1165. A tender to prevent litigation is no admission of the justice of the demand, but merely an offer to escape the inconvenience of litigation. The Frederick, 1 Hagg. 218.

1166. A tender not accepted in due time, held not to bind either the court or the parties tendering. The General Palmer, 2 Hagg. 180.

1167. If when a tender is made it is not accepted, and the cause proceeds to trial owing to the plaintiffs having gone to sea without having appointed a proper person with adequate authority to accept or refuse the tender, the responsibility for such a course must rest with the plaintiffs. The

(388) In order to constitute a good tender it is essential that the offer be unconditional, and that the money or other thing to be paid be actually produced, unless the creditor dispense with its production, either by express declaration, or other equivalent act. Browne v. Gilmore, 8 Greene, 107. [AMERICAN.]

Hopewell, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 252.

1168. The master demanded an excessive sum for freight and general average as the condition of delivering the cargo, and in such a manner that it amounted to an announcement that it would be useless to offer any smaller sum. Held, that this excused any tender from the plaintiff, notwithstanding that the evidence showed that he had resolved not to tender the sum rightfully due, and entitled him to damages for wrongful detention of cargo. The Norway, Br. & L. 409.

1168a. As to a tender in the Admiralty Division not being paid out until after the conclusion of the cause, see Nos. 203—205, p. 1485.

2. In Collision Actions.

1170. In an action for negligence in running down a ship of the plaintiffs, alleging as special damage the having been condemned in the Admiralty Court to pay a sum of £45 for salvage and the costs of suit there, it appearing that the plaintiff had made a very insufficient tender of £20; held, that he could not recover the costs so incurred, the question in such cases for the jury being, whether the plaintiff had acted as a prudent man would reasonably have done, and if so, the costs might be recovered. Tindall v. Bell, 11 M. & W. 228; 12 L. J. Exch. 161. See Holloway v. Turner, 6 Q. B. 328; Loton v. Devereux, 3 B. & Ad. 343.

1171. The High Court of Admiralty, adopting the principle laid down in Tindall v. Bell, that it was the duty of the owner of a vessel damaged to do what a prudent man would do were he acting for himself, considered that in many such cases it would be prudent not to make a tender for salvage services rendered, and allowed (overruling the report of the registrar) the costs of a salvage suit arising from a collision as a proper item in the amount to be recovered in the suit for damage, although no tender had been made in the salvage suit. The Legatus, Swabey, 168; 5 W. R. 154.

1172. An insurance was effected on a cargo of wheat from Odessa to Liverpool. The vessel and cargo were afterwards hypothecated by bottomry bond for repairs rendered necessary during the voyage, and ultimately the vessel was wrecked on the coast of Ireland, and towed into Cork, where the cargo was landed in a damaged state. The salvors having claimed an exorbitant sum for salvage, proceedings were instituted in the Admiralty Court, and under the order of that court the cargo was sold. Held, that it was the duty of the master to save the expense of the proceedings in the Admiralty Court by tendering what was due for salvage; and that if the cargo was sold in consequence of his failing to do so, or to give bail, it was not a total loss for which the underwriters were liable. Rosetto v. Gurney, 11 C. B. 176; 15 Jur. 1177; 20 L. J. C. P. 257.

3. In Salvage Actions.*

1173. To constitute a complete tender out of court it must be made in money or bank notes, and the salvors must, at the time of the tender, be aware of the value of the property. The Sovereign, 29 L. J. Adm. 114; 2 L. T. N.S. 669; 6 Jur. N.S. 832; 1 Lushington, 85.

1174. When there are separate actions instituted in respect of services rendered to a vessel and her crew by rival salvors, and the defendant is unable to estimate the respective values of the two services, he will be allowed to make a single tender in respect of the whole services rendered. The Jacob Landstrom, 4 Asp. 58.

1175. The Cinque Ports Commissioners having awarded a sum in a case of salvage, the owners of the vessel salvaged appealed and tendered a smaller sum. On motion by the respondents that the notice of tender might be taken off the file, held, that the appellants were entitled to make the tender, although no tender was made prior to the institution of the appeal. The Annette, L. R. 4 A. & E. 9; 42 L. J.

* (391) The general practice in salvage cases is to make tenders by formal acts of court, which are legal memoranda in the nature of pleas. The Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

Adm. 13; 1 Asp. N.S. 577; and see The Caledonia, L. R. 4 A. & E. 11, n.

1176. In the case of a tender in pursuance of an agreement for services, it is upon the parties who say the offer was made and the agreement accepted that the affirmative lies, and they must prove it. The William, 9 Jur. 631.

1177. In a salvage cause where salvage services have been rendered and certain damages incurred (by the salving vessel rendering assistance), a tender to stop the action, and to entitle the party making it to all the benefits of a tender in court, must include all the damages which may have been sustained. The Ocean, 1 W. Rob. 334.

1178. In a cause of salvage for services rendered in the United Kingdom, a tender under £200 "with such costs (if any) as may be due by law," for the services rendered, was accepted. Held, that any objection as to the insufficiency of the tender in respect of the costs was answered by the acceptance. The John, 1 Lushington, 11.

1179. In a cause of salvage tender of £40 "with costs up to time of tender" was refused. The court overruled the tender, and awarded £100, but refused to certify for costs. Held, that in consequence thereof, and notwithstanding the form of tender, the plaintiff was not entitled even to costs up to the time of tender. The Comte Nesselrood, 1 Lush. 454; 6 L. T. N.S. 57.

1180. The owners alleged the value of the ship to be £2,000, and made a tender. The salvors took out a commission of appraisal, under which the ship was valued at £2,800. Held, that it does not therefore follow that the tender must ex necessitate be insufficient, for the question is not what the owners deemed adequate, but what the court thinks adequate compensation. The Batavier, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 171.

1181. A tender of remuneration is an admission of services performed and to be rewarded. The Porcupine, 1 Hagg. 378; The Portia, 9 Jur. 167; The William Ward, 8 Ir. Jur. 336.

1182. In a salvage suit the owners paid into the registry and tendered £50. The tender was pronounced for, and the salvors were condemned in the sum of £50 nomine expensarum. The salvors being resident out of the jurisdiction, application by the owners for payment out to them on account of costs of the £50 tendered, granted. The Clifton, 3 Hagg.

124; The Johannes, 6 Notes of Cases, 290; Dore v. —, 1 Ir. Jur. Exch. 271.

1183. When a tender has been accepted by both the plaintiffs and intervenors whose claims are adverse, the court will allow issue to be joined between them upon their respective allegations as to the apportionment of the amount. The Conchita, 3 Ir. Jur. 408.

1184. In a cause of salvage a tender of £534 was made before action, and refused. After action a tender of £275 only was made, on the ground that the salvors, by their improper conduct subsequently to the service in causing a detention of the vessel, had occasioned a loss of £260 to the owners. Held, that assuming the truth of such misconduct, no such deduction from salvage could be made. The Hopcwell, 2 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 249.

1185. Where a tender was refused, a Vice-Admiralty Court awarded less than the amount tendered, on the ground that the master and crew of the salving vessel had misconducted themselves in rendering the salvage services. The Scindia, 2 Asp. (Vice-Adm. Court), 232.

See also Nos. 1170—1172, supra.

4. In Wages Actions.

1186. Motion by foreign seamen to take out in a wages cause the amount tendered, and proceed for wages ultra, rejected. The Annie Childs, 1 Lushington, 509.

1187. The Mobile arrived at Port Philip, where some of her crew deserted. The master gave promissory notes for £40 each, besides their wages, to the remainder of the crew to work the ship so short-handed to Bombay. On the ship's arrival at Liverpool, the owners offered the sailors the amount of their wages according to the ship's articles, on condition of their signing a statutory release in full, and giving up the promissory notes. Some of the seamen refused to do this, and brought a suit for wages in the Court of Admiralty for their wages, which were then paid. Held, that such a conditional tender was insufficient, and made by the owners with a view of availing themselves of the formal words of the statute for the purpose of eluding the claim of the sailors, which had since been decided in their favour in the Queen's Bench, and that the owners were liable for the whole costs incurred in the Admiralty Court.

The Mobile, Swabey, 256; 3 Jur. N.S. 893.

1188. In a suit for wages, the amount of wages, &c., was allowed to be paid into the registry, with an undertaking to pay such costs as might be decreed, the liability for costs being the question at issue between the parties. The Margaret, 3 Hagg. 239.

5. Costs.

1189. See previous sections passim, and tit. Costs, c. 16, pp. 354—358, and same title and chapter in Addenda.

33. Preliminary Acts.

1. Generally.

1190. In actions in any division for damage by collision between vessels, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order, the solicitor for the plaintiff shall, within seven days after the commencement of the action, and the solicitor for the defendant shall within seven days after appearance, and before any pleading is delivered, file with the registrar, master, or other proper officer, as the case may be, a document to be called a preliminary act, which shall be sealed up and shall not be opened until ordered by the court or a judge, and which shall contain a statement of the following particulars:—(a) The names of the vessels which came into collision and the names of their masters; (b) the time of the collision; (c) the place of the collision; (d) the direction and force of the wind; (e) the state of the weather; (f) the state and force of the tide; (g) the course and speed of the vessel when the other was first seen; (h) the lights, if any, carried by her; (i) the distance and bearing of the other vessel when first seen; (k) the lights, if any, of the other vessel which were first seen; (l) whether any lights of the other vessel, other than those first seen, came into view before the collision; (m) what measures were taken, and when, to avoid the collision; (n) the parts of each vessel which first came into contact. Ord. XIX. r. 28, No. 224.

1190a. The court or a judge may order the preliminary act to be opened and the evidence to be taken thereon without its being necessary to deliver any pleadings; but in such case, if either party intends to rely on the defence of compulsory pilotage, he may do so, and shall give notice thereof in writing to the other party, within two days from the opening of the preliminary act. Ibid.

1191. In an action for loss of life by collision between vessels, preliminary acts must be filed. Webster v. M. S. & L. Railway Co., 5 Asp. 256, n.

1192. In an action of damage to cargo brought against the vessel carrying the cargo for damage sustained through a collision between such vessel and another vessel the parties are not bound to file preliminary acts. The John Boyne, 3 Asp. N.S. 341; 36 L. T. 297; 25 W. R. 756.

1193. Preliminary acts were instituted to get a statement recenti facto of the circumstances from the parties, and to prevent the defendant from shaping his case to meet the case put forward by the plaintiff. Prior to the Judicature Acts, neither party was allowed to depart from the case set up in his preliminary act. The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. N.S. 507; H.M.S. Inflexible, Swabey, 33.

1194. The court would never, prior to the Judicature Acts, allow a party to contradict his own preliminary act at the hearing. The Night Watch, 16th July, 1863; The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. N.S. 507.

1195. Whatever might be the evidence on either side as to the weather, neither party would be allowed to depart from the statement thereon in his preliminary act. The Great Eastern, February 4, 1864.

1196. In a cause of damage by collision, when the case is to be heard on visâ voce evidence only, the preliminary acts are to be exchanged before the evidence is taken. The Ruby Queen, 1 Lushington, 266.

1197. In a cause of damage by collision when, after petition and answer filed, the witnesses for the plaintiff are, upon special application, examined in open court, the court will order the preliminary acts to be exchanged before the witnesses are examined. The Two Friends, 1 Lushington, 552.

2. *Amendment.

1199. An application to amend a mistake in a preliminary act must be made immediately upon discovery, and must be

* (392) The object of the preliminary act is to commit the parties to statements of the facts when they are fresh in their recollection. At the hearing of a cause of damage supported by affidavit. The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. N.S. 507.

1200. Application for leave to amend a mistake in a preliminary act refused, though such application was made before the hearing, and was supported by affidavit. The Miranda, 7 P. D. 185; 51 L. J. P. D. 56; 4 Asp. 595.

3. Evidence.

See tit. EVIDENCE, p. 453.

34. Pleadings.

1201. Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a summary form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums, and numbers shall be expressed in figures and not in words. See Ord. XIX. r. 4, No. 200.

1202. The forms in Appendices C., D. and E., when applicable, and, where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, as near as may be, shall be used for all pleadings, and where such forms are applicable and sufficient any longer forms shall be deemed prolix, and the costs occasioned by such prolixity shall be disallowed to or borne by the party so using the same, as the case may be. Ibid. r. 5, No. 201.

the court refused to allow a material averment in the preliminary act to be amended, but admitted before the evidence was given a corresponding alteration in the answer. The Frankland, 41 L. J. N.S. Adm. 3; L. R. 3 A. & E. 511; 1 Asp. N.S. 207.

1203. The forms of pleading under Ord. XIX. r. 5, No. 201, are not under all circumstances to be rigidly complied with, but are rather to be taken as the class of pleading it is desired to introduce. The Isis, 8 P. D. 227; 5 Asp. 155.

1204. In all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid (see No. 1202, supra), particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading; provided that, if the particulars be of debt, expenses, or damages, and exceed three folios, the fact must be so stated, with a reference to full particulars already delivered or to be delivered with the pleading. Ord. XIX. r. 6, No. 202.

1205. In every case in which the cause of action is a stated or settled account, the same shall be alleged with particulars, but in every case in which a statement of account is relied on by way of evidence or admission of any other cause of action which is pleaded, the same shall not be alleged in the pleadings. Ord. XX. r. 8, No. 232.

1206. Every pleading shall be delivered between parties, and shall be marked on the face with the date of the day on which it is delivered, the reference to the letter and number of the action, the division to which the judge (if any) to whom the action is assigned belongs, the title of the action, and the description of the pleading, and shall be indorsed with the name and place of business of the

solicitor and agent, if any, delivering the same, or the name and address of the party delivering the same if he does not act by a solicitor. Ord. XIX. r. 11, No. 207.

1207. Any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested, shall be distinctly specified in his pleading by the plaintiff or defendant (as the case may be); and, subject thereto, an averment of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading. Ibid. r. 14, No. 210.

1208. No pleading, not being a petition or summons, shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim, or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same. Ibid. r. 16, No. 212.

1209. Wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material. Ibid. r. 21, No. 217.

1210. Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge, or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred. Ibid. r. 22, No. 218.

1211. Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter, or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, be material. Ibid. r. 23, No. 219.

1212. Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations, or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations, or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative. Ibid. r. 24, No. 220.

1213. Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange, where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim). Ibid. r. 25, No. 221.

1214. No technical objection shall be raised to any pleading on the ground of any alleged want of form. Ibid. r. 26, No. 222.

1215. No new assignment shall be necessary or used. But everything which was formerly alleged by way of new assignment may hereafter be introduced by amendment of the statement of claim, or by way of reply. Ord. XXIII. r. 6, No. 281.

1216. Pleadings should be so framed as to assist not only the party in his statement of the case, but also the court in investigating the truth between the litigants. The Why Not, L. R. 2 A. & E. 265.

1217. In deciding whether the pleading complies with the principle of fairly disclosing the nature of the case intended to be proved, it must be considered whether the matter charged be or be not within the knowledge of the party charged. The Freedom, L. R. 2 A. & E. 346; 38 L. J. Adm. 25.

1218. Where a pleading alleges general carelessness, neglect, default, bad seamanship, &c., the court will not go into an inquiry of so wide a nature, or investigate any alleged neglect not expressly raised by the petition. The General Lee, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 155; 3 Asp. 204. [IRISH.]

1219. It is not necessary to plead specially any Order in Council made under the provisions of this act. See the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 64.

1220. A pleading in a suit of personal damage, pleading matters of a criminal nature, directed to be reformed by the omission of such matters, as not proper to be introduced in a civil proceeding. The Ruckers, 4 C. Rob. 76.

1221. When a party conducts his own case he is bound to adhere, both in the court below as well as in that of appeal, to the established rules of pleading and practice in those courts. Tommey v. White, 1 Cl. & Fin. N.S. 161.

1222. As to petitions to the court and the service thereof, see Ord. LIII. rr. 8, 16, 17; Nos. 703, 711, 712; Ord. XIX. rr. 13 and 16, Nos. 209, 212; Ord. LXI. r. 31, No. 924; Ord. LII. rr. 16—19, Nos. 711—714; Nos. 1356—1360, p. 1603; and c. 35, p. 1531.

2. Variance from Proofs.

1223. In a cause of collision the rule that a party is only entitled to recover secundum allegata et probata, is sufficiently complied with if the party proves one material allegation of negligence, even if all the others fail—P. C. The Hochung v. The Lapwing, 5 Asp. 39.

1224. See also for cases before the Judicature Acts and Rules, Nos. 1337—1345, p. 1600.

3. Signature by Counsel.

1225. The provision in Ord. XIX. r. 4, No. 200, since repealed, that the signature of counsel should not be necessary, did not import that the signature of counsel was improper. Barnard v. Hardwick, April 8, 1876; Duckett v. Jones, 33 L. T. 777.

4. Statement of Claim.*

1226. The delivery of statements of claim shall be regulated as follows:—Where the writ is specially indorsed under Ord. III. r. 6, No. 16, no further statement of claim shall be delivered, but the indorsement on the writ shall be deemed to be the statement of claim. Ord. XX. r. 1, No. 225, div. (a).

1227. Subject to the provisions of Ord. XIII. r. 12, No. 112, as to filing a statement of claim when there is no appearance, no statement of claim need be delivered unless the defendant at the time of entering appearance, or within eight days thereafter, gives notice in writing to the plaintiff or his solicitor that he requires a statement of claim to be delivered. Ibid. div. (b).

1228. If no statement of claim has been delivered and the defendant gives notice requiring the delivery of a statement of claim, the plaintiff shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, deliver it within five weeks from the time of the plaintiff receiving such notice. Ibid. div. (c).

1229. The plaintiff may (except as in div. (a) mentioned) deliver a statement of claim, either with the writ of summons or notice in lieu of writ of summons, or at any time afterwards either before or after appearance, notwithstanding that the defendant may have appeared and not required the delivery of a statement of claim: provided that in no case where a defendant has appeared shall a statement (semble of claim) be delivered more than six weeks after the appearance has been entered, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge. Ibid. div. (d).

1230. Where the plaintiff delivers a statement of claim without being required to do so, or the defendant unnecessarily requires such statement, the court or a judge may make such order as to the costs occasioned thereby as shall be just, if it appears that the delivery of a statement of claim was unnecessary or improper. Ibid. div. (e).

1231. In Admiralty actions in rem the plaintiff shall, within twelve days from the appearance of the defendant, deliver his statement of claim. Ibid. r. 3, No. 227.

1232. Whenever a statement of claim is delivered the plaintiff may therein alter, modify, or extend his claim without any amendment of the indorsement of the writ. Ibid. r. 4, No. 228.

1233. The statement of claim must in all cases in which it is proposed that the trial should be elsewhere than in Middlesex, show the proposed place of trial. Ibid. r. 5, No. 229.

1234. Every statement of claim shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims, either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given, as the court or a judge may think just, to the same extent as if it had been asked for. Ibid. r. 6, No. 230.

1235. Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of complaint founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly. Ibid. r. 7, No. 231.

1236. The plaintiff shall, subject to the provisions of Order XX. (above set forth), and at such time and in such manner as therein prescribed, deliver to the defendant a statement of his claim, and of the relief or remedy to which he claims to be entitled. The statements shall be as brief as the nature of the case will admit. See Ord. XIX. r. 2, No. 198.

1237. The forms in Appendices C., D. and E. (of statements of claim, statement of defence and replies), when applicable, and where they are not applicable forms of the like character, as near as may be, shall be used for all pleadings, and where such forms are applicable and sufficient any longer forms shall be deemed prolix, and the costs occasioned by such prolixity shall be disallowed to or borne by the party so using the same, as the case may be. Ibid. r. 5, No. 201.

1238. For forms of statement of claim in actions of bottomry, necessities, repairs, and supplies, possession, salvage, collision, see R. S. C. 1883, App. C., s. 5, Nos. 3—6; in actions of damage to cargo, s. 5, Nos. 4 and 5; in actions of damage by collision, s. 6, No. 5, and Roscoe's Admiralty Practice (2nd ed.), App. vi., pp. 472—516. See also No. 1203, p. 1590.

1238a. As to the effect of non-delivery of statement of claim when required, see Ord. XXVII. r. 1, No. 294, and No. 934, p. 1562.

5. Particulars of Demand.

See c. 24, p. 1570.

6. Statement of Defence and Counter-claim.

(a) *Statement of Defence.

1239. The defendant shall, subject to the provisions of Order XXI. (as to which see infra), and at such time and in such manner as therein prescribed, deliver to the plaintiff his defence, set-off, or counter-claim, if any; the statements shall be as brief as the nature of the case will admit. See Ord. XIX. r. 2, No. 198.

1240. In actions for a debt or liquidated demand comprised in Ord. III. r. 6, classes (A.) and (B.), a defence in denial must deny such matters of fact, from which the liability of the defendant is alleged to arise, as are disputed; e.g., in actions for goods bargained and sold, or sold and delivered, the defence must deny the order or contract, the delivery, or the amount claimed. See Ord. XXI. r. 3, No. 236.

1241. And a mere denial of the debt is inadmissible. Ibid. r. 1, No. 234.

1242. In every counter-claim, or where relief is claimed by the defendant in his defence, he shall state specifically the relief he claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given, as the court or a judge thinks fit, to the same extent as if it had been asked for. See Ord. XX. r. 6, No. 230.

1243. Where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence, set-off or counter-claim, founded upon separate and distinct facts, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly. Ibid. r. 7, No. 231.

1244. No denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed, or their amount; but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases, unless expressly admitted. Ord. XXI. r. 4, No. 237.

1245. If either party wishes to deny the right of any other party to claim as executor, or as trustee, whether in bankruptcy or otherwise, or in any representative or other alleged capacity, or the alleged constitution of any partnership firm, he shall deny the same specifically. Ibid. r. 5, No. 238.

1246. Where a statement of claim is delivered to a defendant he shall deliver his defence within ten days from the delivery of the statement of claim, or from the time limited for appearance, whichever shall be last, unless such time is extended by the court or a judge. Ibid. r. 6, No. 239.

1247. A defendant who has appeared in an action, and who has neither received nor required the delivery of a statement of claim, must deliver his defence (if any) at any time within ten days after his appearance, unless such time is extended by the court or a judge. Ibid. r. 7, No. 240.

1248. Where leave has been given to a defendant to defend under Ord. XIV., he shall deliver his defence (if any) within such time as shall be limited by the order giving him leave to defend, or if no time is thereby limited, then within eight days after the order. Ibid. r. 8, No. 241.

1249. In every case in which a party shall plead the general issue, intending to give the special matter in evidence by virtue of an act of parliament, he shall insert in the margin of his pleading the words "by statute," together with the year of the reign in which the act of parliament on which he relies was passed, and also the chapter and section of such act, and shall specify whether such act is public or otherwise; otherwise such defence shall be taken not to have been pleaded by virtue of any act of parliament. Ord. XXI. r. 19, No. 252.

(14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 1, pp. 297 et seq.; and Chitty's Forms (12th ed.), pp. 143, 156.

1250. Nothing in these rules contained shall affect the right of any defendant to plead not guilty by statute. And every defence of not guilty by statute shall have the same effect as a plea of not guilty by statute has heretofore had. But if the defendant so plead, he shall not plead any other defence to the same cause of action without the leave of the court or a judge. See Ord. XIX. r. 12, No. 208.*

1251. Every allegation of fact in any pleading, not being a petition or summons, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the opposite party, shall be taken to be admitted, except as against an infant, lunatic, or person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition. Ibid. r. 13, No. 209.

1252. The defendant or plaintiff (as the case may be) must raise by his pleading all matters which show the action or counter-claim not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence or reply, as the case may be, as if not raised would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the preceding pleadings, as for instance, fraud, Statute of Limitations, release, payment, performance, facts showing illegality either by statute or common law, or Statute of Frauds. Ibid. r. 15, No. 211.

1253. It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his statement of defence to deny generally the grounds alleged by the statement of claim, but he must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages. Ibid. r. 17, No. 213.

1254. When a party in any pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party he must not do so evasively, but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it be alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof, or else set out how much he received. And if an allegation is made with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances. Ibid. r. 19, No. 215.

1255. When a contract, promise, or agreement is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract, promise, or agreement alleged, or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied by law, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract, promise, or agreement, whether with reference to the Statute of Frauds or otherwise. Ibid. r. 20, No. 216.

1256. Payment into court shall be signified in the defence, and the claim or cause of action in satisfaction of which such payment is made shall be specified therein. Ord. XXII. r. 2, No. 256.

1257. No plea or defence shall be pleaded in abatement. Ord. XXI. r. 20, No. 253.

1258. Where any ground of defence arises after the defendant has delivered a statement of defence, or after the time limited for his doing so has expired, the defendant may, within eight days after such ground of defence has arisen, or at any subsequent time by leave of the court or a judge, deliver a further defence setting forth the same. Ord. XXIV. r. 2, No. 283.

1259. Any ground of defence which has arisen after action brought, but before the defendant has delivered his statement of defence, and before the time limited for his doing so has expired, may be raised by the defendant in his statement of defence, either alone or together with other grounds of defence. Ibid. r. 1, No. 282.

1260. As to forms of statements of defence and counter-claim, and the use thereof, see No. 1237, supra.

1261. For forms of statement of defence in actions of bottomry, necessaries, repairs, or supplies, possession and salvage, see R. S. C. 1883, App. D., sect. 3, Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6, and Roscoe's Admiralty Practice (2nd ed.), pp. 472—516.

* (402) The plea of "not guilty" by statute puts in issue not only the defence peculiar to the statute, but also the defence which may be admissible under the general issue at common law. As to the plea of "not guilty" by statute and the acts of parliament regulating the same, see Charley's New System of Practice and Pleading under the Judicature Acts, 3rd ed. p. 503, and Wilson's Judicature Acts and Rules (4th ed.), p. 256.

1262a. As to the effect of non-delivery of statement of defence, see Nos. 934—942, p. 1562.

1263. A defendant in an action may set off, or set up, by way of counter-claim against the claims of the plaintiff, any right of claim, whether such set-off or counter-claim sound in damages or not, and such set-off or counter-claim shall have the same effect as a statement of claim in a cross action, so as to enable the court to pronounce a final judgment in the same action, both on the original and on the cross claim. But the court or a judge may, on the application of the plaintiff before trial, if in the opinion of the court or judge such set-off or counter-claim cannot be conveniently disposed of in the pending action, or ought not to be allowed, refuse permission to the defendant to avail himself thereof. Ord. XIX. r. 3, No. 199.

1264. Where any defendant seeks to rely upon any grounds as supporting a right of counter-claim, he shall, in his statement of defence, state specifically that he does so by way of counter-claim. Ord. XXI. r. 10, No. 243.

1265. Where a defendant by his defence sets up any counter-claim which raises questions between himself and the plaintiff along with any other persons, he shall add to the title of his defence a further title similar to the title in a statement of claim setting forth the names of all the persons who, if such counter-claim were to be enforced by cross action, would be defendants to such cross action, and shall deliver his statement of defence to such of them as are parties to the action within the period within which he is required to deliver it to the plaintiff. Ibid. r. 11, No. 244.

1266. As to the mode of proceeding to bring such other persons before the court, see c. 6, p. 1500, and No. 1284, infra.

1266a. A third party is not allowed to deliver a counter-claim. Street v. Gover, L. R. 2 Q. B. 498 ; 46 L. J. Q. B. 582.

1267. Where a defendant sets up a counter-claim, if the plaintiff or any other person named in manner aforesaid as party to such counter-claim contends that the claim thereby raised ought not to be disposed of by way of counter-claim, but in an independent action, he may at any time before reply apply to the court or a judge for an order that such counter-claim may be excluded, and the court or a judge may, on the hearing of such application, make such order as shall be just. Ibid. r. 15, No. 248.

1268. The set-off must be connected with the original cause of action. Padwick v. Scott, 2 Ch. D. 736 ; 45 L. J. Ch. 350.

1268a. As to a counter-claim in an action for limitation of liability, see The Clutha, 35 L. T. N.S. 36.

1269. For form of notice of counter-claim, see R. S. C. 1883, App. B. No. 2.

See also Nos. 1242, 1243, 1252, 1260, supra, and No. 1404, p. 1607.

7. *Reply and subsequent Pleadings.

1270. The plaintiff shall, subject to the provisions of Ord. XXIII., and at such time and in such manner as therein prescribed, deliver his reply (if any) to such defence, set-off, or counter-claim. The statements shall be as brief as the nature of the case will admit. Ord. XIX. r. 2, No. 198.

1271. As to forms of reply and the use thereof, see No. 1237, p. 1593.

1272a. No pleading, not a petition or summons, shall, except by way of amendment, raise new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the party's previous pleadings. See Ord. XIX. r. 16, No. 212.

1273. It shall not be sufficient for a plaintiff in his reply to deny generally the grounds alleged in a defence by way of counter-claim, but he must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth except damages. Ibid. r. 17, No. 213.

1274. Subject to the last rule the plaintiff by his reply may join issue upon the defence, and each party in his pleading (if any) subsequent to reply may join issue upon the previous pleading. Such joinder of issue shall operate as a denial of every material allegation of facts in the pleading upon which issue is joined, but it may except any facts which the party may be willing to admit, and shall then operate as a denial of the facts not so admitted. See Ord. XIX. r. 18, No. 214.

1275. A plaintiff shall deliver his reply, if any, in Admiralty actions within six days, and in other actions within twenty-one days, after the defence or the last of the defences shall have been delivered, unless the time shall be extended by the court or a judge. Ord. XXIII. r. 1, No. 276.

1278. Where a counter-claim is pleaded, a reply thereto shall be subject to the rules applicable to statements of defence. Ibid. r. 4, No. 279.

1279. As to the insertion in the reply, of matters of new assignment, see No. 1215, p. 1591.

1280. Where any ground of defence to any set-off or counter-claim arises after reply, or after the time limited for delivering a reply has expired, the plaintiff may, within eight days after such ground of defence has arisen, or at any subsequent time by leave of the court or a judge, deliver a further reply setting forth the same. Ord. XXIV. r. 2, No. 283.

1281. If, after a statement of defence has been delivered, any ground of defence arises to any set-off or counter-claim alleged therein by the defendant, it may be raised by the plaintiff in his reply, either alone or together with any other ground of reply. Ibid. r. 1, No. 282.

1282. In a cause of necessaries a reply leaving it uncertain whether the person in possession of the vessel at the time of the supply was the original mortgagee or the defendant, the transferee of the mortgage, held bad. The Troubadour, L. R. 1 A. & E. 302; 2 Asp. 475.

1283. For forms of reply, see R. S. C. 1883, App. E.

8. Third Parties.

1284. Action of collision by the owners of the S. against the C., alleging negligence on the part of the C. and her tug, or one of them. The owners of the C. served a notice on the owner of the tug, claiming indemnity, and the court ordered that the owner of the tug be bound as between him and the owners of the C., by any decision as to the cause of the collision. No issue was directed as between the owners of the C. and the owner of the tug. At the hearing, the court found that the C. was alone to blame for the collision, and that her owners were not entitled to indemnity from the owner of the tug. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that unless issues are directed between the defendant and a third party the court cannot make a decree deciding questions of liability between them, and therefore that so much of the decree as declared that the owners of the C. were not entitled to indemnity must be struck out. The Cartsburn, 5 P. D. 35; (C. A.) 59; 49 L. J. P. D. 14; 4 Asp. 202.

9. Joinder of Issue and Close of Pleadings.

1285. Subject to Ord. XIX. r. 17, No. 213 (as to specific denials in the reply, of grounds alleged in the statement of defence), the plaintiff by his reply may join issue upon the defence, and each party in his pleading (if any), subsequent to reply, may join issue upon the previous pleading. Such joinder of issue shall operate as a denial of every material allegation of facts in the pleading upon which issue is joined, but it may except any fact which the party may be willing to admit, and shall then operate as a denial of the facts not so admitted. Ord. XIX. r. 18, No. 214.

1287. No pleading subsequent to reply other than a joinder of issue shall be pleaded without leave of the court or a judge, and then shall be pleaded only upon such terms as the court or judge shall think fit. Ord. XXIII. r. 2, No. 277.

1288. As soon as any party has joined issue upon the preceding pleading of the opposite party simply without adding any further or other pleading thereto, or has made default as mentioned in Ord. XXVII. r. 13, No. 306, the pleadings as between such parties shall be deemed to be closed. Ibid. r. 5, No. 280.

1289. If the plaintiff does not deliver a reply, or any party does not deliver any subsequent pleading within the period allowed for that purpose, the pleadings shall be deemed to be closed at the expiration of that period, and all the material statements of fact in the pleading last delivered shall be deemed to have been denied and put in issue. Ord. XXVII. r. 13, No. 306.

1290. Quare, is joinder of issue necessary where the defendant in an action of salvage has admitted the allegations in the statement of claim, and paid money into court, which, however, has not been received in satisfaction by the plaintiff? The Maria, 4 Asp. 94.

10. Under Rules and Orders of 1859.

(a) Generally.*

1291. Of the pleadings under the Rules and Orders of Nov. 1859, the present statement of claim was called the "petition," and the statement of defence the "answer."

1292. The Rules and Orders of 1859 are annulled by the Rules and Orders of 1883, App. O. (No. 22).

1293. Semble, two defences of a totally different nature, i. e. a declinatory plea, and a plea of an absolute bar, should not be pleaded together. Harmer v. Bell (The Bold Buccleugh); 7 Moore, P. C. C. 281.

1294. The pleadings in a cause must be so specific as to enable, if necessary, an examiner to elicit in evidence all the facts of the case. The Claus Thomesen, 1 Asp. 327; 8 L. T. N.S. 121; 9 Jur. N.S. 388; 11 W. R. 538.

1296. An allegation of fraud, if relied upon, should be distinctly pleaded. The Emilian Marie, 44 L. J. Adm. 9.

1297. The rule qui ponit fatetur must be rigidly enforced with respect to every averment within the personal knowledge of the party alleging, but must be applied less stringently, and in some instances rejected, when the party states facts which are not within his personal knowledge, and as to which he has not the means of acquiring accurate information. Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moore, P. C. C. 320.

1299. Where, therefore, in a case of collision caused by a vessel drifting and driving down upon another at anchor in the same anchorage, though the relative bearing of the two vessels previous to the collision was incorrectly pleaded and alleged by the vessel proved to be entitled to redress; it was held, by the Judicial Committee, that the vessels not being in motion their previous relative bearing when at anchor was not a fact so material to the issue (i. e., which vessel caused the collision), as to render the actual proof of the damage of no avail, and so entitle the offending party to the benefit of the rule. Semble, in the case of a collision between two vessels originally at anchor, the bearing of one vessel with respect to the other is not such a material fact as necessary to be stated upon the issue raised between the parties. The Alice and The Rosita, 5 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 300; L. R. 2 P. C. 214; 38 L. J. Adm. 20; 3 Asp. 193; 19 L. T. 753; 17 W. R. 209.

1300. If a plaintiff in a collision suit intends to rely upon a particular act of negligence by the defendant he is bound specifically to allege that act in his pleadings. The Marpesia, 8 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 468.

1301. It is not sufficient that the act may be included generally in an allegation in the pleadings which does not clearly state such particular act, as it is likely to mislead the defendant, and prevent his being prepared to meet that particular case. Ibid.

(c) Answer.

1302. A defendant in a cause of collision must not rely in his answer upon a simple negative, but must state the principal circumstances relating to the collision. The Why Not?, L. R. 2 A. & E. 265; 38 L. J. Adm. 26; 3 Asp. 135.

* (404) The rules of pleading introduced by the Jud. Acts and Rules are substantially framed upon the plan of the rules of pleading in force in the Admiralty Court at the time of the passing of those acts, i. e. under the Rules and Orders of Nov. 1859.

1303. In a salvage suit instituted by A. against the vessel B., A. in his petition alleged that he rescued the B. (which had been abandoned by her crew) from the hands of C., who was stripping the vessel. A salvage suit having been instituted by C. against the B., the owners of the B. pleaded that for the purposes of their answer they adopted, being ignorant of the actual facts, the allegations in A.'s petition. On motion by C. the court disallowed this plea. The Kathleen, L. R. 4 A. & E. 269, 272, n.; 2 Asp. N.S. 267.

1304. In a cause of damage by collision a general denial of the statements in the petition was pleaded in answer, and also a special defence that the damage complained of was the same as had already been adjudicated upon in a court of law, and that judgment thereon had been obtained and satisfied. The judge of the Admiralty Court dismissed the action, on the ground that the damage proceeded for was occasioned by acts done by a third party on his own responsibility, and not as agent for the owners, the defendants, and he ordered each party to pay his own costs, on the ground that this defence had not been sufficiently raised on the pleadings, and he refused to go into the special defence. Held, by the Privy Council, that the defendants were entitled to have the judgment of the court on the special defence pleaded by them, as it was at least material in respect of costs. The Orient, L. R. 3 P. C. 696; 40 L. J. Adm. P. C. 29; 39 L. J. Adm. 8; 3 Asp. 321; 1 Asp. N.S. P. C. 108; 8 Moore, P. C. N.S. 74.

1305. If an averment in the pleadings is not denied in the opposite pleadings, but a conclusion is drawn from that averment, it must be taken that the truth of the averment is admitted. The Peerless, 13 Moore, P. C. C. 488; 1 Lushington, 103; 30 L. J. Adm. 89; 3 L. T. N.S. 126.

1306. P., in his pleading, quoted certain acts and regulations of an Indian governor, and pleaded that by virtue of the same he was exempt from certain responsibility. J., the opponent, pleaded that P. was not, by virtue of the said acts and regulations, exempt. Held, that the acts and regulations were admitted by the pleadings, and P. was not bound to prove them. Ibid.

1307. The plaintiff should in his first pleading set up his whole case, so far as the facts are within his knowledge. If further facts subsequently come to his knowledge, the court will permit him to plead them, giving the other party opportunity to answer. The Bothnia, 1 Lushington, 53; 29 L. J. Adm. 65; 2 L. T. N.S. 160; The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 146.

1308. Plaintiff's petition alleged that his vessel, while at anchor, was run down by the defendant's vessel. The petition did not assign any particular cause of blame. The defendant pleaded that, from the violence of the tempest and sea, his anchors were unable to hold, and that the collision was solely caused thereby (a plea of inevitable accident). Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled in their reply to allege that the collision was occasioned solely by the negligence of those on board the defendant's vessel, and the default of her ground tackle. The Bothnia, supra.

1309. In a cause of necessities a reply leaving it uncertain whether the person in possession of the vessel at the time of the supply was the original mortgagee, or the defendant, the transferee of the mortgage, held bad. The Troubadour, L. R. 1 A. & E. 302; 2 Asp. 475.

1310. The whole case of either party must be stated in his first pleading, nothing must be kept back. Reply, pleading further facts, rejected on the ground that they should have been pleaded in the petition. The Henrietta, 19th April, 1860.

1312. Semble, in causes of damage by collision, inevitable accident and fault on board the plaintiff's vessel cannot both be pleaded. The Daphne, No. 1343, 27th November, 1863.

1313. It is competent to the defendant to plead that his vessel and crew are not to blame at all for the collision, that if blame is attributable to any one on board his vessel it is to the licensed pilot in charge, and that the plaintiff's vessel and crew are to blame for the collision. The Canadian, 1 W. Rob. 345; The Batavier, 10 Jur. 20; 4 Notes of Cases, 356; The Admiral Boxer, Swabey, 193; The Argo, ibid. 465; The George, 4 Notes of Cases, 161.

1314. In a cause of collision if the owners of the damaging vessel intend to attribute the cause of damage to the wilful misconduct of their master, the facts of the case should be admitted, and the wilful acts of the master set forth. The Seine, 5 Jur. N.S. 299.

(f) *Charges not pleaded.

1315. In causes of collision it is often impossible to state in the first instance all the important facts bearing on the collision. Sometimes the collision takes place in darkness, and it cannot be known on board one ship what orders were given on board the other, what look-out was kept, &c. If these are discovered subsequently to pleading no wrong is done in admitting evidence of them if the other party has opportunity of contradicting them. The Schwalbe, Swabey, 523.

1316. When extra-articulate evidence is pertinent to the issue, and especially when it forms part of the res gesta, the court is most reluctant to exclude it. On the other hand, if the opposite party has been surprised, and desires an opportunity of meeting the extra-articulate evidence, the court will give leave to counter-plead, and produce evidence on the counter-plea. Ibid.

1317. Evidence pertinent to the issue, objected to as extra-articulate, admitted, the other party having leave to counter-plead and produce evidence in reply. Ibid.

ings. The Ebenezer, 2 W. Rob. 210; 7 Jur. 1117.

1319. Semble, a defence in law not raised in the pleadings, cannot be relied on at the hearing. The Seine, Swabey, 411.

1320. When a defence is so framed that, although it puts in issue all the facts alleged on the part of the claimants, it gives no notice, or insufficient notice, of any particular point to which the evidence should be especially directed, the court, in judging of the effect of such evidence, will have regard to the degree of notice so given by the defendants. The Minnehaha, 9 W. R. 925.

1321. The practice of the court requires that all the essential particulars of the defence should be set forth in the pleadings in the first instance; and semble, the court will not sanction the attempt to supply such omissions in the plea by importing them into the proofs. The Virgil, 2 W. Rob. 204; The Speed, ibid. 227; The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18; 5 Notes of Cases, 36; The Anne and Jane, 2 W. Rob. 104; The Hebe, ibid. 146.

1323. The court will reject evidence extraneous to the pleadings. The Ebenezer, 7 Jur. 1117.

1324. It is a matter of right to either party to object to extra-articulate evidence either at the hearing or previously. The Neptunus, Swabey, 297; 30 L. T. 219.

1325. Application to strike out extra-articulate evidence on an allegation in a collision cause before the papers were printed and put in the hands of the Trinity masters, granted. Ibid.

1326. If the Trinity masters seemed to the court to form their opinion from parts of the evidence which were inadmissible, the court would not adopt their advice, but proceed on that only which was clear evidence. The Acteon, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 178.

(409) The case as presented by the pleadings is the only one upon which the court can be called upon to decide. Soule v. Rodocanachi,

The Oregon, 1 Newb. Adm. 504. [AMERICAN.]

(410) A decree must be in consonance with the pleadings in the cause, and evidence outside the allegations made by either party cannot be regarded in support of his charge or defence. The Rhode Island, Olcott, Adm. 505; Davis v. Leslie, 1 Abb. Adm. 123. [AMERICAN.]

1327. Appeal remitted to the court below with leave to both parties to plead further, and give further evidence, the Trinity masters having given advice to the judge on a point not mentioned in the pleadings. The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18.

1328. A question of set-off not having been properly raised, or discussed in the Admiralty Court, the Judicial Committee, sitting as a court of appeal, refused to entertain it. The Christina, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 372.

1329. Any particular ground of defence in opposition to a bottomry bond should be distinctly pleaded, and not raised for the first time at the hearing. The Bonaparte, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 475; 17 Jur. 285; 3 W. Rob. 298; 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. 55.

1330. In a cause of damage, held that the defendant's vessel was to blame for not having ported her helm and eased off her main-sheet. No such charge was contained in the plaintiff's pleadings, though a general charge of mismanagement was pleaded besides other charges. The court, but with doubt, pronounced for the damage. The Lady Ann, 7 Notes of Cases, 370.

1331. In a cause of damage those on board the vessel proceeded against were found to have been guilty of negligence, and therefore to blame for the collision. Objection then taken that such negligence was not the negligence of the defendants, the owners, or their servants, but of certain independent contractors to whom the vessel had been entrusted; held to have been urged too late after an absolute appearance and pleadings not raising this objection. The Ruby Queen, 1 Lushington, 266.

1332. Defence that navigating the wrong side of the river was a wilful act of the master for which the owners were not liable, overruled because not pleaded. The Seine, Swabey, 413.

1333. In a cause of wages the court refused to regard proofs of the plaintiff's general incapacity, as that charge had not been pleaded. The Exeter, 2 C. Rob. 261.

1334. In a suit for wages, the defendant having rested his defence formaliter on the ground of an asserted consent of the mariner, which was held not to bar him, the court will, nevertheless, take into consideration matters forming a just ground of defence, but which the defendant may have improperly overlooked. The Elizabeth, 2 Dodson, 406.

1335. In a cause of wages the owners pleaded a forfeiture, under the statute, of the wages, on the ground of desertion, but did not plead a charge of temporary desertion. The evidence established the latter, but not the former charge. The court pronounced for the full wages. The Two Sisters, 2 W. Rob. 125, 146.

1336. As to what evidence is or is not extra-articulate, see The Harvey, 2 Hagg. 83; The Towan, 8 Jur. 222; Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Cons. 96, n. (Eccl.)

1336a. As to what charges should be pleaded in actions of bottomry, see a. 22, p. 1605, and in actions of collision, see s. 23, p. 1606.

(g) *Variance from Proofs.

1337. A party complaining of an injury and suing for redress, can recover only secundum allegata et probata. The Ann and Magnet, 1 Lushington, 55; 13 Moore, P. C. C. 198; 3 L. T. N.S. 128; 8 W. R. 567; The Despatch, 1 Lushington, 98; 14 Moore, P. C. C. 83; The North American, Swabey, 358; 12 Moore, P. C. C. 331; The Wakefield, 5 Jur. 69 [IRISH]; The Ebenezer, 2 W. Rob. 209; 7 Jur. 1117.

1338. There is no hardship or injustice in adhering strictly to this rule against the complainant, for he knows

* (411) Libellants must recover on the allegations in their libel; respondents must rely exclusively on the grounds they have selected in their answer. Campbell v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 1 McAll. C. C. (Cal.) 77. [AMERICAN.]

(412) The defence in the answer in a cause of collision between a schooner and a steamboat rested on faults imputed to the schooner in holding her course across the bows of the steamer, under circumstances in which it was her duty to have gone about, and the defence set up by the proofs rested upon faults committed on the part of the schooner in an attempt to come about abruptly, and falling off or drifting against the steamer in the attempt. Held, that the latter defence was a deviation from the answer, and that, under the pleadings, the claimants were not entitled to the benefit of it. The Washington Irving, 1 Abb. Adm. 336. [AMERICAN.]

the nature of the wrong for which he seeks a remedy, and can easily state it with precision and accuracy. But great inconvenience would follow to the opposite party unless this strictness was required, because he might constantly be exposed to the disadvantage of having prepared himself to meet one state of facts, and of finding himself suddenly and unexpectedly confronted by a totally different one. The great object of all courts where trials of fact take place ought to be to bring the parties to a distinct agreement as to what is in contest between them, and this object would be entirely frustrated if it were competent to a party to place his right to redress on one ground, and then to abandon it at the trial for another, although the latter ground would originally have given him a right to recover against the other party. The Ann and Magnet, 13 Moore, P. C. C. 206; 1 Lushington, 55.

1339. The rule that a party can only recover secundum allegata et probata applies only to cases where the averments alleged in the pleadings are material to the issue raised. The Alice and The Rosita, L. R. 2 P. C. 214; 5 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 300; 38 L. J. Adm. 20; 3 Asp. 193.

1340. In a case of collision, by drifting, between two vessels originally at anchor, the bearing of the one vessel when at anchor with respect to the other is not such a material fact as is necessary to be stated upon the issue raised between the parties, and a variance therefore in the pleadings from the proof is immaterial. Ibid.

1341. In a case of collision the plaintiff alleged, first, that the defendant improperly starboarded; and secondly, if he did not starboard, at all events he neglected to port as he ought to have done. Held, the court might, on the evidence, well find for the plaintiff without deciding whether the defendant had starboarded or not, for the first charge, if proved, necessarily involved the second, and if not proved, the second was sufficient to sustain the judgment. Therefore the objection of want of certainty in pleading was untenable. The Amalia and Marie de Brabant, 2 Asp. 58; 10 L. T. N.S. 826.

1342. The rule as to proof secundum allegata does not apply so stringently to the defendant. The East Lothian, 14 Moore, P. C. C. 177; 1 Lushington, 241; 1 Asp. 76; 4 L. T. N.S. 487.

1343. An erroneous allegation of the mode in which the injury occurred may, as an answer, fail to be proved; but the plaintiff is, nevertheless, equally bound to rely on his own case, and not on the failure of his adversary. Ibid.

1345. In a cause of damage the defendant in his pleadings charged that the collision was the fault of the plaintiff's vessel, and at the hearing argued the case as one of inevitable accident. Seemle, the court would not have permitted this variation in the defence but for certain expressions in the defendant's pleadings from which an averment of inevitable accident might be inferred. The England, 5 Notes of Cases, 171, 174.

(h) Short of Proofs.*

1346. In a cause of damage by collision the defendants pleaded in defence compulsory pilotage, and the plaintiffs in reply generally denied this allegation. At the hearing evidence was offered by the plaintiffs to show that the defendants' vessel was improperly trimmed, that the master was responsible for this, that he had not informed the pilot of the fact, and that this improper trimming, coupled with the fact that the pilot was ignorant of it, contributed to the accident. Held, by the Court of Appeal in Chancery (reversing the decision of the Admiralty Court), that evidence on these points was

12. Admissions by—

(a) Generally.

1347. Any party to a cause or matter may give notice, by his pleading, or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case of any other party. Ord. XXXII. r. 1, No. 371.

(b) Confession of Defence.

1348. Whenever any defendant, in his statement of defence, or in any further statement of defence as in the last rule mentioned, alleges any ground of defence which has arisen after the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver a confession of such defence (which confession may be in the Form No. 5 in Appendix B., with such variations as circumstances may require), and may thereupon sign judgment for his costs up to the time of the pleading of such defence, unless the court or a judge shall, either before or after the delivery of such confession, otherwise order. Ord. XXIV. r. 3, No. 284.

13. In Proceedings by Default.

(a) Generally.

1349. In all actions not by the rules of this Order otherwise specially provided for, in case the party served with the writ, or in Admiralty actions in rem, the defendant does not appear within the time limited for appearance, upon the filing by the plaintiff of a proper affidavit of service, and, if the writ is not specially indorsed under Order III. r. 6, of a statement of claim, the action may proceed as if such party had appeared, subject, as to actions where an account is claimed, to the provisions of Order XV. Ord. XIII. r. 12, No. 112.

See c. 12, p. 1531.

14. Proceedings in lieu of Demurrer.†

1350. No demurrer shall be allowed. Ord. XXV. r. 1, No. 285.

If, in the opinion of the court or a judge, the decision of such point of law substantially disposes of the whole action, or of any distinct cause of action, ground of defence, set-off, counter-claim, or reply therein, the court or judge may thereupon dismiss the action or make such other order therein as may be just. Ord. XXV. r. 3, No. 287.

1353. The court or a judge may order any pleading to be struck out, on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action or answer, and in any such case, or in case of the action or defence being shown by the pleadings to be frivolous or vexatious, the court or a judge may order the action to be stayed or dismissed, or judgment to be entered accordingly, as may be just. Ibid. r. 4, No. 288.

1358. A defendant in a cause of salvage filed a petition on protest alleging that the vessel proceeded against was worth less than £1,000 when brought into a place of safety, and that no proceedings were taken against the cargo in the suit. Held, that the petition on protest did not disclose sufficient ground to oust the jurisdiction of the court, inasmuch as it was not stated that the value of the property saved did not exceed £1,000. The Empire Queen, Ir. 16. Amendment.

1361. A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or of any matter stated in any pleading, may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just. Ord. XIX. r. 7, No. 203.

1362. The court or a judge may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any indorsement or pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action; and may in any such case order the costs of the application to be paid as between solicitor and client. Ibid. r. 27, No. 223.

just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. Ord. XXVIII. r. 1, No. 309.

1364. In all cases not provided for by the preceding rules of this order, application for leave to amend may be made by either party to the court or a judge or to the judge at the trial of the action, and such amendment may be allowed upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just Ibid. r. 6, No. 314.

(b) Mode.

1367. An indorsement or pleading may be amended by written alterations in the copy which has been delivered, and by additions on paper to be interleaved therewith if necessary, unless the amendments require the insertion of more than 144 words in any one place, or are so numerous or of such a nature that the making them in writing would render the document difficult or inconvenient to read, in either of which cases the amendment must be made by delivering a print of the document as amended. Ord. XXVIII. r. 8, No. 316.

1368. Whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended, the same, when amended, shall be marked with the date of the order, if any, under which the same is so amended, and of the day on which such amendment is made, in manner following, viz.: "Amended day of pursuant to order of dated the of ." Ibid. r. 9, No. 317.

(c) Time.

1369. If a party who has obtained an order for leave to amend does not amend accordingly within the time limited for that purpose by the order, or if no time is thereby limited, then within fourteen days from the date of the order, such order to amend shall, on the expiration of such limited time as aforesaid, or of such fourteen days, as the case may be, become ipso facto void, unless the time is extended by the court or a judge. Ibid. r. 7, No. 315. As to the previous practice thereon, see The Justyn, 11 W. R. 44.

1370. The time for amending any pleading may be enlarged by consent in writing, without application to the court or a judge. Ord. LXIV. r. 8, No. 968.

(d) Statement of Claim.

1371. The plaintiff may, without any leave, amend his statement of claim, whether indorsed on the writ or not, once at any time before the expiration of the time limited for reply and before replying, or, where no defence is delivered, at any time before the expiration of four weeks from the appearance of the defendant who shall have last appeared. Ord. XXVIII. r. 2, No. 310.

(e) Counter-claim or Set-off.

1372. A defendant who has set up any counter-claim or set-off may, without any leave, amend such counter-claim or set-off at any time before the expiration of the time allowed him for answering the reply, and before such answer, or in case there be no reply, then at any time before the expiration of twenty-eight days from defence. Ibid. r. 3, No. 311.

See also No. 1404, p. 1607.

(f) Pleadings in Answer.

1373. Where any party has amended his pleading under rules 2 or 3 the opposite party shall plead to the amended pleading, or amend his pleading within the time he then has to plead, or within eight days from the delivery of the amendment, whichever shall last expire; and in case the opposite party has pleaded before the delivery of the amendment, and does not plead again or amend within the time above mentioned, he shall be deemed to rely on his original pleading in answer to such amendment. Ibid. r. 5, No. 313.

(g) Objection to—

1374. Where any party has amended his pleading (under Rules No. 310, as to statement of claim, or No. 311, as to counter-claim or set-off), the opposite party may, within eight days after the delivery to him of the amended pleading, apply to the court or a judge to disallow the amendment, or any part thereof, and the court or judge may, if satisfied that the justice of the case requires it, disallow the same, or allow it subject to such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just. Ibid. r. 4, No. 312.

(h) Prior to Judicature Acts and Rules.

1375. In a cause of damage by collision, the plaintiff pleaded that both vessels were riding at anchor, and that defendant's vessel drove from her anchor foul of plaintiff's vessel. Defendant pleaded that it was not his vessel, but plaintiff's vessel that drove. At the hearing and after examination of the plaintiff's witness, the defendant applied for leave to amend his pleadings by alleging that there was a duly-licensed pilot on board his vessel, who, if any one, was to blame for the collision. Application refused. The Ahkera, 15th June, 1864.

1376. In a salvage action against ship, cargo, and freight, the petition alleged that the owners had paid £300 in discharge of the plaintiff's claim against ship and freight. On motion by defendants, owners of cargo, the court directed the pleading to be amended by leaving out the amount paid to the plaintiffs. The Duc Checchi, L. R. 4 A. & E. 35, n.; 1 Asp. N.S. 294.

17. Issues.

1377. For provisions that where it appears to the court or judge that the issues of fact in dispute are not sufficiently defined, the parties may be directed to prepare issues which, if the parties differ, shall be settled by the judge, see Ord. XXXIII. r. 1, No. 380.

1378. As to the powers of the court on motion for judgment to direct such issues or questions to be tried as it may think fit, see Ord. XL. r. 10, No. 568.

1379. As to issues in interpleader cases, see Ord. LVII. rr. 7, 9, 13, Nos. 856, 858, 862.

(b) Third Parties.

1380. Where in a collision cause the defendant claims indemnity from a third party, who appears and defends, the court may find the original defendant solely to blame, but unless issues are directed between the defendant and the third party the court cannot make a decree deciding questions of liability between them. The Carlsburn, 5 P. D. 35 (C. A.) 59; 4 Asp. 202; 49 L. J. Adm. 14.

See s. 8, p. 1596.

18. Special Case.

See c. 24, p. 1572.

19. Questions of Fact agreed to be decided.

1381. When the parties to a cause or matter are agreed as to the questions of fact to be decided between them, they may, after writ issued and before judgment, by consent and order of the court or a judge, proceed to the trial of any such questions of fact without formal pleadings. Ord. XXXIV. r. 9, No. 397.

1382. As to the entry for trial and mode of trial of such questions of fact, see c. 38, p. 1639.

20. Cross Actions.

1383. As to the old practice as to the pleadings and evidence for the trial of cross causes, see The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 34; The Tecla Carmen and North American, 1 Lushington, 79; 5 Jur. N.S. 659; The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. N.S. 307; The Gauntlet and Lady Franklin, 17th March, 1854; Coote's Adm. Prac. 30; The Gabriel, 4 W. R. 91; The Annapolis and Johanna Stoll, 4 L. See c. 43, p. 1667.

22. In Bottomry Actions.

(a) *Before the Judicature Acts and Rules.

1384. In cases of bottomry it is not necessary, as a general proposition, for the bondholder in the first instance to mention in his pleadings all the circumstances, for he relies on the execution of the bond. The Mary Ann, 10 Jur. 255; 4 Notes of Cases, 376.

1385. A bottomry bond may be supported by facts which come out incidentally in the evidence, but the attention of the court must be primarily directed to those points more immediately put in issue in the pleadings, and it would be most inconvenient to decide the case, not according to what is alleged and proved, but according to that which incidentally transpires in the course of the suit. The Ariadne, 1 W. Rob. 412; 6 Jur. 513; 1 Notes of Cases, 494.

1386. The existence of a local law may be properly pleaded as material evidence to support an averment that the agreement was to make advances on the credit of the ship and freight, and that the commissions were customary. The Laurel, 3 N. R. 48.

1387. Bottomry bond pleaded as given in February, 1852, to secure an advance of money. At the hearing it appeared that the bond was for goods furnished in the previous September under an alleged agreement. Held, that upon the pleadings the holder could not recover. The Wakefield, 5 Jur. 69. (Court of Delegates.) [IRISH.]

1388. An objection to a bottomry bond, that sea risk was not stipulated for, ought to be raised on the pleadings, so that if answerable it may be answered. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 281.

1389. In opposing a bottomry bond the defence intended to be relied upon (e.g. the want of notice of the necessity for or the intention to execute a bottomry bond) should be clearly stated in the pleadings. The Bonaparte, 17 Jur. 285; 3 W. Rob. 298; 21 L. T. 280; 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. 55; and S. C. on appeal, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 460.

1390. This point not having been distinctly raised in the pleadings the cause was remitted, with liberty to supply further proof in respect of such notice. Ibid.

1391. An objection by the owners of cargo that the master should have communicated with them before hypothe- cating their cargo, cannot prevail unless pleaded. The Olivier, 6 L. T. N.S. 259; 31 L. J. N.S. Adm. 137; 1 Lushington, 484; Glascott v. Laing, 2 Phillips, 310.

1392. In a suit to establish the validity of a bottomry bond, a prayer in the answer that before pronouncing the validity of the bond or otherwise the court would disallow certain charges in the accounts, was considered as without precedent. Answer directed to be amended by the omission of such prayer. The Osmanli, 3 W. Rob. 207.

1393. In a cause of bottomry, on motion on behalf of the bondholder, the defendants, the assignees of the owner, ordered to bring in all proofs then in their power or possession before the bondholder filed his answer to the defendants' pleadings, and on the further proofs being so brought in, the bondholder allowed further time to send out to the Mauritius before pleading. The Orelia, 3 Hagg. 77, n.

1394. The defence that a bottomry bond was given as a collateral security for bills of exchange, which it was alleged had been accepted and paid, ought to be raised on the pleadings, so as to give plaintiffs notice thereof. Leave to amend given. The Onward, 1 Asp. N.S. 542, n.

23. In Collision Actions.

(a) Generally.

1395. The pleadings should be confined to the merits of the collision. The George Arkle, 1 Lushington, 222; The Transit, No. 1992, 16 Feb. 1864; The Clarence, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 208.

1396. The pleadings should state accurately the facts and the reasons on which both parties rely. Nothing should be left to inference. The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18; 5 Notes of Cases, 364.

1398. Where it was intended to charge non-observance of the 296th (now repealed) section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), with respect to the rule of port helm, the act done or not done was required to be specifically pleaded to be in violation of the statute. The Bothnia, 1 Lushington, 52; 29 L. J. Adm. 65; 2 L. T. N.S. 160; The Ironmaster, 6 Jur. N.S. 782.

1399. It appearing from the evidence that both vessels were partly to blame, but that in the case of one of them there had been culpable delay in porting the helm on perceiving the approach of the other, held, reversing the sentence of the Court of Admiralty, that under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 296, 298 (now repealed), the owners of the vessel so neglecting to port her helm in time could not maintain their suit in the Court of Admiralty, or recover any damages in respect of the collision; but the point not having been raised in the court below, no costs of appeal given. The James, 4 W. R. 353.

1400. In a cause of damage by collision the protest should be brought in, but it is unnecessary to plead the contents of it. The Mellona, 10 Jur. 994; The Speculator, 12 Jur. 546; The Rob Roy, 13 Jur. 756.

1401. Objections to pleading the protest and value of the ship. Held, that the protest would be before the court in the regular course of the cause, and that the value of the ship, where not agreed upon or ascertained by appraisal, was a question for the registrar and merchants. Objections allowed. The Speculator, 12 Jur. 546.

1402. A verdict obtained at common law could not be introduced into Admiralty pleadings. The Clarence, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 208, 209.

(b) Before the Judicature Acts and Rules.

(aa) *Generally.

1403. Plaintiffs, the owners of a sailing vessel in proceedings against a steamer, need not plead that their vessel, after

1404. The court having found both vessels to blame, refused at such a late stage to allow the defendants to amend their statement of defence by adding a counterclaim, but left them to institute a cross action. The Leon, 6 P. D. 148; 50 L. J. P. D. 59.

1405. In a cause of damage by collision, if the owners of the damaging vessel intend to attribute the cause of damage to the wilful misconduct of their master, the facts of the case should be admitted, and the wilful acts of the master set forth. The Seine, 5 Jur. N.S. 299.

1406. If the defendants in an action of collision desire to claim limitation of liability in such action, they must do so by their pleadings. Wahlberg v. Young, 45 L. J. C. P. 783; 4 Asp. 27, n.; 24 W. R. 847.

1407. It is a rule to be observed in all courts, that a party complaining of an injury, and suing for redress, can recover only secundum allegata et probata. The Ann and Magnet, 1 Lushington, 55; 13 Moore, P. C. C. 198; 3 L. T. N.S. 128; 8 W. R. 567; The Despatch, 1 Lushington, 98; 14 Moore, P. C. C. 83; The North American, Swaby, 358; 12 Moore, P. C. C. 331; The Wakefield, 5 Irish

* (429) The statement of claim in a collision action is entitled in the cause, and avers that the plaintiffs have suffered damage by collision with the defendants' ship by the negligence and bad navigation of the defendants' servants at a particular time and place. It then proceeds to state shortly and in separate paragraphs the name, tonnage, description of the plaintiffs' vessel, whence and whither bound, and with what cargo, the description of wind, weather and tide, about the time of the collision, the position, bearing and conduct of the defendants' vessel, manœuvres of the plaintiffs' vessel to avoid collision, the wrongful conduct of the defendants' vessel causing the collision, and the mode of collision. It charges in separate paragraphs blame to those on board the defendants' vessel in respect of such bad navigation and such breaches of the sea or local collision rules as are considered to have been committed. It concludes with a claim for judgment against the defendants for the damages occasioned to the plaintiffs by the collision, for costs, and for a reference to the registrar and merchants to assess the damages.

(430) The statement of defence is similarly entitled, and states shortly similar particulars, and the defendants' account of the circumstances of the collision, averring that the defendants' master and crew were in no degree to blame for the collision, and charging such bad navigation and breaches of the sea or local collision rules as are considered to have been committed on board the plaintiffs' vessel.

(431) If it is intended to prefer a counterclaim for damages to the defendant's vessel, the defendant, in a concluding paragraph, headed counter-claim, declares he repeats (so far as necessary) the paragraphs (stating the number of them) of the defence, avers that he has sustained damage by such collision, and claims judgment, costs, and a reference to the registrar and merchants to assess the damages.

(431a) For forms of statement of claim and defence in such actions, see Roscoe's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.) App. pp. 484, 485, 509.

Jur. 60; The East Lothian, 14 Moore, P. C. C. 177; 4 L. T. N.S. 487.

1408. Semble, slight discrepancies between the pleadings and evidence will not be regarded by the court, owing to the difficulty of practitioners always clearly understanding all the points of the cause before filing their pleadings. The Traveller, 2 W. Rob. 198.

1409. In causes of damage by collision a considerable degree of elasticity is allowed in pleading, because of the difficulty of getting at or understanding all the facts requisite to the case. The court would not therefore stop the plaintiff's case for ordinary errors in his pleading, but it will do so when his evidence is irreconcilable with his petition. The Haswell, No. 1673, 9th July, 1863.

1410. In causes of collision it is often impossible to state in the first instance all the important facts bearing on the collision. Sometimes the collision takes place in darkness, and it cannot be known on board one ship what orders were given on board the other, what look-out was kept, &c. If these are discovered subsequently to pleading no wrong is done in admitting evidence of them, if the other party has opportunity of contradicting them. The Schwalbe, Swabey, 523.

1411. A plaintiff is bound to plead facts, from which the law will infer that the collision was occasioned by the default of the defendant, but not to plead the legal inference. The East Lothian, 1 Lushington, 241; 14 Moore, P. C. C. 177; 4 L. T. N.S. 488.

1412. It is sufficient for a party who complains of an injury to his vessel occasioned by the improper course of another vessel, to describe that course, without undertaking to attribute it to any particular conduct on board the other vessel. Ibid.

1413. The plaintiff cannot recover in full if he fails to prove the case as set up in his pleading and evidence, although fault is otherwise established against the other vessel, and none proved against his vessel. The North American, Swabey, 358; 12 Moore, P. C. C. 331.

1414. It was pleaded that the default of the defendant's vessel took place in a particular manner. Held, that such default must be proved in the manner in which it was alleged in the pleadings. The Ann and Magnet, 1 Lushington, 55; 13 Moore, P. C. C. 198; 8 W. R. 567; 3 L. T. N.S. 128.

1415. It is not enough to establish by evidence that the default was committed in another manner, although the result would be the same upon the merits, as the court will confine its judgment to the issues raised upon the pleadings. Ibid.

1416. Plaintiffs in a cause of damage by collision against the Ann, charged in their pleadings that the collision was caused by the Ann having suddenly and improperly starboarded her helm. Issue having been taken on this fact, it was proved that the collision arose from the Ann not having altered her course till the last moment when a collision was inevitable, and that the Ann had not starboarded her helm at all, but ported it too late. Held, a fatal variance, and suit dismissed. Ibid.

1417. According to the plaintiffs' pleadings their vessel, the T. C., was close-hauled on the starboard tack, and the defendant's vessel, the N. A., was on the port tack without a good look-out; and the vessels would have gone clear, but that the N. A. starboarded, and with her starboard bow came into collision with the port bow of the T. C. Held, by the court below, that the collision was caused by the want of a good look-out on board the N. A., and by the porting of her helm, and also by the starboarding of the T. C., and that both vessels were to blame. On appeal, held, that there was a want of good look-out on board the N. A., that her helm was improperly ported, that such conduct sufficiently accounted for the collision, that neither the T. C. nor N. A. starboarded, and that the collision took place with the port, and not the starboard, bow of the N. A., but that the case was not proved as alleged in the plaintiffs' pleadings. Judgment therefore affirmed. The North American, Swabey, 358; 12 Moore, P. C. C. 331.

1418. Plaintiff charged that the engines of his vessel, the S., were stopped to bring the ship up, that the lights of the H. coming up behind her were then observed, and that the H. continued her course until about fifty yards off, when she suddenly starboarded her helm and ran into the S., and that the collision was occasioned solely by want of skill or the negligence or other misconduct of those on board the H., and especially in their not having kept out of the way of the S. as they ought to have done. The evidence for the plaintiff was to the effect that the H. was to blame, either because she did not keep her course or did not starboard her helm, and that had she starboarded the collision would have been avoided. Held, that the plaintiff's evidence was irreconcilable with the case laid in his pleading, and that the general charge of negligence was too general to include the charge as disclosed by the evidence. Judgment for the defendant on the plaintiff's own case. The Haswell, No. 1673, 9th July, 1863. Affirmed on appeal, 18th February, 1864.

1419. The plaintiff pleaded that the collision was caused solely by the A. not having carried the regulation lights. Held, that the A. was to blame as to her lights, and that the other vessel was also to blame. Held, further, that the plaintiff was not barred from recovery of a moiety of the damage by his having pleaded that the A. was solely to blame. The Aurora and The Robert Ingham, 1 Lushington, 327.

1420. Plaintiff pleaded inter alia, to the effect that half an hour previous to the collision in question, the vessel proceeded against had run foul of a barge, and that on being threatened with legal proceedings the owners of the vessel proceeded against had paid the damage. On objection to this paragraph the court ordered it to be struck out. The Cosmopolitan, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 179.

1421. Circumstances may sometimes be relied upon which are not pleaded, but they must be circumstances of which the party pleading was necessarily ignorant, such as where the person in charge of the other vessel was drunk, or where the pilot was below, or where there was no look-out, or where there was misconduct. The East Lothian, 1 Lushington, 244.

1422. Neither of two sailing vessels which came into collision, had observed the Admiralty regulations respecting lights, but neither had pleaded that the collision was occasioned by such non-observance on the part of the other. The court, nevertheless, held, that under the circumstances of the case, both vessels were barred of recovery by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, s. 28 (now repealed). The Aliwal, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 96; 18 Jur. 296.

1423. The plaintiff alleged, first, that the defendant improperly starboarded; and secondly, if he did not starboard, at all events he neglected to port as he ought to have done. Held, the court might, on the evidence, well find for the plaintiff without deciding whether the defendant had starboarded or not, for the first charge, if proved, necessarily involved the second, and if not proved, the second was sufficient to sustain judgment. Therefore the objection of want of certainty in pleading was untenable. The Amalia and Marie de Brabant, 10 L. T. N.S. 826.

1424. The defendant was found to blame for improperly porting his helm. Held, that this charge, though not specially pleaded by the plaintiff, was sufficiently to be inferred from his pleadings. The Moderation, 1 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 528; 9 L. T. N.S. 586.

1425. The plaintiffs charged the vessel proceeded against with having caused the damage by two separate collisions, whereby the damaged vessel, being at anchor, was driven on the rocks and sunk. In the pleadings the defendants admitted the fact of the first collision, but denied that a second collision had occurred as alleged by the plaintiffs. The evidence established that the first collision was of such a nature that the plaintiffs' vessel might have been driven ashore on the rocks even if no second collision had occurred, which fact was not clearly established by the evidence. Held, that the first collision being proved the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, as they had proved a fact sufficient to found a judgment in their favour, and to satisfy the rule that a plaintiff can recover only secundum allegata et probata, although the allegation charging the second collision was not proved. The Despatch, 14 Moore, P. C. C. 83; 1 Lushington, 98.

1426. Special damages as rewards paid to salvors for services rendered necessary by the collision, are not to be pleaded. The George Arkle, 1 Lushington, 222.

1427. Averments in the plaintiffs' pleadings of particulars of salvage services rendered to the damaged ship, and that £130 had been paid for salvage, directed to be struck out. Ibid.

1428. Where the plaintiffs' vessel is at anchor at the time of a collision and the defendant's vessel under weigh, the plaintiffs need not, as in other cases, plead the specific acts of negligence which occasioned the collision. The Secret, 1 Asp. N.S. 318. [IRISH.]

1429. In a collision between plaintiff's vessel at anchor, and defendant's vessel under weigh, it will be sufficient for the plaintiff to set forth the circumstances of the collision within his knowledge, and charge generally that it was owing to the mismanagement or misconduct of the do-

defendant's vessel and crew, and the burthen of proof is prima facie on the defendant to make out a satisfactory defence. The Bothnia, 1 Lush. 54; 2 L. T. N.S. 160; 29 L. J. Adm. 65.

1430. The plaintiff should charge the defendant's vessel and crew with whatever fault or blame on their part he may consider occasioned or contributed to the collision. It is not, however, always in the plaintiff's power to set forth all the circumstances of the case in his first pleading, as the collision may have occurred at night or under other circumstances preventing his knowing all that transpired on the occasion. Therefore, where the defendant's answer discloses circumstances enabling the plaintiff to make further charges of misconduct or default against the defendant's vessel or crew, the plaintiff is at liberty to do so in his reply. Ibid.

1431. Where a plaintiff's vessel was run down at anchor, and the plaintiff pleaded that fact, charging negligence generally, and the answer pleaded that the collision was not occasioned by negligence, but by the violence of the tempest and sea, which prevented the anchors of the defendant's vessel from holding, the plaintiff may reply that the collision was occasioned by the default of the defendant's ground tackle. Ibid.

1432. Where it is pleaded by the defendant that his ship was in charge of a duly-licensed pilot, the plaintiff should plead that the pilot was not taken on board by compulsion of law, by reason that the ship was in ballast, and therefore exempt from being compelled to take a pilot, if the plaintiff intends to rely on that fact in impeachment of the defence. The Agricola, 2 W. Rob. 16.

1434. The plaintiff may plead a certain state of facts, and charge generally that the defendant's vessel and crew were to blame for the collision. The court will not order the pleading to be amended so as to limit the general charge by the case laid, but will not permit under the general charge an entirely different case to be proved to that laid. The Great Eastern, 10th Nov. 1863.

1435. The plaintiff pleaded, first, the regulations of the Admiralty respecting the exhibition of lights, and other regulations respecting the courses to be followed by steamers, published by the Admiralty, and republished by the Trinity House at Hull; secondly, a printed copy of such regulations as republished; thirdly, the history of the voyage in one article, at great length. Held, first, that the regulations respecting the exhibition of lights were the only binding regulations under the act of parliament; secondly, the publication of those regulations must be shown from the Gazette, as an exhibit; thirdly, the article pleading the transactions must be divided for the convenience of taking evidence thereon by an examiner. The Rob Roy, 13 Jur. 615.

1436. It was pleaded to the effect that defendant admitted his liability to pay and promised to pay, and had the ship taken into his yard to be repaired. Objections to these pleadings allowed with costs. The Transit, No. 1992, 16th Feb. 1864. See also The Friendship, No. 1050, 13th May, 1861.

1437. If such matters should be material on the question of costs, the court, after judgment on the question of damage, might permit evidence thereon to be given in reference to costs. Ibid.

(cc) By Defendants.

1438. A defendant is not bound to do more in his pleading than deny that the collision was occasioned by the default of his vessel or of his servants. The East Lothian, 1 Lushington, 241; 14 Moore, P. C. C. 177; 4 L. T. N.S. 487.

1439. A defendant, though pleading a particular fact as the cause of the collision, is not bound to prove it, and if he fails in so doing he is not thereby concluded. Ibid.

1440. The reason of the rule laid down in the Ann and Magnet (13 Moore, P. C. C. 198) altogether fails in its application to the defence of the vessel proceeded against. An erroneous allegation of the mode in which an injury occurred does not, if made by way of answer, narrow the issue down to the particular fact alleged, so as to entitle the complainant to recover if the proof of it fails. Ibid. 4 L. T. N.S. 488; 14 Moore, P. C. C. 177.

1441. In pleading immunity by reason of the vessel's being under a dock-master's orders, it is not sufficient to state that the collision occurred in a dock, and that the defendant's servants were acting at the time under the dock-master's orders, and were bound by law so to do, and therefore not responsible for the collision. It must be further stated that the dock was a public dock, and the act of parliament should also be referred to by reason of which it was compulsory upon the defendant's servants to act under the orders of the dock-master. The Bilbao, No. 298, Nov. 3, 1860.

1442. A starboard-tacked vessel came in collision with a port-tacked vessel, both close-hauled. The weather was thick and foggy. The port-tacked vessel proceeded against averred in plea thick fog, and that the other vessel was to blame in not keeping a good look-out, giving notice of her approach, and putting her helm down. At the hearing the case was argued as one of inevitable accident. The court, though reprehending such a variation between plea and argument, held the facts to be sufficiently stated to admit of its considering both grounds of defence. The England, 5 Notes of Cases, 174.

1443. A steamer came into collision with a sailing vessel. Defence, that the sailing vessel, just previous to the collision, "was seen to be suddenly, and in violation of the 296th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, approaching the steamer on her port bow." Held, that in pleading it is necessary to state, as accurately as the circumstances of the case will admit, in what respect it is intended to allege that the Merchant Shipping Act has been violated, but that in the instance before the court it was sufficient to plead that the helm of the sailing vessel had not been ported in accordance with the terms of the statute. The Ironmaster, 6 Jur. N.S. 782.

1444. Averments in the defendant's pleadings of unnecessary delay in bringing the suit directed to be struck out. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 10.

1445. Those on board the vessel proceeded against were found to have been guilty of negligence, and therefore to blame for the collision. Objection then taken that such negligence was not the negligence of the defendants, the owners, or their servants, but of certain independent contractors to whom the vessel had been entrusted; held, to have been urged too late, the pleadings not raising this objection. The Ruby Queen, 1 Lushington, 266.

not liable, overruled because not pleaded. The Seine, Swabey, 413.

1447. Where the evidence is taken before an examiner, the defence of inevitable accident must, if it is to be relied upon, be pleaded. The E. Z., 10 L. T. N.S. 790; 33 L. J. Adm. 200.

1448. Objections to defendant's pleading, 1st, the history of the ship proceeded against for some days prior to the collision; 2nd, statements made by the mate and seamen of the ship proceeding with respect to the state of their vessel, &c.; 3rd, the age of the ship; 4th, variations between the accounts given in the protest and plaintiff's pleading; and 5th, delay in instituting proceedings. Held, 1st, that the previous history of the ship was admissible, as being usual and convenient; 2nd, that such only of the statements as formed part of the res gesta were admissible; 3rd, that the age of the ship might be pleaded to account for the loss; 4th, that inasmuch as the protest itself was to be brought in the statements contained in it need not be pleaded; and 5th, that the delay appearing on the face of the proceedings, and not being accounted for, it was not necessary to allege it in the responsive pleading. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 10; 10 Jur. 993.

1449. Averment, that the A. ran into the vessel B. at sea, and caused her to founder, whereby some of the crew of the B. and a passenger on board her were drowned, and that the collision was caused by the improper navigation of the A. The legal representatives of the deceased persons were the plaintiffs. Defence, that the collision took place on the high seas, that the deceased persons were aliens, and the B. a French vessel, ordered to be struck out as irrelevant. The Explorer, L. R. 3 A. & E. 289.

1450. Defence of compulsory pilotage, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, should be stated in the pleadings, but the omission to do so will not deprive the defendant of the exemption from responsibility conferred by the statute; the act being a public act the court is bound to take notice of it without its being specially pleaded. The Canadian, 1 W. Rob. 343.

1451. A defence that the ship proceeded against was in charge of a duly-licensed pilot, taken by compulsion of law, must be pleaded specifically. The Northampton, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 155, n.

1452. It was pleaded by the defendant that there was a duly-licensed pilot on board his vessel, but it was not pleaded under what act of parliament he was taken, nor whether compulsorily, nor whether he was to blame for the collision, nor that all his orders were obeyed. The court therefore refused to take cognizance of such claim of exemption. The Philomele, cited in 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 155, n.

1452a. In a cause of damage by collision plaintiff pleaded that both vessels were riding at anchor, and that defendant's vessel drove from her anchor foul of plaintiff's vessel. Defendant pleaded that it was not his, but plaintiff's, vessel that drove. Defendant applied to be and was allowed to prove his case by affidavits. Plaintiff examined his witnesses vid voce, and after he had done so defendant applied for leave to amend his pleadings by alleging that there was a duly-licensed pilot on board his vessel, who, if any, was to blame for the collision. The court refused the application. The Akhera, 15th June, 1864.

24. In Damage to Cargo Actions.

(a) Generally.*

1453. In an action of damage to cargo, the petition ought generally to state, as far as practicable, the cause to which the plaintiff attributes the loss or damage. The Helene, B. & L. 415.

(b) Before the Judicature Acts and Rules.

1454. Indorsees of a bill of lading, signed by the captain, raised an action against the shipowners for short delivery of the goods mentioned in the bill of lading. Held, that the action was irrelevant, as the pursuers did not allege that there was short delivery of the quantity actually shipped. M'Lean and Hope v. Munck, 3rd Series, vol. 5, p. 893. [SCOTCH.]

1455. In an action for damage to cargo, the defendants pleaded that the damage was occasioned by accidents and perils by the bill of lading excepted, and by causes for which the defendants by the terms thereof were not responsible. Held, that the defendants must give particulars of the accidents, perils, and causes which occasioned the damage. The Hakon Adelstein, 43 L. J. Adm. 9.

1456. The Court of Admiralty, prior to the Judicature Acts, although influenced by equitable considerations, was not a court of equity, so as to allow matters foreign to the issue to be introduced in order that complete justice might be done between the parties; it followed rather in its pleadings and practice the courts of common law. The Don Francisco, 1 Lushington, 468; 31 L. J. Adm. 14; 5 L. T. N.S. 460.

1457. A plaintiff having sued in the Admiralty Court, in respect of damage done to cargo, through the default of the crew of the vessel on board of which it was conveyed, held, prior to the Judicature Acts, that the defendant was not entitled to plead by way of set-off that the plaintiff had illegally deducted from the freight and primage a sum greater than the amount of the damage. Ibid.

* (432) For form of statement of claim and statement of defence in an action of damage to cargo, see Roscoe's Adm. Practice, 2nd ed. App. pp. 489—494.

(433) The plaintiff declaring in trover for goods sold for less than their value at an intermediate port must allege special damage to recover the difference of value at the place of delivery. Atkinson v. Stephens, 7 Exch. 567, per Parke, B.

(434) The rules of pleading in Admiralty must be strictly complied with, and the evidence confined to the points put in issue by the pleadings. McKinlay v. Morrish, 21 How. U. S. 343. [AMERICAN.]

(435) Thus, where the libellants put their case upon bad and careless stowage of the cargo and upon leaks in the deck of the ship, through which water passed and damaged it, and the respondents specifically deny both allegations, these two points are the only ones in issue, and testimony in regard to the effect of a gale upon the general seaworthiness of the ship and the like is irrelevant. Ibid.

(436) Where, in a libel for damage to a cargo, the allegations are—1. That the master falsely represented the ship to be tight, &c.; and 2. That the damage resulted from the negligence of the master and mariners, the libellant cannot at the trial set up a third ground of complaint, namely, that the master failed in his duty in not putting into port after a storm to refit and dry the cargo. Saule v. Rodocanachi, The Oregon, 1 Newb. Adm. 504. [AMERICAN.]

† (437) For form of statement of claim and statement of defence in an action for leaving it doubtful whether the person in possession of the vessel at the time of the supply was the original mortgagee or the defendant, the transferee of the mortgage, is bad. A mortgagee in possession would not be liable for necessaries supplied, unless the master in ordering them acted as the agent of the mortgagee. An allegation that a defendant was in possession of the vessel at the date of the supplies, and personally liable for them, would not, therefore, be a good reply to an answer of a defendant claiming to be a mortgagee prior to the date of the supply. The Troubadour, L. R. 1 A. & E. 802; 2 Asp. 475.

1459. The petition claimed in respect of cordage and similar articles supplied to the A., which plaintiff contended was a French vessel. Defendants, by petition on protest, pleaded the vessel was British, and her owners domiciled in this country. The plaintiffs by their answer denied this, and averred she was the property of certain American citizens. Held, that this averment was too vague, and must be amended by stating who the citizens were. The Beatrice, 22 December, 1866.

1460. In an action for necessaries it is not sufficient to allege, in general terms, that money was advanced for necessary expenses, but it must be stated what those expenses were. The Riga, L. R. 3 A. & E. 523.

necessaries, see Roscoe's Adm. Prac., 2nd ed. App. p. 496.

(438) For form of statement of claim and statement of defence in an action for repairs and supplies, Ibid. p. 498; and R. S. C. of 1883, App. C. s. 3, No. 4, and App. D. s. 3, No. 4.

* (439) The statement of claim in an action of limitation of liability is entitled with the names of all the owners of the ship A. (whose liability is sought to be limited) as plaintiffs, and the other ship B. and her owners made defendants.

(440) It sets forth that the plaintiffs are the owners of the ship A.; that she is (if British) a duly-registered British ship (if a foreign ship state so); that she came in collision on such a day with ship B., which with her cargo was damaged or lost (as the case may be); and — persons were drowned or injured (as the case may be).

(441) The actions instituted and the judgments thereon, and that the plaintiffs admit they were wholly or partially to blame (as the case may be), and that further actions are expected to be commenced.

(442) That the collision occurred without the actual fault or privity of the plaintiffs or any of them, and that the damages will exceed the amount of their statutory liability.

(443) That there is no claim for loss of life or personal injury, or setting forth the claims or actions instituted in respect thereof.

(444) The gross tonnage of ship A., and the crew space to be deducted, according to the M. S. Act, 1867 (c. 124), s. 9, showing the precise balance on which the plaintiff's liability is to be estimated.

(445) The amount of such liability at £8 or £15 per ton, as the case may be, on such balance of tonnage.

(446) That the plaintiffs are willing to pay this sum into court with such further sum to cover interest as the court may direct.

(447) That the plaintiffs claim a declaration that they are not liable beyond that amount, and that on payment into court of that amount, with interest, all further proceedings in the recited actions may be stayed, and that directions may be given for ascertaining the persons having claims on the fund, and the exclusion of those not claiming within a time to be limited for the purpose.

(448) The statement of defence usually traverses the averments as to the collision having occurred without the fault or privity of the plaintiffs, as to the gross tonnage, and as to the amount for which the plaintiffs are liable, so as to put them on proof of those averments.

(449) See also for form of statement of claim and statement of defence in an action for limitation of liability, Roscoe's Adm. Practice, 2nd ed., App. pp. 505—508.

(450) The judgment usually sets forth that on payment by the plaintiffs into court of the amount of their statutory liability (setting forth the same which is usually that mentioned in the statement of claim), with interest at four per cent. to the date of the judgment, or if paid in afterwards to the date of payment and of costs in the several recited actions, such actions are directed to be stayed.

(451) A time is limited in the judgment within which all claims are to be made.

(452) All claims and accounts are referred to the registrar and merchants to examine and report upon, and plaintiffs are by the judgment condemned in the costs of all parties in the limitation action.

(453) If there is unusual and unnecessary litigation between claimants in the limitation suit, the registrar will, on taxation, disallow these costs as against the plaintiffs.

(454) Limitation of liability may be claimed by the defendant's pleadings in a collision action. Wahlberg v. Young, 45 L. J. C. L. 783; 4 Asp. 27; 24 W. R. 847.

28. In Possession Actions.(a) *Prior to the Judicature Acts and Rules.

1461. In a cause of possession the allegation of the party proceeding stated the instrument of purchase, and that he had never sold or transferred the possession. Objection that the manner in which the title was avowed was not sufficiently expressed, overruled. The Sisters, 3 C. Rob. 213.

1462. If a party intends to contend that a sale, in itself null and void, was subsequently ratified by the owner of the vessel, the fact of such ratification should be pleaded. The Empress, Swabey, 163; 3 Jur. N.S. 119.

29. In Salvage Actions.(a) Generally.†

1463. In salvage actions a fuller form of statement of claim than that given in R. S. C. of 1883, App. C. s. 3, No. 6, must generally be adopted. Order in this case made accordingly. The Isis, 8 P. D. 227; 53 L. J. P. D. 14; 5 Asp. 155; 49 L. T. N.S. 444; 32 W. R. 171.†

1464. Because, where the defendants admit the facts alleged in the statement of claim, the plaintiffs are not allowed to give any evidence at the hearing. Ibid.

1465. In salvage actions, the plaintiffs in their statement of claim should state fully the material facts of the service. The Hardwick, 5 Asp. 199.

1466. The court, on the motion of the defendants, struck out paragraphs in the statement of claim which alleged that in rendering the salvage services the plaintiffs' vessel had lost the benefit of an engagement, orders to fulfil which were not received in due time by reason of the rendering of the services. The Cybele, 3 Asp. N.S. 478; 37 L. T. N.S. 165.

(b) Before the Judicature Acts and Rules.

1467. In a claim for salvage arising out of unexpected dangers in the performance of a towage contract the plaintiffs must prove that the ship having got into danger from no fault of theirs, they did all they could to prevent it, and performed services not covered by their towage contract. The defendants by denying the performance of salvage services will put all these matters in issue, and need not, if they contend their ship was placed in danger by negligence or error in judgment of the claimants, allege these matters. The Minnehaha, 1 Lushington, 335, 350; 15 Moore, P. C. C. 133.

1468. But under such a traverse wilful misconduct cannot be put in issue. Ibid.

1469. In every case the court will have regard to the degree of notice given by the defendants to the claimants of the objections on which they intended to rely. Ibid. 9 W. R. 925.

1470. The court refused to allow the defendants to add to their pleas an allegation that the salvors since the commencement of the suit had assaulted some of the witnesses who were going to give evidence on behalf of the owners. The Thomas Fielden, 11 W. R. 156.

1471. Defendants, in pleading an agreement for salvage, must allege it was entered into by the master on behalf of himself and the other plaintiffs, the owners and crew. Buchanan v. Barr, 3rd Series, vol. 5, p. 973. [SCOTCH.]

1472. The defendants alleged that they had been decreed by the judge of the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports to pay £240 to parties other than the plaintiffs, who had assisted in the salvage service. Objections by plaintiffs to this averment overruled. The Antelope, L. R. 4 A. & E. 33; 42 L. J. Adm. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 513; The Duc Chechti, L. R. 4 A. & E. 35, n.; 1 Asp. N.S. 513.

1473. Whenever the defendants intend to rely upon sect. 460 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), as governing the question of costs, the facts material for that purpose should be distinctly pleaded and proved. The Favourite, 5 L. T. N.S. 773.

of set-off and counter-claim, claimed damages for the loss of the ship by the negligence of the plaintiff. Reply, that the ship was insured against a total loss, and that the underwriters had paid or agreed to pay to the owners the whole amount payable by them on a total loss. Held, on demurrer, that the reply was bad, because the plaintiff had not pleaded that the money had been actually paid to the defendant, or that the counter-claim had been brought without the authority of the underwriters. The Sir Charles Napier, 5 P. D. 73. C. A.

1480. The defendant having rested his defence formaliter on the ground of an asserted consent of the mariner, which was held not to bar him, the court will, nevertheless, take into consideration matters forming a just ground of defence, but which the defendant may have improperly overlooked. The Elizabeth, 2 Dodson, 406.

1481. The court refused to regard proofs of the plaintiff's general incapacity, as that charge had not been pleaded. The Exeter, 2 C. Rob. 261.

1482. The owners pleaded a forfeiture, under the statute, of the wages, on the ground of desertion, but did not plead a charge of temporary desertion. The evidence established the latter, but not the former charge. The court pronounced for the full wages. The Two Sisters, 2 W. Rob. 125, 146.

1483. The shipping agreement having been brought in and not contradicted, it is unnecessary for the defendants to plead the execution of it. The Test, 3 Hagg. 312.

(461) If misconduct (e.g. desertion) on the part of a mariner be set up as a defence to a claim of wages, not only must the misconduct be pleaded, but the pleading containing such defence must furnish a specification of the acts of misconduct with a proper degree of certainty. The Agnes, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. 57. [LOWER CANADA.] See also Macomber v. Thompson, 1 Sumner's Rep. C. C. U. S. for the First Circuit, p. 384. [AMERICAN.]

(461a) No facts of misbehaviour, or other cause of forfeiture of wages, are admissible, unless the answer distinctly propounds them and puts them in issue. Orne v. Townsend, 4 Mason, 541. [AMERICAN.]

(462) A defence that the 189th section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), prohibits any suit in a superior court for the recovery of wages under £50, is not good upon the plea of never indebted, but must be pleaded specially. Johnston v. Hilberry, 3 H. & C. 328.

1568. If in any case the court or a judge shall so order, there shall be issued a request to examine witnesses in lieu of a commission. The Forms 1 and 2 in the Appendix hereto shall be used for such order and request respectively, with such variation as circumstances may require, and may be cited as Forms 37A and 37B in Appendix K. Ord. XXXVII. r. 6, of Oct. 1884.

1568a. The defendants in a cause of damage moved the court for a commission to be issued to Spain to examine witnesses there as to the law of Spain. The Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of the Court of Admiralty) considered that it would be more satisfactory to have the witnesses in court, and refused to direct the issue of a commission. The Moxham, 1 P. D. 43, 107; 46 L. J. P. D. (C. A.) 17; 3 Asp. N.S. 191.

1569. For provisions enabling the Court of Admiralty in any action to issue special commissions to take evidence upon oath, and for the commissioner, if need be, to make a special report to the court

* (470) When it is desired to obtain a commission, an order of court for that purpose must be obtained. A præcipe for commission must then be filed, with an adhesive stamp of fifteen shillings thereon; one pound placed on the præcipe for sealing the commission. The commission is prepared in the registry, and bears a £1 impressed stamp thereon. It may be obtained after a day's notice.

† (471) This might be advantageously used in the Admiralty Division for the examination of witnesses out of the United Kingdom.

(472) Commissions for taking evidence out of the United Kingdom are in the Admiralty Division generally directed to the British consul or vice-consul of the place where the commission is to be executed, or to both, so that one may act in the place of the other, but commissioners are not selected one by each side according to the practice in the Queen's Bench Division. The appointment of the consul, and the holding of the commission in his office, are less likely to be considered as an infringement of the law of the foreign state forbidding the exercise of judicial powers by other than the judicial officers of the country.

(473) In Germany recently the examiner of witnesses, under an order from the English Divorce Court, was arrested and put upon his trial for infringement of the German law in that respect. The rule mentioned in No. 1568, supra, has probably been framed to meet this difficulty.

(474) Prior to the R. S. C. 1883, however, evidence has been taken abroad under the authority of commissions, in which examiners of the court and other persons have been appointed commissioners, and by examiners under orders of court, as in cases of examination of witnesses in this country, and the practice in both respects has received the judge's sanction.

(475) It is always advisable, however, to obtain a commission, even though an examiner be the commissioner, as such a document is useful for the satisfaction of foreign functionaries to whom it may be necessary to apply for assistance indirectly in executing the commission.

(476) When an examiner is not appointed commissioner, it is usual to appoint an English solicitor or notary public, or an analogous foreign functionary well acquainted with the English language, to act as registrar, actuary or scribe to the commissioner or commissioners, and to take down the evidence in writing under his or their direction, and prepare the proper return to the commission.

(478) When, however, evidence is taken in the United Kingdom by an examiner, it is unnecessary to take out a commission for the purpose, the usual order for taking evidence out of court before trial sufficing for the purpose.

touching such examination, and the conduct or absence of any witness or other person relating thereto, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 8.

1570. 1571. By the practice in the Court of Admiralty the commission to examine witnesses runs jointly and severally, and if one commissioner absented himself, the other proceeded alone. The Ceres, 3 C. Rob. 128.

(aa) *Generally.

1572. For form of order for commission to examine witnesses before an examiner before trial, see R. S. C. 1883, App. K. No. 35.†

1572a. The examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination. Ord. XXXVII. r. 11, No. 493.

1574. Any officer of the court, or other person directed to take the examination of any witness or person, may administer oaths. Ord. XXXVII. r. 19, No. 501.

* (479) As to the examiners in the Admiralty Division, see Pt. I., note 27, p. 1471.

(480) The solicitor whose witnesses are to be examined selects the examiner.

(481) The understanding in the profession used to be that the adverse solicitor is entitled to object to a witness being examined in London out of office hours, i. e., before 10 a.m. or after 4 (now 6) p.m.; but the practice is frequent to examine witnesses after those hours, and at any time convenient to all parties. Concession on the part of solicitors is in such matters desirable, as, to nautical witnesses, delay is often productive of the greatest inconvenience, and the adverse solicitor may, when he has witnesses to examine, be in need of similar indulgence from his opponent.

(482) The examiner, before commencing the examination of a witness, administers to him the usual oath of a witness.

(483) The statutory declaration may be substituted for this oath in the cases allowed by act of parliament, as to which see s. 33, p. 1631.

(484) In the event of the examiner being impeded or interfered with in the examination of a witness, he should make complaint thereon to the registrar in the first instance, and through him to the judge.

(485) The counsel, solicitors, and substitutes on both sides may make notes of the evidence as the examination proceeds.

(486) In London the solicitor producing the witness is entitled, at the completion of his deposition in chief, to require that the witness be dismissed if the adverse solicitor or his counsel is not then prepared to cross-examine him.

(487) It was not necessary in the Court of Admiralty to sue out any commission for examination of witnesses; but any examiner of the court had the same power as commissioners under commissions to take evidence.

See the Admiralty Court Act, 1854 (c. 73), s. 6.

(488) If the solicitor on either side has witnesses to be examined who cannot from illness or age attend in London for the purpose, and whom he therefore desires should be examined where they are residing or staying, he should apply for an order of court for that purpose.

(489) If the evidence is to be taken by an examiner, an office copy of the order of court is obtained from the registry, and an appointment made with the examiner and adverse solicitor as to the time and place at which the examination of witnesses is to be commenced.

(490) The evidence of the witnesses is taken at an hotel or in any private room accessible to all parties interested, and selected by the solicitor producing the witnesses.

(490a) The examination should be commenced on the day named in the commission, and the execution of the commission may be proceeded with whether the adverse solicitor is present or not.

(491) In cases of examination of witnesses in the country, the adverse solicitor, should he require time to collect materials for cross-examination, is entitled to object to a witness being dismissed until after the expiration of forty-eight hours from the time of his being sworn.

(492) Either solicitor may object to the examination of another witness being commenced until the examination of the previous witness has been concluded, the objecting solicitor not being the cause of the delay.

† (493) In the Admiralty Division, however, the depositions so taken are not filed in the Central Office but in the Admiralty Registry, and the office copy of them is obtained from that registry.

(493a) The depositions so taken may be read at the trial without proof of the absence of the witness.

1574a. As to the oaths or affirmations to be administered by him, see sect. 33, p. 1631.

S. C. of February 4, 1884, as altered by R. S. C. of Oct. 1884.

(bb) Supply of Writ and Pleadings to Examiner.

1576. Where any witness or person is ordered to be examined before any officer of the court, or before any person appointed for the purpose, the person taking the examination shall be furnished by the party on whose application the order

(cc) In Shorthand.†

(dd) By Narration in the First Person.‡

1577. The depositions taken before an officer of the court, or before any other person appointed to take the examination, shall be taken down in writing by or in the presence of the examiner, not ordinarily by question and answer, but so as to represent as nearly as may be the statement of the witness, and when completed shall be read over to the witness and signed by him in the presence of the parties, or of such of them as may think fit to attend. If the witness shall refuse to sign the depositions, the examiner shall

* (494) This is usually a print of the pleading for the party on whose behalf the witness is examined. If the pleading has not been printed, a MS. copy will suffice.

† (495) The practice of taking down in shorthand evidence given before an examiner has been found so much more expeditious than when the evidence is transcribed by the examiner himself, that it has become the general mode adopted in the Admiralty Division in examining witnesses before trial in London and the neighbourhood.

(495a) The court shorthand writers are employed in taking the evidence. See The Marbella, 25 April, 1883.

(496) They are Messrs. Carruthers and Barnet, of No. 203, Strand.

(496a) If, however, the examiner has a private shorthand clerk, he is at liberty to employ him.

(497) The shorthand writer must, before commencing his duties in each cause, be sworn by the examiner faithfully to take down the evidence in shorthand.

(497a) The shorthand writer takes down and transcribes both question and answer exactly as expressed by counsel and the witness.

(498) When an interpreter is employed, the shorthand writer takes down the answer of the interpreter in lieu of that of the witness.

(498a) When the evidence is taken in shorthand, it is not read over to nor signed by the witness, nor by the interpreter, if any.

(499) The shorthand writer afterwards transcribes the evidence so taken, and certifies at the foot that it is a faithful transcript of the evidence.

(499a) He transmits the transcript to the examiner, who files it with his report or return.

‡ (500) Whether the examiner or counsel conducts the examination-in-chief, the examiner takes down the witness's answer to each question put to him, and does so as nearly as possible in the witness's own words, but in a narrative form, embodying the question in the answer.

(500a) The evidence-in-chief of each witness, as it is taken down by the examiner, was, according to the old practice, divided and numbered similarly to the articles of the pleading on which he was examined.

(501) When the examination-in-chief has been completed, the examiner reads over to the witness the answers he has taken down, and procures his signature at the end of that part of the deposition, and, according to the old practice, also at the end of each preceding sheet thereof.

(501a) The same course is pursued on the cross-examination and re-examination.

(502) In the cross-examination the examiner, in taking down the evidence, embodies the question in the answer.

(502a) On reading over to the witness his deposition, the examiner makes such slight alterations therein as the witness may desire. If, however, the witness desires to make material alterations in his evidence, and the examiner is satisfied that he did not misapprehend the witness's meaning in the first instance, it is the examiner's duty to decline to permit such alterations to be made in the body of the evidence, but to put in writing at the end of the deposition-in-chief, or on cross-examination or re-examination, as the case may be, the alteration the witness desires to make therein. The witness then signs his name at the end of his deposition, and, according to the old practice, also at the end of each of the preceding sheets thereof.

sign the same. The examiner may put down any particular question or answer if there should appear any special reason for doing so, and may put any question to the witness as to the meaning of any answer, or as to any matter arising in the course of the examination. Ord. XXXVII. r. 12, No. 494.

(ee) *By Interpretation.

(ff) Objections to Questions.

1578. Any questions which may be objected to shall be taken down by the examiner in the depositions, and he shall state his opinion thereon to the counsel, solicitors, or parties, and shall refer to such statement in the depositions, but he shall not have power to decide upon the materiality or relevancy of any question. Ibid.

(gg) Objections by Witness.

1579. If any person duly summoned by subpoena to attend for examination shall refuse to attend, or if, having attended, he shall refuse to be sworn or to answer any lawful question, a certificate of such refusal, signed by the examiner, shall be filed at the Central Office, and thereupon the party requiring the attendance of the witness may apply to the court or a judge ex parte or on notice for an order directing the witness to attend, or to be sworn, or to answer any question, as the case may be. Ibid. r. 13, No. 495.

* (503) If any or all of the witnesses are unacquainted with the English language, and speak a foreign language, the solicitor whose witnesses are to be examined selects some gentleman conversant with that language to act as interpreter between the witness and the examiner.

(503a) The interpreter must of course be a person wholly uninterested in the cause. If otherwise, the adverse solicitor may object to his acting as interpreter.

(504) The interpreter must, before commencing his duties, be duly sworn by the examiner as to his being well acquainted with the language he is to interpret, and faithfully to interpret the same.

(504a) The adverse solicitor may, if dissatisfied with the interpreter, require the witness to be cross-examined through the medium of an interpreter nominated by him, the adverse solicitor.

(505) That interpreter must of course also be wholly disinterested in the result of the suit, or he may be objected to by the solicitor producing the witness, and he must be duly sworn.

(506) The cross-examination of a witness

1580. If any witness shall object to any question which may be put to him before an examiner, the question so put, and the objection of the witness thereto, shall be taken down by the examiner, and transmitted by him to the Central Office to be there filed, and the validity of the objection shall be decided by the court or a judge. Ibid. r. 14, No. 496.

1581. In any case under the two last preceding rules, the court or a judge shall have power to order the witness to pay any costs occasioned by his refusal or objection. Ibid. r. 15, No. 497.

(hh) Orders enforcing Obedience of Witness.†

1582. The court or a judge may, in any case or matter at any stage of the proceedings, order the attendance of any person for the purpose of producing any writings or other documents named in the order which the court or judge may think fit to be produced, provided that no person shall be compelled to produce under any such order any writing or other document which he could not be compelled to produce at the hearing or trial. Ibid. r. 7, No. 489.

1583. Any person wilfully disobeying any order requiring his attendance for the purpose of being examined or producing any document shall be deemed guilty of contempt of court, and may be by a different interpreter is, however, an unusual and invidious course of proceeding, rarely acted on, except under special circumstances.

(507) When the evidence is taken by interpretation the interpreter should, as well as the witness, sign the deposition, describing himself as "sworn interpreter."

(508) Such of the evidence as is taken by interpretation should be specified accordingly in the examiner's return, which should state who was the interpreter, and that he was first duly sworn.

† (509) Subpoenas may, when required, be obtained in the registry, to compel the attendance of witnesses before an examiner or commissioner, and the costs of such subpoenas, when necessary, are generally allowed as of course.

(509a) For cases under the old practice of compelling the attendance of persons who had refused to make affidavits, see The Glory, 7 Notes of Cases, 262; and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses for cross-examination on their affidavits, see The Resultatet, 17 Jur. 353.

dealt with accordingly. Ibid. r. 8, No. 490.

1584. Any person required to attend for the purpose of being examined or of producing any document, shall be entitled to the like conduct money and payment for expenses and loss of time as upon attendance at a trial in court. Ibid. r. 9, No. 491.

1585. A witness subpoenaed to attend and be examined in open court did not attend on the day appointed. On the same day, on the motion of the party subpoenaing him, founded on an affidavit that the witness was wilfully absenting himself, and that the vessel on board which he was serving was about to sail, the court granted an attachment against him. The Victor, No. 1194, 1st March, 1864.

(ii) *Transmission of Depositions.

1586. When the examination of any witness before any examiner shall have been concluded, the original depositions, authenticated by the signature of the examiner, shall be transmitted by him to the central office, and there filed. Ord. XXXVII. r. 16, No. 498.

(kk) Examiner's Report.†

1587. The person taking the examination of a witness under these rules may, and if need be shall, make a special report to the court touching such examination and the conduct or absence of any witness or other person thereon, and the court or a judge may direct such proceedings and make such order as upon the report they or he may think just. Ibid. r. 17, No. 499.

(ll) Examiner's Fees.‡

1588. For the examiner's fees (semble)

* (510) The examiner files the transcript or depositions in the Admiralty Registry, and pays the necessary stamps on filing the transcript or depositions, as the case may be, and his report, and charges them in his account against the solicitor who employed him. For the stamps upon the transcript, or depositions when not taken in shorthand, and on the examiner's report, see note 519, infra.

(511) The examiner retains the custody of the original depositions until filed in the registry.

† (512) The examiner's report is headed with the title of the cause, and states that on such a day and, if out of London, at such a place, in the presence of the counsel and solicitors of the parties, he administered the usual oath of a witness to the several witnesses examined before him, stating their names, and caused them to be duly examined and cross-examined on behalf of the respective parties, and that the document marked A is the transcript of such evidence taken down in shorthand by the shorthand writer, to whom he states he had previously administered an oath, faithfully to take down the evidence in shorthand, and faithfully to transcribe the same.

(513) If any witnesses are examined by interpretation, the examiner mentions their names and that they were examined by interpretation through the assistance of the interpreter, to whom, as he therein states, he had first administered an oath that he was well acquainted with the English and (the language of the witness) languages, and faithfully to interpret.

(514) Where the examiner takes down the evidence, he states that he transmits with his report the depositions of the several witnesses he has examined and cross-examined.

(515) He may add any special matter occurring in the course of the proceedings.

(516) Any objections taken to the proceedings, or any part thereof, may, on the application of either solicitor, be also recorded there.

(517) The report is dated and signed by the examiner.

(518) The examiner's report is much the same on executing a commission for the examination of witnesses, except that he there mentions place as well as time, and transmits the commission with the other papers.

‡ (518a) The examiner's and commissioner's fees are:—

For examining witnesses vivâ voce	From	2	2	0
on a pleading, according to the length of time occupied per day		4	4	0

If the examination takes place at a greater distance than three miles from the General Post Office, London, the examiner or commissioner will be entitled in addition to his proper and reasonable expenses for travelling, board, and maintenance.

For drawing and engrossing a return of the witnesses examined in London	-	-	-	-	1	1	0

The above are the fees allowed by the Rules and Orders of November, 1859, now annulled, but they continue to be taken and allowed.

in the Chancery Division, see Appendix to R. S. C. of 18 Dec. 1885.

1589. In a cause of damage by collision, before appearance of defendant witnesses were allowed to be examined on proof that the ship was about to sail for Syria. She sailed in fact, and no opportunity was given to cross-examine. The court allowed the defendant to examine his witnesses, but ordered that the cause should not be heard till the plaintiff should have submitted his witnesses for cross-examination. The Chance, Swabey, 294; 30 L. T. 219; 6 W. R. 221.

1590. Where there is reason to expect that the plaintiff's witnesses, whose evidence may be desirable, will not be accessible at a future period, their evidence may be taken, and the costs of taking them will be allowed, though the defendants afterwards admit the plaintiff's pleadings. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 209.

29. Examination of Witnesses at Trial.

1591. See c. 38, p. 1637.

30. Examination of Witnesses after Trial.

1592. Evidence taken subsequently to the hearing or trial of any cause or matter shall be taken as nearly as may be in the same manner as evidence taken at or with a view to a trial. Ord. XXXVII. r. 21, No. 503.

1593. The practice as to evidence at a trial, when applied to evidence to be taken before an officer of the court or other person in any cause or matter after the hearing or trial, shall be subject to any special directions which may be given. Ibid. r. 23, No. 505.

1594. All evidence taken at the trial may be used in any subsequent proceedings in the same matter. Ibid. r. 25, No. 507.

31. Affidavits.

1595. The court or a judge may receive any affidavit sworn for the purpose of being used in any cause or matter, notwithstanding any defect by misdescription of parties or otherwise in the title or jurat, or any other irregularity in the form thereof, and may direct a memorandum to be made on the document that it has been so received. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 14, No. 534.

1596. An ignorant seaman made an affidavit in a cause, and afterwards was prevailed upon by the opposite party to make another affidavit denying his former testimony. The court attached no credit whatever to his second statement. It is well known how men of this class may be practised upon. The Commerce, 3 W. Rob. 295.

1597. Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the witness is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory motions, on which statements as to his belief, with the grounds thereof, may be admitted. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 3, No. 523.

1598. Every affidavit shall be intitled in the cause or matter in which it is sworn; but in every case in which there are more than one plaintiff or defendant,

The registrar also allows a fee of six shillings and eightpence to the examiner when a witness does not attend pursuant to an appointment with the examiner for his examination. Mem. of 14 February, 1870.

The examiner is also allowed a fee of one shilling and sixpence for the oath to each witness, ibid.; and a fee of two shillings and sixpence for a certificate on each exhibit.

(519) The examiner places an adhesive stamp of five shillings on the deposition of each witness or on the transcript thereof from shorthand. The stamp is placed in the margin against the name of the witness at the commencement of the depositions.

The examiner also places an adhesive stamp of five shillings on the return.

The examiner charges for and is allowed these stamps.

The examiner makes no charge for filing the depositions.

No stamp is required on the minute on filing them.

As to deposit of stamps for fees and money for expenses and undertaking for fees when required, see R. S. C. Fees, 1884; Sched. No. 51.

it shall be sufficient to state the full name of the first plaintiff or defendant respectively, and that there are other plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be; and the costs occasioned by any unnecessary prolixity in any such title shall be disallowed by the taxing officer. Ibid. r. 2, No. 522.

1599. Every affidavit shall state the description and true place of abode of the deponent. Ibid. r. 8, No. 528.

1600. Every affidavit shall be drawn up in the first person, and shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and as nearly as may be shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject. Every affidavit shall be written or printed book-wise. No costs shall be allowed for any affidavit or part of an affidavit substantially departing from this rule. Ibid. r. 7, No. 527.

1601. Any affidavit may be sworn to either in print or in manuscript, or partly in print and partly in manuscript. Ord. LXVI. r. 4, No. 1006.

(c) Scandalous or Irrelevant Matter.

1602. The costs of every affidavit which shall unnecessarily set forth matters of hearsay, or argumentative matter, or copies of or extracts from documents, shall be paid by the party filing the same. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 3, No. 523.

1603. The court or a judge may order to be struck out from any affidavit any matter which is scandalous, and may order the costs of any application to strike out such matter to be paid as between solicitor and client. Ibid. r. 11, No. 531.

(d) Interlineations and Alterations.

1604. No affidavit having in the jurat or body thereof any interlineation, alteration, or erasure, shall without leave of the court or a judge be read or made use of in any matter depending in court unless the interlineation or alteration (other than by erasure) is authenticated by the initials of the officer taking the affidavit, or, if taken at the Central Office, either by his initials or by the stamp of that office, nor in the case of an erasure, unless the words or figures appearing at the time of taking the affidavit to be written on the erasure are rewritten and signed or initialled in the margin of the affidavit by the officer taking it. Ibid. r. 12, No. 532.

1605. The court or a judge may receive any affidavit sworn for the purpose of being used in any cause or matter, notwithstanding any defect by misdescription of parties or otherwise in the title or jurat, or any other irregularity in the form thereof, and may direct a memorandum to be made on the document that it has been so received. Ibid. r. 14, No. 534.

1606. Every alteration in an account verified by affidavit to be left at chambers shall be marked with the initials of the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn, and such alterations shall not be made by erasure. Ibid. r. 22, No. 542.

1607. No affidavit shall be sufficient if sworn before the solicitor acting for the party on whose behalf the affidavit is to be used, or before any agent or correspondent of such solicitor, or before the party himself. Ibid. r. 16, No. 536.

1608. Any affidavit which would be insufficient if sworn before the solicitor himself shall be insufficient if sworn before his clerk or partner. Ibid. r. 17, No. 537.

1609. Accounts, extracts from parish registers, particulars of creditors' debts, and other documents referred to by affidavit, shall not be annexed to the affidavit, or referred to in the affidavit as annexed, but shall be referred to as exhibits. Ibid. r. 23, No. 543.

1610. Every certificate on an exhibit referred to in an affidavit signed by the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn, shall be marked with the short title of the cause or matter. Ibid. r. 24, No. 544. See also No. 1606, supra.

1611. Every commissioner to administer oaths shall express the time when and place where he takes the affidavit, or it cannot be filed without leave. Ibid. r. 5, No. 525.

1612. Where made by two or more deponents, the names of each must be inserted in the jurat; but if the affidavit of all the deponents is taken at one time by the same officer it is sufficient to state that it was sworn by both (or all) of the "above-named" deponents. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 9, No. 529.

1613. See also No. 1604, supra.

(dd) Illiterate or Blind Persons.

1614. Where an affidavit is sworn by any person who appears to the officer taking the affidavit to be illiterate or blind, the officer shall certify in the jurat that the affidavit was read in his presence to the deponent, that the deponent seemed perfectly to understand it, and that the deponent made his signature in the presence of the officer. No such affidavit shall be used in evidence in the absence of this certificate, unless the court or a judge is otherwise satisfied that the affidavit was read over to and appeared to be perfectly understood by the deponent. Ibid. r. 13, No. 533.

See s. 33, p. 1631.

(f) *Cross-Examination.

1615. The court or a judge may, on the application of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the person making any affidavit upon any motion, petition, or summons. Ibid. r. 1, No. 521.

1616. When evidence is taken by affidavit, any party desiring to cross-examine a deponent who has made an affidavit for the opposite party may serve upon that party a notice in writing to produce the deponent for cross-examination at the trial, such notice to be served before the expiration of fourteen days from the time allowed for filing affidavits in reply, or within such time as the court or judge may appoint; and unless the deponent is produced accordingly, his affidavit shall not be used unless by special leave. Ibid. r. 28, No. 548.

1617. The party receiving the notice is entitled to compel the attendance of the deponent for cross-examination like an ordinary witness. Ibid. r. 29, No. 549.

1618. As to subpoena to compel the witness' attendance, see s. 32, p. 1630.

1619. Every affidavit or other proof used in Admiralty actions shall be filed in the Admiralty Registry. Ibid. r. 10, No. 530.

1620. Every affidavit used in a cause or matter proceeding in a district registry shall be filed there. Ibid.

1621. Where a special time is limited for filing affidavits, no affidavit filed after that time shall be used, unless by leave of the court or a judge. Ibid. r. 18, No. 538.

1622. Except by leave of the court or a judge, no order made ex parte in court founded on any affidavit shall be of any force unless the affidavit on which the application was made was actually made before the order was applied for, and produced or filed at the time of making the motion. Ibid. r. 19, No. 539.

1623. There shall be appended to every affidavit a note showing on whose behalf it is filed, and no affidavit shall be filed or used without such note, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise direct. Ibid. r. 10, No. 530; and Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009 (k).

(h) Stamps.

1624. Where an original affidavit is allowed to be used, it must first be stamped with a proper filing stamp. See Ord. XXXVIII. r. 15, No. 535.

1625. The stamp on filing each affidavit is five shillings. It is an adhesive stamp. See S. C. Fees, 1884, No. 35.

1626. The court or a judge may for sufficient reason order that any fact or facts may be proved by affidavit. Ord. XXXVII. r. 1, No. 483.

1627. Upon any motion, petition, or summons, evidence may be given by affidavit. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 1, No. 521.

1628. Where it appears that the other party bond fide desires the production for cross-examination of a witness who can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit. Ord. XXXVII. r. 1, No. 483.

1631. In default actions in rem, evidence may be given by affidavit. Ord. XXXVII. r. 2, No. 484.

1632. R. S. C. 1883, No. 550, that in cases of trial by affidavit the evidence shall be printed and notice of trial given, as therein mentioned, does not apply to default actions in rem. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 30, No. 550.

(j) Trial by—.

1633. Subject as therein mentioned, the court or a judge may in any cause or matter, and at any time, or from time to time, order that different questions of fact arising therein may be tried by different modes of trial. Ord. XXXVI. r. 8, No. 432.

1634. No affidavit filed or made before issue joined is, without special leave, to be received at the trial, unless, within one month after issue joined, or such longer time as may be allowed by special leave, notice in writing thereof has been given to the opposite party. Ord. XXXVII. r. 24, No. 506.

1635. Within fourteen days after a consent for taking evidence by affidavit as between the parties has been given, or within such time as the parties may agree upon, or the court or a judge may allow, the plaintiff shall file his affidavits and deliver to the defendant or his solicitor a list thereof. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 25, No. 545.

1636. The defendant, within fourteen days thereafter, or such other time as aforesaid, shall file his affidavits and deliver to the plaintiff or his solicitor a list thereof. Ibid. r. 26, No. 546.

1637. Within seven days thereafter, or such other time as aforesaid, the plaintiff shall file his affidavits in reply, which are to be strictly confined to matters in reply, and shall deliver to the defendant or his solicitor a list thereof. Ibid. r. 27, No. 547.

1638. When the evidence under this order is taken by affidavit, such evidence shall be printed, and the notice of trial shall be given at the same time after the close of the evidence as in other cases is by these rules provided after the close of the pleadings: provided that other affidavits may be printed if all the parties interested consent thereto, or the court or a judge so orders; provided also, that this rule shall not apply in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division to default actions in rem, or references in actions, or actions for limitation of liability, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order. Ibid. r. 30, No. 550.

See c. 38, p. 1641.

(k) Use of Original.

(aa) Generally.

1639. In cases in which by the present practice an original affidavit is allowed to be used, it shall before it is used be stamped with a proper filing stamp, and shall, at the time when it is used, be delivered to and left with the proper officer in court, or in chambers, who shall send it to be filed. Ibid. r. 15, No. 535.

1640. All affidavits previously read in court in any proceeding may be used before the judge in chambers. Ibid. r. 21, No. 541.

(cc) Use of Office Copies.

1641. An office copy of an affidavit may in all cases be used, the original affidavit having been previously filed, and the copy duly authenticated with the seal of the office. Ibid. r. 15, No. 535.

1642. In cases in which an original affidavit can be used, and to which Ord. XXXVIII. r. 15 applies, it is not necessary to take an office copy. Ord. LXV. r. 27, No. 1002, sub-r. 53.

32. Subpœnas.(a) *Generally.

1643. Every subpœna other than a subpœna duces tecum shall contain three names where necessary or required, but may contain any larger number of names. Ord. XXXVII. r. 29, No. 511.

1644. No more than three persons shall be included in one subpœna duces tecum, and the party suing out the same shall be at liberty to sue out a subpœna for each person if it shall be deemed necessary or desirable. Ibid. r. 30, No. 512.

1645. The party to whom such notice has been given to produce a deponent to an affidavit, in order to his being cross-examined, as mentioned in r. 28, No. 548, is entitled to compel the attendance of the deponent for cross-examination in the same way as he might compel the attendance of a witness to be examined. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 29, No. 549.

1646. No subpœna for the payment of costs shall be issued. Ord. XLIII. r. 7, No. 619.

1647. For form of præcipe for subpœna, see R. S. C. 1883, App. G., No. 21.

1648. Where it is intended to sue out a subpœna, a præcipe for that purpose, in the Form No. 21, in Appendix G., and containing the name or firm and the place of business or residence of the solicitor intending to sue out the same, and, where such solicitor is agent only, then also the name or firm and place of business or residence of the principal solicitor, shall in all cases be delivered and filed at the Central Office. Ord. XXXVII. r. 26, No. 508.

(c) Forms.

1649. A writ of subpœna shall be in one of the Forms 1 to 7 in Appendix J., with such variations as circumstances may require. Ibid. r. 27, No. 509.

(d) Period in force.

1650. Subpœnas remain in force only till the end of the sitting or assize for which they were issued. A new writ must afterwards be issued or the former writ may be (at the option of the parties) altered as to date and sitting, or assize, and re-issued as a new writ. See C. O. Prac. Rules, 1880—82, in Wilson's Jud. Acts and Rules, 4th ed. p. 848.

* (523) All subpœnas in Admiralty actions are issued from the Admiralty Registry, and not from the Central Office.

1651. In the interval between the suing out and service of any subpœna the party suing out the same may correct any error in the names of parties or witnesses, and may have the writ re-sealed upon leaving a corrected præcipe of such subpœna marked with the words "altered and re-sealed," and signed with the name and address of the solicitor suing out the same. Ord. XXXVII. r. 31, No. 513; and see C. O. Prac. Rules, 1880—82, in Wilson's Jud. Acts and Rules, 4th ed. p. 848.

(f) Service.

See c. 12, p. 1530.

(g) For Examination of Witnesses before Trial.

1652. Where a subpœna is required for the attendance of a witness for the purpose of proceedings in chambers, such subpœna shall issue from the Central Office upon a note from the judge. Ord. XXXVII. r. 28, No. 510.*

1653. Any party in any cause or matter may by subpœna ad testificandum or duces tecum require the attendance of any witness before an officer of the court, or other person appointed to take the examination, for the purpose of using his evidence upon any proceeding in the cause or matter in like manner as such witness would be bound to attend and be examined at the hearing or trial; and any party or witness having made an affidavit to be used, or which shall be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter, shall be bound on being served with such subpœna to attend before such officer or person for cross-examination. Ibid. r. 20, No. 502, and see Ibid. Nos. 489, 490, p. 1624.

(h) In Interpleader Issues.

1654. A subpœna in an interpleader issue should be headed in the title of the original action, and in the title of the interpleader issue, and should be applied for in, and issued out of, the room in which the writ of summons in the original action was issued. See C. O. Prac. Rules, 1880—82, in Wilson's Jud. Acts and Rules, 4th ed. p. 848.

(524) As to subpœnas in the Queen's Bench Division, see Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 1, pp. 560 et seq.

33. Oaths.

(a) *Generally.

1655. Every person who, at the commencement of this act, is authorized to administer oaths in any court whose jurisdiction is thereby transferred to the High Court of Justice, is a commissioner to administer oaths in all causes and matters in the High Court and Court of Appeal. The Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), ss. 77, 82.

1656. Any officer of the court, or other person directed to take the examination of any witness or person, may administer oaths. Ord. XXXVII. r. 19, No. 501.

1657. The taxing officers of the Supreme Court, or any division thereof, shall, for the purposes of any proceedings before them, have authority to administer oaths. Ord. LXV. No. 1002, sub-r. 25.

1658. Every master and every first and second class clerk in the Filing and Record Department, have authority to take oaths and affidavits in the Supreme Court. Ord. LXI. r. 5, No. 898.

1659. Affidavits sworn in England shall be sworn before a judge, district registrar, commissioner to administer oaths, or officer empowered under these rules to administer oaths. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 4, No. 524.

1660. No affidavit is sufficient if sworn before the party on whose behalf it is used, his solicitor, partner, clerk, agent, or correspondent. Ibid. r. 16, Nos. 536, 537.

1661. As to the appointment of commissioners to administer oaths, see Pt. I. c. 4, p. 1472.

1661a. As to oaths administered to persons in the form they declare binding, being binding on them, see 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105.

(b) Affirmations and Declarations.

1662. If any person called to give evidence in any court of justice objects to take an oath, or is objected to as incompetent to take an oath, such person shall, if the judge is satisfied that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience, make the promise and declaration therein mentioned; and if any person who has made the same wilfully and corruptly gives false evidence he shall be liable to be convicted for perjury. The Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 68), s. 4.

1663. See also as to declarations by other persons objecting to take an oath, or objected to as incompetent to take an oath, Ibid. 1870 (c. 49), s. 1.

1664. See further as to declarations and affirmations in lieu of oaths, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, and The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 20.

(c) Out of England.

1665. All examinations, affidavits, declarations, and affirmations in the High Court may be sworn and taken in Scotland, Ireland, the Channel Islands, or any colony or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any judge, court, notary public, or person authorized to administer oaths there, or before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls out of her dominions; and the judges and other officers of the High Court shall take judicial notice of the seal or signature of such functionaries. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 6, No. 526.

1666. Every British ambassador, envoy, minister, chargé d'affaires, or secretary of embassy or of legation, exercising his functions in any foreign country, and every British consul-general, consul, vice, acting or pro-consul, or consular agent exercising his functions in any foreign place may administer there any oath or affirmation, and do and perform every notarial act. See 6 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 20; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 1.

1667. Any document purporting to have affixed, impressed, or subscribed thereon or thereto the seal and signature of any British ambassador, envoy, minister, chargé d'affaires, secretary of embassy or of legation, consul-general, consul, vice, acting, or pro-consul or consular agent, in testimony of any such oath, affidavit, affirmation, or act having been administered, affirmed, or done by or before him under this act, shall be admitted in evidence, without proof of the seal and signature being those of the

(525) As to oaths, see Archbold's Practice

(14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 1, p. 466.

(525a) The registrar and deputy registrar of the Court of Admiralty had power to administer oaths in that court, and to exercise the same powers as any surrogate in chambers. See the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), es. 25, 26.

person they purport to be, or of the official character of such person. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 3.

1668. The consular officer therein mentioned may, in any proceeding under this act relating to salvage, take affidavits and receive affirmations. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 487.

(d) House of Lords.

1669. Affidavits taken by officers of the High Court of Justice of England or Ireland, authorized to take oaths, or in Scotland by a justice of the peace, are received in the House of Lords. See Form of Appeal, Method of Procedure, and Standing Orders of the House, of June, 1883, p. 4, n.

1670. As to oaths administered out of the United Kingdom, see Nos. 1665—1668, supra.

(e) Privy Council.

1671. As to the powers of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and their registrar or acting registrar, to administer oaths and affirmations, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38, s. 2, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 85.

(f) Court of Appeal.

1672. Affidavits taken by officers of the High Court authorized to take oaths in that court are received in the Court of Appeal.

1673. As to oaths administered out of the United Kingdom, see Nos. 1665—1668, supra.

1674. As to view, see tit. EVIDENCE,

c. 6, p. 424; Ibid. in Addenda; and Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 1, p. 527.

37. Printing.

1. *Generally.

1675. The rules of court as to printing depositions and affidavits to be used on a trial shall not apply to depositions and affidavits which have previously been used upon any proceeding without having been printed. Ord. LXVI. r. 6, No. 1008.

1676. When the evidence under this order (for trial by affidavit) is taken by affidavit the evidence shall be printed. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 30, No. 550.

1677. R. S. C. No. 550, that in cases of trial by affidavit the evidence shall be printed does not apply to Admiralty actions for limitation of liability, or in rem, by default or references. Ibid.

1678. An indorsement or pleading may be amended by written alterations in the copy delivered, and by additions on paper to be interleaved therewith if necessary, unless the amendments require the insertion of more than 144 words in any one place, or are so numerous or of such a nature that the making them in writing would render the document difficult or inconvenient to read, in either of which cases the amendment must be made by delivering a print of the document as amended. Ord. XXVIII. r. 8, No. 316.

1678a. In an action between B. and C. it was agreed by the parties that the evidence taken in an action between A. and C., and printed, should be used in the first-named action. The plaintiffs paid

* (526) The rules of the Court of Admiralty of 1859 and 1871 as to printing, are annulled by R. S. C. 1883, App. O, No. 22.

(527) The cost of forty printed copies is allowed on taxation between party and party. Copies of these when supplied to the adverse solicitor may be charged for at the rate of one penny per folio for one copy and one halfpenny per folio for every other copy. R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXVI. r. 7 (c).

(527a) In addition to the allowances for printing and taking printed copies a further sum of threepence per folio on the higher scale and twopence on the lower scale is allowed for copies of the following documents only:—Pleading for opposite party or for filing in default of appearance. Special case for filing. Petition of right for presentation and for treasury solicitor and service on any party. Pleading, special case, or petition of right, for the use of a court or judge. Any affidavit to be sworn to in print. Any of above for the use of counsel in court and in country agency cases when proper as close copy. Where written copies have been made previously to printing, the above allowances are not to be made, and in no case more than once. R. S. C. 1883, App. N.

(527b) On taxation between party and party the printer's bill for pleadings or evidence is allowed at the rate of one shilling per folio for the first twenty copies, with an extra allowance of one penny per folio for every twenty copies beyond the first twenty. The printing of diagrams and other exhibits is allowed at such sum as the taxing officer thinks reasonable.

the solicitors of A. for such prints, and charged the sums so paid in addition to the regular charge of threepence per folio, as though the printing had been done in the actions between B. and C. under Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009. Held, on objection to the taxation, that such charge was not improper. The Mammoth, 9 P. D. 126; 53 L. J. Adm. 70; 51 L. T. 549; 33 W. R. 172.

2. Paper, Type, and Margin.

1679. Proceedings required to be printed shall be printed on cream wove machine drawing foolscap folio paper, 19 lbs. per mill ream, or thereabouts, in pica type leaded, with an inner margin about three quarters of an inch wide, and an outer margin about two inches and a half wide. Ord. LXVI. r. 3, No. 1005.

3. Of what Documents.

(a) Generally.

1680. Every pleading which shall contain less than ten folios (every figure being counted as one word) may be either printed or written, or partly printed and partly written, and every other pleading, not being a petition or summons, shall be printed. Ord. XIX. r. 9, No. 205.

1680a. And see as to printing amended pleadings, No. 1678, supra.

1681. Where any written deposition of a witness has been filed, such deposition shall be printed, unless otherwise ordered. Ord. LXVI. r. 5, No. 1007.

1681a. When the evidence is taken by affidavit under Ord. XXXVIII. of R. S. C. of 1883, such evidence shall be printed, and other affidavits may be printed if all the parties interested consent thereto, or it is so ordered. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 30, No. 550.

1682. All the rules respecting the printing of pleadings and proofs in an action apply so far as they are applicable on an objection to a report of the registrar. See Ord. LVI. r. 12, No. 849.

1682a. Every special case shall be printed by the plaintiff, who shall file it and deliver printed copies for the use of the judges. See Ord. XXXIV. r. 3, No. 391.

1683. An affidavit in answer to interrogatories shall, unless otherwise ordered by a judge, if exceeding ten folios, be printed. Ord. XXXI. r. 9, No. 351.

1683a. As to printing in the House of Lords, see tit. APPEALS, p. 21; in the Privy Council, Ibid. pp. 28, 39; and in the Court of Appeal, Ibid. p. 54.

1684. Where, pursuant to these rules, any pleading, notice, special case, petition of right, deposition, or affidavit is to be printed, and where any printed or other office copy of any such document is to be taken, the following regulations shall be observed. Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009.

1684a. As to such rules, see the divisions following.

(b) By whom.

1685. The party on whose behalf the deposition or affidavit is taken and filed is to print the same in the manner provided by Rule 3 of this order (for which see No. 1679, supra). Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009 (a).

(c) Office Copies.

1686. To enable the party printing to print any deposition or affidavit, the officer with whom it is filed shall, on demand, deliver to such party a copy written on draft paper on one side only. Ibid. (b).

1687. (Except as provided by Ord. LV. r. 48, relating to Chancery proceedings,) the party by or on whose behalf any deposition, affidavit, or certificate is filed shall leave a copy with the officer with whom the same is filed, who shall examine it with the original and mark it as an office copy; such copy shall be a copy printed as above provided where such deposition or affidavit is to be printed. Ibid. (f).

(d) Copies and Price.

1688. The party printing shall, on demand in writing, furnish to any other party any number of printed copies, not exceeding ten, upon payment therefor at the rate of 1d. per folio for one copy, and $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per folio for every other copy. Ibid. (c).

1689. The party entitled to be furnished with a print shall not be allowed any charge in respect of a written copy, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise direct. Ibid. (e).

(e) Credit of Copies to Client.

1690. As between a solicitor delivering any printed copies and his client, credit shall be given by the solicitor for the whole amount payable by any other party for such printed copies. Ibid. (d).

(f) Numbering and Marking of Folios.

1691. The folios of all printed and written office copies, and copies delivered or furnished to a party, shall be numbered consecutively in the margin thereof, and such written copies shall be written in a neat and legible manner on the same paper as in the case of printed copies. Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009 (m).

1692. Where this rule is not followed the costs of the printing will not be allowed—Per the President of the P. D. & A. Division. The Rose, 27th January, 1885.

(g) Note of Filing.

1693. It shall be stated in a note at the foot of every affidavit filed on whose behalf it is so filed, and such note shall be printed on every printed copy of an affidavit or set of affidavits, and copied on every office copy and copy furnished to a party. Ord. LXVI. r. 7, No. 1009 (k).

(h) Expenses.

1694. Where, by any order of the court (whether of appeal or otherwise) or a judge, any pleading, evidence, or other document is ordered to be printed, the court or judge may order the expense of printing to be borne and allowed, and printed copies to be furnished by and to such parties and upon such terms as shall be thought fit. Ibid. (o).

38. Trial.

1695. Every action and proceeding in the High Court of Justice, and all business arising out of the same, except as hereinafter provided, shall, so far as is practicable and convenient, be heard and determined by a single judge. See the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (c. 59), s. 17.

1696. And all proceedings subsequent to the hearing or trial, and down to and including the final judgment or order, shall be had before the judge before whom the trial or hearing of the cause took place. Ibid.

2. Directions for—

(a) Third Parties.

1697. If a third party appears pursuant to the third-party notice, the defendant giving the notice may apply to the court or a judge for directions, and the court or judge, upon the hearing of such application, may, if satisfied that there is a question proper to be tried as to the liability of the third party to make the contribution or indemnity claimed, in whole or in part, order the question of such liability, as between the third party and the defendant giving the notice, to be tried in such manner, at or after the trial of the action, as the court or judge may direct. Ord. XVI. r. 52, No. 174.

1697a. For provisions whenever an application is made before trial for an injunction or other order, and the matter in controversy is one which can be most conveniently dealt with by an early trial, without first going into the whole merits on affidavit or other evidence, that the judge may make an order for an early trial at the assizes or elsewhere, see Ord. L. r. 11, of October, 1884.

3. Appointment of—

1698. In Admiralty actions the court or a judge shall have power at any stage of the proceedings in any such action, upon a motion or summons by either party, for the trial to take place on an early day to be appointed by the court or a judge, to appoint that such trial shall take place on any day or within any time which the court or judge shall think fit; and for such purpose the court or judge shall have power upon such motion or summons to dispense with the giving of notices of trial, or to abridge the time or times appointed by these rules for giving such notice, for the delivery of pleadings, or for doing any other act or taking any other proceeding in the action, upon such terms (if any) as the nature of the case may require. Ord. LXIV. r. 9, No. 969.

4. Notice of—

1699. Notice of trial may be given in any cause or matter by the plaintiff or other party in the position of plaintiff. Such notice may be given with the reply (if any) whether it closes the pleadings or not, or at any time after the issues of fact are ready for trial. Ord. XXXVI. r. 11, No. 435.

1700. If the plaintiff does not within six weeks after the close of the pleadings, or within such extended time as the court or a judge may allow, give notice of trial, the defendant may, before notice of trial given by the plaintiff, give notice of trial, or may apply to the court or judge to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; and on the hearing of such application, the court or a judge may order the action to be dismissed accordingly, or may make such other order, and on such terms, as to the court or judge may seem just. Ibid. r. 12, No. 436.

1701. Notices of trial shall state whether it is for the trial of the cause or matter or of issues therein. It shall be in the Form No. 16 in App. B., with such variations as circumstances may require. Ibid. r. 13, No. 437.

1702. Ten days' notice of trial shall be given, unless the party to whom it is given has consented, or is under terms or has been ordered to take short notice of trial; and shall be sufficient in all cases, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge. Short notice of trial shall be four days' notice, unless otherwise ordered. Ibid. r. 14, No. 438.

1703. Notice of trial for London or Middlesex shall not be or operate as for any particular sittings; but shall be deemed to be for any day after the expiration of the notice on which the trial may come on in its order upon the list. Ibid. r. 17, No. 441.

1704. In London and Middlesex, unless within six days after notice of trial is given the trial shall be entered by one party or the other, the notice of trial shall be no longer in force. Ibid. r. 16, No. 440.

1705. As to notice of trial elsewhere than in London or Middlesex, Ibid. r. 18, No. 442.

1706. Notice of trial shall be given before entering the trial. Ibid. r. 15, No. 439.

1707. No notice of trial shall be countermanded except by consent, or by leave of the court or a judge, which leave may be given subject to such terms as to costs, or otherwise as may be just. Ibid. r. 19, No. 443.

1708. As to the power of the court in Admiralty actions to appoint a day for the trial, and for that purpose to dispense with, or abridge the time for notice of trial, and for doing other acts, see Ord. LXIV. r. 9, No. 969, in No. 1698, supra.

(b) By Affidavit.

1709. When the evidence under this Order is taken by affidavit the notice of trial shall be given at the same time or times after the close of the evidence as is in other cases by these rules provided after the close of the pleadings. See Ord. XXXVIII. r. 30, No. 550.

1710. But this rule does not apply to Admiralty actions for limitation of liability, nor in rem by default, nor to references. Ibid.

5. *Entry for—.

1711. If the party giving notice of trial for London or Middlesex omits to enter the trial on the day or day after giving notice of trial, the party to whom notice has been given may, unless the notice has been countermanded under the last preceding rule, within four days enter the trial. Ord. XXXVI. r. 20, No. 444.

1712. The trial may be entered notwithstanding that the pleadings are not closed, provided that notice of trial has been given. Ibid. r. 15, No. 439.

1713. If a trial be entered by both parties, it shall be tried in the order of the plaintiff's entry, and the defendant's entry shall be vacated. Ibid. r. 28, No. 452.

1714. The party entering the trial shall deliver to the proper officer two copies of the whole of the pleadings, one of which shall be for the use of the judge at the trial. Such copies shall be in print, except as to such parts (if any), of the documents as are by these rules permitted to

See also No. 1704, supra.

6. Place of—

1715. There shall be no local venue for the trial of any action, except where otherwise provided by statute. Every action in every division shall, unless the court or a judge otherwise orders, be tried in the county or place named on the statement of claim, or (where no statement of claim has been delivered or required) by a notice in writing to be served on the defendant, or his solicitor, within six days after appearance. Where no place of trial is named, the place of trial shall, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order, be the county of Middlesex. Ord. XXXVI. r. 1, No. 525.

1715a. The provisions of the above rule shall apply to every action, notwithstanding that it may have been assigned to any judge. Ibid. r. 2, of October, 1884.

7. Admission of Evidence taken before Trial.

1716. Except where by this Order otherwise provided, or directed by the court or a judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence at the hearing or trial of the cause or matter without the consent of the party against whom the same may be offered, unless the court or judge is satisfied that the deponent is dead, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing or trial, in any of which cases the depositions certified under the hand of the person taking the examination shall be admissible in evidence, saving all just exceptions, without proof of the signature to such certificate. Ord. XXXVII. r. 18, No. 500.†

1717. No affidavit or deposition filed or made before issue joined in any cause or matter shall without special leave of the court or a judge be received at the hearing or trial thereof, unless within one month after issue joined, or within such longer time as may be allowed by special leave of the court or a judge, notices in writing shall have been given by the party intending to use the same to the opposite party of his intention in that behalf. Ibid. r. 24, No. 506.

1718. An order to read evidence taken in another cause or matter shall not be necessary, but such evidence may, saving all just exceptions, be read on ex parte applications by leave of the court or a judge, to be obtained at the time of making any such application, and in any other case upon the party desiring to use such evidence giving two days' previous notice to the other parties of his intention to read such evidence. Ibid. r. 3, No. 485.

8. With or without Jury.‡

1719. In an action in the Admiralty Division trial by jury refused. The Temple Bar, 10 Nov. 1885. Decision affirmed on appeal, Ibid. 12 Nov. 1885. See also The Seaham, 4 Asp. 58.

* (533a) Four prints are all that are allowed on taxation, but ten prints are usually asked for and left.

(534a) The notice of trial in the Admiralty Division is entitled in the cause, and addressed to the adverse solicitor, requiring him to take notice of trial of the action (specifying it), or the issues ordered to be tried in the action (as the case may be) in (stating venue), for the day of next. It is dated and signed by the solicitor, or agent of the solicitor, in the cause giving the notice.

The notice of trial bears an impressed stamp of two pounds, of which one pound is for the stamp on the judgment or decree issued to the successful party, filed in the filing-room in the Admiralty registry.

‡ (535) Actions in the Admiralty Division are always tried without a jury, though it would seem that anciently the judge of the Admiralty Court had power to convene a jury. See 2 Chitty's General Practice, pp. 513, 535, also note to The Ruckers, 4 C. Rob. 74, and the Admiralty Division as a branch of the Supreme Court, probably now has the same power. The court, however, has the assistance of Trinity Masters as assessors, where nautical assistance is advisable.

(536) This enables the court to dispense with the allowance of scientific nautical evidence, and much expense is thus saved to suitors.

(537) As to the causes in the Queen's Bench Division in which trials may be had with and without a jury, see Ord. XXXVI. r. 4—9, Nos. 428—433, as amended by r. 11 of Dec. 1885.

9. With Assessors.

1720. Trials with assessors shall take place in such manner and upon such terms as the court or a judge shall direct. Ord. XXXVI. r. 43, No. 467.

(b) Trinity Masters.

1721. Trinity Masters. See Pt. I. c. 2, p. 1466, and tit. EVIDENCE, p. 421.

10. Where one Party does not appear.

1722. If, when a trial is called on, the plaintiff appears, and the defendant does not appear, the plaintiff may prove his claim, so far as the burden of proof lies upon him. Ibid. r. 31, No. 455.

1723. If, when a trial is called on, the defendant appears, and the plaintiff does not appear, the defendant, if he has no counter-claim, shall be entitled to judgment, dismissing the action, but if he has a counter-claim then he may prove such counter-claim so far as the burden of proof lies upon him. Ibid. r. 32, No. 456.

1724. Any verdict or judgment obtained where one party does not appear at the trial may be set aside by the court or a judge upon such terms as may seem fit, upon an application made within six days after the trial. Ibid. r. 33, No. 457.

11. Examination of Witnesses in Court.

1725. In the absence of any agreement in writing between the solicitors of all parties, and subject to these rules, the witnesses at the trial of any action or at any assessment of damages shall be examined vivâ voce and in open court; but the court or a judge may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing or trial, on such conditions as the court or judge may think reasonable, or that any witness, whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with, be examined by interrogatories or otherwise before a commissioner or examiner; provided that, where it appears to the court or judge that the other party bond fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.† Ord. XXXVII. r. 1, No. 483.

1726. Nothing in this act or in the first schedule thereto, or in rules of court to be made under the act, except as therein mentioned, affects the mode of giving evidence by the oral examination of witnesses in trials by jury, or the rules of evidence. See the Judicature Act, 1875 (c. 77), s. 20.

(b) Evidence taken down by Shorthand Writer.‡

* (538) Evidence on the trial of an action in the Admiralty Division is now usually given vivâ voce, and taken down in shorthand by the shorthand writers appointed by the court.

(539) If it is important to secure the testimony of witnesses about to leave the country, the court will generally entertain an application to have those witnesses on either side or both sides examined and cross-examined in court prior to the hearing; or an order may be obtained for their evidence being taken before an examiner of the court or by commission.

(540) As to evidence before trial, see c. 35, ss. 27, 28, pp. 1620 et seq.

(541) As to oral proof by witnesses, including attendance, examination, and cross-examination of witnesses, see Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence (15th ed.), pp. 143 et seq.

(542) As the pleadings are sufficiently explicit to indicate the respective cases of the parties, no opening by counsel precedes the examination of witnesses on either side.

(543) When the witnesses are examined vivâ voce the court only hears one counsel on each side, except on questions of law, on which both counsel may be heard.

(544) When the hearing takes place on written proofs all the counsel engaged on each side are entitled to be heard.

† (545) As to the powers of the Court of Admiralty, prior to the Judicature Acts, to examine witnesses vivâ voce, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 7.

‡ (546) In the Admiralty Division, where the evidence is taken vivâ voce, and there is any probability of an appeal by either party—i. e., substantially in all cases—the questions and answers are taken down in shorthand by one of the authorized reporters of the court, who is first duly sworn faithfully to take down the same. One of them attends the sittings of the court for that purpose. On appeal, an order is obtained that this transcript of the evidence shall be received as authentic proof of the evidence in the cause.

1727. The judge may in all cases disallow any questions put in cross-examination of any party or other witness which may appear to him to be vexatious, and not relevant to any matter proper to be inquired into in the cause or matter. Ord. XXXVI. r. 38, No. 462.

1728. Any party may, at the trial of a cause, matter, or issue, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer: Provided always, that in such case the judge may look at the whole of the answers, and if he shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, he may direct them to be put in. Ord. XXXI. r. 24, No. 366.

12. Notes of Commencement and Termination.

1729. The registrar, master, or other proper officer present at any hearing or trial, shall make a note of the times at which such hearing or trial shall commence and terminate respectively, on each day on which the same shall take place, for communication to the taxing officer if required. See Ord. XXXVI. r. 40, No. 464.

13. *Special Case.

1730. Upon the argument of a special case the court and the parties shall be at liberty to refer to the whole contents of the documents referred to therein, and the court shall be at liberty to draw from the facts and documents stated in any such special case any inference, whether of fact or law, which might have been drawn therefrom if proved at a trial. See Ord. XXXIV. r. 1, No. 389.

1731. On a special case upon a question of law being ordered, such further proceedings as the decision of such question of law may render unnecessary may thereupon be stayed. Ibid. r. 2, No. 390.

1732. As to the printing signatures to and filing of a special case, see c. 24, p. 1573.

1733. No special case in a cause or matter to which a married woman (except as therein mentioned), infant, or person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, is a party, shall be set down for argument without leave of the court or judge, the application for which must be supported by sufficient evidence that the statements contained in such special case, so far as the same affect the interest of such married woman, infant, or person of unsound mind, are true. Ibid. r. 4, No. 392.

1734. Either party may enter a special case for argument by delivering to the proper officer a memorandum of entry, in the form No. 25 in App. G., and also if any married woman, infant, or person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, be a party to the cause or matter, producing a copy of the order giving leave to enter the same for argument. Ibid. r. 5, No. 393.

1735. As to agreement by parties to a special case for payment of an agreed sum, according to the judgment of the court in the affirmative or negative on the questions of law, see c. 24, p. 1573.

1736. This order applies to every special case in a cause or matter, or proceeding incidental thereto. Ibid. r. 7, No. 395.

1737. Any special case may be stated for the same purposes, and in the same manner as was provided by the act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, and the same shall be deemed to be a special case within the

(547) As to the court shorthand writers, see Pt. I. c. 4, p. 1473.

(548) The shorthand writer's charges for attending and taking down the evidence are two guineas a day, besides his charge for the transcript, if ordered.

(549) The plaintiff's solicitor is entitled, on taxation between party and party, to a fee for bespeaking the attendance of the shorthand writer, whose charges of attendance are usually paid by him.

(550) All witnesses, except the one under examination, those who have been examined, parties in the cause, and scientific witnesses, such as surveyors, &c., are generally required to be kept out of court.

meaning of this order. Ibid. r. 8, No. 396.

1738. As to the powers of arbitrators and referees to state a special case, see the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 4; and also of referees to do so, see Ord. XXXVI. r. 52, No. 476. As to statement of special case in interpleader, see Ord. LVII. r. 9, No. 858.

1739. Where the statement of defence denied specifically all the allegations in the statement of claim, and further alleged that the defendant's liability was limited to £5 by the terms of a bill of lading, held that the question of law should be first decided, and a special case ordered. Tattersall v. National Steamship Co., 9th Feb. 1884.

1739*a*. See also c. 24, pp. 1572, 1573; as to special cases in the Privy Council, see tit. APPEALS, p. 48.

14. Question of Law.

See c. 24, No. 1020, p. 1573.

15. Issues.

1740. For provisions that where issues or questions of fact have been ordered to be tried or determined, the plaintiff may set down a motion for judgment as soon as such issues or questions have been determined; and if he does not do so, and give notice thereof to the other parties within ten days, any defendant may do so, Ord. XL. r. 7, No. 565.

1741. For provisions that where issues or questions of fact have been ordered to be tried or determined, and some only of them have been tried, any party who considers the result of the trial renders the trial of the others unnecessary, or requiring postponement, may apply for leave to set down a motion for judgment, without waiting for such trial, Ibid. r. 8, No. 566.

See also Nos. 1744—1747, infra.

(b) Third Parties.

1742. Unless issues are directed and prepared between the defendant and a third party the court cannot try questions of liability between them. The Cartsburn, 5 P. D. 59; 4 Asp. 202.

1743. Semble, it is competent to the court to order issues between the defendant and a third party to be tried either at the same time as those between plaintiff and defendant or after they have been decided. Ibid. (C. A.)

16. Questions of Facts agreed to be decided.

1744. When the parties to a cause or matter are agreed as to the questions of fact to be decided between them, they may, after writ issued and before judgment, by consent and order of the court or a judge, proceed to the trial of any such questions of fact without formal pleadings; and such questions may be stated for trial in an issue in the form No. 15, in Appendix B., with such variations as circumstances may require; and such issue may be entered for trial and tried in the same manner as any issue joined in an ordinary action, and the proceedings shall be under the control and jurisdiction of the court or judge, in the same way as the proceedings in an action. Ord. XXXIV. r. 9, No. 397.

1745. The court or a judge may by consent of the parties order that, upon the finding thereof in the affirmative or negative, a sum of money, fixed by the parties, or to be ascertained upon a question inserted in the issue for that purpose, shall be paid by one of the parties to the other with or without costs. Ibid. r. 10, No. 398.

1746. Upon the finding on any such issue, judgment may be entered for the sum so agreed or ascertained, with or without costs, as the case may be, and execution may issue upon such judgment forthwith, unless otherwise agreed, or unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order for the purpose of giving either party an opportunity for moving to set aside the finding or for a new trial. Ibid. r. 11, No. 399.

1747. The proceedings upon such issue may be recorded at the instance of either party, and the judgment, whether re-

See c. 41, p. 1658.

18. Counsel.

(a) Generally.

1748. In a cause of salvage the defendants appeared, but without pleading. They appeared by counsel at the hearing and claimed to be heard in depreciation of the services. Held, that a party who has not pleaded cannot be heard. The Emerald (2300), 13th December, 1864.

1748a. The counsel of rival salvors may cross-examine each other's witnesses, but only as to circumstances in dispute between them. The Morocco, 1 Asp. N.S. 46; 24 L. T. N.S. 598.

(b) In Consolidated Actions.

1749. Where the interests of the plaintiffs in a consolidated salvage action are adverse, separate counsel will be heard on their behalf at the hearing. The Scout, L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 41 L. J. Adm. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 258.

(c) Right to begin and Reply.

(aa) Generally.

1750. As to the order of counsel being heard in cases of trial with a jury, see Ord. XXXVI. r. 36, No. 460.

1751. Where the onus probandi has been imposed upon a party it is his duty to begin. Those who claim to share in a joint capture begin to state their case, and afterwards are entitled to reply. The Banda and Kirwee Booty, 35 L. J. Adm. 11; 2 Asp. 323.

1752. Where the Crown appears to protest against the jurisdiction of the court being exercised against a vessel belonging to a foreign power, it has the same right of reply as in cases where it appears on its own behalf. The Parliament Belge, 4 Asp. 83.

(bb) In Bottomry Actions.

1753. In a bottomry action in which the bond had been pronounced for in proceedings by default, but which was afterwards allowed to be contested by the owners, the counsel for the bondholder was called on to begin. The Orelia, 3 Hagg. 78, n.

(cc) In Collision Actions.*

1754. In collision actions generally the plaintiff begins. The Otter, 2 Asp. N.S. 208.

1755. In a collision action where the plaintiffs' ship was at anchor when the collision occurred, held, that the burden of proof was upon the defendants to account for the collision, and that they ought to begin. The George Arkle, 1 Asp. 154.

1756. In a cause of collision where the defendant admits that his vessel ran into a vessel at anchor, but denies that such vessel was the plaintiff's, the plaintiff must establish identity, and must therefore begin. The Earl of Leicester, B. & L. 188.

1757. The defendants' vessel came into collision with the plaintiffs' vessel which was riding to her nets. The defendants charged the plaintiffs with not exhibiting a proper light. Held, that the plaintiffs must begin. The Bottle Imp, 42 L. J. Adm. 48; 1 Asp. N.S. 571.

1758. Where defendants in a cause of collision plead inevitable accident alone, it lies on the plaintiffs to show a prima facie case of negligence (see the Marpesia, L. R. 4 P. C. 212; 1 Asp. N.S. (P. C.) 261), and the plaintiffs must therefore begin. The Abraham, 2 Asp. N.S. 34: overruling The Thomas Lea, infra.

1759. The defendants in their answer pleaded inevitable accident, and generally denied the allegations of the petition, but did not charge the plaintiffs with any blame. Held, that it rested with the defendants to show, in the first instance, that they were not responsible for the damage, and that therefore they ought to begin. The Thomas Lea, 38 L. J. Adm. 37; 2 Asp. 389.

* (556) If the defendant calls for the plaintiff's log and puts it in evidence, it is put in evidence by the defendant, and though the defendant calls no witness the plaintiff's counsel is entitled to reply.

(557) For the old practice as to the admission of further pleadings and evidence after the formal close of pleadings and written evidence, see Le Niemen, 1 Dodson, 10; The Fortitude, 2 Ibid. 70; The Sydney Cove, 2 Ibid. 10; The Bonaparte, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 460; The Speed, 7 Jur. 1069; 2 W. Rob. 230; The Julindur, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 71.

1761. In a salvage action the right to begin does not shift with the burden of proof, but is almost universally with the claimant. The Magdalen, 31 L. J. N.S. Adm. 22.

1762. Salvage services were admitted, but it was charged by the defendants that salvage reward was forfeited by the subsequent misconduct of the salvors. Held, that the counsel for the plaintiffs, the salvors, were nevertheless entitled to begin. Ibid.

1763. In the case of rival salvors those who first entered their action should, as a rule, begin. The Morocco, 1 Asp. N.S. 46; 24 L. T. N.S. 598.

1764. In salvage actions, where several actions have been instituted, there is no inflexible rule to entitle the plaintiffs in the action first instituted to begin. The Willem III., L. R. 3 A. & E. 487; 1 Asp. N.S. 129.

1765. See as to the right to begin of counsel for different sets of salvors in a consolidated cause of salvage, Ibid. 1 Asp. 132.

1766. In this case counsel for those first on the spot were first heard. Ibid.

(ee) In the Privy Council.

19. By Affidavit.

(a) Generally.

1767. No deposition filed or made before issue joined is, without special leave, to be received at the trial, unless within one month after issue joined, or such longer time as may be allowed by special leave, notice in writing thereof has been given to the opposite party. See Ord. XXXVII. r. 24, No. 506.

20. Of Cross Actions.

See o. 34, p. 1605, and Nos. 1542—1545, p. 1619.

21. Postponement or Adjournment.

1768. The judge may, if he think it expedient for the interests of justice, postpone or adjourn a trial for such time, and to such place, and upon such terms, if any, as he shall think fit. Ord. XXXVI. r. 34, No. 458.

1769. Where a party is brought up to attend the trial or hearing of a cause or matter by virtue of any writ of habeas corpus duly issued from the Central Office, and by reason of the pressure of other business, or from any other cause, the trial or hearing of the cause or matter in which such party is concerned is postponed to a future day, a new writ of habeas corpus may be issued for such future day, if the court or a judge shall so direct, without payment of any fee. Ibid. r. 35, No. 459.

1770. The judge may, at or after a trial, adjourn the case for further consideration, or leave any party to move for judgment. Ibid. r. 39, No. 463.

1771. In a cause of bottomry, on motion on behalf of the bondholder, the assignees of the owner directed to bring in all the affidavits and proofs then in their power or possession before the bondholder should be required to file his answer to their pleadings, and on the further affidavits and proofs being so brought in, the bondholder allowed further time to send out to the Mauritius. The Orelia, 3 Hagg. 77, n.

1772. An application to postpone the hearing of a cause until the return of a person to this country, there having been abundance of time for the person to have given his evidence before he left, refused. The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 417.

1773. Time having been frequently prayed by the defendant to examine, in a cause of personal damage, a witness who had afterwards been suffered to leave the country without being examined, the court, it being uncertain when he would return, refused to grant any further time, and closed the case. The Enchantress, 1 Hagg. 395.

1774. The court will not, at the instance of a defendant, postpone the trial of a cause on the ground of the absence of a material and necessary witness, where the witness is a captain in the service of the defendant, and the defendant has been guilty of laches in abstaining from securing the testimony of the witness when within his power. Wright v. M'Guffie, 4 C. B. N.S. 441.

1775. Motion, after publication, to permit further affidavits to be given in, and to allow further time to procure them, the parties being at sea, on the ground that it had been intended originally to apply for time to procure these affidavits, but that the case had been closed through inadvertence granted, the court intimating, however, that it would view the affidavits introduced at such a stage of the cause with great suspicion; and that, without reference to the result of the suit, the party would be liable to the costs of the application, should the affidavits prove unnecessary. The Speed, 7 Jur. 1069; 2 Notes of Cases, 230.

1776. Application to postpone the hearing of a cause, on the ground that a bill of indictment for perjury had been found against one of the principal witnesses, granted to the extent of a limited postponement, but a further postponement refused. The Jane and Matilda, 1 Hagg. 187; see also Maclean v. Maclean, 2 Hagg. 601; Kenrick v. Kenrick, 4 ibid. 133; Panton v. Williams, 2 Curteis, 552. (Ecl.)

22. Evidence in Proceedings after Trial.

See c. 35, p. 1626.

23. New Trial or Re-hearing.

1777. Every motion for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, finding, or judgment, shall be made (1) in every cause or matter by the Principal Act assigned to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, where there has been a trial thereof, or of any issue therein with a jury, to a Divisional Court of that Division, one of the judges of which shall (when practicable) sit on the hearing of such motion; (2) in every other cause or matter, where there has been a trial thereof or of any issue therein with a jury, to a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division; and (3) where there has been a trial without a jury, by appeal to the Court of Appeal. Ord. XXXIX. r. 1, No. 551.

1778. When the trial takes place before a judge without a jury, an application for a new trial, whatever the ground, must be made to the Court of Appeal. Oastler v. Henderson, 2 Q. B. D. 575. (C. A.)

1779. As to applications to the Court of Appeal for leave to give further evidence in the Court of Appeal, see tit. APPEAL, pp. 37 and 54.

1780. In courts of common law there may be a new trial in cases of surprise, but there can be no new trial in the Court of Admiralty. The Minnehaha, 1 Lushington, 340.

1781. The practice of the Court of Admiralty does not admit of new trials, owing to the wandering habits of seamen and for other reasons. The Constitution, 2 Asp. 60.

1782. On an appeal to the Judicial Committee the sentence must be either affirmed or altered, and it will not be altered unless the Appellate Court is reasonably convinced that the sentence was wrong. Ibid.

1783. Semble, where an objection is taken to the exclusion of evidence by the judge of the Admiralty Court, the proper course is to apply to the Court of Appeal for a new trial on that ground, and not to tender the evidence afresh in the Court of Appeal. The Sir Robert Peel, 4 Asp. 321. (C. A.)

1784. Semble, where the court sees clearly that, unless a re-hearing were granted, its intention declared in its judgment would be defeated, it is within the competency of the court to grant it. The Singapore, L. R. 1 P. C. 378.

1785. As to applications for new trials from judgments or verdicts in the Common Law Division, see Ord. XXXIX. Wilson's Judicature Acts and Rules (2nd ed.), p. 272; Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 1, p. 729; and Chitty's Forms (12th ed.), p. 368.

1786. As to rules nisi and absolute, see Ord. LIII. rr. 2 to 6.

1787. On motion for judgment, or for a new trial, the court may give judgment accordingly, or may direct the motion to stand over for further consideration, and direct such issues or questions to be tried or determined, and such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made as it may think fit. Ord. XL. r. 10, No. 568.

24. Costs.

39. Judgments and Orders.

[Judgments.]

1. Generally.*

1788. In the construction of this act, unless there is anything in the subject or context repugnant thereto, "judgment" shall include decree, "order" shall include rule. The Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 100.

1789. Every judgment or order made in any cause or matter requiring any person to do an act thereby ordered shall state the time, or the time after service of the judgment or order, within which the act is to be done, and upon the copy of the judgment or order which shall be served upon the person required to obey the same there shall be indorsed a memorandum in the words or to the effect following, viz.: "If you, the within-named A. B., neglect to obey this judgment (or order) by the time therein limited, you will be liable to process of execution for the purpose of compelling you to obey the same judgment (or order)." Ord. XLI. r. 5, No. 573.

1790. The judge may, at or after a trial, direct that judgment be entered for any or either party, or adjourn the case for further consideration, or leave any party to move for judgment. No judgment shall be entered after a trial without the order of a court or judge. Ord. XXXVI. r. 39, No. 463.

1791. The court will not make a decree against the master in an action of wages against the ship only, even though the master appeared in the action and gave bail. Lee v. Rous, anno 1750, Marsden's Rep. p. 318.

1792. For forms of judgments, see R. S. C. 1883, App. F.

1793. As to interest on judgments, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS.

2. Motion for—

1794. Except where by the acts or by these rules it is provided that judgment may be obtained in any other manner, the judgment of the court shall be obtained by motion for judgment. Ord. XL. r. 1, No. 559.

1795. Where at the trial the judge or referee abstains from directing any judgment to be entered, the plaintiff may set down a motion for judgment. If he does not set down such a motion and give notice thereof to the other parties within ten days after the trial, any defendant may set down a motion for judgment, and give notice thereof to the other parties. Ibid. r. 2, No. 560.

1796. No motion for judgment shall, except by leave of the court or a judge, be set down after the expiration of one year from the time when the party seeking to set down the same first became entitled so to do. Ibid. r. 9, No. 567.

(b) Notice of—

1797. See No. 1795, supra.

3. Entry of—

(a) Generally.†

(562) For provisions on motions for judgment, or applications for a new trial, after verdict of a jury enabling the court to draw certain inferences of fact, and to direct the motion to stand over for further consideration, and to direct such issues or questions to be tried or determined, and such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, as it may think fit, see Ord. XL. r. 10, No. 568.

† (563) In the Admiralty Division judgments are not registered nor filed in the Admiralty Registry or the Central Office.

(564) The registrar being the proper officer in the Admiralty Division to enter the judgment, no copy of the pleadings as required by this rule are given by or to him, as printed copies of the pleadings have previously been filed in the registry.

(565) For provisions that where under the acts or these rules, or otherwise, any judgment may be entered upon the filing of any affidavit or production of any document, the officer shall examine the same, and if regular and sufficient he shall enter judgment accordingly; or similarly, he may do so where judgment may be entered pursuant to any order or certificate, or return to any writ, on the production thereof sealed with the seal of the court, or of such return, see Ord. XLI. rr. 6, 7, Nos. 574, 575.

1800. Where any judgment is pronounced by the court or a judge in court, the entry of the judgment shall be dated as of the day on which such judgment is pronounced, unless the court or judge shall otherwise order, and the judgment shall take effect from that date. Provided that by special leave of the court or a judge a judgment may be ante-dated or post-dated. Ord. XLI. r. 3, No. 571.

1801. In all cases not within the last preceding rule, the entry of judgment shall be dated as of the day on which the requisite documents are left with the proper officer for the purpose of such entry, and the judgment shall take effect from that date. Ibid. r. 4, No. 572.

1802. Where in any action a set-off or counter-claim is established as a defence against the plaintiff's claim, the court or a judge may, if the balance is in favour of the defendant, give judgment for the defendant for such balance, or may otherwise adjudge to the defendant such relief as he may be entitled to upon the merits of the case. 4. On Counter-claim or Set-off.

1803. If, when a trial is called on, the defendant appears, and the plaintiff does not appear, the defendant, if he has no counter-claim, shall be entitled to judgment dismissing the action, but if he has a counter-claim, then he may prove such counter-claim so far as the burden of proof lies upon him. Ord. XXXVI. r. 32, No. 456.

5. On Confession of Defence.

1804. For provisions that where the defendant alleges any ground of defence which has arisen after the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver a confession of such defence, and thereupon sign judgment for his costs up to the time of the pleading of such defence, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order. Ord. XXIV. r. 3, No. 284.

6. By Consent.

1805. In any cause or matter where the defendant has appeared by solicitor, no order for entering judgment shall be made by consent unless the consent of the defendant is given by his solicitor or agent. Ord. XLI. r. 9, No. 577.

1806. Where the defendant has not appeared, or has appeared in person, no such order shall be made unless the defendant attends before a judge and gives his consent in person, or unless his written consent is attested by a solicitor acting on his behalf, except in cases where the defendant is a barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, or solicitor. Ibid. r. 10, No. 578.

7. Third Parties.

1807. If a third party appears pursuant to the third-party notice, the defendant giving the notice may apply for directions to the court or a judge, who may, if not satisfied there is a proper question to be tried as to the liability of the third party, order such judgment as the nature of the case may require to be entered in favour of the defendant giving the notice against the third party. (a) Generally.

1810. A judgment for the recovery by, or payment to, any person, of money, may be enforced by any of the modes by which a judgment or decree for the payment of money of any court whose jurisdiction is transferred by the principal act might have been enforced at the time of the passing thereof. Ord. XLII. r. 3, No. 581.

1811. A judgment for the payment of money into court may be enforced by writ of sequestration, or in cases in which attachment is authorized by law, by attachment. Ibid. r. 4, No. 582.

1812. A judgment for the recovery of any property other than land or money may be enforced, (a) by writ for delivery of the property; (b) by writ of attachment; (c) by writ of sequestration. Ibid. r. 6, No. 584.

1813. A judgment requiring any person to do any act other than the payment of money, or to abstain from doing anything, may be enforced by writ of attachment, or by committal. Ibid. r. 7, No. 585.

* (574) The calculation of damages and all matters of account in actions in the Admiralty Division are referred by the judge to the registrar to examine and report upon. In these investigations the registrar is generally assisted by two merchants, who hold standing appointments from the judge for the purpose. After the accounts and proofs on both sides have been filed, the solicitors on both sides attend the registrar and merchants, when the accounts are investigated, and witnesses on both sides are often examined in addition to the proofs filed. The registrar afterwards prepares a report to the judge, setting forth the items of the claim made, and the items he has allowed and disallowed.

1866. When the premium on a bottomry bond is excessive, the court, even in proceedings by default, will refer the matter to the registrar and merchants to report the proper amount to be allowed. The Humiley, 1 Lushington, 24.

1867. The rate of interest at which money may be lent on bottomry is a proper subject for reference to the registrar and merchants. La Ysabel, 1 Dodson, 277; The Alexander, ibid. 279; The Lord Cochrane, 8 Jur. 716; 3 Notes of Cases, 172.

1868. In a bottomry transaction, if the charges for the repairs are excessive, the amount will be referred to the registrar and merchants. The Lord Cochrane, 8 Jur. 716; 3 Notes of Cases, 172.

1869. Objections to bills of exchange (given as collateral securities to a bottomry bond), as having been drawn at too high a rate of exchange, referred to the registrar and merchants. The Nelson, 1 Hagg. 179.

1870. In an action under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, for damage to goods, before the Admiralty Court will make a decree as to the amount of damages, the amount must have been ascertained by a reference to the registrar and merchants. The St. Cloud, 8 L. T. N.S. 55.

1871. Where to a claim for damage to cargo, made in an Admiralty action, a counter-claim of general average is set up, it is not necessary that such general average should have been adjusted; but if the evidence supports the fact of a general average loss having been sustained, the amount thereof, together with the amount of loss sustained through damage to the cargo, will be referred to the registrar and merchants to report on. The Oquendo, 3 Asp. N.S. 558; 38 L. T. N.S. 151.

1872. Semble, in cases of account between master also mortgagee and his co-mortgagee, a question of unliquidated damages cannot be investigated by the registrar and merchants, but must be assessed by a jury. The Repulse, 5 Notes of Cases, 362; 11 Jur. 716.

1873. When a claim for necessaries or supplies is for a large amount, and consists of various items, and the proceedings are by default, the court will sometimes, on making a decree in favour of the plaintiff, refer ex mero motu the accounts and vouchers to the registrar with or without merchants to examine and report thereon. The Revenir, 5th August, 1858.

1874. The court will refer a claim, if objected to, of agents' expenses, as a deduction from a salvage award, to the consideration of the registrar and merchants. The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 24.

1875. Reference decreed to the registrar and merchants of the accounts of a party appointed agent by the master, and claiming also as salvor in that capacity. The Happy Return, 2 Hagg. 207.

1876. Loss and damage of salvors attending a salvage service referred to the registrar and merchants to examine and report upon. The Oscar, 2 Hagg. 261; The Salacia, ibid. 269; The Gladiator, No. 1594, 6th Nov. 1863.

1877. In a cause of wages, accounts for wages, payments on account, &c. referred to the registrar to examine and report upon. The Lady Campbell, 2 Hagg. 14, 15.

1878. In a cause of wages, brought by a mariner, an application of the owner after judgment to refer the schedule of deductions from the wages, respecting which the owners and mariner were not agreed, to the registrar, refused. The Test, 3 Hagg. 316.

1878a. Accounts of charges attending the execution of a commission of unlivery and appraisal referred to the consideration of the registrar and merchants as being enormous. L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 50.

4. Where dispensed with.

1879. On a question of small damages, the court, though it might ascertain them more exactly by a reference to the registrar and merchants, will, to avoid expense, refrain from ordering a reference if it can itself satisfactorily dispose of the question. £20 awarded as damages, with costs, without a reference. The Eleanore, 33 L. J. N.S. Adm. 19.

1879a. In a cause of damage in which the amount of damages claimed was £10,000, and the net proceeds only amounted to about £800; motion to pay out the balance of proceeds to the proctor for the plaintiffs, duly authorized, granted without a previous reference of the claim and accounts to the registrar and merchants. The Viscountess Canning, 15 March, 1860.

1880. In a cause of damage in which judgment had been given for the plaintiff, he claimed £600, and the net proceeds amounted to £300 only. Motion for payment of the balance of proceeds without a reference, granted. The Zaide Celine, No. 1909, January 26, 1864.

5. *Claim and Proofs.

1881. In references in Admiralty actions evidence may be given by affidavit. See Ord. XXXVII. r. 2, No. 484.

1882. Within twelve days from the day when the order for the reference is made, the solicitor for the claimant shall file the

* (581) The claim should be entitled in the cause in which it is made. A very short statement of the circumstances under which the claim is made should be inserted. Then should follow a list of the different items of claim numbered consecutively. The vouchers (bills and receipts) for each item should be brought in with the claim, and be numbered to correspond with the item to which they refer in the claim.

(582) A stamp of 5s. should be affixed to the minute on filing the claim, and a stamp of 5s. on each affidavit or other proof, such as protest, survey, &c., but no stamp is required for any of the ordinary vouchers (bills or receipts).

(583) It is sometimes sufficient in the first instance to file in addition to the claim the surveys (if any) and the accounts and vouchers, though if any items are open to exception it is desirable to file at once affidavits in support of them. The counter-proofs filed on the other side will generally show what items are intended to be impugned, and further proofs in support of these should then be filed.

(584) But, in general, the claimant's solicitor, unless he intends to examine witnesses at the hearing, should file adequate proofs in support of his claim, as sometimes his opponent files no counter-proofs, but besides or instead of those proofs examines witnesses at the hearing on the reference, and the claimant's solicitor, if not fully prepared to disprove or answer such evidence or objections, will be driven to apply for an adjournment, and if the report is against him he will not, without good cause shown, be allowed to go into further evidence in objection to the report.

(585) Cargo books, portage accounts, and other books and accounts in the possession of either party are usually produced by that party on notice in writing to that effect from the opposite party. When this is not done an order for the purpose may be obtained by summons in the usual way. A stamp of 5s. must be affixed to the minute on filing each book or account, if filed, and not produced merely.

claim and affidavits. Ord. LVI. r. 2, No. 839.

1883. In references in Admiralty actions evidence may be given by affidavit. Ord. XXXVII. r. 2, No. 484.

(b) *In Actions of Bottomry.

(c) In Actions of Damage to Cargo.†

(d) In Actions of Damage by Collision.‡

1884. In estimating the value of a ship lost by collision, the best evidence is the opinion of competent persons who knew the ship shortly previous to the time it was lost. The second best evidence is the opinion of persons conversant with shipping, and the transfers thereof. Many other circumstances may be called in aid,—as the original price of the vessel, the amount of repairs done to her, the sum at which she was insured, and the like; but these facts have a slighter bearing upon the case. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 443.

1885. Shipwrights or persons accustomed to shipbuilding, and, semble, who saw the vessel under repair, would be better judges than the merchants assisting the registrar of the repairs necessary in consequence of a collision. The Alfred, 7 Notes of Cases, 355; 3 W. Rob. 232.

1886. The owner's books are the best evidence of the earnings of the vessel, and should be produced. The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 182; 2 W. Rob. 523.

1887. The owner's affidavit of prime cost, unsupported by documentary proofs, is not sufficient evidence to produce legal conviction. The Clyde, Swabey, 23.

1888. In a case of total loss at sea by collision, a shipowner who has cargo of his own on board is entitled to recover in lieu of freight what would have been the enhanced value of the cargo at its destination, less the expenses of earning that value, and that is the proper form of claim, and not a claim for expenses in making the ship fit for sea. The Thyaira, No. 125, 5 Asp. 178.

(e) In Actions of Masters' Accounts.

1889. The registrar and merchants cannot allow in a master's accounts items for which no vouchers are produced, or which are not substantiated by proper evidence. The affidavit of the master thereon is not

* (586) In actions of bottomry the proofs to be filed are inter alia the surveys and the accounts and vouchers for the several sums making up the amount raised on bottomry.

† (587) In actions of damage to cargo, when the cargo is lost, or sold in a damaged state, the proofs to be filed are inter alia the bills of lading or invoice showing the nature and quantity of the cargo shipped, the account sales when it is sold in a damaged state, affidavits of its value at the port of consignment at the time when in ordinary course it would have arrived there, and pro formâ account sales showing the disbursements that would have attended its landing, storing, sale, and delivery there.

(588) When the cargo is only damaged, instead of the pro formâ account sales, proofs should be filed of the expenses of re-coopering the casks, drying or otherwise repairing the cargo, and of superintending these repairs.

‡ (589) In actions of damage by collision, when the ship is lost, the proofs to be filed are inter alia her register, if she were a comparatively new vessel; affidavits of her classification at Lloyd's, if she had a good class; affidavits of the different occasions of her having been repaired, and the amounts spent in the repairs, particularly on the last occasion.

(590) Affidavits as to her value from persons experienced in shipping, and who had seen her shortly before she was lost; and affidavits of shipwrights of standing and experience, setting forth the amount for which they would build a new vessel of the same class, size, and equipment.

(591) Affidavits of shipwrights and others experienced in shipping, deposing to her value from the particulars contained in her register and classification at Lloyd's, are often filed for want of better proofs, but do not carry much weight with them.

(592) The proofs to be filed as to the loss of freight are the charter-party, when the freight is for a lump sum, or the ship's manifest; and a freight account showing the amount of freight that would have been earned and the expenses that would have been incurred in earning it.

(593) In actions of damage by collision when the vessel damaged has been repaired, the proofs to be filed are inter alia the surveys, the protest, the accounts, and vouchers for the repairs. As to demurrage, affidavits as to the time the vessel was under repair, that the repairs were effected with all practicable expedition, and proof of the vessel's average earnings, if she is a vessel of a superior class or engaged in any special trade.

sufficient. The Julindur, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 72.

1890. As to actions on masters' accounts generally, see tit. MASTERS, c. 7, p. 1123.

6. Interrogatories.

1891. Either party may apply to the court for an order against the other party to answer interrogatories as well in proceedings before the registrar and merchants as in other proceedings. The Killarney, No. 997, 26 Sept. 1862.

1892. On a reference to the registrar and merchants in a cause of damage by collision, certain of the plaintiffs had filed affidavits as to their private effects lost in the collision. Motion to the court by the defendants before the hearing on the reference to order those plaintiffs to answer interrogatories touching the matters referred to in their affidavits, granted. The Killarney, No. 997, 26 Sept. 1862.

1893. As to interrogatories generally, see c. 35, p. 1616.

8. Counter-Proofs.

1894. Within twelve days from the day when the claim and affidavits were filed by the solicitor for the claimant, the adverse solicitor shall file his counter-affidavits. Ord. LVI. r. 2, No. 839.

9. Further Proofs.

1895. From the filing of the counter-affidavits of the adverse solicitor six days only shall be allowed for filing any further affidavits by either solicitor, save by order of the court or a judge, or by permission of the registrar. Ibid. r. 3, No. 840.

10. Notice of Hearing.†

1896. Within three days from the expiration of the time allowed for filing the last affidavits, the solicitor for the claimant shall file in the registry a notice, with the stamps for the reference affixed thereto, praying to have the reference placed on the list for hearing. Ord. LVI. r. 4, No. 841.

1897. If he shall not do so, the adverse solicitor may apply to the court or a judge to have the claim dismissed with costs. Ibid.

1898. At the time appointed for the reference, if either solicitor be present,

* (594) When a contradictory set of accounts is intended to be set up by the defendant, as in cases of masters' accounts and accounts between part owners, the proper course is for the defendant's solicitor to file a counterclaim setting forth the items in the plaintiff's account to which the defendant objects, and any further payments or other counter-charges the defendant claims to be allowed. The issue is thus conveniently narrowed to the items in the counterclaim only, and those items only are discussed on the reference.

(595) When it is probable that a counterclaim will be set up, the plaintiff should, in the first instance, confine himself to filing his claim and vouchers, reserving his proofs until he is made aware by the filing of the counterclaim what items in his accounts are disputed.

(596) When the accounts are much involved it is desirable for the defendant, besides filing a counterclaim, to file, in illustration of his case, an account current showing the state of accounts he contends for.

† (597) The notice to place a reference on the list for hearing should set forth the proper style and title of the court and cause, and that the solicitor (stating his name) for the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, desires that the reference in that action may be placed on the list for hearing.

(597a) The notice should be dated and signed by the solicitor or his clerk for him. Forms of these notices may be obtained in the registry.

(598) A stamp of ten shillings must be impressed on the notice.

‡ (598a) In addition to the proofs filed, witnesses may be examined at the hearing on the reference, and subpoenas to enforce their attendance may be obtained from the registry in the usual way. As to subpoenas, see c. 35, p. 1630.

(599) Notice of the time appointed for the hearing of the reference is sent from the registry to the practitioners on both sides.

(600) The hearing fees are paid after the reference, and when the report is taken up.

(601) The parties interested, their clerks or managers, or the master of the vessel, or others engaged in superintending the repairs or other matters the subject of the claim, may attend the reference and make statements thereon, not on oath, to the registrar and merchants, though the other side generally requires them to be sworn as witnesses.

(602) It is generally advisable that one of such parties on each side should attend the reference, in order to answer inquiries of the registrar and merchants on technical matters.

the reference may be proceeded with. Ord. LVI. r. 5, No. 842.

1899. Witnesses may be produced before the registrar for examination, and the evidence shall, on the application of either solicitor, but at the expense in the first instance of the party on whose behalf the application is made, be taken down by a shorthand writer or reporter appointed by the court, who shall be sworn faithfully to report the evidence. Ibid. r. 6, No. 843.*

1900. A transcript of the shorthand writer's or reporter's notes, certified by him to be correct, shall be admitted to prove the oral evidence of the witnesses on an objection to the registrar's report. Ibid.

1901. Counsel may attend the hearing of any reference, but the expenses attending the employment of counsel shall not be allowed on taxation, unless the registrar shall be of opinion that the attendance of counsel was necessary. Ibid. r. 7, No. 844.

1902. As to the shorthand writers of the court, see Pt. I. c. 4, p. 1473; and c. 35, p. 1623.

1903. In an action for damage by collision in which the damage was pronounced for and a reference ordered to the registrar and merchants, the defendant's solicitor declined to attend the reference, on the ground that the damages were fixed when the bail was accepted. Held, that he ought to have attended the reference and urged his objection. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 16; 6 Notes of Cases, 62.

1904. The fees payable on proceedings before the registrar and merchants are, when the reference is to the registrar only, from five guineas to fifteen guineas (including examination of witnesses, if any), according to the nature and importance of the accounts and matters and the time occupied. If the attendance of one or more merchants is required, for each merchant the same fee as to the registrar. See R. S. C. Oct. 1884, Nos. 84, 85.

1905. In cases of great intricacy or of very large amount occupying more than two full days, larger fees may be taken not exceeding five guineas additional per day to the registrar and to each merchant for every subsequent day. Ibid. No. 86.

1906. In cases where the accounts to be investigated do not exceed £500, and where the time occupied is short, fees may be taken for the registrar and each merchant of from one guinea to four guineas. Ibid. No. 87.

12. Adjournment.†

1908. The registrar may adjourn the reference from time to time, as he may deem proper. Ord. LVI. r. 5, No. 842.

1909. The registrar will adjourn the further hearing on the reference for reasonable cause. The Kepler, 1 Lushington, 201.

1910. The court will generally condemn in costs the party who applied for the adjournment, and failed in the proofs to supply which the adjournment was allowed. Ibid.

13. Special Case.

1911. The registrar may, if he thinks in which the practitioners cannot be expected to be proficient.

(603) By the old practice the case of each party was conducted by his solicitor at the hearing on the reference, but the practice of employing counsel is increasing, and is in important cases favoured by the court.

(603a) An affidavit, of which no copy had been served on the other side, was tendered by the defendants at a late stage of the reference, and after the plaintiff's witnesses had been examined. No sufficient excuse for this irregularity being given, the affidavit was rejected. The Argos, No. 5958, July, 1872. R. & M.

* (604) In ordinary cases, however, the registrar will take notes of the evidence, and furnish an office copy of them to the parties should the report be objected to.

gistrar called for the production of the shipwright's books. The Bergo, Nov. 1884. R. & M.

† (605) If either party is taken by surprise by any objections of his opponent, of which, from the counter-proofs filed, or the absence thereof, or otherwise he had not received reasonable notice, the registrar will usually adjourn the reference to give that party the opportunity of further proof.

