Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

MRS. BROWNING'S
BIRTHDAY BOOK.

EDITED BY
R. H. STODDARD.

*"Poet, doubt yourself :
But never doubt that you're a poet to me
From henceforth. Ah, you've written poems, sweet,
Which moved me in secret, as the sap is moved
In still March branches, signless as a stone."*

PREFACE.

IF I could have foreseen the difficulty which I have experienced in making this Birthday Book, I think I should have shrunk from it. I was familiar with the poetry of MRS. BROWNING,—as who that reads is not?—but it was with her poetry as a whole, and not in parts, which, and which only, such a Book demands. I knew that she was the greatest woman poet that England had ever produced, but I did not know that it might not be easy to make as many extracts from her writings as there are days in the year. Whether they would bear such a test remained to be seen. I read them over and over with that object in mind, and the more I read them the more I was convinced that they would not suffer, but would appear to advantage through extracts; for it is the peculiarity of her genius, if I rightly apprehend it, to manifest itself more strongly in single paragraphs than in complete poems. Wreaking herself upon expression, she was always original, and often striking, snatching in the rush of inspiration the divine something which is poetry, the grace beyond the reach of art, the thoughts that breathe and words that burn. It was chiefly those I sought, and these I have obtained, I hope, in a measure. I had another object in view, however, and as it has not hitherto had due recognition in Birthday Books (me judice) I pursued that at the same time. That object was to compose a Calendar which should not only be interesting on account of the persons whose births and deaths it chronicled, but should also be interesting on account of the light which might be shed upon these persons by the writings of Mrs. Browning. One always likes to know (I reasoned) the personal opinions of an eminent poet, whether they are concerning the contemporaries of the poet, or whether they are concerning those whom the world has agreed (for whatever reason) to canonize in its remembrance. I found more personal illustrations—if I may call them such—in Mrs. Browning than I had anticipated, and more, I feel sure, than could be found in any poet of the present century. They belonged to and grew out of her life and habits,—her life, which was confined for so many years within the walls of her own chamber, and her habits, which were those of a student. She may have loved Nature, but love of Nature is not a predominating quality in her writings. She did not have Tennyson's magical touches of light and hints of color, and she was devoid of Wordsworth's singular insight into natural things. Books were the spectacles through which she saw ; even her emotions were scholarly. But I must not allow criticism to beguile me from my purpose, which is to state as simply as I can the principles by which I was governed in making these selections. They have cost me a world of labor, which I do not regret, and which I trust has not been wasted, since it was a labor of love, undertaken in honor of Mrs. Browning, whom it presents for the first time in a form that is universally popular. That I have studied her carefully will be apparent, I think, to all her admirers, to some of whom a portion of the excerpts that follow will probably be new. I do not refer so much to "The Book of the Poets" and "The Greek Christian Poets," as to her Letters to Richard Hengist Horne (which have been printed rather than published), and to other letters (not published) addressed by her nearly forty years ago to an American man of letters, who was the first of his countrymen to recognize the great gifts of Miss Elizabeth Barrett Barrett; and who was largely instrumental in the first publication of her poems in America.

THE GALAXY.

*Methinks this is the zodiac of the earth,
Which rounds us with its visionary dread,
Responding with twelve shadowy signs of earth,
In fantasque apposition and approach,
To those celestial, constellated twelve
Which palpitae adown the silent nights
Under the pressure of the hand of God
Stretched wide in benediction. At this hour,
Not a star pricketh the flat gloom of heaven!
But, girdling close our nether wilderness,
The zodiac figures of the earth loom slow,—
Drawn out, as suiteth with the place and time,
In twelve colossal shades instead of stars,
Through which the ecliptic line of mystery
Strikes bleakly with an unrelenting scope,
Foreshowing life and death.—A DRAMA OF EXILE.*

JANUARY 1.

MORTAL man and woman,
Go upon your travel !
Heaven assist the human Smoothly to unravel
All that web of pain
Wherein ye are holden.
Do ye know our voices
Chanting down the Golden ?

A DRAMA OF EXILE.

JANUARY 2.

Or oft, abrupt though tender,
While ye gazed on space,
We flashed our angel-splendor
In either human face.
With mystic lilies in our hands,
From the atmospheric bands
Breaking with a sudden grace,
We took you unaware !

JANUARY 3.

Or, whenever twilight drifted
Through the cedar masses,
The globed sun we lifted,
Trailing purple, trailing gold
Out between the passes
Of the mountains manifold,
To anthems slowly sung!

A DRAMA OF EXILE.

JANUARY 4.

Leave us to walk the remnant of our time
Out mildly in the desert. Do not seek
To harm us any more or scoff at us,
Or ere the dust be laid upon our face
To find there the communion of the dust
And issue of the dust.—Go.

The prodigy
Of thy vast brows and melancholy eyes
Which comprehend the heights of some great fall.
I think that thou hast one day worn a crown
Under the eyes of God.

A DRAMA OF EXILE.

JANUARY 6.

None saith, Stay with me, for thy face is fair !
None saith, Stay with me, for thy voice is sweet !
And yet I was not fashioned out of clay.
Look on me, woman ! Am I beautiful ?

“What ! dost thou judge it a strange thing
That poets, crowned for vanquishing,
Should bear some dust from out the ring?”

“Come on with me, come on with me ;
And learn in coming. Let me free
Thy spirit into verity.”

A VISION OF POETS.

JANUARY 8.

Oh, we spirits fly at will,
Faster than the wingéd steed
Whereof in old book we read,
With the sunlight foaming back
From his flanks to a misty wrack,
And his nostrils reddening proud
As he breasteth the steep thunder-cloud !

JANUARY 9.

Very fast and smooth we fly,
Spirits, though the flesh be by.
All looks feed not from the eye,
Nor all hearings from the ear ;
We can hearken and espy
Without either ; we can journey,
Bold and gay as knight to tourney.

THE SOUL'S TRAVELLING.

JANUARY 10.

Thou art unperplexed,
Dear friend, in whose dear writing drops the dew
And blow the natural airs ; thou who art next
To nature's self in cheering the world's view,
To preach a sermon on so known a text !

Beloved Shakespeare ! England's dearest Fame!
Dead is the breast that swells not at thy name!
Whether thine Ariel skim the seas along,
Floating on wings ethereal as his song—
Lear rave amid the tempest—or Macbeth
Question the hags of hell on midnight heath—
Immortal Shakespeare ! still thy lips impart
The noblest comment on the human heart.

ESSAY ON MIND

JANUARY 12.

His aimless thoughts in metre went,
Like a babe's hand without intent
Drawn down a seven-stringed instrument.

Nor jarred it with his humor as,
With a faint stirring of the grass,
An apparition fair did pass.

The yew-tree leaf will suit ;
But when its shade is o'er you laid,
Turn round and pluck the fruit !

THE ROMAUNT OF MARGRET.

JANUARY 16.

Let Gibbon's name be trac'd, in sorrow, here,—
Too great to spurn, too little to revere !
Who follow'd Reason, yet forgot her laws,
And found all causes, but the great First Cause.

The maidens lean them over
The waters, side by side,
And shun each other's deepening eyes,
And gaze adown the tide :
For each within a little boat
A little lamp hath put,
And heaped for freight some lily's weight,
Of scarlet rosé half shut.

ROMANCE OF THE GANGES.

JANUARY 18.

And still I laughed and did not fear
But that, whene'er was passed away
The childish time, some happier play
My womanhood would cheer.

'Neath my moon what doest thou,
With a somewhat paler brow
Than she giveth to the ocean?
He, without a pulse or motion,
Muttering low before her stands,
Lifting his invoking hands,
Like a seer before a sprite,
To catch her oracles of light.'

NIGHT AND THE MERRY MAN.

JANUARY 20.

They say that God lives very high.

But if you look above the pines
You cannot see our God. And why?

And if you dig down in the mines

You never see Him in the gold,
Though from Him all that's glory shines.

Deathful their faces were, and yet
The power of life was in them set—
Never forgot, nor to forget.

A VISION OF POETS.

JANUARY 22.

Angel of the sin,
Such as thou standest,—pale in the drear light
Which rounds the rebel's work with Maker's wrath,—
Thou shalt be an Idea to all souls ;
A monumental melancholy gloom
Seen down all ages, whence to mark despair
And measure out the distances from good !

These faces were not multiplied
Beyond your count, but side by side
Did front the altar, glorified.

Still as a vision, yet expressed
Full as an action—look and gest
Of buried saint in unseen rest.

Let Jeffrey's praise our willing pen engage,
The letter'd critic of a letter'd age !
Who justly judges, rightfully discerns,
With wisdom teaches, and with candor learns.
His name on Scotia's brightest tablet lives,
And proudly claims the laurel that it gives.

His organ's clavier strikes along
These poets' hearts, sonorous, strong,
They gave him without count of wrong,—

A diapason whence to guide
Up to God's feet, from these who died,
An anthem fully glorified.

A VISION OF POETS.

JANUARY 28.

Glory and life
Fulfil their own depletions : and if God
Sighed you far from Him, His next breath drew in
A compensative splendor up the vast,
Flushing the starry arteries !

The essence of all beauty, I call love.
The attribute, the evidence, and end,
The consummation to the inward sense,
Of beauty apprehended from without,
I still call love.

FEBRUARY 1.

Was I not, that hour,
The lady of the world, princess of life,
Mistress of feast and favor? Could I touch
A rose with my white hand, but it became Redder at once? Could I walk leisurely
Along our swarded garden, but the grass
Tracked me with greenness? Could I stand aside
A moment underneath a cornel-tree,
But all the leaves did tremble as alive
With songs of fifty birds who were made glad Because I stood there?

A DRAMA OF EXILE.

FEBRUARY 2.

And I build my song of high pure notes,
Note after note, height over height,
Till I strike the arch of the Infinite,
And I bridge abysmal agonies
With strong, clear calms of harmonies—
And something abides, and something floats,
In the song which I sing after you.

