OCTOBER'S FEATURED TEXT

"Calcutta: Past and Present" by Kathleen

Blechynden, published in 1905, lays before the reader a vivid picture in lucid style of the colonial Calcutta, then capital of British India, from its initial days at the time of Job Charnock till the time of Warren Hastings, the first governor-general of India. Adorned with rare engravings and photographs, this work was written by a British lady from a somewhat unusual perspective. In the author's own words, "My aim has not been to give any account of the great deeds by which the men of old Calcutta laid the foundations of the British Empire in the East, but rather to try and depict the lives they led,

Help us transcribe some of the millions of digitized pages of records in the National Archives Catalog. Transcription is an important way for us to improve search results and increase accessibility to our historical records.

Getting Started

1. Create a username and password in the National Archives Catalog.
2. Login from any transcription page or on the login page.
3. Start a Transcription Mission, check out More Records, or create your own mission by doing a keyword search for your favorite topics.
4. Select the "View/Add Contributions" button located below all images in the catalog.
5. Select the "Transcribe" tab for the page of the record you would like to transcribe.
6. Select the "Edit" button and remember to save your work frequently.

Check out this example transcription page and Citizen Contribution Policy for more information.

Notes

This copy of Joseph Plumb Martin's Revolutionary War experiences was created from a microfilm version of a copy in the Library of Congress. All pages have been graphically altered as possible to produce the most readable possible version. In some cases, illegible words have been replaced with typical versions. In most cases, if a page is enlarged, it makes it easier to read.

The book has been OCR'd, but this will be of minimal usefulness for searches since the text was in such poor condition. This might make it useful to select a copy text for use in another document, but the user should expect to have to edit the results.

Modern authors who have annotated an edited version of Martin's text depart from the original in minor and not unexpected ways. Differences are mostly punctuation, capitalization, reduction in sentence length, and spelling. However, one such omitted a paragraph of text from the original.

The intent of this effort has been to make available a digital version of the original version of Martin's book as published in 1830.

Have patience just to hear me out;

And I'll tell you what I've been about.

THE heroes of all Histories, Narratives, Adventures, Novels and Romances, have, or are supposed to have, some root from which they sprang. I conclude, then, that it is not altogether inconsistent to suppose that I had parents too. I shall not undertake to trace my pedigree (like the Welsh) some thousand years beyond the creation; but just observe, that my father was the son of a "substantial New England farmer," (as we Yankees say,) in the then Colony, but now State of Connecticut, and county of Windham. When my father arrived at puberty he found his constitution too feeble to endure manual labor, he therefore directed his views to gaining a livelihood by some other means. He, accordingly, fitted himself for, and entered as a student in Yale College, sometime between the years 1750 and '55. My mother was likewise a "farmer's daughter;" her native place was in the county of New-Haven, in the same State. She had a sister, married and settled in the vicinity of the College, who often

Why EB1911 ?

This category contains articles that incorporate some text from the Encyclopædia Britannica Eleventh Edition, which is in the public domain. Some articles excerpt the text in its original form; others include significant rewordings of excerpts. Articles that have rewritten an excerpt completely do not appear here.

Articles that incorporate text from the Encyclopædia should provide the citation by adding `{{EB1911}}` (preferably with a `wstitle` parameter with the Wikisource article name, if one exists) to the article, which will also put the article in this category.
