LEWIS CASS, SECRETARY OF THE WAR DE PARTMENT.

Among the few distinguished individuals of the nation, who have escaped the missiles of party during the recempolitical conflict, the present secretary of war stands conspictions. His brilliant and commanding talents—his anspotted integrity and eminent national gervices, all combined, trend to have raised for him a shield of defence, alike potent against the bitterness of party hate and the reckless spirit rivalsy and ambition. Indeed, a very respectable portion of the party opposed to the administration of which his an anament, have been forced publicly to concede that their opposition extends not to him. This high tribute to talents and public virtue, is in the present distance amply discoved; as a hasty and brief recurrently some distinguishing events in his past life may serve to illustrate. Governor Cass is emphatically a self-mag may, he was brin, we believe, in the state of New Hamplaire, but emigrated soon after completing his education, to the then mat to youthful enterprize and ambition, the new state of Oh o here, for several years, he puraded with eminent success and marked ability, the profession of the law; and gave oarly pressage of those powers of mind, which eventually raised him to this present elevated position of the public view, and as a profound jurist and accomplished statesman. The same genious and industry evinced in the humbler but intricate controversies of individuals, readily enabled him to extend his metalestual grasp to those great topics of general bluerest, involving the principles, the policy, and the rights extend his intellectual grasp to those great topics of general increst, involving the principles, the policy, and the right of nations.

After filling, several important stations which he was called by the people of Ohio and by the general government at the declaration of war in 1912, he enrolled him self-times the banness of his country, seed to the banness of his country, seed to the banness of his country, seed to the banness of his country and the self-time in in the country of the self-time in view of their comparative results in the same of humans harpheese, the civic glory of the stateman issuanch to be presented to the original stateman issuanch to be presented to the crimen and the same spirits who like governor. Case, at the period to which we have referred, soluntarily religioushed home and its governments, the general of which and its concomitant bleaving to suffer, and perchance to bleed in defence of their insulted contry, deserve, richly deserve the honor and everlanting grantende of that country, and all its well-wishers.

From the period of his entering the army to the present, the career of governor Case has been one of uncommon usefulness and ectobrity. He it was, through a subordinate of his country, and with the troops under his command, achieved the first of that glorious senses of triumphs, (so nobly crowned by general Jackson at New Orleans,) which shed a new lustre upon the American character, and elevated a new lastre upon the American character, and elevated our country in the eyes of the world. Had his counsels been adhered to, his spirit predominated, as American people never would have had occasion to blush at the disgraceful surresider at Detroit. The brave and honorable part which heafterwards bore in the struggles upon the frontier, and especially in the defeat of general Porter and Tecumsch at the river Thames, are matters of history, and need

His subsequent appointment as governor of Michigan, though far helow his intrinsic deserts, was most fortunate for that territory. Under his judicious and efficient administration, it has risen to a fact of unexampled prosperity, and is soon to take its place as a sovereign member of the union. Is the selection of governor Cass to fill the important place in his cabinet of secretary of the war department, president Jackson has afforded another proof of that discernment and discretion, which his enemies have uniformly affected to deep him.

Rigid and punctual in his business labits, plain and affishle in his manners, with powers of mind, which groups as it were, by intuition, every subject to which they are applied, united to various and extensive acquirements, which stamp him as the ripe scholar, Lewis Cass (we disparage no one in saying it) has no superior in the present able cabinet, and few, if any, in the dation; and as he is yet in the prime of his life and usefulness, we feel that we hazard nothing in the declaration, that the measure of his fame is not yet full.

*On 19th July, 1612, colonel Cass, with a detachment of two hundred and eighty men, attacked with great bravery, the advanced pasts of the British army, near Malden, and succeeded in driving them back upon the chain body.
