the Faith came direct from the Apostles. Combining these facts with the supposition that the Apostles would almost certainly provide some such formula for the guidance of converts, we may conclude that it is far more reasonable to believe the Creed going under their name to be substantially of their composition than to believe the contrary. In fact, the Creed appears to be an absolute necessity, springing out of the circumstances in which the early Christians were placed : when, as regarded themselves, their brethren, and the Heathen, such an answer to the question, "What is Christianity?" resolving itself into a few short replies embodying the chief facts of our Lord's life and work, was imperatively required. That the Apostles would methodize an authoritative form of this reply can hardly be doubted : and that they did so is more than suggested by what St. Paul says of a Form of sound words in passages like Rom. i. 3, vi. 17, x. 9, xii. 6, xvi. 17 ; Heb. x. 23 ; Phil. iii. 16 ; 2 Tim. i. 13, the original Greek of which almost necessitates such an interpretation as that here indicated.

Although, however, the cumulative force of these arguments is so great as to leave scarcely any rational ground for contradicting the old belief of the Church that the Creed came from the Apostles substantially as it was handed down to the eighth century, it is not sufficient to warrant us in declaring it to be inspired. All that we may dare to say on this point is, that the Apostles were under a very special guidance of the Holy Ghost, were "filled with the Spirit" for the official purposes of their work ; and, consequently, that very little of the human element is likely to have mingled itself with any of the official words which they spoke to the Church. If it could be certainly proved that the Creed came from the Apostles as we now have it, sound reason would require us to believe that the Holy Ghost moved them to compose it, and hence that it was inspired. In the absence of such evidence it is our duty to compare the doctrines handed down to us in the Creed as those of the Apostles, with the doctrines contained in the great storehouse of God's Truth. In the following Table it will be seen how near an agreement there is between the statements contained in the Creed and those made by the Apostles in their early missionary work :<sup>1</sup>—

Such a coincidence goes far towards shewing that the Apostles' Creed is a "Form of sound words" handed down to us on the very highest authority. It may also convince us that it would be an irreverent and uncritical error to speak of it positively as a human composition.

The central position of the Creed in our Morning and Evening Service gives it a twofold ritual aspect. Praise has formed the distinctive feature of what has gone before, prayer forms that of what is to follow. The confession of our Christian faith in the Creed is therefore [1] like a summing up of the Scriptures that have been used for the praise of God and the edification of His Church: and by its recitation we acknowledge that it is

“Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end.”

Whom we find in Moses, the Prophets, the Psalms, the Gospels, and the Epistles. Not only in respect to ourselves, as a fit reminder of this great truth, do we thus confess our faith, but also to the praise of God; and hence the Rubric directs the Creed to be “sung” (the word was inserted by Bishop Cosin), if circumstances will permit, as the Nicene Creed and the Athanasian Creed always have been. And [2] the recitation of the Creed is a confession of that objective faith which alone can give full reality to prayer; hence it is a foundation of, and introduction to, the Preces and the Collects with which the Service concludes. “For this reason it is, probably, that baptisms were ordered to take place after the second lesson; that so the admission of the newly baptized might be followed by liturgical avowal, so to speak, of that Creed, and saying of that Prayer, which, as a part of the rite, have already been avowed and used.”<sup>1</sup>

There are two customs connected with the recitation of the Creed which require notice; the one, that of turning to the East, or towards the Altar, as representing the East, in saying it; the other, that of bowing at the holy Name of Jesus. Both of these customs are relics of habits which have only ceased to be universal (in the English Church, at least) in very modern times.

Clergy and people used formerly to look one way throughout the Prayers and Creeds, that is, towards the Altar. “In some churches,” writes Thorndike,<sup>2</sup> “the desk for the Prayer Book looks towards the Chancel; and for reading of Lessons we are directed to look towards the people. As the Jews in their prayers looked towards the Mercy-seat or principal part of the Temple [Ps. xxviii. 2], so Christians looked towards the Altar or chief part of the church, whereof their Mercy-seat was but a type. Christ in His prayer directs us to Heaven, though God be everywhere; for Heaven is His throne, and we look toward that part of the church which most resembles it. Herein we correspond to the Jewish practice.” Before reading-desks were erected in the naves of churches, the prayers were said in front of the Altar itself, as may be seen in old prints; while the Psalms were sung in the choir stalls: and this was a continuation of the ancient practice,<sup>3</sup> the officiating clergyman always standing or kneeling in the former place to say Creeds and Prayers. When pews as well as reading-desks sprang up in churches, both congregation and clergy were often placed in any position that suited the convenience of the carpenter; but reverence still impelled all to turn towards the Altar during the solemn Confession of their Faith. Hence this habit became exceptional and prominent instead of habitual; and exceptional reasons were alleged in support of it, when in fact they applied, with more or less force, to the general posture of the worshipper in God’s House, as expressed in the preceding extract. Apart, also, from symbolical explanations of this custom, it appeals to both the reason and the feelings, by forming the congregation into a body of which the clergyman is the leader, as when a regiment marches into battle, or parades before its Sovereign headed by its officers: and there is no part of Divine Service where this relation of priest and people is more appropriate than in the open Confession of Christian Faith before God and man.

Bowing at the holy Name of our Lord’s Human Nature is also an usage of general application, and was never intended to be restricted to the Creed, although its omission there would certainly be a more special dishonour to Him than elsewhere. When Puritan superstition sprang up in the sixteenth century, the usage began to be dropped by many who were seduced by controversy into greater respect for doctrines of slighter importance than for that of our Lord’s Divinity. The Church then made a law on the subject of reverent gestures in Divine Service, in the 18th Canon of 1603; in which (after ordering that all shall stand at the Creed) is the following clause, founded on the 52nd of Queen Elizabeth’s

Injunctions, issued in 1559: “And likewise, when in time of Divine Service the Lord Jesus shall be mentioned, due and lowly reverence shall be done by all persons present, as hath been accustomed: testifying by these outward ceremonies and gestures their . . . due acknowledgement that the Lord Jesus Christ, the true and eternal Son of God, is the only Saviour of the world, in Whom all the mercies, graces, and promises of God to mankind, for this life, and the life to come, are fully and wholly comprised.” This general rule of the Church, and the explanation thus authoritatively given, apply with such special force to the use of this gesture in the Creed that nothing further need be added on the subject.<sup>4</sup>

§ An Expository Paraphrase of the Apostles’ Creed.

I, for myself, as personally responsible for my faith to God and His Church, openly profess, to His glory, that I believe, from my heart, with the assent of my reason and the submission of my will,

in God the Father, by a mysterious, unintelligible manner of paternity, Father of the uncreated, co-equal, and co-eternal Son: Father also of all the regenerated, by their adoption through His thus only-begotten Son:

Almighty, so that nothing is beyond His power which is consistent with goodness; knowing all things past, present, and to come; exercising authority over all things and persons, and upholding all things by His universal and omnipresent Providence: I believe that He was and is the

Maker, that is, the original Creator of the original matter, and the Disposer of that material in fit order, of heaven, which comprehends all that has originally occupied space beyond this world, and earth, which comprehends all organic and inorganic beings and substances within the compass of this world.

And I equally believe in Jesus, perfect Man, in all the qualities of human nature,

Christ, anointed to be the Saviour of the world, the High Priest of a new order of priesthood, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords,

His only Son, eternally begotten, and therefore having such a Sonship as none others who call God Father can possess, our Lord, being God, the Second Person in the Blessed Trinity, as well as Man; Lord of all by His Divine Nature, Lord of the Church by His work of Redemption. Thus I believe in the Eternal Son of the Eternal Father, in a Saviour Divine and Human,

Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, through a mysterious and unintelligible operation, which miraculously superseded the ordinary law of nature, so that the Holy Child Jesus was

Born of the Virgin Mary, a holy maiden, who thus miraculously became His mother that He, being born of a Virgin and not of a wife, might be free from the sin of our common origin, which is conveyed from parent to child by natural conception. Being thus born in our nature, but without our sin, He bore it as His own through infancy, childhood, and mature manhood; and when the time was fully come, He offered it as a sacrifice for our sins when He

Suffered under Pontius Pilate, the Roman Governor of Judæa and Jerusalem, and

Was crucified, by being nailed alive to a cross of wood, set upright in the ground. Being thus crucified, His sufferings were the greatest that had ever befallen any man, being aggravated by the burden of sin which He, though innocent, was bearing for our sakes. Not through the intensity of His sufferings, but of His own will, He gave up His life when all was accomplished that could be by His pains, and then became dead, through the separation of His Soul from His Body, in the same manner as human beings ordinarily become so. Being dead, His holy Body, still the Body of the Son of God, was taken down from the cross, <sup>4</sup> On April 28, 1662, “A proviso for being uncovered and for using reverent gestures at the time of Divine Service was twice read.

House of Commons.]

Bishop Kennett says that some additions to the Canon were proposed in Convocation on May 12, 1662, in consequence of this recommendation [KENNETT’S Reg. pp. 671, 680, 684], but no record of the Acts of Convocation remain to shew what these were.

and buried, with reverence and honour, but as the dead bodies of other men are. And, while the dead Body of the Son of God was in the tomb, with His living Soul

He descended into hell, that He might there triumph over Satan: proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to all who had ever died; entirely release the souls of the righteous dead from the power of Satan; and prepare a paradise of rest in which they and all other righteous souls may dwell until the Day of Judgement.

The third day, after the evening of Friday, the whole of Saturday, and a part of Sunday had passed,

He rose again from the dead, reuniting His Soul to His uncorrupted Body, so as to be again "perfect Man" in respect to all the qualities that belong to sinless and un suffering human nature. Then

He ascended into heaven, after forty days, not as God only, but as God and Man,

And sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty, receiving in His Human Nature, as well as in His Divine Nature, the adoration of angels and men; and by His presence there making a continual intercession for us, and being a Mediator between Divine and human nature for ever.

From thence He shall come, the same holy Jesus Who suffered and died, to judge, with a just, irreversible, and yet merciful judgement, the quick, who shall be alive at His coming, and the dead, who shall have died at any time from the foundation of the world.

I believe, also, with equal faith, and equal assent of my reason, in the Holy Ghost, the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity, the Strengtheners and Consoler of the Church, Who ministers in it the grace which the Saviour has gained for it,

The holy Catholic Church, which is the whole number of the baptized, the mystical Body of Christ; which was founded by the twelve Apostles, and is continued in existence by the perpetuation of an Episcopal ministry; which, by the merciful Providence of the Lord, holds the true Faith; which is divided into many separate bodies, all having their own bishops, and is yet one by being united to Christ, our Spiritual and Ministerial Head. I likewise believe in

The Communion of Saints, that is, the Union in Christ of all who are one with Him, whether they are among the living in the Church on earth, the departed in paradise, or the risen saints in heaven. I also believe in

The Forgiveness of sins, by the ministrations of Christ's Church in Baptism and in Absolution,

The Resurrection of the body, when it shall be, as now, my own very body, and reunited to my soul,

And the Life everlasting, wherein the bodies and souls of all who have ever lived will live for ever, they that have done good in never-ending happiness, and they that have done evil in never-ending misery.

And, lastly, I reiterate my assent to all these truths, in the presence of God and man, by solemnly adding Amen.

[For notes relating to the use of the Creed at Baptism, and to the Forms of it so used, see the Baptismal Service.]

THE SUFFRAGES OR PRECES.

The portion of the daily Service which comes between the Creed and the first Collect was translated, with some alterations, from the Preces Ferales inserted among the Preces et Memorie Communes of the Salishury Portiforium. In 1552 the Dominus vobiscum and Oremus were prefixed: and the "Clerks and people" (meaning, of course, the quire singers or "lay Clerks" and people) were directed to say the Lord's Prayer as well as the Minister.

In the ancient form of the Service the Kyrie Eleison was left untranslated in the Greek, like the Alleluia, from a special reverence for the original words, and also as a sign of the universality of the Church's prayers. They are still said in Greek in the Litany used in Convocation. Each Kyrie and Christe was also repeated three times. The Lord's Prayer was said privately by the Priest as far as the last clause, which was long the custom of the Church, the Et ne nos, etc., being repeated aloud, that the people might then join. This custom was abolished in 1552. In some cases it appears that the whole was said privately by Clergy and people; and then the last two clauses were said again aloud. [See Transl. Sar. Psalter, 14, n.]

The six versicles and their responses are modified from the ancient form; of which the following is a translation, as far as the Miserere: <sup>1</sup>—

I said, Lord, be merciful unto me:

Heal my soul, for I have sinned against Thee.

Turn us then, O God our Saviour:

And let Thine anger cease from us.

Let Thy merciful kindness, O Lord, be upon us:

Like as we do put our trust in Thee.

Let Thy priests be clothed with righteousness:

And let Thy saints sing with joyfulness.

O Lord, save the King:

And hear us in the day when we call upon Thee.

Save Thy servants and Thy handmaidens:

Trusting, O my God, in Thee.

O Lord, save Thy people, and bless Thine inheritance:

Rule them, and set them up for ever.

O Lord, grant us peace in Thy strength:

And abundance in Thy towers.

Let us pray for the faithful departed.

Grant them, O Lord, eternal rest:

And let perpetual light shine upon them.

Hear my voice, O Lord, when I cry unto Thee:

Have mercy upon me, and hear me.

After which preces, the fifty-first Psalm was said from beginning to end, and three more versicles, which are given at p. 200.

It will be observed that the first of our versicles with its response is not found among the above ferial Suffrages. It was taken from another set which were used on festivals, and is also found at the beginning of a somewhat similar set used every Sunday at the Bidding of Prayers. The Latin form of these latter is as follows:—

And grant us Thy salvation.

Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam.
Sacerdotes tui induantur justitiam.
Domine, salvum fac regem.
Salvos fac servos tuos, et ancillas tuas.
Salvum fac populum, Domine, et benedic hæreditati tuæ.
Domine, fiat pax in virtute tua.
Domine, exaudi orationem meam.<sup>1</sup>

The fifth versicle and its response are also different in the existing form. In the ancient Prymer this appears in the following shape, before the Evening Collect for Peace:—

Ant. Lord, ȝyne pees in oure daies, for there is noon othir that shal fyzte for us, but thou lord oure god.<sup>2</sup>

Vers. Lord, pees be maad in thi vertu.
Resp. And plenteousness in thi toures.

The Latin is:—

Da pacem, Domine, in diebus nostris.
Quia non est alius qui pugnet pro nobis nisi tu Deus noster.

The sixth versicle and its response are taken from the fifty-first Psalm, which followed the Ferial Præces at Mattins and Vespers.

It will also be observed that the petition for the Sovereign and that for the Ministers of the Church have exchanged places in the course of their adaptation to modern use. This change first appears at the end of the Litany in Hilsey's Primer of 1539. The reason why the Prayer for the Sovereign is put before that for the Clergy is, not that the secular power may be honoured above the Church, but that the supreme sovereign authority of the realm may be recognized before the clerical part of the Church.<sup>3</sup>

The mutual salutation with which this portion of the daily Office begins is to be said while the people are yet standing, as they were during the recitation of the Creed; “the Minister first pronouncing” it “with a loud voice” (and turning to the people), before “all devoutly kneeling,” join in the lesser Litany. It is of very ancient ritual use [see Conc. Vas. c. v. A. D. 440], and is believed by the Eastern Church to have been handed down from the Apostles. Its office is to make a transition, in connection with the lesser Litany, from the service of praise to that of supplication: and also to give devotional recognition to the common work in which Priest and Laity are engaged, and the common fellowship in which it is being done. The same salutation is used in the Confirmation Service, after the Act of Confirmation, and before the Lord's Prayer: but in this case the lesser Litany is not connected with it. The constant use of this mutual Benediction or Salutation should be a continual reminder to the laity of the position which they occupy in respect to Divine Service: and that, although a separate order of priesthood is essential for the ministration of God's worship, yet there is a priesthood of the Laity by right of which they take part in that worship, assuming their full Christian privilege, and making it a full corporate offering of the whole Christian body. Nor should we forget, in connection with it, the promise, “Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world.”

The lesser Litany is an ancient and Catholic prefix to the Lord's Prayer, which is only used without it in the celebration of the Holy Communion, the Administration of Baptism, and in Confirmation, and at the beginning of Morning and Evening Prayer. In the latter case its omission is supplied by the Confession: in the others the use of the Lord's Prayer is Eucharistic, as will be shewn in the notes appended to it in the Communion Service. In this part of his Prayer Book Bishop Cosin added the second recitation of each versicle as an “Answer,” so as to make the lesser Litany here identical with that in the Litany itself. This probably represents the proper way of using it in Divine Service, as it was thus repeated three times in the Salisbury Use. In its original form this lesser Litany consisted of Kyrie Eleison nine times repeated: but the Western Church has always used Christe Eleison as the second versicle. Its threefold form is analogous to that of the Litany, which opens with separate prayers to each Person of the Blessed Trinity.<sup>4</sup> This form renders it a most fitting introduction to the Lord's Prayer: and the Church has so distinctly adopted the lesser Litany for that purpose, that we may well feel a reverent obligation to use it on all occasions when the Lord's Prayer is said. Such an usage appeals, too, to the instinct of Christian humility, which shrinks from speaking to God even in the words taught us by our Lord, without asking His mercy on our act of prayer, influenced, as it must needs be, by the infirmities of our nature, and imperfect as it must appear to the all-penetrating Eye.

The Lord's Prayer, as used in this place, has a different intention from that with which it was used at the opening of the Service, and is by no means to be looked upon as an accidental repetition arising from the condensation of several shorter services into one longer. In the former place it was used with reference to the Service of Praise and Prayer in which the Church is engaged. Here it is used with reference to the necessities of the Church for the coming day; preceding the detailed prayers of the versicles which follow, and of the Collects which make up the remainder of the Service.

Then the Priest standing up shall say] This Rubric continues the ancient practice, applying it to the whole of the <sup>1</sup> These are given from MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 403, but the people's responses are omitted. In CHAMBERS' Translation of the Sermon Psalter the complete form has been compiled.

<sup>2</sup> Bishop Cosin altered this versicle to a form which was intended to conciliate Puritan objectors, writing, “Because there is none other that saveth us from our enemies, but only Thou, O God.” The alteration was not approved by the Revision Committee, and was erased.

versicles, instead of only to a portion.<sup>1</sup> The old Rubric after the Miserere, which followed the versicles above given, was "Finito Psalmo solus sacerdos erigat se, et ad gradum chori accedat ad Matutinas et ad Vesperas, tunc dicendo hos versus :—

Exurge, Domine, adjuva nos
Et libera nos propter nomen tuum.
Domine Deus virtutum, converte nos.

Domine, exaudi orationem meam.
Et clamor meus ad te veniat.
Dominius vobiscum.
Et cum spiritu tuo.
Oremus.

[Deinde dicitur Oratio propria. . .]

From this it appears that the collect, as well as the versicles, were to be said standing. In the MS. of the Prayer Book the Rubric was originally written, "Then the Priest standing up, and so continuing to the end of the Service;" but the latter words were erased by a later hand, and are not in the Sealed Books. The intention of the Reformers seems indeed to have been that, throughout the Prayer Book, the Priest should kneel with the people in confessions and penitential prayers, but stand, as in the Communion Office, while offering all other prayers. That the practice of standing continued to be observed in the middle of the seventeenth century is shewn by the question which Baxter asked in 1660, "Why doth the Minister stand in prayer, even in the Sacrament prayer, while the people kneel?" [BAXTER'S Defence of the Proposals, etc., § 30.] But this posture has been almost universally set aside in Morning and Evening Prayer, except during the recitation of these versicles; and its revival would be repugnant to natural feelings of humility. It was originally ordered as a sign of the authoritative position which the Priest occupied as the representative of the Church; and official gestures ought not to be ruled by personal feeling. But at the same time the established usage makes a good ritual distinction between the prayers of the ordinary offices and those of the Eucharistic Service.

The same great truth as to the priesthood of the Laity, which has already been referred to, is again brought out strongly in the versicle and response, "Endue Thy ministers with righteousness: And make Thy chosen people joyful." It is impossible not to identify the latter words, in their Christian sense, with the words of St. Peter, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should shew forth the praises of Him Who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light;" and in a preceding verse of the same chapter, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." [1 Pet. ii. 5, 9.] This subject is treated of at greater length in the notes on the Confirmation Service; but the doctrine, or rather the practice of the doctrine, pervades the Prayer Book; the whole system of responsive worship being founded upon it. See also a note on the "Amen" of the Laity at the consecration of the Blessed Sacrament.

It is a happy ritual accident that the Suffrages give the key-notes of the Collects and Prayers which follow. The first couplet indicating the Collect of the Day, always a general prayer for mercy and salvation; the second the Prayer for the Clergy and People; the third and fourth complete the Prayer for the Clergy and People; the fifth the Morning and Evening Collects for Peace and Against all perils; and the sixth couplet the Collect for Grace to live well.

THE THREE COLLECTS.

[All kneeling] See the preceding remarks on this posture in the Preces. It is only necessary here to add that the words, "The Priest standing up, and saying, Let us pray. Then the Collect of the Day," followed those of the present Rubric until 1552, representing the old usage of the Church. As this direction was thrown further back, and no direction for the Priest to kneel inserted in its place here, the Rubric appears to order the same posture at the versicles and the collects, as has been already shewn.

§ The First Collect, of the Day.

The central point of all Divine Worship, towards which all other services gravitate, and around which they revolve, like planets round a sun, is the great sacrificial act of the Church, the offering of the Holy Sacrament. The ordinary services of Mattins and Evensong are therefore connected with it ritually by the use of the collect "that is appointed at the Communion," to which precedence is given over all other prayers except the Lord's Prayer, and the versicles from Holy Scripture. This collect is the only variable prayer of the Communion Office, and it is almost always built up out of the ideas contained in the Epistle and Gospel appointed for the Sunday or other Holyday to which it specially belongs; these latter, again [see Introduction to Collects, etc.], being selections of most venerable antiquity, intended to set a definite and distinctive mark on the day with which they are associated. Thus the first Collect of Morning and Evening Prayer fulfils a twofold office. First, it connects those services with the great act of sacrificial worship which the Church intends to be offered on every Sunday and Holyday (at least) to her Lord; and, secondly, it strikes the memorial keynote of the season, linking on the daily services to that particular phase of our Blessed Lord's Person or Work which has been offered to our devotion in the Gospel and Epistle. And as all Divine Worship looks first and principally towards Him to Whom it is offered, so it must be considered that these orderly variations of the collect are not ordained chiefly as a means of directing the tone of thought and meditation with which the worshippers approach Him, but as a devotional recognition and

<sup>1</sup> But, as a general rule, "Preces" were said kneeling (except at Christmas, and from Easter to Trinity), and "Orations" were said standing.

¶ Then shall follow three Collects: The first of The Day, which shall be the same that is appointed at the Communion; The second for Peace; The third for Grace to live well. And the two last Collects shall never alter, but daily be said at Morning Prayer throughout all the Year, as followeth; <sup>a</sup>All kneeling.

¶ The Second Collect, for Peace.

O GOD, Who art the Author of peace and Lover of concord, in knowledge of Whom standeth our eternal life, Whose service is perfect freedom; Defend us Thy humble servants in all assaults of our enemies; that we, surely trusting in Thy defence, may not fear the power of any adversaries; through the might of JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

memorial before God of the change of times and seasons which He Himself has ordained both in the natural and the spiritual world. "He hath appointed the moon for certain seasons, and the sun knoweth his going down." So the division of our time from week to week has been marked out by the Divine Hand in the rest of the Creation Sabbath and the triumph of the Resurrection Sunday; and each week of the year is also distinguished by the Church with some special reference to acts or teachings of her Divine Master, which she commemorates day by day at Mattins and Evensong, as well as at her chief service of the week.

The following rules will be found practically useful as regards the use of the first Collect, and for convenience those relating to Evensong are included, as well as those more properly belonging to this page:—

1. The Sunday Collect is to be said from the Saturday evening before to the Saturday morning after, inclusive.

2. Festival Collects are invariably to be used on the evening before the festival, whether it is kept as a vigil or not. When the vigil is kept on a Saturday, the festival being on the Monday following, the Collect of the latter is not to be said on Saturday evening; but on Sunday evening it should be said before the Sunday Collect.

3. The Sunday Collect ordinarily gives way to the Collect of any festival which occurs on the Sunday, that for the festival being said first, that for the Sunday second.

4. But if any festival occurs on any of the following Sundays, the Festival Collect is said second, that for the Sunday being said first.

Advent Sunday.	Sundays in Lent.
4th Sunday in Advent.	Easter Day.
Septuagesima Sunday.	Sunday after Easter.
Sexagesima Sunday.	Whitsun Day
Quinquagesima Sunday.	Trinity Sunday.

The same rule is applicable to Ash-Wednesday, Maundy Thursday, Good Friday, Easter Even, and Ascension Day.

But on other week-days following the above Sundays, a Festival Collect should take precedence of the Sunday Collect, as the Collects of the three days after Christmas take precedence of that of Christmas Day. [See further the Table in the Introduction to the Coll. Ep. and Gosp.]

5. The following are special usages connected with several days and seasons:—

The Collect for	Advent Sunday is to be used until, and including, the morning of December 24.
	Christmas Day is to be used until, and including, the morning of December 31.
	Circumcision is to be used until, and including, the morning of January 5.
	Epiphany is to be used until, and including, the morning of the Saturday following.
	Quinquagesima is to be used until, and including, the evening of the Tuesday following.
	Ash-Wednesday [alone] is to be used until, and including, the morning of the Saturday following.
	Ash-Wednesday is to be used after all others until, and including, the morning of the Saturday before Easter Day.
Ascension Day is to be used until, and including, the morning of the Saturday following.

§ The Second Collect, for Peace.

This beautiful prayer is translated from one which was used at Lauds in the ancient services, and was also the Post-Communion of a special Eucharistic Office on the subject of peace. It appears in the Sacramentaries of Gelasius and Gregory the Great, and has probably been in use among us at Mattins ever since the time of the latter, nearly thirteen centuries.

It must be taken as a prayer for the peace of the Church Militant, even more than as one for that of the Christian warrior: a devout acknowledgement in the case of both that the events of every day are ruled by the Providence of Almighty God, Who doeth according to His will in the army of Heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, "What doest Thou?" The expression, "In knowledge of Whom standeth our eternal life," is founded on our Lord's words, "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, Whom Thou hast sent." [John xvii. 3.] The following beautiful and terse phrase, "Whose service is perfect freedom" (though inferior to the "Whom to serve is to reign" of the Latin), is a daily reminder to us of our position as soldiers of Christ, bound to Him as those who have vowed to "continue His faithful soldiers and servants unto their lives' end," but yet bound by the yoke of a loving Captain, Whose object is to save us from the slavery of sin and carry us on to the eternal freedom of Heaven. There is a mixture of humility and confidence in this Collect, which fits it well for the lips of those who are faithfully endeavouring to do their duty day by day. They "seek peace and pursue it," yet know that spiritual enemies are ever on the watch to assault them: they know their danger, yet have no fear for the end while the might of Him Who "goes forth conquering and to conquer" is given for their defence: of Him Who can say to the troubled waves around the ark of His Church, "Peace, be still."

§ The Third Collect, for Grace.

This Collect occupied a similar position in the Prime Office of the ancient use of the Church of England as it does in our present Morning Prayer. It is found in Menard's edition of Gregory the Great's Sacramentary, among the "Orationes ad Matutinas lucescente die;" and is of almost as venerable an antiquity as the preceding one. It will be interesting to notice the difference between the old English use given above, the Roman use, and the ancient form in which the Collect appears in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory.

<sup>1</sup> There is a touching memorial of the comfort given by these words in an inscription which remains in the Beauchamp tower of the Tower of London:—

The Roman was the same both before and after the reform of the Breviary; and the difference between it and our own shews the independent character of the English rite; furnishing evidence also that our own reformers used the Salisbury, and not the Roman Breviary, for their translations.

One of the prayers in the Morning Office of St. Basil also bears considerable resemblance to the Collect for Grace, sufficient to indicate a common origin. It is thus given by Freeman in his Principles of Divine Service, i. 222:—

Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ αἰώνιος, τὸ ἀρχὸν καὶ αἰδιὸν . . . [Ps. xc. 1.] χάρισαι ἡμῖν ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ ἡμέρα εὐαρεστεῖν σοι, διαφυλάττων ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ πάσης ἀμαρτίας καὶ πάσης πονηρᾶς πράξεως, ρυθμιζὸν ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ βέλους πετομένου ἡμέρας καὶ πάσης ἀντικειμένης δυνάμεως.

[From Second Prayer]:—

τὰ τῶν χειρῶν ἡμῶν ἔργα, . . . πράττειν ἡμᾶς τὰ σοὶ εὐάρεστα καὶ φιλὰ, εὐδόωσον.

This Collect was placed here as the end of Mattins in 1549, a most appropriate prayer with which to go forth to the work that each one has to do. In the Rubric it is called a prayer "for grace to live well," and Bishop Cosin wished to insert this full title above the Collect as a sign of the object for which it is offered. In a few terse words it recognizes the dependence of all for spiritual strength on the grace of God, our position in the midst of temptations to sin, and the power to do good works well pleasing to God when our doings are under His governance. As a prayer bearing on the daily life of the Christian, it may be taken as a devotional parallel to the well-known axiomatic definition of Christian practice, that it is "to do my duty in that state of life unto which it shall please God to call me."

The Rubrics which follow the three Collects are of more importance than they have usually been considered. The first directs that "¶ In Quires and places where they sing, here followeth the Anthem." The Anthem itself is spoken of at length in another place. All that is necessary to mention here in connection with it is, that [1] although this Rubric was not in the Prayer Book in the time of Queen Elizabeth, there is historical evidence of an Anthem being sung at the conclusion of the Service, of which our modern organ voluntary is probably a survival; and [2] that Anthems were clearly not contemplated, except in "Quires and places where they sing," Cathedrals, Royal Chapels, Collegiate Churches, etc.

This gives considerable force to the word "Then" in the following Rubric: "¶ Then these five Prayers following are to be used," etc.; for it is clear that, the two Rubrics being placed where they are at the same time, the "Then" of the second derives its meaning entirely from the words which immediately precede it in the first Rubric.

From this the conclusion may be drawn that where an Anthem does not follow the third Collect, the five remaining prayers are not to be said, but the Morning Prayer terminated (as it was for a hundred years after the Reformation, by express rule) at the third Collect. This view of the second Rubric is confirmed by the "as they are there placed" which concludes it.

An explanation of such an usage may be found in the difference of position between ordinary parish churches and the churches defined by the expression, "Quires and places where they sing." The latter are of a more representative character than the former, and usually in a more public situation; and in these the daily commemoration of the Sovereign, the Royal Family, and the Clergy becomes a public duty in a higher degree than in village or other churches where the service is usually of a more humble character.

Where the length of Morning and Evening Prayer is therefore an obstacle to the use of Daily Service, this Rubric provides (accidentally, perhaps, yet effectually) for the difficulty; and shews that there is an elasticity about the Prayer Book here, as elsewhere, which makes it capable of meeting the varied requirements of social life. Perhaps the idea of an universal Daily Mattins and Evensong was dying out when the additions were made to the beginning and the end of the Services, or a more distinct Rubrical provision would have been made, limiting their general use to particular churches on week-days, and ordering it for all on Sundays.

This subject is further illustrated by some Visitation Articles in which "Short Morning Prayers" are mentioned. "Appended to the Gloucester Articles for 1634 is the following advertisement: 'That every Incumbent or Curate endeavour (as far forth as he can), especially in market towns, to read short Morning Prayers at six o'clock before men go to their labours.' In 1640 it is rather varied: 'That short Morning Prayers be read in market towns, and in all other places where conveniently it may be.'" [LATHBURY'S Hist. P. Book, p. 163.]

THE FIVE PRAYERS.

These prayers were inserted in this place in 1661, apparently at the suggestion of Bishop Cosin made in his Amended Prayer Book. Some of them had been previously in use in and walk in Thy way: Endue her plenteously with heavenly gifts; grant her in health and wealth long to live; strengthen her that she may vanquish and overcome all her enemies; and finally, after this life, she may attain everlasting joy and felicity; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

the Litany or in Occasional Offices. To a certain extent they represent some private prayers used by the Clergy, after the public Office was over in the ancient system of the Church [Freeman, i. 371]; but this parallel is accidental, as an interval of more than a century had elapsed between the cessation of the old custom, and its revival in the present form. There are, however, several pages of Memorie Communis in the Salisbury Missals, and among these may be found the original idea, though not the ipsissima verba, of the four intercessory prayers here used, and also of several of those called "Occasional." The Memorie Communis were, in fact, "Prayers and Thanksgivings upon Several Occasions;" and the four intercessory prayers now used daily seem to have been originally considered as belonging to this class. It is noticeable that the ancient structural form of the Collect [see Introduction to Collects, etc.] has been carefully adopted in these prayers, as it was in the case of the daily Absolution.

This occurs first in two books of Private Prayers, the one entitled Psalmes or Prayers taken out of Holy Scripture [1545-48], the other, Prayers or Meditations . . . collected out of holy works by the most virtuous and gracious Princess Katherine, Queen of England, France, and Ireland. Anno dni 1547. It was also inserted in the Morning Prayer, printed in the Prymer of 1553, as the "Fourth Collect." In Queen Elizabeth's reign [1559] it was placed with other prayers and in its present shape before the Prayer of St. Chrysostom at the end of the Litany. Our present usage was first adopted in the Form of Prayer for March 24, 1604, commemorating the entry of James I. into England. It was inserted in the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637, and finally settled as we now have it in 1661.

It is not known who was the author of this fine composition, the opening of which is equal in grandeur to anything of the kind in the ancient Liturgies; breathing indeed the spirit of the Tersanctus and Trisagion.

A prayer for the Sovereign is a very ancient part of Divine Service, the Apostolic use of it being evidenced beyond doubt by the words of St. Paul in the opening of the second chapter of his First Epistle to Timothy, "I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." The "giving of thanks" being an expression for the offering of the Holy Eucharist, this injunction ought to be taken as containing a reference to the use of such an intercession at the ordinary prayers of the Church, as well as at the Holy Communion. A Missal pro Rege is contained in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory [see footnote beyond] as early as the sixth century. In the ecclesiastical laws of King Ethelred, A.D. 1012, the third chapter contains express directions that a certain prayer should be said daily for the King and his people; and the practice of the Church of England before the Reformation has already been mentioned.

It may be useful to place in connection with our now familiar Prayer for the Sovereign, one from an Eastern Liturgy, and the Memorial of the Salisbury Breviary.

From the Liturgy of St. Mark.

"O Lord, Master and God, the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; we beseech Thee to preserve our king in peace, night, and righteousness. Subdue under him, O God, his foes and all that hate him. Lay hold upon the shield and buckler, and stand up to help him. Grant victories unto him, O God, and that he may be peaceably disposed both towards us and towards Thy holy Name; and that we also, in the peace of his days, may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty, through the grace, merey, and loving-kindness of Thine only-begotten Son; through Whom, and with Whom, be glory and power unto Thee, with Thine all-holy, good, and life-giving Spirit, now and for ever, and unto all eternity. Amen."

"MEMORIE PRO REGE ET REGINA.

[From the Salisbury Missal.]

Oratio.

"Deus in cujus manu sunt corda regum: qui es humilium Consolator, et fidelium Fortitudo, et Protector omnium in Te sperantium: da regi nostro ꝛ. et reginæ nostræ ꝛ. populoque Christiano triumphum virtutis tuæ scilicet excolere: ut per Te semper reparentur ad veniam. Per Dominum.

Secreta.

Suscipe, quæsumus, Domine, preces et hostias ecclesie Tuæ, quas pro salute famuli Tui regis nostri et reginæ et protectione fidelium populorum Tuæ Majestati offerimus: supplicantes ut antiqua brachii tui Te operante miracula, superatis inimicis, secura tibi serviat Christianorum libertas. Per Dominum.

"Præsta, quæsumus, Omnipotens Deus: ut per hæc mysteria sancta quæ sumpsimus, rex noster et regina, populusque Christianus semper rationabilia meditantes quæ Tibi placita sunt, et dictis exequantur et factis. Per Dominum."

These are taken from a Missal of 1514; another set, mentioning the name of Henry VII., are given by Mr. Maskell in his Ancient Liturgy, p. 278. The Post-Communion of the latter ends with the words "et post hujus vitæ decursum ad æternam beatitudinem, tua gratia cooperante, perveniat;" which are evidently the original of "And finally after this life, she may attain everlasting joy and felicity." See also the note below.

"Hæc, Domine, oratio salutaris famulum tuum, III[um]=ꝛ. or ꝛ. I., ab omnibus teatur adversis, quatenus et Ecclesiasticæ pacis obtineat tranquillitatem, et post istius temporis decursum ad æternum perveniat hereditatem. Per." [GREG. Miss. Quotid. pro Rege. Ad Complendum.]

The earlier part of it bears some resemblance to the beginning of the Consecratio Regis, printed at p. 279 in the Appendix to MENARO'S Sacramentary of St. Gregory. "Omnipotens sempiternus Deus, Creator et Gubernator cœli et terre, Conditor et Dispositor Angelorum et hominum, Rex regum et Dominus dominorum, qui," etc.

§ The Prayer for the Royal Family.

This was placed among the prayers at the end of the Litany in 1604 by James I.; but the practice of praying for the Royal Family was no new one, the English Litany of 1544 containing a supplication for "our noble Prince Edward and all the King's Majesty's children." The expression "the Fountain of all goodness" was substituted, in 1625 (in the first Form of Occasional Prayers issued under Charles I.), for the strong expression used in the opening of it under James. The following letter, copied from Bishop Cosin's MSS., led to the final adoption of the prayer in its present form, and serves to illustrate its introduction into the Daily Service:—

"Charles R.

"Our will and pleasure is that you forthwith cause this ensuing Collect for our Royall Consort to be used in all churches and chappels within your province, instead of that which is now used for the Royall Progeny. For which this shall be your warrant. Given at our Court at Whitehall this 8th day of November, 1661.

[Then follows the Collect.]

Another warrant was issued on May 30, 1662. [State Papers, Dom. Charles II. lv. 11.]

In this and other prayers for the Sovereign and the Royal Family, the necessary changes are made by Royal Proclamation, under the twenty-fifth clause in the Act of Uniformity: "Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that in all those Prayers, Litanies, and Collects which do any way relate to the King, Queen, or Royal Progeny, the Names be altered and changed from time to time, and fitted to the present occasion, according to the direction of lawful authority." What the lawful authority is does not clearly appear; but against the clause in the Litany, and also against this Prayer, there is a marginal note in Cosin's book, "Such only are to be named as the King shall appoint." Until the time of James II. it was customary for these alterations to be made by the King on his own authority. But on February 10, 1684, James II. made them in Council, and this has always been the custom since that time

§ The Prayer for the Clergy and People.

This Collect is very ancient, being found in the Sacramentary of Gelasius. It is also in all the English Prymers, and a version of it, as it stood in the fourteenth century, is given in Evening Prayer. It was placed at the end of the first authorized English Litany in 1544, and where it now is in 1661. Bishop Cosin wished to meet Puritan objectors by altering it as follows:—

"A Prayer for the Clergy and their Charge.

"Almighty and Everlasting God, Who didst pour out upon Thy Apostles the great and marvellous gift of the Holy Ghost, send down upon our Bishops, the Pastors of Thy Church, and such others as have cure of souls under them, together with all congregations committed to their charge . . ."

It was also suggested by him to use the phrase "from Whom all spiritual graces do proceed," which is nearly that adopted in the American Prayer Book; but both changes were rejected by the Revision Committee. "People" was also substituted for "their charge," perhaps to make the title more comprehensive.

The word "Curates" was objected to at the Savoy Conference, when the Bishops and other Clergy replied, "The word Curate signifying properly all those who are trusted by the Bishops with Cure of souls, as anciently it signified, is a very fit word to be used, and can offend no sober persons."<sup>1</sup>

§ A Prayer of St. Chrysostom.

The introduction of this beautiful Collect into the Prayer Book by the Reformers shows that they were not unacquainted with the Greek Liturgies, if they had thought it expedient to draw upon them more freely than they did. It never had a place in any European Ritual until 1544, when it was placed at the end of the English Litany which had been revised and set forth by Archbishop Crammer and his coadjutors as a first-fruits of their work.

The prayer is found as the prayer of the third Antiphon in the Liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom, and is thus used in the Churches of the East whenever the Holy Communion is celebrated. Its present position at the end of a Service is a novelty, but a very happy one. It was ordered to be so used in the Scotch Prayer Book of 1637, and inserted in the English Revisal of 1661.

GRATIA DOMINI nostri JESU CHRISTI, et charitas DEI, et communicatio SANCTI SPIRITUS sit semper cum omnibus nobis.

Here endeth the Order of Morning Prayer throughout the Year.

§ The Benediction.

This benediction of priest and people by the former is translated from the Capitulum which was used at Tierce (the nine o'clock Morning Service) in the ancient Church of England, and was first inserted after the Litany in 1559. It also begins the Anaphora of the three great Oriental Liturgies of St. Chrysostom, St. Basil, and St. James, being followed by the versicle, "And with thy spirit," and the Sursum Corda. In the two former, the benedictory form appears as it is in 2 Cor. xiii. 14, "be with you all," but in that of St. James it is in the form "be with us all," as in our own and in the ancient Tierce Service. As the Vulgate also has "sit cum omnibus vobis," it is improbable that the ancient Capitulum was taken from it, especially since the word "semper" is no more represented there than it is in the Greek of the New Testament; the two being as follows:—

Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ ἡ κοινωνία τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. Ἀμήν. Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et charitas Dei, et communicatio Sancti Spiritus sit cum omnibus vobis. Amen.

There is some probability, from these peculiarities, that this benediction gives us a lingering trace of prayers more anciently used in England than the time of St. Osmund. In St. James's Liturgy the benediction is, "The love of the Lord and Father, the grace of the Lord and Son, the communion and gift of the Holy Ghost, be with us all;" and although this is still more different from our form than the Bible version, the "us" instead of "you" is (under the circumstances) so very distinctive, as to lead to the impression that it represents a Liturgy not now extant, which was analogons to that of St. James. It has also been suggested that this was originally a Liturgical benediction, and was adopted, as many other Liturgical expressions were, by St. Paul. No doubt its use as a Blessing in Divine Service is of primitive antiquity.

There is also a mediæval form of it in verse in Rolle of Hampote's Prick of Conscience:—

"The myzt off ye fadur almyzti
The wisdom off ye sone al witty
The grace and ye goodnesse of ye holi gost
O god and O lord off myztes most
Be wyp ons at pis biginning
And loving us alle to good ending. Amen."

THE ORDER FOR EVENING PRAYER

DAILY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

¶ At the beginning of Evening Prayer the Minister shall read with a loud voice some one or more of these Sentences of the Scriptures that follow. And then he shall say that which is written after the said Sentences.

α Evensong [1549 only].

give us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 1 S. JOHN i. 8, 9.

WHEN the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive. EZEK. xviii. 27.

I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me. Ps. li. 3.

Hide Thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Ps. li. 9.

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise. Ps. li. 17.

Rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: for He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth Him of the evil. JOEL ii. 13.

To the LORD our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against Him: neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in His laws which He set before us. DAN. ix. 9, 10.

O LORD, correct me, but with judgement; not in Thine anger, lest Thou bring me to nothing. JER. x. 24. Ps. vi. 1.

Repent ye; for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. S. MATT. iii. 2.

I will arise, and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. S. LUKE xv. 18, 19.

Enter not into judgement with Thy servant, O LORD; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. Ps. cxliii. 2.

DEARLY beloved brethren, the Scripture moveth us in sundry places to acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness; and that we should not dissemble nor cloke them before the face of Almighty God our heavenly FATHER; but confess them with an humble, lowly, penitent, and obedient heart; to the end that we may obtain forgiveness of the same, by His infinite goodness and mercy. And although we ought at all times humbly to acknowledge our sins before God; yet ought we most chiefly so to do when we assemble and meet together, to render thanks for the great benefits that we have received at His hands, to set forth His most worthy praise, to hear His most holy Word, and to ask those things which are requisite and necessary, as well for the body as the soul. Wherefore I pray and beseech you, as many as are here present, to accompany me with a pure heart and humble voice, unto the throne of the heavenly grace, saying after me;

¶ A general Confession to be said of the whole Congregation after the Minister, all kneeling.

ALMIGHTY and most merciful FATHER; We have erred, and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have offended against Thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done; And there is no health in us. But Thou, O LORD, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. Spare Thou them, O God, which confess their faults. Restore Thou them that are penitent; According to Thy promises declared unto mankind in CHRIST JESU our LORD.

The Order for Evening Prayer] The Evening Service of the Book of Common Prayer was formed out of the two Evening Services, Vespers and Compline, of the ancient Order; a fixed form being, however, substituted for variable ones, and the hymns being left to the discretion of the Clergy.

Nothing further need be said here respecting those parts of the daily Offices which have been already commented upon under Morning Prayer, but some additional illustrations are given in the shape of ancient English versions of various parts of the services. These are inserted within brackets when they are placed beside the text of the Prayer Book: and it must be understood that they are verbal illustrations only, not always coming from an Office similar to that in which they are now printed. The opening versicles of the Service, for example, are taken from the Matins of the Ancient Prymer: at the later services of the day the two first do not appear; and at Compline they are replaced by "Turn us, O God of our salvation. And let Thine anger cease from us." These in the Prymer are "God our salvacion converte us to Thee. And turne fro us Thy wrathe."

Evening Prayer began with the Lord's Prayer and ended with the third Collect, from its first translation in 1549 until 1661. In the Rubric before the Sentences at Morning Prayer, the Minister was directed (from 1552 onwards) to say them and that which follows "at the beginning both of Morning and Evening Prayer:" but the Puritan criticisms of the

And grant, O most merciful FATHER, for His sake; That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life, To the glory of Thy holy Name. Amen.

¶ The Absolution, or Remission of sins, to be pronounced by the Priest alone, standing; the people still kneeling.

ALMIGHTY God, the FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, Who desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may turn from his wickedness, and live; and hath given power, and commandment, to His Ministers, to declare and pronounce to His people, being penitent, the Absolution and Remission of their sins: He pardoneth and absolveth all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe His holy Gospel. Wherefore beseech we Him to grant us true repentance, and His HOLY SPIRIT, that those things may please Him, which we do at this present; and that the rest of our life hereafter may be pure, and holy; so that at the last we may come to His eternal joy; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ Then the Minister shall kneel and say the Lord's Prayer; the people also kneeling and repeating it with him.

OUR FATHER, Which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, The power, and the glory, For ever and ever. Amen.

¶ Then likewise he shall say,

O LORD, open Thou our lips.

Answer.

And our mouth shall shew forth Thy praise.

Priest.

O God, make speed to save us.

Answer.

O LORD, make haste to help us.

¶ Here all standing up the Priest shall say,

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON; and to the HOLY GHOST;

Prayer Book and the Clergy shew that this was rarely, if ever, the practice until the last Revision, when the two Services were made alike in this respect.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

The above is a version of the Lord's Prayer as it was used by the people in their daily services, when the prayers of the Church were still said in Latin, about the end of the fourteenth century. Some earlier versions are here given, which may be taken as representatives of those translations into the vulgar tongue which were so frequently directed in provincial and diocesan constitutions. There cannot be a doubt that the Lord's Prayer was as familiar to the people of England in ancient days as it is at present.

The first among the following ancient forms of it is taken from a gloss on the Evangelists, written by Eadfrid, Bishop of Lindisfarne, about A. D. 700. [Cotton MS. Nero D. iv.]

Fader usær thu arth in Heofnas sie gehalgad noma thin to cymeth ric thin. sie willo thin suæ is in Heofne and in Eorþo. Hlaf userne oferwistlic sel us to dæg, and forgef us scyltha usra suæ use forgefon scylgum usum. And ne inlead usith in costnunge. Ah gefrig usich from yfle.

The next is from Saxon homilies of about the same date:—

Fader ure thu the in heofnum earth, beo gehalgud thin noma. Cume to thin rice, weorthe thin willa swa swa on Heofune swile on eorthe. Hlaf userne dæghwanlican sel us to dæg, and forlete us ure scylde, swa swa we ac forleten thaem the seyldigat with us, ne geleade in costnunge. Ah gelefe us of yfle.

The next is from a MS. in the Library of Caius College, Cambridge, belonging to the thirteenth century, and printed by Mr. Maskell in the Appendix to his fourteenth-century Prymer, Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 248:—

Fader oure that art in heve, i-halgeed bee thi nome, i-cume thi kinereiche, y-worthe thi wylle also is in hevene so be on erthe, oure iche-dages bred 3if us to day, and for3if us oure gultes, also we for3ifet oure gultare, and ne led ows nowth into fondingge, anth ales ows of harme. So be it.

The next is from a MS., No. 142, in St. John's College Library, Cambridge, of the fourteenth century, and is also from Mr. Maskell's Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 249:—

Fader oure that art in heuene, halwed be thi name: come thi kyngdom: fulfild be thi wil in heuene as in erthe: oure ech day bred 3ef vs to day, and for3eue vs oure dettes as we for3eueþ to oure detoures: and ne led vs nou3 in temptacion, bote deliuere vs of eucl. So be it.

This is from a MS. in the Bodleian Library [Douce, 246, f. 15] of the fifteenth century. It also is reprinted from Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 249:—

Pater noster.—Fader oure that art in heuene, halwed be Priest.

Praise ye the LORD.

Answer.

The last is from the Prymer of 1538. Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 249 :—

Our father whiche art in heuen, halowed be thy name. Let thy kyngdome cum vnto vs. Thy wyll be fulfilled as well in erthe, as it is in heuen. Gyue vs this daye our daylye breade. And forgyue vs our trespasses, as we forgyue them that trespass agaynst vs. And lede vs nat in to temptacyon. But delyner vs from euyll. So be it.

Many more such ancient English versions are extant, and the above are only given as specimens which shew distinct transitions of language from one age to another. [For others, see Reliquia Antiquæ, vol. i.; LINGARD'S Anglo-Saxon Church, vol. ii.; MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, vol. iii.; CHAMBERLAYNE'S Oratio Dominica.]

§ Exposition of the Lord's Prayer by St. Cyril of Jerusalem, A.D. 347.

[It may give an additional interest to this to mention the historical fact, that it was part of a lecture delivered in the Church which had been recently erected over the Holy Sepulchre; and to remind the reader that the interval of time between the original delivery of the Divine Prayer to the Apostles and this exposition of it by a Bishop of the Holy City was less than that which has elapsed since the first publication of the Prayer Book in 1549.]

Then, after these things, we say that Prayer which the Saviour delivered to His own disciples, with a pure conscience styling God our Father, and saying, Our Father, Which art in heaven. O most surpassing loving-kindness of God! On them who revolted from Him and were in the very extreme of misery, has He bestowed such complete forgiveness of their evil deeds, and so great participation of grace, as that they should even call Him Father.

Our Father, Which art in heaven; they also are a heaven who bear the image of the heavenly, in whom God is, dwelling and walking in them.

Hallowed be Thy Name. The Name of God is in its own nature holy, whether we say so or not; but since it is sometimes profaned among sinners, according to the words, Through you My Name is continually blasphemed among the Gentiles, we pray that in us God's Name may be hallowed; not that it becomes holy from not being holy, but because it becomes holy in us, when we become holy, and do things worthy of holiness.

Thy kingdom come. The clean soul can say with boldness, Thy kingdom come; for he who has heard Paul saying, Let not sin reign in your mortal body, but has cleansed himself in deed, thought, and word, will say to God, Thy kingdom come.

Thy will be done as in heaven, so in earth. The Divine and blessed Angels do the will of God, as David in a Psalm has said, Bless the Lord, ye His Angels, that excel in strength, that do His Commandments. So, then, thou meanest by thy prayer, "As Thy will is done by the Angels, so be it done on earth also by me, Lord."

Give us this day our super-substantial bread. This common bread is not super-substantial bread, but this Holy Bread is super-substantial, that is, appointed for the substance of the soul. For this Bread goeth not into the belly and is cast out into the draught, but is diffused through all thou art, for the benefit of body and soul. But by this day He means "each day," as also Paul has said, While it is called to-day.

And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. For we have many sins. For we offend both in word and in thought, and very many things do we worthy of condemnation; and if we say that we have no sin, we lie, as John says. And we enter into a covenant with God, entreating Him to pardon our sins, as we also forgive our neighbours their debts. Considering then what we receive, and for what, let us not put off, nor delay to forgive one another. The offences committed against us are slight and trivial, and easily settled; but those which we have committed against God are great, and call for mercy such as His only is. Take heed, therefore, lest for these small and inconsiderable sins against thyself, thou bar against thyself forgiveness from God for thy most grievous sins.

And lead us not into temptation, O Lord. Does, then, the Lord teach to pray thus, viz. that we may not be tempted at all? And how is it said elsewhere, "The man who is not tempted is unproved;" and again, My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; or rather, does not the entering into temptation mean the being whelmed under the temptation? For the temptation is like a winter-torrent, difficult to cross. Some, then, being most skilful swimmers, pass over, not being whelmed beneath temptations, nor swept down by them at all; while others who are not such, entering into them sink in them. As, for example, Judas entering into the temptation of covetousness, swam not through it, but sinking beneath it, was choked both in body and spirit. Peter entered into the temptation of the denial; but having entered it, he was not overwhelmed by it, but manfully swimming through it, he was delivered from the temptation. Listen again in another place, to the company of unscathed saints, giving thanks for deliverance from temptation, For Thou, O God, hast proved us; Thou hast tried us like as silver is tried. Thou broughtest us into the net; Thou laidest affliction upon our loins. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and water; but Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place; now their coming into a wealthy place is their being delivered from temptation.

But deliver us from the evil. If Lead us not into temptation had implied the not being tempted at all, He would not have said, But deliver us from the evil. Now the evil is the Wicked Spirit who is our adversary, from whom we pray to be delivered. Then after completing the prayer, Thou sayest, Amen; by this Amen, which means, "So be it," setting thy seal to the petitions of this divinely-taught prayer. [ST. CYRIL'S Catech. Lect. xxiii. 11-18.]

§ Paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer, by the Author of "The Christian Year."

[The following paraphrase is reprinted<sup>1</sup> to illustrate the devotional use of the Lord's Prayer in private, on Liturgical principles. The "special intention" here shewn is also one which bears closely upon two objects of this work, that of promoting the present unity of the Church of Christ, and that of shewing the unity of the Church of England with the Catholic Church of old.]

Our Father, Which art in heaven: One God, the Father Almighty, One Lord Jesus Christ, One Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son; have mercy upon us, Thy children, and make us all One in Thee.

Hallowed be Thy Name: Thou Who art One Lord, and Thy Name One; have mercy upon us all, who are called by Thy Name, and make us more and more One in Thee.

Thy kingdom come: O King of Righteousness and Peace, gather us more and more into Thy kingdom, and make us both visibly and invisibly One in Thee.

Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven: Thou, Who hast

GOOD LORD, DELIVER AND PRESERVE THY SERVANTS FOR EVER.

THE MAGNIFICAT.

The Hymn of the Blessed Virgin Mary can be traced in use in the Daily Service of the Church as far back as the beginning of the sixth century. At that time [A.D. 507] it appears in the rule of St. Caesarius of Arles, in the early morning Office of Lauds. In the Eastern Church it is also a Lauds Canticle. But Amalarius [A.D. 820] speaks of its use in his time as a Canticle at Vespers ; and in the Armenian Church it is used at Complines as well as at Lauds. The English Church has used it at Vespers for at least eight hundred years ; and its present position is analogous to that which it occupied in the ancient Service. There are English versions of it from as early a date as the fourteenth century. [MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 245, 246. Mirror of our Lady, xliii. Blunt's ed.] Several attempts were made by the Puritans to banish it from the Prayer Book, but happily without success. On the other hand, especial reverence was shewn towards this Canticle and the Benedictus in the ceremonial of the ancient Church of England, by the use of incense while they were being sung. [See the ceremony in full in Transl. of Sar. Psalt. p. 327.]

Of all hymns known to the Church this is the most closely connected with our Blessed Lord, having been spoken by His Virgin Mother, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, at the very season when the Divine overshadowing had brought about the Incarnation of the Word. She began to be, in that season, the "tabernacle for the Sun" of Righteousness, "Which cometh forth as a Bridegroom out of His chamber, and rejoiceth as a giant to run His course." The appearance and words of the Archangel had revealed to her the exalted office to which God had chosen her, and she knew that from that hour she would carry in her bosom for nine months the Saviour of the world. But though so "highly favoured," and "full of grace," and conscious of being, as Jeremy Taylor says, "superexalted by an honour greater than the world ever saw," all her words are uttered in a spirit of profound humility as regards herself, even when she declares that "all generations shall call me Blessed," and of the most heavenly adoration as regards Him Who had magnified her.

The Mother of our Lord, and the Church, "which is the Mother of us all," have always been closely linked together in the mind of Christianity. The "Elect Lady," and the Woman "clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars," who, "being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered," and who "brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron : and her child was caught up unto God, and to His throne," have seemed, from the different points of view taken by different ages, to represent now one and then the other, the Mother of our Lord, and the Mother of us all. This community of characteristics is in accordance with the general teaching of the New Testament respecting the mystery of the communion between our Lord Himself and those who are made members of His Body by new birth. And for this reason, "The Song of the Blessed Virgin Mary" has a peculiar fitness as the daily song of the Church of Christ, since God has honoured it with so great honour, in having made it the means by which the work of the Incarnation is made effectual to the salvation of souls. The Blessed Virgin Mother offered up her thanksgiving to God because He had remembered His mercy and His ancient covenant, by making His Son incarnate through her ; and the Church offers up her thanksgiving to Him, because, through her, the mystical Body of Christ is being continually brought forth to His greater glory.

It is also to be observed of this, as of the other Canticles, that it is sung to the praise of the Personal Word, as revealed in the Written Word ; to the praise of God in Christ, revealed in the Old Testament Scriptures as well as in the New.

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON : and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be : world without end. Amen.

† Or else this <sup>a</sup> Psalm ; except it be on the Nineteenth Day of the Month, when it is read in the ordinary course of the Psalms.

With His own right hand, and with His holy arm : hath He gotten Himself the victory.

The LORD declared His salvation : His righteousness hath He openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

He hath remembered His mercy and truth toward the house of Israel : and all the ends of the world have seen the salvation of our God.

Shew yourselves joyful unto the LORD, all ye lands : sing, rejoice, and give thanks.

Praise the LORD upon the harp : sing to the harp with a psalm of thanksgiving.

With trumpets also and shawms : O shew yourselves joyful before the LORD the King.

Let the sea make a noise, and all that therein is : the round world, and they that dwell therein.

Let the floods clap their hands, and let the hills be joyful together before the LORD : for He cometh to judge the earth.

With righteousness shall He judge the world : and the people with equity.

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON : and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be : world without end. Amen.

CANTATE DOMINO.

This Psalm was not used in any other way than in its place in the Psalter (Mattins, on Saturdays) until 1552, when it was inserted here as an alternative responsory to the first Lesson, probably for the purpose of meeting the objections to the Magnificat which had been raised by the Puritans. It bears some resemblance, in its latter verses, to the Benedictic Omnia Opera, the works of God by land and sea being called upon to join in His praise.

It has also been suggested that there are parallel expressions in the Cantate and the Magnificat, which seem to indicate that the latter is in some degree founded on the former. These are the following :—

Cantate Domino.

He that is mighty hath magnified me [or "done to me great things"].

He hath done marvellous things.

He hath shewed strength with His arm : He hath scattered the proud . . . He hath put down the mighty.

With His own right hand and with His holy arm : hath He gotten Himself the victory.

His mercy is on them that fear Him : throughout all generations.

The Lord declared His salvation : His righteousness hath He openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

He remembering His mercy hath holpen His servant Israel.

He hath remembered His mercy and truth toward the house of Israel.

Whether this parallel is accidental or not, it may serve to shew the Evangelical character of the Psalm which is permitted to be used as a substitute for the Song of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Yet it does not seem as if there was ever any necessity for superseding the latter ; and, where choice is given, the Magnificat may well be preferred as being offered up daily to God's praise by the whole Catholic Church. When Evensong is repeated, it may be considered advisable to use the alternative Canticle at one of the Services ; but, in that case, the Magnificat should always be said at the later Evensong.

NUNC DIMITTIS.

The "Song of Simeon" is another Canticle in praise of the manifestation of the Incarnate Word. It has been used at Compline or at Vespers throughout the Church from very early times, being mentioned in the Apostolical Constitutions (written at the end of the third century, at the latest) as an Evening Canticle. There are English versions of it as early as the fourteenth century.

The Nunc Dimittis is singularly fitted for Evensong. Like the words of David, "I will lay me down in peace and take my rest, for it is Thou, Lord, only that makest me to dwell

For mine eyes have seen : Thy salvation, Which Thou hast prepared : before the face of all people ;

To be a light to lighten the Gentiles : and to be the glory of Thy people Israel.

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON : and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be : world without end. Amen.

¶ Or else this <sup>a</sup> Psalm ; except it be on the Twelfth Day of the Month.

Deus misereatur. Ps. lxxvii. GOD be merciful unto us, and bless us : and shew us the light of His countenance, and be merciful unto us :

That Thy way may be known upon earth :
Thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise Thee, O God : yea, let
all the people praise Thee.

O let the nations rejoice and be glad : for Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Let the people praise Thee, O God : yea, let
all the people praise Thee.

Then shall the earth bring forth her increase :
and GOD, even our own GOD, shall give us His blessing.

GOD shall bless us : and all the ends of the world shall fear Him.

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON : and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever
shall be : world without end. Amen.

¶ Then shall be said or sung the Apostles' Creed by the Minister and the people standing.

in safety," it is the aspiration of that faith which can behold Christ lightening the darkness of all night, and fulfilling the words of the prophet, "It shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light." As the Gospels of the Morning Lessons reveal to us the "Day-spring" from on high "visiting us," so the Epistles of the Evening Lessons reveal the Light of Christ's glory enlightening the Gentile as well as the Jewish world.

In the old Evening Services of the Church of England there were touching references to death, and the rest of the departed ; and immediately after Nunc Dimittis, in Passion and Holy Week, was sung the glorious anthem "Media vita in morte sumus," which is now used only in the Burial Service.
This close connection between the Song of Simeon and the idea of our Blessed Lord's Passion arises out of the occasion on which it was first uttered, the Presentation, which was in effect a Sacrifice ; and of the words of Simeon which immediately followed, "Behold, this Child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel ; and for a sign which shall be spoken against ; yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed."
[Luke ii. 34, 35.] And such a connection of ideas cannot fail to remind us also of our Lord's own departing words, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit," when "He saw of the travail of His soul," as the eyes of Simeon saw the salvation of the Lord, "and was satisfied." This calm repose of faith on God,—looking for a present rest on the bosom of Jesus, and a future rest in His Paradisaical Presence,—has always been the tone of Evensong in the Church ; and is one that will always be in harmony with the feelings of those whose day has been a day of work : who look solemnly, yet not gloomily, towards that coming night when no man can work ; and whose eyes are fixed with hope on that "rest which remaineth for the people of God," through the salvation which Christ has prepared.