(605a) In an action of damage, the hearing of the reference on the plaintiff's claim, which had already extended over several days, was adjourned, in order that the defendants might send a commission abroad to obtain further evidence in support of an important objection raised by them during the hearing, although ample time had elapsed since the collision to enable them to be fully prepared to establish their objection. The Atalanta, No. 6056, Aug. 1875. proper, and before making his report, submit a special case for the decision of the court on any question of law. The Immacolato Concezione, 9 P. D. 37.

14. Report.*

1913. The report of the registrar and merchants need not be special upon every particular matter. Their allowing the item to stand is sufficient, the inference therefrom being, not that they have omitted to take it into consideration, but that they consider it a proper and allowable charge. The Ocean, 10 Jur. 506.

1914. The registrar may, if he think fit, report whether any and what part of the costs of the reference should be allowed, and to whom. Ord. LVI. r. 8, No. 845.

15. Filing of Report.

1915. The solicitor for the claimant shall, within six days from the time when he has received a notice from the registry that the report is ready, take up and file the same in the registry. Ibid. r. 9, No. 846.

1915a. If the solicitor for the claimant shall not take the steps prescribed in the last preceding rule, the adverse solicitor may take up and file the report, or may apply to the court or a judge to have the claim dismissed with costs. Ibid. r. 10, No. 847.

16. Costs and Damages.

1916. When a party is condemned in costs and damages the damages will be ordered to be assessed by the registrar. The Cathcart, L. R. 1 A. & E. 314; The Don Ricardo, 5 P. D. 121; 49 L. J. Adm. 28; The Hazard, 29 March, 1860.

1916a. For cases of condemnation in costs and damages, see tit. Costs, p. 369.

* (606) No stamp is now charged for the registrar's report. The usual stamps for an office copy are payable on an office copy of the report bespoken by each party when the report is taken up.

(607) By the old practice, prior to the Rules and Orders of 1859, now annulled, a formal order of the court was taken confirming the report; but by the new practice no express confirmation of the report is necessary, unless it is required to enforce it.

(608) Where the report of the registrar had been confirmed by the court, it could not be reopened except under very peculiar circum-

17. Costs.

1917. As costs are in the discretion of the court, the rule in the Admiralty Court as to costs of references, that where more than a fourth is struck off a claim, each party pays his own costs, and, where more than a third, the claimant pays the other party's costs, is wrong. The court must exercise its discretion according to the circumstances of each case (The Empress Eugenie, Lush. 140, overruled). The Friedeberg, 10 P. D. 112.†

1918. See also No. 1914, supra, and tit. Costs, c. 17, p. 358, and same title and chapter in Addenda.

18. Objections to Report.

1919. On objection to the report of the registrar and merchants, assessors were appointed to assist the registrar and merchants in the re-consideration of their report, the judge himself being also present in the registry. The Sir George Seymour, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 67; 17 Jur. 402.

1920. On objection to a report on a question of consequential damage the judge was assisted by Trinity Masters. The Pensher, Swabey, 213.

1920a. In actions of bottomry the court will not interfere with the discretion of the registrar and merchants in disallowing or reducing the accounts where they deem them unnecessary or exorbitant, unless it is shown they have acted on an erroneous principle. The Pontida, 9 P. D. 102, 177, C. A.; 5 Asp. 330.

1921. On objections to the report, the court will not allow the party to set up a case which he did not endeavour to establish at the reference. The Glenmanna, 1 Lushington, 115.

1922. On objection to the report of the registrar and merchants no objection can be made before the court to an item which was not questioned before them. The Princess Helena, 30 L. J. Adm. 137; 1 Lushington, 190.

(609) And it has been held that a report after confirmation was binding upon the court. The Gauntlet, 13 Jur. 414.

† (610) The court, however, though exercising its discretion in each case, is still influenced by similar considerations.

1923. The court strongly disapproves of objections to the registrar's report on small items (such as an item of £1 : 10s.) even along with larger items. Ibid. No. 68, Jan. 18, 1861.

1924. On objection to such minor items as £9 : 12s. in cases of damage, the court will not enter into the minutiae of the objections, nor of the reasons by which the judgment of the registrar and merchants was influenced. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 533.

1925. See also No. 1914, supra.

(b) Notice of Objection.

1926. A solicitor intending to object to the registrar's report shall, within six days from the filing of the report, file in the registry a notice, a copy of which shall have been previously served on the adverse solicitor. Ord. LVI. r. 11, No. 848.

1927. A report of the registrar and merchants does not necessarily stand confirmed by reason of the defendants failing to take objection thereto within the time provided for in Admiralty Court Rules, 1859, r. 117, so as to absolutely entitle the plaintiffs to payment to them by the defendants of a sum of money which the court is of opinion ought not to have been allowed them in the report. The Thyatira, 5 Asp. 178.

1928. The court has power to extend the time within which objection to the report of the registrar and merchants may be taken. Ibid.

(c) *Petition in Objection.

1929. The solicitor objecting to the registrar's report shall, within twelve days from his filing in the registry the notice of objection to the report, file his petition in objection to the report. Ord. LVI. r. 11, No. 848.

1930. In proceedings by a defendant in objection to the registrar's report, the prayer with which the petition concludes should not be to deduct from the sum awarded in the report the amount of the items objected to, but to reject such items. The Edmund, 15 March, 1860.

(d) Pleadings and Proofs.

1931. All the rules respecting the pleadings and proofs in an action and the printing thereof, shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the pleadings, proofs, and printing in an objection to a report of the registrar. Ord. LVI. r. 12, No. 849.

1932. A transcript of the shorthand writer's or reporter's notes of the evidence of witnesses produced before the registrar, certified by him to be correct, shall be admitted to prove the oral evidence of the witnesses on an objection to the registrar's report. Ibid. r. 6, No. 843.

1933. Fresh evidence will not be allowed unless the party seeking to introduce it can satisfy the court that by proper diligence and by proper application it could not have been produced in the court below. The Thuringia, 41 L. J. Adm. 20; 1 Asp. N.S. 166; 20 L. T. N.S. 446.

1934. The Rules and Orders of Nov. 1859 (now annulled, see App. O. to Rules of 1883, No. 22, but substantially re-issued in Ord. LVI. of 1883), have no effect on the restraining power of the judge, nor did they fetter his discretion as to the admissibility of fresh evidence upon an objection to a report of the registrar and merchants. The Flying Fish, 3 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 85; Br. & Lush. 436; 34 L. J. Adm. P. C. 113; 2 Asp. 121; 12 L. T. N.S. 619.

(612) The court, in a case occurring prior to the Rules and Orders of Nov. 1859 (now repealed), consented to hear objections to the report of the registrar and merchants on motion, the amount being small. The Zodiac, 1 Hagg. 323.

(614) Although even then it was not permitted to parties to withhold evidence at the reference, and make a new case before the court on objection to the report. The Glenmanna, 1 Lush. 122.

(615) In a cause of wages, on objection by the master to the registrar's report, the court allowed the master at the risk of costs to examine a witness orally in open court in support of his objections. The Julindur, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 73.

1935. Upon objections to the registrar's report, the discretion possessed by the judge as to the admissibility of further evidence must always be exercised with great caution, and with a careful regard to the peculiar circumstances of each case. Ibid.; The Thuringia, supra.

1936. A motion to admit additional evidence on objection to the report of the registrar and merchants, by reason of surprise, should be founded upon affidavits setting forth the names of the proposed witnesses and the nature of their testimony. The Thuringia, supra.

(f) *Burthen of Proof.

1937. The court will not interfere with the report of the registrar and merchants unless it is fully convinced that they are in error. The Clyde, Swabey, 23.

1938. The court has not the benefit of the oral communications which take place at the reference between the registrar and merchants, and the parties concerned who are there present,—explanations which may be of great utility to ascertain the truth. It inclines, therefore, to support the report. The Sir George Seymour, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 70; The Clyde, Swabey, 25.

1939. The court is extremely unwilling to disturb the reports of the registrar and merchants, made in cases of damage, on the amount of loss incurred, and of the compensation due; because, from their experience in such matters, they are fully competent to arrive at a just and proper conclusion, and most able to judge of the value of the property lost. The Matchless, 10 Jur. 1017; The Sir George Seymour, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 67, 70.

1940. In considering objections to the report in a cause of damage, the court is inclined to confirm the report, especially in matters within the practical knowledge of the merchants. The Alfred, 7 Notes of Cases, 354; 3 W. Rob. 235; 14 Jur. 155; The Clyde, Swabey, 25.

1941. But it is the duty of the court to form its own opinion on the evidence as to whether the items objected to have or have not been properly disallowed, and when satisfied with the evidence adduced in support of the objections to direct the report to be reformed. Ibid.

1942. It is an established principle of the Admiralty Court that those who take objections to the report of the registrar and merchants are bound to prove their objections by clear and satisfactory evidence. The onus of proof rests with the objectors. The Edmond, 1 Lush. 63; 2 L. T. N.S. 194; 29 L. J. Adm. 77; The Clarence, 3 W. Rob. 286; The Gazelle, 2 ibid. 285; 8 Jur. 429; 3 Notes of Cases, 75; 2 W. Rob. 285.

1943. The court will not overrule the report without being perfectly satisfied that upon the evidence, which it is their duty to take into consideration, the report ought not to be maintained. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 443; The Clyde, ibid. 23.

1944. In all ordinary questions, especially those of a mercantile nature, and connected with the customs of merchants, the presumption is strong in favour of the report of the registrar and merchants. The Princess Helena, 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 137; Lush. 191.

1945. On questions of commission and the like great trust is reposed by the court in the judgment of the registrar and merchants, who have greater practical knowledge than the court on these subjects. To induce the court to support objections to their report, the affirmative of proving that the report is wrong must be clearly substantiated by the objectors. The Glenmanna, 1 Lush. 123.

(g) Second Reference.

1946. The report of the registrar and merchants was objected to on the ground of the insufficiency of evidence produced to them as to the value of the property, and a second reference prayed for the purpose of offering further evidence. A second reference allowed on payment of the costs both of the first reference and

* (616) The commissioner's report of damages, when parties have been fully heard before him with their proofs, and no question of law is involved in his decision, will be adopted by the court, unless palpable errors or inadvertencies have been committed by him. The Narragansett, Olcott, Adm. 246. [AMERICAN.]

of the application for the second. The Matchless, 10 Jur. 1017.

1947. On objection to the report of the registrar and merchants, assessors were appointed to assist the registrar and merchants in the re-consideration of their report, the judge himself being also present in the registry. The Sir George Seymour, 17 Jur. 402.

1948. After certain objections to the registrar's report had been made and considered, and the report referred back to the registrar for amendment, objections to the amended report made and considered, and some items allowed and some disallowed, and no order made as to costs. The City of Buenos Ayres, 25 L. T. 672.

(h) Costs.

1949. As to costs of objections to report of registrar and merchants, see tit. COSTS, c. 18, p. 362.

19. Measure of Damages.

1950. As to the measure of damages and their awards thereon, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS.

20. Awards of Registrar and Merchants.

1951. As to the awards of the registrar and merchants on investigation of accounts in actions of bottomry, limitation of liability, master's accounts, mortgage, necessaries, repairs and supplies, possession, accounts between part owners, and wages, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS.

1952. As to the measure of damages awarded by the registrar and merchants in actions of damage by collision, damage to cargo, and in actions of salvage where the salving vessel has sustained damage in rendering the service, Ibid.

1953. As to the measure of costs and damages, Ibid.

21. Official or Special Referees.

1954. As to the appointment of official referees, their duties and remuneration, see the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), ss. 83, 85.

1955. For provisions as to references to an official or special referee, the enforcement of his report, the trial and procedure before him, and his authority in reference thereto, Ibid. ss. 56—59.

22. District Registrars.

1956. As to the reference of accounts and inquiries, to district registrars, Ibid. s. 66.

1957. As to the fees payable on references to district registrars, see R. S. C., Oct. 1884, Nos. 84—87.

1958. Where in a co-ownership action in a district registry an account is claimed under Ord. III. r. 8, and the registrar directs and takes such account under Ord. XV. r. 1, his report is like the ordinary report in an Admiralty action, and should be objected to within the six days prescribed by Ord. LVI. r. 11. Gowan v. Sprott, 5 Asp. 288.

1959. After the registrar has taken the account and made his report it is too late to object to the original order directing the account. Ibid.

1960. As to district registrars generally, see Pt. I. p. 1471; and as to proceedings generally in district registries, see Pt. II. p. 1566.

41. Official Referees.*

1961. As to the distribution of business among official referees, see Ord. XXXVI. rr. 45, 47, Nos. 469, 471.

1961a. As to their sittings, see Ord. LXIII. r. 16, No. 960.

1962. As to powers of official referees to order discovery and production of documents, see Ord. XXXVI. rr. 50, 51, Nos. 474, 475.

1963. As to trial generally by official referees, see ibid. rr. 48—50, Nos. 472—474; and Ord. XL. r. 6, No. 564.

1964. As to the power of an official referee before the conclusion of any trial before him, or by his report to submit any questions for the decision of the court, or state facts specially, see Ord. XXXVI. r. 52, No. 476.

1965. As to referee's report, see ibid. rr. 53—55, Nos. 477—479.

1966. As to the fees of official referees, see Order of 24th April, 1877, in Wilson's Jud. Acts and Rules, 4th ed. p. 786.

* (617) In the Admiralty Division the duties of official referees are discharged by the registrar and merchants of the court. See tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS; and as to their practice, c. 40, p. 1648.

(617a) As to official referees, their appointment, powers, procedure, &c., see Wilson's Judicature Acts and Rules (4th ed.), pp. 63—65.

42. Arbitrations.

1. Generally.*

1967. For the principles and rules of procedure in cases of arbitration, both compulsory and by consent, see 9 Will. 3, c. 15; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (c. 125), ss. 3—17; Archbold's Practice of the Court of Queen's Bench (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 2, p. 1585; Wilson's Judicature Acts and Rules (4th ed.), pp. 340—345; and the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (c. 125), therein referred to.

1968. All submissions to arbitration made orders of court shall be transmitted to and left at the Central Office to be there filed and preserved. Ord. LXI. r. 31, No. 924.

1969. No order to make a submission to arbitration, or an award an order of the court, shall be passed until the original submission to arbitration or award shall have been filed in the Central Office; or where the proceedings are taken in a district registry, in the district registry, and a note thereof made on the judgment or order by the proper officer. Ibid. r. 15, No. 908.

1970. The court has no power under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (c. 125), nor under the Rules of 1883, to enforce the attendance, before an arbitrator not being an official referee, of witnesses residing in Scotland or Ireland. Hall v. Brand, 16 November, 1883.

1971. For provisions in compulsory references to arbitration, that any party to the reference may appeal from the award upon any question of law, and that the appeal shall be to a divisional court, see Ord. LIX. r. 3, No. 886.

1972. An application to set aside an award may be made at any time before the last day of the sittings next after such award has been made and published to the parties. Ord. LXIV. r. 14, No. 974.

1973. Nothing in this order (as to trials and arbitrations) shall affect any proceedings under any of the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Acts relating to arbitration. Ord. XXXVI. r. 10, No. 434.

1974. As to the powers of the Court of Admiralty prior to the Judicature Acts in relation to arbitrations, see the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 23.

1976. For forms of order of reference to arbitration, see R. S. C. 1883, App. K. No. 24.

1977. For forms of orders of reference to arbitration under ss. 56 and 57 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), Ibid. Nos. 32 and 33.

1978. For forms of orders for witnesses to attend and be examined, and produce documents before arbitrator, Ibid. Nos. 25 and 26.

43. Writs of Execution.

1979. In these rules the term "writ of execution" shall include writs of feri

* (618) No case of a submission to arbitration made a rule of court in an action in the Admiralty Division has as yet arisen, but it is apprehended the submission should be filed in the Central Office and not in the Admiralty Registry.

both compulsory and by consent, see Chitty's Forms of Proceedings in the Queen's Bench Division (12th ed.), pp. 827—861.

§ (621) As to the old practice of the Court of Admiralty in regard to monitions, see The Governor Raffles, 2 Dodson, 17; The Lusitano, 1 W. Rob. 166; The Wilhelmine, 2 Notes of Cases, 218; The Eliza, No. 1605, 16th Feb. 1864; The Wilhelmine, 2 Notes of Cases, 218; The Johannes Christoph, 2 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 93.

(622) And in a case of misnomer, see The Perseverance, 2 Browne's Civ. & Adm. Law App. 542.

(623) A monition to pay money would be decreed to issue at the same time against the party principal and his bail.

(624) As to the procedure and writs of facias, capias, elegit, sequestration, and attachment, and all subsequent writs that may issue for giving effect thereto. And the term "issuing execution against any party" shall mean the issuing of any such process against his person or property as under the preceding rules of this order shall be applicable to the case. Ord. XLIII. r. 8, No. 586.

1980. Every order of the court or a judge in any cause or matter may be enforced against all persons bound thereby in the same manner as a judgment to the same effect. Ibid. r. 24, No. 602.

1981. Nothing in this order shall take away or curtail any right heretofore existing to enforce or give effect to any judgment or order in any manner or against any person or property whatsoever. Ibid. r. 28, No. 606.

1982. Nothing in this order shall affect the order in which writs of execution may be issued. Ibid. r. 29, No. 607.

1983. No subpoena for the payment of costs shall be issued. Ord. XLIII. r. 7, No. 619.

2. Order of Execution on Conditional Order taking Effect.

1984. Where a judgment or order is to the effect that any party is entitled to any relief subject to or upon the fulfilment of any condition or contingency, the party so entitled may, upon the fulfilment of the condition or contingency, and demand made upon the party against whom he is entitled to relief, apply to the court or a judge for leave to issue execution against such party. And the court or judge, if satisfied that the right to relief has arisen according to the terms of the judgment or order, may order that execution issue accordingly, or may direct that any issue or question necessary for the determination of the rights of the parties be tried in any of the ways in which questions arising in an action may be tried. Ord. XLIII. r. 9, No. 587.

3. For or against Third Parties.

1985. Any person not being a party to a cause or matter, who obtains any order, or in whose favour any order is made, shall be entitled to enforce obedience to such order by the same process as if he were a party to such cause or matter; and any person not being a party to a cause or matter, against whom obedience to any judgment or order may be enforced, shall be liable to the same process for enforcing obedience to such judgment or order as if he were a party to such cause or matter. Ibid. r. 26, No. 604.

4. Against Corporations.

1986. Any judgment or order against a corporation wilfully disobeyed may, by leave of the court or a judge, be enforced by sequestration against the corporate property, or by attachment against the directors or other officers thereof, or by writ of sequestration against their property. Ibid. r. 31, No. 609.

5. Against a Firm.

1987. Where a judgment or order is against a firm, execution may issue:— (a) Against any property of the partnership; (b) against any person who has appeared in his own name under Ord. XII. r. 15, or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be, a partner; (c) against any person who has been served, as a partner, with the writ of summons, and has failed to appear. If the party who has obtained judgment or an order claims to be entitled to issue execution against any other person as being a member of the firm, he may apply to the court or a judge for leave so to do; and the court or judge may give such leave if the liability be not disputed, or if such liability be disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue or question in an action may be tried and determined. Ibid. r. 10, No. 588.

6. Liability of Ship.

(a) For Orders against Owner or Master.

1988. For provisions in cases where any court, justice, or other magistrate, has power to order payment of any seaman's wages, penalties, or other sums of money, then, if the party so directed to pay is the master or owner of a ship, the attachment for enforcing decrees in the American Admiralty Courts, see 2 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) p. 430; Dunlap's Ibid. 135—140, 258.

(624a) As to writs of execution in the Queen's Bench Division, see Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vols. 1 and 2, pp. 836—927; and Chitty's Forms (12th ed.), pp. 389—460.

functionary who made the order may, in addition to other powers for compelling payment, direct the amount unpaid to be levied by distress or pouncing and sale of the ship, her tackle, furniture, and apparel, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 523.

7. When Issuable.

1989. Every person to whom any sum of money or costs shall be payable under a judgment or order shall, so soon as the amount is payable, be entitled to sue out one or more writs of fiery facias or of elegit to enforce payment thereof, but if the judgment or order is for payment within a period therein mentioned, no such writ shall be issued until after the expiration of such period. Ord. XLII. r. 17, No. 595.

1990. A party who has obtained judgment or an order, not being a judgment for payment of money or costs, or for the recovery of land, may issue execution in fourteen days, unless the court or a judge shall order execution to issue at an earlier or later date with or without terms. Ibid. r. 19, No. 597.

1991. As between the original parties to a judgment or order, execution may issue at any time within six years from the recovery of the judgment or the date of the order. Ibid. r. 22, No. 600.

8. Applications for Leave to issue.

(a) *In Special Cases.

1992. For provisions that:—(a) where six years have elapsed since the judgment or order, or a change has taken place by death or otherwise in the parties entitled or liable to execution; (b) where a husband is entitled or liable to execution for or against a wife; (c) where a party is entitled to execution on a judgment of assets in futuro; (d) where a party is entitled to execution against any of the shareholders of a joint stock company upon a judgment recorded against the company, or their representative, the court or a judge may be applied to for leave to issue execution. Ibid. r. 23, No. 601.

9. Separate Writs.

(a) For Money and Costs.

1993. Upon any judgment or order for the recovery or payment of a sum of money and costs, there may be, at the election of the party entitled thereto, either one writ or separate writs of execution for the recovery of the sum and for the recovery of the costs, but a second writ shall only be for costs, and shall be issued not less than eight days after the first writ. Ibid. r. 18, No. 596.

10. Stay of—.

1994. The court or a judge may, at or after judgment or order for payment of money or costs, stay execution until such time as they or he shall think fit. Ibid. r. 17, No. 595.

1995. Owners of cargo on board the M. recovered judgment against the A. for damage by collision. The M. then instituted a suit against the A. in respect of the same collision. The owners of the A. applied for a stay of execution in the first action until after judgment in the second, on the ground that otherwise it would be necessary for them to commence a suit for limitation of liability, which, in the event of their succeeding in the second, would be unnecessary. Application refused. The Alne Holme (1st action), 4 Asp. 593.

1996. For provisions abolishing proceedings by auditū querelā, and that any party against whom judgment has been given may apply to the court or a judge for a stay of execution or other relief against the judgment, on the ground of facts having arisen too late to be pleaded, see Ord. XLII. r. 27, No. 605.

11. Forms.

1997. The forms of the various writs of execution in Appendix H. are to be used, with such variations as circumstances may require. Ibid. r. 14, No. 592.

12. Date and Teste.

1998. Every writ of summons and also (unless by any statute or by these rules it is otherwise provided), every other writ shall bear date on the day on which the same shall be issued, and shall be tested in the name of the Lord Chancellor, or if the office of Lord Chancellor shall be vacant, in the name of the Lord Chief Justice of England. Ord. II. r. 8, No. 10.

13. Endorsement.

1999. Every writ of execution shall be

parties, see Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 2, p. 955.

indorsed with the name and place of abode or office of business of the solicitor actually suing out the same, and when the solicitor actually suing out the writ shall sue out the same as agent for another solicitor, the name and place of abode of such other solicitor shall also be indorsed upon the writ; and in case no solicitor shall be employed to issue the writ, then it shall be endorsed with a memorandum expressing that the same has been sued out by the plaintiff or defendant in person, as the case may be, mentioning the city, town, or parish, and also the name of the hamlet, street, and number of the house of such plaintiff's or defendant's residence, if any such there be. Ord. XLIII. r. 13, No. 591.

14. Taking out.

2000. No writ of execution shall be issued without the production to the officer by whom the same should be issued of the judgment or order upon which the writ of execution is to issue, or an office copy thereof, showing the date of entry. And the officer shall be satisfied that the proper time has elapsed to entitle the creditor to execution. Ibid. r. 11, No. 589.

(b) Notice or Præcipe.

2001. No writ of execution shall be issued without the party issuing it, or his solicitor, filing a præcipe for that purpose. The præcipe shall contain the title of the action, the reference to the record, the date of the judgment, and of the order, if any, directing the execution to be issued, the names of the parties against whom, or of the firm against whose goods, the execution is to be issued; and shall be signed by or on behalf of the solicitor of the party issuing it, or by the party issuing it, if he do so in person. The forms in Appendix G. shall be used, with such variations as circumstances may require. Ibid. r. 12, No. 590.

15. Levy.

2002. Every writ of execution for the recovery of money shall be indorsed with a direction to the sheriff, or other officer or person to whom the writ is directed, to levy the money really due and payable and sought to be recovered under the judgment or order, stating the amount, and also to levy interest thereon, if sought to be recovered, at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum from the time when the judgment or order was entered or made, provided that in cases where there is an agreement between the parties that more than £4 per cent. interest shall be secured by the judgment or order, then the indorsement may be accordingly to levy the amount of interest so agreed. Ibid. r. 16, No. 594.

(b) Interest.

See previous No.

(c) Poundage Fees and Expenses.

2003. In every case of execution the party entitled to execution may levy the poundage fees, and expenses of execution, over and above the sum recovered. Ibid. r. 15, No. 593.

16. How long in Force.

2004. A writ of execution, if unexecuted, remains in force for one year only from its issue, unless renewed. Ibid. r. 20, No. 598.

17. Renewal.

2005. A writ of execution may, at any time before its expiration, by leave of the court or a judge, be renewed by the party issuing it for one year from the date of such renewal, and so on from time to time during the continuance of the renewed writ, either by being marked with a seal of the court bearing the date of the day, month and year of such renewal, or by such party giving a written notice of renewal to the sheriff, signed by the party or his solicitor, and bearing the like seal of the court; and a writ of execution so renewed shall have effect, and be entitled to priority, according to the time of the original delivery thereof. Ibid.

2006. The production of the writ, or of the notice renewing it, duly sealed as renewed, is sufficient evidence of its having been so renewed. Ibid. r. 21, No. 599.

* (626) In actions in the Admiralty Division writs of attachment and feri facias are issued from and filed in the Admiralty Registry and not the Central Office.

18. *Notice to Sheriff to return.

2007. No order shall issue for the return of any writ, or to bring in the body of a person ordered to be attached or committed; but a notice from the person issuing the writ or obtaining the order for attachment or committal (if not represented by a solicitor), or by his solicitor, calling upon the sheriff to return such writ or to bring in the body within a given time, if not complied with, shall entitle such person to apply for an order for the committal of such sheriff. Ord. LII. r. 11, No. 706.

2008. When any sheriff shall, before going out of office, arrest any defendant, and render return of cepi corpus, he may be called upon by a notice, as provided by the last preceding rule, to bring in the body within the time allowed by law, although he may be out of office before such notice is given. Ibid. r. 12, No. 707.

2009. For provisions that on a judgment or order for payment of money, the party entitled to enforce it may apply for an order that the debtor liable under it, or in the case of a corporation any officer thereof, may be examined, as to debts owing to him, and other property, and for the production of books or documents, see Ord. XLII. r. 32, No. 610.

2010. In case of any judgment or order other than for the recovery or payment of money, if any difficulty shall arise in or about the execution or enforcement thereof, any party interested may apply to the court or a judge, and the court or judge may make such order thereon for the attendance and examination of any party or otherwise as may be just. Ibid. r. 33, No. 611.

2010a. As to the costs of applications, see the above two rules, ibid. r. 34, No. 612.

20. Enforcing Obedience to Acts ordered to be done.

2011. For provisions that if a mandamus, mandatory order, injunction, or judgment for the specific performance of any contract be not complied with, the court or a judge, besides or instead of proceedings against the disobedient party for contempt, may direct that the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the party by whom the judgment or order has been obtained, or some other person appointed by the court or judge, at the cost of the disobedient party, and for execution for the expenses so incurred and costs. Ibid. r. 30, No. 608.

21. In Actions of Possession.

2012. For form of writ of possession in an Admiralty action, see R. S. C. 1883, App. H. No. 9.

22. On finding of Issues.

See c. 38, p. 1639.

23. Fieri Facias.

2013. Writs of feri facias and of elegit shall have the same force and effect as the like writs have heretofore had, and shall be executed in the same manner in which the like writs have heretofore been executed. Ord. XLIII. r. 1, No. 613.

2014. Writs of venditioni exponas, distringas nuper vice comitem, and all other writs in aid of a writ of feri facias or of elegit, may be issued and executed in the same cases and in the same manner as heretofore. Ibid. r. 5, No. 617. See further as to writs of venditioni exponas, Ibid. r. 2, No. 614.

2016. A defendant in an execution, being a registered proprietor of shares in a ship, a fi. fa. was delivered to the sheriff; and the solicitor for the creditor, by the direction of the sheriff, procured the certificate of registry from the ship, and delivered it to the sheriff, who retained it. The sheriff was registered at the Custom House, under the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), as the owner of the shares, which were afterwards sold by him and transferred to the purchaser by a bill sion, no case of enforcing payment has as yet occurred there beyond in one or two cases the taking out of a writ of execution, which, however, has never been executed. and a further fee of £1 for its execution by the marshal. Forms may be obtained at Room No. 420. The attachment is prepared in the registry, and may be obtained at a day's notice, or earlier if required.

(633) The attachment, when obtained, must be filed at the marshal's office, with a præcipe for its service which bears no stamp. If the service is to be effected at a greater distance than five miles from the offices of the marshal or his substitute, he may charge for travelling, and other expenses incurred.

‡ (634) When the infringement of the court's authority is by official persons, acting under some semblance of law, the court will make an order against them to show cause why an attachment should not issue, but when the infringement is of a more flagrant character an attachment will be directed to issue in the first instance.

owner of a collier, who, having appealed from a salvage award, which was affirmed with costs, had not obeyed an order against him for their payment. The John Dunn, 3 Hagg. 168.

2030. Attachment against bail directed not to issue for a month. The Vreede, 1 Dodson, 8.

2031. The judge of the Court of Admiralty might order the discharge of any person in custody for contempt of court, for any cause other than for non-payment of money, on such conditions as to the judge should seem just: but the order for such discharge did not purge the original contempt. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 21.

2032. Attachment under which a party had been confined five years, decreed to be superseded. The Harregaard, 1 Hagg. 23, n.

2034. An attachment for non-payment of money can only be superseded by reason of irregularity in its execution. A contempt of this nature is excepted from the operation of s. 21 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. Ibid.

2035. A party had been taken in Scotland upon a warrant of attachment from the Court of Admiralty, backed by the Lord Ordinary there, who afterwards revoked his original concurrence, as having been granted per incuriam, and directed the immediate liberation of the party. The court directed the attachment to be superseded, nor would it enforce a fresh attachment against the party compulsorily, and it might be illegally brought within the jurisdiction. The Mathesis, 2 W. Rob. 296; 3 Notes of Cases, 133; 8 Jur. 582.

2037. On appeal from a decree of a Vice-Admiralty Court, condemning a vessel as engaged in the slave trade, the appeal was dismissed with costs, and an attachment for non-payment of costs pursuant to monition was decreed, under which the appellant was arrested. The respondents in the appeal were the Crown and the captor, and it was subsequently directed that the costs of the Crown be paid out of the proceeds in the registry,

* (635) Under the old practice an opinion obtained that the court would attach the defendant only in the first instance, and upon his failing to pay, and not before, would

and a moiety of the nett proceeds to the captor. The Queen's proctor, on behalf of the Crown, afterwards consented to the attachment against the appellant being superseded. Motion accordingly on behalf of the appellant, though opposed by the captor as having a vested interest in the proceeds, granted, and the attachment directed to be superseded. The Augusta, 4 Moore, P. C. C. 369.

XLV. rr. 1—9, Nos. 622—630.

27. Sequestration.‡

2041. Where any person is by any judgment or order directed to pay money into court or to do any other act in a limited time, and after due service thereof refuses or neglects to obey, the person prosecuting such judgment or order shall, at the expiration of the time limited, be entitled, without any order for that purpose, to issue a writ of sequestration against the estate and effects of such disobedient person. Such writ of sequestration shall have the same effect as a writ of sequestration in Chancery had before the commencement of the principal Act, and the proceeds thereof may be dealt with in the same manner. See Ord. XLIII. r. 6, No. 618.

p. 919; and Chitty's Forms (12th ed.), p. 478.

2050. As to the law and practice in regard to interpleaders, see 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, ss. 12—18; the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 16; Ord. LVII. rr. 1—15, Nos. 850—864; Wilson's Judicature Acts and Rules (4th ed.), pp. 481—485; and in the Queen's Bench Division, Archbold's Practice (14th ed. by Chitty), vol. 2, p. 1354.

2052. Semble, in proceedings in rem arising out of conflicting claims to goods under separate parts of a bill of lading, the Court of Admiralty has the power, if applied to, to relieve the vessel by interpleader from resisting at the same time the two conflicting demands. The Argentina, 2 Asp. 529.

44. Appraisement and Sale.

2053. In all cases of bottomry, salvage, and wages, the Court of Admiralty possesses an undoubted power to decree a sale of the vessel proceeded against, unless the demand of the successful suitor is satisfied. The jurisdiction of the court therein is confirmed by the municipal law of this country, and by the general principles of the maritime law; and the title conferred by the court in the exercise of this authority is a valid title against the whole world, and is so recognized by the courts of this and of all other countries. The Tremont, 1 W. Rob. 164.

2056. If a party purchases a ship at a sale directed under a decree of the Court of Admiralty, he will not be held to his purchase if it appears that he was misled by the advertisements or conditions of sale to buy a vessel unsuited for his purposes; but if on investigation of all the facts, the court should be satisfied that he had full information from another reliable quarter prior to the confirmation of the sale, it will hold him bound to complete his purchase. The Luna, 8 Jur. N.S. 400. [IRISH.]

* (639) The general principles recognized in the application of interpleader are (1) that the person applying that others may be required to interplead be already defendant in an action at the suit of one of them; (2) that the claims of both claimants be in respect of the very same matter (see Staney v. Sidney, 14 M. & W. 800); (3) that the party applying claim no interest in the subject-matter (see Braddick v. Smith, 9 Bing. 84); (4) that the applicant be not colluding with either party (see Belcher v. Smith, Ibid. 82); (5) that the applicant be in possession of the matter in dispute, and thus able to obey such order as may be made in regard to it (see Ireland v. Bushell, 5 Dowl. 147); and (6) that the same question be raisable upon the interpleader issue as was in dispute between the original parties (see Baker v. The Bank of Australasia, 1 C. B. N.S. 515). See Charley's Practice and Pleading under the Judicature Acts (3rd ed.), p. 354.

† (640) Ordinarily to proceedings in rem in Admiralty all the world are parties, and a sale of a vessel in such proceedings conveys a perfect title to the purchaser. But if the owner fraudulently and collusively procure his vessel to be sold under the forms of law, and himself become the purchaser for the purpose of cutting off just claims against her, such sale is void as against creditors. Thompson v. Steamboat J. D. Morton, 8 Ohio, N.S. 222. [AMERICAN.]

(641) When the proceeds of sales are brought into court in a proceeding in rem they are not liable to make good a loss of the purchaser sustained by a defect found in the article sold, the sale by the marshal carrying with it no warranty to that effect. The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. 648. [AMERICAN.]

2. Commission of—

(a) Generally.*

(b) Execution of—†

2064. In Admiralty actions every commission for the appraisalment or sale of

* (643) A commission of appraisalment usually accompanies a commission of sale, in order to guard against the property being sold at an improper price.

(643a) Where an order for a commission of appraisalment and sale has been made the solicitor who has obtained the order files in the registry a præcipe bearing a 15s. impressed stamp. (For form of præcipe, see R./S. C. 1883, App. G. No. 9.) He at the same time leaves a blank form of commission impressed with a £1 impressed stamp thereon, and another £1 impressed stamp for the marshal's fee for its execution. The forms can be obtained ready stamped at Room No. 420.

(644) In the commission of appraisalment and sale is embodied, where required, a commission of unlivery or removal, or both.

(645) The commission of appraisalment and sale is prepared in the registry (for form, see App. H. No. 16), and may be obtained after about a day's notice, or earlier if required. The solicitor obtaining it must then lodge it at the marshal's office with a præcipe for its service (which bears no stamp). The other fees and expenses are paid subsequently, and by the paymaster of the Supreme Court, on a judge's order obtained by the marshal.

† (646) The marshal appoints the time and place of sale, and the broker who is to sell the property.

(647) The marshal, by his broker, then causes to be prepared and inserted in the public newspapers the necessary advertisements of the property to be sold, and the time and place of sale.

(648) The marshal, by his broker, also causes handbills or notices of sale to be printed and posted up, or otherwise circulated in such places as he may think advisable.

(649) The marshal, by his broker, also causes to be prepared and printed and circulated the usual catalogues of sale, with conditions of sale annexed.

(650) The following are the usual conditions of sale of a ship:—

1. The buyer is to take the said vessel, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, with all faults, in the condition they now lie, without any allowance or abatement for weights, lengths, qualities, quantities, errors of description, or any defects or injuries whatsoever, and neither the age, tonnage nor description of the vessel or stores, as expressed in the inventories, are warranted.

2. The buyer is immediately to pay into the hands of R. G. M. Browne, Esquire, marshal of the said court, one-fourth part of the purchase-money (and two guineas to the auctioneer, to bind the bargain), and the remainder thereof within fourteen days unto the said marshal, and upon payment thereof he will be put into possession of the said vessel, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, as aforementioned. But in case of non-payment of the remainder of the purchase-money within such time before mentioned, the deposit aforesaid of one-fourth part shall and is hereby declared to be forfeited, and the said vessel, her tackle, apparel and furniture may again be exposed to and sold at public or private sale, and the deficiency, if any, by such re-sale shall be made good by the defaulter at this sale, together with the expenses attending such re-sale; and neither the right honourable the judge, nor the marshal, nor any other officer of the said court, nor the auctioneer, shall be sued, either at law or in equity, for the said money paid in part, and forfeited as aforesaid; but the buyer so neglecting shall be liable for all loss, costs and damages which may arise thereby.

3. The buyer (if he requires it) may have the marshal's bill of sale for the said vessel.

4. The vessel will be at the risk of the buyer immediately after he receives an order for the delivery thereof.

Lastly. The said marshal is to be the judge who is the lawful buyer of the said vessel. Not less than £5 is to be advanced at each bidding.

(650a) The following are the usual conditions of sale of cargo:—
The highest bidder (in due time) to be deemed the purchaser, and in case of any dispute the lot to be put up again.

property under the order of the court shall, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order, be executed by the marshal or his substitutes. Ord. XLI. r. 14, No. 693.

2065. It is the duty of the marshal to make the inventory in person and not by deputy. The Queen (No. 1), 3 Asp. 189. [IRISH.]

2066. The marshal, or any other person

The buyers to declare their names and residences, and deposit ten per cent. on the computed value of each lot if required; the remainder of or all the purchase-money, with 1s. per lot for lot money, payable to the brokers at the time an order for delivery is given.

The goods to be paid for to the brokers on or before the prompt of fourteen days, either in money, deducting six months' discount at the rate of five per cent. per annum (or the Bank of England rate on the day of sale if above five per cent. per annum), or by such acceptances as the sellers may approve of, due at or within six months from the day of sale.

The goods to be received as and where they lie, at the buyers' expense, with all faults and defects, and without any allowance for error in description; the timber and logs according to the razed contents, and other goods as they may rise from the piles; the dimensions when given being according to the dock returns, and the quality when given according to the shippers' assortment or designation, unless otherwise specially described. Any rent incurred after four weeks to be paid by the buyers of the respective lots.

When the sale shall extend over more than one day, the prompt will be reckoned, the bills drawn and the rent allowed from the second day, with the exception of mahogany and cabinet woods, for which the invoices and delivery orders will date from the day of sale.

Fourteen days from the date of the issue of the delivery order will be allowed for rent and cash payment on any lot that may not be ready for delivery on or within the prompt.

In default of compliance with the above conditions the deposit money, if any received, to be forfeited to the owners of the goods, and the purchasers liable to them for all loss and charges attendant upon a resale, either by private contract or public auction.

All goods sold at this sale to be at the risk of the sellers in respect of fire, provided such goods have not been removed from the docks for thirty days from the date of the second day's sale. In the event of non-delivery by loss from fire, the contract for such portion to be void, and the deposit, if any paid, to be returned.

(651) The sale generally takes place in London at Lloyd's Captains' Rooms, Royal Exchange.

(652) The marshal attends the sale and receives the deposit, and subsequently the balance of the purchase-money from the purchaser, and delivers the property over to him.

(653) The marshal usually executes to the purchaser a formal bill of sale of the property.

(654) The marshal also prepares, signs and annexes to the commission of sale a formal return of the proceedings taken under it.

(655) For directions that in all motions for commissions and decrees of appraisement and sale the time shall be specified within which it is prayed that the commissions or decrees shall be made returnable; that the commissioners and marshal shall make regular returns, stating the progress made in the execution of the commissions or decrees, and bring in the proceeds collected and all vouchers with their returns, see Order of Court of 3rd July, 1799.

(656) The following are the further fees of the marshal, appraisers and broker:—

On attending, appointing and swearing appraisers.	1	0
On delivery of the property to the purchaser	1	0
On attending the delivery of cargo, or sale, or removal of a ship or goods, per day	2	0
Poundage on the sale of any vessel or goods, for every £50 or fraction of £50	0	10

(657) For the broker, one per cent. on the proceeds of sale, and 6s. for the bill of sale. Ibid.

(657a) When a broker appraises a ship and subsequently sells her, he is not entitled to a per-centage fee on the appraisement, but to a commission of one per cent. on the proceeds of the sale. The Black Eagle, April, 1859; The Falcon, May, 1859, R. & M.

(658) In the case of appraisement of a sailing vessel one appraiser is usually employed; but in the case of a steamer two are employed, one for the ship, and the other for the engine department.

(659) In the case of cargo, an appraiser experienced in the particular kind of cargo is employed.

(660) The commission of sale, account sales, vouchers and return are filed by the marshal in the registry, but no fees are payable thereon.

undertaking a commission, incurs all the responsibility belonging to a prudent and honest execution of that commission, but the responsibility is limited to the exercise of common prudence and common integrity, notwithstanding which, if a loss occur, the commissioner is not responsible, but only for dolus or negligentia dolo proxima. The Rendsborg, 6 C. Rob. 155.

2067. The duties of commissioners of appraisement are, according to the terms of their appointment, to reduce into writing a full, true, and perfect inventory of the ship and cargo, and to appoint two good and lawful men, well experienced in such affairs, and swear them faithfully and justly to appraise the same according to their true values. The Princessa Zavala and La Reine Elizabeth, 2 C. Rob. 36.

2070. Before the marshal became the sole person authorized to execute such commission, though the court might, for its own convenience, accept the recommendation by the parties of commissioners, it was in no degree bound to do so. Ibid.

2071. It was at the option of the court whether it would grant any commission or not, and to whom it would grant it. Ibid.

2073. They were to account to the court, and not to the persons who recommended them. Ibid.

2075. If the interests of the Crown were affected, they should apply to the Crown officers of the court, and act under their directions with respect to the Crown's property. Ibid. 37.

2076. In a case of re-capture, the commission for the appraisement and sale not having been returned for two years, attachment decreed against the commissioners, and at their expense. The Fortuna, 4 C. Rob. 78.

3. When Biddings below Appraised Value.*

2077. When property is ordered to be sold in proceedings which are not by default, and it has been found impracticable to sell the property at the appraised value, the court, on proof thereof and on the consent of both parties, will direct it to be sold by private contract. The Linda Flor, 1 Sept. 1857, cited in Coote's Adm. Prac. 94.

2078. Where the bidding is much under the appraised value, the court will not always order the property to be sold at what it will fetch, but will sometimes fix upon a specific sum, and direct that the property shall not be sold for less than that amount. The Ceres, June 26, 1857.

4. Leave to bid.

2079. Application of the mortgagee of a vessel, to be allowed to bid as a purchaser on the sale of the vessel and part of the cargo under the decree of the court, granted. The Wilsons, 1 W. Rob. 173.

5. Payment of Proceeds into Court.

2080. The marshal shall pay into court the gross proceeds of sale of any property sold by him. Ord. XLI. r. 15, No. 694.

6. Account Sales.

(a) Generally.

2081. The marshal shall at the same time that he pays into court the gross proceeds of sale of any property sold by him, bring into the registry the account of sale, with vouchers in support thereof, for taxation by the Admiralty registrar. Ibid.

(b) Taxation.†

2082. Any person interested in the proceeds may be heard before the Admiralty

* (661) The property cannot, except by direction of the court, be sold at a less amount than the appraised value when it has been appraised.

(662) If the biddings do not reach that value the sale must be postponed, and a motion made to the court, supported by affidavits, for permission to sell the property at whatever amount it will fetch; and on sufficient cause being shown, the court will generally make the order or name a sum as the minimum amount at which the property may be sold.

† (663) One pound per cent. held to be the registrar on the taxation of the marshal's account of expenses, and an objection to the taxation shall be heard in the same manner as an objection to the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs. Ibid. r. 16, No. 695.

2083. Where the marshal went bond fide to attend a sale, but arrived there after it was over, his travelling and hotel expenses were allowed. The Queen (No. 1), 3 Asp. 189. [IRISH.]

7. Appraisalment.

2084. The ordinary modes by which the value of a ship may be ascertained are twofold. The first is by appraisement, in which case the return of the commission, being a proceeding by the court, the appraised value, unless objected to, binds both parties. A second mode is by agreement (semble, to be filed in the registry), in which case both parties are bound by their own act and consent. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 23; 6 Notes of Cases, 69.

2085. When there is any dispute as to the value of the property itself, the proper course is to take out a commission of appraisalment, but when there is no dispute as to the value, but whether certain deductions may be made according to law, a commission of appraisalment is unnecessary. The Charlotte, 5 Notes of Cases, 6.

usual rate of brokerage on the sale of prize goods generally. The Harreguard, 1 Hagg. 22.

(664) Marshal's charge of half per cent. on the value of cargo for superintending the unloading and ordering appraisalment thereof, disallowed by the court, and three guineas a day allowed in lieu thereof. The Rendsborg, 6 C. Rob. 169.

(664a) Accounts of charges attending the execution of a commission of unlivery and appraisalment referred to the registrar and merchants to report on. L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 50.

* (665) Appraisalment is usually resorted to in proceedings by default and in salvage causes.

(665a) In proceedings by default, the court requires for the protection of the absent owners an appraisalment of the property proceeded against before its sale, and will not permit, except in special cases, the property to be sold under its appraised value. The commission of appraisalment is in these cases embodied in the commission of sale, together with a commission of unlivery in cases in which it is necessary to unliver the cargo for the purpose of the appraisalment, as generally happens when cargo is to be appraised.

(666) In salvage causes the value of the property salvaged being an ingredient in the consideration of the salvage to be awarded, the salvors are entitled, before the property arrested for salvage is released, to have its value correctly ascertained. This may be done by an agreement between the plaintiffs and defendants signed by the proctors and filed in the registry. (See as to such agreements, c. 24, p. 1572.) When the values cannot be so agreed, the defendants' solicitor files an affidavit of the values, and the plaintiffs' solicitor, if dissatisfied with that amount, takes out a commission of appraisalment.

(666a) The marshal selects a fit and proper person skilled in the valuation of vessels to make the required valuation, and administers to him an oath faithfully to make the appraisalment.

(667) The appraiser, after being so sworn, appraises the property, and draws up, signs, and delivers to the marshal an inventory, and appraisalment thereof in writing.

667a. The marshal annexes this appraisalment to the commission, and draws up, signs, and annexes also to the commission a return thereto, setting forth what he has done under its authority.

668. By the old practice in force until the 1st January, 1860, if the res were situate within the port of London, the commission of appraisalment was directed to the marshal, but if situate at any outport it was directed to one or more special commissioners, selected by the practitioners on both sides, and latterly to commissioners to administer oaths in Admiralty, resident at or near the place where the res was situate.

(669) When in order to a proper appraisalment a commission of unlivery is necessary, such a commission may be obtained in the same manner as a commission of appraisalment, or it may be embodied in the commission of appraisalment, and this latter is, where practicable, the better course, as the registry and marshal's fees above mentioned are the same for a commission of appraisalment as for a commission of unlivery and appraisalment; but when a commission of unlivery is taken out separately the before-mentioned fees must be paid again thereon.

(669a) On a commission of unlivery the marshal's further fees are £2 per diem during the unlivery, and the expenses of a broker should the marshal deem it necessary or expedient to employ one.

(670) Before the order for the execution of all commissions of unlivery, appraisalment and sale by the marshal, the allowance to commissioners at the outports for an unlivery, for the purpose of appraisalment, was one guinea a day for each commissioner. The Rendsborg, 6 C. Rob. 171.

2086. An appraisement made by order of the court is binding upon all parties. Motion by the owner to have the vessel sold, and the value determined by the sale, rejected. The R. M. Mills, 3 L. T. N.S. 513; 1 Asp. 5.

2091. In a cause of damage by collision, held, that the value of the ship, when not agreed, or ascertained by appraisement, was a question for the registrar and merchants, and one which the court would not decide from evidence on the pleadings. The Speculator, 12 Jur. 546.

2092. A bottomry bond had been given upon the ship and cargo, and the value of the ship was very small. The court, considering there was reasonable suspicion that the cargo had been improperly hypothecated, directed a survey and appraisement of the vessel. The Bonaparte, 3 W. Rob. 305, 307; 13 Jur. 1059.

2093. A bottomry bond had been given upon the ship and cargo, and the value of the ship was small. Held, that the original valuation of the ship when the bottomry bond was taken having been made by competent authority, the amount for which the ship was sold after she had been detained a long time, and had become thereby deteriorated, was no evidence to disprove the previous valuation. Ibid.

2095. In a case of salvage on recapture, in which the ship and cargo had been restored to the proprietor on bail to answer salvage, but were destroyed by fire before the appraisement of the cargo had been completed, held, as to the ship, that the appraisement having been executed, possession was restored to the owner, and that salvage was due thereon, according to the appraised value; but as to the cargo, that the appraisement not having been completed, that was in the custody of the court, and that therefore the loss must fall on both parties, according to their several interests. The Three Friends, 4 C. Rob. 268.

2096. Valuations or appraisements in pursuance of orders of any Court of Admiralty, Vice-Admiralty, or of any court of appeal therefrom, are exempt from stamp duty. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, Schedule.

2097. A vessel and cargo having been arrested in an action of salvage and bail given, the ship and cargo daily deteriorating in value, an application was made by the owners to have the ship and cargo released, and by the salvors that a commission of appraisement should issue. Application of the owners granted, there being an action for damage also pending at the suit of the owners, and the owners making statements of the value in acts of court, and undertaking to afford every facility to the salvors for another valuation should the value be further impeached. The Glasgow Packet, 8 Jur. 67.

2098. Application for an order to stop salvors from unloading cargo at an outpost under a decree of appraisement after appearance and bail had been given, granted. The Sussex, 3 Hagg. 339.

(b) By Receiver of Wreck.

2099. Whenever any salvage question arises the receiver of wreck for the district may, upon application from either of the parties, appoint a valuer to value the property in respect of which the salvage claim is made, and shall, when the valuation has been returned to him, give a copy of the valuation to both parties; and any copy of such valuation, purporting to be signed by the valuer, and to be attested by the receiver, shall be received in evidence in any subsequent proceeding; and there shall be paid in respect of such valuation, by the party applying for the same, such fee as the Board of Trade may direct. The M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 50.

2099a. A valuation by the receiver of wreck, under section 50 of the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862, is not conclusive on the Court of Admiralty. The Minna, No. 2061, 15th March, 1864.

(c) Commission of—*

8. Sale.

2102. A ship sold by the court is thenceforth free of all demands due anterior to her sale. The Clara, 2 Jur. N.S. 46. And see The Neptune, 3 Hagg. 132.

2102a. In an action of collision against the G. and her freight, the G. was found solely to blame, and was ordered to be sold. On motion by the plaintiffs, the court directed the marshal to discharge the cargo and retain it as security for payment of charges and freight (if any) due from the consignees or owners, and in default of any application for delivery within fourteen days to sell sufficient cargo to pay those charges and the freight. The Gettysburg, 5 Asp. 347.

See also No. 2053—2078, pp. 1667—1671, and notes 640—657, and 660—663, Ibid.

(b) Perishable Property.

2103. It shall be lawful for the court or a judge, on the application of any party, to make any order for the sale, by any person or persons named in such order, and in such manner, and on such terms as the court or judge may think desirable, of any goods, wares, or merchandise which may be of a perishable nature or likely to injure from keeping, or which for any other just and sufficient reason it may be desirable to have sold at once. Ord. L. r. 2, No. 658.

2104. In a cause of salvage the court directed that certain perishable cargo should be sold short of its destination, the proceeds to be brought into court and all questions of freight to be reserved. The Kathleen, L. R. 4 A. & E. 269; 43 L. J. Adm. 39; 31 L. T. N.S. 204.

2105. In a salvage action where there had been no appearance the court before decree ordered an appraisal and sale of the vessel and cargo salvaged, on an affidavit that they were daily deteriorating and incurring expense. The Anna Helena, 5 Asp. 61.

2106. In an action for necessities supplied to a foreign ship by D., on affidavit of D. that the ship was rapidly deteriorating, order made for her removal from a building yard in which she was lying and for appraisal and sale without prejudice to the lien of the owner of the yard for rent and other charges on the proceeds of sale. The Nordstjernen, Swabey, 260.

2107. On an application for the sale of perishable property, semble, the affidavits should state among other things who are the owners, and that notice of the appli-

(671a) The commission of appraisal is adapted in the registry from form of Commission of Appraisal and Sale in R. S. C. 1883, App. H. No. 16. See as to powers to alter forms, Ord. LXI. r. 33, No. 926.

Part III.—IN PARTICULAR ACTIONS.

1. *Bottomry Actions.*1. Generally.

2115. A foreign agent specially authorized, collected the gross freight, and thereout remitted a sum larger than the amount of the net freight. Expenses in respect of the outward voyage, e. g. discharging expenses and compensation to consignees for short delivery of cargo, then became payable. The agent advanced sums for these and other debts against the ship, and for repayment took a bottomry bond on ship and freight. Held, that the mortgagees, not in possession of the ship when the bond was given, had no right to object to the former items in the bond. The Edmond, 1 Lush. 63; 2 L. T. N.S. 192; 29 L. J. Adm. 76.

2116. As to bottomry generally, see tit. BOTTOMRY, p. 100, and ibid. in Admenda, as to the jurisdiction of the Admi-

rality Division and Admiralty Court in reference thereto, ibid. pp. 104, 105. As to county courts having no jurisdiction in actions of bottomry, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 678. As to the law of the contract, the flag and the forum, as affecting bottomry, see tit. BOTTOMRY, p. 106, and tit. JURISDICTION, pp. 652, 653.

2117. As to what are bottomry bonds, see tit. BOTTOMRY, p. 106. As to such bonds being good in part and bad in part, ibid. p. 107. As to maritime risk being essential to such bonds, ibid. pp. 108—113. As to such bonds by owners, ibid. p. 114, and by masters, ibid. pp. 116—132. As to the necessity of notice before bottomry to owners, mortgagees or purchasers, ibid. pp. 129—132. As to such bonds on cargo, ibid. pp. 136—140, and on freight, ibid. p. 135. As to bills of exchange as collateral security, ibid. p. 140. As to payment and priority of payment thereof, ibid. pp. 145—150. As to their transfer, ibid. p. 150. As to the lien for bottomry, ibid. pp. 143, 144. And as to the priority of bottomry over other liens, see tit. LIENS, p. 816.

3. Parties.

2119. The hypothecation of the ship by the master does not render the owners personally liable. Johnson v. Shippen (170), 1 Salk. 35; 14 Viner's Abr. 300.

2121. The court discountenances the sale of bottomry bonds. The Prince of Saxe Cobourg, 3 Hagg. 394.

2122. Assignees are in no better situation in opposing a bottomry bond than owners where there is no bankruptcy. The St. Catherine, 3 Hagg. 253.

2123. Semble, a mortgagee whose interests are prejudiced by those of the bondholder, may oppose the validity of a bottomry bond. The Dunvegan Castle, 3 Hagg. 331.

2124. The title of mortgagees is in questions of bottomry and similar cases equivalent to that of the owners. The Mary Ann, 10 Jur. 255.

2125. A foreign agent especially authorized, collected the gross freight, and thereout remitted a sum larger than the amount of the net freight. Expenses in respect of the outward voyage, e.g. discharging expenses and compensation to consignees for short delivery of cargo, then became payable. The agent advanced sums for these and other debts against the ship, and for repayment took a bottomry bond on ship and freight. Held, that the mortgagees, not in possession of the ship when the bond was given, had no right to object to the former items in the bond. The Edmond, 1 Lushington, 63; 2 L. T. N.S. 192; 29 L. J. Adm. 76.

2126. Seem, that the master, though the original hypothecator of the ship and a part owner, is not precluded by the practice of the Court of Admiralty from joining his co-owners in impugning the bond. Soars v. Rahn (The Prince of Saxe Cobourg), 3 Moore, P. C. C. 1.

2127. When the bond is on ship, freight, and cargo, no appearance is given on behalf of the owners of the ship; and it is uncertain whether the ship and freight will not be sufficient to satisfy the bond; proceedings against the cargo should be suspended until the ship has been sold, and it has been ascertained that there is a deficiency rendering a resort to the cargo necessary. The Bonaparte, 3 W. Rob. 302.

2128. A bottomry bond was endorsed by the lender on bottomry as follows: "Pay to B. and G., or order of London, the within-named sum. Dated, Olbao, 7 July, 1845." Held, that it was immaterial whether the endorsement was to be considered as a bonâ fide assignment of the bond to B. and G., or as a mere endorsement to them as agents of the bondholder, and that in either character they would stand in precisely the same position, be entitled to the same advantages, and subject to the same liabilities in law and equity, as the original bondholder. The Catharine, 3 W. Rob. 2.

2128a. As to parties to actions generally, see Pt. II. c. 6, p. 1498.

4. Arrest.

(a) Generally.

2129. A ship having been arrested in an action of wages, on motion on behalf of a bondholder for a warrant of arrest against the ship and freight, the bond in terms binding only the ship, the court directed the warrant to issue, though it would not, upon motion, determine whether the bond in such a case extended to the freight. The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. 94.

2130. A warrant of arrest in a cause of bottomry having been executed on the ship and parties in possession of the freight, and no appearance having been given, the ship was sold under a decree of the court, after which an appearance was given for the owners. Motion, at the suit of a mortgagee of the ship, for an order against the parties in possession of the freight to bring in the same rejected, the court intimating, however, that the bondholder might so apply. On application of the bondholder for payment of the bond out of the proceeds of the ship sufficient for the purpose, further motion of mortgagee to suspend such decree until the freight should be brought into the registry in part discharge of the bond, rejected, the court holding that though the freight is part of the bondholder's security, he is not compellable to enforce it. The Percy, 3 Hagg. 402.

2132. As to the arrest of vessels generally, see Pt. II. c. 11, p. 1515.

(b) Affidavit to lead—.

See Pt. II. c. 11, p. 1517.

(c) Before Bond due.

2133. The arrest of a ship by the holder of a bottomry bond before the bond was due, held to have been justifiable on the ground that the ship was going to leave the kingdom. Aliter, had there been an unfounded apprehension only thereof. The Jane, 1 Dodson, 461.

2135. Bottomry on ship, freight, and cargo. The property was arrested before the bond was due, in order to secure cargo, an affidavit having been filed that there was reasonable ground for apprehending the cargo would shortly be discharged. Proceedings by default directed to stand over, on the ground that, though the property was arrested before bond due, no proceedings should have been taken until bond due, and therefore the time that would have elapsed under such circumstances must be allowed to elapse before such proceedings commenced. San Jose Primeiro (No. 22), 15th March, 1860.

13. Hearing.

(a) Right to begin.

2146. See Pt. II. c. 38, p. 1640.

(b) Production of Original Bond.

2147. In all actions of bottomry the original bond must be produced at the hearing. The Rowena, 3 Asp. N.S. 506; 37 L. T. N.S. 366.

2148. In a cause of bottomry, the original bond was preserved in the registry of the Court of Commerce at Malta, and a "legalized copy" entered in the minutes of the notary's acts there. An official or notarial copy was produced in court, but the court refused to make a decree without having a certificate and affidavit that no further copy has been or will be issued. The Jeune Nanette, 4 W. R. 92.

14. Judgment.

2149. A decree pronouncing for the validity of a bottomry bond is conclusive on the validity of the bond, and unless it be appealed from the bond must be considered as valid. The decree determines nothing, however, with respect to the amount the bondholder is entitled to recover. That is to be ascertained by reference to the registrar and merchants. The Catherine, 3 W. Rob. 3.

2151. In a suit on a bottomry bond, the court, before deciding upon the validity or invalidity of the bond, referred the case to the registrar and merchants, to report, on the whole accounts, whether any and what balance was due to the bondholder upon which a bottomry bond could be taken, and any other special matter which might occur to them. The Ocean, 10 Jur. 505; 4 Notes of Cases, 410; The Gauntlet, 13 Jur. 414.

2152. In proceedings by default in a cause of bottomry, the rate of interest being excessive, the court, ex mero motu, in making its decree, referred the matter to the registrar and merchants to report the proper rate of interest to be allowed. The Huntley, 1 Lushington, 24.

2153. On taking the ship's accounts in a cause of bottomry, it was ascertained that, save as to the agent's commission, no money was due as against the ship, and the registrar and merchants reported that the commission was so excessive, that on the balance of accounts, after reducing the commission to a proper amount, the owners of the ship were creditors and not debtors. Bond pronounced against, with costs. The Rhoderick Dhu, Swabey, 177; 5 W. R. 168; 28 L. T. 238.

2155. As to decrees generally, see c. 33, p. 594.

2156. The court never pronounces against a bottomry bond on account of the extent of the premium. La Ysabel, 1 Dodson, 277; The Alexander, ibid. 279; The Lord Cochrane, 8 Jur. 716; 3 Notes of Cases, 172.

2157. As to judgments and orders generally, see Pt. II. c. 39, p. 1642.

The action ought to be brought against A., and it is not necessary to show that the vessel proceeded against was in actual contact with the vessel proceeding. If there was joint blame for the first collision, and B. was driven in consequence against C., then B. would be responsible. The Venus, July 11, 1855.

(c) British and Foreign Government Vessels.†

See tit. JURISDICTION, Pt. I. p. 668, and Ibid. in Addenda.

* (675) In actions of bottomry the proofs to be filed are, inter alia, the surveys and the accounts and vouchers for the several sums for payment of which the bond was given.

† (675a) Where the colliding ship sought to be held to blame is a British Government ship, the proceedings are instituted against the commander or other officer in charge at the time of the accident, and the Lords of the Admiralty usually instruct the Treasury solicitor to appear to the action. See notes 106, 107, p. 668,

5. Amendment and Consolidation of Actions.

See Pt. II. pp. 1494 and 1543.

6. Parties.(a) *Generally.

2180. A cause of damage was instituted in the name of a party not the registered owner. Motion by the defendants to be dismissed, after damage pronounced for and the accounts referred, rejected, but the court stated that if after the amount of damage had been ascertained any doubt arose as to who was entitled to receive the money, it would direct the amount to be paid into the registry, and throw on the claimant the onus of establishing his ownership by competent proof. The Ilos, Swabey, 100.

2182. Although a vessel has violated the provisions of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), as to the rule of port helm, and has thereby contributed to a collision, the owner of the cargo can, provided he is neither owner nor part owner of such ship, recover compensation from another vessel, which also contributed to the accident. But in such a case he is only entitled to be recompensed to the extent of half the value of the damage done to his property. Ibid.

2184. See as to parties to suits generally, Ibid. p. 1498; and as to third parties and proceedings by and against them, Ibid. c. 6, p. 1500, and c. 21, p. 1560.

7. Proceedings against Foreign Vessels under M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 527.†

See Pt. II. c. 11, p. 1523.

8. Against Master and Part Owner without Limit of Liability.

2185. To render a master, being also a part owner and guilty of neglect, responsible beyond the value of the ship and freight, he must be sued as master in the first instance. The proceeding must be by charging him with being the cause of the damage by his misconduct; and that cannot be done, directly or indirectly, in another suit. In a cause of collision in which damage had been pronounced for, motion to condemn a part owner, who was on board and in command of the damaging vessel at the time of the collision, in the excess of the damage beyond the proceeds of the ship, rejected. The Volant, 1 W. Rob. 385, 390; The Hope, ibid. 154; Wilson v. Dickson, 2 B. & A. 2; overruling The Triune, 3 Hagg. 115.

2186. See also tit. OWNERS, pp. 1346, 1349.

9. Bail.

See Pt. II. p. 1554.

10. Tender.

Ibid. c. 32, p. 1587.

* (676) Causes of damage by collision may be brought by the owners of the vessel lost or damaged, or by the owners of the cargo or part of the cargo lost or damaged, and in one cause or in separate causes.

(677) These actions may subsequently be consolidated (as to the consolidation of actions, see Pt. II. c. 17, p. 1543), or in each action after the first an agreement may be entered into by the solicitors on both sides that that action shall abide the result of the first action, or that the pleadings and proofs in the first action shall be considered as the pleadings and proofs in the subsequent action. See as to such agreements, Pt. II. c. 24, p. 1572.

† (679) The remedy under these sections is seldom resorted to in the Admiralty, that court having inherent jurisdiction, independently of the statute, over foreign vessels in cases of damage by collision. See tit. COLLISION, p. 193. It is, however, convenient so to apply to the Collector of Customs, in the case of a foreign ship, and where instructions arrive too late to obtain a warrant on the same day.

2193. An indorsee of a bill of lading has a right to sue for damage to cargo arising from a breach of contract contained in the bill of lading under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, and in the case of a foreign vessel to take proceedings in rem under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (o. 10), although at the time of the institution of the action he has sold the cargo. The Marathon, 4 Asp. 75.

2193a. See also The Nepoter, p. 473, and The Felix and other cases, p. 517.

2194a. In an action against a carrier for damage to goods, it is enough to prove the condition and value of the goods when delivered to the carrier and when received by the consignee, and if damaged in the hands of the carrier he is entitled to recover; and the fact that the damage was partly caused by bad packing goes only to the amount of damage. Higginbotham v. Great Northern Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 796; 10 W. R. 358.

2195. In a case of damage to cargo, held, that the omission by the master of certain particulars in his protest is not a breach of duty or contract on the part of the shipowner or his servants, so as to give the owner of the damaged goods a right of action, even if such omission had been made from improper motives. The Santa Anna, 32 L. J. Adm. N.S. 198.

(680a) When it is not desired to dispute the liability for damages, but only the amount of damages, a decree as to the liability may be taken by consent, and the accounts referred to the registrar and merchants before whom the question of damages may be discussed. The consent should be by agreement between the solicitors on both sides. See as to such agreements, Pt. II. c. 24, s. 7, p. 1572.

4. Actions for Loss of Life or Personal Injury.1. Generally.

2200. The Admiralty Division has no jurisdiction to entertain, in the first instance, an action in rem under Lord Campbell's Act for loss of life.† (Overruling The Franconia, 2 P. D. 163.) The Vera Cruz, 10 App. Cas. 59; 9 P. D. 96; 5 Asp. 270, 386.

2201. But it has jurisdiction to entertain such an action where an action for limitation of liability has been instituted in the court—per Brett, M. R. Ibid. See also tit. COLLISION, Pt. I. c. 7, and Pt. II. c. 1, pp. 190, 191; and Ibid. in Addenda. 2202. See also The Bowersfield, No. 346a, p. 1499.

2202a. As to the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty in actions in rem for personal injury from collision, see The Sylph, L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; and by passengers or members of crew against masters for personal injuries, see tit. SEAMEN.

2. In relation to Board of Trade Inquiries.‡

2203. For provisions as to procedure by the Board of Trade in cases of loss of life or personal injury, for summoning a jury to ascertain the names, numbers and descriptions of the sufferers, for the assessment of the damages at £30 in each case, and as a first charge on the owners' liability, and as to the payment and distribution thereof, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 507—510, and tit. OWNERS, Pt. VI. p. 1339.

2204. For provisions that after the completion or compromise of the inquiry by the Board of Trade, if any person injured, or the legal representative of any person killed, estimates the damages awarded or compromised at a greater sum, he may bring an action for damages; but any damages so recoverable shall be payable only out of the residue (if any) of the aggregate amount for which the owner is liable, after deducting all sums so paid to her Majesty's Paymaster-General; and if the damages recovered do not exceed double the statutory amount, the plaintiff shall pay the defendant's costs as between solicitor and client, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 511.

2205. In cases where such loss of life or personal injury has occurred, no person shall be entitled to bring any action in the United Kingdom until the completion of the inquiry by the Board of Trade, or it has refused to institute the same; and it shall be deemed to have so refused when notice has been served on it by any person of his desire to bring such action, and no inquiry is instituted by the board for one month afterwards. Ibid. s. 512.

* (681) Actions for damage to cargo may be in personam or in rem. See The Pieve Superiore, L. R. 5 P. C. 482. But as the action cannot be brought if any owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales, it follows that they must generally be brought in rem.

† (682) Semble, it has, as a branch of the High Court, original jurisdiction in personam in such actions. See The Bernina, 2nd March, 1886.

‡ (682a) The Board of Trade have not yet availed themselves of these provisions of the act to institute any such inquiry.

2206. Whenever the Board of Trade having so refused to institute any inquiry afterwards determines to institute it, the damages and costs (if any) recovered on such inquiry shall be payable rateably with and not in priority to the costs and damages recovered in any other action. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 513.

3. Limitation of Liability.

2207. As to the limitation of the liability of owners of ships in respect of such damages for loss of life, personal injury, or damage to property, see tit. OWNERS, Pt. VI. p. 1336. As to the procedure to limit such liabilities, see c. 10, infra.

9. Actions for Necessaries, Repairs, and Supplies.

1. Generally.

2217. Those are commonly called material men whose trade it is to build, repair, or equip ships, or to furnish them with tackle and provision necessary in any kind. The Neptune, 3 Hagg. 142.

2218. As to such actions generally, see tit. NECESSARIES, REPAIRS, AND SUPPLIES, p. 1148.

2219. As to the limits of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division in actions for necessaries, Ibid. pp. 1154—1156.†

* (683) When the master is also part owner, the proceedings should be in rem, and should be instituted as a cause of possession, and besides possession of the vessel, further relief by removal of the master may be asked for in the plaintiff's petition, or the majority of owners, on obtaining possession, may remove the master by their own authority. When the master is not a part owner, proceedings for his removal should be in personam against him.

† (684) For statutory forms of mortgage, of transfer thereof, of declarations and certificate of mortgage, and of revocation of certificate of mortgage, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 66, 73, 74, 79, 83; and for Board of Trade forms thereof, Pritchard's Adm. Digest, 2nd ed. App. pp. 168—179, 184 and 185.

(685) When the appointment and conduct of the master are matters of contention between part owners, the proceedings should be instituted under the 8th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10).

‡ (685a) It will be seen, on reference to the pages mentioned in the text, that the action for necessaries can only be brought in the Admiralty Division, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, against foreign ships, and only for necessaries supplied on the high seas or in British ports; and under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), against British or colonial ships when no part owner of them is domiciled in England or Wales.

(686) And that the action for building, equipping or repairing vessels can only be brought in the Admiralty Division when the ship is under arrest of the court, or the proceeds of sale of the ship are in the registry of the court.

(686a) It is allowable and sometimes convenient to institute the cause as a combined claim of necessaries and repairs or supplies, where the claim partakes of both characters.

2229. In law both the owner and the master may be responsible, not jointly, but separately, to the material man, who may bring his action against either of them. The Alexander, 1 W. Rob. 357.

2230. A partner may arrest the ship (the property of himself and co-partner) in a suit for necessaries. The West Friesland, Swabey, 495; 5 Jur. N.S. 658.

2231. The institution of an action as a cause of necessaries does not estop the plaintiff from afterwards pleading and proving that his claim is in respect of repairs, but the title of the cause must be amended. Leave to amend given. The Shipwith, 10 Jur. Adm. N.S. 445; 10 L. T. N.S. 43; 2 Asp. 20.

2. Transfer.

2232. A cause of necessaries was instituted in a county court, and subsequently referred to the High Court of Admiralty. The pleadings in the High Court of Admiralty alleged that a bottomry bond was given as security for the amount due for necessaries. Held, first, that the claim for necessaries merged in the bottomry; secondly, that the suit having been transferred as one for necessaries could not be retained as a cause of bottomry. The Elpis, L. R. 4 A. & E. 1; 42 L. J. Adm. 43.

10. Actions of Limitation of Liability of Owners.

1. Generally.*

2233. As to the statutory limitation of liability of owners generally for damage

* (687) The initiatory proceedings in the Admiralty Division in limitation actions are similar to those in other actions. As to the pleadings and judgment therein, and the references of the accounts to the registrar and merchants, and costs, see Pt. II. p. 1613.

(688) The amount of the percentage on the registered tonnage of the vessel is paid in promptly after the judgment to stop interest, but the court will allow bail to be given where denied.

(688a) The advertisements referred to in the decree are usually inserted at intervals of not less than a week, in the Times, the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, and a local paper of good circulation. They are inserted by the plaintiff's solicitors. The form of advertisement is settled by the registrar.

(689) The advertisements, after reciting the institution of the action and the judgment thereon, proceed to give notice to all persons having any claim in respect of the loss or damage so caused to the vessel A., or to the goods, merchandize, or other thing, on board thereof, that if they do not come in and enter their claims in the said cause on or before a day therein named, they will be excluded from sharing in the sum paid into court. The advertisements are dated, and signed by the registrar.

(689a) Claims should be filed (after entering appearance) with the necessary proofs, and they will be investigated by the registrar and merchants, as in ordinary references. The registrar's report will then be filed, and the court, on motion, will decree payment of the proper proportion of the fund due to each claimant with costs.

(690) For form of decree in Chancery, on paying value of ship into court, for injunction, account of claims and apportionment, see Seton on Decrees (3rd ed. by Harrison and Leach), p. 932.

(690a) For the form of decree in Chancery limiting the shipowners' liability in a case of damage by collision, see The General Iron Screw Co. v. Schurmanns, 29 L. J. Ch. 883.

(691) The averments in the petition, and to goods, or loss of life, or personal injury, without their actual fault or privity, see tit. OWNERS, Pt. VI. p. 1336.

2234. As to the liability ultra of the master where part owner, and to blame for the collision, Ibid. pp. 1346, 1347, and 1349.

2238*a*. Where the amount of a defendant's statutory liability has been paid into court in a collision action, with a sum to cover interest and costs, held, that it was not necessary for him to move the court to order that the sum paid in by him be transferred to the credit of the limitation action. The Sisters, 1 P. D. 281.

2240. R. S. C. No. 550, that in cases of trial by affidavit the evidence shall be printed, and notice of trial given as therein mentioned, does not apply to Admiralty actions for limitation of liability. Ord. XXXVIII. r. 30, No. 550.

2240*a*. As to a counter-claim in an action for limitation of liability, see The Clutha, 35 L. T. N.S. 36.

2. Stay of other Actions.

See tit. OWNERS, Pt. VI. pp. 1342, 1343.

3. Bail.

2241. In an action of limitation of liability, a release of the ship in other actions pending decreed on bail being given in this action in a sum equivalent to £8 per ton (there having been no loss of life or personal injury), on the registered tonnage of the vessel, and in a sum to be settled by the registrar for interest and costs. The John, No. 2213, 10th May, 1864.

2242. In a limitation action the plaintiffs were ready to pay into court £3 per ton, but asked that in respect of loss of life and personal injury they might pay, into court or give bail for, less than the statutory amount. The court directed that the plaintiffs should first state on affidavit the names of the persons killed and injured, their condition in life, the number of those legally entitled to claim, the number of claims which had been settled, and the amounts paid in settlement. The Dione, 5 Asp. 347.

4. Security for Costs.

See tit. COSTS, p. 365.

5. Pleadings.

See Pt. II. p. 1613.

in particular the amount of the gross registered tonnage of the vessel which did the damage, and the names and addresses of her owners, should be verified by affidavit, to be filed by the plaintiffs, notwithstanding those averments may be admitted in the answer.

* (691*a*) Any doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division to entertain such actions when the ship or the proceeds thereof are not under arrest of the court is now set at rest by that court having become a branch of the High Court, and therefore a superior court. See the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (c. 126), s. 35.

6. Evidence.

2243. In any proceeding for limitation of liability under the M. S. Acts in respect of loss of life, the master's list, or the duplicate list of passengers delivered to the proper officer of customs under the 16th section of "The Passengers Act, 1855," in the absence of proof to the contrary, is sufficient proof that the persons in respect of whose death any such proceedings are instituted were passengers on board at the time of their deaths. See M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 56.

12. Actions of Restraint.1. Generally.

2252. When minority owners have instituted an action of restraint claiming security for the safe return of the ship to a named port within the jurisdiction, and a bond is given by the defendants for that purpose, such bond remains in force until the ship returns to that port, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to institute another action for further security upon the ship's return to another port within the jurisdiction; and if such second action is instituted, it will be dismissed with costs. The Regalia, 51 L. T. 904; 5 Asp. 338.

2253. In a cause of restraint, the charterer of the vessel, if he has a substantial interest in the question before the court, is entitled to intervene in the action. Ibid.

2253*a.* Semble, when the actual loss cannot be directly proved, the Court of Admiralty will, on sufficient cause being shown, declare the bond forfeited, and require the amount to be paid into court if the vessel does not return within a time named in the decree. The Margaret, 2 Hagg. 279; and see The Anne and The Water Hen, therein cited.

2256a. All the part owners must be made parties to a bill filed for an account of the profits of the ship. Moffat v. Farquharson, 2 Brown, C. C. 338; Collyer on Partnership, 683.

2258. A managing owner, who had not delivered accounts for nine years, brought an action against his co-owners for an account and payment of balance due. The registrar, in his report, having allowed the plaintiff certain items in respect of the ship, which he had not paid, and for which the defendants were being sued in the Queen's Bench Division, the court decreed payment of the amount found due, but stayed execution until the defendants were secured against the claims in the Queen's Bench Division, and refused to give the plaintiff the costs of the action, on the ground of the delay in delivering his accounts. The Charles Jackson, 5 Asp. 399.

2259a. The act 3 Geo. 1, c. 13 (now repealed), fixing rates of pilotage, was limited to the particular society of pilots, viz., Trinity pilots, therein described, who had the benefit of a monopoly under the provisions of that act, and the restrictions thereof were held to be taken as corresponding with the privileges conferred. Other pilots, therefore, engaged in the same navigation only casually, when the privileged pilots were out of the way, held to be at liberty to make special agreements for higher compensation. Such an agreement pronounced for. The Nelson, 6 C. Rob. 227.

2260. In a cause of co-ownership, order made against a dock company to bring in freight detained by them under a stop order of the defendants. The Meggie, L. R. 1 A. & E. 77.

2261. The master's agreement for pilotage services, not affected by collusion or fraud, would be as binding on the owner as if made in his own person. Ibid. 227.

2261a. The report by the master of the ship to the owner that certain additional charges were due to the pilot (such charges not being allowable under the table of remuneration for pilot services annexed to the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125), held not to bar or conclude the owner from objecting to such charges. The Adah, 2 Hagg. 332.

2262. The docking of a ship is to be considered as equivalent to bringing her to ordinary moorings. Ibid. 330.

2262a. As to pilotage authorities and pilots generally, see tit. PILOTS, p. 1429.

2263. As to pilot ships and boats, qualified and unqualified pilots, and their remuneration and responsibilities, Ibid.

* (695) Pilotage rates depend mainly upon Part 5 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104). Of that act, sects. 380 and 381 relate specially to the rating power of the Trinity House, and these rates are embodied in the Order in Council of 1st Nov. 1862. The Trinity House outpost district rates are framed by the Trinity House. See further, tit. PILOTS, pp. 1438, 1439, 1441, 1448, 1449.

(695a) Damage occasioned to a ship by the misconduct of a pilot in charge allowed to be set off against his claim for pilotage. The Sophia, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. 96. [LOWER CANADA.]

(696) To constitute pilotage a lien on the ship the contract must have been made by some person in the employment of the owner duly authorized to make the contract, such as the master or quasi master. But mere wrongdoers or mutineers have no authority to bind the ship. The Anne, 1 Mason, 508. [AMERICAN.]

2264. As to the priority of pilotage over other liens, see tit. LIENS, p. 827.

2277. And of towage and other liens, ibid. p. 831.

2278. As to laches in salvage actions, see tit. LACHES, p. 805.

2279. As a matter of right, and especially in cases of derelict, salvors are entitled to resort at once to the High Court of Admiralty to enforce their demands. The law entitles them to say, "We will have the judgment of the court as to the remuneration we ought to receive, and we will not negotiate." The Tritonia, 5 Notes of Cases, Supp. viii.

2280. The court is not limited to any particular demand of the salvors in a case of great merit. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 322.

2280a. An allotment of salvage having been awarded in proceedings by default, the ship salvaged was sold in that action under decree of the court, but at an amount far exceeding the appraised value. Application for increase in the salvage award on that ground rejected. The Emanuel, June, 1853.

2. By Officers and Crews of H. M.'s Ships Abroad.

2281. For provisions in cases of salvage by officers and crews of H. M.'s ships out of the United Kingdom and from seas adjoining, that the statements, bonds, and other documents required in such cases to be taken, be transmitted at the earliest opportunity by the consular officer or judge of a Vice-Admiralty Court acting in the case, with a notice of the sum he has fixed as bail to the Court of Admiralty of England, or if the salvor and the master or other person in charge agree that the bond shall be adjudicated upon by any Vice-Admiralty Court then to such court, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 490.

2282. Such bonds when so transmitted to the High Court of Admiralty of England shall be adjudicated upon by that court. Ibid. s. 492.

See Pt. II. c. 4, p. 1491.

(b) Ship.

2286. Ship and cargo must each pay its own share of salvage; neither can be made liable for the salvage due from the other, whether the salvors proceed in the Admiralty Court or before the magistrates. The Pyrenée, 3 N. R. 250.

2287. If in a suit for salvage the ship alone has been proceeded against, the question would be what amount of salvage should be decreed with reference to the united value of the ship, freight and cargo, and what proportion thereof the ship should defray. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

(c) Freight.

2288. Freight must have been paid or earned before salvors can require it to be brought into court, in order to salvage being awarded on it. The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 123.

(d) Cargo.

2289. The real foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty in salvage cases is by proceedings in rem, though there may be some cases of special circumstances where salvors have been allowed to proceed in personam; but generally the ship and freight are alone liable, and where they can be proceeded against the court is not disposed to regard salvors as having a right to follow cargo as prize goods may be followed, to abide the final adjudication. The Rapid, 3 Hagg. 422.†

2290. A ship was arrested, after discharge of cargo, in a suit for salvage, and an appearance and bail were given for ship and freight. Motion on behalf of the salvors for an order against the owners of the vessel proceeded against to bring in an account of freight on oath, and to set forth when, and the names of the parties by whom, the freight had been paid, in order to the discovery of the owners of the cargo, granted. The Peace, Swabey, 85.

5. Initiation of Action.

2291. Every dispute with respect to salvage may be heard and adjudicated on the application of either the salvor or the owner of the property salvaged, or their respective agents. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460; and The Bessemer, 1884, B. No. 273.‡

6. Amount of Action.

2292. Practitioners are not justified in entering actions and requiring bail to an amount quite disproportioned to the salvage service. The Earl Grey, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 180.

2293. For cases of condemnation of plaintiffs in costs of giving bail in such circumstances, see tit. Costs, p. 409.

2294. In an action of salvage Lord Stowell gave a larger sum than the amount in which the cause was instituted, and directed a fresh action to be instituted. The Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 74.

7. Separate Actions.§

2295. The court is displeased when two actions are brought by two sets of salvors

* (697) The rights acquired by the salvors are only in rem to be paid by the property. They have no claim in personam against the owners if they (the owners) choose to abandon the goods. The Emblem, Daveis, 61. [AMERICAN.]

(698) But if the property is delivered by the salvors to the owners before a compensation for saving it is made, the salvors may maintain a libel in personam for the salvage. Ibid.

† (699) By the modern practice the court is less strict in allowing proceedings against owners of cargoes. See the subsequent cases in the text, Nos. 2290 and 2302.

‡ (700) It is not unusual for owners of vessels salvaged to commence an action for the awarding of salvage, and where there are different claimants of salvage it is often more convenient to adopt such a course.

§ (701) Although there should be but one libel of co-salvors, if there are several sets of salvors, as the officers and crew of different vessels by whom distinct salvage services where it can be avoided, but there may be cases in which this course is justifiable, and this was one, the salvors having opposite interests; the first set, smackmen, being the first salvors, and the second, a steamer, claiming to have rescued the vessel. The Charles Adolphe, Swabey, 156.

2296. Separate actions for salvage of life and property were entered and afterwards consolidated. The court approved of the course pursued. The Coromandel, Swabey, 208.

2298. Second salvors joined in an action with first salvors, which latter were held to have acted improperly, and the suit as to them was dismissed. The owners objected to salvage being awarded to the second salvors, on the ground that they had embarked in a common action with the first salvors, and were concluded by the decree as against them. The court overruled the objections, and awarded salvage and costs to the second salvors. The Neptune, 1 W. Rob. 302.

2298a. A first set of salvors who, while in possession, were assisted in the service by a second set of salvors, held, nevertheless, to have a primary interest, and therefore a right to choose their own jurisdiction (viz. whether to proceed for an award by magistrates or by a suit in the Court of Admiralty). They having elected to proceed before magistrates, the second salvors, who instituted proceedings in the Admiralty Court, held to have acted improperly in so doing, and in not intervening in the proceedings before the magistrates as their proper course. Quare, if parties have equal rights, would a resort to the subordinate jurisdiction, when objected to, be proper? The Eugene, 3 Hagg. 159.

2299. Owners of a salving vessel are entitled to receive the value of sails and stores supplied from the salving vessel, and also the amount of any other loss or expense which they may fairly have incurred, but they are not justified in preferring such a claim through a separate practitioner and counsel, and thereby putting the owners of the vessel salvaged to an additional and unnecessary expense. Costs allowed, but directed to be strictly taxed. The Baltimore, 2 Dodson, 138.

2300. As to consolidation of actions, see Pt. II. c. 17, p. 1544.

2300a. As to costs in connection with actions which ought to have been, and were not consolidated, see tit. Costrs, pp. 349, 408.

8. Parties.

2301. Every dispute with respect to salvage may be heard and adjudicated upon on the application either of the salvor, or of the owner of the property salvaged, or of their respective agents. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460.

2301a. Whenever any articles belonging to any foreign ship or cargo wrecked are found on or near the coasts, or are brought into any port, of the United Kingdom, the consul-general or any consular officer of the country to which the property belongs, authorized by treaty or agreement with such country, shall, in the absence of the owner, master or other agent of the owner, be deemed agent of the owner as to the custody and disposal of such articles. See the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 91), s. 19.

See also Pt. II. c. 6, p. 1507.

See cap. 16, p. 1694.

See Pt. II. c. 4, p. 1507.

have been rendered, it is proper that their respective claims to remuneration should be asserted in distinct suits. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) 369; The Boston and Cargo, 1 Sumner, 328; The Ship Henry Ewbank, Ibid. 400, 408. [AMERICAN.]

* (702) After sale of property libelled for salvage, a foreign consul has authority to petition the court to order the marshal to pay into its registry the proceeds in which a citizen or subject of his country is interested, such person being absent and having no legal representative in the United States. Ship Adolph and Cargo, 1 Curtis, Ct. Ct. 87. [AMERICAN.]

(703) Underwriters cannot claim for salvage property in the Admiralty unless the property has been abandoned to them and accepted by them. The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 400. [AMERICAN.]

(704) See, also, as to underwriters as parties to suits generally, Pt. II. c. 6, p. 1504.

2302. Salvage of £400 on ship, freight, and cargo, was decreed, in pursuance of an agreement made by the master. The values of ship and freight only were then known, but afterwards the owners of cargo were proceeded against and appeared, offering to pay their proportion of salvage. Held, that the cost of the salvage suit must be borne by the owners of ship and cargo rateably, though the latter were not before the court when the decree for salvage was made. The Peace, Swabey, 115.

(e) After Collision Action.

2303. Where a vessel had been found to blame in a cause of collision, her owners were allowed to intervene in a salvage suit instituted against the injured vessel, and the court gave them the conduct of the defence on their furnishing bail in lieu of that furnished by the vessel proceeded against. The Diana, 2 Asp. N.S. 366.

9. Claims by her Majesty's Ships, Officers and Crews.

(a) No Claim for Loss or Damage.

2304. Where salvage services are rendered by any of her Majesty's ships, or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be made or allowed for any loss, damage, or risk thereby caused to the ship, or to her stores, tackle, or furniture, or for the use of any of her Majesty's stores, or other articles, in effecting such services, or for any other expense or loss sustained by her Majesty by reason of such services. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 484.

(b) Consent of Lords of Admiralty to Proceedings.

2305. No claim on account of any salvage services rendered to any ship or cargo, or to the appurtenances of any ship, by the commander or crew or part of the crew of any of her Majesty's ships, shall be finally adjudicated upon unless the consent of the Admiralty has first been obtained. Ibid. s. 485.

2305a. Such consent is to be signified by writing under the hand of the secretary to the Admiralty. Ibid.

2306. If any person who has originated proceedings in respect of any such claim fails to prove such consent to the satisfaction of the court, his suit shall stand dismissed with costs. Ibid.

2306a. Any document purporting to give such consent, and to be signed by the secretary to the Admiralty, shall be prima facie evidence of such consent having been given. Ibid.

(c) Ship's Agents.

2307. For provisions authorizing the ship's agent appointed to any vessel belonging to her Majesty to take proceedings on behalf of the officers and crew in causes of salvage, see the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864 (c. 24), s. 12.

10. Agreement to abide Adjudication and pay Salvage.

2308. As to proceedings where other ships besides those of her Majesty are salvors, and, the salvors waiving their lien, the parties enter into a written agreement to abide the decision of the Court of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty, and to give security to answer the salvage awarded; as to the agreement binding the parties and the property salvaged; and as to the statements to be made on both sides, and the transmission of the agreement and documents to the court, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 497, and tit. SALVAGE, c. 5.

11. Restrictions on Proceedings in Superior Court.

See tit. Costs, pp. 352—354, and Pt. II. c. 16, p. 1541, and No. 2238, p. 1694.

12. Leave to proceed in Superior Court.

See Pt. II. p. 1541.

13. Detention before Warrant.

(a) By Receiver of Wreck.

2309. For provisions in cases of salvage authorizing receivers of wreck to detain the property salvaged until payment is made, or process for its detention has been issued by some competent court, or security given to the receiver's satisfaction, Ibid. s. 468.

14. Bail.

2310. See Pt. II. c. 19, p. 1555.

2310a. The Court of Admiralty has power to enforce any bond given in pursuance of this act in any Vice-Admiralty Court in any part of her Majesty's dominions; and all courts in Scotland, Ireland, and the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark, and Man exercising Admiralty jurisdiction shall, upon application, aid and assist the Court of Admiralty in enforcing such bonds. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 493.

2311. A receiver of wreck, if (at any time previously to the issue of process from a competent court), security is given to his satisfaction for the amount of salvage due, may release from his custody any ship, cargo, wreck, or other property, detained by him; and where the claim for salvage exceeds £200 in England or Ireland, the Court of Admiralty of England or Ireland (and in Scotland the Court of Session) may determine any question concerning the amount of the security or the sufficiency of the sureties; and the salvor, or the owner of the property salvaged, or their respective agents, may institute proceedings in such respective courts to have the questions between them adjudicated upon, and the court may enforce payment of the bond or security, as if bail had been given in the court. Ibid. s. 468.

2312. As to the enforcement of similar bail taken before the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), by a receiver of Admiralty droits, see The Bagnall, 3 W. Rob. 118; 12 Jur. 1008; 6 Notes of Cases, 542.

15. Value of Property salvaged.

2313. See tit. SALVAGE, c. 8.

2313a. Where in a salvage action the defendants had given affidavits of value, which value had been accepted by the plaintiffs, the defendants were not allowed to give any evidence to reduce that value. The Hanna, 3 Asp. N.S. 503. But see No. 1817, p. 1645.

(b) *Proof of—before Release.

See Pt. II. c. 20, p. 1559.

16. Valuation of Property salvaged.

(a) By Agreement.†

(b) By Appraisalment.‡

(aa) Generally.

See Pt. II. c. 44, p. 1671.

2314. Ibid. p. 1672.

17. Release.

2315. In a suit for salvage of a derelict the court, on motion, allowed a portion of the cargo to be released on a moiety of the value, and a sum to answer costs being paid in. R. M. Mills, No. 243; July 19, 1860.

2316. As to release generally, see Pt. II. p. 1556.

20. Pleadings.

2317. In salvage actions the plaintiffs in their statement of claim should state fully the material facts of the service, and if such facts are admitted by the defendants, the court will not allow the plaintiffs at the hearing to amplify them by evidence except on special grounds. The Hardwick, 5 Asp. 199.

See also Pt. II. c. 34, p. 1614.

21. Proofs.

2318. But they are entitled to discovery and inspection of documents, though at their own risk and cost if ultimately proved unnecessary. The Maria, 4 Asp. 94.

See also No. 2320, infra.

See also tit. EVIDENCE, p. 458.

* (705) The owners, before they are entitled to a release of their property arrested in a salvage action, must file an affidavit of the values thereof. If these values are accepted, the release may issue. See as to the practice thereon, Pt. II. c. 20, p. 1559.

† (706) Or the values may be agreed on in a solicitor's agreement. See as to such agreements, Pt. II. c. 24, p. 1572.

‡ (707) If the plaintiff is dissatisfied with the values as set forth in the owner's affidavit of values, he may take out a commission for the appraisalment of the property; but he does so at the risk of costs, if the appraisalment is not largely in excess of the values stated in the affidavit. See tit. COSTS, p. 411.

§ (708) A commission of appraisalment may be taken out as of course, even after a valuation by the receiver of wreck.

(a) Losses and Damages to Salvaging Property.

2319. In a salvage action evidence of the specific injuries sustained by the salvaging ship and the cost of repairs thereof and of demurrage during repairs, was tendered in the Court of Admiralty, and rejected. Held, on appeal (by L.JJ. Baggallay and Lindley), that the judge is bound to receive such evidence, and to include the loss shown in his award, except in cases where such evidence is immaterial by reason of the property saved being too small in value to satisfy such loss, or by reason of the services being so trifling as to render it unjust that the loss sustained by the salvors should be borne by the owners of the salvaged property, or where from other circumstances it is obvious that the court cannot give an amount sufficient to cover the loss. But (per Brett, M. R.) that the admission of such evidence is entirely in the discretion of the judge, subject to his award being reviewed by the Court of Appeal in the event of its being shown that the rejection of the evidence improperly affected the amount of the award. City of Chester, 9 P. D. C. A. 182; 5 Asp. 311; 53 L. J. Adm. 90. See also The De Bay, 8 App. Cas. 559; The Gladiator, No. 1594, 29 April, 1864; and tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, Pt. I. c. 14.

(b) Protests.

2320. See tit. EVIDENCE, pp. 438, 461, and same tit. in Addenda.

2321. See Nos. 2317, 2318, supra.

22. Trial.(a) Generally.

2322. In a cause of salvage the owners appeared, but did not plead. Held, that they could not be heard by counsel at the hearing in depreciation of the services. The Emerald (2300), 13th Dec. 1864; and see Ord. XXVII. r. 11, No. 304.

2322a. As to trial generally, see Pt. II. c. 38, p. 1459.

See Pt. II. c. 38, p. 1641.

(c) Consolidated Actions.

2323. Where the interests of the plaintiffs in a consolidated salvage suit are adverse separate counsel will be heard on their behalf at the hearing. The Scout, L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 41 L. J. Adm. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 258.

(d) Rival Salvors.

2324. Rival salvors allowed to cross-examine each other's witnesses on the questions upon which the salvors were at issue, but upon those only. The Morocco, 1 Asp. N.S. 46.

23. Writs of Execution.

2325. A cause of salvage was brought by the owners, master, and crew of a vessel, and the salvors were condemned in costs. On application for an order against all the salvors the court granted it against the owners only. The Wilhelmine, 2 Notes of Cases, 218.

24. Payment out of Court.

See Pt. I. c. 10, p. 1486.

25. *Apportionment of Salvage.

2326. The court will not, as a matter of course, apportion the salvage awarded, but will leave it to the salvors to divide it amongst themselves amicably. It will, however, if applied to, proceed to a distribution. The John Bryant, 5 Jur. 233. [IRISH.]

2326a. See further as to apportionment of salvage, tit. SALVAGE, c. 17, and tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS.

2327. As to the practice in actions of distribution of salvage, see c. 16, infra.

26. On Appeal.(a) From Admiralty Division to Court of Appeal.

2328. As to the practice in appeals in salvage actions from the Admiralty Division to the Court of Appeal, see tit. APPEALS, pp. 51—55.

* (709) In salvage actions the salvage award will, on the application of any of the salvors, be apportioned by the court among them, but the application should be made at or shortly after the hearing of the cause, or any of the salvors may subsequently bring an action for the apportionment of the salvage awarded. See as to such actions, c. 16, infra.

(b) From Vice-Admiralty Courts to Privy Council.

2329. As to the practice on such appeals, see tit. APPEALS, p. 51.

(c) From Admiralty County Courts, Magistrates, and others, to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division.

2330. As to the practice on such appeals in salvage actions from the Admiralty County Courts, the Liverpool Court of Passage, Commissioners of Cinque Ports, and Magistrates, to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, see tit. APPEALS, pp. 56—59.

27. Costs.

2331. See tit. COSTS, p. 406.

2331a. And as to costs when cargo owners were made parties after decree against ship and freight, see The Peace, No. 2302, p. 1691.

16. Actions of Distribution of Salvage.

1. Generally.

2332. As to the apportionment and distribution of salvage generally, see tit. SALVAGE.

2333. As to particular cases of apportionment, see tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS.

2334. The 498th section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), imposes a duty on the Court of Admiralty on application made to decree an equitable apportionment of salvage, unless barred by an equitable agreement between the parties or an equitable tender. The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 95; 2 L. T. N.S. 575; 30 L. J. Adm. 16.

2335. When an owner thinks that a proper share of the salvage award has not been paid to him, his proper course is to bring the share so paid to him into court, to pray for a monition to the master to do the same, and to apply for an order of distribution, under section 498 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104). The Princess Helena, 1 Lushington, 190; 30 L. J. Adm.

137; 4 L. T. N.S. 869. But see now Pt. II. p. 1517.

2336. Applications for apportionment should be made at the time of or shortly after the award, while the circumstances are fresh in the mind of the court. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287.

2337. In an action by crew for distribution of salvage, the defendant's owners pleaded that after the gross amount of salvage had been determined the plaintiffs agreed to accept a particular sum. Held, that the defence was not demurrable under the 182nd section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), but that the court must determine at the hearing whether the agreement was an equitable one. At the hearing the court refused to disturb the agreement. The Africa, 5 P. D. 192; 49 L. J. P. D. 63; 4 Asp. 266.

2. Costs.*

2338. A steamer towed into port another steamer disabled by the breaking of her crank-shaft. Both steamers belonged to the same owners. The service consisted in towing a distance of about thirty miles without danger or risk. The salvaged steamer and cargo were of the value of £105,500. Fifteen of the crew of the salvaging steamer brought an action for salvage in the sum of £5,000, and arrested the ship, cargo, and freight. The court expressed its disapprobation at the institution of the action in the High Court and at the arrest of the property. It awarded the salvors £1 each and condemned them in costs. The Agamemnon, 5 Asp. 92.

17. Claims of Officers and Crews of Queen's Ships for Distribution of Salvage.

2339. Whenever any salvage or other award to officers and crews of her Majesty's ships shall have been paid into the account of her Majesty's paymaster-general at the Bank of England, or a government accountant as therein mentioned, the Court of Admiralty of England, or the court which may have awarded the salvage or monies, may direct the payment thereof of all costs, charges and expenses chargeable against it or incurred by the captor, his attorney or agent after such costs, charges and expenses have been allowed by the registrar of such court or his deputy. See the Naval Pay and Prize Act, 1854 (c. 19), s. 6.

or distribution of salvage, the question of costs will depend on the merits, e.g., whether the owners offered a proper distribution in the first instance.

2340. As to such costs, charges and expenses being taxed and allowed by the registrar of the Court of Admiralty before they are deducted therefrom, see the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864 (c. 24), s. 13.

2341. The Lords of the Admiralty, or any party claiming any interest in the proceeds of any such salvage or monies may, prior to the distribution thereof, resort to the Court of Admiralty to obtain the judgment of the court in that behalf, and the judge shall proceed to hear and determine the same, and any question of joint capture arising thereon; and such court shall have jurisdiction throughout her Majesty's dominions, and may enforce any decree or sentence of any Vice-Admiralty Court; and all Vice-Admiralty Courts in her Majesty's dominions are empowered and required to enforce within their respective jurisdictions all orders of the Court of Admiralty relating thereto. See the Naval Pay and Prize Act, 1854 (c. 19), s. 7.

2342. The judge of the Court of Admiralty may, on the application of the Lords of the Admiralty, or any person interested in any such salvage or monies, and on an affidavit that the proceeds of any such salvage or monies, distributable under the provisions of this act, or any papers or books relating thereto, are in the possession of any person, compel by process of the court, and by monition and attachment, the production thereof, and the paying and transferring of such proceeds into the naval prize account, and the answering to such interrogatories touching the same as the court may approve, and may make such order in the premises concerning the same, and the costs of such proceedings, as to it shall seem meet. Ibid. s. 8.

2343. For provisions for apportionment of the agent's percentage when the agent is charged, or more than one ship is concerned, to be settled, in cases of difference by the registrar of the Court of Admiralty, subject to an appeal to the judge, see the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864 (c. 24), s. 20.

2344. Where any question arises concerning the distribution of any money so distributable, or concerning any investment thereof, actual or intended, the Court of Admiralty shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the same; and any person claiming an interest in such money, or the Lords of the Admiralty, may apply to that court for a judgment on that question, and such decision shall be final. Ibid. s. 22.

2345. For provisions subjecting ships' agents to the authority of the High Court of Admiralty, Ibid. s. 11; and rendering solicitors incompetent to be ships' agents, Ibid. ss. 7, 23.

2346. For provisions for the registration in the High Court of Admiralty of the appointment of every agent, see the Navy Prize Agents Act, 1863 (c. 116), s. 11; and for his removal, Ibid. ss. 8, 9.

18. In Wages Actions.

1. Generally.

2347. Mariners are the favourites of the law, and placed particularly under its protection; The Minerva, 1 Hagg. 358; The Elizabeth, 2 Dodson, 407; The Juliana, ibid. 504; The Jane, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. 258 [LOWER CANADA]; The Jupiter, 2 Hagg. 221; The Hoghton, 3 Hagg. 112: especially foreign mariners, The Madonna d'Idra, 1 Dodson, 39.

2348. Questions of wages should be speedily settled. The Prince George, 3 Hagg. 377.

2349. In an action for wages by a British subject against a foreign ship, the nationality of the vessel and not the nationality of the person suing for wages regulates the course of procedure. The Nina, L. R. 2 A. & E. 44; 2 P. C. 38.

As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division and Admiralty Court in reference thereto, and the statutory limitation to cases over £50 and special contracts, Ibid. c. 2. As to the orders of naval courts as to wages and the conclusiveness thereof, see tit. JURISDICTION, Pt. II. c. 2, p. 690, and ibid. same part and chapter in Addenda. As to awards by superintendents of mercantile marine offices, the proceedings thereon, and the conclusiveness thereof, see tit. WAGES, c. 2.

2351. As to desertion by seamen, see tit. SEAMEN, Pt. V.

2352. For provisions for the protection of seamen, see tit. SEAMEN, Pt. IV.

2353. For the maintenance of discipline over seamen, Ibid. Pt. V.

2. By Foreigners.

(a) Generally.

2354. The Crown, on being memorialized by certain Greek mariners of a foreign ship sold under the authority of the Court of Admiralty, directed the king's proctor to take proceedings to recover their wages; and provided them with the means of subsistence and to return to their own country. The Madonna d'Idra, 1 Dodson, 37.

2355. Where the plaintiffs are foreign sailors, and charges are made for the expenses of their return home, a certificate of their consul thereon, and that they are returning at their own expense, must be produced. The Raffaeluccia, 3 Asp. N.S. 505; 37 L. T. N.S. 365.

(b) Notice to Consul.

See tit. WAGES, c. 2.

3. By Masters.

(a) Generally.

2356. A master of a vessel is not debarred from suing for his wages by the fact that he is a joint mortgagee of the ship. The Repulse, 2 W. Rob. 399.

2357. The master of a vessel has the same right to sue for and recover wages due to him as an ordinary seaman, but no more, and therefore he is not entitled to recover in an action for wages until he has been discharged, or the service has been otherwise terminated. The Hemisphere Borealis, 5 Jur. N.S. 180. [IRISH.]

2358. In a suit for his wages a master has, under the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), the same rights and privileges as ordinary seamen, and is in such a suit prima facie a necessary witness, and entitled to compensation for board and loss of time. The Olive, Swabey, 292.

2359. Neither error nor want of seamanship, nor improper refusal to sign a bottomry bond, can, in an action at law or in the Court of Admiralty by the master for his wages, be admitted as evidence in reduction of his claim if he continued in command of his ship. The Camilla, Swabey, 315.

2361. As to actions for master's wages, see tit. WAGES, cc. 2, 3.

2362. As to the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty over master's accounts and cases thereon, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 191, the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 10, and tit. MASTERS, pp. 1123—1128.

2362a. The master is bound to furnish accounts before bringing his action for wages and accounts, or he will be deprived of costs. The Fleur de Lys, L. R. 1 A. & E. 39.

2363. See also as to costs, No. 2360, supra; and tit. COSTS, p. 414.

2363a. As to references of such accounts to the registrar and merchants, see Pt. II. c. 40, p. 1652.

2364. As to the allowance of such accounts, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, Pt. I. c. 10.

4. Agreements.

(a) Generally.

2365. As to shipping agreements, see tit. SEAMEN, Pt. II.

* (711) In a cause of wages when the defendant does not deny wages to be due, but claims a set-off, the usual practice is for the defendant's solicitor, upon appearing, to give notice to the plaintiff's solicitor to the effect that he admits wages to have been earned, but will set up a counterclaim, and require the accounts to be referred to the registrar and merchants. Thereupon an agreement is usually entered into between the solicitors on both sides, that the matters of account relative to the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's counterclaim be referred to the registrar and merchants, and the reference proceeds according to the practice in other cases of reference.

(711a) If the plaintiff's solicitor will not enter into such an agreement, the defendant's solicitor must apply to the judge to order a reference of the claim and counterclaim to the registrar and merchants.

(b) Powers of Court to annul—.

See tit. SEAMEN, Pt. II.

5. Gradation of Wages on Promotion.

2366. A claim for a gradation of wages, first as mariner, afterwards as second mate, and then as chief mate, preferred by a person originally taken on board as supernumerary, and without any fixed rate of wages, pronounced for, with costs. The Porcupine, 1 Hag. 381.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 13.

6. Recovery of Wages of Seamen entering the Navy.

2367. For provisions in cases of a seaman leaving his vessel to enter the Royal Navy and being paid his wages by bill not duly paid when presented, that the accountant-general or the seaman may sue thereon and recover the amount thereon in the same manner as wages, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 215.

2368. For provisions, in case of any master of any British vessel leaving abroad any seamen unable to proceed, for the delivery by the master to the functionaries therein mentioned of a certificate thereon, and an account of wages, and the payment of the same by money or bill, and for the endorsement of such account on the ship's articles or agreement, Ibid. s. 209, and tit. SEAMEN, Pt. IV.

2369. For further provisions for the payment of such wages in money where practicable, and not by bill, and in cases of bill rendering the owner liable for payment thereof, that it shall not be necessary in proceeding against the owner thereon to prove that the master had authority to draw the bill, and that any bill so drawn and its endorsement, if produced out of the proper custody, shall be received in evidence, see the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 19.

2370. For provisions in cases of any seaman or apprentice belonging to any British ship, or of any British subject serving in any foreign vessel, being left abroad, becoming distressed, and being relieved, that the Board of Trade may sue for and recover his wages and expenses from the master, owner, or hirer, in the same manner as wages due to seamen, and as to the evidence in such cases, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 213, and the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 22. As to the extension of such provisions to foreign governments and vessels, see the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 91), s. 16.

2371. For provisions on discharge of any seaman abroad through sale of the ship or otherwise, that a certificate of discharge is to be given to the seaman, and funds are to be provided sufficient to defray the expenses of his subsistence and passage home; and if the master refuses or neglects to comply with these requirements, that such expenses, if defrayed by the consular officer at that place, or any other person (unless such seaman or apprentice has been guilty of barratry), shall be a charge upon the ship and the owners, and may be recovered against them with costs, at the suit of the consular officer or other person defraying such expenses, or, in case the same has been allowed to the consular officer out of the public monies, as a debt due to her Majesty either by ordinary process of law, or in the manner in which seamen are enabled to recover wages; and that such expenses, if defrayed by the seaman or apprentice, shall be recoverable as wages due to him, Ibid. s. 205.

See also tit. SEAMEN, Pt. IV.

9. Recovery of Expenses of Seaman's Illness or Injury.

2372. For provisions in case the expenses to be borne by the owner in respect of the illness, injury, or hurt of any seaman or apprentice, are paid by any consular officer or other person on behalf of her Majesty, that such expenses and costs shall be a charge upon the ship, and be recoverable against the master or owner in the same manner as wages due, and as to the evidence thereon, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 229.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 12.

10. Recovery of Wages of Deceased Seaman.

2373. As to the recovery of wages of deceased seaman, see tit. WAGES, c. 19.

11. Compensation for Ill-usage.

2374. For provisions that if any seaman on his return to the United Kingdom proves that the master or owner has been guilty of any conduct or default which, but for this enactment, would have entitled the seaman to sue for wages before the termination of the voyage or engagement, he shall be entitled to recover in addition to his wages such compensation, not exceeding twenty pounds, as the court hearing the case thinks reasonable, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 190.

See also tit. SEAMEN, Pt. IV.

12. Compensation for improper Discharge.

2375. For provisions that any seaman who has signed an agreement, and is afterwards discharged before the commencement of the voyage, or before one month's wages are earned, without fault on his part justifying such discharge and without his consent, shall be entitled to receive from the master or owner, in addition to his wages earned, compensation for the damage thereby caused to him, not exceeding one month's wages, and to recover such compensation as wages, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 167.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 14.

13. Compensation for bad or short Provisions.

2376. For provisions that in case the seamen's stipulated allowance of provisions is reduced during the voyage, or is of bad quality, compensation is to be given for the same, and to be recoverable as wages, see ibid. s. 223.

2377. And as to the vessels and crews to which such enactments apply, ibid. s. 109.

See also tit. SEAMEN, Pt. IV.

14. Waiver of Rights to Wages.

2378. For provisions that no seaman shall by any agreement forfeit his lien on the ship, or be deprived of his remedies for recovery of his wages; and that every stipulation in any agreement inconsistent with any provision of this act, and every stipulation by which any seaman consents to abandon his right to wages on the loss of the ship shall be inoperative, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182.

2379. For provisions that no wages of any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and that every payment of wages shall be valid, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment thereof, or of any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and that no assignment or sale of such wages made prior to their accruing shall bind the party making it; and that no power of attorney or authority for the receipt of any such wages shall be irrevocable, Ibid. s. 233.

2380. For provisions that, on the completion before a superintendent of a mercantile marine office, of any discharge and settlement, the master or owner and each seaman shall, in the presence of the superintendent, sign in a form sanctioned by the Board of Trade a mutual release of all claims, and that the superintendent shall attest it; and that such release shall operate as a settlement of all demands between the parties; and that a copy of such release, certified by the superintendent, shall be receivable in evidence on any question touching such claims, and have the effect of the original, Ibid. s. 175.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 15.

15. Deductions or Forfeitures.

2381. For provisions that whenever in any proceeding relating to seamen's wages it is shown that any seaman or apprentice has, in the course of the voyage, been convicted of any offense by any competent tribunal, and rightfully punished therefor by imprisonment or otherwise, the court hearing the case may direct a part of the wages due to such seaman, not exceeding £3, to be applied in reimbursing any costs properly incurred by the master in procuring such conviction and punishment, Ibid. s. 251.

2382. As to deductions from and forfeitures of wages, as to acts of misconduct entailing such penalties, and as to wages earned on illegal voyages, see tit. WAGES, cc. 16, 17.

2383. As to the entry of offences in log, see tit. EVIDENCE, pp. 434—437.

16. Who may sue.

2384. Infancy is no answer to a claim for wages accruing due after majority has been attained, although on a contract of hiring originally made under age. Thomas v. Waldo, 1 F. & F. 173.

2385. As to the parties who may sue in the Court of Admiralty as mariners for wages, see tit. WAGES, c. 3.

17. Who may defend.

2386. The result of a suit for wages mainly affected the owners of the cargo bottomried, as the more numerous the claims on the ship the less would be available from that source towards the satisfaction of the bond, and therefore the more would be payable towards the bond by the owners of cargo. The court allowed them to have a persona standi, as through the bondholder, to oppose the seamen's claims. The Union, 1 Lushington, 128; 30 L. J. Adm. 17; 3 L. T. N.S. 280.

2386a. See also as to parties and property liable, ss. 18 and 19, infra.

18. Parties liable.

(a) Owners.

2387. Part owners may be sued in the Admiralty by the mariners of their vessels for their wages. Alleson v. March (1689), 2 Vent. 181; Rawlinson v. Pagan, anno 1693, Marsden, p. 269; Wheeler v. Thompson (1738), 1 Stra. 707; Ragg v. King (1729), 2 Stra. 858; The Jack Park, 4 C. Rob. 311; The Stephen Wright, 12 Jur. 732; The St. Johan, 1 Hagg. 334.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 6.

(b) Masters.

2388. The master may be sued in the Admiralty by his mariners for their wages. Bayly v. Grant, 1 Salk. 33; 12 Mod. 444; 1 Ld. Raym. 632; Holt, 48; Anon. 2 Show. 86; Hook v. Moreton, 1 Ld. Raym. 397; The Jack Park, 4 C. Rob. 311; The Salacia, 7 L. T. N.S. 440; Ball v. Bright, anno 1713, Marsden, 303.

2389. And has his remedy against the owners. Buck v. Rawlinson, 1 Bro. P. C. 137.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 6.

(c) Other Parties.*

2390. Quære, whether, the ship having been sold, the proceeds being insufficient to pay the mortgagees thereon, and the owner being a bankrupt, a principal mortgagee has a sufficient interest to oppose a mariner's claim for wages? The Prince George, 3 Hagg. 377, 380.†

2391. Mortgagees in possession of a ship are in no better position than the owners with regard to the claims of the master. The Caledonia, Swabey, 17; 20 Jur. 48; 26 L. T. 177; 4 W. R. 183. See also The Union, No. 2386, supra; and as to mortgagee's right to defend such actions, Pt. II. p. 1503.

19. Property liable.

(a) Generally.

2392. An insured ship was lost, and the insurance recovered by the assignees of the owner, who had become bankrupt. Held, that the seamen were entitled to be paid in full out of the insurance money. In re Dawson, 1 Foub. N. R. 229; 17 L. T. 100.

(b) Ship.

2393. The Court of Admiralty has no authority to restrain seamen from proceeding against the ship for their wages, and to drive them to a personal action against the owners, even though the court may be satisfied that the owners are solvent. The Arab, 5 Jur. N.S. 417.

2393a. See also tit. WAGES, c. 5.

2394. No right to wages shall be dependent on the earning of freight; and every seaman and apprentice who would be entitled to recover wages if the ship in which he served had earned freight, shall, subject to all other rules of law and conditions applicable to the case, be entitled to claim and recover the same, notwithstanding freight has not been earned; but in all cases of wreck or loss of the ship, proof that he has not exerted himself to the utmost to save the ship, cargo, and stores, shall bar his claim. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 183.

2395. As to proceedings against British or foreign government vessels, see tit. JURISDICTION, Pt. I. pp. 668, 669. †

2396. A master had recovered judgment in an action at common law for his wages, which judgment remained unsatisfied in consequence of the defendant's bankruptcy. He had also proved his debt under the defendant's bankruptcy. Held, entitled to sue the ship in the Admiralty Court, notwithstanding the ship had been sold. The Bengal, Swabey, 468; see also

* (712) After an abandonment has been accepted by the underwriters, they become owners for the voyage, and are liable for the seamen's wages from the time they become owners. Hammond v. The Essex Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 4 Mason, 196. [AMERICAN.]

was authorized by statute to take cognizance of the claims of mortgagees.

† (713a) Mariners enlisting on board a ship of war or vessel belonging to a sovereign state cannot libel against the ship for wages due. Moitez v. The South Carolina, Bee, 422. [AMERICAN.]

The Tecumseh, 3 W. Rob. 111; 12 Jur. 985; 6 Notes of Cases, 533.

2397. See further, as to the mariner's lien on the ship for his wages, tit. WAGES, c. 15.

(c) Freight.

2398. Seamen may arrest the freight as well as the ship for their wages, and if the latter only is in the first instance arrested by them, and it appears that there are bottomry claims thereon, they may afterwards apply to have the freight arrested, and the court would be bound, ex debito justitia, to grant such a motion. The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. 94; The Juliana, 2 Dodson, 510, 516.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 15.

(d) Cargo.

2399. A mariner has no lien for wages on the cargo as cargo; his lien is upon the ship to the last plank, and upon the freight as appurtenant thereto; and so far as the cargo is subject to freight, he may attach it as security for the freight that may be due. Quære, whether on the loss of a ship, if any cargo were saved, it could be held to represent the freight? The Lady Durham, 3 Hagg. 200, 201.

2400. Against the cargo, quæd cargo, the seaman can have no claim for his wages, but quære, as to his claim against cargo, where freight has been earned, though not paid, and where the owner of the ship is the owner of the cargo, and the ship is lost, but the cargo saved. The Riby Grove, 2 Rob. 59.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 15.

20. Commencement of Right of Action.

2401. As to the termination of the contract or voyage, and the discharge of the seaman, see tit. SEAMEN, Pt. III.

2401a. As to what shall be deemed the commencement of the earning of wages and of the right of action for wages, see tit. WAGES, cc. 10, 11.

21. Warrant.

22. Consolidation.

2402. All or any one of the mariners of a ship may sue in the Court of Admiralty for their wages, and they may proceed jointly, notwithstanding their contracts are separate. Hook v. Moreton (1697), Ld. Raym. 398.

2402a. Wages actions may be consolidated. The Adventure, 3 Hagg. 153.

2403. And see as to consolidation of actions generally, Pt. II. c. 17, p. 1543.

23. Bail.

2404. As to bail and juratory caution, see Pt. II. c. 19, p. 1555.

24. Proceedings by Default.

2405. Where there are funds in court from the sale of a ship in an action in which the proceedings were by default, all preliminary proceedings may, in a subsequent action of wages, be waived, and the wages due paid out of the funds in court. The Juliana, 35 L. T. N.S. 410.

2406. As to proceedings by default generally, see Pt. II. c. 22, p. 1561.

25. Abatement and Revival.

28. Pleadings.

Ibid. p. 1614.

29. Proofs.

2407. For provisions that any seaman may bring forward evidence to prove the contents of any agreement, or otherwise to support his case, without producing or giving notice to produce the agreement, or any copy thereof, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 165.

2408. An abandonment of a ship which is relied upon as operating as a dissolution of the seamen's contract must be clearly proved. The Warrior, 1 Lushington, 476.

2409. It is not necessary for a mariner to prove his own discharge; the onus of proof of that is thrown on the other party. The Baltic Merchant, Edwards, 89.

2410. See further, as to the discharge generally of seamen, and the termination of the voyage, tit. SEAMEN, Pt. III.; and as to the commencement of their right to sue, tit. WAGES, c. 11.

2411. In a cause of wages in which the evidence was deficient the court ordered the suppletory oath to be administered to the plaintiff. The Josepha, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. 212 [LOWER CANADA]; 2 Brown's Civil and Adm. Law (2nd ed.), 385.*

2412. See also as to proofs in wages actions, and as to seamen, tit. EVIDENCE, cc. 27, 28, pp. 461—463.

30. Writs of Execution.

2413. For provisions that in all cases where any court, justice of the peace, or other magistrate, has power to order payment of any seaman's wages, penalties, or sums of money, then, if the party directed to pay the same is the master or owner of the ship, and the same is not paid as prescribed, any such functionary who made the order may, in addition to powers of compelling payment, direct the amount to be levied by distress or pointing and sale of the ship, her tackle, furniture, and apparel, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 523.

2414. See Pt. II. c. 44, p. 1460.

31. Payments into and out of Court.

2415. See Pt. I. c. 9, p. 1479, and c. 10, p. 1486.

32. Payment.

(a) Generally.

See also tit. WAGES, c. 19.

(b) To Consul of Foreign Seamen.

2416. In an action for wages by foreign seamen, if their consul intervenes and asks that payment of the wages due to them be made to him on their behalf, the court usually grants the application. The Timor, 9 L. T. N.S. 397; 12 W. R. 219. But see No. 2417.

2416a. When foreign seamen sue for their wages in the Court of Admiralty, the consul of their country residing here may, if he has paid their wages and the seamen have left this country, receive the wages on behalf of the seamen without any power of attorney from them for that purpose. The Charles, No. 1847, 20th October, 1863. But see No. 2417.

2417. When a ship has been sold in a cause in which no appearance has been entered and the proceeds remain in the registry, all preliminary proceedings in a cause of wages may be waived and the money due paid out of court. The Julina, 35 L. T. N.S. 410.

(c) Up to Judgment.

2418. A sailor whose claim for wages is pronounced for is entitled, under the M. S. Act, 1880 (c. 16), s. 4, to wages up to the date of the verdict. Delarogue v. S.S. Oxenholme & Co., 22nd December, 1883.

33. Repayment.

2419. The master who has paid the seamen their wages cannot recover them by action against the owners for such wages in the Court of Admiralty. Anon. Fort. 230; Woodward v. Bontham, 1 Ld. Raym. 3; The Duna, 6 Irish Jur. N.S. 358.

2420. But he may include them in his accounts against the owners, and recover them in an action for his wages and disbursements. The Duna, supra.

2421. As to the transfer of such liens with the sanction of the court, see tit. LIENS, p. 811.

2421a. As to their generally not being transferable without such sanction, Ibid.

34. Double Pay.

2422. For provisions that every master or owner who neglects or refuses to pay the seaman's wages in manner therein mentioned without sufficient cause, shall pay to him a sum not exceeding the amount of two days' pay for each day, not exceeding ten days, during which payment is delayed, and that such sum shall be recoverable as wages, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 187.

2422a. See also tit. WAGES, c. 14.

2423. As to the master being similarly entitled, see The Princess Helena, 1 Lushington, 190; 30 L. T. Adm. N.S. 138.

2424. As to the cases in which the master or seaman is, and is not, entitled to the statutory ten days' double pay for default in payment of his wages, see tit. WAGES, c. 14.

* (714) According to the old practice in the civil law courts, if the plaintiff had not made out his case, but had made half proof or more, the court might order the suppletory oath (which is to the effect that the contents of his pleadings are true) to be administered to him by way of further proof. See Dunlap's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.), 247 et seq., and the subject considered there. [AMERICAN.]

35. Liens.

See tit. WAGES, c. 15.

36. Priority of Wages over other Liens.

2425. As to the priority of master's wages and disbursements over other liens, see tit. LIENS, p. 831.

2426. And as to the priority of seamen's wages over other liens, Ibid. p. 832.

37. Laches.

38. Costs.

39. Security for Costs.

See tit. COSTS, p. 365, also Pt. II. p. 1555.

19. Claims in respect of Volunteers into the Navy.

2428. For provisions that any seaman may leave his ship to enter the Royal Navy, and that such leaving shall not be deemed a desertion, and that all stipulations as to forfeiture for so doing shall be void, and the parties inserting them being liable to penalties, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 214.

2429. The registrar, upon receiving any such application, is to give notice thereof in writing, and of the sum claimed, to the secretary to the Admiralty, and proceed to examine the application, and may call upon the registrar-general of seamen to produce any papers in his possession relating thereto, and may call for further evidence: and if the whole of the claim appears to him to be just, he is to give a certificate accordingly. Ibid. s. 218.

2430. If, however, such notice is so left, then the application stands referred to the judge in chambers, and his decision thereon is final, and the registrar shall certify accordingly. Ibid.

2430a. The registrar and judge have in every proceeding under this act full power to administer oaths, and to exercise all the ordinary powers of the court. Ibid.

2431. The registrar or judge (as the case may be) may, if he thinks fit, allow for the costs of any proceeding under this act any sum not exceeding five pounds for each seaman so quitting his ship; and such sum shall be added to the sum allowed, and be certified by the registrar accordingly. Ibid.

2431a. Every certificate so given shall be sent by post or otherwise to the person making the application, his attorney or agent, and a copy thereof sent to the accountant-general of the navy, who, upon delivery to him of the original certificate, with a receipt in writing from the master or owner making the application, shall pay the amount to the applicant. Ibid. s. 219.

2432. Such certificate and receipt absolutely discharges the accountant-general and her Majesty from all liability in respect to the monies so paid, or of the application. Ibid.

2432a. So much of the third part of this act as relates to seamen volunteering into the Royal Navy applies to all sea-going British ships, wherever registered, and their owners, masters, and crews, wherever they may be. Ibid. s. 109.

2433. For provisions that every person who, in making or supporting any such application, fraudulently alters or forges, or assists or procures to be forged, or fraudulently altered, any document, or presents or makes use of any such forged or altered document, or gives, or procures to be given, any false evidence or representation, knowing the same to be false, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, Ibid. s. 220.

2433a. As to the fees payable on filing such claims and on the registrar's certificate objecting thereto or ordering payment, see S. C. Fees, 1884, p. 19, Nos. 138—140.

Part IV.—INFERIOR COURTS.

1. The Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports.

1. Generally.*

2434. As to the names of the Cinque Ports and the boundaries of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports jurisdiction, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 676, n.

2435. All causes in the court shall be instituted as prescribed by the Rules and Orders for the High Court of Admiralty in England in force for the time being, and shall be carried on by petition and answer, and in all respects to termination conformably to those rules, as far as they can be or are applicable, to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, and are not hereby varied. See Rules for the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, made June, 1875, No. 1.

2436. The interpretation clause of those rules of the High Court of Admiralty is to be read by substituting the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports for the High Court of Admiralty. Ibid. No. 9.

2437. The ancient practice of the court continues in force where the Admiralty Court Rules and Orders are inoperative or inapplicable. Ibid. No. 2.

2438. The judge or his surrogate in all cases of doubt from time to time determines the practice of the court, on application at chambers, through the registrar. Ibid. No. 5.

2439. Including the direction within what time any pleadings or proofs are to be brought in or filed. Ibid. No. 6.

2440. The registrar is the examiner of the court. Ibid. No. 7.

2. Jurisdiction.

(a) Generally.

2441. As to the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and their boundaries, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 676, n.

(b) Concurrent Jurisdiction of Admiralty Division.

2442. As to the concurrent jurisdiction within the Cinque Ports of the Admiralty Division and the Cinque Ports Court of Admiralty, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 676.

3. Practitioners.

2443. All serjeants and barristers-at-law, and all solicitors, are entitled to practise in the court. See Rules for the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, made June, 1875, No. 10.

4. Pleadings, Proofs, and Printing.

2444. The pleadings and proofs are printed, unless the judge or his surrogate otherwise orders. Ibid. No. 3.

See also Nos. 2435, 2439, 2440, supra.

5. Fees.

2445. The registrar has the power to determine from time to time the fees and expenses to be paid or allowed to the serjeant of Admiralty. Ibid. No. 8.

2446. The fees are paid in money and not in stamps. Ibid. No. 4.

6. Appeal as to Salvage from Cinque Ports Commissioners.

2447. In all cases arising within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, as defined by the act 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 18, certain appeals may be made to the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports in lieu of the Court of Admiralty; and the instruments of appeal are to be lodged in the registry of the Cinque Ports, and the same discretion vested in the judge of the Cinque Ports Court as is by this act vested in the judge of the Court of Admiralty. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 33.

2448. As to the practice in the Admiralty Division on such appeals, see tit. APPEALS, p. 57.

2449. As to costs of such appeals, see tit. COSTS, p. 397.

2450. As to commissioners of Cinque Ports, see next chapter.

2. Commissioners of Cinque Ports.

2451. The Lord Warden of the Cinque

* (715) Seemle, the Rules and Orders of November, 1859, of the Court of Admiralty, though annulled as to the Admiralty Division by R. S. C. 1883, App. O., are therefore still in force. See, as to the same, Pritchards' Adm. Digest, 2nd ed. vol. 2, App. p. 233, and Roscoe's Adm. Practice, 2nd ed. App. III., p. 389.

Ports may nominate three or more substantial persons in each of the Cinque Ports, two ancient towns and their members, to determine any differences relative to salvage between the master of any vessel and the person or persons bringing her cables and anchors ashore from any roadstead or other place within their jurisdiction. The salvage is to be awarded within the space of twenty-four hours after such difference shall be referred to them for determination. Such commissioners shall, immediately after their nomination, proceed to elect a proper person, who shall be a notary or master extraordinary in Chancery, as their secretary or registrar, except as to the port of Dover, where the registrar of the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports shall be the registrar; and the secretary, or registrar, shall enter in a book all the proceedings of the commissioners and a copy of the awards they shall make. See 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 1.

2452. The deputy warden of the Cinque Ports, and lieutenant of Dover Castle for the time being, may also appoint such commissioners. See 9 Geo. 4, c. 37, s. 1.

2453. The commissioners may decide on all claims and demands whatever, by pilots, hovellers, boatmen, and other persons, for services of any description rendered to any vessel, within such jurisdiction, or for the saving within the jurisdiction of any goods or merchandise wrecked, stranded, or cast away from any vessel, the master or owners thereof, or their agents, being present at the place where the commissioners shall be sitting. The commissioners may examine the parties or their witnesses upon oath, which oaths may be administered by the secretary or registrar. See 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 2.

2454. No person appointed a commissioner has power to act in any other port or place than that from which his residence is not distant more than a mile. Ibid. s. 3.

2455. For provisions as to the fees to be payable to such commissioners, and the oath to be taken by them before acting, Ibid.

2456. The Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and the lieutenant of Dover Castle, the deputy wardens of the Cinque Ports and the judge of the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, two ancient towns, and their members, and any other officer specially appointed by the lord warden, and every of them, may perform within the jurisdiction all matters contained in this act, like any magistrate or commissioner appointed under this act. Ibid. s. 15.

2457. Quære, whether the requisites of the stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, providing that in proceedings for salvage before the commissioners of Cinque Ports a person should be present to represent the owners is a condition precedent, the non-compliance with which renders the judgment of the commissioners of no avail, or a condition subsequent, the absence of which would not render the award null and void. The David Luckie (1840), 9 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 211.

2458. As to appeals from Cinque Port Commissioners to the P., D. and A. Div., see tit. APPEALS, pp. 15, 57, and Ibid. in Addenda; and to the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, see No. 2447, supra.

2459. As to the costs of such appeals, see tit. CoSRS, p. 397.

3. Admiralty County Courts.

1. Generally.

2460. For provisions for the appointment of Admiralty County Courts and their districts, the jurisdiction thereof, and the procedure therein, see the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), ss. 2 and 5; the Amendment Act of 1869 (c. 51); and the County Courts Act, 1875 (c. 50).

2461. As to the powers of inferior courts having Admiralty jurisdiction to grant such relief or remedy, and give such effect to every ground of defence or counterclaim, equitable or legal (subject as therein mentioned), as fully as the High Court, see the Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), ss. 88—90, and tit. JURISDICTION, p. 675.

2462. Admiralty causes in a county court are heard and determined in like manner as ordinary civil causes there (except as regards the assistance of nautical assessors as therein mentioned). See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 10.

2463. For provisions as to the appointment and removal of assessors, the remuneration of registrars, scale of costs, and power to registrars to administer oaths and take evidence, Ibid. ss. 14—19.

2464. The jurisdiction conferred by this act, and by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), may be exercised by proceedings in rem or in personam. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 51), s. 3.

2465. The judge shall hear and determine Admiralty causes at the usual courts held within his jurisdiction, or at special courts to be held by him, and which he is required to hold as soon as may be, after having had notice of an Admiralty cause within the jurisdiction. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 13.

2465*a*. As to the powers by general orders for regulating the practice and procedure of the Admiralty jurisdiction of the county courts, the forms of processses and proceedings, the days and places of sittings for Admiralty causes, the duties of the judges and officers, and the fees to be taken, Ibid. ss. 35, 36.

2466. For the rules as to Admiralty actions in Admiralty County Courts, viz.: the sittings of the court, the institution of the action, summons, arrest, appearance, and release of property, transfer of action, second or cross-action, enforcement of orders, execution against vessel, transfer of sale, notice of defence in collision, tender, payment out of court, appraisal, records of court, copies, and assessors, see County Court Rules of 1886, pp. 154—162.

2467. As to forms of Admiralty proceedings in Admiralty County Courts, viz.: Præcipe on entering plaint, præcipe for permission for suit to be heard at a special place, summons, warrant, bail bond, order of release, præcipe to enter appearance, notice of hearing, order of transfer to High Court, order of transfer to county court, judgment, præcipe for and warrant of execution, order of transfer of sale to High Court, præcipe for paying in money, solicitor's acceptance of service and undertaking for bail, summons to assessors, order fining assessor for non-attendance, Admiralty actions book, Ibid. Nos. 317—337, pp. 362—371.

2. List of—

2468. For a list of the Admiralty County Courts, see Order in Council of Dec. 9, 1868; ibid. of Jan. 14, 1869; March 31, 1870; May 16, 1871; May 16, 1878; and June 29, 1882.

3. Assessors.

2469. In an Admiralty cause in a county court the cause shall be heard and determined like ordinary civil causes there; except that in any Admiralty cause of salvage, towage or collision, the judge may be assisted by two nautical assessors like the judge of the Court of Admiralty is assisted by assessors. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 10.

2470. In such causes the judge may, if he thinks fit, and shall, on request of either party, summon as general orders direct two nautical assessors, and such nautical assessors shall attend and assist accordingly. Ibid. s. 11.

2471. The registrar of each county court having Admiralty jurisdiction shall from time to time frame a list, to be approved by the judge of the Court of Admiralty before whom the same shall be laid by the county court judge, and without whose approval it shall have no validity, of persons of nautical skill and experience residing or having places of business within the district of the county court, to act as assessors in that court, and shall cause the list to be published in the London Gazette. Ibid. s. 14.

2472. Every person named in the list so framed and approved shall attend the county court under such circumstances, and in such rotation, and subject to such regulations, and receive such fees for his attendance, as general orders direct, and for every wilful non-attendance shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a penalty not exceeding £5. Ibid. s. 15.

2473. In any Admiralty or maritime cause the judge may, if he think fit, or on the request of either party, be assisted by two mercantile assessors; and all the provisions of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, with reference to nautical assessors, shall apply to the appointment, approval, summoning, and remuneration of such mercantile assessors. The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 51), s. 5.

2474. The judge of the county court is not bound by the opinion of his nautical assessors, but ought to give his judgment in accordance with his own opinion. The Aid., 6 P. D. 84; 50 L. J. P. D. 40; 4 Asp. 410, 432.

2475. See also, as to the appointment and removal of assessors, the County Court Rules, 1886, Ord. XXI. pp. 106—108.

4. Jurisdiction.

(a) Generally.

2476. As to the jurisdiction of Admiralty County Courts generally, and in actions of collision, damage to ships, damage to cargo, use or hire of ship, necessaries, salvage, and towage, and wages, see tit. JURISDICTION, pp. 677—680; and as to necessaries, repairs, and supplies, that tit. p. 1156.

2478. As to prohibition to such courts, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 680.

2479. The effect of the 9th section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, is to give the Court of Admiralty jurisdiction in cases of salvage, where the amount claimed exceeds £300, although the value of the property saved does not exceed £1,000. The Empress, L. R. 3 A. & E. 502; 41 L. J. Adm. 32; 1 Asp. N.S. 183.

5. Commencement of Proceedings.

(a) In which Court.

2480. Proceedings in an Admiralty cause shall be commenced—(1) In the county court having Admiralty jurisdiction within the district of which the vessel or property to which the cause relates is at the commencement of the proceedings. (2) If the foregoing rule be not applicable, then in the county court having Admiralty jurisdiction in the district of which the owner of the vessel or property to which the cause relates, or his agent in England, resides; or if such owner or agent does not reside within any such district, then in the county court having Admiralty jurisdiction the district whereof is nearest to the place where such owner or agent resides. (3) If for any reason the last foregoing rule is not applicable or cannot be acted on, then in such county court having Admiralty jurisdiction as general orders direct. (4) In any case in the county court or one of the county courts having Admiralty jurisdiction in which the parties by a memorandum, signed by them or by their attorneys or agents, agree shall have jurisdiction in the cause. The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 21.

6. Restrictions on Proceedings in Superior Courts.

2481. For the restrictions by way of costs on actions in the superior court proper to be tried in an inferior court, see tit. COSTS, pp. 350—354, and Pt. II. c. 16, p. 1541.

(b) Costs and Damages.

See tit. COSTS, p. 371.

7. Transfer to or from Admiralty Division.

See Pt. II. c. 15, p. 1536.

(b) Costs.

2482. If a cause be removed from an inferior court, having jurisdiction in the cause, the costs in the court below shall be costs in the cause. Ord. LXV. r. 3, No. 978.

8. Leave to proceed in Admiralty Division.

See Pt. II. c. 16, p. 1541.

9. Arrest.

2483. In an Admiralty cause in a county court, if evidence be given to the satisfaction of the judge, or in his absence the registrar of the court, that it is probable that the vessel or property to which the cause relates will be removed out of the jurisdiction of the court before the plaintiff's claim is satisfied, it shall be lawful for the said judge, or in his absence for the registrar, to issue a warrant for the arrest and detention of the said vessel or property, unless or until bail to the amount of the claim made in such cause, and to the reasonable costs of the plaintiff in such cause, be entered into and perfected, according to general orders, by or on behalf of the owner of the vessel or property or his agent, or other the defendant in such cause; and, except as in this section expressly provided, there shall be no arrest or detention of a vessel or property in an Admiralty cause in a county court otherwise than in execution. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 22.

2483a. Semble, where a vessel is already under the arrest of the High Court of Admiralty, it is not necessary to arrest her in actions instituted in an Admiralty

County Court. The Turliani, 2 Asp. N.S. 603.

2484. A vessel under arrest of the Court of Admiralty having been arrested in an Admiralty County Court, the possession fees of the officer of that court were allowed on taxation. The Rio Lima, L. R. 4 A. & E. 157; 43 L. J. Adm. 4; 2 Asp. N.S. 143.

See also as to proper service of warrant, The Palomares, No. 641a, p. 1528.

10. Evidence.

(a) Generally.

2485. Evidence taken in any Admiralty cause before the registrar of a county court, as the judge of a county court or general orders shall direct, shall be received as evidence in any other county court, saving all just exceptions; and the registrar of any county court shall, for the purpose of the examination of any witnesses within the district of that court, have all and the like powers and authorities of an examiner of the High Court of Admiralty of England, and evidence taken by him in that capacity shall be received as evidence in the High Court of Admiralty of England, saving all just exceptions. The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 20.

(b) In Shorthand.

2486. In every Admiralty cause, where there is any prospect of an appeal, notes of the evidence in the county court should be taken by some reporter duly appointed. The Busy Bee, L. R. 3 A. & E. 527.

11. Sale.

2487. For the execution of any decree or order of a county court in an Admiralty cause the court may order, and the registrar on such order may seal and issue, and any officer of the court may execute, process according to general orders; provided that where under such process a vessel or property would or might be sold, then, if the owner desires the sale to be conducted in the High Court of Admiralty instead of the county court, he shall be entitled, on security for costs being first given, and subject to other provisions in general orders, to obtain an order of the county court for transfer of the proceedings for sale, with or without (as the judge of the county court thinks fit) the transfer of the subsequent proceedings in the cause, to the High Court of Admiralty, which court shall have jurisdiction accordingly, see the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 23.

2488. A solicitor desiring that the sale of any vessel or property should be conducted in the High Court of Justice, may at any time after judgment give security to the amount of £10, and deliver to the registrar an application for an order for the transfer of the proceedings for sale to the said court. The County Court Rules, 1875, Ord. XXXIII. r. 30.

2489. The registrar shall transmit such application to the judge for his order thereon, if the court be not sitting, and shall in any case certify on the application that the security for costs has been given. Ibid. r. 31.

12. Decrees and Orders.

2490. Such decrees and orders of county courts in Admiralty causes as general orders direct shall be registered with the registrar of county court judgments in London as general orders direct. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 24.

13. Process.

2491. The decree of the court in an Admiralty cause shall be enforced against the person summoned as defendant like decrees of the court in ordinary civil causes, except as therein otherwise provided. Ibid. s. 12.

14. Costs.

2492. As to a scale of costs in proceedings in Admiralty County Courts being prescribed by general orders, Ibid. s. 18.

2493. As to the court fees in Admiralty actions, see the Treasury Order; as to court fees, of October, 1875, Sched. B. Pt. IV.

2493a. As to costs in Admiralty actions; see County Court Rules of 1876, Ord. XXXVI.

15. Appeals.

(a) Generally.

See tit. APPEALS, pp. 13, 56, and ibid. in Addenda; as to practice in such appeals, Ibid. p. 56, and ibid. in Addenda.

(b) Evidence.

Ibid. c. 14, p. 56, and ibid. in Addenda.

(c) Salv.

See tit. APPEALS, p. 56.

(d) Security for Costs.

See tit. COSTS, p. 369.

(e) Costs.Ibid. p. 397.

4. Sheriff's Court of City of London.*

2494. The City of London Court has the same jurisdiction as an Admiralty County Court. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 (c. 71), s. 2; Order in Council of 14 January, 1869; Allen v. Garbutt, 6 Q. B. D. 165; 50 L. J. C. L. 141; and Roscoe's Adm. Practice, 2nd ed. p. 113.

2495. As to appeals from the City of London Court to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, and the practice on such appeals, see tit. APPEALS, pp. 13, 56

5. The Liverpool Court of Passage.

2496. As to the Liverpool Court of Passage having the same jurisdiction as the Liverpool Admiralty County Court, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 681.

2497. As to its practice, procedure and forms being the same as those of the High Court, Ibid.

2498. As to appeals from the Liverpool Court of Passage to the P. D. & A. Div., see Ord. LIX. r. 4, No. 887, and tit. APPEALS, pp. 15, 57, and Ibid. in Addenda.

2499a. As to the jurisdiction of county courts generally and in claims for salvage, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 682.

2499b. As to restrictions on actions in superior courts, see Pt. II. p. 1541; as to the transfer of actions to and from superior and inferior courts, Ibid. p. 1536; and as to leave to proceed in the superior court, Ibid. p. 1541.

2499c. As to costs in this court, see Rules of 8th February, 1869.

6. County Courts.

2500. For provisions relating to the general procedure and practice in county courts, see the County Courts Act, 1846 (c. 95); 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 44; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142; and the County Courts Act, 1875 (c. 50); and for further powers to make rules of practice for county courts (extending sect. 91 of Judicature Act, 1873, see the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1881 (c. 68), s. 27.

2500a. For the rules and orders made under such powers, see the County Court Rules, 1886, with forms and scales of costs and fees.

2. Jurisdiction.

See tit. JURISDICTION, Pt. I. p. 682.

3. Assessors.

2501. In any action or proceeding the judge may, if he thinks fit, on the application of either party, summon to his assistance, in manner prescribed by rules of court, one or more persons of skill and experience in the matter, who may be willing to act as assessors, and their remuneration shall be prescribed by rules of court, and shall be costs in the cause unless otherwise ordered; but where any person is proposed to be summoned as assessor, objection to him, either personally or in respect of his qualification, may be taken by either party in manner prescribed by rules of court. See the County Courts Act, 1875 (c. 50), s. 5; and as to their appointment and removal, see County Court Rules, 1886, Ord. XXI. p. 106.

4. Costs in Proceedings remitted from Superior Court.

See tit. COSTS, p. 353.

* (717) As to the boundaries of the court's Admiralty jurisdiction, see Order in Council of 14 January, 1869.

(718) The practice of the court in the Admiralty branch of its jurisdiction is the same as in other Admiralty County Courts.

† (719) As to county courts, their jurisdiction generally and concurrently with the Queen's Bench Division over cases of tort and contract embracing cases of collision, necessities, repairs, supplies, and salvage, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 682.

7. Magistrates.

1. Generally.

2502. When any district within which any court or magistrate has jurisdiction, is situate on the coast of any sea, or abutting on or projecting into any bay, channol, lake, river, or other navigable water, every such court or functionary has jurisdiction over any ship or boat being on, lying or passing off such coast, or in or near such bay, channel, lake, river, or navigable water, and over all persons on board belonging thereto, as if such ship, boat, or persons were within the limits of the original jurisdiction of such court or functionary. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 521.

2. Collision.

2503. As to the powers and jurisdiction of magistrates in respect of damage not exceeding £50, by any vessel or float of timber, to any harbour, dock, pier, quay, or works connected therewith, and in dockyard ports, and also in the Mersey, see tit. COLLISION, p. 199.

3. Salvage.

2504. As to the powers and jurisdiction of magistrates in reference to salvage disputes where the amount claimed does not exceed £200, and where the value of the property salvaged does not exceed £1,000, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 682, and Ibid. in Addenda.

2505. One of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, or in Ireland the lord lieutenant or other chief governor, may appoint a rota of justices for any borough or county to have jurisdiction in salvage cases. When no such rota is appointed the salvors by writing addressed to the justice's clerk may name one justice, and the owner of the property saved may name the other. If either party fails to name a justice in a reasonable time, the case may be tried by two or more justices at petty sessions. See M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 49.

2505a. Any stipendiary magistrate and any county court judge in England, the sheriff or sheriff substitute of any county in Scotland, and in Ireland the recorder of any borough or chairman of quarter sessions, may exercise the same jurisdiction as is given to two justices. Ibid.

2506. One of her Majesty's secretaries of state may determine a scale of costs to be awarded in salvage cases by such justices or court. All the other provisions of the principal act as to summary proceedings in salvage cases and the prevention of unnecessary appeals thereon extend to all such proceedings, whether under the principal act, this act, or both acts. Ibid., and M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 519.

2507. Every dispute with respect to salvage may be heard on the application of either the salvor or the owner of the property salvaged, or their respective agents. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460.

2508. When any dispute as to salvage is referred to the arbitration of two justices, they may determine the same, with the assistance of a person conversant with maritime affairs as assessor, or appoint some such person to decide as umpire; and such justices or their umpire shall make an award as to the salvage payable, within the following times, viz.:—the justices within forty-eight hours after such dispute has been referred to them, and the umpire within forty-eight hours after his appointment, but with power to both justices or umpire by writing under their hands to extend the time. Ibid. s. 461. See also The Adolphe, 2 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 285.

2509. Every assessor and umpire so appointed is to be paid such sum not exceeding £5 as the Board of Trade may direct; and all costs of such arbitration, including such payments, shall be paid by the parties as the justices or umpire may direct. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 462.

2510. The justices or umpire may call for the production of documents in the power of either party, and examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the necessary oaths. Ibid. s. 463.

2510a. As to the mode of obtaining a valuation of the salvaged property by a

* (720) It is the duty of the magistrates or their clerk to cause a correct copy of the evidence to be taken down at the time it is given, in case of appeal, and it is the duty of the receiver of wreck to call the attention of the magistrates to this requirement. See Board of Trade Instructions to Receivers and Officers of Customs and Coastguard, as to Wreck and Salvage, anno 1886, p. 34.

receiver of wreck for the purpose of such proceedings, see Part II. c. 44, p. 1672.

2511. In an original proceeding in the Admiralty Court for salvage, in which an award has been made by a magistrate, quare, is not the owner, not appealing from the award, though refusing to pay the sum awarded, bound by the award? The Hector, 3 Hagg. 93.

2511a. £60 was awarded by magistrates. The owners did not appeal, but refused to pay, and tendered £35 10s. in lieu thereof. On an original proceeding for salvage in the Admiralty Court, £60 awarded, with costs of salvors. Ibid.

2512a. As to the payment of the salvage awarded to the receiver of wreck for distribution, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 466, 467.

2513. A first set of salvors who, while in possession, were assisted in the service by a second set of salvors, held, nevertheless, to have a primary interest, and therefore a right to choose their own jurisdiction (viz. whether to proceed for an award by magistrates or by an action in the Court of Admiralty). They having elected to proceed before magistrates, the second salvors, who instituted proceedings in the Admiralty Court, held to have acted improperly in so doing, and in not intervening in the proceedings before the magistrates as their proper course. Quare, if parties have equal rights, would a resort to the subordinate jurisdiction, when objected to, be proper? The Eugene, 3 Hagg. 159, 160.

(b) Costs and Damages.

2514. A salvage service took place on the high seas, and the case was heard by consent before two justices of the peace, who awarded £53. The salvors subsequently entered an action in the High Court of Admiralty, and arrested the vessel. The owners tendered the £53, which, after the vessel had been for some time under arrest, was accepted. Held, that the owners were entitled to costs and damages. The Nautilus, Swabey, 105; and see also tit. Costs, p. 371.

2514a. On appeal, prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), from an award of a magistrate in a suit for wages, objections to the jurisdiction of the magistrate overruled as urged too late. Held, that they should have been urged under protest before the magistrate. The Minerva, 1 Hagg. 58.

2514b. The award of magistrates in cases of seamen's wages not exceeding £50 is final. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 188.

4. Seamen's Wages.

See tit. WAGES, c. 2.

5. Wreck.

See tit. JURISDICTION, p. 683, and tit. WRECK.

6. Powers for enforcing Payment.

2515. In all cases where any court, justices, or magistrate, have power to make an order for payment of any seamen's wages, penalties, or other monies, then, if the party so directed to pay the same is the master or owner of a ship, and the same is not paid as prescribed in the order, such functionary may, in addition to his other powers of compelling payment, direct the amount to be levied by distress or pointing and sale of the ship, her tackle, furniture, and apparel. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 523.

2516. Service of any summons or other matter in any legal proceeding under this act shall be good service, if made personally on the person to be served, or at his last place of abode, or if made by leaving such summons for him on board any ship to which he may belong, with the person being or appearing to be in command or charge of such ship. Ibid. s. 522.

2517. No order for the payment of money shall be made under this act in any summary proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom, unless such proceeding is commenced within six months after the cause of complaint arises; or, if both or either of the parties happen during such time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless the same is commenced within six months after they both first happen to arrive or to be at one time within the same. Ibid. s. 525.

2518. And no such order for payment of money shall be made in any summary proceeding instituted in any British possession, unless such proceeding is commenced within the same time with, however, a similar qualification. Ibid.

2519. And no provision contained in any other act or ordinance for limiting the time for summary proceedings shall affect any summary proceeding under this act Ibid.

2520. A distress for seamen's wages cannot be levied while the ship is under arrest of the Court of Admiralty. The Westmoreland, 4 Notes of Cases, 173.

7. Punishment of Offenders and Recovery of Penalties.

See tit. OWNERS, Pt. II. p. 1254, and tit. SEAMEN, Pt. V.

8. Fees.

2521. As to the fees in salvage cases to assessors and umpires, to clerks of justices, to witnesses and to practitioners, see Maude & Pollock on Merc. Ship. (4th ed. by Pollock & Bruce), vol. 2, p. ccccxxvi.; Roscoe's Adm. Practice, 2nd ed. p. 387; and Board of Trade Instructions as to Wreck and Salvage, anno 1886, p. 35.

See also Nos. 2506 and 2509, supra.

9. Appeals.

2522. As to appeals from awards of magistrates to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, see Ord. LIX. r. 4, No. 887, and tit. APPEALS, p. 58, and Ibid. in Addenda.

8. Vice-Admiralty Courts.

1. Generally.*

2523. As to Vice-Admiralty Courts generally, their jurisdiction and powers, see tit. JURISDICTION, pp. 686—689.

2523a. As to the concurrent jurisdiction with such courts of the Admiralty division or High Court of Admiralty, Ibid. p. 689.

2525. As to prohibition to such courts, Ibid. p. 689.

2526. As to the power of appointment of the judges and officers of Vice-Admiralty Courts, Ibid. p. 686.

2527. As to the practitioners in such courts, Ibid. p. 688.

2528. For the rules of practice now in force in Vice-Admiralty Courts, see Rules as to same established by Order in Council of Aug. 23, 1883.

2529. For forms of the different writs, warrants, pleadings, orders, decrees, and other instruments and minutes to be used in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, see Appendix I. to Ibid. Nos. 1—71.

2530. In all cases not provided for in the Vice-Admiralty Court Rules of 1883, the practice of the Admiralty Division of the High Court is to be followed. Ibid. 207.

2531. When a proctor in a Vice-Admiralty Court is called upon to produce a proxy under sect. 40 of the rules and regulations (now annulled) made pursuant to 2 Will. 4, c. 51, s. 1, and Order in Council of June 27, 1832, and produces a proxy on the face of it duly signed and sealed, the onus probandi lies upon the party impeaching its authenticity. The Eugene, L. R. 4 P. C. 8; 41 L. J. Adm. P. C. 17; 1 Asp. P. C. N.S. 155.

2. Assessors.

2532. See Rules of Practice for Vice-Admiralty Courts under Order in Council of 23 August, 1883, Nos. 106, 107.

3. Registrars and Officers.

2533. The registrar of a Vice-Admiralty Court held not responsible for money transmitted to England on an appeal, it having been sent under proper precautions, and in the usual course of business, to be deposited in the Bank of England, and afterwards lost by the failure of the consignee. The Prima Vera, Edwards, 23.

4. Caveats.†

2534. See Rules of Practice for Vice-Admiralty Courts under Order in Council of 23 August, 1883, Nos. 159—167.

5. Payments into and out of Court.

2535. Ibid. Nos. 156, 157, 158, and 171.

* (721) The regulations as to Vice-Admiralty Courts under Order in Council of 27th June, 1832; the 25th section of rules under Order in Council of 25th June, 1851; additional rules under Order in Council of 6th July, 1859; and those rules as extended to other Vice-Admiralty Courts by subsequent Orders in Council, are annulled by Rules of Practice for Vice-Admiralty Courts made under Order in Council of August, 1883; and see note to The Albion, 1 Asp. N.S. 481.

† (722) These relate to caveat payments, caveat warrants, and caveat releases; and are similar to the practice in regard thereto in the High Court.

6. Actions.

2536. As to actions being of two kinds, in rem and in personam; as to actions for condemnation of property or for forfeiture being instituted in the name of the Crown; and as to the title and numbering of actions, see Rules of Practice for Vice-Admiralty Courts under Order in Council of 23 August, 1883, Nos. 2—4.

7. Parties.

2537. As to any number of parties interested being joined in the same action; as to the power of the judge to direct persons to be made parties and give directions thereon; and as to underwriters or insurers being deemed interested parties, Ibid. Nos. 23—25.

8. *Writs of Summons and Warrants.

2538. See, as to practice and forms, Ibid. Nos. 5—18, and Nos. 28—38.

9. Appearance, Bail, and Release.†

2539. See, as to practice and forms, Ibid. Nos. 19—22, and 39—53.

10. Consolidation of Actions.

2540. Ibid. Nos. 27, 28.

11. Interlocutory Proceedings.(a) Motions.

12. Discontinuance.

14. Preliminary Acts.

2545. Vice-Admiralty Courts should use the form of Preliminary Acts in use in the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice. The Norma, 3 Asp. N.S. 272; 35 L. J. P. C. 418. For rules as to, and forms of, Preliminary Act, Ibid. No. 54.

* (723) The rules on this head are very similar to those now in force in the High Court.

† (724) The rules on this head are similar to those in force in the High Court; but the judge has power to accept one surety as sufficient, and one or more bonds may be filed.

15. Pleadings.

2546. Actions are to be heard without pleadings unless the judge shall otherwise order. The statement of claim is called the petition, and the statement of defence the answer. Each pleading is to be filed, the petition within one week from the order for pleadings, and the other pleadings within one week from the filing of the previous pleadings. Sets-off or counterclaims may be pleaded, and powers of amendment are given. Ibid. Nos. 55—61.

16. Proofs.(a) Generally.

2547. Ibid. Nos. 82—86.

(b) Examination of Witnesses in Court.

2547a. In collision cases in the Vice-Admiralty Courts witnesses should as far as possible be examined vidæ voce before the court, and not upon written interrogatories before an officer of the court prior to the hearing. The Norma, 35 L. J. P. C. 418.

(c) Examination of Witnesses before Trial.‡

2548. See Rules of Practice of 1883, Nos. 96—103.

2549. The judge may order interrogatories to be answered, or discovery as to documents, and notices to admit documents or facts, may be filed. Ibid. Nos. 62—67.

17. Printing.

2553. The judge may order the whole or part of the pleadings or written proofs to be printed. Ibid. Nos. 104, 105.

‡ (725) These rules are similar to those in the High Court, but the only parties to take the evidence are a judge, registrar or commissioner. The judge may order the evidence to be taken in shorthand.

§ (726) These are similar formal regulations to those in the High Court.

18. *Trial.

2554. Ibid. Nos. 108—117.

19. Judgments and Orders.

2555. For forms, Ibid. App. I. Nos. 52, 53, 63, 65, 68, 70.

23. Actions of Salvage.(a) Generally.

2559. As to the jurisdiction of Vice-Admiralty Courts in actions of salvage, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 688.

(b) By H.M.'s Ships.

2560. As to no claim being allowed in respect of loss or damage to H.M.'s ships, their tackle or stores, or for the use thereof in rendering salvage services, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 498, and tit. SALVAGE, c. 5.

(c) By Officers and Crews of H.M.'s Ships Abroad.

2561. As to proceedings in Vice-Admiralty Courts in cases of salvage rendered by H.M.'s ships out of the United Kingdom, and for seas adjoining, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 486—497, and tit. SALVAGE, c. 5.

2562. As to the delivery in such cases to the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Courts by the salvors, and also by the master or officer in charge of the salvaged property of a statement on oath relating to the salvage service, and containing the particulars therein mentioned, Ibid.

2563. As to the power of the judge if either of such statements are not delivered to him within the time required to proceed ex parte, Ibid.

2564. As to the judge not being at liberty to require the cargo to be unladen, Ibid.

2565. As to the bond to be thereupon executed to answer the claim for salvage, and the fixing of the amount thereof by the judge, Ibid.

2566. As to the notice of the sum so fixed being sent by the judge to the salvor and master respectively, Ibid.

2567. As to the execution of the bond before the judge, and the attestation thereof by him, Ibid.

2568. As to the right of detention of the property salvaged ceasing on the delivery of the bond to the master, unless the property is owned by persons domiciled out of her Majesty's dominions, in which case before such right ceases the master must procure sufficient security to the satisfaction of the judge for the performance of the conditions of the bond, and place the bond in the custody of the judge, or, if the salvor desires it, with some other appointee of his jointly with the judge, Ibid.

2569. As to the transmission by the judge of such statements and documents to the Court of Admiralty of England, if the case is to be adjudicated upon there, or to the Vice-Admiralty Court of the place if it is to be adjudicated upon there, Ibid.

2570. As to the bond binding the owners of ship, freight and cargo, and their representatives, for the amount of salvage adjudged, Ibid.

2571. As to the enforcement of the bond and other security, and the powers of the Vice-Admiralty Court in reference thereto, Ibid.

2572. As to the exercise of similar powers by consular officers, Ibid.

(d) Agreement to abide Adjudication and pay Salvage.

2573. As to proceedings where other ships besides those of her Majesty are salvors, and, the salvors waiving their lien, the parties enter into a written agreement to abide the decision of a Vice-Admiralty Court, or the Court of Admiralty, and to give security to answer the salvage awarded; as to the agreement binding the parties and the property salvaged;

as to the statements to be made on both sides, and the transmission of the agreement and documents to the Vice-Admiralty Court, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 497, and tit. SALVAGE, c. 5.

24. Actions of Apportionment of Salvage.

2574. As to the jurisdiction of Vice-Admiralty Courts as to apportionment of salvage, Ibid. s. 498.

2575. As to the powers of such courts to appoint any person to carry the apportionment into effect, and to compel the person in control of the salvage awarded to distribute it or bring it into court, and issue process accordingly, Ibid.

25. Other Actions.

2576. As to the jurisdiction of Vice-Admiralty Courts in other actions, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 688.

26. Costs and Fees.

2577. See Rules of Practice of 1883, Nos. 126, 132.

2578. For the court assessors, commissioners, and marshal's fees to be taken in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, Ibid. App. II.—VI.

2579. For the counsel's fees in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, Ibid. App. VIII.

2580. For the solicitors' costs in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, Ibid. App. VII.

2581. The allowance to witnesses are the same as in the High Court. Ibid.

2582. Ibid. No. 128.

2583. Ibid. Nos. 133—137.

27. Appeals.

2584. Appeals from Vice-Admiralty Courts lie to her Majesty in Council.

See the Vice-Admiralty Courts Act, 1863 (c. 24), s. 22.

2585. No appeal from a decree or order of a Vice-Admiralty Court is allowed, except by permission of the judge, unless it has the force of a final sentence Ibid.

2586.* A party desiring to appeal shall, within one month from the date of the decree or order appealed from, file a notice of appeal (a form of which is therein provided), and give bail in such amount not exceeding £300 as the judge may order to answer the costs of the appeal. See Rules of Practice of 1883, No. 150.

2587. As to such appeals including cases of collision and salvage, see tit. APPEALS, p. 7.

2588. As to the practice in appeals from Admiralty Courts to the Privy Council, see tit. APPEALS, pp. 30—43. But see No. 2586, supra.

(b) From Taxation of Costs and Charges.

2589. As to appeals from taxation of costs and charges in Vice-Admiralty Courts, see tit. APPEALS, p. 13.

(c) Stay.

2590. Notwithstanding the filing of the notice of appeal, the judge may, before service of inhibition, proceed to carry into effect the decree appealed from if the respondent gives bail to abide the appeal and costs. See Rules of Practice of 1883, No. 151.†

2591. The appellant is to cause the registrar to be served with inhibition, citation, and monition for process (as to which, see tit. APPEALS, p. 41), and on service of the inhibition and citation all proceedings are to be stayed. Ibid. Nos. 152, 153.†

2592. See tit. COSTS, p. 391.

* (730) This is an important alteration made subsequently to tit. APPEALS, pp. 32 and 33, passing through the press. Previously the Vice-Admiralty Courts followed the practice in the High Court of Admiralty of England, by which it was required that an appeal apud acta or in scriptis (as to which see p. 34, n.) should be interposed within fifteen days from the decree (see pp. 32 and 33 above referred to). That is now altered by the rule in the text requiring a notice of appeal to be given within one month.

† (731) The above rules, Nos. 150—153, relate to the proceedings to be taken in the Vice-Admiralty Courts in reference to appeals, and do not affect the statutory regulations in regard to the commencement and prosecution of the appeal in the Appellate Court (the Privy Council). As to these, see tit. APPEALS, p. 33, Nos. 334, 335.

Part I.—ACCOUNTS.

1. In Admiralty proceedings, when a ship is arrested on a specific demand before a reference of accounts to the registrar and merchants can be directed, it must be shown to the court that something is due, although the actual amount may properly be the subject of inquiry. The practice differs from a reference by a court of equity on an unsettled account, where the court directs an account to be taken, leaving it to be shown by the result on which side the balance lies. The West Friesland, otherwise Twentje, 13 Moore, P. C. C. 185; Swabey, 459.

2. When the evidence on a question of damages is nicely balanced, neither the court nor the registrar and merchants are justified in dividing the loss between each party, but judgment must be given according to the balance of evidence, bearing in mind on whose side the burthen of proof lies. The Agnes, No. 948, April 16, 1862; The Egyptian, No. 1321, July 15, 1864.

2a. A claim by the owners of a damaged vessel for loss sustained, estimated moderately to avoid litigation, having been rejected, and the matter afterwards referred to the registrar and merchants, the owners held not bound by their original estimate, nor barred of their right to prove an actual loss greater than that estimate. The Two Sisters, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 99.

3. As to the practice in regard to references to the registrar and merchants, see tit. PRACTICE, Pt. II. c. 40, p. 1648.

2. Interest.†

3. In Actions of Bottomry.*

1. Generally.

9. A decree pronouncing for the validity of a bottomry bond is conclusive as to the validity of the bond, and unless it is appealed from the bond must be considered as valid. At the same time it determines nothing with respect to the amount of money the bondholder is entitled to recover from the owners of the vessel. That is to be ascertained by the subsequent reference to the registrar and merchants. By this mode of proceeding the party promoting the suit obtains at once the realization of his security, whether it be ship, cargo, and freight, or the value of these as represented in the bail, and the party proceeded against is no less benefited in having the real extent of his liability ascertained by persons competent to the investigation, and that at a comparatively small expense. The Catherine, 3 W. Rob. 3.

9a. In a suit on a bottomry bond, the court, before deciding upon the validity or invalidity of the bond, referred the case to the registrar and merchants, to report, on the whole accounts, whether held entitled, in part discharge of his bond, to the freight, less the advances at M. for necessary ordinary disbursements and insurance, and the accounts of such advances were referred to the registrar and merchants to examine and report thereon accordingly. Held by them that the advances to be allowed must be both necessary and ordinary. The Salacia, No. 1251, Nov. 16, 1863. R. & M.

(5a) Repairs to the vessel, including a new mast, approved of by the master at the time, held to be necessary and ordinary disbursements within the meaning of the charter. Ibid.

(6) Cash advanced to the master (about £45), provisions for the ship (about £150), and charges of hire of coolies (about £12), and of "gharries" or conveyances (about £12), held to be necessary ordinary disbursements within the meaning of the charter. Ibid.

any and what balance was due to the bondholder upon which a bottomry bond could be taken, and any other special matter which might occur to them. The Ocean, 10 Jur. 505; 4 Notes of Cases, 410.*

10. In questions of accounts in cases of bottomry the onus probandi lies, in the first instance, on the bondholder, and he is bound to show what he has expended in the service of the ship. He ought to keep regular accounts, and to take regular receipts. The Catherine, 3 W. Rob. 4; 5 Notes of Cases, 402.

10a. The court, in making a decree in favour of a bottomry bond, will carefully scrutinize all the accounts, and will reduce any charge which appears to be unreasonable or exorbitant. The Fortuna, 4 Irish L. T. N.S. 840; 1 Asp. 123.

11. A proper necessity for a bottomry bond being shown, the court will not look narrowly into the charges, or investigate the accounts too rigidly, lest voyages should be defeated by ships being in want of credit in foreign ports. The Calypso, 3 Hagg. 164.

11a. The court having pronounced for a bottomry bond, and referred the accounts to the registrar and merchants to examine and report, objection by the bondholder that it was not usual so to refer accounts that had not been exhibited in the cause overruled, the court observing that it was proper the accounts should be audited, and that it was open to the bondholder, if affected by it, to make application to the court at a future time. The Nelson, 1 Hagg. 181.

12. When the legal effect of a bottomry bond is intended to be questioned before the registrar and merchants, it is more convenient that the reference to them should be made under the directions of the court. The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 384.

13. A lender on bottomry is in no case liable to average losses, but is entitled to the whole sum advanced, provided ship and cargo arrive at the port of destination, Walpole v. Ever, cited in 2 Park on Ins. 565, 898; unless a different rule prevails by the usage of trade in a foreign state, see Newman v. Cazalet, therein cited, and tit. AVERAGE, p. 95.

14. The value of a hypothecated vessel is her value at the moment of her arrival at her destined port, deteriorated as she may then be from the effects of the voyage, and not her increased value after a considerable sum of money has been expended in repairs. The Hendrica Gazina, 15 Irish Jur. (N.S.) 81.

15. A bottomry bond is prima facie evidence of a debt, but where any imputation is cast upon the bona fides of the transaction the burden of proof rests on the bottomry holder, and he must produce proper accounts to show the sums he claims to be actually due. The Wakefield, 5 S. C. Jur. 69.

16. Where a bottomry bond is admitted to be drawn in legal form, and entitled to payment, the parties are bound by the terms of the agreement therein, and the court will not refer the matter to the registrar and merchants to make such a deduction on account of the rate of exchange as is usually made in ordinary cases of mercantile negotiation. Application for such reference made by the owner rejected, with costs. The Jane Vilet, 2 Hagg. 92.†

17. The validity of a respondentia bond was admitted, and a reference ordered, to the registrar and merchants to decide what amount was payable under it. The registrar and merchants reduced the amount of the bond by lessening the charges in respect of certain metal and felt supplied to the ship, commissions payable to the agents, and the premium on the bond. On objection to the report, held, that it was within the jurisdiction of the registrar and merchants to reduce the amount, since the defendants were not bound to pay more than was sufficient to pay for things actually necessary for the ship and at a reasonable rate. The Pontida, 9 P. D. 102, 177; 5 Asp. 330.

18. Held, also, that the premium on the bond was excessive, and had been rightly reduced, and report confirmed. Ibid.

2. The Voyage.

19. Repairs and necessaries became necessary in consequence of an accident antecedent to a particular voyage; but the bond given to meet these expenses was not dated until after the completion of that voyage. Held, that this objection was not fatal, and that the bond was not

* (7) The court will order a reference to ascertain and report the actual constituents of a bottomry lien, the validity of which is contested. Furniss v. Brig Magoun, Olcott, invalidated on that account. The Mary Ann, 10 Jur. 256; 4 Notes of Cases, 390.

Adm. 55. [AMERICAN.]

20. Advances which may become the subject of bottomry must be advances made for the service of the ship during the particular voyage in which she is engaged. A bottomry bond given in a foreign port for payment of advances made for the release of the vessel from arrest, on account of debts and liabilities of the owner incurred anterior to the voyage in which the vessel was then engaged, or for debts arising from supplies and necessaries furnished to other ships though belonging to the same owner, would be held invalid, even though, according to the law of the country where the vessel lay at the time of bottomry, she might have been arrested and sold to discharge those former debts and liabilities. The Osmanli, 3 W. Rob. 211; 14 Jur. 93; 7 Notes of Cases, 322.

21. A ship arrived at Malta and was there arrested, under the warrant of a competent court in that island, for debts of the owner incurred, as well on account of the ship herself in former voyages, as for debts incurred on account of other ships engaged in the same trade, and the property of the same owner. In order to obtain her release, and to obtain coals and other necessaries, the master borrowed money on bottomry. Held, that the bond was invalid as to the money borrowed to release the ship, but valid as to the remainder. Ibid.

22. Charges upon the unloading of the outward cargo, i. e., damage done to cargo and short delivery of part, are not subjects of bottomry by the master (unless the owner consent thereto), even though the outward freight was withdrawn by the owner from the disposal of the master so as not to admit of his paying such charges therefrom, though the debts were just debts, and the ship was under charter to proceed on another voyage. Scoble, however, such charges would have been allowable if by the law of the port the ship could have been arrested for them. The Edmond, 1 Lushington, 57; 2 L. T. N.S. 194; 30 L. J. Adm. 128; The Prince George, 4 Moore, P. C. C. 21.

23. The rule derived from The Prince George (4 Moore, P. C. C. 21) with respect to items to be allowed in a bottomry bond is, that all expenses incurred in the port where the bond is given relating to the ship or crew, being expenses for which the master or owner of the ship is liable, and being necessary to enable the ship to proceed on her voyage, may be allowed, though including charges connected with the outward voyage. The Edmond, 1 Lushington, 211.

24. See further as to the expenses for which bottomry may be resorted to by the master in reference to the voyage, tit. BOTTOMRY, p. 123.

3. Premium.*

25. The lender on bottomry takes the risk of the vessel hypothecated effecting her voyage in safety. If she is lost on such voyage, the bond is forfeited thereby. On this account a higher rate of premium than legal interest, called maritime interest, is allowed, as a sort of pretium periculi. The Atlas, 2 Hagg. 52; The Boddingtons', Ibid. 425.

26. Three bottomry bonds of the same tenor having been put in suit and their validity admitted, reference ordered to the registrar and merchants to examine the charges, rate of exchange and currency. The Albion, 1 Hagg. 333.

27. The high rate of premium at which money may be lent on bottomry will not affect the validity of a bottomry bond, but is a proper subject for reference to the registrar and merchants. La Ysabel, 1 Dodson, 277; The Alexander, Ibid. 279; The Nelson, 1 Hagg. 179; The Heart of Oak, 1 W. Rob. 215; 1 Notes of Cases, 114; The Lord Cochrane, 2 W. Rob. 336; 8 Jur. 716; 3 Notes of Cases, 172; The Huntley, 1 Lushington, 24.

28. The court has the power, and has in some few instances exercised it, of reducing the amount of maritime premium stipulated for under a bottomry bond; but it will lean to support the rate of premium agreed for unless excessive. Maritime interest at 14 per cent. on a bond, reduced by the registrar and merchants (on reference to them) to 10 per cent., increased afterwards by the court to its original rate of 14 per cent. The Zodiac, 1 Hagg. 326.

29. The court has authority to reduce the premium on a bottomry bond if excessive or fraudulent; but it will only exercise this authority on clear and indisputable cause shown, and with great caution. £20 per cent. charged in a bottomry bond, and disallowed on reference to registrar and merchants, who substituted 12½ per cent., allowed by the court, and registrar and merchants' report overruled accordingly. The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 386.

30. In a bottomry bond taken at Calcutta, blanks had been left where the rate of premium ought to have been expressed. An affidavit was given in from the notary who drew the bond, and such affidavit stated that the omissions arose from his carelessness, and that £30 per cent. was the rate agreed upon. The court pronounced for the bond, with such premium as the registrar should find to have been usual on such risks at the time and place the bond was taken. The Change, Swabey, 240; 5 W. R. 547; 29 L. T. 147.

31. A premium of 12½ per cent. on bills of exchange, disallowed. Objections to the report thereon, on the ground of such disallowances, overruled, but without costs. The Tartar, 1 Hagg. 14.

32. A bottomry premium of 20 per cent. on a voyage from St. Michael's, in the Azores, to the United Kingdom, was reduced to 12½ per cent. on the ground that it was considered very extravagant for so short a passage, with the security of a cargo of considerable value. July, 1883. R. & M. Their report was confirmed by the President and afterwards by the Court of Appeal. The Pontida, 9 P. D. 102, 177; 5 Asp. 331.

33. Bottomry bond given at Shields payable at New York. Vessel was compelled to put into Plymouth, where the voyage was abandoned. Held, that part of the risk having been incurred the premium could not be severed. Premium at the full rate pronounced for accordingly. The Dante, 4 Notes of Cases, 408.

34. But semble, that in the case of a ship not leaving the port in which the bond had been given, or being seized there under an embargo, or of the master while there changing her destination to a better market, the bondholder would be similarly entitled to payment of his bond, but no risk having been then incurred, no maritime premium would be due. Ibid.

35. A., intending to go a voyage, entered into a bottomry bond, but the ship not going the voyage, but lying all along safe in the port of London, the court decreed the defendant should lose the premium, and accept of his principal with usual interest. Deguilder v. Depiester, 1 Vern. 263.

4. Interest.*

36. Interest is legally due on a bottomry bond from the time stipulated for the payment of the bond; but when the bondholders are resident abroad and have no agent in this country, interest on the bond will not be decreed prior to the arrival of a power of attorney, authorizing the receipt of the principal. The New Brunswick, 1 W. Rob. 28.

37. Interest on a bottomry bond after decree refused, the court observing that interest after judgment was not usually allowed, unless the party who was to pay occasioned unnecessary delay. The Exeter, 1 C. Rob. 173. Semble, overruled by the cases below.

38. A bottomry bond pronounced for, with 4 per cent. interest from the time it became due. The St. Catherine, 3 Hagg. 250.

39. A bottomry bond having been disputed and afterwards admitted, but subject to a reference to the registrar and merchants as to accounts, disbursements, and rate of premium, objections to their report as to which had been partially admitted and partially overruled; interest on the bond at 4 per cent. from the time it became payable, pronounced for, with costs. The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 393.

40. The defendants in a bottomry action paid into the registry, by order of the court, a sum of money which proved larger than the amount finally pronounced to be due to the bondholder. The bondholder held, nevertheless, entitled to the full ordinary interest upon the latter sum from the date of the bond becoming due. The Edmond, 1 Lushington, 211; 2 L. T. N.S. 194; 30 L. J. Adm. 128.

* (12) In making up the decree, the sum lent and the bottomry interest are to be considered as the principal, and common interest upon this amount is to be added from the time the bond became due to the time of the decree. The Packet, 3 Mason's Rep. 255. [AMERICAN.]

41. The rate of interest allowed on a bottomry loan, and on the premium thereon after safe arrival, is 4 per cent. per annum; and a master has no authority in making a bond to bind the ship-owners or the cargo-owners to the payment of interest beyond such amount. The D. H. Bills, 4 Asp. 20.

5. Commission.*

47. The largeness of commissions will not invalidate a bottomry bond altogether unless the bond is successfully impeached on the ground of fraud. The Laurel, B. & L. 317; 1 Asp. 405; 9 L. T. N.S. 457.

48. The custom of a foreign port as to the allowance of a charge like commission deserves attention from the court, but when the custom is established by persons having the greatest interest in making such charges, and especially by a small community, the court will not be exclusively guided thereby. The Glennanna, 1 Lushington, 123.

49. Semble, on such a question as commission, clear proof of the charges generally allowed by the great mercantile firms in London, graduated according to the circumstances of the case and the locality, would be the best guide to the court. Ibid.

50. Two per cent. commission was charged on the value of ship and cargo, and ten per cent. interest charged on the whole bond extending to such commission, the bondholders having had the whole care and management of ship and cargo during the time the repairs to the ship were in progress, during which time a part of the cargo was unladen and reloaded. This commission was sworn to be a usual charge in the Baltic trade, but the evidence was conflicting. On objection to such commission and interest, the court, inclining to uphold the commission, held it was unnecessary for the bondholder to show the existence of such custom in all cases of bottomry, and referred the accounts to the registrar and merchants, who disallowed the commission, and substituted in lieu thereof £55, as a remuneration

* (13) It seems that in estimating the proper remuneration to be allowed in bottomry accounts to the ship's agent, the registrar and merchants take into consideration the amount of the bottomry premium. The Laurel, No. 1702, Feb. 28, 1865. R. & M.

(14) The disbursements were £513, and the vessel was in the agent's hands at Fayal for three months. The merchant claimed £600, but was allowed £200 in lieu of all commissions. (The bottomry premium was 15 per cent.) The Wansfell, July, 1858. R. & M.

(15) The disbursements were about £6,000, and the vessel had been for more than five months in the hands of the agent at Havana. The merchant claimed a commission of 2½ per cent., amounting to 1,811 dollars, on the value of the cargo, but was allowed 1,500 dollars, or about £300, besides a commission of 2½ per cent. on the disbursements. (The bottomry premium was 20 per cent.) The Kepler, Dec. 1860. R. & M.

(16) The disbursements were about £950, and the vessel remained in the hands of the agent at Copenhagen for about ten weeks. He was allowed a sum of about 200 guineas. (The bottomry premium was 8¾ per cent.) The Jenny Lind, June, 1863. R. & M.

(17) The disbursements amounted to about £2,500, and the vessel was in the agent's hands at the Bahamas for over two months. He claimed 5 per cent. on his disbursements, and 2½ per cent. on the values, amounting together to £226 : 6s. 9d. He was allowed £150. (The bottomry premium was 15 per cent.) The Charles, May, 1864. R. & M.

(18) A ship's disbursements amounted to £1,350, the property was in the hands of the agents at Batavia about six weeks. They charged 5 per cent. on the disbursements and 2½ per cent. on the value of the cargo, amounting together to nearly £2,800, but no bottomry premium. They were allowed 7,500 guilders, or upwards of £700, to cover all commissions and bottomry risk. The Laurel, Feb. 1865. R. & M.

(19) A commission of 5 per cent. on advances at Batavia, under a bottomry bond, allowed under the circumstances of the locality, the climate, and the rate of interest ruling there. Ibid.

(20) The rule of the registrar and merchants, to allow only 2½ per cent. commission on advances, relates to advances in this country, or in any port where the means of obtaining money are not exceptionally difficult. Ibid.

(21) It appears from the accounts on several references in causes of bottomry, that the bondholders have been satisfied with the bottomry premium, and a commission on their disbursements, without charging a commission on the value of the cargo. Ibid.; and see the cases there cited.

ration for care and superintendence. The Calypso, 3 Hagg. 163.

51. Five per cent. commission on the balance of account on a bottomry bond on ship and freight disallowed by the registrar and merchants, and objection to such disallowance overruled by the court. The Tartar, 1 Hagg. 14.

52. On reference to the registrar and merchants of the accounts of a bottomry bond, a charge of five per cent. commission (about £230) of the British consul for managing the affairs of the ship, the master having died, disallowed, and £37 awarded as a remuneration to the consul for his services. On objection to the report, disallowance of five per cent. commission affirmed, but £100 instead of £37 awarded to the consul. The Zodiac, 1 Hagg. 323.

53. Commission of five per cent. on the value of the cargo charged for care thereof (it having been necessary to unlade it), depositing it in warehouses, and re-shipping it according to the custom of the foreign port, and certified to be correct by the court there, and which was paid, inter alia, out of money raised on bottomry, disallowed by the registrar and merchants, and a commission of five per cent. on the actual disbursements for the cargo substituted. Objections to such report overruled. The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 377, 392.

54. Commissions charged at St. Thomas of two per cent. on the value of cargo for storage, and of two and a half per cent. for landing and re-shipping, disallowed, though proved to be in accordance with the custom at that port, but opposed to the custom of Lloyds. In lieu thereof reasonable sums, upon the principle of quantum meruit, allowed. The Glenmanna, 1 Lushington, 115.

55. Commissions on freight in respect of the vessels chartered to tranship disallowed. Ibid.

56. Commission charged of five per cent. on cash advances reduced to two and a half per cent., according to the practice observed in the registry. Ibid.

57. An item of £100 (paid to the master for his extra trouble in relation to cargo), in the accounts on a respondentia bond objected to and disallowed in registrar's report. Such disallowance confirmed by the court. Ibid.

58. Item in a bottomry bond for ship's agent's commission at four per cent. upon the entire value of the ship and cargo for his general superintendence, and also for commission upon advances, without stating to what amount or at what rate of interest such advances were made, the whole amounting to £90, disallowed, and a specific sum of £50, pro opere et labore, allowed in lieu thereof, and the amount of the bond reduced accordingly. The Fortuna, 6 Irish Jur. N.S. 272; 4 L. T. N.S. 840; 1 Asp. 123.

59. On taking the ship's accounts in a cause of bottomry, it was ascertained that save as to the agent's commission, no money was due as against the ship, and the registrar and merchants reported that the commission was so excessive, that on the balance of accounts, after reducing the commission to a proper amount, the owners of the ship were creditors and not debtors. Bond pronounced against, with costs. The Rhoderick Dhu, Swabey, 177; 5 W. R. 168; 28 L. T. 238.

60. The disbursements were above £6,200, and the property had been for a very considerable time in the agent's hands, but sufficient money had been remitted to pay all the disbursements. The court allowed the agent, in lieu of his claim of 5 per cent. on disbursements and 5 per cent. on the value of the cargo, estimated at £54,000, a commission of 2½ per cent. on the disbursements, and 1,000 dollars, or about £200, for his services. Ibid.

61. With respect to commissions for superintending the repairs of a vessel, the registrar and merchants are not bound to allow such commissions, according to what may be alleged to be the custom in any particular place, but are justified in forming their own opinion, giving due consideration to all the circumstances of the case and to local usage. Ibid. Swabey, 182; The Laurel, B. & L. 317; 1 Asp. 405; 9 L. T. N.S. 457; The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 392.

