

PRINTED BY J. MAYOR, DELAUF & DUGLASS. NEW-ORLEANS: THURSDAY (MORNING) APRIL 22, 1830.

The Office of the Bee is now removed in the upper part of the house occupied by Mr. J. Le Capentier, Auctioneer, corner of Chartres and St. Louis streets.

Mr. A. BEAUVAIS, is a candidate for Governor, at the ensuing election in July next.

The representation at the Orleans Theatre this evening, may justly be called a grand musical entertainment. Madame Feron who has already proved that her talents are not confined to the high reputation which she has acquired as the B. F. singer...

Extract of a letter received in this place dated "Key West, March 3d, 1830."

"You have, no doubt, seen much in the papers in relation to the unhealthiness of this place, and have been under apprehensions for my safety, but believe me I apprehend no more danger by remaining here than I should if I were a resident of your Borough. It is true, there have been many deaths here during the last season, but a great portion of them were attributable to other causes than that of fever; intemperance, probably, carried off one half of them."

Our island is perfectly healthy; and business brisk. There were two wrecks brought in last week, one an English brig and the other a French ship; both from New Orleans laden with Cotton. Both cases have been settled by arbitration; the British brig will probably pay the salvors ten and the French ship nine thousand dollars. Capt. Rooke, (of Norfolk, Va.) is one of the salvors in the case of the French ship Our Judge is absent. He went to Tallahassee to attend the Court of Appeals last December, and has not yet returned.

A number of elegant improvements are in progress in New York. Streets are opening and widening, and shops and dwellings of more than ordinary beauty about to be erected. Warehouses of four and five stories in height are building, a circumstance demonstrating the value of the ground. A five story marble edifice is to be erected at the corner of Ann street and Broadway, the upper part to be occupied as a museum, and the roof to be ornamented with statues. The entire front on Broadway from Barclay to Vesey street, is to be the site of a magnificent hotel, with suites of apartments for private families, and a Restaurant, the whole on the Parisian plan, with a quadrangle in the centre. The Green of Colombia college is to be improved, and will be surrounded by a handsome stone wall and a garden. A new and seventeen elegant dwellings will be built in one neighborhood, and a similar row of wood dwellings will be designed in certain districts. Granite monuments are used in some of the buildings. This is a convenient building stone, as it can be sufficiently smoothed by the hammer. But it is to be wished that in the explorations every where making of our soil, some quarry could be discovered of free stone similar to that of Bath and Paris, which can be cut with the saw and knife as easily as wood, but hardens with exposure to the air.

From the National Intelligencer, April 1.

Gen. Harrison's Appeal.—We have found time to read through the Pamphlet which we announced to our readers a day or two, in which, under the modest title of "Remarks" on certain charges made against him by the Government of Colombia, Gen. Harrison has given a narrative of facts which is calculated to give a most unfavorable impression of the intelligence and liberality of the Government and leading men of the Colombian nation.

We cannot pretend to follow the narrative throughout. The main facts, however, show that Gen. Harrison, as soon as he was superseded by Mr. Moore, because the object of the main est suspicion to the ruling authority. Bolivar was absent from the Government on a visit to the Southern Provinces, and had left a Council to manage the Government during his absence. To one of the Council, General Urdaneta, the Secretary of War, he left, on his departure, a Commission authorizing him to take upon himself all the powers which had been confided to the Council, as far as related to the three central Provinces, whenever an occasion should arise which, in his opinion, should make necessary the exercise of such extraordinary authority. Upon the insurrection of Cordova, during the last summer, these powers were assumed by Gen. Urdaneta. By his order it was that repeated indignities were shewn, upon the most preposterous pretences, to Gen. Harrison and his suite before they could get out of the country. "The power given by Gen. Bolivar," says Gen. Harrison, "did not authorize these measures. The authority was to be exercised over three Colombian Provinces, of which Bogota was certainly one. But the diplomatic relations of the country belonged to the whole country, and not to the ruler of a part of it. This, however, was a matter of small concern to Gen. Urdaneta. He had the bayonets under his controul, to enforce his edicts, and did not trouble his head to make nice distinctions."

The charges preferred by this Vice-Dictator against Gen. Harrison, are the most ridiculous conceivable, as our readers may imagine, when we state that one of them was; that the General had instigated Mr. Gooding to assassinate the British and French Commissioners, the Secretary of War (then acting as Dictator) and the Secretary of State of Colombia! The proofs furnished by the Secretary of State are the assertions that "a denunciation of him had actually been received from Cartagena," and that the Government possessed "orders, of too secret a character to be presented." Did any one ever hear the like, or read it, unless in the trials for the Gunpowder Treason, or in the arraignment of some destined victim in the dungeons of the Inquisition?

Notwithstanding the vagueness and generality of the charges and suspicions against Gen. Harrison, he has as completely proved a negative upon every little of them, as it is possible to prove such a thing. The evidence which he has produced to shew that the whole tenor of his conduct and conversation, public and private, was respectful to the Government and such as to discourage all hostility to it, whether by foreigners or natives, is irresistible. It covers the whole ground, and excludes the shadow of a doubt.

It is clear to us that Mr. Moore, aware of the indignities offered to his distinguished countryman, who yet was entitled to diplomatic immunities, would have been justified in demanding his passports, as the alternative of a release of Gen. H. from the espionage exercised over him by the order of the Government. If he had felt as we do on reading this detail, he would have taken this course. Perhaps, however, that which he actually pursued was the more prudent one.

One circumstance in this history we take room particularly to advert to, as shewing the effect abroad of the flagitious misrepresentations of party presses in this country concerning the course of our Government in its relations with Foreign Powers. Though the ridiculousness of the suggestions in the subjoined extract are, taken together, sufficiently obvious, every one will readily recognize in them, separately, assertions that have been actually made in the public prints of this country, which have even found readers here credulous enough to believe in them.

Extract from the Journal of Mr. Taylor. "October 17.—To day, a friend came, and earnestly inquired of us, whether we had put our signatures to any paper without knowing its contents; he stated, that it was reported that we had carried on correspondence with Adolfo; that the Government here believed that General Harrison had been recalled by General Jackson, that the present Government of the United States would deny us the justice of the demand we should make for reparation for the insult offered us by this Government, so they felt secure of our ruin and dishonor; that it was reported, that the Ministers appointed by Mr. Adams were instructed to interfere in the internal concerns of the new Republics, to which they were accredited; but that those appointed by General Jackson were instructed to pursue a contrary course of conduct."

Upon this subject it is known to all who are familiar with the Diplomatic history of the country, that it is an astounding instruction to our Ministers to different Governments of South America wholly to abstain from any interference with the internal concerns of the Governments to which they are accredited. This injunction is first to be found, if we mistake not, in the instructions to

Mr. Anderson, our first and excellent Minister to Colombia, by Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, and it has been substantially followed in all the subsequent instructions. Mr. Moore's Address to the Government of Colombia made public that part of his instructions, but disclosed no principle, either of instruction or of action, that had not been made familiar to statesmen by the uniform practice of the last and preceding Administrations.

On the 18th ult. the Assembly appropriated 27,500 for the support of public schools. An appropriation of 1200 has been made to enable a person to acquire the information necessary to qualify him to conduct an institution for the education of the deaf and dumb persons in the province; and $12 to the master of the British and Canadian School, at Quebec, for every child, not exceeding ten in number, whom he shall instruct as to enable him to conduct a school in the manner and according to the system pursued by him.