The battle hurtles on the plains,
Earth feels new scythes upon her.
We reap our brothers for the wains,
And call the harvest . . . honor ;
Draw face to face, front line to line,
One image all inherit—
Then kill, curse on, by that same sign,
Clay, clay—and spirit, spirit.

THE CRY OF THE HUMAN.

FEBRUARY 4.

I would rather take my part
With God's Dead, who afford to walk in white
Yet spread his glory, than keep quiet here,
And gather up my feet from even step,
For fear to soil my gown in so much dust.
I choose to walk at all risks.

It takes a soul,
To move a body : it takes a high-souled man
To move the masses . . . even to a cleaner styè :
It takes the ideal, to blow a hair's breadth off
The dust of the actual.—Ah, your Fouriers failed,
Because not poets enough to understand
That life develops from within.

We meet together at the feast,
To private mirth betake us ;
We stare down in the winecup, lest
Some vacant chair should shake us.
We name delight, and pledge it round—
“ It shall be ours to-morrow ! ”
God's seraphs, do your voices sound
As sad in naming sorrow ?

Be pitiful, O God !

Do you question the young children in the sorrow,
 Why their tears are falling so ?
The old man may weep for his to-morrow
 Which is lost in Long Ago.
The old tree is leafless in the forest,
 The old year is ending in the frost,
The old wound, if stricken, is the sorest,
 The old hope is hardest to be lost.
But the young, young children, O my brothers,
 Do you ask them why they stand
Weeping sore before the bosoms of their mothers,
 In our happy Fatherland ?

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

FEBRUARY 8.

She looked a queen who seemeth gay
From royal grace alone. “Now, nay,”
He answered—“slumber passed away,
“Compelled by instincts in my head
That I should see to-night, instead
Of a fair nymph, some fairer Dread.”
She looked up quickly to the sky
And spake :—“The moon’s regality
Will hear no praise ! she is as I.”

FEBRUARY 10.

The worthiest poets have remained uncrowned
Till death has bleached their foreheads to the bone,
And so with me it must be, unless I prove Unworthy of the grand adversity—
And certainly I would not fail so much.
What, therefore, if I crown myself to-day
In sport, not pride, to learn the feel of it,
Before my brows be numb as Dante's own
To all the tender pricking of such leaves?

Poets become such,
Through scorning nothing. You decry them for
The good of beauty, sung and taught by them,
While they respect your practical partial good
As being a part of beauty's self. Adieu !
When God helps all the workers for his world,
The singers shall have help of Him, not last.

Rise, woman, rise,
To thy peculiar and best altitudes
Of doing good and of enduring ill,
Of comforting for ill, and teaching good,
And reconciling all that ill and good
Unto the patience of a constant hope—
Rise with thy daughters !

FEBRUARY 13.

We all begin
By singing with the birds, and running fast
With June-days, hand in hand : but once, for all,
The birds must sing against us, and the sun
Strike down upon us like a friend's sword caught
By an enemy to slay us, while we read
The dear name on the blade which bites at us !—
That's bitter and convincing : after that,
We seldom doubt that something in the large,
Smooth order of creation, though no more
Than haply a man's footsteps, has gone wrong.

FEBRUARY 14.

What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil ;
Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines,
For all the heat o' the day, till it declines,
And death's mild curfew shall from work assoil.
God did anoint thee with his odorous oil,
To wrestle, not to reign ; and He assigns
All thy tears over, like pure crystallines,
For younger fellow-workers of the soil
To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labor, to their heart and hand,
From thy hand, and thy heart, and thy brave cheer,
And God's grace fructify through thee to all.
The least flower, with a brimming cup, may stand,
And share its dew-drop with another near.

FEBRUARY 15.

We overstate the ills of life, and take Imagination (given us to bring down
The choirs of singing angels overshadowed
By God's clear glory) down our earth to rake
The dismal snows instead—flake following flake,
To cover all the corn. We walk upon
The shadow of hills across a level thrown,
And pant like climbers. Near the alderbrake
We sigh so loud, the nightingale within Refuses to sing loud, as else she would.
O brothers! let us leave the shame and sin
Of taking vainly, in a plaintive mood,
The holy name of GRIEF!—holy herein,
That, by the grief of ONE, came all our good.

Borne inward unto souls afar,
Along the Psalmist's music deep,
Now tell me if that any is,
For gift or grace, surpassing this—

Amen, great Angelo ! the day's at hand.
If many laugh not on it, shall we weep ?
Much more we must not, let us understand.
Through rhymers sonneteering in their sleep,
And archaists mumbling dry bones up the land,
And sketchers lauding ruined towns a-heap—
Through all that drowsy hum of voices smooth,
The hopeful bird mounts caroling from brake,
The hopeful child, with leaps to catch his growth,
Sings open-eyed for liberty's sweet sake !

THANK God, bless God, all ye who suffer not
More grief than ye can weep for. That is well—
That is light grieving ! lighter, none befell,
Since Adam forfeited the primal lot.
Tears ! what are tears ? The babe weeps in its cot,
The mother singing ; at her marriage-bell
The bride weeps ; and before the oracle
Of high-faned hills, the poet has forgot
Such moisture on his cheeks. Thank God for grace,
Ye who weep only ! If, as some have done,
Ye grope tear-blinded in a desert place, [run
And touch but tombs,—lock up ! Those tears will Soon in long rivers down the lifted face,
And leave the vision clear for stars and sun.

Five months ago, the stream did flow.
The lilies bloomed within the sedge ;
And we were lingering to and fro,—
Where none will track thee in this snow,
Along the stream, beside the hedge.
Ah, sweet, be free to love and go !
For if I do not hear thy foot,
The frozen river is as mute,
The flowers have dried down to the root ;
And why, since these be changed since May,
Shouldst thou change less than they ?

I scorn you that ye wail,
Who use your petty griefs for pedestals
To stand on, beckoning pity from without,
And deal in pathos of antithesis
Of what ye were forsooth, and what ye are :—
I scorn you like an angel ! Yet, one cry
I, too, would drive up like a column erect,
Marble to marble, from my heart to Heaven,
A monument of anguish to transpierce
And overtop your vapory complaints
Expressed from feeble woes !

Eternity stands alway fronting God ;
A stern colossal image, with blind eyes
And grand dim lips that murmur evermore
God, God, God ! While the rush of life and death,
The roar of act and thought, of evil and good,
The avalanches of the ruining worlds
Tolling down space,—the new world's genesis
Budding in fire,—the gradual humming growth
Of the ancient atoms and first forms of earth,
The slow procession of the swathing seas
And firmamental waters,—and the noise
Of the broad, fluent strata of pure airs,—
All these flow onward in the intervals
Of that reiterated sound of—God !

and your present liberties ; and your aspirations filling the future.

(In tears and blood, if so He choose)
Mine inward music out to use.

What is this thought or thing
Which I call beauty ? is it thought or thing ?
Is it a thought accepted for a thing ?

Under my own breath : my perceptions reel
For evermore around it, and fall off,
As if it were too holy.

With rigid hands of desiccating praise,

Of writing many books there is no end ;
And I have written much in prose and verse
For others' uses, will write now for mine,—
Will write my story for my better self,
As when you paint your portrait for a friend,
Who keeps it in a drawer and looks at it
Long after he has ceased to love you, just
To hold together what he was and is.

AURORA LEIGH.

Mark, there. We get no good
By being ungenerous, even to a book,
And calculating profits . . . so much help
By so much reading. It is rather when
We gloriously forget ourselves, and plunge
Soul-forward, headlong, into a book's profound,
Impassioned for its beauty and salt of truth—
'Tis then we get the right good from a book.

My own best poets, am I one with you,
That thus I love you,—or but one through love?
Does all this smell of thyme about my feet
Conclude my visit to your holy hill
In personal presence, or but testify
The rustling of your vesture through my dreams
With influent odors? When my joy and pain,
My thought and aspiration, like the stops
Of pipe or flute, are absolutely dumb
Unless melodious, do you play on me,
My pipers,—and if, sooth, you did not blow,
Would no sound come? or is the music mine,
As a man's voice or breath is called his own,
Imbreathed by the Life-breather?

Many a crown
Covers bald foreheads. In the book-world, true,
There's no lack, neither, of God's saints and kings,
That shake the ashes of the grave aside
From their calm locks, and undiscomfited
Look steadfast truths against Time's changing mask.
True, many a prophet teaches in the roads;
True, many a seer pulls down the flaming heavens
Upon his own head in strong martyrdom,
In order to light men a moment's space.

The cygnet finds the water ; but the man
Is born in ignorance of his element,
And feels out blind at first, disorganized
By sin i' the blood,—his spirit-insight dulled

Then mark, be reverent, be obedient,—
For such dumb motions of imperfect life
Are oracles of vital Deity
Attesting the Hereafter.

Have reached and pricked her heart, and, throwing flat
The marts and temples, the triumphal gates

At poetry's divine first finger touch
Let go conventions and sprang up surprised
Convicted of the great eternities
Before two worlds.

Many fervent souls
Strike rhyme on rhyme; who would strike steel on steel
If steel had offered, in a restless heat
Of doing something. Many tender souls
Have strung their losses on a rhyming thread,
As children, cowslips :—the more pains they take,
The work more withers. Young men, ay, and maids,
Too often sow their wild oats in tame verse,
Before they sit down under their own vine
And live for use. Alas, near all the birds
Will sing at dawn —and yet we do not take
The chaffering swallow for the holy lark.

Half wishing they were dead to save the shame.

This perhaps was love—
To have its hands too full of gifts to give,

Enough for watering Eden.

Men and women make
The world, as head and heart make human life.
Work man, work woman, since there's work to do
In this beleaguered earth, for head and heart,
And thought can never do the work of love !
But work for ends, I mean for uses ; not
For such sleek fringes (do you call them ends
Still less God's glory) as we sew ourselves
Upon the velvet of those baldaquins
Held 'twixt us and the sun.

