

Contributing to Wikipedia

A guide to improving content on the online encyclopedia

I've been a Wikipedian since 2004. I contribute because I like helping to create a free, reliable reference work for the entire world. I'm happy to help you learn how to contribute, too, so you can add your knowledge and make Wikipedia better.

DRAFT: 12 DEC 13

Imagine a world in which every single human being can freely share in the sum of all knowledge. That's our commitment.

This is the vision for Wikipedia and the other Wikimedia projects, which volunteers from around the world have been building since 2001. Bringing together the sum of all human knowledge requires the knowledge of many humans — including yours!

What's included here:

This guide will walk you through how to contribute to Wikipedia, so the knowledge you have can be freely shared with others. You will find:

What is Wikipedia?

Wikipedia is one of the largest collaborative projects in history. With millions of articles and in hundreds of languages, Wikipedia is read by hundreds of millions of people on a regular basis.

A lot of content already exists on Wikipedia, but many important topics have poor coverage and some have no article at all. Wikipedia relies on contributors like you to keep information current, expand short “stub” articles, and create new articles on topics not already covered in your language Wikipedia. Contributions you make to Wikipedia can enlighten hundreds, thousands, or even millions of people worldwide.

When you make an edit to Wikipedia, you’re joining a community of hundreds of thousands of people — Wikipedians — who have freely contributed their knowledge to Wikipedia.

What you contribute to Wikipedia is free content and becomes part of the commons. It may be edited and reused by others under a free license.

Article Talk

Encyclopedia

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

This article is about the type of reference work.

An encyclopedia (also spelled encyclopaedia) is a type of reference work — a compendium holding information from either all branches of knowledge or a particular branch of knowledge.^[2] Encyclopedias are divided into entries, which are usually accessed alphabetically. Encyclopedia entries are longer and more detailed than dictionaries.^[3] Generally speaking, unlike dictionaries, encyclopedias focus on linguistic information about words, encyclopedias focus on factual information to cover the thing or person whose article name stands.^{[4][5][6][7]}

Encyclopedias have existed for around 2,000 years. The earliest known existence, Naturalis Historia, was written in ca. AD 77 by the Roman Elder. The modern encyclopedia evolved out of the encyclopaedia of the 17th century. Historically, some encyclopedias were published in one volume, but some, such as the Encyclopædia Britannica, are published in multiple volumes. The world's largest Enciclopedia universal ilustrada europeo-americana encyclopedias, such as Wikipedia, are electronic.

The word encyclopedia comes from the Koine Greek word for "education": enkyklios (ἐγκύκλιος), meaning "circular" or "education, rearing of a child";^[10] it was reduced to the word encyclo and the phrase literally translates as "complete instruction".

Indeed, the purpose of an encyclopedia is to provide a general system to the men with whom we live. The men of preceding centuries will not become useful to us unless they are instructed, will at the same time become more useful if they are rendered a service to the human race in this way.

Preparing to edit

Anyone can edit Wikipedia, but there are some basic rules. Here are some of the most important ones to follow as you start editing:

Neutral point of view

Everything on Wikipedia must be written from a neutral point of view. Articles must not take sides, but instead should describe — accurately and without bias — all the significant viewpoints on the topic published in reliable sources. Argumentation or advocacy does not belong in Wikipedia articles.

No original research

Simply put, Wikipedia is not a place to publish original ideas. Rather, you should summarize what others have published in reliable sources about the topic. Articles may not contain any new analysis, and they should not synthesize published materials to reach broader conclusions beyond what the individual sources say.

Copyright and plagiarism

Since all contributions are freely licensed, no editor owns any article; all of your contributions can and will be edited and redistributed. Except for brief quotations, copying content from copyrighted sources onto Wikipedia is not allowed. Whether direct copying or close paraphrasing, plagiarism and copyright violation are disruptive and time-consuming for volunteers to clean up. It's important that all content you contribute to Wikipedia is written in your own words. (Public domain and freely licensed content may also be added to Wikipedia as long as it is properly attributed.)

Reliable sources

Information in Wikipedia needs to be verifiable, based on reliable published sources. You should add citations to the sources you use, so that others can check for themselves. The most reliable sources for Wikipedia are third-party sources with a reputation for fact-checking, such as books published by academic presses, peer-reviewed academic journals, and international newspapers. You should be using sources that represent significant viewpoints, rather than one-off studies or fringe work. Try to find the best and most reliable sources available on the topic.