6. Disbursements.

(a) Generally.*

63. Every disbursement at a foreign

* (22) On the reference of accounts to the registrar and merchants in a cause of bottomry, certain items for landing, storing, and re-shipping the cargo were objected to. The port necessary to enable a ship to prosecute her voyage, made in or about the ship herself, or her crew, is a proper subject for bottomry. The Edmond, 30 L. J. Adm. 128; 1 Lushington, 63; 2 L. T. N.S. 194.

64. Such disbursements must be for charges for which the owner or master of the ship is liable; those for which the consignee of the cargo is liable are not the subject of bottomry. Ibid.

65. The agent of a ship advanced money on a bottomry bond. The bond was admitted, and on reference of the accounts it appeared that one large item was on account of re-landing damaged flour, which had accidentally heated on board the ship, and that this flour was the property of the agent. Another large item was on account of money advanced to the master, without inquiry as to the necessity of such advance, or seeing to the application of the money. The report of the registrar disallowing these items was confirmed. The Royal Stuart, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 258; 1 Jur. N.S. 1116.

66. The owners are not bound to repay to the bondholder more than is sufficient to pay for things actually necessary for the ship, and at a reasonable rate, and it is for the registrar and merchants in the first instance to allow or reduce the amounts accordingly. The Pontida, 9 P. D. 102, 177; 5 Asp. 330.

67. See further as to the expenses for which bottomry may be resorted to by the master, tit. BOTTOMRY, p. 123; and by owners, Ibid. p. 114.

(b) Repairs.

68. If charges for repairs are excessive, and contrary to the custom of merchants, the amount will be reduced by the registrar and merchants. The Lord Cochrane, 8 Jur. 716; 3 Notes of Cases, 172.

69. A sum of £800 was paid for new masts, and allowed by the registrar and merchants. Objection thereto on the ground that they were unnecessary, supported by the evidence of scientific persons not present on the spot, as opposed to direct testimony of surveyors, overruled by the court. The Edmond, 1 Lushington, 68; 2 L. T. N.S. 194; 30 L. J. Adm. 128.

70. It is not incumbent upon a foreign merchant advancing money on bottomry for the repairs of a vessel to consider whether the expense of the repairs necessary to enable the vessel to come home, would be so enormous that no repairs ought to have been done, but that the vessel should be abandoned. The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 10.*

(c) Wages and Victualling.

71. A master, under pressing necessity of ill-health, left the ship in the port of a British colony. Held, that the amount of his wages paid under such circumstances was a proper item in a bottomry bond. The owner disputing the amount of the wages is bound to show such amount to be improper. The Rajah of Cochin, Swabey, 473.

72. Disbursements for victualling the crew, to discharge which, inter alia, money was raised on bottomry, allowed on reference of accounts to the registrar and merchants, and confirmed by the court. The Cognac, 2 Hagg. 385.

73. Disbursement on account of wages made to crew while in a foreign port, money to pay which, inter alia, was raised on bottomry, disallowed on reference of bondholders relied on the bond; and on proof that they handed all the bills and receipts to the master, the owners produced a bundle of receipts, and averred that they were the receipts so handed over, but that the receipts required were not among them. The master made an affidavit on behalf of the owners, but made no allusion to these items therein, and no proof was adduced that the charges were unreasonable or excessive. The registrar and merchants allowed the items to the bondholders. The Laurel, No. 1702, Feb. 28, 1865.

(23) The registrar, in investigating items constituting the amounts secured by a bottomry bond, rejected the contention that he was bound to recognize that general average principles should govern him, there having been no general average, and he allowed only such items of expenditure as were incurred for the benefit of the cargo, and acting upon the principles laid down in The Glenmanna, 1 Lushington, 115, allowed a quantum meruit in lieu of the commission charged upon the cargo. The Ymer, Nov. 1883. R. & M.

* (24) It would seem, therefore, à fortiori that it is not incumbent upon him to look to the expediency of specific repairs; but see The Pontida, supra.

(24a) In investigating the accounts on a bottomry bond, surveys of the repairs the ship required were produced, but the accounts showed repairs beyond the surveys. The accounts were signed by the master. Objections to the accounts for the repairs beyond the surveys overruled. The Glenburn, April, 1855. R. & M.

accounts of such bond to registrar and merchants. Objection to such report overruled, on the ground that it was a premature payment that might never become due, and, if so paid, might (as in this case it did) fall on the owners of cargo, who were not properly liable for it. Ibid. 393.

(d) *Insurance.

74. A charge for insurance, not being properly a subject of bottomry, cannot be made so by the mere agreement of the master, though the case might be different where the owner himself, in a foreign country, gave the bond. Boddingtons', 2 Hagg. 426.

75. A charge for insurance (though a low rate of insurance, and in consideration of which the premium on the bond was unusually moderate), disallowed by the registrar and merchants as irregular and unusual, maritime interest being only allowed in consideration of maritime risk. Objection to report overruled, and report confirmed. Ibid. 422.

76. Bond given to defray expenses of insuring vessel held invalid. The Serafina, No. 2098, June 28, 1864.

(e) General Average.

77. A debt for general average contribution arising in respect of an outward voyage being a personal debt only is not a sufficient foundation for a bottomry bond on the ship for the homeward voyage. Quare, if a lien on the ship for general average contribution, according to the law of the foreign port where the bond is given, could support such a bond. The North Star, 1 Lushington, 45.

77a. A bond given at Buenos Ayres on ship and freight for the voyage to England to pay a general average contribution due upon adjustment from the ship to the outward cargo, held invalid. Ibid.

(f) Costs Abroad.

78. A charge in a bottomry bond for costs said to be incurred in upholding the bond in a foreign court disallowed, as costs incurred within a foreign jurisdiction, and such as the court had no authority to deal with. The Gauntlett, 3 W. Rob. 98; 13 Jur. 413; 7 Notes of Cases, 41.

§ (28) The sloop O. was sailed upon thirds. The last settlement of accounts between the parties took place in the beginning of 1862. The plaintiff, the owner of 16-64ths, in the spring of 1863 applied for a statement of accounts. The defendant omitted to furnish them, on the ground that the O. was in debt. The plaintiff subsequently caused the vessel to be arrested, and objected to accounts amounting to £19 7s., his interest in which was reducible to £1 12s. 3d. Each party to pay his own costs. The Oak, Dec. 17, 1864. R. & M.

(32) On a reference as to ships' accounts the managing owner had debited his co-owners with the proportion of the loss sustained by him in connection with a line of steamers running in his name. It was not proved that the vessel in question was liable under the charter which inaugurated the line of steamers. She was not named as one of the ships composing the fleet, and she had been employed in other directions when she might have been employed in the fleet. The registrar considered, therefore, that the proportion of the loss on the line was not a charge against the ship, and disallowed it accordingly. The Lord Nelson, Nov. 1883. R. & M.

(32a) A managing owner having chartered a vessel to a syndicate of which he was a member, at a lower rate of freight than that which the syndicate was to receive, was, on a reference to adjust the ship's accounts, ordered to credit the ship's accounts with his proportion of the profits made by the syndicate. Ibid.

(42) In an action for wages by a master who was also a part-owner a counter-claim was put forward at the reference for an amount paid by the ship for short delivery of cargo. As it did not appear that any fault on the part of the master had occasioned the short delivery the registrar refused to hold him responsible therefor in his capacity of master, but as a part-owner he was debited with a contribution to the amount paid by the ship. The Fleur de Lis, No. 2842, Dec. 1865. R. & M.

(43) A master being in command of a fever-stricken vessel lying in a foreign port, and being himself incapacitated from duty by the fever, went ashore for medical advice, and remained there until a certain date, when, he being too ill to command the vessel, another master, who was sent from England, took charge, with the knowledge of the sick master. Subsequently the second master took the fever, the vessel still being in the same port, and thereupon requested the former master to resume command. The latter, for whom a passage home had been engaged, was convalescent, but not well enough to rejoin the vessel without incurring great risk. He therefore refused to resume command, and returned to England, whither the vessel was afterwards brought in safety. In an action for wages instituted by him he claimed that he continued in the ship's service until after her arrival in England, and was therefore entitled to maintenance whilst ill ashore, and to his passage home. This claim being disputed on the ground that by leaving the vessel he had discharged himself, or that, being in fair health, it was misconduct to refuse to resume command, the registrar held, that the master was not bound to resume command at the risk of his health, but that by assenting to the change of masters he had virtually discharged himself. The Cornelia Henrietta, No. 2881, Jan. 1866. R. & M.

(52) A master being in a foreign port and without funds, drew upon his owner at home. The owner being embarrassed, failed to meet the bill, and the master had therefore to find funds elsewhere, and had to pay certain legal expenses occasioned by the dishonouring of the bill. These expenses were allowed by the registrar on the equitable ground that a right in a master to draw upon his owner and a promise to pay on the part of the latter are implied by the relations existing between them. The Thorwaldsen, Nos. 3308, 3330, 3628, March, 1867. R. & M.

(53) A master who gives bills for moneys advanced to and disbursed by him on the ship's accounts is entitled to treat the amounts of the bills as disbursements, even though they are not matured. The Red Rose, L. R. 2 A. & E. 8, n.; Nos. 2800, 2848, July, 1866. R. & M.

(54) But where the fund out of which the master claims to be reimbursed is in court, the bills must be paid and lodged in the registry before the amount is paid to him. Ibid.

(55) A master's claim for wages and disbursements included certain payments made by him on account of the expenses of the directors of the company who owned the vessel, whilst he and they were travelling on business connected with her employment. The registrar held (the merchants dissenting), that these payments were proper items in the master's claim. The Victoria, No. 7268, June, 1876. R. & M.

(56) A master who institutes on action for his wages and disbursements is taken to have a penalty to appear and prosecute certain of his crew in respect of matters pertaining to the ship, fails so to appear, is entitled to recover the amount of the forfeited penalty from his owner if he can show that it was for the ship's benefit that the penalty was so forfeited. The James Seddon, L. R. 1 A. & E. 62.

If the master be a debtor on other accounts to the owner of the vessel, or have funds of the ship in his possession, the court will only award to him the balance due on a settlement of the accounts, which it will refer to the registrar and merchants for investigation. The Repulse, 9 Jur. 740; 11 Jur. 716; 5 Notes of Cases, 362.

100. As there is no provision in the Merchant Shipping Acts for payment of the expenses home of a master discharged through illness in a foreign port, held (reversing the registrar's decision), that such expenses cannot be allowed. The Petunia, 1879, H. No. 2, June, 1880.

100a. On a reference to assess the amount of wages and disbursements due to a master who admitted having received between £50 and £100 in presents, a portion of which he stated was on paying ships' bills and another portion in respect of his services as supercargo, the registrar and merchants disallowed a sum of £30 from his claim, viewing the presents in the light of gratuities which he was not entitled to retain for his own benefit. Report objected to, but confirmed by the court. The Peggie Day, May, 1883.

101. In a claim for wages a master may be allowed the balance of an account for a former voyage in the same, but not in a different ship. A balance due to the master for services in another ship disallowed. The Julindur, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 77.

102. In a suit by master, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, he cannot be allowed to include in his accounts the amount of bills of exchange (semble, for purchase of a cargo) drawn by him upon his owner, and dishonoured, the bills not having been actually paid by him, though his liability for them still attached. Ibid.

103. Liabilities incurred by a master for articles expended for the benefit of the ship are to be considered as disbursements. The Feronia, L. R. 2 A. & E. 65; 3 Asp. 54; 37 L. J. And when there is a fund in court that has been earned by freight, the master will receive payment therefrom upon producing vouchers for the actual payments by him. The Feronia and The Red Rose, supra.

104. The master had, in his accounts, given credit for a large sum received for ship's disbursements abroad, and for which he had given a bill on the owners, with a bottomry bond as security. On proof of declarations of the owners that they should not honour the bill, and of the holders that they should not enforce the bond, but should hold the master liable under the bill, the registrar and merchants allowed the amount of the bill as a charge against the owners in the master's accounts. Their report was objected to by the owners, but confirmed by the court. The British Empire, 1 August, 1859.

(57) A master of a ship being in want of money for the use of the ship, drew a bill upon the shippers of his cargo. The cargo was afterwards delivered on payment of the freight less the amount of the bill. In the ship's accounts the whole freight had been credited and the disbursements debited. Subsequently the acceptor of the bill failed. On a reference to settle the ship's accounts, the defendant objected to contribute towards the loss and to that portion of the ship's accounts being re-opened. Having regard to the fact that at the time when the voyage account was rendered the bill had not been dishonoured, and that it was drawn on account of the ship so as to render the owners liable, the registrar held, that the amount of the bill less the dividend recovered from the bankrupt was a proper charge upon the ship. The Lord Nelson, Nov. 1883. Amounts advanced by a master to seamen for slops, tobacco, &c., allowed by the registrar and merchants, and confirmed by the court, although the seamen had deserted; the gain to the owners by the forfeiture of the wages earned by the deserters largely exceeding such amounts. The Feronia, L. R. 2 A. & E. 65.

107. The accounts spoken of in the 191st section of the M. S. Act, 1854, mean the accounts between the master and the ship, exclusive of any private account between the master and the owners for merely extraneous purposes. The Glentanner, Swabey, 422.

108. The law will presume that the terms of a master's engagement for one voyage extend to a succeeding voyage, performed without any express or clearly implied new agreement. The Gananoque, 1 Lushington, 448.

109. The master's liability in respect of wages due to the crew and of necessaries furnished at his order to the ship is not included in the term "disbursements" in the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 10, and he cannot, therefore, under that section, sue in the Court of Admiralty in respect of such liabilities. The Chieftain, 8 L. T. N.S. 120.

109a. The plaintiff, a master mariner, bought a small share of a ship, and became master, on the terms of receiving £15 a month, and half cabin-passage profits. The ship went to Melbourne with cargo only, and returned home. The defendant, the managing owner, then chartered the ship to carry goods and emigrants to New Zealand, at a lump sum; and if freight and passage-money should exceed that sum, the surplus to be divided between the charterers and owners; the master to keep account of the issue of all stores, and account for surplus stores. Plaintiff expressed his general satisfaction with the charter, but no communication passed as to the terms on which the plaintiff should serve on the new voyage, except as to his gratuity from the charterers. The ship took to New Zealand emigrants and cabin passengers, and plaintiff received his gratuity from the charterers. Held, that the original agreement continued, and that the master was entitled to a share of cabin-passage money profits. The Gananoque, supra.

110. In a suit for wages the master's claim was allowed, but various deductions being alleged to be due from him by the mortgagee in possession, the accounts were referred to the registrar and merchants. On the reference, it appeared that the master had agreed with the mortgagee in possession to advance £1,500 towards the whole sum for which the ship was mortgaged, upon which he was to receive a certain amount of interest and to bear his proportion of loss, if any. The master, instead of £1,500, advanced a smaller sum, and the mortgage transaction was attended with loss. The registrar and merchants, considering the agreement to advance the £1,500 binding, calculated the proportion due from the master upon the £1,500, and reported in accordance with such estimates. Held, that such loss was not a matter of account, but of unliquidated damages, the amount of which must be assessed by a jury and could not be ascertained by the registrar and merchants. The Repulse, 11 Jur. 716; 5 Notes of Cases, 362.

111. Costs of objection to the report allowed to the master. Ibid.

112. A master of a ship having, in obedience to orders received from the agent of the owner, paid off a portion of the crew after his vessel was arrested by the Court of Admiralty in a collision suit, is entitled as against his owner to credit for such payments upon a settlement of his accounts. The Duna, 5 L. T. N.S. 217; 6 Jur. N.S. (Irish), 358.

1. Generally.

114. In assessing damages due to a mortgagee (the ship being an insufficient security) for wrongfully depriving him of the vessel, the principle upon which the damages are to be measured is, that the mortgagee is entitled to have the ship delivered to him in the exact condition in which it was on the day when he claimed possession, with every expense reimbursed to him and interest in the meantime. De Mattos v. Gibson, 1 Johns. & H. 86; 3 L. T. N.S. 121; 30 L. J. Ch. 145; 7 Jur. N.S. 282.

115. In estimating such damages the mortgagee is not entitled to any benefit which may have accrued during such time, owing to the increased value of the ship by reason of any rise in the current rates of freight. Ibid.

116. He is not, if he has announced no intention of using the ship, but a determination to sell, entitled to be reimbursed the probable profits arising from a charterparty, which he could otherwise have concluded. Ibid.

117. When on granting an injunction against the use of a ship by an owner, an undertaking for damages is given, the measure of damages would include the loss of profit by the detention of the ship. Ibid.

118. But when an injunction was against a mortgagee of a ship (which was an insufficient security) and he had declared his intention to sell, but had not suggested the loss of possible profit as part of the damage anticipated, held, that the measure of damages was the expense involved in the custody of the ship, and the deterioration which she had suffered, together with interest in the meantime. Ibid.

119. A ship was mortgaged for a nominal sum, to secure an unascertained balance, with power to sell by auction, and in case of not being sold, the mortgagee to have the control and benefit of the ship until his claims were satisfied. A sale by private contract before balance ascertained, and while an investigation before arbitrators as to the amount was pending, held, an unauthorized and wrongful sale (reversing the judgment below), and an account of the value of the ship at the time of such sale ordered to be taken, and the respondent made liable to the appellant for such value. Brouard v. Dumaresque, 3 Moore, P. C. C. 457.

120. A mortgagee who on entering into possession uses a mortgaged vessel in an adventure or speculation which turns out to be a losing one, is not only not entitled to charge the loss against the mortgagor, but must himself be charged with the value of the property at the time of his taking possession. Mariott v. The Anchor Reversionary Company, Limited, 2 Giff. 457; 3 L. T. N.S. 538; 7 Jur. N.S. 155; 30 L. J. Ch. 571; 9 W. R. 726; 4 L. T. N.S. 590.

121. A mortgagor of a ship being allowed to remain in possession and to use her, placed her, on her being condemned as unseaworthy, in the hands of a shipwright to be repaired, who, not being able to obtain his money for the repairs which he had done, retained possession of her, claiming a right of lien upon her. In trover brought against him by the mortgagee, held, that the mortgagee's having allowed the mortgagor to remain in possession and use the vessel, amounted, in the absence of an express authority, to an implied one that he was to use the vessel in the ordinary way, and have repairs done when necessary. Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N.S. 417; 4 L. T. N.S. 550, C. P.; 8 Jur. N.S. 57; 30 L. J. C. P. 353.

122. Held, also, that the shipwright having such authority to repair, was entitled to hold the ship as against the mortgagee until his debt was paid. Ibid.

123. Held, also, that the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 70, which enacts "that the mortgagor shall not be deemed to have ceased to be owner of the mortgaged ship, except in so far as may be necessary for making such ship available as a security for the mortgage debt," did not conflict with this view. Ibid.

2. Interest.*

124. A ship was mortgaged for payment of a sum, with interest at £10 per cent., in six months; the principal not having been paid at that time, held that interest continued payable at the same rate. Morgan v. 12. In Actions for Necessaries, Repairs or Supplies.

1. Generally.

127. Agents and brokers in London furnished coals to a foreign steamer for several voyages made by the steamer in 1856. As agents of the ship they received the freights payable in London, and out of the proceeds furnished supplies and paid the expenses incurred by the steamer in England, making out a debit and credit account upon each voyage, which accounts they forwarded to the owners. Held, that the agents having appropriated in their accounts moneys actually received in payment of specific items, including the coals supplied on each voyage, were estopped by the accounts they had furnished from appropriating the receipts to a previous agency account for the ship, and from suing for the coals as necessaries supplied and unpaid for. The Twentje, 13 Moore, P. C. C. 185. And see as to the appropriation of payments, Devaynes v. Noble (Clayton's Case), Tudor's Leading Cases in Maritime Law (3rd ed.), p. 1.

128. In Admiralty actions, interest at the rate of 4 per cent. runs on the amount awarded from the date of entering the judgment, and such amount is a judgment debt within Ord. XLII. r. 14 (now r. 16, No. 594); since by s. 76 of the Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, applies to Admiralty actions. The Jones Brothers, 3 Asp. N.S. 478; 37 L. T. The shipwright having brought an action against the vessel, claimed payment out of the fund in priority to the mortgagees. His claim to priority was resisted by the mortgagees on the ground that until their action was instituted the shipwright had no power to enforce his claim in the Admiralty Court. The objection was disallowed. The Polymede, No. 108, May, 1876. R. & M.

(61) A claim for necessaries supplied to enable the ship to earn freight, which had been hypothecated to bottomry bondholders, given precedence over the bottomry debt. The Bridgewater, 1877, No. 314, April, 1879. R. & M.

(63) This case contains an elaborate review of the cases as to the rules of damages. Ibid.

(64) In an action against the master of a vessel for breaking up the voyage and disposing of the vessel, the expense of bringing home the vessel from a port to which the master has wrongfully navigated her, is a legal element of damages. Brown v. Smith, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 366. [AMERICAN.]

(65) So are reasonable damages for breaking up the voyage. Ibid.

(66) But conjectural or possible profits of a whaling voyage cannot be taken into consideration in estimating the damages. Ibid.

damages should be assessed by an average stater, the court suggested, and the parties assented, that the measure of damages should be the value of the ship and all her stores, &c., on the day when C. took possession of her; and that, as a mode of ascertaining such value, the referee should consider what would have been the value of the ship if she had been completed by B. according to his contract with A., and deduct therefrom the money necessarily laid out by B. after that date, in order to complete her. *Reid v. 14. In Actions of Salvage.

1. Generally.†

133. W. B., having acted as agent for rendering service to a foreign ship in distress on the English coast, afterwards entered an action against the ship, &c., as a salvor. The court held that he was entitled to sue in that character, but referred all the accounts between him and the owners to the registrar and merchants before decreeing any sum as salvage. La Purissima Concepcion, 13 Jur. 967.

134. The court will refer a claim, if objected to, of agent's expenses, as a deduction from a salvage award, to the consideration of the registrar and merchants. The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 24.

135. Reference decreed to the registrar and merchants of the accounts of a party appointed agent by the master, and claiming also as salvor in that capacity. The Happy Return, 2 Hagg. 207.

136. On salvage of a fishing smack, frozen up in Davis's Straits, effected by three other whaling vessels, £700 awarded in addition to the bounties given by the treasury. Such bounties, however, held to be a sufficient recompense and bar to all claim for demurrage and payment of stores, and for early sailing. The Swan, 1 W. Rob. 68.

137. In estimating the value of recaptured property for the purpose of a salvage apportionment, the true rule is to take the value, not at the time of capture, but at the place of restitution, which is to be considered with reference to the moment of the arrival of the property in port. The Progress, Edwards, 222.

137a. Commission paid for bail in a salvage action will not be allowed as part of the damages recoverable by the salvaged vessel in an action of damage by collision. The British Commerce, 9 P. D. 128; 53 L. J. Adm. 72; 5 Asp. 335; 51 L. T. 604; 33 W. R. 200.

138. The Board of Trade is entitled to a percentage of five pounds in the hundred on all salvage in respect of any ship, boat, or cargo, or apparel of any ship or boat, or any wreck or other property brought into Ramsgate harbour. See the Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c. Act, 1861 (c. 47), s. 28.

139. Such percentage shall be deducted from the salvage, and paid to the Board of Trade, before the remainder of the salvage is paid over to the salvors, and shall be recoverable like salvage. Ibid.

140. Salvage of derelict cargo brought into Ramsgate Harbour. £3,500 awarded, from which the salvors were directed to pay the damage to their boats, and 5 per cent. dues to Ramsgate Harbour. The Cargo ex Regina, No. 1024, 27 May, 1862.

Where a vessel in rendering salvage services sustains damage without negligence on the part of her master and crew, her owners are entitled to be repaid by the owners of the salvaged vessel for such damage, and for demurrage during the repairs thereof. The Mud Hopper (No. 4), 4 Asp. 103, 136; 40 L. T. N.S. 462.

144. To entitle owners of a salvaging vessel to a primary lien on the property salvaged for compensation for losses, such losses must be actual. If speculative merely and consequential, they are only ingredients in estimating the salvage remuneration, of which they receive an allotment. The Martha, 3 Hagg. 436.

145. Whenever property of the salvor is damaged in effecting the salvage service, the damage is to be repaired, or paid for to the full extent of its actual value or at the cost price, and not at the trade profit price. The Augusta Jesse, 4 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 227.

146. The court will decline entertaining a claim as against the owners of the vessel salvaged for repairing damage done to the salvaging vessel, if that damage was not necessarily incurred in the salvage service, but resulted from a struggle with another vessel seeking to assist in the salvage. The Eliza, 4 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 58.

147. The Court of Admiralty cannot, in a salvage suit, allow charges for repairs of vessel salvaged, though asserted to be so mixed up with the salvage as to be inseparable. The Ranger, 2 Hagg. 42.

148. When the salvors' vessel is injured or lost whilst engaged in the salvage service, the presumption is that the injury or loss was caused by the necessities of the service and not by the default of the salvors, and the burthen of proof lies upon the defendants alleging that the loss was caused by the salvors' own acts. Compensation to the salvaging vessel awarded accordingly. The Thomas Blyth, 1 Lushington, 16.

148a. The A. S., a large and valuable steamer, rendered salvage services to the G., another large steamer, in Smyrna Bay, and in doing so damaged her machinery, which was repaired on her return to Liverpool shortly before Christmas. The court, besides awarding salvage, pronounced for the damages, and for the detention and losses of the A. S. during the repair of the damages, and referred the accounts to the registrar and merchants to examine and report thereon. The Gladiator, No. 1594, April 29, 1864.

her information of her position, and attempted to tow her to a place of safety. On the hawser, however, breaking no further attempt to tow was made, but the steamer guided the vessel out to sea, clear of all shoals, being with her about five hours. Held, that the steamer was entitled to salvage. The steamer having been thus delayed, arrived in the subsequent prosecution of her voyage, about low water, at a dangerous place, which, but for that delay, she would properly have reached at about high water, and have passed in safety, but it being low water she struck a rock, and was very seriously injured. Held, that such damage was too remote. United States District Court of Admiralty, 2 Asp. 140. [AMERICAN.]

(71) The V. got aground. The M. came to her assistance, and they were lashed together, the V. being much the more powerful vessel. The V. got off, but the M. ran upon a snag and made a hole in her bottom, and was lost. The V. had been there more than a day, and had ample opportunity of knowing the locality. Held, that the V. having failed to make the necessary investigations as to the dangers of the place, and being the chief and controlling motive power, was liable for the damages and loss of the M.

The Missionary v. The Virginia, 1 Asp. N.S. 107. [AMERICAN.]

(71a) This case is calculated to mislead, as it would almost induce us to suppose that a salvor is not entitled to recover compensation for loss of his vessel, except in case of negligence of the salvaged vessel. We fail to see the necessity for dividing the case on the question of evidence. It is a well-recognized practice in Courts of Admiralty to award compensation for loss and damage sustained in rendering salvage services, quite independently of any negligence on the part of the salvaged vessel. See The Saratoga, Lush. 318; Editor's note to 1 Asp. N.S. 107.

(72) It is quite clear that if there was negligence on the part of the V. she was liable as in an ordinary case of damage, but where she is liable to pay for the damage in another way it is dangerous to introduce a doctrine capable of misconstruction. The question asked, as to "whose duty it was to foresee and guard against the possible consequences of success?" has nothing to do with the real question of whether the vessel was injured whilst performing a salvage service, and would imply that negligence alone created liability. Ibid. See also note 251, p. 1761.

149. Where the property saved is ample, losses voluntarily incurred by the salvor should be transferred to the owner of the property saved, and in addition the salvor should receive a compensation for his exertions and for the risk he runs of not receiving any compensation in the event of his services proving ineffectual. The De Bay, 8 App. Cas. 559; 52 L. J. P. C. 57; 5 Asp. 156; 49 L. T. 414.

150. The losses should be ascertained with precision where practicable, but in that case the salvage remuneration added thereto should be fixed on a more moderate scale than where the losses cannot be fixed with precision. Ibid.

151. In an action of salvage of property of large value (£179,000), the court awarded £6,000 as salvage, but refused to receive evidence of particular injuries to the salving vessel caused by the performance of the services, and of the costs of the repairs, and of the loss caused by detention during such repairs. (The De Bay, 8 App. Cas. 559, considered.) The City of Chester, 9 P. D. C. A. 182.

152. On appeal, held, per Brett, M. R., that the judge of the Admiralty Court was not bound, ex debito justitiae, to admit such evidence, or to decree in terms that a specific amount should be paid to the salvors in respect of damages so caused, though he might, in his discretion, receive such evidence, and include an amount in respect of damages in his award. Decree varied by awarding £1,000 as salvage, and referring the damages and detention to the registrar and merchants, unless the appellants accepted the amount awarded by the court below. Ibid.

153. Per Baggallay and Lindley, L.JJ.: Where salvage services have occasioned damages and losses to the salvors, and the value of the property saved is ample, the salvor should be awarded salvage, and also a sum sufficient to cover the damages and expenses in rendering the service, and evidence of such damages and expenses ought to be received so that they may be ascertained with precision. Ibid.

Part II.—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

1. Generally.*

1. In Contract.

(a) Generally.

170. To ascertain what are the damages payable on a breach of contract, it is to

* (77) The leading case on the subject of damages arising from a breach of contract is that of Hadley v. Baxendale. That case has been supposed to lay down three rules: (1) that damages which may fairly and reasonably be considered as naturally arising from a breach of contract, according to the usual course of things, are always recoverable; (2) that damages which would not arise in the usual course of things from a breach of contract, but arise from special circumstances peculiar to the case, are not recoverable unless such special circumstances are known at the time of contract to the person breaking the contract; in which case (3) such damages are recoverable if the damages complained of flow naturally from the breach of the contract contemplated by the parties. See Mayne on Damages, 4th ed. pp. 10, 11, 12; and see further as to such 3rd rule, Ibid. p. 38.

171. The party who breaks a contract is liable for the natural and reasonable consequences of his breach of contract. Swan v. The Whitehaven Junction Railway Co., 20th April, 1864. (Cockburn, C. J.)

172. Where two parties have made a contract, which one of them has broken, the damages for breach should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. 173. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to repair and deliver a vessel by a stipulated day will be the net profit which the owners might have obtained by chartering the vessel, if she had been delivered at the stipulated time instead of the time when she actually was delivered. In re Trent and Humber Co., Ex parte Cambrian Steam Packet Co., L. R. 4 Eq. 112; Ibid. 6 Eq. 396; 37 L. J. Ch. 686; 38 L. J. Ch. App. 38; 3 Asp. 119. Quere, in estimating the net profits ought the wear and tear and depreciation which the ship would undergo in earning those profits to be taken into account? Per Cairns, L. C. Ibid.

174. K. sued B. for breach of contract in not accepting five tons of hops contracted by B. to be bought and by K. to taken or detained by force, fraud, or process of law, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time the owner is dispossessed, increased by the damages which the owner is proved to have sustained from the loss of possession. (This case contains an elaborate review of the cases as to the rules of damages.) Suydam v. Jenkins, 3 Sand. Sup. Ct. 614. [AMERICAN.]

(79) The measure of damages is in general that which will compensate the plaintiff as nearly as may be for the actual injury sustained by the breach of contract. Robinson v. Varnell, 16 Texas, 382. [AMERICAN.]

(80) Where from the nature of the contract it is not practicable to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by a breach of it, the measure is the price agreed on. Coffee v. Meiggs, 8 Cal. 363. [AMERICAN.]

(81) The rule of damages in an action on a contract of sale, when the vendor neglects or refuses to deliver the personal property sold, and when nothing was paid by the purchaser, is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property on the day when it should have been delivered. Belden v. Nicolay, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 14. [AMERICAN.]

(82) Where goods are paid for before delivery and are not delivered at the day, the measure of damages is the highest market price between the day of delivery and the institution of the suit, provided the suit is not unreasonably delayed. Cannon v. Folsorn, 2 Clarke (Iowa), 101. [AMERICAN.]

(83) Where the property converted has a fixed value the measure of damages is that value with legal interest from the time of the conversion; where the value is fluctuating the plaintiff may recover the highest value at the time of the conversion, or at any time afterwards. Douglass v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 562.

[AMERICAN.]

(84) In trover, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion. Selkirk v. Cobb, 13 Gray (Mass.), 313. [AMERICAN.]

(85) In detinue, as in trover, the value of the property at any time between the demand and the trial is the measure of damages. Johnson v. Marshall, 34 Ala. 522. [AMERICAN.]

(86) To an action on a due bill to pay a certain amount of flour on a certain day, a tender on that day of the market price of the flour at that time is a defence, that being the measure of damages. Davenport v. Wells, 1 Clarke (Iowa), 598. [AMERICAN.]

(87) In an action for breach of a contract to deliver goods at a particular place and within a definite time, no payment having been made, the rule of damages is well settled to be the difference between the contract price, and that which goods of a similar description and quality bore at the time and place designated. Berry v. Dwinel, 44 Maine, 255. [AMERICAN.]

(88) If the specified goods had no market value at that time and place recourse must be had to the sales which were made nearest the time and in the nearest market to the place. Ibid.

(89) A possible profit which the plaintiff might have made if the goods had been delivered according to the agreement, cannot be considered in estimating damages. Ibid.

(90) And not though he had made payments in advance. Sherman v. Roberts, 1 Grant's Cases (Penn.) 261. [AMERICAN.]

(91) The prime cost or value of the property lost at the time of the loss with all charges, and the premium of insurance where it has been paid, constitute the true measure of damages. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) 460. [AMERICAN.]

be sold and delivered. Held, that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the refusal to perform the contract. Boswell v. Kilborn, 8 Jur. N.S. 443; 10 W. R. 517; 6 L. T. N.S. 79, P. C.

175. The measure of damages for breach of contract in the sale of goods is not merely the amount of the difference between the contract price and the price at which such goods could be bought at the moment when the contract was broken; but likewise a compensation for such profit as might have been made by the purchaser had the contract been duly performed. Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. C. 381. [SCOTCH.]

176. Quere, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover for deterioration of, and damage done to, his goods while detained by the company, or for loss of profits arising from his being deprived of the use of them during that time. Davis v. North Western Railway Co., 4 H. & N. 855.

177. A delivered goods to a railway company, to carry to B., paying the carriage. Part of the transit was effected by another railway company, which refused to deliver up the goods to the consignee without payment of an additional sum; but (an action having been threatened against the contracting company) subsequently offered to deliver them up without that payment. The action was, however, brought, and subsequently the goods were given up in a damaged state. Held, that the additional sum demanded for the goods was not the measure of damage. Ibid.

178. A prize had been offered for the best plan and model of a machine for loading colliers from barges, and plans and models intended for the competition were to be sent by a certain day; the plaintiff sent a plan and model accordingly by a railway, but through negligence it did not arrive at its destination until after the appointed day: semble, the proper measure of damages in such case is the value of the labour and materials expended in making the plan and model, and not the chance of obtaining the prize, as the latter is too remote a ground for damages. Watson v. The Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston Railway Co., 15 Jur. Q. B. 448.

179. In an action against a carrier for damage to goods, the fact that the damage was partly caused by bad packing goes only to the amount of damage. Higginbotham v. Great Northern Railway Co., 2 F. & F. 796; 10 W. R. 358.

180. Quere, if in the course of performance of a contract one party gives to the other notice of any particular consequences which will result from a breach of the contract, the latter would not be held responsible for the consequences of the breach of contract, though they are not such as would naturally arise, and were not in contemplation of the parties at the time of the contract. Gee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., 6 H. & N. 218.

181. In consequence of four days' delay in the delivery of cotton by the defendants the plaintiff's mills were at a standstill for that period. Held, that the loss of profits and the amount of wages paid for the four days would only constitute the legal damages, if the stoppage arose entirely from the non-delivery of the cotton, but not if it arose partly from that cause and partly from the plaintiff's having no cotton to go on with. Ibid. 211.

182. The loss of profit and the amount of wages might prove to be the legal damages, if the jury found as a fact that the stoppage of the mill was such a consequence of the non-delivery as, either from express notice or the course of business in the district, might have been anticipated by the parties at the time of making the contract. Ibid.

183. The value of a cargo for the purpose of insurance is to be taken with reference to the port of shipment, not that of discharge. Tamvaco v. Lucas, 1 El. B. & S. 185; 7 Jur. N.S. 1100; 30 L. J. Q. B. 234; 4 L. T. N.S. 400.

184. Defendants, warranting themselves as agents of L. & Co., sold the plaintiff, on their behalf, certain wool. L. & Co. having repudiated the contract, the plaintiff filed a bill in chancery against them for specific performance, which was dismissed with costs. He afterwards brought an action against the defendants for their breach of warranty. Held, that the measure of damages should include the difference between the contract price of the wool and the value of similar quality at the time and place where the wool would have been delivered had the contract been binding, and the costs of the chancery suit taxed as between attorney and client. Hughes v. Graeme, 33 L. J. Q. B. 335; 12 W. R. 857.

185. As to the measure of damages in cases of warranty, see Randall v. Raper, E. B. & E. 84; Dingle v. Hare, 7 C. B. N.S. 145; Spark v. Heslop, 1 E. & E. 563. In cases of detinue, Williams v. Archer, 5 C. B. 318; and in other cases of breach of contract, Reid v. Fairbanks, 13 C. B. 692, 729; Chinery v. Violl, 5 H. & N. 288; Loder v. Kekulé, 3 C. B. N.S. 128; Portman v. Middleton, 4 C. B. N.S. 322; Smeed v. Foord, 1 E. & E. 602; Smith v. McGuire, 3 H. & N. 554.

2. In Tort.*

186. In collision actions in the Admiralty Division the measure of damages is restitutio in integrum. See The Gazelle, The Ironmaster, and other cases in Nos. 207—210, p. 1742.

3. Remoteness of Damages.†

187. The rule with regard to remoteness of damage is precisely the same, whether the damages are claimed in actions of contract, or of tort; per Brett, M. R. The Notting Hill, 9 P. D. 105; 53 L. J. Adm. 56; 5 Asp. 241.

188. For cases illustrating the rule that damages must not be too remote, but must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrongful act complained of, see the cases cited in the notes to Vicars v. Wilcocks, 2 Smith's Leading Cases (8th ed.), p. 553.

189. See also No. 178, supra, and No. 205a, infra.

189a. As to remoteness of damage or consequential loss in actions of collision generally, see p. 1753; as to losses or damage after collision, Ibid. p. 1757; and as to loss of market, Ibid. p. 1767.

2. In Actions of Damage to Cargo.‡

1. Generally.

† (93) Damage is said to be too remote where, although arising out of the cause of action, it does not so immediately and necessarily flow from it as that the offending party can be made responsible for it. Ibid. p. 44.

(93a) See also notes 78, 88, and 89, supra.

‡ (94) The measure of damages for the breach of a contract for the carriage of goods is their value at the place of delivery. Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. (1 Shaw) 90; *Ingledeu v. (98) In cases of breach of contract of affreightment the measure of damages is, in case of loss, the value of the goods at the time and place of shipment, and in case of damage, the diminution of value by reason of the injury, with interest thereon to the time of judgment, including all proper charges, and the premium of insurance where it has been paid. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) 242; Smith v. Richardson, 3 Caines, 219. [AMERICAN.]

(99) In a case of breach of contract of affreightment by damage to goods, no interest allowed. Dusar v. Mungatroyd, 1 Wash. C. C. R. 13; Gilpins v. Consequa, 1 Peters, C. C. R. 86; *Willings v. (100) The vessel was wrecked and the goods stolen at an intermediate port. Held, that the measure of damages was the value of the goods at that port with interest. King v. Shephard, 3 Story, 349. [AMERICAN.]

(101) Where the goods had been carried to the place of destination and there lost, held, that the measure of damages was the value at the place of destination, less freight and duties. The Cassius, 2 Story, 81. [AMERICAN.]

(102) Held, that the net value of the goods at the place of their destination was the measure of damages. Wilkinson v. Laughton, 8 Johnson, 213; Amory v. McGregor, 15 Johnson, 21. [AMERICAN.]

(103) The measure of a carrier's liability for property destroyed by his negligence, which has not been the subject of traffic, is the fair value of the property at or near the place of its destruction. Harris v. Panama R. R. Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 7. [AMERICAN.]

(104) The same measure of damages is not applicable to all cases of short delivery.

Court Act, 1861, for damage to goods, before the court will make a decree the amount must have been ascertained by a reference to the registrar and merchants. The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. N.S. 55; 1 N. R. 244.

191. In estimating the damages due to an assignee of a bill of lading for injury to his goods, a resale by him of the goods before delivery cannot be taken into account. Ibid.

192. On reference of accounts to the registrar and merchants in a cause of damage to cargo, the court directed them to be guided in the estimate of the measure of damages by the cases of Josling v. Irvine, 4 L. T. N.S. 251, and Peterson v. Ayre, 13 C. B. 353; The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. N.S. 55; 1 N. R. 244; but see No. 203, infra.

193. In an action on contract, held, on motion to reduce damages, that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach. Josling v. Irvine, 4 L. T. N.S. 251; Boswell v. Kilborn, 8 Jur. N.S. 443; 6 L. T. N.S. 79, P. C.; 10 W. R. 517.

194. The measure of damages in the case of a breach of contract to deliver goods at a specified time is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach of contract, or the price for which the vendee had sold; but the latter cannot recover, as special damage, the loss of anticipated profits to be made by his vendees. Peterson v. Ayre, 13 C. B. 353.

195. Where goods are delivered to a carrier to be carried from A. to B. and are lost, the owner is entitled to recover the value of the goods at B., and that value is the price at which they can be got to, not at, B. Rice v. Baxendale, 7 H. & N. 96.

196. A vessel got aground in the course of the voyage, and part of the cargo (rice) was thereby damaged, and it became necessary to throw other parts of it overboard. The vessel subsequently put into the Mauritius for repairs, where the damaged portion was sold. Held, that in the absence of affirmative proof that the grounding was owing to the negligence of the pilot (not compulsorily taken), or to want of prudence of the master, there ought to be no deduction from the lump freight on account of non-delivery, as it must be taken to have arisen from perils of the sea. The Norway, 3 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 245; 2 Asp. 17, 56, 168; 5 N. R. 140, 147; 11 Jur. N.S. 892; 13 W. R. 296; 12 L. T. N.S. Adm. 57; 13 Ibid. 50, 1085.

197. In an action to recover damages resulting from unreasonable delay in the

Whenever the deficiency has arisen from the negligence of the master or owners the measure of their liability seems to be the sound value of the goods at the time and port of delivery. But if the damage and necessary disposal occur through perils of the sea, and not in consequence of any fault of the master or owners, the proprietor of the goods is entitled to what they sold for, and no more. Maclachlan on Merchant Shipping, 3rd ed., p. 439.

(105) When goods shipped on freight are damaged by water, so as to be valueless and unsaleable, the shipper is not bound to send them to auction to be sold, as a prerequisite to his right of action. But where the goods are of value, either party has a right to require a sale by auction, and the expenses will form part of the costs. Elkin v. New York, &c. Co., 14 La. An. 647. [AMERICAN.]

(106) In a case where no invoice of the cargo existed and where a bill of lading weight was shown, the registrar and merchants will be guided as to the quantity of cargo by their experience in former cases. The Era, April, 1882. R. & M.

(107) As to whether the goods so sold are to be paid for should the vessel not reach her port of delivery, see ibid. and the authorities there cited.

(108) In a cause of damage to cargo the plaintiff claimed the difference between the price at which the cargo (wheat) was sold in its damaged state and the price at which it would have sold had it arrived in good order, and the interest thereon. The defendant objected that the claim should be reduced to the difference between the price at which the wheat was sold, and the price at which, prior to its arrival, the plaintiffs had sold it to a third party. Objection overruled; and interest allowed as claimed. The St. Cloud, April, 1865. R. & M.

(109) A perishable cargo was not sold when it appeared possible that the delay necessary for repairing the vessel would cause further depreciation. The registrar allowed the difference between the price the cargo would have realized if sold at the port of repair and the price it would have realized if the voyage had been uninterrupted. H. L. Routh, June, 1882. R. & M.

(110) An average statement, if not objected to, will be received by the registrar and merchants as evidence, and will be used in adjusting cargo claims. The Upupa, May, 1882. R. & M.

carriage of goods by sea, compensation allowed for deterioration in the quality of the goods and for loss of interest on the invoice value of the goods during the period of delay. The Parana, 1 P. D. 452; 2 P. D. (C. A.) 118; 45 L. J. Adm. 108; 3 Asp. N.S. 220; Ibid. (C. A.) 399; 36 L. T. N.S. 388.

197a. The defendant, under a bill of lading, agreed to carry goods which he knew generally consisted of machinery intended for a mill to be erected in British Columbia. The defendant having failed to deliver the goods, held, that the measure of damage was the cost of replacing the lost goods at British Columbia, and the freight and interest on the amount for the time the plaintiffs were delayed. British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v. Nettle-ship, L. R. 3 C. P. 499; 37 L. J. C. P. 235.

198. Held, also, that the defendant was not liable for the loss sustained through the stoppage of the mills until the machinery was replaced. Ibid.

198a. The general knowledge of the defendant that the machinery was going to be employed in the mill was not sufficient to render him liable for the loss sustained by the stoppage of the mills. Knowledge must be brought home to the party sought to be charged under such circumstances, so that he must know that the person he contracts with reasonably believes that he accepts the contract with the special condition attached to it. Per Willes, J., Ibid.

199. The measure of damages for the non-delivery of goods, paid for at the time of purchase, is the difference between that price and the highest price the goods have attained up to the time of trial. Elliot v. Hughes, 3 F. & F. 387. (Byles.)

199a. The measure of damages as to goods injured by the neglect or default of the master or owners, i. e. bad stowage, the unseaworthiness of the ship, &c., and sold at an intermediate port, is the value of the goods in a sound state at the port of delivery, and at the time when in ordinary course they would have arrived there. Blythe v. Smith, 5 M. & G. 405; Worms v. Storey, 11 Exch. 427; 25 L. J. Exch. 1; Atkinson v. Stephens, 7 Exch. 567; Hallett v. Wigram, 19 L. J. C. P. 281; Alers v. Tobin, cited in MacLachlan on Merchant Shipping (3rd ed.), p. 440, n.

200. Or, at the election of the owner of the goods, the price they sold for at the intermediate port. Richardson v. Nourse, 3 B. & A. 237.

200a. Shipowners were held liable for short delivery of wheat, but there had been delay on the part of the consignees in making their claims. The wheat actually delivered had been damaged on the voyage by causes for which the shipowners were not responsible. Held, that under the circumstances the measure of damages for the quantity undelivered must be arrived at by taking the average of the prices realized by the sale of the damaged quantity delivered. Shankland, &c. v. Othya & Co., 3rd Series, vol. 3, p. 810. [SCOTCH.]

201. In estimating the value of a perishable cargo, such as potatoes, the court will value it at the highest market price which the evidence proves could have been obtained, on the principle that the defendant should make good, at the highest market price, any loss sustained. The Scotia, 4 Jur. N.S. 156. [IRISH.]

201a. On a reference to the registrar and merchants in an action of damage to cargo, held, that the defendants were entitled to better evidence of the value of the cargo than the bills of lading and invoices. The John Bellamy, L. R. 3 A. & E. 129; 3 Asp. 360.

202. As to the value of cargo in causes of damage by collision, see p. 1750.

202a. In cases of costs and damages, see p. 1776.

203. The difference between carriage

* (111) In cases of carriage by land, a fall in the market value of goods between the date at which they should have been, and that at which they were, delivered has been held recoverable, according to the difference in the market values at those two periods, but this principle does not apply to carriage by sea. Mayne on Damages, 4th ed. pp. 14, 15.

(112) The market price at the time of the breach of the contract, and not exceptional sales, is the proper criterion for the estimate of damages. Thompson v. Howes, 14 La. Au. 45. [AMERICAN.]

(113) But in determining such value it would seem that the jury may consider the fact that the property has a market value, at a place other than that where it was destroyed, and to which it was destined, and towards which the carrier, in the course of the usual and regular communication with such place, was then taking it, in connection with the hazards of goods by sea and land is obvious. In order that damages may be recovered two conclusions must be come to; first, that it was reasonably certain the goods would not be sold until they arrived; and, secondly, that it was reasonably certain they would be sold immediately after they arrived, and that these were known to the carriers, but the practice in regard to goods sent by sea is opposed to both these conclusions. The Parana, 2 P. D. 118, reversing the decision of the court below, and confirming the report of the registrar and merchants in 1 P. D. 452; 45 L. J. Adm. 108; 3 Asp. N.S. 220, 399.

203a. Held, by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of the Admiralty Court, that no damages could be recovered for loss of market. Ibid.

204. Hops were sent to a railway station to be carried by the company to London; during the journey the hops became wet, the consignee refused to take them in that condition, and it required seven or eight days to dry them; in that interval, the market price had fallen. In an action against the company for not taking due care, held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the damage the hops had sustained, and also for the difference in the fall of the market price, from the time when they should have been delivered to the time when they were afterwards delivered, dried. Collard v. South Eastern Railway Co., 7 Jur. N.S. 950; 30 L. J. Exch. 393; 9 W. R. 697; 4 L. T. N.S. 410; 7 H. & N. 79.

204a. If goods are delivered too late by a carrier, the owner ought instantly to sell at market price and realize his loss; and the difference between the price he obtains by the sale at that time, and that which he would have obtained, is the measure of damages. Simmons v. South Eastern Railway Co., 7 Jur. N.S. Exch. 849.

205. Damages allowed for loss of market through delay in delivering a cargo of barley. Gifford & Co. v. Dishington & Co., 3rd Series, vol. 9, p. 1045. [SCOTCH.]

205a. The measure of damages payable by railway carriers who have received goods, ordered by the plaintiff from his correspondent living at a distance, and delivered to the company directed to the plaintiff, but not delivered to the plaintiff until the season for them was past, is the difference between the exchangeable or marketable values of the goods at the time when they ought to have arrived, and that value when they actually arrived. The loss of profits which the plaintiff would have derived from making up these goods into articles of sale, and disand expenses attendant upon the residue of the intended voyage. Harris v. Panama R. R. Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 7. [AMERICAN.]

(114) When goods are destroyed or materially injured on board a vessel in the port where they are shipped, the damages must be ascertained by the difference between the prime cost and charges and the sales at the port of shipment, and not by the probable profits if the goods had gone safe to the port of destination. Dusar v. Mungatroyd, 1 Wash. C. C. 13. [AMERICAN.]

(115) Where delivery of the goods has been delayed, but they have not been converted by the carrier, the measure of damages is not the value of the goods, but the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the delay in the delivery. (Wells, J., dissenting), Briggs v. New York Central Railroad Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 515. [AMERICAN.]

(116) It is a settled rule that no damages are to be awarded on account of the possible or probable profits which might have accrued to the shipper if the goods had gone safe to the port of delivery. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. 2nd ed. 241, 460; see also The Tribune, 3 Sumner, 144, 151. [AMERICAN.]

(117) A vessel, having on board a cargo of flour for transportation, capsized at her wharf before sailing, and the cargo was much damaged. The carriers might easily have communicated with the owners of the cargo, and sought instructions as to the disposal of it, but they neglected to do so, and sold the cargo upon their own authority at auction, after which the vessel sailed, and in due time arrived at the port of delivery. Held (1), that the sale of the flour under these circumstances was an unlawful conversion by the carrier; (2), that the owners of the cargo were entitled to recover the value of the cargo at the port of delivery, deducting freight and charges, and adding interest on the balance; (3), that the value of the cargo should be computed by the market price at the port of delivery at the time of the arrival of the vessel, it appearing that, except for the accident, the cargo would at that time, in the ordinary course of things, have been delivered, with a privilege, however, to the owner to claim the amount realized upon the sale of the goods at auction. The Joshua Barker, 1 Abb. Adm. 215. [AMERICAN.]

(118) When a railroad company is sued for negligence in respect to the non-delivery of goods within a reasonable time, the measure of damages is not the decline in the price between the day when they should have been delivered and the day they were delivered. Jones v. New York, &c. R. R. Co., 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 633. [AMERICAN.]

206. In an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel of goods, the measure of damages is, in general, the market value of the goods at the place and time at which they ought to have been delivered. If there is no market for the sale of such goods at the place, then the jury must ascertain their value, by taking the price at the place of manufacture, together with the cost of carriage, and allowing a reasonable sum for importer's profit. O'Hanlan v. G. W. Rail. Co., 34 L. J. Q. B. 154; 6 B. & S. 434.

206a. The plaintiff, a manufacturer accustomed to attend agricultural shows, and make a profit out of exhibiting his goods, delivered them upon a show ground where he had been exhibiting them to the defendants, to be carried by a certain day to a show ground at another place, where he intended to exhibit them, but nothing was expressly said about his intention to do so. The goods did not arrive until after the show was over, and after the time stipulated for. The plaintiff lost some days in going to meet, and waiting for, his goods. In an action for breach of covenant, held, the court drawing the inference of fact that the purpose of the plaintiff to exhibit was within the contemplation of the parties to the covenant, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages, on the ground that loss of profit was a natural and probable result of the breach. Held, also, that no evidence was necessary of his prospect of making profit at the particular show in question. Simpson v. London and N. W. Rail. Co., 1 Q. B. D. 274; 45 L. J. Q. B. 182.

3. In Actions of Damage by Collision.

207. In cases of damage the general principle is, that a person who is damaged by the fault of another is entitled to a full compensation for such damage and loss. The Matchless, 10 Jur. 1017.

207a. The general rule is, that a vessel doing damage to another is liable to make full compensation. The Girolamo, 3 Hagg. 186; The Dundee, 1 Hagg. 109; The Clara, Swabey, 1; 2 Jur. N.S. 46; 26 L. T. 165; The Wild Ranger, 1 Lushington, 553; 7 L. T. N.S. 725; 32 L. J. N.S. Adm. 56; 1 N. R. 32; 11 W. R. 255.

208. The party to blame is considered a wrong-doer, and the party injured is entitled to restitutio in integrum—full and complete indemnity for the losses sustained. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 443; The Clyde, Ibid. 24.

209. Cases of insurance are cases of contract, cases of damage by collision are cases of tort. The two classes of cases

* (120) See notes 96, 98—100, 108, supra.

† (121) In proceedings in rem in a cause of damage by collision, the plaintiff cannot ordinarily recover more damages than the amount in which the action has been entered and bail given. But see tit. PRACTICE, p. 1492.

(122) Or than the value of the ship, if left under arrest. But see Ibid., p. 1495.

(123) In the Court of Admiralty, when there has been misconduct on the part of both vessels in a collision, the sum total of the joint damage is payable by the two in equal shares. See tit. COLLISION, p. 204.

(124) But where one vessel is in charge of a pilot, taken by compulsion of law, her owners receive half, but pay nothing. See No. 221 in text.

(125) Matter of a merely collateral nature cannot be given in reduction of damages. For instance, the action being as for injury caused by collision at sea, the defendant was not allowed to deduct from the amount of loss proved any money paid to the plaintiff by his insurers in respect of the same damage. This would be to make the wrong-doer pay nothing and take all the benefit of the insurance without the burthen of the premium. Mayne on Damages (4th ed.), p. 396.

(126) Claim for damage by a barge fouling the stern of a steamer lying moored. It was improbable that the barge would have inflicted the whole of the damage claimed for, but in the absence of proof that the damage had been otherwise inflicted the claim was allowed. The Dodo, Feb. 1882. R. & M.

(127) Exemplary damages may be given for a wilful collision. Smyrna, &c. Steamboat Co. v. Whilldin, 4 Harring. 228; Ralston v. The State Rights, Crabbe, 22. [AMERICAN.]

(128) In a case of collision, if exemplary damages are claimed, evidence may be given of acts prior to the injuries complained of, but must be confined to such acts. Ralston v. The State Rights, Crabbe, 22. [AMERICAN.]

(129) Allowance made for deterioration in the value of a vessel from collision. The James of Rye, March, 1854. R. & M.

therefore stand upon totally different grounds. In the former the claimant recovers pursuant to his contract, including the custom of merchants, of which he is to be presumed to be cognizant. In the latter the claim arises ex delicto, and the indemnification ought to be co-extensive with the damage—restitutio in integrum. If the settlement of the indemnification is attended with any difficulty the wrongdoer must bear the inconvenience. If the claimant derives incidentally a greater benefit than mere indemnification, that arises only from the impossibility of effecting indemnification without exposing him to some loss or burden which the law will not place upon him. The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 281; 8 Jur. 429; 3 Notes of Cases, 75.

210. An action for damage is an action to recover the loss actually suffered in consequence of the collision, and the party aggrieved is entitled to be put, as far as practicable, in the same condition as if the wrong had not been suffered. The amount of damage may be direct, as the cost of the repairs, or consequential, as where a fishing voyage is lost, or the vessel might have been beneficially employed, but in all these cases the plaintiff must allege and prove that he has sustained an actual loss, and he must also offer the means of ascertaining the amount. The Clarence, 14 Jur. 557; 3 W. Rob. 283; 7 Notes of Cases, 579.

211. The rules and principles which guide other courts on the question of abandonment in insurance cases, do not apply to the Court of Admiralty in cases of collision. The Columbus, 3 W. Rob. 165; 13 Jur. 285; 6 Notes of Cases, 671.

212. When the evidence on a question of damages is nicely balanced, neither the court nor the registrar and merchants are justified in dividing the loss between each party, but judgment must be given according to the balance of evidence, bearing in mind on whose side the burthen of proof lies. The Agnes, No. 948, April 16, 1862; The Egyptian, 10 L. T. N.S. 910.

213. If a vessel is strained in consequence of encountering tempestuous weather, and owing to such straining she, in a collision, receives greater damage than she would under ordinary circumstances have suffered, the defendant is liable for the whole damage. The Egyptian, 10 L. T. N.S. 910.

214. A successful plaintiff in a cause of damage is entitled to be reimbursed by the defendant to the extent, but only to the full extent, of the damage occasioned. Ibid.

215. It was sworn that certain articles were lost or destroyed by the collision. The registrar and merchants were of opinion that the collision could not have occasioned their loss or destruction, and disallowed the item. On objection to such disallowance the court referred the item back for reconsideration, with directions that the amount should be allowed if the registrar and merchants could not come to the conclusion that such a loss by the collision was impossible. H. M. S. Inflexible, Swabey, 202; but see Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), No. 284, p. 1755.

216. The burden of proving the damage done lies in the first instance upon the plaintiff; and it is then for the defendant to show that, notwithstanding prima facie evidence to the contrary, there was another and concurrent cause to which the damage may be attributed. Ibid.

217. When a collision has taken place, the general inference is that the damage accruing was caused by the collision, and the burden of proof is on those alleging that any part of the damage arose from subsequent want of skill in the crew of the damaged vessel. The Linda, Swabey, 307; 30 L. T. 234; 4 Jur. N.S. 146; 6 W. R. 196; The Pensher, Swabey, 211, 215; 29 L. T. 12; but see Anderson v. Hoen, The Flying Fish, No. 284, p. 1755.

218. When a wrong has been committed, the wrongdoer must suffer from the impossibility of accurately ascertaining the amount of damage. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst, 20 Beav. 239; The Egyptian, 10 L. T. N.S. 910.

219. Even though the injured vessel may have been, at the time of collision, in such a condition that the collision occasioned an unusual amount of damage, a wrongdoer is nevertheless responsible for all the consequences. The Egyptian, 10 L. T. N.S. 910.

220. If a portion only of the damage is clearly attributable to the wrongdoer, and that portion cannot be distinguished from the rest, the wrongdoer is responsible for the whole damage. Ibid.; but see Anderson v. Hoen, The Flying Fish, No. 284, p. 1755.

221. Where in an action of collision it is held that it was occasioned by the fault of both vessels, but one of such vessels is exempt from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage, the latter vessel is entitled, by the Admiralty Court rule, to recover half the damages sustained by her in the collision, and is not limited to the difference between half her damage and half the damage of the other ship. The Hector, 8 P. D. (C. A.) 218; 52 L. J. P. D. 51; 5 Asp. 101.

222. A claim by the owners of a damaged vessel made at a low estimate, and for the purpose of avoiding litigation and of obtaining prompt and immediate payment, does not bind the party after its rejection, or bar him from proving that such estimate was far below the amount of damage actually sustained. The report of the registrar and merchants, adopting the original estimate as conclusive evidence of the damage, sent back for further consideration. The Two Sisters, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 102.

223. In an action for damages by collision, held, that the defendants were not entitled to deduct the amount of damage received by the plaintiff from insurers. Yates v. White, 4 Bing. N.S. 272; 5 Scott, 640; Jones v. White, 2 Jur. 363; 1 Arn. 85; and see Mason v. Sainsbury, 3 Dougl. 60.

224. As to the division of damages when both vessels are to blame for a collision, see tit. COLLISION, p. 204.

2. Vessel lost.*

225. In case of total loss, the plaintiff is entitled to the market value of the ship

* (130) A ship's sails and stores are considered to be included in her value, and no separate allowance will be made for them. The Fidelia, April, 1858; The Tuscarora, July, 1858; The Newport, Swabey, 344. R. & M.

(131) An owner claiming for a total loss is entitled to more than the mere selling value of his vessel before the collision. The Helvetia, No. 4072, Feb. 1869. R. & M.

(132) In the assessment of damage by collision, the diminished value of the vessel after being repaired is to be taken into account. Halderman v. Beckwith, 4 McLean, 286; Barratt v. Williamson, ibid. 589. [AMERICAN.]

(133) In estimating the value of nearly new vessels, it is usual to make a deduction of 12 per cent. per annum from their cost price.

(134) In dealing with claims for the loss of tug boats, the registrar remarked upon the cost of keeping a London tug in a state of efficiency, and instanced the fact that £2,448 had been, in the course of eight years, expended in the repairs of such a vessel. The Cricket, February, 1882. R. & M.

(135) A vessel seriously damaged by collision was treated as a constructive total loss, and sold by her owners. The propriety of this step was not questioned by the wrong-doer, but as there had been unnecessary delay in arriving at a determination to sell the vessel, the extra expenses occasioned by the delay were disallowed. The Queen of the East, Jan. 1882. R. & M.

(136) In causes of damage by collision, when the ship is lost, the usual proofs of her value filed are inter alia her register; if she was a comparatively new vessel, affidavits of her classification at Lloyds, if she had a good class; affidavits of the different occasions of her having been repaired, and the amounts spent in the repairs, particularly on the last occasion; affidavits as to her value from persons experienced in shipping, and who had seen her shortly before she was lost.

(137) Affidavits of shipwrights of standing and experience, setting forth the amount for which they would build a new vessel of the same class, size, and equipment, are useful in proof of the value of nearly new vessels.

(138) Scientific evidence of a ship's value is received when the ship is registered at Lloyds, but is not relied on when the ship is not so registered, and is of a special build for a special trade.

(139) Affidavits of shipwrights and others experienced in shipping, deposing to her value from the particulars contained in her register and classification at Lloyds, are often filed for want of better proofs, but do not carry much weight with them.

(140) The owners of the vessel held to blame cannot diminish the allowance of her market value by proving her actual worth to be less because of her age, imperfect build, or the state of her timbers. The New Jersey, Olcott, Adm. 444. [AMERICAN.]

(141) The H., a steamer two years old at the time of her loss, had been built in 1879 at a cost of £20,500. The registrar and merchants, recognizing the enhanced cost of labour and materials after the date of building, allowed £20,000 as her value at the time of her loss. The Leon, April, 1882. R. & M.

(142) £14,000 were claimed for the loss of a steamer of 577 tons net register, 901 gross, and 99 nominal horse-power, seven years old, and classed at Lloyds 90 A1. The sum of £10,000 was awarded. The Andalusia, April, 1882. R. & M.

(143) A schooner, between seven and eight years of age, classed for thirteen years, had passed her half-time survey, at a nominal expense, nine months before her loss. She was built in excess of Lloyds' requirements, and had originally cost £2,280. Plaintiffs claimed £1,830, and defendants valued her at about £1,000. The registrar awarded £1,400. The Blanche, May, 1882. R. & M.

(144) A vessel of 340 tons, built at New Brunswick in 1864 at a cost of £3,185, repaired in 1879 at a cost of £600, and thereupon classed black diphthong at Lloyds, was valued by her owners in 1881 at £1,650. The defendants filed affidavits valuing her at just prior to the collision. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 443; The Clyde, Swabey, 23; The Columbus, 3 W. Rob. 164; 6 Notes of Cases, 671; 13 Jur. 285.

226. The C. S. was damaged by collision in Hobson's Bay, Victoria. Her master sold her there instead of repairing her. Her owner claimed the value of the vessel previous to the collision, less the nett proceeds of her sale. Held, that the master in selling the vessel had acted as a prudent owner, if on the spot and uninsured, would under the circumstances have done, and the claim allowed accordingly. The South Sea, Swa. 141. R. & M.

227. In a cause of collision, the defendants' vessel was sold by the court, and the proceeds were insufficient to pay the plaintiff's claim. Held, that the expenses of sale and possession fees formed a proper deduction from the gross proceeds, and that the defendants could not, therefore, be called upon to repay them. The Europa, 9 L. T. N.S. 781.

228. In estimating the value of a ship lost by collision, the best evidence is the opinion of competent persons who knew the ship shortly previous to the time it was lost. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 443.

229. The second best evidence is the opinion of persons conversant with shipping, and the transfers thereof. Ibid.

230. Many other circumstances may be called in aid,—as the original price of the vessel, the amount of repairs done to her, the sum at which she was insured, and the like; but these facts have a slighter bearing upon the case. Ibid.

231. The evidence, as to value, of men of experience who have seen the vessel is to be preferred to that of persons who have not seen her. The Clyde, Swabey, 32.

232. The owner's affidavit of prime cost, unsupported by documentary proofs, is not sufficient evidence to produce legal conviction. Ibid.

233. In a case of total loss from collision, it is the duty of the court to award the full value of the ship, as she lay at the moment before the collision occurred. In doing so the court will estimate her true market value, considering her age, the several repairs she had undergone from time to time, and the amount for which she was insured, at the date of the accident. The Cumberland, 5 Jur. N.S. 399. [IRISH.]

234. Claim of £2,800, as the value of the ship reduced by the registrar and merchants to £1,830. On objection to their report, the evidence for the claimant being his own affidavit of prime cost unsupported by documentary proof, and affidavits of experienced persons in his neighbourhood who had not seen the vessel; and against the claim, affidavits of experienced persons in London who had also not seen her, the court confirmed the report without costs. The Clyde, Swabey, 23.

235. Three shipwrights who had inspected the vessel deposed to her value as £540. On the other side the affidavit of a shipwright was produced deposing to her value as from £750 to £800. Held, that the value of the vessel was £540. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 24; 6 Notes of Cases, 69.

236. In valuing a ship in order to fix the limit of her liability under 53 Geo. 3, c. 150, held, that the value of the ship is the price at which she could be sold, which price must be ascertained, not by making deductions from her cost price proportioned to her age, but by a valuation and appraisalment. Dobree v. Schroeder, 6 Sim. 291; 2 Mylne & C. 489.

237. And that her value, under ordinary circumstances, under the M. S. Act, 1854, Pt. IX., will be taken to be what the ship would have fetched if sold immediately before her loss. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, 2 K. & J. 660; 25

£800 or £900, but the registrar and merchants allowed £1,370, on the ground that she must have been a good vessel to have been reclassified so late as 1879. The Rothesay, April, 1882. R. & M.

(145) A Cornish schooner of 133 tons, built in 1864, and classed A1 for twelve years, passed her half-time survey in 1871 at a cost of £279. In 1876 her class was continued for eight years at a cost of £496, and she passed her half-time survey in 1880—81, when £332 were expended upon her. She was lost in March, 1881, and a claim of £1,200 made. Defendants valued her at £650. £1,000 awarded. The Lady Ruthven, April, 1882. R. & M.

(146) Evidence as to the market value, in an English port, of a foreign vessel, which had been lost by collision, rejected by the registrar and merchants, who declined to adopt her estimated value in an English port. The Cyanus, January, 1884. R. & M.

(147) In assessing the value of a vessel lost through collision, the registrar took into consideration the fact that her insurance had been prepaid, as the insurance was an element in the value of the ship if she had been put up for sale by auction with the benefit of such insurance. The India, February, 1885. R. & M.

L. J. Chanc. 870; Leycester v. Logan, 4 K. & J. 725.

238. A vessel was purchased in Dec. 1852, for £12,900. The collision occurred in October, 1854, at which time she was insured for £10,000. Valuations were brought in, some to the amount of £6,000, others to £4,000, and Mr. Bailey, a valuer appointed by both parties, valued her at £5,900. Held, that the value of the vessel was £5,900. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, supra.

239. As to what are appurtenances to a ship, see tit. OWNERS, p. 1216.

240. As to value of ship in causes of possession, see No. 130, p. 1731.

241. In cases of costs and damages, see p. 1775.

3. Vessel repaired.*

242. The owners of a ship damaged by collision are entitled to the full expenses

* (148) When the value of the vessel injured is only impaired, the measure of damages will be the sum required to reinstate her to the condition she was in at the time of collision; if she is a total loss her market price or value at the time will be the criterion. The New Jersey, Olcott, Adm. 444. [AMERICAN.]

(148a) The registrar and merchants will not hold themselves bound by a contract which, in their opinion, is improvident, and in such a case, having ascertained by an inspection of the shipwright's books the actual costs of the repairs, with materials and labour, they added dock dues, an allowance for use of machinery and other general charges, and a profit of 25 per cent. on the whole. The Elephant, Feb. 1884. R. & M.

(149) The value of old materials should be allowed for in the bills for repairs, or a deduction for them will be made by the registrar and merchants.

(150) Insurance of ship during repairs not allowed. The Elizabeth Moore, 1854. R. & M.

(150a) The charge for caulking ought never to be more than 4s. per ton. The Hadding, June, 1859. R. & M.

(151) Bottomry premium on money required for repairs occasioned by collision not allowed as against defendants in a cause of damage. The Aberfoyle, June, 1861; The Diana, July, 1861; The Hope, Nov. 1854. R. & M.

(152) Surveys should not be drawn up by the surveyor's solicitors. Charges for preparation thereof disallowed. The Joseph Somes, 1857; The Christiana, ibid.; The Albert, April, 1859. R. & M.

(153) A vessel which had been damaged by collision was dry-docked for repairs, and certain damage previously unknown to the owner and not consequent upon the collision was thereby revealed. Although the vessel was necessarily dry-docked in order to repair the collision damage the registrar and merchants, being of opinion that a prudent owner cognizant of the other damage would have dry-docked his vessel for repairs irrespective of the collision, disallowed a portion of the dock charges. The Minnie, No. 5783, January, 1872. R. & M.

(154) It being admitted on a reference that a steamer, in consequence of touching the ground at the commencement of her voyage, would have been dry-docked at the end of her voyage, the labour and expense of docking were disallowed as against a steamer which had damaged her during the voyage. The Seaham Harbour, March, 1882. R. & M.

(155) A wooden vessel which had had her false stem started over to port was placed in dry dock in order that the injured portion might be removed for the purpose of inspecting the main stem. This proceeding was objected to on the ground that the work might have been performed afloat by tilting the ship. Held, that the plaintiffs were justified in docking. The Bradley, March, 1882. R. & M.

(155a) The dry docks of a port being unavailable for a lengthened period, held, that the owners of a damaged vessel were wrong in detaining their vessel at such port until one of the dry docks was available, and that she ought to have been removed to a neighbouring port. The Elgin, May, 1884. R. & M.

(156) In a somewhat similar case the expense of constructing a temporary gridiron was allowed. The Levenvale, ibid.

(156a) The G. E., in the prosecution of her voyage, ran aground in the Elbe, but got off again, and, whilst lying athwart, was run into and damaged above the water-line. She was repaired in dry dock, but the charges for docking and undocking, scraping and painting were disallowed, on the ground that they were solely necessary in consequence of the grounding. A moiety of the dock-rent, however, was allowed, as it was considered right and proper when she was in dock to keep her there for collision repairs. The Edward Eccles, June, 1883. R. & M.

(157) A dredger belonging to a dock board was placed in a dry dock belonging to the board to execute collision repairs. Claim for dock dues objected to on the ground that the board were not entitled to charge such dues on a vessel of their own. Seeing that the dredger occupied space which might have been profitably filled by other vessels paying dock dues, the registrar and merchants considered that the objection could not be sustained. The Clarence, Nov. 1883. R. & M.

(158) Where it was necessary to place a vessel on a slip to execute collision repairs, the registrar allowed the slip dues, notwithstanding the fact that the owners had embraced of repairing her and fitting her for sea, though such repairs may make her more valuable than she was before the collision. If the charges are extravagant they must

the opportunity to paint the ship's bottom, that operation not being rendered necessary by the collision. The Rieher, August, 1883. R. & M.

(159) Where a vessel was repaired under a contract which contained a penalty for delay in the completion of the repairs, and the time was exceeded, the registrar allowed, as against the defendant, the difference between the penalties recovered and the full demurrage. The Charles Howard, June, 1882. R. & M.

(159a) The propeller of a steamer was damaged by collision, but there being no spare one on board she was allowed to make several voyages, her speed, however, being considerably reduced. Meantime a new propeller was prepared, and ultimately sent to her at Swansea. On arrival it was discovered that no means existed for fixing it at that port, and it was ultimately placed in position in the Tyne. The cost of carriage from the Tyne to Swansea was disallowed, on the ground that the plaintiffs should have inquired as to the facilities existing at Swansea before sending the propeller there. The Cuduceus, June, 1883. R. & M.

(160) The damages occasioned by the collision were only partially repaired, the vessel being thereby put in a serviceable condition, but not restored to her market value before the collision. A sum was therefore allowed (one of the merchants dissenting) as compensation for the damages not repaired. The Falcon, July, 1878, C. No. 15. R. & M.

(161) The registrar will assess the amount of damages sustained by a vessel which has not been permanently repaired, and will take estimates into account for this purpose. The Plover, August, 1882. R. & M.

(162) If there are no reasonable means of repairing a vessel at the port to which she is brought, and she can be safely navigated to another port where the repairs would be cheaper, the expense of repairing is to be estimated according to the cost at the latter port. Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co., 9 Pick. 466. See Parker, C. J., in Gordon v. Mass. Ins. Co., 2 Pick. 249, 261. [AMERICAN.]

(162a) A vessel bound to Glasgow was damaged in the river Clyde. After discharging her cargo she was temporarily repaired and taken to Liverpool for permanent repairs. The registrar, holding that the repairs might very well have been done at Glasgow, disallowed the expenses of removal. Ardcer, July, 1883. R. & M.

(163) The expense of towing the vessel to her place of repair, and wharfage while repairing, are items of damage. Fitch v. Livingston, 4 Sandf. Sup. Ct. 492. [AMERICAN.]

collision the expenses and delay of taking the injured vessel from the place of collision to her port of destination and thence to the most suitable place for repair are, amongst other things, to be allowed. Holderman v. Beckwith, 4 M'Lean, 286; Barrett v. Williamson, ibid. 589. [AMERICAN.]

(164) The owners of a ship damaged by collision, and, amongst other things, re-metalled, are not entitled, in that respect, to recover against a wrong-doer more than the value of the old metal removed. The Elgin, May, 1884. R. & M.

(165) The usual method of dealing with claims for re-metalling is to allow weight for weight, new for old, with a fair allowance for what might have been torn away and totally lost by collision. The County of Cardigan, June, 1885. R. & M.

(166) In estimating the measure of damages by collision, the vessel injured having been repaired, the evidence of experts as to their opinion of the nature and extent of the injury is not admissible, though it may be where a vessel has been run down and abandoned. Schooner Catharine v. Dickinson, 17 How. 170. [U. S.]

(167) Under the New York statutes giving a lien upon ships and vessels for damages occasioned by collisions, and an attachment of such ships and vessels therefor, the remedy is confined to the actual damage to the vessel injured, i.e., to the amount necessary to repair and put her in as good condition as when the accident happened. Fitch v. Livingston, 4 Sandf. Sup. Ct. 492. [AMERICAN.]

(168) For mere negligence or want of skill the damages are compensatory only;—such as will restore the injured vessel to her former condition, but not for detention, loss of profits, &c. Smyrna, &c. Steamboat Co. v. Whilldin, 4 Harring. 228; Ralston v. The State Rights, Crabbe, 22. [AMERICAN.] But see next case.

(169) The general rule of damages applicable to collisions which are not wilful is, that the owner of the injured vessel is to receive a remuneration which will place him in the situation in which he would have been but for the collision. The Rhode Island, 1 Abb. Adm. 100; The New Jersey, Olcott, Adm. 444; The Blossom, ibid. 188. [AMERICAN.]

be reduced, but for necessary repairs the owners have a right to be reimbursed. The Pactolus, Swabey, 173; 28 L. T. 220; 5 W. R. 167; The Clyde, Swabey, 23.

243. The evidence of skilful persons who saw the ship after the collision is the best proof of the repairs necessary. Ibid.

243a. A yacht belonging to the plaintiff having been sunk in a collision, and evidence having been given that her marketable value was depreciated, held, that in addition to the claims made for repairs the plaintiff was entitled to be paid such sum as would compensate for the impaired value. The Georgiana v. The Anglican, 21 W. R. 280.

244. The rule which prevails in insurance cases, of deducting one-third of the cost price when new articles are supplied in lieu of old, is not applicable to cases of collision; the claim for indemnity in the former being ex contractu, but in the latter ex delicto, and therefore entitling the party to restitutio in integrum. In a cause of collision, report of registrar and merchants as to the amount of damage, objected to on the ground of such deduction, referred back for alteration on the principle above stated. The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 279; 8 Jur. 429; 3 Notes of Cases, 75; The Pactolus, Swabey, 174; 28 L. T. 220; 5 W. R. 167.

245. When a man runs down a vessel he cannot claim an abatement of one-third for old materials. It is different in insurance cases, because there it is an understood part of the contract. Hare v. Beckington (Cresswell, J.), cited with approval in The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 283; 8 Jur. 429; 3 Notes of Cases, 75.

246. When a ship partially damaged has been repaired by the owners, the insurers, as between assurer and assured, are only liable to the amount of two-thirds of the cost of repair, unless circumstances be shown to take the case out of that ordinary rule of deduction. Poingdestre v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company, R. & M. 378; Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 T. R. 407.

246a. The estimated cost of repairs in an action to recover on a policy of marine insurance, though rejected as a direct measure of loss, may be the measure of the difference between the ship's sound and damaged values if no other measure can be found for arriving at the loss really sustained, but if more reliable evidence of the amount of such loss exists, the estimated cost of repairs ought not to be adopted for the purpose of arriving, even indirectly, at the measure of the loss sustained. Pitman v. The Universal Marine Insurance Co. Limited, 4 Asp. 444.

247. In estimating damages arising from a collision, an outlay merely probable and discretionary had there been no collision, cannot be deducted from a charge made indispensable by the collision. H. M. S. Inflexible, Swabey, 200; 28 L. T. 374; 5 W. R. 517.

248. In every case of collision the owners of a damaged vessel may avail themselves of the opportunity of repairs being required in respect of the collision, to do also other repairs, provided that no injury is caused thereby to the persons who pay for the repairs consequent on the collision. The Alfred, 3 W. Rob. 239; 7 Notes of Cases, 352.

248a. On opening up, for the purpose of repairing a ship damaged by collision, certain timber heads not affected by the collision were found to be rotten, and to require renewing before the Board of Trade surveyor would allow her to proceed to sea, though but for such opening up these would not have been discovered, and she might have sailed for some years without their renewal. Held, by the Divisional Court, overruling the judgment of the County Court judge, that the expenses for such renewal could not be charged to the collision. The Princess, 5 Asp. 451.

249. It does not necessarily follow that surveys include all the repairs that ought to be done. The Alfred, 7 Notes of Cases, 357; 3 W. Rob. 232.*

250. Shipwrights or persons accustomed to shipbuilding and, semble, who saw the vessel under repair, would be better judges than the merchants assisting the registrar of the repairs necessary in consequence of a collision. Ibid. 7 Notes of Cases, 355; 3 W. Rob. 232.

251. The report of the registrar and merchants reduced the amounts of shipwrights' and blacksmiths' accounts on the ground that the repairs exceeded the damage. On objection to the report, evidence of shipwrights and others engaged in the repairs was given on one side

* (170) But the registrar would require clear proof of repairs, not included in the

to the effect that all those repairs were caused by the collision; and on the other side, besides the protest and surveys, evidence was given by shipbuilders and others who had not seen the vessel, but had perused the protest, surveys, and bills, of the sufficiency of the amounts allowed by the report. The court disallowed the reductions. Ibid. 7 Notes of Cases, 352; 3 W. Rob. 222.

252. Expenses for repairs were incurred shortly after the collision and before judgment, and were paid, and sworn to be correct, and there was no contradictory evidence. The registrar and merchants disallowed part of those expenses, but on objection to the report the full amount was allowed by the court. The Black Prince, 1 Lushington, 576.

253. A claim of £242 was made for cordage; the registrar and merchants allowed £186. On objection thereto positive evidence was given by the plaintiff that all the cordage charged for was required in consequence of the collision. Opposed to this was the opinion of the registrar and merchants that the quantity was excessive, but without any explanation of fact, or any proof furnished by the defendant. The court referred back the items for further consideration. Ultimately £232 was allowed. H. M. S. Inflexible, Swabey, 203.

254. Claim of £80 for painting the whole ship averred to be necessary in consequence of her having been shaken by the collision and requiring to be caulked all over. £60 only allowed by the registrar and merchants, and such allowance confirmed by the court. Ibid. 200.

255. Ship was repaired at Portsmouth and afterwards proceeded to her home port, Yarmouth, where some slight further repairs were done. Such further repairs disallowed by the registrar and merchants, and the disallowance confirmed by the court. The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 181; 3 W. Rob. 535.

256. In the accounts for the repairs of a damaged vessel large deductions were made by the registrar and merchants from the bills of the carpenter and the painter, and also from the bill for copper, on the grounds, 1st, that the charges were too high and a greater discount ought to have been allowed; and 2nd, that all the work done was not rendered necessary by the collision. On objection to their report, held, as to the first ground of reduction, that the registrar and merchants were peculiarly competent to form a correct opinion on such matters, and that the evidence had not satisfied the court they had miscarried; but as to the 2nd ground, that the evidence established that all the work done was for repairs caused by the collision, and the report directed to be altered accordingly. The Pactolus, Swabey, 173; 28 L. T. 220; 5 W. R. 167.

257. In a case of damage to an American vessel, quære as to the admissibility of evidence as to the general state of vessels built in America, and that they were generally insufficiently supplied with iron fastenings. Even if admissible, it is not to be put in competition with direct evidence as to the actual state and condition of the vessel and of the repairs necessary to be done in consequence of the collision. Ibid. Swabey, 176; Ibid.

258. The burthen of proof that the claimants for damage went into an improper port for repair is on those averring that misconduct. The Pensher, Swabey, 213; 29 L. T. 12.

4. Expenses superintending Repairs.*

259. Vessel damaged, put into Portsmouth for repair, her master on board was sick, and agents of the ship were appointed there. Her owner, who resided at Yarmouth, sent C., a man of experience, from Yarmouth to Portsmouth to superintend the repairs. Charge of £33 for C.'s expenses and loss of time, disallowed by the registrar and merchants, and by the court. The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 180; 2 W. Rob. 533.

260. Expenses of journeys of master and mate to and from Portsmouth, where the ship was repaired, and Yarmouth, where her owner resided, disallowed by the registrar and merchants, and by the court. The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 181.

* (171) Damages amounting to about £400 were repaired in the port in which the owners resided. A charge of £10 : 10s. made by the owners for agency and superintending the repairs allowed. The Polonaise, No. 1800, April 23, 1864. R. & M.

(171a) The collision was between two steamships and occurred in Gothenburg Harbour.

The expenses of a journey there undertaken on behalf of the claimants by a London shipwright and an assistant were allowed, the step being deemed a prudent one. The Carl XV., No. 6011, July, 1872. R. & M.

5. *Repairs where justifiable.

261. Semble, in a cause of damage by collision, if the costs of repairs exceed the value of the vessel immediately before the collision, the excess will not be allowed. The Empress Eugenie, 1 Lushington, 138. See also No. 227, p. 1745.

6. Cargo lost.†

262. Owing to a collision between the K. and the B. the cargo of coals on the K. was damaged, and had to be unladen

(174) The plaintiff's vessel, laden with cargo, was sunk in a collision, and afterwards raised and repaired, and the cost of repairs exceeded the value of the ship, which might have been ascertained before the repairs were commenced. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover upon a principle of partial loss, but that the measure of damages was the value of the ship before the collision, with interest from the date when the cargo would, in ordinary course, have been delivered, together with the costs of raising and of placing the ship in dock for inspection, less the value of the wreck as raised. The Empress Eugenie, 1 Lushington, 138. R. & M.

(175) Unless there has been a degree of imprudence amounting almost to culpable negligence shown by an owner who has repaired a vessel which, as events prove, should have been abandoned as a total loss, the registrar and merchants will not reject his claim for the repairs effected. The Magellanes, No. 3815, Dec. 1867. R. & M.

(176) A vessel having an inferior class was damaged by collision. For the purposes of repair she was extensively opened out, and after a very large sum had been spent upon her, it was discovered that her beams were so decayed as to render it unwise either to complete the repairs or to restore her to her damaged condition after the collision; at which time her market value would have been considerably greater than after she had been opened out. On reference of the claim, the defendants contended that the vessel should have been treated as a total loss immediately after the collision. The registrar and merchants, however, were of opinion, on the balance of evidence, that the owners had intended to repair the vessel so as to entitle her to a higher class than she had before the collision, and that if she had been opened out only so far as was necessary to repair the actual damage, it would then have been thought prudent by an uninsured owner to restore her to her old class by effecting such repairs. They accordingly rejected the defendants' contention, and allowed a sum which, in their opinion, would have covered the cost of opening out the vessel so far as would have been necessary to effect the collision repairs, and also allowed the estimated cost of such repairs. Ibid.

(177) Although, upon reference of a claim for damage by collision, the figures finally arrived at proved that the vessel should have been abandoned and not repaired, the registrar and merchants, considering that the owners had acted bonâ fide and as a prudent uninsured owner might have been expected to act, allowed the repairs in principle, but dealt strictly with the figures. The N. Mosher, No. 3274, April, 1867. R. & M.

(178) A steamer, whose value at the time when she was sunk was found by the registrar and merchants to have been about £9,300, was raised and repaired by her owners at a cost (including demurrage) of £10,909. In reducing the claim to £8,973, the registrar and merchants did not accept the contention that she should have been treated as a constructive total loss. The Mary, March, 1882. R. & M.

† (179) The value of cargo lost by collision is allowed less charges for freight and of realizing the cargo. The Tuscarora, July, 1858. R. & M.

(180) Cost price of cargo and £10 per cent. profit were allowed where no objection to it was taken. The Britannia, August, 1858. R. & M.

(181) In estimating the value of cargo lost by collision the registrar and merchants will allow a fair profit in addition to the cost price. The Ironmaster, Sept. 1858. R. & M.

(182) A cargo of coals was shipped on owner's account. The vessel having been run down and sunk, the owner claimed and had allowed to him the invoice price of the coals, plus the necessary disbursements in sending the vessel to sea, and the wages paid to the master and crew up to the date of the loss. The Thyatira, July, 1882. R. & M.

(183) A third party having established a claim in respect of advanced freight, the report was, by agreement, referred back to the registrar, and an amended claim filed, claiming the estimated arrival value of the cargo at its destination, less the expenses that would have been incurred in realizing that value. Ibid. Feb. 1884. R. & M.

(184) An item for insurance premium on cargo lost by collision was objected to, but as at C., the port of loading. The owners of the coal desired to sell it at C., and to load a fresh cargo, but this the owners of the K. refused to do, except upon "fresh terms." These the coal owners did not ascertain, but re-shipped the coal in the K. to its destination at Bombay, and there used it for smithy purposes, as it was unfit for its original purposes. Against the owners of the B. the registrar allowed only the difference between the value of the damaged and sound coal at C. Held, by the court, that the owners of the K. were entitled to insist on the original cargo being re-shipped, that the cargo owners should have inquired as to the "fresh terms," so as to be able to form a judgment as to the best way of diminishing the loss, and that it must be ascertained what increased freight would have been payable in respect of a fresh cargo before comparing the loss which resulted at Bombay with the loss which would have arisen on a sale at C., and shipping a fresh cargo. The Blenheim, 10 P. D. 167; 54 L. J. P. D. 81.

262a. Held, further, that because the damaged coal was used for smithy purposes at Bombay its value was not necessarily that of ordinary smithy coal at Bombay. Ibid.

263a. On a reference to the registrar and merchants in a cause of collision the plaintiffs, who were underwriters of cargo and had paid for a total loss, produced in support of their claim the policies of insurance, the bills of lading, the invoice and a copy of the manifest. Held, that the plaintiffs must also give evidence of a discharge from the original owners of the cargo, and some further evidence as to the value of the goods. The John Bellamy, 39 L. J. Adm. 28.

the plaintiffs claimed no profit on the cargo the registrar did not disturb the claim. The Aberfoyle, August, 1883. R. & M.

(185) Claims for insurance, in addition to the cost of cargo lost by collision, were disallowed, and an allowance substituted for the trouble of shipping the goods. The Warkworth, Feb. 1885. R. & M.

(186) The measure of damages for goods lost in a collision (as held in the United States) is the value of the cargo at the port of shipment, together with the expense of lading it on board, and transporting it to the place of collision, and interest at 6 per cent. per annum; all beyond is expected earnings or profits, and the loss of them is not a proper measure of damages. (U. S. Circ. Ct. East Dist. of N. Y.) Joseph W. Dyer v. The National Steamship Co., 4 Asp. 30. [AMERICAN.]

(187) Where the value at the port of shipment cannot be ascertained, the measure is the market value at the port of destination, less expenses which would have attended the sale, and less the estimated mercantile profit, but plus interest. Ibid.

(188) A cargo of guano, shipped at the Chincha Islands, while being taken to New York was lost by collision. The guano belonged to the Peruvian Government, which, though it had a monopoly of the guano at the Chincha Islands, did not sell the guano there, but carried it to various parts of the world. Held, that the damages for the loss of the guano were to be ascertained by taking the market value in the port of New York, and deducting therefrom the costs and charges which would have been incurred from the time of the loss to its sale and a reasonable mercantile profit. Dyer v. The National Steamship Co., 4 Asp. 26. [AMERICAN.]

(189) Where cargo was lost by a collision and the owners brought suit to recover its value, held, that the damages must be computed by taking the price paid at the port of shipment, and adding the expense of lading it on board, and of navigating the vessel to the place of collision, and that the libellant was entitled to interest on that account from the time of the collision. The Ocean Queen, 2 Asp. 419. [AMERICAN.]

(190) Where a ship at Melbourne bound for New York received on freight a quantity of sovereigns, and gave a usual bill of lading therefor, but failed on her arrival to deliver them to the indorsee of the bill of lading, held, that in fixing the amount of damages, the bill of lading was to be treated, not as a contract to pay money, but to carry and deliver goods. The Patrick Henry, 2 Asp. 566. [AMERICAN.]

(191) Held, also, that the value of the sovereigns was not to be fixed by a statute which fixed its computation for ordinary transactions, but by their actual value in the currency of the country. Ibid.

(192) Held, further, that the clause in the bill of lading fixing the freight at so many pounds sterling was a promise to pay money,

8. Interest. †

266. Held, that the party damaged and obtaining judgment was entitled to interest upon the amount paid for the repairs from the date of payment, and not from the date of the decree only, and the report upon that item amended. The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 176; 2 W. Rob. 533.

267. In a case of total loss interest on the value of ship and amount of freight is allowed from the probable termination of the voyage. The Canada, 1 Lushington, 586.

268. In a cause of collision in rem the ship was sold by the court, and the proceeds were insufficient to pay the plaintiff's claim. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest, ultra the net proceeds and costs. The Europa, 9 L. T. N.S. 781.

and in calculating the freight the pound sterling must be taken at its legal value. The Patrick Henry, 2 Asp. 566. [AMERICAN.]

(192a) The owners of a ship trading as a common carrier are liable to make good any losses sustained by the cargo through collision. The Horatio Harris, No. 4214, June, 1868. R. & M.

* (193) A cargo of grain having received sea damage was afterwards detained on board the vessel at an intermediate port by reason of a collision. Held, that such detention must have increased the damage which was going on at an increasing ratio the longer the vessel was detained, and the registrar allowed a sum representing about one-fifth of the total sea damage. The Lima, November, 1883. R. & M.

(193a) When goods are destroyed or materially injured on board a vessel in the port where they are shipped, the damages must be ascertained by the difference between the prime cost and charges, and the sales at the port of shipment, and not by the probable profits if the goods had gone safe to the port of destination. Dusar v. Mungatroyd, 1 Wash. C. C. 13. [AMERICAN.]

(194a) In cases of tort the measure of damages is, in the event of loss, the value of the goods at the time and place of shipment, and in the event of damage the diminution of value by reason of the injury, with interest thereon to the time of judgment, including all proper charges, and the premium of insurance where it has been paid. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.), 242. [AMERICAN.]

277. Discount ought to be deducted if it has been, or might have been, received.

tice is to allow the fair value of the seamen's clothes, according to the best judgment the registrar and merchants can form thereon. They do not consider themselves bound by the values sworn to by the claimants.

(203a) The claims of a crew for the loss of their effects in a vessel which they had abandoned after a collision, but which was afterwards picked up, having meantime been plundered, disallowed, no adequate proof being given that the effects, if really lost, might not have been saved, considering the time the colliding vessel stood by. The Carlisle Castle, Dec. 1882. (208) Where a bill for repairs was not paid until three months after the completion of the repairs, and then only by an acceptance, the period of which was not shown, the registrar deducted a discount of 10 per cent. The Aberfoyle, August, 1883. R. & M.

(208a) Where a shipwright's account for repairs had been paid by a bill due ten months after the collision, the registrar disallowed a large amount by way of discount. The Castleford, August, 1884. See also The Harvest Queen, December, 1884. R. & M.

(209) When freight is payable, less discount, the discount will be deducted from the gross freight. H.M.S. Pembroke, May, 1858. R. & M.

(209a) It having been shown that a shipwright was giving long credit to the plaintiffs, the registrar and merchants deducted a discount of five per cent. when assessing the claim as against a wrong-doer. The Africa, February, 1884. R. & M.

‡ (210) A charge of agency for superintending the repairs, and collecting and paying the accounts, is generally allowed, graduated according to the amount of repairs and the labour and trouble in reference to the accounts.

§ (211) Cases of great difficulty often arise when the question is up to what time, subsequent to the cause of action, damages may be assessed, Whether they must be limited the wrong-doing vessel are responsible, not only for the immediate damage, but for consequential damage, that is, all damage which may subsequently take by the commencement of the action, or may be calculated up to the time of verdict, or to an indefinite period afterwards. The result of these decisions seems to be, that damages arising subsequent to action brought, or even to the date of verdict, may be taken into consideration where they are the natural and necessary result of the act complained of, and where they do not themselves constitute a new cause of action. Mayne on Damages, 4th ed. p. 93.

(212) The first, and in fact the only, inquiry is whether the damage complained of is the natural and reasonable result of the defendant's act. It will assume this character if it can be shown to be such a consequence, as in the ordinary course of things would flow from the act. Otherwise the damage is said to be too remote. Ibid. 45.

(213) Damage will obviously be too remote, when it is caused wholly or principally by the act of the plaintiff himself; it cannot then be regarded as the necessary result of the defendant's misconduct. Ibid. 69.

(214) In general it will be found that where damage is too remote to form the ground of an action the reason of the decision would equally exclude it from consideration, though the suit were maintainable on other grounds. Ibid. 44.

(215) On the question of remoteness of damage, and as to cases where profits would have been made but for the damage, see Ibid. p. 44 et seq., and the cases there cited and considered.

(216) The question whether the registrar and merchants are not precluded under the rulings in The Columbus, 2 W. Rob. 158; The Lively, 1 Gallion, 315; and The Amiable Nancy, 3 Wheaton, 346, from entertaining speculative claims for damages, such as probable profit on a voyage contracted for but not in progress at the time of the collision, fully considered. The Copefield, No. 6973, June, 1875. R. & M.

(217) Even where damages consequent upon the collision would probably have been avoided, or mitigated, by special precautions on the part of the master of the injured vessel, the defendants will not be exonerated from liability unless they can prove that the master was grossly and culpably negligent. The Earl of Jersey, 1881, G. No. 9, Fo. 27, Dec. 1881. R. & M.

(218) A vessel returning to port for repairs was deserted by some of her crew, who had received advances on sailing. The claim for such advances as against the wrong-doing vessel was disallowed. The Stag, May, 1882. R. & M.

(219) The actual damage sustained at the time and place of the injury, and not the profits which might probably have been realized if the collision had not incurred, constitutes the just measure of damages to be awarded to the injured party. 1 Conkling's (U. S.) Adm. Prac. 384. [AMERICAN.]

(220) The probable profits of a voyage are not a fit mode for the ascertainment of damages in cases of marine torts. The Amiable Nancy, 3 Wheat. 546; La Ainstad de Rues, 5 Wheat. 385. [AMERICAN.]

(221) In estimating damages by collision, held, that remote or consequential damages growing out of the supposed loss of profits should not be considered. Minor v. Steamer Picayune, 13 La. An. 564. [AMERICAN.]

(222) By the American law certain special payments have to be made by American owners who discharge American seamen abroad, but as the English Court of Admiralty applies the General Maritime Law it cannot take cognizance of the municipal laws of foreign countries. The Cultivator, 1878, B. No. 64, June. R. & M.

(223) Seem, therefore, that such payments could not be allowed as items of damage. Ibid.

(224) The voyage of a passenger steamship having been interrupted by the collision, the passage-money of certain of the passengers was returned to them, and claimed against the defendants. The entire delay occasioned to the vessel was under a fortnight. There being no legal obligation upon the owners to return the passage-money, the specific item was struck out of the claim, but certain allowances were made in lieu thereof. The Delmira, No. 3080, January, 1867. R. & M.

(225) A vessel carrying emigrants, who had each paid £5 towards his passage, the balance of £10 to be paid by the Queensland Government on arrival, returned to Gravesend to repair collision damages. There some of the emigrants left her and did not join her when she again sailed. The claim for the loss of £10 per head was disallowed. The Ella, May, 1884.

(226) Brokerage paid in respect of the uncompleted portion of a period covered by a charter-party is a loss too remote to be treated as an item of consequential damage. The Earl of Erne, No. 4950, November, 1869. R. & M.

(227) Commission charged on a contemplated freight to be earned under another charter is also too remote. The Hermann, Nos. 5010 and 5012, May, 1870. R. & M.

(228) A reward paid for the identification of a vessel which deserted the vessel she had damaged without giving her name or destination, is not an item of damage. The Hilda, No. 5018, November, 1869. R. & M.

(229) There being no obligation upon the master of a foreign vessel to make a deposition before the receiver of wreck, the fee paid in respect thereof will not be allowed. The Charlton, No. 5578, March, 1871. R. & M.

(230) The owners of a vessel sunk by col-place that could be fairly attributed exclusively to the act of the original wrong-doer. The Countess of Durham (1840), 9 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 279; The Betsy Caines, 2 Hagg. 30.

282. Damages for collision may be recovered against the wrong-doing vessel, although subsequently to the collision the damaged vessel may not have taken all the proper measures for her safety. The damaged vessel is not to blame because her crew were seized with panic and did not perform their duty, if such panic can be properly attributed to the collision. The Lotus, 2 Asp. 238; The Lena, Ibid. 345. But see below The Flying Fish.

283. All the subsequent damage arising from a collision must be borne by the vessel causing the damage, unless any part of that subsequent damage arose from negligence or want of skill on the part of those on board the vessel damaged. The Pensher, Swabey, 213; 29 L. T. 12. Affirmed on appeal, Ibid., Swabey, 215; The Linda, Swabey, 307; 30 L. T. 234; 4 Jur. N.S. 146; 6 W. R. 196; Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), 3 Moore, P. C. N.S. 86; 2 Asp. 221; B. & L. P. C. 436; 34 L. J. Adm. P. C. 113.

284. Held, in the Privy Council, overruling the judgment of the Court of Admiralty, that in considering whether damages to a vessel incurred subsequently to a collision are to be paid by the wrong-doer, it is not necessary for the defendant to prove gross negligence or gross want of skill, nor is any presumption to be raised against the defendant because his ship was the original wrong-doer. Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), 3 Moore, P. C. N.S. 86; 2 Asp. P. C. 221; Br. & Lush. P. C. 436; 34 L. J. Adm. P. C. 113.

285. In a cause of damage the defendant will not be liable for any consequential damage which the plaintiff might have averted by ordinary care, courage, and resolution. Semble, in the Court of Admiralty it lies upon the defendant to show that such care, courage, and resolution were not exercised. Semble, in the Courts of Common Law it lies upon the plaintiff to show that they were exercised. The Thuringia, 4 L. J. Adm. 44; 1 Asp. N.S. 283.

286. The plaintiff claiming for a consequential loss must show an actual loss and reasonable proof of its amount. Proof of a possible or probable loss is not sufficient. The Clarence, 3 W. Rob. 286; 7 Notes of Cases, 579; 14 Jur. 557.

287. The vessel C., which was proceeding in ballast to Montreal to load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom pursuant to charter-party, was injured by collision with another vessel, and compelled to put into port to repair. The repairs necessarily occupied so long a time that it was not reasonably possible for the C. to have arrived at Montreal in time to fulfil her charter before the navigation of the St. Lawrence was stopped by ice for the winter. In these circumstances the owners of the C. abandoned the charter, and it was found that they had acted prudently in so doing. Held, that the loss arising from the abandonment of the charter was a loss caused by the collision. The Consett, 5 P. D. 229.

288. In a suit to recover damages caused by collision, the promovent, although entitled to recover their actual losses, subject to the statutory limitations, were held not entitled to certain consequential damages. The Cumberland, 1 Asp. 170.

288a. Commission paid for bail in a salvage action will not be allowed as part of the damages recoverable by the salvaged vessel in an action of damage by collision. The British Commerce, 9 P. D. 128; 53 L. J. P. D. 72. Although in certain circumstances they may be recovered as consequential damages in other actions. The Numida, The Collingrove, 10 P. D. 158; 54 L. J. Adm. 78; 5 Asp. 335; 34 W. R. 156.

See also c. 1, p. 1738.

(b) *Abandonment of Vessel after Collision.

289. When a vessel is sunk at sea by collision it is not incumbent upon the lisson sought to recover a sum alleged to have been paid by them to the consignees as an indemnity for loss sustained by the non-delivery of the cargo. The registrar and merchants rejected the claim. The Bulgarian, No. 6467, February, 1874. R. & M.

(231) The charges of noting a protest disallowed on reference in a damage action, the protest being purely formal and not noted within a reasonable time after the collision. The Xanthe, No. 3266, July, 1866. R. & M.

(232) Bail fees were claimed as against a wrong-doer, but were disallowed by the registrar and merchants. The Elephant, 1884. R. & M.

* (233) In an action of damage the plaintiff owner to go to any expense whatever for the purpose of raising her. The Columbus, 3 W. Rob. 165; 13 Jur. 285; 6 Notes of Cases, 671.

290. This principle would not apply when the vessel is not actually sunk but only partially damaged. Ibid.

291. The principle of abandonment as applied to insurance cases does not apply to cases of damage by collision. Ibid.

291a. The true rule, in a case of total loss by collision, is to calculate the value of the property destroyed at the time of the loss, and to pay it to the owners as a full indemnity. Ibid.

292. The ship C. came into collision with the smack T., and the T. in consequence sunk. The owner of the C. weighed the smack and conveyed her into port. Held, that he did it at his own risk and expense, and that her owner was not bound to take her, but was entitled to recover as for a total loss. Ibid.

293. A vessel to which the blame of a collision is attributed is liable not only for the immediate damage, but for the consequential loss arising from the abandonment of the injured vessel by her crew, under reasonable apprehension of danger. The Blenheim, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 285.

294. It is impossible for any court of justice to say with certainty what are the precise circumstances that would justify the abandonment of a vessel damaged by collision. If there be any reasonable prospect that the crew's lives are in danger they are justified in abandoning her, and the consequences must fall on the vessel occasioning the damage. Ibid.

295. The propriety of such abandonment is a question for the judge and not for the Trinity Masters. Ibid.

296. The master and crew of a vessel in a case of collision are not bound to incur extraordinary risk of life by staying by the vessel. The Linda, Swabey, 306; 6 W. R. 196; 30 L. T. 234; 4 Jur. N.S. 146.

297. The ships G. and L. came into collision, after which the G. was abandoned by her master and crew, and picked up by another vessel and carried to Madeira, by which a large salvage expense was incurred. In a cause of collision both vessels were held to be in fault. On a further question whether the expense of salvage was to form part of the damage which would be divided between the vessels, held, that under the circumstances the G. was improperly abandoned, through want of ordinary skill and resolution in her master and crew, and that the salvage expense incurred was chargeable to such misconduct, and should, therefore, form no part of the damage arising from the collision. Ibid.

298. After a collision has occurred, if the vessel held not to blame for the collision is abandoned by her master and crew, the court will require to be satisfied that the master wilfully abandoned his vessel when he might have saved her, or that he abandoned her through a want of ordinary nautical skill and resolution, before it will oust the plaintiff's claim in respect of such abandonment. If there were extraordinary risk of life in remaining by her, or if it turned out to be a question of want of judgment in the master as to whether it were expedient to act in this or that way, the court will consider the collision to be the cause of the whole damage and expense incurred. Ibid.; but see Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), infra.

299. In consequence of a collision the plaintiff's vessel, W. E., was run on shore, and she subsequently broke up and was lost. On a claim for the loss of the vessel, opposed on the ground that the master was advised to lay out an anchor and so work the vessel off before the tide rose, and that he was guilty of gross nautical ignorance and negligence in not doing so; held, on the balance of evidence, that there was such reasonable doubt as to the success of such measures that the owners ought not to be prejudiced by the judgment of the master thereon under.

claimed for a total loss of his vessel, which had been abandoned by her master and crew. The registrar and merchants were of opinion that a master possessing more than ordinary resolution would probably have stayed by and saved the vessel, but as it could not be said that the abandonment was unjustifiable, the claim was therefore allowed. The Pallas, Nos. 5946 and 6109, July, 1872. R. & M.

(234) In a case of collision the crew of the injured vessel are not bound to remain on board, unless it is plain that they can do so with safety, and there is good reason to suppose the vessel can be saved. Sherman v. Fream, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 478. [AMERICAN.]

circumstances of great difficulty, and claim allowed. Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), Aug. 2, 1864.

300. But on appeal, held, that the vessel was not in such a state that all attempts to save her were hopeless, and that the master had been guilty of want of ordinary nautical skill and neglect of duty in exercising no judgment at all in the matter, in attempting nothing because he persuaded himself that nothing could be done, in at once abandoning her in despair and regarding all efforts to save her as hopeless, and in rejecting all offers of assistance without weighing all the measures proposed because he had hastily determined that the state of his vessel would make every effort to save her unavailable. The amount of damages, therefore, directed to be limited to those to which the plaintiffs were entitled down to the time when the master first refused the assistance offered him. Ibid.; 3 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 77; 34 L. J. Adm. P. C. 113; 2 Asp. 221; B. & L. P. C. 436.

301. Held, that it was not necessary to prove that the master of the W. E. had been guilty of gross negligence or gross want of skill; nor was any presumption to be raised against the defendant because the F. F. was the original wrongdoer, but that the proper question was whether the master of the W. E. did what a reasonable man would do under similar circumstances, i. e., acted with ordinary nautical skill and resolution. If it was reasonably doubtful whether any measure proposed would be successful, he would be justified in declining to run the risk. Ibid. 3 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 113.

302. A collision occurred in the Lough of Belfast about midnight between a steamer and a brigantine; the steamer continued her course immediately after the collision, which it was admitted occurred solely through her default. The crew of the brigantine, under what appeared to the court a well-grounded apprehension of danger to their lives, abandoned her, and she in consequence went ashore and became a total loss. Held, that the steamer was liable for the loss, though it was probable that if the crew of the brigantine had remained on board the loss might not have occurred. The Lindsay, L. R. 1 Eq. 259. [IRISH.]

303. In a cause of damage by collision the defendants condemned in the damage, except so much of it as was the result of improper abandonment. (Affirmed by the Court of Delegates, but without costs.) The Swan, 9 Irish Jur. 278; 2 Asp. 133.

303a. The master and crew of a vessel injured by collision are bound to show ordinary courage and nautical skill in endeavouring to save their vessel from total loss, and the defendants will not, on a reference to the registrar and merchants to assess the damages, be held liable for any loss which might have been avoided by the exercise of such ordinary courage and skill. The Thuringia, 41 L. J. Adm. 44; 1 Asp. N.S. 283.

304. The T., a North German steamer, ran into the W., a British steamer, eighteen miles off the coast of Heligoland. The crew of the W. immediately got on board the T., but some of them returned and found the W. injured and making water. The W. was built in watertight compartments, and the water did not reach her engines or fires. The T. lay by her for an hour, when a French man-of-war approaching, and France being then at war with Germany, she hailed those on board the W., who at once abandoned her, and the T. steamed away. The W. was seen afloat by the French ship for three or four hours afterwards. The plaintiffs, the owners of the W., claimed for a total loss. Held, affirming the decision of the registrar and merchants, that the abandonment of their vessel by the plaintiffs was not justifiable, and that they were only entitled to such a sum as would have repaired the vessel and compensated them for its detention whilst being repaired. Ibid.

(c) *Losses or Damages after Collision.

305. Held, in the Privy Council, overruling the judgment of the Court of

* (236) The S. came into collision in Yarmouth Roads with the E. L., which was found to blame for the collision. The S. lost her bowsprit and foremast, besides suffering other damage. She accordingly engaged the assistance of a tug to take her into Lowestoff. On entering the harbour the tug struck the South Pier, and the brig passed round outside the pier head, drifted on to the beach, and sustained further damage. Held, that the owners of the E. L. were responsible for the further damage. The Earl of Leicester, 29 December, 1864. R. & M.

(237) The W. W., whilst at anchor in the Admiralty, that in considering whether damages to a vessel incurred subsequently to a collision are to be paid by the wrongdoer, it is not necessary for the defendant to prove gross negligence or gross want of skill, nor is any presumption to be raised against the defendant because his ship was the original wrongdoer. Anderson v. Hoen (The Flying Fish), 3 Moore, P. C. N.S. 86; 2 Asp. 221; B. & L. P. C. 436; 34 L. J. Adm. P. C. 113.

306. When a collision has taken place the burden of proof lies on those who assert that subsequent damage and expenses are not chargeable to the collision. The Linda, Swabey, 306; 30 L. T. 234; 4 Jur. N.S. 146; 6 W. R. 196; but see The Flying Fish, supra.

306a. A vessel was seriously damaged by collision, and subsequently became unmanageable, got on a sandbank, and was lost. Held, that her eventual loss was attributable to the effect of the collision, and not to the subsequent mismanagement of those on board her. Damage pronounced for accordingly. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 7; 11 Jur. 783; 5 Notes of Cases, 450.

307. Prima facie the presumption of law is that a vessel, which has been damaged by collision and subsequently lost, was lost in consequence of the collision. Ibid.; but see The Flying Fish, supra.

308. A schooner having previously encountered severe weather, put into Gibraltar, and, while at anchor there, was injured by a steamer. The steamer being to blame for the collision, the registrar and merchants, considering it probable that the subsequent condition of the vessel was caused partly by the previous severe weather and partly by the collision, divided the damage. On appeal to the court, held, that there was prima facie proof, on behalf of the schooner, that all the damage was caused by the collision, and that the owners of the steamer having failed to rebut by conclusive evidence such proof, they were responsible for all the damage. Report directed to be amended accordingly with costs. The Egyptian, 10 L. T. N.S. 91; but see The Flying Fish, supra.

309. In a cause of collision it was contended on behalf of the vessel to blame that the master of the other vessel had contributed to the ultimate sinking of his ship by neglecting, after the collision, to take proper measures to secure her safety. Held, that although it was possible measures might have been adopted to avert total loss, yet it was not to be expected that persons under the circumstances attending the collision would be very acute in their judgment or very prompt in their action. The Lena, 2 Asp. 345.

309a. The D. came into collision with the J., rent her mainsail, and did other damage; the J. was ultimately stranded, in consequence, as it was contended on her behalf, of her being so deprived of the use of her mainsail. In an action for damage the D. admitted she was to blame in causing the collision, and tendered £10 to cover the damage thereby occasioned, contending that the stranding of the vessel was occasioned, not by the damage arising from the collision, but by the want of skill of the master of the J. The Trinity Masters were of opinion that the master of the J. had not exercised such a sound judgment in the proceedings subsequent to the collision as a master of ordinary skill and experience should have done. The court pronounced for the damage happening immediately on the collision, but not for the consequential damage claimed (i. e., that occasioned by the vessel stranding). Seem, however, that the J. being merely a small schooner, her owners would have been entitled to the consequential damage

Mersey, was run into and damaged by the steamship T. In consequence of the damage the pilot considered it unsafe for the W. W. to remain in the river, and she was accordingly taken into the St. George's Dock Basin, where at low water she took the ground, and strained and wrinkled her metal. Before the collision she made no water, subsequently she made a very little, but after the grounding she made three or four inches an hour. Held, that the grounding was a result of the collision, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for the repair of the damages caused by the grounding. The Tynwald,

Dec. 1864. R. & M.

(238) A vessel which had been damaged by collision engaged a tug to tow her to a place of safety. During the towage she sustained further damage in attempting to navigate a dangerous channel at an unfavourable state of the tide, although a better channel was available, and more water could have been found by consulting the tides. It also appeared that the master of the vessel had directed the movements of the tug. Held, that the further damage was not consequent upon the collision. The John Olemans, No. 4792, August, 1869. R. & M.

claimed had the master exercised only ordinary skill and experience. The Countess of Durham (1840), 9 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 279; The Pensher, Swabey, 214.

310. Collision with defendant's vessel held to have been the cause of plaintiff's vessel having gone on the rocks, and sustained further damage. The Despatch, 1 Lushington, 98.

311. After a collision, in which the hulls of the two vessels never came in contact, but the R.'s main boom was struck, and rail, bulwarks, and companion carried away. The R. was thirty-five years old, and 135 tons gross register, laden with 225 tons of cement, made considerably more water than before the collision, and her owners, while ignorant of the name of the other vessel, had been placed on the hard at Dover. The registrar of the county court allowed for the repairs, docking the ship, and discharging and reloading cargo, £97, which the judge, on objection to the report, increased to £174. On appeal to the Admiralty Division, it was contended that the greater part of the repairs were caused by the vessel being put on the hard. Held, that although all the damage was not caused by the collision, yet a considerable amount was caused by straining consequent upon the collision; that it was proper and prudent, under the circumstances, to take the vessel into Dover, and place her upon the hard; that the owners acted bond fide in doing so; and that though some straining was caused by the vessel being placed on the hard, yet as the plaintiffs were justified in placing her there, the defendants were liable; that, on the same ground, the unloading of the cargo was justifiable; and that with regard to the caulking and other charges, such as demurrage, the judge of the court below had discriminated, allowing what he considered should be borne by the defendants, and disallowing the rest; and it was proved that the judge was not right in the discretion he had exercised. Appeal dismissed with costs. The Colombo Carolina, January 26, 1886.

312. The stem of the S. struck the C. in the engine-room compartment in the after-part of the ship, cutting eight feet into her deck, and making a hole ten feet wide, which extended below the water-line. The compartment immediately filled with water, which extinguished the fires, and caused the C. to settle so much by the stern that she drew twenty-one feet aft and only three feet forward. About an hour and a-half after the collision, the C. being still afloat, the S. took her in tow, and proceeded in a north-westerly direction towards Sunderland. About 9 a.m., the two vessels being off Hartlepool, the C. was taken in tow by the steam-tug R., and the S. proceeded on her voyage to the southward. The R. continued to tow towards Sunderland with the assistance of two other tugs; but about 4 p.m., when only about half a mile from the south entrance to Sunderland Dock, the C. suddenly sank, and became a total loss, and the captain of the C. should have beached his vessel instead of trying to take her to Sunderland, or should have waited off Hartlepool, being held by the steam-tug, until there was sufficient water for her to have crossed the bar there; this would have been about five o'clock in the afternoon. The registrar and merchants considered that though the master acted bond fide in the course he took, yet he should have asked the S. to tow her in shore, to beach her on the sands north of Whitby, and that he was not justified in attempting to proceed to Sunderland; and that the owners of the C. were not entitled to claim as for a total loss. Held, on objection to the report, that the master of the C. had done the best for the safety of the ship, as if he had attempted to beach her in the trim she was in she would have grounded aft, while forward she would have been waterborne, and with the sea there was she would in all probability have been broken in half; that she would have been in no better position held by the tug off Hartlepool, and waiting to get over the bar, than she was towing towards Sunderland; that the proximate cause of the loss was the collision, and not negligence of the master; and that even if that, because a man in an emergency did not do the best that could be done, his owners were not to be barred from recovery. The owners of the C. were therefore allowed to claim as for a total loss. The Stanmore, 12 Nov. 1885.

(d) *Raising Vessel.

313. The owners of the vessel doing the

* (239) Such expenses when incurred will be allowed to the owner as part of his damages.

(240) Persons were engaged to right a damage, raised, at their own expense, the vessel sunk, and offered her to her owner, who claimed as for a total loss; he refused to take her. Held, that the owner of the sunken vessel was not bound to take her, and might proceed and recover as for a total loss. The Columbus, 13 Jur. 285; 6 Notes of Cases, 671; 3 W. Rob. 165.

314. The vessel, after having been raised, and brought into port, was deteriorating for want of repairs. Held, that the proper course would have been to apply to the court, stating the circumstances, and asking for a decree of sale, and that the proceeds might be brought into the registry to abide the event of the suit. Ibid.

315. For provisions empowering harbour master to remove wreck or other obstruction to the harbour, dock, or pier, or to the approaches thereto, and to charge the owner with the expenses, see The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. xxvii.), s. 56.

316. For similar provisions as to wreck in the Thames, see The Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (c. cxlvii.), s. 86.

317. For similar provisions in the harbour of Belfast, see The Belfast Port and Conservancy Act, 1852 (c. cxxi.), s. 17.

318. The 56th section of the Harbours Act, 1847, enables a harbour-master to remove any obstruction from a harbour, and recover the expenses of such removal from the "owner." A vessel belonging to W. was wrecked at the mouth of, and obstructed, a harbour. The harbour-master removed it, and brought an action to recover the costs of such removal against W., and also against E., with whom the vessel had been insured, and who had paid as on a total loss. No notice of abandonment was given to E. Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that W. was liable under the statute, and that he was not entitled to recover over against E. The Earl of Eglinton v. Norman, 46 L. J. C. A. 557; 3 Asp. N.S. 471.

319. As to the removal of wreck in the Mersey, see the Mersey Docks Act, 1874 (c. xxx.), s. 11.

320. As to the powers of the harbour master in the Clyde for the removal of wrecks, and the recovery of the expenses thereof against the master or owner, see the Clyde Navigation Amendment Act, 1868 (c. cxxiv.), s. 33.

321. As to the removal of wreck in the Humber, see the Humber Conservancy Act (c. 130).

322. Whilst an obstruction in the Humber was being removed, a part-owner died, leaving two executors. The attempts to raise the vessel failed, and she was blown up. Held, that it was for the justices to decide whether the ex-vessel which had capsized, and having done so, negligently removed the supports, in consequence of which she again fell over. Held, not entitled to charge for raising her the second time. The Fromina, April, 1858. R. & M.

(241) The plaintiffs' vessel was sunk by the collision. A bonâ fide but unsuccessful attempt to raise her was voluntarily made by the owners. The registrar held, that as the defendants had to pay for a total loss they were not liable for the expenses of the attempt to raise. The Princess Elizabeth, 1879, C. No. 409, May, 1880. R. & M.

(242) Held (Chief Justice Taney and Justices Catron and Daniel dissenting), that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a sum sufficient, not only to defray the expenses of raising and repairing their vessel, without any deduction of new materials in place of old, as in cases of insurance, but to compensate them also for the loss of her probable earnings in the meantime. Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. 101. [AMERICAN.]

(243) A vessel, raised a few days after being sunk and treated as a total loss, was not promptly sold. The expenses occasioned by the unnecessary delay were disallowed.

The Era, April, 1882. R. & M.

(244) The owners of a vessel sunk in Cork harbour by collision, were served by the harbour commissioners with notice to raise and remove the wreck. It being found useless to attempt to raise her, the owners, at considerable expense, destroyed her by means of explosives, and claimed the cost of such operations. Claim objected to on the ground that if the owner had not acted the harbour commissioners, under 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 56, must have destroyed the wreck free of expense to the owner, there being no proof of negligence. Having regard to the decision in The Earl of Eglinton v. Norman, 3 Asp. N.S. 471, and to the fact that at the trial a special decree, by consent, was taken by the owner for a moiety of his damages, less a sum in respect of the plaintiffs' damages, the registrar, considering that the decree amounted to an admission of negligence which would render the owner liable for the expenses of removing the wreck had the operation been conducted by the commissioners, allowed the agreed percentage of such expenses to the owner. The Catalonia, Oct. 1882. R. & M. penses of attempting to raise the ship were properly incurred, but that they had no power to include the executors in their order. Wilson v. Carter, 1 Asp. 287; L. R. 1 Ex. 177.

323. See, further, as to the removal of wreck, tit. WRECK.

(e) Freight.*

324. In causes of damage by collision

* (245) Deduction from freight in consequence of cargo being landed at Lowestoft instead of London, by reason of the collision, not allowed. The Elizabeth Moore, 1854. R. & M.

(246) Vessel damaged on outward voyage. Claim made for loss of homeward freight disallowed as being problematical. The Undine, May 22, 1857. R. & M.

(247) Charges for brokerage, light dues, &c., will be deducted from the gross freight due. H. M. S. Pembroke, May, 1858. R. & M.

(248) Freight claimed by owner on goods belonging to the master, and stowed in his cabin, not allowed. The William and Jane, Sept. 1858. R. & M.

(249) In cases of total loss the freight is allowed, less deduction for harbour dues, light dues, discharging fees, &c., in fact, the net freight which would have been received by the owner if the vessel had arrived safely. The Tuscarora, July, 1858; The Canada, 1 Lush. 586. R. & M.

(250) A deduction is made for discharging fees. The Fidelia, April, 1858. R. & M.

(251) On a question of repairs of damages sustained in rendering salvage assistance, plaintiffs proved that they were large shippers of goods from L. to M.; that the A. S., the vessel damaged, was one of a regular line of steamers trading thither; that there was a rival line; that in the usual course of trade plaintiffs generally had a full cargo by their vessels sailing shortly before Christmas; that on this occasion they had received about 1,000 tons of goods for transmission by the A. S.; that a full cargo would be from 1,750 to 1,790 tons; that ordinarily large quantities of goods are received for shipment during the last two days of loading; that when it became known the A. S. had gone into dock for repairs all further consignments of goods to be taken by her ceased, and applications were made, and some of them acceded to, for return of goods sent; that goods which would have gone by the A. S. probably went by the steamer of the opposition line advertised to sail when the A. S. should have sailed; that the A. S., when she sailed, had about half a cargo only; and that the gross outward freight on that voyage was £1,754, but was on the next preceding voyage £2,689, the difference between the two voyages being the sum claimed, the rates of freight for those voyages being the same. It was elicited that on other voyages the amount of freight had ranged between £1,150 and £2,250, but with different rates of freight; but it was not proved what freight the A. S., or any similar vessel engaged in the same trade, had earned on voyages at the same period in preceding years. Held, that the evidence established a probable loss of freight in consequence of the detention, but no specific amount, and £500 allowed for such loss of freight accordingly. The Gladiator, No. 1594, April 29, 1864. R. & M.

(252) Damage by collision to the C. S. in the Australian seas. A charter-party had previously to the collision been sent out from England to the master of the C. S., for the conveyance of a cargo from Moulmein to England. Claim of £3,000 for loss of charter. It was not proved that the charter-party ever reached the master, and it appeared uncertain whether, independently of the collision, the master could have carried out the charter-party. Claim disallowed. The South Sea, Swabey, 141. R. & M.

(253) The C. was run down and totally lost in the English Channel. She was at the time on a voyage from Newcastle, and laden with a cargo of coals for Cadiz, whence she was to carry a cargo of salt to South America, pursuant to a charter-party entered into before she left Newcastle. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the net freight on both the coal and salt cargoes. H. M. S. Forke, Oct. 1864. R. & M.

(254) The plaintiffs in an action of damage claiming for the total loss of their vessel on her outward voyage, were allowed the homeward freight which would in all probability have been earned under the charter-party if the collision had not occurred. The Appendix, Nos. 5853, 5856, 5876, Feb. 1872. R. & M.

(255) At the time of the collision the vessel was prosecuting the last of three voyages provided for by the charter-party; but whereas the previous voyages had been in strict accordance with the charter, the voyage in question had, under another charter entered upon by the parties, been slightly varied by the carriage of cargo to an intermediate port. Evidence having been adduced that the vessel had started equipped for the whole voyages out and home, the registrar held, that the legal inference was that she had sailed in pursuance of the earlier charter, and that the call at the intermediate port was in pursuance of a subsidiary and consistent charter. The claim for the homeward freight was therefore allowed. Ibid.

(256) Where a cargo shipped on owner's account was lost by collision, the registrar and merchants in assessing the loss united the claim for cargo and freight, and allowed the sum realized by similar cargoes belonging to the same owner. The Rothesay, April, 1882. R. & M.

the gross freight is not to be allowed, but deductions must be made therefrom for the expenses incident to the earning and receipt of freight, such as wages, pilotage, tonnage, and other dues, and lighterage and other expenses of discharge and delivery of cargo. The Gazette, 2 W. Rob. 279; 8 Jur. 429; 3 Notes of Cases, 75.

325. There is a material distinction between insurance cases which are cases arising ex contractu and cases of damage by collision which are ex delicto. Ibid.; 2 W. Rob. 283.

326. The rule in insurance cases as to the allowance of gross freight will not therefore be followed in damage cases. Ibid.

327. In insurance cases the gross freight is allowed without any deduction for the necessary expenses of earning it. Palmer v. Blackburn, 1 Bing. 6.

328. The court will order payment of the amount of freight in the master's hands and lost in the collision. The Cumberland, 5 L. T. N.S. 496; 6 Irish Jur. N.S. 325.

329. As the master has, in some circumstances, the duty cast upon him of acting as agent for the cargo as well as the ship, the making of a protest, and the obtaining of the necessary official documents, in a foreign port relating to the damage to both ship and cargo, are business directly connected with the collision. The City of Buenos Ayres, 1 Asp. N.S. 169.

330. Delay in their preparation caused by the dilatoriness of the foreign authorities, and by no default of the master, is chargeable to the collision. Ibid.

331. Quare, whether transhipment and forwarding of cargo can be said to be business connected with the collision. Ibid.

332. The vessel C., which was proceeding in ballast to Montreal to load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom, pursuant to charter-party, was injured by collision with another vessel, and compelled to put into port to repair. The repairs necessarily occupied so long that it was not reasonably possible for the C. to have arrived at Montreal in time to fulfil her charter-party before the navigation of the St. Lawrence was stopped by ice for the winter. The owners of the C. therefore abandoned the charter, and it was found that they acted prudently in so doing. Held, that the loss arising from the abandonment of the charter was a loss caused by the collision. The Consett, 5 P. D. 229.

333. V. & Co. shipped their own coal on board their own ship, the A., from Liverpool to Valparaiso, and the master signed a bill of lading deliverable to V. & Co., or assigns, paying freight at twenty-three shillings per ton, and indorsed on it a receipt for £1,000 on account of freight. An insurance was effected on advanced freight valued at £1,000, and the plaintiffs became assignees of the bill of lading and policy on making an advance of £1,650 to V. & Co. The difference in value between the coal at Liverpool and Valparaiso would have greatly exceeded £1,000. The A. was wholly lost through a collision with the

(257) In assessing a claim for freight lost by reason of a ship being run down, the registrar deducted the freight which had been advanced before sailing, and also the amount which would have been expended in completing the voyage and earning the freight, such as coals, stores, provisions, wages, &c. The Aberfoyle, August, 1883. R. & M.

(258) A steamer on her way to Middlesbrough in ballast, and chartered to carry a cargo of pig-iron thence to Dantzic, and return with a cargo of oak staves to London, was run down and sunk. The freight for the above two voyages was allowed less the probable cost of earning it. The Breeze, March, 1884. R. & M.

(259) Whilst loading a cargo of wood at Uleaborg for Penarth Roads for orders a vessel was further chartered to load a cargo of timber at Pensacola for the United Kingdom, with liberty to carry an outward cargo to Pensacola for owners' benefit. On her passage from Uleaborg to Penarth Roads she was in collision in the English Channel, and was towed into Cowes in a waterlogged condition, condemned and sold. Her owners claimed not only the freight for the voyage she was prosecuting, but for the Pensacola freight. The second freight was disallowed, on the ground that she had not completed her first voyage, or was at the disposal of the charterers, or directly bound for her loading port, or that any preparations had even been made for the outward voyage. The Kaikoura, August, 1885. R. & M.

(260) A vessel, under charter, owing to a collision and delay in repairs, arrived at the port of loading thirty days after the time specified in the charter-party, and the charterers elected to cancel the charter. The vessel afterwards obtained less profitable employment, and her owners sought to recover the difference from the other vessel. Held, on the reference that the loss sustained by the cancelling of the charter-party was not occasioned by the collision. The Rallus, No. 6314, January, 1874. R. & M.

See also note 192, p. 1751.

T., for which the T. was alone to blame. Held, that the plaintiffs, who were suing for the underwriters on the policy, were entitled to recover against the T. the £1,000, as a portion of the coal's enhanced value at Valparaiso, which enhanced value had been insured and transferred to the plaintiffs under the name of advanced freight. The Thyatira, 8 P. D. 155; 52 L. J. P. D. 85; 5 Asp. 147, 178.

334. In another action against the T. Messrs. V. & Co. had been awarded by the registrar and merchants the amount of disbursements made, in order to earn the so-called freight, but the judge referred the matter back to the registrar to reconsider his report. Ibid.

335. The delay occasioned by the necessity of repairing the plaintiff's vessel, enabled the charterers of the vessel at the time of the collision to cancel the charter-party, and the plaintiffs were obliged to enter into another charter-party at a lower freight. Held, that compensation ought to have been awarded for the difference between the freight actually earned and the freight under the cancelled charter-party, after deducting the difference between the voyage to be performed under the cancelled charter and the shorter voyage actually made, the saving of wear and tear to the vessel, and for the uncertainties and perils incident to sea voyages, and report directed to be amended accordingly. The Star of India, 1 P. D. 466; 45 L. J. Adm. 102; 3 Asp. N.S. 261.

336. The amount payable in respect of compensation for dead freight where it is unliquidated, is such reasonable amount as the shipowner would have earned, after deducting such expenses as he would have incurred, if a full cargo had been supplied. McLean v. Fleming, 1 Asp. N.S. 160.

337. The vessel run down being a fishing smack on a voyage to receive a cargo of lobsters, and so damaged that it became necessary to hire another smack for the purpose, a reference directed to the registrar and merchants, to report the amount of freight paid to the vessel substituted for the smack, in order to its being allowed as consequential damages. The Yorkshireman, 2 Hagg. 30, n.

338. A charter-party stipulated for certain payments to the owners of cargo as commission and penalties in case of non-fulfilment of charter-party. These payments became due. Held, that they were, together with the costs of paying the freight into court, proper deductions from the gross freight due to the owners of the damaging vessel. The Leo, 1 Asp. 200.

339. It will not be sufficient to aver that the vessel, if she had not been detained in dock, might have earned certain probable freight. The opportunity of earning, and the loss of that opportunity, must be established. The Clarence, 3 W. Rob. 283; 14 Jur. 557; 7 Notes of Cases. 579.

340. As to freight generally, dead freight, advance freight, &c., see tit. GOODS, CARRIAGE OF—, Pt. VII. p. 467.

341. As to the allowance of freight in cases of costs and damages, see c. 8, p. 1776.

(f) Demurrage.*

342. When a ship has been damaged

* (261) See also notes 159, 242, supra.

(262) In estimating demurrage the registrar and merchants will consider not only the time which was occupied in effecting the repairs, but the time in which they might with due expedition have been completed. The Bernhardina, June, 1858. R. & M.

(263) The usual allowance for detention made by the registrar and merchants in cases of coasters and small vessels is 4*d.* per ton per day. The Christiana, April, 1857. R. & M.

(264) This allowance presumes the crew to have been justifiably detained on board. A proportionate reduction is made when the crew are not or ought not to have been retained.

(264*a*) Some members of the crew having been unnecessarily kept by the vessel, the terms of the articles allowing of their discharge, the cost of such members of the crew was disallowed from the demurrage. The James Harris, Jan. 1882. R. & M.

(265) During the repairs to a fishing smack her crew were kept on pay when they could have been discharged at a week's notice. The claim for demurrage after such week was reduced. The Regent, April, 1882. R. & M.

(265*a*) Demurrage per ton is calculated upon the registered tonnage of vessels and not upon their burthen. The James, May, 1859. R. & M.

(266) Steam coasting vessel damaged by collision. Held, that the officers and engineers might properly be retained in the ship's service during the repairs, but the seamen should have been discharged. The Venezuela, May, 1858. R. & M.

(267) Wages paid during repairs to a crew hired for the voyage, allowed. The Vanguard, July, 1857. R. & M.

(268) It was proved that the amount paid for insurance of the vessel—a large and valuable steamer—was from £5 to £6 a day; by collision the restitutio in integrum to which her owners are entitled, consists of the expenses of repairs and a just compensation for the non-employment of that the owner's regular expenses for her were about the same amount, and that the estimated profits were from £15 to £20 a day. Claim for demurrage at the rate of £30 a day allowed. The Gladiator, No. 1594, April 29, 1864. R. & M.

(269) A large and valuable steamer damaged in rendering salvage services was compelled to go into dock to repair damages and be painted, and claimed in consequence for nine days' detention. It was proved that the vessel was usually docked and painted every third voyage, that this occupied from two to three days, and that on this occasion it was her turn to be docked and painted, but that, for special reasons, this would, but for the damages, have been postponed until after her next voyage. Held, that the expense and loss of time in docking and painting the vessel on this occasion, as it must otherwise have been incurred after her next voyage, should be deducted from the claim, and six days' detention only allowed. Ibid. R. & M.

(270) A vessel which had been damaged by collision and by grounding previous to the collision, was thirty-two days under repair. The registrar and merchants disallowed four days' demurrage as being necessitated by the damage sustained before the collision, and allowed twenty-eight days' demurrage in respect of the collision. The Rallus, No. 6314, January, 1874. R. & M.

(271) Indemnity claimed by master for loss of time and earnings in consequence of loss of vessel disallowed, as interest is intended to cover those items. The Britannia, August, 1858. R. & M.

(272) In dealing with a claim for demurrage preferred by the owners of a vessel which had been windbound at the time of collision, the registrar and merchants refused to enter upon speculations as to the probable delay in the ship's progress, even if no collision had occurred. The Dovercourt, No. 3099, January, 1867. R. & M.

(273) Although as a general rule demurrage is calculated at a rate per ton on the vessel's tonnage, yet where the vessel is of a peculiar description and employed in a special manner during certain months only, the registrar and merchants will allow an equitable sum as compensation for the loss of such special employment. The Gleaner, 1877, N. No. 328, May, 1878. R. & M.

(274) Demurrage is allowed as compensation for expenses actually incurred, such as crew's wages, &c., and for the temporary loss of the use of the vessel, which represents capital. The Tiryah, 1878, L. No. 267, May, 1879. R. & M.

(275) The fact that the vessel has been, for some time previous to the collision, worked at a loss will not be adopted as a guide to the allowance of demurrage. Ibid.

(276) A steamship was damaged by collision at a time when, although no charter had been entered into, very profitable employment was obtainable. Before she was ready to resume trading freights had materially declined. In allowing demurrage, the registrar, considering the facts fully proved, allowed a special and liberal sum for demurrage upon the ground that according to the decision in The Star of India (1 P. D. 466, and No. 335, supra) the plaintiff's claim for loss of an immediate profitable employment was not so remote as to justify him in rejecting it. The Wimbledon, 1878, Q. No. 145, Feb. 1879. R. & M.

(277) Demurrage will not be allowed pending the repair of damage occasioned by the collision if the vessel is necessarily under repair from other causes throughout the period for which the demurrage is claimed. The Loyds, 1881, G. No. 401, Fo. 114, Dec. 1881. R. & M.

(278) The measure of damages for a collision whereby a vessel is sunk includes, in addition to the expenses incurred in raising and repairing the vessel, the market value of the use of the vessel during the time necessary to make the repairs and fit her for use (Taney, C. J., Cathron and Daniel, T. J., dissenting). Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. (U. S.) 101. [AMERICAN.]

(279) The loss of the use of the injured vessel whilst undergoing repairs is so directly consequential to the collision as to be entitled to compensation. The Narragansett, Olcott, Adm. 388; Vantine v. The Lake, 2 Wallace, jun. 52. [AMERICAN.]

(280) The value of the services of a vessel while she is undergoing necessary repairs for the injuries received, is to be allowed. The maritime law is less stringent in this respect than the common law. The Narragansett, 1 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 211; Olcott, Adm. 388; The Rhode Island, 1 Abb. Adm. 100; Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. 101; Catherine v. Dickinson, 17 How. (U. S.) 170; Atcheson v. Steamboat Dr. Franklin, 14 Miss. 63; Walderman v. Beckwith, 4 McLean, 286; Barrett v. Wilkinson, Ibid. 589. [AMERICAN.]

(281) The vessel's expenses while undergoing repairs allowed. Minor v. The Steamer Picayune, La. An. 564. [AMERICAN.]

(282) Reasonable demurrage for a period necessary to reinstate the injured vessel will be charged upon the vessel in fault. The Rhode Island, Olcott, Adm. 505. [AMERICAN.]

(282a) When the property is restored after a detention, demurrage is allowed for detention of the ship and interest on the value of the cargo. The Appollon, 9 Wheat. 377. [AMERICAN.]

(283) The registrar and merchants in dealing with a claim for demurrage in respect of a very small vessel, took into account the fact that the cost of crew's wages, provisions, &c. would be proportionately larger than the ship during the repairs, that compensation being the expenses of detention and the amount of profit lost. H. M. S. Inflexible, Swabey, 204; 28 L. T. 374; 5 W. R. 517.

343. The compensation should be reckoned from the period when the vessel, in the ordinary course, would have been ready for sea if there had been no collision up to the time when with due diligence the repairs ought to have been completed. Ibid. Swabey, 205; The Hebe, 5 Notes of Cases, 182; 2 W. Rob. 530.

344. The measure of damages for detention is not what another vessel earned, but what, according to reasonable probability, all contingencies being taken into consideration, the vessel damaged would have earned. The Hebe, Ibid.

345. The owner's books are the best evidence of probable earnings, and should be produced. Ibid.

346. The custom and responsibilities of a ship engaged in the East India trade as regards the retention of Lascars and European officers to take care of them while the ship is in an English port are to be considered, and such expenses viewed as necessary, and allowed for accordingly. H. M. S. Inflexible, Swabey, 204; 28 L. T. 374; 5 W. R. 517.

347. The true measure of the length of demurrage caused by a collision is the length of time which, by reason of the collision, the vessel has been thrown out of her usual employment. The Black Prince, 1 Lush. 568; 5 L. T. N.S. 39.

348. The A. was one of a line of those in a bigger vessel. Eileandubh, August, 1883. R. & M.

(283a) Interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum allowed upon the value of the vessel before the collision, for the interval after the collision, until she was repaired and fitted to resume her trips on appeal. Held, that the allowance was right in the particular case, no vessel having been hired to supply her place. The Rhode Island, 2 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 113. [AMERICAN.]

(284) A steamer trading between the Bristol Channel and the river Seine was damaged by collision in that river. She was taken to Middlesbrough and repaired, and then resumed her employment. Her owner's claim of fifteen days' loss of time for such removal disallowed, on the ground that the vessel could and might have been repaired in the Bristol Channel. The Ernest, July, 1882. R. & M.

(284a) A yacht was damaged by collision, and not repaired until three months after arrival in port. No demurrage or interest was allowed, the owner having shown no anxiety to refit her for sea. A sum in respect of the crew's wages during the temporary repairs was allowed. The Stephenson, May, 1883. R. & M.

(285) Two large hopper barges had been specially constructed to work with a dredger. The dredger was disabled by a collision, and as the hoppers were rendered useless during the time the dredger was under repair, the plaintiffs (a dock board) claimed by way of demurrage interest on the cost of the three vessels. Assuming the case to have been one in which demurrage was allowable, the registrar and merchants were of opinion that the method of computation was not an unfair one. The Clarence, Nov. 1883. R. & M.

(286) In assessing the demurrage of a tug, the registrar and merchants allowed a sum which, in their opinion, fairly represented her net earnings. The Mary Anning, Nov.

1883. R. & M.

(287) A large steamer on her way to dry dock to undergo extensive structural alterations and repairs was damaged by collision. The registrar and merchants being of opinion that the comparatively small damages arising from the collision could have been repaired in a few days, and without interfering with the progress of the owners' repairs, disallowed the claim for demurrage. The Mammoth, Jan. 1884. R. & M.

(288) A vessel while at anchor drifted upon and injured the E., also at anchor. The E. was repaired where she lay, but on proceeding to weigh anchor it was found that the chains of the D. were foul of her anchors, and further delay and expense were caused before the E. could clear her anchors and sail. Demurrage in respect of this detention was objected to; but the objection was overruled on the ground that the E. was not bound to lift her anchors until she was ready to sail. The Eugenie, March, 1884. R. & M.

(289) A French steamer was damaged by collision, and it was contended on the reference that an exceptionally high rate of demurrage should be allowed, on the ground that the French Government subsidizes the owners by paying a certain sum per ton for every thousand miles run under steam. The contention was rejected, on the ground that without such subsidy it would appear the ship would not be employed at an adequate remuneration, and not that with such subsidy her earnings were exceptionally large. The demurrage was therefore allowed on the scale usual in the case of English steamers of a similar class. The Glencoe, May, 1885. R. & M.

steamers belonging to different owners, which took turns for sailing at fixed intervals. In the ordinary course of business each vessel on returning home was a certain time idle in port. The A., in consequence of a collision, was obliged to undergo repairs, and lost her turn, which was taken by another steamer on the line. The A., as soon as repaired, took the next turn. Held, that the measure of demurrage was not the length of time the A. was undergoing repairs, nor the difference between the usual time of her being in port and the actual time she was in port on this occasion, but the number of days she was detained beyond the date on which, but for the collision, she would have sailed in her regular turn. The Black Prince, 1 Lushington, 568; 5 L. T. N. S. 39.

349. It was proved that the value of the steamer A. was £25,000, and that she had cost six years previously £30,000, and was kept in good repair. Demurrage allowed at the rate of £25 per diem. Ibid. 576.

349a. The M., whilst awaiting her turn to enter a dry dock, which had been engaged to enable her to repair damages sustained by stranding, was fouled by another vessel during a gale, her propeller and shaft being damaged by the collision. The same gale caused another vessel to sink just off the dry dock, which was thereby rendered inaccessible, and remained so during fifteen days, when the wreck was removed. The M., which had renewed her engagement with the dry dock, no other being available, then entered it, and in six days repaired all her damage. Of the six days, three were occupied in making good the stranding damage, and three in repairing the collision damage. Whilst the M. was waiting to enter the dry dock, a spare propeller which she had on board had been got ready, and a new shaft prepared, all the preliminary work being completed before the dock was ready to receive her. Demurrage was claimed for eighteen days, viz., three days occupied in repairs, and the fifteen days during which the preliminary work was completed. The registrar only allowed three days' demurrage, on the ground that, as her dock was blocked, she must have waited during the fifteen days, even had no collision happened. On appeal to the judge, and afterwards to the Court of Appeal, it was held that, until the necessary preliminary work was completed, the fact that the dock was blocked was immaterial. Further demurrage was therefore allowed. The Kepler, 1877, Q. No. 281, May, 1877.

350. With respect to the propriety of a charge for loss of employment of a vessel occasioned by her detention to undergo repairs consequent on a collision, the court considered the registrar and merchants more peculiarly competent to form a proper estimate of the propriety of such charge, and accordingly refused to alter the report in that respect. The Alfred, 3 W. Rob. 243; 7 Notes of Cases, 579.

351. It does not follow that anything is due for the detention of a vessel whilst under repair, though under some circumstances such a consequence will follow, as where a fishing voyage is lost, or where the vessel would have been beneficially employed. The Clarence, 3 W. Rob. 285; 14 Jur. 557; 7 Notes of Cases, 579.

352. It will not be sufficient to prove the general rate of the ship's earnings, and that if she had not been detained in dock she might have earned freight. The opportunity of earning, and the actual loss of that opportunity, must be established. Ibid.

352a. £800 allowed to a fishing brig as demurrage or compensation for loss sustained by the interruption of her fishings, such sum being arrived at from evidence as to the value of the takes of other vessels during such interruption. The Risoluto, 8 P. D. 109; 52 L. J. P. D. 46; 5 Asp. 93.

353. Claim of a steam company for demurrage, at the rate of £20 per diem during the repairs, as being the amount at which the vessel might have been hired, not allowed by the registrar and merchants, on the ground that there was no sufficient proof that an actual loss had been sustained. Objection to their report overruled. Ibid.

354. A fishing vessel was sunk in a collision, and the full value awarded by the court, as for a total loss. Held, that nothing in the nature of demurrage could be recovered by the owner, who was also the master, for loss of employment of his vessel or his own earnings. The Columbus, 3 W. Rob. 159; 13 Jur. 285; 6 Notes of Cases, 671.

355. Demurrage is allowed to the owners of a ship during the time she is necessarily delayed for repairs rendered requisite by the collision, for the transacting of business directly connected with the collision. The City of Buenos Ayres, 1 Asp. N. S. 169.

355a. The rate of demurrage allowed to steam vessels of the ordinary class carrying cargo is 6*d.* per ton on the gross tonnage, or 9*d.* per ton on the net tonnage per day. This estimate is arrived at by doubling the amount of the wages of the crew and of the cost of their provisions, so as to include both expenditure and loss of trade. Ibid.

356. A ship, G., insured by a policy containing the usual collision clause, came into collision with the plaintiff's ship, W. H. The G. was arrested in the Admiralty Court, and an agreement, the parties to which were the owners of the two ships and the managers of the insurance company, was entered into, by which the G. was to be released on the payment by her owner or the insurance company of "the amount of damage which the W. H. had received from the collision," and the costs of the proceedings in the Admiralty Court; and in case of dispute as to the "amount of damages claimed by the plaintiffs by reason of the collision," the amount was to be settled by an arbitrator. The G. was released under the agreement, and the amount of damages was referred to an arbitrator, who awarded a certain sum for the damages, and also a separate sum for detention while the damage sustained was being repaired. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for the detention, as well as for the damages received. Heard v. Holman, 11 Jur. N.S. 544; 13 W. R. 745; 12 L. T. N.S. 455.

360. The P., bound from Gallipoli to St. Petersburg, came into collision in the Channel with the A., and was compelled to put into Newhaven to repair damages. The A. claimed compensation for the injuries sustained, and for the consequential loss caused by her detention at Newhaven beyond the Baltic season. The court pronounced for the damage generally, and referred the claims to the registrar and merchants, observing that before pronouncing for the consequential damage it would require it to be satisfactorily proved that every possible exertion was made by the owners of the P. to arrive at St. Petersburg, get in a cargo, and come back again. The Aline (1839), 5 Monthly Law Mag. (298) The plaintiffs' vessel, a fishing smack, was sunk by the collision whilst lying to her nets. The fishing season continued for a few weeks longer, and a sum was accordingly claimed and allowed in respect of her probable earnings during such period. The J. H. Bowers, 1879, W. No. 352, Feb. 1880. R. & M.

(299) In dealing with a claim for demurrage in respect of a fishing smack, which was sailed by the master and crew on the share principle, the ordinary rule as to demurrage was held to be inapplicable. Her estimated probable earnings plus a sum in respect of the crew properly detained were allowed. The Regent, April, 1882. R. & M.

(300) It was stated on a reference to ascertain the loss of a smack's fishing, that the custom was to deduct from the gross earnings of the vessel the commission on the sale of the fish and the crew's food, and to divide the balance into shares. The registrar, in addition to the above two items, deducted a further sum for the wear and tear of the nets, &c., and also an item for wages of the crew, which he considered they might and ought to have earned ashore during the repairs. The Reiker, July, 1882, R. & M.

* (301) The E., having drifted athwart the bows of the G. which was at anchor, remained in contact for five hours, when a tug removed her. The tug claimed and, without reference to a court of law, received salvage reward from each vessel. The E. having been found to blame for the collision, the G. sought to include in her damages the sum she had paid to the tug. The registrar being of opinion that had the vessels remained longer in collision, the G. would have sustained further damage; held, on the implied authority of the

H. M. Hayes, 1 Lush. 375, that the tug had rendered salvage assistance to the G. The Elizabeth, No. 3459, August, 1867. R. & M.

(302) The sum paid by the G. was therefore allowed against the E. Ibid.

R. & M.

(305) The plaintiffs' claim in an action of damage included an amount paid for salvage assistance rendered necessary by the collision. The registrar considered the amount paid was out of all proportion to the services; but as the payment was made in good faith, and the settlement of the salvors' claim without litigation had saved costs, the item was allowed in full. The Benwell, No. 7389, Nov. 1875. R. & M.

(306) An item in the plaintiff's claim was for a sum paid as salvage reward for services rendered necessary by the collision. The amount had been agreed upon and the payment had been made bonâ fide, but the registrar considered it excessive and allowed a lesser sum which in his opinion would have covered both salvage and costs if the salvors' claim had been contested. The Malta, 1880, F. R. 154; The Betsey Caines, 2 Hagg. 30.

365. The ships G. and L. came into collision, after which the G. was abandoned by her master and crew, and picked up by another vessel and carried to Madeira, by which a large salvage expense was incurred. In a cause of collision both vessels were held to be in fault. On a further question whether the expense of salvage was to form part of the damage which would be divided between the vessels; held, that under the circumstances the G. was improperly abandoned through want of ordinary skill and resolution in her master and crew, and that the salvage expense incurred was chargeable to such misconduct, and should therefore form no part of the damages arising from the collision. The Linda, Swabey, 306; 4 Jur. N.S. 146; 6 W. R. 196; 30 L. T. 234.

366. Where two vessels are in collision and are entangled together in a position dangerous to both, salvors, who by towing one of the vessels clear, free both vessels from danger, are entitled to recover salvage reward from the owners of both vessels. A screw steamship drifted during a gale of wind across the bows of a ship at anchor in the Mersey, and with her propeller caught the anchor chains of the ship, and the two vessels were held together in a position dangerous to both. A steamship went to the assistance of the ship, and held her whilst her chains were slipped and towed her clear of the steamship. Held, that the tug was entitled to salvage reward from the owners of the steamship. The Vandyck, 7 P. D. 42.

during the voyage damaged by collision. Her tug thereupon rendered salvage services to her, and recovered £200 as salvage. Held, by the registrar and merchants, that the amount to be recovered by the damaged vessel from the wrongdoer was the difference between the two sums. The Queen of the East, January, 1882. R. & M.

(315) Surveyors summoned by the master of a vessel damaged by collision recommended towage to a distant port at which to repair. The master of the wrongdoing vessel objected to this course and summoned other surveyors, who reported that the towage was unnecessary. The event proved that the towage was unnecessary, but the registrar acting upon the advice of the merchants and waiving his own opinion, allowed the amount paid for the towage on the ground that the report of the first set of surveyors justified the expense. The Mahn Buleswar, No. 6453, March, 1874. 369. A vessel bound for Cardiff was damaged by collision in the neighbourhood of the Start. She was towed inside Plymouth breakwater, and having been temporarily repaired, she was towed to her destination and there permanently repaired. Having regard to the fact that these proceedings avoided the risk of having to discharge and reload cargo at an intermediate port, the costs of towage was allowed by the registrar and merchants, although the plaintiffs contended that the repairs could have been effected quite as cheaply and more expeditiously at Plymouth. The Elginshire, November, 1883. The report was objected to, but confirmed by the court.

4. For Breaches of Charters.*

370. The defendants in a cause of damage by collision admitted their liability. It was proved before the registrar that the delay occasioned by the necessity of repairing the plaintiff's vessel, enabled the charterers of the vessel at the time of the collision to cancel the charter-party, and the plaintiffs were obliged to enter into another charter-party at a lower freight. Held, by the court, that the registrar ought to have awarded compensation for the loss of the difference between the freight under the cancelled charter-party (after deducting for the difference between the voyage to be performed under the cancelled charter-party and the shorter voyage actually made for the saving of wear and tear to the vessel, and for the uncertainties and perils incident to all sea voyages, &c.) and the freight which was actually earned. The Star of India, 1 P. D. 466; 45 L. J. P. D. 102; 3 Asp. N.S. 261.

370a. The vessel C., which was proceeding in ballast to Montreal to load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom pursuant to charter-party, was injured by collision with another vessel, and compelled to put into port to repair. The repairs necessarily occupied so long a time that it was not reasonably possible for the C. to have arrived at Montreal in time to fulfil her charter before the navigation of the St. Lawrence was stopped by ice for the winter. In these circumstances the owners of the C. abandoned the charter, and it was found that they acted prudently in so doing. Held, that the loss arising from the abandonment of the charter was a loss caused by the collision. The Consett, 5 P. D. 229.

371. A charter-party stipulated for certain payments to the owners of cargo as commission and penalties in case of non-fulfilment of charter-party. These payments became due in a cause of damage. Held, that they were, together with the costs of paying the freight into court, proper deductions from the gross freight due to the owners of the damaging vessel. The Leo, 1 Asp. 200.

371a. A charter-party provided that a ship should proceed to a port and load cargo from the charterers, unless the charterers by their agent there gave notice that they abandoned the adventure, in which case the charterers were to pay the shipowners £500. The ship proceeded to the port and found no cargo and no charterers' agent, and got no notice, and then made another voyage which turned out more profitable than the chartered voyage. Held, that the shipowner could not recover the penalty in addition to the profit on the voyage, but only nominal damages. Staniforth v. Lyall, 7 Bing. 169.

372. The measure of damages payable by a charterer to a shipowner for non-performance of the contract to load is the amount of freight which would have become payable under the charter-party less the cost of earning it, and less any freight earned during the period the ship would have been employed under the charter-party. Smith v. M'Guire, 3 H. & N. 554; 27 L. J. Ex. 465; Puller v. Staniforth, 2 Taunt. 285; Wilson v. Hicks, 26 L. J. Ex. 242.

373. Where by charter-party it is agreed that the shipowner shall have a ship ready at a certain time to receive a cargo for a foreign port, and the shipowner fails in the performance of his contract, and in consequence thereof the charterer is obliged to charter other vessels at a higher rate, and pay a higher price for his cargo, the price having risen during the delay occasioned by the shipowner's default, the charterer is entitled to recover as damages against the shipowner the loss sustained by the chartering of the other vessels and the difference in the price of the cargo, provided the shipowner does not show that the cargo has by reason of the rise in price become of greater value in the foreign port. Featherstone v. Wilkinson, L. R. 8 Ex. 122; 42 L. J. Ex. 78; 28 L. J. N.S. 448; 2 Asp. N.S. 31.

374. In an action by a shipowner against a charterer for breach of contract in not naming a safe port to unload according to charter-party, the master's extra costs of successfully defending an action brought against him by the consignee for not unloading at the port named are not (the taxed costs having been recovered from the consignees) recoverable against the charterer unless he has expressly authorized the shipowner to incur the costs on his behalf. Evans v. Bullock, 3 Asp. N.S. 552; 38 L. T. N.S. 34.

375. But in such case the shipowner is entitled to recover as damages the difference between the port dues at the port named and the port dues he actually paid at the port where he discharged the cargo (if they are in excess of the former). Ibid.

375a. Where the shipowner has in such a case recovered for demurrage in respect of the delay so occasioned he cannot recover for the cost of insurance from the port named to the port of actual discharge (even if he could in any event), as such insurance, being an ordinary expense of the shipowner, must be taken to be included in the demurrage recovered. Ibid.

376. A charter-party provided that a certain freight should be payable for an outward and homeward voyage, and that in the event of non-performance by the charterer through political circumstances there should be a liquidated sum payable to the shipowner. The charterer was prevented from discharging outward cargo or loading homeward cargo by such circumstances, and the shipowner obtained other employment. Held, that the shipowner was entitled to the liquidated sum provided by the charter-party in addition to the freight named on such other employment. Bell v. Puller, 2 Taunt. 285; 12 East, 496, n.

376a. As to the amount of damages recoverable against the freighter for not duly loading a cargo, where the parties have stipulated for a full and complete cargo of particular kinds of goods, to be carried respectively at specified rates of freight, see Gether v. Capper, 24 L. J. C. P. 69; Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 C. B. 791.

377. A vessel was chartered to P. C. and home from M. at a fixed freight, the charterer having the option of sending a part of the outward cargo on to M., but every expense the vessel might incur in consequence was to be borne by the charterer. The charterer loaded a cargo, part for P. C. and part for M., and made out two manifests. On arriving at P. C. the custom-house authorities prohibited the discharge of any part of the cargo there, and the cargo was confiscated, and the master fined; but eventually the government agreed to pay the master, but did not pay, a compensation for the detention of the ship, and she proceeded to M. Held, that the owner was not entitled to recover from the charterer the expenses in repairing damage to the vessel occasioned by the delay, or the costs of proceedings against the government, such damages not being contemplated by the charter. Sully v. Duranty, 33 L. J. Exch. 319.

378. The defendant chartered the plaintiff's ship upon the terms that she should go to a foreign port for a cargo, and "there, in the usual and accustomed manner, load in her regular turn." The ship went to the port, but owing to the defendant's default was not ready when her turn came, and was consequently detained eleven days. When her turn came round again she was ready, but the wind coming on to blow, and the harbour being crowded, the harbour-master refused to allow the ship to go up to load, and she was consequently detained three days. The plaintiff having sued on the charter-party claiming damages for the detention, held, that the detention for the three days was the legal and natural consequence of the defendant's default in not having the ship ready for the first turn, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages in respect of the three days as well as the eleven days. Jones v. Adamson, 1 Ex. D. 60.

* (321) The master of a brig was drowned by the collision. He was 44 years of age and left a widow and five children, viz., four sons, aged respectively 17, 15, 13, and 3, and a daughter aged 5. £500 allowed. The Sheperton, No. 5725, Aug. 1871. R. & M.

(322) The master, age 49, of a schooner of 51 tons, was drowned by the collision. He left a widow, a consumptive daughter age 22, and a son age 11. The registrar allowed to the widow £250, to the daughter £125, and to the son £75, in all £450. The Solent, 1881, R. No. 1005, Fo. 204, Nov. 1881. R. & M.

(323) The second officer of an iron ship of 1,500 tons was drowned by the collision. He had held a second mate's certificate, was 51 years of age, his wages were £6 per month, and he left a widow and five children. £400 allowed. The Candahar, No. 7034, June, 1875. R. & M.

(324) The master of a schooner was drowned by the collision. He was 50 years of age, and left a widow in poor health, three daughters aged 16 and 10 years and 16 months respectively, and a son aged 15. £430 allowed. The J. E. McConnell, No. 5886, June, 1872. R. & M.

(325) The steward of an American barque of 730 tons register was drowned by the collision. He left a widow and four children aged respectively 13, 12, 11, and 8 years. £300 was awarded. H. M. S. Crocodile, No. 4876, Nov. 1869. R. & M.

(326) A ship's carpenter, aged 42, was drowned by the collision. His wages were £5 10s. per month, and he left a widow and a posthumous child. £300 allowed. The George & Richard, No. 5638, Jan. 1872. R. & M.

(327) Three North Sea fishermen, earning from sixty to eighty pounds per annum, were drowned by the collision. Each left a wife and children. £300 allowed in each case. The Osborne, No. 6753, April, 1874. R. & M.

(328) A North Sea fisherman, age 20, earning £80, and another, age 17, earning £40 per annum, were drowned by the collision. Both were unmarried, but had contributed materially to the support of their parents and families. In the former case £100 was allowed, and in the latter case £75. Ibid.

(329) Two ordinary seamen aged respectively 18 and 20, and earning respectively thirty-five and thirty shillings per month were drowned in the collision. £50 allowed to the mother of each. The George & Richard, No. 5638, Jan. 1871. R. & M.

(330) An able seaman, aged 22, was drowned by the collision. He left a widow and posthumous child, a daughter. £225 allowed. The J. E. McConnell, No. 5926, June, 1872. R. & M.

(331) Three North Sea fishermen, each upwards of 21 and likely to marry and be less able to assist their parents, were drowned by the collision. £50 allowed in each case. Ibid.

(332) A young lad on his first voyage was drowned in the collision. His parents were of humble condition, and there was no probability of his being able to assist them for some years. £50 allowed. The Thetford, 1880, F. No. 2044, Fo. 430, March, 1881. R. & M.

proceedings in respect of such loss of life. Ibid.

382. The owner's statutory liability extends to the crew of the other ship and to other persons carried by her. Ibid.

383. The E. and the G. R. came into collision. The E., which was held blameless, was rendered helpless by the collision and driven ashore by a gale of wind, and three of her crew were killed and others injured. Held, that the G. R. was liable for the loss of life and injuries as the natural consequences of the collision. The George and Richard, 1 Asp. N.S. 50. See also Smith v. The London & South Western Rail. Co., L. R. 6 C. P. Ex. Ch. 14.

384. The crew might have gone on board other vessels before the vessel was wrecked, but the doing so would have been attended with great risk. Held, that they were not bound to run such risk, and did not therefore contribute to their own loss or injuries.

385. The defendants were the owners of a ship which came into collision with and sunk a China clipper called the C., of which Captain M. the master, and his wife, the father and mother of the plaintiff, a boy three years of age, suing by his guardian, lost their lives at Shanghai, through collision caused by negligence of the defendants' servants. At the time of his death Captain M. was receiving a salary of £310 a year, and being allowed to trade on his own account made about £250 per annum in addition, out of which he had saved £250 a year. He, at the time of the accident, was thirty-nine, and in good health. It was proved he was a first-class seaman, and that the boy had no means except what came from his father, who had left behind him £2,903, made while captain of the ship. The jury assessed the damages at £1,500. Mackenzie v. Hardy and others, Secondary's Court, London, 12th May, 1882.

385a. The plaintiff was the widow of the master of a ship which came into collision with another ship, and the master, forty-five years of age, was killed in the collision. He left four children besides his widow. The jury awarded £1,000, dividing £400 thereof among the four children. Bairie v. Bucknall and Others, Liverpool Assizes, August 7, 1881.

386. The plaintiffs were the widow and six children of a navigating lieutenant in the royal navy, who had lost his life in a collision between his vessel and the defendants' steamer. He was forty-seven years of age, and had been thirty-three years in the service, having entered as second class boy. His pay was £241 : 16s. 8d. per annum; and there were six children, aged respectively six, seven, ten, twelve, fifteen, and eighteen. The Admiralty allowed the widow a pension of £36 during widowhood, and £5 each a year for the four younger children until they attained fifteen. The widow also had an allowance from the compassionate fund, which would now cease. Evidence having been given of the high character of the deceased, and his probable rise in his profession, the jury awarded £1,500, i. e. £600 to the widow and £150 to each of the children. Greet v. The National Steamship Co., April 8, 1880.

387. The plaintiffs were the widow and three children of a second mate in the royal navy. The widow had a pension of £25. The jury awarded £750, i. e. £300 to the widow and £125 to each child. Montgomery v. The National Steamship Co., Ibid.

388. The plaintiffs were the widow and four children of a quartermaster in the royal navy. The jury awarded £675, i. e. £300 to the widow and the remainder to the children. Kitchen v. The National Steamship Co., Ibid.

389. The plaintiffs were the widow and child of an able seaman in the royal navy. The widow had no pension. The jury awarded £300 to the widow and £50 to the child. Howe v. The National Steamship Co., Jenkins v. The same, April 8, 1880.

390. The plaintiffs were the widow and child of a shipwright in the royal navy. The widow had no pension. The jury awarded £300 to the widow and £50 to the child. Fowell v. The National Steamship Co., April 8, 1880.

390a. The plaintiff was the widow of a man employed in loading coals on board the defendants' ship, and met his death while so employed. His earnings averaged not less than £3 per week. Besides his widow, he left seven children. The jury awarded £350, and apportioned £125 to the plaintiff and £225 among the children. Phillips v. Phillips & Co., March 6, 1884.

391. The plaintiff was the widow of a sail maker killed in a collision. He was fifty-two years of age, and was receiving £4 : 10s. per month, and in the habit of allotting half this monthly to his wife. The jury awarded £125. Nicholl v. Bucknall and Others, Liverpool Assizes, Aug. 7, 1881.

6. For Personal Injuries from Collision.*

392. The Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain an action, and to assess the damages in respect of personal injuries done by a ship. The Sylph, L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; 37 L. J. Adm. 14; The Guildfaxe, L. R. 2 Adm. 325; 38 L. J. Adm. 12; 19 L. T. 748; The Bernina, March 2, 1886.

393. A clause in a policy of insurance, that in case the ship shall by accident or negligence of the master and crew run down or damage any other ship, and the assured shall thereby become liable to damages by judgment of any court, the assurers shall pay a proportion thereof, does not extend to damages recovered against the shipowners for personal injury caused to persons on board the ship by collision. Taylor v. Dewar, 5 B. & S. 58; 33 L. J. Q. B. 141; 10 Jur. N.S. 361; 10 L. T. 267; 12 W. R. 579.

394. In an action for damages for personal injury a sum received by the plaintiff from an accidental insurance company cannot be taken into account on the question of damages. Bradburne v. The Great Western Railway Co., L. R. 10 Exch. 1.

395. He does not receive that sum because of the accident, but because he made a contract providing for the contingency of that accident; the accident must occur to entitle him to it, but it is not the accident but the contract which is the cause of his receiving it. Ibid.

396. The plaintiff, a civil service writer for some two years, was a passenger, in Aug. 1878, on board the M., a steamer belonging to the defendant company, from London to Boulogne. The weather was very rough, and in one of the lurches of the vessel the plaintiff was thrown down. A number of planks, on which he had been sitting, subsequently fell upon his leg and broke it, and he was laid up for four months; he claimed damages in respect of the injuries he had suffered, also £20 for medical attendance, &c., and £30 for loss of salary. £150 awarded as damages. Browett (by next Friend) v. General Steam Navigation Co. Q. B. D. July 2, 1880.

397. The plaintiff was a passenger on board the steamer H. In entering the harbour of St. Heliers, Jersey, the vessel, by the negligence of the defendant's servants, struck one of the pier-heads, and the plaintiff by the shock was thrown down. He alleged that the injuries then received were very serious, preventing him for months from attending to his business as a brewer. The defendants alleged the injuries were exaggerated, and the evidence showed he would be quite restored to health in eight or nine months. Damages, £750. Seymour v. London and South Western Rail. Co. Q. B. D. August 6, 1880.

398. The plaintiff, who was a master lighterman and barge owner, was walk-

* (334) The mate of a French brig was injured in both legs in the collision. The right leg was amputated, and the knee joint of the left leg became rigid, and the limb was wasted, and there was a sloughing sore. £750 was awarded. The Beta, No. 4495, 11 Nov. 1869. R. & M.

(335) The master of a steamer of 626 tons and his wife claimed in respect of personal injury sustained by the latter through prolonged immersion after the collision, and for the deaths of their three children, aged respectively 15, 13, and 10 years. £500 allowed. H. M. S. Amazon, No. 3424, Jan. 1868. R. & M.

(336) Quere, whether any portion of this sum was allowed in respect of the loss of life. Ibid.

(337) A fireman, aged nineteen, was injured by the collision, his life being for some time in danger, although he ultimately recovered and enjoyed fairly good health. He was, however, permanently disabled, and had suffered great pain. £450 allowed. Hawkins v. Morgan, 1880, H. No. 137, fo. 186; July, 1881. R. & M.

(338) The master of a ketch of 52 tons register was injured by the collision. He had at the time of the reference been unable to follow his employment for twelve months, and would probably be unable to resume it for another twelve months. £400 allowed. The Forest Fairy, No. 195, Oct. 1878. R. & M.

(339) The master of a brigantine was injured by long immersion in the water in consequence of the collision. His nervous system also sustained a considerable shock. At the time of the reference, six months later, he was still ill, and would probably be unable to resume his profession for some time. £200 awarded. The Earl of Erne, No. 4950, Nov. 1869. R. & M.

(339a) Two youths, sons of the master of a schooner, were injured by the collision. To the one, whose injuries had kept him out of employ for two months, by which time he had apparently quite recovered, £30 was awarded; to the other, whose injuries were more severe, his right hand being still useless at the time of the reference, £70 was awarded. The Beverley, No. 4838, April, 1869. R. & M.

ing along the edge of the quay of the tidal basin of the Victoria Docks, when the steamship S. was being hauled, stern first, out of the tidal basin. When the plaintiff was about to step over a seven-inch Manilla rope, one end of which was made fast to a mooring-post, and the other end to the S., the rope was, owing to the negligence of the defendant's servants, suddenly jerked up. It struck the plaintiff and knocked him down, so severely injuring his elbow that he was unable to use his arm for five months, and had not recovered the perfect use of it. The jury awarded as damages £254. Arnold v. Black, February 17, 1885.

See Pt. I. c. 14, p. 1732.

8. Costs and Damages.

1. Generally.*

399. On a decree of restitution with costs and damages, the rule is that the party unjustly deprived of his property ought to be put as nearly as possible in the same state as before the deprivation took place. The Acteon, 2 Dodson, 51.

400. A party having a decree for costs and damages is to be protected against the expense of poundage. An express decree of costs and damages must go to everything in the way of compensation. The Driver, 5 C. Rob. 146, n.

401. A vessel unjustifiably seized was ordered to be restored with costs and damages from the date of the seizure to the date of the offer of restitution; no claim was made for the cargo till some time after the seizure, the claimant thereto having mistaken his course of proceeding. Held, that the owners of the cargo being British merchants, and therefore presumed to know the proper course, were only entitled to costs and damages from the date of their claim to the date of the offer of restitution. The Elize, 2 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 41.

402. On a decree of costs and damages for wrongful seizure and destruction of a vessel as engaged in the slave trade, the only losses which will be allowed are those necessarily incident to the destruction of the ship, viz., the value of the ship and nett freight. Damages in consequence of any estimated profit which might or might not have been made had the voyage been completed cannot be allowed. The Levin Lank, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 224; Swabey, 45.

403. The owners' claim for damages, amounting to £20,000, was in great part made up of probable or possible profits, which it was asserted they might have made had it not been for the detention of the vessel. Held (confirming the report of the registrar and merchants), that the owners could not claim profits which, though possible, might never have been realized. Ibid.

404. As to the measure of damages in prize cases, see 3 Phill. International Law, 571, 577.

405. As to the cases in which the court will decree costs and damages, see tit. Costs, p. 369.

* (340) Under a decree of restitution with costs and damages of a chartered vessel, seized, condemned, and sold as engaged in the slave trade, the shipowner is not entitled to recover for estimated profits from the employment of the ship, subsequently to the chartered voyage. The Newport, Swabey, 335. R. & M.

(341) See, as to the measure of damages in prize causes, the subject fully discussed by Mr. Justice Story in The Lively, 1 Gallison, 315. [AMERICAN.]

† (342) Under a decree of restitution with costs and damages of a vessel seized, condemned, and sold, as engaged in the slave trade, the shipowner is entitled to recover inter alia the value of the vessel at the period of capture. Her value estimated at £7 a ton, viz. £882. The Newport, Swabey, 337. R. & M.

(343) In the estimated value of a chartered vessel estimated surplus stores after the completion of her charter are included. Ibid.

(344) The value of a vessel engaged in the palm oil trade, on the coast of Africa, is to be taken, not at the price at which a similar vessel might have been purchased in England, but at her value on the coast of Africa. The Levin Lank, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 217; Swabey, 52. R. & M.

(345) If the vessel and cargo are lost the true measure is their actual value with interest from the time of the trespass. If they have been restored after detention damage by collision, c. 3, p. 1744; and in causes of possession, Pt. I. c. 13, p. 1731.

409. See No. 402, supra.

409a. As to freight in causes of damage by collision, see c. 3, p. 1761.

5. Interest.‡

410. A delay took place of between two and three years from the date of decree for costs and damages, and the bringing in of the claim. Two years' interest disallowed on the claim. The Levin Lank, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 219; Swabey, 54.

411. Interest allowed for a ship and cargo wrongfully taken by the defendant, and this being done in the Indies, Indian interest allowed, deducting the charge of the return: Elkins v. E. I. Co., 1 P. W. 395.

412. As to interest in actions of bottoimy and other actions, see the different chapters, supra.

6. Demurrage.

413. Demurrage against captors allowed on a vessel of 180 tons, for three months and twenty days, at £330. The Corier Maritimo, 1 C. Rob. 287.

414. See as to demurrage in actions of collision, c. 3, p. 1763.

demurrage has generally been allowed for the vessel, and interest on the value of the cargo. If they have been sold, then the gross amount of the sales with interest and, if the sale was under disadvantageous circumstances or not at the place of the destination of the property, sometimes an addition of ten per cent. The Appollon, 9 Wheat. 362. [AMERICAN.]

* (346) In trover for the capture and detention on the high seas of a cargo bound to A., it was held that the proper rule of damages was the value of the cargo at the time and place of capture, allowing for the same the prices at A. with such additional damages as would be equal to the interest thereon, deducting a reasonable premium of insurance from the place of capture to A., such part of the cargo or of the avails thereof as had been restored going in mitigation of damages. Hallet v. Novion, The Appollon, 14 Johns. 273. [AMERICAN.]

† (347) See also note 345, supra.

‡ (348) Under a decree of restitution with costs and damages of a chartered vessel seized, condemned, and sold, as engaged in the slave trade, the shipowner is entitled to recover inter alia the amount of the chartered freight less the charges which would have been incurred in earning it, and the amount of the liabilities incurred by non-performance of the charter, or the additional expenses incurred in the final performance thereof. The Newport, Swabey, 335. R. & M.

(349) The contract of charter having been dissolved by agreement between the owner and charterer on the terms of repayment of the prepaid freight, and this agreement being equitable as regards all parties, held, that the freight so repaid was recoverable as part of the damages. Ibid. 343. R. & M.

(350) See also notes 245—260, p. 1761.

‡ (351) Interest on the value of the vessel at the rate of four per cent. per annum is usually allowed. The Levin Lank, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 219; Swabey, 54. R. & M.

(352) Under a decree of restitution with costs and damages of a chartered vessel seized, condemned, and sold, as engaged in the slave trade, interest at four per cent. allowed upon the amount recovered from the probable date of the termination of the chartered voyage, supposing there had been no seizure, until payment. The Newport, Swabey, 344. R. & M.

(353) In cases of marine tort interest is uniformly allowed upon the value of property lost. The Anna Maria, 2 Wheaton, 327; 4 Curtis, D. S. S. 122; The Amiable Nancy, 3 Wheaton, 546. [AMERICAN.]

(354) And on the diminution in value of property injured. Ibid.

(355) If property ordered by the decree to be restored has been sold, and the money remains in the possession of the court, it does not carry interest, but if it is in the possession of individuals it may bear interest or not as the court shall order. Himely v. Rose, 5 Cranch, 313; Hallet v. Novion, The Appollon, 9 Wheat. 362; Hallet v. Novion, 14 Johns. 273; see also notes 345, 346, supra. [AMERICAN.]

(356) Unless the court decrees interest none is payable. Ibid.

§ (357) Under French law the damages include all loss the direct and necessary consequence of the collision, but not its indirect consequences. D. P. 1876—I. 477.

(358) Held, that the responsibility for a collision includes not only the damages suffered immediately from its effect but its consequences; such as damage to the vessel from voluntary stranding to save it from sinking after the collision. Aix, February 18, 1859; J. H. 1859 : 2 : 203.

(359) Held, that the damages should include not only the value of the vessel lost therefrom, but the cost of the attempt to save it, if properly made, though fruitlessly, and an indemnity for the loss of the freight, and of the profit resulting from the service in which the vessel was employed. Aix, November 22, 1860; J. H. 1861 : 2 : 142. See also Havre, April 7, 1869; J. H. 1861 : 1 : 94; Marseilles, June 1, 1859; J. H. 1860 : 2 : 96.

(360) Held, that where it is uncertain on which of two colliding vessels the fault should be laid, the damages and expenditure of both should be supported in common by both, and that there should be comprehended therein the cost of the repairs, and all the losses which have been the direct and immediate consequence of the collision, such as the necessary interruptions of the voyage, and the delay caused by the repairs, the costs of entering the port and of remaining there for the repairs, of discharging, warehousing and relading the cargo, and of the wages of the crew during the repairs, also the costs of a bottomry loan raised by the master for the purposes of the repairs and the continuation of the voyage if it can be accomplished without difficulty. Caumont, vo. Abordage, Nos. 11, 146, 151, 153. Havre, August 1, 1860; J. H. 1860 : 1 : 180.

(361) But held, that in a case where it was not possible to determine which of the two vessels was to blame for the collision, the price of the goods lost by the sinking of one of them was not to be included in the damages. Havre, April 18, 1859; J. H. 1859 : 1 : 93.

(362) Held, that a vessel delayed by a collision on a voyage is not entitled to claim damages, because had such collision not taken place it might have been freighted for a return voyage. Havre, April 1, 1865; J. H. 1865 : 1 : 111.

(363) The owners of a ship which has run down another are bound to make good not only the damages originally spoken to in the report of survey, but also any further damages subsequently discovered, especially when the report of survey has made a reservation concerning them. D. P. 1876—II. 24.

(364) Damages include demurrage during repairs. Ibid.

(365) Even if the time occupied was prolonged by force majeure (such as war), if the war was going on at the time of the collision. Ibid.

(366) Held, that the demurrage due to a vessel damaged by a collision is to be 50 centimes per day and per ton of her official tonnage. Havre, 28 June, 1866; J. H. 1866 : 1 : 159. But this does not apply to lighters or barges. Havre, May 16, 1865; J. H. 1865 : 131.

(367) Held, that in estimating damages, the wear and tear of old materials, replaced by new, should be taken into account and allowed for accordingly. Havre, Jan. 17, and June 26, 1872; J. H. 1872 : 1 : 94 and 206. Caumont, Ibid. No. 147.

(368) But held, that the damaged party may be charged with the difference in value between old and new materials, only where his vessel has increased in value by the exchange. Rouen, July 30, 1872; J. H. 1872 : 2 : 196.

(369) Held, that the party or parties responsible for the collision are chargeable not only with the damage, but also with all expenses whatsoever which are the consequence thereof: for example, all average, salvage, demurrage, port of refuge, expenses, &c. Rouen, May 3, 1864; J. H. 1864 : 2 : 131; Nantes, Jan. 9, 1864; J. H. 1864 : 2 : 114.

(370) The damage to be made good by the party responsible is not only the material injury to the vessel run into, but also the loss of expected profit immediately resulting to the owner from that injury, such as freight or the results of fishing. The rule is, that every loss and expenditure whatever, of which the collision has been the cause, should be made good by the party to blame for the collision. See D. A. No. 1140 et seq.; 1829 et seq.; Caumont, vo. Abordage Maritime, Nos. 11, 14, 16, 146, 147, 150, 153 et seq.

(371) For the special rules concerning the distinction to be made as to cargo damaged by collision, see D. A. No. 1141; Caumont, Ibid. Nos. 11, 91 et seq., 104, 105, 152—154, 157—160.

(372) Held, in this case, that the profit made during the previous month might be taken as the measure of damages. Ibid.

(373) Held, in the case of a barge, that the measure of damages was the interest on the capital represented by the barge. Judgment of Tribunal of Havre of 16 May, 1865; J. H. 1865 : 1 : 131.

(374) Held, that the party responsible for the collision is not liable for expenses not caused by the collision such as wear and tear. Rennes, May 19, 1871; J. H. 1873 : 2 : 82.

(375) There is no privilege or preference against a vessel for damages awarded in consequence of a collision. Rouen, May 3, 1864; J. H. 1864 : 2 : 131.

Part V.—UNDER TREATIES, &c.,
 WITH FOREIGN POWERS .. 1919

Part I. IN ENGLISH COURTS.

1. Generally.*

1. The foundation of the Admiralty jurisdiction in the awarding of salvage was the power of enforcing the maritime lien obtained on property saved by the salvors (per Lord Justice Brett. The Cargo ex Schiller, 2 P. D. 149.

2. Salvage, in its simple character, is

* (1) The early statutes relating to salvage are, 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 18; 4 Geo. 1, c. 12; 26 Geo. 2, c. 19; 49 Geo. 3, c. 122; 53 Geo. 3, c. 87; 53 Geo. 3, c. 140; 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75. They were all repealed by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, which consolidated and amended the law as to wreck and salvage. Further provisions thereon were made by the M. S. Law Amendment Act, 1853 (c. 131). Both these last-named acts have been repealed by the M. S. Repeal Act, 1854 (c. 120). The principal acts therein now are, the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), Pt. VIII.; the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 91), and the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63).

(2) According to the Laws of Oleron, salvage should be awarded "according to right reason, a good conscience, and as justice shall appoint." Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 181; Jacobson's Sea Laws, 529—537; Justice's Ibid. 231—394. [AMERICAN.]

(3) The Consolato del Mare allowed the salvor of goods found derelict at sea, a half. Ibid.

(4) If found on shore, a quantum meruit. The Ordonnance of Louis XIV. allows the salvor of derelict goods found on the high sea or fished out of the bottom of it, one third; but goods proceeding from a ship stranded on the coast are liable only to the reasonable expenses of saving them, whether found on the shore or floating on the sea near the shore. Ibid.

(5) The laws of Sweden allow the salvor of property saved from a foreign wreck, not insured in Sweden, one quarter, insured in Sweden, one fifth. Ibid.

(6) The laws of Denmark and Portugal allow a quantum meruit. Ibid.

(7) The laws of Venice allowed a liberal day's wages. Ibid.

(8) The ancient Rhodian law allowed a fifth for saving anything at sea or from a wreck, and a third for saving gold or silver by drawing it out of the sea eight cubits deep, and a half if got out of the sea fifteen cubits deep. Ibid.

(9) Salvage is an allowance made for saving a ship or goods, or both, from the damages of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies. 1 Park on Ins. 300.

(10) Wherever service has been rendered in saving property on the sea, or wrecked on the coast of the sea, the service is, in the sense of the maritime law, a salvage service. The Emulous, 1 Sumner's Rep. 207. [AMERICAN.]

(11) Salvage service is such service as is the service which those who recover property from loss or damage at sea render to the owners, with the responsibility of making restitution, and with a lien for rendered in rescue or relief of property at sea, in imminent peril of loss or deterioration. The H. B. Foster, 1 Abb. Adm. 222. [AMERICAN.]

(12) Salvage is an allowance for saving a ship or goods at sea, or both, from dangers, fire, pirates, or enemies. Lea v. Ship Alexander, 2 Paine, C. C. 466. [AMERICAN.]

(13) Salvage is a compensation for maritime services rendered in saving property or rescuing it from impending peril, on the sea or wrecked on the coast of the sea or on a public navigable river or lake where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on. The Schooner Emulous, 1 Sumner, 210; The Henry Ewbank, ibid. 416; Fretz v. Bull, 12 How. 466; The Genesee Chief, ibid. 443; The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatchf. 420; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 105. [AMERICAN.]

(14) Salvage is a compensation for the rescue of the property from present, pressing, impending perils, and not for the rescue of it from possible future perils. The Emulous, 1 Sumner, 216. (Story, J.) [AMERICAN.]