What form is best for poems? Let me think
Of forms less, and the external. Trust the spirit,

To outward—so in life, and so in art,
Which still is life.

We play at leap-frog over the god Term ;
The love within us and the love without
Are mixed, confounded ; if we are loved or love,

In that first onrush of life's chariot-wheels,
We know not if the forests move or we.

Shall I fail?

The Greeks said grandly in their tragic phrase,
"Let no one be called happy till his death."
To which I add—Let no one till his death
Be called unhappy. Measure not the work
Until the day's out and the labor done ;
Then bring your gauges. If the day's work's scant,
Why, call it scant ; affect no compromise ;
And, in that we have nobly striven at least,
Deal with us nobly, women though we be,
And honor us with truth, if not with praise.

Out of my own great woe
I make my little songs,

And beat on her heart even so.

They found the way, for their part,
Yet come again, and complain,
Complain, and are not fain
To say what they saw in her heart.

His dews drop mutely on the hill
His cloud above it saileth still,
Though on its slope men sow and reap.
More softly than the dew is shed,
Or cloud is floated overhead,
' He giveth His beloved, sleep.'

Ay, men may wonder while they scan
A living, thinking, feeling man,
Confirmed in such a rest to keep ;
But angels say, and through the word
I think their happy smile is heard—

THE SLEEP.

MARCH 22.

By the way,

The works of women are symbolical.
We sew, sew, prick our fingers, dull our sight,
Producing what? A pair of slippers, sir,
To put on when you're weary—or a stool
To tumble over and vex you . . . "curse that stool !"

Or else at best, a cushion where you lean
And sleep, and dream of something we are not,
But would be for your sake. Alas, alas !
This hurts most, this . . . that, after all, we are paid
The worth of our work, perhaps.

With stammering lips and insufficient sound
I strive and struggle to deliver right
That music of my nature, day and night
With dream and thought and feeling interwound.
And inly answering all the senses round
With octaves of a mystic depth and height
Which step out grandly to the infinite
From the dark edges of the sensual ground !
This song of soul I struggle to outbear
Through portals of the sense, sublime and whole,
And utter all myself into the air.
But if I did it—as the thunder-roll
Breaks its own cloud, my flesh would perish there
Before that dread apocalypse of soul.

Drayton and Browne—with smiles they drew
From outward nature, still kept new
From their own inward nature true.

Whose fire-hearts sowed out furrows when
The world was worthy of such men.

The chances are that, being a woman, young,
And pure, with such a pair of large, calm eyes,
You write as well . . . and ill . . . upon the whole,
As other women. If as well, what then?
If even a little better, . . . still what then?
We want the Best in art now, or no art.
The time is done for facile settings up
Of minnow gods, nymphs here, and tritons there ;
The polytheists have gone out in God,
That unity of Bests. No best, no God !—
And so with art, we say.

The music soars within the little lark,
And the lark soars. It is not thus with men.
We do not make our places with our strains—
Content, while they rise, to remain behind,
Alone on earth instead of so in heaven.

That's abstract truth, I know,
Philosophy, or sympathy with God ;
But I, I sympathize, with man, not God,
I think I was a man for chiefly this ;
And when I stand beside a dying bed,
It's death to me. Observe—it had not much
Consoled the race of mastodons to know
Before they went to fossil, that anon
Their place should quicken with the elephant ;
They were not elephants but mastodons :
And I, a man, as men are now, and not
As men may be hereafter, feel with men
In the agonizing present.

Oblivion of their wings ! the Child thereat
Stretches its hand like God.

And loss, perchance—but not in vain,
Upon the sweetness of that strain !

Only project, beyond the bound
Of mine own life, so lost and found,
My voice, and live on in its sound !

Only embrace and be embraced
By fiery ends—whereby to waste,
And light God's future with my past.

And if any painter drew her,
He would paint her unaware
With a halo round the hair.

There is no one beside thee and no one above thee.

Thou standest alone as the nightingale sings !

And my words that would praise thee are impotent things,

For none can express thee, though all should approve thee,

I love thee, so, Dear, that I only can love thee.

Say, what can I do for thee? weary thee, grieve thee?

Lean on thy shoulder, new burdens to add?

Weep my tears over thee, making thee sad?

Oh, hold me not—love me not ! let me retrieve thee,

I love thee, so, Dear, that I only can leave thee.

But ah—alas for her !
No thing did minister
To her praises, to her praises,
More than might unto a daisy's.

No tree nor bush was seen
To boast a perfect green,
Scarcely having, scarcely having
One leaf broad enough for waving.

The little flies did crawl
Along the southern wall,
Faintly shifting, faintly shifting
Wings scarce long enough for lifting.

A LAY OF THE EARLY ROSE.

APRIL 2.

The lark, too high or low,
I ween, did miss her so,
With his nest down in the gorses,
And his song in the star-courses.

The nightingale did please
To loiter beyond seas.
Guess him in the Happy islands,
Learning music from the silence.

Only the bee. forsooth.
Came in the place of both,
Doing honor, doing honor
To the honey-dews upon her.

Now by the verdure on tny thousand hills,
Beloved England—doth the earth appear
Quite good enough for men to overbear
The will of God in, with rebellious wills !
We cannot say the morning-sun fulfills
Ingloriously its course, nor that the clear,
Strong stars without significance insphere
Our habitation. We, meantime, our ill
Heap up against this good, and lift a cry
Against this work-day world, this ill-spread feast,
As if ourselves were better certainly
Than what we come to. Maker and High Priest,
I ask thee not my joys to multiply—
Only to make me worthier of the least.

SONNETS.

I have been in the meadows all the day
And gathered there the nosegay that you see,
Singing within myself as a bird or bee
When such do field-work on a morn of May.

As a child,
Whose song-bird seeks the wood for evermore,
Is sung to in its stead by mother's mouth,
Till, sinking on her breast, love-reconciled,
He sleeps the faster that he wept before.

“There is no God,” the foolish saith,

But none, “There is no sorrow,”

And nature oft, the cry of faith,

Eyes which the preacher could not school,

By wayside graves are raised,

And lips say, “God be pitiful,”

Who ne'er said, “God be praised.”

Be pitiful, O God !

The world of books is still the world, I write,
And both worlds have God's providence, thank God,
To keep and hearten : with some struggle, indeed,
Among the breakers, some hard swimming through
The deeps—I lost breath in my soul sometimes,
And cried, “God save me if there's any God.”
But, even so, God save me ; and, being dashed
From error on to error, every turn
Still brought me nearer to the central truth.

The poet hath the child's sight in his breast,
And sees all new. What oftenest he has viewed,
He views with the first glory. Fair and good
Pall never on him, at the fairest, best,
But stand before him holy and undressed
In week-day false conventions, such as would Drag other men down from the altitude
Of primal types, too early dispossessed.
Why, God would tire of all his heaven as soon
As thou, O godlike, childlike poet, didst
Of daily and nightly sights of sun and moon?
And therefore hath He set thee in the midst
Where men may hear thy wonder's ceaseless tune,
And praise His world for ever as thou bidst.

I think my soul said then, "I do not need
A principedom and its quarries, after all;
For if I write, paint, carve a word, indeed,
On book or board or dust, on floor or wall,
The same is kept of God, who taketh heed
That not a letter of the meaning fall
Or ere it touch and teach His world's deep heart,
Outlasting, therefore, all your lordships, sir!

These sinners who in falling proved their height
Above you by their liberty to fall?
And which of you complains of loss by them,
For whose delight and use ye have your life
And honor in creation? Ponder it!
This regent and sublime Humanity,
Though fallen, exceeds you! this shall film your sun,
Shall hunt your lightning to its lair of cloud,
Turn back your rivers, footpath all your seas,
Lay flat your forests, master with a look
Your lion at his fasting, and fetch down
Your eagle flying.

Bring violets rather. If these had not walked
Their furlong, could we hope to walk our mile?
Therefore bring violets! Yet if we, self-balked,
Stand still a-strewing violets all the while,
These moved in vain, of whom we have vainly talked.
So rise up henceforth with a cheerful smile,
And having strewn the violets, reap the corn,
And, having reaped and garnered, bring the plough
And draw new furrows 'neath the healthy morn
And plant the great Hereafter in this Now.

Experience, like a pale musician, holds
A dulcimer of patience in his hand,
Whence harmonies we cannot understand,
Of God's will in His words, the strain unfolds
In sad perplexed minors. Deathly colds
Fall on us while we hear and countermand
Our sanguine heart back from the fancy-land
With nightingales in visionary wolds.
We murmur,—“ Where is any certain tune
Of measured music, in such notes as these ? ”—
But angels, leaning from the golden seat,
Are not so minded : their fine ear hath won
The issue of completed cadences ;
And, smiling down the stars, they whisper—SWEET.

The seraph sings before the manifest
God-One and in the burning of the Seven,
And with the full life of consummate Heaven
Heaving beneath him, like a mother's breast
Warm with her first-born's slumber in that nest.
The poet sings upon the earth grave-riven,
Before the naughty world, soon self-forgiven
For wronging him—and in the darkness prest
From his own soul by worldly weights. Even so !
Sing, seraph with the glory ! heaven is high.
Sing, poet with the sorrow ! earth is low.
The universe's inward voices cry
“ Amen ” to either song of joy and woe.
Sing, seraph,—poet—sing on equally !

Women know

The way to rear up children (to be just),
They know a simple, merry, tender knack
Of tying sashes, fitting baby-shoes,
And stringing pretty words that make no sense,
And kissing full sense into empty words ;
Which things are corals to cut life upon,
Although such trifles : children learn by such,
Love's holy earnest in a pretty play,
And get not over-early solemnized—
But seeing, as in a rose-bush, Love's Divine,
Which burns and hurts not—not a single bloom—
Become aware and unafraid of Love.