Conflict of interest

If you have a conflict of interest about a particular topic — such as an employer or an organization you are a part of — you should avoid editing articles about it.

We've developed these policies and principles over the years so we can be sure that Wikipedia is as reliable and useful as possible.

Editing with the VisualEditor

With VisualEditor, you can see what your changes will look like as you edit, so you can focus on the content. Just click on the parts you want to change and start editing.

Editing toolbar

In edit mode, the toolbar lets you add formatting, references, images, and special page elements called templates (such as the infoboxes at the beginning of many articles). When you are finished editing, press the "Save page" button.

Lead section

The first sentence provides a definition of the topic, and the lead section goes on to summarize the key points covered in the article. This is the only section without a heading.

Images

Freely licensed images and other media files can be added to Wikipedia articles from Wikimedia Commons.

Citations

Inline citations in the body of the article are used to show where the information in each part of the text came from. The citation details appear as footnotes at the end.

Template

Reusable pieces called templates are used to format information in standard ways, and to insert things like the banners that alert readers to problems with an article.

Body of the article

Headings — and sometimes sub-headings — break the article up into sections, and are used to generate the table of contents. Each section usually covers some significant aspect of the topic, so that readers can jump right to the information they are looking for.

Appendices and footnotes

After the main body of an article comes sections with additional information, such as related Wikipedia articles ("See also"), footnotes with details on the sources used ("References"), and a list of other websites readers could turn to for more information ("External links").

The screenshot shows the VisualEditor interface for editing the article "Encyclopedia". At the top, there's a navigation bar with "Article" and "Talk" tabs, and a search bar. Below that is a toolbar with various editing options like Paragraph, Bold (B), Italic (I), and more. The main content area shows the start of the article with a heading "Encyclopedia" and a sub-heading "From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia". The text begins with "This article is about the type of reference work. For other uses, see Encyclopedia (disambiguation). An encyclopedia (also spelled encyclopaedia or encyclopaedia) is a type of reference work — a compendium holding a summary of information from either all branches of knowledge or a particular branch of knowledge." There is an image of several encyclopedias. A blue box highlights a sentence: "The word encyclopedia comes from the Koine Greek ἐγκυκλιος, παιδεία, transliterated enkyklios paideia, meaning 'general education'; enkyklios (ἐγκυκλιος), meaning 'circular, recurrent, required regularly, general' and paideia (παιδεία), meaning 'education, rearing of a child'." Another blue box highlights a sentence: "Indeed, the purpose of an encyclopedia is to collect knowledge disseminated around the globe, to set forth its general system to the men with whom we live, and transmit it to those who will come after us, so that the work of preceding centuries will not become useless to the centuries to come, and so that our offspring, becoming better instructed, will at the same time become more virtuous and happy, and that we should not die without having rendered a service to the human race in the future years to come."

The screenshot shows the "Characteristics" section of the article. It starts with a note: "This section needs additional citations for verification. Please help improve this article by adding citations to reliable sources. Unreliable material may be challenged and removed. (June 2016)". The text describes the history and structure of encyclopedias: "The modern encyclopedia was developed from the dictionary in the 18th century. Historically, both encyclopedias and dictionaries have been researched and written by well-educated, well-informed content experts, but they are significantly different in structure. A dictionary is a linguistic work which primarily focuses on alphabetical listing of words and their definitions. Synonymous words and those related by the subject matter are to be found scattered around the dictionary, giving no obvious place for in-depth treatment. Thus, a dictionary typically provides limited information, analysis or background for the word defined. While it may offer a definition, it may leave the reader lacking in understanding the meaning, significance or limitations of a term, and how the term relates to a broader field of knowledge. An encyclopedia is, allegedly, not written in order to convince, although one of its goals is indeed to convince its reader about its own veracity. In the terms of Aristotle's Modes of persuasion, a dictionary should persuade the reader through logos (conveying only appropriate emotions); it will be expected to have a lack of pathos (it should not stir up irrelevant emotions), and to have little ethos except that of the dictionary itself." It also mentions that encyclopedias are typically non-linguistic and cover a subject or discipline, and that they include many maps and illustrations.