(15) It is a compensation for labour and services, for activity and enterprise, for courage and gallantry actually exerted, and not for the possible exercise of them, which under other circumstances might have been requisite. Ibid.

(16) It is allowed because the property is saved, not because it might have been otherwise lost upon future contingencies. Ibid.

(17) Subsequent perils and storms may enter as an ingredient into the case, when they were foreseen, to show the promptitude of the assistance, and the activity and sound judgment with which the business was conducted, but they can scarcely avail for any other purpose. Ibid.

(18) Ought the salvage to be diminished by a favourable state of the weather after the arrival in port? If not, why should it be increased by an unfavourable state of the weather? Ibid.

(19) To introduce such ingredients into the estimate of salvage, which were neither foreseen nor acted upon, would compel the court to deliver itself over to conjectures, resting on loose probabilities, the nature and extent of which could never be measured. Ibid.

(20) To entitle a party to salvage, two circumstances must concur; the services rendered must be in a lawful taking of the property, and must be meritorious and useful. Davison v. Sealskins, ibid. 324. [AMERICAN.]

(21) In all cases where services are rendered in saving property in danger of being lost on the high seas, or when wrecked or stranded on the shore, it is, in the sense of the maritime law, a salvage service. The Centurion, Ware, 477. [AMERICAN.]

(22) The relief of property from an impending peril of the sea, by the voluntary exertions of those who are under no legal obligation to render assistance, and the consequent ultimate safety of the property, constitute a case of salvage. Williamson v. The Brig Alphonso, 1 Curtis, 378; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 118. [AMERICAN.]

(22a) It may be a case of more or less merit according to the degree of peril in which the property was, and the danger and difficulty of relieving it. Ibid.

(23) But these circumstances affect the degree of the service, not its nature. Ibid.

(23a) As an adequate remuneration is the rule by which to determine the quantum of salvage, rather than a proportion of the value, it is manifest that the number of salvors to share the reward becomes an element of consideration. Ibid. 125. [AMERICAN.]

(24) In salvage cases on our rivers, the precedents of courts administering Admiralty law on the ocean, cannot safely be adopted in regard to the amount of compensation. The Pontiac, 1 Newb. Adm. 130. [AMERICAN.]

(24a) Consuls and vice-consuls of foreign nations, duly recognized, are admitted, ex officio, to interpose a claim for the protection of the rights and interests of their fellow-citizens or subjects without a special procurator from those for whose benefit they act, but they are not admitted to receive the actual restitution of the res in controversy, without a special authority from the particular persons who are entitled, unless a treaty exists to that effect, as our treaty with the Two Sicilies of 1855, Art. 17. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 64. [AMERICAN.]

(25) On sale of property libelled for salvage, a foreign consul has authority to petition the court to order the marshal to pay into the registry the proceeds in which a citizen or subject of his country is interested, such person being absent and having no legal representative in the United States. Ship Adolph and Cargo, 1 Curtis, Ct. Ct. 87. [AMERICAN.]

(25a) It is the duty of a British consul to claim and recover all wrecks, cables, and anchors belonging to British subjects, to pay the usual salvage, and report a communication thereof to the Trinity Board. Fynn's British Consul's Handbook, 14, 51.

(26) See also, as to the duties of British consuls in reference to wreck and salvage, Board of Trade Instructions to Consuls as to the British Mercantile Marine, anno 1883, pp. 58—61.

(27) Although salvage is often in the nature of a general average, it is not universally true that, in the sense of our law, all salvage charges are to be deemed a general average; they are only so when incurred for the benefit of all concerned. Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., 1 Story, 463. [AMERICAN.]

(27a) The common law "wreck of the sea," their reward. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 48, 58, 63.

3. In allotting a salvage reward, the court always endeavours to combine the consideration of what is due to the owners in the protection of property with the liberality due to salvors in remunerating meritorious services. Ibid.

4. All claims of specific proportions have been discountenanced in modern practice. Ibid.

5. The maritime laws of England (said Sir Edward Simpson in the last century) fix no certain proportion in cases of salvage, but are governed by circumstances of danger, hazard, troubles, and expense of saving. Ibid.

6. An eighth or tenth, except in cases of extreme hazard, is as much as is usually allowed. Ibid.

7. In some cases of extreme hazard one third, one fourth, one sixth, or one ninth, or a sum of money only on account of salvage, is given. Ibid.

8. The rates of simple proportion of salvage graduate at large intervals. The estimate of salvage services, labour, and enterprise, requires to be made as minutely as possible, under an infinite variety of particulars, and may therefore be better done by the allowance of precise sums. The Oscar, 2 Hagg. 260.

9. In salvage cases the exact service performed is not the only proper test for estimating the quantum of reward. It is for the general security and interest of navigation and commerce that a considerable reward should be held up to encourage salvors to go out to the assistance of vessels in distress. The Sarah, 1 C. Rob. 313, n.; The Fusileer, Br. & Lush. 341; 2 Asp. 177; 34 L. J. Adm. 25; 4 Jur. 289; 10 L. T. N.S. 699; 12 W. R. 668; 13 ibid. 592; The Cephalonia, April 16, 1886.

if found within high water-mark on shore, is within the privilege of salvage. The John Gilpin, Olcott, Adm. 77. [AMERICAN.]

(28) The considerations which should govern the court in adjusting the amount of salvage compensation and its distribution amongst the salvors, in case of timber found adrift and rescued, stated. A Raft of Spars, 1 Abb. Adm. 291. [AMERICAN.]

(28a) It is proper in case of mere civil salvage, though perhaps not indispensable, to allege a distinct claim for salvage. The Adeline, 9 Cranch, 284. [AMERICAN.]

(29) A refusal of some of the salvors to join in the suit or to claim salvage, will not enure to the benefit of their co-salvors, for this would be to reward cupidity with the

10. Salvage ranges from the highest point of merit to the lowest, and the ingredients which constitute it are many and diverse. It is not necessary, in order to make a service rendered to a vessel a salvage service, that she should be in absolute or immediate danger, or that there should be a chance of her destruction. Damage, risk, or any misfortune on the high seas would be sufficient to give services rendered to a vessel a salvage character. The Charlotte, 6 Notes of Cases, 281; 3 W. Rob. 68.

11. Salvage is not always a mere compensation for work and labour, it is to be estimated on a more enlarged and liberal scale. The ingredients of a salvage service are, first, enterprise in the salvors in rendering assistance in tempestuous weather and at a risk of life; secondly, the degree of danger and distress from which the property is rescued; thirdly, the degree of labour and skill displayed by salvors, and the time they are occupied; fourthly, value of the property saved. Where all these occur a large reward ought to be given; but where none such, or scarcely any, take place, the compensation can hardly be denominated a salvage reward, it is little more than a mere remuneration pro opere et labore. The Clifton, 3 Hagg. 120.

12. The principles on which the court proceeds lead to a liberal remuneration in salvage cases, for they are not confined merely to the exact quantum of service performed in the case itself, but the general interests of navigation and commerce, the fatigue and anxiety, the determination to encounter danger, the spirit of adventure, and the skill and dexterity which are required by the exercise of that spirit, are all to be taken into consideration. The William Beckford, 3 C. Rob. 355.

portion which modesty had declined to receive, but it will enure to the benefit of the owners of the property. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 125; The Ship Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329; Williamson v. Brig Aphonso, 1 Curtis, 376. [AMERICAN.]

(30) By the law of England, a lender on bottomry is not entitled to the benefit of salvage, or liable to contribute to a general average, but the laws of France and Denmark differ from that of England in this respect. 2 Park on Ins. 565, 898.

(31) Of the principles and practice of the American Admiralty Courts, as to salvage, see 1 Conkling's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.), 344—368; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 105—180; 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 595—632.

13. The court will be guided above all by the consideration of whether there was danger to human life. The Thomas Fielden, 32 L. J. Adm. 61.

14. The court usually has regard not only to the labour and peril incurred by the salvors, but also to the situation in which they may happen to stand with respect to the property saved, to the promptitude and alacrity manifested by them, and to the value of the ship and cargo, as well as to the degree of danger from which these were rescued. The Spheroid (1838), 2 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 285.

15. The allotment of salvage is a personal reward bestowed for labour and skill in the performance of the service. The Two Friends, 2 W. Rob. 353.

15a. The accident of the amount of salvage awarded exceeding the value of the salvage vessels is wholly immaterial, as the value of such vessels is not an element to detract from the value of the salvage services. The Fusilier, Br. & Lushington, 341; 3 Asp. P. C. 177; 10 L. T. N.S. 699; 12 W. R. 968.

16. Salvage is not merely a payment for work and labour. The general interests of commerce and navigation in encouraging exertion, risk and peril in the relief of property in danger, are to be adverted to. On the other hand, the court must guard against exorbitant demands and an undue advantage being taken of distress. But when salvors act honestly and fairly they are to be liberally rewarded, without a minute inquiry into the quantum of labour. The Hector, 3 Hagg. 95.

17. The amount of remuneration for salvage must depend on all the circumstances of the case; the state of the weather, the degree of damage and danger to the ship and cargo, the risk and peril incurred by the salvors, the time employed, the value of the property; and when these are considered, there is still another principle—to encourage enterprise, reward exertion, and to be liberal in all that is due to the general interests of commerce, and the general benefit of owners and underwriters, even though the reward may fall upon an individual owner with some severity. The Industry, 3 Hagg. 204.

18. The distinguishing circumstances of each particular case of salvage must be carefully examined, to protect ship-owners from unjust and unnecessary payments, and to give due encouragement to the owners of towing vessels to afford that assistance which is so highly beneficial to the general interests of commerce. The Sphynx, 4 Jur. N.S. 230. [IRISH.]

19. When no special risk has been incurred by the salvors, salvage reward is allotted upon a calculation of a fair remuneration for time and trouble to the owners of the salving vessel, and to each hand engaged. The Otto Hermann, The Albert, The Ella Constance, 33 L. J. Adm. 189.

20. When there is danger to the salvors, risk of life receives the greatest remuneration. Ibid.

21. A lower scale of remuneration is given when the case of the vessel saved is not one of present danger, but of urgency. Ibid.

22. The lowest when, a vessel being disabled from proceeding, as in the case of a steam vessel in want of fuel, there is a possible contingency of serious consequences. Ibid.

23. It is a mistake to suppose that in all cases of salvage where the property is large, the amount of salvage depends on the value of the property. If possible an adequate reward for the danger and labour should be paid, and for this purpose more must be given in proportion to the value when the property is small, and even then the compensation must often be inadequate. When the property is large, the reward ought to be adequate, not measured strictly according to the value of the property, but chiefly according to the service, and especially with reference to the risk of life. The James Dixon, 2 L. T. N.S. 696; see also The Rendsberg, 6 C. Rob. 153.

24. The court, in the allotment of salvage, will not recognize the rule of proportion of value of the property saved, but will determine the amount of salvage with reference to the circumstances of each particular case. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 263, 264.

25. Though the actual service performed is not to be measured by the value of the property, yet the value is not to be left out of consideration. It affords the court, where the property is large, an opportunity of doing what it cannot do in many cases—give an adequate remuneration. The Raikes, 1 Hagg. 246.

26. The value of the property saved is always an ingredient in the consideration of the amount of salvage. It is a ruling principle in such cases, that the remuneration is always larger when the property is large, and vice versa. The Hector, 3 Hagg. 93.

27. The value of the property saved is certainly not an immaterial circumstance, for in proportion to that value is the benefit to the owners, and that is one of the primary principles in settling the amount of remuneration. The Ewell Grove, 3 Hagg. 221.

28. The court gives a smaller proportion where the property is large, a larger where it is small, and a moderate proportion where it is of vast extent. The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 423; The Waterloo, 2 Dodson, 442.

29. A larger proportion will be given as salvage where the property saved is of great value, because it is less felt by the owners, and because on many occasions where the property is small, salvors perform great services without adequate remuneration. The Earl of Eglington, Swabey, 8.

30. Government should not reward less liberally than private individuals, but on grounds of public policy they should rather give more, having in view the general interest and security of navigation. The Marquis of Huntley, 3 Hagg. 248.

31. In cases of salvage of steamboats carrying passengers the salvage reward is not to be estimated by the same considerations of value as with regard to other vessels. Steam vessels are a peculiar species of vessels making large profits, and are not therefore to pay for such services as though only carrying ballast. Humanity requires that every possible encouragement, in the way of liberal reward, should be given, in order to induce a prompt and efficient assistance to them, and the reward must be beyond a mere proportion of the value, as in ordinary cases. The Ardincaple, 3 Hagg. 153.

32. In questions of salvage the court must not act on the same liberality of principle that belongs to prize cases. The Vine, 2 Hagg. 2.

33. Exclusive of cases of derelict a moiety of the property saved with costs is the maximum of remuneration that can be allowed to salvors. This rule is binding upon Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad. The Inca, Swabey, 370; 12 Moore, P. C. C. 189; L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 49; The Francis Mary, 2 Hagg. 90. As to derelicts, see c. 13, p. 1883.

34. Promptitude in rendering assistance is a principal ingredient in salvage services. The City of Edinburgh, 2 Hagg. 334.

35. Ordinary labour, as applied to questions of salvage, means that labour which may be performed by an individual not possessed of nautical skill, but of mere strength of arm and limb. The value of such labour, when united with nautical skill, must be estimated by a somewhat higher consideration than mere ordinary labour. The Duke of Clarence, 1 W. Rob. 346.

36. The mode of administering justice in salvage cases, where the decision must depend very much on the discretion of the judge, where it is impossible without incurring expenses which may be overwhelming to all parties to proceed with great nicety of examination upon each individual point, must be with something of a rough hand, and all that can be done is in each individual case to endeavour to meet the merits as far as possible, so that the general decision shall give satisfaction on the whole. The Glory, 14 Jur. 676.

37. A steamer came out from a port at some distance, in consequence of a signal for assistance from a ship supposed to be in distress. In fixing the salvage remuneration, held that the distance and time lost in reaching the vessel must be taken into consideration. The Graces, 2 W. Rob. 294.

38. When the service rendered by one ship to another in a distant part of the world partakes of the true description of salvage service, the claim for salvage cannot be resisted on the ground that both ships were British. The Portia, 9 Jur. 167.

38a. In cases of salvage when the evidence is directly contradictory, the court considers only on whom the onus of proof lies and whether that party has discharged it. The court seldom, if ever, attributes perjury to either side. The Nymphe, 5 L. T. N.S. 365.

39. It is the duty of a British consul to preserve and protect the property of British owners. The Cynthia, 16 Jur. 749.

40. If a magistrate, acting in his public duty, should go beyond the limits of his official duty in giving extraordinary assistance, he would be entitled to a salvage reward. The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 46.

41. One hundred pounds disbursements and costs awarded to the reeve or deputy of a lord of the manor, for custody of wreck, in lieu of salvage as such deputy, without prejudice to the rights of the lord of the manor. The Augusta Lovell, 1 Hagg. 21.

42. A party is not precluded from claiming as a salvor by his name being mentioned in a warrant for the seizure of the ship and cargo. The John Bryant, 5 Jur. 233. [IRISH.]

42a. An agreement out of court between salvors and owners of the ship salvaged affords no certain criterion by which the court can award remuneration between the salvors and the owners of the cargo. The Emma, 8 Jur. 651.

43. Quære, if a verbal agreement were proved waiving salvage on the part of the crew of the salvaging vessel, would any salvage remuneration be awarded for services included under such an agreement? The Pride of Canada, 9 L. T. N.S. 546.

44. By the law of England there is neither average nor salvage on a bottomry bond. Joyce v. Williamson (1749), K. B. cited in 2 Park on Ins. 563; Walpole v. Ewer (1789), K. B. Ibid. 565.

45. A claim for salvage preferred by a king's ship, after a delay of eight months, not in rem, but by monitions against owners and consignees, dismissed, the salvors being held (the salvage being very slight) to be barred by lapse of time. The Rapid, 3 Hagg. 419. But see The John, 8 Jur. 276.

46. The court is unwilling to discourage the settlement of questions of salvage on the spot (in a distant port) in a fair and liberal manner, and inclines to support such settlements. The Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hagg. 157.

47. An award of salvage made by a foreign court on a foreign vessel derelict, and rescued from pirates by the commanders and crews of two British vessels, though far exceeding the rate of salvage usually allowed by this court, adopted here. The Calypso, 2 Hagg. 213.

48. In an original proceeding in the Admiralty Court for salvage, in which an award had been made by magistrates, quære, is not the owner not appealing from the award, though refusing to pay the sum awarded, bound by the award? The Hector, 3 Hagg. 93.

49. £60 was awarded by magistrates. The owners did not appeal, but refused to pay, and tendered £35 10s. in lieu thereof. On an original proceeding for salvage in the Admiralty Court, £60 awarded, with costs of salvors. Ibid.

50. £120 and expenses awarded. The owner refused to pay the amount, and the salvors instituted a suit in the Court of Admiralty. The same amount of salvage and expenses decreed, with costs. The Industry, 3 Hagg. 203.

51. There is no distinction between river salvage and sea salvage; the danger and the meritoriousness of the services in either case being the ground on which the amount of remuneration is determined. The Carrier Dove, 2 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 243.

52. Salvage services were rendered to a vessel carrying cargo as a common carrier. The peril had been caused by the negligence of the master. Held, that the salvors could maintain a personal action against the owners of the vessel for salvage of the cargo as well as of the ship. Duncan v. Dundee, Perth and London Shipping Co., 4th Series, vol. 5, p. 742. [SCOTCH.]

2. High Court of Admiralty.

54. The Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction to decide all claims in the nature of salvage for services rendered to any vessel, whether within the body of a county, or upon the high seas. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6.

55. Subject to the provisions of this act, that Court had jurisdiction to decide on all claims as to salvage, whether the services were performed upon the high seas, or within the body of any county, or partly in one place and partly in the other, and whether the wreck was found at sea or upon land, or partly in the sea and partly on land. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 476.

56. Every dispute with respect to salvage may be heard and adjudicated upon on the application either of the salvor or of the owner of the property salvaged, or of their respective agents. Ibid. s. 460.

57. Disputes with respect to salvage arising in the United Kingdom elsewhere than within the boundaries of the Cinque Ports shall be determined, if the parties do not agree to the arbitration of two justices, and the sum claimed exceeds two hundred pounds, in England by the High Court of Admiralty of England, in Ireland by the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland, and in Scotland by the Court of Session. Ibid.

57a. As to claims by owners or occupiers of land for damage to their property in rendering salvage assistance being recoverable like salvage, Ibid. s. 446.

58. Held, prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 476, that the High Court of Admiralty had not, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, jurisdiction to award salvage in respect of the saving of a raft of timber within Yarmouth Harbour. Raft of Timber, 2 W. Rob. 251.

59. The jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty in salvage causes was founded on a proceeding against property which had been salvaged. The Zephyrus, 1 W. Rob. 331.

60. Semble, foreigners might sue in the Court of Admiralty of England for salvage in respect of services rendered to a British vessel, and semble even to a foreign vessel, for salvage is a question of the jus gentium. The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 271.

61. Claims of American salvors, for services rendered to a British ship, adjudicated on in the High Court of Admiralty. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 262.

62. A party asserting himself to be a salvor, but who, as the owner alleged, had been employed simply as agent, arrested the ship in a cause of salvage. The court refused to release the property, on an averment that the matter in dispute had been by mutual agreement referred to arbitration. The mere reference to arbitration is not sufficient to bar the jurisdiction of this court. Upon the merits, held that the action was maintainable. The Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 181; 7 Notes of Cases, 150; 13 Jur. 967.

63. A first set of salvors who, while in possession, were assisted in the service by a second set of salvors, held, nevertheless, to have a primary interest, and therefore

* (32) The Court of Admiralty, which has jurisdiction in questions of salvage, is well adapted for the purpose of administering justice in those instances in which the property is valuable and the claimants numerous, and the court will fix the sum to be paid, adjust the proportions, take care of the property pending the suit, or, if a sale be necessary, direct a sale to be made and divide the proceeds between the salvors and proprietors according to equity and reason. 1 Park on Ins. 304.

(33) As a general rule, where the only question in a salvage suit is as to the rate of reward, and the salvaged property is within the jurisdiction of the court, a Court of Admiralty in this country will entertain the suit, notwithstanding that all the parties are foreigners. One Hundred and Ninety-four Shaws, 1 Abb. Adm. 317. [AMERICAN.]

(34) The officers and crew of a foreign vessel of war are entitled to salvage, as other vessels are. Application of the principle of salvage to particular facts and amount of salvage fixed in them. Robson v. The Huntress, 2 Wallace, jun. 59. [AMERICAN.]

(35) Salvage services were rendered by one vessel to another in pursuance of a written agreement between the owners, which stipulated for a per diem compensation. Held, that the district court had jurisdiction of a libel in rem for salvage, notwithstanding such agreement. The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 414. [AMERICAN.]

(36) In this country it is clear that salvage compensation may be obtained in Admiralty for services rendered within the ebb and flow of the tide, without regard to locality, whether on the high seas or inter fauces terræ. The John Gilpin, Oloott, Adm. 77. [AMERICAN.]

a right to choose their own jurisdiction (viz. whether to proceed for an award by magistrates or by a suit in the Court of Admiralty). They having elected to proceed before magistrates, the second salvors, who instituted proceedings in the Admiralty Court, held to have acted improperly in so doing, and in not intervening in the proceedings before the magistrates as their proper course. Quare, if parties have equal right, would a resort to the subordinate jurisdiction, when objected to, be proper? The Eugene, 3 Hagg. 158, 160.

64. Salvage services had been rendered to a vessel by several sets of salvors off Ramsgate. The owners of the vessel summoned a meeting of the commissioners of salvage for the Cinque Ports, to adjudicate on the matter. No notice of the intended meeting was given to any of the salvors, and it was proved that it was not usual to give any such notice. At the meeting of the commissioners one set of salvors was unrepresented, but it was proved that they were aware of the meeting, and were at hand. The commissioners made an award upon the whole matter. The salvors so unrepresented refused to accept their share of the money awarded, and brought their action in the Admiralty Court. Held, that the award was no bar to the action, the plaintiffs not having been parties to the first decision. The Elise, Swabey, 436.

65. In a suit for salvage of a foreign vessel, a tender having been made by the consul on behalf of the owners of £50, which was refused by the salvors, and an arbitration agreed on, under which £130 was awarded, to which the consul would not agree, the tender pronounced for as sufficient, and salvors' costs refused. The Eleanora Charlotta, 1 Hagg. 156.

66. The court cannot entertain the question as to a claim of the owner of a salving vessel (the master and crew of which rendered assistance to another vessel in distress, pursuant to an agreement for a given sum), for remuneration for loss on the cargo (fish) occasioned by the delay caused in fulfilling such agreement. Such a case held to be one of contract, not of salvage, and the suit dismissed accordingly, but, under the circumstances, the bargain being a hard one, without costs. The Mulgrave, 2 Hagg. 77.

67. Lord Stowell, in the case of The Mulgrave, in using the words "cannot entertain the question," did not intend to hold he had no jurisdiction, but that the agreement being valid, and the question therefore one of contract, he could not regard it as a case of salvage. The Catherine, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. li.

(b) Where the Salvage awarded does not exceed £200.

68. Though the Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction when the parties did not agree to the arbitration of two justices, and the sum claimed exceeded £200, yet if the claimants in such dispute did not recover in such court a greater sum than two hundred pounds, they could not, unless the court certified that the case was a fit one to be tried in a superior court, recover any costs, charges, or expenses incurred by them in the prosecution of their claim. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460.*

69. By the provisions of sect. 460 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in respect of salvage if the sum claimed did not exceed £200. The William and John, 1 Asp. 314.

70. The master of a vessel agreed to pay the sum of £140 for salvage services to be rendered to his vessel. After the assistance had been given, proceedings were taken before certain justices, who overruled the agreement as exorbitant, and awarded the sum of £70. The salvors then instituted a cause of salvage in the Court of Admiralty. Held, that the action must be dismissed with costs. The William and John, 1 Asp. 314.

71. By the words "the sum claimed" in that section is meant the amount asked for before any legal proceedings have been commenced. Ibid. 311.

* (38) It will be seen that this section does not deprive the court of any jurisdiction except in cases where the sum claimed does not exceed £200, and it only meets, therefore, such cases as those of The William and John, where the sum claimed was under that amount. Hence, probably, the more stringent provisions and more practicable rule laid down in the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 49, which, however, are in effect repealed as hereinafter mentioned.

(c) Where the salvaged Property does not exceed £1,000.

(aa) Before the Judicature Act and Rules.

72. The provisions contained in the eighth part of the M. S. Act, 1854, for giving summary jurisdiction to two justices in salvage cases, extend to all cases in which the value of the property saved does not exceed one thousand pounds, as well as to the cases provided for by that act; and apply whether the salvage service is rendered in the United Kingdom or not. See M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 49.

73. By the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 49, the High Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in respect of salvage, if the property saved was not of the value of £1,000; and a disputed agreement as to remuneration for salvage services was not sufficient to give the court either the jurisdiction of which it had been deprived by the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), or that which had been transferred by the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63). The William and John, 1 Asp. 314.

74. The words in the 49th section of the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), determining the jurisdiction of the court by the value of the property saved, mean the value of the property when first brought into safety by the salvors, and not its value at any subsequent period. The Stella, L. R. 1 A. & E. 340.

(bb) Since the Judicature Acts and Rules.

75. Any county court having Admiralty jurisdiction has jurisdiction in causes of salvage where the value of the property saved does not exceed £1,000, or where the amount claimed does not exceed £300; and any person taking in the High Court of Admiralty or any superior court, except by order of such court, proceedings for salvage which he might, without agreement, have taken in a county court, and not recovering more than £300, or taking such proceeding where the property saved does not exceed £1,000, is not entitled to costs, and is liable to be condemned in costs, unless the judge of the superior court certifies it was a proper case to be tried there. See the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), ss. 3, 9.

76. Semble, under the 9th section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), the Court of Admiralty may, in its discretion, take cognizance of salvage actions where the value of the property saved is under £1,000. The Herman Wedel, 39 L. J. Adm. 30.

77. The 9th section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), revives, subject to certain conditions, the original jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty, when the property saved is of less value than £1,000. The Empress, L. R. 3 A. & E. 502; 41 L. J. N.S. Adm. 32; 1 Asp. N.S. 183.

78. Subject to the provisions of the acts and these rules, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, are in the discretion of the court or judge except as therein mentioned. See Ord. LXV. r. 1, No. 976.

79. As to the repeal of sect. 9 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), by Ord. LXV. r. 1, No. 976, see Tenant v. Ellis, 6 Q. B. D. 46; 50 L. J. Q. B. 143.

80. See also as to the restrictions as to costs in actions in the superior court proper to be tried in an inferior court generally, tit. Costs, p. 350, and within the M. S. Acts, Ibid. p. 352.

(d) Within the Cinque Ports.

81. Where salvage services are rendered within the boundaries of the Cinque Ports, though the value of the property salvaged is under £1,000, the Court of Admiralty retained its concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, unaffected by the 49th sect. of the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63). The Jeune Paul, 2 Asp. 478; L. R. 1 A. & E. 336; The Maria Luisa, Swabey, 67; 2 Jur. N.S. 264; 4 W. R. 376; 26 L. T. 316.

82. Therefore, a motion to dismiss a suit for salvage services, within these boundaries, brought in the Court of Admiralty, in a case in which the value of the property saved was about £500, was dismissed with costs. Ibid.

(e) Towage.

83. The Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction to decide all claims and demands in the nature of towage, whether the vessel was within the body of a county, or upon the high seas, at the time when the services were rendered. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6.

84. The jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Admiralty by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, was in respect of towage services rendered, not of claims against the owner of the towing vessel for breaches of contract. The Robert Pow, 2 N. R. 527.

85. The master of a vessel agreed with a tug for towage from Sea Reach in the Thames to a London wharf, and agreed to pay £6, and give an order upon the owner of the wharf for the amount usually allowed by him (under the name of towage) as a premium to vessels of the kind coming to his wharf. The service was performed by the tug, and the master paid the £6, but refused to give the order on the owner of the wharf. The amount actually paid by the owner of the wharf according to his practice was proved, and it was also proved that if an order signed by the master of the vessel towed was presented by the master of the tug, the money would be (as a matter of practice) paid to him. Held, that the master of the vessel had no authority to agree to transfer to the master of the tug an uncertain sum payable to the owners of the vessel, and that the court had no authority to enforce such a contract or give damages for the breach of it. The Martha, 1 Lushington, 314; see also The Ceylon, No. 2217, July 19, 1864.

(f) To British Government Ships.

86. The East India Company are not exempt from the payment of salvage to a ship in their employment for services rendered to a ship belonging to them. The Waterloo, 2 Dodson, 433.

86a. See tit. JURISDICTION, p. 668. See No. 30, p. 1785.

* (39) As a general rule, where the only question in a salvage suit is as to the rate of reward, and the salvaged property is within the jurisdiction of the court, a Court of Admiralty in this country will entertain the suit, notwithstanding that all the parties are foreigners. One Hundred and Ninety-four Shavits, 1 Abb. Adm. 317. [AMERICAN.]

(39a) But semble, when the answer charges the plaintiff with wanton misconduct in obtaining possession of the property, and prays the privilege to contest the claim before the courts of their common country, the case should be dismissed to the home forum. Ibid.

(40) In a case of salvage, where the parties on both sides, except the owners of the cargo of the salvor ship, were foreigners, and no protest was made to the jurisdiction, but merely an objection raised by counsel at the argument, it was considered that the con-

(i) On Sea and Land.†

89. The High Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction over agreements made on land for the performance of salvage services. The Catherine, 12 Jur. 682; 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xliii.

90. In salvage cases the court will take into consideration, in connection with salvage services at sea, those afterwards performed on land relating thereto, when the services are continuous. The Mary Ann, 1 Hagg. 160, 161.

91. Where a vessel had been driven on shore and part of the salvage services was performed when the waves beat over and part when she was lying dry, the Court of Admiralty had nevertheless jurisdiction in the matter. The Rosalie, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 192; 18 Jur. 337.

92. It would be injurious to the course of justice if the court were to be astute in severing services at sea and on land. Ibid.

93. If the court were in difficulty as to such a case it would adopt the common law principle, and not throw off the jurisdiction, unless there was another to take cognizance of the case. Ibid.

94. In the course of salvage services the vessel salvaged was brought into harbour, and her cargo unladen. Held, that considerations drawn from public convenience in favour of the jurisdiction greatly overbalanced those against it; and that, however it might be viewed when the jurisdiction of the court was protested against, there ought to be no doubt where the parties assented to it. Mason v. The Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240. [AMERICAN.]

(41) See also the observations of Mr. Justice Bradley, affirming such jurisdiction, in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court in The Belgenland, 13 April, 1885. [AMERICAN.]

† (42) Plaintiffs, pursuant to agreement made on land with the owners, removed from on board a wreck in the river St. Lawrence the whole of the cargo and stored it on land. Held, that the service was one of salvage. The Royal William, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. (Lower Canada), 107.

the whole was a continuous salvage service. Ibid.

95. A ship sunk on the Nore Sand was raised by means of an apparatus, and an action brought against her in a cause of salvage. The owners appeared under protest, alleging that the court had no jurisdiction, the services having been rendered under an agreement made upon land. Protest overruled, and held, that the services were salvage services, and therefore the court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The Catherine, 12 Jur. 682; 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. lxi.

96. Held, also, that the court having original jurisdiction over the subject-matter, had jurisdiction over its incidents. Ibid.

96a. Held, further, that the court had jurisdiction over agreements made upon land for the performance of salvage services. Ibid.

97. The ship L., on her voyage from Moulmein to Liverpool, laden with teak, was in distress in the Indian Ocean, when she was fallen in with by the N. The master and crew of the L. were taken on board the N., and some of the N.'s crew succeeded in getting the L. into Galle, the N. proceeding to Bombay with the master and crew of the L. Communications took place on behalf of the N. with the owners of the ship and cargo of the L. in England. The owners of cargo declined to interfere, but the owners of ship authorized the subsequent proceedings. An agent of the N. proceeded from Bombay to Galle, caused the cargo to be unladen and stowed, the necessary repairs to be done to the L., and the cargo to be re-shipped, and incurred considerable expenses and loss of time in superintending these measures. The L., under the charge of the mate and others of the N., and a further crew, sailed from Galle and arrived in England. Salvage as to the ship was settled by negotiation. In a suit against the owners of the cargo for salvage to the cargo, held that the salvage services terminated on the ship's arrival at Galle, and that the value of the cargo must be taken as at its arrival at Galle, and not at its arrival in England. Cargo ex The Loodianah, No. 1403, 21st April, 1863.

(j) Life.

(aa) *British Ships.

98. Whenever any ship or boat is stranded or otherwise in distress on the shore of any sea or tidal water situate within the limits of the United Kingdom, and services are rendered by any person in saving the lives of the persons belonging thereto, there shall be payable by the owners to such salvors a reasonable amount of salvage, with all expenses properly incurred in the performance of such services; the amount to be determined, in case of dispute, in manner hereinafter mentioned (in cases under £200, and not within the Cinque Ports, by justices, and in other cases in England and Wales by the High Court of Admiralty of England). See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 458.

99. All the provisions of the M. S. Act, 1854, in regard to salvage of life from any ship or boat within the limits of the United Kingdom, are extended to the salvage of life from any British ship or boat wheresoever the services may have been rendered. See The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 9.

99a. Salvage, in respect of the preservation of the life of any person belonging to any such ship or boat, shall be payable by the owners of the ship or boat in priority to all other claims for salvage. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 459.

100. Prior to 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99 (since repealed) the Court of Admiralty had no authority to allot a salvage reward, on the ground alone that the lives of persons on board a vessel in distress had been preserved by the successful exertions of the parties suing; and a claim of salvors for preservation of life alone pronounced against accordingly, but without costs. The Zephyrus, 1 W. Rob. 329; Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 74; The Fusileer, 2 Lushington; 10 L. T. N.S. 699.

100a. But if the preservation of life could be connected with the preservation of property, whether by accident or not, the court could and would take notice of it, and join that to the animus in the first instance. The Aid, 1 Hagg. 84; The Fusileer, Br. & Lush. 341; 10 L. T. N.S. 699.

101. The High Court of Admiralty had no power prior to the above statutory authorities to decree salvage for the saving of life alone, whether the ship from which the persons were rescued was a British or a foreign ship. The Johannes, 30 L. J. Adm. 93.

* (43) Similar provisions were contained in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, s. 19, which was repealed on the M. S. Act, 1854, coming into operation. See the M. S. Repeal Act, 1854 (c. 120).

102. But salvage of life was taken into consideration in connection with salvage of property in estimating the salvage award. The Aid, 1 Hagg. 84; The Fusileer, Br. & Lush. 341; 10 L. T. N.S. 699; 12 W. R. 968; 2 Asp. P. C. 177.

102a. Claim for rescue of crew from pirates, held, prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), not to be a salvage service. The Mary, 1 W. Rob. 448.

103. In a case of salvage of a derelict sold at £250, £30 awarded to a smack under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, for her assistance in preserving the lives of the crew, she having put them on shore from the derelict, but not having been concerned in the salvage of the vessel. The Queen Mab, 3 Hagg. 242.

(bb) Foreign Ships.

104. All the provisions of the M. S. Act, 1854, in regard to salvage of life from any ship or boat within the limits of the United Kingdom, shall be extended to the salvage of life from any foreign ship or boat, where the services have been rendered, either wholly or in part, in British waters. See the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 9.

105. Whenever it is made to appear to her Majesty that the government of any foreign country is willing that salvage shall be awarded by British courts for services rendered in saving life from any ship belonging to such country, when such ship is beyond the limits of British jurisdiction, her Majesty may, by order in council, direct that the provisions of the principal act, and of this act, with respect to salvage for services rendered in saving life from British ships, shall, in all British courts, be held to apply to services rendered in saving life from the ships of such foreign country, whether such services are rendered within British jurisdiction or not. The M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 59.*

106. Whenever an order in council has been issued under this act, applying any provision of this act, or any regulation made by or in pursuance of this act, to the ships of any foreign country, such ships shall in all cases arising in any British court be deemed to be subject to such provision or regulation, and shall for the purpose of such provision or regulation be treated as if they were British ships. Ibid. s. 61.

107. As to power to limit, or revoke, or alter such orders, and as to their publication, Ibid. ss. 62, 63, 64.

108. The provisions of the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862, and of the M. S. Act, 1854, with respect to salvage for saving life from British ships, shall, in all British courts, apply to services rendered in saving life from Prussian ships, whether within British jurisdiction or not. Order in Council, 7th April, 1864, in 2 Maude & Pollock on Merc. Sh. (4th ed. by Poll. & Bruce), p. 96.

109. The High Court of Admiralty cannot decree salvage for the saving of life alone on board a foreign ship when such saving of life has been effected on the high seas out of British jurisdiction. The Johannes, 1 Lushington, 182; 30 L. J. Adm. 93; 3 L. T. N.S. 757.

109a. It makes no difference with respect to such salvage, that the ship is afterwards brought within the jurisdiction. Ibid.

110. Where lives were saved by a foreign vessel beyond British waters, and the persons were thence transferred at their request to another vessel, by which they were conveyed within British waters, and to a British port, held, that this was not a salvage of life by a foreign ship or boat "where the services had been rendered wholly or in part in British waters" within the meaning of section 9 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 9. The Willem III., L. R. 3 A. & E. 487; 1 Asp. N.S. 129.

110a. See as to salvage of life generally, c. 7, p. 1847.

3. Courts of Common Law.†

111. By the common law a salvor has a lien on (semble, derelict) property saved

* (44) These provisions have not as yet been extended to any foreign country but Prussia.

† (45) A person who preserves goods which the owners or those entrusted with the care of them have either abandoned in distress at sea, or are unable to protect and save, is entitled by the common law of England to retain the possession of the goods saved until a proper compensation is made to him for his trouble. This compensation, if the parties cannot agree upon it, may by the same law be ascertained by a jury in an action brought by the salvor against the proprietor of the goods, or the proprietor may tender to the salvor such sum of money as he thinks sufficient, and upon refusal to deliver the goods, bring an action against the salvor, and if the jury think the sum tendered sufficient, he will recover his goods or their value and at sea (but not in a river), and he may retain the same until an adequate tender is made, after which he will be liable in detinue or trover for it, and with damages. See Hartford v. Jones, 1 Ld. Raym. 393; Baring and others v. Day, 8 East, 57; 1 Saund. 265; Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. B. 257; Newman v. Walters, 3 B. & P. 612.

112. In an action for salvage services, it appeared that the plaintiff, being a common sailor, was ordered by the master of his own ship to go in a boat with others, for a distance of fourteen miles, to the assistance of another vessel, which was stranded on the bar of a river, and to place himself under the command of the master of that other vessel. Held, that, under those circumstances, he could not, prior to the Judicature Acts, maintain an action against the owner of the vessel saved for the personal services which he had rendered. Lipson v. Harrison, 22 L. T. 83.

113. The courts of common law could not, prior to the Judicature Acts, by an action on account for money had and received, or on an account stated, entertain a claim by seamen for their share of salvage money paid to the owner or master of their vessel. The courts and functionaries having jurisdiction as to the distribution of salvage are those stated in sect. 460 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104). Atkinson v. Woodall, 31 L. J. N.S. Exch. 352; 31 L. J. M. C. 174; 3 Jur. N.S. 72; 6 L. T. N.S. 361; 10 W. R. 671.

114. B. employed C. to convey, in his barge, a quantity of copper ore from Liverpool to Birkenhead, and to deliver it to D., who had undertaken to indemnify B. from all risk in the transit. The barge having sunk owing to stress of weather, C. applied to B. to know if he should raise the ore. The answer was, that he must ask D.; D. said, "I am insured; ask the insurer," which he did, and received an order to raise it. Held, that as B. never employed C. to raise the ore, the latter could have no lien upon it, neither could C. recover as against B. for salvage or general average. Castellain v. Thompson, 7 L. T. N.S. 424.

115. A ship was stranded in the harbour of Z., and to get her off it became necessary to unload a portion of the cargo, which was brought to Z. A., the receiver of droits at Z., and who also was agent for Lloyd's, superintended the salvage operations, but in the latter capacity only, and afterwards seized and detained the goods for several weeks, until sundry salvage claims had been settled, and a sum of £45 19s. paid to him for fees claimed to be due under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, s. 19. B., the agent at Z. of C. and Co., the shippers of the goods, paid the amount under protest to A. Held, in an action by C. and Co. against A. for money had and received to their use, that A. was not entitled to the fees in question, and that although C. and Co. were not the owners of the goods, they were entitled in this form of action to recover back the money so wrongfully obtained from them. Cotesworth v. Walsh, 5 (IRISH) Jur. 253.

116. In an action of indebitatus assumpsit at common law, £400 awarded to a passenger who took the command of a ship abandoned by the crew, and brought her safe into port. Newman v. Walters (1804), 3 Bos. & Pull. 612.

the cost of his suit. 11 Petersdorff's Abr. 483; Abb. Sh. (12th ed.), p. 537; and see 1 Park on Ins. 301.

(45a) A steamer struck on the Rocks of Hurlgate and stuck there in great peril. A. was employed as a person of great skill to get her off, which he did, and then sued the owners in assumpsit to recover the value of his services. Held, on a motion to set aside a report of referees which seemed based on the principles of salvage, that courts of common law have not jurisdiction in cases of salvage, but that they belong by long custom to the Courts of Admiralty, which from their extraordinary process are the only proper tribunals; that each case, where there was no special contract, depended on its own circumstances to determine the nature of the compensation, whether it ought to be made on a quantum meruit or on salvage principles, and the vessel not being derelict and the owners having employed great numbers of men and boats to assist in relieving their vessel, the case was not one of salvage, but that a liberal compensation ought to be given to men of great skill who are employed to relieve vessels in imminent peril. Sturgis v. Law, 3 Sandf. Sup. Ct. 451. [AMERICAN.]

3. *Board of Trade.*1. Generally.

123. The Board of Trade means the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 2; and the Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c. Act, 1861 (c. 47), ss. 65—69.

2. Salvage of Life.

124. As to payments by Board of Trade for salvage of life, see c. 7, p. 1849.

3. Salvage of Wreck.

125. As to payment, by the receiver to the salvors, for salvage of unclaimed wreck, of such amount as the Board of Trade may, in each case or by any general rule determine, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 475.

4. *Ramsgate Harbour Dues.

126. On and after January, 1862, the Board of Trade shall be entitled to receive a percentage of five pounds in the hundred on all salvage paid or liable to be paid in respect of any ship or boat, or cargo or apparel of any ship or boat, or any wreck or other property, brought into Ramsgate harbour; and such percentage shall be deducted from the salvage, and paid to the Board of Trade, before the remainder of the salvage is paid over to the salvors, and shall be recoverable by the same means by which salvage is recoverable. See the Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c. Act, 1861 (c. 47), s. 28.

126a. Whenever any vessel enters Ramsgate harbour in distress, and for the purpose of repairs, any goods are unshipped therefrom, and the rates on such unshipment are duly paid, then, if such goods are afterwards reshipped there without any change in the ownership, no further rates shall be leviable upon them in respect of such reshipment. No rate shall be levied upon vessels using the harbour solely as a harbour of refuge, and remaining therein not more than sixty hours. Ibid. s. 27.

4. *Receivers of Wreck.*1. Generally.†

pursuance of this act receiver of wreck, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 2.

128. Whenever any ship or boat is stranded or in distress at any place on the shore of the sea or of any tidal water within the limits of the United Kingdom, the receiver of the district shall forthwith proceed there, and take the command of all persons present, and issue such directions, as he may think fit, with a view to the preservation of such ship or boat, and the lives of the persons belonging thereto, and the cargo and apparel thereof (penalty for disobedience not exceeding £50); but the receiver may not interfere between the master of such ship or boat and his crew in matters relating to the management thereof, unless requested so to do by such master. Ibid. s. 441.

129. The receiver may, with a view to such preservation of the property, summon such number of men as he thinks necessary to assist him: require the master or other person having the charge of any ship or boat near at hand to give such aid with his men, ship, or boats as may be in his power; and demand the use of any waggon, cart, or horses that may be near at hand: (penalty for refusal without reasonable cause not exceeding £100). Ibid. s. 442.

130. Whenever any such accident occurs to any ship or boat, all persons may, for the purpose of rendering assistance thereto, or saving the lives of the persons on board the same, or the cargo or apparel thereof, unless there is some public road equally convenient, pass and repass with or without carriages or horses over any adjoining lands, without being subject to interruption by the owner or occupier, doing as little damage as possible, and may also, on the like condition, deposit on such lands any cargo or other article recovered from such ship or boat; and all damage sustained by any owner or occupier in consequence thereof, shall be a charge on the property, and shall, in default of payment, be recoverable like salvage, and the amount payable in respect thereof if disputed shall be determined like salvage. Ibid. s. 446.

131. Penalty not exceeding £100 against owners or occupiers of land impeding or hindering any person from so passing or repassing, with or without carriages, horses and servants, or from depositing any cargo or other article so recovered until it can be removed to a safe place of public deposit. Ibid. s. 447.

132. All cargo and other articles belonging to such ship or boat that may be washed on shore, or otherwise be lost or taken from such ship or boat, shall be delivered to the receiver (penalty not exceeding £100 against any person, whether owner or not, who secretes, keeps possession of, or refuses to deliver up the same), and the receiver or other person may take such cargo or article by force from the person so refusing to deliver the same. Ibid. s. 443.

133. During the absence of the receiver from the place where an accident occurs, or in places where no receiver has been appointed, the following officers in succession, each in the absence of the other, and in the order in which they are named, i. e., any principal officer of customs or coastguard, or officer of inland revenue, any sheriff, justice of the peace, commissioned officer on full pay in the naval or military service of her Majesty, may do all matters authorized to be done by the

and to release same when security given, the form of bond or security by cash or deposit, Ibid. p. 43.

receiver, but with respect to any goods or articles belonging to any such ship or boat, the delivery up of which to the receiver is hereinbefore required, any officer so acting shall be considered as the agent of the receiver, and shall place the same in the custody of the receiver; and no person so acting as substitute for any receiver shall be entitled to any fees payable to receivers, or be deprived by reason of his so acting of any right to salvage to which he would otherwise be entitled. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 445.

134. Whenever any salvage is due to any person under this act, the receiver shall act as follows: If the salvage is due in respect of services rendered in assisting any ship or boat, or in saving the lives of persons belonging to the same, or the cargo or apparel thereof, he shall detain such ship or boat and the cargo and apparel belonging thereto until payment is made, or process has been issued by some competent court for their detention. Ibid. s. 468.

135. If the salvage is due in respect of the saving of any wreck, and such wreck is not sold as unclaimed in pursuance of the provisions hereinafter contained, he shall detain such wreck until payment is made, or process has been issued in manner aforesaid. Ibid.

136. But the receiver may, if at any time previously to the issue of such process security is given to his satisfaction for the amount of salvage due, release from his custody such property so detained by him. Ibid.

137. In cases where the claim for salvage exceeds £200, in England the High Court of Admiralty of England, in Ireland the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland, and in Scotland the Court of Session, may determine any question arising as to the amount of such security or the sufficiency of the sureties. Ibid.

138. In all cases where bond or other security is given to the receiver for an amount exceeding £200 the salvor, or the owner of the property salvaged, or their respective agents, may institute proceedings in such courts for the purpose of having the questions arising between them adjudicated upon, and the courts may enforce payment of the bond or security, as if bail had been given in those courts. Ibid.

139. Whenever any ship, boat, cargo, apparel, or wreck is detained by any receiver for non-payment of any sums so due, and the parties liable to pay them are aware of such detention, then, in the following cases:—(1) Where the amount is not disputed, and payment is not made within twenty days after it is due; (2) Where the amount is disputed, but no appeal lies and payment is not made within twenty days after the decision; (3) Where the amount is disputed, and an appeal lies to some other tribunal, and payment is not made within such twenty days, or process or other proceedings in the appeal are not taken out or instituted within such twenty days; the receiver may forthwith sell the property, or a sufficient part thereof, and out of the proceeds after payment of all expenses defray all sums of money due in respect of expenses, fees, and salvage, paying the surplus, if any, to the owners or other parties entitled to receive the same. Ibid. s. 469.

140. For provisions empowering receivers to institute examination with respect to ships in distress, Ibid. s. 448.

141. For provisions imposing a forfeiture of salvage on persons finding or taking possession of wreck without giving up possession thereof, or the required notice thereof to the receiver of wreck of the district, Ibid. s. 450.

142. For provisions that in cases of concealed wreck being seized by receiver of wreck in consequence of information given to him, the informer shall be entitled by way of salvage to such sum not exceeding £5 as the receiver may allow, Ibid. s. 451.

143. For provisions as to the appointment and jurisdiction of receivers of wreck, Ibid. ss. 439, 440.

144. For powers of receiver to suppress plunder and disorder by force, Ibid. s. 444.

145. Receivers hold their offices during the pleasure of the Board of Trade. See the M. S. Repeal Act, 1854 (c. 120), s. 11.

146. A vessel having run ashore on the coast of Essex was assisted by the owner of a smack, who put down an anchor and a hawser attached to the vessel for the purpose of securing her. The smack then left her for the purpose of carrying away some of her stores, with the intention, however, of returning. The owner of another smack came to her afterwards, and finding no one in or near the vessel, and her deck under water, took away the anchor and hawser and delivered them up to the deputy vice-admiral of Essex. Held, that the anchor and hawser were not parted with nor left abandoned within the meaning of the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75,

s. 1 (now repealed), and that the deputy vice-admiral was not justified in detaining them until salvage was paid, or security given for its payment. Heathorn v. Darling, 1 E. F. Moore, 5.

147. The deputy vice-admiral, who received an anchor and hawser, alleged to be left at sea, from the finder, refused on application by the real owner to deliver them up until the salvage was paid, or security given for the payment of it. Held, that this was a conversion, but if he had merely refused to deliver them up until it was ascertained whether salvage was due or not, it would not have amounted to a conversion. Clark v. Chamberlain, 2 Mee. & W. 78 ; 2 Gale, 217.

148. A receiver of droits had, as was alleged, improperly sold by public auction certain iron that had been salvaged and delivered to him. Application under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, that he should be compelled to bring the proceeds of sale into the registry for the benefit of salvors, refused, the court considering that it had no jurisdiction. Derelict Iron, 15 Jur. 300. See also The Tritonia, 5 Notes of Cases, Supp. 1.

149. Held, prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), that the receiver of droits is bound to give up the custody of a ship either on the salvors being compensated, or upon reasonable security being offered. The Hopewell, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 249.

150. Held, prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), that a receiver of droits, from whose possession a derelict ship is taken by an Admiralty warrant, is entitled only to a fee of £2 for the first day she is in his possession, and £1 for each day after. The Simpson, 3 Jur. 270. [IRISH.]

151. The receiver of Admiralty droits is not bound to give up possession of a derelict vessel until his expenses have been paid. The Tritonia, 2 W. Rob. 523.

See also No. 298, p. 1814.

2. Apportionment.

152. Whenever the aggregate amount of salvage payable has been finally ascertained either by agreement or by the award of justices or their umpire, but a dispute arises as to the apportionment thereof, then, if the amount does not exceed £200, the party liable to pay the amount so due may apply to the receiver of the district for liberty to pay the amount so ascertained to him; and he shall, if he thinks fit, receive the same accordingly, and grant a certificate of such payment and of the services in respect of which it is made; and such certificate shall be a full discharge and indemnity to the person or persons to whom it is given, and to their ship, boats, cargo, apparel, and effects, against the claims of all persons in respect of the services therein mentioned; but if the amount exceeds £200, it shall be apportioned in manner hereinafter mentioned. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 466.

153. Any distribution (of salvage by receiver of wreck) made in pursuance of this section is final and conclusive against the rights of all persons claiming to be entitled to any portion of the moneys so distributed. Ibid. s. 467.

3. Fishing Boats and Fishing Gear.

154. All fishing boats, all rigging gear, or other appurtenances of fishing boats, all nets, buoys, floats, or other fishing implements whatsoever found or picked up at sea shall, as soon as possible, be delivered to the receiver of wreck if the article saved be taken into the United Kingdom, and to the commissary of marine if the article saved be taken into France. See the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, 1st Sched. Art. XXII.

155. The receiver of wreck or the commissary of marine, as the case may be, shall restore the articles saved to the owners thereof, or to their representatives. Ibid.

156. These functionaries shall fix the amount which the owners shall pay to the salvors. Ibid.

4. Property of Foreigners.*

157. Whenever any article belonging

Trade Instructions as to Wreck and Salvage, anno 1886, p. 47.

(57) In regard to the ship or cargoes of wrecked, stranded or sunken vessels of other countries, the receiver is to endeavour to act

See the M. S. Act, 1855 (c. 91), s. 19.

5. Valuations by—.*

158. Whenever any salvage question arises the receiver of wreck for the district may, upon application from either of the parties, appoint a valuer to value the property in respect of which the salvage claim is made, and shall, when the valuation has been returned to him, give a copy of the valuation to both parties; and any copy of such valuation, purporting to be signed by the valuer, and to be attested by the receiver, shall be received in evidence in any subsequent proceeding; and there shall be paid in respect of such valuation, by the party applying for the same, such fee as the Board of Trade may direct. The M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 50.

158a. Such a valuation by the receiver of wreck is not, however, conclusive on the Court of Admiralty. The Minna, No. 2061, March 15, 1864.

6. Sale of Property by—.†

159. As to the sale, by the receiver, of perishable wreck or derelict property of small amount, see M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 453; and Board of Trade Instructions

161. See as to fees of receivers for taking depositions, and as to such fees being recoverable like salvage, tit. EVIDENCE, note 24, p. 439.

8. Serjeants of the Admiralty of the Cinque Ports.§

162. The serjeants of the Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, their deputies or other officers, shall perform their duties during the pleasure and subject to the directions of the Board of Trade; and all such officers shall possess in their districts the same powers, rights, and privileges, and perform the same duties, as are by the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), committed to Receivers, save that they shall not be entitled to take the command in cases of ships or boats stranded or in distress, unless authorized so to do by the Board of Trade. See the M. S. Repeal Act, 1854 (c. 120), s. 11.

5. Salvors.

164. A salvor is a person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer. The Neptune, 1 Hagg. 236.

164a. Volunteers go out at their own risk for the chance of earning reward, and if they labour unsuccessfully they are entitled to nothing. It is the effectual performance of salvage services which gives them a title to reward. But if men are engaged by a ship in distress, whether generally or particularly, they are to be paid according to their efforts, even though the labour or service may not prove beneficial. The Undaunted, 29 L. J. Adm. 177; 1 Lushington, 90; 2 L. T. N.S. 520; and see c. 6, s. 3, p. 1828.

165. All salvage, whether civil or military, is founded on the equity of remunerating private and spontaneous services rendered in the protection of the lives and property of others. The court cannot safely introduce other persons to share with the salvor (who was in this instance the recaptor from pirates) on constructive grounds. Such extension must be made by statute or other competent authority. The Court of Admiralty has no such authority. The Calypso, 2 Hagg. 218, 220.

166. Salvage is personal in its primary character at least, and those who are so employed in the service are those whom the law considers as standing in the first degree of relation to the property and to the proprietors. This is necessary for the protection of the owner, who ought not to be burthened with artificial claims. The court looks primarily to the actual salvor, and has uniformly rejected all claims founded on prerogative rights, as of the Lord High Admiral in former times, of lords of manors, magistrates, and flag officers, except with reference to assistance substantially and beneficially afforded. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 48, 58, 63.

167. In an action for salvage services, it appeared that the plaintiff, being a common sailor, was ordered by the captain of his own ship to go in a boat with others, for a distance of fourteen miles, to the assistance of another vessel, which was stranded on the bar of a river, and to place himself under the command of the captain of that other vessel. Held, that, under those circumstances, he could not maintain an action against the owner of the vessel saved for the personal services which he had rendered. Lipson v. Harrison, 29 L. T. Q. B. 83; but see note 72, p. 1804.

168. Claims of foreign salvors for services rendered to a British ship adjudicated upon in the Admiralty. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 262.

168a. Salvage awarded to the families or representatives of persons who lost their lives in rendering the salvage services. The Marquis of Huntley, 3 Hagg. 249.

2. After Collision.†

169. Where a collision has occurred between two vessels solely owing to the fault of one of them, the innocent vessel is not debarred by the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33, (now repealed, but see M. S. Act, 1873

(62a) As to vessels fitted out specially for salvage purposes on the Florida coast, and termed wreckers, see Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 4, 250. [AMERICAN.]

(63) It is no objection to a claim for salvage, that the interference or assistance of the salvor did not arise from a desire to preserve the property or benefit the owner. Le Tigre, 3 Washington, C. C. 567. [AMERICAN.]

(63a) Official persons while acting in the strict line of their official duty cannot be admitted to claim salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 151. [AMERICAN.]

(64) But if the services exceed the just limits of official duty the officer is entitled to salvage, although he may have intended to keep within the line of his duty. Le Tigre, 3 Washington, 567; Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Peters, 108. [AMERICAN.]

The S. W. Downs*, 1 Newb. Adm. 458. [AMERICAN.]

(c. 85), s. 16,) which makes it the duty of ships mutually to assist each other after a collision, from obtaining salvage remuneration for services rendered to the other after the collision. The Hannibal, The Queen, L. R. 2 A. & E. 53; 37 L. J. Adm. 12; 2 Asp. 555.

170. A collision occurred between the H. and the Q. The H. was in tow of a tug. The tug, after the collision, rendered assistance to the Q. The Q. was found solely to blame for the collision. Held, that the tug's right to salvage remuneration was not affected by the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33 (now repealed). The Queen, Ibid.

170a. Scoble, when, after a collision, the innocent vessel renders assistance by towing the other vessel, such innocent vessel is not entitled to salvage, having regard to sect. 16 of the M. S. Act, 1873 (c. 85), which enjoins on vessels after collision to render each other such assistance as may be practicable and necessary to save them from danger caused by the collision; per Butt, J., The Beta, The Peter Graham, 5 Asp. 276.

171. The owners of a steam-tug, which, while engaged in towing a vessel, negligently caused her to come into collision with a third vessel, cannot recover salvage reward for services rendered to her tow after the collision, those services having been rendered necessary by the misconduct of the tug. The Glengaber, L. R. 3 A. & E. 534; 31 L. J. Adm. 84; 1 Asp. N.S. 401.

172. But where, owing to the misconduct of her steam-tug B., the G. was endangered and salvage services were rendered by the steam-tug W.: Held, that the owners of the W. were entitled to salvage reward, although some of them were also owners of the B. Ibid.

173. Where a collision has occurred for which both vessels are to blame, neither vessel is entitled to reward for salvage services rendered either to the other vessel or the cargo therein, on the ground that no man can profit by his own wrong. Cargo ex Capella, L. R. 1 A. & E. 356; 2 Asp. 552.

173a. A collision occurred between two vessels, the W. and the B. The plaintiffs, at the request of the W., took the B. in tow, and succeeded, after the vessels had dragged some way, in separating them. In a cause of salvage against the W., held, that the services rendered to the W. were direct and not indirect, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to salvage remuneration.

The Woburn Abbey, 3 Asp. P. C. 310.

174. A steamer meeting a brig in some distress, having passed under her lee and gone a little ahead, offered her services to the brig. These were not accepted by the captain of the brig, who, however, was not fully aware of his dangerous position, but while the parties were so occupied the brig was carried nearer the steamer, whose engines were primed at the time. The captain of the steamer was aware of this defect in the engines of his vessel, and had not allowed for it, so that when the vessels drew nearer he was unable to get out of the way, and a collision, occurred between them, and the brig received such damage that she was obliged to accept the services of the steamer. In a salvage suit by the steamer against the brig, held, that the collision occurred solely through the default of the steamer, but that when the steamer first offered her services, the circumstances of the brig were such that no prudent man to whom they were fully known would have declined her assistance. Held, further, that the steamer was entitled to salvage remuneration, although but for her negligence the master of the brig would not have accepted the services of the steamer. The Cherubim, Ir. 2 Eq. 172; 3 Asp. 156.

174a. Held, however, that the negligence of the steamer must considerably reduce the sum which would otherwise have been awarded. Ibid.

175. A steamer and sailing vessel got foul of each other in the Mersey, and were both in considerable danger when the plaintiffs' steamship came up, and, at the request of the sailing vessel, took her in tow, and thereby freed both vessels from danger. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to salvage, not only from the sailing vessel, but also from the steamer. The Vandyck, 7 P. D. 43; 47 L. T. N.S. (C. A.) 694; 5 Asp. 17.

175a. In rendering salvage services the salvors' ship came into collision with the other ship. The salvors subsequently completed the salvage. Held, in an action brought by the owners, master, and crew of the salving vessel, that the collision was caused by the negligence of the salvors, that the salving ship was therefore liable for the damage; and that the salvors were entitled to salvage. The C. S. Butler, The Baltic, L. R. 4 A. & E. 178; 43 L. J. Adm. N.S. 17.

176. It is not usual for salvage suits to be brought by one of the parties to a collision against the other. The court is very reluctant where small services are rendered in consequence to see them made the subject of salvage suits. Some salvage services having, however, been performed, attended with considerable labour and fatigue, but no risk, the court awarded £80 and costs. The Sapho, Swabey, 242.

3. Owners of salving Vessels.

(a) Generally.

177. The court, in estimating the amount of salvage to be awarded, will not overlook the fact that the salving vessel was a passenger ship. The Vanguard, 5 Jur. N.S. 364. [IRISH.]

178. The owner of a salving vessel is not an unfit person to originate a suit for salvage. The Haidee, 1 Notes of Cases, 598.

179. Where a part owner of a salving vessel has an interest in the vessel saved, his co-owners and the master and crew of the salving vessel may sue for salvage; the sum to which they are entitled being computed by deducting from the value of the entire service the share which would have been due to such part owner if he could have joined as plaintiff. The Caroline, 1 Asp. 145.

(b) Steamers.*

180. When steamers render salvage services they are entitled to a greater reward than any other set of salvors rendering the same service, because they can, owing to the power they possess, perform such services with much greater celerity than other vessels, and much greater safety to the vessel in danger, and frequently under circumstances in which no other assistance could prevail. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 267.

181. Where salvage services are rendered by steamships, the amount of salvage which the court will award is not necessarily affected by the fact of the services performed occupying only a short time, the court now holding, with respect to steamers, that it is better for the saved property that the service should occupy a shorter space of time than with the manœuvres of sailing ships. The Alicia Annie and The Aminta, 2 Asp. 232; The Northumberland and The Andalusia, 2 Asp. 215; 12 L. T. N.S. 584.

182. The court always looks with considerable favour on the exertions of steam vessels assisting vessels aground, because a steamer can render assistance so much more quickly and effectually. The Alfen, Swabey, 190.

183. Steamers are to be paid in proportion to the value of the services rendered, and not to the time occupied in rendering them. The General Palmer, cited in The Medora, Caledonia Co. v. Hutton and others, 5 Notes of Cases, 159.

184. The court inclines to give as much encouragement as possible to salvage exertions of steam vessels, on account of the great skill and power of vessels of that description. The Raikes, 1 Hagg. 246.

185. When steamers render assistance they are considered as entitled to liberal rewards. The London Merchant, 3 Hagg. 401.

186. Steam vessels usually belong to great and opulent companies, and are fitted out at great cost. On these considerations, when they afford assistance, they obtain a large remuneration. The Perth, ibid. 416.

187. The court will award very liberal remuneration to a steam vessel specially built for and devoted to salvage services, inasmuch as she is not employed in general trade for the conveyance of goods and passengers, but depends entirely on her chances for public encouragement and support. The Maryanne, 9 Ir. Jur. N.S. 60; 2 Asp. 127.

188. A steam vessel specially summoned by signal or otherwise to the assistance of a vessel is to be remunerated for the distance she has to come in order to reach the vessel. The Graces, 8 Jur. 501; 2 W. Rob. 294.

189. The shorter the period occupied in rescuing a ship from distress the more meritorious is the salvage service. The Syrian, 2 Asp. 387.

190. As to towage, see c. 6, p. 1835.

191. As to awards of salvage to steamers, see tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, p. 1921.

* (66) A larger remuneration should be given when the salvage service is performed by or for steam vessels than in ordinary cases, inasmuch as, on the one hand, they are fitted out at great cost, and as salvor vessels possess great skill and power; and on this account sound policy prompts to the encouragement of their salvage services. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 125. [AMERICAN.]

192. As to the rules of apportionment of salvage to owners of steamers, see c. 16, p. 1895.

193. As to cases of such apportionment, see tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS.

(c) *Sailing Vessels.

194. It is a general rule that a party not actually occupied in effecting a salvage service is not entitled to share in a salvage remuneration. The exception which not unfrequently occurs to this rule is in favour of owners of vessels which, in rendering assistance, have either been diverted from their proper employment, or have experienced a special mischief, occasioning to the owners some inconvenience and loss, for which an equitable compensation may reasonably be claimed. The Vine, 2 Hagg. 2; The Charlotte, 2 W. Rob. 72; 6 Notes of Cases, 279.

195. The owners despatched their boats to render a salvage service, but were not personally present thereat. Held, that they were not entitled to be considered as salvors, but that some remuneration by way of equitable compensation was due to them for the use of their boats. The Charlotte, Ibid.

196. Salvage awarded to owners, master, and crew of a vessel, whose mate had gone on board another vessel on the high seas to supply the place of the master of the latter, who had been drowned. The Janet Mitchell, Swabey, 111.

197. When the masters and part of the crews of smacks are employed to perform salvage services, the owners of the smacks have a right to sue for remuneration for the detention of the smacks, even when the service is not dangerous. The Norden, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 185.

198. The crew of the A., a stranded vessel, having taken to their boats, in making for the nearest land, fell in with the B., also abandoned, and rendered salvage services to her. Claim by the owner of the A. to share in the salvage on the ground that the salvors were enabled to reach the vessel salvaged solely by means of his boats, sails and compass, and that some of the salvors were his apprentices, rejected. The Two Friends, 8 Jur. 1011; 2 W. Rob. 349.

199. As to claims for consequential losses by deviation, see c. 15, p. 1885.

200. As to claims for consequential losses by owners of fishing vessels, Ibid. p. 1887.

201. As to apportionment of the amount of salvage between owners and personal salvors, see c. 16, pp. 1895—1898, and tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, p. 1921.

4. Owners and Charterers.†

202. The crews of two ships belonging to J. L. rendered some salvage services to a ship, chartered to him, and he was bound to provide and pay the master and crew, and the cargo on board belonged to him. Held, that no salvage could be claimed by the owners, masters or crews of the two vessels rendering assistance. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

* (67) In a schooner built by the master and crew out of the remnants of the wreck, they conveyed the cables and anchors of the wrecked ship and a part of her oil to Oahu. Held, that the master and crew were entitled, as owners of the schooner, to compensation for such transportation. The Holder Borden, Sprague, 144. [AMERICAN.]

(67a) The salvors used a boat belonging to one of them in order to reach a derelict vessel. Held, that the use of the boat, and injury to it, were fully compensated for by payment to the owner of its full value, and that he could not claim on account of it any other sum beyond what the other salvors had. Hawkins v. Avery, 32 Barb. N. Y. 551. [AMERICAN.]

of whatever compensation they received, applied to the owners of the steamer for the job of getting her off. They were asked what would be the cost of sending the assistance, and answered 2,000 or 2,500 dollars, whereupon they were employed, and sending down two schooners with heavy anchors and cables, they, in about twenty-four hours' work, got the vessel off and claimed 15,000 dollars salvage. Held, that such a corporation could not have the characteristics of a salvor: that if their compensation were to be given as salvage, they could only have the owners' share of what would be proper salvage: that the compensation should be a quantum meruit. Decree for 2,500 dollars. The Morning Star, 2 Asp. 327. [AMERICAN.]

† (69) If by the terms of the charter-party the vessel itself is let to the charterers they should be considered the owners, and as such entitled to salvage, but not if the use of the vessel is all they pay for. 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 609. [AMERICAN.]

203. The charterers of a vessel are not, except under very special circumstances, entitled to the salvage earned by that vessel. The Alfen, Swabey, 189.

204. By the terms of a charter-party the ship was hired for thirteen months, the charterer to pay all expenses of navigation, but the shipowner to pay repairs of wear and tear or damage. Held, that this stipulation did not include damage by rendering salvage service, and that the charterer was entitled to salvage for assistance rendered to another vessel. The Arabian, April 5, 1855.

205. C. agreed to charter a steamer for the purpose of running between two French ports, and to pay all expenses of crew, repairs, and all other charges incidental to the running of the steamer, excepting only marine insurance, which was to be defrayed by the owner. The agreement was determinable by either party on giving seven days' notice, and the steamer was to be delivered up free of all expense to the owner in the same condition as at the time of making the agreement, reasonable wear and tear excepted. The master was not to be removed without the consent of the owner, except in the event of misconduct. The steamer, while employed under this agreement, rendered salvage services. Held, that C., and not the owner, was entitled to salvage reward. The Scout, L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 41 L. J. Adm. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 258.

206. In a case of salvage rendered by one ship to another, both being chartered by the East India Company, and sailing together in association and under the same orders, the salvage being very meritorious, the property salvaged £275,000, but the vessel salvaged having rendered efficient service to the salvor when in distress in the course of the voyage, £4,000 awarded. The Waterloo, 2 Dodson, 443.

207. Two ships were owned by the same person, and a third chartered by him, he appointing the master and crew, and they were all employed in the same trade. The chartered vessel fell into distress, and was assisted by the masters and crews of the two other vessels. Held, that their services did not exceed their duty under their contract, as the servants and agents of a common employer, and that they were not entitled to salvage. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

208. The owners of a vessel rendering salvage services, being also the charterers of the vessel receiving the services, are not thereby debarred from claiming salvage reward, unless the effect of the charter-party has been to divest the owners of the possession and control of the salvaged vessel, and to transfer the same for the time to the charterers. (The Maria Jane distinguished; The Waterloo followed.) The Collier, L. R. 1 A. & E. 83; 2 Asp. 473.

209. But though the claim is not barred, there may be such a connection between the two vessels as may affect the quantum. Ibid.

210. The defendants, after stating the circumstances, averred that, though the services rendered might be of the nature of salvage, yet as the owners of the salvaging, and the charterers of the salvaged, vessel were the same persons, no salvage was due; the court, on the question of the admission of the pleading, ordered the averment of no salvage due to be struck out, and the statement of circumstances to stand; as, though they would not bar the claim for salvage, they might affect the quantum. Ibid.

210a. A steamer, broken down, was towed some thirty miles by another steamer of the same owners. Fifteen of the crew of the towing steamer commenced a salvage action against the towed vessel, and arrested her in the sum of £5,000 on a value of £105,500, the court awarded the plaintiffs one pound each, and condemned them in costs, considering the arrest in so large a sum improper, and that the action ought to have been brought in an Admiralty County Court. The Agamemnon, 5 Asp. 92.

5. Associated Vessels.*

211. When the service rendered by one ship to another in a distant part of the world partakes of the true description of salvage service, the claim for salvage cannot be resisted on the ground that both ships were British. The Portia, 9 Jur. 167.

vage awarded to each of them, see 1 Conkling's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.), 306-310; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 250. [AMERICAN.]

212. When vessels proceed on the same voyage, leaving port nearly together, and assistance (semble, involving no risk nor much labour) is rendered by one to the other without any great deviation, the amount of salvage ought not to be large. The Ganges, 1 Notes of Cases, 90.

213. A slave ship on the coast of Africa was rescued from insurgent slaves by another slave ship. The court likened it to a rescue from pirates or a public enemy, and awarded as salvage one-tenth of the value. The Trelawny, 4 C. Rob. 223; and see The Ann, 5 C. Rob. 100.

214. Where salvage services have been rendered by one vessel to another, the master and crew of the salving vessel are not debarred from claiming salvage remuneration because the vessels belonged to the same owners. The Suppho, L. R. 3 P. C. 690; L. R. 3 A. & E. 142; 40 L. J. Adm. 47; 8 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 66; 1 Asp. N.S. 65; 3 Asp. 521.

215. Unless the services rendered were services which, under their contract, they were bound to perform. Ibid.

216. This is the rule laid down in the case of The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857. Ibid.

217. Although seamen cannot recover salvage remuneration for services which by their contract they are bound to perform, when salvage services are performed by one ship to another, and both ships belong to the same owner, the crew of the ship which has performed the salvage service is entitled to salvage remuneration, provided such service is rendered as a moral duty, and not by reason of any contract with the owner. Ibid.

6. Seaworthiness.

220. A steamer G. laden with cargo became disabled at sea in consequence of the breaking of her crank shaft through a latent defect in the welding, which it was impossible to discover. Her cargo was shipped under bills of lading, which contained among the excepted perils, "all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas and of navigation, of whatsoever nature or kind." Another steamer belonging to the same owners towed the disabled vessel to a place of safety. In an action of salvage by the owners, master and crew of the salving vessel against the owners of cargo on board the G., held—1. That the G. was in fact unseaworthy. 2. That the implied warranty of seaworthiness is absolute, and not merely that the owners will do their best to make the vessel seaworthy. 3. That the exception in the bills of lading had no application, the G. being unseaworthy, and the unseaworthiness being the efficient cause of the loss or damage. 4. That the master and crew were entitled to salvage, but not the owners. 5. That the owners must reimburse the cargo owners the amount of salvage awarded. The Glenfruin, 10 P. D. 103; 54 L. J. P. D. 49; 5 Asp. 413.

7. Crew not actually engaged.*

221. It has been the rule of the Court of Admiralty from time immemorial to allow persons who remain on board a salving ship to be considered as co-salvors, although the court has repeatedly in its award made a distinction in favour of those persons who have actually incurred the difficulty and peril of the salvage enterprise. The Sarah Jane, 2 W. Rob. 115.

222. When two vessels come up together to render assistance to a ship in distress, all the persons composing the

Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

(71a) When a vessel, in the course of a voyage, falls in with a wreck, all the crew who are ready and willing to engage in saving it are entitled to a share of the reward, although they may not have gone on board the wreck. The Centurion, Ware, 477.

(72) The master has no right to compel the mate to perform a salvage service, and if he does perform one by the order of the master without objection he is to be considered as a volunteer. Williamson v. The Brig Alphonso, 1 Curtis, Ct. C. 376. [AMERICAN.] But see No. 167, p. 1799.

crews, although a part only are actually employed, are entitled to be considered as salvors. The Mountaineer, ibid. 7.

223. Salvage awarded to owners, master, and crew of a vessel, whose mate had gone on board another vessel on the high seas to supply the place of the master of the latter, who had been drowned. The Janet Mitchell, Swabey, 111.

224. One of a ship's company who refused to concur with the rest in undertaking a salvage service, held not entitled to any share in the salvage awarded. The Baltimore, 2 Dodson, 137.

225. The crew of another vessel on board the salving vessel, and working with the crew thereof in effecting the salvage, are entitled to some, but to a very moderate reward; £50 out of an award of £1,500 allotted to them. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 269, 271.

226. Part of the crew of the salving vessel, who put off in their boat to the vessel salvaged at great risk, the sea being very tempestuous at the time, held entitled to a larger share in a salvage award than the remainder of the crew, who consented to the attempt, and risked for that purpose their common interest in the voyage (a whaling one) on which the salving vessel was bound. The Jane, 2 Hagg. 343.

227. In a case of salvage effected by king's ships, claim of the captain, officers, and crew of a king's ship which was not engaged in the service, to share generally with the salvors in respect of draughts of men and stores, and of the schooner and launch from that ship, supplied by them and used in effecting the salvage service, rejected, and their right to share limited to that portion of the crew actually engaged in the salvage service. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 61.

228. The commander of her Majesty's ship Cygnets, on the coast of Africa, met with a merchant vessel, the master of which and one of the crew were sick, and the mate was incompetent to navigate her. He removed the master and sick seamen on board his own ship, and put his gunner and three of his men on board, accompanying her in his own vessel, and occasionally taking her in tow, to Prince Edward's Island, where the Cygnets was bound. The vessels then parted company, the gunner and one seaman returning on board the Cygnets, the sailing master of which was sent on board and took charge of her to England. The sailing master and the two seamen were entered on the ship's books and received wages for the voyage to England. Held, that the commander was entitled to claim salvage on behalf of himself, his officers, and crew, in respect of such services; £150 awarded, the value of ship and cargo being £1,300. The Charlotte Wylie, 5 Notes of Cases, 4.

229. Part of the crew of a light ship, together with part of the crew of a fishing smack, performed a salvage service. The claim for salvage remuneration as regards the crew of the former was confined only to those actually engaged in the service, and not extended to the persons left on board the light ship. The Emma, 3 W. Rob. 151.

(74) In case of danger and distress, it is the duty, as well as the interest, of the passenger to contribute his aid according to his ability, and he is entitled to no compensation for so doing. He is not, however, bound to remain on board in time of danger, but may leave the vessel if he can; much less is he required to take upon himself any responsibility as to the conduct of the ship. If, therefore, he performs any extraordinary services, he becomes entitled to remuneration for such services. Dana's Seaman's Manual, 197. [AMERICAN.]

9. Owners of Vessels salvaged.

233. Owners have a sufficient interest to entitle them to oppose a claim of a joint salvor. The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 417.

234. If a part owner of a salvaging vessel has an interest in a vessel salvaged, his co-owners and the master and crew of the salvaging vessel may sue for salvage, the sum to which they are entitled being computed by deducting from the value of the entire service the share which would have been due to such part owner if he could have joined. The Caroline, 5 L. T. N.S. 89; 1 Lushington, 334.

235. The purchaser of the hull of a wrecked vessel, who purchases upon the express condition "that if he recovers the cargo for the owners he will be allowed salvage remuneration," will be awarded liberal compensation. The Augusta Jesse, 4 Jur. N.S. 227. [IRISH.]

236. A steamer having become disabled owing to an injury to her machinery, was towed into port by another steamer belonging to the same owners. The cargo on board the vessel salvaged had been shipped under bills of lading containing an exception against "accidents from machinery." Held, that the owners, master, and crew of the salvaging vessel were entitled to salvage remuneration in respect of the cargo on board the vessel salvaged, and that the master and crew were also entitled in respect of the vessel salvaged and her freight. The Miranda, L. R. 3 A. & E. 361; 41 L. J. Adm. 82; 1 Asp. N.S. 440.

Rep. 253 (Lower Canada); and The Flora Wilson, therein cited.

(76) When an individual performs a service required by law as a duty, he cannot claim salvage for performing it. The Wave v. Hayer, 2 Paino, C. C. 131. [AMERICAN.]

(76a) By the American law, if the ship is lost but part of the cargo is saved by the exertions of the crew, they are not entitled to wages, but to a reasonable compensation pro opere et labore in the nature of salvage for their services in saving the cargo, to be paid out of the cargo so saved by them. The Dawn, Daveis, 121; *Pitman v. Peters' Ad. Dec. 48; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 164, n. Practice (2nd ed.), 345, n. 107. [AMERICAN.]

(77) Seamen of the saved ship, in the ordinary course of things, in the performance of their duties, are not allowed to become salvors, whatever may have been the perils, hardships, or gallantry of their services in saving the ship and cargo; but extraordinary events may occur in which their connection with the ship may be dissolved de facto, or by operation of law, or they may exceed their proper duty, in which cases they may be permitted to claim as salvors. Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. Rep. 108. [AMERICAN.]

(78) If a vessel in distress be abandoned at sea by the master, and all the crew excepting one man who is left by accident or design, he is discharged from his contract as a mariner of that vessel, and may entitle himself to salvage. Mason v. The Ship Blair-eau, 2 Cranch, 240, 268. [AMERICAN.]

as salvors or labourers, according to the nature of the service. Bridge v. Niagara Company, 1 Hall, 423. [AMERICAN.]

(79) If the master for the safety of life temporarily leave the ship, the crew are not thereby discharged from their contract, and released from all their obligations to the vessel. When they have escaped to the shore, they are still under the command, and bound to obey the lawful orders of the master in all that can be done for the interest and safety of the ship, so long as there is any reasonable hope of doing anything for her safety or that of her cargo. It is only when the master has finally abandoned the spes recuperandi, that the crew are wholly released from the obligations of their contract. The Acorn, 19 Law Rep. 499; 21 Ibid. 87. [AMERICAN.]

(79a) Part of the crew of a vessel enclosed in a field of ice off the mouth of Boston harbour, voluntarily remained on board their vessel under circumstances of great peril to life, and rendered valuable services in rescuing it, after the master and the rest of the crew had, for the safety of their lives, abandoned the vessel and gone on shore, and other crews involved in the same peril had also done the same thing. Held, that such conduct was beyond what was required by the just and fair obligations of their contract, and that they were entitled to a salvage reward, but less in amount than would be allowed to strangers, for they still owed service to the ship under their contract, but not precisely that service which was rendered. Ibid. See also Beane v. The Mazurka, 2 Curtis, C. C. 72; The Schooner Speedwell, 21 Law Reporter, 99. [AMERICAN.]

(80) When a steamboat is in imminent peril, and a person, in no way connected with the boat, takes the charge of her as master, at the request of her regular master, who is disabled by sickness, and with the concurrence of one of her owners, with an injunction to save her if possible, and without any stipulation as to compensation or the time of service, the fact that he acted in the capacity of master does not exclude him from a claim for salvage; and the fact that it is not shown that, but for his assistance, the boat would not have been saved, makes no difference, he having done all that could be done for her safety, and having incurred great personal peril in taking the command. McGinnis v. Steamboat Pontiac, 5 MoLean, 359; 1 Newb. Adm. 130. [AMERICAN.]

(81) In a collision at sea the master and crew of one vessel at the first shock, fearing that their vessel would sink, went on board the other for safety, and while the vessels were interlocked, a part of the crew returned on board their own vessel, and immediately the vessels parted, leaving the master and a part of the crew on board the other vessel. The seamen who had been accidentally left on board their own vessel afterwards succeeded in bringing her into port. Held, that they were not entitled to salvage. The Star, 14 Law Reporter, 487. (Vice-Admiralty Court, Halifax, N. S.)

(82) A steamer was so severely injured by a collision at sea, as to be deemed in immediate danger of sinking, and the master, passengers, and crew abandoned her for the safety of their lives, the passengers going on board the other vessel, and the master and crew remaining near the wreck in their boats, employed in saving articles found floating. After a brief interval, the steamer not sinking, though full of water, the master and crew went on board again for the purpose of saving, and did save baggage, money, and other property to a large amount, one carpet bag containing in bank-bills 46,000 dollars. Held, that their services did not exceed the limits of their duty as the crew of the vessel, and that they were not entitled to salvage. Mesner v. Suffolk Bank, 1 Law Reporter, 249. See also The Schooner John Perkins, 21 Law Reporter, 87. [AMERICAN.]

(83) No claim for salvage can be maintained by the crew of a vessel upon the ground that by their services she is brought through a storm into port, sound in hull. Miller v. Kelly, 1 Abb. Adm. 564. [AMERICAN.]

(84) A whaler was wrecked on a reef, near an uninhabited island, in the Pacific Ocean, and the master and crew out of the materials of the wreck built a schooner of the burden of thirty-seven tons, in which the master and part of the crew sailed to Oahu in twenty-three days, where the master purchased a brig and returned and saved a part of the cargo. Held, that the master was entitled to extra compensation. The Holder Borden, 10 Law Reporter, 193; Sprague, 144. [AMERICAN.]

(85) The crew, with great labour, had rescued a part of the oil from the water, and placed it upon the island, and it afterwards came to a place of safety. Held, that the crew were not salvors. Ibid. [AMERICAN.]

(86) A seaman may be a salvor of his own vessel after his contract for service shall have been dissolved. He may be absolved from his allegiance to the ship by being deserted by the master and the rest of the ship's company. The Triumph, Sprague, 428; The Antelope, 1 Low. 130; The Olive Branch, ibid. 286. 238. On the wreck of the ship the seamen are bound by their contract to do their utmost to save ship and cargo, but the contract with the seamen may be dissolved by the abandonment of the vessel, or by the act of the master dismissing them from their employment, and they may then render services entitling them to salvage. The Warrior, 1 Lushington, 476; 6 L. T. N.S. 133; The Vrede, 30 L. J. Adm. 209.

239. The abandonment of a ship, under such circumstances, relied on as effecting a dissolution of the contract, must be clearly proved. Ibid.

240. A ship by accident in calm weather went on a rocky beach in the Canary Islands, beat heavily, and in half an hour filled with water; the master and crew immediately quitted the ship and went on shore. The next day the master discharged all the officers and crew, but it was not proved that they were guilty of fraud in accepting their discharge. On the same day some of the crew, at the suggestion of the mate, returned to the ship, and, working for several days, succeeded in saving part of the ship's stores and a considerable amount of cargo; the ship then broke up. Held, that there was no abandonment terminating the seamen's contract, but that the contract was terminated by the discharge given by the master, and that, for their subsequent services, the seamen were entitled to salvage reward. The Warrior, Ibid.

241. The owners of a vessel are bound by the special agreement of the captain to give extra wages to the crew who had signed ship's articles, for navigating a vessel home in a leaky or unseaworthy condition, if it appears that they were released from those articles, but otherwise he has no authority to make such special agreement, and it is void for want of consideration. The Christiana, 5 Jur. N.S. 63. [IRISH.]

242. A ship was, by order of her master, abandoned at sea, and on the next day her crew were put on board a steamer, and fell in with the abandoned ship. Part of the crew volunteered to return to the ship, but without the master, and were accordingly put on board by the steamer, and with the assistance of a smack and other boats the ship was subsequently brought to Corunna. Held, that the crew were entitled to be rewarded as salvors. The Florence, 16 Jur. 572; 19 L. T. 304.

243. Under ordinary circumstances the crew of a salvaged vessel cannot claim as salvors against their own ship, but they may be so placed by the acts of their master that their contract with the ship is at an end. They would then, if they performed salvage services, be entitled to salvage reward. The Lejonet, L. R. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 556; 41 L. J. Adm. N.S. 95; 1 Asp. N.S. 438.

244. The bark L. was so damaged by collision that her master, and all the crew but the mate, got on board the ship that did the damage. The mate remained behind alone, and saved the bark by his services and those of the steamship C. and her crew which he engaged. Held, that the mate was entitled to salvage. Ibid.

11. Passengers in Vessels salvaged.*

245. When there is a common danger, it is incumbent on all to assist. To entitle passengers to reward for civil salvage, there must be a voluntary remaining on board, accompanied with extraordinary exertions on behalf of the ship. The Vrede, 1 Lushington, 322; 30 L. J.

take off the passengers and crew from the wreck, and to save the cargo. * (89) A passenger can render salvage services to the vessel on board which he is a passenger, though his relation of passenger still continues. But to render him a salvor, such services must be of an extraordinary character, and beyond the line of his duty. Towle v. The Great Eastern, 11 L. T. N.S. 516; 2 Asp. 148. [AMERICAN.]

246. A vessel having received injury, but being in no immediate danger, and the passengers remained on board, and assisted at pumping her until her arrival in port. Held, not a salvage service. The Vrede, ibid.

247. Claim for salvage by a passenger (a lieutenant in the royal navy) rejected on the ground that where there is a common danger it is the duty of every one on board to render all the assistance he can. The Branston, 2 Hagg. 3, n.

248. A passenger who took the command of a ship abandoned by the crew and brought her safely into port, and to whom the owners acknowledged she was saved by his exertions, awarded £400 as salvage. Newman v. Walters (1804), 3 Bos. & Pull. 612.

12. Officers and Crews of H.M.'s Ships.

(a) *Generally.

249. As to the term "salvor" in the case of salvage services by officers or crew, or part of crew of any of her Majesty's ships, meaning the person in command of such ship, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 2.

250. Officers and crews of king's ships are entitled to salvage remuneration for personal risk and labour encountered in a salvage service, on the same footing as other salvors. The Louisa, 1 Dodson, 317; The Wilsons, 1 W. Rob. 172; The Ewell Grove, 3 Hagg. 209.

251. Persons employed in the public service have a peculiar duty to render aid to the trade of the country. They should manifest a peculiar readiness to do so. The Clifton, 3 Hagg. 121; The Mary Ann, 1 Hagg. 158.

252. The public force of the country is not to be employed gratuitously in the salvage of property of private individuals, to save them from expense. Government steamers are kept for the public service, and the officers in command cannot employ them in the service of individuals, and thus risk the public property, without authority or an indemnity for all expense and damage; nor are they then to hazard their lives or undergo labour without reward, though they are entitled to a lower rate of remuneration than private salvors. The Lustre, 3 Hagg. 155.

253. On a claim for salvage preferred by the commander, officers and crew (130 men) of a government steamer, the use of which for the purpose had been applied for by the owners of the vessel salvaged, and granted by the admiral on the stipulation that the owners and underwriters should be answerable for the stores expended or damaged; held, that such stipulation was no bar to their claim for reward for personal service, but only a reason for a less remuneration. Ibid.

254. Where salvage assistance is rendered by vessels belonging to her Majesty, and there is personal risk and labour, her Majesty's officers and seamen are entitled to be rewarded in a precisely similar manner, on the same principles, and in the same degree, as where any other persons render that service; but with regard to the use of the vessel (prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104)), a different consideration would apply, and a less remuneration would always be made on account of the vessel being the property of the country, and the property of owners under these circumstances never being risked. The Iodine, 3 Notes of Cases, 141; The Earl of Eglinton, Swabey, 7.

255. When the salving vessel is a government vessel, her commander cannot advance any claim for the service of the vessel herself, though a steamer, nor

* (91) The officers and crew of a vessel of war of the United States, agreeably to the general instructions of the secretary of the navy to all the naval vessels of the government and under the direction of the commander of the vessel, rendered services in towing into port an American merchant vessel, found abandoned at sea 140 miles from the port of New York, but no unusual peril was encountered, and only a delay of two days occasioned. Held, that the crew were not entitled to salvage. The Josephine,

2 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 322. [AMERICAN.]

(92) Quere, whether the officers and crews of the naval vessels of the United States are in any case entitled to salvage for services rendered to American merchant vessels in distress, notwithstanding the instructions on the subject given by the government. Ibid.

(92a) The officers and crew of a foreign vessel of war are entitled to salvage in causes civil and maritime, as other vessels are. Robson v. The Huntress, 2 Wallace, jun. 59. [AMERICAN.]

any demand at all like that of the owners of steam or other vessels who have risked their property in order to render assistance. The commander would only be responsible for any damage which improperly occurred to his vessel. The Rosalie, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 189; 18 Jur. 337; The Mary Pleasants, Swabey, 225.

256. In cases of recapture by a privateer one sixth, and by a king's ship one eighth, is awarded. By parity of reason and fair analogy, a similar principle may apply in cases of civil salvage effected by vessels in the public service. The Ewell Grove, 3 Hagg. 224.

257. King's ships may acquire a title to civil salvage, by assistance rendered to vessels in distress, even where that distress does not arise from the dangers of the sea, and where the assistance is not of a maritime kind; but such services must be very splendid and extraordinary to entitle them to a salvage reward. The Francis and Eliza, 2 Dodson, 117.

258. A king's ship held not entitled to salvage for rescuing a convict vessel from the possession of the convicts and of the mutinous crew and soldiers on board her, no great danger or personal exertion having been incurred; but costs of asserted salvors allowed. Ibid.

259. A claim for salvage preferred by a king's ship, after a delay of eight months, not in rem, but by monitions against owners and consignees, dismissed, the salvors being held (the salvage being very slight) to be barred by lapse of time. The Rapid, 3 Hagg. 419; but see The John, 8 Jur. 276.

260. To entitle king's ships to a salvage remuneration for services to a private ship, the services must be important, and even then the remuneration would be less than to a merchant ship, on the same principle as in war salvage. The Rapid, Ibid.

261. In a case of salvage effected by king's ships, a claim of the Admiralty (prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), for wages and victualling of the men, and for wear and tear of the ships, amounting together to £13,800, allowed, as not being opposed by the owners, but only by some of the salvors, the court holding that the salvors had no reason to complain of being so supplied; but it declined to give any opinion on the claim beyond drawing the distinction between the assistance afforded in ordinary cases by public vessels, for which nothing had been charged, and the appropriation of them, with additional supplies of men and stores, for 18 months together, to an exclusive service, as in this case. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 62. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Knapp, 409.

262. In a case of salvage effected by king's ships, the admiral of the station, who had contributed effective salvage assistance beyond the performance of his mere official duties, held to be entitled as a salvor. Ibid.

263. In a case of salvage effected by king's ships, claim of the master, officers, and crew of a king's ship which was not engaged in the service, to share generally with the salvors in respect of draughts of men and stores, and of the schooner and launch from that ship, supplied by them and used in effecting the salvage service, rejected, and their right to share limited to that portion of the crew actually engaged in the salvage service. Ibid.

264. Quare, is not every acquisition distributable to the officers and crews of his Majesty's ships and to marines in the first instance acquired for the crown? Ibid.

265. Could prize agents, the only persons authorized to make distribution in such cases, compromise any such rights without the consent of the crown? Ibid.

266. Could not the crown claim, in cases of salvage effected by servants of the crown in its pay and on board its ships, the amount of salvage and its appropriation for public purposes? Ibid.

267. Salvage services were rendered to a merchant vessel by a steam frigate of the East India Company, her officers, and crew. The court reviewed the considerations applicable to the claims of such parties, and pronounced for a tender of 5,000 rupees. The Lord Dufferin, 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. xxxiii.

268. A British vessel was taken by the French, who took out all the crew but the master and a boy, who, however, rose on the prize master and crew, and having regained possession of the vessel, made for England. A violent storm coming on, the master applied for and obtained assistance from an English frigate, by whose aid he continued to manage the vessel until it was thought dangerous to remain longer on board, when they all removed to the frigate. The storm abating shortly afterwards, the master and his assistants returned on board, and ultimately brought the vessel into port. Salvage of one-sixth (£1,000) awarded to the master and boy, viz. £850 to the master, and £150 to the boy; £500 awarded to the whole crew of the frigate, to be distributed as in a case of prize, with costs of all salvors. The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292.

269. A ship belonging to the Bombay Government, with a hired commander and crew, is in the same position as a Queen's ship with regard to the 484th section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), which does not allow any claim to be made on behalf of Queen's ship or stores. The Dalhousie, 1 P. D. 271; 3 Asp. N.S. 240, n. (a); Cargo ex Woosung, 1 P. D. (C. A.) 260; 44 L. J. Adm. 45; 3 Asp. N.S. 50; ibid. C. A. 239.

270. In a suit for salvage remuneration for services rendered by a vessel belonging to the harbour of Ramsgate, and vested in the Board of Trade under the Harbours and Passing Tolls Act, 1861 (c. 47), s. 32, held, that the vessel was not one of her Majesty's ships within the meaning of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 484, 485. The Cybele, 2 P. D. 224; 3 P. D. (C. A.) 8; 47 L. J. P. D. & A. 13; ibid. C. A. 86; 3 Asp. N.S. 478; ibid. C. A. 532.

271. The naval master of a Queen's ship sent a transport steamer that had been chartered to the government to the assistance of a vessel in distress. In addition to her own crew, the transport took with her a naval officer and some extra seamen. The master of the Queen's ship could not have ordered those on board the transport to render their services except with the consent of her master; nor, on the other hand, could the master of the transport have rendered them without the permission of the naval master. Held, that the naval master was entitled to share as a salvor. The Nile, L. R. 4 A. & E. 449; 44 L. J. Adm. 38; 3 Asp. N.S. 11.

272. Action for salvage by the officers and crew of H.M.S. D., of the Bombay marine, against the steamer A., wrecked in the Red Sea. The value of the cargo salvaged was £22,400. The service was of great merit, owing to the great heat and the decomposed state of the cargo of rice, seed, and hides, and the liability to sickness to which the salvors were exposed. The court, excluding the salvaging ship as government property, awarded £4,500 as salvage. The Azalea, 3 Asp. N.S. 240, n.

(b) No Claim in respect of Ship Stores, &c.

274. In cases where salvage services are rendered by any ship belonging to her Majesty, or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be made or allowed for any loss, damage, or risk thereby caused to such ship, or to the stores, tackle, or furniture thereof, or for the use of any stores, or other articles belonging to her Majesty supplied in order to effect such services, or for any other expense or loss sustained by her Majesty by reason of such services. Ibid. s. 484. See also The Rosalie, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 189; 18 Jur. 337.

(c) Consent of Lords of the Admiralty to Proceedings.

275. No claim whatever on account of any salvage services rendered to any ship or cargo or to any appurtenances of any ship by the commander or crew or part of the crew of any of her Majesty's ships shall be finally adjudicated upon unless the consent of the Admiralty has first been obtained, such consent to be signified by writing under the hand of the secretary to the Admiralty; and if any person who has originated proceedings in respect of any such claim fails to prove such consent to the satisfaction of the court, his suit shall stand dismissed, and he shall pay all the costs of such proceedings. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 485.*

276. But any document purporting to give such consent and to be signed by the secretary to the Admiralty shall be prima facie evidence of such consent having been given. Ibid.

276a. Officers and crews of her Majesty's ships, on obtaining the consent of the Admiralty, as required by sect. 485 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), may recover salvage from the owners of ship and cargo for services rendered thereto, and for salvage services rendered to passengers belonging to the ship. The Alma, 1 Lushington, 378.

See also No. 270, supra.

* (93) This provision applies to officers and men of the coastguard. See Special Instructions for the Coastguard Service, anno 1875, Cap. IV. No. 522, p. 127.

(d) Abroad.

277. Whenever services for which salvage is claimed are rendered to any ship or cargo, or part thereof, at any place out of the United Kingdom and the four seas adjoining, by the commander, crew or part of the crew of any of her Majesty's ships, the property salvaged shall, if the salvor is justified by the circumstances in detaining it at all, be taken to some port where there is a consular officer or Vice-Admiralty Court; and within twenty-four hours after arriving there the salvor and the master or person in charge of the property shall each deliver to the consular officer or Vice-Admiralty judge there a statement on oath, specifying, so far as practicable—

(1.) The place, condition, and circumstances in which the ship, cargo, or property was at the time when the services were rendered :

(2.) The nature and duration of the services :

And the salvor shall add to his statement,

(3.) The proportion of the value of the ship, cargo, freight, and property which he claims for salvage, or the values at which he estimates them respectively, and the several amounts he claims for salvage in respect of the same :

(4.) Any other circumstances he thinks relevant :

And the master or person in charge of the property shall add to his statement,

(3.) A copy of the certificate of registry of the ship, and of the indorsements thereon, stating any change which to his knowledge or belief has occurred therein; and stating also, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the then state of the title to the ship, and of the incumbrances and certificates of mortgage or sale, if any, affecting the same, and the names and places of business of the owners and incumbrancers :

(4.) The name and place of business or residence of the freighter (if any) of the ship, and the freight to be paid for the voyage she is then on :

(5.) A general account of the quantity and nature of the cargo at the time the salvage services were rendered :

(6.) The name and place of business or residence of the owner of such cargo and of the consignee thereof :

(7.) The values at which the master estimates the ship, cargo, freight, and property respectively, or, if he thinks fit, in lieu of such estimated value of the cargo, a copy of the ship's manifest :

(8.) The amounts which the master thinks should be paid as salvage for the services rendered :

(9.) An accurate list of property saved, in cases where the ship is not saved :

(10.) An account of the proceeds of the sale of the ship, cargo, or property, in cases where the same or any of them are sold at such port :

(11.) The number, capacities, and condition of the crew of the ship at the time the services were rendered :

(12.) Any other circumstances he thinks relevant to the matters in question :

(13.) A statement of his willingness to execute a bond in the form in the table marked W. in the schedule hereto, in such amount as the consular officer or Vice-Admiralty judge may fix. See the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 486.

278. The consular officer or judge, as the case may be, shall within four days after receiving the statements fix the amount to be inserted in the bond at such sum as he thinks sufficient to answer the demand for the salvage services rendered; but such sum shall not exceed one half of the value which in his estimation the ship, freight, and cargo, or any parts thereof in respect of which salvage is claimed, are worth; and the consular officer or judge may, if either of the statements is not delivered to him within the time hereby required, proceed ex parte, but he shall in no case under this act require the cargo to be unladen; and the consular officer may in any proceeding under this act relating to salvage take affidavits and receive affirmations. Ibid. s. 487.

279. The consular officer or judge shall send notice of the sum he has so fixed to the salvor and the master; and upon such master executing a bond in such form with the sum inserted therein, in the presence of the officer or judge (who shall attest the same), and delivering the same to the salvor, the right of the salvor to detain or retain possession of the ship, cargo or property, or any of them, in respect of the salvage claim, shall cease. Ibid. s. 488.

280. If the ship, cargo or property in respect of which the claim for salvage is made is not owned by persons domiciled in her Majesty's dominions, the right of the salvor to detain or retain possession thereof shall not cease unless the master procures, in addition to the bond, such security for the due performance of the conditions thereof as the officer or judge considers sufficient for the purpose, and places the same in the possession or custody of the officer or judge, or, if the salvor so desires, in the possession or custody of the officer or judge jointly with any other person whom the salvor appoints for the purpose. Ibid. s. 489.

281. The consular officer or judge shall at the earliest opportunity transmit the statements and documents so sent to him, and a notice of the sum he has so fixed, to the High Court of Admiralty of England; or, if the salvor and the master or other person in charge agree that the bond shall be adjudicated upon by any Vice-Admiralty Court, to such court. Ibid. s. 490.

282. The bond shall bind the respective owners of the ship, freight and cargo, and their respective heirs, executors and administrators, for the salvage adjudged to be payable in respect of the ship, freight and cargo respectively. Ibid. s. 491.

283. The bond shall be adjudicated on and enforced by the High Court of Admiralty in England, or if the salvor and master at the time of the execution of the bond agree upon any Vice-Admiralty Court, then by such Vice-Admiralty Court; and any such Vice-Admiralty Court may in every proceeding under this act exercise all the powers of the High Court of Admiralty; and where any security for the due performance of the conditions of the bond has been placed in the custody of the consular officer or Vice-Admiralty judge, singly or jointly with any other person, the persons having the custody of such security shall respectively deal with the same as the court that adjudicates on the bond directs. Ibid. s. 492.

284. The High Court of Admiralty shall have power to enforce any bond given in pursuance of this act in any Vice-Admiralty Court in any part of her Majesty's dominions; and all courts in Scotland, Ireland and the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark and Man, exercising Admiralty jurisdiction shall, upon application, aid and assist the High Court of Admiralty in enforcing such bonds. Ibid. s. 493.

285. Any such salvor of any ship, cargo or property who elects not to proceed under this act, shall have no power to detain the ship, cargo or property, but may proceed otherwise for the enforcement of his salvage claim as if this act had not been passed; and nothing in this act shall abridge or affect the rights of salvors, except in the cases by it provided for. Ibid. s. 494.

286. All bonds, statements, agreements and other documents made or executed in the United Kingdom in pursuance of the eighth part of this act, are exempt from stamp duty. Ibid. s. 495.

287. "Her Majesty's dominions" shall mean her Majesty's dominions strictly so called, and all territories under the government of the East India Company, and all other territories (if any) governed by any charter or licence from the Crown or Parliament of the United Kingdom. Ibid. s. 2.

13. Officers and Men of the Coastguard.*

288. Where services are rendered by officers or men of the coastguard in watching or protecting shipwrecked property, then, unless it can be shown that such services have been declined by the owner or his agent, or that salvage has been awarded for them, the owner shall pay in respect thereof remuneration according to a scale fixed by the Board of Trade; of Trade Instructions, Ibid. pp. 55—60; and see c. 16, p. 1893.

(95a) When they are employed for the protection of the revenue only they have no claim on the owners of the property. See Instructions to Coastguard, Ibid. No. 527, p. 128. Nor have they any claim in respect of the salvage of government property. Ibid. No. 523, p. 128.

(96) They can claim no expenses when the wrecked property protected is within three miles of the station. Ibid. No. 525, p. 128.

but such scale shall not exceed any scale by which payment to officers and men of the coastguard for extra duties in the ordinary service of the commissioners of customs is for the time being regulated; and such remuneration shall be recoverable by the same means, paid to the same persons, and accounted for and applied in the same manner as fees received by receivers appointed under the M. S. Act, 1854. See the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 91), s. 20.

289. Coastguardmen are entitled to salvage reward, for although it is a part of their duty to save life and property, it is a duty for which they should be paid. The Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 70; The Ocean, 1838, 2 Monthly Law Mag. Notes of Cases, 441.

290. An officer and four men of coastguard effecting salvage of life and property by means of Manby's apparatus, used from the shore, held entitled to salvage, both as to life and property, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 99, s. 19 (since repealed). The Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 74.

291. A vessel got on the Arklow Bank, and was lost. Part of her cargo was saved by forty-seven smacks, acting under the directions of the officer of the coastguard. The court considered that it was rather a meritorious service than a pure salvage service, that the crews were employed under authority, and were not really voluntary salvors. The Amazon, 2 L. T. N.S. 140.

292. The circumstances of the crew of a revenue cutter going on board a derelict for the protection of the revenue will not make them salvors. The Queen Mab, 3 Hagg. 243.

293. As to the apportionment of salvage among officers and men of the coastguard, see c. 17, s. 4, p. 1893.

14. Officers and Men of Foreign Government Ships.*

15. Agents.†

294. A person who under an agreement with the master of a stranded vessel had taken charge of the ship, and had succeeded in saving and warehousing a portion of the cargo, the vessel having gone to pieces, held entitled to a salvage remuneration, although his services were to be considered in the light of a meritorious and successful agency, rather than of salvage services. The Favourite, 2 W. Rob. 255.

295. An agent of Lloyds at the port of Swansea, having at the request of the master of a vessel in distress hired some men for the purpose of rendering her assistance, afterwards brought a claim of salvage against her owners. The court held that the claim could not be allowed, as the agent of Lloyds was only discharging a duty properly incumbent upon him. The Lively, 3 W. Rob. 67; 6 Notes of Cases, 206.

296. An agent of Lloyds at an outport who undertook, in the character of agent, to relieve a vessel from her difficulties, and employed the necessary persons to do the work, may claim as a salvor in the Court of Admiralty, although he did not actually perform in person anything strictly in the nature of a salvage service. The Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 183, 185; 7 Notes of Cases, 150; 13 Jur. 545, 967.

297. Such agent held to be entitled only to his disbursements and an allowance of five per cent. on the sum advanced, as a reward for his trouble. Ibid.

298. A ship was stranded in the harbour of Z., and to get her off it became necessary to unload a portion of the cargo, which was brought to Z. A., the receiver of droits at Z., and who also was agent for Lloyds, superintended the salvage operations, but in the latter capacity only. Upon the arrival of the goods at Z., A. seized and detained them for several weeks until £45 19s. had been paid to him for fees claimed to be due under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, s. 19. Held, that A. was not entitled to the fees in question. Cotesworth v. Walsh, 5 Ir. Jur. 253.

299. A person having been appointed, under a power of attorney of the master, "true and lawful attorney irrevocable, in the name of the master and on his behalf to use all possible means for the recovery of ship and cargo, and to perform all lawful acts necessary concerning the premises," and such appointment having been afterwards adopted by the owners of the principal part of the cargo, a claim for salvage made by such person in respect of services rendered to the ship by him, acting under such power, held, upon the evidence, to be limited and controlled, as made under such character of agent, and the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a claim of salvage made in such a capacity pronounced for. £225, in addition to £815 15s. 6d. disbursements, awarded out of £4,500, the value of the property saved, with costs. The Happy Return, 2 Hagg. 198.

300. Reference decreed to the registrar and merchants of the accounts of a party appointed agent by the master, and claiming also as salvor in that capacity. Ibid. 2 Hagg. 207; The Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 186; 7 Notes of Cases, 150; 13 Jur. 545, 967.

301. The claim of a vessel to salvage is not affected by the fact of her being in the employ of Lloyds' agent. The Traveller, 3 Hagg. 372.

302. The agent of a vessel will be awarded extra remuneration by the court quod agent, but not as a salvor, if it appears that, owing to the dangerous position of the vessel, after he became agent, he used more than ordinary exertion to discharge her cargo, &c. The Vesta, 4 Ir. Jur. N.S. 210.

303. The value of the ship and cargo was £1,600, the court awarded the sum of £50, or about three per cent. on the entire value, to the agent of the vessel, for extra services rendered by him. Ibid.

304. The court will refer a claim, if objected to, of agents' expenses, as a deduction from a salvage award, to the consideration of the registrar and merchants. The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 24.

305. The court will allow a claim as agent and a claim as salvor to be united under particular circumstances. In a cause of salvage, where the plaintiffs were engaged by the master to land cargo from a stranded vessel, £80 tendered over and above disbursements, which amounted to about £120, held sufficient remuneration to the plaintiffs, whether their services were regarded as salvage services or as agency services. The Cargo ex Honor, L. R. 1 A. & E. 87; 2 Asp. 445; 35 L. J. Adm. 113.

306. Where it is difficult to draw a distinction between salvage and agency services, the court will, under particular circumstances, allow the claims for each to be combined. The Honor, 2 Asp. 445.

(99) In America, however, the States are authorized to make their own pilotage laws, and most of these laws make it part of the duty of a pilot to assist vessels in distress, and either give the rate of extra compensation to be awarded or point out the tribunal which shall determine the amount due. 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 604. [AMERICAN.]

of their duty can never be made the foundation for a claim for salvage, and the difficulty and exertion being more or less in such a case can make no difference. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 153. The Elvira, Gilpin, 65. [AMERICAN.]

(100a) They take their chance for such hazards; they know that they must be exposed to them; and it must be presumed that the official compensation is calculated on the probability of such exposures. Ibid.

(101) There are three kinds of cases in relation to salvage by pilots: one purely salvage, where property has been saved from imminent peril, one purely pilotage, and one between the two, where extra services beyond pilotage have been rendered, and the pilot has become entitled to extra compensation. The Richmond, 4 Law Reporter, 20. (102) The barque R. off Holmes' Hole, without a rudder, was towed and piloted into that harbour by licensed pilots. She remained there fourteen days, and thence went to Boston. Value 50,000 dollars. The owners paid 40 dollars for pilotage into Holmes' Hole, 28 dollars for keeper's fees fourteen days, and 60 dollars for pilotage to Boston, river Humber, by any of the Humber pilots, and shall stand in need of any extraordinary assistance of such pilot, his crew or boat, then the compensation to be made for such assistance shall be settled and ascertained, according to the circumstances of the case, by the commissioners appointed to carry into effect the provisions of this act as to pilotage in the port of Hull, and other matters; and if any agreement for such extraordinary assistance shall at any time be made by any such pilot, such agreement shall be void; or in case any vessel shall, at the particular request of the master or commander, or other person having the command thereof, be piloted or assisted by any of the Humber pilots into the Humber, from any further distance than such as is provided for by the schedule hereunto annexed, every such pilot shall be paid for such extra pilotage such sum as the commissioners shall direct. See 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 33 (local and personal, but by sect. 94 to be deemed a public act).

309. It shall be lawful for the commissioners acting in the execution of this act, or any five or more of them, and they are hereby required, upon application in writing made to them for that purpose, to adjust any difference whenever any shall arise between the owner or master, or the agent for the owner or master, of any vessel whereof the anchors, cables, or other stores or materials shall be found in the Humber or the entrance thereof, and the person or persons finding, taking up, and bringing the same, touching the salvage thereof; and the award or determination in writing of the commissioners or any five or more of them shall be conclusive. Ibid. s. 54.

310. For provisions as to the payment of such awards, Ibid. s. 56.

311. For powers to make bye-laws thereon, Ibid. s. 65.

312. In case any vessel shall be met with in distress by any pilot (licensed under this act), and shall stand in need of any extraordinary assistance from a pilot boat or the crew thereof, the compensation to be made by the master of such vessel shall be settled by the board according to the circumstances of the case, and every agreement (if any) for such extraordinary assistance made by the and tendered 150 dollars extra. Held, that the services were to be compensated for as extra pilotage, and that the tender was sufficient. The Richmond, 4 Law Reporter, 20. [AMERICAN.]

(103) A pilot while acting in the strict line of his duty, however he may entitle himself to extraordinary pilotage compensation for extraordinary services, as contradistinguished from ordinary pilotage for ordinary services, cannot be entitled to claim salvage. In this respect he is not distinguished from any other officer, public or private, acting within the appropriate sphere of his duty. Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Peters, 108. [AMERICAN.]

(104) But a pilot, as such, is not disabled in virtue of his office from becoming a salvor; on the contrary, whenever he performs salvage services beyond the line of his appropriate duty, or under circumstances to which those duties do not justly attach, he stands in the same relation to the property as any other salvor, that is, with a title to compensation to the extent of the merit of his services, viewed in the light of a liberal public policy. Ibid.

(105) What a pilot does beyond the limits of his duty as such may be the foundation of a claim for salvage, but not such acts as are within his duty, however meritorious. Hand v. The Schooner Elvira, Gilpin, 60. See also The Wave v. Hyer, 2 Paine, C. C. 131; Hope v. The Dido, ibid. 243; Lea v. Ship Alexander, ibid. 466; Dulany v. Ship Peragio,

Bee, 212; Case of Le Tigre, 3 Wash. C. C. 567. [AMERICAN.]

(106) A pilot towed into port a vessel which had lost her rudder, held, that whether he was entitled to claim salvage or not, depended on the question whether the loss of her rudder rendered the vessel unnavigable. Hope v. The Dido, 2 Paine, C. C. 243. [AMERICAN.]

(106a) Whenever a vessel has been run aground upon a shoal, on the high seas, in charge of her officers, and she is relieved from imminent peril by other persons, it presents a case for salvage whether the service has been rendered by pilots or by other persons. Lea v. Ship Alexander, 2 Paine, C. C. 466. [AMERICAN.]

(107) The contract of a pilot with the boat on which he is employed is virtually dissolved when the boat, being on fire, is surrendered by the master to the master of another boat to save her. After such surrender the pilot may become a salvor. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421. [AMERICAN.]

(107a) The masters of licensed wreckers on the coast of Florida, although not professional pilots, are nevertheless deemed qualified in most instances in point of skill and local information to pilot vessels from inside the reef into the gulf, and are bound to do so when reasonably required, and when a reasonable compensation is offered them. See Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 230. [AMERICAN.]

pilot shall be absolutely void. See the Bristol Channel Pilot Act, 1861 (c. cxxxvi), s. 36.

313. For provisions prohibiting any pilot licensed under this act from making any claim for salvage without the consent of the board by whom he was licensed, to be evidenced by some writing under the hand of the secretary of the board, Ibid. s. 37.

314. For similar provisions as to pilots, and crews of life-boats licensed for the port of Liverpool, see The Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (c. xcii), s. 163.*

315. Pilots are not in strictness entitled to salvage; their duties are necessarily hazardous, but under extraordinary circumstances of peril or exertion they become entitled to an extra pilotage as for a service in the nature of a salvage service. The Sarah, 1 C. Rob. 313; The Joseph Harvey, ibid. 306; The General Palmer, 2 Hagg. 176; The Enterprise, ibid. 178, n.; The City of Edinburgh, ibid. 333; The William Ward, 8 Ir. Jur. 336.

316. The nature of the service and the provisions of the Pilot Acts have fixed a rate of remuneration on a liberal scale to pilots; and in return they are under an obligation to afford their assistance in all weathers, unless under circumstances of absolute danger to their lives. The General Palmer, 2 Hagg. 177, 179; The Rosehaugh, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 268.

317. Claims of salvage set up by pilots are stricti juris. Unless the circumstances of the case distinguish such a claim greatly from general pilot service, the court will construe it strictly with reference to the Pilot Acts, and award the remuneration there given as for pilot service only. Ibid. 177, 178, n.

318. The claims of pilots and salvors stand on different grounds, and their services are paid for on different principles. A pilot is entitled to what may be deemed a quasi monopoly. If there be one on the coast he must be employed. He has no right to be engaged in any other occupation, and he is paid, not in conformity with the nature of the service which he performs, but in conformity with the draught of the vessel. And it must be assumed that that rate is sufficient; but salvors who are not pilots stand in a very different position. There is no legal obligation on salvors to go on board, and they are entitled to be paid for their services, not merely as pilots, but also for any loss they may sustain in the employment of the vessel. The Cumberland, 9 Jur. 191.

319. Semble, that in an extraordinary case the safe conduct of a ship into port under circumstances of extreme danger and personal exertion may exalt a pilotage service into something of a salvage service; but in general they are distinguishable enough, and the pilot, though he contributes to the safety of the ship, is not to claim as a legal salvor. The Joseph Harvey, 1 C. Rob. 306.

320. Pilotage is confined to conducting into port a vessel in no state of distress or alarm, nor having any apprehension of distress arising from antecedent causes. The scale of remuneration to pilots has been calculated on such definition. But where the pilot's services exceed mere pilotage, they are to be rewarded for them as salvors, and not as pilots. The Elizabeth, 8 Jur. 365.

321. It is a settled doctrine of the Admiralty Court that no pilot is bound to go on board a vessel in distress to render pilot service for mere pilotage reward. His refusal under such circumstances would subject him to no censure, and if he did take charge of a vessel so circumstanced he would be entitled to a salvage remuneration. The Frederick, 1 W. Rob. 17.

322. Pilots are not to be compensated for a salvage service by mere pilotage, though, on the other hand, everything which is not pilotage is not to be construed into salvage. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 229, 304; 11 Moore, P. C. C. 318; The Galatea, Swabey, 350.

323. A fishing smack fell in with a steamer which had been on the sands, but had got off with some damage to her rudder, and had hoisted a signal for a pilot. The master of the smack boarded her and piloted her into harbour. Held, that the owners and crew of the smack were entitled to salvage remuneration as well as the master. The Anders Knape, 4 P. D. 213; 4 Asp. 142.

324. A person, whether a pilot or not, who takes charge of a vessel in distress, with the consent of her master, is entitled to salvage reward, in the absence of an express contract to the contrary. Ibid.

* (108) Other pilotage authorities have by their bye-laws made similar regulations.

325. Semble, it is immaterial whether, under circumstances entitling a person to salvage reward in any case, he does or does not hold himself out rightly or wrongly as being a pilot, so long as he performs the service. (The Frederick, 1 W. Rob. 16, approved.) The Anders Knape, 4 P. D. 213; 4 Asp. 142.

326. The fact of a vessel being in distress will not necessarily entitle pilots to salvage reward, nor will the fact of a vessel being undamaged necessarily disentitle them to such reward. The question is, whether or not the services rendered were such as could be reasonably expected to be performed for ordinary, or even extraordinary, pilotage reward. Akerblom v. Price, 7 Q. B. D. 129; 50 L. J. Q. B. 629; 4 Asp. 441.

327. A vessel was being driven towards sands. The crew were ignorant of the locality, and the vessel though she had sustained no damage would almost inevitably have been lost. Some pilots at the risk of their lives came to her, and being unable owing to the sea to board her, guided her to a safe anchorage. Held, that they were entitled to salvage reward. Ibid.

328. If a vessel out at sea beyond the limits of pilotage ground requires assistance to conduct her to a place of safety, that is not pilotage but salvage. The Hedwig, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 23.

329. A service which would be pilotage in the case of a duly licensed pilot becomes salvage as regards the reward, when voluntarily performed by others. The Rosehaugh, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 267. See also The Hedwig, ibid. 19.

330. A licensed pilot is not bound to remain on board a ship in distress, in any event, and at the peril of his life; and if he does he is entitled to be paid for extraordinary services as a salvor. The Jane Anderson, 3 Jur. 293. [IRISH.]

331. If pilots engage in an attempt to pilot a ship in such weather as to expose their lives to great danger, they may be treated as salvors, inasmuch as no pilot is bound to hazard his life in such an adventure, and if he undertakes it he is not to be debarred from receiving the compensation that others who are not pilots would receive. The Hercule, 8 Jur. 412. [IRISH.]

332. In extraordinary pilot services additional pilotage is the proper rate of reward. Double the ordinary rate of pilotage allotted by the court, with £15 nomine expensarum, in such a case. The Enterprise, 2 Hagg, 178, n.

333. A foreign vessel, fifty miles off the Dutch coast, being in difficulty in consequence of the boisterous state of the weather, and being leaky, called in the assistance of an English fishing smack, and engaged the master, by a written agreement, "To pilot and to sail ahead for £50." After four days' boisterous weather, during which the master of the smack worked at the pumps, the vessel was got into port. The owners of the smack refused the tender of £50, and brought an action for salvage services rendered to the vessel. Held, that the agreement was to perform, for a specific sum, more than mere pilotage services, and was not to be set aside because the weather became tempestuous, and by reason thereof the vessel was longer in arriving at a port of safety than might reasonably be anticipated, and that salvage was barred by the agreement. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 303. Affirmed on appeal, Halsey v. Albertuszen, 11 Moore, P. C. C. 313.

334. Parties acting in and assuming the character of pilots, and whose services were engaged in that capacity, held, not to be entitled to be rewarded as salvors; but compellable to adopt the rules and be remunerated after the rate of pilot services. On a claim for salvage by such parties, tender of £1 10s. pronounced for. The Columbus, 2 Hagg. 178, n.

335. If towing be necessary, pilots are bound to perform it, having a claim for compensation for any damage to their boats and for extra labour. The General Palmer, ibid. 179.

336. Application of a pilot for salvage by reason of his pilot-boat having been, at his recommendation, employed in towing the vessel for three hours, during which the pilot-boat sustained some little damage. A tender of £20 before and of £50 after action refused. The court and Trinity masters held such towage not to have been absolutely necessary, and that the pilot was bound to perform it, having a claim for extra labour, &c., and for compensation by reason of damage. Tender pronounced for, but, under the circumstances, without costs. Ibid. 176.

337. A pilot is not bound for his ordinary pilotage to take charge of a vessel in any degree damaged. It is his duty to take charge of the ship, but he is entitled to claim for salvage. The Black Sea, April 3, 1855; see also The Orion, November 14, 1850; The Liberty, 19 April, 1850; The Mayor, 19 June, 1850.

338. Pilots having gone out to a ship in a leaky condition, and rendered considerable assistance in working the pumps, and in laying out, and afterwards slipping and recovering, an anchor and cable, held entitled to reward as salvors, and not merely to pilotage remuneration. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 247; 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. i.

339. A pilot who had boarded a foreign vessel which had suffered damage in boisterous weather, was engaged by the master to take charge of her as a pilot, and brought her to a place of safety, held entitled to claim as a salvor. Application to foreign vessels of the rule respecting licensed pilots claiming as salvors. The King Oscar, 6 Notes of Cases, 284.

340. Claim of salvage by coast pilots and boatmen in respect of services, for which £15 had been tendered by the owners, pronounced against, and tender upheld on the ground that there had been a want of exertion, and of a proper attempt to get off sooner to the vessel, which was off the coast for two days before any assistance was rendered, and that the services rendered were of a pilotage nature only, there being no danger and the weather moderate when the salvors put off to the vessel. Salvors' costs allowed by the court, though condemning the neglect of the salvors to put off earlier to the vessel, and notwithstanding a charge asserted, but not satisfactorily proved, that the salvors had prevented another boat's crew from coming off earlier to the assistance of the vessel. The City of Edinburgh, 2 Hagg. 333, 337.

341. In a claim for salvage for having piloted a foreign vessel out of an unfrequented channel, the weather being fine, the vessel uninjured and preparing to anchor, knowing her situation, held, that a case of pilotage only, not salvage, was made out, and suit dismissed, but without costs. The Funchal Baptiste, 3 Hagg. 386, n.

342. A suit for salvage, instituted by a pilot, appearing to have advanced false pretensions, and to have misconducted himself, dismissed with costs, and the conduct of the pilot reported to the Trinity House. The Joseph Harvey, 1 C. Rob. 306.

343. A pilot attempted to exalt a pilotage into a salvage service, and sued for remuneration accordingly. The suit dismissed, and the pilot condemned in costs, the court observing, that it should consider whether it would not report him to the Trinity House. The Johannes, 6 Notes of Cases, 288.

344. A barque anchored off the Deal Bank buoy engaged a waterman who was not a licensed Trinity House pilot to act as pilot for a stipulated sum until the vessel arrived off Beachy Head. A gale coming on, the vessel slipped her anchor, and was navigated in safety by the waterman to Margate Roads. Assistance was also rendered to the vessel by other parties whose claim to rank as salvors was admitted. Held, that the waterman having assumed the character of a pilot, must be regarded as such, that he had not been required to act in any other capacity than that of pilot, and that, therefore, he was not entitled to salvage reward. The Aeolus, L. R. 4 A. & E. 29; 42 L. J. N.S. 14; 1 Asp. N.S. 516.

345. The exceptions to the general rule that a pilot cannot claim as a salvor, ought to be few and well defined. The services of a pilot cannot easily be converted into those of a salvor. The same rule of law applies to a licensed waterman when acting as a pilot. Ibid.

346. A pilot is not bound to go for mere pilotage reward on board a vessel in distress. The Cherubim, Ir. L. R. 2 Eq. 172; 3 Asp. 156. [IRISH.]

347. In a salvage suit by B. and others, it was proved that B., together with his co-plaintiffs, put off to a vessel that was in some distress, but that the services rendered by B. were only those of ordinary pilotage. Held, that B.'s co-plaintiffs, though they had performed some slight services on board the vessel, were in reality associated with B. their leader, and were not entitled to salvage remuneration. Ibid.

348. As to pilotage by other than pilots, see c. 6, p. 1844.

(b) Ambiguous Signal.

349. The court will consider the state of a vessel at the time a signal is hoisted on board of her in order to determine whether such signal is a signal for a pilot or for assistance. The Little Joe, 1 Lushington, 88; 2 L. T. N.S. 474; 6 Jur. N.S. 783; The Hedwig, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 23; 17 Jur. 977.

350. In the case of ambiguous signals, especially with reference to foreign vessels, if the vessel wants more than pilotage, any signal should be interpreted to mean a request for salvage assistance. On the other hand, if the condition of the ship shows that a pilot only is wanted, the signal used should be interpreted to be a signal for a pilot only. The Little Joe, 1 Lushington, 88; 2 L. T. N.S. 174; 6 Jur. N.S. 783.

351. An ensign hoisted in the ship's foretopmast rigging, held to be an ambiguous signal as to whether the vessel wanted salvage assistance or only a pilot. Ibid.

352. A vessel, she having sustained damage and two of her crew having received considerable injury, hoisted a signal. Held, to be a signal for assistance, and not for pilotage. When a vessel is out of pilotage ground altogether, and services are rendered in taking her to a place of safety, they are considered salvage and not pilotage services. The Hedwig, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 123; 17 Jur. 977.

353. Where a dispute arises as to whether a signal hoisted was for a pilot or a signal of distress, the fact is to be determined by the state of the vessel itself at the time. The Dosseitei, 10 Jur. 866.

354. If the signal hoisted was for a pilot only, that does not prevent the services rendered from being in the nature of salvage. The true question always is—what was the condition of the ship? Was she in distress? and the character of the signal hoisted is only one part of the evidence bearing upon this question. The Bomarsund, 1 Lushington, 78.

355. When a damaged vessel hoists a signal, the presumption is that it is a signal of distress. The Otto Hermann—The Albert—The Ella Constance, 33 L. J. Adm. 189.

356. An ambiguous signal will be construed according to the state of the vessel when the signal was displayed to determine whether such signal was for a pilot or for assistance. The Racer, 2 Asp. N.S. 317.

356a. As to signals generally, and what are signals of distress, and what are signals for pilots, see tit. OWNERS, pp. 1247, 1248.

17. Second Salvors.*

(a) Generally.

357. A salvor who is in possession has a lien, a qualified property in the thing

* (109) By the principles of maritime law, those beginning a salvage service, and in the successful prosecution of it, are entitled to be regarded as the meritorious salvors of whatever is preserved when wrongfully interrupted in the work by others who complete the salvage. The John Gilpin, Olcott, Adm. 77; The Mary, 2 Wheaton, 123. [AMERICAN.]

(110) Parties taking possession have a right to retain it until the salvage is completed, and no other person has the right to interfere with them, provided they are able to effect the salvage, and are conducting the business with fidelity and vigour. Ibid. [AMERICAN.]

(111) If salvors, in effecting a salvage service, themselves fall into distress and are relieved by other salvors, they do not lose their original right to salvage, but the second partake in the salvage only according to their merit. Second salvors cannot lawfully make it a condition of giving assistance, that the original salvors shall abandon all claims to salvage. The Henry Eubank and Cargo, 1 Sumner's Rep. 400. [AMERICAN.]

(112) When property is left derelict on the high seas, those who first find and take possession of it with the intention of saving it acquire a right to the exclusive possession, which others who afterwards discover it have no right to disturb. The Amethyst, Daveis, 20. [AMERICAN.]

(113) If the salvors have not sufficient force to effect the salvage without great risk of the loss of the goods, they cannot, consistently with the good faith which they owe to the owners, refuse the assistance of others who offer their aid, and who thus may become entitled as joint salvors to a share in the reward. Ibid. [AMERICAN.]

(114) The finder of a derelict who takes actual possession, not bare possession by an act of the will oculis et affectu, but actual possession by a corporal prehension of the thing, with an intention of saving it, gains a right of possession which he can maintain against all persons, even the true owner. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 136. [AMERICAN.]

(115) Should the salvors in possession of a derelict meet with the master or owner, and he should tender his assistance in saving and securing the property, this ought not without good reason to be refused, as this would be no bar to the right of salvage, and should it be unreasonably rejected it might materially affect the opinion of the court as to the amount proper to be allowed. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 137; The Bee, Wars, 339; The Amethyst, Daveis, 20; La Belle Creole, 1 Peters' Adm. Dec. 35; Justinian's Institutes, lib. 2, tit. 1, ss. 46, 47. [AMERICAN.]

(116) Persons who have taken actual possession of a derelict with the means and for the purpose of saving it, do not lose their right of possession by temporarily leaving it with an intention of returning and resuming the actual possession. But their absence must be with an intention of returning, and strictly temporary, and for a justifiable cause, otherwise they will lose their right of prior possession. They acquire no right of pos-

saved; and where a salvage is in the act of performance and under means sufficient, no other party can interfere with assistance that is unsought and not needed. The Maria, Edwards, 175.

358. Two fishing smacks, the P. and the C. described a wreck at a distance. The P. stood towards it, found it to be a derelict, and took it in tow. An hour afterwards the C. came up, proffered assistance which was accepted, and both vessels proceeded to tow the wreck together. Two hours after this a gun-brig came up and dispossessed the fishing vessels, and claimed as sole salvor. Held, that the question of merit or demerit on her part must depend on the preliminary question whether her assistance was wanted or not, and it not appearing that there was any necessity for her assistance, the court pronounced for the claims of the fishing vessels, and awarded two-fifths, after deducting expenses, to the salvors, the salvage not being one attended with great labour or danger; fifty guineas allowed to the crew of the gun-brig, the session, which they can maintain by a kind of continued claim by discovery merely, without keeping the thing in possession or applying constant exertions for its preservation and rescue. Notorious possession, with the avowal of the object of such possession, are cardinal requisites to the creation or maintenance of the privileges of a salvor. Where they do not exist any other person may take the property with all the advantages of the first finder. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 137; The Amethyst, Daveis, 20; The Schooner John Wurts, Olcott, 462. [AMERICAN.]

(117) Three fishing vessels discovered a derelict off the coast of Maine. She was boarded from one of them, and the three masters agreed to lie by her during the night, and tow her into port the next day. The three schooners hoisted signal lights and lay by in company through the night, and remained so near the wreck that she was seen at ten and twelve o'clock. At daylight the wreck was seen at the distance of a mile from the schooners, and at the same time another vessel was seen bearing down on the wreck. They manned their boats for the purpose of resuming the possession, but when they arrived they found that she had been boarded by the stranger vessel O., which had then come up with her. When the parties met a controversy arose between them, each party claiming the right of prior possession. Held, that when the O. discovered the wreck it was in the legal possession of the other salvors. The Amethyst, Daveis, 20; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 138. [AMERICAN.]

(118) If a first set of salvors voluntarily and absolutely abandon the enterprise cum animo non revertendi before its successful completion, they have no legal claims to salvage; and if the abandonment is voluntarily made, without any advantage being taken of their necessities by a second set of salvors, such second set may intervene and save the property, and entitle themselves to the reward to the exclusion of the first set, who may afterwards wish to return and re-engage in the service. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 142; The Schooner John Wurts, 1 Olcott, 462; The Henry Eubank, 1 Sumner,

(119) Although it may be the duty of salvors who have fallen into circumstances of distress and peril to accept the proffered assistance of others, who may thereby become co-salvors, yet such second salvors have no right to make it a condition of rendering their services, that the first shall abandon the enterprise, or give up their right to be considered as salvors, and any agreement to that effect would be deemed by the court a fraudulent advantage taken of their necessities, and utterly void. In such cases of joint service the first salvors are to be considered as the principals, and the second as auxiliaries; and the salvage will be divided among them according to their respective merits. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 142. The Henry Eubank, 1 Sumner, 400. [AMERICAN.]

(120) The smallness of the salving vessel is no excuse for breaking open boxes and stowing the goods in bulk, when there are larger vessels ready and willing to receive them, as co-salvors. Nor can a salvor be justified in exposing the goods to the risk of loss by rafting them, when a vessel can be procured as a co-salvor to carry them. In these cases it is the duty of the salvor to accept the assistance of others, without stopping to make terms. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 230. [AMERICAN.]

(121) The services of persons unjustifiably intruding themselves, enure to the benefit of the original salvors. The Brig John Gilpin, 1 Olcott, 77; The Mary, 2 Wheaton, 123. [AMERICAN.]

(122) How far the misconduct of one salvor may rightfully be held to prejudice the claims of his co-salvors, it is not in all cases easy to determine. The courts endeavour to discriminate between the innocent and meritorious, and the guilty and worthless, rewarding the one and punishing the other. But in cases of joint or associated service this discrimination cannot always be made consistently with either sound policy or justice to the owners of the property, but the innocent and meritorious salvor must be made to suffer for the misconduct or neglect of his co-salvors. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 227. [AMERICAN.] court inferring that the commander acted under an impression that his interference was necessary. The Maria, Edwards, 175.

359. Salvors in possession of a ship have a legal interest which cannot be divested before adjudication in a competent court, and neither king's officers nor any other persons are entitled, on the ground of superior authority, to dispossess them without cause; such parties claiming as joint-salvors must show an apparent, if not an actual, necessity for their interference. The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 417.

360. Claims of salvors who dispossessed original salvors pronounced against, the circumstances being held not to constitute an apparent necessity for their interference. Ibid.

361. The court is always jealous in maintaining the rights of original salvors, unless it appears that further assistance was necessary for the preservation of the property. The Charlotta, 2 Hagg. 361.

362. Salvors in possession have a right to refuse assistance, if they think themselves sufficient to effect the service. No other vessel, except from strong necessity, has a right to interfere in the salvage. The Effort, 3 Hagg. 167, 168; The Queen Mab, Ibid. 243.

363. Salvors obtaining possession of a derelict but not able to bring her into safety, can scarcely be said to have possession of her. The Berlin, 3 Jur. 34. [IRISH.]

364. If salvors are in possession of a ship and it is barely possible that they may be able to bring her into safety, they are not justified in refusing further competent assistance. The Cambria, 15 Dec. 1848. [IRISH.]

365. Semble, where the services of the first salvors are necessarily intermittent it is competent to other persons in the interim to come in and act as salvors. The Clarisse, Swabey, 132.

366. Salvors going to the assistance of a vessel in distress do not acquire the sole management of her. They only act under sufferance and permission, except in the case of a derelict. There the first occupant has, if equal to the service, a right of exclusive possession. He takes possession for the benefit of the Crown in the first instance, but subject to a liberal remuneration. The Dantzic Packet, 3 Hagg. 385.

367. Prior salvors have no right to interfere with the master in attempting to exclude further assistance, and such misconduct diminishes their title to salvage. Ibid.

368. The court, in allotting a salvage reward, reduced the amount due in respect of the services rendered, on the ground of the salvors having interfered with the master in attempting to exclude further assistance. Ibid.

369. In general, when the services of salvors have been accepted, they cannot be dispossessed by subsequent salvors. The Glasgow Packet, 2 W. Rob. 306; 8 Jur. 675.

370. If salvors are in possession of a vessel and their services have been accepted, and they can with safety to the vessel and facility discharge what they have undertaken, it is not competent to any other persons to interfere with them. But in a doubtful case the salvors will not be justified in refusing further assistance. The Glory, 14 Jur. 676.

370a. If primary salvors without sufficient reason reject the services of third parties offered to them at a moment of great hazard when the success of the enterprise is uncertain, the court will hold that they exercised an injudicious discretion and to a certain extent failed in their duty, and will abate their salvage reward accordingly. The Berlin, 4 Jur. 11; The Elizabeth, 8 Jur. 340. [IRISH.]

371. Salvors able to effect the salvage unaided, met a steam-tug at sea, and offered her a specified sum to tow the derelict into harbour, and the crew of the tug purposely replied in language calculated to lead the salvors to suppose that their offer was accepted; the court considered such language as an assent to the proposition, and as binding the parties using it to the acceptance of the offer. Ibid.

372. In a salvage of a very meritorious character to a vessel of the value of £4,600 by one smack which was awarded liberal salvage, the court awarded £100 to a second smack who went to assist, showing a willingness, but was of little substantial service owing to her bad sailing. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 255.

373. The master of a steamer will be justified in insisting upon his services being accepted to tow a derelict ship into harbour, if he conscientiously believes that the salvors, who have possession of her, have not means at their disposal to bring her safely into port, and his omitting to do so would be considered a breach of duty by the Court of Admiralty. The Gudrun, 5 Jur. N.S. 360. [IRISH.]

374. In conflicting claims of salvage the onus probandi lies on the salvors who come afterwards to assist those in possession, to show most clearly an adoption of their services, an incompetency in the first occupants to effect the salvage, or an absolute necessity for their interference. A mere acquiescence in, or submission to, such assistance of second salvors by first salvors under the influence of superior numbers, held, not to found the second salvors' claim, and the necessity, required to be shown, not to have been strictly made out by them. The Eugene, 3 Hagg. 160.

375. A first set of salvors who, while in possession, were assisted in the service by a second set of salvors, held, nevertheless to have a primary interest, and therefore a right to choose their own jurisdiction (viz. whether to proceed for an award by magistrates or by a suit in the Court of Admiralty). They having elected to proceed before magistrates, the second salvors, who instituted proceedings in the Admiralty Court, held to have acted improperly in so doing, and in not intervening in the proceedings before the magistrates as their proper course. Quære, if parties have equal rights, would a resort to the subordinate jurisdiction, when objected to, be proper? Ibid.

376. In a heavy sea a vessel was found by salvors stuck fast on a rock, her bottom beaten in, and her rudder lost. They succeeded in warping her off and keeping her afloat sufficiently to enable some of her cargo, which was bullion, to be got out of her. She then sunk, and the salvors left her, but returned, and in their sight she was weighed by others, who rescued the remainder of her cargo. Both sets of salvors held entitled to salvage, and to an equal amount. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 323; 15 Moore, P. C. C. 527.

377. When once salvors are in possession, they are not to be dispossessed by a subsequent set unless there be reasonable cause. The second set of salvors must show that there was no fair probability that the vessel could be brought by the first set into port in safety in due time. A vessel of 400 tons burthen with a valuable cargo, 70 miles from Liverpool, was, after having been abandoned, taken possession of by a schooner of 75 tons burthen. Subsequently she was fallen in with by a steamer which had been dispatched to her assistance. Held, that the steamer was justified in dispossessing those on board the schooner, but that the latter were also entitled to salvage. The Pickwick, 16 Jur. 670.

378. Two smacks and a steamer having for some days rendered salvage services to a derelict vessel bottom upwards, at length, owing to the state of the weather, lost sight of her. After some ineffectual attempts to find her, the steamer went away, but the smacks continued the search and again fell in with the derelict, and while a man from one of them was upon her, and another in a boat alongside, two powerful Government steamers came up and took possession. Held, that they were entitled to do so, but that all the first salvors had nevertheless a right to salvage remuneration. The value of ship and cargo being £2,400, the court awarded the first salvors £140 besides £210 expenses incurred by them in obtaining towing hawsers and other requisites for the service. The Magdalen, 1 Asp. 189; 5 L. T. N.S. 807; 31 L. J. Adm. 22.

379. A first set of salvors was by force of circumstances compelled to abandon the vessel. A second set of salvors saved part of the property, but at a time when the agents of the owner had given notice that no assistance was to be given by any person not belonging to the first set of salvors. Held, that the agents had a right to refuse the assistance of all persons, but that as only two of the second set of salvors were proved to have received the notice of the agents, these two only were not entitled to reward. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 407; 17 L. T. 204.

380. A set of salvors who rendered assistance during a whole day to get a vessel off a sand on which she had got, but without success, afterwards left, taking with them the whole of the crew of the stranded vessel, without expressing any intention of returning thereto. A second set of salvors then took possession of the vessel, and succeeded in getting her off the sand; eight of the first salvors afterwards returned and claimed to join in rendering assistance, which, however, was refused. The court upon the whole res gestæ was of opinion that the first salvors had abandoned the vessel without any intention of returning thereto, and that the second salvors rightly resisted their claim to join in rendering assistance, and therefore pronounced against the claim for salvage of the first salvors, but without costs. The India, 1 W. Rob. 406.

381. When salvors are on board a ship in distress, and their services have been accepted by the master, if before they have done one stroke of work they are forcibly dispossessed (without the concurrence of the master) by any persons who in any manner save the ship or cargo or part of the same, the second set of alleged salvors can earn nothing for their own benefit, but every act done and every service rendered by them must enure to the benefit of the original salvors. A claim for salvage made by the second set of salvors in such a case dismissed with costs. The Fleece, 3 W. Rob. 280, 281; 7 Notes of Cases, 534; The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 417.

381a. The Yarmouth lifeboat came to the assistance of the brigantine G., which was on the Scroby Sand, and took off her captain and crew, which, it was held, they were not justified in doing, and landed them. During the absence of the Yarmouth lifeboat the Caistor lifeboat came up, and endeavoured to get the G. off the sand. While they were so engaged they were forcibly dispossessed by the crew of the Yarmouth lifeboat, who, with the assistance of a tug, took the G. into Yarmouth harbour. No salvage nor costs were allowed to the Yarmouth lifeboat or tug, and £100 awarded to the Caistor lifeboat. The George, June 9, 1866.

382. Interference of second salvors with first salvors punished by reduction of salvage. The Clarisse, Swabey, 133.

383. A joint action of two sets of salvors, viz., the crew of the smack A., the primary salvors, and the crew of six other smacks, for salvage in respect of services rendered to a foreign ship in getting her off the Long Sand, dismissed on the ground that the primary salvors, who had boarded the vessel prior to her striking on the sand, had acted erroneously, and had, by the means they adopted, caused the vessel to get on the sand. On a subsequent application to the court on behalf of the other salvors, whose services had been rendered after the vessel had got on the sand, and who had not, in such services, recognized the prior acts of the primary salvors, £200 awarded to them, with costs, on a value of £7,500. Had the claims of the second salvors been founded in any degree on the original error of the first salvors, no services which they might have rendered afterwards, however meritorious, would have entitled them to derive a benefit from the error and misconduct of the first salvors. The Neptune, 1 W. Rob. 297.

384. In a case of salvage in getting a vessel off the Newcombe Sand, it appeared that in order to get the vessel off the sand both her bower anchors and chains had been slipped, and that the salvors after getting her off called in the aid of another boat to recover the anchors. Held, that the general salvage was completed when the vessel was off the sand, and that the getting up of the anchors formed no part of the salvage services, so as to entitle those who recovered the anchors to share in the general salvage of the ship and cargo. The Endeavour (Colby v. Watson), 6 Moo. P. C. C. 6, 334; 6 Notes of Cases, 56.

385. The court will look with considerable indulgence on the efforts of persons offering their services to vessels in distress, when there are no other individuals on the spot capable of rendering more efficient assistance; but different considerations apply to the conduct of individuals assuming the character of salvors when there are other persons at hand more competent to discharge those duties. Claims of certain fishermen for salvage in respect of services rendered by them to a foreign vessel on the Norfolk coast, when there were regular pilots at hand to have taken charge of her, pronounced against, the court and Trinity masters being of opinion that the proceedings of the salvors had been erroneous and injudicious, and of no benefit to the vessel. Under the circumstances, however, the court declined to give costs against the salvors. The Dygden, 1 Notes of Cases, 115.

(b) After incomplete Assistance of first Salvors.

387. Salvors having made great and meritorious exertions to save a ship and cargo, were at length, with her crew, compelled to abandon her. She was afterwards found and saved by a steamer. Held, that the original salvors were entitled to salvage reward under the circumstances. The E. U., 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 63.

387a. Semble, if salvors fall in with a vessel in the Bay of Biscay, and bring her to Plymouth, where in consequence of the weather they are compelled to abandon her, and afterwards another vessel comes up and brings her into port, the first salvors would be entitled to salvage for having brought her to a place where there was a much greater chance of her being saved. Ibid. 65.

388. Salvors may be entitled to reward pro tanto for performing a part of a salvage service, though others may complete it. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 409; 17 L. T. 204.

388a. A ship in a situation of great peril was assisted by smacks, but the essential service of bringing her away from the place she was in to one of safety was performed by a steamer, the services of the smacks being of no importance in the end, by reason of the steamer's coming up. Held, that the smacks were, notwithstanding, entitled to a large reward. The Genessee, 12 Jur. 401.

389. A derelict was found at sea by salvors, who were incapable of effective service, but remained by until a second set of salvors came up, who dispossessed them and brought the vessel into port. The court, on a value of £2,400, allotted to the first salvors £140, besides £210 for expenses for hawsers, &c. The Magdalen, 5 L. T. N.S. 807; 31 L. J. N.S. Adm. 22.

390. In a salvage of a very meritorious character to a vessel of the value of £4,600 by one smack, which was awarded liberal salvage, the court awarded £100 to a second smack who went to assist, showed a willingness, but was of little substantial service. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 255.

391. The steamer V. fell in with the C., showing signals of distress, with her propeller shaft broken, about thirty miles out of her usual course from America to England and took her in tow. The V. towed the C. some eighty-five miles, and some ten miles nearer her proper track. The hawser then broke, and, owing to the danger of the V. in again connecting the vessels, she having cattle on board, the V. left the C. The C. subsequently arrived safely at Queenstown. £200 awarded to the V. The Camilla, 9 P. D. 27; 53 L. J. P. D. 12; 5 Asp. 197.

392. The steamship S. having broken down twelve miles east of Scarborough was in twenty-four hours towed into the Tyne at different intervals by the steam trawlers M. and F. A. and the smack S. The master of the smack S. having entered into an agreement with the master of the steamship S., whereby he was for the sum of £20 to procure assistance, informed the M. of the whereabouts of the S., on condition of sharing in the salvage earned by the M. On a value of £10,552 the court awarded to the M. £200 in respect of the salvage and £100 for loss of profits and repairs, and to the S. £10, and to the F. A. £70. The Sunnyside, 8 P. D. 137; 5 Asp. 140.

392a. Five men, who had boarded a derelict and navigated her for three days, having hoisted a signal which attracted the attention of the B., abandoned the derelict which was worked into port by the B. Held, that the five men were not entitled to salvage. The Killeena, 6 P. D. 183; 4 Asp. 473.

393. See also Nos. 357—385, supra.

18. Underwriters.

394. The underwriters of a vessel and cargo that had been abandoned hired another vessel, and subsequently succeeded in salvaging the first ship and cargo. Held, that they were entitled to sue as salvors. The Pickwick, 16 Jur. 670.

395. Women may entitle themselves to a salvage reward. The Jane and Matilda, 1 Hagg. 194.

(125) A sloop, with a cargo of iron ore on deck, got on a rock in a dangerous strait, and was left by her crew, who went ashore near there. While they were there the vessel, by the action of the tide, came off the rock and drifted with the tide towards another dangerous rock. While so drifting she was seen by those on a passenger steamer a short distance away. The steamer hastened shore of any sea or tidal water situate within the limits of the United Kingdom, and services are rendered by any person, (1) in assisting such ship or boat; (2) in saving the lives of the persons belonging to it; (3) in saving the cargo or apparel of such ship or boat, or any portion thereof; and whenever any wreck is saved by any person other than a receiver within the United Kingdom, there shall be payable by the owners of the property to the person by whom any such service is rendered or wreck saved, a reasonable amount of salvage, with all expenses properly incurred in the performance of such services or the saving of such wreck. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 458.

397. Promptitude in rendering assistance is a principal ingredient in salvage services. The City of Edinburgh, 2 Hagg. 334.

398. The foundation of the authority and jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty is a service actually rendered. The Ranger, 9 Jur. 119.

399. No salvage, therefore, can be awarded where no service has been performed. Ibid.

400. Yet circumstances may justify the court in directing the expenses of parties attempting to render a service to be paid by the ship which had been in danger. Ibid.

401. Where, therefore, a vessel, having got into a situation of danger, extricated herself therefrom before the arrival of salvors, who proceeded to her assistance at considerable risk, claim for salvage refused. Ibid.

402. But costs of salvors under such circumstances allowed. Ibid.

403. Though a salvage service be not long nor in itself very successful in the issue, yet if the salvors render all the assistance their means will allow with risk and danger to themselves, they are entitled to salvage remuneration. The Santipore, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 234.

404. If pursuant to an order from a vessel in distress an anchor and cable were put on board her, and afterwards from the violence of the weather the vessel was lost, the salvors who put on board the anchor and cable would still be entitled to be paid for their services. The E. U., 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 64.

405. All services rendered at sea to vessels in danger or distress are salvage services. The Charlotte, 3 W. Rob. 71; 6 Notes of Cases, 229.

406. It is not necessary that the distress should be actual or immediate, or that the danger should be imminent and absolute. Ibid.

407. It will be sufficient if at the time the assistance is rendered the ship has encountered any danger or misfortune which might possibly expose her to destruction if the services were not rendered. Ibid.

408. Where a ship is in distress, and accepts the services of strange hands, the services are in the nature of salvage, although the work done may be of no great difficulty or importance. The Bomarsund, 1 Lushington, 77.

409. Negotiation by the owner to refer a claim of salvage to arbitration is no conclusive admission of salvage services rendered. The Martha, Swabey, 489; The Purissima Concepcion, 7 Notes of Cases, 151; 13 Jur. 545.

410. Nor negotiation of a defence on the ground of the salvors' misconduct. Ibid.

411. Salvors are only entitled to salvage on the value of the property at the port where their services are concluded. The George Dean, Swabey, 290.

412. Salvage services to a vessel and cargo bound to the Mauritius were rendered at Lisbon, and the cargo was transhipped and brought to London and there sold. The value of the cargo at Lisbon was ascertained by putting it at between £7 and £8 per cent. less than the proceeds of its sale in London, deducting freight and other charges for the voyage from Lisbon to London, and allowing a pro rata freight as far as Lisbon. Ibid.

413. It is not necessary there should

(126) A wrecker simply received on board his vessel goods, placed there by the ship's company in order to lighten the ship, and the master worked the ship off the reef by means of the sails. Held, that the wrecker was not entitled to salvage upon the value of the ship and the cargo remaining on board. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 111. The Alabamian, 2 A. R. 254. [AMERICAN.]

be absolute danger to constitute a salvage service. It is sufficient if there is a state of difficulty, and reasonable apprehension. The Phantom, L. R. 1 A. & E. 58; 2 Asp. 442.

414. A steamer having broken the main-shaft of her propeller, was compelled to take assistance, and was towed forty miles into port without danger to those assisting her. Held, that the services were salvage rather than towage. The Jubilee, 4 Asp. 275.

415. Where two vessels are in collision, and a salvor renders service to one, without a request from or engagement by the other, and the latter is thereby rescued from a position of immediate danger, such service being a direct benefit to both vessels, entitles the salvor to salvage reward from both. The Vanduyck, 7 P. D. 42; 5 Asp. 17.

416. The plaintiffs under a charter-party shipped rye on board the defendants' ship to be carried from T. to A. Owing to the negligent navigation of the defendants' servants, the ship was stranded and part of the rye was lost; but a considerable quantity was saved by persons employed by the underwriters of the cargo with the assent of the defendants. The average statement was prepared, and the sum assessed was agreed to by the plaintiffs, and paid by the underwriters. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount of such expenses, as, without they had been incurred, the remainder of the cargo could not have been sent to its destination, which was for the benefit of the defendants, and that the payment under the circumstances was not voluntary. Scaramanga v. Marquand, 52 L. T. 764; 1 C. & E. 100—C. A. See also No. 538, p. 1837.

417. See also, as to the principles of salvage, c. 1, p. 1781.

2. Acceptance.

418. If salvage services are rendered to a ship, it is not necessary to show that those on board either requested or expressly accepted the assistance. It is sufficient if the circumstances are such that if an offer of services had been made, any prudent man would have accepted it. The H. M. Hayes, nomine Golden Light and Annapolis, 5 L. T. N.S. 37, 39; 1 Lushington, 355.

419. A first set of salvors was by force of circumstances compelled to abandon the vessel. A second set of salvors saved part of the property, but at a time when the agents of the owner had given notice that no assistance was to be given by any person not belonging to the first set of salvors. Held, that the agents had a right to refuse the assistance of all persons, but that as only two of the second set of salvors were proved to have received the notice of the agents, these two only were not entitled to reward. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 407; 17 L. T. 204.

420. Prior salvors have no right to interfere with the master by attempting to exclude further assistance, and such misconduct diminishes their title to salvage. The Dantzic Packet, 3 Hagg. 383.

421. The owners, when present, are the only proper judges of the necessity for the continuance of salvors' services. Salvors having obtruded their services after notice for their discontinuance, compensation refused on account of such services, but salvage awarded for the services antecedently rendered, with a sum nomine expensarum. Ibid.; The Glasgow Packet, 8 Jur. 675; 2 W. Rob. 306; 3 Notes of Cases, 107.

422. A vessel on the West rocks, seven miles from Harwich, entered into a written agreement with the masters of two smacks for their assistance in getting her off, and into the port of Harwich, for £6. The weather was moderate at the time, but became more boisterous shortly afterwards. The smacks engaged the assistance of four other smacks, and effected the service agreed. A claim for salvage having been preferred by the smacks, on the ground that they had understood the agreement was merely for laying out an anchor, and resisted by the owners of the vessel salvaged, who tendered £6, and averred that the engagement of the four other smacks was unnecessary, and made against the express expostulation of the master of the vessel salvaged, the court dismissed the claim of the salvors, and upheld the tender, holding the agreement fully proved, that the first two smacks were bound thereby, and that the four other smacks must seek their remedy, if any, against their employers, the first two smacks, but gave no costs. The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 176; 7 Jur. 756; 2 Notes of Cases, 413.

425. When a salvage is finally effected, those who meritoriously contribute to that result are entitled to a share in the reward, although the part they took, standing by itself, would not have effected it. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 527; 1 Asp. 168; 5 L. 426. Success is the main ground on which a salvage reward is given. The Lockwoods, 9 Jur. 1017.

427. A salvage reward is for benefit actually conferred in the preservation of property, not for meritorious exertions alone. The India, 1 W. Rob. 406.

428. An attempt, however meritorious, to save a vessel and cargo, will not, if unsuccessful, furnish any title to a salvage reward. The Zephyrus, 1 W. Rob. 330.

429. To entitle salvors to reward, their services, however meritorious, must also be successful. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 521; 5 L. T. N.S. 434; 31 L. J. Adm. 46; But see S. C. on appeal, 1 Lushington, 525; 8 Jur. N.S. 753; 31 L. J. Adm. 210; 10 W. R. 850.

been successful in saving property. The E. U., 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 64; The Edward Hawkins, 1 Lushington, 516.

(133) The steamer P. was imbedded in ice in the Ohio River and in a condition of great peril; the salvor, at the request of the master and of the owner, both of whom went on shore, the former being sick, took charge of the boat, which was finally saved by the providential breaking up of the ice in the way it did. Held, that the fact that the exertions of the salvor did not save the boat, (she being finally saved by the particular manner in which the ice broke up,) did not deprive him of the reward due to a salvor, inasmuch as he voluntarily encountered the danger, and did all that could be done under the circumstances. *McGinnis v. (134) A vessel was floating down the Delaware Bay, imbedded in a field of ice, and was temporarily deserted by her crew, who feared she would strike upon certain shoals and be overwhelmed by the ice. The asserted salvors boarded her and claimed salvage, on the pretence that they had cut away the ice, but it was shown that the vessel avoided the shoal simply by drifting in another direction without their agency. Held, that the vessel had not been saved by any exertions of the asserted salvors, and that they were consequently not entitled to salvage. The Brig Dodge Healey, 4 Washington, 651. 436. There is a broad distinction between salvors who go out to, and salvors who are employed by, a ship in distress. The Undaunted, 1 Lushington, 92; 2 L. T. N.S. 520; 29 L. J. Adm. 176.

437. The former go out at their own risk for the chance of earning reward, and if they labour unsuccessfully are entitled to nothing, for the effectual performance of salvage services is that which gives them a title to salvage remuneration. Ibid.

438. But if men are engaged generally or particularly by a ship in distress, they are to be paid according to their efforts made, even though their labour and service may not prove beneficial to the vessel. Ibid.

439. A vessel having in a gale of wind off the North Foreland parted both her anchors and cables, requested a steamer to proceed to the nearest port and bring off an anchor and cable. The steamer engaged two luggers for this purpose, who, however, did not reach the vessel till she got to Gravesend. Held, that the luggers as well as the steamer were entitled to salvage reward. Ibid.

440. The court will look with considerable indulgence on the efforts of persons offering their services to vessels in distress, where there are no other individuals on the spot capable of rendering more efficient assistance. The Dygden, 1 Notes of Cases, 115.

441. A vessel got on the rocks off Folkestone, and received assistance from boats which were unable to get her off. A tug steamer also tried in vain. A large passenger steamer towed her off for a few minutes, when the hawser broke and she went ashore and became a wreck, but her cargo, to the value of £9,657, was saved. Defence that the salvage services were unsuccessful, and that therefore no salvage was due, not sustained, and salvage decreed to all the salvors. The Santipore, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 231.

442. The A. agreed to render assistance to the B. in distress and did render it for several hours, when believing from the conduct of the B. that her services were no longer required she left. The

B. then, by her own exertions, got to a place of safety. Held, that the A. was entitled to remuneration for the services actually rendered. The Nellie, 2 Asp. N.S. 142.

443. Salvage is a reward for benefits actually conferred not for a service attempted to be rendered. The Chetah, L. R. 2 P. C. 205; 38 L. J. Adm. 1; 3 Asp. P. C. 177; 5 Moore, P. C. N.S. 279.

444. A vessel after unsuccessfully attempting to tow another vessel succeeded in making herself fast to the other vessel's stern and in steering her safely to port. Held, by the Privy Council, that in estimating the value of the salvage services rendered, the period during which the unsuccessful endeavours were made to tow, ought not to be taken into account. Ibid.

445. A tug, at the request of another vessel, attempted to tow her into port. Owing to the state of the weather she was unable to do so and ran back with her to her former position. On the following day she succeeded in bringing the vessel into port. Held, that as the unsuccessful services on the first day had been rendered at the special request of the vessel the time so occupied (though not contributing to the final salvage) must be taken into consideration in awarding salvage remuneration. The Avenir, I. R. 2 Eq. 111; 3 Asp. 63. [IRISH.]

446. Semble, salvage remuneration will not be awarded for unsuccessful services however meritorious at the time, unless they contributed to the final salvage. Ibid.

447. Or unless they were rendered at the special request of the vessel saved. Ibid.

448. A steam-tug attempting to render assistance to a ship exhibiting signals of distress, may, in a case where such ship is afterwards saved by means of other assistance, be entitled to some salvage reward, even though her efforts have been practically unavailing. The Melpomene, L. R. 4 A. & E. 129; 42 L. J. Adm. 45; 2 Asp. N.S. 122.

449. When a salvage is finally effected those who meritoriously contribute to that result are entitled to a share in the reward, although the part they took, standing by itself, would not have effected it. The Rosalind, 2 Asp. 220. [IRISH.]

450. A ship driven from her anchors was drifting on shore. The master hoisted signals for assistance. Two whaling boats went to the ship's assistance and managed to keep her off the shore by means of warps until more efficient aid came up, when the ship was got into deep water and moored in safety. Held, that the services of the whalers was highly meritorious, and that they were entitled to material salvage reward, upon the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the case of the Atlas, "that where a salvage is finally effected, those who contributed to that result are entitled to a share in the reward, although the part they took, standing by itself, would not in fact have produced it. The Rosalind, 2 Asp. 220. [IRISH.]

4. Risk of Life.

(a) Generally.

452. What enhances the pretensions of salvors most is the actual danger they have incurred. The value of human life is that which is and ought to be principally considered in the preservation of other men's property; and if this be shown to have been hazarded, it is most highly estimated. The William Beckford, 3 C. Rob. 356; The Travellers, 3 Hagg. 371; The London Merchant, ibid. 394.

453. Whenever there is risk of life the court always gives a larger rate of salvage remuneration. The Ebenezer, 8 Jur. 386.

454. Where danger to life has been incurred by the salvors, and afterwards successful service rendered, the danger to and actual loss of life is a circumstance always tending to enhance the value of the reward. The William Hannington, 9 Jur. 631.

455. In the consideration of salvage cases the primary object is the danger of the property saved, its value, and the assistance actually received; the secondary object, the risk to salvors and their property, the skill, time employed, and other collateral circumstances. The Travellers, 3 Hagg. 371.

456. In a salvage service the primary ingredients and objects are the lives and property in jeopardy; but the risk of those employed, and the length of time, are also to be considered. The London Merchant, 3 Hagg. 394.

457. The Court of Admiralty, in considering the amount to be awarded to salvors, will estimate the danger incurred during the entire or any portion of the time occupied in the service; but it will not take into consideration a mere apprehended danger, such as might occur from a conjectured change of wind or weather. The Stephano Flori, 3 Jur. N.S. 418. [IRISH.]

458. See also c. 7, p. 1847.

(b) From Infectious Disease.

459. A vessel infected with yellow fever was taken in charge and navigated 3,000 miles to port by the mate of another vessel. The property salvaged being valued at £5,135, the court awarded £900, £600 thereof to the mate. The Skiblander, 3 P. D. 24; 47 L. J. Adm. 84; 3 Asp. N.S. 556.

459a. For similar cases of salvage, see tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, p. 1921.

5. Risk of Property.*

460. The main ingredients of all salvage services are the danger to the ship

* (135) To authorize a claim for salvage compensation it is not necessary that the loss should have been inevitably certain, but only that the danger should be real and imminent. Talbot v. Seaman, 1 Cranch, 1; 1 Curtis, S. C. Dec. 331; The Delphos, 1 Newb. Adm. 412; McGinnis v. Steamboat Pontiac, 5 McLean, 359. [AMERICAN.]

(136) Mere speculative danger is insufficient, but it need not be such that escape from it by other means was impossible. Ibid.

(137) Not only the actual toil and expenses are to be considered in a case of salvage, but also the imminent contingency that the service might prove unavailing by the breaking up of the vessel before any amount of property could be saved. The John Gilpin, Olcott, Adm. 77. [AMERICAN.]

(138) Whenever a vessel has been run aground upon a shoal on the high seas, in charge of her officers, and she is relieved from imminent peril by other persons, it presents a case for salvage, whether the service has been rendered by pilots or by other persons. Lea v. Ship Alexander, 2 Paine, C. C. 466. [AMERICAN.]

(139) A vessel dismasted in a gale, and lying at anchor on a bank in the open sea, is in a condition to have a salvage service rendered. The Independence, 2 Curtis, C. C. 350. [AMERICAN.]

(140) A vessel in point of fact for twelve or fourteen hours in a condition where her instant destruction was menaced, and the lives of those who might remain on board of her greatly jeopardized, may be rightly taken possession of by salvors. The John Gilpin, Olcott, Adm. 77. [AMERICAN.]

saved, and the danger to the ship which is the salvor. The Nimrod, 14 Jur. 942; 7 Notes of Cases, 570; The Persia, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 168.

461. The principle upon which alone a salvage service can be founded is the rescuing a ship and cargo from some impending danger or distress. The Mary, 1 W. Rob. 457.

462. The court, in considering the value of a salvage service, regards not merely the actual state of things, but what they might probably have been at a particular time of year and in a certain state of weather. The Monkwearmouth, 9 Jur. 72.

463. In a claim of salvage for approaching a foreign vessel in impending danger, a strong case must be shown that the danger was impending, and that if not warned the vessel would have incurred it. The Giacomo Tarabochia, 3 Hagg. 345.

464. Claim for salvage against a foreign vessel in proximate danger dismissed, the assistance having been unnecessary and refused. Salvors condemned in £5 nomine expensarum, the court holding that the claimants acted bonâ fide. The Henrietta, 3 Hagg. 345, n.

465. The danger from which a vessel is saved must be probable and immediate, not that which is contingent. Two vessels, the A. and G., having come into collision, were drifting up the river in the direction of a third vessel. A steam-tug succeeded in rescuing the A. from the G., and also in bringing the G. to anchor before she drifted on to the H. Held, that no salvage services were rendered to the H. The H. M. Hayes, nomine Golden Light and Annapolis, 5 L. T. N.S. 39; 1 Lushington, 355.

466. In a salvage suit a contingent danger should not enter into the consideration of the court in awarding damages. The danger must be existing when the salvage service is rendered, it is not enough that the place may become dangerous by subsequent circumstances. The William Ward, 8 Jur. 336. [IRISH.]

467. The owners of a vessel are not to be held liable for salvage in a case where there was no risk, injury or danger whatever, even although the alleged salvor towed the vessel into harbour, labouring under an erroneous impression that she was in a disabled or sinking state. The Union, 3 Jur. N.S. 462. [IRISH.]

468. An ordinary salvage service performed with skill, good conduct and complete success to a vessel in imminent peril of being totally lost, but rendered with no risk or danger to the salvors, the court awarded to the salvors a sum of £375, or one-fourth of the admitted value and costs. The Rothsay Castle, 2 Asp. 206.

469. Salvage services of a highly meritorious character having been performed by salvors, in saving the lives of the crew and the ship and cargo valued at £46,000, the Admiralty Court awarded £1,000 as salvage for such services. On appeal, held that the sum was insufficient, and the remuneration increased to £2,000 in consideration (1) of the great danger the salvors incurred; and (2) the fact of the saving of lives and the value of the ship and cargo. The Glenduror, 8 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 22.

8. Information or Advice.*

471. For provisions that in cases of concealed wreck being seized by receiver

(141) The American ship Constitution, on a voyage from Havre to Charleston, South Carolina, having on board a box of bullion, foundered at sea. The box was taken on board of the Danish brig Urania, bound to Copenhagen; and three days afterwards, while at sea, was transferred to the Constellation, an American ship, bound to the United States. Held, that the bullion, while on board of the Urania, was not in that peril required by law to make it the subject of salvage. Box of Bullion, Sprague, 57. [AMERICAN.]

(142) Held, further, that the taking it on board of the Constellation was not a continuation of salvage service. Ibid.

(143) There being no agreement to transfer any right of the Urania to the Constellation, and the captain of the former having declared himself fully compensated, no such transfer was created by implication of law. Ibid.

* (144) If two vessels, A. and B., are sailing nearly in the same direction, and B. is taking a course which would cause her to strike a hidden reef of rocks unknown to those on board her but known to those on board the A., who warn the B. of the danger, and in consequence of that warning the mas-of wreck in consequence of information given to him, the informer shall be entitled by way of salvage to such sum, not exceeding £5, as the receiver may allow. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 451.

472. For rewards to persons discovering casks of spirits floating or sunk in the sea, and giving information thereon to officers of customs or other persons duly authorized to make seizure thereof, see 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 216.

473. A claim of salvage cannot be grafted on the local ignorance of a master of a foreign vessel. The Vrouw Margaretha, 4 C. Rob. 104.

474. Ignorance of the locality, though in the case of a foreign master, is, under certain circumstances, no defence against a claim for salvage, but the reverse. The Cumberland, 9 Jur. 191; and The Eugenie, note thereto, 192.

475. The ignorance of a foreign master, where nothing is required but the simple assistance of a pilot, would not tend to augment the rate of salvage, nor would the ignorance of an English master, because it is the business of a pilot to supply any deficiency of the master's knowledge. Ignorance of the locality, however, under other circumstances, is not an unimportant matter for consideration, because when the question is what would be the probable fate of a vessel if compelled to keep at sea, the master being in entire ignorance of the dangers with which she was beset, then undoubtedly the ignorance of the persons on board adds to all the ordinary and natural perils in which the vessel would be placed. The Eugenie, 3 Notes of Cases, 430.

476. The ignorance of a foreign master as to the locality is not, standing alone, a ground for pilots or others to claim salvage for offering the necessary advice or instructions; but this is so only when the advice given is merely that belonging to pilotage. The case is different if the ship be beleaguered with concealed and manifold dangers, and by a prompt and courageous effort information is brought out from land, in consequence of which fatal mistakes are prevented, and a way of safety opened to the vessel and crew. The Hebe, 7 Notes of Cases, Sup. ix. [IRISH.]

477. A French brig, bound to St. Petersburg, being in the Bristol Channel, the master having lost his course and being ignorant of the locality, was at the entrance of Caermarthen Bay approached by a fishing boat, from which a man was put on board, under whose directions the brig was navigated to Tenby Roads. The value of ship and cargo was £3,000, and a tender of £5 was made by the owners; the court, taking into consideration the master's ignorance of the locality, that the sails were out of repair, that the vessel was therefore not altogether free from danger, that the persons boarding her were not pilots, and that no duty was therefore imposed on them, awarded, though estimating the service as very little beyond pilotage, £12, with costs. The Eugenie, 3 Notes of Cases, 430.

478. Advice may, in certain circumstances, constitute a salvage service. The Eliza, 1 Lushington, 536.

479. A vessel ran on shore by mistaking her course, and being in danger hoisted a signal of distress. A pilot's cutter came up, and hailed the vessel to adopt certain measures. The vessel acted accordingly and came off the shore. Held, that the service so rendered by the cutter was a salvage service. Ibid.

480. An ambiguous signal had been hoisted, which, when the alleged salvors reached the vessel, proved to be only a signal for a pilot. They gave some information to the vessel which had been in difficulties, but had been relieved from them, and was not then in a disabled condition. Claim in respect of salvage rejected, but, by reason of the ambiguous signal, without costs. The Little Joe, 2 L. T. N.S. 473; 1 Lushington, 88; 6 Jur. N.S. 783.

481. It is very doubtful whether, even if needed, the mere giving of information and advice to a foreign vessel as to the locality would amount to a salvage service. Ibid.

482. The fact of an officer of the Royal Navy having given directions to the salvors, held not to detract from the merit of their service. The Persia, 1 Spink's Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 166.

483. A steam-tug, having a vessel in tow, went out of her course to inform another steam-tug that she had seen a ship ashore. The second steam-tug having gone and rescued the ship, held, that both steam-tugs were entitled to salvage. The Sarah, 3 P. D. 39; 3 Asp. N.S. 542.

484. A steamer, seeing a vessel in a dangerous position, approached her and properly advised her to port. A pilot had just before boarded the vessel and had given the same advice, which was acted upon. Held, that the steamer could not claim salvage remuneration. The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. P. C. 58; 3 Asp. N.S. 113.

9. Sending Actual Salvors.*

485. A person merely hiring labourers to assist in the unloading of a stranded vessel, although entitled to his disbursements and to some remuneration for his superintendence, will not be entitled to claim as a salvor. The Watt, 2 W. Rob. 70.

486. Persons not personally engaged in a salvage service but contributing thereto by furnishing boats or other articles, are entitled to remuneration, not as salvors, but for the use of the articles supplied. The Charlotte, 6 Notes of Cases, 282; 3 W. Rob. 68.

487. The claim for salvage of an officer of the coastguard, who sent his men and boat, but did not assist in person, rejected. The Vine, 2 Hagg. 1.

488. A magistrate sent a few men to a derelict vessel to assist in righting her and to keep off plunderers. Claim by him for salvage rejected. The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 45.

489. As a general rule, persons who remain on shore, but hire a vessel for the purpose of performing a salvage service, are not entitled to sue as salvors. The Pickwick, 16 Jur. 670.

490. The underwriters of a vessel and cargo that had been left by her master and crew hired another vessel, and subsequently succeeded in salvaging the first ship and cargo. Held, entitled to sue as salvors. Ibid.

491. An agent of Lloyd's at the port of Swansea, having at the request of the master of a vessel in distress hired some men for the purpose of rendering her assistance, afterwards brought a claim of salvage against her owners. Held, that the claim could not be allowed, as the agent of Lloyd's was only discharging a duty properly incumbent upon him. The Lively, 3 W. Rob. 67; 6 Notes of Cases, 206.

492. Salvage awarded in the Court of Admiralty to a magistrate in Ireland as for salvage services, which consisted in his sending police officers to protect the cargo of a stranded vessel. Cited in the Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 184; 7 Notes of Cases, 150; 13 Jur. 967.

493. Necessary services rendered by vessels under orders of the salvaging vessel in carrying out the requests of the vessel salvaged are looked upon as part of the same salvage service. The Undaunted, 1 Lushington, 92; 2 L. T. N.S. 520; 29 L. J. Adm. 176.

494. A vessel, having in a gale of wind off the North Foreland parted both her anchors and cables, requested a steamer to proceed to the nearest port and bring off an anchor and cable. The steamer engaged two luggers for this purpose, which, however, did not reach the vessel till she got to Gravesend. Held, that the luggers as well as the steamer were entitled to salvage reward. Ibid.

495. The master and crew of a fishing smack boarded with some risk and peril a vessel in danger and distress, and conveyed a message to a steamer to go out of port to her assistance, and the master of the smack returned with the steamer and accompanied the vessel to London. Held, that the master and crew of the smack were entitled to salvage, and £40 awarded. The Ocean, 2 W. Rob. 91.

496. The court will consider the crew of a small boat which could not of itself effect the salvage, in the light of salvors, if it appears that they were the means of communicating the fact to the salvaging vessel, and directing her in the course she should take to recover the derelict. The Carrier Pigeon, 4 Ir. Jur. N.S. 99; 33 L. T. 19.

497. Remuneration awarded to a messenger who had gone a distance of twelve miles to procure salvage assistance to a

(146) The master of a steamer hoisted his flag as a signal to speak a wrecking vessel, stopped the steamer one minute, without changing his course, and informed the master of the wrecker that a ship was ashore at a particular place on the reef, by reason of which information the ship received valuable assistance ten hours earlier than she would otherwise have done. Held, a salvage service, and fifty dollars awarded. Ibid.

vessel. The Elizabeth Bibby, 3 Ir. Jur. 257.

498. A steam-tug, having a vessel in tow, saw a ship ashore and went out of her way to inform, and informed, another steam-tug of what she had seen. The other steam-tug thereupon proceeded to the stranded ship and towed her into safety. Held, that the owners, masters, and crews of both steam-tugs were entitled to salvage. The Sarah, 3 P. D. 39.

10. Supplying Master or Men.

(a) Generally.

500. Salvage claimed by owners, master, and crew of a vessel, whose mate had gone on board another vessel on the high seas to supply the place of the master of the latter, who had been drowned. The owners had given the mate £200. The court awarded to the claimants £1,000. The Janet Mitchell, Swabey, 111. See also The Nicolina, 2 W. Rob. 175.

501. The crew of the R., on the high seas, having been much reduced by death and sickness, another vessel, the A., supplied the deficiency by two from among her own crew. The owners of the R. gave the two men £20 each, and denied further liability. Held, in an action by the rest of the crew of the A., that the service on their part was of the nature of salvage. The value of the property saved being £9,350, the court awarded £150 to be apportioned, £60 to the owners, £25 to the master, and the remainder among the crew. The Roe, Swabey, 84.

502. A vessel, which had received some injury from bad weather, placed several hands on board a derelict. Held, that the parties on board the saving vessel were entitled to extra remuneration for the additional labour imposed upon them in consequence of the absence of the hands transferred to the distressed ship. The Sansone, 3 Jur. 258. [IRISH.]

503. In a case of salvage effected by king's ships, claim of the captain, officers, and crew of a king's ship which was not engaged in the service, to share generally with the salvors in respect of draughts of men and stores, and of the schooner and launch from that ship, supplied by them and used in effecting the salvage service, rejected, and their right to share limited to that portion of the crew actually engaged in the salvage service. The Thesis, 3 Hagg. 61.

504. The commander of her Majesty's ship Cygnat, on the coast of Africa, having met with a merchant vessel, the master of which and one of the crew were sick, and the mate was incompetent to navigate her, removed the master and sick seaman on board his own ship, and put his gunner and three of his men on board, accompanying her in his own vessel, and occasionally taking her in tow, to Prince Edward's Island, where the Cygnat was bound. The vessels then parted company, the gunner and one seaman returning on board the Cygnat, the sailing master of which was sent on board and took charge of her to England. The sailing master and the two seamen were entered on the ship's books and received wages for the voyage to England. Held, that the commander was entitled to claim salvage on behalf of himself, his officers, and crew, in respect of such services; £140 awarded, the value of ship and cargo being £1,300. The Charlotte Wylie, 5 Notes of Cases, 4.

504a. The vessel C. being in distress, two of the crew of the L. were sent on board to assist in navigating her. Held, that the services rendered being of the nature of salvage, the owners, master, and crew of the L. were entitled to salvage reward in addition to the two men who had been sent on board the C. The Charles, L. R. 3 A. & E. 536; 1 Asp. N.S. 296.

val of a third boat she was drawn off by the two, after which the flames were extinguished by the last comer alone. Held, that the last was the only salvor, the mere drawing off * surrounding warehouses which were in flames, was towed thence by a steamer to a place of safety. Held, that a valuable salvage service had been performed by the steamer. The Tees, The Pentucket, 1 Lushington, 505.

509. Salvage awarded for the saving of lives and property from a burning ship at Spithead. The Eastern Monarch, 1 Lushington, 81.

510. Salvage awarded, for assisting to extinguish the flames in a vessel which had taken fire by spontaneous combustion, and for towing her into port. The Rosalie, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 188.

14. Transshipment.

511. The court looks with jealousy on salvage by transshipment, as leading to deception on owners and underwriters. It is to be vigilantly watched how far a ship giving assistance in distress adopts the best measures. The Hope, 3 Hagg. 424.

512. Mere transshipment of cargo is not a salvage service, and the Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for reward for such a service, but aliter, if the cargo were in danger at the time. Such service then assumes a salvage character, not affected by the degree of danger. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 231.

513. On salvage of the crew and portion of cargo (value £7,000) by transshipment (on board a valuable Indiaman) from an American ship in a sinking state, about 300 miles eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, £2,000 awarded. The Hope, 3 Hagg. 423.

514. On claim for salvage effected by transshipment of a portion (of the value of £24,000) of a cargo of tea (of the value of £40,000) by three large steamers of the value of upwards of £30,000, with crews of fifty-eight men in all, and engaged, one for six days, another for four days, and another for three days, the cargo being at the time in danger of being lost, or at least much damaged, from the ship having struck on the rocks, £1,500 awarded on the cargo saved and the freight thereof. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 229.

515. In a case of meritorious salvage by transshipment a moiety decreed to the salvors, costs and expenses having been first deducted from the whole fund. The Columbia, 3 Hagg. 428.

15. Towage.

(a) *Generally.

516. Ordinary towage is that which takes place for the purpose of expediting a vessel on her voyage. The Kinglock, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 265.

517. A towage service may be described as the employment of one vessel to expedite the voyage of another when nothing more is required than the accelerating of her progress. The Princess Alice, 3 W. Rob. 140; 6 Notes of Cases, 585.

(148) A captain, whose vessel was on fire, surrendered her into the hands of salvors, to save her if they could, but was present with his crew when the services were performed. Held, that this was not such abandonment as would make it a case of derelict. The Delphos, 1 Newb. Adm. 412. [AMERICAN.]

(149) An abandonment of a burning steamboat on the Mississippi by the master to another steamboat for the purpose of saving her, does not constitute a case of derelict. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421. [AMERICAN.]

(150) A steamboat on fire coming down the river created some alarm among those moored at a wharf, several of which were towed out of danger by the only steamer happening to have steam up at the time. Held, without deciding whether this was a case of marine salvage, that the libellants were not entitled to more than what would be a liberal allowance as towage. A cross libel in the nature of a re-conventional demand for injuries received during the towage was dismissed, it appearing evident that they were the result of unavoidable accident in the confusion of the moment, and the service being at the request and to the benefit of the cross libellants. The S. W. Downs v. The Storm, 1 Newb. Adm. 458. [AMERICAN.]

(151) The contract of a pilot with the boat on which he is employed is virtually dissolved when the boat, being on fire, is surrendered by the master to the master of another boat to save her. After such surrender the pilot may become a salvor. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421. [AMERICAN.]

* (152) There is no determinate rule of law absolutely distinguishing towage service from salvage service. The H. B. Foster, 1 Abb. Adm. 222. [AMERICAN.]

(153) Towage may be a salvage service when performed in aid of a vessel in distress. Ibid.

(154) Towage service is aid rendered in the propulsion of a vessel, &c., irrespective of any circumstances of peril. Ibid.

party to the contract will perform his duty in completing it, that proper skill and diligence will be used on board both the vessel and tug, and that neither party by neglect or mismanagement will create unnecessary risk to the other, or increase any risk which might be incidental to the service undertaken. Bland v. Ross (The Julia), 14 Moore, P. C. C. 210; 1 Lushington, 224.

519. Held, that in a case of a contract of towage the principles laid down in Priestly v. Fowler (3 M. & W. 5), and other cases of that class, as to the relations between employer and employed, do not apply. Ibid.

520. When an engagement is made for a steam-tug to tow a vessel from one place to another, the tug is bound by that engagement to do all that is necessary to facilitate the safe voyage of the vessel from the one place to the other, and she is to take the chance of bad weather, which may occasion delay and inconvenience. The Galatea, Swabey, 349; 12 L. T. 49; 4 Jur. 1064; 7 W. R. 21.

521. If during the performance of a towage agreement the tug becomes incapable of completing it, though by a contingency purely accidental and which no precaution could have provided against, it is competent to the vessel in tow thereupon to terminate the agreement. The Lady Flora Hastings, 3 W. Rob. 122.

522. An agreement was made with a steam-tug belonging to a steam-tug company to tow a vessel from Dover to Gravesend for £40. The steam-tug broke down, in itinere, and the towage was completed by other steam-tugs belonging to the same company. The defence of the owners of the vessel in tow that the contract was annulled by the nonfulfilment of the original agreement not sustained: Semble, the acceptance of the services of the other steam-tugs by the master of the vessel in tow was a continuance of the original contract. Ibid.

523. When a tug meets with a vessel disabled and undertakes for any sum agreed upon between the parties to perform the service of bringing the vessel from one port to another or to a place of safety, that may be called an extraordinary towage, because it is not in the ordinary occupation of the vessel. Ordinary towage takes place for the purpose of expediting a vessel on her voyage either homeward or outward. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 264; 18 Jur. 409.

524. When a steam-tug engages to tow a vessel for a fixed sum, she does not warrant that she will do so under all circumstances. The Minnehaha, 15 Moore, P. C. C. 133; 1 Lushington, 335; 9 W. R. 925; 4 L. T. N.S. 810; 7 Jur N.S. 1257; 1 Asp. 111.

525. But the tug engages to use her best endeavours, competent skill, and a reasonably sufficient crew, tackle and equipments for the task. If unforeseen difficulties occur, such as the breaking of the ship's hawser, she is not relieved from doing her best. Ibid.

526. But if she is prevented from fulfilling her contract by accidents not contemplated, and which render the fulfilment of her contract impossible, in such a case she is, by the general rule of law, relieved from her obligations. Ibid.

527. But she is not relieved from her obligations because of unforeseen difficulties causing an interruption in the performance of the task, and preventing its completion in the mode originally intended. Ibid.

