INTRODUCTORY

The magnificent mansion built by the late Charles T. Yerkes, for his own use, is situated at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Sixty-eighth Street, occupying one of the most desirable sites in the finest residence district of New York. It has a frontage of one hundred feet five inches on Fifth Avenue, and one hundred and fifty-three feet on Sixty-eighth Street. The mansion is not only one of the handsomest in New York, but it is one of the most extensive, including, in addition to the residence on the corner, two spacious Picture Galleries on the rear of the Sixty-eighth Street front, and a vast Art Gallery on Fifth Avenue, which is without doubt the largest and finest private hall in the city. These three parts form a single and harmonious whole, being closely related to each other in external design, and conveniently articulated within.

EXTERIOR

The stately exterior in brownstone is both dignified and fine. It is enriched with an abundance of beautiful carved ornament applied in an eminently logical and natural manner. It decorates the frames and crowns of the windows; it is used in the balcony balustrades; it has true place in the frieze at the top of the wall; it is employed most of all at the entrance portico. It is good ornament in itself, beautifully designed, and carefully executed. It is precisely the right thing used in the right way at the right place.

The entrance portico is the chief feature of the Fifth Avenue front. It stands at the head of a flight of steps bordered with a pierced parapet that rises from decorated piers on the sidewalk. Two pairs of columns with richly panelled pilasters support an entablature which is crowned with a balustrade. The shafts of the columns are practically the only undecorated parts here, the portico being naturally the place where the greatest amount of exterior ornamentation may be applied.

On the left is a shallow rectangular bay or projection, hardly strong enough to be designated a bay-window, yet a relief to an otherwise flat wall. It contains three windows in the first and second stories, and is surmounted with a pierced parapet. On the left is a single window, whose ornamental frame is extended above with a band of ornament surmounted with a strongly projecting moulding. There are two windows above. A richly decorated string-course or band is carried wholly around the house between the first and second stories, and a moulded string at the base of the third story windows. Here a new feature is introduced in plain pilasters standing at the corners and in the centre. The window scheme is now changed, the three windows of the two lower stories giving way to two windows in the third and fourth; while on the left, instead of two windows as below, there are three. The entablature contains a broad frieze, in which are small circular windows with wreath-like frames, while the crowning members are given well-proportioned projection. A balustrade surrounds and conceals the roof.

The architectural parts that have been developed in the Fifth Avenue front reappear on Sixty-eighth Street. The long line of the main wall is broken in the centre by a shallow recess. This, however, is only actually seen in the fourth story, since a flat bay-window somewhat similar to the one on Fifth Avenue fills this space in the first, second and third stories, being itself narrowed in the latter. While the windows, as a whole, follow the models already established in the Avenue front, some flexibility is obtained by introducing balconies at the base of the third story windows. They are supported on consoles that form part of the window-frames immediately below them, and are provided with pierced balustrades. The fourth story windows differ also from those on the Avenue, being of the type known as "twin." The circles in the frieze are arranged in pairs. Three chimneys are distinctive features of this front. They are carried to some height above the crowning balustrade, and are treated with angle pilasters supporting an entablature.

A word may be added on the dimensional qualities of this exterior. The actual dimensions are everywhere generous. The windows are high and wide, and it is to their very great advantage that they are regularly spaced in ample areas of wall. No small part of the impressiveness of the mansion is due to this circumstance. There is a fine proportion between the solids and voids. This is helped very much by the Art Galleries.

The Picture Galleries on Sixty-eighth Street are unusual in being two stories in height. The first story exhibits a solid wall, to which are applied a row of pilasters, each decorated with richly carved panels. The entablature is plain, thus bringing out in greater relief the intricate beauty of the supporting members. Above is a loggia, with columns standing on pedestals, between which is a balustrade. As below, the entablature is plain. The gallery wall is recessed and presents a series of round arched windows.

The Art Gallery on Fifth Avenue, although the most grandiose part of the mansion, follows necessarily the general character of the other parts. The lower story has for its single decorative feature a vast doorway, encased within an ornamental frame. A superb marquise of bronze serves as a shelter, below which, on either side, is an immense bronze lantern. The upper wall is also solid, but is relieved with panelled pilasters similar to those used in the galleries on Sixty-eighth Street. A balustrade surmounts the cornice.

As a matter of record, it should be added that Mr. R. H. Robertson was the architect of the mansion, and Mr. Henry Ives Cobb the architect of the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries and the second one on Sixty-eighth Street.

ENTRANCE AND VESTIBULE

The main entrance to the mansion is beneath the portico on Fifth Avenue. The doorway, the frame of which is handsomely carved, is surmounted by a panel of pierced stone. The outer door-frames are of bronze, enclosing great sheets of plate glass. The inner doors are mahogany, natural finish, panelled and decorated with small medallions carved in low relief; they have handsome bronze handles and hinges.

The vestibule walls are entirely lined from floor to ceiling with polished mottled red marble, very beautiful in color and extraordinarily rich and warm in tone. It is designed with pilasters encasing panels of different hue. On either side of the inner door is a cherub head, and similar heads are placed at the top of the centre of each side wall. The ceiling is marble, like the walls, and exhibits a richly coffered design. The floor is Numidian and Siena marble inlaid in patterns.

The inner doors are of bronze, platinum-plated and lined with plate glass. They are massive and handsome in design, and are superb pieces of metal work.

ENTRANCE CORRIDOR AND STAIRCASE

A spacious corridor is disclosed immediately within the entrance door. On the right, beyond a doorway to a small Reception-Room, beautifully designed and painted in Japanese style by W. H. Van Ingen, is the staircase. Beyond, the corridor expands into the Hall, which is developed to the left; while on the right again, filling the very heart of the mansion, is a vast Conservatory that closes the vista on that side and at the far end. It is an interior of surprises, a unique and beautiful plan, developed in a charming manner, intensely individual, fascinating. One discovers presently that there is much costly material here, that there is an abundance of fine ornament, and much to see and admire; yet the first sensation is likely to be the most permanent, and that is sheer delight. It is rare that a house plan produces this effect in so captivating a manner as here.

The corridor and Hall are wholly lined with marble, warm and fine in color, and highly polished. Just beyond the door are two columns with pilasters of rich purple marble, with Ionic capitals of white marble and bases of Istrian marble. They create an inner vestibule which is not shut off from the corridor beyond. The walls have a high wainscot of Istrian marble with moulded base, inset panels of polished gray Convent quarry Siena marble, and decorated frieze. Above are slender hermes, whose heads carry the wall cornice. On the entrance wall are white marble reliefs of women inserted between the hermes, while on the sides are marble panels.

All the ornamental detail in this part of the mansion is very pure classic. It is Greek, yet Greek adapted to modern conditions exactly as a Greek architect might have used the forms and motifs of his own day if called to meet the conditions of a modern dwelling. The beautiful Greek ideas are applied in a masterly manner, and very much of the fine effect of this interior comes directly from their use.