Early English versions of the Nunc Dimittis may be found in MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 246, and Mirror of our Lady, xliii, Blunt's ed.

DEUS MISEREATUR.

This Psalm was inserted, like the Cantate Domino, in 1552, but was familiar in the older services, being the fourth fixed Psalm at Lauds on Sundays and other Festivals. It was also part of the Office of Bidding Prayers which was used every Sunday. A fourteenth-century version of it is printed in MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 20. Although of a more jubilant character than the Nunc Dimittis, it has several features in common with it, besides this connection with an Office in which the departed were commemorated. Like that, it praises God for the extension of the Gospel : and as Simeon offers thanksgiving that his eyes have seen the salvation of God, so David in this Psalm prays that the Light of His countenance may be shewn to us, and His saving health known among all nations.

Occasions may arise when this Canticle is peculiarly appropriate : but for ordinary Evensong (and especially for the later of two services) it is better always to keep to the ancient spirit and practice of the Church and use the Nunc Dimittis.

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

A large number of early English versions of the Creed are the Virgin Mary, Suffered under Pontius Pilate, Was crucified, dead, and buried, He descended into hell; The third day He rose again from the dead, He ascended into heaven, And sitteth on the right hand of GOD the FATHER Almighty; From thence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

I believe in the HOLY GHOST; The holy Catholick Church; The Communion of Saints; The Forgiveness of sins; The Resurrection of the body, And the Life everlasting. Amen.

¶ Then the Minister, Clerks, and people, shall say the Lord's Prayer with a loud voice.

OUR FATHER, Which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

¶ Then the Priest standing up, shall say,

O LORD, shew Thy mercy upon us.

This prayer is the Collect of the same Missa pro pace, of which the Morning Collect for Peace is the "Post-Communion." It also was used at Lauds, at Vespers, and in the Litany, in the ancient Services : and dates from the Sacramentary of Gelasius, A.D. 494.

Coming as it originally did at the close of Evensong, it formed a sweet cadence of prayer, fitly concluding with the following short but touching Collect. It follows up very exactly the tone of the Nunc Dimittis, and rings with a gentle echo of the peace that lies beyond this world, as well as of the peace which the world cannot give, nor the soul entirely receive while it is in the world. In the Morning Collect the tone of the prayer was that of one who asks God of His mercy to bless and co-operate with His own in their strife against spiritual foes : but in the Evening the words are more those of one who is no longer able to strive against his enemies, but looks to his Lord God alone to be his defence and his shield.

[Between the second and third Collect at Evening Prayer Bishop Cosin wished to insert the second of the Collects appended to the Communion Service, "O Almighty Lord, and everlasting God," under the title of "The Collect for grace and protection," but the alteration was rejected. The idea seems to have been taken from the York Litany.]

THE THIRD COLLECT.

This prayer is of equal antiquity with the preceding : and is expressly appointed to be used at Evening Prayer in the Sacramentary of Gelasius. It was taken into our Evensong from the Compline of the Salisbury Use. Here again the Nunc Dimittis is followed up in its tone : but the words are taken almost literally from the Psalms, which have been the great storehouse of Prayer as well as Praise to the Church of all ages. "Consider and hear me, O Lord my God : lighten mine eyes that I sleep not in death. Thou also shalt light my candle : the Lord my God shall make my darkness to be light. Yea, the darkness is no darkness with Thee, but the night is as clear as the day : the darkness and light to Thee are both alike. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved : and He that keepeth thee will not sleep. Behold, He that keepeth Israel : shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord Himself is thy keeper : the Lord is thy defence upon thy right hand. So that the sun shall not burn thee by day : neither the moon by night. He shall deliver thee from the snare of the hunter : and from the noisome pestilence. He shall defend thee under His wings, and thou shalt be safe under His feathers : His faithfulness and truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid for any terror by night ; nor for the arrow that flieth by day : for the pestilence that walketh in darkness : nor for the sickness that destroyeth in the noonday.

attain everlasting joy and felicity; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

ALMIGHTY God, the Fountain of all goodness, we humbly beseech Thee to bless Albert Edward Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and all the Royal Family: Endue them with Thy HOLY SPIRIT; enrich them with Thy heavenly grace; prosper them with all happiness; and bring them to Thine everlasting kingdom; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ A Prayer for the Clergy and People.

ALMIGHTY and everlasting God, Who alone workest great marvels; Send down upon our Bishops, and Curates, and all Congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of Thy grace; and that they may truly please Thee, pour upon them the continual dew of Thy blessing. Grant this, O LORD, for the honour of our Advocate and Mediator, JESUS CHRIST. Amen.

¶ A Prayer of St. Chrysostom.

ALMIGHTY God, Who hast given us grace at this time with one accord to make our common supplications unto Thee; and dost promise, that when two or three are gathered together in Thy Name Thou wilt grant their requests: Fulfil now, O LORD, the desires and petitions of Thy servants, as may be most expedient for them; granting us in this world knowledge of Thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting. Amen.

For Thou art my strong rock, and my castle; be Thou also my guide, and lead me for Thy Name's sake. Into Thy hands I commend my spirit: for Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord, Thou God of truth. I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest: for it is Thou, Lord, only that makest me dwell in safety."

Such are words from the Psalms of David which may be taken as a Scriptural comment upon this short but condensed Collect. They shew us how literally the latter must be taken if we are to enter into its true spirit: how much solemn reference to the present and the future may be drawn into the compass of a few words of prayer: and what a fulness of devotion is contained in even the shortest of those forms which have come down to us as the day-by-day utterances of the Church of God for so many ages.

To meet objections which were made to the words of this prayer, Bishop Cosin has altered it in his Durham Book to "Lighten the darkness of our hearts, we beseech Thee, O Lord, by Thy gracious visitation, and of Thy great mercy . . . from all terrors and dangers of the night . . ." Bishop Wren proposed, "Lighten the darkness, we beseech Thee, O Lord, that the night will bring upon us, and by Thy great mercy defend us from all dangers of the same, for the love of Thy only Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ." Happily the ancient words were retained.

The peculiar fitness of these words to end a Service which is really offered in the Evening is so great, that one cannot wonder at the reluctance shewn by the Clergy and People to add on the Intercessory Prayers which now follow. And although the Rubric directing these prayers to be used after the Anthem is not inserted in the Evening Service, its omission by no means weakens the force of what has been said in the Notes on Morning Prayer as to such a termination of the Daily Service.

AT MORNING PRAYER.

<sup>a</sup> Upon these Feasts; Christmas Day, the Epiphany, Saint Matthias, Easter Day, Ascension Day, Whitsun Day, Saint John Baptist, Saint James, Saint Bartholomew, Saint Matthew, Saint Simon and Saint Jude, Saint Andrew, and upon Trinity Sunday, shall be sung or said <sup>b</sup> at Morning Prayer, instead of the Apostles' Creed, this Confession of our Christian Faith, commonly called The Creed of Saint Athanasius, by the Minister and people standing.

THE ATHANASIAN CREED.

Upon these Feasts] It was the ancient usage of the Church of England to sing the "Symbolum Athanasii," or "Psalm Quicumque," every day after the Psalms at Prime.

It was sung antiphonally, as a dogmatic Christian Psalm or Canticle, and not in the manner of a Creed, the Apostles' Creed being used at the same service as the actual Confession of Faith. In the first English Prayer Book, that of 1549, it was directed to be said on six Festivals, those of Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, and Trinity; and seven Saints' days were added in 1552, so as to make thirteen days altogether.

In the Reformed Breviary of Quignonez, and in the Modern Roman Breviary, it is appointed for use on Sundays: the recitation of it being thus a weekly instead of a monthly one. In the Eastern Church the Athanasian Creed is not recited in any of the Services, but is placed at the end of the Office Book much in the same manner as the "Thirty-nine Articles of Religion" used to be printed at the end of the Book of Common Prayer. The Creed does not appear in the earlier English Prymers, but vernacular translations of it are extant of as ancient a date as the tenth century. [Lambeth Lib. 427; Bodl. Lib. Douce, 258.] The English of the version in the Prayer Book is substantially the same as that of Bishop Hilsey, which was printed in the Prymer of 1539.

commonly called The Creed of Saint Athanasius] This popular title is used in the mediæval Breviaries, but the most ancient forms in which the title is found are "Hymnus Athanasii de Fide Trinitatis," as in the Utrecht Psalter, or "Fides Catholica Sancti Athanasii," as in many ancient Psalters. Although the name of St. Athanasius has been associated with it for twelve hundred years, it cannot be certainly traced back to him as its author: and there is little probability that it was originally written in Greek, the language in which all the known works of St. Athanasius were written, since no extant Greek MS. of it is more than four hundred years old, and none is mentioned by any writer before A.D. 1200, while there are Latin MSS. of it that date through every age as far back as the fifth century, or to within a century of the time of St. Athanasius himself. It is probable that it was called "Fides Sancti Athanasii Præsulis," as it was by the Council of Autun about A.D. 670, because it expresses the doctrines for which St. Athanasius contended so learnedly and energetically against Arius and the Arians, for which he suffered so much, and of which he was the greatest defender. The real author appears to have been some theologian of the Western Church, the Bishop of a diocese in France, in the early part of the fifth century.

This beautiful and exact dogmatic Canticle is found in all such early Psalters as contain any Canticles beside the Psalms of David. Among these are the Vienna Psalter, which is said to have been presented by the Emperor Charlemagne to the Church of Bremen, and which is believed to have been written in the latter part of the eighth century; and the Utrecht Psalter, once the treasure of an English Church Library, which is of an even earlier date, and is assigned by some high paleographical authorities to the sixth century.<sup>1</sup> There exist also numerous early commentaries upon it, in some of which the whole of the Creed is extant in substantially the same Latin text as that printed above, various readings being few and of little importance. Of such commentaries there are known to be forty which were written before A.D. 1215, and sixteen of these were written before A.D. 800. Among them may be mentioned anonymous commentaries which are preserved in the Library of Troyes [804 (a), 804 (β), 1979], in the British Museum Library [Add. MSS. 24,902], in the National Library at Paris [Bibl. Nat. 1012], and in the Vatican. [MAI's Script. Vet. Nova. Collect. ix. 396.] These MSS. were all written in the ninth or tenth centuries, but there is strong reason to believe that they are transcripts of still earlier MSS., just as the earliest Bibles, those of the fourth and fifth centuries, were also transcribed from older MSS. There is, however, a commentary which can be assigned to a particular author, and thus to a particular date, the Commentary of Venantius Fortunatus, which he wrote about A.D. 570, previously to his consecration as Bishop of Poitiers. Of this eight MS. copies are known; and as the author comments upon the Creed verse by verse, they offer very valuable evidence as to the text of it at that early date.

The presence of this Canticle among the other Canticles and the Psalms in all the ancient Psalters indicates that it was used in Divine Service at the time when these Psalters were written: and as the Utrecht Psalter which was written for use in the Church of England contains the Quicumque Vult and all the Canticles of the Old and New Testament which were so used, it may be concluded that this "Confession of Faith" was as certainly used as the Te Deum in the English Church of those early days. A Canon of the Gallican Church, passed at Autun [A.D. 661-673], enjoined on the Clergy the recitation of the "Fides Sancti Athanasii;" and it is thought by some critics that an earlier Canon, possibly of the sixth century, found in two MSS. at the Vatican, which contains an injunction as to learning by heart the "Fides Catholica," refers under that title to the Quicumque: the inference being that this was for the purpose of its recitation in Divine Service. There is also extant at the end of the Venerable Bede's abbreviated Psalter a prayer which he composed for the monks of Jarrow to use after the recitation of the Athanasian Creed in Divine Service; and as Bede died in A.D. 735, this shews that its use had been adopted at least in the eighth century in the Church of England. At a rather later date the Clergy were directed to explain the Creed to the Laity, and interlinear Anglo-Saxon versions and glosses of it are found which were obviously intended, like the vernacular versions of the Apostles' Creed, for laymen's use. It may therefore be concluded that the Athanasian Creed has been used in Divine Service by the Church of England for considerably more than a thousand years, and probably since the sixth century.

“Which Faith except every one do keep <sup>h</sup> whole and undefiled : without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.

“And the Catholick Faith is this : That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity ; “Neither confounding the Persons ; nor dividing the Substance.

“For there is one Person of the FATHER, another of the SON : and another of the HOLY GHOST.

“But the Godhead of the FATHER, of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST, is all one : the Glory equal, the Majesty co-eternal.

Such as the FATHER is, such is the SON : and such is the HOLY GHOST.

“The FATHER uncreate, the SON uncreate : and the HOLY GHOST uncreate.

“The FATHER incomprehensible, the SON incomprehensible : and the HOLY GHOST incomprehensible.

“The FATHER eternal, the SON eternal : and the HOLY GHOST eternal.

And yet they are not three eternal : but one eternal.

Et tamen non tres æterni : sed unus æternus.

By whom this formulary was actually composed is still, and perhaps always will be, a matter of conjecture. In WATERLAND'S History of the Athanasian Creed he maintains the opinion that its author was St. Hilary of Arles, who died A.D. 449. Harvey, in his History and Theology of the Three Creeds, gives his reasons for supposing that it was written by Victorinus, Bishop of Rouen, about A.D. 401. Ommaney comes to the conclusion that “of all persons to whom the Quicumque has been assigned, St. Vincent of Lerins” [d. A.D. 450] “is the only one to whom it can be assigned with any degree of probability.”

But at present there is no sufficient evidence to enable any writer to deal in a satisfactory manner with the question of its authorship, and all that can be said is that it was probably composed by some Gallican theologian in the first half of the fifth century.<sup>1</sup>

by the Minister and people standing] In his revised Prayer Book Bishop Cosin has substituted for these words “one verse by the priest, and another by the people ; or in Colleges, and where there is a Quire, by sides.” This was the ancient mode of saying or singing it.

Whosoever will be saved] St. Augustine, in his Treatise on Faith and Works, says, “Not only is a good life inseparable from Faith, but Faith itself is a good life.” This illustrates the assertion of the Creed that “before all things it is necessary to hold the Catholic Faith.” For faith necessarily precedes practice : “Without faith it is impossible to please God : for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.” [Heb. xi. 6.] Now, the belief that “God is” includes far more than a mere assent to the fact of His existence. To a mind capable of logical reflection, many corollaries must necessarily hang on to this fundamental axiom ; the statement of such corollaries forms a more or less developed Creed ; and thus belief in a Creed as the logical extension of the most primary truth becomes necessary to salvation, or “coming to God,” here and hereafter.

whole and undefiled] The sin of not keeping the Catholic Faith whole and undefiled can only be committed by those who know what it is in its integrity, and wilfully reject some portion of it : “every one” must therefore mean every one who has come to such a knowledge of the Faith, without asserting anything respecting those who are ignorant of it. This is simply, therefore, a declaration that heresy, or a wilful rejection of any part of the Catholic Faith, comes within the condemnation declared by our Lord, “He that believeth not shall be damned.” [Mark xvi. 16.] Those are in danger of this condemnation who have learned that there is a Trinity in Unity, Three Persons in One God, and yet wilfully reject the doctrine : but many believe this faithfully who have not sufficient education to follow out the doctrine into its consequences and necessary corollaries, as afterwards stated. On the other hand, those who understand these corollaries and reject them run into practical heresy.

That we worship] The actual sense of this verse may be stated in other words as being, “The Catholic Faith is this, that the God Whom we worship is One God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity.” Yet it is also true that as the end of all right Belief is right Worship, so the worship which alone can be right is that which is founded on the Catholic Faith as here stated.

Persons . . . Substance] “Person” is a word which marks the individual Unity of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost ; “Substance” a word which marks their collective Unity. The latter word, which is synonymous with “Essence,” or “Nature,” comprehends all the essential qualities of Deity, or that which God is : Eternity, Uncreatedness, Omnipotence, Omnipresence, are some of these essential qualities belonging to Deity, and not belonging to any other kind of being. To “divide the Substance” is to assert that these essential qualities, or any of them, belong to either Person of the Godhead separately from, or in a different degree from, the other Persons.

Sabellius [A.D. 250] originated, in its most definite form, the heresy of “confounding the Persons,” by declaring that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were but three names, aspects, or manifestations of one God. Arius [A.D. 320] “divided the Substance” by alleging that the First Person existed before the other two Persons of the Blessed Trinity ; thus attributing the essential quality of Eternity to One, and denying that it belonged to the others. These two errors lie at the root of all others ; and the following twenty verses of the Creed are an elaboration of the true doctrine, in a strict form of language, as a fence against them.

incomprehensible] This word is represented in modern English by the word Omnipresent. In Bishop Hilsey's translation of the Creed he uses the word “immeasurable,” which better answers to the Latin immensus. The word “incomprehensible” has now the disadvantage of a metaphysical as well as a physical sense ; but when the Prayer Book was translated, it probably had only the latter meaning, expressing “that which cannot be grasped by, or contained within, any space.” It is only a strict form of stating the primary notion that “God is everywhere.” “If I climb up into heaven, Thou art there : if I go down to hell, Thou art there also. If I take the wings of the morning : and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea ; even there also <sup>1</sup> The fullest historical account of this formulary is to be found in OMMANEY'S Athanasian Creed, an Examination of Recent Theories respecting its Date and Origin, 1875 ; and the same author's Early History of the Athanasian Creed, 1880. A large and valuable collection of Scriptural and Patristic quotations in illustration of it will be found set out verse by verse in RADCLIFFE'S Athanasian Creed Illustrated by Parallel Passages, 1844.

<sup>a</sup> As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated ; but one uncreated, and one incomprehensible.

<sup>b</sup> So likewise the FATHER is Almighty, the SON Almighty : and the HOLY GHOST Almighty.

And yet they are not three Almightyies : but one Almighty.

<sup>c</sup> So the FATHER is GOD, the SON is GOD : and the HOLY GHOST is GOD.

And yet they are not three Gods : but one GOD.

<sup>d</sup> So likewise the FATHER is LORD, the SON LORD : and the HOLY GHOST LORD.

And yet not three Lords : but one LORD.

For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity : to acknowledge every Person by Himself to be GOD and LORD ;

<sup>e</sup> So are we forbidden by the Catholick Religion : to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

<sup>h</sup> The HOLY GHOST is of the FATHER, and of the SON : neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

So there is one FATHER, not three Fathers ; one SON, not three Sons : one HOLY GHOST, not three Holy Ghosts.

<sup>i</sup> And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other : none is greater, or less than another ;

<sup>k</sup> But the whole three Persons are co-eternal together : and co-equal.

<sup>l</sup> So that in all things, as is aforesaid : the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped.

<sup>m</sup> He therefore that will be saved : must thus think of the Trinity.

Similiter omnipotens PATER, omnipotens FILIUS : omnipotens SPIRITUS SANCTUS.

Et tamen non tres omnipotentes : sed unus omnipotens.

Ita DEUS PATER, DEUS FILIUS : DEUS SPIRITUS SANCTUS.

Et tamen non tres Dii : sed unus est DEUS.

Ita DOMINUS PATER, DOMINUS FILIUS : DOMINUS SPIRITUS SANCTUS.

Et tamen non tres Domini : sed unus est DOMINUS.

Quia sicut singillatim unamquamque Personam DEUM et DOMINUM confiteri Christiana veritate compellimur :

Ita tres Deos aut Dominos dicere, catholica religione prohibemur.

PATER a nullo est factus : nec creatus, nec genitus.

FILIUS a PATRE solo est : non factus, nec creatus, sed genitus.

SPIRITUS SANCTUS a PATRE et FILIO : non factus, nec creatus, nec genitus, sed procedens.

Et in hac Trinitate nihil prius aut posterius : nihil majus aut minus.

Sed totæ tres personæ : coæternæ sibi sunt et coæquales.

Ita ut per omnia, sicut jam supra dictum est, et Unitas in Trinitate : et Trinitas in Unitate veneranda sit.

Qui vult ergo salvus esse : ita de Trinitate sentiat.

shall Thy hand lead me : and Thy right hand shall hold me." [Ps. cxxxix. 7-9.] Yet it is true that a meaning not intended in the Creed has developed itself through this change of language, for the Nature of God is as far beyond the grasp of the mind as it is beyond the possibility of being contained within local bounds.

For like as we are compelled] The Creed here declares the Divinity of each several Person of the Blessed Trinity to be so clearly set forth in "the Christian Verity," that is, in the Canon of Holy Scripture as received by the Church, that there is no escape for the reason from such a conclusion ;— we are compelled to believe, by the force of the evidence which God has vouchsafed us in the Holy Bible. It would be easy to shew, at length, how literally true this is ; but the marginal references appended to the text are intended to direct the reader to such evidence, and to supersede, by his private study, the necessity for occupying space here with the details of the Scriptural argument.

So are we forbidden by the Catholick Religion] [1] The evidence of doctrine is contained in the Holy Scriptures ; the consequences, deductions, and inferences, which may be made from the contents of Holy Scripture, must be under the control of the Church. The one teaching us clearly that each Person of the Blessed Trinity possesses in Himself the inherent essential qualities of the Divine Nature, the other forbids us to draw any false conclusions from the truth thus revealed. [2] The final interpretation of Holy Scripture rests not with the individual Christian, but with the collective Christian body ; and where that collective Christian body has set forth an interpretation, the individual Christian will be, to say the least, unsafe in adopting, or wishing to adopt, any other. [3] The "Catholick Religion" respecting the Unity of the Trinity had been clearly decided and set forth at the General Councils held before this Creed was written.

The Holy Ghost is of the Father, and of the Son] The introduction of the words et Filio into this Creed shews that the doctrine of the Double Procession of the Holy Ghost was received at a very early date, although "Filioque" was not added to the Nicene Creed until the sixth century. The statement of it in this place is of a more general character than in the Nicene Creed [7. v.], but it is rejected by the Eastern Church.

He therefore that will be saved : must thus think of the Trinity] This practical or saving importance of a right Faith in the Holy Trinity, may be seen [1] from the manner in which the doctrine lies at the foundation of all other doctrine ; [2] by the fact that our Lord made it the very fountain of spiritual life, when He connected the invocation of the Holy Trinity essentially with Holy Baptism ; and [3] by the place which it occupies in moulding all the forms of Christian worship.

Nevertheless, this verse of the Creed must not be taken as meaning that no person can be saved except he has an intellectual apprehension of the doctrines here set forth about the Blessed Trinity. Intellectual apprehension of doctrine is confined to educated minds, which have the faculty of forming opinions about truth, as well as of believing it. In whatever degree, then, opinions accompany Faith, they must be consistent with the statements here made respecting God, in each several Person, and in one Indivisible Trinity. It is one of the responsibilities attached to the possession of intellect, and its development by education, that it be not suffered to go out of its province, professing to discover where it cannot even observe, or to reason where it has no premisses. The highest intellect cannot form any opinion about God that can possibly be true, if it is not consistent with what He Himself has told us ; and the highest operation of intellect is to train itself into consistency with the Supreme Mind.

“ Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation : that he also believe rightly the Incarnation of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

“ For the right Faith is, that we believe and confess : that our LORD JESUS CHRIST, the SON of GOD, is GOD and Man ;

“ GOD, of the Substance of the FATHER, begotten before the worlds ; and Man, of the Substance of His Mother, born in the world ;

“ Perfect GOD, and perfect Man : of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting ;

“ Equal to the FATHER, as touching His Godhead : and inferior to the FATHER, as touching His Manhood.

“ Who although He be GOD and Man ; yet He is not two, but one CHRIST ;

“ One ; not by conversion of the Godhead into flesh : but by taking of the Manhood into GOD ;

“ One altogether ; not by confusion of Substance ; but by unity of Person.

“ For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man ; so GOD and Man is one CHRIST ;

“ Who suffered for our salvation : descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

“ He ascended into heaven, He sitteth on the right hand of the FATHER, GOD Almighty : from whence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

“ At Whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies : and shall give account for their own works.

“ And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting : and they that have done evil into everlasting fire.

“ This is the Catholick Faith : which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.

Sed necessarium est ad æternam salutem : ut incarnationem quoque DOMINI nostri JESU CHRISTI fideliter credat.

Est ergo fides recta, ut credamus et confitemur : quia DOMINUS noster JESUS CHRISTUS, DEI FILIUS, DEUS et Homo est.

DEUS est ex substantia PATRIS ante sæcula genitus : et homo est ex substantia matris in sæculo natus.

Perfectus DEUS, perfectus homo : ex anima rationali et humana carne subsistens.

ÆQUALIS PATRI secundum Divinitatem : minor PATRE secundum Humanitatem.

Qui licet DEUS sit et Homo : non duo tamen, sed unus est CHRISTUS.

Unus autem, non conversione Divinitatis in carnem : sed assumptione humanitatis in DEUM.

Unus omnino, non confusione substantiæ : sed unitate personæ.

Nam sicut anima rationalis et caro unus est homo : ita DEUS et Homo unus est CHRISTUS, Qui passus est pro salute nostra, descendit ad inferos : tertia die resurrexit a mortuis.

Ascendit ad cœlos, sedet ad dexteram DEI PATRIS omnipotentis : inde venturus est judicare vivos et mortuos.

Ad Cujus adventum omnes homines resurgere habent cum corporibus suis : et redditori sunt de factis propriis rationem.

Et qui bona egerunt ibunt in vitam æternam : qui vero mala in ignem æternum.

Hæc est fides catholica : quam nisi quisque fideliter firmiterque crediderit, salvus esse non poterit.

[Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation] The latter part of the Athanasian Creed may be said to be a logical exposition of the second member of the Apostles' Creed, and especially with reference to the two Natures of our Blessed Lord, the union of which is called the "Incarnation."

[God, of the Substance of the Father] The many heresies respecting the Nature of our Blessed Lord entailed on the Church a necessity for the greatest strictness of expression ; and whether God the Son was of the same Substance with the Father, eternally begotten, or whether He was of a similar Substance, and a created being, was the great question which had to be decided by the Church, time after time, as one form and another of the latter opinion arose, throughout the first ages. The voice of the Church never faltered, but always declared that the belief here expressed was the Faith once for all delivered to the Saints, and handed down from the Apostles to later times. It was this contest of heresy with the orthodox Faith that originated the minute definition into which the Athanasian Creed runs ; and however unnecessary it may seem to those who willingly receive the true doctrine, yet it must be remembered that heresy never dies ; and that hence this minute accuracy is a necessary bulwark of the truth. Also, that we may be very thankful "the right Faith" has not now to be built up, but only to be defended.

[Perfect God, and perfect Man] Our Lord Jesus, in both of His two Natures, has all the essential qualities which belong to each : Eternity, Uncreatedness, Omnipresence, Almightyness, Divine Will, and all other attributes of the Divine Nature ; Body, Soul, Human Will, and all other attributes belonging to the Human Nature. These two Natures are as entirely united in the One Being, Christ, as the body and the soul are united in the one being, man. This Union was first effected when the Son of God began to be the Son of Man in the womb of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and it has never been broken since. When the Body of the Crucified Saviour was laid in the tomb, it was kept from corruption by the continuance of its Union with the Divine Nature : and when His Soul descended into hell, the Divine Nature was still united to it also, enabling it to triumph over Satan and Death ; when the Soul and Body of Christ were united together again, and ascended into Heaven, it was in conjunction with the Divine Nature that they ascended, to sit as Perfect God and Perfect Man at the right hand of the Father. And in the same two, but united Natures, Christ our Lord will come to judge the quick and the dead.

[life everlasting . . . everlasting fire] These words, awful as the latter part of them is, are the words of our Lord, "The King shall say unto them on His right hand, Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world . . . also unto them on the left hand, Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment ; but the righteous into life eternal." [Matt. xxv. 34, 41, 46.]

[This is the Catholick Faith : which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved] This verse also is founded on words of our Lord, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved ; but he that believeth not shall be damned." [Mark xvi. 16.] And these severe words of His are the more striking from the fact of their utterance immediately before His Ascension to Heaven, lifting up His hands and blessing His disciples.

It will be observed that the word firmiter in this clause is not represented in our translation. Waterland says [Critic. Hist. V. x.] that our translators followed a Greek copy of the Creed, printed at Basle by Nicholas Bryling. As this was reprinted by Stephens in 1565, it probably had some weight at the time. These words of the clause in this Greek copy are given as Πιστῶς πιστεῖσθαι. Other Greek copies follow the Latin.

It does not become the writer to say anything that may in the least lessen the force of such awful words. In the Creed which has been under notice, they are applied in close consistency with our Lord's first use of them, and they must be taken for all that they fairly mean. A word of caution

Glory be to the FATHER, and to the SON : and to the HOLY GHOST ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be : world without end. Amen.

Gloria PATRI, et FILIO : et SPIRITUI SANCTO.

Sicut erat in principio, et nunc et semper : et in sæcula sæculorum.

may, however, be expedient ; reminding the reader of what has been before said about opinion and belief. A willing assent may be given to the more obvious statements of this Creed by many who are quite unable to enter upon the collateral and inferential statements deduced from them ; and "a man" may thus "believe faithfully" in the substantial truths of the Catholic Faith. With an expanded knowledge, an expanded faith is necessary : and all the statements of the Creed are so bound together, that they whose expanded knowledge of it is not thus accompanied, are in fact rejecting the fundamental Articles of the Faith, as well as those that seem subordinate only. It will be better in the next life for the ignorant, if they have believed according to the measure of their knowledge, than for those who have known much, but have believed little.

It may be added that the last two verses, popularly called the "Damnatory Clauses," are found in every known manuscript of the Creed.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITANY.

THE Greek word Litaneia, meaning Prayer or Supplication, appears to have been used in the fourth century for devotions public or private; but it soon came to have a narrower and more technical sense as applied to solemn acts of processional prayer. Whether St. Basil uses it in this sense, when in his 107th epistle he reminds the clergy of Neocæsarea that "the Litanies which they now practise" were unknown in the time of their great apostle Gregory, and therefore might form a precedent for other salutary innovations, is a matter of opinion, on which Bingham and Palmer (the latter more expressly than the former) take the affirmative side, the Benedictine Editor and Keble [note to HOOKER'S Ecl. Pol. v. 41, 2] taking the negative. But when we are told [MANSI, Concil. iv. 1428] that the aged abbat Dalmatius had for many years never left his monastery, though repeatedly requested by Theodosius II. when Constantinople was visited by earthquakes "to go forth and perform a Litany," there can be no doubt as to the meaning of the statement.

The history, however, of Litanies, in the proper sense of the term, is rather Western than Eastern. We find, indeed, in the Eastern Liturgy and Offices some four or five specimens of a kindred form of prayer, called Ectene, Synapte, etc., in which the Deacon bids prayer for several objects, sometimes beginning with "In peace let us beseech the Lord," and the people respond with "Kyrie eleison," or with "Vouchsafe, O Lord." The reader of Bishop ANDREWES' Devotions will be familiar with this type of prayers. [See Oxford edition, pp. 5, 92.] And we have it represented in the Western Church by two sets of "Preces" in the Ambrosian Missal, one used on the first, third, and fifth Sundays in Lent, the other on the second and fourth. One of these begins, "Beseeching the gifts of Divine peace and pardon . . . we pray Thee," etc., proceeding to specify various topics of intercession with the response, "Lord, have mercy." The other is shorter, but in its imploring earnestness ("Deliver us, Thou Who deliverest the children of Israel . . . with a strong arm and a high hand. . . O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for Thy Name's sake") is even more interesting as a link between the Ectene and the Litanies of the West, an essential characteristic of which is their deprecatory and more or less penitential tone. Somewhat similar are the Mozarabic "Preces" for Lenten Sundays, with their burdens of "Have mercy," "We have sinned," etc. It may also be observed that "Preces," like the "Pacifice" of the Ambrosian rite, were anciently sung at Mass in Rome (at first only on days when the Gloria in Excelsis and Alleluia were omitted) until the ninth century. They formed an Eastern feature in the service, and may be compared with the Preces of the Abbey of Fulda, which, like a Greek Ectene, intercede for various persons and classes, supplicate for a Christian and peaceful end, and have for their responses, "We pray Thee, O Lord, hear and have mercy," "Grant it, O Lord, grant it!" also with a series of Invocations, followed by "Tu illum adjuva," occurring in an old form for an Emperor's coronation in MURATORI, Lit. Rom. ii. 463.

But to confine ourselves to the Western Litany. It became common among the Gallic churches in the fifth century, as it was in the East, to invoke the Divine mercy in time of excessive rain or drought by means of Rogations or processional supplications. But these, according to the testimony of Sidonius Apollinaris [v. 14], were often carelessly performed, with lukewarmness, irregularity, and infrequency—devotion, as he expresses it, being often dulled by the intervention of meals. The shock of a great calamity wrought a change and formed an epoch. The illustrious city of Vienne, already famous in Christian history for the persecution under M. Aurelius [EUSEB. Ecl. Hist. v. 1], was troubled for about a year—probably the year 467-68 [FLEURY, Ecl. Hist. xxix. c. 38]—with earthquakes. In the touching language of Gregory of Tours [Hist. Francor. ii. 34] the people had hoped that the Easter festival would bring a cessation of their distress. "But during the very vigil of the glorious night, while Mass was being celebrated," the palace took fire, the people rushed wildly out of the church, and the Bishop Mamertus was left alone before the altar, entreating the mercy of God. He formed then a resolution, which he carried out in the three days before the Ascension festival, of celebrating a Rogation with special solemnity and earnestness. A fast was observed, and with prayers, psalmody, and Scripture lessons the people went forth in procession to the nearest church outside the city. Mamertus, says Fleury, had so appointed, "voulant éprouver la ferveur du peuple . . . mais le chemin parut trop court pour la dévotion des fidèles." Sidonius imitated this "most useful example" in Auvergne at the approach of the Goths. He tells Mamertus [vi. ep. i.] that the Heart-searcher caused the entreaties made at Vienne to be a model for imitation and a means of deliverance. Gregory of Tours writes that these Rogations were "even now celebrated throughout all churches with compunction of heart and contrition of spirit;" and tells how St. Quintianus in Auvergne, celebrating one in a drought, caused the words "If the heaven be shut up," etc. [2 Chron. vi. 26], to be sung as an anthem, whereupon at once rain fell; how King Guntram ordered a Rogation, with fasting on barley-bread and water, during a pestilence [Hist. Francor. ix. 21]; how St. Gall instituted Rogations in the middle of Lent [Ibid. iv. 5]; how the Bishop of Paris performed them before Ascension, "going the round of the holy places" [ix. 5]. St. Casarius of Arles [A.D. 501-542] in his Homily "de Letania" (it became usual so to spell the word) calls the Rogation days "holy and spiritual, full of healing virtue to our souls," and "regularly observed by the Church throughout the world;" and bids his hearers come to church and stay through the whole Rogation service, so as to gain the full benefit of this "three days' healing process." The Second Council of Lyons [A.D. 567] ordered also in its sixth Canon that Litanies should be said in every church in the week before the first Sunday in November in the same manner as before Ascension Day.

In order to estimate the comfort which these services then gave, one must take into account not only such afflictions as drought or pestilence, but the painful sense of confusion and insecurity which in those days brooded over Western Europe, and which still speaks in some of our own Collects, imploring the boon of peace and safety. We cannot wonder that, while the Rogation Mass in the Old Gallican Missal speaks of "sowing in tears, to reap in joys," a Collect in the Gallican Sacramentary "in Letanias" dwells on "the crash of a falling world." So it was that, as Hooker expresses it, "Rogations or Litanies were then the very strength, stay, and comfort of God's Church." Council after Council—as of Orleans in 511, Tours in 567—decreed Rogation observances in connection with a strict fast. But the Spanish Church, not liking to fast in the Paschal time, placed its Litanies in Lent, in Whitsun week, and in the autumn, while the Milanese Rogations were in the week after Ascension. We learn from the Council of Cloveshoo [A.D. 747] that the English Church had observed the Rogations before Ascension ever since the coming of St. Augustine: and the anthem with which he and his companions approached Canterbury, "We beseech Thee" (deprecamur te), "O Lord, in Thy great mercy, to remove Thy wrath and anger from this city, and from Thy holy house, for we have sinned, Alleluia," was simply part of the Rogation Tuesday service in the Church of Lyons. [MARTENE, de Ant. Ecl. Rit. iii. 529.] This urgent deprecatory tone, this strong "crying out of the deep," which expresses so marked a characteristic of the Litanies, appears again in another Lyons anthem for Rogations, "I have seen, I have seen the affliction of My people;" in the York suffrage, which might seem to be as old as the days of the dreaded heathen King Penda, "From the persecution by the Pagans and all our enemies, deliver us;" and yet more strikingly in the Ambrosian, "Deliver us not into the hand of the heathen: Thou art kind, O Lord, have pity upon us; encompass Thou this city, and let Angels guard its walls; mercifully accept our repentance, and save us, O Saviour of the world; In the midst of life we are in death:" although this latter anthem, so familiar to us, was composed on a different occasion by Notker of St. Gall. [See Notes to Burial Office.] The strict rule which forbade in Rogation time all costly garments, and all riding on horseback, may be illustrated by the decree of the Council of Mayence in 813, that all should "go barefoot and in sackcloth in the procession of the Great Litany of three days, as our holy fathers appointed."

This name, "Litania Major," was thus applied in Gaul to the Rogations, but in Rome it has always been used (as it now is throughout the Roman Church) for the Litany of St. Mark's Day, which traces itself to St. Gregory the Great, and of which the Ordo Romanus says that it is not "in jejuniis." In order to avert a pestilence, Gregory appointed a "seven-fold Litany," using the term for the actual processional company, as the Litany of clergy, the Litany of laymen, that of monks, of virgins, of married women, of widows, of the poor and children; and, in fact, the Roman Bishops did not adopt the Rogation Litany, properly so called, until the pontificate of Leo III., which began in 795. This was some fifty years after England, on the other hand, had adopted the Litany of St. Mark's Day as that which at Rome was called the Greater.

But although in strictness, as Hugh Menard says, "Litania ad luctum pertinet," the Litany was not always confined to occasions of distress or of special humiliation. As early as the close of the fifth century the Gelasian Sacramentary, in its directions for Holy Saturday, had the following [Muratori, i. 546, 568]: "They enter the Sacristy, and vest themselves as usual. And the Clergy begin the Litany, and the Priest goes in procession, with those in holy orders, out of the Sacristy. They come before the altar, and stand with bowed heads until they say, 'Lamb of God, Who takest away the sins of the world.'" Then comes the blessing of the Paschal taper; and after the series of lessons and prayers which follows it, they go in procession with a Litany to the fountains, for the baptisms: after which they return to the Sacristy, "and in a little while begin the third Litany, and enter the church for the Vigil Mass, as soon as a star has appeared in the sky."

And so it became natural to adopt a form of prayer which took so firm a hold of men's affections on various occasions when processions were not used. At ordinations, or at consecrations, at the conferring of monastic habits, at coronations of Emperors, at dedications of churches, etc., it became common for the "school," or choir, to begin, or as it was technically called, to "set on" (imponere) the Litany,—for the Subdeacon to "make the Litanies,"—for the first of the Deacons to "make the Litany," that is, to present its suffrages [Muratori, ii. 423, 426, 439, 450, 452, 458, 467], beginning with "Kyrie eleison," or with "O Christ, hear us." A Litany never came amiss: it was particularly welcome as an element of offices for the sick and dying: its terseness, energy, pathos, seemed to gather up all that was meant by "being instant in prayer."

For some time the Litanies were devoid of all Invocations of Angels and Saints. The Procees of Fulda simply asked God that the Apostles and Martyrs might "pray for us." But about the eighth century Invocations came in. A few Saints are invoked in an old Litany which Mabillon calls Anglo-Saxon [MABILLON'S Vet. Anal. p. 168; comp. HADDAN and STUBBS' Councils, etc. ii. 81], and Lingard Armorian [LINGARD'S Angl. Sac. Ch. ii. 386]. Names of Angels, with St. Peter or any other Saint, occur in another, which Mabillon ascribes to the reign of Charlemagne. The Litany in the Ordo Romanus [Bib. Vet. Patr. viii. 451] has a string of saintly names. As the custom grew, more or fewer Saints were sometimes invoked according to the length of the procession; "quantum sufficit iter," says the Sarum Processional; and the York, "secundum exigentiam itineris." The number was often very considerable: a Litany said after Prime at the venerable Abbey of St. Germain des Prés had, Martene says [iv. 49], ninety-four Saints originally: an old Tours form for visitation of the sick has a list of Saints occupying more than four columns [ibid. i. 859]; and a Litany of the ninth century which Muratori prints, as "accommodated to the use of the Church of Paris," has one hundred and two such Invocations. [Muratori, i. 74.] The Invocations generally came between the Kyrie, etc., at the beginning, and the Deprecations which, in some form or other, constituted the most essential element of the Litany. Palmer thinks that the space thus occupied had originally been filled by many repetitions of the Kyrie, such as the Eastern Church loved, and the Council of Vaison in 529 had recommended; and in consequence of which St. Benedict had applied the name of Litany to the Kyrie, just as, when Invocations had become abundant, the same name was popularly applied to them, which explains the plural form, "Litaniæ Sanctorum," in Roman books. Sometimes we find frequent Kyries combined with still more frequent Invocations, as in a Litania Septena for seven subdeacons on Holy Saturday, followed by a Litania Quina and Terna. [Martene, i. 216.] A Litania Septena was used on this day at Paris, Lyons, and Soissons.

The general divisions of Mediæval Litanies were—1. Kyrie, and "Christ, hear us," etc. 2. Entreaties to each of the Divine Persons, and to the whole Trinity. 3. Invocations of Saints. 4. Deprecations. 5. Obsecrations, "by the mystery," etc. 6. Petitions. 7. Agnus Dei, Kyrie, Lord's Prayer. 8. Collects.

The present Roman Litany should be studied as it occurs in the Missal, on Holy Saturday; in the Breviary, just before the Ordo Commendationis Animæ; and in the Ritual, just before the Penitential Psalms; besides the special Litany which forms part of the Commendatio. The Litany of Holy Saturday is short, having three deprecations and no Lord's Prayer. The ordinary Roman Litany, as fixed in the sixteenth century, names only fifty-two individual Saints and Angels. It is said on St. Mark's Day, and during Lent, in choir, and "extra chorum pro opportunitate temporis."

The Litanies of the Mediæval English Church are a truly interesting subject. Procter, in his History of the Common Prayer, p. 254, has printed an early Litany much akin to the Litany of York, and considered by him to be of Anglo-Saxon date. The Breviaries and Processionals exhibit their respective Litanies: and the ordinary Sarum Litany used on Easter Eve, St. Mark's Day, the Rogations, and every weekday in Lent (with certain variations as to the Saints invoked), occurs in the Sarum Breviary just after the Penitential Psalms. It is easy, by help of the Processionals, to picture to oneself the grandeur of the Litany as solemnly performed in one of the great churches which followed the Sarum or York rites. Take, for instance, Holy Saturday. The old Gelasian rule of three Litanies on that day was still retained. In Sarum a "Septiform Litany" was sung in the midst of the choir by seven boys in surplices (compare the present Roman Rubric, that the Litany on that day is to be sung by two chanters "in medio chori"); the York Rubric says, seven boys, or three where more cannot be had, are to sing the Litany. It was called septiform, because in each order of saints, as apostles, martyrs, etc., seven were invoked by name. After "All ye Saints, pray for us," five deacons began the "Quinta-partita Letania" in the same place (the York says, "Letaniam puerorum sequatur Letania diaconorum"): but after "St. Mary, pray for us," the rest was said in solemn procession to the font, starting, "ex australi parte ecclesiæ." First came an acolyte as cross-bearer, then two taper-bearers, the censer-bearer, two boys in surplices with book and taper, two deacons with oil and chrism, two subdeacons, a priest in red cope, and the five chanters of the Litany. In these two Litanies the four addresses to the Holy Trinity were omitted. After the blessing of the font, three clerks of higher degree in red copes began a third Litany, the metrical one which, Cassander says, was called Litania Norica, "Rex sanctorum Angelorum, totum mundum adjuva" (with which may be compared, as being also metrical, what Gibbon, vol. vii. p. 76, calls the "fearful Litany" for deliverance from the arrows of Hungarians): after the first verse was sung, the procession set forth on its return. In York the third Litany was sung by three priests, and was not metrical. There were processions every Wednesday and Friday in Lent (on other Lenten week-days the Litany was non-processional), the first words of the Litany being sung "before the altar, before the procession started" [Process. Sar.], and the last invocation being sung at the steps of the choir as it returned. In York, on Rogation Tuesday, the choir repeated after the chanter, processionally, the Kyrie and Christe eleison with the Latin equivalents, "Domine, miserere; Christe, miserere;" then, "Miserere nobis, pie Rex, Domine, Jesu Christe." The responses in this Litany were curiously varied. The chanter said, for instance, "St. Mary, pray for us;" and the choir responded, "Kyrie eleison." Again, "St. Michael, pray for us;" the response was, "Christ, hear us." The York Litany of Ascension Eve has, "Take away from us, O Lord, our iniquities," etc., the response being a repetition of the first words. Then, "Have mercy, have mercy, have mercy, Lord, on Thy people," etc., the response being "Havo mercy;" then "Hear, hear, hear our prayers, O Lord:" response, "Hear." The Rubric adds, "Et dicatur Letania per circuitum ad introitum chori." On the same Eve, in Sarum, a metrical invocation to St. Mary was chanted, "Sancta Maria, Quaesumus, alium Poscere Regem Jure memento; Salvat ut omnes Nos jubilantes." On St. Mark's Day, in Sarum, as in the Rogation Litany of York above quoted, the suffrage included "pray for us," and the response was Kyrie. The Sarum rule was, "Whatever part of the Litany is said by the priest must be fully and entirely repeated by the choir, as far as the utterance of 'We sinners beseech Thee to hear us.' For then after 'That Thou give us peace,' the choir is to respond, 'We beseech Thee, hear us;' and after each verse, down to 'Son of God.'" So the Processional; the same rule is given, in somewhat different form, by the Breviary.

The Litany was nearly always sung in procession in the Mediaeval Church of England, the singers sometimes singing the whole within the church, and at others going into the churchyard, or on particular occasions, as on the Rogations, into the streets, roads, and fields around. The supplications which preceded the Invocations of the Saints were said in front of the Altar, before the procession started; and the rule was that the procession should return to the same place to sing all that followed the last of these Invocations. All that is now said in the church, according to our modern use, was therefore said in the church in mediaeval times, and was said kneeling as at present.<sup>1</sup>

Besides the Latin Litanies for church use, the Primer contained one (in English) which may be seen in Mr. Maskell's Sarum Primer of about A.D. 1400; with two other English Litanies from MSS. in the Bodleian. [MASKELL'S Monumenta Rituala, iii. 99, 227, 233.] A MS. English Litany of the fifteenth century, somewhat different from these, is in the Library of University College, Oxford.

Coming down to the sixteenth century, we find the first form of our present Litany in that of 1544, probably composed by Cranmer, who would have before him the Litany in the Goodly Primer of 1535, and perhaps the Cologne Litany published in German 1543, or Luther's of 1543: and it was imposed on the Church by Henry VIII., to be used "in the time of processions." It contains only three Invocations of created beings, as follows:—

"Saint Mary, Mother of God our Lord Jesu Christ, pray for us.

All holy angels and archangels, and all holy orders of blessed spirits, pray for us.

All holy patriarchs and prophets, apostles, martyrs, confessors and virgins, and all the blessed company of Heaven, pray for us."

These were dropped in 1548. In Henry's reign there was also a Litany published in the King's Primer of 1545. It is curious that "procession," in Cranmer's language [see a passage in Private Prayers, Parker Soc. pref. p. 25], meant the actual supplication.<sup>2</sup> In 1547 the Injunctions of Edward VI. forbade processions about the Church or Churchyard; and, borrowing part of the Sarum rule above mentioned as to the Easter Eve Litanis Septiformis, ordered the priests, with other of the choir, to kneel in the midst of the church immediately before High Mass, and sing or say the Litany, etc., which Injunction was repeated by Queen Elizabeth in 1559, with the alteration of "before Communion," etc.<sup>3</sup> In the Prayer Book of 1549 the Litany was ordered to be said or sung on Wednesdays and Fridays, and was printed after the Communion; but in the Book of 1552 it was printed in its present place, "to be used on Sundays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and at other times," etc. About Christmas, 1558, Elizabeth sanctioned the English Litany nearly as before, for her own Chapel [see CARDWELL, Docum. Ann. i. 209, and Lit. Services, Parker Soc. p. xii]; it soon came into more general use, and was inserted in the Prayer Book of 1559, the Rubric of 1552 being repeated. The Injunctions of Elizabeth in 1559 ordered the Curate to "say the Litany and prayers" in church every Wednesday and Friday; but the Litany of the procession, in Rogation week, was to be continued also, and the custom of "Beating the Bounds" of parishes on Ascension Day still in some sort represents it. [See Note on Rogation Days.]

The fifteenth canon of 1604 provides for the saying of the Litany in church after tolling of a bell, on Wednesdays and Fridays. In the last review of the Prayer Book the words "to be sung or said" were substituted for "used" (both phrases having occurred in the Scotch Prayer Book), and are very carefully added—an erasure being made to give precedence to the word "sung"—in Cosin's Durham Book. The Litany was sung by two Bishops at the coronation of George I.

With regard to the place for saying or singing the Litany, the present Prayer Book in its rubric before the 51st Psalm in the Communion, appears implicitly to recognize a peculiar one, distinct from that in which the ordinary offices are performed. As we have seen, the Injunctions of Edward, followed herein by those of Elizabeth, specified the midst of the Church: and Bishop Andrewes had in his chapel a faldstool (folding-stool) for this purpose, between the western stalls and the lectern. So Cosin, as archdeacon of the East Riding in 1627, inquired whether the church had "a little faldstool or desk, with some decent carpet over it, in the middle alley of the church, whereat the Litany may be said after the manner prescribed by the Injunctions;" and in his first series of Notes on the Common Prayer he says, "The priest goeth from out his seat into the body of the church, and at a low desk before the chancel door, called the faldstool, kneels, and says or sings the Litany. Vide Proph. Joel de medio loco inter porticum et altare," etc.<sup>4</sup> Compare also the frontispiece to Bishop SPARROW'S Rationale, and to the Litany in Prayer Books of 1662, etc. Cosin gave such a faldstool to Durham Cathedral, which is constantly used by two priests; and the Rubric of the present Coronation office speaks of two Bishops kneeling in the same manner at a faldstool to say the Litany. The custom doubtless signified the deeply supplicatory character of this service. Finally, in the Durham Book the Rubric before the Litany ends with these words: "The Priest (or Clerks) kneeling in the midst of the Quire, and all the people kneeling, and answering as followeth."

In the present day there is a disposition to make the Litany available as a separate service. Archbishop Grindall's order in 1571, forbidding any interval between Morning Prayer, Litany, and the Communion Service, was far from generally observed.<sup>5</sup> At Winchester and Worcester Cathedrals the custom of saying the Litany some hours after Mattins has prevailed: and we learn from PECK'S Desiderata Curiosa [lib. xii. no. 21] that in 1730 the members of Ch. Ch. Oxford, on Wednesdays and Fridays, went to Mattins at six, and to Litany at nine. The 15th Canon, above referred to, recognizes the Litany as a separate office. Freedom of arrangement in this matter is highly desirable: and if it be said that the Litany ought to precede the Communion, according to ancient precedent, instead of being transferred, as it sometimes now is, to the afternoon, it may be replied that the Eucharistic Ectene of the East is not only much shorter than our Litany, but far less plaintive, so to speak, in tone, and therefore more evidently congruous with Eucharistic joy. The like may be said, on the whole, of the "Preces Pacificæ" once used at Rome (as we have seen) in the early part of the Mass, and at Milan on Lenten Sundays: although indeed a Lenten Sunday observance could be no real precedent for all the Sundays in the year.<sup>6</sup> Of the Puritan cavils at the Litany, some will be dealt with in the Notes. One, which accuses it of perpetuating prayers which had but a temporary purpose, is rebuked by Hooker [HOOKER'S Ecl. Pol. v. 41, 4], and is not likely to be revived. He takes occasion to speak of the "absolute" (i.e. finished) "perfection" of our present Litany: Bishop Cosin, in his Devotions, uses the same phrase, and calls it "this principal, and excellent prayer" (excellent being, in the English of his day, equivalent to matchless); and Dr. Jobb describes it as "a most careful, luminous, and comprehensive collection of the scattered treasures of the Universal Church." [JEBB'S Choral Service, p. 423.]

It may also be regarded as a comprehensive form of prayer

<sup>2</sup> So also "Processioners" was the name given to copies of the English Litany which were sold in Cambridge for twopence each in 1558. [CARTER'S King's Coll. Chap.]

<sup>3</sup> The English Litany was nevertheless used in procession at the Queen's court "in copies to the number of xxx," on St. George's Day, April 23, 1560 and 1561. Again at Windsor on May 28, 1561, "After matens done, they went a procession rond about the cherehe, so done the mydes and so ront a-bowt . . . the clerkes and prestes a xxxiii synyng the Englys processyon in chopes xxxliii, and sum of them in gray aimes and in calabur." The same is narrated of the years 1562 and 1563. [MACHYN'S Diary, 232, 257, 258, 280, 306.] There is also an engraving by Hollar of a similar procession, ten or twelve years later, in ASHMOL'S Order of the Garter, p. 515.

<sup>4</sup> This note is found also in a Prayer Book in the Bodleian Library, which contains many annotations written about 1655 by Bishop Dupper; and he adds, "So ordered by the composers of this Book in imitation of the Lutheran Churches."

<sup>5</sup> In fact, there is a direction exactly opposite in an Occasional Service of Queen Elizabeth's reign, exhorting the people to spend a quarter of an hour or more in private devotion between Morning Prayer and the Communion.

which especially carries into practice the Apostolic injunction, "I exhort therefore that . . . supplications, prayers, intercessions . . . be made for all men." After the Acts of Adoration with which it opens, there follow a number of "Deprecations," relating to the sins or dangers of national or individual life, from which we pray Christ, as our "Good Lord," to deliver us. After these the "Obsecrations" plead the acts and sufferings of our Redeemer, as each having an efficacious power of its own. Then come the "Petitions" or "Supplications," which are full of intercessory prayer, for the Sovereign and the Royal Family, for the Clergy, for the Sovereign's counsellors and agents in the government of the Kingdom and in the administration of justice, for all Christians, for all nations, for the increase of ourselves in love and obedience, for the advancement of all Christians in grace, for the conversion of those who are not yet in the way of truth, for persons in various troubles and dangers, for God's mercy to all men, and for our enemies; the whole closing with a prayer for the Divine Blessing on all the labours of our hands, and for His forgiveness of our sins, negligences, and ignorances. Such a fulness of supplications, combined with the comparative familiarity and homeliness of its subjects, makes the Litany welcome to the lips of every age; and it is none the less so in that it speaks a language of prayer which has been substantially that of our forefathers for twelve centuries.

THE LITANY.

¶ <sup>b</sup> Here followeth the LITANY, or General Supplication, to be sung or said after Morning Prayer upon Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and at other times when it shall be commanded by the Ordinary.

O GOD the FATHER, of heaven : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O GOD the FATHER, of heaven : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O GOD the SON, Redeemer of the world : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O GOD the SON, Redeemer of the world : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O GOD the HOLY GHOST, proceeding from the FATHER and the SON : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O GOD the HOLY GHOST, proceeding from the FATHER and the SON : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity, three Persons and one God : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

O holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity, three Persons and one God : have mercy upon us miserable sinners.

Remember not, LORD, our offences, nor the offences of our forefathers ; neither take Thou vengeance of our sins : spare us, good LORD, spare Thy people, whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy most precious blood, and be not angry with us for ever.

Spare us, good LORD.

a The Litany and Suffrages [1549 only]. It was printed, preceded by this title only, after the Communion Service.
b The first Rubric at the end of the Communion Service began thus, in 1549, only: Upon Wednesdays and Fridays the English Litany shall be said or sung in all places, after such form as is appointed by the King's Majesty's Injunctions; or as is or shall be otherwise appointed by his Highness. The Communion Service was then to be begun on these days, after the Litany ended.
c Sundays . . . by the Ordinary [1552]. d Sar.

e Here followed the Invocations of Saints, which sometimes numbered as many as two hundred; each Invocation, as "Sancte Paule," being followed by the Response, "Ora pro nobis."

PATER de cœlis DEUS : miserere nobis.

FILI Redemptor mundi DEUS : miserere nobis.

SPIRITUS SANCTE DEUS : miserere nobis.

Sancta Trinitas, unus DEUS : miserere nobis.<sup>f</sup>

Ne reminiscaris, DOMINE, delicta nostra, vel parentum nostrorum : neque vindictam sumas de peccatis nostris. Parce, DOMINE, parce populo Tuo, quem redemisti pretioso sanguine Tuo : ne in æternum irascaris nobis.

Ab omni malo : Libera nos, DOMINE.

THE INVOCATIONS.

by the Ordinary] In the MS. of the Prayer Book the final words of the Rubric were originally written "by the Ordinarie: the Minister and People all kneeling." The last six words are crossed out with a pen, perhaps with the idea that they excluded the use of the Litany in procession.

O God the Father] The old Sarum Litany prefixes to this, "Kyrie Eleison, Christe Eleison : " then, "Christe, audi nos." The Roman has a complete Kyrie, with "Christe, audi nos ; Christe, exaudi nos." The Litany of Ordo Romanus, and the Utrecht Litany, have also "Salvator mundi, adjuva nos."

The sense of the original Latin would be best brought out by, e.g. "Son, Redeemer . . . Who art God," etc.

The four Invocations offer a very striking application of the statement with which the Athanasian Creed opens, "And the Catholick Faith is this : That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity." Each of them is an act of solemn adoration passing into an act of prayer.

of heaven] i.e. from heaven, "de cœlis." The phrase comes from S. Luke xi. 13, ὁ Πατήρ ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, your Father Who beareth from heaven. [Comp. 2 Chron. vi. 21.] "Exaudi . . . de cœlis," Vulg.

miserable sinners] Added in 1544.
proceeding from] Added in 1544. The Utrecht has "Spiritus Sancte, benigne Deus."

O holy, blessed] The fourth Invocation was thus amplified in 1544, partly from the old Sarum antiphon after the Athanasian Creed, for Trinity week : "O beata et benedicta et gloriosa Trinitas, Pater et Filius et Spiritus Sanctus." It must be borne in mind that the term Person, in regard to the Holy Trinity, is not equivalent to "individual," as when it is applied to three men. When we say, "three Persons and one God," we mean, as the original Invocation shows, that the three are severally distinct, yet are one God.

Remember not] Before 1544 these words formed part of the antiphon which was added to the Penitential Psalm as prefixed to the Litany. In the original, after "ne in æternum," etc., came, "et ne des hereditatem tuam in perditionem : ne in æternum obliviscaris nobis." But there was also, just before the special Deprecations, and after the Invocations of Saints, "Propitius esto : Parce nobis, Domine." The word "good" was inserted in 1544. The sins of fathers may be visited on children in temporal judgements.

good Lord] It is much to be observed that this supplication and the whole of what follows down to the Kyrie is one continuous act of worship offered to our Blessed Lord ; and it is this which gives the Litany such peculiar value in days when His Divinity is too often but faintly realized.

THE DEPRECATIONS.

From] These Deprecations, which in the old Litanies, as in the present Roman, were broken up into separate forms, each relating to one topic, were in 1544 combined in groups, as at present ; probably in order to give more intensity and energy to the "Deliver us." The like was done with the Obsecrations.

all evil] Sarum, York, Hereford, Carthusian, Dominican, and the old Ordo Romanus ; Litania Latina in Luther's Enchiridion, 1543.

mischief] Added to the old form in 1544.

sin] Added in 1544 from the Litany in the Primer of 1535. The Roman has it, and it is in Hermann of Cologne's Simplex ac Pia Deliberatio, translated from German into Latin in 1545; his Litany is nearly identical with that of Luther named above.

crafts and assaults] Two distinct modes of diabolic attack, secret and open. So a Jewish evening prayer, "Keep Satan from before and from behind us. [Bible Educator, iv. 239.] Sarum Primer has, "from the awaitings of the fiend." [Comp. 2 Cor. ii. 11.]

assaults] Not in York nor in Roman, but in Dominican. [Brev. Ord. Prædic.]