528. The burden of proof of an agreement for towage is upon the party setting up the agreement. Ibid.

528a. It is not the duty of those in charge of a tow which is being towed with a long scope of hawser, by night at sea, to direct the movements of the tug. The circumstances are different to towing by day in a river. The Stormcock, 4 Asp. 410.

529. A contract of towage provided that no extra charge was to be made in case of accident except for detention arising therefrom, in which case demurrage at the rate of ten pounds per day was to be paid. Owing to the parting of the hawser through no fault of the tug, the tow and the tug were obliged to put into port where they were detained seven days in consequence of the state of the weather. Held (Lord Ardmillan dissenting), that demurrage was payable for the seven days as the detention arose from the parting of the hawser through accident. New Steam Tug Co. v. McClew, 3rd Series, vol. 7, p. 733. [SCOTCH.]

530. The word "accident" meant the same as "the act of God" and "perils of the sea." Per the Lord President Inglis. Ibid.

531. A master mariner agreed with certain owners of barges to take charge of them on a voyage across the Atlantic. The owners were to provide the necessary steam power for towing. The towing power proving insufficient, the voyage lasted much longer than the agreed time, and three of the barges were lost. Held, reversing the decision of the court below (Bramwell, L. J., dissenting), that there was no implied warranty by the defendants that the tug should be reasonably efficient for the purposes of the voyage. Robertson v. Amazon Tug and Lighterage Co., 4 Asp. 496.

532. A tug contracted to tow a ship from A. to B. for a specified sum. The ship, during the voyage, was injured by collision, and the tug was detained three days with the ship. In an action of towage, held, that the court had no jurisdiction to award, in addition to the agreed towage, any remuneration for the delay. The Hjennett, 5 P. D. 227; 49 L. J. P. D. 66; 4 Asp. 274.

532a. A tug agreed to tow a vessel from Foyal to Liverpool for a lump sum. She towed her for 900 miles, and then having no more coals left her and did not return. The owners of the tug brought an action for the agreed sum. Held, that they were not entitled to recover any part of it, as the contract was entire. The Queen of Australia, February 18, 1880; 4 Asp. 274, n.

533. Semble, the officer in charge of the tow may give express orders as to the course, in which case the tug is bound to obey them; but in the absence of such orders the tug has the general direction of the course, and is bound to tow the vessel in a safe and prudent course. The Robert Dixon, 4 Asp. 246.

534. The steamer W. found the steamer A. off Cape Finisterre in a disabled condition, and towed her for two days in heavy weather. To prevent the W. then abandoning her, owing to the A.'s condition, it was then agreed between the masters that the W. "should stand by the A. as long as possible, and that the W. and owners are to be paid for the time and towing already done and to be done." The W. thereupon again took the A. in tow, but two days afterwards, owing to stress of weather, she was found necessarily abandoned, and was lost. Held, that the agreement was reasonable, and £400 awarded. The Alfred, 50 L. T. 511; 5 Asp. 214.

535. The masts of a ship had been cut away, and she was making a considerable quantity of water, but being laden with timber was in no danger of sinking. Salvors, five in number, with their fishing smack of sixty tons burthen, rendered her for thirty-six hours services which in effect amounted only to towage services. Their claim included £34 compensation for loss of fish, and £25 damage to hawser. The court found that an agreement had been made between them and the master of the ship that they should receive £150 for their services, and confirmed a tender for that amount, with costs. Value of the property saved £1,850. The Arthur, 1 Asp. 228.

536. For salvage services rendered in towing a disabled vessel into safety, the court awarded £4,000, of which £3,000 was apportioned to the owners. The Kenmure Castle, 7 P. D. 47; 47 L. T. 661; 33 W. R. 708; 5 Asp. 27.

537. The master of a vessel agreed with a tug for towage from Sea Reach, in the Thames, to a London wharf, for £6, and to give an order upon the owner of the wharf for the amount usually allowed by him (under the name of towage) as a premium to vessels of the kind coming to his wharf. The service was performed, and the master paid the money, but refused to give the order. The amount usually paid by the owner of the wharf was proved; and also that if an order, signed by the master, had been presented, the money would have been paid. Held, that the master had no authority to agree to transfer to the master of the tug an uncertain sum payable to the owners of the vessel; and that the court had no authority to enforce such a contract or give damages for the breach of it. Action for towage dismissed with costs. The Martha, 1 Lushington, 314. See also The Ceylon, No. 2217, 19th July, 1864.

538. The plaintiffs, owners of the schooner J. M. S., having come into collision with a tug and her tow, brought an action against the tug to recover the damages occasioned by the collision. The plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the owners of the tow, under which they received a sum of money, described "as an advance on account of the damages to be recovered from the owners of the tug." And it was stipulated that the owners of the tow should give the plaintiffs all information and assistance necessary to bring the action to a successful issue; that if the schooner and tug should both be held to blame, the plaintiffs should repay any sum by which the money already paid exceeded the moiety of damages recoverable against the tug; and that, as a basis of the arrangement, the schooner should be found blameless for the collision. The court having found the tug alone to blame, held, that the above was not such a payment by the tow in satisfaction of the damages as amounted to a settlement in discharge of the action, and was, therefore, no bar to the action. The Stormcock, 53 L. T. 53.

(b) *Subsequent Salvage.

539. If, during a towage contract, the ship in tow is, by sudden and unforeseen circumstances, placed in danger, and the towing vessel incurs risks and performs duties not within the scope of her original engagement, she is entitled for such additional services to additional remuneration as a salvor if the ship is saved. In such a case the claimants must show that the ship being in danger from no fault of theirs, they performed services which were not covered by their towage contract, and did all they could to prevent the danger. The Minnehaha, 15 Moore, P. C. C. 133; 1 Lushington, 335; 9 W. R. 925; 4 L. T. N.S. 810; 7 Jur. N.S. 1257.

540. If, a ship being in danger, a steam-tug coming to her assistance makes a towage contract, and nothing supervenes afterwards to change the character of the services, the steam-tug can claim nothing beyond towage remuneration. Ibid.

541. Circumstances may change a stipulated towage into a salvage service, the right to salvage superseding the towage contract, but such a claim is to be jealously watched. Such salvage can never be claimed when the danger of the vessel salvaged is attributable in any way to the default of the tug. Ibid.

542. In estimating the amount of salvage reward to a steam-tug rendering salvage services to a vessel while under a towage contract to her, the fact that the contract is still to be carried out is to be taken into consideration. Ibid.

543. The M., a large ship with a valuable cargo, brought up at the mouth of the Mersey and engaged the U. K., a powerful steam-tug, to tow her to Liverpool for thirty guineas. Shortly after the service commenced the hawser broke and the ship drifted over a shoal into Formby Hole, a place of danger. The U. K. got out her own hawser and attached it to the M., and another tug, the S. K., was also engaged. Both tugs manœuvred the ship to prevent her getting on the bank, and eventually, on the tide rising, towed her to Liverpool. Held, on appeal, that both tugs were entitled to salvage, and £300 awarded to the U. K., and £50 to the S. K. Ibid.

544. Many circumstances may arise to convert the service into the character of a salvage service, as, for instance, where the ship in tow is disabled in her hull or rigging, or where she is aground, or where the service itself is attended with danger or extraordinary labour to the towing vessel. The Princess Alice, 3 W. Rob. 140; 6 Notes of Cases, 585.

545. The services of a steam-tug within its usual locality are not necessarily towage, but may by circumstances be held to be salvage services. The Medora, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 17.

546. Mere towage service is confined to vessels that have received no injury or damage, and mere towage reward is payable in those cases only where the vessel receiving the service is in the same condition she would ordinarily be in without having encountered any damage or accident. The Reward, 1 W. Rob. 174; The Charles Adolphe, Swabey, 153.

547. If towage lead to the rescue of a vessel from danger, it should be remunerated as salvage; or if an engagement even be made in port to go out and tow, unforeseen circumstances might convert such towage into a salvage service. The Isabella, 3 Hagg. 428.

548. Semble, if a steamer be requested by a vessel at anchor in a gale of wind to lie by her, and if necessary take her in tow, in such a case, even though the vessel might without assistance ride out the gale, the steamer would be entitled to salvage reward, the quantum to be determined by the risk encountered by both vessels, the value of property at hazard, and the other circumstances of the case. The Undaunted, 1 Lushington, 90; 29 L. J. Adm. 177; 2 L. T. N.S. 520.

549. To convert towage into salvage there must supervene an element of serious danger, not in contemplation

* (155) If a vessel is hired to do a stated service, as towing a dismantled vessel anchored in a dangerous situation to a place of safety, but no price is named because the time it may take is not altogether certain, this is a salvage service, and the agreement is of no avail. Hennessey v. Ship Versailles, 1 Curtis, C. C. 353; The Independence, 2 ibid. 350. But this doctrine is doubted. See 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 629, n.; Hemmenway v. Fisher, 20 How. 255. [AMERICAN.]

when the contract for towage was made. And whether towage has become salvage depends upon whether circumstances have arisen which would justify the tug in abandoning the contract to tow. The J. C. Potter, 40 L. J. Adm. N.S. 9; L. R. 3 A. & E. 292.

549a. Where a steamship, carrying fore-and-aft sails only, and not rigged for proceeding under sail alone, breaks the main shaft of her propeller, and is compelled to take assistance from another ship, which tows her forty miles into a port, the service is of a salvage character, although the service is not attended with any danger to the salvors. The Jubilee, 4 Asp. 275.

550. A steam-tug took a ship in tow, under an agreement to tow her to Liverpool for £45. The weather was then moderate, but afterwards increased to a heavy gale. The steam-tug never let go the ship's hawser, and, after much danger to both ship and steam-tug, brought the ship to Liverpool. Held, that a service had been performed beyond the scope of the agreement to tow, and that the tug and her crew were entitled to salvage. The J. C. Potter, supra.

551. Where the master of a steamer engages to tow a vessel, it is upon the supposition that the wind and weather and the time of performing the service will be what are ordinary at the time of year; but if an unexpected change of weather or other unforeseen accidents occurs, he is bound to adhere to the vessel, and to do all in his power to rescue her from danger; and he will be entitled to reasonable extra remuneration for the extra service. Circumstances under which such extra remuneration was allowed. The White Star, 1 A. & E. 68.

552. Held, that the owners of a steam-tug, which had towed a disabled vessel from a bay into a harbour which she could not have otherwise reached, were, in a question with another salvor, entitled to a share of the salvage, and not to the mere ordinary rate of towage, although the steam-tug had not left the bounds within which she ordinarily plied, and had not incurred any extraordinary risk or labour. Robinson v. Thoms, Feb. 5th, 1851; 13 D. 592; 23 Jur. 267. [SCOTCH.]

553. A tug was taken out of her ordinary occupation, carried to a foreign port, and there detained for a time. Held, that the price paid for ordinary towage was no guide to the court as to the sum which should be allotted to remunerate this service. The Batavier, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 174.

553a. An agreement for towage was entered into, the weather being bad at the time. It became much worse, and great difficulty was experienced in completing the service. In an action for salvage the defendants tendered the amount of the agreement and an additional sum for quarantine expenses and consequent detention. Held, that the agreement was not affected by the tender of the amount of the extra expenses. Tender pronounced for with costs from the time of making the tender. The Waverley, 40 L. J. Adm. N.S. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 369; 1 Asp. N.S. 47.

554. No danger was incurred by the asserted salvors, and the master and crew of the vessel assisted were not aware of the existence of any danger to their own vessel, but accepted the services of a steamer to bring them into port, and a tender of the usual amount for towage was made for such services: held, that the services did not amount to salvage services. Tender affirmed with costs. The Harbinger, 16 Jur. 729.

555. In a claim for salvage, a tender of £2 confirmed, with £5 nomine expensarum, the court holding the case to be one of mere towage, and twenty-nine co-salvors having accepted similar tenders. The Albion, 2 Hagg. 180, n.

556. The steamer C. was employed under an agreement to tow to a specified place the E. H. which was partially disabled. She towed for eleven hours, and was then obliged by a gale of wind to quit the E. H. in a position of peril. The vessel was subsequently saved by her own resources. The C. claimed salvage. It was proved that at the time of being taken in tow the E. H. was not in danger, and that she was not rescued from danger or brought into a place of safety. Held, that no salvage service had been performed, and cause dismissed with costs. The Edward Hawkins, 1 Lushington, 515; 31 L. J. Adm. N.S. 46. Affirmed on appeal, 1 Lushington, 517.

557. Towage services were rendered without any agreement as to remuneration. There was at the time neither actual nor imminent danger to the vessel to which they were rendered. Held, that under the circumstances the services were towage and not salvage. The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. P. C. 58; 3 Asp. N.S. P. C. 113.

558. The plaintiff's vessel, without any specific sum being agreed upon by way of remuneration, was engaged to tow another vessel in distress and remained by her all night. In the morning the vessel in distress employed a third vessel at a fixed sum to take her in tow, the plaintiff's vessel still offering to do her best, but refusing to agree to any specific sum. Held, that the services of the plaintiff's vessel ought not to have been discarded, and that she was entitled to remuneration. The Maude, 3 Asp. N.S. 338.

559. A steamship disabled by the breaking of her crank-shaft was towed a distance of about thirty miles without danger or risk by another steamship belonging to the same owners. Fifteen of the crew of the towing vessel instituted a salvage action in the sum of £5,000 against the vessel towed, and arrested vessel, cargo and freight. Held, that such services were salvage services, but of so slight a character that £15 awarded on a value of £105,500, and condemned salvors in costs, the court expressing its disapprobation at the institution of the action in the High Court, and at the arrest of the vessel for such an amount. The Agamemnon, 5 Asp. 92.

560. A contract to tow embraces the risk of ordinary bad weather. The Galatea, 7 W. R. 21; Swabey, 349; 12 L. T. 49; 4 Jur. 1064.

561. But this is put an end to by weather rendering the completion of the undertaking impossible. Ibid.

562. In that case subsequent services may be in the nature of salvage. Ibid.

563. When an engagement is made for a steamer to tow a ship from one place to another, the steamer is bound to do all that is necessary to facilitate the safe voyage of the ship from the one place to the other, and she is to take the chance of bad weather which may occasion delay and inconvenience. Ibid.

564. But she does not take the chance of the undertaking being entirely interrupted by the act of God, that is, from the state of the wind and weather being such as to compel her to abandon the original undertaking. Ibid.

565. When from the state of the wind and weather the performance of the service originally contracted for is prevented, a steam-tug is not at liberty to abandon the ship she has engaged to tow, but it is her duty to render all the assistance in her power to bring the ship to a place of safety, and for so doing she is entitled to a salvage remuneration. The Galatea, Swabey, 350; 4 Jur. 1064; 7 W. R. 12; 12 L. T. 49; The Saratoga, 1 Lushington, 318; The Minnehaha, ibid. 335; 30 L. J. Adm. 211; 7 Jur. N.S. 1257; 9 W. R. 925; 4 L. T. N.S. 810.

566. When there is an agreement to tow a disabled vessel from one port to another, it not being an ordinary towage service, the court will not engraft upon it additional salvage for any little assistance rendered. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 264, 265; 18 Jur. 409.

567. But when a service has been commenced as an ordinary towage service, the vessel being in no distress, for the mere purpose of expediting the voyage, if it happens that a salvage service unexpectedly becomes engrafted upon it the towing vessel may not be bound to take the ordinary reward for a towing service. Ibid.

568. In ordinary towage an agreement may be affected by subsequent events. In extraordinary towage the agreement is, as a general rule, binding. Ibid.

569. In an agreement for extraordinary towage the concealment of a fact which might operate on the service vitiates the agreement. Ibid.

570. The master of a damaged brig agreed with the master of a steam-tug to tow the brig to London for £40, having concealed from the master of the tug the fact of the brig's being damaged. The master of the tug having discovered the fact of the damage, repudiated the agreement, and brought a suit for salvage. Held, that the agreement was void, and salvage of £160 awarded. Ibid. 265; 18 Jur. 409.

571. If in the performance of a contract for towing, new services become necessary in consequence of unforeseen occurrences, the agreement is not at once rendered void, and the tug at liberty to abandon the vessel. The Annapolis, 5 L. T. N.S. 38; 1 Lushington, 355.

572. Nor, on the other hand, is the tug bound to perform the new service for the same stipulation as is allowed for the other service. Ibid.

573. A steam-tug having been engaged to tow a ship, A., two other ships came into collision with the A., and other dangers were incurred, in course of which the tug, to save herself, let the A. go, and afterwards, with another tug, resumed towing the A., and finally assisted the other ships, and in the end claimed salvage from all three: held, that though the tug, to save herself, was entitled to let the ship A. go, yet she was bound to return with due speed to resume the towage of the A., and did no more than her towage contract bound her to do. Ibid.

574. But that as regards the other ships, she was entitled to salvage. Ibid.

575. If, in the performance of a towage service pursuant to an agreement, such towing being honestly, fairly, and skilfully employed, it happens from inevitable circumstances that an accident occurs to the vessel in tow, and essential services are rendered by the vessel towing her, the agreement does not cover such services, but tends to diminish the quantum of reward for such extra services. The William Brandt, jun., 2 Notes of Cases, Supp. lxvii.

576. A vessel having made an agreement with a steamer for towage services for £16, before the service commenced got on a sand, from which she was, after a second attempt, got off by the steamer, who then performed the towage services agreed for. The value of the property was £6,250; the court awarded £60. Ibid.

577. The attendance of a steamer which has been engaged in towage, but which has been unable to continue that service owing to the boisterous state of the weather, will be considered as a salvage service, and paid for accordingly, even although her services were not again called into active requisition. The John Bryant, 5 Jur. 233. [IRISH.]

578. Towage of a ship near the land in unsettled weather, if her ground tackle is disabled, is in the nature of salvage. The Albion, 1 Lushington, 282.

579. A steam-tug was engaged to tow a ship from the North Foreland to Gravesend, and towed her to the Prince's Channel, where both vessels anchored to stop tide. In the night a gale of wind arose, and blew the ship to sea, with loss of anchors and damage to hawse-pipes, bow planking, and windlass. The tug was forced to run to Ramsgate, and the next day, the weather having moderated, put to sea, and after considerable search discovered the ship, which had received an anchor and chain by a lugger from the shore. The ship was then towed by the steam-tug, another tug assisting, to the port of London. Held, that the services of both tugs were in the nature of salvage, and that the first tug was entitled to salvage remuneration for her labour and loss of employment whilst seeking the ship. Ibid.

580. A steam-tug under contract to tow into dock was lashed alongside a vessel; in rounding to enter the dock basin the tide forced the vessel and the steam-tug close to a landing-stage, with the steam-tug next to the stage; the pilot of the vessel hailed the tug to go on and go ahead, which the tug did, but was forced against the stage, and injured. Held, that the steam-tug was bound to endeavour to save the vessel from the impending peril, especially upon the order of the pilot, and for so doing was entitled to salvage reward, including repayment of all damages and losses thereby incurred. The Saratoga, 1 Lushington, 318.

581. In a case of towage partaking of a salvage character, held that the salvors, a steam-tug company, were not bound by the rates of towage published by them, but were entitled to a higher rate in the nature of salvage. The Reward, 10 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 61; The Beulah, 2 Notes of Cases, 63.

582. Claim of salvage held to be a towage service merely. Tender of £4 pronounced for, and salvors condemned in £50 nomine expensarum. The Princess Alice, 3 W. Rob. 138.

583. The ship L. E. was being towed by a steam-tug to be docked at high water, when, to make sure of docking that tide, another tug, the S., was engaged for the sum of £5 to assist in towing her to the pier head. After the S. made fast, the L. E. grounded, but was towed off by both tugs in a few minutes, and was then docked. A cause of salvage was brought on behalf of the second tug. Held, that the L. E. was not in immediate danger, and that the tug had not incurred any risk or performed any duty which was not within the scope of her original engagement, and cause dismissed with costs. The Lady Egidia, 1 Lushington, 513.

584. While a steam-tug was engaged in towing a vessel the tow-rope broke. Claim by the steam-tug for salvage dismissed. The Chancellor, April, 1853.

585. A vessel engaged to tow another is bound, notwithstanding change of weather, to adhere to her, and perform services other than the services originally engaged in. The original agreement is not invalidated, but she is entitled to receive something additional to the remuneration originally agreed on. The White Star, L. R. 1 A. & E. 68.

586. When supervening circumstances, from stress of weather or otherwise, are such as to justify a towing vessel in abandoning her contract, it is still her duty to remain by the towed vessel for the purpose of rendering her assistance, but for such assistance she is entitled to salvage reward. The J. C. Potter, L. R. 3 A. & E. 292; 40 L. J. Adm. 9; 3 Asp. 506.

587. For supervening circumstances to justify the abandonment of a towage contract and found a salvage service, there must be among them an element of serious danger, not in contemplation of the parties to the contract. Ibid.

588. The steam-tug R. agreed to tow the ship J. C. P. to Liverpool for £45. Owing to the weather the service occupied twice the ordinary time, and for three hours both vessels were in great peril. Had the tug abandoned her contract the J. C. P. would probably have been lost. The value of the J. C. P. together with freight and cargo was £20,000, and the damage to the tug was about £144. A salvage action having been instituted by the owners of the tug, held, that the tug would have been justified in abandoning her contract, and was entitled to salvage reward. £500 awarded. Ibid.

589. A tug under a contract to tow may, by rendering services beyond the scope of the towage contract, earn salvage reward, although she incurred no risk. The Pericles, B. & L. 80.

590. An agreement is not invalidated by the concealment of an immaterial fact. The owners and crew of a tug sued for salvage services, alleging that an agreement made for towage service was invalid by reason that the illness of the larger number of the crew was concealed at the time of making the agreement. Held, that the owners and crew of the tug not being injured by such concealment the agreement was valid, and no salvage service had been rendered. The Canova, L. R. 1 A. & E. 54.

591. As to agreements for salvage, see c. 10, p. 1867.

(c) *Misconduct.

593. When a steamboat engages to tow a vessel, she engages that she will use her best endeavours for that purpose. The Minnehaha, 1 Lushington, 335; 15 Moo. P. C. C. 133; 7 Jur. N.S. 1257; 9 W. 594. If in the course of the service the ship is rescued from danger by the tug, but that danger was attributable to wilful misconduct or negligence on the part of the tug, or to the want of that reasonable skill or equipments implied in the towage contract, the tug cannot claim salvage. Ibid.

595. If during the performance of a towage service the towing hawser is broken under circumstances of great peril to the ship, and the tug does not come up as soon as she reasonably might and ought to have done in order to repair the mischief, she can make no claim for salvage. Ibid.

595a. As a general rule, steam-tugs in the performance of a towage contract, even when rendering salvage services, are bound to obey the orders of the pilot on board the vessel in tow. Ibid.

596. Where the tug is familiar with the navigation and the tow a foreigner, it is the tug's duty to tow in a safe direction without waiting for directions from the tow. The Robert Dixon, 4 Asp. 95, 127.

596a. A tug engaged to tow a ship, in charge of a compulsory pilot, attempted to tow across a bank instead of round it, and the ship grounded and was damaged. The pilot signalled the tug to alter her course, and on seeing his signals disregarded cast off the tow-rope. Held, that as the casting-off of the tow-rope would have had to be done at the last moment, there was no such contributory negligence on the part of the tow as prevented her from recovering from the tug owners, although the nautical assessors considered the pilot's conduct negligent. Spaight v. Tedcastle, 6 App. Cas. 217; 4 Asp. 406; 44 L. T. 589; 29 W. R. 761.

597. Where a vessel was in tow during a thick fog and those on board her, know-

* (156) The owner of a steamboat agreed, in writing, to tow a flat boat with cargo, at the risk of the owners of the flat boat. In a suit against the former for negligence, there was evidence tending to show that the flat boat was not skilfully loaded, and that the towing was rendered thereby more hazardous, but that the defendant was aware of this fact before taking the flat boat in charge, and that, owing to his gross negligence in towing her at too great a speed, the boat was sunk and the cargo damaged. Held, that the negligence being gross, the defendant was liable, apart from his character as a common carrier, and notwithstanding the writing. Wright v. Gaff, 6 Ind. 416. [AMERICAN.]

ing there was danger, did not order the tug to stop, and the vessel ran aground. Held, that they were guilty of contributory negligence. Smith v. The Saint Laurence Tow Boat Company, L. R. 5 P. C. 308.

597a. Semble, if during the performance of a towage contract by the tug S. to tow the A., the S. sees other vessels in danger, and there is another tug of inferior power at hand and competent to tow the A., the S. would be justified in leaving her to assist the vessels in danger, notwithstanding the pilot of the A. ordered the S. to remain by her. The Annapolis, 1 Lushington, 363.

598. A ship in charge of a licensed pilot got upon the Goodwin Sands. She was assisted off by a steamer, taken in tow, and then got upon Sandwich Flats. Held, that the ship's getting on Sandwich Flats might have been prevented by ordinary care and skill, that culpable negligence was therefore imputable to the steamer, and that the master of the steamer could not separate the towing of the vessel from his claim for salvage services for getting the vessel off the sand. Claim for salvage dismissed accordingly, with costs. The Duke of Manchester, 10 Jur. 863; 4 Notes of Cases, 575; 5 Ibid. 470. Affirmed on appeal, Ibid., 6 Moore, P. C. C. 91.

598a. A master of a steam-tug, of which the defendant was owner, was employed by the plaintiff to tow his smack out of a harbour. In so doing the smack was stranded, through the negligence of the master. The plaintiff had on previous occasions hired the defendant's steam-tug, and on paying the charge had received a receipt, upon the back of which was printed a notice that the defendant would not be answerable for damage occasioned by any supposed negligence of his servants. Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the contract was made on the terms printed on the back of the receipts. Symonds v. Paine, 6 H. & N. 709; 30 L. J. Exch. 256.

599. The master of a steam-tug who had contracted to tow a fishing smack out of the harbour of Great Yarmouth to sea on the terms that his owners should not be liable for damage arising from any negligence or default of themselves or their servants, after the towage had been in part performed, took in tow, in addition to the smack, six other vessels, and in consequence was unable to keep the fishing smack in her course, so that she went aground and was lost. By having more than six vessels in tow at once the master of the tug disobeyed a regulation made by the harbour master of Great Yarmouth under statutory authorities. Held, that the loss of the smack was occasioned by the negligence of the master of the tug, but that the owners were protected from liability by the terms of the towage contract. The United Service, 9 P. D. 3.

599a. In all ordinary cases of towage it is a part of the contract that the steam-tug shall be subservient to the pilot on board the vessel in tow, and it is the duty of those on board the steam-tug implicitly to obey and carry out his orders. There may be cases in which this duty ought to be relaxed, as in cases of salvage, where the master of the steam-tug is called in to remedy the errors of the pilot, or where he sees the pilot acting in such a manner as to threaten the destruction of his own vessel and endanger the lives and properties of others, but these cases form the exception to a general rule. The Christina, 6 Moo. P. C. C. 372; 12 Jur. 251; 3 W. Rob. 27; 6 Notes of Cases, 4, 361.

600. The tug, through neglect of the orders of the pilot on board the vessel in tow, had caused her to come in collision with another vessel. Held, that although the pilot might not have exercised a sound discretion in the orders he gave, yet there was no sufficient justification for the master of the steam-tug refusing to obey and carry those orders into effect. Ibid.

600a. Where, in the performance of towage services, the tow gets into a position of danger, the tug is not entitled to salvage for extricating her from it, unless the tow's dangerous position was an inevitable accident not arising from any negligence of the tug; and if the danger arose from the fault of the tug, the tow is entitled to recover from the tug owners the losses or damages thereby occasioned. The Robert Dixon, 4 Asp. 246.

601. A steam-tug entered into a verbal agreement with the master of a vessel having a duly licensed pilot on board to tow her to London. In coming up the river they came across a brig near a tier of vessels; the pilot hailed the tug to go to the westward of the brig, but the master of the tug disobeyed the order, and went to the eastward, thereby causing a collision between the vessels. The tug afterwards completed the towage. Held, that in such circumstances the disobedience of the orders of the pilot was not justifiable, and that the towage was forfeited. Whether, notwithstanding such misconduct, the tug could recover towage from the owners of the vessel under the contract, and leave the vessel towed to a cross-action for damage, was a question which, as it had not been properly raised in the Admiralty Court, the Judicial Committee, as a court of appeal, refused to entertain. The Robert Dixon, 4 Asp. 245.

603. As to the effect of misconduct of salvors, see c. 9, p. 1856.

16. Pilotage by other than Pilots.

604. A service which would be pilotage in the case of a duly licensed pilot becomes salvage as regards the reward, when voluntarily performed by others in a place where there are no licensed pilots. The Rosehaugh, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 267. See also The Hedwig, Ibid. 19.

605. When a vessel is out of pilotage ground altogether, and services are rendered in taking her to a place of safety, they are considered salvage and not pilotage services. The Hedwig, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 23; 17 Jur. 977.

606. The court will look with considerable indulgence on the efforts of persons offering their services to vessels in distress, where there are no other individuals on the spot capable of rendering more efficient assistance; but different considerations apply to the conduct of individuals assuming the character of salvors when there are other persons at hand more competent to discharge those duties. Claims of certain fishermen for salvage in respect of services rendered by them to a foreign vessel on the Norfolk coast, when there were regular pilots at hand to have taken charge of her, pronounced against, the court and Trinity masters being of opinion that the proceedings of the salvors had been erroneous and injudicious, and of no benefit to the vessel. Under the circumstances, however, the court declined to give costs against the salvors. The Dygden, 1 Notes of Cases, 115.

607. A French brig, bound to St. Petersburg, being in the Bristol Channel, the master having lost his course and being ignorant of the locality, was at the entrance of Carmarthen Bay approached by a fishing boat, from which a man was put on board, under whose directions the brig was navigated to Tenby Roads. The value of ship and cargo was £3,000, and a tender of £5 was made by the owners; the court, taking into consideration the master's ignorance of the locality, that the sails were out of repair, that the vessel was therefore not altogether free from danger, that the persons boarding her were not pilots, and that no duty was therefore imposed on them, awarded, though estimating the service as very little beyond pilotage, £12, with costs. The Eugenie, 3 Notes of Cases, 430.

17. Mutual Benefit.

612. A vessel struck on a reef of rocks near the island of Cuba, and was abandoned by her crew. Another vessel was abandoned near the same spot, and her crew in their boats having fallen in with the first vessel, got her off the reef and brought her to England. On a value of £1,237 the court awarded £350 and costs, intimating that the case was one in which mutual benefit was rendered and received by the salvors. The Two Friends, 8 Jur. 1011.

belong to a friend, there is no reason why the original but mistaken intention of the captor should defeat any salvage interest that might arise from other circumstances in the case. Civil salvage decreed accordingly for actual services rendered at the same time in preserving the ship and valuable cargo in distress. £500 and costs awarded. The Franklin, 4 C. Rob. 147.

615. A king's ship held not entitled to salvage for rescuing a convict vessel from the possession of the convicts and of the mutinous crew and soldiers on board her, no great danger or personal exertion having been incurred; but costs of asserted salvors allowed. The Francis and Eliza, ibid. 115.

616. A slave ship on the coast of Africa was rescued from insurgent slaves by another slave ship. The court likened it to a rescue effected from pirates, or out of the hands of the public enemy, and awarded one-tenth of the value as salvage. The Trelawny, 4 C. Rob. 223.

617. A claim for salvage for rescue of a slave ship from insurgent slaves, held not to be substantiated. The Ann, 5 C. Rob. 100.

618. A vessel, part of whose crew had been captured by pirates, approached the harbour of A., having a signal of distress hoisted, and firing guns at intervals. Certain parties put off to her, and brought her into harbour, effecting the service during a period of two hours and a half only, with no risk or great exertion. An expedition against the pirates was afterwards planned and undertaken by the salvors and the rest of the crew, in which, after that part of the crew which had been captured had been ransomed, the pirates were attacked and some slain, but the greater part made their escape. A claim of salvage having been preferred in respect of such services, the bringing the vessel into harbour held to be a salvage service, but the expedition against the pirates not to be of that character; and that it would not have been so had the expedition been undertaken solely for the rescue of the crew, and successfully.

£30 awarded as salvage, with costs. The Mary, 1 W. Rob. 448.

620. Military salvage pronounced for on donation from the enemy of a ship and part of the cargo captured by them to the master, in consideration of his taking home crews of other prize vessels taken by them, together with civil salvage for exertions in bringing home the ship and cargo. The Sir Peter, 2 Dodson, 73.

621. A British ship was taken by the French, who took out all the crew but the master and a boy, who, however, rose on the prizemaster and crew, and having regained possession of the vessel, made for England. A violent storm coming on, the master applied for and obtained assistance from an English frigate, by whose aid he continued to manage the vessel until it was thought dangerous to remain longer on board, when they all removed to the frigate. The storm abating shortly afterwards, the master and his assistants returned on board, and ultimately brought the vessel into port. Salvage of one-sixth (£1,000) awarded to the master and boy, viz. £850 to the master, and £150 to the boy; £500 awarded to the whole crew of the frigate, to be distributed as in a case of prize, with costs of all salvors. The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292.

622. In a cause of mixed military and civil salvage, the court inclined, though no bail had been given, to support a valuation and award, not clearly excessive, made on the spot, and on reference to three competent arbitrators chosen by both parties, but since objected to by the owners. A specific sum, abating something from the amount awarded, decreed, with costs of the salvors. The Sir Francis Barton, 2 Hagg. 156.

626. If the signal hoisted was for a pilot only, that does not prevent the services rendered from being in the nature of salvage. The true question always is, What was the condition of the ship? 7. Life.

1. By British Ships.

638. As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division and Court of Admiralty in respect of salvage of life, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 458, and No. 98, p. 1791.*

639. See also thereon the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 9, in No. 104, p. 1792.

640. Held, that the words "the lives of the persons belonging to such ship or boat," in sect. 458 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), and similar words in the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 9, include passengers. The Fusileer, Br. & Lushington, 341; 2 Asp. 177; 34 L. J. Adm. 25; 4 Jur. N.S. 289; 10 L. T. N.S. 699; 12 ibid. 186; 12 W. R. 968; 13 ibid. 592.

641. The owners of the cargo are liable to contribute to that portion of the claim of salvors which arises from saving the lives of passengers, although the salvors may have rendered no direct benefit to the cargo, as the benefit to property is not a criterion of remuneration for life salvage. Ibid.

642. An action for salvage of life was instituted against cargo, a portion of which had been sold before the commencement of the suit. Quære, whether the court had not power to follow the portion of the cargo sold, or even the proceeds of the sale? The Governor Maclean, 13 W. R. 728.

643. Preservation of human life is made by the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), a distinct ground of salvage reward, with priority over all other claims for salvage, where the property is insufficient. The Coromandel, Swabey, 205. See also The Bartley, ibid. 199.

644. The intention of the legislature, as expressed in the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), with regard to the saving of life, was to provide for the contingency of life saved and property lost, by giving the court the power to reward for the salvage of life only, and also to empower the court to reward for saving life as part of the salvage services performed. The Coromandel, Swabey, 207.

645. In a case of salvage a greater amount was awarded to the vessel saving the lives as well as some of the property than to the vessels saving property only. The Clarisse, Swabey, 131. (Before the judge of the Cinque Ports.)

646. The Court of Admiralty had no original jurisdiction to award salvage for the saving of life only. The Johannes, 1 Asp. 24.

647. The M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), did not give the court jurisdiction over salvage of life only, performed on the high seas, at a distance of more than three miles from the shore of the United Kingdom, if the

648. It is immaterial to this question that before action the ship has been brought by other salvors into a British port. Ibid.

649. The court is now, since the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), bound to take into special consideration in connexion with the salvage of property the salvation of human life, and to give a corresponding reward. The Bartley, Swabey, 199; The Thomas Fielden, 32 L. J. Adm. 61.

650. A liberal reward is to be given for the saving of human life, consideration being had to the degree of peril to which the salvors and the persons saved are exposed. The Eastern Monarch, 1 Lushington, 81.

651. In cases of salvage of both life and property, the whole property arrested—ship, freight and cargo—are liable for both species of salvage. The Eliza, No. 1626, 21st April, 1863.

652. But in cases of salvage to life only the ship alone is liable for the salvage pursuant to the statute, and not the cargo jointly with the ship. Ibid.

653. In a case of salvage of life and property, held, that the whole salvage, both of ship and property, was to be borne by ship and cargo, according to their rateable values. Ibid.

654. In a case of salvage, the court having out of the proceeds of ship and cargo, amounting to £608, awarded one-half to salvors of property, awarded £150 to life salvors, taking off the crew, together with costs to both plaintiffs. The Anna Helena, 49 L. T. 204; 5 Asp. 142.

655. A steam vessel, having sustained severe damage by a collision, some of her crew, who were foreigners, without any order from the master, got into one of the boats and rowed away. They were shortly afterwards picked up by a fishing smack. Held, that the owners and crew of the smack were entitled to salvage remuneration. The Cairo, L. R. 4 A. & E. 184; 43 L. J. Adm. 33, 320; 2 Asp. N.S. 257.

656. The plaintiffs saved the lives of several passengers on board a German vessel wrecked on the coast of England. Subsequently a large quantity of specie was recovered from the wreck by divers employed by the owners of such specie. Held, by the Court of Appeal (Brett, L. J., dissenting), affirming the decision of the Admiralty Court, that the plaintiffs were entitled to salvage remuneration out of the specie so recovered. The Cargo ex Schiller, 1 P. D. 473; 2 ibid. C. A. 145; 46 L. J. P. D. & A. 9; 3 Asp. N.S. 226; Ibid. C. A. 439.

657. In the absence of special contract some property in the ship or cargo must be saved in order to found the liability of the owners of the ship or cargo to the payment of salvage remuneration in respect of life or otherwise. The Cargo ex Sarpedon, 3 P. D. 28; 3 Asp. N.S. 509.

658. Salvors rescued the crew and passengers and also certain specie in a vessel, but the vessel itself was lost. In a suit instituted against the specie, a sum was awarded in respect of the above services. The owners of the specie then claimed contribution from the owners of the vessel in respect of so much of the sum as was awarded on account of life salvage. Held, that the owners of the vessel were not liable. Ibid.

659. A ship was wrecked in the Red Sea off an island which was uninhabited and without water. The C. took the passengers and crew on board, and brought them to England. Held, that the service was not life salvage. The Cargo ex Woolsung, 44 L. J. Adm. N.S. 45.

660. The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, which is empowered by act of parliament to maintain lifeboats, agreed with certain tug companies that the companies should provide tug-boats to tow the lifeboats to vessels in distress, the board contracting to pay fifteen guineas for each occasion. The agreement contained a proviso that nothing contained therein should prejudice or affect the rights of the companies in regard to services in saving ships or other property to be rendered by their steamers. Held, that the agreement did not bar the companies or the masters and crews of the tugs from claiming life salvage. The Pensacola, B. & L. 307.

661. A steamship was requested by another steamship in distress to stand by her. An agreement was accordingly made between the two masters for a fixed sum that the sound vessel would remain by the damaged one till she was in a safe position to get to port. The sound vessel remained by the damaged one until the latter was about to sink, when she took her crew on board, and the damaged steamer immediately afterwards sank. The owners, master and crew of the salving ship brought an action for life salvage. Held, that as no res was saved, the action would not lie either as a salvage action simply or on the agreement. The Renpor, 8 P. D. 115; 5 Asp. 98.

662. Officers and crews of her Majesty's ships, with the consent of the Admiralty, recover salvage, as well for saving life as for services to ship and cargo. The Alma, 1 Lushington, 381.

See c. 2, p. 1849.

3. Payment by Board of Trade.

(a) Generally.

665. Salvage in respect of the preservation of the life of any person belonging to any such ship or boat, shall be payable by the owners of the ship or boat in priority to all other claims for salvage. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 459.

666. Where such ship or boat is destroyed, or the value thereof is insufficient, after payment of the expenses incurred, to pay the life salvage, the Board of Trade may award to the salvors of life out of the Mercantile Marine Fund such sum as it deems fit, in whole or part satisfaction of life salvage so left unpaid. Ibid.

667. The Board of Trade may, out of the Mercantile Marine Fund, direct payment to be made for affording assistance towards the preservation of life and property in cases of shipwreck and distress at sea, and for rewards for the preservation of life in such cases. The M. S. Repeal Act, 1854 (c. 120), s. 7.

(b) *Rocket Apparatus, Life Boats, &c.

668. The Board of Trade may out of the mercantile marine fund direct payment to be made of such expenses for establishing and maintaining on the coasts of the United Kingdom proper lifeboats with the necessary crews and equipments. Ibid.

1. Generally.

671. Salvage is payable out of ship, freight and cargo, at risk, without distinction as to the nature of the cargo. The Longford, 6 P. D. 60; 4 Asp. 385.

672. Salvage services were rendered to a vessel carrying cargo as a common carrier. The peril had been caused by the negligence of the master. Held, that the salvors could maintain a personal action against the owners of the vessel for salvage of the cargo as well as of the ship. Duncan v. Dundee, Perth, and London Shipping Co., 4th Series, vol. 5, p. 742. [SCOTCH.]

2. Steam Vessels with Passengers.†

673. In cases of salvage of steam boats carrying passengers, the salvage reward is not to be estimated by the same considerations of value as with regard to other vessels. Steam vessels are a peculiar species of vessels making large profits, † (169) In cases of salvage the court has no authority to allow a reward for saving life. This is a common duty of humanity.

But when the saving of life is connected with the saving of property the court may consider it in fixing the amount of salvage. The Emblem, Davels, 61. [AMERICAN.]

(169a) A larger remuneration should be given when the salvage service is performed for steam vessels than in ordinary cases, inasmuch as they usually carry many passengers, and the cause of humanity requires that prompt and efficient salvage services rendered to them should be liberally rewarded. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 125. and are not therefore to pay for such services as though only carrying ballast. Humanity requires that every possible encouragement, in the way of liberal reward, should be given, in order to induce a prompt and efficient assistance to them, and the reward must be beyond a mere proportion of the value, as in ordinary cases. The Ardincaple, 3 Hagg. 153.

3. Fishing Boats, Gear, &c.

675. All fishing boats, all rigging, gear, or other appurtenances of fishing boats, all nets, buoys, floats, or other fishing implements whatsoever, found or picked up at sea, shall as soon as possible be delivered to the collector of customs, if the article saved be taken into England, and to the commissary of marine if the article saved is taken into France. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 79,* reciting the convention concerning the fisheries between this country and France, Art. 61.

676. The collector of customs, or the commissary of marine, as the case may be, shall restore the articles saved to the owners thereof, or to their representatives. These functionaries may, when the circumstances are such as to call for it, award to the salvors a suitable compensation for their trouble and care. This compensation, which shall in no case exceed one-fourth of the actual value of the articles saved, shall be paid to the owners. Ibid. Art. 62.

676a. Whenever any fishing boat, rigging, gear, or any other appurtenance, of any fishing boat, or any net, buoy, float, or other fishing implement, shall have been found or picked up at sea, and brought into a British port, and shall not be forthwith delivered to the collector of customs, pursuant to the sixty-first article, any magistrate or justice of the peace, on application of the collector, may issue his warrant for delivering of the articles to such collector, who shall take possession of the same, and deliver them to the owner thereof or his representative, on payment to him, for behoof of the salvors, of such compensation as the collector shall award pursuant to the sixty-second article. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 79, s. 15.

685. For provisions requiring persons finding any anchor, cable, or other sort of ship's stores or materials, within or at the entrance of the river Humber, to bring them without delay to Hull, and within two days afterwards to deliver them to the owner or master, or his agent, or at the place appointed for depositing such articles when unclaimed (penalty for default, or for destroying, damaging, or removing any such articles, or any buoy, buoy rope, or other mark, or fastening thereto, £20), see 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 55.

686. A vessel derelict, waterlogged, and very disabled, having been met with by another vessel, the master and mate of which fished down the hatchway of the derelict, and dragged up certain property, which they afterwards used up and shared amongst their crew, a monition at the instance of the king in his office of Admiralty was decreed against them to show cause why the same should not be brought into the registry, to be proceeded against as droits of Admiralty. The King v. Property Derelict, 1 Hagg. 383.

687. The property having been afterwards brought in by the master pursuant to the monition, and with an affidavit as to the goods found, and his ignorance of the law requiring a condemnation thereof, the property was condemned as a droit of Admiralty, and on a prayer of the master for a salvage remuneration, a moiety thereof decreed to him. Ibid.

(179) If the property saved remains in the custody of the court pending a suit for salvage, and it perishes by accident, as by fire, without any default on either side, the loss is to be borne by the owners and salvors as a common loss. The Three Friends, 4 C. Rob. 268; Story on Bailment, s. 623.

(180) But if the property has been delivered to either upon bail or stipulation, the loss is to be borne exclusively by such party, for he takes upon himself the risk. Ibid.

§ (183) The valuation of a recaptured ship, in order to ascertain the rate of salvage, may be determined by the policy of insurance, if there be no reason to suspect she is undervalued, and the same rule may be observed as to the goods where there are policies upon them; if that, however, should not be the case, the salvors have a right to insist upon proof of the real value, which may be given by the production of the merchant's invoices. 1 Park on Ins. 327; Beawes' Lex Merc. 147.

(184) In many cases where the value is known to be large and the service small, a proper remuneration may be made without ascertaining the precise value. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 123. [AMERICAN.]

is in the habit of giving a smaller proportion where the property is large, and a higher proportion where the property is small, and for the obvious reason that where the property is of small value, a small proportion would not hold out a sufficient encouragement, whereas in cases of considerable value a small proportion would afford an adequate remuneration. The Mary Stenhouse, 8 Ir. Jur. Adm. N.S. 58. See also The Syrian, 2 Asp. 387.

691. Although the value of the property salvaged is to be considered in the estimate of the remuneration, it must not be allowed to raise the quantum to an amount altogether out of proportion to the services actually rendered. The Amerique, L. R. 6 P. C. 468; 2 Asp. N.S. P. C. 460.

692. Salvage services were rendered to a vessel and cargo bound for London. The salvors took them in to Lisbon, from whence the cargo was subsequently transhipped and brought to London. It was asserted that the cargo was unsaleable at Lisbon. Held, that the proper method of arriving at the value of the cargo at Lisbon would be, not on any assertion of its being unsaleable there, but by putting it at between £7 and £8 per cent. less than the proceeds of its sale in London, deducting freight and charges for the voyage from Lisbon to London, but allowing a pro rata freight as far as London. The George Dean, Swabey, 291.

693. The value of freight salvaged is reckoned pro rata itineris peracti, and the other equities of the case. The Norma, 1 Lushington, 124; 3 L. T. N.S. 340; 1 Asp. 7.

694. A ship bound from Honduras to England was disabled on the voyage, and towed into Bermuda, where expenses nearly equal to the whole freight were incurred to refit; the voyage home was afterwards completed, and the cargo delivered. The court allowed salvage upon one-half of the total gross freight. The Cumberland, 6 Jur. N.S. 325; 5 L. T. N.S. 496. [IRISH.]

695. On salvage of cargo, the freight thereon, as well as the cargo itself, is liable to salvage. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 233.

696. The freight is not to be deducted, but to be added to the cargo, in estimating the value in respect of which the salvage remuneration is to be allotted. Ibid.

697. In estimating the value of recaptured property for the purpose of a salvage apportionment the true rule is to take the value, not at the time of capture, but at the place of restitution, which is to be considered with reference to the moment of the arrival of the property in port. The Progress, Edwards, 222.

(b) Deductions.*

704. Salvors are, generally speaking, entitled to salvage upon ship, freight, and

(185) In decreeing salvage at an intermediate port of distress freight can rarely become a distinct subject of consideration in the apportionment of the salvage, for it is not yet earned. It is only in cases where freight pro rata itineris is due that it can be considered. But if the ship carries on the cargo, the freight earned is made to contribute to the salvage expenses, in the adjustment made at the end of the voyage. (The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumner, 566.) Where, however, the ship is disabled or lost, and the cargo is to be forwarded in another vessel or is sold, it is often desirable that a partial adjustment should be made at the port of distress. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 178. [AMERICAN.]

706. In all cases of salvage, those who conduct the service are entitled to have the value of the whole property stated, that is, the ship, freight, and cargo. The Charlotte Wylie, 5 Notes of Cases, 6.

707. Where the freight is included in the cargo they have it de facto, though not in the same manner as where the freight is considered as a distinct item. Ibid.

708. The owners of the cargo claimed a deduction for freight. Held, that if it were to be deducted from the value of the cargo, it must be taken afterwards as a separate item upon which salvage would be decreed, and that no dispute being raised between the owners of the ship and the cargo, the item could not be allowed. Ibid.

709. In a salvage suit, expenses, by which all parties interested in the cargo have received benefit, are proper deductions to be allowed to the owners. The Simpson, 3 Jur. 270. [IRISH.]

710. A vessel found derelict at sea was brought to this country by salvors, but in consequence of the state of the weather they were compelled to run her ashore at Eastbourne, from whence she was brought round by other persons to Portsmouth. Held, that the expenses of bringing the vessel from Eastbourne to Portsmouth were proper deductions to be allowed from the value of the ship and cargo. The Watt, 2 W. Rob. 71.

711. In ascertaining in a salvage suit the net value of the cargo saved, the 2½ per cent. discount for prompt payment, and certain other items, viz. for custom-house entries, freight, weighing, brokerage, and commission, sworn to be accustomed charges, were allowed to be deducted, but not a gratuity of £5 5s. to the master. The Peace, Swabey, 115; 27 L. T. 255; 4 W. R. 635.

712. Semble, necessary expenses, without which the cargo could not have been sold, will be allowed as deductions unless contrary to the rules of trade. Ibid.

713. In estimating the value of cargo for a salvage award no deductions for primage or insurance will be allowed. The Charlotte Wylie, 5 Notes of Cases, 6; The Fleece, 2 W. Rob. 282; 7 Notes of Cases, 537.

714. Disbursements by the marshal of the court for the necessary expenses of unshipping and storing the cargo saved are a proper deduction from the estimate of value for the purposes of salvage reward. The Hebe, 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. iii.

715. But not the amount of a bottomry bond executed prior to the salvage services being rendered, nor debts contracted for wages, provisions, and other necessaries for the crew subsequently to the salvage. Ibid.

716. Held, that a bottomry bond given subsequently to the salvage and wages accruing during the same time are legitimate deductions from the value of the property saved. The Selina, 2 Notes of Cases, 18.

717. But not the wages earned prior to the salvage. Ibid.

718. Expenses of prosecuting certain persons forcibly dispossessing salvors who earned subsequently to the rendition, and in continuation of the salvage services, a bottomry bond given by the salvors, and other charges fairly and necessarily incurred by the salvors or owners in the storage or preservation of the property, are to be deducted from the value. The owner is benefited only to the extent of the net value saved to him. But wages, bottomry bonds, or other liens earned or created antecedent to the rendition of the salvage services are not to be deducted; for these are saved to the persons interested in them, as much as the goods, and are subject to the salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 124. [AMERICAN.]

(189) In salvage causes in the American Admiralty Courts, costs and expense are usually made a charge upon the gross property, unless caused by the laches or other improper conduct of any particular claimant, in which case they are made to fall on him alone. The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumner, 581; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 92. [AMERICAN.]

(190) In the district court of Florida at Key West, the master's expenses of keeping property proceeded against in the Admiralty Court there are subjected to examination and revision of the court. Ibid. 93.

are, with the consent of the master, in possession of a ship in distress, can form no item of deduction, as against the original salvors' claim in the value of the property saved. The Fleece, 3 W. Rob. 281; 7 Notes of Cases, 537.

719. In a cause of salvage a tender of £534 was made before action, and refused. After action, a tender of £275 only was made, on the ground that the salvors by their improper conduct subsequently to the service in causing a detention of the vessel had occasioned a loss of £260 to the owners. Held, that assuming the truth of such misconduct no such deduction from salvage could be made. The Hopewell, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 249.

720. In a question between the owners of a ship and salvors, the expense of making a valuation of the property saved is a proper charge against the owners. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 410.

721. But as to costs of commission of appraisement, see tit. Costrs, p. 411.

722. Semble, salvage remuneration is to be calculated on the value of the ship and cargo, without any previous deduction for wages due at the time when the salvage service was rendered. The Sahira, 7 Jur. 182.

(c) Termination of Services.

723. The salvage concluded at one port, and the cargo was transhipped and brought to another and there sold. Salvors held only entitled to salvage on the value at the port where their services concluded. The George Dean, Swabey, 290; 30 L. T. 220; 6 W. R. 263.

724. Salvors are entitled to salvage upon a value calculated at the place where their services terminated. The Norma, 1 Lushington, 124; 3 L. T. N.S. 340; 1 Asp. 7.

725. As to a salvage service having been completed, so as to disentitle those who recovered anchors to share therein, see The Endeavour, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 6, 334; 6 Notes of Cases, 56; and No. 384, p. 1824.

726. The general rule, unless the exception can be distinctly proved, is that the value of the ship and cargo shall be taken at the port whither the ship is carried. Cargo ex The Loodianah, No. 1403, 21 April, 1863.

727. The ship L., on her voyage from Moulmein to Liverpool, laden with teak, was in distress in the Indian Ocean, when she was fallen in with by the N. The master and crew of the L. were taken on board the N., and some of the N.'s crew succeeded in getting the L. into Galle, the N. proceeding to Bombay with the master and crew of the L. Communications took place on behalf of the N. with the owners of the ship and cargo of the L. in England. The owners of cargo declined to interfere, but the owners of ship authorized the subsequent proceedings. An agent of the N. proceeded from Bombay to Galle, caused the cargo to be unladen and stowed, the necessary repairs to be done to the L., and the cargo to be reshipped, and incurred considerable expenses and loss of time in superintending these measures. The L., under the charge of the mate and others of the N., and a further crew, sailed from Galle and arrived in England. Salvage as to the ship was settled by negotiation. In a suit against the owners of the cargo for salvage to the cargo, held, that the salvage services terminated on the ship's arrival at Galle, and that the value of the cargo must be taken as at its arrival at Galle, and not at its arrival in England. Ibid.

10. Rate of Contribution.*

728. Ship and cargo must each pay its

* (192) In awarding salvage compensation no distinction can be drawn between vessel and cargo, on the ground that less exertion was necessary to save the latter. The service is considered as a single service, to be compensated by a quantum of the proceeds of the whole property saved. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421. [AMERICAN.]

(193) This discrimination in favour of gold and silver does not obtain in the American Courts of Admiralty, but when silver and bullion are saved in connection with the ship and cargo, they pay, as in a case of general average, the same rate of salvage as the ship and other articles of the cargo. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 174; 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 620; and see Warder v. La Belle Creole, 1 Peters, Adm. 31, 46.

(194) If the ship and freight are accidentally lost, and the cargo or a part of it only is saved, no principle of law requires that in all such cases the total salvage awarded should be apportioned upon all the goods saved according to their respective values. It is a own share of salvage, neither can be made liable for the salvage due from the other, whether the salvors proceed in the Admiralty Court, or before the local magistrates. The Pyrenees, 3 N. R. 251.

729. A different rate of salvage for the ship and different parts of the cargo held to be unusual, inconvenient, and leading to error. The Vesta, 2 Hagg. 189.

731. On appeal from award of magistrates on that and other grounds, the court refused (the other grounds being held insufficient) to disturb the award on the ground of variation in apportionment; but declined in consequence thereof to condemn the appellants in costs. Ibid.

732. There is no distinction that the services rendered were of greater importance to the ship than to the cargo, and that she should therefore bear more of the burthen, or vice versa. The Emma, 2 W. Rob. 318, 319.

734. A salvage suit was entered against the vessel alone, her value being £4,247. The court, advertent to the difficulty of apportioning salvage where the value of the cargo was not stated, awarded £600 on the value of the vessel alone. The Mary Pleasants, Swabey, 224.

735. If, in a suit for salvage, the ship alone has been proceeded against, the question would be what amount of salvage should be decreed with reference to the united value of the ship, freight, and cargo, and what proportion thereof the ship should defray. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

736. In a case of salvage of life and property, held that the whole salvage, both of life and property, was to be borne by ship and cargo according to their rateable values. The Fusileer, Br. & Lushington, 341; 2 Asp. 177, P. C.; 10 L. T. N.S. 699; 12 W. R. 968.

737. Salvors having agreed to take £400, the owners of the ship and freight were, in an action subsequently entered against them, condemned in such proportion of that sum as the value of the ship and freight bore to the whole property saved. The Peace, Swabey, 115.

738. The owners of the cargo were afterwards proceeded against. Held, that the cargo was, according to its net value, liable proportionably for payment of a share of the £400, and of the costs of the original suit. Ibid.

739. The plaintiff was the owner of the hull of a wrecked vessel, out of which the cargo was saved, the court apportioned the expenses incurred in saving both ship and cargo, between him and the owners of the cargo, making the plaintiff bear one-tenth of the expense, and the defendants the remaining nine-tenths. The Augusta Jesse, 4 Jur. N.S. 227. [IRISH.]

740. The owners of goods on board a ship are bound to contribute to the salvage of the ship and cargo, as in a case of general average. Briggs v. Merchant Traders' Ship Loan and Assurance Association, 13 Q. B. 167; 13 Jur. 787; 18 L. J. Q. B. 178.

741. When ship and cargo are in peril the fact that the shipowners have, by the act of the master, become bound to pay, and have paid, a sum of money for preservation of ship and cargo, and that the master, in so binding them, pursued a reasonable course under the circumstances, is not conclusive that the whole sum was chargeable to general average, so as to bind the cargo owners to pay their proportion. Anderson, Tritton & Co. v. The Ocean Steamship Co., 10 App. Cas. 107; 78 L. T. 113.

742. A shipowner who has properly paid salvage to pilots for saving ship and cargo is entitled to a general average contribution in respect of the sum so paid. Akerblom v. Price, 7 Q. B. D. 129; 4 Asp. 441, C. A.

case of wreck in which the principle of salvus qui perit applies. The rights of the co-shippers are distinct, not confused nor blended. The goods of A. are not made to contribute to the salvage on B.'s goods, nor vice versa. It fol-

745. Primâ facie it is sufficient for salvors to show that they have brought the vessel to a place of safety. The Houthandel, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 28.

746. The onus then lies on the objectors to show that the salvors ought to have taken the vessel to another port. Ibid.

747. Semble, it is not the duty of salvors to comply with the request of the master of vessel salvaged to be conducted to a foreign port to their own manifest inconvenience. Ibid. 25; The Palinurus, 23 July, 1842.

748. Salvors in possession of a vessel abandoned by all her crew but two, who had been unable to effect their escape; held, justified under the circumstances in taking her into port without delay for the purpose of taking her crew on board again. The Orbona, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 161.

749. A vessel on her Majesty's service and bound to Heligoland having discovered a vessel derelict, held to have acted right in taking the vessel salvaged to Heligoland instead of bringing her into an English port, especially as the ship's papers could not be found. L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 48.

750. It is desirable and more correct in cases of salvage, and semble of a foreign vessel derelict and rescued from pirates by British subjects, that the vessel should be brought for adjudication into an English port. The Calypso, 2 Hagg. 212.

750a. Salvors pronounced blameable for taking a vessel salvaged to an inconvenient port. The Eleanor Charlotta, 1 Hagg. 156.

12. Right of Possession.

751. Where a vessel is abandoned, and becomes a derelict, the owners of cargo on board are entitled, until the shipowner again gets possession of the ship, to treat the contract of affreightment as abandoned, and to have the cargo delivered to them at any port to which it may be brought by salvors, on giving bail to cover salvage, and without payment of freight to the shipowner. The Cito, C. A. 468.

751a. Where a salvaging ship takes a crew off a vessel in distress, and puts men on board her, refusing to allow her own crew to return, and the two vessels are, in company, navigated into port, there is no such abandonment of the ship as to put an end to the contract of carriage, and consequently there will be freight due upon the consignees requiring the delivery of the cargo, such freight being pro rata, assuming the port not to be the port to which the cargo ought to have been taken under the contract of carriage. The Septir, 5 Asp. 411.

† (195a) According to the course of Admiralty proceedings no person can come into that court and ask its assistance, unless he can ex æquo et bono make out a case fit for its interposition. The Schooner Boston, 1 Sumner, 341. (Story, J.) [AMERICAN.]

(196) The owner of a licensed wrecker, on the coast of Florida, impliedly engages that his vessel is seaworthy, and it is required so to be by the act of Congress which authorizes the licence. He is therefore held liable for damage to goods taken on board from a wreck caused by the unseaworthy condition of his vessel. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 171. [AMERICAN.]

(197) The obligation which a vessel is under to warn another of a danger clearly discerned by her, but of which the other is ignorant, is so far an imperfect one, that it may not supply a right of action by the party injured against the other for a neglect to comply with it. But if the party in fault comes into a court of justice seeking salvage for rescuing the other from a danger which he might have prevented, it is clear that all right to a salvage reward is destroyed. Salvage is a recompense resting essentially upon equitable considerations; the salvor must present his feiture of salvage on persons finding or taking possession of wreck without giving up possession thereof, or the required notice thereof to the receiver of wreck of the district, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 450.

claims with clean hands. The American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 1 Blatch. & How. 30; The Angelina, 5 A. R. 200; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 118. [AMERICAN.]

(198) A wrecking vessel and a brig were sailing in the same direction along the Florida reef nearly in company. The master of the wrecking vessel foresaw that the brig, unless she changed her course, would strike a hidden reef known to him, but unknown to the master of the brig; and he had the opportunity, with little or no inconvenience to himself, to warn the master of the brig of the danger, but he omitted to do so, and the brig struck the reef, after which he rendered salvage services to her in getting her off. Salvage allowed, but at a very reduced rate. Ibid.

(199) The compensation to be awarded presupposes good faith, meritorious service, complete restoration, and incorruptible vigilance, so far as the property is within the reach or under the control of the salvors. The Schooner Boston, 1 Sumner, 341. (Story, J.) [AMERICAN.]

(200) The party who asks aid must come into court with clean hands. In cases of salvage the party founds himself upon a meritorious service, and upon the implied understanding that he brings before the court for its final award all the property saved, with entire good faith, and he asks a compensation for the restitution of it uninjured and unembezzled by him. Ibid.

(201) How far the misconduct of one salvor may rightfully be held to prejudice the claims of his co-salvors, it is not in all cases easy to determine. The courts endeavour to discriminate between the innocent and meritorious, and the guilty and worthless, rewarding the one and punishing the other. But in cases of joint or associated service this discrimination cannot always be made consistently with either sound policy or justice to the owners of the property, but the innocent and meritorious salvor must be made to suffer for the misconduct or neglect of his co-salvors. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 227. [AMERICAN.]

There are instances where gross negligence, independent of any wilful inattention, has been visited with the forfeiture of the whole claim for salvage remuneration. There is also another kind of negligence, the effect of which is to diminish the amount of salvage reward, not to take it entirely away. The Cape Packet, 3 W. Rob. 125; 6 Notes of Cases, 565.

758. Semble, the deduction in the amount of salvage awarded is to be measured not by the amount of damage sustained, but in proportion to the quantum of negligence or ignorance displayed by the salvors. Ibid.

202. As a general rule all who participate in the misconduct, by consent, encouragement, connivance, or concealment, or by seeking to derive advantage from it, become thereby aiders and abettors, and ought in justice to suffer in the same degree as the principal, and the fraud, neglect, or other misconduct, of the principal salvor, or dux facti, may primâ facie fairly be imputed to his co-salvors, as the act of their adopted agent or representative. As they seek to derive a benefit from his lawful acts, so they should suffer in general the just consequences of his unlawful acts. Ibid. 228.

(203) Every act of misconduct of the salvors as to the property, fraudulently or wantonly done to the injury of the owners, at any time before the salvage is decreed, is to be treated in the same way as if it had occurred while the property was in their exclusive possession. The Schooner Boston, 1 Sumner, 341. (Story, J.) [AMERICAN.]

(204) Good faith and fairness are required of salvors in the manner of settling the salvage. Houseman v. North Carolina, 15 Peters, 40; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 22, 233. [AMERICAN.]

(205) When the master of a vessel, in the course of a voyage, engages in a salvage service, he cannot oppose to the claim of any of his crew for a share of the salvage their misconduct during the voyage, if they are guilty of no misconduct during the time they are engaged in the salvage. The Centurion, Ware, 477. [AMERICAN.]

(206) In an action by one of the crew of a vessel against the owner for his share of salvage money, paid by the owner of goods saved from a wreck without any deduction for embezzlement, the owner of the vessel cannot set up in defence that the plaintiff had embezzled a portion of the goods. Blake v. Patten, 3 Shep. 173. [AMERICAN.]

760a. If the conduct of salvors who may have rendered essential service is directed by improper motives; if they attempt to usurp authority by depriving the captain and crew of the possession of their ship; or use undue interference with them in the discharge of their duties, the court may reduce the salvage otherwise due to them. The San Nicola, 6 Jur. 91. [IRISH.]

761. If salvors, in order to magnify the estimate of their own services to a ship in distress, take the master and crew on shore, the court will mark its disapproval of such conduct by withholding, or at least reducing, salvage remuneration. The Magnolia, 2 Ir. Jur. N.S. 235; 29 L. T. 40.

764. The court will not entertain the salvage claim of parties who have been convicted for misconduct in the same transaction for which they claim the salvage reward. The Wear Packet, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 256; sed contra The Louisa, No. 1507, 17 February, 1863.

765. Essential services had been rendered, but there had been errors of conduct on both sides, tending to reduce the value of the property, which was about £32,000. The court in its award took these circumstances into consideration, and awarded £800 and costs. The Prins Frederick, 2 Dodson, 482.

766. The plaintiffs put off to a vessel that had struck upon a reef, and brought her to a place of safety. At the time they put off they knew that the master of the vessel had given directions that no stranger should put off to her, and that with his crew he was watching her from the shore, and they also knew that if the vessel was allowed to float off on the top of high water she would inevitably have gone ashore unless prevented in time. Held, that the services rendered were of a highly meritorious nature, but that the salvors had been guilty of misconduct (1) in not offering their services to the master before putting off to the vessel; (2) in not warning the master of the dangerous position of the vessel should she float off on high water. Value of ship and cargo saved £2,300; £50 awarded and certificate for costs given. The Lisbon, I. R. 1 Eq. 144. [IRISH.]

767. Negligence may in some instances forfeit all claim to salvage remuneration; but the negligence which would have that effect must be such as cannot be attributed to mere error of judgment. The Cherubim, I. R. 2 Eq. 172; 3 Asp. 156. [IRISH.]

768. The barque N. fell in with the K. a derelict barque in the Atlantic, and put five men on board who navigated her for three days. The barque B. then fell in with the K., and the five men of the N. on board of the K. were, at their own request, taken on board the B. The B. then sent some of her own crew on board the K. and took her in tow, and towed her until the tow rope broke, when the vessels parted company, and the B.'s men on board the K., with the assistance of the L., a steamship which they afterwards fell in with, brought the K. into Fal-mouth. In suits instituted on behalf of the masters, owners, and crews of the N., the B., and the L., the court held that the N. was not entitled to salvage reward.* (The Undaunted, Lush. 90, and The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. and two of the crew of the K. afterwards went on board the Y. but refused to take back her master, and also refused the services of a steam-tug. The mate saved the Y. from her immediate danger. From want of local knowledge he anchored the Y. in an insecure place, when she began to drift, was forsaken by the salvors and sank. She was subsequently raised by her owners at a considerable expense. In an action for salvage the owners of the Y. denied that a reward was due and counter-claimed for damages. Held, that the mate was guilty of misconduct in refusing to take the master of the Y. on board of her and to engage the services of the tug; that if the Y. had been ultimately saved such conduct would have worked a partial forfeiture only, but that as the loss arising from the misconduct was probably equal to that from which the Y. was first rescued no salvage reward was due. The Yan Yean, 8 P. D. 147; 52 L. J. P. D. 67; 5 Asp. 135.

769a. But held, that the circumstances of the case did not call for the condemnation of the owner of the K. in damages. Ibid.

2. Wilful Misconduct generally.*

772. The burden of proving wilful or criminal misconduct is on those who impute it, and it must be proved, like any other criminal charge, beyond reasonable doubt. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 528; 1 Asp. 168; 8 Jur. N.S. 753; 31 L. J. Adm. 210; 10 W. R. 850; The Charles Adolphe, Swabey, 156.

773. Wilful or criminal misconduct works an entire forfeiture of salvage. Ibid.

774. Salvors in the course of rendering assistance to a derelict vessel engaged with a steam-tug that for the sum of £7

she would tow them and the derelict into port. By the misconduct of the steam-tug the vessel took the ground, and the services of other salvors became necessary to bring her into safety. Held, that the misconduct of the steam-tug operated as a forfeiture of the claim to salvage by the first salvors. The Atlas, 1 Asp. 168.

775. If the misconduct of the salvors has been very great and attended with great loss to the vessel which they ought to have salvaged, they forfeit the whole or part of the salvage to which they would otherwise have been entitled. The Glory, 14 Jur. 678.

776. Wilful neglect or wilful misconduct entails a forfeiture of the whole claim for salvage remuneration. The Cape Packet, 3 W. Rob. 125; 6 Notes of Cases, 565.

777. In performing salvage services bad faith and intention not to do the whole duty, or to protract from improper motives the duration of the service, are acts of wilful misconduct which forfeit all right to salvage. The Magdalen, 5 L. T. N.S. 807; 31 L. J. Adm. 22.

778. When essential service has been rendered, the amount of compensation for that service may not only be diminished by reason of the subsequent negligence or misconduct of the salvors, but all reward may be forfeited. The Dosseitei, 10 Jur. 865; The Duke of Manchester, Ibid. 863; 4 Notes of Cases, 580, and the cases there cited; Ibid., on appeal, 5 Notes of Cases, 470; 6 Moore, P. C. C. 91.

779. A ship in charge of a licensed pilot got upon the Goodwin Sands. She was assisted off by a steamer, taken in tow, and then got upon Sandwich Flats. Held, that the steamer was not relieved from the responsibility of watching the course of the ship because the latter had a licensed pilot on board, and that as the ship's getting on Sandwich Flats might have been prevented by ordinary care and skill, and culpable negligence was therefore imputable to the steamer, her claim to salvage compensation was for-

780. Held, further, that the master of the tug could not separate the towing of the vessel from his claim for salvage services for getting the vessel off the sand, for that they constituted one transaction of salvage. Ibid.

781. Salvors guilty of misconduct in resisting the employment of a steamer and creating a riot, held to have thereby forfeited all claim to salvage reward, but under the circumstances not condemned in costs. The Martha, Swabey, 489. See also The Dosseitei, 10 Jur. 865.

783. Claim to salvage for important services to a vessel and cargo derelict on the coast of Africa, held forfeited by the misconduct of the salvors in improperly retaining possession of and dealing with the property salvaged without regard to the owner's interests, and under circumstances of suspicion of collusion with the owner's agent. The Lady Worsley, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. 3. Refusal of further Assistance.*

789. A ship in great distress was taken by the salvors to, and anchored in, a place of comparative safety. She might have been placed in perfect safety, if the salvors had then availed themselves of further assistance, which was offered, but, instead of so doing, they left her at anchor for six hours, while they proceeded for ropes and spare to their own port. Held, that by neglecting to avail themselves of such assistance, the salvors had not conducted themselves with due regard to the lives and property on board the ship, and that the amount of salvage remuneration must be diminished by such misconduct. On a value of £10,000, £50 awarded as salvage, with costs of salvors. The Dosseitei, 10 Jur. 865.

790. The court, in allotting a salvage reward, reduced the amount due in respect of the services rendered, on the ground of the salvors having interfered with the master in attempting to exclude further assistance. The Dantzic Packet, 3 Hagg. 383.

791. Smacksmen came alongside a vessel in distress on the Corton and Holmes Sands and offered their services, which were rejected. They stayed alongside and prevented the acceptance of the services of a tug to tow the vessel off. It did not appear that if the tug had been engaged she could then have extricated the vessel. Afterwards the smacksmen were engaged to kedge the vessel off, but that proving unsuccessful they lightened the vessel of much of her cargo, and the next day brought her off the sand. If there had been no misconduct the court would have awarded £300; £100 awarded to the salvors, and two-thirds only of their costs. The Glory, 14 Jur. 676.

In a claim for salvage to a dismasted vessel at anchor, the salvors having refused to quit her, and obstructed the master and agent in taking her into harbour by a hired steamer. Held, that the salvors had misconducted themselves, and tender of £30 pronounced for with costs from the time of refusal of the tender. The Black Boy, 3 Hagg. 386, n.

795. Unless a vessel has been utterly abandoned, and is, according to the legal meaning of the word, a derelict, salvors are bound to give up charge to the master on his appearing and claiming such charge. The Champion, B. & L. 69.

796. The court will not lay down any general rule, but will be guided by the circumstances of each case, whether or not the master of a salving vessel is justified in refusing to allow the master and crew of the salvaged vessel to return to her before the completion of the salvage services. The Cleopatra, 37 L. J. Adm. 31.

797. A ship laden with lead and iron was sunk off the mouth of the Thames. The salvors saved a part of the cargo, and were proceeding in their further salvage services, when the owners interfered, and claimed the right to save the property themselves. The salvors forcibly resisted the owners' claim. Held, that the ship was not a derelict, that the authority of the owners remained, that the salvors were justified in their proceedings up to the time the owners interfered, and would have been entitled to be paid for their work and labour up to that time, even though they had not saved any part of the cargo, if prevented from continuing their work by the owners, but that their forcible resistance to the will of the owners of the property was such gross misconduct as worked a forfeiture of all salvage. Suit instituted by them dismissed with costs. The Barefoot, 14 Jur. 841.

* (213) A brig in going out of the harbour of New York grounded on the Outer Middle, below the narrows, in a storm and bilged, and the master and crew left her. The salvors who were wreckers, and kept a vessel and crew in readiness to assist vessels in distress, proceeded to her, and commenced saving the cargo and materials. The next morning the master returned to the wreck in a steam-tug, but without lighters necessary to save the cargo and materials, and demanded possession, which the salvors refused, asserting that they were legally in possession. In the afternoon an agent of the owners also demanded possession, which the salvors also refused, but they employed all the men who came down and were willing to work in saving the property. Held, that possession having been taken when the vessel was abandoned derelict and in peril of destruction, the salvors had a right to retain it until the salvage was completed, and that no other person could interfere with them forcibly, provided they were able to effect the purpose and were conducting the business with fidelity and vigour. The John Gipin, Olcott, 77. [AMERICAN.]

† (214) Salvors may incur a forfeiture of their claims by negligence, but whether, besides such forfeiture, they may not also in a case of gross negligence be responsible to the owners of the property for loss occasioned thereby, does not appear ever to have been the subject of any judicial determination. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 170. [AMERICAN.]

(215) Salvors are bound not only to scrupulous honesty themselves, but while the property is in their custody, they are jointly required to employ every reasonable degree of diligence to guard it from plunder by others; any negligence in this respect, if not visited with forfeiture of salvage, will be remembered in fixing the amount. The John Perkins, 19 Law Rep. 490. [AMERICAN.]

(216) Salvors have no right unnecessarily to damage the goods, nor to put them in a situation where they are likely to be stolen. They are to take the same care of them that they, uninsured, would wish others to take of their goods under like circumstances. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 230. [AMERICAN.]

(217) A valuable ship and cargo were ashore on the Florida reef, and the wreckers supposing that they knew perfectly well the depth of water and the channels around the ship, neglected to sound and ascertain them with precision, and in consequence of this neglect they did not get the ship off so soon the manner of effecting it, no misconduct short of that which is wilful, will work a forfeiture of salvage. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 528; 1 Asp. 235; 5 L. T. N.S. 434; 8 Jur. N.S. 753; 31 L. J. Adm. 210; 10 W. R. 850.

799. Mistake or misconduct other than wilful which diminishes the value of the property salvaged, or occasions expense to the owners, is to be considered in the amount of compensation awarded. Ibid.

800. When essential services have been rendered by salvors the amount of salvage reward may not only be diminished by negligence or misconduct, but under peculiar circumstances altogether forfeited. The Medina, cited in The Duke of Manchester, 4 Notes of Cases, 580.

801. However valuable a service may be salvors may forfeit their just reward if they are guilty of misconduct. The Lady Worsley, 2 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 256.

802. Whenever salvors undertake to perform a service it is their duty to show adequate skill in performing it so as to bring it to the best termination. The Houthandel, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 27; The Duke of Manchester, 4 Notes of Cases, 575; 6 Moore, P. C. C. 91.

803. Salvors must possess skill and knowledge sufficient to enable them duly to perform the duties which they undertake. The Magdalen, 1 Asp. 189; 5 L. T. N.S. 807; 31 L. J. Adm. 22.

804. Error not wilful in performing a salvage service operates only in diminution of the amount of remuneration. Ibid.

805. A second set of salvors having discovered a derelict vessel bottom upwards at sea near the Eddystone Lighthouse, succeeded, after great exertions during two days and a half, in towing her into Fal-mouth. They then, in spite of repeated remonstrances, carried on for a month a series of unskilful attempts to right the vessel, in consequence of which attempts she was much strained and injured. The court reduced the reward it would have otherwise held they had earned, as compensation to the owners for the additional damage thus done to the property, proportioning the amount deducted to the want of skill shown. Value of ship and cargo £2,400. Salvage of £600 awarded. Ibid.

806. There is to be expected from salvors ordinary skill and prudence in the performance of the duties they take upon themselves to perform; not that they should be finished navigators, but that they should exercise such a degree of prudence and skill as persons in their condition ordinarily possess. The Cape Packet, 3 W. Rob. 125; 6 Notes of Cases, 565.

807. Where salvors have displayed great want of skill and prudence in the performance of the salvage service, their claim for such service will be proportionately diminished; a reduced amount of salvage awarded in such a case. Ibid.

808. In fixing the extent of diminution of salvage remuneration where the service has been negligently performed, the court is not guided by the consideration of the amount of injury sustained, but by a whole tide as they might and would have done had they sounded. A deduction of 4,000 dollars was made by the court from the amount which it would have given but for such neglect. The Ashburton, 5 A. R. 432. A similar reduction was made in the case of The Sultan. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 235. [AMERICAN.]

(218) The salvors (wreckers) neglected to use chains to the anchors instead of hawsers, where they had reason to think that the hawsers would break or be cut by the rocks. The court diminished their salvage one half. The Diadem, 5 A. R. 432. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 236. [AMERICAN.]

(219) The licensed wreckers of over fifty tons burden on the Florida coast are required, by law and rules of court, to be furnished with suitable anchors, chains, and hawsers, to be used in getting off stranded vessels; and the breaking of chains or hawsers, or heaving home anchors, is ordinarily no excuse for a failure to get a ship off in due time, for these are contingencies the wreckers are bound to guard against, by resorting to the use of larger chains or hawsers, or by doubling them and by backing their anchors. Whenever they have the management of the business, and they fail to get a stranded vessel afloat at the first high water at which she might have been floated had they employed the proper means, they must be considered as having failed in point of skill and energy, and must suffer the just and legal consequences of such failure, notwithstanding they may have saved the ship and cargo. Ibid. 116.

(219a) Salvors are well rewarded for good service, and better rewarded for better service. If the master of the ship retains the management of the business in his own hands, and forms his own plans, the salvors do not exonerate themselves from a just responsibility for a failure, unless they show that they have given him the benefit of their local information and experience, and have faithfully and energetically assisted him to carry out his plans. Ibid.

by the principle of proportioning the diminution to the degree of negligence. Ibid.

809. There may be cases of negligence so gross as to forfeit all claim for salvage. Ibid.

810. Want of adequate knowledge on the part of the salvors, e.g., mere ignorance of the coast, where it only diminishes the success of the salvage services, only diminishes the amount of salvage. The Rosalie, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 191; 18 Jur. 337.

811. Essential services had been rendered, but there had been errors of conduct, tending to reduce the value of the property. The property saved being about £32,000, award made of £800. The Prins Frederick, 2 Dodson, 482.

812. Salvage reward always bears a proportion to the skill and knowledge required and shown, the degree of skill and knowledge expected being according to the station in life of the salvors. The Lockwoods, 9 Jur. 1017.

813. The orders given by a lieutenant in the navy in command of a revenue cutter, in rendering assistance to a vessel in distress, held to be without a knowledge of the danger, and without duly weighing the consequences of such orders, and the measures adopted unsuccessful and injurious. Claim of salvage pronounced against, notwithstanding a certificate by the master of the vessel saved admitting a benefit from the services of the salvors. Ibid.

814. The same skill that would be required from duly licensed Trinity pilots is not to be expected from salvors assuming the management of vessels in cases of difficulty. The Neptune, 1 W. Rob. 300.

815. But to entitle such salvors to a salvage reward, they must show that they possessed skill commensurate with their vocation and condition in life, and adequate to the duties they undertook to perform. Ibid.

816. A derelict steamer was fallen in with by the G. steamer and towed to Bridlington Bay, but received considerable damage by taking the ground as she was going into the harbour. Held, that the salvors were wrong in attempting to take so large a vessel into such a harbour, and that a deduction must accordingly be made from the salvage they would otherwise have received. The Perla, Swabey, 230; The Adrianus Wilhelminus, Dec. 21, 1852.

817. In such a case it is not the practice to impose on the salvor the whole burthen of the loss, but only a part of it in proportion to the degree of blame which attaches to him. Ibid.

818. The court will look with considerable indulgence on the efforts of persons offering their services to vessels in distress when there are no other individuals on the spot capable of rendering more efficient assistance; but different considerations apply to the conduct of individuals assuming the character of salvors when there are other persons at hand more competent to discharge those duties. Claims of certain fishermen for salvage in respect of services rendered by them to a foreign vessel on the Norfolk coast, when there were regular pilots at hand to have taken charge of her, pronounced against, the court and Trinity masters being of opinion that the proceedings of the salvors had been erroneous and injudicious, and of no benefit to the vessel. Under the circumstances, however, the court declined to give costs against the salvors. The Dygden, 1 Notes of Cases, 115.

819. A steamer, for a stipulated sum, rendered salvage services to a barque. While doing so she came into collision with the barque on three separate occasions through negligence of those on board the steamer. A cause of salvage was instituted by the owners of the steamer, and a cause of damage by the owners of the barque. The causes having been heard together, held, that the plaintiffs in the salvage suit were entitled to recover the salvage remuneration stipulated for, and that the plaintiffs in the damage suit were entitled to recover therein. The C. S. Butler, The Baltic, L. R. 4 A. & E. 178; 43 L. J. Adm. 17; 2 Asp. N.S. 237.

820. A tug agreed to tow a ship from Liverpool round the Skerries for a fixed sum. The tug imprudently towed the ship, in bad weather, too near a lee-shore, and the wind becoming worse during the service, the hawser parted, the ship was placed in a position of danger, and was compelled to let go her anchors to avoid being driven on shore. From this position she was rescued by the tug, but after being compelled to slip her anchors and chains, which were lost. Held, that the tug owners were not entitled to salvage, and were liable for the loss of the anchors and chains. The Robert Dixon, L. R. 4 P. D. 121; 4 Asp. 95.

821. See, further, as to the effect of negligence or misconduct in the fulfilment of a towage contract, c. 6, p. 1842.

7. Agents of Salvors.

822. If a ship or cargo is not saved there can be no salvage, and if this result follows from the miscarriage or the misconduct of an agent employed by those who claim as salvors, however great or meritorious their exertions may have been, they are identified with their agent for this purpose, and their claim fails. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 527; 8 Jur. N.S. 753; 31 L. J. Adm. 210; 10 W. R. 850.

823. If by the imprudence or unskillfulness of the agent of the salvor, the value of the property is diminished, the salvor, however innocent or meritorious as to his own acts, must suffer for it in the diminished amount of his compensation; but semble, this rule is to be acted upon with caution. Ibid.

824. Salvors in the course of rendering assistance to a derelict vessel, engaged with a steam-tug that for £7 she should tow them and the derelict into port. By the misconduct of the tug the vessel took the ground, and the services of other salvors became necessary to bring her into safety. Held, that the misconduct of the tug operated as a forfeiture of the claim to salvage of the first salvors. Held, on appeal (overruling the decision in the court below), that the misconduct of the steam-tug did not operate as a forfeiture of the claim of the first salvors to salvage. On a value of £620 (of which £120 had been given to the second salvors) £190 awarded to the first salvors. Ibid.

825. Salvors brought a vessel in distress into a situation of safety from ordinary peril, but not to anchor, and then gave up charge of her to a licensed pilot. Held, that they were not prejudiced in their claim for salvage by injuries subsequently caused to the ship by the negligence of the pilot. The Bomarsund, 1 Lushington, 77.

826. See also the next section.

826a. As to agents as salvors, see c. 5, p. 1814.

8. Associated Services.

827. In a case of joint or associated salvage, the misconduct of the principal salvor, the dux facti may fairly be imputed, primâ facie at least, to the co-salvors as the act of their adopted agent or representative. The Lisbon, Ir. L. R. 1 Eq. 144. [IRISH.]

828. In cases of associated service, all may have to suffer for the neglect or misconduct of one of their number. The Cherubim, Ir. L. R. 2 Eq. 172; 3 Asp. 156. [IRISH.]

829. In cases of associated service, as the performance of a laudable act of salvage by one may tend to the benefit of his companions, so it may happen that they may all have to suffer for the neglect or misconduct of one of their number. Ibid.

829a. See also the preceding section.

9. Fraud.*

830. A fraudulent salvage claim dismissed with costs. The Susannah, 3 Hagg. 345, n.

* (220) The law exacts good faith on the part of salvors. Fraud committed against the master, owners, or underwriters, or collusion with the master to defraud the owners or underwriters, will work a forfeiture of salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 231. [AMERICAN.]

(221) The claim of the owner of the salvaging vessel may primâ facie be tainted by the fraud, neglect, or other misconduct of his master. Ibid. 228.

(222) When a vessel is fraudulently cast away or abandoned by the master without any collusion with the salvors, they are entitled to salvage for saving the property. But if, knowing his offence, they remain silent and permit the idea to prevail that the vessel was lost by accident, they thereby assist him to cover up his iniquity and to escape just punishment, and they become partakers of his crime and justly forfeit their claim to salvage. Ibid. 111; Brevoort v. The Fair American, 1 Pet. Adm. 87, 95; 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 613. [AMERICAN.]

(223) They cannot knowingly and rightfully derive a profit from, or enjoy the fruits of, his villainy without exposing it. They are bound in good faith to make known the facts to whomsoever may be interested, and to state them in their pleadings. Ibid.

(224) The wreckers had unnecessarily lightened a bark of 205 bales of cotton in order to magnify their services, and obtain a larger salvage than they were justly entitled to. Held, that their whole salvage was forfeited, notwithstanding they had rendered important services. The Bark Aurora, 12 A. R. 365. [AMERICAN.]

(225) The wreckers carried out an anchor ahead and planted it in such a position as to hold the vessel on the reef instead of hauling it off. Held, that the circumstances disclosed

831. Claim for salvage against a foreign vessel for rescuing her from impending danger dismissed, with costs, no necessity for any interference being shown, and the salvors disclosing a false case. The Giacomo, 3 Hagg. 345.

832. Highly exaggerated statements as to the service, held a ground for supporting the tender and for dismissal of the suit with costs; the master and the whole crew uniting in opposing the interests of their employer after their discharge, held a strong ground for viewing their evidence with suspicion and distrust. The Towan, 2 W. Rob. 259.

833. A suit for salvage, instituted by a pilot, appearing to have advanced false pretensions, and to have misconducted himself, dismissed with costs, and the conduct of the pilot reported to the Trinity House. The Joseph Harvey, 1 C. Rob. 306.

834. As to fraud in agreements for salvage, see c. 10, p. 1876.

10. *Embezzlement.

835. Salvors who have plundered the cargo of the vessel saved are not entitled a case of dishonesty and fraud on their part, and not merely one of negligence, and their whole salvage was decreed to be forfeited. The Byron, 5 A. R. 248; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 231. [AMERICAN.]

(226) Where a person who had an interest to enhance the amount of the salvage, which was known to the salvors, acted as the master's consignee and adviser, and the salvage was settled by arbitration, notwithstanding there was within a convenient distance an Admiralty Court that might have been resorted to without injurious delay, and the sum awarded was larger than was just, held, that the circumstances afforded evidence of an attempt by imposition upon the master or by collusion with him to obtain a larger salvage than was just, and that such attempt worked a forfeiture of all salvage. Houseman v. North Carolina, 15 Peters, 40; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 22, 233. [AMERICAN.]

(227) Wreckers had agreed with the master of the ship to give him 2,500 dollars for the exclusive privilege of saving the property. Held, that such agreement was an attempt to corrupt the master, was immoral in its tendency, and operated as a fraud upon owners and underwriters, and entailed a forfeiture of all salvage. The Ship James, 1839 (Church v. 1712 Dollars), 4 A. R.; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 232. [AMERICAN.]

* (228) By the Ordonnance de la Marine of Louis XIV., salvors are responsible for everything that is stolen, unless they deliver the felons or point them out. Tit. ix. Arts. 3, 4, and 5.

(229) Punctilious honesty is required of salvors. Embezzlement, however small in amount, whether at sea, in port, or after the goods are in the custody of the law, works a forfeiture of all salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 229. [AMERICAN.]

(230) The compensation to be awarded presupposes good faith, meritorious service, complete restoration, and incorruptible vigilance, so far as the property is within the reach or under the control of the salvors. The Schooner Boston, 1 Sumner, 341. (Story, J.) [AMERICAN.]

(231) In cases of salvage the party founds himself upon a meritorious service, and upon the implied understanding that he bring before the court for its final award all the property saved, with entire good faith, and he asks a compensation for the restitution of it uninjured and unembezzled by him. Ibid.

(232) Embezzlement of the property saved works a forfeiture of the right to salvage. The Dove and Cargo, 1 Gallison, 585; Mason v. The Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; The Missouri, 18 Law Rep. 38. [AMERICAN.]

(233) Embezzlement works a forfeiture of all claim to salvage, whether it takes place before the property is brought in or after it is in the custody of the officers of the court. Salvors are responsible civiliter for their conduct in relation to the salvage property, so long as it is subject to the decree of the court. The Boston and Cargo, 1 Sumner, 328. [AMERICAN.]

(234) Embezzlement by a salvor works a forfeiture of his claim of salvage, but does not prejudice his co-salvors, who are innocent. The Rising Sun, Ware, 378. [AMERICAN.]

(235) If the master and all the crew are implicated in the embezzlement, it will not work a forfeiture of the share of innocent owners of the salvor ship. Ibid.

(236) Embezzlement is ordinarily so secret and purely individual an act, that its commission by one salvor, though the master, is held not to prejudice his co-salvors or owners, who are innocent. It works a forfeiture of the share of the guilty party only. But a person may become guilty by consent, by connivance, by concealment, by encouragement, or by not preventing the act when in his power. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 229. [AMERICAN.]

(237) Salvors are bound not only to scrupulous honesty themselves, but while the property is in their custody, they are jointly required to employ every reasonable degree of vigilance to guard it from plunder by others; any negligence in this respect, if not visited with an entire forfeiture of salvage, will be remembered in fixing the amount. The John Perkins, 19 Law Rep. 490. [AMERICAN.]

to any salvage remuneration. The Florence, 16 Jur. 576.

836. When salvors are on board a vessel for the purpose of rendering her assistance, they are entitled to consume all that is necessary of the stores for the purpose of maintaining themselves in the discharge of that duty. The Houthandel, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 29.

837. If there is some waste under circumstances of this kind it is impossible for the court to look into minutiae. Ibid.

838. In allotting a salvage remuneration the court made a deduction from the sum allotted to the salvors, to compensate the crew of the derelict for clothes on board, which had been lost or made away with by the salvors, the court not imputing to them any felonious intention. The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 26; 7 Jur. 182.

839. A vessel, having been captured by a privateer and plundered, was suffered to go adrift without a crew, and getting near the shore, was surrounded by the plaintiffs in small boats and plundered of everything they could get at, till she grounded on a bar and remained there for some days. The plaintiffs then took possession of her, and, after she came off the bar and had grounded in the inlet, her owners came, and with the plaintiffs' assistance got her off. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to salvage for what they had done. James v. The S. A. Boice, 2 Asp. 264.

840. But, as the owners had offered to pay the plaintiffs for their services, a quantum meruit allowed for work and labour, but without costs. Ibid.

841. Where two ships claimed as salvors of a derelict ship, and it was proved that the master of one of them abstracted goods from the derelict with an evident intention of not restoring or accounting for them, held, that this misconduct of the master tainted the whole salvage service of his ship, and deprived his crew as well as himself of all participation in the salvage award. The Scindia, 2 Asp. 232.

11. Other Cases.*

842. Salvors in possession of a vessel

(238) Salvors have no right unnecessarily to damage the goods, nor to put them in a situation where they are likely to be stolen. They are to take the same care of them that they, uninsured, would wish others to take of their goods under like circumstances. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 230. [AMERICAN.]

(239) The master has no right to give away any of the cargo or stores of a wrecked vessel, nor to consent to an appropriation of them by others; and where a wrecker on the Florida coast used some of the ship's stores, with the master's consent, to feed the ship's crew, the ship being lost, the court disapproved of the act, and said that the wreckers were expected to feed wrecked crews and passengers from their own stores, that their doing so was considered by the court as a part of the salvage service, and that they were not to use the ship's provisions except in cases of extreme want, but were to account for them, fragments as well as whole articles. Ibid. 122.

(240) The captain and owners had concealed a part of the goods saved; their share of the salvage was declared forfeited to the owners of the vessel saved. Flinn v. The Leander, Bee, 260; Mason v. Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 239. [AMERICAN.]

(241) In an action by one of the crew of a vessel against the owner for his share of salvage money, paid by the owner of goods saved from a wreck without any deduction for embezzlement, the owner of the vessel cannot set up in defence that the plaintiff had embezzled a portion of the goods. Blake v. Patten, 3 Shep. 173. [AMERICAN.]

(242) A vessel had been, by the aid of the master and crew of another vessel, saved from going to pieces on the rocks, and was subsequently stranded. While the property on board was in the process of transportation to the other vessel, with their aid, and still in danger, the masters of the two vessels engaged in a fraudulent conspiracy to appropriate to their own use a portion of the property saved. Part was afterwards remitted to the owners. The master of the salvaging vessel brought a part to a home port, and concealed it. It was subsequently discovered by other persons, and seized on behalf of the owners and crew of the salvaging vessel, for salvage. Held, that the fraudulent conduct of the master did not defeat the claim of the owners and crew of the salvaging vessel, and that they were entitled to salvage, both on the property concealed and on that remitted. The Missouri's Cargo, Sprague, 260. [AMERICAN.]

* (243) The voluntary or careless destruction of the shipper's marks upon the boxes or packages will entail a forfeiture or diminution of the salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 230. [AMERICAN.]

(243a) Taking the goods out of their boxes and stowing them in bulk in the salvaging vessels, will work a forfeiture or diminution of salvage, unless such measure is justified by the urgent necessities of the case. Ibid.

(244) The masters of licensed wreckers on the coast of Florida, although not professional pilots, are qualified in most instances to pilot vessels from inside the reef into the gulf, and cannot, consistently with cor-abandoned by all her crew but two, who had been unable to effect their escape, would not be bound to delay their course for the sake of taking on board again the crew of the vessel. The Orbona, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 161.

843. It is the primary duty of salvors to recognize and obey the authority of a commander possessed of competent skill. The Simpson, 3 Jur. Adm. 270. [IRISH.]

844. See also s. 1, p. 1856.

845. As to subsequent negligence of other than salvors, see No. 825, supra.

846. As to the consumption of stores of the salvaged vessel by salvors, see No. 836, supra.

10. Agreements.

1. Generally.*

847. The High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction over agreements made on rect notions of moral duty, lie idly by and see a vessel get into peril known to them but unknown to the master, without giving him warning and offering their assistance. If they omit to give such warning and to offer such assistance, when they have the opportunity, and the vessel runs upon rocks which they might have guarded it against, they forfeit their right to be considered as meritorious salvors, and will be paid for subsequent services at a reduced rate of compensation. Ibid. 117.

(245) The shares of the owners, masters, and crews of two wrecking vessels were declared forfeited for making a disturbance at the wreck and refusing to work in connection with other salvors. Ibid. 236.

(246) Half the shares of eight men (wreckers) were declared forfeited, for refusing to assist in the navigation of the vessel after she had been got off the reef. Ibid.

(247) The shares of two seamen (wreckers) were forfeited, for attempting to seduce the ship's company from their duty by telling them that the ship being in charge of wreckers, they were not bound to work unless they were paid extra. The Mary Hale, 5 A. R.; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 236. [AMERICAN.]

(248) The shares of the master of a wrecker were declared forfeited for not carrying out an anchor when requested by the master of the ship. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 236. [AMERICAN.]

* (249) By the naval laws of Oleron, if salvage services be rendered to a ship, and a cause thereon come before any judicature, it shall be considered the pains and trouble the salvors have been at, and the reward be accordingly, without any regard to promises made them by the master or other parties concerned in the time of their distress. Leg. Oleron, cap. 4; and see same cited in Godolph. Adm. Jur. Ext. 4.

(250) Courts of Admiralty will enforce contracts made for salvage service and salvage compensation, where the salvor has not taken advantage of his power to make an unreasonable bargain. Post v. Jones, 19 How. 160; see also The Emulous, 1 Sumner, 207; Bearse

v. Three hundred and forty Pigs of Copper, 1 Story, 314; 1 Sumner, 210. [AMERICAN.]

(251) But they will not tolerate the doctrine that a salvor can take advantage of his situation and avail himself of the calamity of others to drive a bargain. Ibid.

(252) A contract to pay a quantum meruit for an attempt to save property, whether successful or not, is inconsistent with a claim for a salvage compensation. The Independence, 2 Curtis, C. C. 350. [AMERICAN.]

(253) But anything short of this, though it may affect the amount of the compensation, does not change the nature of the service. Ibid.

(254) If the service be rendered on a contract for a fixed price, or for a quantum meruit, it does not alter its nature as a salvage service. The Emulous, 1 Sumner's Rep. 207. [AMERICAN.]

255. It only fixes the rule by which the court is to be governed in awarding the compensation. Ibid.

(256) Salvage services were rendered by one vessel to another in pursuance of a written agreement between the owners, which stipulated for a per diem compensation. Held, that the contract was not necessarily binding upon the vessel in peril to award. The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 414. [AMERICAN.]

(257) Held, also, that the district court had jurisdiction of a libel in rem for salvage, notwithstanding such written agreement. Ibid.

(258) Several contracts for salvage services had been made at various times, and a subsequent salvage service was performed under no definite contract. The rule fixed in the prior contracts was held not to be imperative, but only to be an auxiliary circumstance in determining what was a fair allowance for such subsequent salvage service. Bearse v. Three Hundred and Forty Pigs of Copper, 1 Story, 314; 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 630. [AMERICAN.]

(259) It is not blameable to refuse to interpose to save property, without a salvage compensation or a contract fixing its amount. The Independence, 2 Curtis, C. C. 350. [AMERICAN.]

land for the performance of salvage services. The Catherine, 12 Jur. 682; 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xliii.

848. When a vessel is in need of salvage services and the master is unable to act, the vice-consul may, and it is his duty to, make an agreement as to the remuneration, and the court will uphold the agreement, provided it is just and equitable. The Vera Cruz, 1 Lush. 583.

849. But an agreement made by a vice-consul set aside as inequitable. Ibid.

850. The engagement to render assistance to a vessel in distress, and the performance of that engagement so far as is necessary or possible, establish a title to salvage reward. The Alpha, 1 Lushington, 92; 2 L. T. N.S. 520; 29 L. J. Adm. 176.

851. Where an agreement to fix the amount of the remuneration to be paid for salvage services has been deliberately entered into at the time of the commencement of the danger between perfectly competent parties, the court will not allow the agreement to be set aside, merely because the execution of it has turned out more difficult than was anticipated at the time of making the contract. The Waverley, L. R. 3 A. & E. 369; 40 L. J. Adm. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 47.

852. The circumstances under which such contracts may be set aside, considered. Ibid.

853. Salvors are not entitled to make an agreement upon any other grounds than these: The extent of danger to which the property to be salvaged is exposed, the degree of labour they will have to undergo, the risk to which they themselves may be exposed, and the length of time to be occupied; but they are not to speculate on the value of the cargo. The Henry, 15 Jur. 184; 16 L. T. 533.

854. The master of a ship in distress agreed to pay the salvors £100 for their proposed services. He represented to them that the cargo was of small value. This statement being found to be false, the court nevertheless pronounced for the agreement with costs. Ibid.

855. Agreements for the salvage of the ship, irrespective of the cargo on board at the time, are not allowed by the court, and where such agreements are proved, the court will refuse to pronounce any salvage due. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 235.*

856. An agreement, if entered into, might be a bar to the parties recovering a salvage reward, but cannot convert that which is a salvage service into one of a different nature. The William Lushington, 7 Notes of Cases, 361, 362.

857. To bar a claim for salvage there must be a distinct agreement between the parties in explicit terms, and for a given sum. Ibid. 363.

858. An agreement or understanding for the performance of salvage services, but stating no precise sum, held no bar to a claim for salvage. Ibid.

859. When the court is satisfied that a salvage agreement has been entered into with due consideration for the interests of the crew, it will be disinclined to disturb such agreement, though the sum agreed to is less than the court would have awarded. The Macgregor Laird, L. R. W. N. 1867, p. 308.

860. The engagement to render assistance to a vessel in distress and the performance of that engagement so far as possible establish a title to salvage reward. The Undaunted, 1 Lushington, 90; 29 L. J. Adm. 177; 2 L. T. N.S. 520.

861. Though the court will set aside an extortionate agreement, yet it will never say that salvors are to blame for not making any agreement at all. The Henry, 15 Jur. 183; 16 L. T. 533.

(260) Where aid in saving a vessel from a sea peril is rendered under a contract, it is a salvage service, unless, by the terms of the contract, the compensation is to be absolute, and not contingent upon success. The Susan, Sprague, 499. [AMERICAN.]

(261) Persons assisting such salvor may maintain a claim for salvage compensation, if their right to payment depends upon success. But the court will take care that the owner of the property shall, in such case, be protected against the contractor, and shall not be forced to pay, in the whole, more than the amount agreed. The Whittaker, Sprague,

282. [AMERICAN.]

(262) An agreement for a specified sum is binding upon the salvor, and his compensation, although still salvage, is limited to the amount agreed. Ibid.

(263) A contract to labour for the relief of a vessel in peril, at an agreed compensation, to be paid at all events, displaces a claim for salvage. Ibid.

* (264) Except probably where the cargo is taken out and additional expense in this way incurred. 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 629. [AMERICAN.]

862. Negotiation by the owner to refer a claim of salvage to arbitration is no conclusive admission of salvage services rendered, or negation of a defence on the ground of the salvors' misconduct. The Martha, Swabey, 489; The Purissima Concepcion, 7 Notes of Cases, 151; 13 Jur. 545.

863. A foreign ship was driven by stress of weather into Bridlington, where W. B. undertook the management of the ship and her concerns, and subsequently sent in his accounts. These were disputed by the master, and an agreement was then made to refer them to arbitration. The master signed the agreement on the 17th March, 1848, and W. B. on the 5th March; and the ship was arrested in a cause of salvage on behalf of W. B. on the 12th March. Held, that the agreement was no bar to the action. La Purissima Concepcion, ibid.

864. An agreement out of court between salvors and owners of the ship salvaged affords no certain criterion by which the court can award remuneration between the salvors and the owners of the cargo. The Emma, 8 Jur. 651.

865. In a suit for salvage of a foreign vessel, a tender was made, by the consul on behalf of the owners, of £50. This was refused by the salvors, and an arbitration agreed on, under which £130 was awarded, to which the consul would not agree. The tender pronounced for as sufficient, and salvors' costs refused. The Eleanor Charlotta, 1 Hagg. 156.

866. As to the validity of an agreement made on land to raise a sunken vessel, the proof of due execution thereof, and the authority of one of the parties thereto to bind the salvors as their agent, see The Catherine, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xliii.; 12 Jur. 682; The Duchess of Kent, 26th July, 1853.

867. The charge of a vessel in danger had been given up to the salvors who made an agreement with two steamers to render them assistance. Held, no argument that any agreement had been made between the salvors and master or owners of the vessel. The Jan Hendrick, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 184.

868. Owners setting up an agreement in bar of a salvage claim are bound to pay into court the amount stipulated for under the agreement. The Catherine, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. 2.

869. A vessel on the West rocks, seven miles from Harwich, entered into a written agreement with the masters of two smacks for their assistance in getting her off, and into Harwich, for £6. The weather was moderate at the time, but became more boisterous shortly afterwards. The smacks engaged four other smacks, effected the service, and claimed salvage. The owners tendered £6, and averred that the engagement of the four other smacks was unnecessary, and made against the expostulation of the master of the vessel salvaged. Tender upheld, the court holding the agreement fully proved, that the first two smacks were bound thereby, and that the four other smacks must seek their remedy, if any, against their employers, the first two smacks; but no costs given. The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 176; 7 Jur. 756; 2 Notes of Cases, 413.

870. The masts of a ship had been cut away and she was making a considerable quantity of water, but, being laden with timber, was in no danger of sinking. Salvors, five in number, with their fishing smack of sixty tons burthen, under an agreement for £150, rendered her, for thirty-six hours, services, which in effect amounted only to towage. Their claim included £34 compensation for loss of fish, and £25 damage to hawser. Tender of £150 pronounced for with costs. The value of the property salvaged was £1,850. The Arthur, 6 L. T. N.S. 556.

871. The master of a vessel agreed to pay the sum of £140 for salvage services to be rendered to his vessel. After the assistance had been given, proceedings were taken before certain justices, who overruled the agreement as exorbitant, and awarded the sum of £70; and a cause of salvage was thereupon instituted in the Court of Admiralty. Action dismissed with costs. The William and John, 8 L. T. N.S. 57; 9 Jur. 284.

872. A written agreement was made by the two masters to stay by a vessel in distress and see her safe into port for £500. The salvors contended that the agreement was conditional, and signed upon the understanding that the service was not to extend beyond the following morning. Agreement upheld. The Repulse, 2 W. Rob. 396.

873. The steamship R. being in imminent peril, hermaster, on behalf of himself and owners, entered into an agreement with the master of the salvaging steamship, that "the steamer L. M. agrees to stay by me until I am in a safe position to get to port for the sum of £1,200, my vessel being badly holed in starboard bow, near collision bulkhead." In pursuance of the agreement the L. M. at great risk stood by the R. until she sank, when the L. M. took off the master and crew. Held, that no life salvage was recoverable, as no property had been saved, and that neither master nor owners were liable under the contract, as the condition, "until I am in a safe position to get to port," had not been fulfilled. The Renpor, 5 Asp. 98.

874. Semble, a master has no authority to bind his owners by an agreement for the purpose of merely saving the lives of himself and crew, without regard to any saving of the property of the shipowner. Ibid.

875. Salvors agreed to take a disabled vessel into harbour, weather permitting, for a fixed sum. The salvors did their utmost, but owing to a sudden change of wind, were unable to perform the agreement. Held, that they were nevertheless entitled to salvage remuneration for the services rendered. The Aztecs, 3 Asp. 326.

876. In a cause of salvage the defendants alleged that the services were rendered under an agreement to pay the plaintiffs £50. The defendants did not plead the agreement in bar, nor did they pay anything into court. The court found that the agreement was a collateral one, which could not be enforced in the Admiralty Court, and awarded £300. The Empire Queen, 3 Asp. 187. [IRISH.]

877. The W. fell in with the N., and an agreement was made between the masters to tow the N. to Queensland for £200. There was no evidence to show that the master of the W. consulted his officers and crew as to the agreement. The service was performed, and thirteen of the officers and crew of the W. brought an action of salvage against the N. Held, that the agreement was a fair one, and binding on the plaintiffs, who were condemned in costs. The Nasmyth, 10 P. D. 41; 54 L. J. P. D. 63; 5 Asp. 364.

878. The G. fell in with the R. in distress, and an agreement was signed by the two masters:—"At my request the captain of the G. will tow my ship the R. to St. Nazaire. The matter of compensation to be left to arbitrators at home." The G. towed the R. safely to St. Nazaire. The R. discharged her cargo at Dunkirk, and an average bond in the usual form was taken from the consignees of the cargo. The owners of the G. brought an action in rem against the R. for salvage of ship and freight, and were awarded salvage. They also brought an action in France against the cargo owners, for salvage of the cargo, but failed in it. They then brought an action in personam against the owners of the R. for salvage in respect of the cargo, or, in the alternative, for damages for not taking a proper bond to secure salvage from the cargo owners. Held, that the defendants were not liable to pay salvage on the cargo, and had not bound themselves to do so, nor was it their duty to obtain such a bond. The Raisby, 10 P. D. 114; 54 L. J. P. D. 65; 63 L. T. 56; 54 L. J. Adm. 65; 5 Asp. 473; 33 W. R. 938. See also No. 416, p. 1827.

879. As to towage agreements, see c. 6, p. 1835.

2. The Parties.*

880. The owners of vessels are bound by the agreements of the masters. The Africa, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 300.

880a. Semble, so also are the officers and crew. The Nasmyth, 14 Q. B. D. 41.

881. Although the master of a ship is on land, as at sea, agent for the crew to bind them by agreement in respect of salvage compensation, it is doubtful whether he is agent for the owner for that purpose when the owner is at hand and gives him no authority. The Elise, Swabey, 440.

882. An agreement made by the master of the salving vessel with the owner of the vessel salvaged as to the quantum of salvage to be paid, held to be binding on the master and his employers, but not upon the crew, such agreement having been made without their sanction or concurrence. The Britain, 1 W. Rob. 40; The Sarah Jane, 2 W. Rob. 115.

883. An agreement for salvage may be made on behalf of a Portuguese vessel by

* (265) A settlement by the master is not binding on the owners unless he acted bona fide, and the settlement is such as a discreet owner on the spot would probably have made. Housman v. Schooner North Carolina, 15 Peters, 45; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 149, 22. [AMERICAN.]

(266) Wreckers had agreed with the master of a ship to give him 2,500 dollars for the exclusive privilege of saving the property. Held, that such agreement was an attempt to corrupt the master, was immoral in its tendency, and operated as a fraud upon owners and underwriters, and entailed a forfeiture of all salvage. The Ship James, 1839; Church v. 1712 Dollars, 4 A. R.; Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 232. [AMERICAN.]

the Portuguese vice-consul, whose services had been accepted by the master, who could not speak English. The Vera Cruz, 1 Lushington, 584.

884. An agreement made with some of the crew of a salving ship is not binding on the remainder of the crew. The Sansone, 3 Jur. 258. [IRISH.]

885. No person can be legally bound by any contract unless he has himself entered into it personally or through a duly authorized agent, or has by his own act subsequently ratified that contract. The consent of a third party without the presence or authority of the salvor to a compensation for salvage does not bind the salvor himself. The Charlotte, 3 W. Rob. 71; 6 Notes of Cases, 279.

886. An agreement or understanding between the owners of the vessel salvaged and the owner of a cutter engaged by them to render the service, no specified sum being fixed therein, held, not to bar the parties suing (including the master and the crew of the cutter) who acted in the service under the personal direction of the owner of the cutter, but were not parties to, or cognizant of, the understanding. The William Lushington, 7 Notes of Cases, 361.

887. In a case of salvage for carrying out two anchors with appropriate chain cable from Dover to a vessel off Hythe, and in which an award was made by the Commissioners of Cinque Ports, which was appealed to the Court of Admiralty, the merchant who supplied the anchors and cable appeared for the owners before the commissioners, but his agency was on the appeal repudiated by them, as having been undertaken without their instructions. Held, that the facts did not disclose any authority to him to act as agent. The Lord Goderich (1841), 10 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 217.

887a. Salvage services had been rendered to a vessel by several sets of salvors off Ramsgate. The owners of the vessel summoned a meeting of the Commissioners of Salvage for the Cinque Ports, to adjudicate on the matter. No notice of the intended meeting was given to any of the salvors, and it was proved that it was not usual to give any such notice. At the meeting of the commissioners one set of salvors was unrepresented, but it was proved that they were aware of the meeting, and were at hand. The commissioners made an award upon the whole matter. The salvors so unrepresented refused to accept their share of the money awarded, and brought their action in the Admiralty Court. Held, that the award was no bar to the action, the plaintiffs not having been parties to the first decision. The Elise, Swabey, 436.

3. Queen's Ships.

888. A vessel having been wrecked in the Red Sea, the owners of her cargo agreed with the Under-Secretary of State for India, in consideration of a Queen's ship being sent to render assistance, to pay for the coal consumed and to make a present to the officers and crew. Held, that this agreement did not debar the officers and crew of the Queen's ship, sent in pursuance of the agreement, from claiming salvage remuneration. Cargo ex Woosung, 1 P. D. (C. A.) 260; 44 L. J. Adm. 45; 3 Asp. N.S. 50; ibid. C. A. 239.

888a. Quære, can the commander of a Queen's ship enter into an agreement for salvage remuneration? Semble, he cannot. Ibid.

889. Agreement between the commander of a Queen's ship and the master of a vessel wrecked, that a lump sum of half the proceeds of the cargo saved should be paid as salvage. Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing the decision of the Court of Admiralty), that this agreement must be set aside, but that the officers and crew of the Queen's ship might claim salvage. Ibid.

890. See also cases in c. 5, s. 12 (a).

890a. As to agreements by officers and crews of H.M.'s ships, or of other ships, with masters of ships salvaged for waiver of lien for salvage services abroad on the latter consenting to abide the adjudication of the Court of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty, and giving security, and as to the statements on both sides to be thereupon made and transmitted to the court, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 497, and Nos. 277—287, p. 1812.

4. To render mutual Assistance.*

891. Claim of salvage for services

* (267) Even where vessels sailing together are not consorts, nor owned by the same party, it is possible that there may be a usage of mutual help which would defeat a claim of salvage, and under such circumstances such a claim would be materially rendered by one vessel to another (both being engaged in the Honduras trade) under an agreement to render mutual assistance, it being the usual custom of vessels in that trade so to do, pronounced against, but under the circumstances, the owner of the asserted salving ship being a bankrupt, without costs. The Zephyr, 2 Hagg. 43.

892. In a suit for salvage for services rendered by one vessel to another, under an agreement of mutual assistance, a declaration of the master of the vessel salvaged, that if the salvor had not brought his action he would have done his utmost to have obtained from his owners a remuneration for his services, held, to amount only to a hope that the salvor would receive an honorary acknowledgment for his prompt attention. Claim of salvage pronounced against. Ibid.

893. In a claim of salvage for services rendered by one vessel engaged in the whale fishery to another engaged in the same trade, and which was opposed partly on the ground that it was a custom in that trade to render assistance gratuitously, claim pronounced against without reference to the custom, which the court held not to have been proved either way, but on the ground that no salvage services had been rendered. The court will be cautious not to encourage vague pretensions in a case of this kind. Quære, would proof of the custom referred to exclude a claim of salvage? The Margaret, 2 Hagg. 48, n.

894. In a cause of salvage for services rendered by one whaling vessel to another while engaged in the whale fishery in the South Seas, a custom set up in bar, as existing in the South Sea fishery, for vessels engaged therein to assist one another gratuitously in such cases, held to be a legal custom, but the evidence of the fact of such custom being insufficient, an issue directed under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, to try the existence thereof, which was found for. Motion for new trial refused and cause dismissed, but without costs. The Harriot, 1 W. Rob. 439.

895. An asserted custom for whaling vessels to assist each other gratuitously must be founded on the principle of mutual benefit and protection of property, and on the assumption that the parties are embarked in a common enterprise, and that whatever service is mutually rendered may be mutually required. Such a custom held not to apply to a case where the salving whalers embarked some time afterwards expressly with a view to render assistance to the vessel salvaged and others in distress, and was not engaged in the operation of any joint enterprise with them. The Swan, Ibid. 70.

896. In foreign countries, where the custom prevails of rendering mutual assistance without claiming salvage reward, steamers would not be bound by the custom as regards sailing-vessels, there being no mutuality between them. The Africa, 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 299.

897. A custom at Plymouth that fishing boats belonging to that port should assist each other gratuitously, held not binding upon the owners and crew of a fishing boat not belonging to that port. The Red Rover, 3 W. Rob. 151.

898. Salvage awarded for assistance to a vessel in the China seas, notwithstanding a custom for vessels in those parts to render mutual assistance to each other. The Gravina, 5 June, 1856.

899. As to cases of associated vessels, see c. 5, p. 1803.

900. As to cases of mutual benefit, see c. 6, p. 1844.

5. Avoidance.

(a) Generally.*

901. Every stipulation in any agreement by which any seaman consents to diminished even if no usage were proved. Thus, if a steamer is stranded on a sandbank in the Mississippi, and another steamer draws her off, usage prohibits any claim for salvage. (Montgomery v. Steamboat T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421, 429.) 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 627. [AMERICAN.]

* (268) A contract for salvage compensation should be presumed primâ facie to be fair, but if proved to be unconscionable a Court of Admiralty, like a court of equity, would refuse to enforce it. The H. D. Bacon, 1 Newb. Adm. 274. [AMERICAN.]

(269) When there is a hiring or bargain in good faith, free from fraud or mistake, the terms are adhered to as the rule of compensation. The H. B. Foster, 1 Abb. Adm. 222; Bondies v. Sherwood, 22 How. U. S. 214. [AMERICAN.]

(270) Contracts made for salvage services are not held obligatory by a Court of Admiralty, unless it appears that no advantage has been taken of the situation of the parties, and that the rate of compensation is just and reasonable. The Jenny Lind, 1 Newb. Adm. 443. See also Post v. Jones, 19 How. 150; abandon any right which he may have or obtain in the nature of salvage shall be wholly inoperative. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182.

902. The 182nd section of the principal act does not apply to the case of any stipulation made by the seamen belonging to any ship, which according to the terms of the agreement is to be employed on salvage service, with respect to the remuneration to be paid to them for salvage services to be rendered by such ship to any other ship or ships. See the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 18.

903. By the ancient law of the Court of Admiralty, as well as by statute law prior to the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 18, any stipulation by which a seaman agrees to abandon a claim for salvage was invalid. The burden of proof is upon those who set up such an agreement to show, not merely the existence of the agreement, but that the seamen were fully aware of all its consequences. The Pride of Canada, 1 Asp. 406.

904. Quare, whether, if a valid agreement of such a kind existed, salvage remuneration would be awarded for the services in respect of which there had been such an agreement. Ibid.

905. Held, that sect. 182 of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), and sect. 18 of the M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), do not fetter the discretion of the court on the subject of these agreements, but that their effect is to render such agreements not illegal and to place them on the same footing on which they stood before any legislation on the subject. The Ganges, L. R. 2 A. & E. 370; 38 L. J. Adm. 61; 3 Asp. 342.

906. The plaintiff was temporary master of a steam-tug in the place of B., and without any extraordinary exertion or peril rendered salvage services to a vessel in distress. The steam-tug belonged to a company whose business it was to render towage and salvage services. The seamen were, according to a special agreement, paid certain fixed wages and a fixed rate of poundage on all towage and salvage money earned by the tug. The plaintiff knew that B. was employed under this agreement, but he claimed salvage independently of the agreement. Held, that the agreement, as it did not appear to be inequitable, was valid, and that the plaintiff was bound by it, and therefore could not claim salvage. Ibid.

906a. See also Nos. 1097—1119, p. 1891.

907. An agreement for salvage assistance can be legally made, and will be binding, between a master of a vessel in distress and persons affording such assistance, provided there is a clear understanding of the nature of the agreement, that it is made with fairness and impartiality to all concerned, and that the parties to it are competent to form a judgment as to the obligations to which they are binding themselves. It would be the duty of the Court of Admiralty to enforce the fulfilment of such an agreement. The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 179; 7 Jur. 756; 2 Notes of Cases, 413; and The Mulgrave,

Cowell v. The Brothers, Bee, Adm. 136; Schutz v. The Ship Nancy, Ibid. 139. [AMERICAN.]

(271) In salvage cases if a contract is made between the parties under circumstances where there is no such necessity as to require immediate relief at any expense or hazard on the one side, and on the other there is no obligation to lend the required assistance, and no motive to take advantage of the urgency of the peril in driving an unconscionable bargain, the court will adopt and enforce the contract as just and conscientious. Bearse v. The Three Hundred and Forty Pigs of Copper, 1 Story, 314. [AMERICAN.]

(272) An extortionate agreement, made in distress at sea respecting salvage is void. Cowell v. The Brothers, Bee, 136; Schutz v. Ship Nancy, 139; Taylor v. The Friendship, Bee, 175. [AMERICAN.]

(273) The rate fixed by the contract for salvage remuneration is looked at in determining the amount proper to be awarded, and would be disregarded if disproportionate or unreasonable, or if extorted through the pressure of impending calamity. The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatch. Ct. Ct. 414. [AMERICAN.]

(274) A barge, in tow of a steamer on the Mississippi, ran aground on a bank, and the captain abandoned her to a salvor, agreeing that he should have 50 per cent. on all property saved. Held, that in the absence of any danger to life, which on the ocean might have been an ingredient, this proportion was exorbitant, and that one-sixth was a fair allowance. The Jenny Lind, 1 Newb. Adm. 443. [AMERICAN.]

(275) When the service rendered is in its nature a salvage service, it will not bar salvage compensation to show that the service was undertaken at the request of the owner, and upon a promise to pay the bill if thought reasonable, otherwise to refer the claim. The Independence, 2 Curtis, C. C. 350. [AMERICAN.]

therein cited; The Firefly, Swabey, 240; The Helen and George, Ibid. 368; The Arthur, 6 L. T. N.S. 556; The Nuova Loanese, 17 Jur. 263; The Resultatet, Ibid. 354; The Enchantress, 30 L. J. Adm. 15.

907a. Where solicitors are duly authorized by seamen to settle a claim of their clients for their share of salvage, after the whole reward to be paid is ascertained, and to make an agreement for that purpose, and the solicitors accept a sum in full satisfaction, such agreement is not void under the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182, even if the amount accepted is less than the seamen would be entitled to recover in an action for distribution of salvage. The Afrika, 5 P. D. 192; 4 Asp. 266.

908. Semble, the fraud or concealment or an extravagant disproportion between the amount actually received and the amount strictly due, is necessary to induce the court to reopen such an agreement. Ibid.

909. When the execution of an agreement for salvage has been proved it is prima facie binding, and the burthen of proof falls on those who dispute its validity. The Helen and George, Swabey, 369.

910. An agreement in writing for salvage services repudiated by the owners, alleging that it was extorted from the master, and that no salvage services were rendered, pronounced for. Ibid.

911. In a salvage suit when an agreement is set up, the onus of proof is upon those relying upon it, and if the evidence is evenly balanced the court will pronounce against the document, but does not thereby declare it to be a forgery. The Resultatet, 17 Jur. 354; The Nuova Loanese, Ibid. 263; The Arthur, 6 L. T. N.S. 556.

912. The court is very much indisposed to set aside an honest agreement, and where there is any doubt its rule is to adhere to the agreement, but it must be satisfied that it is honest. The Theodore, Swabey, 352.

913. It is not for the master before entering into an agreement for salvage services to point out every circumstance that has occurred during the voyage, though concealment of circumstances of importance might vitiate the agreement. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 227.

914. The master did not inform the salvors that the bowsprit was sprung and that the vessel made water. Held immaterial, the injury to the bowsprit being slight and the quantity of water made inconsiderable. Ibid.

915. When an agreement for salvage services is clearly proved the court will uphold it, unless clearly inequitable. It will not set it aside on the ground that it is a hard bargain. The Firefly, Swabey, 241.

916. A binding agreement may be constituted between the master of a steam vessel and the master of a vessel requiring her assistance, although the one does not specifically consent to the terms proposed by the other, provided the one leads the other to receive the assistance required on the fair presumption that it is rendered on the terms of his proposal; but the proof of such an agreement lies on the party setting it up, and should be clear and satisfactory. An agreement set up in bar of a salvage claim, held not sufficiently proved. The Graces, 8 Jur. 501; 2 W. Rob. 294.

917. The general principle with respect to agreements for salvage services is that it lies on the party setting it up to prove two things: first, that the agreement was made; and, secondly, that it was just. Where there has been a definite distinct agreement, with ample time for the parties to consider what they are doing, the court would be reluctant to interfere with it; but only under these circumstances. The British Empire, 6 Jur. 608.

918. There are two ways only by which agreements for salvage can be annulled. The first is, by proving that the contract was founded in fraud and misrepresentation, in which case it would be void ab initio; the second, by showing that it was cancelled by mutual consent. The Repulse, 2 W. Rob. 397.

919. Whoever takes upon himself to establish the fact that an admitted agreement has been invalidated by consent of parties, is bound to prove by clear preponderance of testimony that it was so cancelled. The Betsy, 2 W. Rob. 172.

920. An agreement may be vitiated by the concealment of any facts which might affect the service, and therefore have operated upon such agreement at first. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 265; 18 Jur. 409; The Briton, 5 Ir. Jur. 170.

921. An agreement made between salvors and the crew of a vessel in distress will not be considered binding on the salvors unless it is perfectly understood by them, and not depending upon recollection of what occurred in loose conversations. The Jane Anderson, 3 Jur. 293. [IRISH.] See also The Briton, 5 Ibid. 170.

922. Special agreements between owners and masters and seamen of a steam-tug for a percentage on the earnings of the tug, or increased wages, for foregoing all claims for salvage, will not be upheld by the Court of Admiralty as being repugnant to general principle and prejudicial to the public interest, and as tending to take away from salvors the motives to enterprise and energy. The Mary Anne, 2 Asp. 127.

923. A loose conversation between the masters of the salvor and the vessel salvaged, the former offering to accept, at the commencement of the service, a remuneration at the rate of two dollars a day for his men; held, not conclusive of the merits of the case, or of the quantum of reward. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 265.

924. A vessel laden with 750 casks of tallow and some lathwood, took the ground on the Hasboro' sand. Some salvors agreed to lighten the vessel and to take the cargo so discharged and the vessel to Yarmouth, for 12s. per cask of the casks taken to Yarmouth, and as to the rest of their services for such an amount as the agent of the owners should think fit. They lightened the vessel, took her to Yarmouth Roads, and left her at anchor, there not being sufficient water to enable them to take her into harbour. The owners' agent afterwards endeavoured to take her into the harbour, when she took the ground and broke up, and ten tons of tallow were then saved by other salvors, and upwards of 120 casks by the first salvors. Held, that the agreement had been abandoned by the owners' agent, and £250 and costs awarded to the first salvors, in addition to £84 previously paid to them. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 410.

925. Salvors able to effect the salvage unaided, met a tug-steamer at sea, and offered her a specified sum to tow the derelict into harbour. The crew of the tug replied in language calculated to lead the salvors to suppose that their offer was accepted. The court considered such language as an acceptance of the offer. (See The Berlin, 4 Jur. 11.) The Elizabeth, 8 Jur. 340. [IRISH.]

926. An agreement was made for the services of a steamer to assist a vessel aground. The services were completed under it, but the agreement was subsequently cancelled by the mutual consent of the masters of the two vessels. Held, that the owners could not set up the agreement as a bar to a suit for salvage. The Africa, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 299.

927. An agreement set aside as being exorbitant. The Theodore, Swabey, 352.

928. A vessel was wrecked in the Red Sea about three days' voyage from Jeddah, and her crew, with a large number of pilgrims on board, escaped on to a rock where, had bad weather set in, they would have been exposed to great danger. The master of a passing steamer offered to take them to Jeddah for £4,000, and this offer was ultimately accepted by the master of the vessel wrecked, as no better terms could be made. Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of the court below), that the agreement was obtained by compulsion, and must be set aside as inequitable, and £1,800 awarded. The Medina, 1 P. D. 272; 2 Ibid. (C. A.) 5; 45 L. J. P. D. & A. 81; 3 Asp. N.S. 219; Ibid. (C. A.) 305.

929. An agreement for the sum of eight shillings and sixpence as remuneration for salvage services set aside as insufficient, there being some risk to the salvors, and the vessel salvaged being in reasonable apprehension of danger. £10 awarded. The Phantom, L. R. 1 A. & E. 58; 2 Asp. 442.

930. The barque A. rendered material salvage services to the steamship M. Payment of £27 was made to the master of the A., who gave a receipt for the sum as "being the whole amount due for services this day rendered." The reply alleged that this receipt was drawn up on board the M., and was signed by the master of the A. under the impression that it was a simple receipt for £27. The master of the A. could not be called as a witness, being dead. Held, that the document was not an agreement, but a receipt; and, having regard to evidence which showed that a minor service was the only service referred to in the receipt and to the inadequacy of the remuneration, £273 awarded in addition to the £27. The

931. The defendants in a cause of salvage tendered, in addition to the amount agreed upon prior to the rendering of the salvage services, a further sum on account of damage sustained by the salving vessel. Held, that the tendering of the additional sum did not annul the original agreement. The Waverley, L. R. 3 A. & E. 369; 40 L. J. N.S. 42; 1 Asp. N.S. 47.

932. Quere, whether the commander and crew of a Queen's ship can make an agreement as to the amount of salvage to be paid? Seemle, they cannot. The Cargo ex Woosung, 1 P. D. 260.

933. The master of a disabled ship, about 340 miles from Queenstown, agreed in writing with the master of a mail steamer for towage of his ship to Queenstown for £15,000, and the service was performed. The court declined to enforce the agreement, and awarded as salvage £7,000, in addition to the penalties payable by the owners, by reason of the vessel deviating to perform the service. The Silesia, 5 P. D. 177.

See also No. 936, infra.

(b) Fraud.

934. A Portuguese vessel got on shore at Dungeness. The master, not being able to speak English, accepted the services of the agent of the Portuguese vice-consul, who agreed with a steam-tug to tow her into a place of safety for £600, on the condition that £50 should be returned. The service was performed, but the owners disputed the agreement, and tendered £250. The court set aside the agreement as corrupt, and pronounced for the tender. The Vera Cruz, 1 Lushington, 583.

935. An agreement dishonestly made by the master of a ship to secure, to so called salvors, an excessive reward, is not valid against the owner of the ship. The Theodore, Swabey, 351.

936. The plaintiff hearing from an English captain coming from the Black Sea that he had passed a ship abandoned and in distress, gave notice to the master of the defendant's steam-tug and entered into an agreement with him that he, the plaintiff, should receive 15 per cent. of the net profits of the sum awarded as salvage remuneration. Plaintiff's claim dismissed, as contravening public policy. Higley v. Smart (The Supreme Consular Court of Constantinople), February 27th, 1874.

937. The master of a ship in distress agreed to pay the salvors £100 for their proposed services. He represented to them that the cargo was of small value. This statement was found to be false, but the court nevertheless pronounced for the agreement, with costs. The Henry, 15 Jur. 183; 15 L. T. 533.

938. See also Nos. 908, 918, 920, p. 1874.

939. As to the diminution or forfeiture of salvage on the ground of fraud, see c. 9, p. 1864.

(c) Subsequent Circumstances.

940. It is no argument on the one side or the other against the validity of a salvage agreement that much greater or fewer difficulties than were anticipated in consequence of the change of the weather, &c., attended its performance. The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 179; 7 Jur. 756; 2 Notes of Cases, 413, and The Mulgrave, therein cited.

941. If an agreement for salvage remuneration is clearly established, the court will uphold it, unless wholly inequitable, and will not set it aside on the ground that it is a hard bargain. The Firefly, Swabey, 240; The Helen and George, ibid. 368; The Arthur, 6 L. T. N.S. 556.

942. Agreements for salvage services are, when validly entered into, always respected and upheld by the Court of Admiralty, though perhaps subsequent circumstances may have rendered such an agreement more or less favourable to either party than was originally expected. The Nuova Loanese, 17 Jur. 263. See also The Resultatet, 17 Jur. 354.

943. If there has been an agreement made between the salvors and the owners of a vessel, whatever may be the consequences, whether the service is attended with great risk and danger, or not, both parties must be bound by it. The Jan Hendrik, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 182. See also The Africa, ibid. 299.

944. But if the agreement is repudiated by the owners, it is considered as if no agreement at all had been entered into. Ibid.

945. An agreement to perform for a certain sum a service of a salvage nature is not to be lightly set aside either because the weather was tempestuous, or because the vessel was longer in arriving at a port of safety than might reasonably have been anticipated. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 226, 303; 11 Moore, P. C. C. 313; 30 L. T. 251.

946. A foreign vessel, fifty miles off the Dutch coast, being in difficulties from the boisterous state of the weather and leaky, engaged the assistance of a smack, by written agreement, "To pilot and to sail ahead for £50." After four days' boisterous weather, during which the master of the smack worked at the pumps, the vessel was got into port. The owners of the smack refused a tender of £50, and claimed salvage. Held, that salvage was barred by the agreement. Ibid.

947. An agreement for salvage services originally valid will not be invalidated by the mere fact that the services took a longer time to be performed than the salvors originally expected. The Cato, 35 L. J. Adm. 116.

948. Nor will the salvors be entitled to additional remuneration. Ibid.

949. As to subsequent circumstances as affecting a towage agreement, see c. 6, p. 1838.

950. See c. 16, pp. 1891, 1892.

11. Lien.

1. *Generally.

951. As to agreements by the commander or crew of any of her Majesty's ships, or of any other ship, with the master of the ship salvaged for abandoning the salvors' lien upon the property salvaged,

* (276) Salvors have a right to retain the goods saved until the amount of the salvage is adjusted and tendered to them. The Royal William, Stuart's Vice-Adm. Rep. 111 (Lower Canada). See also Troplong des Privilèges et Hypothèques, tome premier, No. 175, p. 256; No. 264, p. 386; Pardessus Cours de Droit Commercial, Tome 3ème, No. 955, p. 557; Voet ad Pand de Compens, No. 20. See also note 45, p. 1792.

(277) The law of England has provided that salvage shall be a lien upon the goods saved. Cross on Liens, 291; and see the cases there cited.

(278) The finder of goods derelict, who takes possession with the intention of saving them, gains a right of possession, which he may maintain against the true owner, and a lien upon them for salvage. The Bee, Ware, 332. [AMERICAN.]

(279) But the owner's exclusive right of possession is not lost by temporarily leaving the goods for the purpose of obtaining aid, and with the intention of returning to save them. Ibid.

(280) The rights of the owner are not divested by abandonment, but the finder becomes the legal possessor, and acquires a privilege against the property for his salvage, which takes precedence of all other liens. Lewis v. The Elizabeth and Jane, Ware, 41. [AMERICAN.]

(280a) The title of salvor arises from actual possession of property in peril, with power to save it, and the actual employment of means to that end. The John Wurts, Ibid. 462. [AMERICAN.]

(281) A brig in going out of the harbour of New York grounded on the Outer Middle, below the Narrows, in a north-east storm of wind and snow, and bilged. The master and crew left her in the evening, and went up to the city. The salvors, who were wreckers and kept a vessel and crew in readiness to go out during the winter to the assistance of vessels in distress, hearing at Staten Island of the condition in which the brig had been left, immediately proceeded to her and commenced saving the cargo and materials. The next morning the master returned to the wreck in a steam-tug, but without lighters, which were necessary to save the cargo and materials, and demanded of the salvors surrender of possession. They refused, asserting that they were legally in possession as salvors. In the afternoon an agent of the owners arrived and demanded possession, which demand the salvors disregarded, but they employed all the men who came down and were willing to work in saving the property. Held, that possession being thus taken when the vessel was in fact abandoned and quite derelict under peril of instant destruction, the salvors had a right to retain it until the salvage was completed, and that no other person could interfere against them forcibly, provided they were able to effect the purpose, and were conducting the business with fidelity and vigour. The John Gilpin, Olcott, 77. [AMERICAN.]

(282) A lien for salvage does not exist with regard to goods wrecked upon a navigable river at a great distance from the main sea, although the tide there ebbs and flows. Baker v. Hoag, 3 Barb. Sup. Ct. R. 203. [AMERICAN.]

(283) A canal boat with property on board was sunk in the Hudson River where the tide ebbed and flowed; it was afterwards found, and the property saved. Held, that the salvors had a lien on it for salvage. Ibid. 3 Seldon (N. Y.) 555. [AMERICAN.]

(284) It is not necessary that salvors should retain the vessel saved in order to preserve their lien. Delivering up a boat to its master after raising it, and allowing it to proceed on its voyage, can have no effect to destroy the lien. The H. D. Bacon, 1 Newb. Adm. 247. [AMERICAN.]

on the latter consenting to abide the decision of the Court of Admiralty or of any Vice-Admiralty Court, and on security given for payment of the salvage to be adjudged, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 497.

952. As to the statements on both sides to be thereupon made and transmitted, Ibid., and Nos. 277—287, p. 1812.

953. A salvor has a lien on the property saved at sea, though it would be otherwise in a river. Hartford v. Jones, 1 Ld. Raym. 393; Baring and others v. Day, 8 East, 57; 2 Hen. Black. 294; 1 Saund. Rep. 265; and see No. 111, p. 1793.

954. When a vessel has been abandoned by her master and crew in consequence of real damage, whatever persons first get possession of her and are competent to render salvage services, have a right to retain possession of her until she is either voluntarily given up or they are divested by due course of law, though the Court of Admiralty is desirous of holding out to salvors the expediency of not standing by their strict rights in that respect where they have adequate security for their salvage reward. The Tritonia, 5 Notes of Cases, Supp. iv.

955. When salvors have possession of a derelict they are entitled to keep possession, though the master and crew return to her. It is, however, expedient to permit the master and crew to approach their own ship. The Gertrude, 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 131; The Glasgow Packet, 8 Jur. 675; 2 W. Rob. 306.

956. Salvors may, under certain circumstances, be justified in keeping possession of the vessel, and taking her into port without delaying to take on board the crew which had abandoned her. The Orbona, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 165.

957. A ship which has been assisted into a roadstead is not to be removed without the consent of the salvors. The Nicolai Heinrich, 17 Jur. 330.

958. A foreign vessel so assisted was removed from one towards another English port, and the salvors thereupon arrested her, and incurred an expense of £10 for a yawl to take the warrant to her. The expense of the yawl was allowed to the salvors. Ibid.

959. Salvor's title to remuneration is not impaired or in any way affected by their quitting possession of the vessel salvaged. The Eleanora Charlotta, 1 Hagg. 156.

960. Recaptors from pirates have a lien on the property for salvage. The Mariana, 3 Hagg. 201.

961. The derelict property salvaged ought, until payment of salvage, to be in the custody of the actual salvors, and not of the owners of the salvaging ship. The latter are neither entitled to the property nor the custody of it. The Princess Helena, 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 140; 4 L. T. N.S. 869. But see No. 962.

962. It is laid down by some authorities that there is a right of possession in salvors, but it would be a rule most mischievous to commercial interests and property salvaged, to hold that under whatever circumstances it was the duty of salvors to retain the property. Claim of salvors pronounced forfeited on the ground, inter alia, of their improper retention of the property when an agent of the owner was on the spot. The Lady Worsley, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 255.

963. The court will issue an attachment against salvors seeking to retain possession of a vessel after the production to them of the release of the court. When a release issues, instantaneous obedience must be paid to it. The Towan, 8 Jur. 222.

964. A shipowner who has paid a sum of money, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99 (now repealed), in order to release the ship and cargo from a claim for salvage, has a lien on the cargo for the proportion of those expenses payable to him by the owners of the goods, and an insurable interest in the cargo in respect of such lien. Briggs v. Merchant Traders Ship Loan and Assurance Association, 13 Q. B. 167; 13 Jur. 787; 18 L. J. Q. B. 178.

965. Salvage services were rendered by a Queen's ship, for which a bill was

(285) An assignment of a claim for salvage divests the lien which originally existed in favour of the salvor. A libel by the assignee claiming such share will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Where the share of the salvor turns out to be greater than the consideration of the assignment, he will be entitled to the surplus. The Geo. Nicholas,

1 Newb. Adm. 449. [AMERICAN.]

(286) A box of bullion was saved by the Constellation, and afterwards, while at sea, transferred to the Constitution, to be taken to a port of safety. Held, that the lien for salvage was not lost by delivery of the box of bullion to the master of the Constellation. Box of Bullion, Sprague, 57. [AMERICAN.]

given by the master on the owners, who had in the meantime sold the ship, which was lost on the homeward voyage. Payment of the bill having been refused, application on behalf of the salvors for monition against the purchasers of the ship and cargo to show cause why salvage should not be paid, rejected, the court observing that such monitions were usually decreed only in cases where the property had been allowed to go into the hands of the owners, and in lieu of the salvors attaching the property itself, and that in no case had a monition issued against the owners of property lost. The Chieftain, 4 Notes of Cases, 459.

966. A claim for salvage preferred by a King's ship, after a delay of eight months, not in rem, but by monitions against owners and consignees, dismissed, the salvors being held (the salvage being very slight) to be barred by lapse of time. The Rapid, 3 Hagg. 419. But see The John, 8 Jur. 276.

967. C. employed T. to convey in his barge a quantity of copper ore from Liverpool to Birkenhead, and to deliver the same to L. who had undertaken to indemnify C. from all risk of transit. The barge having sunk, owing to stress of weather, T. applied to C. to know whether he should raise the ore. The answer was, that he must ask L. who said he was insured, and referred him to the insurer. The insurer ordered him to raise it. Held, that as C. had never employed T. the latter could have no lien upon it, nor could he recover as against C. for salvage or general average. Castellain v. Thompson, Thompson v. Castellain, 1 Asp. 259; 7 L. J. N.S. 424; 32 L. J. C. P. 79.

968. As to the duties of salvors to give up salvaged property to receivers of wreck, and as to the powers of the receivers to take bonds from owners for payment of salvage, see c. 4, p. 1794.

968a. As against subsequent salvors, see c. 5, s. 16, p. 1815.

969. In respect of assignment or advance of salvage, see c. 17, s. 2.

2. Priority.

(a) Life.

970. Salvage, in respect of the preservation of life, is payable in priority to all other claims for salvage. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 459, and No. 665, p. 1849.

970a. As to payments by the Board of Trade in respect of salvage of life, Ibid.

971. Where there has been a salvage of life and property, if the property saved is insufficient to reward both classes of salvors, the salvors of life would have a prior claim on the fund. The Coromandel, Swabey, 208.

972. As to salvage of life generally, see c. 7, p. 1847.

(b) As against Subsequent Salvors.

See c. 5, p. 1820.

(c) As against other Liens.

See tit. LIENS, p. 830.

12. Payment.

1. Generally.

973. The court is unwilling to discourage the settlement of questions of salvage on the spot in a distant port in a fair and liberal manner, and inclines to support such settlements. The Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hagg. 157.

973a. A ship was let to freight from London to Lima, under a charterparty, at so much per ton per month, payable after the ship should have reported at the Custom House in London. The outward cargo was delivered, and a homeward cargo taken in at Lima, with which she sailed, was captured, but recaptured, arrived, and reported in London. Certain expenses were incurred in obtaining restitution of the ship and cargo, and salvage had been decreed to the recaptors. The proceeds of the homeward cargo fell short of the freight due: upon the question as to who was liable for payment of the salvage and the expenses of obtaining restitution; held, that the shipowner alone was liable for salvage, since salvage is due from those alone who are benefited by the recapture; and in this case, had there been no recapture, the freighter would not have been liable for freight, for the ship could not then have reported in London, upon which condition alone freight was payable; and that though by the recapture he recovered his goods, their value was exceeded by the freight, so that he was a loser by the recapture. Cox v. May (1815), 4 M. & S. 152.

974. Held, also, that the freighter alone was liable for so much of the charges as were paid to obtain restitution of the cargo, since he alone was benefited by the restitution; for had the cargo never been restored, the shipowner would not have suffered, since his freight was payable, not on delivery of the cargo, but on reporting in London, and it was therefore immaterial to him if he came home in ballast; but the freighter was benefited, since thereby he acquired a fund wherewith to discharge a portion of the freight. Cox v. May (1815), 4 M. & S. 152.

974a. As to the owners of the ship salvaged not being primarily liable to pay salvage on the cargo salvaged, and as to their not having bound themselves to do so by their agreement for salvage with the salvaging ship, see The Raisby, No. 878, p. 1870.

2. Before the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104).*

975. Before the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99 (since repealed), it was held that owners of vessels salvaged could not effect a settlement of salvage without a general release. The Sarah Jane, 3 W. Rob. 110.

975a. £800 had been paid as salvage to the master of the salvaging vessel, a part owner, in the presence of the owners and mate, and a receipt given by him on behalf of himself, owners, mate, and crew. Some of the crew, who were dissatisfied, commenced proceedings to enforce a different distribution. Held, that the parties were not estopped by the receipt, nor by applications made by some of them to the owners of the salvaging vessel for their share of the salvage; but that the mate who signed the receipt along with the master, and afterwards received of him and gave him a receipt for his share of the salvage, though, as averred, under misapprehension, held estopped. Ibid.

976. By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 5 (since repealed), where an award had been made by the magistrates in a cause of salvage, the parties were not at liberty to resort to the Court of Admiralty for a distribution, unless an application for an order of distribution had been made in the first instance to the magistrates; at the time of the award, or within fourteen days afterwards; and unless the appeal to the Court of Admiralty was made within fourteen days from the award or payment of the money. The Hope, 1 W. Rob. 265.

977. Prior to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, s. 26, the owner of a salvaging vessel received a specific sum for salvage, under an agreement made by the master of the salvaging vessel and purporting to bind him and the crew. This agreement held not conclusive against the crew. The Britain, 1 W. Rob. 45, n.

3. Since the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104).

978. Whenever the aggregate amount of salvage payable in respect of salvage services rendered in the United Kingdom has been finally ascertained either by agreement or by the award of such justices or their umpire, but a dispute arises as to the apportionment thereof amongst several claimants, then, if the amount does not exceed £200, the party liable to pay the amount so due may apply to the receiver of the district for liberty to pay it to him; and the receiver may receive the same accordingly, and grant a certificate of the fact of such payment and the services in respect of which it is made; and such certificate is a full discharge and indemnity against claims in respect of the services therein mentioned; and if the amount exceeds £200, it shall be apportioned by the court as therein mentioned. See the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 466.

979. As to the custody of the salvaged property by the receiver until payment or process, or security for payment of salvage taken by him, Ibid. s. 468.

980. As to the power of the receiver, under certain limitations, to sell the salvaged property, pay expenses and salvage, and deliver the balance to the owners, see No. 159, p. 1798, and tit. PRACTICE, Pt. II. p. 1674.

* (287) Whenever it shall appear that any sum awarded or agreed to be paid for salvage services shall have been duly paid to the appointee of the justices, commissioners, or arbitrators making the award, or under any agreement, or, in default thereof, to the master or owner of the salvaging ship or boat, or the nominee of the salvors, any claimant of any share in such sum thinking himself aggrieved by the insufficiency of the share allotted to him, or otherwise, shall be precluded from enforcing such claim against the ship or goods salvaged, or the owner thereof. See 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, s. 26.

13. Derelict.

1. Generally.*

981. Derelict does not mean in all cases an abandonment sine animo recuperandi; and a ship may, for the purposes of salvage, be considered a derelict, though the expectation of recovering her may exist. The Genesse, 12 Jur. 401.

982. Derelict being sine spe recuperandi, is distinguishable from salvage in the amount awarded. The Inca, 12 Moore, P. C. C. 189; Swabey, 370.

983. By the spes recuperandi in cases of derelict is meant the hope and expectation entertained by the master and crew of returning to their vessel, not what was the precise state of things, but what was the intention by which they were actuated at the time. The Sarah Bell, 4 Notes of Cases, 146.

984. There is a wide distinction between an abandonment at sea and a quitting of the ship on the coast when the spes recuperandi is not improbable. The Florence, 16 Jur. 572.

985. A mere quitting the ship for the purpose of procuring assistance from the shore, or with the intention of returning to her again, is not such an abandonment

* (288) Derelict signifies a boat or other vessel found abandoned at sea without any person in her. 2 Brown's Civil Law, 51; Palmer on Wreck, 3.

(289) Goods cast overboard to lighten the ship are not to be deemed derelicts, so as to become the property of the first finder, unless utterly abandoned sine spe recuperandi. Laws of Oleron, cited in Godolphin's Adm. Jur. ext. 32.

(290) Primâ facie, property found at sea, in a situation of peril, and not in the possession of any person, is derelict, and it belongs to the owners to show that it was left cum animo revertendi. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 134. [AMERICAN.]

(291) When a vessel is found at sea deserted, and has been abandoned by the master and crew, without the hope or intention of returning and resuming the possession, she is, in the sense of the law, derelict. In like manner, goods abandoned at sea by the master and crew, without the hope or intention of returning and resuming the possession of them, whether flotsam, jetsam, or ligan, are derelicts. But where the master and crew leave the vessel or goods temporarily, without any intention of a final abandonment, but with the intent to return and resume the possession, such vessel or goods are not considered as legal derelicts. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 133; The Bee, Ware, 339; Roue v. Brig, 1 Mason, 373. [AMERICAN.]

(292) Property is derelict when the owner has abandoned it without the intention of returning and resuming the possession. The Bee, ibid. [AMERICAN.]

(293) Vessels sunk at sea are not "wrecks," but when found are derelict, and he who finds and recovers them has a lien on them for salvage. Baker v. Hoag, 3 Seldon (N. Y.), 555. [AMERICAN.]

(294) A vessel with slaves on board, but no white person, considered as derelict, and one-third given as salvage to the person bringing her in. Flinn v. Leander, Bee, 260. [AMERICAN.]

(295) Derelict can only occur under an abandonment without hope or intention of recovery. Tyson v. Prior, 1 Gallis. 133.

[AMERICAN.]

(296) Where a vessel at sea is not abandoned, but those on board are both physically and mentally incapable of doing anything for their safety, this constitutes a case of quasi derelict, and calls for a liberal compensation to salvors, especially if life as well as property has been saved. The Geo. Nicholas, 1 Newb. Adm. 449. [AMERICAN.]

(297) Restitution upon payment of salvage will be adjudged in all cases, if the original owners can be found. British Consul v. Smith, Bee, 178. [AMERICAN.]

(298) The master and crew had left their vessel in a sinking condition and taken to the long boat, and were picked up by another vessel while yet in sight of the wreck; the vessel and cargo thus left were considered as derelict. The Boston, 1 Sumner, 328; see also the Henry Ewbank, Ibid. 400. [AMERICAN.]

(299) A vessel imbedded in the ice was drifting towards a shoal, and if she had struck upon it, she would probably have gone to pieces. The crew left her with the intention of returning if the danger should be escaped. Held, that the vessel was not a derelict. Clarke v. Brig Dodge Healy, 4 Wash. C. C. 651.

(300) A captain whose vessel was on fire, surrendered her into the hands of salvors, to save her if they could, but was present with his crew when the services were performed. Held, that this was not such an abandonment as would make it a case of derelict. The Delphos, 1 Newb. Adm. 412. [AMERICAN.]

(301) An abandonment of a burning steamboat on the Mississippi by the master, to another steamboat for the purpose of saving her, does not constitute a case of derelict. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. Adm. 421. [AMERICAN.]

(302) Property sunk in a steamboat, and unclaimed for twenty-three years, held to be derelict. Creery v. Breedlove, 12 La. An. 745. [AMERICAN.]

(303) Salvors are not to be driven out of court upon the suggestion that if they had not touched a derelict ship and cargo she might otherwise have been saved. The Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

as to constitute derelict. The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 40; The Clarisse, Swabey, 130.

986. Whenever an act of abandonment of a vessel in distress at sea comes in question, a mixed question of law and fact arises for the court to determine, and the quo animo is in all such cases the material point. The Cosmopolitan, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xxvi. [IRISH.]

987. The master and crew of the abandoned vessel were prevented by the master of the vessel in which they had taken shelter from returning to their vessel, and salvors took possession of her. Held, that the vessel was not a derelict, but that the case was one approaching derelict. See the law of derelict elaborately reviewed in this case. Ibid.

988. If the master and crew leave the ship for the safety of their lives, a mere intention of obtaining assistance to save the vessel does not take away from the legal character of derelict. The Coromandel, Swabey, 209.

989. When on the alarm attending a collision, the crew of one vessel jumps on board the other, such abandonment does not of itself constitute a derelict. The Fenix, Swabey, 13; The Cosmopolitan, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xxii. [IRISH.]

990. A vessel in distress abandoned by her crew, who in attempting to reach the shore were drowned, held to be a derelict. The Minerva, 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 273.

991. Whilst salvors were rendering salvage assistance to a vessel and towing her she took the ground, when they left her to procure further assistance. During their absence other salvors took possession of her. Held, as against the second salvors, that the vessel was not a derelict. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 521; 1 Asp. 168.

992. After a derelict had been in the possession of salvors for five days, a Queen's ship came up and was allowed to join in the remaining service. Held, that the vessel was not a derelict at the time when such latter services were rendered. The Lady Kennaway, 7 Notes of Cases, 130; 13 Jur. 944.

993. The master and crew of a vessel had lost their reckoning, and upon approaching a strange coast left their ship at anchor, and went on shore for the purpose of ascertaining their position, and not with the intention of abandoning her. The vessel got adrift, and was taken in charge by salvors. Held, not a case of derelict. The Hercule, 8 Ir. Jur. 412; The Fenwick, 16 July, 1841; The Mary, 12 March, 1841.

994. If the master and crew of a ship in great danger abandon her sine spe recuperandi to preserve their lives, and subsequently make abortive efforts to return on board in company with intended salvors, the case will still be one of derelict, for if a vessel be once abandoned, even a return of the crew, under new circumstances, would not alter the nature of the original abandonment, the intention at the time of leaving being the point upon which the question of derelict must be decided. The Berlin, 3 Jur. N.S. 34. [IRISH.]

995. A ship laden with lead and iron sank on the Shipwash Sand and was there left by the master and crew. The ship being immovable and the place where she was sunk being well known, held that she was not a derelict. The Barefoot, 14 Jur. 841. See also The St. Petersburg, 5 May, 1853; The Sophie, 10 March, 1841.

996. The master and crew of a vessel left her with 4½ feet of water in her, having carried away her compasses and their clothes. Held, that the vessel was a derelict, though it did not appear that the crew had left her sine spe recuperandi. The Gertrude, 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 131.

997. The master and crew abandoned their vessel three days after a collision with another vessel; held, that the vessel so abandoned was a derelict. The Pickwick, 16 Jur. 670; and see The Livingstone, 30 June, 1853.

998. A Dutch ship, having gone to the assistance of a British merchant vessel almost in a sinking state, and whose crew refused to stay by her any longer, received on board the master, officers, passengers, and crew, and valuable treasure, and brought them to England. Held, that the salvors were entitled to salvage as for a derelict. The Columbia, 3 Hagg. 428.

999. A ship having broken up, and her cargo washing out, the master being on the spot, the property is considered to be in his possession, and not derelict; but any part of the cargo drifting out to sea, out of the master's reach, may become derelict. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 407.

1000. A vessel derelict, waterlogged, and very disabled, was met with by another vessel, the master and mate of which fished down the hatchway of the derelict, and dragged up certain property, a moiety thereof decreed to the salvors. The King v. Property Derelict, 1 Hagg. 383.

1001. For an award of salvage on recapture of a vessel from a prize crew, and navigating her with the assistance of a frigate into port, see The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292; and tit. SALVAOE AWARDS, No. 229.

1002. As to salvage by a Queen's ship, bound to Heligoland, of a derelict vessel taken to Heligoland instead of an English port, see L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 48; and tit. SALVAOE AWARDS, No. 18.

1003. So, also, in a case of salvage of a foreign vessel derelict and rescued from pirates and taken to an English port, see The Calypso, 2 Hagg. 212.

1004. As to the abandonment of a derelict by salvors and consequent loss of salvage by them, see The Killeena, 6 P. D. 193; 51 L. J. P. D. 11; 4 Asp. 472.

1004a. As to droits of Admiralty, see tit. WRECK.

* (304) The rule of salvage in cases of derelict usually is, to give one-half, and it has rarely been below two-fifths of the value of the property. The Boston, 1 Sumner, 328; The Henry Erubank, ibid. 400; Rowe v. Brig —, 1 Mason, 372; Bell v. Sloop Ann, 2 Pet. Ad. 278; Hindry v. The Priscilla, Bee, 1; Morehouse v. The Jefferson and Cargo, 1 Pet. Ad. 45, note; Taylor v. Ship Cato, 1 Pet. Ad. 48. One-third, in another case; Warder v. Goods saved from La Belle Creole, 1 Pet. Ad. 31. [AMERICAN.]

(305) In general a moiety is the rule of salvage in cases of derelict, but it is a flexible rule, yielding to circumstances. Rowe v. Brig —, 1 Mason, 372; Sprague v. 140 Barrels of Flour, 2 Story, 195; The Elizabeth and Jane, Ware, 35; Post v. Jones, 19 How. 150, 161; Flinn v. The Leander, Bee, Adm. 260; The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; Cross v. The Bellona, Bee, 139. [AMERICAN.]

(306) In cases of derelict, it was the ancient rule of the Admiralty to give the salvors a moiety; and from authorities it may perhaps be gathered as the general sense of the maritime world at the present day, that the rate of salvage on derelicts should not, in ordinary cases, range below a third nor above a moiety of the value of the property. Rowe v. The Brig —, 1 Mason, 377; Tyson v. Prior, 1 Gall. 133, 136. [AMERICAN.]

(307) It seems that a moiety still continues to be the favourite proportion of judicial tribunals. In cases of derelict the old rule ought still to be considered as a subsisting but flexible rule, and that primâ facie the salvors are entitled to a moiety, thus making it incumbent upon the claimant to establish that under the special circumstances of the case a different measure ought to be applied. Rowe v. The Brig —, 1 Mason, 377. [AMERICAN.]

(308) When it is said, however, that the rule is flexible, it is not meant that it bends

2. Amount awarded.*

1005. There is no fixed amount of salvage to be decreed in cases of derelict. The quantum rests in the discretion of the court. If there ever was an ancient rule fixing the amount at a moiety in all cases it has now become obsolete. The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 42.

1006. No particular proportion ought to be awarded in cases of derelict, but the fact of derelict ought to be considered an ingredient, as it were, in the degree of danger in which the property saved was situated. The True Blue, L. R. 1 P. C. 250; 4 Moo. P. C. N. S. 96.

1007. By the old law, in cases of derelict, half the value was always given, but it has been long held that the proportion is discretionary and dependent on circumstances. Seldom, however, more than one-half or less than one-third is given.

to every slight change of circumstances; but cases may occur of such extraordinary peril and difficulty, of such exalted virtue and enterprise, that a moiety, even of a very valuable property, might be too small a proportion; and, on the other hand, there may be cases where the service is attended with so little difficulty and peril, that it would entitle the parties to little more than a quantum meruit for work and labour. Ibid.

(309) In case of absolute derelict, the habit of maritime courts favours an equal partition of what is saved, one moiety to the salvor, the other to the owner, after deducting the costs of suit. The John Wurts, Olcott, Adm. 462. [AMERICAN.]

(309a) But there is no rule that the amount shall be a moiety of the property saved. Where the service was performed by a tow-boat without any risk and almost without detention, one-third was held to be a fair compensation. The Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

(310) The amount of salvage to be allowed in derelict cases should be governed by the same principles as other salvage cases, and rests in the discretion of the court according to the circumstances of each case, namely, the danger to property, value, risk of life, skill, labour, and the duration of the service. Post v. Jones, 19 How. (U. S.) 150. [AMERICAN.]

(310a) The considerations which should govern the court in adjusting the amount of salvage compensation and its distribution amongst the salvors in case of timber found adrift and rescued, stated. A Raft of Spars, 1 Abb. Adm. 291. [AMERICAN.]

311. The French law still allows one-third of a derelict, whatever its value, as salvage, under the Ordinance of 1681. See note 4, p. 1781, and Nos. 1225—1239, p. 1903.

311a. See also notes 5—8, p. 1781.

The Effort, 3 Hagg. 167; The Thetis, 2 Knapp, 410.

1008. The former practice of the court to allow one-half of the value of the derelict property in salvage awards is no longer observed; the court is now guided by the degree of merit of each case. The Martin Luther, 2 Asp. 216.

1009. In cases of derelict the court not unfrequently gives one-half of the value of the property salvaged. The Blendenhall, 1 Dodson, 423.

1010. It is only in very particular cases that the court gives more than a moiety. The Reliance, 2 Hagg. 90, n.

1011. There are no cases of salvage of derelict, except for salvage to a King's ship, or where the property is small, or no claim has been given for a private owner in which more than a moiety has been awarded. The Britannia, 3 Hagg. 154; L'Esperance, 1 Dodson, 49; The Cosmopolitan, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. xxxii.

1012. In derelicts where an owner appears there is no instance in which more than half or less than one-third is given. The Ewell Grove, 3 Hagg. 221; The Splendid, The Thomas Bailey, and The Queen of the East v. The Martin Luther, 12 L. T. N.S. 585—Adm.

1013. It was the ancient practice to award to the salvors a moiety of the property found derelict, but for a long time that practice has been departed from in these courts. The salvage awarded bears no fixed proportion to the property salvaged, but the amount is regulated upon the principle of giving an adequate reward according to all the circumstances of the case. The Florence, 16 Jur. 578; The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 42; The Minerva, 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 274; The Berlin, 4 Ir. Jur. 11; The Jane, 5 ibid. 31; The Magdalen, 1 Asp. 189; 5 L. T. N.S. 807; The Martin Luther, supra; The Scindia, L. R. 1 P. C. 241; 2 Asp. 216; 35 L. J. P. C. 53; 2 Asp. 232.

1014. In a case where the vessel was derelict, and her value, with the cargo on board, exceeded £30,000, was salvaged by two vessels, one of which, with her cargo on board, was worth £150,000, and the other above £3,000, the Vice-Admiralty Court awarded £2,000; the Judicial Committee increased the amount of salvage by £1,000. The Scindia, ibid.

1015. In a suit for salvage of a derelict ship and cargo worth £6,694, the service being of extraordinary merit, the court, after allowing the salvors their expenses, awarded them also more than a moiety of the residue. The Rasche, 42 L. J. N.S. Adm. 71; L. R. 4 Adm. & Ecc. 127.

1016. A derelict vessel was found in the North Atlantic Ocean, 800 miles from land, in a seriously damaged condition, and was navigated into Queenstown by salvors, who incurred great risk and hardship in rendering the service. The value of the derelict was £5,100. The court awarded £2,300. The Craig, 5 P. D. 186.

1017. Salvors having by meritorious services, rendered at the risk of their lives, salvaged a derelict vessel, her cargo and freight, valued together at £750, the court awarded them £360. The Hebe, 4 P. D. 217.

1018. In derelict cases it had been uniformly and properly the course to give more than in ordinary salvage cases, but it proceeds on the same principle as in other salvage cases, viz., the danger of the property. The Sarah Bell, 4 Notes of Cases, 147.

1019. In cases of derelict the true reason for a larger reward is danger to the property in the highest degree, and the reward in derelict cases should be governed by the same principles as in salvage cases, viz. danger to property, value, risk of life, skill, labour, and the duration of the services. The Florence, 16 Jur. 578.

1020. A moiety of the value of the ship and cargo, even in cases of derelict, will only be given where both considerable energy and great exertion have been displayed. In this case two-fifths only awarded. The Sansone, 3 Jur. 258.

[IRISH.]

1021. In the case of a derelict, where the proceeds were small, and the owners did not appear, the Court of Admiralty awarded the entire funds realized by the sale amongst the salvors. The Castletown, 5 Jur. 379; The Rutland, 3 ibid. 283.

[IRISH.]

1022. In a case of salvage of a derelict unknown, the proceeds thereof decreed to eight-two salvors, subject to the costs of the Crown in relation thereto. The William Hamilton, 3 Hagg. 168, n.

1023. In a case of very meritorious salvage of the cargo of a total derelict, and where there was constant attention, risk, ready invention, and a mechanical apparatus contrived in a very elaborate and highly creditable way, the estimated value of the property recovered being £14,352, the court directed payments and charges incurred by salvors, amounting to £2,300, to be paid, and allotted to them £9,000 (rather more than two-thirds) as salvage. There were eight principal and seventy-eight subordinate salvors. The Jubilee, 3 Hagg. 43, n.; and see tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, No. 5.

1024. In a case of derelict salvage of extraordinary merit, the court awarded as salvage two-thirds of the property salvaged. The value of the property was £3,400. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 324.

1025. In a case of salvage of a derelict, the service being one of extraordinary merit, the proceeds being £600, and the number of salvors 400, the court inclined to give a larger sum than a moiety; but, as no precedent for the allowance of a larger sum than a moiety in such cases could be produced, finally decreed a moiety only, directing the costs of the salvors to be paid out of the other moiety. The Francis Mary, 2 Hagg. 89.

1026. A moiety of the nett value of a derelict awarded to salvors who brought the vessel to this country but could not bring her into port. The expenses of bringing the vessel into port allowed as a deduction from the nett value. The Watt, 2 W. Rob. 71.

1027. A moiety of the property salvaged awarded to salvors in a case approaching to derelict. The Elliotta, 2 Dodson, 75.

1028. In a case of money found derelict, no owner appearing, a moiety was granted to the salvor. The King v. Property Derelict, 1 Hagg. 383.

1029. In a case of salvage of ordinary merit of a derelict, two-fifths given, the court observing that had there been any considerable danger it would have given a moiety. The Fortuna, 4 C. Rob. 194.

1030. In a salvage of a very meritorious character, the value of the vessel salvaged being £4,600, the court awarded £1,000, intimating that if it had been a derelict one-third at least would have been given. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 255.

1031. The master of a Norwegian brig bound to Cardiff, with a crew of nine men, fell in, in the North Sea, between Heligoland and the Dogger Bank, with a derelict vessel in a very crippled condition, and put his mate and two of his crew on board her. The mate and the two men on board the derelict, shortly after they had boarded her, fearing that she was about to founder, endeavoured to leave her, but their boat was swamped, one of the men drifted astern, and was picked up by a fishing smack. The mate and the other hand succeeded in bringing the derelict safely into the English Channel, and within three miles of Dungeness; she was then taken in tow by a steamship and towed to the entrance of Dover Harbour, within which she was subsequently placed in safety. The court awarded a moiety of the value of the property proceeded against, and apportioned three-fifths of the amount to the owners, master and crew of the brig. The Liviatta, 8 P. D. 24; 5 Asp. 132.

1032. It is not the general rule in cases of salvage of derelicts to give one-half the value of the property saved, although in some cases where values are small and the services meritorious, it may be proper to do so. The Anna Helena, 5 Asp. 142.

1032a. The court having, out of the proceeds of ship and cargo, amounting to the gross sum of £608, awarded one-half to the salvors of property, awarded £150 to life salvors who took off the crew, with costs. Ibid.

1033. See also No. 1072, p. 1889, and as to the amounts awarded in cases of derelicts, tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, p. 1921.

14. Consequential Loss.

1. Losses or Damages in rendering Salvage Assistance.*

1034. In a salvage case it was proved that the salving vessel, a valuable steamer, in performing the salvage services, received damage to her screw, which occasioned her detention and consequent losses. The court, besides awarding salvage, decreed payment of the damages and losses, and referred the accounts to the registrar and merchants to ascertain and report the amount. The Gladiator (No. 6), Nov. 1863.

1035. Similar decision and reference. The Oscar, 3 Hagg. 261; The Salucia, ibid. 269. See also The Watt, 2 W. Rob. 72.

1036. Held, that a vessel injured, without any fault on her part, while engaged in salvage services, is entitled to the costs of repairs and to demurrage in addition

* (312) A vessel was wrecked on Charleston Bar, and her cargo of cotton, &c., cast ashore on the islands, and there secured by great labour and risk of life and health on the part of the salvors. The court, in estimating the quantum of salvage, took into its consideration the fact, that, while employed in this service, and in securing and drying the cargo on shore, the growing crops of the salvors suffered from neglect. Stephens v. Ship Argus, 170. See Ryan v. Cato, Bee, 241. [AMERICAN.]

to salvage remuneration. The Mud Hooper (No. 4), 4 Asp. 103.*

1037. The question of the allowance of damages in such cases fully considered, and the salvors' right thereto, and to produce evidence thereon, pronounced for by the Court of Appeal. The City of Chester, 9 P. D. 182; 53 L. J. P. 90; 51 L. T. 485; 33 W. R. 104; 5 Asp. 311; and see this case set forth more fully in tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, Nos. 151, 152, p. 1734.

1038. Decision to the same effect by the Privy Council. The De Bay, 8 App. Cas. 559; 52 L. J. P. C. 57; 5 Asp. 156; 49 L. T. 414; and see this case set forth more fully in tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, Nos. 149, 150, p. 1734.

1039. During the performance of a towage contract, the tug rendered salvage services and sustained damages. The court, in awarding salvage, included the repayment of the damages and losses to the tug. The Saratoga, 1 Lush. 322.

1040. Evidence of the loss of profits and damage sustained by the salving vessel is admissible as an element to be considered in awarding remuneration; but evidence of loss of profits is not to be taken in ordinary cases as a fixed figure always to be allowed as in the nature of damages. This rule does not apply with the same force to actual damage sustained. The Sunnyside, 8 P. D. 137; 5 Asp. 140.

1041. The damage is to be repaired, or paid for to the extent of its actual value or cost price, and not at the trade profit price. The Augusta Jesse, 4 Jur. N.S. 227. [IRISH.]

1042. To entitle owners of a salving vessel to a primary lien on the property salvaged for compensation for losses, such losses must be actual. If speculative merely and consequential, they are only ingredients in estimating the salvage remuneration, of which they receive an allotment. The Martha, 3 Hagg. 436.

1043. The presumption is, that the injury or loss was occasioned by the necessities of the service and not by the default of the salvors. And the burden of proof lies upon the defendants. The Thomas Blyth, 1 Lushington, 16.

1044. Claims for salvage remuneration must rest on the ordinary grounds, such as risk, length of service, &c., and are not to be swelled by demands for compensation, upon grounds which are hypothetical or uncertain. The Eliza, 4 Jur. N.S. 58. [IRISH.]

1045. The court will decline entertaining a claim as against the owners of the vessel salvaged for repairing damage done to the salving vessel, if that damage was not necessarily incurred in the salvage service, but resulted from a struggle with another vessel seeking to assist in the salvage. Ibid.

1046. In awarding salvage remuneration to a passenger steamer, the court will not take into its consideration the possibility of damages being recovered against its owners, for the delay occasioned by the rendering of those services. Ibid.

1047. A vessel ignorant of her whereabouts struck a shoal, but got off and came to anchor. A steamer coming by gave her information of her position and attempted to tow her to a place of safety, but the hawser breaking no further attempt to tow was made, but the steamer guided the vessel out to sea clear of all shoals, being with her about five hours. The steamer being thus delayed, arrived in the subsequent prosecution of her voyage at a dangerous place about low water, which, but for that delay, she would probably have reached in safety, but it being low water she struck a rock and was very seriously injured. Held, that such damage was too remote to be considered as an element in estimating the amount of salvage. The Cornelius Grinnell, 2 Asp. 140.

1048. The court will not allow charges for repairs of the vessel salvaged, asserted to be so mixed up with the salvage as to be inseparable. The Ranger, 2 Hagg. 42.

1049. In a case of salvage by King's ships, a claim of the Admiralty made prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 485, for wages and victualling of the men, and for wear and tear of the ships, amounting together to £13,800, allowed, as not being opposed by the owners, but only by some of the salvors, the court holding that the salvors had no reason to complain of being so supplied; but it declined to give any opinion on the claim beyond drawing the distinction between the assistance afforded in ordinary cases by public vessels, for which nothing had been charged, and the appropriation of them, with additional supplies of men and stores, for eighteen months together, to an exclusive service, as in this case. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 62. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Knapp, 409; but see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 484.

* (313) As to the consequential losses of freight and demurrage allowable in such cases, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, note 251, p. 1761, and notes 268, 269, p. 1763.

2. Fishing Vessels.

1050. When a vessel has been actually called off from a lucrative employment in order to render a salvage service that fact forms an essential ingredient in the estimate of the salvage award. Otherwise the court considers the salvage remuneration awarded to her to be sufficient to compensate for any detention she may have suffered, or for any earnings of which she might probably have been deprived while rendering the salvage service. The Louisa, 3 W. Rob. 99; 6 Notes of Cases, 531; The Catharina Anna Helena (1839), 5 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 43.

1051. The owners of fishing vessels are entitled to a more liberal allotment than the owners of other vessels, because their occupation is interrupted, and the expense of navigating them is larger than in ordinary cases, so far as regards the wages of the mariners. The Louisa, ibid.

1052. When a vessel is actually engaged in a fishing occupation at the time, the court takes into its consideration the interruption of the fishing voyage. Ibid.

1053. Seven sixteenths awarded to the owners of fishing vessels, the court offering to make that scale of apportionment for such vessels a rule of court. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 254; The Louisa, 2 Notes of Cases, 151; 2 W. Rob. 26; and see The Deveron, 10 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 219.

1054. Fishermen salvors cannot claim large sums as compensation for the loss of their fishing, unless before their services are accepted they clearly state to the master their intention to make such a demand, and enforce it in the Admiralty Court. The Hedwig, 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 24; 17 Jur. 977.

1055. Even when the service is not dangerous, the owners of fishing smacks employed in a salvage service have a right to sue for remuneration in respect of the detention of the smacks. The Norden, 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 185.

1056. Salvors, owners of fishing vessels, must be indemnified for any loss which is proved to have been sustained by them in rendering salvage services. Claim sustained for loss of fish in rendering salvage services. The William, 18 June, 1849.

1057. In a case of salvage of great merit, the court allotted, besides salvage, £1,000, pursuant to the report of the registrar and merchants, for losses of salvors in losing the seal fishing season, &c. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 270.

1058. In a claim for salvage preferred by fishing boats, the court has to consider what has been the loss which the salvors have experienced in deserting their occupation of fishing and rendering the salvage service. This is to be treated with some tenderness, but the principle of taking into account the loss they have sustained is not to be carried too far. In cases of imminent danger, whatever amount of gain they might have acquired by fishing, would undoubtedly be taken into consideration, but not in ordinary cases. The Nicolai Heinrich, 17 Jur. 330; and note to 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 24.

1059. On salvage of a fishing smack, frozen up in Davis's Straits, effected by three other whaling vessels, £700 awarded in addition to the bounties given by the treasury. Such bounties, however, held to be a sufficient recompense and bar to all claim for demurrage and payment of stores, and for early sailing. The Swan, 1 W. Rob. 68.

1059a. In estimating the amount of salvage reward due to four fishing smacks the court took into consideration the loss of ice with which they were laden and bound for vessels on the fishing ground. The Houthandel, 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 25.

1060. See also No. 66, p. 1788.

1060a. As to claims for loss of fish in actions of damage by collision, see tit. REGISTRAR AND MERCHANTS, p. 1767.

3. *Deviation.

1061. As to the forfeiture of insurance by deviation to save property, but not to

* (314) Deviation to save life does not vitiate a policy of insurance in the United States, unless there is a further stoppage for the purpose of saving property. The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 424. [AMERICAN.] See also Phillips on Insurance (4th ed.), 1027.

(314a) The maritime law, looking to the general benefit of commerce, does not prevent the master from deviating to save property in distress, if he deem it fit in a sound exercise of his discretion. As between himself and his owners, the usage of the world has clothed him with this authority, and in return for such extraordinary hazards, it has enabled the owner to partake liberally in the salvage reward for the meritorious service, when it is successful. The Boston and Cargo, 1 Sumner, 328. [AMERICAN.]

(315) It seems to be agreed that stopping upon the high seas for the purpose of saving life or of transhipping shipwrecked persons, is not a deviation from the voyage, so as to save life, see Scaramanga v. Stamp, 5 C. P. D. 295, 304, and tit. MARINE INSURANCE, p. 843.

1061a. It has never (prior to the case of Scaramanga v. Stamp, supra) been directly decided by any court in this country what is the effect of a deviation on a policy of insurance where the object of that deviation has been the performance of salvage with reference either to life or to property. The True Blue, L. R. 1 P. C. 250; 4 Moore, P. C. N.S. 96.

1062. Semble, the court in awarding salvage will take into consideration the probable vitiation of her insurance by the salving vessel in rendering the services. The Waterloo, 2 Dodson, 443.

1063. When there is any risk deviation might vitiate the policy, and in estimating the amount of salvage that is not to be left out of consideration. The Arabian, 7 February, 1853.

1064. The master of a steam ship carrying mails and passengers should not deviate from the usual employment of the ship to render salvage services, except in strong cases of urgent necessity, and in doing so he incurs a great responsibility, for which he and the owners should be suitably rewarded. The Martin Luther, Swabey, 289.

1065. As to deviation for the purpose of succouring ships in distress, it is for the common advantage of all persons, underwriters, and others to give and receive assistance to and from each other in distress, see Laurence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 54; The Orbona, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 161; The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292; The Hope, 17 Feb. 1838.

1066. In apportioning a salvage remuneration between the owners and crew of a salving vessel, the court will not take into consideration the probable vitiation of a policy of insurance effected on the salving vessel. The Deveron, 1 W. Rob. 180; The Medora, 22 Nov. 1839; The Jeannette, 24 March, 1853.

1067. In all such cases it will consider every vessel as uninsured. Ibid.

1068. When the master of a vessel undertakes the responsibility of deviating from his course, and so imperilling his insurance for the purpose of rendering salvage service, he is entitled to considerable reward. The Aletheia, 13 W. R. 279.

1069. In estimating salvage reward to the owners of the salving vessel, the circumstances that the salving vessel's deviation from her course might have vitiated the insurance, the possibility of being answerable to the owners of the cargo for such deviation, and the exposure to danger of the salving ship, in rendering salvage services, are elements to be taken into consideration. The Sir Ralph Abercrombie, L. R. 1 P. C. 454.

1070. The question how far a deviation in a vessel's course, in the performance of salvage services to life or property, may be the voidance of a policy of insurance, is not satisfactorily settled, though the risk may operate on the judge's mind in determining the amount to be awarded for salvage services. The Scindia, L. R. 1 P. C. 241.

15. Awards.*

1. Generally.

1071. It is hardly possible to make a precedent of any one case in deciding discharge the underwriters upon ship, freight, or cargo. But any further stoppage, for the purpose of saving property, is said to be a deviation from the voyage, which discharges the insurers, and puts the ship, cargo, and freight completely at the risk of the shipowner. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 245. See The Boston, 1 Sumner, 329; The Henry Ewbank, ibid. 424; The Nathaniel Hooper, ibid. 578; The Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; The Brig Cora, 2 Washington, 80; Williams v. Box of Bullion, 6 Law Rep. 363. [AMERICAN.]

(315a) Held, that it was no deviation for a vessel to go out of her course three miles to speak another at sea, on seeing a signal for that purpose; nor to delay three hours to take from a foreign ship, bound to a foreign port, shipwrecked mariners of the United States, for the purpose of bringing them direct to the United States. Williams v. Box of Bullion, 6 Law Rep. 363. [AMERICAN.]

(316) If the only means of saving life are by saving property also, as where a vessel was taken in tow and the crew could not be rescued in any other way, this will not constitute a deviation. 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, 622, and Crocker v. Jackson, therein cited. [AMERICAN.]

(316a) A steamer being delayed by rendering a salvage service, arrived in the subsequent prosecution of her voyage at a dangerous place about low water, which, but for that delay, she would probably have reached at about high water, and have passed in safety, but it being low water, she struck a rock, and was very seriously injured. Held, that such damage was too remote to be considered as an element in estimating the amount of salvage. The Cornelius Grinnell, 11 L. T. N.S. 278. [AMERICAN.]

* (317) As to the amount of compensation in another when the question is one of merely money compensation, so infinitely various are the shades of difference resulting from the comparison of the details of one case with another. The Genessee, cited in The Hebe, 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. xv.

1072. Where the services were rendered by a steam vessel with complete success, but without any personal risk, the court awarded one-fourth of the value of the salvaged vessel and her stores, together with costs of suit. The Rothsay Castle, 9 Jur. N.S. 360 [IRISH]; 2 Asp. 206.

1072a. As to the principles of salvage reward generally, see c. 1, p. 1781; and in cases of derelict, c. 14, p. 1883.

1073. As to amounts awarded, see tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, p. 1921.

2. Life.

1074. Salvage services of a highly meritorious character having been performed by salvors, in saving the lives of the crew, and the ship and cargo, valued at £46,000, the Admiralty Court awarded £1,000 as salvage for such services. On appeal, held, that the sum was insufficient, and the remuneration increased to £2,000, in consideration (1) of the great danger the salvors incurred; and (2) of the fact of the saving of lives, and the value of the ship and cargo. The Glenduror, L. R. 3 P. C. 589; and see tit. SALVAGE AWARDS, No. 151.

salvage cases, there is no fixed rule. It is to be determined by the discretion of the court, under the peculiar circumstances of each case. A compensation in numero may be awarded, or a fixed per-centage or proportion of the property saved. McGinnis v. Steamboat Pontiac, 5 McLean, 359. [AMERICAN.]

(317a) As far as the author's inquiries extend, when a proportion of the thing saved has been awarded, a half has been the maximum and an eighth the minimum; below that it is usual to adjudge a compensation in numero. In some cases indeed more than a half may have been awarded, but they will be found to be cases of very extraordinary merit, or on articles of very small amount. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 182 (citing The Adventure, 8 Cranch, 221; The Pontiac, 5 McLean, 359); 1 Conkling's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.), 362. [AMERICAN.]

(318) Courts in awarding salvage do not look at the precise quantum of service performed, but to the general interests of navigation, and the policy of encouraging the practice of equipping such boats with suitable pumps and embarking in salvage services. The Delphos, 1 Newb. Adm. 412. [AMERICAN.]

3. Derelict.

1075. A steamer laden with a valuable cargo, and having passengers on board, fell in with a derelict brig in the Bristol Channel, and with great difficulty, in spite of a strong wind and heavy sea, succeeded in towing her into port. The value of the brig, together with her cargo and freight, amounted to nearly £2,800. The court awarded £900 to the salvors. The Andrina, L. R. 3 A. & E. 286.

1076. In a suit of salvage of derelict cargo, no appearance in the suit was given for the owners, and consequently it became necessary to sell the cargo. The gross proceeds amounted to about £400, but after deducting the expenses of warehousing, sale, &c., the net proceeds amounted to about £189 only. The court was pressed to give salvage on the gross proceeds, but it declined to make such a precedent, and awarded £85, without stating whether that sum was calculated upon the gross or net proceeds. Cargo ex The Kepler, 26th April, 1860.

4. Deviation.

See c. 14, p. 1887.

16. Apportionment.

1. Generally.*

1077. As to the distribution of salvage under £200, by the receiver of wreck,

(318a) The rate of compensation is governed by no determinate rules of law. The principle sought to be enforced is to make a fair division of the salvaged property between its owners and the salvors. The John Wurts, Olcott, Adm. 462. [AMERICAN.]

(319) Salvage never should exceed one half of the property saved. British Consul v. Smith, Bee, 178; Cross v. Ship Bellona, ibid.; Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. 193. [AMERICAN.]

(319a) The maritime policy is to make a liberal allowance in salvage cases. The highest compensation which is ordinarily allowed in the most meritorious cases is one moiety, and that is rarely given. There are some exceptions, as when the property saved is very considerable, and the danger and difficulty of the service are so great as to require an extraordinary compensation. Bearse v. Three Hundred and Forty Pigs of Copper, 1 Story, 314. [AMERICAN.]

(320) When salvors encounter more than usual difficulty and trouble, and the value saved is small, the proportion allowed them will be greater. Smith v. The Stewart, Crabbe, 218. [AMERICAN.]

* (321) As to the duties of receivers of wreck in regard to apportionment of salvage, among the persons entitled thereto, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 466, 467; and Nos. 152, 153, p. 1797.

1078. As to the apportionment of salvage exceeding £200 by courts having Admiralty jurisdiction, Ibid. s. 498; and see tit. PRACTICE, Pt. III. p. 1694.

