IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF CORNELIUS H. HANFORD, UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

AUGUST 6, 1912.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following REPORT.

[To accompany H. Res. 576.]

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration House resolution 576 report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution proposed by this committee which accompanies this report be agreed to.

The resolution (H. Res. 576) was carefully considered by the committee, and under the authority conferred by this resolution James M. Graham, Walter I. McCoy, and Edwin W. Higgins were appointed the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and were directed as such subcommittee to inquire into the alleged misconduct of Cornelius H. Hanford, United States judge for the western district of the State of Washington, and to report the result of their investigation to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report of the subcommittee giving account of the acts and doings of the same is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

The committee after having carefully considered the report of the subcommittee agreed to the recommendations reached by the subcommittee, and adopted the same as the conclusions of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Impeachment is designed to remove unworthy persons from office. The officer convicted in an impeachment proceeding is nevertheless subject to indictment, trial, and punishment in the proper court, for any crime he may have committed. Impeachment is the method adopted for the removal from and disqualification to hold office. The Constitution provides that, "the party convicted" (in an impeachment case) "shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law" for his crimes. It was said by Mr. Bayard in the trial of Blount that—

> Impeachment is a proceeding purely of a political nature. It is not so much deisgned to punish the offender as to secure the State. It touches neither his person nor his property, but simply divests him of his political capacity. (Wharton's State Trials, 263.)

If this judge has been guilty of any crime the courts which administer the criminal law are the proper tribunals to try and to punish him.

The committee recommend that the testimony taken by the subcommittee in this case be printed and transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States for his consideration and use to the end that if any crimes have been committed against the laws of the United States the Department of Justice may take cognizance of the same and see that the guilty parties are tried and punished in the appropriate tribunal.

The committee has considered the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1912.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives.

DEAR JUDGE CLAYTON: The President has received a telegram from Judge Hanford, United States district judge, Western District of Washington, tendering his resignation as United States judge and stating that a letter follows. Before acting upon this resignation the President asks me to inquire of you whether the acceptance of the resignation would in any way interfere with the plans of the committee engaged in the investigation of the charges against Judge Hanford. I shall be very glad to have a statement of the attitude of your committee and of your own recommendations in the premises.

Very truly, yours,

[SEAL.] GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

To this letter, in accordance with the direction of the committee, the chairman made the following reply:

AUGUST 3, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of July 23 came duly to hand. Reply thereto has been delayed for the purpose of having the subcommittee, composed of Messrs. Graham, McCoy, and Higgins, to return from Seattle, Wash., to Washington, D. C., and report to the Committee on the Judiciary the result of their investigation of the charges against Judge Hanford. The Committee on the Judiciary gave consideration to this matter and has directed me to say that the acceptance of the resignation of Judge Hanford would not in any way interfere with the plans of the committee which has heretofore been engaged in the investigation of the charges against Judge Hanford. There appears to be no good reason why the resignation of Judge Hanford should not be accepted. The committee will submit to the House of Representatives the recommendation that the testimony taken in the investigation of the alleged misconduct of Judge Hanford be forwarded to you for your consideration and use so that your department may take cognizance of any infractions of the criminal laws of the United States which said testimony may disclose or tend to disclose.

Yours, very truly,

HENRY D. CLAYTON, Chairman.

It appeared to the committee that there was no good reason why the resignation of the judge should not be accepted. And it appears to the committee that the further prosecution of the impeachment proceedings is inadvisable. Among the reasons for this conclusion may be stated in substance the reasons assigned by the subcommittee:

(1) The chief good which successful impeachment proceedings could effect would be the removal of Judge Hanford from the bench. That good his resignation accomplished.

(2) The record of the evidence shows that he is 64 years old his next birthday, and hence not entitled to retire on pay. Therefore his resignation brings him no emolument or reward and involves no expenditure of public money.

(3) The committee do not think it necessary or advisable to pursue the impeachment further merely for the purpose of making him ineligible to hold office in the future, as his age and the circumstances disclosed by the testimony render such a contingency highly improbable.

(4) Bringing the witnesses from Seattle and vicinity to Washington, a distance of over 3,000 miles, to prosecute an impeachment proceeding before the Senate would involve an expenditure approximating $70,000. This expenditure of public money could not be justified in this case where the judge is now out of office and doubtless will never again be appointed to office.

The committee recommend that the following resolution be agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of and action under House resolution 576.

Resolved further, That the testimony taken by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary under the authority conferred by House resolution 576 be printed as a part of this report and transmitted by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the Attorney General for his consideration and with the recommendation that the Department of Justice take cognizance thereof, and take whatever action may be deemed advisable in case said testimony discloses or tends to disclose any infractions of the laws of the United States.

REPORT TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 576 TO TAKE THE TESTIMONY IN THE MATTER OF THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT OF CORNELIUS H. HANFORD, UNITED STATES JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives.

On Thursday, June 13, 1912, the Committee on the Judiciary adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That James M. Graham, Walter I. McCoy, and Edwin W. Higgins, members of this committee, be appointed the subcommittee by virtue of the authority given under House Resolution No. 576, passed by the House of Representatives on June 13, 1912, authorizing an inquiry into the alleged misconduct of Cornelius H. Hanford, United States judge for the Western District of the State of Washington, and that the said subcommittee shall have all the powers authorized by said resolution hereinbefore named.

In pursuance of said resolution, the subcommittee left Washington on June 21, 1912, and reached Seattle the evening of June 25. Wednesday, June 26, was spent in making the necessary preliminary arrangements for proceeding with the hearings, and on Thursday, the 27th, the taking of testimony was begun in a court room of the Federal Building in Seattle, and was concluded on Monday, July 22, 1912. The subcommittee sat every day between those days except Sundays and the Fourth of July, making in all 21 days of actual work, including several evening sessions. Two hundred and three witnesses were examined and 3,291 typewritten pages of testimony were taken, not including 94 exhibits which were made part of the record, and not including 138 collateral exhibits which were received tentatively by the subcommittee and taken back for examination by the members of the whole committee and for such use as the committee might desire to make of them.

The subcommittee had almost, but not quite, completed the taking of testimony when, at the morning session on Monday, July 22, counsel representing Judge Hanford asked for a conference with the members of the subcommittee, and the request was granted. They then informed the subcommittee that Judge Hanford had concluded to send his resignation to the President. Thereupon the subcommittee went into executive session to consider what its course of action would be, and after careful consideration of the premises unanimously reached the conclusion not to proceed with the taking of further testimony unless directed to do so by this committee; and the chairman of the subcommittee was directed to wire Chairman Clayton for instructions. After having ascertained that Judge Hanford's resignation was, in fact, forwarded to President Taft, the chairman of the subcommittee wired to Chairman Clayton as follows:

JULY 22, 1912.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Judge Hanford has just now forwarded his resignation to the President. We are not quite done taking testimony, but nearly so. The subcommittee unanimously favor discontinuing the taking of further testimony. Wire advice immediately.

And in a short time he received the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 22.

Yes; I advise you to take no further testimony.

The subcommittee then reconvened in open session, and the chairman publicly announced that, owing to the resignation of Judge Hanford, the hearings would be discontinued, and the subcommittee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

The subcommittee was moved to recommend the discontinuance of the hearings by a number of reasons, among which might be mentioned the following:

(1) The chief good which successful impeachment proceedings could effect would be the removal of Judge Hanford from the bench. This good his resignation accomplished.

(2) The record of the evidence shows he is only 64 years old his next birthday, and hence not entitled to retire on pay. Therefore his resignation brings him no emolument or reward and involves no expenditure of public money.

(3) The subcommittee did not think it necessary or wise to pursue the matter to a final conclusion merely for the purpose of making him ineligible to hold office in the future, as his age and the circumstances disclosed by the testimony render such a contingency highly improbable.

(4) Bringing the witnesses from Seattle and vicinity to Washington, a distance of over 3,000 miles, to prosecute an impeachment proceeding before the Senate, would involve an expenditure approximating $70,000.

There were other reasons suggested and discussed, but those given above were deemed by the subcommittee sufficient to justify them in recommending the discontinuance of the hearings.

The subcommittee further reports that Judge Hanford was represented during the hearings by able and learned counsel, namely, Mr.

E. C. Hughes, Mr. Harold Preston, and Mr. C. W. Dorr, and that they were given wide latitude in the examination of all the witnesses and in the production of evidence on behalf of Judge Hanford, so that the record contains such evidence in defense as counsel desired to offer as well as the incriminating evidence, and on the whole record the subcommittee respectfully suggests that it clearly appears that Judge Hanford's usefulness as a Federal judge is over; that his personal and judicial conduct disqualify him for that position and that this committee recommend that his resignation be accepted.

The subcommittee respectfully submits herewith a complete transcript of the testimony taken and originals or true copies of all exhibits offered and admitted in evidence, and recommend that this committee have the same printed.

They also submit certain documents designated as collateral exhibits which were not made a part of the record because they were not considered relevant, but which were taken along by the subcommittee for such further use as this committee might think fit to make of them But the subcommittee does not recommend that they be printed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES M. GRAHAM,
Chairman.

WALTER I. McCOY.
EDWIN W. HIGGINS.

TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY.

BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1912.

Present: Hon. James M. Graham (chairman), Hon. Edwin W. Higgins, Hon. Walter L. McCoy.

The committee was called to order at 10.30 o'clock a. m. by Mr. Graham (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

The committee is present this morning in pursuance of resolution No. 576 of the House of Representatives, which I will read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is requisite concerning the official misconduct of Cornelius H. Hanford, United States judge for the Western District of the State of Washington, and say whether said judge has been in a drunken condition while presiding in court; whether said judge has been guilty of corrupt conduct in office; whether the administration of said judge has resulted in injury and wrong to litigants in his court and others affected by his decisions; and whether said judge has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached.

And in reference to this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and stenographer, if necessary, and to appoint and send a subcommittee whenever and wherever it may be necessary to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee while so employed shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee and the process and orders of said subcommittee and shall attend the sitting of the same as ordered and as directed thereby, and that the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

In pursuance of the authority given the Committee on the Judiciary by virtue of that resolution the whole committee, on Thursday, June 13, 1912, took the following action:

Mr. Webb offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That James M. Graham, Walter I. McCoy, and Edwin W. Higgins, members of this committee, be appointed the subcommittee by virtue of the authority given under House resolution number five hundred and seventy-six passed by the House of Representatives on June thirteenth, nineteen hundred and twelve, authorizing an inquiry into the alleged misconduct of Cornelius H. Hanford, United States judge for the Western District of the State of Washington, and that the said subcommittee shall have all the powers authorized by said resolution hereinbefore named.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy taken from the minutes of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, United States, for Thursday, June 13, 1912.

J. J. SPEIGHT,
Clerk, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, United States.

This has been verified by affidavit.

Resolution No. 576 of the House of Representatives was received in evidence and marked "Exhibit 1."

The resolution authorizing the appointment of the subcommittee, dated June 13, 1912, was received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 2."

The CHAIRMAN. In pursuance of the resolutions just read, the subcommittee is present this morning and ready for business. We labor under some disadvantage, being entire strangers here, and not knowing very well how to find witnesses and arrange for beginning. We used the telephone, and hope to have some witnesses here this morning. We are under the further misfortune of not knowing whether they are here or not, but I am informed that by 11 o'clock we will be able to have a round-up of witnesses, and probably proceed with the production of testimony.

I am sorry to say that a very tardy notice was sent Judge Hanford. We had hoped that it would reach him last night, and I understand it did.

The notice to Judge Hanford was received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 3," reading as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., June 26, 1912.

DEAR SIR: The subcommittee of the Committee of the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., will convene to-morrow, June 27, in the court room, Federal Building, in Seattle, for the purpose of taking testimony under House resolution 576, a copy of which is attached hereto. You can, of course, be present at the session of the subcommittee, in person and by counsel, if you so desire.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES M. GRAHAM, Chairman.

HON. C. H. HANFORD,
Seattle, Wash.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that the judge is here this morning. Are there any appearances of counsel that should be entered at this time?

Mr. PRESTON. Gentlemen of the committee, I am a member of the bar of this city, and my name is Preston.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your full name?

Mr. PRESTON. Harold Preston.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any firm connection that you would wish to go into the record—any particular firm?

Mr. PRESTON. I am a member of the firm of Preston & Thorgrimson. Mr. E. C. Hughes, also a member of the Seattle bar, of the firm of Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey, and myself have been requested by the Seattle Bar Association to appear before your body to represent Judge Hanford at this hearing. That selection of the bar association proving satisfactory to Judge Hanford, we are here this morning in that capacity. You will see that our employment is not the ordinary employment, and there are two sides to it—one side in addition to the ordinary. The bar association is just like you gentlemen are in this matter; they are anxious for a full investigation. They would deem it their duty to assist you, if you desire any assistance in any way. Therefore we are able to express to you this morning our desire to be one of cooperation and not hostility. You gentlemen labor, as the chairman has stated, under the disadvantage of being strangers here. The case, or the proceedings, has aspects also that do not pertain to the ordinary case in court with which lawyers have to do, in that there are no charges, there is no complaint served requiring answer and notifying the person interested of what he is expected to meet, and I take it, perhaps, that you gentlemen do not know yourselves and are here to find out and, finding out, to make a thorough investigation. That being so, it has occurred to us that it would not be taken amiss by you gentlemen if we were to call your attention to some things that have happened here that had been made the ground of public criticism of Judge Hanford.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean this by way of an opening statement?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I hardly see what good that would do.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not know that I will have you understand that as an opening statement, but I thought it best to call your attention to some cases concerning which criticism has been made recently, and with the idea of suggesting to you gentlemen something in aid of your work in investigating those cases if you should desire. That statement would liken itself somewhat to an opening statement, but that is not the purpose of it so much as the purpose to call attention to this case, and I will tell you that we are here in this case in the capacity in which we have acted. You will be able to find the facts. For instance, take the Olsson case——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The Chair thinks he speaks the sentiments of the committee when he states that it might help if you would submit a written statement covering the points you speak of. I do not see how it would help us to fill the record at this time with matter of that sort. As we go on doubtless points will develop which we may deem it worth while to investigate, and I hardly think it would be wise for us to fill the record with a statement of that kind, which we are, as a committee, to examine first. If you wish to submit a statement in writing to that effect the committee will give it careful investigation and determine whether it will go into the record.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is it your purpose to suggest to the committee at some time during the investigation the names of witnesses you wish to have us subpœna?

Mr. PRESTON. I expect to do that, and I was going to refer to that among other matters in my statement to you. Take the Olsson case, which is the most prominent matter. We will have that during the day for you if you desire it in printed pamphlet form, the complete record in that case. I take it that would be of assistance to you. There are other cases that we will get to assist you in in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, do you approve of the suggestion the Chair has made in the record?

Mr. PRESTON. Of course we have to bow to your ruling in it, although it would not be satisfactory, because we have had but little time and we have had no written statement nor an opportunity to prepare one.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you will have plenty of time. If you submit that statement, the printed record will be under the control of the committee, and even though it does not come in at this time we can have it printed at the beginning of the hearing if we deem it proper to do so.

Are there any other appearances?

Mr. HUGHES. I would make this suggestion, Mr. Chairman: To comply with your request at as early a date as it may be convenient to do so to submit in written form any statement of the facts relative to the subject matters of inquiry for your assistance, it might be helpful to us if at some time at your early convenience you would indicate to us the subjects that have been brought to your attention about which you would be glad to have an explanatory statement from us. That may assist us; otherwise we are groping when we are offering an explanatory statement of facts to you.

The CHAIRMAN. In that regard, Mr. Hughes, I might suggest that there was filed with the committee a number of charges—I think I may call them so—by Mr. John H. Perry, of this city. In my office at Washington I exhibited those to Mr. Dorr, of your city, who then claimed to represent Judge Hanford. There were some other papers then in my hands in the nature of charges, all of which were submitted to Mr. Dorr, so that I assume that Judge Hanford is not in entire ignorance of some of the charges that it will be our duty to investigate.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Dorr just arrived from the East and the only opportunity for conference with him has occurred this morning in this court room within the last half hour, and I think it is correct to say that Judge Hanford has had no opportunity to confer with him. He gave us a brief statement of the facts that you have just made known to us. Could Mr. Preston and I have an opportunity to see those charges?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Dorr, at the request of members of the bar here, did represent Judge Hanford, and his representation to you that he was representing him was correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not doubt that.

Mr. HUGHES. And he doubtless would be representing him here now if he had been present in the city at the time. He has just arrived and there has been no opportunity to confer with him.

Mr. HIGGINS. Have you seen the Perry affidavit?

Mr. HUGHES. We have not, and we have had no information except such as we have gained from the public press.

The CHAIRMAN. I regret that we have but one copy of it, but that copy is at your service, and it might be desirable while you have it if you would have a number of copies made of it so that we might have the original back as soon as convenient.

Mr. HUGHES. We will be very glad to do that. What I had reference to more particularly was that it has been intimated in the public press that certain criticisms were made respecting certain cases, as Mr. Preston has already suggested. If there are any other cases brought to your attention which you desire to inquire about, I think we can help you by making a statement of the facts, and I think I need not assure you that if we make a statement of the facts it will be a fair and impartial one.

Mr. HIGGINS. You say you appear, as I understand it, at the request of the local bar association.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would suggest that you furnish to the reporter a copy of the resolution which appointed you and your association.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir [handing copy of resolution to reporter, which is marked "Exhibit No. 4," reading as follows]:

Whereas charges have been made in Congress against the personal character and official conduct of Judge C. H. Hanford; and

Whereas the Committee on Judiciary of the House of Representatives has been directed to inquire and report whether the action of the House is necessary concerning the same; and

Whereas the board believes that the members of this association have the highest respect for Judge Hanford's personal character and the utmost confidence in his integrity; and

Whereas the board believes that the charges are unfounded in fact and is desirous of lending Judge Hanford such aid and assistance as is in its power in securing a thorough and impartial inquiry on the part of the said Committee on Judiciary of said charges: now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Board of Trustees of the Seattle Bar Association, That a committee of three members of this association, consisting of E. C. Hughes, Esq.; Harold Preston, Esq.; and such other persons as they may select, be appointed for the purpose of rendering Judge Hanford, professionally, such aid and assistance in the matter of said inquiry as is in their power.

Be it further resolved, That said committee of three be empowered and requested to call to their aid and assistance such other members of this association as in its judgment may be deemed necessary to accomplish said purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. In further answer to your question, Mr. Hughes, with reference to special and particular cases, I assume that you know, and that it is generally known, that the matter of disfranchisement of one Olsson is one of the cases particularly mentioned.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter comes before the committee largely through a copy of a petition for a rehearing, and indeed a copy of the entire record, I think, with the exception of the ruling on the petition for the rehearing is before us. With that I assume you are familiar. You have had access to the record?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I might also add at this time a word as to what we conceive to be our duty here. The committee and the subcommittee is of opinion that we are largely in the nature of a commission, or that if we were a single individual that we would be a commissioner merely to take testimony. We are not to report any conclusions, and our instructions are, and our duty is, to find and report all the relevant evidence. We are not limited to any specific charges that have been or may be made. It is our duty, and it will be our policy, to find all the relevant facts and report them to the whole committee, and we hope to be able to do that, as it is our duty to do it, without either fear or favor or prejudice.

Is there anything further in the way of preliminaries, gentlemen? If there is not, we could possibly expedite matters by taking a short recess to find out, as a famous statesman once said, "where we are at," and in the meantime you can have the Perry charges. I would suggest that you have copies made as soon as convenient in order that we might have the original back.

Thereupon the committee, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., took a recess until 11.30 a. m., at which latter hour the chairman continued the recess until 2 o'clock p. m. the same day.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Mr. HUGHES. May it please the committee, I would like at this time to announce for the purpose of the record that Mr. C. W. Dorr, of the firm of Dorr & Hadley, will be associated with Mr. Preston and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will make a note of that. The committee wants to acknowledge its indebtedness to counsel for their generous aid in assisting the committee in getting the record of the court in the Olsson matter in such shape, so far as the record is concerned, that no witness will be necessary. With their assistance we have prepared a printed statement of the court record and all that transpired, or nearly all that transpired, in connection with the Olsson matter, except the testimony which was given. The printed statement we will now give to the official reporter of the committee, as part of the record, subject, however, at any time before it leaves for Washington to be printed, to any corrections so as to make it conform to the official court record.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 5."

The official reporter of the committee was then duly sworn by the chairman.

Q. Was your testimony taken down in shorthand or in any way which you know of?—A. Not that I noticed.
Q Is your recollection clear now as to what you testified then?—A Yes.
Q State to the committee as nearly as you are able to do it what your testimony was on that occasion?—A I was asked whether I was attached to the Constitution of the United States or not, and I replied that the question I was asked by the examiner was if I was devotedly attached to the Constitution, to which I answered that I had no superstitious reverence for the Constitution, but expressed a willingness to abide and obey the laws and the Constitution of the United States.

Q If you said anything further, tell us what it was —A I was asked about if I was a member of any organization, and I replied I was a member of the Socialist Labor Party, and I was also asked if I was a member of an organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World, to which I replied that there was two organizations known by that name and that I at that time belonged to the one with headquarters at Detroit, Mich. I was also asked if I believed in organized government, to which I replied yes; I also was asked if I wanted to abolish political government, to which I replied yes, stating that political government would be useless when the Socialists established their industrial republic or industrial government; and that was about all.

Q. Were any questions asked you about the principles which the Socialist Labor Party stood for?—A. Not to my recollection

Q At that time did the Socialist Labor Party have a national platform adopted at a national convention?—A Yes, sir.

Q. Is that platform printed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you furnish the committee with a copy of it?—A I have a copy here—it is a copy taken from a paper—it is the only one I could get [producing document]

Q. The paper which you hand me purports to be the Socialist Labor Party platform for the year 1912; did it have a platform prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any of those earlier platforms?—A. I think I have a copy here.

Q. Speak up louder, Mr. Olsson.—A. I think I have a copy—no; I think one of my witnesses has one, Mr. Rush.

Q. If you can I wish you would produce it; we do not care where you get it from?—A. I have one; here is a copy of it [producing document].

Q. The clipping which you handed me seems to be taken from the Daily People.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A Socialist paper, I believe, published in———A. In New York City.

Q. In the city of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While the date line does not appear on the clipping, I see in the columns some news dispatch dated Cordova, Alaska, June 8, and I suppose then that this paper was dated about June 8, 1912.—A. Yes.

Q. The paper on its face shows that this was adopted by the national convention of the Socialist Party April 10, 1912.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend the convention?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where was that convention held?—A. New York City.

Document received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 7."

Q. The little folder you handed me purports to be the principles of the Socialist Labor Party for what year?—A. Adopted at the convention of 1904 and reaffirmed at the convention of 1908. I can procure you a real copy of the platform.

Q. The same one adopted in 1904 was reaffirmed or readopted in 1908, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, without reading this, is there any material change from the platform of 1904 and 1908 to the platform of 1912?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is quite short, and as my colleague suggests, I think it had better also go into the record.

Document received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 8."

Q. Are you in harmony with the principles of your party as enunciated in these platforms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you all the time since their adoption?—A. I became connected with the Socialist Party in 1905. Since that time I have been in harmony with its principles.

Q. What was your age when you left Sweden?—A. Twenty-one years.

Q. At that time were you associated with any Socialist organization?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you raised in the country or in a city?—A. In the city.

Q. How large a city?—A. Ten thousand inhabitants.

Q. What was the name of it?—A. Christianston.

Q. What was your education in your native country?—A. Public-school education.

Q. Are the schools there graded schools as they are here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many grades did you go through?—A. I went through the last grade.

Q. Corresponding with the eighth grade in our schools?—A. Yes, sir; the eighth grade.

Q. That was the entire extent of your school education?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any English instruction in Sweden?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you read and write English?—A. Yes.

Q. Where and when did you learn to speak and read and write English?—A. During my stay in this end—traveling in ships—sailing. ships.

Q. Had you any instructor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you learn it yourself?—A. I learned it myself.

Q. At the time you made your application to become a citizen, that is, when you took out your first papers, could you then read and write English?—A. Well, I could not read and write it as good as I can now—a little, I would say.

Q. How about reading it?—A. I could read fairly well.

Q. You stated then, as you have told us, that you were familiar with the principles of the Constitution of the United States.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you become familiar with them?—A. Through reading them.

Q. Do you remember in what you read them—what book was it that you found the Constitution in?—A. It was a book called the Constitution—entitled the "Constitution," I do not remember the author's name.

Q. What else did it treat of or deal with besides the Constitution of the United States; was it a history of the United States?—A. No; it was just a compilation of the Constitution with the various amendments and the Declaration of Independence, and so forth.

Q. With comments on those paragraphs?—A. Yes; and then it had a preface commenting on it.

Q. When did you begin that study?—A. Several years ago; I don't know exactly.

Q. Did you do that as a matter of curiosity, or did you do it in order to qualify yourself to become an American citizen?—A. I did it for the sake of knowledge and the desire to know.

Q. When you came to the United States was it your intention to remain here as long as you lived, or did you come with the intention of staying a while and then going back to your native country?—A. Well, I left my native land as a sailor, and I had no destination exactly. I just happened to get shipped this way and with no intention of staying anywhere except calling at ports; but finally I landed here, and conditions and so forth made it that I finally decided to stay.

Q. What is your present intention?—A. Of remaining.

Q. Making this your home during your life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the court proceeding for the purpose of revoking your naturalization papers, did you have an opportunity to explain your position with reference to the Constitution as fully as you cared to explain it?—A. No; I was asked questions and I did not ask permission to explain; I answered the questions asked me, that is all.

Q. Did the questions asked you enable you to explain your position fairly and fully?—A. Well, not fully, I would not say, but fairly, perhaps—not as fully as I should desire.

Q. Do your party platforms which have been offered in evidence and which have gone into the record, explain your views with reference to those matters as fully as you cared to explain them, or would you like to add to the statements in the platforms any explanation or statements as to the belief you entertained at that time or now?—A. I think the platform will explain sufficiently my views—that is, that the Socialist Party stands for organized government and that it teaches revolution—that is, not revolution in the vulgar sense, but a complete change in government to be obtained by the means provided in the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. I think the platform states that fully.

Q. What means do you refer to in that answer?—A. By ballot—the people casting their votes at the ballot in the regular way and then abolishing the Constitution and adopting the new—whatever they decide.

Q. Did you state at your examination that you believed in doing away with all political government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And substituting for it what?—A. Industrial government.

A. Now, can you without taking too long a time explain what you mean and what Socialists mean by industrial government as distinguished from political government?—A. Yes, sir; I can, and the platform will state it.

Q. That is fully stated in there?—A. Yes, sir; it is, and a couple of paragraphs can easily be read that will state it in more explicit language than I can state it.

Q. So that we can get the meaning of those two things as they are understood in the Socialist mind from there.—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that the Socialist mind or the Socialist labor mind?

A. That is the Socialist Labor Party.

Q. That is the difference within the Socialist mind?—A. That is the difference within the Socialist mind.

Q. And is that also the difference within the minds of the members of the Industrial Workers of the World?—A. Yes.

Q. That is entirely different from the Socialists.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are three different parties—the Industrial Workers of the World, the Socialist Labor, and the Socialist.—A. There are two Industrial Workers of the World—there are two organizations known by that name, one practically agrees with the Socialist Labor Party, and one does not.

Mr. GRAHAM. You agree with the one which entertains views like those of the Socialist Labor Party?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you, when you applied for your first papers and during the interval up to the time when you applied for your second papers and when you applied for your second papers, entertain any views on government in addition to those that were expressed in these platforms—any other, or different views?—A. When I applied for my first papers at that time I did not have—I had not become connected with the Socialist movement, but in the interval between getting my first and final papers I became a Socialist—or immediately after.

Q. So that at the time when you were admitted to citizenship the views which you entertained were those expressed substantially in these two platforms which have gone into evidence here?—A. Yes.

Q. And you did not entertain anything different in the way of views or anything additional?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is the whole of it?—A. That is the whole of it.

Q. Did you at any time during the proceeding to revoke your papers state that you were not attached to the principles of the Constitution?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time participated in any assemblage which was engaged in propagating doctrines hostile to the Government of the United States?—A. Well, that is all owing to what you mean by—no, not hostile to the Government—no, sir; no, sir; it all depends.

Q. I wish you would repeat your answer, and you may make any explanation you choose on that point.—A. Well, I mean I have participated in political meetings, of course criticising, say, the present administration, of the Republican administration, if that is what is meant by government, then, of course, the criticism was hostile, but if by government is meant the fundamental Constitution, and so on, of course it was not hostile in the way that it advocated changes legally allowed by the Constitution.

Q. Were you asked by Mr. Smith, John Speed Smith, whether you were devotedly attached to the principles of the Constitution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He used the word "devotedly," did he?—A. Devotedly.

Q. Do those two Socialist labor platforms that have been offered in evidence here and admitted, give an explanation of the Socialist Labor Party views in regard to the private ownership of property?—A. Yes, sir; fairly well.

Q. What do you mean by fairly well?—A. Well, they deal with it quite liberally. Of course, they can not in a short platform deal with all features of it, but it deals with it liberally.

Q. But in a general way.—A. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Do you wish to cross-examine the witness, Mr. Hughes?

Cross-examination:

Mr. HUGHES. Just a few questions.

Q. Mr. Olsson, when you filed your petition to become a citizen, you verified it in the manner required by the statute, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you were admitted to citizenship you took the oath required by the statute, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Subsequently you signed and swore to the petition of one Esslen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On April 12, 1910, asking to become a citizen of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were a witness for him on the 8th of August, 1910, in the superior court of Pierce County, Wash.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time when he applied to be made a citizen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were examined by the investigator of the Department of Commerce and Labor at that time, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that person?—A. Mr. Enslow, I think his name is.

Q. At that time did you not testify that you were not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, in answer to a question propounded to you by Mr. Enslow or by Mr. Smith?—A. I answered to the question "Devotedly attached" "No."

Q. Do you say now that the question as propounded to you by Mr. Enslow or Mr. Smith was whether you were devotedly attached or whether——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Or wasn't it the question were you attached—"Are you attached to the principles of the Constitution?"—A. It was if I was devotedly, and special emphasis was laid on the "devotedly."

Q. You were also one of the witnesses who signed the petition of one Stossell?—A. Yes.

Q. Also filed on the 12th of April, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You swore to the contents of that petition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That petition was in the form required by law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your oath was in the form required by law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the hearing of the application of Mr. Stossell on August 8, 1910, before the Superior Court of Pierce County you were a witness for Mr. Stossell, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you examined by Mr. Smith?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. John Speed Smith?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he not at that time ask you the question whether you were attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same?—A. He asked me the question you are saying, with the difference of the word "devotedly."

Q. You say he asked you if you were devotedly attached?—A. Devotedly attached to the Constitution.

Q. But with the exception of the use of the word "devotedly" the question otherwise was as I have previously put it to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you answered that you were not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was Stossell admitted to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Esslen admitted to citizenship?—A. No, sir.
Q. The court denied the admission to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. After you had given testimony and after the filing of your affidavit in support of his admission to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Didn't you testify, then, that Mr. Esslen entertained the same views that you did on public questions?—A. I do not recollect whether it was asked of me.
Q. He did, as a matter of fact, didn't he?—A. I beg pardon?
Q. He did entertain the same views as you did?—A. He entertained the same views as I did.
Q. He is a member of the same organization with you?—A. He belonged to the same organization that I did.
Q. You also signed the petition of Karl Oleson on June 11, 1910, to become a citizen of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You signed that as one of the witnesses and took the oath on that petition as prescribed by law?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you were a witness for Karl Oleson on the hearing of his petition on September 12, 1910, before the superior court of Pierce County?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. At that time you were examined by Mr. John Speed Smith, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He appeared as an examiner and an officer of the Department of Commerce and Labor?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he not at that time, among other things, ask you this question whether you were attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the well order and happiness of the same, using the words prescribed in the statute?—A. He asked me the question only that I would add that he asked me if I was devotedly attached.
Q. And you answered that you were not?—A. Not.
Q. Didn't he at the same time ask you how long you had entertained that opinion regarding the Constitution of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And your attitude towards the good order and happiness of the people?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you answered him, about three years?—A. Several years, sir.
Q. Several years?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you gave him a time prior to your own admission to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have stated that certain persons were present at the hearing before the district court of the United States at Tacoma in May last; now, is it not true that Mr. John Speed Smith was also present and was a witness against you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he not testify at that hearing that he had propounded the questions as I first propounded them to you, without the use of the word "deboted" or "devotedly"?—A. He testified to that—he said that.
Q. And after you gave testimony saying that the word "devotedly" was included in his questions didn't he take the stand again and deny your testimony to that effect?—A. I don't think he was on the stand after me.
Q. But the clerk of the superior court, Mr. McFarland, was called in rebuttal, wasn't he?—A. I think he was on the stand before me.

Q. Well, he was called in rebuttal at any rate, wasn't he——

Mr. GRAHAM. The witness would not understand what you mean, perhaps, by rebuttal.

The WITNESS. I don't understand rebuttal.

Mr. HUGHES. I refer to the clerk of the Superior Court of Pierce County, Mr. McFarland, who was clerk at the time when you were admitted to citizenship; was not he called as a witness after you had testified?

A. I do not recollect whether he was ahead of me or after me.

Q. But you do recall that he was called as a witness and testified?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do not you recollect that he disputed your testimony and testified to the effect that Mr. Smith had not used the word "devotedly" in his questions?—A. No, sir; he did nothing of the kind. He said that he did not know whether the word "devotedly" was used or not.

Q. Didn't he testify to the best of his recollection that the question was not propounded in that way and that he had never heard it so employed by Mr. Smith?—A. He said he did not know whether it was used or not; he could not recall.

Q. To make this examination brief, did not Mr. Enslow also give testimony in the hearing to cancel your certificate of admission to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In May last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And his testimony was substantially that of Mr. John Speed Smith?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not the judge, while you were upon the witness stand, ask you to explain the propaganda to which reference had been made either by you or one of your witnesses?—A. To explain the propaganda?

Q. Yes.—A. No, because I could not explain that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will you repeat your answer?

A. I mean I could explain it to them, but I was not asked.

Mr. HUGHES. Didn't he ask you to explain the propaganda to which you were pledged, as had been stated in the evidence of one of your witnesses?

A. He asked me to explain the principles I stood for—I think that was his question—the principles which I believed in.

Q. You were a believer in and have been an advocate, by public speech, of the doctrines of the Industrial Workers of the World, or a certain branch of them, have you not?—A. The Industrial Workers of the World, with headquarters at Detroit, Mich.; yes, sir. The socialists are the political industrial workers of the world.

Q. Were you not identified with and a believer in the doctrines of the Industrial Workers of the World who recently have made demonstrations at Tacoma and in Seattle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not that branch?—A. Not that branch.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you object if I ask him a question here?

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. Where is the branch located, or the headquarters located, which Mr. Hughes referred to?

A. Chicago.

Q. And are they affiliated in any way at all with the Detroit branch?—A. No, sir; they separated in 1908.

Q. How is that?—A. They separated in 1908, four years ago—they split.

Q. And what was the reason for the separation?—A. It was a disagreement as to tactics.

Q. As to what?—A. As to tactics.

Mr. HUGHES. What do you mean by that?

A. Well, the methods used in the organization and propaganda and so on.

Q. They differed as to methods but not as to their propaganda?—A. Yes, sir; they differed as to the methods and propaganda; that implies tactics.

Q. Have you any statement of the teachings of the Industrial Workers of the World whose cause you have espoused?—A. No; but I could get some, I could explain it.

Q. You have made speeches frequently on street corners and in halls, advocating the doctrines of the Industrial Workers of the World, or that branch of that order which you affiliate with?—A. No, not frequently, not being much of a speaker, but sometimes.

Q. Didn't you testify at this hearing that you believed that the Constitution of the United States should be and would be entirely overthrown by the adoption of the principles of government which the orders which you are affiliated with advocated?—A. No; the question was not exactly so. The question was if I believed in the overthrow of political government and I answered yes, because it would become useless.

Q. You did believe in the overthrow of political government?—A. Yes, political government.

Q. By that you understood that the Constitution, the present fabric of government, would be overthrown or abolished, didn't you?—A. Well, all features of the Constitution necessarily do not need to be overthrown, so far as I understand it.

Q. You believed and so testified at that time that by the adoption of your theory of government the present fabric of government would be entirely abolished and the Constitution obliterated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In all its parts?—A. Well, not the Constitution exactly need not be—well, I don't know—it would be for the people to decide. I can explain to you what I mean by political and industrial governments in a few words and we, perhaps, will understand each other.

Q. Do so.—A. In political government to-day the representatives are elected from geographical demarcations, whereas industrial government as we propose to establish it, the representatives instead of being elected from geographical demarcations will be elected from trades and industries—that the industries will be represented instead of the geographical boundary lines as to-day. That is the distinction between political and industrial government.

Q. Under your system there would be no Congress?—A. No Congress—there would be a Congress. I just stated that the representatives to the House of Representatives or Congress, whatever you want, would be elected from trades and industries—they are from the industries instead of, as to-day, from geographical districts.

Q. You expected to abolish courts—your theory of government?—A. Courts, very likely, would become useless, most of them anyway.

Q. Just another question: You said you opposed the government by the Republican Party—you equally oppose government by the Democratic Party, I suppose?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. When you were a witness for those three men who were applying for naturalization, were questions in regard to the Constitution apparently read to you?

A. Well, the examiner asked me the questions without reading them from any book, but just verbally.

Q. Did the man or the men who asked you the questions appear to be reading from any paper of any kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. They did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the questions, or was the question as to your devotion to the Constitution or adherence to it, asked of you in more than one form of question?—A. Not at the time I appeared as a witness; but when I received my final papers the question put to me then was if I was willing to abide and obey the Constitution and laws of the United States, to which I answered, "Yes, sir."

Q. I am referring to the time when you appeared as a witness for the other applicants.—A. No.

Q. Now, at any of those times was this question as to your adherence to the Constitution asked in more than one form?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was simply stated to you once and you just answered those questions once?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you become affiliated with the Industrial Workers of the World, the branch to which you belong?—A. I became affiliated in 1905, just after its organization.

Q. Was that before or after you took out your final papers?—A. That was after, the latter part of 1905 or perhaps the beginning of 1906; I can not say within a few weeks.

Mr. HUGHES. Just another question.

Q. You spoke of studying the Constitution from some work that contained the Constitution and the discussion of it; do you remember the author of that work?—A. No; I do not, but I think I can secure it. I know the library where I received it quite well.

Q. Was it one of the publications that you obtained after your connection with those branches of the Socialist Party which you identified yourself with?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it one of their publications?—A. No; it is a large volume.

Mr. MCCOY. When you say you got it out of a library, you mean——

A. Yes.

Q. A public library?—A. No, sir; the Socialist Labor Party library in Tacoma; but it is not a socialist publication.

Mr. DORR. I do not think Mr. Olsson understood the last question that was asked him by Mr. McCoy in regard to his naturalization.

Mr. GRAHAM. I don't understand you, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. DORR. I think Mr. McCoy's last question was asked in regard to his final papers, and the answer was as to his first papers. I think he meant his first papers, because he was not admitted until 1910.

Mr. MCCOY. First papers, it should be.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Olsson, if you were asked the question now, "Are you attached to the principles of the Constitution," what would your answer be?

A. I would answer, if by attached is meant a willingness to obey and abide the laws and the Constitution, "Yes."

Q. Well, what else have you in mind that the question might mean?—A. Well, according to the views of various persons—of Mr. Enslow, for instance—it seems to me something sacred; that it should remain forever as it is; that it should not be touched.

Q. Do you mean by that that it would be wrong or even reasonable to attempt peacefully to change the provisions of the Constitution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought the question as asked you included that element in it, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with that thought in your mind you refused to say that you were attached to it in that way?—A. Well, devotedly attached.

Q. Attached to it in such a way that it would be a crime almost to change or modify it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your political belief do you stand only for peaceful changes in the Constitution, or would you be willing to change it violently?—A. Only for peaceful.

Q. How do you stand with reference to changes in the Constitution by the use of force or violence?—A. We are opposed—explicitly opposed.

Q. And when you say peaceful changes, how would those changes be brought about, how effected according to your opinion?—A. By educating the people and propagation and the use of the ballot, changing them by the ballot, by legal way—amending it.

Q. Why did you not make those thoughts clear to the court at the time in question here?—A. Well, I was on the witness stand and I was asked questions, and I replied and I had no opportunity to express myself except in reply to questions as they were asked.

Q. If you had been asked those questions then would you have made answers similar to what you have made now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You entertained the same views then that you have expressed here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they the views of your party associates also?—A. Yes.

Q. You stated a while ago to Mr. Hughes that you thought you could get the platform of the branch of the Industrial Workers of the World, to which you are attached.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you produce it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was this platform which you can produce adopted?—A. In 1905.

Q. Has there been any adopted since?—A. No; the same one stands.

Q. Is it a political party, in the sense of having candidates and voting for them. A.—No; it is a union.

Q. It limits its activities to industrial affairs altogether?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the industrial labor party includes both politics, in the sense I have referred to, and industrial affairs also.—A. No; it is politics alone.

Q. Only political?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you now willing to abide by and obey the provisions and principles of the Constitution, subject to your right to peacefully advocate a change in the Constitution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you willing to obey it as it is until you and your associates can effect a peaceful change in it?—A. Yes, sir; and that is the thing we advocate.

Q. Are those part of your principles?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. Nothing further I would suggest to Judge Winsow and Mr. Nichols that if you have any questions that you wish to ask, and will reduce them to writing, that the committee will see that they are asked the witness.

Mr. WINSOW. I was going to suggest a question which might be answered in an instant.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not catch you.

Mr. WINSOW. I was going to suggest a question to the committee which you can ask.

Mr. GRAHAM. You may do it; if you wish to do it now you can, or you can wait until Mr. Hughes is through.

Mr. WINSOW. I will wait until Mr. Hughes has finished.

Mr. GRAHAM. Proceed, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. Just one question of the witness for the better identification of the particular order that he has referred to.

Q. Who is the head of the Industrial Workers of the World to which you belong?—A. Mr. Richter.

Q. Living where?—A. In Detroit, Mich.

Mr. WINSOW. I was going to suggest that the witness be permitted to explain the difference between the Industrial Workers of the World, that he belongs to, and the others that his attention has been called to.

The WITNESS. I can do it in an instant.

Q. You may explain to the committee the difference between the Industrial Workers of the World, with which you are affiliated, and the other branch of that organization with which you are not affiliated.—A. I will state the difference by first stating the similarity between them. The similarity is that they both propose to organize the workers in the shops, that is, to organize the wageworkers of the land, but the organization to which I belong advocates the use of the ballot, that is, advocates political action in the use of the ballot on election day, whereas the Industrial Workers, or the other faction, repudiates the ballot, and says it is no use to use the ballot, that is, to use direct action, as they call it.

Mr. GRAHAM. In other words, when the occasion requires it, they use violence?

A. Well, they have to interpret that; I can not answer for them.

Mr. GRAHAM. If there are no other questions to ask, I suggest that this witness be excused.

Mr. WINSOW. The counsel have done better than I could.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will ask you to produce the platform of the Detroit branch of the Industrial Workers of the World, and the reporter will insert it in the record.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 9" to be produced later.

GUSTAVE RUST, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM. State your name.

A. Gustave Rust.

Q. R-u-s-t?—A. Yes.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Tacoma, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Since 1898.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Carpenter.
Q. Has that been your occupation since manhood?—A. It has been my occupation since 1901, two years after I came to this State, because I could not get any work at my occupation and I had to do something else.
Q. What did you do when you quit carpenter work?—A. That is, before I started as carpenter I worked as a machinist's helper in the N. P. shops—the Northern Pacific shops at South Tacoma.
Q. Are you a married or single man?—A. I am a single man.
Q. Where were you born?—A. Germany.
Q. When did you come to America?—A. I came to America in 1884.
Q. When were you naturalized, if you were?—A. I was naturalized in Ramsey County, Minnesota, 1896.
Q. You are now a citizen?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you relatives in America, brothers or sisters, or a father or mother?—A. No; only sisters.
Q. Where do they live?—A. They live at Tacoma.
Q. Are you acquainted with Leonard Olsson?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him since 1905.
Q. Where were you and he then living?—A. Leonard Olsson was sailing up and down the coast and I seen him occasionally, and about a year after that he came and got a permanent job as longshoreman, or two years after, so we associated frequently after that.
Q. Are you associated with him in the political party to which he belongs?—A. The Socialist Labor Party; yes, sir.
Q. How long have you been associated with him in that party?—A. I have been a member of the Socialist Labor Party, you mean?
Q. Yes.—A. Since 1896.
Q. And are you connected in any way with the I. W. W.?—A. No, sir.
Q. With no branch of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Will you tell the committee, if you can, a few of the material points of difference between the Socialist Labor Party and the Socialist Party?—A. The material difference of the two organizations is the Socialist Labor Party and the Socialist Party is in the tactics of organization and in tactics of the press. The Socialist Labor Party believes in an organized or owned press—that the press shall be owned by the membership of the organization—whereas the Socialist Party has a privately owned press.
Q. Would you mention some of the papers which illustrate this difference. For instance, what paper or papers are privately owned that are Socialist papers?—A. That is, advocating the Socialist Party principles?
Q. Name some.—A. The Appeal to Reason is one.
Q. Is that privately owned?—A. That is privately owned.
Q. By whom?—A. Whalland & Co., of Loretta, Kans.
Q. And they operate the paper and run it, of course, for personal profit?—A. Like any other corporation; yes, sir.
Q. Do you know any other paper?—A. The Volkszeitung, in New York.

Q. Now, name some of the other kind that are owned and run by the members of the party in common.—A. That is the Socialist Labor Party?

Q Yes.—A. There is the Daily People which is published in New York, the Weekly People which is published in New York, and there is the Volksfrund and there is the Arbitzein published at Cleveland, Ohio, a German organ, and there is a Hungarian paper, I forget the name—it is a jawbreaker of a name to me.

Q. Worse than the one which you have given?—A. And there is also a Jewish paper and there is also a Scandinavian and a Swedish paper that they call the Arbiter.

Q. Apart from the manner of their ownership, is there any other radical or material difference?—A. Yes, sir; there is.

Q. What is it?—A. The Socialist Labor Party holds that the working classes have got to be organized politically and industrially, whereas the Socialist Party do not indorse or do not hold neither—all their belief is just to have the working classes organized politically.

Q Were you one of the witnesses who was present on the occasion referred to and testified about by Mr. Olsson a while ago?—A That is when Mr Olsson's hearing was, on the 1st of May, 1912, at the Federal building at Tacoma, Wash.?

Q. Where?—A. At the Federal building at Tacoma, Wash —yes, sir

Q. Were you present?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the hearing to which you referred about, when you were present?—A. What do you mean?

Q. What was the subject matter of that hearing?—A. In reference to me, sir?

Q. No, in reference to Olsson—what was the hearing about at which you were present? I want to know whether it was the same one that we were inquiring about —A. The reference was that the witnesses that were asked were questioned as to how they had made Olsson's acquaintance and of course as I said here, I said in the organization where we met frequently, and what those organizations stood for and what their aims and objects were for

Q. Who was on the bench?—A. Mr Hanford.

Q Judge Hanford?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. Name as many of the others who were there as witnesses as you now remember.—A. There was Mr. Speed Smith, and I believe there was two more witnesses.

Q Can you think of their names?—A. I didn't know at that time, I don't even know now; I believe Mr. Enslow—but who it was I don't know, but Mr. Smith, I am sure.

Q. You do not know what they were trying to determine at that hearing—was it a question affecting the citizenship of Mr. Olsson?—A That is my understanding.

Q Were you a witness?—A. I was a witness, yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear all the testimony?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Tell the committee now, as well as you can, everything that Mr. Olsson said, all the questions asked him, and the answers he made on that occasion.—A. Mr. Olsson was asked if the Socialist Labor Party—what their aims and objects was, and Mr. Olsson answered the court that their objects was to bring changes in the present government from a political government to an industrial government.

Q. Go on now and tell us any other questions that were asked of him and the answers that he made—now, let me help you—who asked the questions that you have just stated?—A. The court.

Q. Did the court ask him any other questions?—A. Yes, sir; I presume the court asked how this was going to be brought about, so Olsson replied, in a political way, by the ballot; or through political action.

Q. What was said, if anything, about Olsson's loyalty to the Constitution?—A. I believe Mr. Olsson was asked—now, I could not recollect whether by the prosecuting attorney—I don't know his name.

Q. Mr. McLaren?—A. McLaren, or by the court—now, I could not recollect which—if he held the same views when he got his papers—his final papers—as he did at the time he was on for hearing, and Mr. Olsson answered "Yes, sir."

Q. Was he asked anything about those views?—A. He was asked about those views, and he explained them.

Q. Can you tell what the question asked him was and what his explanation was.—A. The question was asked, if I am not mistaken, by the court, if he was devotedly attached to the Constitution, and Olsson answered "No." I recollect that much.

Q. You are clear, are you, in your recollection that the word "devotedly" was used then?—A. Because the court asked him if he held the same views prior that he got his citizen papers and Olsson answered "Yes, sir."

Q. Well, in what connection, now, was that word "devotedly" used?—A. The examiner, Mr. Speed, had asked Olsson this question prior or at the same time when he was a witness for the applicants who applied for citizenship.

Q. Well, go on, if you have anything further to say, tell it—about what Olsson said at that time.—A. That is about all that I can recollect that I know of.

Mr. McCoy. Have you had occasion to observe Mr. Olsson's habits since you first became acquainted with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you observed about them?—A. All I observed and all I can say of Mr. Olsson is that he has got no bad habits to my knowledge; that he is moral—a man, wherever I met him, or any of my friends met him, wherever I go, in conversation or had any talk about Olsson.

Q. Have you had occasion the meet him frequently since you first became acquainted with him?—A. I had occasion, as I say, for the first year when he was sailing I would meet him about every two weeks, the way the boats go up and down from San Francisco to Tacoma and so on, but after that he got an occupation as longshoreman and I met him sometimes once or twice a week.

Q. On what occasions would you meet him?—A. I would meet him in our business meetings—our propaganda meetings.

Q. And you saw him going to and coming from those meetings, did you?—A. I was there myself.

Q. Well, did you have anything to do with him at all except in the meetings, did you see him after the meetings were over and observe how he conducted himself?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes we would walk a block together until we got to the departing—he went his way by himself and I went my own—as I say, we met about once or twice a week.

Q. You frequently walked home together as far as your paths went along in the same direction?—A. Until we made connections with the car.

Q. And you say you never observed anything against him as a man of sound character?—A. No, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask any questions?

CROSS-EXAMINATION:

Mr. HUGHES. You were a witness at the hearing on May 1 before Judge Hanford?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You gave some testimony respecting the propaganda of the orders to which Mr. Olsson belonged, or made some reference to the propaganda of the orders, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who examined you?—A. You mean on the witness stand in Tacoma, Wash.?

Q. When you were put on first, who examined you?—A. It was the prosecuting attorney, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Were you not first examined by Mr. Nichols, the attorney for Mr. Olsson?—A. I believe Mr. Nichols first and then Mr. McLaren.

Q. Is not the same thing true as to Mr. Olsson; did not Mr. Nichols examine Mr. Olsson also?—A. I believe so.

Mr. HUGHES. I merely called attention to this because the witness did not mention it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Winsor, have you anything that you wish to suggest?

Mr. WINSOR. Nothing, sir.

ANTONE ESKELUND, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM. Where do you live, Mr. Eskelund?

A. 3848 South Tacoma Avenue.

Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma—or is that in Seattle?—A. No; that is in Tacoma.

Q. South Tacoma Avenue, Tacoma.—A. Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there since 1900; in the city of Tacoma.

Q. Are you a man of family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you own your own home?—A. No, sir; I do not own any home.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a car repairer at the N. P. shop at South Tacoma.

Q. You mean the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been in the employ of that company?—A. Since I came to Tacoma.

Q. That is 12 years ago?—A. In July, 1900.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Olsson?—A. For the last five or six years.

Q. How intimately have you known him?—A. What?

Q. How well have you known him?—A. Well, I have been associated together with him off and on for the last six years quite frequently.

Q. Do he and you agree politically?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Socialist Labor Party?—A. I am a member of the Socialist Labor Party.

Q. How long a time have you been a member of the Socialist Labor Party?—A. Well, I first joined the Socialist Labor Party, it was in St. Paul, Minn., in 1895, the first part of Jaunary.

Q. That is about the time the party was organized, wasn't it?—A. That is about the time the propaganda began through the West.

Q. Were you present in the court in Tacoma on the occasion about which we have been inquiring?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you happen to go there?—A. I was called in as a witness to testify in regard to Olsson's character, I guess, more than anything else.

Q. Were you present during the entire hearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else do you recall who were there?—A. Well, I could not recall any of them by name, because I did not get them; I heard them at the hearing, but my memory is not strong enough to repeat them.

Q. You were not then acquainted with them?—A. Three witnesses on the side of the prosecution were examined.

Q. Did you know Mr. Rust then, Gustave Rust?—A. I did.

Q. Was he there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. McLaren, or did you learn who he was, the attorney for the Government?—A. I saw the district attorney examine us there, but I didn't know his name at the time.

Q. And do you recall now what order the witnesses testified, about who was the first and who was the next, and so on?—A. Well, I think the examiner called Smith, I think was the first man and then his assistants, and then the clerk that took the notes at the proceedings in court where Olsson and the inspector had their argument in regard to——

Q. Did Olsson testify before or after you?—A. Olsson testified the last.

Q. Where were you when he gave his testimony?—A. I was in the room.

Q. Were you within hearing distance?—A. Well, I was, to a certain extent.

Q. Were you paying attention to his testimony?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. What do you mean by that then, do you mean that you could not hear everything that was said when you say "to a certain extent?"

A. Well, the court room down there was either very dull or the people that done the speaking spoke very low, and of course I could not distinguish everything that was said.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, Olsson talks pretty plainly and distinctly, but yet do you say that you did not understand all that he said?

A. I didn't understand all the questions propounded to the witnesses on the lack of hearing it.

Q. Why, was the questioner's back to you at the time?—A. I guess they were; yes, sir.

Q. Well, tell the committee now all that Olsson said there, and the questions asked of him, as well as you can remember them.—A. Well——

Q. First, who asked the questions, to begin with?—A. The district attorney asked him questions—I do not recollect the substance of them—the only recollection remaining to my mind was his honor, the judge asking him in regard to the private property question, and there was also a paper read on an expression out of the Socialist paper, and Olsson indorsed the expression.

Q. Now, let us go back to the judge and his questions. Tell the committee, if you please, what questions the judge asked him and what answers he made to them. Tell them as fully and as accurately as you can.—A. Well, he asked him questions in regard to his views upon private property.

Q. Can you give us the question as it was put—can you tell us the questions that the judge asked him; for instance, did the judge say, "What are your views about private property?"—give us the questions as the judge put them, as nearly as you can.—A. Well, the question was put to him in that manner in regard to his views on private property—taking them away.

Q. Go on and tell it.—A. And then, in the meantime, that paper was read, that expression out of that paper was better worded than I could do it, and it was indorsed by Olsson as correctly stated from the Socialist point of view.

Q. What paper was it—can you produce it?—A. No; I can not produce it because it was handed to the judge on the bench.

Q. Who read this paper?—A. The judge read the sentences bearing on that question, and Olsson indorsed it, to my recollection.

Q. Did the judge read the paper as a part of his question?—A. Yes.

Q. And asked Olsson if those views were his views?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was Olsson's answer?—A. To the best of my knowledge, he indorsed the subject.

Q. Well, can you tell us the substance of what was read out of the paper?—A. No, sir; I could not, but it was bearing on the ownership of productive property.

Mr. GRAHAM. Unless you can get the paper, your statement as to its contents does not enlighten us much. Is there any way that we can get that paper to refresh the witness's recollection to see what it was that was read?

Mr. HUGHES. I was inquiring in regard to that, and I have come to the conclusion that the witness must have been mistaken about that. That is the only conclusion that I can reach. Judge Hanford says that no paper was handed to him, and if it is in reference to any memorandum it must be something which the court had. Our information is that no paper was read by the witness in answering the questions, or was handed to the court. Probably Mr. McLaren or some of the other witnesses can enlighten us on that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Eskelund, as I understand your testimony now, you say that the judge read from a paper a certain statement concerning the ownership of property—private property?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And asked him if the statement as read was the same as the views he entertained on that subject, and that Olsson said they were.—A. He indorsed the question, to all appearances.

Q. But you can not tell us the substance of what the judge read?—A. No; I can not. My mind is not strong enough to keep it in recollection, and I did not expect the question would come up.

Q. Do you recall anything else that Olsson said there?—A. Well, he stated in regard to the Industrial Workers.

Q. What did he say in regard to them?—A. They were organized in the industrial field, with the cooperating by the ballot, or enforcing the ballot by the control of industries through their organization.

Q. Do you recall anything being said about his objecting to the principles of the Constitution?—A. Yes, sir. Some questions and answers were propounded at that hearing the same as there has been here this afternoon, practically.

Q. As stated by him this afternoon?—A. By Olsson and the inspectors, of course, holding the opposite view in regard to their devotedly attachment to the Constitution.

Q. Have you any recollection as to the use of the word "devotedly"—was the word "devotedly" used in the question asked Olsson or not?—A. When he got his citizenship?

Q. No; at this hearing at Tacoma at which you were a witness.—A. To the best of my knowledge the same—the questions were used in Tacoma as has been used here this afternoon.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Eskelund, when Judge Hanford read from this paper which you say he read when he asked the question; did he state in reading the views about the private property substantially as it is expressed in the Socialist Labor platform?

A. The publication that was read was not a Socialist Labor Party publication, but they expressed the views very clearly on the point to my recollection, yes.

Q. That paper expressed its views in regard to the ownership of private property in substanitally the same form as the views of the Socialist Labor Party are expressed in their platform of 1912, is that your recollection of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Graham. Do you wish to cross-examine the witness, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes. Nothing.

Mr. Winsor. I have not got anything.

Katrina Gelterman, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. Graham. You give your name to the reporter.

A. Katrina Gelterman.

Q. Are you a married or a single lady?—A. I am a widow.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 3706 South T Street, Tacoma, Wash.—

Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. Fourteen years.

Q. What was your husband's business while he lived?—A. Blacksmith.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Olsson?—A. Yes; I am acquainted with him.

Q. Are you in any way related to him by blood or marriage?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Olsson?—A. About four years.

Q. Do you remember the occasion when there was a hearing in the United States court at Tacoma in which his citizenship was involved?—A. Well, I was there but I could not recollect very much of it.

Q. What were you doing there?—A. I just was called about his character, how good a man he was.

Q. As a witness?—A. As a witness.

Q. Was your husband and Mr. Olsson acquainted?—A. No.

Q. Were you called as a witness and did you testify?—A. I was just called as to the character of the man.

Q. And you did testify as to that?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, where were you sitting when he testified—that is, how near him were you?—A. Just about as far as that first row of those benches.

Q. That would be about 20 feet?—A. Well, yes; but that court is longer.

Q. Then I don't think I understood you; how far was it?—A. But that court is higher and it makes such an echo that you can't understand when you are sitting back?

Q. You mean the hearing qualities there are not good?—A. No.

Q. Well, did you, as a matter of fact, hear Mr. Olsson when he testified?—A. Yes; some.

Q. Could you tell us now what he said?—A. Well, I think his talk was just about the same explanation as he said it here in court today, to my knowledge.

Q. Can you repeat it yourself?—A. No; I don't hardly believe I would be able to.

Q. Did you understand what they were talking about?—A. Well, I understood fairly well.

Q. About political action and industrial affairs and all that—did those words convey some meaning to your mind?—A. Well, I don't think there was much question about the Industrial Workers at the time being.

Q. Well, now, can you try to tell us yourself what Olsson said there?—A. Well, I don't believe I can tell anything.

Q. Do you remember anything being asked him as to whether he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States?—A. Well, I believe I do.

Q. Do you remember what answer he made?—A. He said yes. I don't believe there was much attached—more than just if he wanted to abide the law and he said yes, he would.

Q. Did he say anything about changing the law?—A. Well, he said he was advocating the people or if the people saw fit it would change the Government.

Q. Was there anything said about changing it any other way than by an election or by the ballot?—A. By the ballot.

Q. How long did the proceeding there in court last that day?—A. I could not say.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I think it was about an hour and a half.

Q. Do you know whether you were there at the beginning of it and stayed through to the end of it?—A. Yes, sir; I was there at the beginning of it.

Q. Did you know when you left the courtroom what action would be taken in Olsson's case?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect any more.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask just a question or two.

Mr. MCCOY. Pardon me, can I ask a question now?

Q. What about Mr. Olsson's character; is he a man of good character so far as you know him?—A. So far as I know him, yes.

Q. How far do you know him, what opportunities have you had for observing him?—A. Well, he comes to the house frequently and he is always a man of good character and good nature.

Q. How long has he been making frequent visits to the house?—A. Well, that is sometimes once a month.

Q. How long has he been doing that, ever since you have known him, three or four years?—A. Ever since I have known him.

Q. Are you a Socialist?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are not?—A. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question.

Q. You sat back of the railing, except when you were on the witness stand at this hearing, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that courthouse is longer and even noisier than this one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the railing is back farther from the desk, considerably, than it is here, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And sitting back there in the seat behind the railing it was impossible for you to hear all that the witnesses said and all the questions which were asked?—A. No, sir.

Q. I say, it was impossible for you to hear—you could not hear all of it, could you?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will you, Mr. Hughes, in some way, put that in feet so that those who read the record may have some idea as to that distance?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't think that she could tell. I will put it this way and we can agree as to the distance.

Q. The distance from the desk where the witnesses sat and the court's desk there is probably one-third greater than it is from this railing to the desk in front of the committee here.—A. Yes, sir; every bit of it.

Q. Probably more?—A. Probably more

Mr. HUGHES. That would be about 35 or 40 feet.

Q. And you sat in the seat back of the railing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those other witnesses who have testified here also sat back here with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Except when they were on the witness stand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that court room is a very noisy one and it is very difficult, from the position which you occupied, to hear what the witnesses are saying or what questions are asked them, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; indeed it is.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Russell, the postmaster here, tells me that he has a diagram of the Federal building at Tacoma and can give us the exact distances.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think that it is at all material—I think the record so far made is sufficient.

LOUISA ESKELUND, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM. Give the stenographer your full name.

A. Louisa Eskelund.

Q. You are the wife, are you, of the gentleman who was on the witness stand awhile ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Antone Eskelund?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you live in Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have lived there about as long as your husband?—A. As long as my husband.
Q. Were you married when you came there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mrs. Eskelund, you were a witness in this Olsson matter on the occasion about which we have been talking, were you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you in the court room there during the entire hearing?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you hear what took place there?—A. I did not hear all of it; no; I could not hear very well.
Q. Did you hear Olsson testify?—A. I heard him speak, but I could not hear a word he said.
Q. Do you mean by that that you could not understand what he said?—A. I could not hear what he said; no.
Q. Could you tell any of what he said?—A. I guess I could at the time, but I do not remember now.
Q. For what purpose were you called as a witness there?—A. For to testify to his character.
Q. He was a friend and acquaintance of your husband's, was he?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And in that way you knew him?—A. Yes; I knew him that way.
Q. For how long?—A. About four or five years.
Q. Were you called as a witness and sworn?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And gave testimony?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, can you recall anything that the judge said?—A. No; I could not.
Q. You heard him, didn't you?—A. No; I didn't hear him very well.
Q. The judge was facing you, and that makes a great difference in hearing?—A. Yes, sir; I know, but I could not hear very well in that room.
Q. Well, are you able to tell the committee anything which Mr. Olsson said on that occasion?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is all that I care about. Does anybody else wish to ask any questions?

Mr. Hughes, are there some other witnesses present that you can call; and if so, who are they?

Mr. HUGHES. I presume the district attorney and Mr. John Speed Smith, the examiner, and Mr. C. A. Enslow, who had previously been an examiner and was called by the Government as a witness, they are here.

CHARLES A. ENSLOW, being duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Questions by the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State your name.—A. Charles A. Enslow.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.
Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Lawyer, attorney at law.
Q. Are you practicing your profession?—A. I am endeavoring to; yes, sir.
Q. If you are not, it is the other fellow's fault?—A. I am doing the best I can to puzzle the other fellow.
Q. From what we have heard, you have occupied a Government position?—A. Yes, sir; for 19 years.

Q. Do you still hold it?—A. No; I am thankful that I do not.

Q. Since when did you cease to hold it?—A. I wrote my resignation to Washington on the 11th day of May of last year, to take effect at the end of May of last year.

Q. What was the position from which you resigned?—A. Naturalization examiner.

Q. What are the duties of that office?—A. The duties of that office are to obey the instructions of the superior officer and to make investigations of such persons as petitioned for naturalization. That includes a search into his private life as far as possible, in order that all about him may be ascertained for the use of the courts who pass upon the papers.

Q. Who was your superior officer?—A. Well, in this district, John Speed Smith, chief examiner.

Q. Who is present here to-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Enslow, do you recall the occasion when proceedings were had for the purpose of revoking the papers issued to Mr. Olsson?—A. The proceedings were had upon my recommendation.

Q. Well, you recall the occasion of the hearing, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was at Tacoma?—A. At Tacoma on the 1st of May.

Q. Of this year?—A. Of this year.

Q. You were present then?—A. I was there as a witness for the Government.

Q. Judge Hanford occupied the bench?—A. He heard the case; yes, sir.

Q. Well, who testified at that hearing?—A. The first witness was John Speed Smith; the second, myself; the third, R. E. McFarland; the fourth, Leonard Olsson; the fifth, I believe, was Mr. Rush; the sixth was the gentleman, Eskelund; then, I believe, that Mrs. Eskelund testified; and after her the other lady, whose name I have not at this moment.

Q. Now, as a lawyer, of course you realize the condition we are in here. Unfortunately, no certificate of evidence was preserved, and our purpose at this time is to get as accurately as possible the testimony that was offered on that occasion. What we want to get is what a certificate of evidence will show, if you had one, that is, all the testimony produced then and there.—A. I understand you.

Q. Will you give us that as well as you can?—A. My own testimony?

Q. Well, all of it, more particularly Olsson's; but you may give it all. Give us Olsson's first.—A. Olsson's testimony you want?

Q. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. How long did the entire hearing last?

Mr. ENSLOW. About three hours. I know there was some trouble about some of the parties catching the 5.35 train, and I think it opened about 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, give us the questions asked Olsson and the answers made by him as nearly as you are able to do it.

Mr. ENSLOW. United States Attorney McLaren opened the questioning on the part of the Government, after Mr. Olsson had been questioned by his attorney, but I presume that we had better first begin with the beginning with the questioning by the attorney for Mr. Olsson.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ENSLOW. Which went to the good character and reputation of Mr. Olsson subsequent to the time of his naturalization as well as to his good character previously. I might add that I thought it was entirely outside of the record. The same questions were asked practically that have been asked by the chairman of the committee as to Mr. Olsson's arrival and his work here, and it elicited a response to each question that Mr. Olsson had been a peaceful law-abiding man. Then these various witnesses were brought on to establish the fact from their point of view, and they also testified to his good morals. The ladies testified that they had met him from once a month to once in a summer and so indicated that they had had not a very close personal knowledge of the man.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is not particularly interested in that feature of it; it is the feature more particularly upon which the decision of the court hinged that we are anxious to hear; that is, as to the testimony in regard to the condition or state of his mind; give us that as fully and accurately as you are able to.

Mr. ENSLOW. The questions that brought out Olsson's opinions were asked by the judge. He asked if he knew Bruce Rogers, for one thing, and he said that he did. And the court asked him what was his opinion with respect to the change in our form of government as it related to the ownership of private property. Olsson testified that he belonged to a propaganda that had for its purpose the abrogation—that was the word that was used—of the present Constitution, to substitute therefor a sort of a plan or system in the nature of an industrial republic. I do not know that he used the word "republic," but an industrial form. And he also testified to the fact that he was a member of the I. W. W., but afterwards explained that it was a certain branch of it and that he was a member of the Socialist Labor Party, and went into some explanations in, I believe, a modified form that he gave to the committee here to-day. He was asked as to his attachments to the United States Government at the time he made the declaration, or rather his oath in court at the time of the hearing of his naturalization.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one; the first or the final?

Mr. ENSLOW. For his final. And he stated that he had not an opportunity at that time to explain, or rather was not called upon by a specific question to explain his attachments. The question was then asked as to the hearing of the Esslank case, after I myself asked the questions in that court, and he stated there, as he stated here to-day, that he was asked if he was devotedly attached to the Constitution, and stated that I had asked him that question. There was no rebuttal, but, if I may add, I have never used that word in connection with that question in court and I have never asked that question in court except upon that occasion, because I do not think the question means anything when it is asked. I have heard Chief Examiner Smith ask that question a great many times and he never has used the word "devotedly" in my presence. There was further testimony given along the lines of the proposed change and what the propagandists stood for, and he stated there that the propaganda had as its object the substitution of an industrial form of government for that which we now have in this country. And the court at this point asked the question whether or not the proposed government would entirely do away with the present form, and the response was that it would render the present form unnecessary. Those questions, of course, are not in the exact language of the judge nor in the language of Mr. Olsson in his reply, but that is the sense of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all of it, as far as you recollect?

Mr. ENSLOW. That is the principal of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was anything said about the formal statement of the principles of the Socialist Labor Party in their platform?

Mr. ENSLOW. There was an offer made to the court to read certain documents in the shape of printed papers that were brought there, but the court refused to accept them, saying that he had seen them and seen enough of them, or something to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what they were?

Mr. ENSLOW. Well, I did not look at them at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Who offered them?

Mr. ENSLOW. They were offered in evidence by Mr. Nichols, attorney for Mr. Olsson. Whether or not they were produced by Mr. Olsson or some other person I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Where Nichols got them you do not know?

Mr. ENSLOW. No; I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, does that complete the telling of all you recall?

Mr. ENSLOW. That completes the telling of all I recall concerning Olsson's testimony. My own I have not given yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, go on now and tell the testimony of the other witnesses who testified on that occasion just as if you were making the certificate of evidence, or, as we sometimes say, a bill of exceptions.

Mr. ENSLOW. Mr. Smith testified that he had examined Olsson in connection with the case of Stossel on the 8th day of August in the superior court of Pierce County, at which time he asked Mr. Olsson if he was attached to the principles of the Constitution and had used the statutory language. I do not think I could repeat it now. I never took the trouble to learn it, and that Olsson had stated that he was so attached. That began at the hearing in the superior court of Pierce County in September. In addition to the questions being asked of Olsson by Smith, Smith asked him how long he had been of this opinion that he announced at this time; and that Olsson had stated for several years—two or three years; and that for that reason the party who had petitioned for naturalization with Olsson as a witness had been denied the right; that he also testified to having made the affidavit upon which the action to cancel the certificate was based. Mr. McFarland, who is deputy clerk of the superior court of Pierce County, testified at the time of the hearing in September when Karl Oleson was denied with prejudice, noted on a paper that he had at that time before him for Mr. Smith's recollection the answer of Oleson in order that it might be made a matter of record for any action taken in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Just wait a moment. Karl Oleson was no relation whatever to Leonard Olsson, was he? I notice the name spelled Oleson in one case and Olsson in the other.

Mr. ENSLOW. When Karl Oleson came to the courthouse in Pierce County with Leonard Olsson, the witness, I asked him the question. That is what started this originally. I understood at that time that they were not related.

The CHAIRMAN. Now go on with the testimony in the Tacoma court.

Mr. ENSLOW. Mr. McFarland was questioned then as to the use of the word "devotedly" in the question asked Oleson at that time, and he stated that he was not able to state positively, but that he did not believe the word "devotedly" was used; that he had heard Mr. Smith ask the question several times and had never heard him use the word "devotedly;" and that was the sum and substance of Mr. McFarland's testimony as I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Who else testified other than Olsson and his friends?

Mr. ENSLOW. Well, there were the ladies.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the two who are here?

Mr. ENSLOW. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That gives the entire list of witnesses, then?

Mr. ENSLOW. That is as I remember; yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, he has not stated his testimony yet—what testimony he gave on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that?

Mr. ENSLOW. No; I have not stated my testimony yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Give yours.

Mr. ENSLOW. The testimony I gave was to the effect that long about the 9th or 10th of June, 1910, while I was engaged in making a copy of the records in the courthouse in Pierce County, this Karl Oleson came to the clerk's office and petitioned for his second papers—that is, his certification of naturalization—and I had been ordered to Tacoma with a view of making an investigation of all the petitioners and their witnesses who would appear before the court at its next hearing; that would include all those who had been three months or longer petitioning. I asked the clerk of the court to give me a list of the petitioners and witnesses in order that I might make an examination of them there to determine their fitness in order that they might not be required to come to the grand-jury room in the chamber of commerce in response to letters, thinking it would save them time.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand this is purely explanatory, but not a part of your testimony.

Mr. ENSLOW. I testified to this at the hearing. This is my testimony, practically in the words I gave at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ENSLOW. That Karl Oleson and Leonard Olsson came, and I began their questioning as to their arrival, and so forth; and it early developed that Leonard Olsson held what I deemed to be peculiar views, and of course I asked him questions along that line, and his responses led me to believe that if he was not an anarchist he was an extreme socialist; also that he had been for a length of time that antedated his petition for naturalization and the granting of it, and, in view of that, that when he had made the statement that he was attached to the Constitution that there was the element of fraud there that would vitiate the certificate and render it of no value. And we had an argument, such as we used to have over free silver on the street corners—those street-corner orators.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this a part of your testimony?

Mr. ENSLOW. Yes, sir; that is what I testified. And that on the next day he came to the grand-jury court room with a bunch of papers, which he gave me, including "Voice of the People," a platform, some tracts, and again endeavored to convince me that his ideas were proper ideas. He led me to believe still further than he had the day previous that he was an anarchist, and I so reported to the Government and recommended that the action to open the records be taken. I also testified at the hearing in regard to asking the questions in court when Mr. Esslund was denied, when it was brought out that he stated that he was not attached to the Constitution. That was the sum and substance of my testimony.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Were you an assistant to Mr. Smith in your duties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were your duties in your office?—A. My duties were to obey the instructions of the chief examiner and make investigations and conduct examinations in court.

Q. What were you to investigate?—A. Well, a man's antecedents, his present opinions with respect to whether or not he was a polygamist or anarchist or whether he was a man who believed in the destruction of rulers, and things of that kind—anything that would go to his moral character.

Q. Have you in mind the wording of the statute which describes the qualifications for citizenship?—A. Well, no; I do not know that I could repeat that word for word.

Q. Well, how long were you an examiner?—A. About a year.

Q. How many people did you examine?—A. Oh, I suppose in that length of time a couple of thousand; may be more.

Q. How long is the section of the statute—how many lines which embodies the description of the qualifications of applicants for citizenship?—A. I suppose a dozen lines. I knew it once when I had use for it, but I have been engaged otherwise since and I have not gotten it down now.

Q. Has anybody a copy of it here?

Mr. HUGHES. I will pass it up to you; I have it right before me [passing the paper in question to Mr. McCoy].

Q. Did you submit, or was it your practice to subject all applicants to exactly the same sort of an examination?—A. No, sir.

Q. What made the difference between the examination of one man and another in your practice?—A. A man can tell in about a half-dozen questions whether another man is an anarchist or polygamist. For instance, if he shows tendencies that way, then his questions will be along that line necessarily. Otherwise we accept men as being what they outwardly appear and what their language to us would indicate.

Q. In other words, you would indulge in practically a cross-examination according to circumstances as they develop at the time?—A. Decidedly.

Q. What were Mr. Smith's duties—what was his title?—A. Chief naturalization examiner.

Q. What were his duties in that office?—A. Well, as supervisor he was to issue instructions to his examiners and we were to follow them.

Q. Did he ever examine applicants for citizenship himself?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Were you ever present when he made such examination?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard him examine probably as many as 500.

Q. Were his practices in examinations substantially the same as yours? When cross-examination was necessary, would he indulge in it according to the situation?—A. Yes, sir. He went farther than I did in the matter of asking this question as to the attachment to the Constitution and used the language of the statute. I did not. I did not, because if you will read the language of the statute there you will see that that to the mind of a man who hardly speaks the English language it is meaningless.

Q. Now, you say he went farther than you went. Did he not only read the language of the statute, but also indulge in the same cross-examination you indulged in?—A. Yes, sir. He would ask him about his knowledge of the Constitution, whether he was a polygamist or anarchist, and those questions that are supposed to be required by the statute.

Q. Well, in other words, you mean he followed the verbiage of the statute?—A. Exactly.

Q. And in addition to that he did the same thing that you did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give us any illustration of the sort of questions that you would ask of an applicant when they are situated very much in the same way that Olsson was situated when he was applying?—A. Well, I would ask him his name. There is a card form that is usually filled out, and as we go along filling out these cards for use in court we question them just as our minds happen to think the question ought to be framed. We ask him his name and present address, where he came from and where he was born, the date of his birth, and the place of landing, the vessel he came on, the number of years he has been here and when he arri ed, and determine to find out at that point whether he had been in the country continuously for five years last past preceding the date of his application. Then we ask him if he was a polygamist and believes in the practice of polygamy and anarchy; also whether he had ever been in the army and navy, and all the questions that the statute requires to be asked. In doing this it generally produces answers which lead into other lines which would enable us to see whether or not he was attached to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to cross-examine a man specifically on the question of his devotion to the Constitution and attachment to it?—A. Well, yes; I questioned all of them, but I did not frame my questions——

Q. On some questions you have found it necessary to push a man further than you would push another man on those same questions, would you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about Mr. Smith—did he follow that same practice that I just mentioned?—A. As a general principle; yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you want the committee to understand that any of the times on any of the occasions when you heard Mr. Smith examine 500 applicants for citizenship that he never used the words "devotedly attached to the principles of the Constitution"?—A. I want the committee to understand that I never heard him use that word.

I know it, because he always used the language of the statute. He had it down to his tongue's end.

Q. Now, you testified here this afternoon that he not only did that but did the same thing you did, which was not to use the wording of the statute.—A. That is true exactly.

Q. When he did not read verbatim the statute you want the committee to understand that he never used the word devotedly attached or any other word resembling that?—A. Never in my presence.

Q. In all of those 500 applicants?—A. Never in my presence.

Q. Now, then, just what did he do when he departed from the reading of the statute?—A. He may have asked any other sort of question. I never paid any attention to the question except when it was asked in my presence, and it was asked in that way invariably.

Q. You were there 500 times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing there?—A. I was there assisting Mr. Smith.

Q. And the only way you recall now in which he ever asked that question was directly in the wording of the statute?—A. Exactly; I never heard him ask it in any other way.

Q. What was the other question on that point he was asking when he departed from the phraseology of the statute?—A. Well, he elaborated that and asked them as to certain branches of the Constitution. For instance, if he was asked What particular branch of the Constitution are you particularly attached to? some men would answer, well, that they were attached to that which gave them the right of religious freedom, and the answers would be as varied as the men themselves.

Q. Now, have you heard him use the word "particularly" on those occasions?—A. I never heard that, that I remember of.

Q. I thought you said just this minute that he would say to them, "What section of the Constitution are you particularly devoted to?"—A. That was my language in explanation of the question in answer to you. I would not attempt to repeat any of the exact questions Mr. Smith asked or any that I asked.

Q. Well, now, could you say, Mr. Enslow, would you undertake to say, that in all those 500 times, more or less, in your presence, when Mr. Smith was examining, that he never used the words devotedly attached?—A. I could say that I never heard him use it.

Q. And you say that positively?—A. Yes, sir; I would not have said it in the first place unless I was positive of it in my mind.

Q. Now, do you want this committee to understand that that is a positive statement, or that to the best of your recollection he never used it?—A. The answer to the question is that I have never heard him use that, and I have heard him ask the question 500 times.

Q. And you never heard him use an adverb that would take the place of the word devotedly?—A. I never heard him inject an adverb into that question.

Q. I wish you would again explain further what you mean by saying that he did what you did.—A. I never have asked that question according to the statute myself. I never have asked that question.

Q. Now, tell us how you would ask the question.—A. I would ask him if he believed in the Constitution of the United States; that was always my form of question.

Q. Did you ever ask anybody as to his degree of attachment to it?—A. I never asked them as to their degree. If he said yes, I would consider him as an honorable man and as entitled to have it so recorded on the card.

Q. So you thought that one short, specific question on your part was a better way to test their fitness than all the words of the statute?—A. Yes, sir; it was better because they could understand my question better.

Q. How is that?—A. Because they could understand my question.

Q. You thought you could test him by one simple question better than by the use of the language of the statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you mean by saying that you departed from the wording of the statute?—A. Yes, sir; I never used the language of the statute.

Q. You confined your cross-examination to the one question which you have stated?—A. Yes, sir; unless, as I have stated, they were backward in their answers, and it seemed that further questions along that same line were necessary.

Q. Tell us what you do when you find that out.—A. Well, I would do like I did in the case of Olsson. I believe that was the most flagrant case I have had though. I had an argument with him for about three-quarters of an hour.

Q. That is, you mean Leonard Olsson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he was not arguing with you endeavoring to get his citizenship papers, was he?—A. No; he was trying to argue with me that his ideas and theories were proper.

Q. Do you mean for us to understand that when you have examined the applicants for citizenship that you have had a similar kind of argument with them that you had with Leonard Olsson when he raised the question and when you raised the question?—A. I said that I never met a case like Olsson's in my experience.

Q. Did you ever have an argument with applicants for citizenship similar to that you had with Olsson when the question came up about revoking his citizenship?—A. No, sir; for the simple reason that I allow them to talk and I put it down on the cards for the use of the examiner who made the examination of them in court. Olsson was a citizen the first time I met him; Mr. Eskelund was not.

Q. I appreciate that. My question is this: You said that Olsson's case was the worst case you ever met with?—A. Yes, sir. He advanced ideas that were revolutionary.

Q. We have been talking not about cases where a man's citizenship might be taken away from him but where they are applying for citizenship. Now, on these applications before you did you ever have occasion to go into this question of socialism with any of those applicants?—A. Only to the extent that I should ask them if they were anarchists or if they believed in the Constitution, and if it came out that they were Socialists I would always note it on the cards. Now, a Socialist, as a rule, is not ashamed of his belief, and I would not think that he should need to be, and I would note it on the cards that he was a Socialist there, so that if it came up in open court it might be elaborated on.

Q. In other words, you do not think that if a man is a Socialist it would disqualify him for citizenship?—A. No; I would be partially disqualified myself if that were true.

Q. You mean that you are partially a Socialist?—A. Not that I am affiliated with the party, but I recognize that their principles are not without justification.

Q. Did you make up your mind that Olsson was an anarchist?—A. That was the idea that I had.

Q. Will you state anything that he said to you that made you believe he was an anarchist?—A. Well, he stated in the conversation he had with me that he did not believe in this form of government; that it was a plutocracy, and that the Senate of the United States ought to be wiped out, and that the entire system should be changed so that the working classes and certain others would not have as hard a time; and that he believed in using all peaceable means to effectuate that end. That is not his exact language. I do not want to put that wording in his mouth, but that is the impression he made upon me.

Q. You want us to understand that Olsson made the impression on you that he was in favor of using any kind of means in changing the form of government?—A. Yes, sir; I got the impression that Olsson was in favor of using force.

Q. You got that impression?—A. That is my impression; because I have a distinct recollection of the impression he made on me both the first time and at the time I met him in the grand-jury room, which was the following day.

Q. Now, what did he say to you in words that gave you that impression?—A. Now, that is two years ago, and I do not know that I can repeat exactly the words.

Q. Let us have the substance of any words that were used.—A. Well, it was along the lines that the wealth of the Nation had crushed the workingman, and that it was now time for the workingman to entirely turn that over and take everything away and divide it up and start out again; that was the trend of it and the gist of it.

Q. Do you think that in order to accomplish that result it would be necessary to use force?—A. That is, you want my opinion of it or the opinion I got from him?

Q. No; you can not give me his words, and I am trying to ascertain how you got the impression that he was an anarchist.—A. It was that way, from his words that I formed the impression that he was an anarchist—from his mannerisms.

Q. Did his manner give you the impression that he was an anarchist?—A. He had an impediment in his speech that is rather unpleasant to hear when he is under extreme excitement, as he was the day or the two days that he talked with me.

Q. In other words, you think that some impediment in a man's speech is an evidence of his anarchistic principles? Is that what you mean?—A. It is not evidence that he was an anarchist, but it is a matter which impresses one who is listening to what he said. I believe that was your question.

Q. Can't you give us something or other definite as to what he said that would make you think that he was an anarchist?—A. I do not know that I can repeat any positive statements, no; nor did I do it on the hearing on May 1.

Q. What is an anarchist?—A. An anarchist, according to the statute, is a man who believes that the rulers of the Governments of the world should be killed.

Q. Will you kindly look at the statute and see where there is any such impression conveyed?—A. Well, I do not know that there is any such impression conveyed unless you want it conveyed that way [examining statute]. That is where I got my idea of what constitutes an anarchist.

Q. Specify, what you are reading from.—A. Section 7 of the naturalization act:

> That any person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers either specific individual or of officers generally of the Government of the United States or of any other organized Government because of his or their official character, or who is a polygamist.

That, of course, goes beyond the definition of the anarchist. That is where I got my ideas of what constitutes anarchy.

Q. And you wish the committee to understand that Mr. Olsson in anything that he has said to you gave you the impression that he believed in killing rulers?—A. I believe from the impression that I got from him that he was a man who would eventually grow to be such a man as Ling and those men in Chicago were; that was the impression I had.

Q. You testified that Olsson handed you some papers or pamphlets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you for what purpose he handed them to you?—A. Well, he wanted me to read them and see that his doctrine was right.

Q. You understand then that he supposed that his doctrine was stated then in those papers which he handed to you?—A. Yes, sir; that was the idea that I got.

Q. Did you read the papers that he gave you?—A. I did not.

Q. Why not?—A. Well, I had sent out five or six hundred cards for men to go to the grand jury room for examination and investigation, and I held office open until 12 o'clock at night in order that we might do it so that they might not have to get off in the daytime and lose their time. I was very busy all the time and when I came back to Seattle I left them in the office and I was busy and did not read them. Anyway, he told me about what the principles were.

Q. You knew that he was a foreigner, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what he handed to you was printed in the English language, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time you were contemplating taking some action looking to the revocation of his naturalization paper?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it on account of anything that he said to you at that time that you recommended such action?—A. Yes, sir, it was; in view of his appearance in court and of his affirmative statement that he was not attached to the Constitution. I want to say that so far as Olsson being a foreigner is concerned, it never entered into it with me.

Q. My question merely went to the fact that you relied apparently on the statement of a man who obviously is somewhat unfamiliar with the language rather than to read the statements which he handed to you printed in the English language and which he claimed, and which you knew he claimed, stated his position.—A. Well, Mr. Olsson had better command of the English language than I have myself, and he uses words more understandingly than I do. He impressed me at the time of the examination in Tacoma as being a man of a very high degree of intelligence and has so impressed me since. I believe he could better convey his ideas to me by word of mouth than I could get them from a printed paper.

Q. You say it was on your recommendation or suggestion that these proceedings to revoke Olsson's naturalization papers were started?—A. Well, it was not my intention in recommending that the proceedings be started that they ought to be started in the United States court. Other papers were canceled in the Pierce County court about the same time, six others to my knowledge, and it was done in the State court, where I can see that this should have been done

Q. How did this come to get into the Federal court?—A. Well, it was taken up by the Federal authorities. I recommended it and went East on a vacation, and when I came back the case was started, or started shortly after, and I did not know anything about it until after it was started.

Q. To whom did you offer the recommendation?—A. To Mr. Smith.

Q. Was any talk had at that time between you and Mr. Smith as to where the proceedings should be commenced?—A. Not that I remember of.

Q. You say you were surprised that it got into the Federal court instead of the State court?—A Yes, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Because a State court, if a fraud had been shown, would have opened its record and canceled its order granting him his admission. Fraud will always open the court's record.

Q. Did you confer at all with Judge Hanford in regard to this case before the proceeding was started to revoke the papers?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever talk with him about it since?—A. Not until the day that we went down on this motion to reopen the case, and then he asked me to look over a statement that he had prepared and see if it correctly or practically correctly stated the facts so far as I was concerned in the hearing on May 1; that was all.

Q. You went with the judge on the train from here to Tacoma?—A. I went into the train where the judge was, and the judge sent a gentleman and asked me to see him, and he handed me the paper which I have just stated. I read it and told him it was practically correct, and then got up and went out on the back platform, and sat down with Mr. Gorham, as I understand his name to be, since.

Q. Did you on that day have any discussion with Judge Hanford about the matter, otherwise than as it might affect the statements?—A. The only other statement I made was that I might intervene in the case on behalf of the Government, in view of the fact that the Attorney General had instructed the United States attorney to take the case up or assist in taking it up on behalf of Olsson, and that I would intervene, if at all, for the purpose of taking up the Government's side, so far as I was interested in it.

Q. At that time you had resigned, hadn't you?—A. Yes, sir; I had resigned a year ago.

Q. You mean you were going to intervene on the side of Olsson?—A. No, sir; on the side of the Government, so that the briefs in the case might go to the circuit court of appeals, if it went at all, with both sides represented. I apprehended that the United States attorney's instructions from his superiors would not make the Government side of the case as complete as I believed the case warranted it should be.

Q. Did you believe that a record ought to be kept of this conversation, which took place when the application for a rehearing was reopened?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you set forth all the conversation you had with Judge Hanford at that time, or on that day?—A. Yes, sir; that is the only thing. The conversation did not consume 5 minutes.

Q. Did you ever discuss with Judge Hanford your views of the situation generally of the Olsson case?—A. I do not think I ever spoke to Judge Hanford a dozen words in my life except as I have spoken to you here, except over there at the time I was having a hearing for naturalizations in his court, and I would make the motion to deny or admit. I am not personally acquainted with Judge Hanford more than to know that he is the judge of the court.

Q. On that day you spoke of that you were on the train with him you had no further discussion except to look over the statement of facts which the judge showed to you to see as to its accuracy and also to state to him that you might intervene in the case?—A. Yes, sir; and he intimated that I was in accord with his decision as made upon the case, but that was all; that was just that statement which came up in connection with a proposed intervention, or that I was not sure that I would intervene at that time.

Q. Did he express any opinion to you about his opinion at that time?—A. No, sir; none whatever. I had no more idea of what his opinion or judgment would be before the case was started.

Q. I do not mean what his opinion or his decision would be on the motion to reopen, but I mean as to the former opinion?—A. He made no representations to me along that line at all.

Q. In other words, you did not discuss the topic generally with him?—A. Absolutely no.

Mr. HUGHES. The witness has been examined to considerable length, and I would like only to ask one or two questions that seem to me pertinent.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Enslow, you have already indicated in answer to questions propounded to you, that you yourself as a lawyer, in the light of your previous experience as an official of the Government, thought the the judge's decision was right. That is immaterial to this committee. What I want to ask you is whether there was anything in the attitude, conduct, or demeanor of the judge in the trial of Olsson on the first of May that indicated any bias or prejudice or any disposition not to give Olsson a fair hearing upon the evidence produced at that trial?—A. No; the judge's language was incisive. He asked the questions in a pointed way that would bring out a reply like he wanted it, I presume; but so far as his demeanor generally it was just as I have seen him in the court in a few other cases.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. What do you mean by an incisive way?

A. Well, when he asked if he knew Bruce Rogers he asked the question bluntly; that is to say, are you acquainetd with Bruce Rogers. He did not drag his sentences at all. It was nothing that would have any effect upon any person to whom the question was directed, as I believe.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Enslow, you have often seen and heard Judge Hanford in the court room, have you not?—A. Quite frequently.

Q. His manner is always that way, is it not, incisive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very much so—direct and often brief and pointed in his questioning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sometimes brusque in his manner of statement?—A. Yes, sir; he has been very brusque to me sometimes.

Q. I want to know whether there was anything different in his demeanor in this case from any other cases which you have seen him try?—A. Not noticeably, so far as I can recall.

Mr. HIGGINS. You were interrupted when you were about to say that he had been very abrupt to you sometimes.

A. Well, I don't know exactly what you want to know—do you want a specific case?

Q. I want to know what you were going to say when you were interrupted.—A. I was going to say that there have been times when he did not fully agree with me; that I felt the manner in which he turned me down was rather brusque.

Q. Was there anything about his manner more than you have already indicated in response to Mr. Hughes's questions?—A. Not that I noticed.

Q. Which showed a lack of judicial temperament?—A. No, no; I don't think that there was.

Q. Was this case, in all essential particulars, the same as many similar cases which you have had before him since you have occupied the position of examiner?—A. Well, yes. His mannerism was just the same as in other naturalization cases I had before him, or in other civil cases I had before him.

Q. Has he, before this time, upon your representation, declined to issue certificates of naturalization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a large number of cases?—A. In a few. I suppose there might have been two or three or half a dozen. That was, though, on the examination—upon the petition, not for a cancelation—at the time of the examination in court on the petition.

Q. The original issue?—A. The original issue; yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Did the judge's manner on the occasion of May 1 and his manner of asking the questions or other manner, indicate to you in any way what his notions were about Mr. Olsson's beliefs?

A. The only statement that would indicate to me that he was biased at all, if that word might be used, was when he made the comment that he did not want to see those papers; that he had seen enough of them already, or something to that effect, and I do not say that there was any irony or anything of that kind in the statement. It may have been the judge's manner of making the statement.

Q. Are you referring to the occasion when the motion was made for the rehearing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or the original?—A. The original motion for the cancellation.

Q. What papers were being submitted to him that drew out that remark?—A. I do not know the name of the paper. It was, as I stated a moment ago, papers that were submitted, as I believe, by Mr. Nichols. I believe it is papers that are published in behalf of the Socialist Labor Party. It may have been The People.

Q. You do not mean a legal paper?—A. No, sir; some printed paper.

Q. You supposed it was some Socialist propaganda that was being submitted?—A. Yes, sir; that was the idea.

Q. And what was it that the judge stated?—A. Well, I do not want to put language into the judge's mouth, but it was to the effect that he did not care to see those papers; that he had seen enough of them anyway.

Q. That was the only thing that made any impression upon you to the effect that he was opposed to Socialism in any way?—A. Yes; that is all that I can recall now.

Q. Did his manner of asking Olsson questions give you any such impressions?—A. No; not more than I have explained, that they were pointed and asked in sharp language. But the court has used that language on other occasions, and to me myself.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. After talking with Mr. Nichols, who sits by my side, I want to ask you for the purpose of refreshing your memory if this is not the fact: That when certain papers were offered by Mr. McLaren or by Mr. Olsson of this character Mr. Nichols objected to their competency or relevancy and the court sustained the objection?

Mr. ENSLOW. Now, it may have been that there was a procedure along that point; I know there were papers.

Q. Was that the only circumstance under which Judge Hanford excluded papers on the objection of Mr. Nichols?—A. Assuming that he did exclude them as stated, that was the only thing that came under my observation, and I might be mistaken as to where these papers came from, because I did not pay close attention.

Mr. MCCOY. All that would be necessary for the judge to do would be to sustain the objection and not say, I have seen enough of those papers, would it not?

A. I do not know; I am not of a judicial mind myself.

Mr. MCCOY. I take it from your experience as a lawyer.

A. Yes; but the lawyer on the other side of the bench is entirely different from the judge on the bench.

Q. Well, all that is necessary for the judge to do when he makes his ruling is to overrule the objection or sustain it, is it not?—A. Yes; that is the usual practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Has Mr. Winsor—have you anything to suggest?

Mr. WINSOR. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to have it appear that this witness is the one who filed the so-called intervention. He is the individual who interposed the intervention that appears in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct, is it not, Mr. Enslow; that you are the same person who intervened in the hearing in a petition for a new trial or a rehearing?

Mr. ENSLOW. Yes, sir; for the purposes as I have explained in my statement of a few minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. You filed the petition or leave to intervene?

Mr. ENSLOW. Yes, sir; petition to intervene.

Mr. HUGHES. Page 29 of this record.

The CHAIRMAN. At page 29 of the printed pamphlet which we have had, the words occur:

Mr. ENSLOW. If your honor please, will you entertain at this time a petition in intervention in this case of the United States against Olsson. I have the petition here in words as follows:

You are the person there referred to?

A. I am the person.

Q. And that was the language used?

Mr. MCCOY. The stenographer might add that that appears in Exhibit — of this record.

The CHAIRMAN (after conference with Mr. Winsor). Mr. Winsor desires that you be asked whether you have a personal interest in the matter to the extent that it impelled you, of your own motion, to intervene in a way adverse to Olsson's interest. That, I believe, you have already stated to be true.

Mr. ENSLOW. I have intervened for the purpose solely of presenting the law points, and I presented the recommendations to the Government in the first place as a strict matter of law. Mr. Olsson's political beliefs have nothing whatever to do with it. It was a case of whether fraud had entered into it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Your general view of the whole situation, including his political beliefs, was such that you deemed it your duty to intervene in a way adverse to his claim for citizenship?

Mr. ENSLOW. Not adverse to his claim for citizenship; no, sir; but adverse—well, now, I want to say adverse to possibly allowing a citizenship paper to be obtained where fraud entered in, as I believe, in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you very well, Mr. Enslow. What you mean to say is that you had nothing personal against Mr. Olsson.

A. Absolutely not.

Q. But that you intervened in this matter on account of the principles he entertained, just as you would have intervened against anyone else wanting to acquire citizenship or retain it who entertained principles like his?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Olsson and I are very good friends to-day. I have not a thing in the world against Mr. Olsson, nor have I any desire to keep him out of his citizenship papers, but I would like to have him get them in such a way that they would be of some value to him.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you mean to say that you have not anything against a man who believes in killing rulers?

A. But he has represented to your body that he does not believe that to-day.

Here there was some disorder in the court room.

The CHAIRMAN. We must have order here. I want you to understand that at the outset; this is not a show, and if you want to indulge in anything of that kind you should get out.

A. (Continuing.) Mr. Olsson has modified his views very materially since the first time I talked to him.

Q. One more question—who is Bruce Rogers?—A. I do not know the gentleman at all.

Q. Do you know why the judge asked Olsson if he knew Bruce Rogers?—A. I subsequently learned that Bruce Rogers was a man who was at the head of the Industrial Workers of the World here and in some official capacity with them, and that he had instigated certain matters here that occasioned some difficulty.

Q. Let me ask you again, what was Olsson's answer—that he did or did not know Rogers?—A. I don't know that I can state whether he said yes or no. I could not go in the record either way—yes or no.

Q. Did Judge Hanford make any other reference to Rogers, or his principles, or his conduct, than the mere question, "Do you know Bruce Rogers"?—A. Well, not that apply to Rogers, because I did not know Rogers or his principles at that time, nor do I now.

Q. Did he make an explanation as to why he asked the question?

A. No; I did not know; the only thing that I know is that I learned since that Rogers was an instigator in certain difficulties here. What prompted the judge, I do not know.

Q. Did you know that Judge Hanford knew that?—A. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. You may step aside.

Mr. PRESTON. I understood the witness to testify that his interest in the matter was to set aside naturalization papers which he thought had been obtained upon false testimony, and not about the political principles at all; now, I would like to suggest that perhaps his answer was misunderstood by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are exactly right, I did misunderstand him, but I am not sure that you are exactly right. I am inclined to think that I came as near being right as you did, and I understood him that way, taking all his answers into consideration, it is exceedingly reasonable that, as a public spirited citizen, in the view that he entertained of Olsson's principles, that he would take action if he thought that Olsson wanted to kill everybody in authority it certainly was his duty to take some steps to deprive him of the rights of a citizen.

Mr. PRESTON. I was afraid that I would be misunderstood. I did not mean to criticise the chairman of the committee at all. My suggestion was that perhaps the fact might be further developed by further inquiry of the witness. The witness has since testified to the fact that in subsequent conversations with Olsson he believes that Olsson has modified those views. Now, I understood him to say that the reason he wanted to intervene was that he considered the papers had been obtained by false testimony, and he wanted to see them canceled for that reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman did not understand you to criticise him, and he does not mind it if you do.

The WITNESS. Might I state that my object in intervening was not in opposition to the principles of the Socialist Party or Mr. Olsson. I believe that Mr. Olsson's papers were obtained through fraud and therefore they are invalid. I conceive it to be a fact that if Mr. Olsson's papers are cancelled, and he again is granted papers that he will have something of value; whereas a paper that is invalid can be attacked on the ground of fraud at any future time and is of no value to him.

The CHAIRMAN. But, Mr. Enslow, that raises the question of the fraud.

A. That is the only question I raised.

Q. And the fraud, in your mind, involves the things which Mr. McCoy referred to a while ago—something which, in your mind, bordered on a state of anarchy in Olsson's mind; so that it comes back to the same place that I spoke of, in the end.—A. Back to the same thing.

Q. Because if there was a fraud at all it was in that he represented himself as not being an anarchist when you thought he was one.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as an anarchist, it was your opinion that it would be part of his duty, if he lived up to his principles, to wipe out those in authority?—A. Exactly so.

Q. So we come back to the same hole. The committee wants Mr. Olsson to remain until the testimony on this matter is closed.

Whereupon, at 6 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned to meet at 9.30 a. m., Friday, June 28, 1912.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, JUNE 28, 1912—9.45 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment.

All parties present as at former hearing.

Mr. GRAHAM. The meeting will be in order. Is Mr. Smith present?

Mr. JOHN SPEED SMITH. Yes, sir.

JOHN SPEED SMITH, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. GRAHAM:

Q. State your name.—A. John Speed Smith.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long has this been your residence?—A. Since the latter part of November, 1907.

Q. Do you hold any official position?—A. I do.

Q. What is it?—A. Chief—my official title is chief naturalization examiner.

Q. Located here?—A. With headquarters at Seattle, comprising the naturalization district of the States of Washington, Idaho, Montana, and Oregon.

Q. With headquarters at Seattle?—A. Yes, sir; 406 this building.

Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Since November, 1907.

Q. Did you hold any Government official position prior to that time?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I was assistant chief of the special examination division of the Bureau of Pensions, of Washington, D. C.

Q. How long have you been in the Government employment?—A. I have been in the Government service in various capacities since 1882. The position I previously held was Assistant Chief of the Division of Naturalization, which I held since the latter part, I think, about 1898.

Q. How many subordinates have you at present?—A. Three examiners and one stenographer and typewriter.

Q. Mr. Enslow, who testified yesterday, occupied the position of——A. (Interrupting.) Naturalization examiner.

Q. (Continuing.) Examiner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Examiners, I suppose, have the subdivisions of the territory?—A. Yes; they are assigned by me as the work warrants.

Q. You sometimes participate actively in the examinations yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, your work is not entirely confined to superintending?—A. No, sir; I conduct the examinations in open court probably more than any one of my examiners—as much, anyhow. Of course, the force is so small and the territory is so large and so many courts that all of us do the same kind of work, both investigating and attending the hearings upon these petitions in open court.

Q. The statute, I believe, does not require the making or keeping of a permanent record of these examinations?—No, sir.

Q. What is your practice with reference to that? Have you at any time made it a practice to keep a record of them?—A. Oh, yes. If you wish it I will outline as briefly as I can the method, if you desire to know how we conduct these examinations.

Q. Yes; do so.—A. The duties of the naturalization examiner are to make preliminary inquiry as to the qualifications of applicants for citizenship, in the interim—period intervening between the filing of the petition and the date of hearing on that petition in open court. The period required by law must be at least 90 days; no petition can be heard, under the law, in less than 90 days after the filing. The object of the naturalization service is to gather such information as it can of the applicant and his witnesses and be present in court to inform the court with reference to his qualifications. The service is an assistant to the courts if anything develops in the preliminary examination either showing that the petitioner does not meet the statutory requirements of the law, or that if there be anything developed upon the examination that goes to the character of the applicant, it is the duty of this service to inform the court, lay all the facts before the court, and then the court, of course, only passes upon the case. That is the duty, in brief, of the examiner in the naturalization service. In order to do that I use a card system which contains, briefly, all of the principal matter that the petitioner swears to in his petition.

Q. Have you one of those cards?—A. Yes, sir; I have brought it down for the purpose of——

Q. (Interrupting.) Kindly let us look at it.—A. (Witness produces card.) This service is—the district is so large, so many courts, and having so few examiners, that it has been deemed the best policy to pay the greatest attention to the larger ports, the seaport towns; that is, attend the hearings and investigate as many of the petitions filed therein as possible. The outlying courts, where the number of applications are few, comparatively, and where the applicants are usually homesteaders or men who live out on a farm and are usually well known, those examinations are made by correspondence, because it is impossible to get around and personally interview them; and for that purpose I have adopted a circular that I mail to the petitioner, propounding a number of questions touching his qualifications, and also a circular letter which is mailed to each witness, the two witnesses, and when those are received, upon examination it can usually be determined if there is any reason to oppose the naturalization or to inform the court whether there is any reason why they should not be admitted or whether they have failed to comply with the requirements of the law in other particulars; and I have those circulars here; if the committee wish, I will submit them.

Q. Is the report card of the examination——A. (Interrupting.) This card, if you will pardon me——

Q. Yes.—A. That card, when it is filled out on its face there from the petition itself, affords data upon which to make the examination and also aids the examiner when he is conducting an examination in open court.

Q. Is the report card which you have handed us prepared and sent out from the department, or was it——A. (Interrupting.) I got that up in my office and it was approved by the department and they furnish me with that. I will say that that is now obsolete; there is a little different card used now, just within the last month, but it is substantially that.

Q. Have you the circular to which you refer, that you say is sent to the applicant to have answers filled in?—A. It is done in cases where we can not personally——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is that prepared by you or by the department?—A. That was gotten up in my office with the assistance of the examiners and submitted to the department for their approval and approved by them, and it is used throughout the naturalization service; that is furnished by the Government.

Q. This petition, or rather a statement by the petitioner, is filled in by him and signed but not sworn to?—A. That is right; correct.

Q. It is for the examiner's information merely?—A. That is the idea, exactly; likewise the circular sent to the witnesses. I will add that when we send out the circular to the witness we ask him, if he is a naturalized citizen, to present his certificate in court at the final hearing that he may prove that he is a citizen.

Q. Have you convenient at this time the particular statutory requirements under which you are acting; the specific sections of the statute which have application to your work?—A. No; I have not, Mr. Graham.

Q. In the pamphlet furnished us by counsel there are some excerpts from the statute on page 13 of the pamphlet. You might look at that, and if you or counsel could furnish us at this time the particular sections of the statute which have peculiar application we would like to insert them in the record here.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, at the request of Mr. McCoy, on yesterday I furnished a pamphlet containing the statutes on the subject and the regulations of the department—the rules of the department. I think Mr. McCoy must still have it.

The WITNESS. I don't understand your question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GRAHAM. My purpose is to get into the record at this time the particular sections of the statute, and, indeed, any construction which the Department of Commerce and Labor has given them, and put those in the record now.

A. Do I understand you want to know by what specific authority this service is in existence—the naturalization service?

Q. Oh, no; not particularly that.—A. I have the naturalization law here.

Q. That is what I want.—A. I have the act here. Section 28 of the act authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor—gives him the power—to make rules and regulations as may be necessary for properly carrying into execution the provisions of this act.

Mr. HUGHES. If the chairman will permit me, I would suggest that the witness state the act; that is, give the date of the passage of the act by Congress—this section 28—for the record.

A. The act of June 29, 1906, which became effective 90 days thereafter, this act repealing the previous naturalization law.

Mr. GRAHAM. You need not mind that.

A. This twenty-eighth section that I have referred to authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for properly carrying into execution the various provisions of this act. Does the committee want me to take these up in detail?

Q. Only those sections of it that shed light on your particular part of the work.—A. Yes. Under this act the naturalization service was organized, divided into naturalization districts throughout the country, with a chief examiner and assistants, the purpose of which, as stated before, is to inquire into the merits of each application, acting as assistant to the courts and advising them in any instance where a case should be denied, and also rendering such assistance as possible to applicants. In pursuance of that I have an office here and have four States in this district.

Q. Now, what particular sections guide you and inform you as to what persons should be admitted to citizenship and what ones should not?—A. The second subdivision of section 4 of this act prescribes what the petition for naturalization shall contain, which is sworn to by the petitioner before the clerk of the court.

Q. How long is it?—A. Well, that is nearly a page. It states what the petitioner shall swear to.

Q. Very well.—A. Then the third paragraph of that section——

Mr. MCCOY. What section is that?

A. That is the second subdivision of section 4. The first part of that section relates to the first paper, the declaration of intention. The second subdivision relates to the petition that he files. The first section sets out what he shall swear to. Then the fifth paragraph of the second subdivision sets forth what the witness shall swear to. The last paragraph—the fourth paragraph of the second subdivision—specifies that the declaration of intention shall be filed with the petition, and also a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be filed with it, provided it be an alien who arrived in the country subsequent to June 29, 1906. There are some cases being filed under that act, under that provision.

Q. Proceed.—A. Then the third subdivision of section 4 is with reference to his taking an oath to support the Constitution, by the petitioner; the fourth subdivision states what shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court; and the fifth refers to any hereditary title, which he must renounce before he can be admitted, if there be such an alien.

Q. You are not troubled much with this portion of that provision?—A. Haven't had one so far.

Q. Proceed.—A. The sixth subdivision of that section is with reference to a declaration of intention made by an alien who dies, allowing his widow and minor children to predicate a petition thereon. Section 5 of the act is with reference to the posting of the names of the petitioners and witnesses in a conspicuous place in his office during the 90-day period——

Q. (Interrupting.) In whose office?—A. The clerk's office where the petition is filed. That is for the purpose of giving publicity to the matter and giving anyone—any citizen—an opportunity of appearing. Section 6 is with reference to when these petitions may be heard—or may be filed and docketed and heard.

Q. Section 7.—A. Section 7 bars certain aliens, with reference to those who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government.

Q. It prescribes the necessary qualifications?—A. Yes, sir; the necessary qualifications.

Q. It is not long, is it?—A. No.

Q. Will you please read it into the record at this point?—A. (Reading:)

SEC. 7. That no person who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, the necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States, or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who is a polygamist, shall be naturalized or be made a citizen of the United States.

That completes it.

Q. Am I right in saying that from the seventh to the fifteenth section there is nothing that has peculiar application to your work or to the case we are now inquiring into?—A. From the seventh—the entire law has application, if you please.

Q. Well; I said peculiar application.—A. Well, I will point out where I think that the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, do so, proceed as rapidly as you can. I am asking you on the theory that you are expert as to this law.—A. I thought I had it right—the second paragraph of the second subdivision of section 4 requires an applicant to set forth that he is attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and requires this petition to contain every fact material to his naturalization, so that——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is covered by the circular which you have handed us, is it not?—A. Well, the petition that the applicant signs before the clerk of the court, and swears to contains—it is incorporated into the law, which may be found on page 13 of the pamphlet of this act. This statement is contained in every petition: "I am attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States," in addition to the various other allegations required by him to be made.

Q. That, you say, is from one of the paragraphs of the subdivision of section 4?—A. Yes, sir. The statement is embodied in the form of the petition that he signs and is embodied in the law.

Q. It is quoted from the statute, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; quoted from the statute.

Q. Well, now, we were at the seventh section.—A. Then the seventh section——

Q. (Interrupting.) You have read that into the record?—A. Yes, sir. He swears in this petition that he is attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and the petition that he signs is a part of the law—embodied in the law—the form is set forth.

Q. Stick to the statute now, however, Mr. Smith.—A. Yes.

Q. From the seventh section on to the fifteenth, is there any provision that is peculiarly applicable, for instance, in the Olsson case?—A. Yes; I think section 7 is.

Q. That you read?—A. Yes.

Q. I said from seventh to the fifteenth.—A. (After examining.) No, sir; I don't find anything following section 7, that has any special bearing, as I understand, on this case.

Q. I assume that you know, from your experience and practice with it, whether there is or not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fifteenth section seems to deal with the question of instituting proceedings as to the validity of naturalization papers issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or the revoking of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You might read it into the record.

A. (Reading):

SEC. 15. That it shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, upon affidavits showing good cause for, to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing the suit, for the purpose of setting aside and canceling the certificate of citizenship on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such certificate of citizenship was illegally procured. In any such proceedings the party holding the certificate of citizenship alleged to have been fraudulently or illegally procured shall have sixty days personal notice in which to make answer to the petition of the United States; if the holder of such certificate should be absent from the United States or from the district in which he last had his residence, such notice shall be given by publication in the manner provided for the service of summons by publication or upon absentees by the law of the State or the place where such suit is brought.

Q. That is the whole section?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any adjudicated cases on this section, except the Olsson case and the Johansen case?—A. I can't recall just now. There have been a great many such cases.

Q. Very well.—A. Yes.

Q. We can find it. Now, after the fifteenth section, is there anything that has peculiar application, for instance, to the Olsson case, until you reach the twenty-third section?—A. (After examining) No, excepting the third paragraph of section 15 prescribes as to the certificate that shall be furnished the department upon cancelation, and, if it be another court, that the clerk of that court out of which the certificate issued, must also be furnished with a decree, in order to make the record clear. That is the only thing that I see.

Q. That is, whenever there was any record of the application or issuance, upon revocation the record of the revocation must be filed in the other places?—A. In the court where the——

Q. (Interrupting.) So as to make the records in those various courts complete, showing the whole transaction?—A. And also a copy of the decree to the department, advising the department.

Mr. DORR. Is it the understanding of the committee that the witness read the entire section 15? I think he only read the first paragraph of the section.

The WITNESS. I only read the first paragraph. That is the reason I am calling attention to this.

Mr. GRAHAM. (Interrupting.) We are asking Mr. Smith, on the theory that he is an expert in this law, if there is any other part of section 15 that has application?

A. That is the one I just——

Q. (Interrupting.) You may read it.—A. I didn't understand; I beg your pardon.

Q. Read whatever that is in section 15 that has application——A. (interrupting.) I have read section——

Q. (Continuing.) To the Olsson case.—A. (Continuing.) The first paragraph of section 15 [reading].

If any alien who shall have secured a certificate of citizenship under the provisions of this act shall, within five years after the issuance of such certificate, return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such alien to become a permanent citizen of the United States after time for filing his application for citizenship, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancelation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent, and the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States in foreign countries shall from time to time, through the Department of State, furnish the Department of Justice with the names of those within their respective jurisdictions who have such certificates of citizenship and who have taken permanent residence in the country of their nativity, or in any other foreign country, and such statements, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence in all courts in proceedings to cancel certificates of citizenship.

Whenever any certificate of citizenship shall be set aside or canceled as herein provided, the court in which such judgment or decree is rendered shall make an order canceling such certificate of citizenship and shall send a certified copy of such order to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; and in case such certificate was not originally issued by the court making such order, it shall direct the clerk of the court to transmit a copy of such order and judgment to the court out of which such certificate of citizenship shall have been originally issued. And it shall thereupon be the duty of the clerk of the court receiving such certified copy of the order and judgment of the court to enter the same on record and to cancel such original certificate of citizenship upon the records and to notify the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization of such cancellation.

The provisions of this section shall apply not only to certificates of citizenship issued under the provision of this act, but to all certificates of citizenship which may have been issued heretofore by any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings under prior laws.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let me ask you, Mr. Dorr, did you think this had some application to the Olsson case?

Mr. DORR. I think the last paragraph——

Mr. GRAHAM. (Interrupting.) If so, I wish you would point it out.

Mr. DORR. I think the last two paragraphs have, as I take it. The second paragraph is not that one that relates to——

Mr. GRAHAM. And the ones that you think have, what is that relation, as you see it?

Mr. DORR. It prescribes the duty of the court in these cases.

Mr. GRAHAM. But in a class of cases of which the Olsson case is not one.

Mr. DORR. No, sir; in all of the cases where proceedings are instituted to revoke or cancel the naturalization certificate.

Mr. GRAHAM. Very well. It is in now.

Mr. DORR. The second paragraph which the witness read, applying to cases where the citizen has departed from this country, has no application, but all of the other provisions of the section have.

Mr. GRAHAM. That would be hardly worth stating for the record.

Q. Is there anything from the fifteenth to the twenty-third which in your judgment should go into the record, shedding some light on the Olsson matter?—A. Yes, sir; I think section 23.

Q. Well, up to 23 was my question.—A. No, sir.

Q. Section 23 provides a penalty, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In case the certificate of naturalization has been wrongfully obtained?—A. Wrongfully obtained.

Q. You may read it into the record.—A. (Reading:)

SEC. 23. That any person who knowingly procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this act shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars, or shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and upon conviction, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the final order admitting such person to citizenship void. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication. Any person who knowingly aids, advises, or encourages any person not entitled to to apply for or to secure naturalization, or to file the preliminary papers declaring an intent to become a citizen of the United States, or who in any naturalization proceeding knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, or who knowingly makes an affidavit false as to any material facts required to be proved in such proceeding, shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Q. Now, Mr. Smith, if there are any other provisions in the act which in your judgment should go in the record as having some bearing on the Olsson case, you may point them out to me.—A. I regard the petition itself as very material, Mr. Chairman, because——

Q. (Interrupting.) In what section is it provided for or covered?—A. It follows the form of declaration of intention, following section 27. Section 27 prescribes that the following forms—that substantially the following forms—shall be used in the proceedings to which they relate. Then the form of the declaration is given, the form of the petition is given, and I regard the petition particularly as material in this matter.

Q. You might explain why you so regard it.—A. Because the petitioner swears to these words, "I am attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States."

Q. Very well. Is there any other reason why you regard it as material?—A. No special reason.

Q. Very well. That covers the statute then, as you understand it. Are you personally acquainted with Leonard Olsson?—A. Only know Mr. Olsson by examining him in open court in connection with naturalization cases.

Q. That of course, was after he became a citizen himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after he became a citizen was it that you met him or became acquainted with him?—A. If I remember, the records in his case, Mr. Olsson was naturalized in January, 1910, in the Superior Court of Pierce County, at Tacoma, Wash.

Q. Just a question there: I am not quite familiar with the titles of your various courts. The superior court——A. (Interrupting.) Is the State——

Q. (Continuing.) Is your ordinary nisi prius court of general jurisdiction?—A. Yes.

Mr. DORR. Of the State.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, sir; corresponding with the State circuit courts in some of the older States.

Mr. DORR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. In some of the States it is known as circuit and in some as district courts. In this and some other States it is known as superior court.

Mr. GRAHAM. In other words, it is your State nisi prius court of general jurisdiction?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. Very well.

A. As stated, Mr. Olsson was naturalized in the Superior Court of Pierce County, at Tacoma, Wash., in January, 1910. I first saw Mr. Olsson in August following, when he appeared as a witness in a naturalization case.

Q. In what case, if you recall?—A. (After referring to paper.) In petition No. 651 in that court, of Camille Stoessle.

Q. C-a-m-i-l-l-e?—A. Yes, sir; S-t-o-e-s-s-l-e.

Q. Did anything occur on that occasion to arrest your attention——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) To Mr. Olsson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. My examination of Mr. Olsson as to the qualifications of this petitioner for citizenship.

Q. Well, you might tell what it was in the examination that arrested your attention to him.—A. The particular thing that called my attention to Mr. Olsson was that in answer to my question as to his own qualifications to act as a witness for an alien, whether or not he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States.

Q. You followed a printed formula, did you, in asking the question?—A. No, sir; I never followed any printed formula, except in special cases.

Q. What was the question that you asked him?—A. I asked him in this case if he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States.

Q. In other words, speaking literally, your question was, "Are you attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, go on.—A. To which he replied that he was not.

Q. Now, give his answer literally, if you can?—A. Well, that is my recollection of it.

Q. "I am not"—were those words used?—A. He first said, "I am not."

Q. Was anything further said by you to him or him to you——A. (Interrupting.) No; not——

Q. (Continuing.) In that connection?—A. Not on that point; no, sir.

Q. In pursuance of that answer, did you take any affirmative action?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, that was all that occurred at that time, was it?—A. Well, that was one of the developments in that case. This petitioner was admitted to citizenship.

Q. I mean with reference to Olsson——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Was that all that occurred at that time?—A. No, it was not. No, I misunderstood you. I regarded Mr. Olsson as an incompetent witness, because of his answer, and I suggested to the court that he was not a competent witness to testify to another man's qualifications when he himself was not attached to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. Do you recall just what you said to the court?—A. No; only in substance, Mr. Graham. I can not give the exact wording, I am not——

Q. (Interrupting.) When did you say it to the court?—A. Following Mr. Olsson's examination.

Q. Then and there?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. Was this in the court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the presence of the judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the judge?—A. Judge Chapman—Judge W. O. Chapman.

Q. He was a State judge?—A. Yes, sir; in the superior court. He was hearing these naturalization cases on this particular day.

Q. Well, my question was, at that time and place did you say anything further to Olsson, or he to you, in that connection?—A. No; I don't recall. When Mr. Olsson answered my question in that way, I regarded Mr. Olsson as not being qualified to testify to another man's qualifications, and I made the point—called the court's attention to it.

Q. That is the important feature. It is not so much what you thought or regarded, as what you did.—A. Well, that is what I did.

Q. And you did and said something, which you told us?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very well. Now, after that did you have any further association or connection with Mr. Olsson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When and where?—A. The following month, September, 1910, Mr. Olsson appeared as a witness in petition for naturalization No. 682, in the same court, of Karl Olsen.

Q. O-l-e-s-e-n?—A. O-l-s-e-n. This is the petitioner's name. He appeared as a witness for Karl Olsen, petition No. 682. Knowing from my record that he had testified as a witness in August in the case of Victor Immanuel Eskelund, being naturalization petition No. 650——

Q. (Interrupting.) Stop there a moment. Saying that he had testified, "he" means who?—A. Mr. Leonard Olsson. Showing that he had appeared as a witness for this man Victor Immanuel Eskelund, and knowing from my records that Mr. Eskelund's petition had been denied by Judge Chapman, with prejudice, because the petitioner was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and had stated—having personal knowledge as to Mr. Karl or Mr. Leonard Olsson's own statement in the case of Camille Stoessle—that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States when he appeared as a witness in September for Mr. Karl Olsen, I purposely asked him the following question——

Q. You are using memoranda for reference now?—A. As to the names.

Q. What are those?—A. These are the cards, if Mr. Chairman please, on which the data that I have just referred to was put.

Q. Very well. Go on.—A. On September 12, 1910, Mr. Leonard Olsson appeared as a witness for Karl Olsen and, in view of what I have just stated, I purposely framed my question as follows——

Q. Go on.—A. (Continuing.) "Mr. Olsson, are you attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and are you well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same?"

Q. You are now reading from manuscript which you used at that time, are you?—A. I am testifying now from my personal knowledge in this case.

Mr. McCoy. That don't answer it. Did you have that paper in front of you when you asked the question?

A. Yes, sir; I did. I had this paper.

Mr. Graham. Was my question correct?

A. Yes, sir; I had this paper. I didn't understand you.

Mr. Graham (addressing the reporter). Repeat the question to him.

The Witness. Are you attached——

Mr. Graham (addressing the witness). No; wait a minute. [Addressing the reporter:] Read it.

The question was read by the reporter.

A. I am giving the data from the same card; yes, sir. I don't mean to say I am reading this question that I asked Mr. Olsson, but I am using the data—this card—to refresh my mind as to the number of the petition and who testified.

Mr. Graham. If you will listen carefully to the questions as I frame them, so that I think they can be clearly understood and specifically answered, we will save time by doing that.

A. Very well, sir.

Q. The thought I had in my mind was to get whether you were speaking from recollection or whether you were reading from a written paper that you used at the time you asked the question?—A. I am reading from this record here the number of the petition, the name of the applicant, and when the petition was filed, and when these occurrences took place.

Q. Very well. The question which you asked Olsson then was practically a quotation from the statute itself, wasn't it?—A. At this time; yes, sir.

Q. At that time.—A. In the Karl Olsen case, now, I used the words of the statute in this question.

Q. Now, stick to the case we were at.

Mr. Hughes. What is the case?

Mr. Dorr. It is the Karl Olsen case, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Graham. The Karl Olsen case.

A. Yes.

Q. And Leonard Olsson was called as a witness, and the question you asked Leonard Olsson then, based on your former experience with him, was practically a quotation from the statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, it was the language of the statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very well. Go on.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. I would like to ask a question. Did you, in answering a question a minute ago, read from the paper which you have in your hand?—A. I use all these papers, Mr.——

Q. (Interrupting.) You testified, Mr. Smith, a minute ago that when you were examining Leonard Olsson in the Karl Olsen case, you asked him a certain question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in answering Mr. Graham's question as to whether or not you read from that paper you haven't made it clear.—A. Well, I am not reading from this paper as to the question I asked Mr. Olsson. I remember the question, but I have not it recorded here.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. That paper that you have in your hand, as I understand it, is an official record in your office?—A. In my office; yes, sir.

Q. That is the record which you keep in all naturalization cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a part of the official record, and it is kept on file in all cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does that appear on your card which you hold in your hand, that you state is an official record kept in all cases—does that card differ in any respect, in what appears on it, from any other of the cards that you have on file?—A. Oh, no; there may be data on it that other petitions would not have——

Q. (Interrupting.) But is there anything unusual, peculiar, exceptional, or extraordinary about the memoranda or the details or the data which appear on that card? It is an official file in your office?—A. No, only that which pertains to this particular case.

Mr. McCoy. Let me see the card, please.

A. (Witness produces card.)

By Mr. Graham:

Q. Can you proceed now, Mr. Smith?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just begin where you left off in the narrative you were beginning.—A. In the Karl Olsen case September 12, 1910, I examined Mr. Leonard Olsson as a witness. In the light of my information about Mr. Leonard Olsson in the preceding cases, I asked him, in this Karl Olsen case, if he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, to which he answered that he was not. I then asked Mr. Olsson how long he had entertained those views. His reply, as I remember it, was "between to and three years." I then called his attention to the fact that he was naturalized in January of that year himself, and that at that time he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, to which he assented as before, and that was the extent of my examination of Mr. Olsson, and that is the last time I examined him in any naturalization case.

Q. In that examination of Mr. Leonard Olsson, did you use the word "devotedly"——A. (Interrupting.) I did not.

Q. (Continuing.) As an adverb, to qualify the attachment?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you use any qualifying word?—A. I did not.

Q. Now give the committee, as well as you can, any particular reasons, if there are any, why you have a distinct recollection on that point?—A. Because of Mr. Olsson's testimony in preceding cases, my attention was directed to him as a witness, and I omitted, in examining him in the previous—asking him in the previous month how long he had entertained sentiments that were not in accord with the Constitution, so I determined to ask that question in the next case that came up which was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Ask what question in the next case?—A. How long he had not been attached to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. Yes.—A. To enable me to determine whether or not he had deceived the court when he became a citizen himself.

Q. But the thought I want particularly to direct your attention to is the word "devotedly," which, I believe, you know is not in the statute.—A. Not at all.

Q. And is there any way by which you can tell us why you recall that case and recall whether or not you used the word devotedly?—A. I will say, in the first place, I have never used that word, "devotedly," because it is not relevant; it has no materiality whatever; it is not in the statute, and in all of the cases that I have examined in open court, I have never used the word "devotedly," and it has been a matter that I don't understand how Mr. Olsson has gotten that word into his head, because I am very positive that I have never asked that question—asked a man if he was devotedly attached to the Constitution, because the law does not require it, and I do not see any reason for asking it and I have never asked it in any of my examinations.

Q. Is your answer based on habit—that is, on your recollection or custom of not using it, and from that do you infer that therefore you did not use it on that occasion?—A. It is based on a clear recollection that I did not use it, and, further——

Q. (Interrupting.) What called it to your attention in such a way as to give you a clear recollection that you did not use it?—A. I framed the question, I added, in addition: "Are you attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States". and added, "and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same," at this particular time, is one reason I recall the question.

Q. Had you theretofore had any discussion with anyone, or conversation with anyone, as to the use of the word "devotedly"?—A. No.

Q. Had it ever come up in any way prior to that time in your work?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was nothing, then, at that time to fix your mind on that word "devotedly"?—A. No, I have never——

Q. (Interrupting.) When did you first think of it in this connection, or when was it called to your attention first in this connection?—A. Why, I think the first that I knew that the word "devotedly" got into this case was when the cancellation proceedings were heard before Judge Hanford, when Mr. Olsson claimed that I had asked him if he was devotedly attached. Up to that time I don't recall ever—anything in connection with the word "devotedly" at all.

Q. Well, how much time had, if any, elapsed, from the time when Olsson says you did use the word "devotedly" until the time when the hearing was before Judge Hanford in which it was first called to your attention?—A. Why, the hearing was in September, 1910, in which I believe Mr. Olsson says I asked him if he was devotedly attached.

Q. September 10, was it?—A. September 12, is my recollection. In the Karl Olsen case, as I understand, Mr. Olsson claims we asked the question if he was devotedly attached. And he makes that in his testimony, as I recall, in cancellation proceedings here in May of this year.

Q. Do you remember whether there were any newspaper men present at the hearing in Tacoma on September 12?—A. I don't, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any of them at the time?—A. On the 12th?

Q. Yes.—A. You mean when Mr. Olsson testified in——

Q. (Interrupting.) As you have stated, as a witness in the other case?—A. Are you referring to the cancellation proceedings, Mr. Graham?

Q. No, I am referring to September 12, 1910.—A. I think there was a newspaper man there. I don't recall his name.

Q. My attention is called to a clipping of the Tacoma Ledger of September 13, 1910, from which I will read to you:

While testifying in favor of an applicant for naturalization papers yesterday afternoon in Judge C. M. Easterday's department of the superior court, Leonard Olsson, a naturalized citizen of the United States, said he was not devotedly attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and was not when he was admitted to citizenship.

A. If that date is the correct date that was.

Q. The day after the hearing, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. The next issue of the paper, I presume?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute. The stenographer did not get your answer, I presume.

A. Yes, that is correct, I presume.

Mr. Graham. Can you in any way account for the use of the word "devotedly" in that newspaper article——

A. (Interrupting.) Only——

Q. (Continuing). At that time?—A. In this way only—that Mr. Olsson may have used the word "devotedly" in answer to my questions.

Q. Well, he may have, but——

A. (Interrupting.) I don't recall that he did, Mr. Chairman, I don't recall that he used the word "devotedly." I recall that he said that he did not believe in the Constitution of the United States.

Q. Any of us could guess at what he may have said, but that would not be testimony.—A. I understand that, and I don't remember him using the word "devotedly," Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCoy. You won't say that he did not?

A. Oh, no. Oh, no; I won't say that he did not. I say that I did not ask him if he was devotedly attached to the Constitution.

Mr. Graham. Were you present at the proceedings to revoke his naturalization papers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part had you in inaugurating that proceeding?—A. Under section 15 of the act I made the necessary affidavit, reciting the facts as to Mr. Olsson's testimony, and referred my affidavit, with a letter of transmittal, to the United States attorney, for action under that section. At the same time——

Q. (Interrupting.) Who was the United States attorney?—A. Mr. Elmer E. Todd.

Q. He was the United States district attorney for this district?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go on, Mr. Smith.

A. I transmitted my affidavit, with the usual letter in such cases, by authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and at the same time sent a copy of my affidavit and a copy of my letter to Mr. Todd, to my immediate official superior, the chief of the Division of Naturalization, Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C.

Q. You may look at that paper and see if it is a correct copy of a letter you transmitted to your chief [handing paper to witness].—A. (After examining.) This is a report, a copy of a letter that I addressed to my official superior, giving the result of the cancellation proceedings.

Mr. GRAHAM. I might state gentlemen, that this is a copy of a letter obtained from the Department of Commerce and Labor in response to a request made by Mr. Dorr on me. I think I gave it to you and you have copies of it.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, I think so; but, Mr. Chairman, that is not the letter—not the report that the witness speaks of.

The WITNESS. No.

Mr. HUGHES. That is a letter written by the witness, according to the purport of it on its face, as to the hearing. The report he made was before the commencement of the proceedings by the district attorney, and that report is not apparently present.

Mr. GRAHAM. Have you that report, or a copy of it?

A. Yes, sir; I have the report right here, Mr. Chairman.

Q. You mean when the proceedings were instituted—that is what you refer to?—A. Yes; the one of which you testified awhile ago.

Mr. MCCOY. I understand Mr. Hughes to say that there was a report made before these proceedings were instituted.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the witness to say, Mr. McCoy, that he presented his affidavit to the district attorney and made report of his action to his superior officer.

The WITNESS. That is correct.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is what he said.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, I understood it was that report that you were calling for and that the chairman might be under a misapprehension as to whether the letter he had was that report.

Mr. GRAHAM. It will straighten out, because we will get both in the record.

The WITNESS. I did think so, that you were referring to the time I made the——

Mr. GRAHAM (interrupting). Very well. The report that you had in mind is now in your hand, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very well, let us see it, if you please. [Witness produces paper.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Smith, I call your attention to a letter dated September 21, 1910, signed by you as chief naturalization examiner and addressed to Chief of Division of Naturalization at Washington. That is a correct——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes; that is the letter of transmittal.

Mr. GRAHAM (continuing). Copy of the letter? Also a letter of the same date written and signed by you and addressed to the Hon. Elmer E. Todd, United States attorney at Seattle, Wash.; also an affidavit signed and sworn to by you before R. M. Hopkins, clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington. Those letters, being fastened together at this time, may go in as Exhibit —.

The WITNESS. That followed the usual routine in such matters—those letters.

Mr. GRAHAM. You have stated that those are correct copies of the letters and of the affidavits?

A. Of the originals.

Q. You may read them.

Witness here read the letters above referred to.

The WITNESS. Do you want the affidavit read?

Mr. GRAHAM. The affidavit is already in the record as a part of the proceedings in the Olsson case. It appears at page 8 of the pamphlet which was handed us. It is therefore unnecessary to read it, but, in order to round out the record at this point, it may go in the record again in connection with the letters.

Q. In that same connection you wrote to the Chief of the Division of Naturalization at Washington on May 13, 1912, concerning these same matters. I hand you a copy of that letter, furnished by the department, and ask you to look at it and see if it is a correct copy. [Handing paper to witness.]—A. I have not my copy here, but I presume it is. As near as I can tell from reading it, I think it is correct. I have a copy of this letter in my own files.

Mr. GRAHAM. As stated, I received it from the department to comply with a call made by Mr. Dorr on behalf of Judge Hanford. It is an official file and it may go in as Exhibit 10, or whatever it is, the serial number.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 10."

Mr. GRAHAM. Gentlemen, if you have seen it, it is not necessary to read it, is it?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. GRAHAM. You were present, Mr. Smith, in court, at the hearing for the purpose of revoking his naturalization certificate?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there during the entire proceeding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, during the taking of the testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear all that was testified to at that time?—A. I did, Mr. Chairman, but my hearing is not acute and I can't say that I caught everything minutely in the testimony; I only know in a general way.

Q. What is the extent of your defect of hearing?—A. Well, I have one ear that is quite deaf and if I have my audience on the left I can hear fairly well by paying particular attention.

Q. How old is that defect?—A. Oh, it has been in existence 30 years, I presume, all of that; since I was a lad.

Q. Does it change, grow better, or worse with age?—A. Well, I have not noticed any perceptible difference in it in the last 15 or 20 years. I have one defective ear.

Q. And what about the other one?—A. Well, it is fairly good. As I say, when I—it depends a great deal on how distinctly a person talks, depends a great deal on how I am located with reference to the party speaking; but my hearing is not acute.

Q. Do you remember how you were located at that time with reference to the witness chair?—A. Sitting in front part of the time, and part of the time on the side. I remember I changed my seat during that hearing and went over and sat in the jury box.

Q. How far would that put you from where the witness sat?—A. Well, within 4 or 5 feet—no; not that close; possibly 8 or 10 feet, I should judge.

Q. When you were not sitting in the witness box, how far away from the witness were you?—A. I was sitting near the United States attorney and I should judge as far as from here to Judge Winsor, as I recall the distance in that court room there.

Q. That would be about 25 or 30 feet—30 feet?—A. About the end of that table, as I recollect.

Q. Well, putting that in feet, it would be about how many feet?—A. Twenty feet perhaps, 15 or 20.

Q. Did you have any duties to perform there in the way of assisting the district attorney?—A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Coaching him?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you have any occasion to leave the court room during the hearing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do there except to give your own testimony?—A. That was all.

Q. When you were sitting by Mr. McLaren—he was the district attorney, was he not?—A. Yes; he had charge of the case.

Q. Did you as a matter of fact suggest things to him?—A. I believe I did, I think I—I recall now of calling—I had some literature there that I showed Mr. McLaren.

Q. That had a bearing upon the hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Smith, go on in your own way and tell us about the testimony given on that occasion.—A. I testified on behalf of the Government, as I have stated here to-day. Mr. Enslow testified practically as he has stated, as I remember.

Q. It would be more satisfactory, I think, if you would state what he testified.—A. I can't or I won't undertake to use Mr. Enslow's language. I can not do that, Mr. Chairman, I can only state——

Q. (Interrupting.) You may give the substance of it; give it the best you can.—A. The substance of it was in regard——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Mr. Chairman, just a minute. [To the witness:] We don't want you to testify in the language of Mr. Enslow, Mr. Smith; testify to your own recollection.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. It makes no difference what Mr. Enslow's recollection was. It is what you recollect.

Mr. Graham. Well, with this qualification: I think my colleague, Mr. McCoy, refers to Enslow's testimony yesterday. With that you have nothing to do now.

A. No.

Q. But if you can give his testimony as he gave it then, do so.

Mr. McCoy. Oh, surely.

Mr. Graham. Forget what he said yesterday and go back and give us all that he said on the former occasion.

A. My recollection about Mr. Enslow's testimony at the cancelation proceedings was that he told his occupation and his connection with the case as an examiner for the naturalization service. Mr. Enslow stated in his testimony as to his former position as naturalization examiner, and, as such, having investigated Mr. ——the petitions on which Mr. Olsson was a witness, and testified with particular reference to conversations, as I recall, that he had with Mr. Olsson in regard to his peculiar belief, and he testified that Mr. Olsson had extreme views about government.

Q. Now, that is not very satisfactory. Can't you give us in substance this way: "The district attorney asked him so and so; Olsson answered so and so?"—A. No, sir; I can not, Mr. Chairman.

Q. You see you are not touching the testimony at all, except merely referring to the subject matter about which they testified. Give us the substance of what he said, if you can not do any better.—A. I remember that he testified that Mr. Olsson told him that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution, and in detail explained his peculiar beliefs, and testified that Olsson said that his beliefs would eventually do away with the Government entirely; and it was along that line—the substance of what he testified to.

Q. Did he testify as to what would be substituted for the Government as now constituted?—A. He said he went into those matters with Mr. Olsson with great particularity while he was examining these petitions on which Mr. Olsson testified, and he became satisfied that Olsson had dangerous views in regard to our Government, gleaned from what he stated to him in making these investigations.

Q. Now, give us Olsson's testimony.—A. Mr. Olsson has a peculiar lisp in his talking and I remember—it was while he was testifying that I changed my seat down there, trying to get—hear just what he did say. I remember him admitting that when I examined him in these other cases that he said that he was not devotedly attached to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, leave the other cases out. This is particularly with reference to the hearing for canceling his certificate.—A. He admitted my testimony; I remember that; that is, he admitted that I asked him the questions that we have been speaking of here.

Q. It would be much more satisfactory if you could tell us what he said.—A. I remember him saying in answer to Judge Hanford's question that he was—no, what he meant, that he didn't—by devotedly, that he didn't worship the Constitution as an idolator would, or was not superstitiously attached to the Constitution; I remember that, and that his views of the Government were such that it would eventually do away with all political government. I remember him saying, "Oh, let them keep the money, but the other property will be into the hands of the general public." I recall him using that language.

Q. Did you hear him distinguish between political government and what he called industrial government?—A. Only that he said in answer to Judge Hanford's question with reference to the Constitution guaranteeing property rights—he said he understood that, but notwithstanding, all property would go, under his idea of government—his propaganda—would become common and it would do away with political government and be no use. I remember him saying that, and he said, "Oh, let them keep the money." I recall those words.

Q. The money they might retain?—A. Might retain, but the rest, all other property would go, because common and political government would be abolished and there would be no use for it.

Q. Did you understand, from what he said, that the change he stood for would mean that rather a change or shifting in the ownership of the property than the abolition of ownership?—A. He said to me that it would be abolition of it.

Q. The abolition of the private ownership?—A. Yes.

Q. But under his theory, as you tell it, would there not remain a public ownership still?—A. I don't know what he means, Mr. Chairman; I don't know what he means; I have not been able to find out what it means. I don't——

Q (interrupting.) Let me get your own view on that point. Does not the word "property" necessarily imply ownership in somebody?—A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Or bodies?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you conceive of property without an owner or owners?—A. Well, now, I don't understand I am being examined as to socialism here, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCoy. That is not socialism, Mr. Smith; that is a maxim of the common law that there can't be any property without somebody owning it, and that is what the derivation of the word means.

A. If you will permit me——

Mr. Graham. Go on.

A. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say right here, because—I would like to say that so far as socialism is concerned or religion, or economic questions, that that matter has never been brought out or those questions been asked with my permission or by me in connection with any naturalization proceedings.

Mr. McCoy. No, you don't claim to be a profound student of any of those.

A. No, sir, I don't; I don't claim to know anything about it much; I have never attempted to find out. My business is in this work, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, to find out if an applicant is an honest man; whether he has resided in the country a sufficient length of time to be made a citizen and has complied with the laws; but to assist the court as to whether a man is a socialist, Democrat or Republican, or a Prohibitionist, or whatever his views may be, have never been inquired into by my direction or by myself or any of my examiners. The question of socialism has nothing to do with a man's naturalization, and there have only been three cases, to my knowledge, in the four years—over four years that this service has been in existence in this district—where anything has occurred with reference to socialism, and the question was brought up by either the judge or the party himself.

Q. What was it that in your mind moved you to make the complaint and to institute the proceedings to cancel his certificate of citizenship?—A. I will tell you in a very few words. My knowledge of Mr. Olsson testifying in a petition where the petitioner himself said that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution, was denied citizenship on that ground; my knowledge, gained from examining Mr. Olsson in open court, the next petition, wherein Mr. Olsson himself stated that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States; and my personal knowledge of his testifying in open court, in the Karl Olsen case, to the same thing, led me to believe and I yet believe that when he filed his own application for citizenship he did not tell the truth when he said—when he took the oath of allegiance and swore in his application that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. That is all there was in that case so far as——

Q. (Interrupting.) Of course you can distinguish very clearly between your convictions and the testimony upon which they rest. Now, you will readily concede that we could not—the committee or Congress could not act on your conclusions—but if there are any other facts or statements from which you drew your conclusions that you have not told us we want you to put those facts in the record that others may draw their own conclusions from these facts.—A. I assure the committee that I do not want to keep back anything and will not knowingly keep back anything in regard to this matter.

Q. Is there anything further in the way of facts which you can think of that you can say now?—A. No, sir; I don't think of anything. When a man says in court, on two occasions, under oath, that he is not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, I think I, as a public officer, should take cognizance of it, and did so, and believe that he was not sincere and honest in his own naturalization.

Q. Did you, then, or did anyone, so far as you know, ask him to explain wherein or how or why he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution?—A. No. To be frank with you, I did not regard it as necessary.

Q. Do you know any man anywhere who could read and think who would not modify the Constitution in some way if he could?—A. Well, I can only speak for myself. I would not. I am satisfied with it.

Q. Would you limit the number of terms that a President might serve if you had your way?—A. I have not studied that—given it any special consideration, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Have you thought about the matter at all as to how the Constitution could be improved?—A. Why, I can't say that I have, with a view to improvement.

Q. Are you in favor of the fourteenth amendment?—A. Yes.

Q. That was a change in the Constitution?—A. Yes.

Q. There were other changes. The fourteenth amendment implies 13 before it.—A. The Constitution has been changed a number of times. I admit that it can be changed, Mr. Chairman.

Q. When he answered that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution, why didn't you inquire of him what particular thing in it he was not attached to?—A. I did not regard it as necessary, Mr. Chairman. He had previously stated that he was not attached, and it occurred to me that it was a matter that should be taken up. He swore that he was attached to it when he was naturalized, and then he, not a great while afterwards, makes a contrary statement. One or the other is not true. It occurs to me that a man who is applying for the privilege of citizenship ought to at least be in the country long enough to understand something about our form of government and be able to take an honest oath that he believes in our institutions and our form of government and the Constitution; and because of those contradictory statements it did not seem to me—they being absolutely inconsistent—I based my objection on that.

Q. Don't you think, from his answers, that Olsson shows himself to be a well-informed and a highly intelligent and a thoughtful man?—A. I do; yes. I think Mr. Olsson is intelligent.

Q. And that he has given some attention to the provisions of the Constitution?—A. He had. I had no personal contact with Mr. Olsson except on these two occasions, as I told you, in court.

Q. When you asked that question and he made the answer that he did, what did you have in your mind as the principles of the Constitution; what did that phrase mean to you?—A. Well, attachment to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. For instance?—A. For instance, three coordinate, independent branches of government. I think if a man don't—if a man believes in abolishing one of them, he can't say he believes in the principles of the Constitution.

Q. But you did not ask him on that point, did you, specifically?—A. No; I did not go into it, as I stated, Mr. Chairman. I didn't go into that.

Q. So far as you know or tell us now, your mind and his mind did not meet as to what the principles of the Constitution meant?—A. No, sir; that is true; I did not go into those details, as I stated. I did not go any further. I asked him how long he had entertained those views and found out that it antedated his own naturalization, as embodied in my affidavit.

Q. When you say his own views, what views?—A. Well, his statement that he did not believe in the principles of the Constitution; was not attached to the principles.

Q. Well, let me ask you on that question: If every citizen who was not satisfied with the Constitution as it is were to be disfranchised, how many voters do you think would be left?—A. Sure you, Mr. Chairman, don't want to ask me a question that I can't answer, that would be entirely guesswork. I would have to say something about how I feel about that, Mr. Chairman. I think that a native-born citizen perhaps can say a good many things about the Government—that is my personal view—but that an alien, it would not seem to me it would be becoming in an alien. It seems to me that a man who comes to this country and seeks a home, certainly where everything is extended to him, giving him every opportunity, that he certainly ought to be able to and ought to find out whether he is attached to our form of government before he comes into court and asks that privilege.

Q. You would make a distinction then, between the extent of the belief in the Constitution and its principles between a native-born citizen and a naturalized citizen, would you?—A. No, I can't say that, but I think that it seems to me that he does not stand; it does not appear to me that an alien who comes to the country within—as in this case, for instance—within three years after Mr. Olsson landed in the United States he had very marked or positive views about our form of government, I believe he stated that he belonged to an organization here in 1905, and, as I remember, he arrived in the United States in 1900—a few years after his coming here.

Q. Have not the great political parties, all of them, been inserting in their platforms propositions in favor of changes in the Constitution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of them declaring that it ought to provide for the enactment of the income-tax law, for the election of United States Senators by the people, for a single term for the President, or not more than two terms, and a number of other things of that sort. Now, would not a foreigner who came here to live have the same right a native-born citizen would have to advocate those things?

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, does it occur to you that these questions from this witness are material in this inquiry, inasmuch as they do not appear to have been raised before the court that had the determination of this question? It seems to me that they are academic in their character and might be interminable in their length.

Mr. GRAHAM. They come near answering the latter description already. My purpose was to get at the witness's state of mind, and I think if we can get his state of mind clearly in that regard, that it would tend to show whether or not there was any element of unconscious prejudice in him; but I think my colleague's criticism is well founded and I shall abandon the examination.

The WITNESS. Well, Mr. Chairman, will you allow me to say something right here?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

A. I want to say that the instructions that I have received from my official superiors, in outlining the scope and character of this work, is to confine it to the requirements of the law, and we have conscientiously endeavored to do that, for the purpose and sole purpose of assisting the courts in preventing the naturalization of unworthy applicants, rendering assistance as much as endeavoring to keep out those who do not come within the law.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Well, in this particular case, as I understand it, you were acting under the instructions of your immediate superior?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were carrying out directions which he gave you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you did not act upon your own initiative, except upon the authority under which you were directed?—A. Yes, sir; in the regular way in every particular in all the things.

Q. But it was from orders from Washington?—A. What?

Q. It was by orders from Washington, wasn't it?—A. The general order that I have, when I find that a man has been illegally naturalized, is to bring an action to cancel his papers, and in this case, as I have stated, I believed that this man had been illegally naturalized, and in pursuance——

Q. Did you take this matter of revocation of naturalization papers of Mr. Olsson up on your own initiative?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not then receive any such direction from your superior?—A. Only that I had general instructions as to how to treat each case as it developed. As soon as I made this——

Q. (Interrupting). Were you acting then under some general order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is not included in the naturalization law?—A. General instructions from—you noted, in my letter of transmittal to Mr. Todd, I say by direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Q. Have you offered to the committee that one general order under which you were acting?—A. I have not been asked for it.

Q. Can you find it?—A. I think I could find it in my files.

Q. Will you produce it to the committee?—A. I will be glad to produce it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let it go in at this point when produced.

(Paper referred to was later produced by the witness and marked Exhibit —.)

The WITNESS. When it develops that a party has received his certificate illegally even in the investigation of a naturalization case, proceedings can be brought in the same court upon the request of the petitioner. In no instance have the proceedings ever been brought in the State court except where the petitioner requested—consented to it.

Mr. HIGGINS. To whom do you report?

A. I report to the chief of the Division of Naturalization.

Q. How frequently?—A. Oh, every day.

Q. And these cards which you have offered here, are they files——A. (Interrupting.) They are simply my office files. They do not belong in Washington at all.

Q. Do you send a duplicate of it to Washington?—Not of files; no, sir.

Q. Do you send a report of each individual case?—A. Send the report; no, not of each individual case. A report of those that are—I report all petitions admitted at a hearing, and then any denials I report those individually, by number and name.

Q. With the reason for the denial?—A. Yes, sir. This is just for use in the office in making the examination.

Q. In initiating proceedings for a revocation, you are governed by this general order that you have referred to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is formulated by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, under the authority of the act of 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Giving him power to make rules and regulations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To carry out the objects and purposes of the act?—A. Yes, sir. If in the course of my examination I find that a party holds a certificate illegally procured, or fraudulently, why, it is my duty to take cognizance of it.

Q. You do take cognizance of it?—A. Yes, and I do take cognizance of it. There are many instances of illegal naturalization where there is no element of fraud, under the old law, and some, a few, under the present act, when the alien or even the court officially made a mistake, and no fraud being involved, the matter has been brought to the court taking that action, and upon the proper request of the party holding the certificate, setting forth the error and requesting a revocation, the certificate has been canceled, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, in this particular case that we have under consideration, the Leonard Olsson case——A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Did you talk with Mr. Olsson before the petition for revocation was brought?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you talk with him between the time he was a witness for Karl Olsen and the time when the petition was brought for revocation of his own certificate?—A. I did not.

Q. Nor since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any acquaintance with him except as you have indicated, as an advocate and a witness?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or made no inquiry from others about him?—A. Well, the examiners had told me about Mr. Olsson distributing these literature on the street corners.

Q. You mean the witness of yesterday?—A. Yes.

Q. I don't just recall his name?—A. Mr. Enslow.

Q. Enslow?—A. Yes, and also another examiner who is not here with me now, Mr. Graham, who was then in this service and who was with Mr. Enslow in making the preliminary examination. That is all.

Q. Where is Mr. Graham now?—A. Mr. Graham is at Denver, Colo.

Q. What is his full name?—A. William S. Graham.

Q. Is he in the Government service?—A. Yes, sir; he has charge of the naturalization district there.

Q. You say Mr. Graham and Mr. Enslow reported to you the literature which Mr. Olsson was circulating?—A. Mr. Enslow reported to me that, and Mr. Graham was with Mr. Enslow conducting the investigations when these cases first came up, and heard Mr. Enslow and Mr. Olsson discussing these questions.

Q. Did they turn over to you the literature or copies of the circulars which they said Mr. Olsson was exhibiting?—A. I believe that they did. I don't know what became of it.

Q. What was the character of it?—A. Why, it is literature that you can see distributed on the streets out here——

Q. (Interrupting.) I haven't been out here and I have not seen it distributed. I would like to know just what it is.—A. I think some of it is—on socialistic doctrines. I didn't go through it carefully and read it, and I don't know where it is now; but they had—this is what they found Mr. — reported to me that Mr. Olsson was doing down there.

Q. Did that have on your mind some effect as to the qualifications of Mr. Olsson for citizenship?—A. Well, perhaps it did; I can't say that it did. My idea was—the motive in this matter or what prompted me to bring this matter was that Mr. Olsson did not testify truthfully in his own naturalization as to his attachment to the Constitution.

Q. Now, do you, as an examiner, put that question to all aliens desiring admission?—A. In court?

Q. Yes.—A. That is attachment to the Constitution?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose—it may not be at all material to this inquiry, but for my own personal information—suppose that the alien qualifies somewhat, you then, as a matter, of course, in practice, examine him further as to his qualifications as to the degree of attachment?—A. No, no.

Q. That is, you submit, as you did to Mr. Olsson, the broad, general, comprehensive inquiry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if there is a qualified affirmation, you do not go into the qualifications?—A. That is the court—let the court determine that.

Q. The judge does that?—A. Yes; the judge. As a matter of fact——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did the judge do it in this case?—A. My recollection is that he did not.

Q. That he did not?—A. No.

Q. What questions did the judge ask him?—A. I don't remember now. This case was—there was another witness in it that was disqualified on account of lack of knowledge; that is, hadn't known the petitioner a sufficient length of time, and it was jurisdictional and the petition was dismissed. I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did Judge Hanford ask him any questions?—A. Are you speaking of the——

Q. (Interrupting.) I am speaking now of the Leonard Olsson case.—A. Cancellation proceedings?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, Judge Hanford——

Mr. HUGHES (interrupting). I think, in fairness, for the record, it ought to be made to appear that the witness's last answers were given with reference to another case and not to the case before Judge Hanford.

The WITNESS. Yes; I was.

Mr. HUGHES. He was understanding it to relate to one of the proceedings in the superior court. That was evident.

The WITNESS. Yes; that is what I meant.

Mr. HIGGINS. I evidently did not understand the witness or he did not understand me, or both.

Mr. PRESTON. He is thinking, if I may be permitted, of Judge Easterday in the Karl Olsen case.

The WITNESS. Judge Easterday is the judge who heard the petition in which Mr. Leonard Olsson was a witness, and I thought you had reference to that, Mr. Higgins.

Mr. HIGGINS. The chairman of the committee had brought you up to the point, as I recall it, when you were endeavoring to give this committee your own idea of what was said in Judge Hanford's court at the time of the revocation of Mr. Olsson's certificate.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I am asking you what questions, if any, Judge Hanford asked after you had interrogated Mr. Olsson as to his attachment to the Constitution.—A. Now, right there, there is where I did not understand you. I did not interrogate Mr. Olsson at all in that. The United States attorney conducted the examination.

Q. Very well.—A. So I did not ask him any questions.

Q. Well, that is really not my question. I want to know what Judge Hanford asked.—A. I remember Judge Hanford calling his attention to that section of the Constitution with reference to depriving people of their property without due process of law and asking if he understood that, and he said he did. I remember Judge Hanford asking him that question specifically.

Q. What else, what further question, Mr. Smith, did you hear the court ask?—A. As I recall, the court asked him to explain his propaganda—I think that word was used—and I remember the court asking him——

Q. (Interrupting.) What explanation, if any, did the witness make? A. Well, he went on then. I can only say in general terms as I recall what he said, that his scheme was that the property would become—all producing property should go into the hands of the people and that a political government would be abolished, under his ideas. In brief, that is what it was. I won't pretend, Mr. Higgins, to repeat these words, because, as I say, I do not recall just the words he used, only in a general way—the substance of them.

Q. I want you to relate, as near as you can, your recollection of the questions which Judge Hanford asked in that proceeding, and of the replies to those questions, your own recollection of it, having been in court at the time the matter was heard.—A. I recall Judge Hanford asking him, "Do you understand that clause of the Constitution with reference to that property can not be taken from anybody without due process of law, under the Constitution?" And Mr. Olsson replied that he did; and then I think the judge asked him how he reconciled that to his propaganda, and I remember him saying, "Oh, let them keep the money, but all other property will become a common ownership, and that will abolish the present political form of government and there will be no necessity for it." That is as near as I can remember what he said in reply to that.

Q. Have you stated, now, all that you can remember as to the questions asked by Judge Hanford and the replies made by Mr.

Olsson at that time?—A. I think I have, Mr. Higgins. I would be glad to reproduce it if I could.

By Mr. GRAHAM:

Q. Just a question or two before my associate begins asking. Mr. Smith, in his answer that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution, did you understand that he meant he would, if he could, abolish this Government by any means within his power, or only by peaceable means?—A. I don't know what he meant, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Well, what was the thought in your mind?—A. That he did not—did not have an attachment for our form of government.

Q. But did your mind go further than that and consider violent changes by a revolution or by force?—A. Oh, I can't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Or by the taking of the lives of those in authority, or anything of that sort?—A. I am satisfied—it never occurred to me that Mr. Olsson believed in unlawfully assaulting or killing or violence. I am satisfied——

Q. (Interrupting.) You never thought that he could under that provision of the law?—A. No; it did not occur to me at the time, and it never has occurred to me since, that Mr. Olsson believes in killing.

Q. Or in violent or forcible revolutions?—A. No; I can't say that I believe that the man believes in violence, but he don't believe in the form of government, in my judgment, that we have, and he won't hesitate to abolish it, in my judgment. I think the man is honest about it.

Q. That is, if his party had the majority of the votes?—A. Well, I don't know how——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is that the way you understood it?—A. I don't know how. I don't know what he means, Mr. Chairman. I am satisfied he don't believe in our institutions.

Q. And you have told us all the facts upon which your belief is based?—A. Yes; I have told you all I can.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Judge Hanford about the matter at any time except when the hearing was on there in court?—A. No. I have not conversed with Judge Hanford in connection with the matter.

By Mr. HUGHES. I don't get your answer, Mr. Smith.

A. No, sir.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Mr. Smith, I call your attention to this card, which is headed "Court No. 120, petition No. 682," which appears to be a record in the case of Karl Olsen. I wish you would take that card and explain how it was made up, who made it up, whose handwriting is on it, according the the stages it went through from the start to the finish [handing card to the witness].—A. I recognize the handwriting of Mr. Enslow, as is the custom. This is made from the petition book on file in the clerk's office.

Q. Now, you are referring to the side of the card which has on it "Court No. 120"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Petition No. 682"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When it is taken out for use, it is a form with questions printed on it in typewriter type?—A. Yes, yes.

Q. And blanks are left for the report of the answer of the question that is asked?—A. No; these are not questions here, Mr. McCoy; This is what the petitions contain. These are not questions. The petition itself shows the court number, number of petition; the petitions are all numbered.

Q. The person in your office who has the duty to perform checks the petition——A. (Interrupting.) Gets this data from it.

Q. And from the petition he fills in the memoranda that appear there after the typewritten part?—A. Yes; from the petition.

Q. From the petition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those memoranda in this case are filled in in Mr. Enslow's handwriting; is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything on that side of the card that is not in his handwriting?—A. I don't recognize any.

Q. Except the printing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, turn over to the other side of the card. Now, at the top on the reverse side, the side headed "Examiner's report," is some writing in black ink—whose handwriting is that?—A. Mr. Enslow's.

Q. And it is signed with Mr. Enslow's name, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, below that there is some writing in red ink?—A. Yes.

Q. And handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whose handwriting is that?—A. Examiner Graham.

Q. At the bottom of the card the word "Action" is printed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is on this reverse side with the date September 12, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a memorandum is below that?—A. Yes.

Q. Whose handwriting is that in?—A. Examiner Graham's.

Q. Is this the same handwriting as that?—A. Yes, sir; the same one. I recognize it as such. I tried to explain why that was on there.

Q. Just one moment.—A. Yes, sir; I am pretty sure that that is the same handwriting, because Mr. Graham was there with me.

Q. Well, I don't know that it makes much difference; I should say that you are mistaken, though, on comparing the two. Just take a good look at those two and see [handing papers to witness].—A. I am satisfied that Mr. Graham wrote both.

Q. All right. Had your attention been called to this Karl Olsen case before this card which we have been talking about was made out?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first see this card?—A. Well, I could not answer that question.

Q. I don't mean that you shall give me the date on which you first saw it, but when in the course of this Olsson proceeding did you first see it?

Mr. HUGHES. You mean this Karl Olsen proceeding?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; Karl Olsen.

A. Why, some time before the hearing, September 12; but I am in and out, and those were prepared for the hearing on the 12th. I don't recall—I don't know how long before that it was that the examinations were made, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) You remember whether or not you had any conference with either Mr. Enslow or Mr. Graham in regard to this card and its contents before you went into court in the Karl Olsen case?—A. I don't recall now, I don't recall now, but on seeing that indorsement there, why, I possibly did say something; discuss the matter with both of them.

Q. Now, just try to refresh your recollection about that, Mr. Smith. You have a very clear recollection about a very definite form of question which you asked in this matter; you have stated that you made up your mind before you went into this matter, into court, that you were going to do a certain definite thing. Now, just keep those two statements in mind and then try to tell me whether you do not remember a definite consultation about these memoranda, this one in black ink on the reverse side of the card and the one in red ink.—A. I recall directing Mr. Graham to make that memoranda on there so that I would not forget what was intended to be done.

Q. You recall now that you directed Mr. Graham to indorse on the back of this card the memorandum which there appears in red ink?—A. Yes, yes.

Q. And the purpose of your giving him that instruction was so that you might not forget——A. (Interrupting.) Overlook.

Q. (Continuing.) To call special attention to what the memorándum called attention to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, I will read. This is the red-ink memorandum which the witness has just testified to: "Witness Leonard Olsson to be asked from what time he had failed to believe in the form of Government in the United States." Now, I ask you to read what I just read [handing card to witness].—A. You have read it correctly.

Q. Well, now do you still testify that you have a present recollection of having asked Leonard Olsson in this Karl Olsen case the very words which you testified to this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, why did you depart from the memorandum?—A. Well, I didn't put the—I didn't tell Mr. Graham the exact words to put on that card, Mr. McCoy; I just merely told him to make a memorandum so that I would not overlook to find out from Mr. Olsson how long he had entertained those views. I did not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Entertained what views?—A. The same views that he expressed in the preceding months in these same cases that I have referred to, that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. Now, tell the committee the exact words that you used when you instructed Mr. Graham to write those words on that card.—A. I can not undertake to do so. I told Mr. Graham to note on the card so that I would not overlook this.

Q. Overlook what?—A. Ascertaining how long Mr. Olsson had not been attached to the principles of the Constitution.

Q. Well, is that what you told Mr. Graham?—A. I would not undertake to give the exact words, but my idea was—what I wanted Mr. Graham to do was to make a notation on there, so that I would not overlook that particular point which I had overlooked, as testified to, in the former petition.

Q. When you were in court in the Karl Olsen case examining Leonard Olsson, did you have that card in your hand?—A. I presume I did.

Mr. McCoy. I want this to go into evidence.

(Card referred to and marked "Exhibit 12.")

Mr. McCoy. Now, this card is now marked "Exhibit 12." On the side of it which is headed "Examiner's report," there appears this writing by Mr. Enslow, from which I read a part:

Witnesses are both Socialists, but state that Olsen has no leaning that way.

I presume that the Olsen referred to is the applicant for citizenship?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, those words are underscored in red lead pencil, who underscored the words?—A. I don't know.

Q. Do you remember whether that was on there when it was handed to you?—A. I can't say as I remember that particularly, but I presume it was. I don't know. I would not undertake to say, but I think it was, Mr. McCoy.

Q. You stated in answer to a question of the chairman, that the particular thing that you had in mind in going through those naturalization law books, and the thing that you wanted particularly to call our attention to was this—one of them at any rate—was this petition for naturalization, and you handed the committee a copy of the naturalization law of November 11, 1911, and at page 13 appears the form of certificate, and you have underscored there the words, "I am attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States." Did you give that part of the certificate, or do you give that part of the petition more consideration than any other part of it when a man applies for citizenship?—A. I can't say that I do. That is one of the qualifications.

Q. But why do you particularize that when the first part of the eighth paragraph of the petition reads:

I am not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government, or a member of or affiliated with any organization or body of persons teaching disbelief in organized government.

A. Well, I merely made reference to that as to what the petition—the petitioner is required to state. It is not embodied in the law there, but it is in the petition which he swore to, that is all. Just merely to show what he swore to.

Q. Well, isn't the main underlying principle of the Constitution, and the underlying thought there, the thought of organized government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And does not the propaganda—whether that word is plural or not I don't know—don't the teachings of the Socialists lead to a more highly organized form of government than we have at present?—A. I believe that it is so claimed, Mr. McCoy, I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Isn't that the thing that makes you object to it and makes me disbelieve in it?—A. I want to say that the Socialistic end of that proposition does not—did not actuate me in making my—starting this action.

Q. Do you think that you can read the clause, "I am attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States" and confine a man's right to naturalization to his answer to that question without knowing something about these other things, or this other thing, namely, "I am not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government"—isn't that the fundamental thing?—A. Yes, I always ask those questions in court.

Q. What weight do you give to them? If a man says, "Yes, I believe in organized government" and then you ask him whether he is attached to the principle of the Constitution, and he says, "No," what is the situation, then, in your mind as to his rights to naturalization?—A. Well, my mind is that they conflict, that he can not be attached to the Constitution—if he says that he believes in organized government, and then says he is not attached to the Constitution of the United States it seems to me that——

Q. (Interrupting.) You think that is an irresistible body coming up against an immovable force, or the other way?—A. No, I can't say that.

Q. Well, isn't it your obligation, then, if you want to give a man an opportunity to become a citizen, to ask him what he means by answering one question in the negative—answering one question one way and one question the other, don't you give him a chance to explain what he means?—A. Oh, yes; if there is anything inconsistent there. I didn't examine Mr. Olsson in his own naturalization case, Mr. McCoy, at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. The real duty finally devolves upon the court, doesn't it, to determine those questions?

A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. But you instituted this proceeding?

A. Absolutely with the court.

Q. But didn't you institute this proceeding to revoke his certificate?—A. I made the affidavit upon which it was brought, yes, sir.

Q. Why was this revocation proceeding brought in the United States district court instead of in the State court?—A. Because we are instructed to bring them in the United States court. We are instructed so to do, to bring those actions in the United States court.

Q. Who instructs you to do that?—A. Our department; that is, refer them to the United States attorney—to make the affidavit and refer to the United States attorney. It is his duty, it is not—I have nothing to do with it after the affidavit is made upon which the proceeding is based. I have nothing whatever to do with the matter then; it is in the hands of the United States attorney.

Q. Where are such proceedings usually instituted, in the State court or in the Federal court?—A. In the Federal court.

Q. Do you know of any proceedings in the State court?—A. Yes, sir; that is——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did not Mr. Enslow testify here yesterday that they were more frequently brought in the State court than in the United States court?—A. I remember him stating something about that. I would like to explain what those proceedings are; I would like to state what they are. So far as my knowledge goes, and I know all of the cases—all of the cases that have been brought for cancellation in the State court were in those cases where there was an irregularity—illegal naturalization without any fraud or intent to deceive, and upon the applicants consenting and requesting, the action was brought in the court where he was naturalized, and the order of naturalization set aside, and then reapplying, to conform strictly with all the provisions of the law. But in no instance where there has been any fraud charged and without the consent of the party who holds the certificate, do I know of that there has been any action brought in the State courts. It is where the parties holding consent and recognize the illegality, and being a shorter way to cancel the certificate, to enable him to promptly reapply to get the papers that can not be attacked. That is the only instance in which we have brought them in the State court.

Q. You say that some literature was handed to you—some Socialist literature was handed to you by Mr. Enslow or Mr. Graham?—A. I believe Mr. Enslow brought—collected some and brought it to the office.

Q. Did you ever show that to Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you did show it to Mr. McLaren?—A. Well, not the document that Mr. Enslow had, but some that have come into my hands since then. I had some at the trial of this cancellation case.

Q. Did you bring them into court with you and there first hand them to Mr. McLaren?—A. To Mr. McLaren; yes, sir.

Q. That was the first time you had——

A. (Interrupting.) In the cancellation proceedings.

Q. Right in court?—A. Yes, sir. I don't remember now what they were. As I remember now, they were not considered by the court.

Q. Now, when Judge Hanford asked Mr. Olsson about the provision in the Constitution as to not depriving a man of his property without due process of law, and when he called his attention to the Socialist teachings with reference to that point, did Mr. Olsson say at all how he proposed to bring about that change in the form of ownership?—A. He answered the question, but I can't give his language.

Q. Did he say anything about bringing about the change under that very provision of the Constitution, namely, by due process of law?—A. I don't know. I don't remember him saying—mentioning anything about that provision. I believe he said that he was going to bring it about by ballot—through the ballot.

Q. In your affidavit on the revocation proceedings, referring to Leonard Olsson, you state:

> That Leonard Olsson, as a witness for Karl Olsen, stated in open court, in answer to interrogatories propounded by affiant, that he, the said Leonard Olsson, was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States; that he believed in radically changing it.

Are those two things synonymous in your mind, that is, is one who believes in radically changing the provisions of the Constitution not attached to the principles of the Constitution?—A. Yes, I will have to say that——

Q. (Interrupting.) You think those are synonymous; you think those two things are synonymous?—A. Yes, sir; looks to me like it.

A recess was here taken until 1.30 o'clock this afternoon.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

Same witness on the stand.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Smith, the Socialists have been pretty active in pushing their cause in the State of Washington, haven't they—in this part of it?

A. I am not advised as to what the Socialists are doing, only what I have seen in the papers.

Q. Is it not a fact that they have been pushing their propaganda, as it is called, pretty hard, and that there has been a strong feeling of opposition aroused as to them here in this State?—A. It would seem so from the newspaper notoriety that has been given it.

Q. Don't you find from talking with people and from what you see in the papers that it is commonly believed that the Socialist propaganda is to create turmoil and end in chaos?—A. I have frequently heard that said.

Q. And that it has no reverence for the Constitution of the United States?—A. Yes, sir, I have heard those expressions.

Q. Do you think that a man should have a reverence for the Constitution before he is fitted to become a citizen?—A. Personally, I do.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you figure, Mr. McCoy, that it is illuminating to get the views of all these witnesses upon these academic questions? Inasmuch as this witness is not to be the judge I care very little myself what his views are on the question and I do not see how it is important.

Mr. MCCOY. I have an opinion that it has some bearing on the witness's testimony.

Mr. HIGGINS. If he were the judge it probably would, but the duty did not devolve upon him to reach that conclusion.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, he had to reach the conclusion as to whether or not he would bring a case before the court.

Mr. HIGGINS. No; he has to present the facts.

Mr. MCCOY. His duties, according to his own testimony, involved the bringing to the attention of somebody—some court that had jurisdiction in the matter anything that he thought would lead or ought to lead to the revocation of naturalization papers, and I just wanted to know in what attitude he approached the performance of those duties; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. MCCOY. In the hearing on the question of the revocation of the certificate of naturalization of Leonard Olsson, did you hear any evidence which tended to prove that he believed that the main purpose of the Socialist was to completely eliminate property rights in the country?

A. I so concluded from his testimony.

Q. Now, what kind of property rights did you conclude that he believed ought to be eliminated?—A. I remember one thing—all producing property—land.

Q. What did he mean by the elimination of property rights?—A. I don't know what he means—I did not attempt to——

Q. (Interrupting.) I am not asking you what Mr. Olsson means, but whether you heard any testimony which lead you to believe that he believed—which lead you to believe that he believed that property rights should be eliminated; now you say that you did hear some such testimony. Is that your answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now what was the testimony which you heard at any time in these revocation proceedings which led you to think that he believed that property rights should be eliminated?—A. As I recall it, he stated that all producing property should be owned in common, and according to his propaganda when that shall be attained there would be no use for the present form of government. Now, how he arrives at that I do not know.

Q. Did you get the impression that in anyway he was to wipe property rights out of existence?—A. I don't know. Common ownership is what I gathered.

Q. That is the property was to be owned by the Government and the fruits of it distributed among the people?—A. I think that is about it.

Q. Does that eliminate property rights?—A. No; I don't suppose it does.

Q. Then there was not any testimony which you heard which led you to think that he wanted to eliminate property rights, but simply wanted to change the form of ownership; wasn't that all?—A. You might put that conclusion on it.

Q. Now, what was the impression which you got?—A. I got the impression from this testimony that he did not believe in the form of government that we have in this country.

Q. I am talking now not about the form of government, but about property rights.—A. I can not enlighten you any further on that.

Q. In other words, you did not get any impression about it?—A. Yes, that he did not believe in the institutions of this country, I got that impression.

Q. Confine yourself now to the question of property rights; did you get any impression as to his beliefs as to property rights and, if so, what?—A. I will say that I can not give you any further information on the subject.

Q. Well, you know what your own impression is.—A. My own impression is that Mr. Olsson is not—his views are not in accord with the form of government that we have.

Q. Now, Mr. Smith, I think you are intelligent enough to distinguish between——A. I am trying to——

Q. (Continuing.) Between the form of government and property rights—I am asking you to confine yourself strictly to property rights. Did you get the impression that he meant simply that property should be owned by the Government, and the fruits of it distributed among the people?—A. Yes, sir; I may say that I did get that impression.

Q. That is the impression that you got, and that is what you would believe to be opposition to the principles of the Constitution, is it?—A. I do not regard that as in keeping with the form of government that we have.

Mr. McCoy. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Gentlemen, do you wish to cross-examine?

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Chairman, at this time, before cross-examining the witness I would like to present to the committee, so that they may be introduced in evidence, the certified copies of the petition for naturalization of Leonard Olsson and of his oath of allegiance and of the order of court admitting him to citizenship, and also a certified copy of his naturalization papers, which papers are duly certified according to acts of Congress by the clerk of the United States district court at Tacoma. They were called for on yesterday, and we have requested that they be furnished, and I now have them [handing documents to the chairman].

I want to have them identified first, and that is my purpose in presenting them at this time, as I want to use them to call the witness's attention to certain matters which are in there, and I would ask that they be treated as in evidence.

(Documents above referred to are received in evidence and marked, respectively, the petition as "Exhibit 13" and the certificate as "Exhibit 14.")

Cross-examination:

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Smith, when you were examined this morning you referred to the forms that are set forth in section 27 of the act of 1906, being the present naturalization laws of Congress; you did not read the form of the declaration of intention or the form of the petition for naturalization, nor the form of the several affidavits, the affidavit of the petitioner and the affidavit of his two subscribing witnesses, did you?

A. I did not.

Q. Neither did you read the form of the certificate of naturalization, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will now ask you to examine the certified copy of the petition for naturalization of Mr. Olsson, which is introduced in evidence as Exhibit No. 13, and state whether that is the form as prescribed in the act of Congress, except that as to the matters descriptive of the man and the facts relating to the man for which there are blanks in the form, it has been filled in here, and as to matters printed which are not applicable to the particular petitioner, the printed matter appears there, but is shown stricken out in the certified copy before you.—A. These papers would seem to meet the requirements.

Q. If you have any doubt of it, glance at the act itself.—A. (Referring to the act.) I see nothing here but what is in accord with the statutes.

Q. So that by an examination of Exhibit No. 13, the Judiciary Committee will have before them the form of the petition as prescribed by the act of Congress—that is what I want to get at.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the oath of the petitioner, as set out in this Exhibit No. 13, with the exception of the name and the date and the name of the officer certifying to the oath, that prescribed in the act of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the affidavit attached to Exhibit No. 13, purporting there to be subscribed by two witnesses, upon the form set out in the act of Congress for the affidavit to be made by the witnesses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if the certificate of naturalization of Leonard Olsson as set forth in Exhibit No. 14 is according to the form for the certificate prescribed in section 27 of the act of Congress.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, referring again to Exhibit No. 13, I observe that a part of it is the oath of allegiance given or made by Leonard Olsson at the time of his admission to citizenship; is that in the form prescribed by the acts of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the examinations for the admission of aliens to citizenship, is the proceeding a formal one in court or an informal one?—A. I would say it is a formal one.

Q. Does the applicant appear by attorney?—A. Very rarely.

Q. The conduct of the examination is what?—A. Usually at the request of the court; either myself or the examiner who happens to attend at those hearings conducts the examination of the petitioner and the witnesses for the court. Oftentimes the court asks questions, and then the court, of course, decides whether the applicant comes within the law.

Q. I will ask you the question so that there may be no confusion between the different proceedings which have been referred to. I believe you did not read in evidence section 15 of the act of Congress—the act of 1906.—A. I think I did.

Q. Was it read in evidence?—A. I think I read it all.

Q. You have nothing to do directly with the institution of the proceedings in court for the cancellation of the certificate of admission to citizenship?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your function under your instructions from your superior is, when the information comes to you, to make the necessary affidavit and supply it to the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there your official duties cease?—A. Yes, sir; it then goes under——

Q. In this case who had charge of the bringing of that proceeding?—A. The United States district attorney.

Q. For this district?—A. For this district.

Q. Who was the officer who actually had charge of the conduct of that proceeding?—A. Mr. W. G. McLaren.

Q. Where was it instituted; that is to say, in what court was it begun in the first instance—in Seattle in the northern division or at Tacoma in the southern district?—A. At Tacoma.

Q. And when was it instituted—that does not appear in the record, and I think it should appear and perhaps we can get the fact later though.—A. I have forgotten the exact date, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Shortly after the date of your affidavit, however, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the fall of 1910?—A. 1910.

Q. 1910 was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the fall of 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What Federal judge customarily presided in the western district?—A. Judge Donworth at the time.

Q. In the Southern division of the western district, I mean.—A. Judge George Donworth.

Q. Until his resignation did any other judge have anything to do with those proceedings?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you recall when he resigned?—A. Judge Donworth?

Q. Yes.—A. No, I do not just at this time.

Q. It was about the 1st of March of this year, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. 1912?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And shortly after Judge Hanford went to Tacoma once a week to hear such matters as required attention and might be brought up for hearing other than at the regular term time.—A. Yes.

Q. And this case was one brought up on one of those occasions when Judge Hanford made his weekly visit to Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who conducted the prosecution of that case?—A. The United States district attorney.

Q. Did he examine the witnesses produced on behalf of the Government?—A. He did.

Q. Who cross-examined them?—A. I think Mr. Nichols, the attorney for Mr. Olsson.

Q. Who directed the examination, or conducted the direct examination, I should say, rather, of the witnesses produced on behalf of the defendant?—A. Mr. Nichols.

Q. And who, if anyone, cross-examined them?—A. Mr. McLaren.

Q. And I understand you to say that in addition to that Judge Hanford, himself, asked the Witness Olsson certain questions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In order that there may be no confusion in your testimony in this case—you first had your attention called to the question of Mr. Olsson's beliefs respecting the Constitution by the Osslund case, was it?—A. The records—I testified that the records of my office showed that the Osslund case had been denied by the court because the petitioner stated that he did not believe in the principles of the Constitution; that in the Stossell case——

Q. One moment. Now, was your attention called to the fact that Mr. Leonard Olsson was one of the subscribing witnesses to the petition of Osslund?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he was also one of the witnesses at the hearing upon that petition on the 8th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he had taken the oath prescribed by the statute in both instances?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next case was the Stossell case. Do I understand you to say that you were present when he was examined in the Stossell case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your attention called to the fact that he was one of the subscribing witnesses in the Stossell case on the petition of Stossell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he had taken the oath prescribed by statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you, yourself, heard his testimony upon the hearing on the 8th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before Judge Chapman?—A. Yes.

Q. And the same is true as to Karl Olsen, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. He was a subscribing witness upon the petition of Karl Olsen?—A. Yes.

Q. And he was a witness upon the hearing of his application?—A. Yes.

Q. And gave the testimony that you have already detailed?—A. Yes.

Q. Having in mind the oath which he had subscribed on his own petition; the testimony that the law would require him to give at the hearing of his application; and this oath of allegiance which he took on his admission, do I understand you to correctly say that you considered the affidavits he made in those other proceedings that I have mentioned and the testimony he gave upon their applications directly contradictory of his own oaths in his own proceeding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the reason why you made the affidavit and presented it to the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in so doing, you were governed by your instructions and by the provisions of section 15?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It might be worth while there to insert in connection with the answer the particular language in section 15, which you and the witness referred to.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, section 15 makes it the duty of the district attorney, upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing the suit for the purpose of setting aside and canceling the certificate of citizenship on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such certificate of citizenship was illegally procured. The balance of the section relates to the method of procedure. I take it that the first section is what the witness referred to. Am I right?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was because, in your opinion, if he had made the same answers, the same oath on his petition, and the same answers at the time of his admission that he subsequently made as a witness for the other parties, the court would have denied his citizenship—denied him admission to citizenship—and you believed that that constituted a fraud upon the court, and that was the reason that you filed this affidavit with the district attorney for his action. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions? Mr. Nichols, is there anything which you wish to suggest?

Mr. NICHOLS. I have nothing to suggest, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HUGHES. I might call attention to the fact that you asked for his general instructions from Washington and you have omitted to ask for the production of them now. If he has them, I suppose this would be the time, while he is being interrogated.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you brought with you the general instructions from Washington, of which mention was made this forenoon?

A. I have not, Mr. Chairman, but I will have an examination made of the files in my office and I will get them ready—I will say that I will be back in a couple of days and I will get them.

Mr. HUGHES. Before proceeding with any other witness, if you are through with this witness, I want to submit to you the certified copy of the demurrer and the ruling of the court for which request was made on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Before the witness leaves the stand there are some papers that I want to identify. [Papers marked "No. 15," for identification, are shown to the witness.]

Mr. Smith, I hand you a copy of a report which you made to the chief of the Division of Naturalization, with a letter which accompanied it when it was sent to me from the office. I now show you this in obedience, or rather in conformity, with a request which Mr. Dorr made of me and of which I spoke this morning. I now show you this document.

A. I have already identified this.

Q. I just want you to identify it now in connection with the other documents, as I want to put it in the record at this time.—A. As I stated before, this appears to be a correct copy of my letter. I have a copy in my own files.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter which accompanied it may go in with it.

The WITNESS. Of course I do not know anything about the first letter. The second one is mine, and I identified it. The signature seems to be that of Charles Earl, Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

(Letter of Mr. Earl, acting secretary, and a copy of Mr. Smith's letter are put in the record at this point and marked "Exhibit No. 16.")

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further questions, this witness will be excused.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know whether a record was made of the statement that I made that I had produced the certified copy of the demurrer and the order of Judge Donworth overruling the demurrer, but it was arranged yesterday that it should be interpolated in the record already introduced, so that there should not be any confusion. I will state right at this time that it appears at page 8 of the record already introduced by the chairman [referring to Exhibit No. 5].

The CHAIRMAN. Is that paper here now? It should be a part of Exhibit No. 5, inserted at page 8. Mr. Smith, when may we look for the printed matter which you promised to furnish us?

Mr. HIGGINS. He said that he would have it inside of two days.

W. G. McLAREN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. W. G. McLAREN.

Q. And your residence?—A. Seattle.

Q. Your present occupation?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. Do you hold any official position?—A. Yes, sir; I am United States attorney for the western district of Washington.

Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Since the first of last month.

Q. Before that did you hold any official position?—A. Yes, sir; I was assistant United States attorney since October, 1908.

Q. Mr. McLaren, do you know Mr. Leonard Olsson?—A. I know him from seeing him in the court room in connection with these proceedings; that is all.

Q. What particular proceedings do you refer to?—A. The cancellation proceedings.

Q. Was that the first time you saw him?—A. It was.

Q. You conducted that proceeding on behalf of the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Nichols on behalf of Mr. Olsson?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any other attorneys connected with it at that time?—A. No; there were not.

Q. Was Mr. McKay there then or not?—A. No; he was not.

Q. What was your first connection with that proceeding?—A. Why, when the case was started my best recollection is that it came to me in the first instance; that is, it came to the office, and I was assistant United States attorney at that time and in the natural division of the work in the office at that time. This was no exception—cases of that character had been usually assigned to me, so that that explains my first connection with the case.

Q. Were you familiar with the facts of it or the alleged facts of it before the hearing began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom did you learn, then?—A. Mr. John Speed Smith, the naturalization examiner.

Q. Was there any other business transacted in court that day?—A. I do not recollect. There were no other cases tried that day; I am quite certain of that. I beg pardon, yes; there were several motions argued before the court on that day.

Q. Before or after this hearing?—A. Before.

Q. Did you participate in any of them?—A. No; they were all private citizens.

Q. This is the only proceeding that you had in the court that day?—A. Yes; unless I may have had some ex parte orders signed—I do not recollect that I had.

Q. Starting now with the beginning of the proceedings in court, will you give us as good an account of what occurred there as you can?—A. Yes, sir. I called as witnesses for the Government's side of the case, Mr. Smith, who testified before you this morning, Mr. Enslow, who testified before you yesterday, Mr. McFarland, who was deputy county clerk of the superior court in which the naturalization certificate of Leonard Olsson had been issued. Mr. Enslow testified, as nearly as I can recollect now, about to the following state of facts: That at the time in 1910 when these proceedings regarding Leonard Olsson's application took place he was one of the examiners of the naturalization bureau; that on one occasion when he was in Tacoma making some preliminary examinations of the witnesses and applicants he met Mr. Leonard Olsson; that he was examining Mr. Olsson as a witness for some other applicant, whose name I do not now recall, and in that discussion with Leonard Olsson he learned—he got his impression of him that he was not in smypathy with out Government at all. That discussion, if you might call it such, did not last very long, for the reason that Mr. Enslow was busy with the other matters that he was there attending to in the examination of other witnesses. However, he testified before Judge Hanford in this hearing that he got the impression then that Leonard Olsson was a very radical man in his views toward the Government.

Q. What word did he use?—A. Radical. He testified further, I think on the following day, or at any rate a very few days after that, while he was carrying on some of his duties also in Tacoma, that he had another discussion with Leonard Olsson, brought about by Olsson coming to his office where he was and again explaining his views on matters of government and bringing along with him some literature, I believe, of the same character. That discussion—I asked Mr. Enslow if that second meeting was of his seeking or Leonard Olsson's; and he said it was Leonard Olsson's; that he came there voluntarily without any suggestion from Mr. Enslow. At that discussion, which lasted much longer than the first one, he discussed thoes various matters with Leonard Olsson, or at least Olsson did with him—as I recollect it he said that Olsson did most of the discussing—and Enslow testified that he got the impression, and so testified, that Leonard Olsson was a very radical man in his views toward the Government—as I recollect it, his words were something like this—that if he was not an anarchist he was verging pretty close in that direction; that is as nearly as I can recollect the substance of it. Enslow also testified that in August or September, 1910, I forget which, he was present in the superior court of Pierce County, at Tacoma, when Leonard Olsson did appear as a witness for some other applicant; that his attention—now at this point I am not certain whether it was Mr. Enslow or one of the other witnesses, Mr. McFarland, testified to what Mr. Olsson testified to as a witness, and I will take that up later, if it is satisfactory to the commission.

Enslow testified also that he had seen Leonard Olsson conducting or participating in a number of street-corner meetings on the streets of Tacoma in which he was, you might say, urging his views and distributing literature. He did not see any of the literature and knew nothing of its contents, except that he might infer it to be of a general nature the same as the subject matter of the discussion between himself and Olsson previously.

