Thomas Jefferson Campbell, having received a majority of the whole number of votes given in, was declared to be duly elected Clerk of the House.

And thereupon,

The said Thomas Jefferson Campbell appeared, and the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, together with the oath of office, as prescribed by the act of June 1, 1789, entitled "An act to regulate the time and manner of administering certain oaths," was administered to him by the Speaker; when he entered upon the duties of his office.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dickins, their Secretary:

Mr. Speaker: The Senate have adopted a resolution for the appointment of a committee, to join such committee as may be appointed by this House, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum has assembled, and that Congress is now ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, and the Senate have appointed Mr. Sevier, Mr. Mangum, and Mr. Fairfield the committee on their part.

And the Secretary withdrew.

The House (by unanimous consent) proceeded to the consideration of the said message; when the same was concurred in: and

Mr. Washington Hunt, Mr. Howell Cobb, and Mr. Jacob Collamer were appointed the said committee on the part of the House.

Ordered, That the Clerk acquaint the Senate therewith.

Mr. Alexander Evans offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House, immediately after the passage of this resolution, place in a box the name of each member and delegate of the House of Representatives upon a separate piece of paper; that he then proceed, in the presence of the House, to draw from said box, one at a time, the said pieces of paper, and as each is drawn he shall announce the name of the member upon it, who shall then choose his seat for the present session: Provided, That before said drawing shall commence, the Speaker shall cause every seat to be vacated, and shall see that each seat continues vacant until it is selected under this order.

The said resolution was read: when

Mr. George W. Jones moved that it be laid upon the table.

Pending further proceedings upon the said resolution, and by unanimous consent of the House,

Mr. Hunt, from the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that quorums of the two houses had assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communications he may be pleased to make, reported that the committee had waited on the President and discharged the duties for which it had been appointed, and that the President answered that he would make a communication in writing to the two houses to-day.

And thereupon,

A communication in writing was received from the President of the United States; by Mr. J. Knox Walker, his private secretary; which was read, and is as follows:

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and of the House of Representatives:

The annual meeting of Congress is always an interesting event. The Representatives of the States and of the people come fresh from their constituents to take counsel together for the common good. After an existence of near three-fourths of a century as a free and independent republic, the problem no longer remains to be solved, whether man is capable of self-government. The success of our admirable system is a conclusive refutation of the theories of those in other countries who maintain that "a favored few" are born to rule, and that the mass of mankind must be governed by force. Subject to no arbitrary or hereditary authority, the people are the only sovereigns recognised by our constitution. Numerous emigrants of every lineage and language, attracted by the civil and religious freedom we enjoy, and by our happy condition, annually crowd to our shores, and transfer their heart, not less than their allegiance, to the country whose dominion belongs alone to the people.

No country has been so much favored, or should acknowledge with deeper reverence the manifestations of the Divine protection. An all-wise Creator directed and guarded us in our infant struggle for freedom, and has constantly watched over our surprising progress, until we have become one of the great nations of the earth.

It is in a country thus favored, and under a government in which the executive and legislative branches hold their authority for limited periods, alike from the people, and where all are responsible to their respective constituencies, that it is again my duty to communicate with Congress upon the state of the Union, and the present condition of public affairs.

During the past year the most gratifying proofs are presented that our country has been blessed with a wide-spread and universal prosperity. There has been no period since the government was founded, when all the industrial pursuits of our people have been more successful, or when labor in all branches of business has received a fairer or better reward. From our abundance we have been enabled to perform the pleasing duty of furnishing food for the starving millions of less favored countries.

In the enjoyment of the bounties of Providence at home, such as have rarely fallen to the lot of any people, it is cause of congratulation, that our intercourse with all the Powers of the earth, except Mexico, continues to be of an amicable character.

It has ever been our cherished policy to cultivate peace and goodwill with all nations; and this policy has been steadily pursued by me.

No change has taken place in our relations with Mexico since the adjournment of the last Congress. The war in which the United States were forced to engage with the government of that country still continues.

I deem it unnecessary, after the full exposition of them contained in my message of the eleventh of May, 1846, and in my annual message at the commencement of the session of Congress in December last, to reiterate the serious causes of complaint which we had against Mexico before she commenced hostilities.

It is sufficient on the present occasion to say, that the wanton violation of the rights of person and property of our citizens committed by Mexico, her repeated acts of bad faith, through a long series of years, and her disregard of solemn treaties, stipulating for indemnity to our injured citizens, not only constituted ample cause of war on our part, but were of such an aggravated character as would have justified us before the whole world in resorting to this extreme remedy. With an anxious desire to avoid a rupture between the two countries, we forbore for years to assert our clear rights by force, and continued to seek redress for the wrongs we had suffered by amicable negotiation, in the hope that Mexico might yield to pacific counsels and the demands of justice. In this hope we were disappointed. Our minister of peace sent to Mexico was insultingly rejected. The Mexican government refused even to hear the terms of adjustment which he was authorized to propose; and finally, under wholly unjustifiable pretexts, involved the two countries in war, by invading the territory of the State of Texas, striking the first blow, and shedding the blood of our citizens on our own soil.

Though the United States were the aggrieved nation, Mexico commenced the war, and we were compelled, in self-defence, to repel the invader, and to vindicate the national honor and interests by prosecuting it with vigor until we could obtain a just and honorable peace.

On learning that hostilities had been commenced by Mexico, I promptly communicated that fact, accompanied with a succinct statement of our other causes of complaint against Mexico, to Congress; and that body, by the act of the thirteenth of May, 1846, declared that "by the act of the republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that government and the United States"—this act declaring "the war to exist by the act of the republic of Mexico," and making provision for its prosecution "to a speedy and successful termination," was passed with great unanimity by Congress, there being but two negative votes in the Senate, and but fourteen in the House of Representatives.

The existence of the war having thus been declared by Congress, it became my duty, under the constitution and the laws, to conduct and prosecute it. This duty has been performed; and though, at every stage of its progress, I have manifested a willingness to terminate it by a just peace, Mexico has refused to accede to any terms which could be accepted by the United States, consistently with the national honor and interest.

The rapid and brilliant successes of our arms, and the vast extent of the enemy's territory which had been overrun and conquered, before the close of the last session of Congress, were fully known to that body. Since that time, the war has been prosecuted with increased energy, and, I am gratified to state, with a success which commands universal admiration. History presents no parallel of so many glorious victories achieved by any nation within so short a period. Our army, regulars and volunteers, have covered themselves with imperishable honors. Whenever and wherever our forces have encountered the enemy, though he was in vastly superior numbers, and often entrenched in fortified positions of his own selection, and of great strength, he has been defeated. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon our officers and men, regulars and volunteers, for their gallantry, discipline, indomitable courage and perseverance, all seeking the post of danger, and vieing with each other in deeds of noble daring.

While every patriot's heart must exult, and a just national pride animate every bosom, in beholding the high proofs of courage, consummate military skill, steady discipline, and humanity to the vanquished enemy, exhibited by our gallant army, the nation is called to mourn over the loss of many brave officers and soldiers who have fallen in defence of their country's honor and interests. The brave dead met their melancholy fate in a foreign land, nobly discharging their duty, and with their country's flag waving triumphantly in the face of the foe. Their patriotic deeds are justly appreciated, and will long be remembered by their grateful countrymen. The parental care of the government they loved and served should be extended to their surviving families.

Shortly after the adjournment of the last session of Congress, the gratifying intelligence was received of the signal victory of Buena Vista and of the fall of the city of Vera Cruz, and with it the strong castle of San Juan de Ulloa, by which it was defended. Believing that after these and other successes, so honorable to our arms and so disastrous to Mexico, the period was propitious to afford her another opportunity, if the thought proper to embrace it, to enter into negotiations for peace, a commissioner was appointed to proceed to the headquarters of our army, with full powers to enter upon negotiations, and to conclude a just and honorable treaty of peace. He was not directed to make any new overtures of peace, but was the bearer of a despatch from the Secretary of State of the United States to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico, in reply to one received from the latter of the twenty-second of February, 1847, in which the Mexican government was informed of his appointment, and of his presence at the headquarters of our army, and that he was invested with full powers to conclude a definitive treaty of peace, whenever the Mexican government might signify a desire to do so. While I was unwilling to subject the United States to another indignant refusal, I was yet resolved that the evils of the war should not be protracted a day longer than might be rendered absolutely necessary by the Mexican government.

Care was taken to give no instructions to the commissioner which could in any way interfere with our military operations, or relax our energies in the prosecution of the war. He possessed no authority in any manner to control these operations. He was authorized to exhibit his instructions to the General in command of the army; and in the event of a treaty being concluded and ratified on the part of Mexico, he was directed to give him notice of that fact. On the happening of such contingency, and on receiving notice thereof, the General in command was instructed by the Secretary of War to suspend further active military operations until further orders. These instructions were given with a view to intermit hostilities until the treaty thus ratified by Mexico could be transmitted to Washington, and receive the action of the government of the United States.

The commissioner was also directed, on reaching the army, to deliver to the General in command the despatch which he bore from the Secretary of State to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico, and, on receiving it, the General was instructed by the Secretary of War to cause it to be transmitted to the commander of the Mexican forces, with a request that it might be communicated to his government.

The commissioner did not reach the headquarters of the army until after another brilliant victory had crowned our arms at Cerro Gordo.

The despatch which he bore from the Secretary of War to the General in command of the army was received by that officer, then at Jalapa, on the seventh of May, 1847, together with the despatch from the Secretary of State to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico; having been transmitted to him from Vera Cruz. The commissioner arrived at the headquarters of the army a few days afterwards. His presence with the army and his diplomatic character were made known to the Mexican government, from Puebla, on the twelfth of June, 1847, by the transmission of the despatch from the Secretary of State to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico.

Many weeks elapsed after its receipt, and no overtures were made, nor was any desire expressed by the Mexican government to enter into negotiations for peace.

Our army pursued its march upon the capital, and, as it approached it, was met by formidable resistance. Our forces first encountered the enemy, and achieved signal victories in the severely contested battles of Contreras and Churubusco. It was not until after these actions had resulted in decisive victories, and the capital of the enemy was within our power, that the Mexican government manifested any disposition to enter into negotiations for peace; and even then, as events have proved, there is too much reason to believe they were insincere, and that in agreeing to go through the forms of negotiation, the object was to gain time to strengthen the defences of their capital, and to prepare for fresh resistance.

The General in command of the army deemed it expedient to suspend hostilities temporarily, by entering into an armistice with a view to the opening of negotiations. Commissioners were appointed on the part of Mexico to meet the commissioner on the part of the United States. The result of the conferences which took place between these functionaries of the two governments was a failure to conclude a treaty of peace.

The commissioner of the United States took with him the projet of a treaty already prepared, by the terms of which the indemnity required by the United States was a cession of territory.

It is well known that the only indemnity which it is in the power of Mexico to make in satisfaction of the just and long deferred claims of our citizens against her, and the only means by which she can reimburse the United States for the expenses of the war, is a cession to the United States of a portion of her territory. Mexico has no money to pay, and no other means of making the required indemnity. If we refuse this, we can obtain nothing else. To reject indemnity, by refusing to accept a cession of territory, would be to abandon all our just demands, and to wage the war, bearing all its expenses, without a purpose or definite object.

A state of war abrogates treaties previously existing between the belligerents, and a treaty of peace puts an end to all claims for indemnity—for tortious acts committed under the authority of one government against the citizens or subjects of another, unless they are provided for in its stipulations. A treaty of peace which would terminate the existing war, without providing for indemnity, would enable Mexico—the acknowledged debtor, and herself the aggressor in the war—to relieve herself from her just liabilities. By such a treaty, our citizens who hold just demands against her would have no remedy either against Mexico or their own government. Our duty to these citizens must forever prevent such a peace, and no treaty which does not provide ample means of discharging these demands can receive my sanction.

A treaty of peace should settle all existing differences between the two countries. If an adequate cession of territory should be made by such a treaty, the United States should release Mexico from all her liabilities, and assume their payment to our own citizens. If, instead of this, the United States were to consent to a treaty by which Mexico should again engage to pay the heavy amount of indebtedness which a just indemnity to our government and our citizens would impose on her, it is notorious that she does not possess the means to meet such an undertaking. From such a treaty no result could be anticipated, but the same irritating disappointments which have heretofore attended the violations of similar treaty stipulations on the part of Mexico. Such a treaty would be but a temporary cessation of hostilities, without the restoration of the friendship and good understanding which should characterize the future intercourse between the two countries.

That Congress contemplated the acquisition of territorial indemnity when that body made provision for the prosecution of the war, is obvious. Congress could not have meant—when, in May, 1846, they appropriated ten millions of dollars, and authorized the President to employ the militia and naval and military forces of the United States, and to accept the services of fifty thousand volunteers, to enable him to prosecute the war; and when, at their last session, and after our army had invaded Mexico, they made additional appropriations, and authorized the raising of additional troops for the same purpose—that no indemnity was to be obtained from Mexico at the conclusion of the war; and yet it was certain that, if no Mexican territory was acquired, no indemnity could be obtained.

It is further manifest that Congress contemplated territorial indemnity, from the fact, that at their last session an act was passed, upon the Executive recommendation, appropriating three millions of dollars with that express object. This appropriation was made “to enable the President to conclude a treaty of peace, limits, and boundaries with the republic of Mexico, to be used by him in the event that said treaty, when signed by the authorized agents of the two governments, and duly ratified by Mexico, shall call for the expenditure of the same, or any part thereof.” The object of asking this appropriation was distinctly stated in the several messages on the subject which I communicated to Congress. Similar appropriations made in 1803 and 1806, which were referred to, were intended to be applied in part consideration for the cession of Louisiana and the Floridas. In like manner it was anticipated that, in settling the terms of a treaty of "limits and boundaries" with Mexico, a cession of territory estimated to be of greater value than the amount of our demands against her might be obtained; and that the prompt payment of this sum—in part consideration for the territory ceded—on the conclusion of a treaty, and its ratification on her part, might be an inducement with her to make such a cession of territory as would be satisfactory to the United States. And although the failure to conclude such a treaty has rendered it unnecessary to use any part of the three millions of dollars appropriated by that act, and the entire sum remains in the treasury, it is still applicable to that object, should the contingency occur making such application proper.

The doctrine of no territory is the doctrine of no indemnity; and, if sanctioned, would be a public acknowledgment that our country was wrong, and that the war declared by Congress with extraordinary unanimity was unjust, and should be abandoned; an admission unfounded in fact, and degrading to the national character.

The terms of the treaty proposed by the United States were not only just to Mexico, but, considering the character and amount of our claims, the unjustifiable and unprovoked commencement of hostilities by her, the expenses of the war to which we have been subjected, and the success which had attended our arms, were deemed to be of a most liberal character.

The commissioner of the United States was authorized to agree to the establishment of the Rio Grande as the boundary, from its entrance into the Gulf to its intersection with the southern boundary of New Mexico, in north latitude about thirty-two degrees, and to obtain a cession to the United States of the provinces of New Mexico and the Californias, and the privilege of the right of way across the isthmus of Tehuantepec. The boundary of the Rio Grande, and the cession to the United States of New Mexico and Upper California, constituted an ultimatum which our commissioner was, under no circumstances, to yield.

That it might be manifest not only to Mexico, but to all other nations, that the United States were not disposed to take advantage of a feeble power, by insisting upon wresting from her all the other provinces, including many of her principal towns and cities, which we had conquered and held in our military occupation, but were willing to conclude a treaty in a spirit of liberality, our commissioner was authorized to stipulate for the restoration to Mexico of all our other conquests.

As the territory to be acquired by the boundary proposed might be estimated to be of greater value than a fair equivalent for our just demands, our commissioner was authorized to stipulate for the payment of such additional pecuniary consideration as was deemed reasonable.

The terms of a treaty proposed by the Mexican commissioners were wholly inadmissible. They negotiated as if Mexico were the victorious, and not the vanquished party. They must have known that their ultimatum could never be accepted. It required the United States to dismember Texas, by surrendering to Mexico that part of the territory of that State lying between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, included within her limits by her laws when she was an independent republic, and when she was annexed to the United States and admitted by Congress as one of the States of our Union. It contained no provision for the payment by Mexico of the just claims of our citizens. It required indemnity to Mexican citizens for injuries they may have sustained by our troops in the prosecution of the war. It demanded the right for Mexico to levy and collect the Mexican tariff of duties on goods imported into her ports while in our military occupation during the war, and the owners of which had paid to officers of the United States the military contributions which had been levied upon them; and it offered to cede to the United States, for a pecuniary consideration, that part of Upper California lying north of latitude thirty-seven degrees. Such were the unreasonable terms proposed by the Mexican commissioners.

The cession to the United States by Mexico, of the provinces of New Mexico and the Californias, as proposed by the commissioner of the United States, it was believed, would be more in accordance with the convenience and interests of both nations, than any other cession of territory which it was probable Mexico could be induced to make.

It is manifest to all who have observed the actual condition of the Mexican government, for some years past, and at present, that if these provinces should be retained by her, she could not long continue to hold and govern them. Mexico is too feeble a power to govern these provinces, lying as they do at a distance of more than a thousand miles from her capital, and, if attempted to be retained by her, they would constitute but for a short time, even nominally, a part of her dominions.

This would be especially the case with Upper California. The sagacity of powerful European nations has long since directed their attention to the commercial importance of that province, and there can be little doubt that the moment the United States shall relinquish their present occupation of it, and their claim to it as indemnity, an effort would be made by some foreign Power to possess it, either by conquest or by purchase. If no foreign government should acquire it in either of these modes, an independent revolutionary government would probably be established by the inhabitants, and such foreigners as may remain in or remove to the country, as soon as it shall be known that the United States have abandoned it. Such a government would be too feeble long to maintain its separate independent existence, and would finally become annexed to, or be a dependent colony of, some more powerful State.

Should any foreign government attempt to possess it as a colony, or otherwise to incorporate it with itself, the principle avowed by President Monroe in 1824, and reaffirmed in my first annual message, that no foreign Power shall, with our consent, be permitted to plant or establish any new colony or dominion on any part of the North American continent, must be maintained. In maintaining this principle, and in resisting its invasion by any foreign Power, we might be involved in other wars more expensive and more difficult than that in which we are now engaged.

The provinces of New Mexico and the Californias are contiguous to the territories of the United States, and if brought under the government of our laws, their resources—mineral, agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial—would soon be developed.

Upper California is bounded on the north by our Oregon possessions; and if held by the United States, would soon be settled by a hardy, enterprising and intelligent portion of our population. The bay of San Francisco, and other harbors along the Californian coast, would afford shelter for our navy, for our numerous whale ships, and other merchant vessels employed in the Pacific ocean, and would in a short period become the marts of an extensive and profitable commerce with China, and other countries of the East.

These advantages, in which the whole commercial world would participate, would at once be secured to the United States by the cession of this territory; while it is certain that as long as it remains a part of the Mexican dominions, they can be enjoyed neither by Mexico herself nor by any other nation.

New Mexico is a frontier province, and has never been of any considerable value to Mexico. From its locality, it is naturally connected with our western settlements. The territorial limits of the State of Texas, too, as defined by her laws, before her admission into our Union, embrace all that portion of New Mexico lying east of the Rio Grande, while Mexico still claims to hold this territory as a part of her dominions. The adjustment of this question of boundary is important.

There is another consideration which induced the belief that the Mexican government might even desire to place this province under the protection of the government of the United States. Numerous bands of fierce and warlike savages wander over it, and upon its borders. Mexico has been, and must continue to be too feeble to restrain them from committing depredations, robberies and murders, not only upon the inhabitants of New Mexico itself, but upon those of the other northern States of Mexico. It would be a blessing to all these northern States to have their citizens protected against them by the power of the United States. At this moment many Mexicans, principally females and children, are in captivity among them. If New Mexico were held and governed by the United States, we could effectually prevent these tribes from committing such outrages, and compel them to release these captives, and restore them to their families and friends.

In proposing to acquire New Mexico and the Californias, it was known that but an inconsiderable portion of the Mexican people would be transferred with them, the country embraced within these provinces being chiefly an uninhabited region.

These were the leading considerations which induced me to authorize the terms of peace which were proposed to Mexico. They were rejected; and, negotiations being at an end, hostilities were renewed. An assault was made by our gallant army upon the strongly fortified places near the gates of the city of Mexico, and upon the city itself; and after several days of severe conflict, the Mexican forces—vastly superior in number to our own—were driven from the city, and it was occupied by our troops.

Immediately after information was received of the unfavorable result of the negotiations, believing that his continued presence with the army could be productive of no good, I determined to recall our commissioner. A despatch to this effect was transmitted to him on the sixth of October last. The Mexican government will be informed of his recall; and that, in the existing state of things, I shall not deem it proper to make any further overtures of peace, but shall be at all times ready to receive and consider any proposals which may be made by Mexico.

Since the liberal proposition of the United States was authorized to be made in April last, large expenditures have been incurred, and the precious blood of many of our patriotic fellow-citizens has been shed in the prosecution of the war. This consideration, and the obstinate perseverance of Mexico in protracting the war, must influence the terms of peace which it may be deemed proper hereafter to accept.

Our arms having been everywhere victorious, having subjected to our military occupation a large portion of the enemy's country, including his capital, and negotiations for peace having failed, the important questions arise, in what manner the war ought to be prosecuted? and what should be our future policy? I cannot doubt that we should secure and render available the conquests which we have already made; and that, with this view, we should hold and occupy, by our naval and military forces, all the ports, towns, cities, and provinces now in our occupation, or which may hereafter fall into our possession; that we should press forward our military operations, and levy such military contributions on the enemy, as may, as far as practicable, defray the future expenses of the war.

Had the government of Mexico acceded to the equitable and liberal terms proposed, that mode of adjustment would have been preferred. Mexico having declined to do this, and failed to offer any other terms which could be accepted by the United States, the national honor, no less than the public interests, requires that the war should be prosecuted with increased energy and power, until a just and satisfactory peace can be obtained. In the meantime, as Mexico refuses all indemnity, we should adopt measures to indemnify ourselves, by appropriating permanently a portion of her territory. Early after the commencement of the war, New Mexico and the Californias were taken possession of by our forces. Our military and naval commanders were ordered to conquer and hold them, subject to be disposed of by a treaty of peace.

These provinces are now in our undisputed occupation, and have been so for many months; all resistance on the part of Mexico having ceased within their limits. I am satisfied that they should never be surrendered to Mexico. Should Congress concur with me in this opinion, and that they should be retained by the United States as indemnity, I can perceive no good reason why the civil jurisdiction and laws of the United States should not at once be extended over them. To wait for a treaty of peace, such as we are willing to make, by which our relations towards them would not be changed, cannot be good policy; whilst our own interest, and that of the people inhabiting them, require that a stable, responsible and free government under our authority should, as soon as possible, be established over them. Should Congress, therefore, determine to hold these provinces permanently, and that they shall hereafter be considered as constituent parts of our country, the early establishment of territorial governments over them will be important for the more perfect protection of persons and property; and I recommend that such territorial governments be established. It will promote peace and tranquillity among the inhabitants, by allaying all apprehension that they may still entertain of being again subjected to the jurisdiction of Mexico. I invite the early and favorable consideration of Congress to this important subject.

Besides New Mexico and the Californias, there are other Mexican provinces which have been reduced to our possession by conquest. These other Mexican provinces are now governed by our military and naval commanders, under the general authority which is conferred upon a conqueror by the laws of war. They should continue to be held as a means of coercing Mexico to accede to just terms of peace. Civil as well as military officers are required to conduct such a government. Adequate compensation to be drawn from contributions levied on the enemy should be fixed by law for such officers as may be thus employed. What further provision may become necessary, and what final disposition it may be proper to make of them, must depend on the future progress of the war, and the course which Mexico may think proper hereafter to pursue.

With the views I entertain, I cannot favor the policy which has been suggested, either to withdraw our army altogether, or to retire to a designated line, and simply hold and defend it. To withdraw our army altogether from the conquests they have made by deeds of unparalleled bravery, and at the expense of so much blood and treasure, in a just war on our part, and one which, by the act of the enemy, we could not honorably have avoided, would be to degrade the nation in its own estimation and in that of the world.

To retire to a line, and simply hold and defend it, would not terminate the war. On the contrary, it would encourage Mexico to persevere, and tend to protract it indefinitely. It is not to be expected that Mexico, after refusing to establish such a line as a permanent boundary, when our victorious army are in possession of her capital, and in the heart of her country, would permit us to hold it without resistance. That she would continue the war, and in the most harassing and annoying forms, there can be no doubt. A border warfare of the most savage character, extending over a long line, would be unceasingly waged. It would require a large army to be kept constantly in the field, stationed at posts and garrisons along such a line, to protect and defend it. The enemy, relieved from the pressure of our arms on his coasts and in the populous parts of the interior, would direct his attention to this line, and, selecting an isolated post for attack, would concentrate his forces upon it. This would be a condition of affairs which the Mexicans, pursuing their favorite system of guerilla warfare, would probably prefer to any other. Were we to assume a defensive attitude on such a line, all the advantages of such a state of war would be on the side of the enemy. We could levy no contributions upon him, or in any other way make him feel the pressure of the war, but must remain inactive and await his approach, being in constant uncertainty at what point on the line, or at what time, he might make an assault. He may assemble and organize an overwhelming force in the interior, on his own side of the line, and, concealing his purpose, make a sudden assault upon some one of our posts so distant from any other as to prevent the possibility of timely succor or reinforcements; and in this way our gallant army would be exposed to the danger of being cut off in detail; or if, by their unequalled bravery and prowess everywhere exhibited during this war, they should repulse the enemy, their numbers stationed at any one post may be too small to pursue him. If the enemy be repulsed in one attack, he would have nothing to do but to retreat to his own side of the line, and, being in no fear of a pursuing army, may reinforce himself at leisure, for another attack on the same or some other post. He may, too, cross the line between our posts, make rapid incursions into the country which we hold, murder the inhabitants, commit depredations on them, and then retreat to the interior before a sufficient force can be concentrated to pursue him. Such would probably be the harassing character of a mere defensive war on our part. If our forces, when attacked, or threatened with attack, be permitted to cross the line, drive back the enemy, and conquer him, this would be again to invade the enemy's country, after having lost all the advantages of the conquests we have already made, by having voluntarily abandoned them. To hold such a line successfully and in security, it is far from being certain that it would not require as large an army as would be necessary to hold all the conquests we have already made, and to continue the prosecution of the war in the heart of the enemy's country. It is also far from being certain that the expenses of the war would be diminished by such a policy.

