Q. Now, Mr. Finch, what has been shown in regard to the signing of the note—of the $5,000 note—is also true with reference to the mortgage, is it not; that is to say, that Mr. Hansen himself signed that mortgage?—A. He signed the firm name by Martin E. Hansen; yes.

Q. And Judge Ballinger——A. Signed Mr. Heckman's name by R. A. Ballinger, his attorney in fact.

Q. In addition to the exhibits which you have mentioned that you suggest go into the record from the superior court of the proceedings in the receivership, there was a petition of the creditors for an order directing distribution filed?—A. After the receiver was discharged; yes.

Q. Yes?—A. Yes.

Q. Signed generally by the creditors?—A. Yes; I think that is true.

Q. Now, it is a fact, is it not, that all of the creditors of Heckman & Hansen, those that were secured by liens and also the general creditors, participated in that receivership?—A. Oh, I don't know. Away back in December, before this final discharge of the receiver in March, Mr. Mayhew had been furnished by the Scandinavian-American Bank with a fund—the first one being $2,000—to go and buy up the creditors' claims. That was one of the first things that was done to get possession of the property. Now, as matters went along I suppose that he took an interest in it—although not in the record.

Q. Well, that is not just what I mean, Mr. Finch; what I am trying to find out is if it is not a fact that the creditors of Heckman & Hansen appeared either by themselves or through their assignees, if they did assign their claims, in that receivership case and participated in the distribution of the funds?—A. Well, there were two claims filed by Judge Humphries of this city, but aside from that I do not think there was ever a claim filed in court until after the receiver was discharged, and some of them then came in to get a part of the proceeds.

Q. Is it not a fact, nevertheless, that the general creditors and the preferred creditors came into court to participate in the proceeds?—A. Oh, I think so.

Q. Submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose?—A. Oh, yes; I think that is true.

Q. And their claims were paid, either to them direct or to their assignees, as proven by the respective claimants?—A. Part of it was and some was not; and when that part that was not paid to them through the State proceedings—they went around to the bonding company on the bond of the receiver and got the balance.

Q. There was not enough of the fund to pay off the general creditors in full?—A. That is true.

Q. They were required to take a percentage settlement?—A. That is true, so far as the court record shows.

Q. That is what I mean, in that receivership.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I want to ask you two or three questions with respect to Mr. Reynolds's connection—you have stated that he collected $100 for expenses to be used in the investigation of charges made against the receiver in the State court?—A. No.

Q. That was as I understood you.—A. No; I did not make that statement.

Q. Well, let me ask you, then, this question: What is there in Mr. Reynolds's association with that matter that suggests any fraud to you?—A. Why, he could not be attorney for Heckman and the attorney for the bondsmen on the receiver's bond, and serve both clients.

Q. Why not?—A. Because of the fraud of the receiver; the more that we would show of that the more it would cost his other client.

Q. Was there any conflict between Heckman & Hansen and the receiver?—A. Well, the receiver was alleged right along to have been conspiring with the Scandinavian-American Bank to deliver that property to them.

Q. Was there any question that the receiver had embezzled any money or misappropriated any of the funds or converted any of the property?—A. No; nobody knew anything about it. You could not get his books. He never submitted his books. I don't know anything about what he did.

Q. Were not those matters brought to the attention of the superior court by yourself?—A. I don't know. If it was, it was in that objection to his doings, which the court fired out of the record. That is the only place, if any place.

Q. Well, was there any fraud or mismanagement charged against the receiver other than such matters as may have been referred to the superior court?—A. No; if I understand your question.

Q. They were all investigated by the superior court?—A. Eh?

Q. They were all investigated, I say, by the superior court.—A. They were not; they were fired out of the case without an investigation.

Q. By Judge Griffin?—A. Stricken from the record.

Q. By Judge Griffin?—A. By Judge Griffin.

Q. That is the matter which you testified that he called scandalous, I believe?—A. Yes. The charge against the receiver, or against the bank, or their attorneys as constituting conspiracies and the like, trying to get that property, was deemed scandalous and stricken.

Q. Can you imagine any reason why the collection by Mr. Reynolds or the receipt by him of this $100 for the purpose of paying the witnesses to investigate these frauds against the receiver should be charged as an element of fraud against him?—A. Why, yes; just as I say. When I am making charges of fraud against another man, I don't think be can be my attorney and that man's too—it makes me nervous.

Q. I don't yet see how the investigation of these frauds by the procuring of witnesses to attempt to prove frauds, which you allege, could make you nervous.—A. I will illustrate it then. Mr. Heckman—or Mr. Reynolds—came into Judge Hanford's court with a petition in bankruptcy, and he got an order of adjudication, and at the same time he got an injunction against the State court proceeding further on the grounds of frauds being committed over there—he was not very specific in his allegation. Later on——

Mr. DORR. Wasn't it upon the ground——

Mr. MCCOY. Let him finish, please.

The WITNESS (continuing). Later on, over in that court—or two parties came from that court—Judge Ballinger and Mr. Jones, came over to Judge Hanford's court and got an order of reference to Commissioner Bowman to see if they were getting an adequate price for the property over there and if they could do any better over in his court. Down before that, before Commissioner Bowman, certain evidence was introduced; but the matter was closed before Mr. Heckman knew about it—he was expecting to go on the stand. I am testifying about things that had been represented in this evidence now—he deliberately suppressed matters——

Mr. DORR. Who did?

A. Mr. Reynolds; he suppressed matters, I think, in the interest of Judge Ballinger and the bank. [Here witness refers to document.] I set it forth that he, himself, had explained it. Mr. Reynolds admits that he kept his client off the stand before Commissioner Bowman. He said he did so for fear that Mr. Heckman might cast some reflection on Mr. Ballinger, Mr. Jones, or Gen. Metcalfe——

Q. Where is that evidence which you have just quoted from?—A. I am quoting from my argument before Judge Hanford.

Q. But I want to know where the evidence is?—A. The evidence is before Judge Smith to-day. That is in Mr. Reynolds's testimony that was not brought up, because it was presented by the other side, and I did not have money enough to bring that side up. Now, to proceed. After that Mr. Reynolds went back in the State court, and then when I got into the case he assisted in getting through the order of the State court selling the property over there, which was the very thing that he was employed by Heckman & Hansen to resist; and at the same time the order shows that he was the attorney for the bonding company. Well, of course, the bonding company was interested in getting that thing through and in getting themselves released from the bond. Now, that is why I objected to Mr. Reynolds's employment. I don't care what he did with the money.

Mr. McCoy. Is that what made you nervous?

A. Yes; that made me nervous and it does yet.

Mr. Dorr. Mr. Finch, how long was that injunction in existence that Judge Hanford issued against the sale of the property?

A. Four days.

Q. Sir?—A. Four days.

Q. Four days?—A. Well, it was four days before they came into court and asked to have it dissolved. It still remained in existence—I misunderstood your question.

Q. After the temporary injunction was granted how long was it before it was disolved?—A. I think it was granted about the 13th or 14th of January and dissolved about the 3d of March.

Q. Then it was from the 13th or the 14th of February until the 3d of March that the sale was suspended by the injunction order?—A. Yes, sir, which Mr. Reynolds had procured.

Q. Which Mr. Reynolds had procured?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, during that time full opportunity was given to Heckman & Hansen and the creditors, and everybody else, to secure a better bid for the property, was there not?—A. Well, I don't know how to answer that. They were on earth, and that is all I can say, if you consider that a full opportunity—I don't know how to answer your question.

Q. Don't you know that they were told to see if they could find anyone who would offer them more money for that property?—A. Oh, that was the contention, and I think it was true—I always credited it—and I don't doubt that they were so told.

Q. And they never could find anyone, during all those weeks, to give another dollar for the property?—A. That was true. They had a few nibbles at it, and then they went to Gen. Metcalfe about it and somehow or other then it fell down. That was the complaint of Mr. Heckman.

Q. And Gen. Metcalfe was in the general conspiracy?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is the thing that finally you found out that you were the only honest man left?—A. Well, I was the last man—I never got a price, but I named the price that everyone else got.

Mr. Dorr. That is all, sir.

Whereupon a recess was taken until 1.30.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment.
All parties present as at former hearing.
The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Miss ADELLA PARKER. having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name.
A. Adella Parker.
Q. Where do you live, Miss Parker?—A. In Seattle.
Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Oh, more than 20 years.
Q. What is your present business or profession?—A. I am a teacher.
Q. In what capacity, Miss Parker?—A. I teach civics and economics in the Broadway High School.
Q. Are you a member of any profession?—A. I am a member of the teaching profession, and I am admitted to the bar here in the State.
Q. How long since you have been admitted to the bar?—A. I was admitted in 1903.
Q. How long have you been a teacher?—A. I can't remember.
Q. A number of years?—A. I think it is about 16 or 17 years.
Q. Is the institution of which you speak a part of the public school system of the city?—A. Yes.
Q. What is its relation to the graded schools or to the public schools?—A. Well, it stands between the graded schools and the university. It is the head of the public school system—what we call the public school system.
Q. Are the graduates of that school eligible to the classes in the university without further examination?—A. Yes, in most cases; not in every case.
Q. What subjects do you teach?—A. Civics and economics.
Q. Have you any other occupation or work than teaching at present—if you do any editorial work or any——A. (Interrupting.) Well, I publish a little magazine in the city here.
Q. Is that in connection with your school work or independent of it?—A. It is independent of it, except that it deals with the same subjects, largely—civics and economics.
Q. How frequently is it issued?—A. Monthly.
Q. Have you been issuing it for some time?—A. The first issue was in January, 1911.
Q. I presume you have some others associated with you——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.
Q. (Continuing.) That you do not do all the work on the magazine?—A. Oh, no; I don't do all the work.
Q. You might give the name of the magazine, Miss Parker?—A. The Western Woman Voter.
Mr. HUGHES. I didn't get that fully.
A. The Western Woman Voter.
The CHAIRMAN. Is it an advocate of woman suffrage?
A. It is not opposed to it.
Q. What need of it in Washington now?—A. Well, you see it is intended to give information; when women vote they need information. This is intended not to be a magazine to promote suffrage except in other States, but it gives information about civics and economics here and elsewhere.

Mr. McCoy. Trying to reform Oregon in that respect, is it?

A. Yes.

The Chairman. Does it circulate in other States than this one?

A. Yes, we have subscribers in about half of the States of the Union.

Q. Its influence has not become paramount in Oregon yet?—A. They are going to carry suffrage next November over there, I am quite sure.

Q. Miss Parker, are you acquainted with Judge Hanford, of the United States court here?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. Do you mean how long have I known him by sight or how long have I had a speaking acquaintance with him?

Q. Have you a speaking acquaintance with him?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long a time?—A. I think about 10 years.

Q. And prior to that, if you knew him by sight, you may state how long you knew him that way?—A. Probably about 5 years before the last 10 years. Five years prior to the last 10 years I knew him by sight.

Q. When were you subpœnaed as a witness to be here?—A. Day before yesterday morning.

Q. When did you learn that you were about to be subpœnaed?—A. On the 4th of July.

Q. Is it true that you had been avoiding service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between those dates?—A. Yes, it is true.

Q. Information has come to the committee, or to myself at least, that in addition to your other accomplishments you are quite a sprinter; you tried to evade the service by the officer by running away I understand; is that correct?—A. They didn't overtake me for some time.

Q. How far did you manage to get ahead of him, how far did you run?—A. Well, I turned a corner. If there had only been two of them I think I could have gotten away, but there were three.

Q. It was your purpose to avoid coming here?—A. Yes; I am an unwilling witness.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity of observing Judge Hanford during the years you have known him?—A. I have met him rarely.

Q. Give us some idea on what occasions, what the circumstances were when you met him or saw him. Was it in court here or anywhere, or was it on a public occasion, or was it on the street or on the street car; give us some idea of that?—A. I was subpœnaed in a case where Judge Hanford was the presiding judge, some years ago; it was—I don't remember how long ago—it was the case that Mr. Edwin Holden James brought in the interests of that Hindoo against Chief Delaney—some of the attorneys in court will remember it, I think—and I have met him sometimes on the street and occasionally on the street car.

Q. Had you any occasion to observe the judge in court, except when you were a witness as you have stated?—A. No; I never was in his court, except at that time.

Q. Where else have you seen or met him other than on the street cars and in court?—A. Oh, I meet him on the street occasionally, and when I was in law school I remember he gave a lecture at one time—that I met him afterwards.

Q. Miss Parker, if at any time you have seen Judge Hanford when he seemed to you to be under the influence of intoxicants please state about it.—A. Do you wish me to state it just regularly, giving the time and all, or just——

Q. (Interrupting.) You may state——A. (Interrupting.) Yes; there were two occasions when I saw Judge Hanford was under the influence of intoxicants.

Q. Give the first occasion now. Give the time and place, if you can.—A. The first occasion was about five years ago. It was late at night. I had been at the home of a relative on account of illness, and it was within a short time of the last of October, 1907. I fix that time because it is the date of my niece's birth, and the illness was the illness of my niece's mother, my sister-in-law. I left her home late and caught the last car out Broadway.

Q. That would be about what hour, Miss Parker?—A. I think between 12 and 1, but I would not be positive; I am sure it was the last car, though.

Q. On what line, what street?—A. The Broadway.

Q. Very well. Go on now, please.—A. I got the car somewhere from Boren and Pike on up to Broadway; I don't remember; it overtook me somewhere there, and I boarded it, and Judge Hanford was sitting inside the car on the side seat next the door. I had only a few blocks to go, and I stood on the rear platform. He seemed to me intoxicated.

Q. If anything occurred then to attract or rivet your attention on his condition, tell what it was.—A. He was pitched far over. He sat at about the middle of the seat and somewhat on the edge of it, too, and he was pitched well forward and was asleep. The conductor was evidently afraid of carrying him by and woke him, spoke to him, asked him what street he got off at. He was a young man, and he bent over to him and said, "Old man, what street do you get off at?" And the Judge answered "Galer," as I remember it. I left the car before he did.

Q. Give the committee a better idea of the fixedness and strength of your opinion as to his condition. Have you any doubt in your mind as to his being in the state you have told us?—A. No.

Q. Have you any doubt in your mind as to the identity of the person?—A. Oh, no; no.

Q. How far did you ride with him?—A. More than six blocks.

Q. Was the door of the car at that end of it open or closed?—A. Open.

Q. Were you near enough to tell whether there was any odor of liquor on him?—A. No; I was on the rear platform, and I would not know. No; I would not know if there was any odor of liquor.

Q. Was his sleeping audible?—A. Not to me.

Q. During all the time you saw him—that is, during the six blocks which you rode with him—was he asleep all of that time?—A. Except when the conductor awoke him and asked him——

Q. (Interrupting.) How soon was that before your getting off?—A. I think it was very soon after I got on the car that he spoke to him.

Q. Do you know, from your knowledge of the streets there, how far it was to the street he named?—A. I don't know just where Galer Street is; it is a few blocks on, I believe.

Q. Now, Miss Parker, if you please, will you tell us when the other time was and where it was?—A. The other time was near the 1st of September—October, 1910, it was, the year; I remember it, because it was the year we got the vote, and Martha Greening, of Philadelphia, was with me on the car. She had had dinner with me, and we were coming down town. It was between—I think it was between 7 and 8 o'clock, not much past 8 o'clock in the evening, and Judge Hanford was seated in the car when we boarded it.

Q. What direction was the car going?—A. Coming down town. Do you wish me to continue?

Q. Go on.—A. Judge Hanford was not asleep, but we both—we commented on the situation, and we both regarded him as intoxicated

Q. How far did you ride with him on that occasion?—A. From Broadway and Harrison down—I don't know, I suppose—we got off the car somewhere down here on Second Avenue.

Q. In point of time, about how long were you on the car with him?—A. Oh, I suppose 10 minutes; something like that.

Q. Could you describe with more particularity what it was in his appearance or conduct which led you ladies to conclude that he was intoxicated?—A. I think it would be that he did not seem to be aware entirely of his surroundings.

Q. From your knowledge of him when he was not under the influence of intoxicants, and comparing him on those occasions with the occasions which you refer to, what do you say as to whether it might have been some other cause than intoxication which made him look as he did to you?—A. I don't know of any other cause than intoxication that gives just the impression that that does.

Q. Was there any appearance of pain—might pain have caused the condition you saw?—A. No; there was no appearance of pain.

Q. How near to him were you on that occasion?—A. We sat in the next seat.

Q. Behind him or before him?—A. We sat in—we took seats in front of him.

Q. Did you notice any odor of liquor on that occasion?—A. I don't recall any; I could not state that I did.

Q. Which of you noticed his condition first?—A. I did.

Q. Was it the subject of discussion between you on that occasion?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you at any other time seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was to any extent under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I don't recall any. I don't recall any.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, do any of you wish to ask Miss Parker any questions? Do you wish to ask the lady further?

Mr. HUGHES. Just a question or two.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Did you ever meet Judge Hanford in his home?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever have an opportunity to see him in his work, his working hours, to learn anything of his personal habits?—A. No, nothing—no; I saw him once on the bench.

Q. Yes.—A. And I have seen him when he has made addresses—public addresses.

Q. Where was it that you met him—that you were introduced to him?—A. I suppose it must—I can't recall, but I judge it was in connection with my studies at the law school.

Q. In other words, you never have been thrown in personal contact with him?—A. Oh, no.

Q. So that you have any familiarity with his personal habits or his personal idiosyncracies—you have no knowledge of that?—A. I have seen him occasionally.

Q. I say, you have not——A. (Interrupting.) I don't know his home. I was never in his home; he was never in mine.

Q. Your knowledge of people is such that you know that many people have peculiarities or idiosyncracies that become known only on intimate personal acquaintance?—A. Surely.

Q. You do not have such a knowledge of Judge Hanford?—A. No; I would think not.

Q. On the first occasion that you speak of he sat well forward in the seat, you say, and leaned forward and seemed to you to be asleep?—A. He was asleep; yes.

Q. You think he was asleep?—A. Yes. I would testify that he was asleep.

Q. And when the conductor spoke to him and asked him where he got off he said "Galer Street"?—A. Yes.

Q. You heard that answer?—A. I either heard his answer or heard the conductor repeat it; I can't be sure. I think I heard both.

Q. And you know that Galer Street was the street on which his home was situated—Galer and Tenth?—A. I didn't know it, but I judged it was.

Q. You know it now, don't you?—A. No; I don't know it, unless you inform me.

Q. I thought you knew now?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. Aren't you familiar with Judge Hanford's home? Don't you know where his home is?—A. I believe not.

Q. You know where the Leary Home is, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. You remember the red house just this side?—A. But I didn't know that was Judge Hanford's home; no.

Q. That would be at Galer Street?—A. Yes.

Q. As you noticed it. On the second occasion you say he was not asleep but he seemed lethargic in his manner?—A. I should say lack of control would explain it better.

Q. In what way?—A. Well, a certain limpness of muscles, and I would not like to say vacancy of mind, but something approaching it.

Q. Did you ever shake hands with Judge Hanford?—A. I think I must have, but I don't recall exactly.

Q. You don't recall about that?—A. I meet him rarely; I see him occasionally.

Q. If you shook hands with him, were you impressed with the same sensation when you shook hands with him?—A. Well, I say I don't recall shaking hands with him.

Q. You don't recall. That is all.—A. I think I must have done so.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. On this second occasion, Miss Parker, what was the appearance of his face and his eyes, or his face and his eyes especially?—A. Well, intoxication seems to me so definite a symptom that it is almost a standard, and I would say that he looked as if he were intoxicated.

He was flushed and a peculiar—I might say, puffy appearance of the face that usually accompanies intoxication.

Q. Did you notice whether or not his eyes were bloodshot?—A. They were.

Witness excused

L. H. McMAHON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name.

A. L. H. McMahon.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. McMahon?—A. Salem, Oreg.

Q. How long has Salem, Oreg., been your home?—A. Well, the greater portion of 45 years.

Q. That would be your entire life?—A. Practically so; yes, sir.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. I am a lawyer by profession, but I am not actively engaged in practicing now.

Q. For how long a time have you been or at least when did you become a lawyer?—A. Oh, I don't know; perhaps 15 years ago.

Q. And when did you cease the active practice of your profession?—A. About three years ago.

Q. Have you any other business or avocation?—A. Well, I have been the owner and editor of semiweekly newspapers and an editor and part owner of a daily newspaper. At present I am in the orchard business.

Q. Where?—A. North of Salem about 10 miles.

Q. Do you grow fruit down there?—A. Well, not a great deal of fruit yet. I have some six hundred and odd acres in orchard and a thousand acres of other land that I am using for general agricultural purposes and crops.

Q. What kind of an orchard, apple orchard?—A. Apples, peaches, pears, and cherries.

Q. What papers were you connected with?—A. I established the Woodburn Independent, at Woodburn, a semiweekly paper at Woodburn, Oreg., in 1888, and I was part owner and stockholder in the Salem Daily Independent and the editor and business manager.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford of the Federal bench?—A. I met Judge Hanford formally through the courtesy of a mutual friend, and I have tried cases in his court on three different occasions.

Q. Where?—A. At Tacoma.

Q. When?—A. Well, I can approximate the time. It has been about five years ago.

Q. Were all three of the cases within a single year?—A. I think perhaps within a twelvemonth, but between the two years.

Q. Have you had occasion to notice the judge holding court when you were not yourself connected in any way with the work then under consideration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are those the only occasions when you saw the judge on the bench?—A. Well, I think that I have seen the judge on the bench immediately preceding each trial when I would happen in the courtroom waiting for the case to be called, possibly the day before, maybe two days before, something of that kind.

Q. If you noticed any peculiarity in his manner or his condition while you saw him on the bench, please tell the committee what that peculiarity was?—A. Well, there were two things that were very pronounced. One was his lack of courtesy to the attorneys, his intolerant ways of treating the members of the bar in the conduct of the cases. The other was his, as I recollect it now, habitually going to sleep upon the bench in the afternoons. I don't recall that he ever went to sleep in the forenoons. I recall on one occasion in the trial of a case where an attorney was arguing a motion and Judge Hanford went to sleep while he was arguing, threw his head back, his mouth was open, and the attorney argued along for a while, and the situation became acutely embarrassing, and finally he stopped arguing. I think perhaps Judge Hanford was asleep 15 minutes, perhaps 10 minutes, after he quit arguing—after the lawyer quit arguing—ceased his argument, and then the judge wakened with a snore that was audible all over the court room, and the attorney commenced his argument anew. It was almost every day when we tried those cases, as I recollect it, and I distinguish between remembering a thing and recollecting it. This matter has been brought—refreshened in my mind on account of this case. But as I recollect it, Judge Hanford went to sleep every afternoon during the time I appeared in his court, and I think perhaps that that amounted to 10 or 12 days in all of the cases.

Q. Was there any other occasion where the sleep continued as long as on the occasion you have described?—A. No; but he has gone to sleep two or three different times, sleeping a little bit and then waken and rub his whiskers, and the case would proceed.

Q. What was there, if anything, that enabled you to make up your mind as to his condition, that is, what was there in the manner of his changing from apparent sleep to wakefulness which led you to think he had been asleep and not merely closing his eyes?—A Well, the judge has a habit of snoring when he sleeps, with mouth expressions that would indicate that he was asleep. I think I am safe in saying that he was asleep. There is no question in my mind about his being asleep; a sudden start and awakening and opening his eyes and shaking his head and whiskers this way, as a man arousing himself out of sleep.

Q. Have you ever noticed him in apparent sleep when you thought he was not sleeping?—A. No. Judge Hanford was when awake mentally very active.

Q. Have you noticed any occasion when his eyes were closed and seemed to be asleep and objections were made and rulings called for when he proved to be mentally awake and alert?—A. No, I have no remembrance of anything of that kind.

Q. Have you seen the judge preside elsewhere than at Spokane?—A. At Tacoma.

Q. Or Tacoma, I mean?—A. I have not.

Q. How often have you seen him when, in your opinion, he was in that condition?—A. Well, in my judgment, he never went on the bench in the afternoon without having some liquor. I didn't see him drink on all of—that is, every day when we were trying a case, but he had the general symptoms of a man who was not drunk but had been drinking liquor. His cheeks were usually flushed, and there was—well, the ordinary symptoms of a man who had a drink or two.

Q. Have you, at any time, had any personal trouble with the judge, or any trouble?—A. No, no, not in the sense of trouble. I was restive while in his court because of his—the discourtesy—not to me personally, but to all the attorneys present, because I felt that—well, he got on my nerves. If you would make a motion and if you would start to argue it, he would rule adversely to you every once in a while without giving you an opportunity to state your premises. He didn't do that often with me, but I saw him with other attorneys and the court. The fact is that he conducted his court as I have never seen a court anywheres else conducted in my life, and I refused a personal damage suit after that rather than take it into his court, because I felt that I could not do a client justice under those conditions. But personally I have nothing whatever against Judge Hanford in any way. In fact, I am not acquainted with him only as I stated, by a formal introduction and the fact that I have tried those cases in his court.

Q. During the course of those trials did the judge at any time reprimand you or address remarks to you which gave you offense?—A. Well, I think the judge and I clashed on two or three occasions. I was unused to the judge's arbitrary method of conducting cases, and I think we clashed on one or two occasions over the admission of testimony. I think one time he refused to allow me to state my premises in an objection to some testimony, and that I insisted upon stating them and did state them. I remember that Gen. Stratton said to me once to be careful, because the judge might fine me for contempt of court, and I said that I was well within my rights as an attorney, and that contempt is an appealable order anyway, and I would not submit to being fined for contempt arbitrarily. Gen. Stratton, who was associate counsel in the case—he was formerly attorney general of this State—perhaps prevented me from insisting more strenuously upon my rights because the general and Judge Hanford were personal friends, and while the general recognized the arbitrary manner in which the court was conducted he excused it on account of the kindness of heart of Judge Hanford. And it got onto my nerves, so that, while I was counsel in chief in the case, I turned most of it over to Gen. Stratton. The fact is that—since you have asked that question it has led to these answers—the fact is the judge's conduct in his own court was such as to—well I felt this way, that if any lawyer or any spectator had conducted himself in Judge Hanford's court as Judge Hanford conducted himself, that he would have been subject to fine for contempt of court; something I was entirely unused to and I will admit prejudice to that extent.

Q. Does the feeling which you have expressed enter into the testimony which you give?—A. No. On the contrary, I have the deepest sympathy for Judge Hanford personally, occasioned by things that mutual friends have told me concerning conditions that surround him that may and perhaps have a great deal to do with his temperamental habits.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions? Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask the witness?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. How long since you quit practicing law, Mr. McMahon?—A. Why, I—oh, I practice occasionally, if some case of importance comes up that there is enough in; but I closed my office and gave up the general practice something over three years ago.

Q. Two?—A. Three years ago; yes.

Q. Three years ago. Where was your office prior to that time; in Salem?—A. In Salem; yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a partner?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did you practice in Salem?—A. Oh, I don't know; 10 or 12 years, I think.

Q. You say you have tried three cases before Judge Hanford in Tacoma?—A. Well, I partially tried the first case and they got me on a pin hook and I had to back out, took a nonsuit, and then I tried——

Q. (Interrupting.) You don't blame Judge Hanford for that?—A. How is that?

Q. I say, you are not blaming Judge Hanford for that?—A. Oh, no; not at all.

Q. It was the attorney for the other fellow that caught you on the pin hook?—A. The other fellow caught me on the pin hook because you have ways of conducting courts over here that we haven't in Oregon.

Q. Well. you spoke of one case that you went out on a nonsuit. What was the next case?—A. It was the same case.

Q. The same case brought over again?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that tried——A. (Interrupting.) That was tried; yes.

Q. (Continuing.) To a jury?—A. Yes.

Q. To a jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With a favorable or unfavorable result to you?—A. I won the case; got a judgment for $7 000; personal injury.

Q. And what was the next case?—A. It was the same case tried over.

Q. The third time?—A. Was not tried the first time.

Q. No; I know it wasn't.—A. The third time it was tried in the court.

Q. Was the case reversed in the court of appeals, or was a new trial granted?—A. Judge Hanford granted a new trial.

Q. Granted a new trial?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you appear before him to argue that?—A. Gen. Stratton appeared to argue the motion for a new trial. I didn't come over.

Q. And then you finally tried it again?—A. And won it.

Q. You won it again?—A. Yes.

Q. And recovered your verdict, or was it appealed?—A. I settled the case.

Q. What?—A. We settled the case. The last verdict was for $4,000, and they were threatening to kill it. The client had no money. I took $3,000 and quit.

Q. And it was in that case, with its various trials, that you occupied some 10 or 12 days before Judge Hanford—is that what you mean?—A. I would not be positive as to the time. I approximate 10 or 12 days in all, possibly longer.

Q. That was your entire experience before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Stratton was associated with you on each of those occasions, or only on the last two?—A. On all of them.

Q. On all of them?—A. On all of those occasions.

Q. He was present whenever you were?—A. Yes. Yes; he was present in court whenever I was there.

Q. Did you just happen to be here on business?—A. How is that?

Q. Do you just happen to be here on business?—A. No, sir; I was subpœnaed here.

Q. Or did you come purposely?—A. I was subpœnaed here.

Q. Subpœnaed to come here from Salem, Oreg.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the title of the case?—A. The one I tried in Judge Hanford's court?

Q. Yes.—A. McLean v. The Northwestern Milling Co., of Hoquiam. Is that all, Mr. Hughes?

Q. Who were the attorneys on the other side?—A. A man by the name of Griffith, at one time, and afterwards judge—I can't call his name. Mr. Stratton can tell you.

Witness excused.

JOHN C. HIGGINS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. John C. Higgins.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long?—A. About 14 years.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. How long have you been practicing law, Mr. Higgins?—A. Ten years.

Q. All of that time in Seattle?—A. All of that time in Seattle.

Q. What is the general nature of your practice?—A. It is a general law practice.

Q. To what extent do you practice in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Oh, I have a case or two, I suppose, at each term of court; have had for some years.

Q. You are, of course, acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am; yes.

Q. And have been during all of your professional life, have you?—A. All of the time I have been here, I think; yes, sir.

Q. To what extent do you see or associate with the judge out of court?—A. Oh, I see Judge Hanford occasionally on the street, at the Rainier Club, or on my way home. I live on the same street car line that Judge Hanford does.

Q. Have you noticed anything peculiar in the judge's manner as a presiding judge?—A. Well, every man has his own individual peculiarities, I suppose. I have noticed that Judge Hanford had a very rigid hand over proceedings in his court, and is perhaps a little more rigid in his rulings with attorneys than the ordinary judge.

Q. Would you say that rigidness extends to the point of arbitrariness?—A. I have never seen it extend to that point. I think that it is within the province of every judge who does his duty to curb to a considerable extent the freedom that attorneys like to indulge in in the length of cross-examination or in the length of their arguments, and I have never had any ocasion to feel that Judge Hanford denied me any right that I was entitled to as an attorney, and I have never seen him deny any other attorney the right to present a point with sufficient fullness. Many points can be ruled upon without hearing the attorney, and I have seen Judge Hanford deny attorneys the right to argue an objection to the admission of testimony when it was perfectly patent that there could not be any reasonable objection to it, and when attorneys had overindulged in the privilege of arguing points and objections and extending the record.

Q. Have you noticed anything in his personal appearance during the trial of a case, or during his occupancy of the bench, which was peculiar?—A. Well, I have noticed that in trials that became prolonged, not during arguments, but during the taking of testimony, that Judge Hanford has a habit of nodding on the bench, and I have often, judging entirely from his physical appearance, thought that he was probably asleep; but I have observed that on practically all of those occasions he was ready with a very prompt and clear ruling when the time came for a ruling if objection was made to testimony.

Q. You say on practically all of those occasions he was ready to rule. What do you mean by the use of the word "practically" in that connection?—A. There have been one or two occasions—there were one or two occasions in the trial of one case about six or eight years ago, in Judge Hanford's court, when an objection was made by myself or opposing counsel to questions, and Judge Hanford seemingly did not hear the objection.

Q. What was done?—A. Why, if I were asking the question I repeated it, and counsel repeated his objection in a louder tone of voice, or if counsel on the side was asking a question he repeated it and I repeated my objection, and it attracted Judge Hanford's attention, and he ruled. I think that on those occasions Judge Hanford's mind was not alert, and that he had not for a moment been following the evidence.

Q. And you resorted to the device you have described in order to get his attention?—A. Yes.

Q. Would it be too strong a statement if I said that it was your purpose to wake him up?—A. Well, it was our purpose to attract his attention. Whether he was merely thinking of something else, or was actually dozing, I am not able to say. His appearance at that time was no different than it was on scores of other occasions in the trial of that case, or of other cases, when he was entirely ready to rule, and did rule clearly, as though he had been following the evidence clearly while apparently asleep.

Q. What time of the day was it, Mr. Higgins?—A. In the afternoon. I will say, in that connection, that I have in the trial of cases before Judge Hanford, and occasionally before other judges—have made objections, or heard objections made that the judge was not ready to rule upon, when there was no physical evidence of his being asleep, but because perhaps for a moment he was not following the questions, but was thinking of something else.

Q. How loud a tone of voice did you or your opponent, whoever it was that used it, speak in to arouse the judge?—A. Well, in a somewhat louder tone of voice, but I think not loud enough to wake up a man who is actually asleep. I should say that it was the repetition of the question in a different tone of voice, or some momentary interruptions of the questions, that might have attracted the judge's attention, as much as the louder tone of voice.

Q. Did you consult with one another as to what you would do to get his attention?—A. You mean counsel on the two sides of the case?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. We did not.

Q. On how many occasions did that occur?—A. Two or three in the trial of one case. That is the only time in a considerable number before Judge Hanford that I have ever found him not following the evidence closely.

Q. Were those occasions on the same day or different days?—A. On two or three different days in the trial of the case.

Q. And that, you say, Mr. Higgins, was how long ago?—A. Six or eight years ago. I have not—I had no knowledge that I was to be subpœnaed in this case until I was actually subpœnaed shortly before noon to-day, and I have had no chance to refresh my recollection.

Q. Has your practice in the judge's court continued up to the present time?—A. It has.

Q. Have you noticed any difference in the judge with regard to the peculiarity you have described?—A. Not at all, except that that occasion six or eight years ago was the only occasion upon which I have ever noticed that Judge Hanford was not following the evidence closely.

Q. Did all those incidents occur in the afternoon?—A. They did.

Q. About what hour?—A. Oh, I am not able to say.

Q. What part of the afternoon, if you can recall?—A. Well, I have no recollection of that. All, perhaps, in mid-afternoon.

Q. To what extent have you seen the judge elsewhere than in court?—A. Oh, I have seen him for the last few years every day or two at the Rainier Club, I suppose, and every few days on the car going home or coming down town.

Q. About what hours, usually?—A. At all hours of the day, from morning when he would come down in the morning until—and generally at noon at the club, or occasionally in the evening at the club, and in the evening going home about dinner time, or late at night.

Q. To what extent have you seen the judge drink intoxicants, if you have seen him do so?—A. I think I have never seen Judge Hanford take a drink at all any place. I can't be clear about that. I may have seen him take a drink at the Rainier Club.

Q. Well, it didn't impress itself on your memory, if he did?—A. It did not.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you seen him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have never seen him when I thought there was the slightest suspicion of his being intoxicated or under the influence of liquor.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions, Mr. Higgins? Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask Mr. Higgins?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Did you testify that you live on his street car line?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you frequently ridden home with him or on the same car with him?—A. Well, in several years I have ridden home with him a good many times. It would not be oftener than perhaps once or twice a week.

Q. At what hours?—A. Either about dinner time, at night, or late at night when I would be going home from the office or from some engagement down town.

Q. Did you observe at such times the same manners that you have described as seeing him evidence upon the bench?—A. Oh, yes; I have seen Judge Hanford often nod on the street car.

Q. From your knowledge of him, did you think at the time that he was under the influence of liquor at all?—A. Never occurred to me to think that he was; no. I saw nothing about his manner to indicate that his drowsiness was occasioned by drinking liquor.

Q. Might such an inference be drawn, however, by one who was not familiar with his habits and peculiarities?—A. Yes; I should think so. I know people have made the statement to me that they had seen Judge Hanford intoxicated, when they had no more evidence than the nodding of his head on the street car, that I had seen myself.

Q. You are one of the regents of the State university?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the grievance committee of the Seattle Bar Association?—A. No; I am——

Q. Or are you the attorney for it?—A. Well, hardly that. I have conducted, at the instance of the grievance committee and the board of trustees of the bar association, all of the disbarment proceedings that have been conducted by that association since its organization, but I am not a member of the committee. I am simply designated, as the cases come up, to prosecute the disbarment proceedings. I sit with the committee at each of its meetings, but not as a member.

Mr. HUGHES. I didn't know but what the committee might be interested in knowing that fact, and having an opportunity to examine this witness upon that subject, since I have gathered that possibly it conceived that the standards of the profession were lower in the West than some other places.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. I would like to ask the witness: What is the method of proceeding against an attorney who has been accused and who is brought up on charges, with reference to disbarring him or not; how is the proceeding conducted?—A. Why, if a preliminary investigation by the committee or its attorney discloses what seems to be reasonable ground for an investigation or prosecution, and discloses any reason to doubt the—or any possibility for a reasonable doubt of the charges being well founded—the case is generally taken directly to the accused man himself and his own story on the question taken, or he is asked to appear before the committee, if he chooses to do so, and make his own statement or present what evidence he has. That is mandatory in the case of a member of the association; it is only discretionary with the committee in case of charges against a man who is not a member of the association. And if upon such an investigation the committee decides that a disbarment proceeding should be instituted in court, which under our procedure is the only place that it can be carried on here, the matter is then referred to the board of trustees of the association, who designates an attorney to prosecute the proceeding in court—to institute it. And it is then brought before the court, as our habit has been, on the relation of the prosecuting attorney of King County, by myself as deputy prosecuting attorney. I am a deputy merely for the purpose of prosecuting those cases. And it is then carried on——

The CHAIRMAN. Before what court?

A. The Superior Court of King County.

Mr. McCOY. Then, what takes place when it is brought before the court?

A. Our statute provides for a regular procedure by a motion and answer, the motion stating the grounds upon which disbarment or suspension is asked, and the defendant then has all of the remedies that he would have in the ordinary civil proceeding. It is designated a civil proceeding by our statute and comes before the court with his motion or demurrer or his answer. The case is brought to issue and tried before the judge as any other civil case triable only before the court itself.

Mr. McCOY. And the evidence presented as it would be in a trial?

A. In an ordinary civil action; yes.

Mr. McCOY. And the respondent having every opportunity to present his case in the same way?

A. In the same way, and the right of appeal in the event he is found guilty.

The CHAIRMAN. If found guilty and the order of disbarment is entered, does that apply to any court but the court in question which makes the order?

A. It applies to all the courts in this State. It does not apply, of course, to the Federal—that is, to all of the State courts in this State. It does not apply to the Federal court here or elsewhere, nor to any State court elsewhere except in cases where a man from this State seeks admission in another State on his certificate here, which has been revoked here, and he will not be admitted in other States.

Mr. McCOY. Is not his admission to practice in the Federal court based on his having previously been admitted in the State court?

A. I am not familiar with the requirements. I have been admitted in all of the Federal courts, but I have forgotten what the statute—the Federal statute requires as a basis for admission. I think that sufficient qualification is shown if a man is entitled to practice in the highest court of the State where the Federal court is sitting, but that is merely an impression. I have not looked up the statute with that point in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all with Mr. Higgins? Stand aside.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Move along with Mr. Higgins.

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask you if in your investigations you have recently—I mean your investigations before the committtee for the trustees of the bar association—have recently had occasion to investigate Mr. Jerold Finch?

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think we ought to go into that——

Q. (Continuing.) For the purpose of disbarment?

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Do you? Won't that open up another trial, another hearing, which would take more time than it would be worth?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't know as it would open up another hearing. It is simply a question——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). I don't mind going into it, but I don't see the end of it if it is followed to the end. There is no pretense that he was disbarred, is there?

Mr. HUGHES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Why should we go into it?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, it depends on what weight you give to testimony, that is all. In other words, the purpose, if you ask, is to show that in just such a matter as this, like accusations made against other attorneys, he was investigated—matters which would require the disbarment either of a person who willfully made such accusations, or the disbarment of the persons against whom they were made. That he was investigated by this bar association

The CHAIRMAN. That would lead to an investigation of every disbarment case you have had here, wouldn't it?

Mr. HUGHES. No; I don't think so.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see why it might not.

Mr. HUGHES. It only bears upon the question of whether Mr. Finch is accustomed to taking extreme and rather reckless views of the acts and conduct of other atttorneys, and of judges which are also involved.

The CHAIRMAN. This is scarcely the way to impeach his testimony, and it would lead us into a field which we would not get out for a long time, if any one chose to follow it. I think we ought not to go into it.

Witness excused.

J. L. ZIMMERMAN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name, please.

A. J. L. Zimmerman.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Zimmerman?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you been a resident of this city?—A. Between 8 and 10 years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Police officer, sergeant of police.

Q. How long have you been a police sergeant?—A. About nine months now.

Q. And how long on the police force?—A. Between five and six years.

Q. Sergeant, are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him about five years.

Q. Is that a personal or a mere sight acquaintance?—A. A mere sight acquaintance is all.

Q. At what time are you on duty?—A. At the present time at night from 8 until 4 in the morning.

Q. And at other times prior to your present assignment?—A. Well, we change shifts every three months.

Q. During the time you have known Judge Hanford, tell the committee what opportunity you have had for seeing him here in the city?—A. Well, I have seen him on different occasions in the streets, met him.

Q. Well, at what hours?—A. Well, never very late in the evening. Mostly—I don't think I have ever met him after 9 o'clock, to my knowledge.

Q. Would those meetings be on the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Out on the public street?—A. On the public street.

Q. Have you at any time seen him on the street cars?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge. I have seen him waiting for cars and getting on cars, but never on the cars.

Q. If you have seen the judge in any public drinking place——A. (Interrupting.) I never have.

Q. (Continuing.) You may state.—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him at any time when he seemed to you to be intoxicated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him at any time when he seemed to be under the influence of intoxicants to any extent?—A. No, sir; I don't believe I have; that is, what I would call an intoxicated man.

Q. What do you mean by your qualification in your answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I say, explain, if you will, what you mean by the hesitation and qualification in your answer?—A. Well, I don't think that I have ever seen him at any time when I considered him under the influence of liquor.

Q. Well, have you seen him when you concluded from his appearance that he had been drinking?—A. No, sir; that is, I could not tell that he had.

Question read.

A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. You answered that you could not tell that he had. That is not quite responsive to the question.—A. Well, there might be—it might be that he had had a drink, might have had a couple of drinks, but I have seen a great many people in the same condition that was not drinking, and I would not have any reason to believe that he was drinking.

Q. What was the condition which you refer to?—A. Well, he seemed to be in a sort of feeble manner; that is, in walking on the street.

Q. In what way, Sergeant?—A. Well, sort of dazed; that is the way I would put it; seemed to be a little bewildered.

Q. How did he act on those occasions?—A. Why, I have seen him come walking along and come up to take a street car and acted like a man that didn't just exactly know where he was at. He asked me on one or two occasions about a car, where he would get a car, and I have answered.

Q. For where?—A. I think he asked me for a Capitol Hill car, if I remember correctly. Yes, I am positive he asked for a Capitol Hill car.

Q. Well, are the cars designated in such a way that anyone could tell a Capitol Hill car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are they designated?—A. They are all marked on the front end by the name of each line or the designation "Capitol Hill" in plain letters.

Q. Is there anything in the color of the car to indicate——A. No; not in the color.

Q. (Continuing.) Where it goes? Just the name?—A. Just the name.

Q. That is in large letters?—A. Large letters.

Q. On the front and rear ends?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the side?—A. And on both sides.

Q. And on those occasions—you say you knew him very well?—A. By sight I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you seen him when he was not in that condition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what did you attribute his condition on those occasions?—A. Well, I attributed it to his age more than anything else.

Q. But he was not very much older then than other times——A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) When you saw him and he was not in that condition, was he?—A. A man—you put me in—he looked to me to be a man that was not well, that is all. Didn't seem to be. Seemed to be sick or not feeling——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did he seem to be in pain?—A. What is it?

Q. Did he seem to be in pain?—A. No; I can't say that he seemed to be in pain; didn't act like a man that is in pain.

Q. Did you on any of those occasions actually help him on a car?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you point out his car to him?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. After it was pointed out to him, what did he do?—A. He went over and waited for his car, or I told him where he would get his car and he went over and waited for it, or if the car was there he went over and got on.

Q. How often have you seen him in that condition?—A. I don't think it was over twice; two times, to my recollection.

Q. About when was that?—A. That was about a year ago.

Q. How near together were those two occasions?—A. Oh, I could not say exactly. It possibly was inside of a month.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge carrying liquor with him?—A. Never have; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with the witness?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Have you talked recently with anybody about this matter of complaints against Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; I have not. That is, in what regard do you mean?

Q. In any regard. Have you talked with anybody about Judge Hanford in any way, shape, or manner recently?—A. Nothing more than to mention the fact that he was on trial here, I believe.

Q. Did you mention that he was on trial or did the person you were talking to mention that he was on trial?—A. I think the person that I was talking to mentioned that he was. It was a police officer.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. Well, he said—I don't know as I can remember exactly what he did say—something—it was brought up. The police officer that spoke to me about it said that Hanford would probably have a hard time, as I remember it, getting out of the difficulty. That was about all. I said I didn't know much about it.

Q. Well, who was the police officer who spoke to you about it?—A. I think it was Mr. Heath.

Q. Is he the only person, now, to whom you have spoken about this matter recently?—A. Well, no; I don't think so. I suppose there has been others spoke about it in a casual way, but never discussed it to any extent that I remember much of the conversation about it.

Q. Have you recently stated to anybody anything different from what you have just testified to?—A. No, sir; no, sir.

Q. Or anything in addition to what you have just testified to?—A. No; I would not have any reason to, because I didn't know anything different from what I have testified.

Q. Then you want the committee to understand that so far as you have—well, have you told anybody what you have said——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) On the stand?—A. No, sir.

Q. You haven't mentioned that to anybody at all?—A. I never have; no, sir.

Q. When were you subpœnaed?—A. Last night, 7.30.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Zimmerman, you say that Judge Hanford on one occasion asked you where he could get the Capitol Hill car?—A. Capitol Hill; yes, sir.

Q. That was about a year ago?—A. I think it was about that time. I could not state the exact date.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I told him where to get the Capitol Hill car.

Q. But what was it that you told him? I mean where did you tell him he could get it?—A. I told him to go to Third Avenue. It was at Second and Pike I met him.

Q. At Second and Pike you met him and he asked you the question and you told him he would get it at Third and Pike?—A. Yes.

Q. Does the Capitol Hill car come up Third Avenue and go out Pike Street?—A. At that time it came up Third Avenue and goes out Pine Street.

Q. Out Pine Street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had it taken that route?—A. Well, I don't know. There was a change made about that time.

Q. Several times changed the route of the different car lines——A. (Interrupting.) Yes; it has been changed.

Q. (Continuing.) That go east?—A. It has been changed several times.

Q. Does the Capitol Hill car run out Broadway past Judge Hanford's house?—A. No, sir—I don't know where Judge Hanford lives.

Q. Well, if he lives out on Tenth Avenue north, the Capitol Hill car line would not be the one he would take to go to and from his house, would it?—A. It would take him within three blocks of it.

Q. No; it would take him more than that. The Capitol Hill car——A. (Interrupting.) Four blocks.

Q. The Capitol Hill car line goes up on Fourteenth Avenue, doesn't it?—A. Yes—Fifteenth Avenue.

Q. Fifteenth Avenue?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And goes out north there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on a hill 40 feet higher than Tenth Avenue?—A. Yes; it is.

Q. And it does not go north nearly as far as Galer Street, either, does it?—A. Yes, it goes to Galer; yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the Capitol Hill line goes out on the east side of Volunteer Park, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Broadway line goes two blocks west of Volunteer Park?—A. Yes, sir.

Witness excused.

GEORGE DAY, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee in full.

A. George Day.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Day?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-four years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Police officer.

Q. How long have you been on the police force of the city?—A. About 15 years.

Q. What is your duty?—A. Traffic officer.

Q. Traffic officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does that mean, Mr. Day?—A. Well, it is a station upon a busy corner governing the coming and going of traffic.

Q. Where are you stationed?—A. At Third Avenue and Pike Street, one block from here.

Q. It is the same thing that is known as crossing officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been on that duty?—A. Approximately four years.

Q. What were you doing before that time?—A. Patrolman.

Q. Patrolman?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Would you speak a little more distinctly, Mr. Day?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Judge Hanford?

A. By sight.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I would not be able to state—a good many years.

Q. As many as 8 or 10 years?—A. More than that, sir.

Q. Where have you had occasion to notice the judge?—A. I have seen him repeatedly upon the street.

Q. Anywhere else?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. At what hours have you observed him on the street?—A. Why, in the daytime and evening.

Q. How late in the evening?—A. I would be unable to state.

Q. Can you approximate the lateness of the hour you would see him in the evening?—A. 10 o'clock.

Q. Never later than 10?—A. I would not be able to say, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge in any place where drinks were publicly sold?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge on the street when, in your opinion, he was more or less under the influence of liquor?—A. I have seen him on one occasion when it could be liquor and it could be otherwise.

Q. Describe his condition on that occasion?—A. It was in the evening.

Q. When was that occasion, as near as you can tell?—A. I would be unable even to approximate it; I could not approximate it to even a month.

Q. Well, the year?—A. It was, I think, three years ago this summer.

Q. Where was it, Mr. Day?—A. It was on Second Avenue.

Q. Near what street—what other street?—A. Marion—Second Avenue and Marion Street.

Q. How far is that from this building?—A. That would be five blocks south and one block west.

Q. What time was it?—A. As I say, it was approximately 10 o'clock.

Q. Now, what was it that attracted your attention to the judge?—A. Well, he was—he seemed to be laboring from exhaustion or illness or possibly drink—I took it for granted it was illness, and that perhaps—I didn't see him until he was right at the corner on the west side of the northwest corner of Marion and Second Avenue—and I thought perhaps he had just walked up that heavy grade there and was fatigued. He leaned against the building a number of times in going from the corner to the entrance to the Burke Building, a distance of probably 40 feet, or something like that.

Q. How many times did he lean against the building?—A. Well, I should say two or three times.

Q. Did you notice him as he walked?—A. Yes.

Q. And in the interval?—A. Yes.

Q. How did he walk?—A. Well, he walked in a very labored way.

Q. Well, how was the manner in which he walked with reference to wabbling and staggering?—A. It was as one would walk if they were greatly fatigued; there was no sprightliness to the step and there was no certainty.

Q. Did he walk in a direct line or in a waving line?—A. He would leave the wall of the building for a few feet and return to it until he reached the entrance to the building.

Q. Where did he go?—A. It was at night and I had seen that he was not a subject for my assistance, and he went in the entrance of the building, and that was the last I seen of him.

Q. What building was that?—A. That was the Burke Building.

Q. What business was carried on in it?—A. That is a general office building above the second floor.

Q. Do you know whether at that time he had any office or office connection in that building?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Was there then any bar or drinking place there?—A. Not in that building; no, sir.

Q. Was there any access to any drinking place from the entrance which he went in to?—A. Not in that building; he would have to cross the street or go south across the street.

Q. By going into that entrance he would not reach any drinking place?—A. No, sir; no public place.

Q. For how long a time did you observe him on that occasion?—A. Probably it might have been—it might have taken two minutes.

Q. What was the difference in his appearance and actions on that occasion from the appearance and actions of a man who was intoxicated?—A. I would have to say that that would be governed entirely by a man's, perhaps, first impression, or his desire to consider it intoxication or illness or otherwise.

Q. If it were a man whom you did not know, a stranger with whom you were not familiar and did not know his standing or reputation, what would you have concluded from what you saw as to his condition?—A. That would depend on his age, in my estimation: my conclusion, if it was a young man going that way, or a middle-aged man, I should ordinarily call it intoxication.

Q. How old a man do you think the judge was, or is?—A. Well, from his appearance I should say that he is past 70 years of age.

Q. On what do you base your opinion as to his age?—A. General appearance.

Q. Well, if you recall, Mr. Day, tell the committee whether his appearance and demeanor on that occasion suggested the thought to you that he might be intoxicated.—A. It did; yes, sir.

Q. Have you on any other occasion seen him in that condition, or a similar one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you on any occasion seen him carrying liquor with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or dropping liquor on the street?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you told us all you know on this subject?—A. I know of absolutely nothing that would be of interest.

Q. And you stated, I think, that you do not recall seeing him on any other occasion when he acted in the way that he did on this occasion, or nearly like it.—A. No, sir; that is the only time that I have ever seen him when there would be any chance on my part to think of such a thing.

Q. Have you seen him on many other occasions?—A. Many times; yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him act as he did on that occasion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him walking in a wabbly or hesitating or uncertain way before?—A. No, sir; not that I recall.

Q. Ordinarily how was his step with reference to being firm and vigorous?—A. Well, I might explain that by saying that it would be as you yourself or I would walk after having, prehaps, climbed a very heavy grade for a matter of two or three hundred feet.

Q. I am not speaking of the occasion that you have described now, but other occasions when you have seen him walking.—A. Just an ordinary walk; a very ordinary walk.

Q. Nothing uncertain?—A. No, sir.

Q. In his walk ordinarily?—A. No, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Do you say that a man who was in the habit of riding a bicycle from downtown up to his home near Broadway would be affected by climbing a hill here in the city in that way?

A. You ask me if I had said so?

Q. No; I say would you say that any man who had made it a practice to ride a bicycle from about this portion of the city up onto Broadway or anywhere up in that general neighborhood would be affected unfavorably by walking up one of these grades, or the grade near Marion Street there?—A. I would consider the tax on one's energies to be quite different.

Q. How long ago was this, did you say?—A. Well, I believe it was three years this summer.

Q. What do you mean by saying you would think the tax on his energies would be quite different—you mean more severe—in walking?—A. Yes.

Q. Than in riding the bicycle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what would you say about the likely effect of the walk up the Marion Street grade of a man who was in the habit of walking from about this part of town up to his home somewhere off Broadway?—A. I think he would be much better able to stand it, physically.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions—any questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. The grades are very light grades out Pine Street to Harvard Avenue, and thence out Harvard Avenue or Broadway to Galer Street, are they not—easy grades anywhere there—not over 4 or 5 per cent?

A. I didn't just get that question. Did you say from Harvard to Broadway——

Q. Do you know that going up Pine Street to Broadway and out Harvard or Broadway North the grades are light?—A. On Harvard North?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; very light.

Q. And also up Pine Street the grades are light?—A. Reasonably so.

Q. Now, the grade on Marion Street is about a 20 per cent grade?—A. It is more than that; I should call it from 23 to 27 per cent.

Q. It is a very steep grade?—A. Yes, sir; it is very heavy.

Q. And it is not an unusual thing to see persons very much fatigued who have walked up that street?—A. I have experienced it myself personally.

Q. And now, if a man had any trouble with the heart, in walking up that street it would be apt to accentuate that trouble and cause unusual palpitation?—A. It is bound to if there is any effort made to go with any speed or any rapidity.

Q. Was there anything about Judge Hanford's appearance or action that night which would be different from that condition?—A. I was not close enough to him to see the expression of his face.

Q. But he apparently was resting, as one whose heart might be excited by the effort of walking up that hill?—A. It could be very easily; yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever qualify as a physician, Mr. Day?

A. Not exactly, but I have done some hospital work and——

Q. Now, what is the action of a man's heart from walking uphill?—A. Well, that would be the speed that the man would walk at.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you saw Judge Hanford walking up this grade?—A. No, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, you do not know whether he did or not?—A. That is it precisely; that is the reason I could not determine it.

Q. And would you undertake to say as an expert that what you noticed in his appearance would indicate that he had been affected by walking up a steep grade, or that it was like anything which you had ever seen before in the case of a man who had been walking up that very grade there?—A. What I said was that if he had walked up the grade it could have that effect which I noticed upon him, if he did.

Q. It would have had that effect on him?—A. Yes, sir; if he had.

Q. How do you know it could have had that effect on him—what do you know about his heart?—A. I say it could have had.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not say that he was affected that way; he said that it could have that effect if he had walked up that grade.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes, he said it could have that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. If he had walked up the grade, but he didn't walk up the grade.

Mr. HUGHES. He didn't say that, I think, Mr. Graham.

The CHAIRMAN. How far was it from the north side of the street to the entrance of the building?

A. Well, I should think, probably, 40 feet; it might be a——

Q. If he had walked that distance only up the grade——A. That is all I seen him—he was directly upon the corner.

Q. And it was going that 40 feet that you noticed the condition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he started on that 40 feet he had not been walking up grade at all?—A. Well——

Q. That is, prior to starting on that 40 feet he had been on the level ground?—A. When I seen him he was; yes, sir.

Q. Well, was there some grade in the 40 feet that he walked?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was level, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that, so far as you know, he did not walk up any grade at all?—A. That is so.

Q. But your statement was that his manner of walking was such as might result from walking some distance up a very steep grade?—A. Yes.

Q. So far as you know he did not?—A. No, sir; I don't know.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask one question.

Q. Where were you when you saw him?—A. I was, perhaps, opposite the entrance of the Burke Building, going southward.

Q. And the first you saw of him was coming toward you on the same street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as he walked along he occasionally stopped and rested as one might do who was overcome for some reason, either because of his heart or any other reason?—A. It could have been occasioned by that.

Q. Now, if he had approached you from the south, would you not have seen him prior to that time, unless he came up the hill from the west?—A. He was approaching me from the side.

Q. But you did not see him until you were within 40 feet of him?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Which side of the street was he on when he was approaching you?

A. On the west side of the street, or on the west side of the sidewalk, up against the building.

Q. And you were on the same side of the street going toward him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not see him until after he had passed the corner of the Burke Building and was coming along the side of the Burke Building, walking toward you?—A. It was right at the entrance of the jewelry store there, right on the corner.

Mr. HUGHES. What I was asking you was, if he had come from the south, approaching you, would you not have seen him as he crossed Marion Street on that same side of Second Avenue?—A. The probabilities are that I would have noticed him, but I could not say.

Q. But if he had come up the hill from the west you could not have seen him prior to that time?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Mr. MCCOY. How far was the entrance of this jewelry store from Marion Street?

A. It is right on Marion Street, sir.

Q. Is the entrance on Marion Street or on the other side—on Second Avenue?—A. Well, it is on both streets, virtually; it is right in the corner—it is not a square corner—it is an entrance which you go in on the corner.

Q. A diagonal cut on the corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as to make the entrance?—A. Just a slot taken out of the corner.

Q. Was he standing in there when you saw him first?—A. No, sir; he was standing right at the corner of the doorway.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, you are excused.

Witness excused.

H. O. FUHRBERG, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.

A. H. O. Fuhrberg.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 1526 Palm Avenue, Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Fourteen years.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am in the liquor business.

Q. In what way?—A. Retail.

Q. Selling bottled goods, or do you keep a bar?—A. Both; a bar and bottled goods.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. I have been in business for myself 11 years and I have been in the business altogether 18 years.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known Judge Hanford 14 years—ever since I have been in town, or close to it.

Q. Have you seen him in your place of business?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him at any time anywhere drinking liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him at any time when he was under the influence of liquor, in your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I received a telephone message from my wife in the month of August or September of last year to meet her on Marion Street and Third Avenue, and I telephoned that I could not make it, but I would endeavor to get off an hour sooner, so that it was between 10 and 15 minutes past 11, and I leisurely walked up toward Marion Street and Second. As I got to the corner of Marion Street and Second Judge Hanford was standing in the entrance of Bronson's bar, and I was about 20 or 30 feet to the south of him. He turned, and I proceeded to cross the street toward the Burke Building. Just then my wife approached, and I suggested to my wife, I said, "That is Judge Hanford;" I said "Wouldn't you think that he would take a taxicab?" Then I assisted my wife on the curb, and we proceeded down Marion Street to the ferry and took the half-past 11 ferry home.

Q. What was his condition then, Mr. Fuhrberg?—A. Why, he wobbled like a child, and his walk was very unsteady.

Q. In crossing the street was he going uphill or downhill or on the level ground?—A. Level ground.

Q. That is, his walk crossing the street was horizontal?—A. Horizontal; yes, sir.

Q. Well, what would you say his condition was with reference to intoxication?—A. I thought he was intoxicated.

Q. Have you seen him at any other time when you thought he was?—A. No, sir; on all the other occasions I have seen him he was perfectly sober, to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever on any other occasion see him walk as he did then?—A. No, sir; it arrested my attention when I saw him; otherwise I would not have noticed it.

Q. How near were you to him?—A. I was within 20 feet of him when I first saw him.

Q. And during the time he was crossing the street how near to him were you?—A. I walked immediately over to the lamp post; I saw my wife approaching.

Q. Was that toward him or away from him?—A. That was away from him; that is, I went slanting and he went straight over toward the Burke Building.

Q. Was he under your observation all the way across the street?—A. He was.

Q. Where did he go then?—A. He proceeded up toward Madison Street. I saw him probably at the entrance when I ran down; we didn't have more than 10 or 15 minutes to make the ferry.

Q. You say that was a little after 10 o'clock at night?—A. No, sir; I said a little after 11 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask the witness any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. No, sir; no cross-examination.

Witness excused.

W. R. MEAD, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, Mr. Mead.

A. W. R. Mead.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Mead?—A. 4218 Juneau Street.

Q. How long have you lived in the city?—A. A little over nine years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Police officer.

Q. How long have you been on the police force here?—A. Five years or over.

Q. What are your duties?—A. I am assistant jailer at présent.

Q. How long have you been assistant jailer?—A. Fourteen months and over.

Q. Before that what were your duties?—A. Patrolman.

Q. What part of the city?—A. Well, I worked down in Chinatown, Second Avenue, First Avenue, and Bell Town, and up on the First Hill and Rainier Valley.

Q. What part of the city is Chinatown?—A. Well, we call that below Yesler Way, down on Main Street and Jackson—from Yesler Way to Jackson and from Third and Sixth.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. He has been pointed out to me once or twice; I am not acquainted with him.

Q. You mean by that you know him by sight?—A. No; I don't know that I would know the man if I would meet him to-day on the street.

Q. Under what circumstances was he pointed out to you?—A. Well, I was walking along Second Avenue, and I don't know who the man was, but we were walking along and he says, "There goes Judge Hanford," and that was the first time that I ever saw the man.

Q. Describe the man that he pointed out to you.—A. Well, he was not a very large man.

Q. About how tall?—A. Probably 5 foot 7 or 5 foot 8, or such a matter as that, if I remember right.

Q. Can you tell the color of his hair?—A. It was gray, if I remember right.

Q. Do you remember the color of his complexion?—A. No, sir; I didn't pay much attention to it; he just went past us.

Q. Did he have a beard or not?—A. I think he had a part of a beard if I remember right.

Q. What part?—A. Well, the mustache and, it seems to me like he had some whiskers down here at about his chin.

Q. Have you seen that man since?—A. Well, I saw him on the street, I believe, once since.

Q. Well, what were the circumstances under which he was pointed out to you?—A. Well, there was not any; only just he passed us and this man made the remark, "There goes Judge Hanford."

Q. Was there anything peculiar in his appearance then to attract your attention?—A. No; there was not.

Q. Did you see him at any time when there was?—A. No; I don't know as I have.

Q. Well, do you know that you have not?—A. Well, it is just like this; you can't always tell from the looks of a man how that he is.

Q. Tell us what you saw.—A. Well, I didn't see anything any more than——

Q. You tell us and we will judge.—A. Well, I didn't see anything any more than any other man passing at the time.

Q. What did you mean by your answer before the last one?—A. Which?

Q. Your answer seemed to be a sort of a qualified one; you said "You can't always tell about a man's appearance."—A. Well, if a man is going along the street you can't always tell.

Q. Speak up.—A. I say, if he is going along the street you can't always tell just exactly how that he is, but he passed along just the same as any other citizen would.

Q. Have you seen the gentleman who was pointed out to you as Judge Hanford at any time when he seemed to you to be under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. No.

Q. Or any intoxicant?—A. No; I don't believe that I have.

Q. Well, tell us what is in your mind, Mr. Mead; have you seen him in any way that would make you doubtful about his condition?—A. No; I don't know that I have.

Q. Your answer is such a one as leaves me in doubt still. You say you do not know that you have; explain what you mean by that answer more fully?—A. Well, I never saw the man, as I told you, only about twice and——

Q. Now, take the second time you saw him, where was it?—A. It was on Second Avenue.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He was going along the street.

Q. What time was it?—A. It must have been about 6.30, probably, in the evening.

Q. Was he alone or with someone?—A. He was alone.

Q. Was there anything peculiar in his appearance or in his walk at that time?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. Did you see anything happen that was out of the ordinary?—A. No, sir.

Q. Stil you are leaving me in doubt as to what is in your mind, Mr. Mead, when you answered in answer to my question if you had seen him under certain circumstances and you said "I don't know as I have." There seems to be something in your mind which you are keeping back. If there is anything, tell it.—A. No. The way that can't understand it is that you kind of insinuated if I had ever saw him intoxicated along Second Avenue.

Q. I don't think I insinuated it; I think I stated it.—A. I know that; but still, at the same time, you left that impression.

Q. I think I asked you that question directly. Now, what is your answer to that question?—A. Well, I don't know as I ever did see him in any——

Q Well, have you seen him when you thought he was more or less under the influence of liquor?—A. Well, no.

Here there is some disturbance in the audience.

The CHAIRMAN. I can hardly blame you, but I would much prefer if you would observe the amenities.

The WITNESS (continuing). No, sir; I don't know as I ever have.

Q. Have you talked with anyone about this matter since you were subpœnaed?—A. No; not since I was subpœnaed.

Q. Have you before you were subpœnaed?—A. I might have talked over what I read in the newspapers.

Q. Have you said to anyone that you had seen Judge Hanford when he was under the influence of liquor, or words to that effect?—A. I don t remember of it. I don't remember of it.

Q. Who have you talked with about it?—A. Oh, different ones.

Q. Well, begin with some one first?—A. I could not say. I talked with probably two or three since the investigation has come up about what have read in the papers.

Q. About the judge's habits?—A. No; not personally about the judge's habits.

Q. About his condition at some time or times?—A. Well, what I have read in the papers; yes.

Q. Now, jog your memory and tell us whether you can recall saying to anyone that you had seen him when you thought he was more or less intoxicated?—A. No; I don't know as I could.

Q. Have you seen him carrying intoxicating liquors?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen any intoxicating drinks with him?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Mr. Mead, I need hardly ask you if you realize that you are giving testimony under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you make it clear to us what you have meant by your answers, which seem to me, at least, to suggest that you do know something and that you are evading the telling of it. What is the condition of your mind in answer to my question, "Have you seen the judge when you thought he was more or less under the influence of liquor?"—A. Well, I will tell you. There is that one time he might have been under the influence a little bit; but of course a man can't tell.

Q. Well, which time was it?—A. That was the second time I saw him.

Q. Well, what was it that led you to think that he might have been under the influence a little?—A. Well, he just stopped and looked around on the corner and went a little ways and looked again and I passed right along, and I didn't pay any more attention to it, but of course I could not say that he was under the influence of liquor, or anything about it.