Immediately in face is the great staircase, a magnificent structure of Istrian marble, with white marble treads. The newel at the base has pedestal form, with curved top decorated with rams' heads on the corners. The balustrade is formed of small Ionic columns of Paonazzo marble, two side by side on each step, with a massive moulded rail of Istrian marble. The landing, half way up, is entirely encased with marble, including some panels in relief.

When the new gallery on Fifth Avenue was added to the mansion the landing opened onto a balcony overlooking it. This was taken down, but all the parts have been retained and are stored in the basement. It can, therefore, be readily replaced.

A second flight of steps above the landing reaches the second story. On the main floor a passage below this second flight leads to the Art Gallery. Here, behind the stairs, is the elevator, operated by electricity, and here also are stairs to the basement. The arrangement is compact and economical in space, yet opportunity is provided for a staircase of monumental proportions, treated in a very distinguished manner. The corridor floor is paved with marble and the ceiling is also of marble, handsomely coffered.

The Hall is an expansion of the corridor and opens from it without any line of demarkation. The marble panelling is continued, but the doors are so numerous that the lower wainscot has almost disappeared. The door frames are marble, and purple marble pilasters support the Istrian marble entablature, which includes a frieze of Paonazzo. Above is a balustrade of small Ionic columns that encloses the balcony. This is actually the corridor of the second story, and extends around three sides of the Hall, being omitted on the fourth side for the Conservatory.

The room is two stories in height, and is surmounted with a rectangular dome of burnished gold. Its architectural treatment is very rich and splendid, as befits an apartment of its size and importance. The dome is supported on either end by square piers of purple marble. Three charming caryatids, carved by J. Massey Rhind, carry it above the Conservatory, while opposite them on the corridor wall are three hermes from the same skillful hands. There is a rich cornice and bands of ornament that abut against the central skylight, the frame of which is similarly decorated in relief and which is filled with golden glass. Stained glass windows are between the caryatids.

Directly under the balcony, in the centre of the wall, is the fireplace and chimney. It is purely Greek in design, and remarkably successful. At each end is a lofty pier, slightly moulded at the base, and with a fretted capital that carries above it a beautifully developed anthemion or honeysuckle. On each front is a small medallion head in low relief. Above the fireplace opening is a frieze of white marble reliefs by Mr. Rhind, crowned with frets, both features reappearing on the sides. The chimney breast is faced with a polished marble slab, decorated above with circular medallions, ox-heads and garlands. The floor is white marble, inlaid in patterns with borders.

THE CONSERVATORY

The Conservatory is outside the structural limits of the Hall, yet artistically it is part of it. It consists practically of two sections, being L-shaped in plan, completely bounding the Hall on one of its longer sides, and, as it is extended to the Dining-Room, closing most of its further end as well. Being directly in the centre of the mansion it occupies an unusual position, which makes it much more decorative than when it is placed on the exterior. Generous skylights admit an ample flood of light, and many plants have grown to tropical luxuriance in it during Mr. Yerkes's occupancy. The walls are brick, covered with bark, as a desirable backing for the plants.

Immense windows of plate glass separate the Conservatory from the Hall. They are adjusted with weights and chains, and may be lowered into the basement if desired, thus throwing the Conservatory directly into the Hall. The glass door at the end of the Hall may be disposed of in the same way.

The floor is of marble, and consists of black and white squares, arranged in borders of yellow. At the intersections are small yellow squares in pink triangles. The border is black and pink marble, with an outer strip of white. The waste water that is accumulated in watering the plants is gathered by a drain to a sink in the basement, whence it is carried out of the building by pipes.

THE DRAWING-ROOM

The Drawing-Room occupies the corner of the mansion with three windows on Fifth Avenue and two on Sixty-eighth Street. The walls, from floor to ceiling, are wholly encased in Cipollino marble. At the base is a low wainscot, above which the wall is filled with great marble panels, and the ceiling is carried on a rich frieze and cornice. Each wall is divided into three bays by means of pilasters and columns, both standing on pedestals, which are parts of the wainscot. On the Fifth Avenue front these columns stand entirely free in the shadow recess formed by the bay window, or projection on this side; at either end of this recess is a pilaster. All the ornamental detail, including the borders of the panels, the bands on the wainscot, the bases and capitals of the columns, and the frieze and cornice, are of gilded bronze. The structural features of this room are, therefore, of the richest possible description, and the result is as fine and impressive as it is rich and costly. The ceiling is designed with exposed beams and rafters and richly decorated panels. The ornament, as below, is gilded, and the surface of the panels and other exposed parts are tinted in harmony with the marble of the walls.

There are two doors, both at one end, that look to the Fifth Avenue front. They have ornamental frames with cornices supported on consoles. Richly gilt marble ornaments surmount them. The floor is hardwood, beautifully matched, with a narrow border of white marble.

The fireplace and mantel is in the centre of the Sixty-eighth Street front. It stands between the two columns on this side, which are brought forward to accommodate the chimney breast. It consists of a frieze, decorated with bronze garlands, supported by two white marble caryatids. Above is a great sloping hood, presenting a panelled surface, in the centre of which is a bronze wreath.

THE MUSIC-ROOM

The Music-Room immediately adjoins the Drawing-Room. It has two windows opening onto Sixty-eighth Street. There are four doors; two open into the Hall, one on each side of the chimney; one opens into the Drawing-Room, and the other into the Dining-Room. It is Louis XV in style and is decorated in cream color and gold. At the base of the wall is a low paneled wainscot. The upper walls are, for the most part, panelled in wood. Above the cornice is a great cove, decorated with gilt ornaments, that rises to the central oval of the ceiling, which was painted by Chartran. It is a very poetic composition, thoroughly in harmony with the beautiful room in which it is placed.

The doors and windows are provided with richly carved frames. Over the latter are small cartouches; over the doors are panels painted by Will H. Low, each containing two figures, a man and a woman, with musical instruments. The mantel is white marble, elaborately carved, with gilded facing and back and mosaic hearth. There are two triple built-in mirrors, which are integral parts of the decorations. One is above the mantel; the other is directly opposite, between the windows. It may be added that the corners of the room are rounded, and finished with ornamented panels. The floor is hardwood, with simple border.

THE DINING-ROOM

The Dining-Room is a magnificent apartment, superbly wainscoted in quartered oak with dark brown finish. The style is Elizabethan. The panels are highly carved in relief, and the whole effect is most sumptuous. The ceiling has the form of an elliptical vault, and is in plaster, decorated with ornaments in relief. The spandrils at either end, between the wainscoting and the ceiling vault, have also a rich plaster decoration.