Thy wrath] Roman has this; and so the Ordo Romanus. York has "from the wrath to come." So it is in the Lyons Rogations, and in Carthusian. In Litanies for the Sick it was common to deprecate "Thy wrath." [Martene, i. 858, etc.] The Narbonne had "from Thy wrath greatly to be feared."

everlasting damnation] Sarum, Hereford, Utrecht, Cistercian, Dominican, have "perpetual." [Comp. Roman, "a morte perpetua."] If the force of this Deprecation can be evaded in the interests of Universalism, no words can retain any meaning. York combines "sudden and eternal death."

blindness of heart] This, which is in Sarum and Utrecht, not in York nor Roman, was derived from the Vulgate of Eph. iv. 18, "propter cæcitatem cordis sui:" but the word πᾶρωσ should rather be rendered "hardness" or "callousness." [pride] York and Utrecht more emphatically, "the plague of pride." Not in Roman. The Carthusian has "the spirit of pride."

vain-glory] Compare Sarum, "the desire of vain-glory." Not in Roman.

hypocrisy] Added in 1544.

envy] Added in 1544. We do not specify anger, as Sarum and York do.

hatred] Here Sarum, York, Roman agree.

malice] Sarum, York, Roman, Utrecht, Dominican, "all ill-will."

fornication] Sarum, Roman, Carthusian have "the spirit of fornication." The Sarum addition, "from all uncleanness of mind and body," is in Hereford, Utrecht, Carthusian, Dominican; so York, "from all uncleannesses . . ." Sarum further adds "from unclean thoughts;" so Dominican.

deadly sin] In 1544 "all deadly sin." "Other" added in 1549. This phrase has been more than once objected to. The Committee of the House of Lords in 1641 suggested "grievous sin," doubtless from dislike of the Roman distinction of mortal and venial sins. The Puritan divines, at the Savoy Conference, made a similar suggestion, observing that the wages of sin, as such, were death. The Bishops answered, "For that very reason, 'deadly' is the better word." They therefore must have understood the phrase to refer to all wilful and deliberate sin. At the same time it must be remembered that among wilful sins there are degrees of heinousness. "It would be introducing Stoicism into the Gospel to contend that all sins were equal." [Dr. PUSEY'S Letter to Bishop of Oxford, p. liii.]

deceits of the world, the flesh] Added in 1541; but York has "from fleshly desires." So Utrecht, Carthusian, "from wicked concupiscence." "Deceits of the devil," in fact, is a repetition of "crafts of the devil" above. The deceits of the world, of course, mean "the vain pomp and glory" of it, the hollow splendour, the false attractiveness, the promises of satisfaction and of permanence, etc., which as the Apostle reminds us, have no reality. [1 S. John ii. 17; comp. 1 Cor. vii. 31.]

lightning and tempest] Not in York nor Hereford. Roman has it; and a Poitiers Litany [Martene, iii. 438] has, "That it may please Thee to turn away malignitatem tempestatum." Thunderstorms impelled St. Chad to repair to church, and employ himself in prayer and psalmody; being asked why he did so, he cited Psalm xviii. 13. [BEDE'S Ecl. Hist. iv. 3.] There are two Orations "contra fulgura," and one "ad repellendam tempestatem," in Menard's edition of the Gregorian Sacramentary.

plague, pestilence] Sarum, York, Hereford, have not this Deprecation, which is in Roman. The Litany of 1535 had "from all pestilence." So also a Tours Litany, "to remove pestilence or mortality from us;" and St. Dunstan's Litany for Dedication of a Church has "from pestilence."

famine] Not in Sarum, York, Hereford, but in Roman. In 1535 "from pestilence and famine." Dunstan's also "et fame." The Fleury Litany in Martene has "from all want and famine."

battle] York has "from persecution by Pagans, and all our enemies," like the Anglo-Saxon Litany. The Roman and Dominican deprecate "war." So Primer of 1535, and Hermann. Dunstan's and Fleury mention slaughter. Laud says that the Puritans' objection to the deprecation of famine and battle "is as ignorant as themselves." [Works, i. 12.]

murder] Added 1544. Hermann has it. The Latin Book of 1560 has "latrocinio."

sudden death] So Sarum Primer has "sudden death and unadvised." The Roman agrees with the Sarum. So Hermann, adding "evil." The same Deprecation is in the Rogations of Lyons. The Puritans objected that "the godly should always be prepared to die." Hooker replies, in one of his most beautiful and thoughtful chapters [Ecl. Pol. v. 46], that it is lawful to "prefer one way of death before another;" that it is religion which makes men wish for a "leisurable" departure; that our prayer "importeth a twofold desire"—[1] For some "convenient respite;" [2] If that be denied, then, at least, "that although death unexpected be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden." Archbishop Hutton, of York, before the Hampton Court Conference was held, explained this as implying a condition, "if it be Thy will," supposing "sudden" were taken simply; but "sudden" might be taken as equivalent to "giving no time for repentance." The aversion of Lord Brook to this Deprecation, and his own terrific instantaneous death by a shot from the great spire of Lichfield Cathedral, are well known. In a Prayer Book in the Bodleian, "worn by the daily use" of Bishop Duppa, of Salisbury (while residing at Richmond, between the overthrow of Episcopacy and the Restoration), and containing marginal notes in his own hand, this comment occurs, "Vainly excepted against, because we should always be prepared for it: for by the same reason, we should not pray against any temptations." At the Savoy Conference the Puritans again raised the old objection, and proposed to read, "from dying suddenly and unprepared." The Bishops replied, "From sudden death, is as good as from dying suddenly; which we therefore pray against, that we may not be unprepared." [CARDWELL, Conferences, pp. 316, 352.] "A person," says Bishop Wilson, Sacra Privata, p. 358, "whose heart is devoted to God, will never be surprised by death."

[sedition] In 1544, from Primer of 1535. Hermann, "a seditione et similitate."

[privy conspiracy] In 1544. After this, in 1549 and 1552, came, "from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities," which was omitted under Elizabeth; and Cosin, in his First Series of Notes, says that the Puritans (of James I.'s time) wished to have it restored. It had been in the Primer of 1545, with "abominable" for "detestable."

[rebellion] Added, for obvious reasons, in 1661, by Cosin. His proposed version of the whole clause was, "From all open rebellion and sedition; from all conspiracy and treason; from all false doctrine, heresy, and schism; from . . ."

[false doctrine, heresy] In 1544. Hermann, "ab omni errore."

[schism] In 1661. The Primer of 1535 had had "schismies." [hardness of heart, and contempt] In 1544. [Comp. the Third Collect for Good Friday. See Prov. i. 25.] The force of this Deprecation is best seen by remembering that a final hardening of the heart is a penal infliction, provoked by habitual indifference to Divine love. We may well entreat our Lord to save us from repaying His love by coldness, lest the capacity of loving Him be justly taken away. We may well implore Him, also, to keep us from the terrible possibility of ignoring, and practically despising, His revelation and His commands. Compare the beautiful Parisian Litany of the Holy Name of Jesus, "from neglect of Thy inspirations, Jesus, deliver us."

THE OBSECRATIONS.

[By the mystery] Here begin the Obsecrations, as they are called. They go on the principle that every several act of our Lord's Mediatorial life has its appropriate saving energy; that virtue goes out of each, because each is the act of a Divine Person, and has a Divine preciousness. When, therefore, we say, "Deliver us by Thy Nativity, by Thy Temptation," etc., we do not merely ask Him to remember those events of His human life, but we plead them before Him as mystically effective, as instinct with life-giving grace, as parts of a Mediatorial whole. Doubtless, the Death of our Lord is the meritorious cause of our salvation; we are redeemed by it, not by His Circumcision, or His Fasting; and to efface the distinction between it and all other parts of the "Economy," in regard to His office as the Lamb of God, would be an indication of theological unsoundness. At the same time it is also true that, in St. Leo's language, all our Lord's acts, as being related to His atoning Passion, are "sacramental" as well as "exemplary;" His Nativity is our spiritual birth, His Resurrection our revival, His Ascension our advancement. They are not only incentives and patterns, but efficient causes in the order of grace. So St. Bernard, in his second Pentecost Sermon, says that His Conception is to cleanse ours, His Resurrection to prepare ours, etc. More vividly, St. Anselm, in his fifteenth Prayer, "O most sweet Lord Jesus, by Thy holy Annunciation, Incarnation . . . Infancy, Youth, Baptism, Fasting . . . scourges, buffets, thorny crown," etc. But the deepest and tenderest expression of this principle (surpassing even Bishop Andrewes' Obsecrations, "by Gethsemane, Gabbatha, Golgotha," etc.) is in the mediæval Golden Litany, printed by MASKELL, Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 267, 272, "By Thy great meekness, that Thou wouldst be comforted by an angel, so comfort me in every time. . . For that piteous cry, in the which Thou commendedst Thy soul to Thy Father, our souls be commended to Thee," etc. The coarse and heartless fanaticism which could cavil at these Obsecrations as "a certain conjuring of God," was characteristic of John Knox and his friends. They so expressed themselves when criticizing the Litany ("certain suffrages devised of Pope Gregory") in a letter to Calvin against the Prayer Book of 1552. This cavil is alluded to by Bishop Pearson. [Minor Works, ii. 99.] Bishop Dupper writes, "No oath, nor no exorcism."

[of Thy holy Incarnation] So Sarum, York, Hereford, Roman, Cistercian, Dominican. "The mystery" is doubtless an allusion to 1 Tim. iii. 16. The thought which it suggests is that which of old made men bow down in adoration at the words in the Creed, "et Homo factus est." "By all the stupendous truths involved in Thine assumption of our humanity, wherein Thou, being true God, beamest true Man, combining two Natures in Thy single Divine Person, without confusion, and without severance; so that, in the Virgin's womb, Thou didst bring God and man together, undergoing all the conditions of infant life, Thyself unchangeably the Creator and Life-giver." The Roman adds, "By Thine Advent." Utrecht has "By Thine Annunciation, by Thine Advent and Nativity."

[Thy holy Nativity] After Hereford. So the Sarum Primer. [Maskell, iii. 106.] The Latin Book of 1560 made "Nativity, Circumcision," etc., dependent on "mysterium." York has no mention of the Nativity.

[Circumcision] This is not in the present Roman, but in two old Roman forms in Menard's notes to the Gregorian Sacramentary [741 and 923]. The Parisian of the Holy Name places after "Nativity," "Thine infancy, Thy most Divine life, Thy labours." Sarum Litany for the Dying adds "apparitionem tuam;" and Utrecht has "circumcisionem et oblationem tuam."

[Baptism, Fasting] Roman combines "Baptism and holy Fasting." Utrecht, "Baptism and Fasting." Maskell's Sarum Primer, "Thy Fasting and much other penance doing."

[Temptation] 1544. Primer of 1535, and Hermann, "temptations." Golden Litany, in Maskell, "The tempting of the fiend in the desert."

[Agony and Bloody Sweat] 1544. So Hermann. Golden Litany, "For that agony in which Thou offeredst Thee wilfully to death, obeying Thy Almighty Father; and Thy bloody sweat." Primer of 1535, "Thy painful agony, in sweating blood and water."

[Cross and Passion] So Roman, York for Easter Eve, and Anglo-Saxon (probably an old York form), in Procter, p. 255, and Hermann. Mabillon's Anglican, or Armorican, Hereford, Utrecht, Carthusian, Cistercian, Dominican, have "Passion and Cross;" so Sarum for the Dying. This is the more natural order. Sarum Primer, "Thy holy Passion." The Tours omits "Thy Cross," which forms the only Obsecration in the Corbey MS. Litany [Menard, note 380], and in the Litany of the ninth century, in Muratori, i. 76. The Golden Litany dwells with intense tenderness on all the details of the Crucifixion, and on some points which are traditional or legendary. Parisian of the Holy Name, "Thine Agony and Passion, Thy Cross and forsaking,—languores tuos."

[precious Death] Sarum. So in Sarum Litany for the Dying, Burial; by Thy glorious Resurrection and Ascension; and by the coming of the HOLY GHOST,

Good LORD, deliver us.

In all time of our tribulation; in all time of our wealth; in the hour of death, and in the day of judgement, "piissimam mortem tuam." Sarum Primer, "most piteous death." Ordo Romanus mentions the Cross, Passion, Death.

Burial] Not in Sarum; but in Sarum Primer, "Thy blessed burying." "Thy Death and Burial" in Roman, Utrecht, Strasburg, for Easter Eve, Primer of 1535, Hermann, Parisian.

Thy glorious Resurrection] So Sarum, Hereford, Narbonne, Moissac, Cistercian, Carthusian, Dominican, Sarum and Parisian Litanies for the Dying, Anglo-Saxon, York, Strasburg, Utrecht, Roman, and ordinary Parisian, "holy Resurrection."

Ascension] Anglo-Saxon, Sarum, York, Hereford, Roman, Moissac, Narbonne, Cistercian, Carthusian, Dominican, Parisian, prefix "admirabilem" to "Ascensionem;" Strasburg and Utrecht have "glorious." Remiremont, "radiant." Golden Litany, "wonderful and glorious." Parisian of the Holy Name has after "Ascension," "by Thy joys, by Thy glory."

the coming of the Holy Ghost] Sarum, for the Dying, "The coming of the Holy Ghost, the Paraclete;" so Ordo Romanus, present Roman, and Hermann. "The Paraclete" was omitted in 1544, as in Primer of 1535. Sarum, York, Hereford, Anglo-Saxon, Sarum Primer, Cistercian, Dominican, and Benedictine of M. Cassino, have "grace" instead of "coming." Armoric, "by the descent of the Holy Ghost." Tours and Utrecht simply, "by the Spirit, the Paraclete." Utrecht and others add an Obsecration by the Second Advent, e.g. "by Thy future Advent," "by the majesty of Thine Advent."

In all time of our tribulation . . . wealth] 1544. After Primer of 1535, "in time of our tribulations, in the time of our felicity;" Hermann, "in all time," etc. The Scottish and American Books have "prosperity" for "wealth." The suffrage seems to refer not only to deliverance out of afflictions, but to deliverance from the special moral dangers which attend them. [Exod. vi. 9; Jer. v. 3; Hos. vii. 14; Amos iv. 6. See too the remarkable case of Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22, and the awful picture in Rev. xvi. 11.] Suffering often hardens instead of softening the heart; and therefore "not without reason has the Church taught all her faithful children to say, 'Suffer us not . . . for any pains of death to fall from Thee!'" [MILL, Univ. Sermons, p. 332.] The trials of prosperity [Deut. viii. 14; Jer. v. 24; and Uzziah's case, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, etc.] are more commonly recognized. Even the Greeks knew, as an ethical commonplace, that it was hard to bear success without insolence and moral depravation. [ARIST. Eth. iv. S.] It is the Christian's wisdom and happiness to learn the secret of strength against both these forms of trial, as St. Paul learned it. [Phil. iv. 12] in the hour of death] So Sarum and Hereford, adding, as the response, "Succour us, O Lord." This suffrage, for which York substitutes "from the pains of hell," comes before the Obsecrations in Benedictine of M. Cassino.

in the day of judgement] Sarum, York, Hereford, Roman, Ordo Romanus, Utrecht, Dominican, etc. The vernacular Litanies in Maskell have "in the day of doom." Golden Litany, "Succour us, most sweet Jesu, in that fearful day of the strict judgement." [Comp. the Dies Ire.]

THE SUPPLICATIONS.

We sinners] Here begin the Petitions, or Supplications; introduced by a confession of our sinfulness. So in Sarum, York, Hereford, Roman, Cistercian, Carthusian, Dominican, etc., "We sinners beseech Thee to hear us." In some the suffrage is, "We sinners," and the response, "Beseech Thee, hear us." But the Dominican makes the reader say the whole, and the choir repeat the whole. As we have seen, the Sarum use was for the choir to repeat all after the reader, until after this petition. The Litany of 1544, which joined this with the suffrage for the Church, added the word "God." And this may be set against the substitution of "Lord," for the original "our God," in "O Saviour of the world." Afterwards, in Sarum, Hereford, Dominican, come two suffrages, which remind us of the older "Pacifica," "That Thou wouldst give us peace . . . That Thy mercy and pity may preserve us." York places the first of these here, the second further on. The Roman has three suffrages, "That Thou spare us . . . That Thou forgive us . . . That it may please Thee to bring us to true repentance." Utrecht has two, for peace and pardon: Cistercian, for peace, only.

Thy holy Church universal] The Preces of Fulda pray for "deepest peace and tranquillity," and then for "the Holy Catholic Church, which is from one end of the earth to the other." Sarum simply, "Thy Church." So Hereford, Cistercian, Dominican. Procter's, York, and Roman, "Thy holy Church." Sarum at Ordination. "Thy Catholic Church." Sarum reads, "to govern and defend;" so Cistercian, Roman, "to govern and preserve." The Ordo Romanus, "to exalt Thy Church." The Primer of 1535, "to govern and lead Thy holy Catholic Church." The Book of 1559 has "universally." The Latin Book of 1560, "Catholicam." The Scottish Book, "Thy holy Catholic Church universally."

in the right way] This expresses generally what in the Sarum had a special reference to the ecclesiastical state and religious orders,—“in holy religion . . . That it may please Thee to preserve the congregations of all holy persons in Thy service,” or, as Hereford, in “Thy holy service.”

That it may please Thee to keep] To pray for the Sovereign before the Bishops was not absolutely a novelty at the time when our Litany was drawn up. The Sarum, indeed, before the separation from Rome, had prayed first for “Domnum Apostolicum” (the Pope), “and all degrees of the Church,” then for “our Bishops and Abbats,” then for “our King and Princes.” York and Hereford had a like order (Hermann’s Litany places “Sovereign” after “Clergy,” and indeed after other classes). But the three vernacular Litanies printed by Maskell all place “our Kings . . . and Princes” before “Prelates” or “Bishops,” although one of them prays first for the Pope and for “each degree of holy Church.” [Maskell, iii. 107.] The words “and strengthen . . . of life” were first added in the Litany of 1558. Prayers for the spiritual good of the Sovereign had not been usual in old Litanies; that of 1544 prayed that Queen Catherine might be kept in the Lord’s fear and love, with increase of godliness, etc. The present Roman prays generally that Christian kings and princes may have peace and true concord. The Ambrosian Preces for First Sunday in Lent have, “for Thy servants, the Emperor N., and the King N., our Duke, and all their army.” Fulda, “for the most pious Emperor, and the whole Roman army.”

may evermore have affiance] In 1549 and 1552 the reading was “always.” Affiance, in the sense of trust, is found in Shakespeare. [Henry V. ii. 2; 2nd Part of Henry VI. iii. 1.] It is also used in a letter addressed to Suffolk by Wolsey, who writes, “Having also such an assured affiance in your truth that . . . ye would not have broken your promise.” [Henry VIII. State Papers, Dom. and For. 224.]

giving her the victory] So Sarum, York, Hereford. [See above.] The thought probably came from Ps. cxliv. 10. The Lyons has “to preserve our King . . . That Thou grant him life and victory.” Hermann has a suffrage, “to give to our Emperor perpetual victory against the enemies of God” (i.e. the Turks): Luther’s, “his enemies.”

Royal Family] In our Medieval Litanies “our Princes” are mentioned. In 1544, beside the suffrage for Queen Catherine, there is one for “our noble Prince Edward, and all the King’s Majesty’s children.” The Primer of 1535 prayed for Queen Anne and the King’s posterity. Under Edward and Elizabeth there was no suffrage of this kind. James I. inserted the present suffrage in this form, “. . . and preserve our gracious Queen Anne, Prince Henry, and the rest of the King and Queen’s royal issue.”

Bishops, Priests, and Deacons] Sarum (after a suffrage for the Pope, see above) prays for “our Bishops and Abbats.” York, “our Archbishop, and every congregation committed to him” (as in the York form of our Collect for Clergy and People). See Hereford above, where “Prelates” would include Abbats and Priors, Deans and Archdeacons. Utrecht, “to preserve our Prelate in Thy holy service.” Compare the Lyons, “to preserve our Pontiff . . . That Thou wouldest grant him life and health ;” and it proceeds to pray for the Clergy and People. So the Ambrosian Preces, “for all their Clergy . . . and all Priests and Ministers ;” and Fulda, “our father the Bishop, all Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, and the whole Clergy.” The whole body of the Clergy were not definitely prayed for in our Church Litanies until 1544, when the form ran, “Bishops, Pastors, and Ministers of Thy Church” (after the pattern of the Primer of 1535), and so continued until the last review, when the present form was adopted by way of more expressly negating the ministerial claims of persons not in Holy Orders. Hermann’s has “pastors and ministers,” and also, like the Primer of 1535, prays for the sending of “faithful labourers into the harvest.”

Lords of the Council . . . Nobility . . . Magistrates] 1544. The Primer of 1535 has, “That our ministers and governors may virtuously rule Thy people ;” and Hermann’s prays for “principem nostrum cum præsidibus suis,” and for “magistratus.” Palmer compares an ancient Soissons formula, “Life and victory to the Judges, and the whole army of the Franks.” The Preces of Fulda apparently refer to Magistrates in the words, “For all who are set in high place.” Our present form certainly points to the Tudor government by the Sovereign in his Privy Council. “Truth” means the Faith held by the Church.

That it may please Thee to bless and keep the Magistrates, giving them grace to execute justice, and to maintain truth;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to bless and keep all Thy people;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to give to all nations unity, peace, and concord;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to give us an heart to love and dread Thee, and diligently to live after Thy commandments;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to give to all Thy people increase of grace, to hear meekly Thy Word, and to receive it with pure affection, and to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to bring into the way of truth all such as have erred, and are deceived;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to strengthen such as do stand; and to comfort and help the weak-hearted; and to raise up them that fall; and finally to beat down Satan under our feet;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

a [York.

the Magistrates] Cosin wished to substitute for "the Magistrates" "all the subordinate Magistrates."

all Thy people] Compare Sarum, York, Hereford. So a Litany of the ninth century in Muratori, i. 77, Carthusian, and Dominican. Tours is nearer to our form, "to preserve the whole Christian people." The Corbey MS., "to remove Thy wrath from the whole Christian people."

to give to all nations unity, peace, and concord] This comes partly from the old suffrage, "peace and true concord to our King and Princes," and partly from the York. [See above.] Mabillon's Anglian or Armorican prays for peace and unity to be given to the whole Christian people; as does the Roman. In our present suffrage "unity" may be understood in a religious or spiritual sense, while "peace" would mean freedom from external foes, and "concord" freedom from internal dissension.

to give us an heart to love] 1544. Similar prayers exist in ancient Litanies; thus, the Corbey MS., "right faith, and a sure hope in Thy goodness, Lord Jesus." The Fleury, "to give us holy love . . . right faith . . . firm hope." So the Chigi MS., in three suffrages for faith, hope, and love. Parisian, for the same, in one suffrage. Compare also the Sarum, "That Thou wouldest make the obedience of our service reasonable . . . That Thou wouldest lift up our minds to heavenly desires." So the Dominican. The Sarum Primer, "ordain in Thy holy will our days and works." Roman has also, "to strengthen and keep us in Thy holy service." The Anglian or Armorican, "Grant us perseverance in good works . . . keep us in true faith and religion." "Dread," in the sense of holy and reverent fear; which can never be dispensed with by faithful worshippers of the God-Man, Who will come to be their Judge. Here again is a thought much needed in times when there is a tendency to dwell on our Lord's human character without due regard to the Divinity of His Person.

to give to all Thy people increase of grace] A beautiful combination of the passage about the good ground in the parable of the Sower, with James i. 21 and Gal. v. 22. Its date is 1544; but the Sarum Primer has something like it, "Vouchsafe to inform us with right-ruled understandings," from "Ut regularibus disciplinis nos instruere digneris." [MS. Lit. of fifteenth century, Univ. Coll.] The same form is in Cistercian and Dominican, and has a monastic import. And the Primer of 1535 has the first form of it, "to give the hearers of Thy Word lively grace to understand it, and to work thereafter, by the virtue of the Holy Ghost." So Hermann, "to give the hearers increase of Thy Word, and the fruit of the Spirit." Litanies for the Sick have similar topics, "to pour into his heart the grace of the Holy Spirit . . . to bestow on him grace;" and the Ordo Romanus, Utrecht, Carthusian, and Eucharistic Litany in Chigi's MS., have "to pour into our hearts," etc. An exquisite Litany in the Breviary of the Congregation of St. Maur prays, "That Thou wouldest write Thy law in our hearts . . . wouldest give Thy servants a teachable heart . . . That we may do Thy will with all our heart and mind . . . That we may gladly take on us Thy sweet yoke," etc.

to bring into the way of truth] In 1544. After 1535, "That all which do err and be deceived may be reduced into the way of verity." Hermann, "errantes et seductos reducere in viam veritatis." The Church has always prayed for this. So St. Clement of Rome, "Convert those of Thy people who are gone astray." [Ep. Cor. c. 59.] "It becomes us to pray for all who are gone astray." [St. ATHANASIUS, de Sent. Dion. 27.] St. Chrysostom's Liturgy prays for those who are wandering in error. "Thou hearest God's Priest at the altar, exhorting God's people to pray for the unbelievers, that God would convert them to the faith." [St. AUG. Ep. 217.] Compare the old Gelasian intercession on Good Friday, for all heretics and all in error; the Mozarabic Præces for the same day, "May forgiveness set right those who err from the faith;" and, still more like our suffrage, the Lyons form, "That Thou wouldest bring back the erring into the way of salvation."

to strengthen such as do stand] 1544. Hermann, "stantes confortare."

the weak-hearted] 1544. Primer of 1535 prays for those who are "weak in virtue, and soon overcome in temptation." Hermann, "pusillanimes et tentatos consolari et adjuvare." So St. Clement of Rome, "Comfort the faint-hearted."

that fall] 1544. Compare the old Gelasian prayer at Absolution of Penitents, "succurre lapsis." Hermann, "lapsos erigere." St. Clement of Rome, "Raise up the fallen."

beat down Satan] 1544. From Rom. xvi. 20; a text quoted in the Intercessory Prayer of St. Mark's Liturgy. Compare the Greek Olliee for making a Catechumen. Primer of 1535, "That we may the devil, with all his pomps, crush and tread under foot." Hermann, "Ut Satanam sub pedibus nostris conterere digneris." Strasburg, "That Thou wouldest grant us heavenly armour against the devil."

That it may please Thee to succour, help, and comfort, all that are in danger, necessity, and tribulation;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to preserve all that travel by land or by water, all women labouring of child, all sick persons, and young children; and to shew Thy pity upon all prisoners and captives;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to defend, and provide for, the fatherless children, and widows, and all that are desolate and oppressed;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to have mercy upon all men;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to forgive our enemies, persecutors, and slanderers, and to turn their hearts;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

That it may please Thee to give and preserve to our use the kindly fruits of the earth, so as in due time we may enjoy them;

We beseech Thee to hear us, good LORD.

Ut fructus terræ dare et conservare digneris : Te rogamus, audi nos.

to succour, help, and comfort] 1544. Primer of 1535 prays for "all extreme poverty," "Thy people in affliction or in peril, and danger by fire, water, or land." Hermann, "afflictos et periclitantes." Sarum and York have "to look upon and relieve the miseries of the poor." So Dominican.

all that travel] 1544. Compare Hereford, "That Thou wouldest dispose the journey of Thy servants in salutis tue prosperitate" (as in the Collect, "Assist ns mercifully," originally a prayer for one about to travel); and Dominican, "to bring to a harbour of safety all faithful persons, navigantes et itinerantes."

all women labouring of child] So Primer of 1535, "that teeming women may have joyful speed in their labour." So Hermann, for "pregnant women."

all sick persons, and young children] So Primer of 1535, for "sick people." So Hermann, for "infants, and the sick."

all prisoners and captives] So Hermann. Compare the Sarum and Primer for "thralls." This intercession of the English Litany had also probably a special reference to Christians in captivity among the Mahometans in Algiers, etc. Many legacies were left for the redemption of such captives, and briefs were sometimes issued for the same purpose.

the fatherless children, and widows] One of the tenderest petitions in the Prayer Book, and full of touching significance, as offered to Him Who intrusted His Mother to His Apostle. It was placed here in 1544 (the words being clearly suggested by such passages as Ps. cxlvi. 9; Jer. xlix. 11), but, like other passages of that date, is true to the old spirit of Church prayer. St. Mark's Liturgy prays for the widow and the orphan. Hermann, "Ut pupillos et viduas protegere et providere digneris."

all that are desolate and oppressed] In these words the Church seems to sweep the whole field of the sorrow which comes from "man's inhumanity to man," and which no civilization can abolish; and invokes for every such sufferer the help of Him Whose sympathy is for all at once, and for each as if there were none beside. This indeed is one of the most stupendous results of the Incarnation, although perhaps but seldom faced in thought: that our Lord's sacred Heart is, so to speak, really accessible at once to all who need its inexhaustible compassion: He cares for each, not only as God, but as Man, with a special, personal, human tenderness, to which His Godhead gives a marvellous capacity of extension. Compare also this and the preceding suffrages of our Litany, with intercessions in St. Clement of Rome's Epistle, "Shew Thyself to those who are in need . . . feed the hungry . . .

ransom those of us who are in bonds;" in St. Chrysostom's Liturgy, "for the young, for those that travel by land or by water;" in St. Basil's, "Sail Thou with the voyagers, travel with the travellers, stand forth for the widows, shield the orphans, deliver the captives, heal the sick, remember all who are in affliction or necessity . . . be all things to all men;" with the Gelasian prayer on Good Friday, that God would "open prisons, loosen chains, grant a return to travellers, health to the sick, a safe harbour to those at sea;" and with the Ambrosian Preces for first Sunday in Lent, "for orphans, captives . . . voyagers, travellers, those placed in prisons, in mines" (at forced labour there), "in exile."

mercy upon all men] This also is of 1544: the Primer of 1535 had expressed the same all-comprehending charity: "That unto all people Thou wilt shew Thy inestimable mercy." The Church has ever prayed for all men. That her prayers do not avail for all, is not from any defect in her charity, or in the Divine benignity, but from the bar which a rebellious will can oppose to the powers of the kingdom of grace. Bishop Duppa's note is, "The objection against this is answered by what St. Paul saith, 1 Tim. ii. 4: the prayer being made in the same sense as God is said to will that all men should be saved." [Comp. Hooker, v. 49.]

forgive our enemies] 1544: Primer of 1535, "forgive all warriors, persecutors, and oppressors of Thy people, and convert them to grace." Our present form (which is the same as Hermann's) is certainly preferable, and more like the Anglo-Saxon, "to bestow on our enemies peace and love." Compare St. Chrysostom's Liturgy: "For those who hate and persecute us for Thy Name's sake, that Thou wouldest convert them to what is good, and appease their wrath against us."

to give and preserve to our use the kindly fruits] "Kindly" means natural, produced after their kind. [See Archbishop TRENCH, English Past and Present, p. 167.] So Wycliffe and Purvey, Rom. xi. 21, "the kyndli branches;" and Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1, "that natural and kindly power," etc. This suffrage may represent to us the oldest Western use of Litanies, to avert excessive droughts or rains, and to secure a good harvest. The substance of it is in Sarum, York, and Hereford, as in Anglo-Saxon, Lyons, Roman, Cistercian, Dominican. York adds, "Ut aeris temperiem bonam nobis dones." So Ordo Romanus and Utrecht. So Tours, "give us the fruit of the earth . . . serenity of sky . . . good temperature of weather." So the Fleury: for "abundance of fruits, serenity of sky, reasonable rain." So in Ambrosian Preces: "Pro aeris temperie, ac fructu, et fecunditate terrarum, precamur te." The Sarum Primer asks for "wholesome and reasonable air." Compare the anthems sung processionally in Sarum for rain or fair weather. “O Lord, King, God of Abraham, give us rain over the face of the earth, that this people may learn that Thou art the Lord our God, Alleluia.” Jer. xiv. 22 is then quoted. Then, “The waters are come in like a flood, O God, over our heads:” then Ps. lxi. 1.

In the Prayer Book as used in the Isle of Man there is added “and to restore and continue to us the blessings of the seas,” a petition which has reference to the herring fishery. These words were inserted in 1705 by Bishop Wilson with the approval of the insular government; and he was enabled to do so without contravening the Act of Uniformity, as that Act does not extend to the Isle of Man.

so as in due time] Was added 1544. The whole suffrage was never more valuable than at a time like the present, when there is a tendency to substitute “laws of nature” for a Living God, and to ignore the fact that behind, above, beneath, around all “laws” is the absolute sovereign Personality of Him Who “is ever present with His works, one by one, and confronts everything which He has made by His particular and most loving Providence,” at once the Lord of life and death, of health and sickness, of rain and drought, of plenty and famine. If men will not pray for seasonable weather, they cannot logically pray for recovery from sickness, for escape from shipwreck, or any temporal good whatever. Such prayer leaves it to God to employ what means He will.

to give us true repentance; to forgive us] This suffrage, as it stands, was framed in 1544. Sarum, York, and Hereford have not this petition for repentance, but Roman has it, with prayers for pardon, before the suffrage for the Church. [See above.] York has, “That it may please Thee to give us remission of all our sins:” so the Ordo Romanus, which also asks for “spatium penitentiae;” and Sarum has “to bring again upon us the eyes of Thy mercy.” Carthusian, “spatium penitentiae et emendationem vite:” so the Chigi MS., “That Thou wouldst grant us a place of repentance;” and Utrecht asks for “compunction of heart and a fountain of tears;” so Tours; so Fleury, “to give us forgiveness of all our sins, Lord Jesus, we beseech Thee . . . That Thou wouldst grant us veram penitentiam aperi.” The ordinary Parisian has suffrages for true repentance, for remission of all sins, for compunction of heart and a fountain of tears. Litanies for the Sick have several suffrages of this kind. Ratold’s MS. [in Menard, note 923], “That Thou wouldst grant him compunction of heart . . . a fountain of tears . . . space of repentance, if possible.” Moisaac, “to bestow on him fruitful and saving repentance . . . a contrite and humbled heart . . . a fountain of tears.” Salzburg, “compunction of heart . . . a fountain of tears.” Narbonne, “That Thou wouldst give him remission of all sins.” Remiremont, “pardon, remission, forgiveness of all his sins,” etc. So in the Sarum Litany of Commendation of the Soul, and the Jumièges Litany: “Cuncta ejus peccata oblivioni perpetuae tradere . . . remember not the sins and ignorances of his youth.” This, from the Vulgate of our Ps. xxv. 7, has supplied our present “sins . . . and ignorances.” “Negligentiarum” occurs in the Vulgate of Numb. v. 6. “Negligences” mean careless omissions (compare Hammond’s prayer, “Lord, forgive my sins, especially my sins of omission”). “Ignorances,” faults done in ignorance of our duty, such ignorance being itself a fault, because the result of carelessness.

Among the mediæval suffrages omitted in our present Litany are, “That Thou wouldst repay everlasting good to our benefactors . . . that Thou wouldst give eternal rest to all the faithful departed . . . that it may please Thee to visit and comfort this place:” and last of all the petitions came, “That it may please Thee to hear us:” as now in the Roman. This was omitted in 1544 as superfluous.

Son of God] The Sarum rule, in the procession after the Mass “for brethren and sisters,” was that the choir should repeat in full “Son of God,” etc., with the Agnus and the Kyrie. Tallis’ Litany shews that this practice was continued by our Choirs.

O Lamb of God] The custom of saying Agnus Dei here is referred to in the Gelasian Rubric for Easter Eve. In Sarum, York, Hereford, as now in Roman and Parisian, Carthusian, Dominican, the Agnus is thrice said. The Sarum responses are, “Hear us, O Lord, Spare us, O Lord, Have mercy upon us:” the first and second of these are transposed in Roman and Parisian, as in York, Hereford, Dominican. The responses in Tours were, “Spare us, Give us pardon, Hear us.” The Ordo Romanus has a twofold Agnus. Lyons a fourfold, with “Spare us, Deliver us, Grant us peace, Have mercy upon us:” so that our present form is just the second half of Lyons. The Agnus comes but once in the Cistercian. “Grant us peace” is the third response in Utrecht, Carthusian, Hermann. The Sarum Litany for the Dying had also, “Grant him peace:” the ordinary Sarum Litany had a special suffrage for peace, and “Grant us peace” was familiar as the response to the third Agnus said at Mass, immediately after the breaking of the Blessed Sacrament: the Primer of 1535 has “Have mercy, Have mercy, Give us peace and rest.”

that takest away the sins] The great value of this supplication consists in its recognition of our Blessed Lord as the Victim that was once indeed slain, but is of perpetual efficacy. He took away our sins, in one sense, by His atoning Passion: and the Atonement can never be repeated. In another sense, He continually takes away our sins, by appearing for us as “the Lamb that was slain,” presenting Himself as such to the Father, and pleading the virtue of His death. In this sense, as Bishop Phillpotts says [Pastoral of 1851, p. 54], “though once for all offered, that Sacrifice is ever living and continuous . . . To Him His Church . . . continually cries, ‘Lamb of God’ . . . not, ‘that tookest away,’ but still ‘takest.’” With regard to the petition to the Prince of Peace, Who “is our Peace,” for peace, compare the second Collect at Evensong. It is Christ’s peace, not the world’s: and this is brought out by the addition of “Thy” in our form. Very touching are the entreaties in the Litany of the Abbey of St. Denis for St. Mark’s Day [Martene, iv. 353], “O Bestower of peace, vouchsafe us perpetual peace, Have mercy . . . O benignant Jesus, receive our souls in peace,” etc.

O Christ, hear us] Hereford: so too in Sarum Primer and Roman. The Supplication also occurs in Mabillon’s Caroline Litany; after “Agnus . . . mundi, Christ, hear us; three Kyries; Christ reigns, Christ commands, Christ conquers (thrice), Christ, hear us.” It also occurs in his Anglican, or Armorian. Lyons, Corbeix, Tours, have it thrice, Strasbourg once. The ordinary Ambrosian Litany has thrice, “O Christ, hear our voices:” then thrice, “Hear, O God, and have mercy upon us.” Such “repetitions” are not “vain,” unless those in Ps. cxxxvi. are so; and compare St. Matt. xxvi. 44.

LORD, have mercy upon us.
LORD, have mercy upon us.
 CHRIST, have mercy upon us.
CHRIST, have mercy upon us.
 LORD, have mercy upon us.

¶ Then shall the Priest, and the People with him, say the Lord's Prayer.

OUR FATHER, Which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

O GOD, merciful FATHER, that despisest not the sighing of a contrite heart, nor the desire of such as be sorrowful; Mercifully assist our prayers that we make before Thee in all our troubles and adversities, whensoever they oppress us; and graciously hear us, that those evils which the craft and subtilty of the devil or man worketh against us, be brought to nought; and by the providence of Thy goodness they may be dispersed; that we Thy servants, being hurt by no persecutions, may evermore give thanks unto Thee in Thy holy Church; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD.

O LORD, arise, help us, and deliver us for Thy Name's sake.

Lord, have mercy] Sarum, York, etc. This is the only occasion on which, with us, the people repeat every one of the three sentences of the Kyrie after the Minister. Such was the old Sarum rule as to this Kyrie. [See also p. 199.]

THE SUFFRAGES.

Our Father] Here begins the Second Part of the Litany. At some few Cathedrals two Lay Clerks sing the Litany at the faldstool to Tallis' music as far as this, that music extending no further, and the rest is said by one of the Priests.

O Lord, deal not with us] In Sarum this verse and response, adapted from Ps. ciii. 10, were separated from the Lord's Prayer by "O Lord, shew Thy mercy—And grant—Let Thy mercy come also upon us, O Lord, Even Thy salvation, according to Thy word: We have sinned with our fathers, We have done amiss and dealt wickedly." In York only this last verse and response intervene. In Roman, "O Lord, deal not," comes later. In the ordinary Parisian it comes, as with us, immediately after the Lord's Prayer.

after our sins] That is, "according to our sins." So Hamlet says, "Use every man after his desert, and who shall 'scape whipping?" [Hamlet, ii. 2].

O God, merciful Father] This is very slightly altered from the Collect in the Sarum Mass, "pro tribulatione cordis:" the Epistle being 2 Cor. i. 3-5; the Gospel, S. John xvi. 20-22. There is something pathetically significant in this adoption (1544) into the ordinary Litany of a prayer composed for "cloudy and dark days." It may remind us of the selection of part of this same passage from 2 Cor. i., as the capitulum of the ordinary Sunday Vespers in Roman, and Saturday Vespers in Sarum. The lesson is obvious—that God is always needed as a Comforter. It may be added that a somewhat different version of this Sarum prayer occurs in the Missal published in 1552 by Flacius Illyricus, and supposed to represent the use of Salzburg in the tenth or eleventh century. By comparing our English with the Sarum form, it will be seen that we have added "merciful Father," "Thy servants," "evermore," and made a general reference to "all" troubles, "whenever they oppress us:" omitting a reference to God's "accustomed" loving-kindness,—the clause, "but delivered from all tribulation and distress,"—and "being comforted" in the final clause. Hermann's and Luther's form is very like ours, but somewhat stronger, "in the afflictions which continually oppress us."

O Lord, arise] This, the last verse of our Psalm xlv., slightly altered, occurs, after several Preces, in the York Litany. It also occurs in the Sarum and York rites for Rogation Monday. In Sarum the whole choir in their stalls repeated this "O Lord, arise," with Alleluia. Then was said, "O God, we have heard with our ears, our fathers have told us," that being the whole of the first verse of the psalm according to the Vulgate: and then "immediately follows, Gloria." Then again, "O Lord, arise:" after which the procession set forth, the chanter commencing the Antiphon, "Arise, ye saints, from your abodes," etc. Another Antiphon began, "We and all the people will walk in the Name of the Lord our God." In York the first "Exurge" was an anthem, "in eundo cantanda;" then came the first verse of the psalm, then a second "Exurge," after which the next words of the psalm were recited, "The work which Thou didst," etc., and so on through the whole psalm: "Exurge" being again said at the end. Among the processional Antiphons was, "Kyrie eleison, Thou Who by Thy precious blood hast rescued the world from the jaws of the accursed serpent." It may be observed that in "Exurge" the "redime" of the Vulgate was altered into "libera:" and in the second repetition of "O Lord, arise," we have altered "Name's sake" into "honour."

O God, we have heard] An appropriate representative of the Psalmody which followed the Litanies. [JEBB'S Choral Service, p. 426.] In the ordinary Sarum Litany, as used out of Rogation-tide, there is no psalm : our Litany, as we have seen, here represents the old Rogation use. It also resembles the present Roman Litany, inasmuch as the latter has a psalm (our 70th) with a Gloria, after the Lord's Prayer : after the psalm come certain Preces, partly intercessory, then ten Collects, and a Conclusion. The ordinary Parisian has Preces before the psalm, and twelve Collects after it. The order in Sarum, York, Hereford, is, Lord's Prayer, Preces, and Collects :—seven in Sarum, ten in York (the York Use has various minute resemblances to the Roman), and nine in Hereford. Among the York Collects are ours for the first and fourth Sundays after Trinity,—the Collect for Clergy and People,—for Purity,—“O God, Whose nature ;” “Assist us ;” “O God, from Whom.” With respect to the forty-fourth Psalm, this fragment of it is specially apposite, as suggesting the true comfort amid despondency. [Comp. Ps. lxxvii. 10 ; Isa. li. 3, etc.] The history of God's past mercies is a fountain of hope for those who own Him as the Rock of Ages, tho' "I AM" to all ages of His Church.

O Lord, arise] In this repetition we have a relic of the old use of Antiphons to intensify the leading idea of the psalm as used at the time. [See NEALE'S Commentary on the Psalms, p. 46.]

Gloria] This Gloria is an appendage to "O God, we have heard." Coming as it does amid supplications for help, it witnesses to the duty and the happiness of glorifying God at all times and under all circumstances. [Comp. the end of Ps. lxxxix.] "Deo gratias" was in the fourth century a perpetual watchword ; and the "Vere dignum" testifies to the duty of "giving thanks always." [Comp. Acts xvi. 25.]

From our enemies] These Preces, to the end of "Graciously hear us," were sung in procession, according to the use of Sarum, on St. Mark's Day, "if it was necessary, in time of war." The choir repeated every verse. They were also in a Litany for the Dedication of a Church in the pontificals of St. Dunstan, and of Egbert of York [A.D. 732-766]. In the St. Denis Litany [Martene, iv. 353] we have a touching series of entreaties to Christ, "O good Jesu, protect us everywhere and always. Have mercy . . . O our Redeemer, let not Thy Redemption be lost in us. Have mercy . . . Lord God our King, pardon the guilt of us all. Have mercy," etc.

O Son of David] This is substituted for the "Fili Dei vivi" of the Latin Litany, and it is not known why the variation was introduced. The form "Jesu, Fili David, miserere . . ." was, however, not an uncommon one in the popular devotions of mediæval times. In the Book of Records of University College, Oxford, there is an entry to the following effect: "A composition twixt K. Henry VII. and y<sup>e</sup> College concerning Dame Anne late Countess of Warwick, 8 II. 7 . . . and that the said Master, or any other Fellows of the said place that so shall sing the said high Masse in his stede that daye, shall devoutly remembre in his Masse these words in his second Memento : 'Jesu, Fili David, miserere animæ Famulæ tuæ Anne nuper Countesse Warwici . . . ' and that every poure scholer of the ten poure scholers founded by the charitable alms of the Founders of the said College shall say devoutly kneeling on their knees, betwene the Levation and the Reception of the most glorious and blessed Body of Criste, 'Jesu, Fili David, miserere famulæ tuæ . . . ' "

Similar words are also found in a Composition of a Benefactor to Magdalen College, Oxford, in the time of Henry VIII., "Jesu Fili David, miserere famuli tui Roberti." [Stat. Magd. Coll. Oxford, ii. 121.]

The words were in use even at a much earlier date :—

"Vocē lamentabili et querula clamavit, Creaturam respice Tuam, Fili David."

These verses occurring in the Dialogue between Body and Soul, a poem known in almost every European language, and translated into Latin by Walter Mapes about the end of the twelfth century. [Poems of Mapes, Camd. Soc. ed. p. 105.]

O Lord, let Thy mercy] This verse and response, Ps. xxxiii. 21, are part of the Sarum Preces of Prime. In several editions of our Litany they were called the Versicle and the Answer.

that seek Thy Kingdom, and the righteousness thereof, all things necessary to their bodily sustenance; Send us, we beseech Thee, in this our form of the Sarrn Collect in the Memorial of All Saints (among the Memorie Communes at the end of Lauds, feria 2). In 1544 it ran simply, "We humbly . . . and for the glory of Thy Name sake, turn from us all those evils that we most righteously have deserved. Grant this, O Lord God, for our Mediator and Advocate, Jesu Christ's sake;" and was followed by four other Collects and the Prayer of St. Chrysostom. In 1549 it took its present form, save that "Name sake" was still read, and that "holiness" was not prefixed to "pureness" until 1552.

A Prayer of St. Chrysostom] This was added to the end of the Litany on its first introduction in its present form, in 1544.

The grace of our Lord] Was placed at the end of the Litany, after the Prayer of St. Chrysostom, in the Queen's Chapel Litany of 1558. [See note to it, p. 205.]

THE OCCASIONAL PRAYERS.

This collection of prayers and thanksgivings for special occasions was appended to Morning and Evening Prayer in 1661, but some of the prayers had been in use at an earlier date. Such a collection had occupied a place at the end of the ancient Service-books of the Church: and the use of prayers similar to these is very ancient.

In a printed Missal of 1514 (which formerly belonged to Bishop Cosin, and is now in his Library at Durham) there are Misse and Memorie Communes (among others) with the following titles:—

Memorie Communes.

Missa pro serenitate aëris.	Contra aëreas tempestates.
— — pluvia.	— — invasores ecclesie.
— — tempore belli.	— — adversantes.
— — contra mortalitatem hominum.	— — paganos.
— — pro peste animalium.

But such occasional prayers were not uniformly the same in the ancient Service-books; varying at different times according to the necessities of the period and of the locality.

In the first edition of the English Prayer Book two occasional prayers, the one "for Rain," and the other "for fair Weather," were inserted among the Collects at the end of the Communion Service. These were the same as those now placed here. Four more were added in 1552, the two "in time of Dearth," and those "in time of War," and of "Plague or Sickness;" and the whole six were then placed at the end of the Litany. Thanksgivings corresponding to these were added in 1604; and the remainder, both of the prayers and thanksgivings, were added in 1661, when all were placed where they now stand. These occasional Prayers and Thanksgivings are almost entirely original compositions, though they were evidently composed by divines who were familiar with expressions used for the same objects in the old Services. With several a special interest is connected, but others may be passed over without further notice. What few changes were made in this collection of occasional prayers are traceable to Bishop Cosin, except the important insertion of the necessity, such moderate rain and showers, that we may receive the fruits of the earth to our comfort, and to Thy honour; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ For fair Weather.

○ ALMIGHTY LORD GOD, Who for the sin of man didst once drown all the world, except eight persons, and afterward of Thy great mercy didst promise never to destroy it so again; We humbly beseech Thee, that although we for our iniquities have worthily deserved a plague of rain and waters, yet upon our true repentance Thou wilt send us such weather, as that we may receive the fruits of the earth in due season; and learn both by Thy punishment to amend our lives, and for Thy clemency to give Thee praise and glory; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ In the time of Dearth and Famine.

○ GOD, heavenly FATHER, Whose gift it is, that the rain doth fall, the earth is fruitful, beasts increase, and fishes do multiply; Behold, we beseech Thee, the afflictions of Thy people; and grant that the scarcity and dearth (which we do now most justly suffer for our iniquity), may through Thy goodness be mercifully turned into cheapness and plenty, for the love of JESUS CHRIST our LORD; to Whom with Thee and the HOLY GHOST be all honour and glory, now and for ever. Amen.

¶ Or this.

○ GOD, merciful FATHER, Who, in the time of Elisha the prophet, didst suddenly in Samaria turn great scarcity and dearth into plenty and cheapness; Have mercy upon us, that we, who are now for our sins punished with like adversity, may likewise find a seasonable relief: Increase the fruits of the earth by Thy heavenly benediction; and grant that we, receiving Thy bountiful liberality, may use the same to Thy glory, the relief of those that are needy, and our own comfort, through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ In the time of War and Tumults.

○ ALMIGHTY GOD, King of all kings, and Governor of all things, Whose power no creature is able to resist, to Whom it belongeth justly to punish sinners, and to be merciful to them that truly repent; Save and deliver us, we humbly beseech Thee, from the hands of our enemies; abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices; that we, being armed with Thy defence, may be preserved evermore from all perils, to glorify Thee, Who art the only Giver of all victory; through the merits of Thy only SON, JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ In the time of any common Plague or Sickness.

○ ALMIGHTY God, Who in Thy wrath didst send a plague upon Thine own people in the wilderness for their obstinate rebellion against Moses and Aaron; and also, in the time of king David, didst slay with the plague of pestilence threescore and ten thousand, and yet remembering Thy mercy didst save the rest; Have pity upon us miserable sinners, who now are visited with great sickness and mortality; that like as Thou didst then accept of an atonement, and didst command the destroying Angel to cease from punishing, so it may now please Thee to withdraw from us this plague and grievous sickness; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

every day] The principle laid down in the Rubric before the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels applies to the use of these Collects. One of them ought, therefore, to be said at Evensong of the Saturday before Ember Week, and at Mattins and Evensong every day afterwards until the Ordination Sunday. The Evensong previous to the latter should be included as being the eve of the Sunday itself.

The first of these Ember Collects is to be found in Bishop Cosin's Collection of Private Devotions, which was first published in 1627.<sup>1</sup> It is also found in the margin of the Durham Prayer Book in his handwriting, with a slight alteration made by him at the end after it was written in. No trace of it has hitherto been discovered in any early collections of prayers or in the ancient Services; and therefore it may be concluded that it is an original composition of Bishop Cosin's, to whom we are thus indebted for one of the most beautiful and striking prayers in the Prayer Book, and one which is not surpassed by anything in the ancient Sacramentaries or the Eastern Liturgies. The second Collect is taken from the Ordination Services, and is written into the margin of the Durham Prayer Book under the other in the handwriting of Sancroft, having been already inserted at the Prayer for the Parliament, that for all Conditions of Men, and the General Thanksgiving. The Rubric standing at the head of the prayers is Cosin's; but he would have explained "occasional" by adding "if the time require" at the end of it; which words were not printed. His revised Prayer Book also contains a rubrical heading in the margin, "For the Parliament and Convocation during their sessions," but no prayer is annexed. [See further, notes on the Prayer for the Parliament.]

§ In the time of Dearth and Famine.

The second of these prayers was—for what reason is not apparent—left out of the Prayer Book in several of the editions published during the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James I. Bishop Cosin wrote it in the margin of his revised Prayer Book, and it was reinserted in 1661, with some slight alterations of his making.

§ In the time of any common Plague or Sickness.

The Collect form which is so strictly preserved in these prayers was strengthened in this one by the addition of another Scriptural allusion in the Invocation. This—from "didst send a plague" as far as "and also"—was inserted by Bishop Cosin, as were also the words relating to the Atonement offered. The general tendency of such alterations by Bishop Cosin was to raise the objective tone of the prayers here and elsewhere, making our addresses to God of a more reverent and humble character.

<sup>1</sup> An earlier edition was privately printed, but this the writer has not seen. See the address of the printer to the reader in a beautiful copy of the 1627 edition which is preserved in the British Museum Library [3405 a].

Church by the precious blood of Thy dear Son; Mercifully look upon the same, and at this time so guide and govern the minds of Thy servants the Bishops and Pastors of Thy flock, that they may lay hands suddenly on no man, but faithfully and wisely make choice of fit persons to serve in the sacred Ministry of Thy Church. And to those which shall be ordained to any holy function, give Thy grace and heavenly benediction; that both by their life and doctrine they may set forth Thy glory, and set forward the salvation of all men; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ A Prayer that may be said after any of the former.

¶ MOST gracious God, we humbly beseech Thee, as for this Kingdom in general, so especially for the High Court of Parliament, under our most religious and gracious King at end of the Litany in the Prayer Book for the Church of Scotland, printed in 1637.

Under the old system of the Church there were special masses for the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday at all the four Ember Seasons; but the use of a special prayer every day during the Ember Weeks is peculiar to the modern Church of England. It may be added that the very pointed character of the words used is also modern, the older Ember-day Collects and Post-Communions making little direct reference to the ordainers or those to be ordained.

The Ember-day Collect is a continual witness before God and man of the interest which the whole body of the Church has in the ordination of the Clergy who are to minister in it. The entreaty of St. Paul, "Brethren, pray for us," is the entreaty that continually goes forth to the Church at large from its ministry; but never with greater necessity, or with greater force, than when the solemn act of Ordination is about to be performed by the Bishops, and a number of the future guides and leaders of the Church are about to be empowered and authorized to undertake their office. This is, in fact, one of the most valuable of our Collects, wielding as it does the strong weapon of general prayer throughout the land on behalf of the Bishops, through whom all ministerial authority and power is conveyed from our Lord, and of the priests and deacons, to whom, from time to time, their ministry is delegated. A faithful reliance upon the promises of our Blessed Lord respecting prayer will give us an assurance that so general a supplication for a special object could not be without effect; and no age ever required that such a supplication should be offered more than the present, when the Clergy are growing more and more faithful, but when the necessities of some dioceses lead to a far too promiscuous admission of persons who are "fit," only by some stretch of language, "to serve in the sacred ministry of God's Church."

It is worth noticing that "the Bishops and Pastors of Thy flock" does not refer to the Bishops and the Priests who with them lay their hands on the heads of those who are ordained Priests. "Bishop and Pastor" is the expression used in all the documents connected with the election and confirmation of a Bishop; and "all Bishops, the Pastors of Thy Church," are prayed for in the first Collect in the Office for Consecration of a Bishop. No doubt the expression is here also used in the same sense, with reference to the Bishop as the earthly fountain of pastoral authority, ability [2 Cor. iii. 6], and responsibility.

The times for using one or other of these Collects are as follows:—

From Saturday	{ 1st Sunday in Lent Whitsunday Sept. 18th Dec. 17th }	to Saturday	{ 2nd Sunday in Lent Trinity Sunday Sept. 25th Dec. 24th }	} inclusive.

§ A Prayer that may be said, etc.

This ancient prayer, which is one of the "Orationes pro Peccatis" in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, comes into our Prayer Book through the Litany of the Salisbury Use, and is found in all the Primers of the English Church. It occupied its ancient place in the Litany of 1544, but was omitted from later Litanies until 1559. In 1661 it was transferred to this place, where it stands in the MS. The most ancient English version of it known is that of the fourteenth-century Prymer [MASKELL'S Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 110], which is as follows:—

"God, to whom it is prope to be merciful and to spare euermore, undirfonge" (undertake, "take," in Hilsey's Prymer) "oure preieris; and the mercifulnesse of thy pitee assoile hem, that the chayne of trespas bindith. Bi crist ouré Lord. So be it."

The proper times for the use of this prayer are seasons of penitence. All days in Lent, Fridays, the Rogation Days, and the days of Ember Weeks, are obviously occasions when it comes in with a marked appropriateness; its use "after any of the former" clearly supposing that "the former" Collects are accompanied by fasting and humiliation.

It may also be pointed out as a most suitable prayer for use by Clergy and Laity alike after any confession of sins in private prayer; or in praying with sick persons, in cases when an authoritative absolution is not to be used.

§ The Prayer for the Parliament.

There is every reason to think that this prayer, so consonant with the constitutional principles of modern times, was composed by Archbishop Laud when Bishop of St. David's. The

this time assembled: That Thou wouldest be pleased to bless and direct all their consultations to the preservation of Thy glory, the good of Thy Church, the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign, and his Kingdoms. Look, O LORD, upon the humility and devotion with which they are come into Thy courts. And they are come into Thy house in assured confidence upon the merits and mercies of CHRIST our blessed SAVIOUR, that Thou wilt not deny them the grace and favour which they beg of Thee. Therefore, O LORD, bless them with all that wisdom, which Thou knowest necessary to make the maturity of his Majesty's and their counsels, the happiness and blessing of this commonwealth. These and all other necessities for them, for us, and Thy whole Church, we humbly beg in the Name and mediation of CHRIST JESUS our most blessed LORD and SAVIOUR. Amen.

earliest form in which it is known is that above given, from a Fast-day Service printed in 1625.<sup>1</sup> It also appears in at least two Forms of Prayer which were issued by Laud after he became Archbishop of Canterbury, and during the rule of that "Leng" Parliament by the influence of which he and the King suffered. It does not appear in a folio copy of "Prayers for the Parliament," which is bound up at the beginning of Bishop Cosin's Durham Prayer Book, but it was inserted in a Fast-day Service for the 12th of June 1661, and afterwards in its present place. The word "Dominions" was substituted for "Kingdoms" by an Order in Council of January 1, 1801. As, however, the ancient style of our kings was "Rex Angliæ, Dominus Hiberniæ," this seems to have been a constitutional mistake, as well as a questionable interference with the Prayer Book; but probably "dominions" was supposed to be the more comprehensive word, and one more suitable than "kingdoms" to an empire so extended and of so mixed a character as that of the English Sovereigns.

There is some reason to think that this is not the prayer which it was originally intended to insert here; the following entries appearing in the Journal of the Lower House of Convocation for 1661: "May 24. A prayer or collect to be made for the parliament sitting, and one for the synod: referred to Dr. Pory and the Archbishop's other chaplains to draw up and present the same to this House the next session." "May 31. Dr. Pory introduxit formam precatum pro parlamento et synodo. The approbation of them referred to the Dean of Wells (Dr. Creighton), Dr. Creed, Dr. Pearson, Dr. Crowther, and the Archbishop's two chaplains." [CARDWELL'S Conf. p. 374.] But a general fast was ordered for June 12th, and in the Form of Prayer printed for use on that occasion the Prayer for the Parliament appears in its present form. This looks as if the modification of the prayer of 1625 had been adopted as having already had Royal sanction; and as if it was afterwards substituted for Dr. Pory's proposed prayers for the Parliament and the Convocation.

This prayer may have been intended only for use before the several Houses of Parliament, when it was inserted here in 1661. Yet the remarks made on the Ember Collect apply to it in no small degree; and the general prayers of the Church may be expected to bring down a blessing upon the deliberations of the Parliament in a higher degree than the local prayers daily used in each House.

It may be mentioned that the expression "most great, learned, and religious king," is contained in James I.'s Act for a Thanksgiving on the Fifth of November.

§ Prayer for all Conditions of Men.

This prayer was composed by Dr. Peter Gunning, afterwards Bishop, successively, of Chichester and Ely, and one of the chief instruments, under God, in the restoration of the Prayer Book to national use in 1662. It has usually been supposed to be a condensed form of a longer prayer, in which he had endeavoured to satisfy the objections of the Puritans against the collect form of the Five Prayers, by amalgamating the substance of them into one. The first idea of it seems, however, to be taken from the nine ancient Collects for Good Friday, of which we only retain three. Dr. Bisse states that when Gunning was Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, he would not allow this prayer to be used at Evensong, declaring that he had composed it only for Morning use, as a substitute for the Litany. And certainly, if it had been intended for constant use, it is strange that it was not placed before the Prayer of St. Chrysostom in Morning and Evening Prayer, but among the "Prayers upon Several Occasions." The original intention must certainly have been to confine this general supplication to occasional use; and the meaning of "to be used" is probably identical with "that may be used." There are circumstances under which it may be desirable to shorten the Service; and if the omission of this prayer can thus be considered as permissible, it will offer one means of doing so.

"THANKSGIVINGS.

¶ A General Thanksgiving.

ALMIGHTY GOD, FATHER of all mercies, we Thine unworthy servants do give Thee most humble and hearty thanks for all Thy goodness and loving-kindness to us, and to all men;

* This to be said when any that have been prayed for desire to return praise. [\ particularly to those who desire now to offer up their praises and thanksgivings for Thy late mercies vouchsafed unto them.*] We bless Thee for our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life; but above all, for Thine inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our LORD JESUS CHRIST; for the means of grace, and for the hope of glory. And, we beseech Thee, give us that due sense of all Thy mercies, that our hearts may be unfeignedly thankful, and that we <sup>b</sup>shew forth Thy praise, not only with our lips, but in our lives; by giving up our selves to Thy service, and by walking before Thee in holiness and righteousness all our days; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD, to Whom with Thee and the HOLY GHOST be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

¶ For Rain.

O GOD our heavenly FATHER, Who by Thy gracious providence dost cause the former and the latter rain to descend upon the earth, that it may bring forth fruit for the use of man; We give Thee humble thanks that it hath pleased Thee, in our great necessity, to send us at the

¶ For fair weather.

O LORD God, Who hast justly humbled us by Thy late plague of immoderate rain and waters, and in Thy mercy hast relieved and comforted our souls by this seasonable and blessed change of weather; We praise and glorify Thy holy Name for this Thy mercy, and will always declare Thy loving-kindness from generation to generation; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ For Plenty.

O MOST merciful FATHER, Who of Thy gracious goodness hast heard the devout prayers of Thy Church, and turned our dearth and scarcity into cheapness and plenty; We give Thee humble thanks for this Thy special bounty; beseeching Thee to continue Thy loving-kindness unto us, that our land may yield us her fruits of increase, to Thy glory and our comfort; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

b Al. may shew forth, as in Irish MS.

The prayer is cast in the mould of that for the Church in the Communion Service. Bishop Cosin altered the preface of that prayer to "Let us pray for the good estate of Christ's Catholick Church," and the title of the prayer in the Rubric at the end of the Communion Service was altered by him in the same way. The title was often so printed in the last century, and had appeared in the same form in a book of Hours printed in 1531. [See notes on Prayer for Church in Communion Service.]

The tone and the language of the prayer very successfully imitate those of the ancient collects, and the condensation of its petitions shows how thoroughly and spiritually the author of it entered into the worth of that ancient mode of prayer, as distinguished from the verbose meditations which were substituted for it in the Occasional Services of James I. The petition, "That all who profess and call themselves Christians, may be led into the way of truth," was evidently framed with reference to the Puritan Nonconformists, who had sprung up in such large numbers during the great Rebellion; but it is equally applicable as a prayer of charity for Dissenters at all times; and no words could be more gentle or loving than these, when connected with the petitions for unity, peace, and righteousness which follow. The concluding petitions have an analogy with the Memoriæ Communes of the Salisbury Use, "Pro quacunq; tribulatione," and "Pro infirmo." In another Memoria, that "Pro amico" which comes between these two, the name of the person prayed for was mentioned, which may have suggested the parenthetical reference to individuals in this prayer.<sup>1</sup>

There was, beside these Common Memorials, a Daily Prayer for the Sick in the Service at Prime, as follows:—

Omnipotens sempiterna Almighty and everlasting Deus: salus aeterna credentium, God, the eternal salvation of them, exaudi nos pro famulis tuis, them that believe, hear us on behalf of those Thy servants for whom we beseech the help of Thy mercy; that health being restored unto them, they may render thanks to Thee in Thy Church; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

tuis pro quibus misericordiae tuae imploramus auxilium; ut reddita sibi sanitate, gratiarum tibi in ecclesia tua referant actiones. Per Christum. Amen. [Gelas.]

It is a very excellent practice, when any are known to be dying, to commend them to the prayers of the Church (by name or otherwise) before the Prayer for all Conditions of Men is said. It is equally applicable to cases of mental or bodily distress, as well as to its more familiar use in the case of sick persons; and the afflictions or distresses of "mind, body, or estate," which are so tersely but comprehensively named, shew clearly that the special clause of intercession was not by any means intended to be limited to sickness.

