THE DOCTOR'S GHOST STORY.

BY JAMES PARISH STEKLE.

We were gathered around a pleasant fire, talking about matters and things in general, and Robert Dale Owen's "Foot-falls on the Boundary of Another World" in particular, when something put it into the head of the doctor to tell us a ghost story.

"While practicing in North Carolina, some years ago," said he, "I was called to see a young lady who was suffering from an attack of hysterical convulsions. The attack, I was informed, had been brought on by a fright. My patient had gone the night before to stay till morning with the family of a neighbor, by the name of Trexler. His house was said to be haunted, and the young lady, naturally nervous on account of the reports, had heard strange noises and seen strange lights during the night, and the result just mentioned had been brought about in consequence.

"The young lady recovered, and I thought but little more of the matter for several days, when I was called upon to visit an elderly lady in the same neighborhood. Her malady I also found to be hysterical, and, on making inquiry, the haunted house, as I expected, turned up as being the cause of bringing it about. She, in company with her husband and two or three children, had visited the Trexlers, with a view to satisfy themselves with reference to the ghost story and she had returned fully satisfied. What she had heard was a strange sound commencing with the tick of a clock and ending like the beat of a bass drum. This had been repeated at intervals all through the night. What she had seen were flashes of light and white objects like huge birds, darting about the room, contemporary with the noise. A night of such horrors was too much for a weak woman like herself, and hence the hysteria.

"It was not long after the time of these incidents till I was called upon by Mr. Trexler himself. Having given him the advice required I made bold to ask him a few questions concerning the ghosts. Without the least hesitation he gave me all particulars, all of which were, in substance, just what I had heard before. His wife was truly a piteous one. Being a poor man, he had to teach school for a living. His school was ten miles away from his residence, therefore he could not return to his family each night, but was compelled to leave them alone from Monday evening till Friday evening in each week. In the meantime the family, consisting of wife, two daughters, nearly grown, and several sons, younger, were tormented and frightened nearly out of their reason by these nightly visitations. The bad repute of the house in which he lived, he said, caused its rent to be very low, and, therefore, he did not move his family from it; in fact he was not able to pay higher rent.

"My sympathy was quickly elicited in behalf of the poor man. I did not believe in supernatural agencies, and I told him so; adding, at the same time, that I judged his troubles to be the work of some enemy, and promised to call on him soon and assist him to ferret out the mystery. He thanked me quite feelingly, and we parted.

"The Friday following I found me at the haunted house. It was an old-fashioned log building, weather-boarded on the outside, and being in all about forty five by twenty five feet, a story high, with an attic or loft above it. A huge stone chimney ran up through the centre of the structure, having a door on one side of it, and a thin board partition on the other, thus through the house into two rooms. There were two doors passing out from the building, and they both opened from the west room, the east one having no door, save the one that passed by the side of the chimney. But it had a small window in which a glass was sadly broken; and as the room was the one in which the mysterious sounds were heard, I soon decided, in my own mind that this broken window was the passage through which the evil producing them got access to the house. So, calling for hammer and nails, fastened the sash down; and having made a careful survey of the premises generally, I was ready for the ghost.

"We sat up and talked till about 10 o'clock, when the host suggested that I had better retire, as the sounds never came while any member of the family was up. We retired—all in the west room—the east room not having beds in it, for no one could bear to think of sleeping there. Mr. and Mrs. Trexler occupied a bed in the rear part of the room, the two girls occupied a bed against the partition, in the notch made by the chimney, the youngest a pile of together to enjoy a pallet on the floor, while Alice, the youngest boy, and myself, were assigned a bed close to the partition door, on the other side of the chimney.

"All were soon quiet, but not all asleep. I, for one, had not turned in to sleep, but rather to wait for something to turn up; and in just about half an hour up it turned. There was a gentle tap in the next room, about such a sound as a chicken would produce in picking a grain of corn from a board. Soon came another tap, a shade louder than the first, and then another still louder, until the sound had attained a volume as loud as the largest size bass drum. Now was the time for a tation; and, with a feeling not by any means free from the nervous, I leaped out of bed, seized a huge wooden poker that rested against the chimney, threw open the partition door and went into the haunted room. That instant all became as silent as death, and nothing strange was to be seen from the dim light from the sky that came in from the window.

"But yet I was not satisfied. Calling for a light I stood guard with my poker till Alice brought one; but even then I could discover no clue to the mystery.— There was the window nailed down just as I had left it, and all things about the room occupied precisely the same position they had occupied in the evening.— I was floored.

