

...this is my story

1953 CRUISE BOOK

Dedication in Memory of

Lt. R. B. Hull MC USNR

"We are gathered here to honor the memory of a shipmate, who was so well known to all of you that nothing I can say can add to the admiration and affection we all had for him, nor detract from the deep feeling of loss in which we all share; a loss the more keenly felt because of its apparent untimeliness.

But life is not measured in span of years alone; it has breadth and depth as well. If life has meaning and value, certainly these are demonstrated in the relationships between individuals expressed in terms of fellowship, good-will and service.

The cheerful smile, the thoughtful courtesy, and the friendly understanding which characterized Dr. Hull's relationship with all his shipmates will be remembered and treasured long after the sharp shock of our sudden loss has been dulled by the gentle passage of time."

Captain J. R. Weisser.

(Words taken from the shipboard memorial service for Dr. Hull)

THIS DOCTOR WAS KILLED WHILE AT FLIGHT QUARTERS. A HELICOPTER HAD JUST LANDED WITH 6 CLASS ABLE WOUNDED. THE DOCTOR RAN AROUND THE REAR OF THE PLANE AND WAS DE-CAPATED BY THE TAIL ROTOR. A FINER DOCTOR NEVER LIVED!

Want to hear a sea-story? Let me tell you mine . . . no, just a small portion . . . that segment of my tale that occurred in 1953. It is a true story, and an interesting one. It's a war story and also one of peace; it's funny and it's sad; it's written in the multi-accented voices of Americans from every portion of the land and every walk of life, yet the unity of purpose speaks in an accent we all know, it's straight from the heart. Me? I'm the USS HAVEN AH-12.

Built in 1944 for the Maritime Commission as a C-4 type vessel, I was taken over by the Navy and converted into a hospital ship and commissioned on 5 May, 1945. I was at Okinawa and Ulithi; I took neuropsychiatric and tubercular patients from Hawaii to the United States; and, at the end of World War II, I processed, hospitalized and transported 10,000 ex-prisoners of war from prison camps on Kyushu. Later I served as an experiment station, laboratory and hospital for "Operation Crossroads."

Then, on 1 July, 1947, I was placed in inactive status at San Diego and for three years was a member of the "moth-ball" fleet. The tragic sinking of my sister-ship, the USNS Benevolence TAH-13, brought me from my plastic-shrouded dormancy, and on 15 September, 1950, I once again sailed westward, this time to Korea.

My presence in the peninsular waters was counted as one of the prime morale-building factors of the Korean conflict. The men ashore, who daily encountered perils that never became commonplace, knew they had a haven if that should be their "unlucky day". I would be there waiting for them, with the latest equipment science could provide; a crew of skilled, well trained willing men and women, and an atmosphere that said, "We care".

Beneath my shining red universal symbol of mercy, those who had suffered the pain of war's reality knew the compassion of man. The unaccountable value of a cool hand that invaded the black fury of pain, the comforting voice that stilled the inner shrieking of fear, and the pin-stripped blur that was always there with every need; these, too, I brought with me, these intangible, great gifts.

The people who brought me through the rough seas, the others who steered men through even rougher waters, those who ran my machinery, repaired my body, supplied my needs . . . they were my character, my soul, and my heart. This is my story, and theirs. Want to hear a sea-story? Let me tell you mine.

US NAVY HOSPITAL SHIP
HAVEN

Now came the "working part" of my journey . . . a task to complete. It was gratifying to see what a compact unit of men and women I held. The weeks of shaking down the crew, the concentrated work and preparation, all helped to develop my well-rounded personality: The stage was set and the crew was beginning to realize that they had a job to do, and that it was worth doing.

Churning through the miry waters of this Oriental basin was not a new experience for me, for I had been here before as had most of my crew. The rustic beauty of Korea was still contained in those low, peaceful looking, peakless mountains. Those curious fishing boats were still laboring with the same patience. That same greenish water with its treacherous current still flowed past my hull. And yes, that same impenetrable haze was hovering all around us. Our entrance was not glamorous, nor was it expected to be. My anchor was soon dropped with the usual thundering noise, suggesting the beginning of my mission, and I found myself nestled with other ships that proudly flew the American ensign.