The larger part of one side opens into the Conservatory. Here are columns of green marble with bronze capitals. The doors are of plate glass, and on each side is a plate glass panel, all with frames of gilded bronze. Opposite are two windows opening onto Sixty-eighth Street. Between them is an immense carved sideboard, richly decorated in every part, which is an integral portion of the wainscot. Another sideboard is also built into the entrance wall, between the two doors, by which the room may be entered, one from the Hall and one from the Music-Room. It approximates in design that of the chimney-piece which occupies the centre of the furthest and remaining wall. Above the fireplace, which is faced with green marble, is a great decorated panel, while the crowning frieze is supported by richly carved columns. On the summit, at each end, are two men in armor. A similar decoration completes the sideboard directly opposite. The floor is hardwood.

A door in the wainscoting admits to a passage, in which is the silver safe and which leads to the pantry. It is surrounded with a balcony, giving access to the china closets, with which the upper walls are lined. It contains sink, refrigerator, warming closet, heated by electricity or steam, electric bell service, speaking tubes to the kitchen, and elevators to the kitchen and balcony. The back stairs, which run continuously from the top to the bottom of the mansion, open into the pantry.

THE ART GALLERIES

The two inner sides of this mansion are entirely surrounded by Art Galleries, and it stands quite alone among the larger houses of New York in the facilities it offers for the display of works of art and their enjoyment. The two galleries in the rear were built for the display of paintings, and are two long apartments, reaching from Sixty-eighth Street to the innermost margin of the lot. They are lighted by skylights, and as is the case with all galleries intended for paintings, are without structural features of note. They have parquet floors with borders inlaid with mahogany, and mahogany wainscot.

Quite different is the case with the Gallery on Fifth Avenue. This is a truly regal hall, a hundred feet long by forty feet wide. It is entered immediately from the street without the intervention of a vestibule. A short flight of marble steps leads to the floor level. This Gallery was built by Mr. Yerkes for the display of his marvellous collection of rugs, and for sculpture; but even without these wonderful treasures it is a magnificent room in every respect.

At the base of the walls is a wainscot of Italian marble, with a panel of Paonazzo, that is continued wholly around the room. The cornice, which is enriched with ornament, is of plaster, as is the ceiling, the entire centre of which is occupied by skylights. The interior frame of the entrance door is of Paonazzo marble, richly carved, and reference has already been made to the side balcony, which has been temporarily removed. The floor is white Italian marble.

But the great feature of the room is the superb monumental staircase at the further end. It is built entirely of white marble, with panels of Paonazzo marble, and is a grand conception, carried out in a grand way. With the exception of the panels, practically every part is carved in the most elaborate manner. Both the design and the workmanship are of the highest grade and the structure merits the warmest commendation.

In the centre rises a vast flight of steps, contained within a balustrade of beautiful columns, having their origin in piers of extraordinary beauty. They rise to a platform that is carried wholly across the room, supported below by elliptical arches that have the double advantage of being structural in form and agreeable in design. The balustrade abuts against piers whose consoles support the wall cornice. In the centre of a lofty panelled base, on which stand six columns, one at each end, the others grouped in pairs toward the middle. At each end are short flights of steps that complete the ascent to the Italian Palm Garden above. All of this structure is detailed with the greatest magnificence, and it is a work of unusual splendor in every sense of the word. Behind the stairs, on the main floor, is a vaulted square, every detail of which is worked out with the utmost delicacy; and associated with it, and the final portion of the staircase, are two great rectangular doors, with elaborately carved frames, which admit to the Sixty-eighth Street Galleries, the two systems uniting at this point.

THE ITALIAN PALM GARDEN

The grand staircase of the Fifth Avenue Art Gallery serves as a monumental approach to the Italian Palm Garden, which occupies the space above the Sixty-eighth Street Galleries. It is a spacious and delightful place, having the true character of an indoor, or winter garden. The floor is formed by the skylights that light the galleries below, and which are encased within squares and strips of white marble. The roof is of glass with copper beams. The two end walls reproduce the design of the outer wall within the loggia on Sixty-eighth Street, and consist of arched windows between columns. Single columns without arches form the decorative features of the connecting walls, that on the rear of the house being lined with plate glass mirrors, thus apparently doubling the space of the Garden in a quite legitimate manner. All of this interior is of white marble, save the cornice, which is copper.

Adjoining the entrance from the Fifth Avenue Gallery is a recess with a floor of colored marble lower than the main floor of the Garden. It directly overlooks the Conservatory of the first story, which is open to the roof, and which is surmounted with a pointed arched skylight. Thus all the garden parts of the house are, as it were, brought together, although as a matter of fact, each is well separated and possessed of distinct individuality.

Next to this recess is a small room fitted up in East Indian style, which is really the final room of the main portion of the mansion. It opens onto the corridor that connects with the balcony of the Hall, every part of the interior being in immediate connection with every other part.

THE SECOND STORY

THE CORRIDORS

The corridors of the front part of the mansion all open onto the upper part of the main Hall. The stately and ornamental character which distinguished these parts below characterize them above. The floors are of marble; the walls are wainscoted and panelled with marble and limestone; the cornices are upheld by pilasters of purple marble, and the gilded ceilings have a low elliptical form, with a rich band of ornament immediately above the cornice. The wainscoting consists of a dado of polished marble with a broad-veined band between a moulded base and a fretted cornice. The upper part is lined with limestone, carved in festoons, upheld with small lion heads. This decoration is applied continuously to all the corridor walls on this floor. Beyond the dome of the main Hall is a corridor that connects with the East Indian room, through which the Italian Palm Garden is entered. The festoon decoration is applied to the inner wall, but the outer overlooks the Conservatory. Here, above the marble dado, is a row of windows with swinging sash, opening between marble pilasters with highly ornamented panels.

THE LIBRARY

There are two general rooms on the Fifth Avenue front. The first and innermost is of moderate size and is available for various purposes. The second is the Library, and is one of the most interesting and notable rooms in the mansion. It has two windows, and its walls to within a few feet of the ceiling, are encased with a rich walnut wainscot, part of which is genuine Sixteenth Century work, while the remainder is an exact reproduction of the older panels. The application of the panelling to this room has been done without any injury to the older parts and without any indication of a difference in age between the old and the new.

In design the wainscot is of the richest description. The panels are separated by slender columns that rise directly from the floor and are carried to the crowning cornice with many decorative devices. The lower panels are plain. Then comes a line of small ones that have the quality of a continuous band of ornament. Above them are the main panels, very rich and intricate in their design, while the whole is completed with a cornice consisting of a band of ornament supporting the uppermost mouldings. A distinctive feature of the wainscot is the small carved head above each column. It is a feature that appears everywhere in the woodwork, being used in the cornice of the windows and doorways, as well as in the great panels of the chimney breast. The doors and windows, which rise above the level of the wainscot, reproduce its design and add greatly to the interest of the room. The same motifs are used also in the chimney-piece. Two columns support the shelf, above which is an elaborate overmantel, with a carved figure of a man holding a shield at either end, with a rich assemblage of panels between. The fireplace is black and gold marble.