"After much reasoning with myself I came to the conclusion that a rod had been inserted through a broken pane in the window, and that the sounds had been thus produced; and with this thought I retired again, resolved upon a different plan of attack.

"In something less than half an hour the light taps commenced again, and with more precipitation than before I arose, grasped my poker, dashed out at the front door and made my way around to the window, expecting to take the enemy in the rear. But nobody was there, though the sounds actually continued for several seconds after I had reached the window outside. They finally died away, however, and silence again reigned supreme.

"I was now floored for certain. Returning to the family I found them all awake, and each member in the greatest trepidation. I was taken aback. Had this occurred some years later I could have explained—one of the family, though unconscious of it perhaps, would have been pronounced a spiritual medium, and the decision would have been that a rapper was at work. As it was I was completely at fault, and, I may add, by no means the confident gentleman of a few hours earlier in the evening.

"There was nothing further to do but to extinguish the light, go to bed, and await further events without hoping to unravel the mystery.

"A little while and the infernal orgies commenced as usual. Further investigation was useless, so I concluded to lie still and listen. The sounds were indeed frightful, but as yet no lights appeared. While I was breathing as easily as possible, and wondering what was next on the programme, a large white object sailed across the room, first appearing in the vicinity of the chimney, and shaping its course towards the bed occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Trexler. It disappeared in a moment, and for a moment, then back it glided towards the chimney, occupying a position in the air, as it passed, about half-way between the floor and the ceiling; or, rather, the loft. And thus it continued to pass and re-pass at intervals of two or three minutes, the drumming in the next room keeping up to its highest pitch all the while.

"At length the novelty of the thing began to wear off, and I began to feel my old thirst for investigation return. So reaching from the bed I possessed myself of the poker and waited nervously for an opportunity to turn up—one that I had determined to embrace. Presently I saw the mysterious white object start in an upward course in its journey from the rear of the room to the chimney, and instantly I let fly the poker. The time was well calculated, for the poker and the white object, coming into collision, near the chimney, fell to the uncarpeted floor with a terrible racket, and the drumming immediately ceased. Leaving the bed in a great hurry I stirred up the fire with an eye to the extermination of my prize—to my no little relief it turned out to be a large pillow.

"Mr. and Mrs. Trexler denied knowing anything about the pillow, but I was satisfied. The trick was too plain—it had been passing to and fro from their bed to the bed occupied by the girls, and it had never passed without help.

"To complete my investigations I took the liberty of drawing out the bed, occupied by the girls, from the wall, and of examining the partition. I found it to be loose at the upper end, and by taking hold of a pin that stuck out just above the bed, and shaking back and forth, I was enabled to produce the "drumming" all the case imaginable. But still I could not plead ignorance to the last.

"I retired and slept till morning, for I was needless to add that the ghosts were no more during my stay. On taking my leave I told my suffering friends that I would offer them a compromise—if they would scare no more people I would say nothing about my visit to them. They did not promise orally, but I suppose they did mentally, for the haunted house soon ceased to be talked of in the neighborhood.

"I learned afterwards that a quarrel had taken place between Trexler and his landlord; and, as the year was nearly out, I suppose Trexler wished to leave the impression that the house was haunted, to prevent its owner from being able to rent it after he had left. In never exposed him."

THE HAMMER THROWING AT OXFORD.—As they pass the pavilion the "hammer" is observed and its weight nicely tested. Did you ever see the hammer thrown, reader? I do not mean an ordinary hammer thrown in an ordinary fashion, but such as that used by the collegians trying their strength with its aid. It most nearly resembles a pavilion's hammer. The stem is long, and at the head there is a circular piece of iron. It weighs twenty one pounds. It is not one of the "events" in the programme of this, the champion's day's sports. I saw six men, fine stalwart fellows most of them were, trying their skill in the inclosure there two days ago. There are many ways of throwing; some are very eccentric and amusing. One retired six paces from the line of tape before which the hammer had to be loosed, and there he held it out at full arm's length, then swung it three times, taking a jump each time, and letting it go at the last. That did not succeed. Another stood by the line and swung it thrice backwards and forwards with terrific force, loosing the handle when it was at its greatest altitude. That made a capital throw, though not the best. Mr. Morgan, of Jesus College, whose physique was sligher than those of most of the others, then essayed, and he sent it eighty-two feet three inches. The way he threw was charming. Taking the hammer in his hand, he measured about four paces from the line, and then turned his face from it. He held the bottom of the handle with the grip of a vice in both hands, extending them above his head. The firm set muscles, at the top of each arm, were visible beneath his shirt. For a few minutes he stood in this position, getting the perfect poise of the hammer; then he lowered it, waltzed round three times very rapidly, and, stopping just short of the line, let the unwieldy instrument loose. It had traveled upwards of twenty-seven yards when it fell to the ground, ploughing up the turf. Strength is much, but skill is more in this contest. Mr. Morgan was probably anything but the strongest man among the six that threw this hammer, and a novice, though a strong man, would find it difficult, if not impossible, to throw it a score of yards in half a day's practice. I saw some tyros trying. The result was rather amusing.