THE OCCASIONAL THANKSGIVINGS.

These were all placed as they now stand in 1661; but they were, with two exceptions, printed at the end of the Litany (by Royal authority only), after the Hampton Court Conference in 1604. The particular circumstances under which this liberty was taken with the Prayer Book by James I. are mentioned in the Historical Introduction. It is unnecessary to add anything further here than that the Occasional Thanksgivings are now as entirely a part of the Prayer Book sanctioned by the Church as any other prayers.

§ The General Thanksgiving.

This is called "General" because it is a Thanksgiving on behalf of "all men," as the preceding collect or prayer is "for all conditions of men."

It was composed or compiled by Reynolds, Bishop of Norwich, for the revision of 1661. The first portion of it appears to be borrowed from the following opening of a Thanksgiving composed by Queen Elizabeth after one of her progresses, and which is printed (from a copy in the State Paper Office) in the those great and apparent dangers wherewith we were compassed: We acknowledge it Thy goodness that we were not delivered over as a prey unto them; beseeching Thee still to continue such Thy mercies towards us, that all the world may know that Thou art our Saviour and mighty Deliverer; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ For restoring publick peace at home.

O ETERNAL God, our heavenly FATHER, Who alone makest men to be of one mind in a house, and stillest the outrage of a violent and unruly people; We bless Thy holy Name, that it hath pleased Thee to appease the seditious tumults which have been lately raised up amongst us; most humbly beseeching Thee to grant to all of us grace, that we may henceforth obediently walk in Thy holy commandments; and, leading a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, may continually offer unto Thee our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving for these Thy mercies towards us; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ For deliverance from the Plague, or other common sickness.

O LORD God, Who hast wounded us for our sins, and consumed us for our transgressions, by Thy late heavy and dreadful visitation; and now, in the midst of judgement remembering mercy, hast redeemed our souls from the jaws of death; We offer unto Thy fatherly goodness our selves, our souls and bodies, which Thou hast delivered, to be a living sacrifice unto Thee, always praising and magnifying Thy mercies in the midst of Thy Church; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

¶ Or this.

WE humbly acknowledge before Thee, O most merciful FATHER, that all the punishments which are threatened in Thy law might justly have fallen upon us, by reason of our manifold transgressions and hardness of heart; Yet seeing it hath pleased Thee of Thy tender mercy, upon our weak and unworthy humiliation, to assuage the contagious sickness wherewith we lately have been sore afflicted, and to restore the voice of joy and health into our dwellings; We offer unto Thy Divine Majesty the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, lauding and magnifying Thy glorious Name for such Thy preservation and providence over us; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

"Liturgies of Queen Elizabeth" of the Parker Society, p. 667: "I render unto Thee, O Merciful and Heavenly Father, most humble and hearty thanks for Thy manifold mercies so abundantly bestowed upon me, as well for my creation, preservation, regeneration, and all other Thy benefits and great mercies exhibited in Christ Jesus . . ." But it is possible that there is some older prayer, as yet unnoticed, which was the original of both Queen Elizabeth's and Bishop Reynolds'.

The remarks which have been made respecting the special clause in the "Prayer for all Conditions of Men," apply also to the special clause in the General Thanksgiving.

There is no authority whatever for the congregation saying the General Thanksgiving with or after the Minister. Wherever this is intended the several clauses of the formulary are printed with capital initials.

§ For restoring publick peace at home.

This is to be found in the margin of Cosin's Durham Prayer Book in his handwriting, but the original draft of it is due to Bishop Wren, who wrote it in the following form:—

"A Thanksgiving for the Restoring of Public Peace.

"O Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, Who alone makest men to be of one mind in an house, and art the God of peace and unity in every nation, we bless Thy Holy Name for this gracious change among us, and that it hath pleased Thee with so high a hand to appease these seditions and tumults which by the subtlety of the Devil were raised up and long fomented among us, and so to subdue the oppositions of men of evil minds as that, through Thy grace, we may now assemble in peace and safety to offer up unto Thee this our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."<sup>1</sup>

There were two other changes made in the course of writing it, with the evident object of moulding it in as charitable a form as possible. "Madness of a raging and unreasonable people" was one of the original phrases; and, "Grant that we may henceforth live in peace and unity," was another; and both are altered in Cosin's own writing. This Thanksgiving offers another illustration of the restrained and temperate spirit in which the restoration of the Prayer Book and its revision were undertaken by men who had suffered so much from the "outrage of a violent and unruly people," as Wren, Cosin, and their coadjutors had suffered for many years.

Except the General Thanksgiving, none of these Occasional Thanksgivings are well adapted to the necessities of present times; and the introduction of several new "Memoriæ Communes" would be a good work of revision, provided they were worded in language whose suitableness and dignity made them fit to be placed beside more ancient parts of the Prayer Book.

AN INTRODUCTION

COLLECTS, EPISTLES, AND GOSPELS.

THE Liturgy consists of a fixed and unvarying portion, and of a portion which varies at least once a week; the fixed part is printed by itself in a later division of the Prayer Book, and the variable part is that included under the title of "The Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, to be used throughout the year," and now coming under notice.

In the early ages of the Church the Office of the Holy Communion was contained in several separate volumes, one for the Epistles, called the Comes, Lectionarius, or Epistolarium; another for the Gospels, called the Evangelistarium; a third for the Anthems, called the Antiphonarius, or Gradual; and a fourth for the fixed part of the Service and the Collects, which went by the name of the Liber Sacramentorum, or Sacramentary. These four separate volumes were eventually united into one,<sup>1</sup> under the name of the Missal; and the two portions of the Prayer Book in which the varying and unvarying parts of the Communion Service are contained constitute, in fact, the Missal of the Church of England, which is almost universally bound in a separate form for use at the Altar.

The modern arrangement of these variable parts of the Liturgy is derived directly from the ancient Missals of the Church of England, of which the principal one was that of Salisbury. Like the rest of the Prayer Book, it has undergone some condensation. Offertory sentences were formerly placed in this part of the Liturgy, but are now collected into the unvarying portion. There was also a short Anthem, or Gradual (with its response), placed after every Epistle, and a Collect called "Post-Communio," but both of these have been discontinued. The Introit, or Officium,<sup>2</sup> was likewise appointed for every celebration of the Holy Communion, and a short Anthem, the "Communio," to be sung during the Administration. In the first Prayer Book the Introits were taken from the Psalms,<sup>3</sup> and each one was printed before its Collect; but hymns have been generally substituted since their omission. The "Communio" was also fixed in the first Prayer Book, being the Anthem, "O Lamb of God, Which takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us;" and for this, a soft and solemn organ voluntary seems to have been afterwards substituted, such as is still to be heard at Durham Cathedral and elsewhere during the Administration. Twenty-two Post-Communions were also provided and printed after the Agnus Dei. These were sentences from the Gospels and Epistles of the New Testament: and the Rubric preceding them ordered that one should be sung by the Clerks when the Communion was ended.

This arrangement of the variable parts of the Communion Service is, however, much more ancient than the Salisbury Missal. The selection of the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays and some of the other Holydays is attributed to St. Jerome in the fourth century; and most of the Collects come to us originally from the Sacramentaries of St. Leo, St. Gelasius, and St. Gregory; the last of whom died A. D. 604.

§ Collects.

The Collects which are now used in the Communion Service appear to be the growth of the fifth and sixth centuries, as is stated above; though it is far from being improbable that the Sacramentaries of that date were, to a large extent, compilations of previously existing forms, rather than original compositions of those whose names they bear. These Sacramentaries have the appearance of methodizing and rearranging established customs and formularies; and there is an antecedent improbability in the statement that SS. Leo, Gregory, or any other single individual, invented so large a body of public devotions, and wrought so great a revolution in the habits of the Church, as to bring it suddenly into use. Cardinal Bona [Rever. Liturg. ii. 5; iv.] gives some evidence in support of the supposed Apostolic origin of the form of prayer known by the name of Collect, though he thinks the general tradition of the Christian world a sufficient proof that St. Gelasius and St. Gregory composed those now in use.

It may be considered an argument against this theory of Apostolic origin that the Collect is a form of prayer unknown in the Eastern Church, which has always been so conservative with regard to its ancient customs and formularies. But Freeman has shewn that there is a distinct likeness between certain kinds of hymns (called "Exapostolaria") of the Eastern Church, and the Collects of the Western, by which a common

<sup>3</sup> It may be useful to annex a list of the Introits as arranged in the First English Prayer Book, as many Ritualists think them better adapted for their purpose than hymns:—

origin seems to be indicated; and he gives the following hymns at Lauds on Easter Day as an example [FREEMAN'S Principles of Divine Service, i. 142]:—

"Thou, O Lord, that didst endure the cross, and didst abolish death, and didst rise again from the dead, give peace in our life, as only Almighty."

"Thou, O Christ, Who didst raise man by Thy resurrection, vouchsafe that we may with pure hearts hymn and glorify Thee."

Although the variable Exapostelaria in actual use are attributed to a Ritualist of the tenth century, Freeman considers that they represent a much older system of precatory hymns, and quotes from Neale that the aim of them "seems originally to have been a kind of invocation of the grace of God," which is a special feature of Collects.

It is not quite correct, therefore, to say that such a form of prayer is wholly unknown in the Eastern Church; and this argument against the primitive antiquity of it cannot be considered to have much force.

There are two, and only two, prayers of the Church given in the New Testament. Both of these are in the Acts of the Apostles, and both of them have a striking similarity to the prayers we now know as Collects. The first is, "Thou, Lord, Which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two Thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place." [Acts i. 24, 25.] The second is, "Lord, Thou art God, Which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is: Who by the mouth of Thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against His Christ. For of a truth against Thy holy Child Jesus, Whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever Thy hand and Thy counsel determined before to be done. And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto Thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak Thy word, by stretching forth Thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the Name of Thy holy Child Jesus." [Acts iv. 24-30.] In both of these prayers, the address, or invocation, is a prominent feature; and in the latter it occupies more than two-thirds of the whole prayer; while the actual supplication itself, though in both cases of the highest importance possible, is condensed into a few simple words. These Apostolic prayers, therefore, bear a great resemblance to Collects, and might not unreasonably be spoken of as the earliest on record.

But the real model of this form of prayer is to be found in a still higher quarter, the Lord's Prayer itself. If we compare some of the best of our ancient or modern Collects (as, for instance, the Collect for Whitsunday, which has been familiarly known to the Church in her daily Service for at least twelve centuries and a half, or that for the Sunday after Ascension, which is partly of Reformation date) with the Prayer of Prayers, we shall find in both that the tone is chiefly that of adoration, and subordinately that of supplication; and, also, that the human prayer follows the Divine pattern in the adoption of a condensed form of expression, which is in strict accordance with the injunction, "God is in heaven, and thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few." Such a comparison will bring home a conviction to the mind, that when we use this terse form of mixed adoration and prayer we are not far from carrying out, with literal exactness, the still more authoritative injunction of Him Who gave us His own prayer as the type of all others, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye."<sup>1</sup>

The origin of the name "Collect" is uncertain; and various meanings have been given to it. Some Ritualists have connected it with the collected assembly<sup>2</sup> of the people; others have interpreted the name as indicating that the prayer so called collects together the topics of previous prayers, or else those of the Epistle and Gospel for the day. But the most reasonable interpretation seems to be that which distinguishes the Collect as the prayer offered by the priest alone on behalf of the people, while in Litanies and Versicles the priest and the people pray alternately. This interpretation is found in BONA, Rer. Liturg. ii. 5. iii.; Durand, iii. 13; and Micrologus, iii.; the words of the latter being, "Oratio quam Collectam dicunt, eo quod sacerdos, qui legatione fungitur pro populo ad Dominum omnium petitiones ea oratione colligit atque concludit." So in the commentary on the Divine Offices of Syon, the explanation of the word is given thus: "Yt is as moche as to saye a gatherynge togyther, for before thys prayer ye dresse you to god, and gather you in onhed to pray in the person of holy chirche, that ye sholde be the soner harde." And with respect to the ending the explanation is very properly given: "Ye ende all youre orysons by oure lorde Jesu cryste, and in hys blyssed name, by eanse he sayde in his gospel, that what euer ye aske the father in my name, he shall gyue yt you." [Mirror of our Lady, p. 134, Blunt's ed.] As of Common Prayer in general, therefore, so we may conclude especially of the Collect in particular, that it is the supplication of many gathered into one by the voice of the priest, and offered up by him to the Father, through our Lord and only Mediator.

There is a very exact and definite character in the structure of Collects; so exact, that certain rules have been deduced from these prayers of the Saints for the construction of others, as rules of grammar are deduced from classic writers.

First, may be mentioned the characteristics which distinguish this special form of prayer, and which have been loosely mentioned above:—

1. A Collect consists of a single period, seldom a long one.
2. A single petition only is offered in it.
3. Mention is made of our Lord's Mediation; or else
4. It ends with an inscription of praise to God.

These features of the Collect at once distinguish it from the long and often involved forms of Eastern prayers, and also from the precatory meditations which became so familiar to English people in the seventeenth century; and the chastened yet comprehensive character of Collects is owing, in no small degree, to the necessities imposed upon the writers of them by this structure.

This general outline of the Collect develops itself in detail on a plan of which the most perfect form may be represented by two of our finest specimens, the one as old as the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, in the sixth century, the other composed by Bishop Cosin, more than a thousand years later.

	Whitsunday.	6th Sunday after Epiphany.
1. Invocation.	GOD,	O GOD,
2. Reason on which the Petition is to be founded.	Who as at this time didst teach the hearts of Thy faithful people by sending to them the light of Thy Holy Spirit;	Whose blessed Son was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil, and make us the sons of God, and heirs of eternal life;
3. PETITION.	grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgement in all things,	grant us, we beseech Thee, that having this hope, we may purify ourselves, even as He is pure;
4. Benefit hoped for.	and evermore to rejoice in His holy comfort;	that when He shall appear again with power and great glory, we may be made like unto Him in His eternal and glorious Kingdom,
5. Mention of Christ's Mediation, or Ascription of praise: or both.	through the merits of Christ Jesus our Saviour, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end.	where with Thee, O Father, and Thee, O Holy Ghost, He liveth and reigneth, ever one GOD, world without end.

<sup>1</sup> It is an ancient rule of the Church to have an uneven number of Collects. Micrologus [iv.] says that either one, three, five, or seven are used: one from tradition; three, because our Lord prayed thrice in His Agony; five, because of His five-fold Passion; seven, because there are seven petitions in the Lord's Prayer. A general Rubric of the Sarum Missal says, "More than seven Collects are never to be said, for Christ in the Lord's Prayer did not exceed seven petitions. An uneven number of Collects is always to be preserved, except in Christmas Week, both at Mass and at Matins. If the number of Collects is naturally even, it is made uneven by adding the Memorial of All Saints." [Sar. Miss. in Eng. xxxi.]

Thus it will be observed that, "after the Invocation, a foundation is laid for the petition by the recital of some doctrine, or of some fact of Gospel history, which is to be commemorated. Upon this foundation so laid down rises the petition or body of the prayer. Then, in a perfect specimen . . . the petition has the wings of a holy aspiration given to it, whereupon it may soar to heaven. Then follows the conclusion, which, in the case of prayers not addressed to the Mediator, is always through the Mediator, and which sometimes involves a Doxology, or Ascription of praise."<sup>1</sup> This last member of the Collect has, indeed, always been constructed with great care, and according to rules which were put into the form of memorial verses, at a period when it was the custom to write the Collect in a short form, and only to indicate the ending by "per," "Qui vivis," "per candelam," or whatever else were its first word or words. One of these aids to memory is as follows:—

“Per Dominum,’ dicas si Patrem Presbyter oras.
Si Christum memores ‘per Eundem,’ dicere debes.

Si loqueris Christo ‘Qui vivis,’ scire memento;
‘Qui Tecum,’ si sit collecte finis in Ipso;
Si memores Flamen; ‘Ejusdem,’ dic prope finem.”

Illustrations of these several endings will be found in the Collects for the Epiphany, the Nativity, Easter Day, and Whitsun Day.

The number of the variable Collects in the Book of Common Prayer is eighty-three. They are all traced to their original sources, so far as these have been discovered, in the following pages; and the annexed Table gives a compendious view of the origin and dates of the whole number.

The primary use of the Collect is to give a distinctive tone to the Eucharistic Service, striking the keynote of prayer for the particular occasion on which the Sacrifice is offered. But by the constant use of it in its appointed place in the Daily Mattins and Evensong, it also extends this Eucharistic speciality into the other public Services of the Church, and carries it forward from one celebration to another, linking these Offices on to the chief Service and Offering which the Church has to render to Almighty God. "Used after such celebration, the Collect is endued with a wonderful power for carrying on through the week the peculiar Eucharistic memories and work of the preceding Sunday, or of a Festival. Under whatsoever engaging or aweing aspect our Lord has more especially come to us then in virtue of the appointed Scriptures, the gracious and healthful visitation lives on in memory, nay, is prolonged in fact. Or in whatever special respect, again, suggested by these same Scriptures, and embodied for us in the Collect, we have desired to present ourselves 'a holy and lively sacrifice' in that high ordinance, the same oblation of ourselves do we carry on and perpetuate by it. Through the Collect, in a word, we lay continually upon the altar our present sacrifice and service, and receive, in a manner, from the altar, a continuation of the heavenly gift."<sup>3</sup> Thus it is a constant memorial before God of the great Memorial which joins on the work of the Church on earth to the intercession of our Mediator in heaven; and it is also a memorial to the mind of every worshipper of the sanctification which is brought upon all our days and all our prayers by the Sacramental Presence of our Blessed Lord. [See also p. 200.]

§ The Epistles and Gospels.

The Holy Communion was celebrated and received by the faithful for nearly twenty years before St. Paul wrote his first Epistle, and for nearly thirty years before the first Gospel was written by St. Matthew; and none of the Gospels or Epistles are likely to have been generally known in the Church until even a much later time. The Scriptures of the New Testament did not, therefore, form any part of the original Liturgies.<sup>4</sup> It has been supposed by many Ritualists that portions of the Old Testament were read at the time of the celebration; and the gradual introduction of our present system is indicated by the usage shewn in an Irish Communion Book of the sixth century, which has one unvarying Epistle and Gospel, 1 Cor. xi., and S. John vi. This system is attributed to St. Jerome by the almost unanimous voice of ancient writers on the Divine Service of the Church; and a very ancient Book of Epistles and Gospels exists, called the Comes, which has gone by the name of St. Jerome at least since the time of Analarus and Micrologus, in the ninth and eleventh centuries.

The antiquity of the Comes Hieronymi has been disputed, reigneth with the Father and the [or 'the same'] Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen."

[3] Collects addressed to the Blessed Trinity should end: "Who livest and reignest, one God, world without end. Amen." Some other variations, as "Where with Thee," after the mention of Heaven, will suggest themselves. The beautiful doxological ending which is found in many of the English Collects does not appear in the Latin originals.

[4] FREEMAN'S Principles of Divine Service, i. 300.

[5] On the other hand, there are those who believe that several expressions in the New Testament Scriptures are derived from Liturgies known to and used by the Apostles. [See an Essay on Liturgical Quotations in NEALE'S Liturgiology, pp. 411-474.]

[1] Collects addressed to God the Father should end: "Through Jesus Christ our Lord [or if our Lord has been previously mentioned]: 'Through the same Jesus Christ our Lord', Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the [or if the Holy Ghost has been previously mentioned]: 'The same'] Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen."

[2] Collects addressed to God the Son should end: "Who livest and chiefly because the system of Epistles and Gospels which it contains differs from that of the Roman rite; but there seem to be several good reasons for supposing that it really belongs to as early a time as that of St. Jerome; and as its system agrees with the old and modern English one, where it differs from the Roman, the question has a special interest in connection with the Book of Common Prayer.

This ancient Lectionary, or Comes, was published by Pamelius in the second volume of his Liturgicon Ecclesie Latine, under the title, Divi Hieronymi presbyteri Comes sive Lectionarius, and is also to be found in the eleventh volume of St. JEROME'S Works, p. 526. It contains Epistles and Gospels for all the Sundays of the year, the Festivals of our Lord, some other Festivals, and many Ferial days. It is some evidence in favour of its great antiquity that no saints are commemorated in it of a later date than the time of St. Jerome; and that the Epiphany is called by the name of the Theophany, a name which was discontinued not long after in the Western Church. The Comes is mentioned in the Charta Cornutiana, a foundation deed belonging to a church in France, and printed by Mabillon [Lit. Gall. Pref. vii], and this charter is as early as A.D. 471. It is mentioned by Amalarius [iii. 40], who wrote A.D. 820; and in Micrologus [xxv.], a liturgical treatise of about A.D. 1080, it is spoken of as "Liber Comitatus sive Lectionarius, quem Sanctus Hieronymus compaginavit;" while about the same time Belet[h] [lvii.] writes that Pope Damasus requested St. Jerome to make a selection of Scriptures from the Old and New Testament to be read in the Church. The latter statement derives confirmation from the fact that before the time of Damasus [A.D. 366-384] the Fathers cite Scripture without giving any indications of such a selection being in use: while after that time there are such indications in the writings of SS. Ambrose, Augustine, Leo, Salvian, and Cæsarius; the three latter of whom were accustomed to use St. Jerome's version of the Scriptures, and not the Septuagint. All this seems to show that there is much to be said for the ancient statement that St. Jerome first arranged the Epistles and Gospels, and that his arrangement is extant in this Lectionary.

In the Comes there are Scriptures for twenty-five Sundays after the Octave of Pentecost, as in our Prayer Book and in the ancient Salisbury Use (though in both the latter they are numbered as after Trinity), but the Roman rite has them only as far as the twenty-third Sunday after Pentecost. The Epistles and Gospels for these twenty-five Sundays and those for Advent exactly agree with the ancient and modern English, which (as will be seen in the references annexed to every Sunday in the following pages) are quite different in arrangement from the Roman. The Comes also contains Epistles and Gospels for Wednesdays and Fridays in Epiphany, Easter, and Trinity seasons, which were in the Salisbury Missal, but are not in the Roman. It has also five Sundays before Christmas (that is, in Advent), instead of four, a peculiarity of notation which indicates very early origin, and which is reproduced in the "Sunday next before Advent" and four Sundays in Advent, of the English Use. These parallel peculiarities between the Comes and the English arrangement, differing as they do from the Roman, form a strong proof that our Eucharistic system of Scriptures had an origin quite independent of the Roman Liturgy: or, at least, that it belongs to a system which is much older than that now in use in the latter. It may be remarked, in conclusion (and perhaps this is the most important fact in connection with this diversity), that the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels for Trinity Season are all in harmony in the English Missal, while that harmony is entirely dislocated in the Roman.

The principle on which portions of Holy Scripture are selected for the Epistles and Gospels is that of illustrating the two great divisions of the Christian year, from Advent to Trinity, and from Trinity to Advent. In the one, and more emphatic division, our Blessed Lord is set before us in a life-like diorama of Gospels, which tell us about Him and His work, not as in a past history, but with that present force, wherewith the events of His life and suffering are pleaded in the Litany. In nothing is the graphic action of the Church (sometimes very truly called "historic") shewn more strongly than in the way by which the Gospels of the season are made the means of our living over again, year by year, the time of the Incarnation, from Bethlehem to Bethany; while in the long-drawn season of Trinity, we see the Church's continuance by the power of the Pentecostal outpouring in the true faith of the Blessed Trinity, and in the faithful following of her Master and Head through a long probationary career.

The special bearing of each Gospel and Epistle on the day for which it is appointed will be shewn in the Notes that follow. It is sufficient here to say, in conclusion, that the existing arrangement of them appears to be founded on some more ancient system of consecutive reading similar to that in use for our daily Lessons, a system still followed out in the East: that the Epistles have continued to be used in a consecutive order, but that the Gospels have been chosen with the special object of illustrating the season; or, where there is nothing particular to illustrate, of harmonizing with their respective Epistles. Whatever changes were made at the Reformation may be seen by the marginal notes in the middle column. In 1661 the only changes made were in the Gospels for the Holy Week, some of which were shortened by Bishop Cosin; in the insertion of those for a Sixth Sunday after Epiphany; and in printing all Gospels and Epistles from the Authorized Version of 1611, instead of from that of 1540.

§ The Coincidence of Holydays.

The Collects, Epistles, and Gospels give the keynote to the whole of the Services for Holydays; Lessons, Hymns, and Ritual Colours, all following their lead. There are, however, several days in every year in which two sets of these will offer themselves for use, as, for example, when a Saint's Day falls on a Sunday, and it then becomes necessary to have some rule for determining which of the two is to be used, and to what extent the other is to be set aside.

As regards the latter point, it may be observed that in the ancient Church of England it was the usual custom to pass over the inferior festival altogether on the day of the superior one, transferring its observance to the next day, or to the next day which was not a festival. It does not appear as if this custom had been continued in modern times; and if it is not adopted, then the Epistle, Gospel, and Lessons for the inferior Holyday are necessarily dropped for that occasion. But the day should be ritually noticed by the use of its Collect as a "Memorial" after the Collect of the Holyday whose services are used.

In the following Table the principles of the ancient Church of England are so far applied to the Holydays for which Collects, Epistles, and Gospels are provided in the Prayer Book, as to shew which is to be regarded as the superior and which the inferior day when there is such a coincidence or "occurrence" between any two of them:—

1 This collision of one Holyday with another is known by the technical term of an "Occurrence;" but when the vigil of a festival falls upon a day which is a Holyday,—as, for instance, if the vigil of St. Mark were to fall on Easter Day,—the term "Concurrence" is used. An elaborate dissertation on the subject may be found in GAVANTI Thes. Sacr. Rit. ii. 21-60, Morati's ed. Ven. 1762.

ADVENT.

From the first institution of the great Festivals of the Church each of them occupied a central position in a series of days; partly for the greater honour of the Festival itself, and partly for the sake of Christian discipline. Thus Christmas is preceded by the Sundays and Season of Advent, and followed by twelve days of continued Christian joy which end with Epiphany.

Under its present name the season of Advent is not to be traced further back than the seventh century; but Collects, Epistles, and Gospels for five Sundays before the Nativity of our Lord, and for the Wednesdays and Fridays also, are to be found in the ancient Sacramentaries, and in the Comes of St. Jerome. These offer good evidence that the observance of the season was introduced into the Church at the same time with the observance of Christmas: yet there is not, properly speaking, any season of Advent in the Eastern Church, which has always carefully preserved ancient customs intact; though it observes a Lent before Christmas as well as before Easter.

Durandus (a laborious and painstaking writer, always to be respected, though not to be implicitly relied upon) writes that St. Peter instituted three whole weeks to be observed as a special season before Christmas, and so much of the fourth as extended to the Vigil of Christmas, which is not part of Advent. [Durand. vi. 2.] This was probably a very ancient opinion, but the earliest extant historical evidence respecting Advent is that mentioned above, as contained in the Lectionary of St. Jerome. Next come two homilies of Maximus, Bishop of Turin, A.D. 450, which are headed De Adventu Domini. In the following century are two other Sermons of Casarius, Bishop of Arles [501-542] (formerly attributed to St. Augustine, and printed among his works), and in these there are full details respecting the season and its observance. In the latter part of the same century St. Gregory of Tours writes that Perpetuus, one of his predecessors, had ordered the observance of three days as fasts in every week, from the Feast of St. Martin to that of Christmas; and this direction was enforced on the Clergy of France by the Council of Maçon, held A.D. 581. In the Ambrosian and Mozarabic liturgies Advent Season commences at the same time: and it has also been sometimes known by the name Quadragesima Sancti Martini: from which it seems probable that the Western Churches of Europe originally kept six Advent Sundays, as the Eastern still keeps a forty days' fast, beginning on the same day. But the English Church, since the Conquest, at least, has observed four only, although the title of the Sunday preceding the first seems to offer an indication of a fifth in more ancient days.

The rule by which Advent is determined defines the first Sunday as that which comes nearest, whether before or after, to St. Andrew's Day; which is equivalent to saying that it is the first Sunday after November 26th. December 3rd is consequently the latest day on which it can occur.

In the Latin and English Churches the Christian year commences with the First Sunday in Advent. Such, at least, has been the arrangement of the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels for many centuries, although the ancient Sacramentaries began the year with Christmas Day, and although the Prayer Book (until the change of style in 1752) contained an express "Note, that the Supputation of the year of our Lord in the Church of England beginneth the Five and Twentieth day of March." By either reckoning it is intended to number the times and seasons of the Church by the Incarnation: and while the computation from the Annunciation is more correct from a theological and a chronological point of view, that from Advent

WHEN they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent JESUS two disciples, saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto Me. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The LORD hath need of them; and straightway he will send them. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet, saying, Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. And the disciples went, and did as JESUS commanded them; and brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set Him thereon. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way. And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David; Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the LORD; Hosanna in the highest. And when He was come into Jerusalem all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? And the multitude said, This is JESUS the Prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. And JESUS went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple; and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves.

and Christmas fits in far better with the vivid system of the Church by which she represents to us the life of our Lord year by year. Beginning the year with the Annunciation, we should be reminded by the new birth of Nature of the regeneration of Human Nature: beginning it with Advent and Christmas, we have a more keen reminder of that humiliation of God the Son, by which the new birth of the world was accomplished. And as we number our years, not by the age of the world, nor by the time during which any earthly sovereignty has lasted, but by the age of the Christian Church and the time during which the Kingdom of Christ has been established upon earth, calling each “the Year of our Lord,” or “the Year of Grace:” so we begin every year with the season when grace first came by our Lord and King, through His Advent in the humility of His Incarnation.

In very ancient times the season of Advent was observed as one of special prayer and discipline. As already stated, the Council of Maçon in its ninth Canon directs the general observance by the Clergy of the Monday, Wednesday, and Friday fast-days, of which traces are found at an earlier period: and the Capitulars of Charlemagne also speak of a forty days' fast before Christmas. The strict Lenten observance of the season was not, however, general. Amalarius, writing in the ninth century, speaks of it as being kept in that way only by the religious, that is, by those who had adopted an ascetic life in monasteries, or elsewhere: and the principle generally carried out appears to have been that of multiplying solemn services,<sup>1</sup> and of adopting a greater reserve in the use of lawful indulgences. Such an observance of the season still commends itself to us as one that will form a fitting prefix to the joyous time of Christmas; and one that will also be consistent with that contemplation of our Lord's Second Advent which it is impossible to dissociate from thoughts of His First. In the system of the Church the Advent Season is to the Christmas Season what St. John the Baptist was to the First, and the Christian Ministry is to the Second, Coming of our Lord.

§ The First Sunday in Advent.

The four Sundays in Advent set forth, by the Holy Scriptures appointed for them, the Majesty of our Lord's Person and Kingdom. Christmas is to represent before us the lowliness to which the Eternal God condescended to stoop in becoming Man; and we begin on that day the detailed observance of each great Act in the mystery of the Incarnation. Before coming to Bethlehem and seeing the Holy Child in the manger, we are bidden to look on the glory which belongs to Him; and, ere we look upon the Babe of the humble Virgin, to prepare our hearts and minds for the sight by dwelling on the keynote which sounds in our ears through Advent, “Behold, thy King cometh:” a meek and lowly Babe, but yet Divine.

In this spirit the old Introit for the First Sunday was chosen, “Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes: O my God, I have put my trust in Thee . . .” though not without reference also to the humble dependence upon His Father with which the Son of God took human nature, and all its woes, upon Him. Lifting up our eyes to the Holy Child, we behold Him from afar, and “knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep,” we hear the cry, “Behold, the Bridegroom cometh,” to His Church in a first Advent of Humiliation and Grace, and a second Advent of Glory and Judgement. For each Advent the Church has one song of welcome, “Hosanna to the Son of David; blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest. Even so come, Lord Jesus.”

The Christian year opens, then, on this Sunday with a direct re-presentation of our Lord Jesus Christ to us in His Human Nature, coming to visit us in great humility in “this mortal life,” as well as in His Divine Nature, to be the Object of our Adoration. We cannot do otherwise than love the Babe of Bethlehem, the Child of the Temple, the Son of the Virgin, the Companion of the Apostles, the Healer of the Sick, the Friend of Bethany, the Man of Sorrows, the Dying Crucified One; but we must adore as well as love; and recognize in all these the triumphant King of Glory Who reigns over the earthly Sion, and over the heavenly Jerusalem. No contemplation of the Humility of the Son of Man must divert our eyes from the contemplation of His Infinite Majesty of Whom the Father saith when He bringeth in the First-Begotten into the world, “Let all the angels of God worship Him.”

INTROIT.—Unto Thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soul; my

THE COLLECT.

BLESSED LORD, Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; Grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, that by patience, and comfort of Thy holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life, which Thou hast given us in our Saviour JESUS CHRIST. Amen.

THE EPISTLE. Rom. xv. 4-18.

WHATSOEVER things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience, and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope. Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like minded one towards another, according to CHRIST JESUS: that ye may with one mind, and one mouth, glorify GOD, even the FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. Wherefore receive ye one another, as CHRIST also received us, to the glory of GOD. Now I say, that JESUS CHRIST was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of GOD, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

And that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to Thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto Thy Name. And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with His people. And again, Praise the LORD, all ye Gentiles, and laud Him, all ye people. And again, Esaias saith, There shall be a root of Jesse, and He that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, in Him shall the Gentiles trust. Now the GOD of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the HOLY GHOST.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke xxi. 25-33.

AND there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And He spake to them a parable, Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled: heaven and earth shall pass away; but My words shall not pass away.

God, I have put my trust in Thee: O let me not be confounded, neither let mine enemies triumph over me. Ps. Shew me Thy ways, O Lord, and teach me Thy paths. Glory be, [The Introits here given throughout are translated from those of the Salisbury Missal, the name "Office" being used instead of "Introit" in all Anglican Missals. The mode in which it was sung was to sing first the Office, e.g. "Unto Thee . . . over me," then the Psalm, e.g. "Shew me . . . Thy paths," then the Gloria, and then the Office again. In Churches where there were Rulers of the Choir, and the Service was of a more elaborate character, the Office was repeated three times, instead of twice, on Sundays and Festivals.]

§ The Second Sunday in Advent.

The note sounded by the Gospel of this Second Sunday is, "The Kingdom of God is nigh at hand." As the Kingdom of Grace it is in the midst of us, so that the signs of its summer beauty and strength are visible to every eye that will look for them: as the Kingdom of the Second Coming, it is nigh at hand to all, for all must soon pass out of the one into the other. And what though the latter be terrible to contemplate, "men's hearts failing them for fear"? One has arisen to reign even over the Gentiles, and in Him shall the Gentiles trust. The patience and comfort of God's Holy Word, the Personal and the written Word, give the Church sure faith to look up and lift up its head, knowing that its redemption draweth nigh. "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth." [Rev. iii. 10.]

The continuity of the Church under the Old and New Dispensation is strongly shewn in both the Epistle and the Gospel for this Sunday. In the first, the Monarchy of Christ over each Dispensation is set forth: in the second, the Parable of our Lord points to the Summer, which was to begin at His passing away. "Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig-tree putteth forth her green figs. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." [Cant. ii. 11-13.] It looks, also, beyond to that time when the Tree of Life will give its fulness of fruit, and the Kingdom of God be known in that phase of its continuous existence in which His servants shall serve Him, and shall see His face Who has been their Redemption.

INTROIT.—Behold, O people of Sion, the Lord will come to save the nations: and the Lord shall cause His glorious voice to be heard, and gladness shall be in your hearts. Ps. Hear, O Thou Shepherd of Israel, Thou that ledest Joseph like a sheep. Glory be.

LET a man so account of us, as of the ministers of CHRIST, and stewards of the mysteries of GOD. Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful. yet am I not hereby justified; but He that judgeth me is the LORD. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the LORD come, Who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of GOD.

NOW when John had heard in the prison the works of CHRIST, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto Him, Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another? JESUS answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them: And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in Me. And as they departed, JESUS began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? a reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses. But what went ye out for to see? a prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee.

by the Scriptures of to-day as a continuation of the truth enunciated on the Second Sunday, that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Whether or not the faith of John the Baptist in the Lamb of God was imperfect, there were reasons why the faith of others should be made more perfect by means of the message which he sent to Jesus, "Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?" There was no outward show to signify the Infinite Glory that was dwelling in the lowly-born and lowly-living Man Who was in the midst of them. If indeed this was He that was to come, where was the fulfilment of all the well-known prophecies about the Majesty of the Messiah? For evidence, Christ did not transfigure His human Person before the multitude, and exhibit to them an unbearable glory, that would be as convincing as the burning bush, or the fire of Sinai: but "in the same hour He cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind He gave sight" [St. Luke vii. 21]: and when He had done this His answer to the messengers was, "Go and shew John again these things which ye do hear and see." It was thus the King's Presence was to be manifested among that generation. "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense: He will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped; then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert." [Isa. xxxv. 4-6.] It is also in His work of healing that the same Saviour manifests His continued Presence with His Church. As He sent forth His agents then to carry on His work, in the person of Apostles, so does He send forth the ministers and stewards of His mysteries now. The one and the other both act by His authority, are endowed with His power, and do His work. As His ministers they have in past generations opened the eyes of the spiritually blind, healed spiritual infirmities by the ministration of their Master's grace, and made life-giving streams of Sacramental power to spring up in the wildernesses and deserts of the world. As, therefore, the Divine power gave evidence of the Divine Presence to those who were sent to ask, "Art Thou He that should come?" so the Divine power still gives evidence that the promise is fulfilled, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." The hearts of the disobedient are turned to the wisdom of the just, the children of men are made the children of God, souls are absolved by the Word of our God and Saviour pronounced at His bidding and by His agents, lively stones are being continually built up into the Temple of the Holy Ghost, which is the Mystical Body of Christ; and in all these ways the perpetual Presence of "Him that should come" is manifested, with as convincing an evidence as if our eyes beheld Him reigning on a visible Throne of Glory.

This view of these Scriptures shews their connection with the Advent Ordination: and it was this view, doubtless, which led Bishop Cosin to compose the Collect that we now use in the place of a short one which stood here until 1661, in these words: "Lord, we beseech Thee give ear to our prayers, and by Thy gracious visitation lighten the darkness of our hearts, by our Lord Jesus Christ." This ancient Collect is erased in the Durham Book, and our present one written against it in the margin.<sup>1</sup>

The Advent Ember Days are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after St. Lucy's Day, which is December 13th. They always occur, therefore, in the third week of Advent, and their relative position in regard to Advent Sunday is shewn by the following Table:—

Advent Sunday.	Ember Wednesday.
November 27.	December 14.
" 28.	" 15.
" 29.	" 16.
" 30.	" 17.
December 1.	" 18.
" 2.	" 19.
" 3.	" 20.

As December 17th must thus always come in Ember Week, the Ember Collect should always be used from the Saturday Evensong preceding the 17th, according to the rule shewn at page 237, on whatever day of the week the 17th may happen to fall.

INTROIT.—Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice. Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing: but in every thing

And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that Prophet? And he answered, No. Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the LORD, as said the prophet Esaias. And they which were sent were of the Pharisees. And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that Prophet? John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth One among you, Whom ye know not: He it is Who coming after me is preferred before me, Whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose. These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

by prayer and supplication, let your requests be made known unto God. Ps. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds. Glory be.

§ The Fourth Sunday in Advent.

On this Sunday, the close approach of the King of Glory to His kingdom of grace is heralded by Scriptures of which the pointed words are, "The Lord is at hand," "Make straight the way of the Lord." The Collect has lost its Gregorian pointedness by a return to its Gelasian form, which makes the whole a prayer for the Presence of God the Father, instead of what it was in the Pre-Reformation books, one for the Coming among us of the Incarnate Son. The alteration was probably made under a strong impression of the truth that all prayer should be addressed to the Father through the Son; and also with reference to the words spoken by our Lord immediately after He had given the command respecting prayer, and had promised a return of His own Presence, "If a man love Me, he will keep My words, and My Father will love him, and We will come unto Him, and make Our abode with him." [S. John xiv. 23.] In Collect and Scriptures the Church sounds her last herald-notes of the season which precedes Christmas; and we seem to hear the cry of the procession as it draws nearer and nearer, "The Bridegroom cometh; go ye forth to meet Him." It is a cry that should bring peace and joy to her children. "Rejoice in the Lord always," for "One standeth among you," even now, Who brings down from on high "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

A very striking accidental coincidence with this joyous tone of the Fourth Sunday in Advent occurs in the First Lesson for Christmas Eve, "Arise, shine, for thy Light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee." The words sound like an answer from heaven to the prayers of Advent, that the Light would vouchsafe to come, and illuminate the Church with His Presence. Other words which follow are equally striking, and offer themselves as a benediction of the Christmas decorations which have just been completed: "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of My sanctuary; and I will make the place of My feet glorious."

INTEOIT.—Remember me, O Lord, according to the favour that Thou bearest unto Thy people: O visit me with Thy salvation: that I may see the felicity of Thy chosen; and rejoice in the gladness of Thy people, and give thanks with Thine inheritance. Ps. We have sinned with our fathers: we have done amiss, and dealt wickedly. Glory be.

[The following Antiphons to the Magnificat were formerly sung during the third and fourth weeks of Advent. In later times two others were added, one for the Festival of St. Thomas, and another in which the name of the Blessed Virgin was used as we are not now accustomed to use it. But the original set of Antiphons appears to have consisted of these seven, the first being sung on December 16th, which is still marked "O Sapientia" in the Calendar, and none being used on the Festival of St. Thomas, or on Christmas Eve, the latter not being part of the Advent season. The dates on which they would thus fall are affixed to each Antiphon. References are also appended to the passages of Holy Scripture that contain or illustrate the respective titles of our Lord on which each Antiphon is founded, as these Antiphons are excellent examples of the manner in which Scriptural ideas and words may be used in direct acts of Adoration.]

And again, I will be to Him a Father, and He shall be to Me a Son? And again, when He bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, He saith, And let all the angels of God worship Him. And of the angels He saith, Who maketh His angels spirits, and His ministers a flame of fire. But unto The SON He saith, Thy throne, O God, Dens, qui hanc sacratissimam noctem veri luminis fecisti illustratione clarescere: da, quaesumus, ut cujus lucis mysteria in terra cognovimus, ejus quoque gaudiis in caelo perfruamur. Qui tecum. [Greg. In Vig. Dom. in Nocte. Gelas.]

O God, Whomadest this most holy night to shine with the brightness of the true Light: Grant, we beseech Thee, that as we have known the mysteries of that Light on earth, we may have the fruition of His joys in heaven. Who liveth.

It is most fit that the season so marked out by Angels by songs of joy, such as had not been heard on earth since the Creation, should also be observed as a time of festive gladness by the Church, and in the social life of Christians. Christ Himself instituted this festival when He sanctified the day by then first revealing His Innate Nature to the eyes of mankind. The holy Angels witnessed to its separation for ever as a day of days, when they proclaimed the Glory that was then offered to God in the Highest by the restoration of perfect Manhood in the Virgin-born Jesus; and the peace that was brought among men on earth through the reunion of their nature to God. The whole world has since recognized it as the single point of history in which every age, every country, every living man has an interest. It is to the Nativity of our Lord that all the pages of the Bible point as the centre on which everything there recorded turns. Kings have lived and died; empires have arisen and crumbled away; great cities have been built and destroyed; countries peopled and again laid desert: and all this is to us almost as if it had never been. Great as past events of history were to the generations in which they occurred, to us they are of less practical importance than the everyday circumstances of our common life. But the event which gives us the festival of Christmas was one whose interest is universal and unfading: one with which we are as much concerned as were the shepherds of Bethlehem: and which will be of no less importance to the last generation of men than it is to us. For it was in the Birth of Christ that Earth was reunited to Heaven, and both made one Kingdom of God above and below, as they were at the first Creation. In it, separation of man from God was done away, for One appeared Who in His own single Person was God, belonging to Heaven, and Man, belonging to earth. It was not only the beginning of a new era, but it was the Centre of all human history, the point of time to which the ages that were gone had looked forward, and to which the ages that were to come after must all look back; the one day of days which gathered all other times into itself, and stretching its influence through every hour of human existence from the Fall to the Judgement, makes for itself a history by connection with which only can other histories have an eternal interest. And so, even beyond the immediate influence of the Church, it is found that the Christmas gladness of the Church is reflected in the world around: and a common instinct of regenerated human nature teaches that world to recognize in Christmas a season of unity and fellowship and goodwill, of happiness and peace.

INTROIT.—Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful. Ps. Sing unto the Lord a new song, for He hath done marvellous things. Glory be.

THE THREE DAYS AFTER CHRISTMAS.

The position of the three days after Christmas Day is a very remarkable one. Easter and Pentecost each have two festive days following their principal day, the Sunday: and in this respect Christmas, with its three festive days, is placed on a similar though a more honoured footing. But at Easter and Pentecost the days are connected by name with the festival itself, whereas, at Christmas, they are associated with the names of Saints, in addition to that continued commemoration of the Nativity which belongs to them as to the other days of the Octave.

Some explanation of this may be found in the vivid convictions of the early Church respecting the close union between Christ and His people, especially His martyrs, through the virtue of the Incarnation. Eusebius [viii. 10] speaks of the martyrs of Alexandria as Χριστοφόροι, a name otherwise familiar to us in the story of St. Christopher, and in the appellation of Theophorus which was given by himself or others to Ignatius: and St. Augustine, in one of his Sermons on St. Stephen's Day, seems to adopt a strain of thought in accordance with these names, when he says, "As Christ by being born was brought into union with Stephen, so Stephen by dying was brought into union with Christ." There was, moreover, in the early Church (itself so familiar with a life of suffering) a profound sense of the continuous martyrdom

[STEPHEN,] being full of the HOLY GHOST, looked up stedfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and JESUS standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, and cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, LORD JESUS, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, LORD, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.

which was involved in the earthly life of our Lord, both from the intensity of the humiliation which He underwent in becoming Man [non horruisti virginis uterum. Te Deum], and also from the sorrows which were inherent in His human nature as the bearer of all human woes. Hence they could not lose sight, in those days, of the fact that the Holy Child of Bethlehem was also the Man of Sorrows: and it is very probable that this view of our Lord's Incarnation led to the commemoration of the first Martyr who suffered on the day succeeding that on which his Master had entered on a life of suffering, rather than on the anniversary of his martyrdom. In connection with this view it is very observable, that at the first taste of martyrdom, even before the suffering of St. Stephen, the Church pleaded the Divine Sonship and human Infancy of our Lord: and although few of the Apostles are likely to have known their Lord in His childhood (while His mature years and His final work were familiar to all, and His Ascent out of their sight as Man vividly fresh in their memory), yet they speak of Him to the Father in their hour of trouble as "Thy holy Child Jesus," and seem thus to fall back, so to speak, on the first days of the Incarnation more than a third of a century before, rather than on their recent knowledge of Him through Whom they prayed for strength to do and bear all that was set before them. It may well have been that St. Stephen was among them when the words of that prayer were used.

Another explanation is to be found in the Rationale of Durandus [vii. 42]. The substance of this is, that Christ being the Head to which all the members are joined, three kinds of members are joined to Him by martyrdom: as mystically signified in the Song of Songs [v. 10] by the words, "My Beloved is white and ruddy, and the chiefest among ten thousand." The first and chief order of martyrs he thus considers to be those who, being baptized in blood, suffered both in will and deed: the second, those who gave their will up entirely to suffer, but yet escaped with life, and so accomplished a white martyrdom: the third, those who suffered but had no wills of their own to sacrifice to God, as was the case with the Holy Innocents.

One other view may be named; which is, that as the second half of the Christian year represents the Christian life founded on the life of Christ, so the three days after Christmas represent the three ways of suffering, love, and purity, by which the Incarnation bears fruit in the saints of God. St. Stephen was the nearest to the King of Saints in His life of suffering, St. John in His life of love, the Holy Innocents in His life of purity. The first trod immediately in his Master's footsteps of a martyr death in its most perfect form: the second, lying on Jesus' bosom in close communion with Him to the end of His earthly life, followed Him closely ever after in His heavenly example; the third were the firstfruits of that holy train whose innocence and purity admits them nearest to the Person of their glorified Redeemer, so that "they follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth."

§ St. Stephen.

Nothing is known of St. Stephen before his martyrdom beyond the solitary fact that he was one of the seven deacons ordained by the Apostles when they began to divide off the lower portions of their ministerial functions, duties, and cares. His eloquence, ready knowledge, heroic courage, are strikingly exhibited in the account given of his last hours in the seventh chapter of the Acts. It may be that he is only a fair and average example of those wonderfully endowed men who carried on Christ's work in the Apostolic age; and that the peculiarity of his martyrdom as being the first, and as occurring while the Church was still confined almost within the walls of Jerusalem, has given it the prominence of a Scriptural narrative. There were, doubtless, many others in that holy band of Apostolic men, of whom it might have been recorded that, "full of faith and power, they did great wonders and miracles among the people;" and many who suffered as boldly and as meekly as St. Stephen. Yet it is around the head of the Proto-martyr alone that Holy Scripture places the nimbus of glory; and however truly it may be the due of others also, it is of St. Stephen only that the words are written, "And all that sat in the council, looking stedfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." Hence St. Chrysostom calls him the Στέφανος or crown of the Church, in respect to her martyrdoms.

The dying words of St. Stephen are also of a most saint-like character, whether that character was common to the saintly martyrs or not. The last words of his Master's Passion, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," have a parallel in the servant's, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" and the commendatory prayer, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," is the saint's version of the Son's cry, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit."

Such circumstances as these seem as if they were providentially ordered, in part, as a monition to the Church of the honour in which the martyrs of Christ were ever after to be held; to shew her that Christ was to be glorified in His saints, through whom the lustre of His own Light was shed around as planets disperse the light of the sun when it is beyond our horizon. Nor must it be forgotten that the narrative of St. Stephen's martyrdom is given us in that book which is princi-pully made up of the Acts of St. Paul, the account of the missionary life and sufferings—and how small a part!—of that “young man whose name was Saul,” at whose feet the official “witnesses” of the cruel and sudden death “laid down their clothes.” Were all these official μαρτυρες won over to be martyrs in life and death as that young man was? Whether or not such fruit was borne by the first martyr's blood, it is certain that all the members of the then existing Church must have had his death keenly engraved on their memory; and that, as Christ ordained Christmas Day by the very fact of His Nativity, so His holy Martyr must have been privileged to originate the observance of Saints' Days by the very circumstances of that Martyrdom whereof the Church, and the Apostle of the Gentiles above all, must have said year by year, This was the day on which Stephen fell asleep.

The Collect for St. Stephen's Day, as it now stands, is first found, in Bishop Cosin's handwriting, in the margin of the Durham Prayer Book. Until 1661 it was used in this much shorter and less beautiful form: “Grant us, O Lord, to learn to love our enemies, by the example of Thy martyr, Saint Stephen, who prayed for his persecutors to Thee: Which livest.” It is observable that in both forms of this Collect it follows the example given by St. Stephen, of prayer to the second Person of the Blessed Trinity. The following passage from the Contestatio Missæ of the Gallican Mass for St. Stephen's Day, printed by Cardinal Bona [Rev. Liturg. i. 12], is very like the newer portion of our Collect: “Illi pro nobis oculi sublimentur, qui adhuc in hoc mortis corpore constituti stantem ad dexteram Patris Filium Dei, in ipsa passionis hora viderunt. Ille pro nobis obtineat, qui pro persecutoribus suis, dum lapidaretur, orabat ad Te Sancte Deus, Pater omnipotens.” This was not printed by Bona until 1676, but it is an interesting illustration of the unity which pervades the tone of ancient and sound modern forms of prayer: but the Prayer Book form is addressed to our Lord Jesus, while the Gallican and Mozarabic are both addressed to the Father.

§ St. John the Evangelist.

The beloved disciple of the Holy Child Jesus is known to the affection of the Church as the Apostle of Love, to her intellect as the Θεολόγος, or Divine. There is little recorded of him in Holy Scripture, but a large part of the New Testament was revealed by God to His servant John; and none of the Apostles, so far as we know, except St. Paul, exercised so extensive an influence over the subsequent ages of the Church. It is not known how soon a festival was instituted in honour of this Apostle, but it is placed in the ancient Sacramentaries and Lectionary, and is therefore of primitive origin.

St. John the Evangelist was one of the sons of Zebedee and Salome, a fisherman like his father, and early called by our Blessed Lord to be a fisher of men. With three other of the Apostles he appears to have stood in a near relationship to the Blessed Virgin, which may be best represented by the following Table:—

The intimate relationship between the Blessed Virgin Mary and her cousin Elisabeth seems to make it probable that the son of her sister Salome would become an early disciple of St. John the Baptist; and as his follower he was in company with St. Andrew when the Baptist bore official witness to the Mission of our Lord as “the Lamb of God Which taketh away the sin of the world.” The Evangelist, therefore, was one of the first pair of disciples who were called from following the Law to follow the Gospel: sharing indeed with St. Andrew in the honour of the title Πρωτόκλητος. It would appear to have been some little time afterward that St. John was required to give up his ordinary occupation that he might be trained to the office of a fisher of men, and become a constant attendant on our Lord: still longer before that training had been so far carried on as to qualify him in outward knowledge for receiving the commission and power of an Apostle. In the appointment of the Apostles, St. John was one of the three whom our Lord distinguished by new names: he and his brother St. James being then called Boanerges, a title which ancient writers connect with the great eloquence of these two Apostles, as Demosthenes and Plato were called “tonantes” by old Roman writers. This does not seem quite to explain the title: yet in the case of St. John it is easy to see that it might have such a prophetic application to him as the last writer of the New Testament, who was to proclaim resounding theological truths to the world as from a Gospel Sinai after historical narratives had done their work in preparing the minds of men for their reception.

The next time St. John's name occurs in the Gospels is as one of the three “elect of the elect” who were chosen by our Lord to witness the manifestation of His Divine power in the

If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of JESUS CHRIST His SON cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a liar, and His WORD is not in us.

not die: yet JESUS said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things, and we know that his testimony is true. And there are also many other things which JESUS did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose, that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

chamber of Jairus's daughter, and of His Divine glory on the Mount of Transfiguration. The same three were also present at the Agony. They seem to have been chosen, not for any purpose of sympathy needed by Christ, but as a part of their own training. All three were afterwards distinguished by special services for their Master, and these visions of His Power, His Glory, and His Suffering were preparing them for their work. Of the two sons of Zebedee, St. James was the first martyred Apostle, St. John the latest living Apostle. The first miracle of the Church was wrought by St. Peter and St. John; they, too, were the first sufferers after the Ascension; they were the first Apostles who went beyond Judæa; and they were the "pillars" of the Church in its early days. If we reckon up the extent of their work in the education of the Church, it will be found that far the greatest proportion of the New Testament has come from the pens of St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. John; the second great Apostle appearing to have filled up the vacancy caused by the martyrdom of St. James. And as St. Peter exercised a vast external influence over the Church of the Future, while St. Paul was its great moral teacher, so St. John the Theologian was the Apostle by whom the world was to learn, more than by any other, those truths which lie at the very root of orthodox and true conceptions respecting the Blessed Trinity, our Redeemer, and the work of the Incarnation in making God and man at one. The Church of England traced up its usages in primitive days to the teaching of St. John, and there is good reason to think that the influence of this Apostle has moulded her Liturgy and her spirit very extensively; preparing her, perhaps, for the great struggle against unbelief in which she seems destined to bear a prominent part.

The Blessed Virgin having been committed to the care of St. John the Evangelist at the Cross, his office towards her appears to have terminated about the year 48, but between that time and the later part of the century his history is in obscurity. Possibly it was part of the fulfilment of the Lord's words, "If I will that he tarry till I come," that St. John should really see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, and that he did not leave for Ephesus until so late as the year 66, when the siege began; which was only two years before the martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul. It was about this time, certainly, that the Evangelist and Theologian began to be the sole remaining Apostolic centre of the Church, as he continued to be for about a third of a century. This isolation of St. John sets him in a position of patriarchal prominence, greater even than that of St. Paul had been: and he was doubtless directed to Ephesus, the Metropolis of Asia, the great centre of nature-worship, and the commercial port of the one great sea of the then known world, as the place where his influence would extend farthest and widest during those eventful years in which the Church was breaking free from Judaism, and settling into definite forms of doctrine and worship.

The latter part of St. John's life is said to have been marked by two acts which fulfilled our Lord's words, that he should tarry until His Coming. A poisoned cup of wine (symbolized in art by a serpent or dragon issuing from it) was given to him at Ephesus, but the Apostle made over it the sign of the Cross, and partook of it without harm; according to the promise, that if the Apostles drank of any deadly thing it should not hurt them. He was also summoned to Rome, and there cast into a caldron of boiling oil [see notes on Calendar, May 6th], but escaped unharmed. Banished to Patmos, the visions of the Apocalypse were revealed to him; and when his work was done there, his Master's Providence led him back to Ephesus, to contend against the rising heresies of the day, to speak loving words about the love of God, and to breathe out his spirit in peace at the age of an hundred, in the midst of his "little children"—those whom he had begotten in Christ.

Lying on the bosom of his Master, not only in those few minutes in the upper chamber of the Institution of the Holy Eucharist, but ever after by contact of his spiritual senses with the Word of God, this holy Apostle learned things from the Divine lips and heart which had been kept secret from the foundation of the world; which the angels desired to look into, but could not until they were revealed to mankind. As St. John the Baptist, the last Prophet of the Old Dispensation, was the Forerunner of Christ, so it may be said that St. John the Evangelist, the Prophet of the New Dispensation, occupies a similar position as the Herald of the Second Advent; and for this reason, as well as others that have been stated, his Festival is connected so closely with Christmas. When He that enlighteneth every man came into the world, He cast some of the bright beams of His Light upon St. John, that by him the illumination of the world might be more perfect, and that the Sun of Righteousness Which had arisen with healing in His beams might shine more gloriously over the understandings and the love of His Church.

INTROIT.—In the midst of the Church did he open his mouth; and the Lord filled him with the spirit of wisdom and understanding. He endued him with a robe of glory. Ps. He poured out upon him His treasures of joy and gladness. Glory be.

When he arose, he took the young Child and His mother by night, and departed into Egypt, and was there until the death of Herod ; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the LORD by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called My SON. Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth ; and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

§ The Holy Innocents.

The festival of the Innocents is alluded to by St. Irenæus [Adv. Hæres. iii. 16], who was himself a martyr, A. D. 202 ; and by St. Cyprian, who went to his Saviour by the same path, A. D. 258. In an Epistle [lviii.] which the latter wrote to a community of Christians in anticipation of a fearful persecution which he foresaw, he says, "The Nativity of Christ commenced forthwith with the martyrdom of infants, so that they who were two years old and under, were put to death for His Name's sake. An age not yet capable of conflict, proved fit for a crown. That it might appear that they are innocent who are put to death for the sake of Christ, innocent infancy was slain for His Name's sake. It was shewn that no one is free from the perils of persecution, when even such accomplished martyrdom."

These words of the third century plainly shew how early the memorial day of the Holy Innocents was associated with Christmas : and allusions of the same kind are to be found in the Sermons of Origen, St. Augustine, and others.

The Gospel of this day gives the actual narrative of the slaughter of the children of Bethlehem by Herod, an event spoken of in Roman history as well as in the Holy Bible. The Epistle sets forth the heavenly sequel of that event as told in the mystical language of the Apocalypse. In the joining together of these two portions of Holy Scripture we have an exact representation of the light in which the martyrdom of the Innocents has always been regarded by the Church ; and the tender feeling with which these first witnesses for the Holy Child Jesus were kept in memory, is illustrated by the well-known hymn of Prudentius, written in the fourth century, and familiar in the English version, "All hail ! ye Infant Martyr flowers."

"Not in speaking but in dying," says the ancient Collect,<sup>1</sup> "have they confessed Christ." "Stephen," says St. Bernard, "was a martyr among men ; John may be considered so in the sight of Angels, to whom by spiritual signs his devotion was known : but these are martyrs with God ; for neither to men nor angels is their merit known, but commended to God alone in the prerogative of His singular grace." "Before the use of the tongue," writes St. Leo, "in silence He put forth the power of the Word, as if He were saying already, 'Suffer little children to come unto Me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.' With a new glory He crowned infants, and in His own beginnings consecrated the firstfruits of little children ; that hence we might learn that no one among mankind is incapable of a Divine Sacrament, since even that age was fit for the glory of martyrdom . . . Christ loves infancy, which He took on Himself both in mind and body : He loves infancy as the mistress of humility, the type of innocence, the form of meekness. To infancy He directs the manners of elders, and brings back the old. It is to this, the similitude of little children, that you, most beloved, are invited by the mystery of this day's festival."

In connection with these Holy Innocents, it is impossible not to remember the words at the end of the Service for the Baptism of Infants, "It is certain by God's Word, that children which are baptized, dying before they commit actual sin, are undoubtedly saved." The writer once met with a strong illustration of the comfort wrought by faith in this truth, when looking over a country churchyard. A mother had laid underneath two Christian babes, and she had written on the stone over them, "They are without fault before the throne of God." Doubtless, many such have been added to

But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the HOLY GHOST: And she shall bring

THE SUNDAY AFTER CHRISTMAS.

The Lord's Day within the Octave of Christmas carries on, of necessity, the idea of the preceding festival, forming a kind of "Low Sunday" to Christmas Day itself. There is no change of Collect, but the Epistle and Gospel strike a new chord in the harmony of the Eucharistic Scriptures. On Christmas Day they memorialized the condescension of the Word of God in becoming Son of Man: on this day they set forth the exaltation of human Nature by that condescension. On the one day, the Son of God is shewn to us becoming the Son of Man: on the other, the sons of men are shewn to us becoming the sons of God, through the Adoption won for them by the Holy Child Jesus. We are "heirs of God through Christ," because of the fulfilment of the promise conveyed by His Name, "He shall save His people from their sins."

The genealogies were struck out of the Gospel of the Day by Bishop Cosin in 1661: and he proposed to insert a note at the end of the Gospel. "This Collect, Epistle, and Gospel are to be used only till the Circumcision."

INTROIT.—For while all things were in quiet silence, and that night was in the midst of her swift course, Thine Almighty Word leaped down from Heaven out of Thy royal throne. Ps. The Lord is King, and hath put on glorious apparel: the Lord hath put on His apparel, and girded Himself with strength. Glory be.

THE CIRCUMCISION.

This day has been observed from the earliest ages of the Church as the Octave of the Nativity, and from about the sixth century as both the Octave of the Nativity and the Feast of the Circumcision. From its coincidence with the Kalends of January, on which the riotous and immoral festival of the Saturnalia was kept by the Romans, it offered a great difficulty to the Church for some centuries, and there were places and periods in which the Saturnalia were so mixed up with the Christian feast that the observance of the latter was altogether forbidden.

Of the Circumcision there is no notice whatever in the Comes of St. Jerome, the day being called Octava Domini, the Epistle being Gal. iii. 23, and the Gospel the same as ours.