Book shelves extend on either side of the fireplace and on each side of the return walls, and are also applied to the walls at the entrance of the room. Their design follows that of the wainscoting. Above, running continuously around the room, is a dark frieze with a narrow border top and bottom. The ceiling is panelled in squares with exposed beams and diagonal rafters, all handsomely carved and having decorated bosses at the main points of crossing. The triangular spaces thus formed are painted with scenes and bits of decoration in dark colors.

THE BEDROOM SUITES

There are two bedroom suites on this story, each composed of three rooms—a bedroom, dressing-room and bath.

The first bedroom occupies the corner, and has three windows on Fifth Avenue and one on Sixty-eighth Street. It is a large and spacious apartment, finished in green. The walls are hung with green silk damask, and the ceiling is tinted green. It has a cove cornice, decorated with gold, with gold ornamentation around the border and a central gold ornament. The woodwork is mahogany. The fireplace is built diagonally in one corner and has a mahogany chimney-piece, trimmed with bronze mounts. The fireplace facing is onyx and the backing iron. The large mirror above it has a rich mahogany frame.

The adjoining Dressing-Room is trimmed with rosewood and has a gold-leaf frieze and ceiling. The Bathroom has a polished marble floor and wainscot, above which is a gold frieze and ceiling, with a silver cornice. The bathtub and basin are of marble and a shower is enclosed within a marble screen.

The second suite is likewise composed of three rooms—a bedroom, boudoir and bath. It is distinguished by the same rich treatment and the same attention to details that characterizes the first suite. The Boudoir is an oval room, and is one of the most charming in the Mansion.

THE THIRD STORY

The third story is completely given over to bedrooms and baths. At the head of the stairs is the Red Room, the interior of which is wholly finished in red, walls, ceilings and cornice being of this hue. It is trimmed with mahogany and has two windows opening onto Fifth Avenue. The adjoining bathroom has a mosaic floor and a high tiled wainscoting.

The Empire Room, the name of which is derived from its design, occupies the corner, and has two windows on Fifth Avenue and two on Sixty-eighth Street. It is finished in green, with walls and ceiling of green and green and gold frieze. The trim is mahogany with bronze mounts. The large mahogany mantel has a fireplace with green marble facings. A small passage with closets leads to the adjoining Yellow Room, which has two windows on Sixty-eighth Street. The fireplace has a curved marble facing. Three clothes closets open from the corridor, and then the Maple Room is reached. The name is derived from the wood finish, which includes a mantel, whose shelf carries a mirror, placed behind a colonnade of small columns; the facing is of small tiles. A maid's closet, which is reproduced on each of the upper stories, opens from the corridor, and at the end is a sewing room and bathroom.

The wainscoting of the corridor is mahogany, the upper walls being finished in plaster. The stair balustrade of small columns comes to an end on this floor, where handsome wrought-iron grilles take their places for the floor above.

THE FOURTH STORY

On the Fifth Avenue front of the fourth story is a large room which Mr. Yerkes designated as his "Museum," and in which many of his art treasures were kept. A second room was used as a sleeping room for the housekeeper. Both these apartments are shut off from the other parts of the story by a door.

The remainder of this floor is given up to the use of servants. It contains a linen room, seven bedrooms and a bath.

There is an attic over the whole house.

THE BASEMENT

THE BILLIARD-ROOM

The Fifth Avenue front of the basement is entirely shut off from the service portion and is reached by stairs descending under the main staircase. They lead to a small hall with mosaic floor and marble wainscot, with plaster above. The door frames and doors, as is the case elsewhere in the house, are mahogany. Here is a toilet-room for guests' use, stairs to the cellar and a small room for general use. The wine cellar adjoins, but the most notable apartment is the Billiard-Room, which occupies the corner, with three windows on Fifth Avenue and two on Sixty-eighth Street. It is trimmed with hardwood, with a wainscot with carved panels, above which the walls are hung with leather, decorated with patterns formed by brass nails. The mantel is wood, with facing of Siena marble. Window seats are built below the windows, and on the observation platform at one end is a great seat-chest. The ceiling is plaster, richly decorated in geometrical designs.

THE KITCHEN AND SERVICE ROOMS

The Kitchen is at the foot of the servants' stairs, and is a large room with mosaic floor and tiled walls. It contains a French range with a hood, sink, dresser, and closets. A dumb waiter to the cellar is used for the conveyance of coal, ashes, garbage, etc. A great copper boiler, connected with the range, supplies the house with hot water. A pantry and refrigerator room, with two great batteries of refrigerators, opens off the kitchen. Adjoining is the servants' dining-room, and then a suite of three rooms, available for the housekeeper's use.

Beyond the kitchen is the basement entrance, entered through the areaway on Sixty-eighth Street. The oak door has an iron grille, with white marble steps inside. The corridor has a mosaic floor with a tile wainscot, above which the walls are finished with plaster.

The Laundry adjoins the passage and has six porcelain tubs provided with hot and cold water, ironing stove, steam heater for use in the summer, steam dryer and other conveniences. Opening from other passages are six rooms for the men servants, a pressing room, trunk room, gardener's room, toilets, and numerous store-rooms. The rooms most in use are on Sixty-eighth Street, with windows opening into the area. The interior space, which is very large, is given up to storage and miscellaneous rooms, all of which are readily reached by a well arranged system of corridors.

The cellar extends under the basement and contains the mechanical equipment installed in the mansion, coal pockets, area elevator, service pipes for electricity, gas, steam, water, etc.

CONSTRUCTION

The construction throughout is fireproof. The walls and piers are built of brick, thoroughly bonded, and faced on the exterior with brownstone of selected quality, obtained from special quarries. The floors are constructed of steel beams and hollow terra-cotta arches. Most of the walls are bearing walls, and where isolated supports are required, steel columns have been used. The construction of the roof is the same as the floors throughout, and a copper covering was placed upon the cement which was laid over the flat arches. No wood was used in the construction of the mansion except the sleepers to which the wood flooring was nailed. The construction is everywhere of the best possible quality and is as sound and true to-day as when the building was erected.

The mansion is heated by steam, obtained from the street, but an independent battery of furnaces and boilers is erected in the cellar. It is lighted by electricity and gas, and the plumbing is of the best style. It is throughout supplied with all modern conveniences, and is perfectly equipped in every way.

The mansion is surrounded on Fifth Avenue and Sixty-eighth Street by an area, interrupted only by the portico on Fifth Avenue and a bay window on Sixty-eighth Street. On Fifth Avenue it is lined with brownstone; on Sixty-eighth Street it is lined with white enameled brick. The area is enclosed by a bronze railing, the panels of which are inserted between brownstone piers.

The architectural qualities and the permanent features of this remarkable mansion have been described at some length. It is a house built both for comfort and convenience, but it was also arranged, to a very considerable extent, to house and exhibit many notable works of art. No higher praise can be given than to add that the casket in which these rich jewels were kept was in every way worthy of its contents.