I am persuaded that the best means of vindicating the national honor and interest, and of bringing the war to an honorable close, will be to prosecute it with increased energy and power in the vital parts of the enemy's country.

In my annual message to Congress of December last, I declared that "the war has not been waged with a view to conquest; but having been commenced by Mexico, it has been carried into the enemy's country, and will be vigorously prosecuted there, with a view to obtain an honorable peace, and thereby secure ample indemnity for the expenses of the war, as well as to our much-injured citizens, who hold large pecuniary demands against Mexico." Such, in my judgment, continues to be our true policy—indeed, the only policy which will probably secure a permanent peace.

It has never been contemplated by me, as an object of the war, to make a permanent conquest of the republic of Mexico, or to annihilate her separate existence as an independent nation. On the contrary, it has ever been my desire that she should maintain her nationality, and, under a good government adapted to her condition, be a free, independent, and prosperous republic. The United States were the first among the nations to recognise her independence, and have always desired to be on terms of amity and good neighborhood with her. This she would not suffer. By her own conduct we have been compelled to engage in the present war. In its prosecution, we seek not her overthrow as a nation; but, in vindicating our national honor, we seek to obtain redress for the wrongs she has done us, and indemnity for our just demands against her. We demand an honorable peace; and that peace must bring with it indemnity for the past and security for the future. Hitherto Mexico has refused all accommodation by which such a peace could be obtained.

Whilst our armies have advanced from victory to victory, from the commencement of the war, it has always been with the olive-branch of peace in their hands; and it has been in the power of Mexico, at every step, to arrest hostilities by accepting it.

One great obstacle to the attainment of peace has, undoubtedly, arisen from the fact, that Mexico has been so long held in subjection by one faction or military usurper after another, and such has been the condition of insecurity in which their successive governments have been placed, that each has been deterred from making peace, lest, for this very cause, a rival faction might expel it from power. Such was the fate of President Herrera's administration in 1845, for being disposed even to listen to the overtures of the United States to prevent the war, as is fully confirmed by an official correspondence which took place in the month of August last, between him and his government, a copy of which is herewith communicated. "For this cause alone, the revolution which displaced him from power was set on foot" by General Paredes. Such may be the condition of insecurity of the present government.

There can be no doubt that the peaceable and well disposed inhabitants of Mexico are convinced that it is the true interest of their country to conclude an honorable peace with the United States; but the apprehension of becoming the victims of some military faction or usurper may have prevented them from manifesting their feelings by any public act. The removal of any such apprehension would probably cause them to speak their sentiments.

freely, and to adopt the measures necessary for the restoration of peace. With a people distracted and divided by contending factions, and a government subject to constant changes, by successive revolutions, the continued successes of our arms may fail to secure a satisfactory peace. In such event, it may become proper for our commanding generals in the field to give encouragement and assurances of protection to the friends of peace in Mexico in the establishment and maintenance of a free republican government of their own choice, able and willing to conclude a peace which would be just to them, and secure to us the indemnity we demand. This may become the only mode of obtaining such a peace. Should such be the result, the war which Mexico has forced upon us would thus be converted into an enduring blessing to herself. After finding her torn and distracted by factions, and ruled by military usurpers, we should then leave her with a republican government, in the enjoyment of real independence, and domestic peace and prosperity, performing all her relative duties in the great family of nations, and promoting her own happiness by wise laws and their faithful execution.

If, after affording this encouragement and protection, and after all the persevering and sincere efforts we have made, from the moment Mexico commenced the war, and prior to that time, to adjust our differences with her, we shall ultimately fail, then we shall have exhausted all honorable means in pursuit of peace, and must continue to occupy her country with our troops, taking the full measure of indemnity into our own hands, and must enforce the terms which our honor demands.

To act otherwise, in the existing state of things in Mexico, and to withdraw our army without a peace, would not only leave all the wrongs of which we complain unredressed, but would be the signal for new and fierce civil dissensions and new revolutions—all alike hostile to peaceful relations with the United States.

Besides, there is danger, if our troops were withdrawn before a peace was concluded, that the Mexican people, wearied with successive revolutions, and deprived of protection for their persons and property, might at length be inclined to yield to foreign influences, and to cast themselves into the arms of some European monarch for protection from the anarchy and suffering which would ensue. This, for our own safety, and in pursuance of our established policy, we should be compelled to resist. We could never consent that Mexico should be thus converted into a monarchy governed by a foreign prince.

Mexico is our near neighbor, and her boundaries are coterminous with our own, through the whole extent across the North American continent, from ocean to ocean. Both politically and commercially, we have the deepest interest in her regeneration and prosperity. Indeed, it is impossible that, with any just regard to our own safety, we can ever become indifferent to her fate.

It may be that the Mexican government and people have misconstrued or misunderstood our forbearance, and our objects, in desiring to conclude an amicable adjustment of the existing differences between the two countries. They may have supposed that we would submit to terms degrading to the nation; or they may have drawn false inferences from the supposed division of opinion in the United States on the subject of the war, and may have calculated to gain much by protracting it; and, indeed, that we might ultimately abandon it altogether, without insisting on any indemnity, territorial or otherwise. Whatever may be the false impressions under which they have acted, the adoption and prosecution of the energetic policy proposed must soon undeceive them.

In the future prosecution of the war, the enemy must be made to feel its pressure more than they have heretofore done. At its commencement, it was deemed proper to conduct it in a spirit of forbearance and liberality. With this end in view, early measures were adopted to conciliate, as far as a state of war would permit, the mass of the Mexican population; to convince them that the war was waged not against the peaceful inhabitants of Mexico, but against their faithless government, which had commenced hostilities; to remove from their minds the false impressions which their designing and interested rulers had artfully attempted to make, that the war on our part was one of conquest; that it was a war against their religion and their churches, which were to be desecrated and overthrown; and that their rights of person and private property would be violated. To remove these false impressions, our commanders in the field were directed scrupulously to respect their religion, their churches, and their church property, which were in no manner to be violated; they were directed also to respect the rights of persons and property of all who should not take up arms against us.

Assurances to this effect were given to the Mexican people by Major General Taylor, in a proclamation issued in pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of War, in the month of June, 1846; and again by Major General Scott, who acted upon his own convictions of the propriety of issuing it in a proclamation of the eleventh of May, 1847.

In this spirit of liberality and conciliation, and with a view to prevent the body of the Mexican population from taking up arms against us, the war conducted on our part. Provisions and other supplies furnished to our army by Mexican citizens were paid for at fair and liberal prices agreed upon by the parties. After the lapse of a few months, it became apparent that these assurances, and this mild treatment, had failed to produce the desired effect upon the Mexican population. While the war had been conducted on our part according to the most humane and liberal principles observed by civilized nations, it was waged in a far different spirit on the part of Mexico. Not appreciating our forbearance, the Mexican people generally became hostile to the United States, and availed themselves of every opportunity to commit the most savage excesses upon our troops. Large numbers of the population took up arms, and, engaging in guerilla warfare, robbed and murdered in the most cruel manner individual soldiers, or small parties, who, by accident or other causes had separated from the main body of our army; bands of guerilleros and robbers infested the roads, harassed our trains, and, whenever it was in their power, cut off our supplies.

The Mexicans having thus shown themselves to be wholly incapable of appreciating our forbearance and liberality, it was deemed proper to change the manner of conducting the war, by making them feel its pressure according to the usages observed under similar circumstances by all other civilized nations.

Accordingly, as early as the twenty-second of September, 1846, instructions were given by the Secretary of War to Major General Taylor to "draw supplies" for our army "from the enemy, without paying for them, and to require contributions for its support, if in that way he was satisfied he could get abundant supplies for his forces." In directing the execution of these instructions, much was necessarily left to the discretion of the commanding officer, who was best acquainted with the circumstances by which he was surrounded, the wants of the army, and the practicability of enforcing the measure.

General Taylor, on the twenty-sixth of October, 1846, replied, from Monterey, that "it would have been impossible hitherto, and is so now, to sustain the army to any extent by forced contributions of money or supplies." For the reasons assigned by him, he did not adopt the policy of his instructions, but declared his readiness to do so, "should the army, in its future operations, reach a portion of the country which may be made to supply the troops with advantage." He continued to pay for the articles of supply which were drawn from the enemy's country.

Similar instructions were issued to Major General Scott on the third of April, 1847, who replied from Jalapa, on the twentieth of May, 1847, that if it be expected "that the army is to support itself by forced contributions levied upon the country, we may ruin and exasperate the inhabitants, and starve ourselves." The same discretion was given to him that had been to General Taylor in this respect. General Scott, for the reasons assigned by him, also continued to pay for the articles of supply for the army which were drawn from the enemy.

After the army had reached the heart of the most wealthy portion of Mexico, it was supposed that the obstacles which had before that time prevented it would not be such as to render impracticable the levy of forced contributions for its support; and on the first of September, and again on the sixth of October, 1847, the order was repeated in despatches addressed by the Secretary of War to General Scott, and his attention was again called to the importance of making the enemy bear the burdens of the war by requiring them to furnish the means of supporting our army; and he was directed to adopt this policy, unless, by doing so, there was danger of depriving the army of the necessary supplies. Copies of these despatches were forwarded to General Taylor for his government.

On the thirty-first of March last, I caused an order to be issued to our military and naval commanders to levy and collect a military contribution upon all vessels and merchandise which might enter any of the ports of Mexico in our military occupation, and to apply such contributions towards defraying the expenses of the war. By virtue of the right of conquest and the laws of war, the conqueror, consulting his own safety or convenience, may either exclude foreign commerce altogether from all such ports, or permit it upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. Before the principal ports of Mexico were blockaded by our navy, the revenue derived from impost duties, under the laws of Mexico, was paid into the Mexican treasury. After these ports had fallen into our military possession, the blockade was raised, and commerce with them permitted upon prescribed terms and conditions. They were opened to the trade of all nations upon the payment of duties more moderate in their amount than those which had been previously levied by Mexico; and the revenue, which was formerly paid into the Mexican treasury, was directed to be collected by our military and naval officers, and applied to the use of our army and navy. Care was taken that the officers, soldiers, and sailors of our army and navy should be exempted from the operations of the order; and as the merchandise imported upon which the order operated must be consumed by Mexican citizens, the contributions exacted were, in effect, the seizure of the public revenues of Mexico, and the application of them to our own use. In directing this measure, the object was to compel the enemy to contribute, as far as practicable, towards the expenses of the war.

For the amount of contributions which have been levied in this form, I refer you to the accompanying reports of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy, by which it appears that a sum exceeding half a million of dollars has been collected.

This amount would undoubtedly have been much larger, but for the difficulty of keeping open communications between the coast and the interior, so as to enable the owners of the merchandise imported to transport and vend it to the inhabitants of the country. It is confidently expected that this difficulty will, to a great extent, be soon removed by our increased forces which have been sent to the field.

Measures have recently been adopted by which the internal as well as the external revenues of Mexico, in all places in our military occupation, will be seized and appropriated to the use of our army and navy.

The policy of levying upon the enemy contributions in every form, consistently with the laws of nations, which it may be practicable for our military commanders to adopt, should, in my judgment, be rigidly enforced, and orders to this effect have accordingly been given. By such a policy, at the same time that our own treasury will be relieved from a heavy drain, the Mexican people will be made to feel the burdens of the war, and, consulting their own interests, may be induced the more readily to require their rulers to accede to a just peace.

After the adjournment of the last session of Congress, events transpired in the prosecution of the war which, in my judgment, required a greater number of troops in the field than had been anticipated. The strength of the army was accordingly increased by “accepting” the services of all the volunteer forces authorized by the act of the thirteenth of May, 1846, without putting a construction on that act, the correctness of which was seriously questioned. The volunteer forces now in the field, with those which had been “accepted,” to “serve for twelve months,” and were discharged at the end of their term of service, exhaust the fifty thousand men authorized by that act. Had it been clear that a proper construction of the act warranted it, the services of an additional number would have been called for and accepted; but doubts existing upon this point, the power was not exercised.

It is deemed important that Congress should, at an early period of their session, confer the authority to raise an additional regular force to serve during the war with Mexico, and to be discharged upon the conclusion and ratification of a treaty of peace. I invite the attention of Congress to the views presented by the Secretary of War in his report upon this subject.

I recommend, also, that authority be given by law to call for and accept the services of an additional number of volunteers, to be exercised at such time and to such extent as the emergencies of the service may require.

In prosecuting the war with Mexico, whilst the utmost care has been taken to avoid every just cause of complaint on the part of neutral nations, and none has been given, liberal privileges have been granted to their commerce in the ports of the enemy in our military occupation.

The difficulty with the Brazilian government, which at one time threatened to interrupt the friendly relations between the two countries, will, I trust, be speedily adjusted. I have received information that an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States will shortly be appointed by his Imperial Majesty; and it is hoped that he will come instructed and prepared to adjust all remaining differences between the two governments in a manner acceptable and honorable to both. In the meantime, I have every reason to believe that nothing will occur to interrupt our amicable relations with Brazil.

It has been my constant effort to maintain and cultivate the most intimate relations of friendship with all the independent Powers of South America; and this policy has been attended with the happiest results. It is true, that the settlement and payment of many just claims of American citizens against these nations have been long delayed. The peculiar position in which they have been placed, and the desire on the part of my predecessors, as well as myself, to grant them the utmost indulgence, have hitherto prevented these claims from being urged in a manner demanded by strict justice. The time has arrived when they ought to be finally adjusted and liquidated, and efforts are now making for that purpose.

It is proper to inform you that the government of Peru has in good faith paid the first two instalments of the indemnity of thirty thousand dollars each, and the greater portion of the interest due thereon, in execution of the convention between that government and the United States, the ratifications of which were exchanged at Lima on the thirty-first of October, 1846. The Attorney General of the United States, early in August last, completed the adjudication of the claims under this convention, and made his report thereon, in pursuance of the act of the eighth of August, 1846. The sums to which the claimants are respectively entitled will be paid on demand at the treasury.

I invite the early attention of Congress to the present condition of our citizens in China. Under our treaty with that power, American citizens are withdrawn from the jurisdiction, whether civil or criminal, of the Chinese government, and placed under that of our public functionaries in that country. By these alone can our citizens be tried and punished for the commission of any crime; by these alone can questions be decided between them, involving the rights of persons and property; and by these alone can contracts be enforced, into which they may have entered with the citizens or subjects of foreign powers. The merchant vessels of the United States lying in the waters of the five ports of China open to foreign commerce are under the exclusive jurisdiction of officers of their own government. Until Congress shall establish competent tribunals to try and punish crimes, and to exercise jurisdiction in civil cases in China, American citizens there are subject to no law whatever. Crimes may be committed with impunity, and debts may be contracted without any means to enforce their payment. Inconveniences have already resulted from the omission of Congress to legislate upon the subject, and still greater are apprehended. The British authorities in China have already complained that this government has not provided for the punishment of crimes, or the enforcement of contracts against American citizens in that country, whilst their government has established tribunals by which an American citizen can recover debts due from British subjects.

Accustomed as the Chinese are to summary justice, they could not be made to comprehend why criminals who are citizens of the United States should escape with impunity, in violation of treaty obligations, whilst the punishment of a Chinese, who had committed any crime against an American citizen, would be rigorously exacted. Indeed, the consequences might be fatal to American citizens in China, should a flagrant crime be committed by any one of them upon a Chinese, and should trial and punishment not follow according to the requisitions of the treaty. This might disturb, if not destroy, our friendly relations with that empire, and cause an interruption of our valuable commerce.

Our treaties with the Sublime Porte, Tripoli, Tunis, Morocco, and Muscat, also require the legislation of Congress to carry them into execution, though the necessity for immediate action may not be so urgent as in regard to China.

The Secretary of State has submitted an estimate to defray the expense of opening diplomatic relations with the Papal States. The interesting political events now in progress in these States, as well as a just regard to our commercial interests, have, in my opinion, rendered such a measure highly expedient.

Estimates have also been submitted for the outfits and salaries of chargés d'affaires to the republics of Bolivia, Guatemala, and Ecuador. The manifest importance of cultivating the most friendly relations with all the independent States upon this continent has induced me to recommend appropriations necessary for the maintenance of these missions.

I recommend to Congress that an appropriation be made, to be paid to the Spanish government for the purpose of distribution among the claimants in "the Amistad case." I entertain the conviction that this is due to Spain under the treaty of the twentieth of October, 1795; and, moreover, that, from the earnest manner in which the claim continues to be urged, so long as it shall remain unsettled, it will be a source of irritation and discord between the two countries, which may prove highly prejudicial to the interests of the United States. Good policy, no less than a faithful compliance with our treaty obligations, requires that the inconsiderable appropriation demanded should be made.

A detailed statement of the condition of the finances will be presented in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. The imports for the last fiscal year, ending on the thirtieth of June, 1847, were of the value of one hundred and forty-six million five hundred and forty-five thousand six hundred and thirty-eight dollars; of which the amount exported was eight million eleven thousand one hundred and fifty-eight dollars, leaving one hundred and thirty-eight million five hundred and thirty-four thousand four hundred and eighty dollars in the country for domestic use. The value of the exports for the same period was one hundred and fifty-eight million six hundred and forty-eight thousand six hundred and twenty-two dollars; of which one hundred and fifty million six hundred and thirty-seven thousand four hundred and sixty-four dollars consisted of domestic productions, and eight million eleven thousand one hundred and fifty-eight dollars of foreign articles.

The receipts into the treasury for the same period amounted to twenty-six million three hundred and forty-six thousand seven hundred and ninety dollars and thirty-seven cents, of which there was derived from customs twenty-three million seven hundred and forty-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-four dollars and sixty-six cents; from sales of public lands, two million four hundred and ninety-eight thousand three hundred and thirty-five dollars and twenty cents; and from incidental and miscellaneous sources, one hundred thousand five hundred and seventy dollars and fifty-one cents. The last fiscal year during which this amount was received embraced five months under the operation of the tariff act of 1842, and seven months during which the tariff act of 1846 was in force. During the five months under the act of 1842, the amount received from customs was seven million eight hundred and forty-two thousand three hundred and six dollars and ninety cents, and during the seven months under the act of 1846 the amount received was fifteen million nine hundred and five thousand five hundred and fifty-seven dollars and seventy-six cents.

The nett revenue from customs during the year ending on the first of December, 1846, being the last year under the operation of the tariff act of 1842, was twenty-two million nine hundred and seventy-one thousand four hundred and three dollars and ten cents; and the nett revenue from customs during the year ending on the first of December, 1847, being the first year under the operation of the tariff act of 1846, was about thirty-one million five hundred thousand dollars; being an increase of revenue for the first year under the tariff of 1846 of more than eight million five hundred thousand dollars over that of the last year under the tariff of 1842.

The expenditures during the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth of June last were fifty-nine million four hundred and fifty-one thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and sixty-five cents; of which three million five hundred and twenty-two thousand and eighty-two dollars and thirty-seven cents was on account of payment of principal and interest of the public debt, including treasury notes redeemed and not funded. The expenditures, exclusive of payment of public debt, were fifty-five million nine hundred and twenty-nine thousand and ninety-five dollars and twenty-eight cents.

It is estimated that the receipts into the treasury for the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth of June, 1848, including the balance in the treasury on the first of July last, will amount to forty-two million eight hundred and eighty-six thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars and eighty cents, of which thirty-one million, it is estimated, will be derived from customs; three million five hundred thousand from the sale of the public lands; four hundred thousand from incidental sources, including sales made by the Solicitor of the Treasury; and six million two hundred and eighty-five thousand two hundred and ninety-four dollars and fifty-five cents from loans already authorized by law, which, together with the balance in the treasury on the first of July last, make the sum estimated.

The expenditures for the same period, if peace with Mexico shall not be concluded, and the army shall be increased as is proposed, will amount, including the necessary payments on account of principal and interest of the public debt and treasury notes, to fifty-eight million six hundred and fifteen thousand six hundred and sixty dollars and seven cents.

On the first of the present month, the amount of the public debt actually incurred, including treasury notes, was forty-five million six hundred and fifty-nine thousand six hundred and fifty-nine dollars and forty cents. The public debt due on the fourth of March, 1845, including treasury notes, was seventeen million seven hundred and eighty-eight thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine dollars and sixty-two cents; and consequently the addition made to the public debt since that time is twenty-seven million eight hundred and seventy thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine dollars and seventy-eight cents.

Of the loan of twenty-three millions, authorized by the act of the twenty-eighth of January, 1847, the sum of five millions was paid out to the public creditors, or exchanged at par for specie; the remaining eighteen millions was offered for specie to the highest bidder not below par, by an advertisement issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and published from the ninth of February until the tenth of April, 1847, when it was awarded to the several highest bidders, at premiums varying from one-eighth of one per cent. to two per cent. above par. The premium has been paid into the treasury, and the sums awarded deposited in specie in the treasury as fast as it was required by the wants of the government.

To meet the expenditures for the remainder of the present and for the next fiscal year, ending on the thirtieth of June, 1849, a further loan, in aid of the ordinary revenues of the government, will be necessary. Retaining a sufficient surplus in the treasury, the loan required for the remainder of the present fiscal year will be about eighteen million five hundred thousand dollars. If the duty on tea and coffee be imposed, and the graduation of the price of the public lands shall be made at an early period of your session, as recommended, the loan for the present fiscal year may be reduced to seventeen millions of dollars. The loan may be further reduced by whatever amount of expenditures can be saved by military contributions collected in Mexico. The most vigorous measures for the augmentation of these contributions have been directed, and a very considerable sum is expected from that source. Its amount cannot, however, be calculated with any certainty. It is recommended that the loan to be made be authorized upon the same terms, and for the same time, as that which was authorized under the provisions of the act of the twenty-eighth of January, 1847.

Should the war with Mexico be continued until the thirtieth of June, 1849, it is estimated that a further loan of twenty million five hundred thousand dollars will be required for the fiscal year ending on that day, in case no duty be imposed on tea and coffee, and the public lands be not reduced and graduated in price, and no military contributions shall be collected in Mexico. If the duty on tea and coffee be imposed, and the lands be reduced and graduated in price, as proposed, the loan may be reduced to seventeen millions of dollars, and will be subject to be still further reduced by the amount of the military contributions which may be collected in Mexico. It is not proposed, however, at present, to ask Congress for authority to negotiate this loan for the next fiscal year, as it is hoped that the loan asked for the remainder of the present fiscal year, aided by military contributions which may be collected in Mexico, may be sufficient. If, contrary to my expectation, there should be a necessity for it, the fact will be communicated to Congress in time for their action during the present session. In no event will a sum exceeding six millions of dollars of this amount be needed before the meeting of the session of Congress in December, 1848.

The act of the thirtieth of July, 1846, "reducing the duties on imports," has been in force since the first of December last; and I am gratified to state, that all the beneficial effects which were anticipated from its operation have been fully realized. The public revenue derived from customs during the year ending on the first of December, 1847, exceeds by more than eight millions of dollars the amount received in the preceding year under the operation of the act of 1842, which was superseded and repealed by it. Its effects are visible in the great and almost unexampled prosperity which prevails in every branch of business.

While the repeal of the prohibitory and restrictive duties of the act of 1842, and the substitution in their place of reasonable revenue rates levied on articles imported according to their actual value, has increased the revenue and augmented our foreign trade, all the great interests of the country have been advanced and promoted.

The great and important interests of agriculture, which had been not only too much neglected, but actually taxed under the protective policy for the benefit of other interests, have been relieved of the burdens which that policy imposed on them; and our farmers and planters, under a more just and liberal commercial policy, are finding new and profitable markets abroad for their augmented products.

Our commerce is rapidly increasing, and is extending more widely the circle of international exchanges. Great as has been the increase of our imports during the past year, our exports of domestic products sold in foreign markets have been still greater.

Our navigating interest is eminently prosperous. The number of vessels built in the United States has been greater than during any preceding period of equal length. Large profits have been derived by those who have constructed, as well as by those who have navigated them. Should the ratio of increase in the number of our merchant vessels be progressive, and be as great for the future as during the past year, the time is not distant when our tonnage and commercial marine will be larger than that of any other nation in the world.

Whilst the interests of agriculture, of commerce, and of navigation have been enlarged and invigorated, it is highly gratifying to observe that our manufactures are also in a prosperous condition. None of the ruinous effects upon this interest, which were apprehended by some, as the result of the operation of the revenue system established by the act of 1846, have been experienced. On the contrary, the number of manufactories, and the amount of capital invested in them, is steadily and rapidly increasing, affording gratifying proofs that American enterprise and skill employed in this branch of domestic industry, with no other advantages than those fairly and incidentally accruing from a just system of revenue duties, are abundantly able to meet successfully all competition from abroad, and still derive fair and remunerating profits.

While capital invested in manufactures is yielding adequate and fair profits under the new system, the wages of labor, whether employed in manufactures, agriculture, commerce, or navigation, have been augmented. The toiling millions, whose daily labor furnishes the supply of food and raiment, and all the necessaries and comforts of life, are receiving higher wages, and more steady and permanent employment, than in any other country, or at any previous period of our own history.