Whoever says
To a loyal woman, "Love and work with me,"
Will get fair answers, if the work and love,
Being good themselves, are good for her—the best
She was born for. Women of a softer mood,
Surprised by men when scarcely awake to life,
Will sometimes only hear the first word, love,
And catch up with it any kind of work,
Indifferent, so that dear love go with it :
I do not blame such women, though, for love,
They pick much oakum ; earth's fanatics make
Too friendly heaven's saints.

Constrain the anguished worlds from sin and grief,

The holy name of Peace, and set it high
Where none could pluck it down. On trees, I say—

Says no grace after meat. My wine has run
Indeed out of my cup, and there is none
To gather up the bread of my repast
Scattered and trampled—yet I find some good
In earth's green herbs, and streams that bubble up,
Clear from the darkling ground—content until
I sit with angels before better food.

To keep both sheep and shepherd out,
But not a happy child.

Adventurous joy it was for me !
I crept beneath the boughs, and found
A circle smooth of mossy ground
Beneath a poplar tree.

Old garden rose-trees hedged it in,
Bedropt with roses waxen-white
Well satisfied with dew and light
And careless to be seen.

THE DESERTED GARDEN.

MAY 2. .

A Thought lay like a flower upon mine heart,
And drew around it other thoughts like bees
For multitude and thirst of sweetnesses,—
Whereat rejoicing, I desired the art
Of the Greek whistler, who to wharf and mart
Could lure those insect swarms from orange-trees,
That I might hive with me such thoughts, and please
My soul so, always. Foolish counterpart
Of a weak man's vain wishes ! While I spoke,
The thought I called a flower, grew nettle-rough—
The thoughts, called bees, stung me to festering.
Oh, entertain (cried Reason, as she woke)
Your best and gladdest thoughts but long enough,
And they will all prove sad enough to sting.

As the moths around a taper,
As the bees around a rose,
As the gnats around a vapor,
So the spirits group and close
Round about a holy childhood, as if drinking its repose.

Haply it is angels' duty,
During slumber, shade by shade,
To fine down this childish beauty
To the thing it must be made,
Ere the world shall bring it praises, or the tomb shall see it fade.

A CHILD ASLEEP.

MAY 4.

And birds that live there in a crowd
Horned owls, rapt nightingales,
Larks bold with heaven, and peacocks proud,
Self-sphered in those grand tails ;
All creatures glad and safe, I deem :
No guns nor springes in my dream !
One dove is answering in trust
The water every minute,
Thinking so soft a murmur must
Have her mate's cooing in it :
So softly does earth's beauty round
Infuse itself in ocean's sound.

O wild St. Helen ! very still she kept him
With a green willow for all pyramid,—
Which stirred a little if the low wind did,
A little more, if pilgrims overwept him,
Disparting the lithe boughs to see the clay
Which seemed to cover his for judgment-day.

A little urn—a little dust inside,
Which once outbalanced the large earth, albeit
To-day a four-years child might carry it
Sleek-browed and smiling, “ Let the burden ’bide ! ”
Orestes to Electra !—O fair town
Of Paris, how the wild tears will run down !

CROWNED AND BURIED.

MAY 6.

And so I am strong to love this noble France,
This poet of the nations, who dreams on
And wails on (while the household goes to wreck)
For ever, after some ideal good—
Some equal poise of sex, some unvowed love
Inviolatè, some spontaneous brotherhood.
Some wealth, that leaves none poor and finds none tired,
Some freedom of the many, that respects
The wisdom of the few. Heroic dreams !
Sublime, to dream so ; natural to wake :
And sad, to use such lofty scaffoldings,
Erected for the building of a church,
To build instead, a brothel . . . or a prison.

Thou hast thy calling to some palace floor,
Most gracious singer of high poems ! where
The dancers will break footing, from the care
Of watching up thy pregnant lips for more.
And dost thou lift this house's latch too poor
For hand of thine ? and canst thou think and bear
To let thy music drop here unaware
In folds of golden fullness at my door ?
Look up and see the casement broken in,
The bats and owlets builders in the roof !
My cricket chirps against thy mandolin.
Hush ! call no echo up in further proof
Of desolation ! there's a voice within
That weeps . . as thou must sing . . alone aloof.

A VISION OF POETS.

If artist-born? O sorrowful great gift
Conferred on poets, of a twofold life,
When one life has been found enough for pain!
We staggering 'neath our burdens as mere men,

Support the intolerable strain and stress
Of the universal, and send clearly up
With voices broken by the human sob,
Our poems to find rhymes among the stars!

And her feet she has been dipping
In the shallow water's flow.
Now she holds them nakedly
In her hands, all sleek and dripping,

And the smile she softly uses,
Fills the silence like a speech,
While she thinks what shall be done—
And the sweetest pleasure chooses
For her future within reach.

loving.

What's the best thing in the world?
June-rose, by May-dew impearled ;
Sweet south-wind, that means no rain,
Truth, not cruel to a friend ;
Pleasure, not in haste to end ;
Beauty, not self-decked and curled
Till its pride is over-plain ;
Light, that never makes you wink ;
Memory, that gives no pain ;
Love, when, so, you're loved again.
What's the best thing in the world ?
—Something out of it, I think.

THE BEST THING IN THE WORLD.

MAY 14.

Let us ponder, friend,
Whate'er our state, we must have made it first ;
And though the thing displease us, ay, perhaps Displease us warrantably, never doubt
That other states, thought possible once, and then
Rejected by the instinct of our lives—
If then adopted, had displeased us more
Than this, in which the choice, the will, the love,
Has stamped the honor of a patent act [good ;
From henceforth. What we choose, may not be
But, that we choose it, proves it good for us
Potentially, fantastically, now
Or last year, rather than a thing we saw,
And saw no need for choosing.

The growing drama has outgrown such toys
Of simulated stature, face, and speech,
It also, peradventure, may outgrow
The simulation of the painted scene,
Boards, actors, prompters, gaslight, and costume ;
And take for a worthier stage the soul itself,
Its shifting fancies and celestial lights,
With all its grand orchestral silences
To keep the pauses of the rhythmic sounds.

Be sure, no earnest work
Of any honest creature, howbeit weak,
Imperfect, ill-adapted, fails so much,
It is not gathered as a grain of sand
To enlarge the sum of human action used
For carrying out God's end. No creature works
So ill, observe, that therefore he's cashiered.
The honest earnest man must stand and work :
The woman also ; otherwise she drops
At once below the dignity of man,
Accepting serfdom. Free men freely work :
Whoever fears God, fears to sit at ease.

We women are too apt to look to one,
Which proves a certain impotence in art.
We strain our natures at doing something great,
Far less because it's something great to do,
Than, haply, that we, so, commend ourselves
As being not small, and more appreciable
To some one friend.

Impatient that we're nothing.

I have not stood long on the strand of life,
And these salt waters have had scarcely time
To creep so high up as to wet my feet.
I cannot judge these tides—I shall, perhaps.
A woman's always younger than a man
At equal years, because she is disallowed
Maturing by the out-door sun and air,
And kept in long-clothes past the age to walk.
Ah well, I know you men judge otherwise!
You think a woman ripens as a peach—
In the cheeks, chiefly.

We want more quiet in our works,
More knowledge of the bounds in which we work;
More knowledge that each individual man
Remains an Adam to the general race,
Constrained to see, like Adam, that he keep

Or vain all thoughts of his to help the world,
Which still must be developed from its one,
If bettered in its many.

A woman cannot do the thing she ought,
Which means whatever perfect thing she can,
In life, in art, in science, but she fears
To let the perfect action take her part
And rest there : she must prove what she can do
Before she does it—prate of woman's rights,
Of woman's mission, woman's function, till
The men (who are prating, too, on their side) cry
"A woman's function plainly is . . . to talk.
Poor souls, they are very reasonably vexed !
They cannot hear each other speak."

This was he,
Savonarola, who, while Peter sank
With his whole boat-load, called courageously “Wake Christ, wake Christ!” Who, having tried the tank
Of old church-waters used for baptistry
Ere Luther came to spill them, swore they stank!
Who also by a princely death-bed cried,
“Loose Florence, or God will not loose thy soul!”
Then fell back the Magnificent and died
Beneath the star-look shooting from the cowl,
Which turned to wormwood bitterness the wide
Deep sea of his ambitions. It were foul
To grudge Savonarola and the rest
Their violets! rather pay them quick and fresh!

And I must make it straightway, head and point,"
His wisdom is not worth the pin he wants.

Went sheathed in brass, and clashed on even heights
Its phrased thunders ;—these things are no more,

With "good night, dearest Dante!"—well, good-

America is our brother land, and, though a younger brother, sits already in the teacher's seat, and expounds the common rights of our humanity. O world, O world,
O jurists, rhymers, dreamers, what you please,
We play a weary game of hide and seek !
We shape a figure of our fantasy,
Call nothing something, and run after it
And lose it, lose ourselves too in the search,
Till clash against us comes a somebody
Who also has lost something and is lost,
Philosopher against philanthropist,
Academician against poet, man
Against woman, against the living, the dead—
Then home, with a bad headache and worse jest !

I lived with visions for my company,
Instead of men and women, years ago,
And found them gentle mates, nor thought to know
A sweeter music than they played to me.
But soon their trailing purple was not free
Of this world's dust—their lutes did silent grow,
And I myself grew faint and blind below
Their vanishing eyes. Then THOU didst come to be Beloved, what they seemed. Their shining fronts,
Their songs, their splendors (better, yet the same,
As river-water, hallowed into fonts)
Met in thee, and from out thee overcame
My soul with satisfaction of all wants—
Because God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame.

But my lover will not prize
All the glory that he rides in,
When he gazes in my face.
He will say, "O Love, thine eyes
Build the shrine my soul abides in,
And I kneel here for thy grace."

Then, ay, then—he shall kneel low,
With the red-roan steed anear him,
Which shall seem to understand—
Till I answer "Rise and go!
For the world must love and fear him
Whom I gift with heart and hand."

Mine is a wayward lay;
And, if its echoing rhymes I try to string,
Proveth a truant thing,
When so some name I love, send it away !