The screenshot shows the "See also" and "Portals" sections. The "See also" section lists: Bibliography of encyclopedias, Biographical dictionary, Encyclopedic knowledge, Fictitious entry, History of science and technology, Lexicography, Library science, List of encyclopedias, and Thesaurus. Below that are three portals: Literature portal, Information science portal, and Education portal. The "Notes" section contains two numbered references.

The screenshot shows the "References" section, which lists various sources used in the article, including online dictionaries, historical encyclopedias, and academic works on the history and structure of encyclopedias.

The screenshot shows the "External links" section, which provides a list of external resources related to encyclopedias, such as Wikipedia's sister projects, online encyclopedias, and digital encyclopedias.

Editing with wiki markup

Wiki markup is the original form of editing Wikipedia articles (and on some browsers, it will be the only form available). It gives you precise control over the content and appearance of the page, once you understand how it works. Some of the underlying wiki markup for an article is pictured below. 1 Image

Double square brackets around the title of a photo from Wikimedia Commons will insert the image. Pipes separate optional parameters to control how the image is displayed. The most common way is with two parameters: the word `"thumb"` to use the standard thumbnail format, and a descriptive caption that appears beneath the image.
`[[File:Example.jpg|thumb|caption]]`

2 Bold

Three single quotation marks before and after a string of text will make that text bold. Bold is usually used for the subject of an article in the first sentence.
`'''bold text'''`

3 Citation

Opening and closing ref tags are used to cite a source. An automatically-numbered superscript will appear at the location of the ref tags, and the content will appear as a footnote in the references section.
`<ref> citation text </ref>`

4 Internal link

Double square brackets around a term create a link to the article of that name. Adding a pipe and another string of text before the closing square brackets changes the link text.
`[[article title|text]]`

5 Italic

Two single quotation marks begin and end a segment of italic text.
`'''italic text'''`

6 Heading

A pair of double equals signs mark a line as a heading. Triple equals signs make a sub-heading.
`==Heading==`

7 Template

Double braces are used for templates, which are reusable page elements that serve a wide variety of purposes. The first thing after the opening braces is the name of the template. Pipes separate the parameters, which are additional inputs for some templates that can change the way the template works or the information it displays.
`{{template name|parameter}}`

8 References

The references tag, or an equivalent template, sets the location where the footnotes show up — typically in a `"Notes"` or `"References"` section near the end.
`<references />`

9 External link

A single square bracket, followed by a url, a space, label text, and a closing square bracket makes a normal hyperlink. Typically, these are not used in the body of an article, only in footnotes or an `"External links"` section.
`[http://www.example.com text]`

10 Category

At the end of an article, double square brackets around a string that starts with `Category:` adds an article to the specified category. Categories are used to organize Wikipedia articles into related sets.
`[[Category:Something]]`

Adding content, step by step

These images show how the edits made by user:Ephraim Chambers added new information to the article on Penny Cyclopaedia.

This screenshot shows the Wikipedia article for "Penny Cyclopaedia" as it appeared before editing. The page title is "Penny Cyclopaedia" and it is identified as "From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia". The main text states: "The Penny Cyclopaedia of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge was a multi-volume encyclopedia edited by George Long and published by Charles Knight alongside the Penny Magazine. The volumes were published from 1833 to 1843." Below this, there is an "External links" section with two links: "Penny Cyclopaedia @ digitised on Google Book Search" and "Hathi Trust, fulltext". A notice indicates that the article is a stub and can be expanded. The categories listed are "1833 books", "British encyclopedias", "English-language encyclopedias", and "Encyclopedia stubs". ...and the article after he saved his changes.

This image shows what Ephraim added and the markup he used. Follow these steps and you too can add content to a Wikipedia article.

Step 1: Pick a topic you want to write more about.

Step 2: Find a reliable source that covers the topic better than the current Wikipedia article.

Step 3: Now comes the fun part. Click the Edit button! ¹

Step 4: Add some of what is missing. Using the source you've found, summarize the information you want to add in your own words. ²

Step 5: At the end of your new block of text, add a reference. In the edit toolbar — whether you're using wiki markup or the VisualEditor — you can click the 'reference' icon to cite your source. ³

Step 7: In the 'edit summary' field, add a brief description of what you've done in your edit. ⁴ (With the VisualEditor, you'll be prompted for an edit summary after you click Save page.) The edit summary helps other editors understand what you are doing.