In the days that followed I watched my crew perform its seemingly endless task. My brand-new flight deck, shiny and inexperienced, began gathering the clumsy looking helicopters from the sky as if it were a powerful magnet of some sort and soon it lost its immaturity by presenting a scene of precision work each time a copter landed. The Medical Officer-of-the-Day, along with the dozens of other men necessary to complete this operation, greeted each arriving helicopter. Their jobs were important and together they formed a very necessary team. The men in heavy, Mars-like, asbestos fire suits stood ready for any tragedy as the "control man" guided the helicopter to a safe landing. As the noisy motors decreased to a jerky idle and the "all-clear" was given by the pilot, a small band of litter bearers crouched their way to the machine and lifted the patients out carefully, but swiftly. At this point the medical officer made his initial inspection, determining the needs of the patient. If the patient was in a critical condition, plasma and oxygen were available in the well-stocked Emergency locker adjacent to the flight deck. Those patients not critically injured were sent to a screening point within the hospital for distribution to the various wards. Time was the all-important factor to cope with and the movements of men and equipment had to be practically flawless.

Days grew into weeks . . . weeks into months, and time dissolved like sugar in the breakfast coffee. The work never ceased . . . not entirely, and it seemed as if there was always a job to do. Decks needed scrubbing, bulkheads needed re-painting, there were supplies to be brought aboard at regular intervals, messages were to be sent, and a host of activities to be performed each and every day. The patients continued to stream in—sometimes with great pressure, sometimes just a trickle. The doctors, nurses and corpsmen never stopped administering comfort and treatment to the less fortunate. There was always something to do.

I probably sound as if I worked my crew unreasonably hard. It's not so. When there was work to be done, my crew was willing, for, after all, that's why we were here.

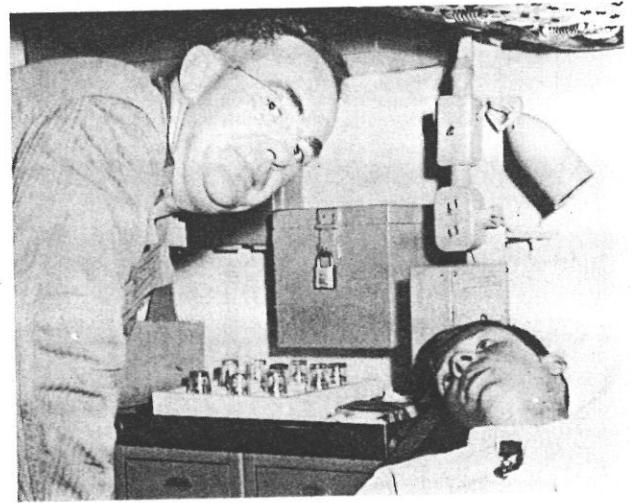

To sailors no day is complete without some brand of entertainment. I offered them as much as I could. Movies were held nightly, and one night a week was usually set aside for bingo, affording everyone the chance to win some wonderful prizes. We had our share of USO shows, Marine and Army Special Service presentations . . . all greatly appreciated by crew and patients. Yes, there was always some form of relaxation or entertainment, even those long chats with your buddy about future plans.

Liberty, and we found Inchon a maze of timeless buildings with an occasional gutted structure standing as an ever-present reminder of war. The people amazed us with their oriental pacifism—as if nothing were going on. My men filtered through the narrow streets, clustered with shops and markets, in quest of a memento of Inchon. The EM Club provided a welcome relief with its Occidental ways. Here you could satisfy your thirst with anything from beer to Scotch, listen to some of the more recent records on the juke box, and even have a sandwich while gabbing with your buddies about favorite topics. An afternoon spent here helped my men forget, for a few hours, their worries and cares. But the hands of the clock seemed to move with the pace of the club, and liberty was soon over.