For we say, that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that

For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect.

And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this Child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them. And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the Child, His name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before He was conceived in the womb.

In St. Gregory's Sacramentary the name of the day is still the Octave of the Lord, and the Circumcision is not noticed in the Collect; but in the proper Preface are the words, "per Christum Dominum nostrum: ejus hodie Circumcisionis diem, et Nativitatis octavum celebrantes;" and the words of the Benediction, as printed above, are equally explicit. In the Salisbury Missal the day is named as it now is in the Prayer Book, but except in the Gospel there is not the slightest allusion to the festival as being connected with the Circumcision. In modern times the tendency has been to observe the day as New Year's Day, overlooking, as far as possible, its connection with the Nativity, as well as with the Circumcision.

The true idea of the day seems to be that it belongs to Christmas as its Octave; but that as the three days after Christmas are specially honoured by the Commemoration of Saints, so the Octave is supplemented with the Commemoration of our Lord's Circumcision, to do still greater honour to the day of His Nativity. The two are pleaded conjointly in the Litany, "By Thy holy Nativity and Circumcision."

The Rubric at the end of the Gospel was inserted by Bishop Cosin. It varies in a very important particular from the previous Rubric of 1552.

If there be a Sunday between the Epiphany and the Circumcision: then shall be used the same Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, at the Communion, which was used upon the day of Circumcision.

The same Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, shall serve for every day after unto the Epiphany.

In the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 the Rubric stood as in that of 1552, with the addition, "So likewise, upon every other day from the time of the Circumcision to the Epiphany." Either daily celebration of the Holy Communion was not contemplated in 1552, or the omission of any mention of it in this Rubric was an oversight. In 1637 and 1662 it was clearly provided for.

January 1st was never in any way connected with the opening of the Christian year; and the religious observance of this day has never received any sanction from the Church, except as the Octave of Christmas and the Feast of the Circumcision. The spiritual "point" of the season all gathers about Christmas: and as the modern New Year's Day is merely conventionally so (New Year's Day being on March 25th until the middle of the eighteenth century), there is no reason why it should be allowed at all to dim the lustre of a day so important to all persons and all ages as Christmas Day. We ought also to guard against a Judaical tendency even in the observance of the Festival itself.

INTROIT.—Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful. Ps. Sing unto the Lord a new song, for He hath done marvellous things. Glory be.

THE EPIPHANY.

In its earliest origin the Epiphany was observed as a phase of Christmas in the same way as the Circumcision is now to be so regarded: and the intimate association of the two is still marked by the custom of the Armenian Christians, who Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of CHRIST; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in GOD, Who created all things by JESUS CHRIST: to the intent, that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of GOD, according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in CHRIST JESUS our LORD: In Whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of Him.

always keep their Christmas on the 6th of January instead of the 25th of December. The idea on which the whole cycle of the Festivals of our Lord is founded is that of memorializing before God the successive leading points of our Lord's life and acts: and the order in which the Holydays have been observed is also that in which these leading points are pleaded in two clauses of the Litany: "By the mystery of Thy holy Incarnation; by Thy holy Nativity and Circumcision; by Thy Baptism, Fasting, and Temptation. By Thine Agony and bloody Sweat; by Thy Cross and Passion; by Thy precious Death and Burial; by Thy glorious Resurrection and Ascension; and by the coming of the Holy Ghost, Good Lord, deliver us." Hence the Epiphany was originally regarded as that part of the Christmas Festival on which was commemorated the Baptism of the Lord Jesus by St. John the Baptist. It seems to have acquired a more independent position, and to have begun to be observed in memory of our Lord's Manifestation to the Gentile Magi, about the fourth century, and in the Western Church: but probably this was never more than a development of the original idea; and although it may have become the most prominent feature of the Festival at particular periods, it never superseded the original one altogether. The primitive name of the day was Theophany, and this is still retained in the Oriental Church. Both Theophania and Epiphania are used in the Comes of St. Jerome, and as late as the Sacramentary of St. Gregory: but the former name seems to have dropped out of use about the same time that the festival began to be connected with the Adoration of the Magi. Even St. Jerome himself calls it "Epiphaniarum dies" in his Commentary on Ezekiel, and speaks of it as "venerabilis." Durandus says that "in cedicibus antiquis hæc dies Epiphaniarum pluraliter intitulatur, et ideo tripliciter nominatur, scilicet Epiphania, Theophania, et Bethphania:" the third name being associated with our Lord's Manifestation in the house at the Marriage in Cana. The latter name appears to have been little used, but the idea it represents is illustrated by the Gospel for the Second Sunday after Epiphany, and by the Second Lesson at Evensong on the Festival itself. In the Eastern Church the Theophany is also called The Lights, "from the array," Dr. Neale says, "of torches and tapers with which the Benediction of the Waters is performed on this day, as they symbolize that spiritual illumination to which our Lord, by His Baptism in Jordan, consecrated water." If this name of the Festival is ancient (and it seems to be as old as Gregory Nazianzen's time), one might expect to find that it originated in the illumination of the world by that "true Light, Which, coming into the world, enlighteneth every man," and to Which the Magi were led by the light of the Star.

There is a beautiful and very instructive unity about the Scriptures used on the Epiphany. The first morning Lesson is the 60th chapter of Isaiah, the same which accidentally occurs on Christmas Eve: "Arise, shine; for thy Light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. . . . The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting Light, and thy God thy glory. . . . The Lord shall be thine everlasting Light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." The same chapter also contains the prophecy which began to be fulfilled by the adoration of the Magi as told in the Gospel of the Day, "And the Gentiles shall come to thy Light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising:" and the Epistle reads like an expansion of this verse, shewing how the Light of Christ is manifested to the world at large, in and by the Church. The first Lesson is the ancient Epistle of the Church, as is shewn by St. Jerome's Lectionary, but the Gospel was the same as our own.

In the second morning Lesson (a weekday Gospel of the season, in the Comes) we have the original idea of the Festival, the Theophany or Manifestation of our Lord's Divine Sonship at His Baptism by the Voice from Heaven and the visible descent of the Holy Ghost. The First Lesson at Evensong sets forth the joy of the Church and the glory that was to come upon it through the coming of her Light: "Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted His people, and will have mercy upon His afflicted. . . . I will lift up Mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up My standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers. . . ." The Bethphany, or Manifestation of our Lord's Divine power at the marriage by turning water into wine [see Gospel for Second Sunday], is illustrated by the Second Lesson at Evensong.

Thus each phase of this great festival is presented to us on the day itself; and, as will afterwards be shewn, the subsequent Sundays have a definite and systematic relation to the festival after which they are named.

Some authors have suggested, and it seems not improbable, that the "star" which appeared to the Wise Men in the East might be that glorious light which shone upon the shepherds of Bethlehem when the angel came to give them the glad it is written by the prophet, And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governour that shall rule My people Israel. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go, and search diligently for the young Child, and when ye have found Him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship Him also. When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star which they saw in the east went before them, till it came and stood over where the young Child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young Child with Mary His mother, and fell down and worshipped Him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto Him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

tidings of our Saviour's birth. At a distance this might appear like a star; or, at least, after it had thus shone upon the shepherds, might be lifted up on high, and then formed into the likeness of a star. According to an ancient commentary on St. Matthew, this star, on its first appearance to the Magi, had the form of a radiant child bearing a sceptre or cross; and in some early Italian frescoes it is so depicted.

It has always been the tradition that the Magi were three in number, and that the remainder of their lives after the events recorded in the Gospel was spent in the service of God. They are said to have been baptized by St. Thomas, to have themselves preached the Gospel, and to have been crowned with martyrdom in confirmation of its truth. Their relics are believed to be preserved at Cologne, and three skulls are exhibited in the Cathedral there, in a costly shrine of silver-gilt, enriched with gems of great value; the rest of their reputed bones being preserved in a marble shrine at the east end of the Church. Their names are there given as Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar, and these names are ascribed to the Magi in mediæval art and literature.

In England a striking memorial of their offering is kept up by our Sovereigns, who make an oblation of gold, frankincense, and myrrh at the altar of the Chapel Royal in the Palace of St. James on this festival. Until recently the ceremony was performed in person. The king coming from his closet, attended as usual, proceeded to the Altar at the time of the Offertory, and knelt down there, when the Dean or Sub-dean of the Chapels Royal received into a golden basin the offerings of gold, frankincense, and myrrh from the king's hands, and offered them upon the altar. The offering is now made by an officer of the royal household; but we may venture to hope that the striking significance and humility by which it is characterized will cause it to be revived in the original form at some future day.<sup>1</sup>

The Epiphany is a festival which has always been celebrated with great ceremony throughout the whole Church: its three-fold meaning, and its close association with the Nativity as the end of Christmas-tide, making it a kind of accumulative festival. And such a celebration of it is to be desired: for it will help to give us true reverence for the Babe of Bethlehem by eucharistic, ritual, homiletic, and mental recognition of His Divine Glory. When we are entering with our Lord on the course of His earthly humiliation, it is fitting that we should make such a recognition of His Divinity: and as the Transfiguration trained the three chosen apostles for the sight of the Agony and the Crucifixion, so the Epiphany will set the Church forward in a true spirit towards the observance of Lent and Good Friday.

It is to be regretted that the point of the Latin Collect was not preserved by some such rendering as "that we which know Thee now by faith may after this life behold the beauty of Thy heavenly glory." [Comp. 2 Cor. v. 7; Rev. xxii. 3.]

[Bishop Cosin proposed the insertion of a Rubric: "And the same Collect, Epistle, and Gospel shall serve till the Sunday next following." He also erased "to the Gentiles" in the title of the day.]

THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

This Sunday commemorates the manifestation of our Lord's glory for the second time in the Temple. In His infancy that glory had been revealed to the faithful souls who waited for the loving-kindness of the Lord in the midst of His Temple, and they had seen the Epiphany of that Sun of Righteousness whose Light was to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of God's people Israel. Twelve years afterwards the childhood of the Holy Child Jesus was to reveal the same glory <sup>1</sup> In the Annual Register for 1761 it is recorded that "His Majesty" George III. "went to the Chapel Royal and offered gold, myrrh, and frankincense as usual." So also in 1762, 1763, and 1765. In 1772 occurs the first notice of the offering being made by the Lord Chamberlain.

And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the Child JESUS tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and His mother knew not of it. But they, supposing Him to have been in the company, went a day's journey, and they sought Him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance. And when they found Him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking Him. And it came to pass, that after three days they found Him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be about My FATHER'S business? And they understood not the saying which He spake unto them. And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but His mother kept all these sayings in her heart. And JESUS increased in wisdom, and stature, and in favour with God and man.

Among those teachers may have been Nicodemus and Gamaliel, and the rays which were shed from the Light of the Divine understanding at which they marvelled, may have fallen on their minds with a vivifying power which afterwards made the one fit to receive the first full revelation of the truth respecting new birth into Christ, and the other to be the teacher of St. Paul, by whom the Light of Christ was so marvellously spread abroad among the Gentiles.

THE SECOND SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

On this day is commemorated that beginning of Miracles by which "Jesus manifested forth His glory," so that "His disciples believed on Him." The transmutation of water into wine revealed our Lord as possessing the power of a Creator; and shewed that it was He Who had once taken of the dust of the earth and elevated it in the order of existence, so that by His breathing it became a living man. This, therefore, is the Epiphany of Jesus as the Lord of a New Creation, by which His former work is to be exalted to a much higher place and function in the dispensation of His Providence: and in the act which is recorded He prefigured that work of re-creation which He now causes to be wrought in His Kingdom for the salvation of souls and bodies. Simple elements pass silently beneath the power of His blessing: His servants bear forth: water becomes generous wine. So Baptism exalts the souls and bodies of men from the Kingdom of Nature to the Kingdom of Grace, and the Holy Eucharist is the means by which our whole nature is built up into the nature of Christ, elevated from one step to another, "changed from glory to glory."

Thus at a marriage supper was revealed the great truth of that Union between the Lamb of God and the Bride by which the virtue of the Incarnation of the Word is extended to fallen human nature. And thus also are we taught, that in the Miracle which is being continually wrought by the elevation of lowly elements into sacramental substances, and by the regeneration and edification of souls through their manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. JESUS saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim. And He saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governour of the feast. And they bare it. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was, (but the servants which drew the water knew,) the governour of the feast called the bridegroom, and saith unto him. Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now. This beginning of miracles did JESUS in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth His glory, and His disciples believed on Him.

And JESUS saith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them. And when JESUS was entered into Capernaum, there came unto Him a centurion beseeching Him, and saying, LORD, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. When JESUS heard it, He marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of Heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. And JESUS said unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the self-same hour.

THE THIRD SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

The Epiphany of Christ as the Divine Healer of human infirmities is commemorated on this Sunday. His all-embracing sympathy could take in even the leper and the stranger; and would manifest itself to overflowing by touching the one, whom no one else would come near, and by healing the servant of the other, though he was the Gentile slave of a Gentile centurion. The glory of the Good Physician was thus manifested forth, immediately after He had made His Mission openly known to the people, in two remarkable instances. Leprosy was a disease for which no human physician could find a cure: yet Christ put forth His hand and touched the leper, and at once a regeneration of the diseased nature took place, so that he became a new man. Palsy or paralysis, again, is a loss of all muscular energy and power, so that the afflicted person becomes, in a greater or less degree, incapable of moving; and his body, in severe cases, is, in one sense, dead. Very rarely indeed is paralysis cured; and never, in the case of one "grievously tormented" with it, as this slave was. Yet the will of the Good Physician effected the cure in a moment, either by the ministration of one to whom He could say, "Go, and he goeth," on his Master's errand of mercy, or else by the immediate operation of His Divine Omnipotence.

As Jesus manifested forth His glory by displaying His Power over the inanimate Creation when He transubstantiated the water into wine, so now He shewed it by changing a leper and a paralytic into sound and whole men by His touch and His will.

The ancient Offertory sentence brought out this doctrine very beautifully. It was, "The right hand of the Lord hath the pre-eminence: the right hand of the Lord bringeth mighty things to pass. I shall not die but live, and declare the works of the Lord." The same idea forms the basis of the Collect.

And when He was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there met Him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. THE FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

Our Lord Jesus is on this Sunday commemorated as the Saviour of all from every danger, as well as the Saviour of the diseased and infirm from the bodily afflictions which happen to human nature. It is not now a leper or a paralytic, but strong and hale men who are in need of His help. And yet, though no horrible or painful disease afflicts them, they could not be in any more hopeless or helpless condition than when at sea in an open boat at the mercy of a tempest. He was, doubtless, revealing to them the true source of their safety,—His Presence, which makes an Ark of the Church. He was asleep, and they had little faith, and the storm was violent; and the ship being "covered with the waves," we may well suppose that the danger was, from a human point of view, extreme. Christ reveals to the Apostles that the human point of view takes in a very small part of the whole prospect by manifesting forth His authority over the winds and the waves, and shewing them that His Presence could preserve them, because it is the Presence of God. The miracle of casting out the devils from the two possessed Gergesenes, carries on the parabolical teaching of the storm and its subjugation, by shewing that the power of Christ extends not only over natural elements and forces, but over supernatural beings. And hence the Lord of the Church is continually declaring to us, that though it may be tempest-tossed on the waves of the world, He can ensure its safety; and that though evil spirits oppose it with all the array of their power, yet "the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it."

The Epistle for this Sunday was altered in 1549, because it coincided with that for the first Sunday in Advent. In the Mozarabic rite it is taken from Rom. vii., which, as it is respecting the struggle of our two natures, seems once to have been coexistent with our Collect.

is not made so clear in the Gospel of the Tares and the Wheat, as in that of those the Gospels of which record the Manifestation of the glory of Christ in His acts. Yet it reveals Him as the Lord of the Church for its government as well as for its preservation; and shews that even when He seems to be suffering evil that might be prevented, His purpose is still full of love for His own, lest the wheat should be injured by the destruction of the tares. And as, moreover, our Lord Himself has explained that the seed is the WORD of God, that is, His own Person, this Gospel and Sunday must be regarded as setting forth the glory of Christ in the increase of His Church, and the development of that Kingdom on earth which is to form so large a portion of the eternal dominion of the King of kings. It shews also the ultimate triumph of the WORD in the face of all opposition. Men may sleep who should have guarded the field, and the enemy may seem to have gained an advantage by which the glory of the WORD is dimmed; but God waits His time, and when that is fulfilled sends forth His servants to undo the work of the Evil One; so that the glory of the Redeemer is manifested by the gathering in of a large harvest of the redeemed into His heavenly garner.

The Epistle for this Sunday takes up the course of St. Paul's Epistles from the Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity, and both Gospel and Epistle have a relation to the season of Advent, because they used frequently to be required to complete that of Trinity.

THE SIXTH SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

From 1549 until 1661 the Church of England reckoned only five Sundays after Epiphany, and if a sixth occurred before Septuagesima, the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel of the Fifth were repeated. The old Rubric was, "The sixth Sunday (if there be so many) shall have the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel that was upon the Fifth Sunday." To this it was at first proposed to add, "And if there be fewer Sundays than six, yet this Collect, Epistle, and Gospel of the Fifth Sunday shall be last:" but this new Rubric (inserted in the Durham book) was erased, and a sixth Sunday added without it.<sup>1</sup>

The Collect is written in the margin of the Durham book, and appears to be an original composition of Bishop Cosin's; though there is some similarity of expression between it and the above Easter Collect of St. Gregory's Sacramentary, which seems to indicate that the one was in part suggested by the other.<sup>2</sup>

The Epistle is most aptly chosen as a link between the Epiphany Sundays and those near Advent, the whole Service of this day being often required for the Twenty-fifth or Twenty-sixth Sunday after Trinity. The Collect is founded on the Epistle, and the Gospel displays the final Manifestation of the glory of Christ in the triumph of His Second Coming. Thus this day falls in with the old system of Epiphany Sundays, and forms an admirable climax to the whole series; while, at the same time, it is strikingly adapted for transfer to the end of the Trinity Season (if required), according to the anciently received practice of our own and other branches of the Western Church.

[There is of course no Introit for this day in the Salisbury Use. In the Roman it is the same as on the preceding Sunday; and the words are appropriate whether for Epiphany or before Advent.]

SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

After the conclusion of the season of Epiphany the Sundays are reckoned with reference to Easter and its preceding fast. The origin of the names which distinguish the three Sundays before Lent cannot be historically accounted for, and has received various explanations in ancient and modern times. Pamelius considers that Septuagesima was so called in commemoration of the seventy years' captivity of Israel in Babylon, and that the other two Sundays following were named from it by analogy. As it was so much the habit of early Christian writers to compare the forty days' fast of Lent with the forty years' sojourn in the wilderness, this derivation seems a probable one. But the more generally received one in modern times is, that the fast of Lent being called Quadragesima, and that name being especially applied to the first Sunday in Lent, these three preceding Sundays were named from analogy, and as representing in round numbers the days which occur between each and Easter. Septuagesima is, indeed, only sixty-three days distant from Easter, but Quinquagesima is forty-nine; and the nearly correct character of the appellation in the latter case seems to support this theory. The second and more exact titles which were added to the old names of these Sundays in 1661 appear for the first time in Bishop Cosin's corrected Prayer Book. The ancient titles themselves are all three found in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, and in the Sacramentaries; but there are not any analogous ones in use in the Eastern Church.

The time and manner of observing Lent varied very much in the early Church, and these Sundays are a monument of this variation. Each of them marked the beginning of Lent in communities which extended it beyond forty days; and Durandus states that monastic persons were accustomed to begin the fast at Septuagesima, the Greeks at Sexagesima, and the secular clergy at Quinquagesima. It is very probable that the names themselves were adopted to mark another variation in the mode of keeping Lent. For in some parts of the Church fasting was not permitted on Sundays, Thursdays, or Saturdays, and yet the Lenten fast was to extend to forty days. The beginning of it was therefore thrown back to Septuagesima, the weeks from which day to Easter would include forty fasting-days. Other churches omitted only Thursdays and Sundays, and began the fast on Sexagesima. A third class made no omissions except of Sunday, and commenced their season of penitence two days before Ash-Wednesday, at Quinquagesima; while a fourth, perhaps the largest, limited Lent to thirty-six days, beginning it on Quadragesima Sunday.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> So it still is in the Ambrosian rite; and so it was in the Mozarabic until the time of Cardinal Ximenes.

And they went their way. Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good-man of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Take that thine is, and go thy way; I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen.

take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face. I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak: howbeit,

When these various modes of keeping Lent had been all superseded under the reforming hand of St. Gregory the Great by our present custom, the Church still retained the penitential tone of the services for these three Sundays, and they thus form a link between the joyous seasons of Christmas and Epiphany, and the deeply sorrowful one which begins with Ash-Wednesday and reaches its climax in the Holy Week. Although some customs which were retained with this view in the ancient Church of England have been dropped in the modern,—such as the omission of the Alleluia at the beginning of Mattins,—the Scriptures of the season still mark it as one that leads up to Lent.

The Gospels and Epistles for the three Sundays are clearly appointed with a reference to Christian self-discipline; and they seem to have been chosen with the well-known ancient classification of virtues in view, as if to shew the Christian application of the truths of heathen philosophy. Thus on Septuagesima the Epistle of the Christian strife for the mastery represents Temperantia, the Gospel of the labourers, and the penny a day, Justitia. On Sexagesima, Fortitudo is illustrated by St. Paul's account of his sufferings for Christ's sake, and Honestas by the parable of the Sower, some of Whose good seed falls on honest and good hearts [ἐν καρδίᾳ καλλῆ καὶ ἀγαθῆ]. Quinquagesima illustrates by the Epistle the Christian complement of all natural virtue in Charity; the climax of which was reached in the submission of the Son of Man to that contumely and persecution which He predicts in the Gospel of the day.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY.

On all three of the Sundays before Lent the Apostle St. Paul is set forth as an illustrious example of self-denial, zeal, and suffering for Christ's sake; and on Quinquagesima his noble words as to the valuelessness of all such discipline and zeal without love, set the true Christian seal upon asceticism in every degree. It is with reference, no doubt, to this application of his example, that an allusion was made to the great Apostle of the Gentiles in the Collect; but the manner in which it was made led to its expulsion altogether in 1549, and to the insertion of the more trustworthy expression of being defended by the power of God. This day is marked “ad Sanctum Paulum” in the Comes.

INTROIT.—Up, Lord, why sleepest Thou: awake, and be not absent from us for ever. Wherefore hidest Thou Thy face: and forgettest our misery and trouble? For our soul whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they ministers of CHRIST? (I speak as a fool,) I am more: in labours more abundant; in stripes above measure; in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeying often; in perils of waters; in perils of robbers; in perils by mine own countrymen; in perils by the beathen; in perils in the city; in perils in the wilderness; in perils in the sea; in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness; in watchings often; in hunger and thirst; in fastings often; in cold and nakedness; beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not? If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. The GOD and FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, Which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke viii. 4-15.

WHEN much people were gathered together, and were come to Him out of every city, He spake by a parable: A sower went out to sow his seed; and as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And some fell upon a rock, and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it. And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when He had said these things, He cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. And His disciples asked Him, saying, What might this parable be? And He said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of GOD: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand. Now the parable is this: The seed is the Word of GOD. Those by the way-side are they that hear; then cometh the devil, and taketh away the Word out of their hearts, lest they should believe, and be saved. They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away. And that which fell among thorns, are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. But that on the good ground, are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the Word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

The ancient Collect for this day had a special reference to the practice of Confession on the Tuesday following, which was hence called Shrove Tuesday. It was as follows: "Preces nostras, quesumus, Domine, clementer exaudi: atque a peccatorum vinculis absolutos ab omni nos adversitate custodi. Per Dominum nostrum." Our present very beautiful Collect was substituted in 1549; it is formed on the basis of the Epistle, and is evidently constructed also as a prayer for that Love without which the discipline of Lent would be unavailing.

At the end of the Gospel for Quinquagesima Sunday the following Rubric is inserted in MS. in Cosin's Durham Prayer Book: "This Collect, Epistle, and Gospel shall serve only till the Wednesday following."

INTROIT.—Be Thou my strong rock, and house of defence; that Thou mayest save me. For Thou art my strong rock and my castle: be Thou also my guide, and lead me for Thy Name's sake. Ps. In Thee, O Lord, have I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion; deliver me in Thy righteousness. Glory be.

Christian times; but the period of its duration varied in different countries and ages down to the seventh century. Of these variations Irenæus wrote in his Epistle to Victor, Bishop of Rome, about the close of the second century, when (speaking of the varying rules about Easter) he says, "For the difference of opinion is not about the day alone, but about the manner of fasting; for some think they are to fast one day, some two, some more: some measure their day as forty hours of the day and night." [IREN. in Euseb. v. 24.]

It is left uncertain, by the words of Irenæus, whether this universal primitive Lent of which he writes ever extended to forty days: and his words read differently in the several ancient texts of Eusebius. In some copies they are, as above, οἱ δὲ τεσσαράκοντα ὥρας ἡμερῶν καὶ νυκτερῶν συμμετροῦσι τὴν ἡμέραν αὐτῶν: but in others, and in Rufinus, they read, "For some think they are to fast one day, some two, some more, some forty days; and they measure their day by the hours of the day and night." Tertullian, a few years later, speaks of the practice of the Church as believed with certainty to be founded on that passage of the Gospel in which those days were appointed for fasting, during which the Bridegroom was taken away. This has been thought by some to point to the period of forty days during which our Lord was going through His Temptation in the wilderness; but it is far more probable that it refers to the time during which His Soul was separated from His Body. Some few years later still, however, towards the middle of the third century, Origen speaks of forty days being consecrated to fasting before Easter. [Hom x. in Levit.] And at the Council of Nicea this period was taken for granted, as if long in use.

But, however early the extension of the Lenten fast to forty days may have been, it is certain that they were reckoned in

THOUGH I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth : but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

For He shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on: and they shall scourge Him, and put Him to death; and the third day He shall rise again. And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken. And it came to pass, that as He was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way-side begging: and hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant. And they told him, that JESUS of Nazareth passeth by. And he cried, saying, JESUS, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me. And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me. And JESUS stood, and commanded him to be brought unto Him: and when he was come near, He asked him, saying, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? And he said, LORD, that I may receive my sight. And JESUS said unto him, Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Him, glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

several different ways, though always immediately preceding Easter. By various Churches the forty days were distributed over periods of nine, eight, and seven weeks (that is, from Septuagesima, Sexagesima, or Quinquagesima to Easter), by the omission of Sundays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, of Sundays and Saturdays, or of Sundays alone, from the number of fasting-days [see Notes on Septuagesima]; and it would appear that Lent was sometimes called by the three names now confined to the three Sundays preceding it as well as by the name of Quadragesima, or Τεσσαρακοστή. St. Gregory the Great introduced our present mode of observance, or sanctioned it with his authority, at the end of the sixth century; excluding Sundays from the number of fasting-days, and making the thirty-six days thus left of the forty-two immediately preceding Easter into an exact forty by beginning the Fast on the Wednesday before Quadragesima Sunday instead of on the Monday following it. This rule seems to have been very readily accepted in the Western Church; but the Eastern Lent [Μεγάλη Νηστεία] begins on the Monday after the day which we call Quinquagesima; and the rule of fasting is so strict, that although some slight relaxation of its rigour is allowed on Sundays and Saturdays, not even the former are wholly excluded from the number of fasting-days.

The primary object of the institution of a fast before Easter was doubtless that of perpetuating in the hearts of every generation of Christians the sorrow and mourning which the Apostles and Disciples felt during the time that the Bridegroom was taken away from them. This sorrow had, indeed, been turned into joy by the Resurrection, yet no Easter joys could ever erase from the mind of the Church the memory of those awful forty hours of blank and desolation which followed the last sufferings of her Lord; and she lives over year by year the time from the morning of Good Friday to the morning of Easter Day by a re-presentation of Christ evidently set forth, crucified among us. [Gal. iii. 1.] This probably was the earliest idea of a fast before Easter. But it almost necessarily followed that sorrow concerning the death of Christ should be accompanied by sorrow concerning the cause of that Death; and hence the Lenten fast became a period of self-discipline; and was so, probably, from its first institution in Apostolic times. And, according to the literal habit which the early Church had of looking up to the Pattern of her Divine Master, the forty days of His fasting in the wilderness while He was undergoing Temptation became the gauge of the servants' Lent, deriving still more force as an Example from the typical prophecy of it which was so evident in the case of Moses and Elijah.

St. Chrysostom speaks of great strictness in fasting on the part of many in his day, such as is still found in the Eastern Church. "There are those," he says, "who rival one another in fasting, and shew a marvellous emulation in it; some, indeed, who spend two whole days without food; and others who, rejecting from their tables not only the use of wine, and of oil, but of every dish, and taking only bread and water, persevere in this practice during the whole of Lent." [Hom. iv. on Stat.] He also speaks in another homily of men being purified, in the days of Lent, by prayer and almsdeeds, by fasting, watching, tears, and confession of sins, shewing that the severe Lents of later ages were only such as had been observed in the time of that great Father of the Church. The general mode of fasting seems to have been to abstain from food until after six o'clock in the afternoon, and even then not to partake of animal food or wine. Yet it may be doubted whether such a mode of life could have been continued assembly, gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts; let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet; let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare Thy people, O LORD, and give not Thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

day after day for six weeks by those whose duties called upon them for much physical exertion; and it is possible that we ought not to interpret so literally as this such allusions to the fasting of ordinary Christians as we meet with in early writings.

Lent was the principal time, in the early Church, for preparing the Catechumens for Baptism, and a large portion of St. Cyril's Catechetical Lectures were delivered at this season. There were also constant daily sermons at the services, as we see from expressions used by St. Chrysostom and other fathers. Public shows were more or less strictly forbidden; and works of charity were engaged in by all who could undertake them. It was a time when sinners were called upon to do outward penance as a sign of inward penitence, that they might be received back to Communion at Easter. Lent was, in fact, a season of humiliation, abstinence from pleasure, fasting, prayer, penitence, and general depression of tone on account of sin; and was marked, on every side, with the sombre tokens of mourning.

From this short account of the Lenten fast of primitive days, we may go on to consider briefly what should be the mode of observing it in modern times, so that the ancient and unchanging principles of the Catholic Church may be applied to the ever-varying habits of the world which those principles are intended to leaven. The Church of England has not expressly defined any rule on the subject of fasting, but in the Homilies on the subject has urged the example of the Early Church, as if intending it to be followed with a considerable amount of strictness. The work that is set before most persons, in the Providence of God, at the present day, makes it quite impossible, however, for those who have to do it to fast every day for six weeks until evening, or even to take one meal only in the day. And the ordinary mode of living is so restrained among religious persons, that such a custom would soon reduce them to an invalid condition, in which they could not do their duty properly in the station of life to which God has called them, whether in the world or in the sanctuary. And although it may seem, at first, that men ought to be able to fast in the nineteenth century as strictly as they did in the sixteenth, the twelfth, or the third, yet it should be remembered that the continuous labour of life was unknown to the great majority of persons in ancient days, as it is at the present time in the Eastern Church and in Southern Europe; and that the quantity and quality of the food which now forms a full meal is only equivalent to what would have been an extremely spare one until comparatively modern days.

The problem which the modern Christian has to solve, then, in this matter, is that of so reconciling the duty of fasting in Lent, and at other times ordered by the Church, with the duty of properly accomplishing the work which God has set him to do, that he may fulfil both duties as a faithful servant of God.

It is impossible to lay down any general law as to the amount of abstinence from food which is thus compatible with modern duties; nor can any one, except a person possessed of much physiological acumen, determine what is to be the rule for another. But the general rules may be laid down, [1] that it is possible for all to diminish in some degree the quantity of their food on fasting-days without harm resulting; [2] that many can safely abstain altogether from animal food for some days in the week; [3] that food should be taken on fasting-days as a necessity, and its quality so regulated that it shall not be a luxury; [4] that all can deny themselves delicacies on fast-days which may be very properly used at other times.

In the First Homily on Fasting the objects of this discipline of the body are well stated thus: [1] "To chastise the flesh that it be not too wanton, but tamed and brought in subjection to the spirit." [2] "That the spirit may be more fervent and earnest in prayer." [3] "That our fast be a testimony and witness with us before God, of our humble submission to His high Majesty."

Finally, it may be remarked, that as the changed habits of life have diminished our capacity for abstaining from food for long periods, so they have increased our opportunities of sacrificing our pleasures by abstinence from luxuries. "Theatres, balls, private parties, novel-reading, mere ornamental pursuits, unnecessary delicacies, sumptuous costume,—these are things which may well be selected as the subjects of our abstinence, if, in Lent, or in our general life, we desire to adopt a stricter Christian habit than is commonly necessary." [BLUNT'S Directorium Pastorale, p. 136.] From time so saved many an hour can be gained in which to attend the Divine Service of the Church day by day, to use extra private devotions, and to engage in works of charity.

§ Ash Wednesday.

The ancient ecclesiastical name given to the first day of Lent is Caput Jejunii, and the popular name of Ash-Wednesday has been acquired by it from the custom of blessing ashes made from the palms distributed on the Palm Sunday of the preceding year, and signing the cross with them on the heads

Then the devil taketh Him up into the holy city, and setteth Him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down ; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee, and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest at any time Thou dash Thy foot against a stone. of those who knelt before the officiating minister for the purpose, while he said, “Remember, man, that thou art dust, and unto dust shalt thou return.” The Communion Service is an adaptation of this rite, as is further shewn in the notes to that Office.

The Penitential Psalms are all used in the services of Ash-Wednesday, as they have been time immemorial, the 6th, 32nd, and 38th at Mattins, the 51st at the Communion, the 102nd, 130th, and 143rd at Evensong. The Collect is partly a translation of one used at the Benediction of the Ashes, and partly a composition of 1549 on the basis of other Collects of the Day. The Epistle and Gospel are those of the ancient Lectionary of St. Jerome. In the Durham book a rubric is inserted ordering that the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel of this day “are to serve until the Sunday following.”

INTROIT.—Thou, O Lord, hast mercy upon all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made : hiding Thy face from their sins because of their penitence, and sparing them because Thou art the Lord our God. Ps. Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me, for my soul trusteth in Thee. Glory be.

THE FIRST SUNDAY IN LENT.

Although the Sundays in Lent are not to be observed as fast-days, the devotional tone given to them is carefully assimilated to that of the season ; and a constant memorial of it is kept up by the use of the Ash-Wednesday Collect after that of the week on Sundays as well as weekdays. The ancient Use contained Collects for Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays in Lent.

The Collect for this Sunday has not been traced to any ancient source ; but as it contains the first allusion to fasting, it may possibly come down from that distant time when Lent began on this day or the day following, instead of on Ash-Wednesday. In the ancient Use the Collect for this Sunday was, “O God, Who dost cleanse Thy Church by the yearly observance of Lent ; grant unto Thy family that what it strives to obtain from Thee by abstinence, the same it may perform in good works, through our Lord Jesus Christ.”

The Gospel of the day sets forth the Lord Jesus perfecting His sympathy with our nature by undergoing temptation : and the first words of the Epistle point to the efficacious power of that temptation for the rescue from the Tempter of all who are tempted. Our Blessed Lord, as the Originator of a new spiritual nature which was to take the place of that lost by Adam, went through a similar trial to that of Adam ; and that He might have perfect sympathy also with us who are open to the assaults of the Evil One, “He was tempted like as we are.” This representative character of Christ’s Temptation is observable in the three forms which it took. [1] “Command these stones that they be and worship me. Then saith JESUS unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the LORD thy GOD, and Him only shalt thou serve. Then the devil leaveth Him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto Him.

even as the Gentiles which know not GOD; that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because that the LORD is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you, and testified. made bread," was a parallel to that temptation of the senses which was laid before our first parents when they were invited to eat of the tree whose fruit had been forbidden by God. And in this primary temptation of sense all others are represented. But He Who fed five thousand by a miracle after one day's fasting, will not work a miracle to feed Himself after a fast of forty days: nor will He rise above the proper level of His human nature in His struggle with the enemy, because His time is not yet come. [2] "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down," was a temptation to make a preinature and unnecessary display of His Divine Power, similar to the intellectual temptation set before our first parents, "Ye shall be as gods." The substance of it was, Can God do this? The answer was, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."<sup>1</sup> [3] The first Adam was tempted to covet the gift of a Divine Intelligence, "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil;" and though God had given him sovereignty over the world in His own way, by a delegated authority, to seek it in another way, by the possession of Omniscience. So the third and strongest temptation offered to Him Who came to draw all men unto Him by His lifting up was contained in the offer—doubtless one that could have been, in its way, realized—"All these things will I give Thee."

These three forms of temptation are comprehensive types of all that the Tempter has to offer—sensual temptations, the seductions of vanity and pride, and the desire to go beyond God's will. Thus the ancient formulary, which includes all sin under the three heads, "the world, the flesh, and the Devil," is strictly in keeping with the view of sin which is given to us in the Fall of the first, and the Victory of the Second Adam: and as we acknowledge ourselves to be sinners through our origin from the one, so we may see the full force of the prayer to the other, "By Thy Temptation, good Lord, deliver us," and seek spiritual strength in all times of spiritual danger by becoming "fellow-workers with Him" through the grace of God.

The week which begins with the first Sunday in Lent is one of the Ember weeks, the following Sunday being the canonical day for Ordinations.

INTROIT.—He hath called upon Me, and I will hear him. I will deliver him and bring him to honour: with long life will I satisfy him. Ps. Whoso dwelleth under the defence of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. Glory be.

THE SECOND SUNDAY IN LENT.

Our Lord's triumph in His own Person over Satan is followed up on this Sunday by a narrative of one of those cases in which He exhibited the same power for the good of others. "Grievously vexed with a devil" is a phrase which seems to point to an utter subjugation of the poor victim so afflicted to the power of the Evil One; and in that subjugation physical and mental evil were doubtless combined. He Who, having been tempted, was now able to succour them that are tempted, manifested that ability on this occasion by the effect of His will alone, so that without the use of any apparent means or any visible act, He caused the Evil One to give up his power over the afflicted, and in answer to the urgent prayer of the mother, "her daughter was made whole from that very hour." There is, doubtless, a connection between the fact told in the Gospel and the exhortation of the Epistle, the epithet designating the evil spirits who possessed their victims, and that by which St. Paul designates impurity, being the same; and several pieces of evidence pointing to extreme impurity of life as one result of possession. The Collect is moulded in the same lines of thought, acknowledging the power of the Tempter to assault the soul by evil thoughts, and our own inability to prevail against such assaults without the aid of Him by Whom the Tempter was, and is overcome. The note of the day and week, therefore, so far as Lent looks to discipline, is a call to the subjugation of the sensual part of our nature by earnest prayer for a participation in the power of Him Who was tempted, and yet came out of His temptation without sin, that He might succour others in His strength.

INTROIT.—Call to remembrance, O Lord, Thy tender mercies; and Thy loving-kindnesses, which have been ever of old. Let not our enemies triumph over us. Deliver us, O God of Israel, out of all our troubles. Ps. Unto Thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soul; my God, I have put my trust in Thee, let me not be confounded. Glory be.

<sup>1</sup> It is observable that Simon Magus, who pretended to be divine, met his death in an attempt to display his power in this very manner.

“THE GOSPEL. S. Matt. xv. 21-28.

And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, O LORD, Thou SON of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil. But He answered her not a word. And His disciples came and besought Him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us. Then JESUS answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

BE ye therefore followers of GOD, as dear children; and walk in love, as CHRIST also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to GOD for a sweet-smelling savour. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named amongst you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish-talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks: for this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of CHRIST, and of GOD. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of GOD upon the children of disobedience.

c S. H. B. Rom. an. Eph. 5. 1-9. Eastern. Heb. 4. 14-5. 6.

Be not ye therefore partakers with them: for ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the LORD; walk as children of light; (for the fruit of the SPIRIT is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth;) proving what is acceptable unto the LORD. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather prove them: for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light. Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and CHRIST shall give thee light.

THE THIRD SUNDAY IN LENT.

The dangerous sympathy which exists between human nature and evil is set forth on this Sunday with fearful intensity of expression. Our Lord had cast out another of those evil spirits which were permitted in His time to exercise their utmost power over men, that His glory might be shewn in overcoming them; and some of those who witnessed the occurrence, finding no other way of explaining it, attributed it to "Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." This foolish and wicked way of accounting for the marvel our Lord met by two arguments. [1] Satan would not act against himself; [2] If Satan cast out Satan, then "the children" of the Jews, i.e. the Apostles, to whom "the very devils were subject" through Christ's name, could only have cast them out by the same evil power. In the parallel passage, Matt. xi. 31, He also goes on to shew how this wicked accusation was in danger of becoming the unpardonable sin; the Jews, in reality, calling the saving work of the Holy Spirit a "soul-destroying" work, that of the Destroyer of souls. Then the Lord declared that it is He alone Who can cast out Satan; He being stronger than the strong Evil One. From His words we may deduce the truth that all driving out of the Evil One is the work of Christ, as all sin is ultimately the work of the Enemy. He is the Stronger than the strong Who drives evil from our nature, by purifying that nature in His own holy and immaculate Person; from each individual by the work of the same Person through the grace given in sacraments; and His power extends over every form of Satan's power, physical or mental infirmity, or spiritual disease. This personal power of Christ is illustrated by the words of St. Paul, "O wretched man that I am," through this power of Satan over me, "Who shall deliver me?" . . . "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

which illustrates so fearfully the abiding sympathy of our nature with evil, and the intensification of Satan's power through every unresisted submission to the influence of it. This was spoken first of the generation of Jews among whom our Lord had come, and has its application to later times in the falling away of churches into heresy and worldliness. Satan was driven out from every position which he had taken up as soon as Christ appeared for the purpose of opposing him. But the sympathies of the nation were towards evil, and after their rejection of Christ and His Apostles their spiritual condition became far worse than it was even in our Lord's time when He called them a "generation of vipers." The vanquished strong man returned, and the horrors of sin among the Jews between our Lord's Ascension and the final destruction of Jerusalem,—the hardness of heart, the blindness, the cruelty,—were never exceeded. It is probable that the sway of Mahometanism in the East and in India is a return of the "strong man armed," with "seven others more wicked than himself," to nations among whom the Church had been received as a cleansing and garnishing power for a time, but was afterwards rejected when the new unbelief aroused old sympathies with evil.

The application of the same truth to individuals is obvious. The sense of Satan's power was so strong in the early Church as to lead it to make exorcism an invariable preliminary of baptism. Every act of penitence is a kind of exorcism, and every Absolution is the conquest of Satan by Christ. But unless the swept and garnished soul is preoccupied with good, evil will return to it. In all Lenten discipline, therefore, the occupation of the soul by the sevenfold gifts of the Spirit is the true bar to the entrance of the seven evil spirits, and works of mercy will guard against the dangers and deadly sins to which inactive devotion makes it liable.

After this comes that awful truth respecting reposition

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke xi. 14-28.

[JESUS] was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered. But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub, the chief of the devils. And others, tempting Him, sought of Him a sign from heaven. But He, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say, that I cast out devils through Beelzebub. And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. He that is not with Me is against Me: and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in, and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. And it came to pass, as He spake these things, a certain woman of the company lift up her voice, and said unto Him, Blessed is the womb that bare Thee, and the paps which Thou hast sucked. But He said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the Word of God, and keep it.

MID-LENT, OR REFRESHMENT SUNDAY.

This day has been called Dominica Refectionis from a very ancient period, no doubt from the Gospel in which our Lord is set forth as feeding the five thousand by a miracle in the wilderness.<sup>1</sup> It has at some times been observed as a day of greater festivity than was permitted on any other Sunday in Lent; and the Mi-Carême of the French Church still gives an illustration of this usage. In Rome also, the "Golden Rose" is blessed on this day, and presented by the Pope to some distinguished person who is considered to have done good service to the Church in the past year; and the ceremony is accompanied by festive observances which make Mid-Lent Sunday conspicuously different from the others of the season. The "comfort" of the Collect, the "free Jerusalem" springing out of the bondage of Sinai of the Epistle, and the Feast in the midst of the wilderness, all point the same way; as also does the ancient Officium or Introit.

The miracle which gives point to this Sunday exhibits our Lord as refreshing men literally by the operation of His Providence, and mystically as their spiritual Refresher.

[1] From the literal point of view the miracle was stupendous, and well calculated to shew that the Providence of Him "by Whom all things were made" is able to take care of those whom He loves. Cornelius à Lapide, calculating from the Roman price of a loaf weighing from 8 to 10 ounces, concludes that the 200 pence named would have purchased 2000 such loaves. The average price of bread in England is 1½d. a pound, at which rate the same money would purchase about 914 pounds, a quantity not very far from this estimate. This weight of bread distributed among 5000 persons only would give not quite three ounces to each, about as much as is ordinarily eaten as an accompaniment to other food at dinner. But St. Matthew [xiv. 21] says that there were "women and children," besides "about five thousand men;" and if these are reckoned at only 5000 more, the quantity of bread provided for each by the 200 pence would have been only 1½ ounce, literally "a little," as stated by Philip, and quite insufficient for satisfying a hungry person. But the actual quantity of bread present was much less than two hundred pennyworth, being only such a quantity as a lad could carry, five barley loaves (perhaps ten or twelve pounds in weight altogether), and in that case enough to give a piece of bread of eight or ten grains weight to each person. When Elisha's servitor said of "twenty loaves of barley and full ears of corn in the husk thereof," "What, should I set this before an hundred men?" it is no wonder that the servitor of Christ should say of the five barley loaves, "But what are these among so many" as ten thousand men, women, and children? Yct in the course of subdivision this small quantity of bread increased so as to be sufficient for a full meal; the persons so satisfied being evidently in a fasting, and therefore hungry condition. For such a full meal sixteen ounces of bread is not much, but 10,000 pounds of bread amounts to four and a half tons weight, a vast quantity, apparently a thousandfold exceeding that from which it originated. Such a calculation magnifies the miracle in appearance, yet it would have been as much an act of Divine power to have increased the bread twofold as a thousandfold; and acts of Divine power equally stupendous are daily being wrought around us by the loving-kindness of our Creator.

[2] The mystical meaning of the miracle is shewn by the course of the several acts recorded in the eleventh verse of the Gospel; and they are plainly of an Eucharistic character.

things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free; which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now. Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

THE GOSPEL. S. John vi. 1-14.

JESUS went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias. And a great multitude followed Him, because they saw His miracles which He did on them that were diseased. And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there He sat with His disciples. And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh. When JESUS then lift up His eyes, and saw a great company come unto Him, He saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? (And this He said to prove him; for He Himself knew what He would do.) Philip answered Him, Two hundred penny-worth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him, There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many? And JESUS said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand. And JESUS took the loaves, and when He had given thanks He distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would. When they were filled, He said unto His disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained ever and above unto them that had eaten. Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that JESUS did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world.

<sup>γ</sup>] He distributes to His ministers as to persons receiving gifts from Him for the benefit of others.

<sup>δ</sup>] And by the intervention of these ministers, not by direct communication between Jesus and the multitude, the latter receive the eucharistized bread by which they are satisfied.

Thus the mighty work of Christ in the midst of the wilderness is set before His Church in the midst of Lent as a sure token that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; and that both fasting and abundance are at His command; and still more as an earnest of that Divine gift the "Bread from Heaven," which He distributes to His people in the wilderness of this world, by the hands of ministers, for their spiritual refreshment and strength.

PASSION SUNDAY.<sup>1</sup>

The name of Passion Sunday has been given to the second Sunday before Good Friday from time immemorial, because on that day the Lord began to make open predictions of His coming sufferings. Those sufferings also begin now to be commemorated in the Scriptures for the season. The Epistle refers to our Lord's Passion; the Gospel narrates the beginning of it in that fearful rejection of Him by the Jews; and the first Lessons at Mattins and Evensong are clearly prophetic of the redemption wrought by the sufferings of Christ. When the last attempt was made to alter the Prayer Book in 1688, it was proposed to substitute a Collect more in character with the day, which is as follows: "O Almighty God, Who hast sent Thy Son Jesus Christ to be an High Priest of good things to come, and by His own Blood to enter in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us; mercifully look upon Thy people, that by the same Blood of our Saviour, Who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot unto Thee, our consciences may be purged from dead works, to serve Thee, the living God, that we may receive the promise of eternal inheritance, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

As the Divine Power of Christ was illustrated on the preceding Sunday by the miracle of the loaves and fishes, so on this day His Divine Nature is set forth in a conspicuous manner by the juxtaposition of the Gospel in which He used the words, "Before Abraham was, I am," with the first Lesson in which God is heard saying to Moses, "I AM THAT I AM: . . . thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." The conduct of the Jews shews that they recognized in our Lord's words an assumption of the incommunicable Name, and in that assumption a proclamation that He is God. This open and unlimited proclamation of His Divine Nature comes in on Passion Sunday, as the several manifestations of the glory of Christ come in before Christmas, that through the humiliation of the Cross, as through that of the manger, we may behold the eternal Son of God: and see rays of Divinity shed from His crucified Body.

Then answered the Jews, and said unto Him, Say we not well, that Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil? JESUS answered, I have not a devil; but I honour My FATHER, and ye do dishonour Me. And I seek not Mine own glory; there is One that seeketh and judgeth. Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep My saying, he shall never see death. Then said the Jews unto Him, Now we know that Thou hast a devil: Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and Thou sayest, If a man keep My saying, he shall never taste of death. Art Thou greater than our JESUS answered, If I honour Myself, My honour is nothing; it is My FATHER that honoureth Me, of Whom ye say, that He is your GOD: yet ye have not known Him; but I know Him: and if I should say, I know Him not, I shall be a liar like unto you; but I know Him, and keep His saying. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day, and he saw it, and was glad. Then said the Jews unto Him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast Thou seen Abraham? PALM SUNDAY.

The last week of Lent has ever been observed by Christians as a time of special solemnity; and from the awfully important events which occurred in the last week of our Lord's life, which it represents to us, it has been called, from primitive times, the Great Week and the Holy Week. During this period there was, as early as the days of St. Chrysostom, a general cessation of business among the Christian part of the people: fasting was observed with greater strictness than in the other weeks of Lent, and special acts of mercy and charity were engaged in by all, the Emperors (when they had become Christian) setting an official example by ceremonies of which our Royal Maundy is a relic.

The first day of the Holy Week is called Indulgence Sunday in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, and in many other later writers. This name has been explained by a custom of the Christian Emperors, who used to set prisoners free and close all courts of law during Holy Week. But it seems to have been in use before this practice originated, which was not earlier than the end of the fourth century. It has also been supposed to be connected with the reconciliation of penitents. In the Sacramentary of St. Gregory there is the phrase, "Per Quem nobis indulgentia largitur," in the proper preface for this day, and "ut indulgentiam percipere mereamur," in the Collect for Tuesday; from which it may be inferred that the name Indulgence Sunday (and Indulgence Week) originally pointed to our Lord's work of redemption, and His great love in going forward willingly on this day to meet His sufferings. The day is also called Hosanna Sunday in some parts of Europe and the East.

But a far more common name is that by which it is familiarly known to us, that of Palm Sunday. It is called Dominica in ramis palmarum in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, and Dominica in ramis olivarum in that of St. Ambrose, and in the former there is a plain reference to the ceremony of branch-bearing as one then in use, as well as to the act of the Jews which originally gave the name to the Sunday. The words are in the Benediction of the people: "May Almighty God grant unto you, that as ye present yourselves before Him with branches of palms and of other trees, so after your departure from this life ye may attain to appear before Him with the fruit of good works and the palm of victory." In the Ambrosian rite it is not so clear that the ceremony was then in use; but St. Chrysostom mentions the shaking of the palm-branches [σείων τὰ βῆλα] as one of the customs of the day in one of his sermons for the Great Week.

In the ancient English Church the Benediction of the Palms took place before the beginning of the Holy Communion. First an Acolyte read Exod. xv. 27-xvi. 10, the narrative of Israel's encamping by the twelve wells and threescore and

WHEN the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against JESUS, to put Him to death. And when they had bound Him, they led Him away, and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governour. Then Judas who had betrayed Him, when he saw that He was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day. (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of Him that was valued, Whom they of the children of Israel did value, and gave them for the potter's field, as the LORD appointed me.) And JESUS stood before the governour; and the governour asked Him, saying, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And JESUS said unto him, Thou sayest. And when He was accused of the chief priests and elders, He answered nothing. Then said Pilate unto Him, Hearest Thou not how many things they witness against Thee? And He answered him to never a word, insomuch that the governour marvelled greatly. Now at that feast the governour was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would. And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or JESUS Which is called CHRIST? For he knew that for envy they had delivered Him. When he was set down on the judgement-seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just Man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy JESUS. The governour answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas. Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with JESUS, Which is called CHRIST? They all say unto him, Let Him be crucified. And the governour said, Why, what evil hath He done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let Him be crucified. When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just Person: see ye to it. Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children. Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged JESUS he delivered Him to be crucified. Then the soldiers of the governour took JESUS into the common hall, and gathered unto Him the whole band of soldiers. And they stripped Him, and put on Him a scarlet ten palm-trees of Elim. Then a Deacon read St. John xii. 12-19, the account of our Lord's triumphal entry. After this the palm, yew, or willow branches being laid upon the Altar, the Priest (vested in a red silk cope) pronounced an exorcism and a blessing over them, which were followed by four Collects. A procession then passed round the Church, singing Anthems, and distributing the branches; after which began the celebration of the Holy Eucharist. The custom is still represented in some places by decking the Church with willow-branches on Palm Sunday; and almost everywhere by the country-people bearing them in their hands as they walk out in the afternoon.

On this day the Church has always begun to set before God and men the Gospel account of the Passion of our Lord. In the Lectionary of St. Jerome, and in the ancient Missals of the Church of England, St. Matthew's narrative, or "The Passion according to St. Matthew," was fixed for the Gospel on Palm Sunday, that of St. Mark on Tuesday, that of St. Luke on Wednesday, and that of St. John on Good Friday.<sup>1</sup> Until 1661 the 26th and 27th chapters of St. Matthew were still read for the Gospel on Palm Sunday, and the 18th and 19th of St. John on Good Friday; but a marginal note in Sancroft's writing is appended to both these days in the Durham book, directing the first chapter to be left out in each case, because it is appointed to be read in the Second Lesson.

The distinguishing characteristic of this day in the last week of our Lord's life is not represented in any of the Scriptures for the day, which are altogether occupied with our Lord's Passion. This arises from the change made in 1549, when the service for the Benediction of the Palms was set aside (in which this characteristic of the day was fully commemorated), and only the Ancient Mass of the day (which was commemorative of the Passion) retained. This oversight is to be regretted, as there is clearly a connection between the usage of palm-bearing and the Divine ritual, both of Sinai and the New Jerusalem. One of God's commands to the Jews was, "Ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days." [Lev. xxiii. 40.] And in the Revelation St. John writes, "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all

1. The Passion was said in a very remarkable manner, and is printed accordingly in the Salisbury Missal. Instead of the whole being said by the Gospeller, it was apportioned among three persons, apparently choir-men. Those words which were spoken by the Jews or the disciples had the letter "a" prefixed, and were directed to be sung or said [cantari aut pronuntiari] by an alto voice; the words of our Lord were marked "b," and to be sung by a bass voice; those of the Evangelist "m," to be sung by a tenor [media]. This singular custom was observed in reading the Passion from each of the four Evangelists; and is still kept up abroad.

robe. And when they had platted a crown of thorns they put it upon His head, and a reed in His right hand: and they bowed the knee before Him, and mocked Him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews. And they spit upon Him, and took the reed, and smote Him on the head. And after that they had mocked Him they took the robe off from Him, and put His own raiment on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him. And as they came out they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name; him they compelled to bear His cross. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull, they gave Him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink. And they crucified Him, and parted His garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted My garments among them, and upon My vesture did they cast lots. And sitting down they watched Him there; and set up over His head His accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS. Then were there two thieves crucified with Him; one on the right hand, and another on the left. And they that passed by reviled Him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save Thyself: if Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking Him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others, Himself He cannot save: if He be the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him. He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him: for He said, I am the Son of God. The thieves also, which were crucified with Him, cast the same in His teeth. Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour. And about the ninth hour JESUS cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This Man calleth for Elias. And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave Him to drink. The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save Him. JESUS, when He had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost. And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened, and many bodies of saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching JESUS, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the SON of God.

WHO is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in His apparel, travelling in the greatness of His strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art Thou red in Thine apparel, and Thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with Me: for I will tread them in Mine anger, and trample them in My fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon My garments, and I will stain all My raiment. For the day of vengeance is in Mine heart, and the year of My redemption is come. And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore Mine own arm brought salvation unto Me, and My fury it upheld Me. And I will tread down the people in Mine anger, and make them drunk in My fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth. I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which He hath bestowed on them, according to His mercies, and according to the multitude of His loving-kindnesses. For He said, Surely they are My people, children that will not lie: so He was their Saviour. In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the Angel of His Presence saved them: in His love, and in His pity, He redeemed them, and He bare them, and carried them all the days of old. But they rebelled, and vexed His HOLY SPIRIT; therefore He was turned to be their enemy, and He fought against them. Then He remembered the days of old, Moses and His people, saying, Where is He that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of His flock? where is He that put His HOLY SPIRIT within him? that led them by the right hand of Moses, with His glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make Himself an everlasting Name? that led them through the deep as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble? As a beast goeth down into the valley, the SPIRIT of the LORD caused Him to rest: so nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." [Rev. vii. 9.]

INTROIT.—Be not Thou far from me, O Lord: Thou art my succour, haste Thee to help me. Save me from the lion's mouth: Thou hast heard me from among the horns of the unicorns. Ps. My God, my God, look upon me; why hast Thou forsaken me? ["Non dicitur, Gloria Patri."]

MONDAY IN HOLY WEEK.

The distinctive memorial of this day is the act of our Blessed Lord in destroying the barren fig-tree. Having left Jerusalem in the evening of Palm Sunday and retired to Bethany, He returned to the city in the morning, and on His way He was hungry; and seeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, He came, if haply He might find anything thereon; and when He came to it, He found nothing but leaves; for didst Thou lead Thy people, to make Thyself a glorious Name. Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of Thy holiness, and of Thy glory : where is Thy zeal, and Thy strength, the sounding of Thy bowels, and of Thy mercies towards me? Are they restrained? Doubtless Thou art our FATHER, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not : Thou, O LORD, art our FATHER, our Redeemer, Thy Name is from everlasting. O LORD, why hast Thou made us to err from Thy ways? and hardened our heart from Thy fear? Return for Thy servants' sake, the tribes of Thine inheritance. The people of Thy holiness have possessed it but a little while : our adversaries have trodden down Thy sanctuary. We are Thine : Thou never barest rule over them ; they were not called by Thy Name.

THE GOSPEL. S. Mark xiv. 1-72.

AFTER two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread : and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take Him by craft, and put Him to death. But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people. And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as He sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious ; and she brake the box, and poured it on His head. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? for it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor : and they murmured against her. And JESUS said, Let her alone ; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on Me : for ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good ; but Me ye have not always. She hath done what she could ; she is come aforehand to anoint My body to the burying. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests to betray Him unto them. And when they heard it they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray Him. And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, His disciples said unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we go and prepare, that Thou mayest eat the passover? And He sendeth forth two of His disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water ; follow him : And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good-man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with My disciples? And he will shew you a large upper-room furnished, and prepared : there make ready for us. And His disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as He had said unto them : and they made ready the passover. And in the evening He cometh with the twelve. And as they sat, and did eat, JESUS said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with Me shall betray Me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto Him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? And He answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve that dippeth with Me in the dish. The Son of Man indeed goeth, as it is written of Him : but wo to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed : good were it for that man if he had never been born. And as they did eat, JESUS took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat : this is My Body. And He took the cup, and when He had given thanks He gave it to them : and they all drank of it. And He said unto them, This is My Blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God. And when they had sung an hymn they went out into the Mount of Olives. And JESUS saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of Me this night : for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. But, after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee. But Peter said unto Him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I. And JESUS saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with Thee, I will not deny Thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane : and He saith to His disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. And He taketh with Him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy, and saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death ; tarry ye here, and watch. And He went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed, that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from Him. And He said, ABBA, FATHER, all things are possible unto Thee ; take away this cup from Me ; nevertheless, not what I will, but what Thou wilt.

the time of figs was not yet. And Jesus answered and said unto it, "No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever." [St. Mark xi. 14.] From thence He went to the Temple, and cleansed it from the presence of those who carried their merchandise into the very house of God. Both actions are compared by ritualist commentators to that separation of the firmament from the subjacent waters out of which the earth was to spring, and which took place on the second day of the week of the Creation. As the Almighty Creator separated the waters above from the waters beneath, so the righteous Judge of all the earth separates the barren tree from the fruitful the house of prayer from the house of covetousness and dishonesty. Thus He foreshadowed the result of His Passion, by which the latter days of the Lord would be severed from the former days of the world ; and His final Judgement, in which the evil, and those who have been unfruitful in good works, will be altogether cast out of His Kingdom.

INTROIT.—Plead Thou my cause, O Lord, with them that strive with me ; and fight Thou against them that fight against me. Lay hand upon the shield and buckler, and stand up to help me. Ps. Bring forth the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me.

And He cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldst not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation: the spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak. And again He went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. And when He returned He found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer Him. And He cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth Me is at hand. And immediately, while He yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders. And he that betrayed Him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; take Him, and lead Him away safely. And as soon as he was come he goeth straightway to Him, and saith, Master, Master; and kissed Him. And they laid their hands on Him, and took Him. And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear. And JESUS answered, and said unto them, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves, to take Me? I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took Me not: but the Scriptures must be fulfilled. And they all forsook Him, and fled. And there followed Him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him: and he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked. And they led JESUS away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes. And Peter followed Him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest; and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire. And the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against JESUS to put Him to death; and found none. For many bare false witness against Him, but their witness agreed not together. And there arose certain, and bare false witness against Him, saying, We heard Him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands. But neither so did their witness agree together. And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked JESUS, saying, Answerest Thou nothing? what is it which these witness against Thee? But He held His peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked Him, and said unto Him, Art Thou the CHRIST, the SON of the BLESSED? And JESUS said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses? ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned Him to be guilty of death. And some began to spit on Him, and to cover His face, and to buffet Him, and to say unto Him, Prophecy: and the servants did strike Him with the palms of their hands. And as Peter was beneath in the palace there cometh one of the maids of the high priest; and when she saw Peter warming himself she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with JESUS of Nazareth. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this Man of Whom ye speak. And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that JESUS said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

TUESDAY IN HOLY WEEK.