Q. Did his conduct cause you to think at the time that he might have been under the influence of liquor?—A. No, I don't think so—I don't know as it did.

Q. Well, when did you mention that circumstance to anyone?—A. Well, I could not say when it was.

Q. You did mention it to someone?—A. Well, I don't know. No; I don't remember—I don't remember.

Q. Where was that?—A. On second Avenue.

Q. And what other streets?—A. Along about Second and Columbia, I believe.

Q. You said, I think, it was about half past 6 in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone else desire to ask the witness any questions—Mr. Mead, will you report again in the morning?

A. Yes.

Q. What are your hours of duty?—A. From 10 at night until 6 in the morning.

Q. What time would it be convenient for you to report to the committee?—A. Probably along in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, come to-morrow afternoon.

Witness excused.

S. S. LANGLAND, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.

A. Samuel S. Langland.

Q. Where do you live?—A. The corner of Harvard North and East Lynn.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Twenty-one years.

Q. What is your business—what business are you in?—A. Lawyer.

Q. How long have you been practicing your profession, Mr. Langland?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. Are you still in the active practice of your profession?—A. I am.

Q. Do you practice in Judge Hanford's court?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time?—A. Not directly.

Q. Are you acquainted with the judge?—A. Not on a speaking acquaintance—I know him.

Q. By sight?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long a time?—A. About 20 years.

Q. Have you been present, to any extent, in his court when he was sitting?—A. Not very often.

Q. To what extent have you observed the judge elsewhere than in his court?—A. Well, I have seen him very often and on the street car going home.

Q. At what hours?—A. Well, at the times that I have specially noticed him as being late, somewheres toward midnight.

Q. To what extent have you noticed him during the hour, or hours, about midnight?—A. Well, I have—I am not out very often, but I happened to be out a few evenings that I saw him on the street-car; I live out that way.

Q. If on any of those occasions you saw the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants, please tell it to the committee.—A. Well, I have an impression in my mind that I have seen him on four different occasions when, I should judge, he was in an intoxicated condition.

Q. Were those occasions on the street car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen him on the street car at other times when you thought he was not in that condition?—A. Yes.

Q. Which was the more frequent?—A. The ones that I have noticed him when he was not intoxicated.

Q. Take the first time, if you can place it, when you thought he was intoxicated, and tell us when it was, as near as you can recollect?—A. As nearly as I can, I think it was about five years ago, when I was in Tacoma and came home very late, and it was the last car. When I saw the judge dozing and when he went off the car, when he reached his home, he was in a staggering condition—that is, it was difficult for him to get out of the car.

Q. Where did he sit on that occasion?—A. He sat right in front of me, three seats in front.

Q. In leaving the car, did he pass where you sat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice any odor of liquor?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Was there anything else in the manner of his walking to the door of the car which led you to think he was intoxicated? and if there was, tell us just what it was.—A. Well, the condition was that he was staggering very much as he was approaching the rear end of the car, and I also noticed the expression on his countenance, which was very much flushed, and his eyes were very dull.

Q. Did you notice him get off the car?—A. I did not look behind.

Q. Or after he was off?—A. Not this time.

Q. Well, would you say to the committee now what his condition was on that occasion with reference to intoxication?—A. Well, my impression was then, and is now, that he was in an intoxicated condition.

Q. When did you next see him as you stated?—A. Well, I can not place the subsequent dates so definitely, because I had been down town to lodge, and I can not recall it; but it was subsequent to this that I am testifying about, somewhere about 11 o'clock.

Q. At night?—A. At night.

Q. Take the next one in the order of time which occurs to you and tell us of that occasion.—A. On that occasion he was—the first I noticed he was wabbling his head that way [showing] and dozing like this [showing].

Q. Which of you got on the car first this second time that you speak of?—A. I got on the car. Now, I am not prepared to say that—which of us got on the car first.

Q. What was it in his appearance that attracted your attention?—A. The fact that he was nodding his head this way and that way [showing].

Q. Where did he sit from you?—A. He sat on the left side, in front.

Q. And where were you?—A. I was toward the rear of the car, about, I should judge, about 4 or 5 feet from the rear, toward the front.

Q. In going into the car, do you know what end of it he came in at?—A. No; I do not.

Q. How long did you ride with him that evening?—A. Well, I live four blocks north of him, and so he always got off before I did.

Q. That would make him ride for about how many minutes?—A. About 20 minutes, at least.

Q. How much of that time was he in the condition you have mentioned?—A. You mean of these different times?

Q. No; this second occasion.—A. I do not believe I quite understand you.

Q. Well, as I understood you to say when you noticed him he was asleep or seemed to be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how much of the 20 minutes you were with him did he remain in that condition?—A. Well, he remained in that condition all the time.

Q. And how did he know where to get off—how did he happen to get off the car?—A. Well, that I do not remember, whether the conductor came to him, or de did it himself; I can't say.

Q. You haven't any recollection of it?—A. I have no recollection of it at all.

Q. Did you notice him as he got off the car on that occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was there noticeable in his appearance and manner?—A. Well, I noticed that he was not steady on his feet, but it was not as apparent as the first time I saw him.

Q. What was there as to his condition at that time?—A. Well, I should say that he was under the influence of intoxication—I can't explain it on any other hypothesis.

Q. Now, can you take the next time at which you noticed him and tell us of it.—A. Well, there was one time, I think it was a holiday, when I came home in the afternoon, and the judge was on the car at that time, and what attracted my attention at that time was I looked back as he got off the car and tried to cross the track—I noticed that he was very unsteady on his feet, so much so that I was afraid that he might fall on the track.

Q. How far did you watch him go after he got off the car?—A. Well, I saw him cross the track toward the sidewalk.

Q. Did you notice him on the car also on that occasion?—A. Well, I don't know whether I did or not; I noticed him getting off the car, walking toward the rear, but I didn't notice him until just about the time he departed from the car.

Q. In your opinion what was the cause of his condition, as you saw it?—A. Well, my impression was that he was intoxicated.

Q. Now, the fourth time you mentioned, when was that?—A. That was in the evening.

Q. How long ago, if you know?—A. Well, I should judge something like two years ago.

Q. Was this also on the street car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell the circumstances.—A. Well, I noticed him on the car, and the car was very crowded, so that I didn't notice him until we got within four or five blocks from his home when most of the crowd was off the car. I noticed him toward the front, and I noticed that he was dozing, but not in such a condition that apparently—well, he didn't—well, apparently he was awake, but just sort of drowsy, and I noticed him get off the car.

Q. Now, on any of those occasions if his condition attracted the attention or was the subject of comment by people on the car, you may state that.—A. On one occasion I remember that there were some people looked at each other and smiled; made significant motions of their face.

Q. Do you remember any of the persons you saw on the car on those occasions?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether you knew them at the time?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of any—there might have been, but I have no recollection of it.

Q. Have you, at any other time, seen the judge when you thought he was influenced by intoxicating drinks?—A. No; I have not. I have seen him once or twice in a saloon, but I never saw him intoxicated in any shape or manner.

Q. Drinking?—A. Well, I think he would drink a glass of beer—I don't know—I think that was—I think I saw him drink a glass of beer once.

Q. Have you any personal feeling of any kind against Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Have you any relations of any kind with him, business or otherwise?—A. No, sir; on the other hand, I have a deep sympathy for him if it is true what I hear about his family relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask the witness any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Witness excused.

GEORGE M. JACOBS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. George M. Jacobs.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Jacobs?—A. I live at 4738 Sixth Avenue northeast.

Q. How long have you lived in the city?—A. About 10 years.

Q. What is your business?—A. The real estate business.

Q. Has that been your business during those 10 years?—A. With the exception, possibly, of two years.

Q. Are you in any profession or other business than the real estate?—A. No.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Possibly seven years.

Q. Is that a personal or a slight acquaintance?—A. Well, I had a sight acquaintance with him some time before I met him with somebody. I had an introduction to him, but I do not remember when or where or how long ago.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Yes.

Q. When was the first time, if there was more than one?—A. I think the first time was in the entrance in front of the elevator in the Alaska Building, prior to 1907.

Q. When you say prior to 1907, do you mean a short time before that, or might it be a long time?—A. Well, I only have one way of determining that, and I don't remember the year that Mr. Sullivan, who used to have the bar in the rear of the elevator, was removed, and the Scandinavian-American Bank occupies that space at the present time, and I think I know it was some time prior to 1907, but I do not remember at what time.

Q. What was it that attracted your attention to his condition at that time?—A. Well, I didn't notice his condition at the time; that is, until the party with me called my attention to him. He says, "That is Judge Hanford." That is the first time I had ever seen him, although I recognized him as soon as I turned and looked at the gentleman, because I had seen his picture in the papers prior to that time; and he seemed to be navigating, not just exactly to port—and I said, "What is the matter with him?" and he said, "He is slightly poisoned, I guess." That was the remark he made.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who was it?

The WITNESS. Who was the gentleman?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

A. I don't remember who it was at the time was with me, at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Apart from what he said to you, give us your own impressions and opinions, if you have any, as to his condition.—A. Well, I don't know that I had much of an impression at that time—I didn't pay much attention to him.

Q. What caused you to ask "What is the matter with him?"—A. Simply his—he seemed to be—well, my impression was that he was drunk at the time.

Q. How long were you with him?—A. That is, at that time?

Q. Yes; how long?—A. How long did I notice him?

Q. How long were you near enough to observe him?—A. Just passing from the entrance of the building to the rear.

Q. Where was he going?—A. He was going toward the front door.

Q. How far did he go while you were looking at him?—A. Probably 10 feet.

Q. Tell the committee about how he walked—whether erect and steady or otherwise.—A. Well, he staggered slightly and walked toward the door—I didn't pay a great deal of attention to him at the time. We were probably within 15 feet of him when he first called my attention to him, and we simply passed him.

Q. Have you seen him on any other occasion when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Yes, I have.

Q. Well, if you can preserve the order of time, tell us when and where the next occasion was.—A. Well, I think the next occasion was at the Saratoga bar, in the Mehlhorn Building, 812 Second Avenue.

Q. Describe for us what you saw on that occasion, Mr. Jacobs.—A. Well, I was standing in front of the Mehlhorn Building, I think in front of the entrance to the office portion of it, and a gentleman came along with whom I had an appointment at some time, but it is not clear to my mind at what time I had that appointment; but he apologized to me for not keeping his appointment and told me he was on the Federal jury and asked me to come in to the bar and take a drink with him; and I went with him, and while we were in there Judge Hanford came in, and he at first—he says, "I am on the Federal jury, and there is Judge Hanford. I will make my get-away." But prior to that time he had called for Monogram whisky and told me that it was Judge Hanford's special brand. So later he remained, and he and Judge Hanford took a drink together.

Q. Who was he?—A. The gentleman?

Q. Yes.—A. His name was Samuel Fortner; he resides, or he used to, at Edmunds.

Q. Was Mr. Fortner then serving as a juror?—A. Yes; he told me he was.

Q. About when was that?—A. Well, I can't fix the time exactly, but I think it was about three or four years ago.

Q. What was the judge's condition on that occasion?—A. Well, I didn't see anything wrong with the judge at that time.

Q. Did you also drink with them?—A. No, sir; I drank with Mr. Fortner before the judge—before he and the judge drank.

Q. If the judge bought any liquor then it was not drank then and there?—A. How is that?

Q. If the judge bought any liquor at that time which was not drank at the place, but to be carried away, tell us about it.—A. No.

Q. Have you ever seen him buy liquor to be carried away from the place where it was bought?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Well, as I understand you, on this occasion the judge was not intoxicated?—A. He did not appear to be so; no, sir; I should say he was not.

Q. If at any time afterwards you saw him when you thought he was, tell us about that.—A. That is, on the same evening?

Q. That evening or any other—first, that evening, if it occurred that evening.—A. Well, I saw him once after that at the same place, and I think it was around near New Years of the same year, but I won't be positive, when I should say he was intoxicated.

Q. Tell the committee the circumstances, Mr. Jacobs.—A. Well, I had stepped into the bar from the Second Avenue entrance—you will remember, or I should state that there is two entrances to that bar; there is one from the hallway in the rear of the elevator, and there is one that passes in on the south side of the retail house which is directly in front of the bar, the retail liquor house, and there is a little lobby in the bar, and I walked in there, and Judge Hanford was standing at the front of the bar, and I think he was conversing with some one, and he had his elbow upon the bar. I didn't pay any attention to him at that time; I simply passed in, but before I went out I noticed that he appeared to be very much intoxicated.

Q. Did you see him drinking on that occasion?—A. On that occasion I don't think I saw him take a drink.

Q. What was he doing there—standing, or sitting, or talking, or what?—A. I think he was conversing with some one—he was standing up in front of the bar.

Q. What time of the day or night was it, would you say?—A. My memory is not clear as to what time of the night that was, but on the occasion prior to that I should judge it was between 5 and 7 o'clock.

Q. Have you ever seen him on the street car when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. I saw him once; I do not recall what car it was—I use all the car lines at different times in the day; I do not remember, but I saw him once on the car when I thought he was very much intoxicated. I don't remember what car.

Q. Do you remember the hour?—A. It was at night, but I can't tell you what time at night.

Q. Describe his appearance and actions.—A. When I first noticed him he was asleep. Afterwards he waked up and looked out the window and raised partly to his feet and swung around again and sat down.

Q. Do you recall whether there were others on the car?—A. Well, I presume there were, but I don't remember.

Q. Have you a recollection about it?—A. Yes. There were others on the car. I do not remember of seeing anyone else that I knew—that is what I wish to state.

Q. Can you state whether his condition and appearance attracted the attention of others or was the apparent subject of comment by others?—A. Not to my remembrance.

Q. Did you see him get on and off the car on that occasion?—A. No.

Q. How often would you say you had seen Judge Hanford when he seemed to you that he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Well, I remember very distinctly seeing him in the Savoy lobby on one occasion, and in the bar on one occasion.

Q. In the Savoy bar?—A. Yes; it might have been the same day; I could not be positive in regard to that, and I should say four or five or six times all told.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask Mr. Jacobs any further questions—do you, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Where is your office, Mr. Jacobs?

A. 815 White Building.

Q. Have you a partner?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you had your office in the White Building?—A. A year and a half.

Q. And where prior to that?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. Where did you have your office prior to that?—A. Prior to that time in the Mehlhorn Building about a year, and prior to that I was three years in Judge Burke's building, and then they built nine floors of that building over my head.

Q. Were you alone always in that business?—A. No, sir; I had a partner for some time in the Empire Block, and since that time I have been——

Q. Who was he; who was your partner?—A. His name was J. P. Dooley.

Q. Dooley?—A. John P. Dooley.

Q. And prior to that, you were going to say——A. J. P. Dooley was my partner in the Empire Block. I associated myself with Mr. Ward L. Farnsworth in the Mehlhorn Building, and at the present time I am with the Lucas Building Co. in the White Building, and I have been with them a year and a half.

Q. Are they in the real estate business? Is that company in the real estate business?—A. No, sir; they build on their own property. All the real estate business done in the office I do myself outside of their own property—I do as much of that as possible.

Q. One other question; you spoke of one occasion which you thought was about New Year's day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Hanford in the Saratoga bar?—A. Yes.

Q. You say you do not recall seeing him drinking anything, but that he was in conversation with some one?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you please state who that was?—A. I don't remember. I didn't pay strict attention to it—to him at the time—I was not interested.

Q. You mean to Judge Hanford—you didn't pay strict attention to Judge Hanford?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Do you mean to say that you would notice Judge Hanford and not notice the gentleman who was with him, although he stood there near enough for you to observe them?—A. Very possibly I glanced at Judge Hanford and simply recognized him as a man that I knew and I passed on.

Q. And that is all you did, you simply glanced at him and passed on?—A. Yes.

Q. Without giving him any further thought or attention?—A. I think so.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused. Whereupon a short recess is taken.

P. C. MERRIAN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. P. C. Merrian.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. It will be nine years this present October since I came to Seattle.

Q. What is your business?—A. At the present time I am timber cruiser.

Q. What does that mean?—A. Or rather if I would use the word to you "estimator," you might understand it better—the eastern expression is timber estimator, and the western term is timber cruiser, but they use the two words for the same meaning as applied to timber.

Q. The work performed by the timber cruiser, or estimator, is going over timber and making an estimate of the number of feet in a given area.—A. Yes.

Q. In whose employment have you been—in the Government employ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the employ of individuals?—A. Private parties; anyone who wishes to secure my services can do so.

Q. Those estimates are made for the purpose of bidding on the timber land, are they?—A. Or, it is more for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of standing timber which would be upon a given area and its kind and quality.

Q. Well, that is done, is it, with a view of ascertaining the value or selling price of the land?—A. Yes.

Q. And bids are made on the basis of those estimates?—A. Yes.

Q. How long has that been your business?—A. Since the fall of 1908.

Q. It is expert work, is it?—A. Well, it is so considered.

Q. How is it acquired—that expert knowledge—is it by study or experience, or both?—A. Both.

Q. Is it taught in the schools in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was your business prior to going into that?—A. From 1905 till 1908—the spring of 1908—I was engaged in the installing and the construction of elevators as passenger and freight machines in large buildings such as the Washington Hotel and the Empire Building, and the Alaska Building, and such buildings as that.

Q. Was that in reference to any particular motive power, such as electricity, or did it apply to any kind of power?—A. It applies to—or rather I don't quite understand your question.

Q. The elevators which you installed, were they electric—that is, run by electricity or by steam or water?—A. Both. We have—in the elevator construction work we have the two, or rather the three types of machines; one is called the electric and the other the hydro, which is operated by water, and then there is another type which we call the hydraulic plunger, which consists of having a plunger run down into the ground as far as the machine or the cage will go up.

Q. Does that work require special mechanical skill and knowledge?—A. It does.

Q. Mr. Merrian, do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I have known Judge Hanford by sight for approximately four years.

Q. Where have you seen him?—A. I have seen him in the court room and also upon the street.

Q. As far as you can recall, were those the only places where you had an opportunity of observing Judge Hanford?—A. It is.

Q. To what extent have you seen him in the court room?—A. I have been a visitor, or rather a spectator, in his court room on several occasions in cases in which I had somewhat of a curiosity to see how they would result with reference to the trial.

Q. On those occasions have you at any time observed the judge on the bench when he appeared to you to be nodding or napping?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. Describe it to the committee, Mr. Merrian, what you did see.—A. I have saw him lean back in his chair and his body would be in a complete state of relaxation—that is, his arms would be drifting and hanging over the arms of the chair, and his head would be from one side to the other in such a position as that [showing], and his breathing would be, apparently from the distance, it would be from his chair on the bench to the audience, either the first or second seats, would have the appearance of being regular and steady.

Q. To you, what did his condition seem to be on those occasions, with reference to his being awake or asleep?—A. To me, he was asleep.

Q. If, when he seemed to be in that condition, the exigencies of the proceedings before him required his attention, as, for instance, a ruling on an objection by an attorney, what transpired?—A. I remember on one occasion that he was wheeled around, sitting diagonally across—that is, the court room on the other side of the building is arranged just the opposite to what this one is here—that he was sitting as if he—as if that was his chair and the jury box would be over on that side, and the objection was made to a question which came up, and it seemed approximately all of 12 or 15 seconds before he aroused himself to the extent of wheeling around and giving the ruling.

Q. Did he then rule on that objection without further statement or comment by the attorneys?—A. He simply said, "Objection overruled," and seemed to pass it along at that.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of any intoxicants?—A. I have.

Q. When was that?—A. The particular day and date for that is not fixed in my mind, but I do remember of seeing the judge on Third Avenue going in the direction from Union over toward University. At that time he was walking on what would be the west side of the street and apparently, to use a figurative expression, he wanted a good deal of the sidewalk.

Q. What time of day or night was it?—A. That was along in the evening, about—somewhere along about 7 o'clock, from 7 to 7.30.

Q. The street which you described is on level ground, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Explain with more detail what you mean by the expression you used, "wanting a good deal of the sidewalk."—A. Well, it is an expression which is applied ordinarily to men who are intoxicated; that when they are attempting to walk they want all the sidewalk.

Q. Do you mean that he wabbled from side to side as he walked?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. State it plainly.—A. You can use that expression—that he wabbled from side to side.

Q. How near to him were you?—A. I was standing what would be about half the width of this Federal building on Union Street when I first observed him, as he was probably 50 or 75 feet from the corner of Union and Third Avenue.

Q. That would be about how many feet from where you were?—A. It would be about—probably about 80 feet; I should judge about that.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to see his face?—A. Only as he passed along the street, as he walked along.

Q. If you have an opinion as to what his condition was on that occasion with reference to intoxication, you may state your opinion.—A. Well, in my opinion, I think he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors.

Q. Have you seen him at any other time when you thought he was?—A. I have.

Q. Please state the occasion, and describe it as well as you can.—A. On another occasion I saw him coming up Union Street and crossing Third Avenue, and coming on up into the building here when he was—well, he was staggering, that is, he didn't wabble, but he was a little unsteady on his feet at that time.

Q. What hour of the day or night was that?—A. That was along in the evening, I should think somewhere about 6.30 or 7 o'clock.

Q. Can you fix the time as to how long ago it was?—A. The only way I can fix the time is that I am usually in the habit of going to the post office to make inquiries for my mail along in the evening.

Q. I do not mean the hour—I mean, rather, the month or the week or the day or the year.—A. The first occasion which I have mentioned was along in the fall of the year, I think it was about a year ago, or it would be last fall I noticed him.

Q. Have you at any other time noticed him when you thought he was more or less intoxicated?—A. During or shortly after the trial on which Mr. C. D. Gilman was tried at, I was standing at the elevator of the building here, and Judge Hanford went—passed by me and he was walking with rather somewhat of a shuffling gait, that is, he didn't stagger any or wabble any—that is, his gait was slightly shuffling, and at that time as he went by me I smelled the odor of liquor.

Q. What kind of liquor?—A. Well, I should judge from the odor that I got that it was whisky. It might have been spirits frumenti, to use the medical term.

Q. Have you seen the judge at other times when he was not in the condition you speak of?—A. I have.

Q. What was the difference in his appearance and his walk and demeanor on the occasions you speak of, and other occasions when you thought he was not intoxicated?—A. Well, when I saw him on occasions when I regarded that he was sober, to use that term—why, he walked with his head up and his shoulders erect and was traveling along at an ordinary gait which a man of 45 or 50 years of age would ordinarily travel—steady.

Q. Did he have the shuffling step which you mentioned a while ago on those occasions?—A. No, I didn't notice it.

Q. Have you told us all the occasions you recall when you saw him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I believe I have, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Have you had any business relations with him or with his court?—A. Only as a juror in a case which was tried in his court here along about the last of May, I believe it was.

Q. Were you what in my country we call a picked up juror, or were you on the regular panel?—A. No venire, as I understand it, the venire was open, and there were not enough men to fill it, and I was in the courtroom at the time, and I, along with three or four others, who were sitting there, we were picked up and sworn in to serve.

Q. You were called by the bailiff to act in that particular case?—A. Yes; just in that particular case.

Q. Have you any personal feeling of any kind against Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of this witness—Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask him—or you, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. HUGHES. No questions.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. You are excused.

Witness excused.

JAMES F. NIEMANN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. James Fred Niemann.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 10 years and 2 months.

Q. What is your business?—A. In the employ of the Standard Furniture Co.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Manager of a department.

Q. How long have you been in that position?—A. Ten years and two months.

Q. All of the time you have been here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a large or small concern?—A. Large concern.

Q. What is its business?—A. Furniture, stoves, carpets, general house furnishing of all descriptions.

Q. Retail?—A. Retail.

Q. Occupying how large a space?—A. One hundred and eight by one hundred and twenty.

Q. And how many floors?—A. Nine floors and the basement—it is the largest of its kind in the city.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am by sight.

Q. How long have you known the judge by sight?—A. About six years.

Q. What opportunity have you had for seeing him?—A. Riding backward and forward on the street car.

Q. At what hours?—A. Usually between the hours of 6 and half past 7.

Q. And sometimes at what other hours?—A. I do not recall any other time but that.

Q. You say usually at those hours?—A. Yes, sir; between 6 and half past 7.

Q. Have you ridden with him at any other hours than those?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Have you observed him elsewhere than on the street car?—A. About a week ago I saw him walking down Second Avenue, and that was the only time I saw him outside of the street car.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge when it seemed to you that he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor?—A. It appeared to me at the time that he was.

Q. What time?—A. At the time I saw him.

Q. What particular time do you refer to?—A. Well, I can not recall the date or the time; it was over three years ago.

Q. Where was it you saw him then?—A. It was on the street car.

Q. Where were you going?—A. Home.

Q. And he, of course, was going in the same direction?—A. Yes, sir; going home.

Q. What was there peculiar about that that attracted your attention, if there was anything?—A. Why, the judge had his eyes closed and he was nodding his head and he would wake up with a start, and then start in again to nod his head and close his eyes.

Q. How near to him did you sit?—A. Right across the aisle.

Q. Was there any odor noticeable?—A. I never noticed any.

Q. What was the appearance of his face and eyes, if you noticed?—A. I did not pay particular attention to his face or eyes.

Q. Why did you reach the conclusion that he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. Well, he appeared to me like a man that had a little too much intoxicating liquor, and he was—his eyes were weak and he was kind of nodding it off.

Q. Had you seen him on other occasions on the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did he act on this occasion as compared with his actions on the other occasions?—A. On the other occasions, why, sometimes he would sit up straight like anybody else in the car, with his eyes open, and other times he would have his eyes closed.

Q. On the occasion you speak of were there others besides you and him on the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent, if at all, did his condition attract attention?—A. Well, at one particular instance I remember the man sitting right alongside of me. He made the remark, "That is a nice condition for a judge to be in." He supposed, the same as I did, that the man was intoxicated.

Q. Did you see him on more than one occasion on the car when he seemed to be in that condition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often?—A. I can not recall.

Q. Can you approximate the number of times?—A. Well, I should say half a dozen times.

Q. At what hours?—A. Between 6 and half past 7.

Q. Even later than that?—A. I do not recall an incident later than that.

Q. Upon those other occasions what was his condition with reference to the time you have described?—A. The hours, you mean?

Q. No; his condition.—A. Well, he would be wide awake, like anybody else riding.

Q. Wide awake?—A. Just like anybody else riding home on the car.

Q. Did you say that you saw him or have seen him intoxicated on the car five or six times, or whatever it was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have described one of those times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you how he was on the other occasions, as compared with the time you have described?—A. Well, the condition of the judge would always appear about the same; he always appeared about in the same—the same condition; and it might be doing a man injustice to say that you thought he was intoxicated, but if you saw a man in the street car like this condition and saw him nodding, and it appeared like he can't keep his eyes open, it is the first thing a man thinks of, that the man is intoxicated.

Q. What experience have you had in observing men that were intoxicated?—A. No more than anyone else, only just from the general appearance, that is all.

Q. Well, state to the committee what your best judgment is as to his condition on those five or six times you have spoken of?—A. Well, his condition at that time, it appeared to me that the impression that I gained was that the man was intoxicated.

Q. Do you retain that opinion now?—A. Not exactly; no, sir.

Q. Is that your opinion now?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is your opinion now?—A. My opinion—I would be a little lenient with him now, because I read a good deal in the newspapers and I kind of formed an opinion that the man was probably, to some extent, overworked.

Q. What papers have you read that in?—A. I read that in all the Times and the P.-I.—read from the testimony given here in the court room, that the man possibly had some—that he would appear tired out and worn out when he was not intoxicated. I could not positively say he was intoxicated each time.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to the correctness of the reports which you read?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your opinion is based on the assumption that the reports are correct—that is that they correctly reported the evidence produced, and on the representations you read you think that it might be something else than intoxicating liquors which causes his condition?—A. It might at times; yes, sir.

Q. When did you change your opinion?—A. Well, probably about as soon as I started to read up the case.

Q. Let me ask you, were you glad of the opportunity to find a reason for changing your opinion?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had not any feeling one way or the other, had you?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you account for the difference in the judge's appearance and conduct on the occasions when you thought he was intoxicated and the occasions when you thought he was not?—A. Just account of him being wide awake and having his eyes open. I don't believe there was any difference in the facial expression at all at neither time.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking or in any drinking places?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is your experience limited to what you saw in the street car.—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of the witness?—Mr. Hughes, have you any questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like to ask you this, Mr. Niemann. If, at the times when you saw Judge Hanford and you say that you thought he might be intoxicated, was his appearance when dozing in the car any different from that of a man of 60 or 65 of years of age sleeping in a street car?

A. Well, that is a pretty hard thing to answer. It would appear if a man were sleeping in the street car and nods his head, why that is the natural sleeping condition.

Q. Is that all the answer you wish to make?—A. Yes.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other witnesses present who were ordered to be here—if so, you will please rise.

No response.

Whereupon a recess was taken until to-morrow morning at 9.30 o'clock.

TWELFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

E. E. CUSHMAN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State you full name, please.

A. Edward Everett Cushman.

Q. Where is your home, Judge Cushman?—A. My home—I just came from Alaska, and I have hardly established a home, but my official residence is at Tacoma.

Q. You have been living in Alaska, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long?—A. The greater part of three years.

Q. What have you been doing there?—A. I was appointed district judge for the district of Alaska, the third judicial division, with the first year serving at Juneau and the next two years at Valdez and Fairbanks.

Q. And now what is your assignment?—A. United States district judge for the western district of Washington.

Q. With headquarters at Tacoma, I understand you to say?—A. Yes.

Q. Prior to your appointment as district judge in Alaska, what were you doing?—A. For about three years I was engaged in private practice, immediately before my appointment.

Q. And prior to that?—A. For, I believe, it was a year and a half—I am not good on dates; I have not refreshed my mind—I was special assistant to the Attorney General.

Q. Located where?—A. My official residence was at Tacoma, but the special work in which I was engaged was trying Government cases before the court of appeals in San Francisco from the ninth circuit, including the States and Territories of Alaska and Hawaii. There were certain special cases assigned to me aside from the court of appeals work that took me into the district and circuit courts.

Q. I assume that you are acquainted with Judge Hanford.—A. I have been acquainted with Judge Hanford since 1893.

Q. To what extent have you been with him, or associated in your work since that time?—A. Up to 1900—or I should say up to 1898, no more than any other member of the bar. In 1898 a partner in our firm, Mr. Claypoole, was appointed assistant United States attorney, and we moved our offices into the Federal offices of the court at Tacoma, on which floor the court room was and the judge's chambers near our offices. From that time to this I have been, I consider, intimately acquainted with Judge Hanford.

Q. To what extent have you practiced or been in his court while he was sitting there?—A. Before 1898 very seldom; after 1898 to 1900 infrequently; from 1900 to 1906 I consider that I was in his court more than any other lawyer probably in the district. Since 1906, as much as the ordinary lawyer, up to 1909.

Q. And since that not at all?—A. And since that not at all, though meeting him on my vacations when I came out of Alaska.

Q. To what extent were you in society when he was not in court during those years—let me add to that question—in his society or having an opportunity to observe him?—A. I would say very good. I do not mean by that socially, particularly, but our offices being in the same building, that is, the United States attorney's offices. I did not state to you, I believe, that from 1900 until my appointment as special assistant attorney general I was assistant United States attorney in this district, that is, for about four years or four years and a half, and during that time our offices being near together, the judge worked nights, I would say, on average of about four or five nights a week, and I worked myself generally at night, and the doors of our offices being within 20 feet of one another and his library containing books that mine did not, I would say that I was almost hourly in his presence in the court room during the daytime and after dinner at night along from 8 o'clock on through in and out of his chambers and within hearing and almost within sight of where he was at work four or five nights in the week.

Q. Are he and you members of any club, organization, or other social organization?—A. Nothing more, I think, than the American Bar Association and the Bar Association of the State of Washington.

Q. You are not a member of the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Judge, have you observed any peculiarity in Judge Hanford's conduct while presiding in court, with special reference to apparent drowsiness or napping or sleeping on the bench?—A. I have noticed him close his eyes; I would not call it napping. I am no oculist, but I attributed his closing his eyes to a matter of eyestrain. As a man grows older, from reading books and trying to hold his eye on a man 20 or 25 feet away from his, his eyeballs do not respond as they do when younger; I think he closed his eyes sometimes on the bench.

Q. Well, is that the extent to which you have observed the peculiarity which I have referred to?—A. I never noticed it anywhere else except in court, and that is as far as it would go; sometimes closing his eyes and turning half away in his chair, relaxing for a few minutes.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating drinks?—A. I never have.

Q. Did you ever see him drinking?—A. I have.

Q. To what extent?—A. I do not think I ever saw him drink more than two cocktails on one occasion; by that I do not mean drinking them in quick succession, but at one sitting or one meeting of men.

Q. Did those appear to have any influence on him to the extent of affecting his appearance or demeanor?—A. No, sir. I never saw him affected in his walk or talk, and I never saw his face flush, and I never smelled liquor on the judge's breath, although I have been near him at times when he was drinking or when he had drank.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions; Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask the judge any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. No; I think not.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Dr. Brown here? Will you please take the witness stand; you have been sworn in this matter already?

Mr. BROWN. I have.

EDWIN J. BROWN, recalled, testifies as follows:

Mr. McCOY. Dr. Brown, to what organizations in Seattle or the State of Washington do you belong?

A. I believe I am a member of the State Bar Association; I hold a membership in the chamber of commerce and in the Commercial Club, the Seattle Athletic Club of this city; I think I am a member of the Y. M. C. A., but I am not positive of that, I think I have lapsed; also a member, if you wish to include political organizations, I am a member of the Socialist Party.

Q. You testified that you were a dentist; what was your dental course and education, and where was it?—A. Three years' course at the Western Dental College, of Kansas City, Mo., with a faculty comprising a full faculty, the dean of which was president of the American—of the association of faculties—the Association of Dental Faculties—Dr. D. J. McMillan.

Q. Elected by what body of men?—He was elected president by the associated dental colleges of the United States.

Q. Did that association comprise many of the leading dental colleges?—A. All of them.

Q. You took a three years' course, you say?—A. A full three years' course, graduated April 2, 1897.

Q. And got your diploma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you obtain—what was the standing of the dental college in which you graduated?—A. Well, I would say equal to all others of the universities and associations. I know the dean of our school was called to California and Washington to investigate the College of Physicians and Surgeons at San Francisco, and the North Pacific—what is now the North Pacific Dental College at Portland; it was at that time at Tacoma. Dr. McMillan investigated them and reported favorably, and they were admitted into the association.

Q. What has been your course of study of the law?—A. Upon the question of dentistry I would like to state also that I have been admitted and have my certificates in Missouri, Texas, California, Oregon, and now in Washington, after a 10-year tussel, or a 10-year contest with the society or board.

Q. Anything else you want to state about the dental side of it?—A. There is, slightly—as I understand, there was some evidence introduced before your committee concerning the question of my standing as a dentist.

Q. First, Doctor, will you answer my question about your education in the law?—A. I began my study of the law in the winter of 1882–3. I took care of a lawyer's horse and cow that winter out in Illinois, and I did some reading. I was a young chap, and did more or less reading until the fall of 1897. I entered the Kansas City School of Law and finished my law course in the fall.

Q. What is the length of that course?—A. Well, at that time it was an 18-month course, but nine months each year—each course. Since then, I think the year after I finished, they made it a three-year course. The requirement now is a three-year course in the Kansas City School of Law.

Q. That school was then and now is a school of recognized high standing?—A. Yes. Mr. Neal, who is the law partner of Gov. Hadley, of Missouri, graduated in my class, and many others that I could name, lawyers of more or less prominence.

Q. And you are a friend of Gov. Hadley?—A. I know Gov. Hadley quite well—that is, I knew him when he was a young man quite well, living in the same neighborhood; I helped to put him in his first public office.

Q. When was it that you came to the State of Washington?—A. The last day of February, 1901.

Q. How soon after that did you take to the practice of dentistry here?—A. I immediately became associated, temporarily, however, with Dr. A. W. Phillips.

Q. In this city?—A. In Seattle, on Pike Street.

Q. Is he a dentist of good reputation and standing?—A. He has since served as president of the dental society of this State—a man that we all consider—we all consider Dr. Phillips as one of our recognized professional men.

Q. And in what capacity were you with him?—A. Just as an operator and assistant.

Q. How long did you stay with Dr. Phillips?—A. Just a brief period. The doctor knew that I had decided to open offices here, and I was just with him temporarily. On the 15th day of July I opened offices where I now have offices, at 713 First Avenue.

Q. The 15th of July—what year?—A. The 15th of July, 1901.

Q. What was the law of Washington at that time in regard to the practice of dentistry?—A. The law of Washington prior to the 18th day of March, 1901, prescribed qualifications for dentists and an examination. On the 18th day of March, I believe it was, the governor signed the present bill, which—or the present law—which had been amended so as to strike out from the law all of the qualifications that were prescribed in the law of 1893 and delegating to the dental board the arbitrary power to say what the examination should be; that is, what the subjects should be.

Q. In other words, the law of 1893 specified in what subjects the applicants should be examined?—A. Truly.

Q. And this law of 1901 did away with that and turned it over to the discretion of the examining board?—A. Yes, sir; the law of 1893 prescribed that the examination should be elementary and practical, but sufficiently thorough to test the fitness of the applicant to practice dentistry and should include the subjects of physiology and anatomy and histology, and so on, but the amendment struck out all reference to what subjects should be included in the examination and merely left it to the satisfaction of the members of the board. By the way, the old law of 1893, under that a man could study under a preceptor for 10 years and then take his examination and be admitted to practice. The idea was to keep the eastern men out of this State, so they amended the law. The dental society got the law amended to provide that "no person shall be eligible for such an examination unless he or she shall be of good moral character and shall present to said board his or her diploma from some dental college in good standing and shall give satisfactory evidence of his or her rightful possession of the same" and should undergo their examination by the dental board, but it doesn't say whether this examination shall be in astronomy or astrology or dentistry or what not.

Q. Why do you say that the object was to keep eastern dentists out? What do you base that on?—A. That was commonly understood, and at the time the dental law was passed it was common among the dental profession that that was the idea of the law—to keep eastern dentists out of this State.

Q. Did you ever hear anyone say so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anyone connected with the dental board?—A. Well, I could not—no; other dentists have come here, though, and called on different members and have told me that they were told that that was the object of the law.

Q. Well, now, the law was amended in 1901. Had you up to that time applied for permission to practice as a dentist?—A. The present law has a saving clause which provides that all persons who are bona fide citizens of the State of Washington and were engaged in the practice at the time of the passage of that act should be given their certificates. I consulted Mr. Walter Fulton when I came here, and Mr. Fulton informed me that under the law I would be entitled to my certificate because I was here in practice. The board refused to issue those certificates, and there was a test case made, and Judge Ronald conducted the test case, and if I remember correctly it is known as the Smith case, and the supreme court affirmed the board's action, and then immediately I went and took an examination on two occasions. If the books of the board were brought here you would find that I was marked O. K. on my practical work, and if my credits were figured honestly on my written examination—but some of them were marked ridiculously low—and some members of the board have since admitted to other dentists that they did me dirt—you would find my written average would be 66 and my practical work was marked O. K., and my grade would at least be 86 or 88 if figured from the standpoint that the present board grades their papers or rates their papers—and they refused to issue me a license. I was unfortunate in the courts; and that warfare has continued until the present time. I went and took my examination here recently, and was admitted to practice, and I have my license.

Q. Did any of those boards before which you took your examination make any requirements of those who had successfully passed the examination before they would admit them, which requirements were not embodied in the law?—A. They did. They have a requirement here, not only before they would admit them, but even before they would admit them to take the examination; that was the intent. I wish to say further that there was an investigation held by the legislative investigating committee, and I believe that my position was practically indorsed. I have here an agreement that was presented to each applicant who appeared for an examination. George Stryker, a member of the dental board, testified that this agreement was drawn up by Mr. Samuel R. Stern, of Spokane. He was the dental board's attorney. And I would have had to sign this agreement in order to have been in the good graces of what I term the dental combine. I am proud to say that I was one alone out of 40 applicants who refused to sign it. The balance of them signed it. Some got their license and some did not, but I refused.

Q. You say there was no requirement in the law for that?—A. No, sir. This is the contract.

Q. What is the book that that is contained in?—A. This is the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Washington State Board of Dental Examiners, reported to the governor of our State for the year ending October 15, 1903. The code of ethics that you were compelled to subscribe to and the contract under which——

Q. What was it that you refused to subscribe; this contract, as you call it?—A. Both the contract and the code of ethics promulgated by what is known as the National Dental Association, which is a little association, or a little wheel within a wheel to manipulate things.

Q. Who were on the board before which you took your examination first, or the board?—A. Dr. M. W. Thurston for president, Dr. J. M. Myer, and Dr. Fishburn. Dr. Seth C. Macher was a member of the board at that time, but did not attend that meeting, so that there was only three members of that first meeting, and that was the meeting in which my practical work was marked "O. K."

Q. Was that the board which was under investigation by the State legislature?—A. That board's acts were under investigation, but those members of the board had retired and new members taken their place.

Q. Have you any report of the legislative committee which made the investigation?—A. I have.

Q. What were the charges, in general, that were made against the board that were being investigated?—A. Well, the charges were substantially, first, that arbitrary and unreasonable examinations are given by the board; second, proceedings of the board have been secret and applicants denied access to records and examination papers; third, examination fees have been collected and certificates issued without examinations having been given; fourth, excessive and unlawful expense accounts.

Q. What are you reading from?—A. I am reading from the report of the legislative investigating committee to our governor, of which Senator P. L. Allen was chairman and H. O. Fishback and Howard D. Taylor, the speaker of the last house, J. C. Hubbell, and W. C. McMaster were members of the committee. The State was represented by the assistant attorney general.

Q. What were the findings of the legislative committee on those charges?—A. I will state that I conducted the investigation for the plaintiff, as I was the plaintiff.

Q. Read the findings on all the charges.—A. The findings are:

1. That the statute creating the dental board makes no provision for the examination of applicants in any certain subjects relating to dentistry, and confers on the dental board unlimited powers as to the scope of the examinations to be given. This portion of the statute is susceptible of abuse, and results in different boards giving different examinations and prescribing different standards and qualifications for the securing of licenses, and the committee feels that the best interests of the State will be subserved by an amendment to the dental law, prescribing the subjects in which applicants shall be examined and the qualifications necessary to pass such examination.

2. That the proceedings of the various dental boards have not been open to public inspection, as provided in the statute, and that applicants taking examinations have been denied access to the papers, records, and files of the dental board, and that the secrecy maintained has given rise to criticism and suspicion which has brought the State dental board into more or less disrepute.

The committee therefore believes that amendments to the dental law should be made requiring the board to keep permanent records of all its proceedings, open at all times to public inspection, together with records showing the grades given applicants in all subjects, which shall be open at all times to the inspection of such applicants.

3. That the dental board in at least one case demanded and received the statutory fee of $25 for an examination which was not given, and later issued a license to the applicant based upon his grades in an examination given six months prior thereto.

The committee considers this unwarranted and reprehensible conduct on the part of the dental board, and mentions this case as additional evidence of the arbitrary and unlimited powers exercised by the board under the present law.

4. That the dental law provides that the members of the board shall receive $5 per day while actually engaged in the duties of their office and all legitimate and necessary expenses incurred in attending to the duties of the board. The financial report for the year 1908 and 1909 presented to the governor shows that each member of the board has charged and received, in addition to the $5 per diem allowed by the law, railroad fare to and from his home to the place of holding examinations, as well as a flat rate of $5 per day to cover expenses. Such practice should be condemned, as in the judgment of the committee it is a violation of both the letter and spirit of the law.

Q. Now, it was this committee which was undertaking to have you comply with what is called its code of ethics.

The WITNESS. There is one more finding that I have not read; but it is immaterial.

Mr. McCOY. This was the examining board that was undertaking to force you to comply with what it called a code of ethics, I think you said?

A. Yes. Now, when I took the second examination in the fall of 1903 some of the same members were on the board who were on the board of investigation and are on the board now—only one or two of them, however—I think one at this time.

Mr. McCOY. You might have marked as an exhibit this so-called code of ethics and agreement—can these remain with the stenographer?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. The pamphlet is not paged so that I can't tell which part of it it is.

A. The contract in which the applicant was bound to abide by this code is very amusing.

The document last referred to by the witness is marked "Exhibit No. 60."

The WITNESS. I have the full report here, and I brought it to show that the investigation was rather full and rather complete. I think it required something like 344 pages of typewriting concerning the dental board.

Q. What was the name of the attorney you mentioned here a few minutes ago as the attorney of the board?—A. Mr. Samuel R. Stern, of Spokane.

Q. He is the same man who referred to you the other day as a fake dentist.—A. Yes, I presume so; I was not here, but I understood and I think that would be Mr. Stern's remark. Every lawyer that I have given a whipping to before the courts of this State have called me the same name, and when the dentists get a licking they call me a fake lawyer, I suppose.

Q. Were his services to the State board of dental examiners given free or was he working for compensation?—A. Mr. Stern stated before the Dental Society of Spokane that he would consider it a pleasure and a work of honor to drive all those dentists out of the State, but about the time his work was finished he rendered a bill to the board for something over $2,000 and had a receiver appointed for their funds.

Q. Did he ever state to you how he got about the State on this honorary work?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Stern told me one time in court that he would not be able to prosecute the cases unless he had railroad passes to ride on. He rides on railroad passes.

Q. You say when he finished the work—did he ever drive the dentists out of the State?—A. No, sir; he never finished that job—no, he never got it finished.

Q. What seems to be the complaint against you, Dr. Brown; is it the kind of a dental office which you run?—A. Why, the complaint is that I refused to join the society and do business under their rules. They have rules there which provide how you shall conduct your business. I thought I was capable of conducting my own business, and still think so, and in order to enforce their rules they invoked the courts; that is to say, I was arrested some twenty times when there was no prosecutions at all. I was arrested and taken and locked up in jail when there was no evidence whatsoever, and the cases were dismissed and never came to trial at all, and I was arrested, I guess, some twenty times. Out of over 100 arrests that Mr. Parker and myself have defended—out of over 100 cases they got convictions in about eight, and four of those were reversed in the supreme court. And my case is now in the United States Supreme Court and probably will come up for hearing this winter.

Q. Does not the complaint against you seem to be that you are rendering services to people who can not afford to pay high prices?—A. Well, that is true. You will find one clause in the code of ethics which provides that when dentists in a certain locality have established a scale of prices or fees that it is dishonorable to depart from that scale.

Q. Not only dishonorable, but the agreement, if you signed it, would have compelled you, provided you kept it, to abide by that scale of charges?—A. Otherwise, under their contract they assumed the power of revoking your license and driving you from practicing in the State. I would say that we dentists have different methods of advertising and my method is in the newspapers and I pay for that—that is my system; my method.

Q. How many dentists are there in your office, working there?—A. I have 11 dentists and 5 assistants and a secretary there.

Q. Are the dentists in your office all graduates of dental institutions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All licensed to practice?—A. Yes; all graduates—yes, all finished men.

Q. Have you had any prominent dentists working under you at all?—A. Yes; I had Dr. A. McCullough; used to be a member of the dental board; he associated with me about December 1, 1901. Dr. Seth C. Macher, the former president of the dental board has been associated with me more or less as an assistant for the past six or seven years.

The CHAIRMAN. Any more questions of Dr. Brown?

The WITNESS (continuing). If I might be permitted, I would like to say that so far as my standing is concerned I refer you to Dr. A. W. Phillips and to Dr. Tenny and Dr. Davis and Dr. McGregor; to Dr. Powers, of the dental board; to Mayor Cotterill, to Judge Holcomb, of Adams, Benton, and Franklin County; and his family have been patients of mine ever since I came to Seattle. I done the judge's work myself in 1901. Mr. Stacey, formerly of the Bank of Commerce, and Mr. Charles Miller, one of the presidents of the Bank of Commerce, and Mr. John Moran, a partner of the son of Mr. Samuel R. Stern, in the engineering business. I might refer to any of those gentlemen.

Q. And all reputable citizens?—A. Yes, sir. I wish to say also that while at Spokane one of our oldest and most respected dentists in this State, Mr. Hunt, told me that Mr. Stern had said before the society that he was going to bring a judge over here specially to try those cases, and I wish also to state that it was a peculiar thing that all of those dental cases were tried by nonresident judges. Our home judges for some reason, I don't know why—it may have been an accident or a coninicidence—but every case was tried by a nonresident judge.

Mr. HIGGINS. In the State court?

A. In our superior court, here in the State. We came to a case one day against Mr. A. R. Long, a dentist, and I wish to say this because it has been brought in here—we had been trying cases and we arrived at a time when A. R. Long was in court, and there was a charge against him, and I asked Mr. Stern as an attorney for the other dentists, to try Long's case. Mr. Stern said, "We are not going to try that case. We are going to have it dismissed. He does not do enough business to hurt anyone." And I wish now to read the testimony of Dr. Stiles, simply to show that, if I be permitted——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. Do you consider this material, Mr. McCoy?

Mr. MCCOY. I consider that a wanton attack was made on this witness the other day, and I think he ought to have free scope to put himself on record and get back at the man that made it; that is all—simply a question of fair play.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this testimony about?

Mr. MCCOY. I don't know, I am sure.

The WITNESS. This is merely in regard to a statement made by Mr. Samuel R. Stern to a dentist, and this is a deposition taken before a notary at Portland, Oreg., in which this testimony was given. It is very brief.

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the case in which this testimony was taken?

The WITNESS. This is the case of—a case in which I brought a suit against the dental board.

Mr. HIGGINS. What was the name of it?

A. "Edwin J. Brown, plaintiff, v. George W. Striker, J. M. Meyer, A. Stark Oliver, and W. A. Fishburn, surviving members of the board of dental examiners of the State of Washington as constituted in 1903, defendants."

Q. Where was it tried?—A. Tacoma, Wash.

Q. When?—A. In May—April or May, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is brief, proceed.

Mr. HIGGINS. This is for the purpose of contradicting Mr. Stern's statement that you are a fake dentist?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. As all your own testimony has been, as I understand it.—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Don't you understand, Dr. Brown, that when this case is finally summed up that if you did not come here and give this testimony an argument would have been made against your standing as a witness on the basis of what Mr. Stern said here the other day?

A. Certainly.

Q. And you are now in court to put the record in shape so that people can estimate Mr. Stern's testimony at its right value for the purpose of this record?—A. Certainly.

Mr. HIGGINS. Are we also to investigate into the references which Dr. Brown has submitted and inquire into the statement which he has read and the action of the State of Washington in the enforcement of its dental laws?

Mr. MCCOY. As far as I am concerned it can go just as wide as it pleases so that Dr. Brown may have an opportunity to put the real status before the Judiciary Committee when this gets back to Washington—everybody knows what the attack on him was made for.

Mr. HIGGINS. But we can not do that unless we go into an investigation of the administration of the dental laws of the State of Washington and then call those gentlemen whom he has referred to if we are going into the inquiry, as to his standing or reputation.

Mr. MCCOY. I am quite willing if you want them to come here to examine them.

Mr. HIGGINS. Oh, I have no desire to.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, Doctor.

The WITNESS. I am reading from page 8 of the deposition of Albert B. Stiles, sworn on behalf of the plaintiff, testified:

Direct examination:

Q. Do you or do you not know Samuel R. Stern, of Spokane?—A. I do.

Q. Did or did you not have a conversation with him concerning engaging in the practice of dentistry in the State of Washington?—A. I did.

Q. You may state what that conversation was; what Mr. Stern said?

Defendants object to this question upon the ground that it is hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

A. I called on Mr. Stern, told him who I was, what my business was, and that I had come to the State of Washington to practice dentistry and was practicing dentistry; that I was traveling on the road, going from town to town, making these towns every so often. Mr. Stern asked me if I was advertising. I told him that I did not advertise except to make an announcement of my coming. He turned to me and says, "You need not be afraid of being troubled or molested by the State board of examiners, or the society; they are not after such as you; we are after the dental advertisers running large offices in the larger cities, and advertising in the newspapers extensively, and we will make life one hell for them before we get through." We had some little further talk, after telling me that I need not worry, that put me on "easy street," practically, and I kept on the work.

That is from page 8 of Stiles's deposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, have you any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. It may enlighten the Judiciary Committee to have your advertisement, since you say your practice is to advertise. Now, I call your attention to this advertisement which appeared in the issue of the Seattle Daily Times, Tuesday evening, June 18, 1912 [showing]. Is that your advertisement?

A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I have torn it out of the paper for the purpose of saving making any unnecessary record. That is a correct copy of your advertisement?

A. That is my advertisemennt.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer this as a part of the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you require it to be printed?

Mr. HUGHES. I think it ought to be.

The WITNESS. And if I may be permitted to state, that special advertisement is called forth by the fact that I came to believe that a gentleman who endeavors to copy my name, so as to attract my practice to him, was put there, or aided in his going there, by the people who have been in the contest with me.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Brown, you have carried that advertisement for a long time just as it is at the present time, with your picture at the head of it?

A. This special one has been there two or three or four weeks.

Q. Well, that or a similar advertisement with your picture on it has been constantly in the papers?—A. Well, I have had patients constantly coming to my office and informing me that they have been falling into this E. J. Brown's office, and I found it necessary to inform my following, so that they would know the difference between the two offices.

Newspaper clipping is received in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 60."

Mr. HUGHES. Did you ever practice law in Texas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever practice law in California?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you practice law here now personally, or dentistry?—A. I have been engaged in the practice of law since 1904 or 1905, with the exception of my general supervision over my other business—I have had diversified interests.

Q. Is it not true that for years past you have employed and had working for you in your office unlicensed dentists?—A. When a dentist presents himself whom the society and dental board have outlawed, I have had such men work for me, but, then, almost every dentist in the city who employs other help has had dentists who were unlicensed, because the law of this State is such that it deprives them of their right, substantially. I have had such men, and so have members of the board had such men in their employ.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. One moment; how many times were you convicted for violation of the dental laws?

A. I think but one time. My recollection is that one time there was one conviction had, and I was not very well acquainted then, and I found clerks of our court up there serving on the jury and personal friends of my friend Mr. Stern. I was not acquainted those days as

I am now, and they did get one conviction and that was a case where an old lady testified that she gave me her artificial teeth, and I done something with them and gave them back, but, nevertheless, I was convicted, and that case is before the United States Supreme Court.

Q. In all those convictions of dentists for violation of the dental laws which you have defended, there were appeals to the supreme court?—A. Yes.

Q. And were they reversed in the supreme court or affirmed there? A. My recollection is that there were four—eight appeals, and I think four were sustained—four convictions were sustained and we reversed four.

Q. You mean that four were affirmed?—A. That four were affirmed.

Q. And what about the others, were they reversed?—A. Reversed.

Mr. McCoy. How many times have you been under indictment, if you know?—A. I never was under indictment.

Mr. Hughes. We do not have indictments. We proceed here by informations.

Mr. McCoy. How many informations have been filed against you?

A. I think that I have probably been arrested some twenty times in the past eight or nine years—some twenty times.

Mr. McCoy. You maintain law offices in this city, don't you?

A. I do.

Q. Who is your partner, if you have one?—A. Mr. John R. Parker.

Q. Is he a reputable attorney here in the city?—A. Yes, sir; he is recognized as a reputable attorney.

Q. Do you carry your office in your hat or do you have a real office?—A. I have the offices formerly occupied by Mr. Charles Munday and Mr. White, in the Starr-Boyd Building—law offices—we have five offices. I think my library comprises something like twelve or fifteen hundred volumes, containing—I don't know how many books. If there is any question as to that I would invite the committee and Mr. Stern there.

Mr. Hughes. I do not want to protract this examination, but I would like to inquire of the witness—you say you have been arrested——

The Witness (continuing). I would say also that my son and his partner have offices with us. The firm name is Parker, Brown, Metsker & Brown, but my son and his partner have their clientage and run their business and Mr. Parker and myself have ours.

Mr. Hughes. I do not want to protract the examination, but in regard to one of your answers I want to ask you one other question. You say you have been arrested fifteen or twenty times. Those arrests have, some of them, been for a violation of the ordinances of the city for talking on street corners, and things of that kind, have they not? They have not all been for violation of the dental law?

A. Well, I had overlooked those.

Q. That is all I wanted to know, when you spoke of the number of arrests.—A. Yes, sir; I would be pleased to answer that.

The Chairman. You may.

A. That I was honored by being arrested for an attempt to exercise the right of free speech, and the gentleman who enforced the city ordinances at that time over the protest of many of our citizens is now in Walla Walla.

Mr. McCoy. What is Walla Walla?

A. That is the penitentiary of this State. His name is C. W. Wappenstein; he is serving a term for bribery.

Mr. Hughes. You mean the chief of police?

A. The chief of police.

Witness excused.

J. W. McLean, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your full name to the committee.—A. J. W. McLean.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. McLean?—A. 1412 Third Avenue.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Fifteen years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Pharmacist.

Q. And what has it been?—A. It has been that all my life, with the exception of eight years that I was in the Government service.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Post-office clerk.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. McLean, are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I know him by sight.

Q. How long have you known the judge that way?—A. Covering the greater part of 15 years that I have lived here.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with him other than a slight acquaintance?—A. Absolutely none.

Q. Well, have you seen the judge mostly?—A. I have met him frequently about town, passed him on the street.

Q. Are you associated with him in any——A. In no way whatever.

Q. (Continuing.) In any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicating liquors?—A. Never.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor?—A. I thought so.

Q. When was it, Mr. McLean?—A. I never thought that I would have had occasion to remember it, so I could not state exactly.

Q. Can you approximate the time?—A. Well, at various times, generally late at night.

Q. How late?—A. Well, I could not state. I am out pretty late myself nights; my business keeps me until midnight at present.

Q. Do you recall any particular occasion when you saw him in the condition which you referred to, without giving the date or the time of it, do you recall it?—A. I can make the date quite specific; it was within a few days after the Dreamland Rink meeting that I recall.

Q. Do you recall where you saw him then?—A. I can; on the Third Avenue car; I am pretty sure it was the Third—I am quite positive it was a Third Avenue car—I wanted to go to the corner of Westlake and Pine Streets. I was on my way to get my lunch, and I used to eat my lunch in the American Oyster House, quite near there, and when I got on the car I was smoking, and so I sat right where the exit is, right opposite where the conductor is standing, and I noticed Judge Hanford sitting on one of the cross seats—the first cross seat, I think, just opposite me. I was sitting on the end seat, right near the conductor, and the judge was on the opposite cross seat, the first cross seat, and I had noticed that he seemed to be rather sleepy, or was nodding; he had his eyes closed, as near as I could see, and I could see his head nodding, and the conductor reached over to me and said, "Do you know who that man is?" and I said "Yes," and he commented to me at that time on his appearance and he said he had carried him that way before.

Q. How long had you known him prior to that time?—A. Oh, for years.

Q. From your observation then and your knowledge of him then and before then, what would you say his condition was with reference to being intoxicated?—A. Well, I considered that he was—that was my opinion.

Q. Have you seen him—you have stated that you have seen him at other times—will you please tell the committee some of the other times?—A. Well, the other times were simply on the street, as I say, usually at a late hour at night. I have seen him many times in the daytime, but I do not know that I ever noticed any condition of that sort in the daytime.

Q. Can you recall any of those occasions in such a way as to describe where it was and what his condition was.—A. Well, I never tried to fix those occasions in my mind, and so it would be merely a guess—I could give you an idea. It was on the main streets of the city, perhaps Second or Third Avenue or Pike Street, around in that district, downtown. I do not know that I ever met him in the suburbs, because I am mostly down town myself and very seldom go out there except I take a street car ride, or something of that sort.

Q. Now you can take any of those occasions which occur to you now and tell the committee what it was in his appearance or conduct which led you to think that he was intoxicated.—A. Well, just the general appearance. The condition of his footsteps and general appearance. I never paid special attention—I just merely—it occurred to me then because I had heard conversation on the subject. Of course that is hearsay; you know when anybody is under investigation and under fire there is always more or less talk.

Q. Speak of your own observation, how many occasions would you say you had seen him on the streets of the city nighttime, or any other time when, in your opinion, he was intoxicated?—A. Well, I would not make an estimate, because it covers a period of several years—I would not estimate it—but several times.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. Have you ever had any business in his court?—A. Never, never, sir.

Q. Or any business of any kind with him personally or judicially?—A. No, sir; I never had any dealings with him, and have never spoken to him.

The Chairman. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Higgins. There has been testimony, Mr. McLean, that at times Judge Hanford, when he was on the street car will close his eyes, and, as some witnesses have expressed it, wobble his head—were those the things which you saw Judge Hanford doing on the car?—A. Well, it was only on that one occasion, and the conductor called my attention to him or I would not have paid special attention to him—I noticed it only that one time—I saw his head nodding and the conductor called my attention to it.

Q. What other things did you see Judge Hanford do?—A. Never—I never saw anything out of the way with him.

Q. Except the nodding of his head?—A. And that was just this one occasion on the car.

Q. And that was the only time?—A. That was the only time I ever recall seeing him on the car that way.

Q. What other times have you seen him that you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. Well, at nighttime—I don't know that I ever saw him in the daytime that way.

Q. What did he do then that indicated that to you?—A. Simply his walking and his general appearance, that is all.

Q. Just simply his general appearance and his walking?—A. His general appearance and his walking.

Q. You mean that he staggered?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he alone?—A. Yes.

Q. What time of the night was it?—A. Well, as I say, as I stated before, it was probably quite late at night—that would be the hour I would see him.

Q. Can you fix the time more definitely?—A. I don't know as I could. I know it was always at night when I noticed that.

Q. You can not state the number of times?—A. I would not care to estimate it, no, sir. It covers a period of several years and I noticed it on several occasions.

Q. Did you ever see him when you thought he was not under the influence of liquor?—A. Oh, many times.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Do you know him personally?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about his personal habits?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know anything about his peculiarities?—A. Only what I have read in the newspapers.

Q. Did you ever observe his peculiarity of walking?—A. Well, I have on those occasions I spoke of.

Q. Now——A. (Continuing.) Well, it would be different at different times. Those various times I spoke of would be at night time—I have seen him in the day time when I did not notice that.

Q. Well, you observed him in the day time.—A. If you see a man walking at different times and appearing to be under the influence of liquor it would perhaps make an impression on you if he was a man of prominence.

Q. I say, you have no knowledge of his personal peculiarities.—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know him personally?—A. No, sir; I never saw him drinking.

Q. You do not know him except by sight?—A. Just by sight.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all. What is your present business?

A. Pharmacist.

Q. Where?—A. With the Smith Drug Co., at Second and James, in the Butler Hotel building.

Q. I understood you to say that you were in the postal service?—A. I was for eight years.

Q. Prior to being in the drug business?—A. Yes, sir; prior to being there.

Q. Prior to being or becoming a pharmacist?—A. Oh, no, sir; I had been in the drug business.

Q. Well, when were you in the postal service?—A. I think I was appointed—I think the date was in March, 1903.

Q. And for eight years after that you were in the postal service?—A. Yes, sir. I resigned on the 25th day of October, 1910.

Q. And since then you have been in Smith's pharmacy?—A. Yes, sir. But during the time I was in the postal service I did relief work, during all the time I was in the post office.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other witnesses present who have been subpœnaed or required to attend? If so, please arise.

Mr. HUGHES. In view of the conversation this morning, I asked Judge Griffin to be here and he is here at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the name?

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Arthur E. Griffin.

The CHAIRMAN. On what?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, he was the judge who presided in the Heckman & Hansen case. He was the judge who presided in the Sullivan case, and also has been intimately acquainted with Judge Hanford for many years.

The CHAIRMAN. You wish him examined?

Mr. HUGHES. We desire to have him testify.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Griffin.

ARTHUR E. GRIFFIN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name.

A. Arthur E. Griffin.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have for how long?—A. Since October, 1892.

Q. Are you at this time on the bench?—A. No, I am not.

Q. You have been on the State bench here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the superior court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that, Judge, and for how long?—A. From January 9, 1901, to January 11, 1909; eight years.

Q. What are you now doing?—A. Practicing law.

Q. During your residence in Seattle I assume that you have become acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Ever since you have lived in the city?—A. Practically so.

Q. To what extent have you been associated with the judge?—A. Well, only in appearing before his court, and meeting him casually.

Q. Are you a member of any social organization of which he is a member?—A. I belong to the Arctic Club, and I have frequently have seen the judge there, but I could not say as to whether he is a member of the club or not.

Q. During the time that you were on the bench I suppose you saw him only on special occasions?—A. When meeting him on the street.

Q. You did not, of course, practice law while you were on the bench?—A. No, sir.

Q. And met him, doubtless, at some public functions or on the street?—A. Both, I would say.

Q. Now, give the committee an idea, Judge, of the opportunity you have had to associate with and observe the judge—A. Well, before I went on the bench and afterwards I probably had about the average number of cases that have come before him for trial, in case of the average lawyer. I have seen him at public meetings occasionally, and I have seen him on the street and have seen him in his offices a few times—or in his chambers, rather.

Q. From what you have stated I assume you are not a member of the Rainier Club?—A. I am not.

Q. Have you at any time seen the judge drinking intoxicating drinks?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you observed the habit which has been testified about, that the judge at times appears to be drowsy or napping or even sleeping on the bench while holding court?—A. I have read of that in the paper, but my own observations have been that I have seen him close his eyes while sitting upon the bench, and which I attributed to the fact that nearly all of the benches in this State, that I know of, are back against the wall and the light comes either directly in font or very near, and both sides, and from my own experience I know it is very hard on the eyes to sit for any considerable length of time in that position, and I attributed Judge Hanford's closing his eyes to the fact that the light was probably irritable.

Q. You speak of seeing mention of it in the papers. Do you mean during this investigation?—A. Yes.

Q. Or before that?—A. During this investigation. I never heard any charges against Judge Hanford that he used intoxicating liquors to any extent until I read in the morning paper of the charges that had been preferred against him by Mr. Perry.

Q. We don't care, as far as the Chair is concerned, to go into general reputation. I didn't ask for the fact you just stated.—A. Pardon me.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions on that line, gentlemen, with Judge Griffin? Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask the Judge further?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do so.

Mr. HUGHES. One or two along this line: Are you acquainted generally with Judge Hanfo.d's personal pecularities, habits of carrying himself, walking, and so forth?

A. Well, I know that both he and his two brothers that I am acquainted with walk with their heads lower I think than the average individual.

Q. Well, is there anything unusual in their walk as to their keeping step? Did you ever try to keep step with them?—A. No, I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) With Judge Hanford?—A. I don't know that I ever did. I know that he takes short steps.

Q. As to his appearance and manners, both in the court room and while sitting down or walking, you may state to this committee whether his personal peculiarities are such that those not familiar with him might think that he was under the influence of liquor or ill, or some other cause than a natural one, contrary to the fact?—A. I think that they might do so.

Q. Now, Judge, mention has been made in this case, in the examination of Senator Piles and of Mr. J. B. Howe, of the Sullivan case. Did you preside at the final hearing of the Sullivan case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state briefly something about the Sullivan case as it was presented to you?—A. Well, the Sullivan case was a case in which the amount of property involved was very large; the actual trial of the case took 29 days.