GOTHIC RENAISSANCE MARBLE SCULPTURE

MOTHER SUPERIOR

Height, 32 inches; width, 23 inches; depth, 20 inches. Pedestal: Height, 29 inches; width, 19 inches.

THE treatment is realistic, wrinkles being deeply marked in the forehead and at the top of the nose between the eyes, while a mole appears on the right cheek and another at the right corner of the mouth. The hair is covered with a smooth veil, the ends of which are connected to the gown at the seams upon the shoulders. A collar with a scalloped edge lies upon the simple gown, which is buttoned up at the front. While the right hand is spread upon the breast, the left, held down below the waist, grasps a "Book of Hours." The creamy texture of the marble shows in places beneath a beautiful old stain. The back is hollowed out and left in the rough. With pedestal of Alps green marble. Inscribed on the lower right, "HELISABETTA BLANCHINIA VIZANIA (CICIDLXXXIX)".

ANCIENT MARBLE GROUP

"BACCHUS"

UNKNOWN ARTIST

Height, 3 feet 2½ inches; length, 5 feet 9 inches. Base: Height, 2 feet; length, 6 feet 10½ inches.

AN ancient figure in marble of a reclining Bacchus. On his head is a wreath, in his right hand a cup, and in his left a small basket of grapes, while at his shoulder is a small panther resting its right paw upon his arm.

In a book published at Leipzig in 1881, called "Antike Bilde-werke in Rom," by Friedrich Metz, this statue is described on page 94, number 360, as follows: "Dionysos (Bacchus) lies com-
left shoulder across the back, falling across his knees, leaving the head bare. He supports himself on his left elbow. The hand holds a cornucopia, somewhat small, but well filled with fruits and flowers. A female panther puts her right forepaw on the cornucopia. In the neck, on which the elbow rests, is bored a small hole. A frog is looking out of this hole, in which you will notice the remains of a pipe from which water had squirted. The other arm of Dionysos is extended toward the right knee, and holds an antique patera. The head seems to be antique (parallel with the neck), and the hair is curled (like a female's), and gathered at the back of the head in a krobylos. The pupils of the eyes are very prominent.

Note at bottom of article: "There is no doubt that the patched-up neck of the panther is modern. The cornucopia is, with the exception of a few leaves, antique." Has massive Veræ antique marble base.

This piece of sculpture was purchased by Mr. Yerkes in Rome.

CARRARA MARBLE GROUP

“PYGMALION AND GALATEA”

BY JEAN LÉON GÉRÔME

Group: Height, 6 feet 6 inches. Pedestal: Height, 2 feet 1 inch.

IN one of Ovid's volumes the story of "Pygmalion and Galatea" is beautifully told. The former is represented as a sculptor, who, "shocked at the vices of the females of that time, ingeniously carved a statue with wondrous skill, and gave it a beauty with which no woman can be born, and then conceived a passion for his own workmanship." At one time, as the story goes, he employed soft expressions; at another, he brought her presents agreeable to maidens—such as shells and smooth pebbles, like birds and flowers of a thousand tints, and lilies and painted balls—"and tears of the Heliades that have fallen from the trees." Next, in the narrative, comes the festival of Venus, which was much celebrated throughout Cyprus, wherein Pygmalion was made to stand before the altar and timorously say: "If ye gods can grant all things, let my wife be, I pray, like to the statue." The golden Venus, as the story proceeds, was present at the festival, and, understanding what the prayer meant, caused a flame to be thrice kindled upon the altar as an omen of the favor of divinity. Pygmalion returned to his home soon after, repaired to the image of his maiden, and kissed it, and it seemed to grow warm. The statue was then pressed, and was found soft, and to yield to the touch. He was amazed, and very naturally rejoiced, though with apprehension and fear that he had been deceived. Again and again he touched the body, and a thrill of pleasure coursed through his veins; indeed, the hero gave thanks to Venus, and, as he did so, "the maiden raised her timorous eyes toward the light of day, and at once saw her lover and the heavens."

So much for this mythological tale, which has been dramatized by Rousseau, the French author, and is familiar to the literary and art world.

This group was exhibited in the Salon of 1892, in Paris, and was then brought to the residence of the present owner, where it has ever since remained. Has a colored marble pedestal.

ORAZIO ANDREONI

Italian School

ORAZIO ANDREONI belongs to that group of Italian sculptors who have constituted what is known as the modern Roman School. His work includes portraiture and imaginative subjects, the latter characterized by a blending of the classical and naturalistic styles and by considerable dramatic spirit. He is well represented both in England and in the United States. Other examples of his art in this country, besides the one in this collection, are a bust of Colonel Franklin Fairbanks and a marble statue of "Ruth," both of which, in 1890, were in the possession of Mrs. Frank H. Brooks.

“PEREAT”

BY ORAZIO ANDREONI

Height: 78 inches; base, 27 inches by 27 inches.

Pedestal in two steps: Height, 34 inches; width, 30 inches; depth, 50 inches.

ON the lower step of the pedestal, which is of gray stone, lie a bronze sword and helmet of a gladiator. The two marble figures that crown the pedestal are represented as spectators of a gladiatorial combat. The elder, one foot stepping down from the base on which she stands, leans forward, with arm extended and the thumb of her fist down, while the expression on her face shows that she has no pity for the conquered. “Let him perish.” Meanwhile her companion, a younger girl, stands with folded arms, gazing with a look in which fascination and horror are united.

Signed and dated, “O. ANDREONI, Rome, 1892.”

JEAN ANTOINE HOUDON

French School

HOUDON, the most noted French sculptor of the Eighteenth Century and the Revolutionary Period, was born at Versailles in 1740. His teachers were Pigalle and Michel Slodtz. The former was distinguished for the sense of life that he imparted to the ideal beauty of his figures. While under the influence of Slodtz the pupil executed the "Statue of St. Bruno," which adorns the vestibule of Santa Maria degli Angeli, in Rome. This was produced by Houdon during the seven years that he spent in that city as a holder of the Prix de Rome, which he had gained in his twentieth year. In the Salon of 1771 he was represented by a "Statue of Morpheus," while other imaginative subjects that followed were the bronze "Diana" of the Louvre, a replica of the former now in the Yerkes collection; "Summer," and "La Frileuse," "The Shivering Girl" in the Montpellier Museum. But the expression of life which was shown in these works was carried to its completeness in what became his most characteristic art, namely, the extraordinarily naturalistic portraits of famous men. Filled with the ardor of the Revolution, his aim grew to be the representation of "the true form and image of the men who have brought honor and glory to their country." His constant instruction to his pupils was "Copiez, copiez toujours, et surtout copiez juste." Hence resulted his portrait statue of Voltaire, in the Théâtre Français, and those of Buffon, Mirabeau, Napoleon, and the Empress Josephine and others. His friendship with Benjamin Franklin, whose portrait he made, led to his visiting the United States, where he made the portrait statue of Washington, now in the State House at Richmond. Houdon was a member of the French Institute, and one of the first Chevaliers of the Legion of Honor upon its creation by Napoleon during his consulate. He died in Paris in 1828.