For then, eyes swimming o'er,
And claspéd hands, and smiles in fondness meant,
Are much more eloquent—
So it had fain begone, and speak no more !

Hast thou not looked upon
The flowerets of the field in lowly dress ?
Blame not my simpleness—
Think only of my love,—my song is gone !

And pleasure-barges, full of silks and songs.

For the truth itself,
That's neither man's nor woman's but just God's :
None else has reason to be proud of truth ;
Himself will see it sifted, disenthralled,

As far as, and no farther than 'tis truth ;
For—now He has left off calling firmaments
And strata, flowers and creatures, very good—
He says it still of truth, which is His own.

We staggering 'neath our burden as mere men,
Being called to stand up straight as demi-gods,
Support the intolerable strain and stress
Of the universal, and send clearly up
With voices broken by the human sob,
Our poems to find rhymes among the stars !

We have one Shakespeare between us, your land and ours, have we not? and one Milton, and now we are waiting for you to give us another. Niagara ought !

“ And music borne of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face.”

In the mean time we give honor to those tuneful voices of your people, which prophesy a yet greater music than they utter. You do honor to my verses in permitting them to approach and breathe the “sweet air” of Mr. Bryant.

Love me, sweet, with all thou art,
Feeling, thinking, seeing—
Love me in the lightest part,
Love me in full being,

Love me with thine open youth
In its frank surrender ;
With the vowing of thy mouth,
With its silence tender.

Love me with thine azure eyes,
Made for earnest granting !
Taking color from the skies,
Can Heaven's truth be wanting ?

A MAN'S REQUIREMENTS.

The English have a scornful insular way
Of calling the French light. The levity
Is in the judgment only, which yet stands ;
For say a foolish thing but oft enough,
(And here's the secret of a hundred creeds—
Men get opinions as boys learn to spell,
By reiteration chiefly) the same thing
Shall pass at least for absolutely wise,
And not with fools exclusively.

Hope tripped out of sight,
Crowned with an Eden wreath she saw not wither,
And went a-nodding through the wilderness
With brow that shone no less Than a sea-gull's wing, brought nearer by rough weather ;
Searching the treeless rock for fruits of light ;
Her fair, quick feet being armed from stones and cold,
By slippers of pure gold.

MEMORY AND HOPE.

JUNE 16.

That life is short and art long, appears to us more true than usual when we lie all day on a sofa, and are frightened at the east wind as if it were a tiger. Life is not only short but uncertain, and art is not only long but absorbing. What have I to do with writing scandal upon my neighbor's work when I have not finished my own ?

I am no trumpet, but a reed :
No flattering breath shall from me lead
 A silver sound, a hollow sound.
I will not wring, for priest or king,
One blast that in re-echoing
 Would leave a bondsman faster bound.

I am no trumpet, but a reed—
A broken reed, the wind indeed
 Left flat upon a dismal shore ;
Yet if a little maid, or child,
Should sigh within it, earnest-mild,
 This reed will answer evermore.

This life may be a condition only, and not a locality, and if we could see and hear with the subtlety of pure spirits, the faces of our beloved might be as close to us as the tears on ours, and their voices as audible as our own sighs for them. Sorrow, however, is one of the means of life, and we must needs endure it. It is good for us, like the cold which is seasonable. Perhaps, if we did not know it, we should not know (being quite incapable of receiving such knowledge in the abstract) what the joy is which is to come.

I've known the pregnant thinkers of this time
And stood by breathless, hanging on their lips,
When some chromatic sequence of fine thought
In learned modulation phrased itself
To an un conjectured harmony of truth.
And yet I've been more moved, more raised, I say,
By a simple word . . . a broken easy thing,
A three-years' infant might say after you—
A look, a sigh, a touch upon the palm,
Which meant less than " I love you " . . . than by all
The full-voiced rhetoric of these master-mouths.

If marriage be a contract, look to it then,
Contracting parties should be equal, just ;
But if a simple fealty on one side,
A mere religion—right to give, is all,
And certain brides of Europe duly ask
To mount the pile, as Indian widows do,
The spices of their tender youth heaped up,
The jewels of their gracious virtues worn,
More gems, more glory—to consume entire
For a living husband ! as the man's alive,
Not dead—the woman's duty, by so much,
Advanced in England, beyond Hindostan.

Yet we do not despise Skelton: despise him? The man is very strong; he tramples, foams, is rabid, in the sense of strength; he mesmerizes our souls with the sense of strength—it is as easy to despise a wild beast in the forest as John Skelton, poet laureate. He is as like a wild beast as a poet laureate can be. In his wonderful dominion over language, he tears it, as with teeth and paws, ravenously, savagely; devastating, rather than creating, dominant rather for liberty than dignity. It is the very sans-culottism of eloquence; the oratory of a Silenus drunk with anger only.

So Leibnitz err'd ; when, in the starry hour,
He read no weakness where was written, " Power ;"
Beheld the verdant earth, the circling sea ;
Nor dreamt so fair a world could cease to be !
Yea ! but he heard the Briton's awful name,
As, scattering darkness, in his might, he came,
Girded with Truth, and earnest to confute
What gave to Matter Mind's best attribute.
Sternly they shone—th' unequal race was run !

What the poet writes,
He writes : mankind accepts, it if it suits,
And that's success : if not, the poem's passed

In pity on their fathers' being so dull,
And that's success too.

Through the grasses wet and fair,
Straight I sought my garden-ground,
With the laurel on the mound,
And the pear-tree over-sweeping
A side-shadow of green air.

I wonder if Pygmalion had these doubts,
And, feeling the hard marble first relent,
Grow supple to the straining of his arms,
And tingle through its cold to his burning lip,
Supposed his senses mocked, and that the toil
Of stretching past the known and seen, to reach
The archetypal Beauty out of sight,
Had made his heart beat fast enough for two,
And with his own life dazed and blinded him !
Not so ; Pygmalion loved—and who loves
Believes the impossible.

Thou large-brained woman and large-hearted man,
Self-called George Sand! whose soul, amid the lions
Of thy tumultuous senses, moans defiance,
And answers roar for roar as spirits can!
I would some mild miraculous thunder ran
Above the applauded circus, in appliance
Of thine own nobler nature's strength and science,
Drawing two pinions, white as wings of swan,
From thy strong shoulders, to amaze the place
With holier light! That thou to woman's claim,
And man's, might join beside the angel's grace
Of a pure genius sanctified from blame:
Till child and maiden pressed to thine embrace,
To kiss upon thy lips a stainless fame.

That any irreverent fancy or conceit
Should litter in the Drama's throne-room where
The rulers of our art, in whose full veins
Dynastic glories mingle, sit in strength
And do their kingly work,—conceive, command,
And, from the imagination's crucial heat,
Catch up their men and women all aflame
For action, all alive and forced to prove
Their life by living out heart, brain, and nerve,
Until mankind makes witness, "These be men,

What was he doing, the great god Pan,
Down in the reeds by the river?
Spreading ruin and scattering ban,

With the dragon-fly on the river.

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,

And the dragon-fly had fled away,
Ere he brought it out of the river.

He cut it short, did the great god Pan,

And shout " a god " when sin hath marked the man ;
Bard, on whose brow the Hyblan dew remains,
Albeit the fever burneth in the veins ;
Hero, whose sword with tyrant's blood is hot ;
Skeptic, who doubting, would'st be doubted not ;
Man, whosoe'r thou art, whate'er thy trust,—
Respect thyself in me : thou treadest dust.

Love you seek for, presupposes
Summer heat and sunny glow.
Tell me, do you find moss roses
Budding, blooming in the snow?
Snow might kill the rose-tree's root—
Shake it quickly from your foot,
Lest it harm you as you go.

From the ivy where it dapples
A gray ruin, stone by stone—
Do you look for grapes or apples,
Or for sad green leaves alone?
Pluck the leaves off, two or three—
Keep them for morality
When you shall be safe and gone.

A VISION OF POETS.

JULY 26.

But soft !—a “ poet ” is a word soon said ;
A book's a thing soon written. Nay, indeed,
The more the poet shall be questionable,
The more unquestionably comes his book !
And this of mine—well, granting to myself
Some passion in it, furrowing up the flats,
Mere passion will not prove a volume worth
Its gall and rags even. Bubbles round a keel
Mean nought, excepting that the vessel moves.
There's more than passion goes to make a man,
Or book, which is a man too.

To some Utopian strand, some fairy shore,
Shall soft-eyed Fancy waft her Campbell o'er.
Wont o'er the lyre of Hope his hand to fling,
And never waken a discordant string;
Who ne'er grows awkward by affecting grace,
Or "common sense confounds with common-place:"
To bright conception adds expression chaste,
And human feeling joins to classic taste,
For still, with magic art, he knows, and knew,
To touch the heart, and win the judgment too.

ESSAY ON MIND.

JULY 28.

Cowley was coarsely curious: he went to the shambles for his chambers of imagery, and very often through the mud. All which faults appear to us attributable to his coldness of temperament, and his defectiveness in the instinct towards Beauty; to having the intellect only of a great poet, not the sensibility. . . . His translations, or rather paraphrases of Anacreon, are absolutely the most perfect of any English compositions of their order. His other poems contain profuse material, in image and reflection, for the accomplishment of three poets, each greater than himself. He approached the beautiful and true as closely as mere Fancy could; but that very same Fancy, unfixed by feeling, too often, in the next breath, approximated him to the hideous and the false.—THE BOOK OF THE POETS.

There's not a flower of spring,
That dies ere June, but vaunts itself allied
By issue and symbol, by significance
And correspondence, to that spirit-world
Outside the limits of our space and time,
Whereto we are bound. Let poets give it voice
With human meanings ; else they miss the thought,
And henceforth step down lower, stand confessed,
Instructed poorly for interpreters—
Thrown out by an easy cowslip in the text.