Q. The final trial?—A. Yes; 29 days of my time when the attorneys were present. I also took a very considerable length of time after that in checking up the depositions that had been presented and the documentary evidence presented. The trial was almost entirely upon written depositions, and the most of the testimony had been taken in Ireland, by very old people.

Q. You mean testimony of very old people?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Given by old people?

A. Yes, given by old people, yes. I remember in regard to the contest a number of things that appeared to me to be controlling as to the decision of the case, if you would care to have those stated.

Q. I don't think this committee cares to go into any particular consideration of that case—I apprehend not—simply as bearing upon the merit or demerit of it, that is all. In other words, there have been inferences and have been publications in magazines that might impugn that case—the merit of it, and your decision of it. I thought you might briefly state the facts to the committee.—A. Well, I never paid any more conscientious and painstaking attention to the trial of any case, and I never tried to decide a case any more accurately than I did that, and after I had rendered my decision I was thoroughly satisfied that it was right and would stand.

Q. And it was sustained, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge, you presided over the equity department at the time of the appointment of a receiver in the case of Curtis against Heckman & Hansen?—A. I believe not. I think that that was the first year I was on the bench, and I think I was in the criminal department that year.

Q. Well, the matter in 1902 came before you for hearing—the charges of Jerold Finch?—A. Well, I think the——

Q. And the approval of the report of the——

A. (Interrupting.) I think practically the entire Heckman & Hansen case in the superior court came before me, but I was not in the equity department during that time.

Q. Oh. Well, how was that case disposed of in your court—how was it handled?—A. Well, disposed of in the ordinary way. A receiver was appointed, and the only exception that I know of was that I appointed in that case the receiver that was recommended by Heckman & Hensen's attorneys, and that was a variation from my custom. I did so because the attorney represented in open court that he was a man—a thorough mechanic, a man who had charge of their yards, and that if anybody could save the estate that he could. I knew of nobody that I thought was competent to take charge of a shipbuilding yard. It appeared to me that it was a matter which should require some person of special knowledge in that business, and I knew of no such person that I could appoint, and upon their recommendation I appointed Mr. Larson.

Q. Some testimony has been offered here indicating that that property was sacrificed, sold for an inadequate price. Please inform this commission what knowledge or information came before you and what were the facts so far as you know them.—A. Well, as I remember—I might be mistaken, but as I remember there was no one objected to the offers that had been received. The property was put up for sale at private sale, and there was, as I remember, no objections to the bids that had been received by the receiver; and while they may seem low as compared to present valuations, at that time I think that nobody contended before me that the property sold for less than its reasonable value.

Q. Were the values low at that time as yet in the city of Seattle?—A. Very low, indeed.

Q. That was before the beginning of the rapid increase of values of real property?—A. Yes; and following the depression—extreme depression here of 1896.

Q. Mr. Finch appeared before you and filed objections?—A. I think so.

Q. Was he given a hearing, as other attorneys are?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything arbitrary or unfair or unjudicial in the disposition of that case before you, Judge Griffin?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Any appeal taken from your decision in the matter?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. There was an application for a writ of prohibition of some sort, but that was not granted by the supreme court.—A. Well, I don't even remember that.

Q. Well, it would not necessarily come to your attention. I think that is all. That is all.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Who were the attorneys who recommended the appointment of a receiver in the Heckman & Hansen case?—A. I think it was Gen. Metcalfe. I think he represented Heckman & Hansen at that hearing when the receiver was appointed.

Q. If you will, I would just like to have you explain the jurisdiction or how the jurisdiction of your superior court is divided. My point is this: Has the probate division of the superior court exclusive jurisdiction of probate matters?—A. No; it has not.

Q. Any action of a probate character can go into any other department?—A. Any other department, any branch of it.

Q. Any question about a will can be raised in any one of the three branches?—A. Well, there is really only the superior court and the supreme court and the justice of the peace court in this State. The superior courts are courts of general jurisdiction and hear all matters of probate.

Q. Well, for instance, the contest of a will which had been admitted to probate, could that be brought in the equity branch of the superior court?—A. Yes; it would ordinarily be brought there before the judge presiding in the equity department at the time.

Q. That would be in the nature of an equitable proceeding?—A. Yes.

Q. And not having to do exclusively with what we know as surrogate practice—— A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Necessarily.—A. I will state at the time the Sullivan will case was tried I was presiding in the equity department.

Q. What was the nature of that action that took so long? Was that an action to revoke the probate of the will or set aside the probate?—A. No; it came before me upon the matter of determining as to who were the heirs, the legal heirs, of John Sullivan.

Q. Sort of a probate of heirship then?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it come up in the shape of contesting the ownership of real estate in any way, or was it purely a question of ascertaining who the heirs were, just as a simple question, regardless of the property?—A. Purely a question to determine who were the heirs—the legal heirs and entitled to participate in the distribution, and at the close of the hearing I ordered a distribution of the estate.

Q. Personal estate?—A. Yes; all of the estate, real and personal.

Q. Your decision would affect the real estate as well as the personal property?—A. Yes, sir. There was very little personal property in the estate; practically all real estate.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By the Chairman:

Q. Was that proceeding by way of review of the former probate of the will?—A. No. There were certain matters that I had not passed upon; for instance, the claim of Marie Carrau, who was a claimant claiming under a nuncupative will. I didn't have anything to do with passing upon her claim. The matter that came before me was the proof of heirship and the distribution of the property.

Q. How was the probate of the nuncupative will set aside, if it was?—A. That was decided, I believe, by Judge Frater, and afterwards appealed to the supreme court, and his decision sustained.

Q. That branch of it was not in your court?—A. Well, it was all in the superior court, but not in the department at the time I was presiding.

Q. The branch over which you presided?—A. That had been decided prior to the time that I had anything to do with the case.

Q. So that the probate of the alleged will was disposed of before the case came before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no will and the question then was as to what disposition would be made of the property of the deceased?—A. Yes, the persons who were legally entitled to share in the property; that was the matter that came before me.

Q. Was it an ex parte proceeding?—A. No, it was a hearing upon full notice and participated in by all of the claimants. An order had been published, which was signed by me, directing the claimants to come in at that hearing, and at that time, and that had been after the parties had gone the second time to Ireland and had taken the depositions in the hearing the second time.

Mr. McCoy. Then there were two sets of depositions taken at different times?—A. Yes, at different times.

The Chairman. Were they on different proceedings or the same proceeding?—A. The same proceedings.

Q. What was the reason for the second set?—A. I think that some of the contesting parties made an application to have the depositions taken, and that matter came up upon notice and hearing, and I think that the application was made by the heirs not represented by the ones that I decided in favor of. They decided to take further testimony, and I think that application was opposed by Mr. Howe; anyhow, I ordered or gave them permission to take the further testimony that they desired, and they went over there and took it.

Q. There are some features of the case still pending?—A. I think not. No, I think that my decision was appealed from and settled by the supreme court—affirmed by the supreme court, and I don't think that there is anything pending at the present time. One of the heirs subsequently died—Mrs. Callahan—and her estate was subsequently probated.

Q. That would be an entirely different matter?—A. Yes.

Q. Except as her share might be involved in any pending litigation, if there were any.—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with the judge?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. The first taking of the testimony in Ireland was at the instance of the heirs represented by Mr. Howe?—A. I think, Mr. Hughes, that came up before I went into the equity department, and I——

Q. (Interrupting.) I was just going to show that. There had been some testimony taken in support of the claim of those heirs, in earlier proceedings?—A. Yes.

Q. Which testimony by stipulation was used upon the final hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. But the adverse claimants, or some of them, applied to you for an order to take testimony in their behalf, and you granted that order, and testimony was taken the second time after the case was under your jurisdiction?—A. I remember Judge Winsor was one of the parties applying for commission to take the testimony the last time before me.

Q. The case was continued for the purpose of having an opportunity to take that testimony, and it was not heard and determined until after that last testimony had been taken in Ireland?—A. That is true.

Q. There were a large number of claimants, weren't there—a great many different attorneys representing different claimants at the final hearing?—A. I still receive letters asking who are the heirs of the Sullivan estate; and during the time that the hearing was on I think that on an average there would be at least three letters a day from different parties asking information in regard to the Sullivan estate.

Q. I did not mean to call out the inquiries made by various persons who imagined they might be heirs. I had reference to those who actually appeared——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Personally or by counsel, or both, and participated in that final hearing. There were a large number of them, weren't there?—A. Well, that depends on what you would call a large number.

Q. Well, a considerable number?—A. Yes; there was a considerable number claiming——

Q. (Interrupting.) The earlier history of the case was not before you as judge?—A. No, sir.

Q. The case, in its earlier history—I mean the nuncupative will; its first probate was before Judge Tallman, I think, wasn't it?—A. I think Judge Frater decided that.

Q. Well, the first probating, which was afterwards set aside and then a hearing had finally upon whether that was a valid will—the contest of that will, that was before Judge Frater?—A. I would not dispute you as to that, because I have not any definite recollection in regard to it.

Q. And some of the proceedings where it came before the court while it was presided over by Judge Bell?—A. I don't recollect whether it did or not.

Witness excused.

GEORGE W. FOSTER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name.

A. George W. Foster.

Q. I didn't catch the last name.—A. George W. Foster.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Foster?—A. 208½ Thomas Street.

Q. In the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in the city?—A. I have lived 42 years in this city.

Q. You might be called an old settler?—A. I am a pioneer, sir, of this city.

Q. How large was the city of Seattle 42 years ago?—A. Just a sawmill village; a very small village.

Q. And have you lived in it continuously since?—A. Not exactly, sir. I have been on the Sound all the time, and the last 20 years I have been mining in Alaska—26 years, but I have a home here most always.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle continuously prior to this time?—A. Prior to this time?

Mr. HUGHES. You mean immediately prior?

The CHAIRMAN. Immediately prior to this time?

A. How long have I lived in Seattle?

Q. Yes; counting back from this time, how long have you been here actually?—A. I have been continually here, with the exception of a year or so at a time in Alaska, the last 26 years continuous—my family is here—make my home here.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Mining, sir.

Q. Any particular kind of mining—precious metals, or coal, or what?—A. It is quartz mining, sir.

Q. Are you still actively engaged in that work?—A. Yes, sir. I have got a mine in operation there at the present time.

Q. How near to Seattle?—A. It is 800 miles, or about 700 miles to where the mine is.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir; I am acquainted with him for over 30 years; personally acquainted with him and all his family; knew his mother before she died; know all of his children.

Q. To what extent have you seen the judge during the last 8 or 10 years?—A. I meet him most every time I am in Seattle. I sometimes stay here three or four months or six months. I meet him invariably on the street.

Q. Are you in any way associated with him in either business or social matters?—A. Only just a social acquaintance, sir; intimately acquainted with him, with the whole family.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicants?—A. I never knew or ever heard of that man to use any intoxicating liquor until I see it come out in this case at present. My wife, she lived there a year in his house before we was married, and she never knew of such a thing or heard of such a thing.

Q. Never mind about her, Mr. Foster. Let her tell her own story.—A. Well, that is a funny thing that you have those things come up.

Q. Have you at any time, yourself, seen the judge when he seemed to you to be under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never did. I understand they testified here that he was drunk on Decoration Day. Well, I spoke to him in his automobile there in front of the Arlington Hotel when the procession stopped there, with two children and the woman in the automobile.

Q. You mean Decoration Day of this year?—A. Of this year, sir; and he had——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you any recollection of who it was that testified to that?—A. I only read it in the paper. I only came in here after that remark I see in the paper. That remark, I didn't like the proceedings of those things going on, to testify against an honest man like this.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Foster?

The WITNESS. The grandest thing I think I ever saw him do in his time in the court here was the time that he throwed out the Sullivan case out of court.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you a lawyer?

A. No, sir; I am not. I am just a miner and an everyday man.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any gentlemen present, Mr. Hughes, that you wish to call?

Mr. HUGHES. I suggest Mr. Powell.

The CHAIRMAN (addressing gentleman who came forward). Are you a witness?

Mr. BANTA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. We will let you get away. Step forward.

FREDERICK BANTA, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. Frederick Banta.

Q. Have you been subpœnaed, Mr. Banta?—A. What you say?

Q. Have you been subpœnaed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you subpœnaed?—A. Yesterday.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live at Bremerton.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a ship joiner.

Q. Following your trade?—A. At the present time in the employ of the Navy Department.

Q. Where do you work, at the——A. (Interrupting.) At the navy yard.

Q. (Continuing.) at the navy yard there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is that from here?—A. About 15 miles, I think they call it.

Q. By water?—A. By water; yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am not.

Q. Do you know him when you see him?—A. I don't think I ever saw Judge Hanford but once and that was when he delivered the memorial address this year.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge one way or the other as to the judge's habits?—A. I have not.

Q. Where was this memorial address delivered?—A. It was delivered in the building they call the Coliseum, on Fourth Street, I believe.

Q. What time in the day was it?—A. Well, I judge it was along about 12 o'clock; in that neighborhood.

Q. Did you speak with him then?—A. I did not.

Q. Just simply heard him make the address?—A. Just simply heard him make the address.

Q. You are yourself a soldier of the Civil War?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have not any recollection, Mr. Banta, of any testimony as to the judge's condition on that day, but, to cover the question, if my recollection is not clear, I will ask you if on that occasion in your opinion the judge was to any extent under the influence of intoxicating liquor?—A. I don't think he was.

Mr. HUGHES. What is it?

A. I was not near him; I was back in the audience and he was on the platform, but I would judge from the way he conducted himself that he was sober.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. When were you summoned?—A. Yesterday.

Q. How?—A. By, I suppose, the bailiff of the court; he handed me this yesterday afternoon.

Q. Left that subpœna with you at the navy yard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is the navy yard from here?—A. Fifteen miles, they call it.

Q. This is your first day in court in answer to that subpœna?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know why you are summoned?—A. I don't.

Mr. HUGGINS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you talked with anyone about the judge's condition that day?

A. No; I have not. I will state that I stop in town—I come to Seattle every Saturday night and go back Sunday, and this subpœna is marked "Antlers Hotel, Seattle, Wash.," and then "Bremerton Navy Yard." I might have talked with somebody in the Antlers Hotel about the case, about newspaper reports and such things as that, and perhaps they might remember my conversation——

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is mere speculation.

A. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Banta, one question: Was there anything in Judge Hanford's address that indicated that he was intoxicated, either in delivering it or in the preparation of it when he was preparing it?

A. Nothing whatever, to me.

Mr. HUGHES. It was intelligible, clear, patriotic?

A. Yes.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other gentlemen present who wish to get away? Mr. Hughes, have you anyone?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I suggest Mr. Powell. Mr. Powell and Mr. Turner were both on the committee of the bar which investigated Mr. Finch.

JOHN H. POWELL, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. John H. Powell.

Q. P-o-w-e-l-l?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Practicing lawyer.

Q. For how long?—A. Twenty years.

Q. I didn't catch that.—A. Twenty years.

Q. Mr. Powell, you were a member of a committee appointed by a local bar association to investigate certain charges concerning Mr. Jerold Finch, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, will you take the witness, or Mr. Hughes?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Hughes had better do it. I think he is more familiar with that than I am.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Powell, will you go on in your own way and tell this committee what the proceedings were before the special committee of the bar, of which you were a member, and whose report has been introduced in evidence here as exhibit No. "46," and which report is now submitted to you [handing paper to witness]?—A. Well, that was 1904. That was about eight years ago. I can remember, in a general way, about it, but of course I can't remember all the details; I would not pretend to do that. As I recall it, Mr. Finch had made some charges in Judge Hanford's court in regard to some other—against some other members of the bar—Judge Ballinger, I think, and Gen. Metcalfe and Mr. Jones—Richard Saxe Jones, and I think Mr. Reynolds, and I think Judge Hoyt, the referee in bankruptcy; may have been others. There was a meeting of the local bar of that court, called I think by Judge Hanford himself; met in the court room.

Q. The Federal court room?—A. The Federal court room; and that matter was laid before that association, and I think as a result of that meeting that this committee was appointed. I am not sure now just what form it took, but I think it was a question as to whether proceedings should be taken to disbar Mr. Finch—I think that was the exact question—for making these charges, and the committee that was appointed was Mr. Hughes—Mr. E. C. Hughes, who is here before the committee—Mr. L. C. Gilman, Mr. John Arthur, Mr. L. T. Turner, and myself. I think that was in the latter part of July, I am quite sure that it was in the latter part of July, from the papers here, 1904. We held various meetings; I don't know how many, but several. We had the matter under investigation and advisement from the time of the appointment of this committee until the early part of September, when this report was filed. I remember distinctly of several meetings of the committee at which Mr. Finch was present for the purpose of telling the committee what his charges were and what evidence, if any, he had to substain those charges, and the committee itself had procured from the court the files in these various Heckman & Hansen proceedings and we had them; went into them very fully.

Q. We had also the evidence, did we not, that had been taken before Judge Eban Smith?—A. Yes. Yes, there had been some——

Q. (Interrupting). That is, so much of it as had been transcribed?—A. There had been some investigation, I think, of these charges that

Mr. Finch had made before Judge Eban Smith, who was at that time the United States master in chancery, and we had that before us, as I recall it. Well, after we had heard everything that Mr. Finch had to say, and had gone through those papers and examined whatever he had in the way of evidence, we then had before us the other parties—I think we took them one at a time, that is my recollection of it—we had Mr. Jones and Gen. Metcalfe, Judge Ballinger, Mr. Reynolds, I think—I don't have as distinct a recollection of Mr. Reynolds, but I think we had him—and after we had found out everything we could about it that any body could tell us and derived all the information we could from every source that was available, why, we made this report that is filed here. Certainly everybody who had any evidence to offer had a full opportunity to offer it on any of the things that the committee was investigating.

Q. State to the committee how carefully and fully inquiry was made of Mr. Finch on each of the different occasions when he appeared before you to explain his charges, and upon what he based them, if anything.—A. Well, the fact is that there was more than ordinary care taken, the committee really evinced solicitude to see that Mr. Finch was given every opportunity to disclose everything that he had, if he had anything to substantiate his charges. I think there were at least three meetings of that committee at which nobody else was present except the committee and Mr. Finch, so that he would be entirely free from any embarrassment whatever to disclose everything that he had. The committee went into it just as fully as it was possible for us to do. I don't know anything more that I could say about it than that.

Q. When asked what was the evidence upon which he based any of his charges, do you remember what his testimony was before that committee?—A. It would be impossible now, Mr. Hughes, for me to remember with any degree of particularity about that. Of course there were these court records. I do remember this, however, that a great deal of—he relied a great deal upon statements that had been made to him by Mr. Hansen, or Mr. Heckman, not Mr. Hansen—Mr. Heckman; I remember that very distinctly.

Q. Do you remember whether investigation was made as to the credibility and reliability of Mr. Heckman as the source of such information?—A. Yes; there was. I don't have a very distinct recollection, though, as to what those investigations were, but I do remember that there was some investigation made of Mr. Heckman's reliability.

Q. And what was the result of it?—A. Well, it was not favorable to Mr. Heckman.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Heckman is dead?

A. I can't say as to that, and I don't know whether he was dead at that time. I never saw the man in my life to my knowledge. Of course we were not investigating Mr. Heckman at that time; we were simply trying to find out what basis there was for Mr. Finch's charges against Judge Hoyt, the referee in bankruptcy, Gen. Metcalfe, and Mr. Jones and others, to see if we could find any basis for his charges, and also to determine and recommend what action, if any, ought to be taken in regard to Mr. Finch, or against Mr. Finch in the matter.

Q. The investigation, so far as it affected Mr. Heckman, only related to what basis there was for any charges that were made?—A Yes.

Q. Or what basis in truth or fact there was in any charge?—A. That is all.

Q. Mr. Powell, who was Eben Smith?—A. Judge Eben Smith as I—I think he was master in chancery here for——

Q. (Interrupting.) Appointed by Judge Sawyer, wasn't he?—A. I can't say as to that.

Q. At least he was master in chancery from the time you came here?—A. He was that when I came here.

Q. And down to his death?—A. And down to when he died, which was about, I would say, five or six years ago.

Q. It may be of interest to this committee to know what was the standing and character of Judge Eben Smith as a lawyer and man.—A. Well, I don't think anyone stood higher in this community.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think we ought to go into that. If you attempt to establish a good reputation for him, you must do it on the inference that it needs bracing, which I think would hardly be a proper inference.

Mr. HUGHES. I do it only because of the accusations that were made in the testimony of Mr. Finch; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Every presumption is in his favor, I think, Mr. Hughes, and if you go into it with one witness you would with all, and have you the time?

Mr. HUGHES. I presume not, unless you want to know. It might widen the scope of the inquiry, really.

Q. Mr. Powell, how long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. I have known him practically ever since I came here. I came here in 1890.

Q. Testimony of witnesses has been given before the committee of his appearance and actions, walk, etc., from which those witnesses expressed the opinion that he was intoxicated. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford's peculiarities as to his manner of movement of walking and of holding his head, sitting in court or upon street cars, etc.? And if so, explain to the committee what his personal idiosyncrasies are.—A. Well, I have not had occasion to see him on the street cars very much, but of course I have observed him in other respects during the time that I have lived here, and of course there is no denying the fact that he has pronounced peculiarities. He has a pronounced peculiarity of walk; he has what you would call a broad walk and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is his step a regular one, one with which persons walking with him can keep step?—A. No; it is rather a broad, jerky walk.

Q. How about his manner of holding his body, his head, in walking?—A. Well, his head is habitually well set forward. I think that is rather a physical peculiarity of the family.

Q. Well, in sitting—you have met him both in and out of court—what is his frequent habit as to head and facial expression, and eyes, and so forth?—A. Well, Judge Hanford's face is not one that takes on very much expression, and when he is—at least it does not very often—and when he is sitting on the bench he often sits with his eyes closed for many minutes at a time and——

Q. (Interrupting). Well, on or off the bench, is his physical habit one of apparent listlessness or apparent relaxation, physically I mean?—A. Oh, yes, yes. I have often—I won't say I have often, but I have seen him on the train, for instance, whenever he would get an opportunity he would completely relax.

Q. Have you seen him close his eyes any at the court when he was sitting any length of time and nod?—A. Well, I think I have seen him sleep on the train, in a seat on the train.

Q. Did you ever see him in court sit with his eyes closed?—A. Oh, very frequently.

Q. With his head dropped forward, or back, his body apparently in a state of complete relaxation?—A. Yes; he is much more apt to sit with his head forward—that is, rather on his breast—than he is to throw it back against the back of the chair.

Q. What do you say to this committee whether at such times he has been in fact inattentive, as evidenced by the conduct of the case, rulings made, or other acts done by him judicially in the conduct of the case?—A. Well, I have never seen him when he was not paying attention, myself. I have seen him that way very often, a great many times, and whatever experience I have ever had in his court room he was paying attention to what was going on.

Q. What I want you to state is how you determined that he was paying attention when he was sitting relaxed with his eyes closed.—A. Oh, well, from time to time of course in the trial of a case or in the argument of a case it becomes necessary for the court to make rulings on matters that are coming up, or state to attorneys that he does not care to hear any further argument on this branch or that branch of the question before him, and he would do that from time to time as occasion offered, showing that he was following the drift of the argument and holding it in his mind. But I think everybody that has practiced before him has observed that same condition.

Q. You have met him at the club, have you?—A. Yes, yes.

Q. You have seen him drink intoxicants—that is, cocktails or beer or other liquors?—A. Well, I have seen Judge Hanford take drinks at the club. I never observed close enough to know whether it was beer, cocktails, whisky or what not, but I have seen him——

Q. (Interrupting). You have seen him at banquets, I suppose, too, haven't you?—A. Yes, yes, but I can't say that I remember whether he drank at the banquet or not. I don't know.

Q. You have seen a great deal of him in the last 20 years, so as to be well acquainted with his personal peculiarities, habits?—A. Yes, I think I have seen enough of him so that I know his habits and peculiarities.

Q. In the light of your personal knowledge of Judge Hanford's habits and peculiarities and idiosyncracies, state to this committee whether you have ever seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of liquor; and if so, when and where?—A. No, I never have.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that is all.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Is Judge Hanford a very nervous man, Mr. Powell?—A. No, I don't think that he is. I could not say as to that. I don't think he is abnormally nervous. I think he is about the normal man in that respect.

Q. Mr. Powell, if it were true that a referee in bankruptcy having some jurisdiction of an estate about which there was a dispute in the bankruptcy court. and about which there was also some dispute in the State court, should be the attorney for the receiver in the State court, or the bonding company on the receiver's bond in the State court, the controversy in both courts being pretty active and serious charges being made, what would you say of his conduct in occupying that dual position?—A. Well, I would not say anything unless I knew a great deal more about the facts than is implied in that question because——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is, you think that——A. (Continuing.) I would have to know more about it than that.

Q. You think that the old saying that a man can not serve two masters is a thing that an attorney can take a risk about?—A. No; not at all.

Q. Well, then, explain what you mean——A. Not at all.

Q. (Continuing.) As to wanting to know what the other circumstances were?—A. Well, it would not be necessary—it would not necessarily follow that his being a referee in bankruptcy would conflict with the fact that his firm was attorney, or he himself was attorney, for the bonding company that was on the receiver's bond. There might not be any controversy at all.

Q. That referee, we will assume, having closed an estate and recommended that the trustee be discharged, and there being a claim in the bankruptcy court that that was a wrongful thing to do, or, at any rate, that the estate ought to be reopened, so that the trustee in bankruptcy could claim assets from the receiver in the State court for whom this referee was attorney, would you say that there was anything reprehensible in his still continuing to act as attorney for that receiver?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. McCoy, you have spoken of a referee. Haven't you meant receiver?

Mr. MCCOY. No; I am talking about somebody, I think his name was Hoyt, who was a referee in bankruptcy, and who, I believe, is said to have been attorney for the——

Mr. HUGHES. I thought you were confused about it. Mr. Reynolds was attorney for the receiver, and some testimony has been given that he was attorney for the bonding company which was surety upon the receiver's bond.

Mr. MCCOY. Is Mr. Finch in court?

Mr. HUGHES. I don't recall anything of that kind about Mr. Hoyt. I think you are laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. MCCOY. There is some charge made by Mr. Finch that the referee in bankruptcy was acting in a dual capacity. You may be right about the particulars, but that charge is here.

Mr. HIGGINS. You have got the evidence of Mr. Finch in the court room, haven't you, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, it has not been brought in this morning, and I did not bring my yesterday's copy up.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I will ask my question in this way, and then we will ask the witness to come back if it is necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. We can find out what the record shows. The reason I interrupted—pardon me, I didn't mean to interrupt for any other reason than I thought you were confused, because I know he made the charge against Mr. Reynolds that he acted in a dual capacity, and I thought you had reference to that.

Mr. McCoy. I know he made that charge, but my recollection was that he did the other thing. Of course, I don't want to go off on an incorrect hypothetical question.

Mr. Dorr. My recollection is, Mr. McCoy, that he involved Judge Hoyt in that charge.

The Witness. I think you are correct about that, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. Well, now, then, assuming I am correct in my supposition, do you think that there is anything reprehensible in a referee in bankruptcy taking any such stand in a matter as that?

A. Now, there has been so much interruption I have forgotten the first part of the question, I believe.

Question read.

A. (Continuing.) I think you mean there, do you not, that the referee is attorney not for the receiver in the State court but for the bonding company that was on the receiver's bond in the State court?

Q. Either the receiver or the bonding company while on his bond.—A. Well, I think it would present very different aspects whichever way it was.

Q. That is, you think—now, just let me understand you—do you think it would make a difference whether he represented the receiver or the bonding company?—A. Oh, yes; I think it would.

Q. And why; what difference would it make?—A. The bonding company has only got to answer for the fact that he will turn over the property to whoever is legally entitled to it. That is all.

Q. In other words, the bonding company has to be responsible for the receiver's default?—A. Yes; it is not a question—there is no interest to the bonding company who is entitled to the property, whether the receiver would have to turn it over to the trustee in bankruptcy or not.

Q. Just answer my question. We understand each other. The bonding company on the receiver's bond is responsible for the receiver's default, if any, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the receiver responsible for except for his default?—A. Well, I don't think he is responsible for anything.

Q. That is———A. (Continuing). Except to obey the orders of the court.

Q. Yes; and if he does not obey the orders of the court, to the financial loss of anybody in the situation, then he is responsible financially, isn't he, for what the loss is?—A. Yes.

Q. And the bonding company is in exactly the same position, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Very well. Now, then, if a claim is made in the bankruptcy court for a reopening of the case so that the trustee may proceed against the receiver, what is the difference whether the referee is attorney for the receiver or for the bonding company?—A. If he is attorney for the receiver, then he has to contest the question, or confess it, as to whether he as receiver ought to turn that property over to the trustee. He would have to try that question out in court. He could not try it on one side as referee and try it on the other side as receiver, but if he is only bondsman for the receiver he is only interested in knowing that when the order is made after determination of that question, that the receiver will obey that order and turn the property over to the man that the court says is entitled to it. That is the difference.

Q. Let us suppose that the trustee in bankruptcy establishes the fact that the receiver has received a certain amount of money or property and the receiver is ordered to turn it over and he fails to do it, who is responsible under those circumstances, and what is the responsibility?—A. If an order has been made by a court of competent jurisdiction, directing that receiver to turn it over to the trustee, and he does not do it, then he is liable on his bond and his bondsman is liable for his failure to do it.

Q. So that you think that a referee in bankruptcy who has attempted to occupy this dual position can decide, in advance, that perhaps the receiver will not be in default, and therefore if he is merely the attorney for the bonding company he can take a chance on that situation?—A. Well, I think that situation could exist. Of course, Mr. McCoy, I am not yet informed—and when I say that I say it in good faith, because I have not any idea at all—what it was that the bonding company needed an attorney for.

Q. Well, I don't care what they needed him for; I am putting a hypothetical question and getting your views about the situation.—A. I will be very glad to give them.

Q. Now, do you think that there is anything reprehensible in an attorney acting for two parties having adverse interests?—A. Oh, why, certainly there is. That goes without saying.

Q. If you had discovered in the course of your proceeding in regard to Mr. Finch, that after the receiver in the State court had been discharged, and if the facts were that the court discharging him had not allowed him anything for his fees for services as receiver, but that the Scandinavian-American Bank, which had been accused of a conspiracy openly in this matter, had paid the receiver some $2,000, or whatever the sum may be, for his services, would you have said that Mr. Finch had no prima facie case for charging a conspiracy?—A. Well, I can't tell you now what we would have done then if we had found those facts. I don't think they——

Q. (Interrupting.) I ask you what you would do this minute if you ascertained this to be the fact and you were now investigating Mr. Finch what would your advice be as to his having a prima facie case on which to base his charges?—A. Against whom?

Q. Against the Scandinavian-American Bank, or anybody else.—A. Well, if those were the bare facts, and that was all, I suppose he would have a right to complain of somebody.

Q. Suppose that an attorney who has been retained by one man subsequently receives the sum of or a check for $150 from somebody who was opposed to that man, and in making an explanation of what the money was for states that it was for the relief of the client whom I have first mentioned, who is said to have been in distress, and if upon the check appears the memorandum "Heckman & Hansen," or whatever you please, "John Smith, in settlement," and if it further appears that he kept that check, which he claimed was a contribution for the relief of a needy man, alleged to be in serious need, for a year and a half, would you say that a man who made the charge of the check having been received for some other purpose had no prima facie reason for making that charge, the man for whose relief the check was intended being in existence and right in the same city with the attorney who received it?—A. Prima facie evidence for making what charge?

Q. Making a charge that the attorney who received the check was acting for the opponent of the man for whom he was retained, the man for whom he was originally retained being the man who was alleged to be in need.—A. Well, I think that that would be enough to excite his suspicions, perhaps, and whether he would have prima facie grounds for making a charge would depend on whether or not he knew of any explanatory circumstances. It would depend upon what the real facts of it were, of course.

Q. I am assuming that that was in the case, that he would have some ground to——A. (Interrupting.) If that was all there was to it, of course he would have grounds to suspect.

Q. If an attorney who had been acting for certain clients subsequently acts for an opponent of those clients, and in a proceeding for the opponents—a legal proceeding, a suit—garnishees funds of his first client, the existence of wnich he could not have known except by virtue of his retainer for the first client, what have you to say to the right, prima facie, to make a charge against that attorney of unprofessional conduct?—A. Well, I don't think that would be proper conduct.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. Did you find these facts to exist which Mr. McCoy has submitted in his hypothetical question in the investigation that you made?—A. Mr. Higgins, it would be absolutely impossible for me now, at the end of eight years, to remember what we found the evidence to be or what we found it not to be. There was a great mass of it there—this whole Heckman & Hansen business—which we went through from beginning to end.

Q. Did you have the record of the 800 pages of the testimonv taken in the Heckman & Hansen case before your committee?—A. Well, I can't recall that we had any particular number of pages, but I think we had—I am quite sure we had everything before us that there was in that proceeding.

Q. That is, the evidence taken before the referee?—A. Before Judge Eben Smith?

Q. Yes.—A. I think we had that.

Q. How much time, approximately, did you spend in the investigation of the charges?—A. Well——

Q. (Continuing.) In hours or days?—A. That would be impossible for me to state. We had quite a number of meetings. I should say the whole committee met six or eight sessions with witnesses before it; and then, of course, going through this record, we would do that largely ourselves.

Q. Are you able to tell this committee how many witnesses appeared before your investigating committee?—A. I could not do that either with accuracy. I can remember some of them, but whether there were others or not I don't know. I remember Mr. Finch, Gen. Metcalfe, Mr. Jones, Judge Ballinger, Mr. Reynolds. I can't say whether there were any others or not.

Q. Is there any other record of your action other than the report which you submitted to the bar association after you had concluded that investigation?—A. I am quite sure there is not.

Q. Let's see, that was to the Seattle Bar Association or to the King County Bar Association?—A. Well, I could not answer that without looking at it.

Mr. McCoy. It was to Judge Hanford, wasn't it—exhibit whatever the number is [handing paper to witness]?

A. Yes; it is addressed to Judge Hanford. I suppose that was for the reason that the bar meeting was called at his request. I think the committee was appointed by Roger S. Greene.

Mr. Higgins. Well, in the investigation which you made did your committee attempt to go into the issues raised in the Heckman & Hansen case and pass on them before reaching a conclusion?

A. No; only sufficiently to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Determine whether there was bad faith or not, or good faith——A. (Continuing.) To determine what ground there was for these charges of unprofessional conduct that Mr. Finch had made against these parties. We did not attempt to try the Heckman & Hansen case, nor to arrive at any determination as to the merits of that case.

Q. Did Mr. Finch make any complaint to your committee, or has he at any time, that he was not given full opportunity to present the charges?—A. I am quite sure not. I have no recollection of any such complaint, and I am certain that if he had wanted any more time he would have had it.

Q. Do you recall how long after you had heard the witnesses before you made the report?—A. No; I could not remember that now, Mr. Higgins. It is impossible.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Did you or any member of your committee, so far as you know, read this six or eight hundred pages of testimony before Judge Smith?—A. I certainly did not myself and I don't suppose that any other member of the committee did. It was simply there to be used as far as Mr. Finch or any other persons there thought it would be material to the inquiry.

Q. Now, in connection with your hearings, you had before you some of the parties who were accused by Mr. Finch—some of the attorneys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Finch notified that they were to come before your committee, and was he given an opportunity to be there and hear what they had to say and to suggest questions which you might ask them on cross-examination, or whatever you would call it?—A. I have no independent recollection of that, but I think I would be safe in saying that that was not the case.

Mr. McCoy. Will you let me see the report, please, and I would like to see the resolution under which the committee was appointed?

Mr. Hughes. You have it there [handing paper to Mr. McCoy].

Mr. McCoy. Thank you. I have in my hand Exhibit No. 45 and I am going to read a paragraph from it. It is quoted in the exhibit:

Resolved by this meeting of the bar of Seattle, convened by request of his honor, Judge Hanford, That after hearing the very full statement of all the matters in issue between Mr. J. L. Finch, as counsel on one side, and Richard A. Ballinger, James B. Metcalfe, Richard Saxe Jones, C. A. Reynolds, John P. Hoyt, W. A. Worden, Peter L. Larsen, Eben Smith, A. C. Bowman, and E. F. Fisher, it is the judgment of the bar that each and all of those gentlemen acted fairly in the entire proceedings involved, and are wholly free from blame, and that there is not a scintilla of evidence produced to impugn their motives, or their action, or to sustain any charges brought against them.

Were you present at the meeting at which that was adopted?

A. I think I was present at that meeting, although I would not be sure of that.

Q. Did you consider that as in the nature of instructions to your committee?—A. No; I don't think so. That is not my independent recollection of that.

Q. What do you think of it, Mr. Powell? I am going to ask you now what you think of that resolution under the circumstances?—A. Well, it would depend entirely on how full the statements made were.

Q. Well, then we will go a little further into it. After reciting that Judge Hanford called the meeting, and one or two other things:

> There was then read in the hearing of the meeting the following papers in the case above referred to, to wit, the motion of Mr. Richard A. Ballinger and others for the disbarment of Jerold L. Finch; the petition of Jerold L. Finch, in which charges of unprofessional conduct are made against Richard A. Ballinger and others; the report of Mr. Eben Smith, the United States master in chancery, to whom had been referred by your honor for investigation and findings, certain matters arising in the said cause above referred to touching the professional conduct of the said Jerold L. Finch, Richard A. Ballinger, and others; and the opinion of your honor confirming the report of the said master in chancery. After the reading of the documents above referred to and after some discussion, Mr. John Arthur moved the following resolution:

Then follows what I read a few minutes ago.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I ask your opinion, as a man and a lawyer, what you think of the resolution that was adopted after what is recited to have taken place at that meeting?—A. I don't see anything wrong with it.

Q. Now——A. (Interrupting.) I am quite sure after your reading that to me that I could not have been present there. I don't remember any of that; I don't recall any of that.

Q. I am asking your opinion, regardless of where you were. I ask it of you now. You see nothing in it that——A. (Interrupting.) I don't see anything wrong with that.

Q. Yes. Now, I notice in Exhibit No. 46, which is the report of your committee, paragraph 4—I will read it:

> From the testimony before us we think that certain remarks made by your honor at the time Mr. Finch applied for an order requiring the Scandinavian-American Bank to produce its books may have induced the belief in Mr. Finch's mind that having taken the order he was then compelled either to maintain his charges or himself suffer disbarment. If such a belief existed in Mr. Finch's mind, which we think probable, it may afford some palliation of his conduct in further prosecuting the matter after the close of the hearing before the master. It would indeed be an unfortunate rule that a member of the bar preferring charges against other members must fully establish them on pain of disbarment, and we do not think that your honor intended to announce any such rule.

Well, I will read it all.

> If the charges made by Mr. Finch had been supported by any reasonable proof, or if the facts before him had after a proper investigation by him justified him in believing that they could be proved, it would have been his duty to promptly lay the matter before the district attorney. The persistency and ability which he has manifested in attempting to establish these charges would have been in that event as commendable as their misuse now is censurable.

Now, you say here, referring to some alleged statement of Judge Hanford that Mr. Finch would be disbarred if he did not prove these charges against these other attorneys "and we do not think that your honor intended to announce any such rule." Now, I call your attention to this resolution, Exhibit No. 45, and quote:

The report of Mr. Eben Smith, the United States master in chancery, to whom had been referred by your honor for investigation and findings certain matters arising in the said cause above referred to touching the professional conduct of the said Jerold L. Finch.

And then follows the other names. Now, it was obvious, wasn't it, to the lawyers who passed this resolution that his honor, Judge Hanford, did intend just exactly what you say Mr. Finch may well have supposed that he intended, namely, that he was under investigation?

A. I don't know that I get your point, but I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, I will make it again —A. All right.

Q. (Continuing). If I can. Referring to the alleged remarks of Judge Hanford——A. Yes

Q (Continuing.) That if he did not prove the charges against Ballinger and others that he himself would be disbarred, you say:

It would be indeed an unfortunate rule that a member of the bar preferring charges against other members must fully establish them on pain of disbarment——

A. Yes.

Q (Continuing:)

And we do not think that your honor intended to announce any such rule.

Here the report of the meeting called by Judge Ballinger says that the matter referred to Eben Smith was the professional conduct of Jerry L. Finch.

Mr. HIGGINS Called by Judge Hanford, you mean.

Mr McCOY. What did I say?

Mr. HIGGINS Judge Ballinger.

Mr. McCOY. Correct it Judge Hanford, I meant.

A. That is the thing that this committee, of which I was a member, was to investigate——

Q. I know.—A. (Continuing) Was Mr. Finch's conduct.

Q. I know it was that that you were supposed to investigate, but when you did investigate and made your report you said that the judge did not intend to announce that if Mr. Finch did not make good he would be disbarred himself; that is what you say in your report, isn't it?—A. No; we didn't say that.

Q. Well, read it.—A. We say we don't think he intends to announce any such rule.

Q. Oh Well, then, you are differing with me on the question of whether he intended to announce any such rule or not.—A. Oh, no; here is what it means, Mr. McCoy—I was present in court when Mr. Finch got that order, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) No; I want to know——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). I think the witness ought to be allowed to state.

Mr. McCOY. If you will just let him answer my question, then he can explain anything he wants to on your questioning. I want to know what that means in that report that you filed.

A. Well, this is what it means——

Q. (Interrupting.) What does it mean?—A. That we did not think that Judge Hanford intended, by what he said to Mr. Finch at the time, to announce the rule that a man—that an attorney at the bar could not make charges against another attorney at the bar except upon pain of either substantiating those charges or being disbarred.

Q. Well, now, he did say to Mr. Finch that if he did not substantiate the charges he would be disbarred, didn't he?—A. He did in this particular instance.

Q. Very well. Then what you mean is that he said there was no such rule—or didn't intend to announce any such rule—but he intended Mr. Finch should be disbarred in accordance with such rule?—A. I don't know what he intended, but that is what he said, and what we are making clear is that we did not suppose he was going to announce any such rule of conduct for the bar.

Q. Mr. Finch didn't suppose that there was any such rule, but he supposed that he was going to have that particular thing done to him, from the statement that was made, that was all.—A. Well, that accounts for that; he was not disbarred.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Your answers make the impression on me, Mr. Powell, that he was going to apply a rule to Finch which he would not apply to anyone else.—A. No. That is not what I mean.

Q. Is not his case exceptional?—A. That is not what I mean. Judge Hanford had stated that he would give Mr. Finch this order upon Mr. Finch saying that if he got that order that he would produce evidence that would be sufficient to disbar these other gentlemen. Judge Hanford stated to him at the time when he granted him the order, in substance that if he did not make good those charges he would disbar him. Now, what reasons there were in Judge Hanford's mind, what had gone before in the matter that would lead him to believe that Mr. Finch's charges were malicious or reckless, I do not know; but what we were saying there was that we did not suppose that the court was announcing a general rule that a man c uld not make charges against another man—another member of the bar.

Q. But you do not make any objection to his announcement of that measure by which to adjudge Finch, do you?—A. I didn't know anything about that.

Q. You practically say, or at least you leave it to be inferred, that you conveyed to the court the idea "You can do what you please with Finch, but we don't want you to adopt such a rule as that to be applied generally."—A. No; we say in the report there that in our judgment Mr. Finch's charges were not made maliciously and——

Q. But you don't——A. (Continuing.) And we don't say that he ought to be an exception to the rule, that a man can't make charges against another lawyer before the court without subjecting himself to the pain of disbarment if he does not substantiate them.

Q. Was it your purpose in your report to say to the judge, in the quietest possible way, "We think you made a mistake"?—A. Perhaps so.

Q. Sir?—A. Perhaps so.

Q. Well, can you put it stronger than that?—A. Well, personally, my own conviction about the matter was that it was unfortunate that he had attached that condition to the order which he granted.

Q. Why didn't you say so? Why didn't you speak out and say it, that "Your honor is wrong," that that rule was an intolerable rule and could not be put up with by the bar?—A. I think he so understood it.

Q. Well, it is not in the language you used, is it, anywhere?—A. I think that is plain enough to anyone who does not have to be hit with a club.

Q. Will you point out the language in it that makes it so plain?—A. That last paragraph:

From the testimony before us, we think that certain remarks made by your honor at the time Mr. Finch applied for an order requiring the Scandinavian-American Bank to produce its books may have produced the belief in Mr. Finch's mind that having taken the order he was then compelled either to maintain his charges or himself suffer disbarment. If such a belief existed in Mr. Finch's mind, which we think probable, it may afford some palliation of his conduct in further prosecuting the matter after the close of the hearing before the master. It would indeed be an unfortunate rule that a member of the bar preferring charges against other members must fully establish them on pain of disbarment, and we do not think that your honor intended to announce any such rule. If the charges made by Mr. Finch had been supported by any reasonable proof, or if the facts before him had after a proper investigation by him justified him in believing—

Well, what I have read is the language I have quoted. I think that——

Q. (Interrupting.) I must have been hit with the club, Mr. Powell, because the impression the reading of that makes upon my mind, and the fair inference to be drawn from it as I see it, is this: That a rule is a condition laid down to be of general application; that things which do not come within the rule are known as exceptions to it. The bar in this report spoke of the rule, that is, the standard that was to be of general application, but they nowhere seem to criticize the particular exception which was applied to Finch here, and the inference to be drawn is, it seems to me, "We do not agree with the ruling you have made in the Finch case; of that we have nothing to say, but we do not want that to be established as a general rule or as a rule."—A. Well, of course it is all a construction of the language used there I have not any right to put any construction on it other than what it actually says in black and white, because I am only one member of the committee. I——

Q. (Interrupting.) You also state that——A. (Interrupting.) I have my own ideas of what it means.

Q. You also state that Finch was justified in believing that the judge meant just what he said, that if he failed to secure the disbarment of the gentlemen named he would himself be disbarred?—A. Yes; I think that is a fair inference from the language.

Q. Of course you would be compelled to admit that that language was not only false in principle but extremely unjudicial?—A. I think it was unfortunate that it was used.

Q. Do you agree with the characterization which I have given it?—A. Repeat that.

Q. That it was false and unjudicial?

Question read, as follows:

Of course you would be compelled to admit that that language was not only false in principle but extremely unjudicial?

A. No; I would not agree with that, because I am not——

Q. (Interrupting.) You do not agree with it?—A. (Continuing.) I am not sufficiently apprised of what had taken place between the court and counsel prior to the time.

Q. I am not talking of that, but the announcement by the court as to what he would do; and I assert of it that his announcement that if Mr. Finch failed to convict the gentlemen named he would be himself disbarred is an absolutely false principle, is it not, and would it not result in deterring anybody under any case from making such a charge?—A. Well, in its general application it is not the correct principle.

Q. And the language which he used was unjudicial, was it not?—A. That would depend, of course, as to whether this particular case was one which would take it out of that general rule.

Q. It was the announcement of a rule which you condemn, yourself. How could he make that announcement judicially?—A. It is not an announcement of a principle.

Q. What was it?—A. The court may have thought—Judge Hanford may have thought, and I presume he did—this matter had been before him a great many times, that these charges made by Mr. Finch were malicious and reckless. If he did, I would not say that it would be——

Q. (Interrupting.) He does not give any intimation of that——A. (Interrupting.) Well, I don't know. You see, I don't know.

Q. You are merely seeking for some extenuation of the language used when you say that?—A. Exactly.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. How many times had this matter been before Judge Hanford when this remark was made?—A. I don't know, I say. It probably was, or I presume it was; I don't know how many times.

Q. The evidence is nothing of the kind.—A. Well, I don't know. I don't pretend to know.

Q. I will state what the evidence is to you, as I recollect it, and I ask Mr. Hughes to correct me if I am wrong about it. Mr. Finch, representing one at least of the bankrupts, applied to the court for an order opening a case in bankruptcy which had been closed, and made certain statements to the judge about certain attorneys at that time, I guess the second—it was the second time it had been before him; he got an order of reference to Judge Smith on those statements, and when they were before Judge Smith there was some question about the production of books, he could not get the production of books, and that it was when he came back to get an order from the court that these books would be produced in some way or other, that this matter took place in court. Now, then, those are the two occasions, as I recollect the testimony, when the matter had been before him previously. Now, what could there have been——A. (Interrupting.) I don't know.

Q. Well, now, let's assume that there was not anything previously happening that was in Judge Hanford's mind and that the only thing before him was the statement of Mr. Finch that if he could get those books he would produce evidence to disbar these other lawyers; assume that for the sake of the question. Now, what do you say about his conduct being judicial or unjudicial?—A. I think that would be erroneous.

Q. Well, that is not the point. It was clearly erroneous, you have admitted that. Was it judicial or unjudicial; was his demeanor judicial or unjudicial?—A. Well, of course, you mean one that is proper conduct for a judge to engage in?

Q. Yes.—A. Of course, it was a judicial act.
Q. Yes.—A. Well, no; I don't think it was.
Q. You think it was improper?—A. Yes, if there was nothing more than what you say.

At this time an adjournment was taken until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

FRANK A. PAUL, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.
A. Frank A. Paul.
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Paul?—A. 403 Terry Avenue.
Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Two years and over.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Attorney.
Q. When were you subpœnaed, Mr. Paul?—A. This morning.
Q. Have you practiced your profession elsewhere than at Seattle?—A. No, sir.
Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Not personally.
Q. Do you know him?—A. Yes.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. Two years.
Q. What has your opportunity been to observe the judge since you have lived here?—A. Well, I have argued a number of motions before him in the district and circuit courts.
Q. Have you had any other work in his court than the argument of motions?—A. Well, I have assisted in the trial of cases, but I never tried one alone so far.
Q. What opportunity had you to observe the judge elsewhere than during the time he was holding court?—A. I have seen him on the streets frequently.
Q. Anywhere else?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any social affiliations with him, in clubs or otherwise?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you noticed any peculiarity in the judge's appearance and demeanor when holding court?—A. Well, it has seemed to me that he was not paying close attention to the testimony and the argument.
Q. What was he doing?—A. He was writing or looking around the room, or dozing.
Q. To what extent did that dozing go, as you saw it?—A. Well, I would only see him from time to time. I was not regularly in the court room, but sometimes he would doze 5 minutes, and sometimes 10 or 15 minutes at a stretch, it seemed to me.
Q. Was there any occasion that came under your observation when you had any proof as to whether he was dozing or not?—A. Well, I could not say that it amounted to proof. I argued a matter at a hearing in June, 1911, in which he seemed to be ignoring both sides—seemed to be tired or preoccupied.
Q. What made you reach that conclusion—give us the facts as you saw them as well as you can.—A. Well, they are not very distinct in my mind now, except that it was a hearing coming before the judge after the master in chancery had passed on a matter and made a report. It was heard on the objections to the report of the master. The case was entitled the Title Guaranty & Surety Co. against the Seattle School District No. 1, in which there were several labor claimants who had claims for overcharges. It rather seemed to me, although I do not like to make it more definite, that the judge was not paying close attention to the objections and to the versions of the statements of facts that were given in the argument. Several times objections were made to the report of what had actually taken place at the hearing before the master and the objections were not passed on by the judge—he did not seem to hear them.

Q. What was done—did you continue the argument?—A. Well, my argument was a short one—I just finished and then sat around and listened while the other attorneys were arguing—it was finished.

Q. Was the business suspended at all?—A. No.

Q. During the proceeding?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what impression did the circumstance create on your mind as to whether or not the judge was cognizant of what was going on?—A. I do not feel that he could be cognizant fully of the entire facts.

Q. With reference to sleeping, what was his condition?—A. He dozed occasionally during that hearing. I don't think he was sound asleep, but I think he did doze.

Q. What time of day was it?—A. This was in the morning about 11 o'clock—from 10.30 to 12 o'clock.

Q. How long did the hearing continue?—A. The better part of the morning.

Q. Did it continue into the afternoon at all?—A. I don't think so.

Q. On any other occasion when you were either actively engaged in court or in court at all, and you observed anything of that character, tell it to us.—A. Well, I have frequently argued motions Monday mornings in the district court, and it seemed to me that the judge was dozing during the motion calendar.

Q. Could you describe, for the benefit of the committee, about what his attitude was and what the circumstances were which led you to come to that conclusion?—A. Well, I have a habit of watching the judge carefully during the hearing, that is all, and I watch any judge—he seemed to be writing—he may have been writing letters or making notes, I could not say from the jury box where I was sitting; but when he was not writing he never seemed to be regarding counsel; he never seemed to be looking at them, and so far as you could judge by eyesight, never seemed to hear them.

Q. Did anything occur which led you to conclude that he was listening—was there any question or objection on those other occasions than the first?—A. Well, I have heard objections and corrections of counsel repeated several times, so that they would catch the attention of the judge.

Q. Did they?—A. They did; when repeated a second or third time they would sometimes catch the attention of the judge.

Q. Have you during any of the trials before him noticed anything of that sort?—A. No; I don't think I have during a trial.

Q. If at any time you have seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicants, you may tell us of it.—A. I never saw him drinking intoxicants.

Q. If at any time you have seen him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants, please tell it.—A. Well, in the spring of 1911, in company with Mr. Van Hurst, at the Butler Hotel, the judge walked past and it seemed to me—he walked past through the lobby—and it seemed to me that he was either sick or under the influence of liquor—I would not attempt to say which it was.

Q. What was it that led you to that conclusion?—A. He had a slow, faltering step, and as he came down the steps into the Butler Hotel he seemed to be forced to grab the railing—grab the wall in order to get down. He came down one step at the time, placing both feet on each step and moved more slowly and casually than a well man or a sober man would have to.

Q. Have you seen him often on the street at other times?—A. Yes.

Q. What difference was there in his walk and step and appearance then and on other occasions when he seemed normal to you?—A. Well, I did not observe him very closely, but he seemed to walk more briskly than he did on the day I saw him at the Butler Hotel; he carried his head a little higher.

Q. From what you observed of him then at the Butler Hotel, what was your opinion then and what is your opinion now as to his condition?—A. Well, my opinion is that, anyone other than a Federal judge acting that way, I would have regarded as intoxicated—I would hesitate to apply it to Judge Hanford. His actions had all the evidences of a man who was either very sick or else intoxicated—slightly intoxicated.

Q. Well, do I understand you to mean that it is your opinion that he was intoxicated, but that you do not like to say so—is that the state of your mind?—A. Well, I could not swear positively, your honor, that he was.

Q. I am asking you for your opinion?—A. Well, I can not answer that more definitely, your honor; I can not swear positively that he was or was not, but he might have been and act that way.

Q. You have stated that if he was not a Federal judge your opinion would be he was intoxicated.—A. Well, that does not color my estimate of his actions, but I mean that I think the chances are less that the Federal judge would be intoxicated than anyone else.

Q. That you get from reasoning?—A. Certainly.

Q. But I want to know what you get from observation.—A. From observation solely, I should judge that he had been drinking—solely from observation.

Q. To what extent—to the extent of intoxication?—A. Well, you may say incipient intoxication.

Q. Have you seen him on any other occasion than that when you thought he was under the influence of some intoxicant?—A. I saw him about the same time on Cherry Street between First and Second Avenues when he walked very hesitatingly and might have been intoxicated.

Q. What hour of the day was it when you first saw him?—A. I only saw him once; he passed me as I was coming out of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Q. I mean the occasion when you saw him at the hotel; was it the daytime or the nighttime?—A. Well, it was about half past 5 or 6 in the afternoon.

Q. And on the second occasion, can you tell the committee when you saw him on Cherry Street what hour of the day or night it was.—A. That was about the same time on another day.

Q. Was he alone on both those occasions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you saw him at the hotel when you were in company with some one, did his condition cause any comment between you and your associate?—A. Well, it might be——

Q. I don't ask you what you said, but did you talk about his condition?—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether or not the man that was with you observed it?—A. Well, I could not say. We were busily engaged in conversation, and he was a Tacoma man, and I do not know whether he recognized the judge or not. If he recognized him he would have remembered the circumstance, probably.

Q. On the occasion when you saw him on the street, were you alone or with some one?—A. Well, I do not recall that I was with anyone.

Q. Where is Cherry Street?—A. That is the first east-and-west street north of James Street.

Q. How far from this building?—A. About seven blocks; it runs parallel to Union Street.

Q. In a southerly direction?—A. It is south of here; it intersects Third Avenue about seven blocks from here.

Q. Is it a thickly built-up portion of the city?—A. Yes.

Q. What direction was the judge walking in?—A. Well, he was walking from the west to the east—from Second Avenue to First Avenue.

Q. What was the nature of the ground with reference to being level or otherwise?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not like to interrupt you, but the witness is making an inadvertent statement. He said he was walking from the west to the east from Second to First Avenue. The latter part of his answer would be in conflict with the first, I think.

The WITNESS. Walking from east to west—pardon me—from east to west, and there is a slight grade from Second Avenue down to First Avenue—not a noticeable grade.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anything in the character of the ground over which he was walking to account for the unsteadiness of his gait?

A. Well, there might have been?

Q. What?—A. Well, the grade is—a man who is not in perfect health and perfectly stable on his feet might possibly be embarrassed by the grade, although it is a very slight grade. I think you can give the judge the benefit of the doubt, in other words.

Q. Well, you are telling of it.—A. Well, he stopped several times, and it seems to me that unless a man had been drinking he would not walk in that way.

Q. Well, it is your opinion that at that time, Mr. Paul, he was under the influence of some intoxicant, and more or less intoxicated?—A. Well, rather less than more; yes, sir.

Q. Enough to make his gait unsteady?—A. Well, that would account for his gait; yes, sir.

Q. Have you on any other occasions seen him when you thought he was to any extent under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any personal feeling of any kind in the matter?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. What is your age, Mr. Paul?

A. Twenty-six.

Q. How long have you been practicing?—A. Two years.

Q. You have been a member of the bar two years?—A. Yes.

Q. What firm are you connected with?—A. Hastings & Stedman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, do you wish to ask any questions of the witness further?

Mr. HUGHES. You spoke of being in court on motion days—were there many attorneys in court at the same time?

A. Always quite a few.

Q. Were there many motions disposed of at the times when you spoke of his being apparently dozing or nodding?—A. Yes, sir; there were from six to——

Q. Did he dispose of the motions by ruling upon them at the conclusion of the arguments?—A. I think so; not always the way I approved of, but he seemed to dispose of them all.

Q. You think sometimes that your knowledge of the law was superior to the judge's, did you?—A. I should not say that, Mr. Hughes.

Q. But he decided against you sometimes?—A. Well, against the firms that I was working for, and frequently in my favor.

Q. Against your motion—your argument?—A. Yes.

Q. Did that have anything to do with your thinking he was not paying full attention?—A. Oh, no.

Q. As a matter of fact, he ruled immediately upon the conclusion of the argument, and ruled clearly, so that the attorney could know exactly what was decided and make his record accordingly.—A. Well, he did not rule immediately, Mr. Hughes; sometimes there would be quite a little time elapsing.

Q. No more time than would indicate that he was reflecting upon the matter —A. It might be that.

Q. But when he ruled he ruled clearly and showed a comprehension of the questions which had been presented to him by his ruling, didn't he?—A. I don't think you can say that. He would either overrule or sustain the demurrer without passing on a number of the different points that had been raised during the course of the argument. He would not deliver any oral opinion, but he would simply decide it one way or the other.

Q. That is a very common th ng of the courts in all the courts.—A. Yes, sir, certainly; but I mean you could not judge from his decision whether he heard the whole of the argument or not.

Mr. MCCOY. Is it not the habit for Judge Hanford to rule up sharply, decisively and incisively, and instantaneously on the finishing of the argument?

A. Not always; sometimes he rules so quickly that it will take your breath away, and I think most of the time he is very firm, but there are times when he seems to be gathering his thoughts together after the motion is over—after the argument is over.

Q. Now, you have stated that he ruled occasionally in the way that you did not approve of; did you mean by that that you disagreed with him on the legal conclusion and the soundness of his conclusion?—A. No, I would not assume to do that.

Q. Well, what was it that you did mean?—A. Well, I meant that it seemed to me—it seemed to my immature mind alongside of his mature mind that he had not listened to all the points that had been made on both sides. That was not true in my motions, except only one or two instances it seemed to be true, usually that in my humble opinion, that he was simply deciding the thing arbitrarily after it was over according to his best lights at the time perhaps, but not with reference to that particular argument; I think he missed the points that had been made during the arguments.

Q. You do not think your mind is so immature that you can not comprehend what is going on?—A. No; I mean that I do not like to sit in judgment on a matter of that kind after such a short period of practice; but I have felt that way and other attorneys have felt the same way and have spoken to me about it, that he was not endeavoring to follow the arguments closely; that was all.

Mr. HUGHES. So far as you know, the man in whose favor he decided thought he decided correctly?

A. No, I would not say that. I think that some of them felt that they had received a rather lucky decision, Mr. Hughes.

Witness excused.

J. C. ZONIG, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. J. C. Zonig.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live in Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I have lived here continuously since 1896.

Q. Are you in any business or profession?—A. I am at the present time doing a little brokerage business—in the real estate business.

Q. And have you been in any other business while you lived here?—A. I used to be in the manufacturing tobacco business and manufacturing of cigars.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known Judge Hanford since 1888, by sight.

Q. Have you any other than a sight acquaintance?—A. Only in a business manner.

Q. In what way, Mr. Zonig?—A. Why, I had at one time a suit in his court over which he presided.

Q. Were you plaintiff or defendant?—A. I were defending.

Q. How was the suit determined—in your favor or against you?—A. Against me.

Q. Did it involve very much money or property?—A. To my recollection it involved then, about as near as I can get at it, about $600.

Q. Was it a trial before a jury or before the court without a jury?—A. The jury was waived; it was before the court.

Q. Apart from seeing him on that occasion, have you had any other occasion or opportunity to see him while holding court?—A. Yes; I saw Judge Hanford occasionally.

Q. Under what circumstances; what would you be doing in the court?—A. This was out of court, I thought you said.

Q. My question, I think, was whether at any time than during the trial of a case you had a chance to see him in court?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you have had an opportunity to see him elsewhere than in the court, please tell us what it was and where it was?—A. I saw Judge Hanford very frequently.

Q. Where?—A. On the street. I met him a few years ago—I think it is just about two years ago—at the Savoy bar.

Q. Have you ever seen him during the nighttime in the city; and if so, please tell us of that?—A. At nighttime?

Q. Yes; or not at the nighttime?—A. Yes; I have gone out on the Broadway line and I have seen Judge Hanford on the car.

Q. Frequently or seldom?—A. A number of times; yes, sir.

Q. If on any of those occasions, Mr. Zonig, Judge Hanford appeared to you to be under the influence of intoxicants, please tell the committee of it.—A. Well, I seen the judge once; that was about 8 o'clock in the evening. I was going to make a call on North Broadway, and the judge was on the car and the car was very crowded, and he was sitting next to the end seat of the car.

Q. Which end?—A. The end seat.

Q. Which end, the front or rear?—A. To the front—front.

Q. Go on.—A. And when I boarded the car there happened to be a vacant seat right in front of the judge, and I sat in that seat.

Q. Were the seats crosswise or lengthwise of the car?—A. They were crosswise.

Q. Very well. Go on.—A. I noticed—in fact, I hadn't known or I hadn't recognized the judge until after I sat down—that he was sitting right immediately in the rear of me, on account of the very bad odor of liquor, and I looked around and I seen the judge.

Q. What was he doing?—A. Why, he was—he had gone sound asleep and snored and woke himself up, and that was about where the car turned at Broadway and Pike Street, or Broadway and Union, or Broadway and Pine——

Q. What is the situation at that place—Broadway and Union—do they cross each other or is there a bend in the street—you spoke of the turn?—A. The Madrona car goes one way on Broadway and this car turns on the corner of Broadway and Pine.

Q. Very well, go on and tell what happened or what you saw.—A. (Continuing.) And after he aroused himself, why, he evidently was rather choked and he spewed all over his coat lapel.

Q. Do you mean vomiting?—A. Well, I don't know just exactly—no; I don't think that he particularly vomited, but he had a big handkerchief, and I know that he mussed himself to quite an extent, and as the car passed up on Broadway and people got off the car I moved to the opposite direction of the car—the opposite side, and as soon as there were more seats I noticed the ladies—the two ladies—there were two ladies sitting behind him, and they also moved to the opposite side of the car.

Q. Why did you move?—A. Well, it was a very bad odor.

Q. Of what?—A. Why, I should say whisky.

Q. To what extent was he noticed by others on the car on that occasion?—A. Yes, sir; there was a gentleman sitting right next to me; he was talking to me about it. It was too bad that the judge would get in such a shape as that.

Q. Do you know this man who talked to you?—A. Well, I have seen him quite frequently, but I don't remember who the gentleman was now. That is about—well, this was last fall. It was either in September or October.

Q. Which of you got off the car first?—A. The judge got off first.

Q. Did you notice—did he get off of his own accord or did some one call his attention to it?—A. No; he got off on his own account—of his own accord.

Q. Did you notice him as he went from his seat to the end of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. How did he walk?—A. Well, he was very unsteady; very much so; and the conductor helped him off the car.

Q. Have you seen him on the car on any other occasion when you thought he was under the influence of liquor?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Have you seen him elsewhere than on the car when you thought he was more or less intoxicated?—A. No; I have not.

Q. On the occasion you speak of, when you saw him at the Savoy bar, what was he doing?—A. Why, when a friend of mine and myself walked in there he was drinking a highball.

Q. Who was with you?—A. Mr. Drysdale; he is now at Vancouver, British Columbia.

Q. You may give us his full name.—A. D. Drysdale.

Q. What was his business at that time?—A. Why, he is a promoter; he is a—he has considerable stock in the Alaska Packers' Association, and he has a number of other interests.

Q. What was the judge's condition at that time with reference to sobriety?—A. Why, I thought it was all right.

Q. Have you told us of the only occasion when you saw him that you thought he was under the influence of liquor to any great extent?—A. Well, not to any great extent. I have seen the judge one afternoon, or rather one evening, on the corner of Fourth and Madison, right in front of the Young Men's Christian Association Building, coming from the Rainier Club.

Q. Did he come right out of the Rainier Club or come from where the club is?—A. He came from that corner. I imagine that he came from the club, because, of course, I noticed him going in there very frequently; I am in that quarter considerable.

Q. On this occasion, I understand you, you did not see him coming out of the club?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Well, tell what you saw.—A. He was just a trifle unsteady; that is all. He absolutely—it was not very much noticeable in the gentleman.

Q. Were you near to him on that occasion?—A. Well, I was as close to him as I am to you.

Q. That would be about 10 or 12 feet.—A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice any odor of liquor on that occasion?—A. No; I was too far away from him.

Q. Well, what is your opinion as to whether or not he was partly intoxicated at that time?—A. I thought that he had a few more drinks than he probably ought to have had.

Q. Are you familiar with the judge and his manner of walking when he is sober?—A. Oh, yes; very much so.

Q. Was there any marked difference in his manner of walking on this occasion?—A. Yes; quite so.

Q. Than when sober?—A. Quite so.

Q. What was the difference?—A. Why, the judge, he moves about the street with a very steady step, and his step was not steady that day.