LIFE-SIZE BRONZE FIGURE

“DIANA”

By JEAN ANTOINE HOUDON

Height with Pedestal, 9 feet 6 inches.

THIS is a graceful nude figure supported on the left foot, with the right extending behind as though in the act of running. In her left hand she carries a bow, and in her right an arrow. This figure is inscribed on the base: “Houdon F 1782 pour Jn Girardot de Marigny.”

Bought through an agent from Sir John Scott, who inherited all the French property from Sir Richard Wallace, including the contents of Bagatelle, where this statue formerly stood. There are but two of these bronze statues existing which are by Houdon, one being in the Louvre, mentioned in notice on J. A. Houdon, published 1856, page 179. Notice in “Dictionnaire Général des Artistes de l'École Française,” published 1882, page 778, in which this statue is by mistake placed in the Louvre. The statue in the Louvre has not Marigny's name upon it, while this one has. In “French Architects and Sculptors of the XVIII Century,” by Lady Dilke, published 1900, on page 132 is the following: “In the bronze repetitions of the figure this support is needless, and that in the Louvre, which bears the date 1790, as well as the earlier one, dated 1782, is poised on the left foot, the bow inclined downward from the left hand, whilst the arrow in the right indicates the point to which the eyes of the goddess are directed. Lord Hertford in 1870, and is now at Hertford House. It is the work to which Houdon refers in his letter of August 12, 1782, to the Director-General. He then invites him to visit 'une Diana de sa composition quil il vient de couler en bronze.' It bore an inscription, stating it was executed for M. Girardot de Marigny." It would therefore appear that the statue here mentioned was the first of the two made in bronze. The second was made in the latter part of 1783 or 1784. Lady Dilke says it remained in the sculptor's hands, and did not leave his studio until after his death, when it went directly to the Louvre.

FREDERICK MACMONNIES

American School

FREDERICK MACMONNIES was born in Brooklyn in 1863. At the age of seventeen he was received as an apprentice-pupil into the studio of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, meanwhile attending the life classes at the National Academy and the Art Students' League. In 1884 he went to Europe, and after a brief stay in Paris moved to Munich, where for some months he studied painting. Then he was recalled home to assist Saint-Gaudens. A year later he returned to Paris and entered the École des Beaux Arts under Falguière, twice winning the Prix d'Atelier, which ranks next to the Prix de Rome, and is the highest prize open to foreigners. Taking a studio of his own, he executed his first statue, a "Diana," which gained Honorable Mention at the Exposition Universale of 1889. A commission followed for three angels in bronze for the Church of St. Paul in New York, succeeded in 1889 and 1890 by commissions for the Hale and Stranachan statues. The last was awarded a Second Medal at the Salon of 1891. After executing two small fountain designs, "Pan of Rohallion" and "Faun and Heron," he accomplished the main fountain of "Columbia" at the Chicago Exposition. Subsequently he modelled the pediments for the Bowery Savings Bank and spandrels for the Washington Arch in New York; later, groups and a quadriga for the arch in Brooklyn, and groups for the Indiana State Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial at Indianapolis. Among his notable single statues may be numbered the "Sir Harry Vane" of the Boston Public Library, the "Shakespeare" of the Congressional Library, the "Fame" at West Point, and the "Bacchante" of the Metropolitan Museum and the Yerkes Collection. Meanwhile, these pieces form but a part of his accomplishments, which have included a variety of statuettes, medallions, busts and low-relief portraits. In recent years Macmonnies has turned from sculpture to painting.

BRONZE STATUE

“BACCHANTE”

BY FREDERICK MACMONNIES

Height, 7 feet. Pedestal: Height, 2 feet 6½ inches.

THE Bacchante represents a nude figure of a girl standing on the toes of her right foot, which rests upon the pedestal. The left foot is drawn up, the heel being about on a level with the right knee. She is in the act of dancing. On her left arm rests a young child, and she grasps it around the breast with her left hand. The child is anxiously looking with open mouth at a bunch of grapes which the Bacchante displays temptingly to the child's gaze by holding it up at arm's length. A smile is on the features of the Bacchante. This is one of two figures modelled by the artist, one of which was presented to the Boston Public Library, only to be refused by the Board of Trustees. Either that one or the second one was presented to the Metropolitan Museum in New York. By many persons this work is considered the most artistic piece of bronze produced in the Nineteenth Century.

It is signed: "F. MACMONNIES, 1893."

BORN at Paris in 1716. Died in the same city in 1791. Was a pupil of Lemoine. Was received as associate to the Academy, August 29, 1744, and as academician thereto, August 31, 1754, on a "Milon de Crotone," now in the Louvre Museum. He became assistant professor July 5, 1755, professor March 7, 1761, and sub-rector April 26, 1783. With very few interruptions he exhibited in the Paris Salon from 1745 to 1765, and in 1766 was called to St. Petersburg by the Empress Catherine II of Russia, in order to execute a colossal statue of Peter the Great. He was not, however, worthily rewarded, and this caused him to leave Russia and return to France in 1778.

AUGUSTE RODIN was born in Paris in 1846. His earliest recorded work is a head, "The Man With the Broken Nose," executed in 1864. During five years, ending in 1870, he worked in the studio of Carrier-Belleuse, and from 1872 for another five years was one of the sculptors engaged on the frieze for the Bourse of Brussels. In 1877 he exhibited at the Salon a plaster reproduction of "The Age of Bronze." Its naturalism drew down upon it a storm of disfavor, confused with the absurd charge that it had been modelled directly from life. When the statue, cast in bronze, was re-exhibited at the Salon of 1880, it was bought by the State. During the next ten years Rodin's activity included the figures of Saint Jerome, John the Baptist, "L'Homme qui Marche," an equestrian statue of Général Lynch, busts of Legros, Dalou, and Victor Hugo, and Adam and Eve, and other figures for "The Gate of Hell"—a work that with constant addition and revision is still occupying the artist's imagination and time. The following decade was rich in productivity. Among the works of this period are "The Burghers of Calais," "The Monument to Victor Hugo," busts of Puvis de Chavannes and Henri Rochefort, "La Danaïde," now in the Luxembourg; the "Dream Group" and the "Group of Life"; ideal subjects, such as "Thought," "Hope," "The Muse of Meditation," "The Poet and the Contemplative Life," and numberless subjects expressive of the emotions; as, for example, the two groups in the Yerkes Collection. In 1898 the artist exhibited his statue of Balzac, which was rejected by the French Government. The work in a sense epitomized what has been the labor of Rodin's art life, namely, to interpret nature, but with an ever-increasing desire to utilize form, not as an end in itself, but as a means of expression. Despite the antagonism which such aims could not fail to arouse from Academic sources, Rodin has been the recipient of some of the highest honors in the gift of the State. Since 1889 he has been "Hors Concours" at the Exhibitions, and in 1903 was raised in the Legion of Honor to the rank of Commander. He maintains a large studio in the Rue de l'Université, and another adjoining his home on the hill at Meudon.