So successful have been all branches of our industry, that a foreign war, which generally diminishes the resources of a nation, has in no essential degree retarded our onward progress, or checked our general prosperity.

With such gratifying evidences of prosperity, and of the successful operation of the revenue act of 1846, every consideration of public policy recommends that it shall remain unchanged. It is hoped that the system of impost duties which it established may be regarded as the permanent policy of the country, and that the great interests affected by it may not again be subject to be injuriously disturbed, as they have heretofore been, by frequent and sometimes sudden changes.

For the purpose of increasing the revenue, and without changing or modifying the rates imposed by the act of 1846 on the dutiable articles embraced by its provisions, I again recommend to your favorable consideration the expediency of levying a revenue duty on tea and coffee. The policy which exempted these articles from duty during peace, and when the revenue to be derived from them was not needed, ceases to exist when the country is engaged in war, and requires the use of all of its available resources. It is a tax which would be so generally diffused among the people, that it would be felt oppressively by none, and be complained of none. It is believed that there are not, in the list of imported articles, any which are more properly the subject of war duties than tea and coffee.

It is estimated that three millions of dollars would be derived annually by a moderate duty imposed on these articles.

Should Congress avail itself of this additional source of revenue, not only would the amount of the public loan rendered necessary by the war with Mexico be diminished to that extent, but the public credit, and the public confidence in the ability and determination of the government to meet all its engagements promptly, would be more firmly established, and the reduced amount of the loan which it may be necessary to negotiate could probably be obtained at cheaper rates.

Congress is, therefore, called upon to determine whether it is wiser to impose the war duties recommended, or, by omitting to do so, increase the public debt annually three millions of dollars so long as loans shall be required to prosecute the war, and afterwards provide, in some other form, to pay the semi-annual interest upon it, and ultimately to extinguish the principal. If, in addition to these duties, Congress should graduate and reduce the price of such of the public lands as experience has proved will not command the price placed upon them by the government, an additional annual income to the treasury of between half a million and a million of dollars, it is estimated, would be derived from this source. Should both measures receive the sanction of Congress, the annual amount of public debt necessary to be contracted during the continuance of the war would be reduced near four millions of dollars. The duties recommended to be levied on tea and coffee it is proposed shall be limited in their duration to the end of the war, and until the public debt rendered necessary to be contracted by it shall be discharged. The amount of the public debt to be contracted should be limited to the lowest practicable sum, and should be extinguished as early after the conclusion of the war as the means of the treasury will permit.

With this view, it is recommended that, as soon as the war shall be over, all the surplus in the treasury, not needed for other indispensable objects, shall constitute a sinking fund, and be applied to the purchase of the funded debt, and that authority be conferred by law for that purpose.

The act of the sixth of August, 1846, "to establish a warehousing system," has been in operation more than a year, and has proved to be an important auxiliary to the tariff act of 1846, in augmenting the revenue and extending the commerce of the country. Whilst it has tended to enlarge commerce, it has been beneficial to our manufactures, by diminishing forced sales at auction of foreign goods at low prices, to raise the duties to be advanced on them, and by checking fluctuations in the market. The system, although sanctioned by the experience of other countries, was entirely new in the United States, and is susceptible of improvement in some of its provisions. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon whom was devolved large discretionary powers in carrying this measure into effect, has collected, and is now collating, the practical results of the system in other countries, where it has long been established, and will report at an early period of your session such further regulations suggested by the investigation as may render it still more effective and beneficial.

By the act to "provide for the better organization of the treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, and disbursement of the public revenue," all banks were discontinued as fiscal agents of the government, and the paper currency issued by them was no longer permitted to be received in payment of public dues.

The constitutional treasury created by this act went into operation on the first of January last. Under the system established by it, the public moneys have been collected, safely kept, and disbursed by the direct agency of officers of the government in gold and silver; and transfers of large amounts have been made from points of collection to points of disbursement, without loss to the treasury, or injury or inconvenience to the trade of the country.

While the fiscal operations of the government have been conducted with regularity and ease under this system, it has had a salutary effect in checking and preventing an undue inflation of the paper currency issued by the banks which exist under State charters. Requiring, as it does, all dues to the government to be paid in gold and silver, its effect is to restrain excessive issues of bank paper by the banks disproportioned to the specie in their vaults, for the reason that they are at all times liable to be called on by the holders of their notes for their redemption, in order to obtain specie for the payment of duties and other public dues. The banks, therefore, must keep their business within prudent limits, and be always in a condition to meet such calls, or run the hazard of being compelled to suspend specie payments, and be thereby discredited. The amount of specie imported into the United States during the last fiscal year was twenty-four million one hundred and twenty-one thousand two hundred and eighty-nine dollars; of which there was retained in the country twenty-two million two hundred and seventy-six thousand one hundred and seventy dollars. Had the former financial system prevailed, and the public moneys been placed on deposit in the banks, nearly the whole of this amount would have gone into their vaults, not to be thrown into circulation by them, but to be withheld from the hands of the people as a currency, and made the basis of new and enormous issues of bank paper. A large proportion of the specie imported has been paid into the treasury for public dues; and after having been, to a great extent, re-coined at the mint, has been paid out to the public creditors and gone into circulation as a currency among the people. The amount of gold and silver coin now in circulation in the country is larger than at any former period.

The financial system established by the constitutional treasury has been, thus far, eminently successful in its operations; and I recommend an adherence to all its essential provisions, and especially to that vital provision which wholly separates the government from all connexion with banks, and excludes bank paper from all revenue receipts.

In some of its details, not involving its general principles, the system is defective, and will require modification. These defects, and such amendments as are deemed important, were set forth in the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. These amendments are again recommended to the early and favorable consideration of Congress.

During the past year, the coinage at the mint and its branches has exceeded twenty millions of dollars. This has consisted chiefly in converting the coins of foreign countries into American coin.

The largest amount of foreign coin imported has been received at New York; and if a branch mint were established at that city, all the foreign coin received at that port could at once be converted into our own coin, without the expense, risk, and delay of transporting it to the mint for that purpose, and the amount re-coined would be much larger.

Experience has proved that foreign coin, and especially foreign gold coin, will not circulate extensively as a currency among the people. The important measure of extending our specie circulation, both of gold and silver, and of diffusing it among the people, can only be effected by converting such foreign coin into American coin. I repeat the recommendation contained in my last annual message for the establishment of a branch of the mint of the United States at the city of New York.

All the public lands which had been surveyed and were ready for market have been proclaimed for sale during the past year. The quantity offered and to be offered for sale, under proclamations issued since the first of January last, amounts to nine million one hundred and thirty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-one acres. The prosperity of the western States and Territories in which these lands lie will be advanced by their speedy sale. By withholding them from market, their growth and increase of population would be retarded, while thousands of our enterprising and meritorious frontier population would be deprived of the opportunity of securing freeholds for themselves and their families. But in addition to the general considerations which rendered the early sale of these lands proper, it was a leading object at this time to derive as large a sum as possible from this source, and thus diminish, by that amount, the public loan rendered necessary by the existence of a foreign war.

It is estimated that not less than ten millions of acres of the public lands will be surveyed and be in a condition to be proclaimed for sale during the year 1848.

In my last annual message I presented the reasons which, in my judgment, rendered it proper to graduate and reduce the price of such of the public lands as have remained unsold for long periods after they had been offered for sale at public auction.

Many millions of acres of public lands lying within the limits of several of the western States have been offered in the market, and been subject to sale at private entry for more than twenty years, and large quantities for more than thirty years, at the lowest price prescribed by the existing laws, and it has been found that they will not command that price. They must remain unsold and uncultivated for an indefinite period, unless the price demanded for them by the government shall be reduced. No satisfactory reason is perceived why they should be longer held at rates above their real value. At the present period an additional reason exists for adopting the measure recommended. When the country is engaged in a foreign war, and we must necessarily resort to loans, it would seem to be the dictate of wisdom that we should avail ourselves of all our resources, and thus limit the amount of the public indebtedness to the lowest possible sum.

I recommend that the existing laws on the subject of pre-emption rights be amended and modified so as to operate prospectively, and to embrace all who may settle upon the public lands and make improvements upon them before they are surveyed, as well as afterwards, in all cases where such settlements may be made after the Indian title shall have been extinguished.

If the right of pre-emption be thus extended, it will embrace a large and meritorious class of our citizens. It will increase the number of small freeholders upon our borders, who will be enabled thereby to educate their children and otherwise improve their condition, while they will be found at all times, as they have ever proved themselves to be, in the hour of danger to their country, among our hardiest and best volunteer soldiers, ever ready to tender their services in cases of emergency, and among the last to leave the field as long as an enemy remains to be encountered. Such a policy will also impress these patriotic pioneer emigrants with deeper feelings of gratitude for the parental care of their government, when they find their dearest interests secured to them by the permanent laws of the land, and that they are no longer in danger of losing their homes and hard-earned improvements by being brought into competition with a more wealthy class of purchasers at the land sales.

The attention of Congress was invited, at their last and the preceding session, to the importance of establishing a Territorial government over our possessions in Oregon; and it is to be regretted that there was no legislation on the subject. Our citizens who inhabit that distant region of country are still left without the protection of our laws, or any regularly organized government. Before the question of limits and boundaries of the territory of Oregon was definitely settled, from the necessity of their condition, the inhabitants had established a temporary government of their own. Besides the want of legal authority for continuing such a government, it is wholly inadequate to protect them in their rights of person and property, or to secure to them the enjoyment of the privileges of other citizens, to which they are entitled under the constitution of the United States. They should have the right of suffrage, be represented in a Territorial legislature, and by a delegate in Congress; and possess all the rights and privileges which citizens of other portions of the Territories of the United States have heretofore enjoyed, or may now enjoy.

Our judicial system, revenue laws, laws regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and the protection of our laws generally, should be extended over them.

In addition to the inhabitants in that territory who had previously emigrated to it, large numbers of our citizens have followed them during the present year; and it is not doubted that during the next and subsequent years their numbers will be greatly increased.

Congress, at its last session, established post-routes leading to Oregon, and between different points within that territory, and authorized the establishment of post offices at "Astoria and such other places on the coasts of the Pacific, within the territory of the United States, as the public interests may require." Post offices have accordingly been established, deputy postmasters appointed, and provision made for the transportation of the mails.

The preservation of peace with the Indian tribes residing west of the Rocky mountains will render it proper that authority should be given by law for the appointment of an adequate number of Indian agents to reside among them.

I recommend that a surveyor general's office be established in that territory, and that the public lands be surveyed and brought into market at an early period.

I recommend, also, that grants, upon liberal terms, of limited quantities of the public lands be made to all citizens of the United States who have emigrated, or may hereafter within a prescribed period emigrate, to Oregon, and settle upon them. These hardy and adventurous citizens, who have encountered the dangers and privations of a long and toilsome journey, and have at length found an abiding-place for themselves and their families upon the utmost verge of our western limits, should be secured in the homes which they have improved by their labor.

I refer you to the accompanying report of the Secretary of War for a detailed account of the operations of the various branches of the public service connected with the department under his charge. The duties devolving on this department have been unusually onerous and responsible during the past year, and have been discharged with ability and success.

Pacific relations continue to exist with the various Indian tribes, and most of them manifest a strong friendship for the United States. Some depredations were committed during the past year upon our trains transporting supplies for the army, on the road between the western border of Missouri and Santa Fe. These depredations, which are supposed to have been committed by bands from the region of New Mexico, have been arrested by the presence of a military force, ordered out for that purpose. Some outrages have been perpetrated by a portion of the northwestern bands upon the weaker and comparatively defenceless neighboring tribes. Prompt measures were taken to prevent such occurrences in future.

Between one and two thousand Indians, belonging to several tribes, have been removed during the past year, from the east of the Mississippi to the country allotted to them west of that river, as their permanent home; and arrangements have been made for others to follow.

Since the treaty of 1846 with the Cherokees, the feuds among them appear to have subsided, and they have become more united and contented than they have been for many years past. The commissioners, appointed in pursuance of the act of June 27th, 1846, to settle claims arising under the treaty of 1835-'36 with that tribe, have executed their duties; and after a patient investigation, and a full and fair examination of all the cases brought before them, closed their labors in the month of July last. This is the fourth board of commissioners which has been organized under this treaty. Ample opportunity has been afforded to all those interested to bring forward their claims. No doubt is entertained that impartial justice has been done by the late board, and that all valid claims embraced by the treaty have been considered and allowed. This result, and the final settlement to be made with this tribe, under the treaty of 1846, which will be completed and laid before you during your session, will adjust all questions of controversy between them and the United States, and produce a state of relations with them simple, well-defined, and satisfactory.

Under the discretionary authority conferred by the act of the third of March last, the annuities due to the various tribes have been paid during the present year to the heads of families instead of to their chiefs, or such persons as they might designate, as required by the law previously existing. This mode of payment has given general satisfaction to the great body of the Indians. Justice has been done to them, and they are grateful to the government for it. A few chiefs and interested persons may object to this mode of payment, but it is believed to be the only mode of preventing fraud and imposition from being practised upon the great body of common Indians, constituting a majority of all the tribes.

It is gratifying to perceive that a number of the tribes have recently manifested an increased interest in the establishment of schools among them, and are making rapid advances in agriculture—some of them producing a sufficient quantity of food for their support, and in some cases a surplus to dispose of to their neighbors. The comforts by which those who have received even a very limited education, and have engaged in agriculture, are surrounded, tend gradually to draw off their less civilized brethren from the precarious means of subsistence by the chase, to habits of labor and civilization.

The accompanying report of the Secretary of the Navy presents a satisfactory and gratifying account of the condition and operations of the naval service during the past year. Our commerce has been pursued with increased activity, and with safety and success, in every quarter of the globe under the protection of our flag, which the navy has caused to be respected in the most distant seas.

In the Gulf of Mexico, and in the Pacific, the officers and men of our squadrons have displayed distinguished gallantry, and performed valuable services. In the early stages of the war with Mexico, her ports on both coasts were blockaded, and more recently many of them have been captured and held by the navy. When acting in co-operation with the land forces, the naval officers and men have performed gallant and distinguished services on land as well as on water, and deserve the high commendation of the country.

While other maritime powers are adding to their navies large numbers of war steamers, it was a wise policy on our part to make similar additions to our navy. The four war steamers authorized by the act of the third of March, 1847, are in course of construction.

In addition to the four war steamers authorized by this act, the Secretary of the Navy has, in pursuance of its provisions, entered into contracts for the construction of five steamers, to be employed in the transportation of the United States mail “from New York to New Orleans, touching at Charleston, Savannah and Havana, and from Havana to Chagres;” for three steamers to be employed in like manner from Panama to Oregon, “so as to connect with the mail from Havana to Chagres across the isthmus;” and for five steamers to be employed in like manner from New York to Liverpool. These steamers will be the property of the contractors, but are to be built “under the superintendence and direction of a naval constructor in the employ of the Navy Department, and to be so constructed as to render them convertible, at the least possible expense, into war steamers of the first class."

A prescribed number of naval officers, as well as a post office agent, are to be on board of them; and authority is reserved to the Navy Department at all times to "exercise control over said steamships," and "to have the right to take them for the exclusive use and service of the United States upon making proper compensation to the contractors therefor."

Whilst these steam-ships will be employed in transporting the mails of the United States coastwise, and to foreign countries, upon an annual compensation to be paid to the owners, they will be always ready, upon an emergency requiring it, to be converted into war steamers; and the right reserved to take them for public use will add greatly to the efficiency and strength of this description of our naval force. To the steamers thus authorized under contracts made by the Secretary of the Navy, should be added five other steamers authorized under contracts made in pursuance of law by the Postmaster General; making an addition, in the whole, of eighteen war steamers, subject to be taken for public use. As further contracts for the transportation of the mail to foreign countries may be authorized by Congress, this number may be enlarged indefinitely.

The enlightened policy by which a rapid communication with the various distant parts of the globe is established, by means of American-built sea steamers, would find an ample reward in the increase of our commerce, and in making our country and its resources more favorably known abroad; but the national advantage is still greater—of having our naval officers made familiar with steam navigation, and of having the privilege of taking the ships already equipped for immediate service at a moment's notice; and will be cheaply purchased by the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mail in them, over and above the postages received.

A just national pride, no less than our commercial interests, would seem to favor the policy of augmenting the number of this description of vessels. They can be built in our country cheaper and in greater numbers than in any other in the world.

I refer you to the accompanying report of the Postmaster General for a detailed and satisfactory account of the condition and operations of that department during the past year. It is gratifying to find that, within so short a period after the reduction in the rates of postage, and notwithstanding the great increase of mail service, the revenue received for the year will be sufficient to defray all the expenses, and that no further aid will be required from the treasury for that purpose.

The first of the American mail steamers authorized by the act of the third of March, 1845, was completed and entered upon the service on the first of June last, and is now on her third voyage to Bremen and other intermediate ports. The other vessels authorized under the provisions of that act are in course of construction, and will be put upon the line as soon as completed. Contracts have also been made for the transportation of the mail in a steamer from Charleston to Havana.

A reciprocal and satisfactory postal arrangement has been made by the Postmaster General with the authorities of Bremen, and no difficulty is apprehended in making similar arrangements with all other powers with which we may have communications by mail steamers, except with Great Britain.

On the arrival of the first of the American steamers, bound to Bremen, at Southampton, in the month of June last, the British post office directed the collection of discriminating postages on all letters and otherailable matter, which she took out to Great Britain, or which went into the British post office on their way to France and other parts of Europe. The effect of the order of the British post office is to subject all letters and other matter transported by American steamers to double postage, one postage having been previously paid on them to the United States, while letters transported in British steamers are subject to pay but a single postage. This measure was adopted with the avowed object of protecting the British line of mail steamers now running between Boston and Liverpool, and, if permitted to continue, must speedily put an end to the transportation of all letters and other matter by American steamers, and give to British steamers a monopoly of the business. A just and fair reciprocity is all that we desire, and on this we must insist. By our laws, no such discrimination is made against British steamers bringing letters into our ports, but all letters arriving in the United States are subject to the same rate of postage, whether brought in British or American vessels. I refer you to the report of the Postmaster General for a full statement of the facts of the case, and of the steps taken by him to correct this inequality. He has exerted all the power conferred upon him by the existing laws.

The minister of the United States at London has brought the subject to the attention of the British government, and is now engaged in negotiations for the purpose of adjusting reciprocal postal arrangements, which shall be equally just to both countries. Should he fail in concluding such arrangements, and should Great Britain insist on enforcing the unequal and unjust measure she has adopted, it will become necessary to confer additional powers on the Postmaster General, in order to enable him to meet the emergency, and to put our own steamers on an equal footing with British steamers engaged in transporting the mails between the two countries; and I recommend that such powers be conferred.

In view of the existing state of our country, I trust it may not be inappropriate, in closing this communication, to call to mind the words of wisdom and admonition of the first and most illustrious of my predecessors, in his farewell address to his countrymen.

That greatest and best of men, who served his country so long, and loved it so much, foresaw, with "serious concern," the danger to our Union "of characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—northern and southern, Atlantic and western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views," and warned his countrymen against it.

So deep and solemn was his conviction of the importance of the Union and of preserving harmony between its different parts, that he declared to his countrymen in that address, "it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national Union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and to speak of it as a palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts."

After the lapse of half a century, these admonitions of Washington fall upon us with all the force of truth. It is difficult to estimate the "immense value" of our glorious Union of confederated States, to which we are so much indebted for our growth in population and wealth, and for all that constitutes us a great and a happy nation. How unimportant are all our differences of opinion upon minor questions of public policy, compared with its preservation; and how scrupulously should we avoid all agitating topics which may tend to distract and divide us into contending parties, separated by geographical lines, whereby it may be weakened or endangered.

Invoking the blessing of the Almighty Ruler of the Universe upon your deliberations, it will be my highest duty, no less than my sincere pleasure, to co-operate with you in all measures which may tend to promote the honor and enduring welfare of our common country.

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1847.

The said communication having been read,

Mr. Broadhead offered the following resolution; which was modified, and read, as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that fifteen thousand copies thereof, with the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of this House.

Mr. Robert Smith moved to amend the said resolution, by inserting at the end thereof, "five thousand copies in the German language:" which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. James Thompson moved to amend the said resolution, by inserting after the word "documents," the following: "and ten thousand copies without the accompanying documents:" which motion was disagreed to.

And the question was then put, Will the House agree to the resolution offered by Mr. Broadhead?

And decided in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. Hilliard,

Resolved, That the daily hour to which the House shall stand adjourned be 12 o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. Henly moved that the vote on agreeing to the resolution adopting the rules and orders, yesterday, and appointing a committee to revise the same, be reconsidered.

Mr. Clingman moved that the said motion be laid upon the table.

And, pending the question on the motion made by Mr. Clingman,

On motion of Mr. Jacob Thompson, the House, at twenty-two minutes past 3 o'clock, p. m., adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, m.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1847.

The Speaker announced, as the business first in order, the consideration of the motion, made yesterday by Mr. Henly, to reconsider the vote on the resolution of Monday last adopting the rules and orders, and appointing a committee to revise the same.

The question being on the motion made by Mr. Clingman, that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, which motion was pending when the House adjourned yesterday.

Thereupon,

Mr. Clingman withdrew his said motion; and,

By the unanimous consent of the House, the further consideration of the said motion of Mr. Henly was postponed for the present.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolution, offered yesterday by Mr. Evans, of Maryland, providing for the drawing of the names of the members of the House for the selection of their seats.

The said resolution was again read: when

Mr. Sims moved to amend the same, by striking out the word "session," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Congress:" which motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the resolution: when

Mr. George W. Jones moved that the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed indefinitely: which motion was disagreed to.

The question again recurred on agreeing to the resolution: when

Mr. Stanton moved to amend the same, by striking out the word "box," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "wheel:" which motion was disagreed to.

The question again recurred on agreeing to the resolution: when

Mr. Pettit moved to postpone the further consideration of the said resolution until 2 o'clock this day: which motion was disagreed to; and

The question was then put, Will the House agree to the said resolution as offered by Mr. Evans?

And it was determined in the affirmative.

And thereupon,

The Clerk, under the direction of the Speaker, and in presence of the House, proceeded to the execution of the said order, by placing in a box the name of each member and delegate upon a separate piece of paper, and drawing them out, one at a time, until all the names were drawn—each member present choosing his seat when his name was announced.

The order having been executed,

On motion by Mr. Jamieson,

Resolved, That this House do now proceed to the election of a Sergeant-at-arms, viva voce.

And thereupon,

In pursuance of the foregoing resolution, the House proceeded, viva voce, to the election of a Sergeant-at-arms; and the following members voted for NATHAN SERGEANT:

Mr. Goggin was appointed a member of the Committee on Agriculture in the place of Mr. Shepperd, who was excused yesterday from serving on that committee.

The Speaker announced, as the business first in order, the resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Vinton, and pending when the House adjourned, (which said resolution proposes an alteration of one of the standing rules of the House, and relates to its organization.)

The question being on the amendment offered by Mr. John W. Houston to the said resolution; and the same being stated,

Mr. Vinton modified his said resolution, by inserting therein after the word "question," wherever it occurs, the words "which may be referred to it."

And, after debate, and while proceeding upon the same,

A message was received from the President of the United States, by J. Knox Walker, his private secretary; which was read, and is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

On the last day of the last session of Congress, a bill, entitled "An act to provide for continuing certain works in the Territory of Wisconsin, and for other purposes," which had passed both Houses, was presented to me for my approval. I entertained insuperable objections to its becoming a law; but the short period of the session which remained afforded me no sufficient opportunity to prepare my objections, and communicate them, with the bill, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated. For this reason the bill was retained; and I deem it proper now to state my objections to it.

Although, from the title of the bill, it would seem that its main object was to make provision for continuing certain works already commenced in the Territory of Wisconsin, it appears, on examination of its provisions, that it contains only a single appropriation of six thousand dollars to be applied within that Territory, while it appropriates more than half a million of dollars for the improvement of numerous harbors and rivers lying within the limits and jurisdiction of several of the States of the Union.

At the preceding session of Congress, it became my duty to return, with my objections, to the House in which it originated, a bill making similar appropriations, and involving like principles; and the views then expressed remain unchanged.

The circumstances under which this heavy expenditure of public money was proposed were of imposing weight in determining upon its expediency. Congress had recognized the existence of war with Mexico, and, to prosecute it to "a speedy and successful termination," had made appropriations exceeding our ordinary revenues. To meet the emergency, and provide for the expenses of the government, a loan of twenty-three millions of dollars was authorized at the same session, which has since been negotiated. The practical effect of this bill, had it become a law, would have been to add the whole amount appropriated by it to the national debt. It would, in fact, have made necessary an additional loan to that amount, as effectually as if in terms it had required the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow the money therein appropriated. The main question in that aspect is, whether it is wise, while all the means and credit of the government are needed to bring the existing war to an honorable close, to impair the one and endanger the other, by borrowing money to be expended in a system of internal improvements capable of an expansion sufficient to swallow up the revenues not only of our own country, but of the civilized world? It is to be apprehended that, by entering upon such a career at this moment, confidence, at home and abroad, in the wisdom and prudence of the government, would be so far impaired as to make it difficult, without an immediate resort to heavy taxation, to maintain the public credit and to preserve the honor of the nation and the glory of our arms in prosecuting the existing war to a successful conclusion. Had this bill become a law, it is easy to foresee that largely increased demands upon the treasury would have been made at each succeeding session of Congress, for the improvements of numerous other harbors, bays, inlets, and rivers, of equal importance with those embraced by its provisions. Many millions would probably have been added to the necessary amount of the war debt, the annual interest on which must also have been borrowed, and finally a permanent national debt been fastened on the country and entailed on posterity.