A WONDERFUL CLOCK.—The clock in the tower of the Cathedral at Strausburg, is not only a monster in size, but is the most wonderful piece of mechanism in the world. It is one hundred feet high, thirty feet wide, and fifteen deep. About twenty feet from the bottom is the dial, on each side of which is a cherub, holding a small mallet in his hand, while over the dial is a small bell; the cherub on the left strikes the first quarter, and that on the right the second quarter.— Fifty feet above the dial is a colossal figure of Time, with a bell in his left hand and a scythe in his right. A figure of a young man in front strikes the third quarter on the bell in Time's left hand, and then turns and glides with a slow step around behind Time, when out comes an old man with a mallet and places himself in front of the old reaper. As the hour of twelve comes, the old man deliberately strikes, with much power, twelve times on the bell. He then glides slowly behind Time, and the young man again comes out and takes his position, ready to do his duty when called upon by the machinery. As soon as the old man has struck twelve and disappeared, another set of machinery is set in motion, some twelve feet higher, where there is a high cross with the image of Christ upon it. The instant twelve is struck a figure of one of the Apostles walks out from behind, comes in front, turns facing the cross, bows, and walks on around to his place. This is repeated until the twelve apostles, large as life, walk out, bow, and pass on. As the last appears, an enormous game cock, perched on the pinnacle of the clock, slowly flaps his wings, stretches forth his neck, and crows three times, so loud as to be heard outside of the church to some distance, and with life-like naturalness.— Then all is still as death.

A LEGEND ABOUT LAWYERS.—There are a large number of funny stories in vogue relating to the tergiteude of the legal profession, and the difficulty the members thereof will have to get into heaven. Yet, as the lawyers usually enjoy a joke as much as anybody else, even at their own expense, they will read with edification this latest attack upon them, which is a translation from a recent French work, and which, oddly enough, is called a "Good Woman's Story."

"Whilst our Lord was on earth, wandering about with his disciples, they were once overtaken by night in the midst of a cornfield. 'Master,' said St. Peter, addressing the Saviour, 'desirest thou that we should go and seek a lodging in yonder cabin?' Our Lord answered in the affirmative. Reaching the cabin, an aged man received and welcomed them, and prepared them a repast. After they had seated themselves at the table, there entered one of the disciples. 'And what do you want?' demanded the host. 'Fear nothing,' exclaimed St. Peter, 'he is one of us.' 'It is well,' responded the old man, inviting the new comer to take a place by the side of his companions. A few minutes, and another appeared, and then another, and so on, until the twelve were all within. All likewise accepted the host's invitation. 'Patience,' exclaimed the old man to himself, 'where one guest leads a hundred may follow.'

The next morning, St. Peter thus addressed the old man: 'He to whom thou hast extended thy hospitality is the Lord. If thou hast any favor to request of Him, speak, and I will obtain it in thy name.' The old man, who was a great gambler, asked, without hesitation or ceremony, always to be winner at cards. His request was granted.

Like all men, his days were numbered, and death came for him. As he was traversing space, he perceived two demons in charge of the soul of a lawyer.— 'Hallow, sirs,' he exclaimed to the demons, 'will you stop and have a game with me?' An invitation which the demons, desiring no better thing, for they invented cards, at once accepted. 'But what shall we play for,' they inquired; 'thou hast no money?' 'True,' replied the old man. 'Suppose,' he continued, after a pause, 'I stake my soul, a good one, against the soul in your charge, which has not the value of a maravedi.' 'So be it,' replied the demons, and the play began. It is unnecessary to state that the old man won the lawyer's soul, took charge of it, and bore it along with him.