1079. The 498th section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), imposes a duty on the Court of Admiralty on application made to it to decree an equitable apportionment of salvage. The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 95; 2 L. T. N.S. 575; 30 L. J. Adm. 16.

1080. In exercising that jurisdiction the court will only be restrained by clear proof of an equitable agreement or of an equitable and sufficient tender. Ibid. 30 L. J. Adm. 15.

1081. Salvage by a fishing smack of Hull. The crew consisted of a master, two able seamen, and a boy. The master and seamen were paid by shares of the earnings, the boy by weekly wages. In a suit by the boy for a distribution of the salvage it was alleged that a custom existed at Hull, whereby when persons are engaged in the fishing trade those who receive wages are excluded from reward for salvage services. Held, that no such custom can be recognized as a bar to salvage. The John, 28th January, 1846.

1082. The court will not as a matter of course apportion the salvage awarded, but will leave it to the salvors to divide it amongst themselves amicably. It will, however, if applied to, proceed to a distribution. The John Bryant, 5 Jur. 233. [IRISH.]

1083. The court has no power to direct advances made to the salvors by their agent to be deducted from the salvage money already paid into court. The agent's claim is for the payment of a debt contracted solely upon the personal security of the salvors, and the court would be exceeding its jurisdiction in converting that claim into a lien upon the property in the hands of the court. The Louisa, 3

W. Rob. 100; 6 Notes of Cases, 531; 12 Jur. 946.

1084. When the owner appeals from a salvage award and there is no appeal by the salvors, the court, although it may reduce the award, will not interfere with the proportions. The Berlin, 4 Jur. 11a. [IRISH.]

1085. When the owner of the salvaging vessel thinks that a proper share of the salvage reward has not been paid to him by the master, his proper course is (as prescribed by the 498th section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), to bring into court the share so paid to him, to pray for a monition to the master to do the same, and to apply for an order of distribution. The Princess Helena, 1 Lushington, 190; 4 L. T. N.S. 869; 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 137.

1086. Applications for apportionment should be made at the time of or shortly after the award, while the circumstances are fresh in the mind of the court. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287.

1087. A party dissatisfied with the tender made to him in the apportionment of a salvage reward, is not precluded from applying within a reasonable time for an apportionment by the court. The question of time will not be pressed against a person in a humble class of life. Ibid.

1088. No action is maintainable at common law by a seaman for his share of salvage awarded by two justices, under the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460, and paid to the owner of the salvor vessel. Atkinson v. Woodhall, 1 H. & C. 170.

1089. The owner of a vessel, to whom the aggregate amount of salvage had been paid, offered a seaman less than he claimed as his share, which the seaman refused. Held, no evidence of money received to the seaman's use, or of an account stated. Ibid.

1090. The captain of a Queen's ship sent a transport steamer that had been chartered to the government to the assist-see Instructions to Receivers of Wreck and Officers of Customs and Coastguard, issued by the Board of Trade, and published by the Queen's Printers, anno 1859.

(321a) The cases of The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; The Henry Eubank, 1 Sumner, 400; The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 ibid. 577, are leading cases on the subject of apportionment. [AMERICAN.]

(322) Though embezzlement by a salvor works a forfeiture of his claim of salvage, it does not prejudice his co-salvors, who are innocent. Rising Sun, Ware, 378. [AMERICAN.]

(323) Though the master and all the crew are implicated in the embezzlement, that will not work a forfeiture of the shares of the innocent owners. Ibid.

(324) Shares so forfeited do not accrue to the co-salvors. Ibid.

(325) As to the apportionment of salvage in general average, see Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 174. [AMERICAN.]

ance of a vessel in distress. In addition to her own crew, the transport took with her a naval officer and some extra seamen. The captain of the Queen's ship could not have ordered the transport to render these services except with the consent of the master, nor, on the other hand, could the master of the transport have rendered them without the permission of the captain. Of the £1,000 salvage the court awarded £400 to the owners, master, and crew of the transport, £200 to the naval officer who went with her, and £400 to the captain and extra seamen who went with the transport. The Nile, L. R. 4 A. & E. 449; 44 L. J. Adm. 38; 3 Asp. N.S. 11.

1091. A vessel constructed entirely for the purpose of conveying the obelisk, known as Cleopatra's Needle, from Alexandria to England, was, with the obelisk on board her, abandoned in the Bay of Biscay by her master and crew, and by the steamship employed to tow her to England, and the next day was found floating on her beam ends about ninety miles north-east of Ferrol by another steamship, which succeeded in towing her into Ferrol in safety. The judge, by consent, fixed the value of the property salvaged at £25,000. £2,000 awarded as salvage to the plaintiffs, and apportioned:—£1,200 to the owner of the salvaging vessel; £250 to her master; and the residue among her crew according to their rating and services as salvors. The Cleopatra, 3 P. D. 145.

1091a. £4,000 awarded for salvage services by a steamship, apportioned:—£3,000 to owners, £400 to master, and £600 to crew. The Kenmure Castle, 7 P. D. 47.

1092. See, further, as to such apportionment, tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS.

1093. As to the practice in actions of distribution of salvage, see tit. PRACTICE, Pt. III. c. 16, p. 1694.

2. Agreements.

(a) Since the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104).

1094. For the statutory provisions protecting seamen from abandoning their right to salvage, see the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182; and No. 901, p. 1873.

1095. As to the above 182nd section not applying to stipulations by seamen of a ship which is by the agreement to be employed in salvage service, see the M. S.

Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 18; and No. 902, p. 1873.

1096. No assignment or sale of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same; and no power of attorney or authority for the receipt of any such salvage shall be irrevocable. See M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 233.

1097. As to the effect of the above sections, to leave such agreements to the discretion of the court as before any legislation on the subject, see The Ganges, L. R. 2 A. & E. 370; 38 L. J. Adm. 61; 3 Asp. 342; and Nos. 905, 906, p. 1873.

1098. The burden of proof is upon those who assert such an agreement to show, not merely the existence of the agreement, but that the seamen were fully aware of all its consequences. Ibid.

1099. But neither the agreement for the vessel to be employed in salvage services, nor the stipulation that the seaman shall waive his claim for salvage, need be in writing to satisfy the 18th section of the statute. Ibid.

1100. Quære, whether, if a valid agreement of the kind existed, salvage would be awarded for services in respect of such an agreement? Ibid.

1101. A receipt for 11s., "in full of all demands," held not to bar a salvor, he being an ignorant person, and having formed an erroneous opinion of his services. £50 awarded to him. The Sir Robert Peel, 8 Dec. 1854.

1102. The 182nd section of the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), includes cases where seamen having actually performed salvage services consent to abandon their claim to salvage remuneration. Such stipulations are inoperative. The Rosario, 2 P. D. 41; 46 L. J. 52; 3 Asp. N.S. 334.

1103. Certain of the crew of the N. instituted a cause of distribution of salvage against the owners, who had received a sum of money for services rendered by the N. and her crew. A plea by the defendants that before the sum had been paid them or agreed upon, the plaintiffs had, in consideration of certain sums paid them by the defendants, assigned to the defendants their interest in the salvage remuneration due or to become due in respect of the services, held bad on demurrer. Ibid.

1104. Agreement by salvors for apportionment of salvage upheld. The James Armstrong, 3 Asp. N.S. 46.

1105. See also as to agreements generally, c. 10, p. 1867.

(b) Before the M. S Act, 1854
(c. 104).*

1106. By the ancient law of the Court of Admiralty, as well as by statute law prior to the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), any stipulation by which a seaman agreed to abandon a claim for salvage was invalid. The Pride of Canada, 9 L. T. N.S. 546.

1107. Held, that not only all agreements, barring salvage, are wholly inoperative, but agreements limiting the proportion of salvage money are to be maintained only so far as they are really equitable. The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 97; 30 L. J. Adm. 15; 2 L. T. N.S. 575; The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 22; 3 Ibid. 100; 6 Notes of Cases, 531; 12 Jur. 946.

1108. Local and customary agreements if equitable, such as in the case of a life-boat company, that those who stay shall be rewarded as those who go, the court will always view favourably; but it is otherwise in the case of vague special agreements between salvors and persons of contrary interest. Special agreements to be such as the court will sanction, must be clearly equitable and clearly proved. The Enchantress, Ibid.

1109. Agreement between salvors and owners of salving ship to leave the apportionment of the salvage award to the determination of the latter, held, inequitable and void. Ibid.

1110. Action by masters of three fishing luggers sent in a steam-tug with her crew to render assistance to a vessel in distress for apportionment of £375 paid as salvage to the steamer. £14:17s. 6d. tendered by owners, alleging an agreement with the claimants. Tender pronounced against, and £45 awarded with costs. Ibid.

1111. The court has no power to direct advances made to the salvors by their agent to be deducted from the salvage money already paid into court. The agent's claim is for the payment of a debt contracted solely upon the personal security of the salvors, and the court would be exceeding its jurisdiction in converting that claim into a lien upon the property in the hands of the court. The Louisa, Ibid.

1112. The court declined to take notice for the benefit of an agent of advances made by him on account of salvage to certain of the salvors, being minors and apprentices, under an agreement for the apportionment of salvage, which agreement was overruled by the court. Ibid. 2 W. Rob. 26.

1113. In apportioning a salvage award the court will not consider itself bound by an agreement, made anterior to the salvage in question, between the owners and the crew, respecting the relative apportionment of all salvage awards between them. A scale of apportionment drawn up under such an agreement overruled, and a fresh apportionment made by the court. Ibid.

1114. An ignorant salvor receiving a sum utterly inadequate to the services performed, and signing a receipt in full of all demands, is entitled to relief in a Court of Admiralty, and is not barred of his suit for fair and proper remuneration of such services. The Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 70.

1115. The court would be reluctant to disturb an arrangement carried on previously with satisfaction to all parties, especially when it is part of the arrangement that the seamen receive their wages, whether in sickness or in health. When there has been great risk and extraordinary labour, the court will do so, but otherwise it will not be disposed to disturb the arrangement. The Beulah, 2 Notes of Cases, 64; 1 W. Rob. 477; 7 Jur. 207.

1116. Special agreements with the owners by the master of a tug-steamer, for a percentage on the earnings of the tug, and by seamen for increased wages, for foregoing all claims for salvage, will not be upheld by the Court of Admiralty, as being repugnant to general principles and prejudicial to the public interest, and as the effect of such agreements would be to take away from the actual salvors the motives to all enterprise and energy. The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. N.S. 60 [IRISH]; 11 L. T. N.S. 85.

1117. A claim of the owners of the salving vessel to the shares of the appren-

* (326) A contract was made between the United States consul at Havana, acting as agent for the owners of a wrecked ship, and the master of another ship, stipulating for a compensation of fifty per cent. salvage for services to be rendered by the latter. Held, that this contract did not compel the court to award the whole amount to the master and owner of the salving vessel, but that a proportionate part would be awarded to the crew. The John Taylor and Tackle, 1 Newb. Adm. 341. [AMERICAN.]

tices who were on board overruled. The Columbine, 2 W. Rob. 186.

1118. Even if a previous contract to that effect had been made, it would be void as against equity and public policy. Ibid.

1119. Prior to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 5 (repealed but re-enacted by the M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182), an agreement for an equal distribution of a salvage reward, signed by the mate, the second in command in the salvaging vessel, but placed in the chief command over the vessel salvaged (a derelict) and the parties (part of the crew of the salvor) effecting the salvage, was held to bind those under him, he being by such circumstances, in point of fact, master of the derelict. The Baltimore, 2 Dodson, 137.

3. Officers and Crews of her Majesty's Ships.*

1120. In a case of salvage effected by a King's ship and crew, one-tenth of the value of ship, cargo, and freight, having been awarded, the court directed the same to be distributed according to the prize proclamation then in force. The Mary Ann, 1 Hagg. 158.

1121. The proportion of salvage due to the admiral of the station, who had contributed effective salvage assistance, beyond the performance of his mere official duties, settled by the court according to the proportions laid down in the prize proclamation. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 61; 2 Knapp, 409.

1122. The Court of Admiralty has power to distribute salvage amongst Queen's ships and their crews, and the Queen's proclamation only applies to the distribution of salvage where there has been no apportionment by a competent court. The Mary Adeline, 13th June, 1854.

1122a. As to the distribution of salvage among officers and crews of Queen's ships, see tit. PRACTICE, Pt. III. p. 1694.

Persons acting in superior situations will, on producing the captain of the district's order, be entitled to the proportion of rewards for seizures allotted to the superior rank. Ibid.

dered by officers or men of the coast-guard service in watching or protecting shipwrecked property, then, unless it can be shown that such services have been declined by the owner of such property or his agent at the time they were tendered, or that salvage has been claimed and awarded for such services, the owner of the shipwrecked property shall pay in respect of the services remuneration according to a scale to be fixed by the Board of Trade, so, however, that such scale shall not exceed any scale by which payment to officers and men of the coast-guard for extra duties in the ordinary service of the Commissioners of Customs is for the time being regulated; and such remuneration shall be recoverable by the same means and shall be paid to the same persons and accounted for and applied in the same manner as fees received by receivers appointed under the M. S. Act, 1854. The M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 91), s. 20.

5. Owners of Salvaging Vessels.*

(a) Generally.

1124. It is a general rule that a party not actually occupied in effecting a salvage service is not entitled to share in a salvage remuneration. The exception which not unfrequently occurs to this rule is in favour of owners of vessels which, in rendering assistance, have either been diverted from their proper employment, or have experienced a special mischief, occasioning to the owners some inconvenience and loss for which an equitable compensation may reasonably be claimed. The Vine, 2 Hagg. 2; The Charlotte, 2 W. Rob. 72; 6 Notes of Cases, 299.

(330) As to cases of joint salvage by the officers and men of two or more cruisers or stations, see the General Instructions for the Coastguard of the United Kingdom, 1864.

(331) As to the charge and use by the coastguard of the rocket and mortar apparatus, life-belts, and as to life-boats, Ibid. cc. 5 and 6, Nos. 530—541, pp. 129—131.

* (332) The owners of a salvaging ship have a just claim to share in the salvage compensation not merely as an indemnity for the risk of their property, but as an inducement to them to permit their captains to render such services, and also as a check on the latter from deserting the owner's interest for his own. The Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

(333) The courts of the United States, looking to the common safety and interest of the whole commercial world, bestows on the owner of the salvaging vessel a liberal salvage reward, not merely as an indemnity for deviation, but to stimulate him to a just zeal in the common cause, and not to clog his voyages with narrow instructions interdicting his master from any salvage service. The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 425; The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Ibid. 579.

(334) In ordinary cases, that is, where there have been no peculiar services rendered, no uncommon sacrifices made, and no extraordinary perils encountered by the salvaging ship while engaged in the salvage service, where no voyage is broken up, nor serious damage or loss sustained by the owner, the more usual proportion allowed the owner by the courts of the United States, is one-third. Marvin on Wreck and Salvvage, 246; The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 424; The Boston, ibid. 330; The Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; The Brig Cora, 2 Washington, 80; The Amethyst, Davis, 28; The Brigantine Harmony, 1 Peters, Adm. Dec. 43. [AMERICAN.]

(335) Sometimes a moiety is allowed. The Rising Sun, Ware, 385. [AMERICAN.]

(336) The master of a ship and cargo valued at 72,000 dollars, bound from Havana to Cadiz, fell in with a derelict of the net value of 22,000 dollars, and took it in tow and proceeded to New York, thereby interrupting and retarding the voyage to the great injury of the owner. Two-thirds of the salvage awarded to the owner. The Waterloo, 1 Blatch. & How. 115. In another case three-fourths allowed to the owner. La Belle Creole, 1 Peters, Adm. Dec. 45. [AMERICAN.]

(337) A vessel in imminent danger of destruction by fire was saved by the exertions of the crews of tow-boats belonging to the Union Tow-boat Company, which corporation prosecuted a libel for salvage, but none of the actual salvors were before the court. Held, that the quantum of salvage must be fixed as if every salvor was before the court, one-third of which amount would be decreed to the libellants as owners of the boats. The Delphos, 1 Newb. Adm. 412. [AMERICAN.]

(337a) Where a captain and pilot declined to assert their claim, it was held, that their share did not enure to the benefit of the owners, who were only entitled to one-third of the whole amount which would have been decreed if all the claims had been asserted and proved. The Charles, 1 Newb. Adm. 329. [AMERICAN.]

1125. In cases of large value, and where the services rendered have been attended with risk to the property of the owners of the salving vessels, the court, both in civil and military salvage, will allot a portion to the owners; but aliter, where there has been no risk or damage to their property. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 264.

1126. The ancient principle was that the court gave salvage reward for personal services, and for a long time the claims of the owners of the salving ship were not much regarded. The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 96; 30 L. J. Adm. 16; 2 L. T. N.S. 575.

1127. Salvage awarded to owners, master and crew of a vessel, whose mate had gone on board another vessel on the high seas to supply the place of the master of the latter, who had been drowned. The Janet Mitchell, Swabey, 111.

1128. The crew of the A., a stranded vessel, having taken to their boats, in making for the nearest land, fell in with the B., also abandoned, and rendered salvage services to her. Claim by the owner of the A. to share in the salvage, on the ground that the salvors were enabled to reach the vessel saved solely by means of his boats, sails, and compass, and that some of the salvors were his apprentices, rejected. The Two Friends, 8 Jur. 1011; 2 W. Rob. 349.

1129. In a cause of salvage £100 was claimed for loss by damage and detention of the salving vessel. The court having awarded the sum of £1,000, the owners claimed to deduct before apportionment, besides the sum of £100, a further sum for working expenses and for pilotage and other dues paid during the detention of the salving vessel. Held, that these expenses ought to have been claimed, if at all, in the petition, but that they were not proper deductions as between co-salvors. The Wigtownshire, 36 L. J. Adm. 11.

1130. The owner of the salving steamer is justified in deducting from the sum awarded before distribution the amount of damage done to his steamer, and a reasonable sum for the loss of her services while repairing. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287; 30 L. T. 189.

1131. On appeal by owners from an award of magistrates, which the court held to be rightly brought, it will take into consideration the owners' expenses of the appeal (being considerable) in apportioning a salvage remuneration. The Oscar, 2 Hagg. 260.

1132. In the apportionment of a salvage remuneration the nature of the apprentices' connection with the vessel is to be taken into reasonable consideration, and to a certain extent the owner should be benefited from that source. The Columbine, 2 W. Rob. 186.

1133. The master had received for a salvage service effected by his vessel and her crew the sum of £800. He remitted £500 to the owners, distributed £100 amongst the crew, and retained £200 for himself on taking the accounts. In a suit by him for wages the owners claimed to set off this £200 as their own property. Held, that they were not entitled to do so, but must apply for an order of distribution in the ordinary way. The Princess Helena, 1 Lush. 191; 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 137; 4 L. T. N.S. 869.

(b) Steam Vessels.

(aa) Generally.

1134. In later times the introduction of steam power has effected a considerable change in the practice of the court. In cases of salvage by steamers it is equitable that the owners, on whom the chief risk and all the expense fall, should be rewarded in a much higher proportion than formerly. The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 96; 30 L. J. Adm. 16; 2 L. T. N.S. 575; The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287; 30 L. T. 189; The Beulah, 1 W. Rob. 477; 7 Jur. 207; 2 Notes of Cases, 61.

1135. The owners of salving steamers should be rewarded in a much higher proportion than owners of sailing ships. The Enchantress, ibid.; The Spirit of the Age, ibid.

1136. The owners of steamers carrying mails and passengers ought to share liberally in a salvage award, because such large steamers are able to perform the most efficient services, and they would otherwise discourage their masters in rendering them. The Martin Luther, Swabey, 289.

1137. The court, in estimating the amount of salvage to be awarded, will not overlook the fact that the salving vessel was a passenger ship. The Vanguard, 5 Ir. Jur. N.S. 364.

1138. The court, in distributing an award of salvage, will award very liberal remuneration to a steam vessel specially built for and devoted to salvage services, inasmuch as she is not employed in general trade for the conveyance of goods and passengers, and depends entirely on her chances for public encouragement and support. The Mary Anne, 11 L. T. N.S. 85.

1139. As a rule, very seldom deviated from, the owners are not to take more than a moiety of the net sum received after expenses are deducted.* The Enchantress, 1 Lushington, 96; The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287; 30 L. T. 189.

1139a. The Court of Admiralty has never, except under special circumstances, given to the owners of the salvor's vessel more than a moiety of the salvage remuneration. The Princess Helena, 1 Lush. 191; 30 L. J. N.S. Adm. 137; 4 L. T. N.S. 869.* But see the cases below.

1140. Where the efficiency of the steam power of the salving vessel was a main ingredient in the salvage service, the court, out of £4,000 awarded, apportioned £3,000 to the owners. The Kenmure Castle, 7 P. D. 47.

1140a. Out of £3,500 awarded, £2,000 apportioned to the owners of the salving steamer. The Castlewood, 4 Asp. 278, 358.

1141. For the ranges of proportion allotted to owners, see tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS.

1142. In a service mainly rendered by the steam power of the salving ship, and occasioning a deviation in point of law, though the crew were exposed to some peril, an apportionment of two-thirds to the shipowners was altered to five-ninths to them and four-ninths to the master and crew, the sum awarded being £900. The Farnley Hall, 4 Asp. 499.

1143. Where a Vice-Admiralty Court had apportioned £3,500 salvage as follows:—£1,500 to the owners (of steamer), £900 to the master, and £1,100 to the crew, the Privy Council varied the apportionment as follows:—£2,000 to the owners, £700 to the master, and the balance to the crew. The Castlewood, 4 Asp. 278.

1144. In apportioning a salvage remuneration between the owners and crew of a salving vessel, the court will not take into consideration the probable vitiation of a policy of insurance effected on the salving vessel. In all such cases it will consider every vessel as uninsured. The Deveron, 1 W. Rob. 180; The Medora, Nov. 22, 1839; The Jeannette, March 24, 1853; but see The Arabian, Feb. 7, 1853. As to deviation, see c. 14, p. 1887.

1145. In fixing the proportion of salvage remuneration to which owners are entitled, the circumstance that the salving vessel deviating from her course might have vitiated her insurance and might have rendered the owners liable to the owner of cargo, must, together with the actual risk to the salving vessel, be taken into account. The Sir Ralph Abercrombie, L. R. 1 P. C. 454; 4 Moore, P. C. N.S. 374.

1146. The general principle of law is, that the claim of owners to salvage is generally very slight, unless from the circumstances of the case their property becomes exposed to danger, or they incur some real loss or inconvenience. In a case where there was no danger to the salving vessel, a whaler, but where she had been detained by the service with a consequential risk, damage, and expenses, claim of the owners to salvage held to be well founded. The Jane, 2 Hagg. 343.

1147. When the masters and part of the crews of smacks are employed to perform salvage services, the owners of the smacks have a right to remuneration for the detention of the smacks, even when the service is not dangerous. The Norden, 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 185.

1148. In apportioning salvage between the owners and crew, the distribution must depend upon the peculiar circumstances of each individual case. Where no risk has been incurred by the vessel rendering assistance, it is not usual to decree to the owners any large portion of the salvage, which more properly belongs to the individuals whose services have effected the preservation of the vessel salvaged. The Nicolina, 2 W. Rob. 175.

1149. In apportioning salvage remunerations the owners of a sailing vessel will not generally be entitled to as large a proportion as if their vessel had been a

* (338) It will be seen by reference to Nos. 1140, 1140a, and 1142 in the text, and to the tit. APPORTIONMENT OF SALVAGE AWARDS, that the rights of owners of salving steam vessels have been more fully recognized of late years.

stoam vessel. The Palmyra, 1 Asp. N.S. 182.

1149a. In respect of consequential loss, see c. 14, p. 1885.

(c) Fishing Vessels.

1150. Ibid. p. 1887.

6. *Owners of Cargo in salving Vessels.

* (339) The owner of cargo on board the salvor ship is not entitled to share in the salvage on the ground of the exposure of his property to peril, nor on the ground of the loss of insurance by the deviation, unless he has expressly assented thereto, and thereby released the shipowner from his responsibility. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 249; The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumner, 577; The Brig Cora, 2 Peters, Adm. Dec. 361; The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240. [AMERICAN.]

(339a) The owners of goods on freight on board a vessel which renders salvage services, have no claim for salvage, unless they release the owners of the vessel from their responsibility to carry the cargo safely. Bond v. The Cora, 2 Pet. Ad. 361; 2 Wash. C. C. 80; The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumner, 543. [AMERICAN.]

† (340) As between the master and the officers, the usual course has been to allow the master a larger proportion than the mate, and commonly twice as much; but the rule in this, as in other cases, yields to circumstances of a peculiar nature. The Henry Ewbank and Cargo, 1 Sumner, 400. [AMERICAN.]

(341) In apportioning the salvage among the officers and seamen, the master's share is, usually at least, double the amount of the mate, on account of his superior responsibility, although the latter may have been put in charge of the wreck, and the mate is usually allowed at least double the share of an ordinary seaman. The seamen who navigate the derelict into port have usually a larger sum, frequently double the amount, allowed than those that remain on board their own vessels. (The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 429; La Belle Creole, 1 Peters, Adm. Dec. 45; The Cato, ibid. 69.) But these proportions are often varied according to circumstances, so as to reward superior zeal, energy, and gallantry, and to discourage indifference and selfishness. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, 248; 1 Conkling's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.) 366. [AMERICAN.]

(342) As between the master and crew, about one-fourth of the salvage is usually allowed to the former after deducting the owner's proportion. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) 367. Such a proportion awarded

7. Personal Salvors.

(a) Master and Crew.†

1151. Although it is equitable in cases of salvage by steamers that the owners on whom the chief risk and all the expenses fall should be rewarded in a much higher proportion than owners were formerly, yet the court will not lose sight of its ancient principle of adequately and liberally rewarding the personal services of the men engaged. The master con-

the master. The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; 1 Curtis, S. C. Dec. 479; The Cora, 2 Washington, 80. [AMERICAN.]

(343) In cases of great perils, sacrifices, and hardships incurred by the mate as commander of the actual salvors, his proportion is permitted to approach nearer to that of the master. The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumner, 400, 429. Under these circumstances about two-eighths was awarded to him. The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240; 1 Curtis, S. C. Dec. 479; The Cora, 2 Washington, 80, 87. [AMERICAN.]

(344) When the pretensions of the seamen composing the crew are very unequal, it is usual to discriminate between them. But it is against the policy of the maritime law to make what may be felt to be invidious distinction in this respect upon light grounds, and the amount allowed as salvage is deemed to be much more important than the ratio of apportionment. This principle is applicable to cases in which several vessels and crews are concerned in the salvage service. 1 Conkling's Adm. Prac. (2nd ed.) 367; The Henry Ewbank, 4 Sumner, 400, 443; The Cora, 2 Washington, 88. [AMERICAN.]

(345) The master had selfishly overlooked the true interests of his owner, and had, under the circumstances, unjustifiably engaged in the salvage enterprise, and had put his vessel and cargo to an excessive and improvident risk, by taking in tow a derelict and carrying her to New York, he being bound to Cadiz. His share was reduced to that of a common seaman. The Waterloo, 1 Blatch. & How. 115. [AMERICAN.]

(346) In an action by one of the crew of a vessel against the owner for his share of salvage money, paid by the owner of goods saved from a wreck without any deduction for embezzlement, the owner of the vessel cannot set up in defence that the plaintiff had embezzled a portion of the goods. Blake v. Patten, 3 Shep. 173. [AMERICAN.]

(347) When the master of a vessel, in the course of a voyage, engages in a salvage service, he cannot oppose to the claim of any of his crew for a share of the salvage their misconduct during the voyage, if they are guilty of no misconduct during the time they are engaged in the salvage. The Centurion, Wars, 477. [AMERICAN.]

ducting the enterprise receives a handsome reward, and the seamen in proportion. The Enechantress, 1 Lushington, 96; 30 L. J. Adm. 16; 2 L. T. N.S. 575; The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 287.

1152. The master of a steamer carrying mails and passengers incurs very great responsibility in deviating from his course to render salvage services, and ought not to do so unless the necessity is imminent. In the apportionment therefore of a salvage award the court ought to reward him liberally. The Martin Luther, Swabey, 289.

1152a. Out of £3,500 awarded, £700 allotted to the master for his skilful navigation of the salving steamer in dangerous circumstances. The Castlewood, 4 Asp. 278, 358.

1153. In the apportionment of salvage remuneration, the court will order usually that portion allotted to the crews of the salving vessel to be divided according to their respective rates of wages. The Howard, 3 Hagg. 256, n.; The Earl Grey, ibid. 364; The Columbia, 3 Hagg. 428; 2 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 117; The Hope, 3 Hagg. 423; The Jane, 5 Ir. Jur. 31.

1154. A boy held entitled to share equally with seamen in a salvage remuneration, the court presuming (his age not being stated) that he performed the same amount of duty as the other seamen. The Caroline, 7 Jur. 660.

1155. The fact that a considerable sum has been awarded to the owners of the salving vessel, does not diminish the amount to which the master and crew are entitled. The Aletheia, 13 W. R. 279.

1155a. Salvage by a steamer of another steamer, disabled by the breaking of her crank shaft. The service consisted in towing the other steamer about thirty miles without risk or danger. Both steamers were valuable, and belonged to the same owners. Fifteen of the crew of the salving steamer brought an action for distribution of salvage. The court awarded them £1 each, and condemned them in costs, for arresting the property, in £5,000, and proceeding in the superior court. The Agamemnon, 5 Asp. 92.

1156. Held, that the allotment of salvage among the crew of the ship rendering assistance could not be submitted to a jury, but is essentially a matter of Admiralty jurisdiction. The Columbine, 2 Rob. Adm. Rep. 186, referred to by Pollock, C. B. Atkinson v. Woodall, 1 Asp. 224; 6 L. T. N.S. 361; 8 Jur. N.S. 720; 31 L. J. 352; 1 H. & N. 170.

1158. The 182nd section of the M. S. Act, 1854, does not prevent seamen who are entitled to recover salvage remuneration from entering into an arrangement through their solicitor for the apportionment of the amount due to them. The Afrika, 5 P. D. 192.

1159. As to second salvors, see c. 5, s. 17, p. 1820.

(b) Apprentices.*

1160. The apprentice, and not his master, is entitled to the share of salvage earned by the personal services of the apprentice. Claim of the master to the share of an apprentice rejected. The Two Friends, 2 W. Rob. 353; 8 Jur. 1011.

1161. A claim of the owners of the salving vessel to the shares of the apprentices who were on board overruled, the court holding that, even if a previous contract to that effect had been made, it would be void as against equity and public policy; but in the apportionment of a salvage remuneration the nature of the apprentices' connection with the vessel is to be taken into reasonable consideration, and, to a certain extent, the owner should be benefited from that source. The Columbine, 2 W. Rob. 186.

* (348) When salvors are apprentices their masters are not entitled to their share of the salvage, but it shall be paid to the apprentices themselves. See Mason v. Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 239. [AMERICAN.]

(348a) It is the general practice of the American Admiralty Courts in cases of salvage to decree that a minor's share of the reward shall be his own property. Dunlap's Adm. Practice (2nd ed.), 98. [AMERICAN.]

1162. In apportioning a salvage award among the crew in proportion to their wages, the court directed the apprentices' wages to be taken at two-thirds of those of able seamen. The George Dean, Swabey, 291.

1162*a*. A boy held entitled to share equally with seamen in a salvage remuneration, the court presuming (his age not being stated) that he performed the same amount of duty as the other seamen. The Caroline, 7 Jur. 660.

(c) Passengers.

See c. 5, pp. 1805 and 1808.

8. Amounts.

1163. A salvage service was mainly rendered by the steam power of the salving ship. It occasioned a deviation in point of law, and in rendering the service the crew were exposed to some peril. £600 awarded by the court below was increased on appeal to £900. An apportionment of two-thirds to the shipowners and one-third to the master and crew, altered to five-ninths to the shipowners and four-ninths to the master and crew, viz. £500 to the owners, £100 to the master, and £300 to the crew according to their ratings. The Farnley Hall, 4 Asp. 499.

Part II.—IN BRITISH COLONIAL COURTS.

1. Generally.

1164. As to the jurisdiction as to salvage of Vice-Admiralty Courts, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 688.

1165. For a list of such courts, Ibid.

1166. As to the practice of such courts in salvage actions, see tit. PRACTICE, p. 1713.

1167. As to the jurisdiction of naval courts in cases of a ship being abandoned, wrecked, or otherwise lost, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 690.

1168. As to the jurisdiction generally of the various British courts in colonial or foreign possessions not enumerated below, Ibid. p. 634.

2. Isle of Man.

1169. As to the jurisdiction as to salvage in the Isle of Man, Ibid. p. 693, No. 510.

3. Heligoland.

1170. As to the jurisdiction of the Wreck Court of Heligoland in cases of wreck, salvage and the like, see Ord. No. 8 of 1864; No. 12 of 1865; No. 7 of 1868, and No. 1 of 1876.

1171. For provisions as to wreck, and as to vessels and boats of the colony rendering assistance to vessels in distress, that no agreement made by the master of a vessel in distress shall be binding; and as to receiver of wreck, see Ord. No. 7 of 1868; No. 1 of 1876.

1171*a*. The maximum salvage to be awarded by the magistrate, court of sessions, or governor, is not to exceed one-third. See Ord. No. 7 of 1868, s. 14.

1172. Salvage is to be paid for the preservation of life. Ibid.

4. Ceylon.

1173. For provisions as to salvage in Ceylon, see Ord. No. 5 of 1861 (analogous to the British M. S. Act, 1854, c. 104).

5. The Bahama Islands.

1174. For provisions for the licensing and regulating of vessels, boats, and persons employed in rendering assistance to ships, persons, and goods in distress off the Bahama Islands, see Prov. Acts, 27 Vict. cc. 1 and 24; 28 Vict. c. 14; 29 Vict. c. 16; 37 Vict. c. 9; and 38 Vict. c. 18.

1175. Decree of the Vice-Admiralty Court of the Bahamas awarding 76 per cent. in kind for a most meritorious salvage service, attended with loss of life, varied upon appeal, by reducing the amount to 50 per cent. upon the whole cargo, stores and materials. Gore v. Bethell, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 189.

1176. In no instance, however meritorious the service performed, has the Court of Admiralty in England decreed more than a moiety for salvage. Derelict sine spe recuperandi is distinguishable from salvage in the amount awarded. Ibid.

6. The Bermuda Islands.

1177. For provisions continuing an act to ascertain the extent of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in cases of salvage, and for other purposes connected with salvage, see Bermuda Act, No. 9 of 1870.

7. Canada.

1. Generally.

1178. Where within the limits of the Dominion of Canada any vessel is wrecked or abandoned, stranded, or in distress, and services are rendered by any person in assisting such vessel, and where such services are rendered by any person in saving any wreck, there shall be payable to the salvor by the owner of such vessel or wreck, as the case may be, a reasonable amount of salvage, including expenses properly incurred. See Canada Act, 1873 (c. 55), s. 24, in 14 Hertslet's Treaties, p. 804.

2. Of Life.

1179. Where services are rendered within the limits of the Dominion of Canada in saving life from any vessel, there shall be payable to the salvor by the owner of the vessel, freight, cargo, stores and tackle, a reasonable sum for salvage and expenses, in priority to all other claims, if any, for salvage; and in cases where such vessel, stores, tackle, and cargo are destroyed, or the value thereof with the freight, if any, is insufficient, after payment of the actual expenses incurred, to pay the amount of such salvage, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may, in his discretion, award to the salvor, out of any funds at his disposal for the purpose, such remuneration as he thinks fit. Ibid. s. 23, in Ibid. p. 808.

3. Receivers of Wreck.

1180. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall, throughout Canada, have the general superintendence of all matters relating to wreck and shipping casualties; and the governor may from time to time appoint any officer of customs, or, where it appears to him more convenient, any other person to be a receiver of wreck; and may from time to time remove any receiver; and may from time to time, by Order in Council, establish, alter, or abolish districts, for the purposes of the act, and assign a district to any receiver, and vary such district from time to time; and if at any time there is not any receiver appointed for the district in which the city of Quebec, or the city of Halifax, or the city of St. John is included, the agent of the department of marine and fisheries at such city shall be the receiver for such district; and if at any time there is not a receiver appointed for any other district, then the principal officer of customs at the principal port in the district shall be the receiver of the district. See Canada Act, 1873 (c. 55), s. 24, in 14 Hertslet, p. 805.

1181. As to the powers and duties of receivers in respect of wreck and vessels in distress, Ibid. ss. 5 and 10.

1182. Where the owner of wreck is known to have established his title to the same, but neglects to pay the salvage fees or expenses due thereon for twenty days after notice in writing from the receiver, the receiver may sell such wreck, or a sufficient part thereof, and may, out of the proceeds of such sale, after defraying the expenses of such sale, pay the salvage fees and expenses due, and shall pay or deliver the surplus, if any, of the proceeds, or of the wreck, to the person entitled to receive the same. Ibid. s. 14, sub-s. 2.

1183. As to sale by the receiver, if he considers it for the advantage of the parties, Ibid. sub-s. 1.

1184. Wreck unclaimed for a year after it comes into the possession of the receiver may be sold, and the proceeds, after payment of expenses, costs, fees, and salvage, shall be paid over to the receiver-general, to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. Ibid. s. 15.

1185. In any case where two or more persons claim any wreck, or its proceeds, of what value or amount soever, in the possession of a receiver, any court sitting, and having jurisdiction in civil matters to the value or amount of the wreck or proceeds in question in the district of the receiver, may, on the application of such receiver, or any such persons, summon such persons before it, and may hear and adjudicate upon their claim, and may make such order as to such court may seem fit. Ibid. s. 18.

8. Jamaica.

1. Generally.

1186. As to the Courts of Judicature of Jamaica, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 727.

2. British Honduras.

1187. For provisions as to wrecks, casualties and salvage in British Honduras, see Honduras Act, No. 22 of 1878.

3. Turks and Caicos Islands.

1188. For provisions as to wrecks and salvage, see Ords. No. 6 of 1860, and No. 9 of 1861.

9. Trinidad.

1189. For provisions as to salvage and wreck, and the duties of receivers of wreck, see Ords. No. 20 of 1875 and No. 8 of 1883.

Part III.—IN BRITISH COURTS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

1. Generally.

1190. As to the jurisdiction generally of British courts in foreign countries other than those mentioned below, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 635.

2. H.M. Supreme Consular Court of Constantinople.

1191. The court has jurisdiction in cases of salvage. See Hamilton v. Aquilina, 2 L. T. N.S. 90.

1192. The court has also Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction; see Order in Council of 12 December, 1873, No. 88; and follows the procedure in Admiralty matters of the English Court of Admiralty. The Fingal, 3 Asp. 306.

3. H.M. Supreme Court for China and Japan.

1193. The court has jurisdiction in respect of salvage. See rules of procedure in Admiralty, of the court, of 5 June, 1867, approved by H.M. Minister of Foreign Affairs, in Despatch, No. 8 of 9 September, 1867.

1194. See for its rules of procedure in rem therein, Ibid.

1195. In other respects it follows therein the procedure in the English Court of Admiralty. Ibid. No. 17.

Part IV.—IN FOREIGN COURTS.

1. Generally.

1196. As to the jurisdiction generally of the various foreign courts not enumerated below, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 635.

2. America (United States).

1197. See the various American cases cited throughout this Title.

3. Belgium.

1198. Salvage of a vessel constitutes work and labour or industry, of which the price ought to be fixed by the importance of the work done, taking into account the difficulty and danger of doing it, the losses and expenses incurred, the promptitude of the service, and the peril of the vessel salvaged. Also as an accessory the value of the property salvaged, but this value must not be the basis of the award. Tribunal of Termonde, 24 July, 1880, Jour. de Droit Inter. Privé, 1882, p. 436.

1199. When the Court of Appeal is of opinion that the sum awarded exceeds "the equitable proportion between the service rendered and the remuneration earned" it will reduce it. Huygens v. Delva Katulle, Jour. de Droit Inter. Privé, 1882, p. 436.

1200. A ship, under charter, was got off the ground by a steamer, the salvage was apportioned in accordance with (1) the importance of the service rendered by each salvor; (2) the expenses incurred by each; (3) the risks and perils to which each salvor and his property were exposed: 60 per cent. to the owners, 30 per cent. to the charterers, 5 per cent. to the master, 5 per cent. to the crew. Vleeschouwer v. John Best & Co. Termonde, 24 July, 1880, Jour. de Droit Inter. Privé, 1876, p. 483.

1200*a*. See also for provisions as to wrecks and salvage the 19th Article of Treaty with Belgium, of July 23, 1862, in 11 Hertslet's Treaties, 71.

4. Denmark.*

1201. The provisions as to stranding and salvage are to be found partly in the 4th volume of King Christian the Fifth's Code and partly in a Royal Edict of 28th December, 1836, which, according to public directions, is translated into most of the principal foreign languages, including English.

1202. If wreck is found ashore, the salvage takes place under supervision of the authorities, and thereupon a public notice is issued, in which the owner is requested to report himself and prove his claim to the property within a year and a day (viz., one year and six weeks). If he reports himself and proves his claim within this time, he receives the property; or, if it has previously been disposed of by auction, the net proceeds of it after deducting salvage. If the owner does not report himself within this time, the property, or the net proceeds of it, falls to the State, which has the right to stranded goods.

1203. If wreck be found in the open sea, a public notice is likewise issued; thereon the salvors receive a salvage of from one-third to a half of the value of what is saved, and if the owner does not report himself, the salvaged goods fall to the State.

1204. It is permitted to any body to pick up property at the bottom of the sea with the assistance of diving apparatus or by other means. The owner will also in this case be advertised for, and he may receive the property after payment of salvage and expenses. Should he not report himself, the goods become the property of the finder.

1205. With regard to the picking up of anchors, it is commanded by the law of 22nd of December, 1876, that the finder must, at the latest on the following day, report the same to the inspector of police, who, if the anchor is furnished with a buoy, causes a public notice to be issued, and if the owner does not report himself within a short time and pay the salvage ordered, the property passes to the finder.

1206. In case of shipwreck it is the duty of all seeing a ship in danger or wrecked goods washing up on the beach, to do all they can to save life and property, and the coastguard and others concerned are to be informed immediately. The State has established along the coast stations with rocket apparatus and life-boats.

1207. It is a duty to save goods found ashore, but beyond the shore the obligation is voluntary. Salvage assistance must not be pressed upon anyone, but may only be rendered when it is asked for by the master, mate, or other duly authorized persons accompanying the property. The payment for the assistance rendered depends upon arrangement.

1208. If the property is stranded, and the master, mate, or other duly authorized person is on board, nobody must effect salvage without his permission. And it can be demanded that the salvage shall be taken in hand by the authorities. If the master chooses to effect the salvage himself, he appoints an agent, who concludes a contract about the salvage with those residing in the neighbourhood. In order that this contract may be binding on the master, it is to be drawn up in the presence of a superior magistrate, who looks to the interest of the master. And if the master and the contracting parties cannot agree, the magistrate fixes the amount of the salvage, which must never exceed one-third of the value of the property salvaged.

1209. If the master leaves it to the authorities to decide the salvage, they proceed according to the same rules applicable to the case of no person accompanying the stranded goods.

1209*a*. For provisions as to wrecks and salvage, see 7th, 8th, 14th and 15th Articles of the Treaty with Denmark, of February 13, 1660-1, in 1 Hertslet, 180, 182, and Articles 6, 10 and 25 of the Treaty of July 11, 1670; Ibid. 187, 196, 200, renewed by Treaty of January 14, 1814.

5. France.

1. Generally.

1210. For international regulations as to salvage of ships and goods wrecked on the shores of France and England, see Convention between England and France, dated June 16, 1879, in 14 Hertslet, 1202.

1211. In all cases except where the property salvaged has been found derelict, in or upon the open sea, the salvor is entitled, not to a share of the property, but to salvage remuneration. Caumont, vo. Epaves, No. 6, and other authorities therein.

* (349) A new Danish Code has been some years in preparation, but has not yet been promulgated.

1212. Held, that as long as a vessel stranded is not entirely unseaworthy, and may be got off, the master is entitled to full authority over his vessel, and he is free to refuse a tender of assistance made by the maritime authorities, and especially so where the vessel is foreign, nor can the master be compelled to call for the interference of his consul. Havre, February 16, 1863; J. H. 1863:1:83.

1213. Held, that the salvor of a vessel in distress has no claim against the shippers of the goods, but if the service constitutes a case of general average, they may be sued by the master for contribution. Havre, June 15, 1868; J. H. 1868:1:121; see also Bordeaux, March 7, 1865; J. H. 1865:2:142.

2. The Services.

1214. Salvage remuneration should be in proportion to the value of the property salvaged, the peril it was running, and the peril and losses which the salvaging vessel has incurred. Havre, May 30, 1863; J. H. 1863:1:212.

1215. Salvage remuneration is to be rated according to the circumstances of the case, particularly the danger to the vessel in distress, the difficulty and peril of the assistance given, and the joint value of the vessel and cargo. Caumont, vo. Epave, No. 6, and other authorities therein.

1216. Held, that a fishing vessel which had left its fishing to tow a vessel in distress into port, is not only entitled to remuneration for the assistance rendered, but also to an indemnity for hawsers and ropes lost or damaged in doing so, and for the loss of its fishing. Havre, December 17, 1868; J. H. 1869:1:14.

1217. Held, that where goods are salvaged, the proportionate remuneration promised to the salvors on the net price of the sale, is calculated upon the produce of the sale, deducting the expenses, but not the freight which the goods may have to pay. Rouen, May 18, 1858; J. H. 1859:2:53.

1218. Towing of a ship in danger is not a salvage service, but it is remunerated beyond ordinary towage rates. Rouen, 4 July, 1871; J. H. 1872:2:166; contra, Havre, 15 June, 1868; J. H. 1868:1:121.

1219. Where assistance is afforded by a steam-tug to a disabled vessel, such assistance should be remunerated in proportion to the value of the vessel and cargo, and the fact of towing being the trade of the tug is to be taken into account. Havre, November 9, 1871; J. H. 1871:1:175.

1220. Held, that remuneration was due to a tug for attempting, though unsuccessfully, to draw off a stranded vessel which was in peril. Ibid. February 13, 1858; J. H. 1858:1:38.

1221. Held, that a steamship called to the assistance of a vessel in distress, was entitled not to a third, but to salvage according to the circumstances of the case. Caen, February 5, 1859; J. H. 1859:2:48. See also No. 1218, supra; Caumont, vo. Epaves, No. 6, and other authorities therein.

1222. Remuneration is due to a vessel for putting its second officer on board another vessel to navigate it, in consequence of the death of the master, besides the remuneration to that officer for his services. Havre, July 17, 1872; J. H. 1872:1:165.

1223. Held, that the remuneration to the salvaging vessel was to be proportionate to the risk run by that vessel from being so deprived of its second officer, and to the benefit to the vessel so assisted. Therefore, when the salvaged vessel was in a good condition, and in no present danger, the salvage was not to be as high as if the salvaged vessel had been found in immediate peril. Ibid.

1224. A master is entitled to remuneration for having gone to the assistance of a vessel, though such assistance was unasked for, if it was in reality required. Havre, May 30, 1863; J. H. 1863:1:212.

3. Derelict.

1225. On salvage of property found derelict in or upon the open sea, one-third belongs to the salvors. See Ordinance of 1681, Book 4, tit. 9, art. 27, and Caumont, vo. Epaves et Sauvetege.

1225a. Held, that the expression "effets naufragés" comprehends entire vessels and their cargo. Rouen, 2 Dec. 1840; S. V. 41:2:38. See Caumont, vo. Sauvetege, No. 5.

1226. Held, that the desertion of a vessel by its crew is tantamount to wreck. Ibid.

1226a. Held, that the one-third to be awarded under the Ordinance of 1681 applies only where the case falls exactly under its terms, that is, where the property was finally abandoned at the mercy of the sea and wind, and where it was accidentally met with on the open sea.

Rennes, 30 November, 1868; J. H. 1870:2:11. See also Rouen, 4 July, 1871; J. H. 1871:2:166. See Caumont, vo. Sauvetage, No. 4.

1227. The rule of one-third salvage applies only in cases of derelict found at sea. Douai, 20 May, 1863; J. H. 1864:2:120; Bordeaux, 7 March, 1865; J. H. 1865:2:142.

1228. The property derelict must have been deserted by the ship's company without intention to return, it must have been discovered on or in the open sea, that is, out of sight of land, and must have been effectually salvaged. D. A. Organisation Maritime, Vo. 684, and Caumont, vo. Epave, No. 6, and the authorities therein.

1229. The salvor is entitled to one-third of the property or money saved on a body found drowned. Caumont, vo. Epave, No. 5.

1230. Anchors found at the bottom of the sea, without buoys or other marks, become the property of those who have discovered them, if not claimed within two months. Ibid.

1231. The salvor is entitled to two-thirds where the derelict property salvaged is enemy's property. Law of the 26 Nivose, Year 6; Articles 1 and 2, D. A. Ibid.

1232. Where the salvor receives one-third of the property salvaged it is in full satisfaction of all claims for salvage; but he may waive his right to this third and claim the amount of such expenses as he can prove to have been useful to the vessel salvaged. Circular of the 16th Nov. 1821. D. A. Organisation Maritime, No. 624.

1233. The third of the property found derelict is to be immediately delivered to the salvors free of costs. D. A. vo. Organisation de la Marine, No. 684, and Caumont, vo. Epave, No. 5.

1234. Where their share cannot be delivered to them in kind they are entitled to one-third of the proceeds of the sale. Ibid.

1235. Held, that a vessel was derelict so as to entitle the salvor to one-third of the gross value of the vessel and cargo, when it was found abandoned at sea, though the master, who with his crew had been taken on board another vessel and carried into port, was taking measures to have his vessel sought after, if those measures had not been successful when the salvors came up. Marseilles, 11 October, 1867; J. H. 1868:2:157; Aix, 23 March, 1868; J. H. 1869:2:240.

1236. Held, that the vessel was not derelict where it had been abandoned only for a time and in sight of land, and for the purpose of seeking assistance there. Douai, 20 May, 1863; J. H. 1864:2:120. See also Rennes, 30 Nov. 1868; J. H. 1870:2:11.

1237. Held, that a vessel was not derelict which was anchored some distance from the shore, and temporarily abandoned by its crew for the purpose of seeking assistance. But that in such a case a remuneration is due to the salvor proportionate to the service he rendered and the risk run. Bordeaux, 7 March, 1865; J. H. 1865:2:142; Rennes, 30 Nov. 1868; J. H. 1870:2:11.

1238. Where a man had remained on board whose signals attracted the attention of the salvors, held, that the salvors were not entitled to one-third of the property, but only to remuneration proportionate to their services. Rennes, 22 May, 1867; J. H. 1868:2:52.

1239. Same decision where a vessel was disabled unmanageable and ready to sink, but had not been deserted by the ship's company. Havre, 18 Feb. 1865; J. H. 1865:1:64.

4. Agreements.

1240. Held, that an agreement entered into by the master of a stranded vessel which was not entirely unseaworthy, and could be got off, for the salvage of the vessel, cannot be disclaimed by the underwriters, but must be carried out; at least, where it is reasonable. Ibid. 16 February, 1863; J. H. 1863:1:83.

5. Maritime Authorities.

1241. It is the duty of all who take possession of salvaged property wrecked or derelict on the open sea, or on the coast, to put the same in safety, and to declare it to the maritime authorities within twenty-four hours. D. A., vo. Organisation de la Marine, Nos. 674 and 683.

1242. Where a vessel is wrecked or lost on the coast, or in sight of it, the duty of the maritime authorities is to direct the salvage, and collect and put the property in safe keeping, and employ the necessary labour. Ibid. Nos. 663, 664, 666, 667 et seq.

1243. And they alone are entitled to do so to the exclusion of all except the owners, or the representatives or the underwriters, save where the vessel belongs to a nation, the consuls of which are by treaty entitled to salvage and collect the property of its subjects in jeopardy from perils of the sea. Ibid. Nos. 668 et seq., 679, and 680.

6. Tunis.

1244. For provisions as to the protection and assistance of British vessels stranded or wrecked on the coast of the Regency of Tunis, the delivery up of the property salvaged, on payment of salvage, to be awarded by the Tunisian authorities, and the punishment of marauders, see Convention between Great Britain and Tunis of July 19, 1875, in 14 Hertslet's Treaties, p. 551.

1245. As to the French courts, now established in Tunis, see tit. JURISDICTION, p. 784.

6. Germany.

1. Generally.

1246. In the absence of agreement, the amount of the salvage or assistance shall be fixed by the judge in money, all the circumstances of the case being taken into consideration. German General Maritime Law Code, Art. 744.

1247. And see a translation thereof in Papers on Maritime Legislation, by Dr. Wendt, of London, 2nd edit.

1248. And compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2814, 2815, 2843, 4144.*

1248a. See further as to salvage and assistance, the German General Mercantile Law, and the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2800, 2805, 2810—14, 2830, 2833, 4142, 4144, 4148, 4150.

1249. See, for provisions for naval courts for the investigation of accidents at sea, Decree of July 27, 1877, in 14 Hertslet, 1206.

1250. See also the provisions as to wreck and salvage, the 3rd Article of the Treaty between the United Kingdom and Prussia of 16th August, 1865, in 12 Hertslet, 765.

2. Salvage or Assistance.

1251. When, in case of distress, a ship or its cargo, being no longer under the control of the crew, or having been abandoned by them, is taken charge of wholly or in part by third parties and brought into safety, then such parties have a claim for salvage. See G. G. M. C. Art. 742.

1252. When a ship or its cargo is rescued from a state of distress in any other case by the help of third parties, then such parties have only a claim for assistance. Ibid.†

1253. The amount awarded for assistance is always less than the amount of salvage would have been in the same circumstances. In considering the amount to be awarded for assistance, the value of the articles rescued is only of secondary importance. Ibid. Art. 749; and Dr. Wendt's translation thereof, in Papers on Maritime Legislation, 2nd edit. p. 272, and compare minutes of the Mercantile Law Conference, pp. 2820, 2843, 4145.

3. Salvors.

(a) Crew of salvaged Vessel.

1254. The crew of the vessel which is lost or in danger can have no claim for salvage or assistance. See G. G. M. C. Art. 742, and Papers on Maritime Legislation, by Dr. Wendt, 2nd ed. p. 271.

1255. The crew are not entitled to claim for salvage or assistance, in order not to tempt them to bring about purposely a case of salvage or assistance. They are, however, entitled to a continuation of their wages for services rendered during the salvage, as against the owners personally. The crew are bound to render these services, although the contract, according to sect. 56 of the German Marine Law is ended with the loss of the vessel. See as to the captain, sect. 526 of the Mercantile Law; and as to the crew, sect. 32 of the German Marine Law.

(b) After Collision.

1256. Claims for salvage or assistance can be demanded by a vessel which, without being herself to blame, collided with another ship, although the German Law of the 15th August and 1st September, 1876, respecting the duties of seamen

* (350) This article deals only with the final award.

† (351) The law is based upon the assumption that a case of salvage can only be established when the objects saved have actually come into the possession of the claimants of salvage. See The Baltimore, Bremen Collection of the Superior Court of Appeal Judgments, vol. 1, p. 22 b ff; The George Caning, 1853, Hamburg Collection, vol. 2, p. 1002 ff; The Andrew Lovitt, Decisions of the Reich's Oberhan delsgesricht. See Superior Court of Appeal of the Empire, vol. 4, p. 441; and Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd edit. p. 271.

after a collision between vessels at sea makes it obligatory for each concerned to render assistance. But the latter law being of a public character cannot nullify the claims enumerated by Art. 742, which are of a private nature. See steamers Teal and Weser, Hanseatische Gerichtszeitung (Hanseatic Law Journal), 1881, Nos. 1, 2.

(c) Misconduct.

1257. No person has any claim for salvage or assistance who has forced the acceptance of his services, or has gone on board the ship without permission of the master when present, or who has not immediately given notice to the master, the proprietor, or the proper authorities respecting the objects saved. See G. G. M. C. Art. 752, and Dr. Wendt's translation, 2nd ed. p. 273; and compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2828, 2833, 4145.

4. *Lien.

1258. With respect to the salvage and assistance expenses included in the amount awarded, the creditor has a lien on, and may detain, the salvaged articles until security for the amount has been given. See G. G. M. C. Art. 753.

1259. Salvage and the rendering of assistance do not of themselves impose a personal responsibility for payment of salvage and assistance expenses. But the receiver of goods, when it is known to him at the time he received them that they were liable for salvage or assistance expenses, becomes personally liable for such expenses so far as they could have been satisfied out of the goods themselves, if they had not been delivered. Ibid. Art. 755.

1260. If other articles have been salvaged or preserved together with the goods which have been delivered, then the personal liability of the receiver only extends to the amount which falls upon the goods delivered when the expenses are divided among the whole of the articles. Ibid.

1261. Compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2834—4228.

See The Louise, Hamb. H. G. Z. 1868, No. 172. See also tit. LIENS, p. 835.

5. Agreements.

1262. When during the danger an agreement has been made as to the amount of salvage or payment for assistance, the agreement may nevertheless be disputed on the plea that the amount is excessive, and a reduction demanded. See G. G. M. C. Art. 743, and Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd edit. p. 271; and compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2805, 4144.†

6. Amount.

1263. The award for salvage or assistance shall not be fixed at a proportion of the value of the salvaged or rescued articles, unless all parties agree thereto. See G. G. M. C. Art. 747, and Dr. Wendt's translation, 2nd edit. p. 272; and compare minutes of the Mercantile Law Conference, pp. 2819, 2820, 4145.

1264. The amount of the salvage shall not exceed one-third of the value of the articles salvaged. In exceptional cases only, the amount may be increased up to half the value, when the salvage was accompanied with unusual exertions and risks and the value was only small. Ibid. Art. 748, and Dr. Wendt's translation, 2nd edit. p. 272; and compare minutes of the Mercantile Law Conference, pp. 1817, 2820, 2841, 2842, 4145.

1265. The amount to be awarded for salvage or assistance has to be arrived at by judicial decision ex æquo et bono within the limits prescribed by law. The Ubrich. See Rechts Erkenntnisse (Marine Law Decisions), vol. 1, p. 92; vol. 2, pp. 36, 321, 324, 330; Hamburger Gerichtszeitung (Hamburg Law Journal), vol. 4, pp. 28—96.

1266. In settling the amount of salvage or assistance there are to be taken into consideration the zeal proved, the time expended, the service rendered, the outlay incurred, the number of persons assisting, the danger to which they and their vessels were exposed, the danger which

* (352) Sect. 8 applies to Art. 753. See Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation (2nd ed.), p. 273.

† (353) This law is intended to prevent the ship in a position to render assistance from taking advantage of the disabled state of the other vessel by exacting exorbitant remuneration. Everything done to circumvent the law in this respect is liable to be set aside. threatened the salvaged articles and their value after deduction of expenses. See G. G. M. C. Art. 746, and Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd edit. p. 272; and compare minutes of the Mercantile Law Conference, pp. 2815, 2817, 2841, 4144.

1267. Respecting Arts. 746—749, see The Lincoln and The Vienna (assistance), collection of the decisions of the Superior Court of Appeal of the free Hanseatic towns at Lübeck, vol. 3, 1867, pp. 705, 720.

(b) Amount awarded.

See tit. SALVAGE AWARDS.

7. Awards.

(a) What including.

1268. The amount awarded for salvage or assistance includes compensation for any outlay which may have been made for the purposes of salvage or assistance. See G. G. M. C. Art. 745.

1269. It does not include, however, the costs and fees of the legal authorities, the duties and charges to which the salvaged articles may be liable, or the expenses of storing, preserving, valuing and disposing of the same. Ibid.; and see Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd ed. p. 271; and compare minutes of the Mercantile Law Conference, pp. 2836—2841, 4144.

1270. See also Ships Lincoln and Vienna, Collection of the Decisions of the Superior Court of Appeal, Lübeck, vol. 3, pp. 705, 720; Ships Rencka and Alster, Hamb. H. G. Z. 1879, pp. 177—182.

(b) Amounts.

See tit. SALVAGE AWARDS.

8. Apportionment.

1271. When several persons have taken part in the salvage or assistance, the amount awarded shall be divided in proportion to the services each may have rendered personally or with his property, and in case of dispute, according to the number who have to participate. Those who, in the same casualty, devoted themselves to the saving of human life, are entitled to participate equally with the others. See G. G. M. C. Art. 750; and Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd ed. p. 272; and compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2800—2814, 2825, 4145.

1272. Among the crew the amount shall be divided in proportion to their rate of pay. See G. G. M. C. Art. 751.

1273. When a ship or its cargo is wholly or in part salvaged by another ship, the amount awarded for salvage or assistance is divided between the owner, master, and crew of the other ship (unless otherwise specially agreed), and in such proportion, that the owners shall take one half, the master one quarter, and the rest of the crew the other quarter. Ibid.; and Dr. Wendt's Maritime Legislation, 2nd ed. p. 273; and compare the minutes of the Commercial Law Conference, pp. 2825—2828, 4145. See Hamburg, H. G. Z. 1874, pp. 337, 338, Britannia and crew.

9. Receivers of Wrecks: their Powers and Duties.

1274. See the Regulations as to Wrecks of the German Empire of the 17th May, 1874, and 1st January, 1875, which prescribe the course of proceedings respecting salvage and assistance in cases of distress; as also the non-judicial settlement of the awards to be paid for salvage and assistance claims.

1275. The most important clauses are the following:—

1276. Whoever sees a vessel ashore or otherwise in distress is bound to report the fact immediately to the proper coast-guard authority or to the nearest receiver of wreck. The person who makes the first report is entitled to an adequate remuneration. Sect. 4.

1277. The receiver of wreck, on receipt of the information, immediately proceeds to the place of distress and takes the necessary measures to preserve order and for the salvage or assistance. He must take care that the nearest wreck office as well as the nearest customs authorities are promptly informed, and until arrival of the latter he must guard the interest of the department. Sect. 6.

1278. No steps for salvage or assistance can be taken against the wish of the captain. It is specially prohibited to go alongside or on board without the captain's permission. If the vessel has been abandoned by her crew, the permission of the receiver of wreck for this purpose must be obtained, unless immediate danger would be caused by delay. These rules do not apply to the associations for saving wrecked persons. Sect. 7.

1279. The captain may at any time take the direction of affairs out of the hands of the receiver after he has given the necessary security for the salvage and assistance charges, including those already incurred by the officer of the wreck office. Sect. 8.

1280. The officer of the wreck office is above all things to attend to the saving of life. In case of salvage he must first of all secure the ship and cargo papers, especially the log-book, and close the latter with date and his signature, and return all the papers eventually to the captain. Sect. 11.

1281. Without the captain's permission nothing is allowed to be taken out of the vessel. The captain has also to decide where the articles taken away are to be stored, as also where the vessel herself should be brought. The former permission, as well as the latter decision, rests with the receiver of wreck, if he has charge of the proceedings. If no decision has been made by either the captain or the receiver the property must, if practicable, be brought to the nearest German port or landing-place, and notice must at once be given to the police authorities or to the wreck office, or all claims to salvage or assistance will be forfeited. Sect. 12.

1282. The property saved is to be given up to the captain, or, in his absence, to the person who establishes his right to receive them. The delivery can, however, only take place after payment of the salvage charges, inclusive of the claims for salvage, or after security has been given for the same, and after the custom-house authorities have granted permission. Sect. 16.

1283. In case articles not belonging to a vessel in distress drift or are thrown ashore by the sea and are saved, the salvors have a right to remuneration. They must give immediate notice to the nearest police office or to the receiver of wreck of the articles salvaged, and place them at their disposal, or forfeit all right to salvage. Sect. 20.

1284. The same rights and duties apply to salvors who raise sunken wreckage or other articles from the bottom of the sea, or to a vessel which saves an abandoned ship or other objects drifting about in the open sea. In the latter case the above rules apply as soon as the salvaging vessel has brought up on the German coast or anchored, but are without force if the vessel has previously brought up or anchored in foreign parts, and the salvors have placed the articles salvaged at the disposal of the owners or the proper authorities. Sect. 21.

11. Wreck Offices.

1285. The wreck office hears the parties concerned and reports to the head wreck office; the latter then examines the demands in conformity with the mercantile law and by decree makes an award. Appeal must be lodged against such award within fourteen days, and the award being appealed against is without force. The judge at the place of salvage has jurisdiction. See G. G. M. C. Art. 744.

1287. According thereto everyone pressing forward a claim for salvage or assistance, or for payment of salvage charges, is bound, in the absence of an amicable agreement, to lodge his claims with the wreck office.

7. Holland.

1. Generally.

1288. The law of Holland on salvage is contained in chapter 7 of the second part of the Commercial Code, containing Arts. 545, 567, under the head of shipwreck, stranding, and flotsam.

1289. Salvors are entitled not only to a salvage reward but also to a compensation for all expenses incurred and damage sustained during and on account of the salvage services. Trib. Alkmaar, March 19, 1861; R. B. xi. 547; P. in voce 7, No. 28.

1290. Held, that anchors and other heavy goods cast out and sunk at sea tied to a buoy or something that will not sink (ligan) are not derelict, and no salvage is due when they are picked up. J. P., Flushing, May 19, 1843; W. No. 420; Leon, 416.

* (354) The orderly settlement of this reservation has since been taken in hand by the German Government by the Decree of the 17 May, 1874, 1 January, 1875, called "Regulations as to Wrecks."

1291. The salvors have a claim for salvage only against the master of the vessel to which they have rendered assistance, not on the consignee or owners of the cargo, unless they have contracted with them. C. A., North Holland, Dec. 28, 1848; R. B. xi. 10, 13.

1292. When salvors have taken a vessel, abandoned at sea by the master and crew, into a safe port, they are entitled to salvage, though the master has afterwards retaken possession of the vessel and denies that she has ever been in danger. Trib. Alkmaar, Nov. 4, 1852; R. B. iv. 157.

1293. The freight and all expenses of forwarding the goods from the spot where they are salvaged under the circumstances defined in the previous articles to their destination shall be paid by the persons receiving them. Art. 549, C. C.

1294. The onus probandi that the vessel would have been damaged but for the assistance rendered, and that the assistance was asked for and not obtruded, is upon him who claims a salvage reward. Trib. Amsterdam, Dec. 5, 1850; Leon, 415.

1294a. For provisions between the United Kingdom and the Netherlands as to wreck and salvage, see 6th Article of Treaty of October 27, 1837, in 5 Hertslet, 616, and 9th Article of the Convention of March 6, 1856, in 10 Hertslet, 478.

2. Jurisdiction.

1295. The competent tribunal in salvage cases is:—(1) The tribunal of the place of destination, should the ship be destined to a port in the realm. (2) At the option of the claimant, the tribunal of the place where the vessel took in cargo first, or from whence she sailed in ballast, or of the residence of the defendant, should the ship be destined from a port in the realm to a foreign country. (3) The tribunal of the place where the vessel is stranded, or the port she is brought into in safety, or, when the vessel is lost where the goods are salvaged, should the ship not have been destined to a port in the realm, nor have sailed from any such port. Art. 567, C. C.

3. Bergloon.

1296. Salvage called bergloon is due when a ship or goods are found derelict, or picked up at sea or on shore. Art. 562, C. C.

1297. When goods are salvaged from a ship stranded in the surf, or on the coast, in such a dangerous position that the crew and cargo are no longer safe in her. Ibid.

1298. When goods are salvaged from ships thoroughly broken and smashed to pieces. Ibid.

1299. When a ship, left by the crew for the safety of their lives, and on account of the dangerous position she was in, or from which the crew is rescued by the salvors, is taken possession of by the salvors, and brought with her cargo, together or piecemeal, into a safe port. Ibid.

1300. In awarding bergloon, regard is to be had not only to all the circumstances mentioned in Art. 561 (vide No. 1306, infra), but also to the danger and distress from which the property is rescued, and to the value of the property salvaged, to be estimated by an expert. Art. 564, C. C.

1301. In case of dispute between the persons concerned the salvage (aulploon or bergloon) shall be awarded, and the expert appointed by the competent tribunal. Ibid.

1302. The amount of salvage called bergloon is by custom generally one-third of the value of the property saved, except when the property is very small; more than one-half of that value is never awarded.

1303. To be entitled to claim a salvage reward called "bergloon," it is not necessary, according to the Commercial Code, that the ship should be brought into a safe port, but it is sufficient that she is brought into a safe place on the sea in such a condition that she can reach from there, without danger, a safe port. Trib. Alkmaar, Nov. 4, 1852, P.; ibid. No. 10.

1304. The value of the ship and cargo, and the danger from which they are rescued, are elements to be taken into consideration when "bergloon," not when "aulploon," must be awarded. Trib. Amsterdam, April 11, 1879, W., No. 4419.

4. Aulploon.

1305. For salvage services rendered to any ship or goods in distress, "aulploon" (assistance-money), or "bergloon" (salvage-money), is due. Art. 560, C. C.

1306. Salvage called aulploon is due whenever a ship and her cargo, after being discharged or not, is brought into a safe place in sea, or into a safe port, by the assistance and services rendered. The amount of aulploon to be awarded depends on the celerity with which the assistance is rendered after the discovery of the distress of the vessel, the time the salvors have been occupied, the number of persons necessarily employed, the nature of the services rendered, and the risk and perils incurred. Art. 561, C. C.

1307. Salvage called "aulploon" is due when a ship is in such a place, or in such a situation, that danger, though not actual, must ensue from it, and the assistance rendered serves to bring her into a safe port or to any other place, where she is in safety, e. g., when a ship having lost her steering gear, and being therefore unmanageable, is in a very dangerous and unsafe place at sea, though at the moment wind and weather are not favourable. C. A. North Holland, June 6, 1872, reversing Trib. Amsterdam, Dec. 2, 1870; W. No. 3545; M. C. L. xiv.; 90 Trib. Appingadam, July 1, 1876; W. No. 4062.

5. Rights and Duties of Salvors.

(a) Generally.

1308. Whenever any ship is left by the master and crew, and taken possession of by salvors, the master may return at any time to the ship and resume command, and the salvors must, under penalty of forfeiting all salvage and liability for damages, give up the command without prejudice, however, to their claim for salvage. Art. 565, C. C.

1309. Nobody is allowed to come on board any ship as a salvor or otherwise to render assistance without the express consent of the master or person in charge. Art. 545, C. C. Pt. II.

1310. Whenever any ship is stranded or breaking on shoals, or goods are picked up in sea or on shoals, nobody shall render salvage services without the consent of the master or person in charge if either is present. Art. 546, C. C.

1311. The master, commander, shipper or consignee being present, the ships and goods are to be put at their disposal, and the salvors shall restore them immediately on receiving sufficient security for the amount of salvage due. Art. 547, C. C.

1312. Salvors who detain any ship or goods stranded or salvaged, or do not comply immediately with the demand of the master, his representative, the consignee or the shipper, to give up the goods on tender of sufficient security, shall lose all claim to salvage, besides being liable for all damage caused by this detention. Art. 548, C. C.

(b) Pilots.

1313. The masters of the pilot boats and the pilots are expressly bound to render to ships in danger or distress all possible assistance compatible with a due performance of the pilotage service. Agreements made by these persons in respect of salvage remuneration are strictly prohibited and stand void like all promises enacted or given to the same purpose. The compensation due to the masters, the pilots and their company for extraordinary assistance rendered, or when they have picked up goods, or taken into a safe port a derelict vessel, is to be adjusted amicably between the persons concerned by interference of the inspector of pilotage, or is otherwise to be determined according to the provisions of the Commercial Code. From the salvage paid, seventy-five per cent. is to be distributed among the company of the pilot boat, and the remaining twenty-five per cent. to be paid to the Treasury as an indemnity for the use of the materials of the State. Art. 27 of the General Pilotage Regulations, Royal Decree of the 23rd Jan. 1879 (St. No. 25).

1314. The pilots and crew of the pilot boats are rigorously prohibited from rendering salvage services unless asked for by the master or commander of the vessel in distress. Art. 29 of the same Regulations.

6. Agreements.

1315. All agreements for the performance of salvage services, or to render assistance to any ship or goods in distress entered into at sea, or in the moment of the stranding, by the master, commander or shipowner, may be altered or cancelled by the tribunal. Nevertheless everybody is at liberty to make an agreement about salvage compensation when the danger is over. Shipowners, consignees and underwriters are not bound by such agreements unless they are made with their sanction or concurrence. Art. 568, C. C.

1316. The master of the vessel may dispute the agreement entered into for salvage services, upon the sole ground that the vessel was in distress at the time the agreement was made. Upon this defence it is the duty of the court to set aside the agreement, and to award irrespective of it the amount it thinks a reasonable and equitable compensation, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. Trib. Alkmaar, 31 May, 1866, R. B. 1869, 292 P. Ibid. No. 44.

1317. A steam-tug company, having made an agreement for the towage of a vessel is not entitled to salvage in addition to the sum named in the agreement. Only unforeseen and extraordinary circumstances arising afterwards, and changing the character of the services agreed upon, would entitle the owners of the tug to "aulploon." The tug is not relieved from her obligations because the performance of her task is interrupted. Arbitrators, Amsterdam, 31 July, 1877, W. No. 4143.

7. Value of Property saved.

1318. When ships or goods saved and restored to the owner on tender of security are afterwards lost before a valuation is made for the purpose of salvage apportionment, the experts shall take an equitable sum as the supposed value of the property saved before the restitution. Art. 566, C. C.

8. Lien.

1318a. As to the priority of liens, see C. C. Art. 313.

9. Awards.

1319. A ship, after encountering heavy storms, lost through the boisterous weather and high seas all her masts, and was drifting in a disabled state with a signal of distress hoisted, when an agreement was made to assist her and to anchor her in a safe place on payment of one-third of the value of the ship and cargo. The owners disputed the agreement, and tendered 3,000 florins. Held, that the agreement was not binding, and that the tender was a sufficient compensation. Claim dismissed accordingly, with costs. W. No. 2467; P. Ibid. No. 35.

See also tit. SALVAOE AWARDS.

10. Receivers of Wreck or Magistrates.

1320. Any ship or goods saved or picked up in sea or on shoals, the master, commander, owner of the cargo or consignee not being present or known to the salvors, shall be delivered as soon as possible to the receiver of wreck in the nearest place, or in places where no receiver has been appointed, to the magistrate. Salvors violating this article forfeit salvage, and become liable for payment of damages, besides incurring a penalty, as the case may be. Art. 550, C. C.

1321. Whenever any ship is stranded or breaking, or goods are picked up on shore, and the master, commander, owner of the cargo or consignee is not present and has not given any directions about the salvage, the salvage services shall be rendered exclusively under the command and directions of the receiver of wreck, or in his absence and where no receiver is appointed, of the magistrate of the communal district within which the place of accident is situated. The receiver of wreck or the magistrate has also the exclusive superintendence of all salvage operations when the goods are unidentifiable or their ownership is disputed. Art. 551, C. C.

1321a. The receiver of wreck or magistrate is bound, whenever he has directed the salvage operations, to draw up an accurate list of the property saved. Art. 552, C. C.

1322a. The owners of the property saved are liable for the salvage to the receiver of wreck or the magistrate in like manner as they are liable to the salvors in the circumstances defined in sect. 1. Ibid.

8. Italy.

1. Generally.

1323. The regulations as to salvage in Italy are contained in the Mercantile Marine Code (Codice per la Marina Mercantile) as modified by the Law of May 24, 1877, and are to be found almost entirely in Pt. I. Tit. II. Chap. XII. of that Code.

1323a. It is the duty of the court and port officials to render assistance to vessels wrecked on the coast, and to take charge of salvaged goods. M. M. C. Arts. 122, 123.

1324. It is the duty of an Italian ship to render assistance when required, even to foreign and enemy vessels. Ibid. Art. 120.

1324a. If the salvaging vessel or crew have been exposed to risk they are entitled to a salvage reward; but it must not exceed one-tenth of the value of the property saved. C. C. Arts. 671 (2), 673 (2), 675 (2); M. M. C. 122.

1325. Damage sustained by the salvaging vessel in rendering assistance is recoverable. Ibid.

2. Jurisdiction.

1326. The salvage award where the amount claimed does not exceed 400 lire = £16, is decided by the captain of the port summarily, and without appeal. Above this amount the captain of the port is to endeavour to arbitrate between the parties; but if he fails he is to draw up a report, and send it to the ordinary tribunal of commerce, which adjudicates upon the case. M. M. C. Arts. 14—16, 126.

3. Agreements.

1327. No agreement for salvage made on the high seas, or at the time of the accident, is binding on the parties. Ibid. Art. 127.

4. Lien.

1328. For a salvage reward there is a lien or privilege on the salvaged ship, freight and cargo. This lien ranks after the lien for judicial costs, and before all other liens. C. C. Arts. 671 (2), 673 (2), 675 (2); M. M. C. 122.

5. Wreck and Derelict Property.(a) Generally.

1329. If a derelict vessel is fallen in with out of sight of land and salvaged, notice must be given to the maritime authority within twenty-four hours of arrival, the salvors are entitled to one-eighth of the value of the ship and cargo in addition to their expenses. M. M. C. Art. 134.

1329a. If a derelict vessel is fallen in with in sight of land, the provisions of Art. 121 apply, and the salvor is entitled to one-tenth. If, however, no claimant appears or proves his claim within five years, the residue of the proceeds goes to the salvors. Ibid. Art. 134, 136.

1330. In case of wreck of a foreign ship the court officials must at once communicate with the consular officer of the state to which the ship belongs. Ibid. Art. 124.

1330a. If a vessel is entirely submerged, and no steps are taken by the owner to recover her, or only inefficient steps, the vessel is, after the lapse of four months, treated as abandoned, and belongs to the state. Ibid. Art. 137.

1331. All persons finding shipwrecked goods must deliver them up to the maritime authority, upon which they are entitled to their expenses and a salvage reward. Ibid. Art. 125.

1331a. See also, for provisions as to wreck and salvage, 9th Article of the Treaty between the United Kingdom and that of June 15, 1883, in 15 Hertallet, 779.

(b) Sale.

1332. The port official has power to sell goods which are subject to deterioration, or which cost a great deal to preserve. He must advertise the goods salvaged, and if no claimant appears for a year, the goods are sold and the proceeds paid into the marine fund; and if no claimant appears, or if any who has appeared has not proved his claim in five years, the proceeds become the property of the state. M. M. C. Arts. 130—132.

6. Apportionment.

1333. The master, officers and crew of Italian ships share in salvage rewards according to their rates of pay, the owners taking half. Ibid. Arts. 128, 138.

9. *Norway.*1. Generally.

1334. In cases of distress the master and crew are bound to do their utmost to avert disaster, and not to leave the ship as long as there is any hope of saving it. If it is evident that no rescue is possible, and if an imminent danger compels the master and crew to leave the ship, they shall as soon as possible attend to the salvage of ship and goods, either by returning to the wreck, or by procuring necessary assistance. For services rendered in the salvage of shipwrecked goods or ship, the master and crew are entitled to a salvage, which, in default of an amicable agreement, is fixed by the court. They are, moreover, entitled to an equitable compensation if after the landing of the goods and ship's appurtenances, they are employed in their supervision or future transport. See Law of Navigation of 1860, Art. 82.

1334a. Arts. 83—87 contain particular instructions to the lensmand (sheriff's officer) and to the proprietors of the shore; Art. 88, instructions to the sheriff; and Arts. 89, 90, leaves the prefect authority to decide, whether the saved goods in the absence of their owners or of the captain are to be stored or sold by public auction.

1335. If the compensation for salvage cannot be settled by amicable agreement, and if the value of the goods salvaged does not exceed 400 kroner (£22), the salvage is fixed by the prefect. If the value is greater, it is decided by the court. Ibid. Art. 91.

1335*a*. In fixing the amount of salvage it is proper to consider (a) whether the salvors have been exposed to considerable danger and exertions; (b) whether their health has been injured or their implements damaged; (c) whether the ship was abandoned by the crew, in which case a little larger award is to be given; (d) whether the goods salvaged are of considerable value and have been exposed to imminent danger, from which they have been rescued by the exertions of the salvors. Ibid.

1336. Pursuant to the provisions of Art. 131 the estimate of the court as to the amount of the salvage, made irrespectively of any previous agreement between the parties or otherwise, may be appealed from to the Supreme Court, but in these cases a new estimate by a double number of men is not to take place. Ibid.

2. Derelict.

1337. If shipwrecked goods or a ship, abandoned by the crew, are found floating on the sea, or sunk in it, every one who brings such goods or ship into safety is bound to give immediate notice to the lensmand or nearest magistrate. Afterwards, if circumstances require, such measures are to be taken as are prescribed by Arts. 85, 88, 89, and 90. The reward for the salvage is determined according to the provisions of Art. 91, but without special reasons it is not to be fixed at less than a fourth, nor more than half of the value of the goods saved. In this case the prefect, on behalf of the absent parties, decides whether the estimate of the court shall be appealed from to the Supreme Court for account of the saved goods. Ibid. Art. 92.

3. Agreements.

1338. Even after an agreement has been made as to amount of salvage, the court, on the demand of the master or owners of the saved goods, may reduce the amount, if the agreement has been entered into before, during, or within twenty-four hours after, the salvage, and if it is found to contain exceedingly unfair conditions. Ibid. Art. 91.

4. Apportionment.

1339. If the salvors cannot agree as to the distribution of the salvage, the question is settled according to the provisions of Art. 91 by the prefect or the court in proportion to the exertions and skill of each, the implements each brought with him and employed, and the danger to which each was exposed. Ibid. Art. 93.

1339*a*. A sailing vessel effecting a salvage at sea, is entitled to half the salvage award if a ship has been saved, and in other cases to a third, besides an indemnity for damages which it may have suffered. The remainder of the award is divided amongst the master and crew in proportion to their wages. Ibid.

5. Liens.

See tit. LIENS, p. 839.

10. Portugal.

1. *Generally.

1340. No one is allowed to board or enter any vessel to succour or save it, or on any other pretext, except with the express consent of the master or his substitute. C. C. Art. 1584.

1340*a*. No one may save or rescue ships stranded or breaking up on the banks, or goods fished up at sea, or on sandbanks, whilst the master or his substitute is present, without his consent. Ibid. Art. 1585.

1341. Goods and ships salvaged must be delivered to the owners and consignees, and master, on appearance, or security for salvage being given. Ibid. Art. 1586.

1341*a*. On pain of forfeiture of salvage. Ibid. Art. 1587.

1342. The charges and freight for goods from the place of salvage to their destination are payable by the people who receive them, saving any remedy over which they may have against others. Ibid. Art. 1588.

1342*a*. Where ship or goods salvaged are lost between the place of salvage and their destination, and security has been given for them, but their actual value has not been ascertained, expert arbitrators shall fix their probable value at the place at which the arrangement was made. Ibid. Art. 1605.

1343. The salvors must in any case allow the master and crew to retake possession and charge of the ship salvaged should they desire it, on pain of losing all claim to salvage already earned, and also of damages. C. C. Art. 1604.

1343*a*. There are also decrees on the subject of salvage of June 28, 1842; January 12, 1843; July 26, 1843; December 6, 1858, and August 16, 1866, but they are generally minute details of practice.

2. Jurisdiction.

1344. See also the provisions as to wreck and salvage in the 14th Article of the Treaty between the United Kingdom and Portugal of July 3, 1842, in 6 Hertslet, p. 606, and still in force.

1345. Disputes as to salvage are settled by the proper judge. C. C. Art. 1595.

1345*a*. In case of dispute, the amount of assistance or salvage money, as well as the appointment of experts as arbitrators, is made and determined by the proper judge. Ibid. Art. 1603.

1346. Questions of assistance and salvage are decided within the realm by the commercial judge (president of the tribunal of commerce) of the place to which the ship is bound. When the ship is bound to a foreign port such questions are within the cognizance of the commercial judge of the place where the ship took in her cargo. When she is bound from a foreign port, but not Portugal, then by the judge of the port into which the ship comes or is brought. The former rule applies if the captain has changed his destination to a port in this realm. Ibid. Arts. 1606, 1607.

3. The Services.

1347. The remuneration for succouring ships or goods in distress is of two sorts, (1) that for rendering assistance, (2) that for salving or salvage. The first includes bringing ships and cargoes together or separately into a safe port, and is settled by expert arbitrators, who take into consideration the promptitude with which the service was rendered after the danger was discovered, the time occupied, the number of people necessarily employed, and the nature and danger of the service. Ibid. Art. 1600.

1347*a*. The second, or salvage proper, includes services rendered to ships or goods derelict at sea or on the shore, preservation of the cargo of a ship on or near the shore, and in such a position of peril as not to be a safe place for the cargo or crew to remain in, and getting goods out of a ship which has practically broken up. Ibid.

1348. Finally, ships abandoned in consequence of imminent peril, and taken into a port with the whole or a part of the cargo on board. Ibid. Art. 1601.

1348*a*. In estimating salvage remuneration, the addition to the considerations mentioned where only assistance is rendered (see ante, C. C. Art. 1600), the danger of the articles salvaged, and their value must also be looked at and settled by skilled arbitrators. Ibid. Art. 1602.

4. Agreements.

1349. All salvage agreements made at the time of the danger are subject to revision by the judge, but after the peril is over the parties may enter into any agreement they choose, but agreements made without the consent of the owners, consignees, or insurers do not bind them. Ibid. Art. 1608.

5. Remuneration.

1350. By an Order of April, 1836, salvage of anchors is fixed at one-third of their value.

6. Derelict.

1351. Derelict must be taken to the nearest place and put in charge of the proper authority, under pain of forfeiting salvage and paying for the damage sustained, in addition to a criminal prosecution, if grounds for such proceeding appear. Ibid. Art. 1589.

7. Lien.

1352. Wreck and goods salvaged from a wreck or vessel stranded are specially subject to pay the salvage reward as a privileged debt, and the amount of this privileged debt is taken out of the money produced by their sale. Ibid. Art. 1609.

8. Owner's Claims to Property.

(a) Generally.

See Nos. 1341—1343, supra, and Nos. 1353—1355, infra.

(b) Limitation.

1353. If, after four monthly notices, no owner appears, the goods are sold, salvage and expenses paid out of the proceeds, and the balance paid into court. Ibid. Art. 1596.

1354. The claim of the owner to the proceeds is not barred for ten years unless he be an enemy. Ibid. Art. 1597.

9. Local Functionaries.

1355. The reciprocal obligations of the public authority and the captain, owners and consignees are the same as those of the latter towards private salvors. Ibid. Art. 1591.

1356. Salvage of wreck is to be carried on entirely under the orders of the proper local authority. Ships beached on purpose or by such an accident that they can, notwithstanding, ultimately go on their voyage, are not wreck in this sense. Ibid. Art. 1590.

11. Russia.*

1. Generally.

1357. Within the boundaries of the Russian empire all things salvaged from the wreck of Russian and foreign ships or vessels, whether men, cattle, birds or other animals, goods, cargo, tackle, and the ship itself, after having been wrecked, are under the immediate protection of the Czar, and must remain inviolable. Commercial Code of Russia, Art. 1136.

1358. All foreign goods which have not paid duty in a Russian custom-house, and which formed the cargo of a wrecked ship, or are cast ashore, must be taken in charge by the custom-house. Ibid. Art. 1139.

1359. Every ship wrecked or stranded, Russian as well as foreign, and also all tackle and goods saved, which were exported from Russia, are taken charge of by the local police authorities, and afterwards, by arrangement of the provincial government authorities, are either retained by the police or transferred for safe custody to the town magistrates, town hall, or other civil magistrates. Ibid. Art. 1140.

1360. Any person observing a wreck or destruction of a vessel on the Russian coasts must give information, if he cannot render assistance himself, to the village police or the town police, as the case may be, and they are bound to do everything they can to render assistance. Ibid. Art. 1146.

1361. On the occasion of a shipwreck, as soon as the person commanding the police in that place, or the proprietor of a demesne along the sea coast at that place, or the steward of the property or his agent arrives, the officer of the coast-guard, under whose direction the salvage was carried on up to that time, hands over to such person the further superintendence of the salvage and preservation of proper order, and turns all his attention to the actual salvage of articles and goods. Ibid. Art. 1147.

1362. If the master is saved, everything touching the preservation of salvaged articles must be done with his consent and wish. Ibid. Art. 1148.

1363. See as to the duty of the custom-house officials to make an inventory of all goods salvaged, and to forward a report of the salvage, Ibid. Arts. 1152—1154.

1363*a*. See also as to the rules for restitution to owners of property salvaged, Ibid. Arts. 1186—1193.

1364. As to the property in articles submerged and picked up in clearing roadsteads, and the salvage payable for picking them up, Ibid. Arts. 1194—1212.

1365. As to salvage of anchors, cables, masts, &c., Ibid. Arts. 1169, 1170.

1366. See further the Commercial Code of Russia relating to salvage set out in the Nautical Magazine of 1884, pp. 1075—1082; and of 1885, pp. 54—64, 183—186, and 521—523.

1366*a*. See, also, for provisions as to wrecks and salvage between the United Kingdom and Russia, the 16th Article of the Treaty of January 12, 1859, in 10 Hertslet, 1062, and Circular of 16—28 March, 1864, in 13 Hertslet, p. 738.

2. Life.

1367. Life salvage should be gratuitous, from pity and humanity alone, towards a person near being drowned; but if in doing this special exploits deserving attention are performed, then, if performed by men of the custom-house, the officers of the custom-house districts are bound to make representations to the Minister of Finance; and if by other persons, the governors make representations to the Minister of the Interior, who takes steps to reward those who have distinguish themselves in the salvage of the men and their property. Commercial Code of Russia, Art. 1167.

3. Derelict.

1368. When a ship is abandoned by her crew for any cause, whoever finds such ship and brings it into a town, port, or harbour has a right to receive an award for salvage, and preservation on the basis of the general rules expressed in the foregoing articles. Ibid. Art. 1168.

* (356) Extracted from articles by Dr. Raikes in the Nautical Magazine.

4. Agreements.

1369. A contract to pay one quarter the price of ship and cargo to salvors for getting a ship off a sandbank, upheld as not contrary to the law of Russia to fix the price of salvage services. Hamberger v. Schütz, Jour. de Droit Inter. Privé, 1875, c. 161.

5. Remuneration.

1370. Everyone aiding in the salvage of a ship, vessel, goods and other articles, and in the preservation and keeping of things salvaged, has a right to receive a reward, provided he did not appropriate the smallest portion of what was saved, and gave notice of the salvage to those to whom it was due. Commercial Code of Russia, Art. 1160.

1371. Coast inspectors, and generally everyone serving in the customs department, if they take an active part in the preservation of a ship which has been wrecked, or of the goods, have also a right to receive reward. Ibid. Art. 1161.

1372. If a ship or goods be wrecked or destroyed at a distance of one verst or farther from the shore, the salvage award should be one-fourth, and if nearer than one verst, or on the shore, one-sixth of what is saved. Ibid. Art. 1162.

1373. If the property salvaged is warehoused in special establishments expressly constructed for the purpose, or given without agreed hire, the owner of the establishment has a right to half of the portion of the reward due for preservation, and the other half of this portion is divided among the watchmen. Ibid. Art. 1163.

1374. Similarly, if the direction of the salvage be commenced by an officer of the coastguard and completed in conformity with Art. 1147 by the proprietor of a demesne on the sea-coast, or the officer of local police, one-half of the portion due to the person in charge is received by the officer of the coastguard, and the other half is given to the proprietor or the officer of local police. Ibid. Art. 1165.

1375. The requisite portion of what was saved must, if the owners do not themselves satisfy by agreement those who have a right to salvage reward, be sold by public auction to reward the salvors and preservers of property. Ibid. Art. 1178.

1376. If the owner or master do not in the course of four weeks from the day of the salvage service to the goods show that he has duly rewarded the salvors and preservers of the property, the town or provincial police of the place where the salvage occurred will pay the stated reward to those to whom it is due, with the permission of the provincial administration. Ibid. Art. 1179.

1377. After a portion, amounting to one-fourth or one-sixth in value, according to the place where the salvage took place, of what has been salvaged is set aside for payment of salvage to salvors, the articles so set apart for reward are sold by public auction, and all the moneys received, less the duty, are distributed to those having a right to salvage. The owner of what has been salvaged, or his agent, should either be present, is allowed to indicate which of the valued articles should be taken for the payment of reward. Ibid. Art. 1181.

1378. In case of a dispute about salvage between the salvors and preservers of property, or between them and the owners, the case is brought before the proper court by order of the provincial administration, and the moneys in dispute are placed on deposit at interest in a credit establishment until the final decision. Ibid. Art. 1183.

6. Apportionment.

1379. The one-fourth or one-sixth part of what is salvaged, due as a reward, is divided into four portions, of which two are given to those who engaged in the salvage operations afloat in equal shares, one to those of the inhabitants of the coast, custom-house guard, and local police, who preserved the property salvaged until the inventory was made of it, in equal shares, and the remaining fourth to the person directing the salvage and preservation of the ship and cargo, and people on board it, should he wish to take it. Ibid. Art. 1163.

12. Spain.

1380. Where a ship is stranded or shipwrecked, each owner of ship or goods stands by his own loss, and no freight is due; but if the goods are salvaged freight pro rata itineris peracti is due, and if they are ultimately carried to their destination the whole freight is due. C. C. 787, 788, 982.

1381. If the shipwreck was occasioned by the perversity, negligence, or ignorance of the captain or his pilot, the owners of the ship and cargo have a right to an indemnity from the captain in all cases, and from the pilot when his fault. Ibid. 676, 693, 983.

1382. The term "pilot" has a threefold signification—1. Piloto de altura, an expert navigator, and also the officer on board a ship whose special duty it is to navigate her, and who takes rank and command after the captain, and equivalent, as a seafaring term, to "mate." 2. Piloto practico, a public officer to conduct vessels in and out of harbour, answering to the English "pilot." 3. Piloto de corta, a person specially qualified to assist in navigating a vessel along any particular coast from practical knowledge—our North Sea or Channel or coasting pilot. S. & R. & Ed.

1383. If the ship was unseaworthy at starting, the loss falls on the shipowner. This unseaworthiness, in fact, may be proved, notwithstanding certificates of seaworthiness. C. C. 779, 984.

1385. When it is impossible to tranship (for salvage purposes) the whole cargo, the captain, in consultation with his officers, must select the articles of most value and least bulk. Ibid. 987.

1386. When a captain receives shipwrecked goods, he shall proceed to his own port of discharge and deposit the goods there in charge of the judicial authorities for the good of all concerned; but if he can, without deviation or special risk, take them to their own port, he may do so with the consent of his own officers and passengers and persons interested in his own cargo, if they are on board. Ibid. 988.

1387. Salvage expenses in default of agreement between the parties are settled by the judgment of arbitrators at the port of discharge, who will consider the distance the goods were brought, the delay, the difficulty, and risk of the service. Ibid. 987.

1388. If the goods are depreciating in value, or if no owner appears in the course of a year, the judge under whose authority they are placed shall proceed to sell them, paying the salvage expenses out of the proceeds, and placing the residue on deposit for the benefit of those concerned. Ibid. 990.

1389. If the owners do not appear, the proceeds lapse to the state, as in other cases of vacant possession. S. & R.

1390. A similar judicial sale may be had of part of the goods salvaged to pay salvage at any time. C. C. 991.

1391. For provisions as to wreck and salvage, see Decree of 17 Nov. 1852, in 12 Hertslet, p. 794, and Law of 14 May, 1870, in 14 Hertslet, p. 482, and for provisions as to salvage of British or foreign vessels wrecked on the coasts of Spanish colonies, see Law of July 4, 1870, of the Regent of Spain, in 14 Hertslet's Treaties, p. 482, and Order of the same, dated August 23, 1870, in Ibid. p. 483.

13. Sweden.

1. Generally.*

1392. If the parties cannot agree upon the amount of salvage, it must be decided by the court. See Maritime Law of February, 1864, s. 181.

1393. The amount of salvage which the owners of the ship or cargo or the master have agreed with the salvors at the time of the accident, and the stated expenses of the salvors in rendering their assistance, when they considerably exceed a fair sum, and when the owners of the salvaged property demand it, shall be adjusted by the court. Ibid.

1394. In adjusting salvage, the court is to take note of the circumstances that have happened, such as—1. Whether the salvage was performed with special risk and danger to the salvors. 2. Whether the salvors suffered in health, or whether the implements used by them have been damaged. 3. Whether the vessel had been abandoned by the crew. 4. Whether the salvage was effected by special implements of the salvors for that purpose. 5. The value of the goods salvaged. Ibid.

1395. The amount of salvage must not exceed the value of the property salvaged. Ibid.

1395a. See, also, for provisions as to wreck and salvage, Arts. 6 and 7 of the Treaty between the United Kingdom and Sweden, of April 11, 1654, in 2 Hertslet,

* (357) The Swedish law as to salvage is to be found in the Maritime Law of Feb. 1864, ss. 176—185. See further thereon C.

2. Duties of Master and Crew.

1396. If a vessel falls into distress at sea, the master and crew are to do all in their power to avoid accident, and are not to abandon the vessel so long as there is hope of saving it. Ibid. s. 176.

1397. If it is impossible to save her, and the danger is so threatening that they are obliged to abandon her, the master and crew should as soon as possible take steps for the saving of ship and cargo, partly by themselves returning to the wreck and partly by securing necessary assistance. Ibid.

3. Duties of Master.

1398. The master is bound to superintend the saving of ship and cargo unless his doing so is forbidden by the law of the place. Ibid. s. 177.

1399. He is also bound to ascertain and certify under his hand the correctness of all the accounts of expenses of and previously to the salvage, and obtain as quickly as possible a survey and value of the salvaged goods. Ibid. s. 178.

1400. The master must himself, or through the mate of the ship, take exact note of all that has been saved, and of the number of men and boats employed in the salvage, and accompany the conveyance of the goods to their place of storage. Ibid.

1401. If there is danger that the wrecked vessel or cargo will sustain further damages before the orders of the respective owners or their agents can arrive, it is the duty of the master, if not contrary to the law of the place, to make, after previous survey, provision for the sale of the property by public auction after notice published at the nearest church, in the newspapers of the place, or in any other customary manner, but the master in selling such goods as are subject to customs duty, must obey the rules applicable thereto. Ibid. s. 179.

1402. The master has a right, should he find it necessary, to appoint an agent for ship and cargo, but he is still obliged to remain on the spot until all the salvaged goods have been sold, if his personal attendance is to the advantage of the owners, unless the owners give other directions. Ibid. s. 180.

1403. The master must not sell salvaged goods which can, without risk of damage, be valued, without having previously obtained the instructions of the owners or their agent, unless the value is so small that the greater part of it will be consumed in the expenses of storing the goods. Ibid. s. 179.

4. Duties of Public Functionaries.

1404. When an accident happens, and notice thereof is given to the burgomaster or crown official, this person ought, if required, to repair to the place and assist by obtaining the required help. Ibid. s. 177.

5. Crew of Vessel salvaged.

1405. The crew of a vessel salvaged are entitled to claim a reasonable amount of salvage, and the amount, in case of dispute, is to be decided by the court. Ibid. s. 181.

6. Derelict Property.

1406. Anyone who at sea, within the Swedish jurisdiction, or upon the coast, or in the navigable lakes, rivers, or canals, saves any derelict vessel, wreck, goods or gear belonging to any vessel, whether picked up from the bottom or while afloat or aground, is bound to report the fact to the nearest coastguard or customs' officer, who must, without delay, give information thereof to the custom-house of the district. Ibid. s. 184.

1407. If any such person omits to make such report, or conceals or disposes of anything saved, he forfeits all claim to salvage, and is punishable by law. Ibid.

1408. If any vessel has picked up anything at sea, the master must deliver it to the custom-house at the first Swedish port at which he arrives. Ibid.

1409. Should he not call at a Swedish port, he must notify the fact to the Swedish consul at the first foreign port at which he arrives, or if there is no such consul there, to some proper authority, and cause the property saved to be sold by public auction, notifying the circumstances to the owners, and advising them of the amount realized. Ibid.

1410. It then becomes the duty of the owners to cause the proceeds to be sent to the royal authority of the town, who thereupon acts as stated in sect. 185. Ibid.

1411. It is the duty of the custom-house officials to give notice of what has been found to the royal authority in the county, who advertises the property three times in the official gazette. Ibid. s. 185.

SALVAGE. Pt. V. Under Treaties with Foreign Powers. 1919

1412. If the owner makes a claim within a year and a day after the last advertisement, and proves it, he receives the property claimed, paying the salvage and expenses. Ibid.

1413. If the owner does not do so, the goods rescued at sea belong to the salvor; but goods stranded to the crown, salvage and expenses being first deducted. Ibid.

1414. If the property cannot be kept without danger of deterioration, it is sold by public auction and the proceeds deposited in the county savings bank. Ibid.

7. Lien.

1415. The owner may not take possession of the salvaged goods before the salvage has been paid or security given for the payment. Ibid. s. 182.

8. Apportionment.

1416. If the salvors cannot agree as to the apportionment of salvage, it is decided by the court. Ibid. s. 183.

1417. If a ship picks up anything at sea, half the salvage on it falls to the owners, one-fourth to the master, and the remainder is divided among the crew according to their ratings. Ibid.

LIV. Cases of Towage subsequently Salvage—Nos. 536, 569, 584, 597, 723, 726, 799.

LV. Cases of Misconduct of Salvors—Nos. 14, 725, 1482.

1. The British frigate T., with bullion, struck upon a rock on the coast of Brazil, and was driven into a very dangerous cove, and sunk. The hull went to pieces, leaving the treasure upon the bottom in five and six fathoms water. The admiral on the station and the captains and crews of four sloops of war were engaged for eighteen months in recovering the treasure. The service was attended with great skill, labour, and danger, and four lives were lost. The salvors also constructed very efficient mechanical apparatus for the service. £25,800 allowed for expenses besides award. The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 14; 2 Knapp. 390.

Value 157,349*l.*—Award £29000

2. In April, the iron screw steamer A., 4,600 tons, 1,100 h.-p., from New York for Havre with passengers and a general cargo, had sprung a leak, and been abandoned by the master, crew and passengers, and was found derelict by the steamer S. and the barque A., in lat. 47°40' N. and long. 6°25' W. The A. put two men on board, and proceeded on her voyage. The mate, engineer, fireman, and two seamen of the S. boarded her, and she was towed under sail. Next morning they met the F. T. B., and made arrangements with her to help to tow the A. When about thirty miles from Plymouth a steam-tug was procured, which brought her to an anchorage; but another bad leak being discovered, and the water increasing, the tug, with two government tugs helping, took her to Catwater. The services lasted three and a half days. £9,300 to the S., £8,400 to the F. T. B., £300 to the A. The Amerique (P. C.), M. M. R. Dec. 25, 1874, p. 1646; L. R. 6 P. C. 468.

V. 190,000*l.*—A. £18000

3. The vessel J. C., derelict and very leaky, about 2,000 miles from land, was fallen in with by the M., with a crew of twenty-three hands. The mate and nine men were put on board the J. C., and they navigated her to Liverpool in eighteen days. The James Cheston, S. G. June 5 and 20, 1855.

V. 56,000*l.*—A. £16000

4. In April, the F. of A. was found derelict about eighty leagues N. of Madeira, and taken possession of by the B., which put a mate and four hands on board and conveyed her to Madeira. Forty men were sent to assist from the French fleet. The Falls of Afton (Nantes Tribunal of Commerce), M. M. R. Dec. 29, 1882, p. 1650.

V. 38,260*l.*—A. £12882

5. The J. was sunk in deep water and ten feet in the sand, near Margate. Several attempts by the agent of the underwriters to raise the vessel failed. A company of salvors made a second attempt, which also failed. They then purchased a vessel of 248 tons, fitted machinery on board at considerable expense, laboured a month, and raised the vessel, when the gear gave way and she again sank. About three months afterwards they raised her again, but her top separated from her bottom. They, however, saved all her valuable cargo of brandy. There were eight principal and thirty-eight subordinate salvors. The award included £2,300 for expenses, and salvors were to pay out of the award £850 to forty other men who had picked up and brought in some goods. The Jubilee, 3 Hagg. 43, in note.

V. 14,352*l.*—A. £11300

6. The screw steamer S., of 1,500 tons, from Alexandria, with cotton, for Liverpool, in a very heavy sea, wind W.N.W., grounded in November on the Libra Flats, at the entrance of the Mersey, and hoisted signals for assistance. The steam-tugs U. K. and H. succeeded in getting her off. Soon afterwards she touched on the Little Burbo Flat. The steam-tug R. then came up, and the three tugs got her into the channel. The steam-tug Relief then came up, and, with her assistance, the S. was prevented from getting on Taylor's Bank. The four tugs then towed the S. up the Mersey and docked her. The S. was in considerable danger, and the tugs suffered some damage, and several of their hawsers were destroyed. £3,000 to the U. K., £2,800 to the R., £2,500 to the H., £2,000 to the Relief. The Syrian, M. M. R. March 31, 1866, p. 401.

7. The ship A. was lost on the Tortugas. Twelve large wrecking vessels, carrying in all about 120 men, were employed between two and three weeks in saving the cargo. The America, Files of Court, 1838, cited in Wreck and Salvage, 216. [American.]

V. 30,292*l.*—A. £9594

8. The ship I. A., with cargo, struck upon the Florida Reef in a hurricane, drove over, and sank in five fathoms water. Over 400 persons, about twenty of whom were divers, were engaged for six weeks in saving the cargo. Portions of it were saved by fishing with iron hooks or pegs attached to the end of long staves; but the larger portion was saved by divers, who, without any artificial apparatus, in the natural way, dived into the hold of the ship. The Isaac Allerton, Files of Court, 1856, cited in Marvin, 219. [American.] Value 19,200*l.*—Award £8770

9. The steamer C. of B., 5,491 tons register, broke her crank shaft, and was towed by the V. d'A. for nine hours, forty-five miles; but the V. d'A. not being strong enough, the S. took her in tow for 700 miles. The S. suffered ten days' detention, and was worth, with the cargo and freight, £88,000. The values of the V. and her cargo and freight were £67,000. £8,000 to the S., £500 to the V. The City of Berlin, M. M. R. April 28, 1882, p. 526. V. 237,198*l.*—A. £8500

10. In October, the ship M. L. was found, derelict and in a very disabled state near Gaspar Island, in the East Indies, by the barque F. Y. The chief mate and four hands of the F. Y. took the M. L. into Batavia in twelve days, after much personal hardship and at considerable risk; the F. Y. bearing company for five days. The F. Y. was worth £70,000. The Maggie Leslie, P. C. M. M. R. June 19, 1869, p. 786. V. not stated.—A. £8250

11. In December, the steamship S., during a gale from the N.W. with heavy sea, being about seventy-three miles S.E. of Yarmouth, and on her broadside, burnt blue lights. The smack S. H. came up, and with great difficulty got off twenty-five hands, hauling them through the water, eight of whom a passing Torbay smack took on board, and the remainder were landed by the S. H. in Yarmouth harbour three days afterwards. The master of the S., his son, and the rest of the crew, remained on board. The W. and E., the C. T., and the steamship Sheffield, in answer to the blue lights, also bore down on her, remained by her for a day, and attempted several times to tow the S., but the weather was too bad, and the master and the rest of the crew reluctantly abandoned her. The S. was fallen in with two days afterwards by the steamship W., which attempted to tow her, but was obliged to obtain the assistance of the steamship R., which, having new ropes, took the S. in tow, attended and assisted by the W., into Brouwershaven Gap, where she grounded, the tow rope having parted. Subsequently she was towed clear of the ground and into Brouwershaven by two tugs. £1,500 to the S. H., £1,600 to the W. and E., £1,600 to the C. T., £2,800 to the R., £300 to the W. The Smyrna, M. M. R. June 20, 1868, p. 787. V. 50,000*l.*—A. £7800

12. The ship B. H. was in lat. 42° 30' N. and long. 11° 20' W., damaged and derelict. The master and ten men from the ship E. boarded the B. H., and conducted her into Plymouth in six days. The Blenden Hall, 1 Dod. 414. V. 72,000*l.*—A. £7000

13. In November, the full-rigged screw steamer C. R., 2,840 tons nett and 4,623 gross, 133 hands, between forty and fifty cabin and 400 and 500 steerage passengers, a general cargo, about £350,000 in specie, and a large mail, about 700 miles from New York, broke her shaft and proceeded under sail with a W. wind on the port tack. The screw steamer C., ninety hands, twenty-seven cabin and 150 steerage passengers, and a general cargo, her value being £150,000, from Glasgow for New York, came up. The C. R. had drifted about 69 miles to leeward, and the state of the weather precluded all chance of her reaching New York under sail. The C. was asked to take the C. of R. in tow to New York, but as she had not coal enough it was agreed that she should take her to Halifax, distant 240 miles, and after fifty-four hours' towing the C. of R. was got to a safe berth in Halifax harbour. The City of Richmond, M. M. R. Feb. 27, 1880, p. 271. V. 509,929*l.*—A. £7000

14. In March, the schooner-rigged screw steamer S., 3,156 tons gross, 2,199 nett register, ninety-five hands, sixty-two passengers, and general cargo, from New York for Hamburg, when about 300 miles from Queenstown, broke her propeller shaft seven feet inside the screw, and lay on the wind beating across the Channel from N. to S. with square sails and fore and aft sails set for five days. She then put up signals of distress, and in answer thereto the iron screw steamer V., 2,748 tons register, with engines of 300 horse power working up to 1,800, and of the value, with freight and cargo, of £72,000; from Antwerp to Philadelphia, seventy-six hands, 274 passengers, a general cargo, and the Belgian mails, came up and was boarded by the master of the S., who agreed with the master of the V. to tow the

S. to Queenstown for £15,000, the master of the V. threatening to leave the S. unless that sum was agreed to. The V. deviated from her course for six days. The weather was fine and the sea smooth. No costs allowed in consequence of the conduct of the master of the V. The Silesia, M. M. R. June 25, 1880, p. 809; and July 2, 1880, p. 847. Value 108,000*l.*—Award £7000

15. In January, the ship Lord S., from Calcutta, with jute and oilcake, for Dundee, was hard and fast on the Goodwin Sands. Thirty-six Deal boatmen came to her, got out a kedge and warp, and hove on it. The Ramsgate lifeboat and a tug then came up, and shortly afterwards the tugs P., S., Sussex and E., who together succeeded in getting her off. Some Cinque Port men also saved some of the cargo. £1,000 to the Deal boatmen, £1,200 to the P., £250 to the E., £1,000 to the S., £350 to the Sussex, £950 to the lifeboat and the Ramsgate tug, £2,150 to Cinque Ports men. The Lord Strathmairn, M. M. R. May 21, 1875, p. 648. V. 32,000*l.*—A. £6900

16. In March, the three-masted screw steamer City of C., from New York to Liverpool, with 108 passengers, 200,000 dollars in specie, mails, and a general cargo, broke her shaft in the stern tube about 660 miles off Sandy Hook. She was taken in tow for twenty-six hours by the steamer S., but then the hawser parted, and the S., being short of coals, proceeded on her way. Three days later, in about lat. 42° 13' N. long. 59° 40' W., the screw steamer M., from Boston, for Liverpool, value £189,000, with seventy hands, a general cargo, passengers, 400 cattle and 454 sheep, took the City of C. in tow. After twenty-one miles' towing the wind freshened to a gale with a high sea, and the City of C. sheered very much. During a squall the hawser parted and the City of C. was lost sight of for an hour, but eventually she was discovered, two hawsers were made fast, and in about forty-eight hours she was taken into Halifax harbour. The City of Chester, M. M. R. May 4, 1883, p. 558. V. 179,535*l.*—A. £6500

17. In December, the screw steamer D. B., 1,085 tons register, 160 h.-p., thirty-seven hands, and general cargo, for Rangoon, and having five adult passengers and three children on board, lost her propeller, and was heading towards the coast of Sicily, ten miles off. In answer to her signals the screw steamer M. L., 1,287 tons register, 200 h.-p., and twenty-six hands, two days out from Marseilles, with ballast, for Girgenti, in Sicily, came up and was requested to tow. The M. L. agreed to do so on account of the danger to the D. B. and those on board, at the risk of forfeiting her charter-party. A steel hawser and a new 13-in. Manilla rope were then got out from the D. B. and made fast to the M. L., and the towing commenced. After thirteen hours' towing, first the steel hawser and then the rope parted, and there was great danger of their fouling the propeller of the M. L. The wind meanwhile gradually increased to a gale, and the towage could not be renewed. The M. L. tried to remain by the D. B., but lost sight of her, and after twenty hours found her again, when the hawser and rope were again made fast and the D. B. was taken to Valetta, the steel hawser parting once more during the towing. The services lasted sixty-two hours, during the earlier part of which time they were rendered in circumstances of great difficulty and some danger. The M. L. showed great perseverance in her attempts to stand by the D. B. and in seeking for her during the time she was lost sight of. The Vice-Admiralty Court of Malta awarded £5,000 and £3,500 for damages. On appeal, the Privy Council awarded £1,000 as salvage, and the damages, which they proposed to refer to the registrar and merchants, unless the salvors agreed to accept a reduced award of £6,000 in all, which they did. The De Bay (P. C.), 8 App. Cas. 559; M. M. R. August 3, 1883, p. 972. V. 67,000*l.*—A. £6000

18. A sloop with a transport under convoy discovered a derelict, supplied her with necessary sails and rigging, and worked her into a place of safety. £4,500 to the sloop, £1,500 to the transport. L'Esperance, 1 Dod. 46. V. 12,000*l.*—A. £6000

19. In June, the screw steamer O., 2,447 tons nett, from Montreal to London, with forty-five hands and general cargo, 836 head of cattle, and passengers, when seven days out and in the middle of the Atlantic broke her propeller shaft close to the stem, fracturing her stem tube. Next day the propeller moved, jammed the rudder so that it would not work, and she lost her power of steering, as well as her propelling and steaming powers, and when she came up to the wind would not go off again. She had only provisions for the cattle for ten days, and it had just been decided to throw 260 of those on deck overboard, when, in answer to her signals, the screw steamer A., 4,173 tons gross, from Glasgow to New York, with 350 passengers, ninety-six hands, and a general cargo—value with cargo and freight £100,000—came up and by request took her in tow to St. John's, Newfoundland, a distance of 700 miles. There was a moderate gale during part of the service. The Camona, S. G. Feb. 20, 1885, p. 118. Value 64,000*l.*—Award £6000

20. In February, the screw steamer W., from Calcutta for London, with general Indian cargo, struck on the coral reef off the Island of Kotama in the Red Sea, 299 miles from Aden and thirty miles from the route of ships. Her crew and passengers were put on a desert island, whence they were rescued by the C. A Greek trader from the town of Soheia agreed to provide men and boats to save the cargo, he to have one-third the net value of the property salvaged. His Arabs plundered so much that H.M.S. K. was sent to protect the property. The Greeks having no appliances wherewith to break up the deck, which was a necessary step to get at the cargo, the captain of the K. agreed to let his men do it, entering into an agreement to have the value of half the amount thus salvaged. The services lasted six days. The Cargo ex Woosung (C. A.), M. M. R. May 12, 1876, p. 586. V. 25,900*l.*—A. £6000

21. In August, the screw steamer J., from Singapore to Jeddah, with a general cargo and 953 passengers, abandoned by all her officers and crew except the second engineer, who knew nothing of navigation, the serang, supercargo and clerk, four klassies, and thirteen firemen, was fallen in with by the screw steamer A., 1,644 tons, from Shanghai to London, with 680 passengers, who towed her to Aden, a service lasting four days, and involving for the first five hours great labour and afterwards much skill, care, and perseverance. The expenses incurred by the A. amounted to £258. The Jeddah (Straits Settlements V.-A. Court), M. M. R. December 2, 1881, p. 1522. V. 29,000*l.*—A. £6000

22. On the 27th May, 1882, the steamer L., 1,145 tons nett, 1,746 tons gross, twenty-five hands, from Bombay to Dunkirk, took the ground off Ras Gharib, 95 miles from Suez, and, in spite of jettisoning the cargo, could not be got off, but struck repeatedly. Two passing steamers were signalled but refused assistance. On the 30th May, however, the steamer O., 1,200 tons, from Suez to Tuticorin, in ballast, came up, and at much risk, owing to the proximity of coral reefs and the state of the weather, got her in tow, took her off the reef on which she had settled, towed her to within five miles of Suez, and stood by her until she made that port in safety. Had she remained a few hours longer in the position in which the O. found her she would have been lost with all on board. The O. sustained damage and expenses to the amount of £100. The Lancaster, 5 Asp. 58, 174; 8 P. D. p. 65; 9 P. D. C. A. 14; 48 L. T. N.S. 679. V. 62,000*l.*—A. £6000

23. In February, the screw steamer S., 4,376 tons gross register, 640 h.-p. nom., 2,200 actual, lost her rudder and rudder post. Two outward-bound steamers refused to tow her, but took off nineteen of her passengers. The steamer B. tried to tow her but failed. The steamer T., 2,783 tons, 350 h.-p., working up to 1,600, value £85,365, came up with her east of Queenstown in a very helpless and unmanageable condition. The T. took her in tow, and after seven days and four hours brought her, with great risk of damage to herself, 850 miles, safely into port. The Sardinian, M. M. R. April 28, 1882, p. 526. V. 96,600*l.*—A. £6000

24. In February, the screw steamer S., 2,436 tons, from Savannah for Liverpool, with thirty hands, and a cargo of cotton, was lying in about lat. 48° N., helpless in the trough of the sea, which was breaking over her. She was dangerously injured by the loss of her stern-post, rudder, wheelhouse, and other damages, and was quite unmanageable. In answer to signals the screw steamer L. C., 1,927 tons gross, from New York for Bristol, with twenty-eight hands, and a general cargo, altered her course and came up to the S., but owing to the severity of the weather could not board her, so stayed by her all night. Next day the L. C. agreed to steer the S. by being made fast astern, the S. proceeding under her own steam. This was done for six hours in a strong S.W. breeze with a heavy sea, till the hawser parted for the second time, when the L. C. lay by the S. for the night. Next day the L. C. towed ahead of the S. for a short time, but the wind increasing to a strong S.S.W. gale both hawsers parted, and owing to the weather the vessels could only communicate by signals till February 24, the S. drifting to E. The weather having then moderated towing recommenced, and on February 28 the S. was got safely to Queenstown, where three tugs took charge of her. The Strathleven, M. M. R. May 23, 1884, p. 325. Value 90,000*l.*—Award £6000

25. In January, the mail steamer S. was found by the mail steamer A., belonging to the same owners, lying at Ascension disabled, having her main shaft broken inside the after bearings. She had reached Ascension under sail from lat. 3°57' S. and long. 7°40' W., where the accident had happened. The A. took her in tow to Gorea, thence, after coaling, to St. Vincent, where the A. and the S. were both put into five days' quarantine. Thence the A. towed her to Netley, and there anchored her in safety. The distance for which the S. was towed was 4,500 miles, and great risk, difficulty, and extra labour were incurred in the towage, which with the quarantine took forty-three days. The Syria, M. M. R. July 10, 1874, p. 880.

V. 22,500*l.*—A. £6000

26. On the 19th of November two Danish vessels, each of 200 tons burthen, found the L. K. abandoned in the Bay of Biscay. They took possession of her, putting six of their men on board, and one of the vessels staying with her. On the 24th H.M. brigantine D. came up and placed seven of her crew and a midshipman on board along with the Danes. The L. K. then made for Plymouth Sound. The men on board her were exposed to hardships and imminent danger. The disabled state of the vessel was observed on the 1st of December by the pilot cutter H., which offered its services, and was employed in helping to get out the anchors, &c. Finally, the port-admiral at Plymouth, on the application of the midshipman on board the L. K., despatched to her assistance H.M. steamer C., by which she was towed into Plymouth on the 2nd December. £4,000 to Danish ships, £1,500 to the D., £50 to the pilot cutter, £200 to the C. The Lady Kennaway, S. G. Nov. 22, 1848.

V. 14,346*l.*—A. £5750

27. In November, the screw steamer R. H., with a crew of sixty hands, twenty passengers, and a general cargo, from Liverpool to Bombay, stuck fast on the Clipera Rocks during a W.N.W. gale and in a heavy sea. In answer to signals a lifeboat and pilot put off to her, and shortly afterwards the tug C., 172 tons register, and the F. C., 92 tons, came up and found her lying broadside on, heading N., and with her stern deep in the water. They were quickly joined by the tugs K. and B. S. Hawsers were attached, and after some seven or eight hours she was got off, and the tug discharged. The K. landed some of the passengers and then started with her for Liverpool for repairs. At Salt Island the F. C. was again engaged to assist. When east of Point Lynas the wind freshened and the sea increased. In about twelve hours they got S. of the Bar lightship, a pilot was taken on board, and the steamer anchored, the tugs standing by till the morning, when she was towed across the bar. After this a tow-rope parted, and the F. C. had to hold on with the starboard rope for some little time. Assisted by the tug G., she was got in about nineteen hours to Woodside stage, and docked in Morpeth Dock, Birkenhead. £150 to the lifeboat, £50 to pilot, £1,500 to the F. C., £1,500 to the K., £1,200 to the C., £1,200 to the B. S. The Rydal Hall, M. M. R. Dec. 8, 1882, p. 1554.

V. 60,000*l.*—A. £5600

28. In April, the screw steamer P., 1,958 tons gross register, from Buenos Ayres for London, thirty-six hands, cargo, wool hides, linseed and other goods, and two boxes of specie, broke her crank-shaft off Ushant. The wind stormy from S.S.W., and the tide about a quarter ebb. The screw steamer G., value £22,000, from Bilbao to Cardiff, fifteen hands, cargo iron ore, agreed to tow the P. After some difficulty tow-lines were made fast, but soon parted, and the G. stayed by the P., which was drifting broadside to leeward in a S.E. direction. The G. tried to fix a tow-line, but was thrown by the sea right under the stern of the P., which crashed with her counter into the starboard midships of the G., doing considerable damage. The weather clouded over and became squally, and the P. was found to have drifted bodily S.E. within five or six miles of the rocky French coast. After some trouble and danger the G. towed the P. till a pilot was taken aboard. The P. was then towed into Plymouth. The service lasted three days. The Pascal, M. M. R. June 2, 1882, p. 685.

V. 102,750*l.*—A. £5320

29. In March, the ship M., from Baltimore to Bremen, with 6,125 barrels of petroleum oil, came into collision with the Norwegian barque P., and was so damaged that her master and crew deserted her. They were picked up about three miles from the Royal Sovereign lightship and taken to Dover by the steamer Malleable. The Norwegian barque F. L. found the M. waterlogged and without her main braces. The chief officer and two hands boarded her, and got her under sail. The F. L. kept close to her until she was under command, and then proceeded on her voyage. In about two and a-half hours the fishing smack Q. V. came up, and was sent to Nowhaven for a tug. Meanwhile the M. was kept under the shelter of the English coast, two hands from the lugger B. N., two hands from the smack L., both of which came up and stayed by her, and three hands from the lugger A. being put on board. The L. was sent to Portsmouth for a tug, and spoke the tug R. H., which came up with the M. off the Nab lightship, and took her in tow to Portsmouth, but she took the ground on the bar, and it was necessary to get the services of the tug V. She was then dragged over the bar and brought into harbour. £700 to the M., £2,000 to the F. L., £600 to boatmen, £1,750 to tugs. The Maryland, M. M. R. June 15, 1877, p. 755. Value 12,000*l.*—Award £5050

30. In October, the screw steamer A., 3,137 tons, 130 hands, 197 passengers, a general cargo, and a large quantity of specie and stores for the army in Afghanistan, bound for Calcutta, broke her after-crank shaft, had her engines disabled, and was drifting about under sail within thirteen miles of the coast W. of Ushant, there being a fresh breeze blowing. The screw steamer T. H., with 39 hands, 5 passengers, and a cargo of jute, wheat, and tea, from Calcutta to London, and of the value of £108,700, came up, and was requested to tow the A. into Plymouth. Two hawsers were made fast, but immediately parted, but others having been bent on, towing commenced, and continued for about 100 miles during bad weather, continuously becoming worse, till the afternoon of the 18th, when both hawsers again parted. A fog coming on, and the bad weather increasing, the T. H., after having tried again to tow the A. by means of a chain, which parted at once, went for assistance to Plymouth, and brought the tug T. and H.M.S. V. The T. H. proceeded on her voyage, and the T. and V. took the A. into Plymouth, four hawsers parting, and it being twice necessary to anchor on the way. The Australia, M. M. R. July 23, 1880, p. 936.

Value 530,000*l.*—A. £5000

31. In December, the steamer C., 1,583 tons gross, from Rotterdam to London, laden with steel rails and railway materials, and manned by 33 hands, was about ten miles S.W. of the Owers lightship, when water was discovered coming into her engine-room, and shortly afterwards was reported to have come up to the stoke-hole plates, and to be increasing. Orders were given to steer for the Isle of Wight, and all boats got ready, but the majority of the crew lowered the boats and deserted the master, who got into a boat and went to the lightship. The C. was found by the steamer Clierden, 1,723 tons gross, from Riga to Newport, Monmouth, with twenty-two hands, and railway sleepers, which rounded-to and lowered her cutter, in which the second and third mate, the steward and two seamen, went in a heavy sea to the C., and took off the third engineer and five firemen, who had been left in the stoke-hole, when the other hands deserted and could not get off, having no boat. After coming to anchor, and inspecting the C., it was found that the sea-cock of the donkey-pump had been opened before the ship was abandoned, and the donkey-engine had been pumping in the sea, that the main injection valve had also been left open, and the condenser was leaking badly, causing the water to overflow from the hot-well in the bilges; the C. was ultimately cleared of water on the evening of the 16th, and on the 17th proceeded on her voyage. The Carranza, S. G. February 27, 1885; affirmed on appeal, April 26, 1885, pp. 135, 214.

Value 30,000*l.*—A. £5000

32. In April, the sailing vessel B., 1,350 tons, from Liverpool to Barbadoes, with twenty-five hands, and a general cargo, during a severe gale, was thrown on her beam-ends, her master was drowned, and several of the crew were seriously injured. The mainmast and mizenmast were cut away, and the vessel partially righted herself. The first officer and crew were taken on board the barque O., and landed at Madeira. Two days afterwards the B. was found, about 170 miles off Cape Ortegale, on her beam-ends, with the lee side of her 'tween decks full, by the iron-built barque, C. F., 882 tons, value £14,150, from Penarth Roads for Sumatra. The C. F. stayed by her during the night, and put her mate and eight hands on board. The steamship S., 2,085 tons register, value £207,000, from Bombay to Liverpool, with a general cargo, then took charge of the B., and, after considerable difficulty, towed her into Falmouth in seven days, the hawsers parting once on the way. The Boyne, M. M. R. June 23, 1882, p. 782. Value 14,859*l.*—Award £5000

33. In November, in latitude, by account, 35°48' N., and longitude, by account, 19°40' E., the screw steamer C. was observed signalling by the screw steamer, G., 749 tons register, 100 horse-power, from Gibraltar, with railway iron and chains for Alexandria. The G. and cargo was valued at £25,000. The C. was in a position of desperate peril to human life and property, and by the exertion of those on board the G., was rescued therefrom. The Cleopatra, M. M. R. February 15, 1868, p. 213. 34. In January, the C., from Bombay to England, was in a disabled state in the middle of the Atlantic, her rudder being useless, and she was at the mercy of the wind and waves, with no hope of saving her. A foreign ship, herself disabled, with great skill and labour, and some danger, saved the crew, passengers and specie. The Columbia, 3 Hagg. 428. V. 10,000*l.*—A. £5000

35. In January, in the Bay of Biscay, about lat. 50° N. long. 6°20' W., the sea running high, wind fresh with rain, and squally, the steamer S. from Sulina to Bristol with barley, derelict, was boarded by the second mate and some of the crew of the steamship M., who found that the steering gear of the S. was washed away, the rod of the circulating pump broken, and the water over the floor in the cabins. She was taken in tow and brought to Corunna in three days. Two hawsers were broken. The Scio, M. M. R. June 4, 1875, p. 710. V. 29,191*l.*—A. £5000

36. In September, the brig-rigged screw steamer V., 1,686 tons nett and 2,588 tons gross register, with engines of 350 h.-p., forty-two hands, from Montreal and Quebec to London with a general cargo, broke her after engine. Next day her forward engine turned ahead, and her propeller dropped out and disappeared. She was picked up seven days afterwards, about 750 miles from Plymouth, by the screw steamer G., twenty-three hands, 1,692 tons, registered from New York to Delaware Breakwater in ballast. The G. took her in tow, and in seven days brought her to Plymouth. The weather was bad, the hawsers parted eight times, and during the towage there was a fierce hurricane. The G. was detained thirty-three days. Her value with cargo and freight was £24,000. The Viking, M. M. R. Dec. 24, 1880, p. 1646. V. 63,904*l.*—A. £5000

37. A derelict, dismasted and much damaged, at sea off Loophead, near the mouth of the Shannon, and drifting towards the cliff on a lee shore, was discovered, and with some danger boarded, by eighteen men, pilots and others, of the coast. She was by these parties, at considerable danger and with much labour, towed round the cliff, where a heavy sea was running, to the mouth of the Shannon, where being joined by seventeen other salvors she was, with their united assistance, towed up the Shannon, and brought to a safe anchorage, where they protected her from plunder and guarded her for several weeks, until the owners came forward and received possession of her. The Windsor Castle, 2 Notes of Cases, 53, Supp. (High Court of Adm. of Ireland). V. 20,000*l.*—A. £5000

38. The ship C. S. got upon a sand-bank in the river Mersey during a storm, and was in very considerable danger. She was rescued and towed off the bank by the united efforts of three steam-tugs, the U. K., the E., and the R., without any risk to the lives or property of the salvors. Champion of the Seas, S. G. June 6, 1862. V. 152,890*l.*—A. £4600

39. The British ship C., laden with cotton and grain, was lost on Ajax Reef, near Cape Florida, 120 miles from Key West. Fifteen wrecking vessels, having an aggregate tonnage of 1,161 tons, carrying 152 men, saved the ship's materials and 2,916 bales of cotton. They were employed thirteen days. One of the wrecking schooners too, valued at £1,600, while loading alongside of the ship, took fire from the accidental upsetting of a lamp among the cotton, and was totally consumed. The Crown, Files of Court, 1857, cited in Marvin, 220. [American.]

Value 26,200*l.*—Award £4600

40. In July, the steamer A., 1,158 tons, was found, by H.M.S. D., ashore on the rocks E. of Perim, making water, and in a helpless condition. After ineffectual efforts to move her, the D. commenced to tranship the cargo. In five days 800 tons had been transhipped, which the D. took to Aden, leaving her second officer, a corporal, seven marines, and five lascars, on board the A. In six days the D. returned, and the rest of the cargo was got out, during boisterous weather and through a nasty sea, with the thermometer at 93° under double awnings. The D. left after seventeen days, but returned in fifteen days, and having tried unsuccessfully for two days to get her off the rocks, had to abandon her. The Azalea, 3 Asp. N.S. 240, n.; M. M. R. June 11, 1875, p. 744.

41. In January, the Cunard steamer B., 1,628 tons, was disabled and lying hove-to under her main trysail and main topsail, and making signals of distress. The steamer C., 1,322 tons, from London to Halifax and Boston, with twelve passengers and a general cargo, value £57,000, bore down upon her, and after much difficulty towed the B. into Fayal Bay. During the towage the hawsers parted several times. The Batavia, The Times, May 6, 1881.

V. 72,500*l.*—A. £4500

42. In June, the screw steamer C. M., 2,014 tons gross and 1,388 tons nett register, from New York to London with a general cargo, including live cattle and sheep, in lat. 44°35' N. and long. 42°29' W., weather being fine and wind N.N.W., with a moderate breeze, was discovered with her propeller loose in the shaft and her engines disabled. She had been two days under sail on a N.N.E. course, when the screw steamer St. B., 2,222 tons gross, 1,447 tons nett, with engines of 300 h.-p., nominal working to 1,300, value £101,300, seven days out from Baltimore, bound for Liverpool, with thirty-two hands and a general cargo, including cattle, came up with the C. M., and took her in tow, under an agreement, for Queenstown; but owing to the propeller of the C. M. not revolving, and to the bad steering, the progress of the vessels was much delayed. The towing continued two days, until the Douats Rock lightship was reached, when pilots were taken aboard and a tug lashed to the C. M. to improve her steering power. The two vessels then proceeded into Cork harbour, where next day the C. M. was safely anchored. The St. B. had only one ton of coal left, and had exhausted all her provender for the cattle. The Celtic Monarch, M. M. R. July 22, 1881, p. 904.

V. 60,000*l.*—A. £4500

43. In July, the ship C. G., from Moulmein for London, the weather squally and bad, was sighted by the H. C., with her rudder gone, bow started, and otherwise damaged, and flying signals of distress. Her master, crew and passengers were taken off by the H. C., which succeeded in getting the C. G. into Cape Town in six days, though she was so damaged that to repair her would cost £2,400. £500 allowed, besides salvage for the expenses of the H. C. at Cape Town. The Charlotte Gladstone (Cape Town Vice-Adm. Ct.), M. M. R. June 25, 1880, p. 810.

V. not stated.—A. £4500

44. In December, the screw steamer F., 4,281 tons gross, from London for New York, broke the main shaft of her propeller in lat. 44° N. and long. 53°30' W., and was in considerable peril, the weather being severe, and the vessel drifting. In answer to signals the screw steamer M., value £61,600, from Hull to New York, with thirty-six hands and a general cargo, came up, and by request stayed by her all night. Next morning the M. took her in tow, and in four days got her to Halifax, 187 miles distant. The services involved no danger and but little difficulty to the salving vessel. The France, M. M. R. May 16, 1884, p. 310.

V. 127,000*l.*—A. £4500

45. In January, the ship I., 975 tons register, with rice for Liverpool, from Rangoon, was lying broadside to the sea, which was making a clean sweep over her, and with a heavy list to starboard, her foremast, maintopsail yard, maintop gallantmast, and jibboom gone, and with no sail at all except her spanker. The steamer C., from

Cork, with passengers and cargo, came up with her some twenty miles N.W. by W. of the Smalls, the wind blowing strong from W.S.W. with heavy seas. There were six feet of water in the hold of the I., and those on board her requested to be taken off. The C.'s lifeboat was lowered, manned by the chief mate and three seamen, who, with great difficulty and risk, succeeded, in two hours time, in getting the survivors of the crew of the I. on board the C. The C., owing to the severity of the weather, could not tow the I., but having only just enough coal to last her to Newport, proceeded thither and landed the crew of the I. Two days after the screw steamer E., 554 tons register, 120 h.-p., from Glasgow for Antwerp with a general cargo, fell in with the I. about twenty miles north of South Bishop's Light. The chief mate and four hands boarded the I., and found six or seven holes, of 1½ inch diameter, in the deck on the starboard side, close to the water-ways, through which the water was running into the hold. These were stopped up. Two hawsers were made fast and four hands left on board. After six and a-half hours' towing, when some twenty-five miles from Milford, the hawsers parted one after another. The E. stood by, and the chief mate and two men returned to her, but two stayed on in the I. During the night the E. and the I. parted, and the two men succeeded in preventing the I. from going ashore, and navigated her till she was fallen in with by the steamer R., 137 tons nett, 40 h.-p., from Portmadoc for Liverpool with slates, &c. Next day, with the assistance of a lifeboat and some men from five small schooners, the I. was got into St. Tadwal Roads, whence she was towed to Liverpool. £300 to the C., £500 to the E., £2,000 to the R., £500 to the lifeboat, £200 to the masters of the five schooners, £1,000 to the men who stayed in the I. The Ireland, M. M. R. May 3, 1872, p. 561. Value 16,522*l.*—Award £4500

46. In December, the steamer R., White Star Line, 3,707 tons, from Liverpool to New York, with crew of 125 hands, 23 saloon and 143 steerage passengers, and a general cargo, broke her shaft, and her steam power became useless. The screw steamer C., 2,770 tons, of the Anchor Line, from New York to Glasgow, with passengers, mails, and a cargo of fresh meat and other commodities, towed the R. into Sandy Hook, a distance of 280 miles, during which the hawsers parted several times. The Republic, The Times, March 8, 1881. V. 144,338*l.*—A. £4500

47. In May, in about lat. 39 N., long. 50 W., the steamer V. C., 2,909 tons gross, 1,898 tons nett, from Havana to Cadiz, with 228 passengers, mails, sugar, and tobacco, was disabled by broken machinery. The iron screw steamer T., 1,356 tons nett, 2,077 tons gross, 200 h.-p. nom., 25 hands, value £53,500, from Coosau River, with phosphate rock, took her in tow to Delgada breakwater at St. Michael's Island. The weather was bad nearly all the time, and in a squall the J. was struck by a heavy sea, and her cargo shifted. The hawser parted twice, and the master of the J. broke his collar-bone during the towage, which lasted ten days. The Vera Cruz, S. G. August 14, 1885, p. 521. V. 96,868*l.*—A. £4500

48. A British ship captured by the French was recaptured off Bluefields, Jamaica, by some persons who put off to her in a boat from the shore. The Dorothy Forster, 6 C. Rob. 91. V. 25,000*l.*—A. £4333

49. The ship B. damaged by collision. The master and all the crew but one man abandoned her. Fallen in with by the ship F., valued at £2,000, and her cargo at £800. The master of the F. put a crew on board the B., who, with great peril and severe labour, took her into the Chesapeake, a distance of 3,000 miles. The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 240, cited in Marvin, 189. [American.] V. 12,054*l.*—A. £4280

50. In October, the barque K., 795 tons, from New York to Liverpool, with Indian corn, in a heavy gale, lost her mainmast and foremast, became unmanageable, and was abandoned. She was sighted by the Norwegian barque N., 783 tons register, who put a crew of five hands on board; but next day this crew deserted her. The barque B., 521 tons register, came up, put men on board, and took her in tow for seven days, but lost sight of her on the eighth day. Those from the B. on board her, however, remained for fourteen days, and then accepted the services of the screw steamer L., which, after a towage of two days and six hours, brought her safely into harbour, having deviated from her course to do so. £200 to the men put on board the K., £2,800 to the B., £1,200 to the L. The Killeena, M. M. R. March 11, 1881, p. 304. Value 12,633*l.*—Award £4200

51. In January, 1874, the three-masted barque K., with cotton, was found derelict about twenty miles N.N.W. of Etaples, and twenty miles W. of Boulogne, by nine luggers and the steam-tug P. She had been in collision with the M., and had a hole knocked in her port bow below the water-line; her foremast was gone, and her rigging-gear and sails were hanging over her bows. A French fishing-boat, the St. C., saved all that was portable of the cargo, and took it to Boulogne. The other salvors brought the K., after much trouble, into Dover harbour. £2,250 to the nine luggers, £1,500 to the P., £200 to the French salvors, and £200 to certain English salvors. The Kathleen, M. M. R. June 26, 1874, p. 816. V. 14,000*l.*—A. £4150

52. In May, the steamship W. was on fire at the back of the Isle of Wight. The 300 passengers and crew were rescued by the steamer S., the cutter M., and a Trinity pilot, and the ship was towed into Spithead by the tug C. £2,500 to the C., £25 to the pilot, £1,000 to the S., £600 to the M. The Wilhelm III., M. M. R. Aug. 4, 1871, p. 979; 1 Asp. N.S. 132, n. V. 50,000*l.*—A. £4125

53. The ship R., laden with cotton and lead, struck heavily upon an inner reef, sprang a leak, and had several feet of water in her when boarded by the wreckers, who put a powerful steam pump on board, without which it would have been impossible to have prevented the ship's filling with water, lightened her of 1,825 bales of cotton, and hove her off. The Rockland, Marvin, 216. [American.] V. 26,000*l.*—A. £4108

54. The ship E. H., laden with 3,039 bales of cotton, was ashore about fifteen miles north of Cape Florida. Eighty men, having ten vessels, four of them, however, of the smaller class, lightened the ship of 961 bales of cotton, carried out her anchors, and hove her off. The Ellen Hood, 5 A. R. 1855, cited in Marvin, 215. [American.] V. 38,478*l.*—A. £4107

55. The P. and O. steamer A., 2,000 tons, on the 12th June, 1859, struck on a rock in the Red Sea. The life-boat went off for assistance, and on the 14th June met H.M.S. C., which furnished her with necessaries to enable her to proceed to Aden. The C. took an officer of the A. on board, and reached her on the 15th June. The crew and passengers were encamped on the highest part of the rock, and were much debilitated by the extreme heat and want of water. The C. took on board the A.'s mails and 172 persons, and a portion of the crew of the C. were left on the A. with the view of saving as much of the cargo, stores, and luggage as possible. On the 16th June the captain of H.M.S. F. was informed at Aden by the agent of the P. and O. Company of the position of the A. On the 17th June the F. reached the wreck, and, with the assistance of natives, used every endeavour to relieve her of her cargo. On the 20th the C. returned, with lighters, tanks, and Arab divers, and by the united efforts of the crews of the F., C., and A., a considerable portion of the cargo was taken on board the C. The persons on board the A. were in great danger, and the cargo for the most part was under water. The crews of the salving vessels were very much injured by their exertions, the salvage services being performed at the height of the hot season in that latitude. The Alma, S. G. Nov. 12, 1861. V. *Estimated by the plaintiffs at 45,000*l.*, and by the defendant at 22,000*l.—A. £4000

56. In October, the screw steamer A., 1,279 tons nett, 1,953 tons gross register, from Cadiz for Halifax (N.S.), in lat. 42° 50' S., long. 39° 45' W., had her rudder disabled, the stock being broken in the trunk. Next day there was a gale, the steering-gear which had been shackled on was carried away, and she would not steer. She kept on her course till the 27th, and then signalled. She was then rolling very heavily in the sea. The screw steamer B., value 65,000*l.*, 1,274 tons nett, 1,913 tons gross, 250 h.-p., forty hands, some passengers and cattle from New York to Avonmouth, bore down to her about 300 miles from St. John's, Newfoundland, and agreed to tow her. After two hawsers had given way, two lengths of stream chain were made fast to them, and towing continued till the A. sheering out on the port quarter of the B. carried away one of them. The B. stood by the A. all night. Next morning there was a hard gale blowing, and the sea was heavy, but another hawser was made fast. The B. towed her as far as the Amhurst Light; then a heavy gale springing up from the S., the head of the B. was put round, and she stood out to sea. When the weather moderated the services of a tug were engaged, and a pilot taken on board, and the A. was anchored in St. John's Harbour about 4 p.m. of the 31st. The Avlona, M. M. R. March 10, 1882, p. 303. Value 69,753*l.*—Award £4000

57. In June, the screw steamer C. of B., 2,960 tons, with 472 passengers, 137 hands, and a cargo of fresh beef, butter, new cheese, bacon, and general merchandise from New York for Liverpool, was in lat. 49° 88', long. 23° 30' W., about 600 miles from Queenstown, with a broken propeller shaft, drifting about unable to steer and heading S.S.W. The screw steamer S., 110 hands, 240 passengers, and a general cargo, including fresh beef, butter, and lard, from New York to Liverpool, took her in tow, and in three days she was anchored in safety outside Queenstown Harbour. The City of Berlin (C. A.), M. M. R. July 22, 1877, p. 946. V. 221,920*l.*—A. £4000

58. In November, the screw steamer E., 4,537 tons gross register, and rigged as a barque, 240 passengers and ninety hands, when about 130 miles from the Fastast Light, broke the blade of her screw propeller and had her funnel carried away in weather so boisterous that for six days she did not dare to put a boat on the water. She was found unmanageable and helpless by the screw steamer P., value £106,000, 2,867 tons gross register, with engines of 300 h.-p. nom. A boat was launched with great courage and gallantry from the P., and the P. agreed to and did stay by the E. for six days, until all danger was past. The Erin, M. M. R. Feb. 24, 1882, p. 237. V. 70,000*l.*—A. £4000

59. In November, the screw steamer K. C., 1,268 tons register, brigantine rigged, 180 h.-p., seventeen hands, from China to London, with a cargo of tea, twenty miles N.W. of the island of Jebel Zuker, in the Red Sea, broke her crank shaft and became a log on the water. The weather was fine, but if it had changed the K. C. would probably have been drifted by the currents on to the coral reefs. The screw steamer J. D., value £75,000, 1,807 tons gross register, 140 h.-p. nom. working to 500, from Bombay to London, took her in tow, and without deviation from her course or any danger to herself or crew, brought her to London in ten days. The Kenmure Castle, M. M. R. Feb. 24, 1882, p. 237; 7 P. D. 47. V. 75,144*l.*—A. £4000

60. In May, about 250 miles N. of the Azores, the steamer H., 2,572 tons gross, 1,749 nett register, 360 h.-p., fifty-four hands, four passengers, and a general cargo, from Bahia to Antwerp, having broken her propeller blades, was discovered by the iron screw steamer P. M., 2,568 tons nett, 3,923 tons gross register, 500 h.-p. nom. 2,500 h.-p. actual, value £145,000, with 100 hands, live cattle and sheep, and seven passengers, from New York to London. The P. M. had only eight days' supply of coal and of cattle food, but nevertheless took the H. in tow through a heavy sea and an E. wind to Falmouth. During the towage, which lasted seven days, two hawsers were broken and several of the sheep were hurt. The Hanover, Jan. 19, 1883, p. 81. V. 50,648*l.*—A. £4000

61. In April, the screw steamer P., 2,405 tons register, 600 h.-p., with a general cargo, 110 hands, 112 passengers, and the West India mails, seven days out from Barbadoes for Southampton, 600 miles E.N.E. of Fayal, broke her propeller shaft; but the weather being moderate, made her course for Fayal under canvas. A week later the screw steamer F., 1,500 tons register, from Philadelphia to Gibraltar, value £45,250, found her down by the stern and being pumped. By agreement the F. steered a course for St. Michael's, and kept near the P. The weather became rapidly worse and increased to a severe gale, in which the F. shipped large quantities of water and strained heavily. She, however, kept by the P. all night and till 1.30 p.m. next day, when the wind was blowing a hard gale from about N.; the island of Santa Maria was about ten to fifteen miles to the S.E. and the Formegas Rocks about ten miles to the E.S.E. of the P., which was lying with her head to the E., and making a great deal of leeway, unable to wear or tack, and in danger of stranding on the rocks. The F. got a tow-rope on board the P., towed her towards the land in a N.E. by E. direction, and on getting well under the land succeeded in turning the P., and at about 4.45 p.m. towed her to St. Michael's, stayed by her outside the breakwater till next morning, when she was taken to a safe mooring inside the breakwater. The F. took the mails on to Lisbon, and the P., after repairs, was taken by a steam-tug to Cape Finisterre, thence to the Scillies, and ultimately to Southampton. The Para, M. M. R. 62. In September, the steamer R., 1,562 tons nett, and 2,288 gross, from Bombay for Dunkirk, with grain and seed, was about twelve miles south of the Chaussée de Sein, nine or ten miles from shore. She had had both lifeboats smashed, had sprung a leak, and the water was increasing in her hold and stoke-hole, in spite of all hands at the pumps. She had put out her engine-room fires, and was nearly on her beam-ends. She was found thus by the screw steamer G., 734 tons gross, from Cardiff for Bordeaux, with coal and sixteen hands, who by request took her in tow, and after forty-four hours got her safely through heavy wind and strong opposing currents to an anchorage off St. Nazaire, 120 to 130 miles distant. The Raisby, M. 63. In October, the screw steamer R., 2,366 tons register, from Antwerp to New York, with 521 passengers and 97 hands, which had lost her screw propeller through striking a sunken wreck when about 446 miles west of Bishop's Rock, was sighted signalling for assistance by the iron screw steamer M., value £27,000, 1,641 tons gross register, with engines 200 h.-p. nom. working up to 700 h.-p., from Shields for Havana, with coals. The M. herself had lost her after-wheel and three boats, and her jolly-boat was damaged in a recent storm. The M. took the R. in tow for Falmouth, about 180 miles W.S.W. of the Lizard Point. About midnight the two hawsers parted, and the R. had to lay by till about 9 a.m. or 11, when another hawser was got on board, and she was towed to Falmouth, arriving there about 9 p.m. The M. was delayed for sixty-four hours. The weather was most boisterous, and there was continual and imminent risk of collision. The Rhynland, M. M. R. March 25, 1881, p. 368. V. 106,000*l.*—A. £4000

64. In September, the iron screw steamer S., 1,556 tons, from Port Said to London, seventy-three hands, fifteen passengers, cargo of tea and general goods, and £28,000 in specie, came into collision with the J. D., about eighty-five miles S.W. of Ushant. The C., from London to Lisbon, with a general cargo, at considerable risk to life, took the eighty-eight persons off her and the specie. The C. had to go out of her way considerably, and was under two days' steam in taking the passengers to Falmouth. The Sarpedon, M. M. R. May 11, 1877, p. 597. V. 28,000*l.*—A. £4000

67. The iron ship B. C., 1,785 tons, was towed in bad weather through a heavy sea, for forty hours, 250 miles, into Falmouth Harbour, first with one and then with two hawsers, from a position of great danger, and in a damaged state, by the screw steamer C., 667 tons. The Brodrick Castle, M. The steamer Canina for New York with mails, came up and, after some difficulty owing to the roughness of the weather, towed the C. in safety to Bermuda. The Castlewood, M. M. R. 1880, p. 784—P. C.

69. In February, in lat. 45 N. and long. 8° 13' W., the screw steamer H., 1,694 tons gross and 1,085 nett register, twenty-two hands, and a cargo of wheat from Bombay to Antwerp, lost her rudder in a S.S.W. gale, and was at the mercy of the wind and sea. Sail was set and the engines kept at half speed. The steamer I., 861 tons register, 130 h.-p. nominal, from Leith for Odessa with coals, after some trouble got hawsers on board the H., and, following in her wake, steered her on her course for Falmouth for thirty-six hours. The hawsers parted three times, and the I. lay by the H. The I. then towed ahead of the H., but the hawser again parted. The H. then used her own steam power, and the I. steered her, following aft again for thirty-six hours more, during which two hawsers parted, and a fog impeded the progress of the vessels. The I. was then boarded by a Falmouth pilot, and in six hours more the H. was brought to anchor in Falmouth harbour. The Hather-sage, M. M. R. May 12, 1882, p. 590.

70. In January, the iron barque J., 1,776 tons, from Liverpool for Calcutta with salt, was fallen in with, in lat. 49 N., long. 4° 38' W., by the screw steamer A. She was derelict, with ten feet of water in her hold, only three lower masts and bowsprit standing, and all the wreckage hanging over her side. There was a heavy sea running at the time. The J. was taken in tow, and with great skill, and after much difficulty, was taken to Plymouth. The Jorawur, M. M. R. June 4, 1875, p. 709.

71. A quantity of derelict tallow, floating upon the high seas in the neighbourhood of the Kentish Knock lightship, was picked up by several luggers, smacks, and cutters, and taken into Ramsgate, without any risk to life, limb, or property of the salvors. The wind at the time was not blowing hard, nor was the sea rough. Salvors to pay the five per cent. to Ramsgate Harbour. Cargo ex Regina, S. G. May 27, 1862.

V. 9,500*l.*—A. £3500

72. In February, the screw steamer G., 1,867 tons gross, from Alexandria for Hull with a general cargo, when about sixty miles from Ushant, sprang a leak and broke her piston rod, disabling the engines. Two days afterwards, the screw steamer I. A., 1,148 tons gross, value £34,900, from Smyrna for London, with nineteen hands, and general cargo, found her about forty miles N.W. by W. of Ushant, helpless, unmanageable, leaking, and in danger of foundering, her well pumps only workable by hand. The I. A. towed her alone, and with great difficulty and danger, for sixty-eight miles towards Plymouth, the service occupying forty-four hours, during which the hawsers parted twice, the weather being bad. The I. A. then fouled her propeller with the hawser that parted. The I. A. then fetched the screw steamer B. K., 3,358 tons gross, value £167,500, with seventy-five hands, 400 h.-p., and 300 effective, from Lyttelton for London, which took the G. in tow for sixty or seventy miles, and in sixteen hours got her into safety. £2,000 to the I. A.; £1,500 to the B. K. The Gamma, M. M. R. April 4, 1884, p. 215.

V. 34,670*l.*—A. £3500

73. In April, the steamer H., 3,136 tons register, from New York to Bremerhaven, with general cargo, broke the thrust-shaft of her propeller, and being schooner-rigged, sail was set to keep her in the track of vessels. She was found by the screw steamer C., 1,361 tons gross, from New Orleans to Bremen, with cotton-seed and oil-cake, about 600 miles west of Falmouth. The C. lay by her for a time, and it being too rough to put out a boat, after some trouble got a hawser attached and began to tow, but after an hour the hawser parted. The C. lay by her all night, and at daylight made fast a hawser and two ropes, which however parted in a very short time. The strong wind and high sea prevented any further attempts to attach hawsers until the next morning, when, the weather having moderated, the C., which had lain by the H., managed to attach a hawser, and got the head of the H. round to the east. The hawser, however, very shortly afterwards parted twice, and the C. again had to lay by all night. Next day the weather moderated and the towing recommenced, and after five days the H. was brought to an anchorage in Falmouth. The H. was not in imminent danger of shipwreck or loss, and was met by several other vessels, and there was not any serious danger to the salvors, or pronounced deviation from their course. The Habsburg, M. M. R. August 10, 1883, p. 1005.

V. 60,000*l.*—A. £3500

74. In February, the screw steamer H., 1,754 tons, for Delaware in ballast, having broken her crank-shaft when about 500 miles W. of the Azores, and being unable to weather Trafalgar Shoals, came to anchor with both anchors out in a strong gale from W.N.W. dead on shore in a very high sea, within half a mile of dangerous reefs, and about four miles off shore. In answer to signals, the screw steamer T.,

1,249 tons gross, 98 h.-p. working up to 400, value £14,000, from Pavona to Huelva, in ballast, with twenty-one hands, came up, and with much danger and difficulty lowered a boat, with five hands, and the master boarded the H. The 2½ in. wire hawser was after considerable difficulty, and with damage to the boat, made fast to the H., the hawser of the H. made fast to the T., the anchors were hove, and towing commenced; but in three hours the wire hawser broke twice, and two hours later the hawser of the H. also parted. The H. was then clear of the Trafalgar shoals, and the T. stood by her all night as she drifted through the Straits of Gibraltar under storm-sail, the wind being W. At daylight two hawsers were made fast, and towing recommenced, but the gale increased so much that it took fourteen and a half hours to proceed fifteen miles, and it was not till twelve hours later that the H. was got safely to Gibraltar Bay. The T. was detained four and a half days, was severely strained, and incurred expenses to the amount of £63. The Hartlepoons, S. G. April 2, 1885, p. 215. Value 16,000*l.*—Award £3500

75. In July, the screw steamer S., schooner-rigged, from St. Thomas to Havre with a general cargo, passengers, and the West Indian mails, broke her main-shaft in the stern tube in lat. 34°51' N. and long. 44°57' W., about 970 miles from Punta Delgada in the Azores. Sail was set, and a course shaped for Punta Delgada. On the 2nd September she was within 170 miles of that place, when the screw steamer A. D., value £27,000, 1,107 tons gross register, 150 h.-p. nom., working up to 550 h.-p., twenty-one hands, cargo iron ore for Philadelphia, from Benisaf, in Algeria, found the S. out of command, lying with her head to the E. with square foresail, topsails, top-gallant sail, and fore-trysail set, making very little way, and steering very wildly. There was a strong sea running on her port quarter, and she was rolling heavily. She had been driving about the ocean for thirty-five days, and had drifted 500 miles to the eastward. After some hard towing, owing to the bad steering of the S. and her sheering, Punta Delgada was sighted on 3rd September, and on 4th September the S. was towed safely into harbour. The Severn, M. M. R. July 28, 1882, p. 941. V. 66,700*l.*—A. £3500

76. The barque S. A., being in the Downs during a violent gale, began to drive fast to leeward, with her head towards the rocky shore. The steam-tug S., at the greatest risk to herself, got a hawser from the barque when within a ship's length from the beach, and towed her into deep water. She sustained damages to the amount of £800. The Spirit of the Age, S. G. February 27, 1857; Swabey, 286. V. 62,000*l.*—A. £3500

77. The ship S. N., laden with sugar and tobacco, was three feet aground on Crocus Reef, an exposed and dangerous reef. The ship laboured and ground on the bottom, wearing off all the afterpart of her keel to the garboard streak, and several of her planks nearly through. It is probable that, in the course of another tide, she would have worn a hole through her, and filled with water. Eight wrecking vessels, of the aggregate burden of 687 tons, carrying in all ninety-two men, were employed thirty-six hours in lightening the vessel, and in carrying out the ship's anchor, and heaving her off. The Sierra Nevada, Marvin, 216. [American.] V. 17,000*l.*—A. £3400

78. The ship B., laden with cotton, was lost on Carysfort Reef. Twelve large vessels, carrying 133 men, saved the cargo. The Brewster, Marvin, 218. [American.] V. 10,081*l.*—A. £3360

79. In March, the screw steamer N., 1,296 tons nett, 2,010 gross register, got on a coral reef near the Gulf of Suez, lost three anchors, and had no means of getting off the reef. The wind and the sea were setting her further on it, and she was in a condition from which she could not be extricated without steam-power. She was surrounded by Arab dhows in the hope of plunder. The screw steamer B., 1,339 tons nett, 2,103 gross register, with 275 h.-p. engines working up to 1,200, and value £135,000, towed off the N. at considerable risk to herself. The services lasted eight hours. The Newnham, M. M. R. December 2, 1881, p. 1521. V. 33,444*l.*—A. £3300

80. On the 20th May the S. was driven on the rocks and thrown on her beam-ends on the Falkland Islands, where she was found on the 12th June, by the American ship W., engaged in fishing and sealing. The master of the W. took measures to get her off, and after unlading half her cargo, he got her afloat on the 21st June, and ready for sea on the 7th July, and carried her to Valparaiso, whither she was bound. Salvage of ship settled by arbitration at £600; salvage of cargo, £1,500; allowed for contingent losses, £1,000; for master's expenses, £200. The Salacia, 2 Hagg. 262. Value 40,400*l.*—Award £3300

81. The brigantine R., 250 tons, derelict, was fallen in with by the iron screw steamer S., 836 tons, value £138,000, from Melbourne for London, about 220 miles west of the Lizard. The mate of the S. was sent on board with three hands, who navigated the R. for eighteen days under circumstances of great danger and hardship, and saved her from a total loss. The food on board was very bad, and for three days the men had to live on biscuits, and the S. was delayed very considerably on her way to London. Expenses, amounting to £600, were incurred by the owners of the S. in completing the service and allowed. The Rasche, L. R. 4 A. & E. 127; 42 L. J. Adm. 71. V. 6,694*l.*—A. £3290

82. The B. struck upon the Gunfleet Sand and was lost. Fifteen boats and sixty-seven men were employed fourteen days in getting out and saving the cargo. The Brothers, 2 Hagg. 195. V. 96,801*l.*—A. £3225

83. The barque C. observed the brig G. a wreck and derelict. Part of the crew of the C. were put on board the G., and she was taken to Madeira to be repaired, and then brought to London. The salvors had expended £1,000. The Georgina, S. G. December 18, 1856. V. 7,000*l.*—A. £3200

84. The brig C. found the brig C. in latitude 32° N. and longitude 74° 30' W., and put a salvor crew on board, who found five feet of water in her. They pumped her out, and with considerable difficulty got her into Delaware Bay in about ten days. The Cora, 2 Wash. 80; 2 Peters, Ad. Dec. 362, cited in Marvin, 191. [American.] V. 9,461*l.*—A. £3153

85. The H. E., in latitude 40° N., longitude 54° W., was derelict without a rudder; and had nine feet of water in her. The master of the H. put four seamen and six passengers on board the derelict as a crew to get her into port, the salvor crew constructed a rudder, but failed in shipping it. They steered by the sails with bad success, and were constantly pumping an entire month, when they were met with in a condition of exhaustion and discouragement by the brig P. After some consultation a new salvor crew was made up, consisting of part of the original salvors and some new men from the P., including the mate. A rudder was now constructed and hung, and at the end of another month they brought the H. E. into Boston. The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sum. 400, cited in Marvin, 190. [American.] V. 6,297*l.*—A. £3146

86. In December, 1879, the Italian screw steamer M., 2,425 tons register, seventy-one hands, seventeen passengers, general cargo from London to Calcutta, arrived off Dartmouth, making about 7 knots on a quarter to half flood tide, in foggy weather, with a fresh E.N.E. breeze, when she took the ground at the east end of the Skerries Shoal, on a bank of sand and shingle. The sea was smooth, with a slight swell, the flood tide was setting to the N. & E. over the shoal. The screw steamer U., with passengers and a general cargo, anchored close by the M. A hawser was secured on board the U., and after four hours' towing the M. was got off. Meanwhile the tug M. came up, stood by, and carried messages from the M. to the U. When the M. came off, the tow-rope was cut, but fouled the propeller of the M. Sail was made, and the vessel got into deep water. Another hawser was then passed on board the U., which began to tow, but the hawser soon slipped, and the M. had to anchor, at 10 p.m. till next morning, when the U. towed the M. to Plymouth in fourteen hours. £3,000 to the U.; £120 to the M. The Manilla, M. M. R. June 4, 1880, p. 720. V. 116,362*l.*—A. £3120

87. The ship Y., laden with coffee and pork, was lost on the reef near Cape Florida. Nine large vessels were employed in saving the cargo. The Yucatan, Marvin, 218. [American.] V. 7,030*l.*—A. £3023

88. In October, during a heavy gale from the westward, the A. was sighted off the North Foreland by the tug V., proceeding under three topsails, with an ensign flying at the peak and the union jack at the fore-royal masthead, followed by the steam-tugs N. and D. The V. got up to her, about two miles off the Elbow buoy, half an hour before high water. Both anchors were gone and her windlass was broken. Her master asked to be held. There was a very fierce gale, and the sea was very heavy;

but the engines of the V. were disconnected and a hawser got on board the A. Towing then commenced in a northerly direction. The hawser broke, and the master of the A. could not, as requested, set topsails and wear ship, because they were all split. Next morning the A. wore with her topmast staystail from N.N.E. to S.S.W., the gale from W.N.W. continuing with great violence. When the weather moderated a rope was made fast, and the V. recommenced towing. Soon after the H. came up, and assisted in the towage towards the Thames. Three hours after the last Goodwin light was passed they entered the Princess Channel, and the A. was there held until the tide flowed sufficiently to allow of her being towed across the shallow water. The A. had thirty hands on board and five passengers; the tugs had eighteen hands between them, and were of the value of £19,000. Steam power was absolutely necessary to save the A. from very grave peril, and the services of the V. lasted a day and a half; those of the H. three hours and a half. £2,000 to the V.; £1,000 to the H. The Allanshaw, M. M. R. Dec. 2, 1881, p. 1521.

89. In September, the steamer G. E., with 400 passengers, a large cargo, and a crew of about 400 hands, while proceeding from Liverpool for New York, about 280 miles west of Cape Clear, encountered a heavy storm, which disabled her paddle-wheel and boats, and broke her rudder shaft. She fell into the trough of the sea, her sails were blown away, and she was quite unmanageable. Her crew exhausted all their resources to get her again under command. In this emergency the services of a passenger, a mechanical engineer, were accepted by the master. Under his instructions a temporary apparatus for steering was attached to the rudder shaft with great labour and danger. The court, holding that the services were of an extraordinary nature and beyond the line of a passenger's duty, awarded salvage. The Great Eastern, 2 Asp. 148; 11 L. T. N.S. 516. [American.]

V. 100,000l.—A. £3000

90. In May, the screw steamer B. C., 892 tons nett register, with twenty-three hands and a general cargo, from New York for Leith, broke her propeller shaft inside the boss of the propeller in lat. 45° 57' N. long. 48° 02' W. The weather was fine but cloudy, and there was a fresh breeze from N.W. She proceeded under sail under perfect command, making 1½ knots to 2½ knots per hour, on a course a little to the S. of her proper course, but was rolling heavily and driving to leeward, when the three-masted schooner-rigged screw steamer C., 4,135 tons gross and 2,214 tons nett register, value £108,425, seventy-eight hands, 952 passengers, and a general cargo, from London for New York, came up with her. A boat was sent to the B. C., and she was taken in tow towards Halifax, the B. C. steering very badly. The towage continued, and on the second day a fog came on so dense that the vessels could not see each other. On the third day a hawser parted; on the fourth the dense fog made it necessary to put the engines dead slow, and Halifax was reached after five days' towage for 876 miles. The Bywell Castle, M. M. R. Aug. 12, 1881, p. 1008.

V. 31,118l.—A. £3000

91. In November, during a terrific S.S.W. gale, with rain, sleet, and hail, and in a heavy sea, the barque C. struck the shore stern on in the middle of St. Margaret's Bay, and was beating heavily. Her master and crew were saved by a lifebuoy from the shore. Her starboard bower anchor, with a chain were hauled high up the beach and secured, and her port kedge anchor, with a hawser attached, taken out, at great risk, by the lugger Friend of All Nations, and laid in a S.S.E. direction. Her port bower anchor was laid in the same direction with much risk and skill by the tug A. She was lightened by the boats M. and J. and came off. She was then taken in tow by the A., and steered by means of two cables made fast to the lugger; gangs were employed in pumping; she was towed to Sandwich Flats and run on the mud there. Next day the A. and the tug Aid towed the C. safely into Ramsgate harbour, where she was found to have fourteen feet of water in her. The Choice, M. M. R. July 15, 1865, p. 879.

V. 37,000l.—A. £3000

92. In November, the ship C. S., 921 tons, from London to Sydney, with a general cargo, which had experienced a most severe gale the day before, had been in two collisions, lost both anchors, and had only forty-five fathoms of chain left, was drifting in the vicinity of very dangerous sands between four and five miles from the Kentish Knock, when she was discovered by the tug M., 74 h-p. The wind very strong from W.S.W., and the sea very heavy. The M. took her in tow, but could only proceed at the rate of one mile an hour. In about six hours the tug B., 450 h.-p., came up, and, having disconnected her engines, took a rope on board. The two tugs then towed her up the Prince's Channel, and into the Thames to Greenhithe, in about nine hours, where she was moored for the night, and next day taken to the East India Docks. The Cutty Sark, M. M. R. November 30, 1877, p. 1526.

93. The ship E. was ashore upon Carysfort Reef. Seven wrecking vessels, carrying in all 100 men, lightened her of 530 bales of cotton, and heaved her off. When off the reef, she was still in an intricate and difficult channel, requiring an expert pilot to extricate her. The Euphrasia, 4 A. R. 136, cited in Marvin, 214. [American.]

94. In February, the steamer L., from Para to Liverpool, with passengers and a general cargo, was disabled by the breaking of her propeller shaft, when about 500 miles to the southward and westward of Cape St. Vincent. Sail was thereupon made, and she was put on a south-easterly course, in order to keep her in the track of steamers. The passengers and crew were placed on a reduced allowance of provisions, and the captain had given orders for the allowance to be still further reduced. The Belgian mail steamer P., for Monte Video, with mails for Belgian government, towed the L. in eight days to Pernambuco. In consequence of the delay caused by the services the owners of the P. had to pay a fine of £800 to the Belgian government. The Lisbonense, M. M. R. 1883, p. 1422.

V. 57,000*l.*—A. £3000

95. The iron ship M. S., 1,243 tons, off the south coast of Ireland, encountered a very severe gale, and lost her foretopmast and fore main and mizen topgallant masts; the second mate was killed, and six seamen disabled. The steamer E., 300 tons, ninety-eight nominal h.-p., with cargo and passengers, towed her in six hours to Queenstown, a distance of eleven miles. The tow ropes broke in the course of the service, and the E. incurred some danger in securing them. The crank pin of the engine was broken, and the E. was detained six days to repair and coal. The Mary Stenhouse, 8 Ir. Jur. N.S. 58.

V. 115,000*l.*—A. £3000

96. In April, the screw steamer P., 1,882 tons nett register, with engines 212 h.-p. nom., from Liverpool to New York, with eighty hands, 770 passengers, and a general cargo, in lat. 46° 47' N. and long. 39° 26' W., broke her propeller shaft and disabled her engines. She proceeded under sail through a heavy sea, the wind blowing a fine breeze from N.N.E. In answer to signals the screw steamer C. of B., 1,222 tons nett, 1,726 tons gross register, value £54,000, from New York to Bristol with American produce, 100 head of cattle, and twenty-seven hands, came up, and by agreement took her in tow, after some trouble, towards Halifax, but the coal threatening not to last out, by consent of the master of the P. took her to St. John's, which was reached in about two days. By these services the C. of B. was delayed nine days. The Palmyra, M. M. R. July 8, 1881, p. 841.

V. 39,690*l.*—A. £3000

97. In March, the screw steamer S., 1,060 tons gross, was discovered about lat. 48° 20' N. and long. 7° 20' W., by the screw steamer G., 778 tons gross, with her crew throwing cargo overboard and in a sinking state. The wind was blowing fresh from the S.S.W., and there was a heavy S.W. swell. After much danger and difficulty two hawsers were made fast. The G. then began to tow ahead slowly, got the head of the S. round, and towed her N.E. towards Falmouth. After brsaking the hawser three times she was, in forty-six hours, got to about six miles S.W. by S. of St. Anthony's Light. Here a pilot was got, and she was towed into Falmouth, with fourteen feet of water in her hold. The Santorin, M. M. R. June 1, 1877, p. 691.

V. 15,200*l.*—A. £3000

98. In October, the S., full-rigged ship, 1,176 tons register, struck on the Middle Mouse, with her head on the rocks and her stern afloat, with a list to starboard, and the sea breaking over her, during a moderate W.S.W. gale, with a heavy sea, at nearly low water. In this position, being left by her crew, she was found by the tug G. W., 300 tons and 130 h.-p., value £13,000, which had received information of her state from the tug K., then engaged in towing another vessel, but which left her tow to give the information. With great difficulty the captain of the G. W. and two men went ashore in a boat from the tug, and found that the ship's lamps, cabin furniture, and other effects had been removed from her. Shortly afterwards she began to thump heavily on her port bilge. The G. W. sent off a boat with three hands, which made fast a 9-in. towing hawser, and the tug then began to tow the ship. A second hawser of thirteen inches was afterwards passed to the ship, and she was towed to Liverpool during a hurricane. The services lasted four days. £60 to the K., £25 to the mate who boarded the S., £40 to two seamen, £2,875 to the G. W. The Sarah, M. M. R. Jan. 18, 1878, p. 76.

99. The S., derelict, was in a state of imminent danger, with her port holes and her scuttles open, three feet of water in her hold, and making water fast. The A., value £140,000, one of the salvors, came to the S., but was not strong enough to perform salvage service alone, and therefore agreed with the A. A. that the salvage should be shared by them equally, the A. A. being a large vessel and having a more numerous crew. Some of the A. A.'s and A.'s crews were put on board the S., and the vessel was conveyed into port, a distance of some fourteen or fifteen miles. The Scindia, M. M. R. September 8, 1866, p. 1136; L. R. 1 P. 100. The steamboat T. P. L. was aground, and extensively on fire in her hold, about sixty miles above New Orleans, when the steamboat R., provided with an extra steam-engine to furnish steam and water for extinguishing fires, came to her assistance, and took off her passengers and the cargo that had been got on deck. Finally Captain Montgomery, of the R., by great ingenuity, activity, hazard of life, and perseverance, seconded and aided by six or seven others, succeeded in extinguishing the fire and in saving the boat and part of her cargo, in a damaged condition. *The T. 101. In December, the screw steamer V., 3,019 tons gross, schooner-rigged, with 145 hands, fifteen passengers, mails, and a general cargo, from Hong Kong for London, lost her propeller when in lat. 17° 33' N., and long. 40° 17' E., in the Red Sea. The weather was fine with a moderate breeze. She was under sail making four knots when the screw steamer St. B., 2,222 tons gross, thirty-three hands, cargo wheat, from Kurrachee for Cardiff, value £56,000, sighted her, and by request, after much difficulty, took her in tow. Two hawsers were required. During the towage the starboard quarter-bits of the St. B. were carried away, and the passengers and mails were transferred from the V. After a towage of 830 miles, lasting six days, and involving three days' delay to the St. B., the V. was got into Suez Bay. The Verona, M. M. R. March 28, 1884, p. 198.

102. In February, the screw steamer V., 1,843 tons nett, which had broken her rudder-post and started some of the plates from the stern-posts, being unmanageable and unable to steer, was taken in tow some 150 miles E. of Malta, by the screw steamer L., 1,035 tons nett, valued at £91,000, and not without difficulty and some damage, brought after four days' and eleven hours' towing into Alexandria. The Viceroy, M. M. R. February 18, 1876, p. 204.

V. 150,000*l.* A. £3000

103. In December, the screw steamer V., 1,362 tons gross and 876 tons nett, from Liverpool and Marseilles to Zanzibar with passengers and a general cargo, went ashore off Ras Alutch, on the African coast of the Gulf of Aden, about thirty-one miles W. of Cape Guardafui, in the territory of Sultan Yusouf Ben Ali, a local chief of the Somalis, and, after eleven days, was abandoned by her master, passengers, and crew, who proceeded to Zanzibar and Aden. H.M.S. D., at the request of the agent of the Liverpool Salvage Association, set out with a dhow with seventy coolies on board, and found the V., lying on her port bilge at an inclination of ten degrees, with five and a-half feet of water at her bow, and nine feet at her stern at low water, and with her keel buried four feet in the sand. The weather was very hot, and the stench from the bilge most oppressive. The discharge pipes, and every particle of copper or brass on board, had been removed by the Somalis. After ten days' work she was got off, and to Aden. The Vortigern, M. M. R. March 5, 1880, p. 305.