As I say, I am not clear now whether Mr. Enslow testified to what I am now going to say, or whether it was some other witness; but I know that Mr. McFarland testified that he was present at the time Leonard Olsson testified in the superior court as a witness for some other applicant for naturalization, and that his attention had been previously called to Leonard Olsson's testimony by Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith had requested him to take particular notice what Leonard Olsson testified or might testify in response to Smith's questions; and he testified that Mr. Smith asked Olsson while he was on the stand whether or not he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the happiness and good order of the United States, and that Olsson said "No." Mr. McFarland was also questioned as to whether or not there was any qualification of Leonard Olsson's degree of attachment, either in the questions put to him or the answers which he gave, and he said there was not. As I say, I am not clear whether Mr. Enslow testified to that or not, but I do know that Mr. McFarland did. I also called Mr. Smith as a witness. Now, just a moment—yes; I called Mr. Smith as a witness, and he testified that he was present in the superior court at the time—sometime in September, I think, or August, 1910—when Leonard Olsson was a witness for another applicant, when he was asked if he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and Olsson replied that he was not. Then, continuing Mr. Smith's testimony, he testified that it occurred to him afterwards that he had failed to ask Olsson whether or not he had entertained these same views at the time he himself was naturalized. So he made a note of the next case in which Leonard Olsson appeared as a witness, so as to be present and examine him on that further point, which he did, and it was that second examination at which Deputy Clerk McFarland was present and testified concerning. He testified that he asked Olsson if he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, and Olsson replied "No," or that he was not—I forget the exact words. He then asked Olsson how long he had entertained those views, and he replied "Some two or three years." He asked him again if he entertained those views at the time he himself—he, Leonard Olsson—was naturalized, and the answer was that he had. The testimony was also brought out by Mr. Enslow, I believe it was, that in one of the cases for which Leonard Olsson had appeared as a witness in the superior court the application of the applicant was denied by the superior court for the reason that and on account of the views which that applicant entertained toward the Government, and that applicant's views were substantially the same as those of Leonard Olsson.

The CHAIRMAN. That last statement of yours was a mere conclusion of the witness, was it, or was that a statement made of the views of each of those men?

A. Well, it was not a statement of the views of each of those men, but it came about in this way. He had just finished testifying regarding what Leonard Olsson's views were and then he put in this other statement that this particular applicant had been denied citizenship in a hearing in which Leonard Olsson was a witness for the reason that he entertained certain views, and he said those views were substantially the same as those of Mr. Olsson.

Q. So that it was just judgment or opinion?—A. It was his judgment on the comparison of the two statements of the views, yes, sir.

Q. That is what I wanted to get at?—A. Yes, sir. I do not now recollect any other material matter that was developed by the Government's witnesses. Do you wish me to go ahead with the defendant's?

Q. Yes, sir, if you have finished with the Government.—A. I think I have. I may think of something later on; I do not now. The witnesses for the defense were Mr. Rush or Rash and Mr. and Mrs. Eskelund and a Mrs. Gelterman—I forgot how the name is spelled—the two women testified in response to questions by Olsson's attorney that they considered Olsson was a good citizen and that he had conducted himself as such. It did not appear, so far as I could gather from the cross-examination of them, that they had any other basis for their opinion or any other opportunity for knowing of Olsson's fitness, or otherwise, than you might say a neighborhood acquaintance with him and seeing him on the street occasionally in Tacoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps we might shorten that, Mr. McLaren, in this manner—am I right in saying that Olsson's standing and reputation for honesty and industry and such habits as this was not questioned at all?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Then the character of that is not really worth bothering with.—A. And I did not consider it so at the time of the hearing. I can not distinguish now as to which men testified to certain things in Olsson's behalf—there were two men testified in his behalf.

Q. Rust and Eskelund?—A. Yes, sir—one of those witnesses—well, they both testified to having known Olsson for several years and considering him a good citizen. That they belonged to the same organization as Mr. Olsson and it was at the meetings of this organization that they had learned whatever they knew regarding Olsson's fitness for citizenship, and at those meetings they were accustomed, I think about every two weeks, to meet and discuss governmental matters.

Q. Do you refer to the Socialist Labor Party?—A. No—one of them—one of those meetings—one of those organizations, I think, was the Socialist Labor Party, in view of what Olsson himself testified to later that he belonged to that party. That there was apparently some sort of society which this witness himself attended and which required some sort of a pledge to be given and signed by the applicant before he could be admitted to that organization. My best recollection is that the witness did not testify that Olsson himself belonged to that particular organization. I went into it, as showing the attitude of this particular witness towards such questions in a general way. One of those witnesses, and I forget now which one, when questioned as to his attitude toward the government and accomplishing the changes, said that he was in favor of abolishing our present form of government entirely and when asked how that was to be brought about he replied by ballot and backing up our ballot by our might. Olsson himself testified in his own behalf saying that——

Q. Before you leave that question. Was his answer developed in any way by question or any explanation given as to what he meant by his answer?—A. Olsson's?

Q. No; the one which you have just recited, that he would effect the change by ballot and by backing up the ballot by their might.—A. That answer was developed in response to one of my questions on cross-examination, he having testified in chief that he believed in abolishing our present form of government entirely and substituting for it what he called, I think, an industrial democracy—I think that was the expression he used.

Mr. HUGHES. An industrial what?

A. An industrial democracy—I am not positive about the exact wording of it—and I asked him how he expected to accomplish that and he gave the answer that I have just stated—"By our ballot and backing up our ballot by our might." Olsson himself testified that he had entertained the same views for a number of years, I forget how many years, but at least antedating his application for citizenship; that he was devoting considerable time, I might say, to the urging of the adoption of his views among his acquaintances and people generally; that he did not believe in our form of government at all; that he thought that it ought to be entirely changed; that the workingman did not have a fair chance with our present system of government.

On cross-examination Judge Hanford asked him some questions, as I recollect it, about as follows: Whether or not he was familiar with a certain provision of the Constitution regarding the taking of property without due process of law. Olsson replied that he was familiar with it. He then asked Olsson how he expected his proposed system of government, if any, to be brought about with reference to existing property rights—whether he intended that all property rights should be taken away. Olsson replied that he did not mean that. The judge enumerated certain classes of property, for instance, stocks, bonds, securities, or moneys, and buildings that people have put up on lands and so on. Olsson said he did not mean all of it. He said, "Let them keep their money and securities, and such papers," as the judge had given as instances, "but," he said, "I mean that we should take away all of the land and the products of collective labor—that they should belong to the people."

The judge also asked him if he knew one Bruce Rogers, and I do not recollect whether Olsson said he did not or whether he was not sure; at any rate, the judge went on and explained who Bruce Rogers was; that he was quite a prominent Socialist in this locality and had written certain public letters in the newspapers, setting forth certain views that were supposed to be entertained by himself and others of the same organization. At that point Olsson said he was not a Socialist, but he belonged to the Socialist Labor Party and explained the same—just what the difference was—that the Socialist Labor Party had in mind more the particular interests of the laboring classes, and as far as I recollect that was the substance of the distinction. At that point he produced certain publications which he had in his pocket, which I presume contained views similar to the ones he entertained. I received those from him and offered them in evidence and they were denied—the judge did not receive them.

Q. What did the judge say in passing upon the matter?—A. He said, "No; I do not care to see them," he said, "I have heard enough about these already," or some such language as that.

Q. Did you look at them sufficiently to be able to tell us what they were about?—A. No; I did not look at them at all.

Q. Whether they were platforms or some other form of literature?—A. I did not examine the contents at all. As I recollect it, it was a newspaper, but I would not be positive about that.

Q. Did Mr. Olsson make any statement then as to what was in this paper?—A. Except to this extent. I was asking him at the time about certain publications of the I. W. W. organization and I think it was at that point that he pulled these papers out of his pocket. I did not examine their contents. I thought this way: If they do represent his views I will simply pass them to the court, if the court cares to consider them—I mean as a branch of the Socialist organization or Socialist Labor Party, as he put it—I did not examine their contents, and the judge did not receive them in evidence or consider them. On cross-examination it was also brought out that Leonard Olsson was belonging to the I. W. W. organization. I had been furnished at the trial, by Mr. Smith, with certain pamphlets, copies of their literature, containing their constitution and by-laws, and, I think, one newspaper publication from Spokane.

Q. Do you recall the name of it?—A. Of the paper?

Q. Yes.—A. No; I do not, Mr. Chairman. I asked the defendant if those publications represented his views, he having testified that he belonged to the I. W. W. and they being I. W. W. publications, and he looked at them and he said that they were not published by the same faction of the I. W. W. that he belonged to.

Q. Then when the papers were given you it was not claimed that they were obtained from Olsson or that he had been circulating those or similar ones?—A. Yes.

Q. They were simply papers that Mr. Smith had found somewhere and handed to you?—A. Yes, sir; which might possibly set forth the views of the organizations in which or with which Mr. Olsson was in sympathy. That was the idea in putting those in, but when he said that they were not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you find that out before you offered them in evidence?—A. I found that out before I offered them in evidence; when he said that they were not published by the same faction of the I. W. W. that he belonged to, I did not offer them in evidence.

Q. Was it at that time that he distinguished between the wings of that organization, if he did so distinguish?—A. He made some distinction. Pardon me, you mean——

Q. The I. W. W.—A. He made some distinction between the faction which he belonged to and the faction which was responsible for these publications. The nature of that distinction was not made clear to me, and I can not give any impression that I got from it.

Q. Well, did he refer to his branch of it as having its headquarters at Detroit, Mich.?—A. No; he did not.

Q. Very well.—A. (Continuing.) He testified also regarding the answers which he gave and the questions which were put to him while he was asked questions as a witness, and in that respect, too, he controverted the testimony of Mr. Smith and Mr. McFarland in this: He said the question was whether he was devotedly attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and if that was the question that he answered when he gave the answer that he did. I asked what he meant by being devotedly attached to the Constitution, and he said, "I mean this, that I do not worship the Constitution as a man might worship his idol or an image." That was about the answer he gave in answer to that question.

Q. Was here any controversy or comment at that time on the use of the word "devotedly;" that is, as to whether he used that word on some former occasion or not?—A. Why, that is the very controversy I have just now been telling about; that he claimed that he was asked the question with the word "devotedly" in it. The other witness denied that that qualification was ever put in the question or the answer.

Q. Just how did he come to make that denial?—A. In response to a question by his own attorney.

Q. Do you recall the question?—A. I believe it came up something like this, that Mr. Nichols asked him if he had heard the testimony of the Government witnesses regarding his having testified so and so regarding his attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and Olsson said he had; and I believe Mr. Nichols then asked him to state to the court just what the question was that was put to him and what his answer was, and he answered as I have just indicated to you, that the question contained the qualification "devotedly."

Q. Did he go any further in his explanation than as you have stated, to say that he did not worship it—that he gave a negative answer; did he, of his own motion or in answer to the questions, say what his affirmative state of mind was on that point?—A. Yes, sir; he did at that time and generally throughout his testimony; that is, he believed in abolishing entirely our present system of government; that we ought not to have a political government at all; that it was not necessary; that if those changes which he had in mind could be brought about—and then he used the expression "in an industrial form of government."

Q. A democracy?—A. I can not say about his using the word "democracy," but that was the way I caught it.

Q. Did he give any explanation of that phrase, as to his understanding of what the industrial democracy would be or what kind of a government that would be?—A. No; he did not. He did not explain what form of a government that would be at all. He made several statements regarding it, but I could not interpret them as being in the nature of an explanation or discussion or as to what kind of government that would be.

Q. How much of the questioning was done by Judge Hanford?—A. Just what I have indicated to you.

Q. Well, you mentioned, as I remember it, only in regard to his stating certain constitutional provisions regarding the taking of property without due process of law.—A. Yes, sir; and also if he knew and was in sympathy with the views of one Bruce Rogers.

Q. Did Judge Hanford say anything further about Mr. Rogers?—A. No; except in explaining to the witness that—

Q. What I want to get at is this, did he say anything to indicate that one holding views similar to Mr. Rogers's views would be in bad standing in his court, for instance?—A. May I answer that question this way?

Q. Answer it your way, your answers are very clear and satisfactory to the committee.—A. When he asked the witness if he knew Bruce Rogers and the witness seemed to be in doubt as to who might be meant, the judge said that Mr. Rogers was a prominent—I think he said a prominent Socialist and a prominent member of some organization of that kind who in a certain public letter on a certain date had expressed the following views—and then the judge read a sentence—I think he read it, or gave it from memory. I don't know which, but I thought at the time that he was reading it from a clipping that he had, which contained a statement of some very violent views—I can't give the language of it—toward the Government, and at that point the witness replied that he was not a Socialist himself and did not know Bruce Rogers—that he belonged to the Socialist Labor Party. I did not get the impression from the distinction that the witness made out between the Socialist Party and the Socialist Labor Party that there was any—well, I don't recollect any other difference except emphasis that he placed on the laboring classes, which he thought would be more clearly represented by the labor party.

Q. Did he express any views as to how the change should be effected?—A. By ballot.

Q. And was there any expression with reference to the use or not use of force in effecting the change?—A. Not in so many words.

Q. In other words, did he say anything with reference to the views of the Socialist Labor Party as to effecting the changes by violence or not effecting them that way?—A. Not in so many words; no.

Q. Did he in any way?—A. Well, to my way of thinking he did; yes. That is, he said "by ballot," and I got the impression from what he said and the way in which he said it that he intended the ballot to be final; that if they outnumbered them that they would have what they were seeking for. As I say, he did not make any express statement to that effect.

Q. Did he convey to your mind the impression that it was by purely peaceful means they hoped to effect the change?—A. No; he did not.

A. He did not?—A. No; he did not.

Q. Did he give you any different impression from that? —A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, the ballot, of course, would be a peaceful way of effecting it—now what was the thing that gave you the impression that he would stand for other means than the peaceful ones?—A. I can not give any exact language at this time which gave that impression to me. I got my impression, as I say, partly from what he said and his general manner and demeanor while he was saying it, while he was testifying throughout. Well, one expression now recurs to me, that by the ballot, if they outnumbered the other side, you might say, on the voting, that that would be the end of it; and that impression that I got was, I might say, corroborated by the testimony of one of his own witnesses who said on cross-examination that he intended to bring this about "by our ballot and backing up our ballot by our might."

Q. Then you charged Olsson with the effect which the other man's remark "By our might," made upon your mind?—A. No, I do not say that I did that, Mr. Chairman, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, can you think of any language that Olsson used which would justify an inference that he had any other than peaceful means of accomplishing his party's purposes in his mind?—A. Not at the present time, no.

Q. How long did the entire hearing take?—A. To the best of my recollection it was about a couple of hours; I am not certain, but I think about a couple of hours.

Q. Waiving, for the purpose of the question, these peculiar political views of Mr. Olsson; in all other respects did he impress you as a man worthy of citizenship, as to intelligence, sincerity, and industry and habits of life, in every way except his connection with this Socialist Labor Party—did he impress you as a man who was worthy of being admitted to citizenship?—A. He did in all the qualifications which you have mentioned, except sincerity.

Q. Give us your impression on that line.—A. My impression on that was gathered from the way in which he answered the question regarding his attachment to the principles of the Constitution. His answer and the manner of making it when he put in the word "devotedly" was evasive—that is the impression I got.

Q. Were you moved in any way in reaching the conclusion there, by the statements made and the testimony given by Mr. Smith and the other witnesses who contradicted him on that point?—A. Not any more so than one ordinarily would where there is a dispute in testimony—a flat contradiction.

Q. If he were correct and that the word "devotedly" had been used on the former occasion, your conclusion would be erroneous, would it not? That he used it evasively on that day?—A. No, I would not say that it would be; that is, you mean this, that my conclusion of his evasiveness was based entirely on the fact that his testimony was contradictory of the other witnesses. I did not base my conclusion entirely on the fact that his testimony was contradictory of that of other witnesses, but it was his manner in giving the answer.

Q. What would your conclusion be if, as a matter of fact, the word "devotedly" had been used on the former occasion?—A. Do you mean as to his evasive manner?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, that would lessen, of course, my impression as to his evasiveness.

Q. Would it not remove it so far as that word was concerned?—A. No, it would not.

Q. Of course you would not claim, Mr. McLaren, that even if your conclusion were correct and that his answer was evasive, that that would disqualify him for citizenship; in other words, you do not think that a disposition to be evasive in giving answers in and of itself would disqualify a man from becoming a citizen?—A. Not necessary, no; it would depend on the questions concerning which he might be said to be evasive.

Q. If that was a cause for disfranchisement it would operate pretty generally?—A. Yes, it probably would.

Q. Is there anything else concerning the hearing there which you wish to add; let me put it to you as a lawyer—this was considered as a proceeding in the nature of a chancery proceeding, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the evidence, if preserved, would be practically called a certificate of evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, supposing we were trying to prepare a certificate of evidence; is there anything that you think of which you have not told which should be added in order to make a complete certificate of evidence?—A. No; I do not think of anything, unless it would be the fact that at the close of the testimony and of the argument on both sides that the judge said that this was a matter of considerable importance, and he would take it under advisement, and at that point I think the court was adjourned.

Q. How soon after that was the decision rendered?—A. About two weeks, to my best recollection.

Q. That was the written opinion which is published?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the first hearing of the kind in which you participated?—A. Yes. We have had a number of cases for cancellation, but I think this was the only contested case that I ever had anything to do with.

Q. Was there aything said by the judge or by you or by any of the officials there as to the necessity or propriety of keeping a record of the evidence?—A. None whatever.

Q. As a matter of fact, no record whatever was kept?—A. No.

Q. And we are entirely dependent upon the recollection of those who were there as to what evidence there was?—A. As far as I know there was no record kept by anybody; there was no official record kept, I know that.

Q. No minutes made of it?—A. No.

Q. So far as you know?—A. So far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all that I desire to ask.

Mr. WINSOR. I would like the article signed Bruce Rogers, which has been referred to, to be brought into the record if it can be produced; that is the article which the judge used in questioning Olsson.

The CHAIRMAN. Enough has been said about it to make it admissible, at least if we can find it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hand you the article. If you will permit me to make a suggestion, I would suggest that the witness be shown the article and asked after examining it if he can recall what portion the judge read as the basis for propounding the question to the witness Olsson. [Here Mr. Hughes hands document to the chairman.]

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Witness, we hand you a clipping from the Post-Intelligencer of date March 25, 1912, and I will ask you if you can identify that as the clipping from which Judge Hanford read on the occasion you have described.

A. The best of my recollection is that this is the article from which Judge Hanford either read or quoted from memory.

Q. Can you indicate in it the particular portion of it which the judge read?—A. My best recollection is that——

Q. Just indicate it first and we can use it after you have pointed it out.—A. It is paragraph 3 [pointing], the third paragraph.

Q. Consisting of these four lines and a half?—A. No; that is not the one. Pardon me; it is there [pointing].

Mr. HIGGINS. Will you mark it, please?

A. (Witness does so.) Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Your request was that the whole article be inserted in the record?

Mr. WINSOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Why should it go in, except that portion of it referred to by the judge? Is there any reason why the rest of it should go in?

Mr. WINSOR. Simply, as interpreting that part, the whole context of the paper should go in.

Mr. MCCOY. Suppose we let it all go in, there is no materiality to it, because the witness at the time said that he did not know Bruce Rogers, or whatever the man's name is, but if anyone wants it in it might go in.

Mr. WINSOR. It shows the different forms——

The CHAIRMAN. It sheds light on the court's state of mind, that is all, or it might do so.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will you read it, Mr. McLaren?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is inclined to think the whole thing may go in.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will you read, Mr. McLaren, the section, to the best of your recollection, that Judge Hanford read and had in mind at the time he was interrogating the witnesses in this case?

Mr. MCLAREN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that it be marked as an exhibit first.

(Newspaper clipping marked "Exhibit 17.")

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

A. I am not certain that the judge read the entire paragraph, but it was in this paragraph; he read at least part of it, and I think he read all of it—shall I read it all?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want you to read any more than the judge read or that the judge by his questions indicated that he had in his mind, if you are able to do that.

A. This is what I have in mind that the judge read [reading]:

> We do not regard the American flag in any greater degree than we do the Russian, German, or English flags, or that of any other capitalist or feudal nation whose people depend in the main for their food, clothing, and shelter upon the capitalistic mode of production involving the essential exploitation of labor through a system of wage slavery. We propose to abolish all such systems and governments and to substitute therefor a manner of human society by cooperation and mutual aid pretty much like the present day trusts, and based directly upon the industries. To be absolutely direct, we propose the entire overthrow of the Government of the United States and to establish an industrial republic wherein all present-day political functions will become extinct.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. McLaren, at the hearing on the revocation question was any witness asked what Mr. Leonard Olsson testified on his admission to citizenship?

A. No; for the reason that that was admitted in the pleadings; in the petition for revocation it alleged that he had testified that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and that allegation was admitted by the answer.

Q. That was not elaborated?—A. No.

Q. By any testimony further than that?—A. Not that I recollect at all.

Q. Now, did Mr. Nichols on his cross examination of the Government's witnesses bring out the question, or attempt to, as to whether or not the word "devotedly" was used?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. And that was on the examination of Olsson following that that he denied, or at least he asserted that he had not been asked that question?—A. Yes; Mr. Nichols asked each of those witnesses if it was not true that the qualification was put in the question, and they each denied it.

Q. Now, Mr. McLaren, is it or is it not true that the advocacy of socialism here in the State of Washington has become so active that it aroused a certain opposition of a determined character in any way?—A. No, I can not say that it has.

Q. Has there not grown to be rather an almost bitter feeling on the question here on the coast?—A. No, I can not say that there is. There has been a great deal of feeling aroused on the question of the I. W. W. organizations, but not particularly so, I think, with reference to socialism.

Mr. HIGGINS. I wish you would furnish the name of that organization instead of the initials.—A. It is the Industrial Workers of the World.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, as the matter of socialism was talked about here and written about in the newspapers has there not a marked division, an active division of sentiment on the question of the socialist doctrines, arisen?

A. Not to my knowledge. The only incident that might perhaps bear out such a statement would be that paragraph of the clipping which I read to you a moment ago, which was published in the public press of this city.

Q. You mean that that article aroused a discussion of a general nature in regard to socialism?—A. Well, the expression of such views as those—I do not know whether that particular article did or not, but I know that that portion of it, as I say, if anything, would tend to bring about the condition which you have just suggested that it would be or was some such expression as that taken in connection with the certain agitations by the other organization, the I. W. W.

Q. You say that it would tend to do it. Do you mean it has actually excited or brought about that result here?—A. No; I am not certain that it has. I say this, that so far as my knowledge goes nothing would tend to produce that result unless it was that quotation that I have referred to. In that connection, of course, you will bear in mind that the defendant denied being a socialist.

Q. For the purpose of my question I was classing the socialists and the Socialist Labor Party adherents in the same classification. Now, can you, Mr. McLaren, let us hear in a little more detail how the evasiveness, as you characterized it, of Mr. Olsson was exhibited at this time, what questions were asked of him, and the answers to which indicated any such attitude?—A. Well, the question regarding the devotedly qualification about his attachment, and I might say also the questions as to how he expected to bring about those changes in the Government, to my mind they were evasive; that is, the exact means.

Q. Well, was he asked specifically whether he believed in retaining certain provisions of the Constitution or doing away with them?—A. Well, I think I asked him that for the purpose of—that is, in substance that—for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was opposed simply to certain specific provisions of our Constitution or whether he was opposed to it in its entirety, and his answers, in substance, were that he was opposed to it altogether and opposed to our present form of government and opposed to any political government. I asked him that so as to bring out that very thing—whether or not he was simply opposed to some one or two or several specific provisions of the Constitution.

Q. Did he not explain that his opposition to political form of government simply meant that the socialists would like to change the method in which property is owned and the fruits of it distributed?—A. No.

Q. Was not that the distinction that he made?—A. That is the distinction that he dwelt upon principally; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McLaren, are you familiar with the instances testified about by Mr. Smith where the certificate of naturalization was denied?

A. No, except as to——

Q. In which Leonard Olsson was a witness for the applicant?—A. I have no direct knowledge of any of those cases. I got my information from Mr. Enslow and from Mr. Smith and from the other witnesses, and they testified to that in court, as I have just indicated.

Cross-examination:

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. McLaren, if I may be permitted by the committee, for the purpose of refreshing the witness' recollection I would like to propound such questions to Mr. McLaren as will accord with Judge Hanford's recollection of the questions propounded by him to Mr. Olsson. I simply want to ask you, Mr. McLaren, if I am so permitted, whether these are not substantially the questions propounded——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) You can use your own judgment as to the form of the question. Of course, I would say to you, in frankness, that so far as I, as chairman, am concerned, the testimony would have a great deal more weight if the witness gave it from his recollection rather than if you give a narrative statement of it for him and he gives his assent to that statement.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not see how I can ask him if such and such questions were asked unless I present the questions.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be very easy to ask him in this instance, at least, if you care to do it, what question was asked, but you can pursue your own course now.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, this is a cross-examination and he has already given the narrative.

Q. I would like to ask you if the first question propounded by Judge Hanford was not this: "Have you read the Constitution of the United States?"—A. Yes, sir—"Have you read it and are you familiar with it?"

Q. And the witness answered that in the affirmative?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Didn't he then ask this question—and I am only attempting to give it in substance—"Do you understand that one of its articles"—referring to the articles of the Constitution—"provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law"?—A. Yes, sir; that is the substance of it—he called his particular attention to that provision.

Q. Quoting the provision?—A. Yes, sir; substantially.

Q. And what answer was given?—A. He said that he was familiar with it.

Q. He said he knew that that was in the Constitution?—A. Oh, yes; and was familiar with it.

Q. Did not Judge Hanford then ask the witness in substance this question: "Do you believe, notwithstanding that provision of the Constitution, that it is right to take away from the owners of property all their money and bonds and valuable securities and buildings and lands and factories and means of transportation"?—A. Yes, sir; that is the substance of the question that I testified about a while ago when the judge enumerated certain specific classes of property.

Q. The question as I have stated it covers the field substantially embraced in the question propounded by Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; it does.

Q. Now, do you recall what answer the witness made to that question?—A. He said this, that he did not mean to deprive people of all of that property, meaning all those different kinds of property, and he said that their money and their—that other classes of personal property you mentioned—he did not mean to include those, but he said their lands and all the product of collective labor should be taken away.

Q. Did he say to whom they should belong?—A. He said they belonged to the people generally.

Q. He said they belonged to the people generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, was to be taken from the individual ownership?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the persons who might now own them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And given over to the community—to the people generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not Judge Hanford ask him this question thereupon, to wit, "By what method do you believe the change of ownership can be accomplished"?—A. Yes; I think he did ask that question in substance.

Q. And what answer did Mr. Olsson make to that?—A. By the ballot.

Q. By the power of the ballot, wasn't it?—A. By the power of the ballot, yes—now——

Q. And what question immediately followed that?—A. I do not recollect. I can not recall what followed that immediately.

Q. Well, was there anything said by the witness, called out by the question propounded in that connection as to the manner of acquiring possession and control for the benefit of the community?—A. I can not recall it, Mr. Hughes. There was one witness—I don't think it was Mr. Olsson, but my recollection is not clear.

Q. Confining yourself to Mr. Olsson and as to your recollection of him—did not he testify in that connection, following the question that I have referred to, that when the individuals had been deprived of their property and there was no property besides the common property, there would be no longer any necessity for government, or political government of any kind?—A. Yes, sir; that there would be no need for government; yes.

Mr. McCoy. Government, or political government?

A. Government.

Mr. Hughes. Are you certain about that?

A. Yes, sir; I answered it.

Q. I mean as to whether he used the word "government" or "political government"?—A. Yes, sir; I say "government." He did not use the words "political government." He said there would be no need for government when that was accomplished.

Q. Was anything said about courts at that time or any need of courts?—A. I do not recollect that there was. There may have been; I do not recollect, Mr. Hughes. I recall one other question that the judge asked him. He said: "Mr. Olsson, we have under our present Government certain officers, such as constables, sheriffs, and such like," and he asked him what his views were regarding public officers of that kind under his proposed change, and he said they would not be needed, or words to that effect.

Q. Can you state what character of government he contemplated would take the place of our existing form of government?—A. No, I can not.

Q. So far as shown by his answers at that time?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. I mean so far as shown by his answers at that time.—A. I can not, except in his own words when he said that he would abolish all political governments and substitute an industrial organization or an industrial republic or a democracy. I forget which word he did use after the ord industrial—his idea, in substance, being that the laboring classes would be in control.

Q. Was it in the same connection with those questions which you have already stated Judge Hanford propounded to him, and following them, that he called his attention to Bruce Rogers?—A. It was in the same connection; yes sir.

Q. Do you remember what answer the witness made as to whether he knew Bruce Rogers or knew of his doctrines and read any of his publications?—A. He said he did not know him, and I believe he said he was not familiar with whatever doctrines Bruce Rogers might have.

Q. When Judge Hanford read or stated the quotation from the article published by Bruce Rogers in the Post-Intelligencer under date of March 25, 1912, which you have already quoted in the record, did Judge Hanford follow it by asking the witness whether he approved those views?—A. He asked some such question as that, and it was in answer to that question, I believe, that the witness said that he himself was not a Socialist.

Q. Well, was not that question proposed with the idea of calling for an answer as to whether the statements contained in the article of Rogers's which were repeated in that hearing were a fair expression of his own views on the subject?—A. I can not recollect, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Well, did he in this connection answer or did he refuse to answer or did he appear to evade?—A. Well, I thought his answer was evasive.

Mr. McCoy. Which answer do you mean—the one in which he said he was not a Socialist?

A. The answer to the question as to whether or not he knew Bruce Rogers and was in sympathy with the doctrines contained in that letter. He answered it—so far as I can recollect the only answer he did give was that he did not know Bruce Rogers and was not a Socialist himself, and from that he branched off into explaining what he was—that he was belonging to the Socialist Labor Party.

Mr. Hughes. Were there any other questions propounded by Judge Hanford?

A. I do not recall any; no.

Q. Had you examined him previously?—A. Somewhat; yes.

Q. Do you recall; that is to say, he had been examined in chief by Mr. Nichols?—A. Yes.

Q. And then examined somewhat by you before Judge Hanford asked him the questions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the questions Judge Hanford propounded did you propound further questions to him?—A. I think I did—I resumed the cross-examination; yes, sir.

Q. You have stated that when the witness produced certain papers that you offered them in evidence.—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Was there an objection made to their being introduced in evidence?—A. Well, I do not recollect.

Q. On the part of Mr. Nichols?—A. I do not recollect. I think there was, but I am not clear on that subject. I know they were not admitted.

Q. At the conclusion of the testimony were arguments made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By counsel for both sides?—A. Yes, sir; there were.

Q. And after argument the court announced, as you have heretofore stated.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That on acccount of the importance of the question involved that he would take the case under advisement.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You argued it on behalf of the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it that your argument was for the cancellation of the certificate on the evidence and under the law.—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. That was then your conviction, was it, or were you simply presenting that merely in your conception of your general duty as an attorney for the Government?—A. That was my conviction. May I be allowed to answer further on that question, Mr. Hughes?

The Chairman. Yes; make any explanation you desire.

A. It represented my convictions, for the reason that I felt that his true views had not been presented to the court which granted him his papers, and on account of that irregularity, and least constructive fraud, the papers ought to be canceled. I felt that way for another reason, on account of the fact that I knew, as has been testified in that hearing, that the same court which granted his papers had denied other applicants papers for substantially the same grounds that we were now seeking to have those canceled.

Q. Mr. McLaren, did you report the result of this case to the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you that report?—A. No; I have not got it with me. We make our usual reports of all those cases both at the time they are started and at the conclusion of the case—we are required to make a regular report.

Mr. DORR. I think the committee has the copy of that report as furnished by the Attorney General—we are alluding to the report made by Mr. McLaren on the Leonard Olsson case.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already gone into the record.

Mr. DORR. I think not—not his report—it was the report of Mr. Smith.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you through with the examination. If you are, I had intended to have the witness identify that report.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; if the chairman intended to present that matter at this point I will desist.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McLaren, I hand you a copy of a letter furnished me by the Attorney General purporting to be a copy of your letter to him [showing].

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the one to which Mr. Hughes refers, is it not?—A. Well, I did not think it was. I thought he had reference to the regular report we make on each case when it is started and the report at the time of its closing. That was the special report that was called for.

Mr. HUGHES. It was my intention to call for both the first report, the former report, and the subsequent report. This would have been the second document, and which I would have called for, this being the one which more particularly sets out the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The former report should go in first. If you have it, you may offer it.

Mr. HUGHES. We have not got it. I supposed that Mr. McLaren had a copy of it, and I was not sure but the chairman also had it.

The CHAIRMAN. Not that I know of.

The WITNESS. I have a letter-press copy, and I can have one made from the letter press.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it here?

A. It is in my office.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Reporter, when we get it it can go in and be marked "Exhibit No. 17." Of course, it can be compared with the original if it can be had, as to its accuracy. It may go in first, and then after that the special report made by Mr. McLaren to the Attorney General can go in and be marked "Exhibit No. 18."

The WITNESS. I think there was a regular report at the conclusion of the case, but I am not certain until I examine my records.

Mr. HUGHES. Those documents having been introduced, there are one or two other questions that I would like to ask the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point there is another letter from the Attorney General which should go into the record, and you may desire to ask some questions on that—that letter accompanied the special report [showing].

Mr. MCCOY. In regard to these exhibits, I think the stenographer ought to indicate in the way that it is usually done what such exhibit is, giving the date of it saying "I offer a certain letter bearing such and such a date, from a certain person to so and so," and then giving its number instead of the fact that this paper is simply marked as an exhibit.

Mr. HUGHES. I think so, and in that way there would be much less confusion.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; if you do not identify it by the date as well as by the exhibit number, you are apt to get in trouble.

Last document referred to is marked "Exhibit No. 19."

The CHAIRMAN. You have stated that from the hearing of the evidence that it was your conviction that Olsson's certificate should be revoked?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you argued, not only as was your duty, but according to your conviction, but the Attorney General of the United States did not agree with you about that, did he?—A. No.

Q. He has instructed you since to facilitate in every way within your power the opening of the decree and the securing of a new trial for Olsson.—A. Yes, sir; that is the substance of his telegram to me.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection I will read into the record a letter from the Attorney General to Congressman Victor L. Berger, which was handed me for that purpose, and I will ask to have it marked "Exhibit No. 20." I will now read Exhibit No. 20. This is on the letterhead of the Department of Justice, office of the Attorney General, Washington, D. C., with the initials W. H. and the date June 4, 1912, and is addressed to the Hon. Victor L. Berger, House of Representatives. [Reading:]

MY DEAR MR. BERGER: After you left here yesterday I found upon investigation that the department had already caused inquiries to be made into the case of which you spoke to me, namely, the proceeding in the western district of Washington, to cancel the naturalization certificate of Leonard Oleson, and upon examining the report I find that the proceeding was initiated at the instance of one of the local officials of the Department of Commerce and Labor and brought by the district attorney without previous communication with this department. I find, moreover, that no report had been taken on the trial of the testimony of the witnesses and that the counsel for Mr. Oleson had requested that the decree be opened in order to enable him to make a record. I have instructed the United States attorney to facilitate him in every way within his power toward the opening of the decree and the securing of a new trial, or failing that, of an appeal to the circuit court of appeals. I have further notified the United States attorney that upon the facts stated by Judge Hanford in his decision the department was of the opinion that a great injustice had been done to Mr. Oleson in canceling his certificate of naturalization.

I am yours, very truly,

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM, Attorney General.

Q. Did you receive a copy of that letter?—A. No, I did not.

Q. But the information referred to in it you did receive.—A. I received a telegram asking me to cooperate with the defendant in having the case reopened for a new trial.

Q. Have you the telegram accessible now?—A. I think so.

Q. It might go in in connection with this letter.—A. I will produce it later. It is not here.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be marked "Exhibit No. 21."

Q. Was the telegram followed by a letter or other instructions?—A. No, it was not at that time. I received no letter from the department until after the rehearing proceedings had been had.

Q. Have you any other official communication from the Attorney General's office relative to this matter?—A. I got a second telegram since the rehearing proceedings, instructing me to cooperate with the defendant on appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

Q. With the defendant Olsson?—A. Olsson. I can produce that telegram if you care for it. I have not got it with me.

The CHAIRMAN. It should probably go in with the other; have you it with you now?

A. No; it is in my office.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be marked "Exhibit No. 23."

Q. I understand you to say that was all the official communications you received from Mr. Wickersham, the Attorney General?—A. I just think that I have a letter from the department asking me to report on the case, which I now have here; do you care for that letter [producing letter]?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that can be marked "Exhibit No. 22."

Mr. HUGHES. There are two or three questions that I would like to ask. At the time of the hearing on the petition to vacate the judgment and granting a rehearing of the cause had there been any application made for the settlement of a bill of exceptions?

A. No, there had not.

Q. Or the settlement of any statement of the evidence or statement of facts?—A. No.

Q. Has any yet been made?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. So that, so far as you are advised, no differences exist and no difficulty would arise in attempting to settle a bill of exceptions?—A No; not so far as I know.

Q. And having the evidence certified for the purpose of appeal?—A. No difficulty, so far as I know.

Q. Did you orally argue the demurrer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the complaint?—A. Yes, sir; I did; that was argued in either March or April before Judge Donworth.

Q. Before the retirement of Judge Donworth from the Federal bench?—A. Yes, sir; in April, 1911.

Q. A year prior to the trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your demurrer was resisted by an oral argument by the present counsel for Mr. Olsson?—A. It was their demurrer.

Q. It was their demurrer to your complaint?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean by the counsel for defendant, Mr. Nichols; his present counsel?

A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I will put it directly; did Mr. Nichols appear in support of his demurrer?

A. Yes, sir; it was his demurrer.

Q. And he argued orally his demurrer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you orally argued it?—A. I resisted it.

Q. Did Judge Donworth file any written opinion?—A. No.

Q. Did he deliver any oral opinion?—A. Yes, sir; there were several points argued in the demurrer. Do you want me to go into that?

Mr. HUGHES. I beg your pardon.

A. I say there were several points argued on the demurrer and Judge Donworth rendered an oral opionion at the time overruling the demurrer.

Q. Do you recall what construction he placed upon the law?—A. In substance I do. One point was raised that the section was—that section 15 under which I was operating was unconstitutional as delegating certain legislative powers to the courts, and particularly considering the fact that there was no statute of limitations within which such an action might be taken, and also the point that the petition itself did not state any grounds for a cancellation. The judge overruled all of those points and stated in substance, as I recollect his oral opinion on that last-mentioned point, that it would be necessarily a question of fact to be developed at the trial as to what extent, if at all, he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States at the time he made his application; he said that was a matter which could not be tested by demurrer.

Q. Did he at that time announce the holding that if he had misstated the facts upon the question of his answers in regard to his attachment to the principles of the Constitution that it would be such a fraud upon the court admitting him to citizenship as would require the setting aside of his papers?—A. I do not recollect that he did.

Q. Was not that question involved in the demurrer?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. And was it decided by the court in support of your contention?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. How do you know that; how could you come to that conclusion? Did the court write any opinion or have one published?

A. No; there was no written opinion handed down.

Q. Were there several points on which he might pass in connection with the matter that were necessarily involved in the determination of it?—A. He had to pass on all of them to overrule the demurrer.

Q. You say he had to find that way?—A. Yes, sir; in order to overrule the demurrer, he did; yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. That is all I care to ask.

The Chairman. Are there any other questions, gentlemen, which you wish to submit to the committee?

Mr. Winsor. There is one question which I would like to submit to the witness, to Mr. McClaren, and that is if through his conduct for the revocation proceedings of Olsson——

The Chairman. You will have to speak a little bit louder, Judge Winsor, or come nearer.

Mr. Winsor. I desire to ask if through his conduct in the revocation proceeding against Olsson he acted under the feeling that a person who advocated a change of this form of government to an industrial democracy was unfit for American citizenship. I put that question direct, because from all his testimony I drew that inference, and I would like to have it appear on the record directly.

The Chairman. Mr. McLaren, is it necessary for me to repeat that question to you, or did you follow it?

Whereupon the official stenographer repeats the question to the witness.

The Chairman. The latter part of that is your comment and is not a part of the question, and may be stricken, but you may answer the first part of the question as it has been read to you.

The Witness. No; I did not; I acted with this feeling that belief, that Olsson's attitude toward the Government had not been made known to the court at the time he made the application for and was granted his citizenship; that the question of whether or not he might have been entitled to citizenship was a question in the consideration of which the court ought to have known his views; that since the court which granted his citizenship did not learn his views, that that was a fraud upon the court out of which the papers were issued. I was confirmed in that feeling by the fact that other courts, and the superior court in particular which granted those papers, had denied other people citizenship on that or substantially that same ground.

Mr. WINSOR. And if the court denied other citizenship upon the views possessed by the applicant in regard to such a change—that is, from a political to an industrial democracy——

The CHAIRMAN. Your question seems incomplete to me.

Mr. WINSOR. It is in connection with the previous testimony of this witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McLaren, the question seems to be: If the court denied other applicants citizenship because they believed in a change from a political government, or a political republic to an industrial republic.

A. I can not answer that specifically, because I do not know the exact views which were held by those applicants which were denied.

Q. Do you know the exact grounds on which they were denied?—A. I am informed by the naturalization officials——

Q. Mr. Smith?—A. Yes, sir; that is the extent of my knowledge, and Mr. Enslow.

Q. Do you regard Mr. Smith as sufficiently informed on those legal questions to give you a full and complete report of such facts as would enable you to form that judgment?—A. Yes, sir; I do; him and Mr. Enslow, the other witness who was present at the time that applicant was denied citizenship.

Q. But the accuracy of the judgment would depend entirely upon the accuracy of his report?—A. Yes, sir; I am speaking now upon what I based my judgment.

Q. Do you recall any of the cases by name where citizenship was denied, as you stated?—A. No; I do not; I think they were testified about by Mr. Smith and by Mr. Enslow at this hearing.

Q. Do you refer to the cases in which Leonard Olsson appeared as a witness for the applicant?—A. I think he was a witness in one of those cases; yes, sir.

Q. Both those applicants were denied citizenship on entirely other grounds?—A. No; they were not; one of them was and the other was not.

Q. Two were denied on the ground that one of the witnesses in each case had not known the applicant for a period of five years?—A. That is true as to one or two of the cases.

Q. Is it not true as to the two of them, according to Smith's testimony?—A. It may be so, but it is not true as to the case upon which I am basing my answer. There was one case where the superior court expressly——

The CHAIRMAN. You can not recall it.

Mr. HUGHES. The Eskelund case, if I may be permitted to suggest.

Mr. MCLAREN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions you wish to suggest?

Mr. NICHOLS. I would suggest one question, Mr. Chairman. I would like to have the question asked of the district attorney, if it has not been his theory and his action on the trial of the case of Mr. Olsson in the court at Tacoma as a retrial of Mr. Olsson's qualifications for citizenship rather than as a trial of the question of fraud committed by Mr. Olsson at the time he was admitted?

The CHAIRMAN. See if I have caught the point by my repeating the question. Mr. McLaren, in conducting the trial with a view of revoking his certificate of naturalization, did you proceed upon the theory of determining his qualifications for citizenship upon the theory of proving that he had committed a fraud upon the court when he obtained that?

Mr. MCLAREN. I proceeded on the theory——

The CHAIRMAN. That is the idea, is it, Mr. Nichols?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. MCLAREN (continuing)—on the theory that he had committed a fraud on the court which issued the paper, and in doing that, of course, I had to go into the other matter incidentally.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what occurred in the trial, either in any statements which were made or in any evidence which was produced which tends to show that you were proceeding on the theory of fraud rather than on the theory of qualification?

A. The testimony of two, or possibly three, witnesses, I forget which, for the Government, that the applicant Olsson stated to the court—no; I will ask that that be stricken out—the fact that the issues in that cancellation case admitted that he had stated to the court that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and the testimony of two, or possibly three, witnesses as to Olsson's own admission that he was not attached at that time and never had been for two or three years back.

The CHAIRMAN. If you put it on the theory that he had committed a fraud, the use of the word "devotedly," qualifying "attached," would be one of the most material points in the case, wouldn't it? In other words, if Olsson understood that he had been asked whether he was devotedly attached and he answered on that understanding, it would tend very strongly to show that he was not guilty of a fraud, would it not?

A. Yes, sir; it would.

Q. Whereas if the word "devotedly" were not used, the case of fraud would be somewhat strengthened?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Trying it on that theory, how does it happen that you did not pursue more carefully the testimony with reference to whether he did or did not answer as to being devotedly attached to the Constitution?—A. I examined all the witnesses that were available as to his answer; that is, Mr. Enslow and Mr. Smith, and Mr. McFarland.

Q. Did you argue it on that theory; did you dwell upon the use or nonuse of the word "devotedly" in your argument?—A. Yes, sir; I did. I pointed out the contradiction in the testimony, that Olsson's statement was that he was not devotedly attached, and the fact that two or three, I forget which, of our witnesses denied flatly that feature of it, and that statement is contained in my report also to the Attorney General.

Q. You are willing to concede now, are you not, that if the words "devotedly attached" were used, or if Olsson believed that phrase was used and answered accordingly, that there would be little or no ground for charging him with fraudulent intent?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is substantially true. I might put it, perhaps, in the way that Judge Donworth did when he passed on the demurrer, that it would be a question of fact as to the degree in which he might differ from the principles of the Constitution and he said that could be tried out only upon the trial of the facts.

Q. Of course you would also concede that a man might differ from some of the principles laid down in the Constitution and still be loyal to it while he was peacefully endeavoring to change it?—A. To some of the principles of it; yes.

Mr. McCoy. Has an appeal been taken, Mr. McLaren, from the refusal to reopen the case?

A. No; it has not. It has not been taken yet.

Q. Has any appeal been taken from the adjudication revoking the papers?—A. No; there has been no appeal taken at all.

Q. Suppose an appeal is taken from the decree or order, or whatever it was, revoking the papers, how is the circuit court of appeals going to know what the facts were?—A. The same as the former procedure was before we had the facilities for taking down the reports of cases. It will be by a certified statement of facts prepared to the best of the ability and recollection of those who heard the testimony.

The Chairman. You mean of the judge?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any way to get a certificate of it if the judge refuses to sign it?—A. As he stated on the rehearing, that he said he would make that certificate up, assisted by any suggestion that counsel on both sides would be able to make in regard to refreshing his memory as to the fact.

Mr. McCoy. Do you know whether the judge kept any minutes?

A. No; I do not.

Thomas Taylor, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. What is your name?

A. Thomas Taylor.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Taylor?—A. At present I live at 304 Wallace Building, Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. Well, just about eight years and a half.

Q. Where did you live prior to that?—A. Well, I was in Canada.

Q. What was your business?—A. Longshoreman.

Q. How long has that been your occupation?—A. For the last five years.

Q. Are you a man of family?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Leonard Olsson?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. For the past five years.

Q. Are you and he associated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In any organization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. The Socialist Party and the Industrial Workers of the World, with their headquarters in Detroit, Mich.

Q. Do you recall seeing Mr. Leonard Olsson about the 12th of September of last year, and to fix your recollection of that date I will say that that was near the time when Eskelund applied for naturalization papers in Tacoma; do you recall that?—A. Yes.

Q. What was Eskelund's other name——

Mr. Dorr. That would be 1910; you said last year.

The Chairman. 1910 I meant; thank you for the suggestion.

The Witness. 1910.

Q. What recalls that to your recollection?—A. Well, I was sitting in the hall reading, at headquarters.

Q. That means the headquarters of the Socialist Labor Party?—A. Yes, sir; they call them sections. The headquarters actually are in New York, but we call it a headquarters of a section.

Q. Go on and tell what it was.—A. I was reading and Olsson came in, and I turned around and he went to the dictionary, and I said, "What is wrong, Olsson?" and he said, "I just came from the court, and I want to turn up a word." And I said "Yes," and I got interested right away myself. He said the examiner in the court room had asked him if he was devotedly attached to the Constitution, and he wanted to see what bearing the word "devotion" had—"devotedly attached"—he wanted to see what bearing "devotedly" had with the "attached."

Q. Did he find out?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was there any further discussion there as to the meaning of that word?—A. Well, I made the suggestion that it qualified the attachment; the word attachment.

Q. How soon was that after he had been in court in connection with his application for naturalization?—A. Well, now, I could not say.

Q. Was it the same day or some other day?—A. Oh, yes, yes; it was the same day; it was the afternoon, and I happened to be sitting in the hall and he told me he had just come from the court, or was there in the court that day during the day.

Q. Did he mention in that conversation who the applicant was?—A. No; I don't think he did.

Q. Do you know from any other source whom the applicant was?—A. Yes; because we are all more or less acquainted with one another; we are right on the beach.

Q. Well, who was it?—A. Well, it was Eskelund, and the other one was Charley Oleson.

Q. Spell that first name.—A. E-s-l-o-n-d.

Q. Eslond?—A. Eslond.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen wish to ask him any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Just one.

Q. You say that he mentioned that he had been a witness on that day for Eskelund and Karl Olsen?—A. Well, now, I don't exactly know; you see it is carrying my memory back a little far as to the exact statement that was made, outside that we immediately went to the dictionary and turned up that word "devoted," finding out what qualification it had on the word "attached."

Q. I understood you to say that he gave as a reason that he had been just recently that day in court and that he was a witness for Eskelund and Karl Olsen; is that correct?—A. Yes; I think that is correct.

Q. Are you positive whether he mentioned the name of any of the persons for whom he was a witness on that day?—A. No; I would not be positive, it is so far back.

Q. Are you positive as to who he stated it was that asked him any such question and how such a question arose?—A. He said the examiner.

Q. Eh?—A. He said the examiner was asking him that question, whether he, Olsson, was devotedly attached to the Constitution.

Q. Did he say when and where the examiner had asked him that question?—A. No; he did not.

Q. He did not say whether it was in court or not?—A. No; he did not, but I naturally implied that it would be the man in court.

Q. Did he tell you about talking with the examiner at his office?—A. Yes; I think he did mention that.

Q. About his having a discussion with the examiner at his office, or any discussion, on the subject of his views?—A. Yes, sir; he did mention that he had a discussion with the examiner in some way.

Q. Well, was that the occasion of his coming to the headquarters and asking and looking up the use of the word "devotion," or "devoted," or "devotedly"?—A. No; it was not.

Q. Did he tell you that he did not know what the word "devoted," or "devotedly," meant?—A. No; he did not say that, but he wanted to see it exactly; he had a hazy idea what the word meant, and I did myself, but as to giving a correct definition, I don't know that I could do it right now myself.

Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. Well, about seven or eight years.

Q. Have you lived there continuously during that time?—A. No.

Q. Where have you been in the meantime?—A. About two years and a half ago I was in Cosmopolis and Aberdeen.

Q. How long were you there?—A. Probably about four or five months.

Q. Have you been anywhere else except at Tacoma and Cosmopolis during the last seven or eight years?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Where?—A. Well, now, I go different places; I am a wage slave and those are around a good deal.

Q. Have you been at any other place for any specific length of time during the period which you have named?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just tramping around from one place to another?—A. I don't think I got your question right.

Q. You say you have been at several places other than Cosmopolis and Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know whether you have been at any other places than those two?—A. Yes, sir; I worked in the logging camp.

Q. Any places where you stayed for any length of time?—A. Well, what do you mean by any length of time?

Q. Have you been living or abiding at any particular place other than Tacoma and Cosmopolis?—A. Well, I was at a logging camp, I think it was in 1908, for about three months, and then I came back and I have been steamboating on the Sound and then I went to Tacoma and I have stayed there, with this exception—of, yes, I was down in Portland once but only for a few days, just the trip.

Q. During this year have you had any trouble with the law officers of the courts?—A. None; not the slightest.

Q. None during that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or at any other time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never had any conflict with them at all?—A. No, sir; never whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone else desire to suggest a question?

Mr. WINSOR. Not any.

J. W. A. NICHOLS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. J. W. A. Nichols.

Q. And your address?—A. 504 Bank of California Building, Tacoma.

Q. How long has Tacoma been your home?—A. About 15 years.

Q. And what is your profession?—A. A lawyer.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir; trying to.

Q. Mr. Nichols, you were the attorney for Mr. Olsson on the occasion of the application to cancel his certificate, I believe?—A. I was.

Q. We had the date of that a number of times, but it will not hurt to get it again—when was it?—A. Well, I do not remember the date, Mr. Chairman.

Q. It was sometime in May of this year?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was.

Q. Commencing with your appearance in court there and beginning with the opening of this case, will you please, in your own way, state to the committee—state what occurred there as if you were preparing a bill of exceptions?—A. Mr. Olsson brought me the petition and affidavit served upon him by the Government and requested me to make appearance in the court and defend the case for him. After taking the papers and studying them and the law in connection therewith, I filed a demurrer on behalf of Mr. Olsson—a demurrer to the petition and affidavit together. That demurrer is a part of this record. Some time after that the demurrer came on for hearing before Judge Donworth and it was argued before the judge by Mr. McLaren and myself. Judge Donworth, after the arguments of counsel, overruled the demurrer.

Mr. HUGHES. May I suggest to the witness to speak as distinctly as possible. I find myself distressed in the effort I am forced to make to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have to be lenient with him; he is a lawyer.

The WITNESS. I am glad there is some evidence that I am a lawyer besides my success in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

A. After the demurrer was overruled I prepared an answer to the petition and affidavit, which was verified by Mr. Olsson and filed by me in the cause. The matter then rested for a considerable period and I had thought the Government had abandoned the case, but last April or May I received notice that the case would be called for trial. In accordance with that notice I notified Mr. Olsson and went into the merits of the case with him; subpœned four witnesses and we appeared on the day of the trial. The case was called for trial before Judge Hanford at the Federal court in Tacoma. The Government produced its witnesses, Mr. John Speed Smith and Mr. Enslow, I think his name is, and Mr. McFarland.

At this point does the committee wish me to recite the evidence produced?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the main thing that we do want.

A. I am not sure which witness was produced first at the trial, Mr. Smith or Mr. Enslow, but I will give the testimony of the two witnesses as I remember it.

Mr. Smith testified that Mr. Olsson—Leonard Olsson—had appeared as a witness in the superior court upon the application of some other party for admission to citizenship, and in reply to a question by Mr. Smith directed to Mr. Olsson on that hearing Mr. Olsson had stated that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. That evidence was given over my objection on the ground that Mr. Olsson at that hearing was not under examination as to his qualification; he was not sworn to testify as to his own qualifications for citizenship. Mr. Smith, I think, further testified that on another occasion under similar circumstances in the superior court Mr. .Olsson again appeared as a witness in another case, and then testified substantially to the same thing, that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and had not been for some two or three years. That testimony was given in response to questions by Mr. McLaren, the district attorney. When I took Mr. Smith for cross-examination I particularly directed his attention to the question as to whether or not he had not asked Mr. Olsson if he was devotedly attached to the principles of the Constitution instead of using the statutory language. Mr. Smith denied that such was the fact. When Mr. Enslow was testifying, he testified mostly to the effect that Mr. Olsson had been seen by him distributing some socialistic tracts, and had advanced to him some theories and doctrines appertaining to socialism. This evidence also was all given over my objection as being irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent to the issue. Mr. Enslow's testimony all through was directed to his own impressions that he had received from conversations with Mr. Olsson, and not to facts relative to the issues then being tried—not to anything that Mr. Olsson had said directly or done directly. I questioned both of those witnesses to ascertain if they knew anything with regard to Mr. Olsson's conduct during the five years preceding his admission to citizenship which would disqualify him as a citizen and whether they knew anything derogatory in his conduct; whether they knew whether he had been guilty of any misconduct, any crimes or misdemeanors or violence toward the community. To all of these questions they answered in the negative. Mr. McFarland was then called as a witness, and in answer to interrogatories propounded by Mr. McLaren he stated upon his direct examination substantially as Mr. Smith had testified; that on the hearings in the superior court where Olsson was a witness he had stated that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. His testimony was very brief, and that was practically all that he testified to. On cross-examination by myself I directed his attention to the word "devotedly," and I asked him specifically if he did not hear at that time the language of Mr. Smith, and that it contained the word "devotedly," and he said that he did not. I asked him if he had paid attention enough to the question so that he could testify now that the word "devotedly" was not used. He said that he did not and could not say positively; that he did not know whether the word "devotedly" had been used or not. That was about the substance of the Government's testimony, as I remember it, in chief.

I then called the witnesses for the defense. Mr. Eskelund, I think, is the name of one and Mr. Rust the name of another, and two ladies whose names I forget—they testified here yesterday. My examination of each and all of those witnesses was directed to the conduct and character of Mr. Olsson during the five years preceding his admission to citizenship; and I did that on the theory that the statute required his attachment to the Constitution of the United States to be evidenced by his behavior; the language of the statute being in substance that on his admission to citizenship it should be shown by the evidence of witnesses that during the five years preceding his admission his behavior was that of a person attached to the principles of the Constitution and well disposed toward the good order and well being of the same, and on that theory that his attachment should be shown by his actions, I directed my entire examination of those four witnesses to their knowledge of his conduct and behavior during those five years preceding his admission. They each and all testified that he was a man of exceptionably good habits and character; that they had known him personally during all that time and that he had visited in their homes and they had met him in a social way in other places, in the hall of the Socialist Labor Party that they had heard him advance his theories and doctrines with regard to the Socialist Labor Party and that they, during that entire time, had never heard any expression from him advocating violence or any misconduct, nor had they known of any act that would in any way disqualify him, and that they each and all were willing to give it as their opinion that he was a good citizen and in every way entitled to citizenship. That was the substance of their testimony in chief. On cross-examination one of the men, I forget which one it was, Mr. Eskelund, I think, was induced to say that he was a member also of the Socialist Labor Party and met Mr. Olsson in the Socialist Labor Hall and heard him speak in advocacy of the Socialist Labor Party's doctrine, and I do not remember what further there was testified by Mr. Eskelund. The last witness called by myself was Mr. Olsson.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not given us anything which you elicited from Mr. Rust in connection with this.

A. Mr. Rust testified substantially the same as Mr. Eskelund as to his acquaintance with Mr. Olsson during the preceding five years or more and his personal knowledge of Mr. Olsson's good habits; that he was a hard-working man, working at his occupation as a longshoreman and spending his evenings in study. I do not remember at this time now any other matters that I brought out at that time. On cross-examination the subject of socialism was gone into.

Q. If you can do so, I wish you would state fully what you developed by Olsson himself.—A. I had forgotten that.

Q. Well, you may do that at this time.—A. The last witness I called was Mr. Olsson himself. I think now, as I remember it, I began by directing his attention to the evidence that had been adduced by Mr. Smith and Mr. Enslow with regard to the use of the word "devotedly" in the questions asked him while he was a witness in the other cases. Mr. Olsson most emphatically asserted that the word "devotedly" had been used in the questions asked him and that because of the use of that word he had answered the questions in the negative, and on being asked to explain what he meant by answering those questions in the negative when they contained the word "devotedly," he stated in substance that he meant that he was not idolatrously attached to the Constitution of the United States—that he did not worship it as an idolator worships an idol. As I remember now, I asked Mr. Olsson some leading questions as to whether he was an anarchist or not. He emphatically denied being an anarchist or a polygamist. I think I asked him, as I remember it now, if it was his purpose to obey and support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the United States, and he answered that it certainly was, so long as the laws remained on the books. He used that expression particularly as I remember it—"so long as the laws remained on the books." I do not recall now any further testimony of Mr. Olsson on direct examination. On cross-examination he was interrogated as to his socialistic beliefs, and I do not remember now whether it was brought out by Mr. McLaren or Judge Hanford—I know they both interrogated Mr. Olsson as to the extent of his attachment to the Constitution of the United States—what changes he would advocate and how they would be brought about in his estimation. It was asked him, I remember this—Judge Hanford calling his attention to the provision of the Constitution as to due process of law and asking him if he believed in that principle and Mr. Olsson answered that he did.

As I remember it now, Judge Hanford then questioned him with regard to the rights of property, if he did not know that property could be taken from persons without due process of law. Mr. Olsson answered that he knew that that was the injunction of the Constitution. On being asked in regard to his beliefs as to the ownership of property, he made some statement that he believed lands and mines, and I think some other species of property, that I do not recall now, should become the common property of the whole people and not be subject to private ownership. At that point I think it was Judge Hanford asked him how he would bring about that change and his reply was that he would bring it about by the ballot. As I remember it, there was nothing further gone into at that time in the way of trying to get Mr. Olsson to explain how, by the use of the ballot, that would be brought about, but I know that he repeated at least once or twice that the changes which he advocated should be brought about by the use of the ballot and the vote of the people. He was then asked by Judge Hanford some question as to the Socialist Labor Party and the Socialist Party—I am not sure that the judge made that distinction, I am not clear about that, but Mr. Olsson in his answer did make that distinction in his answer to Judge Hanford's question. Mr. Olsson stated that he was not what is generally understood as a Socialist, but he belonged to the Socialist Labor Party, and I think then that the judge questioned him as to the difference between the two. At that point Mr. Olsson took two papers out of his pocket and started up toward the judge's desk, saying, that he had the platforms of the two parties which he would be glad to have the judge read, but the judge declined to accept the two papers. All this evidence as to Mr. Olsson's relation to the Socialist Labor Party and as to his beliefs with regard to the rights of property was admitted over my objection; the objection being on the ground that the evidence was in nowise relative to the issues of the case. My theory of the case being at the time, and my whole objection and examination to their examination being based on the conception that the only charge against Mr. Olsson was the charge of fraud committed by him when he received his certificate of admission to citizenship, and that fraud could not be shown by showing his doctrines and political beliefs and his theories with regard to the ownership of property.

Q. Have you anything you wish to add as to the arguments made at that time to the judge?—A. Well, at the close of the testimony arguments were made by Mr. McLaren and myself. Mr. McLaren contending that the evidence showed that Mr. Olsson had testified falsely when he testified on his own examination that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. My argument, of course, was directed to the insufficiency of the evidence, the irrelevancy of the evidence as to that question of fraud, and drawing particular attention to the fact that Mr. Smith's questions to Mr. Olsson at the time he was a witness in these other cases were not within his province; that Mr. Olsson at that time was not under oath as to his own qualifications, but only as to the matters to be testified to respecting the applicant at that time for citizenship; and that even if given falsely at that time they would not under the statute at that time be perjury; that they could in no wise be used in condemnatory of Mr. Olsson; that the question as to whether he was attached to the principles of the Constitution or not was a question peculiarly for himself to determine as a matter of expression and for the court to determine by his behavior during the five years preceding his admission, and that question had been adjudged and determined by the court which admitted him, and therefore it was not a subject for reexamination. That was the line of my argument before Judge Hanford. I did not elaborate on the argument very much—I never do when addressing a court—I assume that the court is experienced in those matters and when a point is presented and made and it is well founded, that it does not need elaboration.

Q. Did Judge Hanford do or say anything during the trial which tended to show his state of mind on the question?—A. Nothing, except so far as his question related to what I conceived to be these irrelevant matters, namely, his socialism and the doctrines of the Socialist Labor Party. I recall now, which I had forgotten, the same matter which was testified by other witnesses: Judge Hanford asked Mr. Olsson if he was acquainted with this noted Socialist leader—I have forgotten his name.

Q. Mr. Rogers?—A. Yes; Rogers. Mr. Olsson testified he did not know the man and was not acquainted with him and never met him and did not know who he was. Now, there was nothing in Judge Hanford's language or manner that indicated any bias to me except the fact of his allowing what I conceived to be irrelevant evidence introduced a basis for a judgment to be rendered in the case. Of course, I conceive it to be the duty of a judge at all times to render a judgment solely upon the evidence—relevant evidence—material evidence and the law of the case; and, of course, when a judge goes farther than that, in my opinion, I think he is committing error and I never have failed to call the judge's attention to that fact and urge upon him a correction of the error.

Q. Does that complete the statement of what you regard as the material things that occurred during the hearing?—A. I think so, Mr. Chairman, so far as I recall now.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, you can cross-examine.

Cross-examination:

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Nichols, you have mentioned the fact that the judge asked if he knew who Bruce Rogers was.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make mention of another fact testified about by Mr. McLaren, that the judge called attention either by reading or by statement made at the time to two certain doctrines in some publication which had appeared over the hand and signature of Bruce Rogers in a daily paper of this city—do you recall about that—I simply want to refresh your mind?—A. I had forgotten that in passing over the testimony. As I remember it now, Judge Hanford did read to Mr. Olsson from some paper. As I stated before, I consider that whole proceeding absolutely erroneous and wrong and I did not pay much attention to the form of the questions for that reason; but I recall that Judge Hanford did read something to Mr. Olsson, and the question was then, I think, as to whether he knew the author of it or subscribed to the opinion—I do not recall which.

Q. And you do not recall what Olsson's answer was.—A. I know Mr. Olsson said he was not acquainted with Mr. Rogers.

Q. But as to whether he assented to the views that were expressed in Mr. Rogers' statement which were read.—A. I am sure he did not assent; I do not recall whether he expressed a dissent or not.

Q. Now, to refresh your memory further, was not this question propounded to him as to whether he had knowledge of that provision of the Constitution which declares that the property of the individual shall not be taken by process of law without due compensation—I think you omitted any reference to the latter part "could not be taken without due compensation" in your testimony—was not that particular declaration of the Constitution called to the attention of the witness.—A. I do not recall now whether the compensation clause was mentioned or not, I presume it was.

Mr. McCoy. Is there any clause in the Constitution which speaks about compensation?

The Witness. I do not know; I think now that you recall it that way to me—I do not think that there is—I think that is a statutory provision.

Mr. Hughes. Yes, I guess it is a statutory provision.

The Witness. It is in our statute laws.

Mr. Preston. It is in our State constitution.

Mr. Hughes. In our State constitution but not in those words in the Federal Constitution.

The Witness. No, I do not think that that language is in the Federal Constitution.

Q. But without the "due process of law"—that it could not be taken by process of law without just compensation, as held by the courts in construing that provision, isn't that true?—A. I do not recall whether that was gone into by the judge or not. I know that I was somewhat disgusted by their going into the branch of the subject that I considered wholly irrelevant.

Q. And you believed all the time that that was irrelevant and immaterial.—A. I did and I believed that the judge was doing me an injustice by allowing it to get into the case—and I think so yet.

Q. In that connection did not Mr. Olsson testify that the only method he had to suggest for the accomplishment of this change and depriving the individual of property, was the power and use of the ballot; to do it by voting to take the property away from them.—A. No, sir, Mr. Olsson did not express it that way. Mr. Olsson expressed it to the effect that he believed the change should be brought about by due process of law, and when asked what was meant by due process of law he said that it meant by the vote of the people in changing the laws. He did not say that the property of one person should be voted over to another without compensation. There was nothing of that kind in his testimony—nothing that could be construed to that effect.

Q. Do you think, Mr. Nichols, that a fair presentation of the case of Mr. Olsson could be made to the circuit court of appeals upon a bill of exceptions which embodied under certificate of the court the statement of the facts which you have here made to-day.—A. No, I do not.

Q. Haven't you attempted to state the facts fully and truthfully as they occurred?—A. I have tried to, but I am afraid my presentation of them might not be accepted.

Q. That is, presuming that, I am asking you if you believe that a fair presentation of the case and of your contentions in the case and the proper protection of the rights of Mr. Olsson, could be had if a bill of exceptions embodying the facts as you have stated them yourself, were certified for the court for the purposes of that appeal.—A. Well, I rather think that I should answer that in the affirmative, and yet after seeing my testimony written out it might be that there is something I have omitted that I would think material.

Q. And as an honest man, you would present your refreshened recollection to the court and you would expect Mr. McLaren as an honest man, if it was correct, admit it. —A. I certainly would.

Q. And he would expect Judge Hanford to certify to it, and would not you?—A. I would, if the judge's remembrance of the testimony was the same as ours.

Q. Well, you have no reason to think that he would not certify to a statement of facts of that kind.—A. I have never had occasion to doubt Judge Hanford's willingness to give a correct statement of the facts when he understood the facts

Q. You never had any difficulty with him, and have no reason to anticipate that you would have any difficulty in getting a fair statement of the facts?—A. I never had any difficulty with Judge Hanford in getting a fair statement of the facts.

Q. Your grievance is chiefly in the construction of the questions of law, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; largely. I have read Judge Hanford's opinion on file in this case, and also the report of his later opinion given on the petition for rehearing, and the judge's remembrance of the facts as outlined in those two instruments does not coincide wholly with my own—largely it does coincide, but there are some material differences.

Q. Nothing there to indicate that those differences could not be fairly reconciled when the matter was presented by you and Mr. McLaren before him?—A. Not unless the judge should be firm in adhering to his remembrance, as stated in those instruments.

Q. The real contention made is the trial of the case, and the argument which was submitted to the court was whether or not Mr. Olsson had deceived the court admitting him to citizenship by not truthfully, fairly, and fully stating facts in his original petition, in his evidence, and in his oath of allegiance—that was the real contention, wasn't it—you on the one hand arguing that the evidence offered by the Government was in the main irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent evidence, or immaterial to what you conceived to be the true issue.—A. Well, the question is so involved that I can not answer it by yes or no.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to have it read by the reporter?

Question repeated to the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Strike out all the last part commencing with "You on the one hand."

The WITNESS. The real contention, according to my conception, was whether Mr. Olsson had been guilty of fraud. The question tried there was as to his qualifications for citizenship.

Mr. HUGHES. But the real contention as made in the argument by Mr. McLaren was that he had been guilty of fraud, deception of the court in the affidavit he made, in his petition to become a citizen, and in the proof he offered upon which he was admitted by the superior court of Pierce County to citizenship; that was Mr. McLaren's contention, was it not?

A. That was a secondary part of the contention.

Q. Well, it was his contention that the proof he offered established the fact that such misrepresentation as that had been committed by Mr. Olsson—Mr. McLaren argued to that effect, and your contention was that the evidence by which he sought to prove it was immaterial and irrelevant to that issue.—A. Wholly so.

Q. And the court ruled against you upon your objections.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the court was wrong upon that his contention is wrong.—A. It certainly is.

Q. And if he was right on that his contention is right—now, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions to suggest?

Mr. WINSOR. Well, I would like the witness to answer as to who introduced the examination as to Olsson's political beliefs.

The CHAIRMAN. Who introduced that part of the examination which referred to Olsson's political beliefs?

A. It was the Government, I think; I am not sure whether that branch of the subject was first suggested by Judge Hanford or not, but it was by the Government or Judge Hanford in his cross-examination—we never referred to it on our side of the case until it was drawn in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. WINSOR. Yes. Do you deem the statement of facts as cited in the judge's opinion just to Olsson?

A. No; I do not think it is full enough. I do not think it is fair to Mr. Olsson. I think there are statements in there that are not in accord with the evidence.

Mr. WINSOR. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Nichols, it did not appear on this hearing how fully Olsson was given an opportunity to state his views at the time he was admitted to citizenship.

A. It did not appear how fully he was given that opportunity.

Q. Nor how fairly and truthfully he had answered the full questioning along those lines.—A. That was not made to appear except that Mr. Olsson did state in answer to some question that he had not been given a fair opportunity to explain that upon his first hearing.

Q. That is when he was admitted to citizenship—is that what you mean by his first hearing?—A. No; at the time Mr. Smith stated that Mr. Olsson was testifying as a witness in the other case—he was not at that time given an opportunity to explain what he meant.

Q. In other words, he was pinned down more or less to a categorical answer to a categorical question.—A. That was his complaint.

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not know but what it has already appeared in the record, Mr. Nichols, but do you happen to know before what judge Mr. Olsson was admitted to citizenship?

A. I think it has been stated that he was admitted before Judge Chapman of the superior court.

Q. Of the State court?—A. Yes.

Q. Held where?—A. Held in Tacoma.

Q. Mr. Leonard Olsson?—A. Mr. Leonard Olsson.

Mr. HUGHES. Are you not mistaken? Was it not stated that it was before Easterday? It was in the month of January.

A. I think I am right in stating Judge Chapman, but I am not sure.

Mr. MCCOY. There is Mr. Olsson in the court room and he can answer that question; he ought to know.

Mr. OLSSON. It was before Judge Shackleford.

Mr. HUGHES. I suppose it is in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Olsson, have you the platform which you promised to provide for us?

Mr. OLSSON. Yes, sir.

LEONARD OLSSON, recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please let me see that paper? [Witness hands paper to the chairman.]

Q. Mr. Olsson, the little pamphlet which you have handed me purports to be the preamble and constitution of the Industrial Workers of the World, with general headquarters at Hamtramck, Mich. Now, apart from this constitution and by-laws, did the Industrial Workers of the World, with headquarters there in Michigan, adopt a political platform?—A. No; that is a union—the political clause is in the preamble.

Q. That is, this is their only declaration of principles which you know of?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It may go into the record as Exhibit No. 24.

Mr. HIGGINS. Before you mark it as an exhibit I would just like to precede it by one question.

Q. That is the platform which you referred to on yesterday when you were on the stand?—A. Yes, sir; that is one of them.

Q. And the declaration of the principles of the Industrial Workers of the World which you told the committee that you would get?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is to-day the existing platform and the latest declaration of the principles of the Industrial Workers of the World?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the only one?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You said yesterday that they were of Detroit, Mich., but the place named here is a suburb of Detroit?

A. Yes, sir; but it is located at Detroit at the present time. The book was sent out when the headquarters was at Hamtranck, but to-day they are at Detroit.

Mr. HIGGINS. In answer to some inquiries yesterday you said there were two communities of the Industrial Workers of the World, and that one was located at Detroit and one at some other place.

A. One at Chicago.

Q. Now, the document which has been marked "Exhibit No. 24" is the one which you referred to yesterday as being the platform of the organization located at Detroit.—A. At Detroit.

Q. And that is the organization with which you are affiliated.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And which you are a member of?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask when did those two branches separate—when was that separation?

A. In 1908.

Q. Both retained the same name.—A. Both the same—both claimed to be the only one, or the original one.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is there any rivalry or real difference between the two organizations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have they separate officers?—A. Separate officers.

Q. Who was the president of the Industrial Workers of the World with which you are affiliated?—A. The general secretary and treasurer is Herman Richter.

Q. Where does he live?—A. Detroit, Mich.

Q. He is the general secretary?—A. Treasurer

Q. Who is the president?—A. There is no president.

Q. Who are the other general officers of the organization?—A. It has a general executive board.

Q. How many of them are there?—A. I think there are seven members, I am not positive.

Q. Can you name them?—A. No, I could name a couple; Rudolph Katz and Robert McClure—Rudolph Katz, of Paterson, N. J., and Robert McClure, of Philadelphia, Pa., and the others I can not name.

Q. Do the political principles in the declaration of the Industrial Workers of the World and the Socialist Labor Party differ?—A. Well, they do not differ at all—they do not differ—they harmonize.

Q. They work in harmony?—A. That is, the Socialist Labor Party is a political organization and the Industrial Workers of the World is an industrial organization.

Q. So that the Socialist Labor Party is a mere instrument or branch or means of carrying out the doctrines of the Industrial Workers of the World?—A. No, they are distinctly separated.

Q. Do they both agree to the same principles?—A. To explain it, I will say, for instance, myself as a citizen, as a voter I am organized according to geographical distances, but as a worker, as a longshoreman I am organized as my industry, and the same man is in two different things.

Q. Then the Industrial Workers of the World might be regarded somewhat like the American Federation of Labor?—A. Yes; you might call them an organization or a union.

Q. How?—A. Yes; a union.

Q. Do you belong to a labor union?—A. Yes.

Q. Which one?—A. The Longshoremen.

Q. The Longshoremen's Union?—A. Yes.

Q. Is the Longshoremen's Union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. You had some discussion with Mr. Enslow as to your beliefs, I believe?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever say anything to Mr. Enslow from which he could infer that you advocated the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either of specific individuals or of officers generally?—A. No, sir.

Q. Of the Government of the United States?—A. No, sir; absurd.

Q. Or of any other organized Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never advocated any such a thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never believed in it, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever belong to any organization which either advocated or taught any such practices?—A. No, sir.

Q. And, to repeat my question again for emphasis, did you ever say anything to Mr. Enslow from which he could possibly have inferred that you believed or taught or advocated any such a thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. I show you a newspaper clipping and I will ask you whether you ever saw it before.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first see it?—A. It was of the Tacoma Ledger of September 13, 1910.

Q. And that was the day after Olsen—what is his name?—A. Karl Olsen.

Q. Karl Olsen applied for citizenship and the day after you testified on his behalf?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know how that account got into this paper?—A. I presume there was a reporter present. I observed a lady with a pencil and a pad sitting in the court when I was questioned by Mr. Smith.

Q. Did you give that statement as it appears in this clipping, or the substance of it, to any reporter?—A. No, sir.

Mr. McCoy. I will ask that this be marked "Exhibit No. 25."

Q. And where did you get that clipping?—A. I got it from the Tacoma Ledger.

Q. You saw the whole of the Tacoma Ledger, and this you cut out?—A. I cut it out and I wrote on the top of it the date and the name of the paper.

The Chairman. Is that in your own handwriting?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Higgins. Did you cut it out at the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And wrote what appears on the top of it?—A. Yes.

Mr. Higgins. At the time you cut it out?

A. Yes.

Mr. Higgins. Is this date here September 10, 1910?

A. September 13.

Q. Did you write that on there at the time that you took the clipping out of the paper?—A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to further examine the witness?

Mr. HUGHES. I am somewhat at a loss to see on what theory a newspaper clipping would become evidence.

Mr. HIGGINS. On the theory, I think, that perhaps we may be wanting to accumulate a record so large that we may have to have a special train to carry it to Washington.

Mr. HUGHES. What prompted you to clip out this article and preserve it?

The WITNESS. Well, just curiosity. I have a couple more I think I got out of papers at the time.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not care to add anything more to what I have said as to the incompetency of this newspaper clipping.

The CHAIRMAN. I might state as a reason I had for reading the first part of it into the record that I regarded it as strongly corroborating of the statement that the qualifying adverb was used, as stated by Olsson.

Mr. HIGGINS. Don't you think, Mr. Chairman, that the best way would be to get the reporter who wrote this article and who was present and furnished the item for the paper, rather than to offer it in this way?

The CHAIRMAN. What you say would be a good thing to do and we can yet do it, but it would not detract from the reason I gave—the fact that it appeared in the paper in the ordinary course of the editing and publishing of a paper, so soon after the fact, is corroborative evidence as to the theory of the witness—it is not conclusion—there may be other evidence, and, as I said, if we can get the reporter who wrote it it would be even better evidence, and we may do that.

Mr. HUGHES. It would not occur to me to be competent evidence in any court.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not agree with you.

Mr. HUGHES. That a newspaper clipping, without being authenticated and without having produced the person who wrote it, and without any evidence as to what transpired at the time—that that is competent evidence? It seems to me that it is in the remotest degree secondary evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, secondary evidence in the remotest degree is competent sometimes.

Mr. HUGHES. Sometimes.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is one of those times.

Mr. HIGGINS. I hardly think, Mr. Chairman, that it has been established even that it appeared in the Daily Ledger.

Mr. MCCOY. The paper was offered for what it was worth, and I am frank to say that if we were conducting a trial in a court, and that I were a judge on the bench, I think that I should sustain this objection. I do not believe, myself, that under the court law that that would be strictly competent evidence, but as we are in an inquiry of this kind we do not confine ourselves to competent evidence. If we did so, we would keep out half what has been said here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. We have given this matter more space than it is worth—it goes into the record. Is there anything further with Mr. Olsson?

Mr. DORR. I would like to ask him a question, if I may?

The CHAIRMAN. You will have to choose who will do the examining on that side. Either one can examine him, but only one should do so.

Mr. HUGHES. Just one more question, then.

Q. Do you belong to what is known as the Home Colony, in Pierce County?—A. No. sir.

Q. Have you ever belonged to that?—A. No; I never have been there.

Mr. McCOY. What is the Home Colony?

A. Well, what I heard, it is a certain amount of people who call themselves anarchists.

Q. What do they have—a farm, or something of the kind?—A. Yes, sir; they have a kind of a cooperative land—that is, I heard they have. I think it is more broken up now. A few years ago it was supposed to be a cooperative affair where there should be no—they have a general system of cooperation between one another—an anarchistic community.

Q. What is the meaning you attach to the word "anarchistic" in connection with this Home Colony?—A. Well, that is, they don't believe in the highly concentrated form of government and they rather retrograde back to the individual, and in the extreme each individual was, as you say, to paddle his own canoe.

Q. That is, on the property that they own?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are through with Mr. Olsson, he may be excused. If there is some way of locating the newspaper reporter, the committee would be glad to have him here and produce him—can you aid us?

Mr. HUGHES. We will do our best to aid you. We have already taken steps to locate that reporter and ascertain the truth. I may say frankly that it does not seem of any consequence; but we want to aid you in getting at the fact instead of having newspaper clippings and rumor. It is important now to know what occurred before the judge who heard the testimony, and as we view this matter we want to give the best evidence of it possible, and we will help you to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. In any such case we want all the evidence—the best where we can get it, or such evidence as we can get, if we can not get the best.

Mr. HUGHES. We will take steps and endeavor to locate the reporter—the paper and the date and the reporter who wrote it, and, if possible, to get that reporter here.

Whereupon a further hearing is adjourned until to-morrow, June 29, 1912, at 9.30 o'clock.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

JUNE 29, 1912—9.45 a. m.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment.

All parties present, as at former hearing.

Mr. GRAHAM. The committee will be in order. Mr. McFarland.

R. E. MCFARLAND, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the committee to ask the reporter whether I testified yesterday as the newspaper report of it gives it this morning. If I did, it was an inadvertance. The newspaper report——

Mr. GRAHAM. What newspaper?

Mr. NICHOLS (continuing)—says Mr. Nichols testified that "Olsson emphatically said that the word "devotedly" was not used in the hearings in which he had been a witness." Now, my testimony, as I intended to give it, and as I think I did give it, was that Olsson emphatically testified that the word "devotedly" was used.

Mr. GRAHAM. That was your testimony.

Mr. NICHOLS. That was my testimony? Well, then, it is correct. The newspaper reporter has it that I testified that it was not used.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Nichols, was it your desire that we would stop now while the reporter located your testimony on that point?

Mr. NICHOLS. I only wish to ascertain if the record that the reporter has is as I think I gave it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would suggest that you wait until the notes are transcribed, when you can see it and satisfy yourself as to what the testimony is, and you may call attention to it if you wish.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is satisfactory.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q What is your full name, Mr. McFarland?—A. R. E. McFarland.

Q. What is your business?—A. Real estate business at the present time

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Tacoma

Q And how long have you lived there?—A. For a little over 12 years last past, continuously

Q Were you present in Judge Hanford's court on the hearing of the application to revoke the citizenship papers of Leonard Olsson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity were you there?—A. As a witness.

Q. Were you clerk of the court at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what fact were you a witness?—A. I was called by the Government attorneys to testify as to evidence that was given by Mr. Olsson in a case on which he was a witness in the superior court something like two years before; I don't remember the exact dates.

Q And on the application of some other person to be admitted to citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.

Q What was the name of that person?—A. I don't remember that.

Q Were you clerk in the superior court at the time?—A. I was deputy clerk.

Q Deputy clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q At the time this other person applied for citizenship, when Leonard Olsson was there as a witness on his behalf?—A. Yes, sir.

Q Well, now, will you state to the committee, as well as you can recollect, all the testimony that was given at the hearing before Judge Hanford on the petition to revoke the citizenship papers of Leonard Olsson?—A. The testimony that was given by me?

Q. No; by yourself and everybody else, if you can recollect?—A. Well, the testimony that I gave there was this: That at the hearing in the superior court where Leonard Olsson was a witness for some other party to become a citizen, in answer to the question that was asked by Mr. Smith, who was the examining attorney for the Government—in answer to the question whether or not he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, he answered in the negative. Then the next question following that—well, there had been some preliminary questions leading up to this, I don't remember the exact language of them, but in answer to the following question, which was, "How long have you held these views?" He answered that he had held them for several years. Then Mr. Smith asked him the question, "Did you hold these views at the time that you took out your citizen papers" or "secured your papers" I don't remember the exact wording, and he said that he did. At that time Mr. Smith stopped the examination and made some argument to the court relative to the witness holding such views was not a competent witness for another man to become a citizen.

Q. Well, is that what you testified to at the hearing before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified to all of that?—A. I testified to all of that. I testified to the three questions and their answers.

Q. Are you able at this time to state, in a narrative form or otherwise, what the other witnesses before Judge Hanford testified to? What did Leonard Olsson testify to at that time?—A. Well, I would not be able to give very much of that, because I sat quite well back in the court room and Mr. Olsson talks very quickly, and it was very hard for me to catch the drift of a good deal of the testimony. I don't feel that I am competent to go into that; I didn't catch enough of it to give you a detailed account of it.

Q. Do you remember what you testified to on the cross-examination by Mr. Nichols, if you were cross-examined by him?—A. Why, Mr. Nichols asked me but very few questions. I think he asked me something as to whether or not the word "devotedly" was used in the question, and my answer to that was that in my experience of three years and a half as deputy clerk in charge of naturalization in the Pierce County court that I had heard the word used a number of times, perhaps a half a dozen in all, but ordinarily that word was not used in the question; the question would be, "Are you devotedly" or "Are you attached," not "devotedly," but "Are you attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same?" I believe the statute provides the question. I can't give it in just the exact words, but it is practically the same thing every time.

Q. Did you testify that in answer to Mr. Nichols's question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what questions, if any, Judge Hanford asked on the occasion when you were a witness?—A. I could not state the substance of the questions. I know it was a general questioning along the lines of this—some socialistic propaganda that Mr. Olsson brought out in his answers, and the judge did not ask his questions in a very loud tone of voice, and, as I said before, I was sitting quite well back and I did not get the exact substance of them, only just the general run of the questions.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. Was there anything about this case, Mr. McFarland, to particularly call it to your attention, to distinguish it from other cases of this same nature?—A. At the time of this hearing, when Mr. Olsson was a witness, Mr. Smith asked me, I think it was, I think the hearing came up in the afternoon, if I remember rightly, and going up from the clerk's office to the court room he said: "When I examine

Mr. Olsson this afternoon as a witness, I wish you would take the testimony, that is, take the answers to the questions." Well, I am not shorthand at all, but when Mr. Olsson was placed on the stand I moved up to the reporter's desk, right below the judge's desk, and took just a scrap piece of paper that laid there and my lead pencil and waited; and having been in these cases, seen so many of them, I knew about the general run of the testimony that he would want kept, and when he asked that first question, whether or not he was attached to the Constitution of the United States, I took enough of that so that I would know what the question was and took the answer, and I took those three questions down at that time. And when I was called by telephone last night to come over here to-day I hunted my desk at home for about two hours to find that scrap of paper. I laid it away some time ago, and at the time I laid it away I told Mrs. McFarland that I would probably want that some time in the future, and I have so securely laid it away that I can't find it myself now; and I also hunted my office desk this morning for it, but I can't locate that piece of paper.

Q. What were the three questions that you took down?—A. The question as to whether or not he was attached to the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, which was answered in the negative, and whether or not, how long he had held these views, which was answered, "For several years" or "Two or three years," I don't remember just—it was "Several years" or "two or three years," and whether or not he held these views at the time that he secured his own citizen papers, which he answered that he did, and the questioning of the witness stopped at that point.

Q. You mean the questioning of the witness by Mr. Smith?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, then, did the court take up the witness and question him?—A. I don't think that he did.

Q. What followed those three questions?—A. Why, Mr. Smith moved to have the petition dismissed on the grounds that a man as a witness for a petitioner holding those views was not a competent witness—a man who was not attached to the Constitution of the United States was not a competent witness to be a witness for another man to become a citizen, and, if I remember rightly, the case was dismissed.

Mr. McCoy. On that ground?

A. I think that was the ground; yes, sir.

Mr. Higgins. That motion was made by Mr. Smith immediately after the three questions, which you have told us about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall any questions that the court asked the witness?—A. No, I don't recall any that he asked at that time.

Q. Well, do you recall whether he asked him any or not?—A. I don't think he did after this motion was made.

Q. Well, did he before?—A. No; Mr. Smith conducted the examination up to that time.

Q. You made a note of the questions and answers at the request of Mr. Smith?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you turn them over to Mr. Smith?—A. No; he didn't ask me for them; he asked me to keep them, was all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. McFarland, how do you reconcile your testimony, if I understand it, that you missed most of the testimony, and can not now tell it to us? Was that the same occasion when the Leonard Olsson cancellation hearing was on?—A. No, that was the hearing when he was a witness. You see this hearing when Mr. Olsson was a witness was something like—well, it was in the fall, I think, of 1910, and it seemed that they wanted this testimony for future use, and I was asked to just take those questions that would be vital in such a case of that kind.

Q. That was the case in the fall of 1910, you mean?—A. Yes, sir; and of course when I was called as a witness in the Olsson case, where they were trying to take his papers from him, that was the only part of the thing that I remembered; having written it down at that time, it impressed it on my mind. I would not have remembered the questions at all, hearing it as often as I did, you know. It was a monthly occurrence, and all day and perhaps two days of it; a man would not remember the questions that were asked of any particular individual unless it was called to his attention to do so.

Q. When you speak of hearing the word "devotedly" used in the questions a half dozen times or so, who used it?—A. It would be impossible to say. During my time there as deputy clerk we had some five or six different examiners from time to time that would handle the cases, and I am satisfied in my mind that I have heard the word used, but so seldom that it was not an ordinary circumstance to have it used in that question.

Q. Did it at the time strike you as being peculiar? I mean more particularly to say, did you fix your mind on it in such a way as to have a recollection of how often you heard it?—A. Oh, I don't suppose I heard it during the three years and a half over half a dozen times.

Q. That is not my question. The question was as to your mental condition. Did you notice it and fix your mind upon it when the questions were asked and try to determine whether or not that word was used in the question?—A. At the time of this hearing?

Q. Prior to it?—A. I don't believe I get you yet quite on that.

Q. Well, let's get together.—A. Yes.

Q. Did you have in your mind an opinion as to whether the word "devotedly" should or should not be used in the question before the Leonard Olsson cancellation hearing?—A. No, I never paid any particular attention as to whether it should be used or should not.

Q. You would not be very certain, then, as to the number of times you noticed it, not having the point in your mind particularly?—A. I would not be certain as to the number of times, only I know I heard it used, but seldom.

Q. Of course you would not pretend to say whether it made an impression on your mind so that you would remember it every time it was used in fact?—A. No, I would not want to say that; I could not say that.

Q. Until this case came up as to the hearing for the cancellation of Olsson's certificate, was there any acute controversy in your presence as to whether it should or should not be used in the questions?—A. No, there never had been.

Q. Was there anything that riveted your attention to the word "devotedly" in the question until that came up?—A. No.

Q. You say that in the hearing to cancel the certificate the case was dismissed?—A. It is my impression now that that case was dismissed at that time.

Q. By a verbal order of the court then, was it?—A. It would be by a verbal order of the court and the order—there was an order in the—on the back of the petitions in the book furnished by the Government, denying or admitting, and spaces for the reason, and that record there would show; but without looking it up I would not be positive whether that case was dismissed or not, but I think it was.

Q. There were no minutes kept, of course, as to the evidence; the judge, if he afterwards considered it, had nothing but his recollection of the evidence to go by?—A. That is all, and the different orders that would be entered on the back of the application and signed by the judge himself.

Q. Bit it is your recollection, is it, that he reached a conclusion then and there and announced that conclusion?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to examine him further?

Mr. McCOY. Yes, I do.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. At the time Mr. Smith was examining Olsson as a witness in that naturalization case, did he have in his hand a paper from which he seemed to be reading the question?—A. Why, Mr. Smith almost always had in his hand a little note sheet that they use in—they use it in kind of a preliminary looking up of these different applicants, you know, and he most always has that in his hand when he is asking questions; but that does not have any questions on it; just simply has a report of the case upon to that time, and they ask these questions offhand.

Q. Now, what sort of an examination, as a general thing, was conducted in these citizenship cases? Was it a mere prefunctory asking or formal questioning and the questions in the wording of the statute?—A. Well, there is about a hundred different questions that they ordinarily ask.

Q. I mean when it comes down to the questions about the Constitution and that part of the examination, do they simply ask a categorical question and get a categorical answer "yes" or "no"?—A. Well, they are asked a question this way: "Have you ever read the Constitution of the United States?" And his answer will almost invariably be "Yes." And then the next question that ordinarily follows would be "Well, what did you find in the Constitution?" Or "What is the Constitution?" To which the applicant would give the best synopsis that he could of what he thought the Constitution was of the United States, and there seems to be no general set of questions, but they all are along the same line; they will not be varied from very much. The questioning that is done and was done during the time that I was deputy clerk, was to ascertain in a general way what knowledge the applicant had of the form of government of the United States, and how its laws were made, and all such things as that, and to ascertain if he was well enough informed to be—well, to be a qualified voter if he was admitted—should be informed somewhat.

Q. But when it came down to the question about his attachment or otherwise to the Constitution, that was simply asked him practically in the wording of the statute?—A. Yes. Yes, it might be varied from slightly, but ordinarily asked in the wording of the statute.

Q. Are you having in mind the witnesses on these applications or the applicant himself?—A. The applicant himself. Of course where there was a doubt, as there seemed to be in Mr. Smith's mind as to the attachment of this witness, who was a witness for the applicant, then he would bring out these questions enough to ascertain whether the witness himself was attached to the Constitution of the United States.

Q Well, did there seem to be any doubt in the mind of Mr. Smith on this particular occasion?—A. Why, I think there was.

Q. Well then he asked further questions to resolve that doubt one way or the other?—A. He asked but very few questions after he led up to this point. He asked the witness the ordinary questions as to the qualifications of the applicant for a good moral citizen and all of those things, up to that time, the length of time that he had know him and where he had known him and how well acquainted he was with the applicant—things of that character; then when he got to these questions he asked those three and stopped.

Q. Did not conduct any further cross-examination of him after that point?—A. No further examination at that time.

Q. Did he make any comment on the Constitution?—A. Why, he did somewhat, yes, but I could not begin to tell it now; it has been a long time since that.

Q. Did the judge ask any questions of his own volition at all?—A. I don't think he did at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to inquire some further?

Mr. HUGHES. Just two or three questions.

Mr. NICHOLS. Before cross-examination, I would like to ask the committee to ask one more question. I wish the committee would interrogate the witness as to whether or not Mr. Smith, at the time Leonard Olsson was a witness in the other case in the superior court, or just prior to that time—if Mr. Smith did not tell this witness that he, Smith and Enslow, were after Olsson and were going to get him, or words to that effect.

Mr. DORR. I would like to inquire if that is assumed to be a part of the evidence that was adduced before Judge Hanford in the cancellation hearing?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness may answer, if he can.

A. Just read that question again, please, just read the whole statement until I get back.

The statement of Mr. Nichols was here read by the stenographer.

A. Mr. Smith, as we went upstairs in the afternoon—this hearing was in the afternoon— says "When Olsson takes the stand, I want you to get his testimony, as" he says, "I am going to bring out testimony there to show that he is not a qualified citizen and his papers should be revoked." He did not use the words that he was going to "get him" and he did not connect Mr. Enslow with it in any way.

By the CHAIRMAN.

Q. Did you make any response to his remarks?—A. I told him I would take his testimony.

Q. Was there anything further said by him on that subject?—A. No, not that I remember of.

Q. Let me ask you here, for information only: How does it become material that the witness who testified for the applicant should be himself interrogated as to his citizenship, what fact is in issue except his character and residence?—A. Why, I believe if I was on the stand myself that I would object to answering those questions if they were put to me. I don't think, myself, that they were material.

Q. Or relevant?—A. Yes. The man had his citizen papers, had been admitted, and unless for reason they had been revoked, in all intents and purposes he was qualified, if he was a man of good moral character himself, to act as a witness for another man.

Q. If he was credible?—A. Yes.

Q. And testified that the applicant resided in this country five years to his knowledge and had the other qualifications——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Would he not be a competent witness in your judgment?—A. He would be a competent witness, if, as you say, he was a credible witness. The law says that he shall be a credible witness.

Q. And in your judgment only such facts as tended to impeach his credibility would be proper?—A. I think that perhaps the reason Smith asked these questions was to bring out the fact that he was not a credible witness, that he was not attached to the Constitution of the United States.

Q. That is, that his political beliefs affected his credibility and tended to impeach him on truth and veracity?—A. Well, there was no questions asked at that time—no political belief at all.

Q. But your answer, as I understand it, means that you can impeach a man's veracity by ascertaining his political views?—A. No, I don't want my answers to show that.

Q. Well, what did you mean? Did Smith think so, in your opinion?—A. I don't think that he thought his political views affected it in any way.

Q. What did you mean in your reply, in which in substance you said that the question would only be a proper one as affecting his credibility?—A. Well, if in answer to the question—if he was not attached to the Constitution of the United States, he would hardly be a credible witness.

Q. Well, that is the very point I am trying to get to and what I thought you said before. Do you think that was Mr. Smith's opinion?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you know whether, or did anything occur there that enabled you to say whether that was also the court's opinion?—A. It must have been the court's opinion when he dismissed the case, that the fact that the witness had acknowledged that he was not attached to the Constitution of the United States made him not a credible witness.

Mr. McCoy. Is Mr. Smith in court—John Speed Smith?

Mr. Dorr. No, sir; he left the city yesterday for the eastern part of the State.

Mr. McCoy. I thought if we could identify the case that was in the superior court at the time that it might help. The witness does not seem to remember.

Mr. Hughes. It was the Karl Olsen case, Mr. Smith testified.

Mr. Preston. My understanding and my memorandum of Mr. Smith's testimony was that Karl Olsen was admitted.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think that is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. My recollection is that he said that one of the cases, he was not sure which, there were two on the same day, was dismissed for want of one witness—for want of sufficient witnesses.

Mr. MCCOY. That case in regard to which we had that card here yesterday——

Mr. HUGHES. That is the Karl Olsen case.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, on the bottom of that was a memorandum to the effect, as I recollect it, that the case was dismissed because of the fact that one witness had not been in the country five years—he didn't know that Olsson had been here for five years. Now, he probably was admitted later, then, if that was the case.

Mr. PRESTON. I can help you, sir, to the fact that you are after. The witness, Smith, gave the number of that case also. I have it noted here, 682, September 12, 1910, Karl Olsen. I took it as he testified. I think you will find that in the notes.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, has the reporter that exhibit? The exhibit would settle that.

The STENOGRAPHER. It is back in the office.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I don't know as it makes any difference.

The WITNESS. It would be a very easy matter to ascertain whether that applicant was admitted at that time or not, or whether my memory serves me right, by telephoning to the Superior Court of Pierce County about that number; would give it in just a moment.

Mr. MCCOY. We have a card here that will show it.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to examine him further, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; a few questions.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Karl Olsen was admitted in your court, that is the court of which you were clerk, in January of that same year, was he—I mean Leonard Olsson?—A. I don't remember the date; he was admitted in that court.

Q. And when he was admitted, of course he took the oaths that are prescribed by the statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gave the testimony required by the statute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Referring to the witness who supports the petition of one seeking to become a citizen, the law requires that he shall be a credible witness who is a citizen of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you if it was not Mr. Smith's contention before the court in the argument that you say he made, that Karl Olsen having, when admitted to citizenship, sworn that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution and taken the oaths required, had necessarily sworn in conflict with the testimony he then gave before the court, which rendered him not a credible witness, and therefore not competent within the statute.—A. Was not that the argument Mr. Smith made when he was objecting to him as a witness?

Mr. DORR. You used the name "Karl Olsen."

Mr. HUGHES. I meant Leonard Olsson.

A. You meant Leonard Olsson?

Q. Yes.—A. That was the substance of the argument, as it necessarily would be.

Q. But you are not a lawyer, and you do not profess to pass judgment upon whether it was sound or not?—A. Oh, no, no.

Q. As I understand you, you hear so many of these cases that you would not be able to fix in mind what occurred at the time Leonard Olsson was examined as a witness on the Karl Olsen application, but for the request of Mr. Smith that you make notes?—A. I would not—well, we would hear from 15 to 35 of them at a time, you know, and I had just simply to keep track of it whether they were admitted or denied, and in the meantime take them into the private office and administer the oath to them, after they had been admitted, and fix out cards for them to take down to the court room so that they could go down there and sign up their final papers, and there were several of those things that the deputy clerk would have to attend to and he would not be paying but very little attention to the usual run of the examination unless it was called to his attention.

Q. And now, is it a fact that the reason why your memory was fixed as to the particular questions propounded to Leonard Olsson, and his answers was because you did take notes?—A. Because I wrote them down at the time and I looked at them several times in the first six months afterwards.

Q. You were called to be a witness upon the hearing before Judge Hanford when they sought to cancel his citizenship papers in that proceeding?—A. Why, the notes were taken—was nothing said about it, as I remember, but they were taken just to be prepared in case there was a case.

Q. That was not my question, but I say you were subsequently called to be a witness———A. (Interrupting.) Oh.

Q. (Continuing.) In the proceeding before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the cancellation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you refresh your recollection from the memoranda after you had taken it, so that you might testify with a greater degree of accuracy when you were called as a witness in this proceeding for the cancellation of Leonard Olsson's papers?—A. I attempted to refresh my memory the same as I did last night and this morning before coming here and tried to find those notes, but I could not find them.

Q. You could not find them at that time?—A. No. I have got them somewheres, I know they are not destroyed, but an accumulation of papers for two or three years, you know, you don't know just where they are always.

Q. Will you please state what is your best recollection of the exact words of the question propounded by Mr. Smith, the first question propounded by Mr. Smith to Mr. Olsson in September, 1910, before the superior court?—A. My best recollection is, "Are you attached to the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same?" To which Mr. Olsson answered in the negative; whether the answer was "No" or "I am not," I do not remember. The next question was, "How long have you held these views?" The answer was either "Two or three years" or "Several years." The third question was, "Did you hold these views at the time that you became a citizen?" And the answer to that was "Yes."

Q. And that was the testimony you gave before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. NICHOLS. I would like to ask the committee to bring out from the witness whether on cross-examination in the trial before Judge Hanford the witness did not make the statement that he was not sure whether the word "devotedly" was used in the question or not.

The CHAIRMAN. You have heard the question offered by Mr. Nichols, have you?

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will repeat the question.

The statement of Mr. Nichols was here read by the stenographer.

A. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the answer?

A. I did. I am not positive whether the word "devotedly" was in the question at that time or not.

The CHAIRMAN. And you so answered on the hearing before Judge Hanford?

A. I did; yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask, Were you asked—did you state what was your best recollection in that connection?

A. At the hearing before Judge Hanford?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

A. No; I was not asked that question.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Have you ever said to anybody, Mr. McFarland, that Mr. John Speed Smith had said to you that he was going to "get" Olsson, have you ever told anybody that Mr. Smith said that?—A. Oh, I think that looking back now over it that perhaps at the time I discussed it with some of the clerks, there in the court there, that they were getting this testimony to try to take Olsson's papers away from him.

Q. No. Have you ever said to anybody that Mr. Smith had said to you that he intended to "get" Olsson, using the word "get," that is where the emphasis is?—A. I don't remember ever having discussed that with anybody.

Q. Now, I don't ask you whether you remember having discussed it with anybody, but have you ever stated to anybody that Mr. Smith used the word "get" in saying anything about this matter with reference to the testimony that he was to produce from Olsson on that day?—A. I have no recollection of it.

Q. Now, in answer to a question asked by Mr. Hughes, you said that Mr. Smith's argument in the superior court would necessarily be to the effect that Mr. Hughes stated. Have you any recollection of just what his argument was, or is your recollection that that was the sort of an argument that would be used on an occasion of that kind?—A. Well, my only recollection is that was the general line of the argument when anything of this kind came up—the incompetency of a witness—it was just the general line of argument; it is practically like the questions, a set argument; you can't get away from it, you know.

Q. Had there been any other occasion when you were present when the question of the credibility of the witness was attacked because of something he had stated on his own naturalization proceedings?—A. No; never had had a case similar to that.

Q. What did you mean by a general line of argument of this kind?—A. Well, if they set up in their questioning anything that would show the witness was not a credible witness, the argument would be along the line of what they set up at that time. For instance, one man they set up that he had been arrested a number of times for gambling. Well, the argument was along that line—that on account of his gambling he was not a credible witness.

Q. Have you any recollection now, independent of what your memory of the custom was, as to just exactly what the line of argument was that Mr. Smith used?—A. I could not give you the wording of it.

Q. No; the line of argument.—A. Well, the line of argument was along the line that the witness testifying that he was not attached to the Constitution of the United States, for that reason he was not a credible witness for another man to take out papers. Now, that is as near as I can give it to you.

Q. Was it that he was not a credible witness for that reason, but for that reason he was not a fit witness to be testifying on behalf of another man who was applying.—A. Just read that.

Question read.

A. Give me that again, I want to get it.

Mr. McCoy. Strike it out. I will ask it in another way.

Did not Mr. Smith argue that because he stated as you claim—because Olsson claimed, as you claim, that he was not attached to the principles of the Constitution, that therefore he was not a fit witness to act when another man was applying for citizenship?

A. Well, the argument was along that line, but whether he said he was not a fit witness or not, I don't remember.

Q. Well, was he questioning Leonard Olsson's veracity at the time, or his fitness, because of his lack of belief in the Constitution?—A. Well, I don't believe that I can answer your question as to what Mr. Smith was trying to bring out there.

Q. Well, I am only asking you as to what he was trying to bring out, from your recollection of what he said.—A. Well, he was trying to bring out the fact that Olsson was not attached to the Constitution of the United States; that is the way it impressed me.

Q. That is it exactly.

The Chairman. Any further questions? You may stand aside Mr. McFarland.

Gentlemen, what about the lady reporter of the Tacoma Ledger?

Mr. Hughes. We have made inquiry and are informed by the Ledger people that they had no lady on court assignment at any time, and that they are unable to locate the reporter who turned in this particular manuscript. The information that we have is that that reporter who is supposed to have attended the duty of court reporting at that particular time has left their employ since then and they do not know his whereabouts. That information of course, was obtained by consultation with those who are now connected with the office, and probably further information could be had, but that is all the information we have been able to get in this short period.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any question that the clipping which was offered in evidence yesterday was taken from that issue of the Tacoma Ledger?

Mr. HUGHES. We have not attempted to verify that at all, but I assume, from the questions that were propounded to them, and the answers they gave, that that probably was true. But we inquired as to who reported their court proceedings in the superior court at that time, and the answers were as I have stated.

Mr. MCCOY. Is there any public library here? Wouldn't there be a file of the Tacoma Ledger in the public library?

Mr. HUGHES. Quite likely. It is an easy matter to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The testimony yesterday, in the absence of any contradictory evidence, was sufficient to establish the fact that this was a clipping from that issue of the Tacoma Ledger, not perhaps very clear or very convincing, but in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, I think it is quite enough to establish that fact.

Mr. MCCOY. I want to ask Mr. McFarland a question.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. You need not take the stand. Right there. Just one question. After these proceedings in the superior court, did you have a talk with any reporter of any newspaper as to the case in which Leonard Olsson testified?—A. After the hearing?

Q. Yes, after the hearing at which you made this memorandum of which you speak.—A. Why, I could not say whether I had any talk with them after or not. The reporters used to come in here, and if they were not there during the hearing they would come in and just run over my records to get, as they called it, the "dope," to see who was admitted and who was denied, and if anybody was denied they would ask what the grounds were.

Q. Have you any recollection whether that happened in this case?—A. The reporter was there that day, but whether he was there at the time this hearing was going on I don't remember.

Q. Well, have you any recollection as to whether any reporter spoke to you after the case was over; after looking over your files or what not, did you tell any reporter that Karl Olsen had been refused admission to citizenship?—A. I could not answer that question without looking up those notes of that day.

Q. Do you know who the reporter was who was there that day?—A. I don't remember his name, but I am under the impression it was a fellow by the name of Clay.

Q. From what paper?—A. From the Ledger.

Q. Tacoma ledger?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know where he lives now?—A. The last I heard from him, about a year ago, he was in Chelan.

Q. In where?—A. In Chelan.

Mr. HUGHES. Chelan, Wash.?

The WITNESS. Chelan, Wash.

Mr. MCCOY. Wherabouts is that, what part of the State?

A. Over east of the mountains.

Q. Where?—A. Over east of the mountains, above Wenatchee.

Mr. MCCOY. All right, Mr. McFarland.

Mr. HUGHES. As I recall the name it was the name "Clay" that was reported. I was not sure when the question was propounded to me by the chairman, but since Mr. McFarland states the name, that is my recollection of the name given by the Ledger people as the person who was reporter at that time.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. McFarland, what was Mr. Clay's entire name, do you remember?

A. No, I don't remember his initials, but I can send it to you from Tacoma, if you wish it.

Mr. McCoy. Well, will you do that?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Thanks.

Mr. Preston. It was Claude—our information is that the name was Claude Clay.

The Witness. Wasn't it Claude A. Clay?

Mr. Preston. I don't know the middle initial; Claude Clay.

The Witness. I don't remember the initial, I thought it was "A."

The Chairman. Gentlemen, are there any other witnesses on this branch of the case to be called at this time? You intimated yesterday, Mr. Hughes, that there might be some others who had knowledge of it.

Mr. Hughes. I don't recall having made such a remark.

The Chairman. I may have misunderstood you. Regardless of that, do any of you gentlemen interested know of any other witness who should be called on this branch of the inquiry?

Mr. Nichols. None that we know of. There is none other that we know of.

The Chairman. And how is it with you, Mr. Hughes, and your associates, are there any others that you think of who should be called, except this Mr. Clay?

Mr. Hughes. Not that we know of at the present time. We know of no one at the present time who should be called. If it should develop that anyone else was present at that hearing, who has any recollection, it might be proper later on.

The Chairman. If it should, the committee will hear you.

A. M. Oleson having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the Chairman:

Q. State your name.—A. A. M. Oleson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Oleson?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Six years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Life-insurance solicitor.

Q. For what company or companies?—A. Mutual Benefit Life, of Newark, N. J.

Q. How long has that been your business?—A. Two years.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-two.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is. do you know him by sight or otherwise?—A. I know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. Possibly three or four years.

Q. If at any time during the three or four years that you have known him you have seen the judge when he appeared to be under the influence of some intoxicant, you may tell about it.—A. Well,

Mr. Chairman, in that connection, I would like to make a statement, if it is proper.

Q. Well, the committee would rather you would not, unless the committee can hear your statement in executive session, so to speak.—A. Well, then, I will answer by saying that if I have seen him I would be unable to fix a date upon which I have seen him, therefore I don't think it would be competent for me to answer.

Q. The committee does not quite agree with you about that, and I think the committee will have its way in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. Read the question to him as originally asked.

Question read as follows:

If at any time during the three or four years that you have known him you have seen the Judge when he appeared to you to be under the influence of some intoxicant, you may tell about it.

Q. Just if you know. Did you see him when in your opinion he was under the influence of some intoxicant? That is all the question goes to.—A. I have seen him when he appeared to me to be under the influence of liquor.

Q. How often would you say you have seen him during that time, Mr. Oleson, when he appeared to you to be under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I could not say. I can only at the present time recall one instance, but if I had certain notes that I made I possibly could recollect others.

Q. Were the notes you speak of made on the occasions when you saw the Judge?—A. Made at the time; yes, sir.

Q. By you?—A. By me.

Mr. HIGGINS. Where are they now?

A. They are, I presume, in the possession of the Burns Detective Agency.

Mr. HIGGINS. By whom were you employed at that time?

A. At that time, for that special case.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you now in the employ of that agency?

A. Not regularly; on call only.

Q. Are those notes now in Seattle?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, in the ordinary couse of business, do you know whether they probably would be?—A. Most likely, yes.

Q. To whom did you give them, Mr. Oleson?—A. To Mr. Thayer, manager for the Burns Detective Agency.

Mr. HIGGINS. What is his full name?

A. Walter R., I think.

Mr. HIGGINS. And his address?

A. 308 Hinckley Building is the only address I know.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, as to the occasion which you told us about a little while ago, where did you see the judge on that occasion?

A. On a street car.

Q. Going where, from where to where?—A. Going home.

Q. What time in the day or night was it?—A. Possibly 6.30 in the evening, or thereabouts.

Q. For how long a time did you have an opportunity to observe the judge?—A. Possibly 15 minutes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Don't make your question "possibly."

A. I will put it in a different way, then.

Mr. HIGGINS. It might possibly be any time.

A. I will put it in a different way. The length of time that it requires the judge to go from down town to his home.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that be about 15 minutes?

A. About 15 minutes.

Q. I suppose when you said, "possibly" you meant "about?"—A. I meant "about;" yes.

Q. Well, "about" is a better word, because "possibly" might be a second or it might be a year.—A. All right.

Q. Were you on the car?—A. I was.

Q. Mr. Oleson, tell the committee as well as you can the observations you made which led you then to conclude that the judge was under the influence of intoxicants.—A. The fact that he continually went to sleep in the car, or, rather, I won't say go to sleep, but kept nodding his head and dropping his head and hitting it against the window and straightening himself up.

Q. Where was he when you first noticed him on that occasion? Was he on the car, getting on or going——A. (Interrupting.) He was on the car.

Q. Did you see him get off the car?—A. I did.

Q. Tell us what you observed as to his condition in getting off and after he got off?—A. I saw nothing that would indicate that he was under the influence of liquor when he got off the car, because he walked straight and went directly into his home.

Q. Were you near enough to him to notice whether there was any odor of liquor?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. How many other persons were on the car?—A. One other that I knew.

Q. Is that person in or about Seattle now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. Mr. Nordskog.

Q. Spell it.—A. N-o-r-d-s-k-o-g.

Q. Was he in the same employment you were, did you say?—A. He was.

Mr. HIGGINS. Employed on the same case?

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you fix the time or approximately the time when this happened, Mr. Oleson?

A. No; I could not, Mr. Chairman.

Q. The year?—A. I can fix the year and——

Q. What year?—A. It was in 1911.

Q. What month?—A. I could not say whether it was in September or October, in fact it is not clear in my mind whether it was in the latter part of August or not.

Q. Your notes would reveal that?—A. My notes would tell. It is nearly a year since and I have had no opportunity of looking them over. I was called up here on a moment's notice.

Q. Did you get on the car because you knew the judge was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you mean, Mr. Oleson, that you saw the judge get on the car?

A. I did.

Q. Did you see him before he got on the car?—A. I did.

Mr. HIGGINS. Where?

A. I saw him—directly before he got on the car on this occasion, I think, coming out of the Butler bar. Now, I will not say for certain that that was on this particular occasion or not.

The CHAIRMAN. What part of the city is that in?

A. That is in the down-town district, at Second and James.

Q. How far from the United States courthouse building—post-office building?—A. Probably seven or eight blocks.

Q. Well, what was his appearance with reference to sobriety when he left this building, whatever it was, and when he went to the car and as he got on it?—A. There was nothing to indicate that he was under the influence of liquor when he went to the car or got on the car. The only thing that I mentioned was with reference to his going to sleep in the car.

Q. How soon after he got on did you and your associates get on?—A. Directly.

Q. At the same stop?—A. At the next crossing, I believe, one, and the other possibly right at the time; I don't remember.

Q. How soon after he got on did he go to nodding or sleeping or whatever his condition was?—A. Almost directly, as far as I can remember.

Q. How much of the time during the 15 minutes or so you rode with him was he in that condition?—A. Well, now, that would be hard to define, because he was nodding off and on almost all the time.

Q. What chance have you had to observe men who are under the influence of liquor or any intoxicant?—A. No more than any other man who is around town.

Q. I am not sure they all have the same chance, but have you seen a great many men who were under the influence of liquor, more or less intoxicated, in your time?—A. Yes; in my 42 years I have seen a great many men under the influence of liquor.

Q. From your observation and your knowledge of those things, what do you say as to whether or not Judge Hanford was more or less intoxicated that night?—A. My personal opinion is that he was; but at the same time it is possible that it might be due to a sleeplessness or heavy work.

Q. Without fixing dates, can you think of any other occasion when you saw him, in your judgment, under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I can recall——

Q. (Interrupting.) I want to say to you at this point, we will try to help you. I hope it won't be difficult——A. Yes.

Q. We will give you a chance to verify the dates later on; we do not desire to take any advantage of you in that regard.—A. Well, in a case as important as this I do not feel I should be required to depend on my memory altogether, where a whole year has elapsed.

Q. That is true; but you can state your reservations, you know, and then later we will hope to be able to get those facts for you. When you are not clear in your recollection, you can tell us so and then give us the exact dates later, if you find the notes. Now, with that explanation, can you recall any other instance when you saw the judge, as you thought, under the influence of liquor or some other intoxicant?—A. Yes; I can recall one instance when he appeared to me so.

Q. Was that before or after the one you have related?—A. I could not say.

Q. Can you give us——A. (Interrupting.) It may have been the same evening, for all I know, because this was later in the evening. It was on the occasion, I think, of Dr. McCormick's lecture at the Alhambra Theater.

Q. Who is Dr. McCormick, Mr. Oleson?—A. I don't know, except that he was a medical lecturer. I am not sure that it was Dr. McCormick, but that was my impression.

Q. It was a lecture at the Alhambra Theater in this city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after you saw the judge on the street car was that?—A. I could not say.

Q. But it was the same evening?—A. It may have been the same evening.

Q. Oh, well, on the occasion you now speak of, where was he when you first noticed him?—A. Coming from his home, going down town in the evening.

Q. Afoot?—A. No; on the street car.

Q. Mr. Oleson, where was he?—A. With reference to his home?

Q. When you first saw him on this occasion?—A. With reference to his home?

Q. Yes.—A. He came directly out of his home, as far as I remember, and got on the street car.

Q. Did you get on that car?—A. I did.

Q. How far did you and he ride together?—A. As far as the Alhambra Theater, I think, or I won't say for sure. I rather think the judge went to his office first. Now, there I am up against it again. I don't want to say.

Q. Well, will you give us your best recollection of the time or about the length of time that you saw him before he entered the theater that evening?—A. My recollection is that he went from his home to his office, and I did not see him again until he came out of his office again and went to the Alhambra. That is my recollection.

Q. Was there anything in his appearance and actions during that time which lead you to believe he was intoxicated?—A. Yes; I think his actions were very much the same as I have described in the other instance.

Q. Well, tell first what he did on the car.—A. He seemed to be nodding and going to sleep, the same as the other instance that I have described, and for that reason it may possibly have been the same evening; I can not say.

Q. Were there many people on the car on that occasion?—A. There were several; yes.

Q. Do you know, from your observation, whether he attracted the attention of others on the car by his conduct or actions?—A. That I could not say.

Mr. HIGGINS. Was your associate with you then?

A. My recollection is that he was, but I won't say for sure.

Q. You gave his name before. I don't just recall it.—A. Nordskog.

Mr. HIGGINS. What is his first name?

A. A. A. — Arney.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you observe him on the way from the office to the theater?

A. My recollection is that I did, but I won't say that for sure.

Q. Have you a recollection as to how he went, whether he walked or rode?—A. I think he walked.

Q. What is the distance from his office to this theater?—A. Just about three blocks, I think—three or four blocks.

Q. Did you attend the meeting at the theater?—A. I did.

Q. What was it, simply a lecture?—A. Just a lecture; yes.

Q. Where was the judge located in the building?—A. He was sitting on the stage.

Q. Were there many others besides the lecturer on the stage?—A. There were a great many; yes.

Q. Did you know any of them?—A. Yes. Dr. Matthews was there, for one.

Q. Give that name in full, can you?—A. Dr. Mark A. Matthews, I think it is.

Q. Do you recall any others?—A. My recollection is that Judge Burke was there.

Q. Those gentlemen are both at Seattle?—A. And Dr. McCulloch, I think, presided.

Q. Did the judge participate in any active way in the meeting?—A. He did; he made a speech—talked.

Q. What was the lecture about, what was the subject matter of it?—A. It was purely medical, as I remember it—hygienic.

Q. At what stage during the meeting did Judge Hanford address the audience?—A. Toward the last, I think.

Q. From the time that he appeared on the platform, or the time that you first saw him there, tell the committee what his actions were with reference to his being affected by any intoxicant—as to his being sober or otherwise.—A. Well, I could not say, except that he seemed to be affected by some drowsiness that he had previously been affected by.

Q. How did it affect him—what effect had it on him? Just tell what he did.—A. Why, he nodded his head as though he had great difficulty in keeping awake.

Mr. HIGGINS. That was during the time he was on the stage?

A. During the time he was on the stage; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did you say the meeting lasted?

A. About an hour and a half or two hours.

Q. Well, do you want us to understand that all of that time, except when he was addressing the audience, that he was nodding?—A. No, sir; he did not get there until late. I don't suppose he was on the stage over a half hour; I would not say for sure, but something like that.

Q. That is, altogether——A. Altogether.

Q. (Continuing.) Or before he began speaking?—A. Before he began speaking.

Q. And in that half hour how much of the time was he nodding?—A. A great part of the time.

Q. Now, in this nodding operation, will you tell us the best you can the movements which his head would make, how low would it hang, if it hung? You know what I mean. Tell us about that.—A. Just simply nodding, because he would arouse himself every minute or so and straighten up.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is, you mean to say that it indicated that he was——

A. (Interrupting.) Drowsy.

Mr. HIGGINS (continuing). Feeling sleepy and then——

A. (Interrupting.) Arousing himself.

Mr. HIGGINS (continuing). Would throw his head back?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. How frequently was that?—A. Every few minutes.

Q. That occurred on the street car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also when he was sitting on the platform in the theater?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After he ceased speaking, as well as before?—A. My recollection is that he was about the last speaker. Now, I would not be positive as to that.

Q. How long did he speak?—A. Just a few moments.

Q. Do you recall what subject he discussed?—A. No, I don't.

Q. How many people——A. (Interrupting.) I would not say.

Q. Well, what was the nature of the meeting?—A. It was a meeting, as I understand it—I didn't know what meeting was there when I came there, but gathered from the newspapers the next day and from what I heard there that it was a meeting under the auspices of the medical association here; that Dr. McCormick was a lecturer who went all over the country delivering these lectures.

Q. Now, aren't you able to tell, Mr. Oleson, of others who were in the theater or on the stage?—A. No, I can't recall at the present time. I didn't charge my memory with it after the report was made, and I had no further interest in it. I think my report shows others. The newspapers of that day will probably tell. I am safe in saying that a great many of the prominent men in this city were on the stage.

Q. It was a meeting which attracted wide public interest in Seattle?—A. It did, or at least in the lecturer.

Q. You have named two instances where you thought that the judge was under the influence of liquor. Are there any others?—A. None that I can recall distinctly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you during the evening observe him going into or coming out of any places where drink was sold, a saloon, club, or——A. (Interrupting.) Late in the evening?

Q. Well, before that meeting?—A. No. He went directly, as I remember, from the courthouse to the meeting.

Q. Did you observe him after he left the meeting?—A. I am not positive as to that. No; I won't——

Q. Do you know how he went home or if he went home after the meeting?—A. I am not sure as to whether he went to the Washington Hotel on that occasion or not.

Q. Would your minutes show that fact?—A. They would show it; yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the judge while he addressed the meeting?—A. I did.

Q. Have you heard him talk to public gatherings often?—A. It is the first time that I have heard him.

Q. Was there anything in his manner of address which caused you to have any opinion as to whether he was sober or not sober?—A. I would not say at the present time whether there was or not; not unless I had my notes to see. I think I am safe in saying that an average person who was not watching him closely for a particular purpose, there may not have been anything in his address that would indicate it.

Q. Well, to you how did it appear?—A. My impression is now that I thought his talk was slightly rambling, but I will not be sure as to that.

Q. From all that you observed of him that evening from the time you saw him get on the car until you lost sight of him after the meeting, that is, from what you observed of him and from your knowledge of those matters, what would you say as to whether or not he was under the influence of some intoxicant that night?—A. Well, from what I have already said my impression is that he was; my personal opinion is that he was.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. The only indication, as I understand it, Mr. Oleson, upon which you base that opinion is the fact that he nodded his head?—A. It is.

Q. Did he not stagger?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. And you say the only evidence that he gave to you of his being under the influence of liquor was the fact that his head would nod and then he would catch his head?—A. That is the only recollection I have at the present time without consulting the notes I made at the time.

Q. He was formally introduced by the chairman of this meeting?—A. He was.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Are you a relative of Leonard Olsson?—A. No, sir.

Q. Apart from those two occasions, do you recall any other, without asking you to fix the date at this time, when you saw him when in your opinion he was under the influence of liquor or some other intoxicant?—A. I don't.

Q. For how long a time had you been observing him?—A. About 12 or 14 days, I think, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Both those instances would come within 12 or 14 days?—A. They would; yes, sir.

Q. And that was some time between the first of August and the last of September, 1911?—A. Some time between the first of August and the middle of October, I should say; I can't fix it any better.

Q. Well, it was in the fall of 1911?—A. It was; yes, sir.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. How long had you been employed before this by the detective agency?—A. This was my first case.

Q. I don't think you have named, for the purpose of the record, the agency by which you were employed?—A. Yes, I did. I have named it.

Q. Won't you state it again?—A. The Burns—William J. Burns National Detective Agency.

Q. Who have a branch office at Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who was your client?—A. I don't know.

Q. Who were you seeking to serve in your employment?—A. The William J. Burns Detective Agency.

Q. And did they give you the instructions?—A. They did.

Q. What were they?—A. Simply to follow Judge Hanford wherever he went.

Q. You did that for 12 or 14 days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During that time Mr. Nordskog was with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Anybody else?—A. No one.
Q. Do you happen to know whether other men from the agency were similarly employed at that time?—A. Not of—I have no personal knowledge of it.
Q. How frequently did you——A. (Interrupting.) I do know it as a matter of information.
Q. As a matter of common talk?—A. Yes.
Q. Hearsay?—A. Yes.
Q. You didn't confer or cooperate with anybody except Mr. Nordskog?—A. No one except the manager of the agency.
Q. Mr. Thayer?—A. Mr. Thayer.
Q. How frequently, Mr. Oleson, would you report to Mr. Thayer?—A. Well, my recollection is that we made no verbal report to Mr. Thayer at any time; that it was simply done by reports—the written reports that were handed in every day, which covered the day's work.
Q. Did you and Mr. Nordskog both sign the same report?—A. We signed no reports.
Q. You did not sign the written report which you handed to Mr. Thayer?—A. Only by initials.
Q. Did you and Mr. Nordskog make separate reports?—A. We did.
Q. Or join in one?—A. No; we made separate reports.
Q. And then initialed them?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was your habit, Mr. Oleson, during that 12 or 14 days; won't you indicate to the committee just the line of action that you took?—A. The instructions were simply to follow Judge Hanford wherever he went, which we did.
Q. That is, you went to his house?—A. Home.
Q. In the morning?—A. In the morning. Went home with him in the evening.
Q. And during the day shadowed the place to which he went?—A Yes, sir.
Q. What was his habit as to the time of leaving home?—A. He went directly to the courthouse.
Q. As to the time of day?—A. All the way from 9 o'clock, I think, in the morning until half past 9 or 10; I think as late as 10 o'clock.
Q. In the morning?—A. In the morning; yes.
Q. And would he walk or ride?—A. He took the street car in front of his home invariably—that is, at times he would walk down a block or two and take the street car.
Q. Go direct to the Federal building?—A. Go direct to the Federal building.
Q. That was his practice during all the times that you have referred to, the 12 or 14 days?—A. It was.
Q. Where would he go to lunch?—A. To the Rainier Club.
Q. And you went there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you noted his leaving the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then where would he go?—A. Directly to the Federal building.
Q. How long would he remain there?—A. Until about 5, my recollection is; 5.30 possibly.
Q. Then what was his habit?—A. He invariably went directly to the Rainier Club.
Q. How long would he remain there?—A. Oh, from a half an hour to an hour, I think. I would not say that for sure now. That is my recollection.

Q. What time would he reach the Rainier Club in the afternoon?—A. I think about 5.30; I won't say that for sure; sometimes between 5 and 6 o'clock.

Q. And you and Mr. Nordskog kept the entrance to the Rainier Club in view?—A. All the time; yes, sir.

Q. How far is his home from the Rainier Club?—A. Well, it is about a 15-minute ride, I think, by car. I would not say in miles just how far it is.

Q. Would he walk home from——A. (Interrupting.) No; he invariably took the street car.

Q. And you and Mr. Nordskog took the same car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he went home then to dinner, I assume?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long would he then remain at home?—A. Why, oftentimes he would stay home all evening; other times he would come down town; go to the Federal building.

Q. That is, go direct from his home to the office building, to the courthouse, or the Federal building?—A. That is my recollection of some of the evenings that he came down town.

Q. On the evenings that he came down town, Mr. Oleson, and came to the Federal building, how long would he remain at the Federal building?—A. Oftentimes until 10, 10.30, 11 o'clock; that is my recollection.

Q. There would be evenings, I understand you, when he would not leave his home at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give the committee any idea of the number of evenings in the 12 or 14 that you watched him when he would not leave his home at all?—A. No; I could not. In fact, I am not, Mr. Chairman, justified in sitting on the witness stand and talking in this rambling way, because my recollection is very indistinct. It was all in a day's work, and when the day's report was in I dismissed it from my mind, and it is nearly a year ago.

Q. Well, what other places, Mr. Oleson, did you note the judge went after reaching home for dinner? You spoke of his going to the Federal building. Where else did he go?—A. I think he invariably went over to the Rainier Club after he left the Federal building.

Q. Are you in the Burns Agency employ now, Mr. Oleson?—A. Simply on call as an extra man.

Q. Have you been employed by them recently?—A. Not within the last month.

Q. You stated, in answer to Mr. Graham, that you knew or had known Judge Hanford for three or four years?—A. By sight.

Q. How frequently during that time would you see him?—A. Well, not very often.

Q. Did you have occasion to meet him on the street in going back and forth to your home?—A. Just in passing; possibly be in court holding court at times when I would drop in.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, in view of what the witness has stated about his minutes and the unsatisfactory testimony he gives as to time and dates, I feel that we would make time if we could stop here and give him and his associates, if necessary, an opportunity to consult those notes, help them to find them, or have them brought here some way. It is a waste of time going over the ground this way, with the probability of having to go over the same ground again after he refreshes his recollection. The chair thinks, if there is not objection to that course, that it might be well to take a recess now. Would you mind waiting to cross-examine or to make your examination after he had an opportunity to refresh his recollection?

Mr. HUGHES. It is satisfactory to us, your honor, to adjourn at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that would save time for all of us. Then Mr. Oleson might stand aside. I am informed there is a witness here whom we might call in the interim between now and noon.

Gentlemen, before calling this witness the committee wants to say that while we want to work as hard as we can, we do not want to absolutely shock you by violating your local customs. What is the usual custom here for Saturday afternoon work?

Mr. HUGHES. The usual custom at this season of the year is not to work on Saturday afternoon; that is, it is a universal holiday in the courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Would they be likely to do anything to us if we did work? Is the custom strong enough to make it dangerous to work?

Mr. HUGHES. I think it would be dangerous to yourselves, but I do not anticipate that that danger will come from any act of the people of this community.

JOHN BATHURST, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Oleson, you had better remain until the committee determines about the afternoon's session.

Mr. MCCOY. What is your name, Mr. Bathurst?

A. John Bathurst.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In the city of Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Oh, about 20 months.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do, by sight.

Q. Have you ever seen him when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I have.

Q. When?—A. I can't say the date, but it was in September or October of last year, 1911.

Q. Where?—A. On Fourth Avenue.

Q. State what you observed?—A. I was waiting at the corner of the library for my wife to come in. We were going to church. It was about 6 o'clock.

Q. What day of the week?—A. Sunday.

Q. What did you observe; explain what you saw?—A. I saw a man come staggering toward me.

Q. From where?—A. Apparently from the Rainier Club. I didn't actually see him leave the club, but I had not seen him beyond it.

Q. Explain his physical actions on that occasion?—A. He was very, very drunk or very, very ill.

Q. What made you believe that?—A. Because of his condition, staggering from side to side on the sidewalk and thence into the street once.

Q. How long at that time did you observe him?—A. I observed him for quite a distance. He was coming to me. I thought the condition ought to be noted at the time, so I—three men were in conversation on the opposite side of the street in front of the Y. M. C. A., and the car not being quite due, I passed across the street and called their attention to the disgraceful state of a Federal judge.

Q. Well, for how long a time did you observe him on that occasion?—A. Oh, a quarter of a mile possibly.

Q. And what was his condition during all the time—what were his actions, rather, during all the time you observed him?—A. The same, along the sidewalk. The sidewalk was very wide.

Q. You say he went from one side of it to the other?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did he go when he disappeared from your sight?—A. I have no idea.

Q. Did you take the car?—A. No; I still waited for my wife.

Q. Did he go out of your sight by turning a corner or getting onto a car, or what?—A. No; he just passed along; some people coming along; he passed from sight just as the car came along on which my wife was. He passed from sight by some people just when my attention was directed to the car in which my wife came along. I saw him pass along probably 200 yards from me.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By the Chairman:

Q. What is your business, Mr. Bathurst?—A. I am weighmaster for the city of Seattle at the present time—weighmaster in the sanitary department.

Q. Is that a city office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. For since the 1st of November last.

Q. What was your occupation when not holding an office?—A. Prior to that I was United States commissioner for five years in Alaska—the prior occupation.

Q. Have you ever had any official relationship with Judge Hanford?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any ill will of any kind toward him?—A. I have not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Apart from any feeling you may have about the matter of which you have testified to having?—A. I have, from his general conduct on the bench; I admit that.

Q. Well, have you any other?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you had any litigation in his court?—A. I have not.

Q. Has he at any time done what you conceived to be a personal injury to you?—A. He has not.

Q. When did you first observe that sometimes the judge became intoxicated?—A. That sometimes?

Q. When did you first observe it? Was this time you told the first time?—A. This is the only time that I have seen him, save once; I seen him once visibly on the street, passed him once on the street, visibly under the influence, but not to that extent.

Q. Well, to what extent?—A. To the extent that one who has seen men under the influence of liquor at all on the street would know them in that condition; can recognize them in that condition. It was palpable to me.

Q. What experience or opportunity have you had to observe men under the influence of liquor?—A. Oh, the trying of probably 200 cases of drunken men.

Q. And as to seeing men under the influence of liquor, what opportunity have you had?—A. Unfortunately it was very frequent with me in Tanana.

Q. Have you any principles which make you particularly adverse to the use of liquor?—A. I have not. I use it occasionally myself.

Q. To be specific, are you a prohibitionist?—A. No; I am not.

Q. You don't object to the moderate use of liquor?—A. I do not.

Q. You admit that you have some feeling if not some prejudice against the judge on account of certain things?—A. I have. I would not call it prejudice; I would call it experience.

Mr. HIGGINS. Call it what?

A. Experience.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by that?

A. Not personal experience; experience from decisions rendered on the bench.

Q. Observation?—A. Observation.

Q. Are you a lawyer.—A. No, sir. Necessarily have studied law quite a bit in the office.

Q. Do you mean by decisions your opinion of the justice and rightness of the judgments he renders?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to what do you refer?—A. More especially to—I will be frank—to our car-line fight.

Q. Has that case a name by which you know it?—A. Why, it was the old Renton car line which has been before him; certain matters. Many and various——

Q. (Interrupting.) Seattle, Renton & Southern; was that it?—A. Yes; Seattle, Renton & Southern. Very many and varied phases of it have been before Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, without going further into the details of it, then, his official action in that matter is one reason why you dislike his conduct on the bench?—A. Yes, sir; but that didn't prejudice me against Judge Hanford. But the fact that I saw him dreadfully intoxicated myself, and the fact that it was a matter of public knowledge that he was an awful user of intoxicating liquors, focused the opinion and formed the opinion in my mind that he was a man totally unfitted for the bench, and I have had that in my mind since.

Q. Have you any other case in mind which added or contributed to the formation of the opinion you have about him in his official capacity?—A. Nothing I think that would tend toward prejudicing me against the judge.

Q. Have you at times attended court when the judge presided?—A. Once or twice.

Q. Was there anything in his demeanor on the bench, his conduct toward litigants or lawyers or witnesses that contributed in any way toward the state of your mind?—Nothing beyond apparent inattention.

Q. What?—A. Apparent inattention.

Q. In what way do you mean? Explain, please, what you mean, Mr. Bathurst, by apparent inattention?—A. Why, apparently not paying attention to what was going on in the court.

Q. Well, that means——A. (Interrupting). I remarked that phase of it to my brother-in-law on leaving Judge Hanford's court. Maybe——

Q. (Interrupting.) What you said to your brother-in-law would not amount to much, but you might tell us what made you think what you said to your brother-in-law. What was it?—A. That was it, it was the lack—apparent lack of attention to what was going on in his court.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who is your brother-in-law?

A. Mr. Fordyce Rhodes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is he a lawyer?

A. No; he is professor of the high school—Frankling High School.

The CHAIRMAN. Inattention might be the result of various things.

A. Certainly.

Q. It might be the result of sleep, might be sort of contemptuous inattention. Will you please give us some better definition of the particular kind of inattention that you think Judge Hanford exhibited?—A. I could give you one instance, sir, in this town, which would perhaps show my thought and frame of mind. In seeing a murder case here, I have seen the judge take a newspaper——

Q. (Interrupting.) What?—A. In witnessing a murder case here, I have seen a judge——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, this is a judge, not Judge Hanford?—A. No; not Judge Hanford. I have seen the judge take a newspaper in his hand——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't think we care for that. One judge at a time.—A. It was that kind of inattention that it was no attention apparently being paid to the case. It is——

Q. (Interrupting.) But you could not be sure, could you, Mr. Bathurst, whether he was really attending to it or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You limited your expression to "apparent" inattention?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By that you meant that in spite of appearances he might be giving it close attention, is that so?—A. Very possible.

Q. Very well. We will not pursue it further. Is there any other matter you have in mind——

A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Which you think you ought to tell the committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) In support of the statement you made that in your opinion Judge Hanford was not a proper kind of man to occupy the bench. Have you told us all that occurs to you?—A. No, sir. I have told you all—I can not go into the phases of the litigation which were taken up in Judge Hanford's court, which impressed themselves upon my mind as to the injustice that was being rendered there. That will come before you——

Q. (Interrupting.) We would not want your view from a legal standpoint, of the particular cases, but if you care to mention any cases the treatment of which helped to produce your state of mind, you may do that.—A. Why, I don't think I would, sir—it is just the whole case, the whole fighting which we were subjected to out on that line, and I would not wish this committee to assume that any impression that Judge Hanford made upon my mind by these cases would induce me to come into this court and swear that I saw him intoxicated upon the street on a Sunday afternoon, and in a bad state of intoxication.

Q. You stated to Mr. McCoy that he wobbled. You did not use that word, but that is what you meant?—A. He staggered.

Q. He staggered from one side of the sidewalk to the other, and at least once got off the sidewalk out on the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How wide was the sidewalk?—A. Oh, the sidewalk must be eight feet wide there.

Q. How far out from the sidewalk did he go in the street?—A. Well, he recovered himself just at the edge.

Q. Was there any other reason than his condition for his getting off the sidewalk?—A. Certainly not.

Q. That you know of?—A. Certainly not.

Q. How far did he go before he got back on the sidewalk?—A. He recovered himself directly.

Q. In a step or two?—A. No, sir; he almost instantly recovered himself and stepped back onto the curbstone.

Q. Did both feet get off the sidewalk onto the pavement?—A. I think—I could not be sure.

Q. Were you close enough to give us any information as to what the nature of that intoxicant was?—A. No, sir; I was not close enough to smell him.

Q. Did you follow him from the point at which you first observed him?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know any of those to whom you spoke about the incident?—A. They were strangers to me—entire strangers.

Q. Did you observe whether other persons on the street observed the judge and followed him with their eyes?—A. I did; two——

Q. (Interrupting.) To what extent was that done?—A. There were not many people, the street was quite quiet; Fourth Avenue very often is at that time on Sunday.

Q. Tell us to what extent he attracted attention?—A. Two young girls I saw particularly turn and laugh at the judge; that was all that I noticed—noted particularly besides those to whom I called attention.

Q. Did you know who he was without inquiry?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did the persons to whom you spoke on the other side of the street know who he was without being told?—A. That I don't know, because I simply called their attention and they did not—I didn't enter into any conversation.

Mr. HUGHES. I don't hear you, sir.

A. I simply called their attention to the fact and did not enter into any conversation with them.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes do you wish to examine further?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Bathurst, you say that you have been living here 20 months?—A. A year ago last October since I came down.

Q. That is, you came here in October, 1910?—A. 1911–1910.

Q. And you came from whence?—A. From Alaska.

Q. From Tanana?—A. From Tanana.

Q. How long had you lived there?—A. Since 1903.

Q. In what town?—A. Town of Tanana, at the mouth of the Tanana River.

Q. What was your business there?—A. United States commissioner.

Q. No other business than United States commissioner?—A. Not beyond mining.

Q. How?—A. Not beyond mining.

Q. Not beyond mining?—A. No.

Q. But that is the principal business of most men in Alaska?—A. Well, the principal business is mining there, you know; when he is in that business that is the only business that keeps him occupied all the time.

Q. I am trying to find out what you were doing. Did you simply conduct the office of United States commissioner?—A. Yes.

Q. Or were you mining?—A. No. The rest of the time—I was there from 1903. I was commissioner in 1905. Before that I was mining, prospecting.

Q. And after that, the last five years you did nothing but attend to such duties as came before you as United States commissioner?—A. Yes; that is all.

Q. How did you come to leave Tanana?—A. Why, wife wanted to leave; wanted to come out; been there 12 years; hadn't made anything.

Q. How long were you here before you got a public position here?—A. One year.

Q. What did you do in the meantime?—A. Nothing.

Q. Nothing at all?—A. No.

Q. Except to live down on the Renton line and feed upon discontent; is that it?—A. Oh, no, sir; we are perfectly contented there now.

Q. You lived there, did you, on the Renton line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the people in that locality thought they had a great many grievances against the Seattle, Renton & Southern road?—A. They didn't think anything about it; they were certain they had.

Q. Yes, quite certain. The litigation you refer to was in whose court?—A. Mostly in Judge Hanford s court, I guess.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. Oh, no, not positive; there was some of it before the——

Q. (Interrupting.) In fact, what litigation occurred was in the State court until the injunction suit brought by Peabody——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes, the litigation——

Q. (Continuing.) The trustee?

A. (Continuing.) Was in the State courts, and the decisions in the Federal court.

Q. The case you refer to is the case before Judge Hanford in which a temporary injunction was issued—a temporary restraining order?—A. One.

Q. What?—A. One.

Q. That is the case you refer to, isn't it, the one in which there was a temporary restraining order?—A. Not especially. That was one part of it.

Q. Well, do you know of any other case?—A. I take the whole proceedings. I don't call it a case; I take the whole proceedings.

Q. I am talking about the proceedings before Judge Hanford. Do you know of any other case in which there was any interest—public interest on the part of the people down there, except the case of Peabody, as trustee, in which a temporary restraining order was issued against the city and the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell me what other case there was?—A. The case which pretty nearly caused wholesale riot, you know, down there, at the time the injunction was issued against the people.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't catch your answer.

Answer read.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the case that I have just spoken of—the case of Peabody, as trustee, against the city of Seattle and the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway.

A. And that is the injunction——

Q. (Interrupting.) In which the temporary injunction was issued—A. There were two different injunctions entirely. One was restraining the people from getting together and agreeing not to pay the 5 cents, and the other was an injunction issued against parties involved one against the other in the company—Peabody, Houghteling, and somebody else, and Crawford.

Q. Will you tell me whether there was more than one case of that kind in Judge Hanford's court, to your knowledge, sir?—A. Yes, sir. I don't know whether it was more than one case; there was more than one phase of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute, gentlemen. The examination will have to be carried on without heat.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not mean to display any heat.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Guard yourself. The testimony will have to be carried on without heat.

Mr. MCCOY. Read the answer, please, and I suggest that we have the last two or three questions read so as to see where we are at.

The stenographer here read from the record as follows:

A. There were two different injunctions entirely. One was restraining the people from getting together and agreeing not to pay the 5 cents, and the other was an injunction issued against parties involved one against the other in the company—Peabody, Houghteling, and somebody else, and Crawford.

Q. Will you tell me whether there was more than one case of that kind in Judge Hanford's court, to your knowledge, sir?—A. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. The only word "additional"—the "additional" 5 cent fare.

Mr. HUGHES. The only point I am trying to get at, Mr. Bathurst, is this: So far as——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). Excuse me, Mr. Hughes. As the answer stands now it is not correctly reported—what the witness said. It simply is "Yes, sir," and the witness added "at least there were two aspects of the case." As it is now, it is on the record as stating that there were two suits. Now, I don't know whether there were or not, but he did not say there were two suits. He said "Yes, there were at least two aspects."

The WITNESS. Phases.

Mr. MCCOY. Isn't that what you testified to?

A. Several phases of that suit. I don't know how many suits they entered.

Mr. HUGHES. My only purpose is to locate the suits.

Mr. MCCOY. I understand. I want to get the witness down right.

Mr. HUGHES. As a matter of fact, the controversies you refer to were phases of one suit, not different suits, before Judge Hanford?

A. It was all one, it has been all one proceeding, so far as I know, except—save that of the people against Crawford.

Q. You refer to the meeting at the Dreamland Rink following that restraining order?—A. Just repeat your question.

Question read.

A. Oh, no, no.

Q. Were you present at that meeting at the Dreamland Rink?—A. Yes, I was present at that meeting. That is not the meeting I am referring to at all; I am referring to the state of the people out there upon the line.

Q. Oh.—A. I am not referring to that meeting in any way.

Q. The meeting in the Dreamland Rink was right following this restraining order, wasn't it?—A. That meeting was, I suppose, right afterwards.

Q. And any meetings that you refer to out there in the Renton district, so far as they were affected by this case, were just about that time?—A. Yes.

Q. The same time. Have you lived on the Renton line ever since you came to the city?—A. Yes, save for about six weeks.

Q. How many times have you ever been in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I could not say. Few, maybe three, maybe four.

Q. Were you there as a witness——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) Or party?—A. No, just——

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Witness, wait until the question is completed before you answer it.

Mr. HUGHES. Did you have any business in court at the times you were present in the court room?

A. No, sir.

Q. There simply as a causal visitor in the court room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there any length of time?—A. Yes, twice I stayed for probably an hour or hour and a half.

Q. Were you there because you were interested in hearing some particular case of any consequence that was pending?—A. Oh, no; I was waiting down town; just dropped into the court room.

Q. No purpose, but simply casual?—A. Quite so.

Q. When were the occasions when you were in Judge Hanford's court room while he was presiding?—A. Oh, during last winter.

Q. Before you entered the city employment, or after?—A. Yes, before. Not this winter, this recent winter. A year ago—a year ago this winter.

Mr. MCCOY. The winter of 1911?

A. 1911, yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Was that before or after this injunction suit that you speak of?

A. Oh, I was in Judge Hanford's court before, and probably after.

Q. Do you remember what cases were pending on trial before Judge Hanford when you were in his court?—A. I do not, save the last time that I was in.

Q. What was that?—A. That was a white-slave case.

Q. A white-slave case. You were not interested in any as a witness or otherwise in the case?—A. No; I didn't stay long.

Q. Did you stay until the trial was ended?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you say that he seemed to be inattentive to that case?—A. No, no.

Q. Did you know that Judge Hanford gave the maximum sentence in that white-slave case, and did that afford any prejudice in your mind?—A. That decidedly would not prejudice me.

Q. It would not?—A. I should approve of it.

Mr. HIGGINS. I don't hear your answer.

A. I say I should approve of that.

Q. Do you know what attorneys were conducting the cases when you were present in court? Take the white slave case, the district attorney, I suppose, was on one side. Do you remember what attorney was on the other?—A. I don't remember the man's name. I should know him if I saw him.

Q. On the other occasions when you were present, do you remember what attorneys were conducting the cases?—A. The first time I was in I think civil cases were being tried.

Mr. MCCOY. Louder.

A. I say the first time I was in I think civil cases were being tried. The State's attorney was not—the district attorney was not engaged.

Q. Do you remember who the attorneys were?—A. I do not. I have a very limited acquaintance with attorneys in Seattle.

Q. You could not recall who they were?—A. I could not. Mr. Hughes, I don't want anything that I have said of Judge Hanford in the court to be assumed to impute any intoxication to him in the court room. I will say that now, that I saw not the slightest sign of it.

Q. Who were present, if you can name any persons, in court at the time when you saw what you have described here as apparent inattention on the part of the court?—A. There was an attorney here that I saw was present in court at the time.

Q. Can you name him?—A. No; I can't. I can show him to you if he was here. He was here just now.

Mr. HIGGINS. You will have to keep your voice up.

A. I will turn toward you. I say, there was an attorney here just now that I would recognize. He was in court at the time. He is a small man. Very much like Mr. McLaren, who sat here.

Mr. MCCOY. He has now left?

A. Heavy mustache. He has now left. A small man was there—a straw hat.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Shaffner has been sitting here.

Mr. HUGHES. A black mustache?

A. Yes; heavy mustache.

Q. Mr. Shaffner?

Mr. MCCOY. Hold on. No, no; that is not——

The WITNESS (interrupting). I am not identifying him.

Mr. MCCOY. That is not right. He says he don't know the witness's name. Don't, Mr. Hughes, put your supposition as to what the witness means into the record.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think Mr. Hughes is only trying to refresh the witness's mind.

Mr. MCCOY. The witness says he does not know.

Mr. HIGGINS. I don't know what the object of asking it is, but if there is any object I would like to have it put in that way.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not like to have comments made upon a question before I ask it; it does not seem quite fair to me.

The CHAIRMAN. I think Mr. Hughes has a right to suggest a name in the question; I think it is entirely proper.

Mr. HIGGINS. I have no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is only a question. If the witness does not agree with the suggestion, he can say so.

The WITNESS. You see, I have not the slightest idea of saying what the man's name is.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are perfectly capable of saying so.

Mr. HUGHES. If I may proceed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Shaffner was sitting by the side of the reporter yonder a few moments ago—the gentleman with a black mustache——

A. (Interrupting.) I could not say that——

Q. (Continuing.) Sitting in that seat.—A. I could not say that, but doubtless——

Q. (Interrupting.) Let me finish my question, please. Do you know a lawyer by that name?—A. I don't.

Q. So that you could not tell whether it was Mr. Shaffner or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you do know that it was a gentleman with a black mustache, a youngish man, who sat in one of those seats on the front row?—A. Yes.

Q. A few minutes ago?—A. Well, I don't know about a few minutes ago; I could not say that.

Q. When?—A. He was here all day yesterday, and he will doubtless be in again presently, and I will identify him for you. He will surely be in.

Q. Was there any occasion when you met Judge Hanford personally?—A. Have I met him?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard him deliver any public addresses?—A. I have.

Q. Where?—A. At this meeting that the last witness was speaking of.

Q. At the meeting at the Alhambra Theater?—A. Yes.

Q. On any other occasions?—A. No—just recently—you will have to refresh my memory, though; Judge Hanford spoke—I have heard him within the last month or two.

Q. Within the last month sometime?—A. Not within the last month; the last month or two.

Q. On Decoration Day?—A. No; I din't hear him then.

Q. Well, I am trying to get at the places and times when you have seen Judge Hanford to identify him—as to the time.—A. I have seen him quite a number of times; passed him quite a number of times on the street.

Q. Well, and did anybody tell you it was Judge Hanford?—A. No; didn't have to after I had once seen him.

Q. Where was he the first time you saw him?—A. The first time I saw him was shortly after I came from Alaska.

Q. Where did you see him then?—A. In the court room.

Q. In the Federal court room?—A. In the Federal court room.

Q. Do you know his brother, Frank Hanford?—A. I don't.

Q. Do you know whether you would be able to recognize the one from the other if you saw them on the street at different times?—A. I certainly do.

Q. And yet you say you don't know his brother?—A. I certainly think that I would be able to recognize Judge Hanford anywhere I saw him apart from anybody else.

Q. What day was it when you saw Judge Hanford coming out of the Ranier Club, when you say that he was intoxicated?—A. Now you have—I didn't say that.

Q. You said it was Sunday at 6 o'clock in the evening, but can you give me the time more specifically?—A. No; alter your question.

Mr. McCoy. You have made him say what he did not say. He specifically stated that he did not see him coming out of the club.

Mr. Hughes. When you saw him coming from the direction of the Rainier Club?

Mr. McCoy. That would be more accurate.

A. What day was it? Nothing further than it was Sunday.

Q. Well, can't you fix the time more definitely, sir?—A. I can not at all. If I had known it would be any use in an investigation I certainly would have noted it down, and all particulars; but at that time I did not hope for any investigation and therefore I did not make any note of it.

Q. About how long ago was it?—A. This was in October or September of last year.

Q. That is approaching it—in September or October?—A. Yes.

Q. Of 1911?—A. 1911.

Q. You are able to fix it as being one or the other of those months, are you?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are able to fix the time as a Sunday and the hour as about 6 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. And the occasion as one on which your wife visited the library?—A. No, we were going to church.

Q. Did I misunderstand you? Didn't you say your wife was in the library?—A. No.

Q. What did she——A. (Interrupting.) She was coming on the car. I was waiting at the corner of the library—waiting for the car to come.

Q. And she was coming on the Renton car, which comes up Fourth Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, I misunderstood you, sir. From what place did you go to the corner of Fourth and Madison Street?—A. The Y. M. C. A.

Q. Had you been at the Y. M. C. A. building?—A. I had.

Q. How long had you been there?—A. Oh, possibly two hours.

Q. And expecting the arrival of this car, you walked across Fourth Avenue to the opposite corner of Fourth and Madison?—A. I did.

Q. Do you remember whether you went on to the northeast corner, where the library building is located?—A. No, the other corner.

Q. The southeast corner?—A. Yes.

Q. That is the one nearest the Rainier Club?—A. Yes.

Q. How long had you been standing there before you noticed the gentleman that you took to be Judge Hanford?—A. Oh, possibly 5 minutes. I had met a car on which my wife did not come, and then I was going to watch for the next. Possibly I had been there 5 minutes; might have been 10.

Q. Now, this man came, you say, from the direction of the Rainier Club, which would be south?—A. Yes.

Q. And, I take it, on the east side of the street?—A. The up side of the street.

Q. Well, the east side of the street. You have been here long enough to know locality and direction, haven't you?—A. Oh, well, I will have to think——

Q. (Interrupting.) The side you were standing on?—A. I would have to figure around now.

Q. The side you were standing on?—A. Yes.

Q. And coming toward you?—A. He was coming toward me.

Q. Now, how near had he come to you when you walked across the street again to speak to the gentlemen standing on the opposite side in front of the Y. M. C. A. Building?—A. About as near as you are to me; possibly not quite so near.

Q. He had not yet passed you?—A. No.

Q. Before he reached you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when within 10 to 20 feet of you, you left the sidewalk and walked across the street——A. (Interrupting) No, he was nearer than that; he was very close to me, very close.

Mr. McCoy. How close is Mr. Hughes to you now?

A. It was just—well, about the distance to Mr. Hughes.

Mr. McCoy. How many feet would you say?

A. Oh, I would say about 8 feet.

Mr Hughes. About 8 feet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he had not yet passed you?—A. Not when I left the sidewalk.

Q. Did you ask these gentlemen their names?—A. I did not.

Q. You went simply to call their attention to what you had observed?—A. I did.

Q. Did you think they were not observing what you saw?—A. I could see they were not observing. There were three talking together very earnestly over something, just in front of the door of the Y. M. C. A, and one had his back toward the other side of the street.

Q. You thought it was disgraceful and improper?—A. I certainly did.

Q. And was it your purpose to add publicity to it?—A. It was.

Q. Without trying to find who they were?—A. Without trying to find who they were.

Q. Then you had no other purpose than to simply have as many people as possible see what you thought was a disgraceful circumstance?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever seen these gentlemen before or since?—A. I have not; would not recognize them if I saw them.

Q. You could not give us any information as to who they were?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Did they make you any answer?—A. They looked.

Q. That is not answering my question, sir. Did they make you any affirmative answer?—A. They made an answer to look.

Q. Did they make any affirmative answer of any kind, any verbal answer?—A. No; not to my recollection. They spoke of it one to another.

Q. Did you enter into any conversation at all with them?—A. I did not.

Q What did you say to them?—A. I said "Note—"well, I can't recollect the exact words—I said "Take notice of the disgraceful condition of a Federal judge," I said "See that Federal judge going up there," I said "Notice his condition."

Q Then, without waiting, you turned around and walked back, did you?—A. Just stood there long enough for them to turn and look, and then I walked back across the street.

Q. You say they made no answer or no comment of any kind to you.?—A. Not to my recollection. They probably said something, but I didn't note what they said.

Q. Where was this man when you got back to the side from which you had started?—A. Judge Hanford?

Q. Yes, sir; if it was Judge Hanford?—A. Oh, I could not say just how far he had got up. He was some distance up the street.

Q. Can you give us any idea how far?—A. No; I can not. I still saw him, that is all I know.

Q. Well, did you continue to watch him?—A. Yes; until the car came. The car was just coming then.

Q. Well, now, he had gone past the library building?—A. That I don't remember.

Q. What direction did he go, that is what I am trying to find out?—A. He was going in that direction. I have answered that several times.

Q. Going north?—A. Yes; he was going north.

Q. Of course the Federal building has two streets.—A. Going up there is only one way for him to go. If I am on the corner opposite the library and he is coming from the Rainier Club there is only one way for him to be traveling.

Q. He continued right along in that direction?—A. Yes.

Q. On the east side of Fourth Avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me now how far he passed by Madison Street?—A. I can not.

Q. As you watched him?—A. As I watched him. Oh, yes, I said about possibly a quarter of a mile. Well, I limited that to two or three hundred yards, and it may be over——

Q. (Interrupting.) You don't mean that you think that two or three hundred yards and a quarter of a mile are synonymous?—A. No, I don't, not for a minute.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask, may I explain, just a few more questions, if possible, for the purpose of locating the time, if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, just go on. I think the committee is of the mind that when we adjourn it will be until Monday; so just continue until you are through; don't feel under any restraint at all.

Mr. HUGHES. Thank you. At the request of my associate, would you wait just a moment for him? He has occasion to go out and would like to hear the balance of the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I only want to direct it to one subject.

A short recess was here taken.

The CHAIRMAN. We will be in order.

JOHN BATHURST on the stand.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say, for the information of the committee and of the witness, the examination discloses that this restraining order in the suit against the Seattle, Renton & Southern road was on the 22d of August, 1911.

Mr. HUGHES. And I want to ask if the occasion that you have referred to, when you saw Judge Hanford on Fourth Avenue, was subsequent to that time?

A. The only way I could say to that was by knowing the date of that order. I can tell you that.

Q. Well, I say the date was August 22?—A. Oh, then it was after that.

Q. It was after that?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any recollection of that event which would enable you to say how long afterwards it was? A. Not at all.

Q. Do you recall what occurred at the Y. M. C. A while you were there; was there any meeting there, or any special occurrence there that would enable us to fix the date?—A. If there was—there probably was some meeting—I don't know what it was. I merely went into the reading room—into the front room, office.

Q. Can you mention anything that occurred at the Y. M. C. A. which might aid us in fixing the date?—A. I can not, and I will tell you further, that I have tried my utmost to find something to fix this date now. When I decided that I would come here and tell this, I tried, by calling my wife's attention to it, to fix the date, but I could not, and I can not state anything more positive than I have done.

Q. To whom did you first report the fact that you had observed Judge Hanford on this occasion?—A. My wife.

Q. Well, I mean to whom among any persons who might be interested in any proceeding against Judge Hanford.—A. I did not report it to anybody.

Q. When did you first make it known to anyone that you would be or could be a witness to that event, to that circumstance, against Judge Hanford?—A. Why, I stated to my wife that I would willingly testify.

Q. Have you to anyone else?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, that is what I want to find out. Did you report to anyone else?—A. I came here yesterday and volunteered the information to Mr. McCoy.

Q. Did you, prior to that time, inform anyone else?—A. I may have done in my own home, but not for purposes of giving evidence.

Q. Well, it does not seem to me yet that that is a full answer.—A. That is the fullest answer I can give.

Q. Did you to anyone else than in your own home?—A. No.

Q. Ever give the information to anyone else——A. (Interrupting.) Oh, yes. Oh, yes, I have, outside, given the information to other people, but not reporting it.

Q. How?—A. Not reported it.

Q. Not what?—A. I have not hesitated to state that I saw Judge Hanford drunk, when the matter of Judge Hanford came up.

Q. Can you tell me when and to whom you first made any report or statement of it to anyone other than your wife?—A. No; I can not.

Q. You have no recollection of it?—A. Not the slightest. Probably have done it to two or three friends that I have spoken with, but not more, and just immediately——

Q. (Interrupting.) Will you name those two or three?—A. No; I could not.

Q. You can't name any of them?—A. I can not. Of course, I may have said it to them and I may not, just a matter of casual conversation.

Q. Do you know of no way of fixing more definitely the particular Sunday?—A. I have already told you that I have endeavored my utmost to fix that Sunday and I can not.

Q. To what church did you go?—A. That I can not say. We went to either the Presbyterian or the Methodist Church.

Q. Do you go regular to church on Sunday evening?—A. I do not.

Q. This, then, was not a usual occurrence for you and your wife to come up on a Sunday evening?—A. It was not usual; very frequently, though.

Q. What?—A. It was very frequent.

Q. To what church did you commonly go?—A. Sometimes I went to the Presbyterian and sometimes to the Methodist.

Q. Do you mean to say that you do not remember to what church you went on this particular occasion?—A. I certainly do mean to say so. I already have said so.

Q. Do you remember where you first went when your wife got off the car?—A. I remember that we took a walk.

Q. Do you remember where you walked?—A. Just the streets we went on I don't know. We went up Fourth Avenue and around some streets there.

Q. What time did church service begin?—A. That I could not say; 8 o'clock, I think.

Q. And did you stroll around from 6 o'clock until 8 with your wife?—A. No; but it was not—it was about 6 o'clock—the car didn't get in—I suppose it was about a quarter past 6, somewhere about that, possibly 20 past.

Q. Did you stroll around on the streets with your wife from then until 8 o'clock?—A. Until church time, yes.

Q. Well, I fixed the hour at 8 o'clock from your lips.—A. Yes.

Q. Was that right?—A. That is right.

Q. Didn't you and your wife know before leaving home that you were to meet and go to church; had you not previously arranged that?—A. No; I think not that day. I had come down town, was down town, and had telephoned her to come down.

Q. You had telephoned her to meet you?—Q. Yes.

Q. How did you come to have her meet you two hours or thereabouts before church time?—A. Well, because we wanted to go for a walk.

Q. You wanted to go for a walk?—A. Yes.

Q. Around the streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you don't know where you walked or how you put in that time?—A. Why, I certainly don't know. We didn't notice on such an occasion as that, walking around; I would not wish to try to identify the streets.

Q. Have you any recollection of the person who preached that night, or the subject?—A. I have not.

Q. Or occasion?—A. I have not. Either Dr. Leonard or Dr. Matthews.

Q. You don't remember what the subject of the sermon was, or anything by which we can fix the time from anyone else than you?—A. No, no.

Q. Have you talked with your wife about it?—A. I have.

Q. Neither of you remember what church you went to or what the occasion was nor who preached nor what the sermon was about?—A. No, no. As a matter of fact, a sermon does not impress itself very much upon me at any time.

Q. Now, what kind of a day or evening was this, do you remember that?—A. Oh, it was a nice day.

Q. A sunshiny, bright evening?—A. That I don't remember. I remember it was quite fine, quite nice.

Q. A fine day. It is your best recollection that this was in the month of September, or would you put it later?—A. I would not just, between the two, September or October.

Q. But you do fix it as being——A. Eventually it was——

Q. (Continuing.) In one or the other of those two months?—A. I rather lean toward October.

Q. But you did fix it as being in either one or the other of those two months?—A. Yes, yes.

Q. Are you accustomed to visiting the Y. M. C. A.?

Mr. HUGHES. I am not asking this irrelevantly, but for the purpose of endeavoring to fix the time.

The CHAIRMAN. We are trusting largely to your good judgment, that you will not ask unnecessary questions or unnecessarily extend the examination.

Mr. HUGHES. Without the explanation the commission might think it was an irrelevant question.

A. At that time I was; yes.

Mr. HUGHES. You are, then, familiar with the fact that changes have been made in the arrangements in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A.?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you fix the time with reference to those changes?—A. I believe it was before the changes were complete.

Q. How long?—A. But I would not endeavor—I would not endeavor to say anything about it—not to fix it at all, because I don't know.

Q. Before the changes——A. (Interrupting.) I would not endeavor to guess at a thing that I could not tell you definitely.

Q. Don't you remember——A. (Interrupting.) I don't.

Q. (Continuing.) What the appearance and conditions were at that time?—A. I don't.

Q. But your recollection is that it was before the changes were made?—A. No; my recollection is not so at all. I say it might have been.

Q. I misunderstood you, then, sir. What was the fact?—A. I don't know the fact at all.

Q. You don't know? Can you recall what you read that day?—A. No; I read a good deal.

Q. Well, but did you call for any books; was there anything——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) In the record there by which we can locate the time?—A. No.

Q. Anything that occurred at the Y. M. C. A.——A. Mr. Hughes, let me tell you this: I have tried my utmost to fix this recently and I have told you 20 times I have tried to fix this date for the purpose of giving it to you, but I can not. I have tried to call up to the utmost anything that occurred at the time which would aid me in fixing the date. There is nothing, positively nothing, that you can get from me which will fix this date, because I can not fix it myself.

Mr. HIGGINS. When did you begin to try to fix the date?

A. Oh, as soon as I heard of this investigation.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is, within the past two weeks?

A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you try before that time to fix the date with any certainty?

A. No; I didn't.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, we want also to try, and that is my purpose.

A. Yes.

Q. It is not with any other thought, Mr. Bathurst.—A. Well, it is only a waste of time; that is all.

Q. Do you remember who was the secretary?—A. I don't know the secretary.

Q. You don't know who the secretary is?—A. No, no.

Q. You never knew who the secretary was?—A. Oh, I may have seen his name.

Q. You don't know who was in the place occupied by the secretary?—A. No; I don't. I don't know where the secretary's office is.

Q. Can you describe any person who was there at that time?—A. Oh, I know them by sight.

Q. Can you mention anyone who was there on that occasion?—A. I can not.

Q. Can you mention anything you read at that time?—A. I can identify a half a dozen, I suppose, if you want to go over there and have me identify them.

Q. You mean persons now?—A. Yes; persons that were there.

Q. But you don't know them?

The CHAIRMAN. The question was whether you can recall anything you read while you were there that time?

A. Oh, no. My habit was to take up a paper here and there and read it while I waited there; that is all my habit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was not what your habit was, but whether you remembered anything you read that particular time?

A. I don't.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Did you try to fix the date in any other way than by talking the matter over with your wife?—A. There was positively no way. I have tried every way and there is positively no way of me fixing it. It was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you try in any other way than by talking it over with your wife?—A. I have tried to think of some way, to think of some possible way of fixing it.

Q. Well, did you talk with anybody except your wife?—A. No.

Q. In attempting to fix the date?—A. No, no; I haven't. Of course that is the only one by whom I could fix it, if she had remembered.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Let me ask you another question, then. They have changed the location of the reading room?—A. Yes.

Q. At different times?—A. Yes.

Q. In the Y. M. C. A? Do you remember which room it was that you were in?—A. That I could not say. I waited there, and I believe that so far as my recollection goes that alterations were then on.

Q. Well, do you remember———A. (Interrupting.) But I could not undertake to say they were. I believe the alterations were then on and that I sat in the office room, the part that had then been cut off from the reading room.

Q. I understood you to say earlier that you were in the reading room. Was I wrong about that, sir?—A. Oh, well, you must—you can let that go, if you understood that, because the reading room—it is all reading room.

Q. I only want to know the fact. I am trying to find out something that may help us, that is all—A. It is all reading room.

Q. It was the general office then?

Q. The general office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did they have books and magazines there?—A. I believe at that time that the other part was reserved—I am not sure, but I think that the other part, which is now the general reading room, was reserved for members of the association, of which I was not one.

Q. Were you a member?—A. I was not.

Q. You were not?—A. No.

Q. Did they have any books and magazines in the room where you were?—A. I can't tell you that, whether they were there that day or not.

Q. Well, but if you read any books or magazines you could tell me that, couldn' you?—A. I didn't say anything about magazines.

Q. Well, you have said that you read?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you read, do you know?—A. As I said just now, it was my habit———

Q. How?—A. I didn't say I read even. I said my habit was to pick up any of the papers and read.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I say about two hours, probably—possibly.

Q. Do you now say that you don't know whether you did read or did not read?—A. Well, as a matter of memory, I don't. The chances are that I read all the time.

Q. How frequently do you visit the Y. M. C. A., or did you at that period visit the Y. M. C. A. on Sundays?—A. Oh, I visited it very often.

Q. On Sundays?—A. Yes.

Q. At that period?—A. Yes.

Q. Although you were not a member?—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Are nonmembers allowed to go there without any question?

A. Certainly, certainly.

Mr. MCCOY. Invited to go there, are they?

A. Invited to go there. I always———

Mr. HUGHES. You need not make any significance of that. I am only trying to see if there is some way of flxing the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Make it just as brief as you reasonably can.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that is all. He does not seem to be able to give me anything definite.

The WITNESS. I would like to assist Mr. Hughes if I possibly could, but I can't. I can not—positively can give him no idea as to the particular date. If I—as I said before—if I had any idea that the evidence would have been of use in the future, any hope that an investigation would have been made, I certainly would have noted it down; but I was not tracking Judge Hanford, or anything of the kind, and therefore I did not.

Mr. HIGGINS. I don't hear you.

A. I say I was not tracking or dogging Judge Hanford, and therefore I didn't make any note of the occasion. At that time we didn't hope for any investigation.

Mr. HUGHES. What was your last statement?

A. I say at that time we didn't hope for any investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is entirely immaterial.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all with this witness. There is a matter I want to call attention to before the adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions you wish to suggest, Mr. Nichols?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Did I understand you rightly when I thought I understood you to say that when you went across the street and spoke to these two men and said what you have testified——A. (Interrupting.) Three men.

Q. (Continuing.) Three men, that they said something to each other?—A. Yes.

Q. One of them said something to the other two, or whatever it was?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what any of those men said to any other or others of them?—A. I didn't. My attention was more particularly—directly—then attracted to Judge Hanford again, because the spectacle imposed itself so upon me and I was disgusted.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I think it is proper and fair that in view of the investigation that has taken place respecting the Olsson case this statement should be made, which Mr. Nichols will confirm: That Judge Hanford has advised Mr. Nichols that the statement that he made here upon the witness stand, coupled with the statement of certain matters involving the questions and answers as Judge Hanford understands them, would be entirely satisfactory to him to sign and that he would sign them as a bill of exceptions, and that Mr. Nichols says that the two together, with such minor changes as he would want to make would make a fair and just bill of exceptions upon which the cause of Leonard Olsson could be fully and fairly reviewed in the court of appeals; and I make this statement in the presence of Mr. Nichols for his confirmation.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I said, after receiving Judge Hanford's notes and memoranda here, that so far as I know now, I think we can make an accurate statement of facts. That is my personal opinion. I do not mean that as an agreement at this present time, and particularly because my associates are in doubt as to whether an agreed statement of fact will be proper at all in an appeal in an equity case. But with my own remembrance of the facts and Judge Hanford's together, I think we can agree upon it, if it is proper to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further at this time?

The witnesses who are now under subpoena will all be here promptly at or before 9.30 on Monday morning. The committee will be in recess until that hour.

FOURTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1912—9.45 a. m.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All present as at former hearing.

O. T. ERICKSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. Oliver T. Erickson.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In this city.

Q. Give your address.—A. 768 Belmont Place.

Q. How long have you lived in this city in all?—A. 12 years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. I am engaged—do you mean the name of my business?

Q. Yes.—A. Manufacturer.

Q. Of what kind?—A. Electrical machinery.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. 12 years.

Q. Do you hold any official position?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. City councilman.

Q. How long have you held it?—A. Since last year—a year and about three months.

Q. Have you held any other official position in this city at any time?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Erickson, are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by sight.

Q. For how long a time?—A. About six years.

Q. Have you had any business in his court at any time?—A. No.

Q. Have you had any personal relations with him?—A. No.

Q. Have you now any ill-feeling or animosity toward him personally?—A. No.

Q. If you at any time have seen Judge Hanford when you considered him under the influence of intoxicants, I wish you would please state it to the committee.—A. Well, I have seen him that way several times.

Q. Can you recall the first instance?—A. Yes.

Q. About how long ago was it?—A. About five years ago, I think.

Q. What were the circumstances?—A. Well, I was riding on the street car.

Mr. HUGHES. Sir?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember where and in what direction?

A. It was on one of the Broadway and Pike cars, going north.

Q. That was in the direction of his home?—A. Yes.

Q. Which of you were first on the car?—A. I don't recall.

Q. How long did you ride on the car with him?—A. Probably 10 minutes.

Q. Tell the committee what you observed when you believed he was intoxicated.—A. Well, he was sitting within a couple of feet in front of me and the conversation turned on his condition and my attention was directed to it.

Q. How were the car seats arranged?—A. They were running across.

Q. Crosswise?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you in front of him or behind him?—A. Behind.

Q. From where you sat had you an opportunity to see his face?—A. At times, sideways, not square in the face.

Q. Now tell the committee as well as you can what it was that attracted your attention and the attention of others to him at that time.—A. Well, it was his condition.

Q. Describe it.—A. Well, sitting in the seat with his head flopping from one side to the other, sometimes rising up straight and then falling over in the side of the seat again.

Q. Which one of you got off the car first?—A. I did.

Q. How many persons, to your knowledge, talked about his condition at that time?—A. I can not tell, I do not recollect how many.

Q. To what extent was his appearance and demeanor noticed by those in the car?—A. Well, I do not recall the conversation or who started the conversation or anything of that sort. I remember there was some joking around about it, backwards and forwards.

Q. Do you know any of those with whom you talked and whom you heard talking about or joking about it?—A. I do not know at this time who it was. I do not know that I could recall at that time.

Q. At that time had you any knowledge—I mean before that time had you any knowledge either from observation or otherwise that Judge Hanford sometimes got in that condition?—A. Only by hearsay.

Q. I want to get out as to what extent did what you observed there surprise you?—A. Well, of course I was surprised to learn that that was the judge on the bench.

Q. Was it then you first knew who he was?—A. Yes, that is, it was the first time I knew him by sight.

Q. Do you recall who gave you the information as to who it was?—A. No, I do not recall.

Q. Since then I suppose you have become acquainted and familiar with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, what would you say as to your certainty as to the identity of the person you saw on the car; are you sure that it was Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give the committee a more accurate idea of the extent of the intoxication at that time.—A. Well, that is the extent of it as far as I could observe sitting in the car—his actions in the car.

Q. Were you close enough to observe any odor?—A. Not at that time—yes, I was too—I was near enough so that I could get a whiff of it.

Q. What was it, do you know?—A. Whisky.

Q. After that did you observe him in an intoxicated condition—tell us as nearly as you can when the next time was—by the way, before leaving that, can you in time locate it, about when it was.—A. About five years ago as near as I can locate it.

Q. Well, if afterwards you saw him under the influence of any intoxicant tell the committee about it.—A. Well, I saw him several times—several times after that when I was satisfied in my own mind that he was in that condition.

Q. How often?—A. I presume I have seen him that way half a dozen times, probably more.

Q. Do you recall any other or any subsequent specific and particular time?—A. Yes, sir; I recall one particular time.

Q. Tell the committee about that.—A. Well, I was on the car one afternoon going home and he was in the car at that time and I sat down opposite a man by the name of Ward whom I had known for some time and he called my attention to it and we commented on his condition and the fact that a man of that kind should be on the bench.

Q. What time of the day or night was this?—A. It was in the afternoon.

Q. What time of the day or night was that other, the first instance which you related?—A. That was in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. From my experience here it is almost necessary for one even in the afternoon to ask what kind of light there was.

A. Well, this was in the summer time and a well-lighted car.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the summer time.

Q. Well, on this second occasion please tell us more particularly what occurred; for instance, was the car furnished the same as the other; did the seats run crosswise of the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you seated with reference to him?—A. I think about three seats from him.

Q. Before or behind him?—A. Behind him.

Q. Did anyone sit in the seat with him?—A. No.

Q. You say Mr. Ward sat in the seat with you?—A. Yes, sir. There was very few passengers in the car at the time—I do not recall that there was any others besides Ward and myself and the Judge or not.

Q. What led you to believe that he was intoxicated at the time?—A. Well, the same manifestations. Whenever the car would give a jolt it would rouse him up so that he would wake up and slobber over on the other side and drop down into a doze.

Q. What can you say as to whether that might have been habitual, without intoxication?—A. I should not judge so from my knowledge——

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. From what? A. From my knowledge of men.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he should not judge so "from my knowledge," and then he was going on when he was interrupted—what did you say?

A. "Of men."

Q. Was that all your answer—well, if you have any other reasons for reaching the conclusion which you reached, tell us what it is.—A. Well, the fact that it was perceptible—so perceptible to Mr. Ward and to myself both, I was perfectly satisfied in my mind of his condition.

Q. Did you notice any odor?—A. I do not recall—I do not recall whether I did at that time or not.

Q. Which of you got on the car first?—A. I think the judge was on the car when I got on.

Q. Do you know which of you got off first?—A. I did.

Q. What direction was he going then?—A. Going north.

Q. Toward his home?—A. Yes.

Q. About what hour, could you tell us, that it was?—A. It appeared to me as though, if I recollect right, between 4 and 5.

Q. In the afternoon?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall any other specific occasion?—A. Yes; I recall one occasion when he got off the car.

Q. Was that before or after the other occasion?—A. That I do not recollect—I think, though, that was before the time that I talked with Mr. Ward.

Q. As to the time on the second occasion you described can you fix that approximately?—A. When I saw him with Mr. Ward?

Q. Yes.—A. That was in the afternoon.

Q. I know, but can you state the year or the month?—A. Oh, I think that was about two years ago.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is the last time?

A. That is the last time that I saw Ward particularly.

Q. You did not fix the time before that as to how long ago it was.

The CHAIRMAN. He said about five years ago, was what he said.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes, that was the first time, but the second time he did not fix.

The WITNESS. No.

Q. When was that?—A. Well, I do not recall just when that was, sometime during those years.

Mr. HUGHES. We can not hear the witness here.

Mr. PRESTON. Might I have the last answer read?

Witness' answer is read by the stenographer.

Mr. HIGGINS. You were giving the occasions chronologically, that is to say you are relating the time when you first saw him and the time when you next saw him and the last time.

A. No.

Q. Please do so.—A. The time I was speaking about, if I recollect right, the chairman asked me for some specific time, and that was when I saw him with Mr. Ward and I mentioned that distinctly, but other times that I saw him I could not give any surrounding circumstances.

Q. How long ago was it you saw him with Mr. Ward?—A. That was about two years ago, as near as I can recollect.

Q. About two years ago?—A. Yes.

Q. And then at the time which you are questioned about now, that was later than that?—A. No; before that.

Q. How much before?—A. Well, I do not recollect; sometime during that period; I do not remember just when it was.

Q. It was after the time that you first saw him?—A. Yes; my attention was called to that for the simple reason that he got off before I did, and he lived out beyond where I did, and that was why I noticed him when he got off.

The CHAIRMAN. How much this side of his home did he get off?

A. About six or eight blocks, I should think.

Q. After that do you know where he went?

A. No; I do not.

Q. Tell us the manner of his getting off.—A. Well, he was very unsteady and got off the car, and owing to the fact that he got off at that place I turned around to observe him and I noticed when he got off the car, and I noticed just as the car started where he was standing, apparently trying to get his bearings—rather unsteady on his feet.

Q. Do you recall, without giving the time or even the approximate date, any of the other occasions when you saw him and any of the circumstances connected with it?—A. No, I can not.

Q. Where it was you saw him on those other occasions?—A. I used to see him at intervals, of course, traveling backward and forward. At that time I lived on that line, or rather I traveled on that line, and I used to see him occasionally.

Q. Apart from the time you saw him get off the car have you ever noticed him on the street when he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you ever attended court held by him?—A. Yes.

Q. What can you say as to his apparent condition at any of those times?—A. I never saw anything to indicate intoxication at those times.

Mr. HIGGINS. You will have to speak up a little louder, Mr. Erickson; it is difficult to hear—the acoustic properties of this room are very bad.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, is there any other instance connected with the matter which came under your knowledge which you ought to tell the committee which you know of?

A. I do not recall anything at this time.

Q. When were you subpœnaed as a witness?—A. Saturday, I think—Friday or Saturday. [Here witness produces the subpœna and hands it to the committee.]

Mr. MCCOY. You have spoken, Mr. Erickson, of three times seeing Judge Hanford in what you supposed that condition which you described—I understand you rightly when I understoood you to say that there were other times you had seen him.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when were those?—A. Well, during that period I saw him at different times.

Q. Always in the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what were the conditions at those other times that he was in the condition which you speak of him being in?—A. The same; in the same condition that I saw him in the other times.

Q. And those were always on the car?—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do I understand you to say, Mr. Erickson, that every time that you saw him in this street car that he was in this condition which indicated to you that he was intoxicated?

A. Oh, no; I did not say that each time that I saw him that I was satisfied that he was intoxicated or under the influence of liquor, or that he was in that condition.

Q. And did you see him at other times when he was not in the car, except the time when you spoke of seeing him on the bench?—A. Yes, sir; I would see him on the streets frequently.

Q. Before the time that your attention was first called to his condition on the street car.—A. Before?

Q. Yes.—A. No, I never knew him before that time.

Q. I want you to tell the committee just how and what was said to you the first time that you knew it was Judge Hanford and when you spoke of seeing him in the car.—A. Well, there was some joking backward and forward about it; my attention was called to him, and I asked some questions about him in a joking way and somebody answered, I do not recall who it was—there was two or three sitting around and they were discussing it.

Q. Did you know the people you spoke to?—A. No, I do not recall who they were.

Q. Did you know them at the time?—A. No, only in a passing way, seeing them on the car.

Q. You did not know at the time what their names were?—A. No, I do not recall now who they were except that I saw them on the car probably a few times.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to examine Mr. Erickson further?

Mr. PRESTON. Please indulge us for just one moment.

Cross-examination:

Mr. PRESTON. I understand you to say, Mr. Erickson, that the first occasion, about four years ago or five years ago, was in the summer time.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and you were going home to your dinner, I suppose—was that your hour for going home to dinner—was that the occasion?—A. No, that was not my hour for going home to dinner—sometimes I went home earlier in the afternoon.

Q. Well, you were going home from the day's work.—A. It is between 4 and 6, I could not say positively that I was not going to my dinner—I was going home—I could not say positively that I was going home to dinner.

Q. What I was trying to get at—that was your trip home after the day's work.—A. Yes, that is my recollection.

Q. And was the same true on the second occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the third occasion?—A. I think in all the cases.

Q. You say that on this first occasion you were seated two seats in the rear of Judge Hanford?—A. As near as I can recollect.

Q. Well, are you clear that you were not sitting in the next seat to him, behind him?—A. I think not; I am not clear on that, however.

Q. You were behind him—the third seat behind him?—A. It was within 2 or 3 feet, I should say.

Q. And at that time he nodded his head, apparently in sleep, and as the car moved he would seem to recover himself and his head would come up, and then he would nod again—is that your description of him—is that a fair description of it?—A. At that time, the first time that I saw him I was on the car and I either saw him go—I think he went from one seat to another, or he came into the car, that is my recollection, and passed us, and that was how the conversation came about.

Q. Well, at that time you detected the odor of whisky, you say?—A. I think at that time I could sniff the whisky—yes, sir.

Q. Now, on the second occasion, you say it was the same as the other—that is, it was this nodding process which you described?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you on the second time get any odor of whisky?—A. I do not recall now.

Q. Did you on the third time?—A. No; the third time was when I spoke of that I saw him get off the car—no, I did not.

Q. Will you please—I take it that it was on the third occasion as you have arranged them chronologically, that you talked with the gentleman by the name of Ward?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Do you know any further description of Mr. Ward—what are his initials or anything of that kind?—A. I think his name is John Ward; he was in the plumbing business.

Q. He is a plumber?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Of the firm of Ward & Shearer?

The WITNESS. I think that is the firm; I do not know the firm name; but he is a plumber, and he did some work for me.

By Mr. PRESTON:

Q. And is that Mr. Ward still in Seattle?—A. Well, I am not sure of that, but I think so.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Ward on that occasion who that gentleman was, referring to Judge Hanford?—A. No; no, sir; Mr. Ward spoke to me.

Q. Mr. Ward spoke to you—what did he say to you, as nearly as you can recollect?—A. My recollection is Mr. Ward said, "What do you think of such a man as that being on the bench?"—that is my recollection of his first—what he said first, and I made some remark about it, and said that I thought at the rate he was going on he would not stay very long on the bench, or something of that sort.

Q. And that was all the conversation, so far as you recollect?—A. Well, no; I think we conversed for some little time.

Q. I mean on that subject?—A. I recall his speaking that way about it first.

Q. And you do not recall any further conversation on that subject with Mr. Ward at that time?—A. No, I do not recall it now.

Q. On the second occasion, it was that he got off the car, six or eight blocks this side of his home.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would be about where—about Harrison or Republican Streets.—A. Tenth Avenue, where the Broadway car touches Tenth Avenue and it runs across on Roy and it takes across diagonally there and touches Tenth Avenue, and it was at that point.

Q. Now what cross street is that?—A. Tenth Avenue and where you leave Roy—the car takes a turn through the property and runs diagonally and comes in on Tenth—it was at the point where it intersects Tenth Avenue.

Q. Tenth Avenue and Roy, would you say?—A. No, it is not Tenth and Roy, because it leaves Roy and runs diagonally—they condemned a piece of property there and they run diagonally acr ss the corner in order to get over to Tenth with the Broadway & Pike Street line. The streets separate there and this line cuts across diagonally and then the street runs the other way over onto Broadway.

Q. I show you, Mr. Erickson, a little rough diagram of the car line, which, if it is right, you will recognize it. This is going north [showing]?—A. Yes.

Q. And you would say that he got off on Roy, or here on Mercer?—A. It was not Mercer; it is north of Roy when you leave—when you come to Roy the street runs this way at Roy—it separates there and goes over here on Broadway [showing] and then it goes over this way and strikes Tenth.

Q. Now, what is your recollection of about where he got off—just indicate it here?—A. Right on this corner [showing].

Q. You could not be mistaken—it could not be Mercer, a block sooner?—A. No, sir, it was north of Roy.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Because I got off at Aloha, and it was just this side of where I got off.

Q. Did you know that Judge Hanford's daughter lives right by there?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you ever see him get off there before?—A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't know that oftentimes, very frequently on his way home he gets off there?—A. That was the only time I saw him get off there.

Q. You do not know that very frequently on his way home he gets off at that point and goes over to his daughter's house?—A. No, I do not know that.

Q. Have you ever had any talk with this Mr. Ward since about that occasion?—A. No, I have not.

Q. You never have?—A. No.

Q. Now, please search your memory and be certain about that if you can, Mr. Erickson.—A. Yes—no, I have never talked with him about it since.

Q. Now if you had known the fact, assuming it to be a fact, that Judge Hanford was troubled with insomnia so that he slept very little at night and that it was quite a frequent thing for him, on getting on a street car, to have spells of drowsiness; if you had known that fact, assuming it to be a fact, before this court, would you then have formed the opinion that that condition was produced by intoxication?—A. There is quite a difference, in my opinion, of a man going asleep from drowsiness and going to sleep from the effects of intoxication—in their actions.

Q. What is the difference, in your experience and observation?—A. Because if a man goes to sleep from drowsiness, when he wakes up he sits up straignt and can see clearly—his head does not drop to one side or the other.

Q. Suppose he does not entirely rouse himself?—A. I beg pardon.

Q. I say, suppose it is drowsiness and the man does not entirely arouse himself, would it be so then that he would sit up straight and see clearly?—A. Well, I could not answer as to any fine distinctions of that kind. All I can say, Senator, in regard to this was that I was satisfied in my own mind that the man was intoxicated from my own knowledge of those conditions.

Q. Not having any knowledge of your own as to other circumstances in his manner of living that might produce such drowsiness?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you, subsequent to that time, have occasion in a public address in the city of Seattle to refer to this incident?—A. One of them.

Q. When was that public address delivered?—A. Last summer.

Q. About what time last summer?—A. Twenty-fifth of August, I think.

Q. Here in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. In the Dreamland Rink?—A. Yes.

Q. I have here in my hand what purports to be a report of your address on that evening, and with the permission of the committee I would like to ask if it is correctly reported.