The policy of embarking the Federal Government in a general system of internal improvements, had its origin but little more than twenty years ago. In a very few years, the applications to Congress for appropriations, in furtherance of such objects, exceeded two hundred millions of dollars. In this alarming crisis, President Jackson refused to approve and sign the Maysville road bill, the Wabash river bill, and other bills of similar character. His interposition put a check upon the new policy of throwing the cost of local improvements upon the national treasury, preserved the revenues of the nation for their legitimate objects, by which he was enabled to extinguish the then existing public debt, and to present to an admiring world the unprecedented spectacle, in modern times, of a nation free from debt, and advancing to greatness with unequalled strides, under a government which was content to act within its appropriate sphere, in protecting the States and individuals in their own chosen career of improvement and of enterprise. Although the bill under consideration proposes no appropriation for a road or canal, it is not easy to perceive the difference in principle, or mischievous tendency, between appropriations for making roads and digging canals, and appropriations to deepen rivers and improve harbors. All are alike within the limits and jurisdiction of the States; and rivers and harbors, alone, open an abyss of expenditure sufficient to swallow up the wealth of the nation, and load it with a debt which may fetter its energies and tax its industry for ages to come.

The experience of several of the States, as well as that of the United States, during the period that Congress exercised the power of appropriating the public money for internal improvements, is full of eloquent warnings. It seems impossible, in the nature of the subject, as connected with local representation, that the several objects presented for improvement shall be weighed according to their respective merits, and appropriations confined to those whose importance would justify a tax on the whole community to effect their accomplishment.

In some of the States, systems of internal improvements have been projected, consisting of roads and canals, many of which, taken separately, were not of sufficient public importance, to justify a tax on the entire population of the State to effect their construction; and yet, by a combination of local interests, operating on a majority of the legislature, the whole have been authorized, and the States plunged into heavy debts. To an extent so ruinous has this system of legislation been carried, in some portions of the Union, that the people have found it necessary to their own safety and prosperity to forbid their legislatures, by constitutional restrictions, to contract public debts for such purposes without their immediate consent.

If the abuse of power has been so fatal, in the States where the systems of taxation are direct, and the representatives responsible, at short periods, to small masses of constituents, how much greater danger of abuse is to be apprehended in the General Government, whose revenues are raised by indirect taxation, and whose functionaries are responsible to the people in larger masses and for longer terms?

Regarding only objects of improvement of the nature of those embraced in this bill, how inexhaustible we shall find them. Let the imagination run along our coast, from the River St. Croix to the Rio Grande, and trace every river emptying into the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico to its source; let it coast along our lakes, and ascend all their tributaries; let it pass to Oregon, and explore all its bays, inlets, and streams; and then let it raise the curtain of the future, and contemplate the extent of this republic, and the objects of improvement it will embrace, as it advances to its high destiny, and the mind will be startled at the immensity and danger of the power which the principle of this bill involves.

Already our confederacy consists of twenty-nine States. Other States may, at no distant period, be expected to be formed on the west of our present settlements. We own an extensive country in Oregon, stretching many hundreds of miles from east to west, and seven degrees of latitude from south to north. By the admission of Texas into the Union, we have recently added many hundreds of miles to our sea-coast. In all this vast country, bordering on the Atlantic and Pacific, there are many thousands of bays, inlets, and rivers, equally entitled to appropriations for their improvement with the objects embraced in this bill.

We have seen, in our States, that the interests of individuals or neighborhoods, combining against the general interest, have involved their governments in debts and bankruptcy; and when the system prevailed in the General Government, and was checked by President Jackson, it had begun to be considered the highest merit in a member of Congress to be able to procure appropriations of ~~might be the object.~~ we should be blind to the ~~exp~~ past, if we did not see abundant evidences that, if this system of expenditure is to be indulged in, combinations of individual and local interests will be found strong enough to control legislation, absorb the revenues of the country, and plunge the government into a hopeless indebtedness.

What is denominated a harbor by this system, does not necessarily mean a bay, inlet, or arm of the sea, on the ocean or on our lake shores, on the margin of which may exist a commercial city or town, engaged in foreign or domestic trade; but is made to embrace waters where there is not only no such city or town, but no commerce of any kind. By it a bay, or sheet of shoal water, is called a harbor, and appropriations demanded from Congress to deepen it, with a view to draw commerce to it, or to enable individuals to build up a town or city on its margin, upon speculation, and for their own private advantage.

What is denominated a river, which may be improved, in the system, is equally undefined in its meaning. It may be the Mississippi, or it may be the smallest and most obscure and unimportant stream, bearing the name of river, which is to be found in any State in the Union.

Such a system is subject, moreover, to be perverted to the accomplishment of the worst of political purposes. During the few years it was in full operation, and which immediately preceded the veto of President Jackson of the Maysville road bill, instances were numerous of public men seeking to gain popular favor by holding out to the people interested in particular localities the promise of large disbursements of public money. Numerous reconnoissances and surveys were made during that period, for roads and canals through many parts of the Union, and the people in the vicinity of each were led to believe that their property would be enhanced in value, and they themselves be enriched, by the large expenditures which they were promised, by the advocates of the system, should be made from the federal treasury in their neighborhoods. Whole sections of the country were thus sought to be influenced, and the system was fast becoming one not only of profuse and wasteful expenditure, but a potent political engine.

If the power to improve a harbor be admitted, it is not easy to perceive how the power to deepen every inlet on the ocean or the lakes, and make harbors where there are none, can be denied. If the power to clear out or deepen the channel of rivers near their mouths be admitted, it is not easy to perceive how the power to improve them to their fountain head, and make them navigable to their sources, can be denied. Where shall the exercise of the power, if it be assumed, stop? Has Congress the power, when an inlet is deep enough to admit a schooner, to deepen it still more, so that it will admit ships of heavy burden? and has it not the power, when an inlet will admit a boat, to make it deep enough to admit a schooner? May it improve rivers deep enough already to float ships ~~but boats? and how it can be used to improve those which are~~ ment exercise power and jurisdiction over the soil of a State consisting of rocks and sand-bars in the beds of its rivers? and may it not excavate a canal around its waterfalls, or across its lands, for precisely the same object?

Giving to the subject the most serious and candid consideration of which my mind is capable, I cannot perceive any intermediate grounds. The power to improve harbors and rivers for purposes of navigation, by deepening or clearing out, by dams and sluices, by locking or canalling, must be admitted, without any other limitation than the discretion of Congress, or it must be denied altogether. If it be admitted, how broad and how susceptible of enormous abuses is the power thus vested in the General Government! There is not an inlet of the ocean or the lakes, not a river, creek, or streamlet within the States, which is not brought for this purpose within the power and jurisdiction of the general government.

Speculation, disguised under the cloak of public good, will call on Congress to deepen shallow inlets, that it may build up new cities on their shores, or to make streams navigable which nature has closed by bars and rapids, that it may sell at a profit its lands upon their banks. To enrich neighborhoods, by spending within it the moneys of the nation, will be the aim and boast of those who prize their local interests above the good of the nation, and millions upon millions will be abstracted by tariffs and taxes from the earnings of the whole people to foster speculation and subserve the objects of private ambition.

Such a system could not be administered with any approach to equality among the several States and sections of the Union. There is no equality among them in the objects of expenditure, and, if the funds were distributed according to the merits of those objects, some would be enriched at the expense of their neighbors. But a greater practical evil would be found in the art and industry by which appropriations would be sought and obtained. The most artful and industrious would be the most successful; the true interests of the country would be lost sight of in an annual scramble for the contents of the treasury; and the member of Congress who could procure the largest appropriations to be expended in his district would claim the reward of victory from his enriched constituents. The necessary consequence would be sectional discontents and heartburnings, increased taxation, and a national debt, never to be extinguished.

In view of these portentous consequences, I cannot but think that this course of legislation should be arrested, even were there nothing to forbid it in the fundamental laws of our Union. This conclusion is fortified by the fact, that the Constitution itself indicates a process by which harbors and rivers within the States may be improved—a process not susceptible of the abuses necessarily to flow from the assumption of the power to improve them by the General Government; just in its operation, and actually practised upon, without complaint or interruption, during more than thirty years from the organization of the present government.

The Constitution provides that no “no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage.” With the “consent” of Congress, such duties may be levied, collected, and expended by the States. We are not left in the dark as to the objects of this reservation of power to the States. The subject was fully considered by the convention that framed the Constitution. It appears, in Mr. Madison’s report of the proceedings of that body, that one object of the reservation was, that the States should not be restrained from laying duties of tonnage for the purpose of clearing harbors. Other objects were named in the debates, and among them the support of seamen. Mr. Madison, treating on this subject in the Federalist, declares that—“The restraint on the power of the States over imports and exports is enforced by all the arguments which prove the necessity of submitting the regulation of trade to the federal councils. It is needless, therefore, to remark further on this head, than that the manner in which the restraint is qualified seems well calculated at once to secure to the States a reasonable discretion in providing for the conveniency of their imports and exports, and to the United States a reasonable check against the abuse of this discretion.”

The States may lay tonnage duties for clearing harbors, improving rivers, or for other purposes; but are restrained from abusing the power, because, before such duties can take effect, the “consent” of Congress must be obtained. Here is a safe provision for the improvement of harbors and rivers in the reserved powers of the States, and in the aid they may derive from duties of tonnage levied with the consent of Congress. Its safeguards are, that both the State Legislatures and Congress have to concur in the act of raising the funds; that they are, in every instance, to be levied upon the commerce of those ports which are to profit by the proposed improvement; that no question of conflicting power or jurisdiction is involved; that the expenditure being in the hands of those who are to pay the money and be immediately benefitted, will be more carefully managed and more productive of good than if the funds were drawn from the national treasury and disbursed by the officers of the General Government; that such a system will carry with it no enlargement of federal power and patronage, and leave the States to be the sole judges of their own wants and interests, with only a conservative negative in Congress upon any abuse of the power which the States may attempt.

Under this wise system, the improvement of harbors and rivers was commenced, or rather continued, from the organization of the government under the present Constitution. Many acts were passed by the several States levying duties of tonnage, and many were passed by Congress giving their consent to those acts. Such acts have been passed by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and have been sanctioned by the consent of Congress. Without enumerating them all, it may be instructive to refer to some of them, as illustrative of the mode of improving harbors and rivers in the early periods of our government, as to the constitutionality of which there can be no doubt.

In January, 1790, the State of Rhode Island passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels arriving in the port of Providence, "for the purpose of clearing and deepening the channel of Providence river, and making the same more navigable."

On the 2d of February, 1798, the State of Massachusetts passed a law levying a tonnage duty on all vessels, whether employed in the foreign or coasting trade, which might enter into the Kennebunk river, for the improvement of the same, by "rendering the passage in and out of said river less difficult and dangerous."

On the 1st of April, 1805, the State of Pennsylvania passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, "to remove the obstructions to the navigation of the river Delaware, below the city of Philadelphia."

On the 23d of January, 1804, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, "for improving the navigation of James river."

On the 22d of February, 1826, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, for "improving the navigation of James river, from Warwick to Rockett's landing."

On the 8th of December, 1824, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, for "improving the navigation of Appomatox river, from Pocahontas bridge to Broadway."

In November, 1821, the State of North Carolina passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, "for the purpose of opening an inlet at the lower end of Albemarle sound, near a place called Nog's Head, and improving the navigation of said sound, with its branches;" and in November, 1828, an amendatory law was passed.

On the 21st of December, 1804, the State of South Carolina passed a law levying a tonnage duty, for the purpose of "building a marine hospital in the vicinity of Charleston;" and on the 17th of December, 1816, another law was passed by the Legislature of that State for the "maintenance of a marine hospital."

On the 10th of February, 1787, the State of Georgia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on all vessels entering into the port of Savannah, for the purpose of "clearing" the Savannah river of "wrecks and other obstructions" to the navigation.

On the 12th of December, 1804, the State of Georgia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, "to be applied to the payment of the fees of the harbor-master and health officer of the ports of Savannah and St. Mary's."

In April, 1783, the State of Maryland passed a law laying a tonnage duty on vessels, for the improvement of the "basin" and "harbor" of Baltimore and the "river Patapsco."

On the 26th of December, 1791, the State of Maryland passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, for the improvement of the "harbor and port of Baltimore."

On the 28th of December, 1793, the State of Maryland passed a law authorizing the appointment of a health officer for the port of Baltimore, and laying a tonnage duty on vessels to defray the expenses.

Congress have passed many acts giving its "consent" to these and other State laws, the first of which is dated in 1790, and the last in 1843. By the latter act, the "consent" of Congress was given to the law of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, laying a tonnage duty on vessels, for the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore, and continuing it in force until the first day of June, 1850. I transmit herewith copies of such of the acts of the legislatures of the States on the subject, and also the acts of Congress giving its "consent" thereto, as have been collated.

That the power was constitutionally and rightfully exercised in these cases, does not admit of a doubt.

The injustice and inequality resulting from conceding the power to both governments, is illustrated by several of the acts enumerated. Take that for the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore. That improvement is paid for exclusively by a tax on the commerce of that city; but if an appropriation be made from the national treasury for the improvement of the harbor of Boston, it must be paid, in part, out of taxes levied on the commerce of Baltimore. The result is, that the commerce of Baltimore pays the full cost of the harbor improvement designed for its own benefit; and, in addition, contributes to the cost of all other harbor and river improvements in the Union. The facts need but be stated, to prove the inequality and injustice which cannot but flow from the practice embodied in this bill. Either the subject should be left as it was during the first third of a century, or the practice of levying tonnage duties by the States should be abandoned altogether, and all harbor and river improvements made under the authority of the United States, and by means of direct appropriations. In view not only of the constitutional difficulty, but as a question of policy, I am clearly of opinion that the whole subject should be left to the States, aided by such tonnage duties on vessels navigating their waters as their respective legislatures may think proper to propose, and Congress see fit to sanction. This "consent" of Congress would never be refused in any case where the duty proposed to be levied by the State was reasonable, and where the object of improvement was one of importance. The funds required for the improvement of harbors and rivers may be raised in this mode, as was done in the earlier periods of the government, and thus avoid a resort to a strained construction of the Constitution, not warranted by its letter. If direct appropriations be made of the money in the federal treasury for such purposes, the expenditures will be unequal and unjust. The money in the federal treasury is paid by a tax on the whole people of the United States; and if applied to the purposes of improving harbors and rivers, it will be partially distributed, and be expended for the advantage of particular States, sections, or localities, at the expense of others.

By returning to the early and approved construction of the Constitution, and to the practice under it, this inequality and injustice will be avoided, and, at the same time, all the really important improvements be made, and, as our experience has proved, be better made, and at less cost, than they would be by the agency of officers of the United States. The interests benefitted by these improvements, too, would bear the cost of making them, upon the same principle that the expenses of the post office establishment have always been defrayed by those who derive benefits from it. The power of appropriating money from the treasury for such improvements was not claimed or exercised for more than thirty years after the organization of the government in 1789, when a more latitudinous construction was indicated, though it was not broadly asserted and exercised until 1825. Small appropriations were first made, in 1820 and 1821, for surveys. An act was passed on the 3d of March, 1823, authorizing the President to "cause an examination and survey to be made of the obstructions between the harbor of Gloucester and the harbor of Squam, in the State of Massachusetts," and of "the entrance of the harbor of the port of Presque Isle, in Pennsylvania," with a view to their removal, and a small appropriation was made to pay the necessary expenses. This appears to have been the commencement of harbor improvements by Congress, thirty-four years after the government went into operation under the present Constitution. On the 30th of April, 1824, an act was passed making an appropriation of thirty thousand dollars, and directing "surveys and estimates to be made of the routes of such roads and canals" as the President "may deem of national importance, in a commercial or military point of view, or necessary for the transportation of the mails." This act evidently looked to the adoption of a general system of internal improvements, to embrace roads and canals as well as harbors and rivers. On the 26th May,

1824, an act was passed making appropriations for "deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, in the State of Pennsylvania," and to "repair Plymouth beach, in the State of Massachusetts, and thereby prevent the harbor at that place from being destroyed."

President Monroe yielded his approval to these measures, though he entertained, and had, in a message to the House of Representatives on the 4th of May, 1822, expressed the opinion that the Constitution had not conferred upon Congress the power to "adopt and execute a system of internal improvements." He placed his approval upon the ground, not that Congress possessed the power to "adopt and execute" such a system, by virtue of any or all of the enumerated grants of power in the Constitution, but upon the assumption that the power to make appropriations of the public money was limited and restrained only by the discretion of Congress. In coming to this conclusion, he avowed that, "in the more early stage of the government," he had entertained a different opinion. He avowed that his first opinion had been, that, "as the National Government is a government of limited powers, it has no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by the other specific grants, according to a strict construction of their powers;" and that the power to make appropriations gave to Congress no discretionary authority to apply the public money to any other purposes or objects except to "carry into effect the powers contained in the other grants." These sound views, which Mr. Monroe entertained "in the early stage of the government," he gave up in 1822, and declared that—

"The right of appropriation is nothing more than a right to apply the public money to this or that purpose. It has no incidental power, nor does it draw after it any consequences of that kind. All that Congress could do under it, in the case of internal improvements, would be to appropriate the money necessary to make them. For any act requiring legislative sanction or support, the State authority must be relied on. The condemnation of the land, if the proprietors should refuse to sell it, the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, and the protection of the work when finished, must be done by the State. To these purposes the powers of the General Government are believed to be utterly incompetent."

But it is impossible to conceive on what principle the power of appropriating public money, when in the treasury, can be construed to extend to objects for which the Constitution does not authorize Congress to levy taxes or imposts to raise money. The power of appropriation is but the consequence of the power to raise money; and the true inquiry is, whether Congress has the right to levy taxes for the object over which power is claimed.

During the four succeeding years, embraced by the administration of President Adams, the power not only to appropriate money, but to apply it, under the direction and authority of the General Government, as well to the construction of roads as to the improvement of harbors and rivers, was fully asserted and exercised.

Among other acts assuming the power, was one passed on the 20th of May, 1826, entitled "An act for improving certain harbors and the navigation of certain rivers and creeks, and for authorizing surveys to be made of certain bays, sounds, and rivers therein mentioned." By that act, large appropriations were made, which were to be "applied, under the direction of the President of the United States," to numerous improvements in ten of the States. This act, passed thirty-seven years after the organization of the present government, contained the first appropriation ever made for the improvement of a navigable river, unless it be small appropriations for examinations and surveys in 1820. During the residue of that administration, many other appropriations of a similar character were made, embracing roads, rivers, harbors, and canals, and objects claiming the aid of Congress multiplied without number.

This was the first breach effected in the barrier which the universal opinion of the framers of the Constitution had for more than thirty years thrown in the way of the assumption of this power by Congress. The general mind of Congress and the country did not appreciate the distinction taken by President Monroe between the right to appropriate money for an object and the right to apply and expend it without the embarrassment and delay of applications to the State governments. Probably no instance occurred in which such an application was made, and the flood-gates being thus hoisted, the principle laid down by him was disregarded, and applications for aid from the treasury, virtually to make harbors as well as improve them, clear out rivers, cut canals, and construct roads, poured into Congress in torrents, until arrested by the veto of President Jackson. His veto of the Maysville road bill was followed by his refusal to sign the "act making appropriations for building light-houses, light-boats, beacons, and monuments, placing buoys, improving harbors, and directing surveys;" "An act authorizing subscriptions for stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal Company;" "An act for the improvement of certain harbors and the navigation of certain rivers;" and, finally, "An act to improve the navigation of the Wabash river." In his objections to the act last named he says:

"The desire to embark the Federal Government in works of internal improvement prevailed, in the highest degree, during the first session of the first Congress that I had the honor to meet in my present situation. When the bill authorizing a subscription on the part of the United States for stock in the Maysville and Lexington Turnpike Company passed the two Houses, there had been reported by the Committees on Internal Improvements bills containing appropriations for such objects, exclusive of those for the Cumberland road, and for harbors and light-houses, to the amount of about one hundred and six millions of dollars. In this amount was included authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for the stock of different companies to a great extent, and the residue was principally for the direct construction of roads by this government. In addition to these projects, which have been presented to the two Houses under the sanction and recommendation of their respective Committees on Internal Improvements, there were then still pending before the committees, and in memorials to Congress, presented but not referred, different projects for works of a similar character, the expense of which cannot be estimated with certainty, but must have exceeded one hundred millions of dollars."

Thus, within the brief period of less than ten years after the commencement of internal improvements by the General Government, the sum asked for from the treasury for various projects amounted to more than two hundred millions of dollars. President Jackson's powerful and disinterested appeals to his country appear to have put down forever the assumption of power to make roads and cut canals, and to have checked the prevalent disposition to bring all rivers in any degree navigable within the control of the General Government. But an immense field for expending the public money and increasing the power and patronage of this government was left open in the concession of even a limited power of Congress to improve harbors and rivers—a field which millions will not fertilize to the satisfaction of those local and speculating interests by which these projects are in general gotten up. There cannot be a just and equal distribution of public burdens and benefits under such a system, nor can the States be relieved from the danger of fatal encroachment, nor the United States from the equal danger of consolidation, otherwise than by an arrest of the system, and a return to the doctrines and practices which prevailed during the first thirty years of the government.

How forcibly does the history of this subject illustrate the tendency of power to concentration in the hands of the General Government. The power to improve their own harbors and rivers was clearly reserved to the States, who were to be aided by tonnage duties levied and collected by themselves, with the consent of Congress. For thirty-four years improvements were carried on under that system, and so careful was Congress not to interfere, under any implied power, with the soil or jurisdiction of the States, that they did not even assume the power to erect light-houses or build piers without first purchasing the ground, with the consent of the States, and obtaining jurisdiction over it. At length, after the lapse of thirty-three years, an act is passed providing for the examination of certain obstructions at the mouth of one or two harbors almost unknown. It is followed by acts making small appropriations for the removal of those obstructions. The obstacles interposed by President Monroe, after conceding the power to appropriate, were soon swept away. Congress virtually assumed jurisdiction of the soil and waters of the States, without their consent, for the purposes of internal improvement; and the eyes of eager millions were turned from the State governments to Congress as the fountain whose golden streams were to deepen their harbors and rivers, level their mountains, and fill their valleys with canals. To what consequences this assumption of power was rapidly leading, is shown by the veto messages of President Jackson; and to what end it is again tending, is witnessed by the provisions of this bill, and bills of similar character.

In the proceedings and debates of the general convention which formed the Constitution, and of the State conventions which adopted it, nothing is found to countenance the idea that the one intended to propose, or the others to concede, such a grant of power to the General Government as the building up and maintaining of a system of internal improvements within the States necessarily implies. Whatever the General Government may constitutionally create, it may lawfully protect. If it may make a road upon the soil of the States, it may protect it from destruction or injury by penal laws. So of canals, rivers, and harbors. If it may put a dam in a river, it may protect that dam from removal or injury, in direct opposition to the laws, authorities, and people of the State in which it is situated. If it may deepen a harbor, it may, by its own laws, protect its agents and contractors from being driven from their work, even by the laws and authorities of the State. The power to make a road or canal, or to dig up the bottom of a harbor or river, implies a right in the soil of the State, and a jurisdiction over it, for which it would be impossible to find any warrant.

The States were particularly jealous of conceding to the General Government any right of jurisdiction over their soil, and in the Constitution restricted the exclusive legislation of Congress to such places as might be "purchased with the consent of the States in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, dockyards, and other needful buildings." That the United States should be prohibited from purchasing lands within the States, without their consent, even for the most essential purposes of national defence, while left at liberty to purchase or seize them for roads, canals, and other improvements of immeasurably less importance, is not to be conceived.

A proposition was made in the convention to provide for the appointment of a "secretary of domestic affairs," and make it his duty, among other things, "to attend to the opening of roads and navigation, and the facilitating communications through the United States." It was referred to a committee, and that appears to have been the last of it. On a subsequent occasion, a proposition was made to confer on Congress the power to "provide for the cutting of canals, when deemed necessary," which was rejected by the strong majority of eight States to three. Among the reasons given for the rejection of this proposition, it was urged that "the expense in such cases will fall on the United States, and the benefits accrue to the places where the canals may be cut."

During the consideration of this proposition, a motion was made to enlarge the proposed power, for "cutting canals" into a power "to grant charters of incorporation, when the interest of the United States might require, and the legislative provisions of the individual States may be incompetent;" and the reason assigned by Mr. Madison for the proposed enlargement of the power was, that it would "secure an easy communication between the States, which the free intercourse now to be opened seemed to call for. The political obstacles being removed, a removal of the natural ones, as far as possible, ought to follow."

The original proposition and all the amendments were rejected, after deliberate discussion, not on the ground, as so much of that discussion as has been preserved indicates, that no direct grant was necessary, but because it was deemed inexpedient to grant it at all. When it is considered that some of the members of the convention, who afterwards participated in the organization and administration of the government, advocated and practised upon a very liberal construction of the Constitution, grasping at many high powers as implied in its various provisions, not one of them, it is believed, at that day claimed the power to make roads and canals, or improve rivers and harbors, or appropriate money for that purpose. Among our early statesmen of the strict construction class, the opinion was universal, when the subject was first broached, that Congress did not possess the power, although some of them thought it desirable.

President Jefferson, in his message to Congress in 1806, recommended an amendment of the Constitution, with a view to apply an anticipated surplus in the treasury "to the great purposes of the public education, roads, rivers, canals, and such other objects of public improvement as it may be thought proper to add to the constitutional enumeration of the federal powers;" and he adds: "I suppose an amendment to the Constitution, by consent of the States, necessary, because the objects now recommended are not among those enumerated in the Constitution, and to which it permits the public moneys to be applied." In 1825, he repeated, in his published letters, the opinion that no such power has been conferred upon Congress.