This was the last day of our Lord's public teaching and ministration. Having retired to Bethany for the night on the evening of Monday as on that of Sunday, He again returned to the city in the morning of this day, and "as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots." In the Temple, the scribes and elders required from our Lord an explanation of the authority by which He did the things which He had done there, clearing the Temple of buyers and sellers, and claiming it as the house of His Father. The events of the day are then recorded with much fulness by the Evangelist. Our Lord spoke the parables of the Father and his two sons, the Vineyard let out to husbandmen, the Marriage Feast and the Wedding Garment. Each sect of the Jews, the Herodians, the Sadducees, and the Pharisees, endeavoured to entangle Him into some discourse which could be made the ground of an accusation against Him. Our Lord pronounced the eight woes, and then departed from the Temple to speak nearly His last words to the Jews in the parables of the Ten Virgins, the Talents, and the Sheep and the Goats. The latest public event of the day appears to be that recorded in St. John xii. 28-36, when in reply to the prayer, "Father, glorify Thy name," there came a voice from heaven saying, "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." After this voice our Lord spoke of His "lifting up" upon the Cross. He then gave His final words of public warning, "Yet a little while is the Light with you. Walk while ye have the Light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the Light, that ye may be the children of light." [St. John xii. 35, 36.] As soon as these words shall condemn Me? Lo, they all shall wax old as a garment: the moth shall eat them up. Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the Name of the LORD, and stay upon his God.

THE GOSPEL. S. Mark xv. 1-39.

AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders, and scribes, and the whole council, and bound JESUS, and carried Him away, and delivered Him to Pilate. And Pilate asked Him, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And He answering said unto him, Thou sayest it. And the chief priests accused Him of many things: but He answered nothing. And Pilate asked Him again, saying, Answerest Thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against Thee. But JESUS yet answered nothing: so that Pilate marvelled. Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection. And the multitude, crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them. But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews? For he knew that the chief priests had delivered Him for envy. But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them. And Pilate answered, and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto Him Whom ye call the King of the Jews? And they cried out again, Crucify Him. Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath He done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify Him. And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered JESUS, when he had scourged Him, to be crucified. And the soldiers led Him away into the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together the whole band. And they clothed Him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about His head: and began to salute Him, Hail, King of the Jews. And they smote Him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon Him, and bowing their knees worshipped Him. And when they had mocked Him they took off the purple from Him, and put His own clothes on Him, and led Him out to crucify Him. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear His cross. And they bring Him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull. And they gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but He received it not. And when they had crucified Him they parted His garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take. And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him. And the superscription of His accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. And with Him they crucify two thieves, the one on His right hand, and the other on His left. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And He was numbered with the transgressors. And they that passed by railed on Him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save Thyself, and come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves, with the scribes, He saved others; Himself He cannot save. Let CHRIST the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with Him reviled Him. And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. And at the ninth hour JESUS cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, He calleth Elias. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave Him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take Him down. And JESUS cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost. And the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. And when the centurion, which stood over against Him, saw that He so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this Man was the SON of GOD.

WHERE a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator: for a testament is of force after men are dead;

otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the testator liveth. Whereupon, neither the first testament was dedicated without blood: for when were spoken, the public teaching of the Light of the world came to an end, and He shone no more upon the multitude until He displayed Himself "lifted up" for their salvation: "These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide Himself from them." [St. John xii. 36.] Henceforth He lived to instruct His Apostles concerning their office and His, and to suffer.

Jesus Christ, in Whom is our salvation, life, and resurrection; by Whom also we are ransomed and saved. Ps. God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and lift up the light of His countenance upon us, and be merciful unto us.

WEDNESDAY IN HOLY WEEK.

The fourth day of the Holy Week marks the actual beginning of the events which reached their climax on Good Friday,

INTROIT.—We ought to glory in the Cross of our Lord

Moses had spoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament, which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover, he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For CHRIST is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of GOD for us; nor yet that He should offer Himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others: for then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgement: so CHRIST was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

“THE GOSPEL. S. Luke xxii. 1-71.

NOW the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill Him; for they feared the people. Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray Him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money. And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray Him unto them in the absence of the multitude. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat. And they said unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we prepare? And He said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the good-man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with My disciples? And he shall shew you a large upper-room furnished; there make ready. And they went, and found as He had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And when the hour was come He sat down, and the twelve Apostles with Him. And He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the Kingdom of God. And He took the cup, a S. U. H. Rom. an. Luke 22. & 23. Eastern. Matt. 26. 6-16.

and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the Kingdom of God shall come. And He took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is My Body, which is given for you: this do in remembrance of Me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in My Blood, which is shed for you. But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table. And truly the Son of Man goeth as it was determined; but wo unto that man by whom He is betrayed. And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And He said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as He that serveth. Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as My FATHER hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at My table in My kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And the LORD said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he the conspiracy of the Sanhedrim, and the agreement between them and Judas; on account of which it is always reckoned the day of the Betrayal. Among the ancient Offices of the Church of England for Holy Week there was one called Tenebrae, which was used late in the evening of this and the two succeeding days; and was, doubtless, a relic of the ancient night-watchings which accompanied the fastings of this week, and especially the last four days of it, in primitive times. The ceremony from which the distinctive name of the Office was derived consisted of the gradual extinction of lights one by one until the Church was left in darkness; when this significant memorial of the Crucifixion was heightened in its terrible solemnity by the singing of the fifty-first Psalm, the same that is said in the Communion Service.<sup>1</sup>

It was on this and the following day that our Blessed Lord gave to His Apostles those instructions and encouragements which are recorded in the thirteenth and four following chapters of St. John’s Gospel. They are given, it is probable, only in the form of a summary, yet even in that form they provide the Church with a solid foundation of doctrine respecting the continual Presence of her Lord, and her true unity through union with Him. The day seems to have been spent in the retirement of Bethany; and was concluded by another festival, held at the house of Simon the leper, when His head was anointed by a woman whose name is not given [St. Matt. xxvi. 6-13], as His feet had been on the Sabbath evening by Mary. This festival ended our Lord’s intercourse with the family of Lazarus, the next being spent with His Apostles alone.

INTROIT.—At the Name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. Because the Lord having become obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross; therefore Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Ps. O Lord, hearken to my prayer, and let my cry come unto Thee.

may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. And he said unto Him, LORD, I am ready to go with Thee both into prison and to death. And He said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest Me. And He said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing. Then said He unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, That this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me, And He was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning Me have an end. And they said, LORD, behold, here are two swords. And He said unto them, It is enough. And He came out, and went, as He was wont, to the mount of Olives, and His disciples also followed Him. And when He was at the place, He said unto them, Pray, that ye enter not into temptation. And He was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down and prayed, saying, FATHER, if Thou be willing, remove this cup from Me: nevertheless, not My will, but Thine be done. And there appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him. And being in an agony, He prayed more earnestly; and His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when He rose up from prayer, and was come to His disciples, He found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. And while He yet spake, behold, a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto JESUS to kiss Him. But JESUS said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss? When they which were about Him saw what would follow, they said unto Him, LORD, shall we smite with the sword? And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear. And JESUS answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And He touched his ear, and healed him. Then JESUS said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders who were come to Him, Be ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves? When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against Me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness. Then took they Him, and led Him, and brought Him into the high priest's house: and Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him, as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with Him. And he denied Him, saying, Woman, I know Him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not. And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with Him; for he is a Galilean. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew. And the LORD turned, and looked upon Peter; and Peter remembered the word of the LORD, how He had said unto him, Before the cock crew, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly. And the men that held JESUS mocked Him, and smote Him. And when they had blindfolded Him, they struck Him on the face, and asked Him, saying, Prophecy, who is it that smote Thee? And many other things blasphemously spake they against Him. And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief priests, and the scribes, came together, and led Him into their council, saying, Art Thou the CHRIST? tell us. And He said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe: and if I also ask you, ye will not answer Me, nor let Me go. Hereafter shall the Son of Man sit on the right hand of the power of God. Then said they all, Art Thou then the SON of GOD? And He said unto them, Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of His own mouth.

MAUNDY THURSDAY.

The fifth day of Holy Week was honoured by the Institution of the Holy Eucharist, and the names by which it has been known have almost always been derived from this distinguishing feature of the day. As early as the time of St. Augustine [Ep. liv. or cxviii. ad Januar.] it is called Dies Cœnæ Domini; and in later times Natalis Eucharistiae, or Natalis Calicis. The English name of Maundy Thursday also points to the same holy event, being a vernacular corruption of Dies Mandati; the day when our Lord commanded His disciples to love one another as He had loved them, to wash one another's feet in token of that love, and above all to "Do This,"—that is, to celebrate the Holy Eucharist after the pattern which He had shewn them,—as the sacramental bond of the Love which He had commanded. The day has also been called Feria mysteriorum, Lavipedium, and μεγάλη περτάς. In the Durham book Cosin added a second title to the present one, writing it "Thursday before Easter, commonly called Mandie Thursday."<sup>1</sup>

Our Lord's act of humility in washing the feet of His disciples took a strong and lasting hold upon the mind and affection of the Church; and the terms in which He

<sup>1</sup> The name Maundy is supposed by some to be derived from "maund," a basket such as beggars were accustomed to carry, or "maund," to beg. Another popular name was "Shere Thursday," and this was used by Cramer in his reply to the Devonshire rebels. [STRYFE'S Cranmer, ii. 530, Ecc. Hist. Soc. ed.]

among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the LORD's supper: for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What, have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of GOD, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. For I have received of the LORD that which also I delivered unto you, That the LORD JESUS, the same night in which He was betrayed, took bread; and when He had given thanks, He brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is My Body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of Me. After the same manner also He took the cup, when He had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in My Blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me. For as often as ye eat this

THE whole multitude of them arose, and led Him unto Pilate. And they began to accuse Him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying, That He Himself is CHRIST a King. And Pilate asked Him, saying, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And He answered him, and said, Thou sayest it. Then said Pilate to the chief priests, and to the people, I find no fault in this Man. And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the LORD's death till He come. Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the LORD, unworthily, shall be guilty of the Body and Blood of the LORD. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the LORD's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the LORD, that we should not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, My brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the Man were a Galilean. And as soon as he knew that He belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent Him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time. And when Herod saw JESUS he was exceeding glad; for he was desirous to see Him of a long season, because he had heard many things of Him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by Him. Then he questioned with Him in commanded them to follow His example not unnaturally led to a belief that the usage was in some manner and degree binding upon their successors. In later ages, however, the Church of England has considered the commandment to follow our Lord's example in that particular, as one which is not of a perpetual obligation; while “Do this in remembrance of Me,” is one the unceasing obligation of which has never been doubted.

Our Lord did, in fact, take a local and temporary custom, and use it as a practical exponent of His extreme humility, according to His words, “I am among you as He that serveth,” intensified as they are by St. Peter's remonstrance, “Thou shalt never wash my feet.” At His hands the act had doubtless a sacramental efficacy, such as followed every touch of His holy Person when it came in contact with those who had faith to receive His blessing. But the command with which He accompanied the act related to the humility and love symbolized by it, and did not entail a repetition of it by the Apostles or the Church of later ages, under circumstances in which the customs of a country or of a period had ceased to recognize the literal act as a necessity of social life. As a symbolical usage the Church has however always, in some parts of the world, retained the custom of washing the feet of the poor on Maundy Thursday, Sovereigns, Bishops, and Clergy thus marking their obligation to follow their Saviour in humility and love for His poor. It was continued by our English Sovereigns until the latter part of the seventeenth century, and by the Archbishops of York on their behalf until the middle of the last century. The ceremony formed part of a service, which is still represented (though in an altered form) by the “Royal Maundy” office, and was connected with special acts of almsgiving on the part of the Sovereign, which are likewise retained.<sup>1</sup>

In the ancient Offices of the Church of England there were several special observances on this day. First (after the hour of Nones) came the reconciliation of penitents, a custom handed down from primitive days. The Holy Communion was celebrated at the same time with Vespers, and there

O LORD, the Sovereign of the world, we acknowledge that Thine is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is Thine. Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all; both riches and honour come of Thee, and Thou reignest over all. In Thy hand is power and might, and in Thy hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all. Now therefore, our God, we thank Thee and praise Thy glorious name, that Thou hast not only bestowed greatness and majesty upon our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, but hast given her a heart also to take compassion on them that are below her, and shew mercy upon the poor and needy. Accept, most gracious God, of this tribute, which she pays unto Thee, the Giver of all good things, and make her still more fruitful and abundant in these, and in all other good works, that by mercy and truth she may be preserved, and her throne upholden by mercy. And stir up the hearts of all those who have now been partakers of her bounty.

many words; but He answered him nothing. And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused Him. And Herod with his men of war set Him at nought, and mocked Him, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe, and sent Him again to Pilate. And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests, and the rulers, and the people, said unto them, Ye have brought this Man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and behold, I, having examined Him before you, have found no fault in this Man touching those things whereof ye accuse Him: No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto Him. I will therefore chastise Him, and release Him. For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast. And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this Man, and release unto us Barabbas: (who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.) Pilate therefore, willing to release JESUS, spake again to them. But they cried, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him. And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath He done? I have found no cause of death in Him: I will therefore chastise Him, and let Him go. And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that He might be crucified: and the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required. And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered JESUS to their will. And as they led Him away, they laid hold upon one Simon a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after JESUS. And there followed Him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented Him. But JESUS, turning unto them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? And there were also two other, malefactors, led with Him to be put to death. And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified Him; and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. Then said JESUS, FATHER, forgive them, for they know not what they do. And they parted His raiment, and cast lots. And the people stood beholding; and the rulers also with them derided Him, saying, He saved others; let Him save Himself, if He be CHRIST, the chosen of God. And the soldiers also mocked Him, coming to Him, and offering Him vinegar, and saying, If Thou be the King of the Jews, save Thyself. And a superscription also was written over Him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS. And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on Him, saying, If Thou be CHRIST, save Thyself, and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds, but this Man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto JESUS, LORD, remember

Most blessed God, Who art good and dost good and takest pleasure in those that fear Thee and imitate Thy goodness, look down from Heaven, the throne of Thy glory, upon us Thy servants here prostrate before Thee, who thankfully acknowledge that we have nothing but what we have received from Thee, and therefore can give Thee nothing but what is Thine own. Fill our hearts, we beseech Thee, with the lively sense of Thy fatherly goodness, which hath bestowed so many benefits upon us that we are not able to number them, and likewise given us to understand the happiness of doing good with them; and assist us with the power of Thy holy Spirit, that we may be faithful stewards of Thy manifold gifts and graces, following the steps of our Lord and Master Christ, Whom Thou hast sent into the world, to be a pattern to us of humble goodness; unto which we pray Thee to quicken us by the consideration that we are but strangers and sojourners as all our fathers were, our days on the earth being as a shadow, and there is no abiding: That so nothing may tempt us to be high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in Thee, the living God, Who givest us all things richly to enjoy, that we may do good, and be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for ourselves a good foundation for the time to come, that we may lay hold on eternal life. And we most humbly beseech Thee, in a special manner to bless Her Majesty, whom Thou hast set over us; keep this ever in the thoughts of her heart, to endeavour to do much good with the power which Thou hast given her, and thereby magnify Thee exceedingly in the sight of all the people of these Realms, and bestow upon her such royal majesty as hath not been on any prince before her: All which we beg for the sake of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Saviour, to whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

Then follows the Prayer for the Queen, and so on to the end.

begins, "Post prandium<sup>1</sup> convenient clerici ad ecclesiam, ad altaria abluenda; et ad mandatum faciendum; et ad completorium dicendum." While the pedilavium was going on, the Psalms Deus miscreatur, Ecce quam bonum, Miscreere, Beati immaculati, and Audite hæc, omnes gentes, were sung; the Antiphon to Deus miscreatur being "Mandatum novum do vobis: ut diligatis invicem," from the first word of which the ceremony took its name. At its conclusion a sermon was preached, and then a "loving cup" (called "caritatis potum" in the Rubric) was passed round to all who had taken part in its performance. The whole ended with this Collect: "Adesto quæsumus, Domine, officio servitutis nostræ; et quia Tu pedes lavare dignatus es Tuis discipulis; ne despicias opera manuum Tuarum, quæ nobis retinenda mandasti: sed sicut exteriora hic abluuntur inquinamenta corporum; sic a Te omnium nostrorum interiora mudentur peccata, quod Ipse prestare digneris Qui cum Deo Patre et Spiritu Sancto visis et regnas Deus. Per." A vestige of this ceremony is still retained in the Chapel Royal, the Bishop who acts as Almoner, and his assistants, being girded with long linen towels during the distribution of the Alms.

Maundy Thursday is also the day on which the Chrism or anointing oil has been consecrated from time immemorial, and in all parts of the Church throughout the world. In the Eastern Church the Holy Sacrament to be reserved for the sick in the ensuing year is also consecrated on this day, the one element being saturated with the other, divided into small morsels, and carefully dried; after which it is preserved in a receptacle at the back of the Altar. [See Notes on Comm. of the Sick.]

INTROIT.—We ought to glory in the Cross of our Lord Jesus

me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom. And JESUS said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise. And it was about the sixth hour: and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst. And when JESUS had cried with a loud voice, He said, FATHER, into Thy hands I commend My spirit: and having said thus, He gave up the ghost. Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous Man. And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things that were done, smote their breasts, and returned. And all His acquaintance, and the women that followed Him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.

Christ, in Whom is our salvation, life, and resurrection; by Whom also we are ransomed and saved. Ps. God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and lift up the light of His countenance upon us, and be merciful unto us.

GOOD FRIDAY.

This day is not one of man's institution, but was consecrated by our Lord Jesus Christ when He made it the day of His most holy Passion. It is impossible that the anniversary of our Lord's sufferings could ever have passed by as a common day in those times when the memory of them was yet so recent, and when a daily fellowship in them [Phil. iii. 10; Col. i. 24] was so continually before the eyes of Christians in the martyrdoms of His faithful servants. It is spoken of under the name of the Paschal Day<sup>1</sup> in very early Christian writings [TERT. de Orat. xviii.], but in later ages it was chiefly known by the names Παράσκειν, Dies Parasceves, the Day of Preparation, or Dies Dominicæ Passionis, the Day of our Lord's Passion. In early English times it was known as Long Friday [ÆLFRED'S Can. 37, A.D. 957. A. Sax. Chron. A.D. 1137], and so it is still called "Lang Fredag" in Denmark and Sweden: but its present beautiful appellation is the one by which it has now been popularly known for many centuries.

Very soon after midnight our Blessed Lord was betrayed and apprehended; and about day-dawn He was taken before the judicial High Priest Annas, the ceremonial High Priest Caiaphas, and the Sanhedrim or great Council of the Jews [St. Matt. xxvi. 64; St. Mark xiv. 62; St. Luke xxii. 70], where He was accused of blasphemy. After that He was sent bound to Pilate, before whom He was charged with treason; and by Pilate sent to Herod as belonging to his jurisdiction. Having been mocked and insulted by Herod, the holy Jesus was sent back by him to the Roman governor, declared innocent of all crime against the state, yet scourged, to please the Jews, and for the same reason sentenced to be crucified. [St. Matt. xxvii. 3, 25; St. Mark xv. 1, 14; St. Luke xxiii. 1, 21; St. John xviii. 28; xix. 6.] Then He was insulted with the purple robe, and the reed sceptre, and a corona radiata made of thorns; was buffeted and spit upon; and afterwards led forth from the Prætorium by the Via Dolorosa to Calvary.

At the third hour [9 A.M., "Tierce"] our Lord, having borne His cross, or a portion of it, until His exhausted Body had fainted under the burden, was nailed to it upon Mount Calvary without Jerusalem, the two thieves being crucified on either side with the intention of adding shame to His sufferings. From the Cross He spoke His last words. As they fastened His limbs upon it He cried, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" [St. Luke xxiii. 34]; when the penitent thief prayed for His remembrance in His Kingdom, He said, "Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise." [St. Luke xxiii. 40.] When He beheld His mother and the beloved disciple standing at the foot of His Cross, He said to the one, "Woman, behold Thy son," and to the other, "Behold thy mother." [St. John xix. 26.]

At the sixth hour [Noon, "Sexts"] ensued the darkness and the earthquake; and during the three hours which followed before the return of light, it is supposed that our Lord's greatest sufferings took place, the veiling of the Father's Presence, the agony of "being made sin for us," and of having "laid upon Him the iniquity of us all." The awful mystery of these three hours was summed up in an ancient Litany, in ness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed LORD, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, JESUS CHRIST our LORD, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the HOLY SPIRIT, one GOD, world without end. Amen.

“THE EPISTLE. Heb. x. 1-25.

THE law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect: for then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore, when He cometh into the world, He saith, Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not, but a body hast Thou prepared Me: In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure: Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of Me) to do Thy will, O God. Above, when He said, Sacrifice and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin Thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein, which are offered by the Law: then said He, Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of JESUS CHRIST once for all. And every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins. But this Man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of GOD; from henceforth expecting till His enemies be made His foot-stool. For by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified: Whereof the HOLY GHOST also is a witness to us: for after that He had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the LORD, I will put My laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of JESUS, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh; and having an High Priest over the house of GOD; let us draw near with a true heart, in the words, “By Thine unknown sufferings, Good Lord, deliver us.” [St. Matt. xxvii. 45; St. Mark xv. 33; St. Luke xxiii. 44.]

At the ninth hour [3 P.M. “Nones”] the climax of this awful period was reached when our Lord spoke the words, “Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?” which are the first words of the twenty-second Psalm. [St. Matt. xxvii. 46; St. Mark xv. 34.] After this He said “I thirst” [St. John xix. 28], and when He had received the vinegar, “It is finished” [St. Matt. xxvii. 48; St. Mark xv. 36; St. Luke xxiii. 46; St. John xix. 30]; for now He knew that “all things were accomplished” of the Sacrifice for sin, and the sufferings of Him in Whom, sinless, all sinners were then represented before God. Then, crying with a loud voice, as with a willing expiration of that life which no man could take from Him, He laid it down of Himself with the last of His seven words from the Cross, “Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit” [St. Luke xxiii. 46], which are also words uttered by David in the spirit of prophecy in the sixth verse of the thirty-first Psalm.

It must have been shortly after this that the body of our Blessed Lord was taken down from the Cross, for the Sabbath began at six o'clock in the evening, and that Sabbath being “an high day,” the Jews entreated Pilate that it might be removed from the Cross (to be cast into the pit where the bodies of malefactors were thrown) before the legal beginning of the festival. Thus on the eve of the Sabbath, after being subjected to eighteen hours of mental agony and bodily suffering, the holy Jesus fulfilled, in His Body and Soul, the words of the Complaine Psalm, “I will lay Me down in peace, and take My rest: for it is Thou, Lord, only that makest Me to dwell in safety.” [Ps. iv. 8.]

With this Passion of our dear Lord in view, it has ever been the object of the Church to make the devotions of Good Friday such as should help Christians to realize the magnitude of the Sacrifice that He offered, of the sins by which it was made necessary, and of the Mercy which moved Him to offer it. “On the Paschal Day,” writes Tertullian [de Orat. xviii.], “the strict observance of the fast is general, and as it were public,” not restricted to those who professed to lead a life of closer devotion than others; works of charity were permitted, even to the extent of the rich ploughing the land of the poor, but no other labour was engaged in on this holy day. In all Churches the Passion of our Lord, as narrated in the Gospels, has ever formed the central subject of the day's meditation and teaching, while psalm and prophecy have been gathered around it in saddened and penitent tones, the more perfectly to represent before God and man the events of this central Day of the world's history. In the ancient services of the Day one was conspicuous, in which the Clergy and people shewed their veneration for the atoning work of Christ by ceremonies which acquired the popular name of “creeping to the Cross;” in which the image of the Cross was placed in the front of the altar, that they might more thoroughly realize the spirit of penitents “before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among them” [Gal. iii. 1], while they gave Him the lowliest adoration of their bodies.<sup>1</sup> During this ceremony of prostration before the Cross, the “Reproaches,” followed by the hymns, “Sing, my tongue, the glorious battle,” and “The Royal Banners forward go,” were sung to their well-known ancient and beautiful strains.

full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for He is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.

“THE GOSPEL. S. John xix. 1-37.

PILATE therefore took JESUS, and scourged Him. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on His head, and they put on Him a purple robe, and said, Hail, King of the Jews: and they smote Him with their hands. Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring Him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in Him. Then came JESUS forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the Man! When the chief priests therefore and officers saw Him, they cried out, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye Him, and crucify Him: for I find no fault in Him. The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law He ought to die, because He made Himself the SON of GOD. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid; and went again into the judgement-hall, and saith unto JESUS, Whence art Thou? But JESUS gave him no answer. Then saith Pilate unto Him, Speakest Thou not unto me? knowest Thou not that I have power to crucify Thee, and have power to release Thee? JESUS answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered Me unto thee hath the greater sin. And from thenceforth

Pilate sought to release Him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this Man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought JESUS forth, and sat down in the judgement-seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! But they cried out, Away with Him, away with Him, crucify Him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar. Then delivered he Him therefore unto them to be crucified: and they took JESUS, and led Him away. And He, bearing His cross, went forth into a place called the place which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha: where they crucified Him, and two other with Him, on either side one, and JESUS in the midst. And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross; and the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where JESUS was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews;

The “Reproaches” are a striking expansion of Micah iii. 3, 4, in which the loving-kindness of the Lord is contrasted with the ingratitude of those whom He came to save, carrying the idea through each step of the Passion. They are sung in the following form:—

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and thou hast prepared the Cross for thy Saviour.

Holy God, Holy and Mighty, Holy and Immortal; have mercy upon us.

I led thee forty years in the wilderness, and fed thee with manna, and brought thee into a goodly land.

Holy God, Holy and Mighty, Holy and Immortal; have mercy upon us.

What more could I have done unto thee that I have not done? I planted thee indeed My choicest Vine, and thou art become bitter unto Me; for thou hast given Me vinegar to drink, and hast pierced the side of thy Saviour.

Holy God, Holy and Mighty, Holy and Immortal; have mercy upon us.

For thy sake did I scourge Egypt with its firstborn, and thou didst deliver up Me to be scourged.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I led thee forth out of Egypt, and drowned Pharaoh in the Red Sea, and thou didst deliver up Me to the chief priests.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I opened the sea before thee, and thou hast opened My side with a spear.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I went before thee to lead thee in a cloudy pillar, and thou didst lead Me into the hall of Pilate.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I fed thee with manna in the wilderness, and thou didst fall upon Me with scourgings and buffetings.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I gave thee to drink living water out of the Rock, and thou didst give Me gall and vinegar.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

For thy sake did I smite the kings of the Canaanites, and thou didst smite Me on the head with a reed.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I gave thee a royal sceptre, and thou gavest to My head a crown of thorns.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

I lifted thee up in great strength, and thou didst lift Me up to hang upon the Cross.

O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? answer unto Me.

During this ceremony the red copes and chasuble which were worn in the other Offices of the day were set aside, and black copes alone were used; the utmost aspect of sorrow and mourning for sin being, at the same time, thrown over the church and all the instrumenta of Divine Service, by means of black hangings, a custom which has never been discontinued.

It is a very ancient practice of the Church to abstain from celebrating the Holy Communion on Good Friday. On Maundy Thursday (as has been already shewn) a portion of the Sacrament then consecrated was reserved in one element only, and this being placed in a chalice of unconsecrated wine on Good Friday, was then received by those who communicated instead of elements consecrated on the day itself. This Mass of the Pre-sanctified is an institution of very ancient date, but that He said, I am King of the Jews. Pilate answered, What I have written, I have written. Then the soldiers, when they had crucified JESUS, took His garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also His coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted My raiment among them, and for My vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did. Now there stood by the cross of JESUS, His mother, and His mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When JESUS therefore saw His mother, and the disciple standing by, whom He loved, He saith unto His mother, Woman, behold thy son. Then saith He to the disciple, Behold thy mother. And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home. After this, JESUS, knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to His mouth. When JESUS therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished: and He bowed His head, and gave up the ghost. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with Him. But when they came to JESUS, and saw that He was dead already, they break not His legs. But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced His side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water. And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe. For these things were done that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken. And again, another Scripture saith, They shall look on Him Whom they pierced.

being found in the Sacramentaries from which our modern Offices are so largely derived: and since it is traceable, on good evidence, as far back as the time of St. Augustine, it seems to represent the practice of the primitive Church. The use of this Office has been general in the Western Church for the greater part of the time of its existence. In the Eastern Church there is no recognition of the Eucharist at all on this day,<sup>1</sup> there being in fact almost a total absence of prayer altogether, the services consisting chiefly of the reading of prophecies and gospels respecting the Passion: and such appears also to be the practice of the Ambrosian Rite.

But although this custom may be of primitive origin, it has not been preserved in its primitive form. In the Church of England before the Reformation the practice had grown up of the priest alone receiving on Good Friday the Holy Sacrament which had been consecrated on Maundy Thursday; and this is still the practice of the Latin Church. The Sacramentary of St. Gregory clearly indicates that in the early Church others communicated with him as on other days. The Rubric directs, "Cum dixerint Amen, sumit de sancta, et ponit in calicem, nihil dicens. Et communicant omnes cum silentio, et expleta sunt universa." [Menard's ed. p. 70; comp. pp. 77, 87.] In the tenth century a Canon of the Church of England which enjoins the reservation on Holy Thursday and certain ceremonies to be used on Good Friday, adds respecting the latter day, "Then let him," i.e. the priest, "go to house, and whosoever else pleases." [JOHNSON'S Canons, i. 404.] In fact, Martene proves that Communion of the Laity as well as of the priest on this day was the prevailing custom of the Church until the tenth century at least; and there are strong grounds for believing that the practice continued down to the time of the Reformation.

The exact intention of the English rite is not easy to ascertain. The appointment of an Epistle and Gospel is (under the circumstances in which the Prayer Book was set forth) a prima facie evidence that Consecration on Good Friday was intended to supersede the Mass of the Pre-sanctified which had been hitherto used; and Communion was, of course, intended to follow. On the other hand, this was a deviation from the ancient practice of the Church, which was not in accordance with the respect for it shewn by those who set forth our first English Prayer Book. Such a deviation can only be accounted for by supposing that strong reasons against reservation were present to the Reformers, but that, at the same time, they did not contemplate depriving the Church of Christ's Sacramental Presence on this Holy Day, and therefore enjoined the ordinary Service with consecration.

The practice of the Church of England since the Reformation certainly seems to have been to celebrate the Holy Communion on this day. On Good Friday in 1564 [March 31] Queen Elizabeth openly thanked one of her preachers in her Chapel for his sermon in defence of the Real Presence, which seems to shew that the Holy Eucharist was then celebrated. [HEYLIN'S Ref. ii. 317, Eccles. Hist. Soc. ed.] And in Bishop Andrewes' Sermons on the Passion there are allusions to it which put the matter beyond a doubt.

The conclusions that may be drawn are, [1] that the Church of England never intended so far to depart from ancient habits as to be without the Sacramental Presence of Christ on the Day when His Sacrifice is more vividly brought to mind than on any other day in the year: [2] that from the introduction of the un-Catholic custom of Communion by the priest alone, or for some other reason, it was thought best to disuse the Mass of the Pre-sanctified and substitute Consecration: [3] that it is a less evil to depart from ancient usage by consecrating on this day than to be without the Sacramental Presence of our Lord.

EASTER EVE.

The day between Good Friday and Easter Day commemorates the Descent of our Blessed Lord's soul into hell, and the rest of His body in the grave. In the Gospel we are told that this Sabbath-day was "an high day" in the Jewish ritual. It was the day when all were to be present before the Lord [Exod. xxiii. 17], and when the sheaf of the first-fruits was to be offered. [Lev. xxiii. 10, 11.] In the Christian Church it at once acquired the name of the "Great Sabbath," being so called in the Epistle of the Church of Smyrna respect-

<sup>1</sup> No consecration of the Holy Eucharist is allowed during Lent in the Eastern Church except on Saturday and Sunday. The feast of the Annunciation is the only exception to this rule. Communicants on all other days receive the pre-sanctified elements.

Him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for His merits, Who died, and was buried, and rose again for us, Thy SON JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

[O MOST gracious God, look upon us in mercy, and grant that as we are baptized into the death of Thy SON our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST; so by our true and hearty repentance all our sins may be buried with Him, and we not fear the grave; that as CHRIST was raised up from the dead by the glory of Thee, O FATHER, so we also may walk in newness of life, but our sins never be able to rise in judgement against us; and that for the merit of JESUS CHRIST, that died, was buried, and rose again for us. Amen.]

IT is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing. For CHRIST also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the SPIRIT. By which also He went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing; wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto, even baptism, doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the resurrection of JESUS CHRIST: Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto Him.

WHEN the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathæa, named Joseph, who also himself was JESUS' disciple. He went to Pilate, and begged the body of JESUS. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock; and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre. Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while He was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest His disciples come by night and steal Him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch; go your way, make it as sure as ye can. So they went and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

ing the martyrdom of St. Polycarp. The ancient Epistle and Gospel referred to Holy Baptism, and to our Lord's Resurrection: those now appointed were introduced into the Prayer Book of 1549. The ancient Collect was, "O God, Who didst make this most holy night to shine with the glory of our Lord's resurrection; preserve in Thy new-born family the spirit of adoption which Thou hast given; that they, being renewed both in body and mind, may render unto Thee a pure service, through the same our Lord." This was not adopted in the translated Offices of the Church (probably because it had been associated with the blessing of the new fire and the Paschal candle); nor was any Collect provided for the day until 1637, when that printed above was inserted in the Prayer Book prepared for Scotland. This is thought to have been the composition of Archbishop Laud, and was the foundation of the present Collect, which is first found in Cosin's writing in the margin of the Durham book. Even this modern Collect keeps up a memorial of the primitive custom of the Church in administering Baptism on Easter Eve. But the practice having fallen into disuse,<sup>1</sup> the devotional tone of the day is brought into a more direct and close analogy with the Holy Week history of our Blessed Lord by the commemoration of His burial, in the Gospel, and His Descent into Hell, in the Epistle. [See notes to the Apostles' Creed.]

The Vigil of Easter has always been celebrated with much ceremony, even from primitive times. It is mentioned by Tertullian [ad Uzorem, ii. 4], and in the Apostolical Constitutions [v. 20], by Eusebius [vi. 9], Lactantius [vii. 19], St. Chrysestom, and St. Jerome. St. Gregory Nazianzen [Orat. xlv. in Pasch.] speaks of the churches being so lighted up that it seemed like day, and this he refers to as a symbolical usage (in the spirit of the ancient Collect given above), memorializing the glorious illumination brought on the world by the Resurrection of the Sun of Righteousness. The services continued until after midnight, to welcome the early dawn of the Resurrection; and also from a tradition (current among the Jews as well) that the second coming of Christ will be in the night of Easter Eve.<sup>2</sup> At a later period, and in the ancient Offices of the English Church, the new fire, the Paschal candle, and the incense, all received Benediction on this day for use in the succeeding year.

There has ever been something of festive gladness in the celebration of Easter Eve, which sets it apart from Lent, notwithstanding the fast still continues. To the disciples it was a day of mourning after an absent Lord; but the Church of the Resurrection sees already the triumph of that Lord over Satan and Death. In the promise of the prophetic words, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction" [Hos. xiii. 14], she sees afar off the dawn of the Resurrection, and already the words sound in her ears, "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." A celebration of the Holy Communion took place on this day, as on Maundy Thursday, at the time of Vespers; and in the place of the Introit was sung Gloria in Excelsis Deo, with its response, Et in terra pax hominibus, while the bells of the church were ringing in the joys of Easter.<sup>3</sup> At Milan, "Ad Missam in ecclesia majore," the announcement of our Lord's Resurrection was thrice made in the words, "Christus Dominus resurrexit," when the response thrice followed, "Deo gratias."

<sup>1</sup> A Preface to the Baptismal Offices, which was erased from the Prayer Book in 1661, began: "It appeareth by ancient writers, that the sacrament of Baptism in the old time was not commonly ministered but at two times in the year, at Easter and Whitsuntide; . . . which custom (now being grown out of use), although it cannot," etc. [See notes to Baptism.]

EASTER DAY.

They who went about "preaching Jesus and the Resurrection," and who observed the first day of the week as a continual memorial of that Resurrection, must have remembered with vivid and joyous devotion the anniversary of their Lord's restoration to them. It was kept as the principal festival of the year, therefore, in the very first age of the Church, and Easter had become long familiar to all parts of the Christian world so early as the days of Polycarp and Anicetus, who had a consultation at Rome in A.D. 158, as to whether it should be observed according to the reckoning of Jewish or Gentile Christians. [Irenæus in Euseb. v. 24.] Eusebius also records the fact that Melitus, Bishop of Sardis about the same time, wrote two books on the Paschal festival [Euseb. iv. 26], and Tertullian speaks of it as annually celebrated, and the most solemn day for Baptism. [De Jejun. 14; De Bapt. 19.] Cyprian, in one of his Epistles, mentions the celebration of Easter solemnities [vii.]; and in writers of later date the festival is constantly referred to as the "most holy Feast," "the great Day" [Conc. Ancyra vi.], the Feast of Feasts, the Great Lord's Day, and the Queen of Festivals. [GREG. NAZ. Orat. in Pasch.]

The original name of the Festival was one which also included Good Friday, Πάσχα, which was derived from the Aramaic form of the Hebrew name for Passover. This name was also retained in the Latin : and in the time of Leo the Great, when the distinction began to be made of the Pascha Dominicæ Passionis, and the Pascha Dominicæ Resurrectionis, Dies Paschæ began to be understood chiefly, and soon alone, of Easter. In England the same name was also once familiar, perhaps derived from the French language, and Easter eggs are still called "pasque" [or in a corrupt form "paste"] eggs all over the North of England. The more familiar name of Easter is, however, traceable as far back as the time of the Venerable

Bede, who derives it from the name of a pagan goddess Eostre, or Ostera, whose festival happened about the time of the vernal equinox [De ratione Temporum, xiii.], and was observed as a time of general sacrifices, with a view to a good harvest. Later, and perhaps more trustworthy, philologists have derived the word from the old Teutonic urstan, to rise, and urstand, the Resurrection : and it is significant that the idea of sunrise is self-evident in the English name of the festival on which the Sun of Righteousness arose from the darkness of the grave. The popular name for the day among Oriental Christians is Λαμπρά, the Bright Day, in which the same idea is to be observed. In old English Calendars Easter is called "the uprising of our Lord," and "the A7enrising of our Lord."

The Judaizing habits which caused so much trouble in the earliest days of Christianity long retained a hold upon many portions of the Church in respect to the observance of Easter. In the Western Church the festival was always kept on the first day of the week, as being the actual day which our Lord had consecrated by His Resurrection ; but the Churches of Asia kept it on the third day after the 14th of the Jewish month Nisan, whatever day of the week this might be. In the second and third centuries there was much controversy respecting this difference of computation ; but the first Canon of the Council of Arles [A.D. 314] ordered Easter to be celebrated on one day everywhere, and the Council of Nicæa [A.D. 325] authoritatively ruled that Easter was to be kept on the Lord's Day.<sup>1</sup> There being also much difficulty in determining, without scientific help, which Sunday in March or April was the proper one, the same Council directed that everlasting life ; We humbly beseech Thee, that, as by Thy special grace preventing us Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect ; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the HOLY GHOST, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

THE first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre. Then she runneth and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple whom JESUS loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the LORD out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him. Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre. So they ran both together ; and the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre ; and he, stooping down and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying ; yet went he not in. Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

the Church of Alexandria should send timely notice to other principal Churches of the day on which the true Easter would occur in the ensuing year, and that thus an uniform practice should be maintained throughout the Christian world.<sup>1</sup> It was not, however, until the eighth century that the computation of Easter was settled on sufficiently accurate calculations to ensure uniformity ;<sup>2</sup> and the Church of England retained, for some ages, a modified form of the Jewish method, which was not wholly banished from the northern parts of the island until A.D. 714. These two methods of computing Easter may be shortly explained by adding that the Jewish or "Quartodeciman" computation aimed at observing the very day of our Lord's Resurrection (as we observe the day of His Nativity) ; while the method which ultimately became universal aims at observing that Lord's Day as Easter which comes next after the actual anniversary. Each method claimed Apostolic authority from the first : Polycarp, who advocated the Jewish system, declared that it was derived from St. John, with whom he was contemporary ; while the Bishops of Rome and others believed themselves to be following a custom handed down to them from St. Peter and St. Paul.

The Anthems instead of "Venite exultemus" represent the primitive custom of Easter morning, when the versicle "The Lord is risen," and the response "He is risen indeed," were the formal salutation between Christians. In the ancient rite of the English Church one of these anthems was said in procession before Mattins ; and the service was retained in 1549. It may be useful to the reader to see the Latin and English forms side by side.

<sup>1</sup> There is a relic of this practice in the Ambrosian Rite, where the following proclamation of Easter is directed to be made on the Feast of the Epiphany :—

"Annunciatio diei Paschatis per Diaconum.
"Noverit charitas vestra, fratres charissimi, quod annuente Dei et Domini nostri Jesu Christi misericordia, die tali mensis talis Pascha Domini celebrabimus."

<sup>2</sup> See note on the "Tables to find Easter." The Venerable Bede says that the error of the British Church arose merely from its isolated situation, which prevented it from receiving year by year the Synodal decrees respecting the week in which Easter fell. "They did not keep Easter," he also says, "always on the fourteenth day of the moon with the Jews, as some have imagined, but on Sunday, although not in the proper week" [Bede's Ecl. Hist. iii. 1.]

The present Rubric substituting these Anthems for the Venite was introduced in 1552 :<sup>3</sup> they were not pointed in 1549.

In the Salisbury Use there was a celebration at a late hour on Easter Eve, probably after midnight ; and in the Prayer Book of 1549 two celebrations are directed for Easter Day, the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for the first of which are those which are still retained ; the Epistle being that previously in use on Easter Eve. The second celebration had the Collect which is now used (as it then was also) for the Octave of Easter Day, and the Epistle and Gospel of the ancient Missal.

But their eyes were holden, that they should not know Him. And He said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad? And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering, said unto Him, Art Thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days? And He said unto them, What things? And they said unto Him, Concerning JESUS of Nazareth, Which was a Prophet mighty in deed and word, before GOD and all the people: and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered Him to be

Then He said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: ought not CHRIST to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory? And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself. And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went; and He made as though He

EASTER MONDAY.

The extension of the Easter festival through seven days is mentioned by St. Chrysostom in one of his Easter homilies, by St. Augustine in one of his Epistles [lv. ad Januar.], and in the Code of Theodosius, which directed a cessation of labour during the whole of the week. The Sacramentary of St. Gregory contains a service for each day, as does also the Salisbury Missal. Yet there are many ancient precedents for the course taken in the later English rite, which limits the special services to three days. At the Council of Mayence [A.D. 813] a canon was passed which restricted the celebration of Easter to four days. The thirty-seventh Canon of Ælfric [A.D. 957] directs the clergy to charge their people, that they keep the first four days of Easter free from all servile work. A Council of Constance [A.D. 1094] enjoined that Pentecost and Easter should both be celebrated with three festival days; and these τριήμερος προθεσμία are spoken of even by Gregory Thaumaturgus in the third century. There seems, therefore, to have been considerable diversity as to the number of days observed, but a general consent in setting apart several days after Sunday in special honour of the festival of our Lord's Resurrection.

In the margin of his Durham Prayer Book, Bishop Cosin wrote out for use on this day the Collect, "O God, Who for our redemption . . ." which had been formerly appointed for the Procession before Mattins.

INTROIT.—The Lord hath brought you into a land flowing with milk and honey. Alleluia. Wherefore, let the law of the Lord be ever in your mouth. would have gone further: but they constrained Him, saying, Abide with us, for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And He went in to tarry with them. And it came to pass, as He sat at meat with them, He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him, and He vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures? And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, saying, The LORD is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how He was known of them in breaking of bread.

MEN and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent. For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him. And though they found no cause of death in Him, yet desired they Pilate that He should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him, they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a sepulchre. But God raised Him from the dead: and He was seen many days of them which came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are His witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up JESUS again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. And as concerning that He raised Him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, He said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore He saith also in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer Thine HOLY ONE to see corruption. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: But He Whom God raised again saw no corruption. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Beware therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honey-comb. And He took it, and did eat before them. And He said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of GOD is greater: for this is the witness of GOD, which He hath testified of His SON. He that believeth on the SON of GOD hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not GOD hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the record that GOD gave of His SON. And this is the record, that GOD hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in His SON. He that hath the SON hath life; and he that hath not the SON of GOD hath not life.

LOW SUNDAY.

All the days between Easter and its Octave have "in albis" added to them in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, but the Sunday after Easter is called Dominica octavas Pasche. From a very ancient period, however, it has been called "Dominica post albas," or (as in the Ambrosian Missal), "Dominica in albis depositis," and shortly, "Dominica in albis," because on this day the newly baptized first appeared without the chrisms or white robes which they had worn every day since their baptism on Easter Eve. The popular English name of Low Sunday has probably arisen from the contrast between the joys of Easter and the first return to ordinary Sunday services. On this Sunday, or sometimes on the fourth Sunday after Easter, it was the custom, in primitive days, for those who had been baptized the year before to keep an anniversary of their baptism, which was called the Annotine Easter, although the actual anniversary of the previous Easter might fall on another day. [Micrologus, lvi.] The Epistle evidently bears on this custom, and sets forth the new birth of Baptism as the beginning of an abiding power of overcoming the world through its connection with the Risen Christ, the source of our regeneration. The ancient writer just referred to suggests the reflection, that if we celebrate the anniversary of that day when we were born to eternal death through original sin, how much rather ought we to keep in memory the day when we were new born into eternal life?<sup>1</sup>

The Collect appointed for this Sunday in 1549 was that now in use; being the same that was appointed for the second communion on Easter Day, and for Easter Monday and Tuesday. In 1552, when the special service for this second communion was discontinued, the Collect at present in use on Easter Day was substituted. In both cases Low Sunday was regarded as the Octave of Easter, according to the ancient rite; but in 1661 the original Collect of the day was restored at the suggestion of Cosin, the change that had removed it from use on Easter Day being overlooked, and thus the ritual symmetry of the two services was marred.

But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with GOD. For even hereunto were ye called: because CHRIST also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow His steps: Who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth: Who, diverge from the fact of the Resurrection to the results of it, as giving to the Church a Saviour abiding with us for ever. In the Epistle and Gospel He is set forth as the Chief Pastor, the High Priest of the New Dispensation; and His own words, "I am the Good Shepherd," are taken up by His chief Apostle when he calls Him "the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." The Collect is, however, based on the idea of Christ's holy example as referred to in the first part of the Epistle, and neither in the modern nor in the ancient service is there any recognition of the beautiful parable which our Lord spoke of Himself in the Gospel, except that the first words of it were taken for the "Communion," or sentence sung during the communion of the laity. Durandus states that the Epistle and Gospel concerning the sheep and the Shepherd are connected with a Roman custom of holding councils on this day; but if so, the custom must be more ancient than the days of St. Jerome, in whose Lectionary they are found. It seems probable that Christ's example to His pastors is, however, the idea of the Sunday, not His example to all.

In both Epistle and Gospel (considering the season at which they are used) there must be taken to be a reference to victory gained by suffering. The Good Shepherd would not win His flock by agreeing to the Tempter's suggestion, "All these things will I give Thee, and the glory of them, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me," for that would have been no victory at all: but He won them by giving up His life for them; and the seeming extinction of all hope on Good Friday was the step to that triumph by which the "kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of the Lord and of His Christ," the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. The humble obedience of the Son of Man, "even unto death," has made Him an Example to all ages, the Leader of an innumerable army of saints, and the Fountain of the pastoral and sacerdotal office, by the ministrations of which men are gathered into the one fold of salvation.

THE THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

On this Sunday the risen Saviour is presented to us as the strength of the regenerate, the Fountain of spiritual ability for all Christians, as well as of pastoral ability for His ministers. For the mystical Presence of Christ is the power by which those who are admitted into the Christian body are able to eschew evil and follow good, and it was this Mystical Presence of which Christ spoke in the words of the Gospel.

During the period which is now being commemorated, the Lord Jesus was seen again by His disciples; and yet they must have been possessed by a conviction that it was not for long, and that their Master was to be taken away from their head as Elijah was from Elisha. At such a time, and as their faith grew with the Resurrection Life of their Lord, the words He had formerly spoken to them must have recurred to their minds as words which had already been in part fulfilled, and of which a still more glorious fulfilment was in prospect. Because He was going to the Father to present His natural Verily, verily I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. A woman, when she is in travail, hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world. Body as an ever-living Intercession, He could not be seen by the bodily eyes of His little flock; but because He was going to the Father to be a continual Mediator and Intercessor, the benefits of His Presence would be manifestly given to the many, even as if the eyes of all the faithful rested upon His visible Person.

Thus had the Good Shepherd comforted His flock before His Death: and thus in the Divine Service of His Church He is ever at this season speaking to us, and bidding us look to Him as a Saviour present in His Church, and to be beheld by the eyes of those who will look for Him in faith. A Presence which Christ could speak of in such terms as those of this day's Gospel may well be called Real, and in such a Presence His people may well look for that strength of the regenerate which will enable them to fulfil the duties of the regenerate.

When the Collect was first composed, the words, "them that are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion" referred especially to those who had been baptized at Easter.

INTROIT.—O be joyful in God, all ye lands. Alleluia. Sing praises unto the honour of His Name. Alleluia. Make His praise to be glorious. Alleluia. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. Say unto God, O how wonderful art Thou in Thy works, through the greatness of Thy power. Glory be.

THE FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

The Collect for this day originally, i.e. in 1549, stood in English exactly as it stands in the Latin: "Almighty God, Which dost make the minds of all faithful men to be of one will. . . ." Bishop Cosin altered the latter words to "make all men to be of one mind," but the present form was eventually adopted, and the idea of unity was thus taken out of the Collect. The omission is the more singular, since there is in the Gospel a reference to the Holy Spirit by Whom this unity is effected.

The Epistle and Gospel point in the same direction as those of the preceding Sunday, viz. to the good and perfect Gift which would be bestowed upon the Church after, and through, the bodily departure of Christ to heaven. It seemed strange and hard to bear that it should be expedient for Him to go away Who had been the Leader and Benefactor of His disciples and all who were willing to receive Him; but He spoke these words to them beforehand that they might be comforted with some foreshadowing of the glory and blessing of the New Dispensation which was to be perfected in His Resurrection and Ascension; and be prepared for perceiving, when the fruit of the Resurrection was ripe for gathering, that the departure of Christ to heaven was a greater gain to them through His mystical Presence than His remaining upon earth could have been. This good and perfect gift, the gift which the Spirit of truth bestows upon the Church, and through the corporate Church on all its individual members, is therefore set before us as we draw near to Ascension Day as the true reason why all sorrow, because of her Lord's departure, should be banished from the Church. The Comforter will come to bestow the Gift of the Word of God engrafted upon human nature, and in that gift to bestow Light, Truth, and Salvation.

INTROIT.—O sing unto the Lord a new song. Alleluia. For He hath done marvellous things. Alleluia. His righteousness hath He openly shewed in the sight of the heathen. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. With His own right hand, and with His holy arm, hath He gotten Himself the victory. Glory be.

EVERY good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the FATHER of lights, with Whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of His own will begat He us with the Word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of His creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted Word, which is able to save your souls.

[JESUS said unto His disciples,] Now I go My way to Him that sent Me, and none of you asketh Me, Whither goest Thou? But, because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheless, I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgement: of sin, because they believe not on Me; of righteousness, because I go to My FATHER, and ye see Me no more; of judgement, because the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when He, the SPIRIT of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come. He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall shew it unto you. All things that the FATHER hath are Mine: therefore said I, that He shall take of Mine, and shall shew it unto you.

BE ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the Word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the ROGATION SUNDAY.

The fifth Sunday after Easter being the first day of the week in which the Rogation days occur, has taken its name from them, and is usually called Rogation Sunday. The striking appropriateness of the Gospel, which contains our Lord's words about asking in His Name, seems to indicate that it was either chosen for this day on account of its position with reference to the Rogation days, or that the latter were appointed to be observed on the three days following because the Gospel already distinguished this as the Sunday concerning Asking. Both the Epistle and Gospel are found in the Lectionary of St. Jerome; and as the Rogation days are generally said to have been instituted in the fifth century, the latter seems the more probable theory. The Collect has an evident connection with the purpose of the Rogation days; and so, perhaps, has the latter part of the Epistle. Bishop Cosin wished to insert a new rubric at the end of the Gospel, "This Collect, Epistle, and Gospel shall be used only upon this day."

INTROIT.—With the voice of singing declare ye, declare ye. Alleluia. Utter it even to the end of the earth, say ye that the Lord hath redeemed His people. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. O be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands. Sing praises unto the honour of His Name. Make His praise to be glorious. Glory be.

leave the world, and go to the FATHER. His disciples said unto Him, Lo, now speakest Thou plainly, and speakest no proverb. Now are we sure that Thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask Thee: by this we believe that Thou camest forth from God. JESUS answered them, Do ye now believe? Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered every man to his own, and shall leave Me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the FATHER is with Me. These things I have spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

THE ASCENSION DAY.

In Die Ascensionis Domini.

THE COLLECT.

GRANT, we beseech Thee, Almighty GOD, that like as we do believe Thy only-begotten SON our LORD JESUS CHRIST to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the HOLY GHOST, one God, world without end. Amen.

<sup>a</sup> ORATIO.

CONCEDE quæsumus omnipotens DEUS, ut qui hodierna die Unigenitum Tuum Redemptorem nostrum ad cælos ascendisse credimus, Ipsi quoque mente in cælestibus habitemus. Per eundem DOMINUM nostrum.

THE former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that JESUS began both to do and teach, until the day in which He was taken up, after that He through the HOLY GHOST had given commandments unto the Apostles whom He had chosen: to whom also He shewed Himself alive after His passion, by many infallible proofs; being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of GOD: and, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the FATHER, which, saith He, ye have heard of Me. For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the HOLY GHOST not many days hence. When they therefore were come together, they asked of Him, saying, LORD, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

And He said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the FATHER hath put in His own power. But ye shall receive power after that the HOLY GHOST is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld, He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight. And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven, as He went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same JESUS, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven.

THE ROGATION DAYS.

On the authority of St. Gregory of Tours (who wrote in the latter part of the sixth century) the institution of the Rogation Days is attributed to Mamertus, Bishop of the French diocese of Vienne, A.D. 452. A terrible calamity is said to have occurred to the diocese or city of Vienne (by earthquake and fire, and by the incursion of wolves and other wild beasts), on account of which Mamertus set apart the three days before Ascension Day as a solemn fast, during which processions with Litanies were to be made throughout the diocese. [See Introduction to the Litany.] The custom is supposed to have been taken up by other dioceses, and to have extended itself from France to England, but not to have been recognized at Rome until the eighth or ninth century. A more probable account is that the Rogation Days were instituted at some earlier period, for the purpose of asking God's Blessing on the rising produce of the earth; and that Mamertus chose them as the time for a solemn observance in deprecation of God's anger with reference to the special troubles of his day.

There was a Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for the Rogation Days in the Salisbury Missal, but these were not retained in the Prayer Book, although there is a Homily in three parts "for the days of Rogation week,"<sup>1</sup> and an "Exhortation to be spoken to such Parishes where they use their Perambulations in Rogation week, for the oversight of the bounds and limits of their town." Bishop Cosin proposed to supply this omission, and wrote the following in the margin of the Durham Prayer Book:—

"THE COLLECT.

"Almighty God, Lord of Heaven and Earth, in Whom we live, and move, and have our being; Who dost good unto all men, making Thy sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sending rain on the just and on the unjust; favourably behold us Thy people, who call upon Thy Name, and send us Thy Blessing from heaven in giving us fruitful seasons, and filling our hearts with food and gladness; that both our hearts and months may be continually filled with Thy praises, giving thanks to Thee in Thy holy Church through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."<sup>2</sup>

A Collect was also proposed by the Commission of 1689, which is worthy of being placed beside that of Bishop Cosin:—

"Almighty God, Who hast blessed the earth that it should be fruitful, and bring forth every thing that is necessary for the life of man, and hast commanded us to work with quietness and eat our own bread; bless us in all our labours, and grant us such seasonable weather that we may gather in the fruits of the earth, and ever rejoice in Thy goodness, to the

<sup>2</sup> This Collect first appears in Cosin's Devotions, originally printed in 1626. It is not quite so rhythmical as some others of his composition, and perhaps the following form of it is better adapted for intonation:—

"Almighty God, Lord of Heaven and Earth, in Whom we live, and move, and have our being; Who dost cause Thy sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendest rain both upon the just and the unjust: we beseech Thee, favourably to behold Thy people who call upon Thee, sending Thy Blessing down from heaven to give us a fruitful season; that both our hearts and mouths being continually filled with Thy goodness, we may evermore give thanks unto Thee in Thy holy Church, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

In the same volume there is another admirable Collect for the Ember Week in September, which would be a most suitable one to use for a Harvest Thanksgiving Celebration.

<sup>1</sup> The title of this Homily, "That all good things come from God," seems to be suggested by the Collect for the Sunday.

“THE GOSPEL. S. Mark xvi. 14-20.

And they went forth and preached every where, the LORD working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following.

The following Table shews the old Epistles and Gospels for the three days, those proposed by Cosin, and also those suggested by the Commission of 1689. [See also the Table of Proper Psalms.]

The religious Services of the Rogation Days are not limited to the walls of the Church. From very ancient days “Perambulations” around the boundaries of the parish have been made in procession, and the Litany, or a portion of it, with the 103rd and 104th Psalm sung at various stations, marked by crosses, or still remembered by the parishioners from generation to generation, even when the crosses have ceased to mark the spots. It is not necessary to occupy space with the details of well-known usages connected with these perambulations, but it may be as well to set before the reader an extract from the Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, issued in 1559, in which both the secular and the religious purpose of the procession is referred to:—

“... For the retaining of the perambulation of the Circuits of Parishes, they shall once in the year at the time accustomed with the Curate and the substantial men of the Parish walk about the Parishes as they were accustomed, and at their return to the Church make their common prayers.

“Provided, that the Curate in their said common Perambulations, used heretofore in the days of Rogations, at certain convenient places, shall admonish the people to give thanks to God, in the beholding of God’s benefits, for the increase and abundance of His fruits upon the face of the earth, with the saying of the 103rd Psalm: Benedic, anima mea, etc. At which time also the same minister shall inculcate these or such sentences, ‘Cursed be he which translateth the bounds and dolles of his neighbour.’ Or such other order of prayers, as shall be hereafter appointed.”

The “Exhortation” printed as a sequel to the Rogation-day Homily begins by saying that the principal object of the Procession or Perambulation is that of asking God’s blessing upon the land and its fruits, and adds, “Yet have we occasion secondarily given us in our walks on these days to consider the old ancient bounds and limits belonging to our township,” etc. etc. From Bishops’ Articles of Visitation of later periods it appears that the ordinary practice was to use the Litany on each of these days, and a portion of the Homily. But it is clear that there was never any settled rule, and that the practice varied according to the piety and liturgical feeling of the day or the parish.

The Rogation Days and the religious observance of them in some such manner as that above indicated are referred to in the most ancient records of the Church of England. In the Laws of King Alfred and of Athelstan they are called gebeldorgas or Prayer Days, and also gang dægas; the latter name, “gang days,” being still used in some parts of the north of England.

HOLY THURSDAY.

There is not any very early historical notice of Ascension

Day, but St. Chrysostom has a homily on the day; St. Augustine mentions it in one of his Epistles, and also in a Sermon [261], in which he says, “We celebrate this day the solemnity of the Ascension.” St. Gregory of Nyssa has also left a homily on the day. St. Augustine calls this one of the festivals which are supposed to have been instituted by the Apostles themselves [Ep. liv. al. cxviii. ad Januar.], so that it must have been generally observed in his time: and Proclus, Archbishop of Constantinople, in the same age, speaks of it [Orat. iii.] as one of the days which the Lord has made, reverently considering that the great acts of our Lord so far consecrated the days on which they occurred that no further appointment was needed for their separation from common days. Its name has never varied, although popular appellations have, of course, been attached to it on account of some observances connected with the day. But even these have been very few, and are not worth notice, “Holy Thursday” being the only vernacular name that has been generally adopted.

During the Paschal Quinquagesima no festivals have vigils or fasting eves except Ascension Day and Whitsunday, the whole period being regarded as one of spiritual joy in the Resurrection.

The ritual provisions of the Prayer Book for this day shew plainly that it is regarded in the system of our Church as one of the very highest class of solemn days set apart in honour of our Lord. The Proper Lessons and Psalms at Mattins and Evensong, and the Proper Preface in the Communion Service, place it on the same footing as Christmas Day, Easter, or Whitsunday; and there is no day in the year which is so well illustrated by these as that of the Ascension. It could hardly have been otherwise, for the act which is commemorated on this day was one which crowned and consummated the work of the Redeemer’s Person, and opened the gate of everlasting life to those whom He had redeemed.

The facts of the Ascension are commemorated in the Epistle and Gospel. In the first lessons at Mattins and Evensong we see the ascended Lord in His everlasting Kingdom, and the type of His Ascension, Elijah, going up to heaven in a whirlwind. But the fulness of the day’s meaning must be looked for in the Psalms, where, as so often, the interpretation of the Gospels was given by God beforehand to the Church. And in these the Church also celebrates the eternal Victory of the King of Glory, Who had been made a little lower than the angels in the humiliation of His earthly life, that He might be crowned with the glory and worship of all created things, when seated, still in His human nature, on the throne of Heaven. The festival concludes the yearly commemoration of our Blessed Lord’s life and work: which thus leads upward from the cradle at Bethlehem, exhibiting before God and man the various stages of His redeeming work, and following Him step by step until we stand with the disciples gazing up after Him as He goes within the everlasting doors. And thus this half-yearly cycle of days presents the holy Jesus to our devotions as perfect Man and perfect God, the perfection of His manhood confirmed in the sorrows of Good Friday, the perfection of His Divine Nature in the triumph of Easter and the Ascension.

INTROIT.—Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? Alleluia. So shall He come as ye have seen Him go into heaven. Alleluia. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as He went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which said, Glory be.

SUNDAY AFTER ASCENSION.

This day was anciently called by the significant name of "Dominica Expectationis." Being the only Lord's Day which intervened between the Ascension of our Lord and the Descent of the Holy Ghost, it represents that period during which the Apostles were obeying the command of their Master, when "He commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father." [Acts i. 4.]

The Collect for this day is an expansion of the ancient Antiphon to the Magnificat on Ascension Day; and has a special interest in the English Church from the fact recorded in the account of the Venerable Bede's death, that it was among the last of the words which he uttered. He died on the Wednesday evening about the time of the first Vespers of the Festival, and the spirit in which he sang the Antiphon is well expressed by the aspiration that concludes the modern Collect.

The alteration of the ancient form, which is addressed to the ascended "King of Glory" of the twenty-fourth Psalm, into a prayer addressed to the Father, is to be regretted. It was probably prompted by the principle of offering prayer chiefly to the Father through the Son. But its present form jars strangely with Scriptural ideas in Psalm and Gospel.