Q. What hour of the day was it?—A. It was toward the evening; toward evening.

Q. Passing on now to any other occasions than those two when you thought he was affected by drink.—A. No; I never have.

Q. Has the fact that you lost the suit in his court anything to do with your testimony?—A. Not at all.

Q. Have you any feeling against the judge?—A. Well——

Q. For any reason?—A. Well, I have no particular feelings against Judge Hanford—not Judge Hanford.

Q. You say you have no particular feeling. Now, if there is anything in your mind, let us have it, Mr. Zonig.—A. Well, I say this: That at that particular time, when this suit was pending, a party by the name of Henry Eman—I had furnished him with money and stock to run a cigar business in this town between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth on Jackson Street. After he had been in business three months Mr. Eman was doing the selling of all them goods, and he was dealing direct with the Government, and three months later he appropriated $450—between $450 and $500 of my money, and he kept out of my road—at least I could not get sight of Mr. Eman for something like two weeks, and it was about the 15th of the month when I called on Mr. Eman in his room at 2 o'clock at night and I asked for some paper and I wrote out a bill of sale, together with a power of attorney, so that I could go to work and conduct that business that Mr. Eman had given bond to the Government for, and after I had run that business for about three months in that way, furnishing the report to the internal revenue department every month—it never had been questioned—but about the latter part of that year—that was in 1899—I was arrested, and it was held that I was manufacturing without first giving bond to the United States Government. I showed the collector this bill of sale from Mr. Eman, together with the power of attorney, which was one instrument; hence this suit in which the judge held that I had violated the internal-revenue law.

Q. And you thought you had not?—A. I pleaded not guilty. I could not see how in the world that could have been a violation there.

Q. What was the penalty imposed upon you?—A. I was fined $100; they confiscated what little property there was, and I was given three months in jail.

Q. Did you serve the time?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, taking all those things into consideration, I will ask you again are the statements you have made with reference to his condition on the street car and his condition when you saw him on the street affected by any feeling you may have as the result of this experience?—A. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Zonig, is that the suit that you have mentioned first in your testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that it involved about $600?—A. Yes.

Q. That was a criminal proceeding against you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were indicted by the grand jury, were you not?—A. I was indicted—they indicted me at Spokane, if I am not mistaken.

Q. By the grand jury there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you were brought on for trial before Judge Hanford, and you waived the jury, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you submitted your case to the court?—A. Yes.

Q. And the judge found you guilty?—A. He evidently did; yes, sir.

Q. And sentenced you, as you have stated. Now, that is the only experience you ever had in his court?—A. That is all the experience I ever had in any court; that is, in his court.

Q. In his court?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been very active in getting witnesses for this inquiry, haven't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't you taken any part in that?—A. No.

Q. Sir?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say to me that you haven't been assisting in getting evidence here?—A. Mr. Perry asked me to pass the card up; that is all; and I passed his card up.

The CHAIRMAN. You did what?

The WITNESS. I passed his card up to the committee here.

Mr. HIGGINS. What Perry is that?

A. Why, I don't know; he was here the other day.

Q. Is it A. P. Perry, that testified here the other day?—A. I think so; I think that was it.

Mr. MCCOY. Are you sure of that? Isn't it John H. Perry, the lawyer here in Seattle?

A. Well, he testified here the other day; I believe it was the day before yesterday.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean the man that testified here?

A. The man with the light suit on.

Mr. HIGGINS. That testified that he was a lumber merchant?

A. That's the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. DORR. Nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside.

Witness excused.

L. T. TURNER, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please state your name to the committee?

A. Leander T. Turner.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. I do.

Q. You are a member of the bar here?—A. I am.

Q. And have been how long?—A. About 24 years—a little less than that, a trifle.

Q. You were a member of a committee in connection with Mr. Powell and some other attorneys to consider certain charges made against Jerold L. Finch, I believe?—A. I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, I think you might inquire, yourself, on that line.

Mr. HUGHES. Will you go on, Mr. Turner, and inform this committee what was done by the committee appointed by that bar meeting, of which you were a member, in the matter of the investigation of the charges made by Mr. Finch?

A. Well, we met first and organized by the election of Mr. Hughes as chairman and Mr. Powell, I think, as secretary, and we then communicated with Mr. Finch and arranged for meetings to be held, at which he should be heard. We requested from the court that we might have the files in the various cases involved in the charges, and they were all sent down to the office where the hearing was held, which was in the Bailey Building—I forget whose office—and we then called Mr. Finch before us and he made a very full statement of his charges, and as he made them from time to time we inquired of him. He made some statements of what proof they were based upon, what he claimed was proof, and we asked him questions about it and asked him to state to us the proof that he had for the different charges that he made, and he outlined that as the hearing proceeded, and where it seemed essential to us, we examined the portions of the record to which he referred. Of course, I can not remember the details of the hearing.

We met a number of times; I think we held some evening sessions, protracting the meeting until midnight or after, but how many I do not know. I know that Mr. Finch was heard very fully and completely and until he was entirely through. He was permitted to bring before us everything that he thought material, and we examined everything that he submitted to us as material in connection with the hearing. Now, after we were through hearing him we heard some other witnesses, but at the present time, while I see that the report mentions certain of them, I only have an independent recollection of Gen. Metcalfe appearing before us, although I know that we did hear other witnesses, but I do not now recall what others from my own recollection. Then after we had heard the witnesses fully we made our findings and filed them in court.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you remember as to the fact of Mr. Finch coming back before us after we had examined the other witnesses?

A. I have that impression, Mr. Hughes, that we did have him, but it is so long ago that I would not be absolutely certain as to that, but that is the impression that I have.

Q. This action was taken in pursuance to the appointment at the meeting of the bar in the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was submitted to Judge Hanford as the action—the unanimous action of the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any disbarment proceedings ever instituted against Mr. Finch?—A. Not to my knowledge. There were certainly none as the result of our investigation, and if there ever were any I do not know of any.

Q. There were none instituted prior to that time or you would know it?—A. Not that I know of, except that there was some motion or something of that kind made prior to that bar meeting. I see in the report a reference to it—I had forgotten it at the time.

Q. There was a motion made before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. And then the bar, instance of Judge Hanford taking any action—the bar was assembled at his request and the matter was submitted to the bar at the meeting which appointed us as a committee; is not that correct?—A. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. I would like to see the exhibits in this case, please. [Examines exhibits.] Now, I want the report of the committee—well, here it is. I have it.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Turner, what did you conceive your duty to be as a member of that committee?

A. To investigate Mr. Finch's conduct in making the charges, to determine whether they were made maliciously or with no foundation, and as to whether, if they were, any action should be taken by the bar to disbar him.

Q. How long after you were appointed on the committee was it before the committee had any hearings?—A. Well, I would not undertake to say that.

Q. Well, can you give us a guess? Was it a week, or any considerable interval, or at once?—A. Well, I think it was a few days. We got together and organized, and there were a number of busy men on the committee, and I think it was a few days before we held our first meeting at which we heard any statement or testimony.

Q. Now, what did you, as a member of the committee, do before the first meeting of the committee to familiarize yourself with the facts in the case?—A. I can not remember. I do not imagine before the matter was taken up before us by Mr. Finch—I doubt whether I did anything to familiarize myself. I don't think I did, though I may have done so; I don't remember.

Q. Well, did you look through the 800 or so pages of testimony that had been taken before Judge Smith?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you look through the papers that had been apparently made use of at the meeting of the bar at which you were appointed a member of the committee?—A. I can not remember as to that, Mr. McCoy. I was at that meeting of the committee of the bar and I have an impression that some of those papers were read at that meeting, probably the findings of Judge Smith, who had heard the testimony, but I do not know now; I can not remember.

Q. The record altogether, including the charges and those papers referred to in the record of the proceedings appointing you on the committee and the typewritten record here before Judge Smith, were voluminous altogether, were they not?—A. They were.

Q. And Mr. Finch had been living with that case, so to speak, hadn't he?—A. Yes; day and night, I think.

Q. And you were satisfied at the time that there was not anybody else in Seattle who knew more about it than he did?—A. I certainly thought that; and we took his statement and asked him as to the evidence, and where he asked us to look at documents or portions of the record we did so.

Q. Did you conceive that he could be of any assistance to you in examining the hostile witnesses?—A. Well, I can not remember what my conception there was. If I may explain, Mr. McCoy. When Mr. Finch was through with his statement, it seemed to me—I can only give you my opinion as I understand it; that was the attitude of the committee—that he had not produced any tangible proof of wrong.

Q. Why did you call any other witnesses in for, then?—A. I do not remember, Mr. McCoy. There may have been some particular point that we wanted to clear up.

Q. And that is just the point that I am coming to. Did you conceive that he could have been of any assistance to you in clearing up any points in regard to which it might have been necessary, or was necessary, as you looked at it, to call other witnesses?—A. Well, I could only answer that from argument; that if we did not have him there, I presume the committee as a whole must have conceived that he was not necessary or that he could not have been of assistance, but I do not now remember whether he was there when we examined the other witnesses. It is eight years ago.

Q. I was going to ask you—was there any notice given to Mr. Finch that other witnesses who were witnesses against him were to be examined before your committee?—A. I can not remember, Mr. McCoy.

Q. The witnesses who were examined besides Mr. Finch were interested witnesses, were they not?—A. Well, they were not interested in one sense. Of course their case had been passed on before it came to us. We were simply passing on Mr. Finch's case. They were interested in the sense that they were involved in the charges that he was making.

Q. Do you imagine that that gives a man any interest?—A. I have answered your question—that it gives him an interest. I have no doubt that it would affect his testimony, but I did not understand what you meant by the word "interest" there.

Q. What is your recollection of whether or not your committee gave Mr. Finch any notice that these other witnesses would be heard before the committee?—A. I have no recollection on the subject.

Q. Do you happen to know anybody who has any recollection on it, any member of the committee?—A. Except that I heard Mr. Powell testify here this morning, and I should judge that his recollection was that we did not give him notice, but that is all I know.

Q. Is your recollection now refreshed by what Mr. Powell testified about?—A. No, sir; it is not. I have no recollection at all on the subject. I had a lingering impression on my mind that he was there when we examined the others, but I presume I am mistaken; I should not want to say one way or the other.

Q. Well, as you look back at the matter now, would you say it would have been a reasonable expectation on Mr. Finch's part that he should have notice that witnesses of that kind were to be heard before your committee—now put yourself in his place just for a minute.—A. If their testimony was to be considered against him, he certainly would be entitled to be heard before we came to find against him.

Q. Well, you didn't think and you don't think now, do you, Mr. Turner, that their testimony was expected to be in his favor?—A. I don't know about that; I don't remember what they were called before us for. Of course——

Q. Who were some of the people who were called? Was Judge Ballinger called?—A. Well, I don't know. I say I can only remember Gen. Metcalfe. I think probably Judge Ballinger was called.

Q. Gen. Metcalfe was involved in the charges, wasn't he, that Mr. Finch had made?—A. He was; yes, sir. Mr. McCoy, of course this is true; we were simply a committee to investigate to recommend; we were not trying Mr. Finch and had no power to disbar him or to do anything except to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to bring a proceeding against him where he would have ample opportunity to be heard.

Q. Then, why did you call him at all?—A. Because we wanted to get at the facts and he was the man whom we thought had evidence of the wrongdoing of these members of the bar, and we wanted to know whether he did have any such evidence in order to determine whether his charges were based on any evidence or made in good faith.

Q. You say that Mr. Finch made a full statement of his charges before you?—A. Yes, sir. Most of the time of the committee in hearing anybody was given to the hearing of Mr. Finch, nearly all the time. We spent very little time hearing anybody else.

Q. You knew what the charges were, didn't you; you had read them, as a matter of fact, in the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean in the papers in the matter?—A. Well, I suppose I have; yes, sir; it has been a long time ago.

Q. What did you examine those other witnesses about?—A. I can not remember, Mr. McCoy; I suppose about some phase of the charges, but I can not remember.

Q. Were you in court this morning when Mr. Powell was testifying?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear all the hypothetical questions which were put to him at that time?—A. I think I did; yes, sir. I did not hear clearly all, but practically all.

Q. Would your answer to those questions be the same as his?—A. I do not like to testify in that way exactly, because I don't know.

Q. I don't want to ask you to, Mr. Turner, if you think it is not right—I can not remember all the questions myself now and I have not got the record.

The WITNESS. I can not follow them, and that is the reason.

Q. But if you are willing to swear on your recollection and testify that way I would like to have you do it—well, I will ask you a question. I would rather have the questions put to me.

What would you think of the conduct of a referee in bankruptcy who in a case where he had reported in favor of the discharge of a trustee in bankruptcy and where an application had been made to the court in bankruptcy to set aside the discharge, so to speak, and reopen the case in order that the trustee might appear against a receiver in a State court who claimed ownership of the property of the bankrupts, should appear in the State court action as attorney either for the receiver in the State court or the bonding company who was on the bond of the receiver?—A. I don't know as I grasp that fully.

Mr. McCOY. Read the question to him again. [Question repeated to the witness.]

A. Well, it is a little hard to express an opinion without knowing all the facts and circumstances. Of course I think it is unwise; in fact, I think it is unprofessional for any judicial officer having in charge any branch of a controversy to represent any party as an attorney on any question that may be in any way involved in that controversy; but of course I do not know just what was involved here.

Q. I didn't say what was involved; I asked you to take as an assumption that the things were involved which are stated in the question and to answer the question as it stands on those facts.—A. Well, how does the referee—on what kind of a hearing does he appear for either one or the other of the parties? What was the question involved in the place where he appeared as an attorney? Was it also involved in a hearing which might be had before him as referee should the case be reopened? If it was, then he ought not to appear; if it was not, it would be perfectly proper for him to appear.

Q. Well, for that idea alone—if the case had been reopened and if the trustee in bankruptcy had gone into some proceeding in the State court against the referee over there and had gotten a judgment against him, that would have been property in bankruptcy of that estate, wouldn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does that clear away that difficulty so as to make it possible for you to answer the question?—A. Well, I am not—it does not seem to me that there are enough facts put there so that I can necessarily say that it was proper or improper. If all the facts of the particular case were before me, of course, I could give my opinion as to whether in that case it would be proper or improper.

Mr. McCoy. Well, I do not know all the facts of the case, Mr. Turner, so I ask you to confine your answer to the facts stated or the supposed facts stated in the hypothetical question.

A. I do not think I can answer it without knowing what the controversy was in the State court and how it affected any possible controversy which might come before the referee if it went back to him to be heard, and I do not think anyone could give an intelligent answer without knowing those facts.

Q. In other words, you think that the referee in bankruptcy could take a chance——A. No, sir; I don't think he ought to take chances if there is any reasonable—or any chance of it becoming so involved that his duties as a referee would necessarily involve anywhere where he had appeared as an attorney.

Q. Now, a minute ago you said, when answering my question, that you had to know whether when it came back into the bankruptcy court it would be before that referee in some shape.

The Chairman. I think you are taking up more time than it is worth with it. I understood Mr. Turner to make a hypothetical answer in which he says that if an attorney representing one interest in the case also undertook to represent some other interest which might be adverse to that in the same case that that would be unprofessional conduct.

Mr. Turner. I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. McCoy. And if the facts stated in the hypothetical question states such a case as that, you would agree that such conduct was unprofessional?

A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Are there any other questions?

Mr. McCoy. Do you want me to stop?

The Chairman. Well, not on the line that you were going—I would rather you would think of something else.

Mr. McCoy. Do you think, Mr. Turner, that Judge Hanford had announced a rule that where one attorney makes charges against another attorney involving unprofessional conduct that the attorney who makes those charges must do so at his risk of having proceedings prosecuted against him?

A. I do not really think that Judge Hanford intended to announce any rule of that kind; he had expressed something of that kind in connection with Mr. Finch's case, but I think probably it was the result of a little impatience as to what had occurred a little while before in connection with the case; it seemed to me so.

Q. Were you in court when it was made?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then what had occurred to make him impatient?—A. I do not know.

Q. Then why do you think it was the result of something which you don't know anything about?—A. Well, I know something about Mr. Finch, and I heard a good deal about that matter when I was a member of the committee.

Q. In other words, you prejudged Mr. Finch?—A. No; I did not prejudge Mr. Finch. I devoted a great deal of time and attention trying to judge him correctly, and I did not judge him at all until after we had heard the testimony, and then I thought that his tendency was to believe a great deal of wrong without any foundation in fact. In other words, I thought then that if there was a set of circumstances shown to him which was consistent with both innocence and guilt that he was sure to find guilt. He is naturally a suspicious man—that is what I thought, and I think so still.

Q. Do you think there was anything in that Heckman & Hansen case that had a tendency to arouse anybody's suspicions?—A. Well, undoubtedly there were some single facts taken entirely by themselves that would cause any careful attorney to investigate the facts as representing his client's interests. But I do not think that any man of good sound logical mind would have ever come to the conclusion on such an investigation that any of the charges which Mr. Finch made were justified. That was my conclusion. I still think so.

Q. What charge was it he made in regard to the payment by the Scandinavian Bank of $2,000 to the receiver after the case had all been closed and no allowance made by the court?—A. I do not remember that charge, Mr. McCoy. When I heard you speak of it this morning, it seemed new to me, but of course after eight years I could not be sure about that; I can not remember the details here; I can remember simply the general result, the conclusion.

Q. Did you hear my question this morning about the $150 paid to an attorney?—A. I did; I heard your question about it.

Q. Was there anything in that circumstance to arouse anybody's suspicion?—A. Well, that is one of the things which I think an attorney would investigate. Now, I can not remember what conclusion we came to about that or what Mr. Finch's statement was. Those details have passed from my mind. I can only tell you the general result that we came to after a careful investigation at the time.

Q. Well, if you are going to testify about a careful investigation that is your conclusion—can't you tell me something about the facts—the charges were serious, were they not?—A. The charges were serious. There is no question but what the charges were serious, but the evidence was not serious as we looked at it.

Q. Was the evidence of the payment of $150 at all serious?—A. Well, now, I can not remember the details connected with that matter at this time.

Q. Well, I think I stated them with substantial accuracy as they appear in this matter so far; there may be something on the other side that I do not know.—A. Well, I do not know; I do not even remember just what facts you stated to Mr. Powell; I remember you referred to that; I think you stated that a hundred dollars was paid to some one as attorney for the bonding company, or that the bonding company had paid a hundred dollars.

Q. It is the Scandinavian-American Bank, as I remember it, or some one connected with the bank. I do not know who it was—some one adverse to Heckman & Hansen that paid $150 to his attorney as a charitable donation because the man was in needy circumstances, and the person who got the check kept it for some year and a half without turning it over, and on the check was indorsed "Settlement of the Heckman & Hansen matter," as I remember it.—A. Well, that unexplained would be suspicious.

Q. What explanation did your committee get of that?—A. I do not know; I do not remember; I have no recollection of the details of that at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. I think, since Mr. Turner is on the stand, I would like to ask him one or two general questions about Judge Hanford.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. HUGHES. You have been acquainted with Judge Hanford ever since you have been practicing at this bar?

A. I have.

Q. You frequently practiced in his court—that is, you frequently had cases in his court?—A. My Federal practice has not been large, Mr. Hughes, but I off and on do practice here.

Q. Have you ever known of Judge Hanford being intoxicated?—A. I never have.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. I think before going further we ought to call Judge Hoyt, who was the referee in bankruptcy. His testimony will be comparatively brief, I think.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Finch will be back in court, I hope, pretty soon; and if it will not interfere with your course of procedure in the matter, I would like to have you wait until he comes here.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be eminently proper for him to be here when Mr. Hoyt testifies.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well, then, I suggest that you call Mr. Ira Bronson.

IRA BRONSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.

A. Ira Bronson.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. You are a member of the bar here?—A. I am.

Q. And have been for how long?—A. Twenty-three years this September.

Q. What are your professional connections?—A. General law practice.

Q. Are you associated with others, or are you alone?—A. I am alone. I have clerks in the office, but I am practicing alone.

Q. And your firm?—A. Just my own name.

Q. Your business firm is Ira Bronson?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you at any time been connected with any other lawyers in a firm?—A. I had one or two associations a good many years back.

Q. What were they?—A. Hoge Clark, of Maine—now in the State of Maine—and D. B. Trefethen.

Q. He is still practicing here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the connections you speak of were in Seattle?—A. All of them; yes, sir.

Q. Does your practice extend to the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. Oh——

Q. A great deal?—A. Quite considerably; I suppose, perhaps, you might roughly say a quarter of it.

Q. How long has that been true?—A. I do not know how long the proportion has been just that, but I have practiced in the Federal court ever since I came to the Territory of Washington.

Q. And mostly before Judge Hanford?—A. Principally, yes.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with him?—A. Fairly so.

Q. Have you any associations of any kind with the judge other than appearing before him in court?—A. Absolutely none.

Q. No club connections?—A. Well, we are both members of the Rainier Club, if you call that a connection.

Q. For how long a time?—A. I have been a member of the Rainier Club, I guess, 14 or 15 years. I do not know how long he has been.

Q. Well, longer than that, anyway?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you meet him there occasionally?—A. Yes; once or twice a week, perhaps.

Q. Do you eat with him there?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Do you drink with him?—A. I never have. Well, I attended one dinner with Judge Hanford, which was given to Judge Greene, of Mississippi, but not at the Rainier Club, but that was the only occasion I remember.

Q. You, of course, have observed the judge a good deal while he was presiding in court?—A. Yes.

Q. You have heard the testimony introduced here as to some peculiarities of his?—A. Yes.

Q. While presiding?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you noticed those peculiarities?—A. I have always noticed those peculiarities; yes.

Q. How did they appear to you?—A. Well, they appeared to me to be the result of personal idiosyncrasy and probably would be the result of a great deal of hard work. I have known of Judge Hanford being a late worker at night. I used to pass his office and see the light in his office many times and I know that he is a hard worker, because I know the work he has done in individual cases and the time that it has covered.

Q. You are a hard worker yourself, are you not?—A. Well, I have been at times. I am not as hard working now as I have been in years past.

Q. You know a number of other men who work hard and work nights?—A. Yes, sir; I have worked probably 12 or 15 hours a day for 20 years myself—that is, without taking account of vacations.

Q. Did it have the same effect on you that it appeared to have on Judge Hanford?—A. Why, I felt very often in the need of some rest, just as he has; certainly. The peculiarities that I have here referred to are those that I have seen—as he sits on the bench he will hold his eyes closed—but I never noticed that he was not ready to rule promptly when a matter came up that called for his attention, and I never noticed any attorney presuming on that apparent inattention.

Q. Was his appearance on those occasions such as to lead a stranger to him to conclude that he was asleep?—A. It might be so.

Q. Was that a frequent occurrence, or only seldom?—A. Well, I think that a considerable portion of Judge Hanford's time might attract a stranger's attention in that respect; he sits very quietly; he does not interfere with the trial, as a rule, unless he is called upon to do so, and of course, as I say, he has that idiosyncrasy of character that is not common among the State judges.

Q. If at any time you have seen Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants, please tell the committee of it.—A. I think I can say with absolute truthfulness that I never saw Judge Hanford when I thought he was under the influence of intoxicants in any manner whatsoever, and I never heard of it until this proceeding.

Q. To what extent, if at all, have you seen him late at night?—A. I can not say that I have seen him on the streets late at night with any frequency at all. I used to pass his office down in the old Federal building once, perhaps, a week, or something like that, and see the light burning in his room, and that is what I refer to.

Q. And you assumed that he was there?—A. Well, I have known that he was there frequently.

Q. Well, when you did not know personally that he was there, you assumed it?—A. Oh, yes; I assumed that he was there when I saw the light there.

Q. And you assumed that he was at work?—A. Yes.

Q. For all you know he might have been asleep there?—A. He might have been many times, certainly.

Q. Do you know that he had a couch or a sleeping arrangement in the room—did you know that?—A. I am just thinking whether I would be willing to testify—I do not think I could feel sure enough of that to say.

Q. You had some connection with the committee, or the committee's work, in the matter of the disbarment of certain attorneys here, or, in the alternative, the disbarment of Mr. Finch, did you?—A. I was not one of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Wasn't it in regard to the meeting of the bar that Mr. Bronson's name was mentioned?

The CHAIRMAN. My question includes that; if he was not a member of the committee, he was connected with the matter.

A. I attended the meeting.

Q. And I believe you made the motion which resulted in the appointment of the committee.—A. I think not.

Q. Did you take any active part in it other than by your presence?—A. Well, I took this action: My action was looking toward the discontinuance of the proceedings against Mr. Finch.

Q. That was the meeting at which the report was made, was it?—A. And Mr. Finch was present, also.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, you are familiar with that and can shorten the examination.

Mr. HUGHES. I would simply suggest to the committee that he be asked to state what part he took in it and what occurred at that time, so far as his own actions are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. You may act on the suggestion of Mr. Hughes and relate to the committee what part you took.

A. The action I took was a recommendation, or a suggestion, on my part to the meeting that I did not think Mr. Finch was mentally accountable for the real results that he had set in motion; that I did not think he had any comprehension of what he had done, or of the real facts that were involved in his making wholesale accusations, such as he had made without any substantial foundation, and that

I did not believe in disbarring a man who did not appreciate fully all that he had done.

Q. Well, ordinarily, would not that be a very excellent reason for disbarring him if he took such drastic action as that without due deliberation; would not that be a very serious offense?—A. No; I am willing to admit that perhaps it might call for an impartial cold-blooded disbarment proceedings, perhaps, but it would not involve him in the way of punishment—it would be more in the way of simply proving his being perhaps perniciously active to the detriment of clients. I think, perhaps—I still think, perhaps, that we made a mistake in not disbarring Mr. Finch on that ground. Now, I have no personal antagonism to Mr. Finch, though.

Q. In your reference to his mental capacity, do you want us to understand that you thought he lacked intellectual ability?—A. I think I remarked at the time that all the wheels in Mr. Finch's head did not track perfectly, and that expresses the idea. I do not think he is a man of sound common sense.

Q. You thought so then?—A. And I think so now.

Q. And you retain that opinion?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Was that the opinion, Mr. Bronson, which was entertained by most of those at the meeting, so far as you know?

A. I would not want to say, Mr. McCoy, that that was the opinion entertained by most of them, because I did not talk with them; that was the opinion that was entertained by some of them—some who spoke to me about it.

Q. You felt at that meeting that the charges that had been made were unjust, didn't you?—A. I certainly did.

Q. Are you a friend of Judge Ballinger's?—A. I think I am; yes.

Q. And of James B. Metcalfe?—A. Yes; casually so.

Q. And of Richard Saxe Jones?—A. No.

Q. C. A. Reynolds?—A. Only slightly acquainted with him.

Q. John P. Hoyt?—A. I am not a friend of Judge Hoyt's. I have a great deal of respect for him; I only know him in a casual way.

Q. You had not been a particular friend of Mr. Finch, had you?—A. No; nor have I ever had the slightest ill-will toward Mr. Finch at any time and have not now.

Q. And you made your mind up and had made up your mind, either before you came or when you reached that meeting and heard what was stated there, that the charges against the men in here were absolutely unfounded?—A. Yes, sir; I had arrived at that conclusion through various means of information.

Q. What sources of information had you availed yourself of to find that out?—A. I would not want at this distant time to attempt to rehearse all of the means. I read some of the matters; I heard the committee's statement. Mr. Finch was called upon to make any statement that he desired to make, and he declined to do so, or he did not do so.

Q. Do you think there was anything remarkable in his declining to make a statement under those circumstances?—A. Why, certainly; if I had made such charges as he had made against members of the bar of this county and did not substantiate them, I would have withdrawn them and apologized.

Q. But this was before he had any chance to appear before the committee.—A. No, sir; I think the meeting I refer to was after that time.

Q. Then I did not quite understand the testimony. Was that the meeting at which that committee was appointed [showing document to witness]?—A. My recollection is that this was after the committee had reported. I do not remember seeing this document which you have handed me; I do not know what it is, even.

Q. Well, won't you just glance it through and say whether that is the meeting that you had in mind?

Witness examines document.

Mr. McCoy. Was this the meeting which you referred to that you were at?

A. As I said before, I do not want to be understood as testifying absolutely with reference to certain details like that, but my impression is that it was a subsequent meeting, because I know Mr. Finch was present and my impression now is that there had been submitted then to the meeting a statement of the committee who had investigated this matter. I may be, of course, mistaken. It may have been this identical meeting.

Q. Now, Mr. Finch, stand up a minute.

Whereupon Mr. Finch stands up in the court room.

Mr. McCoy. Were you ever present, Mr. Finch, at any meeting of the bar or the bar association other than the one at which the facts in connection with which are reported in this Exhibit No. 45?

Mr. Finch. I was not. There was only one bar meeting and that is the one referred to there. I stated in my testimony that——

Mr. McCoy. Never mind.

Mr. Bronson. I would not contradict Mr. Finch in my recollection as to the meeting; that must be the meeting if he says so.

Mr. McCoy. Is it your recollection that at that meeting Mr. Finch said anything at all?

Mr. Bronson. No; my recollection is that Mr. Finch did not say anything.

Q. Don't you recollect he got up and said he did not want to say anything unless somebody urged him to?—A. Well, I would not want to say from my present recollection that he did not say that, but I do not remember that he did.

Q. Now, Mr. Bronson, let us assume that this was the meeting and the first meeting; would you have expected Mr. Finch to get up in that meeting and justify the making of the charges in regard to which some six to eight hundred pages of testimony had been taken without any preparation of any kind or description?—A. I will say this, perhaps I should answer your question first—I would not expect anyone at that meeting to get up and make an argument upon a statement of a case the facts of which were not in; but my impression is very strongly grounded that it was incumbent upon Mr. Finch, from the position which the meeting took then, to take some position relative to these charges, and that he declined or neglected to do so—would not do so. Now, exactly what the character of his position in that respect is I do not now recall. It is too far back. I only bear in mind that he had let all of these charges come up to this point and that he refused to take any position which tended toward a substantiation of the charges so far as that meeting was concerned, and it may be that that was the reason that the committee was appointed.

Mr. McCoy. Is that other report here, marked "Exhibit 47"—now, I have here what has been marked "Exhibit No. 47," which appears to be, from a lead-pencil indorsement on it, "Action of the Bar Association of Seattle in re J. E. Finch." Will you look at that, Mr. Bronson, and say whether it was at any meeting where that was made use of that you appeared [handing document to witness]?

A. You mean whether or not I can identify this document?

Q. Well, just the meeting; it may be that that was adopted at some meeting which you had in mind, or possibly that was the only meeting which you attended.—A. It has reference particularly to Mr. Ballinger. No; I do not think so. Perhaps I had better read it a little further, though. [Reading document.] No; I do not think this was taken up, unless it may have been taken up before I came into the meeting, or something of that kind. Of course I have a general knowledge of the things that are stated here from hearsay and from reading the newspapers. I do not mean that I do not know anything about it; but I mean I do not think this was the whole substance, though.

Q. You have no recollection that that paper was before any meeting in which you attended and at which Mr. Finch was present?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of this particular document.

The Chairman. Is there anything further with Mr. Bronson?

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Bronson, if you have known of Judge Hanford being intoxicated on or off the bench——

A. No; I stated, Mr. Hughes, I never had seen anything in my experience with Judge Hanford to indicate anything of the kind. I never heard of it until this proceeding came up.

Witness excused.

W. A. Simonds, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your full name to the committee.

A. William A. Simonds.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Simonds?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I have lived in Seattle over four years.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-four.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. I am reporter on the Seattle Times.

Q. On any special line, are you?—A. At the present time, do you mean?

Q. Generally, or now?—A. At this time I am on the Hanford investigation.

Q. And before that began were you on any special duty?—A. I was on the Federal run for almost a year.

Q. I hand you the issue of the Seattle Daily Times of July 5, 1912, and I call your attention to an article on the last column of the first page extending over to the first column of the second page [showing], and I will ask you to look at it—are you the author of that article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you the author of the headlines———A. No, sir.
Q. Which precede it in the newspaper?—A. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. The article will go into the record as an exhibit.

The newspaper clipping is marked "Exhibit No. 61."

The CHAIRMAN. I call your attention particularly to the introductory paragraph:

That he had been selected by the so-called "white-slave syndicate" as a victim because of his many rigid rulings against its traffic and that the charges caused to be filed against him in Congress by John H. Perry had been actuated by the same syndicate, to-day was the countercharge of Judge Cornelius H. Hanford after a long and careful gathering of evidence by the jurist and his attorneys.

A. What attorneys do you there refer to? I think that the judge could probably better answer that than I could.
Q. But the judge did not write this article—you wrote it—what attorneys did you refer to?—A. I refer to his attorneys—I did not mention anyone by name.
Q. Well, who had you in your mind when you wrote that?—A. I had no particular attorney in mind.
Q. The judge is represented in this proceeding by certain attorneys; are they the ones you intended to include in that statement?—A. No, sir.
Q. Well, can you tell the committee whom you did have in your mind when you wrote that?—A. I had no particular attorney in mind, as I said before.
Q. What is your authority for the statement contained in that paragraph with reference to the white-slave syndicate being the cause of the present investigation?—A. Do you mean for the statement that Judge Hanford believed it was the cause?
Q. The statement that you make here.—A. Yes—that he believed that it was the cause of the charges—that was the statement that is contained there.
Q. Is your statement based on the statement made to you by the judge?—A. It is.
Q. Have you any other basis than that for the making of this statement?—A. Purely such observation as I might have made myself and from things that I might have gathered outside, but the immediate foundation for this story was an interview with the judge.
Q. Was the use of the words "his attorneys" based upon what the judge said to you in that interview?—A. I gathered in the interview with him that he had not been alone in his investigation, but I did not know who else was associated with him, so I stated "his attorneys."
Q. You do not quite answer responsively to my question. Please read it to him.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Was not my answer satisfactory?
Q. I do not think it is quite responsive. I would rather have a more specific answer.—A. I would not say that the judge himself told me that his attorneys had been assisting him; he did not use that specific language.
Q. Well, what was it he said that induced you to use that phrase?—A. He said nothing. It was the evident amount of material which he had gathered that led me to infer that there had been other people engaged with him.

Q. You spoke about your own observation as a part of the basis for the statement with reference to some one connected with the white-slave traffic being behind this prosecution or behind this investigation; strike out that word prosecution.—A. Yes.

Q. You can give that observation.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is, you said, as I got your testimony, "things observed outside," I think the language was.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; that was it. It was things that I observed during the time that I have been on this run.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean during the investigation?

A. No, sir; entirely outside this investigation.

Q. I think the committee would like to know what you have observed which led you to conclude, in whole or in part, that the persons in any way behind the white-slave traffic were also behind this investigation.—A. Well, I do not mean to infer that my own observations would lead me to that conclusion without any other thing in addition to it, but they would tend to corroborate it in my mind.

Q. I think the committee would like to have the observation—would like to know about what are the things which you observed which helped to produce and bring about that conclusion in your mind.—A. During the last year which I had been engaged in this circuit, particularly in the latter part, there had been more prosecutions begun under Judge Hanford against the white-slave traffic, I think, than at any other time. I know that the last grand jury returned more indictments against white-slave traffickers, or people engaged in that business, than any other Federal crime, and I know from records, as I have gone into them from time to time; I found where the judge at one time instructed the grand jury at about the same time that the white-slave act was passed—gave them carte blanche to go into the white-slave traffic wherever and whenever they could get any evidence, of their own initiative, and to prosecute it fearlessly. I know, also, that there has been published by an eastern concern a book entitled "Fighting the White Slave Traffic," and in that volume it states a good many instances of where girls have been brought into this country, taken under the interstate commerce in violation of the Federal statutes, and it states, among other things, in describing the white-slave syndicates, that it was devoting particular attention to Seattle and to the State of Washington and to Alaska, where it was supposed that the business of that character was most prolific. Judge Hanford has, in my mind, as I have observed, stood out prominently in the country at the same time in favor of the upholding of that statute and the prosecution of white slavers, and, whenever they have been found guilty, sentencing them as much as he believed they deserved, without any appearance of clemency whatever. I have seen a great many white slavers sentenced in his court, and I have heard remarks made by the judge at that time, and those facts led me to suppose—that is, outside of anything that the judge ever said to me—that if there ever was a prosecution attempted against the judge it would be brought, if by anyone, by people interested in the furtherance of the white-slave traffic; that would be among the principal observations that I have made outside of what may have been told me by the judge.

Q. The only observations you have told us of are your observations concerning the prosecution of so-called white-slave cases in the judge's court. All the rest that you have told us is mere inference, is it not, and not observation?—A. I told you of having heard of the instructions given by the judge to the grand jury.

Q. That was a part of what you heard in the court proceedings. All the other things which you have stated, I repeat, appear to me to be merely inferences and not observation.—A. Well, I should——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, have you observed anything else than you have told us which justified the conclusions which you have reached—if you have observed anything else, tell us what it is, fully.—A. I have seen letters which Judge Hanford has received, both since this investigation began and prior to that time, which would tend to strengthen that belief.

Mr. HIGGINS. What were they?

The CHAIRMAN. Were they signed or anonymous letters?

A. They were anonymous letters.

Q. How many of them have you seen?—A. Between 5 and 10.

Q. Have you possession of any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, have you anything else than anonymous letters and the court proceedings which you observed as a foundation for your conclusion?—A. I was here in Seattle and working on the Times at the time that the newspaper which is actively engaged in prosecuting the judge began its attack on the House of the Good Shepherd, which is a rescue house for young girls.

Mr. HIGGINS. Won't you name that paper?

A. The Seattle Star. And I know that paper has been very active in its antagonism toward the judge. I know that that paper wantonly attacked that institution, which is devoted, as I said before, to rescuing young girls, and that might tend to influence me still further.

Q. Do you mean that the Star was interested in this traffic? Is that the inference we are to draw from your remark?—A. That was the inference that I myself drew from the attack. I would not want to accuse it of it.

Q. Well, was that a part of the observations and the reasons you had for writing the statement which appears in this article?—A. The only reason that I wrote the article was that the judge gave me the interview and I printed it as a matter of news.

Q. He gave you what inference?—A. What do you mean? What interview?

Q. You said interview, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was this statement you have made about the Star the result of the interview, or part of it?—A. No, sir; that happened some time before. It happened last fall, I believe.

Q. I assume that you know that the action of Congress in ordering this investigation to be made was based in an official way on a resolution by Congressman Victor Berger, and perhaps in part by certain statements filed with the Committee on Judiciary by Mr. John H. Perry, of this city.—A. I know that.

Q. You knew both those facts?—A. I knew both those facts.

Q. In your statement in the paper did you mean to include either of those as being connected with the white-slave traffic?—A. In the statement I merely included the parties that Judge Hanford had included in his statement to me.

Q. We ought to know who they are.—A. They are stated here, and John H. Perry is among them. It did not mention Mr. Berger, but I understand that Mr. Berger got his evidence from Perry.

Q. Well, have you observed any other facts which in any degree entered into your conclusion?—A. The only possible other fact that I might mention—and I could not say that I have observed any other facts of my own accord that I recall at this moment. It has always seemed to me that there must be some motive behind the prosecution, as I have studied it, by these people in Seattle who first began it, and it always seemed to me that this was a very logical explanation of their action.

Q. Your answer last made leads to the further question why it seemed so to you? And that is why I have asked you to give us every fact which made it seem so to you—we want every one.—A. It has seemed to me that there must necessarily have been some money behind the prosecution—it required money to engage the detectives.

Q. Just a moment there—is that pure inference, or have you observed anything which justifies this conclusion?—A. I have observed that the detectives have worked on the case, and I have observed that it is usually customary to pay them.

Q. But what connection is there between detectives working on the case and white slavers employing them to do it?—A. I hadn't got to that yet.

Q. Well, go on.—A. The fact that there is considerable money needed leads me to consider in my own mind who was furnishing the money, and it did not seem to me that the Seattle Star had the money to pay for the investigation.

Here there is a disturbance in the room.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, you will have to be in order or we will have to insist upon it.

A. (Continuing.) And I also did not believe that Mr. Perry had the money to conduct the investigation, and I looked for some one behind it, and in view of the conduct of the Star—of the attack on the House of the Good Shepherd and Judge Hanford's attitude toward the white slavers, in my mind, before I received the interview, I was convinced that part of the money had been furnished by people who were interested in furthering that traffic.

Q. That traffic, I might say, known as the white-slave traffic, can only be prosecuted in the Federal courts, and unless——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). That we know quite well—you state that as, in your belief, neither the Star nor Mr. Perry had the money to employ detectives, some one interested in the white-slave traffic must have done it—have you anyone in mind?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody?—A. Not a soul.

Q. Whatever?—A. Not a soul.

Q. Have you any other reasons—especial reasons based on observation—on the facts which are within your knowledge for the conclusion you reached—we want you to exhaust your information on that point?—A. If you will excuse me, I will look over the article for a moment.

Q. Very well.

Witness examines the newspaper article.

A. I take it that you do not care to have me go into any details regarding the white-slave prosecution which has been carried on in the Federal court?

The CHAIRMAN. You have given us that, I think, sufficiently fully.

A. There was one other matter—there was a letter. There was one other thing I have not mentioned. It was the letter which Judge Hanford received about two months before the investigation began, which had considerable to do with the white-slave idea.

Q. Do you mean by that that in your opinion it had considerable to do with the institution of this investigation?—A. It had considable to do with the opinion that I formed that the white-slave syndicate might have had considerable to do with the prosecution of Judge Hanford.

Q. Explain how—I will ask you first, was it a signed letter?—A. I do not recall. The letter is in the possession of the post-office inspectors. The letter accuses the judge of a very filthy crime—a crime that could only be considered as of the white-slave character, and it was—the letter was so filthy——

Q. What was the word you used; was so what?—A. Filthy—filthy and dirty, that no other mind than that of a white slaver could ever have written it. I say that because I have seen—I have seen letters—I don't know how many, but hundreds of letters, written by white slavers.

Q. And is it from your experience with letters written by them that you conclude this letter to which you refer was written by one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What knowledge had you that any of those letters were written by white slavers?—A. Merely by their character; their contents and their similarity to other letters that I have seen.

Q. Did it ever appear from any evidence that any of those letters to which you referred were actually written by persons engaged in that traffic?—A. By evidence—you mean in court?

Q. Yes.—A. The letters have never been used as a foundation for any charges—the judge's letters.

Q. Did you have other evidence outside of the court that they were written by white slavers?—A. Not those to the judge; no, sir.

Q. Have you any other reasons to give or facts to state?—A. I do not recall of any.

Q. As a foundation for your conclusion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Near the bottom of the column, on page 1, I read:

> Judge Hanford and his attorneys made the announcement of their belief only after they had acquired evidence which they plan to sift and draw together for presentation to the congressional investigating committee or to Congress as a body.

On what authority did you make that statement?

A. Which part of it do you mean?

Q. What I read to you.—A. But I mean which part of the statement? The announcement of their belief?

Q. "Judge Hanford and his attorneys made the announcement of their belief"—to whom did they make that announcement?—A. If I wrote that "Judge Hanford made the announcement of his belief," that would be more correct.

Q. But you wrote those words with clear knowledge of their meaning at the time, didn't you?—A. At the time I understood that Judge Hanford's attorneys were familiar with the matter; I do not know that they are.

Q. Would not the fair inference from that language—the almost necessary inference—be that Judge Hanford and his attorneys had made this announcement in your presence or to you?—A. That would be a fair inference; yes, sir.

Q. Is that inference correct?—A. Hardly.

Q. Is is nearly?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Judge Hanford's attorneys say a single word on the subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the next paragraph I will read——A. (Interrupting.) Just a moment—would you consider his son his attorney?

Q. His son is a lawyer, is he not?—A. Yes.

Q. I would consider, yes, that he is acting as one of his attorneys in this proceeding; what of that?—A. His son was present at the time that the statement was made by his father.

Q. Did he participate in the statement other than by his presence?—A. He made some comments; I do not recall to what extent.

Q. In order to be perfectly explicit, and for the reason that I think it is due to the other attorneys that they should be named specifically—Mr. E. C. Hughes, C. W. Dorr, and Harold Preston have been acting here as attorneys for Judge Hanford—were any of those gentlemen present, or so far as you know did they know anything whatever of this matter?—A. So far as I know they knew nothing of it.

Q. The next paragraph reads:

> It is their belief—

Meaning, I presume, Judge Hanford and his attorneys—> that the expenses of the Burns investigation concerning the jurist which still is going on, according to Judge Hanford's attorneys, are being paid indirectly by this syndicate.

Had you any authority whatever for writing that statement?

A. The authority for that statement which I had was the judge's belief that the expenses were being paid by them.

Q. When you used the phrase "It is their belief" to whom did the pronoun "their" refer?—A. It referred grammatically to Judge Hanford and his attorneys?

Q. Well, apart from the grammatical side of it, to whom did it refer—grammatically it referred to all of them?—A. Yes.

Q. But to whom in fact did it refer?—A. To Judge Hanford.

Q. It had no reference whatever, had it, to Mr. Hughes or Mr. Dorr, or Mr. Preston?—A. No, sir.

Q. And they had no knowledge that such thoughts or expressions or sentiments were being attributed to them?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. That is what I mean, of course, so far as you know.—A. Yes, sir; so far as I know.

Q. The article goes on to state:

> It is their contention that the attempt to remove the jurist by impeachment proceedings has been made because he is regarded as an enemy of the traffic.

To whom does the word "their" refer in that connection?—A. To Judge Hanford.

Q. And to him alone?—A. Just a moment, until I read it. I could not say that it referred to him alone. In this connection it refers to him alone.

Q. I am asking you about the word "their" now in the middle of the third line before the end of the first column.—A. Yes, sir. Well, in that connection, it referred to him alone.

Q. But any ordinary reader would conclude from it that it included the judge and his attorneys.—A. So I thought at the time.

Q. Did you intend deliberately to include the attorneys in it at that time?—A. I did.

Q. Well, has anything occurred to cause you to change your mind?—A. Well, I have since learned that the attorneys were not familiar with the facts which the judge himself had gathered.

Q. Did you at the time of the interview believe that they had the knowledge and the intention which you here attributed to them?—A. I inferred that no person in the position which the judge now holds would give out a statement under an inquiry like this without fully consulting his attorneys, and for that reason I placed it in there.

Q. When the statement was given to you was it known to the judge that it was for publication?—A. I believe so.

Q. Do you know whether the article as published was submitted to the inspection of the editor of the paper?—A. Before it appeared in the paper?

Q. Yes.—A. It was submitted in the usual form, to the city editor and from him to the assisting managing editor and possibly to the managing editor.

Q. And would that be the last person having the right to supervise it before publication?—A. Why, the editor in chief would have the right, and the managing editor would have the right, but it is very seldom exercised.

Q. Please give the names of each of those who would have the right to supervise it—to read it, and supervise it after you handed it in.—A. To begin with, the city editor; his name is William Chandler; the assistant managing editor's name is Chauncey Rathbun, the managing editor's name is Clarence B. Blethen.

Q. He is the responsible person, I suppose, and the one whose word ultimately goes?—A. I am not familiar as to the division of the prerogatives. The editor in chief is, of course, the head of the paper—I have not given his name yet.

Q. What is his name?—A. His name is Alden J. Blethen.

Q. Well, now, how many of those was the article submitted to to your knowledge?—A. The only person that I know of—the only persons that I know are the city editor and the assistant managing editor.

Q. Mr. Simonds, I want to read a little more of the article to refresh my recollection of it, and in the meantime I would suggest to you that you prod your recollection as much as you can and if you can recall any other facts or observations of yours on which your conclusion as to the first paragraph was founded you will have an opportunity to state them.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Simonds, if you have any additional facts or observations to add to those you have given, you may do it.

A. I don't recall a single one.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McCoy, have you any questions?

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Had you any intention, in making the statements in that article, of accusing John H. Perry of being in any way a backer of the white-slave trade?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any knowledge that it was he who was employing the Burns detectives, or at any rate who had seen them with reference to the employment?—A. I heard the manager state, on the witness stand, that Mr. Perry had employed them.

Q. And you thought that they were employed in the interest of the white-slave traffic?—A. I thought nothing as I wrote the article. I wrote merely what was told me.

Q. Why did you use Mr. Perry's name in the article at all?—A. Because the judge had the belief that Mr. Perry was involved.

Q. And you intended, in writing the article, to convey that belief to the mind of anybody who might see it, didn't you?—A. I intended to convey the belief, Mr. McCoy, that Judge Hanford had charged purely what is stated there in the paragraph. I myself had not accused him or convicted him of it.

Q. Is there any rivalry between the Seattle Daily Times and the Seattle Star?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has the Seattle Star ever taken occasion to criticize any of the owners or proprietors of the Times since you have been here?—A. Why, I presume so. I don't recall any specific occasion.

Q. You say you don't recall any specific time?—A. I very, very seldom read the Star.

Q. Now, there is no occasion to evade the question——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) Mr. Simonds. Do you recall, or did you ever hear of any specific case in which the Star undertook to criticize the Times or its proprietor or owner or any stockholder in it?—A. I recall that at the time when the mayoralty recall was going on, that there were some criticisms made, but just what they were I don't recall.

Q. Criticisms of whom?—A. My impression is that it was the Times Printing Co., the concern that prints the Seattle Times.

Q. That is the only thing, is it?—A. That is the only thing that I recall. There may have been other things.

Q. So you never knew of any other occasion since you have been here during which the Seattle Star has undertaken to criticize the owner or proprietor of the Times in any way, shape, or manner, for anything?—A. As I said, I very seldom read the Star.

Q. Did you ever hear of any such?—A. No, sir.

Mr. McCoy. That is all I want to ask.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. How long has the Star been published in Seattle?—A. I don't know the exact date. It is not very long, however.

Q. Does it belong to what is known as the Scripps-McRae syndicate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is an association of papers on the Pacific slope and in the Middle West?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall ever seeing the Star take a pronounced attitude against the white-slave traffic?—A. I don't recall, of my personal knowledge. I recall having heard it discussed among Government officials, whose names I am not at liberty to give.

Q. You don't know what their attitude was, then, on that?—A. I know from that incident that the Scripps-McRae syndicate did take a pronounced stand against the white-slave syndicate several years ago—how long, I don't recall; three or four—and then suddenly dropped the whole matter. That was particularly noticeable in Spokane, when a woman writer on the Scripps-McRae syndicate—for the Spokane paper and, I believe, the Seattle paper and Tacoma paper—had gone as an investigator down into the employment agencies in Spokane, who were supposed to be carrying on that business under the name of employment agencies. This woman writer had gotten considerable evidence and appeared as a witness at that time for the Government; but the whole matter, according to the information I have received, was dropped by the Scripps syndicate.

Q. Is that all you care to say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that the Seattle Times, at the time or about the time, of the Dreamland Rink meeting, urged the impeachment of Judge Hanford and has been ever since?—A. Do you mean the Star?

Q. The Star; yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, whether they did prepare a petition and urge signers asking for the impeachment of Judge Hanford?—A. I know there was such a petition circulated in the Star.

Q. And what do you know about what followed the meeting at the Dreamland Rink, if you know it of your own knowledge?—A. I know that the only thing that I can give you is evidence which has been given to me and can be offered here if necessary.

Q. Was the editor or owner of the Seattle Star brought into Judge Hanford's court as a result of what happened at the Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. Oh, I had something else in mind. Yes; the editor of the Star was brought into Judge Hanford's court.

Q. This young man that sits there, with the long black hair and with the glasses on, is he the owner of the Star or is he a reporter on the Star?—A. He is a reporter on the Star.

Q. What is his name?—A. Hurwitz.

Q. What is the name of the owner of the Star?—A. Le Roy Saunders is the editor. The Scripps-McRae people own it, I understand.

Q. It is owned by the Scripps-McRae people, which is a syndicate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of having something else in mind, Mr. Simonds, when I asked you about the Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. I know that the effigy of Judge Hanford, which was strung up at the Dreamland Rink meeting, was in the composing room of the Seattle Star before it was taken out to be strung up, and that the editor of the Star painted the face on the effigy.

Q. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you know it?—A. I have been told that by the gentleman who saw it.

Q. What is his name?—A. I pledged to him that I would not reveal it unless absolutely necessary. I can write it down and hand it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be sufficient.

The WITNESS. That will be sufficient.

Mr. MCCOY. I suggest that if the witness has made the pledge, and as we can find it out from the owner or editor of the Star, we do not ask him to break his pledge.

The WITNESS. That would be much more satisfactory.

Mr. HIGGINS. You may write the name down and hand it to me.

The witness here wrote the name on a piece of paper and handed it to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HIGGINS. Have you told now, to this committee, all of the facts and circumstances and conditions which led you to write the article which the chairman has interrogated you about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both as to local conditions, as you have observed them——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) And as to your sources of information upon which you based the article?—A. Everything that I can recall.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Were you acting as a reporter in court during any of these white-slave proceedings before Judge Hanford?—A. I have for the last 10 months.

Q. That is, as a reporter for the Times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Times report them fully?—A. The Times, as I recall it, printed everything that I wrote about it.

Q. What was its editorial position in regard to the matter?—A. Its editorial position was that the disagreeable features should not be put into the homes of the readers, and therefore they were left out.

Q. Well, what remained except disagreeable features?—A. Occasionally there was a story which could be told in such a way as to bring out the bad effects of the traffic, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't mean so far as your reporting is concerned, but I mean if there is any crusade on the part of the Times, editorially, against the white-slave traffic?—A. I would have to leave that to the editor of the paper, I could not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, you read the paper, didn't you?—A. You mean the Times?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; but I could not pretend to speak of its editorial policy toward it.

Q. What did you gather about it from reading its editorial?—A. I gathered that it is opposed to it.

Q. Very strongly?—A. Very strongly. The traffic known as the white-slave traffic; that, I presume, is what you refer to.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Simonds, do I understand from you that there was any sort of connection between the Dreamland Rink meeting and the action which followed it and the white-slave traffic?—A. I didn't intend to convey that. What I intended to convey was that the—you mean the effigy in the Dreamland Rink?

Q. The whole proceeding; yes.—A. And the white-slave traffic. The only thing I intended to convey was that the Star had been largely instrumental in the Dreamland Rink meeting and had previously attacked the House of the Good Shepherd. Those were the only two facts that I put together.

Q. Do you want the committee—you want the committee to draw some inference from your statement, otherwise it would not be worth making—do you want the committee to infer from your statement of those two facts that the white-slave traffickers had something to do with the Dreamland Rink meeting?—A. I would not say that they did not. I can't say that they did. I don't know.

Q. Could you name the persons who took a leading part in that meeting?—A I can name some of them.

Q. Do it.—A. Mr. Saunders, the editor of the Star; Mr. Erickson, a councilman; Mr. Fawset, I think he is Tacoma——

Mr. McCoy. What is he?

A. I don't know what he is doing, I think it is real-estate business.

Mr. McCoy. Was he mayor of Tacoma at one time?—A. I think so.

The Chairman. Who else?

A. Paul K. Mohr I can name.

Q. Who?—A. Paul K. Mohr. He is a baker at the county jail, I think. And there are others whose names have slipped my mind. Mr. Canfield, the business manager of the Star, was included in the arrest of Mr. Perry. I don't know that they took a part in the meeting.

Q. It seems to me I recall the names of some attorneys who were acting at that meeting. Am I right about that?—A. Turner?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't recall that.

Q. Horner?—A. Horner. Oh, yes; he was there, too.

Q. Do you recall any others?—A. I don't recall any others.

Q. Do you wish the committee to infer from your statements that those men, or any of them, were in any way connected with the white-slave traffic?—A. I would not myself accuse them of it; no, sir.

Q. I want you to make an explicit statement without ifs or ands about it.—A. You see, Mr. Chairman, you are assuming that I myself made the accusations contained in the article.

Q. I am assuming that you wrote the article.—A. Yes, sir; but I would not—I do not pretend to stand responsible for the accusations that are in it.

Q. And I am assuming that you know what it means to write and publish an article, and that you assume at least some responsibility for what you write and put in the paper.—A. Yes, sir. Well, I will assume the responsibility——

Q. (Interrupting.) Those assumptions are good, aren't they?—A. I will assume the responsibility that the judge believed that.

Q. Do you disclaim all further responsibility and publish it practically as his article, rather than your own?—A. No; I—I would publish the article as the judge's statement, told as I best could.

Q. But in the article, you write in the first person, practically, don't you?—A. I don't think so; no, sir.

Q. Well, waiving that and coming back to the question which I think you did not quite answer: Do you wish the committee to infer that the gentlemen whom you name as being active participants in the Dreamland Rink meeting were in any way connected with the white-slave traffic?—A. I have no such desire to—no desire to convey that inference at all.

Q. Well, do you by your answer mean to indicate that somebody else, whose information you are giving us, has so stated to you?—A. No, sir; not to my own knowledge.

Q. The reason I ask you is because of your connecting up the Dreamland Rink meeting with the white-slave traffic, which we have been discussing. I wanted to get you ideas about it quite clearly.—

A. Yes, sir. My idea was that it really started the prosecution; that was the only idea.

Q. Have you any further statement that you desire to make, Mr. Simonds?—A. No, sir; I have no statement that I wish to make.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. When you speak of the prosecution, you refer to this present investigation?—A. Well, taking it all the way through. This investigation here is merely, you might say, the culmination of what came before it here in Seattle.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Did Judge Hanford intimate in any way that he believed that Mr. Erickson and the other gentlemen whom you have named as being greatly interested in the rink meeting were in any way connected with or instigated by white slavers?—A. The only name that Judge Hanford mentioned to me was that of Mr. Perry, and that was the only name I used, I think, in the article.

Q. Did he mention his name as, or express his belief, that Mr. Perry was connected in some way with that traffic or was acting in its interests?—A. Yes, sir; that was his belief. I don't know that he could prove it.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Simonds, gentlemen?

You are entitled to claim your attendance fees, Mr. Simonds. That is all.

Gentlemen [addressing counsel], I think it is substantially agreed among us we will hold an evening session this evening. In view of that, would there be any objections to adjourning a little bit earlier?

Mr. HUGHES. I think it would be a very wise thing to do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in recess until 7.30 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Gentlemen, is there anything special that you want to take up at this hour?

Mr. HUGHES. I thought, Mr. Chairman, that we would go on at this hour with testimony relative to the Heckman & Hansen controversy. We have Judge Battle here, and Mr. Metcalfe, this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. He is here, is he?

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Battle and Mr. Metcalfe are both here.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, we had better use them while they are here. Who shall we have?

Mr. HUGHES. I should say Mr. Battle.

ALFRED BATTLE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. DORR. I would like to show Mr. Battle the paper that he was looking for, to see whether this is it.

The WITNESS. That is the paper.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Give your full name, Mr. Battle.—A. Alfred Battle.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have for how long?—A. A little over 24 years.

Q. You are engaged in the practice of the law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been at the bar?—A. Bar of this State and Territory?

Q. Yes.—A. Since 1888 in this State and Territory; came here in 1888 and was admitted in 1888.

Q. You have lived all of that time in Seattle, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Battle, were you one of the attorneys connected with the Heckman & Hansen matter?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I will just ask Mr. Hughes to go on with the examination and bring out such facts you desire.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the simplest way, Mr. Chairman, would be to ask Judge Battle——

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. I will do so now.

Go on and state what are the facts, detailing them in your own way, relative to the Heckman & Hansen receivership in the State court, and then follow it with an explanation of what transpired in the bankruptcy proceedings relative to the state of that firm in the Federal court.

A. Prefacing my statement, or, rather, answering the question, I will state that personally, while, although a member of the firm of Ballinger, Ronald & Battle at the time of this litigation, that being the then name of the firm, I did not attend personally to the suits known as the suits by the Scandinavian-American Bank against Heckman & Hansen, nor personally did I attend to any matter that may have arisen in what is known as the Curtis suit, or what may have arisen in the bankruptcy suit. I knew in a general way about those suits and proceedings had in them. My familiarity and knowledge regarding all these matters arose after the reference made by Judge Hanford of the petition to reopen the proceedings in bankruptcy to the master in chancery, Mr. Eben Smith, or Judge Eben Smith, it having been referred to him as special referee. All of these matters and all of these preceding suits and litigation were gone into in that hearing and in that proceeding, and I personally was present, in the capacity of the attorney of the Seattle Shipyards Co., and participated at the entire hearing of this matter before Judge Smith, Mr. Finch representing the petitioners and myself representing the Seattle Shipyards Co.

Permit me to state in this connection, if I may have page 1313 to 1319 of the proceedings before the committee, being the testimony of Mr. Finch——

Mr. MCCOY. Before the committee here, you say?

Mr. HUGHES. Before this committee.

A. This committee.

Mr. MCCOY. In these proceedings?

A. These proceedings; yes, sir. Mr. Finch testified, on page 1319, saying:

> I challenged them all down the line as to whom they represented, and I do not think that ever had come out at all.

Another question:

Did it ever transpire whom they claimed to represent?

Answer:

It never did.

Now, on page 68 of the testimony that was taken before Judge Smith in the matter of the reference on this petition to reopen——

Mr. McCoy. What page?

A. Page 68, Mr. Finch speaking:

Then, I think this is a good place to inquire who Judge Battle does represent.

Mr. Battle. The present owners of the property.

Mr. Finch. He told us the other day that he represented the purchaser of the property, who was Mr. Mayhew.

Mr. Battle. The owners of the property. You misunderstood me. If I was put upon oath, sir, I could not tell you who did purchase the property. I was not present, had nothing to do with that matter at that time, don't know who purchased it, even, except somebody may possibly have told me Mr. Mayhew was a purchaser. I don't know anything about that, but my understanding is he does not own it now; that the Seattle Shipyards Co. or some such company own it, and it is for that company that I appear. I do not know whether or not Mr. Mayhew even has any interest in that company or not, and don't care.

Now, that occurred about the first day of the six-months period that was consumed off and on in the hearing of this matter before the special referee. Mr. Finch was notified at that time for whom I appeared and represented.

Mr. McCoy. Was that the only appearance in the case in which it was stated who the party appearing represented?

A. I am not sure, Mr. McCoy; but possibly this will be found in the record also, that—I know if it is not in the record I so stated during that proceeding, whether formally in the matter of the hearing or informally—with these different members of the bar and gentlemen who had been assailed by Mr. Finch in this petition—that I stated to them that I was there for the purpose of seeing that all the evidence that existed was produced and brought out and that I was there representing the Seattle Shipyards Co. and would see that a full hearing was had and full evidence produced in reference to the issues presented by that petition for rehearing. I in no sense understood myself as formally representing anybody other than the Seattle Shipyards Co.

Mr. McCoy. If you don't mind the interruption——

A. None at all; no, sir.

Mr. McCoy. What was the interest of the Seattle Shipyards Co. in the matter at that time?

A. The Seattle Shipyards Co. was the owner of this property, it having acquired the same either as the original purchaser through Mr. Mayhew, through the receiver's sale that was made, or by subsequent purchase from him. I will touch upon that a little later in the development of the facts.

Mr. McCoy. Was it a creditor at any time of Heckman & Hansen?

A. The Seattle Shipyards Co.?

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Well, what was its standing in the bankruptcy proceeding?

A. It was the owner of the property that had been purchased.

Mr. McCoy. But did anybody assail the ownership of it?

A. Well, I assume that the petition to reopen the case necessarily assailed all the proceedings, the title to the property that was acquired under the proceedings.

Mr. McCoy. Well, I won't interrupt you. I will ask you those questions later, unless you prefer to go on with it now. If you think this is the best place, I will finish up on it.

A. Well, I think probably as I develop the general central points of the matter, as I understand them, that it will probably serve to explain more fully the situation.

Mr. McCoy. All right, Mr. Battle.

The Chairman. Proceed.

A. The plant known as the Heckman & Hansen shipyards plant was formerly owned and operated by a man named Henneger. Before 1900 Heckman or Heckman & Hansen had purchased from Henneger Henneger's one half interest in the property, the other half interest being owned by the Henneger children, who were then minors. The matter of that half interest was necessarily pending in court—in the probate court. Mr. Heckman desired likewise to purchase that half interest. In fact, it was in a manner if not advisable—if not essential, highly advisable—that Heckman & Hansen acquire the other half interest. Mr. Heckman himself stated in the matter of this hearing before the special referee these facts: That the half interest of the minors Heckman & Hansen desired to purchase; that he, Heckman, had had a talk, arrangement, understanding, or agreement—it is not made very definite which—with Henneger, the guardian of the minors, that the firm of Heckman & Hansen would like to and would purchase the half interest of the minors in the property; that the firm did not have the money with which to make the purchase. It was estimated that purchase price would be between $4,500 and $5,000. That the arrangement——

Q. (Interrupting.) For a half interest?—A. For a half interest. That the arrangement that Heckman had had with Henneger was that Heckman & Hansen were to pay of that purchase price cash $2,000. Now, I am telling you what Mr. Heckman himself testified to before the special referee, that they were to pay cash to the guardian, $2,000, and that they were to pay $100 per month until the balance of the purchase price was paid in full, and that the balance of the purchase price of the property was to be secured by a mortgage upon the property. Now, I mention that, may it please the committee, for this reason: Mr. Finch has sought to, as I gather it from his testimony—to complain that Judge Ballinger, acting under power of attorney, gave a mortgage upon this property. Now, Mr. Heckman furthermore in his testimony stated that he and Judge Ballinger took up with the bank the matter of the bank advancing the money to use in, in effect, in substance—as near as possible in his language—that the bank was to step into the shoes of the guardian of the minors as contemplated in his purchase from the guardian had it been carried out with the guardian and the money not otherwise raised. Now, Mr. Heckman testified that when it was contemplated by him that he was to leave for Alaska that he gave to Judge Ballinger a power of attorney. That is true that he did give such power of attorney. Now, that power of attorney authorized Judge Ballinger not only to execute an obligation by way of a promissory note, but, if necessary, either chattel or real-estate mortgage. Now, Mr. Heckman in a portion of his testimony, when read from one light, expressed some surprise that a mortgage had been given upon this property to the bank, and I call your attention to his testimony, because he stated that he was to give to the guardian a mortgage and that the bank was to take the position of the guardian.

Mr. HIGGINS. What page does that appear on?

A. You will find that on page 635.

Mr. HIGGINS. Of the testimony taken before the master?

A. Yes, sir. I do not desire to take any more time in detailing this matter than necessary; in fact, I desire to hurry through. I don't know whether or not the committee or anyone desires to have me read this.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it voluminous?

A. Not very.

The CHAIRMAN. Use your judgment.

A. Yes, sir. On page 635 of the testimony given by Mr. Heckman before the special referee the following questions and answers were propounded and made:

By Mr. BATTLE:

Q. Mr. Heckman, when your firm was about to purchase the interests of the Hennigar minors, which consisted, as I understand, of an undivided one-half of the Hennigar property, you desired to borrow $5,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What officer of the Scandinavian-American Bank did you talk to relative to borrowing this money?—A. At first I did not think it was necessary to borrow the money, but in a conversation with Judge Ballinger, on account of Mr. Hennigar's going around the yard considerably, and he was more or less of a nuisance and sooner than to have him to deal with on account of doing business with the bank, I thought it would be better to deal with the bank as Ballinger said. Ballinger said that if he suggested and recommended it, why the bank would take over the obligation of Hennigar, if I would sooner deal with the bank than Hennigar personally, which I suggested, and at the time we went down to see Mr. Grondahl and Mr. Soelberg, I think we saw both of them.