Step 6: Now it's time to save your changes. Be sure to click Save page. ⁵

User pages and Talk pages

Wikipedia has other types of pages beyond articles. As you start editing, you might also want to create your User page to let others get to know you a little bit.

At the top right (if you are logged in) you will see your username, which you can click to reach your user page. Links to pages that do not exist — such as your user page if you have not created it yet — are colored red, instead of the typical blue.

If you click the Create button on one of these pages, you can start from a blank page. A user page is a place to write a little bit about yourself, to give other contributors an idea of who you are and what you're interested in. You can share as much or as little as you like.

When you Save the page, your red link will turn blue!

You also have a User Talk page, where other contributors can leave messages for you. If you want to contact another contributor, you can navigate to their Talk page and leave a message at the bottom.

You should sign your messages on Talk pages; clicking the Signature button in the edit toolbar will insert four tildes (~ ~ ~ ~), the special wiki markup for inserting your username along with the date and time of your message.

Interacting with the community

Every article has its own Talk page, too. These Talk pages can be used to make suggestions, post new sources, point out problems, and discuss changes that contributors disagree about.

The article claims that the Greek word is εγκυκλοπαιδεία it seems to me that it should be εγκυκλοπαιδεία. Also, εγκυκλοπαιδεία would never mean "general." It means "in a circle." How can this mean "general"? Lestrade \(talk\) 23:55, 20 April 2011 (UTC) Lestrade

It doesn't mean "well rounded education" either, that would be "eúyclopedia" [ἐύκυκλοπαιδεία]. "v" = "n" and "ü" = "u." Lestrade \(talk\) 03:13, 22 April 2011 (UTC) Lestrade

See the Liddell and Scott definition III.3 of εγκύκλιος 'general education, prior to professional studies'. The current writeup is a bit confusing; I will work on it. --Macrakis \(talk\) 18:38, 16 March 2012 (UTC)

Nationalistic bias [\[edit\]](#)

I think this article is affected by a nationalistic bias, particularly in two sentences. Firstly there was written that sir Browne's work was the first to be titled encyclopedia. This information was evidently incorrect, since Aventinus and Skalić used this title before. Likely, Browne was the first one in English. So I added the words "in English". However, I have no source about that. Secondly, the article says that Harris was the first one to write an alphabetical encyclopedia. That, too, is incorrect. In fact, it's evident that also Moréri, Furetière and Bayle's works were alphabetical (not to mention Etymologiae or Suida) and theirs, too, like Harris', were specialistic dictionaries more than true encyclopedias. So, also in this case I think that Harris was the first in English. The reason why I'm so angry about the nationalistic bias in this article is that it's been translated in many other languages, so that these deceitful informations have been spread throughout the wikipedias. One important guideline for community discussions on Wikipedia is to be respectful and civil. Even if you get into disagreements, you should assume good faith on the part of other contributors. They almost always have the same goal you do — to make Wikipedia better. Keep the discussions focused on content, rather than making them about individual contributors.

Evaluating Wikipedia article quality

The quality of Wikipedia articles varies widely; many are very good, but some lack depth and clarity, contain bias, or are out of date. In general, high-quality articles have these elements:

- a lead section that gives an easy-to-understand overview,
- a clear structure,
- balanced coverage,
- neutral content, and
- reliable sources.

Additional information about article quality is available by consulting the “Evaluating Wikipedia” brochure (see below).

Wikipedia — and each individual contribution to it — uses the Creative Commons Attribution-ShareAlike license, which is a free license. See | shortcut WP:CC-BY-SA to learn more.

history

The record of a Wikipedia page, accessible through the View history tab, that shows every edit made. Any two versions can be compared to see the specific differences (known as a diff), and previous versions can be restored.

A bit of text, separated from other bits with a pipe character (`|`), that is used to control how images, templates and other wiki markup appear on a page.

Wikimedia Commons

The media repository for Wikipedia and many other wikis, where you can contribute freely licensed photos, diagrams, videos, and other media files for illustrating Wikipedia.