The day itself, within the octave of the Ascension, may be properly considered as a continuation of that festival, but commemorating especially the session of our Lord at the right hand of the Father.

INTROIT.—Hearken unto my voice, O Lord, when I cry unto Thee. Alleluia. My heart hath talked of Thee, Seek ye My face. Thy face will I seek. O hide not Thon Thy face from me. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom then shall I fear? Glory be.

WHITSUNDAY.

This great festival commemorates the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles to abide in the Church for ever, according to the promise of Christ. It has been annually observed from the very beginning, having at first been engrafted by the Jewish Christians on to the festival of Pentecost, but being mentioned as a separate feast of the Church by the earliest writers among the Gentile Christians, as Irenæus [Fragm. de Pasch. in Justin Mart.] and Tertullian [de Coron. 3, de Idol. 14, de Bapt. 19, de Orat. 23], the latter of whom leaves it on record in several places that this was one of the principal times for Baptism in the early Church. Origen also names it in his work against Celsus. [viii.]

WHEN the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them: and they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and began to speak with other tongues, as the SPIRIT gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed, and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews, and Proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

JESUS said unto His disciples,] If ye love Me, keep My commandments. And I will pray the FATHER, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; even the SPIRIT of truth, Whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him: but ye know Him; for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth Me no more; but ye see Me: because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in My FATHER, and ye in Me, and I in you. He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me; and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My FATHER, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him. Judas saith unto Him, (not Iscariot,) LORD, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world? JESUS answered and said unto him, If a man love Me, he will keep My words, and My FATHER will love him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him. He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings: and the word which ye hear is not Mine, but the FATHER'S Which sent Me. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, Which is the HOLY GHOST, Whom the FATHER will send in My Name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved Me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the FATHER: for My FATHER is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me. But that the world may know that I love the FATHER; and as the FATHER gave Me commandment, even so I do.

The original name of the festival was derived from that given by Greek writers in the Septuagint and in the New Testament to the Jewish feast, and has precisely the same meaning as Quinquagesima, Pentecost being the fiftieth day from the morrow of the Passover Sabbath. The English name seems to be Whitsun Day, not Whit Sunday,<sup>1</sup> and Neale suggested its derivation from the Greek through the German Pfingsten. In mediæval English it is spelt both White Sunday and Wit Sunday; the first name appearing to be associated with the chrismos of the newly baptized; and the second with the outpouring of wisdom (or, in old English, "wit") upon the Church by the Holy Ghost on this day.

The original feast of Pentecost was instituted by God (as it is supposed) as a memorial of the day on which He gave the law to Moses, and declared the Israelites "a peculiar treasure, a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." [Exod. xix. 5, 6.] But the prominent character of the day was that of a solemn harvest festival. On the morrow of the Passover Sabbath, fifty days before, the first cut sheaf of corn was offered to God, waved before the altar, with supplication for a blessing on the harvest then commenced. On the day of Pentecost two loaves of the first bread made from the new corn were offered (with appointed burnt-offerings), in thanksgiving for the harvest now ended. Each of these objects of the festival has a significant typical application. It was on this day that the Holy Ghost descended to sanctify a new Israel, that they too might be "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people" [1 Pet. ii. 9]; and this separation of a new Israel from the world began to be made when three thousand were added to the Church by Baptism on the day of Pentecost. On this day also the "Corn of Wheat" (which had fallen into the ground and died on the day of the Passover, and had sprung up a new and perpetual sacrifice to God on Easter Day) sent forth the Holy Spirit to make those five thousand the "One Bread" [1 Cor. x. 17] of the Lord's mystical Body, a firstfruits offering to God of the Church which had been purchased with His Blood.

The Collect for Whitsunday was formerly used every day at Lauds, and was translated into English at least a century and a half before the Prayer Book was set forth. It appears in all the English Prymers which preceded the Prayer Book, and the ancient version given on Whitsun Monday seems to have furnished some phrases to the translation now in use on this day.

Whitsun Week is one of the canonical Ember seasons, the summer ordinations taking place on Trinity Sunday.

On Whitsunday (June 9th), in the year of our Lord 1549, the Book of Common Prayer in English was first used instead of the Latin Offices. That day was doubtless chosen (for copies were printed and ready some time before) as a devout acknowledgement that the Holy Ghost was with the Church of England in the important step then taken. May He ever preserve these devotional Offices from the attacks of enmity or unwisdom, and continue them in that line of Catholic unity wherein He has guided the Church hitherto to keep them.

<sup>1</sup> In the West Riding of Yorkshire it is the common custom to say "Whissan Sunday," "Whissan Monday," "Whissan Tuesday," and "Whissan-tide." There is a long and instructive, but by no means conclusive, article on the etymology of the name in SKERT'S Etymological Dictionary of the English Language.

While Peter yet spake these words, the HOLY GHOST fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision, which believed, were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the HOLY GHOST. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify GOD. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the HOLY GHOST as well as we? WHITSUN MONDAY.

In the Epistle and Gospel for this day we find a trace of the primitive custom of Baptism at Whitsuntide; the one narrating the baptism of Cornelius and his household, and the other referring to that enlightenment by Christ from which the sacrament of Baptism took one of its most primitive names, that of "Illumination." This still serves to point out a purpose in the extension of the Festival. For the Holy Ghost came into the Church not only to inspire the Apostles for their work, which was to be but for a generation, but also to abide with the Church in a perpetual Ministry derived from those Apostles, and a continual ministration of the gift of grace by their means. Hence the days following Whitsunday are a memorial of that abiding of the Comforter which our Lord promised, that He might be "the Giver of Life" to the world, in the bestowal of union with Christ by Baptism, Confirmation, and the Holy Communion.

INTROIT.—He fed them also with the finest wheat flour. Alleluia. And with honey out of the stony rock should I have satisfied thee. Alleluia. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. Sing we merrily unto GOD our strength: make a cheerful noise unto the GOD of Jacob. Glory be.

WHITSUN TUESDAY.

On the Tuesday of Whitsun Week there is a reference to another work of the Holy Ghost, that of Confirmation, the Epistle narrating the confirmation of the first Samaritan Christians by the Apostles Peter and John, after they had been converted and baptized by the Evangelist Philip. In primitive times Confirmation was administered immediately after Baptism, if a Bishop was present, as was mostly the case, and at Whitsuntide it would no doubt be invariably given to the newly baptized at once, from the appropriateness of the season, and the necessary presence of the Bishops in sending to them the light of Thy HOLY SPIRIT; Grant us by the same SPIRIT to have a right judgement in all things, and evermore to rejoice in His holy comfort; through the merits of CHRIST JESUS our SAVIOUR, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee, in the unity of the same SPIRIT, one GOD, world without end. Amen.

their chief Churches for the Ordinations of the following Saturday or Sunday.

It was doubtless with reference to the preparation of the Candidates for Ordination that the Gospel was selected; pointing out, as it does, that there is only one lawful way of entering into the Ministry of Christ; and that those are no true shepherds who do not enter in by the Door, the Chief Shepherd Himself, whose authority on earth is delegated to the Bishops of His Church. The second lesson at Evensong, 1 John iv. 1-13, points in the same direction.

The Whitsun Ember days are of very ancient institution, probably Primitive. They are alluded to by St. Athanasius [De fuga sua] as the fasts of the week following Pentecost, and it is plain that no time of the year would be so naturally chosen for continuing the gift of the Spirit by Ordination, as that which follows immediately upon the day when the Holy Ghost first came to inhabit the mystical Body of Christ, for the purpose of "making able" the Ministers of His Gospel-truth and Sacraments.

TRINITY SUNDAY.

The Octave of Pentecost has been observed in honour of the Blessed Trinity from a very early age of the Church. In the Lectionary of St. Jerome the same Epistle and Gospel are appointed which have always been used in the Church of England; and the Collect is from the Sacramentary of St. Gregory. But the name "Trinity Sunday" was not general until a later period, though it has been used in the English Breviary and Missal since the time of St. Osmund, and may have been adopted by him from still earlier Offices of the Church. In the Eastern Church this day is the Festival of all holy Martyrs; a festival which appears to have been observed at this time in the East, even in the days of St. Chrysostom and the Emperor Leo, who have left respectively a Homily and an Oration upon it. It appears to have been regarded as a separate Festival in the Western world only by the Church of England, and those Churches of Germany which owe their origin to the English St. Boniface, or Winfrid.<sup>1</sup> Both in the ancient English and in the ancient German Office books, all the Sundays afterwards until Advent are named after Trinity; whereas, in all Offices of the Roman type they are named after Pentecost. It seems probable that this distinctive ritual mark is a relic of the independent origin of the Church of England, similar to those peculiarities which were noticed by St. Augustine, and which were attributed by the ancient British Bishops to some connection with St. John. In this case it is, at least, significant that it was St. John through whom the doctrine of the Holy Trinity was most clearly revealed; and also that the early Church of England appears never to <sup>1</sup> Gervase of Canterbury, a contemporary of St. Thomas, asserts that the Feast of Trinity was instituted by St. Thomas of Canterbury soon after his consecration to that see in A. D. 1162, but there can be little doubt it was in some English Office books before that date.

AFTER this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven : and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me ; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. And immediately I was in the Spirit ; and behold, a throne was set in heaven, and One sat on the throne : and He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone : and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats ; and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment ; and they had on their heads crowns of gold : and out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunders, and voices. And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal : and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him ; and they were full of eyes within : and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, LORD GOD Almighty, Which was, and is, and is to come. And when those beasts give glory, and honour, and thanks, to Him that sat on the throne, Who liveth for ever and ever, the four and twenty elders fall down before Him that sat on the throne, and worship Him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O LORD, to receive glory, and honour, and power ; for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure they are and were created.

THERE was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews : the same came to JESUS by night, and said unto Him, Rabbi, we know that Thou art a teacher come from GOD : for no man can do these miracles that Thou doest, except GOD be with him. JESUS answered and said unto him, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of GOD. Nicodemus saith unto Him, How can a man be born when he is old ? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born ? JESUS answered, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the SPIRIT, he cannot enter into

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth ; so is every one that is born of the SPIRIT. Nicodemus answered and said unto Him, How can these things be ? JESUS answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things ? Verily, verily I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen ; and ye receive not our witness. If I have told you have been infested by the heresies on this subject which troubled other portions of the Christian world.

The general observance of the day as a separate festival in honour of the Blessed Trinity was first enjoined by a Synod of Arles in A. D. 1260. [HARDUIN, Concil. iii. 514.] In Micrologus it is stated [cap. lx.] that the feast was then observed in some parts on the Octave of Pentecost, and in others on the Sunday next before Advent ; but that the Roman Church had no such custom, for it honoured the Blessed Trinity in its daily worship by Doxologies and the Memoria, our present Collect.<sup>1</sup> It seems to have become generally observed by the Roman as well as other Churches at the end of the fourteenth century ; but the Sundays after it are still named from Pentecost in all the Catholic Churches of the West, except those of England and Germany.

The significance of the festival, as the end of the cycle of days by which our Blessed Lord and His work are commemorated, is very great. The beginning of His acts was associated with a revelation of the Three Persons of the Trinity, and His last command to His Apostles was a commission to make disciples of all nations by baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The perfect revelation of the Holy Three in One may also be considered to have been made on the day of Pentecost, when to the work expressed by our Lord in the words, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," was added that further operation of the Holy Ghost which was previously unknown even to holy men, but has ever since been familiar to the whole world. On Whitsunday, therefore, we see the crowning point of the work of redemption ; and the feast of Trinity, on the Octave of Pentecost, commemorates the consummation of God's saving work, and the perfect revelation to the Church of the Three Persons in One God, as the sole objects of adoration. The love of each Person had been commemorated in the separate Festivals which memorialize before God and man the Incarnation, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord, and the sending forth by the Father and the Son of the Blessed Spirit on Whitsunday. In the festival of Trinity all these solemn subjects of belief are gathered into one act of worship, as the Church Militant looks upward through the door that is opened in Heaven, and bows down in adoration with the Church Triumphant, saying, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, Which was, and is, and is to come . . . Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power ; for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure they are and were created."

The form of the latter part of the Collect until 1661 was that of the ancient Latin and English : "We beseech Thee that through the steadfastness of this faith we may evermore be defended from all adversity." Why it should have been altered to its present disjointed and pointless form is inexplicable.

<sup>1</sup> The Sunday Missa Votiva of Salisbury Use was almost identical with the Mass for Trinity Sunday, but the Epistle was Rom. xi. 33-36, and 2 Cor. xiii. 14 ; the Gospel being John xv. 26-xvi. 6.

The Trinity Collect was said as a daily memorial (as well as that of Whitsunday), in the Church of England, until 1549. The alteration of the latter part was made by Bishop Cosin in 1661, and is much to be regretted.

BELOVED, let us love one another: for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent His only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us; because He hath given us of His SPIRIT. And we have seen, and do testify, that the FATHER sent the SON to be the SAVIOUR of the world. Whosoever shall confess that JESUS is the SON of GOD, GOD dwelleth in him, and he in God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgement; because as He is, so are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment: He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We love Him, because He first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, Whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died, and was buried: and in hell he lift up his eyes being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. ## THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The Sundays and other Festivals from Advent to Trinity form one system of dogmatic illustrations of Christianity: Prayer and the words of Holy Scripture all combining to present the memorial of primary truths before God in acts of worship, and before man as words of instruction. The Sundays after Trinity may be regarded as a system illustrating the practical life of Christianity, founded on the truths previously represented, and guided by the example of our Blessed Lord. There is a Rubric given on this Sunday in the Salisbury Missal: "Memoria de Trinitate fiat omnibus dominicis usque ad adventum Domini."

The love of God and the love of man are—one may almost say, of course—the first subject selected for the Eucharistic Scriptures in this system, as shewn in St. John's wonderful definition of love, and in the historical parable of the rich man and Lazarus. In the Epistle St. John shews that God's own love for mankind is the source and spring of all love towards Him, and that all true love towards Him is shewn by the evidence of charity. The Gospel, independently of the revelation made in it concerning the state of the departed, places in the most awful light the sin of being without Chris-things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the high-ways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

In teaching this truth our Blessed Lord also revealed to us the intermediate state. Although the Last Judgement was very distant when He told the Jews this history of two men who had, perhaps, been known to them, yet He put it beyond doubt that the souls which had departed from their bodies were as living and conscious as they had ever been, and that their condition was already that of those upon whom a preliminary judgement had been passed; an award of happiness to the one, of torment to the other.

INTROIT.—My trust is in Thy mercy, and my heart is joyful in Thy salvation. I will sing of the Lord, because He hath dealt so lovingly with me. Ps. How long wilt Thou forget me, O Lord, for ever? How long wilt Thou hide Thy face from me? Glory be.

THE SECOND SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The present beautiful version of the ancient Collect for this day was substituted for the literal translation which had previously been used, in 1661. Cosin added "O Heavenly Father" at the end of the old Collect, as if attempting to remedy its abruptness; but the subsequent remoulding of the whole into its present form was a happy improvement, giving us one of the finest of our English Collects. It will be observed that its tone is in close agreement with that of the INTROIT.

The subject of Active Love is again taken up on this Sunday, the Epistle coming from a preceding chapter of St. John to that used on the previous Sunday, and the Gospel from an earlier chapter of St. Luke.

INTROIT.—The Lord was my upholder. He brought me forth also into a place of liberty; He brought me forth even because He had a favour unto me. Ps. I will love Thee, O Lord my Strength; the Lord is my stony rock and my defence, and my Saviour. Glory be.

THE THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

THEN drew near unto Him all the Publicans and sinners for to hear Him. And the Pharisees and Scribes murmured, saying, This Man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them. And He spake this parable unto them, saying, What man of you having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost.

Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost. Likewise, I say unto you, There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not the Gospel by the example of our Blessed Lord in receiving sinners and eating with them. The Collect, however, seems to take its tone from the latter portion of the Epistle, which speaks of the afflictions and sufferings to which the early Christians were subjected. The Epistle and the Collect are, in fact, much more frequently associated together in tone and language than the Collect and the Gospel; indicating a probability that the Gospels were not read in the Communion Service until a later period than that in which the Epistles came to be used.

INTROIT.—Turn Thee unto me, and have mercy upon me: for I am desolate and in misery. Look upon my adversity and misery; and forgive me all my sin, O my God. Ps. Unto Thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soul; my God, I have put my trust in Thee; O let me not be confounded. Glory be.

THE FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

In the Gospel for this day, Mercy, another of the Christian virtues, is set forth in the words of our Lord, beginning, "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful," enforced by the proverbs of the blind leading the blind, the disciple not being above his Master, and of the mote and the beam.

The Collect also refers to the mercy of our heavenly Father, and seems to have been suggested by the Gospel. But, as on the preceding Sunday, the Epistle seems to have been selected with reference to a time when the Church was passing through some great tribulation, and when Christians needed frequently to be reminded that they had here no continuing city, but must look beyond the sufferings of this present time to the glory hereafter to be revealed.

It is possible that the Gospel may have been selected under the influence of similar circumstances, an age of martyrdoms suggesting to those who had so clear a vision of Christ's example the duty of mercy and love towards their persecutors. For themselves they could only look to that future bliss which was to outweigh the present suffering; for the Church of succeeding days they could leave such a legacy as St. Stephen did, when he prayed with his dying lips, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." The INTROIT for the day seems equally to reflect an age of persecution.

INTROIT.—The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom then shall I fear; the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom then shall I be afraid? When the wicked, even mine enemies, and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they willingly, but by reason of Him Who hath subjected the same in hope: because the "creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the SPIRIT, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke vi. 36-42.

BE ye therefore merciful, as your FATHER also is merciful. Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven: give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again. And He spake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch? The disciple is not above his master; but every one that is perfect shall be as his master. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, east out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

would thrust out a little from the land; and He sat down, and taught the people out of the ship. THE FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The ancient Leonine Collect for this day seems to have been suggested, says Bright, like several of the same age, by the disasters of the dying Western Empire.<sup>1</sup> It has, however, a plain connection with the Gospel, which was probably selected at an earlier date. Like others of our Lord's miracles, this one was a parable as well, in which He was teaching the Apostles principles respecting their future work. The sea is the world, the net is the Church, the Apostles are fishers of men, Christ is He Who in the spiritual as in the actual world bids them let down the net, and also gathers into it the great multitude of fishes. Very significant is it, then, that with this parabolic miracle in the Gospel, the Collect should pray Him Whose Presence was the wealth and the safety of the fishermen that He will so order the waves of this troublesome world that the Ark of the Church may ever ride over them in peace, and serve Him by gathering in souls into her nets with all godly quietness through the blessing of the Saviour's Presence. The Epistle is in close agreement with this tone,—“The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers. . . . Who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good?” Like those of the preceding Sundays, it reflects a time of persecution, such as was passing over the Church when St. Peter wrote; but it also breathes the strong faith of him who had said, “Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water,” and whose experience had taught him that if Jesus be in the ship, no waves or storms can prevail to overwhelm it.

INTROIT.—Hearken unto my voice, O Lord, when I cry unto Thee: have mercy upon me, and hear me. Thou hast been my succour: leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation. Ps. The Lord is my Light and my Salvation, whom then shall I fear?

Thy word I will let down the net. And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net brake. And they beckoned unto their partners which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink. When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at JESUS' knees, saying, Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O LORD. For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken; and so was also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And JESUS said unto Simon, Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men. And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed Him.

KNOW ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into JESUS CHRIST were baptized into His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as CHRIST was raised up from the dead by the glory of the FATHER, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For He that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with CHRIST, we believe that we shall also live with Him; knowing that CHRIST being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. For in that He died, He died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through JESUS CHRIST our LORD.

THE GOSPEL. S. Matt. v. 20-26.

[JESUS said unto His disciples.] Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill: and whosoever shall kill, shall be in danger of the judgement. But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgement: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire.

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.

THE SIXTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

This day sets forth the principle that the obligation of the old law is heightened under the New Dispensation: as also that the stricter obligation of the new law is accompanied by a proportionate increase in the grace by which the duty of obedience to God may be fulfilled. Christ's law extends to the wilful conception of an act as well as to the act itself, and accounts the one a sin as well as the other. But Christ's death and resurrection extend themselves to the sacrament of Baptism, making it the means of a death unto sin and a new birth unto righteousness: and thus endowing Christians with a power to fulfil the requirements of His law which otherwise they could not possess. The power of Christ against sin becomes thus not only a power external to the soul, but an inward capacity, the practical use or disuse of which is at the will of those to whom it is given.

INTROIT.—The Lord is my strength, and He is the wholesome defence of His Anointed. O save Thy people, and give Thy blessing unto Thine inheritance; feed them, and set them up for ever. Ps. Unto Thee will I cry, O Lord, my strength; think no scorn of me, lest if Thou make as though Thou hearest not, I become like them that go down into the pit. Glory be.

The Collect for this day has expressions in it which seem to connect its prayer with both the Epistle and the Gospel. The petition, "Graft in our hearts the love of Thy Name,"

IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called His disciples unto Him, and saith unto them, I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with Me three days, and have nothing to eat: and if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way; for divers of them came from far. And His disciples answered Him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness? And He asked them, How many loaves have ye?

And they had a few small fishes; and He blessed, and commanded to set them also before them. So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets. BRETHREN, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the SPIRIT do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the SPIRIT of GOD, they are the sons of GOD. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits: do men gather grapes of thorns, or appears to be suggested by the idea of good and evil fruit contained in the former; while "Giver of all good things" and "nourish us with all goodness" plainly point out a devotional application of the narrative which the Gospel gives of the Good Shepherd feeding His flock of four thousand with seven loaves and a few small fishes. The bondage of sin and the service of Christ are contrasted in the Epistle, which seems to be the source of the beautiful expression, "Whose service is perfect freedom," in the second Collect at Mattins. The same idea may be also found in the Gospel, where Christ's command that the people should sit down (though it seemed a mere arbitrary command) was followed by the reward of obedience, His bounty.

as no slavery, but a sonship. Those who do the works of a true obedience to Him do them by the help of the Spirit of God; those who are led by the Spirit of God are adopted children of Him whose Only-begotten received the same Spirit without measure; those who are adopted sons of God are heirs of His eternal gifts, joint-heirs with Christ Himself, reigning with Him as priests and kings for ever. Such is the course of the Apostle's reasoning and revelation; and it is further illustrated by the words of our Lord in the Gospel, which, as the saying of the Eternal Word, living and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, discriminates between those who only say unto Him, "Lord, Lord," by an outward profession, and those whose sonship is made evident by their fruits, the doing of the will of God.

INTROIT.—O clap your hands together, all ye people; O sing unto God with the voice of melody. Ps. He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet. Glory be.

THE EPISTLE. I Cor. x. 1-13.

BRETHREN, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea ; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea ; and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink : (for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them ; and that Rock was CHRIST.) But with many of them GOD was not well pleased ; for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them ; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt CHRIST, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples : and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man : but GOD is faithful, Who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able ; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke xvi. 1-9.

[JESUS] said unto His disciples, There was a certain rich man which had a steward ; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee ? Give an account of thy stewardship ; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do ? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship : I cannot dig, to beg I am ashamed. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord ? And he said, An hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou ? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore. And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely : for the children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness ; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

c S. D. P. as P. B. Roman. Luke 15: 9-14. Eastern. Matt. 17, 14-23.

THE NINTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The keynote of the Office for this day is struck by our Lord's words in the end of the Gospel, "Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." For by the unjust steward in the parable, of which these words give the application, is represented the Christian in his way through this life ; and the children of Israel are represented to us in the Epistle on their way through the wilderness. By the temptations to which the latter were subjected are set forth as in a living parable the lot of the "children of light," who also must pass through such temptations as are "common to man." The worldly wisdom of the steward our Lord uses as an example of the manner in which the children of light are to use the temptations of life as a means by which they may make friends in heaven among the angels and saints. Out of the Mammon of unrighteousness—the idols of this life which men are tempted to fall down and worship—the profit may arise to him who is tempted, that his trial by their means is like our Lord's temptation by Satan, a trial which will result in greater perfection and fitness for the further work set before him to do, if due use is made of that way of escape by which he may be able to bear it. Such temptations were offered to the first Israel, and the people gave way before them ; they are also offered to God's new Israel, and the words of our Lord are an exhortation to them, that as "children of light" they should be as wise for spiritual objects as "the children of this world" (recklessly irreligious, yet provident and politic, men) are for the objects which they set themselves to attain as the desire of their life.

INTROR.—Behold, God is my helper : the Lord is with them that uphold my soul. He shall reward evil unto mine enemies ; destroy Thou them in Thy truth. Ps. Save me, O God, for Thy Name's sake : and avenge me in Thy strength. Glory be.

CONCERNING spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the SPIRIT of GOD calleth JESUS accursed; and that no man can say that JESUS is the LORD, but by the HOLY GHOST. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same SPIRIT. And there are differences of administrations, but the same LORD. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same GOD, Which worketh all in all

But the manifestation of the SPIRIT is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the SPIRIT the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same SPIRIT; to another faith by the same SPIRIT; to another the gifts of healing by the same SPIRIT; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the self-same SPIRIT, dividing to every man severally as He will.

THE TENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

There is a touching connection between the Epistle and Gospel of this day which seems as if it could hardly be accidental; or, if it is, offers an illustration of the manner in which all Holy Scripture gives evidence that it is drawn from one Fountain of truth. The Gospel shews our Blessed Lord weeping over Jerusalem, because she had failed to recognize the things that belonged to her peace. The Prince of Peace had come to her, offering the good gifts which are ever the fruits of His Presence, but her eyes had been blinded by her wilfulness, those gifts of peace had been rejected, and now they were hid from her. Our Lord's last words of warning a few days afterwards were in the same strain, "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you. . . . While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." They were the last public words of the Light of the world before His Passion began; and when He had spoken them, He "departed, and did hide Himself from them" [John xii. 36]. With such an experience before the new Israel of God, the Apostle St. Paul exhorts them not to be ignorant of the spiritual gifts with which they have been blessed: those manifold operations of the Holy Ghost on the souls of men, by which they are fitted for the work of the ministry, or for that of ordinary Christian life. And the association of these two portions of Holy Scripture comes as a perennial warning to Churches in their corporate capacity, and to individual Christians, calling them to remember that as Jesus had cause to weep over the neglect of His gifts when offered to the Jews, so is such a neglect cause of sorrow even now in Heaven, and may be followed by the judgement which fell upon her of old who knew not the time of her visitation. The enemies of the Church are ever ready to dig their trenches and compass her around, and lay her even with the ground. Her true strength is, that she should ever remember and use her spiritual gifts, and know the value of Christ's Presence in the time when He visits her with His salvation.

INTROIT.—When I cried unto the Lord, He heard my voice in the battle that was against me: yea, even God that endureth for ever shall hear me and cast them down. O cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall nourish thee. Ps. Hear my prayer, O Lord, and hide not Thyself from my petition. Take heed unto me, and hear me. Glory be.

BRETHREN, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand: by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that CHRIST died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures; and that He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: after that, He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present; but some are fallen asleep: after that, He was seen of James; then of all the Apostles: and last of all, He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time. For I am the least of the Apostles, that am not meet to be called an Apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am: and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. Therefore whether it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

that I possess. And the Publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

SUCH trust have we through CHRIST to Godward: not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God. Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the SPIRIT: for the letter killeth, but the SPIRIT giveth life. But if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the SPIRIT be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory.

as a free and undeserved gift upon sinners. St. Paul's "I am the least of the Apostles, that am not meet to be called an Apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God," is a parallel to the Publican's "God be merciful to me a sinner;" and our Lord's declaration that the Publican went down to his house justified because of his humility, is a parallel to the inspired words of the Apostle, "By the grace of God I am what I am . . . yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." "Ancient writers, as St. Augustine and others," says Isaac Williams, "delight to dwell on these words of St. Paul, as so expressive of his sweet, trembling humility, fearing to contemplate himself, except in his sins and infirmities, and losing all sense of his greatness in God; fearful lest he should presume, and so lose by presumption all that crown of hope and joy which by humility he had gained." This tone of the holy Apostle, and that of the Publican, is strikingly taken up by the Collect, which offers also a fine specimen of the fulness of devotion which may be gathered into this form of prayer. Short as it is, this Collect contains five several subjects, each of which is like the condensation of a volume of devotion. Those subjects are [1] the mercy of God; and let it be noted, how suggestive is the idea that this mercy is the chief manifestation of Almighty Power: [2] the grace of God, as His gift, according to the measure of our necessities: [3] obedience, as accomplished only by the power of grace; [4] the fulfilment of the Divine promises; [5] the "great recompence of reward," the "heavenly treasures," of which Isaiah and St. Paul wrote, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Such fulness of meaning approaches very nearly to that of inspiration, and may well lead us to the belief that a special blessing from God rested upon the intellect and devotional instinct of the original writer.

INTROIT.—It is God that maketh men to be of one mind in an house. He will give strength and power unto His people. Ps. Let God arise, and let His enemies be scattered: let them also that hate Him flee before Him. Glory be.

THE TWELFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The contrast between the Old and New Dispensations is vividly set forth in the Gospel and Epistle for this Sunday. Glorious as the former was in its origin and in its continuation, it was a ministration of condemnation, with sacrifices of atonement, but with no sacraments of life. The Incarnation

And He charged them that they should tell no man; but the more He charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it; and were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well; He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

TO Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one; And to thy Seed, which is CHRIST. And this I say, That the covenant that was confirmed before of GOD in CHRIST, the Law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the Law, it is no more of promise; but GOD gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the Law? It was added because of transgressions, till the Seed should come, to Whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one; but GOD is one. Is the Law then against the promises of GOD? GOD forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the Law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of JESUS CHRIST might be given to them that believe.

of the Son of God was the origin, and the Mystical Presence of Christ the continuation, of a spiritual life which the world had not before known since the Fall. The Church of God had grown deaf, and heard not the Voice from Heaven as that Voice had been heard of old; there was an impediment in her speech, so that the Word of God did not go forth from her lips in prophecy. The Son of God came down on earth, and touched her by making Himself one with her through His human nature; the sigh of His Passion was followed by the "Ephphatha" of the Resurrection; and as soon as His work was perfected by the looking up to Heaven of His Ascension and Session at the right hand of God, the ears of the deaf were unstopped to receive the Inspiration of Pentecost, and the tongue of the dumb loosed, so that "their sound is gone out into all lands, and their words into the ends of the world." The same Touch of Christ and communication of grace in the communication of that which forms part of His Person, is still the means by which the Church as a corporate body, and every individual member of it as a living member, is vivified and sustained; and He Who gives spiritual ability to the ministers of the New Testament, that their acts and words may be the means by which His Presence is continued in the Church, is making the ministration of righteousness, even in the by-places of the earth, to exceed in glory the ministration of Moses at the foot of Sinai.

my soul. Ps. Let them be turned backward and put to confusion, that wish me evil. Glory be.

THE THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The glory of the New Dispensation is again set forth in the Scriptures for this day, but the parable of the Good Samaritan comes in with singular fitness, since the Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity almost always occurs during the harvest (at some time between August 17th and September 19th), when the Christian charities of social life are a subject that should mingle with our thanksgivings for God's goodness in giving us the fruits of the season. The parable sets forth, in its mystical phase, the exceeding goodness and charity of the Lord Himself, Who became the good Samaritan to human nature at large when it had fallen into the hands of spiritual foes, had been stripped of the clothing of original righteousness, and left half dead in trespasses and sins. But out of the love which Christ bore springs our love both to Him and to our neighbour. We love Him because He first loved us; and our love for others is the necessary fruit of our love for Him. It is the application of this principle which forms the literal teaching of the parable; the extreme case given being given for that very reason to shew how extensive is the bond of neighbourliness; and how extensive, in consequence, the character of the duties which spring out of it. If a Jew and a Samaritan are set forth for our example as neighbours in

But he, willing to justify himself, said unto JESUS, And who is my neighbour? And JESUS answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain Priest that way, and, when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and, when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said JESUS unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

And He said unto him, Arise, go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole.

the Christian sense, what Christians are not neighbours to each other?

The temporal gifts of God's good Providence suggest, then, an awakening of the spirit of kindness, that those who are among the less "fortunate" may be looked upon by these who are more so as sent to test their practical Christianity: and those who read the parable rightly can hardly fail to find some occasion for an active obedience to our Lord's precept, "Go, and do thou likewise."

THE FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The Gospel for this Sunday, like the last, is a memorial of harvest, setting forth the duty of Christian thanksgiving by the example of the one leper out of the ten cleansed who returned to give glory to God in Christ. Leprosy being incurable, except by a miracle, the act of our Lord is typical of that continual wonder-working by which He sustains our life, and gives to us the bounties of His Providence; and the act of thanksgiving suggests the recognition, at this time of the year, of the hand of God prospering by its mysterious operation the work of man in producing the great necessary of life. Such a recognition involves falling down at the feet of God in thankful adoration: the absence of it leads men to depart on their way unheeding of the supernatural character which is involved in even the most ordinary provision for the necessities of life.

Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly FATHER feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin:

Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek;) for your heavenly FATHER knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the Kingdom of GOD, and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. THE FIFTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The Gospel for this Sunday is also a harvest Gospel, pointing out that true Christian forethought is that which is intimately associated with dependence on the Providence of GOD. When the stores of the principal provision for the year are gathered in, then comes the lesson taught by Christ's own words, that sowing, and reaping, and gathering into barns, is not the chief work of a Christian's life; and that GOD's bounty, which feeds the birds of the air, and clothes the lilies of the field by other means than their own toil, is the same bounty which is feeding and clothing us by means of our toil. Forethought in respect to such things should therefore be a forethought which is consistent with trust in GOD, and with seeking first the things of His Kingdom.

INTROIT.—Bow down Thine ear, O Lord, and hear me.

THE SIXTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The compassion of Christ is illustrated by the Gospel of this Sunday, which is that narrating the restoration to life of the widow's son; the pity of the Father is besought for the Church; and the earnest prayer of St. Paul in the Epistle exemplifies the spirit in which such a prayer should be offered, as well as the nature of the blessings to be prayed for.

Our Lord's meeting with the funeral procession at the gate of the city may be taken as a beautiful precedent for the custom ordered in the second Rubric of the Burial Service: and when mourners hear Christ's ministers, on such an occa-

For this cause I bow my knees unto the FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, of Whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His SPIRIT in the inner man; that CHRIST may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints,

And there came a fear on all, and they glorified God, saying, That a great Prophet is risen up among us, and that God hath visited His people. And this rumour of Him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about.

THE SEVENTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The idea of the Epistle and Gospel for this Sunday appears to be that of gaining liberty and victory through becoming the humble servants of Christ. St. Paul writes out of his prison, "I the prisoner of the Lord," as he writes in another place, "Remember my bonds;" and one who was in the bonds of an infirmity was brought to Christ, "and He took him, and healed him, and let him go," setting him free from his disease on the instant in a manner which cannot be explained by physiological science. Afterwards our Lord speaks of the humane work of setting free on the Sabbath an ox or an ass that had fallen into a pit; and of one being bidden to go up higher through his humility in taking the lowest room at a wedding feast. All these may be taken as illustrations of the way in which our Lord's service becomes perfect freedom to those who humbly take His yoke upon them. They offer also a further illustration of the principle stated in the end of the Epistle, "There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, Who is above all, and through all, and in you all." This principle is of a restrictive character: bringing the world out of a free worship of many gods to the worship of One; limiting it to one faith, and to one only means of initiation into the family of the one God. The idea conveyed is one of a bondage to rule and law which leaves no room for invention or wild development and speculation. But as Christ reigned from His Cross; as St. Paul governed the churches of Ephesus and other cities from his prison in Rome; as one who sits down in the lowest room will hear the Host say to him, "Friend, go up higher;" so limitations and restrictions of this kind are a means of real spiritual freedom, however much they may seem an irksome bondage to those who regard them superficially. The Christian who worships the One God is more free than the heathen who worshipped many; and the believer in a Faith once for all given is more free than he who is continually looking for new developments and open to the bondage of every novel speculation.

INTROIT.—Righteous art Thou, O Lord, and true is Thy judgment. O deal Thou with me according unto Thy mercy. Ps. Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Glory be.

him, and let him go; and answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass, or an ox, fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath-day? And they could not answer Him again to these things. And He put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when He marked how they chose out the chief rooms, saying unto them, When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him; and he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that, when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher; then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

THE EIGHTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Two comprehensive Christian formulæ are given in the Gospel and the Collect for this Sunday. That in the former sets forth the whole duty of the servant of Christ, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." The formula of the English Collect is that familiar one of "the world, the flesh, and the devil," which represents all the temptations to which a Christian is liable. To these may also be added the words of the Epistle, "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," as an expression which comprehensively states the whole object of the Christian life. The duties, the difficulties, and the purpose of the Christian life are thus made the subjects of commemoration and prayer; and the connection of each with the grace of God and the Person of Christ is illustrated by the words of St. Paul in the Epistle, and of our Lord in His confutation of the unbelievers as narrated in the Gospel.

INTROIT.—Give peace, O Lord, to them that wait for Thee, and let Thy prophets be found faithful. Hear the prayers of Thy servant, and of Thy people Israel. Ps. I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the house of the Lord. Glory be.

THE NINETEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The forsaking of sins, and the forgiveness of sins, are the subjects of the Epistle and Gospel for this Sunday. St. Paul writes to the Ephesians in much detail concerning the Christian moral law, and shews its relation to the newness of nature which belongs to those who are new born by Baptism into Christ. In the miracle by which our Blessed Lord restored to life the dead limbs of a paralytic this change from the old man to the new man is vividly illustrated. We also see in the circumstances attending this miracle two other illustrations of the relation between our Lord and His people. First, in His words, "Thy sins be forgiven Thee," He shews that His forgiveness is the highest good that can be desired on earth:

THIS I say therefore, and testify in the LORD, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind; having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart: who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned CHRIST; if so be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in JESUS: that ye put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. Wherefore, putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another. Be ye angry and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath: neither give place to the devil. Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the HOLY SPIRIT of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for CHRIST's sake hath forgiven you.

<sup>a</sup> S. V. P. Eph. 4 23-28. Roman. Eph. 5 15-21. Eastern. Gal. i. 11-19.

[JESUS] entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into His own city. And behold, they brought to Him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed. And JESUS, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee. And behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. And JESUS, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee? or to say, Arise, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. And he arose, and departed to his house. But when the multitudes saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, Which had given such power unto men.

ing to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs; singing and making melody in your heart to the LORD; giving thanks always for all things unto GOD and the FATHER, in the Name of our LORD JESUS CHRIST; submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of GOD.

and that although He may also see fit to say, "Arise, and walk," it is this blessing that is to be sought before all others. Secondly, His peculiar expression, "that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins," shews that this power, which originates only in the Godhead (as the Scribes truly thought), extended to the human nature of our Lord, that sins might be forgiven on earth as well as at the last judgement before the throne of God. These words thus contain a statement of the whole principle of Absolution.

INTROIT.—I am the Saviour of My people, saith the Lord: out of whatsoever tribulation they call unto Me, I will hear them, and I will be their Lord for ever. Ps. Hear My law, O My people: incline your ears unto the words of My mouth. Glory be.

THE TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The prophetic parable of the Marriage Supper of the Only-begotten is the subject of the Gospel for this Sunday: and to it may be referred the words of the Collect, "that we, being ready both in body and soul, may cheerfully accomplish those things that Thou wouldest have done." The Epistle seems to be chosen as an illustration of the festivity of Christ's Kingdom, in which the sensual pleasures of heathen rites are superseded by the psalms and hymns and spiritual songs of Divine worship, which is chiefly made up of singing and making melody to the Lord, and is ever consecrated by the "giving of thanks," or offering of the Holy Eucharist, to God the Father, in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Of this latter, as well as of the call of the Jews and the Gentiles, and the final marriage supper of the Lamb in Heaven, the Gospel ought to be interpreted; and it is so applied in the second Exhortation to the Holy Communion.

INTROIT.—In all the things that Thou hast brought upon us, O Lord, Thou hast executed true judgement; for we have sinned, and have not obeyed Thy commandments. Yet give glory to Thy Name, and do to us according to the multitude

THE GOSPEL. S. Matt. xxii. 1-14.

[JESUS said,] The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son; and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding; and they would not come. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise; and the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth; and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the high-ways, and as many as ye shall find bid to the marriage. So those servants went out into the high-ways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good; and the wedding was furnished with guests. And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment. And he saith unto him, Friend, how earnest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen.

MY brethren, be strong in the LORD, and in the power of His might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth; and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the SPIRIT, which is the Word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the SPIRIT, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication for all saints; and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds; that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.

THE GOSPEL. S. John iv. 46-54.

THE TWENTY-FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

The connection between the Epistle for this Sunday, which is that beautiful passage wherein St. Paul describes the whole armour of God, and the Gospel, in which is given the narrative of our Lord healing the nobleman's son, appears to lie chiefly in the words "above all, taking the shield of faith." The hard, unimpressible generation of the Jews, among whom our Lord came, would not believe in "signs and wonders" on any evidence but that of their senses; and this placed a bar in the way of His blessing, so that He sometimes could not do mighty works among them, because there was no co-operation of faith on their part with power on His. The nobleman whose child was healed at a long distance by the will of Christ was a conspicuous illustration of the opposite type of character. He believed, in the face of all improbabilities, because he knew that the holy Jesus was not one to say that which was not true. To such minds faith in Christ is a shield indeed against the fiery darts of the Wicked One; for their belief enables Him to do signs and wonders of a spiritual nature, and establishes a power of co-operation between the weak servant and the Almighty Lord. Thus not only is faith a defence against the enemy of souls, but it draws down Christ Himself to be a "Defence and a Shield;" so that they can say, "The Lord is my Saviour, my God, and my might, in Whom I will trust, my buckler, the horn also of my salvation, and my refuge." As humble service of Christ is the most perfect freedom, because it frees from the bondage of the Evil One, so humble faith in Christ, the spirit which says not "seeing is believing," but, "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief," is the surest path to the revelation of the signs and wonders of His kingdom.

INTROIT.—O Lord, the whole world is in Thy power, and there is no man that can gainsay Thee. For Thou hast made heaven and earth, and all the wondrous things under the heaven. Thou art Lord of all. Ps. Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Glory be.

And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which owed him ten thousand talents. But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The servant therefore fell down and worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him an hundred pence; and he laid hands on him, and took

And he would not; but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt because thou desiredst me: shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. THE TWENTY-SECOND SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Christian love is here, as on the first Sunday after Trinity, the subject of the Epistle and Gospel; but in the present instance it is illustrated by the tender words of St. Paul in his Epistle to the Philippians, and by our Lord's parable of the two debtors, which He spoke as a reply to St. Peter's question, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" This question was asked by one who was accustomed to the Jewish practice, which was ostentatious of its seven times' forgiveness, but yet unforgiving in reality. Our Lord's law of forgiveness had no limits, "Not until seven times, but until seventy times seven." The forgiveness of the debt of ten thousand talents represents the infinite mercy of God, and is given as the true Example and Standard towards which His absolved servants should reach upward.

as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth. As ye also learned of Epaphras, our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of CHRIST; who also declared unto us your love in the SPIRIT. For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of heavenly citizenship; St. Paul also, in the Epistle, referring to the true Christian life on earth as having already many things in common with the life of heaven. None ever set a higher example of obedience to the laws than He Who is the Eternal Lawgiver and Ruler: and He inculcates an honest submission to them even in such a case as that on which an appeal was made to Him, where the law was that of a conqueror against whom rebellion seemed to be a duty. One deduction to be drawn from the words of Christ and of His Apostle is that the Church has little to do with politics or questions of secular government. The things of Cæsar and the things of God were confused together by the Jews, and they ended by rejecting the Lord, and saying, "We have no king but Cæsar." So it has happened at other times, that a want of zeal for God in carefully distinguishing what is His, has led the Church into bondage to civil rulers until its spiritual character has been almost obliterated. The Church of England has been mercifully guided into a just discrimination of the things of Cæsar and the things of God; and while rendering strictest obedience to the Sovereign, has not suffered an excessive loyalty to yield up spiritual rights. Nor does it ever, in modern days, seek to interfere in matters of civil government. Such a just consideration of the respective duties which are owing towards Cæsar and towards God, and such a persevering determination to render to each their proper dues, is a sure way of promoting both the security and the happy progress of Christ's Church.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

This Sunday offers another illustration of the faith of man co-operating with the will and power of Almighty God, in the two cases of the ruler whose young daughter was dead, and of the woman whose issue of blood was stayed through her faith in touching the hem of our Lord's garment. "My daughter is even now dead," said the former, "but come and lay Thy hand upon her, and she shall live." "If I may but touch His garment," said the latter, "I shall be whole." These instances of recovery from disease and death are devo-

His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: that ye might walk worthy of the LORD unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of GOD; strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness; giving thanks unto the FATHER, Which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

THE GOSPEL. S. Matt. ix. 18-26.

WHILE [JESUS] spake these things unto [John's disciples,] behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped Him, saying, My daughter is even now dead; but come and lay Thy hand upon her, and she shall live. And JESUS arose, and followed him, and so did His disciples. And behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind Him, and touched the hem of His garment; for she said within herself, If I may but touch His garment, I shall be whole. But when the people were put forth, He went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

THE SUNDAY NEXT BEFORE ADVENT.

In St. Jerome's Lectionary twenty-five Sundays after Pentecost are provided with Epistles and Gospels. In the Sacramentary of St. Gregory there are Collects for twenty-seven Sundays. In the Salisbury Missal twenty-four Sundays were reckoned as after Trinity, and one as the next before Advent; and there was a Rubric directing that if there were more than twenty-five Sundays between Trinity Sunday and Advent Sunday, the Office for the Twenty-fourth Sunday was to be repeated on each Sunday until the last, when that for the Sunday before Advent was to be said. In the Prayer Book of 1549 no Rubric of this kind was provided, but the old usage would, doubtless, be adopted. In 1552, however, a Rubric was inserted to this effect: "If there be any more Sundays before Advent Sunday, to supply the same shall be taken the Service of some of those Sundays that were omitted between the Epiphany and Septuagesima." This Rubric was altered into its present form in the Durham book of Bishop Cosin, having already appeared in a similar but more cumbersome form in 1637.

If there are two of these Dominica l'agantes (as they were anciently called), the Services for the fifth and sixth Sundays after Epiphany should be used; if only one, that for the sixth Sunday, which has evidently been appointed with a view to its fitness for use on the Sunday next but one to Advent. The rule expressed in this Rubric is a very ancient one, being found in Micrologus, c. lxii.

The Office of this day represents that for the fifth Sunday before the Nativity of our Lord in the Comes of St. Jerome, which appoints the same Epistle and Gospel, and in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, though a different Collect is appointed for that day in the latter. Its tone is that of Advent rather than Trinity, commemorating as it does the first coming of the King Whose Name is "The Lord our Righteousness," and looking forward to that second coming when the true restoration of Israel will be effected. The Gospel is the same as that for Mid-Lent Sunday, where some notes upon it will be found. The rationale of its appointment for to-day is to be found in the last words of it, "This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world."

The alteration of the Collect from its old form, "That they more readily following the fruit of the Divine work" in the of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him, There is a lad here which hath five barley-loaves and two small fishes; but what are they among so many? And JESUS said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand. And JESUS took the loaves, and, when He had given thanks, He distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down, and likewise of the fishes, as much as they would. When they were filled, He said unto His disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves which remained over and above unto them that had eaten. Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that JESUS did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world.

¶ If there be any more Sundays before Advent Sunday, the service of some of those Sundays that were omitted after the Epiphany shall be taken in to supply so many as are here wanting. And if there be fewer, the overplus may be omitted: Provided that this last Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, shall always be used upon the Sunday next before Advent.

For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same LORD over all is rich unto all that call upon Him. For whosoever shall call upon the Name of the LORD shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him, in Whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him, of Whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? As it is written, How

So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. SAINT ANDREW.

[NOVEMBER 30.]

The Feast of St. Andrew is one of those for which an Epistle and Gospel are provided in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, and which has also prayers appointed for it in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory. It is therefore of very ancient date in the Church, and one of the most ancient of the Apostles' festivals, only nine being named (on six days) in the Lectionary referred to. Its position may be at the beginning or at the end of the Christian year, according as Advent Sunday happens in November or December. It has usually been considered that it comes at the beginning, and that it is placed there because the Apostle thus commemorated was the first-called disciple of our Lord; but tradition points out the day as that of his death.

It may be remarked here, as applicable to all the Apostles, that little has been told us of any except St. Peter and St. Paul in Holy Scripture; and that what has come down to us in uninspired history does not throw much more light upon their personal character or the details of their work. The latter fact may, perhaps, be accounted for from the circumstance that most of the Apostles, except St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. John, laboured among nations of whose records, previous to the quiet settlement of the Church, nothing, or next to nothing, remains; and that in the wild and lawless times which accompanied the breaking up of the Roman Empire, even lingering traditions about them would pass away. With respect to the paucity of details given about the Apostles in the New Testament, there seem to be two reasons which offer a sufficient explanation. For [1] the purpose of Holy Scripture is to set before us the Person of Christ, and the Law of Christ; and whatever else enters into the four Gospels is merely incidental; and [2] in the Acts of the Apostles the object is to shew the work of the Church, and not to give us the history of individuals; so that the latter also is merely incidental.

Hence, probably, the reason why we gather hardly any particulars from Scripture about the life of St. Andrew. He was a brother of St. Peter, and therefore a son of Jonas or John; and probably younger than St. Peter. The ancients used to give him the surname of Protoeletos, or First-called, from the circumstances told us in St. John i. 40-42; and, having been a disciple of John the Baptist, he was one of those who were prepared to receive Christ by the teaching and Baptism of His Forerunner. There are only two other circumstances of his life mentioned in the Gospels: the first in St. John xii. 21, where it is St. Andrew and St. Philip who tell Jesus of the inquiring Greeks; and the second in St. Mark xiii. 3, where Andrew and his brother, with the two sons of Zebedee, are found in close companionship with the Lord, asking Him privately respecting the time when Jerusalem should be destroyed.

Ecclesiastical history records that this Apostle was engaged after the dispersion of the Apostles in evangelizing that part of the world which is now known as Turkey in Asia, and the portion of Russia which borders on the Black Sea: and indeed that he was the first founder of the Russian Church, as St. Paul was of the English Church. Sinope and Sebastopol are both especially connected with the name of St. Andrew. In his later days he returned to Europe, consecrated the "beloved Stachys," first Bishop of Constantinople—then named Byzantium—and after travelling about Turkey in Europe, eventually suffered martyrdom at Patras, a town in the north of the Morea, nearly opposite to Lepanto.

The traditional account of this Apostle's martyrdom is very touching. At a great age he was called before the Roman viceroy at Patræ (now Patras), and required to leave off his Apostolic labours among the heathen Greeks. Instead of consenting, he proclaimed Christ even before the judgement-seat; and after imprisonment and submitting patiently to a seven-times-repeated scourging upon his bare back, he was at last fastened to a cross by cords, and so left exposed to die. The cross on which he suffered was of a different form from our Lord's, like this X, and is known by the name of the cross decussate. It is the distinctive symbol of the Scotch order of St. Andrew: the Apostle being always especially revered in connection with the Scottish, as with the Russian Church; and consequently forms a part of the national banner of Great Britain. It has also been observed that it is an integral part of the monogram of Christ X, which was so familiar to the early Christians.

"Hail, precious cross!" is the substance of the words attributed to the aged Apostle as he came to it, "that hast been consecrated by the Body of my Lord, and adorned with His limbs as with rich jewels. I come to thee exulting and glad; receive me with joy into thy arms. O good cross, that hast received beauty from our Lord's limbs! I have ardently loved thee; long have I desired and sought thee; now I have found thee, and thou art made ready for my longing soul; receive me into thy arms, taking me from among men, and present me to my Master, that He Who redeemed me on thee may receive me by thee." For two days the dying martyr exhorted the people from the cross after His example Who stretched out His arms all the day long to an ungodly and gainsaying people. At the end of that time he prayed to the Crucified One that he might now depart in peace, when his prayer was heard, and his spirit went home on the day observed as his festival, A. D. 70.

SAINT THOMAS.

The Festival of St. Thomas the Apostle is not noticed by any writer until Theodoret, who names it with that of St. Peter and St. Paul. [De Græc. Affect. vii.] It seems to have been generally observed in the time of St. Gregory, who has provided for it in his Sacramentary. In the Eastern Church it is kept on October 6th. Although our Collect is not derived from that source, the leading idea of it is found in a Homily of St. Gregory [Hom. in Evang. 26], where he says that "by this doubting of St. Thomas we are more confirmed in our belief than by the faith of the other Apostles."

There are but four sayings of St. Thomas recorded in the Gospels, two just before the death of our Lord, and two just after His Resurrection; but there is a remarkable consistency in these sayings, one in each case shewing want of faith, and the other a warm, zealous, and faithful love. These sayings are as follows:—

"Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way?" [John xiv. 5.]

"Let us also go, that we may die with Him." [John xi. 16.]

THE GOSPEL. S. John xx. 24-31.

THOMAS, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when JESUS came. The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the LORD. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe. And after eight days again His disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came JESUS, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold My hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into My side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto Him, My LORD, and my GOD. JESUS saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. And many other signs truly did JESUS in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written, that ye might believe that JESUS is the CHRIST, the SON of GOD; and that believing ye might have life through His Name.

“Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe.” [John xx. 25.]

“My Lord, and my God.” [John xx. 28.]

In these four sayings we have all that Holy Scripture tells us of the Apostle's companionship with our Lord; but they seem to give more than the outline of a spiritual character in which there were the mingled elements of [1] obstinacy, in not believing, though prophets had foretold of the Resurrection, and the other Apostles were eye-witnesses of its certainty; [2] presumption, in requiring such a proof, even perhaps in the face of the “Touch Me not,” which had been made known by Mary Magdalen; [3] of a warm and loving heart, open to the strongest faith as well as to despairing doubt; and which could lead the Apostle to that full confession of faith contained in the words, “My Lord, and my God.” But it may have been the touch of Christ's wounds which healed the Apostle's doubt, and made his faith what it was.

It was not granted to St. Thomas to have his loving and courageous aspiration fulfilled, by dying with Christ, but the servant followed the Master afterwards. It is recorded by Eusebius that he received a direction from our Lord, after His Ascension (as St. Peter in the case of Cornelius), to send Thaddeus, one of the seventy disciples, to Abgarus, tributary king of Edessa in Mesopotamia, who was thus miraculously cured of a disease, and converted, with his subjects, to Christianity. After this St. Thomas went to the Parthians, Medes, Persians, and Chaldeans, founding the Church of Christ among them until he came to India. The Christians of St. Thomas still bear witness to his work in that great and populous land in the south, and in the north there appear to be relics of the Christian faith mixed up with the strange religion of Thibet; but the diabolical systems of Brahma and Buddh, and the Antichristianism of Mahomet, have long ago crased all other traces of it; and India appears to be one of those unhappy countries which, having wilfully rejected the Apostolic ministry, have ceased to be capable of receiving Christ and His Gospel.

St. Thomas was martyred by the Brahmins at Taprobane, now called Sumatra. Having been assailed with stones, he was at last killed by the thrust of a spear: the manner of his death offering a striking comparison with his words, “Except I thrust my hand into His side,” and those of our Lord, “Reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into My side, and be not faithless, but believing.” As the Lord said to St. Peter, so were the words true of St. Thomas, “Thou canst not follow Me now, but thou shalt follow Me afterwards.”

CONVERSION OF SAINT PAUL.

[JANUARY 25.]

This festival does not appear to have been generally observed until about the twelfth century, although the Collect for it is found in St. Gregory's Sacramentary. It is said [Laterculum of Silvias, A.D. 448] that there was anciently a festival of St. Peter and St. Paul on February 22nd (now “Cathedra Petri”), and there may have been some connection between it and the present festival, but this is only conjecture. The principal, if not the only, day observed to the honour of St. Paul was that on which St. Peter was associated with him, the 29th of June; although, on the following day, a “Commemoration of St. Paul” was made, which is marked in the Salisbury and Roman Calendars, and mentioned in the Rubrics of the Missal; and which, in Menard's edition of St. Gregory's Sacramentary, is called “Natale Sancti Pauli.” It is a pious instinct which has led the Church to thank God in this festival for the wonderful conversion of the Apostle of the Gentiles; but there is something to regret in the loss of the ancient custom by which his noble martyrdom was also commemorated, and by which the unity of the two principal Apostles was so significantly set forth.

Both the conversion and the missionary work of St. Paul are narrated with much detail in the Acts of the Apostles; and the whole of his life and labours has been minutely investigated in the well-known work of Conybeare and Howson. To attempt even a sketch of so marvellous a career in these notes would be to occupy space that cannot be spared; unto Jerusalem. And, as he journeyed, he came near Damascus, and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven. And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? And he said, Who art Thou, LORD? And the LORD said, I am JESUS Whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he, trembling and astonished, said, LORD, what wilt Thou have me to do? And the LORD said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. And Saul arose from the earth, and when his eyes were opened he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink. And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias, and to him said the LORD in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, LORD. And the LORD said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. Then Ananias answered, LORD, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to Thy saints at Jerusalem; and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on Thy Name. But the LORD said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear My Name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My Name's sake. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and, putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the LORD, (even JESUS that appeared unto thee in the way as thou earnest,) hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the HOLY GHOST. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized. And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached CHRIST in the synagogues, that He is the SON of GOD. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this Name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very CHRIST.

THE PURIFICATION.

[FEBRUARY 2.]

This festival has the same Epistle and Gospel which are now in use appointed for it in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, and the germ of the present Collect is found in the Sacramentary of Gelasius.<sup>1</sup> St. Cyril of Alexandria, and others of an equally early date refer to it; and there is little doubt that it was the first festival instituted in memory of the Blessed Virgin. The ancient and present name for it in the Eastern Church is the Hypapante of our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, the ὑπαπήνη or ὑπαπαπήνη, the meeting of our Lord with Simeon and Anna in the Temple. It is said to have been observed on the 14th day of February until the time of Justinian [A.D. 542], but in the Comes of St. Jerome it precedes the festival of St. Agatha, which is dated on the Nones, or 5th of February, the day on which that Saint is still commemorated; and probably it was so observed only by those who kept Christmas Day on the 6th of January, as a part of the Eastern Church has always done.

The popular name of this festival (Candlemas Day) perpetuates the memory of a very ancient custom, that of walking in procession with tapers, and singing hymns. In a Homily on the Purification Alcuin says [A.D. 790], "The whole multitude of the city collecting together devoutly celebrate the solemnity of the Mass, bearing a vast number of wax lights; and no one enters any public place in the city without a taper in his hand." St. Bernard also [A.D. 1153] gives the following description of the practice, as carried out in his day:—

"We go in procession, two by two, carrying candles in our hands, which are lighted, not at a common fire, but at a fire first blessed in the church by a Bishop. They that go out first return last; and in the way we sing, 'Great is the glory substantia in templo est presentatus, ita nos facias purificatis Tibi mentibus presentari. Per eundem.

FOR THE EPISTLE. Mal. iii. 1-5.

BEHOLD, I will send My messenger, and he shall prepare the way before Me: and the LORD, Whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple; even the Messenger of the Covenant, Whom ye delight in; behold, He shall come, saith the LORD of Hosts. But who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. And He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, a S. P. Q. Rom. an. Mal. 3. 1-4. Eastern. Heb. 7. 7-17.

that they may offer unto the LORD an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgement, and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false-swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not Me, saith the LORD of Hosts.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke ii. 22-40.

AND when the days of her purification, according to the Law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought Him to Jerusalem, to present Him to the LORD; (as it is written in the Law of the LORD, Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the LORD;) and to offer a sacrifice, according to that which is said in the Law of the LORD, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons. And behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Symeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the HOLY GHOST was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the HOLY GHOST, that he should not see death, before he had seen the LORD'S CHRIST. And he came by the SPIRIT into the temple; and when the parents brought in the Child JESUS, to do for Him after the custom of the law, then took he Him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, LORD, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word: for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people

b S. P. Q. Rom. an. Luke ii. 22-32. Eastern as P. B.

Israel. And Joseph and His mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of Him. And Symeon blessed them, and said unto Mary His mother, Behold, this Child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a Sign which shall be spoken against; (yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also;) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. And there was one Anna a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser; she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity: and she was a widow of about fourscore and four years; which departed not from the temple, but served GOD with fastings and prayers night and day. And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the LORD, and spake of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem. And when they had performed all things according to the law of the LORD, they returned into Galilee to their own city Nazareth. And the Child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of GOD was upon Him.

of the Lord.' We go two by two in commendation of charity and a social life; for so our Saviour sent out His disciples. We carry lights in our hands; first, to signify that our light should shine before men; secondly, this we do this day especially in memory of the Wise Virgins (of whom this blessed Virgin is the chief) that went to meet their Lord with their lamps lit and burning. And from this usage and the many lights set up in the church this day, it is called Candelaria, or Candlemas. Because our works should be all done in the holy fire of charity, therefore the candles are lit with holy fire. They that go out first return last, to teach humility, 'in honour preferring one another.' Because God loveth a cheerful giver, therefore we sing in the way. The procession itself is to teach us that we should not stand idle in the way of life, but 'go from strength to strength,' not looking back to that which is behind, but reaching forward to that which is before."

The festival is placed at forty days' distance from Christmas, as that was the interval directed by the law between the day of birth and the day when the mother presented herself for readmission to the congregation, and her infant son for an offering to the Lord. [Lev. xii. 4; Exod. xxii. 29; Numb. viii. 17.] It was on this occasion that Simeon gave to the Church the Nunc Dimittis, in which he proclaimed the glorious and universal Epiphany of the Holy Child, when he prophesied of Him as "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of God's people Israel." It was then also that the Virgin Mother first learned that sorrow as well as joy was in the wonderful lot assigned her: "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also."

The submission of the Blessed Virgin to the ceremony of purification, and of her Divine Son to that of presentation in the Temple, were each of them an illustration of the perfect humiliation of our Lord to the likeness of sinful man. The miraculous conception of the Virgin had been unattended by that for which a ceremonial purification was ordained; and our Blessed Lord, having no original sin, needed not to be offered (or presented) and bought back again. But, as at His Baptism, so now, for Himself and for His holy Mother He says by their acts, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." In the price of redemption (the representative sacrifice offered in the early dawn of the Holy Child's life, to be followed by a more perfect Sacrifice in its eventide) it has been noticed that there was a typical meaning, now for the first and only time finding its true signification. The two turtle-doves, or young pigeons, were expressive of lowliness at all times, as offerings of the poor; but in the offering of one by fire, and the eating of the other by the priest, or those who offered it, are now to be seen a type of Christ offering Himself for sin, and also giving Himself to be the spiritual food and sustenance of His people.