President Madison, in a message to the House of Representatives of the 3d of March, 1817, assigning his objections to a bill entitled "An act to set apart and pledge certain funds for internal improvements," declares, that "the power to regulate commerce among the several States cannot include a power to construct roads and canals, and to imprové the navigation of water-courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and secure such commerce, without a latitude of construction departing from the ordinary import of the terms, strengthened by the known inconveniences which doubtless led to the grant of this remedial power to Congress."

President Monroe, in a message to the House of Representatives of the 4th of May, 1822, containing his objections to a bill entitled "An act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road," declares:

"Commerce between independent powers or communities is universally regulated by duties and imposts. It was so regulated by the States before the adoption of this Constitution, equally in respect to each other and to foreign powers. The goods and vessels employed in the trade are the only subjects of regulation. It can act on none other. A power, then, to impose such duties and imposts in regard to foreign nations, and to prevent any on the trade between the States, was the only power granted.

"If we recur to the causes which produced the adoption of this Constitution, we shall find that injuries resulting from the regulation of trade by the States respectively, and the advantages anticipated from the transfer of the power to Congress, were among those which had the most weight. Instead of acting as a nation in regard to foreign powers, the States, individually, had commenced a system of restraint on each other, whereby the interests of foreign powers were promoted at their expense. If one State imposed high duties on the goods or vessels of a foreign power, to countervail the regulations of such power, the next adjoining States imposed lighter duties, to invite those articles into their ports, that they might be transferred thence into the other States, securing the duties to themselves. This contracted policy in some of the States was soon counteracted by others. Restraints were immediately laid on such commerce by the suffering States; and thus had grown up a state of affairs disorderly and unnatural, the tendency of which was to destroy the Union itself, and with it all hope of realizing those blessings which we had anticipated from the glorious revolution which had been so recently achieved. From this deplorable dilemma, or rather, certain ruin, we were happily rescued by the adoption of the Constitution.

“Among the first and most important effects of this great revolution was the complete abolition of this pernicious policy. The States were brought together by the Constitution, as to commerce, into one community, equally in regard to foreign nations and each other. The regulations that were adopted regarded us, in both respects, as one people. The duties and imposts that were laid on the vessels and merchandise of foreign nations, were all uniform throughout the United States; and in the intercourse between the States themselves, no duties of any kind were imposed other than between different ports and counties within the same State.

“This view is supported by a series of measures, all of a marked character, preceding the adoption of the Constitution. As early as the year 1781, Congress recommended it to the States to vest in the United States a power to levy a duty of five per cent. on all goods imported from foreign countries into the United States, for the term of fifteen years. In 1783, this recommendation, with alterations as to the kind of duties, and an extension of this term to twenty-five years, was repeated, and more earnestly urged. In 1784, it was recommended to the States to authorize Congress to prohibit, under certain modifications, the importation of goods from foreign powers into the United States for fifteen years. In 1785, the consideration of the subject was resumed, and a proposition presented in a new form, with an address to the States, explaining fully the principles on which a grant of the power to regulate trade was deemed indispensable. In 1786, a meeting took place at Annapolis, of delegates from several of the States, on this subject, and on their report the convention was formed at Philadelphia, the ensuing year, from all the States, to whose deliberations we are indebted for the present Constitution.

“In none of these measures was the subject of internal improvement mentioned, or even glanced at. Those of 1784, 5, 6, and 7, leading, step by step, to the adoption of the Constitution, had in view only the obtaining of a power to enable Congress to regulate trade with foreign powers. It is manifest that the regulation of trade with the several States was altogether a secondary object, suggested by and adopted in connexion with the other. If the power necessary to this system of improvement is included under either branch of this grant, I should suppose that it was the first rather than the second. The pretension to it, however, under that branch, has never been set up. In support of the claim under the second, no reason has been assigned which appears to have the least weight."

Such is a brief history of the origin, progress, and consequences of a system which for more than thirty years after the adoption of the Constitution was unknown. The greatest embarrassment upon the subject consists in the departure which has taken place from the early construction of the Constitution, and the precedents which are found in the legislation of Congress in later years. President Jackson, in his veto of the Wabash river bill, declares, that "to inherent embarrassments have been added others, from the course of our legislation concerning it." In his vetoes on the Maysville road bill, the Rockville road bill, the Wabash river bill, and other bills of like character, he reversed the precedents which existed prior to that time on the subject of internal improvements. When our experience, observation, and reflection have convinced us that a legislative precedent is either unwise or unconstitutional, it should not be followed.

No express grant of this power is found in the constitution. Its advocates have differed among themselves as to the source from which it is derived as an incident. In the progress of the discussions upon this subject, the power to regulate commerce seems now to be chiefly relied upon, especially in reference to the improvement of harbors and rivers.

In relation to the regulation of commerce, the language of the grant in the constitution is, "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." That to "regulate commerce" does not mean to make a road or dig a canal, or clear out a river, or deepen a harbor, would seem to be obvious to the common understanding. To "regulate" admits or affirms the pre-existence of the thing to be regulated. In this case it pre-supposes the existence of commerce, and of course the means by which and the channels through which commerce is carried on. It confers no creative power; it only assumes control over that which may have been brought into existence through other agencies, such as State legislation, and the industry and enterprise of individuals. If the definition of the word "regulate" is to include the provision of means to carry on commerce, then have Congress not only power to deepen harbors, clear out rivers, dig canals, and make roads, but also to build ships, railroad cars, and other vehicles, all of which are necessary to commerce. There is no middle ground. If the power to regulate can be legitimately construed into a power to create or facilitate, then not only the bays and harbors, but the roads and canals, and all the means of transporting merchandise among the several States, are put at the disposition of Congress. This power to regulate commerce was construed and exercised immediately after the adoption of the constitution, and has been exercised to the present day, by prescribing general rules by which commerce should be conducted. With foreign nations it has been regulated by treaties, defining the rights of citizens and subjects, as well as by acts of Congress imposing duties and restrictions, embracing vessels, seamen, cargoes, and passengers. It has been regulated among the States by acts of Congress relating to the coasting trade, and the vessels employed therein, and for the better security of passengers in vessels propelled by steam, and by the removal of all restrictions upon internal trade. It has been regulated with the Indian tribes by our intercourse laws, prescribing the manner in which it shall be carried on. Thus each branch of this grant of power was exercised soon after the adoption of the constitution, and has continued to be exercised to the present day. If a more extended construction be adopted, it is impossible for the human mind to fix on a limit to the exercise of the power other than the will and discretion of Congress. It sweeps into the vortex of national power and jurisdiction not only harbors and inlets, rivers and little streams, but canals, turnpikes, and railroads—every species of improvement which can facilitate or create trade and intercourse “with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.”

Should any great object of improvement exist in our widely extended country, which cannot be effected by means of tonnage duties, levied by the States, with the concurrence of Congress, it is safer and wiser to apply to the States, in the mode prescribed by the constitution, for an amendment of that instrument, whereby the powers of the general government may be enlarged, with such limitations and restrictions as experience has shown to be proper, than to assume and exercise a power which has not been granted, or which may be regarded as doubtful in the opinion of a large portion of our constituents. This course has been recommended successively by Presidents Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson; and I fully concur with them in opinion. If an enlargement of power should be deemed proper, it will unquestionably be granted by the States; if otherwise, it will be withheld; and, in either case, their decision should be final. In the meantime, I deem it proper to add, that the investigation of this subject has impressed me more strongly than ever with the solemn conviction that the usefulness and permanency of this government, and the happiness of the millions over whom it spreads its protection, will be best promoted by carefully abstaining from the exercise of all powers not clearly granted by the constitution.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1847.

The Speaker announced, as the business first in order, the report of the Select Committee upon the Rules of the House, which was made the special order for Thursday last, and postponed until this day: when,

By the unanimous consent of the House,

Mr. Washington Hunt presented a preamble and resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, in relation to the proposed construction of a railroad from Lake Michigan to the Pacific ocean, in the Territory of Oregon.

Ordered, That the said preamble and resolutions be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and printed.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the said special order, viz: the report upon rules; and the following rule, reported by the said committee on Tuesday last, as a substitute for the 33d rule, as the same existed at the close of last Congress, was read, as follows:

1. It shall be in order to entertain a motion when made, to limit the time which each member may occupy in debating any question in the House or committee, to a period not less than one hour: provided, that where the House has made an order fixing the time for discharging the committee from the further consideration of any bill, or other matter referred to it, (after acting without debate on all amendments pending or that may be offered,) debate by any one member before such order takes effect, may be limited to one-quarter of an hour, and thereafter the member who reported the measure under consideration from any committee, may debate the same for one hour; and any member shall be allowed in committee five minutes to explain the object, nature, and effect of any amendment which he may offer; and all motions made to carry out this rule shall be decided without debate.

The question, first in order, being on agreeing to the following amendment, reported by the said committee yesterday, in place of the foregoing rule, viz:

No member shall occupy more than one hour and a half in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee, may open and close the debate; provided that where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed in committee five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer.

The said amendment was read: when

Mr. Pollock moved to amend the said amendment, by striking out the words "and a half."

And, after debate,

Mr. Isaac E. Holmes, moved, at 1 o'clock and forty-seven minutes, that the House adjourn: which motion was disagreed to; and

Mr. Goggin moved that the said rule under consideration be laid upon the table: which motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the motion made by Mr. Pollock;

And, after debate,

Mr. Brodhead moved the previous question, which was seconded; and the main question was ordered, and put, viz: Will the House agree to the said motion made by Mr. Pollock?

And decided in the affirmative.

And the amendment proposed by the committee yesterday, as thus amended, was then agreed to by the House. And

The question was then put, Shall the said rule be adopted in lieu of the 33d rule of the House as it existed at the close of last Congress?

And decided in the affirmative.

In further proceeding with the said report, the following rule was read, viz.—being rule 2d:

After any bill, resolution, or other matter is entered on the calendar, any member may register his name with the Clerk as intending to debate the same; and when such bill, resolution, or other matter is under consideration, the Speaker or chairman shall call on each member to speak in an order to be settled by lot, under the direction of the Speaker: provided, that the member who reported the same from any committee of the House, may, at his option, open and close the debate.

Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, by direction of the said committee, moved to amend the said report, by striking out the said rule.

So the said rule was stricken out.

The following rule was then read as a part of the said report:

Members may address the House or committee from the Clerk's desk, or from a place near the Speaker's chair.

And the question being put, Will the House agree thereto?

It was decided in the affirmative.

The following rule was then read as a part of the said report, viz:

The Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules of the House, at any time, except on Monday of every week, and except during the last ten days of the session; provided nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter so much of the 133d rule as provides as follows: "The House may, at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, also, for providing for the discharge of the committee from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting, without debate, on all amendments pending, and that may be offered."

Mr. Woodward moved to amend the same, by striking out the words "except during the last ten days of the session," where they now occur in the said rule, and inserting the same at the beginning of the rule; which amendment was agreed to.

And the question was then put on agreeing to the said rule as amended.

And decided in the affirmative.

The following rule was then read as a part of said report, viz:

Whenever the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll of the House to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal.

And the question was put, Will the House agree to the said rule?
And decided in the affirmative.

The following rule was then read as a part of said report, viz:

In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, all business shall be considered and concluded in the order of reference to them by the House, except general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising money or men, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, which may be preferred at the discretion of the committee.

And the question was stated, Will the House agree to the same?
When

Mr. Collamer moved to amend the same, by inserting after the word "the," where it first occurs in the said rule, the words "Whole House and in Committee of the;" and

The question being put, Will the House agree to the said amendment proposed by Mr. Collamer?

It was decided in the affirmative.

And the said rule, as thus amended, was then agreed to by the House.

The following rule was then read as a part of said report, viz:

In addition to the other standing committees of the House, there shall be one called the Smithsonian Committee, whose duty it shall be to superintend the affairs of the Smithsonian Institution.

And, after debate,

Mr. Hilliard moved to postpone the further consideration thereof until this day twelve-month.

Mr. T. Butler King offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Speaker, as soon as practicable after the passage of this resolution, to cause the desks to be removed out of this hall: the seats to remain as they are until some better arrangement can be made, which is confided to him.

The said resolution was read: when

Mr. Hilliard moved to amend the same, by adding thereto the following:

“And that a large table be placed in front of the Clerk’s desk, for the use of the members.”

Mr. King accepted the said amendment: when

Mr. McLane moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table: which motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Cummins,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of repealing so much of the 13th section of the act of the 3d day of March, 1847, entitled “An act to establish certain post routes, and for other purposes,” as prohibits editors and publishers of newspapers from sending their papers to subscribers by mail, free of charge or postage, to the distance of thirty miles from the place of publication; and that said committee report to this House upon that subject at the earliest convenience.

On motion of Mr. Vinton,

On motion of Mr. Dickinson,

Mr. Schenck offered the following resolution, which was read and laid upon the table one day, under the rule, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, at as early a day as practicable, copies of all orders and communications sent by him, or from any department of this government to any officer of the United States, or other person claiming to act under the authority of the United States within or for the territory of New Mexico, together with all replies, reports, or communications from any officer or officers, civil or military, or claiming to be such under the authority of the United States, to the President or to any department of this government, such orders, communications, replies, and reports having relation to the establishment and maintenance of civil or territorial jurisdiction at Santa Fe, or in the territory of New Mexico, or either side of the Rio Grande, since the 22d day of September, 1846; and, also, that the President be requested to inform this House whether any appointments of officers have been made, or any elections held for a delegate to Congress, members of a general assembly or territorial legislature, or other local officers, under the organic law or constitution, and the code of laws which were ordained and established by Brigadier General Stephen W. Kearny, for the territory of New Mexico, at Santa Fe, on the said 22d day of September, 1846; and, also, whether any trials have taken place, and any capital or other punishment been inflicted upon persons at Taos or elsewhere in said territory of New Mexico, on the charge or for the crime of treason, or for any other civil crime or misdemeanor, whether such trials and executions were had or inflicted under civil or military law, and how the court or courts were constituted which entertained jurisdiction, or rendered judgment in any such case; and, also, that the President inform this House whether the appointment of a governor, secretary of the territory, marshal, United States district attorney, treasurer, and judges of the superior court in New Mexico, made by General Kearny on the 22d day of September, 1846, and claimed by him in the order of said appointment, as "being duly authorized by the President of the United States of America," was in fact authorized by him, or has been since approved, sanctioned, or authorized, and whether he has authorized, recognized, sanctioned, or approved any subsequent appointment to civil office in said territory of New Mexico; and, also, that the President inform this House whether compensation or salaries for official services have been paid or allowed to such civil officers in the territory of New Mexico, and if so, out of what fund or appropriation of money, and by what authority of law.

On motion of Mr. Wick,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency and necessity of legislation to secure bounty land to such volunteers as, since the existence of the present war with Mexico, have been mustered into the service as non-commissioned officers, musicians, or privates, notwithstanding that they may have been subsequently promoted to company or regimental officers.

On motion of Mr. La Sère,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into, and report upon, the necessity of augmenting the number of inspectors of the customs for the port of New Orleans.

On motion of Mr. Harmanson,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and is, hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the port of New Orleans to the upper limits of the city of Lafayette.

Mr. Thibodeaux gave notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill relating to the collection district of New Orleans, and for other purposes.

Mr. Pettit offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That if in the judgment of Congress it be necessary to improve the navigation of a river, to expedite and render secure the movements of our army, and save from delay and loss our arms and munitions of war, then Congress has the power to improve such river.

Resolved, If it be necessary for the preservation of the lives of our seamen, repairs, safety, or maintenance of our vessels of war, to improve a harbor or inlet, either on our Atlantic or lake coast, Congress has the power to make such appropriations.

The said resolutions were read; when

Mr. Pettit moved the previous question.

Mr. Sims moved that the said resolutions be laid upon the table.

Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll called for a division of the question.

Objection being raised to a division of the question,

The Speaker decided that the resolutions were distinct and separate propositions, and that, under the express rule of the House, any member might call for a division of them. He thought it was not too late for such a call; and that, the resolutions being divided, the motion to lie on the table would apply to them separately.

From that decision Mr. Sims appealed.

And the question was put, Shall the decision of the Chair stand, as the judgment of the House,

And decided in the negative.

So the decision of the Chair was reversed, and the question was decided not to be divisible.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question; when

Mr. Sims moved that the said resolutions be laid upon the table.

And the question being put,

It was decided in the negative, { Yeas 70

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, December 22, 1847.

On motion of Mr. T. Butler King,

Ordered, That the said message be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and printed.

Mr. Lincoln offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States, in his message of May 11, 1846, has declared that "the Mexican government not only refused to receive him" (the envoy of the United States) "or listen to his propositions, but, after a long continued series of menaces, have at last invaded our territory, and shed the blood of our fellow-citizens on our own soil."

And again, in his message of December 8, 1846, that "we had ample cause of war against Mexico, long before the breaking out of hostilities; but even then we forbore to take redress into our own hands, until Mexico herself became the aggressor, by invading our soil in hostile array, and shedding the blood of our citizens:"

And yet again, in his message of December 7, 1847, that "the Mexican government refused even to hear the terms of adjustment which he" (our minister of peace) "was authorized to propose; and finally, under wholly unjustifiable prettexts, involved the two countries in war, by invading the territory of the State of Texas, striking the first blow, and shedding the blood of our citizens on our own soil."

And whereas this House desires to obtain a full knowledge of all the facts which go to establish whether the particular spot of soil on which the blood of our citizens was so shed was, or was not, our own soil, at that time: therefore,

Resolved, by the House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to inform this House,

First. Whether the spot of soil on which the blood of our citizens was shed, as in his messages declared, was, or was not, within the territories of Spain, at least from the treaty of 1819 until the Mexican revolution.

Second. Whether that spot is, or is not, within the territory which was wrested from Spain by the Mexican revolution.

Third. Whether that spot is, or is not, within a settlement of people, which settlement had existed ever since long before the Texas revolution, until its inhabitants fled from the approach of the United States army.

Fourth. Whether that settlement is, or is not, isolated from any and all other settlements, by the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio Grande on the south and west, and by wide uninhabited regions on the north and east.

Fifth. Whether the people of that settlement, or a majority of them, or any of them, had ever, previous to the bloodshed mentioned in his message, submitted themselves to the government or laws of Texas, or of the United States, by consent, or by compulsion, either by accepting office, or voting at elections, or paying taxes, or serving on juries, or having process served upon them, or in any other way.

Sixth. Whether the people of that settlement did, or did not, flee from the approach of the United States army, leaving unprotected their homes and their growing crops, before the blood was shed, as in his messages stated; and whether the first blood so shed was, or was not, shed within the inclosure of the people, or some of them, who had thus fled from it.

Seventh. Whether our citizens, whose blood was shed, as in his messages declared, were, or were not, at that time, armed officers and soldiers, sent into that settlement by the military order of the President, through the Secretary of War; and,

Eighth. Whether the military force of the United States, including those citizens, was, or was not, so sent into that settlement after General Taylor had, more than once, intimated to the War Department that, in his opinion, no such movement was necessary to the defence or protection of Texas.

And then the said resolutions were laid over, under the rule.

It was decided in the affirmative—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The said resolution was read;

And the question being put, Shall the rules be suspended for the purpose aforesaid?

It was decided in the affirmative—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. Jones accordingly offered his said resolution: when

Mr. Cocke moved to amend the same, by striking out the words "Secretary of War," and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner of Pensions."

Mr. Jones moved the previous question, which was seconded; and the main question was ordered and put, viz: "Will the House agree to the said amendment moved by Mr. Cocke?"

And decided in the negative. And

The said resolution, as offered by Mr. Jones, was then agreed to by the House.

Mr. Richard W. Thompson, from the Committee on Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to, viz:

Mr. Hudson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into the expediency of requesting the President of the United States to withdraw to the east bank of the Rio Grande our armies now in Mexico, and to propose to the Mexican government, forthwith, a treaty of peace on the following basis, viz:

That we relinquish all claim to indemnity for the expenses of the war, and that the boundary between the United States and Mexico shall be established at or near the desert between the Nueces and the Rio Grande; that Mexico shall be held to pay all just claims due to our citizens at the commencement of the war; and that a convention shall be entered into by the two nations to provide for the liquidation of those claims, and the mode of payment.

The said resolution was read: when

Mr. Hudson moved the previous question, which was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. Stephens moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Howell Cobb raised the following question of order: That a motion to lay upon the table was not in order after the previous question had been ordered.

The Speaker decided, that the uniform practice of the House, for many years past, confirmed upon repeated appeals, left him no alternative but to pronounce the motion in order.

From this decision Mr. Cobb appealed.

And the question being put, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. Dickey offered the following preamble and joint resolution; which were read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule:

Whereas, in the prosecution of the war with Mexico, a state of things now exists which threatens the very existence of her nationality, and may be made to react upon the institutions of our own beloved country, creating a domestic conflict about the disposition of the territory that may be acquired, either by conquest or purchase, that may rend asunder this glorious Union.

And whereas, war is at all times a great evil, always to be avoided, when it can be done with honor, and always to be terminated whenever it can be done with justice to both belligerents.

And whereas, in the prosecution of the war with Mexico the United States has sacrificed the lives of thousands of her citizens, either by disease or on the field of battle, has expended all her revenues, and contracted a debt of many millions of dollars.

And whereas, if further prosecuted with a view of obtaining "indemnity for the past and security for the future," it will cost us millions upon millions of money, thousands upon thousands of valuable lives, and requiring increased taxation to sustain the credit of the government; and all that we shall get in return for this sacrifice of life and expenditure of money and taxation of the people will be the jurisdiction, either civil or military, of the territories conquered, and the revenues and public property belonging to the government of Mexico.

And whereas, as by the law of nations we cannot appropriate the property of private citizens of Mexico, by way of indemnity, and may realize nothing from territory which we may acquire from Mexico, the sooner the war is brought to an honorable termination the better it will be for the people of the United States, who have to bear all its burdens.

And whereas the people of the United States, from the nature of their pursuits, must desire a state of peace, rather than military strife and violence; the agriculturist, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the laborer, the merchant, the man of science, of literature, of law, of medicine, and the teacher of the divine precepts of our holy religion—all of whose occupations are peaceful—must desire that the war with Mexico be terminated, at the earliest period that it can be accomplished with honor and with justice; therefore,

Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the United States, (the Senate concurring,) That a committee of five members of the Senate, and five members of the House of Representatives, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to invite a conference with the President of the United States, to advise and consult upon the best mode of terminating the existing war with Mexico, in a manner honorable and just to both belligerents; and that the committee report to each House, respectively, the result of the conference, either in open or secret session, as may be by them deemed advisable.

On motion of Mr. Brodhead,

On motion of Mr. Blanchard,

Mr. Joseph R. Ingersoll gave notice of a motion for leave to offer an amendment to the rules of the House, by adding thereto the following, as one of the standing rules:

“Resolved, That, from and after the passage of this resolution, it shall not be in order to entertain a motion to lay upon the table after a second to the previous question, notwithstanding any practice or precedents to the contrary.”

On motion of Mr. Charles Brown,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of relieving vessels, exclusively engaged in the coasting trade, from the necessity of taking out an annual license, and from other exactions now required by law.

Mr. Moses Hampton gave notice of a motion for leave to introduce a joint resolution, providing for the admission of Mexican territory into the American Union, as States or Territories.

On motion of Mr. Van Dyke,

Resolved, That the papers in the case of William A. Duer, administrator of William Duer, deceased, be withdrawn from the files of the House.

Mr. John L. Robinson, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee did this day present to the President of the United States a bill (No. 6) entitled “An act making an appropriation to supply, in part, a deficiency in the appropriations for subsistence, in kind, of the army and volunteers, during the year ending the 30th June, 1848.”

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. John W. Houston asked, obtained leave, and introduced a joint resolution (No. 4) of thanks to Major General Taylor: which was read a first and second time; when

Mr. Schenck moved that the said resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Henley moved to amend the said motion of Mr. Schenck, by adding thereto the following: "with instructions to insert in the said resolution the following: 'engaged as they were, in defending the rights and honor of the country.'"

Mr. Ashmun moved to amend the said proposed instructions, by adding at the end of the same the following: "in a war unnecessarily and unconstitutionally begun by the President of the United States."

And the question was put, Will the House agree to the amendment offered by Mr. Ashmun,

And decided in the affirmative, { Yeas 82

Ordered, That the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, offered by Mr. Goggin on the 20th December last:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House any instructions which may have been given to any of the officers of the army or navy of the United States, or other persons, in regard to the return of President General Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, or any other Mexican, to the republic of Mexico, prior or subsequent to the order of the President or Secretary of War, issued in January, 1846, for the march of the army from the Nueces river, across the "stupendous deserts" which intervene, to the Rio Grande; that the date of all such instructions, orders, and correspondence, be set forth, together with the instructions and orders issued to Mr. Slidell, at any time, prior or subsequent to his departure for Mexico, as minister plenipotentiary of the United States to that republic.

The said resolution was again read: and

The question was stated, Will the House agree thereto; when

Mr. Jamieson moved that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs: which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. McLane moved to amend the said resolution, by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided that said orders, instructions, and correspondence, have not been heretofore furnished to Congress by the President."

Thereupon,

Mr. Goggin, at the suggestion of Mr. Jacob Thompson, modified his said resolution, by adding at the end thereof the following: "Resolved, further, That the President be requested to communicate all the orders and correspondence of the government in relation to the return of General Paredes to Mexico."

Mr. Goggin moved the previous question, which was seconded; and the previous question was stated, viz: "Shall the main question be now put?" when

Mr. Kaufman moved, at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes, that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to.

The previous question was then put, viz: "Shall the main question be now put?"

So the House decided that the main question should be now put.

Mr. George S. Houston moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table; when,

The hour "devoted to reports from committees, and resolutions," having expired,

Mr. Howell Cobb moved that the House proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, and to the orders of the day.

