PREFACE.

This "Directory of American Agricultural Organizations" is issued in response to a constant demand from many quarters.

In its compilation lists based on the latest authentic facts have been brought up to date through the courteous cooperation of the chiefs of various bureaus of the United States Department of Agriculture, that of State commissioners of agriculture or other State agricultural officials, and of the general secretaries of the great national farmer organizations like the National Grange, the National Board of Farm Organizations, and similar associations.

The correct and complete lists returned by these general secretaries (for the farmer organizations) and by these State departments of agriculture (for the State organizations) have been the final authority in preparing the Directory.

Such lists were received from 43 States and from approximately two-thirds of the 410 national and regional agricultural organizations listed. The farmer organizations of State scope were reported to us by the national organizations of the same class, or by the State commissioner of agriculture. This highly valuable cooperation is hereby acknowledged with sincere appreciation.

The material thus assembled shows 265 national and 143 interstate farm organizations and kindred organizations; the farm organizations proper, like live stock and breeders' associations and the farmer "self-help" associations, etc., being listed together and the kindred organizations, such as scientific and economic associations, publication and registry associations, etc., being listed together. This classification results in two lists of national and two of interstate associations.

The agricultural organizations of State scope number 1,761, and here the farm organizations and scientific and kindred associations are not separately classified. The State organization is the smallest unit listed, with a few exceptions.

To the directory of national, State, and interstate organizations certain classified lists have been added for reference. These include lists of the land-grant colleges, experiment stations, and State agricultural officers; a list of farmers' self-help organizations of national scope; lists of live-stock, field-crop, and other associations; a reference list of fairs and expositions with dates for 1920; and finally a list of organized national highways—furnished by courtesy of the American Automobile Association—which it is believed will have a definite value in connection with the other facts here presented.

It is hoped that this Directory is reasonably correct and complete for 1920. A better and more nearly complete list can be issued hereafter if those having later facts will submit corrections to the Office of Farm Management. Such cooperation will be highly appreciated.

This Directory is for informational purposes only, and the inclusion here of the name of any organization does not imply indorsement by the United States Department of Agriculture, but merely sets down for the information of those interested the official claims of the association in question.
