Ready. PHOTO REPRESENTATION OF

Lord Gauranga and His Bhaktas Three centuries ago, Sree Sreenivasa Acharjya, one o the greatest devotees of Lord Gauranga, had a portrait descended to his pious family as perhaps the most pre cious heirloom. Sree Sreenivasa's great-grandson was Radha Mohun Thakur, the guru or spiritual preceptor of Maharaja Nanda Kumar. The Maharaja, himself a pious Baishnava, was so captivated with the portrait that he interceded with his guru and obtained n frm him. The painting was removed to the Maharaja's palace; and it may still be seen at the Kunja

The Gauranga Samaj has had a photograph of this ancient painting, taken by a celebrated artist of the own; and copies may be had at the under-mentioned

> TELEGRAPHS IN THE PHILIPPINES. Washington, May 23 (Reuter).-Notwithstanding the protest of the English company holding a twenty-five year licence from Spain for cable and telegraph lines in the Philippines, no changes will be made in the United States plans. A cable steamer is on her way to Manila and, on arriving, there she will start on the work mapped out for her. It is held that no Spanish concession can interfere with American military operations in the Philippines, and, as intercommunication in the islands is deemed necessary for the assertion of American sovereignty, no attention will be paid to the protest.

ONE of the most wonderful tales of instinctive habits has long been told of certain insects known as sand-wasps. These insects do not live in communities like many of their kin, but a pair form a nest apart from their fellows, and for this reason they are frequently spoken of transforms this snow into a granulated mass as solitary wasps. The nest is a burrow, usual-formed of small round icicles, half snow and ly in sandy soil, and is lined with silk. In By the repetition of this process, which also the future food of their still unhatched displaces the air, and by pressure from the young they store up at the same time subjacent layers, the whole mass is now unit the bodies of insects or spiders. Many years ago a French observer-Fabre-said that the waspl stung its prey through one of the nerve ganglia, which, in insects and many water place them together so that they touch. other invertebrate animals, are arranged like They will immediately freeze together. As a a string of beads along the ventral side of the string of small fragments of ice may easily body. The effect of this sting was to render thus be formed, so also are chains of icebergs the insect comatose without actually killing ! lit, and lin, this condition it would remain From the interior these glaciers wend their for several weeks, and so afford a supply of slow and resistless way down the mountain fresh food for the young when hatched. When sides, or through the valleys towards or into the one comes to think of it, this means an extensive sea. As the width and length, so does the knowledge of insect anatomy, to say nothing of height or thickness of the glacier vary—in some physiology, on the part of the wasp, and as the three or four hundred feet, rising out of the sea facts, it is not surprising that it formed the text or fjord like a solid wall of glass, with an un- for a large number of disquisitions on inherited known and a most unfathomable depth of ice instinct. Darwinians hold that complicated habits like these are not instinctive in the strict sense of the term, but are the result of observation, and experiment on the part of the animal which performs them. Lamarckians, on the other hand, say that they are true instincts, and as such are inherited, and can only have arisen as the result of the inheritance of the results of intelligent observation. But a series of actions such as these is manifestly too complex for any single insect to acquire as the result of direct experiment, as the position of the ganglia varies in different insects, and as they are small, the operation of piercing one would be a very delicate one. If the facts then were true, the balance of evidence seemed in favour of the Lamarckian view of the inheritance of acquired instincts. In a recent number of Nature an account of the work done towards elucidating the facts by Dr. and Mrs., Peckham, of Wisconsin, is given. After a long series of observations on many kind of solitary wasps, they come to the conclusion that the ganglia are not pierced, but the stinging is almost at random, the wasp marely knowing apparently where the skin of its victim is thinnest—namely, at the joints at the body. The effect of the sting, which may be repeated many times in different parts of the body, is either to kill outright or merely to much weaken the victim, so that the idea that the careful planting of the sting was to preserve the prey in a comatose condition, living, and yet not able injure young wasps, is evidently Professor Koch in South Africa, to confirm dering his apology, he uttered the name of their powers into the hands of the Captain-culosis held its first general meeting at its quite incorrect.