Q. You do not mean to say that you were going to purchase the interest of the minors on credit and give your obligation to the guardian of the minors?—A. The time when we purchased the property—it was understood the first deal when we purchased the one-half that we were to pay so much for the whole property if we had put in a bid.

Q. But you understood that the interest of the minors was to be sold under the order of the probate court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not understand that you were going to give the guardian of the minors a note and mortgage upon the property for the purchase price?—A. The contract that we were to have with them was that $2,000 paid down, and, I think, $100 every month except the last month, when it was paid in full. That was the contract that we were to act on, or that is the bid which we turned in to them. I haven't seen it since, but it was sent in. That the first payment was to be secured, of course, upon this property. The payment was to be secured upon the property or the contract of payment, the same as I bought the other property.

Q. Exactly; but it was to be secured by mortgage upon the property, you so understood it?—A. Why, it was to be secured by contract of payment or mortgage, or whatever you call it.

Q. In other words, the property was to be held as security for the payment of the balance of the purchase price?—A. Why, certainly.

Now, also, you will find this carried out on pages 436, 437, and 438 of the testimony.

I have no personal knowledge as to what transpired between Mr. Heckman and Judge Ballinger when Mr. Heckman executed to Judge Ballinger the power of attorney under which Judge Ballinger executed to the bank the $5,000 note and mortgage. Of course I only knew that as hearsay, I know it simply——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). The power of attorney is the one that was admitted in evidence here?

A. Yes, sir. I would like to state to you gentlemen that this testimony—I think you fully understand that already—only represents the testimony that was taken before the special referee by witnesses produced by Mr. Finch. In addition to those witnesses, numerous witnesses were produced or called by myself, representing the Seattle Shipyards Co. Among the witnesses were Judge Ballinger, Mr. Reynolds, Judge Hoyt, and numerous other witnesses. Now, to fully state this so far as I——

The Chairman (interrupting). Mr. Battle, were there any others called on that side of the case than those who had been accused by Mr. Finch?

A. You mean any other witnesses?

The Chairman. Yes, sir.

A. Oh, yes. For instance, I answer that this way: I say "Oh, yes" because I am morally certain, without refreshing my recollection, that was the situation, because it was not merely to call those who had been accused but also any witnesses who might know anything regarding any of the facts involved, the issues, or any fact that would be pertinent to the issues involved. The report, I may say, of the special referee gives a full list of the witnesses, and this testimony will give to you the name of the witness whose testimony was brought up. But the report of the referee gives a full list of all the witnesses.

The Chairman. Proceed, Mr. Battle.

A. Now, therefore, detailing the matter in somewhat of a chronological order, and of course giving it to you gentlemen only as I know it from the testimony produced before the special referee, the situation regarding that matter was that Mr. Heckman, intending to make a trip to Alaska, and inasmuch as this bid had been put in to the court, for the interest of the Henneger minors, and anticipating that the matter may arise to be closed up in the event there were successful bidders during his absence, he left with Judge Ballinger a power of attorney. That power of attorney—I will simply verify what has already been stated here—is in the handwriting of Mr. Tennant, who was then a clerk in our office. The major portion of it is a printed power of attorney, but the use of the words "me" and "my" and the name of R. A. Ballinger is written in.

Mr. Hughes. It would be well to state that Mr. A. J. Tennant is now deceased.

A. Yes, sir; Mr. Tennant died about a year ago. It developed in the hearing, by Mr. Tennant and Judge Ballinger, before the special referee, that Mr. Heckman came into the office and desired that this power of attorney be prepared for him to execute to Judge Ballinger, Judge Ballinger at that time knowing nothing about it—if present in the office was busy, engaged with some client. It was drawn up by Mr. Tennant, pursuant to Mr. Heckman's instructions and request, and was by Mr. Heckman taken and delivered by him to Judge Ballinger, saying that he had prepared and desired to leave with him a power of attorney, in order to carry out the matter of the consummation of the purchase of these properties and the securing of the money from the bank, pending his absence in Alaska. That there was no arrangement made with any official of the bank that a $5,000 loan was to be obtained running for a period of five years; that there had been some talk about whether or not Heckman & Hansen, provided they could secure the half interest—the remaining half interest in this property—could get financial accommodation at the bank, and, beyond their being reasonably assured that they could not get such accommodation, there was no arrangement made as to any period of time that the obligation when executed was to run.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Was this $5,000 to be used to purchase the half interest from the Henneger minors?—A. Yes; so understood even by the bank people, and everybody, that was what the money was wanted for.

Mr. Higgins. Does that appear in the testimony before the master?

A. Yes, sir; I take it—I don't think there is any dispute whatsoever regarding that question. Now, in reference to——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). You say it appears in the testimony; you mean that it did appear in the testimony, or does it appear?

A. It does appear in the testimony.

Q. In this typewritten transcript?—A. It appears even by Heckman's own testimony that it is what they wanted the money for and why he wanted to arrange for the money. In other words, this man Henneger, they could have purchased it, if the committee please——

Q. (Interrupting.) I understand, I just wanted to know——

A. (Interrupting.) But they did not want to deal with Henneger, they wanted to get him out of it. Some disagreeable features connected, according to Heckman's contention, with his having to deal with Henneger.

Now, in referrence to the chattel mortgage that was taken up by the bank, that chattel mortgage was given by Heckman & Hansen to a party whose name I do not now just call to mind, nor is it material, for some machinery that had been furnished to the firm of Heckman & Hansen. Heckman & Hansen wanted the money to take up that mortgage and carry it or take it up. Heckman, on page 580 of the testimony, testified in answer to the following question as follows:

> Q. I wish you would tell the court how the bank came to have the $650 mortgage on your property?—A. I purchased some machinery up in North Seattle, from a man named G. N. Wheeler, and at the time the property was transferred there was a $650 mortgage held by a man by the name of Fossman. He wished the money paid over and I made that arrangement with Mr. Grondahl, at that time vice president of the Scandinavian-American Bank, to take up that mortgage which he did.

I mention that so as to show to the committee that the bank was not going out buying up any claims against Heckman & Hansen, but that Heckman & Hansen, being a customer of the bank, and desiring the bank to take this note and mortgage, that it was at their request and their request only that the bank did so.

This brings me to the note and mortgage referred to as the $3,000 note and mortgage. Now, this note and mortgage is dated toward the latter part of November of 1900, after the $5,000 note and mortgage had been given and executed. This $3,000 note and mortgage was executed by Heckman & Hansen personally, and also by Heckman or Hansen acting for the firm; Judge Ballinger, in other words, did not execute that note and mortgage, but it was executed by Heckman & Hansen personally. Now, I refer to that matter for this reason: That $3,000 note and mortgage represents this: There was what was known as the Winsor property. The Winsor property was a piece of real estate that adjoined the Heckman & Hansen plant. They desired to purchase also that property, just as they desired to purchase the half interest of the minors. Now, I am giving you what Mr. Heckman himself says about this. Mr. Heckman said that he wanted to know whether or not if he bought that property the bank would finance him; in other words, carry them for it. Mr. Grondahl or Mr. Soelberg—and I am using his own testimony in this matter—you will find it at page 548—I think that is the page—Mr. Grondahl or Mr. Soelberg, whichever it was, stated to him that the bank would advance him the $3,000 or the money to purchase the Winsor property, provided Mr. Chilberg would go out and look at the property and report favorably. Mr. Heckman says that Mr. Chilberg, pursuant to instructions given to him by Mr. Soelberg or by Mr. Grondahl, did go out to Ballard—you gentlemen, I think, understand this property is located at what we call Ballard——

The CHAIRMAN. It is an addition, an old addition to the city?

A. Yes, sir; now in the corporate limits, but not so at that time. Mr. Chilberg—J. E. Chilberg—did go to Ballard, looked over the property and Mr. Heckman says that in a day or two thereafter that either Mr. Grondahl or Mr. Chilberg, I don't know which he states, telephoned to him to come in, that Mr. Chilberg's report was favorable and that they would let him have the money. He went in and Heckman & Hansen, acting through one or the other for the firm, and then Heckman & Hansen also individually, executed this $3,000 note and mortgage to the bank, which represented the purchase price of the Winsor property. Now, as stated, that note and mortgage was dated on the 22d day of November, 1900; the other note and mortgage being dated October 31, 1900.

In this mortgage that was executed by Heckman & Hansen themselves they remortgaged or mortgaged over the same property that is covered by the $5,000 mortgage, plus the Winsor property. They also state in this mortgage as follows:

> This mortgage is made subject to that certain indenture of mortgage heretofore made and executed by and between the parties hereto on the 31st day of October, 1900, upon description No. 1 above and recorded in volume 175, page 401, of Mortgages of the records of King County, Wash., and also that certain mortgage made by the parties of the first part to Carstens & Earles (Inc.), on the 15th day of November, A. D. 1900, upon description No. 2 above, recorded in volume —, at page —, of Mortgages, and is expressly given as subsequent and inferior to said mortgages above described.

I call attention to that because they in this second mortgage, executed personally by themselves, recognize fully the first mortgage, states that this is a second mortgage upon that property, etc.

Mr. MCCOY. You haven't any knowledge whether that was ever read to them, I suppose, or whether they read it?

A. No; I don't. I was not present when it was executed.

Mr. HUGHES. Was that signed by Heckman & Hansen each individually?

A. Each individually.

Q. And the note also?—A. The note also.

Q. Would it not be well to explain about the Carstens & Earles mortgage—what that was?—A. Well, there was what is known as the Carstens & Earles mortgage, which was a prior mortgage, or then existing mortgage, upon this Winsor property, as I understand it, and it was still on there when Heckman & Hansen purchased the property from whoever they did. It was known as the Winsor property. I don't know who the deed came from. In other words, they still took it subject to the Carstens & Earles mortgage.

Q. Do you remember the amount of the Carstens & Earles mortgage?—A. I don't, but it seems—I have an indistinct recollection that it was two or three thousand dollars. Now, this completes a statement to the committee of the execution of these matters so far as the notes and mortgages are concerned, coupled with the chattel mortgage.

Now, it may not be out of order to state what brought about this litigation. The schooner Alice was put in the shipyards of Heckman & Hansen for some repairs, the exact nature of which I am not familiar with, nor do I think it very material. The bank claimed that Heckman & Hansen had arranged with them to borrow the money to carry them to enable them to go ahead in making these repairs and allow them to overdraw. They did overdraw. The exact amount I do not call to mind. I believe it has been stated here between six and seven thousand dollars, or possibly more.

Mr. McCoy. You mean that the bank claimed that they overdrew and they claimed that they did not overdraw?

A. Well, I don't mean to say that I am stating—I am merely stating the claims of the parties in that respect. The bank claimed that it was an overdraft. I can not state to you just what Heckman & Hansen have claimed in reference to it.

Mr. McCoy. Well, didn't they claim that the bank held a mortgage on the Alice at that time?

A. I don't know that the bank held any mortgage, but if the bank did—but I am not stating definitely that it did or did not—I believe that the bank did hold a mortgage, either of $15,000 or $20,000, upon the boat, and it stood in the name of some officer of the bank, but, of course, probably was the bank's property.

Mr. McCoy. Yes. Well, now, that is just the point.

Mr. Hughes. You mean the loan or the ship?

A. Oh, I mean the loan. I don't mean the ship.

Mr. McCoy. What is that?

A. I mean the loan stood in some officer's name for the bank when I say——

The Chairman (interrupting). We understood it.

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. And was not the claim that Heckman & Hansen made, or Heckman, that, having the mortgage on the ship, the bank wanted to have it repaired, and that they went to the bank with Mr. Ballinger, or without him—I don't remember which—and made the arrangement by which they should make the repairs and the bank put up the money for them as the repairs were made; wasn't that the controversy between the parties, the bank claiming, on the other hand, that—but it was further arranged, as I remember their contention, that Heckman & Hansen could draw on the bank as they went ahead doing the work on the Alice, and then a time came when the bank contended that those were overdrafts which they made?

A. I have heard that stated by Mr. Finch in his testimony before this committee, and I don't say that it was not—maybe have so been contended before. You gentlemen understand this testimony was taken back in—taken a number of years ago, and while I have undertaken, in the time at my command, to familiarize myself with it as much as possible, I have not been able to thoroughly refresh my recollection in all of its details. I do not call to mind definitely that that matter was ever made an issue in any respect, that I had to do with this matter. I can only answer it, Mr. McCoy, that way. Yet, upon the other hand—I will not state, because my recollection I don't like to trust to—that it was not so contended before the referee.

Mr. HIGGINS. What is the fact, if you know?

A. Beg pardon?

Mr. HIGGINS. What is the fact?

A. Well, I think the undoubted fact is that the bank allowed them to overdraw—in other words, they were financing them; it was a debtor and creditor relation that existed.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, what is the fact as to the existence of a contention between the bank on the one hand and Heckman & Hansen on the other?

A. You mean as to the contention?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

A. Well, I would like to be able to answer, Mr. McCoy, your question more definitely than I am able to, but I am not, and I do not like to venture my memory on this thing unless I had had a greater length of time to look over this evidence.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask him a question or two?

The WITNESS. I repeat, I don't call to mind that, at any phase of this matter that I had to do with it, that that question arose.

Mr. HUGHES. I think if I were to ask a question or two here it might show the immateriality of the subject of inquiry.

Q. The schooner Alice was abundantly good for the repairs, was it not?—A. Not only was abundantly good, but Heckman & Hansen then proceeded to libel the boat.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, you have heard——

Mr. HUGHES. Had, in admiralty, a first lien for the repairs upon the vessel?

A. Yes; and received, as the result of the proceeding in admiralty, their entire claim.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Battle, let me ask you a question.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you conceive that it made any difference to a firm which was borrowing money, as you have testified, whether or not they were called upon to pay $6,000 as an overdraft or were forced to rely upon the establishment of a lien in a lawsuit in admiralty?

A. Why, I suppose it would make a difference to the borrower. Now, in this connection, what in a large measure precipitated or brought about this litigation: On June 12, 1901, the bank desired to have Heckman & Hansen execute this paper. It is dated and reads as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., June 12, 1901.

The undersigned, Heckman & Hansen, a copartnership composed of A. Heckman and M. Hansen, for value received, hereby sell, transfer, assign, and set over unto the Scandinavian-American Bank of Seattle all that certain claim and demand now owned and held by the said Heckman & Hansen against the American schooner Alice, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with their maritime lien against said schooner for material and labor furnished in her repair and for moneys advanced to said vessel, as is more particularly shown by the statements hereto attached and made a part hereto, amounting to the total sum of—

That was left blank as the paper was drawn, and in lead pencil I find here "$8,017.26." I don't know who put it there. I suppose it probably represents the correct amount of the overdraft or advances. [Proceeding to read:]

And the undersigned hereby assign any and all right to enforce such claim and lien by libel or otherwise against said vessel, her owner or owners, and hereby authorize said Scandinavian-American Bank, in their names or in the name of said bank, to bring such suit or action as may be necessary to enforce the claim and demand aforesaid, together with the maritime lien or liens hereto connected. This assignment is made as collateral security to the said bank for obligations and overdrafts now held by the said bank against said Heckman & Hansen, and the undersigned hereby authorize said bank to apply on their indebtedness to said bank any and all sums received by virtue of this assignment. In witness whereof said Heckman & Hansen have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Heckman & Hansen refused to execute this paper. Then for the first time is where the matter of differences came between the bank and Heckman & Hansen. The bank was not longer to——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). May I ask right there who was the attorney for the bank at that time?

A. Ballinger, Ronald & Battle.

Mr. McCoy. And they drew that paper?

A. I think so; yes, sir. I say I think so, because I have no absolute knowledge; but I think that was the fact.

The bank was not willing to let this matter remain with their continual overdrawing, and about this time, or if not preceding this time, the matter had reached an issue between Heckman & Hansen and the bank as to whether Heckman & Hansen's obligations were one of overdraft or whether it was simply one of advancement by the bank upon its own property.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Then that answers the question I asked some time before; that was the contention, wasn't it?—A. I say I suppose that that was the situation.

Q. I understood you to say——A. (Continuing.) Because——

Q. I understood you to say just now, positively, that that was the first time——A. (Interrupting.) That is my understanding, Mr. McCoy. I say my understanding, I know that simply—I was not present when any of these matters occurred or transpired, and therefore I have to use the word understanding as distinguished between something that I absolutely know. I understand—I want to make that clear that I understand that that was the issue.

Now, then, it was that Heckman & Hansen employed Messrs. Metcalfe & Jurey, attorneys, a law firm then and now in this city, to represent them, and the libel suit against the schooner Alice was instituted and the boat libeled.

Q. In other words, Metcalfe & Jurey by libeling the boat abandoned any claim that Heckman & Hansen might have made that the bank had been making advances to them?—A. I suppose that that would probably be the practical effect or result. Whether or not it would be an estoppel against Heckman & Hansen as a legal proposition I would not like to state.

Q. Well, if Heckman & Hansen had previously claimed that the money paid by the bank to them on these drafts was a payment for work, labor, and services on this boat, and if later they did libel the boat, they could do it only on the ground that they were not paid, couldn't they?—A. Well, Heckman & Hansen would have a right to libel in the boat in any event, because they furnished the labor and the material.

Q. They would have a right to libel a boat for a claim that had been paid to them?—A. No; not for a claim that had been paid to them.

Q. They contended that this money which was paid to them on these drafts was in payment for that work on the boat?—A. Well, I——

Q. (Interrupting.) And if they were right, then they had been paid and they could not thereafter, except as anybody can file a paper—they could not successfully contend that they had a lien against the boat when they had been paid for the very work this the libel——A. (Interrupting.) I fully understand that, but just what their contention is, Mr. McCoy, I would not like to undertake to state, because I was not personally at any conversation.

Q. I am not trying to aid you to that at all. I say if that is the case——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) They did practically, by filing a libel suit, abandon any right to contend that they had been paid by the bank; that would be so, wouldn't it?—A. Well, I am inclined to think as a practical proposition, as I say, it would be so construed. Whether or not they would be estopped afterwards on claiming that it was not true, I doubt that as a legal proposition, because estoppel would have to be mutual; there is nothing there that would estop the bank.

Q. I don't mean that. It would be practically an estoppel?—A. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Battle, if the bank, simply holding the mortgage upon the schooner Alice, advanced money to Heckman & Hansen, and that was understood between the bank and Heckman & Hansen as advances in payment for the repairs upon the schooner Alice, the bank would have no recourse whatever for the recovery of its money and no lien in admiralty against the schooner, would it?

A. None at all; none whatsoever.

Mr. McCoy. Well, that might easily happen. It would just simply show that the bank was not shrewd enough to get the security before it made the advance.

The Chairman. Wasn't it likely, on that theory, that the arrangement that was made between the bank and Heckman & Hansen was that the money should be advanced only as the work was being done, so that the bank thereby by that arrangement secured proper application of the money?

A. Oh, no; I take it——

The Chairman (continuing). Whereas if it was a loan they would not have taken such precaution?

A. I take it that in the matter of financing a concern that way that they simply advanced the money just as the borrower would overdraw or ask for the money; they would not make the loan in one total amount, because it would be an indefinite amount, in a large sense.

Mr. Hughes. What I meant by my question is this: Without an assignment such as you read a moment ago from Heckman & Hansen to the bank, the bank, if it made advances upon the theory you say Heckman & Hansen claimed, would have had no recourse against the schooner Alice?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. And it was demanding this assignment so that it would have the admiralty lien for the repairs made by the proceeds of the moneys advanced Heckman & Hansen?—A. That would be the effect of it. That is what the instrument says.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, proceed, Mr. Battle.

A. Now, I think—and I don't do it in any respect whatsoever in a desire to criticize anybody, and I don't state it in that intention or with that view at all, but for you gentlemen to understand fully this matter I think I ought to state that Mr. Heckman was a man very litigiously inclined; he was impatient, disposed to look at things in a suspicious viewpoint. That will be disclosed, I think, from different matters as I proceed in developing the statement of these outlying facts. Now, this demand was made in June, 1900, and in July, 1900, the bank brought suit to foreclose these mortgages.

Mr. HUGHES. Before or after the suit in admiralty by Heckman & Hansen against the schooner Alice?

A. Before, you say?

Mr. HUGHES. Before or after? I ask you which.

A. After, as I understand.

Mr. MCCOY. That would be July, 1901, wouldn't it?

A. July, 1901, I should say; yes, sir. I stand corrected—July, 1901. I think it was on the—[referring to paper]—July 5, 1901.

Mr. MCCOY. What do you say happened then, Mr. Battle—they brought suit?

A. The suit was brought by the bank to foreclose these mortgages. Now——

Mr. MCCOY. Excuse me; the mortgage securing the $5,000 note and the $3,000?

A. The $3,000 note and also the chattel mortgage. Shortly thereafter the Curtis suit was brought, namely, on July 11; that followed about four days after the filing of the suits by the bank.

Mr. HUGHES. To make it clear, the Curtis suit was a suit by a creditor by the name of Curtis on a claim of about $1,600, in which application was made for the appointment of a receiver and in which suit Peter L. Larsen was appointed as receiver?

A. He was appointed as receiver, and he was appointed as the friend, and because he was the friend and was desired to be appointed by Heckman & Hansen.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Judge Griffin stated this morning that he was appointed because he was the best man for the place?—A. Yes, sir; the judge thought so.

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Griffin——

A. (Interrupting.) And I have no doubt he was a good man for that place, but what I mean to say is he was a friend of Larsen's—or of Heckman & Hansen.

Mr. HUGHES. He testified, Mr. McCoy, that he was appointed partly for that reason but because he was recommended by counsel for the plaintiff.

Mr. MCCOY. I understand.

Mr. HUGHES. And because he had been foreman.

Mr. MCCOY. I simply thought Mr. Battle had laid certain emphasis on the fact that he was a friend of Mr. Heckman's. I just wanted to put into the record right there what Judge Griffin said this morning, so that they could go together; that is all.

A. In fact, the bank——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). I would like to ask you a question right there, Mr. Battle, about the law here in Washington. I understand that this Curtis suit was a suit on an account stated?

A. I so understood.

Q. Is there any statutory provision for the appointment of a receiver at the commencement of a suit of that kind in this State?—A. Oh, yes, sir. A suit of any nature or character, a receiver may be appointed upon proper allegations being made.

Q. That is, before judgment and just on the beginning of suit?—A. At the beginning of a suit.

Q. In the nature, practically, then, of an attachment?—A. Yes, sir; to take hold of and conserve and preserve the property and to administer it pendente lite.

Q. And that is regardless of nonresidence of the defendant or anything of that kind?—A. Well, yes. Of course it would have to be such a suit as the court would have jurisdiction of or——

Q. (Interrupting.) I mean that, of course, but I mean there is no—as in other States, for instance, in order to get an attachment at the beginning of a suit there has to be some ground for it, like that of the defendant being a nonresident——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Of the State. But here, as I understand you, the law is that simply on beginning your action on a mere contract obligation a receiver is appointed, as a matter of course, on putting up the necessary bond?

A. Well, it is generally upon hearing and notice given to the other side.

Q. Yes. Well, I mean——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) That being done?—A. Yes; that being done.

Q. And does it make any difference how large the amount of the claim is as compared with the value of the property taken into possession by the receiver, or does the receiver simply take all the property of the defendant?—A. It would not make any difference, Mr. McCoy, as to the amount sued on, provided it be the receivership is sought particularly on the score that either the institution is insolvent or threatened with insolvency, because then that would embrace other claims beside that of the plaintiff, as a practical legal proposition.

Q. Then does that allegation of insolvency or threatened insolvency have to be made before you can get a receiver?—A. If that be the ground of the receivership, yes; but the receivership may be granted under the statute of this State in case, for instance, of a partnership disagreement.

Q. That is nothing peculiar to the law of Washington; that is true of the law of any State.—A. I am giving you the statutory provision, is all.

Q. But what I don't get yet, and I presume it is my fault, is this: Can you get the appointment of a receiver in the State of Washington on a suit on a promissory note which merely alleges that the man made the note and that it has fallen due, and he has not paid it, and you demand payment?—A. Not at all; no, sir.

Q. You have to go in court on affidavits?—A. Affidavits, or upon a hearing the complaint may be taken as an affidavit, if it is sworn to.

Q. Yes; the complaint may be, but what is there in addition to a mere cause of action—the statement of a mere cause of action in the complaint—that you have to allege in order to get a receivership?—A. Well, now, as applied, for instance, to this particular situation——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, if you don't mind, I would like to have—I just want to find out what the law is so that I can understand the situation.—A. Well, there may be a great many—a great many different causes or reasons in law that would authorize the appointment by the court of a receiver.

Q. Well, then, I see of course my question covered too much. Assume that in this case a cause of action had been stated merely on the ground stated——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Nothing else in the complaint; that there had not been a single affidavit filed in that court, but that the plaintiff had gone into court on that complaint stating merely a cause of action on a contract, could he have had a receiver appointed?—A. No; not upon simply stating the account.

Q. Then in addition to that, in a case like this, or, to take this case, it was necessary to allege there was insolvency or threatened insolvency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, is the receiver appointed for the purpose of conserving the property, or for winding up the affairs of the alleged debtor?—A. A receiver is appointed to conserve the property, look after the property; and as to whether or not the receivership is to continue and let the litigation continue, to see whether or not the receivership will work out its indebtedness, or whether it will be ordered to be sold immediately, is a question solely in the discretion of the court after hearing the evidence and the proofs on that subject.

Q. Well, then, in order to warrant the sale of property taken into the receiver's possession in this matter, it was necessary for somebody to go into court and allege that there was no use going on with the business; that it was substantially a hopeless situation; is that right?—A. No. The court, in the absence of anyone coming in with a contrary showing and showing to the court that they can immediately—practically immediately—I mean as a practical proposition immediately work out its indebtedness, or will be able to finance the indebtedness, the court will take the position, ordinarily, under our practice here, that it will not simply run a receivership as a business proposition.

Q. But if there is not any showing made that the business can be run and the indebtedness worked out, is the property then sold just in the ordinary course of procedure, or is there a further application to the court?—A. Well, it will be sold in ordinary procedure, but—that is, the court could do it on its own motion, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) But do they?—A. But ordinarily a motion is made asking for a sale of the property.

Q. I have here Pierce's Washington Code, edition of 1905. Mr. Dorr has called my attention to section 575. Are these the provisions of your law here in regard to the appointment of a receiver?—A. Yes, sir; that is the statutory law of the State.

Mr. McCoy. I would like to have that copied in at the proper place.

A. And you will notice the particular language in the sixth section there.

Q. I have not read it all at all.—A. Yes.
Q. I just wanted to have it.
Mr. McCoy. You can copy that in later on.
The Witness. I don't think there had been any amendment to the law.
The Chairman. What section do you want copied there?
Mr. McCoy. Section 575.

Section 575 of Pierce's Washington Code reads as follows:

A receiver may be appointed by the court in the following cases:
1. In an action by a vendor to vacate a fraudulent purchase of property, or by a creditor to subject any property or fund to his claim.
2. In an action between partners, or other persons jointly interested in any property or fund.
3. In all actions where it is shown that the property fund or rents and profits in controversy are in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured.
4. In an action by a mortgagee for the foreclosure of a mortgage and the sale of the mortgaged property, when it appears that such property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured; or when such property is insufficient to discharge the debt, to secure the application of the rents and profits accruing, before a sale can be had.
5. When a corporation has been dissolved, or is insolvent, or is in imminent danger of insolvency, or has forfeited its corporate rights.
6. And in such other cases as may be provided for by law, or when, in the discretion of the court, it may be necessary to secure ample justice to the parties, provided that no party or attorney or other person interested in an action shall be appointed receiver therein.

The Witness. Now, the bank, believing of the close friendship and relation existing between Receiver Larsen and Heckman & Hansen, started a movement with a view of having Larsen removed as receiver. I was just stating that the bank believed that so close was the relation and friendship between Receiver Larsen and Heckman & Hansen that they inaugurated a proceeding to have Larsen removed as receiver. I don't think—I know that affidavits were prepared to that effect, I think I prepared one myself that I call to mind. I don't believe, however, the matter got as far as being filed in court.

Now, you will find in the record that Heckman criticizes Larsen, the receiver, in his testimony and in all these after proceedings. Larsen says that that was because he, Larsen, when receiver, was forced to remove Heckman from the premises. On page 93 of the testimony, in speaking of removal of Heckman from the premises:

Q. Is it not a fact that you had to take proceedings in court to get him out of your house?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. File affidavits and get an order of the court directing him to move?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And after that, up to the present time he has been against you in everything, has he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Now, then followed the bankruptcy proceedings. Of course, this was a voluntary proceeding in bankruptcy by Heckman & Hansen. Now, listening to Mr. Finch yesterday, as he gave his testimony, or day before, he stated to you, intending it evidently as some reflection upon Judge Ballinger, that a Mr. Brightman, who was a clerk in Judge Ballinger's office, had a claim assigned to him; that a Mr. Larrabee, who was in Judge Ballinger's office, had a claim assigned to him; that a Mr. Conover, who was then and had been a clerk in our office, had a claim assigned to him. Now, Mr. Finch knew then, or ought to know, what were the facts regarding that matter, because he brought out all of that evidence himself in the hearing before the special referee. Now, Mr. Tennant testified, and there was no testimony to dispute him at all, there was no one who would undertake to dispute him, because he was telling and narrating unquestioned facts——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Without comments as much as you can, Mr. Battle, and shorten your story as much as you can.

A. Yes; I will. That he had understood that Heckman was going to seek to control the election of a trustee in bankruptcy by the assertion of a fraudulent claim that, as we all know, number and amount control in bankruptcy proceedings in the election of a trustee. It was done then—being done now, I think, as far as I know, generally over the country.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Battle, it does not control, does it?

A. Yes, sir; it does.

Q. Do you mean to say that a referee can not appoint anybody trustee he wants to?—A. Why, the creditors have a right to elect.

Q. I wish you would look at the bankruptcy law and see what it says about that.—A. Well, I know that is our practice here.

Mr. HUGHES. That is what it says, too.

A That is what it says, as I understand the law, "that the creditors in number and amount."

Mr. MCCOY. All right.

A Now, that is, I repeat—it is not uncommon occurrence now and probably will continue to be for a certain number of the creditors to unite in the election of a trustee. It is a common thing in our practice here, and it is probably the same elsewhere.

Q. Suppose the creditors would choose some man who was not a proper man. Has the court got to have him because the majority in amount and number elect him?—A. I don't know, Mr. McCoy, whether it has—the selection has to be approved by the court—or not Possibly so, possibly so..

Q. Well, absolutely so.—A. Yes.

Q. There is not any question of possibility?—A. It ought to be. I have no objection to saying it ought to be.

Q. Creditors don't control a certain thing?—A. Well, they control—they certainly control in this jurisdiction. I don't know of a single instance where the court has refused to confirm.

Q Well, I have; but that may be the practice here, I don't know; but it is generally——A I don't know of anybody who has been elected who was not a suitable person, and I don't know of a single case where his election has not been confirmed.

But, in any event, now, that was the purpose of it. Mr. Tennant details that; that these gentlemen had these claims assigned to them in order that a capable, efficient, and honest trustee could be elected. Mr. Tennant didn't know Mr. Fisher at that time and so stated to Mr. Finch in answer to his question, that at the time Mr Fisher was elected Mr. Tennant didn't know him even Mr. Larrabee didn't, and Mr. Conover didn't, and these other gentlemen, but it was one of—it was a defensive move, pure and simple, because Tennant had understood that Heckman had gotten a trumped-up claim, a fictitious claim, and that claim was presented, and upon a contest being made upon that claim it was rejected Now, those are the facts.

Q. Who presented the claim, what attorney?—A. I don't know. I will read you what Mr. Tennant says about this.

Q. Well, unless he tells who the attorney is, it won't answer my question.—A. Maybe he does; beginning on page 192 he says:

We had received information——

Q. (Interrupting.) I will take it for granted that he says what you say, Mr. Battle.—A. I will see, Mr. McCoy, if I can——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Does it give the name of the attorney?

Mr. MCCOY. I want the name of the attorney.

A. "State whether or not"—oh, he mentioned the name of the claimant.

The CHAIRMAN. Please find the answer, if you can, Mr. Battle.

A. But the name of the attorney. I am trying to find the name, if I can, of the attorneys.

The CHAIRMAN. Do it, though. That is the objection.

A. Well, it is known as the Sturn claim.

Mr. HUGHES. Known as what claim?

A. Sturn, I think, is the name that is spelled—Sturn claim.

Mr. MCCOY. Maybe Mr. Finch can help us out on that. Who presented that claim, Mr. Finch; do you know?

Mr. HUGHES. Have you got the claim itself, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, then, you had better show him the claim.

Mr. FINCH. The claim that I think he referred to was the Fred Sturn claim, and my recollection is that it was presented by John B. Van Dyke.

Mr. DORR. That is correct. Here is the record.

Mr. MCCOY. My question is answered.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. And was rejected, wasn't it?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

The WITNESS. Mr. Tennant says it was.

Now, in reference to what has been said about criticisms of Gen. Metcalfe, Mr. Richard Saxe Jones, and others in re this litigation: As I have stated, these suits were brought in July, 1900. Now, the Curtis suit was brought——

Mr. DORR (interrupting). 1901.

A. 1901. The Curtis suit was brought largely for the purpose of counteracting the matter of the situation of these suits, and particularly to counteract the effect or the execution of any judgment that may be rendered therein, because under our practice in this State, when property goes into receivership the claims follow it into court, and the court will order, in the receivership, the property sold instead of permitting it to be sold in the foreclosure of a mortgage or the levy of an execution.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Battle, allow me to interrupt. I do not know that this is a proceeding in which we are aiming to study law, but some question has arisen as to what the bankruptcy act of Congress provides in respect to the election of a trustee, and I call the attention of Mr. McCoy to section 44 of that act.

Mr. MCCOY. I do not need it, Mr. Hughes; I know what the law is about it. It provides that the trustee shall be elected by a majority in amount and number, but it is always open to the control of the court. I don't need any instruction in the bankruptcy law in Washington.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not in Washington; it is an act of Congress.

Mr. MCCOY. You suggested that we were studying law. I wanted to impress on you that I was not.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I think the law reads a little differently from the way it has been stated. I do not think it is very material, however.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, please.

The WITNESS. Now, I submit to the court—or to the committee—that when Metcalfe & Jurey procured from Ballinger, Ronald & Battle a stipulation that no proceedings—that an order of sale that had been obtained in the suits that had been brought be stayed until February 1, 1902, that they were not only not subject to criticism by reason of that fact, but that they thereby procured something that they could not possibly have procured as the result of a contest, because judgment and decree had been rendered on December 18, 1901, in that litigation.

Now, then, after the expiration of February 1, 1902, within which it was stipulated that all proceedings be stayed, they went into court and over our objection and protest the court granted them a further stay of 30 days and ordering the staying of the execution of this order of sale for a period of 30 days. Now, I mention these matters because Mr. Finch, as I understand his testimony, has sought to convey the impression that those gentlemen were not only negligent but possibly guilty of something of a graver nature in re their conduct of this litigation. Now, then, the court in the receivership case ordered the sale of the property. I heard, yesterday I believe it was, Mr. Finch's testimony in reference to that, and the entire remarks, some on the part of Mr. McCoy, I believe, of the committee and counsel in the case, as to what the effect of that sale was, as to whether or not it was or was not free from existing encumbrances. The committee had before them the entire record—I think the entire record of that, and I know I never had any question in my mind, nor do I know of the question ever having been seriously raised until Mr. Finch raised it in his brief before Judge Hanford in the matter of the petition to reopen the bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. MCCOY. Would you like to thrash that out again, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. What is it?

Mr. MCCOY. I say, will we have another legal discussion?

The WITNESS. But I want to state this, that during the forenoon—this morning I did undertake to see what the author of Cyc. had to say upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. What who had to say?

A. Cyc.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, an authority.

A. And I want to submit this to the consideration of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Just make a reference to it, Mr. Battle. That will be sufficient. If you want attention called to it, do it by reference.

A. I don't—it is the volume of Cyc. containing the subject of receivers.

The CHAIRMAN. What I mean is that we don't want you to recite to us now what Cyc. says about it.

A. No, sir; I am not going to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

A. But I want to call attention to this, that whatever construction may be given the effect of these reports, these sales, and these proceedings the creditors acted under that sale in the particular of receiving their money.

Mr. McCoy. Sure. Why shouldn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. That is what any creditor is looking for.

A. No, sir; not if he was not entitled to participate in that he could not participate in it, and if he did participate in it he would waive something that he had.

The Chairman. Now, please leave out the discussion. You may go on.

A. But even for the purpose of the argument, and solely for the purpose of the argument, let it be admitted that the sale was subject to these encumbrances. The committee will bear in mind that this sale was made by the Federal court in the bankruptcy proceedings, but by the State court in the receivership proceedings, and if there was any money the result of that sale coming to anybody it was the business of that party to go into that court for it.

The Witness. Now, the property was sold, and this brings us to the subject of who were the purchasers. The facts are as follows: Mr. J. E. Chilberg, Mr. Kelley, and a Mr. Grondahl arranged for a credit at the Scandinavian-American Bank to the extent of $30,000 to provide a fund with which Mr. Mayhew, acting for them, was to bid at the sale of this property.

The Chairman. How many of them were officers and employees of the bank?

A. Probably all of them; if not officers, at least stockholders. Mr. Mayhew did put in a bid and was the successful purchaser of the property at the sale. Now, I would not undertake to consume the time of the committee in a discussion of the proposition as to what the books of the bank show or do not show. I will only state this, that if the committee will take this record that Mr. Finch himself has made and read the testimony of Mr. Lane, the assistant cashier at the bank; of Mr. Soelberg, who was then the cashier, there will be explained, I think, to your complete and entire satisfaction, every criticism that Mr. Finch has made of that matter.

Mr. McCoy. One criticism that he made, as I remember it, was that some one of those officers of the bank, or some one who appeared on their side of the proposition, denied any knowledge of who Mr. Mayhew was or what his interest in the property was.

A. Yes, sir; he did, and I want to show this committee what the facts are——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). Now, wait a minute. Did you answer my last question that some one in the bank did deny that the bank, or any of its officers, or anybody on that side of the proposition, had anything to do with Mr. Mayhew?

A. They never denied it; but I will show and demonstrate to this committee as completely as two and two make four—pardon this positive statement, however—in that respect. Now, to turn to Mr. Finch's testimony——

Mr. McCoy. Who was Mr. Finch?

A. Mr. Finch, who has just testified before this committee. Now, he testified, on page 1314 of the record, as follows: This is the testimony given by Mr. Finch on the day before yesterday before this committee, and the following questions and answers were made——

Mr. HIGGINS. You are reading now from the testimony before the master, are you?

A. No, sir; from the testimony before this committee.

Mr. MCCOY. This proceeding that is pending now?

A. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

Q. Go ahead. You were testifying as to what you offered to show.—A. I offered to show the connection of the bank with the present physical possession of the property which was then being held through this man Mayhew, or a person, or a corporation that was organized about that time named the Seattle Shipyard Co.

Q. You mean that Mayhew, or the corporation, purported to hold the title to the property of your clients, which had been sold by the receiver in the State court?—A. Exactly.

Q. And they claimed under the sale?—A. Exactly; I offered to show that this man Mayhew, or the corporation, as the case might be, was simply the agent of the bank. When we undertook to do so, several of the members of the bank's directorate—I think Mr. Soelberg and Mr. Grondahl and Mr. Chilberg, I believe it was—testified that the bank had nothing to do with the obtaining of the property; that they did not know the man Mayhew and were not interested in the property in any way.

Now, then, what are the facts? The facts are, in answer to Mr. Finch's own questions by these gentlemen as to whether or not they knew Mr. Mayhew when Mr. Finch was interrogating them a number of years ago before the master in chancery in regard to this identical matter to which he himself refers in the following transcript——

Mr. MCCOY. Now, let me ask you whether that happened before or after Mr. Finch came before Judge Hanford and asked for the production of the books?—A. So far as it occurred in the particular of interrogating these gentlemen as to whether or not they knew Mr. Mayhew, it occurred before—that is to say, when Mr. Finch came to Judge Hanford for this order he had only examined one officer, namely, Mr. Soelberg, and Mr. ——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, if you are answering my question, all right, but if you are not, I would like to ask it over again.—A. There was only one witness who had been examined by him at that time and that was Mr. Soelberg, and here is his question to Mr. Soelberg and here is Mr. Soelberg's answer [reading]:

Q. Or was it in the same year—in the fall of 1901?—A. It was.
Q. Do you know M. H. Mayhew?—A. Yes, sir.

Now, he says before this committee that they told him they did not know Mayhew.

Q. Was there any testimony in the proceedings before Judge Smith, before Mr. Finch came into Judge Hanford's court and asked for the books?—A. Yes, sir; that preceded it.

Q. (Interrupting.) Wait a minute—to the effect that the bank or its officers did not know who Mayhew was in the transaction, regardless of their acquaintance with him?

The WITNESS. I am going to take his testimony, and wherein he says——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). You can quote several places in there, and I know positively nothing about it, and I should not know where to look for anything else—I want to know where there was any such testimony.

A. There was none, excepting testimony the reverse of what he says.

Q. In other words——A. (Interrupting.) And that occurred before he applied to Judge Hanford for the order.

Q. (Continuing.) In other words, so far as any inquiry about Mr. Mayhew was concerned——A. (Continuing.) Before Judge Smith?

Q. (Continuing.) Before Judge Smith—that was the only inquiry that was made before he came into Judge Hanford's court?—A. Just so—absolutely the only thing—and here he said before this committee that they told him that they did not know Mayhew, and I have just read to the committee where Mr. Soelberg said and told him he did know Mayhew.

Q. I thought you said Mr. Finch was the only one who was examined?—A. No. The situation is this——

Mr. McCoy. I see that I am mistaken in that—Mr. Soelberg did testify and he said he did know Mr. Mayhew?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he at that time explain Mr. Mayhew's connection with the matter?—A. He did. I think so. There is the testimony in full, and I think in that testimony—you see he was afterwards put on the stand—I know he did then or thereafter, and I think at that time.

Q. Didn't you have a moment ago the place where he testified about his knowing Mr. Mayhew?—A. Yes, sir; it is on the second page of his testimony.

Q. Can not you find there whether he testified that Mayhew was acting for the bank officers?—A. He testified he was not acting for the bank officers.

Q. Who did?—A. Mr. Soelberg.

Q. I thought you said just now that he said he was, as a matter of fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that Mr. Soelberg and Grondahl and somebody else, officers of the bank, got together and put up $30,000?—A. I didn't say they were acting for the bank, but the reverse of it. They testified they were not acting for the bank. The bank had nothing to do with it, and they make that positive and clear in that testimony.

Q. Then we are making the distinction here between the bank as a corporation and these officers of the bank.—A. No, sir; not at all. An officer may perform an act, and because he performs an act and happens to be an officer of a bank it does not follow that that act has anything to do with his official capacity.

Q. Surely not; and I say we are making a distinction now, in talking about it, between the individuals and the officers.—A. Certainly. They did not act as officers; they acted as individuals, and the testimony of everyone who testified in reference to the matter so shows.

Now, then, so that when Mr. Finch made this statement he had only examined Mr. Soelberg; but he does not make that impression on this committee in this answer to this question. On page 1314 he says [reading]:

> And Mr. Chilberg, I believe it was, testified that the bank had nothing to do with the obtaining of the property; that they did not know the man Mayhew and were not interested in the property in any way.

And yet every one of them—Mr. Chilberg, Mr. Soelberg, Mr. Orondahl, and Mr. Lane, and every one of them—testified in answer to his own question that they did know Mayhew.

Mr. HUGHES. That appears in what record?

A. It appears in the record that I hold here, that was taken before Judge Eben Smith.

Mr. MCCOY. You are quite positive that those questions referred to a mere personal acquaintance with Mr. Mayhew, are you?

A. Yes, sir; absolutely so.

Q. You are absolutely——A. (Interrupting.) I will read it from the record itself.

Q. All right.—A. The first is that of J. E. Chilberg, on page 311 of the record, after first asking him what his occupation is, etc. Then on page 312 there is this question—this is by Mr. Finch to Mr. Chilberg:

Q. Do you know M. F. Mayhew?—A. Yes, sir.

And then, following that up, he asks him:

Q. Where did you first meet him?—A. In Seattle, about 20 years ago.

And then, on page 404——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). He did not examine him in regard to his connection with this matter.

A. Yes; he did.

Q. You do not think there was any possibility of an interpretation of any of the examination which would lead you to think that Mr. Finch meant "Do you know him in this transaction?"—A. No, sir; Mr. Finch meant to tell this committee that these gentlemen denied personally knowing Mr. Mayhew. That is the interpretation I put on his testimony, because he afterwards interrogated Mr. Chilberg and all the others as to who was connected with this matter and all about it. On page 404 Mr. Orondahl is being examined by Mr. Finch, and he is asked this question, among others, of course:

Q. Do you know M. F. Mayhew?—A. Yes.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him about two years.
Q. Do you remember the circu rstance of Mr. Mayhew purchasing the property of Heckinan & Hansen from the receiver appointed by the State court?

And then he proceeds on with that matter. Then on page 358 J. F. Lane, who was one of the officers of the bank, being interrogated by Mr. Finch:

Q. Do you know M. F. Mayhew?—A. Yes, sir; I do.
Q. Do you remember the circumstance of Mr. Mayhew being at the receiver's sale of the property of Heckman & Hansen some time in March, 1902?—A. Yes, sir; I know that he bought the property at that time.

And then he goes on with that matter. Now, that is the situation——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Battle, it may be clear to the committee, but it is not to me. You refer to the testimony of Mr. Soelberg in one of the exhibits filed here and then you refer to this volume of testimony again in reference to testimony that was taken subsequently. Is it the fact that this first testimony was taken before the special referee prior to the application to Judge Hanford for the order?

A. Yes, sir; it was, and that is my understanding——

Mr. HUGHES. Wait a minute. And the other testimony contained in this volume, spoken of as being a volume containing 886 pages, was taken after the order of Judge Hanford requiring the production of the books?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that to get all of the testimony you have taken the two reports?—A. Yes, sir; in other words, that first part of Mr. Soelberg's testimony is not in the volume containing the 886 pages.

Mr. HUGHES. You would have to take the two?

A. Yes, sir; you would have to take the two.

Mr. HUGHES. To take all the testimony?

A. Yes, sir. That arose this way: Mr. Soelberg was being examined; Mr. Finch wanted him to bring all the books of the bank up to Judge Smith's office. I objected, because there were a good many hundreds of pounds of books, and the bank was carrying on its daily business, and I told him he could go down there and have free access to every book in the bank, but that we objected to lumbering them up to Judge Smith's office. Well, he insisted upon having them there, and Judge Smith took the position that he would not order the bank officials to bring all their books up to his office, as they needed them momentarily in their business. Well, Mr. Finch thereupon proceeds to take such portions of Mr. Soelberg's testimony, he being the only witness then examined, and going before Judge Hanford and made his application and gets this order compelling the bank to produce all its books. Now, that was how this matter arose. He got his order, but Judge Hanford made a statement to him at that time to the effect and substance which I believe has already been stated before the committee.

Q. But he did get the order that he asked for?—A. I think he did; yes, sir. I know that he had us bring book after book there, and I know that he got every access to every book and every paper and document that he wanted at the bank.

Mr. MCCOY. Apparently Judge Hanford did not think the request unreasonable, because he gave him the order to have the books he wanted brought up there.

The WITNESS. He didn't think it unreasonable, or at least he gave it to him.

Q. Did it interfere with the business of the bank very much?—A. It would have if he was disposed to insist on their being brought there all at one time; but I want to say for his credit that he did not insist on our bringing them all up there at one time, and finally, I think, he accepted my proposition—that he should go down to the bank and examine them to his satisfaction and ad libitum.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the business of the bank went on all the time, just the same?

A. Yes, sir; the business of the bank went on all the same.

Q. Go on.—A. Now, then, I want to make a further statement in reference to a criticism which Mr. Finch has made of some of these gentlemen; for instance——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Battle, before you go on: In reference to the first report of the evidence, and which, as you say, preceded the volume containing 886 pages, was the demand of Mr. Finch and your response to it, whatever controversy there was, properly recorded in there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that they need not be left to the memory of Mr. Finch or yourself?—A. Yes, sir; or anybody else.

Q. But the Judiciary Committee can find what the facts are as recorded in the testimony?—A. They can.

Mr. HUGHES. I suggest, then, that the testimony——

The CHAIRMAN. Is that it in your hand?

Mr. HUGHES. I suggest that it go with the other volume and should be treated as a part of the entire testimony.

The WITNESS. Now, for instance, Mr. Finch stated to this committee and in this proceeding that the bank had paid C. A. Reynolds $150 and that he had not accounted for that money to Mr. Hansen, and I believe that matter was again referred to this morning in the investigation. Now, speaking of the $150 paid to Mr. Reynolds. Now, Mr. Reynolds was one of the witnesses who testified before Judge Smith, but his testimony is not in this volume of 886 pages; that is true of a number of other witnesses. Now, after Mr. Finch sought in that proceeding, as he has in this proceeding before this committee, to cast a reflection upon Mr. Reynolds anent this matter of the $150, I sent for Mr. Reynolds and put him on the witness stand and took his testimony. Now, Mr. Finch knows that because he was present and participated in the examination of Mr. Reynolds. What were the facts? Mr. Reynolds testified, just as Mr. Mayhew did in this testimony which Mr. Finch read from his testimony the other day—that $150 had been given to him, Reynolds, as a contributribution for Mr. Hansen, because of Mr. Hansen's affliction and then needy condition, and because he was the attorney of Hansen; that he notified promptly Mr. Hansen of the receipt of that money or the payment of that money to him for him, Hansen. Now, I am stating entirely from memory, and I understand Mr. Reynolds himself will be here in a day or two, and when he comes, if I make any mistake he can correct it, because, as I repeat, I am testifying from my memory as to what he testified to, but which matter, however, I mention, because Mr. Finch ought to remember and ought to have told this committee, as I am now proceeding to tell you, that Mr. Hansen, among other things, refused to receive that money because it might prejudice some right he had.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that testimony?

A. That, I say, was the testimony as I call it to mind, of Mr. Reynolds, taken before Mr. Smith in the presence of J. L. Finch.

Q. Is there a record of it?—A. Unless the stenographer has it, there is not. Now, that is my recollection.

Mr. MCCOY. That $150 was given to Mr. Reynolds in some sort of a check or other, wasn't it?

A. I do not know how the testimony showed it was paid.

Mr. MCCOY (addressing the stenographer). Have you got the exhibit here—now, just a minute——

Q. Now, I show you Exhibit No. 48 in this proceeding; Mr. Finch testified yesterday that that was the $150 that was given to Mr. Reynolds. Did Mr. Reynolds undertake to explain what the words "Hansen settlement" on it meant?—A. I think he did.

Q. What explanation did he give of that?—A. I would not like to undertake to state, because it has just been called to my attention, and I have had no time to brush up my memory.

Q. Well, you brushed up your memory, Mr. Battle, on——A. No, sir, I beg your pardon.

Mr. MCCOY. I beg your pardon—you undertook to testify as to Mr. Reynolds's explanation.

A. So I did, Mr. McCoy.

Q. Now, why didn't you get your memory refreshed on the whole proposition?—A. Because I knew nothing about it until you just handed it to me as a matter of refreshing my memory in reference to——

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that a check, or is it a photograph of a check, Mr. Battle?

A. I could not tell; so far as I know, it is.

Mr. HIGGINS. It is not the original check, is it?

A. I would not like to undertake to state. I would not like to undertake to state whether it is or is not.

Mr. MCCOY. I do not say that it is. I say Mr. Finch testified that it was, or it was admitted here as such; I don't know what it is.

The WITNESS. But I do know this, gentlemen, that Mr. Reynolds appeared before Judge Smith and gave a detailed and complete statement and answered every question propounded to himself by myself and by Mr. Finch.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any recollection of his explaining what the notation on that check meant? And if you have, tell us what it is.

A. I do not; I do not call to mind what this is, for I do not remember; I do not remember. This is a long time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, pass on.

The WITNESS. Again, Mr. Finch stated before this committee, either yesterday or the day before, that when he procured from Judge Hanford an order directing the special referee, Eben Smith, to send up the testimony that he, Finch, in behalf of his clients taken, that we or the attorneys noted that same afternoon the motion that had been filed to confirm the referee's report. Now, the facts as shown by the record of the matter are that the referee's report was filed January 25, 1904; not until May 10, 1904, nearly four months thereafter, was a motion made to confirm that special referee's report; and on May 10, when the motion was made to confirm that report along with that motion—and there it is among the files—was a notice that was served upon J. L. Finch that on May 14, 1904—and there is his acceptance of service upon it [showing]—the matter of the hearing of this motion would be brought on for hearing before Judge Hanford. Now, on page 1322 of his testimony, made before this committee he says as follows, commencing at the bottom of page 1321:

> Q. Just a minute before you come to that. He gave you an order on Judge Smith to return the testimony?—A. Yes. The same evening that he gave me the order on Judge Smith to return the testimony, about 4.30 in the afternoon I received a notice from Ballinger, Ronald & Battle's office that the whole matter would come before Judge Hanford for final disposition the next morning at 10 o'clock.
> Q. Had the testimony at that time been transcribed into typewriting?—A. No; it had not. I came into court the next morning and myself started the proceedings. I suggested to Judge Hanford that I had been served with a notice that he was going to or would take up that morning the exceptions of the bankrupts to the referees report and also the motion of my opponents to confirm the report, and said that, of course, the matter could not come on this morning.
> Q. Now, was that morning the same morning on which you were notified to appear in response to this motion or notice which you have read?—A. Yes, sir. Let me make you understand it. I got the order for the testimony one morning at 10 o'clock; that same afternoon I had the matter noted for the next morning on me.

Now, as a matter of fact, under his own signature, on May 10, 1904, we served notice on him that we would bring up that matter for hearing on May 14. Now, the matter was not heard in point of fact until June 8. Now, why—possibly Judge Hanford may have been out of the city; possibly because of the pendency of other matters before the court, that it could not be heard on May 14; but that I was present on May 14 is a certainty and I think Mr. Finch was there—now, what occasioned the matter to be postponed I do not know, but I complain of this, that the reading of this testimony would make the impression on this committee that he got an order from Judge Hanford to bring up this matter before the court on the very day that we served him with a notice calling up this matter for hearing. Now, that is not the fact, but the facts are as I have stated to you gentlemen. Now, then, the chances are, gentlemen, furthermore——

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute. Did the matter come up for hearing before Judge Hanford on the day after that on which Mr. Finch got his order for the testimony?

A. More than likely it did, if the record so shows it was heard on that day, but I am proceeding to state that more than likely——

The Chairman. Now, Mr. Battle——

The Witness (continuing). Now, the matter having gone over for one reason or another from May 14 the court not having been in the city, or for some reason or other, or Mr. Finch asking for something, I do not know what—I know it was not heard, that is a certainty.

The Chairman. It is not very edifying to hear you, a lawyer of your experience, testifying as to why or what possibly might happen and all that—that is not very convincing.

The Witness. I can not—to make it plain.

The Chairman. That does not make it plain; what possibly might happen?

A. Then I will omit it. It was not heard; therefore, I want to repeat this, that in all probability that before Mr. Finch applied to Judge Hanford to get that testimony he knew that this matter would come up on June 8 for hearing, and therefore, if the impression is sought to be given when he applied to Judge Hanford we noted this matter for hearing, it is an absolutely false impression that was given.

Mr. McCoy. Did you argue the motion of the 8th?

A. I did.

Q. Was that point raised at that time?—A. About the notice?

Q. About not having the testimony.—A. It was raised only in this way, that Mr. Finch stated he did not have the testimony, as I call to mind. I stated to the court that this report had been filed on January 25; that we had not made our motion to confirm until May 10, nearly four months thereafter, and I did not know why Mr. Finch had not got his testimony if he intended to get it there, the report being adverse to him.

The Chairman. Did you read his reason why he did not?

A. I heard his testimony.

Q. Well, do you know anything other than as he stated?—A. As to why he did not bring it up?

Q. As to why he did not bring it up.—A. I do not know of any reason to the contrary—I do not know.

Q. Proceed.—A. But what I have stated is that the testimony was not there; the matter had been pending then for over four months. I wanted to close it up some time and I brought on the matter for hearing—not that day, as he would have tried to give the impression, but on May 10 I initiated it—I argued it. I do not call to mind that he argued, orally, the matter before Judge Hanford; he may have briefly argued it, but it was briefly, but thereafterwards he filed his supplemental briefs in writing.

Mr. FINCH (speaking from the audience). Would you like me at this time to call attention to the fact that within eight days after this 8th day of June, I, in my written argument, called Judge Hanford's attention and this witness's attention to that very fact about which I complained?

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be orderly if you would give your version of it when Judge Battle has finished, rather than at this time.

Mr. FINCH. Very well.

The WITNESS. I do not know what statement Mr. Finch has reference to, and therefore I can not answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want to get the thread of the testimony? If so, read it to the witness.

The STENOGRAPHER. Do you want me to read——

The CHAIRMAN. Give Mr. Battle the thread of his narrative.

The WITNESS. I have the thread of that—I thought you had reference to Mr. Finch's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that will come up later. We would not get far if we had interjections of that sort in the testimony.

The WITNESS. Now, gentlemen, I have undertaken simply to give an outline, and while it has taken a long time to give an outline, it is a long story in the sense that there are a great many minute details that I could go into that I believe would hardly be fair to the committee when it is all a matter of record here, and I have stated what I have stated simply to give in a summary way as possible and in an outline way what I regard as the substantial features connected with this entire proceeding. Now, you take up, for instance, the matter of any claim that the books of the bank show some—even a suspicion of fraud, or lack of fair dealing in the matter of that sale and distribution of the funds—why, a reading of the testimony of these witnesses will clear up anything in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Battle, did not the testimony of Mr. Finch state very specifically that he made no question about the distribution of the funds?

A. Well, he sought, as I understood in his testimony, to imply that the bank had been paying Larsen, the receiver; had been paying Reynolds, the lawyer, and others.

Mr. MCCOY. Does any order of the court show how the receiver got his compensation?

A. Any order of the court?

Q. Yes.—A. I so understand, that the record of that case fixes the receiver's compensation and that of his attorney.

Q. Payable out of any fund in court?—A. To be payable, I presume, out of the proceeds of the sale, perhaps. So that what I am undertaking to state is this, that any of these matters that are apparently not clear will be all cleared up by reading the testimony, because it was all gone into. I say that for this reason, may it please the committee, when Mr. Finch brought this case, made his exceptions to the special receiver's report, I was perfectly content that he take his own testimony and try it out on that. I did not care what testimony of any witness he took, because his own testimony of his own witnesses make clear all this matter, and I did not even bring——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). Then, why did you take all the rest of the testimony?

A. Why didn't he?

Q. Why did you take any more testimony after he got through?—A. Simply because as a matter of justice to those people that some matters be explained. You take that matter of Reynolds, and you take the matter of this power of attorney that was given to Judge Ballinger.

Q. I understood you to say just now that the testimony which was presented by Mr. Finch's witnesses in itself exonerated everybody.—A. No, sir; I did not use the word "exonerated." I meant answered all the substantial issues and questions which could arise in the hearing of this petition to reopen. There were some personal matters largely with the gentlemen assaulted, so to speak, who owed it to themselves and to the court to give their testimony to Judge Eben Smith. Now, he exonerated them in his report; it was necessary for me to bring them up there to testify before Judge Smith, but it was not necessary for me to take their testimony up to the court; if they wanted to question it, let them bring it up.

Q. Why did Mr. Finch testify?—A. Why did he?

Q. Yes.—A. I never have been able to find out.

Q. Who called him?—A. He called himself, I think; that is my impression. The record will show [refers to record]. It says, "J. L. Finch, called as a witness in behalf of petitioners." I do not know who could have called him unless he called himself. Now, that is also true of Judge Hoyt; as I call to mind I put Judge Hoyt on the witness stand before Judge Eben Smith and had him explain the criticisms that Mr. Finch was making of him here about acting as referee in bankruptcy while he claimed he was attorney for the American Bonding Surety Co., or some company. Now, he explained all of that. I won't take the time of the committee; I think he is here intending to detail that matter fully to this committee. And so it was, gentlemen, with all those matters. Now, I can not say anything in reference to this matter——

The Chairman. Were you through now with your statement?

A. Except to reenter upon other features of this matter which have been testified about by Mr. Finch, which would consume some time, and unless there is some special matter that the committee desires to have me testify concerning, or the attorneys, I can only conclude by stating that the committee, in reference to all these other matters complained of by Mr. Finch, will find the matter fully covered by the testimony that is before the committee in the way of this testimony taken before Judge Eben Smith.

The Chairman (addressing Mr. Finch, who is examining the volume of testimony taken before the master in chancery). Mr. Finch, have you examined that testimony to your satisfaction?

Mr. Finch. Yes, sir; I have, Mr. Chairman, and I have noted——

The Chairman. I mean the small volume.

Mr. Finch. I know what you mean.

The Chairman. The testimony handed you awhile ago.

Mr. Finch. I note that in the evidence returned by Judge Smith, the large volume that is referred to——

Mr. McCoy. What was taken after the order for the production of the books?

Mr. FINCH. Yes, sir. At page 335—what ought to be 335—is a notation by the stenographer who got out this testimony to the effect that pages 335 to 357, inclusive, containing the testimony of A. H. Soelberg, was filed with the master in chancery. That refers, then, to this other paper which you just had in your hand and that should be, as a matter of fact, incorporated in this book at that page.

Mr. HUGHES. I thought it was taken before the rest.

Mr. FINCH. No; it was not the very first. I think that it was taken at about the relative place which you find it referred to by the stenographer in the book; I think that is what the stenographer meant. I know that we had gone quite awhile before that matter came up.

Mr. HUGHES. At any rate, that is the point at which this order was applied for?

Mr. FINCH. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. It is conceded that it was at that point this order was applied for, and what was taken after that was taken subsequent to the order, and so it is immaterial where it goes in.

The CHAIRMAN. I will make this matter right in the record. Mark this volume as "Exhibit A" for identification, and the paper portion inside it, mark that "Exhibit A–1," as a part of "Exhibit A," from pages 235 to 257.

Mr. Finch's brief, or argument, submitted to Judge Hanford, is "Exhibit B" for indentification. His supplemental brief, filed with Judge Hanford, is "Exhibit C" for identification, and the printed brief filed with the circuit court of appeals which form a part of the evidence to be taken along to the committee, but not a part of our record, will be marked the consecutive letters following those, for identification. They may be marked consecutively in the order of their filing for identification, and that will cover all that is to be marked for identification.

The printed briefs referred to by the chairman are marked, respectively, "Exhibit D" and "Exhibit E" for identification.

Mr. DORR. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, in this connection, for the record——

The CHAIRMAN. Is it for the record?

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir. In pursuance of a suggestion, made by Mr. McCoy I think, Mr. Finch and I are going over these numerous exhibits together and we will mutually agree on those that we think should go in relative to the Heckman-Hansen litigation.

Mr. MCCOY. I do not think, Mr. Dorr, then, that we can get together on that. Mr. Finch was reading yesterday a long list of papers that he thought ought to go in and I simply asked for an agreement on that list, not as to what ought to go in—they all did go in.

Mr. DORR. There are some more than those Mr. Finch mentioned that he wants to put in, and there are a few more that we would like to have go in.

Mr. MCCOY. If it is not a question of cutting out any, then you can put in what you want to; I thought you were going to exclude some of those that we had mentioned.

Mr. DORR. It is not a question of reducing the list, but rather of increasing it, and when we are through we will submit it to the committee for their approval.

Mr. McCoy. That is satisfactory.

The Witness. With the consent of the committee, there is one brief matter that I would like to talk about.

The Chairman. You may do so.

The Witness. Mr. Heckman knew at all times that Judge Ballinger was a director of the Scandinavian-American Bank at the times referred to here relating to the execution of this note and mortgage and the giving of that power of attorney, and had been and was then a director, and that the firm of Ballinger, Ronald & Battle were the attorneys of the bank at that time, and were the attorneys at the time that these differences arose.

The Chairman. Mr. Hughes, do you desire to ask the witness anything further at this time?

Mr. Hughes. The power of attorney which you have referred to, given by Heckman to Judge Ballinger for the purpose of making the loan of $5,000 to pay the purchase price of the Henneger children's interest—on that there appears the name of Nellie Heckman as a witness; who was she?

A. A sister of Heckman. She came to the office with him and signed this power of attorney as a witness at the time.

Q. Was this power of attorney executed for any other purpose than to carry out the making of the loan to pay for the interest of the Henneger children?—A. No other purpose whatsoever.

Q. Was there any other property embraced in this shipbuilding plant at the time when Heckman & Hansen acquired their interest than that of the original Henneger plant?—A. Not so far as I know.

Q. Do you know whether they had borrowed from the bank at the time when they purchased the first half interest, shortly before buying the interest of the children?—A. I am not able to definitely answer that question. I do not think much, if any, they had borrowed prior to that time.

Q. Do you know whether the evidence in this case disclosed the total purchase price by them of that plant?—A. Yes, sir. I think Mr. Heckman's own testimony gives it.

Q. Well, you have referred to the price of the half interest as being $5,000 and also have quoted some testimony to the effect——A. No; the whole of the Henneger interest cost $9,000; half of that, $4,500, was for Mrs. Henneger's interest and $4,500 for the minor's interest.

Q. $9,000 was the price paid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequently they bought another piece of property which was subject to the Carstens & Earles mortgage——A. $3,000.

Q. And which they paid $3,000 for.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they borrowed any money from the bank at the time they purchased the first half interest of Henneger? A. No; I do not. I have no knowledge in regard to that.

Q. But they did borrow the price paid for the second half interest.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And $500 more?—A. Yes.

Q. And they borrowed the price paid for the Winsor property?—A. Yes, sir; for the Winsor property.

Q. And when this controversy arose——A. (Interrupting.) It was a very small plant; it was only situated on the waterway there that a ship of very light draft only could reach it.

Q. When this controversy arose was in the spring of 1901, wasn't it?—A. Which controversy?

Q. I mean beginning with the repair of the Alice and the libeling of the Alice, and so on.—A. Well, it arose, I should say, in the summer of 1901, in the early part of the summer.

Q. June, I think, was the date you mentioned?—A. Yes.

Q. It was in 1901?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the purchase of the interest of the children was in the fall of 1900.—A. Correct.

Q. And also of the Winsor property was in the fall of 1900.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall when the purchase of the Henneger half interest had taken place?—A. Why, it was purchased along about October 31, 1900.

Q. Do you mean that they had purchased from Henneger shortly prior to that?—A. Oh, in regard to the Henneger interests, I do not know when it was acquired—I never knew.

Q. Were you familiar with the fact or the testimony relative to the value of this property as to whether the price received by the receiver was a reasonable price or not?—A. Why, that is my best information and my best belief, Mr. Hughes, that it was the fair and reasonable value of the property; in fact, it appears from the record in the receivership case that R. S. Jones stated to Mr. Heckman that if he could get anyone who would bid even $100 more than had been bid by Mr. Mayhew that they would throw open the sale to further bids, and they were never able to produce anyone who would give any more than Mayhew bid. I would like to state this furthermore: Mr. Finch made the statement that, as I call to mind, that this property at this time is worth $200,000. It is easy to get witnesses to appraise it, but what I want to state is this, that at the time the sale of this property by the receiver at receivership sale it was a small plant. When the Seattle Shipbuilding Yards Co. was organized, the testimony of Mr. Chilberg will show that was taken before the referee, that they had to expend between $50,000 and $60,000 to put it in condition.