Mr. Hammons moved, at 5 minutes before 4 o'clock, p. m., that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to: and

The question was then put, Will the House agree to the motion made by Mr. Cobb?

And decided in the negative.

The House having refused to proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, and to the orders of the day,

The consideration of the said resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Goggin again recurred; and

The question was put, Will the House agree to the motion made by Mr. George S. Houston, that the said resolution be laid upon the table?

And decided in the negative.

The main question was then stated, viz: 1st. Will the House agree to the amendment proposed by Mr. McLane? when

Mr. McLane proposed to modify his said amendment by adding thereto the following: "and that the same is not incompatible with the public interest."

A question being raised whether any modification of the amendment was in order at this stage of the proceedings,

The Speaker stated that he was not aware of any thing in the rules and orders of the House which prevented a member from withdrawing or modifying his own proposition at any time before a decision or amendment. The rule to this effect was express as to the power of withdrawing, and he had always regarded the right to modify as an incident to the right to withdraw. He, therefore, decided the proposed modification would be in order.

From this decision Mr. Toombs appealed.

And the question was stated, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? when

Mr. Kauffman moved, at 4 o'clock and ten minutes, that the House adjourn: which motion was disagreed to.

The question was then put, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. James G. Hampton, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined an enrolled bill of the Senate (No. 46) entitled "An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the barque Canton," and found the same truly enrolled: when

The Speaker signed the said bill.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Dickins, their Secretary:

Mr. Speaker: The Senate have passed bills of the following titles, viz:

No. 49. An act for the relief of W. B. Slaughter, late Secretary of the Territory of Wisconsin; and

No. 54. An act exempting vessels employed by the American Colonization Society in transporting colored emigrants from the United States to the coast of Africa, from the provisions of the acts of the 22d of February and the 2d of March, 1847, regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels;

in which I am directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

And then he withdrew.

By general consent,

The message from the President of the United States, received yesterday, was read, and is as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I have carefully considered the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th instant, requesting the President to communicate to that House "any instructions which may have been given to any of the officers of the army or navy of the United States, or other persons, in regard to the return of President General Lopez de Santa Anna, or any other Mexican, to the republic of Mexico prior or subsequent to the order of the President or Secretary of War, issued in January, 1846, for the march of the army from the Nueces river, across the 'stupendous deserts' which intervene, to the Rio Grande; that the date of all such instructions, orders, and correspondence be set forth, together with the instructions and orders issued to Mr. Slidell at any time prior or subsequent to his departure for Mexico as minister plenipotentiary of the United States to that republic;" and requesting the President also to "communicate all the orders and correspondence of the government in relation to the return of General Paredes to Mexico."

I transmit herewith reports from the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, with the documents accompanying the same, which contain all the information in the possession of the executive which it is deemed compatible with the public interests to communicate.

For further information relating to the return of Santa Anna to Mexico, I refer you to my annual message of December 8, 1846. The facts and considerations stated in that message induced the order of the Secretary of the Navy to the commander of our squadron in the Gulf of Mexico, a copy of which is herewith communicated. This order was issued simultaneously with the order to blockade the coasts of Mexico, both bearing date the 13th of May, 1846, the day on which the existence of the war with Mexico was recognised by Congress. It was issued solely upon the views of policy presented in that message, and without any understanding on the subject, direct or indirect, with Santa Anna or any other person.

General Paredes evaded the vigilance of our combined forces by land and sea, and made his way back to Mexico from the exile into which he had been driven, landing at Vera Cruz after that city and the castle of San Juan de Ulloa were in our military occupation, as will appear from the accompanying reports and documents.

The resolution calls for the "instructions and orders issued to Mr. Slidell, at any time prior or subsequent to his departure for Mexico, as minister plenipotentiary of the United States to that republic." The customary and usual reservation contained in calls of either House of Congress upon the Executive for information, relating to our intercourse with foreign nations, has been omitted in the resolution before me. The call of the House is unconditional. It is, that the information requested be communicated, and thereby be made public, whether, in the opinion of the Executive, (who is charged by the constitution with the duty of conducting negotiations with foreign powers,) such information, when disclosed, would be prejudicial to the public interest or not. It has been a subject of serious deliberation with me whether I could, consistently with my constitutional duty and my sense of the public interests involved and to be affected by it, violate an important principle, always heretofore held sacred by my predecessors, as I should do by a compliance with the request of the House. President Washington, in a message to the House of Representatives of the 30th of March, 1796, declined to comply with a request contained in a resolution of that body, to lay before them "a copy of the instructions to the minister of the United States who negotiated the treaty with the King of Great Britain," "together with the correspondence and other documents relative to the said treaty, excepting such of the said papers as any existing negotiations may render improper to be disclosed." In assigning his reasons for declining to comply with the call, he declared that "the nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and, even when brought to a conclusion, a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, and eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated, would be extremely impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers. The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate—the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the House of Representatives to demand, and to have, as a matter of course, all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power, would be to establish a dangerous precedent." In that case, the instructions and documents called for related to a treaty which had been concluded and ratified by the President and Senate, and the negotiations in relation to it had been terminated. There was an express reservation, too, "excepting" from the call all such papers as related to "any existing negotiations" which it might be improper to disclose. In that case, President Washington deemed it to be a violation of an important principle, the establishment of a "dangerous precedent," and prejudicial to the public interests, to comply with the call of the House. Without deeming it to be necessary on the present occasion to examine or decide upon the other reasons assigned by him for his refusal to communicate the information requested by the House, the one which is herein recited is in my judgment conclusive in the case under consideration.

Indeed, the objections to complying with the request of the House contained in the resolution before me, are much stronger than those which existed in the case of the resolution in 1796. This resolution calls for the "instructions and orders" to the minister of the United States to Mexico, which relate to negotiations which have not been terminated, and which may be resumed. The information called for respects negotiations which the United States offered to open with Mexico immediately preceding the commencement of the existing war. The instructions given to the minister of the United States relate to the differences between the two countries out of which the war grew, and the terms of adjustment which we were prepared to offer to Mexico in our anxiety to prevent the war. These differences still remain unsettled; and to comply with the call of the House would be to make public, through that channel, and to communicate to Mexico, now a public enemy engaged in war, information which could not fail to produce serious embarrassment in any future negotiation between the two countries. I have heretofore communicated to Congress all the correspondence of the minister of the United States to Mexico which, in the existing state of our relations with that republic can, in my judgment, bear this time communicated without serious injury to the public interest.

Entertaining this conviction, and with a sincere desire to furnish any information which may be in possession of the executive department, and which either House of Congress may at any time request, I regard it to be my constitutional right and my solemn duty, under the circumstances of this case, to decline a compliance with the request of the House contained in their resolution.

On motion of Mr. George W. Jones,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of providing, by law, that it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to arrange and class the service hereafter to be required of the railroad companies, including those in which the service is partly by steamboats, in the transportation of the United States mails, into four classes, according to the size of the mails, the speed and frequency with which the mails are or shall be required to be conveyed, and the importance of the service; and it shall be lawful for him to contract for carrying the mail with any such railroad company, or any steamboat company, or any railroad and steamboat company, either with or without advertising for such contracts:

Provided, That for the first class service, in conveying the mail on any railroad, he shall not pay a higher rate of compensation than two hundred dollars per mile per annum; nor for second class service, on any railroad, a greater compensation than one hundred and fifty dollars per mile per annum; nor for third class service, on any railroad, a greater compensation than one hundred dollars per mile per annum; nor for fourth class service, on any railroad, a greater compensation than fifty dollars per mile per annum; nor for carrying the mail on steamboats, or on the steamboat portion of a railroad and steamboat route, a greater compensation than above specified for the several classes, less twelve and one-half per cent.; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. James H. Thomas,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing, by law, for the payment, to the widows, heirs, or legal representatives, of such volunteers in the Mexican war who may have been killed in battle, or died before the end of their term of service, the same pay as they would have received had they served their full time for which they entered the service; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. Cummins offered the following resolution; which was read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule:

Resolved, That, by the Constitution of the United States, the power is conferred upon Congress to appropriate the money of the United States for the construction of such works of internal improvement as are necessary for the national defence, and for the safety and preservation of the military marine of the country, which works may incidentally be used for the advancement and protection of commerce, so far as the same are suitable for that purpose.

Resolved, That, by the Constitution of the United States, the power is not conferred upon Congress to appropriate the money of the United States for the construction of works of internal improvement, within the limits of any State in the confederacy, the object of which work is for the regulation of commerce only, and not for national defence; but such power, when assumed and exercised by Congress, is derived, not from a faithful construction of the Constitution itself, nor from its letter or spirit, but by a latitudinarian construction of that instrument, and an unwarranted implication of power, dangerous alike in principle and in practice.

Resolved, That the example of those States which have engaged in an indiscriminate and combined system of internal improvements, has clearly proved the dangerous tendencies and corrupting influences of such a policy, and which should admonish the national legislature not to impose upon the people of the United States an onerous public debt, involve their government in hopeless bankruptcy, and subject the halls of legislation to unscrupulous demands and corrupting appliances for a partial distribution of the national revenues, to be expended for local and selfish purposes, which are the necessary consequences of such a system.

Resolved, That no appropriation should be made by Congress for any improvement which is not, of itself, separately considered, of sufficient national importance to entitle it to the favorable consideration of the national legislature.

Resolved, That, to defray the current expenses of the government, and for the vigorous and successful prosecution of the existing war with Mexico, all the revenues and means of the United States are necessary; and the same ought not to be diverted or appropriated to objects of less importance, or doubtful expediency, until an honorable peace is obtained.

Mr. Sawyer gave notice that he would ask leave to introduce a bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands to actual settlers, and for other purposes.

Mr. Crowell offered the following resolution; which was read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform this House if any secret inspectors, or any additional inspectors have been appointed in New Hampshire within the last three years; and if any have been so appointed, what was the occasion of such appointment; and, also, the places where they reside, the duties they have performed since their appointment, and the compensation they have severally received, and at what times; also, to lay before the House copies of any letters received at the Treasury Department representing the necessity of such appointment, and, also, copies of the accounts of any such inspector, if any have been so appointed.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Taylor asked, obtained leave, and introduced a bill (No. 81) to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office.

Mr. Giddings offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, on Friday last, three armed persons engaged in the internal slave trade, entered a dwelling in this city and violently seized a colored man, employed as a waiter in the boarding-house of several members of this body, and in the presence of his wife gagged him, placed him in irons, and with loaded pistols forced him into one of the slave prisons of this city, from which, it is reported, he has since been despatched for the slave market at New Orleans;

And whereas said colored man had been employed in said boarding-house for several years, had become well and favorably known to members of this House, had married a wife in this city, and under a contract to purchase his freedom for the sum of three hundred dollars, had by great industry paid that sum within about sixty dollars;

And whereas outrages like the foregoing have been of common occurrence in this district, and are sanctioned by the laws of Congress, and are extremely painful to many of the members of this House, as well as in themselves inhuman: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of five members be appointed to inquire into and report upon the facts aforesaid; also, as to the propriety of repealing such acts of Congress as sustain or authorize the slave trade in this district, or to remove the seat of government to some free State.

The said resolution was read: when

Mr. Giddings moved the previous question.

Mr. Gayle moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question: when Mr. Jamieson moved to reconsider the vote by which the House had refused to lay the said resolution on the table.

Mr. Giddings modified his said resolution by inserting after the word "whereas," where it first occurs in the said preamble, the words "it is represented that;" and by striking out the following words at the end of the said resolution: "or to remove the seat of government to some free State."

The said preamble and resolution were read as modified: when Mr. Haralson moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

When, upon inquiry,

The Speaker decided, that as the resolution had been modified by the mover, another resolution to lay on the table was now in order without any reconsideration of the previous vote, and that the motion to reconsider would, therefore, fall; and the question would be on laying the resolution on the table.

The question was then put on agreeing to the motion made by Mr. Haralson that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

Whereas, in the judgment of this House, the people of the United States, by the terms of the Constitution and the genius of our government, are sovereign, and that with them, through their Representatives in Congress, rests the question of war, one of the highest attributes of sovereignty:

And whereas the people, as sovereign and as payers of the expenses in money and in blood, have a right at all times and under all circumstances to know what specific object is proposed to be accomplished by a war prosecuted in their name and at their cost:

And whereas the people have not, in due constitutional form, through their Representatives in Congress, declared war against the republic of Mexico, nor declared for what specific object the same shall be prosecuted:

And whereas millions of the people's money have been expended, an onerous debt incurred, and thousands of valuable lives sacrificed in the prosecution of the existing war with Mexico, it is incumbent on those public functionaries who projected and are directing the said war to communicate to this House, for the information of the true sovereign, the people, the specific object to be accomplished by the prosecution of the war with Mexico, and specifically the means by which the object is to be accomplished: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested, if in his opinion it will not conflict with the public interests, to inform this House what specific object he proposes to accomplish by the prosecution of the war with Mexico, and, specifically, by what means he proposes the accomplishment of the object; and,

First. Whether or not it is his object and design to subjugate the whole of the Mexican people, and to conquer and hold the whole of the Mexican territory, or, any portion of the said people, or any part of the said territory, and what portion and what part?

Second. In the event of subjugation and conquest, partial or entire, what does he propose to do with the people subjugated and the territory conquered and held? Is it his object and design to organize governments there? If so, what kind and character of government shall be vouchsafed to the subjugated Mexicans, civil or military, republican or otherwise, territorial merely, or as free States, to be admitted into this Union?

Third. What rights, civil and political, are to be extended to the subjugated Mexicans? Is it intended to guarantee to them the right of suffrage and representation in the Congress of the United States?

Fourth. Is it intended to despoil the Mexican churches or churchmen of their property or estates, or to levy contributions on either, to aid in paying the expenses of subjugating the Mexican people?

Fifth. Is it intended, in the event of conquest, that the titles of individuals to land in the conquered territory shall be respected? And,

Sixth. What proportion of the fertile and valuable land situated within the territory proposed to be conquered and held is unappropriated to individual claimants or owners?

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1848.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dickins, their Secretary:

Mr. Speaker: The President of the United States has notified the Senate that he did on the 31st instant approve and sign a bill and resolution of the following titles:

S. No. 54. An act exempting vessels employed by the American Colonization Society in transporting colored emigrants from the United States to the coast of Africa, from the provisions of the acts of the 22d February and 2d March, 1847, regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels.

S. No. 2. A resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a monument to George Washington.

The Senate have passed a bill (No. 121) "An act to pay to James Crutchett two thousand dollars for lighting the Capitol and Capitol grounds; and

An act (No. 124) to extend the provisions of existing pension laws to enlisted men of the ordnance corps of the United States army;

in which I am directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

And then he withdrew.

Mr. Rhett, by the unanimous consent of the House, proceeded to make an explanation personal to himself; and while so doing,

Mr. Caleb B. Smith raised the question of order, that the House, by unanimous consent, permitted the gentleman from South Carolina to make a personal explanation, and that he, abusing the courtesy of the House, is reaffirming his former positions, and supporting those positions by argument; whereas a personal explanation can alone consist in correcting a misstatement of fact, which imputes motives, or arguments, or positions to a gentleman, which, not being corrected, would be injurious to his standing as a gentleman or his character as a public man.

The Speaker said, that the gentleman was speaking by the unanimous consent of the House; there was no question before the House; and the remarks of the gentleman could hardly be objected to on the score of irrelevancy. The gentleman from South Carolina had received permission to say whatever he might deem necessary to an explanation of his personal course; and as long as he confined himself to the general subject of the charges which had been brought against him, and avoided personalities, the Chair could perceive no ground for arresting his remarks. Permissions to make personal explanations had always been subject to abuse, and the only remedy would be, for the House to make some specific rule in regard to them. It had been uniformly decided by his predecessor, that the Chair could not undertake to decide as to what any gentleman might think necessary to a personal explanation. The Speaker, therefore, overruled the point of order.

From this decision Mr. Smith appealed.

Mr. Stephens moved that the appeal be laid upon the table.

And the question being put,

It was decided in the affirmative; and

Mr. Rhett then proceeded and concluded his explanation.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1848.

Mr. John B. Thompson, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred, on the 3d of January last, the resolution relative to the printing of extra copies of a report communicated by Colonel J. J. Abert to the Senate, on the 13th December last, made a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution, viz:

"Resolved, That five thousand extra copies of Colonel J. J. Abert's report, which was communicated on the 13th December last, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of 17th January, 1847, be printed for the use of this House."

The said resolution was read; when

Mr. McClelland moved to amend it, by adding at the end thereof the following: "and that two hundred and fifty of the said extra copies be for the use of the Topographical Bureau:" which amendment was agreed to.

And the question was then put, Will the House agree to the said resolution?

And decided in the affirmative.

Mr. Hunt gave notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Abraham Hogeboom.

The House then resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on Tuesday last, providing for the reference of the annual message of the President of the United States to committees.

The question being on the amendment thereto moved by Mr. Howell Cobb, viz: insert in the said eighth resolution, after personal, the words "and other."

And, after debate, Mr. Vinton moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered and put, viz:

“Will the House agree to the said amendment moved by Mr. Cobb?”

And decided in the affirmative.

The resolution was amended accordingly; and

The question recurred on agreeing to the said resolutions as amended; when

A division of the question, so as to take the question separately on each of the said resolutions, being demanded, it was divided accordingly, and the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh of the said resolutions were severally read and agreed to.

The question was then stated, Will the House agree to the eighth of the said resolutions?

A division of the question upon that resolution was demanded; and

The question was put, Will the House agree to the first clause of the said resolution? which was read as follows:

“Eighth. That so much of said message as relates to the revenue; to the public debt—to the increase thereof; to the creation of a sinking fund; to a duty on tea and coffee; to the collection, safe keeping, and disbursement of the public moneys; to the coinage, and the establishment of a branch mint at the city of New York; to the amendment of the sub-treasury act; to the estimated expenditures of the government, be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means;”

And decided in the affirmative.

The residue of the said eighth resolution was then read as follows, viz:

“And that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of raising annually, during the continuance of the war with Mexico, and until the payment of the public debt, the sum of ‘five millions’ of dollars, to be assessed on personal and other property, stocks, and money at interest, and apportioned among the several States, as provided by the Constitution;”

And the question being put, Will the House agree thereto?

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1848.

In pursuance of the resolution of the House of the 4th instant, Mr. Richard W. Thompson, Mr. Shepherd, Mr. Albert G. Brown, Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Barrow, Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, Mr. Cranston, Mr. Charles E. Stuart, and Mr. Kellogg, were appointed the select committee on so much of the President's annual message as declares that it may become proper for our commanding generals in the field to give encouragement and assurances of protection to such friends of peace in Mexico as will establish a government there, able and willing to conclude a peace with us, and secure to us the indemnity we demand.

In pursuance of the resolution of the House of the same date, Mr. Stephens, Mr. Ashmun, Mr. McDowell, Mr. Collamer, Mr. Burt, Mr. Caleb B. Smith, Mr. Morehead, Mr. Jenkins, and Mr. Crowell, were appointed the select committee on so much of the President's annual message as relates to the manner in which the war with Mexico ought to be prosecuted, and the policy that should be pursued in respect thereto.

The Speaker announced, as the business first in order, resolutions from the several States and the Territory of Wisconsin, and commenced the call with the State of Virginia, where he had left off on the last resolution day.

On motion of Mr. Goggin,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into, and report, to what extent and in what respects the franking privilege of the members of this House has been restricted, by recent decisions of the Postmaster General, or any of his assistants or deputies; and whether any, and, if so, what further legislation is necessary to give effect to existing laws upon that subject.

Mr. Chapman offered the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the tobacco trade of the United States with the different countries of Europe, and the duties and restrictions imposed upon this branch of American commerce; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The said resolution was read; when

Mr. Chapman moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered and put, and the said resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Crisfield,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Princess Anne, in Somerset county, Maryland, by Kingston, to Jefferson's corner, in said county.

On motion of Mr. Chapman,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of building a light-house on Blackstone's island, in the Potomac river.

Mr. Strohm offered the following resolution and preamble; which were read, and the said resolution was laid upon the table one day, under the rule.

Whereas it is extremely desirable that the peaceful relations heretofore subsisting between the United States of America and the republic of Mexico should be restored, as soon as the existing difficulties between the two countries can be adjusted upon principles of common justice and in conformity with the law of nations:

And whereas experience has demonstrated that the conquest of armies, the capture of cities, and the occupation of territory in the enemy's country, are inadequate to accomplish the great object which the peace loving citizens of both countries so ardently desire:

And whereas in the opinion of many, the cheapest, easiest, speediest, and most effectual way of procuring an honorable and permanent peace, would be to withdraw our armies from the territories of Mexico, and propose commissioners to negotiate a treaty:

And whereas it is the duty of Congress to make ample provision for the security, pay, subsistence, and comfort, of the brave men who now compose our armies in Mexico, and who have so gallantly defended the flag of their country; therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to make and report to this House an estimate of the amount of money that may be necessary to withdraw our troops, now in Mexico, to some point or points within our own undisputed territory, discharge and send home the volunteers, and sustain the regular army during the ensuing year.

Resolved, That if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the safety of the army in carrying out the policy above indicated, should it be adopted, will require an additional number of men, either by filling up deficiencies in existing regiments or by new levies, he shall report the number of men, and the character of the troops, which he may deem necessary, together with an estimate of the cost of raising, transporting, and subsisting such additional troops for one year, or for such period as he may judge that their services may be required, less than one year.

On motion of Mr. Alexander Evans,

Resolved, That the pay of John P. Gaines, a member of this House, be allowed from the first day of the session, he having been prevented by unavoidable causes from reaching Washington, on his passage from Mexico, until some days thereafter.

On motion of Mr. Pollock,

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the provisions of the act of Congress of June 7, 1832, (granting pensions, &c.) to the officers and soldiers, &c., who have served during the Indian campaigns under Generals Clarke, St. Clair, Harmer, and Wayne; also, to the officers and soldiers of the late war with Great Britain, not otherwise provided for.

On motion of Mr. Joseph R. Ingersoll,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the 30th section of the act of Congress of 1789, (September 24,) to establish the judicial courts of the United States as authorizes the taking of depositions without notice to the adverse party; and of extending the privilege of American vessels to all foreign vessels transferred by judicial sales, under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, to a citizen of the United States; and of providing a place of deposit for the bonds of clerks of courts of the United States; and of abolishing custom-house oaths: and of prohibiting executions of criminals in public; and of altering the time of holding the circuit and other courts of the United States for the southern district of New York; and of regulating costs in courts of admiralty; and of so modifying the judiciary system of the United States as to facilitate the despatch of business, without impairing the vigor or wisdom of the administration of justice.

Mr. Joseph R. Ingersoll offered the following resolution; which was read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House on what articles embraced in the tariff act of 1846 the duties can be increased beyond the existing rates, so as to augment the revenue; and to what extent the said duties can be increased; and what additional revenue would accrue therefrom.

On motion of Mr. Strong,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national foundry in the city of Reading, county of Berks, and State of Pennsylvania.

On motion of Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll,

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means inquire, and report to this House, whether it would not increase the commerce between France and the United States, the duties from impost in the United States, and the advantage of both countries, to reduce the present American duties on French wines, brandies, silks, jewels, and other French productions, taxed as luxuries; and whether the said French productions should not be treated as necessary to enable France to pay for a greater than her present purchase of American cotton, rice, provisions, tobacco, and other American productions.

Mr. James Thompson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the words of the amendment offered, and adopted by the House, to the resolution of thanks to Major General Taylor, on the 3d day of January, 1848, containing the words "that the war (namely, with Mexico) was unnecessarily and unconstitutionally begun by the President," is untrue in fact, calculated to prevent a peace with Mexico on the basis of indemnity, and should be rescinded.

The resolution was read; when

Mr. Thompson moved the previous question.

Mr. Ashmun moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Burt moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union: which motion was not agreed to.

And the question was then put, Shall the said resolution be laid upon the table.

H. R. No. 142. An act to confirm the boundary line between Missouri and Arkansas, and found the same truly enrolled; when

The Speaker signed the said bills.

On motion of Mr. Andrew Stewart,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pension of Thomas Thompson, of Pennsylvania.

On motion of Mr. McIlvaine,

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of organizing a territorial government in the Indian country west of the Mississippi, to which the Indians have been removed by this government; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. Brady,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill providing that, in cases where soldiers, who have been discharged from the service of the United States on account of disease or disability, have applied, or may hereafter apply, for bounty land or treasury scrip; under the act of 11th of February, 1847, that the discharge shall be deemed sufficient evidence that the disease or disability was incurred in the service, unless the contrary shall appear.

On motion of Mr. Butler,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national foundry at some suitable place within the 11th congressional district, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Newall offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read, and the said resolution was agreed to:

Whereas the late Hon. Samuel G. Wright, member elect to the 29th Congress from the second congressional district of New Jersey, died previous to the first session of that body, and his death not heretofore announced: therefore,

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to cause a monument to be erected to his memory in the congressional burying ground; and to transmit a copy of this resolution to the family of the deceased.

Mr. Murphy offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read, and the resolution was agreed to:

Whereas, by an act entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of the public money," approved June 23, 1836, the surplus in the treasury of the United States on the 1st of January, 1837, reserving five millions of dollars, was directed to be deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury with the several States on receiving certificates of deposits therefor, signed by their treasurers or other competent authorities, and expressing the usual and legal obligations, and pledging the faith of the State for the safe keeping and repayment thereof, and for paying the said moneys and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same should be required by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public treasury; in pursuance of which act, the sum of twenty-eight millions one hundred and one thousand six hundred and forty-four dollars ninety-one cents was deposited with the several States;

And whereas the moneys so deposited are required for the purpose of defraying the wants of the public treasury, and sound policy dictates the propriety of avoiding a large public debt, which otherwise must accrue: therefore, be it

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to call for the repayment of the moneys of the United States deposited with the States, according to the pledged faith of the States, in the manner designated by the said act of June 23, 1836.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dickins, their Secretary:

Mr. Speaker: I am directed by the Senate to request the House of Representatives to return the bill of the Senate (No. 72) for an increase of the medical staff of the army for a limited time.