CARRARA MARBLE GROUP

“CUPID AND PSYCHE”

BY AUGUSTE RODIN

Height, 30 inches; length, 48 inches; width, 24 inches.

A LETTER from Rodin, dated July 23, 1894, states that this piece is unique, and that it shared with the “Orpheus and Eurydice” the distinction of being the first original work by him acquired in this country. From the rocky bank on which the two figures are lying, a diagonal shaft projects upward at the left. Upon the extremity of this the left hand of Cupid is planted, so that the straight arm braces the body, which from the knees up is raised over the body of Psyche. But she has drawn hers up toward her lover’s by her left arm, which encircles his back below the wings. Meanwhile her right arm is held across her bosom, the hand spread with the palm exposed. Upon her forehead, as she looks up, the god has laid his left temple, so that his face looks away from hers. But both faces are withdrawn from immediate view, the chief expression being secured by the disposition of the bodies and limbs, and the remarkable contrasts of tenseness and supple yield in the action of the muscles. Mentioned in the “Study of Auguste Rodin,” by Léon Maillard.

"ORPHEUS AND EURYDICE"

By AUGUSTE RODIN

Height, 50 inches; width, 30 inches. White marble pedestal: Height, 25 inches; diameter, 38 inches.

THIS group by the foremost living sculptor is, like the other group of "Cupid and Psyche," a unique piece. According to a letter from Rodin himself, dated July 23, 1894, they were the first original works by him that found their way to this country. He explains in the same letter that the present group should be placed against the light, that the rocky background, representing the Gate of Hell, may be engulfed in shadows. The figure of Orpheus has emerged into the light, but that of Eurydice is still in the penumbra. She is keeping close behind her husband, as he leads her out into the upper air; his left hand clutching his hair, which has fallen over his bowed head, that he may steady himself from looking back. Meanwhile her right arm hangs down behind her husband's right arm, her left hanging down beside his left side, as if she were gently pushing him forward and keeping his body from turning, at the same time guiding her own movements by his. For her eyes are closed, and in the marvelously sensitive modelling of the face are expressed the wan, pinched look of one who has been long in darkness and the poignant yearning of a soul hovering on the edge of hope and fear. A strange nervelessness characterizes the action of both of the figures, as if they were moving under the spell of Destiny. Mentioned in the "Study of Auguste Rodin," by Léon Maillard.

Signed and dated on the foot of the rock on the right, "A. RODIN, 1893."

ÉDOUARD HENRI LOMBARD

A NATIVE of Marseilles, where he was born about 1860, Henri Lombard studied in Paris under Cavelier. His progress was rapid. At the Salon of 1880 he gained a Second Medal, and three years later won the coveted Prix de Rome. In 1889, at the Universal Exposition, he received a Silver Medal, and in 1894 was elected a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. The Gold Medal was awarded him at the Universal Exposition of 1900. On this occasion he was represented by a marble group of "Samson and Delilah," purchased by the French Government; by a bronze bas-relief, "Apollo, the Conqueror," and by a group in stone, "La Paix," which decorates the Grand Palais des Beaux-Arts. Among his most recent achievements is "Hommage à Antoine Watteau," commissioned by the State to adorn the Garden of the Carrousel at the Louvre. His work is distinguished by remarkable purity of design and poetic feeling.

Total height, 12 feet 7 inches; base, 19 inches square.

AROUND the foot of the marble shaft is a running design of an infant Bacchus in a chariot drawn by leopards, preceded by a dancing child and another lying on its back, and again by a gambling and a fallen leopard. Above this embellishment the shaft is entirely covered with a deeply incised flat network of vine tendrils, interspersed with leaves and grapes, among which sport and hide numerous figures of fauns, satyrs, birds and animals, represented with remarkable naturalness and playful charm. The capital, which appears to have belonged originally to another shaft, is decorated with acanthus leaves, above which are very interesting remains of nude figures. The base, of black marble, is carved in flatter relief, having on the obverse a design of two griffins supporting a tripod altar; on the reverse, a wolf suckling the infants Romulus and Remus, and on the sides a grotesque face and scroll-work.

ANTIQUÉ GREEK MARBLE SARCOPHAGUS

Height, 34 inches; length, 90 inches; width, 32 inches.

THE subject displayed upon the front panel represents the nine Muses, Phœbus, Apollo and Athene, the figures standing in a row against the background of a draped curtain. Beginning on the left appears Polyhymnia, the Muse of Sacred Poetry, with her draperies drawn tightly round the figure and a scroll in her hand. Separated by a sun-dial in the background follows Terpsichore, the Muse of Song and Dance, holding two pipes. Next is seen Thalia, with a mask of Comedy in one hand and a pipe in the other. She is succeeded by the Muse of Tragedy, Melpomene, who bears a tragic mask, while her right hand supports the club of Hercules upon the head of a bull. Another tragic mask, lying on the ground, separates her from Euterpe, Muse of Lyric Poetry, who holds a lyre and a plectron. Next appears Apollo, in the costume of a Cithern player, originally playing a lyre, but the latter and both hands are broken. Beside him is a tripod altar, around which a snake is entwined. Facing it is a griffin, which stands below the figure of Athene. She is represented with a Greek helmet on her head, and her two hands clasping a spear, leaning toward the right as she rests her left foot on a block. A tragic mask hangs between her and the succeeding figure of Clio, Muse of History, who carries a scroll. Following her is Erato, Muse of Erotic Poetry, holding a lyre; Urania, of Astronomy, with globe and sword; and, finally, Calliope, the Muse of Epic Poetry. She bears a tablet which shows the point of a stylus, but the hand holding the latter has been broken. The ends of the sarcophagus are decorated in bas-relief with differing designs of a beaked vessel, propelled by one oarsman, while a warrior stands erect against the background of the sail.

Existing documents point to the belief that this piece originally belonged to Don Maffeo, Prince Colonna of Sciarra, and formed one of the items which in 1811 he divided between his son and his cousin, Don Francesco Barberini di Palestrina, Canova, the sculptor, acting as expert adviser. It is described in "Antike Bildwerke in Rom" by Frederick Matz and Duhn, Vol. II, page 409, as "No. 3272 Palazza Sciarra." It is also mentioned in an "Inventory of the Palazzo Barberini," and by Winckelmann, Werke II, page 617, and in various other works.