The CHAIRMAN. A little louder, please, Mr. Preston.

Mr. PRESTON. I have here in my hand what purports to be a copy of Mr. Erickson's address on that occasion at the Dreamland Rink——

The CHAIRMAN. What was the date of that?

Mr. PRESTON. August 25, as Mr. Erickson just testified, 1911, and with the permission of the committee I would like to quote from that, as it is contained here, that part of the address referring to Judge Hanford's intoxication on the car, and I will ask the witness if he is correctly reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may do so.

Mr. HIGGINS. Won't you identify the document for the benefit of the record, so that there may be no mistake about what you have there?

Mr. PRESTON. I did not propose to put it in unless the committee wants it in; I only propose to use a few lines of it.

Mr. HIGGINS. You refer to a little paper-covered pamphlet entitled "Is Lese Majeste a Crime in America?"

Mr. MCCORD. It doesn't make any difference whether it is identified or not—the question, when Mr. Preston reads it, is if Mr. Erickson will testify that that is correctly reported.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, it is a document entitled "Is Lese Majeste a Crime in America?" followed by the question, "Should men be jailed for free speech?"

Mr. PRESTON. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Followed on the title-page by this statement:

> For making these speeches advocating the impeachment of Federal Judge C. H. Hanford the speakers were arrested. Price 10 cents. Metropolitan Press Printing Co., Central Building.

And it appears to be a document of 32 pages; is that the one you were reading from?

Mr. PRESTON. That is the one I was reading from. I was reading from page 4, as follows:

> I was trained to respect the courts above other men when I was a young man, but I have learned through my life of experience in both public and private life that they are only human. One day a few years ago I was going home on the car that leads into my neighborhood, and a man came staggering into that car and sat down in front of me. I spoke to a friend, and I said to him, "Who is this old gentleman with such a skate on?" He said, "That man is a judicial saint. Can't you see the halo around his head?" I said, "No, I can't see the halo, but I can smell the whisky." That man was Judge Hanford. And, my friends, I have seen him in that condition repeatedly.

Is that a correct report of your remarks, or substantially correct?

A. Substantially correct; yes, sir.

Q. Now, on the second occasion—that is, the occasion when you say he got off there near Roy Street—how far did you sit from him in the car that time?—A. I do not recall just how far it was I sat from him at that time.

Q. And the time you talked with Mr. Ward, do you remember how far you sat from him in the car at that time?—A. We were only a few seats from him.

Q. More than one seat, I take it, from your use of the word "few."—A. Yes, sir; I think we were. I am sure he was not in the next seat to us, and I think he was either two or three seats away or some such matter.

Q. And on the second occasion the same?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than one, and possibly two or three—now, you can not now recall any man or woman who was on the car on the first occasion, except yourself and Judge Hanford?—A. No; I can not recall who was present.

Q. And the nearest you can identify the time is by saying that it was about five years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, on the second occasion, do you remember anyone that was on the car with you and Judge Hanford?—A. No; I do not.

Q. On the third occasion do you remember anyone there other than Mr. Ward, who was on the car with you and Judge Hanford?—A. No; I do not. I do not remember anybody else. I did not talk to anybody else—I do not recollect whether there was anyone else on the car or not.

Q. And on the first occasion was some body your seat mate on the car?—A. Yes.

Q. And was Mr. Ward sitting with you on this other occasion in the same seat?—A. Yes.

Q. And on the second occasion, do you remember whether anyone was sitting with you in the seat?—A. No; I do not recall that anybody was sitting with me or not.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford's daughter, Mr. Haynes?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you know where she lives?—A. No.

Mr. PRESTON. That is all the questions that I care to ask.

Mr. MCCOY. You said you were a councilman; you mean that you are one of the common council of the city of Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you testify in answer to a question of one of the members of the committee that on this occasion when Mr. Ward was in the car with you that you were sitting there when Judge Hanford came in?—A. No; I think Judge Hanford was in the car before I came in that time; it is my recollection that I got on the car at Pike Street, on the corner of Pike; I came up on Pike Street and Broadway, near the high school.

Q. And that he was in the car when you got in on that occasion?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Preston has quoted from a speech which you made on some occasion last August; I will ask you now if your present recollection of the occurrences referred to in that speech the same as the quotation would indicate now?—A. Well, substantially, that is a long time ago and I do not remember. I do not remember distinctly the incidents in connection with that.

Q. What I mean is, is your present recollection of the incidents referred to in your speech just what it was at the time when you made the speech; so far as what was quoted by Mr. Preston is concerned—do you remember what Mr. Preston read here?—A. Yes.

Q. My question is whether your present recollection of the incident referred to in that quotation is now what it was at the time when you made the speech?—A. Yes; substantially so.

Q. And when you made the speech did you believe that you were then correctly stating what took place on the occasion referred to?—A. Well, I believed it was substantially what occurred; yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever during the five years while you have known Judge Hanford by sight, seen him on the cars when he was not in the condition which you have indicated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you have seen him in the car on other occasions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Frequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know him to get off the car at any other time at the point where you said he got off on this one occasion?—A. No; that was what attracted my attention.

Q. That was the only time you ever saw him get off there?—A. That was the only time I saw him get off there.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives out on Tenth Avenue—I don't know just how the streets run out there, whether it is Tenth or not, but it is just this side of the Leary home on the Broadway and Pike Street line.

Q. Was the point where Judge Hanford lives beyond the point where he got off on this occasion?—A. Oh, yes; that was what attracted my attention.

Mr. HIGGINS. Reference has been made, Mr. Erickson, to this pamphlet, which I thought to identify for the purpose of the record, but perhaps it might be as well at this time in this connection for you to state briefly what this mass meeting at the Dreamland Rink in Seattle on August 25, 1911, was.

A. That was a mass meeting called for the purpose of asking for the impeachment of Judge Hanford.

Q. Asking for the impeachment of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; that was the purpose of the meeting.

Q. What occurred, if anything, which gave rise to that demand at that time?—A. An injunction that he issued against the people of the Rainier Valley in regard to the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway.

Q. I want you to state in your own way briefly the circumstances of that injunction.—A. For two years prior to that the people in the Rainier Valley had been fighting with the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway Co., and Mr. Crawford, its president, for the rights to which they were entitled under the charter of the city and under their franchise; the litigation extended over, I think, as nearly as I can remember, about two years and there were two cases involved, one was in regard to fares and the other was in regard to transfers. And we had a very bitter fight to get their rights; we thrashed it out in the superior court here and we carried it to the supreme court, both cases, and the people there won. The court decided they were entitled to a 5-cent fare and that they were entitled to the transfer. Then the railroad company, or those interested with them, asked for this injunction enjoining the people of the valley from interfering in any way or obstructing the railroad company from collecting the 10 or 15 cent fare, or whatever it was, and enjoining the railroad company to not issue those transfers, which injunction was removed a day or two after that to some extent. The feeling roused over this injunction after the case had been fought so long and so bitterly and decided by the courts, it roused such a feeling that this mass meeting was called to protest against that and to ask for the impeachment of Judge Hanford.

Q. Were formal resolutions adopted at that meeting?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you happen to know whether they appear in this pamphlet?—A. I could not tell you. I have seen the pamphlet, but I have not read it all through.

Q. Were they the resolutions which were circulated in the Seattle Star?—A. I am not positive about that—whether the resolutions that were adopted that night had been circulated in the Star or not, I do not recall.

Q. Did the Seattle Star circulate the petition for the impeachment of Judge Hanford?—A. They printed a form for the signatures, yes, sir.

Q. As the result of or following that meeting you were arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And placed under $5,000 bail.—A. Yes.

Q. On what charge?—A. Interfering with the course of justice.

Q. Contempt of court?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Was the injunction in force at the time you held the meeting at the Dreamland Rink?—A. I think it was.

Q. Now just a minute; you were very prominent, Mr. Erickson, in that controversy, were you not?—A. I presided at that meeting.

Q. Do you know of anything in connection with the issuance of that injunction by Judge Hanford or in connection with that controversy in any way which you can give the committee which would tend to show that Judge Hanford was unfit, by temperament or otherwise, to be a Federal judge, except what the record, the court records, of that case would show?—A. I do not think I can tell you anything which the record would not show.

Q. That is, you can give the committee no information concerning the issuance of that injunction by Judge Hanford except what the committee can get from the court records?—A. I think not.

Q. Well, are you sure about that?—A. I could not give you anything which the records would not show.

Q. So, so far as you are concerned, the committee would have to go to the records—to the files of the court in that case to get the facts concerning Judge Hanford's relations to that case. Isn't that the fact?—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to ask a few questions in regard to the matter just referred to by Mr. Higgins.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Erickson, you said that this was an injunction issued out of Judge Hanford's court at the instance of the railroad company; by the railroad company, I suppose you mean—what is the name of it—the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway Co.?

A. I mean the same people. This particular injunction, as I understand it, was asked for by Peabody, Hotelling & Co., which, of course, is the same thing; they are the bondholders in that case—practically the same.

Q. I thought probably that you would correct that fact if I called your attention to it.—A. Yes.

Q. But the suit in which Judge Hanford's order was issued was a suit brought by the trustee under its bond mortgage, either Peabody himself or Peabody, Hotelling & Co.; I do not know myself whether it was the firm or Peabody, but I think it was Peabody, but it is immaterial.

Mr. HIGGINS. Can you not furnish the committee at this time, Mr. Preston, with the title of that case so that it may get into the record?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, I will do so.

Q. You spoke of that order as an injunction. Now, if the records in that case show that it was a temporary restraining order returnable in eight days, when the application for the temporary injunction should come on, you would modify your evidence to that extent, would you not?—A. I do not know what legal phrase to use—we called it an injunction.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you a lawyer, Mr. Erickson?

A. No.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, that restraining order or injunction, whichever you please to call it, was issued on the 21st day of August, was it not?

A. I don't know the exact date.

Q. Does your memory serve you———A. I don't know the exact date.

Q. You didn't know at the time of the Dreamland Rink meeting that—you referred to the litigation in the State court.—A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that the trustee was not a party to that litigation—Augustus S. Peabody I refer to, the trustee for the bonding issue?

Mr. HIGGINS. Are you able now to furnish the reporter with the title of that case in full, Mr. Preston?

Mr. PRESTON. The case is entitled "In the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Washington, Northern Division. Augustus S. Peabody, of Chicago, Ill., trustee, complainant, v. The City of Seattle, municipal corporation of the first class of the State of Washington and the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Washington, defendants. No. 2012."

(Whereupon the question was repeated to the witness as follows:)

Q. Are you aware of the fact that the trustee was not a party to that litigation, Augustus S. Peabody, I refer to, the trustee for the bond issue?—A. Yes, I am aware of that.

Q. You are aware that he was not?—A. I am aware of that fact, yes.

Q. And were you aware of that fact at the time of the Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Just there will you give us a little information, Mr. Preston; can you give us the appearances for Mr. Peabody and for the two defendants in that petition?

Mr. PRESTON. I know who they were, and I can give you them from memory.

The CHAIRMAN. That will do.

Mr. PRESTON. My understanding is that Kerr & McCord were solicitors for the complainant and the city appeared by the corporation counsel, Mr. Scott Calhoun.

Q. And the railway company?

Mr. PRESTON. And the railway company by——

Mr. HUGHES. Howard D. Hughes appeared with Scott Calhoun.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he connected professionally with Mr. E. C. Hughes, of counsel in this case?

Mr. PRESTON. No, he never has been. He was assistant to the corporation counsel.

Mr. HUGHES. He was a student in my office for years and then for four years was assistant to the corporation counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. My question was who represented the railway company.

Mr. PRESTON. Morris B. Sachs.

The CHAIRMAN. Of what place?

Mr. PRESTON. Of Seattle. I believe there was later an intervention on behalf of some of the people residing out in the affected district and unless I am mistaken the interveners were represented by Mr. H. H. A. Hastings.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now while we were on that point, can you give us the title of the suit or suits concerning this same subject matter that were brought and litigated in the State courts, and the respective counsel?

A. I can not do it now, but I will obtain it for you.

Mr. ERICKSON (the witness). May I call your attention to one matter?

The CHAIRMAN. You may call our attention to anything you wish, Mr. Erickson.

Mr. ERICKSON. I have been informed that Mr. Crawford, who was the president of that railroad, and against whom this restraining order was drawn, has sworn since that time that this restraining order asked for by Peabody, Hopkins & Co. was prepared in his office.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Crawford?

A. He was the president of that road.

Mr. MCCOY. One of the defendants in the Peabody suit?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his full name?

The WITNESS. I do not recall his initials.

Mr. HUGHES. W. R.

The WITNESS. That is right—W. R. Crawford.

The CHAIRMAN. Of Seattle?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean he swore in some of the legal proceedings to that effect?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Where?

A. What they are now litigating in regard to the control of the road—they are asking for a receiver—two receivers have been asked for. One has been granted by the State court and another is asked for by the Federal court I believe—I don't know much about that phase of it, but it seems to me now that in the court proceedings Peabody, Hopkins & Co. were litigating with Mr. Crawford, and in these proceedings I am advised that he swore that that restraining order was prepared in his office.

Q. Are you able to locate that testimony for us?—A. I will try.

Q. Not at this moment, but later.—A. I will try to.

Q. And give us the information that you refer to as accurately as you can.—A. It was generally understood at that time that that was the case.

Mr. PRESTON. At the time of this Dreamland Rink meeting, or since, were you aware of the fact that the verified complaint upon which the temporary restraining order was issued, contained no reference to the previous litigation in the State court?

A. I didn't know anything about that.

Q. Have you learned or did you know that when the matter came up before the court for the temporary injunction—I do not refer now to the original restraining order—the temporary injunction, that it was Judge Hanford from the bench who suggested to the corporation counsel the fact of the possibility of collusion between the complainant and the railway company defendant in that case and called the attention of the corporation counsel to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that point which would defeat any injunction?—A. I do not remember that detail.

Q. And that it was upon that suggestion——

Mr. McCOY. I want to suggest this to you—I do not want to change the course of your examination—if that is the fact there must be somebody who can testify to it.

Mr. PRESTON. Oh, yes; there is, too.

Mr. McCOY. Then I do not see any use in asking Mr. Erickson, who is not a lawyer, or in taking him through that kind of an examination; if it is relevant and if we can get some one who knows the fact all right, but if Mr. Erickson thought he knew it, it would only be a matter of hearsay. I only make that suggestion in order to save time.

Mr. PRESTON. It would not be a matter of hearsay if he were in the court when the judge made that suggestion.

Mr. McCOY. Then I suggest, Mr. Preston, that you ask him that, if he was ever in the court and knew from actual knowledge anything about it, and if he says no, we can get the people who really know.

Mr. HIGGINS. You will be able to furnish the committee evidence of that fact?

Mr. PRESTON. Oh, yes, sir, but sir, my object in asking the question was to develop the fact that since the Dreamland Rink meeting and its results have been referred to, that those facts which were really so important to a just understanding of Judge Hanford's attitude, were unknown to Mr. Erickson, who was the chairman of the meeting which took the action. Now, there is another pertinent fact I would like to ask him about.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you taking the resolutions on the subject as evidence?

Mr. PRESTON. No, sir, simply that they have been brought into the case.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to show that those who participated in the Dreamland Rink meeting did not have full knowledge?

Mr. PRESTON. I want to show whether or not Mr. Erickson did have. I don't know whether he did or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think, Mr. Preston, that the Dreamland Rink meeting and the resolutions adopted at it are sufficiently convincing or of sufficient importance as evidence to justify us in taking up time with it?

Mr. PRESTON. No, sir, but this attitude of Mr. Erickson's I think, is material.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we can trust to your judgment not to fill the record with chaff—that was the point we had in mind—proceed along that line.

Mr. PRESTON. Did you, at the time of the Dreamland Rink meeting know that the temporary restraining order having been issued on August 21 and some commotion down in that neighborhood having arisen, on the morning of August 22, that Judge Hanford upon learning of that telephoned to the corporation counsel's office to know if they were not going to come into court with something antagonistic to or in opposition to the temporary restraining order.

The WITNESS. I think it was reported in the newspapers, if it was not I was advised by somebody—some man living in the Rainier Valley that this restraining order or injunction, whichever you please to call it, was issued without a heading—is that correct?

Q. That is correct.—A. Well, that is one of the things to which we took exception in that meeting.

Q. But you have not answered my question yet.—A. Was not that the question which you asked me?

Q. I asked you whether you knew at the time of the Dreamland Rink meeting that when Judge Hanford learned of the way his temporary restraining order had operated, that he at once telephoned to the corporation counsel's office to know if he was not going to take some action against that injunction, and that he was informed by the corporation counsel's office that they were not.—A. I knew nothing about it.

Q. That was the point on which I wanted to ask you. Were you at that time advised of the fact that that same forenoon of August 22, having received a negative answer from the corporation counsel's office, that Judge Hanford sent for the attorney for the complainant, for the superintendent of the railroad and had them come to his chambers; told them that they must run their cars and carry the passengers if they did not get a cent for it, and then and there, upon his own motion, modified the order which he had made before, so that those who were required by conductors to pay a greater fare than 5 cents were entitled to receipts for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a moment, I want to suggest this to you, Mr. Preston, doesn't it occur to you that you are making yourself a witness now? Those are statements of fact rather than questions, and doesn't it occur to you that they are not shedding much light on the matter, while they are filling the record with immaterial stuff, as I think. I will have to ask you to change the form of this examination.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I have no further questions to ask. I simply wanted to ascertain—I do not think that Mr. Erickson knew that fact and I wanted to ask him if he did.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest this to you, while I do not think it would mislead or deceive the Judiciary Committee, that it is not quite fair to ask a question by stating "Are you not aware that it is a fact so and so," it puts your statement in the form of testimony rather than a question, and it is not the best way to frame a question; but I think we will abandon this line of examination unless you have something else.

Mr. PRESTON. I have no further questions to ask whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. You can put that in properly later on when it may come in more properly than it does now; at this time it is only filling up the record by asking him as to matters which you suggest yourself that you believe he does not know.

Mr. PRESTON. If I knew he did not know I would not ask him. I said to you, sir, I thought he did not know. I do not know, I never spoke to Mr. Erickson in my life.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not a lawyer, and he probably does not know——

Mr. PRESTON. I understand, but you do not want to put me in the position, sir, of suggesting that which I do not know, as I did not know—I did not know, as I said to you, I do not know what the answer was.

The CHAIRMAN. Haven't you a pretty strong belief that he did not?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir; because I have the testimony accessible, sir, so that you need not be impressed by my own statements—they will come in the form of testimony of parties present.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not wish to do you any discourtesy of any kind, but I do not want to waste time further along that line. Is there any other question that anyone desires to ask this witness?

Mr. MCCOY. You stated that you were arrested in connection with something that happened at this meeting at the Dreamland Rink?

A. Yes.

Q. What were you arrested for?—A. The charge stated that I had been interfering with the course of justice.

Q. Were there any papers served on you at the time you were arrested?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any written complaint of what you had done at that meeting?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any copy of it with you?—A. I have it at home.

Q. What court was it in?—A. It was here in this building—the Federal court.

Q. At whose instance was the order of arrest issued?—A. I think it was the attorney's.

Q. What attorney?—A. The United States attorney.

Q. Well, will you produce the order; will you let us have it?—A. Yes, I will.

Q. Who signed the order?—A. I do not recall now.

Q. Were you taken into custody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. The deputy United States marshal.

Q. What did he do to you—did he lock you up?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. The county jail.

Q. How long were you there?—A. Four days.

Q. What bail was demanded?—A. $5,000.

Q. In this complaint was it alleged how you were obstructing the course of justice?—A. I am not clear on that; it was sometime since I read it; I got it last summer and it is quite a lengthy document.

Q. Was there anything in that complaint charging you with anything besides speaking at this meeting?—A. No.

Q. Had you, as a matter of fact, done anything except to speak at this meeting?—A. No.

Q. How long were you in jail?—A. Four days.

Q. Do you mean that you were locked up for four days?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you get out?—A. I was brought down here and some friends volunteered to go on my bail.

Q. A $5,000 bail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the only thing you had done was spoken at that meeting?—A. Yes; that's all.

Q. How long were those cases pending in the State court involving the question of the transfers or the fares of this Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway?—A. It was back and forth in the courts for about three years, the two questions.

Q. Are you in the habit of reading newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time those cases were in the court were they reported in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they reported fully in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they headlined in the newspapers?—A. I do not recall that they were headlined—that is, that they had any scare heads over them.

Q. Were they a matter of common talk in the city of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Amongst everybody?—A. Yes, sir; everybody—we had a mass meeting about it.

Q. While they were pending in the State court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the State court have anybody arrested for attending these mass meetings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of anybody being arrested because of any criticism of the State court, or any reference whatever to the proceedings in the State court?—A. Not in this case that I recall.

Q. Do you know on whose initiative this order of arrest was made?—A. I beg pardon; there was an editor of a paper arrested here for contempt, but I do not recall which particular case it was in; there was some comment in the paper.

Mr. HUGHES. You are talking with reference to the State court now?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

The WITNESS. That was in the superior court; that was not in the State court.

Mr. MCCOY. When; do you remember?

A. No, not exactly.

Q. One of the papers here?—A. One of the papers—the editor of one of the papers was arrested for contempt, I think—no, that was in connection with the Duwamish Valley fight. We had the same kind of a fight down in the Duwamish Valley that we had in the Rainier Valley, and during that controversy one of the editors of the Star was arrested for contempt of court.

Q. For what?—A. For printing something about that matter.

Q. Now, those cases had been decided, had they, in the highest court of the State of Washington before this meeting—this mass meeting of which you spoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How populous is the territory through which this road runs, this street railroad?—A. Well, I presume there is something like 10,000 or 12,000 people that live down there in that valley—what we call the Rainier Valley.

Q. And does that road run into the city of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how large, roughly speaking, is the patronage on the road?—A. I do not know, I am sure; I think they run something like 12 or 15 cars on that line.

Q. A day?—A. I mean continuously backward and forward.

Q. Continuously?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the length of the road?—A. It is about 5 or 6 miles.

Q. Now, as I understand, this temporary restraining order, it forbade the patrons of the road to demand transfers?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the point about the fares—about the amount of the fares?—A. About the amount of the fare, yes, sir.

Q. And it forbade them to ask for any receipts, did it?—A. No.

Q. For the excess fare?—A. I think that was the way it was stated.

Q. So that the railroad was claiming one amount and the people along the road claiming that the smaller amount should be paid?—A. They claimed what the State courts had allowed them.

Q. That is ,they claimed that a smaller amount should be paid than the railroad company was demanding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the order forbade them to ask for any receipt when they paid the larger amount, is that right?—A. I do not recall whether that first order forbade them asking for any receipts, because I don't think the receipt question came in until the second order; when the order was modified there was some order came up after that in regard to those receipts—that they should be compelled to ask for those receipts—that they must pay their fare and ask for the receipt, or something of the kind, I don't remember just the details of that, but that was modified—that was in the modified injunction or restraining order.

Q. Who was the mayor of the city at the time that this restraining order was issued?—A. Dilling.

Q. Who?—A. Dilling—George W. Dilling.

Q. Do you know how soon after the order was originally issued it was modified, this temporary restraining order?—A. I think it was two days afterwards.

Q. Well, during that interval were there any protests made?—A. Well, I should say the whole town was protesting.

Q. What form did the protest take?—A. Of mass meetings.

Q. Did you take any legal advice before you held this Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever advised that the temporary restraining order is not a matter of right; that nobody has a right to demand a temporary restraining order?—A. I don't know anything about the legal phase of it.

Q. And that even an injunction is not a matter of legal right, but it is purely a matter of grace from the court?—A. I knew everybody here that I associated with considered it a rank injustice and we got together to protest against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions along this line? Mr. Erickson, you live in the city?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you going to be in the city continuously for some time?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not think the examination would take the time that it has, but of course we will reach the injunction proceeding of which you spoke in due course, and it is quite likely that you will be needed again, but until the testimony in regard to that is being introduced, as far as I now believe, you may be excused on the theory that you will remain in the city.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like to ask one question.

Q. When you stated in answer to Mr. McCoy's question that you had no legal advice, you meant no personal attorney?—A. No.

Q. John H. Perry is a lawyer, is he not?—A. Perry did not have anything to do with me going to that meeting.

Q. That is hardly an answer to my question.—A. Well, I did not know Perry at that time.

Q. And that is hardly an answer to my question, either.

Q. Please state it again. [Question repeated to the witness.]—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at the time that you were arrested he was also, was he not?—A. Yes.

Q. On the same general charge that you have stated to the committee?—A. Yes.

Q. And he was the attorney at that time for some of the people that were with you arrested?—A. He was attorney for the Star, I understand; I don't know that positively, but I understand he was their attorney.

Q. But he was not yours?—A. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the conditions stated, Mr. Erickson, you may stand aside.

Mr. PRESTON. Might I ask Mr. Erickson a question, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. You say you stayed in jail four days; you did that when you were able to give the bond at any time, were you not, and didn't you?

A. Why, if I stirred around town I might have found people who would go on my bond.

Q. Didn't you declare yourself at that time as refusing to give a bond?—A. I said I did not have the $5,000 to put up, and I did not, and then they took me to jail.

Q. And while you were in jail didn't you make public declaration that you refused to give bail?—A. No.

Q. Did you make the declaration at all?—A. I did not.

Q. You could have given the bail if you had wanted to?—A. After I got in jail there were volunteers came forward to go on my bail.

Q. And you did not accept their assistance?—A. They were going to have a hearing and I put that matter off until we had the hearing.

Q. You declined to accept it for four days, their assistance to give bail; is that correct?—A. I did not decline it.

Q. Yes, didn't you?

The CHAIRMAN. You declined to accept it for four days.

Mr. PRESTON. You declined for four days to accept the offers of bail, now did you, Mr. Erickson; that is the question?

A. Well, I want to understand that clearly before I answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just strike that out and start over again and ask the question and put it in a different form.

Mr. PRESTON. Did you for that period of four days decline the assistance offered you of bail?

A. During the period that I was in jail people came there and offered to go on my bail if it was necessary, and I took no steps to give bail.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you decline; that is the question asked you; did you decline to accept bail bond after you were arrested and in jail for four days?

A. Well, I don't just understand what you mean by declining.

Q. Did you refuse to accept bail?—A. I didn't ask for bail or have any paper prepared for me.

Q. That is not the question; did you decline to leave the jail when friends tendered bail?—A. I had people come up there and offer to go on my bail, and I told them that I would have no bail bond prepared until I came into court.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, did you demand that you be brought into court?

A. No; I made no demand at that time.

Q. How did you finally get to give the bond?—A. There was a day set for the hearing.

Q. That was four days after you were incarcerated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you came out in the orderly way, according to the order of the court?—A. Yes.

Q. At that time you gave a bond?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was there any suggestion made to you from the authorities that if you put up $5,000 that it would be taken as a bond and you could get out?—A. No; I had no communication with the authorities whatever from the time I left the courtroom here until the marshal came after me.

Q. You said you did not have $5,000 to put up?—A. No.

Q. How did you come to make that remark?—A. Well, the situation was this: Judge Totten, I think it was, who had charge of the case, stated that a bond was necessary to give and I told him I didn't have $5,000 and I would not go and ask anybody to go on my bond under those circumstances; if I had violated the law I felt that I should take care of myself and I did not want to go and ask my friends to keep me out of jail; if I had violated the laws I wanted to take the consequences and if I did not I wanted the odium to go to the people who sent me there.

Q. Some of the questions and answers, I think, made it material to inquire now as to your pecuniary liability—were you worth more than $5,000?—A. Yes.

Q. You may name some sum, if you will, as a minimum that you were worth at that time—we would like to get your financial standing?—A. I presume I had property at that time worth $10,000 or $15,000.

Mr. MCCOY. What was the outcome of those proceedings?

A. They were dismissed.

Q. By whom were they dismissed——A. By the attorney.

Q. By the district attorney?—A. By the United States district attorney. He took the matter down to the United States grand jury and they refused to indict us.

Q. Where?—A. Tacoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the grand jury take any action; did they find a true bill or not a true bill or did they take any action at all?

A. I am not clear on that point. All that I know is that I learned through the reports in the paper and from my attorney that the case was dismissed.

Mr. McCoy. Is the matter still pending in any way?

A. I can not answer that question; some one told me since that they were liable to arrest me again at any time if they wanted to, but I do not know about that.

The Chairman. Are there any further questions of Mr. Erickson? If not, he will be excused. That is all.

R. D. Brown, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your full name.

A. R. B. Brown.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Brown?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Eight years.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Are you practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been a lawyer?—A. About 19 years.

Q. Practicing all that time in Seattle?—A. All the time in the State, but not in Seattle.

Q. Does your practice extend both to the State and Federal courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Higgins. Speak up, I can not hear you.

A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. You are an example of that rara avis, a lawyer and bashful. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford.

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known the judge?—A. I presume about 15 years I have known him by sight; I have never been personally or intimately acquainted with him.

Q. Have you seen Judge Hanford at any time during your acquaintance when he appeared to you to be under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I could not say that. I saw him on one occasion in which it seemed to be difficult for him to keep awake.

Q. What was the occasion?—A. During the trial of a case.

Q. In his court?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall the case?—A. Yes, sir; it was the case of Benjamin H. Greenwood, a minor, by Sarah Small, his guardian ad litem, v. The Puget Mill Co.

Q. A corporation?—A. A corporation.

Q. What was the nature of the case?—A. It was an action brought by Greenwood, by his guardian, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while in the employ of the Puget Mill Co.

Q. Tell the committee, if you please, what occurred during the trial that was unusual and arrested your attention—anything to which you referred.—A. During the progress of the trial the judge was sitting with his back partly toward the attorneys, about in the position that I am sitting now.

Q. With reference to the jury box?—A. With reference to the jury box—the jury being at my back.

Q. Was it in this court room?—A. It was not in this court room; no, sir; it was in the old building occupied by the court before this building was completed.

Q. To add to your description, your back is now turned almost squarely to the jury box?—A. Yes.

Q. Go on.—A. During the examination of a witness I noticed the judge's eyes close and his hands drop down to his side and he seemed to be dead to the world, so to speak, for a short interval of time, it seemed to me about a half a minute, and it just reminded me of a child who would close its eyes and go to sleep very suddenly and then rouse up and look around. I could not say that it was because of drink. I do not know anything about that. It just attracted my attention, and after the trial—a short time after that—the case was dismissed and the plaintiff in the case, who was a bright, intelligent boy, was sitting, so to speak, nearer in front of the judge than I was, and I was commenting somewhat on the fact of the case being dismissed for such grounds as it was dismissed——

Q. You mean that the judge held that the plaintiff's evidence did not make a case?—A. No, he did not hold that. He seemed to think that it was a strong case, but he dismissed the case for the reason that there was a variance between the proof and the allegations of the complaint, which was in plain violation of the statute which said that a case could not be dismissed for that reason. And the boy, after the case, said we could not expect anything else from a judge who was asleep half the time during the trial, and by that I noticed that he had noticed also that the judge had been asleep.

Q. Did anything occur during that trial with reference to one of the jurors, or any of the jurors—was there any other incident which occurred during the trial?—A. With the jurors?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you recall anything of a juror desiring to retire for a while?—A. Well, I don't think that I remember anything about that; it might be that if such an occurrence did take place—I don't remember of any juror at the time retiring.

Q. How long did the trial last?—A. Well, it lasted the greater part of one day.

Q. Was that time occupied in the production of evidence?—A. In the selection of the jury and the production of the plaintiff's evidence.

Q. How long a time was consumed in producing the evidence?—A. My recollection is now that we began the evidence in the forenoon and rested the plaintiff's case sometime between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Are you able to tell the committee how much of that time the judge appeared to you to be in such condition that he did not know fully the evidence.—A. That was the only time; I only noticed him just the once, and that was only toward the close of the case.

Q. How were you seated with reference to him and with reference to having an opportunity to notice him?—A. I was seated about in the position that the judge is at the present time.

Q. With relation to you?—A. With relation to you, almost directly in front of him; the plaintiff sitting to my right still farther over than that.

Q. So that from where you sat while you watched the jury the angle from the line of vision to the jury would be a little less than a right angle from the line of vision to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, have you any opinion from your observation of him then as to whether he did or did not follow the evidence produced?—A. I didn't—I don't think that he did, judging from the manner in which he commented upon the motion that was made at the close of the evidence for a nonsuit.

Q. Did the defendants' attorney file a motion to dismiss the case?—A. He made an oral motion at the close of plaintiff's testimony, based upon the usual stereotyped grounds for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence, claiming that the evidence showed contributory negligence and assumption of risk, and after the argument——

Q. Did he also claim that there was a variance between the declaration and the proof?—A. I do not know. I would not say that that was embodied in the motion.

Q. Was the motion afterwards reduced to writing?—A. It was never reduced to writing.

Q. Did you have a reporter there?—A. Oh, yes; I presume the reporter reduced it to writing at the time. The whole transaction was taken down by a stenographer.

Q. I understood you to say that you were the plaintiff's attorney. Am I right in that?—A. I was one of the plaintiff's attorneys.

Q. Who was associated with you?—A. An attorney by the name of A. J. Speckert; it was his original case.

Q. Where is he now?—A. Here in the city.

Q. And who were the defendant's attorneys?—A. The defendants' attorneys were Messrs. Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey.

Q. That is the Mr. Hughes now present?—A. Yes; he was the head of the firm and the case was conducted by Mr. W. T. Dovell.

Q. When the motion was made to dismiss were the facts argued pro and con?—A. Yes.

Q. Did any of the attorneys in the argument dwell upon the ground on which the court dismissed the case?—A. I don't think so; I know I did not, because it never occurred to me. The only point that I remember of arguing in the case was the question of the assumption of risk. I called the court's attention to the fact that the supreme court of this State had decided that there could be no question of assumption of risk where one received injuries from machinery that the law required to be kept boxed and safeguarded; that it took the question of assumption of risk out of the case.

Q. In other words, the defendants had violated the statutory provision.—A. Yes; and I thought it was a plain case of the violation of a statutory duty, and the court seemed to think—he said he presumed that this court would be bound by that decision, but in commenting on the case he thought that there was some variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof, and dismissed the case, and it took me by surprise, but he afterwards, however, acknowledged his error and granted a new trial in that matter.

Q. I was going to ask you if the judgment was entered?—A. Well, I do not know that it had been formally entered, because I immediately made a motion to vacate the order for a new trial, and I think the custom is that they do not formally enter the judgment in writing until after that motion is disposed of.

Q. I think you inadvertently said you made a motion to vacate the order for a new trial; you do not mean that.—A. I mean to vacate the order of dismissal.

Q. Was the motion for a new trial argued at length, or did the judge enter that without argument?—A. It was argued, but I could not say that it was at length. I think when I filed my authorities and motion, my recollection is that the court notified the attorneys to be in court on the day fixed, and we were there, and the court seemed to have made his mind up without any argument that a new trial would have to be granted, and there was very little said at that time.

Q. What ultimately became of the situation?—A. The case was dismissed twice after that.

Q. By the plaintiff or by the court?—A. By the court on the defendant's motions, and dismissed the last time upon a ground that the court had previously held was not a ground for dismissal.

Q. What was that?—A. That the question involved a fraudulent settlement that had been made with the boy's mother prior to the bringing of the action, and it was the contention of the defendant's attorneys that the action could not be maintained until the money was paid back to the Puget Mill Co. that an agent of the liability company had paid to the boy's mother, the mother having no authority to accept the money.

Q. She was not at that time his legally appointed guardian?—A. She was not his legally appointed guardian and in fact never became his legally appointed guardian.

Q. And as I understand you, you said that question was once raised and the judge held that it did not estop the boy from suing through his lawful guardian, but later on that he dismissed the case for the reason that the settlement you refer to was conclusive on the boy?—A. Yes; that was the final ruling, and the case was in court and out of court—we fought it in this court for something like two years, I think, and after that, the boy not being able to appeal to a higher court, practically had to abandon his case. Afterwards——

Q. You say practically.—A. That is, in this court; and in order to keep the case from outlawing, and to get some little something out of the case, we again started his action in the State court for less than $2,000; his original action was brought for $15,000.

Q. Was the suit brought in the Federal court in the first instance or was it removed to there?—A. It was removed to the Federal court.

Q. On what grounds?—A. On the ground that the defendant was a foreign corporation.

Q. Diversity of citizenship?—A. Yes.

Q. What became of the suit which was brought in the State court which was not removed?—A. It is still pending there, but they have set up the same defenses there; they set up the defense of the dismissal in this court and they are claiming that we can not bring it over there now for the reason that——

Q. They are putting up the defense of res adjudicata?—A. Yes; res adjudicata. That question never has been determined—it is still in court.

Mr. McCoy. Is it the law in this State that a nonsuit amounts to a conclusive judgment against the plaintiff?

A. They claim that it having been adjudicated in the Federal court that an action could not be brought until the money which was paid to the boy's mother was returned, is binding upon the State courts.

Q. The adjudication consists simply of a dismissal in the nature of a nonsuit?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is claimed to be a conclusive judgment?—A. I say that question, though, has never been decided in the State court.

The CHAIRMAN. How does your record show—judgment for the defendant in the court?

A. In this court.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you any statutory provision in this State to the effect that a nonsuit is not a conclusive judgment?

A. We have.

Q. You have a statutory provision of that kind?—A. Yes; and we further have a statute that an action shall not be dismissed for the reason that there is a variance between the proof and the complaint, so long as the proof is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you to produce that statute for us, can you do it at once?

A. I can do it in a very short time.

Q. Is it long?—A. No; it is very short.

Q. I would like to put it into the record at this point.—A. I think perhaps my brief is on file in this case in the court here.

The CHAIRMAN. We will have those sections of the statute put in as Exhibit No. 26.

Q. Is there any other fact or incident connected with that case which you have not told us which you ought to tell the committee?—A. I think that those are the only incidents. Of course I felt that the court having held once—having ruled that the payment under the circumstances and the conditions in which this payment was made to the boy's mother, was not a defense to a legal action—I thought that it should become the law of the case and he should have ruled that way when the motion was raised the third time.

Q. How much was paid to her?—A. $120.

Q. Did the court give any reason either in rendering his verbal opinion in the case or at any other time, as to why a payment to the boy's mother, who was not the lawful guardian, was conclusive of his rights in the premises?—A. He gave no reason; in fact he was strongly of the opinion when the matter was first argued at length that it was not a legal defense, and I could find no authority in any court anywhere that had held that it was a legal defense; but during the progress of the case, having dismissed me—I might state this, that I then amended the reply which I had filed which set up all of the facts and circumstances under which this purported settlement was made with the boy's mother, so as to make my complaint more nearly conform to the evidence in the case, and the defendants filed the same answer that they had filed before.

Mr. HUGHES. You said you amended your reply.

A. I mean complaint.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you call it a declaration or a complaint—have you a code?

Mr. HUGHES. A code?

The WITNESS. In the State court we have a code.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

A. They filed their same answer and I filed the same reply, and then they renewed their motion for just judgment on the pleadings and also filed a demurrer.

Q. To what—a demurrer to the complaint?—A. I don't know whether they demurred to the complaint or to the reply—I suppose it was to the reply they were demurring—the reply was the lengthier pleading than the complaint, really, because it set up all the facts as to fraud and the circumstances under which the settlement was made. When this matter came up for hearing the second time Judge Whitson was on the bench and he took the matter under advisement and sustained the——

Q. That was the matter of the demurrer?—A. Yes, sir; the matter of the demurrer and the motion. I think the record does not show anything about the demurrer, but he sustained the motion and ordered the action dismissed. This, of course, was practically a reversal of Judge Hanford's opinion. Then I moved to vacate his order and to reinstate the case, and Judge Hanford granted it; and after being reinstated the second time I made some slight amendment to my reply again, it having gone over another term and I thought I was where I could better the reply.

Mr. McCoy. Do you mean your reply to the complaint?

A. No; it was the reply I amended the second time—the other pleadings stood as they were. So having gotten back in court the second time, they filed their motion again for the third time; it was the same motion which Judge Hanford had overruled and the same motion which Judge Whitson had sustained; and Judge Hanford reversed his former ruling and followed Judge Whitson, dismissing it the third time. I felt that Judge Hanford's first ruling was right and it had become the law of the case and it should have been followed regardless of Judge Whitson. I think yet that it was right. I think there was no question but what Judge Whitson was in error, and Judge Hanford was in error the last time.

The Chairman. One question. In such a case as you have described where it was apparent that the judge was going to dismiss at the end of the plaintiff's evidence, do not the lawyers move for a nonsuit—is there any statute or any practice in this State making it unnecessary to do that?

A. Making it unnecessary to move——

Q. Making it unnecessary to take a nonsuit, to save your rights for another suit?—A. No; I think not. I do not think we have any statute.

Q. In the third proceeding, I understand you, the judge made the order dismissing the case and with that order was made an entry of judgment for the defendant with costs?—A. Yes; that is correct.

Q. If he entered that judgment would not the next step be either for some good reason to set aside the judgment or to take an appeal?—A. The rules and the law I suppose, also, is to move for a new trial provided the court committed any errors.

Q. Of course the judge controls his judgment during that term of court and he might set the judgment aside if entered, and in your case he did in some way get around the order, dismissing it, whatever it was.—A. Yes; he vacated the order, and, I believe, for that reason that he had no right to dismiss it upon that ground, because, he having admitted that the case as made by the plaintiff was sufficient, and it clearly showed negligence on the part of the company.

Q. Was the evidence produced more than once or only once?—A. It never was—we never could get to the jury after that first time.

Mr. McCoy. This is the law of Washington, is it not? "Section 729 of Pierce's Washington Code, 1905: When a judgment of nonsuit is given, the action is dismissed; but such judgment shall not have the effect to bar another action for the same cause." That is the law, is it not?

A. That is the law, but that is not the law of which I spoke.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the law on this point.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Graham was asking you the question whether, in order to get rid of that judgment, you could begin another action right away after the nonsuit was entered; could you do that?

A. Yes, sir; but it would be in the same position; you would have to pay the additional fees.

Q. If you cared to begin all over again, the moment the judgment of nonsuit was entered you could begin right over again on the same cause of action, but perhaps you would have to pay the costs of the first suit if the question were raised.—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I am confused about it, because my State is a common-law State, and if the judge there entered judgment for a defendant and the term of court at which he entered it had passed he would have no more control over it than if he was not the judge, and the attorney for the plaintiff would be barred to commence another action.

The WITNESS. But we usually make a motion for a new trial, because it saves us putting up a new fee and new costs.

Q. It saves you putting up the costs of a new suit?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you no statute which enables the plaintiff to sue without costs if he be unable to pay them?—A. Well, I don't think there is any in our State.

Q. With reference to the question of variance, the question was handed to me to call attention to the laws of the State just mentioned, Pierce's Washington Code of 1905, section 420:

420. VARIANCE ALLOWED.—No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof shall be deemed material, unless it shall have actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. Whenever it shall be alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and in what respect he has been misled, and thereupon the court may order the pleading to be amended upon such terms as shall be just.

421. PRACTICE IN CASE OF VARIANCE.—When the variance is not material, as provided in the last section, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence or may order an immediate amendment without costs.

422. FAILURE OF PROOF.—When, however, the allegation of the cause of action or defense to which the proof is directed is not proved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning, it shall not be deemed a case of variance within the last two sections, but a failure of proof.

Does the last section I read apply to your case?—A. The last section—I understood you that you read more than one section, didn't you?

Mr. MCCOY. Did Judge Hanford grant the motion for the new trial on the ground that there was an immaterial variance?

A. Yes.

Q. And at that time I suppose that that last section, section No. 422, was discussed and considered?—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. At the close of the plaintiff's case a motion was made to dismiss, you say?—A. Yes.

Q. A motion was made on several grounds?—A. My recollection is—I only recollect the two grounds, contributory negligence and assumption of risk.

Q. Was there any motion made to dismiss on the ground that there was a material variance between the pleading and the proof?—A. I don't understand that there was such a motion.

Q. Was any one or all three of these sections 420, 421, and 422 of Pierce's Code discussed at the time that motion to dismiss was made?—A. No.

Q. Did anybody point out to the court or call the court's attention to the fact that unless a party had been actually misled—unless the defendant had actually been misled in maintaining his defense on the merits there was no variance—was that point discussed?—A. No; I do not think it was discussed at all. I have no recollection of any mention being made of it by either side.

Q. At the time when, as you say, Judge Hanford changed his ruling as to the effect of the alleged settlement with this boy's mother; was that ruling changed in open court during the course of the trial or was it on some proceeding based on the pleadings—some motion on the pleadings?—A. It was based on the same motion for a dismissal that had been previously made.

Q. It was a motion on the pleadings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Regardless of any evidence which might have been taken at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any cases cited by the defendant's attorney which he claimed established as a matter of law that the settlement with the boy's mother worked an estoppel against a suit by a properly appointed guardian ad litem for a minor, I mean—not a boy exactly, but a minor?—A. There were no such cases as that cited. He cited one or two cases in which this same court, Judge Hanford, had held that a void settlement even would be a defense to a legal action until it was vacated and set aside by a separate action, but there were no cases produced and I have been unable to find anywhere any court ever held that state of facts, such as was involved in this case, would be a legal defense.

Q. In other words, the cases that were cited involved transactions between those who were of full age and competent to act for themselves.—A. Yes, sir; parties that were interested.

Q. What comment, if any, did Judge Hanford make on the cases involving an infant?—A. None. He commented upon it very little. He simply held the fact that if such a settlement was made it could not be interposed as a legal defense—that was his first ruling.

Q. I want you to confine yourself to the time when he changed his ruling.—A. No comment at all upon it, except that he would sustain Judge Whitson's ruling since he had made his former ruling.

Q. Was that the ground upon which he ruled differently the second time because Judge Whitson had so held?—A. Yes.

Q. It was because the other judge had decided that way and that was why he came to decide that way, or was it because he himself had changed his mind?—A. That was the reason he decided that way, because Judge Whitson had.

Q. Is Judge Whitson a circuit judge?—A. He is a circuit judge from the eastern side of the State.

Mr. PRESTON. Don't you mean a district judge?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I do. I meant district judge instead of circuit judge.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you call Judge Hanford's attention to the fact that he himself had previously decided the other.

A. Yes.

Q. What did he say as to that?—A. Well, he did not want a different ruling every time a different judge came on the bench, and so he said he would sustain Judge Whitson's ruling, or words to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Brown, you did not appear as a witness voluntarily?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were subpœnaed and compelled to come in.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to mean in part that Judge Hanford, as to the question of settlement by the boy's mother, clearly departed from the law to the disadvantage of your client. To what do you attribute his action, his want of knowledge of the law or something else? If you have any opinion on that point, you may state it.—A. It was hard for me to believe that a man who had been on the bench for 23 years would dismiss a case on that account, for the reason that he gave, not knowing that we had such a statute, unless that it should have been——

Q. Are you addressing yourself to the question of variance now?—A. Yes.

Q. That is not what I am asking you about. I am asking you about the alleged settlement which you say he held concluded the boy's rights, or estopped him from bringing any other suit, so to speak. Now, as his mother was not his lawful guardian that would put the judge in the position of holding that, as a matter of fact, a person who did not legally represent another could make a settlement that would bind that other person without that other person's consent, or where he had no consent to give. Now, that seems an extraordinary situation, and I will ask you if you will tell us, in your opinion, what moved the judge to so hold. Was it a want of knowledge of the law or was it some other motive?—A. I attributed——

Q. I do not insist on an answer. I put it to you whether you will answer that or not.—A. I confess that I was at a loss to know why he did it. I never could figure it out, unless it was because his mind was not active, that it would be subject to spells in which he would not have full control of his faculties. That was about the way that I sized it up at the time.

Q. But this came up so often about those spells, that if they were the cause of it that it would have to be numerous and oft repeated.—A. My practice before Judge Hanford since I have been here had been very limited, and I rarely appeared in his court where there was a contested case. I think this was the hardest fought case, in fact the only hard-fought case that I ever did have in his court, and so I have not been with him enough that I could form perhaps as good an opinion as some other attorneys who had been with him more frequently and knew his habits and his customs. It struck me though, from what experiences that I had, that his mind was not active—that is, that at times he had had lapses of memory and perhaps would do things that he would not do at some other time. Not through any bad motive, but I attributed it perhaps to his age.

Q. For causes that he could not overcome—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know anything in his habits or mode of life which would tend to induce that condition of mind?—A. No; I do not. I know nothing of his personal life at all. I do not think that I ever saw him on the street more than once or twice. I do not think I ever saw him outside of the courtroom in 15 years, though I have known him about 20 years. I do not think that I have ever seen him more than 20 times outside of the courtroom in that time.

Q. Do you know of any other case in which you were not personally interested like this one, or nearly like it?—A. Not to my own knowledge.

Q. Do you in any way?—A. I have heard other complaints made as to cases of this character.

Q. By attorneys who participated in those cases?—A. Yes; I have heard of other cases, but I do not know anything about the cases.

Q. What cases did you hear of?—A. I would not know them—I do not know that I could give you the titles of the cases.

Q. Do you recall who told you of them?—A. I would not be sure about who called them to my mind now, but I heard it discussed among attorneys; I have heard the attorney's names used who were interested in the case that they were complaining of.

Q. Who are they? A. Herbert W. Myers.

Q. Of Seattle?—A. Yes, but I do not know anything of his case, and I never heard him say it himself.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions of this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. I would suggest that we take a recess at this time for this reason——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary that you give any reason.

Mr. HUGHES. The committee will now be at recess until 1.30 p. m.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess.

All parties present as at former hearing.

R. B. BROWN resumed the stand.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Brown, in order to get the matter of record in orderly form, so that the proceedings in the court and the pleadings may be brought in to explain the transactions to which you have testified, let me ask you just a few questions. In the first place, the suit of Greenwood against the Puget Mill Co. was brought by Mr. A. J. Speckert as attorney for the plaintiff?—A. I think my recollection is that our names both appear.

Q. In the original——

A. Interrupting. In the original action.

Q. But he was her attorney and you were called in to be associated with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Commenced in the State court and removed to the Federal court, on the ground of diversity of citizenship?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The case came on for trial before Judge Hanford and a jury in the Federal court. Do you remember at what time, at what term of the court, in what year?—A. The case came on for trial in Judge Hanford's court in June, 1906.

Q. June, 1906?—A. Yes.

Q. The jury was impaneled, the testimony of the plaintiff was introduced, and at the close of it, Mr. Dovell, of my firm, who appeared for the defendant, moved for a nonsuit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a stenographer in court who took the testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember who that stenographer was?—A. I don't know his name; I don't remember his name.

Q. It would be an easy matter to ascertain?—A. Oh, yes. I think I have a transcript of a part of the plaintiff's evidence; I don't know but all of it.

Q. The motion for a nonsuit was taken down by the stenographer?—A. I presume it was.

Q. Do you recall now whether any part of the arguments of counsel were taken down by the stenographer?—A. I don't know as to that. It is not usual for stenographers to take down the argument of counsel, but they sometimes do do it.

Q. It is usual for them to take down the motion and the——A. (Interrupting.) They should take down the——

Q. (Continuing.) And the ruling of the court, at least?—A. They usually take down the oral motion and the ruling of the court.

Q. Do you recall at what length the motion was argued?—A. Yes; I recall that it was not argued at any great length.

Q. But at the conclusion of the argument the court granted the motion for a nonsuit?—A. He did.

Q. And you now believe that the stenographer recorded what the court said, don't you—that is your best recollection?—A. I don't know whether he did or not, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) I am not meaning here to——A. (Continuing.) But I think that he should have done that.

Q. If he did, that can be ascertained?—A. Yes.

Q. I have not had time—I am just asking for information here, not for any other purpose—I have not had time to make that investigation. Immediately following you made a motion for a new trial or a rehearing?—A. I did.

Q. And that motion, upon a very brief presentation of the matter on your part, was granted, wasn't it?—A. It was.

Q. No record of that would exist except the order of the court setting aside the nonsuit?—A. And the——

Q. (Interrupting.) In other words, what I wanted to get at was whether there was a memorandum opnion filed by the court, if you recall, upon your motion for a rehearing or for a new trial.—A. My recollection is that I prepared an order vacating his former order and granting a new trial, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) That probably is the only record of the court at that time?—A. Except the briefs.

Q. Did you file a brief?—A. I filed a little memorandum, notes of points that I relied upon to sustain my motion for a new trial.

Q. Do you recall whether Mr. Dovell filed an opposing brief at that time or served one?—A. I don't think that he did.

Q. Very well, pass that by. After the motion had been granted, you and Mr. Speckert prepared an amended complaint, did you not?—A. We did. I prepared it myself.

Q. And that was filed in the case, by leave of court?—A. Yes.

Q. To that an answer was filed by the defendant?—A. It was.

Q. By Mr. Dovell, for the defendant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to that answer you filed a reply?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The answer sets forth various affirmative defenses to which it was necessary, under the practice, for you to file a reply?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Dovell demurred to your reply, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was it that demurrer that was brought on for hearing before Judge Edward Whitson?—A. Yes, sir; he filed a motion and demurrer both at the same time and they were both taken up together.

Q. The motion was for judgment upon the pleadings?—A. It was.

Q. And the demurrer was to the legal sufficiency of the affirmative matter set up in your reply?—A. I presume so; yes.

Q. That was fully argued before Judge Whitson, wasn't it, at one time, the motion and the demurrer?—A. It was.

Q. Did you make the argument on behalf of the plaintiff, or did you and Speckert join in the argument?—A. I made the—all—I think I was alone in all subsequent proceedings.

Q. Did you serve and file with the court a brief upon that hearing?—A. My recollection is that no brief was prepared, because it had—the same question had been argued before before Judge Hanford——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, but Judge Whitson would not know anything about the argument before Judge Hanford.—A. Well, what I was going to say was I did not know that Judge Whitson was going to be on the bench at that time and I don't think that there was any; for that reason I don't think there was any briefs filed.

Q. Both of you made arguments before Judge Whitson?—A. Yes; a very short argument.

Q. Do you remember whether you filed a memorandum of authorities or a brief with Judge Whitson subsequent to the argument?—A. I don't remember as to that. I know that he did take it under advisement and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did he file a memorandum opinion in writing? A. He did.

Q. That would be of record, wouldn't it——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) In the files of that case?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, at that time he sustained the motion for judgment upon the pleadings, did he?—A. He did.

Q. And you subsequently moved for a rehearing, and that argument for a rehearing of Judge Whitson's decision when heard came on before Judge Hanford, didn't it?—A. It did; yes, sir.

Q. Judge Whitson presided in the eastern district of Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And just happened to be holding this court at the time when this matter was on the calendar for hearing; in other words, he was not specially assigned in any way to hear this case, but just happened to be presiding here in the absence of Judge Hanford at the time when this demurrer and motion came up for hearing?—A. I presume so. I don't know anything about that.

Q. And your motion for a rehearing of it occurred after Judge Whitson had gone back to Spokane, and came on for hearing before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; my motion to vacate his order and for a new hearing again.

Q. Well, that was a motion for a new hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. And that was argued before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were briefs submitted to Judge Hanford at that time?—A. I am not sure as to that, but I think there were.

Q. Yes. And Judge Hanford on that argument denied your motion for a rehearing and vacation of the order of Judge Whitson?—A. No, sir; he sustained it; reinstated me again.

Q. He again reinstated you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did he——A. (Interrupting.) Reversed Judge Whitson.

Q. How?—A. How is that? He vacated Judge Whitson's order of dismissal and I came back in again.

Q. Did you file further amended pleadings then?—A. And then I made a little amendment to my reply, but not to change the facts, but in fact to make it stronger in my favor; and then your firm renewed the same motion that you made in the beginning of the original action.

Q. And when you say my firm, Mr. Dovell conducted it altogether, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. And on that motion you had another argument before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was a full argument, was it not——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) On the law, and on that argument he sustained the motion of Mr. Dovell, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, just one or two other questions in that connection, to correctly convey the facts to the committee. The plaintiff in this case was Greenwood, by a Mrs. Small as guardian?—A. As guardian ad litem; yes, sir.

Q. As guardian ad litem. Mrs. Small was the mother of Greenwood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Having subsequently married?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And her name at that time was Small?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The pleadings showed that she had been appointed guardian, and as such had made a settlement with the insurance company—the accident insurance company—did they not, and that they had——A. They——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) Wait a minute.

A. Just a moment. The pleadings——

The CHAIRMAN. Is it wise to waste time on this?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; probably the pleadings will speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it is wise to waste time on it when we will have the pleadings?

Mr. HUGHES. No; I think that is right; I think that is right. I merely wanted to bring out the fact. At any rate, I simply want to show——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) Let him answer.

Mr. HUGHES (continuing). That the plaintiff, Mrs. Small, was the mother, and whatever is shown in the pleadings about a guardian relates to Mrs. Small, the mother, who was the guardian ad litem prosecuting this action.

The WITNESS. Yes; she was appointed guardian ad litem just previous to bringing this action for damages.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, there is another proposition wrapped up in the question which I interrupted which, as I understood it, involves the time of her appointment and whether she made the settlement after she was appointed guardian or before.

Mr. HUGHES. That, I think, all appears in the pleadings, does it not?

The WITNESS. There is not any question——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) He may give his version of it.

A. There never was any question in any court, and, as I understand, it was conceded by Mr. Dovell all the time that there was an attempt made to have Mrs. Small appointed guardian, but that it was wholly illegal; that there was not a legal step about it, and any steps that was taken in the matter was taken after they had paid her $120 and got her to sign a receipt purporting to give her five hundred, and——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) I will ask you, then, as experts in the law, for my own satisfaction, what court here appoints guardians?

Mr. HUGHES. The superior court; the State court.

The CHAIRMAN. The same one that tries the cases?

Mr. HUGHES. This is the Federal court that tried it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, your State nisi prius court?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; the nisi prius court. It is also a probate court.

The CHAIRMAN. When that court appoints a guardian under your law, has that guardian the power to make a settlement for her ward without the approval of the court that appoints him or her?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think that the guardian would have the power to——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) It would be singular if she had.

The WITNESS. I can tell——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) Is there any pretense in this case that the court which appointed the guardian did approve of the alleged settlement made by the guardian?

The WITNESS. I think I can make that clear to your honors. The statute in this State in relation to the appointment of a guardian, a general guardian, requires that a petition must be filed and 10 days' notice given, and if the minor is more than 14 years of age he has the right to nominate his guardian. After a guardian is appointed, we have another section of the statute that provides for the settlement of claims of this kind, and no settlement can be made by the guardian until 10 days' further notice is given. The pleadings in this case show, and the facts show, that Mrs. Small made a settlement on one day and on the same day she was appointed guardian, and on the same day the court made an order authorizing her to settle it, without any notice, and while the boy was unconscious and knew nothing of the transaction. That was the facts in the case, as disclosed in the testimony, and is the actual facts in the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any controversy that under that state of facts such a settlement would be at least voidable?

The WITNESS. There is not any controversy, as I can understand, but what they acknowledge and the court ruled that it was absolutely void, and Judge Hanford so held in his first ruling, that it was absolutely void and not a legal defense.

Mr. MCCOY. Was this appointment as guardian the appointment of general guardian?

A. Yes; it was an appointment as a general guardian, the one I speak of.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then the same person afterwards brought the suit?—A. Yes.

Q. As guardian ad litem?—A. A year or so afterwards.

Q. Now I think I have got it straight.

The WITNESS. When this case was commenced, I knew of course that this question would be raised, and I thought it would look better to the court to have this same woman appointed this boy's guardian ad litem for the purpose of bringing this suit, and so I had her appointed in the State courts guardian ad litem of this boy, so that it would not look as though there was any collusion between the boy and the boy's mother, and for that reason I had her appointed, rather than some one else.

Mr. MCCOY. You say the settlement was for $120, and the receipt given was for $500?

A. The plaintiff's contention was that an agent of some liability company from Tacoma had come to the boy's mother, and represented to her that it was a custom of the Puget Mill Co. to pay their employees that were injured a certain sum of money whether they owed it to her or not, and under that state of facts, why, they gave her $120, and she signed a receipt for five hundred. The contention in the pleadings was that there was a full settlement for $500, under authority of the court.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any controversy as to the amount actually paid?

A. That question never came up, we never got that far. So far as the evidence showed when the case was dismissed, there was no controversy, of course, because the plaintiffs testimony was all there was before the court.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, Mr. Hughes.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Now, without confusing the record about any proofs, all the facts were set up in the pleadings about which the judicial action of Judge Whitson was based; isn't that true?—A. I think so.

Q. And they will speak for themselves, will they not?—A. They will.

Q. All the facts were set up in the pleadings upon which the final action of Judge Hanford was based; isn't that true—I mean after Judge Whitson's decision?—A. In the pleadings? Sure, the pleadings, yes.

Q. I say the action of Judge Hanford was based upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, and his decision was based entirely upon the facts set forth in the pleadings; isn't that true?—A. Well, I presume it was. I don't see how he could get outside of the pleadings to sustain the motion.

Q. You have also stated that the decision of the court was contrary to what had been previously decided by the supreme court of this State—in your direct examination, upon the question of——A. (Interrupting.) Contrary to what had been decided by the supreme court?

Q. By the supreme court of the State, on the question of the necessity of repaying what had been paid in settlement before a party could prosecute an action?—A. I don't remember of saying that; but that——

Q. (Interrupting.) I understood you to say so.—A. No; I say that the motion dismissing an action, taking it from the jury for the reason that there was a variance, was in plain violation of the statute of this State.

Q. But I understood you to speak of a decision being directly contrary to a decision of the supreme court.—A. I did speak of a decision where the supreme court had decided that the question of assumption of risk was not in fact in it.

Q. Did you not testify that the dismissal of the action upon motion on the pleadings or on the proofs because the party had not repaid the money was contrary to the decision of the supreme court—that is, where the defendant had paid the plaintiff in settlement, that the supreme court of this State had held that it was not necessary to repay the money?—A. Well, our supreme court has held that where——

Q. (Interrupting.) That was one of the points of criticism you made, was it not, against Judge Hanford's decision?—A. No; I don't think that the ruling of our supreme court had anything to do with my criticism of Judge Hanford's opinion, although our supreme court has held, and they still hold, and it is a rule in our State court, that where a fraudulent settlement is made it is not necessary to repay the money or to bring an action to set aside that fraudulent settlement before you can institute your action for damages.

Q. I understood you to so testify in chief.—A. Well, I don't think I did, but that is the fact, that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. It is immaterial. Go on, if you want to ask him any questions.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think it is immaterial, or I would not ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the materiality of it?

Mr. HUGHES. I will show you in just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have it before you proceed further on that line, for I do not see it.

Mr. HUGHES. I am going to show it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. HUGHES. Now, as a matter of fact, was not the decision of Judge Whitson and the final decision of Judge Hanford on that question based upon the different rule laid down by the circuit court of appeals for this circuit in the case of Hill v. Northern Pacific Railway Co. (113 Fed , 914), and in the case of Price v. Conners (146 Fed , 503), and subsequent cases, in which they hold that in the Federal court it is necessary for a party suing in that kind of a case, who has made a settlement, alleging afterwards that it was fraudulently procured, to return the money before he can prosecute the action, and in which decisions they are at variance with the decisions of the supreme court of this State Isn't that true?

A. I can explain that. Judge Whitson granted the motion, I think, for that reason, but those decisions had nothing whatever to do with Judge Hanford's opinion in ruling the first time that a settlement such as was set up in this case was no defense, nor it had nothing to do with his last ruling when he sustained Judge Whitson, because he believed then, and always believed, in my opinion, that a settlement made under the conditions in which this was made, by the boy's mother, without the boy's knowledge or consent, was not a defense in this court or any other court, and I don't think that these authorities sustain the point at all. I argued then and I argue now that they had no bearing upon the case whatever, and I don't think there is a decision in the United States that will uphold any such a ruling as that. If there is, I have never been able to find it.

Q. I did not mean to call for your opinion about the matter. I was asking simply for the question of fact, whether this rule as laid down by the circuit court of appeals was not applied by Judge Whitson in his decision and afterwards followed by Judge Hanford as controlling upon the trial court.—A. That was Judge Whitson's opinion, that this Hill case that you speak of and the Conner case was the rule laid down in this circuit.

Q. Now, as the final judgment in the case was based upon the pleadings, there would have been no necessity, in case of an appeal, for any transcript of the evidence or any statement of facts, there was none. An appeal to the circuit court of appeals would have been upon the simple record constituted by the pleadings, would it not?—A I presume it would; yes, sir.

Q. And necessarily an inexpensive appeal, would it not?—A. Not very inexpensive.

Q. So far as the record is concerned —A. I will state, in answer to that, that this boy was not only the support of a widowed mother who had several children but they were very poor and he could not see his way clear to appeal this case.

Q. Very well, I don't care to pursue that.—A. And he could not raise money to appeal it.

Q. But you did decide instead of appealing to bring another action in the superior court of the State for less than $2,000, did you not?—A Yes, sir.

Q. Your first action having been for $15,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q And you preferred to waive your claim for fifteen thousand and sue for less than two thousand so as to limit the jurisdiciton of the trial court to the superior court of the State?—A. Well, that was all that I could do under the circumstances. The boy——

Q. (Interrupting.) You could have appealed, couldn't you?—A. The boy hadn't the money to appeal, and the matter dragged along until the time for appeal had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. To what extent did the injury interfere with his earning capacity?

A. Why, I think that—well the—his injuries consisted of both broken legs and spine injured, so that he was deformed; one leg is 2 inches shorter than the other.

The CHAIRMAN. I am referring more particularly to his capacity to earn money to defray the expenses of an appeal.

A. Well, I think that he was incapacitated to a great extent. There are some classes of work that he can do, but of course he will never be as strong again as he was before the injury.

Mr. McCOY. Where does the circuit court of appeals sit?

A. San Francisco, I think.

Mr. McCOY. Is that the only place they hear appeals?

A. Well, I think that they do sit here sometimes now.

Mr. HUGHES. They sit here every September, do they not?

A. Well, I could not just say as to that. I don't think every September, I would not say that; but I think they do sit here now; but whether they did at that time or not I don't know.

Q. You don't testify that they do not sit here every September, do you?—A. How is that?

Q. You would not testify that they do not sit here every September?—A. Oh, I think that is a matter of record. I don't know.

Q. It is a matter of record right here.—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. What did they do; do you recollect whether they sat here at that time?

A. That is what I don't remember. I don't think they did. I think if I had appealed at that time I would have had to have gone to San Francisco. The next session of the court after that, I think, was at San Francisco.

The Chairman. How far is San Francisco from Seattle?

A. Well, I would judge it is about 2,000 miles; close to it; it would be just a guess, though, as to the distance.

Mr. Higgins. That is a fact that can be established by the record, too.

The Witness. Yes; it can be established by geography.

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Brown, at that time the circuit court of appeals sat at San Francisco, at Portland, and at Seattle, holding sessions in Seattle once in each year, in the month of September; isn't that the fact?

A. I don't know whether it is or not.

Q. You don't know?

The Chairman. If you state that it is a fact, we will be willing to accept it as a fact and pass on.

Mr. Hughes. It is.

The Chairman. Don't waste any more time on it.

The Witness. My understanding was that cases appealed at a certain time were tried at a certain place, if they were appealed at another time, then we waited until they came here, and I think that was the rule then. That is my recollection of it, that it was owing to the time that you took your appeal, where you had to try your case.

Mr. McCoy. You had to perfect your appeal at the next term of court, wherever it sat?

A. I think that was the custom then, but I am not positive.

Mr. Hughes. I hope the committee will not assume anything so contrary to the fact. In other words, if the case came on so that you could make your record before it would be heard here, you would either hear it, at your option, in San Francisco, or have it continued until they sat here at their regular term of Seattle; isn't that true?

A. Well, I would not say it was true; no.

Q. Did you make any effort to find out?

Mr. Higgins. Is it the fact, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes. Sir?

Mr. Higgins. Is that the fact?

Mr. Hughes. That is my understanding of the practice; always been the custom, in my own experience, if we desired to have a case heard in San Francisco, if it came up there six months prior to its coming up here that we could have it heard in San Francisco, or, if the parties desired, it would go over until the term here.

Mr. McCoy. But suppose the respondent should make a motion to dismiss the appeal at the next term of the circuit court, what would happen then? Would the court say "we will wait until the——"

Mr. HUGHES. (Interrupting). I think without any question, if, for instance, the appellee or the apellant, as the case might be, or the plaintiff in error, appealed the case and applied to the court to have it continued to this term, I understand they have always continued it to this term, unless some showing was made of emergency or reason why it should be sooner heard. That is my understanding of the uniform practice. Anything else would be an abuse of discretion by the court anyway.

Mr. PRESTON. Another thing, Mr. Hughes, I will state the fact: They do not dismiss an appeal; that can be heard on briefs; a man does not have to be there.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose of this whole line of examination? Is it to show that Mr. Brown did not appeal the case for the reason that he stated but for some other reason?

Mr. HUGHES. My purpose is this: In the first place I think it is rarely true that there is not one side or the other in every lawsuit in which the attorney is dissatisfied with the decision of the court. I am merely pointing out here the remedies that the party had, as bearing upon the strength of his conviction that the court was wrong and as to whether or not the committee, this tribunal, ought to take the opinion of a disappointed attorney or go into the record and determine for itself. I am merely trying to show that if he felt himself aggrieved he had a simple record made by the pleadings on which the final action of the court was based, which could have been reviewed inexpensively by the court of appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. What does that mean, how much money does "inexpensively" cover in that remark?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, a transcript of the pleadings in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. About how much?

Mr. HUGHES. Could not cost but a few dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. About how much would the whole, the record fees and attorneys, cost?

Mr. HUGHES. The record has to be transcribed. That would consist of the amended complaint, the answer, the reply, and the order of the court dismissing the action.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't care for that, Mr. Hughes. You can think those over. Just put it in a lump sum. About how much in your judgment would it have cost?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, outside of the briefs, it does not seem to me that it should have cost over $50 to have the record transcribed and printed in the circuit court of appeals, if it was limited to the pleadings in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. As you see it, would it have been necessary for the boy's attorney to go to any other point, Portland, or San Francisco, or any other place, in any view of the case?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't think it would have been if they desired to hear it here; they could have had it heard here at the September term.

Mr. MCCOY. They would have had to retain somebody at the next term—to appear in court at the next term of court to make the motion, wouldn't they?

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all; it could be done by written motion filed with the court. I will try to get at the rules later on.

The CHAIRMAN. We don't mind it except for the time it is taking, and the value of it. If that is the point you have in mind, you may just get to it directly.

Mr. HUGHES. To get at the matter correctly, under the statute which prescribes for the holding of court here, cases that are docketed between April 1 and September can be heard here under the statute. If a case arises earlier than that, for instance, if the decision should occur in October, after the court here, or later, they have six months in which to appeal. All they have to do is to delay the taking of an appeal for that length of time so as to have it docketed and come here of necessity, regardless of any application to the court at the next term. So that it is always possible to have any case appealed from this court heard in this city if counsel desire it, without any reference to the opposing counsel. Now, I don't care to pursue that any further.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you agree to this statement, Mr. Brown?

A. Well, that was never my understanding of it. I never understood it in that way at all at that time. I don't know what the rule is now. I don't appeal very many cases to the circuit court, in fact, I have never appealed one yet, but——

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you ever have a case——

A. (Continuing.) I have studied that.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did I understand you to say you have never had a case in the circuit court of appeals?

A. I have never appealed a case from the district court here to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you ever have a case in the circuit court of appeals?

A. No; but I read the rules over at that time, and my understanding of them was that I could not get a hearing here; and I estimated the cost that it would take to make up this appeal and I could not see how we could get up an appeal and go down to San Francisco short of $150 or $200. The printing of briefs and the record in the case, in the way that the United States courts require them to be gotten up, I could not see how an appeal could be taken short of $150, and the boy had no money, and of course under the laws of this State an attorney is not presumed to put up the money to carry on litigation—they disbar them for that—so I didn't appeal it; I didn't put up the money myself. The boy had not the money and we could not appeal and I could see no reason for appealing. If Judge Hanford had the same view of the law at the close of the case that he had before, I considered it was his duty to stay by the law regardless of Judge Whitson. There is no reason why Judge Whitson should come in here and reverse his case and then force the plaintiff in this case out of court because he had no money and could not appeal from it. If he believed it was the law, why, he should have made the same ruling he did at first and we could have had our trial here, there would have been no need of an appeal; and that is the only thing that I was aggrieved over.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not my purpose to draw out personal opinions of this witness at all, but merely to try to get certain facts of record categorically, so that this committee can get at the record and any other proof they may desire as to the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would do it in brief.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a little more, if counsel will only confine himself to answering my questions—I mean the witness.

The WITNESS. You wanted to know the reason why I didn't appeal, and I gave it to you.

Mr. HUGHES. I didn't ask you that.

Mr. HUGHES. After the dismissal of the action, the final dismissal in this court, you have already testified that you commenced an action in the State court for less than $2,000. To that complaint the defendant, through Mr. Dovell as its attorney, filed an answer setting up affirmative defenses, the same defenses that had been interposed in the Federal court; isn't that true, coupled with the action of the Federal court, pleading also the action of the Federal court?

A. No, I don't think that that is——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't care to go into that. He filed an answer with affirmative defenses?—A. Yes, he did that.

Q. The answer will speak for itself. To that answer you filed a demurrer on April 30, 1909, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir. I don't know the date. I presume I did, though.

Q. And that demurrer you have never sought to bring on for hearing; isn't that true?—A. That is true; yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The WITNESS. Nor the defendant has never sought to bring it on for hearing. And I will explain further, in relation to that, that the boy for the last year has been on board a steamship and I have seen him but once, and for the last six months I have been trying to get hold of him and I can't locate him, neither can I locate his mother. I have written her several letters and my letters are returned, so I don't know where the boy is just at this present time; but he is on board some ship somewhere down about San Francisco or Panama, but he has not been in the city, and so I did not want to bring the matter up until I could hear from him or until he returned to the city.

Mr. HUGHES. I don't know that it is necessary to ask the witness, the committee will doubtless understand that question, but you don't mean to convey the impression to this committee that your client was necessary for the purpose of arguing a demurrer in the superior court and settling the issues in the case?

A. I didn't know how soon it would be necessary to have him. I wanted him here when the matter came up.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I think we can see through that. The chairman at least could see a reason to support Mr. Brown's conduct, in this, that if the matter was disposed of and the issues made up, the case would then be ready to set, and it might be forced to a setting when the witnesses and plaintiff are not here. I do not think he is to blame for letting it drift under the circumstances he speaks of.

If that is all now, we will permit Mr. Brown to stand aside.

WALTER R. THAYER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Tell your name, please.—A. Walter R. Thayer.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long?—A. Ten years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manager of the William J. Burns National Detective Agency.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Managing the office.

Q. I believe it is the custom for those in your employ to make written reports to you of the work they do?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know one A. A. Nordskog?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a Mr. Oleson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whose first name I have not——A. (Interrupting.) Alfred Oleson.

Q. And Mr. Kohler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. His first name is what?—A. Antone Kohler.

Q. Have you any rule as to what you do with written reports made by those in your employ, and by these persons particularly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that rule?—A. They turn the reports in to me and I generally examine them and turn them over to the stenographer and she typewrites them.

Q. Were any of the three persons I have named employed under your supervision to take note of the conduct or action of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If they made any reports to you in writing concerning that gentleman, you may state.—A. They did.

Q. If those notes were transcribed by anyone, who did the transcribing?—A. Well, after the stenographer typewrote them, the reports, they were turned back to me and I destroyed them.

Q. You did not catch my question. I did not ask you what became of the originals; I asked you if the originals were copied by anyone who did the copying?—A. Why, my stenographer copied them.

Q. What was her name?—A. Her name at that time was Miss Genevieve Farren.

Q. What is her name now?—A. Her name is Mrs. Walter Thayer at the present time.

Q. She is now your wife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of the original notes?—A. I destroyed them,which is the custom of the office.

Q. What is your last answer?—A. Which is the custom of the office.

Q. We don't care anything about the custom beyond these notes. Have you yourself any knowledge as to the accuracy of the transcript made?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think that is all I wish to ask you. Any further questions from Mr. Thayer?

Mr. DORR. Are there any further questions from the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask?

Mr. DORR. I wish to ask a few.

The CHAIRMAN. Do so.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Thayer, you spoke of Mr. Oleson and two other men. Who were the other two?—A. A. A. Nordskog and Antone Kohler.

Q. Antone——A. Kohler.

Q. How long were they directed to trail Judge Hanford?—A. For a period of about two months, from August 26 to October 28, I think, a period of about two months.

Q. In 1911?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was immediately following the Dreamland Rink meeting, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the client who employed you?—A. John Perry.

Q. John Perry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. John H. Perry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other interested party in this employment except Mr. Perry?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. DORR. I want to find out, if the chairman please, who instigated this.

The CHAIRMAN. But what has that to do with the committee's work?

Mr. DORR. Beg pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. What has that to do with the committee's work?

Mr. DORR. Well, I can see, I think, that it might be very——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) What is the materiality of it, if answered?

Mr. DORR. It might be very material information for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Point out how.

Mr. DORR. If it could be traced back to this Dreamland Rink meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, how would it be material then?

Mr. DORR. I think it would show malice on the part of the people who started this inquisition; it might tend at least in that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I think that is pretty remote. If any of those persons are on the stand, you might ask them about it. But doesn't that seem a bit remote?

Mr. HIGGINS. These persons do not know by whom they were employed, because I asked Mr. Oleson, when he was on the stand the other day, and he stated he knew nothing about for whom he was working. It seems to me that the only way that that matter could be developed for the record would be through the testimony of the manager for the agency who made the contract for the employment of these men.

The CHAIRMAN. But how does that become material to any examination of this witness or to the examination of the detectives. Is it proposed to show that they have ill will or malice or prejudice toward Judge Hanford?

Mr. DORR. It has already appeared, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. John H. Perry, and certain other men, were arrested by the United States authorities for participation in this Dreamland Rink demonstration, and it appears now by this witness that the employment was entered into on the very next day I think, the very next day following the meeting at the Dreamland Rink, and that Mr. Perry, one of the participants in that meeting who was arrested, was the employer of the agency. Now, it does seem to me, and it appeals to me with a great deal of force, that it may develop and quite naturally will be developed that was a motive back of the employment which prompted Mr. Perry and his associates to go into this detective agency for the purpose of trailing Judge Hanford, and I think that it is only right and fair and just, if we are going to get at the truth of this matter, that we may investigate the motive that is back of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me see how I understand it and see whether it agrees with your understanding. This witness was put on merely as a connecting link, because of a destruction of certain writings, and for no other purpose. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. DORR. Well, I——

The CHAIRMAN. Can you imagine any theory, even of cross-examination, that would make it competent to ask the questions you were asking, under those circumstances?

Mr. DORR. I think so. He was asked whether he was employed to do this work.

The CHAIRMAN. He was asked that by you, I believe, wasn't he?

Mr. DORR. Well, he was qualified by the chairman as the manager of the detective agency——

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DORR. (Continuing.) Having charge of this work.

The CHAIRMAN. That was all.

Mr. DORR. Now, I think that would open up to the cross-examiner——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) I don't agree with you at all. Now, the next step——

Mr. DORR. (Continuing.) And why?

The CHAIRMAN. Because I think you are——

Mr. DORR. I said, "Who employed him and why."

The CHAIRMAN. The next step in the proceeding is this: He was introduced as an introductory witness who leads to his wife. She will, if she can, if it be the fact, testify as to the accuracy of the transcript from the destroyed papers. That would pave the way to the introduction of the fellows who did the observing. The material question is as to the truth of the facts they testified to. Now, how could the thing you speak of, the prejudice of Mr. Perry or anybody else, growing out of the Dreamland meeting—how can you connect that with the truth of the testimony of these men?

Mr. DORR. For the reason that you, Mr. Chairman, and every lawyer knows, that truth is tested very largely by motive that has prompted an action.

The CHAIRMAN. What motive will you show on the part of this witness? The motive always goes to the witness, doesn't it?

Mr. DORR. I did not——

The CHAIRMAN. Are these men you are asking about witnesses?

Mr. DORR. I didn't expect to show any motive, by this witness, on the part of the employer.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you see my point.

Mr. DORR. I expect to find out who the employer was.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think at this time it is not in order, as far as the chair is concerned.

Mr. HIGGINS. What is the question, Mr. Reporter, that was objected to?

(Last question read by the reporter.)

The CHAIRMAN. The chair thinks the question is not a proper one at this time.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Now, Mr. Thayer, you say this employment extended about two months?—A. I think so.

Q. From the 26th of August, 1911, until some time in October?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. October 28, or thereabouts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often did you receive the reports from your three operatives?—A. Every day.

Q. Every day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those three men were employed to shadow Judge Hanford at all of the time, as I understand it?—A. Well, we changed about with those men.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Sometimes one would shadow for several days at a time, and then we changed and put another one on.

Q. But during those two months it was your purpose to have some one or more of your operatives trailing Judge Handford and shadowing him constantly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was done, as you know?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it covered a period of two months, as you have stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any other men engaged in this work, except the three that you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the others?—A. A. C. Staples.

Q. Any one else?—A. There is another man shadowed him for a couple of days—George H. Schober.

Q. That is five that you have named now. Were there any others?—A. I believe that is all.

Q. Were there any women employees or operatives?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just these five men?—A. I think so.

Q. Was that all within the two months time that you mentioned?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. And have you the reports for all of those days from all of these men?—A. Why, not in my possession now; no.

Q. Where are they now?—A. The committee has them.

Q. Well, does the committee have the entire number of reports, full reports?—A. Yes, sir; all that I have.

Q. From all two months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From all the men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be at least one report for every day for the entire two months?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Are all the men who were assigned to this particular work in Seattle now?—A. All except A. C. Staples.

Q. Is he out of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is he?—A. Spokane.

Q. Does he live there?—A. No, sir; he is on some work for the agency.

Q. How soon will he be back?—A. Oh, in two or three months.

Mr. Dorr. May I ask a question that was brought up by Mr. McCoy?

The Chairman. Yes.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. He could come back in one night's travel, could he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Witness excused.

Mrs. Walter Thayer, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. What is your name, please?—A. Mrs. Walter Thayer.

Q. Before your marriage to Mr. Thayer, you were working in the office with him as a stenographer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the course of your employment there did you transcribe some notes made by Mr. Oleson, Mr. Nordskog, Mr. Kohler, and Mr. Staples?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Concerning Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the doing of that work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you say as to whether the transcribed copy was a correct transcript of the original notes handed you?—A. Well, I am positive it was correct, because I copied them every day as they were sent in to me.

Q. What pains did you take to find out whether they were correct or not—how did you check up, in other words?—A. Well, they were handed to me every day by the manager. I presume they were correct. Very often the boys gave them to me, handed them to me, and I handed them to the manager.

Q. What was your manner of making the transcript; did you have the copy before you and follow it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your work was done with the typewriter, of course?—A. Yes. sir.

Q. What experience had you at that time in typewriting?—A. Why, I had been working for them since the 26th of May, 1910.

Q. Had you any experience in the work of copying or typewriting before that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take a course in typewriting?—A. At the Seattle Commercial College.

Q. Are you a graduate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, do you say now that those notes which were given you were correctly copied?—A. Well, they were copied just as the men gave them to me.

Q. That is what I mean.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that your work in copying them from the notes handed you to the typewriter work was accurately done?—A. I intended it to be so.

Q. Well, what do you think about it; do you think it was?—A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. That is all I wish to ask.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. These reports, Mrs. Thayer, you received sometimes from Mr. Thayer?—A. Very often; mostly from him.

Q. And at some other times from the men who were at work on this case?—A. If Mr. Thayer was not in the office, I usually took the reports when they brought them.

Q. Were they always made on the same kind of paper, uniform paper?—A. You mean written by the operators originally?

Q. Yes.—A. Usually.

Q. What is the practice, what is the fact, so far as this case goes—that the same form was used on the daily reports?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And written by the operatives?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How, with pencil or ink?—A. With pencil; sometimes with ink.

Q. What was said when the operative turned the report in to you, Mrs. Thayer, by him?—A. "This is my report for yesterday," or "Here is my report," or something like that.

Q. Did he tell you the case?—A. No, sir; it was written under the title of the case, the number. We go by numbers always.

Q. Did he write it?—A. Yes, sir; he wrote it.

Q. Did he write the number or was that furnished you by the office?—A. Why, that was furnished by the office when he started the case—when he started to work.

Q. Did you make a comparison after you had typewritten the reports?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long since you have seen the typewritten report that you made?—A. Oh, my, I haven't seen them hardly since I wrote them.

Q. After writing them you turned them in to Mr. Thayer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You haven't seen them since?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not change in the reports the phraseology at all?—A. Well, in some little instances where they used very very bad grammar I did, but as a rule I copied it just as they wrote it.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. You would change it in some instances where you did not approve of the language; is that the way I understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. The grammar, she said.

Mr. DORR. When you did not approve of the grammar used, you changed it in some instances?

A. In some instances.

Q. How frequently was that, Mrs. Thayer?—A. Not very often. The men that we had on the cases were—they wrote very nice reports and I didn't have to change them very much.

Q. Would these men write the reports up in the office after they returned, or would they have them written up when they came to the office to deliver them?—A. Why, I don't know where they wrote them.

Q. Did they write them in your presence——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) In any instance?—beg pardon.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they keep their memoranda in notebooks or on separate sheets of paper?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, when they were turned in to you would they be turned in in the form of separate sheets of paper or in notebook?—A. Sheets of paper; separate sheets of paper.

Q. On blank forms printed by the office?—A. No, sir; on ordinary paper.

Q. Just on any kind of paper, or was there any uniformity to it?—A. Well, they have paper in the office, in the operatives' room, that they usually use.

Q. Is it printed paper or just blank paper?—A. Blank paper.

Q. And was it this kind of paper that they turned in to you with the notes upon it?—A. Yes, sir; usually.

Q. Usually. Now, can you recall any specific instances where you changed the grammar of any of these reports?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know how many times that occurred?—A. No, sir. I never changed the thought, understand, of the report; it was just the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Never changed the thought, but you would change the language to improve it?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Did you identify these typewritten reports in any way after you wrote them out, by an initial or signature or any mark of identification?—A. No.

Q. You could not tell, by looking at them now, whether you wrote them or not, could you?—A. Why, yes; I could.

Q. How could you do that?—A. Well, they are written on the kind of paper we use at the office, and I presume I could tell the work that I have typewritten.

Q. Can you tell your typewriting from any others——A. (Interrupting.) I think so.

Q. Stenographer's work; are you sure about that—on the same machine and with or on the same paper [papers handed to witness by Mr. McCoy]?—A. I know that is my work.

Q. You recognize it, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What you are looking at is a part of your work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have not seen those papers since last fall, 1911?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where they have been kept?—A. They have been in Mr. Thayer's hands. I have not inquired as to where they were.

Q. How many copies did you make, Mrs. Thayer, altogether, of each report?—A. An original and a carbon copy.

Q. Just two.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of this witness? You may stand aside, Mrs. Thayer.

Witness excused.

A. A. NORDSKOG, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Your full name is what?

A. A. A. Nordskog.

Q. And where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Six years.

Q. What is your present employment?—A. At present I am developing some patents I have worked on off and on the last three years.

Q. Were you ever in the employment of the Burns Detective Agency?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you now?—A. No.

Q. When did you leave the employment?—A. Oh, some weeks ago.

Q. How did you get your instructions for your work while you were in their employment?—A. Do you mean regarding this particular case?

Q. Or any case. Yes; this particular case at least.—A. I was requested by Manager Thayer to shadow the judge.

Q. What judge?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. When was that?—A. I believe it was Sunday afternoon the first time that I was notified, and I commenced work on Monday morning. I believe that was August 27 or 28 last.

Q. What instructions were given you at that time?—A. I was told to shadow Judge Hanford, to make notes as to where he went, as to his conduct, as to his physical condition, and so forth, each day.

Q. And you did enter upon that undertaking, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long a period of time were you on that assignment?—A. The first time I was two days, I believe, and then being called on another proposition I dropped it, and later I was put on, I believe, after a lapse of a week or two; I don't remember exactly, and I worked then, I believe, almost 30 days.

Q. Continuously?—A. Continuously, and then I was off again for a period of a few days and put on again for, I think, four days the last time.

Q. That was the last that you had to do with that particular matter?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you during that assignment, while you were active on it, keep any memoranda of what happened?—A. Yes.

Q. When would you make such memoranda—when did you make it?—A. I made notes as I went along, as a matter of convenience, so as not to become muddled as to the facts. A person runs for a day and tries to remember dates and places; he sometimes becomes confused, and I would most generally jot down the notes as I went along.

Q. During the day?—A. During the day.

Q. What did you do with the notes after they were made?—A. I would use them for reference when I was making up my daily report.

Q. And did you make your daily report after you had finished each day?—A. Sometimes I would make it at night, and generally I would wait until the next day.

Q. Why was that?—A. By reason of the fact that it was so late at night sometimes that I didn't have time—tired and worn out from the day's work—I would lay it over until the next day.

Q. And you jotted down these memoranda and from those you made up a continuous story of what you had done?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?—A. That is correct.

Q. And what did you do with that?—A. I submitted it to the headquarters, to Mr. Thayer, and if he was not in I would give it to the lady who is now Mrs. Thayer.

Q. When you say submitted it you mean handed it over?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the memoranda that you made correctly made so as to correctly state the incidents that you observed?—A. Yes.

Q. And was the narrative story which you made up—stories which you made up from these memoramda made up so as to correctly state the incidents?—A. They were.

Q. After handing in these narratives to Mr. Thayer, or to the lady who is now Mrs. Thayer, did you in any instance see them again?—A. I don't believe I ever had occasion to refer to or see the typewritten sheets after they had been written.

Q. Well, did you have any occasion to or did you see any of your own work that was handed in and after it was handed in?—A. No.

Mr. Higgins. That is to say, after the typewritten copies were made of your report you did not see it?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. You say also that you did not at any time see the typewritten copies of your report?

A. I don't remember of ever having seen any of the typewritten reports after I submitted my reports to the office.

Q. Have you seen them at any time since they were typewritten—recently?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you last see them?—A. Last evening.

Q. Are these papers here on the desk the typewritten copies [handing papers to witness]?—A. They seem to be the same reports that I saw, without going into details. I have not got time to read it over.

Q. Well, now, state to the committee, as nearly as you can recollect, everything that you observed about Judge Hanford's conduct from the time that you were assigned to his case to the close. Make your statement of facts as nearly chronologically as you can, and whatever you remember, and as complete as you can.—A. During the investigation the things that were the easiest to remember, and by reference to the reports last night, I noticed several instances—in many instances—where the judge, after leaving the bench or after leaving his office in the Federal building, that he went, as a rule, almost invariable rule, to the Rainier Club on Fourth Avenue and would remain there, say, from 5.15 p. m. until 6 or 6.10 p. m., along in there somewhere, after which he would go down town and generally go down Marian Street to Second Avenue, and in passing the Saratoga bar he would enter the Saratoga bar, where he would take a usual drink. As nearly as I remember now, he would have a sherry and egg in that place, and he would walk down the street, and on many occasions he entered the Sutherland bar in the Alaska Building, where he would have another drink, and, as a rule, he would go across the street to the Butler Hotel, where he would enter the bar and have the third drink, which completed his round-up of the bars for that evening, as a rule. I don't remember in any instance where I have seen him take more than three drinks in three different bars; that is, during the same hour.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, more than that during the same day?

A. Yes; I have seen him—perhaps would lead up to that later—but in answer to your question I would state that on several occasions he would, so to speak, go the rounds during the dinner hour, between 6 and 7 p. m., and——

Mr. HIGGINS. What do you mean when you say "go the rounds"?

A. Well, with reference to these three bars that he would enter——

Mr. HIGGINS. Would that be three drinks then?

A. Yes.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. That is, he would take one drink at each bar?—A. Yes.

Q. So when you speak of his going the rounds you mean that he took three drinks, in the Sutherland bar and the——A. (Interrupting.) Saratoga and the Butler.

Q. And Butler. Just in that connection, so that we may understand your testimony—and there are others besides ourselves that have got to read this record—won't you state to the committee as to the character of Second Street?—A. Second Avenue, you mean.

Q. Second Avenue. Is it or not one of the prominent thoroughfares of the city?—A. It is.

Q. Now, as to the Butler bar and the Sutherland bar, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. And the other one that you mentioned?—A. The Saratoga.

Q. Are those reputable saloons?—A. So to speak, they are. They are clean bars.

Q. Yes.—A. Considered, I presume, first-class bars.

Q. And on what streets are they located?—A. They are all on Second Avenue.

Q. And Second Avenue is one of the most prominent business streets of the city, isn't it?—A. It is.

Q. And a brightly lighted street?—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. You were asked about whether or not Judge Hanford confined his drinks to this hour or whether to some other time of day. Go ahead with that.—A. On—I won't say several occasions, but I remember at least once, and I think twice, perhaps more than that, but I will not say definitely, because it is not clear in my mind, but I know that after having gone to the Saratoga and the Sutherland and Butler bars during the evening hour between 6 and 7, that he has gone to perhaps three bars, not the same ones, after 11 p. m. or after midnight, just before going home.

Q. Where were those bars?—A. One is the Bronson bar, at Second and Marian, and the Rathskeller bar.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is on Second Avenue and Pike, I believe.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that a prominent bar in the city?

A. Perhaps one of the most prominent.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is it a reputable saloon?

A. Supposedly.

Mr. McCOY. Well, how about Bronson, as long as you are going into that. Is that the same sort?

A. Well, the Bronson is not perhaps—it is not as popular a place as the Rathskeller. The Rathskeller is popular by name and has been for a long time, but the Bronson bar is not in the same class with the Rathskeller, by far. It is an ordinary bar. It is a nice clean place, by the way.

Q. Where is the other one, now?—A. The Savoy bar, which is located in the Savoy Hotel on Second Avenue, and the Mission bar.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like to know the character of the Savoy as well.

A. The Savoy bar is about in the same class as the Rathskeller bar, and the Mission bar at Second and Union—near Union Street—is a reputable place, so to speak, and is a clean place, although not in the class with the Savoy or the Rathskeller bars.

Mr. McCOY. Go on and continue your story from the point where you were interrupted, about whether or not the three drinks in the afternoon were all.

A. I believe I answered that.

Q. You answered that, but you were telling your observations in a general way when that question came in. Now, just pick up what you have to say from there and go ahead.—A. After having the three drinks that I mention, namely, in the Saratoga, the Sutherland and the Butler bars, as a rule he would go across Second Avenue from the Butler Hotel, diagonally across from Second and James on the south side of James Street, where he would wait for a Broadway car, and after entering the car, he would walk generally to the front end, nearly to the front end of the car, take a seat—a side seat—and I remember very distinctly of having seen him when it was very hard for him to keep awake, his head would drop from one side, then to the other, sometimes dropping right forward, and sometimes by the sudden jerk of the car he would suddenly wake, turn around and look out of the car window to see just where he was and see how far he had gone. That would occur perhaps a dozen times or more during his ride homeward, that is, from Second and James to the point where he gets off the car up on Tenth Avenue North. At times he was much worse than others. I have seen him when he has——

Mr. HIGGINS. That don't convey to my mind any information at all, Mr. Witness. I wish you would state just the condition that you saw him in, without indulging in comparison.

Mr. MCCOY. I suggest that the witness, Mr. Chairman, be allowed to go on.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, I assume that the testimony should be intelligent.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be more orderly if one of the committee would interrogate and then the other.

Mr. HIGGINS. It would save time, I think, if we should get the witness's story in the best form as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman's experience is that the interruptions always waste time. Proceed.

Mr. HIGGINS. I want you to be specific, Mr. Witness, and not general in your statements. That is my criticism of your testimony.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you any way in your mind in which you can measure any of these things by any degree of mathematical accuracy, so that you can first state a standard and then say what "more" means?

A. In the first place, I will say that I have seen him when I thought he was sober, and from that standpoint all the other occasions must be measured.

Q. Taking that as a standard, is there any way in which we can say, to a degree of mathematical accuracy, all the stages from that to any condition you have ever seen the judge in, or must your description be general?—A. I can say that I have seen him when, as I have stated before, in the sleepy, nodding condition; I have seen him, then, when his eyes seemed to be bloodshot—they were bloodshot—and it seemed to be hard for him to make out just exactly where he was; that in walking on the streets at times when I noticed he would be looking around wondering where he was. One night—I believe that he walked from the Rainier Club—the night I have reference to, he walked up as far as the library, on Fourth Avenue, and he started to go across the street toward the Lincoln Hotel. He suddenly changed his mind and went back to the library side of the street; he walked north to Union Street and he stopped at the corner, oh, right up there by the gas company's office on Fourth Avenue, up near Union Street; stopped and looked around as though wondering or meditating as to where to go. He then went to the corner of Union Street and Fourth Avenue and went in on Union, on the south side of Union Street, all this time walking very slowly.

There was evidence of an overload that night, and that I am sure of; I don't have to guess at that; and when he got over to the corner of Second Avenue—I believe that is where the Wilhard Hotel is—he stopped and leaned up against the building. I didn't know but what he was going to wait for a street car at that point, although I knew that there were no cars passing that corner that would convey him to his home unless he would transfer, and that he could avoid by walking a couple of blocks more. In a minute or two he went to Eighth Avenue, and he stopped again at Eighth Avenue and stood there for several minutes, and I thought again that he was waiting for a car to take him home. This was late at night, I should say between 12.30 and 1 o'clock at night, and, while I think of it, I believe that is the same day that the President—President Taft—spoke at the armory. Referring to the date, I believe it was the 9th of October. I have that fixed in my mind because of one thing that has been fresh in my mind ever since that occurred on that day. And it was raining that night; it was not raining hard, but it was a drizzling rain, such as we have here. And then he walked from Eighth Avenue and Union Street, he walked up—oh, there is a street that is cut through there continuing from Union Street and runs across to Pike Street, meeting Pike Street, I believe, at Terry Avenue. And he continued up Pike Street, walking very slowly all the time. It looked at times as though he was hardly able to walk along; it seemed very difficult for him to proceed. He went to Harvard Avenue on Pike Street and turned off on Harvard, remaining on the west side of the street, and as he approached—I believe it was Thomas Street, I believe it was between John and Thomas Streets that he stopped on the sidewalk and we approached nearer; we didn't know just exactly how fast he was walking at the time, it was quite dark just in that section, and by getting a little bit nearer to him we noticed that he had stopped to respond to a very urgent call, seemingly.

Q. State it plainly.—A. Well, he stopped to urinate on the sidewalk. That was right near Thomas Street, on Harvard Avenue, about 30 feet from the crossing.

The CHAIRMAN. You say he stopped to do that; did he do that?—A. I know he did that, and another party that was with me also knows it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Were there other people near by at the time?

A. The man with whom I was walking was there.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is Mr. Staples?

A. Mr. Staples.

Mr. HIGGINS. Anybody else?

A. No one that I know of. And after starting along again he proceeded up Harvard Avenue until he got to Roy Street, I believe, and then he went to Tenth Avenue, and continued on to his home. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning before he got home. He had walked very slowly and it was raining all the time.

Mr. MCCOY. And where was it you first saw him that evening?

A. I saw him down town, I saw him—I believe that evening he went to the Saratoga, to Sutherland's and to the Butler bar.

Q. And where did he start from when you saw him that evening?—A. From the Federal building, I believe, as usual.

Q. This building we are in now?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. For my information, is the time referred to late evening or the early evening? He has mentioned two occasions I think.

Mr. MCCOY. I mean now referring to the time when he started on this walk that you have been describing, where did he start from, this Federal building or where?

A. No; he left the Rainier Club.

Q. Well, did you see Judge Hanford go out of this building, this Federal building that evening?—A. I don't believe I saw him leave this building that evening. I remember that he left the club that evening and that I went home with him.

Q. What time was it when he left the club?—A. I believe it was after 12 o'clock at night.

Q. That it was from there that he went to these saloons that you have told about and then continued this walk that you have just been describing; is that right?—A. No. The evening that he walked home in the rain, that I have just told about, he did not go to the saloons at all from the club.

Q. Where did he start from, as far as you observed that night, when he took this long walk?—A. That is just what I told you, that he left the club, he went from the club directly home.

Q. Let me see if I get it right. You first began to tell us that Judge Hanford made it a practice to go to these three or four saloons. Then you were asked whether that, as I remember it, happened commonly between the hours of 5 and 7, or whenever it was; then you were further asked, if I remember it, whether in addition to those times there was any day when he went to other saloons, and he said, "Yes; there was one time when he did go to three or four more." Is that right?—A. That is correct.

Q. Now, that is not the night, however, which you have just been describing when this long walk took place in the rain?—A. No; it is not.

Q. That was another night?—A. That is another night.

Q. Well, now, on the night when he went to the saloons late, as you have just testified where did he come from when you saw him late in the evening?—A. Well, that of course would lead him back to his home originally. We would take him home from the office in the evening and then take him from the home down town——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, now, of course, when you say "take him" you mean follow him?—A. That is what we—we generally use that term "take him."

Q. Take it on this particular night when he, as you testified, went to the saloons in the afternoon and then went again late in the evening, did you that night follow him home after 6 o'clock or so?—A. Yes.

Q. And then when he came out of the house that evening where did he go?—A. On the occasion just referred to he went from his home down Tenth Avenue North and then went over—well, he continued down Tenth Avenue North. It curves at Roy Street, and after reaching Harrison Street he turned east on Harrison Street and entered a residence, an apartment house, the door number of which I have learned is 1008.

Q. Now, what evening was that——A. He did that——

Q. (Continuing.) Of these two that you have been telling about?—A. Well, he did that on this special night that I have reference to, October 9, I believe it was—the record will show—I think it was October 9; that was the night that Taft spoke at the armory.

Mr. HUGHES. When you speak of leaving the house and coming down, is that after the dinner in the evening, after his dinner hour in the evening?

Mr. MCCOY. That is what I was trying to find out. I don't know.

Mr. HUGHES. I didn't know but I might have missed it, that is all.

Mr. MCCOY. What I was trying to ask you was this: You have been speaking about two nights more particularly. One was the night that President Taft was here and another night, or rather, another day when Judge Hanford you say went in the afternoon in some saloons and then later in the evening went to the saloons. Those were two distinct days, as I understand it, weren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on the day when he went twice to these three or four different saloons, once there in the evening and once later in the evening, did you follow him home at dinner time?—A. I did.

Q. Where did he go to when he came out of the house after the dinner hour?—A. The one night, I believe, that I have fresh in my mind, he left home about 9 o'clock.

Q. Is that this same night that I am asking you about?—A. Yes, it is the one you are trying to get at, I believe.

Q. Was that the night when he went first in the afternoon to these saloons, then he went home, and then he came out? Now, you are talking about that same night when he went to the other saloons; is that it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, that is what I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say to the witness that on any of these points as to dates or to facts you have a right to refresh your recollection by reference to the minutes you made at the time.

A. Yes, of course that would be quite difficult now, running over all those reports; there is quite a number of them there.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I merely would inform you about it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is not now, the 9th of October, but another time?

Mr. MCCOY. This is another time, I believe.

A. This was not the 9th of October. And on this particular occasion I believe it was just 9 o'clock when he left his residence, and he was wearing a bright red flower, I don't remember whether it was a carnation or whether it was a rose, and he went to his office—I noticed the lights were turned on in his offices in the Federal building immediately after he entered the Federal building—and remained there until about 11 o'clock, I believe, it was about an hour and a half. From the Federal building he went down Fourth Avenue to the club—the Rainier Club—and left the Rainier Club, I think, about 12.45 a. m., after midnight; he went to the Bronson bar first, Second Avenue and Marian Street, and the next, I think, was the Rathskeller bar and had another drink, and then to the Savoy bar. I believe that was three that he went to that evening that I remember. And I think he boarded a car that evening, or that night, I would not say for certain. There was two or three times that he walked home, walked all the way from down town out to his home, but I believe that night that I have reference to that he boarded a car. On another occasion when he left the Mission bar just before 1 a. m., after having been to two others, that he walked home after having been to the Mission bar.

The committee here took a short recess.

Mr. McCoy. Give us any other instances which you recollect as to Judge Hanford's conduct in any respect that you noticed.

A. On one night—I don't remember now whether he just came from the Rainier Club and walked homeward or whether he had gone to any bars just previous—but I remember very distinctly one night when he walked up as far as Broadway and Pine Street, where he boarded a northbound car; that was also late at night, I believe it was about 1 o'clock a. m. And on this night he was seemingly intoxicated, because of the fact that he could hardly sit up in his seat. I have seen him when he could hardly hold his head up and when he seemingly could not hold his head up, but on this occasion he fell forward and had to hold himself constantly with his hand on the bar of the seat, and I believe that he fell asleep part of the way—it was not very far to his home—but in getting off the car that night he was much more unsteady than I had seen him on previous occasions because generally when he would drop his head and his eyes were bulged and seemingly worn out and tired and under the influence of liquor, he generally could walk pretty straight, stand up pretty well, but on this occasion he had a great deal of difficulty in maintaining his balance.

And there is one more occasion, I think it was on a Saturday night; in fact, I am quite certain it was, when he did not go home to dinner. He left his office, I believe, about 5 o'clock—5 30—and went to the Rainier Club and remained at the Rainier Club until almost 11 o'clock p. m. When he left the club he walked to Madison Street, boarded a Madison cable car, got off at Broadway, and walked northward, and that night I believe that he had a great deal more than what was good for him, because when he walked he tried to walk very rapidly and seemlingly for the one purpose of keeping his balance I have seen people in the same state many a time; when they want to keep their balance they usually get a quick stride and try to walk rapidly; and many times during the walk between Broadway or between Madison Street and Harrison he would sidestep quickly, set one foot out as though trying to catch himself. So I feel quite certain that on that night he was pretty well intoxicated He walked up to Harrison Street and then he went east on Harrison to the residence that I have mentioned before—1008 East Harrison Street. He entered there about 11.15 p m.

Q. Was that the last you saw him that night?—A. No; I remained there until he left that place. I think it was about 1 50, or about 2 a. m , along in there somewhere; it was near to 2 o'clock, it was not far off, about 2 o'clock a m. that he left this residence, and then he walked up Tenth Avenue to his home, arriving at his home some time after 2 o'clock.

Q Do you think of any other occasion on which you noticed his conduct when he seemed to be under the influence of liquor?—A. There was one night I remember when he left his home about—that is, before going home he had gone to the Saratoga, Sutherland, and

Butler bars, I believe, which was quite his custom at the evening hour; and going home that evening he was in the condition that I have described.

Q. What condition?—A. Nodding his head, going to sleep, waking up every once in awhile to find out where he was, looking out of the car window to determine where he was; and on leaving his home that night—I think it was about 8 o'clock, or a little after—I am not sure—he boarded a car up in that vicinity, within a block or two south of his residence. As a rule he would walk south from his residence while he was waiting for a car, and going down on the car that night he was worse on going down than he was when he went home in the evening.

Q. Worse in what respect?—A. That is, that he had a great deal more difficulty in keeping awake than he did on going homeward. I remember very distinctly when he passed the Alhambra Theater he was what I should—thought at the time that he was sound asleep; a sudden jerk of the car in stopping, the grinding of the wheels seemed to arouse him, and in waking up he sort of licked his chops, so to speak, rubbed his whiskers, and looked over his glasses out of the window and looked at the Alhambra Theater and kind of stared at it for a few seconds I didn't know at the time why he paid so much attention to the theater, but I learned later that he was to speak there that evening. But he did not get off there; he went over to the Federal Building and went up to his office, and after being in his office for about half an hour I should say, he went over to the Alhambra Theater and went on the stage. The medical association—they had a meeting there that evening. There were quite a number of prominent citizens on the stage, and Judge Hanford was one of the speakers booked to speak there that evening, so he took his position on the stage. After he got on the stage I was not in a position to note his condition or see what he was doing, because of my position in the theater. He was sitting at the left wing on the stage and I was at the left side of the opera house, so that I could not see him.

Q. Where is that theater?—A. Located at Westlake Avenue and Pine Street.

Q. About how far from this Federal Building?—A. Oh, about three blocks or more.

Q. Well, finish what you have to say about that particular occasion.—A. I saw him when he was introduced by the speaker of the evening, by the chairman, and he gave a short speech. I think that it was—I don't remember just the substance of what he said, but it was supposedly in keeping with the subject of the evening, which was on medical matters—hygiene; and I have heard Judge Hanford speak on a previous occasion, and I was quite inclined to believe then that that was not his best and was far from his best; that is, although what he said might have had some weight, but the way it was said it did not appeal to me as being presented in the manner Judge Hanford was accustomed to rendering; in fact, I know it was not.

Q. Well, why, what was the distinction; what was the difference?—A. Well, his hesitation as he went along, his sentences seemed to be broken, disconnected. It perhaps would not be so noticeable to anyone who was not looking for something like that, but knowing as I did that he was in that condition I would notice it perhaps much more than anyone else. Some one else might have believed that it was due to the fact that he was not familiar with the subject on which he was speaking, which might have been true; but, as I say, that was my opinion.

Q. Well, finish up that day.—A. He left the theater about—well, it was between 10.30 and 11 o'clock, in company with a young man whom I did not know, and he walked over to the Washington Hotel, where there was a banquet, and after the banquet, which was about—the time he left, I believe, was about 12.10 a. m., after midnight; he left the Washington Hotel in company with Judge Burke. They walked down to Pine Street, then down to Third Avenue, then up Union Street to Seventh, up Seventh Avenue to Madison, up Madison to Broadway, up Broadway to Pine Street, where they stood for about five minutes, I should judge, and talked, after which the judge boarded a Broadway car.

Q. Which judge?—A. Judge Hanford. Judge Burke walked south on Broadway, but Judge Hanford boarded a car going north and got off the car at his home. That was, I think, about, oh, it must have been considerably after 1 o'clock when he got home.

Q. Is there any other occasion when you observed his conduct when you thought he was under the influence of liquor, that you have not mentioned?—A. There was one night—I don't remember whether it was Sunday night or not—I remember very distinctly when he left the Federal building he walked down a few paces on Third Avenue as though he was going to board a Nineteenth Avenue car, and the car does not stop below Union Street on Third Avenue; instead it goes around the corner on the north side of the Federal building, and he seemed determined to board the car, so he followed that car a few paces, sort of ran behind the car, then suddenly changed his mind and did not take the car; I don't know why. Then he cut across diagonally to the northwest corner of Third and Union and followed the north sidewalk down toward Second Avenue, and he came back; he started out toward the center of the street and he went—came up toward the car tracks and went around the car tracks, and circled around. I didn't know just where he was going. I stood still for a few minutes to watch him. He just went up and whirled right around the car tracks and came right back and went down the same sidewalk again; waited at Second Avenue and Union Street until a Broadway car came. As near as I remember, that was about 7 o'clock in the evening. I think that was on a Sunday night, I believe it was, because the general order of things seemed to be changed. At 7 o'clock he generally was not down to his office, so I believe it was on Sunday night.

Q. Had he gone into any place where he could get a drink on that night?—A. The only place, I believe, that he had been that night before going to the Federal building was the Rainier Club.

Q. Have you any notion whether liquor is served in that club to members?—A. I don't know.

Mr. McCoy. How is that, Mr.——

Mr. Preston. It is.

Mr. Hughes. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Do you know of any other occasion on which you noticed him when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?

A. There was one night that—the occasions were so frequent that it is hard to make any distinction between them except reference to the notes, but on this occasion I remember when he got off. I know that although his condition was much better then than some of the times I have mentioned, he seemed to me to be under the influence of liquor, because of the condition of his eyes; they were bulged out seemingly, and he had difficulty in keeping awake all the way from the city; and that night he got off the car at John Street on the Broadway line. He went north on Broadway from John to Republican Street, I think it was; then he went west on Republican Street and north on Republican; on the west side of Republican, and entered a residence about half way between the blocks—between Republican and Mercer, I believe it is; and that same evening he—after leaving there—I think that it was just the dinner hour when he was there—and on going to the city again he went to the Rainier Club.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean he went from this residence back to the city; is that what you mean?

A. Yes; from the residence on Harvard Avenue north of Republican Street. Then he went back to the city. I don't remember whether he went to his office first or not, but I remember quite distinctly that he went to the Rainier Club that night; whether it was directly from the residence or directly from his office, that I can't remember now, and that was also on one of the occasions that I have referred to when he went to three bars, I believe it was the Bronson, the Rathskeller, and the Savoy bar, after he left the Rainier Club at midnight.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, what was the rest of the observation at that time?

A. Well, that was the night I have reference to, that he walked home. It was not raining that night, but he walked the entire distance from the city to his home, and his condition was not as bad that night as the night that I mentioned when it was raining, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, describe what it was.—A. Well, his general demeanor was—it was hard to tell from his general demeanor whether or not he was intoxicated. His walk was slower than it usually is, and following him all the way home I had a chance to see just what his condition was by observing him very closely, but one that was just passing by perhaps would not notice it at all, that there was any difference in his condition; but as to the state of his intoxication that I would not care to say, because I don't know whether he was badly intoxicated or not. He kept up pretty well, excepting for the fact that he walked home. I didn't know why he should undertake to walk home after the midnight hour, except that it was that he might want to avoid being seen on a car at that time of night in that condition. He might have felt his condition more than I could see it.

Q. Well, if you have any other time in mind when you thought you saw Judge Hanford under the influence of intoxicants, let us have that.—A. I can't remember any occasions that he was intoxicated, or seemed intoxicated. There may have been other times, according to the reports that I made, but I can't remember them at the time.

Q. Were these visits in the afternoon just before the dinner hour to these saloons that you have mentioned a matter of daily, or almost daily, occurrence while you had the judge under observation?—A. Yes, they seemed to be a matter of established custom; there may have been once or twice while I had him under observation that he did not go to those bars during the dinner hour, or just before going home to dinner, but it seemed to be an established rule with him that he would go to these places.

Q. How often did you ride in the car with him—that is, did you do it frequently or only once in a while?—A. No; it was a daily occurrence so long as I was shadowing him.

Q. You mean you rode in a car with him every day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, when he was apparently under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there other occupants of the cars on these different occasions besides yourself and Judge Hanford?—A. There was only—there were quite a number of people in the car, as a rule, but only one whom I knew, and that was the party that was with me shadowing him.

Q. Was Judge Hanford's condition a matter of comment on the part of other passengers in the car than yourself and your companion at any time?—A. I don't remember of hearing anyone pass a comment on it. In fact, we never did ourselves, because it was something that we did not care to discuss; we did not care to make ourselves conspicuous by speaking of it.

Q. Where is Judge Hanford's residence?—A. I believe the number is 1503 Tenth Avenue north.

Q. Have you now narrated all the occasions when you saw Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants, that you can remember with any degree of detail?—A. Yes; I think I have.

Q. You spoke of a house on Harrison Street; was that house Judge Hanford's residence?—A. It is not where he resides.

Q. How often was that, during the time you had him under observation, did he go there?—A. How many times, did you ask me?

Q. Yes.—A. That I can not say without referring to my former records.

Q. I am not asking you to do that. Did he go there on several occasions?—A. He did.

Q. A dozen?—A. To my knowledge he might have gone that many or more times; I will not say definitely.

Q. Well, of course, "might have"——A. (Interrupting.) I think it was at least that many times, to my knowledge.

Q. At least a dozen times?—A. I think so.

Q. That you saw him go there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, just explain, tell all about it, tell us all about these visits to this house on Harrison Street.—A. The nature of the calls from observation on the outside, were seemingly the same, excepting that the hours of entering and leaving were different. Sometimes he would enter a little after 8 in the evening, and his hours of entering would vary from 8 p. m. to 11.15 p. m., which is the latest that I have seen him enter.

Q. What about the hours of leaving?—A. The hours of leaving varied from, well—I should say 9 p. m. until 2 o'clock a. m.

Q. Tell all that you observed in a general or specific way; just tell the story as you please.—A. Before the judge would enter the residence at 1008 East Harrison Street I noticed that it was a rule to keep one of the blinds on the south side—a sort of a bay window there—as a rule to keep that blind raised just a few inches, perhaps 6 or 8 inches.

Mr. McCoy. Do you mean a blind or a shade?

A. A shade, a window shade, and when the judge would come up to the porch, walk upon the porch, he would give a couple of raps on the glass window, as a rule, on the door, on the glass in the door.

Mr. Hughes. How is that?

A. He would rap on the glass in the door. There is a glass window in the door, and the door was opened by a woman, and without any words, so far as I know, and at times I was right near by, just a few feet from him, I suppose, at the time he entered, and I do not remember of ever hearing any words passed while they were in the doorway; and after the door was closed immediately the window shade would be lowered so that there was nothing to be seen from the street. That was an established rule that the curtain always went down immediately after the judge entered the door. And after the judge left the house the curtain would rise about the same number of inches that it was before he came in. After leaving the place sometimes he would go home, if it was real late, at other times he would go down to the city.

Q. Well, have you anything else to state in a general or specific way about what you observed there.—A. From the outside there was nothing more to observe.

Q. Did you ever take a photograph of Judge Hanford coming out of that Harrison Street house?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. When was that?—A. It was one night in October; I don't remember the exact night, but I believe it was the 17th of October.

Q. At what hour had he gone into the house on that evening?—A. At 8.40 p. m., I believe it was.

Q. And what time was this photograph taken?—A. Twenty minutes past 10.

Q. I show you a photograph, and I will ask you is that the one which you refer to [showing]?—A. Yes, sir; that is the photograph. I refer to the upper one there.

Photograph is marked "Exhibit No. 26."

Q. What was it; was it a flashlight photograph?—A. Yes, sir; a flashlight.

Q. I show you this Exhibit No. 26. Is that the photograph of Judge Hanford on the front steps of that house?—A. Yes.

Q. And back of that is a photograph of a woman. Is that the woman who occupied the house?—A. I believe it is; yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see her outside the house?—A. Yes, sir; several times.

Q. With Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; that is, I have seen Judge Hanford on the street with her, I think on two occasions; I am not sure as to more than that.

Q. Describe those occasions.—A. One was on a Sunday afternoon; they met as though by appointment at the corner of Eleventh and Aloha, which is about half way between his residence and her residence. They walked up to Volunteer Park and went through the park, through the south end of the park.

Q. What is Volunteer Park; is that a public park in the city?—A. That is a city park; yes. They walked through the park and went down to Nineteenth Avenue, where they boarded a car southbound; it was about half past 2 in the afternoon.

Q. Sunday, did you say?—A. Sunday afternoon. And the woman was heavily veiled; I did not get to see her face so as to be able to identify her; and they got off the car at East Union Street, at Nineteenth Avenue; they walked east on Union Street to Twenty-third Avenue, where they stopped, as though waiting for the Twenty-third Avenue car, but they continued on in a few minutes and walked south on Twenty-third Avenue, and they stopped at Cherry Street, where the judge bought some candy and went in there at the drug store on the corner, and they continued south on Twenty-third until they were down below—well, they were below Jackson Street. I am not very familiar with the streets below Jackson Street. They were a couple of blocks south on Jackson Street, and they walked eastward along the car line and then continued south. I don't know just what the street is; I think it must be Twenty-sixth or Twenty-eighth, or somewhere along there. They waited there a few minutes and took a car going north, the East Union and Yakima Avenue car. The judge got off the car at First Avenue and Union Street, and the woman got off the car at Fourth Avenue and Pike street. She went back to the Union Bakery between Second and Third, on Pike Street, and bought some pastry, and then she went to Second Avenue and took the car, the Broadway car, and went up to Harrison Street and went home. That was the first time that I knew where she lived.

Q. Did Judge Hanford go there that evening?—A. I think he did. I think the record will show that he went there that evening.

Q. Did you see her on any other occasion in his company coming out of her own house?—A. Well, there was one night—it was in October, I believe—when the judge went down to the Harrison Street residence, the woman's residence, and after remaining inside for about five minutes they came out together; they boarded the Broadway car, inbound, at Harrison Street and got off at Second Avenue and Pine Street, I think, and walked—yes, they walked north to the Moore Theater, located on Second Avenue up above the Washington Hotel. They entered the theater; the judge had bought the tickets that evening before he went home; it was about 6 o'clock; so they went directly into the theater and were seated by the usher. They sat on the left-hand side part of the house about 10 or 12 rows from the front, I should judge. And after the show was over—during the show, however, they spoke to one another on two occasions that I know of. Beyond that I could not say; but I remember that they spoke to one another twice, and when they left the theater they left through the north automobile entrance, where they have the taxicabs and automobiles, on the north side, and they walked east to Third Avenue and down Third to Pine Street, where they stopped for about a half a minute or a minute, as though they were trying to make up their minds just where they would go; then they continued east on Pine Street, walked up Pine up to Belmont, I believe it was, up one of those streets, and continued north until they got up to Thomas—John or Thomas, along there—it was dark and I did not pay much attention to the streets—over to Broadway and then north to Harrison and then east on Harrison to her residence, and I think that night he remained after he entered the residence—it was about, oh, it was after 11 p. m. considerably—I think he remained in there about 40 minutes after that; he left there sometime after 12 o'clock, at which time he walked home.

Q. Did you ever see Judge Hanford go into that house by daylight?—A. No; I have never seen him enter there in the daytime.

Q. Were those two occasions, now, the ones which you just spoken of, the only times when you have seen Judge Hanford and this woman in company outside of her residence?—A. No; there was one time, I remember now, that he left the Federal building about, I do not remember whether it was 2 or 3 o'clock, along in the afternoon somewhere; walked south on Second Avenue, went into Shaw's pharmacy, I think it was, or Stokes's candy parlors, bought some candy, and then he went south to Yesler Way and went into the interurban office at Yesler Way and Occidental and purchased some tickets, and as he went out to the car I saw him meet this woman. She was seemingly waiting for him at that point. They boarded the local train, the interurban train that runs between here and Tacoma, sat in the rear car, in the very end seat in the rear of the train, and they got off at Willow Junction, a little point down between here and Tacoma—it is just a few miles this side of Tacoma. They waited for quite a period, and that night I discontinued from the time the northbound interurban train went to Seattle, for there was a junction point there and no one there and I did not care to put myself in a position where I would be of no value on the work later, and I did not care to embarrass or humiliate the judge in any manner and I did not care to remain there any longer owing to the fact that I was the only one there besides them; but I heard the woman come in and inquire at the little station what time the car would go to Puyallup.

Q. To where?—A. To Puyallup.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is south from Willow Junction.

Q. Those three occasions are the only three on which you saw Judge Hanford and this woman in the society of each other outside of her house. Is that right?—A. That is correct. To my recollection now I do not think there were any other times that I saw them together outside of the residence.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the witness any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Dorr will.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION:

Mr. DORR. Mr. Nordskog, your initials are N. L., are they not?

A. A. A.

Q. Then your three initials would be A. A. N.?—A. That is correct.

Q. And this report [reading], "Private 60, operator A. A. N.," would be your report?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. Other operators all have different initials?—A. Yes; so far as I know.

Q. If I understood you correctly, your employment on this case commenced immediately after the Dreamland Rink meeting. Do you remember that occasion; don't you?—A. I remember the occasion; but, as I stated, I believe it was about the 28th of August that I began.

Q. And you continued, I think, for two months you said?—A. That is, not continuously.

Q. Off and on?—A. Yes; during different times I was on——

Q. But the service was all performed within about two months?—A. Yes.

Q. And during that time that you were on this job, as you call it, shadowing Judge Hanford it was your daily custom and practice to keep track of him during the entire time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would start in from the time in the morning that he left his home, and you would not leave him until he returned to his home in the evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or at night, whatever time it was?—A. Yes.

Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. So that you practically had an opportunity and you did note his daily habits?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of those two months, Mr. Nordskog, were you actually engaged in this work?—A. I believe that the record there shows that I worked 36 days all told.

Q. Twenty-six days all told?—A. Thirty-six.

Q. Now, with reference to the last matter which you have been testifying about, I want to ask you a few questions along that line, and I will do that first; that is, the residence which you have given, I believe, as 1008 East Harrison Street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the residence where you took the flashlight picture and where you saw Judge Hanford enter on several occasions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who lives there?—A. I don't know of my own knowledge.

Q. You do not know—do you know whether this residence is in a respectable portion of the city?—A. I do.

Q. It is within the residential district?—A. Yes.

Q. Among the best residential districts in the city of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, is it not?—A. So far as I know.

Q. And you do not know that other persons live in this house except the lady, and were living there all those times?—A. Do you mean in that apartment?

Q. Yes.—A. I did not know it.

Q. Don't you know that the lady's sons were living with her, grown sons?—A. I do not.

Q. You don't know that—I believe you said, at least I so understood you, that you have seen this lady with Judge Hanford in public three times.—A Yes.

Q. Once on a Sunday afternoon?—A. Yes.

Q. Where they walked through Volunteer Park first?—A Yes.

Q. Now, I want you to explain to the committee, if you will, where Volunteer Park is situated and what kind of a place it is —A Volunteer Park is located in the northern—on the north end of what is called Capitol Hill, a residential district; it is almost directly east from the residence in which Judge Hanford lives; it is one of the city's finest parks, a respectable park

Q And is it not one of the parks that is most frequented?—A. Yes, sir.

Q It has a music stand there?—A. I do not know; I have not been there.

Q. Where band concerts are held every Sunday?—A. Yes; I believe so; I have not heard them.

Q. And it has a great many beautiful attractions, has it not?—A. Yes.

Q Including the standpipe which surmounts the highest portion of the city and affords the best view of the city?—A I believe it is; I do not know the fact.

Q. And it also has a great many beautiful flowers and other park improvements?—A. Yes, sir.

Q And it is frequented by a great many people on Sundays, especially, is it not?—A So far as I know.

Q It has been while you have been there?—A. Well, it is very seldom I have been there. I have, perhaps, been in Volunteer Park five times in six years.

Q What was the condition of the attendance this particular Sunday which you mentioned?—A There were not very many people in the south end of the park, at any rate.

Q. But there were some people there?—A There were some people there.

Q. What time of day was it?—A. A little after 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. People coming and going?—A. Well, I saw more people coming than I did going at that time

Q. And that park is located in a portion of the best residential district in the city of Seattle, is it not?—A Yes.

Q. How large is it?—A I don't know how many acres it covers.

Q. A fairly good-sized park?—A. Yes, sir; by blocks I could tell more nearly, but I don't know that that is essential at all.

Q. Well, would you say that there is 100 acres or more or less?—A. I don't think it is 100 acres

Q. Forty acres?—A. Well, I should not care to state at all, because it is something I don't know. I don't know that I ever read it, even.

Q. It is all highly improved, is it not?—A. So far as I know.

Q. Now, on that day how much of the time did the judge and the lady spend in the park?—A. As I stated before, they just walked through the park; they did not stop there.

Q. Did they look at the flowers or any of the attractions in the park?—A. Presumably, in a passing manner; that is all I could note.

Q. It was just a casual Sunday afternoon walk?—A. Just a stroll through the park.

Q. For the gentleman and lady?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see anything improper in that?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. That occurred, I believe, on the 26th day of September, 1911?—A. You refer to that date?

Q. Yes.—A. I can't say as to that; if you have the records there you will know it.

Q. When I am asking you the question I am looking at your report of that day and I take that to be the Sunday which you referred to; about that time?—A. Yes; if that is what the report states there, of course, it is no doubt true.

Q. Regardless of the date, after they had walked through the park they boarded the car and went down town?—A. No; they went—they walked after they left the Nineteenth Avenue car.

Q. And went out to the south part of town?—A. They walked out Twenty-third Avenue down to the southeast portion; down toward Mount Baker Park.

Q. They were taking a long walk?—A. Yes; it was a long walk.

Q. And then they went down to the business section and, I believe you stated, patronized a confectionary store?—A. She did.

Q. I understood you to say that the judge bought somethnig down there.—A. No; that was at the corner of Twenty-third and Cherry.

Q. Some refreshments?—A. It was a drug store; I believe he bought some candy there.

Q. After that she patronized a bakery or a place where they sold foodstuffs?—A. Yes; that was the Union Bakery.

Q. And then she went home?—A. Yes.

Q. And where did the judge go?—A. As to that I can not say definitely. Mr. Oleson at that time was with me and he went with the judge.

Q. And you saw and know nothing improper on that occasion, did you?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. Nothing to criticize?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. You were instructed to find any evidence you could against Judge Hanford, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was what you were sent out for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about the theater part, or the occasion that they attended the theater; what theater was that?—A. The Moore Theater.

Q. How does the Moore Theater stand in this city, as to grade; is it a high-grade or a low-grade theater?—A. Well, according to my knowledge of it, it stands as second class now; it is one of the high-grade theaters.

Q. It is one of the leading theaters?—A. Yes.

Q. And until one or two others were opened here lately it was the leading theater?—A. I think so.

Q. It is regarded now as one of the leading theaters?—A. Yes.

Q. And is attended by respectable people?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the play, do you remember, that was put on at the theater?—A. Baby Mine.

Q. Is it an opera?—A. Yes.

Q. A comic opera?—A. Yes.

Q. And you say you saw the judge buy the tickets?—A. Yes.

Q. Before dinner?—A. Yes.

Q. And later you saw him go to 1008 East Harrison Street?—A. Yes.

Q. He went in and stayed there about five minutes?—A. Approximately.

Q. And he and his lady friend came out together and went to the theater?—A. Yes.

Q. And I believe you said that you saw them speak to each other at least twice during the performance?—A. Yes.

Q. In other words, they were interested in the play?—A. No doubt.

Q. Sir?—A. No doubt they were.

Q. Did the lady wear a veil at that time?—A. Well, I think she did; yes.

Q. A heavy black veil?—A. No; I think it was a light veil—a white veil.

Q. While she was in the theater?—A. No, sir; she took her hat off in the theater.

Q. She didn't have her hat on even?—A. No.

Q. Now, sir, did you see anything improper in this theater attendance?—A. None whatever.

Q. None whatever. Well, after the theater where did they go?—A. They walked home to her residence.

Q. Walked all the way up?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was that?—A. I should judge from the Moore Theater to her residence it is a little over a mile.

Q. Now, when was that with relation to the Sunday that they were together in the Volunteer Park?—A. This was later.

Q. How much later?—A. Oh, I can't say without referring to the records.

Q. Give your best recollection.—A. It might have been two or three weeks.

Q. Two or three weeks later?—A. If I am not mistaken, the night they went to the Moore Theater was the 12th of October.

Q. The 12th of October?—A. I believe so.

Q. Now, Mr. Nordskog, the other time related to a Sunday afternoon trip on the interurban street-car line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I gathered if from what you said?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?—A. It is.

Q. Was that at some distant date from these other two occasions, or was it approximately near it?—A. I don't remember just what time that was, whether it was before or after the time they were seen at the theater together.

Q. It was not on the same day?—A. No; it was not.

Q. As either of the other occasions?—A. No; it was not.

Q. And it must have been on another Sunday than the Sunday on which they were together in Volunteer Park?—A. If I am not mistaken, yes; I am quite certain—I am basing my contention now on the fact that Mr. Oleson had discontinued operating with me at that time, and Mr. Staples was with me at the time that he went to Puyallup.

Q. On this occasion, when they took the street-car trip, did you go with them all the time?—A. I did as far as Willow Junction.

Q. You started that morning with the judge?—A. I don't remember what time I started in the morning with him.

Q. You were shadowing him before—before he went to 1008 East Harrison Street?—A. Well, on that day I don't remember—I don't think he went to that residence prior to going to Puyallup.

Q. That was on October 15, wasn't it, to refresh your recollection from your records?—A. I could not say unless I referred to them myself, because it is indefinite and I don't know. [Here the records are handed by Mr. Preston to the witness.]

Mr. PRESTON. He says that October 15 is the correct date of the Puyallup trip?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. DORR. How did they come down from the residence on that day; by street car or otherwise?

A. I did not see them together until they—until he arrived at the interurban station at Occidental and Yesler Way.

Q. And that was where?—A. That was where I first saw her.

Q. He bought the car tickets and they went out on the interurban and you went along?—A. Yes.

Q. You went out, as I understand you, with them to the junction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were there until about the time the train left for Puyallup?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Puyallup is quite a large place—it is betewen here and Tacoma, is it not?—A. I don't know as to the exact size—I have stopped off there between trains.

Q. It is quite a little town?—A. About five or six thousand people is what they told me at the time.

Q. It is a town of about five or six thousand people?—A. Yes.

Q. And they were apparently going to Puyallup?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, this was on the regular train that goes every hour or less from Seattle to Tacoma, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And how many people were on that train, or was there more than one car?—A. Yes, sir; on the Seattle and Tacoma local train there are two cars—the limited is only one car.

Q. This was the local train?—A. Yes.

Q. And stopped at the junction?—A. Yes.

Q. How many people were on the car with Judge Hanford?—A. As to the exact number it would be hard to tell, except just a rough estimate. There were perhaps 50 or 60 people on the car—that is, that might be more than there were. The car was full so far as the seats were concerned.

Q. And it was the regular Sunday afternoon train?—A. Yes.

Q. Nothing in that occasion which was improper in your judgment, was there?—A. Not so far as I could see.

Q. You know that Judge Hanford is a widower, don't you?—A. I have heard so.

Q. You knew that all the time?—A. Well, it was not clear in my mind until after the operations were over.

Q. Well, you know it now?—A. That is a matter of information.

Q. Well, that is your information?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Nordskog, as far as you observed, and everything which you saw and know, are you prepared to testify that there was anything done or any act performed on the part of Judge Hanford that was improper with his relations to this lady?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think we would care for his judgment in reference to that.

Mr. HIGGINS. I understood Mr. Dorr to ask him whether there was anything that he saw.

Mr. DORR. I asked him if there was anything that he saw that was improper on the part of Judge Hanford in his relations toward this lady.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that implies his conclusion. I do not think the committee would care for his judgment. Let him tell any facts that he knows.

Mr. HIGGINS. He is asking anything that he saw. I think you misunderstood Mr. Dorr's question.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think I do; I am inclined to think you do. His question implies the judgment of the witness, doesn't it?

Question is repeated.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not that require his judgment as to whether anything was improper? The Chair thinks it does very clearly.

Mr. HIGGINS. Let me ask him a question. Did you see anything improper in the relations between Judge Hanford and this lady?

Mr. MCCOY. I want to suggest now that this was the most disagreeable subject for the committee to have to touch upon. The committee has conferred about it several times and, perhaps, as you have observed, they conferred about it right here a few minutes ago, and the committee voted unanimously to go into it, and the disagreeable duty was put up to me of asking the questions as I had started with the witness. Personally I do not want to perform any more of the disagreeable duty. I only suggest to Mr. Dorr that this opens up a further line of questioning which I shall follow up if it is persisted in

Mr. DORR. I am willing to leave it as it is.

Mr. HIGGINS. I want an answer to the question that I asked, because I intended to ask it at some time, and it might as well be put in now.

Mr. DORR. I am not desiring to curtail any member of the committee who might desire to go into this matter, but I do not wish to pursue the subject any further in opposition to any member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not consider this witness's judgment as to what is proper or improper is of any particular value to this committee, but Mr. Higgins desires him to answer the question now and he can answer it.

The WITNESS. Will you please state the question.

Mr. DORR. Before leaving the subject I would like to ask the witness a question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question that was asked by Mr. Higgins which the witness has not yet answered.

Question repeated to the witness again as follows:

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you see anything improper in the relations between Judge Hanford and this lady?

A. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, you had not finished your examination.

Mr. DORR. No, I have not quite finished.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you going off on another branch?

Mr. DORR. As soon as I ask one more question on this branch then I want to go onto another branch.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. DORR. I want to ask you, Mr. Witness, whether on the occasion that Judge Hanford and his lady friend took the interurban trip; if a young man was not with them; one of her sons.

A. I saw no one except the judge and the woman; I know positively that they had no one with them at Willow Junction.

Q. You did not see any young man with them?—A. I did not.

Q. Now, I want you first to fix another date; I want to ask you now if you are not able to fix the date of the Volunteer Park episode as of the 24th day of September, 1911 [showing document to witness].—A. Yes, sir; that was the date.

Q. That is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On Sunday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In examining those reports, or what purports to be copies of your reports, unless I am mistaken, the first mention of any drinking on the part of Judge Hanford occurs on the 22d day of September, 1910 [showing report to witness].—A. What is that, did you say?

Q. I say the first record that I find in examining these reports hurriedly, and I have only had time and opportunity to go over them very hurriedly, is where you mention anything concerning Judge Hanford's drinking liquor, it occurs on the 22d day of September, 1911. Now, I take it for granted, without questioning you at length on that subject, that you noted down in those reports all important items.

The CHAIRMAN. Just ask him the question, Mr. Dorr; don't take anything for granted.

Mr. DORR. I will ask you then whether you did note down in these daily reports all important facts and items which came to your attention concerning the judge.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if you had observed him visiting saloons at any time you would have noted it.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And unless those occasions are noted in these reports, then, they did not occur under your observation?—A. That is right.

Q. Now will you turn back to the very first report you made [showing], what is the date of that?—A. August 28.

Q. That is the first day's report, isn't it?—A. I think it is, yes, sir.

Q. Now observe by this report—well, I would like to ask the witness to read that report.

The CHAIRMAN. No, the committee will object to that. We do not care to encumber the record with that report.

Mr. DORR. Very well—I will ask you, Mr. Witness, with respect to the memorandum which you have made here concerning a lady who wore a black hat with a large plume on it; do you know who that lady was?—A. I do not recall the occasion; if you would state on what occasion that was and where she was I might be able to state.

Mr. DORR. Well, that is stated in your report as follows—I am just reading enough to call the witness's attention to it—"The subject"—that means Judge Hanford, I suppose.

A. Yes.

Q. (Reading:)

with a tall, blond woman and a boy about six years old came out to the street 9.20 a. m. and boarded the car; lady wore a black hat with a large plume on it and blue water silk suit, and sat in the car with the subject—

Do you know who that lady was?—A. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. What difference does it make; do you think there is anything discreditable in that, or that anybody would think there was?

Mr. DORR. I should not think there was, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what is the use of asking him that?

Mr. DORR. I can not understand why a good deal of the evidence that went in was allowed to go in unless it is intended to in some way reflect on Judge Hanford.

The CHAIRMAN. That evidence is not in; it is not worth going in. You can rest assured, I think, that the Judiciary Committee of the House has a considerable amount of sense, and that circumstance is not discreditable unless it is something of value and I hardly think it is worthy of putting it in the record, it seems to me.

Mr. DORR. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a great deal in that report that this committee thinks would not add anything to the value of the record. I suppose that this young man thought it his duty under his employer's instructions to note every little circumstance, such as that the judge went to church and occupied the front pew, it would be his duty to record that fact, but I do not see how it would help the record any.

Mr. DORR. But if he so considered it his duty and put it in there, in reading these reports it appears to us at least in connection with this case the object for which that evidence was introduced, that a statement of that kind, unexplained, might impute some motive——

The CHAIRMAN. That statement is not in the record at all, or at least it was not in it until you put it in.

Mr. DORR. And may I assume that it is not going in?

The CHAIRMAN. If you are willing to have it stricken the committee would have no objection.

Mr. DORR. I mean in regard to these reports——

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; indeed you may.

Mr. DORR. That these reports are not to be in there?

The CHAIRMAN. Indeed you may safely assume that.

Mr. DORR. Then that changes the entire aspect; if these reports are not to be introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. Before they go in you will have notice of it.

Mr. DORR. I had been examining him on the theory that this was going in.

Mr. HIGGINS. They are not to be made a part of the record.

Mr. DORR. I did not so understand it; I assumed that they were to be from the way they were identified.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McCoy told you, at least I think so, that in examining the witness that he did not use the record for the very purpose of avoiding the necessity of putting it in our record. I am glad that you mentioned this now, though, in this way, if you had the thought of examining him with reference to everything that is in that report. I hope you will please confine yourself to the matters which Mr. McCoy brought out.

Mr. DORR. Your statement has now cleared the matter very materially for us.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, this interruption did some good?

Mr. DORR. Yes; I think so; and I thank you.

Q. How many times during this 36 days did you see Judge Hanford in any of these drinking places—what proportion of the days?—A. I beg your pardon?

Q. What proportion of the days?—A. The report will show exactly the number of days, but offhand I should say it was at any rate three-fourths of the time.

Q. Three-fourths of the days that you were engaged in shadowing him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was his daily habits about the same when these occurred.—A. Yes, sir; just about.

Q. That is, starting from his home in the morning let us follow him down, if you will, and tell me what his daily habit was; what time would he leave his home?—A. Generally left home about anywhere from 8 o'clock to 9.30; sometimes it might be a little later.

Q. Then, would he go directly to the Federal building?—A. As a rule.

Q. Did he walk or ride?—A. He would ride from the vicinity of his home to Third Avenue and Pike Street, where he would generally get off the Broadway car and walk down to the Federal building.

Q. Didn't he frequently walk the entire distance down?—A. I do not remember that he did at any time.

Q. Then he would go to his office, or his chambers, in the Federal building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then at 10 o'clock open court.—A. I could not say as to that; I presume that he did.

Q. Didn't you attend the court session?—A. On two occasions I was in his court room.

Q. And what time would he leave the Federal building?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. And then where would he go?—A. To the Rainier Club.

Q. Then, it would be later in the evening that you saw him go to the Saratoga and those other bars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But didn't he habitually leave his office at a later hour than 5 o'clock, Mr. Nordskog; was it not nearer 6 than 5?—A. No; I can't say that it was; it might have been on some occasions, but I believe, from my recollection, it was nearer 5 than it was 6; it might have been between 5 and 5.30 as a rule; I think in some instances 5.35 or 5.37 and along about that hour.

Q. Half-past 5, or later, as a rule, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that court was in session until 5 o'clock.—A. I presume it is sometimes.

Q. And then he would go down to the Rainier Club, and stay there how long?—A. Sometimes 20 minutes, sometimes half an hour, and sometimes an hour; it varied.

Q. And you did not go into the club?—A. No, sir.

Q. So you know nothing about what occurred there?—A. No, sir.

Q. When he left the club you say he would go down to Second Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on those various occasions when he did frequent the bar he would go to the Saratoga?—A. As a rule that is where he went first.

Q. And take a sherry and egg?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was his usual custom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you say on some occasions he also visited the Sutherland and the Butler?—A. Yes.

Q. The Butler is a café, is it not?—A. No, sir; I don't believe that bar is a café.

Q. It is back of the lobby in the Butler Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the hotel part?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Connected with the café?—A. I don't know that it is.

Q. You don't know that—and then he would go home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Take the car at the corner of Second and Cherry Street?—A. Second and James.

Q. James Street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And go to his home, and then what would he do after dinner?—A. Well, as I have stated before, on several occasions he would leave home, sometimes he would go directly to the city, and sometimes to 1008 East Harrison Street.

Q. Didn't he usually go back to the Federal building?—A. I can't say as to that; I believe he went back to the Federal building on a couple of occasions.

Q. Is that all that you can remember?—A. That is all that I can recall now.

Q. He would go back there to work?—A. Presumably.

Q. And you knew that by the light being turned on in the office?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, what time would he leave the Federal building?—A. Oh, on one occasion I have reference to he left about 9 o'clock, the night he went to the Alhambra Theater, to the McCormack lecture.

Q. That is the night, I believe you stated, that he was in the worst condition you ever saw him.—A. That was one of the nights; yes, sir.

Q. And that was on the trip down from his residence down town.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the evening, if I understood you correctly, and he was in a worse condition when he came down, for sleepiness or drowsiness, than when he went out?—A. Yes.

Q. You were on the car with him coming down and going out also? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He went to his office and worked there a little while, or stayed there a little while?—A. Yes.

Q. And then about 9 o'clock he went to the Alhambra Theater?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the occasion at the theater that evening?—A. That night?

Q. Yes.—A. I knew nothing of the meeting until I arrived there, but I learned that it was a meeting under the auspices of the medical association.

Q. The same meeting which Mr. Oleson testified about?—A. I think so.

Q. Mr. Oleson was with you this evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the same occasion that he spoke of then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, can you tell us—can you tell this committee some of the prominent people that you referred to that were on the platform that night—on the stage?—A. I believe that Judge Albertson, if I am not mistaken, was the chairman of the meeting that night, and Dr. McCormack, whom I have known here for a number of years, he was there.

Q. A medical doctor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Albertson, one of the judges of the superior court of this city?—A. So far as I know, yes.

Q. And who else?—A. And the Rev. Dr. Matthews was on the platform.

Q. He is one of the leading churchmen of the city of Seattle, is he not?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, go ahead.—A. And Judge Burke.

Q. Who is Judge Burke?—A. He is a retired judge, as I understand it, the one who ran for the senatorship last time.

Q. He is also one of the leading citizens of the city of Seattle, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please mention some more, if you can?—A. I can not recall any others at the present time. There were—I remember distinctly that there were quite a number that I knew on the platform, but I can not recall now who they were.

Q. Did any of them address the meeting except Judge Hanford; that is, aside from the principal speakers?—A. Dr. McCormack, he was the stranger.

Q. He was a stranger here?—A. Yes.

Q. The rest of the gentlemen were local men?—A. Yes.

Q. Did any of those other gentlemen address the meeting except Judge Hanford?—A. I believe Dr. Matthews addressed the audience while I was there; we came in after 9 o'clock.

Q. Did he precede Judge Hanford or did he follow him?—A. As to that I could not say.

Q. Who introduced the speakers that evening?—A. I believe it was Judge Albertson.

Q. How long did Judge Hanford speak?—A. I believe he spoke about five minutes.

Q. Was the house well filled or otherwise?—A. Yes, there was no standing room, hardly.

Q. What kind of an audience was it, as to character of the people that were there?—A. I would say that it was a very intelligent audience.

Q. Now, after the meeting adjourned Judge Burke and Judge Hanford walked together to the Washington Hotel.—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did they walk, or who was it then that went with Judge Hanford to the Washington Hotel?—A. As I stated I do not know positively who the young man was, it was a young man about 25 years old.

Q. Judge Burke and Judge Hanford left the Washington Hotel together after that.—A. Yes.

Q. Was this a banquet given to Dr. McCormack, the visitor?—A. I believe it was.

Q. How many were there, if you know?—A. Well, from what I saw down in the banquet room, I believe—it would be hard to come anywhere near a correct estimate—anywhere from one hundred to two hundred people; I could not say definitely, I might be away off on that figure.

Q. And all those were people who had come out of the theater.—A. Seemingly so.

Q. Who had attended the meeting?—A. Yes.

Q. They were all doctors, except a very few, were they not, medical men?—A. As to that I can not say—do you mean doctors of medicine?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, I know there was one doctor of divinity.

Q. Who was that?—A. Matthews.

Q. He was at the banquet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the most of them were medical doctors?—A. As to that I could not say, for I do not know very many doctors in the city.

Q. How long did the banquet last?—A. As to that I can not say; the judge left about 12 or 10 minutes past 12, according to my recollection.

Q. They were probably down there a couple of hours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present?—A. No, sir, I was not invited to attend.

Q. Now, in regard to these other saloons which you mentioned that you said Judge Hanford attended on one or more occasions late in the evening; how many times did you see him in any one of those other places after dinner, or how many times did you see him at any place after dinner during those 36 days?—A. I believe there was on three occasions on which I saw him enter the Bronson and I will name all those bars now collectively; the Bronson, the Rathskeller, the Savoy, and the Mission Bay; I believe that constitutes the number that he visited on three different occasions, going to three each time.

Q. Three of the four each time?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what he drank?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. Did you see him drinking?—A. Yes.

Q. One of those occasions was the night that President Taft was here, wasn't it?—A. I think not.

Q. Was there any special occasion, anything that was unusual occurring on those nights in the city? —A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did he go to those places alone or was he accompanied by anyone?—A. He was alone.

Q. Now, that would be late at night?—A. About midnight.

Q. On his way home after he had left the Federal Building?—A. After he left the club.

Q. After he left the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After he left the Federal Building the nights that he went there did he go to the club?—A. As a rule he would.

Q. And sometimes he walked home and sometimes he went home on the car?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you able to state whether this drowsiness that you observed on the part of Judge Hanford on the street cars was due to intoxication; are you able to state that positively?—A. I think I am pretty well qualified to state.

Q. You think it was or was not?—A. I think it was.

Q. Did you ever see him drowsy on the cars when you had not seen him drinking?—A. No, sir.

Q. Sir?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never did?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him drowsy on the bench?—A. No, sir.

Q. When he was holding court?—A. No, sir.

Q. At any of those times that you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever taken the pains or made an effort to inquire as to that characteristic of the judge?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that under his habits he does not have a long time to sleep at home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And don't you know, Mr. Nordskog, that as a general rule Judge Hanford works in his office evenings until late?—A. I can't say that I do.

Q. The Rathskeller which you mentioned is one of the leading cafés of the city?—A. Yes, sir; that is, there is a café in connection with the establishment.

Q. All of those bars are respectable places?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. All of those bars are respectable places so far as you know—high class?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been proved more than once already by this witness. Please avoid needless repetition.

Mr. DORR. The Savoy is the Savoy Hotel on Second Avenue.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. McCOY (interrupting). Have you seen any men at any time going into or coming out of this Harrison Street house?

A. I have not.

Q. How many hours, altogether, would you say you have stayed where you could see the front door of that house?—A. That would be hard to estimate without looking at the records to find out how many times he had been there.

Q. What were your instructions, if you can tell us, in regard to this particular case, from your superiors?—A. Regarding what portion of the work?

Q. Any of it—what were you told to do? In other words, repeat what your orders were that were given to you, if any special orders were given to you.—A. I was told to watch all of the actions of the Judge, to see where he went, with whom he associated, to take the name of the place, the number of the house, the general character of the place if we could, and so forth.

Q. Were you told, in other words, to find out what you could against Judge Hanford?—A. I don't remember that that was ever said.

Q. You were asked whether or not you had observed anything improper in the relations between Judge Hanford and this woman who resides at Harrison Street; now just give the committee your understanding of what you took the meaning of the word "improper" to be in connection with that question.—A. Well, that was in my mind at the time that Mr. Dorr propounded the question.

Q. Well, what was it?—A. The thing that I had in mind was this, that he might even try to get from me an answer as to whether or not I had——

Mr. HIGGINS. I asked you a question, Mr. Witness, a little while ago and it only called for your observation.

Mr. McCOY. I would like to have the witness answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think he should answer the question asked by Mr. McCoy.

Mr. HIGGINS. It wanted to be correctly stated—I asked him whether he observed anything improper?

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Dorr asked him that question as to whether he observed anything improper—now, you can answer my question, please, as I asked it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you repeat the question to him?

The WITNESS. I understand it, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Go on with your answer then.

The WITNESS. That he was trying to find out from me whether or not I had seen any improper actions on the part of the lady and the judge while they were together, and then the second thought that came to my mind was that he was trying to find out what my personal opinion was regarding the late hours that the judge practiced in going into that residence at night. So I was at a loss to come to any conclusion, but those were the two things I had in mind when he asked the question.

Mr. McCoy. What did your answer comprehend when you answered Mr. Higgins's question?

A. In that respect I gave the judge the benefit of the doubt, that I had not seen any improper actions between the two of them—none whatsoever.

Q. Now, what do you mean or did you mean in the negative answer to that question?—A. I don't know that I answered it in the negative, but I think I get what you want.

Q. You answered that you had not seen anything improper, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your use of the word "improper" at that time when you answered that question?—A. Just as I have stated, that that was my interpretation of the question.

Q. Well, you have put two interpretations on the word "improper," now, which did you use, or did you use both in answering that question?—A. Let me explain now, Mr. McCoy——

The Chairman. Be as brief as you can, Mr. Witness.

The Witness. I will. The second answer that I gave, or the answer, or the second thing that I had in my mind would be merely my opinion as to the form of etiquette that was used in his going and coming so late at night, was that it would merely have been my opinion, and not as to whether or not it was improper; I could not tell to this committee that it was improper because I do not know whether it would be improper in your minds, so as to that I do not care to say, but as to the other fact I could say definitely that I did not see anything improper between the two of them.

Mr. McCoy. You were not asked or expected to answer any question as to what was in the committee's mind; the question was what was in your mind when you answered the questions; did you have the first interpretation of the word "improper" which you have mentioned, or the second interpretation, or both, when you answered in the negative?

A. I had the first in my mind.

Q. Now, what was the impression made upon you by those late visits to this house; of a widower to the house of this woman, whoever she was?—A. Well, the late hours that he kept at that house made me believe at the time that it must have been something besides an ordinary visit, going in there as late as 11.15 p. m., and coming out of there at 2 o'clock a. m. I was at a loss to see why he should make any visit at that hour. Of course if he had any business he would know about that.

Q. What you mean is that you would consider the relations were improper because of the lateness of the hour and the conditions under which he went there?—A. Yes, sir; that has come to my opinion now; that is what I thought you didn't want—that was the reason I didn't care to tell it.

Q. Now, in Mr. Dorr's examination of you, he stated that the first date in these reports upon which there appears to be any memorandum of Judge Hanford's having gone into saloons to drink, and drinking, was a certain date, as I remember, in September; now, what was the date, or is that the first time when those things appear in the reports?—A. I believe that is the 22d of September that he has reference to.

Q. Well, I do not remember what the date was; but Mr. Dorr may have overlooked some previous date. Now, are you certain that that was the first date when anything appeared in those reports to the effect that Judge Hanford had been drinking?—A. As to that, I could not say without looking at the reports.

Q. Take your reports and see whether the 22d is the first date [showing reports to witness].—A. I think that is the correct date. I had another operator with me at the time, and during the dinner hour he relieved me and shadowed the judge to the places I have mentioned, and the first date I have in the record of it is the 22d of September.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything, Mr. Higgins?

Mr. HIGGINS. Nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated that you were in the judge's court while he was holding court on two occasions only?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether those occasions were occasions following some of the nights that he was out late?—A. As to that I can not remember now.

Q. Well, what was his condition during the time you were in his court, with reference to his being alert and wide-awake?

A. So far as I know, I think he was normal; that is, I mean that he was seemingly not under the influence of liquor, or anything like that, and that I did not see him sleepy or sleeping.

Q. I am not perfectly sure that your mind and mine met on this question of impropriety; since that has been gone into I want to know what your viewpoint is on that question; if I catch you rightly, you said that you meant by improper relations, sexual relations, is that right; is that what you mean to say?—A. Well, that is a thing that was harboring in my mind at the time that it was put to me.

Q. Well, it was on that theory you answered the questions that you saw nothing improper?—A. Yes.

Q. Your testimony tends to show that on a great many nights, always in the nighttime, running from perhaps 8 o'clock in the evening to 2 o'clock in the morning, you saw him going in or coming out of that house; your testimony also gave me the impression that you never saw any other person than this woman at the premises there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you mean to answer that the judge's going there sometimes in a partially intoxicated condition, to say the least of it, staying there until 2 o'clock in the morning with no one present, as you think, but the judge and the woman; did you mean to say that you thought that was not improper?—A. I stated that I thought that is, from my point of view, that that was the only improper point that I saw.

Q. Well, you answer me now that you think that was improper.—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I understand you better now.

Mr. HIGGINS. When the judge and this lady were on the street and in the theater and at any other time that you may have seen them that you have testified about, did he treat her as any gentleman would treat a lady?

A. Well, as to that, we would have to take into consideration the custom of the judge, which I would be at a loss to say anything about, for I had not seen him with any other lady.

Q. Well, then let me ask you if you saw while they were together anything which would call to your mind that there was any impropriety in the relationship between them?—A. Nothing whatsoever.

Q. Either in the theater or at any other time that you saw them?—A. Yes.

Q. They walked the streets together?—A. Yes.

Q. They were well-frequented streets?—A. Yes; that is, I would say that Pine Street is.

Q. You did not shadow this house in the daytime, did you?—A. I do not remember having shadowed it in the daytime or having had any occasion to, except the time that I saw her go in there the first day that I knew that she lived there.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated that on some occasions at least the woman was heavily veiled—now, how many occasions when you saw her out with the judge was she veiled?

A. I do not remember ever seeing her without the veil.

Q. Now, the next question I want to ask you is this, is that usual for ladies accompanied by gentlemen in Seattle to wear veils on such occasions?—A. I think it is very rare.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. If that is at all material or relevant, it would depend somewhat on the time of the year and the kind of weather and the condition of health that the woman is in and a great many other things.

A. I should think so.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think he should be asked what is material or relevant.

Mr. HIGGINS. I stated that. I did not ask him whether it was material or relevant. I say if it is material or relevant that I would ask him that question.

The CHAIRMAN. I would not give a great deal for the witness's opinion about the materiality of questions.

Mr. HIGGINS. No; nor as to the custom of ladies in wearing veils, either.

Mr. MCCOY. I do not know whether when I made the statement here some time ago that I made it plain that it was the unanimous vote of the committee to go into the questions in connection with this person who lives up on Harrison Street, but I want to say now that it was unanimous.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like in this connection to make a statement for the record. I think it appears already in the record that a certain affidavit was given to the committee; that affidavit was not introduced in the House and referred in the ordinary course of legislation. It is signed by John H. Perry. I think it has already been referred to in the record. It is dated the 22d day of May, A. D. 1912, and is attested before Irvin M. Clark, notary public in and for the State of Washington, and I assume for myself the responsibility for going into the inquiry because of this paragraph 5 of this affidavit, and I will ask the reporter to insert at this point paragraph 5 of this Perry affidavit, which is to an extent the basis for this investigation, although not formally before the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might add to what has been said that this whole branch of the subject, and, for that matter, the whole subject, is far from agreeable to the committee. The committee, after numerous discussions, the last of which occurred during this session this afternoon, came to the conclusion that as the whole Committee on the Judiciary gave us the affidavit referred to by Mr. Higgins with the statements in it and with a photograph which counsel, at least, have seen, however disagreeable it might be to us, it became our duty to produce such evidence as there was on this subject, and we were all of the same opinion in that regard. I think I can safely say that we do not do it because we wanted to or liked to. The section which Mr. Higgins refers to will be inserted in the record, as he requests.

Here the affidavit of John H. Perry, referred to by Mr. Higgins, is introduced into the record.

Whereupon further proceedings are adjourned until to-morrow morning, July 2, 1912, at the hour of 9.30 o'clock.

FIFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings, pursant to adjournment. All present, as at former hearing.

C. M. White, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee.

A. C. M. White.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. 1624 Eleventh Avenue.

Q. Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. What is your business?—A. I run the High School meat market.

Q. How long have you been in business in the city of Seattle?—A. Well, a little less than a year.

Q. Prior to that, where did you live?—A. I lived in the same place where I am now.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 10 years.

Q. Before going into the meat-market business, what business were you in?—A. I was a bookkeeper and collector.

Q. For whom?—A. I was bookkeeper for the Fir meat market and collector for the Dodd grocery.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known him that way?—A. Oh, probably six or eight years.

Q. How much have you seen of the judge during that time?—A. Oh, I have not seen him often; probably—oh, I could not say in regard to how many times I have seen him.

Q. Well, was there anything in the nature of your residence or your going home or coming from home to your business that brought you in contact with him?—A. Well, I have ridden on the street cars with him.

Q. Where were you going on those occasions?—A. Probably he was going home.

Q. Does your home lie in the same direction from the business center that his does?—A. We both went out on the Broadway-Pike line.

Q. If at any time during your acquaintance with him, either personally or by sight, you have seen the judge when he appeared to you to be more or less intoxicated, please tell the committee of it.—A. I could not say that he was intoxicated. I have seen him when I thought he was a little unsteady, but I could not say that it was from intoxication. It might be from age or other causes I do not know—I don't know.

Q. What was the first occasion when you saw him as you stated?—A. Well, I could not say in regard to that.

Q. About when was it?—A. Well, I imagine it was probably six years ago.

Q. Tell the committee the circumstances of that occasion.—A. Well, at that time I was working for the S. E. Co. as conductor and the judge used to ride out with me on my car, and I thought a time or two that the judge was a little unsteady, but he was always able to get up and leave the car.

Q. Tell what you noticed, as well as you can, anything which will aid the committee—anything which led you to the conclusion that he was a little unsteady.—A. Well, from the way he walked and conducted himself, probably.

Q Yes, I know; but tell us how he walked, as well as you can —A. Well, I don't know as I can describe how a man walked. I would not say that he staggered like a man that was drunk, at the same time he seemed to have that kind of an unsteadiness about him which might come from drink and might not; I don't know—I am not an expert in that line.

Q What else did you observe about him that attracted your attention that way?—A. I don't know of anything else.

Q How far did he ride with you then?—A Well, he generally rode and got off at his residence, 1503 Tenth Avenue north, I think it is.

Q Was there anything in his demeanor while he was in the seat which attracted your attention?—A. Not especially. Of course, he very often sat with his eyes closed, but I do that myself when my eyes are tired; I should not consider that as any indication. I do not know that he was sleeping or anything like that. A man might sit with his eyes closed from weariness as well as anything else.

Q. All those things we can think of ourselves —A. Yes.

Q. Did you observe him getting off and on the car?—A. Oh yes; I have seen him getting on and off the car.

Q. Did you at any time help him on or off?—A. No; I did not.

Q. How did he get on and off?—A. In the usual way.

Q. With reference to steadiness or unsteadiness?—A Oh, I don't know; I never noticed him getting on and off without he got off all right.

Q. How many times did you say you noticed him on the car, as you have stated?—A. That would be a guess; I would say half a dozen times, probably.

Q. And how many times would you say you noticed him on the car?—A. I don't know how many times. I have seen him on the car when I was not in charge—I don't know.

Q. Well, were the times which you have mentioned, were those the times when you were conductor on the car?—A. Yes; principally.

Q. And did you or did you not between times, when you were not working for the street car company and were riding home, observe him?—A. I don't know that I noticed him so much then.

Q. Well, if you noticed him at any other time?—A. I can't remember.

Q. (Continuing.) Either while you were conductor or otherwise—recall, if you can, some other occasions when you noticed anything peculiar in his conduct on the car.—A. I do not recall anything at this time; it has been several years since.

Q. When were you subpœnaed?—A. Yesterday.

Q. Now, has anybody talked with you about this matter since you were subpœnaed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anyone talk with you about it before you were subpœnaed?—A. No, sir. There was a gentleman came up there and wanted to know if I would come down and testify. I told him I did not know that I knew anything that would be of any advantage to anybody, but I was subpœnaed anyway.

Q. Who was that?—A. I don't know who it was sir.

Q. Are you under any fear of any kind in giving your testimony?—A. No, sir; not a bit.

Q. Have you fully and correctly told us all that you know on that subject?—A. I have; yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. How do you suppose this man that talked with you knew that you had any knowledge of any kind?

A. He told me he had been sent to me by some friend of his; he thought I knew something about it.

Q. What do you suppose made anybody think that you knew anything about it?—A. I can not tell you anything about what they think.

Q. Did you ever tell anybody that you knew anything about it?

A. I do not recall that I ever did; I may have at some time said that I saw the judge unsteady on the street, or something like that—I may have made that remark; I do not recall it now, however.

The Chairman. Who was this person?

A. That called on me?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know the gentleman; if he is in the room I don't recognize him.

Q. Does he live here in the city?—A. I could not say, sir; I never saw the gentleman that I know of before that time.

The Chairman. Examine him further, if you wish to, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. Hughes. I would like to ask just one or two questions on the latter subject.

Q. Did he tell you who it was that asked him to come there to see you?—A. No, sir; I think he said—he didn't tell me who it was that told him to come to see me, but he said he was a friend of the Dodds.

Q. A friend of Dodd's?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is Dodd?—A. Dodd runs a grocery up on Broadway and Thomas. He told me that he was a friend of theirs, and he didn't explain any further.

Q. Well, what did he say to you?—A. Well, he asked me what I knew about it and I told him I didn't know anything of any importance; that I didn't know anything for sure, and he said, I don't know—he made some remark about he wanted somebody to corroborate his testimony.

Q. Did he say what his testimony would be?—A. No, sir; he didn't say anything about that at all.

Q. Did he say that he expected to be a witness here?—A. No; but I would infer from the way he spoke that he was to be.

Q. Didn't intimate what his testimony would be?—A. No, sir; he never said a word about it.

Q. Do you know who gave your name to this committee?—A. I do not; unless it was the man that came to see me, I suppose.

Q. Had you been subpœnaed before that?—A. No, sir; I was subpœnaed yesterday evening.

Q. He came to see you before you were subpœnaed?—A. He came to see me Friday or Saturday, I guess it was, of last week.

The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a moment—how long were you conductor on the car on which Judge Hanford rode backward and forward?

A. I think I was conductor probably—on that particular line you mean, the Broadway and Pike?

Q. Yes; when you say that you saw Judge Hanford riding on the car with you.—A. I think I was on that particular line six or eight months.

Mr. MCCOY. How often did you see the judge during that time?

A. Oh, sometimes I would see him—well, I could not say in regard to that; sometimes for two or three weeks or a month I would not see him—there was sometimes he would not catch my car only occasionally.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

A. M. OLESON, recalled, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Oleson, you were sworn and testified on Friday, I think?

A. I think so.

Q. On that day you stated that you had not had an opportunity to see the minutes which you turned into the office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since then have you seen those minutes?—A. I just saw them now for the first time.

Q. After having seen those minutes and refreshing your recollection—by the way, did you recognize them as the minutes which you turned in?—A. In the main they are; yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you mean by "in the main"?—A. Why, there are errors, typographical errors in the transcript, but they are immaterial so far as I was able to see—I just glanced over the reports and picked out the essential things.

Q. After consulting those minutes is there anything you wish to modify in what you testified the other day, or anything which you wish to add to it?—A. There is absolutely nothing which I wish to modify. If I am permitted I might say that I made a few memorandums here from the reports, and I know they are correct as to the dates. If it is proper I will——

Q. You may make any corrections you wish to add to your testimony.—A. Well, then, I will say that I started September 23, according to the records, if the dates as transcribed correspond with the original reports that I turned in—I do not recall the dates myself. And that day I know—I saw nothing of Judge Hanford all day.

Q. I will ask you to avoid repeating what you told us the other day as much as you can; just to add to it.—A. I discontinued at 7 p. m. on that evening, and saw nothing of the judge.

Mr. DORR. May I have the reports?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes [handing reports to Mr. Dorr].

The WITNESS. (Continuing). On September 24, which is Sunday, I saw the judge with the lady as referred to in yesterday's testimony by Mr. Nordskog, and what he said yesterday would be practically what I would have to say. There was absolutely nothing wrong or improper in the judge's meeting with the lady.

Q. Don't state your conclusions; just state what you saw—I don't care what you think about it.—A. Very well. I simply in my report made a note of the lady's appearance, wearing apparel, etc., and where they went to. That I then got off the car with the judge and took him over here to the building, and saw him enter the building, and later in the evening he went to the Rainier Club, and at that point, according to my report, I lost him, because I did not see him come out. I discontinued at 1.15 a. m., and the judge had not come out yet, but it is possible he might have got by me. On September 25 I followed the judge in the usual way; saw him go from the Federal Building to the Rainier Club, and also to the Saratoga bar, the Alaska bar, or Sutherland's, rather, and the Butler, where he took a drink at each place. I discontinued at 10 p. m. The judge did not come out—he went home at dinner time, and did not come out again. The 26th was a repetition of the day before so far as I remember now from the report; the judge did not leave his house. I left there at 9.40 p. m., according to my report. On the 27th——

Mr. HIGGINS. The 27th of what?

A. (Continuing.) Of September.

Q. 1911?—A. 1911; yes, sir. May I refer to that report again? I made a little notation here, but it is not clear.

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so.

A. (Referring to report.) The 27th was a repetition, with reference to the usual rounds that I spoke of, going to the Saratoga and Sutherland's and the Butler, and going home to dinner, with this exception, I think he went to dinner at his daughter's house that night; I think my report shows that, and came out again——

Mr. HUGHES. Does he mean Mrs. Haynes?

A. (Continuing). Mrs. Haynes; yes, sir; and then he went down in the evening and went to the Federal Building, where he worked until about 11 o'clock, I think, and then from there to the Rainier Club, and I failed to see him come out again.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. 1.15 a. m., I think my report says, or something like that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further which you wish to add?

A. I will have a little more; but I believe the 25th—I believe I stated that I waited then until 1 a. m. at the Rainier Club, but I think I am a little confused about that. I just glanced over it so quickly this morning. I discontinued at 10 p. m., according to this notation here. On the 28th, a repetition of the former day, except that the judge did not come down town. I discontinued at 9.40 p. m. in front of his housee. On the 29th was the meeting at the Alhambra about which I have already testified, with this—I will add this to it, that when the judge left the Alhambra I missed him, so I saw no more of him that night, and also that in coming from home down town I find that I make no reference to his actions in the car. I simply recorded the fact that he left the house at a certain time and went directly to the Federal building, and left there about 10.30, I think, or 9.30, and came to the Alhambra Theater. On the 30th, the usual rounds, and in the evening the judge went to the lady's house. Now, I do not recall what time he left.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean in Harrison Street?

A. On Harrison; yes, sir. October 1 was Sunday, and I did not see him all day; he did not leave the house all day. October 2 was a repetition of the day before, or of the other days, with reference to his usual rounds, with the exception that this night he left in company with his clerk, Mr. Engle, for Bellingham. I followed him to Bellingham; was with him all the following day. He held court up there.

Q. Where is Bellingham?—A. Bellingham is about 98 miles north of here. He left Bellingham in the afternoon on the train and I came to Seattle with him. He arrived here about 7 p. m., and went directly to the Federal building.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the committee is interested in going into all these details. I will ask you if on those occasions you saw anything which showed to you, or tended to induce in your mind a belief that the judge was under the influence of intoxicants?

A. Absolutely nothing, so far as my reports go, except in the one instance that I have already testified about, in reference to the Alhambra meeting, which I qualified with the statement that it was possible that the judge might have been sleepy. I can not find in my reports, in looking over them, where I at any other time have made the use of the word "intoxicated"—that I thought he was intoxicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question. Mr. Oleson, was it not known by yourself and the man who worked with you——

The CHAIRMAN. A little louder, Mr. Hughes, please.

Mr. HUGHES. Was it not known and believed by yourself and Mr. Nordskog that Judge Hanford knew that he was being watched and followed during that time?

A. No; I think not.

Q. Don't you know, and didn't you know, that he knew or believed he was being watched?—A. No; I did not.

ANTONE KOLAR, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. Antone Kolar.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Four years off and on.

Q. What has been your business during that time?—A. Private detective.

Q. Have you any other business?—A. I have not.

Q. With what detective agency are you connected?—A. W. J. Burns.

Q. How long have you been connected with that concern?—A. I can not recall the date; it has been since W. J. Burns has taken over the American Bankers' Association from the Pinkerton people; that is some two years and a half ago, I should judge.

Q. If in the course of your employment you have been detailed to observe Judge Hanford, you may now state it.—A. My operation on subject Hanford has been four days.

Q. When?—A. From the 18th of October, the 19th of October, the 22d of October, and the 23d of October, 1911.

Q. That was in the city of Seattle, was it?—A. City of Seattle, yes, sir.

Q. As is the custom with the agency, I assume you made memoranda.—A. I did.

Q. And you turned them into the office?—A. I did.

Q. Have you seen those or copies of them recently?—A. I saw the copies that was in the committee's rooms up in the Washington Annex.

Q. A few evenings ago?—A. Yes.

Q. From your recollection of the events as refreshed by consulting your minutes, go on and tell the committee what you observed in the judge's conduct first with reference to the use of intoxicants.—A. On two of those occasions; on two of those operations, I just do not know what dates they were; they were between the 18th and 23d of October, I saw subject Hanford enter the Saratoga bar and being handed a sherry and egg; it seemed to me that the bartender knew already what his national drink was and what he drunk there, and he left there paying 10 cents for that drink—he left there and walked quite rapidly and entered the Sutherland bar, which is about a block and a quarter from the Saratoga bar.

Mr. HUGHES. Sutherland's?

A. The Sutherland, yes, sir. Before entering the Sutherland bar he passed it but his feet seemed to stop, and then he would look and walk inside and there he would drink a cordial which I found later was a benedictine. From there—well, I saw also that the bartender knew what his drink was. From there he would leave there and go across the street directly and enter the Butler Hotel and go up the stairway and he would be met there by the bartender at the bar, the bartender at the head would hand him a whisky cocktail; that was on two occasions, and it was repeated that way.

Q. How close together were those occasions?—A. I think within one day, I think—yes, sir; they were within one day, I think.

Q. What time of day did this take place?—A. After leaving the Federal building that is in the evening.

Q. At what hour?—A. Well, between 4 and 6.30, after leaving the Rainier Club.

Q. Well, after the last drink which you spoke of, the cocktail, where did the judge go?—A. Well, he walked across to the corner of James and Second Avenue and he would take the car, the Broadway car and go home; he lives on 1503 Tenth North.

Q. Did you on the first of these occasions—did you accompany him?—A. At first.

Q. What was his condition?—A. It seemed he went to run to the car; I would not say whether his sight is bad; he would run toward the car and see if it was his car—the Broadway car—and he would seem to then see that it was not and then, of course, he would go back to the curbstone, and then when he finally got on the car—when he was getting on the car—he would be unsteady.

Q. During the ride tell us what his condition was.—A. Well, probably he would sit, usually on the left side of the car and about the center of the car. The cars were not quite crowded at all; hardly any other people besides myself and himself and the Operative Staples, and he would sit there and doze off; whether it was through the liquor that he drank or whether it was overwork, I don't know.

Q. To what extent did he dose during the ride?—A. At several times.

Q. How long was the ride?—A. About 20 minutes.

Q. Did you see him get on?—A. Yes.

Q. What was his condition with reference to his ability to get on?—A. Well, quite slow; he would walk, getting on the step, quite slow.

Q. Did you see him get off?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he about getting off?—A. The same way.

Q. How was it in regard to his walking after he got off, so far as you saw him walk?—A. He would walk toward his home in a way that you would say drunk; a drunken man would stagger; that is, he would sway from the side, but not get off the walk.

Q. From what you observed of him on that occasion, what would you say to the committee as to his condition, whether or not he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Yes; I would say that he was.

Q. To what extent?—A. Oh, I could not judge whether he was paralyzed, but I think he had quite a snoot full, as we say.

Q. Did you see him again on that day, the first day you spoke of?—A. The first day—if I have my notes there.

Q. You may refresh your recollection, if you wish, by looking at your notes. [Here Mr. Dorr hands the notes to the witness.]—A. In looking over these notes I notice that after leaving his home he went to 1008 East Harrison; he stayed there a while—I think a few hours.

Mr. HUGHES. What date was that?

A. That was on the 18th. I think he stayed there a few hours; leaving there, he came downtown and went into the Rainier Club; stayed there, I think, about an hour, probably a half, and then came back to the Federal building, whether to sleep a little bit——

The CHAIRMAN. No matter; don't give any guesses about it.

A. I don't know.

Q. We can guess just as well as you can; tell us what you know.—A. And he left here again on that night, or in the morning, I think, about 1.30 or 35—I don't know exactly—and he walked down to Second Avenue and Union; stood there as he dozed or still under that same influence—that same day or night, drink—and stood there for some time as if waiting for a car; he did not know whether that the car has discontinued for the night; the last car left, I think, at 1.15, he missing it; he then asked the clerk in the Times there—that is, at the cigar stand—he asked him about the car, I presume, and then he walks all the way home.

Q. How far was it?—A. It must be about, I think, about a mile and a half to his home.

Q. Did you follow him?—A. We shadowed him as far as Ninth and I guess Union or, let me see, Pike or Pine, either one. We saw him walk that same unsteady way and he, as I say, he would walk from the side; he would not quite in step—that is, keep right in one path; he would walk on one side—that is, of the walk—to the other. And we discontinued, because we, if we did walk all the way down with him to his house we could not have a way of getting back, and so we discontinued then; that was about 1.40 or 1.50 or 2 o'clock.

Q. That closed your observation for that day?—A. Yes.

Q. And then the next time which you can tell us of was how soon after that—I think you said the next day?—A. I think on the next day he left for Wenatchee—to the good roads——

Q. Did you observe him at all that day?—A. We did not see him at all that day.

Q. When did you next see him?

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you say that the judge went to Wenatchee, or that you did?

A. No; the judge went to Wenatchee. He left his house—left prior to our arrival to shadow the house; he left earlier than usual and then we did not know that he was out of town.

Q. You told us you did not see him that day?—A. But I visited several places looking for the man—we did not know——

The CHAIRMAN. I do not care about that. It is him, and not you, that we are inquiring about. If you did not see him the next day, we do not care to waste any more time on that day. Now, what was the next time?

A. I did not see him until the 22d.

Q. Now, then, at the next time you saw him, which you say was the 22d?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us about that.—A. He arrived at 10 o'clock from Wenatchee. Arriving, he took the car; he came off with two grips; he checked one grip and took one grip with him on the car, taking the Broadway car. At Madison Street a woman got in, heavily veiled with a black veil. She got on and she looked at the subject, Hanford.

Q. Judge Hanford?—A. Judge Hanford, and she says, "Hello, there; just getting back?" He looked and he said something to her, but it was very low. Whatever he said, I could not hear it at all. She got off at East Harrison again, and he went all the way home. Now, whether or not he came out that evening—I think he has.

Q. Don't speculate—tell us only what you saw.—A. I would have to see my notes again on that.

Q. You may see them. Show us his notes. [Notes handed to the witness.]

Mr. HUGHES. I don't know whether the witness testified that this was in the morning or in the evening.

The WITNESS. Ten o'clock in the morning—he came from Wenatchee.

The CHAIRMAN. You may answer now.

A. After getting home, which was in the morning, he did not go out again until in the afternoon. Went to the Rainier Club, stayed there until about 8 o'clock, and took the car—the Broadway car—and got off, I think, at Harrison or Thomas—let me see—no, Thomas, and entered that house again. That was the second visit to that house.

Q. You mean 1008 Harrison?—A. Yes; he stayed there until about midnight or later; pretty near 1 o'clock.

Q. What time did you say he went in?—A. I think about 10 o'clock. My notes will show that. About 10 o'clock, and left there about 12.45 and went to his home and stayed there. That is as much as we saw of him that day.

Q. Who was with you on that occasion?—A. Operative Staples all this time; he was the operative that was with me.

Q. What have you to say as to his condition with reference to intoxication on that occasion?—A. Well, there was no—I did not see anything that day. Reported nothing that I thought it was worth while mentioning.

Q. Does that conclude your observations for that day?—A. For that day; yes. On the 23d——

Q. That was the next day?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you first see him on the 23d?—A. On the 23d he came down—in the morning he came down town. We shadowed him from his house to the Federal Building and at noon he came out, if I am not mistaken, he came out at noon and went to the Rainier Club.

Q. You say, "If you are not mistaken." I suppose you mean that you are giving us your best recollection?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you wish to refresh your recollection on any of those matters, you have the right to do it by consulting the notes which you made at the time—so go on?—A. I would like to have them here. [Mr. Dorr hands notes to the witness.]

The CHAIRMAN. What is your answer?

A. He did not go to the Rainier Club at noon. He left here and went down, or walked down, to First Avenue and entered the Colman Building and got a package there out of one of the express companies, I think the Wells-Fargo. He took that with him and then went to the Rainier Club.

Q. About what time?—A. That was about 12.35 or 45.

Q. He remained there how long?—A. I think about an hour at the Rainier Club

Q. After that, if during the day you saw him drink any you may tell it.—A. Well, leaving the Federal building at 4.47 with a man that I do not know who he was, but I found out from Operative Staples that it was Sutcliffe Baxter—this man had white side whiskers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is immaterial.

A. I was just describing the man. I was told who he was by Operative Staples; and they went to Sullivan's bar here, across the way from here—that is, at 4.47 in the evening—that is, in the afternoon—and they each had a drink; Sutcliffe Baxter had a highball and Judge Hanford had a cocktail. Leaving there they separated, and Mr. or Judge Hanford went to the Rainier Club and stayed there about an hour, and made his usual rounds again to those bars. I should judge the time between—it would take him from the Saratoga bar to walk to the Butler bar, taking in three saloons, would be, I think, about 10 minutes.

Q. Did he drink in each saloon?—A. In each one; yes; his same drink.

Q. The first one you say was the cocktail.—A. Well, that was the cocktail; that was a new saloon I never saw him enter before; that is across the way from the Federal building.

Q. Sullivan's?—A. That was at Sullivan's.

Q. And the next?—A. After leaving the Rainier Club, and being there about an hour, he went to the Saratoga and then to Sutherland's.

Q. Did he drink at the Saratoga?—A. A sherry and egg, and benedictine at the Sutherland bar, and a cocktail at the Butler bar.

Q. Within how long a space of time?—A. I think within 10 minutes; that is, from the first drink he took after leaving the Rainier Club, and that is within, I should judge, only about a block and a half. It seemed he could not pass those saloons without entering them.

Q. That is a conclusion of yours merely, and I do not care about that. He did not pass, as you stated—that is the point—is that right?—A. He did not pass.

Q. What he could do is a conclusion. Now, after that did you see him that day?—A. After that?

Q. After he went home.—A. After the last——

Q. After the last drink which you spoke of where did he go?—A. Well, he went and took the car.

Q. What was his condition as to sobriety after the last drink you saw him take?—A. Well, I say he just seemed kind of slow in walking, that's all.

Q. Did you accompany him on the car?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you observe on the car?—A. Well, he did not seem to sleep any, I should say; it seemed he could hold his own then.

Q. What time did he go home?—A. That must have been about, I think, about close to 7 o'clock.

Q. Did you see him again that day?—A. He did not come out that night from his home. We discontinued.

Q. Did you observe him after that any more?—A. That was the last day of my operation, as I left for Montana

Q. Have you any knowledge of his habits or his condition except as you observed while on duty?—A. Do you mean since then?

Q. Yes.—A. Or previous to that time?

Q. Previous or since.—A. I never knew him previous.

Q. Well, since that, when you did know him, have you at any time observed him?—A. I have met him at those bars accidentally while I was on other operations, probably about the times that he would be there accidentally.

Q. Since you were observing him during those days have you at any time seen him under the influence?—A. Well, I would see him drink those same drinks at either of those places, but I never paid much attention to it, because I might have been operating on something else, and I would not have any time to stay with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask him anything further, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question.

Q. What street car did Judge Hanford take to take him to his home?—A. The Broadway car usually.

Q. And that passes along which of the main north and south thoroughfares?—A. It passes on Second Avenue.

Q. So that Judge Hanford in leaving the Rainier Club to get his car home would have to come down to Second Avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice on either of the two occasions which you have spoken of his going into the Saratoga bar or the Sutherland's, whether his car passed by; in other words, wasn't he waiting for his car to come along?—A. Yes, sir; he would wait sometimes and run toward the car.

Q. No, no, but I mean—do you know how often that car passed by?—A. That same car, or other cars, do you mean?

Q. The car that runs past his house, how often does it go along Second Avenue?—A. I should judge about 10 minutes.

Q. On that evening do you know whether it is 10 or 15 minutes?—A. Do you mean what time of night, at 6 or 7 or at midnight?

Q. How frequently?—A. What do you mean?

Q. Say at 6 o'clock?—Well, at 6 o'clock, that is a busy time with the people and I think that they go quite often.

Q. How frequently does the Broadway car run past there?—A. Well, I should judge about 10 minutes.

Q. Did you observe or notice it particularly so that you would be able to state exactly?—A. No, I did not; no.

Q. So far as you know then no car went by after he left the Rainier Club and reached Second Avenue which he did not take?—A. That he didn't take—why, no.

Q. Mr. Kolar, are you the Burns operative of that name who was on the case of the dentist, Dr. Johnson, in Chehalis?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was tried for murder there?—A. Yes.

Q. You are the same operative?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The WITNESS. I want to say something more there, I think; I will tell you that I was not on the dentist—I was on the murderer himself, Clark, so I was not on the dentist.

Q. You were not the man who tried to induce the dentist to——

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a moment.

Mr. HUGHES. I thought you would object, but the witness was going on to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the question last asked the witness strikes the chairman as bad.

Mr. HUGHES. I desisted at the suggestion of the chairman.

CHARLES REED, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. Charles Reed.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Three years and a half—three years and six months.

Q. Where did you live prior to that?—A. San Francisco.

Q. What is your business?—A. Barkeeper.

Q. Where?—A. The Saratoga bar.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. Three years and two months.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Do you know him by sight?—A. I never knew him by sight until just about four months ago. When he entered this courtroom, I was told by parties that that was Mr. Hanford. Previous to that I had never known the gentleman.

Q. Have you seen the gentleman who you just learned to be Judge Hanford?—A. I never saw him to recognize him as Judge Hanford.

Q. Have you seen him—whether you recognized him as such?—A. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Reed, we want explicit answers from you. How long since you first saw that gentleman whom you now know to be Judge Hanford?

A. Since last year, 1911, the latter part.

Q. Will you tell the committee why you seemed to evade my first question and gave me the impression that you did not know Judge Hanford and had not seen him?—A. No, sir; I had never known him.

Q. Has anyone been talking to you as to your testimony?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which you would give here?—A. No, sir.

Q. You realize, of course, that you are testifying under oath?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Now, how long is it since you first observed the gentleman whom you now know to be Judge Hanford?—A. Since last fall some time when I was working on the night shift at the Saratoga bar.

Q. What time did you go on duty?—A. 5.45 p. m.

Q. What time was it you saw him?—A. 6 or 6.30.

Q. Was he at the bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Drinking?—A. He drank a glass of sherry and egg.

Q. When did you next see him?—A. I never remember seeing him until just to-day.

Q. Did you see him only the once?—A. That is only once now that I remember.

Q. Only once?—A. Yes, sir; that is, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Do you say that while you were on duty there that he was in the saloon only once?—A. To the best of my knowledge, sir; yes.

Q. Is there any other bartender who is on duty at night but you yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. Who?—A. Well, there is four of us, and we work alternate, or vice versa; there is two of us always on shift and sometimes three.

Q. Who are the others?—A. Mr. Powell and Mr. Keyes—Mr. F. W. Powell, and some extra men—there was quite a few extra men. Three of us off and on in the nighttime.

Q. Who were the other two who have been there since you have?—A. Mr. Powell and Mr. Keyes.

Q. What is Mr. Powell's first name?—A. Fred.

Q. And how do you spell the other man's name?—A. K-e-y-e-s—he pronounces it Kies.

Q. And his first name?—A. William.

Q. Mr. Reed, how is it that if you saw this gentleman on only one occasion a long time ago and served him with sherry and egg that you remember him and the occasion and what he drank?—A. Well, sir, just by his appearance and the fact that shortly after that I was changed on the day shift, and I have never been on the evening shift since, and since that I never saw the gentleman, and if he had not come into the court room to-day I would not have known him.

Q. How soon after that were you changed to the day shift?—A. The 1st day of January.

Q. Who took your place on the night shift?—A. Mr. Powell.

Q. Is he here now?—A. He is here.

Mr. McCoy. I did not get the month during which you were at this place on the night shift.

A. Well, sir, I was on the night shift two years previous to the 1st day of January, 1912.

Q. And is it a hotel?—A. No, sir; it is a wholesale and retail liquor house with a bar in the rear—what is called the Saratoga bar.

Q. Who owned it?—A. Charles Haskall.

Q. Does he live here in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it a much frequented bar?—A. Yes, sir; it is a frequented place; we are always very busy all the time.

Q. A great many people coming in there?—A. Hundreds, day and night.

Q. What time was it you went on duty?—A. 5.45 p. m.

Q. Is it more frequented then than any other time?—A. That is the busy time, from 4 o'clock p. m. until 7 it is very, very busy.

Q. And so busy that it takes four bartenders to run it?—A. Three.

Q. I wish you would explain to the committee again why it was that, never having known Judge Hanford until this morning and the bar being so busy, and never having served him but the once, that you recognized him this morning?—A. Well, sir, the bar is very busy and we are allowed to talk to nobody; our rule is that we are not supposed to hold any conversation; and this evening I was working in the night shift and I worked at the middle of the bar, and the man at the end of the bar and the man at the other end of the bar fronting next to the street was very busy, and I remember this gentleman was waiting, and I asked him what he would ha e, and he said, "A sherry and egg," and I served him with a sherry and egg. I never knew who he was.

Q. When was that?—A. That was the latter part of last year; I could not say exactly the month, but I think it must have been October, or probably it might have been December; it was cool.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Three years and a half.