Of perfect inspiration and pure laws,

Free Heart, that singest to-day,
Like a bird on the first green spray,
Wilt thou go forth to the world,
Where the hawk hath his wing unfurled,
To follow, perhaps, thy way?
Where the tamer, thine own will bind,
And, to make thee sing, will blind,
While the little hip grows for the free behind?
Heart, wilt thou go?
—“No, no!
Free hearts are better so.”

Behold this rose !

I plucked it in our bower of Paradise
This morning as I went forth : and my heart
Hath beat against its petals all the day.
I thought it would be always red and full
As when I plucked it.—Is it?—Ye may see !
I cast it down to you that ye may see,
All of you !—count the petals lost of it—
And note the colors faded ! ye may see :
And I am as it is, who yesterday
Grew in the same place.

Methinks we do as fretful children do,
Leaning their faces on the window-pane
To sigh the glass dim with their own breath's stain,
And shut the sky and landscape from their view.
And thus, alas ! since God the maker drew
A mystic separation 'twixt those twain,
The life beyond us, and our souls in pain,
We miss the prospect which we are called unto
By grief we are fools to use. Be still and strong,
O man, my brother ! hold thy sobbing breath,
And keep thy soul's large window pure from wrong,—
That so, as life's appointment issueth,
Thy vision may be clear to watch along
The sunset consummation-lights of death.

At Jonson's name we stop perforce, and do salutation in the dust to that "learned sock." He was a learned man, as everybody knows ; and, as everybody does not know, not the worse for his learning. His material, brought laboriously from the East and West, is wrapt in a flame of his own. If the elasticity of Shakespeare and of certain of Shakespeare's brothers, is not found in his writings, the reason of the defect need not be sought out of his readings. His genius, high and verdant as it grew, yet belonged to the hard woods ; it was lance-wood rather than bow-wood—a genius rather noble than graceful—eloquent with a certain severity and emphasis of enunciation.

Lady diademed with honor, whence
And whither goest thou? Thy look presents
Tears to the lid, thy mien is vext and low,
Thy locks fall wildly from thy drooping brow,
Thy blushes all are pale, thy garb is fit
For mourning in, and shoon and zone are loose!
So changed thou art to sadness every whit,
And all that pomp and purple thou didst use,
That seemly sweet, that new rose on the mouth,
Those fair-smoothed tresses, and that graceful zone,
Bright sandals, and the rest thou haddest on,
Are all departed, gone to naught together!

Till beam appeared to bloom, and flower to burn—
If shining now —with not a hue would light thee.

And then came "glorious John," with the whole fourth era in his arms;—and eloquent above the sons of men, to talk down, thunder down poetry as it were an exhalation. . . . He had a large soul for a man, containing sundry Queen Anne's men, one with another, like quartetto tables; but it was not a large soul for a poet, and it entertained the universe by potato-patches. He established finally the reign of the literati for the reign of the poets—and the critics clapped their hands. He established finally the despotism of the final emphasis,—and no one dared, in affecting criticism, to speak any more at all against a tinkling cymbal.

But I do not like giving my name to anything about the theaters. . . . At their best, take the ideal of them, and the soul of the Drama is far above the stage ; and according to present and perhaps all past regulations in this country, dramatic poetry has been desecrated into the dust of our treading,—yes, and too often forced to desecration and drawn down morally in turn, by the stage. When the poet has his gods in the gallery, what must be the end of it? Why, that even Shakespeare should bow his starry head oftener than Homer nodded, and write down his pure genius into the dirt of the groundlings, for the sake of their “most sweet voices,” and even so be outwitted in popularity by his half-brother noble geniuses, Beaumont and Fletcher, because they stooped still lower.

In some transformed, apocryphal, new voice,
Above us, or below us, or around . . .
Perhaps we name it Nature's voice, or Love's,
Tricking ourselves, because we are more ashamed
To own our compensations than our griefs : [Life.

Side by side with Chaucer comes Gower, who is ungratefully disregarded too often, because side by side with Chaucer. He who rides in the king's chariot will miss the people's "hic est." Could Gower be considered apart, there might be found signs in him of an independent royalty, however his fate may seem to lie in waiting forever in his brother's ante-chamber, like Napoleon's tame kings. To speak our mind, he has been much undervalued. He is nailed to a comparative degree, and everybody seems to make it a condition of speaking of him, that something be called inferior within him, and something superior out of him.

"O dreary life!" we cry, "O dreary life!"
And still the generations of the birds
Sing through our sighing, and the flocks and herds
Serenely live while we are keeping strife
With Heaven's true purpose in us, as a knife
Against which we may struggle. Ocean girds
Unslackened the dry land: savannah-swards
Unweary sweep: hills watch, unworn; and rife
Meek leaves drop yearly from the forest-trees,
To show above the unwasted stars that pass
In their old glory. O thou god of old,
Grant me some smaller grace than comes to these!—
But so much patience, as a blade of grass
Grows by contented through the heat and cold.

And grown domestic like a barn-door fowl,

Nor tempt you to an eyrie too high up,
But which, in cackling, sets you thinking of
Your eggs to-morrow at breakfast, in the pause

AUGUST 29.

Oh, ever thus, immortal Locke, belong
First to my heart, as noblest in thy song ;
And since in thee the muse enraptured find
A moral greatness, and creating mind,
Still may thine influence, which with honor'd light
Beams while I read, illumine me as I write !
The page too guiltless, and the soul too free,
To call a frown from Truth, or blush from thee !

ESSAY ON MIND.

AUGUST 30.

Did I drop against his breast,
Or did his arms constrain me? Were my cheeks
Hot, overflowed, with my tears, or his ?
And which of our two large explosive hearts
So shook me? That, I know not. There were words
That broke in utterance . . . melted in the fire ;
Embrace that was convulsion, . . . then a kiss . . .
As long and silent as the ecstatic night—
And deep, deep, shuddering breaths, which meant beyond
Whatever could be told by word or kiss.

But if an angel spoke
In thunder, should we, haply, know much more
Than that it thundered? If a cloud came down
And wrapt us wholly, could we draw its shape,
As if on the outside, and not overcome?

O we live, O we live—
And this life that we perceive,
Is a great thing and a grave,
Which for others' use we have,
Duty-laden to remain.
We are helpers, fellow-creatures,
Of the right against the wrong,
We are earnest-hearted teachers
Of the truth which maketh strong—
Yet do we teach in vain?

How sick we must be, ere we make men just!
I think it frets the saints in heaven to see
How many desolate creatures on the earth
Have learnt the simple dues of fellowship
And social comfort, in a hospital,
As Marian did.

Thou knowest, though thy universe is broad,
Two little tears suffice to cover all.
Thou knowest, thou, who art so prodigal
Of beauty, we are oft but stricken deer
Expiring in the woods—that care for none
Of those delightful flowers they die upon.

All my losses did I tell you,
Ye, perchance, would look away ;—
Ye would answer me, “ Farewell ! you
Make sad company to-day ;
And your tears are falling faster than the bitter words you say.”

For God placed me like a dial
In the open ground, with power ;
And my heart had for its trial
All the sun and all the shower !
And I suffered many losses ; and my first was of the bower.

THE LOST BOWER.

SEPTEMBER 6.

Hast heard that Proserpina
(Once fooling) was snatched away,
To partake the dark king's seat,—
And there the tears ran fast on her feet,
To think how the sun shone yesterday ?
With her ankles sunken in asphodel
She wept for the roses of earth, which fell
From her lap when the wild car drave to hell.
Heart, wilt thou go ?
—“ No, no !
Wise hearts are warmer so.”

No bird but his sweet song did shrilly sing,
No song but did contain a lovely dit.

Mountain gorses, ever golden,
Cankered not the whole year long !
Do ye teach us to be strong,
Howsoever pricked and holden
Like your thorny blooms, and so
Trodden on by rain and snow,
Up the hill-side of this life, as bleak as where ye grow ?

Mountain gorses, do ye teach us
From that academic chair,
Canopied with azure air,
That the wisest word man reaches
Is the humblest he can speak ?
Ye, who live on mountain peak,
Yet live low along the ground, beside the grasses meek !

Despised or honored, is a human soul ;

A bird in a cage would have as good a story. Most of my events, and nearly all my intense pleasures, have passed in my thoughts. I wrote verses—as I dare say many have done who never wrote any poems—very easily; at eight years old and earlier. But, what is less common, the early fancy turned into a mill, and remained with me, and from that day to this, poetry has been a distinct object with me—an object to read, think, and live for.

LETTERS TO HORNE.

SEPTEMBER 12.

The love of Pope's Homer threw me into Pope, on one side, and into Greek on the other, and into Latin as a help to Greek,—and the influence of all these tendencies is manifest so long afterwards as in my "Essay on Mind," a didactic poem, written when I was seventeen or eighteen, and long repented of as worthy of all repentance. The poem is imitative in its form, yet is not without traces of an individual thinking and feeling—the bird pecks through the shell in it. With this it has a pertness and pedantry which did not even then belong to the character of the author, and which I regret now more than I do the literary defectiveness.

When we met first and loved, I did not build Upon the event with marble. Could it mean
To last, a love set pendulous between Sorrow and sorrow ? Nay, I rather thrilled,
Distrusting every light that seemed to gild
The onward path, and feared to overlean
A finger even. And, though I have grown serene
And strong since then, I think that God has willed
A still renewable fear . . . O love, O troth . . .
Lest these unclasped hands should never hold,
This mutual kiss drop down between us both
As an unowned thing, once the lips being cold,
And love, be false ! if he, to keep one oath,
Must lose one joy, by his life's star foretold.

Mr. Landor's English prose writings possess most of the characteristics of his poetry, only they are more perfect of their class. His "Pericles and Aspasia" and "Pentameron" are books for the world and for all time, whenever the world and time shall come to their senses about them; complete in beauty of sentiment, and subtlety of criticism. His general style is highly scholastic and elegant; his sentences have articulations, if such an expression may be permitted, of very excellent proportions. And abounding in striking images and thoughts, being remarkable for making clear ground there, and for lifting them, like statues to pedestals, where they may be seen most distinctly, and strike with the most enduring, though often with the most gradual, impressions.