It is worthy of remark, as a happy token of the unity which is possible in spite of disagreement, that although the cultus of the Blessed Virgin was and is one principal cause of difference between the Church of England and other Catholic

IN those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty,) Men and brethren, this Scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the HOLY GHOST by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took JESUS: for he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem, insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood. For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and, His bishoprick let another take. Wherefore, of these men which have companied with us all the time that the LORD JESUS went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection. And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou, LORD, Which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two Thou hast chosen; that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbered with the eleven Apostles.

SAINT MATTHIAS.

[FEBRUARY 24.]

This is not one of the most ancient of the festivals generally observed by the Church, as there is no provision for it in the Lectionary of St. Jerome; but there is a Collect for it in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, and in a German martyrology of about the same period. It comes first in order after the Festivals of the Incarnation, perhaps because St. Matthias represents the earliest independent action of the Church as that spiritual body which was to exercise the authority of Christ, and to become the substitute, in some measure, for His Visible Presence. But in the Eastern Church it is August 9th.

St. Matthias' Day was formerly changeable in Leap Year, when the intercalated day was added between February 23rd and 24th, and the 25th became the festival of St. Matthias. But at the revision of the Calendar in 1661 the intercalary day was placed at the end of the month, and the festival of St. Matthias fixed permanently to the 24th day. This is the day

(VI. Kalend. Martii) appointed for the Festival in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory.

Nothing more is recorded of St. Matthias in the New Testament than that he was chosen to be an Apostle in the place of Judas Iscariot, the account of his ordination to that high office being given in Acts i. 15-26, the Epistle of the day throughout the world. The Eastern Gospel contains the same solemn prayer of our Lord as that does which is used in the Western Church, though taken from a different Evangelist; and the coincidence is a striking illustration of the unity of mind by which the whole Catholic Church is pervaded. It is plain also that this Gospel is intended to show that the Apostle, on whose day it is used, was as much "numbered with" the other Apostles, although ordained by men, as any of those were who were ordained by our Lord Himself; and thus illustrates the great truth, that the Great High Priest Himself declared, "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you."

The tradition of the Church respecting St. Matthias' Apostolic labours is, that after ministering for some years among his countrymen the Jews, he went to Cappadocia, and was eventually crucified there about the year of our Lord 64. The manner of his death was not very unlike that of the traitor Judas, but the one found the tree on which he hung the way "to his own place;" the other, his Master's own road to the Paradise of God.

INTROIT.—Thy friends are exceeding honourable unto me, O God: greatly is their beginning strengthened. Ps. O Lord, Thou hast searched me out and known me: Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising. Glory be.

AND in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from GOD unto a city of Galilee named Nazareth, to a Virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the Virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the LORD is with thee; blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favour with GOD. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call His Name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the SON of the Highest; and the LORD GOD shall give unto Him the throne of His father David. And He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The HOLY GHOST shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the SON of GOD. And behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age; and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren: for with GOD nothing shall be impossible. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the LORD; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

THE ANNUNCIATION.

[MARCH 25.]

There is no mention of the festival of the Annunciation in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, although there are days in honour of the Purification and the Nativity and the Death or Assumption of the Blessed Virgin. It is however of very early date, as Proclus, Patriarch of Constantinople, who died A.D. 446, has left a homily on the day, which was preached in the presence of Nestorius, and against his heresy. It is also mentioned by St. Athanasius, St. Chrysostom, St. Augustine, and other writers as early; and the Collect is found in the Sacramentary of Gelasius, at the end of the fifth century, as well as in that of St. Gregory. In the Council of Toledo, A.D. 656, the first of seven Canons orders that the Feast of the Annunciation shall, in future, be kept on the 18th of December, so as not to interfere with the celebration of Good Friday or the observance of Lent. But this day was afterwards appropriated to the festival named "the Expectation of the Blessed Virgin," and the old day was restored.

In the Consuetudinary of Sarum this festival is called "Our Lord's Annunciation," and Bishop Cosin proposed to alter the title both here and in the Table of Lessons to "The Annunciation of our Lord to the Blessed Virgin Mary:" in both cases his alteration was inserted in the MS. of the Prayer Book, but subsequently crossed out, and the authorized title is "The Annunciation of our Lady," or "The Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary."

The Church of England commemorates the Mother of our Lord on five days in the year, the Annunciation, the Purification, the Visitation, the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, and her Conception. The three latter are Black Letter Days in July, September, and December: the two former, as days which commemorate events that associated her with the Person of our Lord and the work of our salvation by His human Nature, are provided with special services as days of obligation.

If our Blessed Lord's Nativity occurred on the 25th of December, as there are sound chronological reasons for supposing, this may be taken as the true time when the angel Gabriel first gave to the Church the words, "Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women;" words which have been associated with errors in doctrine and practice, but which are still words that come from God. It must have been about this time also, "in those days," that the Blessed Virgin was inspired to give to the Church the Canticle which has ever since been so dear to every generation. The words which she was thus inspired to speak respecting herself, and those which were spoken of her by the angel "sent from God," shew to what an exalted place she was raised by the Providence of Almighty God: and her meek reception of the wonderful revelation UNTO every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of CHRIST. Wherefore He saith, When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that He ascended, what is it but that He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that He might fill all things.) And He gave some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of CHRIST; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the SON of GOD, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of CHRIST; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, Which is the Head, even CHRIST: from Whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love.

shews a holiness in the subjection of her will to the will of the Lord, Whose handmaid she was, that no saint ever surpassed. Holy in her original character, her holiness was made more perfect by that most intimate union with Jesus which existed for nine months of her life. Little children were brought to Jesus that He might lay His hands on them, and thus sanctify them by the touch of a passing moment; but the same Jesus abode long in His Mother's bosom, His spotless Body was formed of her substance, and sanctified her both in what He received from her as Man, and what He gave to her as God. Not Eve when she was in Paradise could have been so holy as the Virgin Mary when she became a Paradise herself. Not even the glorified saints who have attained to the purity and bliss of heaven are raised to higher blessedness and purity than that saintly maiden was whom Elisabeth was inspired to speak of as "the Mother of my Lord."

This sanctity of the Blessed Virgin Mary through her association with her Divine Son has always been kept vividly in view by the Church: but, while excess of sentiment on the one hand has led to an irreverent dishonour of her name by associating it with attributes of Deity, so want of faith in the principle of the Incarnation has led, on the other hand, to an irreverent depreciation of her sanctity. Our two principal and three minor festivals in honour of the Virgin and her work in the Incarnation point out the true course; to esteem her very highly above all other saints; but yet so that her honour may be to the glory of God.

INTROIT.—Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let it bring forth salvation. [Alleluia. Alleluia.—If in Easter season.] Ps. And let righteousness spring up together; I the Lord have created it. Glory be.

SAINT MARK.

[APRIL 25.]

The festival of St. Mark is provided for in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, although not in the Comes of St. Jerome. Like others, it probably began in a local observance by the Church of a particular country (in this case, Egypt), and was gradually extended to all other Churches throughout the world.

Of the Saint commemorated on this day there can be no doubt; but it is not quite certain which of the Marks named in the Acts of the Apostles is Saint Mark the Evangelist. It seems most probable that he was not the John Mark of Acts xii. 12 and Acts xv. 37 (who was the ἀνεψιός of St. Barnabas, and about whose conduct the sharp dissension arose between St. Paul and St. Barnabas), but that the Evangelist was the "Marcus, my son," of whom St. Peter writes in 1 Pet. i. 13 as being his companion at Babylon. It was his association with St. Peter which led St. Mark to be the writer of the Gospel that goes by his name, and which is always connected with the name of St. Peter as well as of St. Mark by ancient writers. The later years of his ministry were spent at Alexandria, where he founded the Church of Christ among the intellectual men of that learned city, and originated among them that class of Christian scholars which afterwards gave such a prominent place to Alexandria in the theological history of the Church. The Evangelist carried the knowledge of Christ and the ministry of the Church into less civilized parts of Africa, but Alexandria was the central point of his labours; and there he was martyred on a day when the heathen feast of Serapis was being observed, and which also appears to have been Easter Day, probably April 25th, and perhaps late in the first century, after most of the Apostles had gone to their rest. He was dragged from his place at the altar through the streets of the city, and over the rough cliffs adjoining, to prison; from whence the next morning he was again tortured in the same manner until his soul departed to spend a second and glorious Easter with his risen and ascended Lord.

One of the ancient Apostolic Liturgies goes by the name of St. Mark; and his festival was formerly the day on which the Greater Litanies or Processions were said: but these latter originated with St. Gregory in the sixth century. [See Introduction to Litany, p. 222.]

It will be observed that the English Epistle and Gospel for this day were anciently, as they still are, different from those of the Latin and Oriental Churches.

INTROIT.—Hide me, O God, from the gathering together of the froward, and from the insurrection of wicked doers. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer; preserve my life from fear of the enemy. Glory be.

I AM the true Vine, and My FATHER is the Husbandman. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me. I am the Vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, Herein is My FATHER glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples. As the FATHER hath loved Me, so have I loved you: continue ye in My love. If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My FATHER's commandments, and abide in His love. These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

SAINT PHILIP AND SAINT JAMES.

[MAY 1.]

In the Lectionary of St. Jerome and the Sacramentary of St. Gregory the names of these two Apostles are associated together as they are in the Latin and English Churches of modern times: and the day of the festival is in both cases the same as that now observed. But in the Eastern Church St. Philip's Day is November 14th, and St. James' Day October 23rd. It will also be observed that the Apostle St. Philip alone is named for May 1st in the ancient Calendar of the Venerable Bede; and in some early Calendars of the English Church, June 22nd is dedicated to "Jacobus Alfei." [See pp. 146, 151.]

The Epistle for the day in the Eastern Church is the same portion of Scripture that was read for the Second Morning Lesson in our own Church until 1661; but it seems clear that the Philip there mentioned is Philip the Deacon, since St. Peter and St. John were sent to Samaria to confirm those whom he had baptized, which would not have been necessary in the case of an Apostle. It is curious to observe that the same error should have occurred in both the Eastern and the English Church; but there seems to have been much confusion among the ancients between St. Philip the Apostle and Philip the Deacon and Evangelist, arising out of a generally received opinion that the former was married [Euseb. v. 24], while it is recorded of the latter in Acts xxi. 9 that he had "four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy."

St. Philip was one of the first of our Lord's disciples, and is thought to have accompanied Him for some time when St. Andrew and St. Peter had returned to their occupation of fishing after their first call. It may have been this faithful companionship which led to the loving rebuke of our Lord recorded in the Gospel of the day, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?" For the Apostle's zeal in bringing Nathanael and the Greeks to his Master appears to indicate a trained faith in the Person of the holy Jesus, as does even his aspiration, "Shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us!" In the account of the miracle of the loaves and fishes St. Philip also seems to have been specially under the loving eye of his Master, who sought to "prove him" before He tried the faith of the others. After the dispersion of the Apostles, St. Philip carried Christ and the Church to Northern Asia, and his name has also been connected with the early Church of Russia. St. Chrysostom and Eusebius both record that he was crucified and stoned on the cross, at Hierapolis, a great stronghold of idolatry, in Phrygia; and the tradition of the Church is, that his martyrdom took place immediately after he had procured by his prayers the death of a great serpent which was worshipped by the people of the city.

St. James the Less was son of Alphaeus, or Cleophas, and of Mary, and nephew to Joseph the husband of the Blessed Virgin. Hence he was, in the genealogical phraseology of the Jews, a "brother of our Lord," as is shewn in the table at page 253. It was also thought by the ancients that his mother Mary was cousin, or as the Hebrews would say "sister," to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and this would establish a double legal affinity between James and Joses, her sons, and the holy Jesus. St. James the Less is mentioned by Josephus and in the Talmud, being well known to the Jews from his position as Apostle of the Church of Jerusalem up to the beginning of its last troubles: and having won even from them the name of "the just," a name shadowing that of his Master, so often called "the Righteous" in the Psalms. It is he whose name is several times mentioned by St. Paul; and he was the writer of the Catholic Epistle of St. James. He went to his rest by martyrdom [A. D. 62], in Jerusalem, being thrown down from a pinnacle or wing of the Temple by some of the persecuting Scribes and Pharisees, and slain, as he lay bruised on the ground below, with a fuller's club.

The only reason that can be suggested for coupling together St. Philip and St. James is, that by thus doing the manner in which our Lord sent forth His Apostles two and two is illustrated. St. Simon and St. Jude, St. Peter and St. Paul, St. Barnabas and St. Bartholomew are parallel instances.

INTROIT.—They cried unto Thee in the time of their trouble, and Thou heardest them from heaven. Alleluia. Alleluia. Ps. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, for it becometh well the just to be thankful. Glory be.

let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the LORD. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted; but the rich in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the LORD hath promised to them that love Him.

THE GOSPEL. S. John xiv. 1-14.

[AND JESUS said unto His disciples,] Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My FATHER'S house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, LORD, we know not whither Thou goest, and how can we know the way? JESUS saith unto him, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life: no man cometh unto the FATHER but by Me. If ye had known Me, ye should have known My FATHER also: and from henceforth ye know Him, and have seen Him. Philip saith unto Him, LORD, shew us the FATHER, and it sufficeth us. JESUS saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the FATHER; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the FATHER? Believest thou not that I am in the FATHER, and the FATHER in Me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of Myself; but the FATHER that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works. Believe Me, that I am in the FATHER, and the FATHER in Me; or else believe Me for the very works' sake. Verily, verily I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall He do also; and greater works than these shall He do; because I go unto My FATHER. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My Name, that will I do, that the FATHER may be glorified in the SON. If ye shall ask any thing in My Name, I will do it.

SAINT BARNABAS.

[JUNE 11.]

This festival is not of primitive antiquity, being unnoticed in the ancient Lectionaries and Sacramentaries. In the Calendar of the Venerable Bede it is the 10th instead of the 11th of June; and in the Eastern Church the name of St. Barnabas is associated with that of St. Bartholomew, the latter being also commemorated on August 25th. The day was omitted from the English Calendar of 1552, but the Service was retained. In Fothergill's MS. it is stated that the day was not observed because St. Barnabas was not one of the twelve.<sup>1</sup>

The name of St. Barnabas derives its chief lustre from his association with St. Paul; yet, independently of this, he was one worthy to be ranked among the saints of the Church as an Evangelist, Apostle, and Martyr.

The Apostle St. Barnabas was born at Cyprus, but was a Jew of the tribe of Levi, and his original name was Joses or Joseph. Some of the Fathers record that he was one of the seventy disciples, and that he was brought up with St. Paul at the feet of Gamaliel. After our Lord's Ascension he received the name of Barnabas, or "Son of Consolation," from the Apostles; and shewed his zeal for Christ by selling his property that the Apostles might distribute the proceeds among the poor; an act which possibly originated the name by which he has ever since been known. St. Chrysostom hands down a tradition that he was a man of very amiable disposition but commanding aspect. Having brought St. Paul to the Apostles he was associated with him for about fourteen years, and on several missionary journeys. After their separation nothing further is recorded of St. Barnabas in Holy Scripture; but the traditions of the Church represent that he spent the remainder of his life among his fellow-countrymen at Cyprus, and that he was stoned by the Jews at Salamis under circumstances somewhat similar to those which brought St. Stephen to his death. What was supposed to be the body of St. Barnabas was discovered four centuries after his martyrdom, a Hebrew copy of St. Matthew's Gospel lying next his heart, which was believed to have been written by himself. An Epistle is extant bearing the name of St. Barnabas, but it is not now considered to be his work.

The Gospel for the day is evidently selected with reference to the act of St. Barnabas in consoling the poor disciples in their poverty. He acted upon the command of our Lord in the spirit with which the example of the Good Samaritan is and much people was added unto the LORD. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul. And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the Church, and taught much people: and the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the SPIRIT, that there should be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa. Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

SAINT JOHN THE BAPTIST.

[JUNE 24.]

This festival is in the Comes of St. Jerome, as also another commemorating the Beheading of St. John the Baptist, but the date is not indicated in either case. Mabillon says that the festival of this day was in the Carthaginian Calendar before A. D. 484; and it is mentioned [circ. A. D. 400] by Maximus, Bishop of Turin, as also by St. Augustine, in several Homilies. In the Eastern Church it is kept on January 7th, the day after the holy Theophany; and the festival of the Decollation is also fixed, as in the Latin Church and our own, for August 29th. The day on which our principal Festival of St. John the Baptist is kept has been supposed to be connected with his words, "He must increase, but I must decrease;" the days of the Bridegroom are growing longer, but those of the friend of the Bridegroom are beginning to wane. So St. Augustine says [Hom. 287], "John was born to-day, and from to-day the days decrease; Christ was born on the eighth of the kalends of January, and from that day the days increase." But the 24th of June is also the proximate day of the Baptist's birth, since he was six months older than our Lord.

Although the martyrdom of St. John Baptist is one of the four recorded in Holy Scripture (the other three being those of the Holy Innocents, St. Stephen, and St. James), yet the present festival, which commemorates his Nativity, appears to be the more ancient of the two dedicated to his name, and the one more generally observed. So we may judge from the Sermons both of Maximus and St. Augustine, each of whom accounts for the custom of observing the Birth and not the Martyrdom of the Precursor of our Lord as if no other festival in his honour had yet been established. "The prophets who had gone before were first born, and at a later day prophesied, but St. John Baptist heralded the Incarnation of our Lord when His Virgin Mother came to visit Elisabeth, and both the Precursor and the Holy Child were yet unborn."

The miraculous birth of St. John the Baptist, and all that we know of his subsequent history, is told us in the opening the cities of Judah, Behold your God. Behold, the LORD GOD will come with strong hand, and His arm shall rule for Him: behold, His reward is with Him, and His work before Him. He shall feed His flock like a shepherd; He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young.

THE GOSPEL. S. Luke i. 57-80.

ELISABETH'S full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son. And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the LORD had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her. And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name. And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called. And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them; and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill-country of Judæa. And all they that had heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be? And the hand of the LORD was with him. And his father Zacharias was filled with the HOLY GHOST, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the LORD GOD of Israel: for He hath visited and redeemed His people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of His servant David; as He spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember His holy covenant; the oath which He sware to our father Abraham, that He would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before Him all the days of our life. And thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the LORD to prepare His ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto His people, by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the Day-spring from on high hath visited us; to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit; and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

chapters of the four Gospels, in the 11th of St. Matthew, and the 9th of St. Luke. By comparing our Lord's words in Matt. xi. 14, those of the angel in Luke i. 16, 17, of Zacharias in Luke ii. 76, and those of St. John himself in announcing his mission, with preceding prophecies, we see that the prophets had spoken of him more than seven hundred years before he was born, and that the very last words of the Old Testament, written about four hundred years previously, were concerning him. And, comparatively little as is said about St. John in Holy Scripture, what is said shows how important his office was, and illustrates the words of our Lord, that among all previously born of women, none was ever greater than John the Baptist.

He appears to have spent his childhood, at least, with our Blessed Lord and His mother, and it is natural to suppose that his parents lived but a few years after his birth. But when the time for his ministry came, he adopted the ancient prophetic mode of life; such as is indicated in the case of Elijah the Tishbite, who is said [2 Kings i. 8] to have been "a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins." As a prophet, and the greatest of all,—the last prophet of the old dispensation, and the first of the new,—he assailed the vices of the generation in which our Lord came, as Elijah himself had assailed those of Ahab and the Israel of that day; and so doing he brought many to repentance, and initiated a new moral life by that ordinance of Baptism with which the dispensation of Sinai ended and that of Calvary began. And when by the power of his preaching he had prepared the hearts of the people to receive Christ as a blessing, and not as one "come to smite the earth with a curse" [Mal. iv. 6], the other part of his office was brought into exercise, that of baptizing our Lord, and witnessing to the descent of the Holy Spirit on His human nature.

Powerful as the effect of St. John the Baptist's ministrations evidently was, we have very little information given us about it. He proclaimed the coming of Christ, rebuked all classes of the people for their sins, shewed them the way to turn from them, and baptized with a Baptism of water which foreshadowed the Baptism with the Holy Ghost as well as water. All people seem to have come readily to him, for the "offence of the Cross" had not yet begun, and the prophet who attracted was no "carpenter's son," but "a prophet indeed," the son of a man well known among them, a priest of the regular succession of Aaron, prophesying as Elijah, Isaiah, or Ezekiel, with the outward appearance and habit of a "man sent from God," and telling of that which they longed for, the near approach of their Messiah. This is all we learn of the ministry of the Baptist from Holy Scripture, and tradition has added little or nothing more. His martyrdom appears to have taken place very early in our Lord's ministry, and when St. John himself was only about thirty years of age; and since his work was done, we may see in it the manner in which the course of even the evil of this world is so regulated, that it ministered by a quick death to the rapid removal of a saint from the Church on earth to the Church in heaven when the time of his reward was come.

INTROIT.—The Lord hath called me by name from the womb of my mother. He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword. In the shadow of His hand hath He hid me: He hath made me like a polished shaft, and in His quiver hath He concealed me. Ps. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to praise Thy Name, O Thou most highest. Glory be.

SAINT PETER.

[JUNE 29.]

This day is one of the oldest of Christian festivals, and one that was from the beginning of its institution celebrated with great solemnity. Ruinart [617] traces it back as far as the third century, and it is probably of even more primitive antiquity. In St. Jerome's Lectionary there are two Gospels

Peter many excellent gifts, and commandedst him earnestly to feed Thy flock; Make, we beseech Thee, all Bishops and Pastors diligently to preach Thy holy Word, and the people obediently to follow the same, that they may receive the crown of everlasting glory; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

ABOUT that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And, because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.) And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him, intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in prison; but prayer was made without ceasing of the Church unto God for him. And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the prison. And behold, the angel of the LORD came upon him, and a light shined in the prison; and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals: and so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. And he went out and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision. When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, which opened to them of his own accord; and they went out, and passed on through one street, and forthwith the angel departed from him. And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the LORD hath sent His angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

WHEN JESUS came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, He asked His disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? And they said, Some say that Thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But Whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the CHRIST, the SON of the living God. And JESUS answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My FATHER Which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

and two Epistles, the one pair under the name of St. Peter, the other under that of St. Paul. As there is only one Vigil, and one Octave, which is called the Octave of the Apostles, the day was evidently then dedicated to both Apostles, as it was in the English Church until the Reformation [a "Commemoration" of St. Paul following on the 30th], and as it still is in the Latin and the Eastern Church. It was a very early custom for the Bishops of Rome to celebrate the Holy Communion in both St. Peter's and St. Paul's Churches on this day, a custom which is mentioned [A.D. 348] by Prudentius [Peristephano, carm. xii.].

Transtyberina prius solvit sacra pervigil sacerdos, Mox huc recurrit, duplicatque vota.

He also speaks of the whole city frequenting each church, as if the festival was kept very generally and with great solemnity. St. Augustine, St. Leo, and several others of the Fathers have left sermons preached on the day of St. Peter and St. Paul; and no doubt the two, from their relative positions as the chief Apostles of the Jews and the Gentiles, from their joint ministrations at Rome, and from their martyrdom together there on the same day, have always had this day dedicated in their united names. Bishop Cosin restored the title "Saint Peter's and Saint Paul's Day" in his Durham Prayer Book, and added to the Collect, so that it should read ". . . commandedst him earnestly to feed Thy flock, and madest Thy Apostle St. Paul a choice vessel to bear Thy Name before the Gentiles, make, we beseech Thee, all Bishops and all other ministers of Thy Church, diligently to preach Thy holy Word . . ." He also altered the Epistle to 2 Tim. iv. 1-9; but none of these changes were adopted.

St. Peter was one of the first-called of our Lord's disciples [John i. 35-42], and as soon as he had come to follow Christ, he was marked out by a new name, that of Cephas, the Syriac equivalent of the one by which he has since been so familiarly known to the Church. Our Lord did nothing without a meaning, and in giving this new name to His disciple, He appears to have prophetically indicated the strong, immovable faith in Him which that disciple was to exhibit, and the firmness of which is not contradicted even by that temporary want of courage which led him to try and save his life by denial of his Master in the bitter hour of His Passion. Such instances of faith as St. Peter's attempt to walk on the water, and his confession of Christ as the Son of the living God, seem to set him at the head of the Apostles, as one whom no shock could move from his belief in the Lord; and the striking words of our Lord which are recited in the Gospel for this day shew that a special revelation had been vouchsafed to the Apostle to give him that knowledge of Christ on which his faith rested. It was perhaps because St. Peter's faith was stronger than that of the other Apostles that he had to undergo greater temptation. Satan desired to "sift him as wheat," as he had desired to tempt Job; but one look from Jesus brought him to himself and counteracted the temptation. A similar temptation is said to have assailed him just before his martyrdom, as our Lord's agony was a kind of second temptation. St. Peter too desired that the enp might pass from him, and endeavoured to escape from Rome. But as he was leaving the city he had such a vision of his Master as St. Paul had on his way to Damascus. "Lord, whither goest Thou?" were the words of the Apostle, and the reply was a question whether that Master must go to Rome and again suffer, since His servants were afraid to die for His sake. As when Jesus had "looked on" the Apostle years before in the hall of Pilate, so now, the trial of faith ended in a victory, and the servant returned to follow the Master by being girded by another than himself, and led whither he would not at the first have gone, to the Cross. At his own request

IN these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the SPIRIT, that there should be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa.

Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And, because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also.

Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto Him, We are able. And He saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on My right hand, and on My left, is not Mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of My FATHER. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. But JESUS called them unto Him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many.

he was crucified with his head downwards to make the death more ignominious and painful; and as being unworthy to suffer the same death as his Lord. This was in the year 68; and while St. Peter was being crucified at the Vatican, St. Paul was being beheaded at Aque Salvie, three miles from Rome.

Our Lord's remarkable words, "I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven," do not seem to be wholly explained by saying that St. Peter represented all the Apostles, and that these words represented the power given to all. But if they implied any distinction of authority between St. Peter and his brethren, they do not give any foundation whatever to the claims which the Bishops of Rome have made as successors of St. Peter: for [1] there is no evidence that they are in any special sense successors of St. Peter, and [2] if our Lord's words cannot clearly be applied to the other Apostles, much less can they be applied to Bishops of later days who were not Apostles. There is nothing in the Scriptural account of St. Peter's Apostolic work which adequately explains these words; nor does the tradition of the Church respecting that work shew anything that at all helps to do so. He presided over the Church at Antioch for some time,—a fact commemorated by the festival of St. Peter's Chair at Antioch,—assisted, as it appears, in evangelizing Chaldaea, and was probably some years at Rome before his death. During these years it seems most likely that he was all the while acting chiefly as the Apostle of the Circumcision, having charge of Jewish Christians: and, while great works were undoubtedly assigned to the other Apostles, there are evident traces of a providential disposition of duties by which Jewish Christianity became the field of St. Peter's labours; Gentile Christianity being assigned to St. Paul, who seems to have been called to the place of St. James the Great on his martyrdom; and the general government of the Church, when Jewish and Gentile Christianity were merging into one, the work of St. John, when the others had passed away from their labours.

SAINT JAMES THE GREAT.

[JULY 25.]

The festival of St. James, the brother of St. John the Divine, is not noticed in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, but has a Collect appointed in St. Gregory's Sacramentary, and is also in the ancient English Calendars of Bede and of King Athelstan's Psalter. In the Eastern Church it is kept on April 30th, but in the Western it has always been observed on July 25th.

St. James being a brother of the beloved disciple, his relationship to our Lord may be seen in the table printed under that Apostle's day [p. 253]. With St. John he received the appellation of Boanerges from our Lord, and has always been surnamed the Great, or the Greater, by the Church; but neither of these designations can be satisfactorily accounted for. Some special position was given to St. James and St. John, as well as to St. Peter, by their Divine Master; and the request of their mother, probably Salome, that they might sit on either hand of our Lord in His Kingdom, was doubtless founded on the choice thus made by Him, coupled with such a strong faith in His Person and Power as was displayed on another occasion, when the sons of Zebedee sought authority from Christ to destroy the Samaritan city that had rejected Him. [Luke ix. 52.] Their Master then told His servants that they should eat and drink at His table in His Kingdom, and

AND there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And He said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel; and since He had given to St. Peter the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, the other two favoured Apostles besought that to them might be given the two posts of honour and suffering next to His Person.

St. James was the first of the Apostles who suffered Martyrdom, and the only one whose death is recorded in the New Testament. The fact of his death is told us in the modern English Epistle of the day, but of its circumstances nothing more is known than that he suffered through the hatred of Herod Agrippa. Tradition says that his accuser repented as the Apostle was on his way to the place of execution, and that having received the blessing of the servant of Christ, he professed himself a Christian, and was baptized in the blood of martyrdom at the same time with St. James. [EUSEB. Ecc. Hist. ii. 9.] The Apostolic mantle of St. James appears to have fallen upon St. Paul, and perhaps we may look upon the latter as fulfilling the expectations which must have been raised by the place which the elder son of Zebedee occupied near the Person of our Lord, and by the title of Boanerges which was given to him.

St. James the Great is the patron saint of Spain, and his remains are supposed to be preserved at Compostella. "St. Iago of Compostella" holds the same relation to the history of that kingdom which St. George does to that of England: and both names have been used as the battle-cry of Christian hosts when they went forth to stem the torrent of that Mahometan and Moorish invasion which once threatened to drive Christianity from its throne in Europe as it has driven it from Asia.

SAINT BARTHOLOMEW.

[AUGUST 24.]

There is no festival of St. Bartholomew in the Lectionary of St. Jerome, but it appears in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory. In the Eastern Church this Apostle is commemorated on the same day with St. Barnabas, as St. Simon and St. Jude are connected in the Western Church; but on this day there is also a commemoration of the Translation of St. Bartholomew. There is absolutely nothing but his name recorded of St. Bartholomew in the New Testament (though it has usually been supposed that Nathanael and Bartholomew are two names for the same person); but the Gospel of the day perpetuates an old tradition that St. Bartholomew was of noble birth, and that hence arose the "strife" among the Apostles, "which of them should be accounted the greatest" in their Master's expected kingdom.

The reasons why Nathanael and Bartholomew are supposed to be the same person are as follows: [1] The call of St. Bartholomew is nowhere mentioned, while that of Nathanael appears to be the call of an Apostle. [2] The Evangelists who mention Bartholomew do not name Nathanael, while St. John, who tells us of the latter, does not name Bartholomew. [3] Bar-Tholmai may be only an appellation of Nathanael, as Bar-Jona is of St. Peter, since it signifies "the son of Tholmai," as the latter does "the son of Jonas," and as Barnabas means "the son of consolation." But strong as these reasons seem, there is the strong testimony of the Fathers against them. St. Augustine, St. Chrysostom, and St. Gregory the Great all declare that Nathanael was not one of the twelve: and the opinion that he was identical with Bartholomew is first found in a Benedictine author named Rupert, who wrote in the twelfth century. St. Augustine uses the fact that Nathanael was not an Apostle as a proof of his great holiness and ready perception of Christ:—"This was not said to Andrew, nor said to Peter, nor to Philip, which is said to Nathanael, 'Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile:'"—and assigns his learning and position in life as a reason why He Who chose the weak things of the world to confound the strong did not make him an Apostle.

The common tradition of the Church respecting St. Bartholomew is that he evangelized Northern India, leaving there a Hebrew copy of St. Matthew's Gospel, which afterwards came into the hands of Pantænus, head of the college of Alexandria, about A.D. 190. It is believed that, having once escaped crucifixion at Hierapolis in Phrygia, through the remorse of his persecutor, St. Bartholomew was afterwards martyred at Albanopolis on the Caspian Sea, where

THERE was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels; and prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in My Name, receiveth Me. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Wo unto the world because of offences: for it must needs be that offences come: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off; and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My FATHER Which is in heaven.

day most generally observed was that which we now keep, and which appears both in the Lectionary of St. Jerome and in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, as the Dedication of the Church of St. Michael. This basilica may have been that of Constantine near Constantinople, or that of Boniface at Rome, the latter being dedicated A.D. 606. In the Eastern Church St. Michael's Day is November 8th, July 13th and March 26th being also observed in honour of the Archangel Gabriel. These two are the only angels or archangels who are made known to us by name in the Canonical Scriptures, though Raphael and Uriel are named in the Book of Tobit and in Esdras.

The holy angels in general are commemorated by the Church from a deeply-rooted feeling of their communion with the saints, and of their ministrations among mankind on earth. Such a feeling is warranted by the words, "Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and Church of the Firstborn . . ." [Heb. xii. 22]; and, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" [Heb. i. 14.] The holy Son of God condescended to be ministered to by angels in His Temptation and Agony; they waited upon Him at His Birth and Resurrection; and at His Second Advent He will come with "all the holy angels." St. Peter was set free from prison by an angel, and one stood by St. Paul in the ship, thus illustrating their ministration to Christ's servants. Our Lord Himself spoke of their rejoicing over penitent sinners; and said of the little ones who had passed under His hand and benediction, that "their angels do always behold the face of My Father Which is in heaven," as if indicating many ministrations to those who are His,—some known, and some that are not made evident to sight or other sense. It has been a constant tradition of Christianity that angels attend at the ministration of Holy Baptism, and at the celebration of the Holy Communion; and that as Lazarus was the object of their tender care, so in sickness and death they are about the bed of the faithful, and carry their souls to the presence of Christ in Paradise.

Without taking into account, therefore, any of the many unveilings to our sight of holy angels and their ministrations recorded in the Old Testament, we have ample ground for believing that they are joined in a very close communion with those who have been redeemed by the blood of Christ. But whereas the saints were once sinners, and yet God is pleased that we should honour Him through them, the angels have never inherited unholiness or fallen from holiness, and still more shall we honour Him by venerating these pure and spotless servants of His who do His pleasure. And as our Lord has taught us to pray that we may do the will of our Father on earth as it is done in heaven, so may we take their example as the highest, next to His, of perfect submission to the will of God. While in respect to our worship on earth we may reckon it an exalted privilege to have such communion with them as to be able to say, "Therefore with angels and archangels, and all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify Thy glorious Name, evermore praising Thee, and saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts, heaven and earth are full of Thy glory: Glory be to Thee, O Lord most High."

INTROIT.—O praise the Lord, ye angels of His, ye that excel in strength: ye that fulfil His commandment, and hearken unto the voice of His words. Ps. Praise the Lord. O my soul: and all that is within me praise His holy Name.

SAINT LUKE.

[OCTOBER 18.]

A festival was dedicated in honour of St. Luke, as of the other Evangelists, at a very early period of Christian history, and is found in an ancient Calendar [earlier than A.D. 484] of the Church of Carthage. St. Jerome says [De Script. Ecc.] that the remains of St. Luke were translated to Constantinople in the twentieth year of Constantine the Great, and there laid in the magnificent church which he had built in honour of the Apostles; but whether the present festival commemorates this event or not there is no evidence to shew.

Little is indicated to us by Holy Scripture of St. Luke's personal history. His native place appears to have been Antioch; and as St. Paul calls him "the beloved physician" [Col. iv. 14], it seems clear that these words represent his profession. Yet ancient traditions have connected him with the art of painting, and several portraits exist which are attributed to him, showing how general this tradition is. The Evangelist was probably one of St. Paul's converts; for though there is a tradition that he was one of the seventy, the dedication of his Gospel seems to exclude himself from the number of those who had been eye-witnesses of our Lord's life and works. After the separation of St. Paul from St. Barnabas, the Evangelist constantly accompanied the former in his journeyings and missions; and the latter half of the Acts of the Apostles records not only what he heard from others, but the events which had occurred within his own experience while sharing St. Paul's work and dangers. Hence St. Paul speaks of him in affectionate terms as his "fellow-labourer," "the beloved physician," and "the brother whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the churches." He continued his missionary labours long after the death of St. Paul, and is believed to have reached his rest through martyrdom, being crucified upon an olive-tree at eighty years of age.

SAINT SIMON AND SAINT JUDE.

[OCTOBER 28.]

The festival of St. Simon and St. Jude appears in the Lec-tionary of St. Jerome, but it is only in the Western Calendars that the two Apostles are commemorated on the same day. In the Eastern St. Simon Zelotes' festival is May 10th, and St. Jude's June 19th. They appear to have been sons of Cleophas, or Alphaeus, and nephews of Joseph, and hence they are called brethren of our Lord,—the word brethren being taken in a wider sense among the Jews than with us.

Of St. Simon we have no notice in Holy Scripture beyond being the head Corner-Stone; Grant us so to be joined together in unity of spirit by their doctrine, that we may be made an holy temple acceptable unto Thee; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

the fact that he was surnamed in Hebrew the Cananite, or in Greek Zelotes, both words signifying a zealot; but in what sense is not apparent, unless the appellation is given him because he was one of a strict sect of Pharisees.

St. Jude, Judas, Thaddæus, or Lebbaeus, calls himself "the brother of James," apparently to distinguish himself from Judas Iscariot; and it is probably for the same reason that these other names are put prominently forward, as on one occasion when his name Judas is used, a parenthesis is added, "not Iscariot." He was a married Apostle, and Eusebius mentions two of his grandsons who were brought before Domitian as confessors for Christ's sake [iii. 20]. St. Jude wrote the Epistle going under his name, which is read on this day.

St. Simon Zelotes is supposed to have ministered chiefly in Egypt and parts of Africa adjoining. Some early Greek writers state that he visited Britain, and suffered martyrdom there by crucifixion. But the more probable account is that he was sawn asunder (a mode of martyrdom named in Heb. xi. 37, and that by which Isaiah is believed to have suffered) in Persia, at the same time with St. Jude, who ministered chiefly in that country, and who was martyred by the Magi.

It may be in illustration of that unity of the faith for which the Epistle of St. Jude so strongly contends, that these two Apostles, ministering and suffering, are also honoured together.

[NOVEMBER 1.]

This festival is not of the highest antiquity. It appears to have originated in the Western Church at Rome in the seventh century, when the Pantheon was dedicated as a Christian church under the name of the Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary and all Martyrs. This is said to have taken place on November 1st, A. D. 608, and the festival to have been kept on that day ever since. But in the Martyrology of the Venerable Bede (though not in his Calendar) there are two days dedicated to All Saints, one on the 13th of May, "Dedicatio Sanctæ Mariæ ad Martyres," and the other on the 1st of November. In the Eastern Church, the festival of All the Martyrs is observed on the octave of Pentecost, our Trinity Sunday; and this, as it appears, since the time of St. Chrysostom, who has left a homily preached upon the day. It may well be concluded that when the number of martyrs increased so rapidly as it did in the great persecutions, Christian common-sense suggested such a feast as that of All Saints, in addition to special days of commemoration for the more illustrious martyrs; and that the dedication of the Pantheon took place on a festival already familiar to the Church, rather than as the foundation of a new one. In the ship, in the mystical body of Thy SON CHRIST our LORD; Grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed Saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys, which Thou hast prepared for them that unfeignedly love Thee; through JESUS CHRIST our LORD. Amen.

AND I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living GOD; and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth, and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our GOD in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand, of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand.

Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand.

Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand.

After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our GOD Which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen; Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our GOD for ever and ever. Sacramentary of St. Gregory both days have Collects, etc., provided for them, that in May being entitled "Natale Sancte Marie ad Martyres," and that in November, "Natale Omnium Sanctorum," the latter having also a service provided for its vigil.

Whatever may have been the origin of the festival, it has become one very dear to the hearts of Christians, and is made, both by the character of the Service for the day, and by the meaning of it, one of the most touching of all holydays; a day on which are gathered up the fragments of the "one bread" of Christ's mystical Body, that nothing be lost of the memory and example of His Saints. First among the "cloud of witnesses" are they of the white-robed army of martyrs who are not otherwise commemorated, whose names are not noted in the diptychs of the Church, but are for ever written in the Lamb's book of life. Next are a multitude of those who were called to wait with St. John, rather than to follow their Master with St. Peter, but who are not less surely numbered among the children of God, and have their lot among the saints. Among that holy company are some who are dear to the memory of a whole Church; good bishops and priests, whose flocks are around them in the book of remembrance; saintly men and women, whose lives have been devoted to works of love, although not ministering at the altar; hidden saints of God, whose holiness was known within the narrowest circle on earth, but who will shine like stars in the firmament before the throne.

When the Church thanks God on this day for All Saints, many an one among them should be remembered by those who are left on earth. At the Holy Communion, and in private devotions, their names should be used in memorial before God; and prayers should be offered by those to whom they are still dear, and with whom they are still in one fellowship, that all loved ones departed may have more and more of the Light, Peace, and Refreshment which the Presence of Christ gives in Paradise.

INTROIT.—Rejoice we all in the Lord while we celebrate this day the honour of all the saints: for in them the angels have joy and give glory to the Son of God. Ps. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous: for it becometh well the just to be thankful. Glory be.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITURGY.

In the ancient Church of England, as in all other branches of the Western Church, the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and the Office for its celebration, were designated by the common name of "Missa,"<sup>1</sup> the true technical meaning of which word is probably the "Offering," and which assumed the form of "Mass" in the vernacular tongue. This name was retained in 1549, the title of the Office in the Prayer Book of that date being, "The Supper of the Lord, and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass;" but it was dropped in 1552, has not since appeared in the Prayer Book, and has been generally disused in the Church of England as a name either for the Office or the Rite: the latter being most frequently called the Holy Communion, or the Holy Eucharist, and the Office being conveniently distinguished by the primitive name of "The Liturgy." This latter word appears to have been derived from classical Greek through the Septuagint.

THE HISTORY OF THE LITURGY.

Like the rest of the Prayer Book, the English Liturgy is an inheritance from former ages. It was principally translated, in the first instance, from the Ordinarium Missæ, and Canon Missæ of the Salisbury Use, which had been the chief rule of Divine Service in the Church of England, from A. D. 1085 to A. D. 1549, a period of nearly five hundred years. The Mass of the Salisbury Rite (as well as of other English rites, such as those of York, Hereford, Bangor, and Lincoln) was a revised form of a more ancient Service, which had been in some very slight degree influenced by the Roman under St. Augustine and his successors, but which substantially represented the Liturgy used also in the Churches of France and Spain: and this Liturgy was derived from the great Patriarchate of Ephesus, which was founded by the Apostle St. Paul, and ruled by the Apostle St. John for many years before his death.<sup>2</sup> To understand this independent primitive origin of the English Liturgy, it will be necessary to trace out shortly the course of liturgical history from the first.

When our Blessed Lord instituted the Sacrament of the Holy Communion, and commanded it to be perpetually celebrated, He used the words, "This do in remembrance of Me," and thus imposed a certain form upon the Apostles as the one which they were to use in its celebration, and which would ever after be considered as essential by them, and the rest of the Church, as was the form given by Christ for Holy Baptism. This essential nucleus of the Liturgy consisted of at least Benediction, the breaking of the Bread, the giving of thanks, and the taking of the Cup into the hands, as is seen from the Gospel narrative [Matt. xxvi. 22; Mark xiv. 22; Luke xxii. 19]; and also from the special revelation made to St. Paul [1 Cor. xi. 23, 24].<sup>3</sup>

But as the words with which our Lord "blessed" the elements, and with which He "gave thanks," are not recorded, it can only be concluded that He left them to the inspired memory of His Apostles; to whom, at the proper time, the Holy Spirit was to call all things to remembrance that our Lord had taught them for the work which they had to do. It may well have been, also, that further details

Λειτουργία originally signified the public duties, or office, of any Λειτουργός, or public officer, and especially of those persons who had to undertake the principal care and expense of public entertainments. In the Septuagint the use of the word was restricted to the public Service of the Sanctuary [Numb. iv. 12, 26, vii. 5, viii. 22, xviii. 6; 1 Chron. ix. 13, xxvi. 30, xxviii. 13; 2 Chron. viii. 14, xxxv. 16]; and in the New Testament it passes on to the Christian Divine Service, which during that age, and until the destruction of the Jewish system, consisted almost entirely of the celebration of the Holy Communion. [Acts xiii. 2; Rom. xv. 16; 1 Tim. ii. 1.] In the Primitive Church, "The Liturgy" meant both the Office and the Rite itself, just as "Mass" did in the Mediæval Church; but in more recent times it has been restricted to the Office alone.<sup>4</sup> respecting the celebration of this principal rite of the Church were among those "things pertaining to the kingdom of God" which our Lord communicated to the Apostles during the forty days between His Resurrection and Ascension.

There is, however, no strong evidence that the Apostles adopted, or handed down, one uniform system of celebrating the Holy Communion, except in respect to these central features of the rite. Proclus, Patriarch of Constantinople in the fifth century, asserts that the Apostles arranged a Liturgy before they parted for their several fields of labour [see BONA, Rev. Liturg. l. v. 3], and a passage from a Homily of St. Chrysostom [Ad Cor. xxvii. 7], in which he says, "Consider, when the Apostles partook of that holy supper, what they did? Did they not betake themselves to prayers and hymns?" has been supposed to signify the same settled character of the Liturgy which they used. On the other hand, St. Gregory appears to say [Ep. lxiii.] that the Apostles used only the Lord's Prayer in consecrating the holy oblation; and although it is certain his words must not be taken strictly, they may be considered to shew that the Apostolic form of Liturgy was not originally a long one. Bona considers that the diversity in the evidence may be reconciled by supposing that the Apostles used a short form (containing only the essential part of the rite), when danger or other urgent circumstances gave them time for no more; and that when time permitted they used a longer form; although even this longer form he believes must have been short, compared with the Liturgies afterwards used, on account of the difficulties which Christians experienced in celebrating Divine Service during the age of persecutions. Several early liturgical commentators allege that the development of the Liturgy was gradual; and the truth seems to be expressed by one of them when he says that the Lord Himself instituted the rite in the simple manner narrated in the Gospel, that the Apostles added some things to it (as, for example, the Lord's Prayer), and that then some of their successors appointed Epistles and Gospels to be read; others, hymns to be sung; and others, again, made such additions to the Liturgy from time to time as they considered suitable for contributing to the glory of God in the holy Sacrament.<sup>5</sup> The Gospels and Epistles were certainly not written until a Liturgy had been in use for many years, in some form.

The ancient Liturgies which remain shew, nevertheless, so much general agreement as to bring conviction to the mind that they were all of them originally derived from some common source; and the same kind of synthetic criticism which traces back all known languages to three original forms of speech can also trace back the multitude of differing Liturgies which are used by the various Churches of East and West to a few—that is to say, four or five—normal types, all of which have certain strong features of agreement with each other, pointing to a derivation from the same liturgical

<sup>1</sup> "Missa" is a name of great antiquity, being found in an Epistle of St. Ambrose to his sister Marcellina. [Ambros. Op. ii. 853. Bened. ed.] Many explanations of the word have been given, but that of Cardinal Bona seems the most reasonable, viz. that it is derived from the words "He missa est," with which the congregation is dismissed by the deacon at the conclusion of the service, and which are equivalent to the "Let us depart in peace" of the Eastern Liturgies. That the term comes from "mittendo" is equally clear, and as early as Hieronymus we find the explanation, "In festis diebus, He missa est, dicitur, quia tunc generalis conventus celebrari solet, qui per hujusmodi denuntiandum licentiam discendi accipere solet." [xvi.] St. Thomas Aquinas explains the word as meaning that the sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist has been sent up to God by the ministrations of angels (iii. q. 83, art. iv.); and as ποιεῖται, "do this," is well known to have a technical association with sacrifice, so doubtless has "missa."

The following names were given to the Holy Eucharist in the early ages of the Church: Collecta, Dominicum, Agenda, Commundo, Oblatio, Ενομία, Λειτουργία, Μεταγωγία, Εύλογία, Συναξίς, Τιτήν, Προσφορά. [BONA, Rev. Liturg. l. i. c. 2.]

<sup>4</sup> Inexact writers sometimes designate the whole of the Offices used in Divine Service by the name of "The Liturgy," but it is much more proper, as well as convenient, to limit the use of the word as above.

fountain. That there is any difference at all in these may be attributed probably to three causes: [1] That the Apostles did not limit themselves or others solely to the use of the central and essential portion of the rite; and that while this was substantially kept uniform by them all, each added such prayers as he saw fit. [2] That Liturgies were, to a certain extent, adapted to the circumstances of the various nations among whom they were to be used, by such changes in the non-essential portions, and such additions, as appeared desirable to the Patriarch or Bishop. [3] That as Liturgies were not committed to writing until the end of the second century,<sup>1</sup> diversities of expression, and even greater changes, would naturally arise, among the variety of which it would be impossible to recover the exact original, and therefore to establish an authoritative uniformity.

It may be added that the lawfulness of an authorized diversity in non-essential rites, when combined with an orthodox uniformity in those which are essential, has always been recognized by the Catholic Church;<sup>2</sup> and that this principle is stated in the 34th Article of Religion of the Church of England.

Of the many Liturgies which are very ancient there are several which undoubtedly belong to the primitive age of Christianity, and from these all others that are known (as has been already said) have evidently branched off. They are the Liturgies which go by the names of St. James, St. Mark, St. Peter, and St. John; the first was the Liturgy of Jerusalem, the second of Alexandria, the third of Rome, and the fourth of Ephesus.<sup>3</sup>

The Liturgy of St. James, or of Jerusalem, was that used in Palestine and Mesopotamia, the dioceses of both which countries were included within the Patriarchate of Antioch. A singular proof of its primitive antiquity is found in the fact that the Monophysite heretics, who now occupy all these dioceses, use a Syriac Liturgy which they attribute to St. James, and which is nearly identical with that attributed to him by the orthodox, between whom and the Monophysites there has been no intercommunion since the Council of Chalcedon, which was held A.D. 451. Such a coincidence goes far to prove that this Liturgy is at least fourteen centuries old, and also offers some evidence that it was the one in use by the Churches of the Patriarchate of Antioch before the great division which arose out of the Eutychiean heresy. The Liturgy of St. James is also mentioned in the 32nd Canon of the Constantinopolitan Council held in Trullo, A.D. 692; and traces of it are to be found in the writings of Fathers who lived or had lived within the Patriarchate of Antioch, and may thus be supposed to have been familiar with its words. Among such are Theodoret, St. Jerome, St. Chrysostom (once a priest of Antioch), and St. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, two of whose Catechetical Lectures (preached in the latter half of the fourth century) are expressly on the subject of the Holy Eucharist, and describe the Service minutely. In the Apostolical Constitutions, written in the third century, there is a Liturgy, or synopsis of one, which has been called by the name of St. Clement, but appears to be that of St. James; and with the latter also agrees the description of the celebration of the Eucharist which is given by Justin Martyr, who was a native of Samaria (within the Patriarchate of Antioch), and died about sixty years only after St. John.<sup>4</sup> From this evidence it appears almost certain that the Liturgy of St. James which is used by the Monophysites, and that which is used on the Feast of St. James by the orthodox Church of Jerusalem, are versions of the primitive Liturgy which was used for the celebration <sup>1</sup> This rule was observed from feelings founded on our Lord's words, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither east ye your pearls before swine." [Matt. vii. 6.] For the same reason great reserve was used in speaking and writing on the subject of the Holy Eucharist, and hence little can be learned from the Fathers of the first three centuries about the mode in which it was celebrated.

<sup>3</sup> To these Neale adds that of St. Thaddeus, used in Persia, and also called the "Liturgy of the East."

<sup>4</sup> Justin Martyr describes the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, about A.D. 140, in the following terms: "Upon the day called Sunday we have an assembly of all who live in the towns or in the country, who meet in an appointed place; and the records of the Apostles, or the writings of the Apostles, are read, according as the time will permit. When the reader has ended, then the Bishop [ὁ πρεσβυτέρως] admonishes and exhorts us in a discourse that we should imitate such good examples. After that we all stand up and pray, and, as we said before, when that prayer is ended bread is offered, and wine and water. Then the Bishop also, according to the authority given him [ὁση δύναμις αὐτῶν], sends up [ἀνατίθει, comp. missa est] prayers and thanksgivings; and the people end the prayer with him, saying, Amen. After which, distribution is made of the consecrated elements, which are also sent by the hands of the deacons to those who are absent." [JUSTIN MARTYR, Apol.] of the Holy Communion in Judæa and the surrounding countries in the age which immediately followed that of the Apostles. From it St. Basil's Liturgy was derived, and from St. Basil's that of St. Chrysostom, which is the one used at the present day in the Eastern Church, and in Russia.

The Liturgy of St. Mark, or of Alexandria, is known to have been used by the orthodox Churches of North-eastern Africa down to the twelfth century, and is still used in several forms by the Monophysites, who supplanted them. The most authentic form of it is that entitled "The Liturgy of Mark which Cyril perfected," and which is extant in the Coptic, or vernacular language of Egypt, as well as in Greek, in MSS. of very ancient date. This Liturgy is traceable, by a chain of evidence similar to that mentioned in the preceding paragraph, to the second century, to which date it is assigned by Bunsen.<sup>5</sup> Palmer says respecting it, "We can ascertain with considerable certainty the words and expressions of the Alexandrian Liturgy before the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451; and we can trace back its substance and order to a period of far greater antiquity. In fact, there is nothing unreasonable in supposing that the main order and substance of the Alexandrian Liturgy, as used in the fifth century, may have been as old as the Apostolic age, and derived originally from the instructions and appointment of the blessed Evangelist."<sup>6</sup>

The Liturgy of St. Peter, or of Rome, is found, substantially as it is used in the Latin Church at the present day, in the Sacramentaries of St. Gregory [A.D. 590], Gelasius [A.D. 491], and St. Leo [A.D. 483], although many additions have been made to it in later times. The Roman Liturgy is attributed to St. Peter by ancient liturgical commentators, who founded their opinion chiefly upon a passage in an Epistle of Innocent, Bishop of Rome in the fifth century, to Decentius, Bishop of Eugubium.<sup>7</sup> But no doubt St. Innocent refers to the "Canon of the Mass" (as it has been called in later ages), that part of the Office which begins with the actual consecration of the Sacrament. There seems no reason to believe that this confident opinion of so eminent a Bishop in the fifth century was otherwise than correct; and like the preceding Liturgies, that of Rome may reasonably be assigned to the age succeeding the Apostles. St. Gregory revised the variable parts of this Liturgy, the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels; but the only change which he made in the Ordinary and the Canon was by that addition of a few words which is noticed by the Venerable Bede. [See p. 192, note.] From the Roman Liturgy in its primitive form were derived that used by the Churches of North-western Africa, and the famous Ambrosian Rite which is used in the Church of Milan. Since the time of St. Gregory this Liturgy has been used over a large part of the Western Church, and is now the only one allowed by the See of Rome.

The Liturgy of St. John, or of St. Paul, i.e. the Ephesian Liturgy, was the original of that which was used, probably in three various forms, in Spain, France, and England during the earlier ages of Christianity, and the only one besides the Roman which obtained a footing in the Western Church. This appears to have been disused in the dioceses of which Ephesus was the centre, at the time of the Council of Laodicea in Phrygia some time in the fourth century: the nineteenth Canon of that Council giving such directions respecting the celebration of the Holy Communion as shew that it substituted the Liturgy of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom, which is still used in those dioceses. But, at a much earlier date, missionaries had gone forth from the Church of Ephesus, and had planted the standard of Christianity at Lyons, that city thus becoming the great centre from which the Church spread itself throughout France; and as late as A.D. 177, the Christians of Lyons wrote to the Churches of Asia respecting the martyrdoms which had occurred in that city as to those who represented their mother Church, and had therefore a special sympathy with them. The primitive Liturgy of Ephesus thus became that of France, and, probably by the missionary work of the same apostolic men, of Spain also. This Liturgy continued to be used in the French Church until the time of Charlemagne [A.D. 742—814]. It had received such additions from the hands of Musæus, Sidonius, and St. Hilary of Poitiers, as St. Gregory had made to the Roman rite, but these additions or alterations did not affect the body of the Liturgy, consisting, as they did, of Introits, Collects, and other portions of the Service belonging to that which precedes the Ordinary and Canon.

The Gallican Liturgy was partly supplanted by the Roman in the time of Pepin, who introduced the Roman chant and psalmody into the Churches of France; and it was altogether superseded by Charlemagne, who obtained the Sacramentary of St. Gregory from Rome, and issued an edict that all priests should celebrate the Holy Sacrament only in the Roman manner. In Spain the same Liturgy had been used in a form called the Mozarabic; but by the influence of Pope Gregory VII, Alphonso VI., King of Castile and Leon, was persuaded to do as Charlemagne had done in France, to abolish the use of the national rite and substitute that of the Roman Church. It was thus wholly discontinued until the beginning of the sixteenth century, when Cardinal Ximenes endowed a college and chapel for the use of it at Toledo, and there it still continues to be used.

The early connection between the Church of France and the Church of England was so close that there can be no reasonable doubt of the same Liturgy having been originally used in both countries. When St. Augustine came to England in A. D. 596, expecting to find it an altogether heathen land, he discovered that there was an ancient and regularly-organized Church, and that its usages were different in many particulars from those of any Church with which he had been previously acquainted. [See p. 1.] By the advice of St. Gregory he introduced some changes into the Liturgy which he found in use; the changes coming, not directly from the Roman Sacramentary of St. Gregory, but "from a sister rite, formed in the south of France by the joint action, probably, of St. Leo and Cassian, about two hundred years before [A. D. 420]; having a common basis, indeed, with the Roman Office, but strongly tintured with Gallican characteristics derived long ago from the East, and probably enriched, at the time, by fresh importations of Oriental usages."<sup>2</sup> Thus the Liturgy of the Church of England after St. Augustine's time became a modified form of the more ancient Gallican, which itself was originally the Liturgy of the Church of Ephesus, owing its germ to St. Paul or St. John. The English Church of St. Augustine's day, and long after, distinctly averred that its customs were derived from the latter Apostle; but in many particulars the work of St. John and St. Paul appears to have traversed the same ground, as it certainly did in the Church of Ephesus, and probably did in the Church of England.

The Liturgy thus derived from the ancient Gallican, and the more recent version of it which had been introduced by Cassian, was again revised by St. Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, in A. D. 1085; and it was the same Liturgy which also formed the basis of the other slightly varying Offices that were used in different dioceses of England, and have come down to us by the names of these dioceses. The Salisbury Liturgy eventually supplanted all the others which were used by the Church of England, and became the principal basis of the vernacular Liturgy which has now been used for more than three hundred years in all the churches of the Anglican communion.<sup>3</sup>

The historical particulars thus given respecting the connection between ancient and modern Liturgies may be conveniently reduced into one general view by a tabular form:—

§ Table shewing the Origin of the principal Liturgies used throughout the Church.

§ Structure of Primitive Liturgies.

In all the primitive Liturgies there is a consistency of structure which shows that they were based on one common model, or else on certain fixed principles. They consist of two principal portions, the Pro-Anaphora and Anaphora. The Anaphora, or Oblation, is represented in the Latin Liturgies by the Canon of the Mass, and in our English Office by the part which begins with the versicle, "Lift up your hearts." The Pro-Anaphora is represented by the Ordinary of the Mass, which is all that goes before the Sursum Corda. The general structure of each of these portions of the Liturgy is as follows, the respective portions of the several parts varying, however, in different Liturgies:—

The Pro-Anaphora.

The Prefatory Prayer.
The Introit [known by various names].
The Little Entrance, or bringing the book of the Gospels in procession to the Altar.

The Trisagion.
The Epistle and Gospel.
The Prayers after the Gospel [after these prayers the Catechumens left the Church, and only "the faithful" or baptized and confirmed persons remained].
The Great Entrance, or bringing the prepared Elements in procession to the Altar.
The Offertory.
The Kiss of Peace.
The Creed.

The Anaphora.

The Triumphal Hymn [Tersanctus] with its Preface.
These come in between two portions of a long prayer, called the Prayer of the Triumphal Hymn.
Commemoration of the Institution.
The Words of Institution.
Oblation of the Consecrated Elements.
Prayer for the Descent of the Holy Ghost.

Prayer for the Transmutation of the Elements.
 Prayer for the living and the departed.
 The Lord's Prayer, preceded by a prayer of preparation, and followed by the Embolismus.
 Adoration, with an appointed prayer.
 Elevation.
 Union of the two Consecrated Elements.
 Prayer of humble access.

 Thanksgiving.
 Without going into very great detail it is impossible to shew the elaborate character of the ceremonial, and of the responsive part of the primitive Liturgies. These details may all be found in the original languages, and also in Dr. Neale's translation of the Primitive Liturgies; and it is sufficient here to say that the early Christians appear to have had no thought of what is called "simplicity" in Divine Worship, their Liturgies exhibiting a complicated structure, much ceremony, and an elaborate symbolism. All of them agree in the above general characteristics, but there are variations in the order of the different parts, the chief of which are represented in the following table:—

It will be seen at once that the order of St. John, or the Ephesine Liturgy, is that which is most closely represented by our own Communion Office. The same correspondence between the two may also be traced in several particulars in which the Liturgy of St. John differs from the other two Eastern Liturgies; especially in the provision of varying collects, and proper prefaces, and in the use of the versicle, "Glory be to Thee, O Lord," before the Gospel.

The Liturgy of St. John was handed down (as has been already stated) through the French Church, to which it was conveyed from Ephesus by missionaries, at a period very near to that of the Apostles themselves. The Gallican Liturgy itself is thus described by Palmer: "Germanus informs us that the Liturgy began with an Anthem, followed by Gloria Patri, after which the Deacon proclaimed silence; and a mutual salutation having passed between the priest and people, the hymn Trisagios, in imitation of the Greek rite, was sung, and was followed by Kyrie eleison, and the song of Zacharias the prophet beginning Benedictus, after which the priest read a collect entitled Post prophetiam, in the Gallican missals. The office so far, though ancient, cannot be traced to the most primitive ages of the Gallican Church, as doubtless the Liturgy originally began with the lessons from Holy Scripture, which I now proceed to consider.

"A lesson from the prophets or Old Testament was first read, then one from the Epistles, which was succeeded by the hymn of the three children, Benedicite, and the Holy Gospel. In later times the book of the Gospels was carried in procession to the pulpit by the Deacon, who was accompanied by seven men bearing lighted tapers, and the choir sung Anthems before and after the Gospel. After the Gospel was ended, the Priest or Bishop preached, and the Deacon made prayers for the people (probably in imitation of the Greek Liturgies, where a litany of the kind occurs after the Gospel), and the Priest recited a collect Post preces.

"Then the Deacon proclaimed to the catechumens to depart, but whether any previous prayers were made for them seems doubtful. Germanus speaks of its being an ancient custom of the Church to pray for catechumens in this place, but his words do not absolutely prove that there were particular prayers for them in the Gallican Church, and no other author refers to the custom, as far as I am aware. The catechumens, and those under penitential discipline, having been dismissed, silence was again enjoined, and an address to the people on the subject of the day, and entitled Prefatio, was recited by the Priest, who then repeated another prayer. The oblations of the people were next received, while the choir sang an offertory anthem, termed sonum by Germanus. The elements were placed on the holy table, and covered with a large and close veil or pall, and in later times the Priest here invoked the blessing of God on the gifts.

"Then the tablets called diptychs, containing the names of