Q. Has anybody ever told you that Judge Hanford came into that bar frequently?—A. No, sir; I never heard his name mentioned really around there until just through the newspapers and people saying something about the matter.

Q. Has anybody recently had a talk with you about testifying here?—A. No, sir; no, sir; they have not.

Q. Nobody spoke to you at all?—A. Not a word; to the best of my knowledge nobody spoke a word.

Q. You say not to the best of your knowledge—if anybody spoke to you within a week you would know it?—A. Yes, sir; I would surely have remembered it; yes, I think I would have remembered it. No, sir, no one did.

Q. What was it that impressed it on your mind that he drank a sherry and egg?—A. Well, he asked me—I asked him what he would have, sir.

Q. Is that an unusual drink for people to take?—A. No, sir.
Q. You serve a good many of them, do you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the fact that some one man in a city of 250,000 people asked you on one certain occasion for a sherry and egg, it impressed itself on your mind, did it?—A. Oh, no, sir; no, sir; no, sir.
Q. Well, you remembered that he did ask it?—A. I remember he did because I have a pretty clear memory of customers coming in there.
Q. Tell us some other men that came in there on that same evening and took a drink there.—A. I could not tell you their names, sir.
Q. Do you know the people that come into the bar?—A. No, sir; I do not know but very few; I am not acquainted personally with any of them.
Q. Are there any men in Seattle who made it a practice to go into the Saratoga bar?—A. Not that I know of; we have a great many customers; yes, we have a large trade.
Q. Are they people who come in there once and then never come there again?—A. I could not say; yes, I believe there is—we do have some transients there—we do some transient trade.
Q. There are some people who come there once and come again and again and again and again, are there not?—A. Yes.
Q. Now, tell us some one of those men who came there that night and took a drink and what he drank.—A. I could not do that, sir; I could not tell their names.
Q. Do you know anybody who did come in there that night?—A. I could point them out if I could see their faces.
Q. You mean that if you could see their faces here that you could remember whether they came in there that night?—A. No, sir.
Q. Is that what you mean?—A. No, sir.
Q. What do you mean?—A. Well, if I was down there at the saloon, if I was in the saloon and would see somebody of our regular customers in there then I might say that they were in there that night.
Q. What do you mean—if you saw them in the saloon you would be able to say whether they were there on that particular night; is that it?—A. No, sir; I could not say that.
Q. So you have not any recollection of any other man who was in there on that night?—A. Not personally, I have not, outside of the barkeepers.
Q. No other man that came in there and took a drink on that night?
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask any further questions?
Mr. HUGHES. No, sir.

LON TINDALL, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I have lived in Seattle since 1907, off and on——
Q. What is your present occupation?—A. I should have said since 1897 instead of 1907.
Q. That is about 15 years.—A. Off and on; I have been away a part of the time; the last trip I was gone five years in Alaska.

Q. How long have you been here since your return from Alaska?—A. Well, I came back from Alaska in 1904 and I went away in 1907 and I came back—it will be the 25th day of this month, three years ago.

Q. What is your business at the present time?—A. Barkeeper.

Q. Known as the Sutherland bar?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you spell Sutherland?—A. S-u-t-h-e-r-l-a-n-d.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; I mean to say not personally acquainted with him.

Q. Do you know him?—A. Yes, I know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. I have known the judge for the last 10 years, I guess, by sight.

Q. What were you doing when you first knew him by sight?—A. I was tending bar.

Q. Where?—A. Billy Howard's, Occidental and Yesler Way.

Q. Was that here in Seattle, Mr. Tindall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get acquainted with him by sight then; in your place of business?—A. No, sir; I never got acquainted with him.

Q. Well, by sight, I said.—A. Yes.

Q. In your place of business?—A. He was pointed out to me, yes, sir.

Q. Since you have been in the Sutherland bar have you ever seen Judge Hanford drinking at that bar; if so, you may tell the committee.—A. There was only one time I ever saw him drinking at that bar and only one time that ever I waited on him at the bar.

Q. When was that?—A. That was about 7 or 8 months ago.

Q. Was that the only time?—A. On a Saturday evening.

Q. And was that the only time you saw him in the place?—A. Yes.

Q. What hours do you serve?—A. I open up in the morning and get through at a quarter to 4 in the afternoon.

Q. How long have those been your hours?—A. Ever since I worked for Mr. Sutherland.

Q. Who takes your place when you leave?—A. A man by the name of George Brucher.

Q. How do you spell that?—A. Well, I could not spell the last name—it is a French name—B-r-u-c-h-e-r, I think.

Q. And you pronounce it Bruche, do you?—A. I do, yes, sir; I always have.

Q. Well, that is what the people generally call him, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. What did the judge drink on the occasion you speak of?—A. A pony of benedictine.

Q. And what time of day was it?—A. This was Saturday evening; I come back on Saturday evening about half past 6; I get through at a quarter to 5 and I come back at half past 6 on Saturday evenings and work for two hours extra to relieve the other two barkeepers.

Q. And it was when you were on this extra time that you noticed him take that drink?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the only one you saw him take?—A. The only one I ever saw him take since I have been working for Mr. Sutherland.

Q. That would cover how long a period of time?—A. Well, the 25th day of this month it would be three years since I have been working there.

Q. Prior to that time, just before that time, where did you work?—A. I came back from Nevada; I was a year and a half in Nevada.

Q. Well, you went to work for Mr. Sutherland, and where did you work last before that in Seattle?—A. I never worked for no man in Seattle, except Mr. Sutherland, outside of Mr. Howard.

Q. How long since you worked for Mr. Howard?—A. Well, the last time I worked for him was 1900.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen wish to ask him any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Did you say you came back and——

The CHAIRMAN. One moment, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Higgins, or Mr. McCoy, do you wish to ask him any questions? Now, Mr. Hughes, you may interrogate him.

Mr. HUGHES. Did you come back on one Saturday evening only, or was that your regular custom?

A. It is my regular custom every Saturday evening at half past 6 to work until half past 8; two hours.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever see him drinking while you were working at Howard's?

A. No, sir; no, sir.

Q. You say you saw him in there in Howard's?—A. No, sir; I never saw him in Howard's saloon.

Q. Well, where was it you said you saw him?—A. On the sidewalk; he was pointed out to me on the street as Judge Hanford.

DANIEL O. PRESTON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee.

A. Daniel O. Preston.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Eight years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. The Butler bar.

Q. How long have you been tending bar?—A. Since I have been here; eight years.

Q. Speak up.—A. Since I have been here; eight years.

Q. Where are you now employed?—A. The Butler bar.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. Eight years.

Q. Then all of your services as bartender has been at Mr. Butler's place——A. Since I have been here.

Q. Were you bartender before coming to Seattle?—A. I was.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Well, not very long; I suppose about a year; not personally—I have seen him.

Q. Can't you speak a little louder?—A. My throat has been bothering me and I have a bad throat.

Q. Where did you get to know him by sight?—A. Why, I saw him on the street the first time that I ever knew who he was.

Q. Did you ever see him in your place of business?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you first saw him in your place of business?—A. Well, this winter sometime, I do not recollect exactly.

Q. Give your best recollection.—A. Well, I should say since the holidays, I could not say exactly.

Q. What was he doing there?—A. Why, he came in there and had a drink.

Q. What did he take?—A. He took a cocktail.

Q. Who waited on him?—A. I did.

Q. After that did you see him again?—A. Well, I seen him maybe once or twice a week, sometimes not for three or four weeks, and sametimes for a week I would see him once or twice.

Q. Did he drink on those subsequent occasions?—A. As usual, the some thing, a light Martini was all.

Q. Did he ask for it, or do you know when you see him what he wants and prepare it for him?—A. Well, I always ask the question what he will have.

Q. How often during your watch does he come in?—A. I never saw him but the once.

Q. That is, you mean once during your watch?—A. Yes.

Q. About what hour of the day?—A. Well, somewheres around 6 o'clock, I don't know exactly; I don't go on watch until 5, and I saw him probably about 6.

Q. What is your rush hour?—A. About from 4 until 7 or 7.30.

Q. About how often each week would the judge come in during the time you speak of?—A. Well, once or twice; some weeks twice and some weeks maybe once, and sometimes I would not see him for a week.

Q. Do you mean by that that you can recall once or twice a week, or that that is all you noticed?—A. Well, we generally recognize a man when he comes in regularly at all.

Q. What I want to get at is, might he not come in there without your noticing him?—A. Not very well.

Q. Is there any other bartender on duty when you are?—A. One.

Q. How many people are there at the time between 4 and 7, during the rush hours?—A. Sometimes there is 20 or 25, and sometimes there is 5; they don't come in regularly.

Q. And only two of you to wait on them?—A. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask any questions further?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

Q. This bar which you speak of is in the Butler Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Butler Hotel is located at the corner of James Street and Second Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is one of the leading hotels of the city?—A. Supposed to be.

Q. The bar is a hotel bar and not an ordinary bar off the street?—A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, it is back——A. Away back.

Q. Back from the lobby of the hotel, in the back end of the house?—A. Of the house.

Q. At any of the times when you saw Judge Hanford at that bar did he appear to you to be under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see anybody in your place under the influence of liquor?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Do you recall who they were?
Mr. HIGGINS. Do you think that we want to put that into the record?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes; otherwise I would not have asked it.
The WITNESS. Am I obliged to mention the names of people that come in there?
The CHAIRMAN. Repeat the question to the witness.

(Question repeated to the witness.)

The WITNESS. I say, am I obliged to mention the names?
The CHAIRMAN. Repeat the question to the witness.

(Question repeated to the witness.)

The CHAIRMAN. What is your answer?
A. I am asking you whether I am obliged to mention the names.
The CHAIRMAN. We will come to that branch later on; now, you are not asked what the names were.
The WITNESS. You asked me who they were.
The CHAIRMAN. No; I did not. Now listen to the question, Do you recall who they were?
A. I said I did.
Q. You do recall who they were, do you?—A. Yes, sir; I do.
Q. Well, that is an answer to my question.—A. I didn't understand it that way, if I did I would not have hesitated.
Q. I thought you did not. Now, have you talked to anyone since you were subpœnæd as a witness?—A. No, sir; I did not get the subpœna until late last evening.
Q. Have you any instructions as to testifying about persons who patronize your bar?—A. No, sir.
Q. Or talking about persons who patronize your bar?—A. No, sir; I do not make it a rule to do it anyway.
Q. Sir?—A. I never make it a rule to do it anyway; I don't think it is right.

LEE A. COGHLAN, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.
A. Lee A. Coghlan.
Q. Spell your last name?—A. C-o-g-h-l-a-n.
Q. Where do you live?—A. 518 Marion Street.
Q. Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I have been here since 1898, about 13 years.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a barkeeper.
Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. I have been in that business about 15 years.
Q. You are working for someone else?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who do you work for?—A. Now?
Q. Now.—A. A. A. Bronson, at 823 Second Avenue.
Q. Is that just a saloon, or is it in connection with a hotel?—A. Just a saloon.
Q. How long have you been with Mr. Bronson?—A. I have been about five years with Mr. Bronson—five years and seven months.
Q. What hours do you work?—A. Well, I have worked about seven or eight months on the day shift, but now I mostly work at night.

Q. Beginning what hour?—A. At 5 in the evening, and—well, I work a couple of hours in the middle of the day and from 5 in the evening until 1 o'clock at night.

Q. Is 5 o'clock the time when you change watch generally?—A. No; it is not a change; but then it is just another man that has been off—that has been on at the noon hour and then comes back to finish out his shift.

Q. Is that an exception, or has it been the usual time for making the change?—A. Well, it is the usual time for the men to come back—there is one man goes off at 6.30, that is the time that the change is made for the other man, but the change for the man that has been off to come back, is 5 o'clock.

Q. You work from five until about one?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. I have worked that way for over four years, or over five years, I should say.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. Well, I have had him pointed out to me maybe seven or eight years ago on the street that that was the Federal judge.

Q. Has Judge Hanford patronized your bar?—A. Very seldom.

Q. When did you first see him there?—A. It is—maybe I noticed him first maybe about three years ago.

Q. About what hour of the day did he come in?—A. Well, it would be maybe about 11.30 at night.

Q. Did you wait on him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he drink?—A. Well, he only had, the only time I ever gave him a drink was a cocktail or a benedictine.

Q. Is that an intoxicating drink?—A. Well, benedictine is simply a cordial; you could not drink enough of it to make you intoxicated; it would make you sick, but it is a very sweet sirupy stuff; it is just an after-dinner cordial.

Q. When did you last see him there?—A. Well, I think it was about, maybe a week ago or maybe two weeks, I don't know, I could not keep track.

Q. What did he drink then; do you know?—A. Benedictine.

Q. Do you remember him drinking anything else at your bar than benedictine?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you make a specialty of that drink?—A. No, sir; we generally give him a man what he orders.

Q. I know, but I just wanted to know if you made a special drive or run on benedictine; did the judge drink anything else at your bar than that drink which you know of?—A. Well, not at that time; no.

Q. At any time, to your knowledge?—A. Well, I have made him a cocktail, but he very seldom comes in there, very seldom.

Q. I am not asking you that question now; how often would you say do you recall waiting on him when he took a cocktail?—A. Maybe half a dozen times altogether.

Q. Is there anybody else on duty while you are there?—A. No; only on Saturday nights.

Q. What was the judge's usual time at your place?—A. About 11.30 at night.

Q. Did you see him there earlier than that at any time?—A. Very seldom, very seldom; I may have noticed him once or twice in all that space of time in the three or four years.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

JOHN J. COFFEY, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. John J. Coffey.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 4403 Thirty-ninth Avenue southwest.

Q. In the city of Seattle?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Nearly five years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am manager and steward of the Rainier Club.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Since the 1st of January two years ago; but I am engeged there for the whole five years—I mean, I have been managing it since the 1st of January.

Q. You have been there for five years, but you changed your job?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During that time?—A. Quite so.

Q. What position did you have when you entered the club?—A. Head waiter of the various dining rooms.

Q. How long did you occupy that position?—A. For two years.

Q. What was your next promotion?—A. Manager and steward.

Q. Manager direct?—A. Yes.

Q. Been manager now how long?—A. Two years last January.

Q. How large is the membership of the club?—A. It is 650, I will say, resident and 150 nonresident, or thereabouts.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is a member of the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Strangers are admitted to the club only as guests of members, I presume?—A. Quite so.

Q. Now, during your term—when did you get acquainted with the judge, either by sight or otherwise?—A. Well, by coming in daily contact with him since I have been an employee of the Rainier Club, which is every day; I have seen him practically every day.

Q. What hours?—A. During the noon period, and also the afternoon and evening.

Q. Have you served the judge drinks at any time, or have you seen others serve him with drinks there?—A. Well, I have seen others, very seldom, and always in the evening.

Q. What hours?—A. About, say, half past 5.

Q. About what time?—A. Well, I generally get away at half past 8, though quite frequently I am there at later periods—at 10 and 11 and 12 and 1 o'clock when various entertainments are taking place.

Q. What have you to do with noticing anything about the drinks that are served to the patrons of the club?—A. Why, you might say I am general supervisor, and I see most everything happening.

Q. Do you know all the drinks that are served to all those who attend the club?—A. No; not positively, only in a general way.

Q. Where is your location with reference to the place where the drinks are ordered and the place where they are drunk?—A. Well, that would be what you might say on the main floor; that is where they are most generally served.

Q. By "served" do you mean the preparation of them or the drinking of them?—A. Well, the bell boys serve them. We have a service bar, and they are taken from there and served at the various tables, wherever the various gentlemen may be seated.

Q. How is the record of them kept?—A. By check system.

Q. Is there any book entry made of those?—A. Yes, sir; it is a monthly account which is charged at the expiration of the month to the various members, according to the foods which they may have partaken of and the like.

Q. Would that entry show what the charge was for, whether for meals including drinks, or would it show the drinks separately?—A. Yes; it would be itemized. It would show the drinks separately, and also the food.

Q. What is the habit, generally speaking, as to whether the members of the club pay their own bills or are the guests of other members—are drinks served on one person's order for a number of persons; in other words, is there treating permitted in the club?—A. In most cases; yes, sir.

Q. The charge, then, would not show any name except the name of the purchaser?—A. No, sir; not as applying to a company of men.

Q. But when an individual ordered a drink, of course, it would be charged to him as an individual?—A. Yes; he would be presented with the tab to be signed.

Q. What has your observation been as to Judge Hanford's drinking at the club?—A. My observation is he has always impressed me as being a temperate man.

Q. I did not quite ask you that question; what has your observation been; what did you notice or see?—A. Nothing particularly, only that I could see invariably that I never saw the gentleman drinking in midday or early afternoon during the whole period of my career there.

Q. What hour did you see him take any drinks there?—A. About half past 5 I occasionally saw him take a bottle of beer.

Q. Did you see him take any other drink than beer?—A. No, sir; most generally it was beer.

Q. Was that with his meals or without?—A. No, sir; without.

Q. In company or alone?—A. Well, quite frequently alone and occasionally he has dined there with other gentlemen, not very frequently, and at that time he might have a cocktail and other times no.

Q. That is, if he took dinner there he would probably, or might, take a cocktail before eating, but when he did not take dinner you think he drank beer?—A. Yes; I never noticed him drink more than one bottle of beer.

Q. At one time?—A. That is, during the course of the afternoon.

Q. Do you mean one bottle of beer at one time, or one bottle of beer altogether?—A. One bottle of beer altogether.

Q. You say you never saw him drinking any beer but one time?—A. To the best of my knowledge.

Q. To the best of your recollection?—A. Yes, sir; to the best of my recollection.

Mr. HUGHES. Your last question was if he never saw him drink beer but once—I understood it so, but I don't think the witness did.

Whereupon the question and answer are read by the stenographer.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask him any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. You refer to drinking beer—you refer to the room downstairs in which there are tables where the guests are served with drinks and where they chat and play dominoes?—A. Quite so.

Q. Or whist, as the case may be?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are not referring, when you speak of his drinking beer, to the dining room?—A. No; not applying to the dining room.

Q. During the five years that you have been connected with the Rainier Club have you ever seen Judge Hanford when he appeared to be under the influence of liquor or in any degree intoxicated?—A. Never, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever see Judge Hanford sitting around the table with other people, taking drinks?—A. Well, yes, sir; occasionally, not very often. It might be when some of his most intimate acquaintances would come, where he would have——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you mean that usually when he comes in there he sits by himself?—A. Well, Judge Hanford likes to play pool; he plays pool by himself; that is, he plays pool as a pastime, and then he is reading most of the time—he retires to the sun room where he picks up a magazine or other periodical and maybe would read for an hour or two—I have noticed that from time to time.

Q. Have you ever seen him when he was sitting at the table with others, himself drinking and they drinking too?—A. Yes, sir; but the extent of, as I say, just one bottle of beer—it would not be of long duration.

Q. You are quite certain it was never more than one bottle of beer?—A. To the best of my recollection, sir.

Q. Did you pay particular attention to what the guests take there?—A. Well, I can't help but notice what the guests take, because I am constantly around there and I notice the gentlemen, the various gentlemen from time to time, and I know their habits from coming in daily contact with them.

Q. Is there anybody in the club who drinks more than one bottle of beer at a sitting?—A. No; because most generally it may be a cocktail they will take.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? You may stand aside.

LOUIS P. FECHTER, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. Louis P. Fechter.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. The city of Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About six years or more.

Q. What is your business now?—A. I am not working at the present time.

Q. When did you last work?—A. About two months ago.

Q. What were you doing then?—A. Tending bar.

Q. For whom?—A. For Mr. Cooper, of the Stratford bar.

Q. Is that your regular occupation?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you followed it?—A. About 15 years.

Q. How long were you with Mr. Cooper, at the Stratford bar?—A. Five or six years.

Q. Is that a saloon merely or is it a hotel bar?—A. Just a saloon with a cafe in the rear, a lunch counter.

Q. What hours were you on duty?—A. Well, the last shift I worked was half-past eleven to half-past eleven at night, with two hours off at noon.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Not personally; no, sir.

Q. Do you know him in any way?—A. I know him by sight, that is all.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. About a year.

Q. How did you come to know him by sight?—A. Why, people saying that it was Judge Hanford, that is all.

Q. Where was he when you learned to know who he was?—A. On Second Avenue.

Q. Has he been at your place of business where you were engaged?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him in the saloon?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever serve him with drinks anywhere?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anybody also employed at that saloon where you were on the same watch?—A. Yes, sir; five of us working there.

Q. At the same time?—A. Oh, no; different shifts.

Q. How many on the watch?—A. Generally two or three at different times of the day.

Q. How many worked at one time?—A. Between the hours of 4 and 7 there is generally three.

Q. And you never at any time served him with liquors?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever see anyone else serve him with liquors at any time?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all; you may stand aside.

Mr. MCCOY. Just a minute. When was it he was pointed out to you on the street?

A. Well, sir, I could not recall.

Q. Was it a year ago?—A. About a year ago.

Q. What was the occasion of his being pointed out to you?—A. He just happened to pass and some one remarked to me—he said "There goes Judge Hanford."

A. Who was it that called your attention to it?—A. I can not say.

Q. Was it in front of your business place?—A. No, sir; we were walking up the street at the time.

Q. Was he walking toward you?—A. He passed us, I believe.

Q. And so as he passed some one said "There goes Judge Hanford."—A. Yes.

Q. How often did that sort of thing happen?—A. That was the only time.

Q. That was the only time you ever saw him?—A. No; not the only time I ever saw him, but that was the first time I ever knew him.

Q. How often have you seen him since then?—A. Well, sir, two or three different times, I believe.

Q. Where were those times?—A. On the street.

Q. Second Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time of day?—A. Well, sir, I can't tell you that. I don't know just exactly what time of day.

Q. What time of day was it when you first saw him?—A. In the evening.

Q. What hour?—A. About between 6 and 7, I think it was.

Q. In the afternoon?—A. In the evening.

Q. What time of day was it when you saw him on the other occasions?—A. Well, sir, I don't remember just exactly; it was in the afternoon I believe, if I am not mistaken, I could not be positive about that.

Q. Could he come into the bar where you worked without your seeing him?—A. Well, sir, yes; he might have got to come into the bar. They do a big business there, and he might have got in there, and I would not have got a chance to see him if he came when we were busy. Sometimes we don't get a chance to see people that are standing at the bar near us, on account of the crowd.

Q. Do a great many people come in there whom you do not see and whom you do not notice?—A. Well, no; I guess not. Only if a person is busy you don't notice him if he comes in and takes a drink and goes out.

Q. Unless you happened to serve him you would not notice him?—A. You would not pay a great deal of attention to him.

Q. You would not notice him at all?—A. Unless you looked up and glanced at him or something like that you would not pay any attention, because you are busy.

Q. What do you mean—do you mean that you would look or take a glance at everybody that comes in there?—A. Yes.

Q. If you were not busy?—A. Yes.

Q. I did not have in mind just what hours of the day you worked there.—A. Well, I worked there—I used to go to work at half past 11 in the morning and work until 5 and go on at 7 in the evening until half past 11 in the evening, a 10-hour shift.

Q. On this occasion when you first saw Judge Hanford, he passed you, as you say—was he walking in the same direction you were walking in?—A. No, sir; he passed us—I believe we were going the other way, and he passed us.

Q. That is, you were going in opposite directions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say he passed you in the same direction.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did this person who was with you say anything particular about him?—A. That was all that was said.

Q. Just what did he say?—A. He said, "There goes Judge Hanford." I didn't know who he was; he happened to be passing by.

Q. And was that all he said?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when he said "There goes Judge Hanford" did you ask him any questions?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ask him why he called your attention to the fact?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you know that somebody named Judge Hanford was the Federal judge here?—A. I did; yes, sir; I read it in the papers, but that was the first time that I saw him to know him.

Q. When did you read it in the papers?—A. From time to time.

Q. Well, had you read it in the papers before this occasion when you saw him first?—A. Well, yes; some years ago I would see little cases—I would read a thing or something that he was the judge; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. You are excused.

ELMER ANDERSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

Q. Where did you first see him?—A. In the Sutherland bar.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He walked through there to use the toilet.

Q. Anything else?—A. No, sir; he walked out again. That was the first time I met him to know who he was.

Q. Have you seen him drink at the bar there?—A. Yes.

Q. What would you give him each time?—A. Benedictine.

Q. Have you ever seen anyone else waiting on him?—A. No; about 7 o'clock—he used to come in about 7 o'clock in the evening and I would get through at a quarter to 8.

Q. What is his usual hour to come in there?—A. About 7 o'clock.

Q. What are your rush hours?—A. From 4 to half-past 6.

Q. During that time what opportunities have you had to notice customers that you are not waiting on?—A. Not any, Judge.

Q. What opportunity have you to take any note of the customers you do wait on?—A. Not any at all; I paid attention to nobody.

Q. Give us some idea as to how busy you are during those hours.—A. Well, if you come down there, it is a case of grab everything and put it out and set them up and take them off.

Q. Do you set them up about just as fast as you can put them up?—A. You set them up about as fast as you can; you don't notice anybody.

Mr. McCoy. Were you served with a subpœna?

Q. What was it you said to him?—A. I didn't say anything at all.

Q. You didn't say anything to him?—A. No, sir; except I said, "What do you want to bother me for, I have to work." I said, "I can't go up here—I don't know anything—I have to work," that is what I said.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. Yes, I told him that last night.

Q. You are positive that is all you said?—A. I am positive of it, I told him last night, "What do you want to bother me for, I have to work."

Q. Didn't you say, "I will get you into trouble," or something of the kind?—A. I never did.

Q. And didn't you call him by any foul name?—A. No, sir.

Whereupon a recess is taken until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess.

All parties present as at former hearings, except Judge Hanford.

J. O. Taft, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Tell the committee your name.

A. J. O. Taft.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Taft?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. A little over 14 years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Architect.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Oh, off and on for close to 40 years.

Q. And all the time you have lived here?—A. No; I have lived here for about 14 years, a little over.

Q. Well, I say you have practiced it all the time you have lived here?—A. No, not all the time, not all the time.

Q. Mr. Taft, do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Oh, I presume close to seven years.

Q. Is that a personal acquaintance or a sight acquaintance?—A. Just a sight acquaintance.

Q. If at any time you have seen Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant, please tell the committee of it.—A. Well, I could not name the times, but it has been quite a number of times, so far as that is concerned.

Q. When first, as far as you can recall?—A. Oh, it would be hard to tell, but I should judge probably the first time was some five or six years ago.

Q. Do you remember the circumstances?—A. No, not particularly. The only way I recollect it is his having been on the car with me going out on the street car. I live on the same car line that he does, and I often saw him in that condition on the car.

Q. Tell us, if you please, his appearance or actions or demeanor which lead you—tell us as well as you can what it was that led you to the conclusion you reached.—A. Well, the times that I saw him in the shape that I considered he was intoxicated were all of them practically the same condition; that is, he was in about the same condition; that was, that he was on the cars usually when I got on; it would be along anywhere from 11 to 12 o'clock at night, and I would notice him in the car often sitting just in front of me where he would begin to nod and pretty soon he would go to sleep. There was a number of times that I have seen him in that shape until the conductor would come to him and shake him and want to know if he didn't get off here; that would be on Galer Street, and he would kind of rouse up and look around and thought he was; he would get up and stagger off out of the car. I am not saying that he walked out, but he staggered out through the aisle, and I have heard comments by women on the car that it was a shame to see a man in such a shape. They didn't know who he was, I suppose, and possibly they might have known; I don't know as to that. That is the condition I have always seen him when I thought he was intoxicated.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the committee desire to take hearsay testimony, purely hearsay testimony?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not seem to me that that would be competent.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Of course, you know, Mr. Hughes, that this is not a lawsuit; it is much more in the nature of a grand-jury proceeding than a court proceeding. It is purely preliminary, and in any event the fact that those who were present made remarks about him would be competent in any court. What they said might not be, but the fact of their noticing him and commenting on his condition would be competent anywhere in any court.

Q. Can you specify any individual times or places other than you have stated?—A. No, I could not.

Q. For how long a time did you see the judge pass or repass on the street car under the circumstances you have mentioned?—A. How often, sir?

Q. No, for how long a period of time did you continue to ride on the car on which he rode under those conditions?—A. Well, I usually get on a car at—on Pine Street, anywhere from Second Avenue to Westlake, and—well, it is close to 2½ miles from there to where—well, about 2 miles to where he gets off, so I would be on the car riding about 2 miles; it would be close to—oh, probably a 15-minute ride.

Q. That began about five or six years ago you stated?—A. To the best of my recollection it did.

Q. And continued until when?—A. Well, I have not seen the judge in that condition now for probably—oh, I would say a couple of months, possibly a little more than that; I don't call to mind just when the last time I did see him in that condition, but to my best recollection it was about two months or two months and a half ago.

Q. Have you seen him on the car since that time?—A. I have not seen him on the car for a long time. I don't know when I did last.

Q. Could you in some way give the committee an idea of how frequently you saw him during the period of five years or so in which you did observe him in that condition?—A. No; it would be pretty hard to tell.

Q. By the week or month or in any way you can, can you give us some idea of the number of times?—A. No, it would be hard to tell that, because I would generally—when I was out it was on lodge nights that I went, and of course I would catch him going on the car; he might go home, don't you see, before or might go home after I did, but usually it was anywhere from 11 to 12 o'clock; so it would be pretty hard to tell; it might be an average of once a month, might not be that much, you see.

Q. How frequently did you see him going home at that hour when he was not, in your judgment, under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. Oh, I have seen him a few times, more particularly here—I don't call to mind just how long ago it was—there was some disturbance on the Seattle, Renton & Southern car line, and I am just mentioning this to refresh my memory with reference to the fact that I saw him less under that condition after that time than I did before. Now, I don't call to mind just how long ago that was.

Q. Was it this year?—A. How?

Q. Was it 1912 when the excitement to which you refer too place?—A. Well, I don't remember now. It seems to me it was last year; it seems to me it was about a year ago, or something like that.

Q. Well, on the times that you did observe him on the car, will you give the committee some idea as to the per cents, that is, the number of times that in your judgment he was or more or less intoxicated, as compared with the number of times that in your judgment he was not?—A. Well, no; it would be pretty hard to do it.

Q. Did you get my question?—A. Yes, I get it. It would be a pretty hard matter to do that, because I think I would have to say that it was pretty nearly every time that I saw him that he was more or less under that condition.

Q. Mr. Taft, have you ever had any litigation in his court or before him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any personal feeling against him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him elsewhere than on the street car?—A. Oh, I have seen him at different places; I didn't pay particular attention.

Q. If at any time you saw him elsewhere than on the street car, when in your judgment he was under the influence of intoxicants, tell us of that.—A. Well, I don't know that I could say that I ever did; at least, I don't call to mind now.

Q. Is there any other matter connected with this inquiry which you think you ought to tell the committee, that is within your knowledge?—A. Nothing that I know of. I didn't know that I had got to tell this.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask further, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask a few questions.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Taft, do you know how the committee obtained your name as a witness? Did you communicate the matter to any one?—A. No. There was a gentleman came to me yesterday, and said that I had been reported to him. I didn't know—that is the first I knew anything about it.

Q. Who was that?—A. I think it was Mr. Allen—isn't it?

Q. I don't know, I am sure.—A. Well, I think that is who it was; a man by the name of Allen.

Q. Do you know what his first name was?—A. I don't know; no. He said that I had been suggested to him.

Q. Do you know the conductors of the cars, or any of them, on the road on which you and Judge Hanford travel?—A. Yes, I know nearly all of them but not by name.

Q. You don't know them by name?—A. No, I don't know them by name.

Q. They are still here in the city, I suppose?—A. Yes.

Q. You say Judge Hanford would nod, apparently dose, in the car?—A. Just state that question, will you please?

Question read.

A. That he would not?

The STENOGRAPHER. "Nod."

A. Oh, nod. He went to sleep.

Q. Then he actually went to sleep; you know that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was not apparently dozing, but you testify that he actually went to sleep?—A. Well, he must have been asleep, or something else, because the conductor had to go and wake him up to get him off the car.

Q. You never saw anybody nod except Judge Hanford, on a street car, I suppose, in riding?—A. Oh, yes; I have done that myself.

Q. Oh, you have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is customary for a person to get up before the car comes to a stop?—A. Well, it is with a good many. I know I nearly always do myself.

Q. You state, I believe, that he seemed to stagger in going through the aisle; not walk straight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see anybody going through the aisle while the car was stopping who did not stagger and who did not walk unsteady?—A. Well, yes; I have seen them where they would walk pretty steady, but I never saw one when he would get off the car that he would come pretty near what we call taking a heeler. I have seen him not only once, but I have seen him time and again when he would get off the car, he would hardly hold his equilibrium.

Q. Dark nights, sometimes it is very slippery there, isn't it?—A. Slippery? Not very often, not on the pavement—not unless it has been raining.

Q. What?—A. Not unless it has been raining.

Q. But it rains very commonly during a large part of the year here, doesn't it?—A. Well, it rains once in a while in Seattle; yes, sir.

Q. You never saw anybody else slip or take a "heeler" in getting off of cars, I suppose?—A. I don't think I ever did, not unless they were full as——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you know how old a man Judge Hanford is?—A. Yes, sir; I know pretty nearly. I don't know, of course, how old he is, but I should judge he is——

Q. (Interrupting.) You know him to be 64 years old, or about that age?—A. How old?

Q. Sixty-four.—A. Well, I took him to be about 70. I don't know; I thought I was a pretty close guesser.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point, Mr. Hughes, would you mind putting in the record just what the judge's age is?

Mr. HUGHES. Sixty-four. Sixty-four at his next birthday, I think; approximately 64 years of age.

Mr. HIGGINS. When was he appointed judge?

Mr. HUGHES. He was appointed with the admission of the State into the Union, the first United States district judge, in 1889. We were admitted in November, 1889, and he was appointed, I think, in December.

Mr. DORR. He came in about the first of the year.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you through with the witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the statement that under the law it is incumbent upon the Federal court to open the session at Tacoma the first day, which is fixed in the statute. To-day is that day in the city of Tacoma. Judge Cushman has not yet arrived, and Judge Hanford has been compelled to go to Tacoma for that purpose this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Dr. E. J. BROWN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. Edwin J. Brown.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. I do.

Q. And you have been living here how long?—A. Since February, 1901.

Q. What is your profession?—A. At this time I am practicing law. However, I am also a dentist, and have dental offices here, but I do not practice the profession of dentistry, other than general supervision of them.

Q. When were you admitted to the bar?—A. I was admitted to the bar in Missouri in 1899, and Washington January, 1905.

Q. And when did you graduate in dentistry?—A. 1897, April 2.

Q. Have you practiced the profession of dentistry?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. And practiced law in Missouri and also in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Doctor, do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I said January, 1905, I believe it was January, 1904, that I was admitted to the bar—enrolled in the State of Washington, and I became acquainted with Judge Hanford in 1904.

Q. How much have you seen of the judge since?—A. I have seen the judge a great deal since 1905. I moved out in the Capitol Hill district in 1905.

Q. That would be in the same neighborhood in which he lives?—A. Not in the same neighborhood exactly, but we use the same car.

Q. All the way or part of it?—A. Very nearly. I live about—he goes out about four or five blocks farther than I do; maybe three or four blocks.

Q. Have you had any business before him or in his court?—A Yes; I have from time to time.

Q. During the time you have known him, beginning as far back as you can, if you have seen him when in your judgment he was under the influence of intoxicants, please tell the committee of it—A. The first time I noticed Judge Hanford under the influence of liquor was in 1904, in his court room, in the old court building, in the old court room

Q. Tell the committee the circumstances.—A. Well, we were—there was a—I believe we were engaged in a habeas corpus procedure before the court. I noticed Judge Hanford was almost unable to preside over his court, but I did not pay much attention at that time, because I had not known the judge prior to that time; but it was spoken of by other attorneys—other people in the court—that the judge had been drinking. But I did not pay any attention to that so much until I moved out in that district; in the district in which we traveled on the same car.

Q. Well, before leaving that incident, was a proceeding actually going on at the time you speak of, and was Judge Hanford on the bench?—A. Yes.

Q. In connection with that proceeding?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, what was there in his actions that led you to believe that he had been drinking excessively?—A Well, the judge acted the same as any man would act when he was either entirely exhausted from fatigue or under the influence of liquor, was all; just the way any man would act; he continually nodded, you know; he was not able to establish his equilibrium—keep himself awake and alive to what was going on there.

Q. Do you recall whether the hearing or proceeding was pushed to a conclusion at that time?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. Did he give a judgment or decision?—A He handed down his decision in writing about a week afterwards.

Q. Who were the attorneys participating?—A. I believe Samuel R. Stern and Mr. Gleason, of this city, were for the State, and Mr. John R. Parker and myself were, I think, were for the applicant.

Q. The petitioner?—A. The petitioner.

Q. Was it in the State court?—A In the United States court.

Q. In the United States court. Well, passing from that incident, when was the next time, so far as you can recall, when you saw him under the influence of liquor?—A It was along in the fall, I believe, of 1905, on the car, on the Broadway and Pike car The first time that I witnessed the judge on the car I was rather astonished to see a judge in that condition, and it made an impression upon me It was just after I moved out there, or it was sometime after I moved out there.

Q. Tell the circumstances on that occasion —A. Well, the judge boarded the car. It was easily to see that he was under the influence of liquor It was along about 11 or half past 11 o'clock in the evening, I think.

Q. Did you notice him as he got on?—A. Yes; I noticed him as he boarded the car at the corner of Second and Madison.

Q. Well, how was his gait with reference to steadiness or unsteadiness?—A. Well, the judge was unsteady. That night he walked up to the front of the car and sat on the side seat and faced the rear of the car, but of course he held onto his seat all right, but it was easily to see that the judge was under the influence of liquor. People in the car were winking at each other; that is what called my attention—really one of the things that called my attention to it so that I really kept watch of him

Q. Were there many on the car?—A. I would judge probably—oh, I don't just remember about that; probably 6 to 12 or 15 people—I don't know how many.

Q. Well, without asking what they said, did the people there make observations about his condition?—A. Well, nothing more than the usual observations in a case of that kind. It was easily to see that the judge was under the influence of liquor, and they recognized it. I remember that the conductor made a remark about the judge needing a bodyguard when I got off of the car.

Q. Which of you got off first?—A. I did.

Q. Were you near enough to him to observe whether there was any odor from his breath?—A. No.

Q. After that, do you recall some particular instances?—A. Why, I recall the instance—the instances, rather, but I could not say definitely as to the time; but I will say that it is a common thing to see Judge Hanford going out on the car in that condition

Q. During the time that you rode back and forth on that line, how often would you say that you saw him, by the month?—A. Well, I would not—of course, that would be—I would be willing to say that I saw the judge in that condition once a month, probably oftener than that, but I would not want to——

Q. (Interrupting.) And how often during that time would you see him, a month, when in your opinion he was not under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Oh, I have seen him—I have seen the judge very often when he was not under the influence of liquor.

Q. What was the difference in his demeanor when he was not under the influence and when he was under the influence as he rode on the car?—A. Well, Judge Hanford is rather an observing man, although a reserved man, but it is very easy to tell whether he is drinking or not, because when under the influence of liquor, the judge's head always tilts over and he is addicted to the habit of blowing [witness illustrating]. It seems his breath burns him. I have noticed it time and again.

Q. Has he that habit when duly sober or when not intoxicated?—A. I don't think so, and the judge's face flushes when he is drinking, too.

Q. How did he sit and how did he act with reference to going to sleep when you thought he was sober?—A. Well, I never seen—I never witnessed the judge asleep when he was sober.

Q. And how about his head lolling to one side and the other—— A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) When sober?—A. No. In observing Judge Hanford, if he is meditating about something or studying, why, he may move, but when Judge Hanford is sober he acts entirely different than he does when he is drinking. He constantly nods when he is drinking, and goes sound asleep. I have seen him pretty near fall off of his seat in the car.

Q. Was it at about the same hour you saw him on each occasion?—A. Anywhere from 11 o'clock until 1, but usually when the judge is drinking he gets in at the later hour, but I went home on the car with him anywhere from 11 o'clock until 1 in the morning.

Q. And that you say would cover a period from five to seven years?—A. Yes.

Q. During that time, doctor, how many times a year would you think you had seen him when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. I have seen the judge in that condition twice in one week, and again I could not say but what maybe two months would pass when I had not seen him in that condition; but I could safely say that I have seen him intoxicated, oh, once every 30 days.

Q. Did you go home every night at the hour or hours mentioned, or was it only occasionally?—A. Why, I leave my office between 11 and 12 every night. I generally try to leave about 11.30, from 11 to 11.30; sometimes as late at 1 o'clock. That is my law offices.

Q. Yes. Did you at any time see the judge elsewhere than on the street car when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. On the street, on the street, waiting for the car, or on the street cars, is the only places that I have ever seen him.

Q. Do you recall any instances on the street when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. Yes; I saw the judge about 18 months ago, I think it was—let me see—no; it is not that long—within a year—get on a street car up on Pike Street; that is, he was on the street waiting for the car; he was in that condition.

Q. What were the facts which led you to that conclusion?—A. Because I was on the car myself at that time and saw the judge getting on the car—waiting for the car and getting on the car.

Q. Well, while he was waiting, what was it, if anything, that attracted your attention to him?—A. Nothing further than when he stepped off of the sidewalk to come and get on the car it was easy to see that he had been drinking.

Q. What happened?—A. Well, he got on the car and he came——

Q. (Interrupting.) I know, but when he stepped off the sidewalk what was there peculiar in the way he did it?—A. His gait was unsteady; he didn't have his equilibrium like a man would step with a firm step, with a safe step, if he were not drinking.

Q. Did you, after he got on the car, observe him further?—A. Well, just as you would ordinarily. Of course it was—I was accustomed—had become accustomed to seeing the judge in that condition, and I don't know as I paid any more attention than I would—I had prior to that time.

Q. Well, did you see him under any other circumstances than getting on or getting off the street car, when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. No.

Q. Have you had any kind of personal trouble with the judge?—A. No, no, indeed; no.

Q. Have you any prejudice or feeling of any kind against him?—A. No; no feeling or no prejudice against him, other than that I believe that he should retire on account of his drinking. I don't think he is a fit man to be on the bench, but I have no prejudice.

Q. Well, I should have said personal feeling against him.—A. No; none whatever; absolutely no personal feeling. I think—I have tried cases before the judge. I think he is as fair a man on the bench as any I ever appeared before, when he was sober.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I care to ask.

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the title of the case, Mr. Brown, in which you said——

A. (Interrupting.) An application for a writ of habeas corpus. Littooy—I think it is H. C.—Henry Clay Littooy versus—against Cudahy, I believe. It seems to me Cudahy was sheriff at that time.

Mr. HIGGINS. That was a proceeding in habeas corpus?

A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. How long ago?

A. I believe that was in 1904.

Mr. HIGGINS. Now, won't you state to the committee during the progress of that case when you first thought that the judge was under the influence of liquor?

A. Why, when counsel were making their argument in the case—in a prior case. I think it was a case in which the Match company at Tacoma had a matter up in which a receiver was before the court, and while counsel were arguing their cases or presenting their argument to the court, the judge sat as though he was in a stupor all the time there.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, was it during the argument of the motion in the Match case that you thought he was intoxicated?

A. Yes; and the argument in the habeas corpus case as well.

Mr. HIGGINS. But the Match case preceded the habeas corpus case?

A. It did.

Mr. HIGGINS. And during the trial of the Match case you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. I did.

Mr. HIGGINS. And the habeas corpus case immediately followed that?

A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you appear as attorney in that case?

A. Yes; but Mr. Parker presented the argument in that case.

Mr. HIGGINS. What is his full name?

A. John R. Parker.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to ask the witness further?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Dr. Brown, the case that you refer to, the habeas corpus case, was that of Dr. Littooy, a dentist, who was arrested for violating the dental law?—A. Yes; Dr. Littooy was in—up in jail, and the idea was to have the law passed upon by the court.

Q. Dr. Littooy was a partner of yours, wasn't he?—A. No.

Q. Or associated in some way with you in dentistry?—A. No, sir.

Q. At least engaged in the same fight on the law that you were in this matter?—A. Well, we were defending Littooy in the matter.

Q. Did you participate as a lawyer or because of your attempt to contest the law in Littooy's case, as you had in your own?—A. I participated in that case as a lawyer for a fee. Dr. Littooy paid us for our work.

Q. How long did it take to introduce the testimony?—A. There was no—I don't think it—there was any testimony introduced other than that he was held in jail by the sheriff of King County.

Q. Do you recall upon what the question was submitted to Judge Hanford for decision?—A. It was upon the constitutional question presented.

Q. Upon an agreed statement of facts?—A. The question revolved upon the constitutionality of the law.

Q. Was it upon a demurrer to your petition for the writ of habeas corpus?—A. No.

Q. Do you know how the question arose? I am trying to get at the question of whether evidence was introduced.—A. No.

Q. Then it must have——A. (Interrupting.) I believe that there was no evidence introduced.

Q. (Continuing.) Been purely, then, an argument upon the law?—A. An argument upon the law.

Q. Do you recall whether that arose in the way of a demurrer to your petition?—A. No; we sought his release——

Q. (Interrupting.) The facts were set forth in your petition?—A. Yes.

Q. And challenged by demurrer—do you remember?—A. We sought his release from the sheriff of King County—the King County jail—on a writ of habeas corpus.

Q. I understand.—A. And the——

Q. (Interrupting.) You either had a trial of fact or of law?—A. A trial of law upon the constitutionality of the dental law of this State.

Mr. McCoy. Was not the case tried on a petition and a return?

A. On a petition; yes.

Mr. McCoy. And on the return of the sheriff to the writ of habeas corpus?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hughes. Was there a return of the sheriff then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the question was raised upon the return of the sheriff?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. It would not follow necessarily that the return would be admitted. You are satisfied there was no evidence introduced?—A. No.

Q. And simply an argument of the law?—A. A constitutional question was all that was presented before the court.

Q. What time of day was that?—A. My recollection of that, it seems to me it was—I believe the Match case occupied the forenoon. I think the Littooy case came on immediately after noon.

Q. Do you recall who were the attorneys in the Match case?—A. There were some gentlemen from Tacoma; I don't remember who they were now.

Q. You say that S. R. Stern and Mr. Gleason appeared for the sheriff?—A. I know that Stern appeared.

Q. S. R. Stern, of Spokane?—A. Sam Stern; yes, sir.

Q. Of Spokane?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know as to whether or not Gleason appeared?—A. I am not positive of that, whether Gleason appeared there or not. Gleason was assistant prosecuting attorney, and whether he appeared or not I don't know.

Q. Was there any announcement by Judge Hanford upon the close of the argument?—A. No.

Q. He simply stated that he would take it under advisement, did he?—A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall how much time was consumed in the argument?—A. I think probably an hour or an hour and a half a side. I believe—whether we were requested to present a brief or not I don't remember about that.

Q. All you observed was that often he closed his eyes and dropped his head?—A. Yes.

Q. And that was the only thing that you observed that was unusual, wasn't it?—A. Yes; at that time.

Q. And as a matter of fact when sessions of court were held in the afternoons, that was a very common thing, a habitual thing with Judge Hanford, when he was engaged right along in the continuous trial of cases, that often he would relax, close his eyes, and drop his head, and sometimes nodding; isn't that true?—A. Yes; but when he was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Isn't that true?

Mr. McCoy. Wait, let him answer.

Mr. Hughes. I beg your pardon. If you haven't answered the question, go ahead.

A. When the judge—the difference I observed was that when the judge's head would go over he would blow like and wake up quick and then observe the trial was going on again, and I thought then that he was drinking, and that is what I based my conclusion on.

Q. I thought so.—A. That he had been drinking.

Q. As a matter of fact you have always noticed him do that in the afternoons when he was engaged in a trial for considerable periods of time and working hard, have you not?—A. No, Mr. Hughes; I have seen the judge try cases when he did not do that at all.

Q. In forenoons, that is true.—A. In the afternoon as well. The last case I tried——

Q. (Interrupting.) Are you sure about that?

Mr. McCoy. Let him finish his answer.

A. The last case I tried before the judge was the case of Osborn against the city, and he didn't—Judge Hanford didn't sleep any that time.

Mr. McCoy. Was that in the afternoon?

A. Afternoon and forenoon, the entire day. I think we were two days trying the case. Judge Hanford didn't sleep any that time.

Mr. Hughes. You don't know what his condition of health was or what work he had been doing prior to that time?

A. No. No, I don't.

Q. I want to ask you one other question in that connection: When you have noticed him close his eyes and nod, have you ever observed that an attorney made an objection when the judge did not immediately rule and rule clearly upon that objection?—A. I have noticed Judge Hanford do that, have his eyes closed and when an objection was interposed the judge would rule immediately.

Q. And rule clearly?—A. Yes; when you would think he was asleep. When you would think he was asleep I have seen him raise his head and open his eyes and rule immediately.

Q. You have stated that he did certain things when he was drinking. Did you ever see him drink in your life?—A. No; because I don't go—I don't drink, and I seldom go where they do drink.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, Dr. Brown, all you wish to say to this committee is that you have seen certain manifestations; so far as you know you don't have any information, that is, personal knowledge, as to whether he had actually been drinking or not; you are simply describing the appearances that you saw?—A. I wish to say to the committee that I have never seen Judge Hanford take a drink, but my experience for the past 38 years has learned me to know when a man is intoxicated and when he is not, and I have seen Judge Hanford intoxicated many times.

Q. When you believed he was intoxicated?—A. I didn't believe it; I know it. I believed it because I knew it; yes, that is right.

Q. You are willing to testify to that?—A. Sure, certain.

Q. That is to say, when you haven't seen a man drinking and you do see him nodding, you are willing to testify that you can tell whether that is due to intoxicating liquors, to sickness, to overwork, or to age, you can always distinguish—is that what you mean to say?—A. No.

The CHAIRMAN. If the witness was not a lawyer, I would come to his rescue. The question is not fair. You pretend to state the hypothesis but only state one that was related by the witness. But as he is a lawyer, I take it that he will be able to distinguish.

A. Why, I take cognizance of a man's general demeanor, and in one instance he might not be drinking at all, if he were nodding from fatigue, or even from old age, but a man under the influence of liquor is very easily detected. The effects of liquor is different than anything else.

Mr. HUGHES. Your title of "doctor" is due to your being a doctor of dentistry and not of medicine?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you are the Dr. Brown who is at the head of the dental society or company which advertises with your picture at the head of it, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dr. Brown——A. (Interrupting.) The Brown Dental Offices, that is.

Q. How?—A. We don't go under the style of a company. The "Brown Dental Offices."

Q. You have said that you have no prejudice, Dr. Brown. Is it not true that you are one of the leaders of the Socialist organizations——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). A little louder, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. (Continuing.) That you are one of the leaders of the Socialist organizations here, and, as such, have some prejudice and opposition to Judge Hanford since the Dreamland Rink controversy?

A. It is not true that I am a leader of the Socialists. It is true that on various occasions they have seen fit to nominate me, to tender me nominations for public office. But it is true that I am a Socialist, but I have no prejudice against Judge Hanford because of his ruling in the Olsson case, or, rather——

Q. (Interrupting.) Or in the Seattle, Renton & Southern?—A. No. As a Socialist I would say that I have no prejudice on that score, because I believe that the more of those rulings we have the more we will flourish as a political movement.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes, I will ask him.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a moment. Judge Hanford decided against you in the Littooy case, didn't he?

A. He decided against—I could not say that he decided against us; he simply held that the law was not so bad that he would care to nullify it.

Q. His opinion would speak for itself. He denied the writ?—A. He denied the writ.

Q. I see by the papers that I have here that Charles R. Gleason appears. He is an attorney of this city?—A. Yes.

Q. And he was present at that hearing, was he not?—A. I am not positive as to that. I remember very distinctly that Samuel R. Stern presented the argument in the case.

Q. He was representing the State medical society, wasn't he?—A. The dental board.

Q. The dental board?—A. The dental society. He was, strictly speaking, the dental society's lawyer and special prosecuting attorney.

Q. I see that W. T. Scott, who was then prosecuting attorney—I think he is since dead——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, he died up in Alaska.

Q. (Continuing.) And Samuel R. Stern appeared for the defendant, or the sheriff?—A. That is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. What was the question involved; something to do with practice regulations under the laws of the State of Washington?—A. Yes; we sought to annul the law by a writ of habeas corpus; that is to say, Littooy had been arrested for practicing dentistry without a license, and we wished the court to pass upon the constitutionality of the law, and that question could be presented upon habeas corpus, in habeas corpus proceedings.

Q. Have you ever been in court when applicants for citizenship have appeared before Judge Hanford for qualification?—A. No. No; I never have.

Q. You have been asked whether you have seen Judge Hanford in the afternoon place his head on his hand and act as though he were asleep, or sit with his eyes closed?—A. Yes.

Q. You have observed that?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And——A. (Interrupting.) It was quite a common thing for the judge to do that.

Q. On the occasion of which you speak, when these habeas corpus proceedings were pending or being discussed, was his demeanor similar to that which you have observed while you have seen him on the street cars in the condition which you have described as one of drunkenness?—A. Exactly. Only I would say not to the extent—not to the extent that I have seen him under the influence on the cars.

Q. But the same sort of thing that gave you the opinion that he was intoxicated when he was on the cars at these various times is what happened when you were arguing that habeas corpus case here?—A. Yes; that is what reminded me of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. At what hour in the day did the judge take the bench that day?—A. I don't remember other than that it was at the usual court hour; that is——

Q. (Interrupting.) And how long did he sit on the bench continuously?—A. Well, we adjourned—they adjourned court at 12 o'clock noon, and took up at the usual hour in the afternoon; I know it was their usual court hour.

Q. And was it both before lunch and after lunch you saw him in this condition, or only after lunch?—A. No; just the same condition in the morning as he was in the afternoon. There was no difference.

Q. Well——A. (Continuing.) As far as I could see, I——

Q. (Interrupting.) How long did he continue, or did he hold court that day long enough to have time to get sober, that is what I want to get at. What is your opinion about that?—A. My recollection is that the court—my recollection is not very—not so distinct on that. It occurs to me that in the afternoon—it seems to me that in the afternoon the judge was much—was heavier than he was in the morning, but I noticed in the morning, while the argument was presented in the match case—it was an argument of some length—I noticed that he seemed to be in bad shape in the morning, but in the afternoon it seems as though he was heavier.

Q. Taking into consideration the questions asked you by Mr. Hughes and the conditions described by him, do you modify your conclusion any as to the judge's condition that day?—A. No. No. Other attorneys spoke of Judge Hanford's condition at that time.

Mr. MCCOY. Who are they?

A. And many times. I don't—I remember one young attorney, a young attorney—Mr. Daly, referred to Judge Hanford's condition.

Mr. MCCOY. What is his first name?

A. W. J. Daly. He has been in our offices for some eight years. He did not refer to him as being intoxicated, but he referred to his general condition as being in the last stages of anesthesia or something.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a scientific difference between anesthesia and intoxication.

A. That would, of course, mean that he was asleep.

Q. Well, it would mean more than that, wouldn't it?—A. That he had had an anesthetic, I suppose.

Q. It would mean that he was asleep from the influence of something that he had taken into his stomach——A. (Interrupting.) I suppose.

Q. (Continuing.) Or body.—A. The conversation, however, was not followed up; but I recall Mr. Daly making that remark.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Do you remember any other attorney who was in court that day and who mentioned the circumstance?—A. Well, I don't remember the names.

Q. But you think that others did?—A. Yes. Been many attorneys has remarked about the judge.

Q. I didn't hear that.—A. Many attorneys have remarked about the judge's condition and felt sorry for him.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. While he was on the bench?—A. Yes, while he was on the bench.

Q. Won't you give us the names of the attorneys?—A. Well, it is pretty hard to remember these names. Different ones, in the term of years as years go by.

Q. Can't you recall the names of any other than Mr. Daly?—A. No, I don't. I suppose I might have been able to if I had known that I was going to testify, possibly. If I had known it a year or two ago I am positive that I could have brought up the names of a good many.

Q. Well then, Dr. Brown, I will ask you after you leave the stand and sometime in the next two or three days to get to thinking about that and give us the list of names of attorneys that you can remember, if you are able to.—A. Well, if I am able to, I would not hesitate to.

Q. Do you know where the committee is living?—A. No, I don't.

Q. At the Hotel Washington Annex.—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask now a further question or two?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Judge Hanford was engaged the entire forenoon in the match case, was he not?—A. It occurs to me that the entire forenoon was taken up, and I think——

Q. (Interrupting.) And a part of the afternoon too, wasn't it?—A. I think so.

Q. And the rest of the day was taken up with your case, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. So that his entire day was occupied?—A. Yes.

Q. He did not take any recesses, did he; leave the court room?—A. I don't recollect as to that.

Q. Except, of course, during noon hour?—A. Yes, except the noon hour. If I was going to answer that question, I would rather think he did not take any recess that day. It occurs to me that he did not.

Q. And do you remember more definitely the title of the match case?—A. I don't. It was a match company that Mr. Lewis—J. H.——.

Q. (Interrupting.) James Hamilton Lewis?—A. James Hamilton Lewis. I think it was the company that he represented.

Q. He was one who made an argument?—A. No.

Q. He did not make any argument?—A. No, he was not there.

Q. He was not?—A. No.

Q. And you don't recall who the attorneys were?—A. No, I don't. I don't remember.

Q. Perhaps we can find from the record. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Just a minute.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Reference has been made, I think, to this meeting arising out of the injunction in the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railroad matter. Was that meeting gotten up or attended principally by Socialists?—A. No, the Socialists had nothing to do with that meeting whatever.

The Socialists not only had nothing to do with the meeting, but the Socialists had no speakers there. The Republican representative who is now running for Congress, Mr. W. J. Bryan, from Bremerton, was one of the speakers, I believe. That was one large meeting that the Socialists were ruled out of, so far as participating.

Q. You refer to what has been called the Rink meeting?—A. Yes, that is the Dreamland Pavilion meeting, and the Socialists had nothing—as I recollect it the Socialists had nothing to do with that meeting, other than attend; they possibly attended as citizens, individuals.

Q. They were not the prime movers in it?—A. Oh, no. No; they had nothing to do with it. If I recollect correctly, the Seattle Star, it seems to me, and some of the citizens here were the prime movers in that meeting; I think the editor of the Star and some of the other citizens; I don't know.

Witness excused.

MAGNUS SANDO, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. Magnus Sando.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live out in North Broadway.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 11 years.

Q. How long in that neighborhood where you now live?—A. About four years, not quite.

Q. What is your business?—A. Building contractor.

Q. And how long have you followed that business?—A. I have been following it ever since I came to Seattle and some time before, about 18 or 20 years, probably.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Just by sight, that is all.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. Oh, probably seven or eight years.

Q. Do you and he live in the same direction from the business part of the city?—A. We do now; yes.

Q. And have for how long?—A. For the last three years and a half.

Q. And how long do you say you have known him by sight?—A. For about seven or eight years, I think it is; since he built his home out there.

Q. Have you seen the judge when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Well, that is hard to say. I might have seen him and I might not, because—I could not say positive one way or another.

Q. Well, have you seen the judge at any time when he acted to you in a condition indicating that he was not his normal self?—A. Well, I might; I think I have seen him probably once or twice that might look as though—I been out late that night.

Q. Take the first time you saw him, where was that?—A. That is the only time; it would be perhaps on the street car going home in the evening.

Q. About what hour?—A. About 11 or 12, or something like that.

Q. At night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago was that when you first saw him that way?—A. Well, I could not say exactly.

Q. Approximately?—A. About three or four years ago, three years ago, not over.

Q. Where was he when you first noticed that there was something the matter?—A. Oh, I haven't paid any attention to it much except——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was it on the street car?—A. It was on the street car.

Q. Before he got on——A. (Interrupting.) On the street car.

Q. (Continuing.) That you first had your attention called to him?—A. It was right on the street car.

Q. What was it that called your attention to him?—A. Well, nothing especially only I could not say positive if he was under the influence of liquor or not, but he looked that way; but at the same time I was not close enough so that I could smell the breath or anything.

Q. What did you think at the time as to his condition?—A. Oh, I thought at the time probably he was under the influence of liquor.

Q. Well, how far would you say, would you say he was drunk?—A. No; I would not say that.

Q. What would you say, how would you describe it?—A. Describe it that—probably that he was not sober, or was not drunk, he had a few—probably a few drinks more than he ought to have.

Q. How did he act?—A. He acted as though he was drowsy, sleepy.

Q. Have you seen him often?—A. Not so very often; no.

Q. Well, did he act differently this time from other times that you saw him?—A. Not so very great deal different, because I haven't traveled home on the car very often together with him; it is only a few times.

Q. What is your usual time for going home?—A. My usual time going home, about half past 6 or so in the evening; but I go down town again sometimes for some meeting or something, and then I went out according to the length of the time I might go to some meetings or some lodges and so forth.

Q. Do you remember what it was, what you were doing, why you were down town that night; was it a lodge meeting?—A. Well, I think——

Q. Or do you remember?—A. Some lodge meeting down—or in what we call the Master Builders' Association.

Q. How do you fix the time you went home that night?—A. I could not fix the time exactly, except I know it was about—it was after 10 o'clock, 10 or 11 o'clock, or something like that.

Q. What is your best recollection as to the time it was?—A. Oh, about 11 I would—as near as I can place it.

Q. Which of you get off the car first?—A. The judge.

Q. Did you notice him as he got off?—A. Yes.

Q. How did he manage in getting off?—A. Oh, he walked off alone. He didn't have no help or anything of that sort.

Q. Did you notice him after he got off?—A. No, sir. It was dark, at night, so I could not tell.

Q. Was his condition such that you kept your eye on him to see how he would get off?—A. No; because——

Q. (Interrupting.) Why did you happen to notice him as he got off?—A. Well, as a rule he sit probably in the front part of the car and he goes out the back part of the car, you know, and I go further along, it would be 10 or 15 blocks further out.

Q. After that when did you see him? By the way, did you tell me as near as you could when that was?—A. Well, it is only in the evening.

Q. I know, but how many years ago did you say it was?—A. Well, I think this last winter or last fall.

Q. You spoke of another time when you saw him. I want to get to that. When was it?—A. Oh, about three years ago.

Q. Which time have you been describing, the one that happened last fall or winter or the one that happened three years ago?—A. Well, the last time.

Q. Well, now, take the other time about three years ago, where was he when you saw him then?—A. It was on the street car on the same road home; it is about the same time of the evening.

Q. And what were the circumstances?—A. Well, I never paid any attention to it, except what come into my mind now. In fact, I didn't know I was going to come up here, I didn't know what I was going to testify for or anything when I came up here, so I didn't know anything about it.

Q. Very well.—A. So I—it is pretty hard to—I never thought of it in fact, I never knew I was going to be here as a witness.

Q. On this occasion some three years ago, did you notice him before he got on the car, or after?—A. After.

Q. Which of you got on first, he or you?—A. Well, no; this last time he got on after I did.

Q. No, the last time; it is the last so far as we are concerned——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) But it was the first so far as he was concerned. Three years ago.—A. I can't say positive if he was on the car before me or I was on the car before him.

Q. What was it that attracted your attention to him that time?—A. Well, one reason, he went to sleep; that is what—the main thing that called my attention.

Q. Where did he sit from you?—A. He was sitting right in the front of me.

Q. The next seat?—A. No; but two or three seats in front of me—about a couple of seats.

Q. What impressions did his actions and conduct that night make on you at the time; what did you think then and there with reference to his condition?—A. Well, I thought at the time he was under the influence of liquor.

Q. Well, have you ever had any occasion to change that opinion?—A. No; I never——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you think so now?—A. Well, I am not positive now.

Q. What?—A. I am not positive now that he was under the influence of liquor.

Q. I didn't catch it.—A. I am not positive now.

Q. Well, did anything happen since then to make you change the opinion you formed then?—A. No; nothing particular; no.

Q. Do you think of any other time than those two when you saw him in that condition?—A. Not at present; I can't tell.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask the witness further?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

Mr. HUGHES. On the two occasions you have referred to, Judge Hanford's appearance and his demeanor and his deportment were entirely dignified?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. All you observed was that he nodded or appeared to be drowsy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How?—A. Yes, sir; that is——

Q. That is all, sir.

Witness excused.

Mrs. HATTIE W. TITUS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your full name, please.

A. Hattie W. Titus.

Q. Where do you live—it is Mrs. Titus, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 211 East Thomas.

Q. In the city?—A. In Seattle; yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Eighteen years.

Q. What is your husband's occupation, Mrs. Titus?—A. He is a physician.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; I know him—that is, I know him by sight. I don't know whether I have had an introduction to him or not.

Q. Well, I mean more particularly, do you know him when you see him?—A. I do; yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him that way?—A. Why, I am not sure; but for a number of years. I could not tell just when I first learned who he was.

Q. Five years or more?—A. Oh, yes; more.

Q. As many as 10?—A. Why, I should say so; yes, sir.

Q. Mrs. Titus, have you ever seen the judge when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you first saw him in that condition?—A. Why, I only seen him once when I thought he was in that condition, and that was about four or five months ago.

Q. Where was it?—A. He was on the Bellevue-Summit car.

Q. Is that the car that leads from the city toward his home, do you know?—A. Why, I don't know where the judge lives. I understood, though, that he did not live on that line.

Q. What direction was the car going at that time?—A. The car goes up Pike to Mellrose and from there onto Pine and from there onto Summit.

Q. If you can, tell me the directions by north and south, east or west; I would understand better.—A. Well, the car goes east and then north and then east again, and Judge Hanford was on the car all of the trip; that is, from down town.

Q. As far as you went?—A. As far as I went; yes, sir.

Q. Was there anyone with you at the time whom you knew?—A. Yes.

Q. Who?—A. My husband.

Q. Dr. Titus?—A. Yes.

Q. What first attracted your attention to Judge Hanford's condition?—A. Why, the fact that he was not sitting up straight in the car, that he had difficulty in holding his head up, and that he was trying to look at some one across the car and seemed to have difficulty in keeping his eyes fixed; his eyes would sort of partially close, and then his head would nod, and he would try to recover himself, but did not seem to be able to.

Q. Where did he sit from you, Mrs. Titus?—A. Directly opposite.

Q. Across the aisle—— A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) From you—quite close to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice any odor of liquor?—A. I don't recall that I did.

Q. Did he sit alone?—A. Yes.

Q. How far did you ride with him?—A. Why, he was on that car, I think, when we got on the car; I am quite sure that he was; and we had been at the theater, at the Moore Theater, and took the car at the corner of Second and Pike.

Q. And which of you got off first?—A. My husband and I got off first.

Q. How long a time would you say you were on the car with him?—A. Oh, about 15 minutes.

Q. And what time in the night was it?—A. Well, it was a little after 11; it was along—it was an opera and it was late when we——

Q. (Interrupting.) What time of the evening did the theater or the play cease?—A. Well, about 11. It might have been a few minutes before 11. I think it was about from 11 to a quarter past when we got home.

Q. Can you state whether others on the car seemed to notice his condition?—A. Why, there was one young lady who seemed to. She was sitting not far from us. She was very much annoyed at his—at the way he looked at her.

Q. At what?—A. She was very much annoyed at the way he looked at her; that is why my attention was attracted.

Q. From what you observed of the condition, I will ask you to tell the committee, Mrs. Titus, whether in your judgment the Judge was intoxicated?—A. Why, in my judgment he was intoxicated; yes.

Q. Did you ever see him on any other occasion—— A. (Interrupting.) Oh, yes.

Q. (Continuing.) In that condition?—A. Not in a state of intoxication; no, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him when you thought he was partially intoxicated, except that time?—A. No.

Q. Did you see him frequently when you thought he was not in any degree intoxicated?—A. I have not seen Judge Hanford as much as many people have. I don't know—I have seen him two or three times on the street and I have attended two or three sessions of court when he was on the bench.

Q. Well, have you see him often enough to compare him on this occasion and at other times?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Was there any marked difference in him this night from his condition at other times when you saw him?—A. Quite a marked difference; yes.

Q. To what did you attribute that difference?—A. I believed he was intoxicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen desire to ask the lady any questions?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Did you say that Judge Hanford was on the car when you and your husband got on the car?—A. I think he was. I am not certain, absolutely; I would not swear to that?

Q. Your husband is Dr. Herman W. Titus?—A. Herman F.

Q. Herman F. Titus?—A. Yes.

Q. Mrs. Titus, you say you have lived here continuously for 18 years?—A. Why, with the exception of going to Idaho for three months in 1906 and for about three months in 1907.

Q. I thought that Dr. Titus had been away a great deal of the time?—A. No.

Q. Did he run the Socialist paper in Idaho for some years?—A. No, sir.

Q. He did sometime, didn't he?—A. Why, during the trial of Moyer, Hayward, and Pettibone, in Idaho, which lasted about three months; that was all. He went to Toledo and was there about three months preceding—that was in 1906—preceding the time that he went to Caldwell, Idaho, and took the paper there.

Q. Well, was he there only during the trials in Idaho?—A. Why——

Q. (Continuing.) Hayward and Pettibone trials, running that paper only during that time?—A. We supposed the trial was to be held in 1906, but instead of that it was postponed and was not held until 1907, so we went in Idaho together for about three months in 1906, then returned to Seattle, and went back to Idaho in May or June of 1907, and was there until August and returned to Seattle.

Q. Was he there taking any part in those trials or in the running the paper?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the materiality of that, Mr. Hughes? If there is any point, if you will come to it directly we will see. What is the point?

Mr. HUGHES. To show her association with him and as to how much she has been away from here.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, ask her that directly. She can tell.

Mr. HUGHES. That is what I thought I was doing.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it is worth while going into the question that her husband is a Socialist. We don't care about that. I take it that is the real purpose——

Mr. HUGHES. That is one of the purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. (Continuing.) Just go ahead——

Mr. HUGHES. I am through.

The CHAIRMAN. (Continuing.) We will see whether it is proper.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all. That is all. I don't want to say anything or take any time that the chairman thinks would be wasted. That is all.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Who was this young lady, Mrs. Titus, do you know, who appeared to be annoyed that evening in the car?—A. Why, she was a friend of mine and was with us at the time.

Q. Would you care to give her name?—A. Her name was Miss Newman.

Q. What is her full name?—A. Miss M. Newman.

Q. Where does she live?—A. M. L. Newman. Why, she is not in Seattle now, she is in Portland, Oreg.

Q. Do you know her address there?—A. She was visiting us at the time. Why, no; I don't know.

Q. Can you furnish it to the committee?—A. Well, I am not sure whether I can or not. I have not seen her for some time.

Q. I wish you would if you could later on.—A. I will try and see if I can do that.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you, lady. That is all.

Is Dr. Titus here?

Mrs. TITUS. I don't think he has been subpœnaed; I don't think that he knows about it.

Mr. MCCOY. You were subpœnaed, weren't you?

A. I was; yes; but my husband was not with me at the time, and I informed the young man that I didn't know just when he would be in, but he would be back some time in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Thank you.

Are there any other persons present in the court room who have been subpœnaed or directed to come here by telephone or otherwise?

There being no response, the chairman stated that the committee would be in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman wishes to announce that for the rest of the afternoon we will not have any oral testimony. There are some court records before us that the committee will spend time in the consideration of. So far as oral evidence is concerned the committee will be in recess until to-morrow at 9.30 o'clock. If there are any witnesses present now, let them be sure to be here in the morning at 9.30.

SIXTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

JULY 3, 1912—9.30 a. m.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All present as at former hearing.

EDWIN J. BROWN, recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Brown, you were asked yesterday whether you ran as a candidate on the Socialist ticket at the last election; do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you answered that you did?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the office that you were running for?—A. Why, I ran for corporation counsel last.

Q. Of the city of Seattle?—A. Of the city of Seattle.

Q. And do you know what the vote was at that election?—A. Twenty-seven thousand five hundred.

Q. For you?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the vote for the successful candidate?—A. I think 32,000.

Q. Approximately, how many Socialist voters are there in the city of Seattle?—A. Why, the candidate for mayor got something between 10,000 and 11,000, it seems to me—I am not just clear on that—I think between 10,000 and 11,000, the candidate for mayor in the last municipal election in the primaries.

Q. In the primaries?—A. Yes.

Q. I mean in the election; you are speaking now in your primary the Socialist candidate for mayor got between 10,000 and 11,000 votes?—A. I think between 10,000 and 11,000.

Q. What is the total voting population of Seattle, if you know?—A. About 60,000.

Q. And what was the total vote cast at the election in which you ran for the office of corporation counsel?—A. I think for corporation counsel there were approximately 60,000 votes cast.

Q. What is the normal vote of the Republican and Democratic Parties, the percentages in this city?—A. I never computed that; I don't know.

Q. I will ask you more directly, according to your best belief and knowledge about the Socialist vote in this city, of the 27,000 votes or thereabouts which you received when you ran for corporation counsel, something like 15,000 of them must have been drawn from some other party than the Socialist Party?—A. I believe so.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

Mr. Hughes. Certainly not.

M. C. Bennett, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. M. C. Bennett.

Q. What is your full name?—A. Merton C. Bennett.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Salt Lake City.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Traveling salesman.

Q. Is Seattle part of the territory you make?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of the time are you in Seattle?—A. About three days twice a year.

Q. How long has that been true?—A. For about 25 years.

Q. Are you acquainted here?—A. Not very much; only with a few of my customers that I have here for the last five or six years.

Q. Do you know United States Judge Cornelius H. Hanford when you see him?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether you have seen him?—A. I have not seen him.

Q. How do you know?—A. Well, I don't know as I have.

Q. Well, that is different.—A. Yes; I don't know whether I have or not.

The Chairman. Well, we will have to wait until he comes in to see whether you can identify him by sight; you may stand aside.

Norman C. Wesley, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your full name to the committee.

A. Norman C. Wesley.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Wesley?—A. 1118 Thirty-seventh avenue, Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 13 years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Painting contractor.

Q. What?—A. Contracting painter.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; although it has been nearly four years since I saw him.

Q. At any time prior to that—that is, prior to the last time that you saw him—had you any occasion to be where he was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I attended a trial of a fellow by the name of Frank Chase that lived across the street from us; that is, when we resided at Thirtieth Avenue. It was a case where he was up for counterfeiting, and I attended the trial, and that was the first time that I ever saw him.

Q. Did you attend the trial merely as a spectator?—A. Yes; as a spectator.

Q. Or for some other reason?—A. A spectator.

Q. How long did you attend?—A. One day; the last day of the trial.

Q. If you saw him on other occasions you may tell the committee.—A. Yes, sir; I saw him once more on Third Avenue. I don't think I saw him since.

Q. You mean you saw him only on two occasions altogether?—A. On two occasions. That was the only time I ever remember seeing him was those two occasions.

Q. If at any time that you saw him you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants, you may tell the committee.—A. Well, I did.

Q. When?—A. On Third Avenue, in this block between Union and University.

Q. When was that?—A. I could not say. It was right—I suppose about three or four weeks, or it might have been two months, I don't remember, after the trial, on Third Avenue. I don't know as he was under the influence of liquor, but that was my impression of it.

Q. About how long ago is that?—A. Well, that was right close to four years—it was before the last presidential election, in the fall before that. That is all I can remember.

Q. What time of day was it when you saw him?—A. It was in the night.

Q. What hour?—A. It was between—I should say between 11 and 1 o'clock.

Q. Where was he when you first noticed him?—A. I met him on the corner of Union and Second, and I thought I recognized him at first, and at first I knew I had seen him, but I could not place him, who he was, and I turned around and walked back—I just thought who it was, and I walked a quarter of a block, I guess, until I overtook him, to see if it was really him, and then I walked on.

Q. Was it really him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How close to him did you go?—A. Oh, I don't know; 5 or 6 feet.

Q. Do you know where he was coming from?—A. No.

Q. He was on the street when you saw him?—A. Yes, sir; on the street—on this side of the street.

Q. How far away would you say you were when you first noticed him?—A. I was almost opposite him, probably 10 or 15 feet—no, I was on the same sidewalk with him.

Q. Were you approaching him or following him?—A. I was coming this way and he was crossing this way [illustrating].

Q. This way and this way does not mean much in our record.—A. Well, north, I suppose.

Q. You were going——A. I was going north and he was going south; I was almost opposite him when I noticed him. I don't know whether he was under the influence of liquor; I could not say.

Q. What was it you noticed?—A. I noticed about him that he was staggering and going in a sleepy look with his eyes.

Q. To what extent did he stagger?—A. Well, he walked like a real feeble old man.

Q. I mean in staggering.—A. Well, he was staggering; he was going very slow and staggering sideways.

Q. Do you know what is meant by waving when you walk?—A. Yes.

Q. Going "S" fashion?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it anything like that?—A. No; not that bad, I don't think; I noticed he was walking very slowly and he would stagger. He would stop every once in a while to steady himself.

Q. And then you spoke about getting farther away from him and coming back?—A. Yes, sir; and I remember——

Q. I wish you would explain that clearly.—A. Well, I placed him—I could not place him at first; I knew I had seen him and then I thought it was Judge Hanford, and then I turned around through curiosity to see if it was, and I walked down and met him again.

Q. How long was he under your observation then?—A. Oh, I could not say; for about 5 minutes; I never thought no more about it until after this, when some trouble came up last year with him over that Renton line decision, and then I just called to him and I spoke about it, and that was the reason I am up here, I guess.

Q. Did you notice where he went that evening?—A. No, sir; I never paid no attention to it.

Q. How far did he go altogether while you were observing him?—A. I suppose about a quarter of a block.

Q. What would you say, Mr. Wesley, as to whether at that time the judge was intoxicated?—A. Well, I thought he was, but I would not say that he was; he might have been sleepy or tired; it was late.

Q. You say it was on Second Avenue?—A. Third Avenue.

Q. That is the street that passes the courthouse here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How near to the courthouse was this?—A. Well, as I said, I was coming across the street, across Union Street on Third Avenue, where I overtook him.

Q. We don't know the names of the streets; how near is Union Street to the courthouse?—A. This is on the corner of Union Street, and then University is the next.

Mr. HUGHES. Union Street runs east and west in front of the building and University Street is the next street south, and the one on the west side of the building is Third Avenue. The building is on the corner of Third Avenue and Union Street.

The CHAIRMAN. This is Union and Third.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; on the southeast corner of Third Avenue and Union.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the only occasion on which you saw the judge when you thought he was under the influence of liquor or of intoxicants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever had any case in his court yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any personal feeling or prejudice or ill-will against him?—A. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. What part of the city do you live in?

A. Thirty-seventh Avenue; on Thirty-seventh between Union and Spring, in the Madrona district.

Q. Have you entertained any feeling of bias or opposition to any decision of Judge Hanford's?—A. No; only I formed an opinion over that Renton line decision out there; I knew it was rectified afterwards some way at that time.

Q. At the time you were amongst those who were hostile?—A. Well, in a way, yes; I didn't think it was right.

Q. Did you attend the Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

EARL YOUNG, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.

A. Earl Young.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Young?—A. 1119 Tenth Avenue North.

Q. In Seattle?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. You are about the oldest resident of Seattle that we have had yet upon the stand. How big was Seattle at that time?—A. About 12,000.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Young?—A. I am in the real-estate business at the present time, I used to be in the cigar and tobacco business years ago.

Q. How long have you been in the real-estate business?—A. Ten years.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known the judge?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. How near him have you lived in all that time?—A. Well, within a few blocks, years ago, and then for the last eight or nine years within about two blocks.

Q. Does the same street car lead from the business part of the town to your residence as to his?—A. Yes, sir; he lives about a block and a half or two blocks north of my residence.

Q. Mr. Young, if you have at any time since you have known him, noticed Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant——A. I have not.

Q. (Continuing.) Tell the committee.—A. I have not. I never saw him under the influence of liquor in all the years I have known him, and I saw him almost every day whenever he is in town, and sometimes three or four times a day.

Q. What time of the day—in the morning?—A. No, generally in the evening between 6 and 7, from then to 8 o'clock and then 11 or 12 or later in the evening.

Q. Have you noticed him at any time when you thought there was anything the matter with him?—A. Why, he is a man that is always stooping with his head down and his eyes closed unless he is conversing with someone, and if he sits listening to you, unless you are talking on something in a very earnest way he will kind of doze with his eyes closed apparently, or nearly so; that is a habit he has had for years, and when he walks his head is bowed down and his eyes are half closed.

Q. How long has that been true of him?—A. Well, for 9 or 10 years, I should say.

Q. State so far as you know of any occasion, on any time when you remember not seeing him, in this condition, as you say, when he was not under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I have never seen him under the influence of liquor. A person that did not know him would think he was, but when you speak to him he gets right up as bright as anybody immediately. When you are not conversing with him he is liable to be dozing, in his appearance at least.

Mr. HIGGINS. How frequently have you seen him in the last six or seven years?

A. Probably six or seven times a week; I would see him every day when he is in town, sometimes half a dozen times a day.

Q. Have you ever met him on the street car?—A. I have met him on the street car, and he most always walks by my house to take the car at my corner to come downtown.

Q. You have been on the street car with him?—A. Yes, sir; and I have been at his house and in his office and in his court.

Q. You were subpœnaed here, Mr. Young, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; just a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

Q. You spoke of his closing his eyes and apparently relaxing; I want to ask you now if notwithstanding that habit, whenever he is addressed, although his eyes may be partly closed, when you address him, whether he does not fully comprehend your question and answer with the utmost clearness?—A. Yes, sir; his mind is always clear and active.

Q. Is there anything about that except the fact that he relaxes himself and his body apparently relaxes as one who is old and fatigued and resting himself?—A. That is all that it ever appeared to me.

Q. Have you ever seen any evidence in connection with that appearance of any mental failure at all?—A. None whatever; I always attributed it to the troubles he was having and the weight of age, and things of that kind.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever say to anyone that you have seen Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?

A. I have not; no, sir; no one ever asked me that I know of. I was surprised when I got the subpœna this morning.

Q. Is there any other person of your name in the city—of the same name?—A. Yes, sir; there is some one living down in the Rainier Valley of that name, and I think that he has a middle initial, but I think it is Earl E. Young; he lives down in the Rainier Valley somewhere along the old Renton Road.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you say that you thought that any of the things you noticed about Judge Hanford were due to age?

A. I thought possibly that he might be physically tired or mentally worn out.

Q. Do you know that Judge Hanford is 63 years of age?—A. Somewhere along there.

Mr. HIGGINS. Sixty-four, it was stated yesterday.

Mr. MCCOY. It was stated that he would be 64 at his next birthday.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand he is nearly 64.

Mr. McCoy. Well, we will say 64; do you consider that 64 years of age makes a man old?

A. Some men go through enough at 64 to make them very old, while others are not.

The Chairman. Are there any further questions of Mr. Young?

Mr. Hughes. I have none.

Fred Hildebrand, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your full name to the committee.

A. Fred Hildebrand.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Hildebrand?—A. 1801 Tenth Avenue north, Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Since 1902.

Q. What is your business?—A. Foreman of the Washington Shoe Manufacturing Co.

Q. What has been your business for the time that you have been here?—A. The same position ever since I came to Seattle.

Q. That is a manufacturing concern, is it?—A. Yes, sir; boots and shoes.

Q. You are not in the retail business?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. By sight; yes, sir.

Q. How did you get to know him by sight?—A. I met him on the street car—that is, I seen him on the street car. About three years after we had built he started to build his own home.

Mr. Hughes. I can't hear the witness, and I should like to suggest to the committee that he turn part ways toward us, so that we may hear him.

The Chairman. Divide your attention between us so that all those interested may hear you. Now you may conclude your answer.

A. Several years after I found out that it was Judge Hanford. Of course, I never met the gentleman, although afterwards I noticed his picture in the newspapers off and on, and I seen him on the street car and I found out through the newspapers that this was Judge Hanford, and that is all I knew.

Q. If at any time you saw him when you considered him under the influence of intoxicants, please tell the committee.—A. Well, it looked to me as if it was, although I could not just prove it in any particular way.

Q. When did you first notice him in such condition that you came to that conclusion?—A. Well, that I could not say; it may be a couple of years ago.

Q. Where was he at that time?—A. On the street car.

Q. What time of the day or night was it?—A. In the evening, after 7 or 8 or 9 o'clock; something like that.

Q. Did that occur more than once?—A. Well, I believed it to be, as well as I know about it, perhaps a half a dozen times.

Q. Can you single out the first time when you noticed him, without giving the day or the hour; can you recall the first time that you noticed that?—A. Well, as I say, perhaps about three years ago, or something like that; I could not tell for sure.

Q. Do you recall whereabouts he and you were when you first noticed him so that he attracted your attention?—A. On the Broadway car.

Q. Where was the car going?—A. Up toward his home and my home.

Q. Do you remember which of you was on the car first?—A. Sir?

Q. Do you remember which one of you was on the car first?—A. I was on the car first.

Q. What was it that attracted your attention to the judge?—A. By sitting in the seat, that he either felt kind of sleepy or somehow that it looked to me as if he could be under the influence of liquor, or something.

Q. Well, were there many on the car?—A. He was talking to two gentlemen back of his seat and I was sitting right across on the other side seat, and I noticed that they were speaking.

Q. Did you know them?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Can you tell us what was his manner that led you to think that he was intoxicated?—A. Of course, as I say, he felt kind of sleepy; it appeared to me either the gentleman must have been sickly, or something wrong with him, of course, and I had heard before that they saw him in those conditions.

Q. Did what you had heard before have any influence on you in the conclusion which you reached, or did you form your conclusion from what you saw?—A. What I saw; of course, after I saw this I really knew the judge, and, being a neighbor, he always got off the car a block before I did.

Q. Did you notice him, on this first occasion of which you speak, when he was getting off?—A. That I could not just say.

Q. What I want to get at is this: Did you notice the manner in which he got off the car?—A. Well, as it looked to me, he is an old gentleman, and the first few times when I saw him, of course, I thought he was an elderly man, perhaps kind of tired, but later on, after I heard that he would take liquors and so on, then I thought it must be the trouble.

Q. What experience have you had in observing men who are under the influence of liquor?—A. Not very much, only that I see them tumbling around the street.

Q. What is your age?—A. My age is 44.

Q. Now, from your observation and from your knowledge of things generally, and what you saw of him that night, what would you say as to whether or not he was intoxicated?—A. Well, what I heard—the two gentlemen across the aisle from me, they were talking about—they were talking about the Saratoga bar—that is a saloon on Second Avenue. Of course, I could not hear on account of the noise from the car, what they were talking about. The judge was sitting in front of them and just in a peculiar position, the way he acted it appeared to me as if either he must have been sick or something must have been wrong with him.

Q. Well, the question is as to what is your best judgment as to whether or not he was intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicants that night?—A. Well, just as I said, he looked to me that way.

Q. Did he show any evidences of pain?—A. No; I didn't think so; no.

Q. Well, if he were ill or sick to such an extent as to make him act the way he did act, what would you think as to whether he would not have shown some evidence of suffering and pain?—A. No; it didn't appear to me that way; it certainly appeared more as if he had been under the influence of liquor as anything else, of course.

Q. In passing you——A. Excuse me.

Q. Go on.—A. Of course he got up from the seat and walked to the back, so that he could not have been so bad?

Q. Could not have been so bad?—A. Could not have been so bad.

Q. Passing from that occasion, can you recall the next time?—A. That was the last time I ever saw him.

Q. Before that did you see him?—A. Not any worse than this.

Q. How often would you say you saw him in that condition or about the same condition?—A. Well, say, about half a dozen times; I could not say for sure.

Q. Was it always on the street car?—A. Always on the street car; yes.

Q. Did you ever see him anywhere else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either in that condition or any other way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Intoxicated or not?—A. No, sir; I never seen the judge to recognize him.

Q. You only saw him on the street car?—A. I only saw him on the street car; that was the only time I ever saw the judge.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever see him on the street car when he was not in that condition?

A. I could not say. Of course you can't tell; he may have been on the car and sitting in the back seat. As a rule, I always took the front seat, because I go out a good ways from the city.

Q. I say did you ever see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever notice how he walked on any of those occasions?—A. No; I can't say. Of course he gets off the car and walks toward the back, and, as I say, I get on the front seat and I never watched him go out—that is all.

Q. You say those two men who were talking with him on one occasion sat back of him?—A. Back of him, in the next seat.

Q. And who was it that said something about the Saratoga bar?—A. That I could not say who.

Q. Was it Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or one of those men?—A. One of those men.

Q. You did not hear what they said about it?—A. No; I could not hear it from the noise of the car.

Q. And you do not know what they were talking about except that you heard the words "Saratoga bar?"—A. Saratoga bar, that was all.

Q. Now, did you see anything else about the judge except the drowsiness which made you entertain the opinion which you have expressed?—A. No, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

Q. I am not sure whether I correctly understood you, but if I did then Mr. McCoy did not, and I want to ask a question about that subject. You spoke of two men sitting back of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of being in conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they in conversation with each other or with Judge Hanford?—A. With each other and the judge.

Q. They spoke to the judge, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they carry on a conversation with the judge during any considerable part of that trip?—A. They were talking together; yes, sir.

Q. He turned back then and was speaking to them and they to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were apparently persons who knew him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was not anything about that conversation that would indicate that Judge Hanford was under the influence of liquor, was there?—A. No. When I heard them mention "Saratoga bar," then of course I thought they must have been in there.

Q. Now, do you know who mentioned it or what was said about it?—A. No. I could not hear on account of the noise of the car.

Q. You did not observe or note which one of them mentioned something about the Saratoga bar?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor what was said about it?—A. No, sir; I could not say.

Q. It was after the conversation, was it, or was it before, that you noticed Judge Hanford close his eyes and nod, apparently being sleepy?—A. Well, on the way going up there from the city.

Q. Not during the time of this conversation, though?—A. I don't clearly understand.

Q. I say, you did not notice him nod and close his eyes during the conversation?—A. Well, more or less. Of course the judge acts kind of—of course he is an elderly man and I could not say really in particular what it may have been—the cause.

Q. I think you misunderstood me; I say, when you noticed him apparently drowsy, it was not during the conversation, but afterwards, when he was sitting quietly in his seat.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he relaxed and closed his eyes?—A. Yes.

Q. And seemed tired and sleepy?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is all you observed?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. A minute ago you said he did that at intervals during the conversation; now, which is it; did he first have the conversation, and then begin to nod, or did he nod during the conversation?

A. Well, occasionally while they were talking I turned around—they were talking all the time.

The Chairman. Anything further?

Mr. Hughes. I don't know that the witness fixed the time of day.

Q. What time of day was it that you went home on the car when you would see him?—A. About 7 or 8 o'clock, or something like that.

Q. And you only recall traveling with him, when you noticed him on the car, probably half a dozen times?—A. Yes, sir; that is about all.

Q. Whenever you saw him on the car he appeared fatigued and sleepy?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. That is all.

Mr. C. Bennett, recalled, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Mr. Bennett, Judge Hanford has just come in—this is Judge Hanford, Mr. Bennett [pointing]—did you notice the judge; tell us whether you have ever seen that gentleman before.

A. Not that I remember; I don't think I ever have; I don't know but what I have passed him on the street, but I can not place him.

Q. Have you any recollection of seeing Judge Hanford before?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are excused.

Mr. HIGGINS. How did you happen to be summoned here?

A. I don't know, unless it is a case of a traveling man's talk—a case of too much parrot with a traveling man.

Mr. MCCOY. What do you mean by that?

A. Too much talk, I guess.

Q. Who have you been talking to?—A. I was sitting up there in the Washington Annex Hotel last night and a lot of traveling men were there talking about Judge Hanford, and the question came up about his drinking, and I said "I guess a man has a right to take a drink if he wants to," and I said "Sometimes I do it myself" and a customer of mine was with me and he says, "Did you ever see him?" and I said "I don't know but I have," and two or three others spoke and said that they had seen him taking a drink, and I said "I may have seen him, possibly, I don't know. I guess if a man drinks he has a right to drink if he wants to," and the next thing I knew I was subpœnaed.

Mr. MCCOY. I hope you have had a good time.

The WITNESS. Yes, I have indeed. I am glad to meet the judge; I want to see him and congratulate him, because I think he is a good man.

The CHAIRMAN. Never mind; that is not in response to any question and it may be stricken from the record. Is there anything further relative to the matter?

Q. Didn't you state in the conversation to which you have referred that you thought you had seen him under the influence of intoxicants?—A. It may have been that I did; I would not deny it, but if I did it was just a josh.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you know whether Mr. John H. Perry was present and heard your conversation?

A. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment; why that? It does not go to the credibility of this witness; the question is ruled out.

Mr. MCCOY. Who was it you were talking to?

A. Why, I don't know. One of them was a traveling man that left yesterday morning for the East; for Butte; a man by the name of George Clark.

Q. Was he the customer you referred to?—A. No.

Q. Who was the customer?—A. Mr. Hitchcraft.

Q. Somebody who lives here in Seattle?—A. He lives here in Seattle; yes, sir.

Q. Hitchcraft?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his first name?—A. Samuel Hitchcraft.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of Mr. Bennett?

Mr. HUGHES. I have none.

SAMUEL TATE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your full name.

A. Samuel Tate.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in the city?—A. Twenty-two years this coming month.

Q. What is your present occupation which you are now following?—A. General broker and loan agent, except one year that I was up in Alaska.

Q. Broker, you say, and in the loan business?—A. Yes, sir; and in the real-estate business.

Q. What particular kind; real estate?—A. Yes, sir; dealing in all kinds of property.

Q. Dealing in real-estate mortgages and loans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And such securities as that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been for 22 years?—A. Twenty years this coming month.

Q. Except when you have been out of Seattle?—A. One season in Alaska.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Well, 10 years or more.

Q. Have you any personal acquaintance with him, or merely a sight acquaintance?—A. No; I have had some personal acquaintance with him.

Q. Did you have any business in the judge's court?—A. No; I never had no business in his court.

Q. Did you ever have any personal business with him of any kind?—A. Well, I called on him in his office in reference to a deal—a real-estate deal.

Q. State if at any time you have noticed the judge when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants; and if so, please tell the committee about it.—A. Well, I called on him in the New York Block in reference to a real-estate deal, and he was busy that day, and he told me to come in the next day or some other day as soon as I could, and I met him the next day or so and he seemed to me that he didn't care whether he did any business or not; he didn't seem to be in any mood to do any business. I put my proposition up to him, what I had in real estate.

Q. Speak a little louder.—A. I say I put my proposition up to him that I had in the real-estate deal, and he didn't seem as though that he wanted to particularly care whether he done anything or not. This was the second time I called on him.

Q. Well, if you know any reason for his attitude of mind, please state it.—A. Well, he didn't seem to be in the mood of mind like he did when I called on him the first time; he seemed to be in a kind of stupid condition.

Q. In your judgment, what was the matter at that time?—A. Well, it looked like—it looked like that he must have been intoxicated a little some way, or something of that kind, or had some stupidity about him in some way.

Q. What was the difference in his condition that time and the other time when you called?—A. Well, there was quite a difference; it seemed he was changed since the first time I called on him.

Q. In what way?—A. Why, that he was more indolent and careless and indifferent and more stupid. He didn't seem to care whether he talked business or not.

Q. What was his physical condition?—A. Well, I could see some little depression apparently on him different from what he was the first time I called on him, and when I got up to go out he got up on the floor and talked a few words, and he didn't seem to—he threw his head—he didn't seem to want to do anything in particular—threw his head one way and the other.

Q. What did you say about his head? You said something about his head.—A. He kind of rolled his head around a little that way like he was in a stupid condition and didn't seem to care whether he wanted to do anything or not. He didn't seem as he did when I first called on him.

Q. Well, what is your opinion as to whether at that time he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. Well, he was under the influence of something. I couldn't tell what it was, whether it was whisky or anything else. It might have been something else. I could not say.

Q. Did you notice any odor or smell?—A. Well, I didn't get right close up to his face.

Q. When you were talking with him on this business proposition how did his mind act, after that first time you called?—A. Well, the second time it seemed to be a little off—a little different from what it was from the first.

Q. What time of day was it?—A. Along in the afternoon.

Q. Can you fix the time more definitely than that?—A. Well, it was somewhere between 4 and 5 o'clock, or somewhere along there.

Q. Did you notice the judge on any other occasions than those two?—A. Well, I saw him very frequently on the street and around different places, and I have seen him a few times in the court room.

Q. On any of the other occasions when you saw him what was his condition?—A. Well, it was different from what it was when I saw him in his office.

Q. On the second visit you made to his office, the only time you saw him when you thought he was intoxicated from some cause or other?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. You say it was some place in the New York Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that, a business building?—A. Yes, sir; down on Second Avenue on the corner of Second and Cherry.

Q. Has Judge Hanford an office there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has an office there?—A. Yes, sir; he had an office there.

Q. How long ago was this?—A. Oh, he had an office there in the front part of the building—it was built right after the fire—and then he moved over onto the other side.

Q. I mean how long ago was it that you were at the building?—A. That has been some 10 or 12 years ago that I had this conversation.

The Chairman. Any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Hughes. I would like to ask the witness a few questions.

Q. Can you give us any more definite statement as to the time when this occurrence which you have been testifying about took place?—A. Well, nothing more than what I have stated about.

Q. You can't come nearer to it than saying that it was 10 or 12 years ago?—A. Somewhere along about that time, because at that time I paid no attention to what the matter was, because it didn't interest me at that time and I didn't pay any more attention to it.

Q. You do not even recall what the transaction was which you were to see him about?—A. Yes, sir; it was a real estate deal.

Q. Do you remember what real estate deal or what sort of a real estate deal it was?—A. Yes, sir; it was some lots here in town—property in town.

Q. You were trying to induce him to buy some lots in the city of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall now—I do not consider what lots they were important, but for the purpose of fixing the time and circumstances—do you recall now what lots they were?—A. Well, they were some that I had on my list in my office.

Q. Well, that is not very definite.—A. Well, I had a various number of them listed all over the city. I can't call to mind what particular one it was now.

Q. You have no recollection what the particular transaction was?—A. Well, the transaction was simply as I before stated; I called on him for the purpose of talking over this real estate deal, to see whether he wanted it—to see what he said, as I was looking up business all the time.

Q. And he would not buy it?—A. Well, we didn't make no deal.

Q. And because he didn't seem interested in it you thought he was intoxicated, is that it?—A. Well, he seemed different the second time I saw him than he did the first; he didn't seem to be in the same mood or condition that he was the first time.

Q. Where did you see him the first time?—A. Just as I told you before, in the same place.

Q. What time of day?—A. Well, I called in one time in the forenoon and he told me to come in later on, that he was busy and I went in again in the afternoon the next time.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him in the forenoon of the first day when you saw him?—A. Just merely spoke to him.

Q. And at that time he said he was busy?—A. He was busy and to call in again.

Q. He told you to call again?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had no other conversation with him the first time than you have stated?—A. No more, just to make my business known to him, and he told me he was busy and to call again.

Q. The next time you called about 4 o'clock in the afternoon?—A. Somewhere along about that time.

Q. How long did you talk with him?—A. I could not say, possibly 25 or 30 minutes, or so; it might have been a little longer or a little less.

Q. You described to him what you had to sell. A. Yes, sir; I mentioned it.

Q. And you argued the advantage of the bargain to him.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he did not seem to be interested?—A. Well, he didn't appear as he did the first day I called on him.

Q. What was the difference, was it in his manner of speaking to you—he spoke to you, didn't he?—A. Well, he was more in a stupified condition and seemed to be more unconcerned about it.

Q. Well, the fact that he was unconcerned about this trade was not an evidence that he was intoxicated, because you find a good many people that are unconcerned about deals which you try to have them make.—A. That may be true, but sometimes you find people who are in a stupified condition many times when there is something the cause of it, though.

Q. You do not mean to say that the fact that he did not want to buy was any more evidence of intoxication on his part than the fact of other people not wanting to buy would be evidence of intoxication on their part?—A. No; it seemed he was in a mood that didn't seem to be one of wanting to do any business, and he was different from the first time.

Q. The first time he told you he was busy and he did not want to entertain your proposition?—A. He told me I could call again, and I did so.

Q. I am trying to ask you to explain now what you claim to be the difference between the two times when you saw him. Did he say anything that was unusual the first time except that he did not want to entertain your proposition?—A. Well, he merely muttered out something in a careless or indifferent way, and it seemed like he was kind of stupid or something; he didn't feel right some way.

Mr. HIGGINS. Can't you tell the committee what it was that he muttered?

A. Well, he said he didn't care to do any particular business to-day, and I stood up, and he got up and kind of stepped around a time or two, and I just bade him good day and walked out.

Mr. HUGHES. And it took you 25 or 30 minutes to do that, did it?

A. No; it may have been that much, and it might have been a little less.

Q. You never tried to sell it again to him?—A. No; not at that time.

Q. You knew at that time that he declined to buy, and you never renewed the negotiations?—A. Well, he didn't particularly decline; he didn't seem like he cared to do any business that day.

Q. And you never tried again to sell him the lots, did you?—A. No; I don't think I called on him any more.

Q. Where did this occur?—A. In the New York Block.

Q. What office in the New York Block?—A. Well, he was up, I think, on the seventh floor.

Q. Whereabouts on the seventh floor?—A. Well, he was up on the east side, and then he was over on the west side; I think he changed a couple of times.

Q. Well, did you call on him in both places, in both offices?—A. I called on him in both offices, and I called on him when Mr. H. P. McGuire had the office opposite to him in the same building at the same time.

Q. Mr. H. P. McGuire?—A. Yes.

Q. Is H. P. McGuire in the city now?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is he?—A. Well, he has charge of the Marion Building, on the corner of Second Avenue and Marion Street.

Q. Now, the man you tried to deal with——

The CHAIRMAN. Push the matter along, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. The man you tried to deal with on that occasion was a man who had an office in the New York Building—in which side of the New York Building?

A. I said he had an office first on the east part of the building and then on the west part.

Q. He didn't change between those two days that you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, which office was it that you saw him in?—A. He was first in the new part after the fire, and then the other part that was built first, and then the old part—the new part was built west after that.

Q. Well, where was it that you saw him—you say he was in the old building when you first knew him to have offices there?—A. No; he was in the other side.

Q. He was not in the other side until it was built, was he?

The CHAIRMAN. What interest have we in the fire, or in what particular floor of a building it was, anyway?

Mr. HUGHES. I am talking about Judge Hanford's office; you say his office was first in which building?

A. I said on the east building.

Q. What is it, the old building?—A. No; that is the old building.

Q. His office was first there?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever in his offices there?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, that was sometime prior to this occasion?—A. Yes; not at that time.

Q. How long had he had an office there?—A. Well, I could not say just how many years.

Q. How many times have you been in his office in the New York Block, in the building on Third Avenue which is the old part of what is now known as the New York Block?—A. How many times I had been in there?

Q. Yes.—A. I have dropped in there several times.

Q. And found him in the office, have you?—A. Part of the time I did and a part of the time I did not.

Q. But you knew he had an office there?—A. I certainly do, or I could not have gone there.

Q. Now, you say he afterwards changed to the new building and that was where you visited him at this time?—A. At the time that I offered the deal to him.

Q. And that was on the seventh floor?—A. I think it was.

Q. You think so—and it was an office facing on Second Avenue, did you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I want to ask one other question, Mr. Tate. Have you ever investigated to know whether, or are you able to say that Judge Hanford ever had an office, ever occupied an office of any kind at any time in the New York Building?—A. Why, certainly he did, because that is where I found him and talked with him.

Q. And the man you found and the man about whom you have been talking, is a man who had an office in that building as you have described?—A. That is where I met him, and he was with H. P. McGuire and he had rooms there together.

Q. And he and H. P. McGuire had rooms together on that floor—well, that's all.

Mr. McCOY. Do you mean that they occupied the same offices—Judge Hanford and this Mr. McGuire—do you mean that they occupied the same room?

A. No, no; separate, separate, separate.

Q. Separate offices in the same building?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Were they adjoining offices?—A. Right in rotation.

Q. Adjoining them?—A. Yes; rotation.

Q. One was side by side with the other, do you mean?—A. Just one right in rotation, one after the other.

Q. Doors opening between them?—A. Yes, but the doors were closed—they could open.

Q. There were connection doors between them?—A. Yes.

Q. What office do you occupy—where are you officing?—A. I was in the Burke Building at that time.

Q. Did you have an office in the Burke Building?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is your office now?—A. On Third and Pike Street—1504.

The CHAIRMAN. You are pursuing this matter with as much particularity as if we were trying a lawsuit.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to be sure that this witness has been fully examined on the subject because if this commission will call the manager of the New York Block—I do not know Mr. McGuire—or will call Mr. McGuire if he knows—they will find that Judge Hanford never had an office and never occupied one at any time in the New York Block, and that was the reason why I have been particularly inquiring as to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not very material.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope I have not seemed to cross-examine the witness with any asperity; I did not mean to do that, but I meant to be particular.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the particularity that I am complaining about; I do not think it would be very material whether he had an office there or not, if in fact he was there.

Mr. HUGHES. And that is why I was particular in my examination of this witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Your examination went rather to the office than to the presence of the judge there.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not mean to do that; I meant to have this witness identify with certainty this man who had the office there; that he went to him in his office; that he had been in the old part of the building and afterwards moved to the new part.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand all that, but the main part of our objection is that I do not think the committee would care whether he had a rented office there or not, if in fact he was there, and I want to emphasize it now, because I think we can hardly permit to have you go into absolute details in all these matters.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask one other question, if I have the permission of the commission to do so.

Q. Was there anybody else associated with Judge Hanford in those offices?—A. Not in the one where I was in with him; he was there alone; it was his own department, but there was other people in the other adjoining rooms all through the building.

Q. Do you know who they were?—A. Mr. McGuire was one man.

Q. Did he have his name on the door?—A. Well, I think he did, if I remember.

Q. What you mean to testify to this committee is that the man you saw was the man who had an office which he regularly occupied in the New York Building; isn't that true?—A. He was on the seventh floor of the new, or the old building first, years ago.

Q. And afterwards in the new building?—A. Yes, sir; and all you have to do to prove it is to ask the janitor and he will tell you the same thing—the janitor in the building.

Mr. MCCOY. You are not mistaken in your identification of Judge Hanford, are you?

A. I should say not; I ought not to be when we were such very near comrades in the Army, or close to it; I don't think I would be mistaken.

R. T. NOYES, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. R. T. Noyes—Russell T. Noyes.

Q. Where do you live; give your street address.—A. My residence, do you mean?

Q. Or place of business, so that we can communicate with you later.—A. At the present time I am living at 1815 Eleventh Avenue north, and my business place is the Colman Baths in the Colman Building.

Q. What is your business?—A. I have a barber shop there.

Q. Are you the proprietor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Something like since 1889.

Q. How long have you been in your present business?—A. All the time that I have been here, but not in that location.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by sight; yes, sir.

Q. For how long a time?—A. I could not say; I should think 16 or 17 years, or something like that.

Q. Have you any acquaintance other than a sight acquaintance with him?—A. I have seen him in my place of business frequently and spoken to him. I have no particular acquaintance with him.

Q. Is he a patron of your shop?—A. He patronizes it sometimes; yes, sir.

Q. At this time?—A. Yes, sir; he frequently comes in there.

Q. Mr. Noyes, if at any time you have seen the judge when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant, please tell the jury.—A. I never saw him when I could say positively whether he was or not; I have seen him when he nodded a little, something like that, but I could not say whether it was an intoxicant or not.

Q. A little louder, please.—A. I say I never saw him when I could say that he was intoxicated; I have seen him nod, but then that would not be positive evidence to me that he was intoxicated.

Q. Did you ever see him anywhere other than in your shop?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. What time does he visit the shop generally?—A. There is no regular time.

Q. Well, what times?—A. Oh, occasionally; he does not come regularly all the time; he comes in occasionally, say once in a week.

Q. What hours, I mean?—A. I could not tell you; I don't think he comes at any regular hours; at different hours.

Q. Well, what hours, as near as you can tell, if he has any habit about it?—A. Well, I could not tell.

Q. Does he ever come there at 8 o'clock in the morning?—A. Well, I would not be there and I could not see him if he was.

Q. Well, what time do you get there?—A. I get there about 9 o'clock.

Q. Does he ever come there at that hour?—A. Not when I have been there.

Q. Ten?—A. No.

Q. Eleven?—A. He generally comes in the afternoon.

Q. Well, now, you might have stated that in the beginning and we would have saved time—what hour in the afternoon generally?—A. Well, I could not say.

Q. How late have you seen him there at any time?—A. Well, I don't think I ever saw him very late; perhaps, possibly, 5 or 6 o'clock or somewhere along there; the fact of the matter is I could not be definite about that at all.

Q. Does he get shaved at your shop; is that the business for which he comes there?—A. He generally comes in and has work done, not just particularly shaving; but he generally has more work than that done.

Q. Well, I asked you about shaving; does he have that done there?—A. Yes, sir; he has shaving done.

Q. Do you yourself take care of the judge?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or some of the other boys in the shop?—A. No; I have not worked on a chair for some years.

Q. On the occasions which, by your answers I infer, there was something unusual the matter with the judge—explain what you mean.—A. Well, I never saw anything in the shop to indicate anything.

Q. Did you ever see any difference in him while in the shop; is he always about in the same condition?—A. No—well, I could state just what I have seen and that will probably cover what you want.

Q. Do so.—A. All that I have seen which might question his condition would be when he was going home on the car late at night; Saturday nights generally would be the time when I would see him, because that would be the time when I was on the car with him, and he would nod. Now, I could not tell whether he was sleepy from being up late or not; I could not say that he was intoxicated or anything of the kind; that is the only thing that I ever saw out of the ordinary.

Q. How frequently did you see that?—A. Well, a number of years; I probably saw him on the car when I went home on Saturday nights quite a number of times, I could not tell—quite a good number of times.

Q. Was the nodding when you spoke of habitual or occasional?—A. Generally—generally just about the same.

Q. About what hour would it be on Saturday nights?—A. Well, it would be 12 o'clock or after.

Q. For how long a period of years has that been true?—A. That I could not tell. I could not tell. He has not lived out in my district not so awful long; I should judge something like seven or eight years.

Q. Seven or eight years?—A. I could not say—yes, sir; I should judge so—I could not tell positively.

Q. Up to what time is that true—how recently have you seen him as you have stated?—A. Well, I could not say about that; I would not mark those things particularly.

Q. I understand that, and I mean approximately; I don't expect you to be accurate.—A. Oh, it might be two or three months or it might be less or it might be more.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Noyes, your barber shop closes at 8 o'clock in the evenings except Saturday evening?

A. No; the main shift goes off at 8 o'clock, and there is two men works late, until 10 o'clock.

Q. Until 10, except Saturday evenings?—A. Except Saturday evenings.

Q. How late do you stay except on Saturday evenings?—A. I stay—well, for some little time I have been going at 6 o'clock—going away at 6 o'clock.

Q. But for several years back, except on Saturday evenings, you would not take a car later than 8 or 9 o'clock going home?—A. Yes.

Q. So that you never traveled on the cars going home at night at the time when Judge Hanford would go home, at his dinner hour, and the only opportunities you had of seeing him on the street car were when you would happen to be on the same car with him on Saturday night when you were going home along about midnight?—A. Yes, sir; and not always then.

Q. You would not always happen to be on the car that he was on, and he would not always, so far as you know, be out at that time of the evening, but what I mean is when you did see him at all on the car it was on Saturday nights and along about half past 11 or 12, or half past 12 o'clock at night?—A. Well, I can't say that that would be the only time that I would ever see him. I think I have seen him sometimes, a half a dozen times, perhaps at other times.

Q. If you saw him it would be in the evening when you were going home to dinner?—A. It might be when I was going home at some different hour than what I generally went.

Q. If you saw him going home late in the evening or late at night I will ask you if it is not true that he always appeared the same as you have described, relaxed more or less, drooping his head, and closing his eyes?—A. There was very little difference.

Q. And you never on any of those occasions saw anything or smelt anything to indicate that he was under the influence of liquor other than what you might determine from the appearances you have described?—A. No, no, sir; I am quite sure.

Q. Would you speak to him if you met him?—A. No; I do not have sufficient acquaintance with him so that we generally recognize one another.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Noyes, is it not true that what you have described was a well-known characteristic of Judge Hanford's?

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute; do you think that is proper?

Mr. HUGHES. I certainly think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. You are asking the witness for his conclusion as to that—wouldn't it be his conclusion as to what was well known?

Mr. HUGHES. I can't say that it is; I am asking him if he knows.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think we ought to go into general reputation?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't consider that is general reputation. Judge Hanford was a well-known character in this community, and I think this man is an honest and impartial witness—I say that because I know him, and I think it is proper to ask this witness whether what he saw of Judge Hanford, in the light of what he knew of him, indicated to him that it was a natural characteristic of the man or whether it was due to intoxication.

The CHAIRMAN. A well-known characteristic involves the community knowledge, doesn't it?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, it involves a general knowledge of Judge Hanford as known by those who know his traits of character and characteristics.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is convinced that the question is not a proper one, but you may answer it.

A. I do not know what the general reputation was regarding that; I know that I generally observed the same condition when I saw him on the car.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, from your knowledge of Judge Hanford then, as you have seen him since your residence in the city, I want to ask you whether you attributed what you saw to physical characteristics, to weariness, to the habits of the man, or to intoxication?

The CHAIRMAN. You may answer that.

A. Why, I had no definite opinion in regard to that.

ROBERT E. JONES, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You may state your full name to the committee.

A. Robert E. Jones.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Jones?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long has Seattle been your home?—A. Six years.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-five.

Q. What is your business?—A. Publishing.

Q. What?—A. Engraving, printing, and publishing.

Q. Are you the proprietor of a business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; not personally.

Q. Do you know him by sight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long?—A. Four years.

Q. During that time give the committee an idea of how frequently you have seen him.—A. Well, I have seen him a good many times; it is pretty hard to tell the number of times I have seen him.

Q. Every day?—A. For a time I saw him nearly every day during the sessions of his court.

Q. And at other times?—A. At intervals I met him occasionally; I seen him at different places about the city.

Q. Where would you see him, mostly?—A. In his court room. I have seen him mostly in his court room.

Q. Had you business in his court room frequently?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the nature of it?—A. I was with the Post-Intelligencer—a reporter.

Q. Were you in the court as court reporter?—A. Reporter.

Q. For how long?—A. Well, at intervals, for a year or so; a little over a year.

Q. What year was that?—A. Three years ago.

Q. And where else did you see him frequently?—A. Well, as I would see any citizen on the street and at other places.

Q. At what hours of the day or night?—A. All hours of the day and all hours of the night.

Q. Up to what time of the night—do you mean literally all hours of the night?—A. I believe I have seen him, not every hour of the 24, at different times; hardly that; no; but I have seen him, though, practically at all hours of the night, from time to time, at other times.

Q. If at any of those times you saw him when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant, please tell the committee.—A. I have seen him when I thought he was, but that was all.

Q. When did you first see him when you thought he was?—A. Do you mean the first date?

Q. Well, as nearly as you can fix the time; fix it the best way you can.—A. Well, I have thought that I have seen him intoxicated on the bench.

Q. When was that, Mr. Jones?—A. During the trial—I don't remember the date—but it was down there in the other building.

Mr. McCoy. What other building?

A. In the old Federal building.

Q. What year?—A. I don't remember the year nor the date, but I know the trial.

The Chairman. What was the trial?

A. It was at the trial of a soldier for murder, by the name of Holt.

Q. Colt?—A. Holt.

Q. How long did the trial last?—A. A week or 10 days, as nearly as I can remember.

Q. During what part of the trial was it that you thought he was intoxicated on the bench?—A. Why, at the time that some attorney—I forget whether it was the defense or the prosecution—entered an objection in the case and it was quite apparent that the judge did not hear it, and it was repeated and repeated, and finally he was aroused, and overruled or sustained it, I do not remember which—the objection.

Q. Who was the attorney?—A. I do not remember; I believe it was a man by the name of Caldwell—of Caldwell & Riddell.

Q. How was he finally aroused?—A. There was no effort made, apparently, to arouse him; it seemed as though the incident occasioned a little merriment or amusement in the court room.

Q. How long a time elapsed from the time the objection was made until the judge came around?—A. Oh, a moment—a minute—less than—oh, well, abut 15 or 20 seconds, I should judge.

Q. In what tone of voice was the objection made?—A. Well, it was not loud; it was made in the ordinary tone—in the ordinary tone of an attorney.

Q. Was it repeated?—A. It was repeated, I believe. Yes; it was repeated eventually, but I do not remember whether it was twice or three times.

Q. Well, in ruling on the objection, was there any statement of the point made by the attorney?—A I don't remember; I just recall the incident—I remembered it; I do not say that his lethargy or sleepiness was due to incoxication, but I presumed, or thought, that it was—I didn't examine him or——

Q. After he became aroused what was his appearance and demeanor?—A. As it always apparently is.

Q. Make a more specific answer than that if you can. Was it bright and exhibiting mental activity, or was it drowsy, or how was it?—A. Well, he was active enough in his tones and in his answer or in his stating the——

Q. At that time had you any impression or opinion about the judge's habits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your conclusion due to what you saw and noticed in the court room, or was it in part due to something that you had heard before or knew before? A. Due to my impression—my impression was due to what I knew and what I had seen from my own observations.

Q. Now, was that occasion which you have referred to in the court room the first time when you noticed him when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. Yes, sir; I believe it was—it was.

Q. That is, was it the first either in court or out of court, or anywhere, that you yourself had observed?—A. Yes, sir; that was the first time that I had.

Q. I can't hear you.—A. Yes, sir; that was the first time that I thought or believed that I had ever seen him under the influence of intoxicants or the influence—some influence—I don't know what—apparently not natural anyway.

Q. After that time, tell us if you can, the next time after that when you noticed him in a similar condition; tell us of it.—A. One evening, or morning, rather, or sometime between 12 and 1 o'clock, I think it was, on the street.

Q. Do you mean at midnight?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you fix that time by the year, or the season, or the month?—A. It was the winter season, but I do not remember—I do not remember even—let me see—I know that it was the time that I had occasion to be in the office very late.

Q. In the newspaper office?—A. No; it was since then.

Q. In your own office?—A. In my own office. Yes, this was within a year.

Q. Within the present year? A. No; within 12 months—within the last 12 months.

Q. Well, what hour would you say that was?—A. It was after 12 o'clock, and I think before 1; it might have been between 1 and 2, but it was after 12.

Q. And where was he?—A. On Second Avenue, between Madison and the street this side of Madison—Seneca or Spring.

Q. Is that a very public place in the city?—A. No; there are no buildings at all on the side of the street that I passed him.

Q. It is not in the outskirts of the city, though.—A. No; it is right in the center of the city practically, within two or three blocks from here.

Q. But at that particular corner there are no buildings?—A. No buildings in that block.

Q. Well, what did you observe there?—A. Well, I observed that he took about the whole sidewalk for him to navigate in—he walked from one side to the other.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was perfectly erect——

Q. Where was he when you first noticed him?—A. Well, as you would observe anyone, probably 20 or 30 feet ahead of me.

Q. Walking on the sidewalk?—A. Walking on the sidewalk.

Q. In what direction?—A. He was walking south.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to where he came from?—A No, sir. I remembered at the time I wondered to myself something—I wondered where he was coming from, but I could not fix any particular occasion that——

Q. How far behind him were you?—A. I was in front of him; I did not turn to look at him at all—I just passed him and went on.

Q. Tell us more particularly the way he walked.—A. Well, he walked very much as though he were intoxicated, or very dizzy or ill.

Q. You say he went from side to side of the walk?—A. It was peculiar; he didn't reel; his equilibrium was perfect, apparently, but he just was walking from one side to the other, sort of unsteadily.

Mr. McCoy. I thought you said something about his feet also; what about them?

A. His feet were widespread, sort of sprawled out, to get a larger base.

The Chairman. How wide was the sidewalk?

A. I don't know; I think about 14 or 15 feet.

Q. Well, in going from side to side, tell us what you mean by that, as to whether he actually went from the building out to the curbstone, or what do you mean?—A. There are no buildings there.

Q. I mean from the building line.—A. Well, instead of walking in a straight line as a pedestrian does, when he is bound for a place, he was just walking backward and——

Mr. McCoy. Zigzig, you mean?—A. Zigzag.

The Chairman. How well did you know the judge at that time?

A. Perfectly well.

Q. Have you any doubt as to the identity of the person you saw?—A. None whatever.

Q. Were there others on the street in sight?—A. I think there were—that is, not in the block that I know of. There were some people down below in the block. Perhaps there may have been one or two others, but I noticed none there.

Q. Did you know where his home was in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he going in the direction of his home or toward the car which would take him home?—A. No, sir.

Q. What time in the winter was it, if you know?—A. I could not say.

Q. How was the weather?—A. It was not raining.

The Chairman. That is strange——

Q. If you saw him on any other occasions in the condition which you thought indicated intoxication.—A. No; I did not.

Q. Were those two the only occasions which you recall when in your judgment he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. That is all.

Q. You spoke about seeing him at all hours of the day and night. Now, I want you to explain more fully about that. Did you see him after 1 o'clock on the streets?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. 1 a. m.?—A. Yes; I have seen him after 1.

Q. Where?—A. On Second Avenue or First—Second or Third—I have forgotten which.

Q. Under what circumstances?—A. Passing as any person would—walking along the street.

Q. How frequently?—A. Well, it would not be frequent. I might have met other persons just as often and not noticed having met them.

Q. Well, have you seen him on the street at 2 o'clock a. m.?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Or 3?—A. No.

Q. Or any hour after 1 a. m.?—A. Well, I have seen him occasionally after 1; yes.

Q. About what time?—A. Between 1 and half past 1.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, whether at that time he was holding court——A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) Daily?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Have you ever ridden on the same street car with him?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Have you told us all you know with reference to the particular subject of the inquiry?—A. Yes; I think I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever have any outside duties for the Post-Intelligencer as a reporter?

A. Outside of the court, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any report to the paper on Judge Hanford at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any observation—ever see him when you were acting as reporter on outside work, outside of the court room, I mean?—A. Well, no, sir.

Q. Street work, or whatever you call it?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. This case of United States against Holt was, you say, a trial for murder?

A. Yes.

Q. The defendant being a soldier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the crime was alleged to have been committed on the reservation. I mean on the——A. On the fort—at the fort.

Q. (Continuing.) The Government reservation. In that case Elmer E. Todd was the district attorney representing the Government, prosecuting the case, wasn't he?—A. I believe he was.

Q. And Mr. Hugh M. Caldwell, now one of the deputy county attorneys, and Mr. C. F. Riddell represented the defendant?—A. I believe they did.

Q. This gentleman here. Will you stand up, Mr. Riddell? [Whereupon Mr. Riddell stands up in the body of the court room.] And that gentleman was one of the attorneys for the defendant?—A. Yes; he was.

Q. They were present, those gentlemen I have named, in court during the entire trial, including the incident which you have mentioned?—A. One or both of them were.

Q. You are not a lawyer?—A. No, sir.

Q. You would not undertake to say whether Judge Hanford comprehended and clearly understood and rightly determined the question that arose at that time, or any other questions?—A. I have every reason to presume that he did.

Q. That case you followed sufficiently to know that it went to the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. HUGHES. I will call the attention of the commission to the fact that the case is reported in 218 U. S., at page 245, where the committee can ascertain what disposition was made of it.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you consider, Mr. Hughes, that the decisions on the appeals from Judge Hanford's decisions have any significance?

Mr. HUGHES. You have asked me a question and I will make this answer. I called the attention of the committee to that, not to the question of the decisions on appeals from Judge Hanford's court, but simply for the purpose of enabling this committee to ascertain the nature of that case, the importance of the case and the character of the rulings made by the court in the case; not as specially important at this time, but for further information in connection with the testimony. I take it for granted that the committee will want to obtain the testimony of the attorneys who tried that case—that is all.

Mr. McCoy. You cited the decision on the appeal, from the Supreme Court; was that decision affirmed?

Mr. Hughes. Yes, sir; it was affirmed.

Mr. McCoy. Was the prisoner convicted or acquitted?

Mr. Hughes. He was convicted and there was certain very nice questions of law involved in the case. The only significance of that—I merely called the attention of the committee to the fact that you can find the case referred to, and further that you will find that it was an important and interesting case.

Mr. McCoy. My only question is, do you consider the fact that the Supreme Court affirmed it as of any significance?

Mr. Hughes. No. I am only calling the attention of the committee to the fact that you will get at the character of the case and the importance of the case and of the questions involved, simply for the purpose of interpreting the testimony of the attorneys whom I assume you will want to call in this case, and as bearing upon the attention of the court, that is all. I have not referred to it for the purpose of introducing it in evidence, but simply for the guidance of the committee in taking further testimony.

The Chairman. You were not professionally connected with the case?

Mr. Hughes. No.

The Chairman. And of course you do not know whether the point referred to by the witness was preserved by an exception in the record?

Mr. Hughes. I will state the reason I called the attention of the committee to this decision of the Supreme Court is if you will look at the case and take it in connection with the examination you want to make the attorneys you will see that it was a very closely contested case and every question which could be raised for the defendant apparently was raised, and that will be of importance to this committee in determining whether the attorneys in trying the case would have taken an exception or overlooked any act of Judge Hanford's which might prejudice the rights of their client, and I say now I have not talked with these attorneys and I do not know about them—that is, I do not know what they would say—I know what the men are, and I merely suggest that the circumstance is important, if important at all, only as it may be important in the light of the fact that this was a murder case contested, as the court will see from an examination of this opinion, bitterly and closely in all matters and represented by able counsel on both sides, and that those counsel ought to be the best witnesses.

The Chairman. All counsel are able.

Mr. Hughes. Not all.

Mr. McCoy. Do you remember who made the objection which called for the ruling which was made at the time you have testified about?

The WITNESS. No; I do not.

Q. Do you remember whether the Government's attorney or the defendant's attorney made the objection?—A. No; I just remember the incident and that is all.

Mr. HIGGINS. Had you ever been in Judge Hanford's court before that day?—A. On that particular day?

Q. No; at any time before this incident occurred which attracted your attention?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And since that time?—A. And since.

Q. I want you to state again what led you to believe that he was under some improper influence.—A. I did not say "improper influence"—some influence, at the time of this—at the time of this Holt trial, you mean?

Q. Yes. Describe how he looked and what he did—just what he did?—A. Well, he was bent over this way, with his hands folded and his head down like that [illustrating].

Mr. MCCOY. Now, the witness puts his head nearly at a right angle to his body.

Mr. HUGHES. If the court please——

Mr. MCCOY. Well, did he have his arms on the bench?

Mr. HUGHES. If the court please, I do not profess to be a great mathematician, but I have given some attention to mathematics, and I hope that the record should not be made, assuming that the witness says that he put his head at right angles to his body.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I think the record should show, and I think now that Mr. Hughes and I will agree, when we get through, that it was a right angle—will you put your head again about at the angle to your body which you recollect Judge Hanford's was, or took at that time. [Witness does so.]

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Hughes, how much out of a right angle is it?

Mr. HUHES. If you will put the instruments to the witness and then take a measurement, I will place my estimate that the angle is not to exceed 25 to 30 degrees. Now, I challenge the committeemen to get the instruments—we can get them here in a minute—I don't think it is very imporant, but a right angle would be this way—prone.

The CHAIRMAN. Prone?

Mr. HUGHES. Prone to the perpendicular of his body.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you agree that the witness's chin rested on his chest as he gave the illustration?

Mr. HUGHES. I think this witness ought to testify and explain it and let it get into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Witness, is the fact that I have asked you about now, true? Was your chin on your chest when you gave the illustration?

A. I don't believe it was.

Q. How near it was it?—A. Well, I don't know—well, it is quite a little ways.

Mr. MCCOY. It touches your necktie, doesn't it?

A. Oh, yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Then we can dispense with the instruments?

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed; are there any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. There was a desk before him?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. And his arms rested upon the desk?—A. No, I think his arms were under the desk; of course I don't remember, but I don't remember his arms being on the top of the desk.

Q. You could not be certain as to that?—A. No, sir.

Q. The room was rather a badly ventilated room?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. And this occurrence, I think you have stated, was in the afternoon sometime?—A. In the afternoon.

Q. Some one of those days during the trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember how long the trial had been in progress?—A. It was along toward the end of the trial.

Mr. MCCOY. What was the name of the gentleman who stood up here, the lawyer?

Mr. HUGHES. Riddell, he was pointed out.

The WITNESS. His name is Riddell.

Mr. HUGHES. C. F. Riddell.

The WITNESS. Yes.

W. A. STEELE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee?

A. W. A. Steele.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Steele?—A. Seattle and Alaska.

Q. Have you two residences, or is one of those your residence and the other a resort?—A. Well, I have a business in Alaska and I spend—I have just returned from spending four months there.

Q. Well, what you mean, then, is that your home is in Seattle, but you are in Alaska on business a good deal of the time.—A. Well, my home in a way is in Alaska.

Q. Where in Alaska?—A. Cordova; I have a newspaper business there.

Q. Are you a family man?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no permanent residence of your own?—A. Well, I have lived—I came to Seattle 18 or 19 years ago, and I have been there other than such times that I may have been in various parts of Alaska.

Q. Have you any other interest there than the newspaper business?—A. Mining interests.

Q. For yourself or someone else?—A. Well, I am in the Copper River country, and I am trustee or treasurer of the mining company that is operating various properties up there in the Copper River country; it is in the interior back from Cordova.

Q. In the mines known as the Guggenheim syndicate property?—A. No; I am not connected with that property; there are various properties in that same section of the country; it is in the neighborhood of the Guggenheim properties.

Q. Have you any other profession than the newspaper business?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Steele, are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; I know Judge Hanford, but not very well.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him from—I should say, about 18 years.

Q. Personally acquainted with him or only a sight acquaintance?—A. Well, shortly after I first came to town I saw Judge Hanford quite often, but recently I have not seen him very frequently.

Q. Under what circumstances did you see him then? That is, what was he doing when you saw him?—A. Well, he was presiding on the Federal bench, and at that time I was city editor of a morning paper called the Morning Telegraph, and I covered that detail myself.

Q. For how long?—A. Well, I presume that was for about a year.

Q. Did you know the judge elsewhere than on the Federal bench during that time, or any time?—A. Oh, I have frequently seen him, yes, about the city.

Q. At what hours?—A. Well, various hours; I suppose I have at times, seen him at various hours during the day and evening.

Q. How late in the evening?—A. Well, I do not recall any particular hours that I may have seen him; it may have been 10 or 11 o'clock. I think one evening I saw him coming from the Rainer Club about 12 o'clock.

Q. Did you on any other occasion see him in town on the streets as late as or later than 12 o'clock, midnight?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Coming back to your court-reporting work; that is, reporting the court news for the newspaper?—A. For the newspaper; yes, sir.

Q. If at any time you saw him in court when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant, please tell the committee.—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. And if at any time on the street you saw him when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant, tell the committee of that.—A. Well, I could not say that I ever have; that is, I could not state positively that I ever did.

Q. Give us the opinion that you have, whether positive or otherwise.—A. Well, I have seen Judge Hanford frequently on the street; his manner is such that one might say that he was intoxicated, but people who would know him better would not think so.

Q. Quite so, now, leave the other people out of it and give us your impression.—A. Well——

Q. What do you think from what you saw?—A. Well, I would say not, because I have seen Judge Hanford so often going along the street with his head bent and apparently absorbed and with something other than mere passing events——

Q. Now, pick out one of those occasions when you saw him and tell us where it was that you saw him.—A. Well, I have seen him going up Marion Street; I have seen him on Third Avenue.

Q. Where is that from the courthouse?—A. Well, Marion Street, that is several blocks south of this street.

Q. Is it in the business portion of the city?—A. It is in the business portion of the city; yes, sir.

Q. Well, at what time was it you saw him on the occasion now in your mind?—A. Well, I remember one occasion, I think it was possibly half past 12 o'clock, I saw him coming up toward the hill, presumably at least going in the direction of the Rainier Club.

Q. Now, tell us what you noticed about him on that occasion?—A. Well, he did not appear to be very different then from what I have seen him at other times.

Q. Well, tell us rather how he did appear?—A. Well, I remember I passed him; on that particular occasion I was coming down the street and he had his head bent and he went by and he did not speak to me, which alone was peculiar enough to attract my attention as oftentimes he would give me a nod—I did not know him very well—and at other times he would pass and does not pay any attention to me.

Q. Now, this time he was going on with his head down, what else was there, if anything, peculiar in his attitude or movements?—A. Other than that he did not seem to be paying any attention to anything that was going on about him. In walking down I generally look around myself, and his attitude appeared different, which caused me to observe him.

Q. At that time you say it did appear different from normal.—A. Well, not from normal with the judge, because he appears to me most of the time to be that way; or that is, many of the times.

Q. Well, was there anything else that attracted your attention then and which made you recall it now?—A. No, I don't think so.

Q. What was there in it which caused you to recall it and mention it now as one of the occasions?—A. Because you asked me if I could recall any particular occasion. I can recall several occasions when I have passed him.

Q. Well, let me add to that question—that you have passed him when, in your judgment, he seemed to be under some influence such as intoxication.—A. Well, I would not say that; I would not say that because I think Judge Hanford is a rather peculiar man, and what might appear to be intoxication in another man would not, to me, indicate that to me about him—I would not be impressed with that fact with regard to the judge.

Q. Do you recall any other occasion when you met him under circumstances to attract your attention to him?—A. Well, I remember, I think it was about two years ago, I was coming down Fourth Avenue and I was on my way down to the Colman Building, which was on First Avenue and Marion, and while near the Rainier Club, I think it was a block this side of the Rainier Club, I passed the judge. At that time it was about, I think about half past 9 o'clock. I remember the particular occasion because I had an office in the Colman Building and I was going there and it was on Sunday evening, because I had to walk upstairs, the elevator was not running. And at that time the judge passed me; he was coming north up in this direction and seemed to be at that time—he had his head bowed.

Q. How much was it bowed?—A. Well, I should say about that way [illustrating].

Q. That would bring his chin how near to his chest—give us some idea that will go into the record as to the extent to which his head was bowed?—A. I would say about that—his head was bowed and it might be——

The CHAIRMAN. If we had a photograph——

A. I am trying to figure out about how far my chin is from my chest.

Q. Well, go ahead.—A. I don't know, it seemed to me about 4 or 5 inches.

Q. From your chest?—A. Yes. I can not just see it, of course. But he had the attitude; he was seemingly engrossed in some deep thought.

Mr. MCCOY. Walking up or down, was he?

A. Well, I think there was a little incline toward the uphill.

The CHAIRMAN. Was his head bowed to such an extent that he could see but a step or so in front of his feet?

A. Oh, yes; yes, sir; he could.

Q. How far ahead could he see what was in front of him?—A. With my head bowed now I can see possibly 8 or 10 feet in front of me and I presume that he could see that distance.

Q. With your head bowed now you mean as his was then?—A. Yes.

Q. But you are elevated quite a bit now.—A. Yes.

Q. And what was it on that occasion which attracted your attention to him?—A. Well, his attitude, as I say, is different from the average man ordinarily.

Q. But you knew that at the time, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what was it that attracted your attention to him particularly in his conduct or demeanor that night?—A. Well, as I say, he walked by me and seemingly did not pay any attention to anyone who was on the sidewalk.

Q. Do you recall any other occasion when you met him when his conduct or demeanor attracted your attention?—A. Well, I have in the course of the years, I can not recall the particular occasion, but I have passed the judge as well when those peculiarities of his have attracted my attention, and at other times I have passed him when he bowed and observed me.

Q. Which of those things occurred more frequently, when he would pass you without noticing you or pass you and notice you?—A. Well, I think he would more frequently pass me without noticing me.

Q. When he did notice you what was the form of his recognition?—A. Well, he would give me a little nod.

Q. Any words spoken?—A. Possibly; usually I think it was just a little nod.

Q. You have met him both day and night time when he would notice you and give the nod?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him at night time.

Q. When did you do that—do you recall any other particular occasion when his conduct was such as to fix itself on your recollection?—A. No; I do not think that I do.

Q. Have you ever ridden on a street car with him?—A. I don't think so; I don't think I ever have.

Q. Have you stated to anyone here in the city recently that you had seen Judge Hanford when he was intoxicated?—A. I had a conversation with a gentleman on Sunday; I think that is the only time that I have ever discussed that phase of Judge Hanford with anyone, and that was in an incidental way. It was more in comparison——

Q. Did you, in that conversation, state that you had seen the judge when he was intoxicated?—A. Well, I said that I had seen the judge when some people might consider that he was intoxicated. We were discussing him at that time—we were discussing more particularly the judge's attitude in the Olsson matter.

Q. You do not quite understand my question. My question was, Did you state in this conversation that you have seen him when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. Well, I think the party understood me to say that, because he said to me——

Q. I do not care about that.—A. Well, no; I do not think I said it; no, not in that way.

Q. Did you say something to the party which justified him in believing that you intended to convey that idea?—A. Evidently, because he then in turn asked me if I could swear that I had seen him drunk, and I said, "No," that I could not.

Q. What do you mean by "intoxicated?" What does that word convey to your mind?—A. Well, when a man has not got command of things—well, that he does not know just what he is doing; a little uncertain of himself and not clear in his mind, making him uneasy on his feet and legs. There are various symptoms to be observed in different kinds of men.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness by the committee?

Mr. HUGHES. With whom did you have that conversation?

A. Mr. Perry.

Q. What Perry?—A. John H. Perry, the attorney.

Whereupon the committee takes a recess until 1.30 p. m.

AFTERNOON PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess.
All parties present as at former hearing.

C. F. RIDDELL, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. C. F. Riddell.

Q. Do you live here in the city, Mr. Riddell?—A. I do.

Q. Have for how long?—A. For a little over four years.

Q. You are a professional man?—A. I am.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How long have you been a lawyer?—A. Since 1903.

Q. Where have you practiced your profession?—A. Well practiced practically no place but here. I was admitted back in the District of Columbia, but had very little practice.

Q. And since 1903 you have been practicing here?—A. No; I have only been practicing—I came out here on December 31, 1907, and have been practicing here ever since.

Q. Do you at present hold any official position?—A. Yes; I am assistant United States attorney for the western district of Washington.

Q. Located in Seattle?—A. Located in Seattle.

Q. That is an appointive position?—A. It is.

Q. Through whom did you receive your appointment?—A. Through Mr. McLaren, the United States attorney.

Q. Did you have any indorsements?—A. I did not. He just appointed me without my knowledge.

Q. How long have you been acting in that capacity?—A. I was sworn in on the 7th of last May.

Q. Was the appointment for a specific time or not?—A. I don't know; I don't think it is. I think it is just a temporary appointment.

Q. And to be determined by whom?—A. By Mr. McLaren, I presume.

Mr. McCoy. By temporary you mean without any fixed limit?

A. Yes. Mr. McLaren, as you gentlemen, I suppose, know, has been temporarily appointed United States attorney, and then he appointed me to hold during his pleasure.

The Chairman. Well, what do you mean when you say he has a temporary appointment?

A. His appointment has not been made permanent. Mr. Todd resigned, and no permanent appointment to fill the vacancy has been made, and he is temporarily United States attorney.

Q. Filling a vacancy here?—A. Filling a vacancy.

Q. Is there any understanding that if he is made the permanent appointee you remain a permanent assistant?—A. None whatever.

Q. Mr. Riddell, you were present in court this morning when one witness testified about a case which, I think, he called the Holt case?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you one of the attorneys in that case?—A. I was.

Q. It is your recollection, as the witness stated, that the defendant Holt was indicted for homicide?—A. He was.

Q. Who, if anyone, assisted you in the defense?—A. Why, my partner, Hugh M. Caldwell, and I defended the case.

Q. Where is Mr. Caldwell now?—A. Mr. Caldwell is first assistant prosecuting attorney of King County, in Seattle here.

Q. Do you recall the trial?—A. I do.

Q. When was it?—A. It started, I think, on the 10th of December, 1908. It was set, I know, for the 8th and there was a smuggling case ahead of it, and it is my recollection that the smuggling case went over to the 9th, though we might possibly have started on the 9th. It was either the 9th or the 10th.

Q. So the case lasted during a period of 12 days?—A. It did.

Q. How much of that time was occupied in the production of evidence?—A. I think we started one noon and we got the jury by the following evening. The next morning we presented a motion, which lasted possibly an hour, and the jury was then sworn and the trial of the case commenced. It lasted from probably the 11th or 12th until the 22d.

Q. How many days were actually consumed in the production of evidence, as you recall?—A. The jury went out on the morning of the 22d. That was Monday. Sunday and Saturday there had been no trial. It was Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of that week. Let's see, that would—if I may refer to a calendar I think I can——

Q. You may.—A. (After referring to calendar.) I think the production of evidence, by referring to the calendar for 1908, started on the 11th of December, and—15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th—the 22d, I see by reference to the calendar, was Tuesday. I remember now Monday is motion day in the court here, and I think that the case was adjourned from Friday evening—Friday or Saturday evening—until the next Tuesday morning, when the arguments were had. There was no testimony introduced on the 22d. About five days.

Q. So that the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th were the days during which testimony were produced?—A. Yes, sir; and I think also some on the 11th. I might be mistaken on that, though.

Q. Were you present before lunch when the witness Robert E. Jones testified?—A. I was.

Q. Did you hear him testify, in substance, that at one time during the production of the evidence one of the attorneys objected to some question asked of a witness, but the judge—Judge Hanford being on on the bench—did not apparently hear the objection or notice it; that it was probably repeated and that those present noticed that the judge did not notice, and manifested by their actions that they noticed the judge was not conscious, apparently, of what was going on, and that after a space of from 20 seconds to a minute the judge suddenly aroused himself and made a ruling? Did you hear that testimony?—A. I heard the testimony.

Q. Did you hear it in substance as I have related it?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Have you any recollection of that occuring?—A. I have no recollection of there being any such incident in the course of the trial of the Holt case.

Q. What do you say; have you sufficient recollection to enable you to say whether or not such a thing did occur?—A. I recall the whole case very well. I don't believe any such incident occurred.

Q. Did that incident, or any incident similar to it, occur in any trial in which you participated before Judge Hanford?—A. Not that I recollect of. I only remember one incident, and I am satisfied if there had been any other I would have recollected it. The judge was busy, either signing an order or something of that kind, while a witness was testifying in the case—that occurred since I have been in office this spring, and he, the witness, testifying, and he thought that I was leading the witness, and he looked up from signing his paper to say that I was, and I remember that incident very clearly, and I am satisfied in my own mind that that is the only incident that ever occurred in any trial that I was ever engaged in before Judge Hanford.

Q. Do you think that was an incident of the same kind as the other?—A. Well, it was simply an incident where the judge was engaged in another matter, where he didn't have his eye right on the witness. That is all.

Q. But the one incident, as related by the witness Jones, was where he was entirely inattentive, apparently, to everything, and the one you relate as an incident is where he was giving his attention to another matter and ceased that to notice what you were doing. Was there any sort of correlation between those two things, in your judgment?—A. The only correlation is this: That is the only instance that I ever recall in any trial before Judge Hanford that he did not rule directly on the question on everything that was ever put up to him.

Q. Well, in the last case that you mention, was there any objection made that would call for a ruling of the court?—A. No; it was the court's own objection, the last instance I mentioned.

Q. Well, it is your purpose, in mentioning the last instance, in showing the mental alertness of the judge?—A. Yes; that for one reason, and also I believe that in any instance where he had not been paying attention to the course of the trial, either from inattention or from attention to something else, I would have remembered it, and that is the only incident that I do remember. and I mention it for both purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask Mr. Riddell any further questions, Mr. McCoy, Mr. Higgins, or Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Witness excused.

C. V. DAVIS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. My name is C. V. Davis.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Davis?—A. 284 Twelfth Avenue, north, this city.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Dentist.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Twelve years and two months.

Q. That would be practically all of your adult life, wouldn't it?—A. Yes, sir; very near.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I only know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known him that way?—A. I could not state, possibly 14 or 15 years.

Q. During that time, if you have had any occasion or opportunity to observe him when he appeared to be to you under the influence of an intoxicant, you may tell of it.—A. Simply riding on the same car, going out on the Broadway line. I take the same car going home as——

Q. (Interrupting.) How long has that been true; how long have you rode out on the same car?—A. Six years next month; six years in August.

Q. Well, if at any time you observed him when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant, please tell us when you first so observed him.—A. I could not name a definite date.

Q. I don't expect that. The year, the approximate time; in any way.—A. Shortly after I had moved out in the North Broadway district; that is some six years ago.

Q. Very well. Now, tell us the circumstances.—A. Simply going on the car, as I do each day, going to and from home. I simply noticed his condition.

Q. Do you recall any particular occasion now?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall the first occasion when you so noticed?—A. I could not say; I could not mention even any definite occasion, because——

Q. (Interrupting.) Without giving the date, have you in your mind some particular time when you noticed him and thought he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. To my knowledge the most noticeable case, I will say, was about 14 months ago.

Q. Well, tell us that one.—A. Simply going home on the car, I noticed the condition of the judge when he got on the car and noticed him taking a seat in the front of the car just opposite where I was sitting and just simply—of course it was—simply to me it was a condition that I had suspicioned or suspected or apparently noticed or thought that that was the condition that he was in a number of times before. I paid no particular attention.

Q. Well, what was his condition?—A. Well, I should say it was a state of intoxication.

Q. Were you on the car when he got on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice him getting on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean by that, did you notice him getting up the steps of the car?—A. No, sir. I noticed him coming forward in the aisle.

Q. Now, was there anything in his walk or appearance or demeanor as he walked from the rear end to the front end which attracted your attention?—A. Just being in that condition, I of course, took notice of it, as I think most anybody else would.

Q. Well, tell me what it was first caused you to notice him particularly; that is, what there was in his conduct that caused you to notice him?—A. Well, any man that has the appearance of being intoxicated I think usually attracts attention—not of admiration.

Q. Can't you describe, for instance, to one who never saw a man in such a condition how he appeared to you then?—A. It is one of those common conditions that I think is hard to express

Q. What did he do when he came in?—A. Walked up the aisle and took a seat, as I say, just opposite me on the car.

Q. And when he sat down what was noticeable in his conduct, if anything?—A. Well, the appearance of a man that was having an effort to keep awake or sit steadily on his seat.

Q. Was there anyone near him at the time; that is, on that seat?—A. No; not on that seat.

Q. Was his side or his face fronting in the direction the car was going?—A. His face was fronting.

Q. There are some seats——A. He was in the first seat next to the side seat.

Q. (Continuing.) On the side of the car, but he was in the first seat which fronted in the direction in which the car was going?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were across the aisle?—A. I was just opposite.

Q. In the corresponding seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you ride with the judge?—A. It takes me 15 minutes to reach my place.

Q. Which of you got off first?—A. I got off first.

Q. How near to where he gets off did you go?—A. Well, about nine blocks.

Q. Well, while you remained on the car, did you notice anything else in his condition which helped to lead you to conclude that he was intoxicated?—A. Just the general actions of any man or any person in that condition. Of course, nothing unusual; no unusual conditions to attract attention.

Q. At any other time did you notice the judge when you thought he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. Well, there were times when I suspicioned it, of course. I would not swear to it.

Q. What do you mean by "suspicioned"? What was there in his conduct, if you know, which lead you to suspicion, as you put it, that he was in that condition?—A. By his actions—by his actions and the appearance of the man.

Q. Mention some of those actions.—A. Well, as a man sits on the seat, if he is in an intoxicated condition, why, usually he is a little bit unsteady or he is drowsy, apparently sleeping, something in that condition.

Q. Was the judge in those conditions at the times you refer to?—A. Several times I have seen the same thing.

Q. How many times could you say?—A. I could not say, because we ride on the same car every few days.

Q. Well, approximate by some unit of time, weeks, months, years, or some other way; how often or frequently you saw the judge in the condition you have described?—A. Well, it was occasionally. I could not say. I would not say how often.

Q. As often as once a month?—A. Possibly so.

Q. Well, would that be your recollection of it?—A. Yes, sir; I would say that, at least that.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Well, as I say, I have lived in that district six years, and it has been occasionally that I have seen that condition.

Q. Do you mean for all of the six years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever observed the judge anywhere else than on the street cars?—A. Once in the courtroom, the only time I was ever in the court room.

Q. Well, do you mean to say that on that occasion you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Oh, you observed him there only?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you observed him on the car at times when in your judgment he was not under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the difference between him at the times when you thought he was and when you thought he was not intoxicated?—A. Well, the difference would be that the man appeared in a normal condition, I would say. I think that would express it.

Q. Well, when you thought he was not under the influence of some intoxicant, how did he sit on the seat with reference to the way he sat when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. Usually taking notice of the things around, people coming and going on the car, and things we were passing on the street.

Q. What experience have you had, Doctor, in noticing the effects of intoxication, or partial intoxication on people?—A. What experience have I had in noticing it, you say?

Q. In observing, yes.—A. Well, it is a condition that we have all seen. I have seen other people, I have observed it all my life, as near as I can remember. Just see the effects that it has on one.

Q. I would like to get more accurately at the state of your mind.—A. All right, sir.

Q. Do I understand you to say that on the occasions when you thought he was not normal, as you put it, that in your opinion he was intoxicated?—A. There were things that indicated that he was.

Q. Well, what I want to get at——A. (Interrupting.) As we look at a thing, you think of symptoms and—signs or symptoms of a condition, and that is the way I drew my conclusions.

Q. On any of the occasions to which you refer when you saw him on the street car, do you know whether others on the car noticed anything in his condition?—A. Yes, sir. I have heard them remark about it.

Q. How frequently?—A. Well, at least—I could say at least as many as three or four times that I have taken notice of people remarking about it, and that was within the last 18 months.

Q. Can you tell to what extent his condition and demeanor attracted the attention of those who might be on the car at the time—that is, of those who were on the car at the time?—A. Well, on one occasion I simply heard the man remark, "That is Judge Hanford," and in a jesting way spoke of his condition.

Q. That is not quite in answer to the question. That is one man. But was his condition such as to attract the attention of any observing person——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) On the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it do so?—A. Yes, sir; I would say that it did that.

Q. At what time of day or night did you usually ride with him on the car when these things occurred?—A. Between the hour of 6.30 and 7.30.

Q. How late was the latest you ever saw him on the car going home or toward home or——A. (Interrupting.) I can't recall any other hour than that, because that is the time I am usually riding out; not later than 8 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any questions to ask the witness?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Have you seen him walk down the aisle of the car on any of these occasions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice anything peculiar about his gait?—A. That is the thing that attracted my attention to his condition.

Q. What was it exactly?—A. The gait of a man that was not—well, it was the gait of a man that, as I would say, would be intoxicated.

Q. That is, stagger?—A. Stagger; a man—certainly a man that was intoxicated would stagger.

Q. Well, did he, as a matter of fact?—A. Yes, sir; holding to the seats as he walked along.

Q. How soon after he took his seat, on these occasions that you have spoken of, when to you he appeared to be under the influence of an intoxicant, did he show signs of drowsiness?—A. Within a matter of 5 or 10 minutes; say 5 minutes, or sometimes less.

Q. You say he was unsteady in his seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean merely that his head was unsteady or his whole body seemed to be unsteady?—A. I have seen him drop forward the entire body.

Q. Do you mean dropped forward to the back of the seat in front of him?—A. No, sir; dropped forward this way; the entire body would incline forward.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask any questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Just one or two questions.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. In walking in or out of the car the most of the journey through the aisle would be when the car was just starting or just stopping, wouldn't it?—A. I have noticed it in different—on different occasions, at different times.

Q. But I say the cars only stop for an instant, and as soon as people are on they start up, and they are moving forward in the aisle. The same thing is true in stopping, isn't it?—A. Sometimes it is.

Q. And most people you see going in and out of the cars through the aisles take hold of the seats as they walk along, don't they—steady themselves?—A. But even at that I consider there is a difference in the way people take hold of the seat and the condition in which they appear at the time; the necessity or a matter of habit in walking along touching the seats, taking hold of them.

Q. On any of the occasions that you have spoken of did Judge Hanford engage in conversation with anyone?—A. I have seen him engaged in conversation; yes, sir.

Q. And at the times when you observed him apparently asleep?—A. As I stated, in what I would call a normal condition.

Q. I am speaking of the times that you have referred to here when you have spoken of what you call conditions other than normal. Did you see him at those times engaged in conversation with anyone?—A. I have seen him answer. People would speak to him. I have observed him on the car with people that apparently knew him. He would make replies to inquiries or questions asked or some remarks made, but he never engaged in any conversation as he did when he appeared, as I say, in normal condition.

Q. What I am trying to get at is whether there was anything that you observed that indicated misbehavior or impropriety of conduct or anything other than the drowsiness or the tendency to lean forward and what you have described as unsteadiness?—A. No; there was apparently not anything improper; there was nothing improper in his conduct.

Q. Well, was there anything other than you have described specifically? The chairman has asked you a great many questions and I have not heard that you gave any other description. You did not observe anything but drowsiness, what you have described as unsteadiness, a tendency to lean forward—no other things that you observed, were there?—A. Well, there was—I don't know—I would not know how to answer your question, because it is a thing that is so common. You can't explain the condition of a drunken man, can you? I can't, other than the conditions that we meet and see. It is so common to us.

Q. I think what the committee has wanted to know was a description of the things that you saw, not your impressions. I am asking you if you saw anything else than you have described, what you have said to be unsteadiness, the drowsiness, and the leaning forward or a dropping of the head?—A. Just simply a general indication of intoxication.

Q. But that does not convey anything to anybody. I think that is all, with one exception, if you can't answer more distinctly to me.—A. All right.

Q. I probably can't get at it more definitely than the chairman has done. What is your dental office?—A. Where is it?

Q. Where is it?—A. It is in the Leary Building—504 Leary Building.

Q. What office is it?—A. It is in my own name—C. V. Davis, dentist.

Q. Are you with Dr. Brown?—A. No, sir; I am not. I have always conducted my own practice ever since graduating.

Witness excused.

CHARLES F. ZIMMERMAN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Charles F. Zimmerman.
Q. Z-i-m-m-e-r-m-a-n?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Zimmerman?—A. 1205 Olympia Way.
Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About eight years.
Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Bartender.
Q. How long have you followed that business, Mr. Zimmerman?—A. Twenty-five years.
Q. Where do you work now?—A. Nowhere at present.
Q. Where was your last employment?—A. Savoy.
Q. When was that?—A. About two weeks ago.
Q. And for how long did you work at the Savoy?—A. Oh, close to two years, I should say—a little less than two years.
Q. Where did you work prior to that?—A. At Grant's café, on Third Avenue.
Q. How far north or south of this building is it?—A. Why, it is in this next block here.
Q. That would be——A. (Interrupting.) North.
Q. North?—A. Yes.
Q. How long did you serve there?—A. About four years.
Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I have known him by sight for several years; I should say six or seven years—eight years.
Q. Did you know him before you went to work in Grant's?—A. Just by sight.
Q. I mean that.—A. Yes.
Q. If at any time you have seen the Judge drinking at a bar, please tell us.—A. Yes.
Q. Where?—A. Savoy.
Q. When did you first notice him there?—A. Oh, for the last five or six months.
Q. Was he a regular customer while you were on duty?—A. About three times a week.
Q. What time in the day?—A. Mostly at night.
Q. What hour in the night?—A. Between 12 and 1.
Q. That is about midnight?—A. Midnight.
Q. Or a little after?—A. A little after midnight; yes.
Q. What did he drink?—A. Sometimes a cordial, sometimes a cocktail.
Q. What is the cordial you speak of?—A. Benedictine.
Q. What is the other drink?—A. Well, sometimes Manhattan Martini.
Q. Cocktails?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he confine his drinking at that bar to those two drinks?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you noticed him there at any other hour than 12 to 1?—A. No; never.
Q. What times were you on duty?—A. Well, I was there from 12 at noon until close up most of the time, because I had the management of the place.
Q. One is the closing hour here, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, how often would you say that the Judge came in during the hour that you mentioned each week?—A. Well, not more than four times, I would say three or four times a week.

Q. Did he generally come during that hour?—A. That is the only time I have seen him; yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink at any other time than the time you mentioned—four or five months, was it, you mentioned?—A. No, I never did.

Q. Sir?—A. I never did.

Q. When you were at Grant's, did you ever see him drink there?—A. No.

Q. Now, on any of the occasions when you saw him there, state, if you can, what his condition was with reference to being intoxicated.—A. I have never seen him when he was intoxicated in my life; took a drink and went out.

Q. Have you ever seen him anywhere else than at the bar there?—A. I have seen him on the street.

Q. Under what circumstances?—A. Just walking along.

Q. In the daytime or nighttime?—A. Daytime.

Q. Well, did you on the street ever observe him when he appeared to you to be under the influence of liquor?—A. Never.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, gentlemen?

Mr. HUGHES. Just one question.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. The bar you speak of, the Savoy, is in the Savoy Hotel?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is one of the leading hotels of the city?—A. Yes.

Witness excused.

A. C. STAPLES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name?

A. A. C. Staples.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live at 4018 Fourth Avenue northeast, Seattle.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Staples?—A. I am with the Burns Detective Agency.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I have lived here a year and a half.

Q. How long have you been in that employment?—A. I have been with them about two years.

Q. Were you ever assigned by the one who gives you orders in the Burns Detective Agency to observe Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when was that?—A. That was about the 5th day of September, 1911, the first time.

Q. Did you act on the assignment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many days were you on it?—A. During September I was only on a short time, about perhaps three days and a half in September, and then the next time was about the 5th of October, I think, if I remember right, and I was on several days then, perhaps 14 days, maybe. I don't just remember exactly how many days, but perhaps about two weeks; something like that.

Q. Well, state to the committee anything special, if there was anything that you noticed about Judge Hanford's actions while you had him under observation.—A. Well, the——

Q. Beginning at the beginning and following it as nearly chronologically as you are able to.—A. As near as I can remember his daily life while I was upon the case was going from the Federal Building at night about anywhere from 5 to 6 o'clock, in there somewhere——

Q. (Interrupting.) In the afternoon?—A. In the aternoon. From there to the Rainier Club, perhaps remaining there about one hour usually, sometimes longer; then coming out of there and going down Marion Street to Second Avenue. He would usually enter the Saratoga bar first, and his usual drink in there was a sherry and egg; then he would go to Sutherland's bar and drink a cordial—I think they called it a cordial—it is a very small glass; it might have been a pony of brandy, I don't know sure. Then crossing over to the Butler Hotel bar, his usual drink in there was a whisky cocktail, they called it. Then he would board the car and go to his residence on Tenth Avenue north. And during the month of October, when I was on, he usually came out every evening and sometimes he would go to 1008 East Harrison Street and sometimes he would go directly to the Rainier Club again after the dinner hour. Then, especially on the 9th of October and the 14th of October, are the only times that I would say that he was intoxicated. On the 19th of October—on the 9th of October, rather, he came out of the Rainier Club. This was about around 6 o'clock—6 p. m.—I can't remember just exactly what time it was—he went to the Saratoga and had his sherry and egg, but he did not go to Sutherland's this time, he went to the Butler then, and then instead of boarding the car as usual he walked up to—I think it was Bronson's saloon, if I remember right, across from the Saratoga, and he had a glass of whisky in there, and he walked on to the Rathskeller; he entered the barroom, but I could not say whether he took a drink or not, because I met him coming out when I was on my way in. And he went from there I think to the Mission bar and had a mixed drink in there, I think it was a cocktail, and from there he went home, and I think that evening that he came out and went to 1008 East Harrison again.

Q. What time?—A. He came out about in the neighborhood of 8 o'clock, and I think he left there about 9.25. It is quite hard at this late date to state exactly just what time it was. Then he came down to the Rainier Club, and I think he remained until about 12.30 in the morning. He came down to Second Avenue, and I think he went to the Savoy bar this time, I know he walked out Second Avenue—I think he stopped at the Savoy bar—and he walked to Union Street and out Union to Ninth Avenue, across to Pike, in fact he walked clear to his residence. The only stop he made was at the Winehard Hotel—he was perhaps waiting for a car there—for about 15 minutes, and it didn't come along and so he walked the rest of the way home. This is the night that he arrived home about 2 o'clock in the morning. He staggered both from side to side and there were several times that he staggered forward and would put out one foot and stop and then start on again. It appeared to me as if he was in an intoxicated condition. He did not make any figure 8's or S's or anything like that, but he would just start to fall sidewise and then catch himself just in time to keep from falling entirely.

Q. He started walking on that walk at about half past 12, you say?—A. It was just about half past 12, I think it was.

Q. And what time was it when he arrived home?—A. He arrived home at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Q. And how long is the distance between the starting point, about—A. Oh, I suppose it would be about 3 miles. I don't know whether it is quite that far or not. I should say it was about a 3-mile walk, perhaps not quite that much.

Q. Well, go on with your story about that day.—A. Well, that is all that day. And the one other time that I saw him when I thought he was intoxicated was on the 14th of October.

Q. 1911?—A. 1911; yes.

Q. Describe what you saw on that day.—A. Well, this day I only saw him take three drinks, and that was the usual—at the usual places, at the Saratoga, Southerland's, and the Butler bar; but he came down at night and went to the Rainier Club, and I think this was the night that he came out at 12.40. And he didn't go down Second Avenue at all; he started out of the club and walked north on Fourth Avenue to Madison Street, to the cable car line, and he stood there as if he was going to take the cable car, but instead of that he started down off of the sidewalk and started across the street toward the Lincoln Hotel, and when he got to the center of the street he turned around as if he was dazed and started toward the Lincoln again, and then whirled and went right back to the same side of the street where he started from. He walked on out Fourth Avenue, going north until he got to—well, I can't say whether he went to Union or Pike this time, but he usually walked out Union Street when he went home; but I remember one night that he walked out Pike instead of Union; but anyway he walked home this night the same as he did on the 9th, and he was intoxicated; that is all there is to it.

Q. What time did he get home that evening?—A. He got home this night at—well, I don't remember; it was perhaps 1.45 or along about the same time as he did on the 9th. Now, there is another thing; I may have this a little mixed about the 9th and the 14th, about the Winehard Hotel: I don't remember sure which night it was that he stopped at the Winehard, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you make any notes of the occurrences that you observed while you were on that case?—A. Yes; I made notes every day, and I made up my report from it, from the notes.

Q. And what did you do with your report?—A. The reports I sent in at the Burns Agency, at 308 Hinckley Block.

Q. Did you see anything of those reports at any time after you handed them in?—A. Well, not until to-day.

Q. Well, have you seen to-day any of the actual reports which you handed in?—A. No; I haven't.

Q. What is it you have seen to-day?—A. I saw what was supposed to be copies of these reports.

Q. Would a reference to those copies give any assistance to you in fixing any of these matters more definitely?—A. Well, it would just simply establish the two dates which I saw him intoxicated. I don't remember which dates those were, the 9th and 14th.

Q. Well, if you will take those copies and identify the dates to your own satisfaction; Mr. Dorr has them. [Mr. Dorr handed papers to witness.]—A. [After referring to papers.] The 9th and the 14th, that is the two reports that the——

Q. (Interrupting.) A little louder. Mr. Hughes can't hear you.—A. It is the 9th and 14th of October that I saw Judge Hanford intoxicated, out of the perhaps 18 days when I was on the case.

Q. Is there anything further you want to add to your testimony, I mean by virtue of the fact that you have now looked at these typewritten copies?—A. Well, by going through these copies I would probably—be lots of reminders in there that would make me think of different things that happened. Of course——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, we want you to tell everything without actually reading all those notes, if what is in the notes is important one way or the other.—A. Well, I would like to mention this: One day about—it was in the afternoon, perhaps 2 o'clock, that Judge Hanford came out of his chambers here in the Federal building with Sutcliffe Baxter—I didn't know who the gentleman was at the time, but I found out afterwards it was Sutcliffe Baxter. He went with him to—no, that is wrong, I will change that. He came out of the Federal building alone, I remember now, and walked to the Arcade building on Second Avenue and went to the third floor in the Arcade annex and entered Sutcliffe Baxter's office, and he came out about, perhaps, 10 minutes or 20 minutes after that, and they both went to the Mission saloon across the street. This was about between 2 and 3 o'clock that they entered the Mission saloon.

Q. In the afternoon?—A. In the afternoon; yes, sir. Sutcliffe Baxter drank a glass of beer and Judge Hanford had some kind of a mixed drink that looked like a cocktail to me; then they walked to the Federal building together and entered, and I saw them both up in Judge Hanford's office together. They came out again about 3 p. m. and went across to Sullivan's saloon, just across from this building, across from the Federal building, and I walked through there and they were drinking; I didn't stop, for this reason, they were alone; there was not another party in there except the bartender, and I didn't want to become conspicuous, so I walked out, and I could not say what they were drinking, I didn't stop long enough to see.

Q. You say you walked through there?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that a place where you enter in one end and go out the other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did either of them pay any attention to you while you walked through?—A. Sutcliffe Baxter just glanced at me; but probably he just naturally looked up, was all. Well, then they returned to the Federal building and Mr. Baxter left alone; I don't think—I didn't see them together again that day, but I heard the next day, I think it was, or I read it in the paper, that he had appointed Sutcliffe Baxter receiver for some company, I don't know——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't think that is particularly material.—A. Well, I just wanted you to know the way exactly how it was, that is all. As I say, that just seeing him with him brought this to my mind is all, and I happened to see this in the paper; I don't know as there was anything wrong about it, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, now, demeanor of Judge Hanford on occasions when you did not suspect that he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. What is that, please, again?

Question read.

A. (Continuing.) Well, on those days that I have not mentioned, of course most every day that I was on the case in October he would invariably take his three drinks before going home at these places I have mentioned, and then if he came down again in the evening he would usually make the rounds again before he went home, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, were your observations of him confined during all this time to the hours between about 4 in the afternoon and the rest of the day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, did you see him at any time in the morning——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Or early afternoon on other occasions? Now, I say, on any of these times——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) When you had not any reason to suspect or did not suspect that he was under the influence of intoxicants, what was his demeanor; how did he walk; how did he look?—A. From 9 o'clock in the morning, or when he would leave home, until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, or just before he went home—at those times when I was with him, his—he walked with a quick step, always did, except when I saw him intoxicated. I didn't see anything wrong during the day with him; I didn't see anything out of the ordinary.

Q. You say when you were with him. You mean when you had him under observation?—A. Under surveillance; yes, sir.

Q. You never were with him as we ordinarily understand the word?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Q. Did you ever see him come into the Federal building in the evenings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often?—A. I saw him in there perhaps three different times in the evening. Sometimes when he would come down from home he would stop there before he went to the club; sometimes after he had been at the club he would stop there just before he went home.

Mr. McCoy. That is all I have to ask him, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask the witness further?

Mr. Hughes. Just two or three questions.

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. How long have you been a detective?—A. About two years and a half.

Q. What was your business before that?—A. I was in the real-estate business for about two years; a year and a half, perhaps.

Q. Where?—A. Portland, Oreg.

Q. Portland, Oreg.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, prior to two years and a half ago?—A. No. I worked for this agency about two years and then——

Q. (Interrupting.) Where?—A. In Seattle, a year an a half, and in Portland—just about six months.

Q. When was that?—A. That was just before I came to Seattle.

Q. Two years' period of service. What I am trying to get at is, how long has it been since you first entered into detective service?—A. Well, it was about four years ago when I first entered into it.

Q. Did you help Burns in those Portland cases about which so much has been said recently?—A. No, sir; I never had anything to do with those cases at all, that is, the timber cases, if that is what you refer to.

Q. Have you ever been in the detective business except in the service of Burns?—A. Yes, I have worked for the Pinkerton Agency.

Q. When and where?—A. Portland, Oreg.

Q. How long ago?—A. About four years ago, I think it was.

Q. How long?—A. I worked seven months for them.

Q. Prior to that did you ever do any of that service?—A. No, sir; never did.

Q. What business were you engaged in prior to four years ago?—A. Well, I am a mechanical draftsman. That is my trade. I worked——

Q. (Interrupting.) Were you engaged in that business before you——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, I worked for——

Q. (Continuing.) —became a detective?—A. I worked for the Great Northern Railroad.

Q. Where?—A. St. Paul, Minn.

Q. How long ago?—A. That has been about—it is about 12 years ago.

Q. And for how long a time?—A. I worked there perhaps—almost two years, I think it was.

Q. You are still in the Burns service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Regularly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or only as a special man?—A. No; I am working as a regular man there.

Q. As a regular man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have been ever since prior to your engagement in the investigation of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; every day.

Q. You said in the course of your examination that Mr. Baxter and Judge Hanford went up to Judge Hanford's office and you saw them together in that office, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go in the office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you explain to the committee how you saw them and how it was possible for you to see them and what——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) I think you are mistaking the witness's testimony, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. Hughes. How?

Mr. McCoy. I think you have made a mistake in what the witness testified to. I think he said——

Mr. Hughes. The witness says I didn't.

The Witness. I said that I saw them in the office, and I can explain it very easily.

Mr. Hughes. I think he can, and that is just what I want.

A. That is, I was not in the office, understand; I was outside of the building. I was in the Alix Hotel, just across the street, in the corner room, about on a level with this floor, and they were standing by the window—Mr. Baxter and Judge Hanford—we could see them very plainly.

Mr. McCoy. What office do you refer to?

A. His private—it is the corner—in the corner of this building.

Mr. McCoy. You refer to Judge Hanford's office, don't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. That is what I thought. Didn't you think he said in Mr. Baxter's office?

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all.

Mr. McCOY. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HUGHES. He has testified exactly as I assumed he would.

Mr. McCOY. Well.

Mr. HUGHES. You had reference to Judge Hanford being in his office as district judge in the northwest corner of this Federal building?

A. Yes, sir; that is the place.

Q. And you saw him from a room in the Alix Hotel, just diagonally across, on the opposite corner of Union and Third Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went there for the purpose of having an opportunity to keep espionage upon the rooms of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The room that you have described was one that was occupied by the several men assigned to this espionage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was there more than one room there that was occupied by you?—A. We had two different rooms.

Q. Two different rooms?—A. Yes, sir

Q. Those rooms were the headquarters of the men who were assigned to this service?—A. It was; yes, sir.

Q. And whenever Judge Hanford was not on the street you were watching him from those rooms?—A. Well, we were keeping him under surveillance. That was a good place to see him when he went away and when he—of course, when he went away he was kept under surveillance during that time.

Q. How many men occupied those rooms or were engaged in this service altogether?—A. I don't know, except myself and Mr. Nordskog; perhaps——

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Hughes, I dislike to head off any examination which you are convinced is proper now. If you are simply trying to find out about the operations of these detectives for your own information, I don't think it will help the committee any.

Mr. HUGHES. I have no concern in it for my information at all.

Mr. McCOY. Well, if you are seeking for some other purpose, which I do not perhaps comprehend, go ahead, but if it is simply to get the information, why, let's cut it out.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to pursue any question or line of questions the committee or any member of it objects to. Is there an objection to the question?

Mr. McCOY. Why, it is only that objection, Mr. Hughes. I don't object. If you want to prove that Judge Hanford knew that these people were watching him, put Judge Hanford on the stand; we would be glad to give him an opportunity to testify; otherwise, the committee will assume that these detectives did what detectives do under all circumstances; they go about it in the very best way they can to keep a man under watch. If there are any other purposes, why go ahead, I won't say anything.

Mr. HUGHES. My observation and experience with detectives may not be quite the same as that of the committee, but that was not my purpose.

Mr. McCOY. All right; I won't say anything more. Go ahead, please.

Mr. HUGHES. I think he has answered the question, however, hasn't he?

Mr. McCOY. I am sure I don't know.

Mr. HUGHES. Did you have any reason to think that Judge Hanford knew that you were keeping surveillance of him from your rooms across the corner?

A. No; I didn't see anything that would lead me to believe that.

Q. Did you ever notice him stop, apparently for the purpose of seeing whether you were following him?—A. Yes; I did once, I remember of. I don't know whether it was that—for that purpose.

Q. Did he ever——

Mr. MCCOY. (Interrupting.) Wait; let him answer.

Mr. HUGHES. I beg pardon.

Mr. MCCOY. You didn't know what?

The WITNESS. I say I didn't know whether—what his purpose was in stopping, but he often stopped, as far as that is concerned, but he never saw me, because he was not looking in the direction that I was in at all; he never looked that way.

Mr. HUGHES. You aimed to keep out of sight?

A. Why, certainly, naturally.

Q. Did you not notice also that his son often walked, following him or somewhere in the vicinity of him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever notice him depart from his course and stop and have it occur to you that he was doing that for the purpose of ascertaining whether you were following him, or ascertaining your own acts and movements?—A. Oh, yes; I have seen him stop and turn around and stagger. I didn't know what purpose it was for, though.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that is all, sir.

The WITNESS. Is that all?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford's son?—A. I have seen his son—whom I supposed to be his son—several times there at the house, or coming out of the house. I don't know for sure whether it was him or not.

Q. Was it any part of your business as a detective to observe whether you were being observed or not?—A. Certainly. We laid plans every day in the week for that.

Q. And did you ever——A. (Interrupting.) And we not only had that done, but we had others watch me to see whether I was being shadowed or not.

Q. And was it ever reported by those people that you were being shadowed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see Judge Hanford's son on any of these occasions?—A. I never saw his son on any occasion at all except near the house, that is all, and then I am not positive whether it was his son or not; but, whoever it was, we were watching to see whether he was coming out to look around the house to see if there was anyone there or not, but we didn't know what his purpose was in coming out; but I don't think that that was his purpose at that time.

Q. Why don't you think it was his purpose?—A. Because he walked straight on down the street and never went a block on either side, and he was followed down about eight blocks and he didn't show any maneuvers of circling around and coming back or watching anyone. But I am not saying sure that that was his son; I don't know.

Q. Is this the gentleman sitting at the table with the brown suit, to whom you refer?—A. Well, I could not say. The only time I saw him at the house it was dark and I could not tell to-day whether it was him or not—whether this was the party.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. You did not mean to testify, did you, in answer to a member of the committee, that you were shadowed, while engaged in watching Judge Hanford, by somebody else of your own association for the purpose of seeing whether anybody was shadowing you who was hostile to you; you didn't mean to say that, did you?—A. No; I didn't——

Q. (Interrupting.) You testified that you had been shadowed before now, but you did not mean in this case? I mean, shadowed by your own people for the purpose of seeing whether you were watched; you didn't mean that applied in this case, did you?—A. No; what I mean is this: There were usually two of us together, sometimes three.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, excuse me just a minute. To get down to Mr. Hughes's question; you are talking about this case now?

A. Yes; this case. I suppose that is what—and sometimes one of the boys would watch the other operative that was keeping Judge Hanford under surveillance, to see whether this operative was being shadowed by anyone or not, you see.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. Now, what I asked you was whether you had any reason to believe that Judge Hanford or his son ever saw you or watched you or knew that you were surveilling Judge Hanford?

A. No; I would not think so for one moment, under the circumstances, from what I saw; I would not——

Q. (Interrupting.) You certainly had—pardon me—no reason to infer that any other detectives were being employed to keep surveillance upon you, did you?—A. They do that sometimes.

Q. I am asking you the question.

Mr. HUGHES (addressing the reporter). Will you read it to him, please?

(Question read.)

The CHAIRMAN. Isn't his answer responsive to that question?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. That they sometimes do. He would have reasons to suspect it, that they might do it if they sometimes do. But go on in your own way.

Mr. HUGHES. The only reason I asked it was, I thought there might be an inference left in the record that Judge Hanford had undertaken any such method; and I wanted to rebut that inference, even by this witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Develop it your own way.

(Question read.)

Mr. HUGHES. I mean in this case. You had no evidence at any time to lead you to think that any other detectives were watching you while you were engaged in this service that you have testified respecting Judge Hanford?

A. No; I didn't have anything to——

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.
The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Staples.
The WITNESS. All right.
The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside.

Witness excused.

Dr. H. T. TITUS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee, Doctor.
A. Herman F. Titus.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.
Q. How long has Seattle been your home?—A. Twenty years.
Q. Are you a regular physician and surgeon?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Or dentist?—A. Graduate of——
Q. (Interrupting). You are a physician and surgeon?—A. A graduate of Harvard Medical School.
Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Twenty-one years.
Q. Still in the active practice of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you retired from the practice?—A. Yes, sir; mostly.
Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known the judge?—A. Why, nearly as long as I have lived here, 18 or 20 years.
Q. By the way, the lady, Mrs. Titus, who testified here yesterday, I think, is your wife?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you recall at any time during your acquaintance with Judge Hanford seeing him when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. Before answering any question, I would like to say that I am not here voluntarily nor willingly, I don't like to testify against Judge Hanford in any way whatever, as he is a personal friend.
Q. You were subpœnaed to be here?—A. Yes, sir; and that is the only reason I am here.
Q. Very well.—A. I will say yes to your question.
Q. When was it?—A. Why, the early portion of this year, probably January.
Q. Where was it?—A. On the car going to my home, which was then at Mercer Street; the Bellevue-Summit car.
Q. Where did you board that car?—A. Why, I am not sure exactly; somewhere down town; I was just coming from the theater.
Q. Who was with you, if anyone was?—A. My wife, and a young lady who was attending my wife as a nurse.
Q. Did you observe Judge Hanford getting on the car, or was he on when you got on?—A. I think he must have been on the car. I don't recall his getting on at all.
Q. Whereabouts in the car did you sit?—A. That is a dummy car, as we call it, with seats facing each other. I was sitting, as I recall it, on the rear side seat, the west side.
Q. Where did the judge sit from you?—A. Why, he sat directly opposite. He was on the east side, and I was on the west side, facing him directly; I remember that.
Q. The width of the car, or so much of it that you did not occupy, between you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be a distance of——A. Perhaps 6 feet.

Q. What was the first thing that caused you to observe him that night?—A. Why, I have known him many years and I expected he would speak to me. I looked across and he did not; in fact, he was looking at the floor, or his eyes closed most of the time.

Q. Had you often met him?——A. Oh, yes.

Q. (Continuing.) On the car or elsewhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it usual for him to speak to you and you to him?—A. Yes; although I have met him when he seemed distracted and did not speak.

Q. Well, was there any personal trouble of any kind or any personal reason why he and you would not speak to each other?—A. None at all.

Q. Well, go on, Doctor, and in your own way tell the committee what you observed and the conclusion you came to from your observation?—A. Why, I thought him unnatural in his demeanor; he looked stupid, in fact; the lines of his face were not flexible, and rather flabby, and his head fell over one side and the other, and I noticed rather persistently, when he looked up at all, at the young lady with me; in fact, he acted like a drunken man, and I made the observation, after we got off, that I guessed the judge had been taking too much.

Q. What is your judgment about it now as to what his condition was then with referennce to being drunk or sober?—A. Why, my judgment was then, and has always been, that he was drunk.

Q. How long were you with him that night?—A. Maybe 10 minutes, so long as the car was getting to Mercer Street.

Q. Do you recall whether you spoke to him?—A, No. I didn't. His attitude was such as to repel address. I was sorry for his condition and I wanted him to be as unobserved as possible. I thought he wanted the same.

Q. To what extent, do you know, was he observed by others who were on the car?—A. There were very few on the car, I think not more than—I should think not more than two or three besides ourselves. He was alone on his side and we were, three of us, seated directly opposite.

Q. Well, apart from you three, are you able to say whether others there did observe him?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you notice him in the act of getting off the car or going from his seat to the door to get off?—A. No; we left him there.

Q. He was on the car when you got off, was he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State again, if you please, Doctor, when that was, as nearly as you can?—A. I should think it was some time in January of this year. We moved from that house the 1st of February and I know the nurse was there during the month of January.

Q. Is the nurse still at your home?—A. No, sir; she is—I don't know where she is; she has left town.

Q. Since that time, did you on any occasion observe Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you before that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anything you might have heard before that enter into your opinion or judgment as to his condition that night, or did you form it from what you saw altogether?—A. From what I saw, although I had heard.

Q. Well, what I mean to get at is, without assuming that you did or did not hear, if you heard anything, did what you might have heard in any degree enter into your judgment as to his present condition then?—A. I should say not.

Q. Or did you form that opinion on what you saw yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there any kind of feeling between you and Judge Hanford?—A. None personal at all. In fact, I have had a great deal of sympathy for his personal afflictions and——

Q. (Interrupting.) That we don't care to enter into.—A. That is the personal side of it, and only personal.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the Doctor further, anything?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. What is your business, now, Doctor?—A. I am two or three things.

Q. What are they?—A. Engaged in the printing business—Trustee Printing Co. I am interested in that; my wife is manager.

Q. You mean you publish a newspaper?—A. No, sir. We do general printing, and I have several books that are published by that concern. I am at work, when I do anything outside of that, mostly for the labor unions. My last work was to help win a strike in the Grays Harbor country.

Q. Win a strike where?—A. In the Grays Harbor country, as we call it—Hoquiam, Aberdeen—the southwest of this State.

Q. So you have not been continuously a resident of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir; with intervals of two or three months. It has always been my home, to which I have returned.

Q. Are you affiliated with the Industrial Workers of the World?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. May I now ask a question or two?

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, Mr. Hughes.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. You have known a good deal of Judge Hanford's work and life and experiences in this community in the last 20 years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have known a good deal of the burdens he has had to bear and the labor he has had to perform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have known something of his industry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know, approximately, his age and general condition of health?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to ask you, Doctor, if, in the light of your knowledge of these things, the conditions you saw that night may not have been caused or largely induced, at least, by the mental and physical conditions induced by causes other than the use of intoxicating liquors, such as you know might exist in his case, or at least so largely contributed to by them that there may not have been enough—he may not have drunk more than one or two drinks or a limited quantity which would not otherwise have produced that condition that you describe?—A. Why, Mr. Hughes, I could imagine a man under extreme grief might act as he did, although the heavy aspect of his countenance was against it. He was on the wrong car, too.

Q. Well, that of course you don't know, unless you know what took him there.—A. No.

Q. What occasion he may have had.—A. It was late at night. A man under extreme shock of grief or other emotion at his age might possibly act in that way; it almost, however, would be a mark of mania.

Q. You know he has had occasion to bear a great deal of care—— A. Yes; that is what I know.

Q. (Continuing.)—and responsibility himself?—A. Personally.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. When you speak of extreme shock of grief, do you mean trouble that has continued over a long time, or an extreme shock at about the time when the patient was under observation?—A. I meant an acute shock.

The Chairman. How would any acute shock, however acute, cause him to act toward the young lady who was with you, as you stated he did?—A. Well, he merely stared at her persistently. A man when he is under great grief or mental shock is practically in a state of acute mania. He may weep; he may go off by himself; do unheard-of things.

The Chairman. Well, was there any immediate cause for such condition as that in Judge Hanford at that time?

A. None that I know of.

The committee here took a short recess.

The Chairman. Has Dr. Titus remained in the room? Doctor, would you kindly come forward to the witness stand a moment?

Dr. H. F. Titus resumed the stand.

Mr. McCoy. Doctor, when Mrs. Titus was on the stand yesterday some questions were asked and answered in such a way as to leave the impression on me that you were a member of the Socialist Party. Is that a fact, or not?

A. It is not a fact.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. Mr. Higgins is of the recollection that when that question was asked it was stricken out of the record as improper. Mr. Reporter, have you a recollection on that point?

The Reporter. I think it was, Mr. Chairman. My recollection is that it was.

Mr. Hughes. I think the only question was relative to publications, papers published by the Doctor, publications in the paper by the Doctor. It related to the work in which the Doctor had been engaged.

Mr. McCoy. If the testimony along that line was stricken out, then I am perfectly willing that this shall be, later on, but it had better stay where it is until we ascertain the facts, I think.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. What are the publications, Doctor, that you speak of having published?—A. Why, for 10 years I issued what was known as the Seattle Socialist, and since then in connection with a number of pamphlets and small books on labor subjects.

Q. Would you indicate the names?—A. Why, one entitled "The Significance of Roosevelt."

Mr. McCoy. That must be interesting, if you have anything to say.

The Witness. Well, I will submit it to the committee, to their judgment.

Mr. Higgins. Will you name the other, Doctor?

A. "Insurgency" is another, along the same line. Another, just coming out to-day, is "The Four-Day, or the Workingman's Magazine."

Q. Is that a book or a magazine?—A. Why, it is in magazine form, about the same as the usual magazine. It may be issued again; it may not.

Q. In what capacity, Doctor, did you leave Seattle to win this strike, which you have testified about?—A. I was employed by the International Shingle Weavers' Union to report for The Shingle Weaver, their paper, and to do everything possible to secure better wages, shorter hours, and better conditions generally in Hoquiam.

Q. Were you also in Idaho at the time of the Hayward trial?—A. I was.

Q. In what capacity then?—A. I was then reporter for several eastern papers and for my own paper, and organizer for the Socialist Party in the State of Idaho.

Q. How long did you remain in Idaho at that time?—A. Why, I removed my paper, The Socialist, to Caldwell, where we expected the trial to occur, and was there from three to six months. Went back again the following year for about three months.

Q. During the trial?—A. During the trial.

Q. And remained there during the trial?—A. All through the trial.

Q. And published your Socialist paper from there?—A. We brought it back here; it was here during the trial. Since the trial occurred in Boise and not in Caldwell, the paper was brought back to Seattle.

Mr. Higgins. That is all.

Mr. McCoy. Now, my offer to withdraw my question is withdrawn. My question I prefer to have stand.

Witness excused.

Walter A. Hall, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. What is your full name?

A. Walter A. Hall.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Hall?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Forty years.

Q. You are entitled to the persimmon for long residence in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How big was it as far back as you can remember?—A. Oh, about 800 population.

Q. You have seen it grow to its present dimensions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Well, it is clerical, in a way. I have been working for the city for five or six years, but practically retired.

Q. In what line are you employed by the city?—A. In the city of Seattle?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, as a clerical position in the comptroller's office.

Q. What has your business been, Mr. Hall, when you were active?—A. Well, the newspaper business, started in the newspaper business.

Q. As editor, or in what capacity?—A. Oh, as a compositor, and editor, and newspaper proprietor.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Very well.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. About 37 years.

Q. What has the nature of your acquaintance been—intimate or casual?—A. Oh, it has been general in its way, a passing acquaintanceship, a——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you ever have any business or professional connection with him?—A. Well, only in the court here as a juror, in the United States court.

Q. To what extent have you been a juror?—A. I think on two different occasions.

Q. For a term of just for the trial of a single case?—A. No; during a term—three-months term, I think, at the last time.

Q. When was that?—A. I just can't recall; I would have to cite the cases.

Q. Oh, I know, but some time within a year of it, for instance?—A. Well, let's see——

Q. If you can't, we will pass on, but I would like for you to fix it as well as you can, in time.—A. What is that?

Q. I would like if you would fix the time as well as you can?—A. Oh.

Q. Was it more than a year ago?—A. Oh, a good deal more than a year ago.

Q. More than five years ago?—A. Yes; about 10 years ago.

Q. Well, that is enough.—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to observe Judge Hanford outside of court?—A. Oh, I have seen him on the street and talked with him on the street quite frequently.

Q. If at any time you have observed the judge when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant, please tell us of that.—A. To what extent, what degree?

Q. Well, first answer the question, Mr. Hall, and then we will get to that later.—A. Well, I could not state definitely as to that. Sometimes I thought he was and sometimes I thought he was not.

Q. Now, if you tell us one of the times when you thought he was, as near as you can, we can soon find out about it.—A. Well, that is pretty hard to say, because I am not certain. It was twice I was juror in the United States court here.

Q. Was it only on these occasions that you thought so, that is, that you were in doubt?—A. At that time he appeared to be sleepy or drowsy, but then I could not say whether the man was under the influence of liquor or anything of the kind.

Q. Well, did you anywhere else than in court see him when you were in doubt as to whether he was or not?—A. (Interrupting.) I never saw him outside of the court room when there was any question in my mind with reference to it.

Q. And when he was holding court, what were the conditions which led you to be in doubt as to his condition?—A. Well, some lawyer would get up, you know, and read precedents here for three or four hours or a half an hour, an hour, and I didn't blame the judge for going to sleep.

Q. Especially if he was a bad reader?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Hall, will you please answer the question?—A. All right, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (addressing the reporter). Read it to him.

Q. [Question read, as follows:] "Well, did you anywhere else than in court see him when you were in doubt as to whether he was or not?"—A. Never in my life.