With poring over the long sum of ill ;
So much for vice, so much for discontent,
So much for the necessities of power,
So much for the connivances of fear—
Coherent in statistical despairs
With such a total of distracted life,
To see it down in figures on a page,

Butler's business was the business of desecration, the exact reverse of a poet's, and with the admission of all the world his business is well done. . . . His power over language, "tattered and ragged," like Skelton's, is as wonderful as his power over images. And if nobody can commend the design of his Hudibras, which is the English counterpart of Don Quixote—a more objectionable servility than an adaptation from a serious composition, in which case that humorous effect would have been increased by the travestie, which is actually injured, and precisely in an inverse ratio, by the burlesque copy of a burlesque,—everybody must admit the force of the execution.

It is wonderful to look back and listen. Blind Homer spoke this Greek after blind Demodocus, with a quenchless light about his brows, which he felt through his blindness. Pindar rolled his chariots in it, prolonging the clamor of the games. Sappho's heart beat through it, and heaved up the world's. Æschylus strained it to the stature of his high thoughts. Plato crowned it with his divine peradventures. Aristophanes made it drunk with the wine of his fantastic merriment. The later Platonists wove their souls away in it, out of sight of other souls. The first Christians heard in it God's new revelation, and confessed their Christ in it from the suppliant's knee, and fervently from the bishop's throne. To all times, and their transitions, the language lent itself.

Strong words of counseling souls, confederate
With vocal pines and waters—out of books
He taught me all the ignorance of men,
And how God laughs in heaven when any man
Says "Here I'm learned ; this, I understand ;
In that, I am never caught at fault or doubt."
He sent the schools to school, demonstrating
A fool will pass for such through one mistake,
While a philosopher will pass for such,
Through said mistakes being ventured in the gross
And heaped up to a system.

Suppose the world brought diadems

We feel so tired, my heart and I.
Yet who complains? My heart and I?
In this abundant earth no doubt
Is little room for things worn out:
Disdain them, break them, throw them by!

We once were loved, used,—well enough,
I think, we've fared, my heart and I.

As to the "Raven" tell me what you shall say about it. There is certainly a power, but it does not appear to me the natural expression of a sane intellect in whatever mood; and I think that this should be specified in the title of the poem. There is a fantasticalness about the "Sir, or Madame," and things of the sort, which is ludicrous, unless there is a specified insanity to justify the straws. Probably he—the author—intended it to be read in the poem, and he ought to have intended it. The rhythm acts excellently upon the imagination, and the "nevermore" has a solemn chime with it.

The memory closer—"Why, Boccaccio,
Dante, Petrarca,"—and if still the flask
Appears to yield its wine by drops too slow,—
"Angelo, Raffael, Pergolese,"—all
Whose strong hearts beat through stone, or charged again
The paints with fire of souls electrical,
Or broke up heaven for music. What more then?
Why, then, no more?

We fair fine ladies, who park out our lives
From common sheep-paths, cannot help the crows
From flying over—we're as natural still
As Blowsalinda. Drape us perfectly
In Lyons velvet—we are not, for that,
Lay-figures, like you ! we have hearts within
Warm, live, improvident, indecent hearts,
As ready for distracted ends and acts
As any distressed sempstress of them all
That Romney groans and toils for. We catch love,
And other fevers, in the vulgar way.

Sparrows five
For just two farthings, and God cares for each.
If God is not too great for little cares,
Is any creature, because gone to God ?
I've seen some of the audacious, nowise mad,
Who have thought or dreamed, declared and testified
They've heard the Dead a-ticking like a clock
Which strikes the hours of the eternities,
Beside them, with their natural ears, and known
That human spirits feel the human way,
And hate the unreasoning awe which waves them off
From possible communion. It may be.

It is well to mark Wyatt as a leader in the art of didactic poetic composition, under the epistolary form, "sternly milde" (as Surrey said of his countenance), in the leaning toward satire. It is very well to mark many of his songs as of exceeding beauty, and as preserving clear their touching simplicity from that of over-curious conceits which infest his writings generally. That was the plague of Italian education transmitted by contagion, together with better things—together with the love of love-lore, and the sonnet structure, the summer bower for one fair thought, delighted in and naturalized in England by Wyatt and Surrey.

Wilt have measureless delights
 Of gold-roofed palaces, and sights
 From pictured or from sculptured art,
 With motion near their life ; and splendor
 Of bas-relief, with tracery tender,
 And varied and contrasted hues ?
 Wilt thou have, as nobles use,
 Broidered robes to flow about thee ?
 Jeweled fingers ? Need we doubt thee ?
 Gauds for which the wise will flout thee ?
 I most, who, of all beauty, know,
 It must be inward, to be so !

Oh, that love for story-telling ! It may be foolish, to be sure ; it leads into waste of time, to be sure ; still, how pleasant it is ! How full of enchantment and dreamtime gladnesses ? What a pleasant accompaniment to one's lonely coffee cup in the morning or evening, to hold a little volume in the left hand, and read softly along how Lindoro saw Monimia over the hedge, and what he said to her ! . . . Did we not divine it would end so—albeit ourselves and Monimia were weeping at the end of the second volume ? Even to the end of the third, when Lindoro was sworn at for a traitor by everybody in the book, may it not be testified gloriously of us that we saw through him. . ?

That great injustice has been done to Mr. Leigh Hunt, I am well aware, and that what was reprobated in him passed free in others, I am well aware. But one sort of injustice is not to be corrected by another, and on the point of what his views of religious truth and moral virtue used to be, I cannot agree with you that he has been "misrepresented," and I am of the opinion that you confront the offensive injustice of the world with the defensive injustice of your individual friendship. For myself, I will say that, out of the circle of Mr. Leigh Hunt's immediate friends, there can be no one who regards him with more respect and admiration than I do. Yet I must write so.

No one sings,
Descending Sinai ; on Parnassus mount
You take a mule to climb and not a muse,
Except in fable and figure ; forests chant
Their anthems to themselves, and leave you dumb.
But sit in London at the day's decline,
And view the city perish in the mist
Like Pharaoh's armaments in the deep Red Sea,
The chariots, horsemen, footmen, all the host,
Sucked down and choked in silence—then surprised,
By a sudden sense of vision and of tune,
You feel as conquerors though you did not fight,
And you and Israel's other singing-girls,
Ay, Miriam with them, sing the song you choose.

How many whom we would gladly see washed in the clean waters of a little ignorance, and take our part in their refreshment! Not that knowledge is bad, but that wisdom is better,—and that it is better and wiser in the sight of the angels of knowledge to think out one true thought with a thrush's song, and a green light for all lexion (or to think it without the light and without the song—because truth is beautiful, where they are not seen or heard)—than to mummy our benumbed souls with the circumvolutions of twenty thousand books.

Must I work in vain,
Without the approbation of a man?
It cannot be ; it shall not. Fame itself,
That approbation of the general race,
Presents a poor end (though the arrow speed,
Shot straight with vigorous finger to the white),
And the highest fame was never reached except
By what was aimed above it. Art for art,

How dreary 'tis for women to sit still
On winter nights by solitary fires,

But it is in Chaucer we touch the true height, and look abroad into the kingdoms and glories of our poetical literature. . . . His verses are open and delicate, like a young child's,—his sensibilities capacious of supersensual relations, like an experienced thinker's. Child-like, too, his tears and smiles lie at the edge of his eyes, and he is one proof more among the many that the deepest pathos and the quickest gaieties hide together in the same nature. He is too wakeful and curious to lose the stirring of a leaf, yet not too wide awake to see visions of green and white ladies between the branches; and a fair house of fame and a noble court of love are built and holden in the winking of his eyelash.

Across the bounds of time ! here's nought to see,

By making each a man, till all the peers

They only let the mice across the floors,
While every churchman dangles as he goes
The great key at his girdle, and abhors
In Christ's name, meekly. Open wide the house—
Concede the entrance with Christ's liberal mind,
And set the tables with His wine and bread.

I read books bad and good—some bad and good
At once: good aims not always make good books;
Well-tempered spades turn up ill-smelling soils
In digging vineyards, even: books, that prove
God's being so definitely, that man's doubt
Grows self-defined the other side the line,
Made atheist by suggestion; moral books,
Exasperating to license; genial books,
Discounting from the human dignity;
And merry books, which set you weeping when
The sun shines—ay, and melancholy books,
Which make you laugh that any one should weep
In this disjointed life, for one wrong more.

The rural cup-boy came
And poured Jove's nectar out with shining eyes,
While Bacchus, for the others, did as much,
And Vulcan spread the meal ; and all the hours
Made all things purple with a sprinkle of flowers,
Of roses chiefly, not to say the touch
Of their sweet fingers ; and the Graces glided
Their balm around, and the Muses, through the air
Struck out clear voices, which were still divided
By that divinest song Apollo there
Intoned to his lute ; while Aphrodite fair
Did float her beauty along the tune, and play
The notes right with her feet.

What do we give to our beloved ?
A little faith all undisproved,
A little dust to overweep,
And bitter memories to make
The whole earth blasted for our sake.

O men, with wailing in your voices !

Do stroke us with a subtle grace.
We say, " Who passes ? "—they are dumb.

Yet, touching, so, they draw above
Our common thoughts to Heaven's unknown ;

To a divine significance—

He is eight years old, and has never been "crammed," but reads English, Italian, French, German, and plays the piano—then is the sweetest child! sweeter than he looks. When he was ill, he said to me, "You \-pet! Don't be unhappy about me; think it's a boy in the street, and be a little sorry, but not unhappy." Bless the dimple in his cheek?

Dare ye look at one another,

And the benediction speak?

Would ye not break out in weeping and confess yourselves too weak?

O poets, from a maniac's tongue was poured the deathless singing !
O Christians, at your cross of hope, a hopeless hand was clinging !
O men, this man in brotherhood your weary paths
beguiling,
Groaned inly while he taught you peace, and died while ye were smiling !