V. 8,455*l.*—A. £3000

104. The ship M. was ashore on Loo Key Reef. Three wrecking vessels of the aggregate tonnage of 211 tons, carrying thirty-nine men, lightened the ship of about thirty tons of cargo and about sixty tons of stone ballast. They laboured incessantly from four o'clock in the afternoon to six o'clock the next morning, when they hove the vessel off. The Mississippi, Files of Court, 1840, cited in Marvin, 215. [American.] Value 20,000*l.*—Award £2939

105. A derelict timber ship, of 600 tons, 300 leagues from shore, was, by great exertions and risk, towed by H.M.'s gun-brig V. to Plymouth. The Reliance, 2 Hagg. 90, n. V. 5,668*l.*—A. £2834

106. The steamer G. fell in with the P., a large barque, derelict, and towed her to Bridlington after two days' severe labour, assisted by captain and four foreign seamen, passengers on board the steamer; but a deduction was made for erroneously taking her into the harbour. The Perla, S. G. April 7, 1857; Swabey, 231. V. 15,000*l.*—A. £2800

107. The St. N., of 797 tons, with a general cargo and 140 passengers, when 120 miles to the west of Scilly encountered a storm which carried away nearly all her masts and rigging, and did her other damage, and she was in some danger. The master put the ship about and worked her up channel for three days. A steam collier, with some difficulty and strain to her engines, towed the St. N. from off the Start to Portland in twenty-two hours. The St. Nicholas, S. G. Feb. 13, 1860; 1 Lushington, 29. V. 52,000*l.*—A. £2800

108. The barque P., 400 tons, shortly after leaving Liverpool was run into, and sustained so much damage that her crew abandoned her. The schooner A. fell in with her about four miles from the Calf of Man, drifting towards the rocks. She turned her head, and took her in tow towards Liverpool, for which there was a fair wind. Half-an-hour afterwards the steamer P., which had been chartered to go out in search of the barque, came up and took possession of her. The A. was 75 tons, and manned by six hands, three of whom she put on board the barque. The tug towed the barque for fourteen or fifteen hours. £2,000 to the P., £700 to the A. The Pickwick, S. G. June 9, 1852; Nov. 19, 1852; 16 Jur. 669. V. 32,900*l.*—A. £2700

109. In October, the screw steamer S., 2,484 tons gross, from Japan and the China Seas to New York, with tea and general cargo, was found by the screw steamer Lady A., 2,066 tons gross, value £83,000, with thirty-one hands, and a valuable cargo, in the Red Sea, drifting, and disabled by her propeller shaft having broken and damaged her stern tube. The Lady A. stayed by the S. till next morning, when a hawser was made fast, and she was towed (the utmost possible speed being six miles an hour) through an increasing wind and sea to near the Newport Rock lightship, where both vessels anchored on the 20th, and next day the Lady A. took the S. to the Suez docks, having towed her 700 miles in six days, and sustained damage by straining during the service. The Sussex, S. G. March 13, 1885, p. 166. V. 153,000*l.*—A. £2700

110. The ship Y. was ashore on Viper Key shoal. Three wrecking vessels, with forty-two men, lightened her, carried out an anchor, and hove her off. The York, 3 A. R. 317, cited in Marvin, 214. [American.] V. 19,000*l.*—A. £2700

111. The ship V., 1,336 tons register, with cotton, was lying in the River Mersey abreast the Woodside landing-stage, anchored by starboard and best bower anchors, with sixty fathoms of cable, and in charge of a Liverpool pilot. A gale was blowing from S. to S.S.E., which increased to a hurricane, and there was a heavy sea, the tide being about half-an-hour ebb and fast running down. She began to drive, her starboard chain parted, and she dragged rapidly down the river with wind and tide. The ship was in very great danger. Two steam-tugs, C. No. I. and C. No. II., took her in tow, and with great difficulty and some danger took her safely into Birkenhead Docks. The Vanguard, M. M. R. June 9, 1866, p. 721. V. 121,172*l.*—A. £2570

112. The steamer A., 1,040 tons, encountered a tremendous gale, and was extensively damaged. The water extinguished the fires, and stopped the engines. The master, first and third engineers, carpenter, and a seaman were washed overboard and drowned, and the ship drifted towards the coast of Cornwall. The weather having moderated, the steamer Q., 350 tons, 170 h.-p., took her in tow and towed her to Padstow Harbour, in entering which the A. struck on the Doombar Sand, and was left by the Q. The A. was got off and anchored in the harbour by assistance from the shore. Services lasted about six hours. The African, S. G. July 19, 1860. Value 158,867*l.*—Award £2500

113. In March, in lat. 45° 36' N., and long. 23° 17' W., 675 miles to the W. of the Fastnet, the schooner-rigged steamer A., 1,188 tons register, from the Tyne to New York, with a general cargo, broke her propeller shaft in the stern tube during a gale. She lay-to till the weather moderated, when sail having been set, she wore round and was put on a course for the nearest port on the Irish coast, and proceeded under sail with variable winds. When she was about 200 miles from Queenstown, the screw steamer M., 2,270 tons register, and 200 h.-p. nom., from Hull to New York, eighty-five hands, and a general cargo, bore down on her, kept by her till daylight, then got a hawser from the A. shackled on to the port cable of the M. secured for the purpose, and commenced to tow towards Queenstown. There was a strong breeze blowing, and the sea was rough. The towing lasted thirty-six hours, the hawser having parted once in the course of it, owing to the rolling of the vessels. The M. was delayed six days, and incurred expenses amounting to £500. Her value with cargo and freight was £67,559. The Azalea, M. M. R. July 2, 1880, p. 848. V. 40,407*l.*—A. £2500

114. The barque E., 751 tons, was fallen in with off Caldy Island, derelict, and in a position of imminent peril, by the steamer A. V., 422 tons, which took the barque in tow, and after some difficulty, from the state of the weather and from the hawser parting, brought her up off the Mumbles Light. The Eliza, S. G. July 22, 1863. V. 10,632*l.*—A. £2500

115. In December, the Dutch bomb W. B., the smacks A., W. and A., and F., and the steam-tug R., at some peril to themselves, rendered aid at sea to the G. K., 808 tons, which was in great danger, not only to herself but to other vessels, and had made a considerable quantity of water. The A. was of essential service in steering, as well as towing, the G. K. The George Kendall, M. M. R. May 16, 1868, p. 627. V. 8,600*l.*—A. £2500

116. In February, the steamship H., 714 tons register, from London for Calcutta with a general cargo, was in a disabled state in the Straits of Jubal in the Red Sea, three miles from the northernmost coral reef, and four miles from the Ushruffer Lighthouse, her propeller being adrift, from the keys of it having come out. The steamer S., from London for Bombay with general cargo of the value of £140,000, took her in tow to Suez, a distance of 130 miles, and left her there in safety. The Hotspur, M. M. R. Dec. 23, 1870, p. 1649. V. 77,000*l.*—A. £2500

117. In October, the steamer M., 1,356 tons nett, 2,085 tons gross, from Manilla to the United States with sugar, having lost three out of four blades of her propeller, was discovered steaming slowly in the Red Sea in calm weather by the screw-steamer A. D., 1,107 nett, 1,708 tons gross register, from Bushire to London with wheat, dates, and tobacco, and by her towed to Suez, 512 miles distant. The A. D. was delayed forty-eight hours, had twenty fathoms of her hawser, and 120 fathoms of running-gear chafed and rendered useless, and her engines heated and strained. The Marian, M. M. R. Feb. 9, 1883, p. 177. V. 65,823*l.*—A. £2500

118. In November, the British steamer P., with a general cargo, was disabled and stranded on the north end of Jibbelzughur, in the Red Sea. The British steamer H. A. from Newcastle to Singapore with coals and general cargo, fell in with her, and succeeded in saving the greater part of her cargo to the value of £28,000. The services lasted forty-seven days. The Penguin, M. M. R. 1882, p. 941; sub nom. Hong Ann. V. 28,000*l.*—A. £2500

119. In February, the steamer P., schooner-rigged, 2,239 tons gross, from Port Said to Kurrachee, with thirty hands, in water ballast, got hard and fast aground on Sintyar Reef, and was leaking. The Italian war vessel V. tried for two days to get her off but failed. The master and crew of the P. then deserted her, and she remained aground for eight or nine days. The steam-tug M., value £3,200, left Perim to succour the P., and the master of the M. persuaded the master and eleven hands of the P. to return. After four days the leak was discovered and stopped with materials fetched from Perim by the M., and in three days more by heaving on hawsers from the port bow the P. was got off, taken next day to Perim Harbour and there beached for repairs. The M. ran considerable risk, twice touching on a reef during the service, which lasted eight days. The Pharos, S. G. June 19, 1885, p. 391. Value 25,000l.—Award £2500

120. In March the steamer S. was discovered in the Bay of Biscay, off Cape Finisterre, bearing S. about seventy miles, hove-to under canvas, by the steamer G., 3,036 tons gross, value £72,000, from Penarth to Singapore, with sixty-three hands and coals, and about 5 a.m. was taken in tow towards Lisbon for three or four days in a gale with a heavy sea, and the weather during part of the time being very bad. One hawser broke, but was made fast again. To avoid a lee-shore the S. had to be towed forty miles to seaward to get a larger offing, after which the G. lost the S., but still went in pursuit of her. Meanwhile, however, the steamer Isle of F., 1,600 tons gross, value £23,000, from Genoa to Bilbao in ballast, came up about thirty miles N.W. of Cape Rocca, found the S. helpless and unmanageable in the trough of the sea, and took her in tow to Lisbon. There was a brisk S.W. gale with squalls and a heavy sea. £1,700 to the G., £800 to the Isle of F. The Scaramanga, S. G. August 1, 1884, p. 487. V. 21,000l.—A. £2500

121. The steamer B., of 156 tons, fell in off Strumble Head with the barqus S. W. derelict, disabled, and in danger of going on shore on the rocky and dangerous coast in the vicinity. The B. towed the S. W. into Holyhead Harbour, a distance of seventy-five miles. The Sea Wave, S. G. March 12, 1860. V. 6,963l.—A. £2500

122. The barque S. H. P. having got upon a coral reef near the Island of Gaspar, was in a very dangerous position, and the neighbourhood was infested by pirates. The T. having seen her signals of distress, bore down to her, stayed by her during the night, and lent her fire-arms and ammunition, and the next day, by laying out anchors, succeeded in getting her off. The Sir Henry Pottinger, S. G. May 18, 1854. V. 37,611l.—A. 2500

123. In March the screw steamer T., 1,036 tons nett, 1,598 gross, from Alexandria to Antwerp, had broken her propeller-blades, and had been in tow of another steamer for three days, but owing to the heavy weather the other steamer had abandoned her. She was drifting to westward, and rolling heavily in the trough of the sea which was breaking over her after-deck, in about lat. 46°55' N., long. 8°37' W., when found by the steamer B., 2,182 tons gross, 1,399 nett, value £95,202, from Liverpool to Lisbon, with general cargo, four passengers, Brazil mails, and forty-two hands. With great difficulty and risk of collision a hawser was got on board, but it was too rough and dark to do anything that night but stand by the ship. The B. towed the T. for three days 490 miles to Lisbon harbour. The Tagliaferro, S. G. July 31, 1885, p. 486. V. 26,805l.—A. £2500

124. The ship S., of 580 tons, with a crew of fifteen hands, 100 miles off Ushant fell in with a large ship, the R. M. M. damaged and derelict. The mate and two hands worked her into Victoria Docks, London. The services were attended with considerable danger. The mate employed a pilot, a tug, and five men. Services lasted about thirteen days. The R. M. Mills, S. G. July 28, 1854. V. 4,950l.—A. £2475

125. In May the ship A. B., 1,413 tons, from Rangoon for London with 21,300 bags of rice, 800 bundles of rattans, and other cargo, took the ground on the Dungeness shore. The wind was blowing hard from the W.S.W., the weather clear, and there was a nasty surf breaking on the shore. After several attempts a rope was got from the tug V., 100 h.-p. nominal, which began towing. The tugs M. and R. came up shortly, and in about two hours the three tugs got her off, and into deep water. The Aros Bay, M. M. R. July 6, 1877, p. 850. V. 36,000l.—A. £2400

126. In January, the screw steamer H. 1,060 tons, from Baltimore to Sharpness, with wheat, broke her lower press crank shaft in the main bearing. In seven days she made over 300 miles under canvas. When 138 miles to the N. of Bermuda she signalled for assistance to get into the harbour. In answer to these signals the screw steamer Historian, from New Orleans for Liverpool, with cotton, oilcake, &c., and a crew of thirty-three hands, value £80,000, came up, and agreed to tow the H. into the harbour. There was a gale blowing S.W. by W. with a high sea, and dark, rainy weather. In rounding-to, to come up to the H., a heavy sea struck the Historian's rudder, carried away her bridge steering gear, and parted the wheel chains. After repairing these damages the Historian made fast a hawser, and commenced to tow through increasingly bad weather till five p.m. on the 22nd, when, whilst shortening the scope of the towing hawsers, the bight of both of them fouled the rocks and stuck fast, causing them to part from the Historian. After failing to get another hawser made fast, the starboard anchor was let go, and the Historian stood by the H. all night. It was two days before a Government tug could bring the H. into harbour. The Historian was delayed six days. The Horace, M. M. R. May 16, 1884, p. 310. Value 32,000*l.*—Award £2400

127. The steamer C. from Macao with a general cargo for London, in March, when some 187 miles from the Lizard encountered bad weather, lost her rudder, and was making much water, having in vain attempted to ship a jury rudder. She was fallen in with by the schooner A. G., which stayed by her five days and towed her, sustaining considerable damage and loss in doing so. When the two vessels came in sight of Waterford Light, the steamer D. went to their assistance, and towed the C. for some way, but not being powerful enough, was sent for assistance, and on her way met the steamer T., whose master telegraphed to the owners of the steamer C. to send that vessel, of which he took command, leaving the T. in charge of a pilot. The Waterford steamer G., for Waterford from Bristol with troops, fell in with the C. at anchor, flying signals of distress, and with the schooner still hanging on astern, and towed her to Waterford Harbour, the C. attending, but not helping to tow. The T. made fast on the port side of the C., and the steam-tug W. W. made fast on the C.'s starboard side. The C. was safely brought to anchor off the Spit of Passage, and as she had only one anchor, the W. W. stayed by her until the afternoon of the next day. The A. G. sustained damage to the amount of £200, and loss by detention to the amount of £335. To the A. G. £1,500, for her damages and detention £535, to the G. £150, to the W. W. £70, to the D. £50, to the T. £50, to the C. £35. The Chetah, M. M. R. Dec. 28, 1867, p. 1648. On appeal (P. C.), M. M. R. Dec. 19, 1868, p. 1617; L. R. 2 P. C. 205. V. 50,000*l.*—A. £2390

128. In February, the ship C., 1,148 tons, from Pensacola to Greenock, with pitch pine, was found abandoned and disabled in lat. 48° N. long. 27° W., about 800 miles W. of Queenstown, the wind being N.E. and a heavy sea running, by the steamer T., 2,693 tons register, from New Orleans for Liverpool, with a general cargo and passengers. The C. had lost her rudder, her mainyard, and lower topsails, and had her upper fore and main topsails split. The main hatch was broken, and her fresh-water tank full of salt water; her port pump was out of order, and there was 4 ft. 6 in. of water in her hold. Hands from the T. were put aboard, a steel hawser made fast, and towing began, but the hawser soon parted. A volunteer crew were then put aboard to sail her into port. A jury rudder was constructed, and the C. was got under command; the water had risen to 7 ft. 6 in. and all hands had to work the pumps. Next day, as the C. was drifting to N.E., the bowsprit and head-gear had to be secured. A fresh gale with heavy squalls sprang up. The two next days were rough with strong variable winds, and the C. became unmanageable. The donkey-pump became choked with salt, and the C. began to make three inches of water per hour, which in two days, the wind having increased to a hurricane, rose to eight feet in the hold. A week later, the weather having moderated, on the 9th the C. was in lat. 52° 19' N. and long. 17° 30' W. For the next five days the winds were ahead, from S.E., and weather moderate. On the sixth day she was struck by a heavy sea and lost a steering-gear bolt, and on the next was veered to southward. The crew were for three days on short rations. Provisions were obtained from the I. In ten days the S.W. coast of Ireland was sighted, and next day the C. was towed into Monkstown and brought up by her anchors in Queenstown harbour. The crew of the T. remained on board pumping and repairing her gear for another week, when she was handed over to the underwriter's representative. The value of the T., her cargo, and her freight was 117,000*l.* £150 to crew left on board. The Craigs, M. M. R. June 25, 1880, p. 808; 5 P. D. 186. V. 5,100*l.*—A. £2300

129. The J. B. struck on a rock near Harwich, was much damaged, and deserted by her crew. Two smacks got her off, when she sunk; six other smacks by great exertions during five weeks weighed her, and took her into Harwich. The services were very meritorious. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 323. V. 3,400*l.*—A. £2266

130. The ship G. D. was found derelict, and after being towed for 600 miles by the J. P., was taken into Lisbon. The George Deane, S. G. December 8, 1857; Swabey, 290. Value 4,500*l.*—Award £2250

131. In October, the screw steamer, I., 814 tons register, and 98 h.-p., from Palermo for London with a general cargo, having broken her shaft, was taken in tow, off Ushant, by the screw steamer Italia, 788 tons register, 160 h.-p., nominal, bound for London from the Mediterranean with a general cargo. The I. was in danger of going on the Ushant rocks had the wind veered to N. The Italia also ran some risk in the towage, and broke two hawsers. The Ino, M. M. R. March 31, 1871, p. 401. V. 31,000*l.*—A. £2250

132. In March, the screw steamer A., from the Tyne to New York, with a general cargo, broke her propeller shaft when about 670 miles west of the Fastnets. She was wore round and proceeded under sail till within about 200 miles of Queenstown. The screw steamer M. then came up with her, and a hawser was made fast, but directly the towage commenced, the hawser parted. The 11-inch hawser of the M. was then bent on to the broken hawser and made fast, the towage was resumed, and the M. and the A. arrived in Queenstown Harbour two days afterwards. The Azalea, M. M. R. 1880, p. 848. V. 40,000*l.*—A. £2200

133. In October, the screw steamer E., 1,031 tons, from Trieste and Venice for London, with a cargo of wood, broke her shaft, and lost her propeller. In answer to her signals, the steamer Lady B., 459 tons register, 98 h.-p., nominal, value £18,050, from Cardiff for Valencia, with iron rails, came up. There was a high sea running, and a heavy swell. A boat was launched and sent to the E., two of the men being injured, and the mate nearly losing his life in launching it. On boarding, they found her helpless, unmanageable, and setting towards the land, her sails being useless. The tow-ropes of the E. were made fast on the Lady B., and for two days the Lady B. towed the E. towards the British Channel, both vessels rolling much and being washed by the high sea. When Ushant was sighted, a course was shaped for Plymouth. Next day a gale sprang up, which increased, with much rain, the two vessels were brought head to wind, and a course shaped for Cowes, which was reached in two days more. The Envoy, M. M. R. April 5, 1878, p. 437. V. 30,650*l.*—A. £2200

134. The ship F., outward bound, with a general cargo and ninety-five passengers, struck on the 3rd December, in a fearful gale, upon the Girdler Sand. At 9 p.m. the steam-tug A. left Ramsgate with the lifeboat N. in tow, but for several hours could not find the F. At 1 a.m. of the 4th they ascertained her position, and the lifeboat at great risk took off all the passengers, and put them on board the A., which conveyed them to Ramsgate. By order of the master of the F. an anchor and chain, weighing thirteen tons, was obtained at Ramsgate, and put on board the luggers C., thirty-four tons, and the L., eighteen tons, which, with the lifeboat's crew, in addition to their own on board, were towed out by the A., and anchored near the F. At daylight of the 5th the A. assisted two other tugs in endeavouring to tow the F. off the sand, but her services not being longer required, she returned to Ramsgate at about midday. In the evening the gale increased, and the luggers were ordered to proceed to the Nore, where they arrived on the 6th, and subsequently on the 12th they conveyed the anchor and chain to London, and returned to Ramsgate on the 14th. The ship having been taken by two tugs to London under a separate arrangement for remuneration. £700 to the A., £700 to the lifeboat, £800 to the luggers. The Fusileer, S. G. June 14, 1864. V. 54,500*l.*—A. £2200

135. In September, the steamer T. was in the trough of the sea, off the Isle of Wight. As she was heavily laden and her engines had broken down she could not get her head round. The steamer A. W., also heavily laden, came up and stood by for nine hours, after breaking two hawsers in trying to tow. Two fresh hawsers were then made fast, which however broke in two hours. The A. W. stood by for five or six hours, and at daylight recommenced towing. After ten hours the two hawsers again parted, although the weather had moderated. After standing by for five hours the A. W. once more commenced towing, and got the T. to an anchorage off Gravelines in five hours. The Tynemouth, M. M. R. February 29, 1884, p. 135.

139. In October, the iron screw steamer G. C., 1,539 tons nett, 300 nominal h.-p., was discovered by the screw steamer J. B., 945 tons nett, value £200,000, in lat. 40° N., and long. 9° 40' W., in a disabled state, with her propeller injured, her steam power absolutely, her steering power almost, useless, and one of her stern-posts greatly damaged. The wind was blowing strongly, and a heavy swell was running. The J. B. took her in tow and brought her to Lisbon, 110 miles, being delayed two days on her voyage by doing so. The Glamis Castle, M. M. R. April 16, 1875, p. 486.
V. 201,435*l.*—A. £2060

140. In April, the barque A. C., 356 tons, from Cochin for London with a general cargo, was bearded 110 miles S.W. of the Lizard, by the second mate and four men of the barque H. of the N., and found to be on fire. The H. of the N. towed her in three days to Plymouth. The Annie Comrie, M. M. R. December 2, 1865, p. 1520.
V. 14,000*l.*—A. £2000

141. A vessel in extreme danger, and during a very violent hurricane, was saved by several luggers and their crews by very meritorious exertions and skill. The Branken Moor, 3 Hagg. 373.
V. 10,500*l.*—A. £2000

142. In November, the screw steamer C. M., 1,489 tons, from Glasgow to Colombo, broke down about twenty-two miles from Cape Aden. The steamer K. E., 1,810 tons, from Amsterdam to Java with Dutch mails, passengers, and cargo, proceeded to her assistance, took her in tow, and on the following day arrived with her at Aden, where the C. M. was brought to a safe berth, having been towed ninety-one miles in all. The City of Mecca, The Times, May 5, 1881. V. 90,200*l.*—A. £2000

143. Salvage services were rendered to the C., on her voyage from Liverpool to Oporto, by the screw steamer C., which was detained thereby three or four days on her voyage. The Castilian, M. M. R. Feb. 29, 1868, p. 276.
V. 29,000*l.*—A. £2000

144. In April, the Spanish steamer C., 608 tons, from Liverpool for Bilbao with general cargo, was drifting towards the dangerous reef of Ushant, driven by a strong S.W. wind, and a strong flood tide, with her boiler burst and otherwise damaged. The Baron L., 612 tons, from Bordeaux, with wines, &c., for Antwerp, took her in tow, and, after much difficulty and some danger, brought her to Falmouth in twenty-six hours. The Clara, M. M. R. July 12, 1872, p. 881. V. 19,000*l.*—A. £2000

145. A vessel, with the "Cleopatra's Needle" obelisk on board, was abandoned in the Bay of Biscay. On the 15th October she was about 90 miles north-east of Ferrol on her beam-ends with her bridge awash, when she was found by the screw steamer F. of 297 tons register, bound for Valencia. Next morning a boat, with the chief officer and two men in a very heavy sea, put off, and the men boarded the C. at great risk, and got a deep sea-line fastened to the hawser of the F. with very great difficulty, arising from the C. having both a circular and a rolling motion, and from a portion of her old tow-line being fast under water. Some of the salvors, lashed by a rope to the sail, were often wholly submerged in the water in the process of clearing the obstacles. The F. then, towed by two hawsers, and after various minor adventures, brought the C. in safety to Ferrol on the 17th, after 52 hours' service. The Cleopatra, M. M. R. April 5, 12, 19, 1878, pp. 436, 468, 499; 3 P. D. 145; 47 L. J. Adm. 72.

Value 25,000*l.*—Award £2000

146. In August, the steamer C., with 150 passengers on board, and a valuable cargo, when 131 miles from New York, and 200 miles from Nassau, N. P., having her machinery disabled, was taken in tow by the steamer E., and in six days brought to her berth in New York. The E. somewhat damaged her cargo by the delay, but the C. was not in much danger, as she was fully brig-rigged and had sails. She had also provisions for eleven months, was in the line of other steamers, and got under sail within half an hour of the accident. The Colon (New York Adm. Co.), M. M. R. Oct. 18, 1878, p. 1332.
V. 50,000*l.*—A. £2000

147. In September, the three-masted schooner C., 1,580 tons, 150 h.-p., twenty-nine hands, from New Orleans for Liverpool, with general cargo, broke her propeller. Sail was set, and she made 80 miles per day in fair weather; in all, some 1,200 miles. After driving about for twenty-five days she was fallen in with by the Co., value £22,500, from Santander to Baltimore, with twenty-one hands and laden with iron in lat. 4° 20' N. and long. 27° 25' W. Hawsers were made fast with considerable difficulty, and the C. was towed for forty hours, and then anchored in safety in St. Michael's harbour. The Commander, M. M. R. Feb. 3, 1882, p. 141.
V. 53,046*l.*—A. £2000

148. In June, the Earl of E., from Calcutta to London, with a general cargo, drove ashore in a squall in Simon's Bay, Cape of Good Hope, and was in very great danger. H.M.S. F. and P. assisted her off, and she proceeded safely to London. The Earl of Eglinton, S. G., Dec. 6, 1855.
V. 84,500*l.*—A. £2000

149. In April, the four-masted iron sailing ship C. of A., 1,865 tons register, was discovered by the iron screw steamer P., 196 tons, from London to St. Nazaire, in the English Channel, about forty miles south-east of the Isle of Wight, lying helpless, and apparently sinking, with her head up Channel, having been greatly damaged in a collision, and though not in imminent danger of total loss, there was great risk to her if in her disabled condition she were exposed to bad weather. Hawsers were made fast, and the P. commenced to tow her to Spithead, where, after some hours towing, and under the direction of pilots taken aboard, the C. of A. was brought safely to anchor. The County of Aberdeen, M. M. R. July 13, 1883, p. 878.
V. 51,217*l.*—A. £2000

150. The F., 640 tons, laden with a general cargo, having in very tempestuous weather unshipped her rudder, was, when nearly 40 miles from the coast of Spain, abandoned by her master and crew. The same night she was taken charge of by the smack R. S., and on the following day was boarded by seventeen of the original crew of the F., including Neal, the chief mate, and Cowan and Fuller (apparently two others of her officers), and with the aid of the R. S. the F. was taken into Malpico Bay, where she lay for some days in considerable danger, but was finally conducted into Corunna harbour, on the 30th of December. Lloyds' despatched an agent to Corunna, who took charge of the F., and dismissed fourteen of her crew for alleged misconduct, but for their extra service to the ship gave them £20 each. £1,200 to smack, £500 to Neal, £300 to Cowan and Fuller. The Florence, S. G. Feb. 23, 1852, and May 14, 1852; 16 Jur. 578.
V. 16,000*l.*—A. £2000

151. In February, the iron ship G., with a general cargo, from Batavia for Rotterdam, about 6.30 p.m., when anchored in the Downs during a strong gale, parted from her starboard cable. The port bower anchor was then let go, but the cable soon parted; and as it was impossible to weather the South Foreland, her master, by the advice of the pilot, beached her close to the lifeboat station at Kingsdown after great difficulty. The salvors in the Kingsdown lifeboat succeeded in rescuing the master, his wife and child, and the crew of twenty-seven hands. Part of the cargo was subsequently discharged, and a week later the G. was got off, and taken into safety. The Glenduror, L. R. 3 P. C. 589.
V. 50,000*l.*—A. £2000

152. The H., of 3,800 tons, got on the outer edge of a mud bank in Banca Straits, and was in some danger. The ship G., of 693 tons, anchored near the H. and assisted in heaving her off. The services did not last long, but the G. ran some risk of being damaged. The Himalaya, S. G. November 3, 1859; Swabey, 517.

Value 107,497*l.*—Award £2000

153. The ship H. was twenty-five miles off Algoa Bay, with thirteen feet of water in her hold, her crew exhausted and a signal of distress flying. The ship Duke of R., 417 tons, twenty-four hands, with a cargo valued at £20,000, took out of the H. her crew, teas and silks, worth £7,000, and took them to St. Helena. The Duke of R. had to throw overboard some cargo to receive the goods. The Hope, 3 Hagg. 423. V. 7,000*l.*—A. £2000

154. The M. was abandoned by her crew near Llandudno Bay; the wind was blowing hard from N.W., and there was a probability of the M. driving on the West Hayle Bank, and becoming a total wreck. The steam-tug C. placed some hands on board, and towed her into Liverpool. Services from 9.30 a.m. to 7 p.m. The Majestas, S. G. March 29, 1858. V. 16,000*l.*—A. £2000

155. The barque M. ran ashore upon Carysfort Reef. Three wrecking vessels lightened her by transhipping on board their vessels 456 bales of cotton, when she swung off the reef. The Manna, Marvin, 213. [American.] V. 12,000*l.*—A. £2000

156. The brigantine M. J., 134 tons, from Harbor Grace to Queenstown, with a cargo of oil, sealskins, old junk and rags, was deserted by her master and crew. She was found derelict, by the barque A., of New Ross; four of whose crew, volunteers, boarded the M. J., and after severe toil and labour brought her and her cargo safely into New Ross. The Margaret Jane (Dublin Adm. Co.); M. M. R. Nov. 10, 1866, p. 1425. V. 5,628*l.*—A. £2000

157. In April, the screw steamer M., 2,287 tons, and 300 h.-p., from Malta for Liverpool, with a general cargo, grain and cotton, when in the Mediterranean Sea had broken her main-shaft some nine inches from her stern-posts, and fired rockets and blue lights for assistance. These signals were seen by the screw steamer R., 469 tons register, 90 h.-p., from Grimsby to Galatz, with iron bridge work. She immediately went to the assistance of the M., lay by her all night, and the next morning towing commenced. The tow-rope broke the R.'s steam winch. The M., dragging her propeller, could not be steered properly, and going first on one side and then on the other of the R., made it dangerous for the man at the R.'s wheel on the poop. Next day the R.'s maintopmast was struck. On the third day it blew a gale, and the R.'s cargo twice broke adrift in the hold. The M. forging ahead, when the R. stopped to repair the chafing-gear of the tow-rope, caused the R. to become girted on her port-bow, and made it difficult for her to regain her position for towing. On the 4th day the weather moderated, and the cargo of the R. was secured. On the fifth day the M. was brought into Algiers. The R. was detained at Galatz seven days in consequence of having rendered this service to the M. The Memphis, M. M. R. February 12, 1870, p. 210. V. 160,000*l.*—A. £2000

158. In February, the steamer M., with cargo and passengers, when going down the Mersey, struck on the screw-fan of the steamer W., which was about to anchor; the starboard side of the M. was torn open, and the water rushed in, put out the fires and drowned one of the firemen. Being thus in danger of sinking in deep water, she was rescued by the steam-tugs K. C., R. L., F. K., and E., and beached between Seacombe and Egremont. The services lasted about twenty minutes. Some of the passengers got on board the E., and were landed at Prince's Landing-Stage. £600 to the E., £700 to the K. C., £500 to the F. K., £200 to the R. L. The Morocco, M. M. R. June 9, 1871, p. 719. V. 100,000*l.*—A. £2000

159. In February, the ship O., 1,282 tons register (12 days out), from Plymouth to New Zealand, with 310 emigrants, 48 hands, and a general cargo, having lost her topmast and topgallant masts, with the yards attached, and been obliged by stress of weather to put back, was met by the screw steamer T., 526 tons nett register, from Androssan to St. Nazaire, with 15 hands, and pig-iron, about 6 miles N.N.W. of the Longships in the Bristol Channel, and taken in tow after several fruitless efforts to get a line on board. The hawser broke twice, but eventually the T. piloted the O. round Lundy Island, when a hawser was again made fast, and in twenty-six hours she was brought to a safe anchorage in the Penarth Roads. The Oxford, M. M. R. June 15, 1883, p. 750. V. 35,000*l.*—A. £2000

160. In March, the screw steamer O., 1,224 tons nett, and 1,879 tons gross register, from Liverpool to Alexandria, thirty-three hands, ten passengers, and a general cargo, in lat. 37° 40' N., long. 7° 30' E., broke the piston-rod of her high-pressure engine at the cross head, and the cylinder cover was blown off and broken, the engine thereby becoming useless. The wind was fresh from the W.; and all sail being set, the O. made 2½ knots. The ship could not gather enough way to allow the low-pressure engine to work, so she could not be kept to the wind, and she became unmanageable in the trough of the sea. The screw steamer S., 959 tons nett, 1,417 tons gross register, 140 h.-p. nom., value £22,630, with a crew of twenty-five, and coals from Cardiff to Malta, bore down on the O. and agreed to tow her to Malta. She stopped by the O. till next morning on account of the high tide running, and a hawser was then made fast. A heavy sea and a gale from the N. caused the ropes to part, but they were again made fast, and the weather moderating, the O. was again got into tow. After a towage in rough and squally weather, during which the rope again parted once, the O. was got safely to the Great Harbour of Valetta in three days. The Osiris, M. M. R. July 14, 1882, p. 877. Value 67,981l.—Award £2000

160a. In November, the screw steamer P., from Bombay to Antwerp with wheat, broke her shaft, and being rigged lightly as a schooner, was not under control, and had drifted eight miles out of her course away from the track of vessels. The screw steamer T., value £125,600, 1,667 tons nett, 280 h.-p., from Alexandria to Liverpool, with a crew of thirty-eight hands, two passengers, and a general cargo, took the P. to Valetta Harbour, which was reached in four days. The wind light. No danger to the T. The Pallion, M. M. R. April 6, 1882, p. 429. V. 41,341l.—A. £2000

161. In November, during a hurricane, the full-rigged ship P., 879 tons, with twenty-six passengers on board, drove from her anchors in the Downs forty or fifty miles to the neighbourhood of the Galloper Sands. She was in great distress, having lost two anchors and some sails, and signalled for assistance, in answer to which the tug C., fifty-four tons nett, and 209 tons gross register, with engines of 100 h.-p. nom., working up to 400 actual, came up, and after forty hours' towing, which required great courage and patience, extricated her from her difficulties. The Parrora, M. M. R. Dec. 30, 1881, p. 1648. V. 48,500l.—A. £2000

162. The French brig P., 161 tons register, laden with wool, was run into when off Ushant by the M. Her left bow was driven in, all the gear in the neighbourhood carried away, and she was in imminent danger. She was flying signals of distress, when the steamer B., of 1,142 tons nett register, 140 h.-p., from Alexandria to Liverpool, came in sight. She towed the P. for two days, in moderate weather, and brought her to St. Mary's, Scilly. The Paul, M. M. R. Feb. 24, 1866, p. 239. V. 10,327l.—A. £2000

163. In January, the steamer P. C., from London to Calcutta, with twenty-nine hands and general cargo, was driving through the Downs and approaching the Brake Sand during a gale with a heavy sea. The tugs L. W. and R. came up, and after one or two ineffectual attempts made fast and got the head of the P. C. round. After some five hours' towage, during which the tugs came into collision, and the L. W. suffered damage, the P. C. was got to Prince's Channel, when the wind increased to a hurricane, and it being impossible to make headway, the tugs anchored with steam up. Next morning the weather moderated, and the P. C. was brought to Gravesend. The services lasted fifty-nine hours. The Pembroke Castle, M. M. R. March 22, p. 365. V. 33,000l.—A. £2000

164. The ship R., 661 tons, with bale goods for the Mediterranean, after a collision with the screw steamer C., 816 tons register, in the river Mersey, in January, began to settle down. The tug E. took her in tow and beached her between Egremont and New Brighton. As she touched the beach the water was on her decks, and as she beached she sank. The Rosetta, M. M. R. April 20, 1867, p. 497. V. 42,889l.—A. £2000.

165. In January, the St. P., 814 tons, was in very great peril at the mouth of the Mersey, and her crew were taken off by the lifeboat, but they did not intend to leave her derelict. Two powerful tugs found her and took her to Liverpool. The St. Petersburg, S. G., May 5, 1843. V. 20,000l.—A. £2000

166. In April, the barque Sir J., with iron and coal, was in distress and signalling for assistance, some 200 or 300 miles from Falmouth. The screw steamer A., 1,111 tons register, from Alexandria for Liverpool, with cotton and grain, fell in with the barque in a very crippled state, with her foremast-head and three topmasts gone, her lower yards and sails all adrift, and rolling fearfully. There was a schooner hove-to under her lee, taking off her crew. The A. hove-to, and a boat from the barque brought some of her crew on board the A. The men refused to go back and fetch the master, mate and one of the crew of the barque who were left behind, and they were subsequently rescued by the steamer's crew. The first and second mates, the carpenter, and five of the A. hands then boarded the barque, which had six feet of water in the hold, and making fast the spars, &c., which were all adrift, rigged one of the pumps and set it going. With great difficulty a hawser was got on board the barque, and after two hawsers had parted, she was towed into Falmouth three days afterwards. The Sir James, M. M. R. March 27, 1869, p. 402.

Value 7,000*l.*—Award £2000

167. In November, the barque V. of N., in the Queen's Channel, broke the hawser with which she was being towed, drifted and grounded on the Little Burbo Bank. The tug S. K. fetched the lifeboat, and her crew were, after much difficulty, taken off. Two of the lifeboat's crew, at a great risk, got on board. By their aid two hawsers, bent one on another, were made fast to the barque, and, with the aid of the K. E. and the R., she was towed safely off the bank to an anchorage off New Ferry. £1,100 to the R., £900 to the K. E. The Vale of Nith, M. M. R. Jan. 31, 1873, p. 145.

V. 32,000*l.*—A. £2000

168. In July, the iron screw steamer V., 2,810 tons, from Hamburg to New York, with a general cargo and 1,000 emigrants, off the west coast of Scotland, became unmanageable, from her engines breaking down, and was drifting with the ebb tide on to the land, about five miles distant. She was out of the ordinary track of steamers. The Russian barque C., value £3,300, 336 tons register, with twelve hands, from Finland to Troon, passed two hawsers to her, and towed her till she was in a position of comparative safety, about eight miles from the shore. The V. was in a disabled state, and unable to steer; the weather was thick and squally and the sea high. The hawsers having been cast off the C. proceeded towards Stornoway to obtain steam assistance. On the way the mail steamer E. was met, and the master of the C. boarded her, and after the mails and passengers had been landed, directed her to where the V. was. The E. took the V. in tow, and was subsequently aided by the tug C. Between them they got the V. to Stornoway. The master of the C. was away from his ship twelve hours, and owing to bad weather coming on the C. was delayed fourteen days. The Vandavia, M. M. R. Dec. 16, 1881, p. 1584.

V. 200,000*l.*—A. £2000

169. The brig W., from Cadiz to London, laden with wine and dismasted, was found by a schooner forty miles from Cadiz, and towed to Gibraltar in three days, with risk to the schooner's cargo, value £7,500. The Williams, S. G. Nov. 14, 1838.

V. 14,700*l.*—A. £2000

170. The barque F. A. E., laden with an assorted cargo, stranded on the American Shoal in tempestuous weather. A large pilot-boat schooner went to her, but the master was unable, on account of the tempestuous weather, to board her. He lay by her during the day. In the afternoon several other wrecking vessels arrived, and one of the masters boarded the wreck with much difficulty and personal danger. The next day, the weather having moderated, the wreckers commenced saving the cargo and materials. Four wrecking vessels, carrying forty-nine men, were employed. Sixty per cent. was allowed to a few small boats on small amounts saved by them by diving. The F. A. Everett, A. R. 617, cited in Marvin, 218. [American.]

V. 6,243*l.*—A. £1999

171. In March, the ship J. S. H., 543 tons, from Mobile to England with cotton, struck on some rocks in Westdale Bay. The screw steamer A. V., 422 tons register, from Holyhead to Britonferry with iron ore, entering the Broad Sound, descried her, with the pilot boat A. near her. The A. V. with great difficulty, owing to the vicinity of rocks, got a hawser to her, towed her clear of her dangerous position, and then continued to tow her till the hawser parted, as the J. S. H. had no rudder and therefore sheered. The steam-tug C. then began to assist the A. V., but her hawser was cut, and the A. V.'s hawser parted. The J. S. H. was finally conducted to an anchorage off Milford. The pilot boat alleged that she discovered the position of the J. S. H., and signalled to the A. V., and during the whole time of towage aided materially with advice. The owners admitted that the A. V.'s services were important, but considered the services of the C. very slight, and contended that the pilot's claim should be ignored altogether, as being not salvage services, but entirely within the scope of his pilotage duties. £1,500 to the A. V., £400 to the C., £60 to the A. The John S. Harris, M. M. R. 1866, p. 913. Value 27,000*l.*—Award £1960

172. In March, the steamer B., 822 tons, from Hull to Cetta, with nineteen hands and pitch cargo, was aground on the Shipwash Sand and signalling for aid. The lifeboat C. G., in tow of the tug C., was put off, and her crew, twenty-five in number, tried to get the B. off the sand, while the C. went to Harwich. Meanwhile the yawls J. and D. came up, and all hands commenced to jettison the cargo, but after four or five hours had to leave off owing to the high sea. The tug C. then returned, and lay near the B., whose crew were taken off by the yawls and the lifeboat. The C. remained by the B. for two and a half hours, and then left. Next day the yawl D. again went to the B., and her crew plugged a pipe, through which water was entering the engine-room, laid out their own anchor, and by heaving on it shifted the head of the B., and at high water hauled her into deeper water, where she floated, but the rope breaking, she drifted aground on the swatch. The J., the C., and the C. G. then came up, the D.'s anchor was recovered, made fast to a hawser, and with a kedje belonging to the B., laid out and hauled on with the assistance of a donkey-engine of the B., while all hands threw cargo overboard. The tug H. then came up and took hold of the B., while the C. took hold of the H., and after so towing for an hour and a quarter, the B. was got off, but her engine being useless, she was towed round by the tug H., assisted by another tug, the R. O., to the S. end of the Shipwash, with the C. G. alongside, and after four hours was got into Harwich Harbour. The Bedall, S. G. May 8, 1885, p. 294. V. 9,350*l.*—A. £1900

173. The steamship C., on a voyage from Liverpool to Oporto, on the 13th June, came up with the steamer D., with a signal of distress hoisted. She had lost her rudder, and was being imperfectly steered with a drag. The master of the D. boarded the C., and requested to be towed to Falmouth or Plymouth. The C., after some difficulty, arising from the parting of the hawsers and the thickness of the weather, succeeded in taking the D. into Falmouth Harbour, on the 15th. The C. lost four days by the deviation from her voyage. The Dido, S. G. November 16, 1863. V. 82,000*l.*—A. £1900

174. In May, the A., from Oporto to London with wine, found derelict on Land Sand off Essex, was assisted into Harwich Harbour by a revenue cutter and seven smacks. The Alert, S. G. July 30, 1846. V. 5,442*l.*—A. £1814

175. A derelict was found drifting in the Irish Channel, with between two and three feet water in her hold, and brought into Holyhead, by three salvors, part of a crew of six persons belonging to a small schooner, which discovered the derelict, and accompanied her back to Holyhead. The Carolina, 2 W. Rob. 124. V. 15,000*l.*—A. £1800

176. In December, the screw steamer E., 464 tons, from Oporto for London, with twenty hands, general cargo, and 100 cattle, broke her propeller in lat. 47 N. long. 7 W., the weather being cloudy and squally, with strong N.N.E. gale and heavy sea. Having failed to get into port under sail, she hove-to. On 16th December, her head between N.W. and W.N.W., her foretopsail and jib foretrysail set, forging ahead a little, but rapidly making leeway, she was found by the screw steamer C., 2,554 tons gross, value £92,000, from Calcutta to Dundee, with forty-three hands and a cargo of jute. The C. stood by the E. during a strong gale till next day, when, after considerable difficulty, the C. took her in tow for Plymouth, the gale still blowing hard and the sea heavy. The E. steered badly, ranging from two to three points each way. On the 18th the course was by agreement altered for the Downs, the weather having cleared. The towage continued till 20th; in all, 470 miles in seventy-five hours. The Egret, M. M. R. Feb. 15, 1864, p. 103. V. 37,109*l.*—A. £1800

177. In March, the ship E., 1,296 tons, from Sunderland for Macassar with coals, stranded hard and fast on the North Knowl of Hasborough Sand. The weather was fine, the tide half ebb, and the wind W.N.W. The E. was making water fast. She was boarded by the crew of the yawl S. (thirteen in all), who commenced throwing her cargo overboard, being aided by the crews of the yawls D. and F. An attempt to get her off, with the aid of the steamer H., failed. The discharging cargo continued for two days, when five tugs, who had been fetched or sent to the E., managed to get her off and to Yarmouth Jetty. 800 tons of cargo were got out of her. £1,000 to yawls, £800 to tugs. The Ernestin, M. M. R. July 2, 1875, p. 838.

Value 7,162*l.*—Award £1800

178. The ship G. C., when off the Azores, was dismasted, sustained other considerable damage from tempestuous weather, and was in very imminent danger. The schooner S., after a long and laborious service, succeeded in conducting her to Fayal. The Gibson Craig, S. G. January 22, 1857; and February 27, 1857.

V. 22,634*l.*—A. £1800

179. The Granada, 684 tons register, from Singapore for Liverpool, with a general cargo, when four days' sail from Chili, fell in with the barque G., of 473 tons register, bound from Chanaral to Swansea, laden with copper, and in distress; her master having jumped overboard while in a state of insanity, and her first and second mates having deserted her previously to her leaving Chanaral. The second mate of the Granada was, at the crew's request, put on board the G., and with great labour and difficulty brought her safely to Swansea in thirty-five days. The Golondrina, M. M. R. January 26, 1867, p. 117.

V. 26,000*l.*—A. £1800

180. In December, about seventy-seven miles S.W. by S. of Fastnet, the steamer L. O., 2,753 tons gross, 1,816 tons nett, with cotton, from Norfolk, Virginia, to Liverpool, broke her shaft and became unmanageable. The steamer N., 3,367 tons gross, 1,533 tons nett, 300 h.-p. nominal, thirty-two hands, from Liverpool to New York in ballast, towed her in two days to Queenstown harbour. The N. lost five days through the towage, and sustained damage by the breaking of hawsers, carrying away bits, and straining ballast bunker seams. The Lord O'Neil, S. G. Oct. 30, 1885, p. 697.

V. 110,454*l.*—A. £1800

181. In February, the iron screw steamship M., 1,210 tons gross, 823 tons nett, with a general cargo, 500 tons of silver ore, and twenty-eight hands, seven days out from New York for Liverpool, was found in about lat. 49°19' N. and long. 23°30' W. in a helpless condition drifting S.E. by the screw steamship H., 1,830 tons gross, 1,302 tons nett, 200 h.-p., nominal, working 1,000, value £45,680, from Liverpool to Belize, Progreso, Vera Cruz, and Tampico, with general cargo, two passengers, and thirty-five hands. The M. had become unmanageable, owing to a heavy sea and to her having disabled her rudder in a hurricane. The H. took the M. in tow, and after three or four days' difficult towing got her to off Queenstown, where the aid of tugs was obtained, and with great difficulty the M., which had driven some distance, was found and taken into Queenstown harbour. The H. was delayed five days, during which her captain only went off deck for meals. She incurred expenses to the amount of £163. The Memnon, S. G. July 31, 1885, p. 486.

V. 30,640*l.*—A. £1800

182. In January, the screw steamer S., 1,865 tons register and 250 h.-p., about 625 miles off Madeira, broke her main shaft. For four days efforts were made without success to sail her to Madeira. The screw steamer A., 1,066 tons nett register, then came up. The weather was bad, but the A. nevertheless took the S. in tow and in five days got her to Madeira, taking five days more to get back to her former position. The Statesman, M. M. R. May 7, 1880, p. 591.

V. 27,900*l.*—A. £1800

183. In November, the steamer T., with pig-iron, was lying in the trough of the sea about ten miles from, and driving on to, Walney Island. The fires had been put out, and the ship was settling down, when the steamer A., value £50,000, came up and succeeded in getting her into Barrow. The Tynedale, M. M. R. May 1, 1874, p. 560.

V. 12,000*l.*—A. £1800

184. The brig W. and M., 172 miles W. of Cape Clear, derelict, with 2½ feet water in her. The barque M., 1,534 tons, put her mate and six hands on board the brig, on the 27th of November, and they conducted her to Queenstown, where she arrived on the 1st of December. The owner of the M. proceeded to Queenstown and engaged a master and crew of runners to take the brig to London, and incurred certain expenses, which were allowed. The William and Mary, S. G. March 9, 1859.

Value 9,785*l.*—Award £1800

185. In May, the W., from Leghorn to St. Petersburg, got on the Long Sand, whence she was assisted off by H.M.S. B., and seven or eight smacks' crews (thirty-five men in all), and towed into Ramsgate. £1,000 to the B., £800 to the smacks. The Wilson, S. G., Jan. 13, 1841. V. 7,384*l.*—A. £1800

186. In January, the brig S., 325 tons, with linseed, was aground fore and aft on the Goodwin Sands. Two lifeboats and a steam-tug got her off, and she was taken to Ramsgate harbour. It was agreed to accept £1,757 for the services, and the salvors came to the court to have it apportioned. £850 to tug, £907 to lifeboats. The Sorri, M. M. R. June 9, 1871, p. 719. V. not stated.—A. £1757

187. In October, the iron vessel R., 422 tons gross register, from Glasgow to Vinaroy, in Spain, with iron rails, spikes, bolts, crossings, &c., deserted by the crew, and leaking, was found about twenty miles W.S.W. of Ushant by the steamer U., 575 tons, 90 h.-p., value £15,000, from Shields to Savona with coals. There was a moderate gale N.W. and a very heavy sea. The crew of the R., who, with her captain, were picked up by the U., refused to return to her. The U. kept near her for about two hours, when they lowered a boat, manned by the chief mate, second mate, and three men of the U., who got on board, and found she had a list to starboard, the water washed her deck, the cargo in the after-hold was adrift, the water in the engine-room was up to the furnace doors, and the pumps choked. A tow-line was got on board, and the U. towed her through a wind and sea growing heavier each hour for fourteen hours, when the tow-ropes broke, and she was lost sight of for an hour. The U. went to Plymouth for aid, and finding the tug B. N. in the Sound, sent her. The B. N., with the master of the U. aboard, found the R. brought up with two anchors, about five miles S.S.E. of Plymouth breakwater, and three and a half from Byburg Bay. The wind was blowing very heavily, and some difficulty was experienced in getting a tow-line on board. Ultimately she was brought safely into Plymouth Sound. The Rover, M. M. R. Feb. 14, 1879, p. 211. V. 6,100*l.*—A. £1700

188. The barque T., 778 tons register, from Liverpool to New York with a general cargo, parted from her anchors in bad weather, her fore and mainmasts were gone, and she was in danger of drifting on to the Little Burbo Bank. The steam-tug H. came up and took her in tow. Subsequently the R. A. arrived, and with the assistance of the two tugs the barque was docked. It was alleged that soon after leaving Liverpool, two days before, the master and second mate were drunk, and that the master never came on deck till two days after; that all the day before the shore lights were visible, but no one on deck could tell where the vessel was; that all hands were kept on deck, everything was in confusion, and spars and water-casks got adrift on the deck. £1,000 to the H., £700 to the R. A. The Twilight, M. M. R. Dec. 29, 1866, p. 1647. V. 18,000*l.*—A. £1700

189. In December, the Italian ship G. O., from New York for Queenstown with wheat, was fallen in with, derelict and waterlogged, about 117 miles from the Western Islands, and 1,100 miles from Queenstown, by the Liverpool vessel B. I.; the mate of which vessel, with seven men, contrived to bring the G. O. into Queenstown in eight days. The Guiseppina Oneto (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. April 17, 1874, p. 496. V. 9,289*l.*—A. £1670

190. H.M.S. H. fell in with the N., of 686 tons, much damaged and disabled, with eight or nine feet of water in her hold. She had a signal of distress flying, the wind blew strong, and there was a heavy sea. The first lieutenant with sixteen hands boarded her, and worked at the pumps. The H. towed her into Bermuda. There was considerable risk to those who boarded the N. The Norma, S. G. Nov. 3, 1860; 1 Lush. 127. V. 5,000*l.*—A. £1666

191. The troop transport ship, E. M., caught fire at Spithead. Three steam-tugs, a yacht, a pilot cutter, and four barges saved some of the cargo, and all the crew and passengers. The Eastern Monarch, S. G. April 19, 1860; 1 Lush. 84. V. 4,132*l.*—A. £1660

192. In February, the Dutch vessel G. V. S., with wood, tallow, and hides, during a thick fog, ran on the Beechy Head Ledge. 112 men were employed, and by their assistance the property was salvaged. The Gouverneur van Surieten, M. M. R. July 13, 1867, p. 883. Value 5,690*l.*—Award £1641

193. In August, the Italian brig G., from Marianople for Antwerp, with linseed, was found by the Norwegian barque R., with 528 Norwegian lasts, leaking fast and derelict, about sixteen miles S.E. of St. Catherine's Point, heading E. with the wind fresh from N.W. She had thirteen feet of water in the hold. A boat's crew from the R. boarded her, and shaped her course to E. of Selsea, to make Dover. The pilot-boat S. was engaged off the Owers, to pilot the G. into port for £15. The pilot at first shaped her course for Dover, but afterwards, in fear of her sinking, ran for Shoreham. When within half-a-mile of the harbour, the tug M. was engaged and towed her towards the harbour, on entering which she grounded, but got off and was taken into harbour safely. The pilot cutter, R., picked up eleven of her crew, and took them to Portsmouth. The Genitore-e-Figli, M. M. R. Dec. 21, 1877, p. 1619.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £1640

193*a.* In March, the screw steamer B., 1,627 tons nett, and 2,555 tons gross register, from Liverpool to Bombay, with a general cargo, got ashore on the Evora Reef, off the N. shore of Perim Island, in a position of great peril, aground for nearly her whole length on an uneven bed of coral, and hard and sharp rocks, and in danger of becoming a wreck if the wind blew from the north. After she had been some four or five hours in this position, the screw steamer G., 1,412 tons nett, and 2,165 tons gross register, and 250 h.-p., value £160,000, from China and Ceylon, for London, with 39 hands and general cargo, came up. A boat was sent out, and the B. was boarded by the captain of the G. After great difficulty a steel wire hawser was made fast to the end of a Manilla hawser of the B., which was then taken through the port quarter-pipe, and made fast to the G., which towed for seven hours till high tide. There was a fresh S.E. breeze, and a strong current setting west. The G. anchored for some hours, and then steamed ahead for two hours, when the B. moved. The tide and wind were very strong, and shortly after the hawser parted, but was re-bent, and the towing proceeded for four hours, when the G. anchored for the night. Next morning, H.M. gun-boat P. came up and assisted to tow. The B. dragged her anchor, and drove towards the shore, dangerously close to the P., so that her tow-line had to be slipped and buoyed, to enable her to swing to her anchor in deeper water, and about eighty tons of fire-bricks, part of her cargo, were thrown overboard. The tow-line was picked up, and another hawser bent, and at 5.30, p.m., the gun-boat and the G. succeeded in getting the B. clear of the reef. The services lasted forty-eight hours. The Batavia, M. M. R. May 14, 1880, p. 617.

V. 65,000*l.*—A. £1600

194. In September, the screw steamer Y., 1,771 tons nett register, with engines, 250 h.-p., rigged as a three-masted schooner, from Philadelphia for Antwerp, with wheat in bulk and bags, in mid-ocean, broke her propeller shaft and had to proceed under sail for thirty days. She had then stores and provisions to last for a month, was making fair headway for the English Channel, and was making water. The screw steamer T., 1,205 tons register, and engines of 700 h.-p., value £90,000, three days out from Liverpool for Alexandria, with Manchester goods and coals, besides seven passengers, in lat. 44°32' N., long. 10°30' W., about sixty miles W. of the usual track of vessels, steering S.S.W., and making ten knots per hour, sighted bright lights followed by rockets, which she found proceeded from the Y. The captain of the T. was asked to stand by the Y. till the morning. An attempt was made to get a tow line on board, but unsuccessfully, owing to the drift of the Y. and the heavy sea. During the night the Y. was seen to be drifting to leeward. Next day the wind and sea moderated and a hawser was got on board, but after half-an-hour's towing parted. The T. remained in attendance all night, and at seven next morning a wire rope and a hawser were made fast to the Y., but parted in about a quarter of an hour. Two hawsers were then shackled to the main chains of the Y. about noon, and towage began against a head wind towards Ferrol, distant 160 miles, which was reached after much difficulty, and after four days' towage. The T. was delayed four days and seventeen hours. The Yorkshire, M. M. R. Jan. 23, 1880, p. 114.

V. 42,231*l.*—A. £1600

195. On December 8, 1884, the iron barque C., 254 tons, from Liverpool to Sydney, with twenty-four hands and general cargo, had lost her rigging and masts. She was found in a helpless and unmanageable condition in the trough of the sea by the screw steamer R., 1,525 tons, from Huelva for Liverpool, with nineteen hands and copper ore, about 100 miles W. by S. of the Scilly Islands, towards which the R. took the C. in tow; but when off St. Agnes Light it was found impossible to tow the C. into the Bristol Channel, and she was therefore taken towards Falmouth. After some forty-eight hours' towing she was got into smooth water near Falmouth, whence a tug towed her, in charge of a pilot, to a safe anchorage in Falmouth harbour. The Carnmoney, S. G. March 27, 1885, p. 198. Value 38,312*l.*—Award £1600

196. In November, the steamer C., in tow, from Sunderland to Kirkcaldy, to receive and have her engines fitted, broke away from her tug and was driven helplessly before the storm, with only her master and four runners on board, who had exhausted the provisions and had no oil wherewith to make signals. She was drawing nine feet of water, and had no ballast on board. The N. E. from Grimsby to Malmo, with coals, discovered her about 165 miles E.N.E. of the Spurn, and took her in tow, by two tow-ropes, but owing to the heavy sea and strong wind from the S.W. the vessels only made two knots per hour. The weather became worse, both ropes parted, and the C. was discovered lying in the trough of the sea, broadside on to the N. E. When the weather moderated, the C. was again sighted in lat. 56°10' N. and long. 3°46' E., in a part of the North Sea not much frequented by ships. A new rope from the N. E. was with much trouble made fast, and towing recommenced. She was kept in tow during heavy weather, and in about nine hours was dragged into Aberlady Bay and anchored. The N. E. then proceeded to Leith and engaged two tugs, which stayed by her during the night and then towed her to Leith Roads. The services lasted five days. The Claremont, M. M. R. June 23, 1882, p. 781. V. 8,300*l.*—A. £1600

197. In November, the D. was found derelict in the St. Lawrence and brought to Plymouth by part of the crew of the brig E. The Devon, 1 W. Rob. 180. V. 3,200*l.*—A. £1600

198. In April, in the Bay of Biscay, the steamer M., 566 tons register, 90 h.-p., from Odessa for London, with wheat and barley, exhibited signals of distress, her engines having broken down. The wind was heavy from S.W. and the weather thick. The mail steamer C., from Table Bay for Southampton, came up and took her in tow, and in spite of several breakings of the hawsers, and a collision caused by the C. being struck by a heavy sea, succeeded in getting her to the Solent in three days, whence she was towed by tugs to Southampton. The Mary, M. M. R. Nov. 10, 1871, p. 1425. V. 22,000*l.*—A. £1600

199. In January, the Italian barque P., laden with bones and bone-dust, was discovered about 135 miles off the Spurn, which bore S.W. by W., lying in the trough of the sea, with a quantity of water in her hold and in such danger of foundering that by request the smack S., 77 tons, which was herself disabled and had lost trawl gear and sail, took off her master and crew, thirteen in all. The smack G., hearing of the position of the P., went to her and lay by till morning, when some of her crew went aboard and rigged the pumps. At about ten a.m., the smacks L., 80 tons, and P. C., 80 tons, came up, and each put three men aboard. The three smacks then towed the P. towards Grimsby for seven days in rough and stormy weather, during which time she broke adrift once or twice, and then had to cast off for some time. A tug was at last obtained, and the P. was taken into Grimsby Dock. The Pedro, S. G. July 18, 1884, p. 454. V. 3,600*l.*—A. £1600

200. In August, the steamer C., 1,708 tons, from New York to Leith, with general cargo and twenty-nine hands, ran ashore on the Gunfleet Sands. The smacks R. and J. and thirteen yawls, assisted in getting the cargo out of her and into lighters, the weather being calm. They laid out an anchor to the S.E. to prevent the C. going farther on the sands, but failed to get her off by heaving on it. Two steam trawlers also failed to tow her off and left. Shortly before 11 a.m. the tug H. came up, and was engaged to tow the C., but the rope broke, and the tug H. then fetched the tug R. O. from Harwich. More assistance was eventually telegraphed for, and seventeen beachmen came and helped to jettison the cargo. At about 11 p.m. the tugs H. and

R. O., with the tug T., which then came up, tried but failed to tow the C. off. About 5 p.m. on the 15th, those three tugs, with the tugs W. and V., which had been sent for, tried to get her off, but only canted her head two points to the E. More beachmen were employed to take out her cargo, of which 800 tons had been removed by 2 p.m. on the 16th, when the tugs H., W., T., and V. passed hawsers on board the C., and after three hours' towing got her off. She was then taken to Harwich, which was reached about 6 p.m. Seventy-three men in all were employed in lightening her. £1,000 to the tugs, £574 to the beachmen. The Crystal, S. G. Nov. 13, 1885, p. 726. Value 29,667*l.*—Award £1574

201. The F. was found in November by four fishing smacks in the North Sea, disabled, with hatches stove in and a quantity of water in the hold. They towed her through hard gales, and with the loss of several hawsers, for five days before the wind until within about eighty miles of Heligoland, where the F., a calm having come on, took the assistance of the steamer B. in place of the smacks, which were, however, prepared to assist further. The B. brought her in twenty-seven hours to Cuxhaven, after about sixty hours' labour in all. Ship Fenham and Four Fishing Smacks and Ship Bertha, Hamb. 11 G. Z. 1879, pp. 17, 24. [German.] 800*l.* awarded to the four smacks; 750*l.* to the B. V. 20,000*l.*—A. £1550

202. The barque E. O., on the Skerries Rock in a perilous position, was towed into deep water, after two attempts, by the steamer M. Off Orme's Head the steam-tug V. came to her assistance, and the two, with considerable difficulty, took her to the Magazine beach on the Chester side of the Mersey. The V. afterwards took her to Collingwood Dock. £1,275 to the M., £250 to the V. The Ellen Oliver, S. G. July 10, 1857. V. 21,000*l.*—A. £1525

203. H.M.S. A. grounded on the Shingle Spit. Salvors, four smacks, five galleys, and three steam-tugs. The smacksmen carried the A.'s starboard bower anchor and chain over the sand, which was dry, and when the flood tide made they gave a heavy strain upon it. The pumps of the A. were worked by the crew on board. The steam-tugs then arrived, and she was conducted to Sheerness. H.M.S. Alacrity, S. G. May 8, 1858. V. 17,966*l.*—A. £1520

204. The L. fell in with the G. during stormy weather, with her screw broken, near the west coast of Jutland, drifting about rudderless, and therefore exposed to wind and waves. With considerable danger, and after thirty-five hours' hard labour, the L. succeeded in bringing the G. into safety. The Luive v. The Germania, Assistance, Hamb. H. G. Z. 1873, pp. 265, 266; and 1874, p. 137. [German.] V. 18,000*l.*—A. £1500

204a. In January, the A. lost her screw in a violent gale while on her voyage from Liverpool for Philadelphia, and was found thirty-five miles off the south-west coast of Ireland by the steamer P. in a crippled condition. After several collisions, a hawser was got on board, and the A. was towed round Kinsale Head towards Queenstown harbour, but before she could anchor the hawser parted, and she was taken by two tugs into Queenstown. The Abbotsford (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. June 4, 1875, p. 711. V. 73,618*l.*—A. £1500

205. The ship A., with a valuable cargo, was in a sinking state off the Island of Ascension, five feet of water in her, making twenty-four inches per hour. The master and crew were exhausted, and expressed their intention to abandon the ship. The crew of H.M.S. T. discharged 800 tons of the cargo on shore, and discovered the leak. The ship was repaired and the cargo re-shipped in seventeen days by the boats of the T. The services lasted from the 18th May to 22nd July. Number of salvors 111. The Abyssinian, S. G. May 27, 1858. V. 23,464*l.*—A. £1500

206. In November, the A. sustained serious damages by striking on the Fern Islands off Northumberland, and was taken in tow by the steamer H. Q., assisted by the M. Off St. Abbs Head the rope of the M. broke, and she, at the request of the master of the A., proceeded to Dundee to fetch two tugs to tow the A. up the Tay. The H. Q. towed her to Dundee. The Anglia (Edinburgh Co. of Sess.), M. M. R. July 13, 1877, p. 884. V. 48,000*l.*—A. £1500

207. The brig A. of 168 tons was in lat. 13 N. and long. 46 W., with a signal of distress flying, having lost seven out of a crew of eleven by yellow fever, and the master being in articulo mortis. The mate and a seaman of the barque T. volunteered their services, and by great exertion conducted the brig to Falmouth. The Active, S. G. May 30, 1860; 14 Jur. 606. Value 4,300*l.*—Award £1500

208. The A., of 1,119 tons, was driven by boisterous weather from her moorings in the Mersey, and drifted against the Great Landing Stage, whereby she was damaged. Four tugs endeavoured to prevent her from driving, but could not. The A. cleared the stage and fell towards the dock wall, and was within about ten feet of it, when the steam-tug U. K., 125 tons, 240 h.-p., towed the A. away from the wall and to an anchorage, and remained by her for thirty-six hours. The Argo, S. G. July 5, 1860. V. 54,000*l.*—A. £1500

209. In February, the steamer C., 1,020 tons gross, twenty-one hands, from Liverpool to London with general cargo, lost her propeller about thirteen miles E.S.E. of Portland Bill, and was taken in tow by the steamer City of H., but the rope parted, and the C. brought up close to the Shambles. In trying to recommence towing, the ships came into collision, the C. breaking her stern plates, losing her towing hawser and the use of her windlass. The City of H. returned to Portland Roads. Next day the tug Q., in heavy squalls and rough sea, came to the C. and took hold of her by getting athwart the sea and passing the rope over her stern. Directly the towage began the hawser broke, and ship and tug drove towards the rocks at the back of Portland. After two more hawsers had been bent and had parted, and when the C. was within 100 yards of the rocks, the Q. got between the rocks and the ship, passed another hawser aboard, canted her head round, and towed her a short distance, when the hawser again broke, owing to the tremendous sea. Another hawser was made fast, which held, and when near the breakwater a second tug came up, and the C., after one more hawser had been broken, was safely anchored in Portland harbour. The Cheerful, S. G. July 3, 1885, p. 422. V. 17,504*l.*—A. £1500

210. In November, the barque D., 573 tons, from London to Shanghai, with iron, &c., got aground off Dungeness, the wind blowing strong from S., and the night being dark and thick, with heavy rain. On the next day the tugs G. P. and C. D. got her off the sand and into the Downs; the G. P. was disabled, and four tow-ropes broke during the service in the heavy gale. Her crew being exhausted, the lugger E. M. took off her master to Deal to engage twenty hands, who, with the crews of the E. M., the G. Q. and the G. K. pumped her; and the tug W. assisting, she was got into the East India Export Dock in about 2½ days. The Deerhound, M. M. R. Dec. 17, 1875, p. 1616. V. 15,373*l.*—A. £1500

211. The steamer C., 1,002 tons, from Liverpool for Lisbon and Trieste, when in the neighbourhood of the Bay of Biscay, fell in with the steamer D., of 418 tons, unmanageable, having lost her bulwarks, after-stern post, and rudder, and with a signal of distress hoisted. The C. towed the D. to Plymouth in forty-eight hours. During the service the D. ran into and damaged the C. to the extent of £1,106, which sum was allowed in addition to the salvage. The Demetrius, S. G. May 10, 1862. V. 17,000*l.*—A. £1500

212. The brig D., 165 tons, was in the middle part of the Hasborough Sands in great peril. The smacks A. and R., the steam-tug R. O., and ten beachmen went to her assistance, and with considerable difficulty and at great peril conducted her to Lowestoft Harbour. £500 to the R. D., £450 to the A., £350 to the R., £200 to beachmen. The Dorothea, S. G. Oct. 19, 1854. V. 9,045*l.*—A. £1500

213. The ship E. H., drawing twelve feet of water, was ashore on a reef in ten feet of water. The sea rolled in heavily, pressing her further on to the reef. Four wrecking vessels relieved her by lightening, and carried out two anchors. The Ella Hand, Files of Court, 1837, cited in Marvin, 214. [American.] V. 6,640*l.*—A. £1500

214. The G., in tempestuous weather, while at anchor in Margate Roads, drifted towards the Goodwin Sands. The lugger Q. was dispatched for an anchor and cable, with which she returned, but in consequence of the darkness of the night was unable to find the G. In the meantime the luggers P. and F. came up; one was sent for more chain, and the other remained near the vessel. The gale increasing, the master and crew abandoned the vessel, and on the following morning she was found by the luggers B., G., and M. S., who were subsequently joined by the Q. A steamer having been procured, the master and pilot returned on board, and the G. was towed into Ramsgate Harbour. £1,200 to the Q., B., G. and M. S., £300 to the F. and P. The Genessee, S. G. April 20, 1848. Value 12,000*l.*—Award £1500

215. In November, during a heavy gale from N.W., with a heavy sea, the barque H., with ivory, palm oil, &c. from Africa for Liverpool, was found by the steam-tug U. K. driven by the wind on to the Victoria Pier Wall, beating heavily against and driving along the wall, and in great peril. With great difficulty and danger the tug's hawser was got on board the barque, and made fast. The tug pulled the barque away from the wall, and held her off while she tried to slip her anchor chains, coming into collision with another tug in so doing. She slipped her port chain, but before she slipped the starboard one she was found to be sinking. The tug then slacked the H. against the Pier Wall, and the crew climbing into the rigging got on the pier. The barque then turned over to the starboard, slid off the wall, breaking her masts, and lay with her port side about two feet out of the water. The H. was allowed to drop down the river, the hawser of the tug still being attached, and it was a matter of great difficulty, as the barque had no lights, no masts or rigging, to keep the vessels coming up clear of her. The wreck grounded on the spit of the bank near Canada Basin, and was left there till the next morning, when the tug came, took her to the other side of the river, and beached her. The tug kept by her seven days, until all the cargo was saved, and the wreck delivered up to the owners. The Hind, M. M. R. March 19, 1870, p. 369. V. 11,470*l.*—A. £1500

216. In March, the screw steamer H., 1,567 tons gross register, from Trieste to London, with green fruit, flour, and general cargo, was fallen in with in lat. 37°50' N. and long. 17°50' E. by the screw steamer A. D., 1,275 tons gross and 811 tons nett register. The H. had her ensign hoisted. She was taken in tow by the A. D. A moderate breeze was blowing at the time, which increased with a heavy swell to a strong gale, with heavy gales from the west next day, and obliged the A. D. to wear round and run for shelter under reefed canvas towards Sicily. After two days more towing, during which the weather continued very bad, the A. D. brought the H. to a safe anchorage in Valetta harbour. The Hope, M. M. R. June 29, 1883, p. 814. V. 23,000*l.*—A. £1500

217. The barque H. having lost her main and mizenmast, and her foretopmast having gone close to the cap, was found by the steamer M., engaged on special cable telegraph service, and towed in three and a half days a distance of between 400 and 500 miles. The Hudson, S. G. May 22, 1885, p. 326. V. 17,500*l.*—A. £1500

218. In May, the iron screw steamer I., 2,292 tons gross, 1,496 tons nett, schooner-rigged, from Bombay to Dunkirk, with linseed, rapeseed, ground nuts, cotton in bale, and with twenty-eight hands, had lost her propeller, and was lying with head to W. set in shore, with the current N. of Cape Finisterre, where she was found by the steamer M., 1,522 tons gross, 981 nett, 130 h.-p., with grain, and nineteen hands, value £32,712, from Ibrail to Dunkirk, and taken in tow during three days, for 400 miles, to Falmouth Roads. During most of the towage there was a fog, and the I. steered so badly, and the two vessels ranged so much, owing to a heavy increasing swell and the want of steering power of the I., that there was all the time a severe strain on the M. The Inchrhona, S. G. June 26, 1885, p. 406. V. 63,000*l.*—A. £1500

219. The steamer J. D., of 838 tons, was anchored a mile from Portland Race. The wind was south-west, and owing to the violence of the weather she lost her steering apparatus and received other damage, and drove towards the shore. She hoisted signals of distress. The steamer C., without danger, and in a short time, towed the J. D. into Portland Roads. During the time the J. D. was in tow the hawser broke three times, and the chief mate and three of the crew of the C. went in a small boat, with great risk to their lives, and refastened the hawser. The James Dixon, S. G. June 8, 1860; 2 L. T. N.S. 696. V. 23,000*l.*—A. £1500

220. In January, the barque J. A., 422 tons register, from Mauritius to Bremerhaven, with cotton and coffee, having sustained damage from a collision, was sighted about twenty-eight miles S.W. of the Eddystone Lighthouse, the wind being fresh, S.E. with a heavy swell, by the steamer A., 694 tons and 150 nominal h.-p., from Antwerp to Genoa with a general cargo. The J. A. had her foremast stay only standing, and she was quite unmanageable. A steel tow rope was got on board, and about 1.30 p.m. the A. commenced to tow. The weather became thicker, about midnight the tow rope parted, and the A. lost sight of the J. A., finding her again at anchor in Plymouth harbour, her foresail and foretopmast staysail having in the meantime been set by the crew. The Jane Avery, M. M. R. May 2, 1879, p. 563.

Value 20,697*l.*—Award £1500

221. In December, the weather being fine but thick, the wind about N.W., blowing a stiff breeze, and the tide ebb, running at two and a half to three knots an hour, the iron screw steamer Lady H., 447 tons register and 90 h.-p., from Newcastle to Rouen with coals, was aground on the Corton Sand off Yarmouth. The screw steamer D., from Ostend to Goole in ballast, tried to tow her off, but, owing to the falling tide, failed. Eight of the D.'s crew, with the chief officer, boarded the Lady H. and lightened her. With the aid of four tugs engaged by the master of the D., the Lady H. was got off the sand, and taken safely into Yarmouth Roads. The services lasted eleven hours. The Lady Havelock, M. M. R. 1874, p. 784.

V. 11,000*l.*—A. £1500

222. The ship M. L., about twenty miles to the north of Ushant, dismasted, had 500 passengers on board, and had drifted upwards of 100 miles out of her proper course, nearly all her sails lost, only one mast left standing, ship rolling frightfully, signals of distress, weather rough. The boatswain and four of her crew had been lost, and all her lifeboats. Rescued by the steamer T., during her voyage from Gibraltar to Southampton, with her Majesty's mails and sixty-two passengers on board. Two hawsers from the M. L. having with great difficulty been got on board the T. by her lifeboat, she towed the M. L. into Plymouth Sound in about twenty-four hours. One compartment of the T.'s lifeboat was crushed, and the lives of some of the salvors were thereby endangered. The Martin Luther, S. G. November 21, 1857; Swabey, 287.

V. 12,000*l.*—A. £1500

223. The ship M. H., laden with cotton and corn, was on shore on Alligator Reef. Three wrecking vessels, carrying forty-three men, lightened the ship of 300 bales of cotton, and heaved her off. The Mary Hale, 5 A. R. 1855, cited in Marvin, 215. [American.]

V. 14,000*l.*—A. £1500

224. In September, the A., when about lat. 45° N., long. 48° W., descried the ship P., from Liverpool to New Orleans, in distress. The A. accordingly altered her course, and coming up to the P. found her fore and main topmast and part of her mizenmast carried away; she was unmanageable, and deserted by eleven of her crew, and the master intended to abandon and scuttle her. The master of the A. prevailed on him to abandon that idea, and agreed to tow the P. into Falmouth, which he did after much difficulty and danger. The Palmyra, M. M. R. Jan. 26, 1872, p. 115.

V. 3,410*l.*—A. £1500

225. In September, the brigantine R. was met at sea by the schooner E., whose master had died of yellow fever. The master and mate of the R. also had died of yellow fever, only one boy on board could write, and the crew did not know where they were. The second mate (acting first mate) of the E. took charge of the R., and after encountering heavy gales took her safely to Plymouth. The Richmond, M. M. R. May 6, 1865, p. 561.

V. 4,037*l.*—A. £1500

226. In January, in the English Channel, ten miles from the Eddystone lighthouse, which was bearing N.E. by N., the screw steamer T., totally disabled, was taken in tow by the screw steamer C., in a heavy sea, with rain and squalls, the hawsers being got on board by the help of a pilot cutter. After breaking several hawsers, she was finally taken into Plymouth. £60 to pilot cutter, £1,440 to the C. The Tiber, M. M. R. June 4, 1875, p. 710.

V. 38,742*l.*—A. £1500

227. H.M.S. R. went on shore to the northward of Wells Harbour, and was in a dangerous position. The fishing boat P., together with the Wells lifeboat, two yawls—the R. in J. and the C., and the steam-tug E., went to the R.'s assistance, and by laying out anchors, lightening the vessel, and adopting other measures, she was got off. The services lasted two days. The Rosamond, S. G. 12th July, 1855.

V. 18,500*l.*—A. £1500

228. In January, the screw steamer V., 2,730 tons nett, 4,105 tons gross, from Boston to Liverpool, with fifty-five hands, general cargo and cattle, struck upon the Little Burbo Bank, near Formby lightship, and was hard and fast, heading E. with broad-side exposed to increasing gale from N. and a heavy sea. The flood tide was making. The steam-tug K., 263 tons gross, 500 h.-p., came up in answer to signals, and by request went to Liverpool to fetch the tugs U. K., W. S., and C. On her return the K., with a great deal of difficulty, got a hawser made fast, and began to tow off the port quarter of the V., and in this manner got her head up Channel, and off the bank. Three other tugs had failed to get her off. The Venetian, S. G. 13th March, 1885, p. 166. Value 117,000*l.*—Award £1500

228*a*. Salvage effected by transhipment of a portion of a cargo of tea by three large steamers of the value of upwards of £30,000, with crews of fifty-eight men in all, and engaged, one for six days, another for four days, and another for three days, the cargo being at the time in danger of being lost, or at least much damaged, from the ship having struck on the rocks. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 229. V. 24,000*l.*—A. £1500

229. A. British vessel was taken by the French, who took out all the crew but the master and a boy, who, however, rose on the prize master and crew, and having regained possession of the vessel, made for England. A violent storm coming on, the master applied for and obtained assistance from an English frigate, by whose aid he continued to manage the vessel until it was thought dangerous to remain longer on board, when they all removed to the frigate. The storm abating shortly afterwards, the master and his assistants returned on board, and ultimately brought the vessel into port. £850 awarded to the master, £150 to the boy, and £500 to the frigate. The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292. V. 6,000*l.*—A. £1500

230. The ships W. A. and B. T. were in collision off S. Halifax, and the steam-tugs S. and C. went to their assistance—the B. T. being athwart the W. A.'s bows, and both driving to the northward. The two tugs got hold of the port bow of the B. T., and towed a-head with full steam to the S., but could not prevent the ships drifting N., and eventually the starboard side of the B. T. came in collision with the S. Halifax Buoy. Here the S. parted her hawser, but again got hold of the B. T. The tug R. coming up, after they had been towing for half-an-hour, the three tugs held the B. T., and prevented the two ships dragging; then pulled the B. T. sufficiently away from the W. A. to allow of her slipping her anchor; the W. A. was subsequently towed away and disappeared. The action of the tugs also prevented a collision between the two ships and G. N., which was anchored a little E. of the Halifax buoy. The B. T., with the aid of the tugs R. and C., got up one of her anchors, and was towed into Canada Dock. The S. and C. brought a claim against both ships, but the R. only against the B. T. The value of the W. A. was £24,741, and of the B. T. £131,241. £700 awarded against the W. A., £800 against the B. T. The Woburn Abbey, The British Trident, M. M. R. Jan. 16, 1869, p. 84. V. 155,982*l.*—A. £1500

231. In June, the ship M., from the Tyne to Bombay with coals, took the ground on Hammond's Knowl in hazy weather, the wind being fresh from N.N.E. Her master and crew deserted her, and were taken on shore by the tug M. and the lifeboat G. She was found thus by the Norwegian schooner J., 100 tons register, which remained by her till next day, when the M. floated off. A mate, an able seaman, and a boy were put on board her, who, in about an hour and a half got her head off shore and brought her up in the wind at a safe distance from the rocks. She was then, however, heading for the Cross Sands. The crew of the pilot cutter P. boarded her, her head was got round to S.E., and in about an hour and a half the J. P. lifeboat came up. Eighteen of her crew were put on board, and the united efforts of the salvors, who manned the pumps and got sail on her, resulted in her being brought, about 4 p.m. next day, to an anchor off Maplin. At 9.30 p.m. a tug took her in tow, and she was taken in safety to Millwall Docks. £250 to the two men and boy from the J., £380 to crew of the P., £800 to lifeboat J. P., £15 to the M., £15 to the G. The Macnear, M. M. R. 1876, p. 981. V. 8,915*l.*—A. £1460

232. In August, the screw steamer A., 697 tons, from New York to Glasgow with a general cargo, including sheep, lost her propeller when about 250 miles S.W. of Halifax. The screw steamer C., from New York for Dunkirk with grain, towed her into Halifax, where they arrived two days afterwards. The Aetia, The Times, Feb. 5, 1881. V. 22,000*l.*—A. £1400

233. In July, the steamer A. N. H., 1,057 tons gross, 948 tons nett, from Palermo to Antwerp, her propeller lost, was discovered off Villano lighthouse by the steamer P. 1,781 tons gross, 1,153 tons nett, 150 h.-p., twenty-three hands, value £22,100, from Korman to Cardiff with mineral ore. The wind was strong from the E., with a slight fog and a heavy sea. The H. was taken in tow for Falmouth by the P. After twenty-four hours the hawser parted, at considerable risk a second was made fast by means of a boat, and she was taken into Falmouth. The services lasted four and a half days, and the master of the P. had to cut up and burn her shifting boards and other timber for fear of running short of fuel. The weather was bad during the greater part of the time, and had it continued so a few hours longer the P. would have been helpless for want of fuel. During the towage of 500 miles, the engines of the P. were much strained, her decks opened up, and her hawsers damaged. The A. N. Hansen, S. G. Dec. 11, 1885, p. 790.

Value 30,800*l.*—Award £1400

234. In May, the steamer A., 1,123 tons gross, 709 tons nett, from Galatz to Antwerp, in a high cross sea and gale, with a broken shaft, was discovered by the iron screw steamer J., 309 tons nett, 56 h.-p., twelve hands, from St. Ubes for Dlaardingen and Bremen with a general cargo. A hawser floated on a lifebuoy was made fast to the A., but after an hour's towing parted, two others doing the same very shortly after, one of which fouled and jammed the J.'s propeller, and sail had to be set to keep the J. clear until the mate of the J., held by his legs by three men over the stern, cleared the propeller, so that the engines could work. After several failures two hawsers were made fast, and the A. was got into Falmouth harbour. The services lasted fifty-two hours, and the J. was seriously strained, her injection valve and condenser injured, and other damages incurred. The Athelstane, S. G. Nov. 27, 1885, p. 758.

V. 15,000*l.*—A. £1400

235. In February, the Italian barque E. M., from Cork to Philadelphia, was discovered, in about lat. 40 N. and long. 37 W., after a severe hurricane, with her bulwarks, steering-gear, and boats washed away, by the barque N. W., which had itself been much strained by the tempest. The master, mate, and five of the crew of the E. M. had been washed overboard. The mate of the N. W. and one hand navigated her to Falmouth, which she reached on 14th February. The Enrica Merello, M. M. R. May 9, 1876, p. 621.

V. 6,952*l.*—A. £1400

236. In April, the F., a Norwegian barque of 650 tons register, from Aux Cayes for Hamburg with logwood, was met by the American ship P. R., 1,069 tons, from London for New York with a general cargo and 115 passengers. The barque had her sails torn, was unmanageable, and had been abandoned by her crew. The crew of the P. R., with great personal fatigue and exertion, and at great risk to themselves, got the F. in safety to the Great Western Dock at Plymouth. The expenses incurred in so doing amounted to £419. The Fido, M. M. R. Nov. 30, 1867, p. 1524.

V. 3,500*l.*—A. £1400

237. In March, the brig L., 230 tons, from Bremerhaven for Monte Video with a general cargo, was found in a position of considerable danger and risk at sea by the brig S. A., 274 tons, from Pomeran for Liverpool with sulphur ore, and four out of the nine hands of the S. A. were put on board her. By their exertions she was brought to a place of safety in seven days. The Lucien, M. M. R. Nov. 11, 1865, p. 1424.

V. 3,600*l.*—A. £1400

238. In January, the ship R., 1,056 tons, from Calcutta for London with a general cargo, brought up off Walmer Castle with both anchors, and signalled for a pilot. The wind was blowing a heavy gale from the S. The lugger F., manned by twenty hands, was launched with great difficulty, twenty or thirty men assisting, and proceeding to the R. found her likely to strike the ground, deeply laden, and pitching bows under, with her anchors in only four or five fathoms, the sea having command of her deck. Six of her crew were sick, and the rest greatly fatigued. In about an hour's time she began to strike, and nine of the lugger's hands were put on board. The steam-tug G. came up, and, after great labour, the head of the R. was got round, enough to enable the lugger's men to slip the cables, and, having got before the wind, she was extricated. The master of the lugger then piloted her through the Gull Stream, the tug and lugger following the R. When off the North Foreland, a hawser was run out to the G., who held her, the gale still continuing, while the F. went to fetch anchors and chains from Margate. The harbour then being dry, to save time an anchor and chain were put on board the lugger L., and taken by her to the R., which was then off the Nore. The anchor and chain were put on board, and the R., towed by the G. and two other tugs, arrived at Gravesend, and was towed by the G. next day to the South West India Docks. The Rutlandshire, M. M. R. March 17, 1871, p. 336. Value 29,236*l.*—Award £1400

239. In February, the iron screw steamer S., 997 tons register, 150 h.-p., from London for Singapore and China, with a general cargo, took the ground on a coral reef in the Suez Canal, near Mount Akrab, broke her propeller, and became unmanageable. She tried in vain to get off under sail. In this plight she was found by the steamer N., 1,125 tons register, from Calcutta for London, with silk, cotton, tea, indigo, &c., and of the value of £150,000, which, in answer to guns from the S. came up, took her in tow, and towed her next day to Suez, 120 miles. The weather was fine, and the wind moderate meanwhile. The Seagull, M. M. R. 1871, p. 1425. V. 173,000*l.*—A. £1400

240. In July, the German brig S. N., 224 tons, from Oporto to Scilly, with palm oil, was discovered in lat. 12 N., and long. 25 W., with only one man fit for work on board, the rest of the crew, as well as the master, having died of fever, or else lying ill of it, and with three feet of water in her. The second mate and two hands of the East Indiaman, E. of P., went aboard, and after fifty-two days of varying wind and weather, got the S. N. within sight of Bishop Rock Lighthouse, and finally to St. Mary's, Scilly. The See Nymphe, M. M. R. Dec. 15, 1876, p. 1588. V. 7,500*l.*—A. £1400

241. The brig L. was ashore upon Pickles Reef. She drove high up, and had to be lightened of all her cargo before she could be heaved off. Four wrecking vessels at considerable hazard performed this service. The sea broke over her badly. The Lexington, 1 A. R. 167, 1835, cited in Marvin, 214. [American.] V. 2,750*l.*—A. £1375

242. A vessel, at the request of the master of a wrecked vessel, postponed her homeward voyage in search of freight, and went out of port to the wreck, about 500 miles distant in the Chinese seas, and there with great risk and exertion for several days saved valuable property, which, being afterwards compelled by bad weather to put back to the same port, she there sold by auction, transmitting the proceeds to the Admiralty Court in England. The Martha, 3 Hagg. 434. V. 2,651*l.*—A. £1365

243. In January, the schooner-rigged steamer I., 1,728 tons nett, 2,672 tons gross, from Shields to Bombay, with coal and thirty-three hands, when about six miles N.N.W. of the Jebel Zukin Island, in the Red Sea, carried away the high pressure end of her tumbling-block, and signalled for assistance. The iron steamer G., 1,863 tons, from West Hartlepool to Bombay, with coals and twenty-five hands, in answer to her signals, bore down upon her. Hawsers were made fast, and the G. towed the I. in about forty-eight hours to a place of safety in Aden. The Inchgarvie, M. M. R. July 13, 1883, p. 887. V. 38,952*l.*—A. £1350

244. In December, the ship J., 1,512 tons, from London for Sydney, when off Dungeness, had her cargo on fire, and was taken in tow by the tugs R. and S. The S. went on to Dover to get land fire-engines, the R. brought her on to Dover, where they were joined by the tugs V. and P. They could not stop the fire, though they kept it under. The railway company sent an engine and men to pump. The J. was ultimately towed to London, 100 miles, in 13 hours, still burning. The J. had only one hose on board, which was burnt and useless. £500 to the R., £400 to the S., £300 to the V., £100 to the P., £50 to the Railway Co. The Jason, M. M. R. June 25, 1875, p. 805. V. 54,878*l.*—A. £1350

245. In February, the screw-steamer H., 1,297 tons gross, 829 tons nett, from Cardiff to Gibraltar with coals, in the Bay of Biscay, about 110 miles N.E. of Cape Finisterre, broke her stern shaft in the pipe, without, however, losing her propeller, and signalled to the screw-steamer P., 1,693 tons gross and 1,296 tons nett, from the Mediterranean to Antwerp with a general cargo, to take her in tow. There was heavy rain and a high cross sea with stormy gale from S.W. increasing. Efforts to get a tow rope on board the H. were made ineffectually for four hours, when at last a hawser was made fast. After three days, the wind sometimes moderating a little, but always blowing a strong gale, the H. was taken into Plymouth Harbour, where the P. was delayed by the weather for two days more. The Hoopoe, M. M. R. March 25, 1880, p. 391. Value 11,500*l.*—Award £1300

246. The M. of H., laden with government stores, was ashore on the Middle Sand, off Essex, in thick rainy weather, with a signal of distress flying. Eight Colchester smacks, valued at £200 each, carrying thirty-two men, went to her assistance. In boarding the salvors were in great danger from the surf and breakers. The master of one boat and a boy were washed out; three boats were sunk, and three men drowned. Guns were fired on board for the smacks to keep near during the night. The salvors threw overboard forty tons of cargo, and finally succeeded in getting the ship off. The Marquis of Huntley, 3 Hagg. 246. V. 6,500*l.*—A. £1300

247. In November, between Cape Roca and Cape Espicel, the propeller of the Cunard steamer M., 1,055 tons, was fouled by one of the tow-hawsers, by which she was towing the French steamer E., and her rudder was jammed. The M., thus unmanageable and in danger, was at great risk and with much skill, taken in tow to a place of safety by the screw-steamer A., 1,093 tons. The Morocco, M. M. R. June 18, 1875, p. 775. V. 105,000*l.*—A. £1300

248. In April, the screw-steamer S. A. S., 434 tons nett and 684 tons gross register, fifteen hands, from Hamburg for London with sugar, broke the main shaft of her propeller about thirty miles east of Yarmouth, the wind being strong freshening from the N.E., and steering W. by S. $\frac{1}{2}$ S., and the sea heavy. She was steering and making under sail and steam about eight-and-a-half knots an hour. In answer to signals of distress the smack V., of forty tons, engaged in fishing in the North Sea, bore down upon her. A boat was launched, the mate of the V. boarded her at great personal risk and found her practically disabled, leaking with water over the floor of the cabins. She had a list to port and her lifeboat was being got ready for launching. The master of the S. A. S. wanted to be towed to London, so the smack V., twenty-four tons, which had come up, proceeded in search of a tug. In answer to further signals the smack M. S., thirty-six tons, came, and by the united services of these two smacks, which ran a great risk owing to the unmanageable condition of the S. A. S. and the state of the weather, she was got safely to Southend, 100 miles distant, in about twenty-four hours. The S. A. Sadler, M. M. R. June 24, 1881, p. 784. V. 25,721*l.*—A. £1300

249. The ship W. B. was ashore on the Pan Sand, ten miles from Margate. Several smacks and a large number of men went to her assistance. She was in a dangerous situation, and could not be got off without lightening. The salvors lightened the ship by taking on board their vessels and landing at Margate a large quantity of cargo, and finally got the ship off. The William Beckford, 3 C. Rob. 356. V. 17,604*l.*—A. about £1300

250. In February, the barque C. P. D., of 1,130 tons register, had her hull and rigging very much damaged in bad weather, and drifted in towards the shore in a very dangerous part of the coast of France, off Isle de Bas. Her master was disabled, and owing to sickness among the crew, only three hands were efficient for navigation. The screw-steamer N., 196 tons nett and 304 tons gross register, from St. Nazaire to London, with wines and provisions, including eggs and butter, made fast hawsers and towed her safely to Portland Roads in about twenty-four hours. The C. P. D., M. M. R. February 10, 1882, p. 172. V. not stated.—A. £1284

251. The brig C. struck on the Girdler Sand. The master and crew proceeded in a smack to Herne Bay for assistance. The vessel in the meanwhile broke up, and thirty-six smacks saved a large part of her cargo. The Clarisse, S. G. August 2, 1855; Swabey, 133. V. 6,050*l.*—A. £1280

252. In April last the three-masted schooner G., which had been found, derelict, by the English ship S., was with great labour and skill rigged and navigated to St. Helena, under the command of the second mate of the S. The Glarus (St. Helena V.-Adm. Co.), M. M. R. Oct. 30, 1869, p. 1392. V. 4,500*l.*—A. £1250

253. In December, the J. B., of 727 tons, from Savannah to Liverpool with cotton, in lat. 49 N., long. 21 W., was struck by lightning and her cargo set on fire. She was taken in tow off the Arcklow lightship, twenty miles from Farrow Head, Wexford, by a steamer 220 h.-p., value £18,000, cargo £55,000, to Dublin. The John Bryant, S. G. March 8, 1851. Value 30,000l.—Award £1250

254. The ship P. broke adrift in the Mersey, and got aground off the Bramley Moore Dock, the steam-tug C. got her off, and endeavoured to bring her up. At the time there was a terrific gale from the N.W., and the tide was flood. The P. then drifted up the river, thumping against the different piers, until she was brought up near the Waterloo Dock, and there docked by four tugs, the C., E., B. J., and U. S. £550 to the C., £500 to the B. J., £100 to the E., £100 to the U. S. The Philadelphia, S. G. Feb. 4, 1863. V. 12,800l.—A. £1250

255. The barque B. was off Hasborough, derelict, waterlogged, and in great danger. Two luggers, the S. and the C., and the steamship B. B., took the barque to the entrance of Lowestoft Harbour, when the harbour tug P. towed her into the outer basin. The S. endured some hardships, and the services lasted from the 19th to the 21st of October. £500 to the B. B., £30 to two passengers on the B. B., £250 to the C., £50 to the P., £400 to the S. The Baltic, S. G. April 21, 1859. V. 2,726l.—A. £1230

256. In December, the steamer A., 1,019 tons gross register, from Ibrail to Gibraltar with wheat, lost her rudder and rudder-posts. In answer to signals the steamer T., 1,513 tons gross register, with twenty hands, and a general cargo from Leith to Odessa, came to her in the Archipelago, twenty miles N.N.E. of Cape Spathe, Andros Island, and found her lying broadside to the sea and rolling heavily, the wind sheering from N. to S. The T. took her in tow in about fourteen hours to Syra Harbour, sixty miles distant. The Amcott, M. M. R. May 11, 1883, p. 589. V. 21,120l.—A. £1200

257. In December, the brig A., of 263 tons register, with cocoa, from Guayaquil for London, encountered a heavy storm off the Scilly Islands, and her cargo shifted, so that she took a list to starboard. It became necessary to cut away her mainmast and pump her. Next day the wind being about N.E., blowing fresh, and the sea heavy, cross and chopping, the steamer Armenian, 848 tons register, 100 h.-p. nom., from Patras to Bristol with currants, sent off a boat to the A. which was lying in the trough of the sea without her mainmast, foretopsail-yard, topgallant-yard, and her starboard bulwarks, and with a hole in her starboard quarter. She was lying broadside on to the wind and sea and heading S.S.W., was making much water, her pumps were choked, and she was unmanageable. A hawser was made fast, and after seven and-a-half hours towing she was brought to Falmouth. The Amelia, M. M. R. Feb. 27, 1880, p. 271. V. 18,350l.—A. £1200

258. In June, the screw steamer A., of 1,180 tons gross register, from Rossano to Cronstadt, with oil and sulphur, when fifteen miles N.N.E. of the Berlings, broke her bilge pipe, and the water was found to be above the stoke-hole plates in the engine-room. The bilge pumps were set to work. The screw steamer C. of C., of 779 tons gross register, value £41,200, with nineteen hands, and green fruit, wine and general cargo, from Cadiz to Dublin, altered her course and stood by the A. for a couple of hours. She then got a tow-rope made fast and commenced towing towards Lisbon. The wind was blowing strong from the N., and the sea was high. After eight hours' towing, during which two tow-ropes broke, one of them breaking the mate's right leg in two places, the two vessels passed inside the Berlings. After eight hours' further towing Cascaes was reached, a pilot taken aboard, and the A. anchored for the night. Next day the A. was towed to Lisbon, and the C. of C. proceeded on her voyage. The Angelica, M. M. R. Dec. 15, 1882, p. 1586. V. 20,000l.—A. £1200

259. In January, the steamer A. 1,354 tons gross, from New Orleans to Falmouth, with oilcake, was off the coast of Portugal, Cape Roca, bearing S.E. twenty-five miles, with her mainshaft broken, disabled, unmanageable, leaking, and drifting before wind and sea towards land. She was found thus by the steamer R., 1,178 tons, from Sunderland to Genoa and Burrachee, with coal, and twenty-one hands. There was a stiff W. breeze and a heavy N.W. swell. The R. took the A. in tow, and in about fifty-six hours brought her safely to Lisbon. The Ayrshire, S. G. May 15, 1885, p. 310. V. 34,650l.—A. £1200

260. The ship B. got upon the Knock Sand in extremely severe weather. She was rescued therefrom by between sixty to seventy salvors, being the crews of nine smacks and two luggers, the N. and the U., and by their advice and assistance part of the cargo of the B. was transferred to the boats and smacks, and a part thrown overboard, and after some little time she was got off and conducted to the Prince's Channel, taken in tow and brought up to London, where, owing to the frost, three of the smacks were detained some time. The Batavia, S. G. July 25, 1861; 7 L. T. N.S. 222. Value 15,500*l.*—Award £1200

261. In February, the screw steamer E., 628 tons register, from Cardiff to Genoa, with coals, was in a disabled state in lat. 44°38' N. and long. 9°14' W., the weather being clear, with a westerly breeze, but there was a heavy swell. The screw steamer U., 2,763 tons register, from Cardiff to Leighorn, with coals, three passengers, forty-nine hands, with great difficulty towed the E. to Lisbon. The U. was delayed three days by the service. The Eastella, M. M. R. Feb. 23, 1883, p. 242. V. 8,945*l.*—A. £1200

262. The ship E. A. B., of 1,920 tons, from Liverpool for Australia, with a general cargo, when at anchor was in danger, owing to the wind and weather, of driving into a perilous position, and was rescued by the exertions of the steam-tug U. K. The Elizabeth Ann Bright, M. M. R. May 25, 1867, p. 658. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £1200

263. In October, the ship E. R., with tea, was found derelict and stranded on the Belvedere Shoal, in the Gaspar Straits, by the ship A., of 774 tons register, from London for Shanghai. The A. was anchored, and it being found impossible to get the E. R. off the shoal, furniture, stores, tackle and cargo were taken from her by boats and placed in the A. They were ultimately sold by public auction. The A. and cargo were worth £70,000. The Ellen Rodger, M. M. R. Feb. 20, 1869, p. 245. V. 3,155*l.*—A. £1200

264. The screw steamer E., of 1,070 tons, carrying mails and passengers, when on her passage from Alexandria to Malta, suddenly lost her screw. She thereupon made sail (being fully equipped as a sailing ship) and beat to windward for about 130 miles. The steamer J., bound to Hull, was signalled, came up, and agreed to tow the E. to Malta. The J. then took the E. in tow, and in three days reached Malta, the weather being throughout quite moderate. On the E. arriving at Malta the mails were, by order of Post Office authorities, transferred from the E. to the J. The J. conveyed them to Southampton, and then completed her voyage to Hull. The Ellora, 1 Lushington, 550. V. 51,450*l.*—A. £1200

265. The German ship E. von H. was met with by the Austrian barque the R., some 350 miles from the Lizard, derelict, and taken by the mate and four of the crew of the R., after five days, to the Scilly Isles. The Ernst von Homeyer, M. M. R. May 24, 1872, p. 657. V. 3,864*l.*—A. £1200

266. A Government steamer at some, though not great, risk to the persons on board, effected a salvage of property which was in extreme danger, but not derelict. Number of salvors, 200. The Ewell Grove, 3 Hagg. 209. V. 6,000*l.*—A. £1200

267. The barque I. was driven by a gale on the Goodwin Sands, and was in a perilous position, from which she was rescued with some risk by the crews of two luggers, twenty-seven in number. The Indus, S. G. May 12, 1854. V. 12,848*l.*—A. £1200

268. In September, in lat. 45°50' N. and long. 7°15' W., about 200 miles W.S.W. of Cape Finisterre, the wind being N.W. by N., in a heavy N.W. swell, and dull and cloudy weather, the steamer F. V. was in distress, having shifted her propeller. The steamer B., 508 tons register and 150 h.p., from Oporto to London, with passengers and a cargo of fruit, wine, and cattle, took the F. V. in tow, and ultimately towed her into Falmouth harbour. The Fairy Vision, M. M. R. Jan. 19, 1867, p. 84. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £1200

269. The vessel G. met with a violent storm, whereby she was dismasted. When off the South Stack Lighthouse she came to anchor and hoisted signals of distress. She was in very considerable peril of being driven on shore by the wind. The steamer C. went out of Holyhead harbour and towed her in. The Gipsy, S. G. June 7, 1853. V. 24,000*l.*—A. £1200

270. The ship H., with nearly all her crew suffering from scurvy, and with signals of distress hoisted, was fallen in with on November 18, about 500 miles from Cape Clear, by the barque C. Four men boarded the H., and she reached the London Docks on December 5. The weather was tempestuous, and the service was attended with peril. The Henbury, S. G. Feb. 16, 1859. Value 9,829*l.*—Award £1200

271. In February, the brig I., from Demerara to Liverpool, with rum and sugar, with no canvas set, and signals of distress flying, was drifting to the S.W. apparently in an unmanageable condition from about one mile west of the city of Punta Delgada. The wind was blowing strong from E.N.E., and the weather so bad that the authorities of St. Michael's declined to send off from the shore to her assistance. The master of the schooner M. B. and four other masters put off in the M. B., and found the I. making some water, with her crew in a state of misery, and her master incapable through drink. They towed her to St. Michael's roadstead, which they reached next morning, and she, with the M. B., was placed in quarantine for five days. During the towage, the master and crew of the I. went on board the M. B. A hawser was broken, and other damage accrued to the M. B. during the towage. The vessel was in great distress, but the services involved no serious personal danger to the salvors. £800 to the M. B., £400 to the four masters. The Isabella, M. M. R. July 28, 1866, p. 946. V. 6,000*l.*—A. £1200

272. In November, the weather being bad and squally, the wind about N.E., and in a very heavy sea, the steamer B., value £15,000, in answer to signals, bore down upon the steamer I., from Alexandria for Liverpool, with cotton, about eight miles from the Tuskar Light, and found that she had lost her propeller, and was disabled. With great risk and much manœuvring a tow-rope was got on board the B., and she proceeded to tow the I.; but before long the two vessels got entangled. In extricating them the tow-rope broke, and the perilous task of getting a tow-rope on board had to be performed a second time. After three hours of this dangerous work the rope was got on board, and the B. towed the I. to Milford Haven, which was reached after thirty-three hours' towing. The Isis, M. M. R. May 2, 1873, p. 561. V. 139,328*l.*—A. £1200

273. The ship A. U., from New York to Liverpool, was hailed by the brigantine J., which was much damaged, and had lost her boats. At their request the crew of the J., with their effects, were taken on board the A. U., a boat from that vessel having been sent to fetch them. The first mate of the ship, with eight volunteers from her crew, boarded the J., and after experiencing difficulty from a succession of heavy gales, and from the brigantine shipping much water, whereby the men were constantly kept at the pumps, she was ultimately brought into the Mersey, having been towed by a steam-tug from off Bardsey Island. The services lasted seventeen days, during which the salvors suffered great hardships from exposure to wet and cold, and from want of sufficient water. Disbursements of £92 allowed besides the salvage. The James, S. G. March 24, 1863. V. 2,761*l.*—A. £1200

274. The master and boat's crew of an English whaler, 400 tons and thirty-seven men, at the imminent risk of their lives, in very bad weather, boarded the English ship J. in the Atlantic Ocean. The J. was dismasted, her bulwarks were stove in, part of the crew were sick, and the rest were dispirited and exhausted. She had a signal of distress hoisted. The whaler was outward bound, but nevertheless she took the J. in tow, and towed her for seven days to Plymouth, England. The Jane, 2 Hagg. 338. V. 7,000*l.*—A. £1200

275. In February, in fine weather, with a smooth sea, after very severe gales, the screw steamer J. S., of 835 tons nett, and 1,289 tons gross, from Patras to Liverpool, with twenty-two hands and a general cargo, having a disabled propeller, and otherwise damaged, was found in distress under fore-and-aft trysails and foresails, but making no way, about forty-four miles W.S.W. of Ushant, by the screw steamer N., value £9,500, which had herself encountered severe weather, broken her wheel, and lost compasses and boats. The N. was from St. Ubes, in Portugal, for Bergen, in Norway, and had a crew of fourteen hands and a cargo of salt. It was arranged that the N. should take the J. S. in tow to Falmouth, about 140 miles off. The J. S. steered badly, and the hawser chafed, and the sea being high and the weather thick, after some twenty hours towing, the hawser broke. The sea was too high to allow another hawser to be got to the J. S., and the N. was hove-to in order to stay by the J. S. The weather being still very bad, the N. proceeded to fetch assistance from Falmouth, but lost her bearings, and in fear of running short of coals was put on a course up channel, and eventually, after narrowly escaping stranding, arrived at Dover. The J. S., after she was left, drifted to the N.N.E., and anchored off Down-derry. She was reported, as seen off Downderry, signalling, "Send two steamers:" "Fire (or leak); want assistance." The V., a screw steam-tug, of 58 h.-p., with five hands, and the paddle steam-tug Sir W. R., with seven hands, got up steam immediately, and having found the J. S., made fast their hawsers, and towed her safely into Ply-mouth Sound, where they left her. There was considerable danger in getting the tow-rope on board from the N., on account of the weather. £800 to the N., £400 to the tugs. The John Straker, M. M. R. July 15, 1881, p. 872.

Value 17,000*l.*—Award £1200

276. The L., with specie, was struck by a heavy sea, which reduced her to a wreck, the vessel and the lives of those on board her being in imminent danger. She continued to drift for some days, when she was fallen in with by the M. Æ., and the crew and treasure of the L. were transferred to the M. Æ., and brought to Plymouth. The Libra, S. G. July 14, 1848.

V. 4,965*l.*—A. £1200

277. In May, the steamer L., of 500 tons, from Harlingen to London, with a general cargo, cattle, and passengers, got on the Thorpe Reef, Suffolk. Twenty-nine men and four boats, with great skill and much personal danger, got her off. The Lion, S. G. 1855.

V. 24,000*l.*—A. £1200

278. In August, the L., a paddle-steamer of 1,000 tons gross and 476 tons nett, with twenty-six hands, a cargo of general goods, about 140 passengers, and £50,000 in specie, from Dublin to Liverpool, impaled herself on the stern of the B., near the Prince's landing-stage by the Collingwood Dock, sustained a serious wound in her side, and was in imminent danger of sinking. She steamed across to the landing-stage, accompanied by the tugs R., M. K., K. of M., and R. A. When at the north end of the landing-stage, the M. K. towed her to the wall, where she was beached. The passengers meanwhile had jumped on board the tugs, as the L. was evidently in imminent danger. The Longford, M. M. R. Feb. 25, 1881, p. 238.

V. 72,000*l.*—A. £1200

279. In November, the French galliot L., abandoned after collision in the North Sea, was found two days afterwards by three fishing smacks with twenty-four hands, and in five days brought to London. The Louisa, S. G. Dec. 20, 1842.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £1200

280. In November, the iron screw-steamer M., of 566 tons register, with wheat and barley from the Danube, was fallen in with, about 100 miles from the Lizard, by the A., of 1,109 tons register. She was found to have broken her propeller, had the end of her shaft carried away, and all her sails blown away. The A. took her in tow, and in thirty hours brought her to Falmouth harbour. By doing this the A. was delayed five days in her voyage to London. The Mary, M. M. R. June 20, 1873, p. 784.

V. 23,400*l.*—A. £1200

281. The barque M. was aground off Gallipoli, and in a heavy gale and rough sea, exposed to considerable danger. The steamer E. E., of 100 h.-p., and worth £20,000, after an ineffectual attempt to rescue her, obtained some lighters from Gallipoli, and had a portion of the barque's cargo discharged into them. The E. E. then towed the M. off the ground into deep water. The services lasted seven days. The Mary, S. G. May 22, 1858.

V. 14,400*l.*—A. £1200

282. In August, the brig N. H. stranded off Cape Spartel, and, with the first change of wind, must have inevitably gone to pieces. Four faluchos and one boat, with thirty-four men, slipped cables, went to the brig, discharged part of her cargo, got her off, and reshipped the goods. The faluchos and boat were uninsured. The New Holland, S. G. December 6, 1838.

V. 21,169*l.*—A. £1200

283. In October, the P. got on a rock at Honduras, and was rescued and repaired by H.M.S. C. The Pallinurus, S. G. July 22, 1842.

V. 4,116*l.*—A. £1200

284. The barque N. A., during a heavy gale, struck on the Elbow Shoal, whereby she lost her rudder, and was exposed to considerable peril. She hoisted a signal of distress, and the lifeboat M. W., at considerable risk to the lives of her crew, went to her assistance, and at the request of the master of the N. A. returned to the shore, and engaged the lugger C. and the steam-tug A. By the united exertions of the salvors the N. A. was safely conducted to London. The Nord America, S. G. April 1, 1856. Value 24,210*l.*—Award £1200

285. In July, the iron screw steamer S., of 923 tons nett, 1,538 tons gross register, from Akyab, in British Burmah, to Liverpool, with rice, so short of coals that a great deal of the woodwork of the vessel had to be utilised for fuel, was discovered in need of assistance near the Straits of Jabal, in the Red Sea, in fine weather by the screw steamer G., 1,352 tons nett, 2,056 tons gross register, 200 h.-p., working to 500 h.-p., value £52,000. The S. was found to be drifting S., and entirely helpless. The G. took her in tow for Suez in an increasing sea and strong wind. After two days' towage, two hawsers breaking during the towage, she was got safely to Suez Bay. The Shadwan, M. M. R. Dec. 22, 1882, p. 1617. V. 28,975*l.*—A. £1200

286. In December, the three-masted screw steamer R., 2,706 tons gross, from Cardiff to Orleans, carried away her screw propeller in lat. 43°14' N., long. 11°20' W. She was hauled on the port tack, and proceeded south till daylight, then wore round on starboard tack, and made all sail for the English Channel, with fine weather and a smooth sea, making 3½ to 4 knots. On the 28th, having made 330 miles under sail, she sighted the screw steamer K., 2,920 tons, from Java to Greenock, with twenty-seven hands, cargo sugar, which took her in tow, and, with the assistance of a steam-tug, the R. was anchored safely inside St. Anthony's Light. The Rhosina, M. M. R. March 7, 1884, p. 150. V. 34,000*l.*—A. £1200

287. The R. S., from Colombo for London, when off Dover took a pilot on board, and on her way to Gravesend encountered a tempest, and lost her anchors. She was assisted by the A. and three luggers. £800 to the luggers, £400 to the A. The Royal Standard, M. M. R. July 3, 1869, p. 848. V. 200,000*l.*—A. £1200

288. In January, the ship S., with 234 tons of pumice stone, was found by H.M.S. H. ashore off Tawaba, on the Arabian coast, 30 miles E. of Aden, on an open coast, exposed to the E. winds, in 8 feet of water at low tide, her draft being 15 feet aft, and 14·6 forward. She was derelict, and bumped heavily as the tide rose. The sea was heavy, and the sun very powerful. The officers and crew of the H. laid out the anchor of the S., and the stream anchor of the H. with two hawsers, the chains were heaved on, and the ballast got out of her. In four days she was got afloat. She was ultimately taken to Aden. The Statelie, M. M. R. March 11, 1865, p. 304. V. 4,000*l.*—A. £1200

289. In February, the barque S. F., 266 tons, from Berbice for London, with rum and sugar, having four out of eleven hands ill, brought up after a squall, by her starboard and port anchors, off the North Foreland, and to avoid a collision with other vessels, the wind blowing S.W., slipped both anchors. Thereupon the smack, W. R., made for her, and the master and four of the crew thereof boarded the S. F. The smack left for Ramsgate for anchor and chains, but as she could not take the anchor, the lugger U. F. was employed, and the two vessels waited for the barque. The anchor and chain were put aboard, and a steam-tug was employed, which conducted the barque to the West India Dock, the master and three of the crew of the smack remaining to help navigate the barque, at the request of the master of the S. F. The Strada Florida, M. M. R. Feb. 2, 1867, p. 149. V. 7,500*l.*—A. £1200

290. The engines of the V. broke down, and as she could not rely upon her sails with the strong wind prevailing, which exposed her to the danger of being blown ashore, she asked for assistance from the L., and the latter, after sustaining damage (£88) through collision with the V., completed the salvage, after several days' loss of time and great exertions. Hamburger Handelsgerichts Zeitung (Hamburg Mercantile Law Journal), vol. 2, p. 71; vol. 5, p. 244; Lübeck Superior Court of Appeal Decisions, Hamburg Collection, vol. 2, p. 989; Kierulff Superior Court of Appeal Decisions, vol. 2, p. 510; vol. 3, p. 705. [German.] V. 27,000*l.*—A. about £1140

291. The barque I., 729 tons, from Quebec for London, with a crew of eighteen hands, fell in, on the 15th November, with the iron half-clipper ship, M. R., 388 tons, two-thirds laden with coals, dismasted and derelict, in about N. lat. 49°, and W. long. 30° 30', all her spars being gone except the mizen mast and bowsprit, having a list to port, her hatches exposed to the sea, about fourteen feet of water in the hold, and the starboard pump choked. The master of the I. boarded her with eight hands, to assist at her pumps, and they soon after left, leaving the mate in charge. The I. took her in tow, and after experiencing heavy weather, during which the ships came in contact, and damage was done to the I., whereby she made water, and after casting off the M. R. at different times from the severity of the gales, ultimately succeeded in bringing her to Falmouth on the 4th December. The Mary Rogerson, S. G. Feb. 24, 1863. Value 2,300*l.*—Award £1135

291*a.* In April, the steamer C. IX., from Copenhagen to London, with general cargo and passengers, had broken down about 130 miles from Harwich, having lost her propeller. She was burning rockets for assistance. The Danish paddle steamer R., from Esbjerg for Harwich, with cattle and butter, when in lat. 53°28 and long. 4°10, sighted the C. IX. about three miles off, and came up with her. The R. agreed to tow the C. IX. to Harwich, whence a tug could take her to London. A hawser was made fast, and the R. commenced towing the C. IX. The wind changed to a fresh breeze from S.S.W., and the tow-rope chafed. Next evening Lowestoft was sighted. The weather was hazy, with rain, and a pilot was taken on board each vessel. At midnight of the next day the two ships were brought to anchor off the Cork lightship. The R. lay by the C. IX. during the night, and at daylight both vessels proceeded into Harwich harbour. A tug was there engaged to tow the C. IX. to Gravesend. The Christian IX., The Times, July 15, 1881; M. M. R. 1881, p. 873.

292. Great skill and perseverance was shown by the salvors in a salvage of a very meritorious character, by which they effected a complete rescue from total loss, the lives of the crew of the vessel salvaged having been in imminent peril. The salvage lasted five days, and the salvaging vessel was in great peril and much strained. Another smack showed a willingness to assist, but was of little substantial service, owing to her bad sailing. £100 to the smack, £1,000 to the other salvors. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 255.

V. 4,600*l.*—A. £1100

293. In February, the screw steamer A., 1,175 tons, from Alexandria to Hull with seed, got on the edge of Hasborough Sand, in hazy weather and a heavy sea, with a strong tide running, and, her sails being aback, remained there. Ten of the crew of the yawl D., which first came up, joined by fifteen hands from the yawl P. and fourteen of the crew of the lifeboat M., all of whom boarded her, were engaged. They threw over some of the cargo. The yawl D. laid the ship's anchor E.N.E., and by the united exertions and under the directions of the salvors the A. came off, and was brought to an anchor in Hull Roads nineteen and a half hours afterwards. The Artos, M. M. R. May 11, 1877, p. 596.

V. 30,000*l.*—A. £1100

294. In September, the screw steamer N., from Liverpool to Nantes, with manure and general cargo, was fallen in with about forty miles south of the Wolf Rock by the steamer W., 921 tons, 99 h.-p., fifteen hands, value £16,773, from Newport to Pasages, in a strong N. wind and heavy N.W. sea. The foremast of the N. had gone by the board, and she was lying in the trough of the sea with a maintrysil set, a quantity of water in her engine-room, her fires out, and in a very helpless condition, her crew being exhausted with baling. With great difficulty the W. got her in tow, and made first for Falmouth, but afterwards altered her course, and took her to off Pierres Moires lighthouse, whence she was taken through heavy seas into Brest, after sixteen and a half hours' towing. The Neptune, S. G. November 27, 1885, p. 758.

V. 8,305*l.*—A. £1100

295. In May, the screw steamer O., 1,138 tons, from Odessa to Hull, with a general cargo, broke her high pressure cylinder and became totally disabled. She was in great danger, drifting on to shore about six miles off Cape Finisterre. The steamer L., 2,301 tons, value £59,000, from Rangoon to Falmouth, with thirty hands and a cargo of rice, saw her signals, bore down on her, and with some difficulty took her in tow. In getting the warp aboard the bight of the rope, owing to the rolling of the vessels, fouled the propeller-blade and jammed it so that the engines could not be moved, and the vessels drifted to within a few feet of one another, when the hawser was cut and a steel hawser made fast, with which the O. was towed twenty-five miles to Corunna. The Orchis, S. G. July 11, 1882, p. 438.

V. 28,000*l.*—A. £1100

296. Information having been received at Liverpool of a ship being in distress, the steam-tug C. went in search of her, and discovered the ship P. heading for the West Hoyle Bank, close-hauled on the starboard tack. The master of the C., seeing she was in danger of going on the bank if she kept her course, got his hawser ready, and called out to those on board the ship to wear round, as the only chance of preventing the ship going on the bank. Having come round, the C. went up to her to take her in tow, but the master of the P. wished to make a bargain with the C. to tow the ship to Liverpool. The master of the C. refused to bargain considering he was already engaged on salvage terms, and ultimately left the ship as the tugs B. J. and the U. S. arrived, the former having a pilot on board. The B. J. and the pilot were first employed to assist the ship into Liverpool, and the U. S. was afterwards directed to aid the B. J. The tugs took the ship in tow, and finally conducted her to the Coburg Dock, experiencing some difficulty on their way, as they alleged, from the violence of the N.W. wind and heavy sea, the weather being so bad that the pilot could not be put on board the ship, and the force of the sea caused the tugs to come into collision while the U. S. was endeavouring to get attached to the B. J. £1,000 to the U. S. and B. J., £100 to the C. The Pride of Canada, S. G. April 18, 1863.

297. The American ship, W. F. S., 1,628 tons register, lost both her anchors and received damage by collision with another ship, and afterwards during a strong gale drove on the Pluckington Bank, a very dangerous locality in the river Mersey. The steam-tug G. C., with double disconnecting engines of 60 h.-p. nom., working up to 180 h.-p., and the steam-tug S., of 150 actual h.-p., went to the aid of the W. F. S., and by their joint manœuvres succeeded in getting her clear of the bank. Afterwards these two tugs, assisted by the steam-tug R., of 300 tons gross register, of 140 h.-p. nom., working up to 700, conveyed the W. F. S. safely into dock. £500 to the G. C., £400 to the S., £200 to the R. The W. F. Storer, M. M. R. March 10, 1866, p. 303.

V. 46,000*l.*—A. £1100

298. In January, the screw steamer Z., 490 tons, was found by the screw steamer C., 633 tons, about lat. 44° 57' N., and long. 9° 12' W., in distress, with her shaft broken. Two hawsers were made fast, and the Z. was towed 120 knots during that night and next day, the wind blowing strong from S.S.W. to S.S.E., with squalls, and the sea being heavy all the time, to within five miles of the Connemara light, where they watched for daylight, when a pilot was taken aboard, and the Z. was towed into harbour, in the afternoon of the following day. The Zadne, M. M. R. July 30, 1875, p. 967.

V. 43,650*l.*—A. £1100

299. In January, the barque M., 796 tons, from Quebec to Grangemouth with timber, was found derelict by the tug R. and taken in tow in moderate weather to Cork Harbour, which was made in four days. The Marianne, S. G. July 22, 1859, 2 Asp. 127.

V. 2,700*l.*—A. £1080

300. In October, the M. B., a barquenette of 396 tons, from New Brunswick to Ayr with deals, was discovered, about lat. 30° N. and long. 35° W., waterlogged, and with a mutinous crew, by the steamer O., 1,990 tons nett, and 3,104 tons gross, value £80,000, from Philadelphia to Liverpool, with passengers and mails; and the steamer's boat took off the crew of the M. B., eleven in all. The third officer of the O., and a volunteer crew then took charge of her, her pumps were set to work, more sail was set, and she was taken in nine days, through heavy seas and wind, to off Kussala, where a pilot was got, and she was brought to Queenstown Harbour, thence towed to Liverpool, and after twice dragging her anchor, docked in the Brunswick Dock. Some expenses of the owners allowed besides the salvage. The Margaret Boyd, M. M. R. February 21, 1879, p. 243.

V. 3,200*l.*—A. £1080

301. The ship C. D., 1,545 tons, being in collision with another vessel in the Mersey, the steam-tug E. came to her assistance, and towed her clear. The steam-tug U. afterwards came up, and the two tugs remained by her all night. Next morning they began to tow her towards the Waterloo Dock, but owing to her having lost her rudder, they experienced great difficulty, and were exposed to great risk. Ultimately, on the following day, the assistance of the C. was obtained, and the three tugs towed the vessel into the Waterloo Dock. £600 to the E., £450 to the U., £25 to the C. The Carrier Dove, S. G. March 16, 1863.

V. 34,167*l.*—A. £1075

V. 3,200*l.*—A. £1066

304. In May, during a fresh gale from N.E., the barque I., 800 tons, was found on Roar Sand, near No. 1 Battery, broadside to the sea, with one anchor out, heading N.E., in a flood-tide, by the tugs the C., 50 h.-p., and the E., 50 h.-p., who tried to tow her off in vain, and did not succeed, even when reinforced by the tug N., 100 h.-p. They, therefore, left her and took shelter in the west bay of Dungeness, till the next flood-tide made. On their return, they found the I. abandoned, and shortly before high water succeeded in moving her on the sand. Her master and four hands then returned. They succeeded in getting her clear, but she was strained and unmanageable. They took her to Dover, but she had too much water in her to allow of her entering. The pilot who boarded her advised them to take her to Sheerness. Seven men from the tugs remained on board, and the three tugs commenced to tow her towards Sheerness. On her way she became very waterlogged. In Prince's Channel she capsized, her hawser fouled the tug E., and did great damage, and the masts of the barque were obliged to be cut away to right her. They got her through the Nab Channel and into the Mouse, and the next day towed her to Sheerness Harbour. £300 to the E., £300 to the C., £400 to the N., £60 to pilot. The Imatar, M. M. R. August 11, 1876, p. 1011.

V. 3,100*l.*—A. £1060

305. A derelict was salvaged by very meritorious services. A revenue cutter rendered some useful, but not necessary, service in towing. £100 to the revenue cutter, £958 to the other salvors. The Charlotta, 2 Hagg. 361.

V. 2,394*l.*—A. £1058

306. In April, the ship C. G., with many passengers and a large crew, was discovered at anchor by the S., near Five Fathom Bank, off Cape May, and flying signals of distress, having been on that bank, and her master being ignorant of his position. The S., value £100,000, took the C. G. in tow, but the hawser broke, and thereupon the S. guided her clear of the shoals, and the C. G. proceeded on her journey. The S. sustained damage by collision with the C. G., and at one time fouled her propeller. The weather was stormy throughout, and by reason of the delay the S. encountered a heavy gale, which caused further detention, and in attempting to pass Pollock Rip at low water she struck and was badly injured, and had to be towed to Boston. The striking and subsequent expenses were held to be too remote to be taken into consideration. The Cornelius Grinnell, 2 Asp. 140. [American.]

V. 20,500*l.*—A. £1052

307. In February, the screw steamer P., 1,770 tons, 139 hands, with 450 troops and a cargo of stores, was drifting W.N.W. on a lee-shore, quite unmanageable, with her machinery broken down, about twenty miles E.S.E. of Roche's Point, on the coast of Ireland, in a nasty swell. The screw steamer L., 741 tons, fifteen hands, 90 h.-p., from Cork to Newport with coals, came up in answer to the P.'s signals and took her in tow, having to hack with her stern against the P. to pass a hawser on board. After four hours the after crank pin of the L. became heated by the strain of the towage, which had, therefore, to be stopped for a time, the P. coming close to the L. meantime, and causing danger of collision. When starting again the hawser parted, then the warping chock was carried away, the after and main butts torn up, and the hawser cast adrift. Before these could be repaired a tug came up, and the L. remained in company with the P. till she was brought to Queenstown. The L. was damaged to the extent of £190, and detained nine days for repairs. The Poonah, S. G. June 26, 1885, p. 407.

V. not stated.—A. £1050

308. In October, the screw steamer A. S., 1,146 tons register, from North Shields for Alexandria with coals, when within a few miles of the coast off Cape Finisterre, became unmanageable. The schooner J. B. kept the head of the A. S. off shore for three hours, and then the screw steamer C., in answer to signals, came up, and towed the A. S. to Lisbon, going 260 miles out of her way to do so. £900 to the C., £120 to the J. B. The A. Strong (P. C.), M. M. R. July 25, 1873, p. 944.

V. 16,090*l.*—A. £1020

309. The brig H., when two miles outside of Mobile Point, was thrown on her beam ends by a hurricane, and her masts and bowsprit were cut away; she had two feet of water in her, and the pumps were choked. The master and crew abandoned her. After the gale had abated somewhat the salvors, who were pilots, attempted to board her, but without success. At a later period they boarded her, when she was in imminent danger of becoming a complete wreck. They procured the assistance of a steamboat, with which, and two of their own boats, they towed her into port. The Hope, 10 Peters, 108, cited in Marvin, 200. [American.]

Value 3,059*l.*—Award £1019

310. The brig A., of 237 tons register, with a general cargo, got on the dangerous Arklow Bank. The weather was fair and the sea calm. The smack P. came up, and five or six of her crew boarded the brig. Some of the coastguard also came up, and forty-seven smacks were, under the superintendence of a lieutenant of the coastguard, loaded with the cargo of the A., after attempts had been made without success to heave her off. About 500 men assisted in rendering the service. The Amazon, 5 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 111, Adm. C.; 2 L. T. N.S. 140.

V. 8,000*l.*—A. £1007

311. The schooner A., dismasted, was towed by a smack of fifty-seven tons, with a master, four men, and three boys, in bad snowy weather, five days and nights, and brought into port. The Albion, 3 Hagg. 254.

V. 4,600*l.*—A. £1000

312. In June, the screw steamer A., 474 tons, from the Canary Islands to London, with general cargo, when off Cape St. Vincent, broke her main shaft short off at the stern-post, in boisterous weather. The screw steamer N., 799 tons and 500 h.-p., from Torreeveja for Pontevedra, with grain, took her in tow, and in nine hours brought her to the Tagus. The Amazon, M. M. R. Jan. 21, 1865, p. 82.

V. 21,896*l.*—A. £1000

313. In November, during a gale from N.W., the steamer A., with twenty-three passengers and a cargo of timber and iron, was discovered off the Dogger Bank in a disabled condition, having consumed all her coals, by the fishing-smack N. H., 71 tons, and six hands. With great risk the master and one of the crew of the N. H. boarded the A. Three other smacks came up and took her in tow for about twenty-two hours, when one of the warps broke, and although the weather moderated, twelve hours later a second warp broke. A gale sprang up twelve hours afterwards, and the three other smacks were lost sight of, but the N. H. stayed by the A. for two days, and supplied her with bread and beef. On the third day she supplied her with two tons of coal, with which steam was got up, until the fires went out from want of fuel. On the fifth day the A. was anchored three miles from the New Sand lights, and the N. H. went for a tug, which came out next day and towed the A. to the Victoria Dock. The N. H. was damaged to the amount of £80. The profits of the voyage, £260, were lost, and the coal and provisions supplied amounted to £10. £700 to the N. H., £300 to the tugs. The Angelica, M. M. R. Feb. 9, 1883, p. 177.

V. 14,750*l.*—A. £1000

314. The screw steamer P., 141 tons, 45 h.-p., observed rockets and blue lights burning, and heard guns fired from a ship to windward. The P. made towards her, and on nearing her found she was the screw steamer A., and that her machinery was disabled. Her chief mate boarded the P., and requested that she would lie by the A. to see if the forward engine could be worked. It being discovered that the engine would not work, the P. towed the A. to Milford. The P. was detained thirteen hours. The Araxes, S. G. May 6, 1862; 7 L. T. N.S. 257.

V. 95,000*l.*—A. £1000

315. In January, the schooner-rigged steamer B., in ballast, from Landeman, in France, for Middlesborough, which had been blown off the land in the stormy weather of the preceding day, and was short of coals and provisions, was seen by the trawl fishing-smack Y. E. flying signals of distress off the Dogger Bank, about eighty miles E. by N. of Spurn Point. The B. was taken in tow by the Y. E. and towed between forty and fifty miles, the wind still blowing strong and the sea being heavy. The trawl W., 78 tons, then came up at the western end of the Dogger Bank, and made fast to the B.; but the weather becoming worse, the warp of the W. had to be cut, and that of the Y. E. parted. The W., which had towed twenty-four hours, and the Y. E., which had towed forty-eight hours, then returned to Grimsby to repair damages, and the B. was drifting helplessly about until discovered some 175 miles E.N.E. of the Spurn Point by the trawl C. and S., 76 tons, which took her in tow, aided shortly afterwards by the cod-smack B. F., 84 tons, whose warp, however, parted, after about twelve hours' towing, when the C. and S. towed alone for another ten hours. The B. F. having supplied the B. with food, again made fast, and helped to tow for about twenty-four hours more, when the steam fishing-cutter Z., 114 tons, came up, and the C. and S., and B. F., were cast off, after putting more provisions on board the B. The Z., after eighteen hours' towing, got the B. to the Humber, but not without considerable damage to herself and delay in landing her fish. The Bessemer, S. G. July 18, 1884, p. 454.

Value 4,000*l.*—Award £1000

316. In September, the steamer B. was in distress, about five miles from the Shambles lightship and the same distance from the Portland Breakwater Light. The water was running into her engine-room; her fires had been out for several days; she was under sail, but had lost some of her canvas. She was taken in tow by the paddle steamer C., from Weymouth for Guernsey, and in one hour and a half was brought to an anchorage in Weymouth Roads. The Brenda, M. M. R. Dec. 20, 1872, p. 1619.

V. 23,500*l.*—A. £1000

317. In November, the ship B., 1,145 tons, from Calcutta to London, with a general cargo, when off the South Foreland, at the back of the Goodwin Sands, after severe storms and during a heavy gale, in which she had lost both anchors, engaged the tug D., eight hands, 95 h.-p., value £8,000, and the tug C. of L., eight hands, 140 h.-p., value £8,000, to get her towards the land. The two tugs, with much difficulty, got hold of her, and took her to off Folkestone, where she was anchored by two anchors, for which the lugger V. was sent, and which were brought to her with great difficulty by the luggers A. and R. The two tugs dragged their anchors and came into collision, the C. of L. sustaining serious damage; but next morning they weighed, and took the B. safely into the West India Docks on the fifth day. £670 to tugs, £330 to luggers. The Bruce, M. M. R. March 3, 1876, p. 277.

318. In June, the screw steamer C., from Hamburg for London, with passengers and cargo, with a broken main shaft, was met with, in lat. 52°38' N. and long. 3°19' E., by the G. S. N. Co.'s screw steamer L. The L., taking her in tow, after some difficulty, brought her into the Elbe, and subsequently to Bosch. The L. had fifty-four passengers on board, and with her cargo was worth £120,000. The Castor, M. M. R. March 13, 1874, p. 335.

319. In April, about 300 miles from Pernambuco and about 600 miles from Rio de Janeiro, the barque C. C., from Liverpool for Valparaiso, with general cargo, was boarded by the mate of the Portuguese brig E., who took command, as the captain and mate of the C. C. were unfitted by intoxication to navigate her, and brought her safely into Pernambuco. The Coro Coro, M. M. R. June 24, 1865, p. 785.

V. 40,000*l.*—A. £1000

320. In September, the C., 1,548 tons register, from New York with a general cargo for Liverpool, when endeavouring to enter the Canada Dock with the steam-tug E. lashed to her port side, became unmanageable in a gale; and at the pilot's direction the E. let go, and took a hawser from the port bow of the ship; the fore and aft sails were set, but she still kept drifting on to the Huskisson Pier. The gale increased, there was a heavy sea on, and the wind shifted right ahead. The sails were taken in, and the steam-tug U. S. was employed. This tug, at great danger to herself, passing between the ship and the wall of the pier, as there was not time to go ahead of the E., was attached to the starboard side, and by going full speed ahead prevented the ship drifting. When the ship had been towed half across the river the hawser parted, and she again drifted; but another hawser being made fast, the two tugs anchored her on the ebb tide, in safety. The Cultivator, M. M. R. March 2, 1867, p. 271.

322. The ship D'E., 700 tons, off Shoreham, considerably damaged by collision, had signals of distress hoisted. The steam-tug D., sixty-two tons, thirty h.-p., conducted her into Portsmouth Harbour. Wind S.W., and against the ship. The D'Elmina, S. G. May 12, 1859.

323. The ship D., during a heavy gale, struck on the Puller Bank. Three Trinity House pilots, with others, proceeded in a large galley towards the ship. On their way they met the crew in two boats. After putting them in a safe channel to reach the shore, the pilots proceeded to the vessel, and after very great exertions, and at the risk of their lives, they succeeded in taking her to Portsmouth. The Denmark, S. 324. In April, the steamer E. H., from Copenhagen for Revel, with cotton, was found by the steamer K. of the B., from and to the same ports, fast in the ice off Dago Light, with signals up "short of provisions," "starving." The K. of the B. was much out of the water, and in danger of her screw being broken by the ice, yet the master backed astern, drove her alongside of the E. H., put provisions on board, and got her out through the path thus made, and the two ships proceeded for Slitehamn in the island of Gothland, where they were detained by the ice for twelve days, when the K. of the B. proceeded to Revel, and arrived there in fourteen days. The Edward Hawkins, M. M. R. July 24, 1874, p. 944. V. 32,000*l.*—A. £1000

325. The ship E. was at anchor in the Mersey when the wind came on to blow heavily from the northward and westward, and the starboard chain parted. A second anchor was immediately let go, but she drove foul of the S., started her from her anchor, and both vessels, each with an anchor down, drove up the river, and the E. ultimately struck broadside on the Devil's Bank, where she was in considerable danger. Three steam-tugs succeeded in dragging her off the bank. The Eliza, S. G. May 13, 1857. V. 40,000*l.*—A. £1000

326. In November, the E. A., 1,139—98 gross tonnage, from Cronstadt for Hull, with linseed, hemp, &c., when letting go her port anchor to bring up, the chain parting, drifted up the Humber and took the ground on the Middle Sand. The tide caught her starboard side, she canted, her cargo shifted, and she lay with her port broadside down in the water. After drifting for some time, she drove off the sand and floated. Three tugs assisted her, by taking off some of her crew, taking her in tow, and preventing her from driving on to the sand again. Ultimately they took her into the Albert Dock. The Emma Ash, M. M. R. Dec. 8, 1871, p. 1552. V. 38,000*l.*—A. £1000

327. In November, the barque E. was found, derelict and water-logged, some sixty or seventy miles from the Longships in the Irish Channel. She was laden with firewood and deals, had lost her bowsprit and gear, and her foretop-masthead. Her port bow was stove in. There was a strong rolling sea and stiff wind from E. to E.S.E. The steamer C. of D. took her in tow, and towed her for twelve hours, when her wheel-ropes parted and she had to rig up fresh steering gear. She then towed her for about twenty-three hours more, when the 18-inch hawser parted. They were then in the race of the Lizard; she stood by the barque, in considerable danger, till morning. The barque was then drifting on to the Scrag Rocks, but with great danger and difficulty the men of the C. of D. on board the barque kept her clear of them by about fifty yards. The C. of D. then took her again in tow, anchored her, after eight hours' towage, under the lee of the Lizard, abreast the Mullion, for about twenty-one hours, then again took her in tow for two hours, and with the assistance of two small tugs got her into Falmouth after six and-a-half hours' towage. £800 to the C. of D., £200 to the tugs. The Eintracht, M. M. R. Jan. 30, 1874, p. 144. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £1000

328. The F. was wrecked off the coast of South Carolina, and the passengers and crew exposed to imminent danger. A canoe and four men, at the risk of their lives, took off the passengers and crew, and £5,000 in specie. The Friendship, Bee, 175, cited in Marvin, 202. [American.] V. 5,000*l.*—A. £1000

329. The ship J. M., in a state of great distress, her captain having been drowned, and there being no one on board capable of navigating her, fell in with the barque E., the mate of which navigated the J. M. to England. The owners of the J. M. gave the mate £200, and appointed him to the command of a vessel. An action was entered by the owners, master, and crew of the E. for salvage. The Janet Mitchell, S. G. May 14, 1856. V. 29,000*l.*—A. £1000

330. In January, the screw steamer J. B., from Newport for Southampton, with coals, was quite unmanageable and leaky, with six feet of water in her, her fires out, the pumps choked, and the sea making clean breaches over her, in the Bristol Channel, close by the Nash Light, when found by the pilot-cutter P. of the T., which, at the request of the master of the J. B., stayed by her all night. The weather was very rough, but moderated next morning, when the pilot-cutters S. A. and P. came up, and the three cutters towed her from between one and a-half miles and two miles S. of the Culver Sand, whither she had drifted, to within three miles of Barnham, and near No. 3 Gore Buoy, where a tug took her in tow to the sand at Barnham. There she grounded, and was afterwards floated into the gutway. £700 to the P. of the T., £300 to pilot cutters. The Jones Brothers, M. M. R. June 8, 1877, p. 724.

Value 7,179*l.*—Award £1000

331. In November, during a gale of unusual severity from N.W. to N.N.W., with a heavy sea, the barque K. T., 443 tons register, from Liverpool to Arica, with sixteen hands and 366 tons of coal, was lying, with two anchors down, in the Mersey, near the North Wall lighthouse, with her head to the east, and signalling for immediate assistance. A hawser was got to her from the tug E., which came up. Her head was canted to N.N.W., but owing to her having gunpowder on board it was not deemed safe to take her too near the landing-stage. She was therefore towed abreast the Waterloo Dock, and held during the night, the gale continuing with heavy squalls and seas, forcing her up the river as far as Seacombe Point, but ultimately she was brought to anchor off New Brighton in nine and a-half hours. The Knight Templar, M. M. R. Jan. 14, 1881, p. 41.

V. 11,000*l.*—A. £1000

332. In February, the L. M., 600 tons, got on Margate sands. Thirty-one men from three luggers brought off an anchor and cable, and by laying out anchors and cables got her off, thus rescuing her from the loss which would have happened had the wind freshened. The Lady McNaughten, S. G. May 12, 1843.

V. 21,898*l.*—A. £1000

333. In January, the ship L., being in great distress, her master and crew were on the point of abandoning her when she was fallen in with by the ship N., 1,137 tons, and the crew, who were much exhausted, were taken on board that vessel. The master of the N. then sent some hands on board the L., and by constant pumping, they succeeded in getting her into Galle Harbour after four days' labour. The N. then left for Bombay, taking with her the master, officers, and crew of the L. Communications were had with the owners of the L. and her cargo in England, and after some repairs the L., under the command of the mate of the N., with four men and a boy of that vessel, and a crew shipped at Galle, was brought to Greenock, where she arrived on the 14th Oct. following. The salvage for the ship was settled out of court. The Cargo per Loodianah, S. G. April 21, 1863.

V. 9,000*l.*—A. £1000

334. In April, the transport steamer M., 1,257 tons, in a very heavy gale, with the sea running high, was found with her engines broken down, in distress and great danger, off Lulworth, about eight or nine miles from Weymouth Harbour, by the mail steamer A., from the Channel Islands to Weymouth with mails, &c. The A. towed her into a place of safety. The Madeira, M. M. R. Feb. 26, 1875, p. 261.

V. 53,500*l.*—A. £1000

335. In June, the iron steamer M., 456 tons, from Oporto to Southampton with cattle, fruit, &c., was found by the screw steamer G., 722 tons, and 90 h.-p., about ninety-eight miles W. of Ushant, with a burst boiler, her master, second engineer, donkeyman, and a fireman killed, her other officers and some of the crew disabled by the explosion, and the rest exhausted and unable to navigate her. The chief officer of the G. was put in charge, two tow-ropes were attached, and she was towed 200 miles in forty hours to Falmouth Harbour. There was a heavy swell, and a wind from the N. and N.E. The Marcasite, M. M. R. Dec. 10, 1875, p. 1582.

V. 24,141*l.*—A. £1000

336. In April, the barque M., of Chatham, New Brunswick, from Pensacola to Falmouth, sprung a leak, became waterlogged, and was abandoned by her crew. She was discovered derelict on May 4, 1882, seven miles from the Eddystone Lighthouse, lying on her beam ends, with her bows under water, by the paddle-wheel steam-tug R., 1,029 tons register, 75 h.-p., value £4,000, sent out in search of her. After ineffectual attempts to right her, the R. made fast with a chain cable and a hawser, and began to tow towards Plymouth. The screw steam-tug K., 1,689 tons, 45 h.-p., value £2,000, and the steam-tug P., 1,899 tons, 45 h.-p. nom., value £200, came up, and hawsers having been attached, proceeded towards Plymouth. On May 5 the Eddystone was about twelve miles off, and the three tugs continued towing till 5 a.m. on the 7th, when the P. ran dry of coals, and had to run to Plymouth for a supply for herself and the R. The tug V., sixty-eight tons, 60 h.-p., went out in search, and found her in tow of the other tugs, but the wind being from the eastward, and the tide half-flood setting to the east, very little way had been made, and the M. was drifting on to the Hand Deep Rocks. A hawser from the V. was made fast, and the M. was towed clear of the rocks, and then towards Plymouth. When about two miles past the Eddystone the P. came up again. The M. was then brought inside the Rame Head, within a mile and a-half of Penlee Sound, where she was brought up by her chains catching the ground, and could not be moved until the Government tug P. came up, and she was then brought into the inner harbour of Cattewale. The services lasted eight days. £900 to the R. and the P., £100 to the V. The Mallard, M. M. R. Aug. 4, 1882, p. 972.

Value 2,000*l.*—Award £1000

337. In September, the steamer M., 1,641 tons, from Philadelphia to Bordeaux, with wheat, was flying signals of distress, about 130 miles from Cape Prior, off the coast of Spain, when fallen in with by the steamer C., 1,776 tons, from Cardiff to Constantinople with coal. The M. had her propeller shaft tail end broken in the stern-pipe, which was itself shattered, and she was leaking through her stern-post. The weather was moderate, with a heavy N.W. swell. The C. took the M. in tow to Ferrol Harbour in about forty-two hours. The Marcia, S. G. Jan. 30, 1885, p. 70.

V. 33,940*l.*—A. £1000

338. On the 4th December, during a tremendous gale, intelligence was received at Clovelly that the ship M. Q., 1,088 tons, was in distress near Hartland Point. About 8 or 9 p.m. of the 5th two of the salvors went out in a small boat, found the launch of the M. Q., with the master and eighteen men, and piloted them into Clovelly from a position of some danger. On the morning of the 7th the salvors, the crew of the smack R., reached the M. Q. in their vessel. She was about a mile and a-quarter from the shore, all her masts were cut away, and she was pitching bows under, no one on board, and riding by one anchor only, the chain of the other having parted. There were over four feet of water in the vessel, the sea was heavy, and the wind blowing a moderate gale. The salvors with difficulty and risk boarded the M. Q. in their boat. They collected the crew's effects and put them on the smack, repaired a boat, and assisted in getting a tow-line on board the steam-tug P. which arrived. The salvors incurred £28 expenses. In consequence of a telegram the P., 60 h.-p., left Cardiff on the 5th December to go to the M. Q., but because of the severity of the gale did not reach her until the 7th at 9 a.m. The P. towed the M. Q. up the Bristol Channel, and a little above Lundy Island met the steam-tug I. D., 100 h.-p., which had left Cardiff on the 6th, but had also been detained by the gale. The two tugs towed the M. Q. to Penarth Roads, laid her on the mud, and the P. remained lashed alongside until the 10th, when she docked the ship. The Margaret Quayle, S. G. May 28, 1864.

V. 4,800*l.*—A. £1000

339. The steamer E., 2,000 tons, fell in with the Dutch galliot M. A., totally dismantled, and with a signal of distress flying. The steamer took the crew of the galliot on board at their own request, and towed the M. A. to Southampton, a distance of 300 miles, and 100 miles out of the steamer's course. The services lasted four days. The Maria Anna, S. G. July 15, 1856.

V. 5,956*l.*—A. £1000

340. In October, the M., 853 tons register, from Liverpool to Syria and Constantinople with a general cargo, had her pump (worked by a donkey-engine) choked. The water had come into the engine-room through the port discharge pipe, which was broken in a heavy gale. The screw steamer D., 1,125 tons, from Cardiff to Alexandria with railway iron, fell in with the M. off the Lizard, having seen her signals of distress. The ship and cargo were not in any danger, and the court held that the tender of £1,000 was a sufficient reward to the D. for the services of towing the M. into Falmouth, which occupied two days. The Melita, M. M. R. June 30, 1866, p. 819.

V. 95,000*l.*—A. £1000

341. In March, the steamer M., 1,855 tons gross, 1,193 tons nett, from Constantinople for Liverpool with general cargo and forty-three hands, while steaming full speed ahead in clear weather with a light wind, ran on Heraclitza Point, in the Sea of Marmora, and remained hard and fast, but not in immediate danger unless bad weather came on, as she had not sustained material damage, and was not out of the way of assistance. The screw steamer S., value £29,722, 2,052 tons gross and 1,562 nett, 230 h.-p. nom., working up to 1,100, from Constantinople for Liverpool, found the M. in this position and got two hawsers aboard, but could not tow her off till, by the advice of the master of the S., the M. was lightened by emptying her boilers and discharging part of her cargo and some coals. Lighters and labourers were obtained from the shore for this purpose, and were paid by the master of the S. After thirty-one hours' towing she was got off and safely anchored. The Morocco, S. G. June 5, 1885, p. 358. Value 43,617*l.*—Award £1000

342. The ship P. R., of 1,184 tons register, from Liverpool to Melbourne, was at early morning lying at anchor in the Mersey, when, in a moderate gale, she broke her sheer, parted her port chain, and was carried inside the Woodside landing-stage, where she touched the ground. The steam-tug U., with disconnecting engines of 120 h.-p. nominal, went to her assistance and was fastened alongside her. The tug at times thumped heavily against the ship's side, and was slightly damaged. The tug towed the ship clear of the ground, conducted her to an anchorage, and early next morning docked her. The Prince Rupert, M. M. R. March 24, 1866, p. 369. V. 47,000*l.*—A. £1000

343. The steamer V., 395 tons, 300 h.-p., from Belfast for Fleetwood, when six miles N.W. of the Isle of Man, fell in with the barque R. A., which had lost all her sound sails, was out of her course, and was burning blue lights for assistance. The V. towed the R. A. to Fleetwood. The Royal Arch, S. G. April 25, 1860. V. 19,500*l.*—A. £1000

344. In September, the S., 580 tons, from London to New South Wales, was taken in tow in a damaged state after collision, by a steamer, of the value of £60,000, and in thirty-three hours brought to Gravesend. The Sophia, S. G. Jan. 14, 1840. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £1000

345. In November, the steamer S., 482 tons, from Bilbao to Sunderland, with iron ore, and ten hands, struck on the Hasborough Sands in thick weather, and remained all night signalling for assistance. She was found derelict next day by the yawls B. of H. and Z. The B. of H. prepared anchors for laying out, and the Z. went for assistance. The steam-tugs E. and U. S. came up, with whose assistance the S. was got off and towed clear of the shoals and sands. In answer to further signals, the lifeboats M. H. and C. G. came alongside, and all hands turned to and baled out the water from the engine-room, where it was rising rapidly. Ultimately the tugs towed her into Yarmouth Roads, and thence to Harwich harbour. The Swan, M. M. R. February 18, 1881, p. 207. V. 3,834*l.*—A. £1000

346. The screw steamer T., lying in the dock at Hay's Wharf, London Bridge, on the occasion of the great fire in that vicinity in June, 1861, was in imminent danger, from which she was rescued at great risk by the steam-tug U. The Tees, S. G. March 4, 1862; 1 Lushington, 505; 7 L. T. N.S. 257. V. 4,500*l.*—A. £1000

347. A steamer of 50 h.-p., and valued at £4,000, in very violent weather and for three hours, towed, to a place of comparative safety, a vessel which had struck and was bumping on a sand, with a signal of distress hoisted, and in a very helpless and perilous state. The Traveller, 3 Hagg. 370. V. 12,246*l.*—A. £1000

348. In April, the barque W., of 139 tons, laden with chain cables, anchors, and general merchandise, and derelict, with her rudder unshipped, the gudgeon band and pintles gone, four feet of water in her hold, and making a great deal of water, was taken in tow by the steamer C., of 648 tons register, from Greenock for Hong Kong with a general cargo. While making a hawser fast, the mate's hand was severely injured. The C., after two days and a-half towing, arrived at Plymouth with the derelict, and incurred there expenses amounting to £70 for the derelict's benefit, and one hawser, value £27, was destroyed in the towing. The heavy swell, the unmanageable condition of the vessel, and the parting of the hawsers rendered the towing a task of great difficulty, though it was not attended with any great risk. The value of the C.; her freight and cargo, was £31,263. The Wigtownshire, M. M. R. March 10, 1866, p. 304. V. 2,845*l.*—A. £1000

349. In January, the Dutch ship W. P., 1,351 tons register, with a general and perishable cargo, from Batavia for Rotterdam, struck aft on the Southward Well, off the Scilly Islands, having dragged her starboard anchor, by which she was brought up in St. Mary's Roads. In answer to signals for assistance, some pilots put off in the pilot cutter P., and found her pilot on board. The P. was sent back to get an anchor and chain, which the Dutch consul refused to let the P. bring, but sent one of his own boats, the L. W., 106 tons register, 35 h.-p., the mail boat between Scilly and Penzance. The L. W. found the W. P. in a dangerous position, having two anchors ahead, chains slack under her bow, and her rudder unshipped. She was making water, and the wind was S.E. by S. After a service of eight hours, the L. W. got the W. P. off, and moored her in a place of safety. £900 to the L. W., £100 to the P. The Willem Poolman, M. M. R. June 4, 1870, p. 720.

Value 84,660*l.*—Award £1000

350. In April, the screw steamer Y., 1,477 tons nett, 1,853 tons gross register, from Hull to Boston, U.S., with twenty-eight hands, one passenger, and general cargo, stranded on the Long Sand. After she took the ground whilst working astern with the engines the propeller struck a sunken wreck, and the blades broke off. The tug H., 130 nom., working to 520 h.-p., value £11,000, bound for Shields under a towage contract, offered to give the Y. a "pull off" for £200. This was accepted, and a rope was made fast, but though the engines of the H. were put full steam ahead the Y. only moved a few feet and took the ground again. The wind at the time was fresh from S.E., and there was a heavy sea on. The tug I., 90 h.-p., working to 400, value £9,000, came up, and the two tugs together got her off. The Y., when she came off, was making water very fast in her engine-room, and it was arranged that the tugs should tow her to London. This they did, the H. having to be lashed to the Y. with ropes fore and aft, for fear of the latter sinking. The services lasted about sixteen hours. The Yeddo, M. M. R. Aug. 5, 1881, p. 969.

V. 31,068*l.*—A. £1000

351. In May, the ship N., 842 tons, worth £5,000, from Curraqueç to London, with seed and cotton, worth about £35,000, fell in with the barque Z., 672 tons, from Banjorwangle to Middleburg with sugar and coffee, in a seriously damaged state from a collision. Though the weather was fine it was held that the Z. was in no small degree of danger. The master, mate, and six of the crew of the N. assisted in pumping and repairing the damage, and the N. kept company with the Z. till the 11th, when the Lizard was sighted. A pilot then boarded the barque, and took her safely into Falmouth. The Zeepard, M. M. R. Aug. 11, 1866, p. 1010.

V. 45,000*l.*—A. £1000

352. The Z. was discovered on the coast of Africa with deficient crew, short of provisions, and with disabled gear and sails, by H.M.S. P.; a lieutenant and seven men of which took her in five months' time to Liverpool; during the continuance of service the salvors were all attacked with fever. The Zephyr, S. G. Dec. 16, 1842.

V. 3,678*l.*—A. £1000

353. The brigantine F. Q., 139 tons, from Newport to Rio Janeiro, with railway iron, after collision with the barque A., was abandoned by her master and crew, and in danger of total loss. The mate and part of the crew of the brig L. from Liverpool to Bahia, with one passenger, got on board and made her fast by two hawsers to the brig. After a short towage the hawsers parted, and the F. Q. was navigated to Cork. The Forest Queen, S. G. May 26, 1858.

V. 2,890*l.*—A. £963

354. The screw steamer A., 394 tons, broke her intermediate shaft and damaged other parts of her machinery, which impeded the working of her engines. The screw steamer P. took her in tow about fourteen miles to the eastward of the island of Galita, and towed her to Malta, 250 miles. The services lasted two days. The Arabian, S. G. Feb. 7, 1853.

V. 14,000*l.*—A. £950

355. In December, the barque S. B., 480 tons register, from Talcahuano to Queens-town, with wheat, was fallen in with in the North Atlantic Ocean in about lat. 17°26' N. and long. 35° W., the wind blowing a moderate breeze from N.N.E., with a heavy sea, by the full-rigged wooden ship S., 1,546 tons register, value £12,951, from Calcutta to Dunkirk with general cargo. The S. B. was quite out of the ordinary track of vessels. Her master in a fit of frenzy, during a disturbance on board, had shot at the steward and the mate, and the crew had batted him down. The mate was too badly hurt to navigate the ship, the steward was killed. None of the crew knew anything of navigation. The master of the S., four hands and a carpenter, boarded the S. B., and took the master of the S. B. off. The S. then gave the S. B. a lead, and the mate of the S. took charge of the S. B. to Dublin, which was reached in thirty-five days. The Standard Bearer, M. M. R. March 19, 1880, p. 369.

V. 47,000*l.*—A. £950

356. The ship I., in ballast, was ashore on Loo Key, and lay in seven and nine feet of water, drawing twelve. Five wrecking vessels, carrying fifty-four men, carried out several anchors, discharged the ship of nearly all her ballast, and hove her off. The Iconium, 5 A. R. 287, cited in Marvin, 215. [American.]

Value 2,900*l.*—Award £939

357. The ship B., 794 tons, from Chinca Islands with guano, was totally disabled when ten miles off Cloughter Wyke, and was got into the Humber by a steam-tug, assisted by a galliot, seven smacks, and three luggers. The Blanche, S. G. July 4, 1854.

V. 11,600*l.*—A. £930

358. The barque W., from Taganrog for Plymouth with wheat, and a crew of ten hands and a master, fell in with the coal-laden ship D., derelict, 100 miles west of Cape Finisterre; and the mate and four hands of the W. boarded the D., and took her, in ten days, to Falmouth. The Duke, M. M. R. May 21, 1870, p. 658.

V. 2,795*l.*—A. £930

359. In January, the brig A., which was fallen in with, derelict, by the iron screw steamer Athlete, was towed by her from Shokham Island to Milford Haven. The Andrina, M. M. R. May 14, 1870, p. 626; L. R. 3 A. & E. 286; 3 Asp. 210.

V. 2,800*l.*—A. £900

360. The ship A. was lost on Charleston Bar, and the cargo was cast ashore on several contiguous islands. The owners of these islands, with their negroes, were employed for a considerable time, in some instances for three weeks, at considerable risk to their healths and in neglect of their crops, in securing and drying the goods. They afterwards carted it to distant landings, and finally brought it to Charleston. Cotton saved sold for $12,192 = £2,439, and the court awarded one-third of the nett; tar sold for $1,178 = £235, and the court awarded a moiety. The Argus, Bee, 170, cited in Marvin, 201. V. 2,674*l.*—A. about £900

361. The E. G. was in St. George's Channel, demasted, and with a signal of distress flying. A steamer, valued at £12,000, towed her in twenty-nine hours into port. The Earl Grey, 3 Hagg. 363.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £900

362. In November, the ship M. broke adrift from her moorings in the middle of the Mersey, between Rock Ferry and Tranmere, and came into collision with the G. B.; and the two drifted together in the direction of the Pluckington Bank. By the exertions of the tugs A., L., T., R., and H., the two vessels were parted; and the M. was able to steam ahead and get out of danger. The Mysore (Liverpool Pass. Co.), M. M. R. 363. In September, the barque S., 383 tons, in lat. 37° 53' N. long. 68° 54' W., which had lost her first mate with yellow fever, and had the second mate and two out of her eight hands down with it, and her captain sick, was taken charge of by Osman Osmundsen, the only mate of the barque H., 382 tons. This man steered the S. a course for Liverpool, he and the steward taking watch and watch. On the third day the second mate, and on the sixth the master and one seaman died. Osman also was taken ill and became delirious, but was on duty next day. On the eleventh day the wind increased, and the maintop-gallant sails split before they could be taken in, owing to the shortness of hands. On the seventeenth day the second seaman died. After forty-one days the S., under Osman's command, arrived off the Great Orme's Head, and was taken to the Mersey by a tug and docked. The Skibladner, M. M. R. November 23, 1877, p. 1492; 3 Asp. N.S. 557.

V. 5,135*l.*—A. £900

364. In February, the screw steamer A., 1,325 tons gross register, from Arzen, in Algeria, to Liverpool, with esparto grass, started her deck and carried away three boats in bad weather. She also lost her foresail, forestaysail, maintopsail, mainstay-sail, main and topsail braces, and jib. Her propeller did not revolve, she drifted about 1½ knots an hour, and was quite unmanageable. In this state she was sighted, about 115 miles S.W. of Brest, by the schooner-rigged steamer F. H., 1,175 tons gross register, from Fiume to Leith, with twenty hands and a cargo of flour and barley. After several fruitless attempts in severe weather, a hawser and other ropes were attached, and the F. H. towed her to Brest in about twenty-six hours. The Alfonso, M. M. R. April 27, 1883, p. 525.

V. 22,000*l.*—A. £875

365. The ship L., having no one on board able to navigate her, master and mate having died, was fallen in with at sea in September, by the ship G., which had on board a cargo of sugar valued at £30,000. The chief mate of the G., by permission of his captain, boarded the L. and navigated her to Liverpool, where she arrived on the 30th October. The Loyal, S. G. Dec. 22, 1858. Value 8,605*l.*—Award £870

366. The F. was found derelict in the Chops of the Channel, taken in tow by a Prussian vessel, assisted by H.M.S. C., and carried into Portsmouth with risk and considerable labour. The court awarded a moiety of the nett value after deducting all expenses, probably about £850. The Flora, 3 Hagg. 430, n.

V. 1,800*l.*—A. £850

367. In January, the F., from Honduras to London, was rescued from a position of peril on a sand at the mouth of the Thames by twenty men from three smacks with the assistance of a steam vessel. £600 to smacks, £250 to steamer. The Favorite, S. G. May 28, 1840.

V. 10,000*l.*—A. £850

368. In November, the steamer N., 276 tons nett, 65 h.-p., from Rotterdam for London, with general cargo and thirty-two calves, was in Black Deep by the Long Sand and the Knock Deep, with her propeller bent and her rudder broken, when found by the tug R. O., which, with great difficulty, owing to her yawing so much, got her out of her dangerous position. When near Barrow Sands the tug D. came up, and the two tugs in three days took the N. to Thames Haven, where she was moored in safety. £350 to the R. O., £500 to the D. The Nestor, M. M. R. June 25, 1875, p. 806.

V. 9,900*l.*—A. £850

369. In September, the barque N., 404 tons, from Cardiff for Ancona, with coal, was fallen in with by the barque A. S., 570 tons register, from Cork for Dordrecht, with rice. The N. was derelict and in a miserable state of confusion, with 13 inches of water in her hold, both maintopsails hanging to the yard-arms, the ends towing alongside, her wheel unshipped, no rudder wheel ropes, compass, chronometer, sextant, or flag on board, and only her long-boat left. Three of the hands of the A. S. boarded her, and with considerable risk and great labour took her to St. David's Head, where a steam vessel was employed. The services lasted eight days. £540 salvage, £310 expenses. The Numa, M. M. R. Jan. 15, 1870, p. 84.

V. 1,725*l.*—A. £850

370. In August, the screw steamer Z., 490 tons nett, from Naples for Liverpool, with twenty-one hands, fruit and oil, broke her propeller shaft off the coast of Portugal. On 4th September, in lat. 37°40' N. and long. 9°40' W., in answer to signals, the steamer C., 1,526 tons, from Cardiff to Galatz, with coals, came up, and by request stood by the Z. that night. On boarding her next morning she was found to be making water very fast. The C. took her in tow to Cadiz, which was reached about three p.m. on 6th September. The Zadne, M. M. R. Feb. 29, 1884, p. 134.

V. 19,584*l.*—A. £850

371. In November, the steamer P. was discovered by the steamer H. A., from Newcastle to Singapore, with twenty-three hands and a cargo of coals, in the Red Sea, stranded on a coral reef, and signalling. She was in so perilous a position that all that could be done was to land those on board and the cargo, which occupied seven weeks. An attempt to tow her off was unsuccessful, and she was abandoned. The Penguin, M. M. R. July 28, 1882, p. 941.

V. 28,000*l.*—A. £840

372. The barge J. L., in tow of a steamer, got aground on Princeton Bar, in the Mississippi river, and lay in a perilous situation. The master of the steamboat enlisted his mate in the enterprise of saving the barge and cargo, and for this purpose discharged him, and also three or four hands, from any further duty on board the steamer, and proceeded on his voyage. Before leaving, however, he and the supercargo of the barge entered into a written agreement to give the mate one-half the property he might save. He procured two flat boats from a neighbouring plantation, hired twelve negroes, worked three days and nights, got the barge off, and hired a tow to New Orleans. He paid out in the service $1,208=£241 sterling. The mate claimed a moiety in fulfilment of the contract. The court held the contract not to be binding upon the owners of the property, and decreed one-sixth for salvage. The Jenny Lind, 1 Newberry R. 443, cited in Marvin, 223. [American.]

V. 5,038*l.*—A. £837

373. In April, off the Dover Pier, the steamer E., 226 tons, from Paris for London, with a general cargo, had fouled one of the Admiralty danger buoys with her propeller, and knocked a hole in her port quarter, causing a leak. The ship and cargo were in great jeopardy, and were rescued therefrom by the exertions of the steam-tugs N. and C. and the lugger W., who cut the chain of the buoy and towed the E. into Dover Harbour. £300 to the C., £270 to the N., £260 to the W. The Esther, M. M. R. July 10, 1869, p. 882. Value 8,500*l.*—Award £830

374. In October, the Norwegian barque D., 433 tons register, with timber and deck-laden, was discovered waterlogged by the ship H. B., 1,061 tons register, from St. John (New Brunswick) to Liverpool, with timber, in lat. 51 N. and long. 15°30 W., with her rudderstock broken near the water's edge, and rudder useless, some of her traces adrift, and with six feet of water in the hold. There were no instruments or charts on board, and only the binnacle compass. The H. B. assisted in pumping the D., and then, after some trouble got a hawser fixed, and towed her for a time; but the hawser parted. The H. B. remained by her all night. Next morning a jurmast was rigged, and the two vessels made the best of their way towards Queenstown. The weather was for three days very bad, and on the third day cargo had to be thrown overboard. On the fifth day the vessels parted company, but next day fell in with one another again. On the seventh day a pilot was engaged, and the D. was brought into Queenstown Harbour, and safely anchored. The Dagmar, M. M. R. Jan. 27, 1882, p. 109. V. 2,200*l.*—A. £819

375. The brig C., 258 tons, in thick weather ran on shore near the Brisons, and made much water. By the aid of the coastguard she was got off, and the steamship G., bound for Penzance, having come up, took the C. in tow, and after some difficulty, from the hawsers parting several times, succeeded in towing her to Penzance; here, owing to the hawsers parting, she was placed in a critical position near the shore. The L. W. was despatched from Penzance to her assistance, and succeeded in moving her head seaward. The G. then completed the service, with the help of the pilot lugger N. astern of the C. to steer her, the rudder being damaged. The pilot lugger W. put a pilot on board the brig. £120 to coastguard, £60 to the N. and the W., £500 to the G., £130 to the L. W. The Concordia, S. G. Feb. 24, 1864. V. 3,237*l.*—A. £810

376. In September, the schooner-rigged steamer A. S., 1,644 tons gross, 1,061 nett register, from Hamburg to North Shields, in ballast, with twenty-three hands, about ninety miles E.N.E. of the Spurn lightship, lost her screw propeller, became unmanageable, and was drifting to leeward. She was discovered by the screw steam fishing cutter O., 177 tons gross, 94 tons nett, 66 h.-p., working to 350, value £5,926, with twelve hands, from the North Sea to Hull. There was a N.N.E. gale and a high sea. The O. steamed round the A. S. three times in vain efforts to get a rope aboard, and came into collision with her. The O. stopped by the A. S. all night till the weather moderated in the morning, when her lifeboat with three men, at great risk took a hawser aboard, and the O. towed the A. S., which sheered and rolled heavily, into Snack Roads, in about six hours, and engaged two tugs to take her to Hull for £30. The O. suffered £150 damage. The Andriana Stathatos, S. G. May 15, 1885, p. 311. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £800

377. In March, the barque A., 417 tons, from the Elbe for Singapore and Penang, with general cargo, after stormy weather, sprung a leak, when she was about fourteen miles east of Yarmouth, and making for it as a port of safety. The weather was very rough, with a strong gale, and the crew had to work at the pumps. She was sighted by the D., but owing to the gale and sea, no boat could be launched, so the D. followed her by request for six hours, when the weather moderating, the A. was boarded by two hands from the D. The master of the A. was unacquainted with the numerous sands thereabouts, and the master of the D. undertook to direct her course. By this means she was brought up with her port anchor and forty-five fathoms of cable in the Winterton Roads; but the weather increasing in roughness, she began to drag, and flares were sent up, which were seen by the crews of the yawl R. J., and lifeboat C. G. In consequence of the high surf, these boats could not be launched at Scralby, but had to go by land to Caistor. The C. G. was then launched, and proceeding to the A., dropped down abreast of her port side. Some of her crew boarded the A., set to work at the pumps, and managed to keep her clear of the beach. Next morning the yawl R. J. came up, and some of her crew went on board the A., and assisted at the pumps. The water being thus reduced, the A. was sailed out round the Cockle Sand and through the Gat towards Yarmouth Roads. A steam-tug was hired to tow her thence to Harwich, the water being too low to take her to Yarmouth or Lowestoft. The D. sustained damage to the extent of £186. £456 to the D., £274 to the R. J. and C. G., £70 for hire of tug. The Angostura, M. M. R. June 3, 1881, p. 687. Value 9,500*l.*—Award £800

378. The ship A., 820 tons, in January, when off Dungeness, accidentally touched the ground, and from the season of the year was in a position of some danger. The luggers B. N. and P. went to her assistance. The B. N., assisted by the crew of the P., laid out the ship's anchor and hove the chain taut. Subsequently the steam-tugs T. P. and P. came up and were engaged, and by their united efforts, in heaving on the anchor, the ship was got off, and towed past Dover, where the luggers left her. The tow-ropes of the tug subsequently parted, and the wind and sea having increased, much difficulty was experienced in keeping the tugs clear whilst towing. Both the tow-ropes breaking, the master of the P., discovering that the ship was going right on for the Oaze Sand, warned the pilot, and the ship was anchored clear of the Sand, and was finally towed by the two tugs to the Victoria Docks. £31 for damage to one of the luggers was awarded in addition to the salvage. The Astronom, S. G. March 9, 1864. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £800

379. In January, H.M.S. P. set out to the aid of the British steamer A., which was ashore off the east side of the Bay of Aboukir. She found her with all plain sail set, two hawsers out, two kedges fast aft, with her pipes choked, and unable to use her steam power. The P. dragged her off and took her to Alexandria. The Atlas, M. M. R. May 13, 1865, p. 591. V. 45,000*l.*—A. £800

380. The A. anchored off the North Foreland; she parted from her anchors and drove on the Tongue Sand, whereby she lost her rudder; she was then for safety run on the Brake Sand. Two luggers and a steam-tug, after twelve days' services, got her off the sand, and with the aid of two steamers conveyed her to London. The Aurora, S. G. April 25, 1855. V. 4,600*l.*—A. £800

381. The ship B. had four feet of water in her hold, one of her pumps split, the other choked, her fore and maintopmast, and the head of her foremast gone. Nine of her crew were sick, the rest exhausted. A post-office packet carried her into Falmouth in six days. The Baltimore, 2 Dod. 132. V. 1,900*l.*—A. £800

382. In December, the steamer B., rigged as a fore-and-aft schooner only, with eighteen hands, and 1,017 tons of iron ore, from Bilbao to the Tyne, broke her shaft in the gland nine miles from Ushant, heading N.E. The steamer W., with sixteen hands and iron rails, railway waggons and coals, from Cardiff to Bilbao, saw her. There was a strong S.E. breeze, with a moderate swell. Two of the B.'s hawsers were taken on board the W., which proceeded at full speed ahead towards Falmouth. After fifteen hours the port hawser parted, and after twenty-two hours, just when the Lizard lights were sighted, the starboard hawser parted. The tow-rope of the W. was then made fast to the B., and in six hours the B. was safely anchored in Falmouth harbour. The W. deviated from her course for upwards of three days. The Brighton, M. M. R. April 23, 1880, p. 529. V. 11,788*l.*—A. £800

383. The B., 350 tons, was found derelict and brought into Harwich from about eight leagues off Orfordness by four smacks, together having fourteen hands. The court awarded a moiety of the nett value after deducting the usual costs and expenses, probably about £800. The Britannia, 3 Hagg. 153. V. 1,729*l.*—A. about £800

384. In March, the brigantine C., from the Benin River for Liverpool, with palm oil, was discovered by the barque O., 583 tons, from Iquique for Queenstown, with saltpetre, in about lat. 44 N., and long. 18.4 W., with two men only on board, and those sick with fever, her captain, mate, boatswain, and two seamen having died of quinsey, bronchitis, consumption, inflammation of the windpipe, and dropsy, respectively. She was in a disabled state for want of spars and sails; her rigging was all adrift, and she had no provisions. The wind was fresh, N.W., and the sea heavy. The mate, with two of the crew of the O., took some provisions on board, and having repaired the sails and cleared the pumps, navigated her for fourteen days into Brest Roads, whence she was towed to London. They slept on deck for five days for fear of infection. The Catherine, M. M. R. May 16, 1879, p. 627.

Value 7,000*l.*—Award £800

385. The ship C. of A., which was lying derelict and abandoned by all but the captain, off the Arklow Bank, in a heavy sea, was towed by the screw steamer C., into Waterford Harbour. The County of Ayr (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. July 7, 1876, p. 854.

V. 20,000*l.*—A. £800

386. In January, the crew of the ship C., fifty-two in number, were taken on board the screw steamer T., from the C., which was waterlogged and nearly on her beam ends, about thirty miles S.W. of Queenstown, and the T. towed the C. into Queenstown. The Crimea (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. June 13, 1873, p. 752.

V. 5,500*l.*—A. £800

387. The barque D., of 457 tons, had lost some of her boats and some of her water casks were destroyed; she was short of provisions, her crew were nearly all exhausted with pumping, and some were in bad health. A leak had been discovered, and it was stopped as well as it could be. The smack S., 56 tons, fell in with her on the 27th January, put two men on board, supplied her with provisions, and attempted to tow her, though unsuccessfully, as the hawser broke. After pumping her they left to obtain the aid of a steam-tug, and the barque was taken into Grimsby Docks, where she arrived about 5 p.m. of the 6th February. The Decima, S. G. May 27, 1859.

V. 22,000*l.*—A. £800

388. The steamer D., after collision with the steamer Darlington, was found by the tug Q., 143 tons, in a position of great peril off Portland, and requiring steam power to keep her afloat. A hawser was made fast and the D. was held, but she yawed and would not steer. She was accordingly grounded, and the Q. went to fetch two pumps, timber bolts, cement, &c., and two carpenters to close temporarily the hole caused by the collision. On her return the D. was made watertight, and continuously pumped until the water was reduced sufficiently to enable her engine fires to be lighted and steam got up. The Q. then left, and the tug A. coming up was asked to go and fetch the tug F., which she did, and the A. and the F. towed her to her anchors, and beached her on the mud off the Mesh. The Devonía, M. M. R. March 28, 1884, p. 198.

V. 17,500*l.*—A. £800

389. The ship D., 1,190 tons, passing the North Foreland, and while in stays, grounded and remained fast, but was not in danger. She was lightened of 200 tons, and by the aid of five steam-tugs was drawn into deep water, and subsequently taken to London. One tug had been settled with; three, 300 h.-p. each, and one of 60 h.-p., having twenty-four persons engaged on board, now claimed salvage. The Devonshire; S. G. May 28, 1850.

V. 39,000*l.*—A. £800

389a. In January, the screw steamer D. was near the Newarp Lightship when one of her boilers exploded, scalding six of her crew severely, and stopping the engines. She was thus in a perilous position; the crew were taken off in the Caistor lifeboat, and the tug E. towed the D. to Grimsby. £200 to the C., £600 to the E.. The Druid, M. M. R. May 23, 1873, p. 657.

V. 33,000*l.*—A. £800

390. The brig E. B., 215 tons, off Cape St. Vincent, dismasted, was fallen in with by the barque M., 354 tons, sixteen hands, and was with some risk of collision taken in tow, and towed in about twenty-seven hours to Cadiz. The Edward Barnett, S. G. July 8, 1847.

V. 16,000*l.*—A. £800

391. Two branch pilots and five men in a smack, at the request of Lloyd's agent, who had heard of a derelict in the Irish Channel, went in search of, found, and took it in tow, and, aided for a few hours by a revenue cutter of 170 tons, with some assistance from another smack, they towed it into Milford. Time employed two days. The Effort, 3 Hagg. 166.

V. 1,600*l.*—A. £800

392. In December, the screw steamer G., 1,700 tons, from Bussorah for London with general cargo, touched the ground in the Suez Canal and broke her propeller blades. The wind was N.W., strong, and with a heavy sea. She was drifting to leeward and rolling heavily in the trough of the sea, when found by the steamer A., 1,901 tons gross, value £96,480, from Alexandria to Liverpool with grain and cotton. The A. took her in tow, and after three days' towage, involving to the A. a delay of one day and a half, but no extraordinary risk, brought her to Malta, 323 miles distant. The Gorji, M. M. R. April 25, 1884, p. 262. Value 28,226*l.*—Award £800

393. In May, the brig-rigged steamer G., 2,173 tons, from Rotterdam to Batavia, with thirty-four passengers, mails, and a general cargo, took fire in the Red Sea, about lat. 20°33' W. long. 38°23' E. The weather and sea were calm, with fresh breeze from N. She was flying signals of distress when discovered by the steamer B., 1,433 tons nett and 2,207 tons gross, which took the mails and passengers. The master and chief engineer went on board the G. and found that the fire was in No. 2 hold, before the bunkers and low down among the cargo, and that it had been burning some two hours. The hatches were replaced, and a steam pipe was inserted in the hold, by which means the fire was kept well under until the G., accompanied by the B., arrived at Suez in about eighty-seven hours. The Guelderland, S. G. Dec. 9, 1884, p. 806. V. 85,000*l.*—A. £800

394. The schooner H. had sustained considerable damage in a storm, and her master was confined to his bed by illness. The brig S. G. fell in with her, and towed her to Plymouth, a distance of 1,000 miles. The services lasted from the 3rd to the 22nd May. The Harriett, S. G. Dec. 5, 1853; 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 180. V. 3,800*l.*—A. £800

395. The steamboat H. D. B. sunk in the Mississippi river, was raised and saved in twenty-one hours by an apparatus called "a diving-bell boat," constructed for such purposes, which cost $20,000=£4,000 sterling. The pumps threw from 150 to 200 barrels of water in a minute. The boat went 200 miles to render the service. The H. D. Bacon, 1 Newberry, 275, cited in Marvin, 224. [American.] V. 5,000*l.*—A. £800

396. The schooner H. was found capsized and derelict near the Owers by the smack P., which, after towing her with much difficulty for several hours, received some assistance from two luggers, and on the next day got her into Littlehampton. A lieutenant of the coastguard, with two boats and ten men, rendered very effective aid. The Helene, 3 Hagg. 430, n. V. 1,600*l.*—A. £800

397. In November, the screw steamer L., 1,188 tons register, from Bergen to London with twenty hands and timber, broke the tail shaft of her propeller about five miles from the Kalboden lightship, out of the track of steamers. The weather was hazy and with a fresh breeze from S.W. and a bad sea. The L. was drifting to leeward between one and two knots an hour. She was found in this critical position by the screw steamer D., 978 tons, value £23,725, which agreed to tow her to Helsingfors or Revel. The Revel Stone lightship had been removed, and there was great danger of running on the Revel Rock. The D. took the L. in tow and rounded Nargen Island, with the Nargen lightship S. by W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W. A pilot was then taken on board, and the two vessels proceeded for Revel Roads, where the D. cast off and proceeded on her voyage. The services lasted twenty hours. The Leda, M. M. R. July 7, 1882, p. 844. V. 15,977*l.*—A. £800

398. The ship L. was off Walmer Castle, in imminent danger, with a heavy gale from about E., and a heavy sea. The crews of two luggers and two steam-tugs, thirty-five in all, with great exertions and risk of life, and after services of some duration, towed her into Ramsgate. The Lion, S. G. July 8, 1857. V. 4,200*l.*—A. £800

399. In October, the screw steamer L. R., 350 tons, from Rotterdam to Newcastle with a general cargo, aground on a bar off Brielle, was got clear and towed safely into Hull, by the screw steamer from Rotterdam to Hull with passengers. The Lord Raglan, S. G. Feb. 17, 1860. V. 10,600*l.*—A. £800

400. In April, the barque L., 572 tons, was discovered by the smack Z., abandoned and aground on the Burnham Flats, striking heavily, the wind and sea being very heavy and the tide three-quarters ebb. The crew of the lifeboat J. and M., and three of the hands of the smack T., which came up immediately afterwards, boarded her. The smack W. had picked up her crew. She was beating heavily, and it was feared she would momentarily become a wreck. Her master refused to go on board her again. The tow-rope of the L. was taken on board by the tug O., which towed her into deep water, and to Lynn in three days. The Lucy, M. M. R. July 23, 1875, p. 936. V. 3,500*l.*—A. £800

401. In November, the screw steamer L., 1,277 tons gross, with a crew of twenty hands and cargo of cotton, from Wilmington, North Carolina, for Liverpool, broke her high-pressure piston and had her lower stuffing-box knocked off; the low pressure would not work after disconnecting. She was lying in the trough of the sea about two and a-half miles off the South Bishop Rocks, heading S.S.W., and signalling for assistance. A strong hurricane from W.N.W. was blowing. In this dangerous position she was found by the screw steamer S., 751 tons gross, twenty hands, six passengers, general cargo, from Bristol to Belfast and Glasgow, which towed her to Milford Haven in about seven and a-half hours. The Lykus, M. M. R. Jan. 25, 1884, p. 54.
Value 43,970*l.*—Award £800

402. The ship M., 648 tons, after passing Sharp Peak Point, in the River Min, missed stays, and took the ground, although the starboard anchor with thirty fathoms of cable was at once payed out, and the sails furled. From this position she was rescued by H.M. steam gunboat H., and was subsequently taken in tow and anchored in a safe position. The services lasted three days. The Magnolia, S. G. March 26, 1863.
V. 22,000*l.*—A. £800

403. The French steamer P. was in the Bay of Biscay, entirely disabled by injury to her machinery. The steamer D. towed her to Plymouth Sound in three days. The Paris, S. G. April 21, 1854; 1 Spinks' Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 289.
V. 4,060*l.*—A. £800

404. In May, the P., on the Scrobie Sand, with four to five feet of water in her hold, and abandoned, was got off and taken into Yarmouth by thirty men from three boats. The Patriot, S. G. July 27, 1843.
V. 4,000*l.*—A. £800

405. The Netherlands ship-of-war P. F., having suffered considerable damage off the Scilly Islands, was brought into Mount's Bay by the assistance of the master and crew of the British brig Howe. The Prins Frederick, 2 Dodson, 451.
V. 27,750*l.*—A. £800

406. In December, the iron ship R. F., 1,585 tons, from Glasgow to Sydney, with iron pipes, pig-iron, and general cargo, was in a helpless condition about thirty miles E. of Madeira, having lost her topmast, her foremast, nearly all her spars, and most of her sails. Her square sails and fore-and-aft sails were of little use, except with a leading wind. She was rolling heavily, drifting to the E., had one of her crew disabled, and had lost two others. She had been in this state a month when found by the screw steamer F., 2,174 tons gross, 1,417 tons nett, 200 h.-p. nom., value £75,000, from Liverpool to Monte Video, with thirty-two hands and general cargo. The F. lowered a boat, hauled a wire hawser from the R. F. on board, and got the head of the R. F. off shore. After about an hour the hawser parted, and was only got on board a second time by the F. going astern of the R. F. at great risk of collision. She then took her to Funchal Roads. The weather was comparatively calm, but with a heavy swell. The River Falloch, S. G. May 29, 1885, p. 345.
V. 36,699*l.*—A. £800

407. In November, the screw steamer R. L. A., 452 tons, with sixteen hands and a cargo of sugar and potatoes, four days out from Hamburg for London, ran short of coals, and in severe gales started her sternpost and shipped much water. She was found flying signals, about twenty-five miles east of Lowestoft, wind W., by the trawl fishing smack T. A., 54 tons, the fishing-dandy H., 56 tons, and the fishing-dandy A. Warps were made fast—a task requiring great skill—and the R. L. A. was towed towards Yarmouth clear of the Leman and Ower Sands, the weather being so rough that the smacks once cast adrift, but another hawser being made fast, the smacks continued towing. Being unable to weather the Cross Sand, they, while waiting for the ebb tide, veered the ship to the east, hung her there for an hour, and then headed her for Hasborough Gat, but the warp of the A. parted, and she commenced to drift into shallow water. The T. A., after several attempts, again got a warp on board the R. L. A., and she was brought through the Cockle Gat into Yarmouth Roads, and thence taken by a tug to Lowestoft. The services lasted twenty-four hours. The R. L. Alston, M. M. R. February 18, 1881, p. 207.
V. 11,100*l.*—A. £800

408. In March, the steamer S. was discovered by the steamer H., 1,140 tons nett, 1,732 tons gross register, 150 h.-p. nominal, lying with her head to the N.N.E. off the Zarafana Light, about sixty miles from Suez. She had lost her rudder and rudder-post, and was making water. There was a strong sea running. A hawser from the H. was made fast, and the S. was with much difficulty, owing to her bad steering, towed at the rate of six to seven knots towards Suez. When about six miles from Suez the hawser broke, and the sea being smooth, the two vessels were lashed together. By this means the H. was enabled to tow the S. through the shipping to a safe berth in Suez Bay, after twelve hours towing in all. The value of the H. was £40,000. The Shildon, M. M. R. July 15, 1881, p. 873.

Value 26,532*l.*—Award £800

409. In February, the ship S. D., from Liverpool for San Francisco with wheat, was found by the tug L. E., derelict, off the Skelligs, and rolling considerably, with only her mizen topsail set. After considerable difficulty the L. E. got her in tow, and took her in three days to Queenstown. The sea was heavy. The Sydney Dacres (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. May 28, 1875, p. 678.

V. 50,000*l.*—A. £800

410. In November, the master of nine luggers on Deal beach descried the barque T., 488 tons, from Carthagena for Shields, with lead, copper ore and esparto, driving rapidly broadside towards the main, the wind blowing heavily from S.S.E., and the sea being heavy also. When the luggers reached the barque, she was found to have grounded on Deal beach broadside on, with her port side to the shore, and her head about N. by E. Some of the lugger's men fetched a large lugger called the T., which took on board, and laid out in an E.S.E. direction, the barque's starboard anchor with 120 fathoms of cable, and then fetched a stream anchor and hawser from the barque, carried it out E. by S., and let it go. The barque's port anchor was then laid out in an E. direction. By the united exertions of all the luggers and the steam-tug W. the barque was got afloat, towed to a good berth, and brought up. The T. twice struck the masts of the barque. One of the flukes of the port anchor of the barque, which was slung astern of the T., struck her under the water, and made it necessary to pump. The Thames, M. M. R. June 15, 1867, p. 752.

V. 7,250*l.*—A. £800

411. A vessel got on a sand ten miles from Calais, where, in consequence of the state of the weather, no steamer could for four days be prevailed upon to go to her assistance. She was without a rudder and dismantled (but had in the meantime received some assistance from three fishing-boats), and on the fourth day was got off and towed into Calais by a steamer engaged for the purpose. The United Kingdom, 3 Hagg. 411.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £800

412. The ship A. having run on to some dangerous rocks on the Welsh coast, the crews of two boats went to her, and by means of advice given by them she was got off and taken into Port Griffith Creek, where she was in great danger. The steamer O. went from Holyhead and towed her clear of the surrounding rocks. The services of the steamer lasted 2½ hours. £700 to steamer, £80 to boat's crew. The Advance, S. G. March 7, 1854.

V. 60,000*l.*—A. £780

413. The barque D., coal laden, in the month of December, was near the Dudgeon lightship, having received damage in a gale; her cargo had shifted, she had a list to port, and the wind and sea were heavy. Two fishing smacks, the R. and the T., took her in tow, but could not make much headway. The R. took off the master and crew of the D. and landed some of the crew at Grimsby. The steamer L. C., 377 tons, came up, and was employed by the smacksmen to tow the D. for one-third of the salvage they should recover. Two other smacksmen arrived, and were engaged to pump. The L. C., with some difficulty and labour, after breaking her tow-ropes, towed the D. to Grimsby Road, where she left her. The smacksmen employed two tugs to dock the barque, and paid them six guineas. Services of smacks lasted four days, of the steamer thirty-eight hours. The Douglas, S. G. May 10, 1864.

V. 2,640*l.*—A. £766

414. Two vessels got another off some rocks near one of the Cape de Verd Islands, and into deep water. One of the vessels was settled with out of court. The Haidee, 1 Notes of Cases, 602.

V. 14,000*l.*—A. £760

415. In February, the screw steamer A., 1,550 tons register, got on shore in St. Margaret's Bay at low water, and, with the wind dead on shore, was in danger of going to pieces if bad weather came on. She was got off by the steamer B., 396 tons, in about three-quarters of an hour. The Agamemnon, M. M. R. June 18, 1875, p. 775.

Value 150,000*l.*—Award £750

416. In December, the barque C., 645 tons register, was found waterlogged by the smack L., 69 tons, off the Dogger Bank. Attempts were made to board her, and to throw a line, but without success. A boat was lowered, and the crew of the C. were taken off and to Hull. Three days later the C. was found by the tug A., 19 tons, derelict, about twenty-five miles east of the Longstone, taken in tow, and after forty-seven hours brought to an anchorage in the Tyne Harbour. The weather was bad. £250 to the L., £500 to the A. The Charlotta, M. M. R. May 4, 1883, p. 558.

V. 2,400*l.*—A. £750

417. In December, the Russian barque D. M., with timber, was found aground, derelict and waterlogged, on the N.W. side of Hasborough Sands, near the S.W. buoy, by the tugs M. and A. W. They made fast a hawser, and slewed her head round. The A. W. then left to obtain help. The yawl G., with seventeen hands, came up, and for four days the salvors made efforts to get her off, but only succeeded in getting her some way towards the edge of the sand. They left her in that position, and during the night she came off, and was fallen in with by the steamer E. E., 841 tons and 99 h.-p., which made fast to her and tried to tow her. When Wintaston was bearing S.W. and the Cockle Lightship S., the tug U. S., 200 h.-p., and the lifeboat G. came up, and found that all the tow-ropes but one had been broken by the E. E. Under agreement the D. M. was taken in tow by the tug U. S., which, with the aid of the M., took her to Yarmouth in four days. £533 to tugs, lifeboat and yawl, and £217 to the E. E. The Die Matrone, M. M. R. April 12, 1878, p. 469.

V. not stated.—A. £750

418. In October, the iron screw steamer D., 537 tons nett and 90 h.-p., twenty miles E. of the Dowsin Light, with a broken shaft and drifting, hailed the smack M. to lie by. The wind was blowing a gale from the N.W., with a heavy sea. Next morning, when the D. was in about six fathoms of water, at the north end of the Ower Sands, the smack E. came up, and the two smacks towed her towards Yarmouth, as far as off Hasborough, when the warp of the M. parted. They stayed by her during the night, and next morning the screw steamer R. hove in sight, took the D. in tow, and brought her to the Nore, whence she was taken by a tug to London. £450 to the R., £180 to the M., £120 to the E. The Dione, M. M. R. April 23, 1875, p. 518.

V. 13,400*l.*—A. £750

419. In October, the C., from London to the West Indies, on fire off the Motherbank, was towed at great risk of life by two fishing smacks with sixteen hands to the beach. The Colonist, S. G. May 3, 1838.

V. 1,500*l.*—A. £750

420. In December, the barque E., timber laden, was discovered, derelict and in considerable danger in that stormy season of the year, off St. Anu's Light in the Bristol Channel, by the crew of a pilot cutter, who informed the master of the tug T. The barque was taken in tow by the tug, which had to disconnect her engines several times during the towage, as the barque had lost her rudder. She was got on to the mud at Milford in three days. The England, M. M. R. May 13, 1865, p. 591.

V. 2,000*l.*—A. £750

421. In March, the H. was in collision with the T., and had carried away some of the ironwork of the footway and railings, smashed in some of her stern-plates, and carried away her bowsprit, jibboom and head-gear. She was lying in a helpless condition between the S. end of the Woodside quay and the quay wall, with her port bow canted in against the quay wall, and her stem jammed about four yards under the bridge. The weather was dark and dirty, with a fresh gale, squalls and rain. The paddle-wheel steam-tug G. E., 109 tons, came up, a hawser was made fast, and the H. was drawn away from the bridge and held till the tug T. came up. By their joint assistance the H. was taken to the Alfred Dock. £600 to the G. E., £150 to the tug T. The Hermione, M. M. R. May 11, 1883, p. 589.