On reaching the gates of heaven, St. Peter, observing the ancient proprietor of the cabin, said to him: 'Enter, for I know thee well. But thou art not alone; what black soul is that thou hast with thee?' 'I am not alone,' replied the old man, 'for God always loves the society of many. This soul, so sullied with ink, is the soul of a lawyer.' 'There is no place for such in heaven,' replied St. Peter; 'come in by yourself.' 'When thou comest into my cabin,' said the old man, 'twelve came with thee. I have but one in my company. Why should he not be admitted, since where one guest leads a hundred may follow?'

HOW TO GET UP HIGHER.—There are some who do not exert the powers they suppose they possess, because they do not occupy a position adapted to call forth those powers. They stand idle, because they say, no man has hired them. When asked whether there is nothing for them to do, they reply in effect nothing worthy of their powers. Those who thus wait for stations worthy of their supposed powers may spend a life in idleness.

The true man does vigorously whatsoever his hand findeth to do. He is never out of employment. No one ever need be out of employment. There is always work to be done. Some may complain that all avenues to employment are closed to them. They are not closed to those who have a mind to work.

A merchant in New York had made what was then regarded as a handsome fortune. In consequence of losses occasioned by the war of 1812 he failed. He surrendered all his property to his creditors. He was not out of employment a week. He took the first thing that offered. Though he had been the head of a large jobbing establishment, he took a clerkship in a comparatively small one. He attended to the duties of his clerkship as faithfully as he had attended to the duties of the firm of which he was the leading partner. It was not many years before he was among the merchant princes of the city.

Let no young man wait in idleness for a situation worthy of his powers. Let him do with his might whatsoever his hand findeth to do. The way to get a better place is to perform in a frugal manner the duties of your present one. The way to prepare for greater usefulness is to make yourself as useful as possible in your present calling.

CHARY BEGINS AT HOME.—Many excellent ladies in Washington and elsewhere oppose a general movement to dispense with superfluities and luxuries in order to reduce unnecessary importation at the price of the necessities of life. The members of the society in Washington pledge themselves to use "no import article of apparel" for three years. As a sign of earnest devotion and patriotism this is most welcome.

It springs naturally from a profound conviction of the vital significance of the war; and if a spirit of evinces had been universal from the beginning of the rebellion we should to-day have many million of dollars for actual use that have been squandered upon the vainest display.

It has always been a question whether, while the war raged at a distance from our homes we have felt seriously enough the needs of individual sacrifice, and the success of this movement will be a kind of national earnestness.

We hope that good an intention will not be marred any folly in the fulfillment, and the purely voluntary assent to the sacrifice will be the sole of its reality and value. There was a disposition when the descriptions to the great Fair were coming, to whip in certain classes of boys and employments.

The hotel keepers stigmatized, we remember, as not having contributed to the fund. But the significance of the vast sum realized that it was a free gift. With what assurance could a compulsory contribution forced loan, have been regarded? would then have been no indication of real sympathy. So in the present case, if there should be any coercion applied, there may be money, indeed, but there will be no sign of free will to save money; and that free will is the important thing, because it shows the spirit which makes the saving money serviceable to the cause.

The movement has been for long begun by women, but it is one in which we all have a common interest, and in which every truly loyal person will co-operate. The poor are doubly aided by the large prices consequent upon wild speculation which always accompanies great wars. Let us remember that, to others, to our country, ourselves, begins at home.—Harper's Weekly

ROBBERY.—The Bee says: On Monday evening last the saloon of Waring, in Washington, was entered by some thief or thieves, who made off with some $60 which was in the drawer, dispatching all the champagne which occasion called for. About one ago the same place was robbed of a sum of money and some books, the same evening the books were returned; a fact which would seem to indicate that the same person was engaged in the two robberies. Mr. Waring did not hear any noise in the house, but he heard his dogs barking and thinks it must have been between twelve and two o'clock when his premises were thus unceremoniously visited.

IMMENSE MOUNTAIN SCHOONER.—On Saturday last a freight-wagon was turned out of the shop of Paul Webber, on A street, Marysville, which weighed six thousand pounds, registered for twenty-five thousand pounds. It was built for William Johnson, and is intended for the Washoe trade, over the Henness Pass Road.

AN OASIS.—A correspondent of the Mendocino Herald writes from Eel river, May 12th, as follows

Already numerous herds of cattle are coming into these mountains, to fatten on clover that is so thick and high as to be difficult traveling through. Why not send up the starving herds of Sacramento Valley here? Half a million acres of mountain pasturage is now free from the interference of the Indians, and ten or twelve days' travel would place them literally speaking "in clover."