Q. That is not quite the last question, but I will repeat it. What was it that led you to be in doubt as to his condition when you saw him on the bench?—A. Simply a drowsy condition.

Q. Would it extend to napping or sleeping?—A. Well, I hardly think so, but simply he would wake up once in a while, arouse himself.

Q. Were there any circumstances which at the time led you to think it was due to drinking or something which he had taken?—A. I hardly think so at that time.

Q. To what extent did it occur during your service as a juror?—A. What is that? I didn't understand you.

Q. To what extent did that napping occur during your service as a juror?—A. Oh, perhaps a few seconds at a time.

Q. And how frequently?—A. Well, that is going back a long time. I don't think it occurred many times.

Q. Yes, a good while ago. To what extent have you noticed the judge during the last five years, either in court or out of it?—A. Oh, I have met him on the street in casual conversation with Judge Burke and with other old time acquaintances.

Q. At what hour of the day?—A. All during the day.

Q. Or night?—A. During the daytime.

Q. Sir?—A. During the daytime.

Q. Have you seen him here in the city at night during that length of time?—A. No; I don't think I have, not to my recollection.

Q. Have you seen the judge at any time, Mr. Hall, when in your opinion he was intoxicated or under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you stated to anyone that you had?—A. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen wish to ask Mr. Hall any questions?

By Mr. GRAHAM:

Q. During your service as a juror, do you remember any occasions when jurors or a juror wanted permission to leave the jury box temporarily and could not get the attention of the judge because of his condition?—A. I do not.

Q. You recall no such instance?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. The court room in which you sat as a juror was in what building, do you remember?—A. It was in the Colman Building.

Q. Was that a well-ventilated court room?—A. Well, fairly well, fairly well.

Q. You speak of seeing Judge Hanford occasionally drowsy. Did you ever observe any instance when Judge Hanford's rulings were not perfectly clear and prompt?

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. It does not appear he is a lawyer. What would his judgment as to the clearness of rulings be worth?

Mr. HIGGINS. He might state as to the promptness, if not the clearness.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if he will qualify the question to that extent it would be more applicable.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the chairman misunderstands me. I have not asked him as to the legal accuracy. This man——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) The clearness, I should think, would involve the legal accuracy.

Mr. HUGHES. Not necessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think it would; at least, it might.

Mr. HIGGINS. If you will confine it to the promptness, Mr. Hughes, I think there would be no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, let me confine it to that question, then. Were his rulings always prompt when questions were raised and objections were made?

A. To the best of my recollection they were.

Q. Did you ever study law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you ever admitted to the bar?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did you study law?—A. Oh, about 18 months.

Q. Now, without meaning to call for your opinion as to the legal correctness of his decisions, but as a well-informed man, I will ask you merely to state whether his decisions were lucid, were clear and well stated or not, when he announced them?—A. I have always had the most profound respect for his decisions from the bench at all times that I have listened to them.

Mr. HIGGINS. Can't you answer Mr. Hughes's question?

A. What is that?

Mr. HIGGINS. Can't you answer Mr. Hughes's question directly.

Mr. HUGHES. Follow the question.

(Question read.)

A. They were.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. When were you subpœnaed?—A. What is that?

Q. When were you subpœnaed to attend here?—A. I got the notice in the mail box last evening.

Q. Been talking with anybody about this case since you were subpœnaed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or before?—A. No, sir; the first—I questioned the subpœna, I came down with it to Mr. Graham this forenoon. Talked to no one.

Q. Been reading in the newspapers about this matter at all?—A. Oh, in a way—general way.

Mr. HIGGINS. What you said to Mr. Graham, Mr. Hall, was simply with reference as to the time when you could take the stand?

A. That is what I said to Mr. Graham this forenoon, was in the nature of the subpœna; there is no date on it.

Mr. HIGGINS. You were questioning the legality of the subpœna and trying to arrange for a time when you would be called that would be the most convenient for you?

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hall simply arranged with me that for his convenience we would call him by phone a little while before we would need him, and I believe we both kept that agreement.

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Fully.

A. Satisfactorily.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Hall.

The WITNESS. All right; thank you.

Witness excused.

Dr. E. B. EDGARS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN.

Q. State your full name.—A. E. B. Edgars.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have lived here how long?—A. About 14 years.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Dentist.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. About 18 years.

Q. Where did you make your study, Doctor?—A. At the University of Maryland, in Baltimore.

Q. Did you practice all of those years in Seattle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Somewhere else?—A. I have practiced in Vermont and Iowa and in Washington.

Q. You mean Washington State?—A. Washington State.

Q. Or Washington, D. C.?—A. Washington State. I have also practiced a little while in Baltimore, just after——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. By sight only.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. Well, that is a pretty hard—probably eight or nine years.

Q. If you have had an opportunity to observe Judge Hanford during that time, please tell the committee where you have seen him.—A. I have seen him occasionally on the street car; he lives out in the same neighborhood; he lives a few blocks north of me, that is all. Occasionally on the street car.

Q. Have you been in his court while it was in session?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him anywhere else during that time than on the street cars?—A. I have seen him occasionally on the street.

Q. And what hours have you generally seen him on the street cars?—A. Oh, I have seen him at different hours along—usually in the evening some time, from 6 o'clock I should say to 10 o'clock, half-past 10, along in there.

Q. And covering how long a period of time?—A. Well, that would be, I should judge, about seven years, seven or eight years. As long as he has lived out in that neighborhood, about——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, how frequently would you see the judge in the evening on the street car; give us some idea, taking a unit of time for starting.—A. Oh, I should say probably once or twice a month, I should say.

Q. If at any time during the period mentioned, six or seven years. you have seen this judge when in your opinion he was under the influence of some intoxicant, please tell us about that.—A. I could not say as to that, I would not say that I have; I have seen him napping on the car, like I have seen hundreds of others, as I have done myself on the car, coming home tired.

Q. Just the same as the others nap?—A. Yes, I should say.

Q. Well, what do you say as to whether you have seen him at any time when in your opinion he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. Well, I could not say as to that. I have never seen him that I would say that he was intoxicated.

Q. Have you seen him at times when he appeared different to you from what he appeared at other times?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you saw him he always appeared the same to you, did he?—A. Yes,

Q. What was his manner?—A. I never had any conversation with him. His manner was the same as anybody else's would be, a gentleman.

Q. Well, now, you state that you have yourself napped on the car. How frequently do you do it?—A. Well——

Q. On your way home?—A. Well, at night, for instance, late at night, if I would be going home, if I would happen to work in the office and be tired, drowsy, I would nap, like a physical exhaustion.

Q. Is that a common thing with you?—A. To sleep on the car?

Q. Yes?—A. Well, if I happen to be tired and feel like it, and nothing else to do, I would take a nap.

Q. I know, but take all those conditions, are they usual with you?—A. Yes; physical exhaustion.

Q. Then somebody else might be on the car and you would not notice their condition?—A. Well, that is true; that might happen, too. I don't say that I have seen him every time that he has been on the car.

Q. You have stated that the judge acted about as other folks did on the car?—A. Yes; I should say so.

Q. Is it a common thing for folks on the street cars here to nap?

The CHAIRMAN. I want to get the doctor's idea of it.

A. Well, I have seen a number of people napping on the car.

Q. Would you fix a per cent?—A. No; I could not fix the exact per cent. I have not thought anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the gentlemen wish to ask the doctor any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Are you at the present time the president of the State Dental Association?

A. Yes, sir. Not the dental association, the dental board.

Q. The dental board; yes, the State dental board; that is a board created by law?—A Yes.

Q Of the State?—A Yes.

Mr HUGHES That is all.

Witness excused

There being no witnesses present the committee took a short recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Dr. PARK WEED WILLIS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee.

A. Park Weed Willis.

Q. You are a physician and surgeon?—A I am a physician and surgeon.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty years.

Q. Doctor, you are acquainted with Judge Hanford of the Federal court here, I assume?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have known him how long?—A A little over 19 years.

Q. Do you remember an occasion last fall, about September or October, I believe, when one Dr McCormack lectured at the Alhambra Theater here on the occasion of some medical association meeting in the city?—A Yes, sir

Q. Were you present then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you participate in that meeting?—A Well, I did to this extent, I was on the committee of arrangements for the meeting and I was on the stage at the time of the meeting and was very much interested in it.

Q Do you remember seeing Judge Hanford at the meeting?—A. Yes, sir

Q Have you a clear recollection of it?—A. Yes, sir; I saw Judge Hanford and I heard him speak

Q. At what time during the proceedings did he come upon the stage?—A. Well, I do not remember just when he came on the stage; I remember of his talking, and I also remember of talking with Judge Hanford about the meeting as we left the stage—as we left the theater.

Q. Have you any other recollection of noticing him particularly there except while he talked and when you talked with him?—A. Not particularly; I saw him, however.

Q. What hour was it when you conversed with him?—A. It was immediately after the lecture was over—after it was over.

Q. About when was that?—A. I could not tell you—well, wait—I think I can tell you about it, too—I think it was very close to 11 o'clock, I think; it was somewhere between 10 and 11.

Q. What was the judge's condition at that time with reference to his being under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. Well, he was perfectly normal; he was not affected in any way by any intoxicant; he talked with me about the lecture and the subject of it, and so forth, afterwards, and the effect of it and the general purport of it, in a perfectly normal manner.

Q. What are your associations with him, Doctor, in a social or business way?—A. Well, both, more or less; I am a member of the board of overseers of the Whitman County College, and we meet twice a year, and usually travel on the train with him, and associated with him there.

Q. What is his connection with that college?—A. He is overseer. And I took care of his daughter with a broken leg 19 years ago, and I attended a son of his that died later; I attended different members of the family.

Q. That hardly meets my question; you might do all that and never see him at all. My question was only about your association with him.—A. Well, I saw Judge Hanford, of course, frequently; I saw him at his home frequently at all times of the day and night, and I have seen him at the Rainier Club very frequently. I saw him almost every time that I go there.

Q. You are both members of the club?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you whether at any time you have seen Judge Hanford under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never in my life have seen Judge Hanford when he was in any way affected in mind by intoxicants.

Q. Or body?—A. Mind or body.

Q. Did you see him drinking?—A. Yes.

Q. What intoxicating drinks have you seen him partake of?—A. I don't know. When I say I have seen him drink, I don't think I have seen him drink more than once or twice, possibly, at the club; I never go into a bar myself, and have only seen him drink, I think, once or twice at the club. I know that he occasionally takes a drink. I have smelled liquor on his breath, but I have never seen him in any way affected by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the doctor any questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. Are you associated with him in any other board except the board of overseers of Whitman County College?

A. That is all, of course, I have seen him in court a number of times; I have been up on various damage cases as an expert witness, and such instances as that I have been associated with him here, but I do not remember that I have any other association that has brought us together, than these.

Q. How frequently have you been called into court as a witness in the last 10 years as a witness in damage cases in this court?—A. In his court?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, I suppose I have been in his court half a dozen times.

Q. In what period of time?—A. In that 10 years which you asked.

Mr. MCCOY. Witness for the plaintiff or defendant?

A. Well, either one, or both. I was once up as a—appointed as an expert by the court. I have been up usually for the defendant—I am surgeon for some of the various companies and they have called me more often than for the defendant. I am not sure—yes, I was up as a witness, I think, for the other side, too, not a great while ago, I have forgotten the details, though.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Have you ever been physician for Judge Hanford himself?

A. Yes, sir; I took care of him at one time when he had a broken collar bone, and I saw him practically every day for a month.

Q. Are you familiar with the general condition of his health and strength and his personal appearance and actions?—A. Yes, sir, I have been; yes sir, I know about him.

Q. Have you observed him when he relaxed and closed his eyes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And appeared to nod?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. From your knowledge of him as a physician and acquaintance as described here by you, have you ever attached to that appearance the inference or conclusion that it was caused or in any way occasioned by the use of intoxicating liquors?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. To what have you ascribed it? A. Oh, I thought it was just on account of his, perhaps, being tired, and more or less a habit with him. There are some people who drop off to sleep for a second very easily and I just took it for granted it was more or less a habit, and his age and his very close attention to business and all those things would tend to make him sleep that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, what would you say the judge's apparent age is?

A. I should say the judge is between 60 and 65.

Q. Do you judge that from his appearance?—A. I should say from his appearance; I have forgotten what his age is—I have known it.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you judge Mr. Hughes's apparent age to be?

A. I should say he is between 50 and 55, perhaps nearer 50.

Mr. MCCOY. How good a guess is that, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. I shall be 57 in August.

The WITNESS. The guessing of an age is a very uncertain thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not ask you to guess his age; I asked you to give us his apparent age; from his appearance what would you judge?

A. That is a guess always; it is never anything else. I can show you men of 80 that do not look to be over 65.

Q. Then the answer to my question would be that that man's apparent age is 65.—A. I see.

The CHAIRMAN. I would say that Judge Hanford, in my opinion, has an apparent age of 75—what would you say to that?

A. Well, I do not believe so with the average man. The average man of 75—if you just take the appearance alone—I should think nearer 65 would be my own judgment.

Q. It is your judgment I asked for.—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Doctor. You are excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Just one moment.

Q. Doctor, you invited Judge Hanford to go to this meeting?—A. Dr. McCormack's meeting?

Q. Yes.—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. And you invited him to make a talk at that meeting?—A. Yes, sir; and I invited him very late for it, too; I think it was the same day of the meeting.

Q. Do you remember what, if anything, was said about his being too busy?—A. He told me, I think—I forget just what it was, but I remember that I was disappointed in some of my speakers, and I think I asked Judge Hanford, and I told him it was a very important matter, an important occasion, and I wanted him to come anyway; he did not feel well, or was busy, or something, I have forgotten the details as to what the exact thing was, but there was some excuse, and I asked him to overrule that and come along anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Doctor.

Mr. HUGHES. I think there was one other matter which should have been asked of Dr. Willis, and that is what occurred after the meeting, going to supper at the Washington Hotel; that was overlooked by me, and, of course, you knew nothing about it. I can ask him from the floor.

Q. Dr. Willis, what took place after this lecture?—A. Oh, after the lecture we went over to the Washington Hotel. This was a lecture by Dr. McCormack before the laity, a sort of mass meeting, and after the lecture the doctors met in the Washington Hotel; some of them came from out of the city, Tacoma and Everett, and various cities besides Seattle, and we asked those who were on the platform, I think, to come along with us, and some of them went with us, that is, some of the speakers, and I think Judge Hanford did, I am not sure. We went to the Washington Hotel and we were there, perhaps, until, I don't know, at least 1 o'clock in the morning—I don't know how late—my ideas as to the exact time are not certain.

Mr. HUGHES. We are not going to hold you down to the exact time. You do not know whether Judge Hanford accompanied you or not; but if he did, you stayed there until late, that is what you mean to convey.

A. Yes, sir; we went over there and had a meeting and had some—I think some little speeches; I think Dr. McCormack talked to the doctors then after this, and I think we had with us—I think Judge Albertson and Judge Burke and Judge Hanford, and I think Dr. Matthews. I think those men all went with us over there, and it was a little supper.

Q. That was just to inject a little of the leaven of law into the gathering of doctors.—A. Well, we asked them along. I think it was for Dr. McCormack to confer more definitely with the doctors themselves as to continuing the campaign which was begun in his address that evening, and a committee was appointed over there at the Washington Hotel, and Judge Albertson was chairman—at least Judge Albertson at that time was authorized by the committee to take up this matter—and there is still a committee at work, and I believe Dr. Matthews is chairman, as the result of the meeting with Dr. McCormack at that time, and the business part of it was formulated at that meeting at the Washington Hotel, where the little supper was served.

Q. Briefly, what was that work, if you can state it in a few words?—A. It was—the work of this committee in a general way is as to the taking up of various matters that have to do with the public welfare in reference to health and sanitation and the welfare of the public generally in reference to doctors. For instance, the committee recently has taken up the question of an exhibit at Washington at the international exhibition which is to be held there in September.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that has gone far enough.

Mr. HIGGINS. About how long a time did Judge Hanford's speech occupy in the theater?

A. I don't know; I have forgotten. They were intended to be just short speeches, following Dr. McCormack. Dr. McCormack, I think, took nearly two hours for his address, and then these gentlemen each took anywhere from 5 to 10 minutes for theirs, following him. I am sure it was just a short speech, following Dr. McCormack, rather indorsing what had been said in a general way.

THOMAS BURKE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please state your full name to the committee?

A. Thomas Burke.

Q. You reside in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your present occupation, if you have any?—A. Well, I do not know that I have any at present, though I am kept pretty busy.

Q. You belong to the profession of the law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been a judge?—A. Yes; I was chief justice.

Q. Are you now on the bench?—A. No, sir.

Q. What bench were you on?—A. I was chief justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington.

Q. How long ago was that, Judge?—A. That was—I was appointed 24 years ago; it will be 24 years ago next December.

Q. You know Judge Hanford, of course?—A. I know Judge Hanford.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him more than 37 years.

Q. Do you recall the meeting at the Alhambra Theater of which Dr. Willis testified a moment ago?—A. I do; very well.

Q. Were you present at that meeting?—A. I was.

Q. Did you take any personal part in the meeting?—A. I think I was called upon to make a brief—a short speech.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford at the meeting?—A. I did.

Q. Did you notice when the judge came in, or at what part of the proceedings he came in?—A. My recollection is that he came a little late, though I am not sure about that.

Q. Did you sit near him on the platform?—A. There were several persons between me and him.

Q. Were you present when he spoke?—A. I was.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him during the evening?—A. Oh, yes; I did.

Q. From what you heard him say and from what you observed of him and what he said to you, in your opinion was the judge that evening in any degree under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. Not the slightest; not the slightest.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask any further questions, gentlemen?

The WITNESS. I may add, if I may, that after the meeting I accompanied Judge Hanford and others to the Washington Hotel, where we went to supper and listened to a further address by Dr. McCormack; after that, when the meeting broke up, which must have been nearly 1 o'clock, one of the doctors offered to take Judge Hanford and me home in his automobile, and we both said no, we would prefer to walk, and I walked home with him as far as my own house. We talked; we discussed the lecture and the views of the doctor, and it was impossible that I could be mistaken in regard to his condition. He was not under the influence of liquor in the slightest degree.

Q. He and you are personal friends.—A. Personal friends, and have been for a great many years.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir; one of the charter members.

Q. Have you at any time observed Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of an intoxicant of any kind?—A. Never in my life, and except when I have been absent from town or he was absent, I have seen him during my residence here weekly, and almost daily, and I never saw him under the influence of liquor of any kind in any way. I have gone fishing with him; I have traveled the circuit with him—not in the old-fashioned way on horseback, but here we had to go the circuit by steamboat.

Q. When was that?—A. That was beginning with 1876 and continuing down until 1888. He succeeded me on the supreme bench of the Territory. I retired in March, 1889, or April, 1889, and he was appointed in succession to me. I think I may safely say, and I think I owe it to the commission and to Judge Hanford also, that my acquaintance with him has covered so long a period and has been so intimate that it is impossible that he could have been either an habitual drunkard, an occasional drunkard, or a drunkard at all without my knowing it.

Q. Have you ever been out with the judge after 12 o'clock at night?—A. Yes; yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Why, at meetings time and again. This particular night it was 1 o'clock, I think, when we left the Washington Hotel.

Q. Have you ever ridden home on the car with him after midnight or about midnight?—A. I don't think I have ridden home with him on the car. No. Generally when we were together we would walk. His only exercise is in walking; that is since he had to give up the bicycle; and he usually, in order to take that exercise which is almost necessary to his health, in fact I think it is, walks home, although his home is a good distance.

Q. Except on the occasion of public gatherings such as the one at the Alhambra Theater, have you ever been with him late at night in the downtown part of the city?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. What was the nature of the occasion?—A. Well, in the days when he was practicing at the bar——

Q. How long ago?—A. That was 23 years ago.

Q. Let me limit my question to the last ten years, and what is your answer to it? Let me repeat it to you—have you during the last 10 years been downtown with him at midnight or later, except on the occasion of some public gathering?—A. I don't think I have, except on the occasion of some public gathering, but those occasions have been pretty frequent.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions, gentlemen?

Mr. HIGGINS. You spoke, Judge Burke, of his having ridden the bicycle; how long ago was that?

A. Why, he continued to ride the bicycle until this building was opened.

Q. When was that?—A. That was; that must have been, let me see, not over four or five years ago, I think.

Mr. DORR. Three years ago.

The WITNESS. (Continuing.) And the reason he stopped riding the bicycle then was because—it gave him exercise that was very good for him—was that he could not store the bicycle here. I remember talking about that and asking him how it came to pass that he abandoned riding the bicycle; well, he said "They have got those revolving doors so that I can't take the bicycle into the building, and there is no place near by where I can store it," and so he reluctantly gave up riding the bicycle, but it was a daily practice of his to ride the bicycle to his house or from his home up to the time, I think, he began to hold court in this building.

Q. Have you, after dinner in the nighttime, been with Judge Hanford in his office?—A. After dinner? I recall one or two occasions when I have called at his office after dinner, but not frequently.

Q. Do you know anything about what his habit is in that regard?—A. Yes.

Q. As to his time of doing work.—A. Yes, sir; I know his habits of work are peculiar in this; that his work is chiefly done, and was even as a lawyer, but especially so as a judge, from 9 until 2 at night.

Q. How do you know that?—A. On account of the fact that I have frequently seen him both when he was practicing law and since he has become a judge—I have not seen him at 2 o'clock to be sure, but I have seen him when I had more than once occasion to drop in as I went up home, especially if I were at the Rainier Club in the evening after my office hours, because the courthouse was then directly across the street from the Rainier Club and I would see the light in the building, and sometimes I would walk in if I thought I would not be interrupting him. His habits of study at night were brought on because he has had a great deal of work to do and he can work more successfully when he is not interrupted, as most men can, but it is perfectly well known in this town that the light in his window, in his window in this building and in the old building, would be going until 2 o'clock at night; until 1 and 2 o'clock. His habits of study in that regard are perfectly well known.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Burke, have you had occasion to drop into the Rainier Club or to be there at the Rainier Club at mindight or after it, occasionally?

A. Sometimes I have; yes, sir.

Q. And met Judge Hanford there?—A. Sometimes he would be there.

Q. On many of such occasions can you state whether or not Judge Hanford and you walked home together?—A. Almost invariably on such occasions, because he would be glad to have some one to walk home with.

Q. Some testimony has been offered in this case to the effect that Judge Hanford's manner of walking on the street sometimes indicated that he was unsteady or was intoxicated. Can you enlighten the committee in any way upon that subject?—A. Well, he is peculiar in that respect. I have walked with Judge Hanford for half an hour at a time when he would not utter a single word, but sometimes his head would be down; he would drop his head a little, walking on steadily all right, but he evidently was engaged in a train of thought, and until that had been finished he would not utter a word, and when, presumably, he would have finished his work, whatever it was going in his mind, he would talk freely. He has a habit, and has had it from boyhood, ever since I knew him, of walking along apparently deeply absorbed in thought on some subject, and when in that mood he is not talking to anybody and never is. That has so impressed me that at times in walking with him I would resolve, although it is pretty hard for me to restrain myself in that particular I suppose, not to say a word, in order to determine how long he would continue in that silent mood, and I have known him to go as long as half an hour.

Q. Some testimony has been offered before the committee to the effect that Judge Hanford has been in court occasionally nodding, closing his eyes, apparently sleeping, and some witnesses have ascribed it to the effect of intoxicants. Can you enlighten the committee any from your own personal knowledge of the man and of his actions in court on that subject?—A. That is characteristic of Judge Hanford. He will close his eyes and apparently be asleep, to all appearances sleeping, but he is really wide awake, and I recall only last year I was in court—I have not practiced for seven or eight years, but I had a case before him and I argued it, and to my mortification I thought he was paying no attention to my argument, but sleeping. I found by his ruling, which was against me, that he seemed to be awake all the time, and I remember after that saying to him that he illustrates the old saying of the great Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts, that it was no small accomplishment in a judge to be able while an argument was going on to keep one eye on the dull, prosy lawyer while he took a refreshing nap with the other. If anyone ever could do that, I think Judge Hanford could.

Q. Well, you have seen the same sort of thing in court, haven't you?—A. Time and time and time again.

Q. Have you ever observed any occasion when Judge Hanford's rulings, when the occasion arose to make a ruling, disclosed that he had not fully comprehended all that had transpired or that he did not fully understand the question involved before him for decision?—A. No. I think his mind is clearer and he has a clearer comprehension when he gets in that way.

Q. Some testimony has been offered in this proceeding to the effect that Judge Hanford has been seen on the street cars apparently napping, his eyes closed, his head nodding. Have you ever seen any indications of that kind from Judge Hanford, or have you any suggestions or statements to offer to this committee that may enlighten them in respect to that?—A. I do not know about the street cars—I do not know about seeing him on the street car—we walked most of the time; but his habits of study would naturally lead him to take a nap that way. I think it is observed of others; of all lawyers, and it is the experience of most judges, that in coming in out of the cold open air into a close room, and court rooms are never well ventilated, the tendency to drowsiness is very strong. I know that when I was on the bench I would have to walk up and down the platform at times. The majority of men going into an illy ventilated room out of an open space and there sitting for some time listening to arguments are apt to get drowsy; the majority will get drowsy, and it acts with overwhelming power on some men. There are times when I can not possibly keep awake, but let me have three minutes and I am all right. I have slept in an automobile three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that reasoning would apply to a street car?

A. I think it would, for the ventilation of a street car is often very poor.

Q. Did you ever while engaged in the active practice of the law have much practice before Judge Hanford?—A. No, not a great deal; not a great deal; I had considerable, I had a good many cases—I had a fair number of cases before him. I practiced in the State court mostly.

Mr. HUGHES. From your experience and knowledge while at the bar and from your acquaintance with the work of the district and the work of the Federal bench, or the Federal judge in this district, are you able to inform the committee as to the amount of work that Judge Hanford has had to discharge?

A. I think I can reasonably. I think it is in the record. The 150 volumes of the Federal Reporter issued since he became judge contains the conclusive proof—contains a conclusive proof of the enormous amount of work he has done in quality and in quantity. I believe that that volume of work has not been surpassed by any Federal, district, or circuit judge in the United States in any period of our history.

Q. Judge Burke, do you know as to whether it is a fact that Judge Hanford has never submitted his opinions for publication to the publishers except where they were cases or opinions of general public interest?—A. I know I have sometimes asked him why it was that he did not publish opinions that seemed to me important, in cases cases that were important, and learned from him at that time that he only gave out certain cases that seemed to require the publication of the opinion.

Q. That is to say, where the case depended largely on the facts and would not be important as a precedent in the law, he has not caused them to be published?—A. No.

Q. My purpose in asking that, Judge Burke, is that because I do not think the former question that I asked you has been fully answered. A reference to the published reports would not give any adequate idea, would it, of the volume of business that Judge Hanford has had to transact.—A. It would not give the whole of it, of course, or anything like the whole of it.

Q. What I asked you was whether his work was extraordinarily or unusually onerous and extensive in its amount and character, or not.—A. He had to organize this court. Like all new communities, and particularly like all lumber communities, it may be said to have been a litigious community and the volume of business has always been very large, and since we became a State it has increased very rapidly. For years there was but one Federal judge in this State. He not only discharged the duties of the office of Federal judge in the State, hearing cases and deciding them, rendering his opinions, but he was frequently called in the meantime to San Francisco to take the place of the Federal judge there, as he has been in more recent years called to discharge the duties of a judge in circuit court of appeals. He held court here; he held court in Spokane; he held court in Tacoma and held court in Bellingham.

Q. And Walla Walla also?—A. And in Walla Walla, and especi lly from 1893 to 1896 were the duties of the judge of the Federal court very onerous. Those were times of trial, sometimes of turbulence, and he had railways that were in the hands of receivers and he had the duties arising from cases of that kind in addition to all the ordinary work coming into his court.

Q. In that connection I want to ask you another question. Considering the location of this district, I will ask you if the work is distinct from that of many of the old districts, and was d ring his entire term, and is yet?—A. Why, certainly.

Q. That is to say, as involving every variety of questions that arise in the court, instead of only certain lines of litigation?—A. He was a pioneer as the judge in the Federal court in this northwestern country. Here we have a seaport city, we have a seaport State; he had admiralty business; he had the business arising in relation to patents; he had the business in relation to or arising out of litigation coming from foreign corporations. In this State the capital we get for the development of this State we get largely from the East, and when any question should arise or any controversy should arise in regard to that capital it had to be settled in the Federal court, or they sought the Federal court. We had, as I said before——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Why does it have to be settled in the Federal court?

A. Because the eastern capitalist who had invested his money here naturally would bring his suit, if he had to bring one, in the Federal court.

Q. Why?—A. I don't know any particular reason why, except that it is the common practice to do it; they are familiar with it. I think there is one reason, and that is that the high character of the judges of the Federal bench would naturally draw the business of that kind to them.

Q. Do you mean, by comparison, that the reputation of the judges of the State bench is not as high?—A. I mean by the experience which the judges of the State bench have in comparison with the judges of the Federal bench, that they would not be as well qualified for the business; they would not be considered such. Men that are appointed to the Federal bench are generally older; they are generally men who have had a larger experience in the law.

The Chairman. Judge Burke, do you recall any of the cases where a nonresident poor man brought a case from the State to the Federal court here?

A. I do not recall them, and I do not know that I could name others, but many resident poor men have brought cases in Federal courts here.

Q. You are not unaware of the charge generally made that big interests who are nonresident bring cases to the Federal courts because they think their interests will be better cared for there than in the State courts?—A. I never heard that charged——

Q. Have you never heard it before?—A. I never heard that charge made by any responsible person. I might say on that head——

Q. (Interrupting.) So far as your observation and recollection goes, it was the large financial interests who were nonresidents who usually brought litigation from the State to the Federal court, was it not?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Or started it in the Federal court in the first instance?—A. Started it in the Federal court—I suppose it was largely; but the litigation of the Federal court was far more largely; that is, only taking it in regard to those cases originally started in the Federal court; those cases which arose right in this State.

Mr. McCoy. What railroad receivership did Judge Hanford have anything to do with in your recollection?

A. The receivership of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.; the receivership of the Washington Central Railroad.

Q. Now, take the Northern Pacific Railroad case; where were the first set of receivers in that case appointed?—A. The first set of receivers were appointed in Milwaukee; outside of the State, I think.

Q. And those same receivers who were appointed in Milwaukee were subsequently appointed in each of the States through which the road passed, were they not, including the State of Washington?—A. No; I think not in the State of Washington.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. I feel sure they were not appointed in the State of Washington.

Q. Is it not a fact that the same receivers were appointed all the way through and then they were discharged here in this State and other receivers appointed in this State?—A. They were appointed in some other States, but I do not think they were ever appointed in this State. Now, I may be wrong in this. I know that Judge Gilbert and Judge Hanford appointed—heard a case here on the appointment of the receivers, and the result of that case was that the receivers were appointed in the State where the railroad was.

Q. They heard an application here for the original appointment of receivers or for ancillary receiverships?—A. Ancillary receivership.

Q. And they were appointed then residents of the State of Washington by Judge Hanford?—A. Judge Hanford's view at that time was that the place to appoint the receivers was where the property was and not in a State in which there was no property belonging to the company.

Q. In other words, a railroad company running through several States, he believed in each of them there should be a receivership, so that in each State where the road ran there would be a different set of receivers?—A. I don't think that was it, but the original receivership was appointed in the State in which there was practically no part of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Q. What was the other railroad company?—A. The Washington Central.

Q. And what was that railroad, a steam railroad?—A. That was a steam railroad that ran from Spokane for about 40 miles——

Q. Where to?—A. To a little town in the interior of this State.

Q. That was not an interstate railroad?—A. No.

Q. It was wholly within the State of Washington?—A. It was wholly within the State of Washington. And the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern was another railroad for which he appointed receivers; that railroad ran from here up to Snoqualmie and up to the British boundary.

Mr. McCoy. What is the fact about the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. receivers, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Preston may be able to answer that question.

Mr. Preston. Without checking up my memory particularly, I will give it to you as it lodges in my mind at this moment. Judge Hanford appointed one or more local receivers; that is, local men receivers for the railroad in the State of Washington. The receivers appointed in Milwaukee then came out here and interposed a motion to do away with that appointment and have themselves substituted, making themselves ancillary to that. That motion was heard before Judge Gilbert, the circuit judge who lives in Portland, and Judge Hanford sitting in banc, and was denied.

The Chairman. That is, the motion made by the Milwaukee receivers in opposition to the appointment here?

Mr. Preston. No; not in opposition to the appointment, but to set it aside and have themselves substituted. They questioned the jurisdiction. I was in the case as one of the attorneys.

Mr. McCoy. Where was the original or first appointment of receivers made?

Mr. Preston. I think in Milwaukee, sir; in Wisconsin, I could not say Milwaukee.

Mr. McCoy. And were those same receivers appointed in all the other States through which the Northern Pacific ran except the State of Washington?

Mr. Preston. I think Montana was an exception. [Here Mr. Preston consults with Judge Hanford.] I see my memory was at fault. Judge Hanford has corrected me. It was this. The Milwaukee receivers were originally appointed here also and refused to account here, claiming the right to account only to Milwaukee and refusing to account. The matter came up and the hearing was had before Judge Gilbert, and as the result of that hearing the ruling was made that they were discharged from this jurisdiction and one or more receivers were appointed instead of them.

Mr. McCoy. Judge Gilbert?

Mr. Preston. Judge Gilbert and Judge Hanford sitting in banc heard the case. I took part in the argument myself. Mr. Hughes just suggests to me that I am speaking feelingly because I was unsuccessful. No, I was not. I was successful—I do not say that I was—I was only one of the number.

Mr. McCoy. How long after the appointment of the Milwaukee receivers, as we will call them, to be short, in the State of Washington, was it when they refused to account?

Mr. Preston. I could not answer. Judge Hanford says two years.

Mr. McCoy. Were they called upon to account in any other State?

Mr. Preston. Well, I know from memory that there was something in Montana, if I am not mistaken, along the same line, but my memory is so poor I would rather not undertake to testify to it. If you want to know the exact fact I would rather find it out for you.

Mr. Higgins. You can get the fact, can't you?

Mr. Preston. [After consultation.] Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho, I am now informed here, were all in this ninth circuit and treated it the same way and the same receivers were appointed.

The Chairman. You mean by that the portion of the road in those States was included in the ancillary receivership?

Mr. Preston. No; what I mean is this, as I understand it, that all the States in this circuit asserted their right to manage the road in their district through their own receivers, since the others would not account here. Now you see how untrustworthy one's memory may become on those matters—I remembered Montana and I did not remember Idaho and——

The Chairman. I understand very well in speaking of an old matter like that from recollection you and anybody else is liable to err without intending it. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Hughes. I wanted to interrogate the witness a little further. I want to call his attention to this and, if I may be permitted, I would ask the question as a leading question, and when it is asked, if it is objectionable, please say so.

The Chairman. We have given you a great deal of latitude.

Mr. Hughes. For the purpose of curtailing the examination, let me ask you, Judge Burke, if in Judge Hanford's service in this district he has not been required to pass upon cases involving not only the ordinary matters that come before the Federal courts, such as you have already described, including the admiralty jurisdiction, and foreign and domestic cases arising out of foreign and domestic commerce and foreign and domestic negotiable instruments, but mining litigation, mining laws, public land laws of all kinds, the Indian laws and the questions growing out of them, the immigration laws, the white-slave laws, and all other questions and legal questions or questions involving any litigation and laws of the United States on account of the peculiar geographical situation of this district?

A. He has undoubtedly.

Q. Now, turning aside from that question, from the question of Judge Hanford's judicial work and services, I want to ask you to state briefly what have been the services of Judge Hanford as a civilian during the same period of time that he was on the bench, as to the demand upon his mental and physical energies?—A. His services have been many and important.

Q. Describe very briefly, if you can, please, what they were.—A. Not naming the services in chronological order, I may first mention his services on the relief committee following the San Francisco earthquake and fire.

Q. Did that continue for some months?—A. That continued for some months; at times it was almost a 24-hour job. The demand was pressing; the demand for relief was pressing and the food and clothing and the like that had to be supplied to the people in San Francisco had to be sent 800 miles; steamships had to be chartered, money had to be collected, and I think Judge Hanford was chairman of that committee.

Q. Was the work of that committee under his constant personal supervision?—A. It was under his constant personal supervision.

Q. Has he in like manner been identified with all public, or most of the public and charitable undertakings carried on in this community?—A. I do not at the moment recall a single important affair of that kind that he has not been identified with as a working member.

Q. Has he been called upon to participate in public affairs, that is, in matters of public interest and importance, as speaker as well as worker in promoting and advocating them?—A. Yes, sir; constantly almost. I have often wondered how he got time from his judicial duties to attend to meetings and making speeches and preparing papers.

Q. Has he been connected with historical associations, devoting much time to the preservation of the history of this northwestern country?—A. Yes, sir; he has.

Q. I mean preserving the historical facts for the purpose of recording the history of this country?—A. Yes, sir; he has performed many important duties in connection with that, because it is recognized by all in this State who know him that he has a more accurate memory of the early events in the history of the territory in the State of Washington than probably any other man in the State. He has lived here since he was a child, and he has a very retentive memory; and when Mr. Snowden, of Tacoma, was preparing his history of the State of Washington, which he subsequently published in four volumes, perhaps the most important history of the State we ever had, he got Judge Hanford, and would not take no for an answer, to read the proofs of that history. I thought that was a task that ought to be given to somebody else in view of what Judge Hanford was then doing. But that is an illustration of the work that, outside of his judicial labors, that he has been constantly called upon to do; and he has never spared himself.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that history published?

A. About four or five years ago.

Mr. HUGHES. You spoke of the Central Washington receivership. Can you briefly give some information to the committee about that?

A. That was a railway that was built from Spokane westward in the early nineties. It has been managed and conducted by the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the Northern Pacific Railroad went into the hands of a receiver. The bondholders of the Washington Central Railroad were compelled, in order to protect their interest, to foreclose the mortgage. Their attorney was Senator Root. The firm was then Root & Clark, and the present Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, was a member of that firm. Mr. Stimson came out here and retained me to foreclose the mortgage, and proceedings were instituted to foreclose the mortgage and receivers were appointed in the State. The eastern people wanted the appointment of a receiver, wanted the appointment of a man as receiver whom they sent out, but Judge Hanford's policy in appointing receivers always has been this: "I will not appoint a man whom I do not know well enough to trust. Your man in this case is a stranger. The receiver is an officer of this court, and this court is in a measure responsible for the conduct of the receiverships, and I will not appoint a man whom I do not know." He refused, although I appealed as strongly as I could to get this man appointed receiver. He refused to appoint him receiver alone. He appointed a man whom he knew well, and appointed this man at their instance, as coreceiver, and they conducted the affairs of the company, I think, for two years.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom did he appoint?

A. He appointed Charles Chamberlain, and the man recommended by the eastern people was Mr. Miller. He was the son of a very prominent lawyer in New York. I do not remember the name of the firm. Probably the chairman or the other members of the committee would know.

Mr. MCCOY. Miller, Peckham & Dixon.

The WITNESS. Very likely. This was Alfred Miller that was appointed in connection with Charles Chamberlain. The receivers conducted the matter very satisfactorily to the eastern bondholders, especially to Mr. Root—or to Senator Root now—and to Mr. Stimson, his partner, and turned in, I think, something like $150,000, which was more money than they had ever received from the road before from the old management.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean profits in the operation?

A. I think so. Now, I may not be perfectly accurate in the figures, but it was a very large amount of money. It was a good deal over $100,000, as I now recall it. And in connection with the question which Mr. McCoy put, I may say that when that company was reorganized it was recognized not under the laws of another State, but under the laws of the State of Washington, and Mr. Root made this remark at the time—it was finally left to him—I shall never forget it—the question was put to him whether the company should be one organized under the laws of some other State or under the laws of the State of Washington, and he said, "Where is our property? It is in the State of Washington. Well, if the State of Washington is a good enough jurisdiction to own property in, it is a good enough jurisdiction to submit our rights to the courts of that State. Let us organize the company in the State of Washington."

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Burke, what is your address?

A. 408 Burke Building is my office address, and my residence is at 1004 Boylston Avenue.

M. A. MATTHEWS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee, please?

A. M. A. Matthews.

Q. You are a resident of Seattle?—A. I am.

Q. And a clergyman?—A. I am.

Q. Of what denomination?—A. Presbyterian.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle, Doctor?—A. Since January, 1902.

Q. How long have you been in the ministry?—A. Twenty-five years the 1st day of October.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Since I have been a resident of this city.

Q. Doctor, do you recall an occasion last fall, in September or October, when the medical doctors had a meeting at the Alhambra Theater?—A. I do.

Q. At which one Dr. McCormack made an address?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present?—A. I was.

Q. Do you recall seeing Judge Hanford at that meeting?—A. I do.

Q. Do you remember now whether you noticed him coming in or not?—A. I could not answer that question because I was a little late myself, and I do not remember that.

Q. Was he there when you came?—A. I think he was, but——

Q. Or did he come afterwards?—A. Well, I am uncertain, but I think he came after I did, sir.

Q. Were you present when he made a short address there?—A. I was.

Q. Did you listen to his address?—A. I did.

Q. Did you follow him in the making of it?—A. I did.

Q. About how long did he take?—A. Well, that is hard for me to say; perhaps 10 minutes, sir—5 or 10 minutes.

Q. There was one long address and several short speeches.—A. Dr. McCormack talked for an hour, if I remember correctly.

Q. Did you have any personal conversation with Judge Hanford at that time and place?—A. I did; I spoke to him after the meeting when we were going over to the banquet, or refreshments, served afterwards at the Washington Hotel.

Q. Are you able to give an opinion as to whether on that occasion Judge Hanford was under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I did not notice it, sir; I did not think of it at that time; he did not appear to me to be a man under the influence of intoxicants.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask him any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. You went over to the Washington Hotel also?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were there until the close of the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) And the serving of the refreshments that occurred at the Washington Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Hanford was with you all the time?—A. Yes; he went over to the refreshments with us.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not get your street address, Doctor.

A. 1209 Marion Street.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I am not through with this witness; I would like to examine him further about some other matters that have been involved in the general investigation, if I may do so at this time; it will not cover a very long time.

The CHAIRMAN. How long?

Mr. HUGHES. I should say not over 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. HIGGINS. Are you moderator of the Presbyterian assembly?

A. Yes.

Q. Which includes—— A. Which includes the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America and all the foreign stations in foreign countries.

Q. How long a time have you been moderator?—A. I was elected in May, on the 16th of this May, sir. My term expires at the next assembly, which convenes in Atlanta, Ga., in May—May of next year.

Mr. HUGHES. Doctor, how long have you resided in the city of Seattle?

A. I came here; I arrived here on Friday afternoon, if I remember correctly, on the 31st day of January, 1902. My administration commenced on the 1st day of January, 1902, but I did not arrive on that day.

Q. Since your residence here you have been intimately acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; I meet him frequently; he was one of the first public men that I met after I came here, if I remember correctly.

Q. Have you participated in all matters of general public interest, charitable or beneficial to the general welfare of the community?—A. Well, I don't know whether I have participated in all of them or not; I have been connected with a large part of them.

Q. To what extent in such services have you found yourself associated with Judge Hanford?—A. Well, I think, sir, the first—if you want me to detail them——

Q. Please do so, but very briefly.—A. Well, one of the first was the Asiatic Society looking to closer relationship between China, Japan, and the United States——

Q. I will ask you if in that connection——A. (Continuing.) In that connection Judge Hanford was one of the officers, if I am not mistaken—he was one of the members.

Q. I will ask you if in that connection there was not, either connected with the society or some other, an organization looking to the prevention of the diseases that are likely to spread in Asia and to be extended to this city and other cities on the Pacific coast, such as bubonic plague and other diseases?—A. Yes; that came out of it, and there was another organization dealing entirely with that question of which Judge Hanford was a more active member than myself. Whether I became a member of the society for the prevention of disease I do not remember, but it came out of this other one in which I was interested, as I understand it.

Q. Well, go on and be as brief as you can, but detail what you know in this connection.—A. I think we were connected with one of the first peace societies organized in the State. Judge Hanford, I think, if I am not mistaken Judge Hanford and Judge Burke and some more asked me to join it—I know I was solicited by some one, and I know that I afterwards found them there—I am speaking now of another organization which I am about to refer to—I think by lineage or history I am entitled to be a Son of the American Revolution, and I remember Judge Hanford, at the time I was entitled to join it, I think he furnished me the papers. He was one of the prominent workers in that, if I remember correctly. I did not have time to fill out the papers, I don't think I have filled them out yet, but Judge Hanford was prominent in that. That was one of the first. I think I was invited to join, and maybe did take part in some historical society of this State and city, and Judge Hanford had something to do with that; I didn't have much to do with it. And then I think some scholastic work; I think Judge Hanford was on the committee awarding medals, and you were on it with me, and we had to pass on the publications of some book-publishing house in the United States, and I remember we had to examine a number of articles—essays written all over this city, or over the State, I have forgotten.

Q. You mean articles written by students?—A. Yes, sir; and I should say I threw the greater burden of that work—I think you and I did, sir—on Judge Hanford. I do not know that I can detail them.

Q. Were you a member of the San Francisco relief committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the chairman of that committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were his labors arduous in the public welfare in that connection?—A. Well, sir, we worked, some of us, nearly all night.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Burke told us all about that. I do not think that there will be any contradiction of it. I do not think it is really very material, and I would ask that you make this feature of it as brief as you can. Those were all gone into in detail, you know, and a repetition is really hardly necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. Except to show his services—that might be of interest to the committee to know what kind of whisky can enable a man to do this kind of work—I do not know whether they might be interested somewhat in that.

The WITNESS. (Continuing.) If you will pardon me for reverting to the question you asked me. I did not hear and I never heard Judge Hanford's intoxication or sobriety being questioned on the occasion you mentioned, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not remember asking you that question.

The WITNESS. You asked me about his condition on the night we spoke at this meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. But I did not ask you what anybody said about it.

The WITNESS. I mean it was not raised in my mind until you asked me the question—until I heard it raised since. He was on the stand that night, I think made a speech of some 10 minutes, and several of us spoke, and it was perfectly satisfactory so far as anyone I heard say.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to take the time of the committee, but I want to ask another question.

Q. Are there any other matters of public interest, such as the exposition, the Chamber of Commerce, or other matters of public services in which you have been associated with Judge Hanford?—A. I have been a member with him on the committee on national affairs in the Chamber of Commerce seven or eight years, and he has been one of the hard workers on the committee, and Judge Burke was chairman of it.

Q. I want to ask you this question, in all your association with Judge Hanford ever since you have known him, have you ever seen him under the influence of liquor?—A. Well, I did not detect it, sir; if he was.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether he drinks any liquor?

A. I do not know, sir. I have never seen Judge Hanford drink except at a banquet on one occasion, where some wine was served. I think a number of the gentlemen had what they call a cocktail, an appetizer, or something which they drink first, a little bit of a glass, and I think that Judge Hanford took that cocktail, or whatever you call it.

Q. As far as you know, that is all you know of his drinking?—A. I am talking about what I saw him drink. That was all I ever saw him drink. At a banquet or something like that, I have seen Judge Hanford take what was served at the first of the meal, but he was not under the influence of liquor at the banquet.

Mr. HUGHES. In addition to those other services, has not Judge Hanford made addresses in your church?

A. He has made addresses there on two or three occasions; I think at the memorial on the death of the King of England he made an address; at the memorial on the death of Gov. McGraw he made an address, and on two or more peace occasions, celebrations, Judge Hanford spoke. He has spoken several times from the platform. I do not know the number.

The CHAIRMAN. To-morrow being the great national holiday, the committee will not sit. The committee will now be in recess until 9.30 on Friday morning.

Further hearing is continued until Friday, July 5, 1912, at the hour of 9.30 a. m.

SEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, JULY 5, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present.

JOHN J. WARD, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

A. John J. Ward.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Ward?—A. 615 Federal Avenue, Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 10 years.

Q. What is your present business?—A. I am engaged in the contracting business—general contracting.

Q. Along what line—the building line?—A. The building line, yes, sir; and sewers and street paving; and heating and plumbing, and so forth.

Q. How long have you followed that business?—A. About—I have been engaged in the plumbing and heating business about 37 years; I have been in business for myself since 1880.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Nothing more than to meet him on the street, and seeing him riding to and from his home on the street cars.

Q. How long have you known him that way?—A. About six years, I think.

Q. You and he live in the same direction from the business part of the city?—A. Yes.

Q. If at any time on the street cars you saw Judge Hanford when he appeared to you to be under the influence of any intoxicant you may tell the committee.—A. No, sir.

Q. Please tell the committee if——A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. If you have ever seen the judge at any time when he acted in a peculiar way on the street car.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the peculiarity?—A. A sort of drowsy condition.

Q. How did it affect him?—A. Why, he would throw his arm over the top of the back of the seat, and his head would kind of lean forward like that [showing], and once in a while he would raise his hand up and pull his beard. That has perhaps happened three or four times in the length of a block—while the car would be traveling the length of a block. He would seem drowsy, but he did not have the appearance of a man under the influence of liquor to me. He did not have that bleary glare in the eye that usually accompanies a man that is under the influence of liquor—it did not appear to me that he was drunk.

Q. How often did you notice him on the cars, as you have stated?—A. Oh, perhaps two or three times a week, in the evenings; sometimes once or twice a week in the morning.

Q. What hour in the evening?—A. I should judge it would be between 6 and 8 o'clock, and sometimes between 10 and 12 o'clock, when I would be going home late myself, and then in the mornings between 8 o'clock and 10 o'clock.

Q. Did his appearance or demeanor on the car at any time attract your attention particularly on those occasions?—A. Not only in the manner in which he kind of bobbed his head up that way, in a kind of a drowsy condition that he seemed to be in.

Q. How frequently did that attract your attention?—A. Well, that was the only time, as I say, as I would see him on the car going home, or in the morning coming down to the office he appeared the same way.

Q. On those occasions you mean he acted as if he were about to go to sleep?—A. Yes, sir; it appeared to me he was drowsy; his eyes were closed, and suddenly he would lift his head up and look around the car.

Q. Do I understand you to say that that condition was present and equally apparent in the morning as at night?—A. Yes, sir; in the mornings I noticed it particularly.

Q. And did you notice it at all times when you saw him?—A. When I saw him on the car; yes.

Q. You have seen him on the street at any time, have you?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Was that condition present on the street to any extent?—A. He walked with his head in a peculiar way, pushed out in front, his shoulders kind of drooping, and sometimes he would have hold of his coat collar in this manner [illustrating] going along the street. I noticed it in particular on account of remarks made, you know—I took particular care to notice whether he was under the influence of liquor or not, and I came to the conclusion that he was not.

Q. What was the nature of the remarks made, without telling what they were?—A. Well, in relation to the judge's condition.

Q. Well, were they in the way of suggesting that he was intoxicated?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent did you hear those remarks?—A. One gentleman said to me one time that he thought the judge was under the influence of liquor, and I told him I thought he was mistaken; that it was more the result of habit than anything else.

Q. Who was that gentleman?—A. Mr. Erickson, the city councilman.

Q. Well, in your opinion, was his demeanor such as to lead a stranger to think that he was under the influence of liquor.

A. A man who never seen him before—who had no opportunity to observe him, might take it for granted, without thought, that he might be under the influence of liquor.

Q. When did you first notice that condition in him?—A. Perhaps the first evening I saw him on the car.

Q. That would be about how long ago?—A. Probably about six years ago.

Q. And from that time you have stated that you saw him perhaps three or four——A. (Interrupting.) Two or three times, maybe, and sometimes four times a week, or four or five times.

Q. Varying from 8 o'clock in the evening until 12 at night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But mostly, I suppose, in the evening or at night?—A. In the evening between the hours of 6 and 8 o'clock; and I have seen him most of the time between the hours of 6 and 8 o'clock and occasionally from 10 to 12 o'clock.

Q. Never later that that?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Was there any noticeable difference as you saw him in his condition in the morning, the evening, or night?—A. No; there was not. It seemed to me that he did not appear any worse in the evening than he did in the morning, coming down.

Q. Did the condition which you speak of reach actual sleep at times?—A. Well, you could not tell—I could not tell very well; he would close his eyes and hold his arm out like that [showing], look around a while, and constantly did the same, perhaps three or four times in the length of a block.

Q. Would that be repeated in every block?—A. It appeared to me——

Q. You mean three or four times in each block?—A. In each block; yes, sir.

Q. Well, did you form an opinion as to whether in fact the judge went to sleep or not?—A. I can not say it was sleep—I can not say that he was sleeping. It seemed to me to be a sort of drowsy feeling.

Q. How would you account for it in the morning?—A. I can not account for it; but it convinced me that it was not the result of intoxication; I came to the result that it was the result of habit more than anything else.

Q. Was it such as to attract the attention of anyone within view of the judge?—A. I suppose the other passengers on the car saw it just the same as I did.

Q. Well, was it so unusual on a street car as to probably attract the attention of those who might be on the car and within range of vision?—A. Why, it was, yes, I think; although I have seen others—a young lady, for instance, that lived down in that direction who sometimes does the same thing.

Q. Habitually?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen her on half dozen occasions at least nodding asleep going home in the evening, and then I have seen a man, roughly dressed, who seemed to be a hard-working man—who seemed to be a man engaged in rough work—who did the same thing once or twice.

Q. But it was not usual?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is unusual?—A. Yes.

Q. While there might be special reasons in the case of a working man as you spoke of, can you give any special reason for that condition habitually?—A. No; I can not.

Q. Well, have you seen the judge at other places than on the street car, along the street when he showed any indications along that line?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to whether the judge drinks intoxicants or not?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. If you saw a person whom you knew drank act as you saw the judge did, what inference would you draw from it?—A. I suppose it would lead me to believe that he was under the influence of liquor unless I made a close investigation; unless I took particular care to observe his eyes and searched for that particular sluggish glare which is in the eyes of a drunken man.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Just one or two questions.

Q. Mr. Ward, in going to and from your home you travel upon the same street car; that is to say, your home is upon the same particular line as that of Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the occasion of your traveling so many times with him on the street car?—A. Yes.

Q. You spoke of a conversation with a councilman, Councilman Erickson, who was a witness here. Were you with him on the car at the time of this conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he called your attention to Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was when your conversation which you have detailed with him took place, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

ELMER E. TODD, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. Elmer E. Todd.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Todd?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long has Seattle been your residence?—A. Since May, 1899.

Q. You hold some official position now?—A. No, I do not.

Q. What is your present business?—A. I am in the general practice of the law.

Q. Have you held any official position in Seattle?—A. I was United States attorney for this district from November, 1907, to May 1, 1912.

Q. Of what is this district composed?—A. That part of the State of Washington west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains.

Q. Did you live at Seattle prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long?—A. I lived at Seattle from May, 1899, except for about one year when I was in Alaska.

Q. And during all that time you were engaged in the practice of your profession?—A. I was.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I was not acquainted with Judge Hanford before I became United States attorney, except as I appeared in his court from time to time.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I think I have known him by sight ever since I have been in Seattle, but I had not a speaking acquaintance with him before I became United States attorney.

Q. During the time you were United States attorney you were frequently in his court?—A. I was.

Q. And of course you frequently had business conferences with him?—A. I did.

Q. Was your office in this building?—A. My office was in this building after the building was occupied; prior to the time this building was occupied I occupied my own private offices in the Lowman Building.

Q. To what extent were you with Judge Hanford or did you have an opportunity of noticing him outside of the court or business hours?—A. The only place that I had an opportunity of noticing him was at the Rainier Club, of which I am a member; I saw him there frequently.

Q. How long have you been a member of the club?—A. I should say during the last four years.

Q. Mr. Todd, if at any time during your acquaintance with the judge you have seen him under the influence of an intoxicant, please tell the committee of it.—A. I have never seen him under the influence of liquor.

Q. Have you ever seen him when you thought he was influenced by liquor which he had drunk?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking any liquor?—A. I have.

Q. Where?—A. At the Rainier Club.

Q. Frequently or seldom?—A. Well, I should say—I would have to state the facts and let the committee draw its conclusion. Nearly every evening when I am in there between 5 and 6 before dinner, if Judge Hanford is in there he would probably take a drink, but some nights he is not there and some nights I am not there.

Q. What does he drink on those occasions?—A. Sometimes he would take a bottle of beer, but more frequently, I think, he takes a cocktail.

Q. How many evenings a week would you average in there when the judge was there and you saw him drinking?—A. Well, I am not there—I am only there—I am not in the Rainier Club at that hour—I have not been there during the past four years—I have not averaged two afternoons a week. I suppose nearly every time I was in there he was in there.

Q. Prior to that time you were not a member?—A. Prior to that time I was not a member.

Q. Have you any recollection as to whether you saw him drinking the cocktail or the beer oftener?—A. He drank the cocktail oftener.

Q. Did you ever see him there later in the evening, or were you ever there to see him?—A. Occasionally when I have been there late in the evening I would go in there from 9 to 10 o'clock and stay there until about 11 or 12.

Q. Have you on those occasions seen him drink?—A. I have.

Q. What?—A. He always, to my recollection, drank beer in the evening at that time.

Q. At the later hour?—A. At the later hour. He would sit down to a game of dominoes, or something like that, and take a bottle of beer.

Q. How frequently did that occur?—A. Why, every evening I saw him there I think that would occur. But I have not been there at that hour once a week on an average.

Q. Have you observed his appearance and condition while on the bench?—A. I have.

Q. Have you at any time when you saw him on the bench noticed him in a condition that bordered on sleep?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. What was the condition on those occasions, in your opinion?—A. His head would be forward and he would close his eyes.

Q. I mean in fact what was his condition—was he nodding?—A. When I first noticed that, I thought he was asleep. As a matter of fact, from subsequent observation of him, I found out that he was not.

Q. What would the ordinary person not acquainted with him conclude from those facts?—A. They would think he was asleep.

Q. How much of the time while on the bench was that his condition?—A. Why, it seemed to me, Mr. Graham, that it used to occur more frequently in the old Federal building, more than it does in the new; but it occurs in the new Federal building, I noticed particularly, when I would be addressing him in argument or when somebody else would be addressing him in a long argument.

The CHAIRMAN. I would not blame him much for that, would you?

A. Not at all.

Q. Was there any difference as to the time of day?—A. My recollection is that it occurred more often in the early part of the afternoon, after the court convened at 2 o'clock. It would be the early part of the afternoon session. It was his habit to take a recess at 4 o'clock, and after that time I did not observe it.

Q. What were and are the court hours?—A. Ten to twelve in the morning and two to five in the afternoon.

Q. Have you seen the judge elsewhere than at the club and in the courthouse during those years?—A. Only on two occasions that I can recall at the present time; that is, except to pass him on the street.

Q Where were those?—A. I met him one night on Second Avenue in front of the Hotel Butler. The second time I was down at the circuit court of appeals at San Francisco, and I think it was a year ago this last May when he was sitting on the circuit court of appeals, and that day we took dinner together and went to the theater together.

Q. What was the occasion at the Butler?—A. He was just going by and I said good evening to the judge. He usually did not speak to me as I passed, but I spoke to him and talked to him there, and that was the only time I ever talked to him outside of his chambers or the court room or the Rainier Club.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Todd, how much of the time of the court sessions were you in court?

A. Why, I usually was in court at the opening of the court in the morning and frequently at the beginning of the afternoon session. At other times only when I had some matters to present or was engaged in the trial of some case.

Q. Did you conduct or participate in many of the court trials?—A. No; I did not try many of the cases. Mr. Hutson, my first assistant, tried most of the cases during the time I was in office.

Q. Did you conduct some of the court trials yourself?—A. I conducted what I considered the more important trials.

Q. And in those cases was any considerable time consumed?—A. Yes, sir; there was.

Q. How many days or weeks in any that you remember?—A. Do you mean the different cases?

Q. Yes.—A. I think the Holt murder trial, for instance, took two weeks; the Parkhurst, the bank embezzlement case, took about two weeks, and I tried a good many civil cases—a number of civil cases before him, most of which did not take much more than a day or two days. The two cases of importance, the Parkhurst and the Holt case, was the longest cases I tried before Judge Hanford.

Q. You also tried some other important criminal cases, didn't you?—A. The other important criminal cases in the office were mostly white-slave cases, and I never tried a white-slave case before Judge Hanford; I only tried one white-slave case and that was before Judge Donworth. Mr. Hutson tried a great many white-slave cases before Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, you tried the Hillman case?—A. That was not tried before Judge Hanford.

Q. You speak of white-slave cases; what are those?—A. Those are cases where persons are prosecuted for taking persons from the United States or into the United States from foreign territory under interstate commerce for purposes of prostitution or other immoral purposes.

Q. Did your department have many of those cases?—A. We had a great many of them.

Q. How many in the last year, about?—A. I would have to refer you to Mr. Hutson for that, because he had charge of those cases; he handled those cases both on preliminary hearing before the grand jury and on the trial, except the one I have mentioned which was tried before Judge Donworth.

Q. In the experience that you had in court in the trial of cases in which you were engaged did you ever observe Judge Hanford in any condition caused by anything where he was not prompt at ruling or where he appeared not to know what was being said or going on?—A. Well, the times I have described where he appeared to be asleep he never failed to hear an objection to the evidence and to make a ruling when necessary.

Q. How did he make those rulings; were they clear or otherwise?—A. Clearly.

Q. So that as to indicate that he was fully advised of the proceedings that were being had?—A. I thought so.

Q. Did you yourself conduct the Holt case?—A. I did.

Q. When was that tried, Mr. Todd?—A. It was tried during the month of December, 1908.

Q. And occupied about two weeks?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. Do you recall any instance or incident during the trial of the Holt case where Judge Hanford appeared to be intoxicated on the bench?—A. No; I did not—I do not.

Q. You were there all the time?—A. I was there; I was the only attorney for the Government side of the case.

Q. And Mr. Riddell and Mr.——A. Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Riddell defended.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Do you recall any occasion during that trial when an objection was made by one of the attorneys for the defense to a question asked or, rather, to the answer to a question asked of Holt, when the judge did not seem to notice the objection and there was a pause of a short duration, during which everybody waited for the judge to take notice of the objection?

A. No; I do not recollect any such occasion.

Q. I would like to get the strength of your recollection on that. Do you mean to say that you do not recall it or is your recollection vivid enough to say whether it occurred?—A. I should say that it did not occur. If it had occurred, I should certainly have recollected it. I do not recollect of any such occasion during my four years and a half experience here as United States attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. DORR. I would like to ask one more question.

Q. Do you remember, Mr. Todd, who was the reporter of the Post-Intelligencer that attended the court work at the time the Holt case was on trial?—A. Mr. Hunt.

Q. How do you remember that?—A. Because he was reprimanded by Judge Hanford during the progress of the trial.

Mr. MCCOY. For what?

A. After the evidence was closed the case went over until the following Monday afternoon for argument to the jury, and during that interim the jury was at liberty. Mr. Hunt published some facts—or some facts were published in the Post-Intelligencer about the case which were inaccurate and incorrect. The attorneys for the defense brought that matter up before Judge Hanford on Monday morning and Judge Hanford called for this reporter and reprimanded him in the presence of the jury for publishing those facts, and admonished the jury to pay no attention to them, and the report of the case in the Supreme Court of the United States shows these matters.

Mr. MCCOY. What was the reporter's name?

A. Hunt.

C. T. HUTSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. Charles T. Hutson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Hutson?—A. Seattle.
Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Since August 1, 1906.
Q. What is your present business?—A. Attorney at law.
Q. How long have you been practicing law?—A. Since November, 1901.
Q. Do you hold any official position?—A. I do not.
Q. Have you held any here in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir; as second and then first assistant United States attorney for the western district of Washington.
Q. Who was the district attorney during the time of your service?—A. The first was Potter Charles Sullivan and then from December, 1907, Elmer E. Todd.
Q. As his assistant district attorney did you have any special line of duty?—A. During the last few years I tried the majority of the criminal cases—the minor cases, and a few of the important cases.
Q. Were they all tried before Judge Hanford?—A. Not during the last three years. We tried quite a number before Judge Donworth and Judge Rudkin in the western division of the western district of Washington.
Q. How much of the trial work did you have to perform during the year, or how many weeks trial work is there in the year?—A. Probably 10 weeks; that is an estimate.
Q. Do you mean the office or yourself would try that number of cases?—A. Myself.
Q. And of them how much before Judge Hanford?—A. Up to three years ago it was all before him—all before Judge Hanford and since then probably three-quarters of it.
Mr. HIGGINS. When was the western district divided?
A. When was the western district divided?
Q. Yes; when did you get the additional Federal judge in the district?—A. I am not clear on that, but I think Judge Donworth was appointed about three years ago.
Q. 1909?—A. About that.
The CHAIRMAN. Were you in Judge Hanford's court on many or on any other occasions than when engaged in the trial work? And if so, state.
A. Yes, sir; nearly every motion day, which was Monday, I was in court, sometimes several hours and sometimes just for a few minutes.
Q. Have you duties to attend to anywhere else than in Seattle?—A. I did, anywhere throughout the district—anywhere in the district.
Q. And that includes 10 weeks of trial work, does it?—A. No, sir; there were occasionally criminal hearings before commissioners and investigations, and things of that kind.
Q. What I want to get at, was all of the trial work which you had before Judge Hanford here in Seattle, or did you appear before him at some other point?—A. I had practically all of the immigration work, which included lots of matters of a sort of semicivil nature, and they would be presented on motion days, which would be on Monday, or some other day; that was in addition to the 10 weeks I spoke of, which was only an estimate. And then for a time I took care of the naturalization cases at intervals, which would be on Saturday; there were not many of those instances, but maybe a half a dozen times during the year.

Q. When you were engaged in court before Judge Hanford, tell the committee what his manner and demeanor was on the bench.—A. His manner and demeanor was that of a careful, attentive judge.

Q. To what extent, if at all, did he appear to nap, or slumber, while you were practicing before him?—A. I have noticed that, but I would not say that that was usual; it was rather a rare thing with him.

Q. An exceptional thing with him?—A. An exceptional thing with him.

Q. Well, would it occur every day?—A. No, sir.

Q. When it occurred, at what time of the day did it occur?—A. If my memory serves me right, I would say along in the early part of the afternoon.

Q. Lasting how long?—A. Just a few minutes; I think 20 minutes would cover it, although it might pass over that; I do not mean by that that he was nodding that long, but it would be just an occasional nod.

Q. Did you ever see him act in that way elsewhere than in the court?—A. I have not.

Q. What opportunity have you had of noticing him elsewhere than in the court room?—A. In the court room or around the court building or in his chambers was the extent of my acquaintance with the judge.

Q. Were you ever with him or did you ever see him anywhere else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. I am not.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether the judge does drink?—A. I have no personal knowledge.

Q. Did his appearance on the bench ever suggest to you the thought that it might be caused by drink?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not make any observation with that thought in your mind?—A. No; none whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, gentlemen?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Hutson, will you state a little more specifically about the volume of business that you were concerned in before Judge Hanford?

A. As a rule during the time that I was first assistant, which covered from December, 1907, until February 1 of this year, 1912, I had charge of the grand jury work, which brought me more or less in contact with the judge at all times during the existence of the grand jury, which would be from a week to a month; some grand juries lasted even longer than that—five weeks. I then would be in the court room every morning when the grand jury was called to report, and we usually had violations of the postal laws, violations of the statute relating to crime on the high seas, customs violations, immigration violations, and violations of the Treasury laws, which would result in 10 or 15 or more indictments every grand jury, that I had to handle. Sometimes we have had as high as thirty-odd indictments returned, and probably the greater majority of them would fall to me. A number would plead guilty and a trial would thus be avoided, but at each time that a plea was taken I was in the court room. Then I had, in addition to that, the violations of the immigration laws—cases which came up by way of habeas corpus.

Q. And did that include the deportation cases?—A. Those were the deportation cases.

Q. Those were deportation cases?—A. There would be writs of habeas corpus to inquire into their detention.

Q. About how many criminal cases—give the committee an approximate idea—would be tried during a single term in which you would participate?—A. I can only estimate that. Probably 10 at a term; two terms a year.

Q. Sir?—A. I say 10 at a term; two terms a year.

Q. That is as distinguished from the other work which you mentioned.—A. That would be trial work.

Q. And how long a time have you been engaged in any single case before the court?—A. Well, I was engaged with Mr. Todd in the Parkhurst case; that took two weeks; that was the longest time that I was engaged in any one case before Judge Hanford.

Q. The Parkhurst case?—A. The Parkhurst case.

Q. How many of those so-called white-slave cases, approximately, were before the court for the last two years, if you know, Mr. Hutson?—A. I can only estimate that; I would say possibly 15 or 20.

Q. Per year or term, or for the two years?—A. During the last two years.

Q. Fifteen or twenty?—A. Yes, sir; there were a great number in the district that perhaps would arise from grand juries which Judge Hanford had called, but they were disposed of by other judges.

Q. But some 15 or 20 of them were actually tried, you think?—A. No; were disposed of either by pleading guilty or trial.

Q. A plea of guilty or trial; how many were actually tried, if you have any recollection on that subject?—A. I have not any distinct recollection on that, Mr. Dorr; I can ascertain that for you.

Q. I want to hand you a trial calendar, Mr. Hutson [handing document to witness], and I will ask you if that contains your name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the same Mr. Hutson that appears on the printed calendar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is for the November session of 1911, or the November term of 1911?—A. The November term, 1911.

Q. You say there were two terms a year?—A. There were two terms a year, May and November.

Q. In Seattle?—A. In Seattle.

Q. About how long would the court business continue during a term; how many months?—A. Prior to the appointment of Judge Donworth the court was almost continuously in session, except perhaps a little time in August.

Q. During the entire year?—A. During the entire year.

Q. How was it after the appointment of Judge Donworth?—A. Then, if I recollect, Judge Hanford took some time off in August of each year from actual court work; but I know that all during that time he had matters under advisement.

Q. Do you know anything about the judge's habits of work in the evenings?—A. I do not recall so much about the time spent in this building here, but in the old building on Fourth and Marion I had occasion then to know that he was there nearly every evening.

Q. How late?—A. The only way that I can gauge that would be when the juries were out that were considering criminal cases, that he would stay as late as 11 or 12 o'clock to receive their verdict, and sometimes later. I would like to say here—you asked me the longest time I had been in court in any one case. I had a term in which three cases running were tried beginning, I think, July 14, 1908, in the old building, which took up about three weeks constantly.

Q. Where was the old building located which you have spoken of?—A. Fourth and Marion.

Q. With reference to the location of the Rainier Club, where is that?—A. Across the street.

Q. During all this time, Mr. Hutson, have you ever seen Judge Hanford on the bench when he appeared to you to be under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you ever seen him where he appeared to be inattentive to the court's business?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was his manner in ruling when objections were made to the introduction of testimony and matters of that kind?—A. Clearly, I always thought.

Q How a to promptness?—A. Very prompt.

Q. What was his custom and habit of instructing juries at the close of the evidence?—A. He always instructed them clearly and in such a way as would indicate that he had heard and understood the evidence offered.

Q. Were the instructions given orally or from prepared written instructions?—A. He very often gave oral instructions; sometimes he read instructions that were handed him by the attorneys, but more often oral instructions.

Q. Have you ever known of an occasion where he was not ready and prepared to give the oral instructions immediately upon the close of the testimony?—A. I have not, Mr. Dorr.

Q. From the experience which you have had in Judge Hanford's court practicing before him, what do you say as to his judicial temperament?—A. I would say that he had an even judicial temperament and was a careful and attentive judge.

Q. Is the bar docket which I have handed you, being for the November term of 1911, a fair illustration of the usual bar dockets in Judge Hanford's court, as to the number of cases, and so forth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the committee how many cases are docketed there?—A. Fifty-one.

The CHAIRMAN. How many?

A. Fifty-one.

Mr. DORR. Do you know of Judge Hanford presiding in other courts during this time that you were assistant United States attorney?

A. I know that prior to the appointment of Judge Donworth he had the entire district, and even after the appointment of Judge Donworth he occasionally held court in Tacoma, and that during the last year or so—during the year 1911—he was called to the circuit court of appeals at San Francisco for a period.

Q. And was not that true as to the prior years? Has he not always attended the circuit court of appeals since it was organized, at stated periods?—A. I so understand; I do not know the dates, however.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you belong to any firm, Mr. Hutson.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the name of the firm?—A. Reynolds, Ballinger & Hutson.

Mr. DORR. When did you become a member of this firm?

A. I became a member of this firm in April, 1907.

Q. What are the other names—what are the names of the other members of your firm?—A. Charles A. Reynolds and Harry Ballinger.

Q. Harry Ballinger?—A. Harry Ballinger.

The CHAIRMAN. When you answered that there were 51 cases on the trial calendar, did that include criminal and civil cases?

A. That is the number I see there, and it seems to include both.

Q. Can you tell us how many of those cases were disposed of by trial at that term of court?—A. I can not from memory; no, sir; only approximately.

Q. Will your approximation be reasonably close?—A. Well, I would say this by way of explanation first. They would be all disposed of in one way or another—the calendar would be cleared—they might be continued to another term.

Q. That is hardly an answer to my questoin, however.—A. I could not give you an answer which would be clear on that.

Q. The point I want to get at is——A. I can tell you in regard to the criminal cases, Mr. Chairman.

Q. The calendar may have a thousand cases on it without giving any clear idea of the amount of work that was actually done. Now, if you can tell how many trial cases there were—how many of them were disposed of by trial?—A. I could; those that were Government cases.

Q. How many of them were disposed of by trial?

Here witness examines the docket.

Mr. HIGGINS. Would you not be able, gentlemen, to furnish the committee with that information for a period of years?

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. We expect to be prepared to show the actual court days for a long period.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; the question is withdrawn.

C. O. BATES, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Charles O. Bates.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Bates?—A. Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Since June, 1892.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Attorney.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Thirty-two or thirty-three years.

Q. Are you in the active profession of the law or practice of the law now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I assume that you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I became acquainted with him some time in 1892, when I first came.

Q. What was he then doing?—A. He was United States district judge of this district.

Q. Tacoma is in this district?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he them and is he still presiding at your court?—A. Yes; but since Judge Donworth's appointment he has not presided as much as he did before, although he is over there very frequently.

Q. Is he there, as he was last week when he opened court. Is he there to hold court since Judge Donworth's appointment?—A. I think since Judge Donworth's appointment my recollection is that he has been over there to hear some preliminary matters and motions and demurrers, and I think one or two hearings.

Mr. HUGHES. Trials, you mean?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How many years since Judge Donworth's appointment?

A. It was in the neighborhood of three years, I think.

Q. Before that time was your practice in the Federal court, Judge Hanford's court, extensive or limited?—A. I went into a firm when I first went to Tacoma that had a good deal of business and there has been scarcely a term of court since then that I have not had some business before Judge Hanford.

Q. When did that condition begin?—A. It was either the fall of 1892 or the spring of 1893.

Q. Was most of that practice here at Seattle or at Tacoma?—A. Most of it at Tacoma.

Q. To what extent were you in court before him at Seattle?—A. Of course I won't be sure about this; I remember trying one criminal case before him and, I think, two or three civil cases in Seattle.

Q. When was that?—A. The criminal case was before they moved into this building. How long that has been I do not know; it was just a little while before that.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago is that, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. DORR. About three years.

The CHAIRMAN. And as to civil cases——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Hutson informs me that they moved into this building in April, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. Three years ago—and when did you try the civil cases before him?

A. I never have had any trial—any civil trial since they moved into this building. I have been here too on motion days since they moved into this building and presented matters to him four or five times, but never any trials.

Q. Apart from your professional work, that is, from the work in court before Judge Hanford, to what extent have you associated with him or had an opportunity to observe him?—A. Well, I have met Judge Hanford at the meetings of the State bar association in this State at every meeting that I have attended. I have met him at different times at public meetings, different times at banquets that were held for the purpose of entertaining public people, and probably I have met him a dozen times either at Tacoma or Seattle when he would be off the bench at the hotel or at the club.

Q. Casual meetings?—A. Yes.

Q. At the Tacoma Club?—A. No, I never met him at the Tacoma Club.

Q. Which club?—A. The Rainier Club.

Q. Are you a member of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were a guest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. His guest?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you first as to court work; if you have at any time seen Judge Hanford when on the bench in what appeared to be a condition of drowsiness or napping?—A. Yes.

Q. Or sleep?—A. Yes.

Q. Just tell the committee in your own way what you saw.—A. Well, I remember the first time that I saw Judge Hanford in that condition was soon after I came here and I was making an argument before him on a matter that I thought was of a good deal of importance and I was a good deal put out and annoyed because I thought that he was asleep during the argument; he had all the appearances of that, but after the argument was completed and he rendered his decision, I found out that I was mistaken, because he had a very complete grasp on the proposition that had been submitted to him, and he decided it only as a man could have decided it that had heard the argument on it. My experience with him afterwards was—I noticed that same condition a good many times, and we who have known him here on the bench have discovered that it was a peculiarity and a habit of his that he appears to be asleep when he is not.

Q. Is his condition on those occasions such as would lead any ordinary observer to think that he was intoxicated?—A. No, not intoxicated; they would think that he was asleep.

Q. How much of the time does he continue in that condition while on the bench?—A. Oh, not long, not any length of time at all—do you mean how much of the time at one time?

Q. Well, not only at one time, but in one sitting—of course I do not now refer to the length of each apparent nap, but to the frequency of them as well as the length of them?—A. It would be for a short time and——

Q. When is that condition most observable?—A. Well, I have observed it usually shortly after the convening of court in the afternoon, the court convenes at 2 o'clock.

Q. During the afternoon, during the three-hours' session, how much of the three hours would he seem to be napping or drowsy, or apparently inattentive?—A. Well, it would be a short time, it would not be continual at all.

Q. Is it your observation that that is a daily occurrence?—A. No, I would not say it was a daily occurence.

Q. How frequently in the course of a week or a court session, how frequently would that happen?—A. Well, that is hard to tell. I remember a series of cases that I tried before Judge Hanford at Tacoma that lasted two weeks, and probably during that time there would be—that would occur on four or five days.

Q. Have you ever noticed any attorney in addressing the court suspend his remarks on account of the judge's apparent condition?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what would be the impression created in the mind of a stranger to the judge, what would it probably be on those occasions; would it be that he was asleep?—A I think so; yes. I know the first time I saw him I thought that.

Q. And you continued firing logic at him, did you, while he was asleep?—A. I don't know whether you would call it logic or not. I continued talking.

Q. I assumed that it was logic, you being a lawyer that is a reasonable presumption. Have you seen him at any time when he was not on the bench when he was in that condition?—A. Do you mean in the condition of——

Q. Nodding, drowsiness, and apparently asleep.—A. Yes, sir. I remember one time coming over on the interurban from Tacoma with Judge Hanford; in fact I was in the same car, sitting across the aisle, when he appeared to be the same way.

Q. I understand that it is about an hour's ride.—A. In those days it was an hour and a half.

Q Well, how much of that time did he appear to be asleep or napping?—A. Well, I could not say. I went to sleep myself after we got out of Tacoma, and I did not notice him. I know this, that I was going to talk with him and I thought I would, and then knowing his peculiarity I did not, and I noticed him drop off to sleep and I supposed he was asleep, and I did the same thing.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking?—A. Yes.

Q. Frequently?—A. Well, when I have met him at those banquets and so forth I have seen him drink.

Q. Have you drunk with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, this day, before he and you started on this car ride, did he and you have a drink?—A. I could not answer for him. I can not remember now myself, but the probability is that I did. He took the car after the adjournment of court I might say to the committee——

Q. What have you seen him drink—what drink have you seen him take?—A. Well, the drinks they usually have at those banquets—cocktails, wine.

Q. Have you seen him drink on other occasions than at banquets?—A. Oh, I think this time I met him at the club, probably.

Q. Do you recall what he drank?—A. No; I would not recall it.

Q. Well, do you know what his usual or favorite drink is?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you told us all the occasions so far as you recall them on which you have seen the judge—that is, in reference to those times at the banquets and on the car, and at the Rainier Club?—A. I have met him—I mentioned that also that he used to stop at the Tacoma Hotel when he would go over to Tacoma to hold court, and I have met him there, probably four or five times, and aside from that I think I have never met him——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you at any time seen him when you thought he was more or less under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never have.

Q. Did you at any time have any appointment of any sort from him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been attorneys in any cases where the court fixed the fee?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions—what is your firm name?

A. At the present time?

Q. Yes.—A. Bates, Pier & Peterson.

Mr. MCCOY. What is your general line of practice? If you have any general line?

A. Well, it is—the practice is a general practice, although of late years the practice has been largely personal injury cases.

Q. For the plaintiff or for the defendant?—A. For both.

Q. Do you mean that your firm's practice has been that?—A. Well, ours, and generally the practice here. Our firm's practice; yes, sir. I stated that generally the practice here has been personal injury cases for the last number of years, and that includes our firm.

Q. I do not know whether I quite understand you; do you mean that there has been more of that class of cases than any other?—A. Yes.

Q. The defendants being generally railroad corporations or no particular class of corporations for defendants?—A. No; the defendants would be railroad corporations, street car corporations, and a great many of the mills.

Q. Lumber mills?—A. Lumber mills and other mills—manufacturers.

Q. Tacoma is quite a manufacturing town; is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Better than Seattle in your judgment?

A. In my judgment, yes.

Mr. McCOY. Have you any business association with Judge Hanford?

A. None at all.

Q. Or any particular social acquaintance?—A. Nothing, any more than I have mentioned; that is the extent of it.

Q. Are you regularly retained by any of those corporations, street or steam, or otherwise, as attorney? A. No, sir.

Q Do most of those cases get into the United States court here in Washington?—A. No, sir; not most of them.

Q If there is any way that you can estimate what percentage of them does, I wish you would.—A. Well, I could not give you the percentage, but the dockets of the courts here and at Seattle will show.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean here and in Tacoma

A. Yes; I mean here and in Tacoma The dockets will show the committee that a large majority of the contested civil cases are personal-injury cases.

Mr. McCOY. My question was this, Mr Bates: What percentage of those cases goes into the State court and what into the United States either by original proceeding in the United States court or by removal from the State court?

A. I could not give the percentage A large majority of them are in the State court

Q Can you tell from general observation, and without getting down to any particular figure, whether the corporations doing business in this State, generally speaking, are likely to be foreign corporations, or do they apply to the State of Washington for their certificates?—A The majority of them, I think, are Washington corporations, although there are a good many foreign corporations I think the street car companies are all foreign corporations and many of the mills, but the majority of them are domestic corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. One question in the line of Mr. McCoy's questioning: I suppose the bulk of the personal-injury cases are brought in the State court?

A Yes, sir; the bulk of them.

Q And what are the principal causes for removal to the Federal court? Is there any other cause than the nonresidence of the defendants?—A. I never knew from my own experience here of a case being removed to the Federal court for any other reason.

Q. Is there any practice in the Federal court with reference to fixing the amount of fees in those cases which the plaintiff's attorney may receive?—A. No, sir; none that I know of.

Q. In many jurisdictions, where a case is brought on a contract for a contingent fee, the court interferes and regulates the size of the fee —A. There is no such practice here.

Q. Is there any practice here of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whatever contract the plaintiff's attorney makes with the plaintiff would be permitted by the court to stand?—A. I never knew of the matter being put up to the court. I presume in a particular case, if it was shown to the court that the fee was unconscionable, the court might take some action; but there is no such practice, though.

Q. I am not trying to get at what they might or could or would or should do, or should be done, but I am asking you what the practice is or has been.—A. There is no such practice.

Mr. HIGGINS. There has been some suggestion of it being the law, or there being something in the law, of the State of Washington forbidding an attorney from advancing moneys to pay the costs of litigation. Does that apply to contingent fees?

A. Well, I do not recall just what that law is. I know there is some such law on the statute books, but it does not, in my opinion, apply to preventing attorneys from making a contract with a person who has not the money to conduct the litigation himself or herself, to advancing the necessary costs and receiving a percentage of the—receiving compensation to be based upon a percentage of the amount recovered.

Mr. HIGGINS. I recollect that Mr. Brown in his testimony stated that the law would not permit it.

The WITNESS. I do not so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your understanding that a lawyer may advance the court costs for his client?

A. It is my understanding that if a client has no money and no means for conducting a litigation—that is, a righteous litigation—that the attorney has a right to loan him the money.

Q. Would that be by leave of court first had and obtained, or would the attorney himself be himself the judge as to what was right in the case?—A. I do not know of any matter——

Q. (Interrupting.) Would it not come in under the law covering the offenses of barratry and champerty?—A. I don't think so.

Mr. MCCOY. Does not your code cover that, Mr. Hughes——

Mr. HUGHES We have a statute which covers more particularly one branch of champerty—that is, solicitation by the attorney or any agent or representative of his, forbidding it and making it a misdemeanor; and in those cases—that is, that class of cases, the act is an offense. But as I recall the statute now, it is silent and we have nothing but the common law on the subject of champerty and barratry, aside from that statute which more particularly relates to solicitation.

Mr. MCCOY. As I remember it, at common law, the advancement of expenses of litigation even to an impecunious client, would constitute one of those offenses. Have not you got a section in your code which provides that the compensation of an attorney depends on the agreement made between him and his client?

Mr. HUGHES. We have no statute in this State forbidding the making of contingent agreements.

Mr. MCCOY. Is there not a section in your code which specifically says that the compensation of an attorney depends on the agreement made bewteen him and his client? I notice that your code is something like the New York code. In looking at a section we had here the other day I notice that it was almost identical and I took it for granted that was in there, because it was in the New York code.

Mr. DORR. We will furnish the committee with the section which is involved in this question.

Mr. HUGHES. The statute fixes certain very small attorney's fees and permits additional fees as agreed upon between the client and the attorney; that is to say, the attorney is not limited to the fee fixed by the statute which is taxable as costs, but in addition to that, he may, by agreement with his client, charge an additional sum, but that has no reference to contingent contracts.

Mr. MCCOY. That is construed in New York to cover contingent fees.

Mr. HUGHES. Our courts have always recognized that a contingent fee which is not unconscionable would be enforced. The question sometimes is raised as to what is a conscionable fee.

Mr. HIGGINS. I understood Mr. R. D. Brown to bring out or testify that he was unable to pursue his case on behalf of his client because he could not make a contract with his client, and he indicated that it was forbidden by the law of the State of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the fact; have you a statute which forbids it?

Mr. HUGHES. We will submit the statute to the committee. I would not want totake issue with an attorney who has been a witness in the case, and I merely suggest that the value of his opinion on the law can better be determined by you by an examination of the statute. I would not want to appear to be commenting on his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Bates, you have had a great many cases in which you have represented plaintiffs in personal-injury and damage litigation.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, if this line of testimony is valuable at all it is as bearing upon Judge Hanford's attitude toward that class of cases, and I wish you would inform this committee what you know in respect to that, from your own experience and from your observation in his court room.

A. As I have stated, of late years the bulk of the civil business has been personal-injury cases and as I stated before I have represented about equally, about an equal amount for the defendant and for the plaintiff, a great many cases for the plaintiff, and Judge Hanford's attitude in those cases is, in my opinion, what a judge's attitude ought to be. He has given to both the plaintiff and the defendant, in my experience, a square deal.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. I want to ask one or two more questions.

Q. Mr. Bates, what would you say of the attitude of a judge who in a case where the plaintiff had presented his facts to the court showing that he had had his arm torn out in an accident and to whom the jury had awarded the sum of $12,000 damages after a trial, who should remark that that was three or four times what—or five times what he ought to have? I put that as a hypothetical question.—A. It would depend upon—the answer to that would depend upon all the circumstances and the testimony and everything surrounding the case.

Q. I assume that the testimony was sufficient to warrant the judge in allowing the case to go to the jury and that the only other question involved at the time was as to the amount of the verdict, and I will assume all the other things which go—on the question of damages which would go with an accident which would deprive a man of either of his arms from the shoulder down.—A. Well, I do not think that that is five times too much to allow a man for that injury.

Q. My question is what would you think of the judge's attitude toward that kind of a case who makes that sort of a remark?—A. Well, I think his attitude was that he thought the verdict was too large.

Q. And that is all you will say about a remark of that kind?—A. Well, I don't think—I don't know as I gather just exactly what you are getting at, but I think that the judge who would say that has the impression from all the circumstances surrounding the case, who heard the witnesses and had seen everything, that that verdict was too much, and he so expressed himself. There may have been things in the case that came up that would cause him to put it stronger than I would want to put it myself.

Q. Assuming that the man had a right, under the facts and the law, to recover a verdict against the defendant for an injury of that kind, what, in your judgment, else could there be in the case which would warrant that sort of remark?—A. I don't know anything.

Q. Well, you say it depends on what else there might have been in the case; that there might have been something else in the case; now assuming that he was entitled to recover damages, what sort of a thing else could there have been in the case which would warrant that kind of remark?—A. Oh, I don't know; if the only question that was left was the question of the amount I do not know that there would be anything else in the case that could warrant him.

Q. Now, I made that same assumption myself, that having recovered a verdict and there being no complaint about it because of the amount of it, that there could not be anything else in the case that could have any bearing but that one question as to the amount. Now, assuming these things as being the status of the matter at that time, what would you say of the attitude of the judge toward that kind of a case, or the plaintiff in that situation, who should remark that the verdict was three or four or five times too large, taking any one or all three of those figures?—A. Well, I would not think that his attitude was right.

The CHAIRMAN. The practice in that regard here, I assume, is for the attorneys on each side to submit propositions of law to the court as suggestions for instructions.

A. Yes.

Q. What is Judge Hanford's practice in that regard? Does he adopt the instructions submitted, either as submitted or as he modifies them, or does he give oral instructions of his own framing?—A. My observation has been that he takes the written instructions that are submitted by the attorneys, has them on the desk before him, instructs the jury orally, and then takes up these written instructions, parts of them, and reads them to the jury, or inlcudes in his oral instructions parts of the written instructions.

Q. Has the judge adopted the practice now common to the bar as I understand in the Federal court of requiring the attorneys to make exceptions then and there to such instructions or parts of instructions as they deem not to be the law or not applicable to the facts of the case?—A. That has been the practice, unless there is a stipulation by the attorneys, as there is sometimes, that they can be taken afterward.

Q. When there is no stipulation and no exception is taken to the instructions as given, is it usual for a court in passing on a motion for a new trial to pick out and make a basis for the granting of the new trial some error in the instructions to which exception was not taken?—A. No; it is not customary.

Q. Did you ever know it to be done?—A. I don't think I ever did.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Bates, I would like to ask you is the supreme court of the State your highest court of appeal?—A. Yes.

Q. From the trial court?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there any other intermediate appellate court?—A. No, sir.

Q. You go right from the trial court to the supreme court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is final?—A. Yes.

Q. In considering exceptions to a charge, does your supreme court take into consideration the charge as a whole and determine whether or not error has been committed on the whole charge, or does it pick out just a single slip in a charge and make the whole thing turn on that, although the slip is with reference to something that has previously been charged and charged correctly upon?—A. They take the instructions as a whole.

Q. And interpret them as a whole?—A. Yes.

Q. And do not they say that if on the whole the instructions fairly stated the law, there will be no reversal unless there is some error which has been what you might call a gross error and was almost bound to have affected the mind of the jury in some way?—A. That is the general attitude of the supreme court.

Q. That is the law of Washington, is it?—A. That is the general attitude of the supreme court of this State.

Mr. Hughes. Your reference to the practice before the supreme court has to do only with the reviews upon appeal after motions for new trial have been denied?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have, however, indicated that it is the duty of the trial court when considering a motion for a new trial to exercise its sound discretion in respect to all of those matters which they themselves would not review on appeal or a writ of error?—A. Oh, sure.

Mr. McCoy. Let me ask you about that. Do I understand you rightly that you say that the law as administered with reference to legal error in rulings by the trial court is a different law, having a different standard from that administered by the supreme court in the same case?

A. The trial court has a greater discretion. If the trial court has discovered that an error has been committed, the trial court, in my opinion, even if an exception had not been properly taken, could correct that error before it got to the supreme court, but after once the trial court has ruled and no exception has been taken to the ruling of the trial court the supreme court would not interfere—would not reverse——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). Perhaps I did not understand Mr. Hughes's question, but if I understood it rightly and your answer rightly, it was that where legal error in a charge is claimed by either side, it is viewed, or may be viewed, by the trial judge in one way for the purpose of a ruling, but after his ruling is made it would be viewed in a different way by the supreme court; or, in other words, that the trial court has more latitude in determining whether his charge is erroneous than the supreme court has; now, is that the case?

A. I think the trial court has got more latitude in this way; for instance, I can better illustrate that this way: In the superior court of Pierce County under our new practice act in regard to taking exceptions to the instructions the exceptions can be made at any time before the hearing of a motion for a new trial.

Mr. Higgins. Now, then——

The Witness. Now, let me come to that [continuing]. And they must be in writing and presented to the court before the hearing of the motion for the new trial. The superior judge there, after the motion for the new trial is made, or while it is being submitted, and an exception had not been taken to an instruction in writing in conformity with the statute, but the court held that that was proper, that he would give leave rather to the attorney to at that time file his written exceptions to the instructions.

Mr. McCoy. Surely, and that was a wise judge who would do that, but that is not the point at all——

The Witness. Now, then——

Mr. McCoy. I am assuming——

The Witness (continuing). Now, let me finish that, please. If that case then goes to the supreme court and this exception had not been taken, I do not think the supreme court would have any power, or would give the attorneys then leave to then take an exception to that instruction.

Q. I am assuming a case where the practice has been followed in the very strictest manner, where exceptions have been taken where they are usually taken, at the stage where they are usually taken.—A. Yes.

Q. I am taking a case where all exceptions have been taken and a motion for a new trial is made before the trial court.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, he rules on that motion one way or the other?—A. Yes.

Q. It goes to the supreme court; taken there by the defeated party. Now, would the supreme court apply the law from any different angle when it gets before the supreme court from the angle in which it was applied by the trial court? In other words, has the trial court any discretion in the matter which the supreme court has not got? In other words, would not they apply the law in just the same way as the trial court when an objection to the ruling is made?—A. They certainly would apply the law in the same way, but they have not got the discretion that the lower court has. The lower court has a discretion to correct the errors which would not be corrected in the supreme court had not the exception been taken in the lower court.

Q. I do not think that we get together. I guess that I do not make myself clear. Neither court can correct any error of the kind that I speak of. If the case has been submitted to a jury on instructions and the jury has brought in its verdict, who can correct an error in the charge? Nobody, except the supreme court or the trial court, by setting aside the verdict.—A. That is what I mean by correcting the error.

Q. Well, I did not. Do you mean correcting an error in the charge after the verdict is brought in?—A. You do not understand me. The matter submitted to the lower court on motion for new trial, which includes errors in instructions and errors occurring at the trial which have been excepted to—now, if the lower court should discover an instruction which had been given which was plainly erroneous, but no exception had been taken to it, I think the lower court has a right to give that party the benefit of taking an exception then and setting aside the verdict because of an erroneous instruction.

Mr. McCoy. We agree absolutely on that, but I was assuming a case where every exception possible was taken at the right time and there was no question of not taking an exception.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, nobody says he did not except.—A. No.

Q. Now, nobody wants to claim he did not except—he did except to everything.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, a motion comes up for a new trial, and the trial court denies it.—A. Yes.

Q. And you take an appeal to the supreme court?—A. Yes.

Q. Would the supreme court decide it exactly from the same point of view—that is, the question as to whether there should have been a new trial—as the trial judge?—A. Why, sure.

Q. That is what I wanted to find out.—A. Sure. They usually would say that the lower court, having heard the witnesses and seen them on the witness stand and matters of that kind, were better able to judge of the matter than they were.

Q. That is, as to the credibility of the witnesses?—A. Yes.

Q. I am not taking it on any of those aspects of the case, but simply on exceptions to the charges; that was all.—A. You say the exceptions had all been taken?

Q. Everything was taken.—A. I say they would pass on it in the same way.

Q. The supreme court always says that, so far as the credibility of the witness is concerned, the trial judge has a better chance to determine it than the supreme court.—A. Sure.

The Chairman. Under your practice and the law in this State, is the order of the trial court granting a new trial reviewable?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. That is the way you have to finally dispose of the case and determine whether to go into a new trial?

A. Yes.

Q. A man thinks "Why, here, if I could not have won this time, I can't win next time, and I will go to the supreme court if I get a new trial."—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Bates, if I gather the significance of the questions that have been propounded to you, it is whether a question of law arising on the weighing of an instruction to test the question whether it is legal, or the consideration of an exception to determine a purely legal question, that the determination of that legal question is the same in all courts?

A. Yes, sir; sure.

Q. And the method of determining it is the same in all courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you if it is not true in the practice of this State that the supreme court refuses to interfere with the action of the trial court in granting or refusing to grant a new trial unless upon the most manifest, well-established error?—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. And almost invariably refuses to review the action of the trial court in either granting or refusing to grant a new trial.—A. Almost—I didn't quite catch that.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Well, I would not say almost invariably; I would say generally.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I think you might go even a little farther.

Mr. MCCOY. May I ask a question right there, Mr. Hughes, on that point? I do not want to interrupt you, but I want to clear up this matter.

Q. Then, unless the error in a charge is manifestly an error and prejudicial, it does not lead to a reversal?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does not the same sort of thing apply when the motion is made to the trial court for error in a charge, practically?—A. Sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Has it not been established by the decisions of the supreme court of this State that the trial judge has full power to grant or refuse to grant a new trial on any ground which appeals to his discretion, and that that is not reviewable by the supreme court unless it is a plain abuse of discretion?—A. Why, sure.

Q. Mr. Bates, is it not the rule in this jurisdiction and established by the authorities generally, that it is not only the right but the duty of the trial court to grant a new trial for any error that in the judgment of the court has led to an erroneous verdict, whether excepted to or not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the decisions of the courts of this State and elsewhere, if the case is predicated upon a single act of negligence, and the court, by inadvertence or otherwise, has instructed the jury to the effect that they may return a verdict for the plaintiff for any negligence, when other acts have been claimed before the jury in the argument, that such an instruction is erroneous and prejudicially erroneous?—A. I don't think there is any question about that; if I understand you, if there is only one act of negligence pleaded in the complaint?

Q. Yes. Now, Mr. Bates, I apprehend that these inquiries have been propounded to you because of some reference which has been made in this case to the Melovich case. Were you present when the court ruled on the motion for the new trial in that case?—A. Well,

I don't know—I don't know it by that name. If it is the case that had some attention in the newspapers——

Q. The case prosecuted by Herbert Myers and defended by Kerr & McCord of Melovich against the Stone & Webster Engineering Co.—A. Yes, sir; my recollection is it was in one of the court rooms here, and I was waiting to take up a matter before Judge Hanford, and I heard part of his decision in that case.

Q. As a lawyer, did there appear to you to be anything unusual in that decision?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or ruling?—A. No, I could not say there was.

Q. Was the jury there—it might be inferred from some of the questions propounded that remarks said to have been made by the court were made in the presence of the jury?—A. Why, that was on motion day.

Q. That was not in the presence of the jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it not true that under our compensation act the amount fixed by statute in this State for the loss of an arm is $1,500?—A. Yes.

Q. And that compensation act was desired by the laboring classes generally—the employees of factories and mill companies and railroad companies?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not your compensation act an alternative act—that is, has not the plaintiff the right to sue at common law if he chooses?

Mr. PRESTON. It is compulsory and exclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. I could answer that question for you, but Mr. Preston is really the author of the act, and I think he can answer you correctly. I think he can do it so much better that I prefer that he should answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Preston, can you answer that?

Mr. PRESTON. It is compulsory and exclusive.

Mr. MCCOY. Does it apply to an action brought in the Federal court or moved into the Federal court?

Mr. PRESTON. It applies to any accident happening in the State of Washington after a certain date named after its passage.

Mr. MCCOY. Was it in force when Melovich brought his suit?

Mr. PRESTON. I do not know when he brought his suit. It was in force on the 1st day of November, 1911—no—it was in force in June, 1899, but it became operative as between employer and employee the 1st day of October, 1911; it did not apply to accidents which happened prior to its passage.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you know when the Melovich accident happened?

Mr. PRESTON. I do not.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think it was applicable to that case.

Mr. MCCOY. I would like to ask another question.

Mr. PRESTON. May I correct my answer? When I said it applied to every accident which happened in the State, I meant to exclude those that are outside of the jurisdiction of the State, such as in interstate commerce and on the high seas.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, we understood you to exempt such as those.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Bates, you say that the trial judge may at his discretion set aside a verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I don't think that you really mean to state that literally, do you?—A. Why, if in the exercise of his discretion he thinks the verdict should be set aside, he has the right to set it aside.

Q. Without regard, of course, to any legal rules?—A. No; I supposed, of course, you are referring to legal rules. If, after hearing the motion and hearing the argument, the judge is of the opinion that the verdict should not have been granted, or that error has been committed, he has the right to set the verdict aside.

Q. Well, if he finds that error has been committed, has he any right not to set it aside?—A. No; no legal right not to set it aside if he finds that error has been committed.

Q. Then it is not a matter of discretion at all, but it is a matter of law; if it is wrong it should be set aside and if it is right it should not be set aside?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, in answer to a question by Mr. Hughes, you said that the judge under the law of this State has a right to set aside a verdict whether the exception had been taken to certain error or not.—A. Yes.

Q. Suppose that at no stage of the trial or of the proceedings on the motion for new trial is the point raised by anyone that a certain thing in the way of a charge or what not was error; have you ever known of a judge to himself pick out something that nobody complained of at any stage, and make use of it himself?

Mr. HUGHES. If you desire it, we will submit to you the authorities as to what the courts have said on that subject.

Mr. MCCOY. I am asking Mr. Bates now.

A. I have known judges to—no; I don't know that I have ever known them to pick out an error that has been committed. I have known them to grant a new trial for reasons that have not been submitted by either counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they reasons that could not have been raised on appeal and therefore would not be cause for reversal in the appellate court?

A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you ever known the supreme court to pick out anything which the supreme court itself had said to be erroneous, but which none of the parties represented by their attorneys claimed to be erroneous, and set aside a judgment?

A. I do not recall now; there may have been, but I do not recollect now.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Bates, would the granting of a new trial because the verdict was excessive be a granting of it upon a question of law?

A. Well, it would be a little of mixed law and fact, I think; the law gives them the right to grant the new trial because the verdict was excessive; the fact that the verdict was excessive, of course, is a matter of fact.

Q. A matter of opinion or judgment of the court?—A. Judgment; yes, sir.

Q. And even our supreme court has done that, and in the Williamson case the question was not even raised by counsel, isn't that true? What I mean to say is, that the supreme court sets aside a verdict or reduces it or grants a new trial because it is excessive, just as the trial court does?—A. Yes, sir; there was a case against the Great Northern, if I remember right, in which they reduced the verdict where the question was not raised by anyone.

Mr. McCoy. Personal damage case?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the title of the case?—A. Somebody against the Great Northern road. It was a case where the verdict, my recollection is, was rendered for $30,000.

Q. Wasn't it argued on the briefs of the defendant that the verdict was excessive?—A. It never was raised until the question came up for rehearing before the supreme court.

Q. Then having reduced it there was a motion for a rehearing by the plaintiff and that was the first time that it was ever argued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the counsel for the defendant in that case?—A. Frank Graves, of Spokane, was counsel for the plaintiff—or Will Graves—I guess both of them probably, and Judge Gordon was for the Great Northern road.

Q. Do you remember what the nature of the accident was?—A. Yes.

Q. Just state it briefly.—A. It was—my recollection is that it was a mail clerk.

Q. Well, what happened to him?—A. Well, he was paralyzed, I think.

Mr. Hughes. While we were not trying the supreme court of this State, one question I want to propound to you is whether it was the practice in this State to grant new trials because the verdict is excessive, both by the trial court and by the supreme court?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. That is all.

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute. You mean to include in your own mind or in Mr. Hughes's question—where an objection has been made?

A. Well, I have given you the——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is, if it is the practice where nobody raises the point?—A. I have given you a case where they did it where nobody raised the point. It is the practice generally, of course, to raise the point.

Q. Is there any practice which you know of in this State about that sort of thing, where nobody makes the point?—A. I don't know that I can answer that any further than I have answered it.

Q. Well, in answering it in reply to Mr. Hughes's question you answered it categorically, "Yes, that there was such a practice."—A. Yes, sir; there is.

Q. And is the practice in the supreme court established by that one case?—A. I can't say that. I am just telling you what happened in one particular case that I know of.

Q. Then what do you mean when you say that it is the practice to do that kind of thing?—A. I mean that the supreme court or the State court, either one, can grant a new trial or reduce the verdict; can grant a new trial for an excessive verdict and they can reduce the verdict.

Q. You say they can?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that does not make the practice.—A. Why, it is the practice to do it.

Q. Now, are you considering it, when you use the word "practice" as you and I know it as lawyers, technically, are you using it as being synonymous with the word "custom"? I see that we do not get together on that.—A. I know what I intend to say is this: If the verdict in the opinion of the lower court is excessive it is their practice to either grant a new trial or reduce the verdict. If the verdict in the opinion of the supreme court is excessive, it is their practice to either grant a new trial or reduce the verdict.

Q. Now, then, Mr. Bates, you used the word "practice" twice there; do you mean that it is customary?—A. The custom or the practice—I used as synonymous terms.

Q. Of course we know that the word "practice" is used in reference to rules and regulations and proceeding?—A. No; I don't mean it that way; I mean that they do it; that it is their custom.

Q. Their custom?—A. Their custom to do it.

Q. Now, is it the custom of either of those courts to do that sort of thing without first having had attention called to the alleged excessiveness, and being urged to make a reduction?—A. I would not say that it was the custom.

JAMES M. ASHTON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name to the committee.

A. James M. Ashton.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. About 30 years.

Q. What is your profession?—A. A lawyer.

Q. How long have you been practicing your profession?—A. A little over 30 years.

Q. Are you still in the active practice of the law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you alone or a member of a firm?—A. Well, I am counsel for a firm. A year ago last January I made an effort to retire from business.

Q. Make it brief, please.—A. (Continuing.) And to quit the practice, but I have not succeeded very well, and I am counsel for the firm.

Q. What firm?—A. Huffer, Hayden & Hamilton.

Q. What does it mean when you say that you are counsel for the firm—are you a member of it or not?—A. Not technically a member, but I am active in the business of the firm.

Q. Do you mean that certain business of that firm is referred to you for consultation and advice?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you practice in the Federal courts?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have done so?—A. Yes.

Q. In Seattle as well as Tacoma?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you acquainted wuth Judge Hanford?—A. I am.

Q. How long?—A. Since 1882—30 years.

Q. What are your relations with the judge?—A. Why, I know him well as a judge.

Q. Anything but professional relations?—A. None whatever.

Q. Any social relationship?—A. No, except I know him real well.

Q. Has he visited your home and you his?—A. Yes, I have been at the judge's home I think once.

Q. And he at yours?—A. Probably once in the 30 years' time.

Q. Outside of your professional work, to what extent have you associated with the judge?—A. Well, not a great deal. Judge Hanford's home is here in Seattle and mine is in Tacoma. Several years ago I used to move about the State a good deal with Judge Hanford and then, of course, I saw more of him socially.

Q. How many years ago?—A. Sixteen—well, 15 or 16 years ago.

Q. Does he and you belong to any organization where you meet?—A. No—what do you mean, Mr. Graham, by organization?

Q. Well, any club—I do not care for your society connections, I do not mean that.—A. Well, I am a nonresident member of the Rainier Club in Seattle and also a member of the Union Club in Tacoma.

Q. And is he a member of the Union Club?—A. I believe he is an honorary member, I would not be sure; I think all the judges are honorary members of our club in Tacoma.

Q. Have you sometimes met him at either or both of those club rooms?—A. Well, I have not met him very much at either club; I have met him occasionally; I am not in the Rainier Club more than once every two or three months, and then only for lunch.

Q. Have you been before Judge Hanford when he was on the bench a great deal?—A. Yes, sir; considerable.

Q. Covering what period of time?—A. Oh, from the time of Judge Hanford's appointment at the organization of the State, down to the present time.

Q. You have observed his manner of presiding during the trial of court proceedings?—A. I have.

Q. Have you at any time noticed him when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant while on the bench?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you at any time noticed him acting so that a person who was a stranger to him might think that he was, or might have reason to think that he was?—A. No. I never noticed him so that a stranger might have reason to think that he was under the influence of an intoxicant, but I have noticed him so that a stranger might think that he was short of rest or sleep, or something of that kind.

Q. Did you notice him that way frequently, or seldom?—A. Seldom.

Q. Give the committee some idea of the number of times or some unit of time.—A. I didn't hear the last part of your question.

Q. I say, can you give them some idea as to some unit of time, such as a year or a month, or any unit that you wish—give the committee some idea as to the frequency of the times you have seen him when he seemed to be lacking rest.—A. Well, probably once every two months or three months.

Q. Did you ever see the judge drinking any intoxicants?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him drink.

Q. Where?—A. Why, I have seen the judge take a cocktail at the Rainier Club.

Q. How often?—A. Well, not more than twice.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink elsewhere?—A. I have seen the judge take a drink once in the Tacoma Hotel in Tacoma.

Q. What?—A. A cocktail, I believe, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Have you seen him drink at other times and places?—A. No; I have been at one or two banquets with the judge and I have seen him take a moderate glass of wine.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when, in your judgment, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never have in my life.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to ask him any further questions?

Mr. DORR. Have you ever seen him on the bench, Mr. Ashton, when he was apparently incapacitated to attend to the court's business?

A. Never.

Q. During your attendance upon Judge Hanford's court, when you have been present, have you ever seen him in any condition in which, in your judgment, he did not appreciate what was being done?—A. I never have. I will say this, Mr. Dorr, and I think it is due to Judge Hanford to say it, that I have known him to drop his head and have his eyes closed when I have been making an argument to him; I have known this to happen more than once, and I have had him raise his head and open his eyes and put questions to me in connection with my argument that were the crux of the points I was discussing.

Q. Which indicated what, in your opinion?—A. Indicated to my mind that he was listening to every word I was saying although apparently asleep. That was his manner.

Q. How extensive did you practice in his court, Mr. Ashton, when you were engaged in the general practice, the active practice?—A. Well, more so than any other court. Constantly from 1889 down to say 1900, and a great deal of the time since then.

Q. If I understand you correctly it was about a year ago that you concluded to retire from actual practice?—A. A year ago last January.

Q. What has been Judge Hanford's method of ruling upon questions which were presented to him in the course of trials when you were present—his manner and method?—A. Well, his manner has been thoughtful, judicial, logical, the way it appealed to me, and just.

Q. Have you engaged in the trial of injury cases before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe his rulings on the objections to the evidence that was offered during the course of the trial?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Will you explain to the commission or the committee the judge's manner in making these rulings.—A. Well, as I stated, the same as most any other ruling; although, of course, in the trial of a case when objections are raised and exceptions reserved and so on, the court naturally does not have the time to consider—the same length of time that the judge has on a motion for new trial or things of that character; but his ruling has always been thoughtful, in my judgment, according to the best dictates of his own conscience and mentality.

Q. Have you had any practice in the way of admiralty or maritime litigation before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it much or little?—A. Well, a very large amount, for the last 15 or 16 years I have been heavily engaged in admiralty business; in fact, for 20 years I have been heavily engaged in it, but for the last 15 or 16 years it has taken two-thirds of my time.

Q. In those cases, I understand there is no jury.—A. No jury.

Q. It is all tried before the court?—A. Yes.

Q. What has been the judge's attitude in those admiralty cases which you have tried in his court, as to attention?—A. Well, he has been very attentive, and what I have noticed about Judge Hanford in admiralty cases more than most anything else is that he is very painstaking. Now, in admiralty cases, as you gentlemen of the committee probably know, everything is taken down by a commissioner and reported to the court. And many times, particularly in large collision cases and large salvage cases, the evidence becomes very voluminous, and I have never known a case but what Judge Hanford reads every word of the testimony, and it has been a matter of amazement and wonder to me how he has ever been able to do so during those years, with the great pressure of work—he certainly reads every word of it. Sometimes we have in these heavy admiralty cases two or three volumes of typewritten matter of many thousand pages; he is very careful that way in reading and considering it.

Q. In those admiralty cases, Mr. Ashton, has there been involved claims for salvage on the part of sailors and members of the crew of various ships?—A. A great deal of that.

Q. What has been Judge Hanford's attitude in respect to those claims, so far as your personal observation and so far as you have had experience?—A. Well, Judge Hanford has been very fair; in fact, tried to be fair to all sides, both the members of the crew, the officers of the ship, and the owners of the vessel. I have often thought, and I consider that Judge Hanford, if he is to be criticized at all in that regard, it is for too great liberality to members of the crew in cases of salvage services.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean in allowing them their awards for their hardships and their courage and their efforts in saving whatever was being salved at the time.

Q. Did you further mention that that has been his practice in those cases which you happen to have been a participant in with respect to the crew?—A. Yes; the judge is liberal to sailors in salvage cases.

Q. Have there been any personal injuries involved in any of those admiralty cases which you tried before his court?—A. Yes, sir; there have been some.

Q. What has been the judge's attitude with respect to the members of the crew who have suffered personal injuries?—A. Why, he has always been fair and just, if those personal injuries are sustained in connection with salvage services he is generally very liberal—even more so than usual.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. You say, Mr. Ashton, that the testimony is always taken by a commissioner in the admiralty cases?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the commissioner report his conclusions or just the testimony?—A. Just the testimony.

Q. Sometimes they report conclusions?—A. No, he never reports conclusions; not in my experience. Well, counsel can sometimes stipulate; that is, the advocates and proctors in admiralty cases can stipulate to have the commissioner do that at times, but that is really done, except when some extensive mathematical computations are to be made, you know; some complicated affair in connection with insurance.

Mr. McCoy. Is it not the usual thing for judges to decide salvage cases, and to make liberal allowances for the sailors?

A. Well, I don't know as it is usual, Mr. McCoy; it depends on what the sailors do.

Q. And does not that apply in Judge Hanford's case—that it depends on what they do as to how much they get?—A. Yes.

Q. And you do not want the committee to understand that you are prepared to say that Judge Hanford is unusually liberal to sailors in salvage cases, as compared with all the other judges who decide admiralty cases?—A. Well, I believe he goes a little farther than most of the other judges.

Q. What makes you think so?—A. Just from my general reading of the salvage cases in the books in the other districts, and so on. I may be wrong in that, but I think the judge goes a good ways, and I believe in giving the sailor a good allowance, too, when he has worked hard; he is entitled to it.

Mr. McCoy. All the judges do it in my experience. Now, you say you gather that from reading other admiralty cases in which salvage questions are involved; what do you mean, reading them in the Federal Reporter or some other reports?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, you do not get anything in those reports which gives you any very definite information as to what the sailors did who got the allowances.—A. Except as the opinion reviews and discusses their actions.

Q. It does not go into it in detail particularly; in other words, they do not elaborate the evidence in the opinions in salvage cases to any great extent.—A. No, not as a rule; they refer to the conduct and efforts of the crew, of the individual sailors, of course in more or less general terms, say, in a general way what he did.

Q. I should gather, Mr. Ashton, from your testimony, that your practice has been principally in admiralty cases during the last few years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you president of any bank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or director?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a director or stockholder of any railroad?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you attorney for any bank, or is your firm?—A. No, they are not.

Q. Are you attorney for any railroad?—A. No.

Q. Is your firm acting for any railroad with a retainer?—A. No.

Q. Are you the head of what is known as the Ashton Syndicate?—A. What is the Ashton Syndicate; I have never heard of it?

Q. You never heard that phrase used?—A. I have heard the phrase used in connection with the ownership of tidelands over in Tacoma.

Q. What is your connection with the ownership of those tidelands; is it a corporation?—A. I am trustee, but not for any corporation; I am trustee for some people who own them.

Q. Have you any personal interest in the land in any way?—A. Except as trustee.

Q. You have no financial interest in them at all?—A. Well, I have a contract in connection with my trusteeship which might give me a right to participate in the profits that are made out of the property, provided I do my duty properly as a lawyer and trustee.

Q. What is the property, what is the nature of it, and how extensive is it?—A. It involves about 34 blocks of tidelands.

Q. In the city of Tacoma?—A. No, it is on Tacoma Harbor, outside of the city.

Q. You speak of tidelands; when you speak of tidelands you mean tidelands which have the possibility of dockage, don't you?—A. No, sir, I do not, Mr. McCoy; I mean land that is covered by the ebb and flow of the tide.

Q. How far does your ownership carry you?—A. How do you mean?

Q. Does it carry any water rights with it?—A. Why yes, it carries water rights along the deep-water line; it carries the right to build piers and wharves.

Q. How much frontage is there on your property?—A. I should judge about 5,000 feet, or something like that.

Q. Who are the persons for whom you are acting as trustee or the corporations?—A. The persons for whom I am acting are chiefly in New York and San Francisco; they are not corporations.

Q. Who are the individuals—let me ask you another question first—is this agreement or whatever the instrument is a matter of record anywhere?—A. No.

Q. Who are the other people who are interested in that?—A. Why, they are—I don't know as it is necessary—do you think that I ought to answer that question, Mr. McCoy, if it goes into business affairs of a personal nature?

Q. Well, of course, I am reluctant, Mr. Ashton; I can tell you better if I know who they were as to whether I will ask you the next question. In other words, I have no desire to indulge in any pertinent inquiry into your private affairs.—A. Well, they are not railroads nor railroad companies.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do they in any way, so far as you know, bear any relation in their family, or business, or personal, or in any other way with Judge Hanford or any of his family?

A. They do not; they have absolutely nothing to do with him, and I am confident they do not know him.

Q. Has he himself, either directly or indirectly, any business interest or association with you either in the tideland or in any other commercial or business enterprise?—A. He has not; absolutely none.

Q. Has he ever had?—A. No. Wait a moment, Mr. Higgins. I at one time bought some stock in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. and maybe the judge had some interest in that; that was some years ago.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. Oh, that was—I don't know—it must have been 8 or 9 or 10 years ago when that company was formed, and I just took a small block of stock.

Q. That corporation was formed under the laws of what State?—A. Oh, I could not tell you; I did not form it; I did not have much to do with it; I think it was Washington.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Are you able to give the committee the information as to whether the corporate organization still continues—"The Hanford Irrigation & Power Co."?

A. Well, that I do not know; I really do not know. I paid very very little attention to it in recent years.

Q. Are you still a stockholder in the company?—A. No; I turned my stock over to some other people I understood were taking it over when the reorganization took place.

Q. Who was it you sold it to?—A. Well, I transferred my stock to a Mr. Mitchell.

Q. You don't know who bought it?—A. Mr. Mitchell bought it from me.

Q. Who was he representing?—A. Well, I don't know.

Q. Who owns and operates that property now?—A. Well, I don't know that; I paid no attention to it in recent years.

Q. Where is it located?—A. Its physical properties are over on the Columbia River, near the town which was named after Judge Hanford, the town of Hanford; and they have a hydroelectric plant there at Priests Rapids, a power line.

Q. What was the general purpose and object of the corporation?—A. Its purpose and object was to harness the powers in Priest Rapids of the Columbia River so as to furnish light, power, and heat to all that region of central Washington and help to develop that part of the State.

Q. Did they do that?—A. Yes, to a considerable extent.

Q. You were a member of the corporation from its organization and subscribed to the original articles of the corporation?—A. No, sir.

Q. How soon after its organization did you become a member?—A. Well, I could not tell you with precision, but I know in its very early stages.

Q. And you continued to be a stockholder?—A. Yes, sir; I took a very small block of the stock, I think it was only 10 or 20 shares, or something like that, and held them down until I turned them over to Mr. Mitchell.

Q. How long a time was that that you had them before you turned them over to Mr. Mitchell?—A. Well, I turned it over to Mitchell I guess about five years ago—four or five years ago.

Q. From the time Mr. Mitchell got it, or when your stock was turned over to Mitchell, the management and control of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. changed?—A. I understood that it changed; I would not now like to state who handled it, because I do not know with sufficient precision, but there was a general rumor then that it was being reorganized and some other people were buying large interests.

Q. Can not you tell the committee, Mr. Ashton, who purchased that at that time, what corporation or organization or individual or association?—A. Well, I really can not. All that I know is that I transferred it to Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. McCoy. You say the properties of the Hanford Power & Irrigation, or is it the Hanford Irrigation & Power?

A. I think the name was the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.

Q. You say that their properties were at some place named Hanford, or thereabouts?—A. Or thereabouts, yes, sir; the main properties, I think, were up the river from Hanford.

Q. And was the town of Hanford named after Judge Hanford?—A. I understand so.

Q. And the company was named after him?—A. I think so; I am not sure as to that; I think so.

Q. Who asked you to buy the stock which you bought?—A. Well, I could not remember that; really I do not know.

Q. What did you pay for it, do you remember?—A. I think we paid par for it and I think it came this way, Mr. McCoy, that to add to the general development, that a right to buy the land was taken, and then the shares of stock were measured in some way according to that right.

Q. The shares carried with them the right——A. I think so.

Q. To take some of the property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do not you remember who first spoke to you about buying that stock or taking an interest in the matter?—A. I do not remember. I know it was not Judge Hanford, if that is what you are driving at, because I first heard of it over in Tacoma, and if I remember right, Mr. McCoy, that it was a man named William Jones that spoke to me about going into that, but as to that I am not positive.

Q. Do you remember anything that Jones said to you; do you remember anything that the man, whoever it was that brought your attention to it, said to you to get you to go into it?—A. No; I do not remember what was said.

Q. Well, what was that that controlled your decision in regard to taking the stock; why did you take it?—A. Well, I think that I thought, I guess, I had a chance to make some money.

Q. Did you look into the project in any way before you put in your money?—A. Yes, I inquired. I remember talking with Mr. Jones; whether or not he invited me to subscribe or not, I could not say, but I remember talking with Mr. Jones and reaching the conclusion that it was a good proposition. You see, Mr. McCoy, I am an old resident of the State and in the Territory before the State; I have ridden on horseback over all that region years ago and I knew Priest Rapids in a general way and I often thought what a grand thing it would be, you know, to develop them.

Q. Well, did the fact that Judge Hanford's name was connected with it in any way influence you?—A. Oh, not in the least.

Q. Had the company at that time bought any property, any real estate?—A. Why, I understood that they had a number of sections of land at and about Hanford and had also secured or were securing the right of way for their ditch to conduct the water from just above the rapids down to the power house and that they had secured the property located at the intake at Priest Rapids.

Q. In regard to those tidelands down there in Tacoma, are they involved in any litigation of any kind; is the title to them or the right of possession of them or anything of that kind in litigation; is there or has there been any litigation in regard to that?—A. There is no litigation now; there was litigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ashton, you stated awhile ago, as I recall it, that you, as trustee, would have an interest in these tide flat lands if you performed your duty as an attorney successfully. Was that about what you said?

A. Well, I mean, Mr. Graham, by that, this: That if I administered my—earned my money or earned my fee, I guess that I would have an interest, but my fee, I guess, will not be paid until the land is improved, and so——

Q. (Interrupting.) You also stated that some at least of the holders or the proposed holders of interests in that land lived in the East, out of this State.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that it has been in court at sometime in the past. What court?—A. It was in the United States court.

Q. Judge Hanford's court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has any final determination of the matter been reached?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any other phase of it yet to be litigated?—A. None whatever; it is disposed of in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Q. Judge Hanford tried it in the lower court?—A. Yes, sir; it was heard before Judge Hanford.

Q. When was that?—A. 1908.

Q. Was the decision favorable to you and your colleagues?—A. It was favorable to the State of Washington and in that way favorable to myself and my colleagues, as grantees of the State.

Q. Did the Supreme Court of the United States in any way modify the decision or opinion of the trial court?—A. It did not.

Q. And that litigation is now completed?—A. Disposed of, remittitur is down from the Supreme Court and all time for further action in the way of a rehearing or otherwise has long passed.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you say that the Supreme Court affirmed Judge Hanford's decision in that case?

A. Well, it went off in the Supreme Court of the United States on the question of jurisdiction.

Q. What were the issues, briefly, raised in the case?—A. Briefly, the issue was whether or not the United States could dispose of the shore of the United States to Indian tribes of the United States and thereby fail to carry out its trust to the future States of holding the shore between the meander line and deep water in trust for the future States.

Q. Had you an interest in those tidelands before that litigation was instituted?—A. Had I an interest?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; the same as I have stated.

Q. The same as you have now?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you appear as attorney in the case?—A. Oh, yes; I appeared as attorney in the case and I appeared as party in it.

Q. What was the title of the case?—A. Why, it was the case of—a number of Indian names.

Q. Can you give us the volume of the Supreme Court Reporter in which it is reported?—A. No; I can not do it now.

Q. Can you furnish it to the committee?—A. Yes; I can get it.

Q. Sometime to-day?—A. Yes; can give you the Federal Reporter decision, and also you will find it in the Supreme Court Reporter, where it was simply dismissed without jurisdiction. It was not the ordinary dismissal. The court went into it with a few lines and cited some cases of the Supreme Court of the United States—I will look that up for you.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will insert that information when they get it in this connection at this place.

Whereupon a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess.
All parties present as at former hearings.

WILLIAM H. PUMPHREY, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name?
A. William H. Pumphrey.
Q. P-o-m-——A. P-u-m-p-h-r-e-y.
Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Pumphrey?—A. Across the bay, in Kitsap County.
Q. How far from the city of Seattle?—A. About 10 miles.
Q. How long have you lived in this vicinity?—A. Forty-two years.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Well, I am out there on a little place just at present.
Q. A farm?—A. Well, I don't know whether you would call it a farm or what would you call it. I call it place.
Q. A country home?—A. A country home.
Q. Are you engaged in any occupation?—A. No. My son is in the chicken business. I am living with him.
Q. What has your business been?—A. I was in the book and stationery business in Seattle for 30 years.
Q. Do you remember a trial in the Federal court in which Judge Hanford presided a few years ago, where one Holt was defendant, charged with homicide?—A. I do.
Q. You were on the regular panel during that term of court, were you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you serve on that jury?—A. I did.
Q. How are the jurors selected for this service?—A. I guess they are drawn regularly every time. I was subpœnaed, or whatever you call it, to appear here for the—I think it is called the November term, or January, I don't know what it is. It was in December.
Q. Who were the attorneys on the respective sides of that case?—A. Mr. Todd was the United States attorney—Elmer E., I think is his name, and Mr. Caldwell, assisted by Mr. Revelle, was for the defense.
Q. When did you learn that you would be required as a witness here?—A. At this——
Q. (Interrupting.) Now.—A. Why, yesterday evening.
Q. Had you any conversation with anyone as to what you were to come about?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you talked with anyone yet about that?—A. No, nobody connected with the case.
Q. Sir?—A. Nobody interested in the case at all.
Q. Well, I didn't quite mean that, but have you talked with anyone up to this time as to what you were to give testimony about?—A. No.
Q. Nobody?—A. No, sir. What I know myself.
Q. How long did that trial last?—A. Why, I could not say positively; it was something over a week, I think, that we were in the jury box and on the jury after we were instructed, I think it was something over a week; I am not positive.

Q. Do you recall any occasion during that trial when Judge Hanford while on the bench seemed to be nodding or napping or sleeping?—A. I don't. Judge Hanford has a way of closing his eyes sometimes, but he is not always asleep, I think, when his eyes are closed.

Q. Does he appear to be?—A. No, just—I would take it that the man was concentrating, that is all, from the way he acts.

Q. Do you recall any instance or occasion during that trial when one of the attorneys made an objection to the introduction of some evidence and some little time elapsed before the judge noticed the objection?—A. I do not.

Q. Or made any ruling upon it?—A. I do not.

Q. If such a thing occurred, it escaped your observation?—A. If it did, yes, sir.

Q. Was it in this court room the case was tried?—A. Well, I don't know. I think there is a resemblance between the court rooms in this building and I can't—I think this is the room; if so, the jury sat here, but I have forgotten what seat.

Q. Where did you sit, if it was this room and that jury box?—A. Well, I think I was on that back row of seats there, but which one I don't know.

Q. Afterwards, I believe, when you came to consider of the verdict—— A. (Interrupting.) Now hold on a moment, please, strike that out. That Holt business, I think that went to the jury in the old building, did it not?

Q. Well, just give your best recollection of it.—A. Well——.

Q. But let what has been stated stand in the record.—A. Well, I think that went to the jury in the old Federal building down here.

Q. I don't know.—A. Well——

Q. Just give your best recollection of it.—A. Well, I think that is where it went to the jury, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, was the situation there the same, relatively, as this is?—A. Exactly the same.

Q. In regard to the bench and the jury box?—A. Yes, yes.

Q. The attorneys sat at a table in front of the judge's bench, as they are located here now, did they?—A. Yes, sir; the judge was on our left as we looked from the jury box, and the attorneys were in front of us.

Q. Immediately in front of you——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Where you sat?—A. Yes; just the same as they are here in this room.

Q. To what extent during that trial did the judge assume the attitude which you have referred to when one might think he was asleep?—A. Oh, only occasionally.

Q. What was the position of his head at those times, back against the chair, as mine is now, or was it forward on his chest or toward the chest?—A. Well, sometimes it would be forward. The judge has a habit of pulling at his whiskers, plucking at them, like this, and he would do that frequently.

Q. Yes. I am not asking now about his habits, but about what actually took place then. I don't care to have you answer according to what you think his habit is, but if you recall, I want to know what he did then.—A. Well, I can't recall.

Q. Well, on any of the occasions during that trial, did you notice him when he was in the condition you have referred to? Was his head leaned forward or backward, or was it erect?—A. Oh, it was—sometimes his head there would be back on the back of the chair and then at other times his head might have been dropping a little.

Q. When you say "might have been," do you mean it is your recollection it was?—A. Well, yes.

Q. How long at a time would he continue in that attitude?—A. Not long.

Q. Make that answer more specific, if you can.—A. Well, I can't.

Q. Well, would it be five seconds or a minute?—A. Well, I don't know——

Q. (Interrupting.) Or 20 minutes?—A. I was not keeping time on the judge, of course.

Q. I know; but if you observed it at all you must have a recollection?—A. No; I would not undertake to say——

Q. (Continuing.) As to whether it was a short time or several minutes?—A. I would not say whether it was a minute or two minutes or 10 minutes or a half a second.

Q. Because you did not observe that closely; was that the reason?—A. No.

Q. Why?—A. I was not interested in that portion of it. There was not a day when I was on the jury box that I thought the judge was asleep, and consequently I paid no attention.

Q. You were giving your attention mainly to the questions of the lawyers and the answers of the witnesses?—A. Yes; that is what we were there for.

Q. Quite so, quite so. Have you seen Judge Hanford elsewhere than in court?—A. When?

Q. At any time.—A. Yes; often meet him. I just came up in the elevator with him.

Q. But prior to to-day?—A. I have not seen——

Q. (Continuing.) Have you been with him——A. (Interrupting.) I have not seen Judge Hanford, to speak to him I was going to say, since the Holt trial, but probably I have, maybe once or twice.

Q. Well, if you did, it did not impress itself on your recollection.—A. No, no; if I did, it was just casually meeting.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge, or been with him here in the city in the night time?—A. Yes, I have seen the judge at a good many social functions.

Q. Have you at any other place, in the night time, here in the city?—A. No; I think I met the judge at the Rainier Club one night several years ago.

Q. Are you a member of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were just a guest then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On one occasion only?—A. I think so.

Q. Have you seen the judge drinking any intoxicating drinks?—A. Well, I have seen the judge take a drink, but what he drank I don't know—whether intoxicating or not.

Q. Where was it?—A. Oh, I could not recall. I have seen him take a drink at social functions—drink wine or punch, or anything there, just the same as the rest of us.

Q. Well, if wine or punch, you have an opinion as to whether it was intoxicating?—A. Well, there are punches and punches.

Q. Sir?—A. There are punches and punches.

Q. Yes. Jim Flinn can prove that. Well, when you spoke of punch I suppose you meant punch made from whisky.—A. Well, not necessarily.

Q. Well, did you?—A. Well, I don't remember what the punches were made of. Oftentimes they have claret punch.

Q. Very well. You say you don't know. That settles it.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, do you desire to ask the witness further?

Mr. DORR. Just a few questions.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Pumphrey, when the Holt trial was held, were you on any other cases, or was that the only one?—A. No; I was on some other cases during the term.

Q. How long were you in attendance on Judge Hanford's court as a juror at that time?—A. Why, I think we were subpœnaed to meet here on a certain day in December and I think it was nearly the first of March before we were discharged.

Q. That is, on the regular panel.—A. Yes; on the regular panel.

Q. Then I infer from that that you sat in a number of other cases as a juror?—A. Yes, there were some other cases.

Q. What position in the jury, in the Holt case, did you occupy if any other than an ordinary juror?—A. I was elected foreman of the jury after we got our instructions and retired.

Q. Yes. How long was the jury out in that case, if you remember?—A. Well, I could not be certain on that, but I think that we went out in the forenoon and we did not get back in—we didn't come to a verdict until the next afternoon, the afternoon of the next day.

Q. You would be out all of one night then?—A. Yes; we were out all of one night.

Q. And practically two days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?—A. Why, to the best of my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember of any instance, either in the Holt trial or in any other trial where you were attending court as a juror, when Judge Hanford was presiding on the bench, of ever seeing him in a state of intoxication on the bench?—A. I do not. I never have seen him that way.

Q. Or in any condition that led you to believe that he was intoxicated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him intoxicated off the bench?—A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Have you ever seen him intoxicated at any time?—A. I never have.

Q. How long did you live in the city of Seattle?—A. I came to Seattle in the fall of 1870 and I moved over where I am in May, 1901.

Q. That is, over onto the small———A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Ranch?—A. Yes.

Q. Until you moved away from Seattle, what was your business here?—A. I was in the book and stationery business up to within about eight years before I left town, and then I was route agent for the Northern Express Co.

Q. How many years were you engaged in the stationery business in this city?—A. Why, I think in the neighborhood of 30; between 25 and 30.

Q. And during all that time had you known Judge Hanford?—A. I have known him ever since he came to Seattle.

Q. Who was here first, he or you?—A. Well, I don't know. I came here in 1869. I don't know when the judge came. I came here in the spring of 1869. The judge's father and mother lived here at that time, but I don't know whether he was here or off at school. That I can't remember.

Q. But the family were here?—A. Yes; the family were here.

Q. Before you?—A. Yes; when I came here.

Witness excused.

W. H. BOLEN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. McCOY. What is your full name?

A. W. H. Bolen.

Q. Are you here under subpœna, Mr. Bolen?—A. I am. I have it here.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Sorrento Hotel.

Q. That is in Seattle?—A. Seattle, Wash.

Q. And are you an attorney?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Seven years.

Q. Do you know a man named Bennett, who testified at this hearing here the other day?—A. Well, I was informed that that was his name. I didn't know him at the time I had——

Mr. McCOY (interrupting). Will you stand up, Mr. Bennett?

A man stood in the audience.

The WITNESS. Yes; that is the gentleman.

Mr. McCOY. Is that the man?

A. That is the gentleman.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him about Judge Hanford?—A. I did.

Q. When was it?—A. It was June 29, which was Saturday, about between 7 and 8 o'clock.

A. Where was it?—A. Washington Annex Hotel, Seattle.

Q. You may state the conversation in your own way.—A. I just—it has been my custom recently to eat dinners at that hotel. I had been in the habit of living there—I lived there for 18 months. I was up there on that particular evening and just got through dinner; sat down in the lobby of the hotel near the window. Mr. Bennett was then seated at the window. Mr. Perry passed through the lobby and stopped at the cigar counter to purchase a cigar, I believe.

Q. What Perry?—A. John H. Perry, attorney. Mr. Bennett then turned to me—he was an absolute stranger to me and I to him—and said, "I wonder where Mr. Perry—John Perry—is going to hang his shingle out after this investigation is over." I said, "That's a strange thing; I was going to ask Perry that question myself." Well, there were two other gentlemen there; Mr. Desmond was seated on my right; so we entered a general conversation about the Hanford investigation, and the subject of our conversation was in reference to the line of testimony that was given last week by the various witnesses on Judge Hanford's drunkenness or alleged drunkenness. So Mr. Bennett asked me what particular bearing the fact of Mr. Hanford being drunk would have on this investigation toward his impeachment. I said, "I understand the purpose of the testimony with reference to drunkenness was to connect up, as an incident or circumstance, his general line of misconduct, if any, and if his drunkenness in any way affected his judicial decisions or his work on the bench, why, that would be taken by the judicial committee—the congressional committee—as a circumstance toward his impeachment." Well, he said, "I can't see myself where the fact of a man being drunk would have anything to do with the case." He says, "I have personally myself seen Judge Hanford drunk not once, but a dozen times, and have ridden on the trains with him; sat very near him in the car."

Q. When he was in that condition?—A. When he was in that condition. And our conversation went off on the question of circumstance and circumstantial evidence and so on, and I gave some curbstone opinions to him about circumstantial evidence.

Q. Well, who else was present at the time he made that statement to you?—A. When he made that statement, Mr. Desmond, who is likewise an attorney practicing law here—called to the hotel to see me that evening; we had an engagement; that was our meeting place—be overheard Mr. Bennett's query to me as to where Mr. John H. Perry was going to hang his shingle out when this investigation was through, but as to the other matters his attention was attracted by a conversation of the gentleman on his right and he paid no particular attention to it, I understand from him.

Q. Well, did Mr. Bennett's method of giving you this information make it appear that it was a josh?—A. Why, no, the man was very loquacious, he had probably had a good dinner, and he was smoking a cigar, and he was in the mental attitude of carrying on a conversation; and I was a total stranger to him, and he voluntarily advanced the information. In fact he wished to engage me in conversation about this inquiry.

Mr. McCoy. Has the stenographer Mr. Bennett's testimony here? I would like to see it for a minute.

The testimony was handed to Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. Now, at the time this conversation took place, were there a number of traveling men—traveling salesmen sitting there by you?

A. No; he was the only traveling salesman. I at the time didn't know he was a traveling salesman, but he was the only one there at that time. Shortly after the conversation got to the point of circumstantial evidence, which was somewhat later than his statement to me about Judge Hanford's condition, why, another elderly gentleman who travels for—I don't know, but he sells in this territory trunks and grips and so on—came into the hotel from the street, and he is a gray haired gentleman, and I got up and gave him my seat beside Mr. Bennett, and I went to another portion of the lobby and got a straight-back chair and brought it up in the circle; that made five, that made Mr. Desmond and myself and Mr. Bell—this gentleman

I now speak of—and Mr. Bennett; and they were the only—we five were the only persons present until I left the hotel.

Mr. McCoy. Well, now, at any time while the five whom you have mentioned were present, did Mr. Bennett repeat what he had said to you in regard to Judge Hanford's alleged intoxication?

A. No; he merely made that statement, and I didn't care to discuss the matter, and we went off, as I say, on various lines. I believe Mr. Bennett cited some case with reference to circumstantial evidence and auto suggestion, and so on, and then we went off discussing Hugo Munsterberg work on psycholoy on the witness stand, and then it simmered down until I left with Mr. Desmond.

Q. Do you know any man named Hitchcraft?—A. I don't. I never heard the name; never knew anybody by that name.

Q. Was there any such man there present at the time the conversation took place?—A. Not to my knowledge; no, sir. The gray haired gentleman, his name—Mr. Hitchcraft, or whatever you mention—he didn't appear until I, say, at least five or possibly ten minutes after our conversation in reference to the Judge Hanford inquiry.

Q. And did I ask you whether or not you repeated this conversation to Mr. Perry?—A. No; you did not.

Q. Well, did you?—A. About two hours later the same evening I again saw Mr. Perry and mentioned the fact to him, and the following day, which was Sunday, I again saw him, and he asked me if I understood that gentlemen was still in that hotel. I said he was, and I gave a description to Perry, and he immeditaely walked over to the blotter of the hotel, the registry, and I think learned his name. Of that I don't know, but I know he went toward the blotter and engaged the clerk in conversation.

Mr. McCoy. At this point, I am not clear whether it is noted in the record that the gentleman who stood up over here, answering to the name of Mr. Bennett, was the witness who testified here the other day.

That is all, so far as I am concerned.

The Chairman. Are there any further questions with this witness?

Mr. Dorr. None by us.

The Chairman. Maybe Mr. Bennett would like to ask some questions.

Mr. Bennett. He remarks that I was sitting in the chair alone when he came over there. Mr. Clark and Mr. Hitchcraft and I came up from dinner together, and I sat in that chair when this gentleman came in.

Mr. McCoy. You are now testifying under oath.

Mr. Bennett. Yes, sir; I didn't know who this gentleman was at the time. Of course, I have seen him around the hotel.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

Mr. Hughes. I would like to ask Mr. Bennett——

Mr. McCoy. Well, call him back, please. I gave you that opportunity.

The Chairman. Did you say Bolen or Bennett?

Mr. Hughes. Bennett. I would like to ask Bennett a question.

Mr. McCoy. I would like to have Mr. Bolen back, too.

Mr. Hughes. I am not going to ask anything about that, because it is hearsay testimony. I want to ask this witness one or two other questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Take your place.
Mr. MCCOY. I just want you to be here a minute, Mr. Bolen.
The CHAIRMAN. Take the witness stand.

M. C. BENNETT, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Did you ever see Judge Hanford intoxicated?—A. No, sir.
Q. On the train or anywhere else?—A. Never. Never saw the man until I saw him here Wednesday when you brought him in here.
Mr. HUGHES. That is all I want to know.
The CHAIRMAN. I think that was his answer the other day, so that this is mere repetition.
Mr. HUGHES. You might ask him as to the conversation with Mr. Bolen, but I care nothing about that. I only want to get at what is the fact.
The CHAIRMAN. Well, that was in the record already. That is all, Mr. Bennett.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. I would like to ask you a question. Was Mr. Hitchcraft, or whatever the name was, present at this conversation?—A. No; not over there; no.
Q. You had forgotten this conversation when you were on the stand the other day?—A. Well, Mr. Hitchcraft was the only man I have heard talk about that.
Q. You had forgotten this conversation that you have just heard Mr. Bolen testify to?—A. Yes.
Q. You had forgotten that?—A. How?
Q. You had forgotten that conversation when you testified the other day?—A. Yes.
Q. You had forgotten all about it?—A. About Hitchcraft? No; I had not forgotten about that, but he was not over there.
Q. Had you forgotten your conversation with Mr. Bolen?—A. I don't know as I just exactly understand you.
Q. When you testified here the other day, had you at that time forgotten that you had had a conversation with Mr.Bolen?—A. I didn't know who Mr. Bolen was at that time.
Q. Well, you have seen him on the witness stand to-day?—A. Yes.
Q. Well, then, you had forgotten you had had any conversation with the man who testified here two minutes or so ago?—A. Why, no; I know he was there.
Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps it would be fair to the witness. He was not called by us. I never saw him before, but it seems to me it would be fair to the witness to ask him about that conversation. It is not a matter——
Mr. MCCOY. I have gotten out of the witness and out of Mr. Bolen all I want about the transaction. He is here. If you want to ask him, ask him.
Mr. HUGHES. I don't care anything about it, because it is not evidence.
The CHAIRMAN. I don't care to ask him anything further. I gave him an opportunity to say what he wanted to say.
Mr. MCCOY. I would suggest that he has something to say to Judge Hanford in the nature of an apology.

Mr. HUGHES. Oh, I think——

Mr. MCCOY. I suggest that the witness has something to say to Judge Hanford in the nature of an apology.

Mr. HUGHES. I think he has, too, if he made the statements that are made here.

Witness excused.

JAMES M. ASHTON, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Ashton, you stated that according to your best recollection some gentleman by the name of Jones brought to your attention the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. at the time or about the time you purchased the stock in that corporation. What Mr. Jones was that?—A. William Jones, of Tacoma.

Q. Was he interested in the company, do you know?—A. I don't know whether he was or not. He knew about it and contemplated becoming interested, I think.

Q. Now, with reference to the tideland dedication concerning which you testified this forenoon, I hand you a copy of the Federal Reporter, volume 170, and ask you if you can identify that case in that volume? A. Yes; I can.

Q. What is the page of the volume of the Federal Reporter 170 at which the case commences?—A. Page 509.

Q. At which the case commences?—A. Page 509, volume 170, Federal.

Q. Who were the attorneys, or what is the title of the case reported there?—A. United States and others against Ashton and others.

Q. Who were the others that are referred to in the title as the plaintiffs' party?—A. Well, there was the State of Washington and——

Q. (Interrupting.) The plaintiffs' party, I say?—A. Oh. Well, there were a bunch of Indians, something like five or six Indians who were trustees of the descendants of the Puyallup tribe of Indians.

Q. And the United States was appearing as a guardian for the Indians, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. That is a leading question, but that is the fact?—A. That is the way it was in the court below.

Q. Now, the defendants included who besides yourself?—A. Why——

Mr. MCCOY. (Interrupting.) Is that material, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. I want to show the State of Washington was a party; that is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Well.

A. It included the State of Washington as the main party.

The CHAIRMAN. Direct him to whatever you want to go into particularly.

Mr. DORR. And several others, without going into details?

A. Yes; any others who had purchased any of these lands from the State, in addition to myself, you know.

Q. Now, who were the attorneys for the plaintiff?—A. Why, Benjamin S. Grosscup—B. S. Grosscup here—of Tacoma, was the special Assistant Attorney General, and Charles Bedford was associated with him for the United States.

Q. Who were the attorneys in the case before Judge Hanford, for the defendants?—A Mr. Grosscup and Mr. Bedford.

Q. For the plaintiffs they were?—A. For the defendants you said.

Q. I now ask you as to the defendants?—A. Well, there was Mr. Cushman for the defendants—Edward E. Cushman.

Q. Is he the present United States judge?—A. In Alaska; yes, sir.

Q. Who has just been appointed to this district?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the successor of Judge Donworth?—A. Yes, sir; the same man.

Q. Who else?—A. And Col. W. H. Doolittle, of Tacoma, and then there was my firm, Ashton & Hayden, as it stood then.

Q. That case is——A. (Interrupting.) Then do you want—then there was W. P. Bell, the attorney general of the State of Washington, you know?

Q That is what I wanted to find out.—A. He was for the State of Washington.

Q Now, that case was appealed from Judge Hanford's judgment to the Supreme Court of the United States, as I understood you this morning?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. And dismissed by the Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction?—A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Is it reported in any of the United States Supreme Court reports?—A. There is a memorandum decision to that effect in volume 220 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 604. The same case will be found in the lawyers' edition at page 605 of volume 55.

Q. I observe that the title of the case which you have just referred to in the Supreme Court reports is not the same as the one given in the Federal Reporter, but it is the same case, is it?—A. It is the same case.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ashton, would you pass the volume over, please?

A. It is just a memorandum. I think you will find it a little fuller in the Lawyers Edition [producing volume].

Mr. DORR. How was the State of Washinton interested in that litigation, Mr. Ashton?—A. Why, the defendants purchased the property from the State and the State became involved for the purpose of defending its title.

Q. And the Attorney General did appear in the case all the way through?—A. Oh, yes; all the way through. He took an active part.

Q. Had the patents yet issued by the State——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) To these lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. That is all I wish to ask Mr. Ashton.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The Supreme Court of the United States did not touch upon the merits of the matter at all?—A. No, Mr. Graham.

Q. All it said was, "Dismissed for want of jurisdiction?"—A. Yes. And then it cites a number of cases there.

Q. But those cases, I presume, are cited as authority for the action they took and the proposition they assert there, it seems, for want of jurisdiction?—A. Yes, they are authority. But if you will look at those cases you will find that they are also authority upon the fact that the constitutional covenant for the future States, you know, must not be interfered with. There is also authority on those points.

Q. Well, a case is authority on a great many points, but when it is cited to support a particular proposition we would be hardly right in assuming that the court cited it to support a proposition which had reference to the other things decided in the case.—A. Well, probably not. But they base their decision on want of jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very apparent from what they say. That is all.

Witness excused.

THEODORE L. STILES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, please.

A. Theodore L. Stiles.

Q. S-t-i-l-e-s?—A. S-t-i-l-e-s.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Stiles?—A. At Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Twenty-five years ago yesterday.

Q. How long have you lived in this vicinity anywhere?—A. That same time.

Q. Where did you come from to Tacoma?—A. Directly from Arizona.

Q. You are a professional man?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. And have been for how long?—A. Forty-one years.

Q. Are you still in the active practice of your profession?—A. I am.

Q. Have you a firm connection?—A. I have not.

Q. You are practicing alone?—A. Alone.

Q. Does your practice extend to the Federal courts?—A. Somewhat.

Q. To what extent have you practiced in the court over which Judge Hanford presides since you have been at Tacoma?—A. My practice would not be called extensive. It has been now and then.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Very well.

Q. Intimately?—A. No; I could not say intimately.

Q. Is it a professional acquaintance; that is, through your business as a lawyer, or is it more than that?—A. Entirely professional.

Q. Have you at any time had any appointment from the judge?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you practiced at Seattle, as well as Tacoma, before Judge Hanford?—A. I have.

Q. If at any time you have seen Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of any intoxicant, you may tell the committee about it.—A. I never have.

Q. Have you seen the judge drink any intoxicating liquor?—A. I think I have, though I could not put my finger on but one instance.

Q. What one was that?—A. That was an occasion three years ago, when Judge Donworth was appointed in the district, and we had a great jollification at Tacoma over it, and both judges were there and everybody was feeling particularly happy because of the circumstance that we had at last got an assistant judge in the district; and there was a good deal of champagne and other good things there that night, and I very distinctly remember lifting my glass to Judge Hanford; but that is the only time I could swear positively that I ever saw him take a drink, though my impression would be that I have perhaps taken a before-dinner cocktail or something of that kind with him at the Rainier Club.

Q. You state that you lifted your glass to him. It seems to me that testimony is directly against you rather than against him.—A. Well, I am willing to accept the impeachment.

Q. What did he do?—A. I am very sure that he returned the compliment.

Q. He responded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. No; I am not.

Q. You were a guest there?—A. I am frequently a guest there.

Q. You say you think you have seen him drinking there?—A. I would say perhaps that once or twice, when I have joined him at the table at luncheon or at dinner, that there has been a cocktail on the table, or something of that kind; very frequently occurs; and I have a few times sat down at luncheon with the judge.

Q. Have you seen the judge late at night at any time here in Seattle?—A. No; I don't think I ever did.

Q. Have you seen him at any time or at any place when he appeared to you to be more or less under the influence of intoxicants?—A. It never struck me for a moment, in my acquaintance with Judge Hanford, that he was at any time under the influence of intoxicants.

Q. Have you noticed anything peculiar in his manner as a presiding judge—in his demeanor and appearance?—A. I have noticed what other witnesses have spoken of here, and heard it commented upon frequently among lawyers.

Q. Describe what you noticed.—A. I used to, when Judge Hanford sat more frequently at Tacoma, when I had no case of my own I was in the habit quite frequently of attending the court in its sittings, and I noticed often—oh, now and then, as I would be there—that Judge Hanford would seem to be weary and occasionally his head would drop forward and his eyes were closed; sometimes he would throw his head backward and close his eyes. I have seen him get up and stand behind his chair and close his eyes. Anyone who did not know his habits might think that he was napping, but I venture that the lawyers in the case never thought so. My practice before Judge Hanford has been mainly in equity cases, and I have noticed at times what Mr. Bates spoke of this morning, that when a lawyer was making a rather prosy argument the judge would very frequently drop his head, close his eyes, or something of that kind, but I have always attributed it entirely to weariness, knowing the life that the man was leading, working from 12 to 16 hours a day.

Q. Of course you don't want us to infer anything against Mr. Bates's argument by your statement?—A. Not at all; not at all. I have had the same experience.

Mr. HIGGINS. That suggestion of the prosiness came from you, not from Mr. Bates.

The WITNESS. Well, of course, I have larger liberty in that respect than he had.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions to ask Mr. Stiles, Mr. Hughes?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. You have tried some long cases—jury cases—before Judge Hanford, have you not?—A. A few.

Q. And have had opportunity, in the trial of cases, both law and equity, to observe his manner of presiding over the trial?—A. I have.

Q. And his rulings?—A. Yes.

Q. I ask you, Judge Stiles, whether he was always prepared when an objection was raised or a question was argued, notwithstanding his habit of closing his eyes or nodding, to decide and decide immediately upon its submission to him?—A. I never saw any hesitation whatever.

Q. What do you say as to the clearness and accuracy of his decisions?—A. I think Judge Hanford is remarkable in that respect. In statement he has few equals, among our western judges at least, and I know of no superiors.

Q. What do you say of his knowledge of the law?—A. I don't think we have anyone among us who is his superior in that respect.

Q. What do you say of the clearness and retentiveness and accuracy of his memory?—A. Why, I can only speak of one test as to that, and that is he always seems to be familiar with cases that are the ordinary run of cases in the run of cases that go in the courts back and forth, and the judge always seems to be familiar with those. You can hardly speak of one that he does not mention it as—some feature of it.

Q. What do you say as to his ability and temperament as a judge—judicial ability and temperament?—A. I don't question his ability whatever. I have thought, sometimes that in temperament, perhaps through habit, he was a little hasty, severe.

Q. A little severe?—A. Yes. Perhaps my own experience accounts for that more than anything else.

Q. Judge Stiles, how long have you yourself been a judge?—A. I was a judge once five years.

Q. In what capacity?—A. As a judge or member of the supreme court of this State.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. The judges in the Federal court follow the laws of the State, substantially, don't they, as far as practice and what not?—A. Generally in the practice in actions at law.

Q. Do you think that a judge who has a retentive memory and is well posted on the law ought to be thoroughly familiar, without reminder, with the sections of your code here in this State in regard to material and immaterial variance and complete failure of proof?—A. Why, I have no doubt that a judge in the Federal court will become acquainted with those matters generally. I don't suppose a judge of the Federal court studies the statutes of the State to any great extent.

Q. Well, don't you think that a judge who was administering the law of the State, practically, in the Federal court every day in the trial of cases ought to be thoroughly familiar with those sections?—A. Well, the practice in the State courts is not controlling in the Federal court; there are lots of points, a great many points, in which the Federal court has its own practice and follows it. Generally, though, they are the same.

Q. Is the Federal court in any way bound by those three sections of the code that I have spoken of—the code of Washington?—A. I doubt that.

Q. What?—A. I doubt that.

Q. In any kind of a case?—A. I doubt that in any case. I have not seen it tested, but there are many provisions which it does not follow; for instance, in matters of new trial, for instance, that are of no importance whatever in the Federal court.

Witness excused.

J. B. BRIDGES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name.

A. J. B. Bridges, Aberdeen, Wash.

Q. How far is that from Seattle?—A. Something over 100 miles.

Q. In what direction?—A. Southwest.

Q. How long have you lived at Aberdeen, Mr. Bridges?—A. Some 12 years, although I lived in a town immediately adjoining Aberdeen for some 10 years prior to that, with an office most of the time at Aberdeen.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. Practicing attorney.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Twenty-odd years.

Q. And still in the active practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are acquainted with Judge Hanford, I assume?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Oh, 15 or 18 years; I don't recall the exact time.

Q. To what extent have you practiced in his court?—A. To a certain extent. I would not want to say that my practice had been extensive in the Federal court, but I have had considerable there.

Q. Where, mostly?—A. Chiefly at Tacoma, when Judge Hanford sat there, and somewhat here in Seattle, also, but more in Tacoma.

Q. Covering what period of time?—A. I think probably the first time I appeared in his court for the trial of a case was something like 15 or 18 years ago—15 years ago, I would say.

Q. How many cases a year would you have before him?—A. Oh, I could not approximate that; I——

Q. (Interrupting.) How many times a year would you appear professionally in his court?—A. At different times, different amounts. Maybe two or three cases a year, on an average, or a half a dozen cases possibly; some years more than that, possibly some less.

Q. During the trial of those cases you would be at Seattle or Tacoma, whichever it was, and live at the hotel until your business was done, and then you went back home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any other opportunity to notice or be with Judge Hanford except on those professional occasions?—A. Yes; I have generally attended the State bar association meetings, and Judge Hanford has practically always attended them, and I have met him and been around and with him more or less on those occasions. So also on some other occasions. I have met him in Aberdeen a time or two. He was there not long ago on some celebration day and delivered an address, and I was with him considerable on that occasion, and some other occasions similar to that.

Q. During your acquaintance with him, have you at any time noticed him when you thought he was affected by or under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have never seen him under the influence of intoxicating liquors; at any rate, I did not so consider he was.

Q. Have you seen him under circumstances when one not acquainted with him might think he was?—A. Yes.

Q. What were they?—A. Judge Stiles just gave a very good description of a peculiarity of Judge Hanford when he apparently takes cat naps.

Q. A lawyer ought to give his own testimony independent of any other witness.—A. Yes. I am just starting. He apparently, when on the bench or elsewhere sitting down, takes cat naps. You understand what I mean by that—short naps. It never impressed me that as a result of that he was intoxicated or under the influence of liquor, or possibly that they were the result of weariness. At first when I appeared before Judge Hanford I thought that he was actually sleeping, until—if you will permit me to give an illustration of my belief, I would this one—I happened to be arguing a case before him some years ago, and he was then following his usual practice, and I never saw him when he didn't, of taking, apparently taking, short naps. I was younger then in the practice than I am now and it was somewhat embarrassing to me, but I finally came to the real meat of the point in my case, and he was apparently still asleep, but when I struck the point he looked at me and whirled in his chair, revolved clear around and came back and looked at me again in such a way that I floundered around for about two or three minutes and took my seat and advised my client he might as well go home, as he evidently was going to lose his case, and he did. From that very point that I have in mind it has always been pretty hard to convince me after that that he was asleep.

Q. Did he say anything to you on that occasion?—A. Nothing; didn't say a word at that particular time.

Q. Did you complete your argument on the point, that crucial point?—A. I did; I did. I had a good deal of doubts about the position that I was taking; I might say that, in fairness to the judge, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you ever seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. About three or four years ago the American Bar Association had its meeting here in the city of Seattle——

Q. (Interrupting.) Make it brief.—A. Yes; I will. And I happened to sit at the same table at the banquet with him. There were all kinds of drinks there, and Judge Hanford on that occasion drank a little bit, tasted of some of the liquor that came on the table, as the rest of us did; but, although there were some in the audience who became intoxicated and there was a great deal to drink, Judge Hanford was not during that evening and under those circumstances under the influence of intoxicating liquors.

Q. Did you ever at any other time see him drink intoxicating liquor?—A. I think, although I am not positive about it, that on one occasion when he came to Aberdeen for the purpose of delivering some oration that he had missed his train and been up nearly all night and was very tried, and my remembrance now is that after his lecture I asked him, or some one in my presence asked him, to have a drink, and my remembrance is that he did, although I may be mistaken about that.

Q. A drink of——A. A drink of some intoxicating liquor, wine possibly, or possibly something else. I don't recollect.

Q. Do you recall any other occasion, Mr. Bridges?—A. I don't at the present time.

Q. Have you at any time received any appointment from the judge?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Have you received any emoluments of any sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is no branch of his court in your town?—A. Oh, no; no possible way at all. I don't know Judge Hanford intimately at all. My acquaintance with him is purely in a professional way, excepting as I have met him at the bar association or otherwise.

Q. You have never seen him in Seattle, I assume, in the night time?—A. No; I don't recall. I am not around Seattle very much at night, so I don't think I have seen him here.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes, to ask this witness?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Bridges, you spoke of your usual attendance at the State Bar Association meetings. When were those held?—A. Why, there have been two that I remember in Seattle.

Q. No; when, I say?—A. When? Oh, generally in either July or August.

Q. Once a year?—A. Once a year, yes.

Q. That is the annual meeting of the State Bar Association of the State of Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At which attorneys attend from all over the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hold any official position in that organization?—A. Why, I had the honor to be president for one year.

Q. What year was that?—A. I think it was three years ago; may have been two; it may have been four.

Q. Have you had an extensive practice in State courts?—A. Why, I have been pretty busy in the State courts.

Q. For how many years?—A. Twenty years, practically.

Q. Have you practiced before any other Federal judges than Judge Hanford?—A. I have been in the court of appeals two or three or four times at San Francisco, and I have been before some of the other judges who have sat here in the State of Washington, particularly Judge—who recently resigned.

Q. Donworth?—A. Donworth.

Q. From your experience in courts and in the practice of your profession, what do you say, Mr. Bridges, as to Judge Hanford's judicial temperament?

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I don't think that ought to be put that way, Mr. Dorr—comparing him with other judges.

Mr. DORR. Well, I will change the question, if I may be permitted to do so, and ask it in this way:

Q. Will you please state to the committee whether or not you consider Judge Hanford as having a proper judicial temperament to preside over the Federal court?—A. I do. Judge Hanford has some peculiarities. He has been a remarkably hard-working man, but, generally speaking, a man of excellent judicial ability and temperament, in my opinion.

Q. What do you mean by "peculiarities," Mr. Bridges?—A. Well, I refer in part to the one that I have mentioned heretofore, his peculiarity, on the bench and off the bench, of apparently taking short naps. Possibly another being that he may be around with you or his friends for an hour without talking, evidently his mind consumed on something else.

Q. Well, after those spells of silence what happens usually?—A. Generally, that is—I don't understand your question, I think.

Q. After those spells of silence, I say, for an hour or so, that you have spoken of, will he talk?—A. Oh, certainly; certainly. If he gets into conversation, he is a very excellent and learned conversationalist.

Q. What is Judge Hanford's habit in ruling on the trial of cases?—A. In all the experience I have had with him he has been very quick and accurate in his ruling.

Q. Do his rulings show that he is familiar with the subject under consideration, or not?—A. Yes, sir. I have had him—in cases that I have tried—from memory the court gives the volume and, I think I can safely say, the page of decisions—from memory, understand—from decisions out of the Supreme Court of the United States affecting the case at bar. I have considered that Judge Hanford had quite a remarkable memory.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Haven't you heard a great deal of complaint among the lawyers as to Judge Hanford's temper on the bench?—A. No; I haven't heard that.

Q. Have you heard any?—A. No; I don't think I could—I don't think I have ever heard any personal complaint of his temper upon the bench. I have heard some, younger lawyers particularly, complain of his apparent sleepiness on the bench; but, I think, never of his temper.

Q. Have you not heard lawyers complain of his treatment of them from the bench?—A. I don't now recall anybody.

Q. Have you heard any complaint on the ground that the judge has favorites among the members of the bar?—A. I have always heard just the contrary; that the judge was thoroughly, both among the lawyers and elsewhere and otherwise, without favorites. That has been his strongest reputation, possibly, in the State of Washington.

Q. You have given a very good negative answer to my question. Please give it in an affirmative answer. Have you heard that he has favorites among the members of the bar?—A. I have not.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Have you ever heard that he had favorites in making appointments to receiverships?—A. No; I have never heard that.

Q. Ever heard of Sutcliffe Baxter?—A. I don't recall now.

Q. You are not in Seattle to any great extent?—A. No; but I have—just as business may bring me here is all.

Q. Now, this apparent sleepiness or inattention; you say that that is a peculiarity of Judge Hanford?—A. Well, I think it is rather more developed in him than in most men. Most men, of course, have more or less of it; but then I should say that it is a peculiarity in Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, when you say it is a peculiarity, just exactly what do you mean?—A. Most men, I think, when they give the appearance of taking naps, as Judge Hanford gives the appearance, are unquestionably asleep. My own judgment is that Judge Hanford is not.

Q. Have you ever been in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States when it was in session?—A. I have.

Q. Have you since Mr. Justice White has been Chief Justice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever noticed him indulging in any such practices?—A. I have not. I have not been very much before that court.

Q. Have you seen him close his eyes and put his head back on his chair?—A. I have not been before that court, except this winter a little while, and I did not observe it then.

Q. Never saw Mr. Justice Holmes do a thing like that?—A. I think not. I observed one of the judges this winter, when I happened to be there, doing that, apparently asleep; he had his head laid back and his eyes closed. I don't recall now which one it was.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Bridges, that is not a peculiarity at all, is it, in any one judge?—A. Oh, no; unless it is possibly more developed in one than another.

Q. You mean unless it is so emphasized as to call very particular attention to it; that is what you mean, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, you could, if you knew the judges in the United States you probably could pick out a thousand of them who did it, and it would not attract any attention?—A. Very likely.

Mr. McCoy. That is all I want to ask.

Witness excused.

Charles F. Peterson, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Tell your full name?

A. Charles F. Peterson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Peterson?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 12 years.

Q. Are you engaged in any business?—A. I am in the timber and coal land business.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. About four years.

Q. Dealing in land?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Buying and selling it?—A. Well, trying to sell.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Slightly.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known of Judge Hanford about 20 years.

Q. Is your acquaintance a personal one or a mere sight acquaintance?—A. It is what you would call a sight acquaintance.

Q. And you have known him by sight, you say, how many years?—A. I should say 20 years.

Q. Before you came to Seattle where did you know him?—A. I came to Seattle in 1890. I stayed here a short time and went away and came back about 12 years ago.

Q. You knew him since your first coming to Seattle?—A. Yes, sir; I knew of him.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to see him during that time?—A. Well, I have seen him very frequently.

Q. Under what circumstances?—A. Passing him on the street; seen him in different places of business. I have seen him in his court room; I have seen him very frequently.

Q. Have you, in his court room, noticed any peculiarity in his actions or demeanor?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you ever noticed him when he was apparently napping or sleeping while presiding in court?—A. I never was in his court room but twice. I was in his court room on two occasions, where acquaintances of mine were taking out naturalization papers, and I was their witness before him. That is one occasion. One before, another party; that was on one occasion I was in his court room, and a gentleman up here at Maltby was taking out his naturalization papers, and the other time I have in mind was before this late Judge Donworth, who just resigned.

Q. Have you ridden on the street car with the judge here in the city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge when in your opinion he was affected by intoxicating liquor?—A. I have.

Q. Where was that?—A. I have seen him on several occasions when he was in an intoxicated condition.

Q. Could you recall the first time when you saw him in that condition?—A. The first time to me, that I remember of, was about eight months ago; I think it was in last November; I was going down to the Colman Dock at 9.45 to meet some friends that were coming over from Tacoma, and I had occasion to go through the bar at the Savoy, at the Rainier Grand Hotel, and as I was passing through Judge Hanford was leaning on the bar in an intoxicated condition.

Q. When you say "leaning on the bar" what do you mean more particularly; what was his attitude or position?—A. Well, he was leaning on the bar with his—as I remember, with his left arm up on the bar; had the glass in front of him, and to me he resembled a man that was drunk.

Q. Did you see him drink any liquor there?—A. I did not. I just passed through as I was going to the lavatory.

Q. Were there others present?—A. There were some other gentlemen there. I don't remember who they were.

Q. Was there anyone with him?—A. I don't remember whether there was or not. I just remember of having seen him. As I was passing through I paid no particular attention to it; didn't even stop.

Q. What experience have you had in noticing men who were under the influence of liquor?—A. I have had some. I believe I am——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you feel that you know, then, a man is intoxicated or drunk when you see him?—A. I think I would be a good judge.

Q. Now, could you tell us more particularly, Mr. Peterson, what it was in him or in his conduct that made you conclude that he was drunk that night?—A. Well, the principal thing would be the fact that I knew that that was Judge Hanford, and from his appearance there was no question in my mind at all but what he was drunk—his expression in his face, the way he was leaning up on the bar, and he had a glass before him with a small amount of liquor in the glass; what it was I don't know—paid no attention to it.

Q. Have you seen him frequently when he was sober?—A. Yes; I have seen him when there was nothing about the gentleman's actions that would lead you to believe that he had been drinking.

Q. Well, on this occasion did his conduct differ from his conduct and appearance on other occasions when you saw him when he was sober?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did he notice you?—A. No.

Q. Were you near enough to him to be noticed?—A. I walked right beside of him; just passed him as he was leaning upon the bar and I was walking through.

Q. Have you ever seen him on any other—did I interrupt you?—A. No.

Q. Have you ever seen him on any other occasion when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. I have. About four months ago I was coming from the Orpheum; was going home; I stopped in the Savoy to get a drink, and I saw Judge Hanford leaning on the bar with both arms, and I took a good look at him. There was no question in my mind at all but what the man was very drunk.

Q. Was he drinking then, as far as you noticed?—A. No; I don't think that he was; he was just simply standing there meditating.

Q. What time was it?—A. About 11 o'clock at night.

Q. And what time was the first occasion that you described?—A. It was between 9 and 9.30; I was going down to meet the 9.45 boat.

Q. Were there others in the barroom at the Savoy on the occasion you speak of?—A. There were several, I think; yes.

Q. Did you know any of them?—A. I did not.

Q. Was there anyone with you?—A. I was by myself.

Q. Have you seen him on any other occasion when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have. I saw him about two months ago.

Q. Where?—A. In the bar at the Mehlhorn—in the Mehlhorn Building.

Q. Is that in the center of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the business part of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time of day or night was that?—A. It was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I frequently go in the Queen City Barber Shop to get shaved. After I got shaved the gentleman that waited on me—I asked him if he would have a drink. He says, "Well, I will have some buttermilk." And we just stepped in the adjoining room, and I was ahead, and as I went in I saw Judge Hanford leaning on the bar. We walked up to the bar, and I says to the gentleman, "Do you know Judge Hanford?" He says, "Oh, yes." I says, "There he is—drunk." "Yes," he says, "he is. Oh," he says, "I see him come in here very frequently."

Q. Who was this man?—A. This gentleman's name was Hyatt.

Q. Spell it.—A. H-y-a-t-t.

Q. Did the judge leave the place or change his position while you were there?—A. I think not. We got what we wanted and we separated and went out and he was there when we went out, when we left the building.

Q. Have you seen him any other times than the three you have mentioned when you thought he was intoxicated?—A. I saw Judge Hanford about two weeks ago going up by the Washington Annex Hotel. I was standing in the entrance. And I will not venture the assertion that he was drunk at that time, but I will say this, that if he was not drunk that the judge is failing very rapidly.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He was walking toward the Washington Hotel.

Q. Was he alone or with some one?—A. There was a gentleman with him.

Q. Do you know who it was?—A. I do.

Q. Who?—A. Sam Piles.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean Senator Piles?

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you alone or with some one?—A. I was standing in the entrance of the hotel. It was about 6.30 in the evening.

Q. Mr. Peterson, have you at any other time than those stated seen the judge when in your opinion he was under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I don't remember of any other time.

Q. Have you any doubt in your mind as to the identity of the person you saw on those occasions?—A. I know Mr. Piles very well; I have known him possibly as long as I have Judge Hanford, at sight. I never have had any business transactions with him in any way, shape, or form; I have known of them, known of their—of Mr. Piles's connection with political affairs of this county and State in particular, and I believe that I know Mr. Piles.

Q. I refer more particularly to Judge Hanford's identity.—A. Well, there is no question in my mind about that.

Q. Have you at any time had any litigation in his court?—A. Never.

Q. Have you been connected with the court in any way, as a juror, witness, or otherwise?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any personal feeling of any kind toward or against Judge Hanford?—A. Absolutely none.

Q. Have you a speaking acquaintance with him, or not?—A. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. You were subpœnaed, weren't you, Mr. Peterson, to attend here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In answer to a question asked by the chairman, in describing Judge Hanford's condition on one of these occasions when you saw him in some saloon, I believe when you were saying something about your knowing that he was intoxicated you said "because I knew it was Judge Hanford." What was the significance of that phrase?—A. Well, it has always occurred to me that a gentleman occupying a position on the Federal bench should not visit such places as that.

Q. You did not mean, then, that because it was Judge Hanford that fact strengthened your belief that he was intoxicated?—A. Oh, no, no; not in the least.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. Any further questions, gentlemen?

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. Mr. Peterson, you have an office here?—A. I have.

Q. Where is it?—A. In the Oriental Building.

Q. Are you alone there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or in partnership?—A. I am alone.

Q. Engaged in the timber and coal business?—A. Yes, sir; coal-land business.

Q. Timber land and coal land?—A. Coal land; yes, sir.

Q. As an owner or broker, or in what capacity?—A. Both.

Q. Do you own timber lands?—A. Timber and coal lands both, yes, sir.

Q. Here in the State of Washington?—A. In British Columbia.

Q. Do you own any here?—A. No.

Q. You are an owner of lands in British Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The occasions that you have given on which you have testified that Judge Hanford appeared to be drunk relate to a circumstance in the Rainier Grand Hotel bar and the Savoy Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Mehlhorn bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And once on the street about two weeks ago with Senator Piles, walking up Third Avenue?—A. I didn't say that he was drunk on Second Avenue two weeks ago.

Q. What do you say about that?—A. I made the remark—I made the statement that if he was not drunk that the judge was failing very rapidly.

Q. Now, what do you base that statement on, what particular facts or circumstances or indications?—A. Well, I was standing in the entrance of the hotel as they were coming up street, and, knowing the two gentlemen as I did, and the expression in Judge Hanford's face and in the helpless way in which he was moving up the street, it occurred to me that he was under the influence of liquor. Now, I will not go so far as to say that he was drunk or anything of the kind, but in my own honest opinion I honestly believed that the judge had been drinking.

Q. Will you go so far as to say that he had been drinking?—A. No, sir.

Q. That you know it?—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. Have you any other reason for asserting that than his appearance?—A. That is all.

Q. You did not smell the odor of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford take a drink?—A. Have I ever seen him?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. At either one of these bars that you have mentioned?—A. Yes.

Q. Which one?—A. All three of them. I saw him—I will say now I won't say that he was taking a drink; he was standing up at the bar leaning against the bar at the Rainier Grand, with possibly a half or two thirds of a glass of liquor in front of him—a long glass.

Q. Who was with him?—A. He was by himself.

Q. What was the liquor that was in the glass?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see him take any?—A. I saw the glass setting in front of him on the bar. I naturally assumed that he had been drinking.

Q. You assumed that he had been drinking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him take a drink in the Savoy bar?—A. I saw him in about the same condition there, had a glass setting in front of him and he had both arms up on the bar.

Q. Standing there in meditation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that the condition that you saw him in in the Mehlhorn Building?—A. No; I think not. In the Mehlhorn Building he was very busy and he was taking a drink.

Q. Taking a drink?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what?—A. Well, he had a long glass, about that long [witness illustrating]. I would call it a wine glass.

Q. Well, what was he drinking?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see him or hear him order the drink?—A. I did not.

Q. Had it been served before you came in?—A. They were just serving him as we came in.

Q. How does it happen that you were in all these bars; did you go there to drink yourself?—A. I frequently take a drink; yes, sir.

Q. You frequently do?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently?—A. Oh, possibly two or three times a week; maybe once a month; maybe a dozen times a day.

Q. Well, now, just the usual custom, a dozen times a day or once a month?—A. Oh, about two or three times a week is all I generally take a drink.

Q. Sometimes a dozen times a day?—A. Yes.

Q. How had it been on these particular days with you, Mr. Peterson?—A. Well, I think the last occasion it was the first drink I had had that day.

Q. That is when you saw him at which place?—A. At the Mehlhorn—in the Mehlhorn Building.

Q. That was the first drink you had had that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about the other?—A. Well, at the Rainier Grand I didn't go in after a drink; I went through the bar and out through into the lobby, into the lavatory.

Q. You didn't stop there at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just walked through?—A. Just walked through.

Q. And how about the Savoy incident?—A. At the Savoy it was about 11 o'clock at night and I went in there to get a drink.

Q. How many had you had that day?—A. I don't remember, possibly one or two, something like that.

Q. The Mehlhorn Building bar is the Saratoga, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. The one that is commonly called the Saratoga. Can you fix the date of any of these incidents?—A. I don't believe I could.

Q. There is nothing else in the circumstances that would enable you to fix the date of the time you went down to meet the boat——A. (Interrupting.) Yes; I could do that for you.

Q. Will you please give it to me?—A. I could not give it to you now. I can refer back. I went down there to meet some friends that came over to spend Sunday with me.

Q. You can fix that date, can you?—A. I can find it out, yes; I can get that date for you.

Q. Was it on a Saturday evening?—A. It was on Saturday evening, yes.

Q. At 9.45, or there abouts?—A. About 9.30.

Q. Just before the 9.45 boat arrived?—A. Yes.

Q. This is only a block from the Colman Dock, is it?—A. Yes.
Q. The Rainier Grand Hotel is on First Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that is very close to the Colman Dock?—A. Yes.
Q. Will you fix the date for us and bring it in to us, if you can not do it now?—A. Bring it in to you. I can do that for you by referring to the register at the Washington Annex Hotel; I can find out just exactly the evening that it was.
Q. The Washington Annex Hotel is only a short distance from where we are now sitting?—A. The Washington Annex Hotel is over here on First and Stewart—Second and Stewart.
Q. It is only a short walk over there?—A. Yes.
Mr. DORR. May I ask the committee to have the witness go over there and do that and then return?
The WITNESS. Well, now, that would necessitate me running back through the register for some months.
Mr. McCOY. I would like to ask why you consider that so important, Mr. Dorr?
Mr. DORR. I would like to fix that date, if possible, to ascertain whether this witness may not be mistaken as to the man he saw.
Mr. McCOY. Well, now, can't that be just as well determined if Mr. Peterson brings the date here any time?
Mr. DORR. If what?
Mr. McCOY. If Mr. Peterson comes here and fixes that date at any time, that fact can be just as well demonstrated then as to break up the hearing.
Mr. DORR. Yes; at any time. That is all I wanted to ask him now.
The CHAIRMAN. The committee can only ask Mr. Peterson to do it; it can not require him to go anywhere or do anything but to come here and testify.
Mr. DORR. Beg pardon?
The CHAIRMAN. The committee has no power to command him to go anywhere or do anything except to bring him here to testify, but the committee will ask him to do it.
Mr. HUGHES. He has offered to do it; he says he will do it.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Just another question or two before leaving the stand now, Mr. Peterson. Do you live at the Washington Hotel Annex?—A. Washington Annex Hotel; yes, sir.
Q. That is your residence?—A. That is my residence; yes, sir.
Q. Mr. John H. Perry lives there, too, does he not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you acquainted with him?—A. Very well.
Q. And——
The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Just a minute there.
Mr. DORR. Have you consulted him about this case or has he consulted you about it?
Mr. McCOY. Go ahead; answer the question.
A. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the materiality of that?
Mr. McCOY. I ask that it be answered. He has answered it. I want it answered.
The CHAIRMAN. Very well; my colleague wants it answered.
Mr. DORR. What was the answer?
A. I have talked with Mr. Perry about this affair a great deal in the last three or four or five or six months.

Q. Yes.—A. But very little as to what I knew about Judge Hanford.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Very little, until yesterday.

Mr. McCoy. It gives the opening that I wanted.

Mr. Dorr. That is since you have known Mr. Perry was working this matter up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know he has been one of the active men engaged in the work on this case?—A. I possibly—I know a great deal about it; yes, sir; I do.

Mr. Higgins. What is your answer, that you know a great deal about it?

A. I know a great deal about what Mr. Perry has been trying to do with the judge.

Mr. McCoy. You will have a chance to state it in just a minute, Mr. Peterson.

A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. I understand that you didn't tell Mr. Perry what you would testify to before yesterday?

A. I never did.

Q. Until yesterday?—A. No, sir.

Q. When were you subpœnaed?—A. I was subpœnaed yesterday evening.

Q. That is the 4th of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been taking any part in working up evidence in this case?—A. Absolutely none whatever.

Q. You have not been employed in any capacity?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Dorr. I think that is all I care to ask the witness until such time as he may be able to fix that date.

Mr. McCoy. I would like to have you, Mr. Dorr, finish everything you want to ask him now, with the exception of the one question as to what the date was.

Mr. Dorr. That is all that I now think of that I care to ask him.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Now, Mr. Peterson, you were at the room—one of the rooms occupied by Mr. Graham and myself last evening in the Hotel Washington Annex, weren't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You came there at our request, preferred through Mr. Perry, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You came there with a great deal of reluctance, didn't you?—A. I think I did.

Q. And you stated that you did not want to testify, didn't you?—A. I did.

Q. And you gave a reason for that, didn't you?—A. I did.

Q. And will you please state the reason just as you stated it to us, as you gave it to us?—A. It has always occurred to me that this affair or this matter of removing Judge Hanford from this bench is a matter that the citizens of this town should become interested in. I have not taken any interest at all in any way, shape, or form in regard to Mr. Perry or Mr. Perry's movements; he and I have been very close friends for a good many years.

Mr. Higgins. Also interested in business with him?

A. No, sir; in no way, shape, or form. He has told me what he has been doing and the reason why he was doing it. I never have even as much as admitted to him that I have seen Judge Hanford drunk or that I approved of what Judge Hanford has done; but yesterday afternoon we were talking and the question was put to me right straight, he says, "Have you ever seen Judge Hanford drunk?" And I said, "Well, John, if I tell you yes I suppose I will have to go on the witness stand." I says, "I have seen Judge Hanford drunk, and I question whether there is a business man in this town but what has seen Judge Hanford drunk."

Mr. HIGGINS. You don't want that question in the record, Mr. Chairman, do you?

Mr. MCCOY. That is what he stated to us last evening. I want him to state what he stated to us last evening. Mr. Perry has been mentioned so many times here, we would like to show what difficulty Mr. Perry is having in getting the people of Seattle to come forward and do anything; so that his motives can not be questioned any longer.

Mr. HIGGINS. There don't appear to be any difficulty with this particular witness.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, that is your opinion, I have no doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. HIGGINS. I take the witness's own statement for it.

Mr. MCCOY. You may go ahead, Mr. Peterson.

The WITNESS. Well, the witness is telling you the truth.

Mr. MCCOY. Go on, Mr. Peterson; you have a right to answer my question. You can tell the committee——

A. (Interrupting.) What was it?

Q. (Continuing.) Here, for the record, what you said to us last evening up in the hotel, that led to your being subpœnaed?—A. Yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock Mr. Bolen, the gentleman who just testified here a few minutes ago, Mr. Desmond and Mr. Perry, were sitting on a couch in the hotel. I just came in and Mr. Perry called me over, he says, "Sit down."

Mr. DORR. Excuse me. Is this what he told the committee in his answer to you?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes, he told us all about this last night.

The CHAIRMAN. Not the committee, but members of it.

Mr. MCCOY. He told Mr. Graham and myself. That is what you are referring to [addressing witness]?

The WITNESS. Yes. Mr. Perry and Mr. Bolen and Mr. Desmond had been in a conversation in regard to the Judge Hanford case, and as I came in they called me over and one of them says—Mr. Perry says, "Now, Peterson," he says, "supposing you were called upon to testify in this case, what would you testify to?" I says, "I would be compelled to testify that I had seen Judge Hanford drunk on several occasions," and that was all there was to our conversation at that time. About 10 o'clock last night Mr. Perry called me and asked me to come up to room 400 at the hotel. I went up to room 400 and I was introduced to these gentlemen.

Mr. HIGGINS. You had better indicate which ones of them.

A. You wasn't there.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean Mr. Graham and Mr. McCoy?

A. These two gentlemen here; yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

A. And questions were asked——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). I may add at that point that Mr. Higgins was in Tacoma.

The WITNESS. Yes; you told me that Mr.——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). That we had not access to him.

The WITNESS. And there was this gentleman. This gentleman was there and the question came——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). The sergeant at arms, Mr. Brennan?

A. Yes. Questions were asked me if I had ever seen Judge Hanford drunk, and I told them that I had, and I asked that they not subpœna me to come and testify in this matter at all, and they wanted to know why and I told them why.

Mr. MCCOY. What did you tell us was the reason why you did not want to come?

A. I told you that it occurred to me that there were business men enough in Seattle whose testimony possibly would go further than mine; that I had every reason to believe that they knew that these conditions did exist about Judge Hanford's drinking. I don't believe that there is a member of the Rainier Club—I will not make one exception—but what knows that Judge Hanford has been there drunk time and time and time and again. I have reasons for making these statements, because I believe they are true.

Q. Didn't you tell Mr. Graham and me that you were afraid of the effect on your business if you came and testified?—A. I told you that it would affect my business, possibly.

Q. Didn't I personally urge you, as a matter of duty, to come here and testify?—A. You did.

Q. Telling you that we had heard rumors, since we came to this city, of all kinds and descriptions, about Judge Hanford—didn't I tell you that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that we felt it was due to him and to the community to know what the truth was, that he should be exonorated if the charges were not true, and he should be impeached if they were true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the substance of part of what I told you?—A. That is just exactly what you told me.

Q. Didn't I tell you that it had come to our attention that a committee of the Merchants and Credit Men's Asociation had undertaken to get us some evidence in this matter, and that a man named Goldsmith had had an interview with them and they then refused to go ahead with it—I told you that, didn't I?—A. Yes, sir; you did.

Q. And I told you that apparently the lawyers in the city were afraid to come ahead and say anything, and that I thought there ought to be some people here in Seattle, if the facts were as rumored, who should have courage to come forward and testify, and I urged you to do it on that ground; is not that the fact?—A. You did; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of this witness?

Mr. DORR. Not at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Peterson, don't leave, please. I want to ask you a question or two when Mr. Hyatt is through.

W. H. HYATT, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee.

A. W. H. Hyatt.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Eight years.

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Hyatt?—A. Barber.

Q. Has that been your occupation all the time you have lived here?—A. It has.

Q. You were present when Mr. Peterson testified awhile ago?—A. I was.

Q. Are you the Mr. Hyatt to whom he referred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the occasion to which he referred, when he and you were in a bar near your shop?—A. I do.

Q. What was the name of that bar?—A. Saratoga bar.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) By sight or personally?—A. By sight.

Q. How long have you known him that way?—A. About five years.

Q. How certain are you as to his identity?—A. Very certain.

Q. On the occasion referred to by Mr. Peterson, did you see Judge Hanford in the barroom there?—A. I did.

Q. What was his position?—A. He was leaning against the bar, over the bar, with his arms.

Q. What position was his head in?—A. Well, just kind of hanging down.

Q. With reference to drinking, what was he doing?—A. He was not drinking at the time; just seemed to be standing there.

Q. If there was any drink near him, tell about it.—A. There was; there was a glass there.

Q. What was in it, if you know?—A. Well, I would think it was liquor.

Q. What shape of glass was it?—A. Kind of a slim glass.

Q. Was it so located with reference to other persons that it might have been some other person's glass?—A. No; nobody, just—it was very close at that time.

Q. Was your attention called to him——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) At the time?—A. It was.

Q. Did you specially observe him?—A. I did, after my attention was called.

Q. Did you note his condition?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you say as to whether or not at that time the judge was intoxicated?—A. Well, I would call it a pitiful condition, pitiful condition; I would—that is——

Q. Well, what would you say as to the question as to his being intoxicated?—A. I would call him intoxicated.

Q. Have you seen him at any other time when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. I could not say that I ever did; no, although, I have seen him many times come in this place.

Q. How often have you seen him there?—A. A great many times. I have been there over——

Q. (Interrupting.) Could you see the barroom from your shop?—A. No; but the entrance comes in where I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Could you see persons entering?—A. Entering.
Q. Or leaving from your shop?—A. Entering and leaving.
Q. How frequently would you see Judge Hanford come in or go out?—A. Well, at times it was frequent and other times it was not so frequent.
Q. Well, give us the best description you can on that point, Mr. Hyatt; how often in a week?—A. Well, sometimes maybe every day for a few days; then other times I would not see him.
Q. Is your chair nearest the front window?—A. It is very near the—I can see anybody that comes in the hall.
Q. Well, you don't see everybody that goes in and out, I presume.—A. Oh, no, but it is in a position to see if I was——
Q. (Interrupting.) Did his coming or going make any impression on your mind different from that of any other person coming or going?—A. No, sir; no.
Q. Did the fact of his official position in any way arrest your attention to his being there or going there?—A. Oh, I have noticed that, of course.
Q. How long since you first noticed him going there?—A. Oh, ever since I have been there, off and on.
Q. That is how long?—A. About four years and a half.
Q. On an average, would you estimate for us, if you can——A. (Interrupting.) That would be very hard to do.
Q. (Continuing.) About how often a week——A. (Interrupting.) I could not.
Q. (Continuing.) You saw him going or coming there?—A. Estimate it, I could not; a great number of times I have seen him there.
Q. At what hour?—A. Well, generally toward evening.
Q. What time do you close the shop?—A. I leave at 6.30.
Q. If he came there later than that you would not see him?—A. I would not see him, no.
Q. Did you ever see him drinking anywhere else than at the Saratoga bar?—A. I never did.
Q. Did you ever see him anywhere else when you thought he was more or less under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the witness anything, Mr. Dorr?