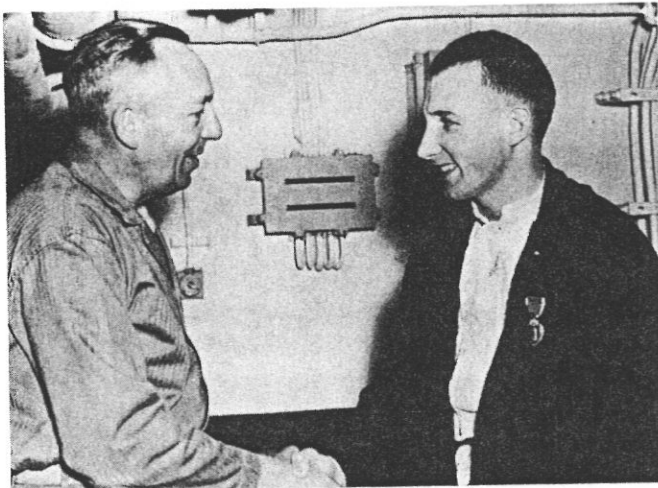

And so at the end of liberty in Inchon, my men came back to me. Some had taken pictures, some had toured the city on foot studying Oriental customs, and some remained at the EM Club enjoying their "tall, cool ones." It wasn't the best liberty in the world, but somehow they always had a good time. There is little else to say about our time spent in Inchon. When we worked, we worked hard . . . when we played we played hard. The interim, of course, was filled with the drudgery of everyday realities . . . those days never to be forgotten . . . most of them happy, some of them gloomy. This was Inchon.