Q. To make a shipbuilding plant of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. They made an arrangement with the bank for $30,000 to handle these properties with, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hughes. You mean they made an arrangement, the shipbuilding company, to borrow $30,000 for the purpose of making improvements?

A. No, sir. Childberg, Kelly & Grondahl arranged for a loan at the bank of $30,000 to furnish Mayhew to bid for the property.

Mr. McCoy. In other words, they thought there was a fair prospect that they might have to bid up to $30,000?

A. They did not know what it might be; that was the limit—that was the limit of the price that they were willing to bid—the maximum amount. It did not follow from them, I want to state, that they were willing to bid any $30,000. That was a line of credit to that amount that had been arranged not to exceed that. As to what was to be bid for the property, in all probability, was a matter that would have to be determined by finding out what the property was worth before they put in any bid.

Mr. Hughes. I think that is all.

Mr. McCoy. I wish you would state again, Mr. Battle, what the arrangement was that had been made or was about to be made with these Henneger heirs for the purpose of this half interest.

A. I think I read from Mr. Heckman's own statement of it, Mr. McCoy, if I am not mistaken.

Q. If you can state it, substantially, please do so.—A. In substance, it was that Heckman & Hansen were to pay $2,000 cash for the minors' interest and $100 a month thereafter, and secure by mortgage upon the property the unpaid balance.

Q. Now, had Mr. Heckman made this arrangement?—A. Yes; he had made that arrangement; that is to say, he made the arrangement so far as it could be made legally.

Q. It had to be affirmed by the court——A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) In order to be made good?—A. Yes.

Q. And then he went to Alaska, leaving a power of attorney?—A. Yes, sir; he left the power of attorney.

Q. You testified, as I remember it, that the arrangement was that the bank was to step into the shoes of the guardians in regard to this arrangement?—A. No. To use his language, as I stated at that time, that he stated that he, Heckman, stated that he had arranged with the bank to take over the matter as the guardian was to have it; to use, as nearly as I can, his own language—that is, that was his statement.

Q. Your statement was, as I recall it and I think I have a memorandum of it, that the bank was to step into the shoes of the guardian? A. That is what Heckman testified; yes, sir.

Q. That is what he supposed?—A. That is what he testified he did, but Judge Ballinger and the bank officers say that Mr. Heckman never arranged and they never agreed to let him have $5,000 or any other amount for a period of five years, or any other amount except that the matter was one to arrange to get the money. They would make a 30-day loan or a 90-day loan, and would not make any other.

Q. Why did not Heckman go ahead with the guardian?—A. Because Mr. Heckman did not want to have any dealings with Henneger. He makes that clear in his own testimony.

Q. Was Henneger the guardian?—A. Yes.

Q. Of those children?—A. Yes; it so appeared from his testimony; that is all I know about it. I did not go into it.

Q. So instead of making an arrangement by which he would pay $2,000 in cash and the balance of the purchase price at $100 a month, he stepped into the bank and authorized the giving of a $5,000 note for 90 days—is that what the contention is—or at 90 days, I should say, not for 90 days?—A. Well, the contention is simply this: I do not suppose that Heckman & Hansen had any $2,000 to pay to Henneger if they had made that arrangement; in all probability they would have to get it at the bank.

Q. I have no doubt they would have to borrow that somewhere, according to your contention.—A. Yes.

Q. But that was the arrangement, that they were willing to substitute for the obligation which they could pay off at the rate of $100 a month running through—I don't know how long—whatever it was, we will say 25 months, we will assume that the $4,500 was the purchase price, then he substituted for that an obligation to the bank for the full amount payable in 90 days?—A. Yes; and Hansen, you understand, was present; in other words, the way this matter arose—to make this matter clear—Mr. Heckman, it so developed in the hearing, impressed on Judge Ballinger that they wanted that property; it was essential to that plant that they have it, they did not want to lose it, they had a half interest and it stood them in hand to get the other half interest. He wanted them to get this property to put it in this boat. Now, when he wanted to get the money he could not get it on any better terms than the bank would let them have it. Hansen was present and they could not get the money except on a 90-day loan. That was all there was to it. There was no other way of getting it. You could not go out in the market and have gotten a hundred-dollar loan on a hundred-dollar investment. It was simply not a proposition that anybody except a bank, in the accommodation of a customer, would have entertained at all. No one in the loan market or the real estate business would have made any loan upon it, except, probably, $2,000 or $3,000 at the farthest.

Q. You say that Heckman & Hansen got back their money in the admiralty suit or the libel suit against the Alice?—A. Yes, sir; so Capt. Larson testified—that is his testimony as found in this book, and more besides.

Q. They made a stipulation in regard to the whole matter, didn't they, and signed it and had it approved by one of the judges of the superior court?—A. Stipulation in reference to what feature of it, Mr. McCoy?

Q. I mean the sale of the Alice, how it should be sold and what should become of the money?—A. They probably did. All I know is, reading his testimony here, Capt. Larson says he got the money.

Q. And more, too?—A. And more, too—to use his language.

Mr. McCoy. Let me have that stipulation, Mr. Finch, will you?

Here Mr. Finch hands document to Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. I should like, Mr. Chairman, to have this in evidence. Mr. Finch, this is a copy of the stipulation filed in the superior court and approved by the judge, is it?

Mr. Finch. It is a certified copy—you will find the certificate on it.

Mr. McCoy. It is the stipulation in regard to the Alice signed by the Scandinavian-American Bank and others, and approved on September 3, 1901, by George Meade Emory, judge. I simply offer it in connection with Mr. Larson's testimony that the receiver got more than the money that was paid under the libel.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 61."

Mr. Battle. I will read what he testified in regard to that.

Mr. McCoy. I take your word that he testified that way, and I have put this stipulation in in connection with his testimony, and not with yours—I take your word for it.

The Chairman. Any questions, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes. When this loan was made of the $5,000 by the Scandinavian-American Bank for the purpose of purchasing the half interest of the Henneger children, and the note was signed by Hansen on the firm of Heckman & Hansen, and the mortgage also, had Hansen received the injury which has been spoken of in the testimony?

A. No, sir; I think not. I think that he received that injury some while afterwards.

Mr. Hughes. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Mr. Battle, you wish to say?

The WITNESS. I should like to read what Mr. Larson said about that for a minute. I want to be absolutely accurate, particularly when I am undertaking to quote.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; you can have a lawyer's minute.

The WITNESS (reading):

Q. Something was said about the sale of the schooner Alice. As a matter of fact, did one dollar change hands in the sale of the schooner Alice?—A. No, sir; I understand not.

Q. Is it not a fact that under the orders of the court you offset the overdraft of the Scandinavian-American Bank against the schooner Alice and made a profit for Heckman & Hansen by doing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, the exhibit which has just been put in evidence absolutely contradicts Mr. Harson's statement that he made any profit. It provides in there that any surplus shall go to Mr. Tennant.

The WITNESS. "And made a profit for Heckman & Hansen by doing it." Is that the part you refer to?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

The WITNESS. Now, how it came I do not know.

Mr. MCCOY. If you read the stipulation, it provides in there expressly that if there was anything over the amount of the indebtedness claimed in the libel that surplus was to be paid to Mr. Tennant.

A. It may be. I do not know what he just simply means by the word "profit." He may have had something else in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Battle.

Mr. HUGHES. It appears from the record in this case that the Winsor loan was made, I think, 22 days after the $5,000 loan.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had Heckman returned at the time of the Winsor loan?—A. He had returned from Alaska.

Q. Did he personally sign the note and mortgage in the Winsor loan?—A. He did.

Q. And does the mortgage in the Winsor loan expressly refer to the prior mortgage of $5,000?—A. It does.

Q. And ratifies it?—A. Yes, sir; it says it is subject to it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The WITNESS. Now, furthermore——

Mr. MCCOY. I beg pardon.

The WITNESS. You will find in the testimony here of Mr. Heckman, taken before Judge Eben Smith, that when he returned from Alaska and says he found out about this mortgage he made some complaint, and I would rather the committee would read to see just what his complaint is, but I think I am fair in saying that his complaint was that the mortgage had been given. At least in one place I was reading about it he makes no complaint about the period of time of it, but the fact of the giving of a mortgage at all, and yet he had left the power of attorney for the purpose of closing it up, according to his own statement, by the giving of a mortgage to take the place of the mortgage that was to be given to the guardian.

Mr. HUGHES. I think you have already explained that in the first part of your testimony.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Battle, I ask you whether that is a copy——

Mr. DORR. That is an original.

Mr. McCoy (continuing). The original order containing the petition of the bankrupt to reopen the estate of Heckman & Hansen, which was argued on the 8th day of June, 1904 [showing]?

A. So far as I know, I believe it is, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr says it is.

A. So I have no doubt of it.

Mr. McCoy. I will take Mr. Dorr's word.

The Witness. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. McCoy. Was that prepared in your office?

A. In all probability I prepared it myself.

Mr. McCoy. Well, it reads, so far as I shall read it:

On the 8th day of June, 1904, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, this matter coming on to be heard on the motion of Seattle Shipyards Co. et al. on the report of the special receiver heretofore to be made in this case be confirmed and that Jerry L. Finch be disbarred, and also at said time coming on the exceptions of said bankrupts heretofore filed to said reports, which matters coming on for hearing pursuant to notice served on said bankrupts on June 7, 1904.

Now, in view of that, do you wish to make any other statement about Mr. Finch's claim that it was noticed on the day before it was heard?

A. No; except to emphasize what I have said. Now, to explain to the committee what would be natural and is our practice.

Mr. McCoy. I don't want what would naturally be your practice, Mr. Battle.

The Witness. In all probability it was this, because I want to be fair to the committee.

Mr. McCoy. I do not want, so far as I am a member of the committee, that you shall give us anything about what probably was or anything of the kind—did the order recite the fact?

A. It recited the facts so far as stating that notice was served on him on June 7, because it was not necessary to recite everything in the order; but it is a fact, undisputed, I take it, or ought to be, because there is his own signature, that Mr. Finch was served with notice on May 10 that this matter would be brought on for hearing on May 14.

Q. He never disputed it?—A. No, sir; I don't think he could, for there is his signature. Now, it not having been brought on, for some reason or other, on May 14, and it may be more than likely that I understood that Judge Hanford would be here on June 8, that I would naturally prepare and send over to Mr. Finch's office merely, gentlemen, as a reminder, as a matter of courtesy, pure and simple, that I would bring it up the next day. But when he seeks to make the impression on this committee that the fact that he moved to get this record up here and that was what induced the noting of this matter—if that be his purpose, then he is seeking to attempt to make an impression on this committee that is not true, if that be his purpose in making that statement.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

The Witness. I do not know what his purpose was.

Mr. McCoy. Is that order in evidence?

Mr. Dorr. No; it has not been put in evidence. It was one of the things I was going to marshal with these other exhibits.

Mr. McCoy. All right, Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr. I will see that it goes in.

Whereupon a recess is taken until 9.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

THIRTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, JULY 12, 1912—9.30 O'CLOCK A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Are you ready to proceed, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. Do you want us to suggest a witness?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

JAMES B. METCALFE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name.

A. James B. Metcalfe.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Metcalfe?—A. City of Seattle.

Q. Have lived here for how long?—A. About 30 years.

Q. You are a lawyer by profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Engaged actively in the practice of your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any association with any other lawyer?—A. Not at the present time.

Q. Or are you alone?—A. I am alone at present. I have been for the past two years.

Q. And before that what was your firm connection?—A. Metcalfe & Jurey for about three or four years before that; Metcalfe, Turner & Bailey during about 10—a little more than 10 years ago; 15 years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, perhaps you had better conduct the examination yourself. You can get more directly at the things you want.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. General, your connection with the receivership case of Curtis against Heckman & Hansen has been the subject of testimony and become involved in this hearing. Will you go on and explain in your own way to the committee what are the facts respecting that case, so far as your connection with it was concerned or your knowledge growing out of that connection, doing that in your own way? I think it will save time and record.—A. I will endeavor, Mr. Hughes, not only to save the time of the committee but make as brief a statement as I can. I don't think there is a great deal to be said. You have asked but about one case, and there were two. It was a libel of the schooner Alice, I think, first——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did that antedate the bringing of the receivership case?—A. That is my remembrance of it.

Q. I think you should refer to that. Go on and state what are the facts.—A. It has been nearly 11 years since I had anything to do with it and I would have to begin according to my recollection. I have none of the records by me, or files of court. Mr. Heckman was a man of exceedingly nervous temperament and full of nervous energy; had his little shipyard out here at Ballard. He came to me one morning at my office and stated that he had a cause of grievance against the Scandinavian-American Bank and Judge Ballinger; I think Judge Ballinger was mentioned at the time. He stated that Judge Ballinger had signed a promissory note for $5,000, and, among other things, that he had been engaged upon repairs to the schooner Alice at Ballard, at his little shipyard there; that he had an arrangement, as I understand it, and my recollection of it was, with the bank that they should advance to him certain moneys for the repairs of this ship, in the payment of these repairs; that the bank had started a foreclosure suit against him, if I remember aright, on his property, and he wanted to know what to do. I examined, as far as I could from the statement that was made to me at that time, and advised him first, if my recollection now is correct, to libel the schooner Alice for the moneys due him for material and labor put into the schooner Alice; that that in my judgment was a superior lien to any mortgage that they might have upon it, and they would be compelled—the bank would be compelled—to give him, Heckman, whatever his material, the labor, and the whole bill would be according to the labor and material put in. I did that, and the schooner was libeled and the case tried out, went to a decree, and the sale ordered of the schooner. At the date of the marshal's sale I went out and there were a number of bidders—I don't know how many, five or six or more—and I continued to bid that schooner up to the limit of that decree in order that Mr. Heckman might have the advantage of what he claimed and what the decree allowed him as against the bank's—or the mortgage, or whatever it was—the bank's claim. That was done. That——

Q. (Interrupting.) Were you the successful bidder, or did some one bid more?—A. Oh, they bid more. I don't know who it was; I don't remember. I haven't the decree by me—I mean the marshal's return of the sale—but I forced them up to the point of fully recovering whatever Mr. Heckman claimed as the amount of his—which had been established by the decree, up to the amount.

Q. Including costs?—A. Sir?

Q. Including costs?—A. That is my remembrance of it.

Q. Was that sum paid in satisfaction of the judgment—of the decree in admiralty?—A. Well, as I understood it, they simply credited him with this amount at the bank; that is, whatever he recovered there in that judgment was credited against his account at the bank.

Q. I think that was covered by a subsequent stipulation?—A. Yes, sir. Now, then, after that the foreclosure suit—I am giving my best recollection now without looking at any of the records in the case, and I have not seen them in 10 or 11 years—when the foreclosure suit against the Heckman & Hansen Shipyard out there was begun I went, I think, to Ballinger, Battle & Ronald and secured from them a stipulation for the purpose of giving Mr. Heckman a chance to finance his properties and get rid of all these obligations. That stipulation expired. I remember that we went about, or he did, and saw numerous persons, doing his utmost to get the money to pay off these obligations and save his shipyard. The idea was this, that here he had the ownership of the upland property which, under the State law, gives him the right to purchase the tideland property, which would greatly enhance the value of that property as a shipyard; and under those conditions that he would present them to his friends and capitalists everywhere. In the meantime I found that the bank had pressed its claim, and he came in one day and I said, "There is only one way in the world that I know by which you can prevent the Scandinavian-American Bank from getting their judgments and recovering whatever judgment they have against your property, and that would be, Mr. Heckman, to have a receiver appointed, because when the State court takes possession of this by a receiver, then all of these suits will be at a standstill and give you that further chance." I said, "Have you any creditors at Ballard?" "Yes, sir," he says, "I have." "Who are they?"

He at that time stated that the largest creditor, I remember, was a man by the name of Curtis; and that if Curtis would sue on his note and apply for a receiver—or not his note—whatever his bill was—an ordinary open account—that it was possible to stand off the bank in order that he might recoup the circumstances in which he was in. He went out to Ballard and brought Mr. Curtis in and the whole situation was talked over there, and he then agreed and thought the best thing—as we all did—that a receiver should be appointed for the purpose of fighting off the Scandinavian-American Bank. We applied to the superior court of King County for a receiver. It was granted. Then it was, my stipulation with the bank's attorney having expired, I saw I had the—it would be necessary for me to get a further extension of time to save the Heckman properties. It was in that situation that if he could not get his friends or some one who had the money to loan and pay off this indebtedness, that eventually the matter would have to be closed up in a legal way. That receivership, after being instituted, why, of course all these people drifted and all these cases went right into that receivership case, and we held them up for Heckman's sake until the bank was pressing its claims. They appeared before the judge—I think, Griffin—several times, but the result was that the superior court granted Heckman, I think, or granted us, for Heckman's benefit, 30 more days in which he might have the opportunity to get out and see what he could do to recoup his financial condition. At the end of that 30 days he had not been able to do anything. In the meantime he had been drinking very heavily, and coming into the office he would be in a condition that he would use all sorts of vile language against anybody and everybody connected with the whole matter, and I finally said to him: "Mr. Heckman, I have gone to the fullest extent. I do not believe the superior court will grant us any more time. I don't know where I could be of any service to you unless you can get some of your friends to finance the situation that we have been endeavoring to do for you for the last 40 or 50 days." He became very much—seemed to be offended by it, walked out of the office, and I never heard anything more of him until Mr. Finch took charge. Thereafter I didn't appear in any court. He never came to me for any advice of any kind or character.

Q. Do you recall what attorneys represented the plaintiff Curtis in the suit for the appointment of a receiver?—A. My recollection, Mr. Hughes, is that it was a former city attorney of Ballard. Mr. Whitham, I think he was. Now, a little further in regard to that: At that time and for a long time prior to that time—at that time and prior to that time for a long time Mr. Heckman had a warm personal friend of his, Peter Larsen by name, as his bookkeeper; knew every part of his business, and it was agreed upon if we could get the court to do so by reason of Larsen being so familiar with the details of the shipwrights and of all the properties they had there, that they might conduct their business under that receivership and then still make money, and he suggested that Mr. Larsen be appointed receiver. We made our suggestions to the court and Mr. Larsen was appointed receiver. After that we had nothing more to do except to look after Heckman & Hansen's business before the receiver. Larsen had Mr.—if I recollect correctly—Mr. Richard Saxe Jones as his counsel. Mr. Jones then represented Mr. Larsen all through this matter. One day Larsen came in to me and he says, "Heckman is drinking so heavily." Larsen at that time was living with his little family upon this property—this little upland piece that we were supposing to make the money out of the tideland interest, and was boarding with Larsen—Heckman was; that he came in so often intoxicated, was so violent in his language, that he could not stand it any longer, and asked me what to do. "Well," I said, "I have nothing—I have no advice to give you, Mr. Larsen. You are in the hands—you are an officer of this court and you have your attorney." Subsequent to that Larsen came and informed me that this thing had been repeated so often until it was unbearable and that he had told Heckman he had to leave the place. I didn't know a thing more about the situation until Mr. Finch came in with his charges before the Federal court. There my relation with the whole thing ceased until I was brought up by the committee to ascertain what I knew about the situation, and I told it then as I have told it now.

Q. Mr. Metcalfe, you have spoken of his expressing dissatisfaction to you. Did he employ some one else to supersede you?—A. If he did, why, the party never came to me. I never saw him afterwards. He left my office and I never knew anything about it until Mr. Finch here came in with his allegations in that celebrated petition.

Q. The record appears to disclose that one C. A. Reynolds represented Heckman after you had represented him for some time?—A. Well——

Q. What do you know about that?—A. It is possible that he did, Mr. Hughes; but Mr. Reynolds never—I never saw Mr. Reynolds, never talked with him about it, nor did my firm.

Q. Did Mr. Heckman, after the time you have mentioned, ever come back to consult you any further about the case?—A. Oh, absolutely not.

Q. Or notify you of your discharge?—A. Absolutely not. I had gone on in so much good faith to try to put that property back, and seen his friends, etc., that I could not—I did not feel as if I was called upon to do any more.

Q. I call your attention to the original complaint in the case of William M. Curtis against C. A. Heckman and M. E. Hansen, copartners, etc., and ask you if that is the complaint that was filed in the superior court upon which a receiver was appointed [handing paper to witness]?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Whitham——

Q. He was a member of the firm who attended to the matter?—A. Yes.

Q. The firm name on this is Bennett, Whitham & Lund. You say Whitham was the member of the firm who attended to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There appears by this complaint to be no prayer for the appointment of a receiver?—A. Well, my firm had nothing to do with the appointment of a receiver, any further than advising him that it was the only way to prevent the bank——

Q. (Interrupting.) Just a moment.—A. (Continuing.) From swamping him.

Q. I see that the complaint is verified on the 11th of July, 1901. I show you now an affidavit by C. A. Heckman, entitled in the cause of Curtis against Heckman et al., which was verified on the 11th of July, 1901, the paper submitted to you being a certified copy of the original, and ask you if that affidavit was one prepared in your office, verified by Mr. Heckman for the purpose of securing the appointment of a receiver [handing paper to witness]?

Mr. HUGHES. If the committee please, Mr. Finch advises me that all the papers that I am submitting to the witness are copies that are verified by him to be true copies of the originals for the purpose of use here, and the committee can ascertain by Mr. Finch's statement that that is correct.

Mr. FINCH. That is true.

Mr. HUGHES. The originals being files of the superior court?

A. Yes; I think that affidavit was prepared by Mr. Jurey, my partner, for Mr. Heckman, and handed to, I think, Mr. Whitham.

Q. And I show you also a copy which Mr. Finch informs me is a true copy of the original of a motion and of an affidavit for the appointment of a receiver in the cause of William M. Curtis against C. A. Heckman et al., and ask you if the original of that was one of the moving papers at the time of the commencement of the suit of Curtis against Heckman et al., upon which the receiver was appointed [handing paper to witness]?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. For the sake of brevity and for the information of the committee, I will say that the three papers that I have submitted to the witness are a part of the files which are also documentary proofs in the Federal court, which it is arranged shall be collected in suitable order by Mr. Dorr and Mr. Finch and introduced collectively. So I will not offer them formally at this time, but they will be offered later, it being the intention, as Mr. Finch advises me, and which I approve, to arrange these papers in order so that when introduced they may be introduced in proper order and constitute so much of the files and documentary proofs in the case in this court as is deemed material.

Q. Gen. Metcalfe, were you a witness in the proceedings before Judge Eben Smith as special referee in the matter of the petition to reopen the bankruptcy proceedings instituted by Heckman & Hansen for bankruptcy?—A. I don't recall, Mr. Hughes, that I was a witness there. My only recollection is that I was a witness before the committee of the bar association, but it is possible I was; if it is, why, the record will show. It is 11 years now since I have had anything to do with it.

Q. Did you follow the proceedings in the State court, the receivership proceedings, throughout?—A. I followed it clear through to the time of the sale of these properties, except this: That matter was practically taken out of our hands; Heckman ceased to come to the office, did not consult us any more, and I knew nothing about it, as I say, until Mr. Finch brought his bill before Judge Hanford.

Q. You knew of the order of sale of the property obtained by the receiver?—A. Yes; I knew of the order; yes, sir.

Q. You knew of the fact of the sale and the amount——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Of the purchase price?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the properties; had you examined them personally?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Considering the times, the conditions as they then existed, and the condition of the property and the state of the market, what do you say to this committee as to whether the price received at the receiver's sale was a reasonable price?—A. I believe, Mr. Hughes, that it was a reasonable price. What we tried to do at that time was for Mr. Heckman's sake and Mr. Heckman dead; taking into consideration the upland interest that he had that would hold his interest in the tideland properties, we had regarded it as being worth about $30,000, but times were hard at that time; money was tight, and with all the efforts we could do we could never get any more than what was offered for that property and what it was sold for.

Q. The committee will probably not understand your allusion to tideland interest without some explanation. Had Heckman & Hansen exercised the preference right of the upland owner to purchase the tidelands from the State at that time?—A. Well, I don't know, Mr. Hughes, but I assume he must have done so or we would not have gone on with the idea of purchasing this property; but I don't remember that at all, but we were endeavoring to get the money to perfect that title and present to the bank or present to the capitalist——

Q. (Interrupting.) Be that as it may, for the information of the committee at this point, unless objection is made, I will ask a leading question, because it is a legal question.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Q. The fact was, respecting the law of this State, that the State asserted the title to all lands covered by the ebb and flow of the tide?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. And by act of the legislature gave the preference right to purchase the land to the abutting upland owner?—A. That is exactly correct.

Q. And those lands were appraised at nominal prices, and the rights were considered valuable rights as appurtenant to the upland because of the preference right given by the State to purchase from the State?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. So that whether the purchase had actually been consummated, which would depend upon what proceedings had been at that time taken by the State, or not, the right was deemed a valuable part of this property?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did the owner of the upland have that preferential right?

Mr. HUGHES. My recollection is six months, but it could not be—that is, six months after the lands were surveyed, platted, and appraised, and the time did not run until the State had taken that preliminary action and given the necessary notice, so that no third party could step in and become a purchaser until after the upland owner had permitted that period to lapse.

Mr. HIGGINS. Suppose his right had lapsed; how were the lands then disposed of?

Mr. HUGHES. Then they might be purchased by a third party.

Mr. HIGGINS. From the State?

Mr. HUGHES. At public sale. It was then exposed, whenever the State got around to it, to public sale; and anybody might be a bidder after the upland owner had allowed his preference right to expire.

The WITNESS. I merely mention this to the committee, Mr. Hughes, for the purpose of showing the straitened conditions and the uncertain titles that he had for the purpose of financing his scheme as a shipyard.

Mr. HUGHES. The property was subject to mortgages also?

A. So I understand it; yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Since Gen. Metcalfe is on the stand, and has long practice in this court, I would like to ask him also to testify respecting the personal habits and the judicial conduct of Judge Hanford during the period of his incumbency upon the bench.

The WITNESS. Shall I answer that just without any further questions than that; just tell what I know?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, now, gentlemen of the committee, I have known Judge Hanford 30 years; I have known him intimately; I knew him before he was on the bench, before the Territory became a State, and before he became United States district judge. His life—his private life ever since I have known him—was exemplary. I have always regarded Judge Hanford as being illiberal, almost, in his ideas of the morality of the city.

Q. What's that?—A. What I mean by that? I thought he was strict in his enforcement of all the moral laws that the city had passed, particularly as he had been the city attorney at different times. I thought he was rather severe. When he became district judge—I have practiced now before him ever since that time—I thought the appointment eminently one that would give credit not only to the United States Government itself, but to our city. I have seen him almost every month since that time. I have seen him repeatedly, during the weeks of the last three years, coming in on the car with him, and I have regarded his conduct—sat down and talked with him intimately in the seat with him as we came in. Now, that would be as to his private character that my remarks are directed now. I have never seen him intoxicated in my life. I have never seen him under the influence of liquor in my life.

As to his conduct upon the bench, I have had it brought to my mind by one of the supreme justices of the United States Supreme Court, or the justices of the United States Supreme Court, that he regarded his decisions as replete with sound judicial reasoning and logical conclusions, and that he would not be surprised that in the course of the history of the United States that Judge Hanford might be on the Supreme Bench. That was done in Washington City about five years ago. Now, I am merely speaking of my relations with him upon the bench and my opinion of him while there—while on the United States district bench.

Mr McCOY. Who was the justice of the Supreme Court that said that?

A. Would you like to know?

Mr McCOY. Well, I would not ask you if I didn't want to know.

A. Well, the late Stephen J. Field. That conversation occurred with me in his private library on East Capitol Street—21 East Capitol Street.

Mr McCOY. I don't need his address now, as I understand he is dead.

A. Well, that is what I understand. I thought probably you would not be able to get any further than what I am telling you, Mr. McCoy.

Now, is there anything particularly more that you would like to know, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, there has been more or less testimony as to Judge Hanford's nodding in court. Tell what you know about that.

A. Well, yes; I saw that once The judge has a habit sometimes of, when listening to a long, labored argument, to sit back in his chair and close his eyes; but I never saw a man more alert in my life, nor a judge more alert in my life, when we got through, to determine what in his mind was the law of the question submitted to him at that time.

Q Well, Gen Metcalfe, when long and intricate cases have been submitted to him, covering days of time, what has been your experience as to the clearness of his recollection of the facts, the evidence, when he came to analyzing it for the purpose of rendering a decision?—A. To my surprise, when I would see him sitting with his eyes closed—the absolute incisiveness and clearness with which he would grasp the situation and determine it surprised me when I first observed this peculiar habit. Now, if you have got the time I will tell you a little incident which is a little bit amusing. The stampede of the eastern country through the city of Seattle here during the Klondike—the discovery of gold in the Klondike—George Carmack kicked over a cobblestone and set the world afire—there came out from the Eastern States here a vast amount of people with small capital and got together companies, would go to the State and get a corporation formed, and charter ships and send them up north. Well, I happened to be brought in contact with a very severe case at that time I represented the steamship Progresso—shall I go any further? It is just merely to show you the particular instance in which I——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting) If Mr Hughes thinks he wants it.

Mr. HUGHES I don't know whether it will be worth while to take the time or make a record of specific instances, unless the committee wants it

The WITNESS. Well, this is a specific incident that I am speaking of.

Q. Speak of it very briefly, then——A. (Continuing.) In which, after an argument of—oh, I will say an hour and a half or two hours, with Ballinger, Battle & Ronald opposed on one side, on one part of the case, and Piles, Donworth & Howe on the other, that——

Q. (Interrupting.) A three-cornered fight?—A. A three-cornered fight on this ship, and he had listened to their argument. I don't know that he was tired listening to Judge Battle's argument, or Judge Ballinger's, or even Senator Piles's, but at any rate——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting.) We might let Mr. Battle testify whether the judge was tired listening to him.

A. But, at any rate——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). Did you make an argument there, General?

A. Only one, and I am coming right to that, Mr Higgins. I made one, and mine was the first one, and after they had labored with the situation, why, Judge Hanford got up from his chair and walked around behind his chair and laid his hands on the back of his chair and kind of closed his eyes for a minute and waited until they were through.

Mr HIGGINS. You had the first chance at him, then?

A. I had the first whack at him Then, when he got through—or they got through and sat down, I jumped up immediately, because it was a very important situation to my client, in which I had to give a $70,000 bond, and he sat down and says, "I don't want to hear from you. I have listened to the other arguments," and then gave such incisive and clean-cut decision of the admiralty law that had been appealed to by both parties——

Mr. HIGGINS. In your favor?

A. Yes, sir; sure he did; he knocked the other fellows out. That is the instance that I speak of.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. McCOY.

Q. I want to ask one or two. Was the Alice sold before or after the receivership proceedings?—A. Well, Mr. McCoy, I don't know that date. I asked yesterday for the papers in the case, from the clerk, in order that I might give those dates, and the clerk informed me, or, rather, the assistant informed me, that the records were up here somewhere, filed up in a disorderly condition, because the United States Government had not provided an appropriation or made an appropriation to give them proper filing facilities, and it would take him a half a day to get it.

Q. We will look out for that when we get back to Washington.—A. Well, we thank you for that.

Q. You say that you went there and bid the Alice up to——A. (Interrupting.) Up to the amount of the decree; yes, sir.

Q. Did it sell for more than the amount of Heckman & Hansen claim?—A. Oh, yes; somebody else——

Q. (Interrupting.) What became of the surplus?—A. Well, all I had to do was to force them to allow Heckman's claim. What the surplus was I don't know. The record would show. I say I went there yesterday to get that decree and to get the return of the marshal's sale, and that is just exactly——

Q. (Interrupting.) Isn't it a fact that you did not have anything to do with bidding that ship up at all; that it was all done in pursuance of an arrangement by which the receiver went out there and bid it up?—A. Absolutely not; no, sir.

Q. You are sure of that, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOY. Let me have that stipulation, please, will you?

The WITNESS. I went out and bid it up for Hansen—personally present.

Mr. HUGHES. For Heckman & Hansen.

The WITNESS. That is my full recollection of it. [Paper handed witness.]

The WITNESS. I don't see where Metcalfe & Jurey appear upon this.

Mr. McCOY. Well, I don't either.

The WITNESS. Well, that is it.

Mr. McCOY. That is what I was getting at.

The WITNESS. Well, I went there to see that they would not permit this thing to be done; in other words, that anything that Heckman was entitled to by reason of the labor and material put into that ship, he should have the advantage of. Our name is not upon that.

Mr. McCoy. Well, I know it, General; that is just what I am getting at. I don't think you had anything to do with it according to this stipulation.

A. Well, I was present at the bidding.

Q. I don't doubt it. Did you or your firm ever get any fees in payment for your services in this libel against the Alice?—A. Nothing except what Mr. Heckman paid.

Q. Is there any deep water out there in front of that property formerly belonging to Heckman & Hansen at Ballard?—A. Well, now, Mr. McCoy, I don't know how much deep water would be there, but the tide ebbs and flows there, I think, about 11 to 14 feet, and he had a little railway with a cradle; he sent it down at low tide and as the ship came in he would float his ship in and then with the windlass would wind his ship up.

Q. Well, I suppose they do that, no matter how deep the water is. I want to know whether the water was deep there.—A. Well, at high tide probably 15 or 20 feet.

Q. What was it at low tide?—A. Low tide?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, I think it was bare; my recollection of it is that it was bare.

Q. You said something about uncertain titles. Was their title to the upland uncertain?—A. Well, the only recollection I have about it is this, that Heckman had told me that he was endeavoring to in some way settle the title of the minor heirs of a man by the name of Henneger.

Q. Your firm were the proctors for the libelants in that libel suit against the Alice?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. This was not marked. I would like to have that marked in evidence.

Mr. Hughes. That will go in as a part of the other files.

Mr. Finch. That was marked, Mr. McCoy; that is a part of the record.

Mr. McCoy. I believe I did identify it last evening. It is a stipulation signed——

Mr. Hughes. It will be covered at the time when all the papers are offered.

The paper above referred to was the one heretofore marked "Exhibit 62."

The Chairman. Any further questions with Gen. Metcalfe?

Mr. Hughes. Nothing further.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Are there any more witnesses present who were subpœnaed who desire to get away quickly? If so, please arise.

[Gentleman stood in the courtroom.]

The Chairman. What is your name?

The Gentleman. Mr. Reinhart.

The Chairman. You may come forward.

Henry Reinhart, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Please state your name.

A. Henry Reinhart.

Q. Where do you live?—A. The street number; house number?
Q. Yes, sir.—A. 1907 First Avenue west, Queen Anne.
Q. In Seattle?—A. Seattle; yes.
Q. What is your business?—A. Manager of the Alaskan Cafe.
Q. What business is carried on in the cafe?—A. Bar.
Q. Where is it?—A. Corner of Third and Jefferson, 501.
Q. How long has that been your business?—A. Three years since I have been there.
Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know him by sight?—A. No, sir; I would not.
Q. Would you know him if you saw him?—A. Not as Judge Hanford. I might have served him, but not knowing him by name.
Q. Well, do you know a man who is commonly known as Judge Hanford?—A. I do not, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. We can bring Judge Hanford in.

The CHAIRMAN. We will have to ask you to wait until you have an opportunity to see him.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So that you may be able to tell us whether you know the man by sight. Have you talked recently with anyone about Judge Hanford?

A. No one whatever, only yesterday afternoon after I was subpœnaed. I didn't know what it was, only the subpœna. Not knowing the man, not knowing the judge, I say, it was a surprise to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you may stand aside and wait. Is the judge in town to-day?

Mr. HUGHES. He is in town; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You can stand aside and wait until he comes in.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Witness left the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Brennan, Judge Hanford is occupied in his business somewhere. Will you go with the witness where he is and point him out to Mr. Reinhart?

Mr. BRENNAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hoyt.

JOHN P. HOYT, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your name.

A. John P. Hoyt.

Q. You live in this city, Mr. Hoyt?—A. I live—my business is in this city; I live just outside of the city limits.
Q. How long have you lived in or near Seattle?—A. Since 1887, or—yes, 1887.
Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Referee in bankruptcy.
Q. How long have you been referee in bankruptcy?—A. Since the enactment of the—since the statute went into effect.
Q. By whom were you appointed?—A. First by Judge Hanford alone; subsequently by the two judges of this district.
Q. Is there any other referee in connection with the Seattle court?—A. The referees are all appointed in this district for the whole district, but there is no other resident referee here.
Q. Do you act as referee in cases that arise anywhere else than in Seattle?—A. Yes; occasionally.

Q. Where?—A. Well, all over the district. I have had them from almost every county in the district, occasionally, when other referees were disqualified or when the creditors all lived here and made a special showing so that the matter was referred to me; but, of course, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the business I have had comes from Seattle and King County, I suppose.

Q. When you act as referee at some other point than Seattle, who makes the assignment or appointment?—A. The judge before whom the petition is filed; Judge Hanford at times; sometimes Judge Donworth made them—since there were two judges here in the district.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, I merely wanted to ask him questions for identification. Will you proceed?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Judge Hoyt, in the bankruptcy proceeding of Heckman & Hansen, it appears from the testimony in this case that the matter came before you as referee; is that correct?—A. It was referred to me as referee in January—the date I am not certain—1902, I think it was; January, 1902, is my recollection that I received the order of reference.

Q. Now, Judge Hoyt, you may go on and tell the committee what proceedings were had before you.—A. I—of course it is a long time ago—10 years—I have refreshed my mind since last night. I didn't know anything about the testimony that had been introduced here by Mr. Finch, as I understand now, until last evening. I have looked over my appearance docket, which is the only thing remaining in my office, the other papers having been transmitted by me at the time my connection with the case closed, and from that, together with my recollection, I should say that I can say, generally speaking, that the matter reached me in the ordinary course on some time in January, 1902. The order of reference fixed a day, as required by the twelfth order in bankruptcy of the Supreme Court of the United States, when the bankrupts should appear before the referee.

The practice in this district, at least, and in the eastern district of Washington, has been to require of the referee more than simply—to treat the requirement of that order more than simply as a matter of form. It has been the practice to require the referee to orally examine the bankrupt and satisfy himself that the facts necessary to show jurisdiction existed, the judge passing upon that question simply as set out in the petition, and in a few cases it has been found—it was found here, which I suppose led to the judge's requesting that of the referees—it was found that they mistook the terms of the statute which said that the bankrupt—that the court would have jurisdiction if the bankrupt had lived in that district for the greater portion of six months. One petition in particular was filed in Spokane where it appeared upon the examination that he had been there three months and one day, and the referee thought that was not a compliance with the statute, so that led to this practice, and that has continued ever since I have been referee—that the bankrupt should appear and submit to an oral examination before the referee proceeded with the administration of the estate. The order, if I remember rightly, made the return day January—on the 24th, I think, I could not remember that excepting by refreshing my mind, of course, but it was on the 24th of January, 1902, if that was the year. I am not certain about the year. No appearance was made by the bankrupts, or either of them, or their attorney, until the 14th day of April, 1902, at which time one of the bankrupts appeared with Mr. Finch as his attorney and made proof of the jurisdictional facts as in every case.

Q. In all respects, you mean?—A. What is that?

Q. In all respects?—A. Yes, made the same as in every case, and on the same day I made an order fixing the date of the first meeting of the creditors for the 25th of January.

Q. Of April, wasn't it?—A. Or of April I would say, 25th of April—these dates I might be mistaken as to, but I have refreshed my mind and I think I have them reasonably in mind—and notices in compliance with the order named and a notice published in due course.

Mr. McCoy. It might be the year 1901?

A. It might have been 1901. I would not be—as I say, I would not be certain about the year.

Mr. Dorr. 1902.

A. I think 1902, however. My remembrance is that it is just 10 years ago. That is the way I remember it, 1902.

Mr. Hughes. That is right.

A. On the day named—as I say the notice was published, and on the day named for the first meeting the bankrupt appeared with his attorney and certain creditors appeared. Only one creditor filed his claim at that time, and several other creditors were there who desired to file claims but had not them in form. That was somewhat early in the practice in bankruptcy here and about one-half of the creditors, or perhaps more, would come to the meeting and not understand that they had to put their claims in a particular form as prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States. So at the request of these creditors, with no objection on the part of the bankrupt or his attorney but simply an objection on the part of one creditor, I continued the meeting for three or four days—I have forgotten the exact number—to enable these creditors who were present to file their claims so as to participate in the election of a trustee. I did not believe it was fair to force an election with one creditor present representing five or six—an alleged claim of $500 or $600, when the schedule showed that the total debts were over $30,000, and for that reason, without, as I say, any objection excepting on the part of that one creditor, the meeting was continued for a few days.

Nothing was said at that time about any objection to the proceeding being had before me as referee, but on the day to which it was adjourned, which I think was the 19th——

Q. (Interrupting.) Of April?

A. 19th day of May, that is my remembrance, the 19th day of May, Mr. Finch appeared and suggested that his client would prefer that the matter should be administered by some other referee, and it was finally by mutual consent agreed, either at that meeting or the next one, I am not sure which, that the matter should be reported back by me, and with the request to the judge that it be—to the judge that it be referred to Warren A. Worden, the referee in bankruptcy at Tacoma; and to enable that referee to proceed without interruption, the meeting was adjourned until the 28th day, I think it was, of May, so that Mr. Worden could proceed with the election of the trustee and the administration of the estate. The matter was closed before me by an order and on the 22d, I think it was, of May, I transmitted all the papers with a memorandum of the proceedings before me to the clerk of the court, and from that time on I have had no connection whatever with the administration of the estate. There was one other claim filed before me—a small claim, on the meeting I think—the day of the meeting to which the first meeting was adjourned at the first session thereof. Those were the only claims that were filed with me. Subsequently it appeared, and that perhaps had some influence with the referee in adjourning against the protest of Mr. Sturn, who was the only one who had a claim on file at that time, that his claim was not in form and would be objected to, which proved to be true by adjudication, as I have seen from the records—not to personally know it, but I have seen from the records that Judge Worden held the claim to be—first to be imperfectly proven and required its amendment, and when amended sustained objections thereto and the claim was expunged from the record.

Q. That is the claim of this one man who had filed?—A. One man, yes, sir.

Q. Namely, Mr. Sturn?—A. Yes, Mr. Sturn—Fred I think it was—Fred Sturn.

Q. Now, did you have any other connection with that bankruptcy proceeding, Mr. Hoyt?—A. None whatever, excepting I have a—I will be glad to furnish the committee, if it is desired, with a certified copy of the entries in my appearance docket which were made at the time and set out substantially what I have said.

Q. Judge Hoyt, it has been claimed here that charges were made that you had been guilty of acts for which you should be impeached or disbarred as an attorney—impeached as an officer. I want to know whether there is any other fact involving your connection with these proceedings than you have already stated; and, if so, please state it to the committee.—A. At the time the petition was filed for the reopening of this case I prepared an affidavit which——

Q. (Interrupting.) That was at a subsequent time?—A. Yes; a subsequent—long—I knew nothing about it until the petition was filed and a copy of it brought to my office by somebody. At that time I thought, from the charges and insinuations in that petition, that I ought, perhaps, in justice to myself and to the court, to disclose anything—my relations to it in any matter which had been alleged in the petition or otherwise. The only—I judge from—I have not been in this investigation until last evening I stepped in—but I judge from a question put by one of the honorable members of the committee that something had been proven here which I never had heard of before—that is, that as attorney for the American Bonding Co. I had appeared—the referee had appeared—in the superior court and had something to do with that litigation.

That thing—I think that either—that the honorable member must have misunderstood Mr. Finch's testimony, for I don't think—I hardly think he could have testified to that, because he never had suggested that before at any time when I have been present. He did—his grievance which he claimed to me in public and discussed in private with me more or less was that the matter had been delayed from the time when the order of reference reached me until this—for two months—nearly two months, or two or three months before the meeting was called, and he assumed that it had been so delayed by reason of the fact that the bonding company was attorney for—was security for a certain—upon a certain receiver's bond in a proceeding pending in the superior court. The fact that such a bond existed was never known to me until I read the petition referred to—the petition asking for the reopening of the case—and could have had no influence whatever. I simply allowed the case to take the ordinary course which I have in every case which is pending before me. When the order of reference reaches me, I await an appearance on the part of the bankrupt or some one representing him, or, if he does not appear, some action by the creditors seeking to procure his attendance. In other words, I do not proceed of my own motion until after the bankrupt has appeared, and I did exactly the same in this case as in every case which has been before me since I have been referee in bankruptcy.

Q. Judge Hoyt, what is the fact as to your ever having acted as attorney for the American Bonding Co.; and if so, as to whether you were consulted by that company in respect to the giving of a bond for the receiver, Peter L. Larsen, in the receivership matter in the State court?—A. My relations to the bonding company I set out in that affidavit perhaps more fully than I remember them all now. It is a long time ago; but substantially they were these: I was one of the vice presidents—I presume the honorable members of this committee are familiar with the way these bonding companies do business outside of their home jurisdiction—and I was one of the vice presidents here who was authorized to join in the execution of bonds. The agent and secretary, however, was the only one who knew anything about—who took any active step in the execution of bonds, and the signing by the vice president was purely a formal matter; he kept no record of the bonds signed and made no investigation as to whether or not the bonds—it was simply a formal—the way which the companies, some of them, took—not all of them in the same way, but some of them took of having some little check upon the authentication of bonds by the secretary—local secretary and agent. I had that authority. I received no compensation whatever for it, kept no record of the proceedings, and knew nothing as to the bonds unless the secretary especially saw fit to discuss the matter of whether it was proper to execute a certain bond with me. As to my connection as attorney for the bonding company, as to which something was said before, and I presume has been said here, I was not in any sense the general attorney of the bonding company. I don't think that their practice was to have anyone outside of their secretary.

I was authorized on two or three—in two or three different matters, perhaps more, to appear for them as attorney and either contest claims or in some other matters of litigation. I have forgotten just in detail what they were now, but I think probably on three, possibly four occasions, by special instructions from the home office, an authorization either communicated directly to me or through the secretary here, I was employed as attorney and tried some—one or two cases for the bonding company. Those cases, however, of course had no connection whatever with the Heckman & Hansen matter or with any bankruptcy proceeding. They were claims in admiralty, asserted under the bond executed—I think exclusively were claims upon bonds executed by the charter parties in admiralty. I not only—I didn't—I would not have felt and feel now that I would have been usurping authority had I appeared in any proceeding which the bonding company might have had without such special authority. I was a stranger to their business excepting, as an attorney, excepting as specially employed in each particular case.

The bond which has since been referred to as the bond given by Peter Larsen I knew nothing whatever about. That didn't—I didn't sign it, and if such a bond—I see by the records that there was probably such a bond given. It was signed by another vice president of the company here instead of by myself, and the first intimation that I had that such a bond was given was, as I stated before, in the petition for the reopening of this case.

Q. Long after your connection with it as referee had ceased?—A. Oh, a year or more, more than a year—a year after. The case was pending before Judge Worden, as I see by the records, for nearly a year, and a trustee in active possession of such assets of the bankrupt as he could reduce to possession. No attempt, so far as I have ever heard, was made by such trustee or by the bankrupts or the creditors to induce action on the part of the trustee to take any steps in the superior court in reference to these matters which have been discussed in this affidavit. The theory—one of the grievances or complaints made by Mr. Finch—seemed to be founded upon his idea that the discharge of the receiver in that matter, and the usual order discharging him and exonerating his bondsmen, relieved the bonding company and the receiver of liability for frauds already committed. I never so understood the law, but it may be. I had assumed that for frauds already committed they were still liable, as though they had never been discharged, but that was simply—that order was for the future they were discharged from further liability for things happening thereafter; so that if there was any liability on the part of the receiver or the bondsmen—I don't think myself—of course that is perhaps a question of law, but I never believed that it affected the liability of Mr. Larsen or the bondsmen in any respect.

Q. Judge Hoyt, when you came to this Territory in 1887, what official position, if any, did you occupy?—A. Judge of the—associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory.

Q. And after the admission of the Territory of Washington to the Union as one of the States, were you one of its first justices of the supreme court?—A. Yes, I was a member of the constitutional convention which formed the constitution, and subsequently I was chosen as one of the judges of the supreme court.

Q. You were president of the constitutional convention, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; I was president.

Q. How long were you a member of the supreme bench?—A. Seven years. In the organization of the court I drew the long term—if I wished to remain upon the bench, unluckily for me, because it expired in 1896, when our Democratic and the Silver Republicans swept the State—and, while I was renominated by acclamation of the convention of my party, I was defeated with the rest of the ticket in 1896.

And I wish to simply say right here that the committee might think that a referee ought not to engage in the practice at all. I would say that when I was appointed referee and up to the time that this Heckman matter was pending, the referee's office—the total emoluments of it—would not exceed, well, it would not exceed anyhow $50 a month, and I think it would not average more than $30 a month, so it would be hardly sufficient for a man to expect to live upon it, and owing to the panic—the results of the panic and my service in the supreme court—which led to the neglect of my private business more or less, I was in a situation where I had to have further income than could be derived from the office of referee in bankruptcy.

Mr. McCoy. All referees I guess do practice.

A. I think the most of them. Perhaps, owing to my age, as soon as I saw my way clear to obtain enough so that my family could live with reasonable comfort, I withdrew entirely from the practice. First I was selected by the board of regents to lecture as one of the lecturers and instructors at the law department of the university, and from that time on, together with the referee's business, which had grown somewhat at that time, I have not engaged at all in the general practice.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. Judge Hoyt, as I understand it, the judges of the Superior Court and the Supreme Court of the State of Washington are elected for four-year terms, are they not?—A. The supreme court first—they are elected for a six-year term.

Q. Is that the present law?—A. The present law, as I understand, unless it has been changed since I kept track of those things, is six years on the supreme court, but the first judges—there was five of them, of course, elected at the first election, and they drew lots for terms.

Q. I am speaking of the law as it is to-day.—A. Well, as I understand it, unless it has been changed——

Mr. Hughes. Six years.

A. And I have been informed that it is four years for the superior court judges and six years for the judges of the supreme court.

Mr. Higgins. Are they elected at the general election?

A. Yes. Of course—they are all elected at the general election with the other ticket. Of course two of them have to be elected—I don't know how since they have increased the bench. The bench was only five when I was a member of it, and now there are nine, as I understand. I have not kept much—you see I have been out of the practice entirely now for eight years and I don't know whether rightfully or wrongfully I have contented myself with studying such law books as the attorneys put before me in matters which they were discussing before me. I have not gone into much independent investigation either statutory or common law.

The Chairman. In my State we hold separate judicial elections from the other elections.

A. Yes; we did——

The Chairman. Hold it alone in June.

A. We did in the State of my adoption, not in the State of my birth. The State of my birth was Ohio, but I practiced my profession in Michigan. We had there a spring election at which we elected judges only, and regents of the university—no other officers.

Mr. Higgins. In my State the governor appoints and the legislature elects.

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Hughes, it is your turn and mine now to discuss a little law.

Mr. Hughes. I tried in my question to avoid that, because it does not seem that we need to supplement the record here.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Judge Hoyt, I don't think I need to admonish you before asking this question to be concise and avoid any unnecessary elaboration, but I think this committee and the Judiciary Committee in Washington would be glad to have such information as you may be able to give them in your experience here and acquaintance with Judge Hanford respecting his personal habits and his judicial habits of conduct and temperament. Do that as briefly as you can.—A. I have felt somewhat delicate about saying as much as I would otherwise, by reason of the fact that I am an appointee of Judge Hanford and his associate judge, but having been called and being asked to testify I must give my ideas.

I have known Judge Hanford for 33 years. I first knew him when I was on the bench and he was assistant United States attorney for this district, John B. Allen—Senator Allen—being then the United States attorney; and I have known him intimately—more or less intimately ever since. I am peculiarly constituted and don't, I am sorry to say, have as many close friends as I would like; that is, men whom I am intimate with. I have an unfortunate temperament in that respect, and while I have a few very warm friends, I don't think—I don't meet people socially as other do. I belong to no clubs. The Grand Army of the Republic is the only—the meetings of that are the only meetings I pretend to attend. I belong to one or two other fraternal organizations that are beneficiary, but simply contribute my assessments for the future benefits. And I have not had the opportunity to meet Judge Hanford in social relations as much as a good many others. But I knew him at first as a most hard-working, painstaking prosecutor for the Government. I have been, of course, from my connection with him, pretty familiar with his conduct on the bench.

I am in the court room sometimes a half dozen times a day and sometimes not for a few days, but average at least once a day that I am in his court room. I am in his chambers repeatedly. Of course, the attorneys all send the orders for disbursement to me to be checked, and I take them as a matter of accommodation to counsel—I take them to Judge Hanford or to Judge Donworth quite often for signature, and I have seen him very frequently for those reasons. I know I never have seen Judge Hanford in the least under the influence of any intoxicant. From what I have said already it would be evident that I could not say that he never was intoxicated, but I can say with the utmost assurance that what I know of him justifies the statement that he never has—that he is no drunkard, even in the most limited sense, and that he has never—that his drinking, if he does drink, has never interfered in the least with the discharge of his official duties. I know Judge Hanford has some peculiarities, like myself. He is absent-minded at times. Before I knew him as well as I do now, sometimes I would meet him and I would think he was offended at me for something; he would not speak to me; he would almost be disposed for a minute to ignore my presence, but as soon as—I would see in a moment that it was because he was absent-minded—was thinking of something else. He has some of those peculiarities that I suppose a very large number of men have. But I consider Judge Hanford—and I have had some little experience with courts—I consider him one of the, among the, able judges of the country, so far as ability and knowledge of the law is concerned.

I consider him without exception the most industrious, painstaking judge that I have ever met. I know something about the care with which he goes into the details of records submitted to him. As I stated a little while ago, I think a court is usually justified, excepting in a matter of public concern, in contenting itself with the examination of such parts of the record and such authorities as counsel point out; but Judge Hanford is never satisfied with that; matters that have gone up from me, his opinions show that he has gone through the record with the utmost care; sometimes surprises me—has surprised me by finding things in the record that, although the matter was heard first before me, had escaped my attention, and I consider him a remarkable man in that respect. Of course, he is wrong sometimes. He has reversed me a good many times, and he must have been wrong then; he could not have been otherwise.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that is all, Judge.

The WITNESS. I would be glad to make any further statement that the committee desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Hoyt?

Mr. HUGHES. I have nothing further to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McCoy?

The WITNESS. I will ask the permission of the committee, then, to file a certified copy of the record—of the entries in my record of bankruptcy proceedings, simply to show——

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so.

The WITNESS. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

HENRY REINHART, being recalled, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Reinhart, since you were on the stand awhile ago, has Judge Hanford been pointed out to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen the gentleman so pointed out to you before you saw him to-day?—A. Possibly, but I never recognized him as Judge——

Q. What is your answer?—A. I don't ever remember seeing him or being pointed out to me as Judge Hanford. Possibly I have seen him, but I don't remember.

Q. Have you any recollection of seeing the man who was pointed out to you awhile ago by Mr. Brennan as Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you stated to anyone recently that you did see Judge Hanford and that you saw in his possession a bottle of liquor and that it fell on the sidewalk and broke in your sight and presence?—A. Did I state that?

Q. Did you say that to anyone recently?—A. Did I state that?

Q. That is what I am asking you.—A. Oh, no; no, sir.

Q. Do you say that so far as you know you saw him for the first time awhile ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Three years.

Q. Where did you live before that?—A. In Colorado—Nevada from here.

Q. Where is your place of business from the courthouse?—A. From city court?

Q. From this building.—A. Corner of Third and Jefferson.

Q. Tell me some other way; how far is it?—A. Oh, it is about, I should judge, 8 or 9 blocks—squares.

Q. What direction?—A. Toward the city hall.

Q. South?

Mr. DORR. South.

A. South; yes, sir.

Witness excused.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have Mr. Battle recalled for a moment, to identify a further matter that is important.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Battle will take the witness stand.

ALFRED BATTLE, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Mr. Battle, when you were on the stand you made extended reference to the testimony taken before the master in chancery, Judge Smith, and returned to Judge Hanford's court at the instance of Mr. Finch. I want you to state now to the committee if you can refer to any portion of that record which shows that Mr. Heckman wrote the power of attorney that was given to Judge Ballinger; and if so, identify it and read that part of the record as a part of your answer.—A. Mr. Heckman was being interrogated by myself in this hearing before special referee, Judge Eben Smith, among other things in reference to this power of attorney that was given by him to Judge Ballinger On page 686 of the testimony that has been heretofore referred to as the testimony of 886 pages——

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Taken before the special referee?—A. (Continuing.) Taken before the special referee, Mr. Heckman in answer to the following question propounded to him by myself, in reference to this power of attorney, answers as follows, so far as regards the particular question that is propounded to me. Of course, there is quite a little answering questions in reference to all the phases of the power of attorney and what was done under it, and so forth, but directing my answer to the specific question, the following question was propounded and the following answer made thereto by Mr. Heckman, found on page 686, namely:

Q. You read it [referring to the power of attorney]?—A. I think I read it. I think I not only read it but wrote it.

On page 687 of the same testimony the following testimony was propounded:

Q. And did you write it out yourself?—A. Yes, sir; he dictated it to me, and I think I wrote it out.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. To whom does "he" refer?—A. Judge Ballinger; but, as I stated last evening, I think it is clearly a mistake. Judge Ballinger did not write it at all, but Mr. Tennant wrote it, so far as it was written. It is a blank simply filled out.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. You think the power of attorney, the body of it is in the handwriting of Mr. Tennant, now deceased?—A. Undoubtedly; in other words, such portion as is written in this power of attorney that is not printed is in the handwriting of Mr. Tennant, barring of course the signature to the power of attorney of Mr. Heckman, and the witnesses, Nellie Heckman being one of the witnesses. I say undoubtedly; I have not any doubt, and I am familiar with Mr. Tennant's handwriting. I think undoubtedly it is his handwriting.

Mr. DORR. I wish to state to the committee that when I examined this power of attorney, not knowing the history of it, I took it to be in the handwriting of Mr. Heckman, just comparing the style of the writing with the known style of Mr. Heckman.

Mr. MCCOY. You relied somewhat on the testimony, didn't you? Hasn't it been a matter that has been investigated before and it has been testified that it was Heckman's handwriting, and only recently discovered to be the other way?

Mr. DORR. I didn't know that this testimony was in existence when I made the statement the other day before the committee. I did know, however, that it had been charged in the public press that Judge Ballinger had written this power of attorney. That I knew. I think it is generally known to the public.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was Mr. Tennant's relation to the firm at that time?—A. At that time he was a clerk in the office. He later became a member of the firm.

Q. The signature of Andrew Heckman, as it appears in the power of attorney, bears every evidence of having been written by the same person who filled in the body of the instrument, does it not [handing paper to witness]?—A. I don't think so. If you will observe the name appearing at the early part of this instrument, namely, "Andrew Heckman," and compare it with the signature "Andrew Heckman," you will see very pronounced and marked differences.

Q. Are you familiar with Heckman's own signature?—A. No, sir; only, as I see it here, if this be his signature—and I assume that it was; I don't think there was any dispute about that—the "A," the "H," and other letters, Mr. Graham, I think you will observe, are entirely distinct and different.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Then you think that Mr. Heckman was mistaken in stating that he wrote the body of the power of attorney?—A. I do; but I am merely stating to you, what he testified, that he wrote it himself.

Q. I notice in the written opinion of Judge Hanford, filed in this matter on July 11, 1904, a finding to the effect that Mr. Heckman wrote the power of attorney. I will ask you whether that question was brought to the attention of the court in that proceeding especially or how it happened to be mentioned as an important finding in this case?—A. I don't call to mind, Mr. Dorr, that there was ever any question of a substantial nature arising in all of this hearing as to who did or did not write that power of attorney; so that what Judge Hanford says about it I do not think arose during the argument—was referred to during the argument by attorneys upon either side—and he unquestionably, in my opinion, must have read this record to have obtained the information contained in his opinion in reference to that question.

Mr. DORR. That is all I want to ask the witness.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Mr. Battle, I do not yet understand what the Seattle Shipyards Co., if that is the name of that concern, was doing in this bankruptcy proceeding, anyhow. What standing had they in bankruptcy?—A. Well, I can only answer, Mr. McCoy, in this way: Here was a petition filed to reopen a bankruptcy proceeding, or proceeding in bankruptcy. The Seattle Shipyards Co., being the owner of the property that had been sold under a receivership in the State court and which property was the property belonging to the bankrupt, undoubtedly had as much right to appear in that proceeding as anyone else.

Mr. McCOY. I do not agree with you at all. I don't know what right anybody but a creditor has to appear. Why should the purchaser of the property appear in there to oppose the appointment of a trustee to contend the right to this property?

A. I didn't understand that there was any proceeding to appoint a trustee.

Q. Wasn't this a matter of reopening the estate?—A. Reopening the estate.

Q. And that would necessarily lead to the reinstatement of a trustee, wouldn't it?—A. Yes, sir; and it would necessarily lead to the clouding of the title to this property.

Q. And how would it?—A. Why, it would be a proceeding necessarily that would arise to reopen a matter out of which proceeding title to property had passed.

Q. But it had not passed out of bankruptcy proceedings?—A. No, sir; but it had passed in this way, that the receivership proceeding and the bankruptcy proceeding were, as a practical legal proposition, coordinate proceedings.

Q. That is, they were synchronous, so to speak.—A. Yes; possibly that——

Q. They didn't have anything to do with each other?—A. They were separate and distinct as legal entities.

Q. Isn't it a fact that this proceeding before Judge Smith was looked upon as a hearing out of which would be determined the question of whether Mr. Finch should be disbarred or not, and is not that one of the things you were undertaking to demonstrate, as attorney in the matter, when you assured these other people who were not in the bankruptcy proceeding at all that you would see to it that they got an opportunity to stay everything?—A. No, Mr. McCoy; it was not for the purpose of disbarring Mr. Finch. I want to say this. I want to say this, that when the bar committee held its meeting, although I had been——

Q. (Interrupting). Mr. Battle, if you will allow me to interrupt, that was long afterwards, wasn't it?—A. No; but I want to seek to answer your question, and answer it fairly, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) All right.—A. (Continuing.) At the same time completely. I was before the master in chancery, or the special referee, upon the one side, and Mr. Finch upon the other, for a period of approximately six months, off and on, in taking this testimony and the testimony of other witnesses. The hearing on the part of no one, so far as I know or believe, had for its purpose any disbarment or any assault whatever upon Mr. Finch; but, upon the other hand, when the matter arose before the bar association and a committee had been appointed to investigate Mr. Finch, I was never asked as a witness, and glad, gentlemen, that I was not. I never appeared before them, and glad that I was not called upon to appear before them, because I had my doubts as to whether or not Mr. Finch, notwithstanding his reckless and unfounded charges, ought to be punished. Now, if you want me to state what I mean by that, I can do so; but it was never contemplated, Mr. McCoy, in this hearing, anything whatsoever directed against Mr. Finch personally.

Mr. McCoy. Now, Judge Battle, I understand you to say positively that this Shipyards Co. was not, and never had been a creditor of Heckman & Hansen?

A. No, sir; the Shipyards Co. was a corporation that, as I understand, was organized even after the sale had been made of the property. Mr. Dorr hands me these papers [handing papers to Mr. McCoy].

Q. Now, I want to call your attention to this order denying petition of bankrupt to reopen estate, about which we were speaking last night and which is to go into the record. It reads:

On the 8th day of June, 1904, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, this matter came on to be heard on the motion of the Seattle Shipyards Co. et al. that the report of the said referee heretofore made in this case be confirmed, and that Jerry L. Finch be disbarred.

Now, what was that put into that order for if that was not the proceeding before Judge Smith [handing paper to witness]?—A. The matter of--you asked me the question of the proceeding before the referee and I was directing my answer to that.

Q. Well, now, is not that order entered upon a motion made to confirm the findings of the referee Smith, about whom we have been talking?—A. Yes; but how——

Q. (Continuing.) And is not that the proceeding in which this testimony was taken and in which you appeared as attorney for the Shipyards Co.?—A. Yes; but to get, Mr. McCoy, the matter fairly, let us see how this matter arose. This matter arose on a petition to reopen this estate. That was referred to Special Referee Smith. Now, the matter arose between Mr. Finch, upon the one side, and Judge Hanford upon the other; that brought about the question of the disbarment proceeding—arose after a part of the testimony had been taken before the referee and during the progress of the examination of the witness, Soelberg. So that neither before the matter of the disbarment proceedings arose, nor afterwards, so far as the hearing before the referee was concerned, was the question of the disbarment of Mr. Finch involved in it at all. That is to say, I never put any witness on the witness stand to give any testimony as to whether Mr. Finch ought or ought not to be disbarred, and of course Mr. Finch did not. That had nothing to do with the investigation or the production of witnesses or the taking of testimony anent the issues before the referee.

Q. Well, then why did you put that in the order?—A. Because the matter arose in this way: Mr. Finch asked for this order from Judge Hanford upon the bank to produce the books. Now, it has already been detailed to this committee what happened—what Mr. Finch said and what Judge Hanford said. Now, when this proceeding was all had before the referee, when all the evidence was taken and all of the books of the bank produced, I was of the opinion, and others were of the opinion, that there was no foundation in the world for Mr. Finch to make the charges he had made; that there was nothing found by him in the books, and he had no right to believe he could find anything in the books that even would reflect upon these gentlemen, and in view of the fact that Judge Hanford had stated to Mr. Finch something the exact nature of which I will not undertake to state at this time, bearing upon proceedings that may be taken as to his disbarment, was the reason why there was incorporated in the motion to confirm the matter of the disbarment of Mr. Finch, because Mr. Finch by his action before the court had made that an issue; in one sense that was in this case.

Q. Well, that is just exactly what I think, it was an issue before the referee.—A. Well, it was an issue in that sense; but, Mr. McCoy, you asked me the question about the hearing before the referee, as to whether or not its purpose was not to disbar Mr. Finch, and I wanted to answer it fairly and completely.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. That seems to be all, Mr. Battle.

Mr. Dorr. I would like to ask him one further question.

The Chairman. I thought you were through with him.

Mr. Dorr. No; just in answer to something of Mr. McCoy.

The Chairman. I don't want to keep him on all day.

Mr. Dorr. I won't keep him more than a minute or two.

By Mr. Dorr:

Q. I want you to identify the motion that was made to confirm that report of the master in chancery [handing paper to witness].—A. The motion to confirm that report was the motion that was filed in the district court for the western district of Washington, in cause No. 2203, entitled "In the matter of Heckman & Hansen, bankrupts," and was filed among the papers of that cause on May 10, 1904.

Mr. Dorr. That is all.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Mr. Ross.

H. W. Ross, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the Chairman:

Q. Give your full name, please.—A. H. W. Ross.

Q. Do you reside in the city, Mr. Ross?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. In Seattle about four months.

Q. And in the State of Washington?—A. In the State about a year and a half.

Q. What is your present business?—A. Newspaper man.

Q. With what paper?—A. Post-Intelligencer.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I am covering the Hanford investigation right now. A star reporter.