By Mr. DORR:

Q. When was this particular occasion, Mr. Hyatt, that you were with Mr. Peterson?—A. Why, it would be over two months ago, would it? Just about that time.
Q. Are you able to fix the date?—A. I could not fix the date.
Q. You and Mr. Peterson went into the bar together to get a drink, did you?—A. We did.
Q. And you saw the judge standing there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you see him drink anything?—A. No, I didn't.
Q. How long were you together in the bar?—A. Just a short time, not more than five minutes at the most.
Q. Do you remember what you drank?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was it?—A. Buttermilk.
Q. Do you remember what Mr. Peterson drank?—A. I think he drank some liquor of some kind.
Q. And then you returned to the shop?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And where did Peterson go?—A. He went out on the street.

Q. Now, do you want the committee to understand, Mr. Hyatt, that you observe everyone that goes into that saloon, or are in a position to do so from your chair?—A. I am in a position to do so, but I do not say that I observe every one.

Q. Where is the saloon door?—A. Right at the side of the—side entrance, right off the hall.

Q. You go into a general entrance into the building?—A. General entrance, yes.

Q. And the barber shop is at the rear of that general entrance, isn't it?—A. Right at the rear of that general entrance.

Q. And where is the saloon entrance with reference to the entrance to the shop?—A. It turns right off at the entrance of the shop.

Q. And you can from your position see everyone who enters the the saloon?—A. I can when I am at the chair, yes.

Q. Which is your chair?—A. The second chair.

Q. From the front——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Of the shop? Did you see anything about the judge on this occasion that attracted your attention, except that he was standing up there at the bar?—A. Well, my attention was drawn to it and I looked at him and I noticed that others that came in did the same.

Q. Did he appear to be drowsy?—A. Well, very much that way, yes.

Q. Drowsy?—A. His head over the bar.

Q. Appeared to be standing there and engrossed in deep study, didn't he?—A. Kind of a stupor, yes; something of that kind.

Q. You know nothing about his drinking?—A. I don't.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink?—A. I never did.

Q. Your eyes are in normal condition, are they?—A. How?

Q. Your eyesight, is it normal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Natural?—A. Eyes?

Q. Sir?—A. Eyes?

Q. Yes.—A. Why——

Q. (Interrupting.) Are your eyes good?—A. Well, I have got—I have got one bad eye, but then——

Q. (Interrupting.) Got one bad eye?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the trouble with that?—A. Well, that was hurt at one time and it is not good.

Q. Is the eye gone?—A. It don't bother me.

Q. Vision?—A. Vision, yes.

Q. The vision is gone?—A. Yes.

Q. You have but one good eye?—A. That is all.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

Witness excused.

Mr. MCCOY. I want to say, for the record, that the reason why Mr. Higgins did not hear what was going on last night was because we did not know that the interview was coming off. He was taking a holiday, as we were.

Mr. HIGGINS. I will make a statement, if that is regarded as material or relevant or of any importance at all——

Mr. MCCOY. I simply put it in to show——

Mr. HIGGINS (continuing). That I was in Tacoma, in response to an invitation; that I had a good time and I didn't know the committee was going to meet, and I supposed we would have no session yesterday. If that is regarded as at all important or relevant, I will make that statement.

Mr. MCCOY. That is exactly what I was going to say for the record, so as to protect Mr. Higgins.

Mr. HIGGINS. I had a very favorable impression of Tacoma, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason for entering into that matter at all is that we want the record to show, as we want those interested in this hearing to understand, that the whole committee acts together, and that as Mr. Higgins is the minority member of the committee and was not present on that occasion, it was simply because he was not accessible. The record should show that, and that is all that it was intended to have it show.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr.

Mr. DORR. We have never understood that there was any majority or minority members of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I think you knew that fact, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. DORR. It is a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but you did know, did you not, that two of the members of the committee belong to one political party and one to another party?

Mr. DORR. Certainly, we knew that.

The CHAIRMAN. They are usually known as majority and minority members. Did you not know that?

Mr. DORR. We certainly knew that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I meant.

Mr. DORR. But we never suspected that that would enter into the investigation of a judicial matter.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not, it does not, and it shall not. The truth is the truth and facts are facts, no matter who produces them, and we want to get all the truth and all the facts that are relevant, and none else.

Mr. DORR. That is what we assumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Regardless of majorities or minorities.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted——

The CHAIRMAN. I want to make just another statement, if you please, Mr. Hughes, in that connection. We have gentlemen of the press here, and I would be glad if in their papers they would make a minute of the fact, for the benefit of the public, that the committee desires to get into its hearings all the material evidence concerning this inquiry—that is, all the truth—and we would be pleased to have the papers make that announcement so that when we leave here no one can say they did not have an opportunity to come in and be heard as to the facts within their knowledge.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that to mean that this committee is going to sit here until every witness desiring to make a statement material to the charges and matters under House resolution 576 shall be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman's understanding of it was that anyone having knowledge of that kind would consult the committee, not here in court as a committee, but outside of the hearings, and if they bring to the committee facts which are material and which we ought to take back to the full Judiciary Committee, it is the chairman's opinion we ought to stay here until we get all those facts.

Mr. HIGGINS. Does that mean that the majority of the committee are going to determine the materiality of them?

The CHAIRMAN. That means that the chairman believes what he has just stated to be the true course to pursue.

Mr. HIGGINS. Oh, but if any——

The CHAIRMAN. The thing to which you refer is a question that should be taken up in executive session, rather than in the presence of a house full of strangers.

Mr. HIGGINS. I desire to get in the record just that very fact; if any single member of the committee deems it important and necessary that a particular witness or a particular class of witnesses should be called, will that witness be called?

The CHAIRMAN. The witness will be called if the committee determines he should be called; in other words, the committee will act with perfect fairness.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, that is hardly an answer, of course, to my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman thinks it is.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, to be specific: Should I request, or should any other member of the committee request, that a certain class of witnesses be called, or any particular witness be called on a matter that is material and relevant in the mind of that particular individual member of the committee, in response to House resolution 576, will that witness be called?

The CHAIRMAN. As I said before, those are matters that should not be brought out here, but should be discussed in executive session; but the Chair has no hesitation in saying that this committee, like all other bodies of its character, must act by a majority.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, of course that is an answer in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you will have to construe it your way, but I take it there is no escape from that conclusion; I know of no other way that anybody can act than by a majority.

E. P. DOLE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name?

A. Edmond Pearson Dole.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I lived in Seattle about four years—the first four years of the nineties—and I have been in Seattle this time about five years.

Q. Making about nine altogether?—A. About nine altogether.

Q. With an interim of——A. (Interposing.) Well, I was in Honolulu for about 10 years, and then I was in Washington, D. C., for about 2 years.

Q. Have you any business at the present time?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Dole, you are of course acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Somewhat; yes.

Q. And have been how long?—A. I have been somewhat for 20 years.

Q. You have practiced in his court?—A. To some extent; not to a great extent.

Q. Have you had any opportunity to observe the judge's demeanor and manner of holding court?—A. Well, in regard to what?

Q. More particularly with reference to his physical condition or apparent physical condition and attitude while holding court.—A. I have never seen him at any time when he did not seem to be alert and attending to the business before him. He has a habit sometimes of dropping his head and apparently not paying strict attention to what is being said, but when it comes to rule it is evident that he has heard everything that has been said.

Q. What opportunity have you had to notice him at other times or places than in court?—A. Not very much.

Q. If at any time during your acquaintance with him you have seen him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants, please tell that?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink?—A. No, I never have. I have not been in the way of seeing whether he drank or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Dole, were you subpœnaed?

A. I was.

Q. When?—A. This morning.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

The WITNESS. Otherwise I would not have been here.

Witness excused.

CLINTON W. HOWARD, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. Clinton W. Howard.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Bellingham, Wash.

Q. Where is that, Mr. Howard?—A. That is in the northwestern portion of the State, in Whatcom County.

Q. That would be north and a little bit west of Seattle?—A. Practically north, 97 miles north.

Q. What is your business?—A. An attorney at law.

Q. Engaged in the active practice of your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Since 1887. I have resided in Bellingham since the 1st day of November, 1889.

Q. Is that in this Federal judicial district?—A. It always has been since I have lived here.

Q. Where is the Federal court usually held?—A. At Bellingham now, for the last four or five years.

Q. Who holds the court there?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. He has for how long?—A. Since the court was organized at Bellingham.

Q. How much court is there each year at Bellingham?—A. It is my recollection there are two terms. They are sometimes broken by adjournments between the times; also——

Q. (Interrupting.) Lasting about how long, in the aggregate?—A. Oh, I think possibly a week would be as long as Judge Hanford has held court at Bellingham at any time. The district, however, is coordinate with Seattle; in other words, cases that are brought in Bellingham may be filed in Seattle or Bellingham.

Q. I quite understand about that, but now it is on Bellingham we are.—A. Yes.

Q. And the aggregate of court held there each year by Judge Hanford would be about two weeks, would it?—A. Yes; I think two weeks would be the limit.

Q. At what other point have you attended court where he presided?—A. At Seattle.

Q. How much?—A. Oh, I have been here frequently for the last 15 or 16 years.

Q. And for how long a time when you came?—A. Oh, I have had cases that would run as high as four or five days.

Q. Trial work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Jury trials?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any occasion to observe Judge Hanford in Seattle otherwise than during court hours?—A. Occasionally I have met him in a social way.

Q. Where?—A. At the Rainier Club and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Are you a member of it?—A. I am a nonresident member of the club; yes, sir.

Q. That entitles you, of course, to the privileges of the club?—A. Which I very seldom avail myself of.

Q. Have you at any time while Judge Hanford was holding court observed anything peculiar in his attitude or demeanor——A. (Interrupting.) I have.

Q. (Continuing.) On the bench?—A. I have frequently observed Judge Hanford apparently close his eyes and pull his little chin whiskers, and, to a casual observer, would be asleep.

Q. For how long at a time?—A. Oh, that would occur very frequently during the trial of a case.

Q. Now, how long would he seem to be asleep at one time?—A. I didn't say that he was asleep.

Q. I didn't say you said that he was asleep.—A. I said to the casual observer he might appear to be asleep.

The CHAIRMAN. Repeat the question to the witness.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Oh, I have seen Judge Hanford anywhere from two to three or four or sometimes five minutes, I should say.

Q. And was that continuous?—A. No.

Q. For any length of time—for instance, whenever he appeared to wake up how soon would it be until he would seem to be asleep again?—A. I have seen him nod that way very frequently during the progress of a trial.

Q. What time mostly, before or after lunch?—A. Either in the morning or in the afternoon; I have never noticed any particular time.

Q. What would the position of his head be on those occasions?—A. Sometimes inclined forward and sometimes backward; mostly forward, I should think.

Q. Have you observed him elsewhere than on the bench in that attitude?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I remember one evening, it was the evening of the 11th of October last, Mr. E. W. Purdy, the president of the First National Bank of Bellingham, and myself, were returning from Olympia; we had been pallbearers at Mr. Fairchild's funeral, he was the chairman of the State railroad commission. We met Judge Hanford on the interurban at Tacoma coming to Seattle; we talked to him about four or five minutes and then took another seat, and I noticed that the judge slept a good deal of the way over. But in our conversation with him he was perfectly normal in every respect.

Q. So that a great deal of the time when you observed him either in court or riding on the train he seemed to be napping?—A. I would not say that, because I have seen many attorneys make the mistake of thinking he was napping.

Q. I did not ask the question that way; you are not listening evidently. Read it to him.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I would not say that he was napping; no, sir.

Q. I did not ask you to say anything about it. Why don't you listen to my question?—A. I thought I did.

Q. I said "He seemed to be napping."—A. Seemed to whom to be napping?

Q. To you——A. No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.)—the witness.—A. No, sir; I am too familiar with the judge——

The CHAIRMAN. Will you repeat the question to him once more?

Question repeated to the witness.

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that so or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. How much of the time did he seem to you to be napping?—A. The only occasion that I ever saw him on the train that I now recall is the one that I have just referred to. Many times in the court room close his eyes and, as I said, to a casual observer would apparently be napping, but as a question was raised or a law point suggested he would turn instantly and rule on it with concise clearness that was perfectly convincive to my mind he had not been sleeping or dozing.

Q. And the point I want to get at and the question I wish you to answer is, how much of the time did he act so as to seem to a casual observer to be napping?—A. Oh, that is a relative question and very difficult——

Q. Will you answer it?—A. (Continuing.)—difficult for one to determine.

Q. Answer it.—A. I would say that during the course of the day Judge Hanford in the trial of a long case might do that six or eight times in the morning or six or eight times in the afternoon, or both.

Q. Of course you, in trying a case, would not have your eyes on the court?—A. Well, I find——

Q. You, I presume, were watching the witnesses and the jury more than you were the judge?—A. I find that most of the witness chairs are somewhat relatively like this is to the bench of your committee, so that you would take in both at the same range—in examining the witness I watched the judge.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to whether there was any special cause for the peculiarity which you have mentioned?—A. None whatever.

Q. You know of none?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drink intoxicants?—A. I saw him take one drink once.

Q. Where?—A. That was in the Cascade—in what was called the Cougar Club, in the city of Bellingham.

Q. When?—A. On one occasion when he went with me from the court room.

Q. What did he drink?—A. I think he had a highball.

Q. Is that the only occasion when you saw him drink any intoxicants?—A. That was the only occasion I ever recall of.

Q. Did you ever have any appointment of any kind from the judge?—A. What do you refer to?

Q. Oh, as commissioner, or——A. Oh, no; none whatever.

Q. (Continuing.) Or any patronage of any sort.—A. I never had dollar from him, as attorney's fees, or otherwise; no, sir.

Q. Have you had any cases in which the court fixed your fees.—A. None whatever; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the witness any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Howard, you have had considerable important litigation before Judge Hanford, have you not?

A. At various times; yes, sir.

Q. And you have participated in the presentation to him of important questions for judicial decision?—A. Yes, sir; some of them, I expect, as important as was ever brought before him here in this city; I refer to the litigation with the Great Northern and the Seattle & Lake Washington Waterway Co.

Q. A committee reading this testimony might infer from your description of him that Judge Hanford was no longer of sufficient mental and physical vigor properly to dispatch his work; I wish you would state, in the light of your knowledge of him and your experience before him, what is Judge Hanford's capacity as a judge and a lawyer in his understanding of the law and his ability to rightly interpret it; and his capacity to dispatch business?—A. I would say that Judge Hanford has the most enormous capacity for work of any judge that has ever come under my experience; and I may say, further, that so far as the bar of Whatcom County is concerned, no one stands higher or is held in greater reverence and respect. On one occasion when Judge Hanford first opened court there both the superior court judges adjourned their court and the entire bar attended, as a mark of respect to Judge Hanford. In the 23 years' practice I have had there I have always been gratified to be able to present to one of our superior judges a decision of Judge Hanford, knowing the value and respect that they place upon his opinion.

Q. You are the retiring president of the State Bar Association?—A. I was president of the State Bar Association for the year 1911—the Washington State Bar Association.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness?

S. F. BRUCE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. Samuel F. Bruce.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Bruce?—A. At Bellingham, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. You are an attorney at law?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes.
Q. And you have been during your residence at Bellingham?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How big a place is it?—A. A population of between 26,000 and 30,000 people.
Q. A seaport?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. About 22 years, or a little more.
Q. Have you had much business before him?—A. I have had a reasonable amount of business before Judge Hanford.
Q. At Bellingham and at Seattle also?—A. Yes, sir; and at Tacoma; I tried cases at all three points.
Q. Extending over how long a period?—A. I think I tried my first case before Judge Hanford in 1892.
Q. How much business have you had before him in the last 5 or 10 years?—A. Well, I have had a fair volume of business, and there is nearly always——
Q. Where was it mostly?—A. For the most part it has been at Seattle.
Q. How do you go from Bellingham to Seattle, by rail or water?—A. Rail and water both, if you wish.
Q. How long a trip is it by rail?—A. Three hours and fifteen minutes.
Q. When you come to court you remain here until your business is completed?—A. Yes; certainly.
Q. What were your social relations and what was your social acquaintance with the judge, if any?—A. Well, I have some social acquaintance in a business way. I have no visiting acquaintance.
Q. You mean by that, in a professional way?—A. In a professional way, yes; a business way.
Q. Well, have you seen the judge much, if any, when not in court?—A. Well, I have seen the judge a great many times when he was not in court, during that period.
Q. To what extent have you seen him during the evening or night when not holding court?—A. Well, I have seen him, perhaps, a dozen times I have been with him of an evening and night.
Q. Under what circumstances?—A. I have spent the evening with him at the club.
Q. The Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir; I was traveling with him and——
Q. Are you a member of it?—A. No, sir; I am not.
Q. You were there as a guest merely.—A. Merely as a guest. I formerly had a membership in the club, but I have dropped it.
Q. When did you drop it?—A. In 1903, I think.
Q. Have you at any time during your acquaintance with the judge seen him drink intoxicating liquors?—A. I have.
Q. How frequently?—A. Well, I would not say oftener than two drinks of an evening, at the time when we would be visiting.
Q. Have you at any time seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never saw him when I thought he was under the influence of intoxicants.
Q. Have you seen him when on the bench, as you have heard witnesses tell about, when he seemed to be napping?—A. Yes, sir; I would want to emphasize the "seemed." I do not think I have ever seen him napping, but I have seen him many times when one not acquainted with his peculiarities would think he was napping, possibly.

Q. Well, while in the course of a day's work of five hours how much of the time do you think he would spend that way?—A. Well, I think that was measured according to the volume of work or the character of work that he had been doing. I have noticed at times when it would not be observable; I would not observe it in a half a day; and then I have seen times when it would be recurrent for periods a few minutes apart—oh, it would not be any longer, perhaps, than half an hour in the forenoon or afternoon.

Q. You mean, Mr. Bruce, as I understand you, that when he worked particularly hard he seemed to be napping more than when he was not working so hard?—A. Well, I would say from my observation, the greater a variety of business that he had before him at the time the more he would appear to relax into inattention, and close his eyes.

Q. Is it not your experience that when a man is exhausted and lacking rest and he seems to be nodding and napping, he is much more apt to actually sleep than if he were not exhausted for lack of rest?—A. Certainly, if a man is exhausted he is more apt to yield to his physical requirements than if he is not exhausted.

Q. And if he is nodding and napping in appearance because of exhaustion, is he not more likely to go the whole distance and go to sleep?—A. He is; but I do not want to admit such to be a proper description of Judge Hanford.

Q. And what do you mean when you say, as I understood you, that he was in that condition more when he was working hard and exhausted than at other times?—A. I think——

Q. (Continuing.) If it was due to exhaustion why was not he asleep, from what you have described as to his appearance?—A. I do not think it was due to exhaustion. If you will permit me to explain, I think Judge Hanford is a man that works upon various subjects simultaneously, and he would be working on three or four subjects; he will close his eyes in an attitude of study or repose, and to one not acquainted with that peculiarity he would appear to be napping; but he is, perhaps, working on three or four problems together; that is the way I think it is with Judge Hanford.

Q. Do you mean at one and the same time?—A. Yes, sir; at one and the same time.

Q. That he has a sort of triple-action mind?—A. Yes, sir; he has a mind that is more than ordinarily acute, and I am satisfied that he could carry three or four subjects in his mind at the same time and dispose of them and reason accurately on each one at the same time.

Q. I think you have already stated to me that you have never seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never have.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen wish to ask the witness any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Is Bellingham a railroad center?

A. There are five railroads, I think, there.

Q. Has railroad business been the principal business which you have been before the court on?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is your general practice, admiralty?—A. I am a general practitioner; I have had a great variety of cases before Judge Hanford.

Q. Any admiralty business?—A. Yes; I had admiralty business.

Q. Do you make a specialty of that at all?—A. No, sir; I am no specialist; I make no specialty of it, although I had several cases before Judge Hanford in that jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you gentlemen wish to ask the witness any questions?

Mr. DORR. Have you represented any one of the railroad companies, Mr. Bruce, during this time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your practice is, so far as they may be involved, entirely against them?—A. Altogether.

Q. On the other side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of traveling with Judge Hanford; will you explain to the committee where you traveled with him, and when?—A. Well, I have—I should not probably say that I traveled much with Judge Hanford—I have been on journeys when our paths lay together, and we traveled on the same train or the same boat—the same conveyance.

Q. You do not mean by that that you took trips together?—A. No, sir; we did not take trips together; simply were thrown together casually.

Q. Simply by chance?—A. Simply by chance; yes, sir.

Q. Where have you been on those occasions?—A. I have traveled between Seattle and Spokane, Seattle and Tacoma, and between Pasco and White Bluffs, on the Columbia River, and back down the river, and then have been thrown together at Hanford Station or White Bluffs, just by chance.

Q. Where is Hanford Station, Mr. Bruce?—A. That is a stopping place on the Columbia River, about 45 miles north or upstream from the junction of the Northern Pacific Railway and the river at Pasco; it is in Benton County.

Q. Do you have anthing in the way of interests which would take you over to that country?—A. Yes, sir; I have some interests over there.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this important, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. Only with respect to the suggestion that has been made by the committee, that the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. might become involved here.

The CHAIRMAN. Just ask him straight out in reference to it if he is interested.

Mr. DORR. Are you in any way interested in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?

A. I am not interested in the company whatever further than that they are a creditor of mine on the purchase of a piece of land that I have not fully paid for yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Speak up a little louder.

A. I say I have an interest in a piece of land that we purchased from the Hanford Light & Power Co., or the Hanford Land & Irrigation Co., and I find that I have not paid for it fully yet.

Q. You mean the Irrigation & Power Co., is it not?—A. The Irrigation & Power Co.

Mr. DORR. That is, you have a piece of land over in that district which you bought from the corporation?

A. Yes, sir; that is the only interest I have.

Q. In any of those trips which you have made, where Judge Hanford was a fellow passenger with you on the cars, have you ever seen him dozing or sleeping, apparently?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him in the same attitude that I described a moment ago.

Q. Do you mean when he was on the bench?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever found him on the bench at any time during your practice or observed him in a condition where he did not know all that was going on in the court room?—A. No, sir; I have never—I have never appeared before a judge whom I thought understood everything—every phase of the situation—so thoroughly as Judge Hanford.

The CHAIRMAN. Avoid comparisons, Mr. Bruce—avoid comparisons; just state as to Judge Hanford.

A. Well, I would say that Judge Hanford is exceptionally alert to everything going on before him.

Mr. DORR. How has he acted with respect to rulings that were required to be made in the progress of trials which you have been engaged in?

A. Well, his rulings are always very decisive and very prompt whenever the occasion to rule arises.

Q. What would you say about his manner of instructing juries?—A. His instructions are always very clear and very plain to the jury.

Q. Do you know anything about the volume of work that the judge has been doing?—A. I know it has been very heavy, especially up to the time of the division of the State and the creation of a second judge in this district.

Mr. DORR. That is all, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

JAMES M. PALMER, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. James M. Palmer.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Since May 1, 1907, the last time I came here.

Q. Did you live here prior to that also?—A. I lived here from July or August, 1903, until the first month or two in 1904. I lived in Tacoma from January or February, 1904, until May, 1907, at which time I came to Seattle and have been here continuously ever since.

Q. You are an attorney at law?—A. Well, I am an attorney at law, but I have not practiced in the State of Washington; I have been following the profession of shorthand reporting since I have been in this State.

Q. To what extent have you done work as a reporter in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I have reported in Judge Hanford's court in Tacoma in the two terms a year that were held in Tacoma from 1904 until 1907, commencing in the middle of March and extending into April and commencing in the middle of October and running into November, according to the length of the cases that he had on his calendar, and I reported, I think, every term of court one or more cases in that court from April, 1904, until April, 1907.

Q. Was all that at Tacoma?—A. All that work was done at Tacoma.

Q. And at Seattle how much?—A. At Seattle I have not done as much reporting of cases in the United States court as I did at Tacoma.

Q. What time would your work in Seattle cover?—A. I would say that I have reported not to exceed 12 or 15 cases in the last three or four years in Seattle.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean in Judge Hanford's court?

A. I mean in Judge Hanford's court.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you done any reporting in his court at any other points than those?

A. My recollection of it now is that one time I went to Bellingham and I reported a case for him there, and it seems to me another time during my residence in Tacoma that I reported a case for some attorneys at Aberdeen, but I am not certain about that.

Q. Mr. Palmer, a court reporter taking testimony can not give much of his attention to anything else than the testimony and his work, can he?—A. I think that a court reporter is keenly alive to everything that goes on in the court room, because he never can tell at what instant something is going to happen that will have to be made a part of the record, and I think a court reporter is more keenly alive to all of the facts that are transpiring and the circumstances that are occurring in the court room than any other one man in the court room.

Q. Do you refer particularly to the things which he observes by the sense of hearing, or do you include things observable by the sense of sight also?—A. By the sense of sight as well as hearing.

Q. Did you observe the peculiarity of Judge Hanford on the bench, about which you have heard some testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to his apparent napping?—A. Yes.

Q. And sleeping?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you first begin to notice that peculiarity?—A. I think the first time I ever reported in his court.

Q. That was how long ago?—A. Eight years ago.

Q. Have you noticed any change in the judge with reference to that peculiarity since that time?—A. No change.

Q. You think that it remains about the same?—A. May I ask if you mean by that, do I think it is worse now, or within the last six or eight months than it was eight years ago?

Q. Better or worse?—A. I think it is just about the same.

Q. That is your answer?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there any time of the day at which it is worse than any other time, in your opinion?—A. No; I can not say so. I think I have seen him lean back in his chair and put his head on the back of the chair. He generally sits in a chair somewhat like the one you are sitting in now, particularly in Tacoma.

Mr. MCCOY. A high-backed chair?

A. A high-backed chair, that he could lean his head back against. I have seen him close his eyes and keep them closed for some moments; but I never thought he was asleep. He did not act to me like he was asleep, and I never heard an attorney spring an objection that Judge Hanford ever called on me to read the record unless there was a dispute between one or more of the attorneys as to the exact verbiage used in the question or in the objection. Judge Hanford always ruled right the minute that the objection was made. Judge Hanford would rule right on the spot. I never would have to read any of the record back to him. I have seen him, more than that, sitting in a chair when, apparently, he would have his eyes closed, and I have seen him without opening his eyes or making any movement say, "I think you have followed that line of inquiry long enough; it is immaterial; I do not see any benefit to be derived from it"; or, he would say to the attorney, "That has not got anything to do with the case; ask some other question," and apparently he was following the record right along all the time. I never did see Judge Hanford sit in his chair when anything happened like that that I ever had to sit down and read any of the record back to him unless it was a dispute between some attorney and the witness or two attorneys as to what had been said before.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you had an opportunity to observe the judge when he was not holding court?—A. The last part of the time that I was in Tacoma, in April, in March, and April, 1907, Judge Hanford appointed me United States commissioner to succeed Judge M. L. Clifford, who was appointed judge of the superior court. At that time I was reporting in Judge Hanford's court, and I knew some days before Judge Clifford's resignation was actually sent to the governor that Judge Clifford intended to resign his office as United States commissioner. I officed with Judge Clifford at the time and therefore knew it before the resignation had been forwarded to the governor—or not to the governor, but to Judge Hanford. I asked Judge Hanford one day at noon if he would go to lunch with me. He said he would; he would be glad to. We went down from the building in which the United States court was held at that time, the Chamber of Commerce Building in Tacoma, across to the Donnelly café. It was my custom at that time to take a drink before eating lunch. I invited the judge to have a drink with me, and we went in and got a drink—the judge had one, too, but what it was I do not remember. We went into the lunch room and we sat there for an hour, and I asked Judge Hanford at that time if he could see his way clear to appoint me United States commissioner. He was in the habit of not saying very much; he would sometimes see you and talk to you a good deal, and then again he would see you and say "How do you do," or some abrupt statement and would not say anything more to you for quite a long time; and at that time he and I sat there at lunch and I asked him about that appointment, and he didn't say anything more to me until we got almost through lunch, and he said, "I will appoint you"; that is all he said to me. That is about all the conversation we had. I know, subsequent to that time, Judge Hanford and I went to lunch at the Donnelly Hotel several times, and sometimes the judge would talk to me in regard to cases that were being tried and sometimes he would just simply say nothing at all, all during the lunch hour.

Q. When did your service as commissioner terminate?—A. My appointment as commissioner terminated by reason and by virtue of the fact that I removed from Tacoma to Seattle, and that operated as a termination of the appointment. I held the appointment of commissioner for some three or four months.

Q. Had you any other appointment from the judge than that one?—A. I never had.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when in your opinion he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. No, sir; I never saw him when he was under the influence of an intoxicant.

Q. Did you ever see him drinking otherwise than as you have stated?—A. I remember one time particularly—I was thinking of it this afternoon while I was sitting here—some time in 1906 there was a banquet at Tacoma; there was Gen. Ashton, and Judge Hanford, and Judge Burke, and, I think, Judge Stiles, and several other men spoke. The Post-Intelligencer of Seattle and the Tacoma Ledger employed me to report those speeches. The banquet commenced some time along about 9 o'clock in the evening——

The CHAIRMAN. Make it as brief as you can.

A. (Continuing.) And the speaking commenced about 11 o'clock, and from then on until 1 o'clock there was speaking. Judge Hanford at that time made a speech that lasted for 35 or 40 minutes, and after the banquet had been held for three hours Judge Hanford made one—a remarkably clear speech, clear all the way through.

Q. The question was if you had ever seen him when you thought he was intoxicated.—A. I never saw him intoxicated at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Had he drank any that evening at the banquet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were the ordinary liquors served that are customarily served at banquets of that kind?—A. Yes.

Whereupon an adjournment is taken until to-morrow morning, July 6, 1912, at the hour of 9.30 o'clock.

EIGHTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present, as at former hearing.

JESSE E. FRYE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name to the committee.

A. Jesse E. Frye.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Since June, 1902.

Q. What is your business or occupation?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Since the spring of 1883.

Q. And you still are?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever held any official position during any of that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. City attorney, member of the legislature, and United States attorney for the district of Washington.

Q. When were you district attorney for this district?—A. July 1, 1902, to June 30, 1906.

Q. Who was the presiding judge during that time?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. All of it?—A. Yes, sir; unless they called in some person from——

Q. I mean regularly.—A. Oh; yes, sir.

Q. Apart from your professional duties and court work, to what extent have you associated with Judge Hanford during those years?—A. Well, during the first three years of that term the district included the whole of the State of Washington. Of course, we held two terms at Spokane, Walla Walla, and Tacoma, as well as Seattle, and while we were at those places I mentioned we usually dined together or something of that kind.

Q. Apart from those occasions, and while in Seattle, to what extent did you associate with the judge outside of court work?—A. Occasionally he would go to dinner with us.

Q. Were you a member of any club or other organization of which he was a member?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Frye, did you have any practice, except your official duties, while you were district attorney?—A. Very little.

Q. How much of the time were you in court where Judge Hanford was presiding?—A. Except when I was away on vacations, or something like that, I was in the court room nearly every day, off and on; generally at the opening in the morning and the opening in the afternoon and on preliminary motions or during the trial of cases.

Q. Except when you were yourself engaged in court work you would not be in court?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been here and have heard witnesses testify as to some peculiarities in Judge Hanford's appearance and demeanor on the bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give the committee your impressions as to that?—A. Why, at times Judge Hanford would seem drowsy or something of that kind, but he always had a firm grasp on the proceedings.

Q. What were the things that a person unacquainted with him would observe about him on those occasions?—A. I think they might judge that he was drowsy.

Q. To the extent of sleeping?—A. Oh, perhaps so, unless they examined it closely; unless they made a close observation.

Q. To what extent would that continue while he was on the bench?—A. Oh, it was only occasionally; perhaps it might be to-day and perhaps for the next three or four days he would not be.

Q. Did it manifest itself more at some time of the day than at other times?—A. Well, perhaps along in the afternoon of the day where he had been working hard.

Q. It was more apparent at that time?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. Except his taking a cocktail just before meal when he was with us.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to observe the judge in the nighttime in the city here?—A. Except only at his chambers. When I was United States attorney, of course, we both worked at night.

Q. Have you, at any time been in any saloon or drinking place with him in the city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him at such places?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever observe or have you been with him when he was going home on the street car?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Have you, in your opinion, at any time seen him when he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. To what do you attribute his attitude and demeanor on the bench, which you have heard spoken of and testified concerning by by the witnesses?—A. I think it is due to overwork and perhaps a little lack of sleep.

Q. Do you know of any other reason?—A. No, sir; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions to ask the witness?

Mr. McCoy. Is it not a matter of common observation, Mr. Frye, that when a man gets to be Judge Hanford's age that he needs less sleep than when he is younger?

A. I think it depends on the person.

Q. You do not think that is a common characteristic?—A. I know that I require more now than I did 10 years ago.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am 53.

Q. You do not call yourself old?—A. Old, certainly not; but I say I require more sleep now than I did 10 years ago.

Q. When a man gets to be 63 or 64——A. I could not say as to that.

Q. You do not know how that would be?—A. I could not say as to that. I never had any experience as elderly people.

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Frye, what can you say as to Judge Hanford's habits of industry?

A. Work spells his life.

Q. How many years were you district attorney?—A. Four years.

Q. What was the amount of judicial business, speaking generally, which Judge Hanford had to transact during that period?—A. Very heavy.

Q. What about his hours of labor, outside of the court day?—A. Why, he spent most of those in his chambers. I know that I have met him there many times at nearly midnight when I would be working.

Q. Was it his habit to work nights, or was that only occasionally?—A. Oh, it is his habit.

Q. What do you say as to his judicial temperament and his judicial ability, both?—A. I think it is great.

Q. Have you seen any evidences of bias or partiality in the administration of justice while he sat upon the bench?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You speak of occasions when he would close his eyes, apparently nodding—did you see any evidences in your experiences with him as district attorney when, by reason of any such acts or facts on his part, he appeared not to be attentive to everything that was transpiring?—A. No, sir; he always had an intelligent grasp on all the proceedings.

Q. Did he ever, to your knowledge, fail to rule promptly upon any objection or upon any question presented to the court?—A. Not when I was present.

Q. Did he ever fail to show a quick, ready comprehension of the exact question that was raised or presented?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever known Judge Hanford to have been under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your term of office immediately preceded that of Elmer E. Todd?—A. Well, Mr. Sullivan, I think, was in for two months—two or three months.

Mr. Hughes. That is all.

Mr. McCoy. Would you say, by any comparison that you have been able to make with the judges here or in other parts of the country, that the amount of time that Judge Hanford put on his judicial work was extraordinary?

A. I would have to answer that, Mr. McCoy, by reference, when I was United States attorney, to the amount of work that each district had done, and I think there are only two other districts in the United States that compared with this for the volume of business. I think one was the southern district of New York and one was in Pennsylvania.

Q. Do you mean that you tabulated the amount of work done?—A. I gathered it from the reports to the Attorney General of the United States.

Q. The number of cases tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And disposed of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, take it outside of the Federal courts and get into the State courts—would you say that Judge Hanford worked more hours than hundreds of other judges in the United States?—A. He works more hours than those local judges out here do.

Q. Do you know that the local judges here do not work nights?—A. Oh, occasionally; but they do not do the amount of work that Judge Hanford does.

Q. Does the judge of any court who has to sit from October to June continuously have to work nights and nearly every night in order to keep up with his work?—A. In a measure.

Q. Well, in a measure, and in a great measure; don't they have to do it almost continuously?—A. I don't think you will find the local courts do that as much.

Q. Do you mean the local courts here in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know about the judges or the courts in other parts of the country, do you?—A. No; certainly, I have no experience there whatever.

Mr. Higgins. Is it not true, Mr. Frye, that the work that devolves on the Federal judge depends very much on the character of the district that he presides over?—A. Certainly.

Q. That is to say, in a district which is a seaport district and also on the international, or near the international, boundary line, and in a new country where land questions and mining-law questions arise, much more work, in the very nature of things, devolves upon a judge presiding in that district than upon one who presides in some of the older districts of the country?—A. Certainly; he meets every phase of the law here.

Q. Is it not also true that in admiralty practice, which is a peculiar practice and one in which few lawyers are qualified, or do as a matter of fact engage in, that the greater amount of the testimony is frequently taken before a commissioner or examiner, and that all of it has to be reviewed by the judge?—A. That is true.

Q. Is it also true that in the last few years Congress has passed legislation with reference to the white-slave traffic, to the guaranteeing of pure food, railroad rate legislation, and other legislation analagous to that, which has increased the amount of business which would be transacted by a Federal judge?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know about the rate regulation.

Q. How is that?—A. I do not know about the rate regulation. I think that goes to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. You have spoken of the reports to the Attorney General?—A. Yes.

Q. That, of course, would be accessible to the committee, and if it is it will furnish a record of the amount of cases tried and the amount disposed of in this judicial district, will it not?—A. Yes, sir; the United States attorney has to make an annual report.

Q. In this district as well as in all the other districts of the country, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by a consultation with that annual report of the Attorney General, which reports the business in all the judicial districts of the country, it is a matter of mathematics, almost, to make an absolutely correct comparison from the official records?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand your answer, it merely states your conclusion that in your opinion the judge's appearance on the bench, his apparent napping, was due to exhaustion?—A. I would say that.

Q. Overwork?—A. Overwork and lack of sleep.

Q. Overwork and the exhaustion that follows from overwork?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you say that on those occasions his mind was always keenly alert?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you reconcile those two statements? That if his appearance of lethargy and sleepiness, or sleeping, was due to exhaustion, would it be possible for him not to sleep and to be mentally and keenly alert?—A. I would not call it an appearance of lethargy, Mr. Graham; but always on those occasions I have watched him carefully myself and he always had a grasp on the proceedings, always.

Q. In other words, his mind on those occasions acted as if he were not exhausted?—A. Apparently so; yes, sir.

Q. Yet you say that his appearance, in your judgment, was due to exhaustion?—A. I would say that; that is the way that I would feel sometimes.

Q. Well, do you see in those two positions any contradiction?—A. There might be, but in his case he always had a grasp of everything.

Q. It was not his body that was tired, but his mind, if he was tired at all?—A. Well, I do not know; he used to ride the bicycle a great deal and get tired that way, and things of that kind.

Q. Do you mean by that that his appearance of sleep or exhaustion was due to physical exertion?—A. It might be; I don't know.

Q. Have you an opinion on that point?—A. No; I have not, only I know he has a great——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is not the impression you wanted to convey at first?—A. No; certainly not.

Q. It was the vast amount of judicial work——A. Yes.

Q. Of mental work——A. Yes, sir.

Q. To which you attributed his exhaustion and his demeanor——A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or his apparent demeanor on the bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Yet, as I understand you, while he appeared to the ordinary person to be napping or sleeping, and that appearance was due to exhaustion, mental exhaustion, still his mind was entirely alert and keen and active, and he was not mentally exhausted?—A. It was always alert; I could not say whether it was exhausted or not.

Q. If it was exhausted it could not have been alert, could it?—A. He was always alert.

Q. Now, do you see some contradiction in that?—A. I do; I see the point.

Q. Can you give any explanation of it?—A. I can not, sir. I have studied that a great deal myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not true, rather, that Judge Hanford's peculiarities were evidence of the divorcement of mind from body, and of simply a physical relaxation in order that his mind might be unhampered by bodily fatigue of long hours of labor?

A. I could not express an opinion on that, Mr. Hughes.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not getting into the psychological field.

The WITNESS. I could not answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. One witness has stated that even when he was apparently sleeping his mind was so constituted that he could think of three distinct things and reason about them at one and the same time; do you agree with that?

A. Well, I never saw any particular instance of that, as I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Frye.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Frye, you have been asked about the litigation incident to the white-slave laws; was there a good deal of that work in this district?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was there a large amount of litigation growing out of the laws affecting the Indians?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Various laws affecting the Indians?—A. Yes, sir; both criminal and civil.

Q. What is peculiar to the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the immigration laws—the exclusion act?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Particularly in relation to the Chinese?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a great deal of that class of litigation?—A. Yes, sir; a great deal.

Q. The practice in this district in respect to equity cases was that all the testimony was taken out of court, and that in the examination and in the determination of equity cases the court had to read the evidence and then require briefs upon the facts and the law, and examine those for the purpose of deciding the case?—A. That is the practice; yes.

Q. Briefs in addition to the oral argument?—A. Yes.

Q. Which briefs had to give a synopsis or analysis of all the facts?—A. Yes, sir; to be printed.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you know any district where that is not the practice?

Mr. HUGHES. I am merely trying to show the amount of work——

Mr. MCCOY. There is nothing unusual in that, is there?

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing unusual at all.

Mr. MCCOY. Just what every judge does.

Mr. HUGHES. Only as bearing on certain questions which were asked and which I want now to ask the witness for the purpose of explaining.

Q. As a matter of fact, aside from the terms fixed by the law at which the ordinary business before the court in the trial of cases of all kinds before the court took place, was Judge Hanford's time occupied during the entire year in the interims between the trials or between the terms, rather?—A. Yes, sir; that was the time that he handled the equity and the admiralty cases, ordinarily, and examined the records.

Q. During the period of your incumbency in office when you were brought in close relationship with Judge Hanford, do you know of a time when he ever had any vacation at any season of the year?—A. No, sir.

Q. You practiced law a number of years before coming to this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. There is not any fixed term or terms; there are not any terms of court prescribed by the statute, except that the court must be convened on a certain day?

A. That is what we call the November and the May terms.

Q. And they they run on as long as the business of the court lasts.—A. And while we were in the whole district we had an October term——

Q. And these admiralty and equity cases were being considered in term time, then?—A. Certainly, whenever he had the leisure out of the regular trial work.

Q. Whenever he had the leisure, but it was part of the ordinary business of the court to hear equity and admiralty cases, and he heard them in term time?—A. Except that they were always heard when there was no jury tirals on—the testimony was taken and he examined the records.

Q. Well, that is what would happen in every district?—A. Yes.

Q. It is a usual, regular thing?—A. Certainly, in Federal courts.

Q. You never heard of anything different anywhere else?—A. Certainly.

Mr. Higgins. If you can recall readily, I wish you would state when the State of Washington was divided into two districts?—A. It was in 1905, I do not remember the exact date.

Q. When was the additional district judge for the western district provided for?—A. Judge Donworth, I think, about three years ago.

Q. 1909?—A. Somewhere along there; I don't know exactly, but about three years ago, I think.

Mr. McCoy. Do you know whether or not it is a fact that in the State of New Jersey when there was a single Federal judge there, there was more admiralty cases tried than there was by Judge Hanford in the State of Washington?—A. I could not say that; the Attorney General's report will show.

Q. I refer you for that statement to the history which was furnished me the other day—the biography of Judge Hanford, where that statement was made—I do not know it myself.—A. I don't know.

The Chairman. We are getting back to New Jersey now, where the judges always keep awake—there are too many mosquitoes there.

Mr. McCoy. We have other things to keep them awake besides mosquitoes.

The Chairman. Mr. Frye, on that question of the amount of work, which you have specially remembered and know about, could you tell us how many days he held court each year?—A. No; I could not.

Q. Will the report to the Attorney General tell that?—A. I think it would. Well, that would only, of course, apply to the Government work and would not apply to the private cases.

Q. What do you mean by private cases?—A. "John Smith v. John Jones."

Q. You mean litigants in this court?—A. Yes.

Q. In which the United States was not a party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell us how many days altogether?—A. I could not, Mr. Graham.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the chairman, for the information of the chairman, that we anticipated that that might be of interest, and we have taken steps to secure from the clerks, from their records, the facts covered by the question; that is to say, the actual days on which he held court in the various districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Will that report show whether he held court all the day, or just during motion hours?

Mr. HUGHES. I can not tell you as to what it will show. We have asked them to make it—showing how many days he held court.

The CHAIRMAN. And the court rule was to convene at 10 and sit until 12 and then convene at 2 and sit until 5, making five hours of a court day when the court sat a full day—that is not exhausting?

A. No; not in itself.

Q. What would you say of a judge who held court 10½ months the year from 9 in the morning until 12 and from half past 1 to 6 and who did an appellate court duty in addition to that?—A. Pretty good worker.

Q. On your theory he would not be awake on the bench at all, would he?—A. That is not my theory; I am not testifying as to any theory, but just what occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; are there any further questions of Mr. Frye?

F. M. LATHE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name to the committee.

A. Fred M. Lathe.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-one years.

Q. What is your occupation or profession?—A. I am deputy United States marshal.

Q. How long have you been deputy marshal, Mr. Lathe?—A. Since 1902.

Q. Ten years?—A. Ten years this fall.

Q. Did you hold any other official position at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Been attached to the court of which Judge Hanford is presiding judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has he been all that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you go to other courts with him, to Tacoma, or Bellingham, or other points?—A. I go to Bellingham usually, and occasionally to Tacoma.

Q. How often did you go to Bellingham?—A. I think I have been to Bellingham every time that the judge has gone there, except once, since the court was held there.

Q. How many times a year?—A. Twice, I think.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Two years, I think it is—I think it is two years since we have been holding court there.

Q. I mean, how long a time on each trip?—A. Sometimes we were there two days and sometimes four or five—I think we were there five days the last time.

Q. Do your duties keep you in the court room while the court is sitting?—A. Not ordinarily.

Q. What are your duties?—A. My duties—I have charge of the office here under the marshal.

Q. You do the clerical work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your duties keep you in the office as clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Bookkeeping and the like—so that you are in the court room only occasionally?—A. That is all; if there is occasion for the deputy to be in the court room I see that he is there, and if the prisoners are to be brought down I see that they are there at the proper time.

Q. It is not your duty and it has not been your practice to stay in the court during the court business?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what extent have you been in the company of Judge Hanford when the court was not sitting?—A. I have seen him only then when I would happen to meet him in the building and hear him in his office and see him going in and out.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking in your life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I saw him take a couple of drinks at Bellingham three or four years ago; I saw him take, I think it was, two drinks on the train going home from Bellingham.

Q. In Bellingham, where was it, in a saloon or dining room?—A. Hotel.

Q. Hotel bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With company or alone?—A. I think the clerk of the court was with him at the time.

Q. Who?—A. The clerk of his court.

Q. Do you know what he drank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you see him drink on the train, at the table or somewhere else?—A. In the buffet car.

Q. Was he alone or with some one then?—A. He was with three or four others.

Q. Do you know what he drank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him drink at any other time or place than those?

Q. Have you noticed the condition referred to by the witnesses in which the judge appeared when presiding in court at times?—A. Yes.

Q. Describe his appearance on those occasions.—A. You refer to the times that they——

Q. I refer to the testimony of the witnesses as to his condition when he appeared to be napping or asleep.—A. Yes, sir; he would close his eyes and hold his head forward like that [illustrating], his chin on his chest, for a brief space of time, and then open his eyes and look around. He has a habit of just stroking his chin; I presume he is thinking about something or about to say something at the time; he has always—he almost invariably does it when he is about to say something.

Q. How long does his head remain on his chest or drop forward?—A. Only for a very brief space of time; a few seconds, maybe.

Q. On any of those occasions would his breathing be audible?—A. No, sir; not to me.

Q. To what extent would that continue during the time that he sat on the bench?—A. Some days he would be addicted to that habit or indulge in it more than on other days.

Q. Was there any time of the day when it was more apparent than other times?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. What time?—A. Between, maybe, half past 11 and 12 and a half an hour after, say, half past 2 or 3, or something of that kind.

Q. Was his appearance on those occasions such as to attract the attention of those not familiar with him?—A. I think possibly it was; yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell the committee what the impression of a person not acquainted with him would probably be from seeing him in that condition on the bench?—A. I think possibly, very likely at first, the people would think he might be dozing, but I doubt very much whether a person could remain in the court during the entire session of the court and come away with that impression.

Q. Was his appearance as you saw it and as it impressed you on those occasions such as to lead an ordinary person to think that he might be under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I should think not.

Q. On the occasions when you saw him drinking, in your opinion, did he show any of the appearances of being under the influence of what he drank?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many drinks did you see him take within a short time, at any one time?—A. Two, I think.

Q. That was in a hotel bar at Bellingham?—A. Yes, sir; I think he took two drinks in the hotel bar on one occasion, and I think he took two drinks on the train.

Q. Were you present on both those occasions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell the committee, if you have any recollection about it, what it was that he drank?—A. I have no idea; it was liquor of some kind, I presume.

Q. It was not water?—A. No, sir; it was not water; it was liquor; that is, I presume it was.

Q. That is, you mean some preparation of whisky?—A. Yes, sir; apparently; maybe; I don't know.

Q. You are not a lawyer?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Have you been about the Federal courthouse during your term of office very frequently at nighttime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Enough so you could say to the committee whether or not you are familiar with Judge Hanford's habits of laboring at night in his office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the fact?—A. Why, during the time that we were in the old building at Fourth and Marion Street, from July, 1908—I think we moved to this building in 1909, in April; I was in the office frequently; I had to be in my office, which was next to Judge Hanford's chambers, and I frequently saw the judge coming upstairs and going into his office and remaining there until after—well, he was there when I went away—I could hear him in his office; of course, I do not know what he was doing there.

Q. Either I misunderstood you or you made a slip of the tongue—how long did the Federal court sit at the building at the corner of Fourth and Marion?—A. I don't know how many years. Of course, we moved from there in April, 1909, I think.

Q. You spoke of 1908.—A. In July, 1908; from that time on until the time that we moved I had a great deal of night work to do, more than I had previous to that time.

Q. Well, did you observe him previous to that time working nights?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What time would you leave your office on those occasions?

A. I would leave between half past 10 and 11, or half past 11.

Q. What time would you come back after the day's work?—A. I would get back about half past 7.

Q. What time would the judge get back?—A. About 8.

Q. And usually what time did he leave?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Did he never leave before you?—A. Yes, I think he has, but more times he did not.

Q. How many evenings a week would you come back there?—A. Possibly I would average two nights a week right straight along; it was not two nights every week, you understand; some weeks I had to work every night, and other weeks I would not be there.

Q. I understand you; some weeks you would work every night in the week, and then other weeks you would not be there at all.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would depend a good deal on whether there was a grand jury sitting?—A. Yes, sir; and extra work.

Q. Mostly grand jury work; when you had witnesses to look after?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to get out indictments, and things of that sort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when there was criminal trial work on, of course you would be there too?—A. Yes.

Q. The civil cases tried in court did not affect you very much?—A. We have to serve processes in civil cases, writs, and to get the witnesses.

Q. They do not keep you going like the criminal work?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that probably most of your night work was done during the sessions of the grand jury and the trial of criminal cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is about right?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Was there a couch in the judge's room?—A. I don't know whether there was or not.

Q. Do you know whether he rested in that?—A. No; I do not.

Q. You have no knowledge as to what he was doing there, except he was there?—A. I could hear him occasionally—I could hear him walking up and down the office, next to the one that I was in.

Q. There was no reason in the world why you should pay any particular attention to him, or to what he was doing there?—A. No, sir.

HENRY LANDES, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name, please.

A. Henry Landes.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live in Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I have lived here 6 years; previous to that I lived at Port Townsend 30 years.

Q. Port Townsend in this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you in any business now or profession?—A. I am.

Q. What is it?—A. I am president of the Landes Estate Co.

Q. What is the nature of that corporation?—A. Well, it is a family corporation looking after its own interests in the way of land.
Q. It is an incorporation?—A. It is an incorporation; yes, sir.
Q. Holding and owning land in this State?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What character of lands?—A. Well, buildings and town lots and acreage.
Q. That is really a sort of a trusteeship—a family estate?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you are the manager?—A. I am the manager.
Q. Are you a lawyer by profession or were you at any time?—A. No, sir.
Q. Colonel, do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him for 35 years.
Q. Casually or intimately?—A. Fairly intimately.
Q. Have you had any business association with him?—A. None whatever.
Q. Any social relations?—A. Yes.
Q. Do you and he belong to the same social organizations?—A. I belong to the same club.
Q. What is that, the Rainier?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you been members of it together?—A. Altogether about 10 years.
Q. Did you meet and spend some time together in the club?—A. Well, occasionally.
Q. To what extent have you attended court presided over by Judge Hanford?—A. I have never been in court but once.
Q. Were you in there then on business or merely as a visitor?—A. I was in there then on business.
Q. Did you have any litigation before Judge Hanford?—A. I did.
Q. In which the corporation or yourself individually was a party?—A. Myself individually.
Q. Was that the only occasion on which you had litigation before the judge?—A. The only time.
Q. Have you had any other social relations with him, such as visiting him or he visiting you at your home?—A. Well, he visited me once at my home; that was at Port Townsend.
Mr. HUGHES. Port Townsend in this State?
A. Port Townsend.
The CHAIRMAN. How long ago?
A. Let's see; it must have been 10 years ago, I think.
Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. I have.
Q. Where?—A. At the club.
Q. To what extent?—A. Well, once in a while he would take a cocktail with his friends—myself and probably others.
Q. How frequently have you seen that happen?—A. Very seldom.
Q. Have you ever seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Never.
Q. Have you ever seen him in the city here late at night?—A. Yes.
Q. How late?—A. Why, I have seen him at late as 11 o'clock.
Q. Do you recall any particular occasion?—A. Well, one particular occasion was, I think, when we had a banquet; we were at a banquet together when the fleet was here—Admiral Thomas.

Mr. HUGHES. It is difficult for me to hear what the witness is saying; if the chairman would suggest to him to talk a little louder.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the best you can, Colonel.

The WITNESS. My throat is a little affected.

Q. How long ago was that, Colonel?—A. It must have been—I don't remember exactly—to my best recollection four or five years ago.

Q. Have you seen the judge down town anywhere else than at banquets, at night?—A No, I can not recall—yes, I have seen him down town at the club.

Q. How late at the club?—A. Eleven o'clock.

Q. How often?—A. Well, not very often.

Q. That is what I want to get at—was it frequent or seldom?—A. Very seldom.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. No questions.

E. C. MCDONALD, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. E. C. McDonald.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Spokane, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there since 1897.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. I am engaged in the practice of law.

Q. And you have been how long?—A. Since 1897.

Q. All that time in Spokane?—A. Yes.

Q. Spokane is not now in the same Federal judicial district as Seattle?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was the district separated or divided?—A. In 1905, when Judge Whitson, I think, was appointed and assumed his duties; I think in April, 1905.

Q. Seven years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Slightly ever since I have been in the state since 1890, and much more intimately from 1897 to 1905 while he was holding court at Spokane.

Q. How much of the time did the judge hold court at Spokane before the division of the district?—A. There were two terms a year over there and he held court.

Q. How much actual court?—A. I should say from two to four weeks in each term. You will understand, Mr. Chairman, that I have not looked into this matter at all.

Q. We understand that and we expect only approximation.—A. I should say from two to four weeks at each term.

Q. That would average three weeks each term, six weeks a year.—A. I should think so.

Q. That is your best recollection?—A. That is my best recollection.

Q. To what extent did you attend court presided over by Judge Hanford at other points than Spokane?—A. I don't think I ever appeared before Judge Hanford except in Spokane and a few times in Seattle when I came over here on some emergency matter, such as a temporary injunction or something or other.

Q. Merely some motion?—A. Yes, sir; I never tried a case, I don't think, before Judge Hanford in Seattle.

Q. To what extent have you had a general observation of the judge for any length of time otherwise than when he held court at Spokane.

A. He has been to my house at Spokane and I have been to his in Seattle; I have been at his club here and he has been to my club in Spokane.

Q. How much have you been at his home in Seattle?—A. I think two or three times only.

Q. And he at yours in Spokane?—A. About the same number of times.

Q. And how frequently have you met him at the Rainier Club?—A. I have not met Judge Hanford much for the last few years, but from 1905 to 1909 I was in Seattle a great deal and I used to go to the Rainier Club and see him four or five times in the course of the year.

Q. Are you a member of it?—A. The Rainier Club? No, sir.

Q. You are just a guest?—A. I was sometimes a guest of Judge Hanford and sometimes a guest of the late Gov. McGraw and other members of the club.

Q. And how frequently was the judge with you at your club in Spokane?—A. Some terms of court I would see him two or three times a week.

Q. At the club?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the name of your club?—A. The Spokane Club.

Q. Have you observed the manner in which Judge Hanford presided in court in Spokane?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent if at all on those occasions did the judge appear to be drowsy or napping?—A. Well he did not appear to me to be that way at all. I have seen Judge Hanford sitting with his eyes closed, but I knew him so well that it never occurred to me that he was asleep.

Q. Describe just how he looked on those occasions?—A. Well, he sat there and closed his eyes just as I have seen a great many other judges do.

Q. And what position would his head be in?—A. Sometimes he would have his head back on the high chair, about like you are sitting there now.

Q. And at other times?—A. At other times he might drop his head a little.

Q. Well, was his appearance such that a person unacquainted with him might think he was asleep?—A. I think a person who came into the court room and saw him for just a few seconds might gain the impression that he was dozing; but among the lawyers that thing never obtained.

Q. How much of the time did he spend that way?—A. Oh, just a little.

Q. What were the court hours at Spokane?—A. From 10 to 12 and from 2 to 5.

Q. From 10 to 12 in the forenoon and 2 to 5 in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge at any time drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At the Spokane Club and the Rainier Club.

Q. You saw him drink more or less, I presume, on every occasion on which you and he visited either club.—A. No; I would not say that.

Q. Well, give us the fact, whatever it is, how frequently?—A. I have spent a good many evenings with Judge Hanford at the Spokane Club, and dined with him, and on most of the occasions he would take a drink.

Q. What was his drink?—A. Well, sometimes it was a cocktail and sometimes a highball.

Q. Some preparation of whisky?—A. I should say so.

Q. How many drinks have you seen him take within a comparatively short time on any one occasion?—A. I don't think I ever saw him take more than two or three in the entire evening.

Q. Did you ever see Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. No, sir; I never did.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness?

Mr. HUGHES. You are at present first assistant United States district attorney at Spokane?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the eastern district of Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In describing Judge Hanford's appearance on the bench, his habit of closing his eyes, let me ask you if on any such occasion you ever observed that Judge Hanford appeared not to be cognizant of all that was transpiring in the case before him?—A. In all my experience—in my opinion, he was grasping on everything that was going on and heard everything that was going on.

Q. When questions arose for the action of the court in the course of the conduct of a suit, did he rule promptly?—A. Very quickly.

Q. And what was the nature of his ruling as to clearness and accuracy of it?—A. He was perfectly clear and accurate.

Q. What would you say as to the ability of Judge Hanford; judicial ability of Judge Hanford; judicial and legal ability of Judge Hanford?—A. We have always regarded him as one of the ablest judges in the West.

Q. What would you say as to his judicial temperament?—A. I think it is a very fine one.

Q. And what as to his partiality or impartiality between litigants before his court?—A. I never saw him display any partiality at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I presume you have seen but little of him since the division of the district?

A. Very little. I don't think I have appeared before Judge Hanford since 1905, when we got our new district over there.

Q. You are now assistant district attorney there?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are excused.

WILL H. THOMPSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your name.

A. Will H. Thompson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Thompson?—A. Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived in this city?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. Are you still in the active practice of your profession?—A. Yes; reasonably active.

Q. How long have you been practicing law?—A. Forty-one years.
Q. Mr. Thompson, I assume that you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; and I have for 23 years past.
Q. Since he came to this part of the State?—A. Since I came.
Q. Since you came?—A. Yes.
Q. Have you had much business in his court from time to time?—A. Yes, sir; I have been quite actively engaged in litigation.
Q. What was the nature of it?—A. General; every branch of the business, almost. For eight years I was the western counsel for the Great Northern Railway Co., and all our cases were brought in his court; or at least transferred to his court, and then, generally, in all my practice it has been quite largely in the United States court.
Q. Do you have any other railroad clients?—A. No, sir; none other.
Q. How long a time did you say you represented the Great Northern?—A. Eight years, or a little more.
Q. What years were those?—A. Beginning in 1906—or beginning in 1896, I should say, and ending in 1904.
Q. To what extent did you associate with Judge Hanford when not in court?—A. Well, occasionally, you might say, only; I never was of an extremely social nature, and usually was alone after my working hours, but I was very frequently in Judge Hanford's association.
Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir; I am not now, but I was for many years.
Q. Were you a frequent visitor to the Rainier Club rooms?—A. Yes, sir; during all my time.
Q. Did you meet the judge there?—A. Frequently.
Q. Was there any place else except the court room and the club where he and you met?—A. I met him at times at the Firloch Club, another social club.
Q. How do you spell that?—A. F-i-r-l-o-c-h.
Q. Is that still in existence?—A. I think it has been merged with another club now.
Q. When did you meet him there?—A. Well, I met him there from along about 1898 until 1901, or 1902.
Q. Mr. Thompson, there has been testimony produced before us tending to show that when Judge Hanford was on the bench he had a habit of closing his eyes, sometimes leaning his head forward until his chin touched his breast, and that to one unacquainted with him he appeared to be napping; I mention that to you because I know you have not been in the court room.—A. No, sir; I have not been here.
Q. Have you noticed that peculiarity of the judge while he was holding court?—A. Never so pronounced as your question would indicate. I never saw him with his chin upon his breast.
Q. Or near it?—A. Or near it; I have seen him frequently close his eyes in a way like that [showing], but I have never seen him upon the bench with his head dropped as your question would indicate.
Q. Have you ever seen him on the bench when an ordinary observer unacquainted with him might think he was napping—might reasonably think that he was napping?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What position would he then be in?—A. Judge Hanford usually sat with his face nearer his desk than is ordinary; in other words, he generally sat rather low in his chair and with his head nearer the desk, and I have seen him——

Q. Were his hands and elbows on the desk, or not?—A. Usually one hand and arm upon the desk—very frequently in that condition, with a pencil in his hand.

Q. Go on now.—A. And I have seen him close his eyes in that way for a few moments, but never under such circumstances as indicated to me that he was sleeping, but I can see how a stranger to him might have gathered such an idea, but I never reached any such an idea.

Q. How recently have you practiced in the court with Judge Hanford on the bench?—A. Well, this session; early in the session.

Q. And constantly at intervals prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking any intoxicating liquors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently?—A. Five or six times in the 23 years that I have known him.

Q. Do you sometimes drink liquor yourself?—A. Occasionally.

Q. When were the occasions when you saw him drinking?—A. I drank beer with him once at the Hotel Spokane; I took a Manhattan cocktail with him and with Judge Burke at the Rainier Club at one time; I drank a glass with him at a banquet at Tacoma at one time.

Q. I beg your pardon, but what I am trying to inquire into are his habits, not yours.—A. My habits are perfectly open.

Q. You are telling us only your own habits. Now when you say you drank with him do you mean that you also drank?—A. When I say I drank with him I mean that we together drank.

Q. Are those the only occasions on which you saw him drinking? A. With one exception, yes; he and I drank together at the Firloch Club once.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you been with him down town late at night, say, after 9 or 10 o'clock?—A. Never in any instance except in the attendance upon the State bar banquet or some other occasion.

Q. Or function?—A. Or function or occasion of that character.

Q. Have you ever drank with him or seen him drink elsewhere than at the clubs or banquets?—A. Once I drank with him at a saloon somewhere on Third Avenue. It has been so long ago that I forget just the particular location.

Q. Well, it is not important?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Thompson, you say you have practiced in the city of Seattle and in the State of Washington for the last 23 years.

A. I have.

Q. Where did you practice prior to that time?—A. Indiana—Crawfordsville, Ind.

Q. For how long?—A. Twenty-one years. I lived there 21 years, but I practiced there 18 years.

Q. At Crawfordsville, Ind.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before your appointment as western counsel for the Great Northern road you had practiced in this State how long?—A. From 1889 till 1896—seven years.

Q. Did you have a large amount of damage litigation during that time?—A. Yes, sir; reasonably.

Q. For which side?—A. Well, I was generally for the plaintiff until my connection with the Great Northern service.

Q. Were many of those cases tried in the Federal court before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; a great many of them.

Q. Will you state to this committee what Judge Hanford's judicial attitude has been with respect to damage cases, as between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that question refer to his personal practice as he has stated it?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It reads generally—you asked him "has been" instead of "had been."

Mr. HUGHES. I assume that the witness will answer the question from his personal knowledge; I did not propound my question with any other thought in view.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, if it applies to the period covered in the former question.

Mr. HUGHES. I mean to have it to apply to the entire period, because he defended cases during the time he was representing the railroad company, and I am asking him to include the instances where he prosecuted cases on behalf of the plaintiff.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I do not know how to answer it other than to say that I never saw a judge or practiced before one that was more entirely unbiased, fair, and entirely judicial in his attitude and rulings than Judge Hanford has been.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you state again when you began to be counsel for the Great Northern?

The WITNESS. In February, 1896.

Mr. HUGHES. Have you ever observed Judge Hanford fail to note all that transpired in the conduct of a case before him that would require the attention of a judge?

A. I never observed anything of the kind.

Q. What about the promptness and the clearness and accuracy of his rulings upon questions that arose before him?—A. Well, his rulings always seemed to me to be extremely prompt and vigorous and given in no uncertain way. Whether they were for you or against you, they were unmistakable.

Q. What was his attitude in respect to giving full opportunity to make a complete and fair record so that his decisions might be reviewed?—A. That was characteristic of Judge Hanford; he would hear you whether he had any faith in your position or not; he would give you a patient hearing—that was always true of him.

Q. Do you know anything about the volume of business that Judge Hanford had to transact, the industry that he used or the lack of it that he exhibited in his judicial service?—A. Well, it was extremely large in this district. He was a very hard worked man and a marvel of industry in the disposition of cases. Judge Hanford worked late and early; when we attorneys would not work Judge Hanford worked and disposed of the business.

Q. Mr. Thompson, one witness testified to having been a comrade of Judge Hanford's in the Army; do you know anything about whether Judge Hanford was in the Army?—A. I can not know, but I thoroughly understand from his history that he was not in the Army, but I can not know because I was not with him during that time.

Q. You yourself were in the Army?—A. Yes, in one army.

Q. Which army?—A. The Confederate.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not remember meeting him?

The WITNESS. I have no recollection of meeting him—there were others, though.

Mr. HUGHES. You are the author of High Tide at Gettysburg.

A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

DUDLEY G. WOOTEN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell the committee your full name.

A. Dudley G. Wooten.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Wooten?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Nine years this coming August, next month.

Q. Prior to that where did you live?—A. Dallas, Tex.

Q. You are a professional man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. How long have you practiced the law?—A. About 30 years.

Q. Are you still in active practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you practiced in this city?—A. Since I came here, in August, 1903.

Q. I assume you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Well, I got first to know Judge Hanford officially a few months after I came here, probably three or four months; I do not know just when I did meet him first personally, probably about the same time I first appeared in his court.

Q. To what extent have you had business before him?—A. Well, I have tried quite a good many cases before him in the course of my practice, both civil and criminal, and admiralty cases.

Q. I suppose you have been in his court only when you had business there?—A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you have not been here to any extent, at least, when you were not occupied at your own business?—A. No, sir; I have not been in court except on my own business.

Q. Now, outside of your court work, to what extent have you been in his society?—A. How?

Q. In his company or society?—A. Well, not a great deal; I only met Judge Hanford at the meetings of the bar association; I occasionally associated with him, but not to any great extent.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any club or association or social organization of which he is a member—of which you and he are members?—A. No; I don't think so; I have seen Judge Hanford at the Rainier Club; I had occasion once or twice to go there to find him, and I found him there at night when I was seeking an injunctive order in pending suits. I am not a member of the club and I never met him there except in a business capacity.

Q. On what occasions would you meet him outside of the court or court hours?—A. Well, I traveled with him between here and Spokane once to a meeting of the State bar association, and I have met him on the street cars once in a while. I met him several times going to Tacoma on the interurban to attend court over there.

Q. To what extent have you been in his company in the late hours of the evening, say, from 9 to 1 o'clock?—A. I had occasion to hunt him up at night late, at 10 or 11 or 12 o'clock, where I would get orders from him, and get him to sign injunctive orders—orders in matters pending in his court; that is the only time I know that I saw him late at night.

Q. How often did that happen?—A. A half a dozen times.

Q. Where would you find him?—A. I found him in his chambers twice, I think, and once at the Rainier Club, and once I went to his residence.

Q. Mr. Wooten, you have heard some testimony, I think, as to some of his peculiarities while presiding in court.—A. Yes.

Q. Particularly with reference to his apparent napping; have you observed that?—A. Well, I observed that the first time I ever appeared in his court that he had the habit of sitting with his head down, sometimes with his hand kind of rubbing his face a good deal or holding his mustache, and sometimes he appeared drowsy. I soon discovered, though, it was simply a peculiarity, because he seemed to know what was going on pretty well, I noticed.

Q. Do you recall when you first observed that appearance of drowsiness?—A. Sir?

Q. Did you observe that appearance of drowsiness at once when you first became acquainted with him, or was it later?—A. Well, I noticed it, I think, the first case I ever tried before him. It did not strike me as anything especially peculiar because I had known a judge—one of the best judges I ever knew—who had the same peculiarity—Judge Moore, of the Supreme Court of Texas, had exactly the same peculiarity, and I did not, for that reason—it did not strike me as anything specially peculiar—it did not impress me specially.

Q. It was not the first instance of the kind you had seen?—A. No.

Q. But it was the second?—A. Yes; well, I have known a good many men along about his years that had it.

Q. To the same extent?—A. I do not know that I ever knew two men who had it to the same extent that he and Judge Moore had. That is the judge I have spoken of. I will say that it did not impress me exactly as drowsiness, but I thought that he was not paying attention to the case, but I soon found out that that was not true.

Q. What would you attribute it to?

A. Well, I just attributed it to a habit of shutting his eyes to think, and it just became somewhat of a habit of his.

Q. It did not occur to you, then, that it was the result of severe mental labor?—A. Well, it might have been due to that. I discovered very soon after I came in contact with him officially, that Judge Hanford was a man that worked a great deal in chambers, working at night a great deal.

Q. How do you know?—A. When I first came to Seattle I roomed up above where the old Federal court building was, and I had noticed often a light burning in his room very late at night, and sometimes I would see him moving to and fro; it was up in the building, at Marion and Fourth, I think it was; and I had occasion to go to his chambers sometimes before the court met or after the court met, and he looked like a man who had lost a good deal of sleep.

Q. The question I asked you is just on that line. Did you attribute his apparent drowsiness in court to his loss of sleep?—A. And hard work—and his work, and then more particularly I attributed it to personal habit that he had of shutting his eyes and apparently closing out the world; and if I had not been formerly accustomed to seeing the same thing in another judge, whom I considered a very capable judge and one of the best judges I ever knew, I might have thought that he was not paying any attention.

Q. Am I right in concluding from your answers that it was your opinion that while he seemed drowsy and tired, he was not so in fact?—A. I found out very soon that he was not; that his mind was very active and that he heard everything that was going on, because he really ruled on every question that arose with perfect intelligence and, in fact, with more than ordinary quickness.

Q. And that the apparent drowsiness and sleepiness was not real?—A. No, sir; I found it was not.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink intoxicants?—A. I think the only time I was ever in his company when there was any drinking was on one night I went to see him at the Rainier Club and drinks were ordered. I do not remember what he drank. My recollection is that it was some light drink, possibly lemonade; I do not remember now.

Q. Have you any recollection about it?—A. No, sir; I do not remember what he drank, but he did take a drink of some kind.

Q. I did not ask you to guess at it.—A. That was the only occasion I was ever in his company when there was any occasion to drink.

Q. You were there, then, I think you stated before, to get some injunctive order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he sign the order for you there at the club?—A. I went over the case with him and read the bill in equity to him and stated the nature of the case, and then he listened to it very attentively and asked a few questions about it and asked whether I had the order prepared, and he read it and signed it.

Q. Did he do that for you on more than one occasion?—A. Yes; I got two orders from him at his residence on——

Q. (Interrupting.) Who was the petitioner?—A. Well, in the case in the Rainier Club it was a case of G. W. Phelps against Whitney and others.

Q. It was an individual?—A. Yes, sir; it was a controversy arising between a member of the Order of Railway Employees and the order—the lodge—a local lodge——

Q. Involving the rights of a member of the order?—A. (Continuing.) The Brotherhood of Railway Employees, I think they called it.

Q. And what particular line of employment was he in—a conductor, brakeman, or engineer?—A. It is this order that had its headquarters at Cleveland. F. H. Morrisy was at the head of it. This man Whitney, who was one of the defendants—I think he was the vice president or manager. It is a national order.

Q. It was on a petition involving the rights of a member of the order as against the rights of the order?—A. Yes, sir; they had attempted to expel him from the order and he was seeking an injunction against it.

Q. Against his expulsion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember any other order he signed for you at the Rainier Club?—A. No; that was the only order he ever signed there. I do not remember what the others were at his residence. It is a good long while ago.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge down in the city after 9 o'clock at night—not at the club or at a banquet or anything of that kind, but down town?—A. No, sir; I don't think I ever did. I do not remember ever seeing him on the street at night.

Q. Did you ever drink with him or see him drinking at any other time or place than the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions, gentlemen?

Mr. MCCOY. Has Judge Hanford a law library at his house?

A. Well, I think he had a few books. I do not remember noticing whether he had an extensive library or not. I know that he had a private library, but I do not remember about the law books. I think he had some law books there.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Wooten, the injunctive orders that you obtained from Judge Hanford were interlocutory restraining orders pending an application for a temporary restraining injunction?—A. Yes, sir; I think they all were.

Q. Have you represented the plaintiffs in personal-injury cases, either civil actions at law or actions in admiralty, before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; a good many.

Q. More than you have the defendant?—A. Quite a number of that sort of cases.

Q. You had more cases of that kind for the plaintiff than for the defendant?—A. Well, they have always been for the plaintiff.

Q. In the light of your own experience before him, tell the committee what has been Judge Hanford's attitude—judicial attitude, I mean—in litigation of that kind, as between the plaintiff and the defendant?—A. Well, I found him to be universally fair. In fact, it seemed to me that in the cases I have had personally before him that he rather leaned to the plaintiff in the case of employees injured in the service of corporations. I have considered his attitude has been a very sympathetic one toward the plaintiff. So much so that in one case I know which I had before him he evinced such a decided sympathy in his charge that I got reversed in the circuit court of appeals after I got a judgment on that ground.

Q. You say the reversal was on that ground?—A. Yes; he took the case away——

Mr. MCCOY. I did not hear that. Will the reporter repeat that?

Whereupon the question and answer are read by the reporter.

A. (Continuing.) Well, he took the case away from the jury, or rather he charged the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, and rather over my protest, because I thought I had a good case to go on the merits, and the circuit court of appeals reversed him and said he should have submitted it to the jury.

Mr. MCCOY. You were for the defendant, then?

A. For the plaintiff.

Q. And he directed a verdict?—A. He directed a verdict for the plaintiff in the case.

Q. And specified the amount which they should give?—A. No; of course he did not specify the amount, but he charged that the plaintiff had made out his case completely and submitted only one issue to the jury, and that was the issue of contributory negligence.

Q. In other words, you wanted the whole case to go to the jury so that they could not predicate any error.—A. I wanted the whole case to go to the jury—I did not care to have it imperiled by having the plaintiff's case—having the defendant practically charged out of court.

Mr. HUGHES. Have you ever known of Judge Hanford being under the influence of liquor?

A. You say did I ever see him under it?

Q. Have you ever known of Judge Hanford being under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. What would you say as to his judicial ability?—A. Well, I consider him a superior judge, and always did.

Q. What would you say as to his judicial temperament?—A. Well, what do you mean exactly by that?

Q. Well, that question has been raised here—it has been charged that he was not a man of judicial temperament, whatever that may mean—now if your knowledge of the English language does not enable you to know what is meant by that, I do not know in what way I can explain it to you.—A. If you mean by that a temperament or disposition to be perfectly fair and to weigh both sides of all questions submitted to him, I would consider that he had a very fine judicial temperament. Sometimes he evinces a little petulance on the bench toward counsel for some, what he considered unnecessary, delay or making trivial objections, that he considered so—he evinces occasionally a little petulance, but I never knew it to go, in my practice or presence, to go to the extent of a ruling that was dictated by anything but what seemed to be a judicial consideration of the merits of the question.

Q. What was his judicial habit in respect to dispatch of business, judicial business?—A. Well, he dispatched business very rapidly.

Q. You spoke of formerly residing in Texas—how long did you practice law there?—A. From the time I was admitted to the bar I practiced law in Texas about 20 years, a little over 20 years.

Q. Constantly?—A. Yes—well, I was in Congress for a while—in politics for a while.

Q. How long were you a Member of Congress?—A. I was in the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh.

Q. Congresses?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

C. F. YEATON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. C. F. Yeaton.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. And you have lived here how long?—A. Twenty-six years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Bailiff of the Federal court.

Q. How long have you been in the Federal court?—A. Continuously about 18 months; I served 6 months one time before that.

Q. Who appointed you?—A. Marshal Jacoby.

Q. What was your business before that time?—A. Why, I had been in the general merchandise nearly all my life.

Q. Here in Seattle?—A. Here and Alaska and Oregon.
Q. Before you were appointed bailiff did you know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. I think 28 or 29 years.
Q. How intimately?—A. Not intimately at all; just simply as a public man.
Q. By observing him?—A. By observing him; that's all.
Q. Where?—A. Here in Seattle.
Q. On the street?—A. On the street and in court. I knew him when he was an attorney at law.
Q. Had you any occasion to be in court except as a mere visitor or caller?—A. No, sir.
Q. Were you ever a juryman or in any way connected with the court prior to the appointment as bailiff?—A. No, sir.
Q. To what extent did you see him in court prior to your appointment?—A. Well, not very much, except that I occasionally visited the court; that is all; and I have seen him on the street and in public speeches and such things as that.
Q. While you were acting as bailiff, what was your duty?—A. Well, mostly in charge of the jurors and in attendance on the court.
Q. Did your duties keep you in court most of the time?—A. Yes, sir; constantly in court when the court was in session.
Q. Has any judge but Judge Hanford presided in the court during that time?—A. Judge Donworth.
Q. But Judge Hanford most of the time?—A. Most of the time, and recently Judge Rudkin.
Q. Have you noticed the peculiarities of the judge's demeanor while presiding of which you have heard testimony here?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When did you first notice his tendency to nap or appear as if he were napping on the bench?—A. Well, I think that was soon after I was appointed bailiff. Occasionally I would notice that he was in that drowsy condition.
Q. Was his appearance such as to lead an ordinary observer who did not know him to think that he was asleep?—A. Well, I should judge they would think he was drowsy—drowsy on the bench at times.
Q. Describe as you saw him what his appearance was.—A. Well, occasionally his head would drop down a little, but he was always in his rulings just as prompt as——
Q. (Interrupting.) I did not ask you about that. Stick to the question. What was his appearance is the question.—A. Well, a sort of drowsy appearance I would say.
Q. Well, what? Indicate that drowsiness.—A. I say his head would drop occasionally.
Q. How frequently?—A. Not very frequently; perhaps two or three times in the course of a forenoon or afternoon.
Q. For how long at the time?—A. I would not judge over two or three seconds at any time.
Q. Have you been with the judge during the time you were bailiff at any places outside of the courthouse?—A. No, sir; only I have met him on the street.
Q. At what hours?—A. Generally at noon or immediately after court.

Q. How late at night have you ever seen him on the street?—A. Never at any time.

Q. Did you ever see the judge drinking any intoxicating liquors?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. No, sir; not in the least.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Did you have occasion to be here in the evenings when terms of court were being held or juries were out?

A. Yes, sir; often when the juries are out at night.

Q. Do you know anything about Judge Hanford's habit of working nights?—A. Yes, sir; most always in his office.

Q. How late?—A. Well, I have seen him there as late as 11 o'clock.

Q. That would be as late as you would be around?—A. Yes, sir; I generally go home before that.

E. C. KILBOURNE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. E. C. Kilbourne.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Kilbourne?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long has that been your home?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Bailiff of the United States court.

Q. For how long?—A. Nearly 11 years.

Q. What was your business before you became bailiff?—A. Chief engineer for the Union Electric Co.

Q. You are a stationary engineer by profession?—A. By trade.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do.

Q. And you have been bailiff in his court for all those years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are your duties?—A. To take care of the juries; to take them to their meals, and to take care of their rooms, and look after them.

Q. Are you on duty in the daytime?—A. Nighttime. When I have a jury I always take care of the jury nighttime.

Q. Are those two bailiffs who have the same duties to perform in that regard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Yourself and Mr. Yeaton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You act in conjunction with one another?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you both present in the court room at the same time or not?—A. As a general thing.

Q. Two bailiffs in the court room at one and the same time?—A. As a general thing; yes, sir; whenever there happens to be a jury out, and then there is the court besides following any other cases, you know.

Q. You are both on duty, too, when you have not juries?—A. No, sir; when there is no court we are not on duty.

Q. Have you observed any peculiarity in Judge Hanford's manner while he presides in court?—A. Not any more than usual that I know of.

Q. Did you ever see other judges presiding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you noticed any difference in his demeanor or attitude while on the bench from that of the other judges?—A. Sometimes he drops his head like that [illustrating] as though he were studying or something of that kind, and I have seen other judges, but not in the United States court, do the same thing.

Q. In the same way?—A. Yes, sir; but not in the United States court—in the county court.

Q. Who?—A. Different ones.

Q. Who, for instance?—A. Ronald.

Q. Who?—A. Ronald, for one.

Q. How do you spell that?—A. R-o-n-a-l-d.

Q. Who else?—A. Judge Main.

Q. And how do you spell that?—A. M-a-i-n.

Q. You think that their attitude and appearance and demeanor on the bench is similar to that of Judge Hanford?—A. Something as though they were studying on some matter or something of that kind.

Q. Is their appearance such as might lead an ordinary observer to think that they were napping?—A. Well, no; I would not think that they were napping; no.

Q. I spoke of an ordinary observer.—A. That is, they might have their eyes closed, of course, as I have seen Judge Hanford do.

Q. Listen to my question. Is the appearance of Judge Hanford and these other gentlemen such as might lead an ordinary observer not acquainted with them to think that they were napping?—A. Well, a man that was not acquainted with them might think they were napping.

Q. And might reasonably think so?—A. Because they were not used to seeing them that way.

Q. To what extent have you observed Judge Hanford when he was not holding court?—A. I met him on the street several times.

Q. At what hour?—A. In the daytime.

Q. Did you ever see him on the street in the nighttime?—A. Not only as I had a jury out.

Q. Well, on that occasion, where did you see him on the street?—A. Then I would meet him as I was going out to lunch, or something of that kind.

Q. That would be in the evening when you were taking dinner with him?—A. Yes, sir; or at 12 o'clock.

Q. At night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I thought you said when you had the jury out. I meant out on the street, but I see that you mean out in their room.—A. Well, I took them out to lunch at 12 o'clock; that is what I meant.

Q. Twelve o'clock at night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Usually?—A. Yes, sir; always.

Q. And how often have you seen him on the street at that time under those circumstances?—A. Not very often; it just happened that I would happen to pass him as he was going down town.

Q. About how often?—A. Well, I could not say.

Q. Where did you take them to—the jury—to lunch?—A. Down to the Wood Café, as a general thing.

Q. What direction is that from this building?—A. Southwest.

Q. How far?—A. Three blocks.

Q. Well, do you recall any occasion when you were doing that and met Judge Hanford or saw him?—A. I could not just recall the dates and the case.

Q. I did not ask you the date, but do you recall the particular occasion, without fixing the date?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he meeting you, or going in the same direction?—A. He was going in the same direction.

Q. Do you know where he was going from or to?—A. No, sir; I do not. He left his office just ahead of me as I went down the stairs with the jury, but where he went I do not know.

Q. He was going south, that was not in the direction of his home, was it?—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never did.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Have you been here at the Federal court room in this building, or the Federal court when it was in this building or at the old courthouse, very frequently at nights when your duties required your presence here.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were never here at nights except at times when your duties as bailiff required you to be here in attendance upon the juries.—A. That is the only time.

Q. Was that or has that been frequent or only at rare intervals?—A. Well, not so awfully frequent—just occasionally it happens to come that way.

Q. What do you know about Judge Hanford's habits so far as you learned of them from the means which you have described, respecting his working in his office at nights?—A. Well, at nights when I had a jury out I have been here all night and I have known him to stay here all night for that matter—stayed as long as I did—but he would go out and eat the same as I would with the jury—I would take them out—and I have known him to stay other times until 2 o'clock and then tell me that I could get him at his home by phone if I wanted him—several times I have known that to happen.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there a couch in his room?

A. Yes. I have known him to lay down and sleep on the couch and I have went in and covered him up with a blanket several times when it would slip off the couch—I would cover him up—I have been in there several times to do that.

JOHN STRINGER, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. John Stringer.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived there? A. Twenty-five years.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am at the present time deputy sheriff of King County. I was—that is before 1908—I was deputy United States marshal from 1898 until 1908, when I went into the sheriff's office.

Q. When were you deptuty marshal your duties were in connection with Judge Hanford's court.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were your particular duties?—A. I had charge of the office here in Seattle, and we traveled all over the State at the time. During those days he held court in Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, and Walla Walla.

Q. Your duties, then, do not keep you in the court room.—A. No, sir; not all the time.

Q. You had general supervision of the marshal's office.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The marshal himself not being present much or any of that time.—A. He stayed in Tacoma.

Q. So that here in Seattle you had entire command of the local force.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had two bailiffs who attended to the particular court duties, such as looking after juries and grand juries and waiting on the judge.—A. Two bailiffs and a crier—there were three in the court room.

Q. The two bailiffs are the gentlemen who just left the witness stand?—A. Well, one of them was—the other was appointed since I was here.

Q. Mr. Kilbourne and Mr. Yeaton were those two.—A. Mr. Yeaton was not there when I was.

Q. How much did your duties bring you into personal contact with, or where you had a chance of personal observation of Judge Hanford?—A. Well, a great deal. I was in the court and out of the court; his chambers was next to the marshal's office, and while I was in the marshal's office I studied law and had access to his library, and was in and out of that; he gave me free access to it and I would go in and out whenever I chose, and so I went in and out of his library and in and out of the court room at all times or any time during the day.

Q. You had a chance, then, to observe Judge Hanford's appearance and demeanor while on the bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice anything peculiar in it?—A. No; I did not—I could not say that I did. The only thing he had a habit of closing his eyes apparently; to one who was not acquainted with him would say that he was asleep, and in fact I have, at time, thought perhaps he was taking a nap just for an instant like, but after the argument of the case for a new trial or for anything in regard to what the witnesses said he would always have the important part of that witnesses's' testimony so that he could correct the attorneys on either side while I had thought that he might have been dozing; to me at the time it proved to me beyond any doubt on earth that he was not; that he had every faculty that he was possessed of during the trial of the case.

Q. To what extent have you been with the judge elsewhere than in court?—A. I slept—before I was married in 1901—I slept in the guardroom in the marshal's office next to his library; they have an inner room there, and as I said, I studied law there and sometimes would be up until 1 o'clock—I studied sometimes later, sometimes until 2 or 3 o'clock, and sometimes I would go into the judge's chambers and he would be in there working on his cases; at other times I would hear him walking backward and forward—other nights when I would not go in there I would hear him walking backward and forward and I could hear him taking out the books and putting them back into the cases as if he were reading them; and then I have been with him on the train to Tacoma and stayed there while he was holding court there, and I have observed him more in Tacoma and Walla Walla and Spokane than I did here in town, because after he would leave his chambers there, of course, late at night—very late at night, as far as I would know—he would go home, because while I slept in the marshal's office there I did not go out. After I was married, of course, I did not sleep in the marshal's office any more.

Q. When were you married?—A. 1901.

Q. The court adjourned at 5 p. m. or earlier?—A. Five or earlier; very seldom that he would have a night session or be later than that; it would be an extraordinary case.

Q. You mean when he would have a night session in court?—A. Yes.

Q. How often has that happened?—A. I do not recall now just how many times that was; it was not very often, though, that he would have a night session.

Q. It was a rare thing?—A. Rare; yes.

Q. What time would the judge come back to his office after leaving it when the court adjourned—how soon after?—A. He would vary from 7 to 8 o'clock after he would go home.

Q. Do you know where he had gone; whether he went home or dined elsewhere, as a usual thing?—A. He went home; he lived up here on Madison Street and he would go home in the evening and return. In fact, I have called him up at the house for some things that I would want. He was a man and is a man of absolutely the same habit every day and you can about catch him any time that you want him.

Q. You say he would come back to his office every evening after dinner?—A. Not every evening, but the great, great majority of evenings while I slept in the marshal's office there for two or three years he was in his office as a regular thing.

Q. Do you know whether he had a working library at his home?—A. I don't know that.

Q. As far as you know he did his work in this building or in the court room?—A. When it was on Fourth and Marion.

Q. Yes; in the other courthouse.—A. Yes, sir; he did it in his office; I was in the library time and time again at night and he was in there reading and working on his cases along until sometimes 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. I know one night that Tom Delaney, who is now dead—he was the chief of police—he was a customs officer, and we were out at Lake Washington, and coming in we met the judge going up the street where the Providence Hospital is, just above Fifth or Sixth on Madison Street, and it was close onto 4 o'clcok, and he was walking up the hill going home at that time.

Q. Do you know where he came from?—A. I do not know, except that at 11 o'clock I was in the office and his light was in the chamber and his light was lit, but of course I could not tell where he had been in the meantime, except from the two circumstances that I would conclude that he was there—from the fact that he was there at 11 o'clock and then seeing him walking home I put it down that he had been in his library all that time.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. In Walla Walla I had a drink with him, I think, once or twice, and in San Francisco I had a drink with him once or twice.

Q. Were those the only occasions when you saw him drinking?—A. I think that is all; I may have seen him take a drink in Spokane, but I am not sure.

Q. Did you ever see him in or going into a barroom in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. Down opposite the Burke Building I have seen him going in with Judge Burke. I don't remember the name of the bar.

Q. What barroom was it?—A. I do not recall the name of it, whether it was—it is opposite the Burke Building on Second Avenue.

Q. Is that the only occasion or was there more?—A. No; it has been, I think—I have seen him, too, with Judge Burke in Sutherland's barroom; I have seen him, probably in those 15 years, I have seen him four or five times in a barroom.

Q. Twice or more than twice with Judge Burke?—A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Was it twice only or was it more than twice you saw him with Judge Burke?—A. I think he was always with Judge Burke—I don't think I ever saw him alone that I remember of.

Q. Did you ever see him drinking anywhere else in Seattle than on those occasions?—A. That is all, except at a banquet or something.

Q. Or a function of some kind?—A. Something like that; I never noticed whether he drank or not at those.

Q. Are you a member of any club of which he is a member?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any intoxicant?—A. No, sir; never; he could not have been a man that you could say was a drinking man to excess and I, seeing him every day and knowing his condition and his manner, and say that he was a drinking man to excess at all.

Q. Was his appearance which you have described while on the bench such as would ordinarily or might reasonably lead an ordinary person to think that he was taking a nap?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would you attribute that to?—A. Well, I do not know. Of course I know that he does not sleep very much at night; he is a regular nighthawk to work; he seemed to almost love his library, and lived in it and was in there all the time at night and late, except probably he would go out some afternoon, and then even he would return and work in his library, and at 12 o'clock at night he would get up and go down town and get something to eat, or something like that; and I noticed that, as the bailiff has explained here, when the jury would be out, and he would return again and put in an hour or two then; and it may have been from that loss of sleep at night that he should have gotten that caused him to be drowsy and sitting in the chair listening that way; of course it would bring on drowsiness. I have seen him get up a great many times and walk backwards and forwards on the bench and stand and put his hand on the chair.

Q. You say he would go out for something to eat or something like that? What did you mean by "something like that"?—A. Well, I don't know where I got the impression from, but it is my impression that I either saw it or it was told to me, of course, that he generally went out about 12 o'clock and got a cup of coffee and a piece of bacon, or something like that. Now, I do not remember that I saw him, except that——

Q. (Interrupting). Very well, if you are right that the judge is a nighthawk and a glutton for work at night, and works most of the night at all hours; when during the day he seems to be napping, is it not entirely probable that he would be napping?—A. You can draw your own conclusion, of course.

Q. I want your opinion?—A. What is my opinion—if he was napping?

Q. Yes.—A. It is not my opinion that he was asleep on the bench, because, as I have said before——

Q. The circumstances which you have described would make it quite probable, wouldn't it?—A. Yes, it would.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Witness excused.

JOHN T. CONDON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. John T. Condon.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Seattle.

Q. You have lived here how long?—A. I have lived here, except a few years going to school, all my life.

Q. You are the first witness that we have had that has lived here all his life.—A. I was born in a little neighboring town over here and I have lived here all my life in this vicinity except a few years at school.

Q. What is your present occupation or profession?—A. I am dean of the law school at the University of Washington.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Since 1899.

Q. What is the attendance at the law school?—A. Two hundred and fifteen.

Q. How old is it?—A. I organized it in 1899.

Q. Is the attendance increasing year by year or is it standing?—A. It is considerably—we started with something like 20—the class in which Mr. Stringer was—Mr. Stringer started in the first class.

Q. What is the attendance at the university altogether?—A. Two thousand six hundred and fifty-three we put down on the rolls—I have not tested the accuracy of it.

Q. How old is it?—A. It was organized in 1861; it had practically started its real life in 1895, when it moved to its present location.

Q. Do you practice law, Mr. Condon?—A. Very little, hardly any.

Q. Do you maintain a law office?—A. I do not.

Q. What subjects do you yourself teach?—A. Well, in the whole course of law I handle them all for a little while; I was the whole school and I had to handle them all, but I have now simmered it down to subjects like constitutional law and evidence, and the side of the law school that I am trying to develop personally is how to find the law and how to make application of the general principles to the practice of the law, and forms of practice and statute law. Those are special features that I am trying to develop.

Q. Have you practiced law in the city of Seattle at any time?—A. Yes, sir; from 1892 to the time I went into the law school, 1899.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am and have been all that time.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Ever since I can remember. I knew him before he became a judge; I knew him when I was a little boy running around and he was a practicing lawyer.

Q. Is he in any way connected officially with the university?—A. Not in any way.

Q. Or with the law school?—A. Not in any way.

Q. Have you had any official or business relations with him?—A. Unless you can call this an answer to your question: In 1901 I organized the John Marshall celebration, under the auspices of the law school, if you remember that occasion; and Judge Hanford delivered the principal address and I was in close touch with him for two or there weeks during that occasion.

Q. How intimately have you been associated with him in any way?—A. I have known him personally very intimately all my life. He is a member of the Pioneers' organization, of which I was a member, and he has always been closely identified with the Native Sons' organization, in the sense that he has always been friendly with them—not a member of them in any sense—it is an organization that I belong to.

Q. To what extent have you attended court when he was presiding?—A. During the time that I practiced law I attended court frequently—I did not have an extensive practice in that court, but I was a young man at that time, and I went to court frequently to observe how things go on.

Q. Were you present in the court room when witnesses testified as to some of his personal peculiarities with reference to his manner of procedure; for instance, with reference to his appearance as if he was taking a nap?—A. I heard some evidence this morning—I was here about 15 or 20 minutes four or five days ago, and on that occasion the witnesses were principally bartenders.

Q. Have you noticed that peculiarity in the judge yourself?—A. I think about a year ago I tried a case before him, assisting Messrs. Wright & Kelleher, and at that time I thought he was asleep myself, but when he came to decide the case I thought he was very much awake.

Q. Professor, will you please tell the committee the appearance of Judge Hanford on the occasion when you thought he was asleep—in her words, tell what it was that made you think so.—A. Well, during that case, it lasted about a day, for about five minutes of that day I thought probably he had his eyes shut, or appeared to have his eyes shut—did have his eyes shut, in fact—I reached the conclusion he was sleeping at that time.

Q. What was the position of his head when his eyes were shut?—A. Well, not much out of the usual; he generally had his head down when he sat on the bench; something like this [illustrating], and it is his habit frequently to twist his whiskers something like this—he would cease twisting his whiskers, and his eyes were shut; but his head seemed to be in about the same position.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I have been with him on a number of occasions when he had ample opportunity to be, if he wanted to.

Q. Have you ever seen him partake of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have.

Q. What were the occasions?—A. One occasion was a little dinner given by a number of the Native Sons in honor of the Hon. Joseph Kuhn, of Port Townsend, in which Judge Hanford sat at my right.

There was wine on that occasion, and I saw him take some wine that night, but he certainly was not intoxicated, or anything like that.

Q. On any other occasions have you seen him drink?—A. I saw him take a drink on an occasion of a bar excursion out of Spokane; I was near him nearly all that trip and he did not become intoxicated. I only remember now of seeing him take one drink.

Q. Are those the only occasions that you recall when you saw him drinking intoxicants?—A. I think they are; I am pretty sure they are, sir.

Q. To what extent have you observed him or had an opportunity to observe him here in the city in the nighttime?—A. Well, I saw him frequently; I came down frequently at night, more than I do now; I would see him on the streets once in a while.

Q. At what hours?—A. At varying hours. Before I took up the law school I used to be down town late at nights like all young fellows are, and I would see him around anywhere from—up until midnight anyway, once in a while.

Q. Where would you see him?—A. On the street as I would happen to be passing.

Q. Have you ever on any of those occasions seen him drinking intoxicants?—A. I never did.

Q. Or in a place where intoxicants were sold and drunk?—A. No, sir; I never saw him any place where intoxicants were sold and drunk.

Q. Have you been with him in the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir; but that recalls one other occasion when I saw him taking a drink. I used to be a member of the University Club, of which he is an honorary member, and I saw him take one drink there one time.

Q. You spoke of his taking drinks at a banquet; you mention wine; on the other occasions which you mentioned what did he drink, if you remember?—A. I do not remember what it was. At the Spokane bar excursion there was whisky and there was beer and later there appeared some champagne on the scene. I do not remember now, but I think it was whisky on that day, diluted with water, that he drank.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Condon, in what esteem are the judicial decisions and opinions of Judge Hanford held as precedents?

A. Well, I think they are highly regarded by the profession in Seattle; I have not thought much on that question; I think generally they are esteemed.

Q. What do you say from your knowledge of him as to his judicial ability?—A. I think he is a man of considerable.

Mr. McCOY. Do you think that we had better go into that, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. It seemed to me that that was one of the questions involved.

The CHAIRMAN. Don't you think the record shows it sufficiently?

Mr. HUGHES. You mean shows that it is a question involved?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I don't think the record shows that at all; but don't you think that there has been enough testimony produced as to his great legal ability; in the absence of any countervailing evidence what is the use of piling it up?

Whereupon a recess is taken until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess.
All parties present as at former hearing.

R. B. ALBERTSON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, please.

A. Robert Brook Albertson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Albertson?—A. In the city of Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Since July, 1883.

Q. You are a lawyer by pofession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been for how long?—A. Since February 6, 1883, when I was admitted by the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession in Seattle?—A. I endeavored to practice the profession when I first arrived in the city, in the summer of 1883, but was unable to arrange for the opening of an office on account of a lack of financial opportunity, and was a clerk for a time in the law office of Burke & Raisen, and afterwards in the law office of Struve, Haines & McMicken for a period of about three years. Since then I have been engaged in the active practice of the law in the city of Seattle, up to the time of my appointment by the governor of the State in February, 1903, as a judge of the Superior Court of the State of Washington.

Q. Are you now occupying that position?—A. I have occupied that position since the time of my appointment.

Q. How many judges are on the supreme bench in this State?—A. There are nine judges of the Superior Court of the State of Washington residing in King County and elected or appointed from King County. The nmber has been increased from time to time since the State was admitted.

Q. Well, do I understand that after their appointment they do circuit court duty or trial court duty?—A. The judges of the superior court have jurisdiction over the State. They may be called by a judge of the superior court of any county to assist him in that county, or they may be apponted by the governor of the State to assist any judge in any part of the State where his services may be needed. They have a common-law jurisdiction as a trial court.

Q. This superior court you speak of——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Is that the nisi prius court of this State?—A. The nisi prius court, with an appeal to the supreme court of the State direct. The supreme court is the highest tribunal of the State.

Q. And are the judges of the superior court appointed by the governor?—A. They are elected. I was appointed myself when the number of judges in this county was increased by the legislature. The governor has the power to appoint until the next general election, and I held until the next general election, as judges who are appointed do. I have been elected twice since that time by the people.

Q. What is the term of office, Judge?—A. Four years.

Q. Are the judges of the supreme court also elected by the people?—A. They are.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Six years, I believe.

Q. I assume that you are acquainted with Judge Hanford.—A. I am.

Q. Before going on the bench, to what extent did you practice your profession in his court?—A. My practice was general in all of the courts of the State. My practice in the Federal court was not as extended, perhaps, as that of some of the lawyers, but I had a fairly representative practice in the Federal court.

Q. During the time you were practicing to what extent, if at all, did you associate with Judge Hanford outside of the work before him when he was on the bench?—A. I believe that I first met Judge Hanford personally in the summer of 1884, when I occupied a desk in a law office that was adjoining the law office of Judge Hanford. I became acquainted in that way and have known him personally from day to day ever since that time, meeting him frequently. Since I have been on the bench I have met him at my club more often than elsewhere.

Q. The Rainier Club?—A. The Rainier Club.

Q. Have you been with him or have you seen him when he was not holding court at any other place than the Rainier Club during the last 5 or 10 years?—A. Yes; I have. Judge Hanford has taken an active interest in public affairs and has presided over a great many public meetings; has taken an active interest in the work of the chamber of commerce, of which I have been a member. I have been associated with him as a member of different committees in which we were commonly interested.

Q. To what extent have you seen him or been with him late in the evening or nighttime during the period I have mentioned?—A. I don't recall having been with Judge Hanford at night very often. Occasionally I visit my club in the evening—not very often—and occasionally I have met Judge Hanford there in the evening. I have met him there frequently in the last few years in a casual way, as a member of the club—joined him at lunch; played billiards with him.

Q. Do you recall the public meeting at which one Dr. McCormick spoke about three years ago or a little less, at the Alhambra Theater?—A. I do.

Q. Were you present at that meeting?—A. The King County Medical Association invited Dr. McCormick, a distinguished physician from Kentucky, who was taking an active interest in the promotion of the public education along the lines of hygiene, and he addressed a meeting at the Alhambra Theater, held under the auspices of the King County Medical Society. I was invited by the committee in charge to preside over the meeting and was called upon to introduce the speaker of the meeting, Dr. McCormick, and other gentlemen who were there present to participate.

Q. Do you recall seeing Judge Hanford at that meeting?—A. I do.

Q. Did you notice at what time during the meeting he came in?—A. I don't recall. I remember that after I had introduced Dr. McCormick I had a list of names of gentlemen who were invited to speak, and on that list was Judge Hanford, and I looked around—I don't know whether I observed Judge Hanford before the conclusion of the address of Dr. McCormick or not, but I did see him and presented him to the meeting as one of the speakers.

Q. Did you see him again after the meeting?—A. I did.

Q. Where?—A. At the close of the meeting the medical society adjourned to the Washington Hotel, where a lunch was provided, and the speakers of the evening, or some of them, were invited to attend. I was present, and also Judge Hanford, and a number of other gentlemen who did not belong to the society.

Q. If you noticed, you may state whether on that occasion Judge Hanford was in any degree under the influence of intoxicants.—A. I was surprised to hear that there was any such intimation. I was not aware of it myself and could not believe it possible.

Q. That is a little bit wide of the question, Judge.—A. I have endeavored to be explicit, but I will be glad to explain. I did not observe him under the influence of intoxicants and did not suppose that he was. Nothing in his manner would indicate it.

Q. Have you at any time during your acquaintance with him seen him when in your opinion he was affected by or under the influence of intoxicating liquor or any intoxicant?—A. I can say that from my acquaintance with Judge Hanford for a period of 30 years, I have never seen him when I had any idea that he was under the influence of intoxicants.

Q. Have you seen him drink intoxicants?—A. I have.

Q. Frequently or occasionally?—A. Occasionally.

Q. What were the circumstances?—A. Why, as a member of the club, as members of such bodies are often in the habit of doing, I have seen him take refreshments of that sort.

Q. What did he drink?—A. Well, now, I really don't recall. I think I have seen Judge Hanford take a cocktail; I think I have seen him take diluted whisky. I never made a note of what he was drinking, or anything of that kind. I have never known him to indulge beyond the limit of men who are in the habit of frequenting clubs and indulging in the use of liquors.

Q. Have you seen him drink in any saloon or bar?—A. I don't recall. Certainly not for many years.

Q. Apart from public meetings or your meetings with him at the Rainier Club, to what extent, if at all, have you seen the judge about town in the nighttime?—A. I am very seldom down town at night myself, and I don't recall having met Judge Hanford in the nighttime for years, unless it be on the infrequent occasions when I have happened to be at the club myself in the evening.

Q. Either at the club or at some function?—A. Or at some function. Judge Hanford was president of the Washington Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and I have been present on such occasions when he was presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask Judge Albertson any further, Mr. McCoy?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. The superior court, Judge, has three branches in its jurisdiction, hasn't it—the common law, equity, and probate?—A. It is a nisi prius court, having general common-law jurisdiction; it is a trial court having jurisdiction over probate matters.

Q. While those matters come before the same judge they are treated as three separate branches of the practice?—A. Any judge of the superior court of this State has full common-law jurisdiction. While for convenience in the administration of the business of the court different departments are established, yet the judge of any department has complete jurisdiction, and he may try any case that comes into the court if it is assigned to him for trial.

Q. Well, would you try the validity of a will in the equity branch of the court or the probate branch?—A. The probate of wills is before a judge of the superior court sitting in probate, not on what may be termed the "equity" side of the court. We have a practice under the statute in probate, not on what may be termed the "equity" side of the court. We have a practice under the statute which regulates the administration of estates in the probate of wills.

The CHAIRMAN. How about a contest after the probate?

A. That may be tried before any judge of the court; it may be tried before a jury. I tried a contest of a will a few years ago—the will of Melody Choir—which came up from the probate court on an issue of fact as to the sanity of the testator.

Q. Was that under some provision of your code or statute or did the judge sitting in probate simply refer the issues?—A. The judge sitting in probate ordinarily is not provided with a jury. He would have jurisdiction to call a jury; but as a matter of practice it is usual to refer matters requiring the determination of a question of fact to a judge who is provided with a jury.

Q. How would a proceeding to test the validity of a will be entitled? Would it be entitled simply "In the Superior Court of the State of Washington, such and such a county," or would it be indicated in any way that it was in the probate division of the court?—A. When a will is offered for probate, the proceeding is entitled "In the matter of the estate of ———, deceased." There is a petition for the probate of the will and the hearing of the testimony as to the execution of it. The judge issues a certificate of the validity of the will, an executor is appointed, and from that time the proceedings are conducted before the probate court.

Q. Suppose the will were admitted to probate and anybody sought afterwards to test the validity of it, would that be in that same probate court or would it be on the equity side of the court?—A. Usually it is in the probate court, before the judge of that department. It would not be, as I understand it, a distinctive equity proceeding—that is, within the jurisdiction of the probate court. The judge of the probate court has the powers of an equity judge.

Q. Like a surrogate?—A. Yes.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Judge Albertson, it is in evidence before this committee that Judge Hanford, when he entered the Alhambra Theater, gave to the mind of a man, who was observing him closely, evidence of intoxication, and that in his speech that he delivered on that occasion there were also evidences of his being under the influence of liquor. How close did you sit to Judge Hanford in the Alhambra Theater?—A. I presented him to the audience, and he stood within 3 feet of me as he spoke.

Q. Did you talk with Judge Hanford before he spoke?—A. Not before he spoke. I didn't speak to him, I believe, until after the audience dispersed. I went with him from the theater over to the Washington Hotel, to attend this luncheon given by the medical society to Dr. McCormick.

Q. Did you walk with him over there, or do you mean went in the same company?—A. No, I didn't, I believe, go with him. I don't recall my companion at the time, but we walked over. I saw Judge Hanford present at the luncheon. At the close of the luncheon I saw him leave the room. We reached the sidewalk together with a number of other gentlemen. I was invited by one of the doctors, who had an automobile at the curb, to ride with him to my own home, and I recall this doctor invited Judge Hanford, and I believe Judge Burke, if I am correct about it, to go along, but as I recall they said they preferred to walk, and the last I saw of Judge Hanford was when I rode away with my friend, leaving Judge Burke and Judge Hanford standing on the sidewalk.

Q. Was the Alhambra meeting largely attended, or otherwise?—A. It was as splendid an audience as ever I saw assembled anywhere in any city.

Q. What is the capacity, Judge, of that theater?—A. Oh, there must have been several thousand people present there.

Q. And how many were present at the luncheon that you had later at the Washington Hotel?—A. There was a very full attendance of the members of the King County Medical Society, and quite a number of doctors from outside who came to attend this meeting.

Q. Can you approximate the number of those present?—A. Oh, I would think there were a hundred or thereabouts?

Q. Was there speaking at the luncheon also?—A. Well, Dr. McCormick was the chief speaker of the evening. I don't recall that anybody else indulged in any extended remarks. The meeting culminated in a movement for the organization of a society in the city to promote the cause of public education along the lines of hygiene, and I was requested by the society to name a committee to organize such a movement.

Q. Is your acquaintance and your observation and your opportunities of meeting Judge Hanford under different conditions, at the club, as I understand it, occasionally———A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) In the court room———A. I have had no occasion to be in the Federal court room for 10 years.

Q. (Continuing.) Well, on public occasions, such that you feel that if there had been anything abnormal, due to intoxication or any other cause, that you would have noticed it—observed it?—A. I would think so. Of course I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, was there, Judge, as a matter of fact, in the speech that he delivered, anything unusual or extraordinary or peculiar, so far as he was concerned, in the delivering of the speech?—A. Nothing that I can possibly consider as indicating any want of mental or physical balance.

Q. Or in his manner?—A. There was not.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

The WITNESS. (Continuing.) Within my observation. If there was, it was a complete surprise to me, because it never occurred to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with the judge?

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Judge Albertson, can you remember any of the other gentlemen who were on the platform that evening in the Alhambra Theater?—A. Dr. Matthews and Judge Burke. It has been quite awhile ago; I am not able to recall all of them. There were quite a number of speakers invited, who were not able to attend, but there were three or four speakers who made brief remarks. They were not expected to attempt anything of a very serious nature. I thought that Judge Hanford made a very well-timed address, and there was nothing in it that excited any suspicion in my mind that he was not thoroughly himself.

Q. Have you held any other public positions in the State, except what you have mentioned, that is, your office or position as superior judge?—A. I was elected city attorney of the city of Seattle in the summer of 1889, and a member of the house of representatives of the legislature of the State in 1894, and again as a member of the same house in 1900. I was speaker of the house of representatives of the legislature of 1901.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

Witness excused.

IRA A. NADEAU, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Ira A. Nadeau.

Q. N-a-d-e-a-u?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You live in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Upward of 25 years.

Q. What business are you in?—A. I am the agency manager for the Equitable Life Insurance Co. at this time.

Q. How long have you been in that position?—A. About three years; a little less.

Q. Prior to that what did you do?—A. I was director general of the exposition—the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition—immediately preceding that.

Q. How long did that job last?—A. About four years, as I recollect; three to four years.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. How intimately?—A. Oh, quite so. I see him quite frequently.

Q. Is your acquaintance a personal one or a casual one?—A. Personal one.

Q. Have you had social relations with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Visit his home?—A. Not his home.

Q. Where did you have the social relations with him?—A. In public gatherings and at the Rainier Club principally.

Q. You are a member of the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently have you met him there?—A. Oh, two or three times a week, I think.

Q. In the nighttime or daytime?—A. Both.

Q. What hour of the evening, usually?—A. Oh, anywhere from 8 until 11 usually, or a little later, perhaps, occasionally.

Q. Have you attended the judge's court much or any?—A. I was admitted in his court in 1888 and subsequently had some relations as a litigant, that is, representing litigants. I was in the railroad business at that time and we had litigation before his court.

Q. In what capacity were you in the railroad business?—A. I was manager of the road that is now the Northern Pacific, that enters into Seattle.

Q. Were you also attorney for the road?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you practice law at any time?—A. Not in this State; no, sir.

Q. Well, you did not, then, in that way attend the judge's court?—A. Not as an attorney.

Q. If you did in any capacity, tell the committee in what capacity you did?—A. As manager of the railroad company.

Q. You were in here from time to time when matters concerning the railroad company were up for consideration?—A. Not in recent years; but——

Q. (Interrupting.) How long ago?—A. The first litigation—the most important—was in 1888.

Q. And your attendance here from time to time continued until when?—A. Well, for a period off and on for 10 years, perhaps.

Q. Until 1898, or about that?—A. Yes; just about.

Q. Since that time to what extent, if at all, have you attended the judge's court?—A. I have not at all.

Q. What opportunity had you to observe the judge otherwise than in the court or the club?—A. Well, I have met him on public occasions a good many times in connection with exposition matters and in connection with the chamber of commerce. At the time of the destruction of San Francisco I was the executive vice president of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and appointed a relief committee, of which I named Judge Hanford as chairman, and I saw him daily a good portion of the day or evening of every day for the following two or three weeks while our contributions were being made and collected in money and merchandise and forwarded to San Francisco.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to notice the judge and know of his movements or condition in the evenings during the last 8 or 10 years, such as you have stated, in the club, say from 6 or 7 o'clock to 12 or 1?—A. During the summer of 1909, during the exposition year, we had a great many functions, many of which the judge attended. I have seen him in the evening at other public gatherings in Seattle.

Q. Have you seen him in the evening or in the night otherwise than at functions or public gatherings?—A. Very——

Q. (Continuing.) And at the club?—A. I don't recall. Very rarely.

Q. Have you at any time noticed Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was more or less under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him drink?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At the club.

Q. What?—A. Oh, I don't recall. I know he drank beer there and drank cocktails, and I don't know whether there was anything else or not, but I know he drank both drinks that were made of whisky and beer.

Q. Was that the usual thing or only occasional?—A. Well, many times at the club he would come in there in the evening and he would not drink at all, he would go to the reading room, spend his time there and meet Judge Burke or other gentlemen and pass the time of day. Occasionally I have met him and he would always insist he wanted some exercise and so I have played billiards with him and engaged in other games—played dominoes.

Q. What personal knowledge have you as to his ordinary time for going to his home at night?—A. Well, I have seen him leave the club along from 11 to 12 o'clock several times; I could not say just how often.

Q. Could you state to the committee how many times the judge would drink some intoxicant during an evening from the time he entered until he would leave about 11 o'clock?—A. Well, I could hardly answer that question correctly. I don't know. I have seen him drink on occasions. Other times he might be in the club and I would not see him; I would be with other parties.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to whether after leaving the club the judge would call at any barrooms or saloons?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you ever see him do that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him drink in a barroom?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the witness further? Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask further?

Mr. HUGHES. I think there is nothing.

Mr. DORR. Nothing.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. While the committee is waiting, I have now the papers that I spoke of on a previous occasion—the certificates of the clerks of the various Federal courts in the State, showing the number of days which Judge Hanford was engaged in the trial of cases in different portions of the State, in tabulated form, all under the certificate of the clerks except that I have had made for convenience a tabulation of the whole, which appears on the first page.

The CHAIRMAN. How long a period of time does that cover?

Mr. HUGHES. It covers 20 years or 22 years; I have forgotten which. I think from 1890 down to the present time. [Handing papers to the chairman.]

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes; the statement you hand us, of the certificates of the various clerks, giving the number of days on which Judge Hanford held court for the last 20 years, is summarized on the page I now hold in my hand, is it not?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. The original papers submitted to you show the exact days in each year on which Judge Hanford held court at the various places where the Federal courts are held in this State. The summary shows the total number of days for the whole period of time in each of those courts, and also shows the average number of days in each year on which Judge Hanford held court.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper marked "Exhibit 28," then, is the summary of all the statements which you offer?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And it shows the number of days upon which court was opened by the judge in any of the places within his judicial district?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; the number of days between June, 1890 and June, 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The summary or the complete statement does not show whether court was in session all day or not?

Mr. HUGHES. It does not, and I may add that it also shows the days when he served in the court of appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it show the days when he held court in other districts than his own?

Mr. HUGHES. My understanding is that it shows only when he held court in the circuit or distrcit courts of the United States for the district of Washington and also in the circuit court of appeals.

I think it does not show any service in other courts than I have mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The summary shows 45 days in San Francisco and 5 days in Helena.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; it does show the other courts; that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. So that it is a complete statement of all the days that he opened court or held court in any district in the country?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Exhibit 28 will be made a part of the record.

Mr. HUGHES. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer at this time a list of the cases in which Judge Hanford participated as a member of the circuit court of appeals, in the years 1910 and 1911, which list also shows not only the cases in which he participated as a member of the court but the portion of those cases in which he wrote the opinion of the court, and also those in which he wrote the dissenting opinion, for the purpose of showing something of his work outside of the district and circuit courts within the last two years, the statement showing the title of the case and I think the book and page of the Federal Reports in the cases where he wrote the opinions.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper offered will be printed and marked "Exhibit 29."

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Hughes, have you any list of the cases decided by or presided over by Judge Hanford, in which appeals have been taken, showing the number of affirmances and reversals?

Mr. HUGHES. No, we have not, but that could be obtained if you care for it.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Hughes, I have here volume 44 of the Washington Reports and find the case of Williams v. The Spokane Falls & Northern Railway Co., page 363. Is that the case which we were talking about the other day as the one which you claimed established the practice of the supreme court setting aside verdicts for excessiveness?

Mr. HUGHES. I think this is a case that was mentioned by one of the witnesses.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, is there any other case in the State where the supreme court has done that sort of thing?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, speaking only from memory, Mr. McCoy, I would say that there has been a very considerable number of cases in which the supreme court have required a modification by way of reduction of the judgment or, in the alternative, a reversal and a remanding of the case to the lower court for a new trial. That has occurred a great many times.

Mr. MCCOY. The point in discussion at that time was the right of the court or the practice which the court indulged in of ordering a reversal unless the judgment were modified, where no point was raised by counsel on either side.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I remember one of the witnesses testifying—mentioning that there had been a case, and as I recall he spoke of the Williams case, and I think this is the case that that witness had in mind as being a case of that kind.

Mr. MCCOY. But you spoke of some case of that kind, as I remember it, is that the case that you had in mind?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I think I only asked my questions with reference to those suggested by the witness, because I do not recall having in mind any specific case when I propounded questions.

Mr. McCoy. Well, now, in that case counsel for the appellant was somebody named Gordon, wasn't it?

Mr. Hughes. M. J. Gordon and C. A. Murray the record shows were attorneys for the appellant, and Graves & Graves for the respondent, who was the plaintiff in the court below.

Mr. McCoy. And the appellant was the defendant?

Mr. Hughes. The defendant in the court below; yes.

Mr. McCoy. One of the judges was named Root?

Mr. Hughes. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Is he the same judge who was accused of having handed down an opinion written by Mr. Gordon, who is counsel for the defendant there?

Mr. Hughes. He is; yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. And was that fact established, or was it simply a charge?

Mr. Hughes. I don't think there was ever any final determination of the matter. Judge Root resigned, and I may say that it was undoubtedly true from the facts that were produced. The bar committee investigated it. I think there is no question but that the fact was established, and without dispute, that the opinion had been prepared and submitted to Judge Root and afterwards——

Mr. McCoy. By Mr. Gordon?

Mr. Hughes. Yes. But now in doing that—we are not trying Judge Root—I am not making along with that statement any of the explanations that have been offered, and I do not want to be understood as attempting to express anything one way or the other—that is, in the way of condemnation or vindication, because I am merely attempting to answer, as briefly as possible, a categorical question.

Mr. McCoy. But of course there could not be any vindication of that kind of an action by an explanation.

Mr. Hughes. I think that is true.

Mr. McCoy. In this particular case there were three judges participating, weren't there—in this Williams case?

Mr. Hughes. Do you mean in the supreme court?

Mr. McCoy. Yes; in this case we are talking about here, this Williams case.

Mr. Hughes. You mean in the supreme court?

Mr. McCoy. Supreme court; yes.

Mr. Hughes. It was submitted, evidently, to one of the departments consisting of five judges. Judge Root writes the opinion on rehearing, and it is concurred in by Mount, Hadley, and Crowe, Judge Dunbar dissenting.

Mr. McCoy. I thought it was three. It was five.

The Chairman. What is your provision, Mr. Hughes, as to having decisions rendered by a part only of the supreme court?

Mr. Hughes. Our law, when the bench was increased to nine members, for the purpose of dispatching the business of the supreme court, provided for two departments, and the practice has been for one department to sit at a time, the chief justice sitting with and presiding over that department, while the other four are engaged in examining the cases that have been submitted and assigned, and in writing opinions, so that the court will be continuously in session from the beginning of the term until the business is dispatched, but by departments, only one department sitting at a time. When a dissenting opinion occurs, when less than five judges agree upon the decision of a case, it is submitted to the full bench en banc, nine judges then participating.

The CHAIRMAN. In this case that did not happen.

Mr. HUGHES. I think it did.

The CHAIRMAN. Only four judges agreed.

Mr. HUGHES. Oh, I think it must have been subsequently submitted. I do not recall the case; I didn't follow it closely at the time. It was a matter that attracted some attention, but I don't know what occurred in that particular. But that has been the practice—to meet, possibly, the constitutional question that would be involved by the decision of less than a majority of the entire court.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further that you have to submit at this time?

Mr. DORR. I would like to suggest that this is not the case at all that was referred to by Mr. McCoy, that involved the——

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. DORR. (Continuing.) Question of Mr. Gordon having anything to do with Judge Root's opinion. That was an entirely different case, at an entirely different time.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not understand Mr. McCoy to ask me that question.

Mr. MCCOY. The case in which Mr. Gordon wrote an opinion which Judge Root used was a case where Mr. Gordon appeared for the Northern Pacific Railway Co., wasn't it?

Mr. DORR. The Great Northern Railway Co.

Mr. MCCOY. Or the Great Northern; some railroad company. I knew this was not the case. I am trying to put a value on that opinion, that is all. The opinion was written by Judge Root.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. Smith, the immigration agent, present? Mr. Smith, weren't you to furnish the committee with some documentary evidence?

Mr. J. SPEED SMITH. Yes, sir; I was requested to furnish the committee with a copy of my instructions, as I understood, as to the general conduct of naturalization work.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you ready to do it now?

Mr. J. SPEED SMITH. No, sir; I haven't been able to find that, but I am writing to Washington. I expect to get a letter any day. I have not been able to find the original copy, Mr. Graham, but I have taken the matter up with my division.

The CHAIRMAN. If you get it, will you hand it up?

Mr. J. SPEED SMITH. If I can't find it in my files, the division can give a copy right from Washington; it can be furnished from Washington. I will report to the committee just as soon as I get it.

M. D. HAYNES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your name to the committee.

A. M. D. Haynes.

Q. H-a-y——A. H-a-y-n-e-s.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live 611 Harvard Avenue North.

Q. Seattle?—A. Seattle; yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Over 20 years.

Q. What business are you in, Mr. Haynes?—A. I am engaged in handling real estate.

Q. Buying and selling?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. City or country real estate?—A. Mostly city property.

Q. How long have you been engaged in the real estate business here?—A. Since 1898.

Q. With reference to where Judge Hanford's home is, what part of the city do you live in?—A. Well, we go home on the same car line, the Broadway car line.

Q. Which one of you rides farther from town?—A. He rides about four blocks farther than I do.

Q. How long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. Oh, I have know him 15 or 16 or 17 years; I don't know just exactly.

Q. How intimately?—A. I know him very well. I see him every day or two.

Q. Have you a personal acquaintance with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Visiting acquaintance?—A. I don't visit at his house, but I see him very frequently.

Q. Where?—A. I see him on the car line; I see him in the street; I meet him very frequently in the Rainier Club.

Q. Are you a member of the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been?—A. Seven years, I think.

Q. How frequently do you see him there?—A. Probably three or four times a week; oftener, maybe.

Q. What hours of the day or night?—A. I have seen him very often at lunch time; see him very frequently in the evening.

Q. How late in the evening?—A. Well, it is the judge's custom to come into the club there 10 or 11 o'clock in the evening and remain there for an hour or so at that time.

Q. Do you see him on those occasions?—A. Generally, or very frequently, at any rate.

Q. How many times in a week or month?—A. Oh, I don't know; probably a dalf a dozen times or oftener in the month.

Q. Do you spend any time in court while he is presiding?—A. I never have unless I have had business there.

Q. You mean trials?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Business as a litigant?—A. Well, business as being interested in cases that may have been in this court.

Q. That is, being a party to them?—A. Well, in a way, yes. I was in the judge's court some three months ago in connection with a case that we were partially interested in.

Q. He and you?—A. No; myself and my associates.

Q. A real estate matter?—A. No; it was a matter of transportation. The transportation company was suing an insurance company and we were interested in the insurance.

Q. The case was litigated in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the only litigation you had there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that the only occasion you had to observe the judge while presiding in court?—A. Well, it is the only case that I have a distinct recollection. I have seen the judge in his court a few times, but not regularly.

Q. To what extent have you ridden home with him on the street cars in the evening or at night?—A. Very frequently.

Q. Give some approximate idea of the number of times.—A. Oh, well, I would—very frequently when I am down in town the judge would be going home from the club on the ame car very often.

Q. I know; but define very frequently now.—A. Well, say five or six times a month, to be safe.

Q. At what hour—what is the latest time you recall?—A. Possibly 12 o'clock or half past 12.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking intoxicants?—A. Not to excess.

Q. That is not quite the question. Your answer is not quite responsive.

Question read.

A. Well, I have seen the judge drink a glass of beer occasionally in the Rainier Club. That is the only place I have ever seen him take a drink.

Q. Did you ever see him drink anything other than beer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any other intoxicant?—A. No, sir.

Q. How frequently have you seen him drinking beer there?—A. Oh, not often. Occasionally I have seen the judge drink a pint of beer when he would come down from the—I presume from his work, from the Federal building.

Q. Was that his usual drink when you saw him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Alone or with others?—A. Generally in company with some person who was sitting there in the club.

Q. Did you ever see him drink any decoctions or preparations of whisky?—A. I never have.

Q. Did you ever see him drink anywhere except at the club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Not in the slightest.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with this witness, Mr. Higgins? Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Was he asked about riding home in the evening? I haven't been listening.

The CHAIRMAN. He has stated that he rode and approximated the number of times and the hours that he rode, and has stated his opinion as to his drinking.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a correction in what heretofore occurred, which should appear just ahead of this witness's testimony. You asked me about the circumstance that only four had concurred in this opinion upon rehearing, after having asked me about the two departments, and I answered that I did not know what course this case had taken, because I didn't recall particularly. On examining, the matter having been called to my attention by Mr. Door, I find that the case was decided in 1906 when the bench consisted of seven members and only one department and prior to the statute which I have referred to increasing the number to nine and creating two departments. The opinion therefore was the opinion of a majority of the entire court. I do not know that that is material, but in view of the questions asked I wanted the record to show.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked the question for my personal information rather than affecting this matter.

L. Frank Brown, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. What is your name?

A. L. Frank Brown.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Since the fall of 1898; about 14 years.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How long have you been practicing your profession?—A. Twenty years.

Q. Where?—A. Formerly in Colorado, Leadville, Colo., 6 years; 14 years here.

Q. Have you lived in Seattle all of the time since you first came here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What courts does your practice extend to?—A. The superior and Federal courts.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford, of the Federal court here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. For 14 years.

Q. To what extent have you had business in his court?—A. Quite extensively; not in the sense that the older and stronger firms have had, but a large amount of litigation up until recent years, three or four years ago.

Q. Are you now and have you been practicing alone or in association with some one else?—A. Up until three years ago—four years ago—I was a member of Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy; the last four years I have been—three years I have been practicing alone.

Q. Give the committee some more definite idea of the amount of business and the amount of time which you have spent in Judge Hanford's court.—A. In the earlier two or three years—two years, I think—in my practice I was sort of an understudy, you would call it, of Burley & Piles, the well-known law firm here. Later—and I had a great deal of work before Judge Hanford in the argument of law problems, not so much in the trial work, simply assisting. Later I was counsel for organized—some of the organized-labor movements of the city, the Cooks and Waiters' Union, and all along the water front—the Seamens' Union. Later, under the firm of Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy, I had considerable work there representing the personal-injury litigation for defendants, eastern clients, and general practice. The earlier years were in admiralty and things of that sort; the later years in general construction of insurance matters and general practice that comes before the Federal bench, but more in the nature of presentation of law matters than the actual trial work, my associates doing the main work in that line.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you had an opportunity or occasion to notice Judge Hanford when not presiding in court?—A. Well, I have had a rather good opportunity of seeing Judge Hanford, both in public and private; not at his home, but I used to belong to the Rainier Club; I saw him a good deal in different social service movements of the State, but of course never had an intimate acquaintance with him in any way.

Q. During your practice in his court, or your presence in his court, if you noticed any peculiarity in his manner while presiding please tell the committee what that peculiarity was.—A. Well, Judge Hanford has the mannerism of lack of attention, apparently going to sleep, and that sort of mannerism; petulant at times and easily irritated. That is the sort of thing, in a general way.

Q. With reference to his apparently going to sleep, will you give the committee more particularly his appearance and actions, so that they may if possible reach their own conclusion from those?—A. My first observation of Judge Hanford was shortly after I came. I had never come in contact with the Federal bench except with Judge Hallet, of Colorado, and then not in an intimate way, and in matters coming up before Judge Hanford for the Pacific Coast Co., which Burley & Piles represented, one of my first appearances there was one where to me Judge Hanford in appearance was asleep. It was in the afternoon, as I remember it. Of course it is years ago, but just the impression was so vivid because of him going to sleep, as I thought. His head came forward and a relaxation of the muscles, and I shall never forget it, because I would never do it again, he seemed to be unconscious for a short time and aroused himself, and I had stopped, I hardly knew how to proceed, and he looked over his glasses and said, "Young man," or I think I said in substance—I don't recall—but something about that "If your honor was incapacitated that I desire to continue this matter," using of course a very unfortunate work, and he looked right over his glasses and said very keenly, quickly, to me, "Young man, you proceed." And it was distressing to me of course, because it was my—practically my—first effort before him and made an impression on that account.

Q. What was the thought in your mind that led you to make the remark that you did?—A. Well, I thought he had lost consciousness just for a moment; that he was asleep.

Q. Go on.—A. Later it is—now, the times of these occurrences that I relate to me it seems, as I told the committee when called before them, it is unjust to Judge Hanford; I feel I never had such a situation in my life, knowing the good parts of the man, to seem to emphasize what to me are the bad parts, when I can not fix time or circumstance or case even, but yet the vividness of the impression is so keen that I simply feel that it is probably just as unjust to go into the facts where he has no—probably any—opportunity to overcome testimony of that kind. I don't know what the committee's ruling on that sort of thing would be, but I am—the family; I know the different members of his household, I am fond of them—and I of course dislike very much to go into those things where they are not definite as to time, but simply definite as to place and as to fact.

Q. Do you mean that you recall the event?—A. I recall the event.

Q. But you do not recall the particular time when it occurred?—A. But to me the harm to society and to Judge Hanford is just as great, probably, as to refrain from giving the——

Q. (Interrupting.) The event that you have told us of occurred——A. (Interrupting.) In the earlier years.

Q. (Continuing.) I assume, soon after you began practicing in his court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was when?—A. Well, that was in the fall of, or the spring, I should say—fall or spring of 1899.

Q. Well, in view of your experience since you have your better knowledge of Judge Hanford and his habits, what do you now think as to whether he was nodding at that time?—A. Well, I think Judge Hanford was nodding on that particular occasion.

Q. Well, do you think it extended as far as sleep?—A. Well, it was a loss of mental consciousness for a short period, in my judgment. Of course you understand that Judge Hanford, like a great many other men of keen mentality, close their eyes; on many occasions he is mentally alert when his eyes are closed. I am simply not emphasizing that that is a common occurrence, but that this particular occurrence is——

Q. (Interrupting.) What impression do you wish to convey, Mr. Brown, as to this time; do you think that his eyes were closed to aid mental concentration or because he was in fact asleep?—A. No, sir; I thought that Judge Hanford was asleep for a time; was what I should call loss of consciousness. Later experiences on the bench and off the bench with Judge Hanford—he is a man who eats rather heavily at lunch time; fermentation sets in, and in the afternoons, particularly from 2 o'clock on, for an hour or so it is often difficult—not always, by any means—but sometimes very difficult for—from my observation, for Judge Hanford to keep awake, because fermentation and intoxication sets in on food just as much as any other—as liquor.

Q. Do you recall any other occasions when you noticed Judge Hanford in the condition or a condition nearly similar to the one he was in at the time you have described?—A. One other distinct impression with reference to nodding, in the later years, I should say five or six years ago, in the old building; I never—have had very little—in fact, very little since he moved up here; Judge Hanford—the circumstance and time is of course not vivid as in the first place, but it gave me the belief of loss of consciousness, as the result of I don't know what.

Q. What were the circumstances?—A. Well, as I say, that is where, to me, the injustice of it appears. I don't even know the name—I don't remember the case. Judge Hanford—I know I was arguing some motion or demurrer with reference to one of the insurance—I think it was the Ætna Indemnity—something that had come up—one of the Eastern clients there—and I noticed that condition, but it was my keen impression—was one of loss of consciousness; I believe that Judge Hanford was asleep temporarily.

Q. Continuing how long?—A. Oh, just a very short time. He would nod and just catch himself and brace up; and, as I remember, to overcome that impression himself he often would walk back and forth on the bench in the afternoons. I mean on the——

Q. (Interrupting.) On those occasions when he recovered himself, what was the manner of his recovery; in other words, would he raise his head gradually and slowly or with a snap like that [illustrating]?—A. Well, it was a quick motion as though he was trying his best to overcome the loss of consciousness, in realization that he maybe had lost consciousness; but of course the profession have learned that many times he when he is—not when he is in that condition, but when his eyes are closed he is thinking vigorously, and I had learned by the first experience to just go right on and pay no attention to it.

Q. Do you recall any other instances similar to those you have mentioned?—A. There are only two such instances in my practice that seem to be absolute facts.

Q. What knowledge, if any, have you as to the judge's habit concerning drinking intoxicants?—A. Well, I know Judge Hanford drinks.

Q. Have you seen him drink?—A. Oh, yes; I have seen him drink.

Q. Where?—A. Rainier Club. I don't recall any other places distinctly enough to remember them.

Q. Do you know what he usually drinks?—A. Yes—well, I don't know what he usually drinks, because I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) What have you seen him drink?—A. I have seen him drink beer and what we call cocktail—a whisky preparation.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when, in your judgment, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state the circumstance.—A. There are two distinct circumstances, not as to time, but as simply as to place, within a radius of three or four years apart, I should say, when they were in the old building. I was up arguing a motion or a demurrer, I have forgotten which and the case in which it was, but I came up——

Mr. HIGGINS. What was that case?

A. I say I don't know the case. I had gone into the clerk's office, wondering why they hadn't put it on the calendar, and stated something to them and went into the—there was a vacant room from which Judge Hanford went upon the bench, between the clerk's office and going upon the bench, and while I was there about to phone, Judge Hanford came out to go upon the bench and I noticed his condition then.

The CHAIRMAN. What was it?

A. Beg pardon?

Q. Go on, tell the incident.—A. Judge Hanford's mannerism to me, as I have observed in drink, his eyes are bloodshot and his face flushed and he has what I call a broad walk—sailor's walk or railroad walk, as distinguished from—he spreads his feet far apart, and never, of course, have I seen him stagger, in that sense, in going upon the bench or anywhere else, excepting once that I remember, but he simply had, to me, all the indications of drink. The telephone is right by the door as one passes through, and I observed his condition and considered him intoxicated.

Q. Where was he going?—A. He was going on the bench.

Q. Did he go on the bench and hold court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And held court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you at any other time seen him when you considered him intoxicated?—A. There was one other time later, in the old building, but I was not close to him, except in the relation of about where Mr. Hughes stands to him upon the bench, and observed his condition then, which, as a result of a good deal of wide experience in that sort of thing, made me feel and believe that Judge Hanford was intoxicated; his mannerism upon the bench; he has a—that is, whenever I have observed him under conditions of that kind he seems to get his breath with difficulty and a very little liquor unbalances him. His nervous energy, in my judgment, is such that it seems to affect him very quickly. I don't think it takes very much to get him in a condition of that sort; but to me at that time he was intoxicated. But other than those two times, I have never seen him in a condition with reference to liquor that would make me feel that he was incapacitated for his duties.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you seen him in the city in the night time?—A. Well, never very much until—my home is at 753

Harvard Avenue. For the last two or three winters, or up until two winters ago, one winter ago Mrs. Brown and my daughter were away and I used to go home very late from my place of business, and spent not as much time as most men at the Rainier Club, but at that time I was a member and Judge Hanford would come in rather late and would occasionally take something, and sometimes not. But winter before last, I think it was in 1910, sometime during the month of December or January—in the winter months anyway—I went home very late at night and observed Judge Hanford on several occasions.

Q. What would you say as to his condition on those occasions?—A. I think Judge Hanford was in an intoxicated condition, from his manner.

Q. Were there others who had an opportunity of observing him at that time?—A. I don't recall any such.

Q. Have you seen the judge in any public drinking place?—A. Not that I recall; no, sir.

Q. If, on any of the occasions you speak of that you have seen him on the street car, you noticed his manner of getting on a car or getting off it——A. (Interrupting.) Why, once——

Q. (Continuing). You might state that.—A. (Continuing). I was considerably distressed about his condition on one night, and I simply followed him to where he gets—he lives three or four—I don't know how many blocks, I think—I don't know how many, beyond where I live, and I simply felt that he was not in a condition to go on and I simply sort of shadowed him to see that he got home safely. Of course he didn't know it, nor anybode else. I noticed his condition then as he got off the car. It was one of more lacking in self-control than usual, but able to get around, to get to his home and get in. I felt that he was not in that and I simply followed him to see that he did.

Q. Was there anything in his walk which confirmed the opinion you had?—A. Yes, sir; Judge Hanford on that occasion was decidedly under the influence of what to me was intoxication.

Q. What time was it?—A. Well, it was late at night; it was, I should say, 12 o'clock; might have been a little later; it was very near the last cars.

Q. Do you recall any other instances when you saw him in your opinion under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; not in a definite way upon which to predicate any.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. You spoke about the eastern clients. What were they?—A. Well, our firm represented a number of the bonding companies here at that time—the Aetna, the Title Trust Co. of Scranton, Pa., and there were three or four others I don't recall at this time.

Q. Furnishing indemnity bonds?—A. Furnished indemnity bonds——

Q. (Continuing). Covering accidents?—A. For accidents, things of that sort, and one insurance company, as I remember it.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Brown, you say that not very long after you came here, within a year or so at least, you presented a matter to Judge Hanford, making an oral argument to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were with Burley & Piles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what it was you were presenting?—A. No, sir.

Q. A motion or demurrer?—A. I don't.

Q. Do you remember who was on the other side?—A. I don't.

Q. You at that time thought he seemed to lose consciousness for a time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And made some remark that implied that he was incapacitated?—A. Well, I made such a remark because I simply didn't know hardly what to do. I knew that my talks were often calculated maybe to put men asleep, but it made a very——

Q. (Interrupting). And the moment you paused and made the remark——A. (Interrupting). Yes, I made some remark.

Q. (Continuing). He immediately answered you peremptorily to proceed, did he not?—A. Not immediately, no, but there was no great amount of time elapsed. I stopped, you understand, and, evidently not hearing the talk I presume it created an impression that something was wrong and he braced up, as I express it, and gave me a very keen attention.

Q. Do you remember whether he decided against you or not?—A. I don't.

Q. You remember he passed upon the matter promptly and clearly, don't you?—A. Yes, sir. I don't know as to the——

Q. (Interrupting.) So far as you could see, he had lost nothing of the value and weight of your argument at all?—A. I don't—I don't recall that phase of it, because—whether it was for or against me. I simply was broken hearted because he didn't pay attention, as I thought.

Q. But weren't you really broken hearted because of the apparent reprimand involved in his——A. (Interrupting.) Well, both, of course, made an effect upon me; it was natural.

Q. How long afterwards was it that you mention another instance when you thought he had momentarily lost consciousness?—A. Well, I can't—as I say, Mr. Hughes, that is where it seems to me——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, approximately how long after the first?—A. I can't—just—it is the statement of a fact and the surrounding circumstances are not sufficiently vivid to predicate time. I should say it was four or five years after. It was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you remember what you were presenting, a motion or demurrer?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Making a legal argument?—A. I was making a legal argument.

Q. Do you remember who was on the other side?—A. I don't.

Q. You remember that he appeared to nod while you were making a legal argument?—A. Yes.

Q. You didn't think that was particularly unusual, did you, Mr. Brown?—A. What is it?

Q. You didn't think that was particularly unusual, did you?—A. Yes, sir. Yes, I—I—I—I did.

Q. Do you want to say to this committee, Mr. Brown, that Judge Hanford lost any of the force of your argument?—A. Why, I can't go into his—I simply know that under ordinary circumstances that when a—when a man nods that he certainly—if he does listen or understand, it is not because he is asleep, but in spite of it.

Q. Do you remember how he decided——A. (Interrupting.) I don't.

Q. (Continuing.) The matter that was pending before him?—A. I don't.

Q. Now, you would determine whether he had missed any of your argument at all by what he said and the character of his decision, would you not?—A. I was not conscious of any loss or—the impression that was made upon me was not, I think, that he decided one way or the other; it was simply that he was asleep.

Q. What I am trying to get at is whether by his decision he gave any evidence that he had missed anything in the argument of either counsel in that matter or failed to follow—comprehend the whole question or all the questions that were presented to him.—A. Well, I have no distinct impression upon which to give the committee except that on—I hardly know how to answer the question, Mr. Hughes. My impression was that—simply what I have given the committee; as to the inference as to what his mental condition while that was going on, of course I don't know.

Q. You have given your impression as to what was his condition when his eyes were closed?—A. Yes.

Q. That is not what I am asking you for, Mr. Brown; I am asking you whether there was anything at the conclusion of the argument, when the judge was called upon to speak, to announce his conclusion or his decision, that indicated that he had failed to comprehend all that was said in the argument before him and to fully comprehend the questions submitted to him for decision?—A. There was no distinct impression of that sort made upon me at all.

Q. Now, you have testified to one occasion when, in your opinion, he was intoxicated when he was going into the court room for the purpose of commencing the discharge of his judicial duties in court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that and where?—A. I can't——

Q. (Interrupting.) In the old court room or in this new one?—A. In the old court room.

Q. Which one of the old court rooms, the one in the Colman Building or the one down here on the corner of Fourth and Marion?—A. Fourth and Marion.

Q. Where was he when you saw him?—A. Well, he was—you come out the court room—not—the court room is this way, but the room from which he comes is on that side of the hall, and he came as though he came through that door, and I would be standing about where Mr. Haynes was, phoning; he had to pass right by me as he went upon the bench.

Q. Were you standing in the clerk's office?—A. No, I was standing—there was a vacant room there with a table, you remember, and a phone, where we could always go from the clerk's office to phone or sit down and copy papers and——

Q. (Interrupting.) He passed through that room on the way through his private office, passed through the clerk's office——A. (Interrupting.) To the bench; yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) To the bench, and it was as he passed through that room that you saw him?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were standing at the telephone?—A. I was standing at the telephone.

Q. Engaged in telephoning?—A. No, I was waiting, trying to get the telephone. I had started to get the telephone. It was busy or something and I was just waiting, walking back and forth, there, when he came through.

Q. Then you were not at the phone?—A. Not at all; no, sir.

Q. Or standing at the phone when he passed?—A. No, I was pacing, as I remember—going back and forth, anyway. I saw him just as he came through the door and was close to him.

Q. Saw him pass through the room?—A. Yes.

Q. That is, across the room?—A. Yes.

Q. The room extended from the corridor to the street side of the building and was comparatively long and narrow, probably 12 feet wide, wasn't it?—A. Well, it is rectangular; yes.

Q. Yes. And he came out of his room through the side door and passed across the room a distance of probably 12 feet; not over that?—A. Yes, I should say, approximately.

Q. Now it was while he passed across the room that distance of 12 feet that you observed him?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you speak to him?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he speak to you?—A. I spoke to him.

Q. Did he acknowledge your salutation?—A. No, he did not; but I didn't think anything of that, because it is common for him to do that.

Q. Yes, when he is preoccupied, particularly?—A. Yes, preoccupied.

Q. The conclusion you reached then was based upon his walking across the floor while you could see him in the interval that elapsed while he was crossing that room?—A. Well, no; why, yes, my impression was made at that time.

Q. Did you go into the court room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you watch him preside at that trial?—A. Not long, no; I just went in a moment and my motion, of course, not being on, I didn't stay any length of time.

Q. Was there a case coming on to be heard?—A. I think—my recollection is not. There were legal arguments on——

Q. (Interrupting.) Motion day?—A. Motion day.

Q. When all the bar were there?—A. I don't recall as to that at all.

Q. Do you have any recollection of who were there?—A. No; not a thing.

Q. Mr. Brown, if Judge Hanford gave any appearance of being intoxicated upon the bench, wouldn't you recall the circumstance of who were there?—A. Not at all, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Or what lawyers were there?—A. Not at all, as I say——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you make any mention of it to any of the lawyers?—A. Why, I suppose I have; yes.

Q. Did you at that time?—A. I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you speak of it—call their attention to it?—A. I don't recall whether I did or not.

Q. Did you watch for the purpose of seeing whether you were mistaken or not?—A. No; I didn't.

Q. Watch and notice whether he was able to pass upon the questions that were presented in the same manner that he did before?—A. Not at all.

Q. Did you take any steps to determine whether what you had seen was due to mental preoccupation or to indisposition of any kind? A. Why, not at all, Mr. Hughes, because a wide experience with reference to drunken men has absolutely—I think I know a drunken man when I see him—I mean an intoxicated man, I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Mr. Brown, you would not say that Judge Hanford could be drunk upon the bench without its being a matter of common knowledge among the bar of this city, would you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Drunk on the bench and under the circumstances you have described——A. (Interrupting.) Why, no, sir; it is not a matter of common knowledge. Judge Hanford is not drunk upon the bench as a matter of general reputation.

Q. I say if it had been——A. (Interrupting.) In the whole period of 14 years which I have practiced before him, these are the only two times that I ever saw him where I felt that he was under the—so under the influence of liquor that it incapacitated him for his work.

Q. And do you mean to say that he was under the influence of liquor or drunk, or don't you make any distinction between those?—A. Well, I have used the softer expression—intoxicated—rather than the other expression—drunk. That is all.

Q. You missed the question I asked you a while ago. If Judge Hanford had been drunk on the bench on that occasion when members of the bar were there to present legal arguments, do you think it could have escaped the common knowledge of the bar of this city?—A. I don't know. I am not dealing with what their impressions were. The——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you ask anybody else——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Mr. Hughes, let the witness finish his answer, please.

Mr. HUGHES. I don't mean to interrupt the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have anything further to say you may say it and finish your answer.

Last question and answer read.

A. Of course my problem in testimony is not as to whether a certain state of facts which I saw and believed in made a similar impression upon you, or Mr. Dorr, or somebody else. As I gather your question, that is what you mean. I think if—well, I will not give my——

Mr. HUGHES (interrupting). Mr. Brown, do you mean to tell this committee that you would see him go upon the bench intoxicated, or drunk, as you put it, and be there for the purpose of presenting legal arguments, before others there for the same purpose, and that you would not speak of it or ask others, to find out whether you were mistaken?

A. Why, I have discussed that phase of——

Q. (Interrupting.) I mean at that time and place?—A. Why, no.

Q. At that time and place?—A. No; I did not. I don't remember whether I did or did not.

Q. Well, do you think that it could have escaped the attention of others and have escaped the common comment of the members of the bar who were present if they saw what you think you saw?—A. Well, I don't know, Mr. Hughes.

Q. The spectacle of a judge intoxicated on the bench——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Would be a very rare one; one that you do not know to be one that has ever occurred in the city of Seattle unless it occurred on the two occasions when you mention; isn't that true?—A. Those are the two that I remember distinctly, sufficiently as a fact to state to this committee.

Q. Wouldn't it immediately attract the attention of all the members of the bar, as it did yours——A. (Interrupting.) I don't know.

Q. (Continuing.) If you were not mistaken?—A. I don't know. There might have been many motives as to why the profession might or might not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you mean——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). Let him finish the answer.

A. I say I don't know. It takes a great deal of—I don't know what you would call it—with the men of capacity and character coming on here time after time since I have been sitting here to-day, and it is one of the saddest things that I have ever done, to seem to go counter to the common opinion of the profession, when I know the capacity and character of Judge Hanford in so many ways, and yet on the bench he was in that condition, in my judgment.

Q. Do you think any man need ever apologize for telling the truth?—A. I am not apologizing; but you are using an argument with me that because other men have gone on, or might have gone on, or might have known of this condition——

Q. Not at all, Mr. Brown. —A. I understood your——

Q. (Interrupting.) Not at all, Mr. Brown.—A. (Continuing.) Statement to mean that.

Q. I am asking as to that occurrence and whether if what you saw—what you think you saw—was observed alike by others it would not have been a matter of comment between you and the other members of the bar.—A. Well, it was not a matter—it made a very strong impression on me and I suppose I discussed it, but I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you know that you discussed it with anyone there?—A. I don't.

Q. Do you know whether you remained there long enough to observe Judge Hanford's action upon the bench at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. You have gone over all this ground a number of times; I think often enough.

Mr. Hughes. I was not intending to cover the ground twice, if I could get the witness to follow my questions. What I am trying to get from this witness is whether anything occurred that afternoon from which he could determine who else was present at that time, or whether he remained long enough to be able to recall and relate anything that transpired there.

The Witness. I didn't—I don't. I have so stated——

The Chairman (interrupting). He has stated that a number of times.

A. (Continuing.) To the committee and so stated that situation, but in spite of that they say that the weight of the testimony is with them and not with me, and subpœnaed me.

Mr. HUGHES. When was the second occasion that you mention in court?

A. With reference to drink?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I can't tell, Mr. Hughes.

Q. When was it with reference to the first one you mention?—A. Well, it was four or five—three or four—a series of years; whether it was three or five, I can't say.

Q. Before or after the first one you mention?—A. After the first.

Q. After. How long ago was the last occasion that you mention?—A. Well, I should say it was five years ago.

Q. What time of day was the first occasion that you mention, forenoon or afternoon?—A. The first occasion was in the forenoon, where I saw him come—where the circumstance of being in the room took place.

Q. And at the time he was passing throngh the room that you have described, when you had been trying to telephone, that was at 10 o'clock in the morning, at the time of opening court?—A. I don't recall the time.

Q. What?—A. I don't recall the time, but it was——

Q. (Interrupting.) You had not seen him drinking——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) That day?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not converse with him so as to notice the odor of liquor upon him?—A. Yes; I should say I did.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes, sir; I should—I did observe.

Q. The odor of liquor at that time?—A. Yes; as he passed.

Q. What?—A. That was one of the causations that made me believe that he was under the influence more or less.

Q. What time of day was the second occasion that you refer?—A. As I remember, it was in the afternoon.

Q. Do you remember the circumstances attending it; what you were there for?—A. No, sir.

Q. What your business was there?—A. No; I only know that it was some one arguing some insurance matter, as I remember it, and that is not vivid at all, not enough to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you see him go on the bench at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You drew your impressions from your observations of him sitting on——A. (Interrupting.) From standing arguing——

Q. (Interrupting.) How?—A. Yes, sir; both sitting down and getting up closer in argument.

Q. Was that when you were making an argument?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the same time that you spoke of his napping?—A. No, sir. No; I have only seen Judge Hanford twice napping in my judgment, in my judgment, and twice——

Q. (Interrupting.) And on this occasion he did not appear to close his eyes or nap?—A. Why, his eyes were—had Judge Hanford's usual characteristics when he is in that condition of being bloodshot and red and drawing a deep breath.

Q. Mr. Brown, you have testified here that you never saw him in that condition except twice, aside from what you saw on the street car?—A. Well, I understood that you were asking me about the second time——

Q. Yes.—A. (Continuing.) On the bench.

Q. But you speak of his usual condition as though you had been frequently with him under such circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. He referred to the second time, Mr. Hughes, but whether it was the second time in order of time or the second time on the bench I did not myself understand.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, that is what I have been trying to get at. The second time he mentioned on the bench was after the first one——

The WITNESS (interrupting). Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (continuing). The witness says, I believe.

Mr. HUGHES. And your only experience, then, was in arguing a matter before him as he sat on the bench?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You drew your inference that he was intoxicated from seeing him sitting on the bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you don't know what the case was?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know what the matter you were arguing was?—A. I don't.

Q. You don't know who the attorney on the other side was?—A. I don't.

Q. Do you know how he decided the question?—A. I don't.

Q. For you or against you?—A. I don't.

Q. You don't even know that?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He has stated all that.

Mr. HUGHES. I don't think he has.

The CHAIRMAN. You have had the witness now 35 minutes. You have asked him all this before. Go ahead, but please be as brief as you reasonably can.

Mr. HUGHES. You don't remember who the attorney on the other side was? I haven't got that answer.

A. No; I don't, Mr. Hughes.

Q. You refer to one other occasion that I want to call your attention to when you say you followed him home.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make yourself known to Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you speak to him?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you follow him without letting him know that you followed him?—A. Yes, sir; just to see that he got to the gate safely.

Q. When was that?—A. I don't know as to—it was—the month in which it was—it was during—I saw Judge Hanford very frequently on the car while Mrs. Brown was away, going home late myself—oh, it would be several times, in a condition of sleep, of overweariness, due, I assumed, to overwork, but on this time, though, in a condition that made me feel alarmed about his condition, and so I followed him simply to see that he——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you have any reason for not speaking to him?—A. Well, to me Judge Hanford is very peculiar. I have never gotten close in a social way with him. It made me—I simply didn't do it because I didn't think it was wise to do it. I didn't analyze my motives for not doing it.

Q. You haven't fixed the time yet.—A. I can't fix the time.

Q. Approximately?—A. Approximately it was in 1910, in February or March, I should say, but that is simply——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was your motive to observe and report the fact or to take care of Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; it was simply to see that he got home safely.

Q. And have you any other reason to offer for not going up to him and speaking to him——A. Not at all.

Q. (Continuing.) Than you have given?—A. My only reason for not doing it was because of his—I felt if he could navigate home so that he could get in safely, that it would be embarrassing both for him and myself to apprise him of the fact, if he was in a condition to be apprised. That was my main motive, as I look at it now. Of course, at that time I had no thought of anything.

Q. Was anybody else on the car that you recognized at all?—A. I don't recall. I don't—no, sir.

Q. Did you ever mention this circumstance to other leading members of the bar or members of the bar association of this city?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you ever mention any of these circumstances to the bar association of this city, or the members of it?—A. No, sir; I did not, because——

Q. (Interrupting.) You have told this committee that you for a time were connected with the firm of Burley & Piles as an understudy. What was your next law association?—A. Palmer & Brown was the next.

Q. And what was the next? A. Root, Palmer & Brown.

Q. Judge Root, afterwards of the supreme bench of this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you associated with Judge Root?—A. I think five years.

Q. Five years.—A. I was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Before he went on the supreme bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and your partner were instrumental in securing his appointment to the supreme bench?—A. I was not. Mr. Palmer, I think, was very instrumental in it.

Q. And after he left the firm, then it became Graves, Murphy——A. (Interrupting.) Palmer, Brown & Murphy.

Q. (Continuing.) Palmer & Brown. Were you a member of the firm of Graves & Murphy? Were you in the firm—was it Graves, Murphy, Palmer & Brown?—A. Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy was the firm name.

Q. Or Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy. And how long did you remain in that firm?—A. Three—four years, I think—three—I have forgotten.

Q. How?—A. Three or four years.

Q. Wasn't it less than that, Mr. Brown?—A. I don't think—I don't recall.

Q. And after you left that firm, didn't you practically quit the practice of the law?—A. Yes, sir. I was mentally and physically incapacitated for two years, out in the cold, cold business world.

Q. And, as a matter of fact, you have not practiced any since that time, of any consequence, in any of the courts, have you?—A. Absolutely; yes, sir; I have been a busy man in law work the last three years.

Q. I ask you if you have been practicing in the courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And having cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. When you say you were mentally and physically incapacitated, do you mean by that that you lost your mind?—A. Oh, I mean I was worn out with work, and the doctors had scared me to death; that I had to get out, and I simply——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you mean it was a case of nervous breakdown?—A. Yes, sir; I was simply——

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

C. W. IDE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. C. W. Ide.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. What is your business?—A. Contractor.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. About 4 years; 5 years.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 9 or 10—9 years.

Q. Mr. Ide, are you personally acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you been?—A. From 16 to 18 years.

Q. Have you had any business or social relations with the judge?—A. I was United States marshal in his court five years.

Q. What five?—A. From 1896 to 1901 or 1902.

Q. During your acquaintance with him did you hold any other official position?—A. No. Do you mean during the period I have known him?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, following that I was collector of customs.

Q. At Seattle?—A. At—in this district; in the State of Washington.

Q. That would not bring you in contact with him?—A. Many customs cases, of course, arise in court. We were in court nearly every term.

Q. During the years you speak of, give the committee some definite idea of how much of the time you were in the company or in the presence of Judge Hanford—had an opportunity to observe him?—A. During the years I was marshal I attended nearly every session of the court twice each year at Seattle, Spokane, Walla Walla, and Tacoma; two sessions each year in each place.

Q. Was it your custom to remain in court during the session, or did you have a separate office in which you stayed?—A. Well, I had a separate office; but when we went from Tacoma, where my headquarters was, I generally went with them and took care of the court business; that is, opened court.

Q. You had, however, a court crier and a bailiff or two——A. Bailiffs and deputies, too.

Q. (Continuing.) Who accompanied you; took care of the work of the court room themselves?—A. A great deal of the time; but when I went to those places away from home I was most always in court.

Q. Did you observe the peculiarity of Judge Hanford of which you have heard testimony, concerning apparent napping on the bench?—A. Yes; I have read that in the papers.

Q. What?—A. I have read that in the papers. I haven't heard any testimony heretofore.

Q. If you observed anything of that character in Judge Hanford while on the bench, tell the committee what you saw.—A. Well, I have seen, many times, the judge lean back in his chair and close his eyes, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you ever see anything else than that?—A. No; I never did.

Q. He would put his head on the back of the chair and would close his eyes?—A. Yes; lean back in his chair, generally, and close his eyes.

Q. Did he tilt the chair, or remain motionless in it on those occasions?—A. Well, I don't know that I can remember. I expect he leaned back. He turned the chair around frequently and would lean with his elbow on his desk.

Q. Is that the extent of your observation of those peculiarities about which we have heard testimony?—A. That is the extent; but I never saw—in the hundreds of times that I have been in court, I never saw anything that would lead me to believe that he was not awake; he would rule on a point as quick as he would had he been looking at the attorney.

Q. Have you ever observed the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you seen him drink?—A. I think I have on one or two occasions.

Q. Where were they?—A. Once in Walla Walla and—both times in Walla Walla, in the hotel.

Q. Are those the only occasions on which you ever saw him drink?—A. The only two drinks that I ever saw him take.

Witness excused.

EDWARD C. CHEASTY, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name in full, if you please.

A. Edward C. Cheasty.

Q. C-h-e-a-s-t-y?—A. C-h-e-a-s-t-y, yes, sir.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are in business here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Cheasty?—A. In the clothing business.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Forty years.

Q. You are a member of the park board here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has been associated with you on the board, has he, or has he been?—A. No.

Q. Have you had any relations with him because of your membership in the park board?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. What were the relations?—A. Well, mainly in consulting with Judge Hanford in reference to the public work of the city. I have frequently had occasion to go to him and ask his advice about different things that we have had in hand, and have consulted him along those lines because he has been very much interested in the work of the park department.

Q. For how long a time have you been consulting him, how many years?—A. Well, I was a member of the park board for four years and then was removed and was out of office for about a year and eight or nine months, and I have been back again about—since the first of this year, and during all that time at intervals I have had occasion to talk with Judge Hanford about our work.

Q. Where would you usually confer with him?—A. Well, a good many times in my own office; sometimes in his office, and sometimes in the Rainier Club, and other places that I have happened to meet the judge.

Q. At what hour usually?—A. Well, no particular hour.

Q. Day or night time?—A. Oftentimes in the daytime, sometimes at the lunch hour, and other times in the afternoon, sometimes in the evening; it would all depend on circumstances; just how and when I happened to meet him.

Q. How late can you recall conferring with him in the evening?—A. Oh, I think, perhaps, as late as 12 o'clock.

Q. Frequently or exceptionally?—A. No; not frequently.

Q. That would be at the club, would it?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Have you had other relations—social or business relations—with him than you have stated?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. What were they?—A. Well, I have known Judge Hanford all my life. I was born here in this State. I have always known Judge Hanford. I could not say to the day or the exact year.

Q. What I want to get at, Mr. Cheasty, is to what extent have you been in his company other than as you have stated?—A. Well, there have been intervals of sometimes months at a time when I have not seen the judge to any great extent, other times when I have met him a great deal. In a social way I have attended a great many dinners that he has been at—public and private dinners. I have often——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you see him in the evenings at other places than at the club?—A. Yes, sir; many times.

Q. Where, except functions such as you have referred to?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him at private houses where I have been dining, and in larger affairs—public or semipublic dinners—on a great many different occasions.

Q. Have you seen the judge when in your opinion he was under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. I never did; no, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink intoxicants?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. Where?—A. Well, at these different affairs that I have mentioned, some of these dinners I have attended, frequently wine would be served, and sometimes I have seen the judge take a drink in the Rainier Club, but that is all.

Q. You are a member of the club, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been for how long?—A. I have been since—for 15 years; 1897 I joined.

Q. Is your home in the same direction from the business part of the city that his is?—A. Not at present; no.

Q. Was it at any time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever rode home at night with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the street car?—A. I have.

Q. How late?—A. Well, I think, perhaps, as late as 12 o'clock occasionally.

Q. Have you on any of those occasions seen him when in your opinion he has been indulging in intoxicants?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever see him nod or appear to sleep on the car?—A. Well, I have seen the judge when I—I never have seen him at a time when I would feel that I could say he was asleep; no; but I have seen him—his head nod and his eyes close just for a minute or two at a time, but I would not say that I have ever seen him when I thought he was asleep.

Q. I think the question was, when he seemed to be asleep?—A. Well, it did not impress me that he was asleep; no.

Q. Have you ever been present in court when he occupied the bench?—A. I have.

Q. Have you on any of those occasions observed him when a stranger to him might reasonably think that he was napping?—A. No; I don't think I have in court.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Mr. Cheasty, I didn't understand your business. What was it?—A. Men's clothing.

Q. That is, both retail and wholesale?—A. No; retail.

Q. Are you a member of the Merchants' and Credit Men's Association of Seattle?—A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Can you tell the committee who the officers of that association are, if you know?—A. I could not.

Q. Do you know how long the association has been organized?—A. My impression is, a number of years. I could not say with any great accuracy, because my business does not bring me into that sort of an association.

Q. It is not the association to which retail merchants generally belong in this city?—A. I think not; I think it is a wholesale—it is an organization of the wholesale merchants, as I understand it.

Q. How large is the membership?—A. I have not any idea.

Q. You have no information about it. That is all.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Cheasty, have you been, within the last 10 or 12 years, a juror in this court—Federal court?—A. In Judge Hanford's court?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. In riding home with him at nights, when you have noticed him drop his head or close his eyes, have you ever sat down and talked with him after noticing that?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. Tell the committee what was the result of your observations in the conversations with him, as to whether he appeared to be under the influence of liquor or to be asleep or sleepy?—A. I never saw Judge Hanford in my life when I thought that he was under the influence of any drug or liquor at any time. I have noticed, as I said before, occasionally, that the judge's eyes would close, and knowing him as well as I do I would keep right on talking to him just the same as if his eyes were open, and it appeared to make no difference at all so far as he was concerned, he kept up his part of the conversation exactly the same as he would if his eyes were open.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. HIGGINS. Can you tell the committee, Mr. Hughes, who the officers of the Merchants' and Credit Men's Association of Seattle are?

Mr. HUGHES. I will ascertain for you. I do not recall at the present time, although I have met them at their meetings and addressed them at their meetings. I can readily find out for you who the present officers are. I can't recall, however, at this moment.

Mr. HIGGINS. I wish you would do so.

Mr. HUGHES. I will be glad to do so.

Witness excused.

An adjournment was here taken until 9.30 o'clock next Monday morning.

NINTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

F. T. MERRITT, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name

A. F. T. Merritt.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Merritt?—A. 2420 North Broadway, Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About five years and a half.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. Nineteen years.

Q. Still in the active practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any particular line of practice, Mr. Merritt?—A. No, general practice.

Q. Does your practice extend to the Federal court presided over by Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent have you been in that court?—A. For the last five years I had occasion to be in that court a great deal. I have a great deal of admirality practice that I have charge of and that, together with the fact that I represent some corporations, takes me into the Federal court a great deal.

Q. What are they?—A. What are——

Q. What are the corporations?—A. Railroad corporations and steamship corporations.

Q. What ones?—A. The Oregon-Washington Railroad Co. and the Alaska Steamship Co. and some others.

Q. The railroad company you mention, is that a steam or a trolley line?—A. Steam line.

Q. Interstate or intrastate?—A. Interstate.

Mr. HUGHES. It is a branch of the Union Pacific, is it not?

A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you practiced before Judge Hanford anywhere else than at Seattle?

A. In Tacoma.

Q. To what extent?—A. Oh, I have had, perhaps, a half a dozen or a dozen matters before him over there; I could not say just how many.

Q. To what extent have you noticed or had an opportunity to notice Judge Hanford outside of court?—A. For the last two years, or practically two years, I have lived just beyond Judge Hanford on the same car line and had occasion to take the same car with the judge a great many times during that time, especially late in the evening, and it was the custom of my wife and myself to go to the theater about once a week and I had occasion to work late in the evenings a great deal during that time, and I have ridden out with the judge a great many times during the evening and late in the evening on the same car.

Q. As much as once a week?—A. I should say on an average more than once a week, yes, sir.

Q. Have you any association with him, other than your professional association?—A. Not at all.

Q. Have you associated with him in any club or social organization?—A. Why, I believe he belongs to the Arctic Club; I have seen him in there—that is the club I belong to—I am not a member of the Rainier Club.

Q. Have you observed any peculiarity in the judge's apparent condition while presiding in court?—A. I have noticed him once in a while close his eyes and he would nod his head.

Q. For how long a time have you noticed that?—A. Do you mean in time or for how long a period?

Q. No, for how far back?—A. I should say most of the time since I practiced before him; that is, not most of the time, but I mean as far back—I should say I noticed it when I first commenced to practice before him about five years ago.

Q. What was that answer?—A. I should say as far back as about five years ago I noticed it first; I could not say exactly.

Q. In your opinion, does the habit increase or diminish or remain as you first noticed it?—A. I don't think it increased at all, I should say. I had a case I tried before him a few months ago that took several days; I do not remember that he closed his eyes any time during that case.

Q. Have you at any time noticed Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you seen him drinking liquor?—A. Once only.

Q. Where?—A. San Francisco.

Q. When?—A. He took dinner with me in the Palace Hotel in the evening, and we had a cocktail together.

Q. That was the only occasion when you saw him drinking any intoxicants?—A. The only time.

Q. And what hours of the night have you seen him go home?—A. It is usually 11 or a little after 11 o'clock that I have seen him, sometimes a little earlier than that; that is the usual time.

Q. How late was the latest that you happened to meet him going home?—A. Well, it is hard to say; I do not think I ever saw him going home later than half-past 11 or 12 o'clock, or a quarter to 12.

Q. Were those occasions when you were going home from the theater or from your office?—A. Both.

Q. On those occasions, if you noticed anything in the conduct of the judge that was out of the ordinary, tell what it was.—A. Why, the only thing I have noticed was that he would close his eyes and nod his head as he sat there in the car occasionally. Nothing else. I noticed that he never had any trouble—he always knew when he came to his street—about getting off—he got up without being told and walked out of the cars, the same as anyone would get off.

Q. Of course those occasions were included in one of your former answers, but I will ask you if, on any of those occasions, he was more or less under the influence of intoxicants?—A. He was not. He was in the same condition that I have seen him early in the morning in court, or in the afternoon, or at other times—simply apparently a little drowsy.

Q. Was the drowsiness or nodding which you spoke of in court like the nodding on the street car, which you saw him indulge in?—A. The same.

Q. On those occasions, or any of them, were you engaged in conversation with him?—A. Not particularly; no; I have spoken to him, but not to engage in conversation with him.

Q. A mere salutation?—A. That is all.

Q. How far did you ride together?—A. From here to his home; sometimes it would be down Second Avenue a few blocks; it would depend on where he got on.

Q. That would be how long ride?—A. About 2 miles nearly.

Q. And in point of time?—A. About 18 or 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. What is your firm?

A. Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle.

Witness excused.

GEORGE DONWORTH, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name.

A. George Donworth.

Q. D-o-n?—A. D-o-n—Donworth.

Q. Where do you reside, Judge?—A. In Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-four years.

Q. You are, of course, a lawyer by profession?—A. Yes.

Q. And are now on the bench?—A. No; I retired, or I resigned, from the bench some two months ago.

Q. What court were you presiding over?—A. I was one of the United States district judges for this district from the spring of 1909 until the spring of 1912.

Q. Did you have any other judicial experience?—A. No; none whatever.

Q. Do you now hold any official position?—A. None whatever.

Q. Are you practicing your profession, Judge?—A. I am.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. You, of course, know Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; I know him very well.

Q. And you have known him how long?—A. Twenty-four years.

Q. During your life in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent have you been thrown in his society during that time?—A. Well, during the three years that I was on the bench I, of course, was very frequently thrown into his society; probably on an average once a day. During the 10 years prior to that time I saw him probably two or three times a week; mostly at the club or in the court room.

Q. Your offices, while you were on the bench, were in the same building, were they?—A. They were in Seattle. But I remained in Tacoma about half of the time and Judge Hanford but seldom came there during my term of office.

Q. Were you assigned particularly to duty at Tcoma?—A. It was a matter of division between Judge Hanford and myself. We agreed that I should be responsible for the Tacoma business and he should be responsible for the Seattle business, but that each one would help out the other as occasion might require.

Q. And although holding court most of the time in Tacoma, your home was still in Seattle, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long a ride is it from one town to the other?—A. About an hour and a quarter on the cars.

Q. Prior to your service on the bench, please state again what your opportunity was for seeing and observing Judge Hanford.—A. Well, during the first few years that I was in Seattle I saw him only occasionally, as I had a case in court. Later I had more connection with Federal litigation and saw him more often in the court room or at chambers, and we were both members of the Rainier Club and I saw him there, oh, I suppose three or four times a week; perhaps sometimes oftener.

Q. At what time of the day or night, mostly?—A. Well, either at luncheon or during the evening.

Q. Extending into the evening how late?—A. I should say midnight at times.

Q. Have you had occasion, Judge, to notice the peculiarity so often spoken of here in Judge Hanford as to his apparent nodding or napping on the bench?—A. Yes; frequently.

Q. When did you first notice it?—A. I think as early as my first practice in his court; I do not recall the time when I did not notice it.

Q. And have you continued to notice it up to the time you last saw him presiding in court?—A. I think so.

Q. What do you think as to whether there has been any aggravation or diminution in the apparent condition or habit?—A. I should think it was more marked since the removal to this building than before.

Q. A little over three years ago?—A. It is more than that.

Q. Four years ago?—A. I think about five years ago, if I am not mistaken.

Q Judge, would you describe that condition as you observed it?—A Well, I noticed it more frequently during arguments by attorneys; the judge would close his eyes and apparently be dozing, but on the slightest interruption in the argument, or if any point came up that was out of the ordinary, he immediately showed that he was listening and watching the argument as closely as if his eyes had been open. I do not recall that any lawyer that I had a case for or against, or that I was associated with in any way, ever felt that his argument was being lost by reason of that peculiarity.

Q. While you were on the bench I assume you did not have as good an opportunity to notice this condition as before.—A. That is correct.

Q. While he was holding court you probably were also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were your hours the same as his?—A Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any explanation of his condition on those occasions?—A. I think it is due to a temperamental or individual mannerism. I never attributed it to anything else. I never heard that that was used as a basis for a charge of intoxication until about the time of the Dreamland Rink meeting. I then heard that that mannerism was taken as evidence by some persons of intoxication. I had never heard that before. I think that in Judge Hanford's presiding in this building, that the poor ventilation, particularly at the end of the room where the bench is, to some extent made his mannerism more apparent—made him more drowsy, or apparently drowsy, than he otherwise would have been. The ventilation in the district court room, as we call it, the other court room, is exceedingly poor; particularly in that end where the bench is. After presiding there for two or three hours I have frequently felt a dizziness that would only go away after I had gone out into the fresh air. I assume that it would affect any other man to the same extent as it affected me

Q. I do not understand you to mean by that that you nodded or napped on the bench —A. I do not remember that I ever did; it was a feeling of dizziness with me; it never went so far, however, as to affect my ability to attend to the business of the court.

Q. But if it were due to bad ventilation, how would you account for the mental alertness of which you speak?—A. Oh, I was mentally alert myself. I simply felt, and feel now, that if one had a predisposition to close his eyes and be drowsy that the lack of ventilation might make that occur more frequently.

Q. In order that the record may show the fact; in the room in which we now are, that is Judge Hanford's room, on the north side of it—is this the north side?—A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) There are three large windows which open from the top and bottom; the judge's seat at the bench is about 4 or 5 feet back of the nearest window—that is, back of the line of the nearest window—that is about right, is it?—A. I think so.

Q. With a very large, wide open space in front of it, so that the ventilation where the judge sat was very little, if any, inferior to the ventilation in the other parts of the room?—A. The record should show that Judge Hanford seldom held court in this room; the other room is the one almost always used

Q. In this building?—A. Yes, sir; and I think it should show also that during a great part of the year the climatic conditions are such that to keep the windows open to the extent needed to furnish perfect ventilation would cause a great part of the persons in attendance on the court to contract severe colds.

Q. The general information I have received is that there is not much difference in the temperature here in winter and summer. What is the fact as you understand it?—A. The difference in temperature is not so great, although it is a difference enough to cause a marked summer and a marked winter. The dampness is much more frequent in winter than in summer.

Q. It is the question of dampness, then, to which you referred more particularly, is it?—A. I am no expert on ventilation or on climatic conditions; I am simply giving my observation as best I can.

Q. Well, is it your experience or observation that the judge was in the condition referred to more in the other room than in this one?—A. I would not say that I noted any difference in that respect.

Q. Judge, have you at any time noticed Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was in any degree under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent?—A. Why, sometimes before dinner, I have seen him drink a cocktail; I think at times two cocktails; other times, in the evening, I have known him to drink beer.

Q. Where?—A. At the Rainier Club.

Q. Well, was that drinking beer just an occasional drink, or was it more than that?—A. Well, I would call it an occasional drink.

Q. During a social game of cards or dice or dominos, or anything of that sort?—A. I think the only game Judge Hanford has played at the club was dominos. Yes; he would drink during those games.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink other than on the occasions you spoke of when he took a drink before dinner or the times when you saw him drink at the club?—A. I presume I have seen him drink at other places, but I do not now remember that I have.

Q. If you did, it was on some rare occasion—to what extent have you been with the judge, or have you seen him in the nighttime elsewhere than at the Rainier Club?—A. I do not now remember of ever meeting him in the evening other than at the Rainier Club, except at court chambers and at some private evening party.

Q. Have you on any of those occasions seen the judge drinking?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. What drink, if any, have you seen him take other than beer?—A. Only the cocktails.

Q. And that was before meals?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lunched with the judge at times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At the Rainier Club here and at the Tacoma Hotel, in Tacoma.

Q. Was that occasionally or frequent?—A. Just occasionally.

Q. To what extent did he partake of intoxicating liquors on those occasions, if at all?—A. I do not remember of his ever taking a drink at lunch.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions of the judge?

Mr. MCCOY. Judge, did you do your work in the building evenings, or at home?

A. I came to the building only occasionally in the evening; I should say I averaged two or three evenings a month only in the building.

Q. And then you worked at home in the evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have a library at home?—A. No; the work at home that I did was largely in reading the records of cases submitted in writing—equity and admiralty cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Donworth, during the three years that you were on the Federal bench did you frequently have conferences with Judge Hanford respecting judicial work and cases?

A. Yes.

Q. What information can you give the committee regarding the amount of work Judge Hanford had occasion to do during the period that you were on the bench—judicial work I mean?—A. The calendar at Seattle was always full. It was full at Tacoma also, although I was able to just about keep even with it. In Seattle I think the work accumulated more rapidly than it could be dispatched. There was always a great deal of work to do, and Judge Hanford was attending to it with a great deal of industry.

Q. Had not the work accumulated and was not the calendar very much behind on account of the need of an additional judge before you were appointed to that office; before the office was created and your appointment was made?—A. There was quite a large accumulation at Tacoma; there was some accumulation here; but I do not think that it was in such shape that lawyers could not get their cases up fairly expeditiously. I think Judge Hanford had kept it up fairly well here.

Q. What do you know as to the hours of labor of Judge Hanford, either from your experience on the bench or prior thereto, from your experience and observation?—A. I think he usually put in a pretty full day from 10 until say 12.30 in court and at chambers, and then from 2 until about 5.30, and I have no personal knowledge of his being at the Federal Building every evening or very frequently, because I was not personally present very often in the evening, but I often found him at work when I came there in the evening.

Q. Do you know anything about his hours of labor prior to your going upon the bench? I mean outside of the ordinary day—working at nights?—A. Yes, sir; I have had occasion to apply for temporary orders and such things during the evening, and I usually found him at his chambers when I had occasion to do that.

Mr. HIGGINS. Judge Donworth, I understood you to testify that you frequently lunched with Judge Hanford at the noon hour?

A. I do not know whether I said frequently; I do not think I had lunch with him frequently, but on numerous occasions.

Q. It is in evidence by the testimony of Mr. Peterson that Judge Hanford was—while he does not use this language—an inordinately large eater. He even intimated that his intoxication was due to the fermentation of food. Are you able to express an opinion from having lunched with Judge Hanford, or to give any opinion to the committee on that subject?—A. I am not conscious that I ever formed any opinion one way or another on that point.

Q. What was the fact. Did he eat a light lunch or a hearty lunch?—A. It never struck me one way or the other. I should say that he was an ordinary eater.

Mr. HUGHES. Have you not observed the fact that he frequently takes nothing but a glass of buttermilk for his lunch?

A. I have not observed that.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of his previous answer don't you think that is a leading question?

Mr. HUGHES. He might have been able to observe that fact without there being any inconsistency in his answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask Judge Donworth one other question.

Q. Some question has been raised here as to the practice of the courts and as to whether they, in this district, ever grant new trials for errors that have not been presented or urged or to which exceptions have not been taken by counsel; have you ever done so, Judge Donworth?—A. I do not recall that I have.

Q. Do you recall the Pappas case—the case of Pappas against the Great Northern Railway Co.? A. I recall the case; yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't that the case in which you granted a motion under some such facts? A. My charge was excepted to and on the argument for the new trial I was convinced that I had charged the jury erroneously on the point excepted to and I granted a new trial. Of course in the Federal court the judge is vested with a very broad discretion about granting a new trial; whenever he thinks a new trial would be in the interest of justice, he has that discretion—it has been so decided in numerous cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Is his discretion any broader than that of any other nisi prius judge in those cases?

A. I should think so. The Federal court follows more closely the English practice, and the judge is a bigger factor in the court than he is in the State court.

Q. Any nisi prius judge has very wide discretion in that manner and one that the reviewing court will not interfere with unless it has clearly been abused. Is not that the general rule? A. I think that that is the general rule.

Q. Both in the State and Federal courts? A. With this qualification, that in the Federal court the judge has the right to advise the jury in his charge as to how he thinks the case should go, if he thinks justice requires him so to do. In other words, he has the right to express his opinion on any question of fact to the jury, provided he informs them that his opinion is not binding upon them. I think that same idea would run into the motion for a new trial, and a judge who has that right that I have referred to would probably have a broader discretion than in the State court where they are prohibited from expressing any opinion on a question of fact.

Q. Have not some of Judge Hanford's judgments been reversed for the very thing which you speak of?——A. I have never heard of it.

Q. (Continuing.) Suggesting to the jury or virtually telling them how they should find?—A. I have never heard of it. I have used that right myself when I thought justice required it.

Q. Have you exercised that right in favor of the plaintiff?—A. Yes, yes. In a case against the telephone company I cautioned the jury, in reference to certain testimony introduced by the defendant, and called their attention to the strength of the plaintiff's case, because I felt at the close of the argument of counsel that the counsel for defendant had made a stronger argument that might carry with the jury.

Q. Did you go to the extent of telling them that in your opinion they should find for the plaintiff?—A. Not in so many words; but the intimation was plain.

Q. That was your intention?—A. It was the intention to let the intimation be plain; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. MCCOY. Judge Bonworth, it is not really a matter of what you would call discretion; is it—rulings of that kind—is it not that on all the circumstances of the case you legally think you ought to do one thing or the other—in other words, the administration of justice, particularly in common-law cases, does not depend on anybody's discretion, does it?

A. Yes, sir; it does, in the Federal court. Whether the judge shall intimate to the jury his opinion on a question of fact is a thing that appeals to a man's sense of abstract justice and nothing else—there is no rule about it. The judge may either express his opinion or he may refrain from expressing it and commit no error whatever.

Q. That is, on the charge?—A. On the charge.

Q. Now, I am speaking of motions for a new trial. Do you think that the decision of a motion for a new trial is a matter which rests in the discretion of the judge? Is it not a matter that lawyers can argue with reference to the facts and point out where they have a right to a new trial, or the other side point out that there is no ground on which to grant the motion for the new trial?—A. Well, that is largely true and yet not altogether true. In arguing the motion for a new trial we bring forward—if I were trying to get a new trial I would bring forward the points where I felt I was legally entitled to a new trial; I would dwell upon those, and after having covered those fully, if I felt I had ground for so doing, I would then take the position that as a matter of justice the verdict was wrong, and ask the judge to exercise his discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. That is his judicial discretion?—A. Yes, sir; we have all heard the story, I suppose, of what is sometimes referred to by lawyers as the thirteen rule—where the judge set aside a verdict with the remark that "It takes thirteen men to rob a man in this court."

Mr. MCCOY. Is it your opinion that courts are constituted to administer what they designate as abstract justice?

A. No; of course, the courts must follow the law absolutely.

Q. And is not the point before an appellate court always, when they are speaking about a judge's discretion, that the judge has had a better opportunity—the trial judge—to observe the witnesses and so forth, and so to that extent he is in a better position to judge than any appellate court can be, and so far as the question depends in any way, or turns in any way on the observation of the witness there, they are very reluctant to interfere with the judge's ruling, but where that element is not involved the case must be decided by them and also by the nisi prius judge on exactly the same grounds.—A. Well, you are right about that. Of course, by "abstract justice" I do not mean to ignore the law; but where one set of witnesses testify one way and another set another, the justice of that case is, of course, one way or the other under the law. If the judge has a clear idea that the justice is one way in spite of the fact that some witnesses have sworn to the contrary, the judge then has a discretion in granting a new trial to apply his sense of the right of the case.

Q. Yes; Then the question would be on the weight of the evidence.—A. Yes.

Q. And that is a legal proposition and not a discretionary proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all.

Mr. HUGHES. Was that last question answered?

The WITNESS. Yes; that is, if the judge believes the weight of the evidence is different from the way the jury believed the weight of the evidence to be the the judge would grant a new trial unless some other reason in the case made it improper to do so.

Mr. HUGHES. Did I understand either the question or the answer to imply that weighing the evidence and the decision reached as the result of weighing it is a legal question; or the problem solved after the weighing of the evidence and the arriving at the decision is a solving of a legal proposition or a legal question?

A. It depends on in how broad a sense you use the words "legal question."

Mr. McCoy. Don't you mean this, that the ultimate question is a question of fact, but the solution of it must be determined by legal methods of reasoning?

A. Of course, when we come to weigh the evidence, while it is a judicial question it is not legal in the narrow sense of the word legal.

The Chairman. Don't let us get into the domain of psychology.

Witness excused.

Nathaniel W. Bolster, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Tell your full name.

A. Nathaniel W. Bolster.

Q. Spell the last name for me.—A. B-o-l-s-t-e-r, sir.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Bolster?—A. Seattle, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Some 22 years odd.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Shorthand writer, sir.

Q. What has it been during those years?—A. The same business, sir.

Q. In what line of employment have you been engaged?—A. Court work or anything that comes from court work—hearings and matters of that kind and general reporting.

Q. In connection with judicial proceedings of one sort and another? A. Mostly, sir.

Q. To what extent have you been employed in Judge Hanford's court?—A. To a very large extent, sir.

Q. Be more specific.—A. I think I reported the majority of the cases that were tried—reported in Judge Hanford's court; that is my present recollection. I used to do——

Q. (Interrupting.) During how long a time?—A. More particularly in the earlier days, from 1900 down.

Q. To when?—A. Well, I reported, I think, five cases this last term—right this present term.

Q. You said more particularly in the earlier days, and you said from 1900. To what time would constitute those earlier days?—A. I meant by that that there were periods when I was absent from the city on other engagements. But in those days there was just one firm, practically, of court reporters in Seattle, of which I was a member. Since then there have been others. The number of courts—superior courts—has increased, so that there have been a great many others in the business, but Mr. Bowman and myself at one time did all of Judge Hanford's business—all the Federal court business.

Q. You were employed by the attorneys in the respective cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was your office, with reference to the Federal Building?—A. On the same street, within a block and a half of the Federal Building.

Q. Did you at any time have an office in the Federal Building?—A. Never, sir.

Q. To what extent were you in the court except when on duty reporting?—A. I would say never; very seldom.

Q. To what extent did you observe Judge Hanford elsewhere than in court during this time?—A. Not to a very great extent—to some extent.

Q. What occasions had you for seeing him or observing him except in court?—A. I have accompanied Judge Hanford and the jury at times to view the premises that were under litigation, the subjects of litigation, and on those occasions I have traveled with him on the street car. I have seen him in town a good deal when I have not seen him on the bench.

Q. Where—where in town?—A. On the streets; on the street cars.

Q. Anywhere else?—A. I think that I saw Judge Hanford once at the Rainier Club. I had occasion to go there for some business engagement with some member of the bar. I have seen him at banquets that I have had to report, quite often.

Q. What was your business at the club?—A. Speeches—public speeches.

Q. Was your business at the club on that occasion or those occasions to take down some order which the judge would make?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I think I had to go somewhere with some member of the bar and I had an appointment to meet him at the club. I saw Judge Hanford, I remember, on one occasion at the Rainier Club.

Q. Do you remember more than once?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe the peculiarity of Judge Hanford when presiding, with reference to nodding and napping?—A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. When did you first observe it?—A. I observed it from the first time I had occasion to write shorthand in Judge Hanford's court. I noticed it in those days.

Q. Do you agree with a stenographer who has given testimony, that the stenographer taking notes can do the work during the taking of testimony before a jury and also observe with his eyes whatever is going on in the court room?—A. Yes, sir; I do; and especially with reference to the judge's attitude and his remarks; one has to take—a stenographer has to keep one eye on the judge all the time, you might say, to note any remark that is made by the judge, because—while I don't like to say it—a stenographer is in a sense you might almost say a spy on the judge. The attorneys engage him for the purpose of getting everything that the judge says, and if the judge makes in the presence of the jury any remarks they expect him to get every little syllable that the judge says in the record so that they may take advantage of it.