V. 12,885*l.*—A. £750

422. In February, the L., 700 tons, from the East Indies to London, was driving two miles from Margate towards the cliffs in a hurricane, when two luggers with twenty-five hands put off to her aid, ran her aground, discharged part of her cargo, got her off, and took her to Gravesend. The services lasted several days, and involved some risk. The Larkins, S. G. July 22, 1843. Value 70,000*l.*—Award £750

423. The brig M. M., 230 tons, was in a dismantled state off the Land's End. A steamer of 286 tons and 160 h.-p., towed her for nineteen hours about 105 miles, into Plymouth. The Meg Merrilies, 3 Hagg. 346. V. 9,500*l.*—A. £750

424. In November, the R. J. was waterlogged and disabled three or four miles N.E. by E. of the N. Sand Head, the sea running very heavily, her crew were worn out with fatigue, her sails were all split or blown away, her donkey-engine was broken down, and she had fourteen feet of water in her hold, and was flying signals. The lugger B. G. came up, and was sent for steam assistance. Next day the tug R. came up with the R. J. about six miles E. of N. Foreland, and was sent after the lugger B. G., which the R. overtook, and sent back to Broadstairs. The R. brought back the tug H. to the R. J., and the three towed the R. J. to Gravesend on the day following, five of the crew of the lugger B. G. remaining on board to assist in pumping. On the third day she was towed to the Commercial Docks. The Red Jacket, M. M. R. May 2, 1873, p. 561. V. 11,000*l.*—A. £750

425. In September, the screw steamer R., 508 tons, from London for Gibraltar with a general cargo, in lat. 45°35' N. and long. 8°5' W., totally disabled, with her boilers burnt out, was boarded by the mate and four hands of the screw steamer B., 643 tons nett, and 99 h.-p. A tow-rope was got on board, and the R. was towed a distance of 320 miles to Falmouth in a little less than three days, a service of considerable danger to both steamers, as there was a dense fog during the whole of one day. The Risca, M. M. R. March 17, 1876, p. 340. V. 54,138*l.*—A. £750

426. The screw steamer R., 462 tons, when in the Formby Channel, was discovered to be on fire in the after-hold, which was chiefly filled with nitrate of soda. Her head was immediately put about to return to Liverpool, but the smoke in the engine-room was so dense, that the engines were obliged to be stopped. The steam-tug S. came up, passed a hawser to the R., and towed her some distance up the Mersey, where she was anchored and water pumped into her after-hold by the S., the T. C., and two other steam-tugs. The fire was extinguished, and the R. was docked on the following morning. The Rita, S. G. July 28, 1862; 7 L. T. N.S. 258. V. 38,000*l.*—A. £750

427. The barque R., two days out from Monte Video, was discovered to be on fire, and put back to Monte Video, and anchored about eight miles from that port. H.M. steam-tug L. took her in tow with the view of putting her on shore at the fort of San José; both vessels, however, grounded on the rocks at the entrance of the harbour. The barque was got off by a small Brazilian steamer, and the L. followed. Her crew then assisted in extinguishing the fire, and performing various other services. The services lasted altogether about twenty days. The Rosalie, S. G. Dec. 20, 1853; 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 188; 18 Jur. 337. V. 8,800*l.*—A. £750

427a. In March, in lat. 35°56' N. and long. 64°5' W., the Norwegian barque S., with timber, which was leaky and derelict, was boarded by the mate and crew of the men of the barque E. K., who with great difficulty brought her into Cork Harbour on April 16. The Softid (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. July 7, 1876, p. 854. V. 2,880*l.*—A. £750

428. The P. had her screw broken, and after making several signals of distress, she was found by the F. in the North Sea and brought safely to Heligoland, where a tug took charge of her. There was no danger to the F. Frederick and Peter der Grosse, Assistance, Hamb. H. G. Z. 1877, pp. 103, 104. [German.] V. 22,700*l.*—A. £750

428a. The A. L. was aground on a sand bank near Wangeroog. The D. brought her off and towed her to Bremerhaven next day. Diana and Andrew Lovitt, Assistance, Decisions of the Reichs Oberhandels, gericht, vol. 4, pp. 422—443. [German.] V. 39,570*l.*—A. £750

429. In April, the iron screw steamer C. was ashore on a bank ten miles W. of Ochakor, and lying with her head about N.N.W. The steamer A. made fast, and towed till the hawser broke. About 100 tons of the C.'s cargo were then discharged, and ultimately she was got off, and the discharged cargo put on board again by the A. This took about twenty-six hours. The Crosby, M. M. R. Aug. 10, 1877, p. 1015.

Value 41,092*l.*—Award £740

430. In February, a fire broke out on board the screw steamer E., 2,030 tons gross register, from Bombay to London with an inflammable cargo. The pumps were worked. The screw steam-tug S. came up and set her fire hose to work, assisted by the tugs V. and U. S., and the Gravesend Fire Brigade, one of whose engines was brought alongside by the steamer C.; some Gravesend watermen also assisted, and four of them went down under the boilers. When the fire was put out the S., the U. S., and the V., towed her into the Albert Dock. £300 to the tugs, £175 to the watermen, £100 to the C., £160 to the Fire Brigade. The Ethiopia, M. M. R. May 11, 1883, p. 589.
V. 67,029*l.*—A. £735

431. The barque B., 381 tons, had her tiller-band broken away from the rudder head and temporarily repaired. Eight out of fourteen of the crew were suffering from scurvy. When near Dungeness on the 18th May, the steam-tug E. was engaged to tow her to Gravesend and London for £28, and the usual dock order, the barque having a pilot on board. When off the South Foreland two men, in the yawl M. A., were engaged to assist in working the ship to London for 30*s.* Their boat was fastened astern, and was subsequently lost. The barque was brought up by her starboard anchor and sixty fathoms of chain in the Gull Stream, about two miles from Ramsgate, when the tug cast off, and the weather having become very bad and the wind blowing heavily with a heavy sea, made for Ramsgate to get a lugger to steer the barque. On the next day the barque lost her port anchor, and on the same evening the windlass broke, and the end of the starboard chain was attached to the foremast. On the 20th the lugger P. came up, and three of her crew boarded the barque at risk to their lives, and were engaged to assist the ship. A signal was then hoisted, whereupon the E. came up and took the barque in tow, she having slipped from her starboard anchor, and having only a small anchor left. On the afternoon of the same day the steam-tug M. was also employed to assist the barque, and the two tugs, after some difficulty from the parting of the M.'s hawser, conducted the barque to the Nore, the P. steering the vessel, and the barque was then brought up by her spare anchor. On the next morning the tugs were again made fast, one on each side of her, and took her to Gravesend, where the lugger cast off, and the barque was conducted to the London Docks. £200 to the E., £250 to the M., £200 to the P., £80 to the M. A. The Burnside, S. G. March 16, 1864.
V. 21,000*l.*—A. £730

432. The ship V. struck a ledge of rocks in the night, was forced over, and came to anchor in a dangerous situation, with rocks near by under her lee. She was much damaged, and had from seven to nine feet water in her when the salvor steamer towed her to Boston. The Versailles, 1 Curtis, Rep. 353; cited in Marvin, 206. [American.]
V. 24,000*l.*—A. £720

433. In November, the barque A. M., 837 tons register, with seventeen hands, general cargo and nine passengers, from London to Otago, took the ground abreast of the coastguard station at Kingsdown. The A. M.'s signals were seen by the crew of the K. lifeboat, and with the assistance of some horses from a neighbouring farmhouse the boat was dragged along the beach abreast of the A. M. The rocket apparatus was similarly got into position, and the passengers saved by it. The sea meanwhile was breaking right over the A. M. Early next morning she was lying with her head about S.W., nearly broadside on to the shore, where she had made a dock for herself, with a heavy list to port. Her starboard bower anchor was dragged up the beach and firmly secured, and a chain cable was made fast to it from the ship's windlass. All hands were set to work to save the cargo, which was taken in carts to Deal. The services lasted thirty-two hours. The A. M. was eventually floated off and towed to London. The Araby Maid, M. M. R. 1881, p. 238.
V. 32,786*l.*—A. £700

434. In September, the Russian-Finnish barque A., 697 tons, laden with wood and tallow, and bound from Christianstad for London, got aground on the south head of the Long Sand. The wind was from the southward and westward, and the vessel and cargo were in considerable danger. The steam-tug P., with the help of the smacks the M. P., the A., the A. I., and the I., got the barque off the sand and took her into Harwich harbour, where she made water at the rate of two feet per hour. The crews of the five salving vessels numbered thirty-two persons, and they were forty-eight hours performing the service. The Cargo ex Astrea, M. M. R. March 31, 1866, p. 402. Value 2,529*l.*—Award £700

435. In November, the barque A., 665 tons register, with timber, was off the Shipwash Strand in an E.N.E. gale and a heavy sea. Her decks had been swept on the previous day in a fearful storm, her deck-houses, bulwarks, and all her boats, but one, were gone. The captain and one hand had left to seek assistance. The screw fishing steamers, W. and F., were hailed and put out a boat manned by three hands, who, at most imminent risk, boarded the A., but the boat was upset in doing so. After great labour, the two tow-ropes breaking several times, she was towed in safety to the Thames and docked. The Australie, M. M. R. March 21, 1873, p. 367. V. 2,000*l.*—A. £700

436. In January, the barque C., laden with lead and grass, was within 1½ mile of the Broad Sand, Torbay, with the wind driving violently on to the sand and a heavy sea on. She had been exposed to a terrific storm the previous night and was waterlogged with seven feet of water in her, and her mizenmast was gone. She had two anchors down, her crew were exhausted and unable to work, and she was in great danger of parting with her anchor and being driven upon the Broad Sand. The steam-tug P., having been telegraphed for, about three p.m. left Dartmouth Harbour, having nine men on board in addition to her crew, and with all hatches battened down she succeeded in rounding Berry Head through a tremendous sea and reaching Torbay. She placed five of her additional crew on board the barque, and then proceeded to the assistance of another vessel. She afterwards returned to the barque and towed her into Dartmouth. The Celestina, M. M. R. April 28, 1866, p. 530. V. 6,900*l.*—A. £700

437. In November, the B. was drifting about quite unmanageable in the neighbourhood of Dasser Island. There was a nasty current setting in towards the land, and but for the assistance of the C., the B. would have drifted on to the land, or have been driven out to sea. The C. brought her to such a position as enabled the signalman at the Lion's Rump to see her signals and send off a tug, which took her to Table Bay. The Batavier (Cape Town Sup. Co.), M. M. R. Dec. 29, 1876, p. 1653. V. 35,000*l.*—A. £700

438. The steamer B. S. left Malta for the Crimea. The weather was stormy, and the ship made water, putting out the fires in the engine-room, and was in a state of very considerable distress. The French ship-of-war J. took her in tow, and towed her until the steamer L. E. (who entered this action) came up and took her in six days to Constantinople. The Black Sea, S. G. Dec. 18, 1856. V. 5,000*l.*—A. £700

439. In March, the screw steamer C., 700 tons nett, 1,091 tons gross register, 95 h.-p., twenty-two hands, with wheat, oats, and rye, from Nicolaieff for Hamburg, took the ground on the Greowitsi Bank, fifteen miles E. of Odessa, in fine weather, with the wind light from N. and a smooth sea. An anchor was taken out by one of her boats, and spare spars, &c. thrown overboard, but she would not come off. The screw steamer R., 764 tons nett, 1,198 tons gross register, 130 h.-p. nom. working to 600, with twenty hands and a cargo of rye, from Nicolaieff for Rotterdam, in answer to signals, bore down on her. Her master boarded the C. and agreed to tow her off the sand. In two hours the head of the C. was canted, but she did not come off. It was then getting dark and the weather worse, so 200 quarters of rye were thrown overboard. In two hours more she was got off, and in a further two hours got to Odessa. The R. ran some risk from the vicinity of the sand. The Coanwood, M. M. R. July 21, 1882, p. 907. V. 21,000*l.*—A. £700

440. In September, the barque C., 638 tons, from Archangel to London, with deals, was dismasted and waterlogged in the North Sea. Her master and crew were taken off by a fishing smack, and a second smack, with the aid of two steam-tugs (in all twenty hands), got her to Yarmouth and beached her after twenty-four hours' service. The Coromandel, S. G. Feb. 27, 1857. V. 2,519*l.*—A. £700

441. In August, the barque E. N., 904 tons nett, with sugar and hemp, while in tow of the tug R. A., came athwart the bows of the iron barque C., at anchor abreast of Seacombe and W. of mid-river in the Mersey, became firmly locked, and was in considerable danger of going down, and carrying with her the C., which was dragging her anchors. The weather was moderate, the wind being from S., and the tide three knots flood nearly high water. The steam-tugs S. K., 190 tons gross, 87 tons nett, value £6,000, and H., 224 tons gross, 31 tons nett, value £11,500, towed the E. N. clear of the C., which was brought to anchor by the H., the E. N. being towed northwards by the S. K. £500 to the S. K., £200 to the H. The Cumbrian and The Elizabeth Nicholson, S. G. Oct. 30, 1885, p. 697.

442. In January, the screw steamer D., 823 tons, from Sunderland to Malaga, with salt fish, which two days before had struck on a sunken rock, broken her propeller, and damaged her rudder, was taken in tow by the screw steamer A. O., 817 tons, towards Falmouth, but it was afterwards found necessary to steer for Plymouth. The wind was blowing a gale, and the sea heavy. In twenty-one hours from first taking her in tow the A. O. brought the D. inside the breakwater at Plymouth. The Danmark, M. M. R. May 11, 1877, p. 595.

V. 10,701*l.*—A. £700

443. In October, the F., 190 tons register, from Stockholm for Liverpool, with a cargo of iron, had been damaged through a collision. She was fallen in with by the screw steamer N. C., 570 tons register. There was a heavy sea running clean over her, and she was found to have five or six feet of water in her hold. The steamer ultimately towed her to Weymouth Roads, and placed her in safety there. The Fairlina, M. M. R. April 21, 1866, p. 498.

V. 5,000*l.*—A. £700

444. The barque F. was got off the Tongue Sand by two luggers, and was assisted by them to a place of safety. The Freedom, S. G. Feb. 17, 1863.

V. 8,000*l.*—A. £700

445. In October, the steamer J., 306 tons gross, from Swansea to St. Malo, broke her propeller and became unmanageable. She was lying with her head to W., about twenty miles off Ile de Bas, France, in a moderate sea with W. wind. In answer to her signals the steamer O., 271 tons nett, 362 gross, from St. Nazaire for London, with fruit and thirteen hands, came up and took her in tow for Plymouth, where she was anchored. The Jacinth, S. G. Feb. 13, 1885, p. 102.

V. 4,200*l.*—A. £700

446. In November, the schooner M., from Swansea to Rouen with copper, lost both masts and bowsprit. The crews of five boats, thirty-five men in all, at great risk to their lives, went off to her in very tempestuous weather, got her out of her very perilous position, and ultimately to Ilfracombe. The Mary, S. G. March 12, 1841.

V. 9,980*l.*—A. £700

447. In July, the barque L. M. M., 491 tons, was discovered by the steamer L., 488 tons, within seven miles of the sand banks off Lytham and Blackpool, with her sails flying adrift, having lost foremast, foretopmast and royal mast, and with only lower maintopsail set. There was a strong gale from W.S.W., and a very heavy sea. The L. changed her course from S.½W. to due E., ran under the bows of the L. M. M., and with great difficulty, after many attempts, got a hawser on board, by which the L. towed her for four hours, and took her to the Rock Light, where she got a pilot. The Lady Muriel May, M. M. R. Dec. 22, 1876, p. 1619.

V. 3,500*l.*—A. £700

448. In February, the barque M. S., 468 tons, from Newcastle to Baltimore, with soda and soda ash, struck upon the Shingles Sand, the Tongue Lightship bearing S. by E., and the Shingles Beacon S.S.W.½W., about one mile and a half. She strained very much, her masts dropped two or three inches, two of the beams of her mainhold were broken, and she was leaking. The fishing smack K., 32 tons, with six hands, came up and anchored abreast of the M. S. There was a moderate breeze from S.W. and an ebb tide. The K.'s men boarded the M. S. and commenced getting the cargo out of the forehold. After they had been doing this for about three hours the lifeboats F. A. N. and Q., with twenty-eight hands, came up from Margate and assisted in getting her off on the last tide on which she could have been got off. The luggers S., 32 tons, with nineteen hands, and E., 32 tons, also came up, and the crews of all the boats set to work lightening the vessel. She continued to make water, and the port bilge had to be battened with canvas and oakum. Next day, about 3 a.m., the S.

took out the M. S.'s starboard anchor and five fathoms of cable, hauled her to the S.E., and then laid it out. The steam-tug C., 58 h.-p., which had come up, tried to get the M. S. off, but had to desist, as she herself struck several times. The tug B. L. came up, and about 2.45 p.m. or 3, with the assistance of the tug C., dragged the M. S., whose sail was all set, off and over the sand into deep water, took her to Gravesend in ten hours, stayed by her all night, and docked her in Millwall Docks in the afternoon of the next day. The Mary Stewart, M. M. R. June 24, 1881, p. 785.

449. In April, the steam-yacht M. E., value £18,000, while on a pleasure cruise in the Mediterranean, ran aground in a fog on the rocks near Port Genoves, on the coast of Spain. Endeavours were made to get her off by means of her own engines, but they were unsuccessful, and she signalled to the steamer A., which came to her assistance. The A. tried to tow the M. E. off the rocks, and several hawsers were destroyed, but at length the M. E. came off into deep water, and the A. proceeded on her voyage. The service was performed in fine weather. The Merrie England, The Times, June 28, 1884.

V. 18,000*l.*—A. £700

450. The barque M., on the S.E. part of the Sherringham Shoal, after lying there a quarter of an hour, forged off with the loss of her rudder and hoisted signals of distress. The Sherringham lifeboat A., the yawl H., and a number of boatmen, with the steam-tug P., at great risk towed the M. to Hasborough, and from thence, with the assistance of the steam-tug V., obtained from Yarmouth by the yawl, to Yarmouth Roads, all the salvors assisting. There were thirty-two hands in the lifeboat, and eighteen in the yawl. The Milka, S. G. July 30, 1857.

V. 6,700*l.*—A. £700

451. The barque O. having sustained considerable damage by collision, the crew, with the exception of two hands, abandoned her. The barque P. observed the O. with a signal of distress flying, and with some difficulty put on board of her the second officer and four men, who brought her up at the Motherbank. The Orbona; S. G. Nov. 11, 1853; 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 166.

V. 5,082*l.*—A. £700

452. In October, the ship O. was met with, derelict, by the barque E., which had the crew of the barque C. (also derelict) on board. Nine hands boarded her, and after thirty-six days brought her into Plymouth Sound, whence she was towed into Plymouth. She was provisioned by the E., and was making fifteen to twenty inches of water per hour all the way. The Oregon, M. M. R. March 25, 1865, p. 367.

V. 1,575*l.*—A. £700

453. In August, the schooner O., from Sierra Leone for Falmouth with nuts, was discovered by the screw steamer M., 124 tons and 120 h.-p., with only her master and two hands alive, the rest of the crew having died of yellow fever. The master and two hands were taken on board the M., whose chief mate with the boatswain and two hands took the O., after great difficulty and bad weather, into Falmouth. The Ostrich, M. M. R. March 11, 1865, p. 304.

V. 1,550*l.*—A. £700

454. In May, the barque Queen of the T., 300 tons, from Antwerp to Liverpool with a general cargo, got on the Goodwin Sands, whence she was got off with considerable risk to life, and brought into Ramsgate by thirty-one men in two luggers, a lifeboat, and a steam-tug. The Queen of the Teign, S. G. August 6, 1855.

V. 5,030*l.*—A. £700

455. In December, the steamer R. C., 497 tons, broke her rudder-head in the Bay of Biscay, and was making signals for assistance. The weather was moderate at the time, but there was a heavy swell, which made her roll considerably. The steamer W., 534 tons register, came up. Hawsers were made fast, and the W. commenced to tow the R. C. towards Brest. About midnight the wind increased, and at four a.m. next day a gale was blowing from the S.W. The services were continued till ten a.m., when, a pilot having been taken on board, the R. C. was brought into Brest harbour and anchored in safety. The Raleigh's Cross, M. M. R. 1886, p. 86.

V. 8,500*l.*—A. £700

456. The barque S. was, during a gale of wind from the south, driven on to the Church Rocks, off Folkestone. The galley N. and the lugger F. B., manned with sixteen hands, went to her and succeeded, at imminent risk to themselves, in boarding her. The F. B. was despatched for further aid, and returned with another lugger and a steam-tug, and the barque was then got off the rocks. £250 to the tug, £450 to the other salvors. The Santipore, S. G. Feb. 7 and March 7, 1854; 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 231. Value 9,675*l.*—Award £700

457. In November, the ship S. F., 1,895 tons register, grounded in the neighbourhood of the Blackwater Bank, off the Irish coast, on her way from Liverpool for Calcutta, with a cargo of salt. One hundred labourers were employed to lighten her. The steam-tug U. K., which had been detained there for the purpose, aided by the steam-tug R., towed the ship off the bank, took her to Liverpool, and docked her on the evening of the following day. The weather was not very bad. The Savoir Faire, M. M. R. March 31, 1866, p. 402.

V. between 13,000*l.* and 14,000*l.*—A. £700

458. The S. proceeded on a fishing voyage to Davis's Straits, and was there frozen up in the month of October. Bounties having been offered for the rescue of the crews of this and other ships, several ships left England for that purpose, and upon the 14th May of the following year the S. was discovered by three ships beset in a floe of ice, in lat. 69°5' N., having at the time only nine days' provisions on board, many of the crew dead, and most of the survivors confined to their berths by scurvy. By the exertions of the salvors a channel was cut through the ice 376 yards in length and 26 yards in breadth, the average thickness of the ice being between three and four feet, and after two days and nights' incessant labour she was finally released on the 21st May, and enabled to return to this country. The Swan, 1 W. Rob. 68.

V. not stated.—A. £700

459. The American ship V., of 1,196 tons burthen, struck in a fog on the Blackwater Bank, in 18 feet water at high water, the ship drawing 20 feet. A small steamer, the E., came to her assistance, but was unable to tow her off, and was despatched to Wexford for a larger steamer. The F., of 207 tons and 160 h.-p., a passenger steamer, at the request of the E., proceeded to the V., and by the united exertions of the F. and the E. the V. was towed into deep water and round to Kingstown. The F. was engaged in the service twenty-seven hours, and proceeded a distance of 104 miles. The E. was settled with out of court by a payment of £300. The Vanguard, 5 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 364. Court of Adm. V. 10,000*l.*—A. £700

460. In December, the brigantine W., when off the Spurn, bound for Rotterdam with tar, was in an unmanageable state, having lost her rudder. She was rotted by four smacks, which towed her to Broadstairs, where she engaged a tug and was taken to Ramsgate. One man from one of the smacks went on board, and stayed there till she reached Ramsgate. Her crew left her and got on board the smacks. The Werkendam, M. M. R. February 26, 1870, p. 272. V. 1,845*l.*—A. £700

461. In February, the Norwegian barque A., 625 tons register, from Halifax to Liverpool with deals, which had been abandoned by her crew some eighty days before, and had drifted about since then, was boarded, when about seventy-five miles S.S.W. of the Eddystone Lighthouse, by hands from the steamer W., 1,581 tons gross register, twenty-two hands, from Shields to Savona with coal. The A. was waterlogged, had her rudder broken and unshipped, had lost all her masts except the lower part of the foremast, and her cabin, forecabin and deck were swept clean. Her bulwarks also were gone, and the sea was washing over her. She was taken in tow, and in about thirty hours anchored in Plymouth Sound. The Argonaut, M. M. R. June 22, 1883, p. 783. V. 1,380*l.*—A. £690

462. The ship W. P. was ashore on the outer breaker off Charleston Bar, in a condition of great peril. The steamer G. attempted to haul her off and failed. Afterwards the steamer J. went out to her from Charleston, in a stormy night, with much wind and sea, approached the ship at much risk and peril, hauled her off, and carried her to Charleston. The William Penn, 1 Am. Law Reg. 584, cited in Marvin, 206. [American.] V. 4,600*l.*—A. £690

463. In October, the iron barque J. W., 776 tons, sixteen hands, in ballast, from Antwerp to Cardiff, parted from her anchors off Dover Pier, whither she had been beaten back by stress of weather, was drifting about on her beam ends towards the Brake Sand, and was west of the Wreck lightship, when the tug G., 34 tons, made fast a tow-rope, and began to tow ahead from off shore. After twenty minutes the hawser parted, and the J. W. again began to drift towards the sand, but another hawser was made fast, which, however, broke when the J. W. was well off the Middle Brake Buoy. She then ran before the wind past the North Brake Buoy, and drifted towards the Elbow Buoy. The tug S. then came up, with whose help the J. W. was got under the land close to Kingsgate, and thence through a very heavy sea to Dover. The smacks G. A. and T. also assisted by getting fresh anchors and chains. £434 to the G., £150 to the S., £105 to the smacks. The James Wishart, M. M. R. December 15, 1882, p. 1586. Value 5,000*l.*—Award £689

464. In January, the barque C. A. H., from Texel to Surinam, was leaky and much strained, with her crew exhausted by pumping, 200 miles from Holland and 150 miles from England. She was found thus by two smacks, who put eight hands on board. These, with the assistance of a third smack, took her into Ramsgate harbour. The Catherina Anna Helena, S. G. April 24, 1839. V. 5,100*l.*—A. £665

465. In February, the Swedish ship K. was broadside on, on Hasborough Knoll, rolling heavily, with her rudder unhung and useless. By the exertions of thirteen boatmen, the tugs R., P., and E., and sixteen of the Storm company of boatmen, she was got off, and taken into Yarmouth Roads, after about ten hours' work. £400 to the thirteen boatmen, £200 to the R. and the P., £30 to the E., £25 to the sixteen boatmen. The Krona, M. M. R. May 1, 1874, p. 560. V. 4,900*l.*—A. £655

466. The barque D. struck on a sand off Margate, and when got off was run upon another, called the Woolpack Sand, and finally upon a third, called the Red Sand, where she was in great peril. Eight luggers and a smack, containing ninety-five men, came to her assistance, but their services were at first declined. Eventually, on the barque getting on the Red Sand, with six feet of water in the hold requiring constant pumping, they were accepted. Some of the luggers conveyed some troops who were on board the barque to Sheerness. The rest of the salvors, assisted by a steamer, conducted the vessel to London, and lodged her in dock. Services of two days' duration. £120 had been paid them by the East India Company for the conveyance of the troops. The Diamond, S. G. July 5, 1845; 9 Jur. 695. V. 5,965*l.*—A. £650

467. In November, the steamer G., 740 tons, from Copenhagen to London, with 7,800 quarters of oats, took the Holm Sands, and became unmanageable, having lost her rudder. In answer to signals the lifeboat S. P. put off to her, and found her on the outer sand. The lifeboat sailed across the sands through a terrific surf, and let go her anchor about forty fathoms from the G. The crew of the G. were taken off by a rope from the G. to the lifeboat. There was a furious gale and sea. The crew were taken into Lowestoft by the lifeboat, which, with a crew of thirty beachmen, returned through a very high sea to the G., which they found had drifted clear of the sand, and was lying with her port side under water and the sea breaking over her, her engines disabled and fires out, and much water in her. Some of the crew boarded her, but the weather getting worse a tug was signalled for, and the tug D. came from Lowestoft. A line was with difficulty made fast, and the G. was taken to a safe anchorage off Lowestoft High Light. The tug R. then came up and towed the lifeboat to Lowestoft. The crew of the G. were brought back, and she was ultimately towed to London by three tugs. The Gorm, M. M. R. Jan. 31, 1879, p. 148. V. 10,506*l.*—A. £650

468. In November, the brig L. was discovered, derelict and in a crippled state, by the brig J., whose mate and two hands boarded her and set sail upon her, but after five days the water increased so much and the weather got so bad that they tried to abandon her. The boat in which they put off, however, was swamped, and the mate and one hand with great difficulty got on board the L. again, the other man being picked up by a smack. The L. was driven out further to sea, and after about twelve hours the steamer W. came up and took her in tow to Dover. £390 to the J., £260 to the W. The Livretta, M. M. R. Feb. 2, 1883, p. 143; 8 P. D. 24. V. 1,300*l.*—A. £650

469. In January, the steamer M., from Ibrail for London with maize, suddenly broke and carried away her propeller in the English Channel, and proceeded under canvas till midday of the next day, when the steamer C. went to her, and a hawser being got on board, towed her to an anchorage in Portland Roads in about sixteen hours. The Mary, M. M. R. Nov. 14, 1873, p. 1458. Value 20,700*l.*—Award £650

470. In February, the barque P., 587 tons, from Hamburg for Cardiff, in ballast, struck on the Long Sand, the wind being S.E. and moderate, the tide half-flood, and a heavy sea breaking. She was found by the smack P. of W., 25 tons register, with a quantity of fish on board. The P. of W., at much risk, went to her, and leaving one hand aboard her, proceeded to Harwich, and gave information to the master of the tug H., 36 tons register, and 60 h.-p., and also to the coxswain of the lifeboat. The lifeboat was immediately launched with twelve hands, and found the P. on the lower knock of the sand, with a list to port. There was not then enough water to allow the lifeboat to get alongside the P. The sea was heavy, the wind fresh from N.N.E. The tug arrived early next morning; a tow-ropes was got on board, and three attempts made without success to get her off. The H. then went away, whilst the P. was lightened by some of the crew of the lifeboat and of the smacks A. and Angora, which had come up. An attempt was made to haul the ship off as the tide flowed, by means of an anchor from the Angora, got out to N.W. with two warps, but failed. She began to roll heavily, and a strong W.S.W. wind blowing straight on her broadside, gave her a heavy list. As she seemed to be fast settling down her crew were taken off by the lifeboat to Harwich. The smacks remained by the P. at the master's request. The tug and lifeboat returned two days afterwards; their crews put tow-ropes on board, and at high tide succeeded in getting her off, the tug striking heavily several times in the course of the manœuvres. The tug towed her to Harwich in about eight hours. The Pasithea, M. M. R. May 30, 1879, p. 692. V. 2,600*l.*—A. £650

471. In April, the brig Z. J., 335 tons gross register, from Dantzic to St. Nazaire, with oak planks and logs and pine timber, lost her mainmast and became water-logged off the Dutch coast in a heavy sea. A boat from the smack G., 34 tons register, on a trawl fishing voyage from Ramsgate to the North Sea, took the master and crew of the Z. J. to Lowestoff. Two days afterwards the screw steamer W., 1,581 tons gross register, value £26,000, in ballast from Rotterdam for the Tyne, to load coals for Sebastopol, found the Z. J. derelict in lat. 53° 3' N., and long. 3° 10' E., took her in tow to the mouth of the Shields Harbour, and thence with the aid of a tug to a safe mooring in the harbour. £250 to life salvors, £400 to the W. The Zelinth Jane, M. M. R. July 21, 1882, p. 907. V. 1,168*l.*—A. £650

472. The steamer B., 1,800 tons, 520 h.-p., on her passage from Calcutta to England for repairs, with her boilers leaky, touched at Ceylon for coals; her topsides being dry from exposure to the heat she made water, which extinguished the fires, and the engines stopped. Applications were made to vessels lying at Point de Galle, and several men belonging to four vessels—the F., the M., the W., and the A.—were sent to assist in pumping her. The F. and the M. also lent some pumps. The water was so far reduced as to allow the engines to be worked, and the steamer went into the harbour. The services lasted about twenty-six hours. One of the pumps of the M. was damaged, and she was detained, whereby her owners lost freight amounting to £145. There was thirty salvors in all, i. e., twelve men from the F. and M.; nine from the W. and nine from the A. The steamer had on board, besides her crew, fifty coolies, who did their best to assist in rescuing their ship. £160 to the F., £305 to the M., £100 to the W., and £80 to the A. The Bentinck, S. G. December 16, 1851. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £645

473. In November, during a heavy gale and exceedingly heavy sea, the masters of the luggers S., E., Eclipse, U., A., and O., and the lifeboat F. of A. N., hearing signal guns fired, manned their luggers and the lifeboat, and proceeded toward the Tongue Lightship. They discovered the brig V., from London to Sierra Leone with a general cargo, aground on the shingles eight miles from Margate. They succeeded, in three days, in saving the cargo, but the brig finally broke up. It appeared there were some government stores on board. The value of the salvaging vessels was £2,950. Cargo ex Venus, M. M. R. Mar. 10, 1866, p. 303. V. 1,906*l.*—A. £635

474. The B. of L., with iron, going into the port of Liverpool, disabled, in tempestuous weather, late at night, engaged the services of the tug U., when off the Salisbury Dock. A hawser was thrown to the B. of L., which, however, through the fault of her crew, was not fastened; and she had drifted up to the Waterloo Dock before it was made fast, and then her head having canted to the south, the lashings gave way, and she got between the Prince's Landing Stage and the Prince's Pier, and was in great danger, and those on board her were taken off by the U. While the B. of L. was thus bumping about against the stage and the bridge, three boatmen at the peril of their lives jumped aboard, succeeded in making the hawser fast, and took charge of the vessel, which the tug then pulled out from her dangerous position. She then drifted down the river and got between the George's Pier and Stage, a dangerous position. The tug U., which had got into the George's Basin with too much hawser out, and was amongst a number of flats, could not assist her. The services of the tug U. S. were therefore engaged, and by her aid the B. of L. was towed in safety into the George's Basin, though not without damage to the U. S. £350 to the U., £160 to the boatmen, £120 to the U. S. The Belle of Lagos, M. M. R. June 19, 1869, p. 786. Value 7,850*l.*—Award £630

475. Four boats and twenty-two men, in a terrible storm, went out to save life in the harbour of Ilfracombe, beset with rocks, when the vessels were drifting against each other. One boat was stove; the men were saved by jumping on board the crushing vessels. They saved one vessel and her crew. The Aid, 1 Hagg. 83. V. 6,000*l.*—A. £600

476. In December, the iron ship A., 1,500 tons gross, from Calcutta to London, with twenty-nine hands and a general cargo, broke her windlass, lost an anchor, and was taken in tow off the Foreland in a S.W. gale and thick weather by the tug V., 219 tons gross, and 100 h.-p., value £9,000, which, however, could not make headway owing to the violence of the gale. The tug N., 157 tons gross, 100 h.-p., value £7,000, was therefore also asked to assist, and the A. was got safely to the East India Docks in two days. £360 to the V., £240 to the N. The Airlie, M. M. R. Feb. 20, 1880, p. 241. V. 44,750*l.*—A. £600

477. In April, the barque A., from Amsterdam to Batavia with a general cargo, dragged her anchors during a heavy squall, and fouled the Mouse Lightship. After three or four attempts, a hawser was got from the A. to the tug D., which came up; and the tug held her clear of the lightship. But the violence of the gale and the strength of the flood-tide brought her close to the lightship, the moorings of which she fouled with her chains, getting them under the bottom of the lightship. Ultimately, however, she was got clear of the lightship, her head turned round, and she was towed, first to Gravesend, when the gale was too strong to allow of her mooring, and then to Greenhithe. The Antoinette, M. M. R. June 8, 1877, p. 724. V. 15,031*l.*—A. £600

478. In November, the iron barque A., 578 tons, from Stockholm to London with deals, took the ground on the N.E., part of Hasborough Sands. The weather was fine but hazy, and the wind moderate from S.E. Some of the crew of the yawl D., which went out in answer to signals from the Wold Lightship, boarded the A., but, owing to the sea, could not get an anchor or tow-line out. The tug M., sent out in search of the A., came up and passed a tow-rope on board. The M. towed for an hour, when the lifeboat B. W. came up and helped. The A. was then got off and towed with the D. astern to Palling, where the lifeboat was left in charge till the M. returned and towed her to Yarmouth jetty. The August, M. M. R. Feb. 10, 1882, p. 172. V. 7,105*l.*—A. £600

479. In December, the A., from Quebec to London with timber, parted her anchors, drove on the Tongue Sand, lost her rudder, and became waterlogged. A steam-tug and two luggers, after four days' work, got her off, and engaged two steamers to tow her to London for £200. The Aurora, S. G. April 25, 1855. V. 4,000*l.*—A. £600

480. In January, the wind blowing a heavy gale from S.W. to S., and the night being very dark, the steam-tug P. took in tow the barque B. S., 455 tons register, from Alexandria to Dover, with cotton seed, which was in imminent danger near the Mole Rocks, and driving. The steam-tug towed the barque through a heavy sea to Sheerness, but did not incur any extraordinary risk in so doing. The steam-tug had a hawser destroyed, the cost of which was allowed, exclusive of the award. The Beautiful Star, M. M. R. June 2, 1866, p. 688. V. 9,000*l.*—A. £600

481. In November, the B. of the C. was to leeward of Formsby Lightship in bad weather, near the Jordan Flats, under close-reefed topsails, and fore and main topmast staysails. She was close to, and driving on, the breakers. She was broadside to the shore, with the wind blowing dead on shore a violent westerly gale; the tide was ebb, and the B. of the C. perfectly helpless. In this state she was found by the steam-tug G. E., 108 tons register, with engines of 110 h.-p. nom., 350 h.-p. actual, which took her in tow from outside the Zebra Buoy to the Bell Buoy, and up the Queen's Channel, and brought her to anchor opposite the Queen's Docks. There was some degree of risk, though no imminent danger to ship and cargo. The Belle of the Clyde, M. M. R. May 26, 1866, p. 655. Value 12,470*l.*—Award £600

482. The B. B. was derelict, about a mile from the Goodwin Sands. A lugger and three galleys, with twenty-eight hands, and a steam-tug, took her into Ramsgate harbour. The Bessie Bent, S. G. Dec. 12, 1855. V. 1,875*l.*—A. £600

483. In October, the barque B., 332 tons, from Rouen to Charlestown with phosphate, disabled; her fore-topmast having gone by the board, and also her maintopmast, mizen topmast and jibboom, with all gear attached, was discovered by the fishing lugger M., twenty-nine tons, about fifty miles from Lowestoft, in a heavy westerly gale. The M. lay by her for four hours; then her mate and three hands boarded the B., and helped to clear away the wreckage. Two hours later the trawling-dandy M. S. came up, and her master and mate boarded the B. The lugger and dandy towed the B. for seventeen hours, then lay by her for five hours, when they made fast again, and brought her to a safe anchorage in the wold off Hornsea, where two tugs were engaged to take her to Yarmouth. The Brunette, M. M. R. Feb. 9, 1883, p. 177. V. 3,303*l.*—A. £600

484. In March, the barque C., 729 tons, from Dunkirk to Shields in ballast, got aground on the south part of the North Scroby Sand. The lifeboat G. was hauled through the surf crossing the Barba Sand, and proceeded to the C., which she found in the middle of the sand under all plain sail, lying with her head N.W. by W., a little to windward of the wreck of the iron screw steamer R. The G. dropped her anchor, and came athwart the bows of the C. Some of her crew boarded the C., and found that the master thought he was on the Shipwash Sand. The C. was in danger of being carried on to the wreck of the R. A hawser was put on board the G., and a stream anchor lowered from the C., and towed to the side of the boat. The tide had scoured the sand away from the bows of the C., and carried the cable under her. The lifeboat C. G. then came up, dropped her anchor, and passed a rope to the G., and hauled her through the surf. The tug V. then came up, but there being only eight feet of water, had to stand off until the tide flowed; when, after further efforts, the C. was eventually got off, and taken to Yarmouth Roads. The Canmore, M. M. R. Jan. 23, 1882, p. 781. V. 7,200*l.*—A. £600

485. The C. P., 349 tons, having encountered very boisterous weather, and lost nine of her crew, was met with not far from Plymouth by a fishing smack and a pilot cutter; the master gave up charge of his vessel to these parties, who carried her towards Dartmouth, but on making for the harbour the vessel was run against the rock, beat heavily, and suffered damage to the amount of £500. The Cape Packet, S. G. Nov. 14, 1848. V. 6,775*l.*—A. £600

486. In February, it was discovered that the ship C. of B., 2,322 tons, from Queenstown for New York, seven days out, had broken her rudder. The C. of P., in answer to signals, remained by her all night, next day took her in tow, and arrived with her at Queenstown on March 7. The City of Brussels, M. M. R. July 4, 1873, p. 848. V. 100,000*l.*—A. £600

487. The barque E. K., 405 tons, struck on the Longship Rocks during a thick fog. The screw steamship A. fell in with a boat containing the master, his wife, and the crew of the E. K., they having left her fearing she would founder. The A. then proceeded to the barque, which had floated off the rocks, and having taken her in tow, conducted her to Falmouth with some difficulty, owing to the quantity of water in her, and the state of the weather. The Eliza Kinch, S. G. January 20, 1863. V. 2,250*l.*—A. £600

488. In November, the screw steamer F. H., 946 tons, with engines of 98 h.-p., and nineteen hands, in ballast, from Savona to Villaricos, Spain, was flying signals, "wanted immediate assistance," and "machinery disabled," within a mile of the rugged coast of the Island of Porquerillos, in a heavy sea. She had lost the coupling bolts of the first length of her propeller, and the truss-block was broken. She was under some sail, but in great danger of running on the rocks on a leeshore. She was sighted by the iron screw steamer A., 1,108 tons, value £13,000, with engines of 550 h.-p., twenty-three hands, and a valuable cargo of pig-iron and coals from Troon, in Scotland, to Savona. The master of the A. boarded her, and agreed to tow her to Savona, which he did. The towage involved great difficulty, and lasted about twenty-eight hours, the distance being 130 nautical miles. The Farnley Hall, M. M. R. August 5, 1881, p. 968; 4 Asp. 500.

Value 12,000*l.*—Award £600

489. The ship G. P., anchored off Margate in a hurricane, lost one anchor, and hoisted a signal for another. Two luggers went out to her. Six men went aboard, and one of the luggers returned for an anchor and chain cable. The pilot advised that the ship should be run on the mud, eighteen miles above Margate, which was undertaken by the salvors and performed successfully. The lugger which returned for the anchor and chain being too small, a third was employed, which, at great risk, carried the anchor and chain to the ship. The ship lay on the mud in safety two days, until relieved by a steamer. Fifty-one salvors. The General Palmer, 2 Hagg. 323.

V. 30,000*l.*—A. £600

490. In September, the steamer H., value £11,500, was in a sinking condition, after collision with the C., her crew having taken to the boats. The steam-rawler F. S. came up, made fast to the H., and towed her on to the North Beach, at Scarborough, where she grounded. She afterwards removed her to another place, where temporary repairs were effected, and attended on her until she reached West Hartlepool. The Hardwick, M. M. R. 1884, p. 89.

V. 11,500*l.*—A. £600

491. In September, the H., from London to Yokohama, after a collision in the Straits of Dover, which made a hole in her starboard side amidships below the water line, anchored about three-quarters of a mile W.S.W. of the Admiralty Pier, and was rapidly making water. The tug P., 54 tons and 60 h.-p., went to her, and found her with her spar-deck level with the bottom of the sponson beam of the P., and fast settling. The P. took on board the passengers and their luggage, the ship's chronometer, and several boxes of specie. The tug G., 34 tons, then came up, and both tugs made fast, one on each bow of the H., and towed her to, and beached her on, a level bank of mud in the bay. The Hector, M. M. R. March 10, 1882, p. 303.

V. 77,500*l.*—A. £600

492. In October, the screw steamer J. M., 525 tons register and 98 h.-p., bound from Malaga with fruit for London, when off Point Molinos, discovered the barque H., 366 tons, stranded on some rocks. She tried in vain to tow her off, and then proceeded to Malaga, and obtained the assistance of a felucca and labourers, who lightened the barque. The barque was ultimately towed off and anchored in Malaga Bay in safety. The Hero, M. M. R. January 23, 1869, p. 117.

V. 2,500*l.*—A. £600

493. The I., 600 tons, was dismantled in a squall, and came to anchor off Dungeness. The next day the master rigged jurmasts, and a collier took the second mate to Dover to procure a steamer. The D. of K., of 140 h.-p., a passenger steamer bound to London, was engaged at Ramsgate. She proceeded to the ship, took her in tow at nine in the morning, brought her to anchor at five in the afternoon in the Queen's Channel, and remained by her that night, the wind being fair the whole time. The Isabella, 3 Hagg. 427.

V. 21,000*l.*—A. £600

494. The iron ship L. L., 1,435 tons, from Liverpool to Melbourne, damaged and aground on the Tuskar Reef, and making water at the rate of 3½ inches per hour, was in danger of foundering in a calm, and was towed by the exertions of the paddle-wheel steamer G. W. to the bar, whence she was subsequently towed into harbour. The towage to the bar was fourteen miles, and that from the bar to the harbour took from three to four hours. The Loch Laggan, M. M. R. November 19, 1875, p. 1488.

V. 40,000*l.*—A. £600

495. A second set of salvors having discovered a derelict vessel, bottom upwards, at sea, near the Eddystone Lighthouse, succeeded, after great exertions during two days and a half, in towing her into Falmouth. They then, in spite of repeated remonstrances, carried on for a month a series of unskilful attempts to right the vessel, in consequence of which attempts she was much strained and injured. The Magdalen, 5 L. T. N.S. 807; 31 L. J. Adm. 22. Value 2,400*l.*—Award £600

496. In February, the screw steamer M., 801 tons gross register, from the Tees for Pomaron, with seventeen hands, pig-iron and general merchandise, whose engines were disabled, grounded on the North Gare on a falling tide. The tug H. came up, got a hawser on board, and towed astern, but the hawser broke, and the M. drifted back on the sands. The H. then engaged the tugs C., 57·14 tons register, and N., 11·22 tons register, who, with the assistance of the H., got her off, and took her safely to Middlesborough. The Marbella, M. M. R. May 4, 1883, p. 558.

V. 17,724*l.*—A. £600

497. In November, the barque M. L., timber laden, was found derelict, waterlogged, and in a deplorable state, about 120 miles E.N.E. of the Spurn, in a heavily rolling sea, by the smack T. B., which got her in tow, but as the water was flush with her decks she was a great strain on the T. B. The smacks S. and Q. of the E. came up, and the three smacks took the barque in tow for four days, when she was taken in tow by tugs sent out to meet her, and brought into Grimsby in safety. The Martin Luther, M. M. R. May 6, 1865, p. 560.

V. 1,560*l.*—A. £600

498. The M. P. was driven on shore by stress of weather, about seven miles to the westward of Eupatoria. H. M. steamer L., after lightening the vessel, succeeded in towing her off. Services seven days. The Mary Pleasants, S. G. April 7, 1857; Swabey, 224.

V. 4,247*l.*—A. £600

499. The schooner M., derelict, was off South Shields in great distress. The steam-tug P., manned with eleven hands, went out and towed her into the harbour. The Minerva, S. G. March 27, 1854; 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 271.

V. 2,320*l.*—A. £600

500. The ship M. S. E., 611 tons, in misty weather, grounded near Boulogne. The steamer P., 231 tons, 136 h.-p., and the steam-tug T. B., 120 tons, 60 h.-p., assisted her off. The Mount Stuart Elphinstone, S. G. Jan. 24, 1861.

V. 9,750*l.*—A. £600

501. The steamer N., 493 tons, broke one of her engines. Her signals were observed by the steamer B., of 399 tons, 400 h.-p., with a general cargo and 100 passengers. She towed the N. to Liverpool. Services eight hours. The Nimrod, S. G. May 14, 1850; 14 Jur. 944; 7 Notes of Cases, 570.

V. 19,000*l.*—A. £600

502. In November, the iron barque P., 588 tons register, from Liverpool to Otago, New Zealand, with fifteen hands and general cargo, anchored in Mounts Bay for shelter, during heavy weather. Her captain had been below for nine days, and those on board did not know of the dangerous nature of the Bay. Rockets and blue-lights were shown and the lifeboat R. L. came up. The P. had lost mainmast, mizenmast and all spare rigging, and had her wheel and boats damaged. By request the R. L. went back to Penzance to get a steamer, which had been ordered to be got ready. The R. L. found the tug Q. of the B., 183 tons, 80 h.-p., working to 400, moored, with steam up, in Penzance Bay, which took the R. L. in tow back to the P. in heavy weather, with a fearful sea. Two hawsers were successively made fast, but parted directly. The tug then fetched two new hawsers from Penzance, with which she towed the P. into the harbour. £200 to the R. L., £400 to the Q. of the B. The Pampero, M. M. R. Feb. 18, 1882, p. 172.

V. 16,243*l.*—A. £600

503. In May, the Norwegian brig P., with petroleum and naphtha, was found derelict and waterlogged about 40 miles W. of the Scilly Islands. With great difficulty a crew was put on board, and she was taken to Queenstown. The weather was rough. The Prosperité, M. M. R. Nov. 5, 1875, p. 1427.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £600

504. In June, the steamer R. L., 180 tons nett, 56 h.-p., from Antwerp to Vigo and Oporto, with iron rails and general cargo, which had undergone an injury to her engines and steering gear, and had thrown everything overboard, including two anchors and thirty tons of coals, was discovered in lat. 45·14 N. long. 7·49 W., in the Bay of Biscay, lying in the trough of a heavy sea, in tempestuous weather, by the screw steamer F., 873 tons nett, and 1,353 tons gross register, and 130 h.-p., value £21,000, from Taganrog to Dunkirk, with linseed. In answer to signals the F. went to her, and passed a line on board, nearly losing her lifeboat in doing so. The line was made fast, and the chain-cable of the R. L. shackled to the hawser of the F. The F. then towed the R. L. to Falmouth Harbour. In towing, the F. necessarily went at a slow speed, but she did not go considerably out of her way. The Rio Lima, M. M. R. Nov. 7, 1879, p. 1427. Value 7,655*l.*—Award £300

505. In November, the R., while in tow of the double-engine paddle steam-tug P., 98 tons gross, towards the Albert Dock came into collision with the E., and was in danger of sinking. The P. cast off the tow-rope, came alongside the R., took off her crew, and afterwards, with the help of another tug, the T. B., held the R., until she was safely moored to the shore. The Ripon, S. G. March 6, 1885, p. 151.

V. 10,000*l.*—A. £300

506. In January, the barque R., 477 tons, from Havanna for Queenstown with sugar, whilst off Crookhaven dragged her anchors, and drifted on to the rocks at the north side of the harbour. There was a strong gale and a heavy sea. In this juncture the steam-tug M. came up, took her in tow, and in one hour brought her to a safe berth. The Rosalind, M. M. R. May 20, 1865, p. 62*l.* V. 8,700*l.*—A. £300

507. In February, the steamer S., 356 tons nett, from the Clyde to Oporto, with fifteen hands, coal and iron pipes, broke her high-pressure crank shaft when about thirty miles N.W. of the Bishop Light, and drifted about twenty-five miles, close to the Seven Stones, east of the Wolf. By lashings and wedges the shaft was secured sufficiently to allow of the engines being used at slow speed, and she was put under sail and got clear. Her engines were then stopped, and she made sail for Falmouth. On 6th February she was discovered by the steam-tug T., 1,573 tons, about two or three miles from the Lizard, after having been in collision with the J. B., making water, in great danger of going ashore, and lying unmanageable in the trough of a heavy sea, with a strong S.W. by S. wind. A hawser was made fast, but parted, and after one or two unsuccessful attempts she was got in tow and taken inside the Black Rock, where another tug was employed, and the S. was taken into Falmouth tidal dock. The Saga, S. G. March 20, 1885, p. 182. V. 7,500*l.*—A. £600

508. The S., 1,237 tons, was towed into Liverpool in a dismantled and crippled condition, and the tugs U. and R. were engaged to dock her, and proceeded up the river with her for that purpose, the R. being lashed to the ship's port side and the U. towing ahead. When the S. was about to enter the basin the ebb tide caught her on the starboard side, and drove her in towards the corner of the great landing-stage, thereby placing the S. and the R., which was between her and the stage, in considerable danger. The pilot of the S. hailed the R. to hold on and go ahead full speed, which she accordingly did, with her helm hard a-port, in order if possible to clear the stage, but could not, and the R. was forced against the stage and crushed between it and the ship, thereby receiving damage. The ship was then towed back into the river by the U. The Saratoga, 1 Lushington, 318. V. 52,092*l.*—A. £600

509. In October, the Italian barque S. II., 517 tons, with a general cargo, value £32,000, from Rio Plata to Antwerp, shipped a heavy sea, which carried away her wheel and did other damage. Four of her crew were knocked down, and one of them, the mate, died afterwards from his injuries. The S. II. signalled for assistance, and the screw steamer C., 1,017 tons, came up and towed her into Cowes Roads. The C. was from Sulina bound to Falmouth, with grain. The Sincero II., The Times, Feb. 4, 1881. V. 32,000*l.*—A. £600

510. In April, the screw steamer S., from Newport for Naples, with twenty-five hands and coal, was lying helpless, rolling and drifting to leeward in the trough of the sea, with a broken propeller crank shaft, when found by the screw steamer H., 644 tons, from Newport to Barcelona, with nineteen hands and coals, in lat. 38°7' N. long. 9°20' W. The H. lay by her during the night in a strong gale, and next morning commenced to tow. The hawser soon parted, but was again made fast, and the S. was brought to a safe anchorage in the port of Lisbon in about eighteen hours in all. The Stowell, M. M. R. June 30, 1882, p. 813. V. 10,500*l.*—A. £600

511. In January, the barque T., from Littlehampton for Plymouth and Exeter with paraffin, was fallen in with, disabled and without a rudder, by the screw steamer C., 100 h.-p., 631 tons register, value £5,940, from Amsterdam for Naples, about twenty miles N.W. of Ushant. There was a fresh N.E. wind and a considerable sea. The C. lay by her all night. Next day a mate and four hands boarded her, and found the master and crew on the point of abandoning her. Tow-lines were attached, and the C. towed her in twenty-five hours into Plymouth Sound. The Tarsus, M. M. R. June 21, 1878, p. 787. Value 5,940l.—Award £600

512. The U., 1,245 tons, near the North Foreland, parted from two anchors. She had other anchors on board, but not ready for use. The master requested the steam-tug R., of 121 tons, 120 h.-p., to get him a new anchor and a powerful tug. The wind and weather at the time were boisterous. The R. proceeded to Ramsgate, and employed two luggers to put the anchor and cable on board. The luggers and the R. then went in search of the U., and after two days found her. The R. towed her to Gravesend, where luggers followed, and tendered the anchor and chain, which the master of the U. refused to accept, and the luggers carried them back to Ramsgate. £400 to the R., £200 to luggers. The Undaunted, S. G. June 21, 1860; 29 L. J. Adm. 176; 2 L. T. N.S. 250. V. 36,000l.—A. £600

513. The steamer U. got amongst shoals, and during a storm was exposed to the greatest danger of being lost. Five persons from the A. brought her out of her very dangerous position after exertions lasting over several days, and with considerable personal danger. The Uhlenhorst, Assistance, Hamb. 11 G. Z. 1875, pp. 137, 138. [German.] V. 12,500l.—A. £600

514. In March, the brig C. was stranded close to the shore in the north of Crookhaven Harbour. The wind was squally from S.S.W., with mist and rain. An officer of the coastguard hailed the master, and at his request manned the lifeboat, and, accompanied by some whaleboats, went to the C. They proceeded to pass a hawser from the brig to the south shore of the harbour, and after great exertion and with considerable risk, they got her into a place of safety. The whaleboats then left, and the coastguardsmen remained on board to work the pumps, there being thirteen inches of water in the hold and her crew being too fatigued to pump. £500 to whaleboats, £80 to coastguards. The Charles (Dublin Ad. Co.), M. M. R. June 2, 1871, p. 688. V. 5,000l.—A. £580

515. The brig E. got aground on the Sunk Sand, there being a strong wind from N.N.W. Two smacks went to her assistance, and by great exertions got her off, and took her into port. The Eliza, S. G. May 6, 1856. V. 2,000l.—A. £580

516. The brig C. A., 213 tons, off the Lizard, was much damaged by collision, and in a state of considerable danger. Two boats and the S. C. lifeboat went to her assistance, and took her in tow. They were afterwards joined by the B. lifeboat and the C. clipper. Ultimately the steamer M. came up, and the brig was taken into Penzance. £300 to the two boats and the S. C., £150 to the C. and B., £120 to the M. The Charles Adolphe, S. G. Nov. 5, 1856; Swabey, 157. V. 2,450l.—A. £570

517. The master of the vessel E. discovering, when near Great Yarmouth, that a fire had broken out, signalled for assistance, and ran the vessel on the beach, from which she was got off by some boatmen, who, at considerable risk, succeeded in extinguishing the flames, and in removing the cargo. The Eliza, S. G. Feb. 14, 1846. V. 2,563l.—A. £570

518. In October, the brigantine W. was found by the ship Q. of B. fifty miles S.W. of the Scilly Isles, derelict and with four feet of water in her hold. Some of the crew of the Q. of B. boarded her, stopped the leakage by means of an augur, pumped her, and after sixty hours work got her into Dartmouth Harbour. The William (Dartmouth Co. Co.), M. M. R. Dec. 30, 1865, p. 1650. V. 839l.—A. £564

519. In November, the barque H., 362 tons, to the Tyne with wood and iron, was seen in a damaged state after collision by the smack E., 45 tons, about twenty miles E. by N. of Flamborough Head. A strong south wind was blowing, but the weather was fine. She was full of water, and deserted by all hands but the master and two mates. The crew of the E. cleared away the wreckage, and the smack G., 60 tons, coming up, the two smacks towed her for an hour towards the Tyne. They were then joined by the smack L., 40 tons, and the H. was towed by them for twelve hours to ten miles east of the Mouth of the Tyne, where a tug was engaged and took her to Shields for £40. The L. lost a boat. The Hanna, M. M. R. Nov. 9, 1877, p. 1428. Value 2,464*l.*—Award £560

520. A heavy anchor was carried out to the ship W. by a wrecker, and the ship hove off a reef, after lightening her of a few barrels of tar, and brought into port. The Washington, Marvin, 221. [American.] V. 3,200*l.*—A. £560

521. The pilot cutter K. having observed the barque C. P., 335 tons, derelict, near Poor Head, off the south coast of Ireland, gave notice to the steamer S., of Cork, which went to the derelict, and brought her into Cork without any risk or difficulty. £500 to the S., £52 to the K. The Carrier Pigeon, 33 L. T. 79; 4 (Irish) Jur. N.S. 99. V. 5,000*l.*—A. £552

522. The steamer A., 1,040 tons, damaged, was being towed by a steamer into Padstow Harbour when she struck on the Doombar Sand, and was left by the steamer. She was got off as the tide flowed by persons on shore, with the assistance of warps and capstan provided by the Harbour Association for the assistance of distressed vessels, and was tracked up the harbour and moored. Sixty-six persons had been settled with; 140 sued. The African, S. G. July 19, 1860. V. 158,867*l.*—A. £550

523. The Norwegian brig C., timber laden, was found derelict near the Lemon and Ower Sand, on the 20th of August, and conducted to Yarmouth by two cutters, the W. and C., and the fishing smack R. The Ceres, Dec. 18, 1851. V. 1,460*l.*—A. £550

524. In December, the steamer A. had her machinery disabled in the Bay of Biscay, and was sighted under sail by the steamer Alfonso, which, in answer to signals made after she had passed the A., turned back and agreed to tow the A. to Corunna. The wind was strong and squally, with a heavy cross swell from N.E. and N.W., and the A. was rolling heavily. Two hawsers were made fast, and the wind being S.S.E., both vessels laboured and rolled heavily, shipping large quantities of water. After twenty-four hours towage, during which the hawser parted once, nearly fouling the Alfonso's propeller, the A. was safely anchored in Corunna harbour. The Angelica, S. G. April 17, 1885, p. 250. V. 7,000*l.*—A. £550

525. In December, the barque C., 328 tons register, with petroleum oil, from New York for London, brought up by her port anchor and sixty fathoms of chain in Margate Roads. Next day, the wind having increased, she let go her starboard anchor with forty-five fathoms of chain. The gale increased so much, that she was forced to slip her anchors, and was nearing the Long Nose Rock when the tug A. came up, towed her to the Downs, and held her there; whilst the master of the barque went in a lugger to Ramsgate to fetch anchors and chains. During his absence the barque's pilot deemed it better to take her into Dover, and with the aid of the steam-tug P., the tug A. took her in there; and then returned and towed the lugger which had been to Ramsgate to Dover Harbour. The Cumberland, M. M. R. May 30, 1868, p. 691. V. 5,545*l.*—A. £550

526. In December, the steamer G., about eight miles from St. Agnes Lighthouse, Scilly, was discovered by the steamer C., from Cardiff to Constantinople, entirely disabled, the tubes of her condenser being choked. Two coir ropes were made fast, and the G. was towed, steering very wildly and sheering in an increasing gale and sea, to off Falmouth Harbour, where two tugs were engaged at the cost of £25 to take her into the harbour. The C. incurred expenses by detention, and otherwise to the amount of £9 12*s.* The Gainford, M. M. R. March 9, 1883, p. 302. V. 7,663*l.*—A. £550

527. In November, the barque M. in the North Sea, in very bad weather, was found in a sinking condition by the smack F. W., value £900, which took the crew of the M. on board. The F. W. lay by her till night, when the E. E. and the Mermaid fishing smacks came up and stood by. Next morning two or three hands boarded the M. and navigated her as far as Lowestoft, from whence the tug C. towed her to Harwich. The pumps had to be kept going all the time, and the services involved much risk. £500 to the smacks, £50 to the tug. The Marequita, M. M. R. March 22, 1883, p. 365. V. 1,425*l.*—A. £550

528. A derelict was discovered at sea, about ninety miles N.W. of the Scilly Isles, by a West Indiaman with a valuable cargo, homeward bound, the master of which put his chief mate and three of his men on board, who brought her with difficulty to Milford Haven. The Nicolina, 2 W. Rob. 175. Value 1,153*l.*—Award £550

529. In December, between the Longships and Hartland Point, the flood tide being N.E. and the wind N.W., the screw steamer V., with her cylinder cover broken off, and in close proximity to the Brisson Rocks, was taken in tow by the screw steamer J. B., and brought, in twenty-four hours, to Penarth Roads, 141 miles. There a tug came and docked her. The Vulture, M. M. R. March 17, 1876, p. 341. V. 6,500*l.*—A. £550

530. In December, the ship Admiral P. T., which was derelict about six or seven miles from the Blaskets, off the S.W. coast of Ireland, was boarded by some of the crew of the sloop C. She had a cargo of spruce deals and battens, and was waterlogged with 16 feet of water in her hold, having lost mainmast, mizentopmast, foresail, flying jib, and foretopgallantmast. She had her spanker brailed up, upper topsail split, and foresail set reefed. Sail was made on her, and she was towed to an anchorage near Scatterry Island, in the Shannon, next morning. The weather was rough. The Admiral Peter Tordenskjold (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. Feb. 18, 1881, p. 208. V. 2,000*l.*—A. £535

531. The barque H., 316 tons, was found derelict on the south end of the Hasborough Sand by the crew (twenty-seven hands) of the steamer B., belonging to the Trinity Corporation. They with great difficulty boarded her, and were subsequently joined by forty-three men, the crews of two other vessels. Having got the barque off, she was, with the aid of the steam-tug R. O., conducted to Lowestoft. The Hopewell, S. G. March 10, 1855. V. 1,600*l.*—A. £534

532. The schooner C., off the Arklow Bank, was run into and damaged by the ship St. L. The master and crew of the C. climbed on board the St. L., and her master would not lend them a boat to return, but carried them away. Three fishing smacks, having fifteen hands, found the C. abandoned, and navigated her in about thirty hours to Kingstown. The Cosmopolitan, 6 Notes of Cases, Supp. 33. [Irish.] V. 2,293*l.*—A. £530

533. The J., much damaged by collision, was abandoned by all her crew, excepting a cabin boy. The pilot cutter D., with five men, including three pilots, conveyed her to Harwich. Some slight assistance was rendered by four men belonging to a smack against the wish of the first salvors. £500 to pilot cutter, £30 to smack. The Juliette, S. G. July 27, 1847. V. 3,567*l.*—A. £530

534. In February, the ship B. and the tug S. K. came into collision in the Thames; and the S. K. rendered valuable assistance to the B. in taking her from a position of danger and placing her in safety. The lugger R. was also of great service. A tender of £525 was made and accepted, and the court apportioned to the lugger £305, to the tug £220. The Brenda, M. M. R. July 3, 1874, p. 847. V. 23,500*l.*—A. £525

535. In February, the ship P. A., from Macabi Islands with 1,529 tons of guano, during a severe gale with a heavy rolling sea in Crookhaven Harbour, made signals of distress. A pilot and four whale-boats, at great risk, succeeded in taking the P. A. from the neighbourhood of the rocks, to which she was drifting, and moored her safely. £25 to the pilot, £500 to the four whale-boats. The Pietro Accame (Dublin Adm. Co.), M. M. R. June 12, 1874, p. 751. V. 13,500*l.*—A. £525

536. In January, the steamer W., 644 tons register, ninety h.-p., from Manilla for a port of call with tobacco, when five miles from Cape Espichel, was disabled by the loss of her rudder, and found thus by the steamer L., 830 tons, 120 nominal h.-p., from Cadiz for London with passengers and merchandise. The L. took her in tow, agreeing to accept £400 for the towage to Lisbon (twenty to thirty miles). There was a very heavy cross sea from N.N.E. to N.N.W. A violent squall came on, and the hawsers parted several times. The W. got across the sea and drifted to within three or four miles of the shore. She then let go her anchors. The L. kept under steam during the night, and the W.'s crew came aboard her. Next morning they returned to the W. She slipped her anchors and was towed to Lisbon without further mishap, reaching there after twenty-nine hours service. The Waverley, M. M. R. April 21, 1871, p. 497. Value 63,384*l.*—Award £523

537. The schooner A., 156 tons, brought up in the West Swin in a S.W. gale. The wind increased, and she parted from one anchor after another, drove on the edge of the Maplin Sand just after high water, and was in great danger. Five yawls came up, and the crews assisted her and aided in pumping. Towards the next high water the vessel began to move, and a kedgo anchor was got out to prevent her driving along the sand. The steam-tug B. E. came and towed her into deep water, and up to the St. Katharine Docks, some of the smacksmen remaining on board to assist in pumping. £120 to smacksmen, £400 to the B. E. The Alamode, S. G. June 8, 1849. V. 7,600*l.*—A. £520

538. In October, the D., from London to Stockton, in extreme peril, dismasted, with four feet of water in her hold, and flying signals of distress, was towed by two smacks into Yarmouth. The Dispatch, S. G. January 22, 1839. V. 2,400*l.*—A. £510

539. The barque R. M., laden with sugar, was lost on Pelican Shoal. Five wrecking vessels, carrying fifty-six men, saved part of the cargo and materials. The Robert Morris, Files of Court, 1853, cited in Marvin, 218. [American.] V. 1,170*l.*—A. £506

540. In September, the steamer A., from Cardiff for Liverpool with coals, was met with in heavy weather by the iron screw steamer N., off St. George's Head, on the coast of Pembrokeshire. Her pumps were choked, and her engine fires put out. After several attempts, during which there was a collision between the two vessels, the N. got the A. in tow and took her to Milford Haven. The Andalusia, M. M. R. May 6, 1865, p. 560. V. 5,750*l.*—A. £500

541. In July, the American barque A. T., 782 tons, was found about ten miles S.W. of St. Alban's Head in the English Channel, derelict, with her mizenmast carried away, her mizen rigging hanging partly on deck and partly over the side, and her jibboom gone. The wind was strong from the W., the weather rainy, and the sea high. The schooner M. S., 149 tons, placed men on board her, and took her in tow, for the Needles; but in half-an-hour her foremast broke off at the head, and her topmast topgallantmast and yards came down and injured the master and crew of the M. S. The towing, however, continued for three hours, when the steamer S., 133 tons, and 40 h.-p., came up, and by agreement took the A. T. in tow through the Solent. Near Cowes the tug F. D. also took her in tow, and brought her to Cowes harbour for £5. £333 to the M. S., £167 to the S. The Annie Torrey, M. M. R. Nov. 30, 1877, p. 1525. V. 1,700*l.*—A. £500

542. In August, the Italian ship A. de los A., which had been in collision with the Z., and was damaged, but not in any immediate danger, was taken in tow off Hasborough Head by the screw steamer M. Q., from Amsterdam to Alexandria, with a cargo of barges in pieces, and in thirty-six hours brought by her safely to Gravesend. The M. Q. was delayed some time on her voyage. The weather was fine. The Aquila de los Andes, M. M. R. July 1, 1865, p. 817. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £500

543. The ship A., 1,119 tons, was driven by a gale from her moorings in the Mersey, and drifted against the great landing-stage. The steam-tugs S. K. and I. K. tried to stop her, but could not do so until assisted by a third tug, when the A. was towed out of danger and taken to an anchorage. The Argo, July 5, 1860. V. 54,000*l.*—A. £500

544. In November, the brig A., of 185 tons register, was lying off Porthcawl, exposed to a furious wind and sea, and an unsuccessful attempt was made by the crew of the lifeboat at Porthcawl to reach her. The brig was again seen next day, having drifted to the eastward. Eventually the lifeboat reached the brig, but found no one on board. The sea was breaking very heavily upon the Tuskar Rocks just under her stern, and she must have been lost but for the efforts of the salvors, who ultimately took her into Porthcawl harbour. The crew of the A., in attempting to reach the shore, were drowned by the capsizing of their boat. The Argo, M. M. R. March 31, 1866, p. 402. V. 1,300*l.*—A. £500

545. The barque B., 465 tons, met with bad weather, and was driven out of her course; her masts were cut away to prevent her running on shore, she was in a position of great peril, and hoisted signals of distress. Twenty-seven men, in the life-boat A., with twenty men in the yawl P., in tow of the steam-tug E., took the B. to Yarmouth. The steam-tug E. accepted £350 for her services. The Balaklava, S. G. June 28, 1855. Value 5,400*l.*—Award £500

546. In December, the French steamer B., off Ushant, was disabled by her engine-rod breaking, and hoisted signals. The tug S. bore down to her, and agreed to take her to the nearest French port. A gale from the S.S.W. springing up, the B. was taken into the nearest English port, Dartmouth. The towage lasted for three days, and the weather and sea were rough. The Bayonnaise, M. M. R. June 21, 1872, p. 786. V. 18,000*l.*—A. £500

547. In March, the ship B., 890 tons register, was discovered by a pilot cutter off the N.W. lightship in the Mersey, in a sinking condition, and abandoned by all her crew (twenty-three in number) but her master. The crew were found astern of the B. in two boats, and taken on board the cutter. Two of the cutter's crew and three pilots then put off, and with great personal risk succeeded in rescuing the master. The B., however, did not go down, and next morning four pilots and four apprentices boarded her, the cutter standing by in case of their being forced to abandon her. Seven feet of water were found in her. They kept her afloat until she drifted to Formsby lightship, then a steam-tug was engaged, and she was next morning safely towed to Seacombe and dry docked. The Belmont (Liverpool Pass. Co.), M. M. R. April 14, 1871, p. 464. V. 1,480*l.*—A. £500

548. The ship B., 265 tons, when twenty-five miles from Marseilles, was struck by a violent squall and much damaged. The brig M., 247 tons, assisted her into Marseilles. The Bessy, S. G. December 13, 1860. V. 7,640*l.*—A. £500

549. The vessel B. left Alexandria for England, and soon after was deserted by the whole of the crew excepting the master. The master of the G., having heard of this circumstance, went with four of his crew to her assistance, and after four hours' search found her at anchor in a most dangerous position near the Arab's Tower, and about half a mile from the shore. On boarding her they found the master in a very exhausted state, having eaten nothing for several days, and having attempted suicide with laudanum. By dint of great perseverance they succeeded in taking the schooner back in safety to Alexandria. The Breeze, S. G. April 29, 1846. V. 3,500*l.*—A. £500

550. In September, the schooner-rigged iron screw steamer B. was discovered by the steamer G. disabled, with a broken crank shaft, about ten miles W. by S. of the Eddystone Lighthouse in a dense fog, and was towed by her into Falmouth, a distance of twenty-five to twenty-eight miles. The weather was fine, and the towing lasted twelve hours. The Brittany, M. M. R. Mar. 19, 1875, p. 361. V. 18,000*l.*—A. £500

551. The screw steamer B. Q., 565 tons register, with engines of 180 h.-p. nom., came into collision with the steamer C. in the Mersey, and sustained considerable damage. The New Brighton ferryboat M. proceeded to the vessels in collision, in answer to blue lights and rockets sent up by the B. Q. The M. got a rope to the C., and the passengers of the C. boarded the M. The crew of the B. Q. left her and boarded the C., and some got on board the M. The pilot of the B. Q. urged the M. to leave the C. and assist the B. Q., which was sinking fast. The M. went to the starboard side of the B. Q., then nearly on her beam ends, and hawsers were passed to the B. Q., one from each end and one off each sponson timberhead. The B. Q. had her starboard bow cut down from the topgallant forecastle to within about four feet of her forechains and below her water-line; and she was so much down by the head that her screw was nearly out of water. The B. Q. could neither steer nor steam. The M. made fast to the B. Q., and went full speed till abreast of the Clarence Dock, then half-speed till abreast of the Sandon Dock. She then, at the request of the pilot of the B. Q., changed her position from the starboard to the port side of the B. Q., and a tow-rope was got out, to check her round the corner, and another was got out to the North Pier. In this way the B. Q. was taken into the Huskisson Dock, and left there in safety. It was alleged that the lives of the master, crew and pilot of the B. Q. were in great danger, and her cargo was probably saved from total loss. The owners alleged that the steam-power of the B. Q. was in perfect order and was used to propel her, that she was perfectly under command, though with a slight list, but was never on her beam ends, that she refused the services of a larger tug, that the M. did not save the B. Q., but only accompanied her across the river, to be at hand if wanted, and assisted her round the corner, which latter assistance a rope round the pier-head would have effected equally well. The British Queen, M. M. R. May 19, 1866, p. 625. Value 110,000*l.*—Award £500

552. In December, the iron steamer C., 488 tons register, 70 h.-p., with iron ore, off the coast of Portugal, rolling heavily, shipping much water and greatly disabled by the breaking of her propeller, was found by the steamer B., from Newcastle for Genoa. After towing for about nine hours, during which the C. came into collision with the B., and stove in her bulwarks, and the B. lost two buoys and a quantity of rope, the C. was brought to Vigo harbour, a distance of about thirty-five miles. The Campanil, M. M. R. June 26, 1874, p. 816. V. 13,975—A. £500

553. The brig C. L., 173 tons register, with a general cargo from Marseilles for Liverpool, was towed by the steam-tug E. from Moebfra Bay to Holyhead. The state of the wind and the sea made the towage a matter of great difficulty and danger, and also placed the brig in imminent peril. The Canadian Lass, M. M. R. April 20, 1867, p. 497. V. 5,500*l.*—A. £500

554. The American ship C. was anchored in Torbay, when a gale springing up she parted from her anchors and began drifting towards the rocks. The smack S., manned by seven hands, went to her and brought her into a place called Mole's Nest. The services lasted three days. The Caspian, S. G. June 30, 1853. V. 29,000*l.*—A. £500

555. The barque C., 336 tons, having been exposed to tempestuous weather for two or three days, shipped heavy seas, and suffered some damage, took refuge in Milford Haven, where her anchors not holding her masts were cut away. The steam-tug F., 181 tons, with some risk, towed the C. to Milford. The Comet, S. G. July 25, 1862; 7 L. T. N.S. 257. V. 6,300*l.*—A. £500

556. The ship C., 1,282 tons, brought up with her port anchor off Egremont in the Mersey. The wind blowing a strong gale with heavy squalls from the N.E., she began to drive. After driving a considerable distance her starboard anchor was let go, cable was payed out to both her anchors, and she was finally brought up off the Huskisson Dock, but as she continued to drag, a signal was made for a steamer, and the steam-tug R. A., 98 tons, with two engines working up to 250 h.-p., came up. The ship ceased to drag, and the tug agreed to stay by her. The C. afterwards struck the ground several times, but not heavily, and the tug then took the C. in tow, and finally conducted her to a position opposite the Magazines, and left her. The Constitution, S. G. March 12, 1863. V. 45,500*l.*—A. £500

557. In January, the steamer D., 1,914 tons, from London to Bombay, when S. of the Lizard, in the English Channel, became disabled in her machinery in a hard W.N.W. gale and a heavy sea. In answer to signals the steamer F., 3,138 tons, from Shields to Bombay with coals, came up and sent off a boat which, owing to the weather, could only get within speaking distance of the D. The weather having moderated, a rope was made fast, and the F. towed the D. for about twelve hours in very bad weather, when the D., having temporarily clamped her broken shaft, wore round and went up Channel under steam and sail at a slow speed to Southampton, the F. keeping by her for an hour and a-quarter, but incurring no danger by the services, and no loss beyond two broken hawsers. The Dago, M. M. R. July 6, 1883, p. 884. V. 53,549*l.*—A. £500

558. A vessel on her beam ends, dismasted, with a signal for assistance nailed on the stump of the mast, and with five feet of water in her hold, was fallen in with off Southwold, on the Suffolk coast, by two fishing smacks, who towed her into Yarmouth. The salvors incurred some danger in approaching the vessel, rendered their assistance promptly, and their services lasted about three days. The Despatch (1839), 4 Monthly Law Mag. (Notes of Cases), 87. V. 2,400*l.*—A. £500

559. In March, the Norwegian barque E. and L., with timber, was discovered by the smacks A. and I. C. abandoned by her crew, and drifting towards the Great Fish-bank in the North Sea. The smacks lay by her for some hours, then got hawsers attached, and towed her towards the Tyne until a steam-tug came up. Owing to the severity of the weather a second tug had to be employed, and the E. and L. was in five days safely moored in the Tyne. The Edwin and Lizzie, M. M. R. July 13, 1883, p. 877. Value 1,199l.—Award £500

560. In November, the Russian barque E., 375 tons, from the Baltic to Cette with deals, was dragging her anchors in the Downs, and in danger of collision in a heavy gale from the S.S.W. with rain and a heavy sea. The lugger L. C., of ten tons, value £500, came up, put three of her crew on board, and made fast a hawser, which, however, very soon parted. The E. driving astern, nearly came into collision with the lugger, and drove out into the open sea without any anchors or chains. The tug P., of 240 h.-p., value £500, came up, and with a hawser got the head of the E. round. The tug V., of 350 h.-p., value £4,000, then came up, and the E. was towed into the Commercial Docks in about twenty-eight hours. £350 to tugs, £150 to lugger. The Elin, M. M. R. May 12, 1882, p. 590. V. 17,600l.—A. £500

561. The barque E. H., in a gale from the S.S.W., went on shore on Romney Hoy, near Dungeness, and was in a position of great danger. Some coastguardsmen, at considerable risk to their lives, went in a galley to her assistance, and after several attempts succeeded in boarding her, and getting her off the shore. The Eliza Hart, S. G. July 15, 1856. V. 22,600l.—A. £500

562. In December, the E., 773 tons, from China for London, with tea, took the ground on the Roar Sand, off Dungeness. By the assistance of the tug S. and some of the crew of the lugger F. to A. N. she was rescued, and arrived at the West India Docks on the afternoon of the next day. The E. would have been two and a-half hours before getting off with her sails, and would not probably have even then got off without damage. As the hours advanced the weather got worse and the wind increased. The Eme, M. M. R. Feb. 24, 1871, p. 239. V. 77,400l.—A. £500

563. The F. F. grounded in a fog on the Arklow Bank. A signal of distress was made, and two cutters and a boat, manned by ten pilots, together with the steam-tug V., went to her assistance, and after lightening the vessel succeeded in removing her from the bank. Weather fine. The Fanny Forrester, S. G. Oct. 31, 1855. V. 13,432l.—A. £500

564. The ship G., when at anchor in the Mersey, dragged her anchors during a most dangerous storm from the N.W., in which nearly all the ships in the Mersey dragged their anchors. She was driven from rather more than mid-channel up the river until nearly straight across towards the north wall, where her anchors held. There was great probability, however, of her anchors dragging during the storm, and if they had done so, she, being only a hundred yards from the wall, must have breached round head up on to the wall, and would have foundered. From this peril she was rescued by the steam-tug G. W., which sustained no damage, and was in no danger in rendering the service. The Glengarry, S. G. Nov. 28, 1884, p. 758. V. 43,000l.—A. £500

565. The barge G., when about four miles from the Nore, was quite unmanageable, rolling heavily in the hollow of the sea, and in great danger of driving on the Nore Sand and being lost. The steam-tug C., after some difficulty, the tow-rope breaking twice, and the sea rolling heavily, succeeded in towing the barge to Limehouse. The Gipping, S. G. Nov. 17, 1857. V. 3,000l.—A. £500

566. In February, the screw steamer G. C., 1,650 tons, from London to Boston, broke her propeller, and from that time to the 22nd of March, being unable to use her engines, had drifted about under sail in very heavy weather, suffering serious damage to ship and cargo. One of her crew had been washed overboard, and another had died from small-pox, which attacked the captain and several of the crew. She could not have made an English port without steam assistance when she was discovered by the tug E. about eleven or twelve miles S.S.E. of the Lizard, drifting rapidly to leeward. The hawsers of the tug E. and the tug V., which also came up, were made fast, and the G. C. was towed by them for two hours, when the tug V.

came up, and the three took her safely into Falmouth Harbour. The services lasted seven hours altogether. The Gothenburg City, S. G. July 10, 1885, p. 438.

567. In March, the Norwegian schooner H., 123 tons register, from Gothenburg to West Hartlepool, with oats, was fallen in with about 150 miles from the mouth of the Humber, the Spurn bearing S.W. by W., by the smack O. L. The H. was displaying two signals of distress. The wind was blowing heavily from N.E. with a heavy sea. The H. had been struck by a heavy sea, two of her crew of six had been washed overboard and drowned, she had lost her mainboom gaff and mainsail, and her pumps were choked. The O. L. rescued the rest of the crew, and stayed by the H. till next morning, when in answer to her signals for help the smack E. came up, and the two smacks towed her into Grimsby. The Here, M. M. R. July 24, 1874, p. 944.

V. 1,798*l.*—A. £500

568. The steamer I., with iron, was lying grounded on a reef of rocks called Scarecrow Bush, between the Fern and Staple Islands; wind and weather moderate. Seventy-two salvors, thirteen boats. Taken to Holy Island Harbour. The Ivanhoe, S. G. July 10, 1857.

V. 5,000*l.*—A. £500

569. The steam-tug R. was engaged to tow the ship J. C. P. from the Smalls into a dock in the Mersey for a specified sum. A hurricane came on, and both the ship and the tug were in danger of drifting on to a lee-shore, but the R. nevertheless continued towing the J. C. P., and ultimately got her to the said dock. The J. C. Potter, M. M. R. Nov. 25, 1870, p. 1521.

V. 20,000*l.*—A. £500

570. In December, the ship L. H., from Quebec, laden with timber, arrived off the S. Foreland in bad weather, partially disabled. Her deck load had been thrown overboard. She was piloted to the Outer Downs by one of the crew of the lugger G., which came to her aid. In letting go the port anchor the windlass broke, and she began to drift towards the Gull Lightship. The W. and G. came up in answer to signals, and the former took her in tow to Margate Roads, and there held her while the latter went to the shore for 120 fathoms of chain; thence the W. and another tug towed her to Gravesend. The Lady Havelock, M. M. R. March 14, 1873, p. 335.

V. 4,100*l.*—A. £500

571. The L. was in the Downs during a gale. Being unable to procure a pilot the master engaged the lugger G., which conducted him to the Small Downs. The L. broke her windlass, and subsequently drove from her anchorage, approached the edge of the Brake Sand, and was in considerable danger. The lugger B., with the G., conducted the L. to a place of safety. The Leguan, S. G. May 9, 1855.

V. 9,000*l.*—A. £500

572. A large steamer having passengers on board, and having struck on a reef of rocks, was, by the exertions of a steam-tug, an officer of the coastguard and five of his men (assisted by 150 boatmen paid by agreement), got off the reef, and towed into port, a distance of two miles, by the steam-tug. The London Merchant, 3 Hagg. 394.

V. 12,000*l.*—A. £500

573. The ship L. D., off Bombay Harbour, was struck violently by a heavy sea, which carried away the rudder, the sea washing through the stern. The ship drifted, and the anchor was slipped; but the ship continuing to drift she was again anchored. The weather moderated, and the East India Company's steam frigate F. towed the L. D. inside the harbour. The Lord Dufferin, 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. 33. [Supreme Court of Bombay.]

V. 25,000*l.*—A. £500

574. In April, the screw steamer L., 476 tons register, 40 h.-p., with wine, from Bordeaux for Liverpool, about 20 miles W.N.W. of the Smalls, was drifting in a heavy, rolling cross sea from the S.W. towards the Irish coast in a disabled state, with a broken shaft. She was taken in tow with two hawsers by the steamer S. of I. towards Waterford. After passing the Conningsberg Lightship, a third hawser was got out; and ultimately, after five hours' towing, she was brought into Waterford Harbour. The Lotus, M. M. R. December 11, 1874, p. 1585.

V. 32,439*l.*—A. £500

575. In January, the steamer L., which had broken her main-shaft, came to an anchor about three miles from the Holm Sand Head. In answer to signals the Pakefield lifeboat put off, and reached the L. through a heavy sea, when she was requested to fetch a tug. The tug D. was brought, and, with the assistance of the crew of the lifeboat on board the L., got her into Yarmouth in two days. The Ludworth, M. M. R. May 4, 1877, p. 564. Value 6,500*l.*—Award £500

576. The ship M. was ashore on the Quicksands, not a very dangerous shoal. One wrecking vessel, carrying seven men, lightened her of 163 bales of cotton. The next day, the wind and tide being favourable, she worked herself off the reef. The Marathon, 5 A. R. 88, cited in Marvin, 214. [American.] V. 16,000*l.*—A. £500

577. The M. W. considerably damaged, was off the Liverpool Banks, and in danger of going on the Lancashire Sands. She hoisted a signal of distress, and the steamer M. C. came and towed her in about six hours to Liverpool. The Mary Wilson, S. G. March 3, 1851. V. 5,000*l.*—A. £500

578. In August, the ship M., 1,212 tons register, took the ground on the edge of the Six and Fourfeet Flats, at the entrance to the river Mersey, on the ebb tide, and during a heavy W.N.W. gale. She was timber-laden with a deck-load, and had lost her anchors, chains, and the greater part of her canvas, and her rigging was damaged. The tug C. stood by her for three hours, and then a hawser being attached between the tug and the M., and the tug's engines disconnected, the M., after half-an-hour's towing, was moved from the bank, taken into deep water, and ultimately docked in the Canada Dock. The Maud, M. M. R. June 12, 1869, p. 754. V. 6,700*l.*—A. £500

579. The schooner M., while riding at anchor near the mouth of the Thames, lost one of her anchors in a gale, and was driving on the Mouse Sand, with a signal of distress flying, when the steam-tug R. B., 120 h.-p., value £6,000, with much difficulty and risk took hold of her, and kept her from driving further towards the sand, and finally, in seven hours, got her into Sheerness. The Medora, 5 Notes of Cases, 156. V. 11,431*l.*—A. £500

580. In November, the barque N. I., 982 tons, from Rotterdam to Batavia, with twenty passengers and a general cargo, in a violent gale from S.S.W., parted from her anchors in the Downs, drove for more than an hour, and took the ground in Pegwell Bay, the tide being flood, and she kept forging ahead for three hours and then remained hard and fast. The master, being ignorant of his position, signalled for a tug, and the lugger P. R., value £450, which had anchored on account of the weather, cut her cables, ran through a fearful sea, as close as could be, alongside the N. I., which was rolling and striking heavily, and put three hands on board her. The tug and two lifeboats then took the passengers to Ramsgate, and returned to the N. I. Anchors and chains were laid out, and the tug A. coming up, they succeeded in getting her off, and into Ramsgate Harbour. £155 was paid to the A. and two lifeboats, and £300, with £32 for damages, was offered to the lugger. The Noach I., M. M. R. November 8, 1878, p. 1427. V. 16,000*l.*—A. £500

581. The barque N. was on shore upon the Upper Knock of the Shipwash Sand, laden with deals, derelict, damaged, and in imminent danger, the wind at the time blowing heavily, was fallen in with by the cutter E., the crew of which, with some difficulty, succeeded in boarding her, and shortly afterwards three smacks came up, and after great difficulty the four vessels succeeded in dragging her off the sand, and conducted her to Harwich. The Norma, S. G. March 13, 1862; 7 L. T. N.S. 257. V. 1,341*l.*—A. £500.

582. The barque P., in Caernarvon Bay, was riding heavily to two anchors, with her stern to Rhoscolyn Rocks, the wind blowing a gale from the S.W., and the sea running heavily. The barque was in considerable peril. The steam-tug R., of the value of £11,000, after several hawsers had parted, towed the barque to the North Stack. The Paraguay, S. G. Dec. 8, 1858. V. 5,300*l.*—A. £500

583. The R., 700 tons, having grounded on the Sumatra Bank during a squall, the ship F. went to her assistance, and by laying out anchors succeeded in getting the R. off. The Rajasthan, S. G. Dec. 19, 1856; Swabey, 171. V. 40,000*l.*—A. £500

584. The ship R., while on her homeward voyage, encountered bad weather, and suffered so much damage that she was in danger of foundering. When about eighty-five miles from Algoa Bay it was determined to steer thither. After some days she fell in with the barque P. of W., when the master of the P. of W. agreed to see the R. into Algoa Bay for £500 (expecting to reach that place the next morning). The service, however, occupied more time, and led to more expense than had been anticipated, the P. of W. having incurred an actual outlay of £261, besides liabilities. The Repulse, S. G. May 24, 1845. Value 38,000*l.*—Award £500

585. The ship R., damaged and dismasted by collision, was off the Bishops. The steam-tug Rattler, 358 tons, 150 h.-p., value £9,500, cast off another ship she was towing, and towed the R. to Liverpool, 120 miles, in ten hours. The Respigadera, S. G. March 2, 1859. V. 15,000*l.*—A. £500

586. The R., of 1,150 tons, in a fog got upon the Arklow Bank (a dangerous quicksand), and was in considerable danger. The steamer S. went to her, and after two hours' service dragged her off the bank. The Roscius, S. G. June 7, 1845. V. 10,000*l.*—A. £500

587. In March, the French ship S., when in a disabled condition after a collision, was towed fifty-three miles to Cherbourg by the barque T., from St. Lucia for the Tyne, a service of fourteen hours. The Servannais, M. M. R. March 25, 1865, p. 367. V. 4,000*l.*—A. £500

588. In December, the iron ship S. of G., from Calcutta to London, with general cargo, in tow of the tug U. (the tug O. having just cast off), was drifting into shoal water on the west end of the Leigh Middle, and in great danger. A heavy gale was blowing, with thick, dark weather. She was taken in tow by the tug H. M. The two tugs then towed for four hours, when they came into collision, and the H. M. was seriously damaged. At midnight an anchor was let go, and the S. of G.'s tow-rope was cast off. As the S. of G. was again drifting towards the Knock, the tug let go her anchor with forty fathoms, and her engines were set full speed ahead. The S. of G. was thus held till two a.m. next day, and then brought to a safe anchorage. The Star of Germany, M. M. R. March 7, 1879, p. 309. V. 38,000*l.*—A. £500

589. In July, the steamer M. S., from New Orleans to New York, grounded off New Jersey, near Deal Beach, with such force that she could not be got off without help, which she received from a company formed for salvage purposes, who sent two schooners with heavy chains and cables and got her off in about twenty-four hours. The Morning Star, 2 Asp. 327. V. 58,000*l.*—A. £500

590. The schooner S., in a heavy gale off Gorleston, lost both her anchors and cables, and was drifting towards the Newcombe Sands. The lifeboat R. assisted her to Lowestoft. The Susannah, S. G. Nov. 3, 1860. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £500

591. The S. of I. was drifting amongst the ice, and in a dangerous position. The greater part of the crew had already left her, when a large number of men with ice-boats came to her assistance, and after hard labour, extending over several days, managed to save so much of the cargo of the guano as had not been jettisoned, and, with less trouble, succeeded also in saving the vessel. The Star of India, Assistance, Ham. H. G. Z. 1872, pp. 206—208. [German.] V. 1,575*l.*—A. £500

592. The T., 300 tons, in consequence of stress of weather, was driven on the North Sand, where she was found by the crew of a revenue cutter, who, with the assistance of the crews of six smacks, three luggers, two barges, and a whale boat, lightened the T., and she was finally got off and conducted to a place of safety. The Twiot, S. G. Feb. 25, 1847. V. 5,680*l.*—A. £500

593. The barque T., off Towan Head, on the coast of Cornwall, laden with iron, was in imminent danger to ship and crew. There was an extraordinary swell on; wind blowing hard from N.W. by W. right into the bay; weather moderate. Salvors proceeded to her in two boats, one a pilot boat. Services of short duration, but attended with great danger. The barque had lost her maintopgallant mast, and her outer and inner jib-sheets, her mainyard, mainsail, and maintopsail were blown away, and she was unable to weather Trevoise Head. She was got into deep water. The Transil, S. G. July 10, 1857. V. 6,980*l.*—A. £500

594. The steamer T., 409 tons, with her intermediate shaft broken, was between the islands of Skokam and Skonear. The steamer S., 301 tons and 200 h.-p., with passengers and a valuable cargo, towed her to Milford Haven. The S. was detained about four hours. The Troubadour, May 25, 1850. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £500

595. The barque V. was off Rottingdean, disabled and derelict. Assistance rendered by steamer L., the Newhaven lifeboat, and seven coastguardsmen. Conducted to Newhaven. £250 to steamer, £150 to coastguardsmen, £100 to lifeboat. The Viscaya, S. G. April 21, 1859. Value 1,450*l.*—Award £500

596. The barque V., of 487 tons, when off the South Foreland, was damaged by collision, and hoisted a signal for assistance. The steam-tug R. towed her into Ramsgate. The Vrede, S. G. June 21, 1860. V. 9,300*l.*—A. £500

597. In January, the ship C., 984 tons, from Flushing to Glasgow, eighteen hands, in ballast, when in tow of the steam-tug S., 235 tons, came into collision in the Penarth Roads with the steamer T., at anchor there. The weather was very bad, and the sea high. The S. cleared her from the T., and brought her to an anchorage, had her partly refitted at Cardiff, and thence towed her to Glasgow. The Caroline, M. M. R. April 4, 1884, p. 215. V. not stated.—A. £480

598. In November, the Norwegian barque F., from Riga for Havre with timber, was sighted by the smack Faith, thirty-eight tons, value £600, flying signals of distress on the Long Sand. There was a fresh breeze from S.S.W., and a heavy sea, and the F. was waterlogged, had her keel and bottom knocked out, her stern smashed, and her masts gone. The crew of the Faith, with difficulty, boarded her, and found the crew about to abandon her. The Faith lay by her, and the smacks C. and S. came up and put some hands on board. The Faith took the crew's effects, and went to Harwich with them to fetch a tug. Meanwhile an attempt was made to lay out an anchor, but failed, and the wind and sea increasing, all hands had to get on board the S. to save their lives. Next day the steam-tug H., 350 h.-p., value £6,500, came up; a tow-line was made fast, and the tug tried, but in vain, to tow the F. A heavy gale came on, and the F. had to be deserted. The gale continued, and they could not again board her for two days, when she was found to be full of water, and to have her rudder unshipped. She was boarded again two days later, some sails were set, and she was forced over the sand into the Black Deep, her deck cargo alone keeping her afloat. The S. then got the F.'s hawser on board, and commenced towing. The Faith went to look for the tug H., and then anchored till the tug came up, shortly before night. A hawser was then got on board the tug from the F., and she was towed, rolling much and sheering frequently, owing to the loss of her rudder and masts, and to her being waterlogged, into Harwich harbour, which was reached late next day, but she could not be got into the inner harbour, owing to heavy gales and her unmanageable condition, for two days more. The Franklin, M. M. R. April 12, 1878, p. 469. V. 1,400*l.*—A. £480

599. In November, the barque S., 835 tons register, from Hull to Bahia Blanca, with seventeen hands and a general cargo, ran ashore on the Ower's Shoal. The weather was bad, the wind blowing a gale from E.N.E., and the sea breaking heavily on the beach. She was boarded by a pilot and the crew of the lifeboat F. S., who, at considerable risk, got her off in a few hours, and shaped her course for Spithead, the lifeboat towing astern. A tug was obtained, which took her into Spithead. The Sarach, M. M. R. June 1, 1883, p. 691. V. 12,000*l.*—A. £480

600. The barque E., laden with timber, was on the rocks off Black Head in Galway Bay, derelict, her sails, topmasts and rigging carried away, and hanging over her sides. Her rudder was beaten away, and her bottom gone aft, her transoms being entangled among the rocks, and several logs of timber were sticking out of her. A steamer from Galway was sent to her assistance, and with the aid of the revenue cutter D., and a boat and crew of the coastguard, succeeded in towing the derelict in safety to the westward of Nimmo's Pier. The services occupied five days and nights in stormy weather upon an exposed coast. £350 to the steamer, £90 to the D., £20 to the coastguard, and £10 to the man who carried the news of the wreck. The Erin-go-Bragh, 9 Jur. N.S. 100. [Irish.] V. about 1,373*l.*—A. £470

601. In October, the steamer M., from Patras to London, when about twenty miles S.E. of Cape St. Vincent, broke her crank shaft, and became disabled. In answer to signals, the steamer R. came up and took the M. in tow to Gibraltar Bay. The services lasted four days. The Miranda, M. M. R. July 12, 1872, p. 881. V. 36,000*l.*—A. £470

602. In November, the brig E., from Odessa to Fraserburgh with a cargo of bones, was in great distress, and fast driving on the Main, near Dover. From this perilous position she was extricated by the steam-tug P. and the lugger F. The court awarded to the tug £400; to the lugger, £56. The Epaminondas (Dover Comm.), M. M. R. December 18, 1869, p. 1620. Value 2,000*l.*—Award £456

603. In December, the screw steamer E., 943 tons, from Revel to London with oats, &c., was aground on the Swin Middle. There was a heavy sea running, the wind was blowing fresh from the N.W., and the tide was the first quarter flood. She was in considerable peril, and unable, without assistance, to get away from her position of danger. Seven smacks assisted her, and after a few hours' work got her into deep water. The Essex, M. M. R. July 2, 1875, p. 839. V. 34,100*l.*—A. £456

604. In October, the full-rigged ship A., 1,460 tons, was derelict in foggy weather, with light wind, about one mile to the N.N.W. of the Varne lightship, heading to the E., making no way, and in a sinking condition, having been in collision with the steamer V. She was found thus by the screw steamer C., 1,547 tons, value £27,850, with twenty-four hands, and cargo of coals from the Tyne to Alexandria. The A. had a hole fifteen feet broad in her starboard bow, out of which petroleum barrels were falling into the sea. Her crew had gone on board the V., which was too disabled to assist. At the request of the master of the A., the C. got a hawser aboard, and with great promptitude and skill beached the A. The Adome, M. M. R. February 8, 1884, p. 89. V. 2,700*l.*—A. £450

605. In November, the A. B., from Archangel to London, got on the Gunfleet Sands, parted three anchors and cables, and sprung a leak. After six smacks had got her off the sands, for which they were paid £200, two steamers towed her, with 9½ feet of water in her hold, to London. The Alexander Brandt, S. G. May 26, 1841. V. 2,061*l.*—A. £450

606. The screw steamer F. fell in with the barque E. off Cape Pælas in a state of great distress and quite unmanageable, and towed her into Carthage. The services lasted eight hours. The Edina, S. G. November 14, 1855. V. 2,044*l.*—A. £450

607. In November, the screw steamer E., 1,172 tons gross, broke her tail shaft, and was lying with her head N.E. by E., about three miles off the Land's End. The screw steamer L. D., 813 tons gross, from London to Cardiff, in ballast, with sixteen hands, came up, got a hawser on board the E., and with considerable difficulty, owing to the parting of the hawsers, the heavy sea, and high wind, got her to Penarth Roads, and anchored her there. The services lasted about sixteen hours. The Elf, M. M. R. April 4, 1884, p. 215. V. 9,500*l.*—A. £450

608. The E., from Gothenburg with deals, was found derelict on the Sunk Sand, and saved by four smacks with forty-eight hands. The Emanuel, S. G. July 26, 1839. V. 970*l.*—A. £450

609. In April, the German barque F. W., 241 tons register, from Dantzic for Newcastle, with timber, waterlogged, without power of steering, and having lost her mainmast, was discovered by the smacks T. and Sir T. S., of Grimsby, about 180 miles from that place. There was a tremendous gale and a very heavy sea. Hawsers were attached, but after some towing, broke, and the smacks stayed by her all night. The crew, who were exhausted by the exposure and cold, were taken off, put on board the smacks, and two days later landed at Grimsby. At 2 p.m. towing recommenced, but when within eight miles of Grimsby the rope parted, and the F. W. disappeared in the squall. Next day the vessel was fallen in with about 100 miles from Spurn Point by the smacks Sir W. A., M., E., and Esther, who got hold of her, and in three days towed her to within sixty miles of the Spurn Point. The tug Melton then came up and towed her safely to Grimsby in one day. £150 to salvors of life, £300 to the other salvors. The Frederick Wilhelm, M. M. R. Aug. 11, 1882, p. 1004. V. 958*l.*—A. £450

610. The ship S. G., nearly two miles above low water-mark, was lying dry in Holford Bay, having been driven by the wind, which was blowing hard from the N.N.W. The steam-tug P., after some difficulty, dragged her off the mud, and towed her to Cardiff Roads. The ship was in danger of becoming a total wreck, had not the tug gone to her assistance. The S. Gildersleeve, S. G. Nov. 4, 1857. V. 8,200*l.*—A. £450

611. In November, the steamer G., in lat. 49°35 N. and long. 3°10 W., the weather being overcast, with light wind and a ground swell, was found totally disabled, with engines broken down, by the screw steamer S. F., 351 tons, which towed her first towards Portsmouth and eventually into Portland Harbour of Refuge. The Glanwern, M. M. R. Jan. 25, 1884, p. 54. Value 18,000*l.*—Award £450

612. The barque G. H., of 380 tons, got upon the dangerous Barnard Sand, off the coast of Norfolk. The wind at the time was blowing upon the sand, and the vessel was in considerable danger. The salvors, consisting of eighty-four men, the crews of five yawls, put off to her assistance, and with some difficulty and danger got her off at high water on the same day, and took her to Harwich. The Governor Harcourt, S. G. June 12, July 16, 1845. V. 4,100*l.*—A. £450

613. In October, the Swedish barque G., 512 tons, from Sandwall for Bristol, with deals, damaged in a collision the night before, was taken in tow off the South Foreland by the tug V., and brought to the City Canal Dock. The Gustaf, M. M. R. May 6, 1865, p. 561. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £450

614. In November, the brig H. M., 185 tons, from Cronstadt for London, with oats, was lying, crippled by a collision, at anchor in the roadstead of Yarmouth, the wind blowing heavily from S.S.W. and increasing, and a strong sea running. The tug M., 98 tons, 180 h.-p., value £3,000, towed the lifeboat L. out to the brig, which was reached in three-quarters of an hour. The L. was towed alongside, some of the crew boarded the brig, and the tug and lifeboat stayed by her during the night. The weather was so bad that all hands got into the lifeboat and rode under the brig's stern for five hours. On returning, the windlass and anchor were found to be broken, so she slipped anchor and was towed by the M. into the river, and there moored in safety. The services lasted seventeen hours. The Hannah Maria, M. M. R. Feb. 22, 1878, p. 243. V. 2,422*l.*—A. £450

615. The barque H., 500 tons, leaky, with her anchors down, was being driven by a gale on to a rocky and dangerous part of the coast of Cork, when her fore and main masts were cut away, and she was brought up not far from the shore. E., the commanding officer of the coastguard station, sent to Cove for a steamer, and also collected eight men, who, when the weather became more moderate but still dangerous, went with him in a whale-boat to the H., to save the crew. The steamer S., on a voyage from Cork to Bristol, came up, and in a few hours towed the H. to Cove, breaking a hawser in the service. £120 to the coastguardsmen, £330 to the S. The Hebe, 7 Notes of Cases. Supp. 1. [Irish.] V. 4,000*l.*—A. £450

616. The brig H. got on shore on the south part of the Goodwin Sands and was in a state of very imminent danger. The P. and the S. went to her assistance, succeeded in getting her off the sand, and took her to the North Foreland. The Hilda, S. G. April 21, 1855. V. 4,100*l.*—A. £450

617. The screw steamship L. went on shore on the Shingles between the Needles and Hurst Castle; the master telegraphed to Southampton for assistance. Two tugs and a lighter went to the L., and after lightening her of part of her cargo, they succeeded in removing her from the Shingles, and conducting her to a safe anchorage ground. The engines of the tugs were damaged, and cost £50 to repair. Services lasted two hours. The Leda, S. G. June 20, 1855. V. 12,278*l.*—A. £450

618. In November, the brigantine L., 233 tons, from Halifax to London, with eight hands, general cargo and government stores, lost both anchors off the N. Foreland. The lugger Q., 23 tons, came up, and by request fetched an anchor and ninety fathoms of chain. Whilst she was gone the tug C. came up, made fast a hawser and held the L. till the lugger's return (six hours), and then towed her to Woolwich in twenty-six hours. The wind was blowing a gale with a heavy sea, and the L. was in danger of drifting on to the Goodwins. £370 to the tug, £80 to the lugger. The Luland, M. M. R. February 16, 1883, p. 209. V. 2,000*l.*—A. £450

619. In February, the M. from Smyrna to Hull was assisted from a position of peril on the Cross Sand near Yarmouth. The salvors were kept in quarantine thirty-seven days, the M. not having a clean bill of health, and, besides, were liable to catch the plague. The Maria, S. G. July 5, 1837. V. 2,344*l.*—A. £450

620. The brig N. was stranded on the beach off the Island of Paloma, and her master and crew had left her, and were living on the island. H.M.S. C. went to her assistance, and after lightening her, succeeded in getting her afloat, and ultimately into Monte Video. The services lasted six days, but were attended with no danger. The Nina, S. G. November 29, 1860. Value 1,293*l.*—Award £450

621. In July, the steamer P., 1,157 tons, from Messina to New Orleans, with green fruit and Mediterranean produce, in lat. 34°30' N. and long. 14°50' W., with a broken crank-shaft and helpless, the weather being moderate, with wind and sea from the N.E., was discovered by the steamer T., 1,670 tons, 148 h.-p., value with freight and cargo £4,372, from Antwerp to the River Plate. The T. took the P. in tow to Funchal, a distance of 150 miles. The services lasted twenty-six hours. The Picqua, S. G. November 20, 1885, p. 742. V. 24,000*l.*—A. £450

622. The schooner P. C., 283 tons, was in distress off the East Hoyle Bank, riding heavily to one anchor, the wind blowing a strong gale from the N.W., and there being a heavy sea running. The steam-tug C. went to her, and found her square-sails torn, her rudder disabled, and no pilot on board. She then disconnected her engines, took her in tow, and ultimately conducted her to Salisbury Dock in the Mersey, the steam-tug B. J. rendering some assistance. £300 to the C., £150 to the B. J. The Pride of Canada, S. G. April 23, 1863. V. 12,000*l.*—A. £450

623. In October, the brig T., 244 tons register, from Norway to Aberdeen with timber and deals, was discovered by the smack W. D., east of the Dogger Bank, 185 miles from the Spurn, in a heavy sea and westerly wind, quite disabled, making a great deal of water, and with her crew exhausted from pumping. One hand was put on board from the W. D., and one from the smack T. B. which subsequently came up. The T. B. commenced towing, and next morning the W. D. towed ahead of the T. B. Two days later the brig's crew were taken off, there being eight feet of water in her, and hands from the smacks took their places. The towing ceased then for a time, and within twenty-four hours there were twelve feet of water in her, and crews were put on her every night and morning for three days, at great risk, to pump her; towing then recommenced, and after eight days' labour she was brought into Grimsby. The Tvedestrand, M. M. R. February 26, 1875, p. 262. V. 1,710*l.*—A. £450

624. In February, the ship T. B., deserted by her master and crew, was taken possession of, about 240 miles from Malta, by the steamer L., value £30,000. The weather was not bad, and there was no danger to the salvors in the service; but the property salvaged was in danger from the fact of being derelict. The L. took the T. B. to Malta, which was reached in two days, and the L. was there detained eleven or twelve hours. The Vice-Admiralty Court at Malta awarded £300, which on appeal was held to be insufficient. The True Blue, 4 Moore, P. C. C. N.S. 96; L. R. 1 P. C. 250. V. 1,452*l.*—A. £450

625. The ship W. S., 1,049 tons, grounded on Brook Ledge, Isle of Wight. The cutter A. and E., the E. with nine hands, and the boat V. with five hands, went to her assistance. The A. and E. was sent to Yarmouth for forty extra hands; five men from the A. and E., and the E. went to the ship's pumps; a steam-tug took her in tow. The A. and E. returned with thirty-six hands, who were employed at the pumps. Five men of the V. assisted at the anchors, all the salvors laboured hard at the pumps. Two steam-tugs arrived and towed her to Cowes. There might have been loss of life if the masts had fallen. The services lasted more than a day. The William Singer, S. G. July 22, 1858. V. 20,000*l.*—A. £450

626. In November, the Dutch barque Z., in a perilous position, about 1½ miles from Shoreham Pier, and in danger, if she remained where she was another tide, of perishing entirely, was extricated by a small tug with pilots on board. The services lasted into the next day. The Zaanstroom, M. M. R. June 16, 1871, p. 753. V. 25,000*l.*—A. £450

627. The O. was drifting about with wood cargo in the North Sea in stormy weather, abandoned by her crew, mainmast cut away, and without sails. The U. took her in tow and brought her to Hamburg. The Uhlenhorst and Orpheus, Salvage, Hamb. H. G. Z. 1878, pp. 158, 160, 200. [German.] V. 1,330*l.*—A. £440

628. In November, the A., from Newcastle, sprang a leak, and anchored at the mouth of the Humber in a sinking state. She was towed up to Grimsby by a smack. The Allen, Feb. 22, 1841. Value 4,300*l.*—Award £430

629. The B. P. was off Milford dismasted and in great distress. The schooner T. S., laden with a general cargo, went to her assistance, with some difficulty took her in tow, and conducted her to St. Ives, where she brought up. The services lasted three days and three nights. On nearing the port of St. Ives some pilots and boatmen went to the brig in the lugger K., and assisted in steering and towing the brig into the port. £400 to the T. S., £20 to the pilots and boatmen. The Brazil Packet, S. G. April 29, 1851. V. 2,677*l.*—A. £420

630. In November, the brig E. M., 255 tons, from Marseilles for the Baltic with timber, was fast on the Buxey Sand in a strong S.E. breeze at high water, and sixty-one miles from where her captain, who was ill and had met with an accident, imagined he was. Twelve hands of the crews of three smacks, by means of heaving on a kedge and a bower anchor, and other manœuvring, got her head round to the wind, which was freshening all the day; and when she came clear of the sands they slipped both anchors, took her to a safe anchorage for the night, and thence next morning to Brightlingsea. The Emma Malam, M. M. R. Feb. 2, 1877, p. 149. V. 2,700*l.*—A. £420

631. In April, the ship G., 658 tons register, from Valparaíso for Liverpool, with flour and wheat, when in the Floyne, River Mersey, came into collision with the S., then in tow of the tug B. P. The steam-tug rendered services, which it was not denied entitled her to a considerable salvage reward, and in them she was assisted by the tugs Sir G. G. and W. The services lasted eleven hours. £300 to the B. P., £60 to the G. G., £60 to the W. The Glengaber, M. M. R. June 21, 1872, p. 786. V. 22,000*l.*—A. £420

632. In January, the ship K. F., 1,326 tons, from New York for London with refined petroleum, at anchor in the Downs, with the North Foreland Light bearing W.S.W. about four miles off, began to drag her anchors, and had to slip thirty-five fathoms of chain to prevent coming into collision with a barque. Her starboard anchor was let go, but the gale increasing from the N.E., she dragged till she was in five fathoms of water only, when her anchor and chains were slipped, and she made all sail towards the South Foreland. A lugger made two trips to shore to get anchors, and two tugs held her till the return of the lugger with the second anchor and chain, a period of sixteen hours. The Kendrick Fish, M. M. R. June 30, 1876, p. 811. V. 18,000*l.*—A. £410

633. The ship A., having taken the ground in the Old Calabar River, the steamer D. Y. was employed in lightening her and towing her off. The services occupied four days. The Africa, S. G. April 29, 1854; 1 Spinks' Ecl. & Adm. Rep. 302. V. 30,000*l.*—A. £400

634. The brigantine A. was off Holyhead, damaged, and in considerable danger. The brig R., after several attempts, got her hawser on board and towed her about twenty miles, when a steam-tug was engaged. The Alarme, S. G. Dec. 22, 1858. V. 4,575*l.*—A. £400

635. The schooner A., 308 tons, from Gothenburg for London, received great damage in a gale, and was shortly afterwards fallen in with by the cutter V., 107 tons, which towed her in seven or eight days to the vicinity of Corton Lightship. Some risk of life was incurred by the salvors in boarding the A., and difficulty arose in towing her from the warp breaking from time to time. From the lightship she was taken by a tug into Yarmouth Roads. The Albert, S. G. May 3, 1864. V. 1,672*l.*—A. £400

636. In October, the screw steamer R. L. A., 620 tons, from Riga to Grangemouth, with sleepers and lathwood, was drifting helplessly with a list to starboard, having, through stress of weather, used all her coal and failed to get up steam by burning part of her cargo and her bunker fittings. She had lost her mainmast, after binnacle and compass, and was drifting out of the track of steamers. In answer to flare-ups, the steamer T. T., 348 tons net and 554 tons gross, from London to the Tyne, with fifteen hands, and in water ballast, came up and towed her towards Hartlepool until the tug C. came up and took her in tow. The R. L. Alston, M. M. R. Feb. 29, 1884, p. 134. V. 7,350*l.*—A. £400

637. The A., 665 tons, grounded on the Tynemouth Bar, and was in imminent danger. The tide was high water, the wind blowing a fresh breeze with a heavy sea on, which was gradually increasing. Four steam-tugs went to her assistance, and she was, in a short time, towed off. The Ann, S. G. March 3, 1847.

Value 6,710*l.*—Award £400

638. In November, the brigantine A. C., from Lagos for London, with cereals, was descried about two miles off by the steamer B., which was waiting to enter the harbour of St. Helier. It was blowing a gale. The A. C. was drifting towards the rocks about half to leeward of her, and could not save herself by anchoring. The B. bore up to her, and with great difficulty making fast to her, towed her to within a mile of the harbour when the hawser parted. The A. C. then let go her anchor, the B. landed her passengers, returned to the A. C., and towed her into harbour. The A. C. had a damaged and disabled rudder, which increased the difficulty of towage. The Annabella Clark, M. M. R. March 13, 1874, p. 334.

V. 5,500*l.*—A. £400

639. The A., on the 5th November, near Hasborough light, suddenly struck the ground, there being increasing gales and a high sea. For safety the sails were cut away, and a great part of the cargo thrown overboard. The water rose in the vessel under the half-deck, and the pumps could not remove it. On the following morning, the vessel being in great danger, a signal of distress was hoisted; three fishing smacks put off to her assistance, and on the 9th carried her in safety into the Humber. This action was brought against the cargo, the vessel having been condemned and sold, and one-third of the value paid to the salvors. The Apollo, S. G. April 27, 1847.

V. 1,350*l.*—A. £400

640. In September, the screw steamer A., 3,127 tons register, 750 h.-p., from Plymouth for Melbourne, with cargo and 500 passengers, when in Plymouth Sound broke both her anchor chains. Two galleys, the B. and B. P., passed ropes from the A. to a schooner lying by the A. and to the mail buoy, by which means the A. was prevented from drifting on to the rocks off Stratton Heights. The Atrato, M. M. R. Dec. 13, 1872, p. 1588.

V. 90,000*l.*—A. £400

641. In October, the ship B., 1,034 tons, in ballast, from London to Cardiff, to load fuel for Aden, having dragged her anchors, went aground on Long Nose Rock, S.E. of N. Foreland Light, and was in imminent danger. She burnt blue lights, and the luggers E. and S. went to her aid, the sea breaking heavily, the tide being about an hour's ebb, and a strong gale blowing from N. by E. The luggers' crews helped to get top-gallants down and prepare her for being towed, to make the tug fast, pump the ship, and lighten her by throwing out ballast. She was finally towed off the rocks by a steam-tug. The Bavelaw, M. M. R. June 2, 1866, p. 688.

V. 6,000*l.*—A. £400

642. The brig B., 189 tons, got upon the Goodwin Sands, and the lives of those on board were in imminent danger. The steamship S., the Ramsgate lifeboat, and three luggers, went, at the risk of life, to the assistance of the B.; they were afterwards joined by another lugger, and together succeeded in taking the brig into Ramsgate Harbour. The Bartley, S. G. Jan. 30, 1857; Swabey, 198.

V. 1,250*l.*—A. £400

643. In December, the C., from Stockton to London, seriously damaged by collision in the Humber, was pumped by the crew of the brig B., which took on board the master and crew of the C. The C. was ultimately got into harbour. The Canegrove, S. G. May 7, 1840.

V. 1,750*l.*—A. £400

644. In March, the barque C., 470 tons, with sixteen hands, two passengers, and a cargo of wool-skins, tallow, and oil, from New Zealand to London, went ashore on the Goodwin Sands in thick weather, the wind being S.W. and the sea moderate. The crews of the lugger A., eight tons, and the lugger L. B., seeing signals from the East Goodwin and Gull Lightships, there being then a strong breeze from S.W., hazy and squally weather, and a nasty sea, launched their luggers and proceeded to the Goodwin Sands, where they found the C. in distress, lying heading south, with her sails still set, and striking heavily. She had previously been in collision, and lost her cutwater jibboom and most of her head-gear. The tides were then taking off, and it was absolutely necessary to get the C. off before next high-water. The salvors furled the sails and cleared away the wreckage forward, and at about 10-20 the steam-tug V. came up. About 12-30 the hawser of the V. was made fast, the C. meanwhile having been striking heavily and having unshipped her rudder. In about two hours she was got off and towed to Gravesend, nine of the salvors remaining on board till she reached that place, after nine and a-half hours' towage. The Chaudière, M. M. R. April 14, 1881, p. 457.

Value 37,380*l.*—Award £400

645. In January, the brig C., 246 tons, from Congo River for Liverpool with nuts, at anchor in the Congo River, dragged her anchors during the absence ashore of her master and four hands, and was fallen in with by the ship L. in lat. 46° 32' N., and long. 18° 35' W. The mate and three hands had endeavoured to take the vessel on to Liverpool. When the C. was fallen in with by the L., her mate was nearly exhausted, one of the three hands had died, and the other was quite unable to work from fatigue. Two men were shipped on board the C. from the L., with whose assistance the brig was taken to Liverpool. The Charles, M. M. R. May 10, 1872, p. 593; 1 Asp. N.S. 296.

V. 8,174*l.*—A. £400

646. In October, the Danish schooner C., 77 tons register, with oilcake, was discovered off Dungeness derelict, and in a very crippled condition, in the trough of the sea, by the screw steamer S., 140 tons, twelve hands, and a full cargo from Guernsey to London. There was great danger of the C.'s drifting into collision with other ships. There was a heavy swell, a strong N.E. wind, and an ebb tide. The S. took her in tow for the river, but after thirteen hours, owing to the strong wind and tide, had to anchor, holding the C. astern. When the tide turned the towing recommenced, and she was got safely to Gravesend in about thirty-six hours, anchoring on the way off the Nore by an anchor taken on board from the S. at great risk in a boat. From Gravesend she was towed to the Regent's Canal. The Christian, M. M. R. Dec. 15, 1882, p. 1586.

V. 900*l.*—A. £400

647. In November, the screw steamer C., 153 tons gross register, from Dublin to Ayr, in ballast, struck on the East Hoyle Bank in a strong N.N.W. gale, about three miles from the mainland. Her steering-gear had given way, and the master and crew left her, but not intending to abandon her. The crew of the smack Q. V., which came up, cleared the anchor and chains and set the sails. They got her to the Channel in about five hours, and anchored her. In about two hours the tug K. of M. came up, and took her under an agreement for £100 to Birkenhead Docks. The Coaster, M. M. R. Dec. 22, 1882, p. 1617.

V. 3,000*l.*—A. £400

648. The ship C., 2,282 tons, having come into collision off the Skerries with a brig of 182 tons, was held by the wire rigging of the brig, which was rapidly sinking. The steam-tug R. A. towed the C. clear and to Liverpool, the service occupying sixteen or seventeen hours. The Constitution, S. G. March 22, 1864.

V. 32,000*l.*—A. £400

649. In January, the steamer C., 1,217 tons, from Marseilles for London, got on the W. end of the Roar Sand in a fog, and was in considerable danger. As the water was shoaling, the engines were stopped, and the C. brought up with twenty-eight fathoms of cable. When the tide fell she touched about a quarter mile from shore; and next flood-tide was towed off the sand by the tug C. of L. The Copernic, M. M. R. June 6, 1873, p. 720.

V. 86,000*l.*—A. £400

650. The barque C. was in a state of great danger. The fishing smack Y. F., at great risk went to her, took the crew on board, and conducted them to Yarmouth. The steam-tugs V. and R. O., and the fishing smack W., went to the barque, and after twenty-six hours' labour succeeded in bringing her to Yarmouth Beach. £200 to the Y. F., £200 to the tugs and smack. The Coromandel, S. G. Feb. 27, 1857.

V. 2,519*l.*—A. £400

651. In April, the schooner D., with oil, got ashore on sandy ground on the main at Point Elena, twelve miles west of Almeria. Her master was drunk. She was got off the sand by the joint efforts of the schooner F. A. B., the brig U., and the barque C. The Dazzler, M. M. R. Feb. 11, 1865, p. 181.

V. 8,335*l.*—A. £400

652. In November, the steamer E. C. was found by the smack A., 39 tons, in the North Sea, in a dangerous position and flying signals of distress, lying across the sea, with her head to the E., her ballast shifted, and nearly on her broadside. She had cattle and sheep in her hold, which were in six feet of water, and nearly all drowned. Her engines were submerged, her pumps choked, and her crew were preparing to leave her. The wind was strong from N.N.W., and the sea very heavy. The smack towed her until a steamer came up, by which she was taken into the Humber. The Ella Constance, M. M. R. July 21, 1866, p. 913.

Value 17,000*l.*—Award £400

653. In February, the screw steamer J., 531 tons register, from Pomaron to the Tyne, with sulphur ore and brandy, hove-to in bad weather on a dark night, with a strong wind from N.E. and a high sea, off the Tyne. Her screw was loose, and her engines useless. The master of the J. under fore and aft sail bore towards the east, to keep away from the shore, which was about eight miles distant; lights and flares were exhibited, and a rocket fired for a pilot. As neither pilot nor tug came, the J. was steered for Hartlepool Bay, where she anchored. The tugs T. and M., the A., and the L., with two pilots on board, came up and took the J. in tow, and one of the pilots boarded her by a rope round his body. She was finally steered into Hartlepool Harbour. The Jarrow, M. M. R. Aug. 11, 1866, p. 1009.

V. not stated.—A. £400

654. The steamer E. C., 535 tons, from Alexandria for Malta, Gibraltar, and London, with a general cargo, and having on board about eighty Hadji pilgrims, had burnt all her fuel, some of the spars, a boat, and other things to endeavour to keep up steam. About eighty miles from Malta the steamer I., 1,436 tons, with passengers and cargo, fell in with the E. C., and in between ten and eleven hours, without risk, towed her into the Grand Harbour of Valetta. The Ella Constance, S. G. May 16, 1864.

V. 16,000*l.*—A. £400

655. The brig E., having sustained great damage by collision, must inevitably have been lost if the weather had changed for the worse. She was taken in tow by the steamer M., about fourteen miles from Whitby, and conducted to Shields. The Elswick, S. G. Feb. 28, 1854.

V. 5,600*l.*—A. £400

656. The screw steamer G., 481 tons, grounded in Smyrna Bay on the Pelican Spit, and lay in a position of considerable peril. The screw steamer A. S., 1,437 tons, came to her aid, and finally succeeded in getting her off the bank. They then towed her into the channel. The service lasted eleven hours. The screw of the A. S. was damaged owing to the service, and she lost freight in consequence of having to go into a graving dock to repair it. The court pronounced for all the damage and loss sustained, in addition to the salvage, and referred the amount to the registrar and merchants. The Gladiator, S. G. Nov. 6, 1863.

V. 12,000*l.*—A. £400

657. The screw steamer G. was off Dungeness, with a signal for assistance hoisted, the wind was blowing a gale from the east, and there was a very heavy sea on. She had been in collision twice during her voyage from Palermo, and had a large hole in her port bow, into which the sea was breaking, and which might without any notice in a minute have forced in her iron bulkhead, when she would have almost immediately sunk. There were ten feet of water already in her hold. The crew of the steam-tug S. assisted the crew in pumping, and after having been once compelled to bring her to an anchor, succeeded with great difficulty in getting her to Gravesend. The Genova, S. G. Dec. 24, 1857.

V. 16,000*l.*—A. £400

658. The steamer J., tender to H. M. steamer G., fell in, off the coast of Africa, with the brig H., with a signal of distress. The master and first mate had died, and no one on board could navigate the vessel. The J. took the brig to Fernando Po, where the G. lay, and where she was visited by the surgeon of the ship, and was supplied with medicines, water, provisions, and an anchor. Lieut. R., of the G., and two other men to complete the crew, took the brig to Philadelphia in sixty-nine days, Lieut. R. suffering from fever nearly the whole time. The Huntress, 2 Wallace, jun. 59, cited in Marvin, 202. [American.]

V. 2,804*l.*—A. £400

659. The Dutch barque J. H. was descried by the fishing lugger S., on the south part of the Goodwin Sands. She immediately proceeded to her assistance, but before reaching her the barque had cleared the Sands, and was drifting away to leeward with her sails and braces loose, the wind blowing strong from the W.S.W. with a heavy sea, and the weather being very thick. The S., assisted by the lugger E. G., which came up, succeeded in conducting the barque to Margate Roads, where they engaged two steam-tugs, which towed the barque to Sheerness and laid her on the mud. The Jan Hendrik, S. G. Dec. 7, 1853; 1 Spinks' Ecl. and Adm. Rep. 161.

Value 13,400*l.*—Award £400

660. In March, the J. and B., from Wells, in Norfolk, to Yarmouth, I. W., got on No Man's Land in most tempestuous weather, and was, with all on board, in imminent danger. She was assisted into Portsmouth by a revenue cutter, which sustained damage in the service. The Jane and Betsy, 1 E. & A. 299. V. 1,862*l.*—A. £400

661. The J. and M. drifting towards sands near the Nore Light, after she had lost three anchors and cables, and both her masts, and had had her boats stove in, was towed by a powerful steamer to London. The Jane and Margaret, S. G. May 14, 1840. V. 1,800*l.*—A. £400

662. In January, the screw steamer L., 700 tons, from Southampton to Dublin, with passengers and general cargo, on a dangerous shoal between Needles Rock and Hurst Castle, was got off the shoal and to a safe anchorage by two steam-tugs from Southampton. The tugs sustained damage to the amount of £50. The Leda, S. G. June 20, 1855. V. 12,278*l.*—A. £400

663. The L. C. from Bordeaux to Amsterdam with wine, struck on Old Shoreham Church Rock, and after she was got off, was in considerable danger, but was boarded by pilots and coastguardsmen, and taken into a place of safety. £250 to pilots, £150 to coastguard. The Lisette Caroline, S. G. July 23, 1840. V. 1,900*l.*—A. £400

664. In December, the brigantine L. L., from Africa for Liverpool with palm oil, was boarded off the Scilly Islands by four men from the pilot-cutter G. They found only the captain and one hand on duty, the rest of the crew being down with fever. Nearly all her sails were carried away, and her boat was knocked to pieces. The four salvors then took entire charge of the vessel, which was short of provisions, the captain and one man giving no aid by night, and but little by day. The cutter returned to Scilly for provisions, and could not get back to the brigantine, because of the weather. The salvors unbent a square sail, set it for a main sail, and bent and set a jib and trysail, which had been put on board from the cutter on the fore-topmaststay, and twice tried to stay her, but she refused stays, and would not answer her helm. With difficulty they twice wore the ship. The rudder head split to pieces, and the wheel-chain was broken. It blew a terrific gale from E.S.E. Three days afterwards, the wind having moderated, they stood in for Scilly; but as it came on to blow heavily, with a very rough sea and torrents of rain, they wore ship and kept her to the E. till next day, when the wind shifting to E.S.E., they again wore ship. They were then about forty miles from Scilly, which bore S.E., as they learned from those on board the barque D., from which they got provisions. The next day was calm till about 8 p.m., when it blew hard from the S.W. They were then about a quarter of a mile off the Seven Stones Lightship. The wind being against them, they made for Penzance; but being in danger of driving on a lee-shore, bore away for St. Ives, could not make it, so bore away for Lundy, and as they could not make that, bore away for, and the day following made, Padstow, where a pilot took charge of the vessel, and she was safely moored in Harbour Cove. The Little Lizzie, M. M. R. March 26, 1870, p. 401. V. 3,800*l.*—A. £400

665. In January, the Russian barque M., 458 tons register, from New York to Hull, with 3,259 quarters of Indian corn, got ashore on the Hasborough Sand about 8 p.m. The sea broke over her heavily, and the mainmast, mainstay, mizenstay, mizentopmast, backstays, main royal backstays, fore braces, foretopsail, halyards, and lanyards of the main rigging on both sides had to be cut away. Next day she floated, and her anchors were let go. In answer to signals, the Palling lifeboat was launched, which found her riding right over the Hasborough Sand in a chopping sea, with chains fouled and crossed, leaking, with from two to three feet of water in her, her boats afloat, and the crew preparing to abandon her. The crew of the lifeboat pumped her, and with the aid of a tug she was brought to anchor in Yarmouth Roads in about fourteen hours. Next morning her cargo was discharged into lighters, and she was taken over the Bar into Yarmouth. The Marie, M. M. R. April 10, 1879, p. 466. V. 4,615*l.*—A. £400

666. In February, the ship M. S., from Barrow to Newport, with ballast of 200 tons pig-iron and 130 tons iron ore, in tow of the tug R., got ashore in Rostilly Bay, the tow-rope having parted, and the tug being lost sight of in a fog. The wind was moderate E., and there was a S.W. ground swell, with dark hazy weather, the tide being three-quarter flood. A port anchor was let go, and she swung with her head to seaward and then settled down on an even keel and in an upright position. Two boats were lowered, but were swamped, and their occupants drowned. The captain and remainder of the crew got ashore by means of rocket lines from the shore. The tug H., which had been summoned by a man who rode twenty-five miles to Pembrey to fetch it, put out with pilots, found the M. S. bumping heavily, much strained and injured, and with a heavy sea running over her. One man got on board from the H., then two more, and then a tow-line was hauled on board. After some towing the M. S. was got off into smooth water and taken to Swansea, with the assistance of the tug F. C., which had been engaged off the Mumbles, to keep her steady astern. The services lasted fourteen hours. The Mary Stenhouse, M. M. R. May 23, 1879, p. 662. Value 6,650*l.*—Award £400

667. In January, the steamer M. stranded on the West Spit, off Lagos, and within a cable's length of the shore, heading in shore about N.N.E., and was got off after much trouble and risk by the steamer W. Her windlass gear was disabled, all but one of her anchors had been lost, and her boilers had burst. She was towed to a safe anchorage, and anchored by the spare anchor of the W. The Monrovia, M. M. R. Feb. 25, 1876, p. 236. V. 36,000*l.*—A. £400

668. The barque M. V., when off Dungeness, the wind being fresh and weather thick, employed a lugger to fetch her a Dutch North Sea pilot, and, fearing the boat would miss the bark, blue lights were burnt and guns fired to show her position. The lugger B. Q. answered the signal, and was employed to go in search of the Dutch pilot cutter, but soon afterwards finding they were in shallow water returned to the ship, to inform her of the danger she was in. The B. Q. continued in attendance upon her, the lugger M. obtained an anchor and chain from the shore for the barque, and got them on board her, and the lugger P. of the O. conveyed the mate and crew (who had been previously put on shore), and the Dutch pilot, to the ship, and she afterwards took out to the ship a large hawser and provisions. The Maria Veronica, S. G. July 30, 1861; 7 L. T. N.S. 223. V. 46,000*l.*—A. £400

669. A fishing lugger of 44 tons, manned with a crew of ten hands, went to the assistance of a vessel in distress, which had struck on the Hasborough Sand in a gale of wind, and after having been occupied two days in the service, eventually succeeded in getting her off the sands, and carrying her into Yarmouth. The Medora, 2 W. Rob. 69. V. 3,637*l.*—A. £400

670. The B., having stranded on the Chichester Shoals, was abandoned by her master and several of the crew. The pilot was drunk, and endeavoured to let go the anchor, which would probably have occasioned the loss of the ship. The mate and the crew remaining on board requested a passenger, a master mariner, to take command. He did, prevented the pilot from letting go the anchor, and ultimately brought the ship safely into Ramsgate Harbour. Newman v. Walters, 3 Bos. & Pull. 612. V. not stated.—A. £400

671. In March, the ship N., 1,360 tons, from Mobile to Liverpool, with cotton, when at anchor in the Mersey near New Brighton, broke the chain of her starboard anchor, by fouling it with that of her port anchor, began to drag, and fell off with her head to the W. The tug C. took her in tow, and her anchor being hove, held on to her for seven hours, until high water, when she again anchored. A N.N.W. gale was blowing all the time, until the last hour. The Niagara (Liverpool Co. Co.), M. M. R. March 23, 1877, p. 373. V. 58,000*l.*—A. £400

672. The ship N., 911 tons register, on a voyage from Quebec to Liverpool, for thirty days and nights encountered a continuance of the most violent gales, and was twice thrown on her beam ends. She was greatly damaged, lost her mainmast and mizentopmasts, together with sails, rigging, and other gear. Four of her crew were disabled, and part of her cargo was thrown overboard. On the 24th December the N. was off Dursey Head, Ireland, under short sail, the weather being moderate. The screw steamer M., 363 tons, 130 h.-p., on a voyage from Limerick to Liverpool, postponed her voyage, and in six hours towed the N. into Valentia Harbour, a distance of twenty-five miles. The towing hawser broke once and fouled the propeller of the M., thereby straining the machinery. The Nimroud, 8 Ir. Jur. N.S. 99. Value 12,500*l.*—Award £400

673. In January, the N., in difficulties off the Suffolk coast and abandoned, was boarded by part of the crew of the brig H. and conveyed to Yarmouth. The Normanby, S. G. May 12, 1843. V. 1,311*l.*—A. £400

674. In November, the barque Q. V., 670 tons, from Cardiff for Yokohama, with coals, lost her rudder in the Bay of Biscay, and made for the Irish Sea, where she was in a dangerous and critical position. A Mr. Seymour being telegraphed to to send two steam-tugs to her aid (an act of salvage not disputed by the defendant), the tugs, in thirty hours' time, took her to Cork Harbour in heavy weather. The Queen Victoria (Dublin Ad. Co.), M. M. R. Feb. 14, 1873, p. 209. V. 3,740*l.*—A. £400

675. The barque P., in consequence of having been in collision, was in a disabled state, and was towed by the brigantine B. into Carthage. The Peace, S. G. Dec. 20, 1855; Swabey, 115. V. 4,200*l.*—A. £400

676. The P., 2,200 tons, ran on some rocks near Port Griffith Creek, off Holyhead, and was in considerable danger. A pilot and the masters and crews of five smacks offered their services, which were at first refused, the master having telegraphed to Liverpool for four tugs, but their services were afterwards accepted, and they succeeded in getting the P. into a place of comparative safety until the tugs arrived. The Persia, S. G. Nov. 11, 1853; 1 Spinks' Eccl. and Adm. Rep. 166. V. 17,337*l.*—A. £400

677. H.M. lighter R., 154 tons, when off Dungeness, owing to a strong breeze from the westward, lost her maingaff and sprang her bowsprit. When off the North Foreland she made a signal for assistance, to which the steam-tug E. responded, and being engaged by the master of the R., towed her into the Camber, where she arrived between eight and nine o'clock on the morning of the following day. The tug experienced great difficulty in the performance of the services, owing to the severity of the weather. The Rochester, S. G. March 26, 1863. V. 4,000*l.*—A. £400

678. In January, the screw steamer R. stranded about 1½ miles west of Beachy Head, 200 or 300 yards from high-water mark, and in five to six feet at low water. Part of her cargo was thrown overboard, she floated, and was towed into Southampton. Three gangs of men were employed for three days in salving the jettisoned cargo, and hired carts to carry the bales, &c., which they rescued. The Rubens, M. M. R. April 14, 1876, p. 468. V. 2,081*l.*—A. £400

679. In November, the steamer S., 990 tons gross register, with eighteen hands and iron ore, from Bilbao to the Tyne, when off Flamborough Head, broke the cross-head of her after-engine and split the cylinder cover. She was kept before the wind under sail in a fresh S.W. breeze. Next morning the smack Sirius was engaged to take a telegram to the owners at Scarborough. The Sirius engaged the tug M., and they found the S. fourteen miles E. of Scarborough, drifting quickly towards the Fisher Bank. The S. was taken in tow towards the Tyne by the Sirius and the M. Next day the Sirius cast off, and about two hours afterwards the steam trawler F. A. came up and assisted, and in seven hours the S. was safely docked in the Tyne Dock. £300 to the M., £30 to the Sirius, £70 to the F. A. The Sunnyside, M. M. R. June 1, 1883, p. 691. V. 18,000*l.*—A. £400

680. In March, the screw steamer S., 1,836 tons gross register, 190 h.-p. nom., twenty-eight hands, from Bremerhaven for London, took the ground near the Cross Sands in foggy weather. The yawl G., in answer to blue lights and rockets, was launched, and found her on the Sand with a heavy list to starboard. The S. was after some little time boarded, and it was found that the boats had been provisioned and lowered, and the S. was about to be abandoned. The G. laid out two anchors, the crew hove on them, and she came off in about three hours. Two of the crew of the G. then accompanied her to London. The Scotland, M. M. R. June 30, 1882, p. 813. V. 16,000*l.*—A. £400

681. In August, the barque S., from the Nore to Algiers, got on the Cross Sand, and was striking heavily in a very broken sea. She was taken charge of, at her captain's request, by one of the crew of the yawl R. J., which, in company with the yawl L. of the V., had come up. The masters of the two yawls, finding they could not get her off before the flood tide, when she would have filled, engaged the services of the two tugs S. and U. S., and by their combined efforts she was got off the sand, and taken through the Pightle and Hewitt's Channel into Yarmouth Roads, where she was anchored. The Scott, M. M. R. Nov. 7, 1873, p. 1426.

Value 2,300*l.*—Award £400

682. The ship S. C., 893 tons, in tow of the barque A., was in a damaged state when the vessels were fallen in with by the schooner S. of P., 42 tons. The master of the A. asked the master of the S. of P. to assist him in saving the S. C., to which he agreed. The two ships then towed the S. C. towards Falmouth, but the wind becoming light they made but little way. The master of the A. then requested the master of the S. to go to Falmouth for a steam-tug, which he did, and returned with a tug in search of the two vessels, but was unable to find either the S. C. or A., and a terrific gale springing up the S. and the tug were compelled to return to Falmouth. The Sebastian Cabot, S. G. March 3, 1864.

V. 100,000*l.*—A. £400

683. In November, the ship S., 937 tons, from Quebec to Liverpool with timber, waterlogged and having lost her rudder, got on Jordan's Flats, eleven or twelve miles from Liverpool. The S. was then towed off and into Liverpool by three steamers. A steamer, 45 h.-p., which first rendered assistance was paid £350. The Scotland, S. G. July 6, 1841.

V. not stated.—A. £400

684. In November, the steamer S., from Shields to Constantinople, in lat. 48°37' N. long. 6°9' W., was disabled by the breaking of the bed-plate and eccentric shaft of the engine, caused by one of the crank-shafts breaking. The steamer C. came up, but the wind and weather prevented any tow-ropes being got on board till next day, when the C. towed her to Corunna Harbour. The Styx, M. M. R. April 11, 1873, p. 464; July 25, 1873, p. 944.

V. 21,000*l.*—A. £400

685. In March, the iron barque U., from Hamburg to Cardiff, in ballast, at anchor in the Downs by her port anchor, through stress of weather, began to drag her anchors during a heavy gale from S.W. and in a strong sea. She was drifting very fast towards the Goodwin Sands, abreast of Kingdom, when the tug P., ninety-five tons gross, 40 h.-p. nom., working to 200, offered assistance, which was ultimately accepted. The P. towed her to off the North Foreland, but could not round it, owing to the violence of the wind and sea, without the assistance of the tug C., 110 tons gross, 60 h.-p., nom., working to 200. The two tugs towed her to Mayal Roads, held her there for 3½ hours, and thence took her to Gravesend, after eighteen hours' towing. The Unicorn, M. M. R. June 3, 1881, p. 686.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £400

686. The brig U., of 800 tons, ran on shore between Dover and Folkestone. A small steam-tug, the B., proceeded from Dover to her assistance, but she had in the meantime got off the land with the loss of her rudder, and the B. was employed in getting her head veered in a proper direction. Next day, S.E. of the South Foreland, the services of the steam-tug Sir W. W., 100 h.-p., and subsequently those of the steam-tug R. B., 60 h.-p., were accepted, and she was then towed into the London Docks. The Union, S. G. June 27, 1845.

687. The V. was stranded on the Gunfleet Sand. Five boats and twenty-two men were employed a month in discharging and getting her off. The Vesta, 2 Hagg. 189.

V. 1,000*l.*—A. £400

688. H.M. steamer V., in September, was aground on the Blyth Sand and in some danger. The steam-tug D., after services of short duration, got her off. The Vulcan, S. G. Feb. 23, 1860.

V. 49,268*l.*—A. £400

689. In March, about 6 a.m., a cargo of cotton in the 'tween-decks of the screw steamer W., 797 tons register, with a crew of twenty-nine hands from Pernambuco for Liverpool, was, about 178 miles S.W. by W. of Funchal, found to be on fire. All efforts to extinguish the fire were fruitless, and she was still on fire when she reached Funchal at 7-30 a.m. Captain N., a man of experience in such matters, who was just starting for England, was engaged to put out the fire, and by his directions and under his personal supervision the necessary steps were taken by Portuguese labourers, and after two days' hard work and some danger from the fire, smoke, and red-hot iron deck and sides, the fire was extinguished. The re-stowage was carried out under Captain N.'s instructions, but he could not superintend it, as he had fallen from exhaustion down a hatchway and injured his spine. From this injury he still suffered on his return to England, which was delayed a fortnight. The Warrior, M. M. R. Feb. 24, 1882, p. 238.

Value 34,441*l.*—Award £400

690. The ship W., 1,088 tons, damaged, was making for Bahia, when, the weather being thick and hazy, she got on a reef off the Island of Staporica, near the coast of Brazil, and continued striking heavily at times. Part of her cargo was thrown overboard, and the master of the W. sent to H.M.'s consul at Bahia for assistance. The sloop S. came, and after services which lasted for four days, got the W. off the reef, and took her to Bahia. The Washington, S. G. April 2, 1855.

V. 11,719*l.*—A. £400

691. In September, the brig W. was in the North Sea with her mainmast gone, and hoisted signals. The wind was strong and the sea heavy. Her crew got on board the smack W., which lay by her all night, and in the morning sent some of her crew on board. Ultimately, with the assistance of the smacks S. Q. and B. L., the brig was towed to the Outer Bank Buoy, and thence by a tug to Grimsby. The Washington, M. M. R. Nov. 14, 1873, p. 1458.

V. 966*l.*—A. £400

692. The screw steamer W., in the prosecution of her voyage, arrived at Las Palmas on the 16th September, 1860. On the 18th, owing to an accident, she settled down, became a total wreck, and was abandoned by the master and crew. On the next day the crew were discharged and paid their wages, and were applied to by the chief mate to assist in saving the cargo remaining on board the W. After considerable exertions they succeeded in saving the greater part of the cargo. The Owners of the Cargo on board the Warrior, S. G. March 11, 1862; 7 L. T. N.S. 257.

V. 9,525*l.*—A. £400

693. In August, the W., from London for Kingston, Jamaica, with general cargo, was discovered by the tug V., 70 h.-p., value £3,500, close to the Roar Sand off Romney, riding by her port anchor in $4\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms of water, with only the mate and six hands on board. The wind was S. by E., right on shore, and freshening. About midnight it blew a whole gale with a heavy sea, and she started her anchor and began to drive. The V. was got as close as possible, a line was made fast, and the W. was with some difficulty got off the sand; her course was then shaped for Dover by signal, as no boat could live in such a sea, and she reached the harbour about 8 a.m. next day; but the roll of the sea increasing, she was taken on towards Ramsgate, and compelled to seek shelter in Margate Roads. Off Dover a pilot was obtained from the C., and the W. was taken into Westgate Bay till the gale abated. About 3 p.m. the following day she was towed to Gravesend and made fast. £300 to the V., £100 to the C. The West, M. M. R. February 7, 1879, p. 178.

V. 4,834*l.*—A. £400

694. In September, the screw steamer W., 132 tons register, joined the fishing fleet in the North Sea, and when about ten miles east of the Dogger Bank, about midnight, was found to be making water fast. The pumps could not touch the water when she was on that (the port) tack, and next day she was put on the starboard tack, but the donkey-engine and the bilge injection got choked with coal dust, and the bilge water put out the engine fires. In answer to signals, the smacks P. A. and P. came up, in a heavy sea and with a strong S.W. by W. wind. Six men from the smacks boarded the W., and pumped and baled her. The day after the smacks V., Vixen, T., and Pearl were engaged, and thirteen of the men of their crews helped to pump and bale the W. The Pet towed the W. from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., when her rope broke. The smacks left and proceeded to Yarmouth, and the tug Lord A. P. next day took the W., which was then making $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water per minute, in tow, but cast her off when off Chapman Head, and the W. reached Barking Creek under steam in about twelve hours. The Wellesley, M. M. R. June 14, 1872, p. 752.

V. 4,000*l.*—A. £400

695. In June, the brig R., 253 tons register, from Gefle for London, with battens, deals, and iron, took the ground on the Dunfleet Sands between the Upper and Lower Middle Buoys. She was in a dangerous position, could not have been got off without help, and would have gone to pieces if the weather had become tempestuous. By the assistance of seven smacks she was got off the sand, and ultimately conducted in safety to Gravesend. The Rose, M. M. R. November 20, 1869, p. 1491.

Value 1,832*l.*—Award £390

696. In October, in a heavy sea and gale from N.W., the Norwegian barque S. was discovered by the smack B., 77 tons, about fifty miles W. $\frac{1}{2}$ S. of the Spurn Light, dismasted, and pitching dangerously, with the sea breaking over her, and only one of her crew on board, in a very exhausted condition from exposure. The B., under double-reefed topsails, went to her, and some of her crew boarded the S. A hawser was made fast, which, however, after fourteen hours' towing, parted. The weather was too boisterous to admit of another hawser being made fast, so, after lying by her for three days, the B. departed, leaving two of her crew on board the S. The master of the trawler J. R., five hands, subsequently boarded the S., and found her bowsprit carried away, mainmast and foremast partly broken, her steering-gear broken, hatches carried away, and her anchor hanging overboard. She was rolling and pitching in a heavy sea. An anchor was let go, and the trawlers stayed by her all night. Next morning they commenced to tow. About noon, the trawler V., with six hands, came up, but could not get a hawser on board. About four, the hawser of the J. R. parted, and a hawser was got from the S. to the V. by two of the crew of the J. R. and two of the crew of the V., who boarded the S. The V. then towed her to the Black Bank. Here, the weather having moderated, the J. R. got a rope on board the S., and the two trawlers towed the S. to off the buoy on the Scroby Sand, where two tugs were hired, by which she was towed into Corton Roads. The S. was brought up here, the J. R. and the V. anchoring all night near her in the roads. Next day she was towed by the tugs into the harbour. The Syster, M. M. R. April 1, 1881, p. 393.

697. In November, the screw steamer G., 1,097 tons, from Nicolaieff to Alloa with barley, with a broken shaft and under sail, was flying the signal N. C., when she was sighted by the screw steamer L., 1,099 tons, from Taganrog to Malta with rye, in a heavy swell with strong wind. The G. was quite helpless, and the L. towed her during bad weather to Malta, a distance of about 165 miles. The Gran-tully, M. M. R. February 15, 1884, p. 103.

V. 31,497*l.*—A. £380

698. In March, the barque P., 721 tons, during a strong gale, making signals of distress, totally dismasted and helpless, about eighteen miles from the Scilly Rocks, and driving in that direction. She was discovered by the iron steamer L., 633 tons register, from Liverpool for Lisbon and Africa, value £13,531, with mails and one passenger, and the L., by request, stood by her during the night. Next day, after three unsuccessful efforts, during which a boat was carried away, a rope was got on board and made fast to the mainmast of the L., and the P. was taken in tow and brought into Falmouth. The L. in consequence of the service lost the African mail, and was detained five days at Oporto. The Pembrokeshire, M. M. R. December 27, 1878, p. 1651.

V. 1,100*l.*—A. £380

699. The T. and M. was stranded on the Middlebank, off the mouth of the Humber, and abandoned by her crew. Some men in the lifeboat from the Spurn lighthouse, and the crew of a smack, twenty-two in all, took possession of her, and by working at the pumps and baling out the water, they removed her from the reef, and engaged a steamer to take her in tow, but after conducting her some distance the steamer was compelled for her own safety to cast off the ship. She was then beached, and after undergoing temporary repairs was towed by another steamer into Hull; the services lasted two days. The Thomas and Mary, S. G. July 14, 1848. V. 1,150*l.*—A. £380

700. In January, the screw steamer F., with six hands, in ballast, from Rye to Seaham, was blown E. from her course in a heavy gale, shipped a quantity of water, and broke her bilge pumps. She was without coal, and with her pumps choked. Her crew were all knocked up. The smack M. A. B. came up and launched a boat, made fast a trawl-warp, and sailed ahead towing her. The smack H. then came up to assist, and some of the smacks' crews went on board and helped to bale her out. The F. after three days was got safely into Yarmouth Roads, whence a tug took her into harbour for £70. The Ferrifer, M. M. R. April 27, 1883, p. 524.

V. 1,100*l.*—A. £375

701. In October, the barque P. R. was found derelict in the North Sea by the smack Z., and taken by her in tow and into port, the Z. losing by collision her trawl and warp, as the P. R. was unmanageable and would not steer. The value of the trawl and warp and time taken up in repairs amounted to £170. The Peter Rolt, M. M. R. Dec. 16, 1881, p. 1585. Value 580*l.*—Award £375

702. The P., when within several days' sail of the Falkland Islands, sighted a boat, belonging to the B. J., which had been burnt, and rescued the crew (who were quite exhausted and unable to save themselves), together with a case of gold in bars. A case of salvage was admitted. At the time the salvage was awarded no regard was paid to the fact that, together with the gold, the crew also were saved, because the law when making salvage awards takes no account of the saving of human life, as if it did the persons saved would also be obliged to contribute to the salvage. No danger, exertion and loss of time were incurred. The Pymont, Hamburg, H. G. Z. 1869, p. 280. [German.] V. 4,000*l.*—A. £375

703. The R. C., a long river steamer intended for inland navigation in India, stripped of her engines and machinery, and rigged as a three-masted schooner, and proceeding to Calcutta under canvas, was off Cape Clear when the wind came on to blow heavily. The next day the step of the foremast gave way, and the weather became so thick and dark that the master could not tell where he was, and the crew refused to work, and insisted on the master making for the nearest port. On the following day he found himself off the coast of Waterford, having drifted upwards of fifty miles to the eastward of his intended course. He hoisted an ensign, union down, for assistance. The H. screw steamer, from Liverpool to Limerick, with a valuable cargo, came up with the R. C., and having made fast took her in tow up to Passage, where, after five hours' towing, a distance of about nineteen miles, she was safely anchored. The court looked upon the service as an ordinary salvage service performed with skill, good conduct and success to a vessel in imminent peril. The Rothsay Castle, 2 Asp. 206; 9 Ir. Jur. N.S. 360. V. 1,500*l.*—A. £375

704. In January, during a moderate gale from S.E., with a flood-tide of two to three knots, the weather being dark and rainy, the iron screw steamer N., 2,367 tons register, was discovered by the tug T. in the Mersey, lying unmanageable and head upon tide, with her stern deeply imbedded in the port side of the mud-hopper No. 4. The tug Lord L. also came up, and the two tugs alongside each other made fast to the starboard side of the hopper, the N. steering astern, and after towing for twenty minutes the N. was got clear with the loss of her stern. The mud-hopper was beached by the Lord L., and the N. proceeded down the river, anchored till evening, and was then docked. The expenses and damages of the salvors, amounting to £188 allowed. The court allowed £372 against the N. besides £188 against the mud-hopper, for which see No. 1020. The Nieva, M. M. R. April 10, 1879, p. 466. V. 103,235*l.*—A. £372

705. The sloop T. S., in a hurricane, was between the Scroby and Corton Sands, damaged, and with a flag of distress flying. The steam-tug D. endeavoured to take her to Yarmouth Harbour, but failing, took her to Lowestoft Harbour. The Two Sarahs, S. G. Jan. 18, 1861. V. 1,351*l.*—A. £371

706. In April, the screw steamer M., from Hamburg to King's Lynn, with a general cargo, 130 miles E. by S.½S. from the Humber, was discovered by the screw steamer L. in a position of danger, having broken her screw shaft and without steam power. The L. took her in tow to Grimsby Roads, a distance of 130 miles, where she came to anchor on May 1. The L. was delayed three days in her voyage by these services, which lasted twenty-four hours. The Middleton, M. M. R. July 31, 1874, p. 976. V. 22,055*l.*—A. £370

707. In December, the ship O. was found, fifteen miles from Yarmouth, amongst numerous sandbanks, derelict, waterlogged, and with no rudder or anchors. The smacks R. and N. Y. managed to tow her five miles, the weather being squally, with hail, wind fresh, after which she was taken in tow and beached at Yarmouth by the tug E. The Otto, M. M. R. March 3, 1876, p. 280. V. not stated.—A. £370

708. The brigantine E. had nearly all her canvas carried away, the sea was making a complete breach over her, and her crew were exhausted. A smack and a lugger boarded the E. with difficulty, and worked at her pumps. The smack towed the

E. some distance, when a steam-tug was engaged by the smack, and the E. was towed to Yarmouth. Services from the 1st to the 4th of February; salvors' loss estimated at £100. The Exhibition, S. G. July 26, 1858.

Value 1,800*l.*—Award £363

709. The brig D. was ashore on the Western Dry Rocks. The master carried out his anchor and laboured throughout one tide to heave the vessel off, but without success. He then employed wreckers, who carried out two of their own anchors, tipped the vessel by removing casks of water, the chains, and other articles on deck from forward to aft, and at the first high water occurring after their employment heaved the vessel off. The Darien, Files of Court, 1857, cited in Marvin, 221. [American.]

V. 2,200*l.*—A. £360

710. In January, the wind being strong E.N.E., with snow squalls, and the sea heavy, the three-masted schooner H., from Norway to London, with battens, was discovered stranded on the Heap Sands by the smacks C. and D. Six of the crew went on board and took charge of her. The smacks P. and M. A. then came up. Another boat's crew tried to get to her but failed, owing to the heavy sea; but in half-an-hour's time three boats, doubly manned, got to her; their crews boarded her; and, in spite of heavy seas breaking over her, cleared the ropes and gear, and got her anchors ready, in the event of her coming off, which she did shortly after. The sea being too heavy for towage, she drifted into seven or eight fathoms, and was then brought up. The C. went to Brightlingsea and telegraphed to Harwich for a tug, which came up next morning, the other smacks standing by the H. meanwhile. The D. was made fast astern with two hawsers to steer her, and she was brought into Sheerness in about five hours. The Hebe, 4 P. D. 217; M. M. R. May 16, 1879, p. 628.

V. 750*l.*—A. £360

711. The brig J. and H. was in considerable danger of being lost, when she was succoured by the smacks F. and V., whose services, though not involving any risk of life or property, were valuable, and lasted four days in bad weather. £120 for losses and expenses included in the salvage. The Jane and Harriet (Lowestoft Co. Co.), M. M. R. Feb. 14, 1873, p. 210.

V. 1,200*l.*—A. £360

712. In December, the M. E. C. was off Dover, deserted by her crew, and bumping on the rocks, in a damaged condition, the result of a collision, and drifting on the end of the north pier, against which she struck with great violence. Three men jumped on board from the pier at the risk of their lives, and set the staysail, in order to cant her head towards the harbour and draw her off from the pier. Afterwards the crew of the boat H. got on board, and the crew of the Q. were engaged in carrying out ropes. After great difficulty in preventing collisions with other ships, she was, with the aid of the tug P., got to a safe berth and secured. £200 to the three men, £50 to the H., £20 to the Q., £90 to the P. The M. E. Clarke, M. M. R. March 12, 1870, p. 337.

V. 12,000*l.*—A. £360

713. The P. was amongst sand banks in, to her, totally unknown waters near Amrum, and had just been aground upon a sand bank when two pilots arrived with their boats and assisted to bring the vessel into safety. The Paraguay (Assistance), Hamburg Mercantile Law Journal, 1869, pp. 193, 194, 205. [German.]

V. 50,000*l.*—A. £360

714. In October, the screw steamer P., 486 tons, was discovered by the smack O. P. during a heavy gale and in a heavy sea with her steam power useless and making water, about eighty miles E. by N. of the Spurn Point. The O. P. stayed by her till next morning, when the smack M. came up. The gale was then increasing. The two smacks took her in tow, one ahead of the other, and next morning brought her into the Humber to the Hawks Roads, where a tug was obtained, which, with the assistance of the smacks, towed her into Grimsby Dock basin. £200 to the O. P., £160 to the M. The Prospero, M. M. R. Jan. 14, 1876, p. 43.

V. 6,582*l.*—A. £360

715. In November, the barque A. W., from Middlesboro' for Mollen (Peru), with iron, grounded on the Long Sand Bank. Seven smacks, after services lasting four days, by assisting to throw the cargo overboard and laying out anchors, succeeded in getting her off. The weather was boisterous. The Albert William, M. M. R. Feb. 9, 1872, p. 177.

V. 7,360*l.*—A. £350

716. The steamer A. was off Dartmouth with her engines disabled, and her canvas was insufficient to enable her to reach the shore. Two sloops towed her to Dartmouth Harbour. The Alexandre, S. G. March 31, 1854. Value 8,000*l.*—Award £350

717. In December, the Norwegian barque A., 338 tons register, from Wilmington to London, with cargo, was lying at anchor by her starboard anchor (having lost her port anchor, about two miles N.E. of the North Foreland, when her starboard chain parted. She was found by the steam-tug D., 135 tons register, in very bad weather. A hawser was got on board and the D. began to tow, but owing to the rolling and pitching of both vessels the hawser parted. Another being made fast to the D. she took the A. to Dover, and held her there till 10 p.m., taking her to Gravesend by 11 a.m. next day, and eventually to the West India Dock buoy at Limehouse. The Amazon, M. M. R. Feb. 10, 1882, p. 172. V. 11,415*l.*—A. £350

718. Two smacks went out to a steamer in tempestuous weather twelve miles from land. The steamer had been swept by a sea, and had lost her chimney, masts, and bowsprit, beside the master and seven seamen; she was in great distress and peril, with thirty-two passengers on board. The smacks got the passengers on board their vessels, and towed the steamer into harbour, breaking two hawsers. The Ardincaple, 3 Hagg. 151. V. 1,265*l.*—A. £350

719. The barque B., 413 tons, met with tempestuous weather in the North Sea, and sprang a leak; the sea was breaking over her, the wind at the time blowing a complete hurricane, the pumps were choked, the crew, in an exhausted state, were baling out the water with buckets, and she had a signal of distress hoisted. The smack R. D., with five hands, went to her, and the master, at the risk of his life, boarded the barque, and with great difficulty prevailed upon two of his men to accompany him. The services lasted from the 17th to the 19th November, when having succeeded in conducting the barque to about ten miles from Yarmouth Roads, the smack went for a steamer, by which the B. was towed into a place of safety. The Bilton, S. G. March 4, 1848. V. 9,750*l.*—A. £350

720. The C. L., 372 tons, having struck upon the Cross Sand, unshipped her rudder, became waterlogged, and was in considerable danger. Two yawls, manned by thirty-two men, at considerable risk brought her into Yarmouth Roads. The Charlotta Letitia, S. G. Jan. 21, 1848. V. 1,867*l.*—A. £350

721. In November, the C., in distress off Yarmouth, was assisted in a meritorious manner by twenty-six men in three boats. The Circassia, S. G. Feb. 12, 1840. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £350

722. The French barque D. S. got on the Hasborough Sand in a very dangerous position. The yawl N. D. went out to her, but the master and crew would not allow the yawl's crew to board her; the master and crew afterwards left her, and were taken ashore by the lugger N. L.; the crew of the N. D. then boarded the barque, and succeeded in getting her off the sand, and conducting her to Yarmouth. The Deux Seurs, S. G. May 25, 1857. V. 1,145*l.*—A. £350

723. In January, the barque D., from St. Domingo for Liverpool with mahogany and logwood, when off the Skerries, was taken in tow by the steam-tug K. T., and, from circumstances, it became impossible to perform the towage services; but the K. T. performed services beyond towage during tempestuous weather, and preserved the D. from great peril. The Dilla, M. M. R. May, 1872, p. 562. V. not stated.—A. £350

724. In March, during exceptionally severe gales, the Norwegian barque E., 220 tons register, at anchor off Seacombe Ferry, in the Mersey, dragged her anchors, and came into collision with the steamer H., bumping against her, and doing great damage. The tug K. of M., 131 tons gross register, 326 h.-p., value £4,000, got a hawser on board, towed her ahead, got her clear, and held her. She then towed her clear of another vessel that had dragged her anchors, and held her between Seacombe and Egremont Ferry till orders came to tow her to Garstow, where she was taken and safely docked. The service lasted twelve and a-half hours. The Einar, M. M. R. May 26, 1882, p. 654. V. 8,697*l.*—A. £350

725. The Italian brig E., laden with oil, was, on the 3rd and 4th December, anchored in the vicinity of the Holm Sand in a very dangerous position, the wind blowing heavily from the eastward, and a heavy sea running. The brig had two flags flying, which were observed by the lugger M., manned by a crew of eleven hands, returning in consequence of bad weather from a fishing voyage with about half a cargo of herrings on board. The lugger proceeded towards the brig, but owing to the tremendous sea the crew were unable to board her, and they made for Pakefield Gap. The signals on board the brig were shifted, and the salvors returned, and after several ineffectual attempts two men at last boarded her, at the imminent risk of their lives. The salvors slipped the cable, succeeded in extricating the brig from the breakers on the Holm Sand, and took her into Yarmouth Roads. The Trinity masters considered that the brig should have been anchored under the lee of the Holm Sand, and there was no necessity for taking her to Yarmouth. The court considered it an error of judgment only. The Eugenia, S. G. June 19, 1850.

Value 5,350*l.*—Award £350

726. The brig G. off Gravesend, with a strong breeze from the east, and a nasty sea, engaged the steam-tug C. to tow her to the North Foreland for £15. The brig's hawser broke twice, and she drove rapidly towards the Tongue Sand. A nine-inch hawser of the tug was then bent on to the brig's hawser, but the lashing shortly afterwards broke. The brig's starboard bower anchor was let go, but the chain parted; the brig's second anchor was let go, and she was then very near the sand; her windlass was gone, and the tug with great difficulty dragged her out clear of the sand, and towed her to the London Docks. The Galatea, S. G. May 22, 1858. V. 11,750*l.*—A. £350

727. In December, the steamer G. H., 1,024 tons, was aground on the Inner Bank Sand, three-quarters of a mile from the Spurn, in a heavy fog, with little wind and calm sea, and strained. She was taken hold of by the tug U., which tried in vain for two hours to get her off the sand. The tug W. coming up, the two tugs got her off and towed her to Grimsby Roads, where she was anchored, the two tugs staying by until next morning, when they again took hold; but owing to the fog, she grounded on the Skilter Bank, and remained an hour thereon, straining herself very much. They got her off, and took her, in her damaged state, increased by a collision with another steamer on the way up the Humber, to an anchorage off Victoria Dock. The services lasted two days and seventeen hours. The Golden Horn, M. M. R. June 2, 1876, p. 683. V. 32,000*l.*—A. £350

728. The steam-dredger G., was run into by a steamer in the Thames, and was sinking fast. The steam-tug P. cast off a ship she was towing, and towed the G. ashore. The tug grounded and received some damage. Services lasted two hours. The Goliath, S. G. Feb. 13, 1860. V. 3,265*l.*—A. £350

729. In February, the iron steamer H. T., 975 tons register, aground on the North Cheek Rock, eight miles off Scarborough, was got off by the paddle steam-trawler F. M., with the assistance of the tugs E. and V., and taken by the E. to Newcastle. The Hugh Taylor, M. M. R. May 12, 1882, p. 596. V. not stated.—A. £350

730. The steamer I., 441 tons, took the ground near the island of Saltholm. The steamer G. Q., after fifteen hours' service, got her off. The Irvell, S. G. Nov. 28, 1856. V. 15,613*l.*—A. £350

731. The brig J., laden with a general cargo, and having on board seven-five emigrants, struck on the English Bank, off the mouth of the Rio Plata. H.M. sloop-of-war T. went to her assistance, and her crew and passengers having been landed, the T. conveyed the cargo to Monte Video, where it was sold, and the proceeds, amounting to £1,800, transmitted to England. The services lasted from the 5th to the 10th February, during which time the weather was occasionally very boisterous. The Jane, June 4, 1851. V. 1,800*l.*—A. £350

732. In February, the J. B., from Yarmouth for Belfast with flour, ran aground on the Scroby Sand. She was eventually, after much difficulty and danger, got off and brought into harbour, full of water, and only kept up by her cargo. The Jessie Brown (Yarmouth Co. Co.), M. M. R. April 30, 1875, p. 551. V. 1,529*l.*—A. £350

733. In November, the wooden-built ship J. B., 1,968 tons register, from San Francisco for Liverpool, with a cargo of grain, was attempting to enter the Canada Dock Basin in tow of two tugs, during a gale and on a high tide. One of the tugs, the G. B., was obliged to let go her hold to avoid another tug with flats in tow, which passed close under the G. B.'s bows. The J. B. in consequence was driven by the force of the gale on her port side into dangerous proximity to the sea-wall or jetty on the north side of the basin. The tug M. was hailed, got a hawser on board, disconnected her engines, began to tow, and ultimately got the J. B. to an anchorage at the Stoyne. The John Bryce, M. M. R. Feb. 17, 1882, p. 206.

Value 37,368*l.*—Award £350

734. The schooner L. B., having lost her mainmast and sustained other damage in a storm, was about thirty miles off the Dutch coast, driving towards the shore, with a signal of distress flying. The fishing smack P. A., with great difficulty and risk to the lives of her crew in consequence of the heavy sea running, succeeded in taking her in tow, and conducted her to Yarmouth Roads. The Lady Brougham, S. G. May 12, 1853.

V. 2,131*l.*—A. £350

735. The L. having taken the ground on the Blankanese Bar, was warped over and continued her voyage, and on the 28th February, two or three days afterwards, she was found to be making a large quantity of water. She made but little progress, and the crew having become exhausted from excessive exertions in pumping, preparations were made for abandoning her, and the compasses and other articles of value were stowed in the boats. A breeze, however, springing up, the crew determined to remain on board. At this time she was descried by two fishing luggers, manned by twelve hands, and their services being accepted she was, on the 2nd March, placed in safety in the Humber. The Letitia, S. G. June 17, 1847.

V. 4,207*l.*—A. £350

736. In April, in the English Channel, the fishing smack F. fell in with the M., derelict and bottom upwards. The F. proceeded to Plymouth, and obtained the assistance of the sloop B., and subsequently of the steamer, Sir W. R., 100 h.-p. The three vessels made several attempts to tow the M., but were prevented by heavy weather which came on and compelled them to leave, but they afterwards returned to the wreck, and renewed their attempts to tow her. On the morning of the 23rd April two of H.M.'s steamships took possession of the wreck. The Magdalen, S. G. Nov. 30, 1861.

V. 2,437*l.*—A. £350

737. In December, the brig M. S., 217 tons, from Lilt Cove to Swansea was discovered by the screw steamer O., 854 tons, sixty miles S. of Falmouth, unmanageable, much damaged, with only one small boat, and drifting at the rate of two knots an hour. After twenty-seven hours towing she reached Falmouth Harbour. The O. was delayed about forty-five hours, and was injured to the extent of £70. The Martha Stevens, M. M. R. Nov. 12, 1875, p. 1455.

V. 3,650*l.*—A. £350

738. In January, the schooner M., 139 tons, with crushed sugar from Amsterdam for Genoa, struck heavily on the Goodwin Sands. The master and crew left the schooner to reach a red light that appeared to the W. by N., but owing to the fog were unable to do so, or to regain their own vessel, and got on board a vessel riding off Broadstairs till morning. The wind changed, and they could not get to the schooner, and consequently rowed towards Ramsgate Harbour for assistance, met a steam-tug, the A., and arranged with her to go out and fetch the schooner. Just as the A. was starting, the schooner appeared coming under canvas towards the harbour. The lugger T. had found her derelict, striking heavily on the sand; with her top-sails and topgallant sails clewed up, mainsail and boom foresail lowered on deck, and the jib half lowered, drifting with the flood-tide higher on to the sand. The decks and cabins were strewn with jackets, books, charts, chronometers, &c., and the throat halyards of the boom foresail and the topsail sheet whip had been cut. All betokened a hasty abandonment. The T. got the schooner off the Sands, and steered her safely for Ramsgate. The Mizpah, M. M. R. April 20, 1867, p. 497.

V. 5,578*l.*—A. £350

739. The schooner N. U. having been run into by a steamer, was conducted by her to Shoebury Sand, where she was in imminent danger, when five smacks went to her assistance, and after lightening her conducted her to St. Katharine's Docks. The New Union, S. G. April 16, 1853.

V. 5,930*l.*—A. £350

740. The brig N. was at sea, about fifty miles from Lowestoft, derelict. Four smacks took her in tow, and she was brought up off Yarmouth Harbour. A steam-tug was procured for £10, and she towed the brig to Lowestoft. Smacks' loss of employment, £100. The Norman, S. G. Jan. 26, 1859. Value 850*l.*—Award £350

741. In August, the brig P. damaged in a collision off Hythe was towed to Ramsgate by a steamer bound for Guernsey, value £1,300, with passengers, which incurred loss by her delayed arrival at Guernsey. The Peto, S. G. Nov. 27, 1840.

V. 10,360*l.*—A. £350

742. In July, the Norwegian barque P., 431 tons, from Miramichi for Hull with deals, got ashore during a fog on the main, off Seaford. The tug V. proceeded to her assistance, and brought her in safety to Newhaven. The Presto, M. M. R. Feb. 4, 1865, p. 147.

V. 2,650*l.*—A. £350

743. In January, the barque O., 403 tons, from Odessa for Leith with wheat, when about 100 miles from Dungeness, close-hauled on the starboard tack, under all plain sail, with the wind light from E. by N., was run into by the screw steamer G. V., and her mainstays and mainrail were carried away, her port main rigging stretched, her mainsail and foretopsail and foreyard damaged, and she was disabled. A boat from the O. went to the G. V., and it was agreed that the G. V. should tow the O. In approaching her for this purpose, the G. V. again came into collision with the O., and carried away her jibboom, bowsprit, figure-head, head-boards, cutwater, and head-gear. The G. V. then steamed away to a distance, and the steam-tug C. in nineteen hours towed the O. into Gravesend. The Onyx, M. M. R. March 17, 1871, p. 335.

V. 9,500*l.*—A. £350

744. In March, the screw steamer S., 1,102 tons register, 120 h.-p., lost her screw, some bulwarks, and two starboard boats. Nearly all her canvas had been blown away, she was lying completely unmanageable, with the sea making a clean breach over her, and her provisions were getting short. She was fallen in with by the screw steamer N., 1,055 tons gross register, 95 h.-p. nom., with iron and tin from Cardiff for Galatz, 160 miles east of Malta. By means of a lead line made fast to a ladder, one 11-inch hawser was, after four hours' work, got on board the N. from the S., and the N. towed the S. for four days and nights, in tempestuous weather, into Malta Harbour. During the towage the hawser broke once, and a new hawser was taken on board the N. from the S. at considerable risk. The Sappho, M. M. R. July 24, 1870, p. 977.

V. 18,000*l.*—A. £350

745. The barque S. L. grounded on the lower end of the Roar Sand. The lugger L., with great difficulty and risk from the violence of the wind and very heavy sea, succeeded in getting near the barque, the master of the lugger boarded her, and by his advice the cargo was ultimately taken out, and she was towed off by the lugger to London. The Sarah Love, S. G. July 18, 1861; 7 L. T. N.S. 222.

V. 10,000*l.*—A. £350

746. The ship S., 746 tons, near Seaford Head, was embayed, and riding by a warp to her stream anchor half-a-mile from the shore; wind W.S.W., weather foggy. The steamer L., of 400 tons, at Newhaven, got up steam, went to the S., and towed her to Spithead. The Sumatra, S. G. June 21, 1859.

V. 54,166*l.*—A. £350

747. In December, the screw steamer T., 496 tons and 90 h.-p. nom., from Newcastle for Havre, with seventeen hands and a cargo of coal, fouled the chain of a schooner. The chain became entangled in the propeller of the T., and parted outside the schooner's hawsepipe. The T. anchored in the track of up and down vessels, about a mile inside the N.W. Knoll Buoy of the Goodwin Sands, in about five fathoms, by a chain cable from her stern. In answer to signals, the galley S. G. and the lugger C., with ten hands, came up, and after much difficulty, owing to the severe weather, succeeded in clearing the T.'s propeller. The S. G. fetched the tug S., 52 tons, 80 h.-p., which with much difficulty brought the T., after seven hours' towage, to Gravesend. The Temon, M. M. R. March 31, 1882, p. 398. V. 100,000*l.*—A. £350

748. The ship T. was lying within her own length of a ridge of rocks, and within a cable's length of the beach, on the coast of North Wales. She had unshipped her rudder, the wind was blowing hard dead on shore, the sea was rolling in, and the ship was in great danger, it being the season of the autumnal equinox. The steam-tug U. S., on the look-out for vessels, offered her services, which were accepted, and while the rudder was being shipped the steam-tug C. of L. came up. Both tugs took the ship in tow, and having proceeded three miles a third steam-tug, the V., came up, and the master of the T. engaged her also. After great risk from the state of the weather the tugs towed the T. into the Mersey. Services about twenty-four hours. The V. had accepted £52. The Tigris, March 25, 1850.

Value 42,962*l.*—Award £350

749. The T. F. struck on a reef of rocks near the island of Cuba, and was abandoned by her crew. Another vessel was abandoned near the same spot, and her crew in their boats having fallen in with the T. F. got her off the reef, and brought her to England. The Two Friends, 8 Jur. 1011.

V. 1,237*l.*—A. £350

750. The barque V., in the vicinity of Beachy Head, being much disabled by a collision, hoisted a signal for assistance. The lugger S. came up, and was employed by the master of the barque to procure a steam-tug, which towed the barque to the West India Docks, the lugger attending her. The services occupied five days and a-half. The Vancouver, S. G. Dec. 17, 1846.

V. 5,000*l.*—A. £350

751. In October, the schooner V., 107 tons, was found by the smack P., 56 tons, between the Leman and Hasborough Sands abandoned and making water, with all her sails set, and carried by the wind (N.W.) and the tide (ebb) towards the Lowestoft Sand. The weather was fine but hazy. A seven-inch trawl warp, 110 fathoms long, was made fast, and the V. was steered and towed through the Hasborough Gat for the Cockle Gat and Yarmouth Roads; but a tug came up at Cockle Gat and towed the V. into Lowestoft for £18. The Volunteer, M. M. R. Feb. 2, 1877, p. 147.

V. 1,880*l.*—A. £350

752. In June, the steamer G., about 3,000 tons gross, from Hankow for London, with tea, broke her main shaft in the Indian Ocean, and was under sail but unmanageable. On the 26th the steamer Glenavon, 2,985 tons gross, with tea, from China for New York, fell in with the G. and towed her for 900 miles on her voyage, till her shaft was repaired and she could go at some speed; after which the two vessels kept company until July the 5th, when they parted. The G. ultimately reached London in safety. The Glenfruin, S. G. April 2, 1885, p. 215.

V. 158,000*l.*—A. £340

753. In January, the captain of the smack N. S., when fishing at the east of the Doggerbank, observed the ship H. with a flag of distress flying. Abandoning his net, worth £50, he bore down on her, and found she was a derelict, with neither compass nor provisions aboard. With great difficulty, the sea being very heavy, he got on board the H. It took ten hours to get the ship to rights and fasten a tow-line from her to the N. S. The N. S. then tried to tow the H., but the wind was too strong. Next morning the smack Noord See came up, the captain of the N. S. got five men and some provisions from her, and both vessels began towing the H. With much labour and difficulty they got her to within five miles of Shields, where they engaged the services of a tug for £35, and ultimately a second for £5. She was then taken into Shields. The Hendrik (North Shields Pd. Co.), M. M. R. Jan. 29, 1870, p. 140.

V. 600*l.*—A. £340

754. In February, the French schooner A. et L., from Nantes for Leith, with wheat and flour, was stranded at Holy Island, and was got off, badly damaged, leaky, and with unshipped rudder, by sixty-five fishermen belonging to the island. The Auguste et Louise (Arb.), M. M. R. March 26, 1875, p. 395.

V. not stated.—A. £335

755. In September, the French steamer A. came into collision with the steamer Bancia, and was so much damaged that her master, on the advice of the master of the tug C. of L., beached her on the Roar Sand, near Dungeness. Part of her cargo was discharged, and she was lightened by a master mariner named Groves and forty labourers. The tug then went to Dover, fetched some cement, with which the bows of the A. were patched up, and by careful towing along the land she was taken into the outer harbour of Dover. £300 to the C. of L., £30 to labourers. The Antelope (Cinque Ports Ad. Co.), M. M. R. Jan. 24, 1872, p. 1524.

V. 4,500*l.*—A. £330

756. In October, the iron barque T., for Liverpool from New York, dragged foul of another vessel off Egremont, and her head was falling athwart the other, which was paying out cable, when she was taken hold of and towed clear, in half an hour, by the tug R. S., which, with great difficulty and danger, held her for six hours, and then took her to a safe anchorage. The Toracour, M. M. R. June 11, 1875, p. 743.

V. 58,000*l.*—A. £330

757. The smack P., off Flamborough Head, fell in with the brig M., 143 tons, derelict, with four feet of water in her hold and her pumps choked; wind W.N.W. and sea high. Some of the crew of the P. boarded the M., and baled her with buckets, and the P. took her in tow, and with another smack, the W., conducted her to Yarmouth. Services lasted four days, and were attended with severe labour and risk to life. The Minerva, S. G. Nov. 8, 1860. Value 650*l.*—Award £325

758. In December, the iron barque P., 429 tons register, fourteen hands, from Samanco, Peru, to Liverpool, with sugar, was in the Irish Channel heading S.S.E. in hazy weather with a light W. by S. breeze, the tide nearly high water, and she was in dangerous proximity to the Gynfelin Patches. The master did not know his position, and mistook the South Arklow Light for the Kish Light. The wind having freshened to a gale, the P. was seen about ten miles off Newquay by the captain of the lifeboat, who, after much difficulty boarded the P., and gave directions by means of which she was rescued from her perilous position and got safely to Liverpool. The service lasted about twenty-two hours. The Pacific, M. M. R. Feb. 13, 1880, p. 206. V. 18,750*l.*—A. £325

759. The barque S. G., 368 tons, having been on shore, received some injuries which rendered her rudder useless, and she was in a position of some danger, being in the locality of the Goodwin Sands. The steam-tug C. went to her assistance, took her in tow, and towed her into Ramsgate Harbour. The services were attended with some difficulty and danger, owing to the unmanageable state of the barque. The San Giovanni, S. G. May 5, 1863. V. 4,000*l.*—A. £325

760. In December, the brig C., from Rio Nunez, for Marseilles, with ground nuts, whose crew of eight hands were nearly all ill, her mate dead, and her master dying, was boarded by the mate of the Norwegian ship T., who took charge of her and brought her to Gibraltar in twenty-two days. The Cygnus (Marseilles Trib. of Com.), M. M. R. Aug. 5, 1881, p. 971; on appeal, M. M. R. July 28, 1882, p. 942. V. not stated.—A. £320

761. Salvage services were rendered by twenty-two salvors to a vessel driven on shore off Margate during a heavy gale of wind. The Emma, 8 Jur. 651. V. 3,000*l.*—A. £320

762. The J. and A. took the ground on the edge of the Ower Sand, on the Norfolk coast, and though she got off, she became extremely leaky, unshipped her rudder, and drifted about in a waterlogged state between the Leman and Ower Sands. She at length anchored on the western elbow of the latter, and four men proceeded from the light vessel to her aid, but could not render effectual assistance. A pilot vessel and a fishing smack, with the four men from the lightship, in three or four days conducted the J. and A. safely into Yarmouth. The James and Ann, S. G. Jan. 13, 1847. V. 2,479*l.*—A. £320

763. The Norwegian barque N. got on the west end of the Mouse Sand, and was in extreme peril, from which she was extricated by a steamer, four fishing smacks, and two watermen. £140 to steamer, £160 to smacks, £20 to two watermen. The Norden, S. G. Dec. 13, 1853. V. 2,400*l.*—A. £320

764. In February, the three-masted schooner N. from London to Kingston (Jamaica), with general cargo, had sustained severe damage in a collision. She was boarded off Dungeness by two of the crew of the lugger F., 20 tons. There was a whole gale blowing from N.W., with squalls of sleet and snow, and a heavy sea. The F., leaving some of her crew on board, went in search of a tug, while the N., with the aid of the men of the F., left on board her, was kept from driving to leeward on to the French coast. The F. then came up with the tug G. P., which towed the N. during a terrific gale in about 6½ hours to Dover Harbour, breaking one hawser, and nearly drifting on to the Varne Sand on the way. £250 to the G. P., £70 to the F. The Nellie, M. M. R. April 20, 1877, p. 500. V. 20,000*l.*—A. £320

765. In October, in answer to signals from the schooner S. C., 149 tons, from Rancoon to Newcastle, with salt, which had lost her masts in bad weather in the North Sea, and had to lay-to with a drift anchor, the smacks S., 89 tons, value £1,400, and A. came up. The S. C. was in a very dangerous position off the Outer Dowsing in a heavy gale, with the sea making a clean sweep over her. The master and crew of the S. C. were got on to the S. with great difficulty, and a tow-ropes was put on board the S. C. Five of the combined crews boarded the S. C., which was towed all through the night and the following day during a heavy gale and in a high sea, pumping going on all the time. Next day she was off the Spurn, and taken in tow by a tug safely to Hull. Owing to being shorthanded the S. came into collision with another vessel, and had to pay £60 damage. The Silver Cloud, M. M. R. April 29, 1881, p. 521. Value 786*l.*—Award £320

766. In February, the iron screw steamer T., from Ghent for London, laden with a general cargo, with a broken propeller shaft, and sailing under fore-and-aft canvas, was sighted close to the Kentish Knock by the L., forty-one tons, with fish for Ramsgate. The L. towed her towards Lowestoft, and when the T. was about three miles N.E. by E. of the Kentish Knock, the wind being S.W. or W.S.W., and the sea nasty, the smacks E., sixteen tons, and the A., fifteen tons, each valued at £500, made fast, and the three towed her to Harwich in about two hours. The Troubadour, M. M. R. June 28, 1878, p. 813. V. 3,763.—A. £320

767. The brig P. was derelict, about fourteen miles from the Lizard Lighthouse. The barque F. B. towed her in nine hours to Falmouth. The Parvitz, S. G. May 7, 1851. V. 1,250*l.*—A. £312

768. The schooner At., derelict, with three feet of water in her hold, was fallen in with by the smacks Al. and P. in the North Sea, about seventy miles from the English coast. The smacksmen having boarded her at some peril took her in tow for two days, when they arrived off Winterton. The steam-tug E. was there engaged by the smacksmen to tow the schooner and smacks into Yarmouth harbour. By the misconduct of the tug the schooner and the smack Al. were driven on the beach, and the tow-rope was broken. The smacksmen on board the schooner left her; and the rest of the crew of the Al., about two hours after the accident, went into the harbour to obtain assistance. Whilst they were away a large party of boatmen launched two yawls, proceeded to the At., took possession of her, and by laying out anchors, and heaving on them, got the At. off next morning at high tide. The Atlas, 1 Lushington, 508; S. G. Nov. 26, 1861. V. 637*l.*—A. £310