And then he withdrew.

Thereupon,

On motion of Mr. Haralson, it was Ordered, That the Clerk return the said bill to the Senate.

Mr. Kellogg offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the duty on bar, bloom, pig, and manufactured iron imported from foreign countries into this; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The said resolution was read: when Mr. Kellogg moved the previous question.

Mr. Bingham moved that it be laid upon the table, and called for the yeas and nays thereon; which were ordered by the House.

Mr. Kellogg moved that the order by the House of the yeas and nays be reconsidered.

Mr. Pollock raised the question of order, that it required four-fifths to reconsider an order for the yeas and nays.

The Speaker decided, that according to the precedents a majority might reconsider the order; but that the question would immediately recur on ordering the yeas and nays, when one-fifth would be sufficient for that purpose.

The motion to reconsider prevailed, but the ayes and noes were again ordered: when,

On motion of Mr. Duer, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, after some time spent therein, the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Botts reported that the committee having, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, particularly the bill (No. 104) to authorize a loan not to exceed the sum of eighteen millions five hundred thousand dollars, had come to no resolution thereon.

And the bill was referred accordingly.

Mr. John A. Rockwell offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the bill from the Senate entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of John Paul Jones" shall cease in one hour after it shall have been taken up again in Committee of the Whole House, (if the Committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion upon the same;) and the Committee shall then proceed to vote on such amendments as may be pending or offered to the same, and then report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to by the Committee.

The said resolution was read; when

Mr. Starkweather moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

And the question being put,

It was decided in the negative; and

The resolution was then agreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. John A. Rockwell, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on private bills; and, after some time spent therein, the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. McClernand reported that the committee had had under consideration a bill from the Senate (No. 1) for the relief of the heirs of John Paul Jones, which he was directed to report to the House with amendments.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the said bill, the question being on agreeing to the said amendments; when

Mr. Bowlin moved to further amend the said bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following:

“That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the legal heirs of John Paul Jones, late a commander in one of the armed vessels of the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twenty-four thousand four hundred and twenty-one dollars and seventy-eight cents, being the amount of his claim to prize money accruing from certain captures made and carried into the port of Bergen in the year 1779: Provided, That before the Secretary pays the said sum of money to the said heirs, or any of them, he shall be fully satisfied, from proper evidence, that the claimants are the legal heirs, and only legal heirs, of John Paul Jones.”

Mr. John A. Rockwell moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered and put, and all the said amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House were severally read and concurred in; and the question was then stated, Will the House agree to the said amendment offered by Mr. Bowlin?

The question was then put, Will the House agree to the said amendment offered by Mr. Bowlin?

The main question was then stated, viz: Shall the said resolution be engrossed, and read a third time, (the motion to refer being set aside by the previous question:) when

Mr. John Quincy Adams becoming suddenly very seriously ill in his seat in the House,

On motion of Mr. Cocke, the House, at twenty minutes past 1 o'clock, p. m., adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1848.

The Speaker said it was deemed appropriate that he should state to the House, from the chair, that his venerable colleague, John Quincy Adams, was still lying in a state of unconsciousness, in the Speaker's room; and, in the opinion of his medical attendants, rapidly sinking under the stroke by which he was yesterday prostrated;

Whereupon

Mr. Burt moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Giddings suggested that the Journal of yesterday should state the cause of the early adjournment of the House.

The Speaker, with the general consent of the House, directed the entry to be made accordingly.

And then the House, in pursuance of the motion of Mr. Burt, at five minutes past 12 o'clock, adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1848.

The following petitions, memorials, and other papers, were laid on the Clerk's table, under the 24th rule of the House, to wit:

By Mr. Gott: Thirteen memorials of citizens of Onondaga county, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the renewal and extension of letters patent to the heirs of Jethro Wood for an improvement in cast iron ploughs;

Also, a memorial of similar import with the foregoing from citizens of Tompkins county, in the State of New York.

Ordered, That said memorials be referred to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. Turner: Two petitions of citizens of Ogle county, in the State of Illinois, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Mount Morris, in said county, to Madison, in the Territory of Wisconsin: which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. Daniel P. King: The memorial of Charles Stearns, of Springfield, in the State of Massachusetts, praying relief for damages to which he was subjected by an illegal prosecution, by order of the Secretary of War, against him for riot and malicious trespass upon lands belonging to the United States: which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Barringer, in consequence of the continued and critical illness of John Quincy Adams in the Capitol, at five minutes past 12 o'clock, moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House adjourned accordingly until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1848.

The Speaker announced the death of his colleague, John Quincy Adams, to the House, as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives of the United States:

It has been thought fit that the Chair should announce officially to the House an event already known to the members individually, and which has filled all our hearts with sadness.

A seat on this floor has been vacated, towards which our eyes have been accustomed to turn with no common interest.

A voice has been hushed for ever in this hall, to which all ears have been wont to listen with profound reverence.

A venerable form has faded from our sight, around which we have daily clustered with an affectionate regard.

A name has been stricken from the roll of the living statesmen of our land which has been associated for more than half a century with the highest civil service and the loftiest civil renown.

On Monday, the 21st instant, John Quincy Adams sunk in his seat, in presence of us all, by a sudden illness, from which he never recovered; and he died in the Speaker's room, at a quarter past 7 o'clock, last evening, with the officers of the House and the delegation of his own Massachusetts around him.

Whatever advanced age, long experience, great ability, vast learning, accumulated public honors, a spotless private character, and a firm religious faith, could do, to render any one an object of interest, respect, and admiration, they had done for this distinguished person; and interest, respect, and admiration, are but feeble terms to express the feelings with which the members of this House and the people of the country have long regarded him.

After a life of eighty years, devoted from its earliest maturity to the public service, he has at length gone to his rest. He has been privileged to die at his post; to fall while in the discharge of his duties; to expire beneath the roof of the Capitol; and to have his last scene associated for ever in history with the birth-day of that illustrious patriot whose just discernment brought him first into the service of his country.

The close of such a life, under such circumstances, is not an event for unmingled emotions. We cannot find it in our hearts to regret that he has died as he has died. He himself could have desired no other end. "This is the end of earth" were his last words, uttered on the day on which he fell. But we might almost hear him exclaiming as he left us, in a language hardly less familiar to him than his native tongue, "hoc est, nimirum, magis feliciter de vitâ migrare, quam mori."

It is for others to suggest what honors shall be paid to his memory. No acts of ours are necessary to his fame. But it may be due to ourselves and to the country that the national sense of his character and services should be fitly commemorated.

Whereupon

Mr. Hudson offered the following resolutions; which were agreed to:

Resolved, That this House has heard, with the deepest sensibility, of the death, in this Capitol, of John Quincy Adams, a member of the House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That, as a testimony of respect for the memory of this distinguished statesman, the officers and members of the House will wear the usual badge of mourning, and attend the funeral in this hall on Saturday next, at 12 o'clock.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this House in relation to the death of John Quincy Adams be communicated to the family of the deceased by the Clerk.

the late John Quincy Adams be unoccupied for thirty days, and that it, together with the hall, remain clothed with the symbol of mourning during that time.

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint one member of this House from each State and Territory as a committee to escort the remains of our venerable friend, John Quincy Adams, to the place designated by his friends for his interment.

On motion of Mr. Vinton it was Ordered, That the remarks of the Speaker announcing officially the death of John Quincy Adams be entered upon the Journal.

And then the Speaker, at seven minutes before 1 o'clock, p. m., announced that the House stood adjourned until Saturday, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

The Clerk of the House has also referred to the committee the question of engraving and publishing a map accompanying the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs to the House on the 18th instant, made by their chairman, Mr. T. Resolved, That the Secretary of War communicate to this House a list containing all the contracts entered into since the first December, 1846; stating, first, the name of the contractor and sureties: second, the nature and amount of each contract; whether advertised or not by publishing in one or more newspapers; the rate at which contracts were made; the prices paid for services performed or articles furnished: thirdly, what contracts have been fulfilled or performed, and what have not been; furnishing the reasons why; and whether any, and, if any, what measures have been taken to enforce the performance, or secure the government against loss by proceeding against the sureties: fourth, whether higher prices have been paid to other persons, who have performed, in whole or in part, any contracts or orders which had been undertaken by others, with the reasons for paying or allowing such extra or higher prices; giving the names and residence of such contractors and their sureties; and whether public notice was given of the failure of the parties to execute their contracts; also, showing whether the same parties who failed to perform their engagements were interested in subsequent contracts, at the same or higher rates.

Mr. Nelson offered the following resolution; which was read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule, viz:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with a list or statement of all patents which have heretofore been granted by the United States for the construction of ploughs, and for improvements in the construction of ploughs; setting forth the date of each patent; to whom granted; and the specifications of the inventions or improvements claimed by the patentees severally and respectively; whether any, and which, of such patents have been renewed or extended, and for what periods of time; and, that he also communicate to this House such other facts as it may be in his power to furnish, as shall the better enable this House to judge of the merits of the invention of the cast iron plough claimed by Jethro Wood.

Mr. Nathan K. Hall offered the following preamble and resolution; which were read; and, debate arising thereon, it was laid over, under the rule, viz:

Whereas there has been presented to this House, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, a petition of Alexander Hunter, esquire, marshal of the District of Columbia, praying for the settlement and payment of an account against the United States, for the commitment, feeding, and releasement of persons claimed as slaves or fugitives from service, and committed as such to the custody of the said marshal in the jail of the United States, in the District of Columbia; which account extends through several years, and consists of about two hundred items, amounting in the aggregate to five thousand three hundred and sixty-one dollars and sixty cents:

And whereas it appears by the said account that one Moses Thornton was kept in said jail for the space of twelve hundred and forty days, for which such marshal has charged the United States four hundred and twenty-one dollars and sixty cents; that four persons, designated as "Meades negroes," were kept in said jail five hundred and eighty-five days each, for which the said marshal has charged the United States seven hundred and ninety-five dollars and sixty cents; and had been before kept in said jail over fifty days each, for which said marshal has charged the United States seventy dollars and twenty-eight cents; that eight persons, designated as "Buckner's negroes," were kept in said jail four hundred and sixty-two days each, for which said marshal has charged the United States one thousand three hundred and thirty-six dollars and sixty-four cents; that William Burrows and Joseph Armstrong were kept in said jail four hundred and forty-three days each, for which such marshal has charged the United States three hundred and one dollars and twenty-four cents; that Sarah A. Robinson was kept in such jail four hundred and twenty-one days, for which said marshal has charged the United States one hundred and forty-three dollars and fourteen cents; that Peyton Harris was kept in said jail three hundred and twenty-one days, for which such marshal has charged the United States one hundred and nine dollars and fourteen cents; and that five several persons, the cause of whose commitment is stated in said account to be a petition for freedom, were kept in said jail for one hundred and eleven, one hundred and seventy-two, two hundred and thirty-two, three hundred and seventy-one, and three hundred and seventy-one days respectively, for which said marshal has charged the United States four hundred and thirty-seven dollars and thirty-eight cents:

And whereas it is claimed and alleged, by or on behalf of the said marshal, that the commitment and detention of said persons, claimed to be slaves, was authorized and required by the laws of the United States, and was under and by virtue of warrants, orders, or process, of courts or magistrates of the United States within the district of Columbia; and that the United States are therefore bound to pay the said account:

And whereas it is supposed that the said commitments and detentions were authorized by the act of Congress entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the government of the United States," passed July 16, 1790, by which it was provided that the laws of the States within the district accepted for the permanent seat of the government of the United States should not be affected by such acceptance until the time fixed for the removal of the government thereto, "and until Congress shall otherwise by law provide;" and the act of Congress entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia," passed February 27, 1801, by which it is enacted "that the laws of the State of Virginia, as they now exist, shall be and continue in force in that part of the District of Columbia which was ceded by said State to the United States, and by them accepted as the permanent seat of government; and that the laws of the State of Maryland, as they now exist, shall be and continue in force in that part of the said district which was ceded by that State to the United States, and by them accepted as aforesaid;" and that the justices of the peace appointed in such district by the President of the United States "shall, in all matters, civil and criminal, and in whatever relates to the conservation of the peace, have all the powers vested in, and shall perform all the duties required of, justices of the peace, as individual magistrates, by the laws before continued in force in those parts of said district for which they shall have been respectively appointed."

And whereas such commitments and detentions can only be authorized under the said acts of Congress, or some other act or acts of Congress authorizing the same:

And whereas the use of the public jail of the United States within the District of Columbia (while owned and controlled by the United States, and maintained at their expense) for the detention and safe-keeping of persons claimed as slaves or fugitives from service is not required for the full and perfect maintenance of the compromises of the Constitution: and whereas the further use, for the purposes aforesaid, of the public jail of the territory in which Congress has by the Constitution the express power of exclusive legislation is no interference with the domestic institutions of the States, more especially if the right of recapture, by the master or his agent, is left to act with full force upon the runaway slave or fugitive from service; and such use is repugnant to the feelings of a large majority of the people of the United States: therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, directed to report to this House, with all convenient speed, a bill repealing all laws of Congress, and abrogating, so far as they are operative or in force in the District of Columbia, all laws of the State of Maryland which authorize or require the courts, officers, or magistrates of the United States, or of the said district, within the District of Columbia, to issue process for arrest, or commit to the jail of the said district any runaway, or other slave or fugitive from service, or colored person claimed as such, except on due complaint and proof of, or on a conviction for, some crime or misdemeanor, the commission of which by any free white person would authorize in the same manner the arrest, commitment, and detention of such white person in like manner charged with or convicted thereof.

On motion of Mr. Gott,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be instructed to ascertain, and report to this House, the expenses of the war with Mexico, giving the items of such expenses as far as practicable.

Mr. Lord offered the following resolution; which was read, and laid upon the table one day, under the rule:

Mr. Duer offered to present the following, as an amendment to the rules of the House:

Resolved, That no member who is permitted to make a personal explanation shall be allowed to speak more than ten minutes in making such explanation.

Objection being made to the presentation of the said amendment,

Mr. Duer moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to present the same; which motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. Duer accordingly presented his said amendment; which was read; when,

On motion of Mr. Howell Cobb, it was Ordered, That the said amendment be referred to the select committee upon the rules and orders.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Hunt obtained leave and introduced a bill (No. 232) for the relief of the legal representatives of Abraham Hogeboom, deceased: which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Jenkins obtained leave and introduced a bill (No. 233) to regulate the compensation of post-masters, to exempt certain newspapers from postage, and to reduce the postage on transient newspapers: which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post office and Post Roads.

Mr. Putnam offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, in the settlement of the difficulties pending between this country and Mexico, territory may be acquired in which slavery does not now exist:

And whereas Congress, in the organization of a territorial government, at an early period of our political history, established a principle worthy of imitation in all future time, forbidding the existence of slavery in free territory: therefore

Resolved, That in any territory which may be acquired from Mexico, over which shall be established territorial governments, slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, should be forever prohibited; and that in any act or resolution establishing such governments a fundamental provision ought to be inserted to that effect.

The said preamble and resolution were read: when

Mr. Putnam moved the previous question.

Mr. Brodhead moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

And the question being put,

It was decided in the affirmative, { Yeas 105

mittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, after some time spent therein, the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Hunt reported that the committee having, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, particularly the bill (No. 135) further to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1848, had come to no resolution thereon.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. McClelland to reconsider.

And, after debate, Mr. McClelland moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered and put, and the said vote was reconsidered.

The question recurred on ordering the said bill to a third reading; when

Mr. Vinton moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Before putting this motion, by unanimous consent the Speaker laid before the House the following communication, viz:

WASHINGTON, 29th February, 1848.

SIR: The resolutions in honor of my dear deceased husband, passed by the illustrious assembly over which you preside, and of which he at the moment of his death was a member, have been duly communicated to me.

Penetrated with grief at this distressing event of my life, mourning the loss of one who has been at once my example and my support through the trials of half a century, permit me nevertheless to express, through you, my deepest gratitude for the signal manner in which the public regard has been voluntarily manifested by your honorable body, and the consolation derived to me and mine from the reflection that the unwearied efforts of an old public servant have not, even in this world, proved without their reward in the generous appreciation of them by his country.

With great respect, I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

LOUISA CATHARINE ADAMS.

To the Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP,
Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table.

Mr. Bowlin moved to amend the bill, by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

“That the jurisdiction and powers now vested in or lawfully exercised by the circuit courts of the United States in the several districts established by law, in all cases, civil or criminal, at law or in equity, shall be, and the same are hereby, vested in the district courts of each respective district, except in the southern district of the State of New York; and the jurisdiction, authority, and powers now vested in the justices of the Supreme Court in the several districts within his circuit, be, and the same are hereby, vested in the district judge of each district.

“SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the terms now prescribed by law for the several district courts, each district judge shall hold a court at the time and place or places heretofore appointed for the sessions of the circuit courts in each district; and all process and proceedings at law shall be made returnable and be returned to said district courts at the said terms; and be proceeded in and disposed of according to the usages and principles of law.

“SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all writs now pending in the circuit courts for any district, except the southern district of the State of New York, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred to the district court for such district; and all process which may have issued returnable to the circuit court shall be returned to the district court; the said suits, process, or pleadings, to be proceeded in, heard, and determined in the district court, in as full and ample a manner as could have been done in the circuit court. And all moneys heretofore paid into any circuit court, and now remaining subject to the order of such court, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred to the district court for such district, and to be subject to the order and direction of the said district court.

“SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all papers, books, and records of every kind, now in the custody and care of the several clerks of the circuit courts, except in the southern district of the State of New York, shall be transferred to the clerk of the district court of the same district, and kept by him; and shall be deemed and taken to be the papers, books, and records of the district court.

“SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That no grand jury shall be summoned to attend any district court, except upon application, in writing, by the district attorney of said district to the district judge, setting forth briefly his reasons for the same; and if satisfactory to said district judge, and that a grand jury is necessary for the due execution of the laws, he shall thereupon order a grand jury to be summoned, and the clerk to issue a venire facias, directed to the marshal of the district, who shall proceed and summon said grand jury according to the command of said writ: Provided, That the district judge may, at discretion, order a grand jury to be summoned to any district court when in his judgment the public business requires their attendance.

“SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That a circuit judge shall be appointed in and for the southern district of the State of New York, who shall hold his office by the same tenure, and be entitled to the same compensation, as the district judge of the said district.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the jurisdiction and powers now vested in or lawfully exercised by the circuit court of the United States in said district, as established by law, in all cases, civil or criminal, at law or in equity, shall be, and the same are hereby, vested exclusively in the said circuit judge, except in cases of appeal and of writs of error from the district court of said district, which are hereby abolished. And the said circuit judge shall hold the several terms of the said circuit court now, or which may hereafter be, appointed by law in said district; and shall possess and exercise all the powers now possessed or exercised by the justice of the Supreme Court of the United States as circuit judge of said district, except in cases of appeals and of writs of error from said district court as aforesaid.

“SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That there shall be held in each of the nine judicial circuits of the United States, once in each year, a court of appeals, in which the justice of the Supreme Court of the United States assigned to said circuit where the court is held shall preside, and in which court he shall be assisted by the several district judges of the said circuit, and in the second circuit, with the addition of the circuit judge of the southern district of the State of New York; and the said presiding judge and assistant judges shall possess equal powers, in hearing and determining causes brought into and depending in said court of appeals; and a majority of the judges composing said court shall constitute a quorum to hear and determine said causes. But it shall be the duty of all the judges to attend each term of the court, and to finish the business upon the calendar as far as practicable. Any one judge may adjourn the court from day to day, for want of a quorum; and if no one judge is present at the commencement of the term, the clerk of said court shall adjourn the same from day to day for six successive days; and if no judge is then present, the court shall stand adjourned till the next term of said court; and all process, suits, recognizances, and other legal proceedings, shall remain and be continued the same as if the court had been regularly adjourned according to law. But the presiding judge, and any two of his associates, may appoint a special term for the transaction of business, giving reasonable notice of the time and place of the meeting of the said court.

“SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That said court shall have the jurisdiction of a court for the correction of errors and of appeals, as it respects cases in the several district courts within the said circuit, and cases in the circuit court of the southern district of the State of New York in the second circuit, with power to hear and determine all causes brought there from said district courts and said circuit court, by writ of error, or on appeal from any final judgment or decree in any civil cause at law or in equity, where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars, besides costs; and the like powers to hear and determine all appeals from said district courts in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction finally determined in said district courts, where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of three hundred dollars, besides costs. And in prosecuting said writs of error and appeals, said court of appeals shall be governed by the same rules that now govern the Supreme Court of the United States, both as prescribed by the laws of the United States and by the rules of the court, so far as the same can be made applicable to the said court of appeals, and are not inconsistent with this act; and said court of appeals shall have and use all writs and modes of process and proceedings, for the exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred, that the Supreme Court of the United States now have and use in exercising similar jurisdiction in cases brought up from the circuit courts to said Supreme Court; and furthermore, said courts of appeal shall have power to issue writs of mandamus and certiorari, and all other writs not specially provided by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction, and agreeably to the principles and usages of law.

“SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That from the final judgments and decrees of said court of appeals, writs of error and appeals may be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States in all civil cases where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of three thousand dollars, besides costs; and the said Supreme Court shall have all the powers and jurisdiction over the judgments, decrees, and proceedings of said court of appeals, as it now possesses over the judgments, decrees, and proceedings in the several circuit courts of the United States, and shall be governed by the same rules and practice, and shall use the same process, and adopt the same proceeding, as is now used and adopted in cases of writs of error and appeals from the said several circuit courts; and the said Supreme Court may frame new and additional rules from time to time, for the government of the proceedings in the court of appeals, and the better regulation of writs of error and appeals to the Supreme Court therefrom: Provided, Said courts of appeal may respectively, from time to time, adopt rules for the government of their own proceedings in cases before them, and also for bringing up writs of error and appeals from said district courts and circuit court of the southern district of New York, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States or the rules of the Supreme Court.

“SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That in all criminal cases now pending, or which may hereafter be depending, in the district courts or in the circuit court of the southern district of the State of New York, the said district judges and circuit judge, after trial and conviction, may suspend sentence, if in their judgment any difficult question of law has arisen in the course of the trial, and certify the same to the court of appeals; which said court shall hear and determine the same at their next term, and shall certify their decision to the said district or circuit court, to which decision the said court shall be bound to conform. But the court of appeals shall not be authorized to entertain questions of law certified to them in any civil suit or proceeding; nor shall the Supreme Court of the United States entertain any question certified, in like cases, to them by the court of appeals, nor any case on a writ of error or appeal from a judgment or decree entered by said court pro forma, for the purpose of bringing up the same for review.

“SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That all writs of error or appeals heretofore prosecuted from the district courts and now pending in any of the circuit courts, and the proceedings thereon, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred to the court of appeals of said circuit of which said district court is part, and the same as it respects the circuit court of the southern district of the State of New York, there to be heard and determined in the same manner, and subject to the same rules and regulations, as if said writs of error or appeals had been originally brought in said court; and judgments and decrees heretofore rendered by any district court, from which a writ of error or appeal would now lie to the circuit court, may be brought to the said court of appeals within two years from the passing of this act, and not afterwards, unless the party prosecuting the same was, at the time of rendering the said judgment or decree, and still is, a femme covert, infant under the age of twenty-one years, non compos mentis, or imprisoned; in which cases such writs of error or appeals may be prosecuted at any time within two years after the disability is removed; and likewise, in all cases of final judgments or decrees hereafter rendered by the district courts or the circuit court of the southern district of the State of New York, writs of error and appeals shall be brought within two years from the time of their rendition, with the exceptions aforesaid in favor of femmes covert, infants, non compos mentes, and persons imprisoned; and if not brought within two years, such writs of error and appeals shall be barred; and further, that writs of error and appeals upon judgments and decrees heretofore rendered in the circuit courts, and which have been transferred to the district courts, may be brought to the Supreme Court, the same as if they had remained in the circuit court.

“SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said courts of appeal respectively to appoint their own clerks, who shall give bond for their faithful performance of their duties, in the same manner and to the same amount that the clerks of the circuit courts now do; and said clerks shall take an oath or affirmation in like manner, changing the title of the court, and shall be governed in the performance of their duties by all laws applicable to the clerks of the circuits. All writs and process issued by authority of the courts of appeal shall bear teste in the name of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and be governed by the laws and regulations now in force as to substance and form, except the title of the court, that apply to writs and process issuing from the circuit courts; but final process shall issue from the district courts and circuit court for the southern district of the State of New York on judgments and decrees rendered by said courts of appeal, in the same manner as such process now issues from the circuit courts to execute the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court; and to which end mandates shall issue from said courts of appeal to the district courts and circuit court of the southern district of New York, in like manner as is now done by the Supreme Court to the circuit courts; and said courts of appeal shall have power to cause the marshal, or his assistants, within the circuit where said court is held, to execute any process that may be legally awarded by said court.

“SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That, in case the Supreme Court should reverse or affirm any judgment or decree of the said court of appeals, or make any order touching the proceedings therein, or of any district court, or of the circuit court for the southern district of the State of New York, in the exercise of the powers and jurisdiction of the said Supreme Court, a mandate may be awarded, either to the said court of appeals or directly to the district or circuit court, as the case may be, at the election of the Supreme Court; and which mandate the said inferior court shall be bound to obey.

“SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the marshal of the district where the court of appeals is holden to attend the same, and to perform the same duties, and in like manner as is now done in respect to the circuit courts of the United States in said district, and shall employ the same subordinate officers when attending said court, and afford the same assistance, as has been heretofore usual in said circuit courts; and the marshal and his assistants shall receive the same fees and compensation for their services as have been heretofore allowed for like services for attending said circuit courts; and each clerk of the court of appeals shall be allowed and receive the same fees and compensation for his services which are now by law allowed to the clerks of the circuit courts in the district where the court of appeals is held; and it shall be the duty of the justice of the Supreme Court presiding at said court of appeals, or, in his absence, the district judge next in commission present, to certify the accounts of said court each term, subject to the restrictions now imposed by law upon the judges and officers of the circuit courts in this respect; which laws shall be binding upon the court of appeals, the same as heretofore upon the judges and officers of the circuit courts; and it shall also be the duty of the district attorney of the United States in and for the district where the said court of appeals is holden, to attend the same, and prosecute and defend, and in all respects take charge of the interests of the United States therein, in like manner and to the same extent as he is now bound to do in the circuit courts, and shall receive for his services like compensation. It shall be the duty of the clerks of the district courts and of the circuit court of the southern district of the State of New York to sign, seal, and issue writs of error, for the purpose of bringing up causes to the courts of appeal, in the same manner as the clerks of the circuit courts now do for the purpose of bringing up causes to the Supreme Court; and the clerks of the court of appeals shall have like power and be subject to like duty. And the district judges and circuit judge of the southern district of the State of New York shall have power to award writs of error and grant citations, for the purpose of bringing up causes to said courts of appeal in their respective districts; and the justices of the Supreme Court shall possess like power to do the same.

“SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the States of Louisiana, Florida, and Texas, and the judicial districts therein, shall hereafter compose the fifth circuit; and that the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Arkansas, and the judicial districts therein, shall hereafter compose the ninth circuit; and the State of Iowa, and the judicial districts therein, shall be attached to the eighth judicial circuit; and the other judicial circuits of the United States shall be and remain as they are now constituted by law. There shall be held for the first circuit a court of appeals at the city of Boston, in the district of Massachusetts, on the day of in each year. There shall be held for the second circuit a court of appeals at the city of New York, in the southern district of New York, on the day of in each year. There shall be held a court of appeals for the third circuit at the city of Philadelphia, in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, on the day of in each year. There shall be held for the fourth circuit a court of appeals at the city of Baltimore, in the district of Maryland, on the day of in each year. There shall be held a court of appeals for the sixth circuit at the city of Charleston, in the district of South Carolina, on the day of in each year.

There shall be held for the fifth circuit, at the city of New Orleans, in the eastern district of Louisiana, a court of appeals, on the day of in each year. There shall be held for the ninth circuit, at the city of Jackson, in the southern district of Mississippi, a court of appeals, on the day of in each year. There shall be held for the eighth circuit a court of appeals at the city of St. Louis, in the district of Missouri, on the day of in each year. And there shall be held for the seventh circuit, at the city of Indianapolis, in the district of Indiana, a court of appeals, on the day of in each year. And for the additional duties hereby imposed on the district judges of the United States, they shall receive respectively as compensation the sum of ten cents per every mile, for going to and returning from said courts of appeals, calculating the same from the usual place of residence of each respective district judge; and they shall also receive after the rate of dollars for each day they may be necessarily engaged in holding said courts of appeals: Provided, That no judge shall be paid his mileage as aforesaid for attending court more than once in each year; nor shall he receive per diem compensation for any day's attendance, except when the court is actually engaged in the business of the term; but said court may adjourn over, from one time to another, between its regular terms; in which case the intermediate days between the adjournment and the next meeting shall not be compensated for, nor shall any allowance be made because of absence by reason of sickness, or for any other reason.

"SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That when a dangerous disease shall prevail at the place of holding any court of appeals, at the time when a term commences, and a majority of the judges thereof deem it expedient to postpone the meeting of said court, they may give an order in writing to the clerk of the same, directing him to enter of record the said order, and to adjourn the court to such future time as the order may direct; and he shall also publish said order in one or more newspapers in each district of the circuit, unless directed to the contrary by the judges giving the order. And when it shall so happen that no marshal of the district where the court is held attends the same, by himself or his deputy, because there is a vacancy in the office of marshal, or for any other cause, then the court shall have power to appoint a special officer to do the duties of marshal in and for said court during term time, and until such time as a marshal may attend in court duly qualified according to the laws of the United States."

Mr. Alexander Evans moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which motion was agreed to.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by J. Knox Walker, his private secretary, notifying that he did this day approve and sign bills and a resolution of the following titles:

H. R. No. 182. An act to amend an act entitled "An act in amendment of the acts respecting the judicial system of the United States."

H. R. No. 231. An act granting the franking privilege to Louisa Catharine Adams.

H. R. No. 11. Joint resolution expressive of the thanks of Congress to Major General Winfield Scott and the troops under his command for their distinguished gallantry and good conduct in the campaign of 1847.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill (No. 297) to amend an act entitled "An act to raise, for a limited time, an additional military force, and for other purposes," approved February 11, 1847, reported by Mr. Alexander Evans on Tuesday last from the Committee on Public Lands, and which was pending on that day, when the House proceeded to other business.

The question being on the motion made by Mr. Giddings that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

And, after debate, Mr. Haskell moved the previous question.

Mr. George S. Houston raised the question of order, that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the 131st rule, which is as follows:

"No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day in which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

The Speaker stated to the gentleman from Alabama and the House, that, in case this bill involved upon its face an appropriation of money, the previous question, if sustained, would bring the House to vote upon the reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair did not, however, regard this as a bill which necessarily went to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There was hardly a bill which came before the House which did not necessarily involve some expenditure; yet, if it did not on its face contain an appropriation of money, it was not required to go to the committee. There was no rule which required that a bill which made an appropriation of the public lands should be referred, nor was there any precedent for it. The rule, moreover, required that all proceedings touching the appropriation of money, must be first discussed in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If this, then, was an appropriation bill, the whole discussion had been out of order. The chair, however, regarded this as a mere declaratory act, explanatory of the act of last session, giving a construction to that act contrary to the construction given to it by the Department of War. He was, therefore, of the opinion that if the previous question was sustained, it would cut off the motion to refer, and bring the House to a vote, first upon the amendment, and then upon the engrossment of the bill.

From this decision Mr. George S. Houston appealed.

Mr. Stephens moved that the appeal be laid upon the table; which motion was agreed to.

The House then refused to second the previous question; and, after further debate, the question was put, Shall the said bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

And decided in the affirmative.

2. Stolen by Mexicans in the enemy's country.
3. Taken from the owners and appropriated to the service of the United States officers, whereby the owners were deprived of their use, &c.

4. Lost in transportation from Tampico to Vera Cruz, or in landing at Vera Cruz.

5. Compensation for the use of horses, of which the owners were deprived by order of the United States, whereby the volunteer lost his horse, as well as the pay of a mounted man, and was reduced to the rank of infantry.

On motion of Mr. Crozier,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Dalton, in the State of Georgia, to Benton, in the State of Tennessee.

On motion of Mr. George W. Jones,

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings be requested to report to this House what injury, if any, in his opinion, has been done to the Capitol by cutting through the walls and arches of the building for the introduction of gas pipes; also, whether, in his opinion, any injury is likely to result from digging about or under the foundation of the building, for the purpose of putting in furnaces to heat or warm the halls and rooms of the Capitol; and, also, whether the heavy weight upon the dome from the pole and its braces, which support the large gas lantern, does not endanger the dome itself, if not other parts of the building. And that he be requested, also, to report what will probably be the annual cost of materials to generate gas and for hands or persons to attend the gas works used in lighting the Capitol.

Mr. Andrew Johnson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That rotation in office, in the opinion of this House, is one of the cardinal tenets in a republican form of government, and ought never to be violated under any pretence whatever, and should be practised upon by all administrations, regardless of their party names.

Resolved, That eight years, in the opinion of this House, is the longest term any individual ought to be permitted to remain in office whose appointment is conferred upon the President of the United States and the heads of departments either by the constitution or by law.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, the appointment of persons to office should be made upon the basis of representation from the several States in the Congress of the United States; that is to say, the whole number of persons appointed to office should be divided by the whole number of Representatives, giving to each congressional district in the Union its fair ratio of officers under the Federal government.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, any congressional district in the Union is more than competent to furnish its full quota of officers, upon the principle as laid down in the foregoing resolutions, who would be honest, capable, and faithful to the constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, immediately after all the offices shall be filled, upon the principle as laid down in these resolutions, the President and heads of department should divide the whole number of congressional districts into four equal divisions, or as near so as may be practicable, classifying them one, two, three, and four; the officers belonging to the first district falling into the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of eight years; those falling into the second class shall be vacated at the expiration of six years; those falling into the third class shall be vacated at the expiration of four years; those falling into the fourth class shall be vacated at the expiration of two years; so that one-fourth of the whole number of officers thus appointed would be retiring from office every two years, and a new set coming in to fill the vacancies thus occasioned.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, in the selection of individuals to fill the offices under the Federal government, due regard should be had to the farmers and mechanics of the country, so as to give them their proportion of said offices.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, the people, the principles of the constitution, the spirit of the times, and justice, all demand at the hands of the President and heads of department, so soon as may be practicable, to carry into full and fair effect the principles and doctrines as laid down in the foregoing resolutions.

The said resolutions were read: when

On motion of Mr. McKay,

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having printed the following statements, which have been prepared in the office of the Register of the Treasury:

1. A statement of the amount of all revenues received through each custom-house, and the moneys expended at each, to defray the expenses of collection, from the earliest practicable period to June 30, 1847, classifying the receipts and expenditures under the different heads, as far as the books of the department will permit.

2. A statement of the quantity of land sold, the amount received therefor, how paid, and the expenses of collection in each land district, from the earliest practicable period to the 30th June, 1847, dividing the expenditures under the usual different heads.

3. A statement of the whole amount of revenue received into the treasury each year, from the earliest practicable date to June 30, 1847, giving the source from whence the same was derived.

4. A statement of the expenditures of the government, from the earliest practicable time to June 30, 1847, separating the same under different heads of expenditure, as far as can be done from the records.

5. A statement of the importations and exportations of domestic and foreign goods, in American and foreign vessels, to and from each country, from the earliest practicable period to June 30, 1847.

6. A statement of the tonnage of each district and State, and of the classes of vessels, from the earliest period practicable to June 30, 1847.

7. A statement of the American tonnage engaged in foreign trade and in the coasting trade, and fisheries, and seamen employed, and of foreign tonnage entered and cleared, and the number of their crews from each port and State, from the earliest practicable period to June 30, 1847.

8. A statement of the amount of moneys received on account of the marine hospital fund in each district and State, and the expenditures at the same places from the same fund, and from appropriations each year, from the earliest period practicable to the 30th June, 1847.

Mr. Cummins offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas the rights and powers conferred by the people of the United States upon the government of the United States are, by the Constitution, wisely divided into and distributed among three separate, distinct, and independent departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—upon each of which are conferred certain separate, distinct, and independent powers and rights, and of each of which is required the faithful performance of certain separate, independent, and distinct duties:

And whereas the safety of the citizen, and the harmony and perpetuity of the government itself, requires that each department should be kept within its prescribed constitutional limits, and that neither be permitted to usurp the powers or to encroach upon the rights or privileges of the other:

And whereas the management of our affairs with foreign nations, and the power to negotiate treaties, is by the Constitution conferred upon the President, and the power to ratify or reject treaties belongs to the Senate; each being held responsible to the people for the wisdom and fidelity with which they respectively exercise these powers and discharge their respective duties:

And whereas by the Constitution of the United States the President is constituted the commander-in-chief of our army and navy, and he, with his Cabinet ministers and officers in command, are charged with, and held responsible for, the faithful, efficient, and wise exercise of the powers and discharge of the duties thus conferred:

And whereas it would be impolitic and unwise, pending the negotiation of treaties with foreign nations, or during the existence of outstanding and unsettled questions, to give publicity to, or to inform the adverse government of, the instructions given by our government at home to our ministers and diplomatic agents abroad, or of the confidential correspondence which may have passed between them:

And whereas, also, it would be unwise, and often disastrous to the public interests, during the existence of a war, to publish to the world and inform the public enemy of the strength, position, condition, and movements of our army, or to disclose to the public enemy the plans of projected campaigns yet unexecuted; therefore, discharge of his constitutional duties, is invested with the right and clothed with the power to withhold from publication to the world, and to the public enemy, such information as in his judgment, and in the exercise of a sound discretion, would jeopardize the safety of our army and the success of our arms, and such as would be detrimental to the public interests, and advantageous to the enemy only.

Resolved, That the President of the United States, in the faithful discharge of his constitutional duties, is invested with the right and clothed with the power to withhold from publication such information, instruction, and confidential correspondence, connected with the unsettled international controversies or pending negotiations on the same, as in his judgment, and in the exercise of a sound discretion, would be prejudicial to the public interest, and beneficial to the adverse government.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has the right and power to call upon the President of the United States for any information which he, as President, may possess or control, touching or concerning our national affairs, either domestic or foreign; and that it is the duty of the President to communicate such information, unless, from considerations of public policy, and in the exercise of a sound discretion, he should be of opinion that the publication of such information would be prejudicial to the public interest or advantageous to our adversaries.

The said resolutions and preamble were read; when

Mr. Dunn moved that they be laid upon the table; which motion was not agreed to; and then, debate arising upon the said resolutions, they were laid over, under the rule.

Mr. Lahm offered the following resolution; which was read; and, debate arising thereon, it was laid over, under the rule:

And that said committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the per diem of members of Congress; and on this last subject they report by bill or otherwise.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of ceding to the State of Ohio all the lands remaining unsold, and that are unsaleable, in the Chilicothe land district, in that State, for such purposes of internal improvement and education in said district as the General Assembly of Ohio may deem best.

Mr. Fries offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to William T. Stewart his pay as messenger of the House of Representatives for the months of December, January, and February.

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of House bill No. 8, being a bill relating to the collection district of New Orleans, and for other purposes, and that it be made the special order of the day for to-morrow, Tuesday, the 15th instant.

On motion of Mr. Embree,

Whereas James Smithson, esquire, by his last will and testament having given the whole of his property, now amounting to more than seven hundred thousand dollars, to the United States, to found an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge amongst men; and Congress, to carry out the liberal designs of the donor, having passed an act entitled "An act to establish the Smithsonian Institution for the increase and diffusion of knowledge amongst men," approved August 10, 1846:

And whereas officers have been appointed under said act, and are proceeding to erect a building, which, with the improvements attached, according to their estimate, is to cost about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and said officers are about to establish in said building, with the funds of the institution, a library, to contain one hundred thousand volumes; a museum on a large scale; a chemical laboratory; lecture rooms, for the purpose of delivering lectures; and a gallery of art:

And whereas all of said objects are local in their nature, and confined to the city of Washington and its vicinity, when the design of the liberal donor was not only the increase of knowledge, but the diffusion of it amongst men for the general good:

And whereas said act provides "that there is reserved to Congress the right of altering, or amending, adding to, or repealing, any of the provisions of this act;" therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Library inquire into the expediency of so changing and modifying said act as to establish a department in said institution for the purpose of collecting and arranging information on agriculture, common school education, political economy, and the useful arts and sciences; which information, together with the useful lectures that may be delivered in said institution, shall be published and circulated gratuitously among the people, so as to carry out the design of the testator in diffusing useful knowledge amongst men; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. Cathcart,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing that those persons who have entitled themselves to receive one hundred and sixty acres of bounty land, for their services during the present war with Mexico, and who may be likewise pre-emption claimants upon the Miami lands in Indiana, shall have the privilege of entering such tracts by the application of their bounty land warrants in payment, or part pay, therefor; said warrants to be estimated at two hundred dollars.

On motion of Mr. Dunn,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire whether there is any regulation of the Post Office Department by which greater facilities are given, in the transmission through the post office, to written than to printed matter, the reason or necessity of any such regulations, and whether there has been any unreasonable delay in forwarding any public documents or other printed matter, after being placed in the post office; and also, whether any further legislation is necessary to insure the speedy and safe transmission of all mailable matter deposited in the post office, whether printed or written.

On motion of Mr. Embree,

Resolved, That the government of the United States owns a large quantity of land in the counties of Gibson and Posey, in the State of Indiana, lying on the Wabash and White rivers; which is flat and wet, and subject to overflow, and thereby rendered worthless, and creates disease in the adjoining country; and whereas said lands have been offered for sale more than forty years; and that the same would be of great value were they reclaimed, and the country around them rendered much more healthy.

And whereas it is thought practicable to reclaim said lands by draining and levelling; therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire into the expediency of granting and ceding to said counties the portion of said lands lying in each respectively, for the purposes aforesaid.

On motion of Mr. Henley,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the reception of military bounty land warrants in payment for lands, by persons holding pre-emption rights.

On motion of Mr. Tompkins,

Resolved, That the said committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting such contracts on terms and conditions that certain per cent. of compensation for such services be employed to complete unfinished portions of roads, to fill up links not now connecting, and for the continuation, especially, of the southwestern chain of railroads; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. Tompkins,

And also, that they inquire into the expediency of granting to the Postmaster General authority to branch the mail stage route from Jackson, Mississippi, to Gainesville and Livingston, Alabama, at or east of Hillsboro', so that one branch pass through Philadelphia, in the county of Neshoba, and DeKalb, in the county of Kempa, and the other branch to pass through Decatur, in the county of Newton, and Marion, in the county of Lauderdale, Mississippi; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

And so the said report was agreed to, and is as follows:

“The committee have had the subject referred to them under consideration, and they recommend the printing of the usual number of said report; and, in addition thereto, ninety thousand extra copies of the same without the list of patents, granted and expired, the claims, and the opinions of the chief justice, and ten thousand extra copies of the whole report; and that fifteen hundred copies of the former and five hundred copies of the latter be delivered to the Commissioner of Patents, for the use of the Patent Office.

“The committee have ascertained that the cost of printing this report will be about twenty-six cents per copy, and that the same can be neatly bound, in muslin covers, at a cost of about fourteen cents per copy. This will make the cost, if bound, forty cents per copy; and the aggregate cost of the whole number forty thousand dollars.

“The committee unanimously recommend the binding of the whole number of extra copies.”

On motion of Mr. Albert G. Brown, (by leave,)

Ordered, That said petitions be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Walker, his private secretary; which was delivered in at the Speaker's table.

Mr. John W. Houston moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to offer a resolution relating to a refusal by the Treasury Department to pay to James Crutchett the amount appropriated for his use in the bill (No. 135) entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1848;"

And the question being put, Shall the rules be suspended for the purpose aforesaid?

It was decided in the negative—two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

Mr. Cummins asked leave to present the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That it becomes the people of the United States to rejoice that the sentiment of self-government is commending itself to the favorable consideration and adoption of the intelligent and thinking men of all enlightened nations.

Resolved, That the only legitimate source of political power is the will of the people, and the only rightful end of its exercise their good.

Resolved, That we sincerely hope that down-trodden humanity may succeed in breaking down all forms of tyranny and oppression, and in the establishment of free and rational governments for the good of the governed, and not for the aggrandizement of those who govern.

Resolved, That we tender our warmest sympathies to the people of France and Italy in their present struggle for reform, and sincerely hope they may succeed in establishing free and constitutional governments, emanating from and based upon the will of the governed, suited to their wants and condition, and such as will secure them liberty and safety.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy and hopes of success to every people who are seeking to establish for themselves free and rational governments, and that whatever of blood and treasure may be shed or spent in a struggle of the oppressed against the oppressor, is to be charged to the unjust resistance of the oppressor, who strives to hold and exercise the rights of the people, usurped against their will, and exercised for the benefit of the few and the oppression of the many, and not to the people, who seek only to regain and exercise their natural rights in such manner as will best secure and promote their own happiness and safety.

Objection being made to the introduction of the said resolutions, Mr. Cummins moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to introduce the same;

And the question being put, Shall the rules be suspended for the purpose aforesaid?

Mr. Cummins accordingly introduced his said resolutions, which were read; and the question was stated on agreeing thereto: when

Mr. Ashmun moved to amend the same, by adding at the end of the fourth of the said resolutions the following:

“And we especially see an encouraging earnest of their success in the decree which pledges the said government of France to early measures for the immediate emancipation of all slaves in their colonies.”

The said amendment was read, and the question was stated on agreeing to the said amendment; when

Mr. Ashmun modified the same, by adding thereto the following:

“Recognising as we do that cardinal republican principle, that ‘there should be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except for crime.’”

The question was stated on agreeing to the said amendment as modified.

And, after debate, Mr. Hilliard moved that the said resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Bayly moved that they be referred to a select committee.

The question was stated to be first on the motion to refer to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; when

Mr. Bayly, at the suggestion of Mr. Duer, modified his said motion to read as follows:

“That the resolutions be referred to a select committee of one from each State, with instructions to propose joint resolutions expressing the sympathy of this nation for the French people, in their struggle for civil liberty.”

At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll asked that the message this day received from the President of the United States, and now in possession of the Speaker, be laid before the House.

The Speaker stated that it could be done only by the unanimous consent of the House; and, hearing no objection, he accordingly handed the said message to the Clerk.

The Clerk was in the act of opening the said message, when

Mr. Ashmun objected to its being laid before the House at that time.

Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll raised the point of order that the objection came too late, the message having passed from the possession of the Speaker.

The Speaker decided that the objection was in season, the reading of the message not having been commenced, and that the message could not now be laid before the House.

From this decision Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll appealed.

And the question being put "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to furnish this House copies of the correspondence between Major General Winfield Scott and the Secretary of War during the months of October and November of the year 1846; and especially copies of any letters or despatches of General Scott bearing date on the 27th of October, the 12th, 16th, and 21st of November, detailing the plan of operations to be formed, and the mode of conducting the war with Mexico, both with reference to movements from the gulf coast and from the Rio Grande; and also the replies of the Secretary of War thereto.

Resolved, further, That the President be requested in like manner to furnish copies of any correspondence that may have taken place recently between General Scott and the Secretary of War, with reference to the change of commanders-in-chief in Mexico; and also all letters received from General Scott, either directly from him or transmitted by any other person, dated prior or subsequent to his suspension or removal from the command of the army in the vicinity of Mexico; and also the replies of the Secretary of War thereto; and all other correspondence between General Scott and the Secretary of War not heretofore communicated to Congress.

The resolution was read; and the question being put, Shall the rules be suspended, for the purpose of permitting the same to be introduced?

It was decided in the affirmative—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Thereupon Mr. Clingman introduced his said resolution, and the question was stated, Shall it pass? when

Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll asked leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means ascertain, by consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and otherwise, and report to this House, whether the immediate reduction of fifteen of the thirty per cent. ad valorem now imposed as duties on French productions imported into the United States will not, at this crisis in French government, afford great and seasonable relief to the distressed industry of that country, to which this is so much indebted, and also be without disadvantage, if not beneficial, to the revenue, commerce, and general welfare of the United States.

The said resolution was read; and, objection being made to its introduction,

Mr. Ingersoll moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to introduce the said resolution; which motion was agreed to—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. Ingersoll thereupon introduced his said resolution, and the question was stated on its passage; when

Mr. Vinton moved to amend the same, by striking out all thereof after the word "House" and inserting the following words: "what modifications it is necessary to make in the tariff act of 1846."

Mr. McLane moved to amend the resolution by striking out all of the same after the word "Resolved," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Committee of Ways and Means inquire into the expediency of adopting the following joint resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That from and after the 4th day of July, 1848, all duties now levied by existing laws upon articles imported from the republic of France, the growth and manufacture of said republic, into the United States of America, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; provided the duties now levied by the laws of the said republic upon articles, the growth and manufacture of the United States, imported into the said republic of France, shall be repealed on or before the aforesaid 4th day of July."

The amendment proposed by Mr. Vinton being first in order, the question was stated on agreeing to the same.

And, after debate,

Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll moved the previous question.

Mr. Bayly moved that the said resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Botts moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to introduce the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform this House whether Major General Winfield Scott, commander-in-chief of the United States forces in Mexico, has been arrested or suspended from command; and, if suspended from duty and the exercise of his responsible functions, that the President be further requested to inform this House whether such suspension was occasioned by any breach of orders, violation or neglect of duty, or for powers assumed by said commander in conducting the war with Mexico; and, if so, to state the nature of such breach of orders, violation or neglect of duty, or assumption of power, or what other high military offence has been imputed to the said commander-in-chief, and which, in the opinion of the President, rendered it necessary or expedient, at such a conjuncture of affairs, in time of active operations in the heart of the enemy's country, after a campaign among the most brilliant and successful recorded on the page of history, to deprive the republic of the eminent and valuable services of Major General Scott, to whom the representatives of the people have unanimously voted their thanks, with a medal "as a testimony of the high sense entertained by CONGRESS of his valor, skill, and judicious conduct, in the memorable campaign of 1847."

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be furnished to this House a copy of the charges and specifications, if any, which have been filed against Brevet Major General Worth by Major General Scott, and by him transmitted to the Secretary of War, for trial by general court martial; and that the President be further requested to inform this House whether he has disallowed the charges preferred by the commander-in-chief against a subordinate officer under his command, or whether he has appointed a general court martial for the trial of the said Brevet Major General Worth, in accordance with the provisions and requirements of the law, which in such cases declares "that whenever a general officer, commanding an army, or a colonel, commanding a department, shall be the accuser or prosecutor of any officer of the army, the general court martial for the trial of such officer shall be appointed by the President of the United States;" and, if not, what good reason existed for disregarding the charges of Major General Scott, the superior, vs. Brevet Major General Worth, the inferior officer, while Major General Scott is brought before a court of inquiry in Mexico, upon the charges preferred by said Brevet Major General Worth against his commander-in-chief, General Scott.