Q. Since the remark of which I speak has been made, I have myself given some attention to the stenographers here engaged, you for one, I think, and I haven't noticed you take your eye from the work, nor have I noticed the gentleman now at work taking theirs from the work. What is your observation?—A. I would say that that is a very different situation from proceedings in the court for this reason, sir, if you will permit me to say it: In Judge Hanford's court the stenographer is not seated away down below the level of your bench where he can not observe your face or you at all, can not see you——

Q. (Interrupting.) Can't those gentlemen see me now?—A. I could not where I sat—when you refer to what I was doing.

Q. Are not those two gentlemen in front of me, are not they situated so that they can see me now if they will look at me?—A. Yes. The first way that my chair was placed in the position that you refer to I was down below about——

Q. (Interrupting.) You haven't yet answered my question, however.—A. I would say that the conditions are very different in the trial of a case, because——

Q. (Interrupting.) You are not now answering my question.—A. I beg your pardon then, sir. I will try to.

Q. Do you remember it?—A. I think so.

Q. Will you answer it?—A. Your question, as I understand it, was that you have observed myself——

Q. (Interrupting.) No; not at all. The last question was: "Can't the gentlemen now working here see me where I sit if they only direct their eyes toward me?"—A. I think they could see your face, sir; yes.

Q. You know they could see me, do you not?—A. I think so, I think they can; yes, sir. I am free to say that I think so; yes.

Q. But they haven't looked at me and could not very well without missing something of what is going on, could they?—A. Yes; they could. I could.

Q. Very well; go on now and tell us what you observed of Judge Hanford.—A. I observed this of Judge Hanford, that he used to close his eyes in the court room in the course of the trial. It was quite a standing joke in our office that a new attorney coming to Judge Hanford's court for the first time and seeing Judge Hanford do that, would imagine that Judge Hanford was not paying attention to what was going on, and it was just a standing joke in our office to notice the surprise and amazement that would come over them when they would find that he was keenly observant of everything that had transpired and had really a better perspective of the testimony by closing his eyes than he would have if he had had them open. I imagine he shut out a lot of extraneous sounds—a person putting his head in the door or slamming the door, or those things—the side things happening in the court room—to get a better perspective of the testimony by doing so. That was my impression, I have had it—that it was a constant——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do I understand you to say that his appearance was such as to lead lawyers who were not acquainted with him to think that he was not observing the testimony, or, in other words, that he was napping?—A. I would think that that would be the impression of a new man who had never seen him but the one time.

Q. Have you heard expressions of that sort from such men? A. I have.

Q. Often or seldom? A. As I say, when a stranger blew into town and tried his first case before Judge Hanford, it got to be a joke in our office to find what a surprise it was to him when he tried——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was the joke in your office based upon what attorneys would say about his condition? A. No; rather the surprise that—the manner in which it affected the new men.

Q. During the time you knew him, to what extent, if at all, have you seen the judge partake of intoxicating drinks?—A. Judge Hanford—I have seen him partake of intoxicating drinks. We went to view some premises at Alki Point one time; there was a condemnation by the Government for a lighthouse; the jury had to wander around, and the judge and I wandered around the premises, and came back in the afternoon. It was a hot day, and I suggested to the judge that I had a lot of work to do and I thought I would like to take a drink, and asked the judge if he would accompany me. He agreed to do so, and I saw him take a drink at that time in O'Brien's—Steve O'Brien's saloon on James Street—on Cherry Street.

Q. What did he drink?—A. Sherry and egg; and I remarked at the time that—

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't care about that.—A. That I——

Q. (Interrupting.) What he said is not very important. Is that the only time you saw him take a drink?—A. No.

Q. When else?—A. I took a drink on another occasion with him and a member of the bar at the Butler Hotel.

Q. In this city?—A. In this city.

Q. When was that?—A. That was a matter of five or six years ago.

Q. What did he drink then?—A. I think he drank a cocktail.

Q. Do you recall any other occasion when you saw him drinking?—A. I don't.

Q. Just those two?—A. That is all I can recall.

Q. At what hours of the night have you seen the judge or been with him down in the city?—A. I am a good deal of a night hawk myself. I have to work late at night, and I have sometimes—when the jury has been out here I have an occasion to—used to formerly do it a great deal; be on tap so that if the jury required any extra instructions, additional instructions, that I would be there to take them down, and I used to stay up sometimes as late at 11 o'clock or 12 o'clock at night and I would see the judge.

Q. Were you under orders to be about——A. I felt it my——

Q. (Continuing.) For that purpose?—A. I felt it my duty to the attorneys who employed me to be there; to be around when there was an important case out.

Q. You failed to catch the point of my question.—A. No, sir.

Q. Or at least you didn't answer it.—A. Tantamount to orders; I consider a contract of engagement——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was that habitually or occasionally?—A. Used to be a very frequent occurrence formerly; it has not been of late years.

Q. Well, why would you be there at some trials where you officiated as stenographer and not at all of them?—A. There are a great many more men in business in the town now and it is easier to get a man, if it is needed in an emergency——

Q. (Interrupting.) Listen to my question again. I am not speaking of the cases where you did not officiate, but the cases where you did officiate as the stenographer. The question is, Why would you not attend all of them for the purpose you mention?—A. I didn't attend them at those hours at night. I say I stayed in my office, subject to call. Now, if I were called on the most unimportant case I would go, but juries don't usually stay out all night on trivial cases.

Q. Well, go on and answer the question. To what extent have you observed the judge on these occasions late at night?—A. The extent—I could not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Would you see him except as you were in fact called into the court to take some additional instruction which might be necessary to give to the jury?—A. Not very often; very rarely otherwise.

Q. Have you seen the judge in any saloon in the city at night, except the Butler bar, as you have stated?—A. No, sir, and that was not at night; that was at noon.

Q. Then have you ever seen him in a saloon at night?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor drink in a saloon at all except as you have stated?—A. Two occasions.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Bolster, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Witness excused.

A. C. BOWMAN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name, please?

A. A. C. Bowman.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Bowman?—A. Seattle.

Q. What is your business?—A. United States commissioner.

Q. In Judge Hanford's court?—A. District court of the western district of Washington.

Q. Appointed by whom?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. When?—A. My first appointment was in 1892.

Q. And then?—A. I have been reappointed since.

Q. By Judge Hanford?—A. By Judge Hanford.

Q. And you are still acting?—A. I am.

Q. You have an office in the court room?—A. I have not.

Q. In the court building, I mean?—A. I have not.

Q. Where is your office?—A. Central Building.

Q. How far from this building?—A. Five or six blocks.

Q. In the old courthouse did you have an office in the court room, the courthouse building?—A. I did not.

Q. How much of the time are you present in court when it is sitting?—A. Very little time present in court. I am in the court room frequently during the week.

Q. Your duties, however, are performed elsewhere than in the courtroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at your own office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Always have been?—A. Always have been.

Q. Before you were appointed commissioner how long had you been acquainted with the judge?—A. Ten years.

Q. What was your business then?—A. Shorthand reporter.

Q. In what court?—A. All courts in the State.

Q. To what extent did you do reporting in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Mr. Bolster and myself and I think possibly one other member of the firm at that time did all of the work in the Federal court. I did a reasonable——

Q. (Interrupting.) Your share of it?—A. (Continuing.) Share of it.

Q. Do I understand that as commissioner you take the testimony yourself?—A. I do.

Q. And report it to the court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe the peculiarity in Judge Hanford's demeanor while presiding of which you have heard testimony?—A. I have.

Q. That is, as to apparent napping——A. I have.

Q. (Continuing.) Nodding?—A. I have.

Q. How long have you noticed that altogether?—A. That is difficult to say. It has extended back over many years. I could not say the number of years.

Q. Will you give us your best recollection?—A. I don't recollect the first time I observed it, but I did observe it many years ago when reporting in his court after he was appointed United States district judge.

Q. You have heard witnesses—the last witness and the one before the last, I think——A. I heard the last——

Q. (Continuing.) Testify?—A. I heard the last. I didn't hear Judge Donworth's testimony.

Q. You heard Mr. Bolster's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you anything to add to what he said, as you recall it?—A. Only this: I have noticed Judge Hanford during the examination of witnesses when his eyes were closed and counsel seemed to be going beyond the reasonable limits of an examination along a certain line, and Judge Hanford, without an objection, would suggest that he had pursued that line of examination far enough; and I also can say that when objections were made by counsel to questions, that if the judge had been sitting with eyes closed, that I never remember of an instance where he asked the reporter to read the question in order to get the point of the objection; in other words, he ruled without hesitation and with absolute apparent understanding of all of the preceding questions and answers.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you seen the judge partake of intoxicating drinks?—A. Very seldom.

Q. Do you recall any of those occasions?—A. I think probably three years ago, in Bellingham—he held a term of court there, and I think one night after holding an evening session until probably 10 o'clock, that on the way to the hotel the judge and myself and some one else who was with us stepped into a bar—I am not sure whether it was in the hotel or near by—where the judge took a drink of whiskey before going to bed.

Q. Do you recall any other instance where you saw him drink liquor?—A. Not within recent years. Some years ago I used to see him at the Washington Club; but he was a very spare drinker.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. I am.

Q. Have you been with him there?—A. I have not. I have not been a frequent visitor at the Rainier Club for a number of years.

Q. Have you ever been with him or drank with him or seen him drink at a saloon in Seattle?—A. I don't believe that I have; I don't remember it.

Q. To what extent have you been in his company, or have you had an opportunity to observe him at night in the city during the last 10 years?—A. Not very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Bowman, Mr. Hughes?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have not.

Witness excused.

SAMUEL H. PILES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Samuel H. Piles.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Piles?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-six years.

Q. What is your present business or profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you hold any official position at this time?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you held any?—A. Yes.

Q. What?—A. Well, in the early days I was city attorney of this city, assistant district attorney, as it was then called in the Territorial days, and I was six years in the United States Senate.

Q. From the State of Washington?—A. From this State; yes.

Q. What six years, Senator, was that?—A. From March, 1905, until March, 1911.

Q. To what extent have you practiced your profession in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Yes; quite extensively.

Q. During your term as Senator I presume you did not do much law business?—A. No; I gave up the law business altogether when I was elected to the Senate and dissolved my law firm.

Q. Prior to your service in the Senate to what extent did you practice in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Well, I had quite an extensive practice in Judge Hanford's court in admiralty and equity and actions at common law.

Q. For how long a time?—A. Oh, twenty-odd years. I practiced before Judge Hanford when he was chief justice of the Territory of Washington.

Q. Did you at any time have any business relations of any sort with him?—A. No; I never had any business relations with him that I recall.

Q. Any investment of any kind with him?—A. No.

Q. Did you have any business relation or property relation to the Hanford Power & Irrigation Co.?—A. None whatever.

Q. Senator, if you observed the peculiarity in the judge's manner of presiding in court which you have heard witnesses testify about, please tell the committee about it.—A. Well, I have observed the peculiarity of his apparently dozing on the bench.

Q. How long since you first observed it?—A. Oh, twenty-odd years ago.

Q. And how recently have you observed it?—A. Well, I have not been before Judge Hanford for a number of years.

Q. About how many?—A. The year before I was elected to the Senate I traveled around over the country most of the time, and I had been very ill, in an effort to regain my health. I haven't seen much of Judge Hanford in court for, say, seven years.

Q. Well, prior to your going to the Senate you observed him then in that respect, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. What would you say as to his condition at that time compared with his condition when you first knew him, with reference to this dozing, or apparent dozing?—A. Oh, I think it was about the same. I have noticed Judge Hanford apparently dozing in the afternoon. I remember distinctly my—I remember distinctly the first occasion I observed that. It was a case I was trying myself, and I thought that Judge Hanford was not giving the case as thorough attention as he ought, but I soon observed, on objections there, that I had made myself or that some one else had made, to a witness, that he was thoroughly alive to what was going on, that it was simply a peculiarity of his.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge partake of intoxicating drinks?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. In this city and at Tacoma, I think Spokane; other places where I have been with him.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been with him there?—A. Yes.

Q. Drank with him?—A. Yes.

Q. At what hours, mostly?—A. Well, for the last year I have, I think, met Judge Hanford on an average of twice a week at the Rainier Club. I used to stop there on my way home. That was before I moved, which I recently did, to my old home. Up to a few weeks ago I was residing at the corner of Cherry and Boren, which is just up the hill above the club and on the way to Judge Hanford's home, and going from my office I would generally step into the club about half past 5—in fact, there was sort of a tacit agreement between Judge Hanford and myself that we would meet there about half past 5—and play a game or two of dominos before going to dinner; so I should say I have met him on an average, during the last year, of about twice a week at the Rainier Club—played dominos with him and took drinks with him.

Q. What was his usual drink, Senator?—A. Beer or cocktail.

Q. You would then go on home to dinner?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, what about meeting him again or later in the evening or at night at the club?—A. Well, on several occasions I have invited the judge to dine with me at the club and to go to the theater, and he has returned the compliment, so with that exception, I don't recall meeting him in the evening at the club unless it would be at a banquet—some big dinner that some one was giving there. We would meet there on several occasions at banquets.

Q. Well, on the occasion of dining at the club, would you have something to drink while at dinner?—A. Oh, yes; we used to take a cocktail before our dinner.

Q. Anything else?—A. No; that is all we would take. If we would go out to the theater, we would come back and take a drink after that and then go home.

Q. What would it be, generally?—A. Well, I took a rye highball, as a rule, and after dinner I generally take brandy myself. The judge would take either a cocktail or a glass of beer.

Q. After eating, as a rule?—A. Yes; I have seen him take beer when he would come in in the evening.

Q. After the theater?—A. Yes; I think I have. I am not thoroughly positive of that.

Q. Well, is what you have described a thing that occurred pretty regularly when you met?—A. Well, sometimes we would not drink—either one of us would not drink. Sometimes the judge would not be feeling very well, and sometimes my stomach would not be in good condition, but ordinarily we would take a cocktail or he would take a cocktail and I would take a rye highball.

Q. Before eating?—A. Yes.

Q. And have you at any time been in any of the barrooms or hotel bars or saloons in the city with him at night?—A. Well, I—at night?

Q. Yes.—A. No; never at night.

Q. At other times?—A. I don't think I was ever in a barroom in the night in my life. I have very rarely been in barrooms myself, but I do think that I have been with Judge Hanford and Judge Burke and other lawyers in the barroom at Saratora's—used to be Saratora's, it has changed hands now, I have forgotten the name of the place—and some other place, I don't just recall the name of it now; but that was always in the daytime.

Q. You mean you were there with the judge? A. Yes. I don't think I was ever with him in a barroom more than three or four times in my life.

Q. Well, were those formerly or were they recently?—A. Oh, those were years ago, more than six, seven years ago, so far as I recall. I may have been in a barroom with him since, but I don't recall it.

Q. Senator, if at any time you have seen the judge when in your opinion he was more or less under the influence of intoxicants, I want you to please tell the committee of it.—A. Well, I have never seen Judge Hanford under the influence of intoxicating liquors. I have been with him at banquets where he had every possible occasion to become intoxicated if he wished to. I remember recently I attended quite a large banquet where he was chairman of the evening; we had all kinds of drinks, starting in with a cocktail and winding up with champaign and brandy. Dr. Matthews was there as one of the guests.

Q. Was that the occasion when Dr. McCormick lectured in the Alhambra Theater?—A. No, this was a dinner given by Mr. Hill at the Rainier Club, and a number of gentlemen were there, I think——

Q. (Interrupting.) What Hill?—A. Samuel Hill. Given, I think, to Mr. R. H. Thomson, who was about leaving the city at that time. And I have never seen Judge Hanford drink any more than a gentleman ordinarily would drink under such occasions as you and I and all other men attend at times.

Q. Will you tell the committee, Senator, what is your idea as to when a man is under the influence of intoxicants?—A. My idea is that when a man is under the influence of intoxicating liquor, is when he is dominated to a certain extent by liquor; he forgets himself to a certain extent—loses that gentlemanly control of himself.

Q. Might he walk normally and be under the influence of liquor, in your judgment?—A. Slightly, I think a man could, yes. I think a man could walk—some men can walk erectly.

Q. At what stage would you say a man was intoxicated?—A. Well, never having been intoxicated myself, I am not an expert on that subject.

Q. Well, haven't you seen some who in your judgment were?—A. Oh, yes; I have seen men intoxicated very frequently.

Q. Well, at what stage would you call his condition one of intoxication?—A. Well, I say I would consider a man—when I speak of a man as intoxicated I would speak of a man who had lost control of himself. I would speak of a man under the influence of liquor, as I would understand it, when he to a certain extent had lost control of himself.

Q. If he were less able to take care of himself than before he drank any, would you say he was intoxicated?—A. I didn't catch that, Mr. Chairman.

Q. If a person were less able to take care of himself than if he had not drank any, would you say he was intoxicated?—A. No; I don't know as I would if a man was able to take care of himself. I don't mean that he was able simply to know what he was doing. I would say a man was intoxicated even though he was able to take care of himself.

Q. And if he walked unsteadily, what would you say?—A. I would say he was intoxicated; that is, if the unsteady walk was produced by intoxicants.

Q. Yes; of course.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the witness, as I recall it, who one of the witnesses the other day stated—Mr. Peterson, I think—stated he was in company with Judge Hanford when he thought the judge was under the influence of liquor. I will leave the examination on that point to you [addressing Mr. Hughes].

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Senator Piles, a witness by the name of Peterson testified to seeing you pass the Washington Annex, going in the direction of the Washington Hotel, or the Moore Theater, going north on Second Avenue, as I recall it, one evening about 5—one evening, I won't undertake to state the exact time—a few weeks ago, at which time he described Judge Hanford as, in his opinion, being intoxicated, from his appearance and his walk. Will you tell the committee what you know in respect to the correctness of that statement?—A. Well, the witness evidently mistook other persons for Judge Hanford and myself, for I have not been in the vicinity of the Washington Hotel or the Washington Annex with Judge Hanford or anyone else since the 29th day of April. I say the 29th day of April because I remember quite distinctly that I had not been in that neighborhood since attending the theater with Judge Hanford.

Q. On what date?—A. The 29th of last April. I had the matter investigated at the Rainier Club, because I ordered my tickets from the club. I invited Judge Hanford to dine with me that evening. We took dinner at the club. I ordered my tickets from there. And I also investigated from the theater, to make certain that I was correct, and I find that Margaret Anglin, the play which we attended, was played at the Moore Theater on that evening. We left the club about 8 o'clock; we walked to the Moore; we left there somewhere in the neighborhood of 11 o'clock; walked back to the Rainier Club, where we took a drink, and from that we walked on up the hill as far as Boren, where I left Judge Hanford at the corner of Boren and Madison, he going on out as far as Broadway and walking on to his home, and I walked on to my home. On that evening Judge Hanford was perfectly sober. We had, I think, a cocktail at our dinner, and maybe we had one before dinner—two before dinner, I am not certain but what we played that evening, dominoes, and probably took—I took a rye highball and he a cocktail, and then ordered our dinner, which I think is correct, and had another cocktail, possibly, at dinner; and from there we went on up to the theater, stayed there three hours, came out, and went back to the club, and did as I have said, and then went home. I have not been with Judge Hanford in that section of the city for several years prior to that date, and I know I have not been in that neighborhood since that date.

Q. Senator Piles, have you known Judge Hanford intimately for many years?—A. Yes; I knew Judge Hanford when I just came here as a young lawyer, practically. I located in Snohomish, in this State, a small town 50 miles from here, and Judge Hanford was then practicing on the circuit, and he used to come to Snohomish and try cases there, and that is where I got acquainted with him, and I have known him ever since.

Q. I meant to ask whether your acquaintance has been an intimate one, and one that brought you in very frequent——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Personal contact with him?—A. Yes; all the time I was in the Senate I would see Judge Hanford very frequently during the summer when I was home. We attended many banquets together; many conferences together in respect to the exposition that was going on at one time, and different public matters. He was on the national affairs committee, as I recall it, of the chamber of commerce, and he used to confer with me very frequently during the last six years in the summer time, and for many years I have been closely associated with him. I think since 1895 or 1896 I have been rather friendly with Judge Hanford, you might say.

Q. Have you ever known of Judge Hanford being under the influence of intoxicating liquors——A. (Interrupting.) I have not—never.

Q. (Continuing.) So that his mind would be affected in the keenness and clearness and quickness of his perception of facts and of their relation to each other?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Or in any degree that you in your definition to the chairman would say involved his being under the influence of liquor, as distinguished from being intoxicated?—A. I have not.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Senator, have you ever had wine with Judge Hanford at the Rainier Club?—A. Well, I don't recall that I ever saw Judge Hanford drink any wine. I know I have myself had wine in his presence, but I am not sure that I ever saw him drink any wine.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford at the club when he was at a table where people seated around it were treating each other?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. How many would you say at any one time was the largest number around the table at the club where they were treating?—A. When Judge Hanford was at the table?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, I should say probably five or six.

Q. Each one of them would take a turn at treating?—A. No. What we used to do, we would shake the dice to see who would pay for the drinks.

Q. You mean shake the dice to see who would pay for one drink for the crowd?—A. Yes.

Q. And then stop?—A. No; sometimes we would repeat that.

Q. Well, how many times have you ever seen that repeated—more than twice?—A. I don't think so. No; I don't think I ever did.

Q. Haven't you seen occasions at the club when he was at one of these tables with four or five people when each man at the table treated every other man at least once?—A. No; I never have. That is not done in the Rainier Club, at least to my——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is Judge Hanford a regular or an honorary member of the club?—A. I think he is a regular member.

Q. Have you ever seen him take anything to drink after dinner was finished?—A. Yes; I have seen him take brandy, I think; I think he has taken brandy with me, or maybe some other after-dinner drink.

Q. You have been considerably interested, have you not, Senator, in the agitation, I will say, against Judge Hanford, springing out of the railroad meeting that took place last August?—A. Considerably interested, is your question?

Q. Interested in Judge Hanford in relation to the agitation against him arising out of his injunction issued against the railroad company?—A. Well, I had nothing to do with that; in no manner connected with it in any way; but I have been interested in Judge Hanford in this matter.

Q. But you have been specifically interested in the agitation against him, haven't you?—A. Against him?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, no; I have been interested——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you ever call on John H. Perry in regard to the matter at all?—A. Oh, I misunderstood you. Yes; I have been interested in the agitation against him. I did; I called on Mr. Perry and had a talk with him about it.

Q. What was the subject of your talk—to get Mr. Perry to discontinue the agitation so far as it lay in his power to do it?—A. Well, I will tell you all about it. I have known Mr. Perry ever since he came here, I think. He was a Kentuckian, as I am, and I am not sure but what he came here with some letters of introduction to me. At any rate, I have always been very friendly with him. He used to come to my house, and I was always glad to see him. And I heard—I think Judge Hanford himself told me that he understood that Mr. Perry was preferring charges against him; that some gentleman had met Mr. Perry on the street, and he told Mr. Perry—or rather Mr. Perry told him—that they were going to prefer impeachment charges against Judge Hanford, and I said——

Q. (Interrupting.) On what grounds, Senator?—A. Well, this—I don't remember what ground was stated. This gentleman told Judge Hanford, not me. I don't remember what the grounds were. But I told Judge Hanford that I didn't believe that was true. I said, "I don't believe Mr. Perry will go into any business of that kind." I said, "I know Mr. Perry well; have always regarded him as a friend of mine, and I am going down and have a talk with him about it." And so I did; I went to Mr. Perry's office and I told him I had heard these things, and I think I said Judge Hanford told me. I am not sure that I told him that, however. And I asked him about it, and he said yes, it was true. "Well," I said, "it can't be possible, John, that you are behind this." "No;" he said he was not; he said he was acting as an attorney for other people.

Q. Did he say who the people were?—A. I think he spoke about some Eastern people. I don't believe he gave any names. I think he said that they were—he was simply getting the matter in legal shape with people who had this testimony, or something of that kind.

Q. Had what testimony?—A. He told me that—along the very lines of the charges that have been filed here.

Q. Didn't he tell you that he represented certain newspaper people?—A. I think he did; but I am not sure that he mentioned them.

Q And did he tell you that he represented anybody else?—A. I don't think he did; no.

Q He said that those were all the people that he represented, the newspaper people?—A. Well, I am not just sure how he put it. I think he put it this way: He said he represented some newspapers—I am not sure but what he said magazines—down east, and that he expected to go to Washington soon, or down East soon, but he didn't know just when. I remember he told me—he said he would know "next week," but I didn't see him the next week, nor heard no more about it. And I told him that those things—in my judgment it was impossible for those things to be true—that they could not be true; that the people who had known Judge Hanford here all these years and associated with him, if they were true would know it; and, besides, I think I said, "If Judge Hanford were addicted to drunkenness there would be some marks on his face, and that no living man who looks at Judge Hanford could see any lines of drunkenness in his face."

Q. Well, now, fix, if you can, Senator, about when that call was?—A. That call on Mr. Perry?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, I don't remember when that was. It seems to me it was probably two or three months ago, but I am just guessing at that. I remember at that time——

Q. (Interrupting) Wasn't it last fall?—A Well, it might have been even that. I don't remember, to tell you the honest truth about it.

Q. Wasn't it as early as September, 1911?—A. That might be true; I don't remember. I never have charged my memory at all with the time of it. Anyhow I know it ran on quite a while and I heard nothing more of it and I supposed the thing was all over, except Judge Hanford told me about that time that he knew he was being shadowed by detectives; he said that he was being followed everywhere, at any rate, and I told him——

Q. (Interrupting) Did you tell Mr. Perry that?—A. I don't think I did. I don't recall that I did.

Q. Well, now, where at that time had you learned of the charges, if any had been made or were to be made, against Judge Hanford?—A I am pretty sure that Judge Hanford told me that some friend of his had met Mr. Perry on the street and Mr. Perry had stated that they were preparing charges against Judge Hanford; that he had been studying the Swayne case, the impeachment case, and in a short time these charges were to be made against Judge Hanford. Now, who that man was I don't know, but I am pretty sure now that it was Judge Hanford who told me, and after I got this information from Judge Hanford I went and had a talk with Mr. Perry about it.

Q Now, didn't you tell Mr. Perry that the matter of his arrest arising out of this rink meeting could be fixed up if he would drop these charges?—A. Not at all, sir. I never had such a conversation as that with Mr. Perry.

Q. Didn't you tell him that the judge had a pretty high opinion of him—Judge Hanford—arising out of some argument Mr. Perry had made in Judge Hanford's court?—A. No. I will tell you what I did say to Mr. Perry. I said to Mr. Perry this: I said—no, no. I said, "Now, this it seems to me is a very unjust thing and it ought not to be brought against Judge Hanford, for it is only a disgrace to the city," or something of that kind, but subsequently—no, I think probably—I don't know as I ever talked with him but once, but anyway Mr. Perry told me that he had made an argument before Judge Hanford in some case and that he had treated him, he thought, with more attention or something of that character than any other lawyer in the case, and that he was somewhat surprised at that on account of the trouble that had taken place over here at the rink. And so I then remarked that Judge Hanford had always made it a point, I thought, in his life to be particularly careful that he gave every man who was supposed to have a grievance against him a fair chance in his court, or words to that effect.

Q. Well, now, was not the occasion of this interview at about the time when Mr. Perry and several others had been arrested on charges arising out of this rink meeting——A. (Interrupting.) Well, it was after that time, just how long I am not able to say.

Q. How long, Senator? See if you can't fix it pretty closely?—A. Well, it was some time, but several weeks, I think; but I would not undertake to be definite about that at all.

Q. Were you interested in the Sullivan case—the Sullivan will case?—A. I was; yes.

Q. Were you one of the attorneys who brought an action in Judge Hanford's court to test the validity of the alleged Sullivan will?—A. I was one of the attorneys in the case. Piles, Donworth, Howe & Farrell, I think, were the attorneys, but I did not appear personally in the case.

Q. Your firm appeared?—A. Yes.

Q. As attorneys for whom?—A. For Marie Carrau and John Corcoran, I think.

Q. Marie, who was that?—A. No, no; for Hannah Callahan and John Corcoran.

Q. And what was the purpose of the bill? What was the relief demanded in the bill?—A. Well, sir, to tell you the truth, I don't know except in a general way, for I never read the bill.

Q. Well, in that case Judge Hanford took jurisdiction and tried the case, did he not?—A. He did.

Q. And his decision in the matter was finally reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. Well, it was reversed, but I think it was reversed by the circuit court of appeals.

Q. Well, then, reversed. The decision of the circuit court of appeals reversing Judge Hanford was affirmed by the Supreme Court?—A. I have little familiarity with the proceedings taken in the case because I had nothing personally to do with the litigation. I didn't follow it.

Q. Didn't you have some personal financial interest in the outcome of it?—A. I did.

Q. And what was that interest?—A. I think my law firm had a 12½ per cent interest in it, although it was charged that we had 50 per cent in it; but my recollection is that the law firm of Piles, Donworth, Howe & Farrell had a 12½ per cent interest in the Sullivan case.

Q. And had they that interest at the time they brought the action in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Yes, sir. That interest, however, arose under a contingent fee.

Q. Well, are you sure as to the amount of it?—A. Well, I am pretty certain it was about 12½ per cent; that that was our interest. The title to the property was placed in my name and I was holding as a trustee for a large number of people, and that is how I was swamped at one time with begging letters when it was charged that I had received a million dollars out of the Sullivan case.

Q. Trustee for alleged heirs or——A. (Interrupting.) I was trustee for my law partners and everybody else whom we represented.

Q. Was that a private trusteeship or under some appointment of the court?—A. It was taken in my name and I simply held in trust; that is all there was to that. That case was tried in the State court on testimony and the findings of the court—every court before whom it went—was in our favor from the beginning to the end. I don't remember what phase of it was tried before Judge Hanford, but I do know that it went before several judges, every one of whom found in favor of the heirs we represented and found that the will that was set up in the case was a fraudulent will and had never been made by Mr. Sullivan.

Q. Now, was the trusteeship which you occupied the trusteeship of those who had bought out the interests of alleged heirs?—A. I represented under this deed—the deed was made to me in Ireland; I really didn't know anything about it when it was made. The property was conveyed to me—possibly a one-half interest; I am not sure now about that even. The deed may have been only for an undivided one-half interest in the property; it may have been for it all. I didn't give the matter any attention at all. But, anyway, whatever it was, I held it in trust for myself, my law partners, and other people who were financing that lawsuit.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When was that, Senator?—A. When was the suit commenced?

Q. Yes.—A. I think the suit must have been commenced some time in 1903 or 1904; I am not sure about that either.

Q. That was before you went to the Senate?—A. Yes.

Q. You were then in the active practice of your profession?—A. Yes.

Q. And, as I understand it, the alleged will was an oral one?—A. That was it.

Q. A nuncupative will?—A. Yes.

Q. And the case was started in Judge Hanford's court, in the Federal court, to set aside this alleged will?—A. Well, I will tell you the truth, Mr. Chairman. I have so little knowledge of that case, I don't know just—my recollection of the matter is this, in a general way: that the will—this alleged oral will—had been admitted to probate in the superior court when nobody knew anything about it, and I think we commenced some litigation in Judge Hanford's court to set it aside—set aside that probate and to establish title to the property, but I am not certain about that.

Q. Do you recall whether when you began that suit in his court the question of his jurisdiction to try such a case was raised or argued?—A. I think it was.

Q. Who would know about that?—A. James B. Howe would know all about it.

Q. Is he here?—A. Yes, sir; he is here. He is my law partner. He is not in this court room, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was he then a member of your firm?

Mr. DORR. He is in the room now, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he a member of your firm?

A. Yes. Well, he was a member. He has often cautioned me about discussing the Sullivan case, because he has often laughed at me, saying that I didn't know anything about it, which is true.

Q. But you know that Judge Hanford took jurisdiction of the matter?—A. Yes; but Mr. Howe can tell you all about it from beginning to end, because he went through the case thoroughly and understands it thoroughly.

Q. Now, this trust deed that you spoke of, which you took as grantee in Ireland, was that ever filed here?—A. Oh, yes; it is of record here; I think it is of record now.

Q. It of course will speak for itself as to the interest conveyed to you?—A. Well, Mr. Howe will know exactly.

Q. Yes.—A. I am not sure whether the whole—I am rather inclined to believe, though, that there was only a half interest put in me.

Q. Was that the interest which was conveyed to the attorneys and others——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Interested as attorneys?—A. Yes—not as attorneys.

Q. And the other half, did that remain in the grantor?—A. Must have, unless it was put in me. I am not sure but what the whole thing was deeded to me.

Q. What I want to get at is, did they at that time by any other deed convey the remainder of it to anybody—you or anyone else?—A. Not that I know of, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Do they retain any interest in it yet—those Irish heirs?—A. Well, I think they sold their property.

Q. Did they sell through you or your firm?—A. Did they do what, sir?

Q. If they sold, did they sell through you or your firm?—A. No; they didn't sell through me or my firm.

Q. Do you know who purchased from them?—A. Well, there was a tract of land up here north of Ballard, 160 acres of land; I heard that they sold that to Mr. Treat for $1,500 an acre, but I don't know anything about the truth of it.

Q. That land is now in the inhabited portion of the city, is it?—A. Oh, it was at that time. That is, it is just north of Ballard. What we call Ballard was then a suburb of Seattle—about 20,000 people at that time I think out there.

Q. What other property was there?—A. There was two lots with a building, down on First Avenue.

Q. Do you recall if Judge Hanford wrote any opinion which was published, in deciding the case?—A. No, I don't. I don't know whether he did or not.

Mr. DORR. Yes; he did, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is it reported?

Mr. DORR. I can furnish it to you. It is in one of the Federal Reporters of that date.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Senator, you said a few minutes ago that you held as trustee for people who financed the matter. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean by that this: That an Alaskan by the name of Lewin went to Europe with a young man by the name of Wright, who thought he could find the heirs to the Sullivan estate, he having been informed, as I understood it, by the late Capt. Burns that John Sullivan had told him that he had relatives at Cork, Ireland. These heirs entered into an agreement with Mr. Lewin, as I now recall it, whereby they were to give him a certain interest in the property if he could recover it, he to employ the lawyers and pay all expenses; and so he did employ my law firm, and when the deed was taken in my name I held for him and his brother and whatever people were associated with him.

Q. Mr. Lewin?—A. Yes.

Q. Lewin and his brother?—A. Yes. I think there were some other people associated with him, but I am not sure about that even.

Q. Senator, do you know what the net result to the heirs of Sullivan was?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Who does know?—A. I think Mr. Howe. Well, I don't know as he would know the net result, either, because——

Q. (Interrupting.) Does Mr. Howe know who were interested financially in the matter?—A. I don't think he knows any more about that than I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the probate files in the superior court show what——

A. (Interrupting.) Well, I think the property was distributed to me. I think that was it. There was a lot of lawyers represented—I say a lot of lawyers represented these people from Ireland. What they were paid, I don't know anything about that.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Well, the property finally got into the possession of a corporation, didn't it?—A. That part of it that was the Lewins and the lawyers interested in it got into a corporation.

Q. When you say the lawyers do you mean your own firm or all the lawyers?—A. No; I sold out my interest in it and I got $15,000. That is every cent I have ever received out of the Sullivan case. I sold that out several years ago, before the corporation was formed. I have had no interest in it since, and I have none now, and I never have received a penny out of the case beyond the sum of $15,000 for which I sold my interest in the property. Judge Donworth sold his interest for $16,000, as I am informed, and Mr. Howe, after putting a large amount of money in it, held onto his interest, and has an interest in this Third Avenue—First Avenue property now, after having bought out the heirs.

Q. The First Avenue property is where?—A. It is between—I have forgotten the number——

Mr. HUGHES. Cherry and Columbia.

A. Between Cherry and Columbia. It is 120 feet, with a three or four—four-story building, I think on it; old fashioned.

Q. Business building?—A. Yes; but Mr. Howe can give you all the information on that subject that you want, I think. He is certainly——

Mr. HIGGINS. (Interrupting.) What was the corporation that was formed?

A. Beg pardon?

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the corporation that was formed—the name of it?

A. I don't know the name of it, for I never was a member of it. I sold my interest before it was incorporated.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with Senator Piles?

Mr. HUGHES. Just one question.

Mr. HUGHES. You sold your interest after the courts had adjudicated that the people you represented were the true heirs of John Sullivan?

A. Well, I don't remember, Mr. Hughes, in respect to the date. Mr. Howe can tell you all about that. I never paid any attention to it.

Witness excused.

JAMES B. HOWE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. James B. Howe.

Q. You live in Seattle, Mr. Howe?—A. I do.

Q. You are an attorney at law?—A. I am.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession in Seattle?—A. Since 1889.

Q. What is your present business connection?—A. I am the counsel for the Puget Sound Traction, Light & Power Co.

Q. I meant, more particularly, are you alone or associated with other attorneys in your business?—A. Mr. Piles is my partner.

Q. The firm name is?—A. Piles & Howe.

Q. How long have you two been associated alone?—A. Alone; we have been associated since 1907.

Q. And prior to that time?—A. The firm was Piles, Howe & Farrell, for about a year and a half or possibly two years, and prior to that time it was Piles, Donworth & Howe.

Q. I believe you heard the questions asked Senator Piles with reference to the Sullivan will case, so called?—A. I did.

Q. Were you the member of your firm who gave that case personal and active attention?—A. I was.

Q. As I understand it, this oral will had been probated in the State court here?—A. A decree of probate had been entered but our position was that it never had been probated, because of failure to take jurisdictional steps. The statute in this State provides that before an oral will can be probated a citation must issue to the heirs and next of kin. In this case the citation was issued at 11 o'clock of a certain date, returnable at 10 o'clock on the same morning. The testimony of the witnesses was immediately taken——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, there, just a moment. Was that a clerical error, or how did it happen that the hearing was set and heard before the citation issued? Was that a clerical error or was that the fact?—A. I think that was the fact, so far as I know.

Q. Was there evidence afterwards offered on that point?—A. There was.

Q. Well, go on.—A. We took the position that the decree of probate was a nullity, and we attacked the jurisdiction of the court to enter that decree. The procedure which we adopted was: We knew that the question of whether a Federal court had jurisdiction to set aside a decree of probate and to hold a will void for fraud was a question over which there was much controversy. We understood the law in this State to be that the State court of general jurisdiction had the right to entertain a proceeding to set aside a decree of probate and to hold the will invalid on account of fraud. That in our case, diversity of citizenship existing, the Federal court had the same jurisdiction as the State court had. We recognized, however, that the question was doubtful. I therefore filed a bill in the Federal court to first have the decree of probate adjudicated a nullity, the will a nullity because of fraud, and I also invoked the jurisdiction of the circuit court on the theory that if it could not go into those matters of jurisdiction it could construe an oral will and determine whether real estate passed under it, and that it also had jurisdiction to determine the question of will or no will, just as it would in an action of ejectment in some States.

I filed on the same day, and a few moments afterwards, a proceeding in the State court to accomplish the same result, so that if the Federal court did not have jurisdiction the State court would be vested with jurisdiction. The case proceeded in the Federal court, and the principal case on which I relied to sustain the jurisdiction of the Federal court was the case of Richeson against Green, decided in the circuit court in Oregon, in which the opinion was rendered by, I think, Judge Hawley and concurred in by Judge McKenna, who afterwards went to the Supreme Bench.

Q. Where is it reported?—A. I can't give you offhand.

Mr. McCoy. Here it is: 9 Circuit Court Appeals, 565; 61 Federal Reporter——

The Witness. That is it; that is it.

Mr. McCoy (continuing). 423. Same case, 159 U. S., 264.

A. Yes. I relied principally on that case for this reason, that on that decision having been rendered by the circuit court of appeals for this circuit, certiorari was applied for to the Supreme Court of the United States. I examined the briefs in the case and found that the application for certiorari was principally based upon the proposition that the Federal court in Oregon had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside a decree of probate on the ground of fraud and to adjudge a will invalid on the ground of fraud, and I thought the Supreme Court of the United States was always careful to prevent the courts from exercising jurisdiction in cases where they didn't have it, and that was the decision that I largely relied on in asserting the jurisdiction in the Federal court.

Q. At the time you relied on it, it had not yet reached an opinion of the Supreme Court, had it?—A. I am speaking of the case of Richeson against Green. It had, and had been decided and jurisdiction had been denied—I mean the certiorari had been denied.

Mr. McCoy. On the ground that that was an improper way to bring it up for review?

A. Not at all.

Mr. McCoy. Or involving the merits?

A. Involving the merits. When I say involving the merits, the Supreme Court of the United States did not give any opinion at all; it simply denied the writ; but I meant to say that in the case in the circuit court of appeals they had gone into the question of jurisdiction and the question of merits.

The Chairman. They hadn't even taken up the ground on which they denied the writ?

A. No; but when I argued the case in the Supreme Court of the United States I made to them practically the same statement that I have made here, that I thought that as the court had denied the application for certiorari, it was a very strong intimation that jurisdiction existed; and I remember Judge Harlan said, "You can not depend very much on the action of the court on applications for certiorari," or words to that effect.

Q. Who argued the other side of the question before Judge Hanford?—A. The counsel declined to argue that question—any question on the merits, but filed a brief. It had been previously argued by Mr. W. F. Hays on the question of jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction was several times argued.

Q. I understand you to say, then, that you relied entirely on the case which you have cited?—A. No, no. You misunderstood me. I said I relied largely. I had quite an extensive brief on the subject and examined the matter very thoroughly, and I think that I had the satisfaction of knowing that the Supreme Court of the United States in a subsequent case distinguished it and practically held I was right.

Q. What case?—A. It is a case decided within the last three years. I can't give it to you from memory. Mr. Justice White dissented, and he delivered the opinion against me in the Supreme Court of the United States in my case.

Q. Will you later give us the case which you think held substantially according to your contention in this Sullivan case?—A. Not substantially, but I think it held this. As I said, my bill invoked the jurisdiction on several grounds. One ground was that assuming that the decree of probate could not be attacked, that the will could not be attacked; there remained a third ground, that real estate could not pass under an oral will, and the bill specifically invoked the jurisdiction of the circuit court if the will was valid if probated, whether real estate passed under it or not.

Q. But you had two massive bridges to cross before you reached that third one which the court would have jurisdiction of?—A. I don't think so.

Q. How could they consider the question of title to real estate without first considering the question of the will?—A. I think that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to consider the validity of the decree of probate, or to consider the making of the will; that those would be foreclosed questions in the circuit court, but that would not prevent the circuit court from assuming the validity of the will and the validity of the probate to say whether real estate passed under the will.

Q. But do you think that court would go on and litigate a question of that character when the court knew that there were two other questions involved which might make that litigation entirely futile?—A. I think it would. I think if it had been a case where instead of filing a bill in equity we would have had to have proceeded in ejectment, that the court would have been compelled to have done so.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Why didn't you go into the State court with it?—A. We did.

Q. I mean, why didn't you prosecute the case in the State court?—A. I didn't care to argue the case where it would have had to have gone before the same judge who probated the will on a citation issued at 11 o'clock, returnable at 10 o'clock on the same morning.

Q. You mean you suspected his integrity?—A. I don't think that it is a question of giving reasons for that, but I think I had a right to seek the jurisdiction of the Federal court where diversity of citizenship existed.

By the Chairman:

Q. Have you no means in this State, or had you none then, of getting a trial before some other judge than that one; in other words, was there no means of getting a change of venue from the judge?—A. There was not at that time. The statute which we now have—we have a statute now regarding that; at that time we did not. I will say, as a matter of fact, that when we did proceed in the State court there was no such statute, and I requested the judge to transfer it to another one, and he did so.

Q. What was the practice prior to that time with reference to cases where the lawyers for any reason wanted a change from the judge—a change of venue?—A. Why, he would simply ask the judge; state any reasons.

Q. Well, you didn't doubt, Mr. Howe, did you, that this judge would have given you a trial by some other judge had you asked it?—A. I did.

Q. You did not, however, make the effort; you didn't——A. I didn't.

Q. (Continuing.) Ask for it before trying the suit in the Federal court?—A. No; and I never intended to go into the State court. As a general rule, if my clients are nonresidents, I usually bring the suits in the Federal court, although I have the greatest confidence in the State courts; I think they are as honest men as there are anywhere.

Q. You heard Senator Piles's statements with reference to your knowledge of the agreement between the lawyers and the heirs in Ireland?—A. I did; yes.

Q. Was his statement of that agreement correct?—A. Well, as I caught it, he didn't know very much about it, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) Will you please state it for us?—A. The way the matter came up was this: There was a young man named Wright and a man named Lewin who got in touch over finding the heirs to the Sullivan estate. My firm was employed by Lewin to represent these heirs. He had a contract with these heirs and had a contract for a half, and my firm was employed to represent them, and our interest was a third of the half. After the suit was filed in the Federal court I applied for and obtained a commission to take testimony in Ireland, and I went over to Ireland to take the testimony. When I was over there a deed was executed. Instead of simply this contract which ran to Lewin a deed was executed which took the place of the Lewin contract, and that deed ran to Mr. Piles, and Mr. Piles held that property—there was no trust expressed in the deed—he held that deed in trust for Lewin and for my firm.

Q. That was for one-half——A. One-half.

Q. (Continuing.) Of the property. Was it all real estate?—A. There was—no, there was—I think at the time of Sullivan's death there was about $15,000 of money; something like eleven or fifteen thousand—I have forgotten which.

Q. What was the course of the litigation in the Federal court? Senator Piles thought it was decided by the circuit court of appeals.—A. It was.

Q. And appealed by whom from that to the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. The circuit——

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute, Mr. Howe. Perhaps we can get that right into the record at this point here. The case is Callahan and others against O'Brien and others, 116 Federal Reporter, 934, reported on the appeal in the circuit court of appeals in the 125 Federal Reporter, 657, and in the Supreme Court of the United States in the 199 United States, 89. I take that from this memorandum here.

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. I didn't mean to interrupt you.

The Witness. No interruption at all, Mr. McCoy.

The Chairman. Who perfected the appeal from the circuit court of appeals to the United States Supreme Court?

A. Feeling that the jurisdiction in that court was doubtful, I took an appeal and also applied for certiorari. The Supreme Court held up the decision on the question of certiorari until the case was reached on the merits, and at the time of the oral argument I didn't know whether they were going to take jurisdiction on the appeal or on certiorari. They held that there was no constitutional question involved, that they had no jurisdiction on appeal, but did take jurisdiction on certiorari and affirmed the decision of the circuit court of appeals, which reversed Judge Hanford and dismissed the bill.

Mr. McCoy. Did both courts hand down opinions?

A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. You were present and heard Senator Piles as to his disposition of his interest in the matter, and I think he said as to your disposition of your interest?

A. No; he said, I think, Mr. Donworth's.

Q. Oh, yes.—A. I retain my interest in the present corporations.

Q. What is the name of the corporation?—A. There are two corporations in which I am interested.

Q. With reference to the Sullivan estate?—A. Yes.

Q. What are they?—A. There is the Urban Investment Co. and there is the Mercantile Investment Co., and there was—prior to the formation of the Urban—there was the Olive Street Realty Co. and the Ballard Land Co. Possibly I had better explain that if you——

Q. (Interrupting.) You may.—A. When the supreme court of the State decided the case finally, three corporations were formed. One was known as the Mercantile Investment Co., that took the interest in the Sullivan Building, which is on First Avenue; another was the Olive Street Realty Co., which took the undivided half interest in property at the corner, I think, of Eighth and Olive.

Q. Now, from whom did these corporations take the property?—A. They took the property from Lewin, from Wright, from Piles—not Piles; he had disposed—from Mr. Jacob Furth, from George Donworth, and myself, and Mr. Farrell; and in the Ballard company Mr. McCord had bought an interest from Mr. Wright.

Q. Of the firm of Kerr & McCord?—A. Yes.

Q. He was not interested in the litigation, though, was he?—A. No.

Q. He bought stock in the corporation?—A. No; he didn't buy. He bought an interest from Mr. Wright.

Q. Oh, yes.—A. Mr. Wright had an interest which represented a certain number of acres in the Ballard property, and Mr. McCord bought his share in that particular acreage.

Q. Are you interested in both the corporations?—A. I am interested in the Mercantile and in the Urban. I disposed of my interest in the Ballard.

Q. What is the name of the Ballard corporation?—A. The Ballard—I think the Ballard Land Co.

Q. Does it still retain an interest in the property which was the Sullivan estate?—A. It does; yes.

Q. So that there are three corporations now?—A. There really would be four, you might say. The Olive Street Co., though, has no property. It disposed of its property to the Irish heirs.

Q. Senator Piles stated the interest of your firm to be 12½ per cent, whereas you stated it would figure out 16⅔ per cent. Which is right?—A. I am correct. I know very much more about that matter than Senator Piles.

Q. Sixteen and two-thirds per cent——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Is your share of it?—A. I will say, just in that connection, that after we incorporated, Mr. Corcoran, the Irish heir—the surviving Irish heir—came over here and the Ballard property was divided physically. He took his share of the Ballard property; he took his share of the Olive Street property. And the Sullivan Building, we didn't think that ought to be physically divided, and the Urban Investment Co. purchased his interest in the Sullivan Building.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. You say, Mr. Howe, the supreme court of the State finally passed on the whole proposition?—A. Yes.

Q. Involving what points, the validity of the will?—A. The validity of the will, the question of its probation——

Q. And the heirship?—A. And the heirship.

Q. Did it write an opinion and hand it down?—A. Oh, yes; the case has been before the supreme court of this State four or five times. I was kept very busy protecting the property.

Q. Is there litigation now pending?—A. There is one case, brought by Mr. Hays individually, after he was enjoined by the court from setting up any claim to the property. He has violated the injunction and brought suit, claiming that he has a half interest in a half interest in the property, and that is now pending in the supreme court. A judgment by default was entered against him; he applied to have that judgment set aside, and that was denied, and he took an appeal, and that is pending now.

Q. Was that injunction in the State court?—A. In the State court.

Q. Now, as nearly as you can recollect, Mr. Howe, will you state all the people other than the heir or heirs of Sullivan, who at any time have had any interest in the Sullivan estate or the Sullivan litigation or the outcome of the litigation financially?—A. There was—I had best start at the beginning, to get it in chronological order.

Q. Yes.—A. There was Arthur Lewin and Edward Lewin——

Q. Neither of those was an attorney?—A. Neither of those was an attorney.

Q. Just state, if you will, whether they were attorneys or what, and if not, what their business was, so that we can identify them.—A. They were men who had gone up into the Klondike in Alaska.

Q. And met Sullivan there, I suppose?—A. Oh, no; oh, no. They were the men who had employed Wright. They first lived in Seattle, in the early days; they knew Sullivan here—that I get by hearsay, however—and after Sullivan's death this young man Wright, who was an attorney and who knew Capt. Burns, a real estate man here who knew Sullivan pretty well, had the idea that he could find who Sullivan's heirs were, and he had an arrangement with Lewin by which Lewin was going to carry on the litigation for those heirs, to establish their claim. Then Lewin employed us to handle the litigation. The next person who was interested was Mr. Farrell, who was at that time an attorney but not a member of our firm. He afterwards became a member of our firm and remained a member until it was dissolved. Then Mr. Piles sold his interest, Mr. Donworth sold his interest——

Q. (Interrupting.) How did Senator Piles and Judge Donworth come into it? Of course I understand——A. They were members of the firm.

Q. Oh.—A. They were members of the firm——

Q. Oh, yes.—A. (Continuing.) Of which I was a member.

Q. I didn't catch that. And was that the firm name at one time?—A. Piles, Donworth & Howe, and then Piles, Donworth, Howe & Farrell. Then Mr. Jacob Furth bought Mr. Piles's interest.

Q. And who is he?—A. He is the chairman of the board of directors of the Seattle National Bank and is the president of the Puget Sound Traction Co.

Q. Lives here?—A. Lives here; yes.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask when that was?

A. Mr. Piles sold to Mr. Furth—I think, Mr. Hughes, it was in 1908; possibly may have been 1907; I am not sure of that.

Mr. HUGHES. Was it before or after the court had decided in favor of your client?

A. Oh, it was after the court had decided.

Mr. McCoy. I meant really to confine my questions to the period prior to what you call the final decision of the case.

A. Yes.

Q. Not what has come along since.—A. Well, that was after the final—what I call the final decision; establishing all that we contended for. And the two companies now that own the Sullivan Building are the Mercantile Investment Co. and the Urban Investment Co. Those are the only companies in which I now have any interest.

The Chairman. Anything further with Mr. Howe?

Mr. Hughes. Since Mr. Howe is on the witness stand I would like to ask him a few questions along a different line.

Q. How long have you practiced law in this State, Mr. Howe?—A. Since 1889.

Q. How frequently have you or how extensively have you practiced in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I used to be in Judge Hanford's court quite frequently. Of late years I have done more counsel work than actual litigation, although in the past two years I have had some very important cases before Judge Hanford.

Q. Have you met him often personally also?—A. I have.

Q. Are you familiar with his personal habits?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you state whether you have ever known of his being under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have not. I have seen Judge Hanford when I knew that he had been drinking, because I have taken many a drink with Judge Hanford myself.

Q. Have you ever seen him when his mind was affected in any way——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) By the use of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have not.

Q. Or his ability in any way impaired, either judicially or otherwise?—A. I have not.

Q. What are his habits of industry?—A. What are his habits of what?

Q. Industry.—A. I think he is one of the most laborious judges that I have ever known, if not the most laborious.

Q. What do you say as to his ability as a lawyer and judge?—A. I have never been before a judge that I had a higher respect for as a trial judge.

Q. You have observed the habit of closing his eyes?—A. I have.

Q. Occasionally nodding?—A. Yes.

Q. Explain that to the committee.—A. I feel this way about that: It is frequently embarrassing to a lawyer to argue a case if he thinks the judge is not paying attention, whether it is from drowsiness or anything else; but I had a very practical experience with Judge Hanford in that connection. Some years ago Mr. Grosscup and I were representing the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in the case of Thompson against the Northern Pacific Railway Co. We knew that if we were to prevent that case from going to the jury it had to be done on the cross-examination. Judge Hanford was apparently drowsy and Mr. Grosscup and I were somewhat disturbed that the judge was not catching the plaintiff's testimony. We——

Q. (Interrupting.) You mean for fear he was not?—A. We feared that he was not catching it. We made our motion for a directed verdict, and Judge Hanford quoted the testimony of the plaintiff and directed the verdict. The case was afterwards reversed by the court of appeals, and on the second trial you represented the Northern Pacific Railway Co. and got a verdict from the jury.

I have also—I don't mean to volunteer, but in connection with the statement you have just made, so far as the matter of drowsiness is concerned, I have commenced my argument in the Supreme Court of the United States with one of the most distinguished judges who ever sat on that bench snoring so loudly that it could be heard over the court room; and I didn't put him to sleep, for Judge Dillon argued the case just ahead of me.

Mr. McCoy. Were you able to waken him by your argument?

A. I was not, but the argument went over until the next day, and he came in and he plied the questions pretty vigorously to me and I wished that I had left him asleep.

Mr. Dorr. It has been suggested that for the information of the committee you furnish it with the decisions of the State court in the Sullivan litigation. Will you do so?

The Witness. Yes, sir; I will do so.

A recess was here taken until 1.30 o'clock this afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing. James B. Brown, same witness, on the stand.

Mr. Howe. I have made a list, Mr. Chairman, of the cases in the State court where the Sullivan case is reported, and in the Federal court, and also the cases which you asked me for—the later cases by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Higgins. Are these duplicates?

A. Yes, sir; duplicates.

The Chairman. Do I understand you, Mr. Howe, that these are the cases upon which you relied to sustain your position?

A. Oh, no; not at all. These are simply the reports; these are decisions in the Sullivan case, with the exception of after you pass 199 United States then come the cases that, in my judgment, showed that the Supreme Court on one phase of my case would, if it was presented to them now, uphold the jurisdiction.

Mr. Hughes. Just one moment. I would like to ask Mr. Howe another question.

The Chairman. This may go in the record in connection with Mr. Howe's statement.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 29."

Mr. Hughes. Do the cases which you have submitted to the committee give an adequate conception of the amount of litigation and controversy in the lower court?

A. Oh, they do not pretend to. I made two trips to Ireland, and there was testimony taken over there and I was over there for—on the first occasion about—the whole trip was about 60 days and the last about 90 days.

Q. And in the lower court were there a large number of claimants?—A. Yes; I think there were probably over 100.

Q. Who set up claim to being heirs of John Sullivan?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there many who pressed their claims in the litigation, so that the litigation was made involved?—A. Yes; it was very involved. I do not know that there was a more complicated case ever tried in this district, in some phases of it.

Q. And was there a very large amount of time necessarily involved in the taking of the testimony and the litigating of the case?—A. A great deal of time.

Q. How long was it in the various courts?—A. It began in June, 1901, and ended by the last Supreme Court decision in April, 1908.

Q. You testified that you practiced here since 1889; did you practice law prior to coming here?—A. I did; in South Carolina.

Q. How long?—A. For nearly nine years—eight years or nine years.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Howe.

Mr. HUGHES. I would suggest to the committee that we would like to have Mr. James Kane called; he is leaving the city for Alaska to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his name?

Mr. HUGHES. James Kane.

The CHAIRMAN. Along the same line that we have been going on?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He will be called.

JAMES H. KANE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Your name; state your name to the committee.

A. James H. Kane.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Kane?—A. Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I have resided here since March, 1903.

Q. What is your present business or profession?—A. I am practicing law.

Q. How long have you been practicing law?—A. I engaged in the practice of law just a few days after I came here. I was admitted to the bar, I think, on the 17th day of March, 1903, and I have been engaged in the practice of law ever since.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any associates in your business, or are you alone?—A. My firm is Farrell, Kane & Stratton—C. H. Farrell and W. B. Stratton.

Q. Are you in the general practice of law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you representing any corporate business?—A. Yes, sir. Our firm represents a number of corporations, and also in the general practice, too.

Q. What ones—what large corporations or concerns?—A. We represent the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. and the Pacific Coast Co. and the Columbia and Puget Sound Railroad, and then a number of local corporations, such as banks and Galbraith, Bacon & Co., and some of the milling companies.

Q. The transportation companies you mention are interstate, are they?—A. There is a question whether some of them are or not. The Pacific Coast Steamship Co. operates steamships from here to Alaska and also to California. The Pacific Coast Co. owns and operates part of those and others, and then the coal company has its coal lands out here; the railroad company is a small railroad; it has about 40 miles of road running from here out into the coal mines in the Black Diamond country; that is entirely a local concern organized under the laws of this State, and all of its property is within the State here—all the coal company.

Q. Have these companies had litigation in the courts here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what courts, State or Federal?—A. Both State and Federal. The Pacific Coast Steamship Co. is a foreign corporation, so is the Pacific Coast Co. and the coal company, and in damage suits we have been brought into these courts sometimes, whenever damage suits arise between those people involving money or controversy over an amount which would bring it into the Federal court.

Q. Have you removed any cases yourself to the Federal court for these corporations?—A. Personally I have not.

Q. Have your firm?—A. Yes, sir; our firm has.

Q. How about the railroad company?—A. The railroad companies are organized under the laws of the State of Washington, and all its litigation is tried out in the State courts.

Q. To what extent have you yourself had business in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Well, the first jury case I ever tried I tried before Judge Hanford a few months after I came here, and since then I have tried a number of cases. I have been in court here a number of times on motions and different matters.

Q. To what extent have you been associated with Judge Hanford otherwise than in court?—A. Frequently.

Q. Where?—A. On the street and in the court room. And I knew where his office was when I came here first, down in the old building, down on the corner of Fourth and Marion. At that time I officed on Second Avenue, almost directly below there, and I frequently met Judge Hanford in the evenings when I was going home, both at dinner time and late in the evening.

Q. How late?—A. I have met him as late as 11 o'clock and sometimes later coming out of his office in the old building there. When I was going up the hill to my home he would be coming out, and I met him on the street between Fourth and Second Avenues.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. That was in 1903–1905 and possibly 1906, up until the time this building was built, when the court moved up here. I just forget how long the exact time is.

Q. Have you had any litigation in the States court involving those interstate companies?—A. Oh, yes; you mean——

Q. Have you had any litigation involving those companies which was begun and concluded in the State courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which court has the greater volume been in?—A. The greater volume of their business, I would say, is in the State court.

Q. How much of their business—how much of the time have you been in Judge Hanford's court in the trial of cases of any kind?—A. Well, now, I might explain in this way. I do not do as much business for the companies, such as the Pacific Coast Co., as other members of our firm, but I have represented other concerns here in litigation. I have tried a number of personal-injury suits for the defendant in this court, and I have likewise tried some for the plaintiff. I have tried some other classes of litigation here and have been a party in it—not personally—but represented different parties in different kinds of litigation. I have tried a number of cases here. Of course I have tried more cases in the State court than I have in the Federal court.

Q. I am not particularly interested in the State court work. I merely wanted to find out your opportunity to observe Judge Hanford.—A. Every term of court I have been in this court on some matters, sometimes trying important matters that took several days, sometimes cases of less importance.

Q. Have you had much opportunity to observe Judge Hanford during the trial of the cases?—A. I have.

Q. Have you noticed the peculiarity which has been testified about when the judge appears to nod?—A. Yes; I have. I have noticed Judge Hanford when I was trying cases before him, especially jury cases, when he would nod and close his head—or close his eyes, I should say—at times, but I have always noticed him, too, that whenever there was an objection that Judge Hanford ruled as clearly and as promptly as any man could possibly on a question or an objection that was made.

Q. When you first saw the judge and noticed that condition, what was the impression it made upon you?—A. Well, the first thought that naturally came to my mind was that he was sleepy.

Q. His appearance, to one unacquainted with him, would ordinarily and reasonably lead to the conclusion that he was asleep?—A. Yes; it would; but my association with him in practice and trying cases before him convinced me shortly that my conclusion was erroneous.

Q. Have you noticed any change in him in that regard, with reference to indulging in that condition more or less than when you first knew him?—A. Well, I have noticed that condition of late years, for the last four or five years, probably three or four years, more than I did before, because I have tried more cases during the last before him than I did previous to that time.

Q. Well, I am asking you in regard to him, without considering you—in him, have you noticed any change or increase or diminution in that regard?—A. Well, personally I can not say that I have. I have noticed it a few times in Judge Hanford, when, as I say, when he was sitting here trying cases—I can't say that that is more or less.

Q. To what extent have you seen him on the street during the year you mention it?—A. Well, I have met him frequently. I have met him—I will change that—I will say that I have met him at least three or four times a week on the street.

Q. At what hours?—A. I have met him when he was coming from lunch. My office was in the Central Building, and frequently when I was coming from lunch I have meet him coming down the hill from the Rainier Club when he happened to be up to lunch. I have met him after court in the evening between 5 and 6, and I could not say whether I have met him just of late in the—late in the evening on the street or not; I don't think I have.

Q. Did you notice any difference in the indulgence in that habit which you refer to at different hours of the day?- A. No.

Q. If there was any difference, when did it seem to affect him the most?—A. Well, now, I could not say as to that, because when I noticed it and when I made up my mind what it was, it made no impression on me at all after that because I thought it nothing out of the ordinary and, therefore, I could not say what time it was, and until this controversy arose just a short time ago it was not called to my attention again.

Q. Did you notice any difference with reference to the work going on in the court as to his indulgence in that habit; that is, during the trial of the case or during presentation of argument?—A. No; I have never seen Judge Hanford when I thought he was even sleeping during an argument unless—I can't say that, but I have seen him when jury trials were progressing here and when the testimony was being taken in a quiet sort of way, and then some attorney might make that objection, that the judge was in the position which you have described, and the ruling would be made on it promptly and quickly.

Q. I do not get your thought, as to whether that occurred more or less during the argument than during trials.—A. I would say it occurred more during trials than during arguments.

Q. Have you seen it occur on all occasions?—A. Well, I would not swear that I did not; when I noticed it was during the trials.

Q. By your answer I understand you to mean that it became so habitual to you that you had become so accustomed to noticing it and——A. (Interrupting.) No; I would not put it that way. I say this, that during my experience in court I noticed that in Judge Hanford, and naturally when I noticed it first I thought about it, and then I saw the results and the effect when he was called upon to rule on questions; when in any way his attention was brought to the proceedings of the trial and it was necessary to rule, he ruled promptly.

Q. Was it so usual that you might fail to notice it when it happened in your presence?—A. No, sir.

Q. You would notice it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it so pronounced as to arouse the attention even of those who were accustomed to seeing it?—A. No, sir; I would not say that.

Q. Your first answers indicated with him would think he was asleep on those occasions?—A. No; I would not want to give that exact impression. He would simply lean back in his chair and I have seen him close his eyes; I have seen him also sit up and appear to pay no attention to what was going on; but that did not occur so often that it was habitual or anything of that kind. I have seen it occur here in the court room. It was not the most usual thing, yet it occurred at intervals during the trial of a case.

Q. How many times would it occur in an afternoon of three hours—in an afternoon session at a trial?—A. Well, to name the number of times, it is a rather difficult thing to do; possibly I would not say over once or twice when I was here, and I have tried cases before him when he did not do it at all.

Q. What time of day did it appear to be most pronounced?—A. You asked me that before and I can not say just when it would appear most pronounced.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Never?—A. I have never been in a saloon where he has been drinking and I never saw him in a saloon or saw him coming out of a saloon.

Q. Have you ever seen him when he appeared to have been drinking intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. HUGHES. What is the name of your firm?

A. Farrell, Kane & Stratton.

Q. How long have you practiced here?—A. Since 1903.

Q. Mr. Kane, I thought that at one state of your testimony you were interrupted before you had completed an answer. You testified to seeing him frequently at night prior to the time when they moved into the new Federal building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When Judge Hanford had his private office in the building at the corner of Fourth and Marion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The building occupied as the Federal courthouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever observe anything else as to his habits of work at night other than seeing him coming out of his office at half past 11 at night?—A. Yes, sir; I have passed by there late at night going home and I have seen his offices lit up and I have seen him coming out late at night, coming out of there, and I met him on the street between Fourth and Second coming down the hill as I went up, and when I saw the light there I immediately concluded that he was there studying, as he had that reputation of working late at night.

Testimony of the witness closed.

ALVIN R. BRAVENDER, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. Alvin R. Bravender.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Since March, 1908.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. Attorney.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been since coming to Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you alone or are you associated with some one in the practice?—A. I am alone.

Q. What is the nature of your practice?—A. It has been just a general practice such as would naturally come to a young man breaking into a city where he knew no one.

Q. Did you ever practice elsewhere than in the State of Washington?—A. I practiced in New York State.

Q. How long?—A. I was three years in a clerkship and then for about nine months after I was admitted I practiced there in the office that I had served my clerkship time in, and then came West to Seattle direct.

Q. In the city of New York?—A. No, sir; Syracuse, in central New York.

Q. Since you have been practicing in Seattle to what extent have you been engaged in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I have not been engaged in Judge Hanford's court at all so far as I know.

Q. Have you ever been present in the court when it was sitting—you may state that?—A. I have been present in this court at different times.

Q. How long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. Why, I think that I first—I think that the first time I saw Judge Hanford was in April or May after I came here, at the time I was admitted to the district—the Federal district and circuit courts on motion; I think that was the first time I saw Judge Hanford.

Q. That would be in the spring of 1908?—A. In the spring of 1908; yes, sir.

Q. Since that time to what extent have you seen him from time to time anywhere?—A. Why, I have seen him at different times, perhaps once a month or so in the court room and perhaps not quite that often, not on an average greater than once a month in the court room, and then occasionally I would see him on the street.

Q. And what hours would you see him on the street?—A. Well, I had an office in the Henry Building for a time, and I used to see him going south on Fourth Avenue as often as once a week perhaps, as I would be coming out of the Henry Building I would see the judge going down the street, just to notice him.

Q. What time of the day or night?—A. That would be at luncheon time usually.

Q. Have you ever seen him at any time later than that on the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where would you see him on those occasions?—A. Why, I have seen him in the afternoon, I do not remember the particular occasions very clearly, I just noticed seeing him, that is all, and I have seen him on one particular occasion late at night, along about 10 o'clock at night.

Q. When was that?—A. That was about the last week of April or the first week of May.

Q. Of this year?—A. Of this year.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge drinking intoxicating drinks?—A. Never.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when he seemed to you to be under the influence of intoxicants?—A. On this one occasion; yes, sir.

Q. Describe that occasion more particularly, if you please.—A. There had been a meeting, or rather a stereopticon lecture by Mr. Chadneau, of the Seattle Art Museum, at the museum which my wife and I had attended. This was over between 9.30 and 10 o'clock, and as I recall it we were on our way down to take our car, walking down Fourth Avenue, and as we came down Fourth Avenue near Spring and Madison or on Madison, after we passed the Carnegie Library I noticed Judge Hanford coming out of the Rainier Club. We passed him about midway in the block between Madison and Marion. He seemed to be—well, he seemed to be having all he wanted to do to keep steady; he did not seem steady on his feet, and he passed my wife and I at a distance of 6 or 8 feet, and the smell of liquor was plainly perceptible.

Q. Have you any doubt in your mind as to the identity of the person you are describing?—A. Absolutely no doubt.

Q. Did you speak to him or he to you?—A. I do not believe I spoke to him at the time; no.

Q. Were there others in sight?—A. No; my wife and I and Judge Hanford were the only persons in that block—that is, between us and looking down the street—there may have been some one just immediately back of us, but they were not immediately back of us.

Q. Did his condition at that time excite attention or comment?—A. It did.

Q. From whom?—A. My wife asked who that was.

Q. There was nothing strange about that.—A. Well, she said he smelled like a brewery.

Q. Well, did you notice him before she called your attention to him?—A. I had noticed him coming across the street; yes.

Q. Had you noticed anything extraordinary or peculiar in his condition before she spoke to you?—A. No; I do not think I had noticed anything particularly. I remember turning around and looking at him as he went on up the street—as he went, after he had gone past us.

Q. Well, from his appearance and from all you observed there, tell the committee whether, in your judgment, he was then intoxicated.—A. Well, there are degrees of intoxication, but to my mind I thought at the time that he was considerably under the influence of liquor of some sort. That is how it looked to me.

Q. Did you ever on any other occasion see him when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. Not that I recall.

Q. When did you say this occasion was?—A. It was the last week of April or the first week of May. By calling up the Seattle Museum Association and finding the night that Mr. Chadneau delivered his lecture, you can get the exact day. My recollection is that it was right around the first of May—very shortly in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask the witness any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Was your wife between you and Judge Hanford when he passed you?

A. Yes.

Q. How near were you to Judge Hanford as he passed by?—A. Well, we-were not, I should say, 2 to 3 paces—from 6 to 9 feet.

Q. You say that you observed some odor which your wife described to you?—A. Yes; it was perceptible.

Q. How?—A. It was perceptible—the odor of liquor was perceptible.

Q. That was not the way you said your wife described it—she spoke something about a brewery?—A. She said he smelled like a brewery.

Q. Do you know how a brewery smells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or what kind of liquor is manufactured at a brewery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought he had been drinking beer, then?—A. No; I did not.

Q. You did not—then you do not agree with your wife?—A. No.

Q. What sort of a night was it?—A. Why, it was a clear, cold evening.

Q. You were walking south on Fourth Avenue?—A. South on the west side of Fourth Avenue.

Q. On the west side? Had he crossed the street?—A. He came across the street.

Q. Where did he cross the street?—A. He crossed the street diagonally from the corner of Fourth and Marion.

Q. Diagonally across, toward the Lincoln Hotel?—A. Diagonally across to where the Butler Annex was, which is a block below the Lincoln.

Q. And then he walked on north on the west side?—A. He walked on north, on the west side of the street.

Q. Were you opposite the Butler Annex when he passed you?—A. I should say we were about 50 feet from the corner.

Q. When he passed you?—A. When he passed.

Mr. HUGHES. I guess that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is your wife in the city?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would she come at your request without a subpœna?—A. She has not been well for the last couple of days. She was sick in bed nearly all day yesterday and sick when she got up this morning, or she would have come down with me this morning. I do not know how she is feeling now. I was not able to get her by phone at noon.

Q. Will you notify the committee whether she will come and when she can come?—A. I will.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask two or three other questions?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Are you personally acquainted with Judge Hanford?

A. I have met him; that is—personally acquainted—no. I have met him to be introduced to him, to say, "Mr. Bravender, this is Judge Hanford." That is the extent of the personal acquaintance.

Q. But you do not assume that he would recollect you, so that there would be a special acquaintance between you and him?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Of course he sees so many that you would think nothing of that?—A. There being so many young lawyers I did not think anything of the fact that we did not speak, because I am aware that a good many judges—the younger lawyers speak to them and they have met them all in a block, and they do not remember names so that that would not have any——

Q. (Interrupting.) You do not know anything about Judge Hanford's personal mannerisms or personal habits or personal peculiarities, do you?—A. Nothing at all, except such as I have observed in the court room and seeing him on the street.

Q. And you never noticed him on the street at night before, did you?—A. That is the only time that I have any recollection of, Mr. Hughes.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any other witnesses who are in a hurry to leave?

Mr. DORR. The one that I gave the chairman the name of this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was it?

Mr. DORR. Barney Flood.

Mr. HUGHES. He is the doorkeeper of the Rainier Club.

BARNEY FLOOD, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name.

A. Barney Flood, sir, Judge.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Flood?—A. Seattle, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Four years.

Q. You don't look as if you had lived that length of time anywhere.—A. I beg your pardon, sir?

Q. Four years, did you say?—A. Four years.

Q. Forty years, I understood you to say?—A. No, sir; four years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Doorkeeper of the Rainier Club.

Q. How long has that been your work?—A. Three years this June.

Q. When do you go on duty?—A. 11.30 in the morning.

Q. And when do you leave off?—A. I leave off from 3 to half past 4, and from half past 4 I work until 12.

Q. Was there any one else than you on duty as doorkeeper?—A. No, sir; except the office staff.

Q. Except who?—A. The office staff.

Q. What are your duties?—A. My duties are to know everybody that comes in and look after everybody as far as I am capable of doing it, Judge.

Q. Well, do you remain at the door or near it all the time you are on duty?—A. At the door all the time, sir.

Q. How many persons come in and go out during your watch?—A. During the watch there is over 400.

Q. That is, from 11.30 in the morning until you quit at night?—A. Yes, sir; until 12 o'clock at night.

Q. Do you mean that many persons pass the door during your watch?—A. Well, that many persons, except in cases where the members bring in somebody—sometimes a member will bring three or four guests with him for lunch or for dinner.

Q. How many members are there altogether?—A. There are 950.

Q Is the place closed when you quit work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q Do you know all the members individually?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q Do you know Judge Hanford?—A Yes, sir.

Q How frequently does the judge go into the club?—A At luncheon time

Q Every day?—A Not every day, not every day, Judge; but mostly every day, and then he is generally in from 5 until about half past 6, and then comes back in the evening from about 9 until between 11 and 12.

Q How frequently is he there from 5 until past 6?—A Almost every day.

Q And how frequently does he come back about 9 at night?—A. Nearly all the time when he is in Seattle.

Q He stayed there until about what hour?—A Between 11 and 12.

Q. What time do you quit?—A. 12 o'clock, except when there is a banquet or some other occasion to be looked out for and then we have to wait until 1 or 2; otherwise it is 12 o'clock, sir.

Q So that you would see him six times every day?—A Yes; in and out.

Q. He came in and went out at the noon hour for lunch.—A Yes, sir.

Q And then he came in and went out from 5 to half past 6 in the evening —A. Yes, sir.

Q And then he came in and went out from 9 till half past 11.

Q. Did you ever see him later than half past 11 except on the occasion of a banquet?—A If there was a banquet and he was a guest at a banquet and had to stay for perhaps to make a speech, or something like that, he might be later.

Q. You mean a banquet at the club?—A Yes, sir at the club.

Q. You do not know what goes on in the clubrooms, do you?—A. I don't quite understand—what goes on in the clubroom?

Q You do not know what the members eat or drink in the clubrooms?—A. No, sir; I could not say that I do.

Q. You are at the door?—A. I am at the door.
Q. Where is the floor where the members eat and drink?—A. The floor where they eat and drink is on the main floor as the door goes in.
Q. The same floor that you are on?—A Yes, sir.
Q And where from your place?—A. It is about 40 yards away from the place.
Q. Is there a wall between?—A. A wall between; yes, sir.
Q Have you ever seen the judge drinking in the clubrooms?—A No, sir; I have not.
Q. Have you ever seen him go into the club or out of it when he seemed to you to have been drinking?—A. No, sir; I did not.
Q. Did you ever see any member there who seemed to you to have been drinking?—A. There has been some of the members; yes, sir
Q Did you ever see the judge when it seemed to you that you smelled the odor of liquor from him?—A. No, sir; I did not, and I speak to him every time when he comes in and out and I always check his umbrella
Q So far as you know of Judge Hanford you never saw him take a drink in his life?—A. No, sir; I never saw him take a drink
Q You never smelled liquor on him?—A. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask the witness any further, Mr. Hughes?
Mr. HUGHES You say you have seen members coming out of the club that you thought were under the influence of liquor?
A. Yes, sir.
Q You observed that from their appearance and demeanor and by noticing the odor of liquor on their breath —A. Just by the odor, Mr Hughes.
Q Were you there on Sunday evenings from 5 o'clock every night?—A. Yes, sir; every night.
Q. Were you there last September or October?—A. Yes, sir; I never missed an hour in the three years—at the time of duty.

Witness excused.

SAMUEL R. STERN, being first duly sworn testifies as follows:
The CHAIRMAN. Give your name to the committee.
A. Samue R. Stern.
Q You live in Seattle?—A In Spokane.
Q. How long have you lived in Spokane?—A. Twenty-one years.
Q Are you an attorney?—A I am.
Q Practicing your profession?—A Yes, sir.
Q. How ong have you been practicing it?—A. Thirty-three years.
Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A Yes, sir.
Q. How ong have you known him?—A. Twenty-one years
Q. He used to hold court at Spokane?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When was that?—A. Generally prior to about five or six years ago.
Q How much of the time?—A He usually held two sessions of court a year there.
Q. And lasting how long?—A. From three to six weeks.
Q Both sessions last that ong?—A Each session lasting from three to six weeks and sometimes a little longer.
Q. Did you practice before the Judge elsewhere than at Spokane?—A. Here in Seattle

Q. To what extent?—A. Here perhaps our or five times a year I would practice before him

Q. You mean the trial of a case?—A. Sometimes during the trial of cases and sometimes on applications that I had to make in his court.

Q. For orders?—A. For orders; yes, sir.

Q. On those occasions your stay was as brief as you could make it, I suppose?—A. Sometimes I have been here a week at the time.

Q. Did you, appear before the judge at court elsewhere then in those places?—A. I have appeared before Judge Hanford at Walla Walla.

Q. To what extent?—A. On several occasions, not ver many.

Q. Have you been in any way associated with him otherwise than as a lawyer practicing before him?—A. I have, in a social way

Q. How?—A. Well, I met him at clubs. I have met him in my own apartments; I have played pool with him on occasions and played cards with him.

Q. At Spokane?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club here?—A. No, sir.

Q. The judge is an honorary member of your club in Spokane?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was he?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Did you during your practice before the Judge notice a habit which you have probably heard the witnesses testify about, of nodding and seeming to nod asleep on the bench?—A. Yes; I have observed that.

Q. When did you first observe it?—A. I think I noticed it in Judge Hanford for the last 15 years.

Q. You heard it spoken of as a subject for comment.—A. Not until this matter came up

Q. Did you ever hear it commented on or spoken about until this matter came up?—A. I have not.

Q. Where was he when you first noticed it?—A. In Spokane, on the bench.

Q. What impression did it make on your mind then?—A. I usually noticed it in the afternoon; I had an idea that he had rather a hearty lunch perhaps and drowsy with advancing years, as most of us do, along in the middle of the day at his period of life.

Q. Was it more pronounced at that time than at other hours of the day?—A. I noticed it more along in the afternoon and along in the middle of the court session.

Q. Did you continue to notice it, so as to confirm that view during your acquaintance with him, and that habit?—A. I noticed it, I think, to such an extent that I rather attributed it to the lack of exercise. I never knew the judge to do very much except walk occasionally, and I thought it was lack of exercise more than anything else.

Q. Can you state whether the habit continued to grow on the judge or whether it remained stationary?—A. I thought, as far as I have been able to observe, it has been the same ever since I have known him; at any rate for the last 15 years.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to notice the judge in the last five years?—A. Well, I have been in his court on frequent occasions, perhaps half a dozen times a year.

Q. In Seattle?—A. In Seattle; yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice it on those occasions?—A. I did.

Q. Well, did it seem to you to have changed in any way from your first observation of it?—A. Not at all.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you seen Judge Hanford drink intoxicants?—A. I have seen him at dinner time when he has been with me take a drink or two; I have seen him at banquets of the bar association and different meetings that we have had in different parts of the State and here. I have seen him drink about what the rest of us did. He was never under the influence of liquor, however.

Q. Have you seen him in Spokane—I think you said or meant to say, take a drink or two at meals?—A. Yes, sir; he has taken a drink or two with me.

Q. What kind of a drink?—A. I have known him to take a cocktail or a little wine.

Q. Have you at any time noticed him when, in your opinion, he was affected by or under the influence of intoxicating drinks?—A. I never have.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of this witness? I have forgotten, Mr. Dorr, that you wanted to ask him some questions. You were the attorney in a certain habeas corpus case before the judge?

Mr. HUGHES. The Littoy case.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not remember the name.

Mr. DORR. H. C. Littoy, that was the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The case in which Mr. L. Frank Brown——

Mr. HIGGINS. No; E. H. Brown.

Mr. HUGHES. Edwin J. Brown.

The CHAIRMAN. In which Mr. Edwin J. Brown was attorney on the other side?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that case?—A. Very well.

Q. When was it?—A. About six years ago, between five and six years ago. I would not be accurate about that.

Mr. DORR. Eight years ago, as a matter of fact.

The WITNESS. Eight years, is it? I didn't think it was so long.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was it?

A. Here in Seattle.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, you may inquire about that yourself in your own way.

Mr. DORR. Tell the committee, briefly, a few points about that case, Mr. Stern; when did it commence?

A. Well, I was representing at that time the State board of dental examiners in the prosecution of unlicensed dentists and I had convicted Mr. Brown on three different charges at three different times.

Q. Do you mean this same Mr. Brown?—A. Yes, sir; Edwin J. Brown, and this Dr. H. C. Littoy had been convicted on at least two different charges, and other dentists here, about 10 of them, and the cases in the State court, where the conviction had been secured were on appeal to the supreme court of our State, and about that time Mr. Brown and a man by the name of Parker, associated with him—John R. Parker—desired to test the constitutionality of the act in the Federal court, and secured a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that Littoy was in jail and being improperly and unlawfully detained there, and that matter came up on the presentation of that writ to Judge Hanford. Now, my recollection is—Judge, do you want my recollection of the circumstances?

Q. Yes, if there is anything peculiar in the trial or anything unusual, please state it.—A. Well, it was only this, perhaps, that was unusual. We presented no briefs, and the matter was argued, my recollection is, by Mr. Parker, and he started in to make quite an extended speech along general lines when Judge Hanford asked him to confine himself to the question which was before the court, and asked a great many questions during that hearing, as to what the petition contained and what the facts were, and called on me for a verification as to some of them, and then asked for the decisions of the supreme court of our own State on the question, and they were presented, one particularly that I remember, in 31 Washington.

Mr. McCoy. What is the title of that case?

A. Smith against the State board of dental examiners. I think Mr. Howe at that time briefed that case and argued it, in which all the questions that were being raised by Parker and Brown were thoroughly and exhaustively treated by the court and passed upon, and I know that Judge Hanford in his inquisition there made it rather uncomfortable for the attorneys because they did not seem to be willing to get down to the legal questions involved, but wanted to talk about the facts in general. He intimated upon the hearing that the writ would have to be dismissed, but in view of the importance of the matter as they—as it occurred to them, Messrs. Parker and Brown, he said he would write an opinion, which he did, and I have read the opinion—the opinion is here, I know, in the record.

Mr. Dorr. I now hand you the opinion in cause No. 1207, filed July 6, 1904 [showing], and I will ask you if that is the opinion in the case which you have just referred to?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dorr. We would like to have this opinion admitted, if you please, as a part of the examination of this witness.

The Chairman. Do you want the opinion in the record?

Mr. Dorr. Yes; as an exhibit.

The Chairman. Why?

Mr. Dorr. As showing the manner in which the case was disposed of by the court.

The Witness. It covered every question that was raised there.

The Chairman. If I might look at it.

Was it not published anywhere?

Mr. Dorr. No; it is not published.

The Witness. No; it never was published.

Mr. Dorr. Was there anything during that trial in the attitude of Judge Hanford, in his demeanor upon the bench, that suggested to your mind any doubt as to his paying strict attention to all the proceedings?

A. No; absolutely nothing; in fact, I thought he watched it even closer than I did.

Q. Was there any time during which this case was heard before the court that he appeared to be under the influence of any intoxicant?—A. No; absolutely not.

Q. Mr. Brown has testified in this case that during that trial Judge Hanford appeared to him to be under the influence of intoxicating liquors on the bench; what would you say as to that?—A. Oh, it is absolutely untrue. He certainly was not intoxicated that day. In fact, that is why I said what I did say. He asked so many questions, and had the different questions so well in mind that it would not be possible for a man who was intoxicated to pay that attention to the argument of the case.

Q. Was there anything in his appearance which would indicate to your mind that he was intoxicated?—A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Does the opinion that was filed in this case, in your judgment, show a clear conception of the issues that were before the court?—A. It is a masterful opinion. It is as clear and clean cut an opinion as any man could possibly write on the questions that were involved in that case—not one alone, but there were several raised—and I know we submitted no briefs, so that he must have had some recollection of the arguments and the points raised and made when he wrote that opinion..

Q. Have you held any public positions in this State or some public positions?—A. Well, I never held office, if you mean that; I have been president of the State Bar Association; I had that pleasure.

Q. What year?—A. 1908, I think.

Mr. DORR. I think that is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Did the sheriff make a written return to the writ of habeas corpus?

A. Yes, sir; I think he did.

Q. Was not the case argued on the petition and the return?—A. Yes, sir; but they tried to inject something in addition into it.

Q. You say that the judge's opinion indicates that he must have paid very close attention to what was said in the argument?—A. For this reason, if I may state it: It was sought to show that these different unlicensed dentists were being persecuted and not prosecuted and that the State board of dental examiners was causing their arrests upon different occasions, piling one arrest on the other, for the purpose of driving them out of business and not merely for the purpose of convicting them of those different offenses, and a great deal was said along that line which, of course, did not appear upon any sheriff's return, indicating that they were unlawfully or illegally restrained; and I remember that particularly because Mr. Parker laid particular stress on that fact, that those people were being persecuted, and they wanted this decision from the Federal court to stop the so-called persecutions, or prosecutions—as we, of course, thought they were—in the State court. That was one of the questions interjected that was entirely aloof from the real question involved, and that was the constitutionality of the act under which those people were being prosecuted.

Q. Did Judge Hanford's opinion review anything but the question of the constitutionality of the law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else does it review?—A. It refers to this fact, and it refers to the further fact that it was apparently an attempt to secure an appeal in the Federal court, when the State court had already held adversely; and I think, as I remember that opinion, he stated that those people had their remedy by going to the United States Supreme Court without clogging the Federal court, which then had all the work, not only here, but in other districts as well, with those unnecessary appeals. He looked on it as in the nature of an appeal from the decision of the State court, and he treated all those things in his opinion, as I recollect it.

The CHAIRMAN. When was the opinion written, with reference to the time of the hearing?

A. Well, I should think a week after the decision was rendered.

Q. There is not any discussion of the evidence in the opinion, is there, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. There was no evidence, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That is my understanding; but my colleague, Mr. Higgins, thinks otherwise.

Mr. DORR. I understood it was purely a legal argument on the writ from the sheriff's return.

The CHAIRMAN. The majority of the committee, both my colleagues, think it would be better to have it go in the record, and of course they have the right to their way about it, but what is there in the opinion which could not have been written if Judge Hanford had been in New York on the day of that hearing; he had the petition, the return, the pleadings in the case before him the day after the hearing just as well as the day of the hearing, and when he was not in court that day could have written this opinion, could he not?

Mr. DORR. I can only refer you to the evidence which has been adduced from the witness who is now on the stand, in which he stated that the opinion showed a clear conception of the arguments that were made before the court.

The WITNESS. If I may state, Mr. Chairman, the point with me was this, as I recollect it: There were so many matters interjected that were alia aliunde, the mere return and petition that counsel kept harping upon, and those are matters that I think—of course, it has been a long time ago; it is eight years ago—but I did not think it was as long as that, but I know that Judge Hanford asked very many questions why those matters were brought up; that they were not proper, and I know he writes of them in the opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. Two of the members of the committee request that they may go in; the chairman does not see the value of it, however.

Document received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 31."

Mr. DORR. Just another question or two. You spoke of having convicted Dr. E. J. Brown several times; when was that, with reference to the time of this particular hearing?

A. I think at the same term of court at which Dr. Littoy was convicted.

Q. In what court was that?—A. In your superior court here of King County.

Q. Convicted of just what?—A. Practicing dentistry without a license.

Q. And that was Dr. Brown's interest in this proceeding, was it not?—A. Oh, he appeared as an attorney; he was an attorney at the same time he was practicing dentistry, and he appeared with John R. Parker; that is my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the dentists were at that time in good faith contesting that law, were they not?—A. I would not want to say that, Mr. Chairman; a number of convictions had been secured and the cases had gone to the supreme court and been affirmed, and then they started in when again confronted with those offenses, and we thought—and the supreme court finally refused further to hear those appeals, because they thought they were taking those appeals for the purpose of keeping up a continual row among the so-called ethical and non-ethical dentists.

Q. And had Judge Hanford anything whatever to do with any of those former convictions?—A. Not a thing.

Mr. McCoy. Do you see that there is any objection to a case that has once been tried in the supreme court, or a question that has once been tried in your supreme court or State courts, being taken into the Federal courts? One witness testified here this morning that he took a case into the Federal court which had been in the supreme court, and for a certain reason, which he gave, he did not want to push it there; in fact, what he testified to, as I understood it, was this: He brought identical suits in the superior court and in the United States district court, and that he did not press his suit in the State court for certain reasons which will appear in the record, but preferred to go in the Federal court; now is there any reason why a man should not go into the Federal court on a writ of habeas corpus without being criticized?

A. Only this, possibly, that if I were representing a fake dentist who had not been able to succeed in the superior court of the State and in the supreme court of this State I would probably have been very glad to experiment with the Federal court.

Q. Do you consider that Dr. Brown was a fake dentist?—A. Yes; I do.

Q. What do you consider a fake dentist to be?—A. One who don't know any more of the practice of dentistry than he did.

Q. What do you know about what he did know about it?—A. I saw his examination papers in some cases and I heard the testimony; I heard him tell about the practice of dentistry being the correction of a malposition of an unnormal condition.

Q. Do you consider that an examination paper will test a man's ability to practice dentistry?—A. I think so, as much as a man's examination paper will test his ability to practice law, every bit.

Q. You do think so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How is it with medicine?—A. Well, I don't know why it should not be so with medicine, except that they might do some mechanical work.

Q. And the same way—the same way in surgery?—A. The same way in surgery; they might do some work, some surgical work fairly well, but for the general practice, such as one indulges in in dentistry and in law, I think that a man should at least be able to spell ordinary words or to have some conception of what ordinary words mean, and ought to have some little idea of the amenities of the profession, which Dr. Brown never has had.

The Chairman. Is there anything further with the witness; stand aside.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Does that conclude the list of those witnesses who are anxious to get away?

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Carroll has been here several days——

The Chairman. We will call Mr. McIntyre.

J. D. McINTYRE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. J. D. McIntyre.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Twenty-two years.

Q. Are you in business?—A. Yes.

Q. Or profession?—A. Yes.

Q. What?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. Has that been your occupation?—A. No, I am a civil engineer.

Q. Have you practiced engineering during the 22 years you have lived here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what line?—A. For the United States Government and in ordinary private practice.

Q. What particular work did you do for the Government?—A. I surveyed the Okanogan Indian Reservation.

Q. And in the civil practice of your profession what did you do?—A. I laid out townsites and made surveys of city property, and made maps and one thing and another.

Q. When did you leave off your work as civil engineer?—A. About 12 or 15 years ago.

Q. How far from the city do you live?—A. I live in the city.

Q. Well, is it not kind of a slam on the city to say that you are farming in the city?—A. Well, no; not in this case. I am farming near Olympia. I am president of a nursery company and we plant a great many fruit orchards.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford, Mr. McIntyre?—A. I know him only officially.

Q. Explain that a little more fully, please.—A. Well, I know him in his official capacity as judge; for instance, 20 years ago, or about that, he issued my naturalization papers, I being a foreigner.

Q. You mean your acquaintance with him is only a sight acquaintance?—A. No; a little more than that. He appointed me court commissioner here 15 years ago for Douglas County.

Q. How long did you serve in that capacity?—A. About four years.

Q. What country were you born in?—A. I was born in Canada.

Q. And naturalized when?—A. It was either in 1892 or 1893.

Q. Well, during the years you ha e known Judge Hanford what opportunity have you had for observing him both in court and out of it?—A. Very little; I have been in his court room many times and have seen him sitting on the bench. I li e near where he does and see him nearly every day, going backward and forward on the Broadway car.

Q. At what hours?—A. Generally about from 9 to 10 o'clock in the morning and then I see him going home occasionally at night.

Q. How late?—A. Generally when I have seen him going home at night it has been very late, probably from 10 to 12 o'clock, or something like that.

Q. Have you on any occasion ridden home on the car on which he rode?—A. Yes, sir; many times.

Q. Did you ever observe the judge while presiding in court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice any peculiarity in his demeanor or appearance while on the bench?—A. No, nothing that I should consider of any importance. He had no peculiarity particularly. I noticed that he would sometimes shut his eyes—I took it to be that the light hurt his eyes.

Q. Did he appear to you at any time to be nodding?—A. No, I never saw him nod.

Q. If at any time you have seen the judge when, in your opinion he was affected by intoxicating drinks, tell the committee of that.—A. Well, you know it is pretty hard to tell whether a man is drunk or not; there might be something else the matter with him.

Q. Tell if you have seen him when he seemed to you to be under the influence of liquor or some other intoxicant; tell it—A. Well, I certainly never did in the morning or when he was on the bench or in the day time.

Q. Well, if you did at any time, tell us that.—A. Well, I might be mistaken in it, you know; he might be sick.

Q. Well, tell us what you saw.—A. Well, I have seen him on the cars going home late at night when he appeared to be under the influence of liquor, and I took it that he had been to some banquet and made too many speeches, maybe.

Q. If you recall tell the first occasion which you observed.—A. I never noticed anything of that kind until here lately, and I am trying to recall when that was; I think of two occasions now, but I can not fix the time; I know that it must have been from three or four or five months ago was the last time, and it seems to me about two months before that, but I could not fix the time exactly.

Q. That was the first time, is it—where was he when you first noticed him?—A. He was sitting in the car going home.

Q. About what hour was it?—A. It seems to me that was about probably between 11 and 12 o'clock.

Q. Which of you was on the car first, if you recall it?—A. Well, I think that he was on the car—you speak of the first time?

Q. Yes.—A. I think he was on the car the first time.

Q. Which of you gets off the car first?—A. He does.

Q. Now, what first attracted your attention to him on that occasion?—A. Well, he kept falling asleep and acted so strangely that everybody in the car noticed it—not everybody, but I saw several sitting near me that were smiling about it and thought the judge had overstepped the mark a little bit.

Q. Did you hear any remarks or comments about his condition around there?—A. No.

Q. I do not ask you what they were, but did you hear any remarks?—A. I did not; no one spoke.

Q. What was the thing in others which you did notice?—A. Well, I noticed that their attention was drawn to his condition.

Q. What was his position in the car?—A. Well, he was sitting in the front part of the car and he kept his back pretty well to us; there was too little seats that face each other in the front part of all those cars, and he could not sit steadily, but was able to take care of himself all right and when he got off he knew where he was getting off and he got off and the conductor helped him a little.

Q. Did you notice him after he got off?—A. No, sir; it was very dark and it was raining and I could not see.

Q. As you said, the other occasion was about perhaps a few months later?—A. A couple of months later, as nearly as I can recollect.

Q. Where was he when you first noticed him the second time?—A. Well, he was sitting in the car going home.

Q. What was there in his appearance that attracted your attention that time?—A. Well, very much the same as he did the first time, only I thought he was probably in a little worse condition at that time.

Q. Were there others on the car than he and you?—A. Oh, yes; yes, sir.

Q. To what extent did others notice him on that occasion, if they did notice him?—A. Well, of course anyone will notice a prominent man like him. There was a lady I noticed sitting opposite him there and she was laughing, and the gentleman that was with her making some comments and smiling, and the people close around where he sat there took notice of it, but I did not know any of them; they were strangers to me.

Q. What did you say his condition was then with reference to being intoxicated?—A. Well, as I say, he might have been unwell; he is an old gentleman, and he might have been unwell; maybe that was not what was the matter with him.

Q. Did he show any evidences of suffering or pain?—A. Well, I could not say that he did; no.

Q. Did you notice him getting off the car this second time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did he get off—alone, or did he have help?—A. I think he got off alone, but he could not manage getting back to the door very well; he seemed to not be able to see well.

Q. Which end of the car did he get off at?—A. He got off the rear end.

Q. How far did he have to walk from where he sat in the rear?—A. Both times he was sitting near the front of the car.

Q. Well, how was he with reference to steadiness as he went back through the car?—A. Well, he was not steady at all.

Q. Sometimes the motion of the car causes unsteadiness.—A. Yes; yes, sir.

Q. Was that the case with him, or was it some other cause?—A. No; it was not the fault of the car; I can't say; he was not steady.

Q. Did you see him on any other occasions than those two when in your opinion he was under the influence of some intoxicating drink?—A. I have not, and I have seen him many times for years and years, and he was always perfectly proper.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking?—A. I never have.

Q. The second time you saw him get off did he have help in getting off or not?—A. I don't think he did. I think be got off himself.

Q. Was there anyone with you?—A. No; I was alone.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. No cross-examination.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Will it be convenient to call Mr. Carroll and then Mr. Peters next? They are both very busy men and anxious to get away.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; call Mr. Carroll.

P. P. CARROLL, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your full name to the committee.

A. Patrick Pitman Carroll.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Since 1886.

Q. What is your business now?—A. Lawyer.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. About 40 years.

Q. Still active in the practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you alone or associated with some one in the practice?—A. Alone at this time.

Q. What connection have you had in your practice?—A. Well, I have had associates with me at one time; Judge Root and John C. Tenike.

Q. To what extent, Mr. Carroll, did your practice bring you into Judge Hanford's court?—A. Well, I suppose I know Judge Hanford longer and more intimately than any other man in active practice to-day. I have known him for 30 years, if not thirty-odd.

Q. To what extent did your practice bring you into his court?—A. The record will show that I was a constant practitioner in his court, not only when he was on the State bench but on the Federal bench.

Q. What line of business did you have in his court as Federal judge?—A. Mostly in admiralty.

Q. To what extent have you been an associate of the judge when he was not on the bench?—A. Prior to his appointment to the judgeship I traveled over the Territory with him when he was United States assistant district attorney.

Q. And since he has been on the bench?—A. I have been in his court very constantly.

Q. How is it as to outside of the court; what was your association with him?—A. I have met him frequently; our children grew up together—our sons and daughters; especially the daughters were very intimate. Judge Hanford has been to my house time after time to dine, and his daughters also.

Q. And he and you are lifelong friends and your children and his are also friends?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your families?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir; although I helped to organize it I never became an active member.

Q. Have you seen the judge drink intoxicants?—A. I have.

Q. To what extent?—A. Well, like I do myself, occasionally; I never saw him drunk; I never saw him but at times when he could be drunk if he wanted to be; he drank at my table many times and I drank myself with him at his table.

Q. To what extent have you been with him here in the city, in the evenings in the last 10 years?—A. I am a late worker myself; very late; I seldom get to bed until 12 and oftentimes between 12 and 2, and I am up as a rule at 5, and Judge Hanford is a late worker and has always been to my knowledge; and before we had the city cars here he had offices when he was assistant United States attorney and my office—that was before the fire, as we call it—in what is known as the Ponson Building at the foot of Cherry Street and First Avenue now; his office was over where the Northern Pacific ticket office is now; I think on the second floor right over there, and he used to go home my way, and we would start up as a rule, up Cherry Street to Third and up Third to Marion and up Marion to Fourth and up Fourth to—I would leave him at Ninth and he would go up to what used to be Eleventh and now, I think, it is Boren, where the Perry Hotel is.

Q. Did you sometimes take a drink on the way home?—A. As a rule I would call him up on the phone and ask him if he wanted to take a nip, and sometimes he would say yes, and then we would make an appointment and we would meet and go home together, and I would part with him at Ninth and Madison and he would go on up two streets farther.

Q. Now, Mr. Carroll, when was that; that is, when did they get street cars to take you home?—A. I think the first street cars started in April, 1890. I was the promoter of that street car line myself, or aided in its promotion, that is, the Madison line.

Q. Twenty-two years ago?—A. Yes, sir; right after the big fire.

Q. Well, my question, if you will notice it, was of later years; it related to the last 5 or 10 years; have you ever been downtown with him at night to any extent in the last 5 or 10 years?—A. Yes, sir; on several occasions.

Q. How many; fix it by some unit of time.—A. Probably on an average, I should say, not to exceed three nights; that is, in the last five years; I have been away from home a great deal; that is, my business has taken me out of the city a great deal and away from Seattle, and I have been away at times for months and weeks and days, and consequently I have not met him as much, but at home—when I am at home I am generally late in the office at night and I possibly would meet him in the last five years maybe four or five times; two or three time a month, according to my business or ability to be home.

Q. Did he and you ever have a drink together in the nighttime during the five years you speak of?—A. I believe on a few occasions; yes. I had business with him about interlocutory orders and ex parte orders. cases that he tried, and I would prepare the papers for him to sign the decrees and take them to his office, and if I would have business at my office I would call him by phone and ask him whether he would be there in his office at such a time that evening, and he would say yes and I would tell him I had such and such papers to sign, and I would call on him at such and such a time and we would go home together.

Q. What was the nature of those orders?—A. Decrees in admiralty and decrees in equity cases.

Q. You spoke of being away a great deal of the time later on.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On professional business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where at?—A. Attending the Federal court in Portland and attending the Federal court, the circuit court of appeals in San Francisco, and elsewhere along this circuit.

Q. Do you still keep up your habits of working late at night?—A. Yes, sir, I do; I got to bed this morning at half past 1.

Q. Would you mind telling us your age?—A. My age, I think I was 68 on the 17th of March last—St. Patrick's day.

Q. Did you always work that hard?—A. I have; yes, sir. If I get four hours' sleep it is all I need. It is all that I am accustomed to in my whole life. I have often got out of the saddle to get a rest and let a fellow that was sore footed get in, during the time past from 1861 to 1865; and I have often slept in the saddle, too.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when you thought he was more or less under the influence of liquor?—A. Never, sir. I never saw him when you could say that he was drunk, that he didn't know what he was doing. I have gone home from banquets and from special occasions when he had taken probably three or four glasses of intoxicants, but that don't make him drunk and don't make him unsteady either—a man accustomed to intoxicants.

Q. In your opinion what is a man's condition, physical condition, when he is drunk?—A. A man is drunk when he is unable to stand erect and to give an account of himself.

Q. I don't think you would find many who would disagree with you in that—until he gets in that condition he is not drunk, that is your opinion?—A. Oh, no; he might be drunk before that, but he could not be able to stand erect—I have seen men stagger at times and have staggered, and if staggering was to indicate that they are drunk I would be drunk every day. I got in the street car, and a few mornings ago, all the people laughed at me—neighbors of my own that knew me—the car runs around a bend there and I was thrown across the car and I said "Ladies and gentlemen, I am not drunk."

Q. I don't think we care about what you said; being a lawyer you can see that we do not.—A. I admit that the objection is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Carroll, how long have you been a member of the bar?

A. I think I was admitted to practice in—I am not sure, I think 1872—1870 or 1872, in the city of New Orleans.

Q. How long did you practice in Louisiana?—A. About 10 years.

Q. And then you came here?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. One or two other questions. What has been your practice, or what class of litigants have you frequently represented in this court?—A. Mostly in admiralty.

Q. I mean in admiralty, what classes of parties?—A. Well, I was for years here attorney of the sailors' union and also for a long time of the longshoremen's union and for the stevedores.

Q. What has been your experience before Judge Hanford with reference to bias or lack of bias and fairness or partiality, as the case might be, before Judge Hanford; how have those men fared as to liberality or illiberality of judicial treatment?—A. So far as the facts and the law would permit him he has extended justice as far as he could toward sailors and those needing such assistance as the law ought to give them.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

W. A. PETERS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. William A. Peters.

Q. Your last name again.—A. William A. Peters.

Q. P-e-t-e-r-s?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Seattle.
Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Since the year 1886.
Q. What is your business?—A. Attorney at law.
Q. How long have you been a lawyer?—A. Since 1886.
Q. Practicing your profession still?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I assume that you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him; yes, sir.
Q. To what extent have you practiced in his court?—A. I had some practice before him as territorial judge. As soon as he came to the bench as United States district judge I have had perhaps my share of practice before him.
Q. Along what line?—A. Along the lines of general practice, some admiralty; in the early days more admiralty than now; some equity suits, and mostly jury suits or jury cases.
Q. Has your practice in his court continued up to the present?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have had occasion to observe the judge's manner of holding court, I presume?—A. I have.
Q. Have you noticed the peculiarity in him of which the witnesses have testified within your hearing?—A. Of his sometimes seeming abstracted and nodding?
Q. Yes.—A. Yes.
Q. And appearing to nod?—A. Yes.
Q. When did you first notice that peculiarity?—A. I can not recall that I have ever noticed any difference in his demeanor or behavior in the time that I have known him.
Q. You do not recall now, then, when you first noticed that peculiarity in him?—A. No, sir; I do not. It certainly has been a considerable period of time.
Q. Is it as much as would lead one unacquainted with him to conclude that he was asleep?—A. Well, I should hardly judge so to an attorney. While examining witnesses, while the testimony was being produced, one might think that he was not paying attention. Sometimes he is writing in his docket; sometimes he is wheeling about in his chair; sometimes, and a very usual feature, would be his putting his beard in his lips in this manner [showing]; often his hand over his eyes in this manner [showing], and, as has been indicated, sometimes often with closed eyes; sometimes his head would nod, but whenever called upon to pass upon the propriety of a question he indicated on all occasions that he was fully in touch with all of the details of the testimony which had been produced before, and I have been surprised to observe in arguing motions for a new trial—sometimes weeks after the hearing has passed—I have been surprised at the wonderful recollection that he had of the details of the testimony as produced before him in such trials, where his demeanor was the same as on other occasions.
Q. What class of clients have you represented before the judge?—A. In my earlier days, probably a general practice; I think, perhaps, in all cases, a general practice.
Q. Have you had any railroad or other——A. I never represented a railroad. At one time, for perhaps a year, my partner, Mr. Powell, had some suits for—yes; and perhaps I tried some for one of the railroads here, a street railway company—it lasted for about a year.

Q. What one?—A. The Seattle, Renton & Southern Road; but I never had any cases before Judge Hanford for that road. That is some seven or eight years ago.

Q. Are you connected with it now?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you connected with any interstate carrier of freight or passengers?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to observe the judge when he was not on the bench?—A. I saw quite a little of him in the early days—1886 and then on—I saw more of him as I grew older at the bar. I saw a great deal of him in the summer of 1909, when we were both on an executive committee here of the American Bar Association for that meeting. The previous spring and during that summer of our fair he, being the nominal chairman of the executive committee, and I had frequent meetings with him and other persons.

Q. In speaking more particularly of the last 10 years, what would you say?—A. Prior to 1909 I have seen him very frequently; I have been on many committees with him of a public nature, and particularly in connection with the bar and bar association matters.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. Yes, sir; I have been so since its organization.

Q. Have you met him there?—A. Frequently.

Q. How frequently?—A. Well, very often at lunch. If I came in to lunch and no one was sitting at his table, if I came about it I would join him, and he would join me if he came in and I was sitting at the table with no one sitting with me; and I would certainly say that while he was in town and I was in town I would see him once or twice a week.

Q. How late have you seen him there?—A. If I had been working at my office, I would see him, or, if for some reason I had to stay down town, when I would drop in at the Rainier Club on my way home, it being on my way home, I have seen him sometimes; very infrequently, however.

Q. Have you taken drinks with him there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Seen him drink when you were not drinking with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Give us some idea of the extent to which that has happened.—A. If I brought a party of gentlemen in there, usually lawyers, and introduced them to Judge Hanford and asked him to take a cocktail before lunch or before dinner of which we were both parties, he would join me in one, for the purpose, evidently, of being simply sociable. I never saw him take another; I have been at frequent banquets with him of one nature and another, mostly professional, that is, of the Bar Association, connected with lawyers' affairs and any social matters, I have seen him take liquor with the rest of us there, but nothing to have any effect upon him.

Q. Those lawyers whom you would take to the club with you were, of course, out of town lawyers?—A. Out of town lawyers; oh, yes.

Q. What is the rule in that regard; are residents of the city eligible to visit the club as guests?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is not the usual custom?—A. It is not the usual custom.

Q. So that the out of town lawyers who were with you on those occasions were acquainted with the judge, I suppose?—A. Usually; yes, sir.

Q. And you would have a drink together?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Just one?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you ever see the judge repeat at the club?—A. I do not recall that I have.
Q. Did you ever play any games with him at the club?—A. No.
Q. Did you ever see him playing dominos, or any other games of cards?—A. I think I have seen him play dominos; I have never seen him play a game of cards.
Q. Would he drink while playing?—A. I do not recall that I have seen that.
Q. You have no recollection about it one way or the other?—A. No, I have never played a game of dominos with him myself, and perhaps the matter would not be impressed upon me.
Q. Have you drank with him anywhere else than at the club or seen him drink?—A. I can not remember but one occasion and that was over in Spokane when I was trying a case over there six or eight years ago, when we had one cocktail together at the invitation of a brother lawyer of Spokane.
Q. And that was the only one except at the club?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You never drank with him in any of the barrooms of the city here?—A. I do not recall a single instance; no, sir.
Q. Well, have you at any time seen the judge when in your opinion he was affected by or under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never have.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing further. That is all.

Testimony of witness closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. A. P. Perry present?

A. P. PERRY, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name.

A. A. P. Perry.
Q. Have you been subpœnaed?—A. No, sir.
Q. How do you happen to be here, Mr. Perry?—A. I just dropped in.
Q. Do you want to be heard as a witness?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. A. P. Perry is your name?—A. A. P. Perry.
Q. Where do you live?—A. I live in Tacoma.
Q. What is your business, Mr. Perry?—A. Lumberman.
Q. How long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. About eight or nine months.
Q. Where did you live before that?—A. 905 Fourth Avenue north, Seattle.
Q. For how long a time?—A. 1900.
Q. What was your business in Seattle?—A. I was a lumberman.
Q. In the lumber business?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In what way—selling lumber?—A. No; running a sawmill.
Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No; I am by sight.
Q. How long?—A. About 10 or 11 years.
Q. What opportunity have you had for seeing the judge and noticing him in that time?—A. I saw him on the bench several times and met him frequently.

Q. What were you doing in court when he was on the bench?—A. I have been there as a witness.

Q. In cases for other persons?—A. Yes, sir; and a couple of times for myself.

Q. Have you had any litigation before the judge?—A. I have; yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any opportunity to see him when not on the bench?—A. I have; yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Coming over on the interurban and seeing him in Seattle.

Q. If at any time you have seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of some intoxicant, please tell the committee.—A. I saw him in the bar back of the Seattle Hotel in 1906 pretty well under the influence of liquor. I saw him take three or four drinks, buy a quart bottle of whisky, and stagger out into the street.

Q. Was he with anyone or alone?—A. All alone.

Q. What time of the day or night was it?—A. It was in the evening after dark. I should judge it was about 9 o'clock at night.

Q. Have you at any other time seen him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have seen him when I came up on the interurban before he got into Seattle.

Q. Well, what was his condition with reference to sobriety?—A. He appeared to be very much under the influence of liquor.

Q. How far did you ride with him on that occasion?—A. From Tacoma to Seattle.

Q. How did he demean himself on the way over?—A. He sat down and went to sleep.

Q. All the way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you near enough to tell whether there was any odor of liquor on him?—A. I sat in the seat behind him.

Q. What do you say as to the question of odor?—A. It was very strong.

Q. What was it?—A. It was whisky, I think.

Q. Have you at any other time seen him when you thought he was more or less intoxicated?—A. Those are the only two times I have seen him when I thought he was under the influence of liquor.

Q. Have you any personal feeling of any kind against the judge?—A. Not a bit.

Q. If at any time you saw him in court when it appeared to you that he was under the influence of liquor, you may tell of that—A. I do not think I ever did in court.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of this witness, gentlemen?

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the case, Mr. Perry, you spoke of that you were a party to?

A. I was a witness, I think, in the case of Thomas Conway v. Northern Pacific, at one time; and another case where he had issued an injunction against our company and taken the case out of the State court after the case had been decided in the State court. He took charge of the case and issued an injunction and prevented us from going ahead under our decision in the State court.

Q. What other cases have you yourself or your company had in the court?—A. I think that is the only one—one or two.

Mr. MCCOY. What was the company?

A. The A. P. Perry Lumber Co.

Q. And who was the plaintiff?—A. A. P. Perry.

Q. And who was the defendant?—A. The Tacoma Mill Co. was the plaintiff and I was the defendant in the Federal court?

Q. Who owns the Tacoma Mill Co.?—A. I do not know.

Q. Who are the officers of it?—A. Charles Hill is one of them and a Mr. Chesbrough, of San Francisco, is another one.

Q. Who is Charles Hill?—A. A resident of Tacoma; Charles E. Hill.

Mr. HUGHES. When was this injunction case you speak of—the Tacoma Mill Co. v. A. P. Perry Lumber Co.?

A. I do not recall it, but you were the attorney there, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Do you remember when it was?—A. It was where he had issued an injunction and prevented us from going ahead under our decision out of the State court.

Q. Do you remember when it was?—A. No.

Q. You are not a lawyer, are you?—A. No.

Q. You were beaten in that case, were you not?—A. Why, no; I won the injunction alright in the Federal court.

Q. I mean before Judge Hanford?—A. I guess so; he threw us out of court so quick I never found out whether I was beat or not.

Q. You have always felt sore against him since then, have you not?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Who was your attorney?—A. W. I. Agneau.

Q. How long ago was it?—A. I can not tell; 1904 or 1905, I think.

Q. You have felt a grudge against Judge Hanford since?—A. No, sir. We never heard our appeal in the court; we never recognized the injunction.

Q. Do you mean you disobeyed the injunction?—A. Yes, sir; we disobeyed the injunction. We went to the State court to seek our relief.

Q. And went ahead without reference to the injunction of Judge Hanford?—A. We did not violate the injunction; we completed our case in the State court and won out.

Q. Was that case heard in Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of the proceedings had been had in the State court before this case occurred in the Federal court, didn't it? All through you had nothing else to do in the State court?—A. Yes sir. We won in the State court, and he issued an injunction and commanded the case to be brought before him, and my lawyer would not recognize him.

Q. You came into that court and the case was tried in that court. Is not that true?—A. No, sir; I never tried that case in that court.

Q. Well, passing that by——A. He gave you a $1,000 judgment by default because we would not appear in his court.

Q. Did you live at Olympia at that time?—A. No. sir.

Q. When did you say you lived in this city?—A. I lived here since 1900 until last November.

Q. When was it that you rode on the street car with him?—A. It was coming over from Tacoma. I can not recall the day, but about six years ago.

Q. About six years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what time a day was it?—A. It was at night; the car got in here about 9 o'clock, I should judge.

Q. Is that when that case was tried?—A. No; that had no reference to that case at all; that is just when I came over with the judge.

Q. Now, was not it earlier in the evening than that?—A. No, it was not.

Q. Was not it right after the adjournment of court, getting in here about 6 or 7 o'clock?—A. No; it was after dark.

Q. How?—A. It was after dark. I used to get in here about 9 o'clock.

Q. The Interurban gets in here every hour and has for several years, doesn't it?—A. Yes; usually.

Q. Can you tell with any great degree of certainty what hour it was?—A. No; I could not; but it was after dark that night.

Q. Yes, but it gets dark here at certain seasons of the year at 5 o'clock, doesn't it?—A. Yes; but it was dark then, too.

Q. Can you say because it was dark that it was later than 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening?—A. Yes; it was later than that.

Q. How do you know that?—A. I do not leave my place at McIntosh until 5 o'clock. I usually take the 5 o'clock train, and it takes an hour and one-half to reach Tacoma. I usually leave about 8 o'clock out of Tacoma.

Q. There is nothing to prevent you taking a 7 o'clock train?—A. Well, there is sometimes; I usually have something to look after in Tacoma.

Q. Now, it is not usual for persons to sleep on the cars riding between here and Tacoma, is it?—A. No.

Q. You do that yourself sometimes, don't you?—A. I do not know that I ever did; no.

Q. You say you saw him in the bar of the Seattle Hotel?—A. In the bar back of the Seattle Hotel; I do not know the name of the place, but it is back of the Seattle Hotel.

Q. In the Occidental Building, you mean?—A. The Seattle Hotel; do you know where that is?

Q. Yes; but to make sure of it, it is the Occidental Building?—A. I do not know whether it is the Occidental Building or not.

Q. Well, it is on Yesler Way?—A. Yes.

Q. That three-cornered building?—A. Yes.

Q. Yesler Way is on the south side of it and James Street is on the north?—A. It is a bar right back of the Seattle Hotel—in the Seattle Hotel.

Q. Who was with you at that time?—A. Frank Williamson.

Q. Where is he?—A. He is the man who shot himself the 3d of July.

Q. The 3d of this July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody else with you that is dead?—A. I do not recall of anyone.

Q. Anybody else that you know of that is alive?—A. No, sir; there were several men in the barroom, but I did not know them.

Q. Do you remember anybody who was in that barroom at that time?—A. I do not. Frank Williamson was the only one in the whole crowd, and Judge Hanford.

Q. You did not know Judge Hanford personally at that time?—A. No, sir; I knew him at sight, though.

Q. What were you doing in there?—A. I went in there; I had some business with Frank.

Q. Frank who?—A. Frank Williamson.

Q. Business that you had to transact in the barroom?—A. That we did; I went in and got him—we met there.

Q. Did you transact your business there?—A. We transacted our business in the Seattle Hotel, but I met Mr. Williamson in the barroom.

Q. Did you drink there?—A. No, sir; I do not drink.

Q. You never drink?—A. Yes, sir; I have, but I do not now and did not then.

Q. How long were you in the bar?—A. Half an hour, I should judge.

Q. What were you doing during that half hour in the bar?—A. I was in there with Mr. Williamson, talking to Mr. Williamson; I met him in there.

Q. Were you sitting down?—A. A part of the time.

Q. Where?—A. In one of the boxes right in front of the bar.

Q. There is but one box there, and that is not in front of the bar; is not that the case? Is that the Hyde's liquor store, formerly Sartori's liquor store?—A. Sartori's I think, something like that.

Q. You know that there are no boxes in front of the bar there?—A. There is a box in front of the bar; there was at that time.

Q. There is no box except at the south end on the left-hand side, at the Yesler Avenue side.—A. On the left-hand side there is a box and Mr. Williamson and I sat in that.

Q. From there you could not see very much of the barroom at all from it, could you?—A. Yes; you could see all the bar.

Q. Did you see anybody with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; there were several in there; I do not know who they were, though. I am not very well acquainted here.

Q. Well, how long was he in company with these other persons?—A. He left the crowd of them and stepped into the front part atter the closing doors and bought a quart bottle of whisky and wenf out onto the street; that is the last I saw of him.

Q. You followed him?—A. No; we happened to be in the front part about the time he was leaving.

Q. That is the opposite part from where you have already located yourself in the box?—A. We were in the box, and we left and went to go out through the hotel.

Q. That is the wholesale part?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is entirely separated from the bar?—A. Yes, sir; there are little swinging doors there.

Q. And they shut off the view from the saloon part?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the street from which you say you left that by?—A. Well, Mr. Williamson and I left the saloon and went into the hotel part.

Q. Now, do you know how many men were in there with Judge Hanford?—A. I do not.

Q. Were they familiar persons or familiar figures that you knew?—A. No, sir; I do not know a dozen men in Seattle.

Q. You do not know a dozen men in Seattle?—A. No, sir.

Q. But they were standing there with Judge Hanford and they took a drink?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them take more than one drink?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them take three or four drinks.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did all of them take three or four drinks?—A. I know Judge Hanford did.

Q. Did the rest of them that were with him?—A. I do not know what they took, but I know what Judge Hanford took.

Q. Why did you notice Judge Hanford without noticing the gentlemen with him?—A. Because I was more interested in him than I was in the rest of them.

Q. Why was you more interested in him?—A. I wanted to see what he was.

Q. Why did you do it? Tell the committee.—A. I just wanted to find out myself.

Q. Well, can not you tell them what your interest was?—A. Yes; I wanted to see what he was.

Q. That is not a motive; that is curiosity.—A. Well, curiosity, then.

Q. Was there anything but curiosity?—A. No.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

FRANK SPEIR, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Q. What was his condition?—A. Well, he was pretty drunk.

Q. How long had you known him at that time?—A. Oh, I presume may be a couple of years.

Q. Have you any question as to who it was that you saw there?—A. None whatever.

Q. What was his business?—A. He was in the dairy business.

Q. What was the judge's condition with reference to his ability to stand still and erect?—A. Well, he could not stand still. He kept stepping around and staggering about, and he went back and leaned up against the building and stood there a little while.

Q. Where was he when you left?—A. Where was he?

Q. When you lost sight of him?—A. He was still standing there. I did not wait for him to take the car. He came up once and asked us what the car was that was coming up. There was a car coming up the street, and he asked us what car that was while we were standing there.

Q. Were you near enough to him to tell whether there was an odor of liquor from his breath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. You could smell liquor very strong.

Q. What was it—beer or whisky?—A. I could not say; probably it was pretty mixed, by the smell of things.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. What time of the evening would you say that it was?

A. I presume it was close to 10 o'clock; perhaps a little after 10.

Q. Did you observe whether he took the James Street car line?—A. I didn't see him take the car. I don't think he was waiting for the James Street car.

Q. For the one on Second Avenue?—A. There was a car coming up Second Avenue, and he came and asked us what car it was. I think, probably, that he was waiting for that car.

Q. You could see what the car was from the sign upon it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the car he wanted?—A. No; that was not the car he wanted.

Q. You did not wait until the car came that he wanted?—A. No, sir; he went back. At least he didn't take the car. He stood there backed up against the building. I suppose it was not the car he wanted.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. When were you subpœnaed?

A. About 10.30 this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now take a short recess.

Witness excused. Whereupon, after recess, the following witness is called:

Prof. EDMUND S. MEANY, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please give your full name to the committee.

A. Edmund S. Meany.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have for how long?—A. 35 years.

Q. You are connected with the Washington State University?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have been how long?—A. For 30 years.

Q. What is your present connection with that institution?—A. Professor of history.

Q. Is that your special work all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. For 30 years.

Q. To what extent have you been associated with him?—A. Always he has been interested in matters of history, and for the last 10 years he has been trustee of the historical society, of which I am secretary, and I have been thrown with him that way a good deal.

Q. How often does that society meet?—A. Not often, but the trustees transact the business for it and publish a quarterly.

Q. Do they have meetings at stated periods?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just at the call of the chairman?—A. At the call of the chair.

Q. How often do they meet, as a matter of fact?—A. Not often.

Q. Have you other opportunities of seeing and meeting Judge Hanford besides on those occasions?—A. Well, we were thrown together a good deal during the exposition for three years—for a period of three years he was a trustee of that, and I was also a trustee of it.

Q. But you are not in attendance at court when the judge presides, are you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you had little or no occasion to see him or meet him in the city here.—A. Only on those occasions I have mentioned.

Q. Except when the trustees of the historical society meet.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that might be how often in a year?—A. Oh, I met the judge at that and other occasions probably 8 or 10 times a year.

Q. Where do you and he meet usually?—A. In his chambers.

Q. At what time of the day?—A. Afternoons.

Q. Do you sometimes see him at banquets or other public occasions?—A. Frequently.

The CHAIRMAN. I presume you would want to show by this witness the judge's capacity for work. Is that right? Perhaps you had better ask him so as to make it brief, you or Mr. Dorr, to save time—get at the points you want.

Mr. HUGHES. How long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. something over 30 years.

The CHAIRMAN. I have gone over that ground pretty fully.

Mr. HUGHES. State what you know as to the general activities of Judge Hanford in matters of public interest and matters aside from his judicial work, briefly; the time he has devoted to it, and all that sort of thing.

A. We served together on a committee to get the Seward statue, which took about three years; we served together to get the McGraw statue, which is still pending; we served together on these exposition committees and the historical society, of which I have spoken, and several other public occasions of that kind have brought us together, and I had occasion to meet him frequently in that work. I had an occasion also to write, at the request of Mr. Page, of the World's Work, an article, about nine years ago, about Judge Hanford, at which time my attention was called to the fact that he had made a record that was not equaled probably in the United States, by district judges anywhere, for the number of cases and the amount involved in the cases—a unique record for large work—and it appealed to me as an historian and I delved into it and I wrote the article It was not published, but it satisfied me of the judge's capacity for large work and much of it.

Q Have you ever known of his being intoxicated?—A. Never.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

JEROLD LANDON FINCH, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr McCOY. What is your full name?

A. Jerold Landon Finch.

Q. And you are an attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Practicing in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q You live here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Eleven years.

Q How long have you practiced law here?—A. Eleven years.

Q. Ever practice in any other place?—A. In Michigan.

Q. How long did you practice there?—A. Three years.

Q Did you have a case before Judge Hanford in bankruptcy, in which you thought you had any occasion to complain of his handling of it?—A. I did.

Q. What was the title of the case?—A. In re Heckman & Hansen, bankrupts.

Q That was the case in which a receiver had been appointed in the State court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On a friendly application?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The purpose being to conserve the estate for the benefit of the creditors, some of the creditors having proceedings pending against this concern?—A. It was to conserve the estate in the interest of the owners, Heckman & Hansen; they had no differences with their creditors.

Q. They were a partnership, or was it a corporation?—A. A partnership.

Q. What phase of the matter got into the Federal court before Judge Hanford?—A. The partnership of Heckman & Hansen voluntarily petitioned themselves into bankruptcy, that being a Federal question got into the Federal court.

Q. Were you attorney for them as petitioner?—A. I was not.

Q. Who was the attorney?—A. C. A. Reynolds.

Q. Did you get into the case as attorney—what was the firm?—A. Heckman & Hansen.

Q. After the petition in bankruptcy had been filed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what stage of the case did you take it up as attorney?—A. At the stage where the State court purposed to sell the property of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Your purpose in coming in was to get a stay and prevent the sale?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that the effect of the proceeding or not?—A I was unable to prevent the disposition of the estate by the State court.

Q. What other step in the bankruptcy proceeding after that did you take as attorney?—A. The bankruptcy estate was declared closed and then I came in with a petition to reopen that estate.

Q. Who declared it closed?—A. Judge Hanford upon application of the trustee in bankruptcy.

Q. Did the trustee in bankruptcy make a report?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Did the report purport to show that there were no assets of the bankrupt?—A. It did.

Q. And that was the basis on which he reported that it should be closed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did he make that report of his own motion or did some attorneys move in the matter to get the report from him?—A. It was made in the name of the trustee in bankruptcy—he acted through his attorney.

Q. And who was the trustee?—A. Mr. Gray, of the firm of Gray & Tait.

Q. Well, what did you do in the way of moving to reopen the case?—A. I filed with Judge Hanford a petition to reopen the estate.

Q. Alleging in the petition what facts as the basis as your claim for the granting of the petition?—A. I showed to him that Heckman & Hansen were shipbuilders; that they had brought to him an estate of upward of $60,000, and that they had debts aggregating not more than twenty-two or three thousand dollars. I suggested in the petition that at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy the possession of the property was in the State court, having been obtained through a receiver appointed in that court in a case entitled "William Curtis against Heckman & Hansen"; and I suggested that that suit there had been brought upon an account stated smiply and that there were no equities involved whatever.

Q. In other words, no lien was claimed in that suit on the assets of the firm?—A. Absolutely; that was the way it was suggested to Judge Hanford in the petition. I suggested further that after having a receiver appointed for the concern nothing further had been done in that case over there.

Q. No judgment had been taken, you mean, on the claim?—A. No, sir; that no judgment had ever been rendered at all. I also suggested that the Scandinavian-American Bank, an institution of this city, had conspired with the receiver in the State court to obtain the possession of the assets of the concern, and to that end had petitioned the State court to be allowed to sell the property and that he had afterwards done so, but at a grossly inadequate price, the price being $24,125.

Q. The sale being subject to the liens?—A. And the sale being subject to liens.

Q. So that that was the net amount over claims which were secured—well, that was practically net?—A. Yes; practically net. Then I suggested to him that the estate in his court had been manipulated in this way—that certain creditors, five small creditors whose claims as a whole aggregated $23, had come into his court and had caused a trustee to be elected and had gotten a bond for the trustee and had then hired an attorney to represent the trustee and that he had reported to Judge Hanford that there was no estate.

Q. Was that after the sale of the property had taken place?—A. Yes. And I further suggested that the reason no creditors had moved in the matter was because the bank had bought up the claims of the creditors and there were none to move. I further suggested in the petition that the reason why the bankruptcy machinery had not been set in motion was due to the fact that the referee in bankruptcy at that time was the attorney for the bondsmen of the receiver in the State court and was more incrested over there in seeing his client get off that bond than he was in setting in motion the bankruptcy machinery.

Q. Who was the referee?—A. John P. Hoyt.

Q. Is he referee now?—A. He is; yes. This petition I presented to Judge Hanford in chambers, and I suggested that he take it under advisement owing to the charges that it contained and owing to the fact that I did not want—while it was an ex parte matter I did not want to take snap judgment in any way and I wanted him to know what I had said in my petition and to know what the order meant before he should give it to me, opening the estate. I heard no more from it until one day I received a phone message from the law office of Ballinger, Ronald & Battle suggesting that the matter was coming up for hearing before Judge Hanford about three days subsequently.

Q. Now give the names of the members of that firm?—A. R. A. Ballinger, Alfred Battle, and J. T. Ronald.

Q. Had they appeared in the proceedings prior to that day?—A. They had not. No; they had not. Between the time when this notice was given me by phone and the day suggested when it would be heard, there were two or three affidavits left at my office in my absence which did not purport to show who had left them there, or in whose behalf they had been filed.

Q. No attorneys' names on them?—A. I think not. If there was, then the objection that I took at the time was because they did not purport to be offered in anyone's behalf.

When the matter came up before Judge Hanford I asked to strike those affidavits because they were offered in behalf of no one in interest in the bankruptcy proceedings. Judge Hanford refused to do it.

Q. Giving what reasons?—A. He did not give any reason. He then suggested that on his own motion he was going to send the whole mattr to Judge Eben Smith, who at that time was master in chancery here, whom he designated as special referee in bankruptcy, and that he was going to have Judge Smith look into the matter. I suggested to Judge Hanford that I did not think it was quite proper that the rights of my clients should be held up while he was looking into affairs that pertained mostly to questions of integrity of officers of his court; for he had given me to understand that that was what moved him particularly.

Q. What officers do you refer to?—A. I do not know whom he had in mind.

Q. Do you mean attorneys?—A. Yes, sir; I mean attorneys.

Q. Do you refer to them as officers of the court?—A. Yes, sir; I refer to them as officers of the court. I also suggested that it would be an expensive proceeding and that there were no funds that I knew of to take care of it; but Judge Hanford said that he guessed that a way would be found, and he sent it to Judge Smith. I asked Judge Hanford if he would himself then get up the order—I did not know what his mind was—and he said that he would, and he did get up an order and filed it in the case.

Q. An order of reference, you mean?—A Yes. We went down before Judge Smith. There, at that time, a large number of attorneys gathered——

Q. Name each one o them.—A. There was R. A. Ballinger there was Alfred Battle, there was Richard Saxe Jones J. B. Metcalfe, J. S Jurey C A. Reynolds, John P. Hoyt, and, I think, John E. Humphries, but I am not sure.

Q. This John P. Hoyt is the referee which you have been talking about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In whose behalf did those attorneys purport to appear?—A. I asked that question before Judge Smith, and I tried to get Judge Smith to make them declare themselves and he refused to do so

Q. Was the record of that proceeding kept from the time you started before Judge Smith?—A. I think so I think from the very start the record was kept.

Q. No entry made on the record of the names of anyone for whom those attorneys appeared, or the names of the attorneys?—A There was no record made of the client for whom they appeared; I do not know whether the record was made of their appearances or not.

Q. Go ahead.—A. One of the first things that I wanted to prove—that I felt incumbent upon me to prove there—was the connection that the Scandinavian-American Bank had with the proceedings in the State court.

Q. What was it that you offered to prove in connection with that bank?—A. I offered to show that they——

Q You mean the bank?—A. Yes; the bank had obtained possession of the property from the State court; it had been actually taken in the name of a man named Mayhew; but I claimed in my petition and before Judge Smith that Mayhew was acting simply as the agent for the Scandinavian-American Bank.

Q. Who were the principal officers of that bank?—A. Mr. Soeberg, Mr. Grondahl.

Q. What are Mr Soelberg's initials?—A. A. H. Soelberg.

Q. Name the offices that they held, if you know.—A. Soeberg, I believe, was vice president; Mr. Grondahl, E L. Grondahl, I think, his initials were, was cashier; one J E. Chilberg had some office, I think a director in the bank.

Q. Who was the attorney for the bank?—A. R. A Ballinger, of the firm of Ballinger, Ronald & Battle were the attorneys for the bank.

Q. Go ahead; you were testifying as to what you offered to show.—A I offered to show the connection of the bank with the present physical possession of the property which was then being held through this man Mayhew or a person or a corporation that was organized about that time named the Seattle Ship Yards Co.

Q. You mean that Mayhew, or the corporation, purported to hold the title to the property of your clients which had been sold by the receiver in the State court?—A. Exactly.

Q And they claimed under the sale?—A. Exactly. I offered to show that this man Mayhew, or the corporation, as the case might be, was simply the agent of the bank. When we undertook to do so several of the members of the bank's directorate, I think Mr Soelberg and Mr Grondahl and Mr. Chilberg I believe it was, testified that the bank had nothing to do with the obtaining of the property; that they did not know the man Mayhew and were not interested in the property in any way. Then I supbœnaed someone, I think perhaps it was Mr. Soelberg, with a subpœna duces tecum to bring the books of the bank. He responded to the subpœna personally, but did not bring the books.

Q. Did he give any reason for not bringing them?—A. His reason was that they would show nothing to the contrary of the testimony of the witnesses had he brought them, and that was argued also by the attorney for the bank at that time, Mr Battle—Judge Battle taking the brunt of the work and the argument there before Judge Smith.

Q. Were they arguing the legal proposition that because the witness claimed that his books would not show something that therefore he need not bring them?—A. They did not argue it legally, but simply Judge Battle suggested that because I had the word of, as he expressed it, half a dozen reputable citizens of this town as to what the facts were I did not need the books.

Q. What was the ruling of the referee on that?—A. The ruling of the referee was that he did not have power to deal with the situation, and I recognized that, and so I asked him for a certificate sending the whole proceedings back to Judge Hanford. He gave me such a certificate, and we came before Judge Hanford. At that time Judge Hoyt suggested that certain remarks that I had made when those parties had refused to bring in the books would make me amenable to punishment of some sort, and I suggested to the court that maybe my choice of language was not of the best—I would just as soon change it if it did not change the substance of what I had said.

Q. What was it you had said?—A. Well, I had suggested that those parties had perjured themselves before Judge Smith, and my words were that I would make them the sickest crowd that had ever attempted to foist a job of perjury upon a court. That language came up in the certificate to Judge Hanford. Judge Hanford replied that he did not want any attorney to feel that he was going to offend the court so long as he was striving to do his duty as he saw it, but he says, "Counsel seems to be going on a fishing excursion. He does not know what is in those books, but he wants to find out something." And I interrupted him, and I suggested or I asked him if he wanted an argument or wanted me to argue that point at that time. I suggested that the time for argument as to what I knew about what was in the books was when the men subpœnaed had obeyed the subpœna of the court. That irritated Judge Hanford slightly, and he asked me if I had the books of the bank would I be able to show anything to reflect upon the parties under investigation. I did not know at that time—I never have known since just who or what Judge Hanford thought was under investigation—but I replied to him that if he would let me have the books of the bank I would bring evidence sufficient to disbar R. A. Ballinger, J. B Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones, and C A. Reynolds. He replied to me, "You make that good, or I will disbar you." Well, I asked him might I have my books, and he said, "You can have any books. I will make an order that you can have any books that you have a mind to call for," and he did so, and I got such books as I wanted. We proceeded to take the evidence down there.

Q. Before the referee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Smith?—A. Yes; and eventually we got through, although it took several months' time before we were through. Judge

Smith then made a report to Judge Hanford, but in the report he had not followed my petition to reopen the estate and had not dwelt upon those things that I had dwelt upon in the petition and things which I had dwelt upon before him and failed to even state those things that I had complained about before him and in my petition. He did not either send up the evidence along with his report.

Q. The evidence had been taken stenographically and transcribed?—A. It had not been transcribed, but it had been taken stenographically. Before the hearing there I had learned of some facts that I did not know when I filed my petition to reopen the estate, so I embodied these additional facts in an amended petition to reopen the estate and came before Judge Hanford and asked leave to file it and also asked of him an order that he send it back to Judge Smith and get a definite report upon the facts alleged in the petition.

Q. Now, you say that he send it; you mean send the matter back to Judge Smith?—A. Send the whole matter back along with the amended petition and get a report from him upon the matters which were suggested in the amended petition.

Q. As well as in the original petition?—A. Yes; the facts that I had learned and which were new facts incorporated in the amended petition were these: That the State court had not, in fact, received the purchase price for the property that I thought it had received, having based my conclusions upon the record that was made in that court; that, as a matter of fact, while the State court purported to have received some $24,000 for the property——

Q. You mean, now, the receiver in the State court?—A. Yes, sir. As a matter of fact, the receiver received not a cent. He did not have money enough to pay the expenses of his receivership, and he had actually been discharged with the debts of his receivership still owing and with the record showing him with the possession of $24,000. As a matter of fact, he had not received anything whatever.

Q. Had they gone through the form of making a payment in any way?—A. Not at that time they had not. As a matter of fact the day that he was discharged the Scandinavian-American Bank paid to him $2,000—that was set out in my petition.

Q. Where did you ascertain that fact?—A. Before Judge Smith.

Q. You mean that was the testimony?—A. That was the testimony down there, and I embodied that in my amended petition. I also learned of another fact, namely, that the attorney who had petitioned my clients into bankruptcy had been paid $250; that $150 had been paid by the Scandinavian-American Bank and $100 had been paid by the bonding company on the bond of the receiver over in the State court.

Q. Did that come out in the testimony before Judge Smith?—A. That came out in the testimony before Judge Smith, and I embodied the fact in my amended petition, and I called Judge Hanford's attention to those facts. He said that I might file the amended petition, but that he was not going to bother Judge Smith about the matter any further, that Judge Smith had had the matter before him for some months, and that he was not going to send it back to him any more. Then I filed my exceptions to the report of Judge Smith, both as to some things that he had said and some things that he had not said, but which he had been requested to say.

Q. You mean some things that he was requested to find?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some things he had found which you took exception to and some things which he failed to find as requested?—A. Yes, sir. Then that left us in the situation of having a report with exceptions to the report, but no evidence. So I went to the stenographers who had taken the evidence and personally paid to them—in addition to about one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars that I had paid to them as a per diem—I paid them $450 in cash for the testimony. I paid that out of my own pocket. I did it for two reasons; one being it being in the interest of my clients to get evidence and the other because I considered myself a friend of the court and thought that he ought to have the record of such things as was brought out before Judge Smith. The respondents or my opponents, whatever you may designate them, filed a motion to confirm Judge Smith's report and tacked onto it a motion that the court should disbar me personally.

Q. In the bankruptcy court?—A. In the bankruptcy court; yes, sir.

Q. Did it ever transpire whom they claimed to represent?—A. No; it never did.

Q. And at that time there was nothing before Judge Hanford to show for whom those attorneys appeared?—A. There was not to my recollection. I challenged them all down the line as to whom they represented, and I do not think that had ever come out at all.

Q. Did you challenge them before Judge Hanford?—A. (Referring to document.) I want to say now in answer to the question referring to the motion that I made a moment ago that it starts off in this way——

Q. You are now reading from what?—A. From the motion which they made in the court to confirm the referee's report and to disbar me.

Q. That is the report of Judge Smith?—A. Yes. It reads [reading]:

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Washington, Northern Division. In the matter of Heckman & Hansen, bankrupts; No. 2203. Motion for confirmation of report and findings of special referee and for disbarment of Jerry L. Finch.

Comes now R. A. Ballinger, Richard Saxe Jones, J. B. Metcalfe, John P. Hoyt, and C. A. Reynolds, in propria persona, and also the Seattle Ship Yards Co., by Ballinger, Ronald & Battle, their attorneys, and moves the court for an order confirming the report and findings of the special referee, Hon. Eben Smith, made and filed in this matter, and also move the court for an order disbarring Jerry L. Finch, attorney for the bankrupts, Heckman & Hansen. This motion is based upon the files and records in this cause and upon an order and warning to the said Jerry L. Finch given by this court in open court when the said Finch asked for an order to submit books and papers of the Scandinavian-American Bank for his examination.

R. A. Ballinger.
R. S. Jones.
J. B. Metcalfe.
Ballinger, Ronald & Battle.

Now, that motion is the only paper and constitutes the entire pleadings of my respondents or opponents in that proceeding.

Q. Was that paper served on you?—A. Yes; and filed in court.

Q. They appeared for themselves and for the shipbuilding company?—A. The Seattle Ship Yards Co.

Q. Which was the company which had been organized after the sale in the State court?—A. Yes, sir; and which took over the possession of the property from Mr. Mayhew.

Q. And which was not a creditor of your partnership clients.—A. And which was not a creditor in any sense of the word. Their sole interest being that they had acquired the property. Those exceptions that I mentioned, that I filed, and the motion of those parties to confirm, were lying dormant; nothing being said while I engaged the stenographers to get out that testimony. It occurred to me one day, however, that the record had best be made by having Judge Smith authoritatively return that evidence, so I came before Judge Hanford and asked him for an order directed to Judge Smith directing him to return the evidence in the case. and suggested to Judge Hanford that I had already compensated the stenographers for that evidence. The suggestion being made in reply to Judge Hanford's remark that he understood there was a large volume of evidence taken and he did not know how it was to be paid for. He gave me the order. That afternoon about 4.30 I received——

Q. Just a minute before you come to that. He gave you an order on Judge Smith to return the testimony?—A. Yes. The same evening that he gave me the order on Judge Smith to return the testimony, about 4.30 in the afternoon I received a notice from Ballinger, Ronald & Battle's office that the whole matter would come before Judge Hanford for final disposition the next morning at 10 o'clock.

Q. Had the testimony at that time been transcribed into typewriting?—A. No; it had not. I came into court the next morning and myself started the proceedings. I suggested to Judge Hanford that I had been served with a notice that he was going to, or would take up that morning the exceptions of the bankrupts to the referee's report and also the motion of my opponents to confirm the report, and said that, of course, the matter could not come on this morning.

Q. Now, was that morning the same morning on which you were notified to appear in response to this motion or notice which you have read?—A. Yes, sir. Let me make you understand it. I got the order for the testimony one morning at 10 o'clock; that same afternoon I had the matter noted for the next morning on me.

Q. Now, when, with reference to the service of the paper which you have read, was this occasion?—A. The very next morning, being 24 hours after Judge Hanford had given me the order to get the testimony.

Q. Then the paper which you have read to us was the paper which was served on you at 4 o'clock that afternoon.—A. No. That was a motion which was made some little time before, but which was lying dormant with the exceptions of the bankrupts to Judge Smith's report.

Q. You do not quite understand me, I think. You have read here a moment ago, what?—A. The motion made by my opponents to confirm the report and to disbar myself.

Q. When was that returnable?—A. That motion?

Q. Yes.—A. That was not made returnable. It was simply filed, no special time set for the hearing.

Q. So that that matter had not been acted upon?—A. That matter had not been acted upon nor set.

Q. And no time was set for it?—A. That is true; it is also true as to the exceptions which I had filed. When I suggested to Judge Hanford, I said "Of course the matter can not come on this morning," he said "Of course it can come on this morning, Mr. Finch, and it will come on." I said, "Pardon me, your honor, it is the very matter in which you gave me the order yesterday to get the evidence, and the evidence is being gotten out just as fast as it can be done and will be here in the course of time, but in the meantime we can not hear anything." He said, "Well, I will hear no more from you, Mr. Finch," and I sat down. Judge Battle immediately arose and took about three or four minutes of the court's time. I could not interpret him then, and so I can not do it now—I could not conceive of just what his position was, and I did not know of any way of replying to him. I said to Judge Hanford, when he got through, that I knew of no way to take up exceptions to a referee's report except with the evidence before me, and we did not have the evidence, and, therefore, I could not present the matter that morning. I did say then that I wished he would hold the matter open for, say, 10 days, that I would like to file, I think I called it, an argument in the matter. He granted, if I recall, the 10 days, and within that time I presented to him what I denominated an argument rather than a brief.

I wanted to argue the facts showing the facts rather than the law. I do not recall just when that was filed or when it was with reference to the evidence getting before him but the evidence was placed before Judge Hanford and I think, before my argument was filed. Anyhow, I did not have what I thought was sufficient time and as time went on without hearing from Judge Hanford I got up before hearing from him a supplemental argument and went up to the court and asked leave to file, and he courteously accepted that. Subsequently he filed a memorandum decision, denying the rights of the bankrupts to have their estate reopened. Before he did that I went before him one day in open court and took what I called a petition. I had it headed entitled in his court and headed "In re R. A. Ballinger, J. B. Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones and C. A. Reynolds" and in the introductory to that petition I called his attention to the occurrences that I have mentioned here a little bit ago, to where I had suggested that upon certain conditions I would bring him evidence to disbar, sufficient to disbar those parties and his suggestion that I do so or he would disbar me and my willingness to accept the situation as he had made it, and suggested that I now wanted to present to him just those things that I had learned, and in so doing I would confine myself to the evidence which was introduced before Judge Smith. I placed the petition or I gave it to the clerk to give to him and Judge Hanford took it and tossed it to one side and said nothing. And that is the only response, that tossing of the paper to one side is the only response that I ever had to the petition.

Q. What was the prayer of the petition, in brief?—A. Well I told him to make any order he saw fit. I asked him to. That was the words of the prayer:

> Wherefore your petitioner respectfully asks that your honor make such order in the premises as to your honor may seem fitting.

Q. Let me see that paper.—A. (The witness hands paper to Mr. McCoy.) I wish that the committee have the amended petition to reopen the estate and also that they have in their possession, that they receive at this time that petition in regard to these parties. I want you to have the petition for a double purpose. I want it especially for this purpose that it serves to acquaint Judge Hanford with certain facts that occurred before Judge Smith certain evidence which nevertheless may have been and was irrelevant and immaterial as regards the case made in the petition to reopen the estate.

Q. It was relevant in regard to his threat to disbar you, I presume?—A. It was relative to that; yes, sir. That was my second reason for offering it. Judge Hanford afterwards——

Q. (interrupting.) Just a minute, Mr. Finch; at the time when you filed this paper which you designate as a petition and in which you ask the judge to make any order he saw fit to make, had he then decided the other matter namely, the motion on the report of the referee?—A. No he had decided nothing; he had it all before him at one time. He then after getting this petition however he determined the bankruptcy matter by refusing to reopen the estate. Then he called a meeting of the King County bar. The newspapers suggested that the occasion for the meeting had to do with the Heckman & Hansen proceeding so I went.

Q. You were not invited?—A. I was not invited, no. The meeting was held in Judge Hanford's court room. At that time there were a couple, maybe 300 members of the King County bar present. Judge Hanford called the meeting to order and suggested as the reason for it that charges had been made by me against certain members of the bar and that they in turn had made charges against me, and that he deemed the matter was one for the bar association to deal with. Judge Roger Greene was then made chairman of the meeting, and he took the chair usually occupied by the court when on the bench, Judge Hanford himself taking a chair by the side of Judge Greene. Then in the meeting someone a member of the bar, Mr. Ira Bronson, offered a motion that the whole matter be referred back to Judge Hanford with the recommendation that there was not a scintilla of evidence anywhere to substantiate my charges, and no foundation for their ever having been made.

Q. Was that after discussion or after premeditation?—A. No sir; there was no word of discussion whatever. Judge Gay, that is judge since. Mr. Gay seconded the motion. The motion was put by Judge Greene before the meeting. Nothing was being said, and I suggested to the meeting that I felt I would like to talk to them, but at the same time I had such a personal interest in the matter that I felt like being urged first.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean being requested?

A. Yes, sir; requested—you can put it that way. And then I sat down. Mr. Bronson said that he—as far as he was concerned he had already heard more than he cared to about the matter, and he was ready to vote, and believed that the rest of the bar were also so minded. Judge McCafferty suggested that it might be that I had an apology to offer, and that maybe that was what I wanted to say, and that I should be heard, but others asked for the question, and it was put and carried right there in Judge Hanford's presence.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you leave that point, do you know whether any of those persons, either the mover of the motion or the seconder or the chairman or any of them had read the testimony?

A. Well, I know it; yes; but then, I do not suppose I know it in a legal way—that I know it in a legal way. That testimony is a book that thick [showing]; perhaps 5 inches thick.

Q. How many pages?—A. I think about 600 pages.

Mr. McCoy. The testimony on file in the court at that time?—A. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. Eight hundred and eighty-six pages, I think, to be correct, Mr. Finch.

The Chairman. Was there any reference to the testimony?

A. None whatever, and no desire expressed to get it or to see it. Then the bar—someone made a motion that a committee of five be appointed to see what could be done with me for making such unfounded charges, and that committee—that motion was carried, and the committee was appointed.

Q. By whom?—A. I think the chair appointed the committee. It made Mr. E. C. Hughes chairman; John Powell, L. C. Gilman, L. T. Turner, and John Arthur were the other members of the committee.

Q. Had any of them been interested in the case in any way?—A. No.

Q. Were or was any of them attorney or attorneys for any party that had been interested in the case in any way?—A. No.

Mr. Dorr. Who was the fifth one?

A. John Arthur. The committee subsequently invited me to be present on a couple of occasions, maybe three—I won't say how many—and I met them. Subsequently they made a report to the court. I won't undertake to say what is in that report, for I do not recall it. It was not served on me, and I did not have a copy of it for a year or two afterwards. I did not interest myself in it. The recommendation was made that no action be taken against me. at the same time my recollection is that they reported that my conclusions were founded on erratic and illogical reasoning, etc.

Q. What took place at those meetings of the committee?—A. The committee simply asked me what there was to the matter, and I responded. We spent two evenings that I know of, and possibly three evenings, talking.

Q. Was the testimony taken before the referee before the committee at that time?—A. Yes, I think that they asked for it; but we did not go into that. The committee—I said we did not go into it; I do not know to what extent we went into it—the committee, I felt then and I always felt, took too much of a lead in the matter. I felt then that had they not suggested by certain questions the direction in which to go when I was talking with them they would have seen things in a different light.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I think, for instance, that Mr. Hughes, who is present here now, and who was present at those meetings, is surprised at the facts about which I have testified, because we at those meetings never got so far as to take up the matters as they occurred in Judge Hanford's court. The committee guided me off into a discussion of things that occurred over in the State court; in other words, into the merits of the case, while my complaint was that Judge Hanford would not let me get to the merits of the case. If that answers your question, then I want to go on a little further.

The Chairman. Are you nearly done? If you are not, perhaps this would be as good a stopping place as any other.

A. Well, with just one more instance.

The Chairman. Very well.

A. About two or three weeks after everything was over—that is, Judge Hanford had refused to reopen the estate and the bar had completed its whitewashing—I went home one evening and I read in the Star, a newspaper published in this city, that Judge Hanford from his bench that morning had delivered an opinion in the—or something in the—Heckman-Hansen case, and had said something like this, as I recall it: That in the Heckman & Hansen matters the entire trouble—is due to a young upstart named Finch, who is either an unscrupulous scoundrel or a halfwit and incompetent. In either case he ought to be disbarred, but the court is without power in the premises because the bar has refused to act. Nevertheless, Mr. Finch can congratulate himself that he has gotten off as lightly as he has.

Subsequently I interviewed the Star reporter responsible for the article and he assured me that Judge Hanford had delivered the matter from his bench the day before and had furnished him the copy from which the report was made.

Mr. McCoy. You mean had furnished a copy of his remarks to the reporter of the Star?

A. To the reporter of the Star.

Q. That is, the judge had written it out and delivered it from the bench and when he got through he handed it to the reporter of the Star.—A. That was what was told me at the time. I had no place at the time to have a judicial determination of the matter, so I did not pursue it further, and the occurrence, even the newspaper report, I suppose, is hearsay; but the old files of the Star, I think about October, 1904, will show the report of the matter on the front page, double-columned, with large black type heading on it.

Q. Was it in any other paper so far as you know?—A. The Times referred to the matter, and the P. I. did not touch on it at all.

The Chairman. Is this a convenient place for you to stop?

The Witness. Yes.

The Chairman. You will be here to-morrow morning. You will come back here at 9.30 in the morning. The committee will now be in recess until 9.30 to-morrow morning.

Whereupon an adjournment is taken until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 9, 1912, at 9.30 o'clock a. m.

TENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, June 9, 1912—9.30 a. m.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present, as at former hearing. U. L. Finch (same witness) on the stand.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Finch, at the close of the hearing yesterday you had reached a point where you were testifying about the newspaper report of the statement in regard to you made by Judge Hanford; you may go ahead from that point and state.

A. One of the things which very much incensed Judge Hanford, when I first presented to him my petition to have the estate reopened was the fact brought to his attention that the estate had been administered by five small creditors, whose claims aggregated only $23.

Q. When you say administered you mean——A. I mean that they had taken charge of the proceedings and had carried through whatever had been done. That fact was brought to Judge Hanford's attention, and I emphasized the fact that they were trying to cover up some matters; that the only legitimate excuse that they would have in a bankruptcy proceeding would be to collect their money, and that was the one thing that they had not come to do, which was evident from their having proven their claims and spent more than the amount of them in getting a bond for a trustee and hiring an attorney to carry on matters, and then were content to have the estate declared closed without getting their money. That was one of the things that incensed Judge Hanford.

Q. Now, you say, "incensed Judge Hanford;" how do you judge that fact?—A. Judge Hanford said to me when he sent the matter to Judge Smith: "Mr. Finch, I want to know if I have a set of scoundrels practicing in my court," and from the fact that he asked the question in his chambers about the creditors, I know that that was on his mind. Now——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, you have stated, I believe, that the sending of this matter to Judge Smith, as referee, was purely on the initiative of Judge Hanford?—A. Absolutely so.

Q. That is right, is it?—A. Yes, sir; that is absolutely true.

Q. Did you make any request that he should do so, or intimate it to him in any way?—A. None. I objected to it, and his own order sending it there shows that he sent it upon his own motion.

Q. What did you state to Judge Hanford as the ground for your objection to having that course followed?—A. I suggested that the rights of my client to have the estate opened did not depend on whether or not he had, or whether or not certain officers and the attorneys of his court had acted wrongfully. I also suggested that that would be an expensive proceeding and that there was no money in the court or in the hands of my clients, because all that they had had been brought to court in the bankruptcy proceeding. Now, before he decided the matter at all, I had presented to him the petition touching upon the four attorneys whom I specifically charged.

Q. Before he decided what branch of the matter?—A. Any branch of the matter.

Q. That is at the time when your application was pending to have the case reopened?—A. Yes, sir. In that petition—and I want to make use of it, because it apprises Judge Hanford very fully of the matters which were being covered up by the action of these creditors in his court. In that petition I said—this is as the first paragraph:

That on the 16th day of July, 1903, in open court before your honor, your petitioner, as attorney for Heckman & Hansen, bankrupts, was advocating certain rights relevant to matters suggested in a certificate sent to your honor by the Hon. Eben Smith, a special referee appointed by your honor to determine certain facts in relation to a petition filed by said Heckman & Hansen to reopen their estate in bankruptcy, from which certificate it appeared that a certain witness had been duly subpœnaed to appear before said special referee and bring with him certain books in his care and under his control, and that the witness so subpœnaed appeared and failed to bring with him the said books, and the said referee being without power to deal with the situation had certified the matter to your honor. In the course of argument upon the matters brought before the court by said certificate your honor asked of petitioner, in effect, whether if he had the books he could show anything which would reflect in any way upon any parties involved in the matters under investigation before said special referee; to which inquiry petitioner replied in effect that if your honor would allow him to have the books which had been subpœnaed he would bring to you the evidence which would disbar Judge R. A. Ballinger, Gen. J. B. Metcalfe, Mr. Richard Saxe Jones, and Mr. C. A. Reynolds, officers and attorneys of your court. To which promise your honor replied in effect that the statement thus made should be made good by petitioner and that unless he did so your honor would in turn disbar him. And your honor duly made and entered an order that the books called for in said subpœna should be produced. In the course of subsequent proceedings before your special referee the books referred to were produced, and by the aid of them and from other sources petitioner has presented before said special referee the testimony and documentary evidence which he believes ought and will disbar from practice before your honor's court the parties heretofore referred to and named in the caption hereof. And that your honor may have an understanding of the matters indicated in petitioners promise as above related, he presents to your honor as an officer of your court the facts which have been brought out before said special referee and which is in the evidence submitted to him, and upon this his petition respectfully asks your honor to make such order as may to your honor seem fitting in the premises.

And then, in the end of that petition, I also stated:

Your petitioner finally alleges that in all matters and things in this petition set forth he has confined himself entirely to the matters and things which have been presented to said special referee, the Hon. Eben Smith, except in those instances wherein he has specifically alleged his belief, and in those instances he has based such belief upon the matters and things presented to said referee and which are in his record.

Then I recited to Judge Hanford the facts which I claimed had been brought out before the referee. In the first place, I called his attention to the fact that Heckman & Hansen were copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Heckman & Hansen; they were shipbuilders and until their business was wrecked and their property converted as hereinafter alleged were engaged in building and repairing seagoing vessels of all descriptions in the city of Ballard, King County, Wash. Mr. Hansen of the firm confined his attention entirely to matters and things going on in and about the yards and pertaining entirely to the labor expended about the premises. Mr. Heckman attended entirely to the office, to all the outside business, and especially to the financial affairs of the firm. In actual practice between the partners Mr. Hansen had and exercised no voice in the management of the business of the firm. But in the matters hereinafter referred to Mr. Heckman acted for and on behalf of the firm.

Mr. HIGGINS. Does that petition which you are reading from present in a succinct form all that you could say in the course of your examination with the exception of what you have testified about yesterday?

A. Well, it would—yes, sir; it does.

Mr. HIGGINS. Then I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it be printed as an exhibit.

The WITNESS. There are, however, some things that I want to call to the committee's attention specifically.

Mr. HIGGINS. I understand that, but I think if in that form it presents your testimony it ought to be printed.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be printed.

Mr. HIGGINS. We will have it marked and put in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. If you desire to call specific attention to any part of it you can do so, and you can use it for that purpose.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, in testifying, refer to it as exhibit No. 32, and at this stage let us have the other papers which you used yesterday—they might as well all go in together.

A. This is the amended petition to reopen the estate. Chronologically it should be the first one of those two.

The CHAIRMAN. Let this paper be marked as "Exhibit 32" then—that is, the amended petition to reopen the estate. This Exhibit No. 32, which is now admitted in evidence, is the amended petition filed by you on behalf of the bankrupts asking that the estate be opened; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, what is this paper, which you are now handing me?—A. That is the petition In re Ballinger et al.

The CHAIRMAN. Mark that "Exhibit No. 33," being the petition in the matter of Ballinger and others. Now, referring to Exhibit No. 33, state what you care to in regard to that.

Mr. DORR. I might ask whether the witness has yet produced the original petition.

The WITNESS. No; this is my office copy.

Mr. MCCOY. These are both true copies of the original papers, are they?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. I did not mean that point; but this is the amended petition—is this the first petition—does the amended petition contain all the allegations that were in the original petition and other allegations?

A. They do.

Q. Have you a copy of the original petition with you?—A. I do not have it and I do not possess one.

Mr. MCCOY. That is on file in court.

The WITNESS. That is on file in court.

Mr. MCCOY. If it has any significance, Mr. Dorr, then, it can be produced.

Mr. DORR. I do not understand that it would have.

Q. Now, the amended petition is a repetition of the original petition with certain additional averments; is that correct?—A. It contains one change, and only one, that I recall, and that is this: In the original petition I had alleged that the State court had sold the property of the bankrupts for a certain sum, being an inadequate sum. In my amended petition I disavow the receiver having sold the property for any sum whatever; that he had received any purchase price for it.

Mr. MCCOY. But otherwise the two petitions were the same, or were similar?

A. Otherwise they were similar, as I recall it.

Q. Now, calling attention, as you were doing, to such matters in Exhibit No. 33 as you wish to.—A. I called Judge Hanford's attention to the original controversy that had gotten Heckman & Hansen embroiled in the courts. I did it for the purpose of showing to him that while their property had been tied up, had been taken away from them in a way, yet they never had had anywhere a trial on any of the matters, or a judgment rendered against them. I could not make it clear to him. I could not to the committee unless I recited the original controversy that occurred between them and the Scandinavian-American Bank. Mr. Heckman claimed to me, and in the evidence, that he had gone to the bank to get a loan of $5,000 in company with Judge Ballinger.

Mr. MCCOY. We do not know who Judge Ballinger is.

A. Judge Ballinger at that time was Mr. Heckman's attorney.

Q. What is his full name?—A. Judge Richard A. Ballinger. That the bank had agreed to loan the $5,000 for a period of five years, payable $1,000 a year. That having agreed upon the loan, Mr. Heckman had made to Judge Ballinger a power of attorney empowering him to consummate the arrangement; that afterwards it developed that Judge Ballinger had given him, instead of a note for five years payable at $1,000 a year, a note for $5,000 payable in 90 days, and in addition had given a mortgage upon the firm's plant to secure the note.

Q. Was the power of attorney broad enough to permit the giving of a mortgage?—A. In the evidence that matter was controverted. Mr. Heckman said that it was not, and denied that the power produced was the power that he executed; that is my recollection of the evidence.

Q. At any rate, the mortgage was given?—A. At any rate, the mortgage was given. About a month after the discovery of the fact that the note was given for $5,000 payable in 90 days, and Mr. Heckman claimed to have discovered that when the bank notified him that the note was due. Before I mention that, I wish to say that Mr. Heckman claimed to have taken the matter up immediately with Judge Ballinger, and Judge Ballinger suggested that he would get the matter attended to and fixed up as originally agreed upon. About a month after that a certain boat, the schooner Alice, was brought to the shipbuilding plant to be repaired.

Q. Which shipbuilding plant?—A. The shipbuilding plant of Heckman & Hansen. The boat was in the hands of a trustee, a man named William Calhoun. The Scandinavian-American Bank had a mortgage on the boat for $20,000, and a representative of the bank, Mr. Grondahl, had come to the yard and with Mr. Calhoun and in the presence of Judge Ballinger had made an arrangement to have the boat repaired.

Q. By Heckman & Hansen?—A. By Heckman & Hansen. The arrangement relative to paying for the repairs had been that Heckman & Hansen were to draw each day upon the Scandinavian-American Bank for their pay as the work progressed. Mr. Heckman claimed afterwards, in the evidence, that when he had drawn from the bank about $6,000 on this account the bank notified him to come in and care for their overdraft of some $6,000 before noon of the next day; and he went in there to see about it and they claimed—the bank claimed—that that money was an overdraft, and he claimed that it was payment far repairs on this boat.

Mr. DORR. May I interrupt to ask whether the witness is testifying from personal knowledge or what these parties told him?

The WITNESS. I am testifying as to the matters which I represented to Judge Hanford in this petition solely.

Mr. MCCOY. Right there, I will ask you what has become of Mr. Heckman and Mr. Hansen?

A. Mr. Heckman is dead; Mr. Hansen is feeble-minded or insane.

Q. All right; you may go ahead.—A. Because of those two disputes, and because of the fact that Judge Ballinger, when Mr. Heckman took it up with him, then advised him that the bank had conferred with him, Ballinger, about the matter, and that he was their attorney, and would have to look after their side of it. Mr. Heckman went and employed Metcalfe & Jurey as his attorneys.

Q. You might give the full names of that firm.—A. James B. Metcalfe and John S. Jurey. Then I advised the court that Mr. Metcalfe took the first action; that he had libeled the schooner Alice for this $6,000; that as soon as he had taken that action, and within three or four days afterwards there had been brought against Heckman & Hansen by the Scandinavian-American Bank, through Judge Ballinger, about three or four other suits, one of them being upon this overdraft alleged, and in which the bank, through Judge Ballinger, had garnisheed all of the available funds of the concern of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Where were those funds?—A. There were several; two or three debtors of the firm of Heckman & Hansen, whose names I do not now recall, that were garnisheed.

Q. In regard to R. A. Ballinger's knowledge of the existence of those debts; was that obtained through his having been attorney for Heckman & Hansen?—A. That was the allegation of the petition; yes, sir.

Q. Then a suit was brought?—A. Then a suit was brought by one William M. Curtis upon an alleged account stated in the sum of $1.500, and in that suit a receiver was appointed by the court. That receiver then——

Q. (Interrupting). Now, just a minute there. What was the allegation, in what ever paper was served, the complaint or whatever you call it, which warranted or purported to warrant the appointment of a receiver; what was the basis of the receivership?—A. The basis of the receivership was stated to be the wanton course of the Scandinavian-American Bank in suing—in embroiling Heckman & Hansen in legal controversies, and the allegation was made that unless a receiver was appointed and the estate conserved it would be lost.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you [addressing somebody in the audience] kindly remove that camera from the room and keep it out?

Mr. MCCOY. Now, all right; proceed.

A. (Continuing). A showing was also made, I think it was in the complaint; perhaps it was not; maybe it was in the first report of the receiver—that the assets of the concern were four times in excess of their liabilities.

Q. Did you claim, or was it ever claimed, that there was any collusion on the part of the Curtis concern in bringing this suit—was there ever any testimony given looking to proof of that fact?—A. It was charged by my opponent that that was in fact a friendly suit, and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Heckman himself had supported the application with an affidavit, setting forth the facts complained of.

Q. So that, as a matter of fact, it was claimed that the suit was in the interests of your clients rather than adverse?—A. Exactly, exactly; and I do not think it can be construed otherwise. Now, if I were to pursue my own course, I would take up the allegations that are contained in this petition. I do not know whether you meant a moment ago by your ruling that I should not do that; that you would simply take——

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all.

Mr. MCCOY. I think the chairman meant, at any rate that would be my opinion, that you might pursue whatever course will best bring the matter before the committee in the briefest way, so as to fully bring out all the matters you wish to.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Higgins thought, and the committee's thought, was that the petition should go in consecutively in one place; but you can go on and make such explanations or comments as you wish.

A. The order of the superior court appointing Peter L. Larson as receiver in that case contained instructions to him to take possession of the properties of the firm and manage the same and carry on and operate the business, and pursuant to that the receiver took full possession of all the property of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Was there any authority in the order permitting the sale of the property?—A. Not at that time.

Q. In his order of appointment, I mean.—A. No; it contemplated that he was to go on and manage the property. The libeling of the Alice occurred on the 15th of June. It was in July following that those various suits were begun.

Q. By the Scandinavian Bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what year?—A. I think that was 1901. I call your attention to these dates at this time because in Judge Smith's report he suggests that Metcalfe & Jurey's sole object and all that they could do in the interests of Heckman & Hansen was to take some dilatory steps and gain time. I call attention to the fact that instead of that being the case, they took the first step themselves, and the further fact that in the summer months of July and August our courts here, our State courts, are not in session. A demurrer would operate to hold up any proceedings until the following September unless it was some matter that required immediate action.

Q. I do not think I get the connection of that remark; are you now referring to the suit in which the Alice was libeled?—A. Yes, and to the suits brought in the State court.

Q. But the Alice, of course, was not libeled in the State court; it was libeled in the Federal court.—A. In the Federal court.

Q. Now, who was it that took the first step which you mentioned?—A. Gen. Metcalfe and the firm of Metcalfe & Jurey.

Q. In libeling the Alice?—A. In libeling the Alice.

Q. What was the connection of your remark about the courts not being in session and the demurrer being sufficient to hold a case up until September?—A. I had—before Judge Smith—I had made some complaints relative to the method in which Gen. Metcalfe had acted in the proceedings, and Judge Smith's report was that Gen. Metcalfe's sole object and all that he could possibly do for the firm was to put in some dilatory tactics—put in demurrers and motions and the like and gain a little time for them.

Q. Well, did he do that?—A. He did put in a demurrer, yes, sir.

Q. What was the suit in the State court?—A. To some of them, I do not know that he did in the receivership proceedings, I don't think he did.

Q. All right; go ahead.—A. Then, in the petition I called Judge Hanford's attention to the method in which those various cases were gotten rid of. They were practically stipulated out of court. The details I will pass over.

Q. You mean the other cases in the State court in connection with the receivership proceedings and the suit by the Scandinavian-American Bank?—A. Yes, and also the Alice matter in the Federal court.

Q. Does that petition show the outcome of the libel suit?—A. It does.

Q. I just want to know the fact; you do not need to read it.—A. It does. I then set out that the receiver in the State court had gone to that court and got an order of sale and disposed of Heckman & Hansen's property.

Q. Who acted as his attorney on that?—A. Richard Saxe Jones. While that matter was pending, before the sale, Mr. Heckman went and employed C. A. Reynolds to supplant Gen. Metcalfe. Mr. Reynolds then came into Judge Hanford's court with a petition in bankruptcy asking that his clients be adjudged bankrupts. He got an order of adjudication in bankruptcy and he also obtained a restraining order directed at the State court, restraining it from proceeding further. His application for the order made some charges of fraud, not, however, specifically, as I remember it. I remember reading it and that was served on the State court and held up the proceedings over there.

Q. When you say it was served on the State court, do you mean it was served on the receiver?—A. I do not know who it was served on, except that it was made effective; that is all I know. Then I alleged in this petition Judge Ballinger and Richard Saxe Jones came into Judge Hanford's court and in their moving papers suggested that they appeared specially and to apprise the court that he was proceeding under a misapprehension of the facts. They did not state what the facts were, but they got an order from Judge Hanford making a reference to United States Commissioner Bowman to take testimony to see whether the State court was getting an adequate price for the property and whether a better price could be obtained in bankruptcy. Proceedings were had before Commissioner Bowman and ultimated in the Federal court taking off its restraining order against the State court. I alleged in this petition that at that time it appeared from the evidence before Judge Smith that the attorney for the bankrupts in his court——

Q. Whom?—A. Mr. Reynolds had already received from the bonding company on the bond of the receiver in the State court $100.

Q. As a fee, you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. As the attorney?—A. Yes; and he had also received from the Scandinavian-American Bank the sum of $150.

Q. Those facts were proved later on, were they?—A. They had already been proved.

Q. They had already been proved?—A. They had already been proved.

Q. In the hearing before Judge Smith?—A. This allegation had been made in this petition and I had confined myself to the evidence before Judge Smith, as I specifically told Judge Hanford.

Q. Was that fact disputed in any way?—A. The receiving of the money was not disputed; the excuse was offered——

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. Reynolds; that the bank had paid the money as a contribution to be given to Mr. Hansen, for whom the bank felt sympathy on account of his affliction, and Mr. Reynolds said that he had the money and that we could have it any time that we had a mind to come and get it.

Q. Did he claim that the entire $250 had been given for that purpose, or for some part of it?—A. The $150 was all that he got from the bank, and that the whole of that sum had been given for that purpose.

Q. Did he claim he had ever tendered it to your clients in any way or tried to get them to take it?—A. No. Then I suggested to Judge Hanford that in the State court the receiver had received no money whatever for the property, but that on the day he was discharged he was paid $2,000 by the Scandinavian-American Bank. I also suggested to him that the way that the State court had—the way the record in the State court had been fixed up was by some of the parties—I don't know that I alleged whom—went into the State court and obtained an order of distribution of the money and when they had obtained that money they paid into court with one hand twenty thousand and some odd dollars and took out the greater portion of it at the same time with the other hand.

Q. Took it out for alleged creditors?—A. Upon claims of their own that they had proven.

Q. Now right there; in regular receivership proceedings in the State courts in Washington what is the practice in regard to ascertaining who are creditors?—A. I do not know what the practice is. In this case there was no action taken by the court. No one could examine the record of the State court and determine who the creditors were. I think that that is the only receivership proceeding that I have had to do with in the State court.

Q. And you do not know whether it is the practice to require a receiver to advertise for claims?—A. I think that it is. I do not know whether he did that in this instance or not. It is not made a part of this petition and I do not recall it.

Q. All right, go ahead—at any rate, the record in the State court does not show that any advertising was done for creditors.—A. No; I can not say that. I do not know. You are asking me something that is outside of this petition and I do not happen to recall it now, if I ever knew it.

Q. All right.—A. I also stated to Judge Hanford that out of the amount that the bank had paid the receiver when he was discharged, the receiver had paid the debts of the receivership and had given a certain amount of the remaining to his attorney, Richard Saxe Jones.

Q. Were all those facts proved before Judge Smith?—A. Yes.

Q. Without controversy?—A. Yes; the payment of the money—it was never suggested had not been made—the written evidence—I had of it——

Q. In other words, those facts were proved and not disputed.—A. They were proved and not disputed, the payment of the money.

Mr. Hughes. For my own information and that the record may be clear, when the witness said "I suggested so and so to Judge Hanford" I want to ask him whether he made that suggestion orally or whether he is now stating that the suggestions were those contained in the petition?

Mr. McCoy. He has already stated they———

The Witness. (Interrupting.) I am confining myself to the petition and I want to be so understood.

Mr. McCoy. (Continuing.) That he is confining himself to what he stated in the petition, and he is simply summarizing it in a way for our benefit.

The WITNESS. I am not giving any evidence of anything, Mr. Hughes, outside of what is contained in this petition, and I do not pretend to.

Mr. McCOY. Proceed.

A. (Referring to the petition.) There are a great many further allegations contained in this petition which I think is interesting to the committee, but I think they are made as succinctly in the petition as I could make them on the stand and for my purposes I think that I have called attention to as many as I care to at this time, although I would like to have the committee inform itself as to everything that is contained in the petition. I think a great many of the questions which you might want to ask later, perhaps, will be found answered in that petition.

I want to say this now, that I made it, I think, very plain, and I think the petition will bear me out, what it was that the creditors in Judge Hanford's court—this little handful of five creditors, were interested in covering up. I showed, too, that the net result of the manipulation had been this, that Heckman & Hansen, who had an estate of $60,000, had been despoiled of that estate, and that it was not due to any financial difficulties at all; that when they were enbroiled in the courts as they were, they were making $2,000 net per month, and that they never had any bills presented to them by their creditors that were not paid promptly; that they were a going concern and in the best of condition; that they had lost all of that property and at the same time they never had had a trial on any action anywhere, or any judgment rendered against them.

Q. Nor any lien claimed against them in any action pending in the State court?—A. There had been liens claimed; that is one of the suits of the bank had been to forclose.

Q. That was subsequent, however, to the receivership proceeding?—A. No, it was a few days before; they had brought a suit to foreclose this $5,000 mortgage given under the circumstances that I have just related.

Q. That was not involved in the receivership proceeding?—A. That was not involved in the receivership proceeding and was not proven there as a claim.

Q. In other words, as I understand you, the suit of Curtis on this account stated never resulted in a judgment?—A. No.

Q. And there never was any judgment in any matter involved in the receivership proceedings in the State court?—A. That is true.

Q. Therefore, in the State court there was no one who claimed a lien on any of the properties of your clients in so far as the receivership was concerned?—A. That is true.

Q. And that, without any adjudication of any kind or description in favor of any creditor, their property was sold out in the State court; that they never got a cent out of it except so far as it may have been used to pay creditors and in the bankruptcy court no creditor ever got a cent out of it; is that substantially it?—A. Yes, sir; that there was no money—I don't know that I just catch your question, Mr. McCoy.

(Question repeated to the witness.)

A. Let me answer it this way. In the State court the receiver was discharged showing that he had about $20,000 in his possession.

Later on the record was straightened, I think by Mr. Mayhew, the purchaser of the property, getting an order of distribution, as he called it, and receiving about sixteen or seventeen thousand dollars.

Q. In payment of claims of creditors which he had purchased or acquired control of?—A. Which he had purchased; yes, sir; and the balance of the money was taken out by other creditors.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the aggregate amount of the claims of the five petitioning creditors?

A. $23.

Q. $23?—A. $23.

Mr. MCCOY. That is the creditors who were petitioning or who did petition to have the estate declared closed.

A. Yes, sir; they were law clerks, for the most part, in Judge Ballinger's office.

Q. They were what?—A. Law clerks in Judge Ballinger's office—the petition sets out their identity.

Q. Were they original creditors or creditors by assignment?—A. No—by assignment [referring to petition].

Q. I wish you would name them.—A. One was A. J. Tennant, at that time a clerk in Judge Ballinger's office; he was afterwards his partner; he was a creditor for $4.73; F. A. Brightman, a clerk in Judge Ballinger's office, $7.10; John Larrabee, a clerk in Judge Ballinger's office, $5.25; D. C. Conover, a former clerk in Judge Ballinger's office, $2.50; Charles W. Russell, a bookkeeper in Mr. Mayhew's office, $3.55. Those were the creditors that came into Judge Hanford's court.

Q. And moved to close the estate?—A. Yes.

Q. The net result to Heckman & Hansen was, whereas they started in being solvent they came out without anything.—A. Yes, sir; and without getting any trial or ever getting so far as an answer in any of their cases.

Q. Have you finished you statement now as far as you care to make it?—A. Why, I think so.

Q. In testimony yesterday you read, as I remember it, a notice of motion, one branch of which was that you be disbarred? What was the other relief asked for by that notice?—A. That the report of Special Referee Judge Smith recommending that the estate be not reopened be confirmed.

Q. Now, did you ever hear before of a joinder of two such proceedings?—A. I never did; it was a novelty to me.

Q. Did you ever know of any attorney anywhere in a civilized country who ever heard of such a thing?—A. I never did.

Q. What is the regular method of disbarment proceedings, if there is any regular method in Washington?—A. There is no regular method; it is an informal matter which can be taken up most anyway; I understand now that the Seattle Bar Association have a special committee to whom such matters are delegated, but that is an association formed since these matters occurred. I understand, from newspaper reports, that it was formed because of the fact that things were so rotten in the King County bar that some of the bar felt they did not want to associate with some of the others and they wanted a special association. That is my understanding of the reason as it was given in the press at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Has any court other than the supreme court of the State the power to disbar an attorney in Washington?—A. They do it.

Q. Well, they might deprive him of the right to practice in that particular court, but his license would remain good elsewhere, wouldn't it?—A. I am not informed about that.

Q. The license issues from the supreme court.—A. Exactly.

Q. And what other court would have the power to revoke that license?—A. I do not know, but I have observed that proceedings have been instituted in our superior court by the Seattle Bar Association.

Q. The superior court might, I take it, for a reasonable time suspend an attorney from practicing in its court, but its jurisdiction would not extend beyond his own court, would it?—A. I think I would subscribe to that, but I never looked up the authority.

Mr. MCCOY. A Federal judge would have power on a proper showing, perhaps, to not disbar, but to suspend an attorney who had been admitted to practice in his court.—A. I have not any doubt of it.

Q. Without that having any effect on his original admission to practice in the State court; well, while that would be so, of course the State court could not control the practice in Federal courts, but now I want to ask you another question. Either before or after the appointment of this committee of the bar association have you known of any cases where an attorney accused of malpractice or other objectionable things has been tried in any way for or upon the charges for the purpose of determining whether or not he should be disbarred?—A. Yes, I have observed the newspaper reports; I have never taken any interest in the proceedings and I never have been present, but I am quite sure that the Seattle State Bar Association have instituted proceedings and have taken and tried them in King County.

Q. The committee of the bar association makes the original investigation?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that how it's done?—A. Yes.

Q. And then they report to the court that there is sufficient ground for proceeding in the matter.—A. I do not think they report to the court. I think they—if they are satisfied that there are grounds—they bring an action before the court upon their own motion. I do not want to—I am only giving my opinion of that, however. I think there are others here who can advise you fully.

Q. Have you ever held any official position in the city of Seattle, Mr. Finch?—A. I was deputy prosecuting attorney for one year.

Q. That is a county office?—A. Yes, sir, it is a county office.

Q. And the appointment is given how?—A. The appointment is coming from the prosecutor himself.

Q. You had yesterday a pamphlet which you read from; will you let me see that, please? [Witness hands pamphlet to Mr. McCoy.] This pamphlet is a petition for review pending in the United States circuit court of appeals in the matter of Heckman & Hansen; what aspect of the matter got into the circuit court of appeals?—A. I petitioned the circuit court of appeals to review the proceedings had before Judge Hanford. It is a special proceeding granted by the bankruptcy act itself. It is rather a peculiar one, too, I think. I never met with anything just like it. The petition is one that the law contemplates may be answered or pleaded to or demurred to; it is a novelty to me.

Q. Without going into that, what was the object of your petition and what did it bring into the circuit court of appeals for review?—A. It took down there so much of the record as I could take.

Q. In what branch of the proceedings?—A. Just the matter of law.

Q. What was it you sought to have reviewed; what action of Judge Hanford?—A. His refusal to reopen the estate.

Q. What happened?—A. They denied the application.

Q. On what grounds?—A. On the grounds that the superior court, I believe, had jurisdiction in the matter, or something of that sort, to sell the property. They laid down this law that where one court—one of two courts of concurrent jurisdiction first takes cognizance of a case it may proceed to the end. There was no question raised as to that law being a law. I had always conceded it, but the point I had tried to make was that the State court was proceeding without having any liens before it to foreclose or having anything more than the mere naked legal possession of the property; but the way the matter—from the way the matter had been handled in this court I could not make that point before the circuit court of appeals; when I presented my petition I set that out very plainly, but Judge Hanford made a reference on that petition and it got before Judge Smith, and the evidence which was taken grew to about 800 pages of typewritten copy, and I was unable to get that before the circuit court of appeals.

Q. Now, you were unable, you mean, for the lack of money to pay for it?—A. For the lack of money to pay for it, yes. I am also doubtful if I could take up the facts anyway; I think that the law is all that could be taken up on a petition to review; but I could not get the facts as I stated them in this court, so that I could get a square opinion from the circuit court of appeals.

Q. Did you apply for a certificate of facts?—A. No, I did not; I simply took down each and every paper that had been filed in Judge Hanford's court and certified properly, of course, and a copy of the minutes of his record.

Q. Did the circuit court of appeals hand down an opinion?—A. They did.

Q. Have you any idea where it is reported?—A. I can readily find it for you.

Mr. Dorr. I will hand it to your honor.

Mr. McCoy. Just give the citation, please, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr. One hundred and forty Federal, at page 859, the case is entitled "In re Heckman et al."

Mr. McCoy. Can I see it, please? [Mr. Dorr hands the volume of reports to Mr. McCoy.]

The Chairman. The opinion cited starts out by saying "An order will be entered striking from the records the addendum to the petitioner's brief." What was this addendum?

A. In my brief, at the end, I addressed myself personally to the court; to the circuit court of appeals, in which I set out the facts that I had related to Judge Hanford and suggested to the circuit court of appeals that if they had any old-fashioned notions akin to mine as to what should be done under those circumstances and cared to look into it I would devote my time to showing those facts to them, and they struck it out.

Mr. HUGHES. They were also uncivilized?

Mr. McCOY. Let me see that pamphlet again.

The WITNESS. You may have it if you wish.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion is so very brief that it will save others the trouble of looking it up if it were inserted in the record, and it may go in at this point.

Whereupon the decision cited is copied into the record as follows:

In re Heckman. Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, October 23, 1905. No. 1166.

BANKRUPTCY—JURISDICTION OF COURT—PROPERTY IN POSSESSION OF STATE COURT.

A court of bankruptcy can not administer upon property of a bankrupt which at the time of the filing of the petition was in the actual possession of a receiver appointed by a State court more than four months previously, and which was subsequently sold by order of the State court in the same proceeding.

Petition for revision of proceedings of the District Court of the United States for the Northern Division of the District of Washington, in bankruptcy.

Jerold Landon Finch, for petitioners.

R. A. Ballinger, J. F. Ronald, and Alfred Battle, for respondent.

Before Gilbert, Ross, and Morrow, circuit judges.

Ross, circuit judge. An order will be entered striking from the records the addendum to the petitioners' brief. The petition is an original proceeding in this court to obtain the review and revision, pursuant to the provisions of section 24b of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3422), of the action of the district court for the State of Washington in refusing to reopen the estate of the bankrupts and administer upon property of theirs which, according to the record before us, was in the actual possession of a receiver appointed by the superior court of the county of King, State of Washington, in a suit brought by a creditor of Heckman & Hansen more than four months before they filed their petition in the court below to be adjudged bankrupts, under process of which State court the property the petitioners now seek to have the court of bankruptcy undertake to administer was sold and disposed of. That this can not be done is conclusively settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases of Pickens v. Roy, 187 U. S. 177, 23 Sup. Ct. 78, 47 L. Ed. 128, and Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 47 L. Ed. 122. See also Frazier et al v. Southern Loan & Trust Co., 99 Fed. 707, 40 C. C. A. 76; In re Price (D.C. 92 Fed. 987.

Proceedings dismissed at the petitioners' cost.

Mr. McCOY. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that as to this record in the circuit court of appeals, it should be introduced—is this a brief?

A. That is a brief on my petition.

Mr. McCOY. Well, never mind it then.

The WITNESS. It also contains the addendum which they struck.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with Mr. Finch, Mr. McCoy?

Mr. McCOY. No, I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Finch, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Finch, when did you first come into the Heckman & Hansen litigation?

A. The day the State court was about to dispose of its property—of the property of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. You mean the day that the sale was about to be consummated?—A. Yes.

Q. After the order of sale had been made?—A. My recollection is that the order of sale and the confirmation was all one order.

Q. Well, was it about the time the sale was to be effected that you came into it?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you appear in the State court?—A. I did.

Q. What did you do over there?

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute; in order that we may get it into the record, what do you mean by saying that the order of sale and the confirmation were all one or both one?

A. I mean just that. My recollection is that the sale and the order confirming the sale was one and the same order.

Mr. Hughes. Don't you think, Mr. McCoy——

The Witness (continuing). I am not quite sure of that, but I think that also it contained the order discharging the receiver—I am not sure about that.

Mr. McCoy. Is that order in court?

Mr. Hughes. Don't you think, Mr. McCoy, if that is deemed material, that you should not speculate upon memory about a thing of importance when the witness's memory is so mixed; of course it seems to me absurd that the order and the confirmation of sale could be one and the same document, but the record itself, if there is any such in existence, should speak instead of his memory.

Mr. McCoy. Well, we heard yesterday of a citation dated 11 o'clock in the morning was made returnable at 10 o'clock the same morning. Now, it may be that things go that way in the State of Washington, I don't know.

Mr. Hughes. The record should speak, however, as to these matters.

Mr. McCoy. Surely, if anyone has it here we might have it.

Mr. Hughes. It can be obtained easily.

Mr. Dorr. I have the record all right, but I did not wish to interrupt the witness.

The Chairman. It will all come out in due course—proceed.

Mr. Dorr Are you quite through, Mr. McCoy?

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. What did you do in the State court, Mr. Finch?

A. I suggested the fact that the firm had been adjudicated bankrupts.

Q. In the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you file any written appearance over in the State court?—A I don't think so.

Q. Who were you acting for?—A. Heckman & Hansen.

Q. You mean to say as a friend of the court you volunteered this information?—A. No; not at all.

Q. Well?—A. I was acting for Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Were you acting as a party to that litigation?—A. Why, yes.