HOSPITAL

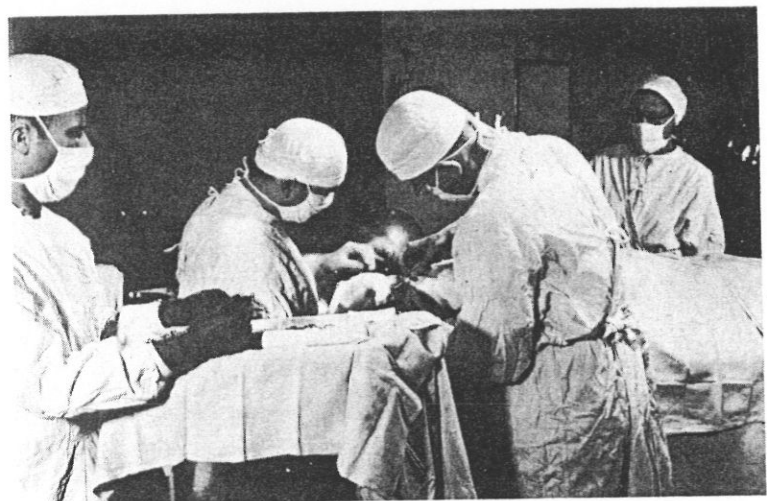

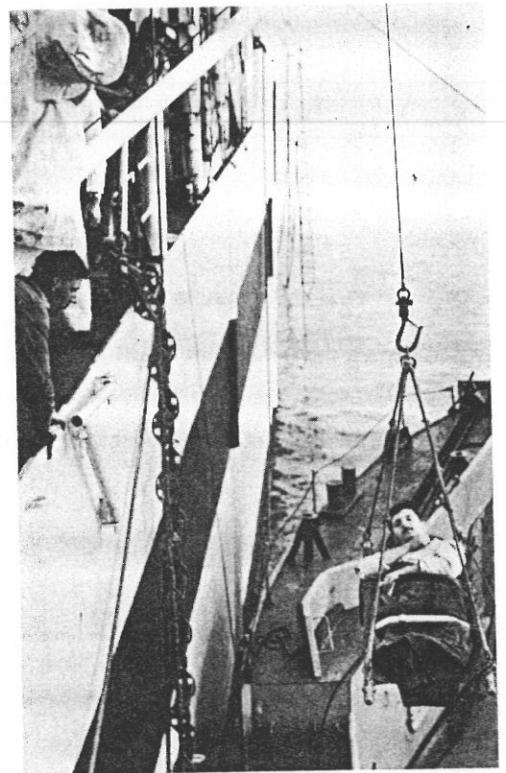

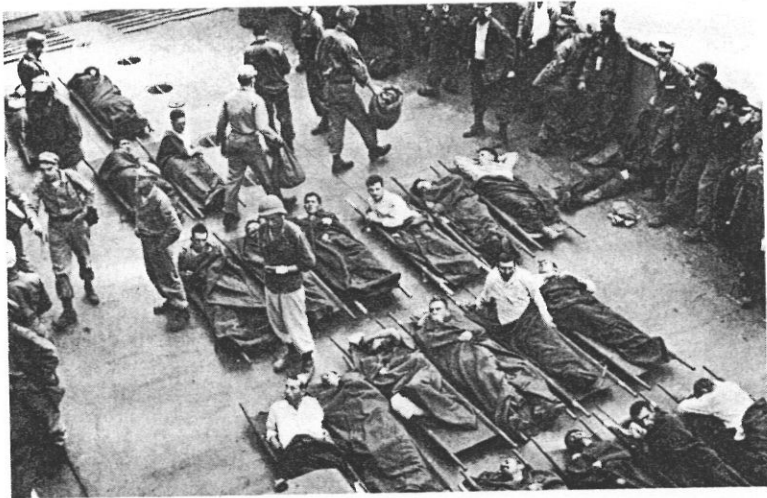

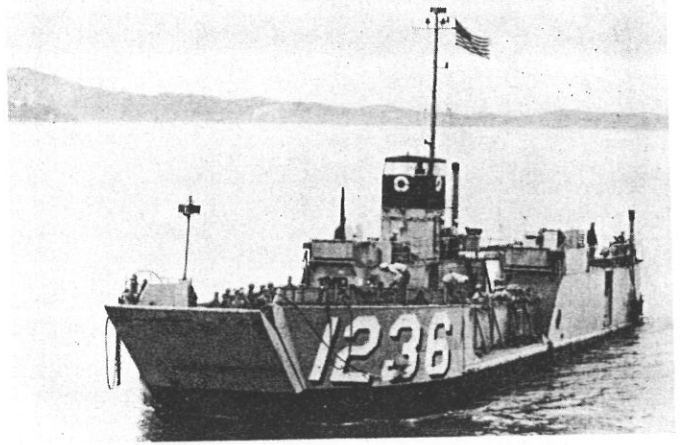

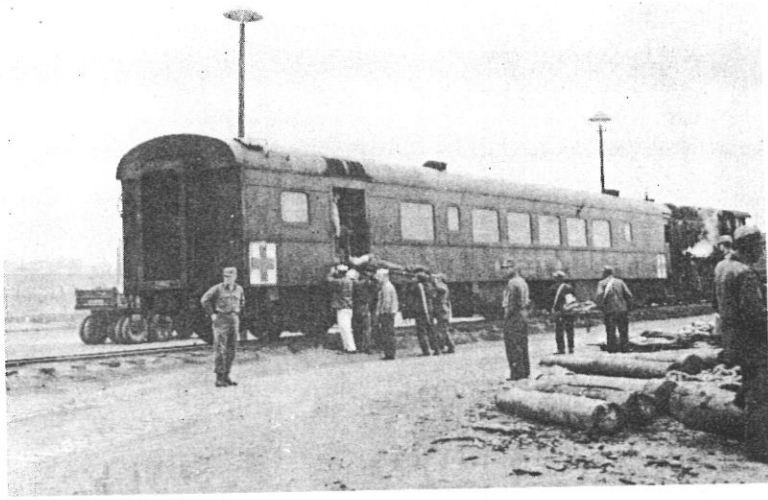

The Hospital is the purpose of the HAVEN'S being. It occupies the major portion of the interior and is peopled by specialists in every phase of aiding the infirm. Of necessity, due to the constantly changing needs, our department is highly flexible and capable of executing drastic changes in its complex routines at a moment's notice. Though each of the eighteen wards is set up primarily to handle a specific classification of patient and those of us assigned to these wards have become adept in handling that type of patient, in times of stress and great activity the "overflow" from one ward is absorbed into any of the others. To each of us every patient's condition, comfort and welfare is of a personal concern.