PURE HONESTY.—A Sandwich Island paper gives the following example of native honesty: A native Hawaiian, while coming into town over the Palama road, picked up a package containing between thirty and forty dollars in coin. Instead of quietly putting it into his pocket, he fastened it to a pole, and went through the streets of the city inquiring if any one had a parcel of money. A foreigner who met him asked the reason why he did not appropriate it to his own use, or whether any body saw him pick it up.—He answered, no, no one saw him but God, and he knew it would be wrong to do so.

THE FOLSOM LAND CASE.—An order was entered in the United States District Court on Thursday, directing the filing of the mandate of the United States Supreme Court, affirming the decree of the United States District Court, which approves the survey of John C. Hays, United States Surveyor General, of the Rio de los Americanos Rancho, commonly known as the Leidesdorff Grant, and on which the town of Folsom is situated.

BALLAD.

Sally Ann is worth a million,
Mary Jane is very fair;
Sally Ann is not a beauty,
But she is a millionaire.

Mary Jane is very handsome,
Splendid eyes and glorious hair;
Sally Ann—they say she's homely,
But her fortune—that is fair.

Beter Blair is quite a genius,
Poet, artist, scholar rare;
And the heiress and the beauty
Both admire this Peter Blair.

Sally deats upon his sonnets,
Mary compliments his air;
Yet for neither of the maidens
Seemeth he at all to care.

But the truth is far from either;
Both are much mistaken there;
I could tell them of a maiden
Who is more to Peter Blair;

Who has neither wealth nor beauty
In excess of something higher,
Something worthier, not so fleeting,
More akin to heavenly fire;

Who has both, and something worthier,
Wealth of mind, a fortune rare;
And the very soul of beauty,
Making luminous the air.

All sound her, dwells within her
Heart, and kindness everywhere
Wins the hearts of all about her,
Wins the love of Peter Blair.

A FEMALE SOLDIER BOY.—Mary Ellen Wise, the bold soldier boy that turned out to be a woman, will leave this city to day for her home in Huntingdon county, Indiana. She has been in the army nearly two years, has carried her musket and punished hard tack like a veteran. She gave us a little outline of her history, saying she would be eighteen next February. She enlisted in April, 1861, in consequence of a home made unpleasant by a step mother, and joined Company I, in the Thirty-fourth Indiana, in which company she had a brother. With the regiment she went to Pittsburg Landing, took part in the battle of Shiloh, was on Corinth's bloody field, but escaped unhurt there, to be severely wounded at Stone River by a musket ball in the side. From there by hospital boat to Louisville, where she went into a hospital and had her sex discovered the first time the wound was dressed. After weary months of pain she was once more well, and was sent home; but she, feeling it was no home, staid only a week in the neighborhood, and went to Indianapolis, where she re-enlisted in Company A of the Sixty-fifth Wisconsin. On her way here with the regiment she was recognized by one of the train guards, who saw her in the hospital at Louisville, and she was arrested by the military conductor and sent to Colonel Horner, Provost Marshal. She says she likes to be a soldier first-rate, and went in because she loved the Union and was anxious to fight for it. The girl, erratic as her course may have been, has patriotism enough to put to shame the deeds of some of our so-called Union men. Browned with sun and wind, with short hair worn boy's fashion, and in uniform, there is nothing much to betray her sex except the head.

The BAR-ROOM is also large, and will at all times be supplied with the choicest brands of WINES and LIQUORS that can be procured in the San Francisco market.

THE boy Wm. Hawkins, who obtained $140 in contributions at the Metropolitan Theater, San Francisco, on the occasion of the sale of the sack of flour, by representing that he lost a leg during McClellan's campaign in Virginia, was arrested on Monday for obtaining money under false pretences.

"My son, would you suppose the Lord's prayer could be engraved in a space no larger than the area of a half dime?"

"Well, yes, father, if a half dime is as large in everybody's eyes as it is in yours, I think there would be no difficulty in putting it in four times."

An old sailor, finding a corked bottle floating on the sea, opened it with the soliloquy:

"Rum I hope; gin I think; tracts, by jingo!" and then threw them back into the water.

"Was your son engaged before he went to the war?" asked Mrs. Rugg of a neighbor.

"No, but he has been several times engaged since," was the answer.

"Mrs. Dobson, where is your husband?"

"He's dying, marm, and I don't wish anybody to disturb him."

A very considerate woman that.

WHEN Hagin complained that the times were so hard he could not keep his nose above water, his wife told him it would be above water more if he kept it above whiskey less.

SCOLDING, says a good-for-nothing old bachelor, is the pepper of matrimony, and the ladies are the pepper-boxes.