O we live, O we live—
And this life that we achieve
Is a loud thing and a bold,
Which with pulses manifold
Strikes the heart out full and fain—
Active doer, noble liver,
 Strong to struggle, sure to conquer,
Though the vessel's prow will quiver
 At the lifting of the anchor :
Yet do we strive in vain ?

O we live, O we live—
And this life that we reprove,
Is a low thing and a light,
Which is jested out of sight,
And made worthy of disdain !
Strike with bold electric laughter
The high tops of things divine—
Turn thy head, my brother, after,
Lest thy tears fall in my wine !—
For is all laughed in vain ?

A DRAMA OF EXILE.

Sleep, little babe, on my knee,
Sleep, for midnight is chill,
And the moon has died out in the tree,
And the great human world goeth ill.
Sleep, for the wicked agree :
Sleep, let them do as they will.
Sleep.
Sleep, thou hast drawn from my breast
The last drop of milk that was good ;
And now, in a dream, suck the rest,
Lest the real should trouble thy blood.
Suck, little lips dispossessed,
As we kiss in the air whom we would.
Sleep.

Beauty in the mind
Leaves the heart cold—and love-refined
Ambitions make the world unkind.

The boor who ploughs the daisy down,
The chief, whose mortgage of renown
Fixed upon graves, has bought a crown—

Both these are happier, more approved
Than poets !—why should I be moved
In saying . . . both are more beloved ?

“ This is the way,” laughed the great god Pan,
(Laughed while he sat by the river.)
“ The only way, since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed.”
Then, dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
He blew in power by the river.
Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan !
Piercing sweet by the river !
Blinding sweet, O great god Pan !
The sun on the hill forgot to die,
And the lilies revived, and the dragon-fly
Came back to dream on the river.

Our troop is far behind,
The woodland calm is new ;
Our steeds, with slow grass-muffled hoofs,
Tread deep the shadows through ;
And in my mind, some blessing kind
Is dropping with the dew.
The woodland calm is pure—
I cannot choose but have
A thought from these o’ the beechen-trees
Which in our England wave,
And of the little finches fine
Which sang there while in Palestine
The warrior hilt we drave.

All rumpled and uneven
With green recesses, sudden swells,
And odorous valleys driven
So deep and straight, that always there
The wind is cradled to soft air.

Hills running up to heaven for light
Through woods that half-way ran :
As if the wild earth mimicked right
The wilder heart of man.
Only it shall be greener far
And gladder than hearts ever are.

Been lost in Meles flowing ;

Sung for the dole of praise—
Hoarsely sung upon the highway
With that obolum da mihi!

Shame, shame to poet's soul
Pining for such a dole,
When Heaven-chosen to inherit
The high throne of a chief spirit!

Sit still upon your thrones,

And if, sooth, the world decry you,
Let it pass unchallenged by you!

The soul's Rialto hath its merchandise ;
 I barter curl for curl upon that mart,
 And from my poet's forehead to my heart,
 Receive this lock which outweighs argosies—
 As purely black, as erst, to Pindar's eyes,
 The dim purpureal tresses gloomed athwart
 The nine white Muse-brows. For this counterpart,
 Thy bay-crown's shade, Beloved, I surmise,
 Still lingers on thy curl, it is so black !
 Thus, with a fillet of smooth-kissing breath,
 I tie the shadow safe from gliding back,
 And lay the gift where nothing hindereth,
 Here on my heart, as on thy brow, to lack
 No natural heat till mine grows cold in death.

 And mingles pure as the grapes in wine.”
 Heart, wilt thou go ?

O cold white moonlight of the north,
Refresh these pulses, quench this hell !
O coverture of death drawn forth
Across this garden-chamber. . well !
But what have nightingales to do
In gloomy England, called the free,
(Yes, free to die in ! . .) when we two
Are sundered, singing still to me ?
And still they sing, the nightingales.

He was Agonistes building up, instead of pulling down; and his high religious fortitude gave a character to his works. He stood in the midst of those whom we are forced to consider the corrupt versers of his day, an iconoclast of their idol rhyme, and protesting practically against the sequestration of pauses. His lyrical poems, move they ever so softly, step loftily, and with something of an epic air. His sonnets are the first sonnets of a free rhythm—and this, although Shakespeare and Spenser were sonneteers. His "Comus" and "Samson," and "Lycidas," how are we to praise them? His epic is second to Homer's, and the first in sublime effects—a sense as of divine benediction flowing through it from end to end.

The end of woman (or of man, I think)
Is not a book. Alas, the best of books
Is but a word in Art, which soon grows cramped,
Stiff, dubious-statured with the weight of years,
And drops an accent or digamma down
Some cranny of unfathomable time,
Beyond the critic's reaching. Art itself,
We've called the higher life, still must feel the soul
Live past it. For more's felt than is perceived,
And more's perceived than can be interpreted,
And Love strikes higher with his lambent flame
Than Art can pile the fagots.

If no wind tears them ; but, let summer come,

And shake at pleasure,—nor conclude at yours,
The winter's bitter,—but the summer's green.

Like some ill scholar's scrawl from heart and slate,—
Ay, spit on and so wiped out utterly
By some coarse scholar ! I have been too coarse,
Too human. Have we business, in our rank,
With blood i' the veins ? I will have henceforth none,
Not even to keep the color at my lip.
A rose is pink and pretty without blood !
Why not a woman ? When we've played in vain
The game, to adore,—we have resources still,
And can play on at leisure, being adored.

To keep it in my eyes, as in my ears,

When weary, or at morning when afraid,
And lean my heaviest oath on when I swear
That when all's done, all tried, all counted here,
All great arts, and all good philosophies—
This love just puts its hand out in a dream,
And straight outreaches all things.

Learn to win a lady's faith
Nobly, as the thing is high,
Bravely, as for life and death—
With a loyal gravity.
Lead her from the festive boards,
Point her to the starry skies,
Guard her by your truthful words,
Pure from courtship's flatteries.
By your truth she shall be true,
Ever true, as wives of yore ;
And her yes, once said to you,
SHALL be Yes for evermore.

The love I bear thee, finding words enough,
And hold the torch out, while the winds are rough,

I drop it at thy feet. I cannot teach
My hand to hold my spirit so far off [proof,
From myself . . . me . . . that I should bring thee
In words, of love hid in me out of reach.
Nay, let the silence of my womanhood
Commend my woman-love to thy belief—
Seeing that I stand unwon, however wooed,
And rend the garment of my life, in brief,
By a most dauntless, voiceless fortitude,
Lest one touch of this heart convey its grief.

If thou must love me, let it be for naught
Except for love's sake only. Do not say
'I love her for her smile. . her look. . her way
Of speaking gently. . . for a trick of thought
That falls in well with mine, and certes brought
A sense of pleasant ease on such a day"—
For these things in themselves, Beloved, may Be changed, or change for thee—and love, so wrought,
May be unwrought so. Neither love me for Thine own dear pity's wiping my cheeks dry—

Art's a service,—mark :

A silver key is given to thy clasp,
And thou shalt stand unwearied, night and day,
And fix it in the hard, slow-turning-wards,
And open, so, that intermediate door
Betwixt the different planes of sensuous form
And form insensuous, that inferior men
May learn to feel on still through these to those,
And bless thy ministration. The world waits
For help. Beloved, let us love so well,
Our work shall still be better for our love,
And still our love be sweeter for our work,
And both commended, for the sake of each,
By all true workers and true lovers born.

“ Subsists no law of life outside of life,
No perfect manners, without Christian souls ;
The Christ himself had been no Law-giver,
Unless he had given the life, too, with the law,”
I echoed thoughtfully. “ The man, most man,
Works best for men : and, if ‘most man indeed,
He gets his manhood plainest from his soul :
While obviously this stringent soul itself
Obeys our old law of development ;
The Spirit ever witnessing in ours,
And Love, the soul of soul, within the soul,
Evolving it sublimely. First, God's love.”

“ And next,” he smiled, “ the love of wedded souls,
Which still presents that mystery’s counterpart.
Sweet shadow-rose, upon the water of life,
Of such a mystic substance, Sharon gave
A name to ! human, vital, fructuous rose,
Whose calyx holds the multitude of leaves,—
Loves filial, loves fraternal, neighbor-loves,
And civic, . . all fair petals, all good scents,
All reddened, sweetened from one central Heart ! ”

Say over again, and yet once over again,
That thou dost love me. Though the word repeated
Should seem a cuckoo-song, as thou dost treat it,
Remember never to the hill or plain,
Valley and wood, without her cuckoo-strain.
Come the fresh Spring in all her green completed !
Beloved, I, amid the darkness greeted
By a doubtful spirit-voice, in that doubt’s pain Cry . . speak once more . . thou lovest ! Who can fear
Too many stars, though each in heaven shall roll—
Too many flowers, though each shall crown the year ?
Say thou dost love me, love me, love me—toll
The silver iterance !—only minding, Dear,
To love me also in silence, with thy soul.

And could I bear to sit alone
 'Mid nature's fixed benignities,
 While my warm pulse was moving?
Too dark thou art, O glittering sun,
 Too strait ye are, capacious seas,
 To satisfy the loving!

SABBATH MORNING AT SEA.

This nature, though the snows be down,
Thinks kindly of the bird of June.
The little red hip on the tree
Is ripe for such. What is for me,
Whose days so winterly go on?

No bird am I to sing in June,
And dare not ask an equal boon.
Good nests and berries red are Nature's
To give away to better creatures—
And yet my days go on, go on.

I praise Thee while my days go on ;
I love Thee while my days go on :
Through dark and dearth, through fire and frost,
With emptied arms and treasure lost,
I thank Thee while my days go on.

And having in Thy life-depth thrown
Being and suffering (which are one),
As a child drops his pebble small
Down some deep well, and hears it fall
Smiling—so I. THY DAYS GO ON.
