We clip the following from the Washington elitorial correspondence of the Mobile Register: I have not a doubt that the public crimes of the past even years are to be expisted—to dulet it would be to question the justness of the freat Ruler over all, who, while tasing bad men as matraments, does not, therefore, forget be published with the evil instruments. It is no wonder, therefore, in the light of history and of the traditions of the free and lighting people who created by published this portion of our control popularity of the free points of the free and an ambition for authority that spirst them on They light for saisty, for immunity from the stern decrees of justice, and to avoid the pub shimst which they know their treasen to the Constitution has morited. To realize their just apprehension of the danger, it is necessary to appreciate the intensity of the feeling of hate and losthing which barnes against them in the breast of the Constitutional men of the North.

THE ELECTION AND ITS LEGAL

Our cotemporary, the Times, of yesterday, contains a well-reasoned article on this subject, the conclusions of which seem to us to be sound. We have embodied its substance in the following observations: The late Convention provided in article 158 of the new Constitution of Louisiana, that all civil officers elected under its ordinance submitting the Constitution of the registered voters of the State for ratification or rejection, should "solar upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election should have been official vote of the parish of the return of their election should have been official vote of the parish of the constitution:

It has been thought by some that this ordification ording to law."

It has been thought by some that this ordification of the law of law of Zacharie and Stringer (Deme.) are probably elected to the Legislature, and Sturcken and raused by the electors, can go into elect. One of these conditions, it is true, has been repealed—that requiring the ratification to be made by a majority of the votes of the registered electors, and one half of all the registered voters to vote upon the question of such ratification—the act of March 14, 1878, changing the requirement of a majority of the vote cast, as necessary for the adoption of the Constitution. But the other conditions of section 5, above quoted, remain, and these are:

1. The President of the Constitution, duly certified to the President of the United States.

2. The President of the United States.

3. Congress must then be satisfied that the Constitution was furthy underfield by the registered and qualified voters; that it is in our formity with the provisions of the two conditions. Acts, and Congress must have be satisfied that the Constitution was furthy undepted by the registered and qualified voters; that it is in our formity with the provisions of the two conditions of the property of the Constitution as a whole after a fulfillment of these conditions.

And in additions to the foregoing requirements.