Q. By any pleading or paper?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, what was that?—A. Why, I think it was denominated a motion to stay proceedings.

Q. Which you filed in the State court?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you did enter an appearance there?—A. Oh, certainly; I thought you meant a formal entering of an appearance.

Q. I want to know if you got into that case as an attorney of record?—A. Well, that was the place.

Q. That was the first connection you had with any phase of this litigation?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, it was a fact at that time that Heckman & Hansen had filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the Federal court?—A. It was a fact; yes.

Q. Did you have anything to do with that?—A. I did not.

Q. How did that come to your attention?—A. My clients informed me of it.

Q. That they had filed a voluntary petition?—A. Yes.

Q. In the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. And had been adjudicated bankrupts?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, did they employ you?—A. They did.

Q. At that stage of the proceedings?—A. They did.

Q. To supersede those other attorneys?—A. They did.

Q. Were the other attorneys then dismissed from the case?—A. No, sir; I want to see whether I can answer your question or not. I don't know. In all the subsequent proceedings I had to contend with both Metcalfe & Jurey and Mr. Reynolds, although they did not pretend that they were acting for Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Well, they were, were they not, the attorneys of record for Heckman & Hansen?—A. I don't think Gen. Metcalfe was, because Mr. Reynolds had been employed to supersede him.

Q. Well, the firm of Metcalfe & Jurey were the attorneys of record for Heckman & Hansen, were they not?—A. They were at the inception, and I don't know whether——

Q. Do you know——

Mr. McCoy. Finish your answer.

A. I don't know whether Mr. Reynolds was employed to supersede them; he made no record of the matter, or he simply took charge of the proceedings from them on.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether Metcalfe & Jurey ever retired from this case?—A. No; I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Reynolds ever retired from his representation in court of Heckman & Hansen?—A. I know in subsequent proceedings I took charge of them and that he was not there.

Q. Well, did he withdraw from the case formally, or did you simply come in the case as an additional counsel and do the work?—A. Well, I came into the case to take charge of them and merely supplanted him, as a matter of fact, without a formal order, if that is what you mean.

Q. There was no change on the record?—A. In the State court?

Q. In the State court, sir?—A. No; only in this. Some orders taken in the State court showed Mr. Reynolds as the attorney for the bonding company.

Q. I have not reached that phase of it yet; I am asking about the representation of Heckman & Hansen.—A. Well, I have answered you just as well as I can. There was no formal order of substitution made there.

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, you testified very clearly on yesterday that in these proceedings in the bankruptcy court you did not know who Gen. Metcalfe and Mr. Reynolds were representing, and I want you to state now whether you insist upon that answer or whether you wish to modify it.

Mr. McCoy. Just a moment. I just call your attention to the fact, Mr. Dorr, that my recollection of the testimony is not so.

The CHAIRMAN. First ask the witness what he did testify to, rather than stating it as a fact.

Mr. DORR. What did you testify to yesterday as to those various attorneys and their respective relations to the litigation before Judge Hanford?—A. I said that in these proceedings before Judge Smith I did not know who they represented.

Q. Well, now, do you wish to adhere to that answer, or to modify it, since I have called your attention to the fact that these gentlemen were the representatives of Heckman & Hansen in the State court?—A. I adhere to what I said yesterday.

Q. Who were the attorneys for Heckman & Hansen in the bankruptcy proceedings?—A. C. A. Reynolds, before I supplanted him.

Q. In the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. Was his name ever withdrawn as an attorney of record for Heckman & Hansen in the Federal court?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you know?—A. That is my best recollection, that he was.

Q. And you still insist that at the time of these proceedings before Judge Eben Smith, master in chancery, you did not know the relations of Mr. Reynolds or Mr. Metcalfe or his law partner, Mr. Jurey, to the Heckman & Hansen litigation?—A. I don't say that.

Q. Well, what is the fact about it; did you or didn't you?—A. I did not know whom they represented when they got down before Judge Smith, or what they claimed their position was in that case.

Q. You knew that they had been personally attacked in your original and amended petition, didn't you, before Judge Hanford?—A. I think not.

Q. You think not?—A. I think not. I think that in the original petition Judge Ballinger was not mentioned. I think Mr. Metcalfe was not mentioned.

Q. Do you mean to state to this committee that in the original petition you did not make a wholesale charge of fraud against the Scandinavian-American Bank and its attorneys and against the superior court and its receiver and the receiver's attorney and the attorneys of Heckman & Hansen that had preceded you?—A. I mean to say this, that I certainly made charges of fraud in that petition and I charged the Scandinavian-American Bank and the receiver in the State court with collusion. I do not think at the present time that I named Gen. Metcalfe or Ballinger—Judge Ballinger.

Q. What do you mean in your statement in open court about Judge Ballinger, which you have testified about at this hearing, that if you were given these books of the Scandinavian-American Bank you would produce evidence that would be sufficient to disbar Gen. Metcalfe, R. A. Ballinger, Richard Saxe Jones, and C. A. Reynolds?—A. You mean that question in connection with your other one?

Q. Yes.—A. I mean this, that after I got down there before Judge Smith I learned of a whole lot of facts that I never suspicioned before.

Mr. MCCOY. Tell what they were before you get through with your answer.

A. I learned, for instance, of the payment that had been made to Mr. Reynolds of the $150 by the Scandinavian-American Bank, and of the $100 that had been paid him by the bonding company; I also learned of certain moneys that Metcalfe & Jurey got that I never had heard of before.

Q. And you wish to insist upon your answer that in the petition which you filed originally in Judge Hanford's court you did not make a general wholesale charge of fraud.

Mr. McCoy. Now, just a minute; if the petition is in court I suggest that it be handed to the witness and let him answer as to what he said.

Mr. Dorr. I think you have it, Mr. McCoy, or it is on the reporters' table.

Mr. McCoy. Then the petition speaks for itself.

The Chairman. Is this it?

The Witness. No; the original petition I did not have and do not have, nor a copy of it.

Mr. Dorr. This one which has been introduced as Exhibit No. 33 purports to be the original petition.

A. No.

The Chairman. That is the amended petition?

The Witness. That is the original petition relative to Ballinger, where I told the court what I had found.

Mr. Dorr. Where is the other?

Mr. McCoy. Here it is [showing].

The Witness. You do not have it Mr. Dorr, here, unless you have it some place the petition to which that is an amendment.

Mr. Dorr. We will just take this one.

Mr. McCoy. What are you handing him now?

Mr. Dorr. The amended petition. I will ask you to begin with paragraph 5 and read forward to paragraph 11.

The Chairman. Is this the original petition which the witness now has?

Mr. Dorr. It is the one which the witness produced.

The Witness. No, sir, it is the amended.

Mr. McCoy. Refer to it by the exhibit number and then we will not get it confused; what is the number on the face of it—on the front of it—is it not marked as an exhibit on the face?

A. Thirty-two.

Q. Then you are reading now from Exhibit No. 32?—A. Yes, sir, the amended petition. I am quite familiar with these paragraphs.

Mr. Dorr. Do you say, being familiar with them, that they do not contain the charge of a general conspiracy?

A. No, I do not say anything of the sort.

Q. You say they do?—A. Why certainly.

Q. Sir?—A. Why, certainly.

Q. And naming the Scandinavian-American Bank and its officers, Richard A. Ballinger, J. T. Ronald, and Alfred Battle, its attorneys, J. B. Metcalfe, John S. Jurey, C. A. Reynolds, who at different stages of the proceedings represented Heckman & Hansen; John P. Hoyt, the referee in bankruptcy in Seattle; Warren A. Worden, the referee in bankruptcy in Tacoma; A. C. Bowman, special referee appointed in the Heckman & Hansen litigation by Judge Hanford at one of the preliminary hearings; Peter L. Larson, the receiver of the superior court; Richard Saxe Jones, the attorney of said receiver; E. F. Fisher, trustee in bankruptcy; and the law firm of Gray & Tait, attorneys of said trustee?—A. They do not name one of them except the bank.

Q. Doesn't it by reference then?—A. I don't think it does. You are reading from Judge Hanford's opinoin and I would be glad to have you take it and see if it does.

Q. I am asking you the question.—A. No; it does not.

Q. It does not?—A. It does not. I would be glad to have anyone see if it does, too.

Mr. DORR. That is what I want to have them do.

Mr. MCCOY. What page in Judge Hanford's opinion are you reading from, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. Page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr or Mr. Finch; was there any other information before the court which justified the citation or reference in the opinion to the names which Mr. Dorr has read?

The WITNESS. No; not in the connection that Judge Hanford uses it there. Judge Hanford in that is trying to explain why he made the reference to Judge Smith and he charges that I charged all those people, which is not true.

Q. If you know, where did Judge Hanford get the names which are recited in his opinion and now read by Mr. Dorr?—A. Later; later, after we had been before Judge Smith and when I came back to Judge Hanford after he had made his reference down there, I had charged certain of the persons and I have named them, but he, he has included a wholesale list of names there as though I had charged them, and I had not done anything of the sort; and even to this day—take Judge Worden, for instance.

Q. What I want to get at is this: If you know, how did Judge Hanford get those names; from the record or from any evidence then before him, or did he draw upon his private information for them, or how did he get them?—A. Judge Hanford apparently has put in there the name of everybody that was in any way connected with this case and says that I charged them with some specific allegation of fraud. Take Judge Worden, of Tacoma; there is not any excuse for his name being in there.

Mr. MCCOY. You mean that that is an absolute fabrication, so far as you are concerned; so far as you and your charges are concerned?

A. If you will let me read it I will tell you what is a fabrication.

Mr. DORR. I would like to proceed with the cross-examination first and then I will hand it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not quite a cross-examination; it is just a further examination.

Mr. DORR. A further examination.

The CHAIRMAN. We have no cross-examination.

Mr. DORR. Further examination—I stand corrected.

Q. I refer to paragraph 10 of your petition, which reads as follows:

> Your petitioners further represent that at the instance of your petitioners a subsequent reference of the matter of these bankruptcy proceedings pertaining was made to the Hon. Warren A. Worden, referee of this court, residing at Tacoma, without the said district, and the adjourned meeting of said first meeting of creditors for the purpose of proving claims and electing a trustee was held before the said Hon. Warren A. Worden on the 28th day of May, 1902.

Now, is not Mr. Warren A. Worden's name mentioned here?—A. It is not in what you told me to refer to—no sir; you told me to refer to paragraph 10.

Q. I am reading from paragraph 10 of the original petition, which you told me, without examining your copy, was the same as the amended petition with one slight exception which you explained.—A. I do not have it before me; I have the amended petition, and that is a different paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Possibly the paragraphing was changed in the amended petition.

Mr. DORR. Well, is that allegation in your amended petition?

A. I can not recall the paragraphing. Paragraph 11 has an allegation in which the Hon. Warren A. Worden is named.

Mr. McCOY. Read it.

A. [Reading:]

Your petitioners further represent that at the instance of your petitioners a subsequent reference of the matters to these bankruptcy proceedings pertaining was made to the Hon. Warren A. Worden, a referee of this court residing at Tacoma, without this said district, and the adjourned meeting of the said first meeting of creditors for the purpose of proving claims and electing a trustee was held before the said Hon. Warren A. Worden on the 28th day of May, 1902.

Q. That is paragraph 11 in the amended petition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you read from paragraph 10 in your amended petition?—A. [Reading:]

Your petitioners further represent that at the time reference of these matters was made to the referee in bankruptcy, as aforesaid, the said referee was attoney for and an officer of the bonding company which had bonded said receiver in the said State court, said Peter L. Larsson, and against which said receiver gross charges of fraud and mismanagement has been made in said court, and further charges were about to be made, and the said referee, with knowledge of said charges and the truth thereof, and with knowledge of said adjudication and of the reference of all matters thereto pertaining to him as referee, as aforesaid, became engaged in the said State court in an effort to free his said client from the said bond of said receiver, and to that end the said referee conspired and colluded with the said Scandinavian-American Bank to postpone and delay proceedings in these bankruptcy matters until after the alleged sale of the said property of these bankrupts had been made in the said State court, as aforesaid, and the evidence of the fraud of said receiver concealed and removed as far as possible, and until the said bonding company, his client, should be released from the said bond of said receiver; and, in furtherance of said conspiracy, the said referee wilfully failed and neglected to call the first meeting of creditors of these bankrupts to elect a trustee, or to set in motion in any manner whatsoever the machinery of this court looking toward the administration by this court of the said estate, as by law and duty to these bankrupts he was required to do, until after the said alleged sale by said State court had been made and the property delivered to the said Mayhew, as aforesaid, and in the evidence of the fraud of said receiver to that extent removed and covered up, as aforesaid, and after the said bond of said receiver had been discharged by said State court. That said first meeting of creditors was not called by said referee until the 14th day of April, 1902, as more fully appears from the records and files of this court in this matter, reference to which is hereby made.

Q. Now, without naming Judge Hoyt, didn't you refer to him in that?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Then what is the excuse for your answer that Judge Hanford drew on his imagination in naming Judge Hoyt?

Mr. McCOY. He did not make that answer, Mr. Dorr.

The WITNESS. I did not say so.

Mr. DORR. What did you say?

A. I said there were some of them.

Q. Who is that?—A. One of them is Worden and the other—if you will let me take that I will name you the rest.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you claim that in the opinion Judge Hanford filed he went outside the record of the case, either in the pleadings or the evidence taken or statements made by counsel?

The WITNESS. I would like to read the opinion and then I would answer it. It is a long opinion and I would like to have it before me and I would be glad to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Before being required to answer any further questions on it I think he should be permitted to see the opinion.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean you can not answer it without seeing the opinion?

A. That is true. I have not read Judge Hanford's opinion for four or five years.

Mr. DORR. Have you sufficiently examined the allegations in your petition to reopen the Heckman & Hansen case, to ascertain whether or not Judge Hanford, in his decision, in referring to the parties that I have named, had basis for so doing in your petition?

A. I have not examined the petition at all, but I have examined the list of names that he says I attacked, and I will answer your question in reference to them. He says I attacked J. T. Ronald and Alfred Battle. I did not. They were members of the firm of Ballinger, Ronald & Battle, but I always picked out Judge Ballinger as the man that I was attacking. That is also true of John S. Jurey. He was a member of the firm of Metcalfe & Jurey, but I never attacked him personally; it was Gen. Metcalfe that I hit at. Then there was Warren A. Worden. There is not a possible excuse for putting his name in there as a man that was attacked. There is A. C. Bowman. I never said at any time or to this day have I charged A. C. Bowman with anything. It is likewise true of E. F. Fisher, who was the trustee. It is true of Gray & Tate. He always says I attacked the local representative of the American Bonding & Trust Co. I did nothing of the sort.

Q. You did, however, make the statement, in open court, that if you were given an order for the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank you would produce evidence from those books sufficient to disbar Richard A. Ballinger, J. B. Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones, and C. A. Reynolds?—A. I did not. I said if he would let me have the books I would bring in the evidence; yes, sir. I did not say that I would get the evidence from the books.

Q. Did you ever get the evidence?—A. I got that which satisfied me and I presented what I had to Judge Hanford, and, to make good on it, I paid $450 out of my own pocket to show to him.

Q. That is, for the transcript, you mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a contingent fee in this matter?—A. I did.

Q. And advanced the money to carry on the litigation for Heckman & Hansen?—A. I did.

Q. You didn't find anything inconsistent with the law in doing that, did you?—A. None at all.

Q. Originally, the order of sale that was made in the superior court, as I understood you to state, provided that the property was to be sold subject to the liens against it?—A. I don't know where you got that, Mr. Dorr. I did not take that matter up, that I know of.

Q. I gathered that from your testimony on yesterday, when you were being interrogated by Mr. McCoy.—A. I did contend—I did contend before Judge Smith, before Judge Hanford, and even in the State court—that the property had been sold subject to liens.

Q. And you so testify here?—A. I think Mr. McCoy asked me the question yesterday and I did so testify.

Q. That is still your understanding?—A. That is my understanding of the law; yes, sir.

Q. It was really the foundation of your complaint—that a sufficient amount of revenue had not been realized from this sale, because they had used the proceeds of the sale to pay off the liens?—A. No, sir. The original complaint that I made to Judge Hanford did suggest that they had tried to get hold of that property for a grossly inadequate price; that is true. Subsequently, as a matter of law and as an additional reason why he should reopen the estate, in order to show him that there was property that was not administered, I suggested that the property, if it had been sold at all, had been sold subject to liens.

Q. And you still so insist that that was the way it was sold?—A I insist that, as a matter of law, that that property was sold subject to liens.

Q. Did you ever examine the order of sale in the superior court?—A. I did. I went through all the papers at that time—everything bearing on the matter.

Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, that the condition was just exactly the reverse from what you have stated?—A. I don't know it, as a matter of fact; no, sir.

Q. From the order of sale that was made in that court? I hand you the order of sale, Mr. Finch. [Handing witness paper marked "Exhibit 34."]

Witness examines paper.

Q. Is that not correct?—A. What do you mean?

Question read.

Q. I now ask you, after having inspected the order of sale in the superior court in cause No. 32817, entitled William Curtis, plaintiff, against C. A. Heckman and M. E. Hansen, copartners, and so forth, whether the order did not provide for this property, specifying all the items of property that was owned by the defendants, to be sold at upset prices, fixing an upset price on each parcel or property and providing that any person having liens on said property, or any part of it, might become bidders at the sale and might apply the amount of the liens as a part of the purchase price?—A. It is absolutely so.

Q. Sir?—A. That is absolutely so.

Q. Absolutely so?—A. I never contended different.

Q. All of the property that belonged to these defendants, Heckman & Hansen, was described in this order of sale, wasn't it, Mr. Finch?—A. For anything I know that is true. I know nothing to the contrary.

Q. And each piece was given an upset price?—A. Yes.

Q. Regardless of liens?—A. I think that is true.

Q. And it also provided—the order did—that it might be sold in the aggregate for a sum of not less than $24,000?—A. I didn't read that. I don't know whether it is there or not.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] You will now look at the paper and see if you are able to answer.—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. The bid that was finally accepted for this property was $24,125?—A. That is true, I believe.

Q. The sale was advertised, was it not?—A. I think so.

Q. Under the order of the Superior Court of the State of Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it called for sealed bids?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The best bid tendered for the entire property was $24,125?—A. So reported to the court; yes.

Q. And that is the bid that was finally accepted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at that stage of the proceedings, or at about that point, chronologically in the history of this matter, Heckman & Hansen filed the voluntary petition in bankruptcy that I have already asked you about?—A. Do you mind my suggesting to you a question before you ask that one?

Q. Certainly not.—A. My point about the sale being made subject to lien was that it was not a lienholder who made the bid or bought the property. That is the point that I made, as a matter of law.

Q. Yes; that was some distinction of law that you had in your mind.—A. That is all that I——

Q. (Continuing.) As distinguished from the order of the court?—A. No; I claimed that the law applicable to the orders as the court made them, and the bid, as they were made, showed that the property was sold subject to liens. The only one that I understand that was to take it for the liens was a lienholder. If he should bid, as I understood it, he might apply his lien upon his bid, and that plainly would carry the right to get the property without liens; but a stranger to the record, I don't understand, unless he protected himself, would take free of liens. It is my understanding that a man bidding at a sale without protecting himself takes the property subject to the liens.

Q. So it was your theory that these upset prices that were specified in the order of the court might be adopted if the lienors bought the property, but if an outsider bought it he would have to pay those prices and then pay the liens in addition.—A. He would not have to. He could do as he was a mind to.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr, do I understand it to be your thought that if one lienor bought the property other liens than his would be in any way protected by——

Mr. Dorr. (Interrupting.) No; your honor, there are several described pieces of property in the order of sale——

The Chairman. (Interrupting.) Under the order, as I understood it, only the purchasing lienor would be protected.

Mr. Dorr. No; I will read you the part of the order that I am discussing just at present. First, I wish to state that the order of sale describes several tracts of property and articles of property, beginning with parcel A and running alphabetically with descriptive letters to parcel G. Then there is an upset price fixed in the order for each one of these separate parcels. Then it provides that bidders will be allowed to bid on the whole of said property or on one or other number of said parcels, and shall have the right of removal of all machinery, tools, buildings, and supplies from any one parcel, with 75 days from the time of the acceptance of any bid in which to make such removal; that the upset price for the whole of said property in any one bid shall be $24,000, and for any two or more parcels less than the whole of said property the sum of the upset price of each thereof. That any and all parties having liens upon any parcel or parcels or the whole of said property be allowed to bid upon said property and to apply on their bids the amount due upon their lien or liens; the lien of Carstens & Earles upon the Windsor property, described as parcel A in this notice, being preferred to the lien of the Scandinavian-American Bank thereon, and that unless a greater or larger bid shall be received for any parcel of said property subject to any such lien, the party holding such lien will be allowed to purchase the same for the full amount of such lien or liens; adding thereto, however, in such manner as shall be determined upon by this court and equitably adjusted among the parties, upon parcel B the sum of $1,900.40 expended by said receiver in betterments to said parcel B, and further adding thereto upon such parcels as shall properly distribute the costs and expenses thereof, all of the costs and expenses of this receivership not already paid, together with the sum of a thousand dollars borrowed from the Washington National Bank of Seattle, under an order of this court, for the purpose of conducting the affairs of said receivership. The amount of such expenses and the sum so borrowed is estimated by the receiver to be $2,250.

It is my contention, Mr. Chairman, that the order is perfectly and clearly specific in directing this property to be sold or offered for sale at these upset prices, regardless of who the purchasers may be; but it offers to the lienors the privilege of becoming bidders if they so desire, and in that event it permits them to use the amount of their liens upon the property as a part of the purchase price.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you understand that it would have been practicable for each lienor to have saved his debt under the terms in that order?

Mr. DORR. I am not in a position to answer, Mr. Chairman, because I have no personal knowledge of the amount of these respective liens——

The CHAIRMAN. The number of them, rather.

Mr. DORR. (Continuing.) Referred to or the number of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, seven pieces of property; and if there were only seven creditors and the creditors could agree among themselves which piece each one would bid on, they might thus save themselves and be protected; but if there were more than seven, it would be impossible for them to do it, or if the seven could not agree on a division of the property it would not have been practicable for them to do it, would it?

Mr. DORR. There seems to be seven pieces of property described, a part of which are real estate; one parcel consists of marine ways, tools, machinery, and machine shop; another one of certain bills receivable and accounts due Heckman & Hansen; another one of yacht Vigilant; another one of a steamer, Clara Hawes, and so forth. Now, I don't know, nor do I think it is at all material, the amount of any of these liens. There is a specific upset price mentioned for each one of these parcels of property. The first of $6,000, and the next is $9,000, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any recollection of what the receiver's report of the sale does show as to the number of purchasers? I think you said that it was sold to one purchaser for $24,125.

Mr. DORR. That is my understanding of it; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So that after all only one creditor or lienor could have been protected when one bought all of the property.

Mr. DORR. Why, not at all. If the property is sold for $24,125 to a stranger who has no liens, that money is paid into the registry of the court and distributed to the creditors.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you haven't enough to go around, as a lienor he would not have been protected.

Mr. DORR. Well, there would be a deficiency, and that would have to be equitably settled by the court.

Mr. MCCOY. Do I understand you, Mr. Dorr, that in receivership proceedings in the State court any order of sale of the property can be made in such a way as to require lienors to look to the proceeds of the property and wipe out their liens?

Mr. DORR. Well, that depends upon the nature of the lien, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, let us assume that it is a first mortgage on real estate belonging to a concern that is thrown into a receivership, and that the superior court orders the sale of the property. Now, let us suppose that the holder of the first mortgage sits still and does not go anywhere near the sale and that the sale results in less than the amount of his mortgage, is he wiped out?

Mr. DORR. Not at all. His mortgage is not disturbed.

Mr. MCCOY. That is what I would suppose.

Mr. DORR. But, on the other hand, to answer your question further, if the man who holds a first mortgage has a lien upon the land alone for his security, without any personal obligation of the maker of the mortgage, then he would be barred from participating in any of the dividends that might arise in the receivership, otherwise he is relegated to his security; but the mere sale of a piece of property that is mortgaged does not affect that mortgage unless by judgment or decree of the court, after the mortgagee is brought in, he consents to release it and become a general creditor. That sometimes occurs.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, but we are talking now about a matter outside of any agreement; and for that reason is not Mr. Finch's contention absolutely sound, that except so far as any lien creditor who became a purchaser wished to come in and apply the amount of his lien on the purchase, still the others who did not care to do that were not affected in their liens on the property at all?

Mr. DORR. I say in answer to that suggestion, Mr. McCoy, that Mr. Finch's position is absolutely unsound and untenable under the terms of this order of sale, which provides for the upset price of every article of property involved without any reference to the liens at all. A man who buys the first description, A, which is a parcel of land, need not inquire as to the amount of encumbrance upon that property except to ascertain that it does not exceed the amount of his bid.

Mr. MCCOY. In other words, your contention is that a man who has a mortgage running, we will say five years, on a piece of property, and a sale takes place at the end of two years and a half, that he can be disturbed in his mortgage and compelled to take his money at the end of two years and a half because of a sale in court, and not insist on waiting until the five years expire and then realize on his mortgage.

Mr. DORR. No; I say that he can not be disturbed.

Mr. MCCOY. I don't see what we disagree about then; and I understand that is Mr. Finch's position.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, proceed now and let us see.

Mr. DORR. I do not understand Mr. Finch's position to antagonize anything I have said or anything that Mr. McCoy has said, but I wish to have the record show I do understand his position to mean that if this property was sold to a stranger for $24,000, that stranger would have to assume and pay off these liens in order to get clear title to the property.

Mr. MCCOY. I think his contention is absolutely sound. Now have you the report of the receiver of the sale?

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Does that show who the bidders were and what liens they had and all the liens that were on the property regardless of bidders?

Mr. DORR. I have four or five different reports which I will submit a little later on, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with the examination, Mr. Dorr.

The WITNESS. At this time I want to suggest that, in any event, Mr. Chairman, I made no charge of fraud with reference to that particular item. My point was simply, as a matter of law, there was some money anyhow, which should move Judge Hanford to reopen the estate.

Mr. DORR. How many liens were there on this property, Mr. Finch?

A. I don't know.

Q. So far as money values are concerned?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know the amount of the encumbrance?—A. I don't.

Q. Now, at that juncture in the proceedings Heckman & Hansen filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the bankruptcy court?—A. They did.

Q. And you asked for a temporary injunction against this sale?—A. I did not. I was not in the case at that time.

Q. Well, who did?—A. Mr. Reynolds.

Q. C. A. Reynolds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that temporary injunction was issued?—A. It was.

Q. Out of the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. Upon the theory that the bankruptcy court might take jurisdiction of the matter?—A. I presume that was the theory.

Q. And the case, so far as involved the proposed sale, the value of the property, was referred to Mr. A. C. Bowman as special referee?—A. Subsequently it was.

Q. Well, during the pendency of the injunction———A. (Interrupting.) It was.

Q. (Continuing.) While the sale was held up?—A. It was.

Q. And he took evidence as to the value of the property and the estate of the bankrupts to ascertain whether or not the bid of $24,125 was a reasonable bid?—A. Yes.

Q. And he reported his findings to the court to the effect that it was, in his opinion, a reasonable bid for the entire property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes, sir; the record so shows. I was not a party to it at that time.

Q. You were not a party to it, but you knew of that, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And after that report was made to Judge Hanford he dissolved the temporary injunction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And released the jurisdiction that he had asserted over this particular property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Otherwise left it in the hands of the superior court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon the theory that it would not avail the estate anything to bring that property into the bankruptcy court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, isn't it? Judge Hanford filed a written opinion on that phase of the case?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I don't know whether I have ever read that or not; I don't know.

Q. Well, you know of it, do you not?—A. I don't think I know of it; no, sir.

Q. Well, you know that that was the order of the court?—A. I know that was the order of the court.

Q. And then the sale——

Mr. McCoy. Is that order here, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir; I have a copy of it before me.

Mr. McCoy. If you don't care to put the opinion and the order in now, it can go in later, but it might be well to get it right in here.

Mr. Hughes. Let me suggest—it would seem to me that it may become necessary to put in such papers as are involved in this proceeding, and that when that time comes they had better be put in in order. We can't very well do it piecemeal. I think it is better to put them in in order.

Mr. McCoy. Well, perhaps you are right.

Mr. Hughes. I think we will get the whole record then.

Mr. McCoy. All right; just ignore my suggestion.

Mr. Hughes. In an orderly way.

Mr. McCoy. I accept Mr. Hughes's suggestion to do it that way—put them in all together.

Q. Then you came into the bankruptcy court?—A. Yes.

Q. As attorney for Heckman & Hansen?—A. Yes. Could I, before you go into that, enlighten you a little further on this proceeding before Mr. Bowman?

Q. If you wish; yes.—A. Yes. I want to bring out that; in my petition in regard to Mr. Ballinger, I advised Judge Hanford with reference to these proceedings before Mr. Bowman this way: "With the petition"—that is, petition in bankruptcy—"Mr. Reynolds filed an application for an injunction to restrain the State court from making the sale proposed to be made on the following day, the 18th, as above related. The application was supported by the affidavits of Mr. Heckman and one C. S. Hills, an employee of the local representatives of the American Bonding & Trust Co., the surety on the receiver's bond in the State court. The showing made was a general showing of fraud. Your honor granted an injunction prohibiting the State court from proceeding further. Three days later, January 21, Judge Ballinger and Mr. Jones appeared in your honor's court, disavowing a general appearance and openingly stating, in their moving papers, that they came for the special purpose of informing your honor that you knew nothing about the real facts. They made no attempt to show what the real facts might be; but in some manner induced your honor to enter an order of reference to United States Commissioner A. C. Bowman and directing said commissioner to try out two facts—namely, whether an adequate price was being obtained for the property by the State court and whether a better price could be obtained from a sale by your honor's court—and your honor's orders further recited that no further proceedings be taken in the bankruptcy proceedings in your honor's court without special notice to them, Judge Ballinger and Mr. Jones. Hearing was had before Commissioner Bowman. At the hearing Mr. Reynolds suppressed most material evidence, kept his client off the stand in the interests of Mr. Jones and Judge Ballinger, and later submitted the matters to Commissioner Bowman without argument. The proofs were closed without Mr. Heckman's knowledge, and he learned of the fact only when he read in the newspapers the commissioner's decision. The commissioner reported favorable for Judge Ballinger and Mr. Jones, and an order was entered by your honor, on March 3, 1902, dissolving the injunction against the State court and permitting said court to confirm the sale, if so advised.

"Mr. Heckman was then advised by Mr. Reynolds that the order which your honor had entered on January 21 meant that no further proceedings could be taken in your honor's court without consent of Mr. Jones and Judge Ballinger. Mr. Reynolds returned to the State court and three days later, on the 6th of March, when the court directed the alleged sale to be made by the receiver, Mr. Reynolds was present, sanctioned, and advocated the same; and the very order taken by the parties on that day, the granting of which Mr. Heckman had hired Mr. Reynolds to oppose, names Mr. Reynolds as the attorney for the American Bonding & Trust Co., the surety on the bond of the receiver. From the evidence submitted to your special referee it appears that while said hearing was in progress before Commissioner Bowman the said American Bonding & Trust Co. paid to Mr. Reynolds '$100 in cash and employed him as its attorney in the receivership proceeding and in three or four other matters in which it was engaged'; and it also appears that the Scandinavian-American Bank paid to Mr. Reynolds the further sum of $150."

Mr. DORR. Well, now, do you still insist that——

Mr. MCCOY. Now, just a minute. Were those facts disclosed by the hearing before Judge Smith?

A. Yes; that is what I offered to prove to Judge Hanford, from the very evidence that I had taken down there and paid $400—$450—to get to show to him.

Mr. DORR. Do you still insist that you did not charge or intend to charge Mr. Bowman with any dereliction of duty?

A. I have never said anything of that sort. And your questions, Mr. Dorr—you are misleading yourself.

Q. Well, never mind.

Mr. MCCOY. Let him answer the question, Mr. Dorr; let him answer the question.

A. I filed an original petition. I claim that in that original petition I did not charge Mr. Bowman nor any of the parties that I named a while ago. I also claim, even now, that I have not in any regard charged Mr. Bowman. I don't think to-day that Mr. Bowman has any knowledge of those things that I have just read as contained in this petition.

Mr. MCCOY. What have you been reading from?

A. I have been reading from——

Mr. MCCOY. What exhibit?

A. Exhibit 33, paragraph——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Just a minute. What is Exhibit 33?

A. It is In re Ballinger et al.

Mr. McCoy. And is not the petition at all to reopen the proceeding?

A. That is true. It is not.

The Chairman. The committee desires to get into the clerk's office before it closes, which it will do in a few minutes. We will take a recess at this time. The committee will be in recess until 1.30.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment.

Jerald Landon Finch resumed the stand.

The Chairman. Proceed, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr. Mr. Finch, what do you understand is meant by an "upset" price?

A. Why, I think that it means that the first man to bid at that particular price would get the property.

Q. That is what you understand an upset price means—— A. That is one.

Q. (Continuing.) As applied to these matters we are discussing?—A. That is the only legal definition that I know of in the books.

Q. Upset price—— A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Means the first man that bids—— A. (Interrupting.) At that figure gets the property. If you are in doubt about it I would like to refer you to Black's Dictionary, a law dictionary.

Q. Oh, I am not in doubt about it, but I want to know what you meant.—A. I see Mr. Hughes smiles about it.

Q. Sir?—A. I see Mr. Hughes smiles about it.

Q. Well, I am not examining Mr. Hughes; I don't see any necessity for reference to him.—A. You won't find it in "Words and Phrases."

Q. Your understanding is that it means what you have stated. This order of sale which is identified in this record as Exhibit 34 was filed on December 3, 1911, was it not, Mr. Finch [handing paper to witness]?—A. It so has the filing mark of the superior court, and I think that is correct.

Q. Do you remember when the sale was made in the State court?—A. Finally consummated the 6th or the 14th of March, I don't just recall the dates; one or the other, I think.

Q. Following?—A. Yes.

Q. Following the date that the order of sale was entered?—A. Yes.

Q. And then there was a report of the receiver filed following the sale, was there not?—A. I don't know about that from memory.

Q. Don't you recall that circumstance in the proceedings?—A. Not from memory.

Q. Just examine the paper now handed you, which will be marked for identification "Exhibit 35," and see if you can answer the question.—A. The filing mark of the superior court shows that this paper was filed March 13, 1902.

Mr. McCoy. It had better be marked, Mr. Dorr, I think, "35" for identification, do you want it, or in evidence?

Mr. Dorr. "Thirty-five." I shall offer it in a moment.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 35," for identification.

Mr. DORR. Will you examine it, Mr. Finch, and see if that is not the report of the receiver upon the sale of the property?

A. (After examining.) Now what was your question?

Q. Whether that is not the report of the receiver with respect to this sale of the assets of Heckman & Hansen?—A. I don't know, sir. I will submit it to you or the committee and defy you to tell what it is—whether it is or it is not.

Q. You can't tell?—A. No, when he says here that "the interest of Heckman & Hansen in said steamer was sold to M. F. Mayhew under the sale heretofore confirmed by your honor"—I wish to withdraw my answer for a moment until I read this further. [Witness examining paper.] This is a report of the receiver, but I don't know whether it is such a report as you designate it; I can't interpret it.

Q. Is it not a report covering the sale of these assets?—A. It does refer to the sale, yes, sir.

Q. And states that the sale was made pursuant to the order that you have already identified, does it not, for $24,125?—A. (After examining.) Well, I will again have to refer you to the report. I don't know.

Q. You don't know that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that you appeared in court and contested this sale as reported by the receivers?—A. Oh, I know that, yes, sir.

Q. After this report, which is denominated the fourth report of receiver, was filed?—A. I took certain proceedings in that court, it is true.

Q. You took exceptions to the sale?—A. I did.

Q. The confirmation of the sale?—A. I did.

Q. As reported by the receiver in this paper?—A. I don't know whether it is as reported in that paper or a paper before that?

Q. Well, was there any other report of this sale, that you know of, except the one I am showing you?—A. I don't know. I would have to look at the third report of the receiver at least. That is designated the fourth.

Q. Look at the third one and see whether that covers the sale—the third report [handing paper to witness]?—A. (After examining.) I note that this report—this paper purports to be a copy of the third report of the receiver, used before Commissioner Bowman, and that in the prayer of the petition it asks that the receiver be ordered to complete the sale of the property to Mayhew for the sum of $24,125, and to receive the payment therefor.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, that third report preceded the sale, didn't it, Mr. Finch?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And it is not material as showing the confirmation of the sale?—A. I think it is material. I think that that was treated over in the State court as the—at least it was the proceedings—it was the report of the receiver upon which the proceedings were based over there.

Q. Well, now, you stated this morning, as I understood you, that the order of sale contained a confirmation of the sale and the discharge of the receiver?—A. I said that that was my recollection.

Q. I want you to examine Exhibit No. 34, which is the order of sale, and see whether you were mistaken in that or not [handing paper to witness].—A. (After examining paper.) Mr. Stenographer, let me have that question, please.

(Question read.)

A. There is no confirmation in this order of sale that you have handed to me, which is filed December 3, 1901.

Q. And no order discharging the receiver there, either, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you must have been mistaken in those two matters?—A. No; I don't think so. I don't think that I said that there was any confirmation in that order of sale. That was one taken way back in December.

Q. I now hand you a paper in the case of Curtis against Heckman & Hansen, in the superior court receivership matter, which will be marked for identification "No. 36," and ask you what that is, if you know [handing paper to witness]?—A. It is denominated an order approving fourth report and directing the receiver.

Q. Were you present at the hearing on which this order is based?—A. At the proceedings upon which the order was based, yes; I was present.

Q. And at that time protested this sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Objected to the terms of the sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And made an argument in court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What judge of the superior court had charge of this receivership matter?—A. Arthur E. Griffin.

Q. What is the date of the order that you hold in your hand?—A. It is not dated.

Q. What is the date of the filing?—A. Twenty-fourth of March.

Mr. McCoy. What year?

A. 1902.

Mr. Dorr. Then at some time between the date of the report of the receiver stating the facts with relation to the sale and the order which you hold, which has been identified as Exhibit 36, you had a hearing in court?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Over the sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the matter was fully discussed at that hearing, was it not?—A. Why, I discussed it fully.

Q. Other attorneys were there?—A. Yes.

Q. A number of them?—A. Yes.

Q. Representing creditors?—A. Yes.

Q. And various interests?—A. Yes; including Gen. Metcalfe and Mr. Reynolds.

Q. They were both there?—A. Yes, sir; and the referee in bankruptcy, Judge Hoyt, he was also there.

Q. He was also there?—A. Yes.

Q. And Judge Griffin overruled your objections?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And entered an order approving the report of the receiver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And confirming the sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I now hand you a further order in the same case, signed by Judge Griffin, which is denominated "Order directing final distribution." I will ask you to examine it, the paper first being identified as Exhibit No. 37, and state whether you were present at those proceedings.—A. I was not.

Q. This order which you now hold in your hand, Exhibit 37, was made in pursuance of the order approving the receiver's report, was it not?—A. I don't know. It was made without my presence or knowledge; I had nothing to do with it.

Q. You had nothing to do with the distribution of the funds?—A. No, sir; nor the obtaining of the order, or any notice about it.

Q. That is the only thing that is dealt with in this particular order, is it not; the distribution of funds to the creditors whose claims had been approved?—A. I think that is a fair inference; yes, sir.

Q. Is that your name on the back of this order, accepting service of it?—A. It is.

Q. And did you write it?—A. I did.

Q. When?—A. When it was served on me.

Q. You knew about it, then, at the time?—A. After it was done.

Q. When was it served on you, Mr. Finch?—A. I don't know.

Q. Wasn't at the time the matter was taken up in court?—A. No; it could not have been then.

Q. The same day?—A. No, sir; not that I know of; I don't know.

Q. You don't know?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take any proceedings adverse to this order requiring the funds to be distributed by the receiver?—A. Not to that particular order; no, sir.

Q. You were not concerned in the distribution of the funds particularly, were you?—A. That is what my opponents seemed to think. I had nothing to do with it and no notice of it.

Q. You took no active steps with regard to the distribution of the funds either way?—A. Nothing, only to oppose them at the time.

Q. Do you mean to say you opposed the distribution?—A. I mean to oppose the State court proceeding in the matter looking toward a sale of the property.

Q. Oh, yes; I understand; but you had no claims to make on these claims that had been filed in the Heckman & Hansen case, had you?—A. I never looked at them with that idea in view; no, sir.

Q. You didn't know, or don't now know, that any of them were wrong in any respect?—A. No, sir; I never examined them.

Q. So far as you now are able to state, the claims were all bona fide claims?—A. So far as I know; yes, sir.

Q. There were over 50 general creditors, were there not?—A. I don't know, but I think so.

Q. Aside from those who had liens and mortgages and of one kind and another of preference?—A. I think so.

Q. Did you ever appeal or was there any appeal taken from the proceedings in the State court?—A. No, sir.

Q. You then came into Judge Hanford's court on the 15th of January, 1903, and filed a petition for the discharge of the bankrupt, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; some time, I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, look at the paper now handed you and state whether that is the petition you filed [handing paper to witness]—A. It is.

Q. What is the date of it?—A. The 15th day of January, 1903.

Q. Prepared and filed by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. I ask that this paper be identified as Exhibit No. 38.

(Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 38," for identification.)

Mr. DORR. And on the next day you secured an order of discharge from the Federal court, did you not [handing two papers to witness]?

A. No, sir.

Q. What is the fact about the discharge?—A. It was obtained the 16th day of the next month; that was February.

Q. Oh; the 16th day of the next month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you drew the order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And presented it to the court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Obtained the discharge of the bankrupts?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. I ask that the order of discharge be identified as Exhibit 39.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 39" for identification.

Mr. DORR. Now, do you claim, Mr. Finch, that there was any irregularity in the discharge of Heckman and Hansen?

A. None whatever.

Q. In the bankruptcy?—A. None whatever.

Q. That was all regular?—A. Perfectly so.

Q. And at that time you knew the whole history of the State court litigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long afterwards did you file your petition to reopen this case in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I think in March of that year, 1903.

Q. That would be the following month after the discharge was entered?—A. I think that is true.

Q. I want to ask you this question, adverting a moment from the chronological history of the litigation, whether or not Heckman himself was not instrumental in securing the receivership in the State court?—A. I have no personal knowledge, even from my client, on the subject, but that is the inference that I would draw.

Q. You understood it at the time, did you not?—A. I drew that inference. I had no understanding, but I should not deny it for a moment.

Q. That he was favorable to the receivership?—A. That is what I infer; yes, sir.

Q. And that receivership was adverse to the Scandinavian-American Bank at that time, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Heckman, as you understood it, had inspired this receivership for the purpose of heading off the bank?—A. That was my understanding of it.

Q. The bank was then foreclosing a mortgage, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And finally secured a judgment of some $9,000?—A. I don't know whether they ever took their judgment or not in that case.

Q. You have testified that no judgments were even entered in this case?—A. In the receivership case, that is true. I don't know whether it was entered in the mortgage foreclosure case or not. I do recall that a stipulation was entered into that that might be done; I know that is in the files.

Q. That judgment might be taken?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you sign that stipulation?—A. No; that was when Metcalf & Jury were representing Mr. Heckman.

Q. You had nothing to do with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, to refresh your recollection, I will just ask you to look at these files, which are somewhat voluminous and, I think, need not be introduced, and see whether you can state whether there was a judgment entered in the foreclosure case in the superior court against Heckman & Hansen [handing papers to witness]?—A. This purports to be a judgment roll and has within it a decree of the superior court.

Q. That paper that you are examining is the original court file, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Signed by the judge himself.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is a judgment—you know it is a judgment, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how much money?—A. $9,021.65.

Mr. McCoy. Is the property anywhere described in that judgment roll?

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. Fully.

Mr. Dorr. It is one of the pieces of property that is referred to in the order of sale.

Mr. McCoy. But the mortgage did not cover the entire property, real and personal, of Heckman & Hansen, did it?

Mr. Dorr. It describes two pieces of real estate that are described in the order of sale, and I will, if suggestion is made, furnish a copy of the description of the property that is involved in the foreclosure proceeding——

Mr. McCoy. Well, can you identify it by the letters in the previous exhibit that you read?

Mr. Dorr. If you will excuse us just a moment, we will see.

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. (After comparing papers.) The mortgage covers two items shown in the order of sale, B, which is real estate, and——

Mr. Hughes. The parcel B.

Mr. Dorr. Parcel B and D, isn't it?

Mr. Hughes. Parcel D, which is the machinery and shops in the Heckman & Hansen yards.

Mr. Dorr. They are separated in the order of sale into two divisions, the real estate being parcel B and the personal property parcel D.

Mr. McCoy. Now, my question was in that foreclosure action is it alleged that the mortgage which was being foreclosed covered all the real and personal property of Heckman & Hansen?

Mr. Hughes. No; it sepcifically describes it.

Mr. McCoy. Two separate items one being real estate and the other personal property?

Mr. Hughes. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. And there being other real and personal property not covered by the mortgage?

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir; these seem to be the two principal items.

Mr. McCoy. What is the title of this action in which the judgment of foreclosure was entered?

Mr. Dorr. Scandinavian-American Bank v. Heckman et al., No. 32772, in the superior court of King County.

Mr. McCoy. Was that a judgment of foreclosure and sale?

Mr. Hughes. There is an amended complaint there in which the receiver is a party.

Mr. Dorr. Well, I haven't come to that yet.

Mr. Hughes. Well, but it is an amended complaint.

Mr. Dorr. But it is the same description, isn't it?

Mr. Hughes. I think it is, but he is asking for the title.

Mr. McCoy. I was asking for the title.

Mr. Hughes. So if you go to the amended complaint you will get the title; there is some little modification. An amended complaint was filed in this cause. Better give him the title now and let it go in the record.

Mr. Dorr. I will give you the title of the amended complaint, which brings the receiver into the action.

Mr. McCoy. Yes. This gives all the parties that were bound by the judgment?

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Mr. Hughes. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. That is what I was after; I want to get them all in there, who were defendants.

Mr. Dorr. No. 32772. In the superior court of the State of Washington for the county of King. Scandinavian-American Bank, a corporation, plaintiff, v. Andrew Heckman and Martin Hansen, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Heckman & Hansen; Carstens & Earles (Inc.), a corporation, and Peter L. Larsen as receiver of the firm of Heckman & Hansen.

Mr. McCoy. Well, now, who were Carstens & Earles, or what is their interest in the property alleged to be?

Mr. Hughes. They had a senior lien on one piece of property.

Mr. McCoy. They had a senior lien. Well, is it asked that their lien be determined and the property sold to realize on it? Have they answered? If those defendants, Carstens & Earles, filed an answer in the case it ought to appear whether they consented to have their lien adjudicated in that action.

Mr. Hughes. I don't think all the files are there. The decree shows the facts and shows that their lien was admitted on a part of the property to be senior.

Mr. McCoy. If that is a judgment roll, it ought to have the answer in, hadn't it?

Mr. Hughes. If all the pleadings are there it should be. I don't think they are all there.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr, if you can't find that, suppose you read the judgment so far as it undertook to effect Carstens & Earles—if that is their names.

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir. I am answering your first question now, and then I will do that. The prayer of the complaint with respect to Carstens & Earles is—paragraph 2 of the prayer:

> That a decree may be made and entered establishing the mortgage herein described in plaintiff's first, second, and third causes of action as valid, subsisting the first liens upon all of said real estate and personal property above described, and the whole thereof therein mortgaged to secure payment of the judgment to be rendered herein, said mortgage recited in said third cause of action, to be subject, however, to the lien of the defendants Carstens & Earles (Inc.), and their rights as above set forth.

Counsel here examined papers.

Mr. Dorr. If I may pass this matter temporarily, I will ask Mr. Hughes to compare these descriptions with the schedules in the order of sale, and the question can then be answered accurately. There are no involved descriptions of lands by metes and bounds.

Mr. McCoy. My question, Mr. Dorr, I think, would not call for that. Mr. Hughes stated that Carstens & Earles had a superior lien on the property described in the complaint, or on some part of it, to the lien which the plaintiff claimed Now my question was simply this: Was Carstens & Earles's lien adjudicated or affected in any way in that proceeding? And I don't care anything about the description of the property at all.

Mr. DORR. Very well, then.

Mr. HUGHES They were made parties to the proceeding, and the decree of court provides what is the status of their lien with reference to that of the plaintiff.

Mr. DORR. Well, that is just what Mr. McCoy wants to know.

Mr. MCCOY. That is it exactly

Mr. HUGHES. The decree will tell all of that.

Mr. DORR. Well, I will read the provision in the decree regarding that point.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

Mr. DORR (reading):

> It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants Carstens & Earles (Inc.) and Peter L. Larsen, as receiver of the firm of Heckman & Hansen, and all persons claiming under them or either of them, are hereby barred from all right to redeem from such sale, save such rights as are provided by the statute laws of the State of Washington in that behalf provided, and the rights of the said Carstens & Earles (Inc.) as prior mortgagees of the lands and properties described in description No. 2 last aforesaid.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, in other words, the prior lien of Carstens & Earles was not attempted to be disturbed by that decree?

Mr. DORR. No; it was recognized as superior to the lien of the plaintiff.

Mr. MCCOY All right. Now, then, was the property sold, so far as you know, under that decree of foreclosure?

Mr. DORR. No, sir. It was sold by the receiver.

Mr. MCCOY, Well, was this decree a decree of foreclosure and sale?

Mr. DORR. It was a decree of foreclosure and sale but the——

Mr. MCCOY. Is there any order in there directing the sale of the property to satisfy the lien that was found to exist in favor of the plaintiff; and if so, who was directed to make the sale?

Mr. HUGHES. Let me answer. There was the usual order of sale according to our statutory provision, which would be by the sheriff.

Mr. MCCOY. That is just the point I want to develop.

Mr. HUGHES. As a matter of fact, the court, however, instead of issuing an execution, a special execution for a sale or an order of sale to the sheriff, proceeded through its officer, the receiver, to sell the property, and, as I understand the record to be, the only sale made was that made by the receiver.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, now, just explain this, Mr. Hughes, will you, or Mr. Dorr: Why was the practice which Mr. Hughes has just stated, namely, a sale by the sheriff, departed from, and was there anything in the decree which directed anybody but the sheriff to make the sale?

Mr. DORR. Well, the decree, upon an examination of that document, which I have now been able to make, appears to be the ordinary decree of foreclosure.

Mr. MCCOY. Then if the ordinary practice had been followed, the sheriff would have sold this specific property under that specific judgment, to realize on this specific lien; is that right?

Mr. DORR. If there hadn't been a receivership involved, that would have been the ordinary and the only natural outcome of it, but where a receivership is involved, as it was in this case, under our practice it may be sold either way.

Mr. McCoy. Well, that is just what I want to find out. In other words, the regular practice was adopted under the circumstances.

Mr. Dorr. Under the circumstances of this peculiar case, because the property was involved in the receivership, as I so understand it.

Mr. Hughes. I think I may add, the uniform practice here is, where there is a receivership and the property has been taken into the custody of the receiver, and is therefore in Custodia Legis, that the court never proceeds through its ministerial officer, the sheriff, but always through its receiver, to dispose of the property and does not make or allow the sale to be made by the sheriff, because it would be disturbing the possession of the court in the hands of the receiver.

Mr. McCoy. That is what I was getting at.

Mr. Hughes. And that proceeding was adopted in this instance, and I think, so far as I know, in all instances has been in this jurisdiction.

The Chairman. Proceed, Mr. Dorr.

The Witness. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, now I would like to call your attention to the——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). A little louder.

The Witness. I would like to call your attention to the petition, exhibit—what is the one that is marked?

Mr. Dorr. Which one is it?

A. The "Re Ballinger." I don't think that this——

Mr. Dorr. Is this [handing paper to witness]?

A. This is not marked, and I think it is a second copy that I have.

Mr. McCoy. Where are the exhibits?

Paper handed witness.

The Witness. Exhibit 33, beginning with paragraph 9 and reading to and including paragraph 14, as having a bearing upon the examination at this time. Paragraph 9. I will not read it all, but paragraph 9 reads as follows:

During the time when these various actions were begun, the said courts, State and Federal, were not in session. Between the times when the suits were brought and the convening of the courts in the fall of the year 1901, said Scandinavian-American Bank had entered into a general conspiracy with the receiver, Mr. Larsson, and his attorney, Mr. Jones, and Messrs. Metcalfe & Jury, attorneys for Heckman & Hansen, to wipe out of existence the latter firm and to convert the properties of the firm to the use of said bank. The conspiracy on behalf of the bank was entered into and carried out by Judge Ballinger, and the method pursued and steps taken in annihilating the firm and converting the property appears from the evidence before your special referee to have been and is alleged by your petitioner to have been as shown in paragraphs 10 to 16, inclusive, following.

Now, paragraph 14 deals with this suit that Mr. Dorr has just asked me about. I will have to read paragraph 13 to make 14 intelligible. Paragraph 13 says:

December 9 the attorneys of record, without Heckman & Hansen's consent—

That was Metcalfe—

consent or knowledge stipulated that judgment might be taken for want of answer in the suit brought for the foreclosure of the $650 chattel mortgage.

Paragraph 14 says:

On the same day a like stipulation, without the knowledge or consent of Heckman & Hansen, was entered into in the case brought for the foreclosure of the $5,000 note and mortgage.

And bear in mind, please, that that $5,000 note and mortgage, there was a controversy about that, as I stated this morning.

Mr. DORR. Do you claim that any of this money that is involved in these proceedings was not owing by Heckman & Hansen?

A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Do you claim that that $5,000 that you say Judge Ballinger borrowed for them was not used by them and received by them?—A. I do not. It was used for the very purpose for which it was borrowed.

Q. That is, for their business purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not dispute the right of Judge Ballinger to represent Mr. Heckman in making that mortgage, do you?—A. Not—I don't dispute his right to make the mortgage—or to—yes, I do; it was disputed in the case, that he had no right to make a mortgage, that it was not the agreement.

Q. It was not the agreement?—A. No.

Q. You do say he had a right to borrow the money without giving a mortgage?—A. I say this, that it was contended that judge—that Mr. Hechman had borrowed $5,000 from the Scandinavian-American Bank, payable a thousand dollars a year; that would be the whole thing payable in five years; that is what he contended was the arrangement, and he contended that he had left Judge Ballinger to consummate that arrangement.

Q. Well, you said something about a power of attorney being used by Judge Ballinger. Just what was that, Mr. Finch?—A. Well, to consummate that arrangement Mr. Heckman gave Judge Ballinger a power of attorney. Acting under that power of attorney, Judge Ballinger gave a note, instead of one payable in five years at the rate of a thousand dollars a year he gave one payable in 90 days, and, in addition, gave a mortgage upon their property to secure the note. Now, mind you, I am telling you what his contention was.

Q. Heckman's contention?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know anything about it other than what Heckman told you, do you?—A. That is true; nothing.

Q. You do know that Judge Ballinger had the power of attorney?—A. I know that he did.

Q. Regularly?—A. How is that?

Q. A regular power of attorney?—A. I simply know what I have told you.

Q. You know that he had a general power of attorney, do you not?—A. I do not know what it was. There was the power of attorney introduced in evidence before Judge Smith.

Q. Well, it was a full general power of attorney, was it not?—A. I think that was true.

Q. And is this not the paper [handing paper to witness]?—A. That is the paper.

Q. Who wrote the body of that paper?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know Mr. Heckman's handwriting?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know his signature?—A. I doubt if I know his signature sufficient to identify it.

Q. You don't know, then, whether it is a genuine power of attorney or not?—A. Oh, I don't know; no, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, there is a question, Mr. Dorr, about who wrote the power of attorney. Let's have the facts in regard to that.

Mr. DORR. Well, I am asking this witness. I don't know, Mr. McCoy.

The WITNESS. Well, I don't any more than you do.

Mr. MCCOY. I think Judge Hanford's son can tell you who wrote it. The fact is, Mr. Dorr, is it not, that this power of attorney is written in the handwriting of a man named Tennant?

Mr. DORR. I don't know. I will try to find out, if I may have it.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I say Judge Hanford's son can answer that question, if you will ask him. If he can tell you, we might as well have it admitted as proved.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Battle informs me that the body of the instrument is in Mr. Tennant's handwriting—Mr. A. J. Tennant, who was a witness to the instrument.

The CHAIRMAN. He also acknowledges it on the back of it; the signature there clearly indicates that he wrote the body of it.

Mr. DORR. That it is also witnessed by Mrs. Heckman; that it is signed by Mr. Heckman; that it was acknowledged before Mr. Tennant, a notary public.

Mr. MCCOY. But the handwriting to which you called the attention of the witness, asking him whether it was not Mr. Heckman's handwriting, is now admitted, for the record, to be the handwriting of Mr. Tennant. Is that right?

Mr. DORR. That part in the body of the instrument; not the signature.

Mr. MCCOY. No; but the part which you asked the witness about, saying "Is that not Mr. Heckman's handwriting?" is the part which now is admitted to be in Mr. Tennant's handwriting.

Mr. DORR. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Is not that a fact?

Mr. DORR. That is the statement made by Judge Battle, who was a member and is a member of that old law firm. I didn't know when I asked the question.

Mr. MCCOY. I know it, Mr. Dorr; you did not.

Mr. DORR. And the similarity of the writing attracted my attention.

Mr. MCCOY. I did happen to have the information, and that is why I asked you to get the admission for the record. You did not know it.

Mr. DORR. I did not; nor do I see that it makes any material difference one way or the other.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I would not have thought so, except that you asked the question.

Mr. DORR. I asked that question, Mr. McCoy, on my own recollection of Mr. Finch's testimony that there was something crooked in this power of attorney. If there is, I am just as anxious to find it out as any member of the commission.

Mr. MCCOY. I had forgotten he testified that way. Did he say there was something crooked about the power of attorney?

Mr. DORR. I understood him to say yesterday that there was something wrong with this power of attorney.

Mr. MCCOY. My recollection of his criticism was that Judge Ballinger was trying to carry water on both shoulders; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, let's make some progress.

Mr. DORR. Now, Mr. Finch, going forward to the proceedings in Judge Hanford's court to reopen the Heckman & Hansen case——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Just a minute, Mr. Dorr. I would like to have that go into the record as an exhibit.

Mr. Dorr. Very well.

The Chairman. Let it go in.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 40."

Mr. Dorr. The power of attorney is identified as "Exhibit No. 40."

The Witness. I might add a later thought: The suit involved in that $5,000 proceeding that has just been referred to——

Mr. McCoy. You mean the foreclosure?

A. Yes. (Continuing.) Is based upon the note to which Judge Ballinger's name is signed as power of attorney, in which he appears as attorney for the plaintiff.

The Chairman. Is the note, the original note, among the court files?

Mr. Dorr. The only thing that you claim——

The Witness. (Interrupting.) I think so.

Mr. Dorr. (Continuing.) Is that Heckman told you that the note should be payable a thousand dollars per year instead of at one time?

A. That is all I know about it; yes, sir.

Q. The amount was all correct?—A. The amount is correct.

Q. There is no dispute but what Heckman & Hansen received the money?—A. None whatever. Judge Ballinger received the money and properly applied it. They did not have it in their hands, so far as I understand it.

Q. Well, it was paid over to them or applied to their interest, wasn't it?—A. Certainly.

Q. You do not claim that that money was diverted in any way from Heckman & Hansen?—A. Not at all; not at all.

Q. Or that any other money was, at any time, in those proceeding, do you?—A. Oh, I don't know as I would want to answer a broad statement like that.

Q. Well, you don't make any specific claim that any money was embezzled or misappropriated in this entire proceeding, do you?—A. Nothing, only in the manner that I have complained.

Q. Yes; I understand that. Now, coming down to the proceedings before Judge Hanford to reopen the Heckman & Hansen case, you filed a petition and then an amended petition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have offered the amended petition in evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I would like you to identify the original petition, if you can [handing paper to witness].—A. This is it which you have handed to me.

Q. That was filed when, Mr. Finch?—A. April 11, 1903.

Mr. Dorr. I would like to have it marked as "Exhibit 41."

The Chairman. You offer it now?

Mr. Dorr. I want to offer these all together, if I may, this whole bunch of exhibits.

The Chairman. Very well.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 41" for identification.

Mr. Dorr. The matter was then referred to Judge Eben Smith, the master in chancery——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) To take evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that hearing covered a period of about three months?—A. All of that I think, off and on.

Q. Do you mean to say that you were continuously working on this matter before Judge Smith for three months?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or at odd times?—A. At odd times.

Q. Off and on?—A. Off and on.

Q. And the evidence that was taken before Judge Smith, so far as the witnesses that you had called is concerned, was transcribed by your order and reported back to Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the other evidence was not transcribed, was it?—A. That is true.

Q. Then the 889 pages of transcript in that case only represents the evidence adduced by yourself?—A. That is true.

Q. That evidence was filed in Judge Hanford's court some time before the final hearing on the matter, was it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what is the fact as to the dates, then?—A. It was filed after the final hearing.

Q. You state that as a fact?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it filed, Mr. Finch?—A. June 21, 1904.

Mr. McCoy. Are you reading the file mark on it?

A. I am reading the file mark.

Mr. Dorr. When was the hearing?

A. On the 8th of June, 1904.

Q. Sir?—A. On the 8th of June, 1904.

Q. What transpired at that time?—A. The hearing on the motion to confirm the report and the exceptions of the bankrupt as to the report.

Q. Do you mean to say it was finally argued on that date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was the opinion rendered?—A. I don't know. Some time subsequent to then.

Q. Don't you know that Judge Hanford read this testimony before he decided the case?—A. I don't know that.

Q. Don't you know that he copied, literally. three or four pages of the transcript in his opinion?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. Well, then, he must have had it?—A. Yes, sir; he must have had it.

Q. He must have had it?—A. He must have had it?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I never have denied it, but I say——

Q. (Interrupting.) I thought you contended he decided this case before he got the evidence?—A. No, sir; I said he heard it before I could get the evidence there.

Q. Heard the arguments on it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then he got the evidence and read it?—A. I don't know whether he read or not. He got the evidence. I got it to him.

Q. And he did not file his opinion in that case until——A. Interrupting). Until after I had filed the evidence in the case.

Q. For some considerable time afterwards?—A. I don't know how long.

Q. July 11th, wasn't it?—A. I don't know, sir. I have no recollection of it.

Q. But you do know that he copied literally a number of pages of this testimony?—A. Yes, sir; I do know that.

Q. You were a witness yourself in Judge Smith's court, were you not?—A. I was.

Q. And testified at length?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are altogether 34 witnesses there, are there not, Mr. Finch?—A. What was the question?

Q. There are altogether 34 witnesses before Smith?—A. I don't know the number.

Q. A large number?—A. A large number.

Q. Every one you wanted to call——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) You were permitted to call?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, during those proceedings the question arose over your right to have the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank brought into court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Objection was made that to bring those books would seriously interrupt the daily proceedings and business of the bank?—A. I don't know whether that was the ground of their objection. I remember so distinctly an entirely different ground, that I don't know whether that one was offered or not. It did not impress me.

Q. Well, that was one of the grounds, was it not?—A. I don't know. That may have been so.

Q. And then, in addition to that, the officers and representatives of the bank all testified that there was nothing in these books that would show or throw any light upon any of these transactions?—A. Something to that effect.

Q. And they did object to the books being taken out of the bank during business hours?—A. I don't recall that that was the ground of the objection.

Q. Did not Mr. Battle himself make that objection, in open court, before Judge Hanford?—A. I don't know, but I do know that he made an objection that they would not show anything if he brought them.

Q. This is a large bank, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were asking for all of their books, covering a long period of time up to the then present date?—A. Oh, no, sir. I specified certain books that I wanted.

Q. Well, they were the books that were engaged in their daily business?—A. I don't think so. I think they were books that had been used and were out of use. That is my present opinion. I can't state at the present time.

Q. You don't know that sure. Now, don't you know that that is the very reason that these bank people did not want to part with the books, because it would interfere with their business?—A. No, sir.

Q. You told Judge Hanford, when you were appealing from Judge Smith's order refusing your subpœna duces tecum, that if you could get possession of those books you would show evidence that would be sufficient to disbar Richard A. Ballinger, James B. Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones, and C. A. Reynolds?—A. Yes, sir; that I would be able to bring in sufficient evidence to do that.

Q. And upon that statement he made the order requiring the bank to turn over the books?—A. That is correct.

Q. And they were brought in to Judge Smith's court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had full access to them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And examined them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And testified concerning your examination?—A. I testified in the case. I don't recall all about what I testified.

Q. Now, I want to ask you, and you may, if you like, refresh your recollection from the record of this testimony [handing testimony to witness], if you did not, in answer to the questions I will read, give the answers that I will now read? "Question by Mr. Jones"——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Wait until the witness gets the place in the book that he is going to refresh his recollection from.

The Witness. I think I don't need to refresh my recollection.

Mr. Dorr. I found the place for him.

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. And handed him the book, the record of the evidence.

The Witness. I haven't opened it, but I think—[examining book].

Mr. Dorr. Now, you stated, in Judge Hanford's court, in open court, that if you could have access to the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank that you would produce evidence from them that would disbar Gen. Metcalfe and others. Judge Hanford said to you:

You shall have that order, but if from those books you do not produce that evidence, I will disbar you.

What evidence did you produce from the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank to disbar Gen. Metcalfe? Answer by yourself:

That will have to be argued at length, Mr. Jones——

Q. I don't care anything about any argument; I want an answer to the question.—A. When I get the transcript of the testimony and the matter goes back to Judge Hanford, where, no doubt, we are going, all of us.

Q. I do not care anything about an argument; I want you to answer the question.—A. Well, if you desire, Mr. Jones, that was not the language of Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, you know what the language was—practically to that effect. I do not pretend to quote exactly. But answer the question.—A. Well, there is not any foundation for the question; it assumes things that are not true.

Q. Well, you can state what was said in Judge Hanford's court your own way, and then answer the question.—A. Well, I don't know what you mean now.

Q. You refuse to answer the question, Mr. Finch?—A. I have no question to answer.

Mr. Jones. I ask the commissioner to require the question to be answered.

The Master. Mr. Finch, the general subject matter about which you are interrogated at this particular point is touching a little colloquy between Judge Hanford, on the one part, and yourself on the other. Judge Hanford stating, when you applied for those books, and that if you had those books you could produce evidence, etc., and you replied to him—he asked you if you could prove that, and your reply to him, and then Judge Hanford said to you: "Very well, you may have the books or the order, and if you don't prove it I will disbar you." Now, then, you have got the general matter in your mind.

A. Yes, sir.

The Master. Now, then, Mr. Jones wants you to answer the inquiry as to what passed between you and Judge Hanford at that time.

Mr. Jones. No; I want him to state what there was in the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank upon which he would disbar; but he can make his statement.

The Master. You said first make the statement and then you may answer the question.

A. Why, I find from the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank that they furnished money to Mr. Mayhew to buy the property of Heckman & Hansen, and that Mr. Mayhew bought the property for them. They claimed in court that that was not true; and I intended to show from the books of the bank that that was true, and I think that it has been shown.

Q. Well, answer my question, what in that transaction do you find that would disbar Gen. Metcalfe?—A. None.

Q. You stated at that time that if you could have the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank that from them you would obtain evidence by which you would disbar

Richard Saxe Jones. Now, just state——A. (Interrupting.) I did not state any such thing.

Q. Well, you know what you stated. Taking your statement as you have it in mind of what you did state, what did you find in the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank that would in any way disbar Richard Saxe Jones?—A. I don't think anything, Mr. Jones.

Q. You stated, as I remember, practically to the effect that if you could have access to those books and papers that you would obtain evidence from them which would disbar R. A. Ballinger. Just tell the commissioner what you find in those books or papers of the Scandinavian-American Bank that would disbar R. A. Ballinger?—A. I did not make that statement. But answering the last part of the question, I state that I do not think I found anything.

Q. You stated, as I remember, practically to this effect, if you could have access to these books and papers, you would from them produce evidence to disbar C. A. Reynolds. Just state in your own way anything you found in connection with those books and papers of the Scandinavian-American Bank that would in any way disbar C. A. Reynolds.—A. I don't think anything.

Have I read it correctly?

A. You have.

Q. Those questions were asked you and those were your answers given?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. And that part of the testimony is attached to the master's report, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. I now ask to have the master's report on his hearing identified as Exhibit 42.

Master's report referred to was marked "Exhibit 42" for identification.

Mr. DORR. After the conclusion of this hearing before Judge Hanford, in which he filed, I believe, a written opinion, on July 11——

A. Perhaps so; I don't recall the date.

Q. Well, you know it was about that time, do you?—A. Yes; it was after June 24.

Q. (Continuing.) A meeting was called of the bar of the Federal court in Judge Hanford's court room to consider your charges?—A. Now, pardon me, if you are going into another matter, then I wish to just advert to that testimony for the benefit of the committee.

Q. Well, I would rather you would not divert me, if you just let me go through with this matter.—A. Very well.

Q. And then you can make any explanations.

The CHAIRMAN. You can come back to it.

Mr. DORR. You can make any explanations you desire later, but I don't like to be thrown clear off the thread of my examination so often.

I will ask now to file, as an exhibit, Judge Hanford's opinion in this matter, which is shown to have been filed on July 11, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN. It may go in as an exhibit. Let it be considered as Exhibit 43.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 43."

Mr. DORR. Now, following the conclusion of this matter before Judge Hanford—or before I get to that, Mr. Finch—you made an oral argument before the court on the master's report?

A. I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. I did not.

Q. Well, you filled two written arguments?—A. I did.

Q. Of great length?—A. Very great length; yes, sir.

Q. One of them consisting of 41 pages of typewritten matter [handing paper to witness], and then a supplemental argument consisting of 22 pages of typewritten matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did not appear to argue the case orally?—A. I appeared. I did not argue it.

Q. But you relied upon these written arguments?—A. I submitted them.

Q. Submitted them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were filed in the case?—A. Yes, sir. Do you want me to take it?

Q. At what date? I suggest that you show the dates. I don't think it is necessary to put these in the record.—A. They were both filed July 11, 1904. I didn't file them. Evidently the court filed them both at one time. I submitted them to Judge Hanford.

Q. They have been in the court's possession for some time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before the final decision?—A. Yes; they were submitted.

Q. They are referred to in the decision of the court, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As having been on file?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. I think they had better go into the record.

The Chairman. Is there any reason, Mr. Finch, or Mr. Dorr, that you can think of why they should go in?

The Witness. Why they should go in?

The Chairman. Yes.

The Witness. Why, I would like to have them in.

Mr. Dorr. I have no wish about it one way or the other.

The Chairman. They may go in.

Mr. Dorr. If the witness wants them or the committee wants them, I have no criticism.

The Witness. I should like to have them in, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Are they designated so that the one that was filed first with the court may be printed first?

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. One is designated as "Argument" and the other one is "Supplemental argument."

Mr. McCoy. The argument was filed first and the supplemental argument afterwards?

The Witness. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Mark them, Mr. Reporter; let them go in evidence.

Mr. Hughes. Will they be of any great materiality, Mr. Chairman, unless you have the evidence, this eight or nine hundred pages of evidence that was before the court for consideration? In other words, is the argument of counsel of more value in determining whether the court decided rightly?

The Chairman. The Chair will not attempt to pass on their materiality at this time, but probably save the Government money by letting them go in rather than have an argument whether or not they should go in.

Mr. Hughes. I am not arguing that, but it seems to me if they go in the record ought to go in, because that is the material question, as to whether the court decided rightly.

The Chairman. They will go in the record.

Mr. DORR. I was going to suggest in that connection that the evidence is here and it may go along with the rest of the proceedings in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, Mr. Dorr, the Chair would suggest that Mr. Finch have that record overnight; that he be given the opportunity to make from it a selection of such portions of it as he contends supports his original claim.

Mr. DORR. And then what for the other side of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. Would that involve the printing of it all?

Mr. DORR. I don't see how a court could consider these written arguments based on evidence without having the evidence itself.

The WITNESS. I only ask to have that go in, Mr. Dorr, because I want them to show for themselves the great painstaking care that I took to show Judge Hanford these facts.

The CHAIRMAN. You were speaking of the arguments, Mr. Finch, there——

A. Yes.

Q. And we were speaking of the testimony.—A. For my part I don't care about the testimony; I am not concerned in it now.

Q. Does your argument show such portion of the testimony as you relied on to support your contention?—A. No; it merely shows citations to the record.

Mr. DORR. The arguments further assume a great many facts that I am free to state to this committee were not proven or there was not any reasonable attempt made to prove them.

The CHAIRMAN. On those points can you tell us whether the record is referred to in the argument?

Mr. DORR. He has referred to the record in two or three places, I think, in the supplemental argument. I don't know about the original.

Mr. DORR. Did you, Mr. Finch [handing paper to witness]?

A. I don't recall, myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any argument—any counter argument submitted?

Mr. DORR. How is that?

Mr. BATTLE. Plaintiff's case was orally argued at the time by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that oral argument preserved in any way?

The WITNESS. It was not.

Mr. DORR. No, sir. I might suggest that we should introduce into this record Mr. Finch's brief on appeal and the brief of the opposing counsel on appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and in that way you would have both sides of the argument.

Mr. MCCOY. You don't contend, Mr. Dorr, do you, that what got before the circuit court of appeals was the same thing that was before Judge Hanford?

Mr. DORR. Oh, I don't contend that the evidence got before the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. MCCOY. I am not talking about the evidence. You do not contend that the contentions that were made before Judge Hanford were the same and the identical and only ones made in the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. DORR. I contend that the contentions that were made before Judge Hanford were carried up to the circuit court of appeals, and there may have been some additional points presented to the circuit court of appeals; but I think, generally stating, that all of these criminations and recriminations and insinuations were presented to the circuit court of appeals, and if I remember correctly, the circuit court of appeals, on its own motion, struck from Mr. Finch's brief a volume of that kind of material.

The CHAIRMAN. I read into the record to-day the first sentence of the court's opinion, in which they say that the addendum would be stricken from the record. Is that what you refer to?

Mr. DORR. That is what I refer to as having been stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. It is suggested to me by my colleague that I ask whether this record of the evidence might be taken by the subcommittee to Washington, laid before the whole committee, and let it determine whether it should be printed or not. Would that be feasible?

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir; that would be feasible, and agreeable also to us. I do think, though, that it would be manifestly unfair to you gentlemen and the other members of the Judiciary Committee to have the written arguments of counsel on one side of the case without the evidence, or without the arguments of opposing counsel, if you are going to attempt to determine the true merits of that controversy.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Finch, do you know of any objection to the printing in the record of the briefs on appeal?

A. Why, I know of no objection to it except that I think it is outside of any material record being made here at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as there was no record made of the oral argument in reply to your typewritten briefs which were submitted to Judge Hanford, it is of course desirable to get the arguments on the facts presented from the other side, and if that argument is presented in their printed brief it might shed some light on the matter in our record.

The WITNESS. So far as that is concerned, I would be glad that the committee have any argument that they ever made anywhere.

Mr. MCCOY. Did they make any argument in their brief in the circuit court of appeals on the face of that record? Wasn't it argued simply on the question of whether the State court had exclusive jurisdiction, having taken jurisdiction and retained it?

The WITNESS. I have no recollection of what their brief was, the point that they made.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you give us some light on that point, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. HUGHES. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. Whether the brief of those on that side of the case, in the circuit court of appeals, discussed the facts in substantial reply to Mr. Finch's typewritten briefs filed with Judge Hanford.

Mr. DORR. I will ask permission to ask Judge Battle to answer that question. He is in the room, and is the attorney who had charge of the preparation of that brief.

The CHAIRMAN. He may answer.

Mr. ALFRED BATTLE. May it please the commission, the situation is as follows: The case was heard before Judge Hanford upon oral arguments—that is, I made the presentation of the case, and I think that Mr. Finch practically declined to argue before Judge Hanford when the matter was before the court on oral argument, but afterwards filed his briefs. The decision was rendered——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) If you will just answer the question as asked.

Mr. BATTLE. Yes, sir; I am leading right to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. Of course, if you are going to make a general statement, I suppose you will have to be treated like any other witness, and sworn.

Mr. BATTLE. I don't want to go beyond saying what I thought——

The CHAIRMAN. I just asked you professionally about the other point.

Mr. BATTLE. You want to know simply about the matter in the circuit court of appeals?

The CHAIRMAN. Whether your brief in the circuit court of appeals makes an argument on the facts which substantially replies to Mr. Finch's typewritten argument submitted to Judge Hanford?

Mr. BATTLE. I would have to answer that question this way. The commission will observe that Mr. Finch did not take this case up by appeal, but by writ of review. The writ of review did not take up the evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me you can answer the question, Mr. Battle.

Mr. BATTLE. I can only answer it, may it please the commission, in that way. Mr. Finch's brief speaks for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you are giving a reason why this or that might be so, but does it reply to his argument before Judge Hanford?

Mr. BATTLE. It replies to his argument so far as I considered the substantial questions involved were concerned, yes; but to say that it discussed the evidence would not be correct, because the evidence did not go to the circuit court of appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an answer to the question.

Mr. BATTLE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES. May I make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. I have been sitting here wondering what a great deal of this is about. The inquiry is whether Judge Hanford has been guilty of any matter which subjects him properly to impeachment, and this particular phase of it must involve the judicial acts of Judge Hanford. Now, if he exercised arbitrary power or abused power, that must be shown by his acts, and whether he did right or wrong would only be determined from the evidence in the case. If we were to undertake to impeach a judge upon the arguments or the citations of counsel on the one hand, of the evidence on which he relies, there is not a judge in the civilized world who could not be impeached, because his decision would be wrong. Now, it seems to me that the only way to determine whether there is anything wrong about the action of Judge Hanford in this case is to get at those things which bespeak his judicial acts, or whatever was extra-judicial, if any such there be, and that is not involved in these briefs, with reference to these disbarment proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The point you make, then, is that the entire evidence should go before the body which determines the question.

Mr. HUGHES. Or else that the briefs are unimportant. It seems to me that the briefs are unimportant. These, again, are unimportant unless the evidence, the facts, are before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MCCOY. There is this additional point about it, Mr. Hughes. As I recollect it, Judge Hanford's opinion undertakes to quote several pages of the testimony; is that right?

Mr. DORR. That is right.

Mr. MCCOY. That is a factor that might be kept in mind, too.

Mr. HUGHES. A great deal of unnecessary material probably is going into the record, which will not be helpful to you in determining this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Quite so.

Mr. HUGHES. And if any of it is material, certainly the question could not be determined without the evidence, and it is to be borne in mind that only the evidence that Mr. Finch took was transcribed. That is all that is being offered.

Thereupon the witness was temporarily withdrawn from the stand.

Mrs. ELIZABETH STEVENSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state your full name to the committee?

A. Elizabeth Stevenson.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. I want to apologize to you for keeping you waiting as much as you have been; I understand you have children at home who need your service.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the chairman that I would like if he would ask the lady to speak as loud and distinctly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you acquainted with Judge C. H. Hanford of this city?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that gentleman at the table there now, standing up, by sight [pointing to Judge Hanford, who stands up in the court room]?—A. No, sir; I have never seen him.

Q. Have you ever seen him before, to your knowledge?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. That is the truth.

Q. That is a correct statement?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are excused.

Witness excused.

J. L. FINCH, recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, how much longer do you think you will keep Mr. Finch on the stand?

Mr. DORR. I am drawing my examination pretty near to a close, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; proceed.

Mr. DORR. Has any determination been made with respect to this evidence yet?

The CHAIRMAN. Any decision reached, you mean?

Mr. DORR. Yes; by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair has been looking over the opinion in the case during the recess and has noticed that in the opinion there is a considerable amount of the testimony reproduced—quoted in the opinion. In view of that fact the chair is still of the opinion that the proposition made a while ago that Mr. Finch be allowed to select a reasonable amount of testimony from the record and insert it in our record, is relevant and proper inasmuch as the court cited a considerable quantity of the evidence. If there is other evidence of a different character the quotation of it would tend to show, or at least tend to shed some light on the question of the consideration of all the evidence and the bona fides of the opinion.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, it appeals to me very strongly that if the committee is to examine this evidence or any part of it that it should examine all of it. The record which has been filed in Judge Hanford's court and which is now before this committee consists only of the evidence that was adduced before Judge Smith at the instance of Mr. Finch. It does not contain any evidence offered or admitted by opposing counsel. It is all his testimony, and we are content and shall be satisfied without attempting to produce the other evidence, to take this record made by Mr. Finch; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it would be manifestly unfair and prejudicial to the committee and to the rights of the accused to allow this witness to simply cut out excerpts of that testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Why would it, in view of the fact that the court has cut out excerpts from the other side of the testimony and inserted it in the opinion without quoting the testimony of the character to which you now refer.

Mr. DORR. The court only included in the opinion a continuous part of the testimony covering three pages, to show the tedius and laborious examination, not to illustrate any of the evidence, or to cover any point that was proven or not proven in the case.

The CHAIRMAN. What injustice would be done if Mr. Finch were given the opportunity to point out what he considers the material evidence in support of his contention, and then have the whole of the record submitted to the entire committee at Washington. It would relieve the labors of the committee somewhat and it does impress me, Mr. Dorr, that while I have not had time to read the entire opinion so much of it as I have read referring to some of the evidence would justify giving the opportunity to Mr. Finch to point out in the record evidence of an essentially different character from that which the judge quotes.

Mr. DORR. Yes; upon that proposition it would be eminently fair for Mr. Finch to have the opportunity to do so, but to cut out certain disconnected statements which may be found in this record to prove the charges against Judge Hanford would be monstrous, manifestly unjust. The only way that any judge, or any layman, in order to arrive at a correct conclusion, would be to read the whole record; not a few isolated excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you personal knowledge of whether the judge read the whole of the record?

Mr. DORR. Well, I know from Judge Hanford's manner in handling those cases, that he did read the whole of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not personal knowledge.

Mr. DORR. No, sir; I do not know it personally in this case, but I am willing to assure the committee that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another feature of it which, Mr. Dorr, clearly you are misapprehending. And I stated it to you once before. The nature of the duty imposed on this subcommittee is this. We are not bound to take all the testimony and we are admitting such testimony as you have offered as a matter of grace and not a matter of right. We are not a court; we are much more in the nature of a grand jury than a court, seeking—in fact our duty would be perhaps to confine ourselves to incriminating evidence to report to the whole committee, that they might determine whether there was sufficient ground for that committee to recommend proceedings by the House by way of impeachment. But we have gone far beyond that and are practically permitting you to make a defense here; not as a matter of grace, rather; and the report we make is not a finality; it is merely introductory to action, if further action should be taken. Indeed, I might add that the report of the whole Judiciary Committee is of the same nature.

Mr. DORR. I understand, generally, Mr. Chairman, what you have stated. I must confess, however, that I further understood from the resolution under which the committee was sitting that the committee would try to investigate, not one side of the question only, but to get at the facts—the truth of the matter, and I am very frank to admit that thus far the committee has been very considerate in attempting to arrive at that result.

Now, coming to the concrete question before the committee. Here is a charge made by Mr. Finch that Judge Hanford's conduct in this case was in some manner nonjudicial. Just what he exactly charges I have not been able to ascertain myself from hearing the testimony, but it certainly involves some suggestion at least of nonjudicial duty on the part of Judge Hanford, involving the decision in this case. Now, suppose that——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) Involving the whole conduct of the case in his court——

Mr. DORR. The whole conduct of the case in his court. Now, the evidence will show, if it may be read, the enormous amount of testimony that was introduced before Judge Smith by Mr. Finch, and I undertake to say to this committee now that any man that will read that testimony must come to the conclusion that Mr. Finch's charges were not proven, exactly as Judge Smith reported in his master's report filed in this case. Now, then, to allow the witness, who is naturally a prejudiced witness—must be in the very nature of things—to excerpt from that entire record of 889 pages a few statements that he may find in the record disconnected with the entire statements of the witness, or other credible testimony that was introduced to prove his case would not be fair to this committee. It is not based upon a sufficient investigation of the case to determine whether Mr. Finch's position is correct or wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps I can shorten the matter. My colleagues are agreed that the typewritten briefs filed with Judge Hanford by Mr. Finch shall be withdrawn from our record; that they and the briefs filed by the respective parties before the circuit court of appeals, and the record of the evidence taken before the master in chancery, or commissioner, Smith, shall not go into our record, but shall accompany it to the whole committee at Washington for such use as the whole committee may make of them. In the meantime the chair is more than ever of the opinion that Mr. Finch should have the right to put into our record a reference to such parts of the testimony in that 886 pages which he thinks sustain his contention.

Mr. DORR. I have no possible objection to that arrangement, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. DORR. I think it is fair and just.

The CHAIRMAN. It will shorten the proceedings and probably be the best way out of our present difficulty.

Now, you said a moment ago that you wanted to find out from Mr. Finch just what his grounds of complaint were. It seems to me you have the best opportunity in the world to do it, as you are examining the witness—proceed.

Mr. DORR. I will continue my chronological examination of the witness before asking any of those general questions, with the permission of the chairman.

Q. After Judge Hanford rendered his opinion on your petition for reopening the case—the Heckman & Hansen bankruptcy proceedings—there was a bar meeting called in the Federal court room, as I understood you.—A. That is true.

Q. At which you were present?—A. That is true.

Q. And how many lawyers did you state were there, Mr. Finch?—A. Two or three hundred.

The CHAIRMAN. Speak up a little louder.

A. Two or three hundred.

Mr. DORR. And who presided at that meeting?

A. Judge Hanford called it to order and then Roger S. Greene was made chairman.

Q. Judge Roger S. Greene?—A. Yes.

Q. Ex-chief justice of the Territorial court; that is the gentleman you refer to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what happened there?—A. I went over that in my direct testimony, Mr. Dorr.

Q. You do not wish to add to or take anything away from the narative statement you gave?—A. No, sir.

Q. In your opening testimony?—A. No, sir.

Q. A committee, I believe, you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As having been appointed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that committee afterwards went into an investigation of this whole matter, didn't they?—A. I don't know; I would not say that.

Q. You were with them how much, Mr. Finch?—A. Two evenings, and possibly three.

Q. Where did you meet?—A. I do not recall—it was here in the city.

Q. At the court room?—A. No, sir; it was at some office.

Q. Some lawyer's office?—A. Yes, sir; it may have been Mr. Hughes's; I do not recall.

Q. And you had full opportunity to explain your conduct, did you?—A. So long as they sat; we talked freely together.

Q. There was never any attempt to curtail you, I mean?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were given full opportunity to be heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That committee afterwards filed a report, didn't they?—A. They did.

Q. Were not all the papers in this case and all the records which you desired submitted to this committee?—A. As far as we went; as long as we sat. They got through before I had any notion they were through.

Q. Did they refuse to consider anything which you offered? That is what I want to get at.—A. No, sir.

Q. They gave you full opportunity to present anything you wanted to present?—A. Now let me explain what I mean. They called a meeting whenever they wanted to and we discussed matters, and then they would adjourn, and when they would want another meeting they would call another and I would meet them. Now I met them on each occasion and we talked freely on those occasions, but, as I said a moment ago, they got through——

Q. (Interrupting.) They had the evidence in this case also before them, didn't they?—A. I do not recall that.

Q. You do not remember that Mr. Hughes called your attention to it and asked you to explain the evidence or any part of it that might have a bearing?—A. I have forgotten whether they made use of the evidence or not. I know we went through a great number of papers.

Q. And that committee continued to exist from July 26 until September 6, didn't it?—A. I do not know what the dates were.

Q. Approximately that time?—A. It may be true; I do not know, sir.

Q. Now, you knew that they filed a report?—A. I read that they did in the papers; yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see the report?—A. Not for a year or two years.

Q. Why not?—A. I did not have any curiosity to look at it after I saw the newspaper report, and no copy was given me.

Q. Was it printed in full in the newspapers?—A. I think not.

Q. You did not have interest enough to go up to the courthouse to look at it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You knew that the committee agreed unanimously, didn't you, in the matter?—A. I think so.

Q. Mr. E. C. Hughes was the chairman of the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Gilman, Mr. Powell, Mr. Turner, Mr. John Arthur were the other members?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they filed the unanimous report?—A. For anything I know. I don't know.

Q. You never have seen it?—A. I have.

Q. When did you see it?—A. A couple of years afterwards.

Q. A couple of years afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you knew from the newspaper reports, or otherwise, at the time what the findings were, didn't you?—A. In effect.

Q. In effect the charges that you have made against those four attorneys were groundless?—A. I don't know—I don't know about that—that they made any such report, and if they did I do not know what business they had making a report on it. It had already been whitewashed by the bar, and they were not appointed a committee to look into the charges against them.

Q. They were not?—A. Why, no; they were appointed to look after me, after the bar sat there and whitewashed the other side. That is why I never took any interest in their proceedings. I never asked for a meeting before them; they did just as they pleased. They had a meeting when they wanted to meet together and I went and talked to them, and when they got through it was their business. I never paid any more attention to it than that, except to treat them as courteously as I knew how when I met them.

Q. Don't you know that the committee found that the charges made by Finch against the several members of the bar were all without foundation and were made without a sufficient investigation of the facts?—A. That sounds like the language I remember reading a year or two afterwards.

Q. It sounds familiar, does it?—A. Yes.

Q. And that they found "We think that Mr. Finch made the charges believing and relying in a great measure upon the erroneous statement made to him by his client Mr. Heckman."—A. I think I remember that.

Q. "We think this statement"——A. But I never hid behind that. I never claimed it.

Q. (Reading:) We think this statement, taken with certain facts and circumstances connected with the Heckman & Hansen litigation were sufficient to cause Mr. Finch to make a careful investigation to determine their truth or falsity. They were wholly insufficient without such an investigation to justify the charges made, and in making them the conclusions reached by Mr. Finch were reached by illogical, erratic, and perverted reasoning.

A. I remember that.

Q. And you remember that, in effect, this committee of the bar recommended to the court that on account of your tender age and inexperience and erratic disposition that you be not disbarred, but be reprimanded.—A. I do not. I never heard it.

Q. You never heard that?—A. I never heard it until this time.

Mr. McCoy. Did they ever take any testimony about your erratic disposition?

A. No, sir; and I think——

Mr. Hughes. I think the report had better speak for itself, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr. I ask that it be introduced.

The Chairman. What is the relevancy of it?

Mr. Dorr. It is the report of the committee of the bar association on this very matter.

The Chairman. We are not trying Mr. Finch or the bar association, are we?

Mr. Dorr. No, sir; but you are trying Judge Hanford, and this is what grew out of this proceeding.

The Chairman. Was he any party to this at all and did he take any action on it, or was he in any way connected with it?

Mr. Dorr. Mr. Finch has stated that he called the meeting, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Was he one of this committee?

Mr. Dorr. No, sir.

The Chairman. Did the committee report to him?

Mr. Dorr. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Did he take any action on the report?

Mr. DORR. He simply refrained from taking any action to disbar Mr. Finch.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, he handed down some kind of a report, according to the newspaper accounts.

Mr. DORR. I think that ought to be established.

Mr. MCCOY. I think that ought to go in because I would like Mr. Finch to be given an opportunity to explain that.

Mr. DORR. As to what report was handed down?

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Finch yesterday stated that he read in the newspapers at one time a statement to the effect that Judge Hanford had from the bench, when he was not there and without any notice to him, rendered an opinion, I presume on the basis of this report.

The CHAIRMAN. I overlooked that feature of it. If Judge Hanford took any action on it it is relevant. Let it go into the record.

The supplemental report of the committee of the bar association is marked "Exhibit No. 36."

Mr. DORR. Can you tell us about that newspaper report now, that which Mr. McCoy has just referred to?

Mr. MCCOY. I am not at all concerned with the newspaper report, but if Judge Hanford did any such a thing somebody must know it officially, and it must be susceptible of proof by producing whatever Judge Hanford did, if it was done in a judicial way.

Mr. DORR. I fully agree with you about that, but I do not think it is a fair way to prove a thing of this kind to have a witness state that a newspaper man told him that somebody else told him something.

Mr. MCCOY. That is just exactly my point, and you were beginning to ask him about the newspaper, and I interrupted you to say that there was a regular way of proving it.

Mr. DORR. I intended to ask him if he knew anything about any proceeding in court.

Mr. MCCOY. He testified about that yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. We will get to that probably in the end. Do you wish to ask him about the newspaper report?

Mr. DORR. A little later.

Q. You know that this matter came before the bar association, didn't you, of Seattle, too?—A. I do.

Q. Were you present at any investigation that was carried on by the bar association?—A. I was not. I never heard that there was one carried on.

Q. Sir?—A. I never heard that there was one carried on.

Q. You didn't?—A. I never heard of it.

Q. Are you a member of the Seattle Bar Association?—A. I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose, unless the judge was in some way mixed into it, that it would hardly be proper to go into it.

Mr. DORR. I do not understand that he was.

Mr. HUGHES. If I may be permitted to make an explanation as to whether it is material whether it goes into the record or not—without any reference to Mr. Finch, at all—I would state that the committee made its investigation and reported to the bar association itself; that that report has now gone in evidence. Then the bar association, on receiving that report, takes action and submitted the whole matter to Judge Hanford, and whatever Judge Hanford did, of which some mention has been made by the witness, must have been predicated, first, on the report to the bar association, and, second, the action of the bar association on the report of the committee, and it is that meeting of the bar association to which Mr. Dorr now refers, and it seems to me that that, perhaps, ought to go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. His question indicated that it was some independent action by the bar association.

Mr. HUGHES. The action of the bar association was the action taken on our report. That action of the association, together with our report, as I take it, were submitted to Judge Hanford, and whatever Judge Hanford did, which is a matter to be considered hereafter, must have been based upon the report of our committee and the action of the bar association, through which that report was made.

Mr. MCCOY. Was the meeting that was called by Judge Hanford in the first instance a meeting of the members of the bar practicing in the Federal court, or a meeting of the bar association of the city of Seattle?

Mr. HUGHES. My recollection of it is that it was a meeting of the bar practicing in the Federal court. At that time there was a King County Bar Association, but it had practically fallen into disuse, as it has ever since. Subsequent to that time, a city bar association was organized. The King County Bar Association hadn't had meetings for some time—some years prior to that time—hence a general meeting was called by Judge Hanford in view of what had preceded, some discussion in regard to which reference has been made by the witness. At that meeting he called them to order and asked them to select a chairman, and Judge Greene was selected, and then this committee was appointed. When the committee was ready to report, as I recall it, Judge Greene again assembled the bar practicing in the Federal court and to that meeting this report was made. That is my understanding of it, and then the action of that meeting is recorded and is what Mr. Dorr is now presenting to the committee, and the entire matter was then submitted to Judge Hanford. The committee will remember that the witness stated that Judge Hanford had made certain announcements to him when he granted him leave to obtain these books. Now, Judge Hanford, instead of himself taking any action, called the bar and said it was a matter for the bar—I am speaking of what the witness testified, that it was a matter for the bar to consider—and turned it over to the bar meeting, of which mention has been made, and then followed the events that I have stated.

Mr. MCCOY. Where is the resolution, if any, by which the matter was referred to the committee?

Mr. DORR. Originally?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes, sir; from the very beginning.

Mr. DORR. That is the first meeting [handing document to Mr. Hughes].

Mr. HUGHES. Is this the first meeting?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I see that Roger S. Greene was chairman and George H. Walker was secretary. This is a record of the first meeting.

That really ought to precede our report [handing document to Mr. McCoy]. I have not examined that paper, but I understood that Mr. Dorr has.

Mr. McCoy. This should be marked in evidence as an exhibit.

Document, being the original resolutions adopted at the meeting first called by Judge Hanford, is received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 45."

The Witness. That refers to that meeting.

Mr. McCoy. Is that substantially—does that Exhibit No. 45 contain a statement substantially as to what took place there?

A. Yes, sir. The only exception I would take to it is where it says, "After the reading of the documents above referred to and after some discussion, Mr John Arthur moved the following resolution." I do not think that there was any discussion. I take exception to the report of the committee.

Q. What documents were referred to in that?—A. The petition which I have referred to here in re Ballinger was read. Judge Smith's report was read and the report there says Judge Hanford's opinion—I do not recall that that was read—I think it was just those two papers that were read; I am not sure.

Mr. Dorr. Who do you say made the motion, Mr. Finch?

A. Ira Bronson made it in the first instance.

Q. The certificate shows that it was made by Mr. John Arthur.—A. That is not correct.

Mr. McCoy. Now, this appears to be in the nature of a report to Judge Hanford reciting what took place at that meeting.—A. Yes.

Q. And it recites that certain papers were read, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

The motion of Richard A. Ballinger for your disbarment, the report of Mr. Eben Smith, United States master, and the opinion of Judge Hanford confirming the report of the said mater in chancery—

And then this report continues as follows:

After reading the documents above referred to and after some discussion, Mr. John Arthur moved the following resolution: "Resolved by this committee of the bar of Seattle, convened by request of his honor Judge Hanford, That after hearing a very full statement of all the matters in issue between J. L. Finch, as counsel on one side, and Richard A. Ballinger, James B. Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones, C. A. Reynolds, John P. Hoyt, Warren A. Worden, Peter L. Larson, Eben Smith, A. C. Bowman, V. F. Fisher, it is the judgment of the bar that each and all of these gentlemen acted fairly in the entire proceedings involved and are wholly free from blame, and that there is not a scintilla of evidence produced to impugn their motive or their action or to sustain any of the charges brought against them."

Were you called upon to give any proof up to this time?

A. None, whatever. I even suggested that I would like to address them, but I wanted to be invited first.

Q. That was the time when you made that suggestion?—A. Yes, sir; and I was not invited.

Q. The resolution was seconded by Mr. Wilson R. Gay, and, being debated and put by the chair, was duly adopted?—A. The only debate was just a suggestion by Judge McCafferty, that it might be that I had in mind the offering of an apology and that they ought to hear me.

Q. Now, the names which I have read here as the names of those against whom you were said to have made charges are some of the gentlemen against whom you claimed yesterday you had absolutely never made any charges.—A. That is true.

Q. And then the resolution proceeds:

On motion of Mr. E. C. Hughes, in order that Mr. Finch may have an ample opportunity to exculpate himself, if he can, from the charges necessarily involved in the matters appertaining to this meeting and in the resolution just passed, I move that a committee of five, etc., be appointed.

That was what took place next?

A. That was what took place next.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, the next step in the proceedings will be the report of the Seattle Bar Association, and I would like to offer that as the next exhibit.

Mr. HIGGINS. To Judge Hanford?

Mr. DORR. No; it is an independent action by the Seattle Bar Association growing out of this same matter, as explained by Mr. Hughes a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want to look at it, Mr. Finch?

Mr. FINCH. I would like to [examines document].

The CHAIRMAN. Are you sufficiently familiar with this to state whether it is a correct copy?

A. I do not know anything about it. I never heard of that thing in my life until just now; I never saw it or heard of it; I did not know it was in existence. I never heard of the meeting of the bar association that adopted it. I have no knowledge of it at all. It is a complete surprise to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, Mr. Dorr. I understood you to say that was a copy, but that you had one attested.

Mr. DORR. I said I would have one attested by the proper officer of the bar association. That had better be marked subject to verification. I can have him identify that one.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be marked as an exhibit.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 47."

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Hughes, does that seem to be a report of the Seattle Bar Association?

Mr. HUGHES. The first meeting, I remember, was, as Mr. Finch described it, a meeting of the bar and not of the association technical y. There was an existing association which had practically fallen into disuse. In other words we hadn't had meetings for several years prior to that time. Now I do not recall about this. I do not recall about this meeting. I have a very distinct recollection of the other matters, but I do not at present recall this meeting, and I think it is highly probable that I was not at it. It may have been that I abstained from going there, having been a member of the committee whose report was being passed upon.

Mr MCCOY. The organization which you say was practically defunct was known as the King County Bar Association.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is to-day a Seattle Bar Association, and can not we find out when that was organized and whether that is the report of this body or simply members of the Federal bar?

Mr. HUGHES. We can find it out; I notice that they had the same president and the same secretary who acted, and we will supply that.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it go in.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Finch, I understand you to state that when the motion was served upon you for a confirmation of Judge Smith's report you were notified that it came up for hearing the next day, is that correct?

A. Let me have that question again, Mr. Stenographer.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. No, sir, it is not correct. I did not make that statement.

Q. Then I thoroughly misapprehend your testimony on that point.—A. I told you very specifically that that motion lay dormant for a long while along with the exceptions of the receiver—of the referee's—or the exceptions of the bankrupt, I mean, to the referee's report.

Q. What proceeding was that which you referred to on yesterday in which you said that you were served with the motion in the afternoon requiring you to be in court the next morning at 10 o'clock.—A. I said that one day I came to Judge Hanford and obtained from him an order upon the referee, Judge Smith, to return the evidence in the case and that the afternoon of that same day I was served with a notice that this motion which you referred to and which you have in your hand, and the exceptions of the bankrupt to the referee's report, would come up the next morning at 10 o'clock.

Q. Now what is there in your mind that is at all irregular or wrong in that?—A. Trying to hear an exception to a referee's report without any evidence. I do not know how to do it myself, as a lawyer.

Q. It was not done in this case, was it, Mr. Finch?—A. Why, it was done. That is what I am complaining about.

Q. Now look at the motion I show you and see whether you are not mistaken [showing].—A. No; I am not mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. DORR. Mr Finch, the motion was served on you on the 10th day of May, was it not [showing]; and also the notice of the hearing was served on you at the same time.

A. That is absolutely correct.

Q. And the date fixed in the notice is on the 14th of May, or at such time as counsel can be heard?—A. That is true; that is the date fixed in the notice.

Q. The report of the referee had been on file since January 25 preceding those dates, hadn't it?—A. That is true.

Q. And you had not yet brought up the evidence.—A. That is true.

Q. And those attorneys served you with this motion in order to compel you to bring in the evidence.—A. I do not know what that was.

Q. Well, you know as a matter of fact in the natural procedure that that would be the effect of it.—A. Well, that might be, but this was a peculiar procedure, and I do not know just what actuated them. I will let them say.

Q. The report of the general master in chancery had been on file in Judge Hanford's court since the 24th day of January.—A. That is true.

Q. And you had taken no steps to bring in the evidence.—A. Until when?

Q. Until away later.—A. Well, a while later.

Q. Until after this motion was made and served on you?—A. I can not say with reference to the time that that motion was served.

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, is it not a fact that this motion was the thing that moved you to get that evidence in?—A. Oh, I don't think so. I know it was not. If it occurred as you say it might have made me apprehensive, but it never was the thing that moved me.

Q. It might have made you a little more in a hurry to get it finished?—A. No, sir. There was nothing that could move me to get into a hurry at that time, sir. I was not scared for a moment. I never have been.

Q. I did not insinuate that you were scared; but were you trying to delay the proceedings?—A. No, sir. The truth was I did not have the money. My clients were bankrupt and I had to raise it personally if it ever got to the court; and I certainly wanted it to get there, as an officer of the court and, as I supposed, a friend of the court at that time; and I would have sold anything I could to raise it, and I raised it for him.

Q. Are you able now to fix the date on which the hearing was had before Judge Hanford?—A. The date that the hearing was had?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; it was heard on the 8th day of June.

Q. Is that the time at which Judge Battle made his argument?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you filed your written argument at that time or before?—A. No; not until after that.

Q. Not until after that?—A. Yes.

Q. How long?—A. I would like to have the argument and I will settle it for you. I have to refresh my mind from that [referring to document]. At the time that Judge Hanford heard this, over my objections, because the evidence was not there, it was the 8th day of June; but having given me an order on the 7th day of June to get the evidence, I took 10 days—I asked for 10 days in which to put in a written argument. Subsequently and within the 10 days I put in the argument which is in my hand and which is marked "Exhibit No. 44," and I wish to call your attention to a statement or two bearing on just what I am testifying about, which is contained in the argument itself.

Q. Does that in any way help you to fix those dates?—A. Yes. I had objected to certain parties appearing before the court, and I said "our concern is not that the matter be not heard at all, but that it be not heard until the evidence arrives." And then I follow that and say, "The following is on the merits and with the hope that the evidence will reach your honor as soon as the argument." Then, at the end of the argument, and that fixes the date definitely.

Mr. DORR. Now, then, Mr. Finch——

Mr. MCCOY. Let him finish his answer.

A. (Continuing.) I say, "the lack of time after the record should have been returned to your honor is responsible for whatever defects may be found in the argument. We have had access to the record in its unbound form for the past day and a half, though the same has not been returned to the court." So, when I filed this I had gotten access to the record in the stenographer's room, but it had not been returned even then. That is one reason why I did not care whether the committee or anybody else had the evidence. Judge Hanford did not when I gave him this.

Q. Now, let me try and clear up a little bit of uncertainty which seems to surround this matter. I understand you to say just now that you got the order from Judge Hanford to have the evidence returned on the 7th day of June?—A. That is true.

Q. Is that the first time you got an order for the evidence?—A. The first time I got the order; but it was in preparation long before.

Q. Then it was after the motions were served on you?—A. That is true.

Q. Because the motions were served on you, that was what inspired you to get the order for the evidence?—A. Not at all. I had contracted for the evidence before and had paid for it. What inspired me to get the order was to give the authority to the evidence when it should come. I had to bring it in some way. While I had a personal contract with the stenographer to get it out, it did not have any official character until I gave it one in some way. You see Judge Smith had made his report and his duty had ended, and so then I got an order from Judge Hanford to direct Judge Smith to send the evidence up, so as to give it a character.

Q. You had this a day and a half before you filed your argument?—A. No; I didn't have that, but I had access to it in its unbound form.

Q. Well, you had access to the transcript of the evidence?—A. For a day and a half; yes, sir.

Q. For a day and a half. Now, when did you file your amended argument with the court after that day and a half—I mean the original argument?—A. The original argument within 10 days after the hearing on the 8th. He gave me 10 days, and that must have been on the 18th of June.

Q. Then this transcript was in existence at least as early as the 16th of June?—A. About then.

Q. Why didn't you file it right away?—A. Because it was not done. It was filed the first minute I could shoot it in.

Q. And it was on file before you filed your amended argument?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is true. That is my recollection. I think it was because it was on file that I shot in the amended argument. I know I hurried in order to try to get it to Judge Hanford before he should render any decision.

Q. This transcript was filed in court on June 21, 1904 [showing].—A. That is so marked.

Mr. McCoy. Not by you—marked by the clerk.

A. It is not marked by me.

Mr. Dorr. Well, it is marked by the clerk of the court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The official filing mark shows it was deposited in court on the 21st day of June, 1904?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Judge Hanford's opinion in the case was filed on July 11, 1904?—A. I don't know, but I think so. I take your word for it.

Q. Now, I want to ask you a general question which has been suggested by a member of the committee in this examination. What particular things, points, do you allude to in all of these proceedings as involving Judge Hanford in any unjudicial conduct?—A. His refusal to reopen the estate under the circumstances that I have detailed and his handling of the whole proceedings from the time that I presented the petition to reopen the estate and up to the time that he delivered that phillipic that I told you about yesterday.

Q. The one which you read about in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you know about that personally?—A. As I stated yesterday, I do not have any knowledge of it which makes it competent evidence in my—according to my understanding of the law, I realize that. At the same time from my investigation that was made at the time I know it was true, for my own purposes.

Q. Can you produce that newspaper?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. Can you produce that newspaper?—A. I can not, but I can find it in the files of the Star if they are in tact—I will undertake to do it—would you like it?

Q. Yes, I would like it very much. Will you bring it in please at some future time?—A. I will, if it is in existence in the Star files—in the Star office.

Mr. McCoy. Is there any issue on that point?

Mr. Hughes. Except that it is made the basis of evidence.

Mr. McCoy. How is that?

Mr. Hughes. It is hearsay, twice hearsay.

Mr. McCoy. Is there any denial that Judge Hanford did, from the bench, deliver something in the way of an opinion upon Mr. Finch's case or not, regardless of what it contained; did he do that certain thing?

Mr. Hughes. After the report of the committee?

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

Mr. Hughes. My understanding is no, that he did not; but I just say that from the information I have, but I do not want to go on the record as giving hearsay evidence here. We will find that out for the committee.

Mr. Dorr. That was at the time the committee reported on the disbarment proceedings that we have been inquiring about, was it?

The Witness. No, sir; it was some two or three weeks after. There was nothing at all in Judge Hanford's court—that is, at least there was not anything at all in Judge Hanford's court to require any expression from him at all. There was no motion or demurrer or anything else pending that I know anything about.

Q. There was a report made by this committee of five attorneys filed in Judge Hanford's court in September.—A. I do not know when it was filed.

Q. Now, was it not about that time that you saw this newspaper article?—A. I rather think it was about the 14th of October, that is the date that I should look into the Star files to find it first. If I did not find it then I can find some reference that will guide me to where it is.

Q. You think it was with reference to the report that the committee made, or not?—A. I never supposed it had any reference to anything, sir.

Q. What is you age, Mr. Finch, now?—A. Thirty-eight.

Q. Ten years ago you were 28?—A. Twenty-eight.

Q. Are you practicing law here at the present time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you quit the practice? Or how is it that you answered "No, sir"?—A. I have withdrawn from the practice; yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. The 1st day of July.

Q. Of this year?—A. This year.

Q. Are you going away to some other place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I do not know; I have not determined. I do not know that I shall move away. I have some mining interests that take me away, off and on.

Q. Do I understand that you have abandoned the practice of law altogether?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Permanently?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORR. That is all.

The WITNESS. At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain the testimony, if it needs any explanation, that was referred to awhile ago as having been given by me before Judge Smith. Down there the examiner, with myself on the stand, wanted to restrict me strictly to the books of the bank and what they contained, as justifying my remarks to Judge Hanford. The spirit of my remarks to Judge Hanford was nothing of the sort. I wanted the books of the bank in order to make out a complete case. That was understood by all of us at that time. The point that I was trying to make at that time was the connection of the Scandinavian-American Bank with the property, and I wanted to show that they had put up the money to purchase it through this man Mayhew, who pretended to be the purchaser, and while they testified that that was not true—several persons had—I got the books of the bank to prove it; and then occurred the colloquy which you heard so much about before Judge Hanford, and so when they asked me, "What do you find in the books to disbar Judge Ballinger?" I said, "Nothing," and so with the others; and you will find in the very evidence that he read that I made that same controversy at that time.

Mr. MCCOY. I do not think the question needed that explanation, although I am glad you made it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there objection made or any ruling made by the commissioner on the point which you spoke of, and does the record show it?—A. No, no; except he made a report.

Q. Well, does the record on its face show in any way that an attempt was made to limit you to prove the proposition you had laid down, by the books of the bank and that alone?—A. No; nothing only as you would infer it from that examination there. No; that is all.

Q. Did you have other proof aliaunda the books?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you permitted to put it in the record?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it in the record?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. In other words, you were endeavoring to prove a conspiracy, and you were having the usual difficulty in proving that sort of thing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That always exists in any case?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Mr. DORR. The only conspiracy that you found existing existed in your own mind, didn't it, Mr. Finch?

A. No, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. That is for the committee to judge, Mr. Dorr.

Q. You were asked—now, do you want to make any other statement?—A. I don't think so now.

Q. You were asked whether you had filed any appearance in the State court; what is the method in the State court of substitution of attorneys?—A. Well, a formal method would be to stipulate between the client and the attorneys and then take an order upon that stipulation. That is quite a general practice. But it is also a practice when one attorney supplants another, that the other simply proceeds in the case, and no formal record is made.

Q. Well, did anybody object to your appearing as attorney for Heckman & Hansen in the State court?—A. There was attempted to be made the point that I did not represent Heckman & Hansen, but Mr. Heckman was present there, and I claimed that I at least represented him. Mr. Hansen was ill at the time, and Mr. Reynolds claimed that he was competent to represent Mr. Hansen.

Q. Well, did Mr. Heckman disclaim your attorneyship?—A. No. He was there personally and behind me.

Q. You mean by behind you that he was there authorizing you to appear for him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the method in bankruptcy of getting a substitution of attorneys?—A. Well, matters in the Federal court are more formal, and so it is necessary to get a formal substitution; at least I would infer that from the fact that before one can appear at all he must file an appearance, a paper showing his authority to appear, or at least entering his appearance formally. That being so formal, I would assume, and did in this case, that it was necessary to substitute formally the attorneys, and I did in that case, and I took an order from Judge Hanford to substitute me in place of Mr. Reynolds.

Q. Now, did you state for whom Metcalfe & Jurey appeared in the proceedings in the State court?—A. At first they appeared for Heckman & Hansen, but when I had become the attorney and was trying to thwart the delivery of the property to Mr. Mayhew, they were always in court as opponents of mine; but I never could find out whom they represented.

Q. For whom did Mr. Reynolds appear in the State court?—A. The order taken, or one of the orders at that time, defines him as the attorney for the American Bonding Co., who was the surety on the receiver's bond.

Q. Is there anything on any of the papers which have been offered and admitted in evidence here which shows who the record attorneys were for all the parties and for whom or what parties all the attorneys were appearing?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Is there anything on these exhibits which will show for whom Metcalf & Jurey were appearing, that you know of?—A. Not that I know of.

Mr. McCoy. After we adjourn I wish you would look at those exhibits, unless you can satisfy yourself now. Now, Exhibit No. 43, being No. 32817, the order approving the fourth report and directing the receiver, etc., recites that Metcalfe & Jurey appeared for themselves. What interest did they have, if any, in the matter?—A. I do not know, except as—well, I could not answer that question only this way, that subsequently I made charges against Gen. Metcalfe for his conduct in this case, and I infer that it was because of the truth of the allegations that I made that prompted him to be present on that occasion.

Q. What prompted him to appear in this matter?—A. I can not answer, unless it was the cause.

Q. Is it your belief and was it your belief that they had any personal financial interest in that proceeding?—A. Oh, they had absolutely no interest in the thing except as it might be that they wanted to keep track of things because they feared subsequent developments; now, if that is the answer, they had no other interest at all.

Q. Who fixed the price which has been referred to as the upset price at which these properties of your client should be sold?—A. I do not know. That was a matter in existence when I got into the case, and it never was disturbed in any way nor investigated.

Q. Was there any complaint ever made that the buildings or the machinery, rather, on the property was offered for sale separately, do you know?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any adjudication in the receivership proceedings in the State court in the nature of a judgment showing the indebtedness of your clients to anybody?—A. There was no adjudication whatever, and for the very good reason that the bank had bought up the plaintiff's claim, and there was no longer any plaintiff in the case.

Q. Do you believe that Heckman & Hansen were not insolvent?—A. Absolutely believe it.

Q. Under what section of the bankruptcy law did you conceive that you had a right to file a petition in voluntary bankruptcy?—A. Pardon me, I did not do so. It was Mr. Reynolds who filed the petition. But I did take the position subsequently that he did have that right, because the bankruptcy act says that any one who owes debts may file a petition and it does not say that he has to be insolvent, and I think Collier on Bankruptcy admits a bankrupt, or one filing such a petition, may in fact be solvent. It is very unusual, but nevertheless after the matter had been done I simply took the position that I thought the law warranted.

Q. Were you present at the hearings before Mr. Bowman on the question of the adequacy of the upset price?—A. I was not. I had never heard of the case at that time.

Q. You were not in the case at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there ever any complaint that the upset price was an inadequate price?—A. Only in this way: That there was a complaint made in the petition to reopen the estate in the first instance, upon the ground that the bank was attempting to get a hold of the property at a grossly inadequate price.

Q. Are there any other papers in the receivership proceedings that you think should go into the record to develop the situation fully, and if so, what are they?—A. I would like, as it is 5 o'clock now, to answer that question in the morning. I will think it over to-night.

Q. You stated yesterday, as I remember, that the order of sale, and the order confirming the sale, were in the same paper or part of the same matter?—A. That is my recollection. I will look that up to-night. I have a note upon that and I will see what it was that caused me to think that.

Q. You, I believe, were not at the hearing at which the report of the sale was confirmed?—A. In the State court?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was the order of distribution which you said you were not at?—A. It was the order of distribution which was granted that I did not know anything about.

Q. Is it usual in this State to date orders other than the mere date of filing; I mean the order itself—is it usual to date it—showing when it was made?—A. Well, the practice varies at the bar. I think the better attorneys at the bar have one practice—they all date them—the best of them do, but sometimes it is recited in the body that the matter occurred on a certain date, and the date of the order will be a week after that or more.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr, have you offered in evidence the petition for the appointment of the receiver in the State court?

Mr. Dorr. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. McCoy. Is that in court?

The Witness. It was introduced as one of the exhibits before Judge Smith.

Mr. Dorr. I have not seen it.

Mr. McCoy. And the order appointing the receiver; I would like to see both of these.

Mr. Dorr. I will look them up for you, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. Do you claim, Mr. Finch, that there was any fraud in obtaining the foreclosure judgment in the action brought by the the Scandinavian-American Bank against your clients and Curtis?

A. Yes, I do. Mr. Heckman employed Metcalfe & Jurey to fight that proceeding, or it was not a proceeding at that time, but the matter that took him to Metcalfe & Jurey was the controversy that he was in over that $5,000 note and mortgage, which resulted in that suit, and he paid them a retainer of $350.

Q. That is, he retained them, as you were informed, to go into court claiming that the arrangement really had been for a $5,000 loan, payable in five installments of equal amounts?—A. I do not know what they were to do, but it was to protect their interests on that theory of the case.

Q. Now, was the $6,000, which I believe was the amount you stated had been used in repairing a certain boat at the request of the bank; was that involved in the foreclosure suit?—A. No; that was not.

Q. Do you know what the date of the $5,000 note was?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Will you make a memorandum of it?—A. I will do so.

Q. Did Judge Hanford say anything to you at the time when he sent this matter to Judge Smith as to what his purpose was in sending it there; and, if so, what did he say?—A. His remark was that he wanted to know whether he had a set of scoundrels practicing in his court.

Q. Well, looking upon the matter as a judicial proceeding, what was the purpose of the reference to Judge Smith?—A. [Referring to document.] I remember, in answer to that question, I remember that at the time the court announced that he would refer the matter to Judge Smith he used these words: "To make a report as to what he finds the facts to be and whether they—meaning the facts—are material to reopening the case or only material to the character of the parties affected." Now, his order did not follow that exactly.

Q. Now, in what proceeding, if any, did the Scandinavian-American Bank claim that they had not bought this property sold by the receiver?—A. They claimed it before Judge Smith.

Q. Did they claim it under oath or only in argument?—A. No; under oath.

Mr. McCoy. Will you, if you can overnight, point out in the testimony where, if at all, it was proved that the bank had furnished the money to Mr. Mayhew, and what the testimony on that point is?

Q. What was your objection to the report of Mr. Smith as referee, if any?—A. My objection was that he did not find on any of the facts stated in the amended petition. He found at the end generally that in effect the bankrupts had not made a case; that was a general finding at the end; but my complaint was that he had not found specifically on any of those allegations that I had made.

Q. Now, at page 8 of Judge Hanford's opinion, there was named certain gentlemen against whom you made charges. Have you told the committee fully the names of those against whom you never made any charges?—A. I have.

Q. So that there are no others than those you have named against whom you claim you did not make charges?—A. That is true.

Q. Now, coming to these proceedings in the Bar Association; I wish you would describe a little more in detail what took place before the committee of five which was appointed.—A. They sent me word one day that they would be glad to have me meet them. I do not know whether it was that night or some subsequent night that they named. That word was brought to me by Marion Edwards, who invited me out to lunch that day and told me about it.

Q. Was he on the committee?—A. No.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was a lawyer employed in the office of Peters & Powell, Mr. Powell being one of the members of the committee. I met the committee at the appointed time. I approached them somewhat on the defensive; that is, I did not know who they were, or what they considered they were relative to this case, or what they considered their functions were. They started in by asking me, I think in effect, this—or suggesting to me in effect this: That they would like to make a unanimous report if they could do so, and they were in hopes that I might join in that report; that is, that they might smooth away some things that I thought looked dark in the case and that we might make a unanimous report, and I acquiesced in that suggestion, and then they asked me about some things, particularly in the State court; I think they asked me what was the beginning of the trouble, or, anyhow, the matter was taken up with them in that order. Not from the—not according to the order of the case as it arose in Judge Hanford's court, but according to matters as they had come up over in the State court, even before I had gotten into the case. Those matters were gone over by the committee, suggestions made here and there; sometimes they seemed to agree with the positions that I took and at other times they didn't seem to think there was so much in some of the matters as I did. I remember a general discussion there growing out of the suggestion, either from Mr. Hughes or Mr. Powell, that they could not understand why the bank had denied buying in the property; they could not see why it would not be just as well to say, "Yes; we bought it," because the expression was in the committee that they did not see any harm in their buying it.

Q. Do you mean that it was admitted there at that time that they actually had been the people who bought the property?—A. No; I mean that the committee took up that discussion among themselves as to why the bank had denied having purchased the property, that being a very prominent point, because it had raised the disturbance that it had in Judge Hanford's court. After we had discussed the matters on two or three occasions there was an adjournment as usual, and so far as I knew we were to meet again when the committee should set the time; but we never went back there, and it was because of that fact that I said what I did yesterday, that I didn't think that Mr. Hughes had ever heard the matters that I presented here to the committee, and it is because the committee upon which he was working at that time stopped in their labors before we got the matters as they had occurred in Judge Hanford's court.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is very sorry that some witnesses have been compelled to remain here all day without being called, but we will get to them to-morrow promptly, and I will ask them to be here promptly. The committee also wants to announce that it has about concluded to hold evening sessions after to-day, mostly for the purpose of getting into the record this documentary evidence; so that we will probably not have any witnesses on general subjects, but merely for the purpose of introducing documents into the record.

Mr. DORR. Before adjournment may I ask the witness two or three questions to finish up this matter if Mr. McCoy is through?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I think not.

Mr. MCCOY. I am going to ask one or two more in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you had better wait and make one bite of the cherry. The committee will be in recess until 9.30 to-morrow morning.

Whereupon, at 5.15 p. m. a recess was taken until the following day at 9.30 a. m.

ELEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1912—9.50 O'CLOCK A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment.

All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

J. L. FINCH resumed the stand.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Mr. Finch, calling your attention to "Exhibit No. 47," at page 3½ of the exhibits, the exhibit being the report indorsed by somebody "Action of the Bar Association of Seattle in re J. L. Finch;" after referring to certain transactions there is in parentheses here the following, "which transaction is illustrated in said public print by a photograph of the note in question," referring to a note which Mr. Ballinger was alleged to have something to do with. Now, when, if you know, was the photograph of that note published?—A. That was in the publication of Collier's Weekly of April 10, 1910.

Q. And that was how many years after the time when your matter was investigated by the committee of the bar?—A. Practically six years.

Q. So that you would say that this report had nothing to do with the invesgitation of you?—A. That is true. I would say that that was a report gotten up immediately after the publication in Collier's Weekly of an article reflecting on Judge Ballinger, that publication being in the April 10 number, 1910.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Finch is correct about that, and I possibly misled you unintentionally when you asked me a question yesterday. I stated at the time that I did not recall personally about that, I didn't know, that perhaps I had not been present, because I had been a member of that committee; but I have learned since then that Mr. Finch's idea about that is correct. I knew nothing about that meeting. I may not have been in the city. I don't recall anything about it.

Mr. MCCOY. The meeting at which this was——

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. That has not anything to do with this matter. It probably should not be in the record in this case. It was handed up at the time among our papers, and assumed to be an action of the bar predicated upon the prior action, but it was taken long afterwards, and, as Mr. Finch says, after the Collier attack on Judge Ballinger. It seems the bar had a meeting and that this record was made at that time, which you now have. I do not see that it has anything whatever to do with this proceeding.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you, Mr. Finch, have anything to do with instigating the publication of that article in Collier's?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. You testified, in answer to a question by Mr. Dorr, that your supplemental argument, the exhibit No. 1—it is not in evidence—but the supplemental argument you made on your exceptions to Judge Smith's report must have been filed by the 18th of June. Now, is that an independent recollection on your part, or did you mean to say that because that argument was on the 8th and you had 10 days within which to file your memorandum it must have been filed before the 18th?—A. I didn't say that about my supplemental argument, it was about my first argument.

Q. Well, the first argument.—A. Well, that was entirely an independent recollection.

Q. That is, that it was filed on the 18th?—A. Yes. It is based on this: I recall that I took, or Judge Hanford granted me 10 days to file such an argument, and, refreshing my recollection by the argument itself, in the end I refer to the fact that I had had access to the evidence in an unbound form for a day and a half before presenting the argument. Then I recall that my reason for filing my argument was to get it in on time. I did not expect any further concession from the court. Then afterwards I filed without—or presented to the court a supplemental argument. I had to get leave granted me beforehand, but I attempted to get it in and did get it in before the case was decided.

Q. It was suggested yesterday that you should look up the facts in the record of the proceeding before Judge Smith. Have you had time to do that?—A. Well, I have looked at a little of the evidence. It would be impossible to run over any considerable portion of it, but there is perhaps one or two things in the record that I can refer to and be content to rest upon——

Q. Well, would you prefer to have additional time to go over it?—A. No; I don't think so. It seems to me that in a moment or two I could point to enough in the record to damn the whole proceedings in the court. You will remember that it has been stated in the petition and has been——

Q. (Interrupting.) Which petition?—A. The petition to reopen the estate—the amended petition—and has been referred to several times on the stand, that C. A. Reynolds had been paid a sum of money by the bonding company and by the bank——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, just fix C. A. Reynolds's connection with the whole matter right at this point.—A. Yes; that is what I wanted to do. C. A. Reynolds was the attorney of Heckman & Hansen, who had been employed to supplant Metcalfe & Jury in the State court, and he filed in Judge Hanford's court the petition in bankruptcy. I have said that he was paid $100 by the bonding company and $150 by the Scandinavian-American Bank.

Q. The bonding company being the company on the bond of the receiver in the State court?—A. Yes. Now, Judge Smith, in his report, made a reference to the matter, but it would take me, I think, to explain it. I don't think that you would catch it if I did not. He makes this reference to it in his report. His report was not paragraphed or paged:

Mr. Heckman, acting for the firm of Heckman & Hansen, employed C. A. Reynolds January 2, 1902, and appeared in this court in the petition to have Heckman & Hansen adjudicated bankrupts, and they were so adjudicated, and a certain sum of money was advanced to him to use in matters of expense, etc., at one time $100 and at another time $150. Mr. Reynolds expended a portion of this money, and the rest of it is in his hands, as appears from the proof taken.

I always contended to Judge Hanford and to the circuit court of appeals that that matter might have been elucidated a little if Judge Smith had said who paid it. It would appear from a casual reading that maybe the bankrupts themselves had paid it on account. Now, I find one reference to the matter on page 113, line 4, to page 114, line 14, of the evidence that was submitted to Judge Smith and by him returned to Judge Hanford. At this time Mr. Hills—the witness under examination was Charles S. Hills, who was a representative of the bonding company——

Mr. McCoy. You are reading from what page of the testimony?

A. 113, line 4. [Reading:]

Q. At this time, Mr. Hills, had you not furnished Mr. Reynolds with money for the purpose of investigating this fraud?—A. We had furnished Mr. Reynolds money for the purpose of protecting or looking into the interests of the company, whatever they might be. We had furnished him money to pay the expenses of witnesses, etc., but we paid him no fee for his services—simply expense money, and that was largely due to the fact that you had entered charges there which we desired to have investigated as much as anybody else.

Q. Then you did pay the expenses of investigating charges against the receiver and paid Mr. Reynolds?—A. Charges of—to investigate the charges you made connected with the receivership, yes, sir.

By way of parenthesis, let me say that I had made some charges over in the State court before the sale. [Continuing reading:]

Q. And you paid Mr. Reynolds his expenses?—A. The expense of witness fees was about all there was to it.

Q. And you said you heard of the charges of fraud; did you consult with Judge Hoyt about them?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. Do you know you did not?—A. I am quite sure I did not.

Q. Did you ever at any time talk with him about the charges?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Did you make a report to your company upon those charges?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never told them about it?—A. I wired the company and asked them for authority to pay the expense connected with an investigation that was then to be had before the receiver.

Mr. HOYT. You mean before Mr. Bowman, the commissioner?

A. Yes. I don't remember the exact word, but that was the tenor or purport of the communication.

Mr. FINCH. When was that, Mr. Hills?

A. I don't remember the date, Mr. Finch. That was the time Judge Hanford referred the question to Mr. Bowman to determine whether a greater price could be obtained for the property than had been submitted as bids to the receiver.

That is the end of the testimony I am reading.

Now, let me say that that proceeding before Mr. Bowman was initiated four days after the proceeding in bankruptcy was begun. The injunction of the State court was issued simultaneously with the filing of the petition and the order of adjudication. Then I refer to Mr.—by the way——

Mr. HUGHES. (Interrupting.) Let me ask in this connection, for information, whether Mr. Finch had come into the case at the time he just mentioned?

The WITNESS. No.

Mr. HUGHES. That was before?

The WITNESS. I knew nothing about it. The amount that I have stated, a hundred dollars, I recall, was the amount that was given in evidence; but last night I was unable to put my hand on that particular—or my eye upon that particular evidence. Then I call the attention of the committee to the evidence of Mr. Mayhew, at page 284, line 3, to page 285, line 10.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Mayhew was——

A. (Interrupting.) Mr. Mayhew was the alleged purchaser of the property in the State court, and he, I alleged, was representing in fact the Scandinavian-American Bank. (Reading:)

Q. Mr. Mayhew, referring to the matter of the $150 which you testified as paid to Mr. Reynolds. State whether or not this $150 was paid to Mr. Reynolds for him, Mr. Reynolds, or, if not for he himself, for whose benefit was it paid to Mr. Reynolds?

This, by the way, is cross-examination by Judge Battle. [Continuing reading:]

A. I presume it was paid to Mr. Reynolds for the benefit of Mr. Hansen.

Q. You say you presume; state whether or not that was your understanding?—A. That was my understanding.

Q. Because of what?—A. Because he was in very needy circumstances. By reason of that fact I afterwards employed Mr. Hansen in the yards, when he was incapable of earning a man's pay; paid him full union wages for a long time.

Q. And if Mr. Reynolds did not pay this $150 or turn over this $150 to Mr. Hansen, you know nothing to the contrary?—A. Positively nothing. I would like to state how that transaction occurred. Judge Ballinger remarked to me one day in Judge Griffith's court, there was a movement on foot to do something for Mr. Hansen.

Q. A move was on foot between whom now?—A. Between the creditors and the various interested parties in the Heckman and Hansen transaction.

Q. Go on and state the matter in full.—A. He said, "Would you be in favor of contributing anything?" I said, "Yes, to Mr. Hansen only." "Well," he said "how much?" "Well," I said, "I will leave that with you entirely. You know all the facts in the case better than I do. I will be guided by your advice." And about I would say, two weeks later Judge Ballinger met me at the stairway going down to J. E. Chilberg's office, and said Mr. Reynolds called on him in connection with that Hansen proposition again. He says, "Are you ready now to give anything?" I says,

"Yes, any time." I said, "How much will I contribute?" He says, "Oh, $150." I said, "Send Reynolds out; he can have it any time." Reynolds came out and I paid it to him in cash.

Then I——

Mr. McCoy. Is there any testimony in the case as to what Mr. Reynolds did with the money?

A. Yes. To be fair, Mr. Reynolds made an explanation of the matter. He said he got the money all right, and he said, what was further, he had it in his office and Mr. Hansen could have it any time he was a mind to come and get it.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. And how long after the reciept of the money was it that he volunteered to let Mr. Hansen have it?—A. Well, the date on the check representing the $150 was April 17, 1902, and these proceedings were being had in the summer of 1903.

Mr. Hughes. You mean the taking of the testimony?

A. How is that?

Mr. Hughes. You mean the taking of the testimony?

A. Yes; when we discovered this and when Mr. Reynolds said he still had it.

Mr. Hughes. Are not the dates in the record there?

A. Beg pardon?

Q. Are not the dates in the record there; aren't the dates there?—A. No; I don't—I don't recall.

Mr. Hughes. The reason I ask for that is that it appears that the matter was submitted to Judge Hanford in June, 1903, and the testimony was taken some months earlier than that, wasn't it?

A. No; it was June, 1904, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. Hughes. Oh, was it?

A. There is in the evidence somewhere the $150 check referred to, or a check evidencing the payment of the $150. I don't find it this morning in looking over the exhibits; but I have with me a photographic copy of it, showing Judge Smith's identification of it, as well as the check itself, and which you will note is a notation down at the corner. The check is signed "M. F. Mayhew." It is made payable to cash, and down in parentheses it says "To C. A. Reynolds, Hansen settlement [producing paper].

Mr. McCoy. I will put this in evidence.

(Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 48.")

Mr. Hughes. As explanatory of this testimony respecting the helping of Mr. Hansen, is it not the fact that Mr. Hansen had about that time received a serious injury in the head while working about the yards out there, something that fractured the skull?

A. Well, without going into details as to the injury, he had received a very serious injury——

Mr. Hughes. Yes.

A. (Continuing.) And one calculated to excite the sympathy of anyone.

Mr. Hughes. And that was the occasion of this talk of raising some money to help Hansen as distinguished——

A. (Interrupting.) That is what Mr. Reynolds claimed; yes, sir.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Well, who was running this shipyard, or whatever it was, at that time?—A. Oh, when the injury occurred?

Q. When the injury happened; yes.—A. Mr. Heckman. Mr. Hansen knows nothing about any of these affairs to this day. He received a very severe injury from a shock that came—an electric shock that came—over the telephone one day, and the after effects of it was to completely annihilate his memory; he forgot his native tongue, being a Norwegian; he forgot his wife; he forgot everything, and had to learn over again as a child, and it was while he was in that condition that all of these suits were brought in the State court and the possession of his property taken away from him. When he, so to speak, went to sleep, he owned all this property; when he woke up he was a matter of charity on the town and his family as well, and he has been recovering, or did recover for three or four years thereafter, but kept learning little by little of these matters. I have had no communication with him for four or five years, and I don't know what his state is to-day; but the last I knew he was quite feeble mentally and he had not recovered a great many things in the way of memory.

Q. At the time this check, "Exhibit No. 48," was dated, was Mr. Hansen in a condition mentally to make a settlement with anybody?—A. Oh, no, no. The matters coming up over in the State court on the 6th of March, Mr. Heckman engaged me and I tried to supplant Mr. Reynolds, but he doggedly stayed in the case and helped to put through those proceedings over there, and I suggested that he had no rights, but he said in court that he at least represented Mr. Hansen. Well, Mr. Hansen was very feeble, and I would go to him and try to get him to let me take care of his affairs, but he would then go from my office to Mr. Reynolds, and Mr. Reynolds would win him over; then he would come back to my office, and if I saw him last, why, I was his attorney.

Mr. Higgins. With whom did you have the contract for the contingent fee?

A. Mr. Heckman.

Mr. McCoy. Was he employed by his company while he was in this mental condition, at the time when the accident to him happened, or didn't it happen there at all?

A. What was your question?

Q. Mr. Hughes has mentioned some accident to Mr. Hansen's head. When was that, and by whom was he employed?—A. It occurred when he was running his own business at Ballard.

Q. Oh.—A. He stepped to the——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is the only accident that has happened to him?—A. Yes; and that was the accident referred to by Mr. Hughes.

Q. And it happened while he was running his own business, and not in the employment of anybody?—A. That is true. He received a shock from the receiver of the telephone line one day, that ultimated in that injury.

Q. One question more. What is the nature of the property which Heckman & Hansen used in their business down here in shipbuilding, or whatever they were engaged in?—A. They were shipbuilders at Ballard and they owned certain real property, and had on that property a shipbuilding plant consisting of cradles and machinery of a sort applicable to that business.

Q. And of course it was waterfront?—A. Yes.

Q. Valuable property?—A. It was valuable then. It is a great deal more so to-day. Probably worth a couple of hundred thousand dollars to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with this witness?

Mr. MCCOY. Is there anything that you want to add to your testimony, now, Mr. Finch?

A. I wish to add that when I had before me the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank I got the contents of them, so far as applicable to this case, into the record in a complete manner, so that thereafter I was able with a pen and a typewriter to make practically a facsimile of those books. There were three of them—the certificate-of-deposit register, the note-and-collection teller's cash book, and the bills-receivable register; and when I tendered my argument to Judge Hanford I tendered those books at the same time. I wish to call them to the attention of the committee, and if my argument were to either go into evidence or to go along with the committee, I would like to have those books go along. You will see in there a reference to the $150 payment made Mr. Reynolds, and also a notation under the head, "Remarks. Hansen settlement."

Mr. HIGGINS. Is the committee to understand, Mr. Finch, that you do not care to put into the record any notations from the 882 pages of evidence that was taken before the referee in addition to the statement that you have already made?

A. I can only say this, that it is extremely difficult to me to know what to offer at this time. When I went before Judge Hanford, as a matter of precaution, so that I might have, forever, anything that I ever wanted to put my hands on, I put in such evidence as I wanted, and it included all the files from the State court—the original files in all of those cases. Then I had and saw that Judge Hanford got all evidence that I submitted. But now, then, to know what would be complete enough to give this committee at this time I hardly know; but I shall rest upon what I have put in from the testimony.

Mr. HIGGINS. Are we to understand that you do not care to put in anything further than what you have read?

A. Yes; I think you may understand that. I think I will rest on that. Then, I think, there is another item I would like to submit. I have claimed that the receiver never received any money from the bank or anyone else for the property. I have not claimed it on the ground that the money was not afterwards paid in—it is not because any money was lost through the transaction—but I claim that to show that the receiver was not acting in good faith, but was simply playing a part, and the part was in the interest of the bank. So, because of that I want to offer at this time——

Mr. MCCOY. (Interrupting.) Just a minute, Mr, Finch [consulting with the chairman].

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to have read to you what you last stated?

A. No. I wish to offer now a photographic copy of an exhibit which was offered in the case, which is in the room now. I could put the original in, but I don't care to disturb the record that is in Judge Hanford's court. The original of this photographic copy lies over on the desk. It is a certificate of deposit for $20,124.

Mr. McCoy. $20,064.77.

A. Yes; and is the certificate of deposit that was paid into the State court to straighten the books of that court after the receiver had been discharged. The depositor there is noted as "We." That means the bank. And it is also so noted on the books of the bank, a copy of which I have just tendered to you.

Mr. McCoy. In other words, the certificates of deposit reads "We have deposited in this bank $20,064.77," and so forth, not showing who.

(No response.)

Mr. McCoy. Let this be marked, please, before you go ahead, Mr. Finch.

(Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 49.")

Mr. McCoy. You think that was after the receivership account had been filed or——

A. (Interrupting.) It is dated the day the receiver was discharged. He had made a report, however, on the 8th previous to the 24th when he was discharged, in which he pretended that he had that money in his hands. I don't know how extended I ought to go into those proceedings. May I say this, however, that the cause for that record being made at that time, or any certificate being gotten up, was the fact that I at that time had gone to the Supreme Court of the State of Washington for a writ of prohibition and I had made certain allegations, both there and in the State court, mostly to the effect—particularly to the effect that he had not received the money. I at least made that allegation in an attack upon the receiver in the State court; I don't know whether I did in the supreme court or not, but it occasioned them getting up a record in the bank to cover the transaction. Now I offer the next exhibit a photographic copy of an exhibit in the case, being a photograph of a small bank book of Peter L. Larson in the Scandinavian-American Bank. That is the cover. This photograph that I have offered contains or shows the——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Well, now, just a minute, please. Let us get them in one at a time.

The Chairman. Mr. Dorr, in putting those photographic copies in the record I assume that you have the originals in the files, and if you have objectio to make to the photographic copies that you will make it at the proper time.

Mr. Dorr We have no objection to these. I don't know whether the originals are available or not, but we have no objections to these at all on the ground that they are copies or for any other ground, for that matter.

(Photographic copy of cover of bank book of Peter L. Larson in the Scandinavian-American Bank was marked "Exhibit 50.")

Mr. McCoy. And this photographic paper which you show me you state is one of the sheets of the book of which there is a photograph on the cover here?

A. That is true.

Mr. McCoy. Namely, "Exhibit 50"?

A. That is true, and shows in the photograph the only entry ever made in that book and shows a credit to Peter Larson, who was the receiver in the State court, of $2,006.45. The date of it is the 24th of March, the same day that it has been claimed he had on hand some $20,064 and some cents.

The CHAIRMAN. It may go in.

(Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 51.")

Mr. McCOY. All right, Mr. Finch.

A. Then I offer a photographic copy of another exhibit introduced, being a check book, the only entry appearing being the stub of the first check to one W. Curtiss for $11 75. The original of that check book was introduced in evidence, and it shows a payment of—the stubs show payment of the obligations of the receiver to various parties, and the last two checks—stubs show checks drawn to Mr. Richard Saxe Jones, who was the attorney for the receiver, and to the receiver himself.

Mr. McCOY. And who is W. Curtiss?

A. He was one of the creditors of the receivership; that is, that represents a debt that the receivership—receiver himself—had contracted after he took possession. When he——

Mr. McCOY (interrupting). What is the purpose of this?

A. Well, I want to show from that that when he pretended that he had about $20,000 on hand he did not have enough to pay the debts of his receivership, which amounted to $570, but the bank advanced that to him the day that he was discharged. My only purpose, as I have said before, is not to show that the money which they were supposed to have gotten for the property of the State, sold in the State court was not paid, but it is to show that Peter Larson had nothing to do with it and was not acting in good faith. Had he been acting in good faith and selling the porperty for a price, he would have got his money before he turned it over. Instead of that, all that he got was enough from the bank to pay up the debts and to give some to himself and to Mr. Jones.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. In other words, you claim that that large check here was a mere wash transaction; that they made a check over to him and he immediately turned it back?—A. That is it.

Q. So as to say that he had had it, and that then the bank advanced enough money to him to allow him to pay off a few of the obligations which he had incurred as receiver, amounting to about $500?—A. That is pretty near it. I don't think he ever had it in his hand except to indorse it on the back, and it was paid into court some time after by other parties than he.

Q. In other words, Mr. Finch, you claim that these exhibits tend to establish a conspiracy on the part of the receiver and certain attorneys——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) To defraud the bankrupts and the creditors?—A They tend to show a conspiracy between the bank and the receiver The receiver, it is my contention, acted as a mere dummy to turn the property over to the Scandinavian-American Bank.

Q. Do you contend that there were any other parties in the conspiracy except the receiver and the bank?—A. No, I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. How about the attorneys?

A. Except as the work was done through certain attorneys.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who were those attorneys?

A. R. A. Ballinger, representing the bank; Richard Saxe Jones, representing the receiver; Gen. Metcalfe, of Metcalfe & Jurey, representing Heckman & Hansen at one time; and C. A. Reynolds, later representing Heckman & Hansen.

Mr. HIGGINS. Were these facts presented to the State court?

A. Not all of them. There were charges of fraud made over in the State court, but made before I was fully apprised of the extent of of the fraud, and all of these were not made.

Mr. HIGGINS. Were you in possession of these facts at the time of the approval by the judge of the State court of the receiver's account?

A. No, I was not.

Mr. HIGGINS. Of some of them?

A. A few of them.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you make a statement to the court of such facts as you thought you had?

A. I did.

Mr. HIGGINS. (Continuing.) Which tended to show conspiracy?

A. I did. That was also shown to Judge Hanford. I can pick it up off of the table here, if you care for it.

Mr. MCCOY. Mark that as an exhibit, please. Describe that for the stenographer, will you?

A. A photographic copy of check book, showing blank check and at the end used stubs.

Mr. MCCOY. A used stub?

A. Well, a used stub, and it is apparent that there are others.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. You mean that the book did have other stubs in it, but there is a photograph of one stub there?—A. That is true.

Q. And whose bank book was it?—A. It was Peter Larsen's check book, and it is the checks with which he checked out of the Scandinavian-American Bank the entire amount of $2,006.45 that is shown to have been credited to him on March 24 by this other exhibit.

Q. Two thousand or twenty thousand?—A. Two thousand.

Mr. MCCOY. All right. Will you have it marked now?

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 52."

Mr. MCCOY. What facts did you have knowledge of at the time you claimed in the State court that there was fraud or conspiracy in this matter?—A. I can best refer you to a certain paper which I filed over there objecting to the receiver's report. It is rather voluminous and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, did you know about these payments to attorneys at that time?—A. No, I didn't, I didn't know anything of the sort.

Q. Did you know about the fact that the receiver had not received that money at the time?—A. That I suggested to the court over there, and that was the occasion of their making up a record in the bank to show that he must have some money.

Q. Did you know at that time—if it is the fact, I don't remember—that $2,000 had been paid to the receiver by the Scandinavian-American Bank?—A. No; I didn't know that.

Q. You found that out subsequently?—A. Yes; it hadn't been paid. You see it was paid the day that the—oh, four or five days after we had had the hearing in the State court.

Mr. HUGHES. In that connection, Mr. McCoy—it is only a matter of information—you speak of a hearing in the State court; before what judge?

The WITNESS. Arthur E. Griffin.

Mr. HUGHES. In March, nineteen hundred and——

A. 1902.

Mr. HUGHES. 1902. This is not a question to the witness, but you recall that the equity assignment was made from year to year. Judge Griffin only had the equity court one year.

The WITNESS. Well, it was before Judge Griffin.

Mr. HUGHES. You are sure it was before Judge Griffin?

The WITNESS. I am absolutely certain it was before Judge Griffin.

Mr. HUGHES. It was after the expiration of the year in which he held the equity court, but if that was true, then he must have taken this hearing because of his familiarity with the case.

The WITNESS. Perhaps so.

Mr. HUGHES. At any rate, you are sure it was before Judge Griffin? That is what I wanted to know.

The WITNESS. Absolutely.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. You have handed to the committee what you said was a compilation from the books of the Scandinavian-American Bank. One of these compilations is entitled on the outside, "Note and collection teller cashbook." Is there anything in that that you ought to explain to the committee? I mean that this purports to be a copy of that, not the original?—A. Well, I simply compiled from the record taken before Judge Smith the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, those entries were in a book of the Scandinavian-American Bank which had the title which I have just read; is that right?—A. Exactly, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) And so far as you copied you copied accurately?—A. Accurately, and——

Q. (Interrupting). What is in there that you ought to explain to the committee, if anything?—A. Well, I don't know—I don't know how much of it to go into. You have, for instance, opened a page to—page of the note and collection teller's cashbook, entries of April 3, 1912, in which you will see a great many of these—of the items that had been involved as cash transactions in the Heckman & Hansen matter was charged in account of the Seattle Shipyards Co. It might be interesting to say that one of the officers of the bank swore positively that the Seattle Shipyards Co. had no account down there. It was only after I got these books and showed it that they took that back, and later on, in my supplemental argument to Judge Hanford, I referred to three or four glaring instances of perjury that had been committed down there before Referee Smith, and which had occasioned a large record, and told him that I thought he ought to look into the matter. If I may locate my supplemental argument somewhere—where is that? [Witness refers to paper.] I said to Judge Hanford in this supplemental argument this. [Reading:]

> Had we time now, we would like to take up the record with the idea of showing your honor specific instances of perjury committed by the witnesses. A discussion of those matters is not necessary to our present object of getting the estate reopened, but it would tend materially to show what circuitous methods it was necessary to employ to get plain ordinary and well-known facts into the record, consequently the reason for a cumbersome record, the responsibility for the making of which we feel has been placed upon us in your honor's mind. For instance, Mr. Mayhew says that the reason he tendered with his bid a check on the Puget Sound National Bank was that he had another fund of Kelly, Grondahl & Chilberg on deposit there, and it was convenient to use it.

And I cite the record [Continuing reading:]

When your honor has learned that certificates of deposit were furnished Mr. Mayhew by the Scandinavian-American Bank, and deposited by him in the Puget Sound National Bank and used. Mr. Soelberg, too, attached Mr. Grondahl's name to the $30,000 note and then swore that he did not know for what purpose the money was to be used. Mr. Lane, the present cashier, just escaped an order of court directing him to bring in the books of the bank showing the account of the Seattle Shipyards Co. by swearing that the Seattle Shipyards Co. had no account.

And I cited Judge Hanford to the record where he swore to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Read the citation into the record.

A. [Reading:]

(Record, p. 369, line 15, to p. 371, line 16, and p. 381, line 20, to p. 389, line 11.) When, after the occurrence before your honor, July 16, the books were produced and the account of the Seattle Shipyards put in evidence.

Mr. MCCOY. That was the account of the Scandinavian-American Bank?

A. Yes. [Continuing reading:]

We again commend to your honor, too, the reading of the testimony of some of the principals offering the testimony relative to the establishment of the "credit" at the bank. For instance, the testimony of Mr. Soelberg which occasioned the reference back to your honor from Special Referee Smith, and the entire testimony—it is short—of Mr. Kelly.

And beyond calling his attention to it, I could get no action.

Mr. MCCOY. Is that all that you want to say about the memorandum book which you had there?

A. Yes, I think that I don't care to go any further into those books. I want them to speak for themselves the care that was taken to put all the matters before Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, now, are these facts contained in these books so referred to in either your argument or your supplemental argument that when the committee comes to take them up and make use of them it will understand what these items are and what stress you laid on them?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. That is why I was asking you the questions, because they were blind to me.—A. I wish now I had answered it and will answer it in this way: If you will take my argument and supplemental argument with you, I think matters will be clear.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it requisite that they go into the record, or shall they be taken tentatively and go with the arguments and the testimony in the case?

Mr. MCCOY. I understand they are to go along with the testimony, to be treated in the same way, the testimony and the arguments. We will take them and make such use as we please of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MCCOY. Perhaps you had better mark them right after that remark. There they are. Identify them right on the covers.

Documents referred to were marked, respectively, "Exhibits 44 and 44½."

Mr. HUGHES. Have you the briefs that you are going to take in this case?

The CHAIRMAN. They are here somewhere.

Mr. HIGGINS. The briefs in the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. DORR. I have them here.

Mr. HUGHES. They are not to be offered in evidence, but for the use of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. They are taken tentatively, subject to the direction of the whole committee.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand you do not intend to put them in evidence, but to take them with you for use.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, they are taken tentatively. They are not to go in our record. We will take them tentatively and let the entire committee determine what use it chooses to make of them.

Mr. DORR. That is, the briefs in the circuit court of appeals?

The CHAIRMAN. That includes the brief, the supplemental brief, the argument filed by Mr. Finch before Judge Hanford, the respective briefs filed in the circuit court of appeals, and these three books which purport to be copies of certain portions of the books of the bank.

Mr. MCCOY. And the——

The CHAIRMAN. (Interrupting.) And the testimony taken before Judge Smith.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, our brief should be furnished them, along with the others, simply for their use in that connection.

Mr. DORR. All right.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you now said, Mr. Finch, all that you care to in regard to this matter?

A. No, sir. Now, I would like to take up for a moment the matter of the files of the State court. The committee yesterday asked me to say how much of the files they ought to have. In the first place, I think that you should have the complaint in the case of Curtiss v. Heckman & Hansen, being the case in which the receiver was appointed.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, have you a copy of that there?

A. I do not, but there are several in the record.

Mr. DORR. I have a copy.

A. There is a certified copy there.

Mr. DORR. Together with the affidavit of plaintiff in support of the appointment of a receiver and the order appointing the receiver, that Mr. McCoy suggested yesterday.

Mr. MCCOY. Suppose you put that in right now. Let Mr. Finch have it and see.

Mr. DORR. I will have it marked first.

(Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 56" for identification.)

[Mr. Dorr handed Exhibit 56 to the witness.]

A. That will not answer, Mr. Dorr. You have mistook the order. The order is not the one appointing the receiver. I forget when that was used in the case, but that is another matter [handing paper back to Mr. Dorr].

Mr. DORR. Well, I took this as I found it in the records.

A. Yes.

Mr. DORR. As prepared by yourself.

A. Yes, for a certain purpose, and for that purpose I didn't have the order.

Mr. McCoy. Well, Mr. Finch, if the papers are in court which you think ought to go into the record, won't you see if they are on the table there, with Mr. Dorr's permission, and get what you refer to.

Mr. Dorr. This exhibit, however, contains the summons, complaint, motion for appointment of receiver, affidavit of plaintiff for receiver, in the State court receivership case, being entitled "William M. Curtiss v. C. A. Heckman and M. E. Heckman, copartners, and so forth," No. 32817.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr, what is the paper which you took to be the order appointing a receiver, which was annexed to that bundle?

Mr. Dorr. At first glance I took it to be the order appointing the receiver, but it is an order directing the distribution of the proceeds from the sale. It is a later order, and I will find the original order and supply it. This order, I think, may be useful, and the entire files that I have mentioned are certified by the clerk of the superior court.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, what other papers except those in Exhibit 56 do you think ought to go in? The order appointing the receiver, I understand, is not there. In addition to that, what else?—A. The affidavit of Mr. Heckman in support of the receivership proceedings, I think, should go in.

Q. Isn't that in that paper?

Mr. Dorr. Yes.

A. No; the affidavit of the plaintiff was there. The plaintiff was a man named Curtiss.

Mr. Dorr. Oh, the affidavit of Mr. Heckman, you mean?

A. The defendant, Mr. Heckman, supported the application and I think his affidavit, in the interest of truth, should go in. I don't know that it does us any good.

Mr. McCoy. Well, now, let me see. The order appointing receiver and Heckman's affidavit—what else?

A. The first report of the receiver, the second report of the receiver, the third report of the receiver.

Mr. McCoy. We had that here, didn't we?

Mr. Dorr. We introduced the fourth report, the last one.

Mr. McCoy. The third report.

Mr. Dorr. The other three we will supply.

A. The objections of Mr. Heckman to the confirmation of sale, filed March 6, 1902; the order approving the third report and directing the sale, filed March 7, 1902; the notice of hearing upon the fourth report of the receiver in advance of its being filed or served, filed——

Mr. McCoy. (Interrupting.) Well, now, right there I will ask you the question: The notice of hearing on confirmation of his report was served in advance of the filing of his report?

A. Yes.

Q. Was a copy of his report filed with the notice?—A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. I mean served with the notice?—A. No, nor filed.

Mr. Dorr. Do you mean to say that the report was not on file at the time of the hearing?

A. No; at the time that he noted it was going to be heard.

Mr. McCoy. At the time he served notice that it was going to be heard?

A. Yes; the objections of the defendant, Heckman, to said hearing, filed March 8, 1902. The motion for stay of proceedings filed by Mr. Heckman, of March 8, 1902. The order to transmit the files and records to the supreme court, filed March 12, 1902. The fourth report of the receiver, filed March 13, 1902.

Mr. McCoy. Well, isn't that it?

A. No, that is the one that they were going to have a hearing on on the 8th.

Mr. Hughes. The fourth report?

A. The fourth report, yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. That was introduced.

Mr. Dorr. That was introduced yesterday.

A. Oh, I didn't understand what you meant. Yes, that is true. I thought you meant had I got it into my list of requirements before.

The Chairman. That report is in the record.

The Witness. (Continuing.) The objections of Mr. Heckman filed March 22, 1902; the notice of hearing, a second notice of hearing before the receiver's report, filed March 22; the objections and answers to the receiver's report, filed by Mr. Heckman March 22; the order approving the fourth report, filed March 24, and I think it would be well to have the certified copy of the order of Judge Hanford of March 3, which was field March 7, 1902. At this time I wish to recall very briefly the proceedings in the State court. The third report of the receiver was filed January 14——

Mr. McCoy. 1902?

A. 1902. That was about the time when Mr. Reynolds was employed, and he filed the petition in Judge Hanford's court to restrain the State court from going further. I did not get into the case until the 6th day of March, 1902, the day when proceedings were noted for hearing in Judge Griffin's court. My understanding was that the hearing was upon the confirmation of the sale. My understanding was that it had taken place. I had seen no files. So I offered, on March 6, objections to the confirmation of sale. At that time—and the objections will show for themselves what they were—I suggested the bankruptcy proceedings to that court. The court, however, overruled me and entered an order approving the report—third report—and directing a sale. I suggested yesterday that my memory was that the sale had been ordered or made and confirmed in one and the same order, and it was, I see by looking over the files, this approving the third report and directing the sale which made me think that that was true, and I think now it was true. That order your committee will probably read and your will note that it says:

> It fully appearing to this court that due, sufficient, and proper notice has been given of this hearing to all parties in interest and their respective attorneys, and no objection being made to the approval of the third report of the receiver and the direction and confirmation of the sale in said report noted and contained, and no objection being made to any of the proceedings herein set forth and ordered and directed, now, therefore, it is ordered and directed that the report of the receiver herein be in all things approved and that the receiver be directed to complete the sale to M. F. Mayhew of all the property of the copartnership of Heckman & Hansen set forth in the second report of the receiver and in the order of sale. And it is further ordered and directed that the receiver make and execute good and sufficient deeds and bills of sale for said property, properly describing the same, and such deeds and bills of sale as by such receiver shall be made are hereby fully authorized and confirmed.

And that is he only order of confirmation that I know of in that case. My recollection is that there is no further order. Now, it was after that order that the fourth report of the receiver was made, which was called to my attention yesterday and I was questioned as to whether or not they would confirm that sale before they would make it or anyone would make an order with making it. Having entered that order—that was on the 7th of March—the receiver then served on me a notice that the fourth report of the receiver would be presented to the honorable superior court of King County, Judge Arthur E. Griffin presiding, on Saturday, the 8th day of March, 1902, at the hour of 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day. He served me on the 6th with a notice that the fourth report would be brought on for hearing on the 8th, and he failed to serve a copy of the proposed report or to file it.

Q. That was after you had raised objections to this other one which you claimed ordered the sale and confirmed it at the same time?—A. Well, it was the second day that I had been in the case. I had just supplanted one attorney who had supplanted another attorney who had taken Judge Ballinger's place. I being a new attorney and having gotten in on the 6th, I got a notice on the 7th that everything would be wound up on the 8th, although they had not their report out yet. I on the 8th filed objections to the hearing, and suggested, in an affidavit, that the report had not been filed. The matter went over then until—I have forgotten—a day or two, because the report was not on file, and in that——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, wait a minute right there: On your objection that the report was not on file, the court set it over until it could be filed; is that right?—A. Well, he set it over for about three or four days—something like that, and in——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, in order to permit the filing of the report, was that the purpose of the delay?—A. I don't know, but the report was filed on the 8th. Perhaps—but it was because I had not had an opportunity to see it that it went over. In the interim of the next two or three days I went to the State supreme court for a writ of prohibition to prohibit this court from going ahead, and promptly served that—a show-cause order upon the superior court, which kept him from proceeding as he had noted he would. And on the 12th, then, Mr. Jones for the receiver made or obtained an order that all the files in the case be sent to Olympia—down the Sound a ways—for the use of the supreme court. I had not any files at that time, and I could not get any from Mr. Reynolds, whom I had supplanted. So these were sent down to Olympia. Then on the 13th the fourth report of the receiver was filed. I had gone to the supreme court before that; so I didn't have the benefit of it then; I could not have had.

Mr. HUGHES. Was there a hearing in the supreme court?

A. On the writ of prohibition, yes.

Mr. HUGHES. And the writ denied?

A. And the writ denied. Then when that was denied the receiver noted again the fourth report for a hearing on the 22d of March. On the 22d of March I filed Mr. Heckman's objection and answer to the receiver's report, specifically taking issue with him on matters that occurred in his first, his second, his third, and his fourth report, and——

Mr. MCCOY. (Interrupting.) Now, just a minute. Do you mean that you pointed out that in some respects his fourth report was inconsistent with his previous three reports?

A. Yes—well, not inconsistent, but I attacked the truth of certain allegations that he made. I also suggested at that time the conspiracy that existed "between the Scandinavian-American Bank and its counsel, Judge Ballinger, and assisted by the firm of Metcalfe & Jurey, and your receiver, Peter Larson, and R. S. Jones, attorney for your receiver, and one C. A. Reynolds," and made certain representations to the court. Mr. Jones and some of the parties then made an application to Judge Griffin to strike my objections to the receiver's report upon the ground that it was scandalous and malicious and reflected upon parties personally, and Judge Griffin concluded that it did so, and struck it from the files.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Did it state anything except what you believed to be the fact?—A. No.

Q. And you believed the facts to be material to the matter which you were urging before the court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it customary in Washington to strike from the record papers simply because they happen to contain reflections on attorneys?—A. Well, that is my first experience and only experience in that regard. Then an order was entered approving the receiver's fourth report, and you have that before you—discharged the receiver. I think that is all at this time.

Q. I want to ask you one final question. Mr. Finch, do you know of any fact in connection with the affairs of Heckman & Hansen, or any fact in connection with any matter which would lead you to believe that if Heckman & Hansen had been fairly and honestly cared for by a fair and honest attorney from the very beginning, they would not now be in possession of their property?—A. I know of absolutely no fact to militate against that. I think it is absolutely true that had they been cared for they would be in possession of their property, and I don't think they would have had any trouble.

Q. Do you base that on your belief that at the time the matter started they were perfectly solvent?—A. Exactly.

Q. And had a going business which was profitable?—A. Profitable, paying them, as I was led to believe, and I thoroughly believe, $2,000 net a month.

Q. Do you make that statement on some investigation you have made?—A. Just simply my client's statement and the challenge that I made before Judge Smith to the effect that their books would show it if the receiver would show the books. We could not get them. And from the further fact that I never met any creditor that had the slightest complaint against them. I could not find that they had ever owed anybody that they had not paid promptly. They had the usual indebtedness of a going concern all right, but it was being cared for as bills were presented.

Q. And the net result of the whole matter is that they were absolutely and completely wiped out of their entire property?—A. Absolutely, and without ever a hearing being had anywhere.

Q. Or ever a judgment obtained against them?—A. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, any further questions?

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Finch, under the laws and customary practices and proceedings in this State, in a receivership proceeding instituted in court as this receivership was instituted, where creditors come in and file claims, and those claims are approved, is that not an adjudication against the insolvent company or the company that is in the hands of a receiver?—A. What do you mean, an adjudication?

Q. Is that not an adjudication of the claims in the amounts that are proven in court to exist against a concern that is in the hands of a receiver?—A. Why, there is a method of proving claims, certainly, and having them allowed, and then it is an adjudication; yes.

Q. That becomes an adjudication?—A. Yes.

Q. That was done in this case, wasn't it?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. Don't you know that these claims were filed and proven?—A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know anything to the contrary?—A. Why, I know that after we had made all the fight that we could make over in the State court, and after Judge Griffin had stricken out from the records and files the objections and charges that I have made, then came in a list of claims, not that they—that is, through the receiver's report.

Q. Well, you know, Mr. Finch, do you not, that after the receiver was appointed he published notice as provided by order of the court and by statute to creditors?—A. Well, I am inclined to think so. I think I would concede it. I don't know anything to the contrary.

Q. And that a large number of claimants, including over 50 general creditors, filed their claims, under oath, in that court?—A. Not in the court. They may have filed them with the receiver.

Q. Well, with the receiver.—A. They may have. I have no knowledge.

Q. You have no knowledge?—A. No, sir; any more than I know what you have in your pocket now.

Q. You never examined those claims that were filed?—A. No.

Q. And you never contested any claim that was filed, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there ever any question raised by Mr. Heckman or by yourself, or anyone representing him or them, Heckman & Hansen, against the validity and justness and correctness of any one of those claims that was filed?—A. Not a single one.

Q. Now, those claims were allowed by the order of the court, were they not?—A. I doubt that.

Q. Were they not allowed when the court ordered that they be paid?—A. In the end of it there was such an order entered, and I don't know, but that was entered after the court had denied us even a standing in court over there.

Q. But you were litigating over other questions—that is what I am trying to get at—and not over the validity or justness of those claims?—A. Oh, certainly. I didn't litigate the justness of any claim.

Q. You don't intend——A. (Interrupting.) I don't now.

Q. You don't intend to have this committee understand, do you, that any of these claims which were paid in full, or in part, were not just claims against the estate?—A. I don't contend anything of the sort. They were perfectly just claims; ought to have been paid.

Q. Yes; and at the time this receivership was inaugurated this concern was in debt to the extent of twenty-odd thousand dollars, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a large number of those debts were long past due?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Well, were not the notes at the bank long past due?—A. I think not. Mr.—I of course take out of consideration the $5,000 note.

Q. All right, eliminate that and refer to the others.—A. There was a small note that Mr. Heckman had, but that was secured by a chattel mortgage somewhere that the bank had taken over and was carrying for him. I remember that.

Q. How was it with respect to Mr. Curtis's claim—the gentleman who brought the suit against Heckman & Hansen in which the receiver was appointed?—A. I have no knowledge. I don't know.

Q. Don't know whether that was due or not?—A. I never investigated. I know he sued on an account stated, but I never investigated his claim.

Q. Of about $1,600, or close to it?—A. Yes; about; between fifteen and sixteen hundred dollars.

Q. Between fifteen and sixteen hundred dollars. Now, when Mr. Curtis brought that suit he filed with his complaint an affidavit in support of his application for a receiver, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are familiar with the affidavit, are you not?—A. No; I am not. I am familiar with the fact that it was filed.

Q. The general purport of the allegations contained in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Heckman also filed an affidavit in support of this same receivership?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did Mr. Heckman, at any time, or either Heckman or Hansen, make any objections to the receivership?—A. No.

Q. They were always in harmony and sympathy with it?—A. In the inception.

Q. In the inception. And in this affidavit filed by Mr. Curtis in support of his complaint, being an affidavit of plaintiff for a receiver, he states that a dispute had arisen between the Scandinavian-American Bank and Heckman & Hansen over some advances in the amount of about $7,000?—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. And there was such a dispute, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Heckman & Hansen had drawn this money from the bank——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) For repairs upon a schooner which was in their shipyards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had not applied it to the payment of the debts incurred in those repairs?—A. That is not true; never claimed.

Q. That is not true?—A. And never claimed.

Q. That is not true, you say?—A. No; not according to my knowledge; and I never heard it claimed.

Q. Is this not true: That after Heckman & Hansen had drawn this $7,000 as advances from the bank for this specific purpose, they themselves caused that schooner to be libeled in the United States district court for the same indebtedness for which this money was drawn from the bank to liquidate it?—A. I don't know. They libeled it in their name and through Gen. Metcalfe, but that is as far as I will go.

Q. They libeled it in their name?—A. Yes; the boat was libeled in their name and through Gen. Metcalfe as their proctor.

Q. For work that they had performed upon it?—A. Yes; for this very claim, and that was the——

Q. (Interrupting.) And that was the—— And for the work that the bank had advanced this $7,000?—A. Yes, sir; that is absolutely true.

Q. That was the schooner Alice, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in this affidavit of Mr. Curtis's he explains that matter, does he not?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Well, will you please refer to it and see if you can refresh your recollection [handing paper to witness]?—A. (After examining.) Now, what was your question, Mr. Dorr?

Q. I am asking you if it is not a fact that these matters were generally set forth in the affidavit of Mr. Curtis?—A. Yes.

Q. And also in the affidavit of Mr. Heckman——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Filed in support of the appointment of a receiver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at that time the bank had not started to foreclose these mortgages, had it?—A. No.

Q. That came afterwards?—A. That came afterwards.

Q. And the plain fact is, as you have gathered it from all the information obtainable, that the bank had advanced the $7,000, as as they understood, for a specific purpose, to pay for the repairs of this schooner, and instead of applying it to that purpose the defendants, Heckman & Hansen, caused the schooner to be libeled for this amount?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is not right?—A. No, sir. I never heard a claim made that the moneys that they advanced was not advanced or was not applied to the specific purpose for which it was advanced.

Q. Well, then, why did Heckman & Hansen, if they had been paid for that work, libel the schooner for the same thing?—A. I could not answer that, and I don't think any attorney on earth could answer it unless it is Gen. Metcalfe. He did it.

Q. The schooner was libeled at Messrs. Heckman & Hansen's instigation, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; and it was the first move that was made when the controversy arose over that very fact; when Heckman & Hansen already had their money for doing that very work, Gen. Metcalfe turned around, as their attorney, and libeled the Alice. That is absolutely true, and it is the first move that was made.

Q. Then the first move that was made in this entire proceeding was made by Heckman & Hansen through their attorney?—A. Yes; true.

Q. Represented by Gen. Metcalfe?—A. That is true.

Q. In the libeling of the schooner Alice?—A. Yes, and——

Q. (Continuing.) For the same amount that had been advanced by the bank——A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) To them?—A. And with Gen. Metcalfe knowing the facts, because he filed that affidavit right there.

Q. Well, did not Mr. Heckman know the facts?—A. Yes, but Mr. Heckman was a Swede; he wasn't a lawyer.

Mr. DORR. You think from the fact that he was a Swede he was so ignorant he did not know whether he had received this money?

A. No, sir; it was because he had received the money, and for work on the Alice that he got into the dispute with the bank, and the bank turned round and disavowed that they had paid the money for the Alice, and when he went to Judge Ballinger, his attorney, about it, Judge Ballinger took the side of the bank, and that caused him to go to Gen. Metcalfe, and Gen. Metcalfe, within a day or two afterwards, with these facts in his possession and knowing they had the money, did just what you said he did—he turned around and libeled the Alice.

Mr. McCoy. I do not see any use in going further into this matter.

Mr. Dorr. I want to go further, because——

Mr. McCoy. It may be I did not understand it, but here is what I did understand, and I think I understood it right: These people were told that the bank had the mortgage on this boat; they wanted to have the repairs made; they were told that they could draw on the bank as they made the repairs, and that that would be considered as payment for the repairs. Now, if their understanding of it had gone through they would have had their $6,000 and the boat would have been turned over to the Scandinavian Bank. Now, what happened? Later on they were called on to pay this $6,000 as an indebtedness. In other words, the bank said to them, "You owe us this money. We never paid it to you." There was only one thing left for them to do—either fight that claim, libel the Alice for the $6,000, or the work that was done to it; that is all there was to it.

Mr. Dorr. They had the money, didn't they?

Mr. McCoy. They thought they had the money, but the Scandinavian Bank said, "You have not. You owe us on an overdraft; give it back to us."

Mr. Dorr. But they did have it?

Mr. McCoy. But no, they didn't have it under the circumstances. They supposed they had it. They supposed the money was paid to them by the bank for their own business—to pay for the work on the boat, but later on it turned out that the Scandinavian Bank says "We didn't pay you the money—we loaned it to you." Now, did they have it or didn't they? That is the point. In other words, they were between the devil and the deep sea. They did not know whether to stand up and fight the bank, and claim that it was a payment and not a loan, or to turn around and libel the boat. Now, they had an attorney, whom Mr. Finch claims here was not fairly representing them, and he put them in the worst position he could possibly put them in by admitting that they had borrowed the money, which they disputed. Now, that is all that there is in it.

Mr. Dorr. I wish to state to the committee that the records that have been and that will be introduced will entirely disabuse Mr. McCoy's mind, I think, of the position he has just taken in this matter.

Mr. McCoy. Wait a minute—I am not taking any position except on the facts as they have been developed here up to this point—up to this point the facts are just what I said. That Heckman & Hansen were between the devil and the deep sea. They supposed they had been paid the money, and they were told later on that they had borrowed it, and if they had borrowed the money then the bank was indebted to them for the repairs on the Alice, or at least the Alice was indebted to them for the repairs on it, and the thing to do was to libel the Alice.

Mr. DORR. In any event, I think it is conceded that they got this money from the bank.

Mr. MCCOY. Undoubtedly. I have not heard it disputed anywhere, and I wondered what you were getting at.

Mr. DORR. Now, Mr. Finch, I asked you distinctly yesterday whether there was any appeal taken to the supreme court of the State in this receivership case, and I understood you to say no.

A. That is true.

Q. Do you mean by that that there was no appellate proceeding?—A. No, sir; I mean no appeal taken.

Q. You mean no appeal.—A. As you and I understand "appeal."

Q. As you and I understand technically the word or the term?—A. Well, yes, technically, if you want to put it that way.

Q. You took the different proceedings which brought the case before the appellate court, other than a regular appeal?—A. I took proceedings there to get a writ of prohibition. I would not designate that in spirit or any other way an appeal.

Q. Well, it was a review of the proceedings, or some of them in the superiour court, was it not?—A. No, no, it was not.

Q. You went to the supreme court for a writ of prohibition?—A. Yes.

Q. And that involved a review of some part of the proceedings in the superior court, didn't it?—A. In one sense, yes; and not in the sense of a review of the proceedings.

Q. And you appeared in that case?—A. Yes.

Q. And argued it?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Richard Saxe Jones appeared for the receiver on the other side?—A. That's true.

Q. And argued the case before the supreme court?—A. That is true.

Q. And the supreme court rendered a unanimous decision against you, didn't they?—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. And that decision is reported in the Twenty-eighth Washington Reports, at page 35, entitled "State of Washington on relation of C. A. Heckman v. the Superior Court of King County" [showing volume to witness]?—A. Twenty-eighth Washington, page 35; that is the case.

Mr. DORR. Will you pass that up to the committee?

Witness does so.

Mr. DORR. Now, Mr. Finch, do you wish to be understood that at any stage of these proceedings you did not have a hearing in the superior court, that you were denied the opportunity to be heard there on behalf of your clients?

A. No.

Q. Whenever you made any of those objections about the time, time was extended, was it not?—A. I do not recall. There was once—I do not know that I made an objection on that account, but once I know it was granted for a few days then.

Q. What is your answer; that you were given hearings or that you were not—reasonable hearings?—A. Oh, I do not make any contention about those matters now—we will call them reasonable hearings, if you want to.

Q. Well, do you involve the superior court and the judge of the superior court who had this matter under his charge in this general conspiracy?—A. Not at all—absolutely no.

Q. Not at all—nor the Supreme Court of the State of Washington?—A. Not at all—absolutely no. I have never so much as insinuated anything against either court.

Q. Then, so far as Judge Griffin was concerned, who presided over the department in the superior court having jurisdiction of this receivership matter, you have not any complaint to make?—A. None at all, so far as would attack his integrity. He did not rule for me, and I might complain that he did not rule my way, but I mean that I would not attack his integrity.

Q. Oh, I understand he did not rule for you, Mr. Finch, and I am not surprised at that at all; but that does not involve anything which would amount, in your mind, to a charge against the integrity or honor of Judge Griffin, does it?—A. Why, no; not the slightest; not the slightest.

Q. You believe in your heart and your conscience that he ruled according to what he thought was right.—A. Oh, yes.

Q. In that case?—A. Yes.

Q. And you do not take the position, as I understand you, and you do not want to take the position that there was a single dollar involved in this controversy that was misappropriated or did not go to the parties to whom it belonged?—A. That is true.

Q. Your contention is, and that I understand, I think, clearly from all of your statements, that your complaint rests upon a difference of opinion in law as to the effect of that order of sale as to whether the property should be sold subject to the liens or not.—A. Oh, nothing of the sort; nothing of the sort. I just object to being wiped clear out of existence without a hearing being had anywhere. Just because I owe a dollar, I don't think you have that right to everything I have got.

Q. You do not mean to say that you haven't had hearings almost without end in this matter, do you?—A. Why, I do; I do. And the only thing I am complaining about now is that Judge Hanford would not give me one. He had this whole thing tied up by the adjudication in bankruptcy. We lost our identity when we were made bankrupts, and we never can get anywhere until that string is untied.

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, your clients were tied up in the bankruptcy court because they filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy.—A. Yes.

Q. And they in that petition represented to the court that they were insolvent and unable to pay their debts?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Will you look at it and see [showing]?—A. Yes.

Q. Doesn't this petition state in the first allegation "That the said partners owe debts which they are unable to pay in full?"—A. That is true.

Q. Now, doesn't that mean they were insolvent, if they could not pay their debts in full?—A. Well, I can't quite answer that, Mr. Dorr; maybe it is and maybe it is not. I don't know whether I should interpret it legally or according to the fact. The fact was they could not pay anything then; but you let them have their property, as they ought to have it, and they could have paid out four times in excess of their liabilities.

Q. This petition was signed and sworn to by both Heckman and Hansen?—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. On the 16th day of January, 1902?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a long time before you were in the supreme court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the State court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The proceeding.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, you have stated that at some time Mr. Hansen went to sleep, so to speak; that is, he lost his normal mental condition, as I understand you.—A. That is true.

Q. When was that?

Mr. McCoy. Will you let me ask one question on another line, so as not to have it stranded somewhere in the record?

Mr. Dorr. Certainly.

Mr. McCoy. Did you contend before Judge Hanford that whether or not the superior court had jurisdiction of those assets, that the bankrupts were entitled to have a trustee appointed to protect their interests?

A. Yes, sir; that was my contention.

Mr. McCoy. And that is perfectly sound law, is it not?

A. It is in my mind, but I have not been able to get a court to take that view of it yet.

Mr. Hughes. Do I understand that the same rights could not be protected in the State court in the receivership through his control over his receivers?

The Chairman. I just suggest that if you wish to ask questions that you ask them through the examiner.

Mr. Dorr. Right on that line, I want to ask you,——

The Witness. Yes.

Mr. Dorr. And that question covers the Superior Court of the State of Washington in and for King County, and the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, Judge Hanford presiding in the United States district court in this district, and the circuit court of appeals.

A. No, sir; it was not brought up there.

Q. They have all taken an adverse view?—A. No, sir; not on the point I just referred to. It has not been brought up in that way. We have no place that we can go except to Judge Hanford.

Mr. McCoy. In other words, when you applied to reopen the estate you got switched off onto an inquiry in regard to the character of some attorneys in Seattle.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was as far as you ever got?—A. Yes, sir; that was as far as I ever got and I got swamped there and I was willing——

Here there is some disturbance in the courtroom.

The Chairman. Gentlemen, won't you please observe order? We are glad to have you here, but we must have decorum.

The Witness (continuing). I was willing to even accept the issue that way if he would go about it and see that proceeding through, but when I offered to take that view of it with him I could not get him to take it up and I was just completely swamped.

Mr. Dorr. You stated——

A. (Continuing). Now, before I want to go any further I want to say about the insolvency of the concern. In the petition to reopen the estate the first allegation, and the one that Judge Hanford quotes, is to the effect that we told him in this petition to reopen the estate; that our assets were about $60,000 and our liabilities were about $23,000; and that the reason that they had not been made to so show in the petition which you have in your hand, was due to the fact that at that time we had no access to our books of account or anything that we owned; that our affairs were in the hands of the receiver in the State court.

Mr. DORR. You stated, or it was stated in this involuntary petition in bankruptcy, that the indebtedness was over $32,000, Mr. Finch [showing document to witness].

A. Well, that may be true.

Q. And the detailed statement is given of the debtors.—A. I think so. I did not file it. I think that is true.

Mr. MCCOY. Were any of them put down in the schedule as disputed items—how about the $6,000 item?

The WITNESS. It included the alleged overdraft which was put in, I think, as owing, and the credit not taken as to it; that is my recollection.

Mr. DORR. Their secured claims were scheduled at $16,020, were they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And their unsecured claims at $15,492.82.—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Is it stated anywhere in the schedule that any claim was disputed?

Mr. DORR. I beg pardon?

Mr. MCCOY. I say, is it stated in the bankruptcy schedules anywhere that any of the claims against the bankrupts were disputed?

Mr. DORR. I will examine it so as to be able to answer you.

Mr. MCCOY. I will take it and see it. For instance, have they got down the $6,000 claim of the Scandinavian Bank; is that claimed to be disputed?

Mr. DORR. That does not seem to be referred to in the schedule, as far as I can observe.

Mr. MCCOY. Never mind, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. DORR. I would be glad to pass it up to you [passes document up to Mr. McCoy].

Mr. DORR. When was it that Mr. Hansen became incapacitated?

A. I think it was in the fall of 1901; I think. I don't know exactly, and I do not know that I ever was advised as to the time.

Q. But he was able to transact business during those proceedings, wasn't he?—A. No; I don't think so, I tried to get him to take my side of the controversy, because Mr. Heckman had employed me. I wanted to keep him from taking the other side, but he would vacillate backward and forward because of his weak-mindedness.

Q. Was he also a Swede?—A. How's that?

Q. Was he also a Swede?—A. Yes, sir; or a Norwegian.

Q. A Norwegian?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think because he would not take your side of the controversy that he was weak-minded?—A. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a fair inference, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. DORR. Now, with respect to the note that you say Judge Ballinger signed as attorney in fact for Heckman & Hansen. Do you understand that he was attorney for the bank at that time?

A. Do I?

Q. Yes.—A. I take no position in the matter. It is a disputed matter.

Q. Sir?—A. I say it is a disputed matter. Mr. Heckman claimed that he was his attorney.

Q. At the time this note was executed and the mortgage was executed, did you contend that Judge Ballinger was attorney for the bank?—A. I contended and contend that that is what my client claimed; that he was his attorney.

Q. His attorney, but for the bank—the Scandinavian-American Bank?—A. I don't know what you mean.

Q. You know when the note for $5,000 was executed, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. At that particular time do you claim that Judge Ballinger was the bank's attorney?—A. I presume he was.

Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. You don't know when his relation commenced?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Mr. Hansen signed that note himself, didn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes.

Q. In his own person I mean?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I also show you what purports to be the note, and I will ask you whether you can identify that as the note?—A. I can not. I never saw it before.

Q. You have seen photographs of it, haven't you?—A. Yes; I saw a photograph of it in Collier's Weekly.

Q. Have you got a photograph of this note?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. You have had a photograph of it?—A. I never saw the note until this instant.

Q. Now, you spoke of Collier's Weekly; didn't you furnish them some material for the article you refer to?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you talk with any people who prepared the article?

Mr. MCCOY. What difference did it make whether he did or did not?

Mr. DORR. Well, he said he did not have anything to do with it in his answer to your question, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. MCCOY. Then he has answered the question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is a legitimate ground of examination.

Mr. MCCOY. I asked him the question because it had to do with the exhibit here, and not to find out——

Mr. DORR (interrupting). He was asked the direct question as to whether he had anything to do with that article.

The WITNESS. I had not.

Q. You did not talk with the man who wrote it?—A. Yes.

Q. Sir?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you gave him certain facts?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not give him any of the information?—A. No. He came to me to confer about the matter and I took the position that I did not want to stir it up again—it was an old matter. He asked me if I had any objection to his going to the record. I said "You can go to any record; it is public, of course." Then he asked me whether he could depend on the record, and I said "Absolutely—anything that I put in."

Q. This note that I have just shown you is the $5,000 that is in question here, is it not?—A. I have not any doubt of it. I never saw it before, but I infer that. I know it—and I have seen a photograph——

Q. It is one of the exhibits in this case, Mr. Finch, and yet you said you never saw it.—A. I never saw it before in my life.

Q. You never had occasion to investigate the note.—A. No, sir; not the original note.

Q. Notwithstanding the fact that you claim that the agreement was that the amount should be represented by five notes payable a thousand dollars a year.—A. One note payable in five years—a thousand dollars a year.

Q. Did you ever know of a bank making a loan of that kind?—A. Did I ever know of a bank——

Q. Yes; a bank.—A. No, sir; I never heard of that. I have heard of them agreeing to do it, though, in the back room in the directors' office and then getting an attorney to get a power of attorney to consummate it.

Q. I say do you know of any custom of any bank to make real estate loans for that length of time?—A. I know it is not the custom.

Q. It is not the custom?—A. No, sir.

Q. This note was signed by Mr. Hansen.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is dated October 31, 1900.—A. Yes, sir. Now let me explain why I never saw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The note does not seem to have been signed in person by Mr. Hansen.

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It is signed by him for some one else—it reads "Heckman & Hansen, by Martin E. Hansen."

Mr. DORR. I beg your honor's pardon; the witness testified to the contrary, and the fact is to the contrary. It was sgined by Mr. Hansen himself.

The CHAIRMAN. Individually?

The WITNESS. It purports to be signed Heckman & Hansen, by Martin E. Hansen.

Mr. DORR. Individually?

A. By Martin E. Hansen. He has not signed it individually—and it is signed C. A. Heckman, by R. A. Ballinger, his attorney in fact.

Q. Martin E. Hansen was one of the parties——A. Yes, sir; of the firm of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. And he wrote his name on the note.—A. He put "Heckman & Hansen, by Martin E. Hansen."

The CHAIRMAN. He wrote the firm name on it.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. DORR. I mean to say that it was Martin E. Hansen who executed the note.

A. Yes, sir; it is in his handwriting.

Q. It is in his handwriting and it was not done through Mr. Ballinger, or anyone else, so far as Mr. Ballinger was concerned.—A. So far as I know. It shows for itself. Let me tell you now why I never saw it. It was part of the judgment roll in the superior court in the case brought for the foreclosure of that note and mortgage and apparently had been made up as a part of the judgment roll, and evidently introduced as a judgment roll and I never examined the judgment roll.

Mr. McCoy. As a matter of fact, you never, as attorney for these people, had any litigation in connection with this note, did you?

A. No; I can't get a chance to—I am tied up.

Mr. Dorr. The note as drawn is a 90-day note, Mr. Finch.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Due 90 days from the date of the note?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Is that note dated after the date of this injury to Mr. Hansen which you spoke of?

A. I am pretty sure it was not. I am pretty sure that Mr. Hansen had signed that note before his injury.

Mr. Dorr. I would like to have this note marked at this time, if the committee please.

The Witness. The allegation has always been that Mr. Hansen signed the note, believing that he had consummated arrangements made by Mr. Heckman. He never had anything to do with financial matters at all, but he was asked to sign the note while Mr. Heckman was away.

Mr. McCoy. The arrangement was made prior to that time in regard to the signing of the note with Mr. Heckman.

A. The arrangement had been made with Mr. Heckman, and Mr. Heckman had always everything to do with the financial matters, and that is what was alleged all the way through.

Mr. Dorr. You do not know anything about that personally?

A. I know what is alleged. I do not know anything personally about the fact; no. I am not trying to testify about the facts.

Note just testified about is marked "Exhibit No. 57."

Mr. Dorr. There is another note that is involved in this mortgage foreclosure, which is dated November 22, 1900, for $3,000. Will you please state to the committee who signed that note?

A. Mr. Heckman apparently signed the firm name of Heckman & Hansen to it. His credit was pretty good down there at the bank about then.

Q. That is one of the notes that is involved in the foreclosure suit that we were inquiring about yesterday?—A. Yes, sir.

Note marked "Exhibit No. 58."

Q. The $3,000, just identified, being marked Exhibit No. 58, I will now show you still another one [showing]. That is, or was, involved in the foreclosure suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the date of that?—A. October 18, 1899.

Q. Who signed it?—A. Heckman & Hansen—C. A. Heckman and M. E. Hansen.

Q. What is the maturity date there?—A. Three months.

Q. Now, you do not understand that either of those notes were ever paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Except through foreclosure?—A. No, sir; they were not.

Q. Neither one of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. And they were all long past due when this receivership was commenced?—A. Yes, sir; according to their terms—according to the face of them.

The third in the series of notes is marked "Exhibit No. 59."

Mr. DORR. Now, Mr. Finch, I understood Mr. McCoy to ask you something about the customary proceedings to disbar attorneys; I want to ask you this question. I believe you said that the custom was that the matter might come up informally—is that correct?—A. I mean to say that I don't understand that there is a real formal way of attending to the matter. I think the court could make a suggestion, for instance, or I think that if you and I felt aggrieved at a member of the bar that we could go before the court and I think he would listen to us.

Q. Yes; but if you and I should fall out and commit some offense in the trial of a particular case where disbarment proceedings were suggested, or might be suggested, there is not anything unusual about a notice being taken of it in that case, is there?—A. No.

Q. That would be perfectly natural to do so. That is to say, a little more specifically, if you charged these gentlemen whom you have referred to with unprofessional conduct in the course of this particular proceeding, there is not anything unusual that it should be taken notice of in connection with that proceeding originally?—A. Well, I think some courts would treat it one way and some another. Some would listen to anything of that sort without a flicker on their face and others would get mad about it.

Mr. MCCOY. Is it customary, when an attorney makes such a statement as you did, for the court to threaten him with disbarment proceedings in case he did not make good? Do you recollect any case of that kind?

A. It never occurred to me before or since, and I never heard of one.

Q. The custom is to wait until the offense has been committed or perpetrated and then make the complaint or bring the attorney up, is it not?—A. I should say so. That would be the way to do it.

Mr. DORR. Did you ever hear of a parallel case to this?

A. Never, never; this stands alone by itself.
