From today's featured article

The hooded pitohui, found in New Guinea, is a medium-sized songbird with rich chestnut and black plumage. It is one of the few known poisonous birds, containing a range of batrachotoxin compounds in its skin, feathers and other tissues. These toxins are thought to be derived from their diet, and may function both to deter predators and to protect the bird from parasites. The toxic nature of this bird is well known to local hunters, who avoid it. The hooded pitohui is found in forests from sea level up to 2,000 metres (6,600 ft), but is most common in hills and low mountains. A social bird, it lives in family groups and frequently joins and even leads mixed-species foraging flocks. The diet is made up of fruits, seeds and invertebrates. This species is apparently a cooperative breeder, with family groups helping to protect the nest and feed the young. The hooded pitohui is common and not currently at risk of extinction, with its numbers being stable. (Full article...)

The screenshot shows the HotCat interface for editing the categories of a Wikipedia article. The main content area displays the article title "Taxon identifiers" and a list of identifiers for Stigmella lucida, including CoL, GBIF, iNaturalist, IRMNG, LepIndex, and NZOR. Below this, there is a section for "Taxa named by Alfred" with a dropdown menu open, listing various Alfreds (Nalepa, Nehring, Newton, Oxner, Philpott, Rehder, Romer, Russel Wallace, Schillinger, Crompton). The search input field contains "Taxa named by Alfred". The interface also shows a "Hidden categories" section with links to "Articles with short description", "Short description is different from Wikidata", "Articles lacking in-text citations from September 2016", "All articles lacking in-text citations", and "Articles with 'species' microformats". At the bottom, there is a "Default sort" section with a link to "Taxonbars with automatically added original combinations" and "All stub articles".

This tool attempts to detect copyright violations in articles. In search mode, it will check for similar content elsewhere on the web using Google, external links present in the text of the page, or Turnitin (via EranBot), depending on which options are selected. In comparison mode, the tool will compare the article to a specific webpage without making additional searches, like the Duplication Detector.

Running a full check can take up to a minute if other websites are slow or if the tool is under heavy use. Please be patient. If you get a timeout, wait a moment and refresh the page.

Be aware that other websites can copy from Wikipedia, so check the results carefully, especially for older or well-developed articles. Specific websites can be skipped by adding them to the excluded URL list.

=== Māori rock carving ===

On the north-west side of Lake Taupo on the cliffs of Mine Bay, there are Māori rock carvings created in the late 1970s by Matahi Whakataka-Brightwell and John Randall. Carved in the likeness of [[Ngātoro-i-rangi]], a navigator who guided the Tōwharetoa and Te Arawa tribes to the Taupo area over a thousand years ago according to [[Māori mythology|Māori legend]].<ref>G{{Cite web|title=Māori > Lake Taupo|url=https://www.lovetapu.com/en/see-do/art-maori-culture/mine-bay-maori-rock-carvings|title=Ngātoroirangi Mine Bay Māori Rock Carvings|first=Love Taupo |last=www.lovetapu.com|website=www.lovetapu.com}}</ref> The 10-metre-high carving is intended to protect Lake Taupo from volcanic activities underneath. The cliff has become a popular tourist destination with hundreds of boats and yachts visiting the spot yearly.