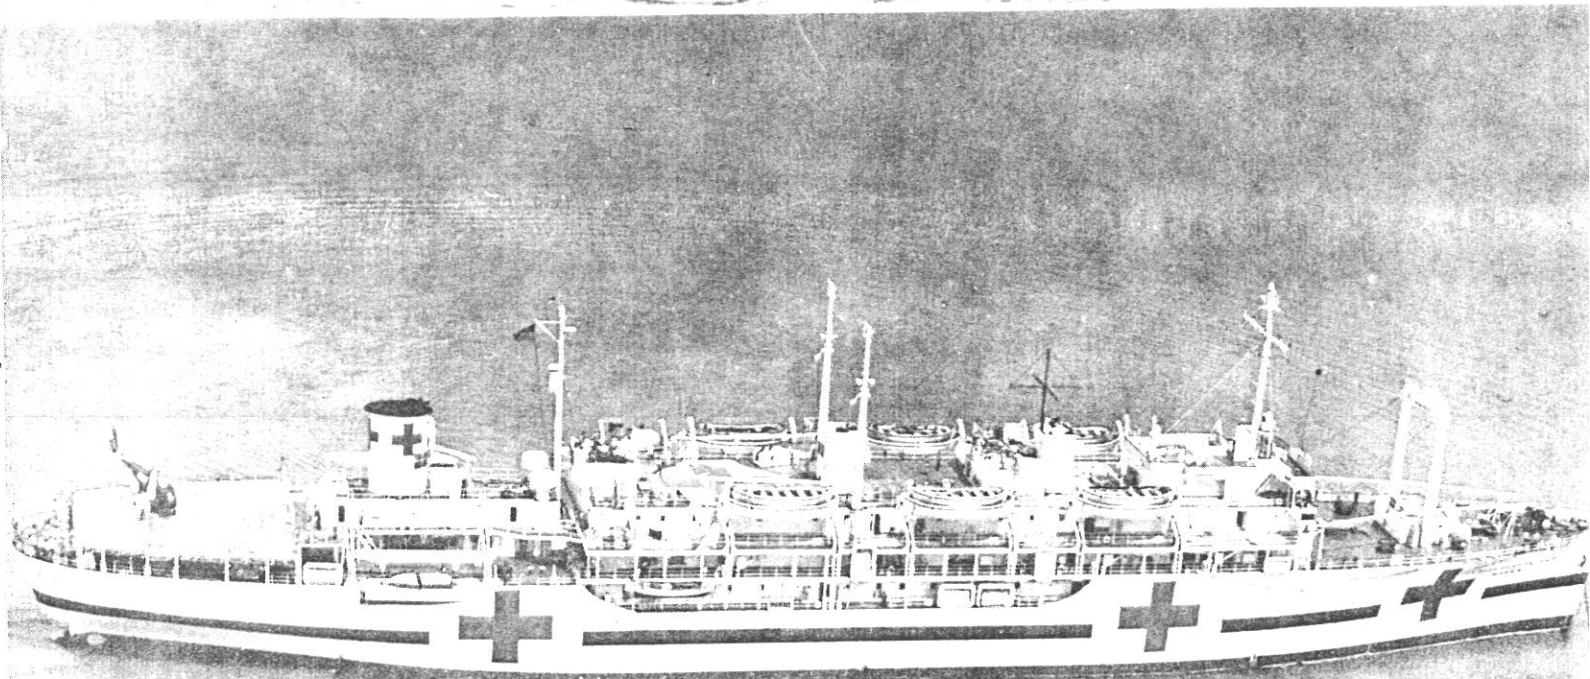

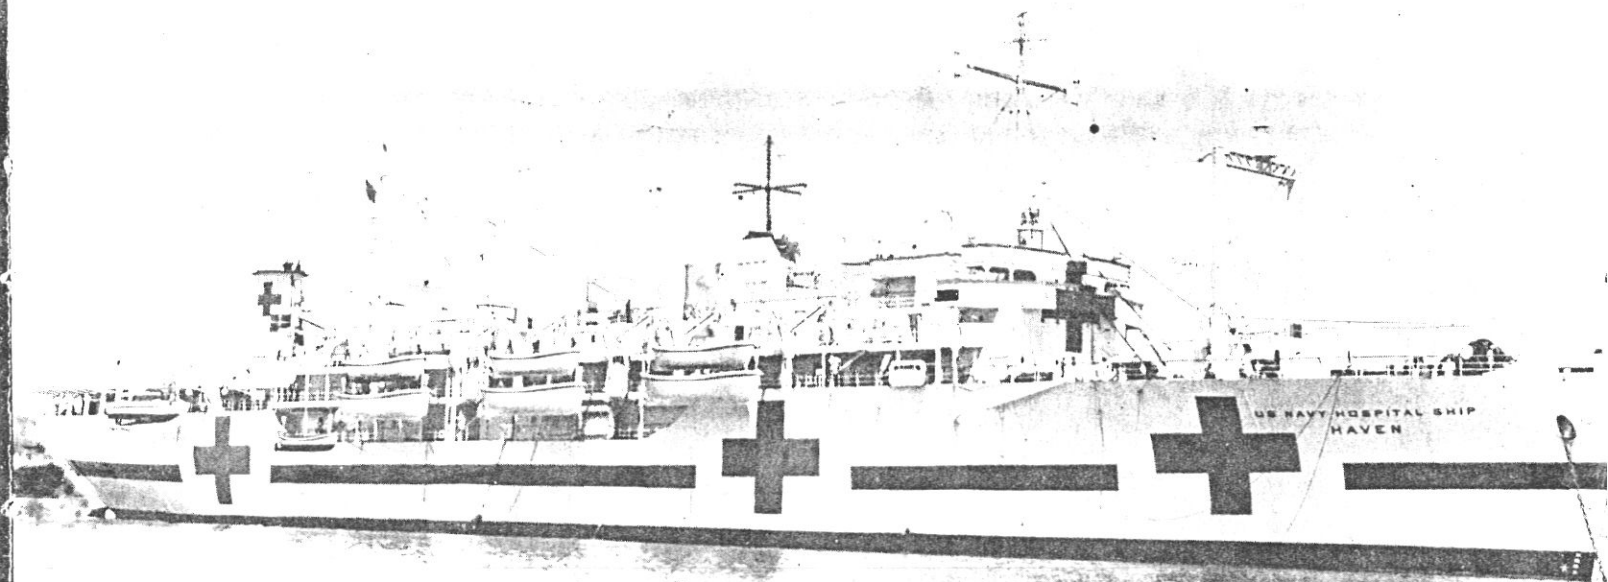

The comfort of the wards is enhanced by their spotlessness and refreshing air-conditioning. Many of the patients are served special diets, prepared by the dietetic service and brought to them in heated "diet carts". Upon admission of the patient, his medical history is brought up to date and constantly followed in a myriad of records on the ward and in the medical records office, until his release. The patient is examined regularly and his diagnosis and treatment is dictated to a large degree by results of tests made by the clinical laboratory and the findings of the X-ray department. He may ride one of the elevators to the clinical spaces where trained hands apply a cast to aid in healing damaged bones, or have dentists and dental technicians perform any needed services to render his mouth healthy. He may go regularly to physio-therapy where his injured muscles will be carefully restored to their former vigor, or he may become acquainted with the Eye-Ear-Nose-Throat clinic.