THE INTERIOR DECORATIONS OF JAPANESE ROOM

TUESDAY 325—THE JAPANESE ROOM

APRIL 12

Executed in Japan, from special designs for Mr. Yerkes, including embroideries, paintings, and other fixtures. The "flower-festival" motif of this room was suggested by an old Japanese story of a great prince who had met a beautiful yet mysterious young lady, with whom he exchanged fans as a token of friendship—while her identity remained unknown to him. Failing in his other endeavors to discover this former owner of the fan, the prince decided to give a garden fête, and so shows the beautiful fan to the ladies, hoping thus to discover its former owner. All the ladies present flock to see such a wonderful fan, save one, who draws back and endeavors to hide, and thus reveals herself. It is this latter incident which is pictured in embroidery on the two large wall panels (opposite window), where the prince appears with a friend, screened from his guests, and notes the fairy lady together with her serving companion in a distant part of the grounds. The ceiling, with its panel arrangement, is centered by a representative of this rich fan; the more simple one of the prince appears on a panel over the entrance door. The woodwork, including ceiling, can easily be taken apart, since all was erected without nails or glue; dovetailed Japanese fashion. The ceiling actually rests upon, and is supported by, the side pillars from the floor. The entire work was undertaken in Tokio during 1895 by Mr. K. Okakura, then President of the Imperial Art School in that city, under the care of Mr. W. B. Van Ingen, for Mr. Yerkes.

Height of room, 13 feet 6 inches. Floor size, 14 feet 5 inches by 16 feet 8 inches. Without small recess.

344—SILK CARPET OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

Warp, silk. Weft, silk. Pile, silk. Texture, 440 hand-tied Persian knots to the square inch.

All the grotesque realism of the later period, the Mohammedan myths, the adulation of wealth and power, the pervading Persian fondness for profuse ornamentation, are combined into the sublimated jumble with some skillful bazaar designer of Kashan has chosen to make of this carpet. There are trees, fruits, flowers, birds, animals, fishes, men, and a modicum of minute conventional ornament. The carpet has a symbolism, but all of it seems to centre in and be tributary to a dignitary not of the Kadjar tribe, who affected black whiskers and attained to the ownership of sundry medals for valor, all of which are faithfully put in evidence. That he tamed by hand such lions as are here portrayed should not in reason add much to his renown, but behind him his retainers, apparently of several tribes, are grouped in servile and solemn adoration. His "tree" is upheld by others, plainly of Caucasion extraction, and every tree and plant and bird, even to the peacocks in the lower corners, seems to be tuneful with his praise.

Length, 9 feet 7 inches; width, 6 feet 11 inches.

DISTRIBUTING ALMS

Height, 15¾ inches; length, 27¾ inches.

ON the left of the scene appears the gabled end of a building, into the side of which has been built a portion of white wall, surmounted by a bas-relief of three figures. On the parapet of the steps that lead up to the doorway of the building rests a basket of loaves, from which a woman is distributing alms to the poor and afflicted. Many of these bear testimony to the ravages made by the War of Independence. For example, in the group around the steps appears a man who has lost a leg, while in the foreground another, who has lost both feet, is shuffling forward on his knees and hands, the latter holding little crutches. A blind man is following the lead of his dog, and other specimens of the halt and the maimed are making their way hither from the distance, some approaching from the towered gateway of a city on the right. In the background brownish-gray hills show against faint fleecy clouds that hang below a greenish-gray sky.

ITALIAN LANDSCAPE, WITH FIGURES

Height, 32 inches; length, 37 inches.

CONSPICUOUS on the left of the composition is a natural arch of rock or possibly the ruined remains of some antique building, now overgrown with greenery and surmounted by sapling trees and bushes. In the shadow beneath it appears a doorway, through which a man is bringing a tankard of beer to three others, who are seated at a table. A girl and a child are coming away from them toward the centre, where the principal group is disposed. A shepherd, clad in a sheepskin, stands beside an ox, on which a buxom woman is seated. To the right of the ox appears a donkey laden with panniers, and distributed around are a dog, three sheep and a goat. The last is white, as also are some wrappings over the donkey's panniers and the woman's sleeves, these forming the prominent spots of bright light in the composition. Farther back on the right, beneath a ruined tower, some shepherds are grouped around a woman. Trees appear in the farther distance, and over their tops rises a mountain with a conical peak. A warm amber glow pervades the lower sky, above which is a stretch of luminous greenish blue.

CHURCH OF THE JESUITS, VENICE

Height, 19½ inches; length, 29½ inches.

THE view shows a vista of the Grand Canal, bordered on the left by the Fondamenta della Zattere. In the centre of the quay appears the columned façade of Madonna del Rosario, the Church of the Gesuati. Various craft cluster along the quayside, in the distance being a square-rigged vessel. In mid-channel, coming toward us, with two brilliant orange sails, is a boat, which is also being propelled by two pairs of oars.

LUMIÈRES

Height, 27½ inches; length, 36 inches.

THE scene represents one of this artist's visions of architecture, seen in a suffused moonlight that is blurred in places by the ruddy glow of the windows, lit from the inside. On the right of the foreground are two houses, their lower stories fronted by an open door and large windows, through all of which a soft red and yellow glow is visible. The outer walls are of white plaster set between posts, which are surmounted by wooden corbels, supporting the projections of the upper story. Beyond the second house the main road is met by a cross street, on the opposite side of which is a corner building, white with a high-pitched slate roof, terminating in a point. Its lower windows are warm with glow, and in front of the one which faces the main street appears a figure beside a hand-cart. Near it, in the roadway, stands a two-wheeled wagon with a blue hood, drawn by a white horse. The vista of the street is continued with other buildings, among them one with a red-tiled roof. The coloring of the road is a drowsy drab, while the sky is luminous with slightly greenish creamy vapor. This picture received Honorable Mention at the Exhibition of the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, 1901.

LOUIS XV BEDROOM

(SECOND FLOOR)

do 856—GORGEOUS LOUIS XV BEDSTEAD

Made by Zwiener, of Paris. Executed in palissandre and marquetterie, with superlative ormolu bronze mounting. Cast from specially prepared models, of which some were used only on one occasion before (for Ludwig II, the late King of Bavaria, and destined for the Royal Hohen-Schwangau Palace). This applies especially to the large ormolu figures in torso, with accompanying ornaments, that form the posts on head-piece; as also to the sleeping cupid surmounting the centre, with the helmet of Ægis. The foot-board, which was especially modelled for Mr. Yerkes, sustains other cupids in free relief, that hold up draperies, revealing radial rays of the rising sun, forming a background for the large couchant figure of a nymph. This composition allegorically represents the Dawn of Morning, as the head-piece, with its sleeping amour suggests Night. These castings, besides being most carefully chased, are gilt in the old mercury process. Complete with palissandre and ormolu dome-piece, forming canopy, and matching the bedstead, green silk damask side curtains, with passementerie trimmings and draperies. French box springs and hair mattress, and a bedspread of green satin, with lace bordering. Has a raised green satin tufted platform, in the French style.