Q. What is your ordinary duty on the paper?—A. I do politics as a rule.

Q. You want to see that they don't do you. I call your attention to the issue of the Post-Intelligencer of July 6, 1912, and more particularly to what occurs at the bottom of the second column on page 4 and continues to the next column of the same page [handing paper to witness]. I will ask you to look at it and tell the committee if you wrote that.—A. I did.

Q. I read, Mr. Ross, from the portion indicated:

A sensational line of defense was suggested by the questions asked of witnesses as to how many white-slave cases have been tried before Judge Hanford. Judge Hanford believes that the white-slave syndicate has singled him out as its victim for the punishment inflicted by him upon the white slavers.

How did you learn the facts stated in what I have read?—A. Why, I heard the first questions asked by the attorney, and, as to Judge Hanford's belief, I was present in his chambers when he expressed that belief.

Q. Were you present at the same time that Mr. Simonds, of the evening Times, was?—A. I was there a part of the time. I was there just for a very short while.

Q. Well, you may state to the committee what you heard Judge Hanford say on that point as to the white-slave syndicate singling him out as a victim because of punishment he had inflicted upon the white slavers.—A. Well, I came in after Mr. Simonds had evidently been talking to the judge for some time, and I didn't stay, but, as I remember it, probably a minute or two, and while I was there Judge Hanford was telling about a letter which he had written to Judge Gilbert, as I remember it, which had been apparently opened in the post office, or had been opened somewhere between here and where it was going to, and it bore evidence of having been opened and later turned back into the post office. As I remember it now, I think that is about all I heard. I went out then. I knew the general fact that Judge Hanford believed that—I knew that before, and I thought I had all I wanted, as long as the Times was going to have first crack at the story; I knew they would play it up and that I would not be able to give it the space that they did.

Q. Did the judge say anything while you were there as to the present investigation being brought about by the action of persons interested in the white-slave traffic?—A. I don't recall his saying anything about that.

Q. In the same article I read:

The syndicate, the accused jurist charges, paid indirectly the expenses of the Burns man.

Did you hear the judge make that statement, or a statement in substance like that?—A. No; I took that out of the Times. I knew Simonds's reputation and followed up his story.

Q. Was anything said by the judge while you were present with reference to his attorneys or expressions of opinion in this matter by his attorney?—A. No; he didn't mention his attorney.

Q. Were any of them present at the interview?—A. There were not, outside of Mr. Hanford, jr., and he was only there, I think, for a very short time while I was there.

Q. You mean Mr. Hanford, jr.. was there but a short time while you were there?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with Mr. Ross?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Did you ever talk with any of the three gentlemen who appear before this committee representing Judge Hanford about this charge?—A. No; I never mentioned it.

Q. I mean Mr. Hughes or Mr. Dorr or Mr. Preston?—A. No.

Q. You never discussed it with them or interviewed them?—A. No; I never spoke to them about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Do you know whether, as a matter of fact, Judge Hanford has been particularly comparatively severe in his sentences of white slavers?—A. I don't know that of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you know whether he has had any unusual number of cases, as compared with other judges in the United States?—A. Just from hearsay.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. You state in your article, that "in May, 1910, Judge Hanford gave the grand jury drastic orders to investigate the traffic in girls." Did you get that from the Times, too?—A. No; I heard Judge Hanford speak of that while I was in there, I remember that now, that he also mentioned that, that he had given—I think Mr. Simonds asked him—he said to the judge that he had—either knew or had heard that Judge Hanford had given these instructions to the grand jury, and Judge Hanford said yes, that he had given them carte blanche to go ahead and urged them to make a very thorough and severe investigation.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Is it exceptional for a judge to give to a grand jury carte blanche to go into anything that is alleged to be a crime, or do they generally say. "You shall go so far and then stop?"—A. There are apparently a lot of things exceptional here, Mr. McCoy, but I don't know whether that is.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Did Judge Hanford refer to the employment of secret-service men to investigate the purloining of the letter mentioned by him, that was sent to Judge Gilbert?—A. Yes; he said that he had notified the department.

Q. That is, the Post Office Department?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything more, Mr. Hughes; any questions?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. We will call a short witness before the noon hour. Mr. Clark.

JAMES J. CLARK, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State your name, please.—A. James J. Clark.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. About 21 years.

Q. What is your age, Mr. Clark?—A. Forty.

Q. What is your business?—A. Barber.
Q. Where is your shop?—A. 814 Second Avenue.
Q. How long have you been at that place?—A. Something over four years.
Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. Not personally; only by sight.
Q. You know him by sight?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long?—A. Oh, for possibly 8 or 10 years.
Q. How frequently do you see him, ordinarily?—A. Oh, possibly three or four times a year.
Q. Where?—A. Well, on the street.
Q. Anywhere else?—A. Well, I have shaved him once or twice—a few times.
Q. If in any time you have seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, please state to the committee.—A. Why, once about six years ago.
Q. Where?—A. I shaved him.
Q. What time in the day or night was it?—A. It was along in the evening about 6 o'clock—half past.
Q. What was his condition at that time with reference to sobriety or intoxication?—A. Well, I considered him under the influence of liquor.
Q. How much?—A. Well, of course, I could tell that he had been drinking.
Q. In what way, Mr. Clark?—A. Well, from his actions and from the odor—the breath.
Q. What was the odor—of what kind of liquor?—A. Well, I could not say as to that.
Q. And what were the actions of which you speak?—A. Well, he walked rather—very carefully, like a man that did not have full control of himself.
Q. Was there any other actions to indicate the condition that you speak of?—A. No, nothing; only that he went to sleep while being shaved.
Q. After you had finished shaving him, what took place? Did he wake up of his own accord or did you wake him?—A. Well, I—naturally he wakened up when I tipped him up in the chair.
Q. Well, how was it with reference to his leaving the chair? Tell the committee how he left the chair.—A. Well, about the same as he entered the chair—carefully.
Q. And with reference to being steady or unsteady, how?—A. Well, he was a little unsteady.
Q. Did he have help?—A. No; no help.
Q. Have you seen him at other times when he was not in that condition?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, what do you say, Mr. Clark, as to whether at that time he was intoxicated or not?—A. I should say he was under the influence of liquor.
Q. Have you seen him at any other time in your shop, or on the street, or anywhere, when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with this witness?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Where is your place?—A. 814 Second Avenue, Melhorn Building.

Q. Where the Saratoga bar is?—A. Saratoga bar, next door.

Q. Are you the proprietor of the shop?—A. No, sir.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other witness in the room waiting to be called?

The committee here took a recess until 1.30 o'clock this afternoon.

1.30 O'CLOCK.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

Mr. HUGHES. Judge Hoyt wants to make one correction in his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

JOHN P. HOYT, recalled, testifies as follows:

The WITNESS. In so long as I have testified at all, I think there was one thing further that I should say. In the first place, I do not think that I stated the fact, which is a fact, that I had never seen Judge Hanford when I thought he was in the least degree under the influence of liquor, notwithstanding I had seen him early and late—I don't think I stated that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you did, but that is all right.

The WITNESS. I was not sure. I stated it in a general way, my knowledge of his habits; but I do not think I stated that specifically, which I desire to do.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well.

The WITNESS. And one other matter in reference to my own connection with the Heckman & Hansen matter. I submit now a certified copy, a copy of which was permitted this morning, and I wish to say in reference thereto that it appears from the affidavit which is on file here that I was up at the superior court when the matter of the sale came up there at one time.

Mr. HUGHES. Receiver's sale, you mean?

A. Yes, sir; in the receivership proceedings, or the proposed sale. I was there because, for some reason, I do not know why, they served—they left with me a notice of the time of sale—as referee, although the matter was—nothing was being done before me, but I thought in view of that that I would go up there, and that will be seen in this minute of the proceedings, that there is a record made that such a notice had been served with me, and the order; and I wish to say further that the only action I took in it was, as stated in the former affidavit, was as a friend of the court in aid of Mr. Finch's application for an adjournment. Bankruptcy courts, like all other courts, are tenacious of their own jurisdiction; and I wanted that the Federal court, which I deem has the right of final determination before an estate shall be taken possession of by the bankruptcy court—and I wanted that court to have an opportunity to pass upon it before this sale was made, and for that reason I joined with Mr. Finch, although he may not have understood it at that time, but in fact what I did was in aid of having the matter continued until the question could be presented to the Federal court as to whether or not it should take jurisdiction of the assets that were in the hands of the receiver, and that was the only appearance which I made in the premises. My understanding of the law being then, and now is, that it was a matter of discretion whether the Federal court would take a matter out of the hands of a receiver when the property had once been taken possession of by the receiver in the State court; but I thought that the Federal court ought to have the opportunity to exercise that discretion before the sale was made, and I joined in the request for the continuance for that reason. And I submit a copy.

Now, unless counsel have thought of something that they want to ask me, that is all that I desire to say on my own behalf.

Mr. HUGHES. It was arranged, Mr. Chairman, this forenoon that this document should be received in evidence.

The WITNESS. That is that copy?

The CHAIRMAN. The one which you speak of?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 62."

Witness excused.

JOHN ARTHUR, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. John Arthur.

Q. You reside in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have lived here a long time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are a member of the bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you practicing alone or are you in connection with some other attorneys?—A. I am alone and have been for about three years.

Q. What was your former connection, Judge?—A. The last was Arthur & Hutchinson. Mr. Hutchinson is now in Spokane—went over there with Senator Poindexter, and before that it was Arthur, Lindsay & Kirg.

Q. Are you the same Mr. Arthur whose name is appended to the report in the matter involving Mr. Jerold Finch?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Hughes, you can probably get the questions on the matter you want better than I could.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Arthur, will you be good enough to tell the committee what occurred before the committee of the bar of which you were a member appointed for the purpose of investigating the charges against Jerold L. Finch?

A. We met and organized, appointing Mr. Hughes as chairman, Mr. Powell as secretary, and held our meetings for a period covering five or six weeks in the Bailey Building in this city, in the room formerly occupied by United States Senator John B. Allen, who has passed away; and we notified Mr. Finch that we would hear everything he had to say and present, and he appeared before us, made a full statement of his ground for believing the charges which he had made and we went over the records with him, examined him carefully as to his reasons for making these charges, and I think on three separate occasions he and we went over every item of the matter together that he cared to dwell upon at all, and after we had heard the others—Judge Ballinger, Gen. Metcalfe, and Richard Saxe Jones—we then invited Mr. Finch to come in again and told him at length everything which they had said in the way of explanation, and inquired if he had anything to say in detail as to whether their statements were correct or not. We afforded him every possible opportunity; in fact we were very sympathetic with him, as being a young man and carried away with enthusiasm, as we thought, and rather gullible in taking the suspicions of others, and manufacturing them into facts, and after hearing all parties we came to the conclusion that there was no foundation for the charges; in fact, we came to that conclusion upon Mr. Finch's own statements without calling anyone else at all, for he had no facts or evidence to present to us. He detailed a number of things which, to his mind, were very suspicious looking, but which did not strike us in that way, and then we called him again and again and gave him every opportunity to bring forward anything which he had bearing on the subject. We felt very kindly toward him; some of the members of the committee did—one in particular who knew him better than the rest of us and had such respect for his manifest talent and such a feeling that in time he would get over his extravagances of speech and quit adopting wild suspicions as facts—that we decided to recommend that no action be taken against him, and we made our report accordingly.

And that, in substance, Mr. Hughes, is my recollection of the course of the committee and the course of Mr. Finch. I have not looked into the matter since; I did look yesterday at our report and I feel that that was a very moderate, fair report, and I always felt so; in fact were it not for the sympathy and charity and consideration which a body of lawyers always indulge in in such cases, we might have recommended more drastic action against him, but we felt that he was not long at the practice and he was a promising young man and brilliant to a degree, and that he ought to be given a chance, and that he would overcome the foibles of youth. That, I think, is a fair statement, Mr. Hughes, of the general sentiment of the committee.

Q. Mr. Arthur, how long have you known Judge Hanford?—A. Over 29 years. In my first case in Seattle in 1883 I was associated with him, involving 360 acres of land here in the heart of the city. He represented some Ohio heirs.

Q. I do not think we care for the details of any cases—but you were associated with him in a case of importance which brought you into intimate relations with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you thereafter more or less intimately thrown into relation with him while he was at the bar?—A. Yes, sir. We became close friends from the start although he was against me in many cases and fought hard, as he always did, yet we became good, close friends, and for nearly 14 years we lived within a block of one another and were accustomed to walking down town in the morning and walking back in the evening together and meeting on special occasions, and all of that, so I think I may fairly say that I know him very well.

Q. Have you practiced a great deal in his court since he was Federal judge?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Have you ever known him to be under the influence of intoxicating liquors in all your experience with him?—A. I never have; and, indeed, I may say right here that until the newspaper accounts of this series of charges against him I never had an idea that anybody considered him subject at all to the excessive use of liquor. I knew that he for 15 or 20 years past took an occasional drink, but before that he was a total abstainer. I never knew him to take a drink for—well from 1883, I think, until 1890, or something like that. He was a very rigid man in his habits in those days, and if the committee will indulge me I would simply give it as a general expression of my feeling that the weariness caused by overwork led him to take an occasional drink. He has no taste for liquor, gentlemen. I know perfectly well that he never manifested any liking for it. Time and again I have gone to his chambers when I felt that he was working overhard and knew that he was working hard and must be tired out, and I would say to him, "Judge, put on your hat," and he would usually say, "Wait until I get through with this bundle of papers." He would read everything through carefully, and I would take him down the street and say to him, "Now, you need a drink; you are working too hard; you will break down one of these days," and I would take him down to Jim Sheehan's, as a rule—he had a respect for Jim Sheehan—it was sort of a gentleman's place opposite the Butler Hotel in those days. I do not recollect a single instance in which he ever took more than two drinks, and those comparatively light drinks. Some men will fill a glass up, you know, and one drink would be enough for three, but his drinks were comparatively light.

Mr. HUGHES. I would not presume that the committee knows anything about that, Mr. Arthur.

The WITNESS. No; I am sure their names would indicate that they are strangers to it.

The CHAIRMAN. You can assume that they have ordinary intelligence and experience without doing great violence to the facts.

Mr. HUGHES. I do presume at once that they have more than ordinary intelligence, but I was not going to presume as to their experience along that line. Now, Mr. Arthur, I do not want you to go into details and I do not think the committee would care to hear them, but will you tell the committee something about Judge Hanford's personal habits and peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of action and of habit and of walk, etc.—A. Well——

Q. And sleep, as well.—A. Well, he is not like anybody else in the world; he is in a class of his own and only himself can be his parallel, Mr. Hughes.

The CHAIRMAN. Sui generis?

A. Yes; he is sui generis. Intimately as I have known him, closely as we have been thrown together in many years, especially being such near neighbors for so many years and fond as I knew he was of me in many ways, he would go along on the street from the courthouse with his head down, half wabbling, and pass me without speaking if I did not say, "Hello, Judge," time and again. He is that kind of a peculiar man; he is absorbed in his own thoughts, and many a time old-time friends of his who knew him even longer than I did have complained to me that Judge Hanford seemed to be very sour and cold; that he passed them by at such and such a time and never spoke to them; and I would explain to them that it was simply his mannerism and way. He is a man who has given his whole life up to toil and an unceasing worker, and he takes not merely a deep interest in every case before him, but he is a close student of public affairs and has given the people of Seattle and the State many very important and thoughtful addresses on public questions and on civic affairs. In fact, he is generally regarded here as a great citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Arthur, I said before, I think, in your hearing, that we would much prefer not to go into general reputation.

The WITNESS. I am sure you do not need that.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). It is a field which would be very hard to exhaust on either side, and I think we had better avoid it.

The WITNESS. Well, now, I would simply say to the committee that for the past three years I have been practicing alone and very closely confined to the office, and I have not met Judge Hanford so much as I used to, but up to that time I am quite confident in saying that he never was drunk and never under the influence of liquor, for if he had been I would have learned it from somebody if I had not seen it myself, for I know——

The CHAIRMAN. Do you regard that as worthy to put in the record, Judge?

A. Well, perhaps not, Mr. Chairman; perhaps not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, avoid it.

A. (Continuing.) But, during those past three years I have met him many a time, of course, but did not spend as much time with him as I used to formerly, and I have never observed the slightest trace of intoxication upon him. I remember one occasion when we kept him up until half past 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning at a St. Patrick's day banquet where there was no limitation on a man's desires if he cared to have a jolly time, and he took a sip right along whenever the boys wanted to drink. It was down at the Rainier-Grand Hotel, where we held the banquet, and I had been president of the Celtic Sons of Washington and was chairman of the meeting, and the others would not let him go after the company dispersed. Why, they held him, as he was always a favorite with them, and at half past 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning he was just as sober as any of us here now. Simply would take a little sip occasionally.

The CHAIRMAN. What were your powers of observation at that hour?

A. On account of my being the president and the chairman I was particularly on guard, Mr. Chairman, and I was almost a total abstainer on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. Are there any further questions of Judge Arthur?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; one question. Mr. Finch was under accusation before the committee of the bar, was he not, on those charges?

A. Yes; he was—well, yes; the matter was referred by a large committee of the bar to this committee to take evidence as to what ground he had for making those charges.

Q. The meeting at which the committee was appointed had already decided that the charges were without foundation, had it not?—A. I do not know what other men thought.

Q. What did the record of the proceedings at that meeting show? Did it not show that it was resolved, practically, that the charges were without foundation?—A. Yes; everybody believed they were without foundation.

Q. Now, you say that you gave him every possible chance. Is not a man who is accused generally given the opportunity to be confronted by the witnesses against him?—A. Yes, sir; but we were not a tribunal authorized to administer oaths. We were simply to inquire from him, as we understood it, what grounds he had for making those charges.

Q. And was not the fact that you were not entitled to administer oaths and that the people could come before you and make whatever statements they pleased an additional reason for notifying Mr. Finch that witnesses against him were to be heard?—A. Well, my impression now is, and I might say my recollection is, that we kept him informed right along of every step we were taking and who we were to call in, but I think he only attended three or four meetings.

Q. What is your observation as to how many drinks are necessary to get a man under the influence of liquor?—A. Well, I take it that that depends on the age. A young man can stand much more than a man who has passed 55 or 60, and I have an idea, too, that a man who all through his youthful life was a total abstainer, like Judge Hanford, never acquired the capacity to assimilate as much as one who has been brought up to it and fed on it, as it were.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge, is not the philosophy of it rather the other way, that a man whose system was not saturated with alcohol in youth could bear more of it in after life than if he had been thoroughly saturated with it always?

A. Well, one might not be thoroughly saturated and yet be a moderate drinker through life. My observation is, Mr. Chairman, that one who has been a moderate drinker all through his life and through his manhood can bear much more and assimilate much more than one who became comparatively recently a tippler.

Q. To what extent have you seen the judge drink?—A I have seen him drink probably, on, I would say, an average of perhaps twice a month for 10 or 15 years

Q Where would you generally see him doing this drinking?—A. Well, there were just two places; yes, there were three places that he would drop into. This James Sheehan's, which I have mentioned——

Q Has the place any concrete name?—A. No; it was James Sheehan & Co.

Q It was not any of the bars which have been named, like the Saratoga or the Butler, or the Seattle, or any of those?—A. No, sir; it was just opposite the Butler Hotel

Q But no name of that kind?—A No, sir; it was simply James Sheehan—just Sheehan's—and the Saratoga bar, which was not then where it is now, but was farther north on Second Avenue, and where he would frequently drop in, or once in a while he and I would go in there together, and his favorite drink was a sherry and egg, and then if he happened to be down on First Avenue and we would run across each other, why it would be at the Rainier Grand bar—the Rainier Grand Hotel bar.

You have been with him at the Butler?—A. I think I never have been with him at the Butler Hotel bar.

Q At what hours did you and he usually irrigate?—A. Oh, there was no set hour Often about 5 or 6 o'clock in the day if I was anywhere in the neighborhood of his court room I would go to his chambers and say, "Judge, put on your hat." I have never known him to take anything in the morning.

Mr. McCoy. Do you mean by "hat," "nightcap?"

A No, sir; just to put on his hat and leave his chambers. That was my favorite expression, and his almost invariable expression was, "Wait until I get through with these papers"

The CHAIRMAN. How long would you be willing to wait for him?—

A I would often wait half an hour or more, and I would never say a word all that time; just remain as silent as a clam until be would get through his examinations.

Q. Do you recall being with him drinking anywhere later than 6 or 7 o'clock?—A. Oh, yes; frequently I have come into his chambers in the evening along about 9 or 10 o'clock and say to the judge, "You are working too hard. Come away from here. Quit; you will have time enough, and let us go down and see Jim Sheehan;" that was my favorite expression. Sometimes he would come and sometimes he would say he could not get away.

Q How late have you drank with him in town at night and not at a banquet?—A. I think it must be two years.

Q That is the most recent time you drank?—A. Yes.

Q But how late at night?—A. Well, I think never later than half past 10 or 11. We would often walk home together. We lived so near each other we walked home.

Q. Do you still live in his proximity?—A. No.

Q How long since you ceased to live close together?—A Since the autumn of 1905.

Q. Since that time have you seen him in town late at night and drank with him late at night?—A. Oh, yes; him and I.

Q But you did not walk home with him?—A. No, sir; no; I could not walk home with him then, because I was in another direction.

Q. Do you represent, as attorney, any of the important corporate interests in and around Seattle?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you at any time?—A. No; I have been regarded as an anticorporation lawyer in a sense, and my living has been made entirely without them, with one exception, that when I came out here first in April, 1883, I came as attorney for the Tacoma Land Co., the owner of the town site there, and made Tacoma my headquarters for four years and then transferred my headquarters to Seattle, but during those four years spending about half the time in Seattle.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

ALBERT H. BEEBE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. HUGHES. You are a member of the bar of this city?

A. I am.

Q. How long have you been a member of the bar?—A. Since the spring of 1902 or the fall of 1901.

Q. Mr. Beebe, without asking you as to Judge Hanford's conduct and demeanor in court, I want to call your attention more particularly to his habits in going to and from his home on the street car; for that purpose will you state to the committee what your means of observation have been?—A. I reside and did reside for about six or seven years in the same portion of the city that Judge Hanford resided in and in which he now resides; and during that time I traveled to and from my work in the center of the town on the street cars, and in going backward and forward, of course, I came in contact with Judge Hanford very frequently. During that time I frequently was down town in the evening and often went home on the car from perhaps 10 o'clock until half-past 11, and frequently saw Judge Hanford on the car.

Q. That is, both in the early evening when going home to dinner between 6 and 7 and again between half-past 10 and half-past 11?—A. Often.

Q. Now, what have your observations been as to Judge Hanford's appearance and acts and condition?—A. Judge Hanford has a habit on the street car and at other times and places of sitting in a very abstracted attitude, sometimes with his eyes closed as though he were asleep, and when his eyes were open, often of looking directly at a person with whom he is acquainted without recognizing the person at all or giving any indications of recognition. At such times I frequently had occasion to speak to him and found that he was thoroughly alert and that his mind was active.

Q. When you say "alert" you mean mentally?—A. Mentally alert, and often absorbed in thought.

Q. From your acquaintance and observation I will ask you to say whether at any of those times when you saw him in the condition you have described, he was under the influence of liquor?—A. I do not think that I ever saw him when he was under the influence of liquor. At such times I have often spoken to him and conversed with him. At such times he has sometimes spoken to me and I have had frequent occasion to know whether or not he was under the influence of liquor. I never saw him at a time when he was under the influence of liquor, on the street car or at any other place.

Q. At such times, but for your acquaintance and your opportunity to ascertain what was his real condition, might others seeing him think he was under the influence of liquor as an intoxicant?—A. It would be very easy for a person unacquainted with Judge Hanford or who did not know him well, to be misled by his attitude and his appearance at such times.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Why would other people perhaps be misled as to his condition?

A. Simply on account of his appearance.

Q. Well, what was his appearance which might mislead the ordinary person into thinking that he was under the influence of liquor?—A. The fact that he would go into a street car, would scarcely recognize people that he is acquainted with and must know, and would sit down and sometimes close his eyes and appear to be dozing, which is a characteristic which ordinarily people might misconstrue as a condition of intoxication.

Q. Do not people doze on the street car without being suspected by anybody, strangers or otherwise, of being intoxicated or under the influence of liquor?—A. That is possibly true, men that do not come under the observation of the public quite as closely as a person occupying the position of Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, do you think that because he was occupying a judicial position that people are more likely to think that he was drunk than they would with regard to other people?—A. I think people would be more likely to take notice of that condition in a man who is occupying a public position.

Q. We are talking now about strangers, people who do not even know who he was. I understood you to testify that strangers might think he was intoxicated?—A. Yes; I think that is true.

Q. You say he would sit there and look at people and apparently not see them—was there anything in the quality of his glance or his look that might make the ordinary person think that he was intoxicated—people who did not know who he was, or anything about him?—A. Simply the attitude of the man in ignoring the presence of others. He is not a man who is keen to notice other things taking place around him.

Q. Well, was there anything in his glance or in the way he looked that might make the ordinary person who did not know him think that he was under the influence of liquor?—A. The only way that I can answer that would be that he often has a very fixed glance—a fixed condition of his eye which might mislead a person.

Q. Well, when a man is under the influence of liquor and he sits with his eyes open looking at people, it is what is called the vacant stare, is it not, of a drunken man?—A. It is probably called a vacant stare.

Q. Well, was that the sort of look he had in his eyes?—A. Very frequently Judge Hanford sits with a vacant stare in the street car, and at such times I have frequently spoken to him and found that he was in perfect possession of his faculties and alert and engaged in thought.

Q. Well, have you ever seen a really intelligent man who was under the influence of liquor sit with a vacant stare in his eyes?—A. I think so.

Q. Any others besides Judge Hanford?—A. Well, I do not know that I could name anyone, but it is a condition that a man sometimes drifts into. I think I have seen other people in that condition.

Q. To what firm do you belong, if any?—A. I do not belong to any firm. I am practicing by myself.

Q. What are your business connections in your firm as a lawyer?—A. Well, I have a general practice. I appear very seldom in the Federal court. I have very little business in the Federal court. My practice is chiefly in the State courts.

Q. What is the general line?—A. Chiefly office practice and counseling.

Q. Not litigating?—A. Litigating just as little as I can. I do not care for trial work.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Beebe, have you in your observation of Judge Hanford on the street car noticed at any time that he had a peculiar way of sitting in the car?

A. A peculiar physical attitude, do you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, I would say that he very frequently sits with his head bowed over and his shoulders rather stooped forward. That has been particularly characteristic of him for the last few years, which I think he has aged more rapidly than formerly.

Q. How about the position of his body? You say his head was bent forward—would his body be erect?—A. His body is ordinarily erect, so far as I recall.

Q. My question is whether you have seen him on the car when when it was not?—A. I do not recall ever having seen Judge Hanford on the car when his body did not seem to be perfectly erect. I do not exactly understand the point of your question, however—I am not sure that I have answered it.

Q. Well, it is clear to you when a man is sitting erect, is it not, in a car or anywhere else?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, my question is whether you ever noticed, in your observations of Judge Hanford in the street car, any peculiarity of manner of sitting in the seat?—A. I do not think I ever noticed any such a peculiarity.

Q. A manner of sitting such as would attract attention or be out of the ordinary way of riding in a street car?—A. No.

Q. I do not mean as applied to Judge Hanford, but as applied to the average normal man?—A. No; I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever seen the judge drinking liquor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Frequently?—A. Not frequently. I have seen him drink liquor at banquets and once or twice at the Rainier Club.

Q. Are you a member——A. I am not a member of the Rainier Club.

Q. You were there as a guest?—A. I was there as a guest.

Q. What was the occasion? As I understand it, residents here are not entitled to enter there as guests.—A. Frequently at dinners or banquets which are given either by members of the club or by members of the club inviting some society or organization there—and I frequently have been there at the Rainier Club at such times.

Q. At the banquet occasions?—A. Yes, sir. And at such time the guests usually assembled in the general rooms downstairs, and I have been there at such times.

Q. Have you seen him drink at any other place than a banquet?—A. Well, I do not mean to say that at that time I saw Judge Hanford drinking, only at the banquet—I have seen him drink at the Rainier Club downstairs, not in the dining room, but in the little room where liquor is served.

Q. On the evening of banquets?—A. On the evening of banquets.

Q. And before the banquet?—A. I have been at a banquet when he was at the banquet table, but he was in the club as a member.

Q. Have you seen him drink elsewhere than at banquets and at the club, as you have stated?—A. I have seen him drink at the club.

Q. Have you seen him drink elsewhere than at banquets or at the club?—A. I do not think I ever saw him drink outside of the Rainier Club or at banquets at other places.

Q. Have you on any of the occasions you speak of seeing him on the street car noticed any odor of liquor from him?—A. No; I never have.

Q. Anywhere at any time, have you?—A. Well, I would not want to state positively that I never had detected the odor of liquor on Judge Hanford's breath, because I have frequently talked with him, and I know that he drinks moderately, and I may have detected such an odor, but I have no recollection at this time of ever having detected the odor of liquor on his breath.

Q. How do you know that he drinks moderately, except as you have stated?—A. Yes; I should say that I know he drinks moderately. Of course no man can state positively a fact unless he has close relationship with the man that the man drinks moderately without his knowing it, but I have known Judge Hanford quite well—I was never an intimate acquaintance of his, but I have known him quite well through several sources for seven or eight years—and I never under any circumstances have seen him drink immoderately, or have known of his drinking immoderately, or have seen him under conditions under which I thought that he had been drinking immoderately.

Q. You have told us that repeatedly—now, did you ever see him drink at the Saratoga?—A. Never.

Q. Or Sheehan's?—A. No.

Q. Or at the Savoy?—A. No.

Q. Or at any other place except the Rainier Club?—A. I do not remember of ever having seen him drink any other place except at banquets, as I stated.

Q. Do you mean to include banquets not held at the Rainier Club?—A. Yes; I believe I stated that.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Do you ever drink yourself?

A. Sometimes; very seldom.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you been here before in this court room during these sessions at all when Judge Hanford has been here?

A. I have not.

Witness excused.

WILLIAM H. GORHAM, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Gorham, give your full name.

A. William H. Gorham.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. How long have you practiced it in this State?—A. Since 1889.

Q. During the past year you have been president of the Seattle Bar Association?—A. I have, up to a week ago yesterday.

Q. And your successor is——A. George H. Walker.

Q. Have you had much practice in the Federal court?—A. Practically all my practice is in the Federal court.

Q. You have had a very extensive admiralty practice?—A. I have my share of it.

Q. And considerable other practice in the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you been intimately acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. For about 29 years I have, yes; since 1883.

Q. Will you tell the committee what are Judge Hanford's habits with respect to becoming intoxicated?—A. I know of no such habit on the part of Judge Hanford. I never saw him intoxicated in my life or under the influence of liquor in my life.

Q. You have seen him take drinks?—A. I do not remember of but one instance that I saw him take a drink. He may have taken a drink at banquets when I was present, but one sitting at a long banquet table would not notice who was drinking.

Q. Now, tell the committee what opportunities you have had to observe Judge Hanford when, if he had been accustomed to becoming intoxicated you would have noticed it. I think I may trust you, Mr. Gorham, to be concise.—A. Well, I have come into personal contact with Judge Hanford during 29 years under all conditions and circumstances that usually surround the legal profession in Seattle. On trains——

Q. (Interrupting.) Particularly in the last few years what have been your opportunities?—A. Well, I have seen Judge Hanford, possibly once a week in the last 5 or 10 years; on an average of once a week, if not oftener. I have conversed personally with him, and I never saw him when I thought he was under the influence of liquor, or recovering from a condition when he was under the influence of liquor.

Q. Testimony has been offered here as to his appearance and conduct and demeanor in the court room—testimony to the effect that he nods and closes his eyes and, apparently, is asleep, and some evidence of some witnesses who testified he was asleep. Will you describe to the committee what your observations have been in that particular?—A. Well, I have seen the judge throw his head down or back on the back of his chair very often, and close his eyes and be apparently dead to all sensation, but I have heard him rule, when objections have been made, promptly without requiring the reporter to read the questions. I never heard him ask the reporter to read a question in order that he might know what he had to rule upon, under those conditions that I am speaking of. It is a very common occurrence for the judge to close his eyes on the bench and be apparently asleep to those who do not know him.

Q. I wish, because of your somewhat intimate knowledge of Judge Hanford, that you would describe to the committee his personal habits, peculiarities, and idiosyncrasies, particularly physical——A. Well, I do not know——

Q. (Continuing.) From which the inference might be drawn by persons who are not thus acquainted with him.—A. Well, the last witness described his vacant stare. I have seen Judge Hanford with the vacant stare; I have seen other people with a vacant stare who were perfectly sober. That all depends on the degree of abstraction, to my mind. Judge Hanford, on the bench, does not present, in my opinion, the appearance of intoxication to any person. A person who is superficial might say that he was under the influence of some opiate or intoxicant, but that would be only a superficial opinion. They would not have to watch the man long before determining in their own mind that he was not in such a condition. I traveled with Judge Hanford about three weeks ago over to Tacoma on the interurban train. We talked about general subjects of the day, and in a few minutes he began to read a paper, and inside of three or four minutes after beginning to read the paper he fell asleep and his entire body relaxed. Now, I have seen drunken men in that condition, but Judge Hanford at that time was not any more drunk than I, or the members of this committee are now. He may have been asleep and in that relaxed condition for 5 or 10 minutes—he was actually asleep then—and awoke and continued the conversation in a normal condition.

Q. Does not Judge Hanford on the bench appear frequently to be relaxed physically?—A. He does.

Q. So that his muscles are inert?—A. They do; that is his appearance. He relaxes. I think that is when he is taking his rest, his physical rest; he is relaxing.

Q. Is it not true even when he shakes hands, and under all circumstances, that he is relaxing and inert, more or less, muscularly?—A. Well, he is not what you would call a robust man.

Q. I have not reference to being robust or otherwise, but to the habit of inertness physically?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. Is that not manifest in his walk?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you observed him enough to describe his unconscious habit in walking?—A. Yes, sir—not to be disrespectful toward the judge—he waddles sometimes—in a perfectly sober condition, I never saw him in any other condition—I have seen him waddle—swing from side to side.

Q. Have you ever walked with him—frequently?—A. Often.

Q. Were you ever able to keep step with him?—A. I take about two steps to his three. He and I belonged to a military organization here in the early days and he was a file closer or ahead of me.

The CHAIRMAN. You must have done some fine marching.

The WITNESS. Well, we confined it to the streets of the city—and he would take three steps to the two steps of the entire organization. I have often remarked that, long before this occurred.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Have you ever seen him on the street car when he would relax in the way you have described, close his eyes and droop his head and let go of himself?—A. That was only on this occasion, about three weeks ago.

Q. That was on the interurban?—A. On the interurban, yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Gorham, what do you say as to the judicial temperament and ability of Judge Hanford?—A. I do not understand the question.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I think Judge Hanford is a man of preeminent ability, and as to his temperament he is a man who, in my opinion, endeavors to be as just as it is possible to be, from the bench.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. McCOY. Do you consider that the appointment of a United States commissioner by Judge Hanford is a part of his judicial or nonjudicial duties?

A. I should think that it would be a nonjudicial duty.

Q. Well, he has to do it under his oath, doesn't he?—A. He has to do it by virtue of his office as judge.

Q. And under his oath of office.—A. He takes an oath of office before he enters upon the discharge of his duty, I should assume.

Q. There is no use in our sparring about it—do you think that he is bound by his oath of office when he makes an appointment of United States commissioner?—A. I should think so, certainly.

Q. Well, then, what would you think of the judicial temperament of a judge, any judge, who in passing upon the qualifications of a man who was an applicant for the United States commissionership, should allow himself to be swayed by the fact as to whether or not the applicant was in favor of one certain presidential candidate or another, and state so.—A. I don't quite catch your meaning, Mr. McCoy.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Well, I think a judge who would appoint or refuse to appoint a United States commissioner on account of that reason would be doing wrong, but it would not necessarily follow that he has not a proper judicial temperament. Even Homer nods, and a man might make a mistake once in 22 years.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is it not really a ministerial rather than a judicial action?

A. It is ministerial—it certainly is not judicial.

Mr. MCCOY. On what other occasions besides the time when Judge Hanford is on the bench does he manifest any of those peculiarities of which you spoke, the drowsiness and the peculiarities of which other witnesses have spoken, of sitting with his head drooped forward and his apparently not paying attention?

A. Well, I never have seen the Judge except on the streets or in his chambers or at the bar meetings or in his office when he was practicing law or at his house.

Q. Well, then, would your answer to that—those occasions when he appears to be in this drowsy condition are confined to the times when he is on the bench?—A. Exclusively, so far as I know; so far as my observation has been they have been confined to the times when he is on the bench and on the interurban car, as I stated.

Q. Well, Judge Hanford is a pretty alert man, isn't he?—A. In what respect—mentally or physically?

Q. Physically?—A. No; I should not say he was alert; at times he is heavy—he seems to be weary, physically.

Q. He is a pretty good walker, isn't he?—A. Well, I don't know what you would mean by a pretty good walker; if you mean that he walks 15 or 20 miles a day, I should say no. I never walked much with Judge Hanford, except down town.

Q. Well, he used to, and perhaps now, makes a practice of walking home a great deal, doesn't he?—A. That I do not know, except by hearsay. I never walked home with him.

Q. Don't you know that until he could not find a place to store his bicycle in this Federal Building that he used to ride a bicycle to and from his house?—A. No; I do not believe Judge Hanford has ridden a bicycle since the days of the bicycle rage, and that was a good many years ago; I have seen him on the bicycle during those days, in the nineties.

Q. The testimony before the committee is that Judge Hanford gave to the witness who was testifying as his reason for not riding the bicycle any longer that he could not find a place to store it in this building.—A. Well, I do not know what the testimony was. I am only giving you what I know. I have not seen him riding a bicycle for 15 years.

Q. Is Judge Hanford a nervous man?—A. No; I should say not.

Q. You say he has a limp walk?—A. No; I did not use the word "limp."

Q. How did you describe his walk?—A. I said that the judge at times waddles.

Q. Didn't you say he had—that he relaxed his muscles when he walks?—A. Yes; at times.

Q. What muscles does he relax—the muscles of his legs, when he is walking?—A. A general relaxation—a general physical relaxation—I could not say what muscles they were.

Q. Does he relax the muscles of his legs when he walks?—A. I don't know; I did not feel of them, and I could not tell. I do not know, Mr. McCoy; just a general condition.

Q. You did not feel of his muscles—did you ever feel of any of his muscles?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then how do you know he relaxes?—A. I can tell by general appearance.

Q. Does he relax the muscles of his legs?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. What muscles was it that he relaxed?—A. I could not tell, except as a general physical relaxation.

Q. What do you mean by physical relaxation?—A. A general physical relaxation or a general appearance of being physically relaxed. Now, whether he relaxes the muscles of his body or of his legs I do not know.

Q. Well, a general relaxation would be a relaxation of all his muscles.—A. A general appearance of relaxation, I said—or rather an appearance of general relaxation.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you do not know whether he actually relaxes or not—it was only that he appeared to be relaxing?—A. That is what I am testifying, that he appeared to be.

Q. Well, did he appear to relax the muscles of his legs?—A. I could not say as to that, Mr. McCoy; I do not know.

Q. Well, what was there about him that makes you say that he appeared to be relaxing?—A. Just the general appearance—I have said that that was his general appearance.

Q. I did not ask you now whether he did relax the muscles of his legs, but did he appear to be relaxing the muscles of his legs?—A. Well, I could not answer that question; I do not know. I could look at a person and give you his general appearance, but if you asked me what color any particular part of his dress was, I might not be able to tell it. It was the general appearance he had—a general appearance of relaxation. I think it is manifested here in the court room since he has been sitting here.

Q. Now, that is just exactly what I am coming to. Have you noticed Judge Hanford since he has sat here before this committee in a state of general relaxation?—A. At times I have noticed him in a very intense state and at other times in a state of relaxation.

Q. Then you have noticed more than I have.—A. You have been looking at the witnesses, probably, when I was looking at Judge Hanford.

Q. No; I have been looking at him quite a while. What do you mean when you say that the judge waddles—does he waddle like a duck?—A. No; I do not mean to use any such expression as that. I mean to say that he does not walk straightforward; his legs and body swing.

Q. What do you mean; that he stands on both feet and his body swings from side to side?—A. A little, at times; yes.

Q. Does a man stand on both feet and swing from side to side when he is walking?—A. No; he can not walk when he is standing on both feet, if that is what you mean. I do not know what you are trying to get at, Mr. McCoy.

Q. I am not trying to get at anything, except that I am trying to get at what it was you testified about; that is all. You testified in general terms, and I would like to know specifically. That is all.—A. Well, you know what I mean when a man waddles in his walk.

Q. I know what you would mean when you would say a duck waddles, but I do not know what you would mean when you say a man waddles.—A. Yes; I think you do appreciate what I mean—that he does not stand on both feet at once in walking. As he lifts one foot his body swings one way, and as he lifts the other foot his body swings the other way; and when a man waddles he swings a little more than a man who does not waddle. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. That is enlightening.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you ever see him walking in a zigzag direction across the sidewalk?

A. Tacking ship? No; I never did.

Q. That is not what you would call waddling, is it?—A. No; I do not mean that at all. I mean a slight movement of the body—a little greater movement than the ordinary person has.

Q. Such a movement as people who are not close observers or who were looking at someone who was an utter stranger to them might say was the result of intoxication?—A. No; I never saw that. No, sir; I do not mean to that extent at all. Such a movement as what you would call a stout party has by reason of stoutness.

Q. Well, Judge Hanford is not so very stout?—A. No; but I am comparing it to that same movement that the stout party has.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? Mr. Hughes, will you step this way, if you please?

Whereupon Mr. Hughes and the members of the committee hold a consultation in regard to a certain document.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Gorham, you have been in court while this committee was sitting here quite a little, haven't you?

A. Yes; quite a little.

Q. You have heard a great deal of the testimony to the effect that Judge Hanford was under the influence of intoxicants on the street, haven't you?—A. I have heard some witnesses—I have not been present the last two days. I was present the first few days of the hearing continually, but the last few days I have not been present continually.

Q. Well, you have heard since you have been sitting here quite a little testimony having that general effect?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, when Mr. Hughes was questioning you a few minutes ago and asking you to describe Judge Hanford's walk and general appearance, didn't you take it for granted that he expected you to give testimony which would tend to controvert the inferences to be drawn from the testimony given by those witnesses?—A. I do not know what Mr. Hughes expected, at all. I have not talked with Mr. Hughes about what my testimony would be, or with anybody else. I do not know what he expected.

Q. You have made no guess at all?—A. I do not have to guess. It is not up to me to guess. If you mean to say that my guess of what Mr. Hughes expected of me would influence my testimony, why, then, you are absolutely wrong.

Q. Oh, no; I do not mean that; but what I do mean, since you bring the question up, is this: That you had heard this testimony here.—A. Yes.

Q. And you described a condition and then said it was practically not, in your opinion, due to intoxication?—A. That that I have seen was not due to intoxication to my own personal knowledge. I know when a man is intoxicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, in your own mind, on that line, did you intend your description of the judge's walk to be in any degree an answer to the testimony of those witnesses who said they saw him stagger on the street?

A. None whatever, Mr. Chairman. I was not attempting to meet that at all. I was attempting to testify to the facts as I saw and observed them, and that is what I supposed this committee wanted—the facts as each witness observed them, irrespective of what other facts somebody else may testify about.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Hughes asked you to go ahead and give a description, as I recollect it, without questioning you particularly.

A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you, in the course of your testimony anywhere, say that certain things that Judge Hanford did in the way of bodily motion, or what not, were not the result of intoxication?—A. I said that what I had observed in that respect was not the result of intoxication, because he never was intoxicated in my presence in the time that I have known him, or under the influence of liquor in any respect during the time that I have known him. That is all I can testify to.

The Chairman. Mr. Hughes, I have exhibited to you a printed copy of a letter dated Seattle, Wash., October 20, 1896, headed "Chambers of United States district judge, district of Washington, rooms 32 and 33, Colman Building," with what appears a facsimile of Judge Hanford's name signed to it—the letters "C. H. Hanford"—and I asked you if this was a correct copy of a letter actually written by Judge Hanford.

Mr. Hughes. At your request I have just submitted it to Judge Hanford, and he informs me that it is.

The Chairman. The letter will go in the record and be marked as an exhibit.

Letter marked "Exhibit No. 63."

The Chairman. Mr. Higgins desires to make it the basis of some questions of this witness.

Mr. Higgins. I just want you to read the letter, Mr. Gorham, and see if you desire to qualify in any way the answer to the question which Mr. McCoy asked you [handing Exhibit No. 63 to the witness].

A. I remember of such a letter as this having been written. There is no reference to parties here. I presume it refers to the Chicago platform of the Democratic Party in the year 1896.

Mr. Higgins. A fair assumption, I think, from the letter.

A. Yes. I did not subscribe to the opinion of the judge, expressed in that letter at that time.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Higgins's question was whether you, after reading the letter, cared to change your answer to my question as to the propriety, or whatever it was I asked you, as to a Federal judge's attitude.

A. Well, I will qualify it to this extent; I believe that Judge Hanford, at the time he wrote that letter, was doing what he thought was his duty. I believe he always does that. I would not have thought that my duty to do. I disagree with him to that extent, but I do not believe that he was animated by any political or personal reasons for any such a thing. I believe he believed he was doing his duty.

Q. You say you would not have written the letter. Was that because you approved of the Chicago platform?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or because if you were judge you would not have written that kind of a letter, no matter what you thought of the Chicago platform?—A. I mean to say that if I had been a judge I would not have, as I felt about the matter.

Mr. HIGGINS. Perhaps, Mr. Gorham, if you had been a judge you would not, as one of the most distinguished associate justices of the United States Supreme Court did, make a public address which quite directly attacked the Chief Executive of the Nation on the question of new nationalism—I refer to the address of Justice Brewer, made some years ago. Do you recall that occasion, in which he vigorously attacked certain doctrines then vigorously agitated by the then President, Roosevelt; do you recall that occasion?

A. I do.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, if you will be good enough to answer my question. Did I understand that you say you would not have written the letter if you had been a judge, no matter whether you approved of the Chicago platform or disapproved of it? Or supposing it had been the converse; suppose it had been the Republican, or any other political platform.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you have written that letter had you been a judge, no matter what you thought about any political platform?—A. No; because I did not view the platform as Judge Hanford apparently did. Judge Hanford is an intense patriot—an intense patriot. I do not view the red-flag incident as Judge Hanford does. He is doing the best he can. It may be he is right and I am wrong; but I disagree with him.

Q. That is not quite my point—I am not wanting to know the expression of your political views.—A. It does not make any difference what they are.

Q. It does not make any difference, of course.—A. No.

Q. My only point is this: If you had been a Federal judge would you have written, as you look at it now, that kind of a letter about any political platform, whether it was yours or that of the opposing party?—A. No; I would not. But Judge Hanford would, and did; and I believe he did it from a sense of duty, because I know the man.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me get your idea of patriotism, Mr. Gorham. Do you believe it is an evidence of patriotism to refuse the right to hold office to a man who does not agree with you about political matters?

A. Yes, sir; if the man has such a belief contrary to mine that I believe he is not a good citizen.

Q. In other words, if he differs from you you think it is patriotic to deprive him of the rights of a citizen?—A. No; not just because he differs—it depends on what views he holds—not just because he differs.

Q. If he differs from you in such a way that you think he is very wrong?—A. No; I believe I can be tolerant of the other man's opinion.

Q. Let us get to the point here. I will just read the paragraph I have reference to. [Reading]:

I do not usually inquire about the politics of persons recommended for appointment as commissioners, but loyalty and a belief that the National Government may rightfully exercise its lawful authority in all places are qualifications for the office, and when the time comes for making an appointment I will not regard Mr. Weppler as a suitable person unless I am assured that he is not a supporter of the Chicago platform, or of the candidates for office who subscribe to its declarations.

Now, in your opinion, assuming that you are right and that it refers to the Democratic platform adopted in Chicago in 1896, in your opinion, was it patriotism to take the position that any citizen of good conduct and otherwise without reproach, should be deprived of the right to hold office because he subscribed to the declarations and supported the candidates who stood on a platform adopted by one of the two great national parties?—A. Well, I would not hesitate to appoint him if he had the other qualifications; but I can realize that another person might view the planks of that platform as being inimical to the Government, and if they believed it inimical they certainly would exercise their right in refusing to appoint a person holding inimical views, that is all.

Q. Now, define more particularly what you mean by "inimical," in that sense.—A. Subversive to the best interests of the Government and the people.

Q. Do you believe it to be the duty of a person holding office and having the power to appoint, to decide for himself in an individual way the rights of other citizens according to that standard, and do you think such a course is patriotic?—A. I believe that Judge Hanford felt it to be patriotic; yes, sir.

Q. I am asking for your opinion, that we may get a line on your testimony, you know.—A. I am willing to answer your question, Mr. Chairman, as far as I can, but what my opinion may be I can see cuts but very little figure in this hearing.

Q. It enables us to better understand your testimony.—A. Yes.

Q. To get your viewpoint—now repeat the question to the witness.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Judge Hanford was not deciding in this instance the right of Mr. Weppler to hold office. He was determining whether in his judgment he would appoint him to an office which was in the power of Judge Hanford—within the gift of Judge Hanford—and Judge Hanford may have desired as an officer of his court a person of his own political party.

Q. You misapprehend what he says here, I think, when you give that answer. [Reading]:

I will not regard Mr. Weppler as a suitable person unless I am assured that he is not a supporter of the Chicago platform or of the candidates for office who subscribe to its declarations.

A. Judge Hanford, evidently, thought that the Chicago platform was subversive of the best interests of the Government. He undoubtedly thought it was, and he acted on that thought.

Q. Now, then, if you were in his place and thought as he did, do you think it would be patriotic to make that a standard for the appointment and the holding of an office?—A. Within my gift?

Q. Yes.—A. If I felt that the principles advocated by some person were inimical to the Government, I would certainly think it a standard to judge of the qualifications of the man for the office that was in my gift.

Q. Now, do you think the judge's holding inimical to the Government in the sense you defined it, of being subversive of the Government, was an evidence of a judicial temperament in the judge?—A. I do not think it was an exercise of judicial temperament at all.

Q. I do not think you deliberately failed to answer my question.—A. I did not—I desire to answer your question as you put it.

Q. I asked you if it was an evidence of it, and in the answer you dodged my question and you state that it was not an exercise of it. There is a vast difference in its being the evidence of it and the exercise of it. Now, please answer it as I intended it and as I asked it, and not as you construed it.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Was evidence of a judicial temperament?

Q. That is very plain.—A. I don't catch your meaning.

Q. Do you think his action in this matter was evidence that he is possessed of a judicial temperament—can I make it plainer—could anybody make it plainer?—A. Do I think—read that last question, please.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I do not think it is evidence either way, Mr. Chairman, either for or against his judicial temperament.

Q. Well, that gives us your point of view.—A. Yes.

Q. The weight of the answer, of course, is another matter. Mr. Gorham, have you seen Judge Hanford drinking intoxicants?—A. As I said, once, and that was about 15 or 16 years ago; that is the only time I remember of having seen him take a drink.

Q. So far as you know, in the last 15 years he is a total abstainer?—A. So far as I know; I have no knowledge one way or the other, except hearsay.

Q. You have during these hearings been present in court a great many days, a great deal of the time?—A. No; I have been up here most every day, Mr. Chairman, but not a great deal of the time recently.

Q. Well, within the last two or three days perhaps not, put prior to that?—A. Yes; prior to that.

Q. The judge has not been here much within the last two or three days either, but during the time you were here the judge was here sitting at the table by his counsel.—A. The last two or three days no, but prior to that yes.

Q. You did not see the judge loll his head or seem to nap one second during that time, did you?—A. No.

Q. He was mentally alert, his eyes were bright?—A. Yes.

Q. And he was all ready for action at any monent?—A. Most of the time; yes, but my answer to Mr. McCoy was that I saw him relax.

Q. I did not ask you that——A. (Continuing.) Not about going to sleep.

Q. I did not ask you for your answer to Mr. McCoy—you and Mr. McCoy can settle that.—A. I do not want my answer to the two gentlemen to be inconsistent or appear to be inconsistent.

Q. Well, they are both in and will speak for themselves, as you well know. Did you ever see him for the same length of time prior to this investigation remain without appearing to nap or relax, or whatever you call it, as long as you did during the investigation?—A. Well, I can not say that I have seen Judge Hanford every day consecutively for 14 days before, every single day, hours at the time; I do not believe I have.

Q. Did you ever see him for a single day remain without relaxing, as he has done all the time you observed him during this hearing?—A. I have.

Q. Often or seldom?—A. Well, I could not say as to that, Mr. Chairman.

Q. The weight of the testimony here seems to be that when on the bench, every day, more or less, he would get into a condition which a person unacquainted with him might mistake for napping or sleeping?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that your experience?—A. Not to that extent. I think my observation and my memory of what I have observed is that he does not sleep as much as he used to in the old building. I may be mistaken, or it may be that I have not seen him as often.

Q. That still might be true, and what I have said also be true. Your answer is not inconsistent with my question, because I am not asking you to compare the judge since he came into this building with himself prior to that time, but did you anywhere, in this building or in the old one, see him for more than the day at the time when he did not indulge in that condition which to the unitiated might seem to be napping or sleeping?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. How many times would you say you observed that occur when he was holding court when that condition was not apparent?—A. I could not say, Mr. Chairman, as to that.

Q. Well, which was the more numerous, the napping or the absence of it, as measured by days?—A. If you will let me explain.

Q. Answer it if you can, and then you may explain.—A. Yes.

Q. That is the ordinary rule?—A. I would say that his alert condition—I have seen him more times in his alert condition than otherwise, for this reason, my business is principally admiralty. All our admiralty cases are tried before the commissioner. The only time we appear before the court in admiralty matters is on motion or admiralty days and upon the day that is set for the final hearing and argument by counsel, so that I have not had an opportunity of observing Judge Hanford during the trial of causes with a jury that I have at other times when there has been no jury; and he had been more alert on motion days and on motion days when I have appeared before him, in common with the other members of the bar on similar business, than I have observed him in the drone of a jury trial. I have been present at jury trials, a large number of them—I have not taken part in very many of them in the last 20 years—but I have noticed that peculiarity when he sits all day listening to the drone of a jury trial, and some of them are drony.

Q. Have you ever seen him in that attitude when evidence was being read to him or arguments being made before him?—A. We do not read the evidence to him in admiralty. The record is filed and we argue orally and file briefs, and he takes the record to his chambers and reads it, and we do not read the evidence to him.

Q. During the argument you have seen him when he seemed to be napping?—A. Yes.

Q. How frequently?—A. Well, I would not say as frequently as I have seen him otherwise.

Q. That sheds no light.—A. Do you mean how many times I have appeared in the court?

Q. Approximate it in some way; give the committee an idea of how frequently you have seen him in that condition?—A. I can not tell. I have been in his court room possibly an average of once a week throughout the year. Part of that time he has demonstrated—he has given evidence of this peculiarity—and other times he has not. I can not tell.

Q. On those occasions how much of the day would you spend in court before him?—A. Sometimes from 10 until 12 in the morning, rarely in the afternoon. In fact, on motion day and admiralty day the motion calendar is exhausted generally in the morning—not always—some cases that require longer arguments go over until the afternoon.

Q. What is the character of your admiralty business; what side of the admiralty cases are you generally on?—A. Generally for the shipowner.

Q. Any well-known shipping concerns who were your clients?—A. Oh, I have a variety of clients, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Sir?—A. Some of my clients do business exclusively in Alaska; the Northern Commercial Co., a very extensive concern in Alaska; the Northern Navigation Co., they own practically the entire fleet on the Yukon River; the Cosmos Line, operating between here and Germany; ocean steamers; and Dodwell & Co. (Ltd.).

Q. What kind of business do they do?—A. They are shipping people and are agents for, or charterers, rather, of ocean-going vessels.

Q. Any others?—A. Some local ship people; the Alaska Barge Co., the Chealey Towboat Co., clients of that character.

Q. All your clients are ship-owning clients?—A. Principally so; yes, sir; what we call the shipowners.

Q. Have you had any cases on the other side, against the shipping corporations or companies?—A. Yes, sir; to some extent, but not much.

Q. Any cases for seamen, sailors, as against the companies?—A. No; not of recent years.

Q. How long has your business been of that character?—A. Of the character I have mentioned?

Q. Yes.—A. Practically all my time here.

Q. And that is practically all of the business you have?—A. Practically; yes.

Q. You do not get into any other line of practice?—A. Yes.

Q. Than the admiralty?—A. Yes.

Q. To any extent?—A. As it comes to the office.

Q. Have you any other corporation clients?—A. Yes.

Q. Who?—A. Mining clients of Alaska and fishing clients.

Q. What kind of mining?—A. Hydraulic mining.

Q. Gold mining?—A. Yes; organizing here and doing business in Alaska.

Q. Will you mention some others?—A. A fishing company organized, or about to organize, for fishing salmon in the Puget Sound.

Q. What is the name of that?—A. Of that Mr. Pharo is the client. I have been his attorney for several years. It is not organized yet.

Q. Is he connected with the syndicate fisheries?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are any syndicate corporations clients of yours?—A. I don't know what you refer to as the syndicate.

Q. The Alaska syndicate.—A. No, sir; I have had suits against them and have yet.

Q. Then, practically all your clients do an interstate business?—A. Most all of them, yes.

Q. And have the right to move their cases to the Federal court or bring cases in the Federal court?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent have you a State court practice?—A. Very little. I have some cases pending, but very little.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. You have also represented sailors——

The CHAIRMAN. He stated otherwise.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to refresh his memory as to that, that is all.

The WITNESS. I do not remember of having had a sailor's case for 20 years; I may have had, but I do not remember it.

Q. Now, Mr. Gorham——A. (Continuing.) I have represented an individual sailor who had a damage cause of action, but not for sailor's wages.

Q. You were here from 1894 to 1896, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember of the Chicago riots and the intervention of President Cleveland and the action of the Federal courts in quelling like riots?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember of a similar condition in this State in respect to the Coxey army?—A. Yes.

Q. In this State, as well as other States?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know that Judge Hanford, at the time of writing this letter which has been submitted to you, understood or placed a construction on the Chicago platform that it reflected upon President Cleveland and his attitude and that of the Federal courts in intervening and quelling the sympathetic strikes in Chicago and the riots caused by the Coxey army people?—A. No; I have forgotten that fact if I ever knew it, Mr. Hughes. I probably knew it at the time, if it was so and the matter was discussed, but I have forgotten it now. It is a long time ago.

Q. A commissioner would be required to issue warrants for the arrest of rioters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The commissioner of the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir; in some instances.

Q. If Judge Hanford was of the opinion I have stated respecting the Chicago platform and thought it was the duty of the Executive of the Nation to act as President Cleveland had and of the Federal courts to sustain the policy of the Executive of the Nation in those respects and the administration of the law and the preservation of peace and order, would you consider it an improper act for him to be unwilling to appoint a commissioner who entertained views hostile to the duties he would be required to perform as a commissioner?—A. No.

Q. Do you consider that the question——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute here—would you allow me to interject a question here?

Mr. HUGHES. I was only going to ask one more question.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you consider that the question that the judge would have to consider in that connection would be one of the exercise of judicial functions or the exercise of what appeared to him a sound discretion and a patriotic duty in the determination of the character of the man he should appoint to fill an office?

A. I would not consider it was the exercise of a judicial duty. I have already stated that I did not question Judge Hanford's motive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question did not include the word "judicial" at all.

The WITNESS. I thought it did.

The CHAIRMAN. No; Mr. Hughes very carefully excluded it and put in "discretion" merely.

Question read to the witness.

The WITNESS. The word "discretion" was in it, and so was the word "judicial."

The CHAIRMAN. But the word "judicial" used in the question was limited by the word "discretion."

A. My answer was, I do not consider it a judicial function, but the exercise of his discretion in the appointment of officers to his court.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of your answer would be to disqualify 6,000,000 Americans from holding office at that time, would it not?

A. Judge Hanford might disqualify; I would not.

Q. Well, the effect, then, of his action, if followed, would have been to disqualify 6,000,000 American citizens, voters, from holding office?—A. Not necessarily.

Q. Explain why not.—A. Because every man who voted the particular ticket supported by that platform did not subscribe to the platform.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Because I voted that ticket myself, and I did not subscribe to the platform.

Q. Then you know of one exception?—A. Yes.

Q. But the other 5,999,999 you do not know anything about?—A. I do not know anything about them, no, but I know that, of common knowledge, as the chairman does, that heretofore our political platforms have not stood for very much with either party.

Mr. MCCOY. The more reason for the judges not attaching such importance to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without in any sense agreeing with you in that regard, I might renew the question; if you think, in view of all the circumstances, that a man who took that position, made a statement which if applied would disfranchise almost half the American people, is likely to be a man who has a judicial mind, and whether such a man would be able to fairly and equally administer the law against persons whom he thought were tending to subvert the Government?

A. The question is involved. I do not know what would likely follow; but I do know that, notwithstanding that letter, it is a fact that Judge Hanford has a judicial temperament, and is fair in the administration of justice in his court, and my own personal experience demonstrates that to me.

Q. You have been successful in his court?—A. And otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions?

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Whereupon the witness is excused, and a short recess is taken by the committee.

M. A. MEAD, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name.

A. Minor A. Mead.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Mead?—A. 1409 North Forty-first.

Q. Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in the city?—A. Five years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Police officer.

Q. Where are you stationed?—A. Down on Washington Street now.

Q. What particular duty; is it patrolman or crossing man?—A. Patrolman.

Q. How long have you been a policeman?—A. A year ago the 24th of last April.

Q. What were you doing before you became a policeman?—A. I was a gripman on the James Street cable.

Q. For how long?—A. Three years and four months.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I would not know him if I would meet him on the street.

Q. Do you know him by sight?—A. No; not to say that "There goes Judge Hanford"; I don't know him.

Q. Have you seen him?—A. Well, I expect I have hauled him up the hill a good many times, up to the courthouse on the line, but not that I knew him.

Mr. GRAHAM. If Judge Hanford is not busy in his chambers, I would like to have this witness see the judge. Will you please go with the officer?

Whereupon the witness was excused.

A. H. MACKINNON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your full name?

A. My name is Alexander H. MacKinnon. I am an attorney at law.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. I live in Seattle, at Rainier Beach.

Q. Are you practicing your profession?—A. I am practicing my profession.

Q. How long have you practiced law here?—A. Since 1901.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I have been acquainted with Judge Hanford in a general way since 1893. I first met the judge, or saw the judge, in a suit for personal injuries brought by my mother against the Oregon Improvement Co.

Q. You were not then an attorney?—A. I was not an attorney.

Q. Is there anything in connection with that matter which you wish to tell the committee?—A. I think they ought to know it.

Q. Tell it—first, when was it?—A. The suit originated in Skagit County. My mother was landed on one of the docks of the Oregon Improvement Co. at 4 o'clock in the morning, on which there were 400 tons of iron rail and no lights whatever. In attempting to make the gangway up to the road or street she went over the end of the dock, and was so seriously injured that her life was dispaired of for three days. Suit was brought in the superior court of Skagit County and subsequently removed to the Federal court, which was then held in the Colman Block.

Q. Now, tell it as briefly as you can, so that the committee may know from the outline of it whether they deem it worthy of further investigation. We will see how pointed and brief you can be.—A. I thought at that time, and I think still, that Judge Hanford erroneously charged the jury.

Q. Is that all there is to it? Don't you know of many judges who erroneously charge a jury?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything more than the mere error in the charge to the jury of which you complain?—A. Yes; I think there was a lack of judicial temperament shown.

Q. Well, you may go on and tell us what you complain of.—A. Mr. Andrew F. Burleigh was attorney for the Oregon Improvement Co. at that time. I heard him remark while he was getting his shoes blacked that that lady was evidently very much injured.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. MacKinnon, not knowing anything of the matter in your mind, I think it would be much wiser for the committee to hear you when not sitting, and we will determine from your story then whether we think it is necessary to take your testimony in regard to it.

A. That is satisfactory. I wish to state, however, that I am an involuntary witness; I am not a voluntary witness nor a Socialist.

Q. You have been subpœnaed?—A. Yes, sir; I have been subpœnaed.

The CHAIRMAN. At any event, I think the course I suggest is the wiser and better one—if you will stand aside.

Witness excused.

M. A. MEAD, recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Mead, was Judge Hanford pointed out to you since you were on the stand a while ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford by sight?—A. I have seen him before; yes.

Q. Where?—A. On the street car.

Q. When?—A. It was when I was gripping on the James Street line. I hauled him up the hill a few times.

Q. How often do you recall noticing him?—A. That would be pretty hard for a gripman to say—how often when you see a man——

Q. Give us some idea of whether it was frequently or only seldom.—A. Well, it was not very often.

Q. If, at any time, you saw him when he seemed to you to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor——A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) Tell us.—A. I never noticed him to know whether he drank at all or not.

Q. Did you at any time help him on or off your car?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything in his conduct which attracted your attention while he was on the car?—A. No, sir.

Q. Since you have been a policeman have you seen him?—A. I have not seen him since I have been on the police force.

Q. Have you at any time seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of an intoxicant?—A. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. You are excused. Are there any other witnesses who wish to get away? Is Mr. Jacobs in the room?

Witness excused.

GEORGE M. JACOBS, recalled, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You have been sworn as a witness, if I am not mistaken?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that oath still remains good in this matter. What is your full name?—A. George M. Jacobs.

Q. You testified in this room in this matter a day or two ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What date was it?—A. The day before yesterday, I think.

Q. Since you testified on that occasion has anyone spoken to you regarding your testimony? If so, state the fact whether they did so or not, without telling what it was.—A. Well, yes, sir; there was.

Q. Where was it?—A. It happened in the Lumber Exchange.

Q. Who was it who spoke to you?—A. The gentleman's name?

Q. Yes; I think you ought to give it.—A. I would prefer, Mr. Chairman, to write it and hand it to you, if you would permit that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you ought to tell it.

A. Mr. Kerrigan.

Q. What is the first name?—A. W. S. Kerrigan.

Q. Who is Mr. Kerrigan?—A. W. S. Kerrigan.

Q. Who is he?—A. Well, he is a broker that I have known for several years here in the city.

Q. Do you mean a real estate broker or a pawnbroker, or both?—A. He is a real estate broker, selling real estate and hotels.

Q. You may state what occurred.—A. Well, I believe he started out the conversation by saying that I was a fine one—that was the first remark he made.