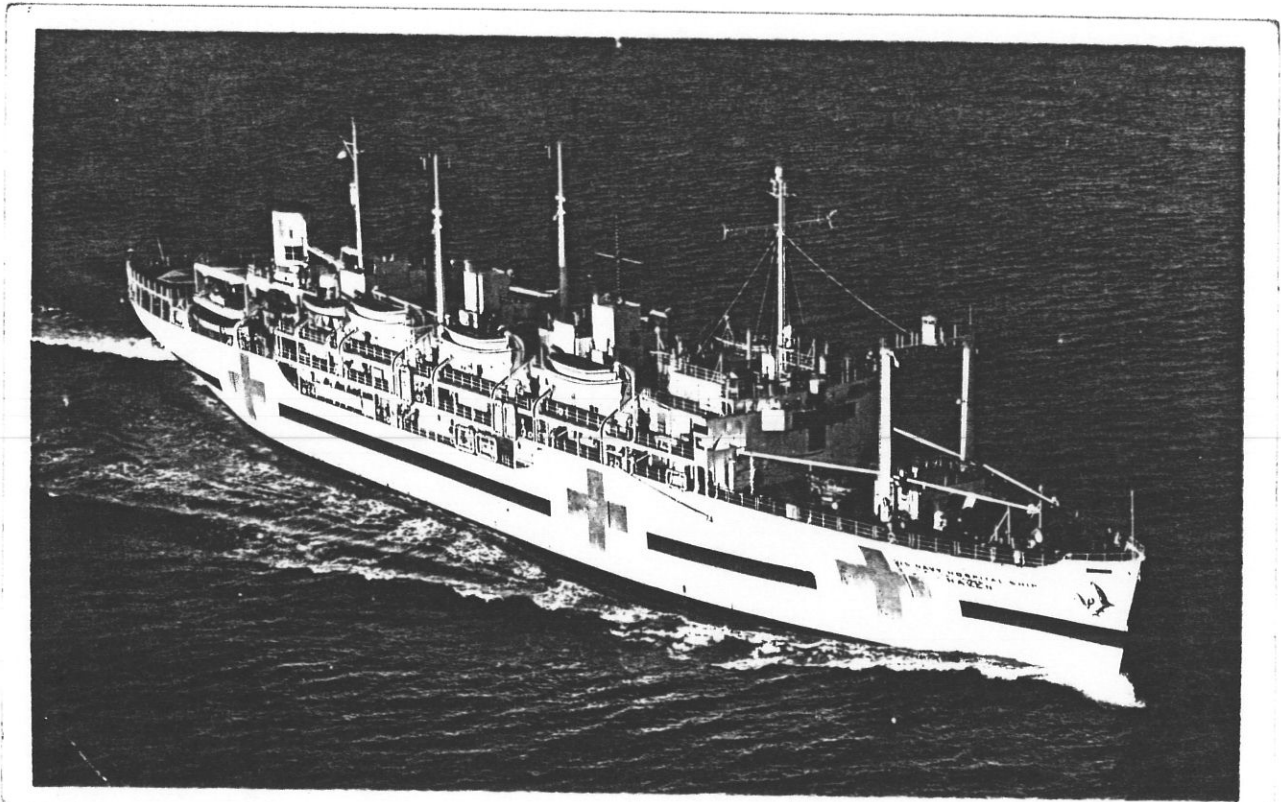

If the patient is unable to go to the clinic, or is in a condition that makes moving him by wheel-chair or gourney unwise, all their services are brought to him. Central surgical supply furnishes his ward, as well as the operating and dressing rooms, with sterile instruments and supplies; any special supplies or equipment needed by the ward for the patient's care can be obtained by submitting a request to the property and accounting office for approval, after which it is promptly issued by the medical storeroom. The pharmacy, in addition to fulfilling the prescriptions for the individual patients, supplies the wards, clinics and operating rooms with the needed drugs and pharmaceuticals. The linen room sees that no hospital space wants for clean sheets, pajamas, robes and towels.

It was proven when in Inchon Harbor, that only twenty minutes from the line of battle, there was an operating suite standing ready for any emergency, with the most modern surgical equipment available and a team of doctors, nurses and corpsmen equipped with the latest in skilled methods and techniques. For those who had walked too closely beside Death, the personnel office assigned some of us to special watches to note any marked sudden change in condition.

All these small parts fit together in a complex sort of harmony. Each individual, in each portion of the whole, plays his role and thereby brings about the desired results . . . a restoration for the ill and wounded. From the master at arms who gets "the word" to that famous "10%", to the corpsman who begins his duties as the majority of his shipmates are falling asleep; from the medical maintenance corpsman who repairs a leaky faucet, to the galley corpsman who polishes a seemingly endless array of stainless steel; from the guy scrubbing "C" Deck in the middle of the night so that five hundred pairs of shoes can dirty it the next day, to the group that keeps our quarters ready for the never-ending procession of inspections . . . every one of us has a job to do. f.f.n.

Dear Commander Connerley,
Before I get down to the purpose of this letter, I think I'd better try to explain who I am for I don't suppose for one second you remember me.

I was a patient in A-2 ward on the ship in the period end of May-beginning of June. I guess the best way you might recall me is if I tell you I had mortar bomb fragments removed from the head, arm, leg, and foot.

So much for who I am. My purpose in writing this letter was to thank you, Dr. Schultz and everyone who I met on the ship for the way they treated me.

The time I spent with you only served to strengthen the convictions I had previously held. That the American people are the friendliest people of all. Since leaving the ship I have been in several British Military hospitals but nowhere have I found the same spirit of friendliness.

So, Commander to the doctors, nurses and corpsmen of the Haven I would like to send a heartfelt THANK YOU.

/s/ P. Wykes