Q. How soon was this after you had testified?—A. It was along in the evening, about, possibly 7.30. I asked him what he meant by that. He said "What did you testify about in the Hanford matter?" And I said "I testified to the truth. I simply answered the questions that were put to me and I went there by subpœna." He says, "Don't you know that you will be ostracised"—I believe was the word he used; at least, that is my remembrance now—"by many of the business men in the city of Seattle"? He says, "I know that you have had a hard enough time in the last four or five years in getting through what we all lived through." Well, I said, "Do you mean that they will make it harder for me?" He said, "I certainly do." Well, I said, "I only told the truth, anyway, and answered the questions put to me." I said, "Do you mean that I should not have done so?" Well, he said, "I would have avoided it." I said, "I did avoid it as long as I could." I said, "I could not do anything else only tell what I knew." Why, he said, "I never saw Judge Hanford take a drink." I said, "You never saw him take a drink?" "No." Well, I said, "You have cruised around this town about as much as I have. I will tell you what I will do." Well, I remarked to him first that it was a notorious fact all over the city, and then I said, "You have cruised around this town about as much as I have. I will tell you what I will do. We will go over to the Rathskeller"—which is immediately opposite, or almost opposite, the Lumber Exchange—"we will go over to the Savoy bar; we will go to the Saratoga, the Stratford, Sullivan's bar, in the Alaska Building; Goldie's bar, immediately across from the Butler; we will go to the Butler, the Seattle, or the Mecca. I will go in first and you can bring your friend with you, and I will call for a 'Hanford Martini,' and if he does not ask me to explain what I mean I will pay for the drinks, providing—and if he doesn't ask me to explain and they give us a dry Martini with an onion in it in place of a stuffed olive, you pay for the drinks," and he said, "All right," and we gathered up another friend as we were on our way across to the Rathskeller, and he paid for the drinks.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean by that that they gave us a dry Martini with an onion in it, without asking any questions whatever.

Q. What did you say?—A. I simply asked for a Judge Hanford Martini—nothing further.

Q. What else?—A. Well, owing to the fact that the remark was made that everybody didn't like Martinis, I told him that they might ask for his special brand of whisky, and if they didn't produce Monogram whisky that I would still pay for the drinks.

Q. Were others with you and this man?—A. There were. There was Mr. Kerrigan and a gentleman—I know his name, but I can't just recall it now—who works for the Republic Tire people on Pike Street, and we picked up Mr. McGinnis on the way over there, whom I am acquainted with, or else after we got over there, I can't say which—after we arrived at the Rathskeller.

Q. What is Mr. McGinnis's first name?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. What is Mr. McGinnis's first name?—A. I think it is A. McGinnis.

Q. Do you know his address?—A. I think it is 517 Eighteenth Avenue north.

Q. Well, did this first man, Mr. Kerrigan, make anything in the nature of a personal threat against you, or did he merely express his opinion as to what might happen to you generally?—A. He expressed that opinion that I would be practically out in the cold hereafter as far as a great many of the business men in the city were concerned.

Q. Have you told the whole of the incident?—A. With the exception that I told him that it was a well-known fact among all the bartenders in the city, or a good many of the bartenders, what he drank, which led to my making the bet. I think he told me prior to that that some bartenders had testified that they never had seen Judge Hanford drinking, nor under the influence of liquor.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. You told Mr. Kerrigan that there were many bartenders in the city that it was a well-known fact among them that Judge Hanford drank?—A. Yes, sir; that is what led to the making the bet. That is after he made his remark to me.

Q. I wish you would now furnish to the committee the names of the bartenders who know that fact.—A. Well, who have knowledge of that—he made the remark——

Q. I understand you stated to him that you knew that there were in this city many bartenders who knew that Judge Hanford drank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And drank at their bars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I ask you to give the names to the committee, or furnish them at any time later on during this investigation.—A. I have already given you the name of the bar where I was willing to stake my money—and I never stake on anything else only a sure thing—and they had their choice of choosing what bar I went to and I had my choice of picking the bartender which I knew had been there three or four years.

Q. In other words, when you told Mr. Kerrigan of the large number of bartenders in the town who served drinks to Judge Hanford, you were not quite within the truth, were you?—A. No, sir; I didn't tell him a large number of bartenders—I named the particular saloons.

Q. Will you name any bartenders who have not testified, or those that have testified in this investigation that you know who have served Judge Hanford drinks, or have seen him in an intoxicated condition?—A. I will name the bars where you may subpœna the bartenders who have been there three or four years.

Mr. HIGGINS. We have already done that. But can you furnish this committee the names of the bartenders?

A. Well, I don't think the committee should ask me to do that.

Q. I ask you to do it, in view of your testimony, if you are able to do it.—A. If you can make that incumbent upon me to do that without going out of my everyday business—if it will meet the ends of justice I would like to do it.

Q. Are you able to do it now?—A. I would be within an hour, if you will give me that length of time.

Q. Well, I will ask you to do it within an hour. Who did you relate this circumstance to after it occurred, Mr. Jacobs?—A. Who did I relate it to?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I don't think it was talked over at all—I don't think I talked it over to anybody except to—we talked it over this morning—at least I made the remark about it in Mr. Kerrigan's office, and later on I spoke to Mr. Chairman—to Mr. Graham—in regard to it.

Q. I did not get you—you testified as to the number of bars you visited.—A. We visited one bar. They concluded, after they had to pay once—I would have gone with them very cheerfully to all the others if they had gone there.

Q. And that was the Butler bar?—A. No, sir; it was the Rathskeller.

Q. That was the only bar you went to on that occasion?—A. Yes.

Q. On that bet?—A. Yes, sir. They were the quitters, however. I didn't care for what I was going to get to drink.

Q. You will furnish the committee—now it is five minutes past 4—the names of other bartenders that you say you know who know Judge Hanford has drunk at their bar.—A. If the committee will require that of me, I will furnish the names, although I would rather not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. An hour from now will be about our adjourning time, and it will do in the morning.

The WITNESS. What time?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we convene at 9.30—by that time.

The WITNESS. I would like to request, Mr. Chairman, that since I named the bars that it is easy for this committee to find out the old employees of those bars. I think it would be a very easy matter to find out the names without my assistance in that matter, although I am perfectly willing to give it, if you request it.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Chairman, I think the witness's position is a perfectly reasonable one. If we want to know the names of all the bartenders in all these saloons, the proprietors of the saloons will give them to us.

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not think it is, Mr. Chairman, in view of the testimony which he has given. He claimed that he knows the names of the numerous bartenders that have served Judge Hanford and are acquainted with his habits.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't understand him to say that he knew them.

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask him to furnish the names; that is all—to get them for us.

The WITNESS. I will make a statement here. I can't furnish the names at this time. I know the people personally. I know them from year to year as I have occasionally seen them, and some of them I know their names.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, will you furnish the names of those you know?

A. Within the time stated; yes.

Q. That is, to-morrow morning at 9.30.—A. 9.30.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of law, the committee has the right to know from you the names of those whom you know, of those whom you have spoken of, as a matter of law——

A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But as a matter of law the committee has no power to make you go out and inquire and find names and hunt them up. I want to be frank with you. It is your duty to give us the names of those whom you know and whom you can recall by thinking. We can not make you give your time to hunting them up.

The WITNESS. Well, I do not request that. I named those bars, not because I was personally acquainted; that is, that I was acquainted with them except as to knowing them when I see them in their place; but I knew the bars where I knew that Judge Hanford was wont to drink and I heard the remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Report to the committee to-morrow morning.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything else to suggest now, Mr. Hughes, as to how we can utilize the time from now until we adjourn?

Mr. HUGHES. I think it would be well if we would take up one of the records. Mr. Preston is wanting in the clerk's office.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, there are two suspended matters that were to go back to the committee under the instructions, as I recall them—one was the warrant and complaint issued for the arrest of Mr. Erickson and others, which he said he would bring in later.

Mr. MCCOY. Who is Mr. Erickson?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Erickson, when he was on the stand, said he would turn those in. Has that been returned by Mr. Erickson?

The CHAIRMAN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. DORR. The other item that I have in mind was the date and the name of the person who registered at the Hotel Washington Annex as testified to by Mr. Charles S. Peterson. He volunteered to give that information and bring it in so that we might have the date fixed. Has that come in yet?

The CHAIRMAN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MCCOY. What would Mr. Erickson have in his possession in that matter—I mean what papers would have been served on him, in the ordinary course of business?

Mr. DORR. The warrant and the information, I think.

Mr. McCoy. That was my point, whether if he brought what was served on him it would do any good and whether we could not get what is in the court filed.

Mr. Dorr. Well, we can get it from the court files, I suppose.

Mr. Hughes. I think the matter was the information before the commissioner, and probably it is not in the court files.

Mr. Dorr. It is not in the Federal court files—it was before the United States commissioner. We would have to go to his records.

Mr. McCoy. What sort of a record does the commissioner make in those cases?

Mr. Hughes. I think he keeps a docket of some kind—I don't know.

Mr. Dorr. I remember that Mr. Erickson, I think in answer to your request, Mr. McCoy, said that he would bring that paper in.

Mr. McCoy. Yes; I have a recollection of his saying something like that.

Mr. Dorr. We can get it, of course, from the commissioner, or some other source.

The Chairman. Those who are present in the court room, I might announce to them that there will be no more testimony taken this evening. The committee will have what will practically be an executive session, dealing entirely with documents at the table down here, and I take it that that would be of no interest to you. If you wish to leave you can do so now so that we can work without interruption.

AFTER RECESS (2 O'CLOCK P. M.).

The Chairman. The committee will please be in order.

Mr. Preston. At your suggestion I have examined the files in two cases known as the Fishery cases. The first one I might say was the main one, being the case of the Colonial Trust Co. and the Rudolph Pfeiffer Co. against the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co., No. 1081. I have here a full statement that I made up. The files in that case are very voluminous; my notes on them cover ten or a dozen pages.

The Chairman. What would you propose that we should do now that you should recite this?

Mr. Preston. I can recite from the paper that is given here with a brief statement of its contents. Many of them would not interest you.

The Chairman. Oh, well, you can just check them off on your paper those that are not needed.

Mr. McCoy. Perhaps the better way would be to check off those that we do need.

The Chairman. Suppose we start in and see how it goes.

Mr. Hughes. Wouldn't it be entirely sufficient for your purpose to have Mr. Preston give a brief synopsis of each paper and then only put in such papers as you may think worth while, after he has given a brief history of the case?

Mr. Preston. I understand you are examining the case with a view to taking into consideration the allowance made to the attorneys and the receivers.

The Chairman. And the distribution of the assets generally and what went to the creditors.

Mr. Preston. I can make you a general statement of that.

To start with, the receivers handled $3,255,880. The total allowance to receivers and their attorneys was $87,885, which equals 27 mills on the dollar of the cash handled.

Mr. McCoy. What was the allowance to each?

Mr. Preston. I will come to that in detail later. This is a general statement to start with. The creditors were paid 27 mills on the dollar, or 2.7 per cent. The creditors received 7 and a fraction cents on the dollar, but the assets were taken over by a reorganization composed of a very large per cent of the creditors and the stockholders.

Mr. McCoy. The stock was issued, I presume.

Mr. Preston. In the reorganization?

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

Mr. Preston. I do not know; that will show here.

Mr. Higgins. That is entirely separate from the receivership proceedings.

Mr. McCoy. Not necessarily; it might have been on a court order.

Mr. Preston. No; it did not appear in the court proceedings at all; it simply appears that there was a reorganization committee composed of the creditors, etc., and something over $2,000,000 of the creditors were present in court when the fees were fixed.

Bills filed March 3, 1903.—The Colonial Trust Co. is a small contract creditor. Its cocomplainant, Pfeiffer, was a stockholder. The basis of the claim was the insolvency of the defendants.

Mr. Hughes. The basis of the action of proceeding?

Mr. Preston. Yes; a large amount of outstanding claims and fisheries contracts which I can explain to you from reading this.

Fisheries are operated by Chinese contractors contracting in advance of the season to supply necessary labor for each cannery, and they gave them a guaranty of so much of a run, and these contracts had been made in advance for the coming season of 1903, but the company did not have means to carry them out and continue its pack, or its operation, I should say; and that the assets would be dissipated by suits being brought against the company for debts it was unable to pay in different jurisdictions. The complaint asks for the appointment of McGovern & Hallock, or alleges, I should say, the appointment of McGovern & Hallock as receivers by the United States court in New Jersey, and asking that they be appointed here with J. A. Kerr. On the same day the answer of the defendant is filed admitting allegations of the complaint. On the same day an order is made appointing those three receivers, they to be subject to removal by this court and required to report to this court. On the same day the oath and bond of Kerr was filed.

March 5 Kerr petitions for leave to pay pay roll of $6,600 and insurance premiums that were passed due, amounting to $9,120; and an order was made granting the petition.

On the next day, March 6, the Seattle Hardware Co. petitions, alleging that it has sold and partially delivered a large bill of goods in ignorance of the insolvency, and asks to have them set aside and kept separate from the assets, or that provision be made to pay for them in cash.

On the same day Kerr petitions for leave to sign checks and conduct the business alone because his coreceivers are absent from the State, which order was granted.

Mr. McCoy. Where was Hallock?

Mr. PRESTON. Hallock was in New York State, I think, and McGovern in New Jersey.

Mr. DORR. McGovern was in New York and Hallock in New Jersey.

Mr. PRESTON. That is right. I got it down wrong here.

On March 9 Kerr, the receiver, petitions for leave to issue $80,000 of receiver certificates in order to secure supplies and labor to operate the Orca & Kenai canneries for the 1903 season, which order was granted.

On the 13th an order directing the return of the goods to the Seattle Hardware Co.

On the 21st the Pacific Coast Co. asks leave to intervene, setting up a claim of $16,000, and the order is made granting leave to intervene.

The same day McGovern petitions for leave to issue receivers' certificates for one and one-fourth million dollars, $750,000, to be sold now at not less than par, but sets out the necessity for issuing $700,000 in order to operate canneries for 1903, of which I may say, inferentially, there were 2 or 3 in Washington and 12 or 13 in Alaska. Seven hundred thousand dollars would be necessary for cannery supplies, and $750,000 for cannery labor; $13,000 to protect margin on the 1902 pack, which had been hypothecated by the company. I will explain that a little fuller from my memory. It seems that the 1902 pack had been stored and warehouse receipts for the same hypothecated to borrow money with, and that the price of salmon had fallen so that the margin was so close now that the stockholders of the collateral would sell the salmon and nothing be realized from the margin. This petition was granted, but the order required the receiver to redeem the $80,000 previously issued for receiver certificates.

On the 31st petition of McGovern was filed, and April 23 his bid.

April 6 another creditor, the Linen Thread Co., comes in and sets up the same set of facts as the Seattle Hardware Co. did in regard to its goods. That petition was granted. It seems they had sold a bill of goods to the receiver in ignorance of the insolvency.

April 7 the inventory is filed which shows assets of the company of $4,635,827; liabilities, $4,868,973. Of these assets one and a fourth million was said to be in Alaska, $2,000,000 in Washington, and one and a third million in New Jersey; in round figures, $1,330,000. There was 50 pages of this inventory. I have simply brought in the lump of it.

On the 11th of April the National Bank of Commerce petitions to intervene for a preference claim of $25,000 for cash loaned within six months to the receiver to pay supply and labor bills contracted within six months. This petition was granted on the same day and the receiver directed to pay that out of the proceeds of the certificates.

On the 25th of April oath and bond of Hallock was filed.

On the 9th of May petitions of the receivers recited that the New Jersey court and the Alaska court had also authorized a million and a quarter receivers' certificates, reciting sale of $750,000 of them, and asking leave to sell balance, $500,000. Order granted providing they be sold at not less than par and requiring deposit of all cash that the receivers may receive in a bank to be selected by the receivers.

On the 11th of May the plaintiff petitions, reciting that John R. Winn had been appointed receiver in Alaska and New Jersey, and asking that the same be done here, and asking that there may be harmonized action between the different courts so that they would have the same receivers. This order was granted, but the order required Winn to be subject to the orders of this court. Same day his oath was filed, and on the 20th his bond was filed.

On the 25th there was an order made——

Mr. McCoy. Who was this receiver?

Mr. Preston. John R. Winn. He was the attorney in Juneau, Alaska.

On the 25th there was an order made reciting that one of the devices used in canning salmon was protected by a patent, and of some infringement suit pending in which an injunction was asked. This order was that the receivers might give a bond and stay the injunction so as to permit them to use the device which was in dispute.

On the 9th of June, 1903, copy of order of Judge Brown, of the Alaska court, to remove the topping machine from Alaska to Washington.

July 29, 1903, petition of receivers for permission to make good guaranty against swells made to cover the 1902 pack, estimated to involve expenditure of $300, and to make a like guaranty for 1903 pack. Order granting said petition.

July 31, 1903, petition of Johnson and order granting same for leave to sue receivers in justice court for lost baggage.

On the 18th of August affidavit of Receiver Kerr filed showing that there had been an invasion of the fish traps of the company in Whatcom County by fish pirates and setting a contempt case against them for hearing on August 20 requiring them to give bond of a thousand dollars each to appear at that time; but there had been previously on the 7th of August a petition of the receivers for an order on the United States marshal to protect the traps from the fish pirates, and an order made on the same day to the marshal to protect them.

On the 8th of August there was filed a petition for leave to make contract with salmon brokers in England for $500,000 worth of the 1903 pack and to receive advancements on same. Order granted.

September 3 the Alaska Commercial Co. filed a petition for lien on assets of $3,380 for money received from the United States Government on mail contract. It seemed that the Alaska Commercial Co. and the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. had taken a contract in the name of the Packing & Navigation Co. to carry the mails, and had alternated their steamers, so that the money had come to the receivers—all the money—and they were entitled to half of it. An order was made directing the payment of this.

On the 5th of September there was a petition of the receivers for leave to make proof of loss. It seemed that the Kenai cannery had burned and there was a loss claimed of $77,286.20. An order was made granting this.

On September 30 P. F. Nordby petitioned for an order on the receivers requiring them to pay $227.94 for cash collected, and $110 additional for supplies furnished fisheries.

On November 3 petition of receivers recites that the order for receivers' certificates required net proceeds of the 1903 pack to be deposited to create a sinking fund. By an oversight the gross proceeds of certain sales of the pack had been deposited there that amounted to $22,000, and which ought not to have been deposited in the sinking fund; and they prayed for an order to transfer it from the sinking fund over to the general deposit; and this was granted on the same day.

On November 27 the receivers' petition recites that out of the proceeds of receivers' certificates $26,940 was used to pay interest on them which should have been paid out of the general funds; that there was $600,000 proceeds of the 1903 pack in the sinking fund and there was $900,000 worth of salmon pack unsold, and they asked a transfer of that amount out of the sinking fund.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are their warehouses?

Mr. KERR. We had a warehouse of our own on the Broad Street dock.

Mr. PRESTON. This was granted.

Then on the 28th of November there was an order permitting $7,800 which had been paid into the sinking fund, which did not come from the salmon pack, to be withdrawn to the general fund.

On the 8th of December an order limiting creditors to a period of seven weeks to present their claims, requiring notices of that limitation to be published for five weeks in the Post-Intelligencer here in Seattle and mailed to all known creditors.

On December 28 a petition for leave to sell for $65,000 the steam schooners Geanie, Newport, and Excelsior, and the two mail contracts which pertained to them, reciting that those were inventoried at $115,000, but that two of them which were in this jurisdiction had been appraised at $39,000; that the other one, the Newport, was in Alaska, and they could not get to it to appraise it, but that its invoiced value was only $15,000. That petition was granted.

Mr. HIGGINS. That left the receiver with how many schooners?

Mr. PRESTON. I would have to go to the inventory for that.

Mr. KERR. Only the two power vessels and five or six ships. These power vessels were steamships which were carrying mail and passengers—steam tugs.

Mr. HIGGINS. And which was not a substantial part of the outfit which you used?

Mr. KERR. Those vessels were used in connection with the canneries, but we went out of the ocean transportation business.

Mr. HIGGINS. Those ships were used in connection with fishing?

Mr. KERR. They were used exclusively in carrying passengers and mail—those that we sold.

Mr. HIGGINS. But that left you with no passenger ships.

Mr. KERR. Well, it left us with ships so that we carried a few passengers to the canneries and along the coast, but we did not operate them for the passenger business.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is, you personally went out of the passenger-carrying business?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. And did that also dispose of your mail contract?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. This petition, as I remember it, recites that there is no advantage or profit in the receivers handling that business—that they could conduct the cannery business without them.

Mr. KERR. We carried the mail from Seattle to Valdez and from Valdez to Canaie, and during all the time this contract was in effect, especially in the winter season, you will find that practically every trip we made we ran behind and that we lost money.

Mr. HIGGINS. How about carrying passengers, was that profitable?

Mr. KERR. No.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did you maintain the same rates for carrying passengers after you took charge of the property as was maintained before?

Mr. KERR. Just the same; we did not change it at all.

Mr. PRESTON. That petition was granted.

On the 8th of January, 1904, there is a petition for leave to draw out of the sinking fund $16,207 more; that was not a part of the net proceeds of the pack. That was granted.

On the 18th of January the receivers' petition for leave to vacate their up-town office, saying that it will save $250 a month rent, and to sell the furniture in it for $1,800, and then to move down to Bellingham. That order was granted.

On the 19th of January the Fireman's Fund petitioned to be paid insurance premiums of $14,869. Order granting leave to file petition; and on the 30th of January receivers answered, contesting their right to that money, and they filed a reply to them on the same day.

On the 30th of January the receivers petitioned the court. Petitioner recites operation of the Alaska and Puget Sound canneries and steamers, and that they spent one and a fourth million dollars from receiver certificates and $500,000 from pack and sale of property paid this item of same of property, $82,800 included in the $500,000—that refers to the 1903 pack that was carried on by the receivers themselves; that the pack that year had been disappointing all over the coast, but they had in the sinking fund $640,000, and they had supplies on hand for the next season of the value of $473,500; that the 1903 pack amounted to or involved $800,000 expenses. They advised a continuance of the business another year rather than liquidation; that they be allowed to issue new certificates for $750,000, taking up the outstanding issue of the old out of that; that is to say, they did not have funds in the sinking fund sufficient.

Mr. MCCOY. Was there any profit on the business the first year?

Mr. KERR. About $208,000.

Mr. MCCOY. What was the capital stock of the company?

Mr. KERR. $25,000,000.

Mr. PRESTON. On the same day there is a petition filed by creditors whose claims aggregated two and a half million dollars, asking that that petition of the receiver be granted.

Mr. HIGGINS. How long had the company been in operation when you took it?

Mr. KERR. It commenced operation in the middle of the pack of 1901; 1901 was a disastrous year on the Pacific coast for salmon. About five and a fourth million cases of salmon; they lost the first year they remained in business over $100,000, and the next year was almost as disastrous.

Mr. HIGGINS. What was it the last year?

Mr. KERR. That was the last year they operated.

Mr. PRESTON. On the same day the receivers petitioned for leave to draw $150,000 out of the sinking fund, leaving enough for the purposes of the formal order and to use the $150,000 to pay outstanding obligations and procure supplies for the 1904 season. That order was granted.

On February 26 there was an order made on the depositary of the sinking fund, which was a bank in San Francisco—I believe the Bank of California—to observe the order of January 30 for taking up the old issue of receiver certificates.

On March 17 petition for allowance of attorneys' fees to Mr. McCord, who appeared as attorney for the receivers from the beginning.

Mr. McCoy. Did that petition have annexed to it any itemized statement of the services rendered?

Mr. Preston. No; it recites that he acted as attorney for more than a year, and there is an order allowing $10,000 to him on account and directing the receiver to pay it on the same day.

March 23 receivers petitioned for leave to sell gas schooner Duxbury, reciting that she is 3 years old and that she cost $3,500, and they have a chance to sell her for $2,750, and the order was made granting the petition.

On March 25 there was an order allowing the Fireman's Fund its claim—that was contested as I said before—for $1,108 as a preferred claim and $13,769 as a common claim.

On April 2 the receivers petitioned for leave to sell the small schooner Maid of Orleans, inventoried at $5,000, and that they have an offer for $4,800, which petition was granted. On the 2d of April, 1904, the receivers petitioned to sell a vacant tideland lot in Anacortez for $1,000, that being the appraised value of it. An order made directing the master in chancery to sell the same at public auction at an upset price of $1,000.

On the 23d of April there is a petition of Judge Winn asking for an allowance to him on account of services as receiver. There is filed with this an order of the Alaska court for allowance of $7,500, and this order here is confirmatory of that one. Now, that $7,500 I did not take into consideration in counting up the allowance made by Judge Hanford for that reason—it was simply confirmatory of the order of the other court.

On the 3d of May there is a petition filed by a Chinese firm, ay Chinmow, claiming $850 for wages for firemen and testers, and $10,300 for guaranty on the 1903 pack on a contract, reciting that the contract guaranteed them 44,000 cases, and that it had fallen short of this supply to the Nushagak River cannery.

On the 17th of May there is a master's return of sale of the Anacortez lot, $2,200.

On the 24th of May an order for the master's fees and disbursements amounting to $104.70.

On the 27th of May the receivers petition to order deed for the same; and that is granted.

On the 21st of June the master's report of his deed and order that it be without redemption.

On June 23 another Chinese firm, Wing Hong Shing, filed a petition for leave to intervene, claiming part of the money that Shing Mow claimed to be due to him.

On June 27 petition of the receivers to exchange tideland contract they had for warehouse and building near it, reciting that they had no use for the tideland contract and that the warehouse and building would be useful. That is granted.

On the 30th of June there is an intervention of the Federal Insurance Co. having made a preferred claim for $3,581, or for premiums. Order was granted. Then there is an intervention of a company in England for a preferred claim of $181.80, and a common claim of $1,159 for insurance premiums. An order is made granting that.

On July 14, 1904, receivers petition to borrow $125,000 on warehouse receipts for use in putting up 1904 pack. Granted.

I overlooked that on the 10th of May here the receivers petitioned reciting that they need $100,000 to pay bills preparatory to removing offices to Bellingham. That they have on hand at Seattle salmon worth $160,000, in New York salmon worth $235,000, in England salmon their equity in which is worth $200,000—that is, salmon for which they had received an advance under a previous order from the London brokers, and they pray leave to borrow $100,000 on warehouse receipts. That is granted.

On the 6th of September petition of the Chong Fish Co. filed.

On the 1st of October receivers petition to sell bulk of assets. This petition receipts one and a fourth million original issue of receivers' certificates, and that they have been retired, and they have $750,000; that the receivers had operated canneries in 1903, the cannery at Blaine in Washington and 12 canneries in Alaska; packed 386,856 cases of salmon at a cost of $1,200,000, and sold 205,000 cases for $1,000,000 over and above brokerage, transportation, storage, and insurance charges, and also realized $2,900,000 out of sales of assets, most of which was the 1902 pack, including $88,156 under the Alaska court orders; they have on hand of the 1903 pack, in England 125,000 cases pledged for advances, in the East 50,000 cases, in Seattle 25,000 cases; that in the season of 1904 they had operated five canneries in Alaska; the output was 247,000 cases, out of which they have and will realize $1,000,000; that when appointed there were labor claims of $136,000, of which $108,000 were paid; unsecured creditors, $3,400,000; recites that the reorganization committee, composed of stockholders and the large creditors, wished a sale to be made of everything except salmon, receivers' bills receivable, and supplies on hand; that all the costs of the 1903 operation had been paid except $2,000, and that they will be able to pay all expenses and leave a surplus.

Now, this petition describes the assets sought to be sold, divided into 23 groups of 11 pages. Each cannery will constitute a group in itself with the surrounding properties, and then the steamers, etc.; that the cash on hand at the time they were appointed was $38,000; that they made betterments at an expense of $80,000; that they had handled up to February, 1904, which was the close of the 1903 pack business, $3,320,000; that they had expended $3,175,000; that the balance on hand at the end of the 1903 work was $144,600; that they had received as a result of the 1904 operation $753,000, including $144,600 that was on hand; that they disbursed $659,000, and the balance is $94,294; that it would require $350,000 more to close all the accounts exclusive of all the expenses of the receivership; that the net gain of the 1903 operation was $108,000, and 1904 estimate of $112,000, but not including—not deducting the expenses of administration—that means the receiver's compensation.

Now, they suggest that upset price be set upon each single group, and that there be an upset price put on the whole thing in case it should be sold in the aggregate. When there is on the same day an order to the clerk of the court to pay out of the registry of the court to the receiver the amount received from the sale of the Anacortes lot. On the same day there is an order of sale of the assets excluding the pack on hand, etc., as it excludes it in the petition, two-thirds of the proceeds to go to the Alaska court and one-third to the Washington court.

Mr. McCoy. Why was that?

Mr. Preston. Why, that was recited to be a fair division of the values of the property according to their locations, as I undertand it.

On October 1, 1904, there is an answer filed by the receivers to Shing Mow's intervention, an order of reference on it; an answer to the petition of Wing Hong Shing, an order of reference on it.

On November 3, 1904 ——

The Chairman. Those Chinamen were handling the contract labor?

Mr. Preston. You would call them boss Chinamen; they were contractors.

On November 3, 1904, the receivers petitioned for leave to settle a $5,000 salvage claim made against them for $500. That is granted.

November 18, 1904, they petitioned for leave to sell a $2,800 claim against an insolvent debtor for $750. That is granted.

November 23, 1904, they petitioned for leave to grant order of sale so as to include balance of property because they were not able to effect any sale without it; to permit the creditors to apply—if any creditor is a purchaser—to apply on his bid so much of his claim in amount equal to the dividend which would be coming to him on his claim, and requiring the purchaser if he were a creditor to retire the receivers' certificates. Supplemental decree of sale made on that petition.

On December 19, 1904, the receivers object to the confirmation of sale of certain groups—3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18.

December 21, 1904 ——

The Chairman. You mean objected to the results of the bidding?

Mr. Preston. To the results of the bidding. I would explain here that this sale was to be made by the master in chancery. He made the same and sold different groups to different people and the receivers object to certain groups.

December 21, 1904, the master's report is filed on groups 4, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, for $6,600.

December 24, 1904, there is an order of confirmation of the sale of group 6 for $40,000, $1,982, and $25,000, a mortgage taken for $2,200, and a rejection of all other sales—or a refusal to confirm the other sales.

December 30, 1904, the receivers approve the sale of group 9 for $8,500; group 10 for $750, and object to others.

On January 1, 1905, there was a notice filed of the claim of the Pacific Selling Co. That was the one that was subsequently rejected.

January 9, 1905, the supplementary report of the master, showing Alaska sale for $43,375.

January 29, 1905, an order allowing Mr. Kerr $15,000 on account of services as receiver.

February 4 there is a supplemental report.

March 10 the receivers' petition and report claims filed with them of creditors; debentures $1,698,000, unsecured notes $1,215,000, collateral notes $121,000, which collateral will pay, judgments $17,575, general creditors $44,168; total $3,000,097. Their report rejected claims $677,000; contingent liabilities $670,000—that contingent liability is explained more in detail in the report, being the indorsement of this company on the notes of the Pacific American Fisheries Co., an allied company, which was also in receivership at the same time. This company owning all of the capital stock of the other company except either ten or fifteen shares, I forget exactly.

February 15, 1905 there was a lease of the Orca cannery.

February 15, 1905, motion of purchaser of one parcel to shorten the time for confirmation.

February 17, 1905, receivers report recommending acceptance of bid of $205,000 for the large bulk of the groups and the rejection of separate bids, but asking that first notice be given to all the creditors.

February 4, 1905, there is a master's supplemental report of the sale.

February 8, 1905, the receivers' petition to pay $225,000 on account of receivers' certificates out of the sinking fund for interest, reciting that they only got 2 per cent on the deposit and certificates were bearing 6 per cent.

February 14, 1905, receivers object to certain bids and recommend others, and there was an order confirming the sale of those they recommend. Then Humphrey, the purchaser of one of the groups, moves for confirmation of his sale, and his petition that the time for the consideration of the matter be shortened is granted by the order of February 15.

February 17, 1905, a creditor objects to the sale of Humphreys's, and an order then fixing March 6 for the hearing and directing notice to creditors is made.

February 18, 1905, Humphreys again moved for confirmation and gives notice of his motion, and supports it by two affidavits of himself and one or another man. Then the bid of Spencer is received. He is a man who bids $205,000, and he objects to Humphreys's sale.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the amount of Humphreys's bid?

Mr. KERR. $38,000. That was one of the canneries along what we call the westward of Alaska. There was one at Nushigak and one at Karnick and one at Kanai and one at Orca, and we sold to the Northwestern Fisheries Co. all this group at the same time that Humphreys bid on the Orca cannery. [Here Mr. Kerr makes some further explanation which is inaudible to the stenographer.]

Mr. PRESTON. February 21, 1905, there is a motion and affidavit of Humphreys filed; on the same day a man by the name of Talton files objections to the Spencer purchase of groups 2 and 3.

March 2, 1905, Humphreys files a bond. I do not remember what that bond was for.

Mr. KERR. Humphreys got a lease of the cannery, and the bond was to secure the lease to Humphreys.

Mr. PRESTON. On the 2d of March the court makes an order to the receivers to conform to Humphreys' sale.

March 3, 1905, he makes an order for the lease of the Orca cannery to Humphrey. Now, the reason for that, as I gather it from the paper, was that the next season was so close, while that contest was going on for the sale, that they had better lease it for operation. Maybe I am not right about that.

Mr. KERR. That is substantially right. It was leased and subsequently it was sold to him for $40,000. I do not know the exact amount; probably it will appear in there later.

Mr. PRESTON. March 6, 1905, Spencer, a large bidder, files objections to certain of the sales, and then there is an objection to the sale of a certain tugboat to Spencer. Then the tugboat files objections to the Spencer sale, and then the tugboat files a motion against the master's report and asks for a confirmation of the sale made of the group to it; then Humphreys objects to the confirmation of the Spencer sale, and Humphreys files a motion attacking the master's report and asks for the confirmation of the sale to him. Then a man by the name of Field who was a personal-injury plaintiff against the receivers, files an objection against any distribution of the funds of the creditors which would leave him out, and gives notice of hearing, and the receivers give notice of hearing his petition. Then there is a petition of the receivers to settle with a certain creditor who holds $100,000 of collateral and pay $22,500 in cash to the receivers—in other words, discounting $2,500. This is granted on the recommendation of the petitioners.

March 10, 1905, there is a petition to sell the tug Alice for $5,150. That is granted.

On the same day the purchaser of the Blaine cannery petitions to be paid $1,700 for missing articles, showing that he bought according to the inventory, and when he came to inventory them that there was that much missing. That is granted, Then there is an order on that date establishing claims of the creditors in accordance with the report of the receivers, rejecting those claims which the receivers rejected.

March 14, 1905, there is an order confirming the sale to Spencer, except the Orca cannery, and insomuch as the Alaska judge is absent from his jurisdiction and they can not have a confirmation of that sale in time for the 1905 season, the receivers recommend that they lease the canneries to Spencer for the 1905 season pending an opportunity to get a confirmation from the Alaska court.

April 1, 1905, order directing the clerk to pay the receivers the proceeds of the Blaine cannery, the master having sold it and having returned the proceeds into the registry of the court.

April 3, 1905, the receipt of the receiver to the clerk for that amount is filed.

April 25, 1905, there is an order to retire the balance of receivers' certificates, $462,500.

May 2, 1905, the master petitions for leave to amend his return of sale, Blaine cannery. That is granted.

May 3, 1905, the receivers petition for leave to sell vessels to Humphrey for $38,500—there is a figure 1/3 in there somehow, and I can not translate it on my memorandum.

May 8, 1905, there is an order confirming the Spencer sale.

May 9, 1905, an order that the balance in excess in the sinking fund, that is to say, that is left after the retirement of the receivers' certificates, be paid over to the receivers.

May 25, 1905, there is a petition of the receivers for leave to sell a yacht which they say was built by the company for a pleasure yacht, and they have no use for it and they can get $10,000 for it, and it costs $15,000. That is granted.

May 29, 1905, an order fixing the master's compensation for the sale and his memorandum of expenditures and costs made in the sale; and then there is an order of the clerk to pay the receivers $29,000 out of the registry, proceeds of one of the master's sales.

June 20, 1905, Humphrey petitions for allowance for shortages on the Orca cannery, $4,454. That petition is the same in effect as the other one for shortages.

June 27, 1905, there is an order exonerating Humphrey from his bond.

June 30, 1905, order to clerk to pay receivers $44,394, proceeds of the master's sale.

August 2, 1905, there is a claim filed by Johnson claiming a preference by virtue of a judgment.

August 21, 1905, there is a stipulation extending time for the proofs in the Chinese cases.

September 11, 1905, the Northwestern Fisheries Co. files a petition reciting that it has become the successor in interest of Spencer & Humphreys in their bids; and it claims a shortage of $3,300; that is granted.

Same date receivers report additional claims of creditors and an order of court establishing those claims. Then there is an order by consent dismissing Humphreys's petition for shortage on his own motion.

October 19, 1905, memorandum decision of 12 pages by Judge Hanford disallowing Chinese claims. I will not go into it except to say that it refers to the merits of their claim of guaranty that they are not entitled to any damages for the breach of guaranty.

November 3, 1905, there is a petition of Drew to correct a difference given him by the defendant before the receivership, reciting that there was an error in the description. That is granted.

November 4, 1905, there is a claim of Griffith Deering & Co. for brokerage, and then there is a claim of Blair on the $5,000 debenture, a claim of Martin on $3,000 debenture—filed.

On November 6 there is a claim of a man named Ross for professional services as attorney rendered the company, he claiming a lien on the papers in his hands so as to entitle his claim to preference. There is a memorandum filed in support of that.

On the same date there is an order made by the court allowing compensation as follows: To Kerr, reciting previous allowance of $15,000 and allowing $20,000 more; to McGovern, reciting previous allowance of $3,759.15—I can not find that in the records, that previous allowance; it may have been back East. For allowance, or payment, or whatever it was, was approved in the order and he is allowed $21,240.85—so much more to bring it up to $35,000, on a par with Mr. Kerr's allowance. Mr. McCord was allowed previously $10,000, and in this order he is allowed $16,000 more, making $26,000 in all.

Now, this order recites an appearance of John P. Hartman and George De Steiquer for creditors whose claims aggregate $1,800,000; and the appearance of Peters and Powell for creditors whose claims aggregate $500,000; of R. A. Ballinger as attorney for the plaintiff; and that these attorneys and the receivers' attorneys have stipulated in open court that the matter be left to the court to decide the amount.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there anything in the record showing any exception to the amount allowed?

Mr. PRESTON. No objection or protest shown. There is a petition filed with the receivers to settle the infringement suit for $1,000 and an order granting that. That recites a very much larger claim for damages on the part of the patentee.

November 14, 1905, the receivers petition to pay out $170,000 to creditors, which equals 5 per cent dividend. That is granted.

November 28, 1905, there is some proof filed in support of the Ross claim. An order allowing it in part as a preferred claim and in part as a common claim.

On December 30, 1905, Knowles files a claim against the receivers for alleged services rendered them—$1,150.

May 7, 1907, receivers petition for leave to correct master's deed to the Anacortes lot for some misdescription, and there is an order directing the present master in chancery to make the correction. The old master in chancery was Judge Eben Smith, who died, and Judge Richard Greene succeeded him.

April 23, 1908, there is a memorandum decision by Judge Hanford disallowing the Knowles claim.

May 5, 1908, there is the receivers' final report showing total receipts, $3,255,880; total disbursements, $3,183,504.98; balance on hand, $72,375.13, which will pay a dividend to creditors of 2.47 or 2.47 per cent. There is an order made directing notice to be given to creditors.

May 22, 1908, proof on the publication of notice is filed and then an order is made directing that 0.0247 dividend be paid. This order bars all other creditors who had not presented their claims and directs the receivers to store away and keep the books and records of the receivership for one year thereafter, then to be disposed of as they see fit. At this time is filed a notice of the withdrawal of certain creditors' claims.

February 23, 1909, the receivers' report; that is, Mr. Kerr makes this report of the filing dividend, showing that there is $1,885 left over; and authorizes an order allowing that amount to Mr. Kerr as additional compensation, inasmuch as he alone had done all the later work of closing up the estate, and on the same day an order was made discharging the receiver.

FOURTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1912.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Are there any witnesses present who are under subpœna, or who have been notified to attend?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Kerr is here, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we ready to proceed in that matter, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir.

HAROLD PRESTON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Give your full name, please.

A. Harold Preston.

Q. You are an attorney practicing in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. And have been for how long?—A. Nearly 30 years.

Q. You have recently gone through some court records in what are known as the fisheries cases, I believe?—A. Yes.

Q. And what are the titles of those cases?—A. The first case, No. 1079, is that entitled "The Puget Sound Sawmill & Shingle Co., a Washington corporation, plaintiff, v. Pacific American Fisheries Co., a New Jersey corporation, defendant."

The other case, No. 1080, is "The Colonial Trust Co. and Rudolph Pfeiffer, complainants, v. Pacific Packing & Navigation Co., defendant."

Q. And will you state, Mr. Preston, just what the nature of the work is that you have been recently doing in going through those records?—A. I suggested to you, gentlemen of the committee, that if you desired it I would undertake the work of going through those records and prepare from them a sort of an abstract of them which might be of use to you in examining into the questions relating to them which might interest you.

Q. And those papers consist of the papers which are on file in the United States district court in this district in the course of the receiverships in these two actions?—A. That is correct.

Q. Now, state.—A. I first examined 1080——

Q. That is the——A. (Continuing.) The Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. case. I did that alone, writing out my notes in longhand. I took something over five hours of solid application, and last evening I met with the gentlemen of the committee and one of the stenographers who are reporting this proceeding and from my notes dictated to the stenographer the substance of my notes. That was done last evening, finishing about 6 o'clock, and those notes have not been transcribed, but I think you gentlemen will have them probably in an hour from now.

In the other case I had a stenographer to assist me, and I dictated to the stenographer the same matter from the files in that case, and I have that here. I want to say, however, that since it was transcribed I have not had an opportunity to check back with the papers the figures; there may be mistakes in her transcribing of amounts—figures; it is possible. I simply want to guard against anything of that kind.

Q. Now, in substance what you dictated last evening to the stenographer, when it is transcribed, and the paper which you have there, what will be shown, just in a general way?—A. Well, it will be shown each filing, except præcipes and those inconsequential papers that I passed over. It will show the filing and date of filing of each paper, and, very briefly, what the paper was about. That includes petitions, orders, answers, pleadings, etc. Now, I want to say here that what I dictated to the stenographer last night here before you gentlemen in regard to cause No. 1080 is not complete.

Q. Will you designate those by the name of the defendant?—A. Yes; in case 1080 of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. When I started this work I went into the clerk's office and asked for the files in that case, and he gave me a box or drawer full of the files, and I assumed that those were all the files. I learned this morning that in the vault is a large package of papers that I did not see, and those papers—in that package of papers are included the receivers' report that I got no hint of before. Now, I have been over those receivers' reports this morning and I find that by the reports the total receipts of the receivers in that case run up to $5,330,000, instead of three million and something as I had gathered from the files. What I had gathered from the files had been in the way of recital in some of the pleadings, and I think that I should make that correction of those notes at this time.

Q. Are those the notes which have not been transcribed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When those notes are transcribed and you get them, if you will, have the corrections typewritten and made a part of them?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any other statement, Mr. Preston, which you wish to make, that would round out the work you have been doing in that regard, make it now.

A. Well, I would only want to say, rather in my own behalf, that you can understand the work was hurriedly done and the only thing I can guarantee about it is that I was trying to get the meat of it. I would not want to guarantee that I had got the exact sense of some of the long-involved papers; I went through them so hurriedly. I tried to get that which I thought would be of aid to you gentlemen, without trying to get too much, and——

Mr. MCCOY. Well, what you have abstracted you believe to be substantially all that would have any bearing upon the question as to the amount of allowance to the receivers and to the receivers' attorneys?

A. I believe that to be true.

Q. Now, the paper that was read last night was in regard to the Pacific——A. Packing & Navigation Co.

Mr. MCCOY. Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. And when that is received it will be marked "Exhibit 64," with the corrections and additions to be made. And then this paper, in what company is this——

A. That is the Pacific American Fisheries Co.

Mr. MCCOY. Pacific American Fisheries. You might as well mark it now. It will go in as the next exhibit.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 65."

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Baxter.

SUTCLIFFE BAXTER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your full name.

A. Sutcliffe Baxter.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Baxter?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you been a resident of the city?—A. I have lived in Seattle since 1876; 34—36 years ago.

Q. Are you a member of any profession?—A. No, sir. I have been in business most of the time.

Q. You are not an attorney at law?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Baxter, are you the same person who has been referred to a number of times as receiver in bankruptcy or other matters in the Federal court here?—A. I think so; yes.

Q. Have you at present a recollection of those cases which would enable you to tell the committee the salient points in each case, or in order to do that would it be necessary for you to consult your papers and files?—A. I should feel safer if I had an opportunity to consult the papers. These things have run over a period of five or six years now—for five years at least, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Could you give the committee the titles or some brief description of the various cases in which you have acted as receiver in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do so, if you please.—A. The Seattle Paint & Varnish Co. was the first one, about five years ago, now, I think. And the next one was the McCarthy Dry Goods Co., if I remember correctly; that was in 1907.

Q. Was it McCarty or McCarthy?—A. McCarthy—t-h-y.

Q. T-h.—A. The next one was a small jewelry business, on Pike Street here; I have forgotten the party's name. It was only a small affair, at any rate. And the next I think was the William Walker Co.

Mr. PRESTON. What is that, Mr. Baxter?

A. William Walker Co.

Mr. PRESTON. What was the business?

A. It was a dry goods business on Second Avenue. And the next was—I think the Knosher Co. came next.

Mr. MCCOY. Knosher?

A. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. Dry goods?

A. Yes; also dry goods on Second Avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. Go on, Mr. Baxter.

A. I think the next one was E. G. Ingalls, of Ballard—a jewelry business at Ballard.

Q. The location of it?—A. Ballard, sir—the street in Ballard?

Q. Yes.—A. Really, I can't remember the streets out there. I think it is Market Street.

Mr. PRESTON. A little louder, Mr. Baxter, will you?

A. I think the street is Market Street. I am not very certain about that; but the store was in the center of the town of Ballard out here, a part of Seattle; a little stock of jewelry there, consisting of—oh, some $2,000, I think; something like that.

Mr. MCCOY. Proceed.

A. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES. Western Steel?

A. Oh, yes; Western Steel; that is right; Western Steel Corporation, in which I am now trustee—one of the trustees.

The CHAIRMAN. That makes an aggregate, I think, of seven receiverships?

A. I think that is about right, sir.

Q. Are any of those still open?—A. The Western Steel is still open, the Knosher Co. is still open, and the E. G. Ingalls is still open, but in course of being closed at present.

Q. The committee's purpose in calling you at this time, Mr. Baxter, was to give you an opportunity to consult your papers and files and prepare in each of those cases for the committee or prepare yourself to tell the committee the salient facts in them, such as the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy, the amount of the assets, the bond, and the various more important steps in the receivership up to the distribution and discharge of the receiver.—A. All right, sir.

Q. Whether in each case there was a trustee appointed, and, if so, who he was, and the principal things connected with him, and whether—you can answer now, however, whether you were the sole trustee in each case. Were you?—A. Do you desire me to answer now?

Q. You might do that now.—A. I think—my present recollection is that I was sole trustee.

Q. I said trustee. I mean receiver.—A. Oh. My present recollection is that in each case where I was appointed receiver I was elected trustee. I don't remember of an exception where it went to a trusteeship. I think in one or two instances the cases were not in bankruptcy, and therefore no trustee in bankruptcy was necessary. In all of these cases I was—where I was trustee at all I was sole trustee. In the Western Steel Corporation there are three trustees—myself, Lester Turner, and Edgar Ames.

Q. Give the residences of your cotrustees in that case.—A. They are all in Seattle. I don't know their house addresses, but they are all living in Seattle.

Q. They are all residents of Seattle?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. That is an answer. In the cases in which you were also receiver, of course the committee will want to know whether as receiver you conducted the business, and, if so, how long before you were appointed as trustee.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fact, you would know the salient points in each case——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Quite as well as I could tell you of them.—A. I think I could testify to those parts now, perhaps.

Q. Now, when do you think you could furnish the committee that information?—A. Oh, I suppose in the course of two or three days. I don't know how long it would take, hardly. Some of these papers are——

Q. (Interrupting.) This is Saturday. Do you think you could do it by Tuesday or Wednesday at the latest?—A. I think so. I will endeavor to do it by Wednesday, if you will give me until then.

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Baxter?—A. Oh, I am dealing in real estate and mining properties, and, as I stated before, I am one of the trustees of the Western Steel Corporation that is in course of being wound up.

Q. Have you been so engaged; that is, in real estate and things of that character, during the past five years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in business in that way alone———A. (interrupting.) Well, not so much in real estate.

Q. (Continuing.) Or in association with someone else?—A. No; alone entirely.

Q. Did you maintain a business office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were was it located?—A. 343 Arcade Annex.

Q. Was your receivership and trusteeship business carried on from your own office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no office in the Federal Building?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions with Mr. Baxter? If you can have the data which I have referred to ready before Wednesday, we would be glad if you would let us know.

A. I will so report, sir, if I have.

Q. And if possible to have it by Tuesday, we will appreciate it, Mr. Baxter.—A. All right, sir.

Q. Thank you. That is all this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you wish to ask Mr. Baxter?

Mr. PRESTON. Just one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Ask him.

Mr. PRESTON. The chairman asked you if you were sole receiver, and that question has not been answered yet; you went back into the matter of trusteeship.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought he answered, as to both receivers and trustees, that he acted alone. What is the fact?

A. I was sole receiver in all of these cases except the Western Steel Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. I so understood you to answer.

The WITNESS. Mr. Turner and myself were receivers of the Western Steel Corporation and were afterwards elected trustees.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. PRESTON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Preston, have you any other witness in connection with the matter of which you told us? If not, I presume we might call Mr. Kerr.

Mr. PRESTON. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. First of all let me inquire if there are any witnesses in the room who have been called in any way and who desire to get away. Mr. Kerr seems to be next.

JAMES A. KERR, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Will you give your full name, please, Mr. Kerr?

A. James A. Kerr.

Q. And you are a practicing lawyer in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or a lawyer practicing in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you practiced here?—A. I have practiced in the State of Washington 22 years. I have practiced in Seattle since 1897.

Q. And prior to that?—A. Practiced in the State of Iowa for eight years.

Q. Did you practice anywhere in the State of Washington prior to to your coming to Seattle?—A. Practiced at Bellingham from 1890 to 1897; then removed to Seattle. Practiced in Iowa from 1882 to 1890.

Q. And your firm is——A. Kerr & McCord.

Q. And has that firm been in existence ever since you have practiced in Washington?—A. Been in existence 21 years.

Q. You were receiver, Mr. Kerr, for two fisheries companies, I believe. What were the names of those companies?—A. Pacific American Fisheries Co.; Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.

Q. Were you appointed receiver in both of those companies at the same time approximately?—A. I was not present, but I think I was appointed in both of them at the same time. I am not certain about that, possibly——

Q. At any rate——A. (Continuing.) Very close together anyway.

Q. (Continuing.) The applications for the appointments of receivers in those two companies were practically simultaneous?—A. Well, now, I could not tell you, Mr. McCoy, without looking at the record. I was not present when I was appointed. Whether the applications were made the same time or several days intervened I don't know.

Q. Those companies were allied companies, I believe?—A. The Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. was capitalized for $25,000,000; it was organized by the Morgan people in New York for the purpose, as I understand, of combining into one organization all practically of the salmon-packing companies on the Pacific coast. The Pacific American Fisheries Co. was a corporation with $5,000,000 capital stock, all of which, with the exception of a few shares, at the time this receivership was sued out, was owned by the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. They were both New Jersey corporations.

Q. Do you know what the basis of the receivership was in each case, that is, on what grounds were they placed in the receiverships?—A. Receivers were appointed by the United States circuit court for New Jersey on March 2, 1903, for the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. by Judge Lanning. Mr. McGovern—Thomas B. McGovern, of New York, George D. Hallock, a member of the firm of Baring, Gould & Co., but a resident of New Jersey, were appointed receivers by the New Jersey court. Receivers were appointed by Judge Hanford the next day, and George D. Hallock, Thomas B. McGovern, and myself were appointed receivers in this jurisdiction. A few days later, a large part of the physical operating properties of the company being located in Alaska, Mr. Hallock, Mr. McGovern, myself, and Judge John R. Winn, of Juneau, Alaska, were appointed receivers by that court. Subsequently the New Jersey court appointed Judge Winn and myself, the Washington court appointed Judge Winn, so that the receivers were the same in all three jurisdictions.

Q. Was that same course pursued in regard to the Pacific American Co.?—A. No; Mr. McGovern and myself, I think, were the sole receivers of the Pacific American Co.; possibly Mr. Hallock, I am not certain, but Judge Winn—none of the properties of the Pacific American Fisheries Co. were in Alaska. They owned a cannery at now Bellingham, South Bellingham, and at Friday Harbor, but they had no properties in Alaska and within the jurisdiction of the Alaska court, therefore Winn was not appointed receiver of that company.

Q. Well, now the basis of the receivership in each instance was the alleged insolvency of the companies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in testifying, Mr. Kerr, would it be simpler to take up each company separately or were their affairs so interwoven that the story of one has to be practically the story of the other?—A. Oh, largely the story of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co., although we operated the properties separately.

Q. All accounts were kept separate?—A. Yes; we kept separate accounts, but by the same set of accounts.

Q. But you can describe the receivership in each one separately, I presume?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Take up, then, if you will, the Pacific Packing Co. and state to the committee briefly the history of that receivership?—A. First. I don't want to burden the committee with any unnecessary detail, but will say this, that the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. when it was organized provided for an issue of $6,000,000 of debentures which they expected to float for the purpose of acquiring cannery properties on the Pacific coast. They were unable to procure properties of the Alaska Packers Association of San Francisco, one of the largest packers on the coast, and they changed their plans and they had $3,000,000 of debentures underwritten by the Knickerbocker Trust Co., of the city of New York. My impression is that from that underwriting they received about $2,700,000. I will state to the committee that I was never able as receiver to procure from the treasurer of the company in the city of New York the stock subscription books or the books that were in the hands of the treaurer, so that I am speaking approximtaely. They came out here and they purchased the stock of the Pacific American Fisheries Co., for which they paid approximately a million dollars.

Q. Cash?—A. In cash. Well, I think that was all in cash. They purchased 17 canneries, 1 in Washington and 16 in the Territory of Alaska, from various owners.

Q. Paying how much for those?—A. Paying for those, as I remember it, and I can only speak approximately, because the books of the receivers—several carloads of them—have remained in storage at Broad Street Dock until January 1, 1910, when they were ordered destroyed by the court. We carried them along as long as we supposed there was any use for them, and I can't have access to them for that reason; they may possibly be there, but I have paid no storage since 1910. I think they paid for the Alaska physical properties, including ships and including a lighterage plant at Nome, including a fresh-fish plant at Seattle, including several salteries, one at Yakatat and some other place, an amount approximating $1,500,000 or $1,600,000. So that they expended practically all of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds in acquiring the properties, and they began—they made their purchases, closed their deals in the middle of the packing season of 1901, taking over the canneries while they were in operation. I might say, for the information of the committee, that the salmon-packing business on this coast commences usually not earlier than the 1st of June, possibly a little earlier at some places in southeastern Alaska, and the red-fish business, which is the principal staple, lasts as a rule only five or six weeks. The fall salmon business may run the canneries into October or the 1st of November; and they took these properties over in the month of August, 1901. They operated them in 1901, putting up a pack of something like 1,300,000 cases, of which about 800,000 cases were what is known as pink salmon, and that year there was packed on the coast about five and a quarter million cases of salmon, when the world's consumption up to that time had never exceeded about three and a half million cases of salmon; and the price of pink salmon went a dollar below the cost of production in the fall of 1901 and involved the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. in a direct loss of $800,000. They operated in 1902 both on the Sound and in Alaska, and they packed during that year about 1,100,000 cases of salmon, the great majority of which were of the cheaper grade, and were that year also involved in a great loss. Now, in the fall of 1902 the organizers of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.—and if the committee will examine the list of debenture vouchers which are found with my reports, you will find who the syndicate were that organized it—undertook to reorganize the packing company.

Q. That is this Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.?—A. Yes; Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. They had outstanding $3,000,000 of 6 per cent unsecured debentures. The Knickerbocker Trust Co. had advanced the money. The subscribers had taken up those debentures to the extent of about $1,650,000 only, leaving an indebtedness to the Knickerbocker Trust Co. of $1,250,000.

Q. You mean that the Knickerbocker Trust Co. had issued them without receiving the money?—A. They had issued them on an underwriting agreement by the subscribers. That is the usual form, I believe, of their trust business back there, and had advanced the money.

Q. That is, the subscriptions were payable by installments?—A. Yes; they were payable on call to the Knickerbocker Trust Co., and those subscribers had taken them to the extent of only about $1,650,000. In the late fall of 1902 they undertook to reorganize by providing for an issue of a million and a half dollars of 5 per cent debentures and for an exchange of those debentures for 6 per cent debentures for the purpose of retiring them, and in addition to the debenture holder taking 50 per cent of the amount of his original debenture in 5 per cent debentures he was to receive 33⅓ per cent in amount of preferred stock and 16⅔ per cent in cash; and that exchange went forward before the receivership ensued to the extent of an exchange of $1,200,000, in round numbers, of 6 per cent debentures out of three million.

Q. Producing a——A. And it involved the company in paying out to the debenture holders, out of the funds they had on hand or could borrow, about $200,000 more.

Mr. PRESTON. How much?

A. $200,000, 16⅔ per cent of $1,200,000.

Q. And netted how much less otherwise than they originally contemplated from the first debentures?—A. Well, it is a mere matter of calculation. It put no money into the company's treasury. It retired 50 per cent of about—or 33⅓ per cent of about $1,200,000 of 6 per cent debentures in exchange for preferred stock.

Q. There was one question I meant to ask you. How much of this $25,000,000 par value of capital stock was ever issued?—A. I will state to the committee, as I said before, I never was able to get the books of the treasurer. I have no knowledge whatever as to the amount of common stock that was issued; but I am satisfied, from information that I had while I was receiver, that a large amount of the common stock was issued to the subscribers for the debentures, not of the $25,000,000, because, as I have stated to the committee, the plan was originally changed. The original plan contemplated the underwriting of $6,000,000, and they reduced that half, so that it probably did not get along to the extent of many million dollars; but I don't know who the stockholders were.

Q. Do I understand you rightly to say that you believe that not a large amount of common stock——A. I mean as compared with $25,000,000. I don't know.

Q. Is your information that that stock was issued as a bonus with the debentures?—A. Well, now, that would just be mere hearsay, because I never saw the books and I don't know. I know this, I will state—

Q. (Interrupting.) You know this, of course: Under the laws of New Jersey, as well as others, capital stock must purport at least to be issued for par value in return for it. Have you any information as to what those stockholders who got the original issue paid for it?—A. That is not my understanding of the law of New Jersey as it was at that time—that it had to be actually subscribed bona fide. I will say this to the committee, that——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, Mr. Kerr——A. Beg pardon?

Q. When was this company organized?—A. It was organized in the summer of 1901.

Q. Well, at that time the law of New Jersey did provide that capital stock must be issued for actual value at par?—A. Well, if you are right about it, I don't know how it was issued further.

Q. Well, did you as receiver undertake, through any proceedings, to learn what the stock was issued for?—A. I undertook to get from the treasurer, Mr. Carey, who was a nephew of Richard Dellafield, of the National Park Bank, the books, on numerous occasions, to enable me to determine whether there was any stockholders' liability; but the receivers here were never able to get them, and we never have had them.

Q. Did you take any proceedings in the New Jersey courts to reach the books?—A. Well, I was running canneries in the State of Washington and in Alaska, and, while I made two or three trips to New York in connection with financing the matter, I didn't consider that it was my individual business, as a western receiver and representative of the Washington court, to institute any proceedings in New Jersey at all. They had two receivers in New Jersey that were on the ground.

Q. Well, did you ever have any conference with Mr. McGovern, or the other New Jersey receiver, with reference to ascertaining what had been paid for the original issue of the common stock of the company or preferred stock?—A. Oh, I had numerous conferences with Mr. McGovern and made numerous efforts through Mr. McGovern, as well as the New Jersey receiver, to get the books. And I will say this to you, that the creditors of this corporation almost wholly were residents of the city of New York or the city of Boston or the State of New Jersey. They were on the ground. They were the parties that organized this corporation under the New Jersey law, and it was up to them to suggest to the receiver in Washington, if anybody, that the receiver should take steps under the laws of New Jersey, as most of the stockholders and, I suppose, practically all——

Q. (Interrupting.) In other words, Mr. Kerr, you think that when three receivers are appointed they have separate or divided responsibility; is that it?—A. I regarded my duties as receiver out here as requiring me, so long as the creditors wanted these properties operated, to devote my time and attention to the operation.

Q. And you did not conceive that you had any duty toward the creditors aside from running the factories?—A. I conceived that I had a duty to the creditors to get all the money out of the receivership for them that I could, and I undertook to fulfill that duty.

Q. Well, that——A. And if I made any mistakes about it, they were honest mistakes.

Q. I do not question your integrity of mind at all, but I was getting at the question of what steps were taken to ascertain whether the stock in the original issue was issued for value, so that it might be determined whether or not the receivers could realize from any person who may not have paid full value for his stock.—A. I have answered that as far as I could, that I endeavored to get the books. I was not there when this corporation was organized and I don't know who the stockholders were, and I had no means of finding out until I could get hold of the treasurer's books.

Q. Who was your attorney?—A. Mr. McCord.

Q. Did you confer with him about the matter?—A. Oh, yes; we conferred about it.

Q. What did he advise you about what steps might be taken to ascertain who the stockholders were?—A. Oh, I don't remember what he advised me about it. If I made any mistake in that matter, I don't see how it could affect Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Kerr, I have not insinuated that you made any mistake. You are here on the witness stand and I am asking you to get information.—A. Well, I will tell you, once for all, that I didn't take any steps in that regard, for the reason that I didn't know who the stockholders were and I could not get the treasurer's books. Now, you have certainly pressed the thing to the limit of my information with reference to it, and if I made any mistake——

Q. (Interrupting.) Mr. Kerr, I am going to press the matter just as far as I please.—A. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. We will pursue it.

A. All right, press it along; but I have answered as fully as I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is not entirely for you to say, I think, just how far it shall be pressed.

Mr. McCOY. Now, I want an answer to my question. Did you confer with Mr. McCord as to whether or not there was any proceeding prescribed by the statutes of New Jersey for getting at the books of this company and ascertaining all the facts in regard to the issue of the stock?

A. I have no recollection whether I did not.

Q. Is Mr. McCord in town?—A. He is before the court of appeals, or on his way to the court of appeals, at San Francisco. He will be here next week. You can ask him about that.

Q. Now, if you will proceed and tell when you were appointed receiver?—A. I was appointed on the 3d day of March, 1903—2—2.

Q. Did you have an estimation made of the——A. (Interrupting.) 1903.

Q. Did you have an estimate of the assets after that time?—A. I did. I went to Alaska for the purpose of inspecting the properties.

Mr. DORR. Which was that—1902 or 1903?

A. 1903.

Mr. McCOY. I didn't get the date.

A. March 3, 1903.

Q. What was done in regard to ascertaining the value of the properties?—A. We were preparing at the time—or the company was preparing at the time the receivers were appointed to get their vessels away to the canneries in Alaska, for the operation of which a large number of contracts had been made. At the close of business in 1902, in these remote canneries in Alaska—there was some of them we could only get one mail from in the whole summer—the bookkeeper of the cannery, upon his books or in books kept for that purpose, made up an inventory of the properties at the cannery at the close of business each year. We first availed ourselves of those inventories, together with all sources of information we had as to the floating and other properties connected with the several canneries in Alaska. I was familiar with the canneries in Washington and visited them as well. As soon as we got the ships away from Seattle and on their way to the canneries to the northward—that was back in 1903—I visited all the canneries in southeastern Alaska and made a personal inventory of all of the properties of every character and description at those canneries, including the stores that were operated in connection with them. I first filed a general inventory, that was based very largely upon the report of bookkeepers from the Alaska canneries, and from such records as we could avail ourselves of showing the extent and character of the property of the company, and on my return from Alaska in August, 1903, or in July, I filed an amended inventory, giving the court more definite information as to the extent and value of the property.

Q. Did you have any appraisal made?—A. Any what?

Q. Any appraisal made?—A. You mean in the canneries in Alaska?

Q. I mean of the assets that came into your possession?—A I don't remember whether we did or not I don't think it is customary; never has been in any receivership I have known anything about to make an appraisal of the assets

Q. Did you put a value on them?—A. We did; we put down the book value. We put the canneries in at what—very largely—at an amount approximating what was paid for them. In some instances we knew that the canneries had depreciated very materially and we reduced the amount, because the depreciation is something like 15 per cent on that kind of property in Alaska every year.

Q. Had you had any experience in the fisheries business?—A. Yes. sir; I have.

Q What was your experience?—A I had been interested personally in the fisheries business for a number of years The firm, Mr. Dorr's firm and our own firm, have had practically all of the salmon—legal business in connection with the salmon business in Washington and Alaska for 20 years, and have yet, for that matter.

Q. Were you attorney or was your firm or firms attorneys that represented either of these companies before they went into the receivership?—A. Represented both of them and represented their predecessors very largely.

Q. Was it your firm that made application to put them in the hands of a receiver?—A. We made application to put—there was put—we made application, on telegraphic direction from the New York creditors, the Colonial Trust Co., and other parties who put it in the hands of a receiver in New Jersey, to have it done or to do it.

Q. How much was ever contributed to the capital or to the assets of—well, take the Pacific Packing Co., in the State of Washington or in the West?—A. Do you mean to its capital stock?

Q Yes.—A. In the purchase of several canneries—not very many—the vendors accepted, in part payment for the purchase of the plants, some amount of the preferred stock of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. Now, this, the only one that I distinctly now remember, was Mr. William Hedge, who owned a cannery at Fairhaven, that was never operated by the company after it was purchased. I know that he took a part of his pay for their cannery plant in preferred stock. It is possible——

Q. When the company was organized, did it provide for the issue of common and preferred or only common?—A. Common and preferred. I can give the committee a copy of the articles of incorporation if they desire it.

Q. Was the twenty-five million authorized capital common or did that include the preferred?—A. My recollection is that the amount of preferred stock was nine million; the amount of common stock was sixteen million, although I might be mistaken about it. If it is material at all, I have a copy of the articles in my desk and I can bring it up here.

Q. Do you know whether any of the debentures were sold in the West or were they all taken up by eastern capital?—A. There were a few of those debentures distributed in payment of cannery properties.

Q Do you know to what amount?—A. A small amount, comparatively. I know that—I think, if the committee will pardon me a moment—I think I can get at it pretty quick. I have in some of my reports, if you care to look over them, the exact information in regard to it; but there was a very small amount. I know that Phil Kelly held a few of those (a broker of this city). I am inclined to think that Messrs. Ainsworth & Dunn held a few of those debentures; but I don't believe there was over $75,000 or $80,000, now, speaking offhand.

Q. Have you any idea what capital stock was issued for fisheries properties, roughly?—A. I have not. The only individual that I remember who held any stock at all was Mr. Hedge, and they paid, I think, for that small cannery at Fairhaven something like $75,000 or $80,000, together with certain trap properties, a small tug or two, that went along with it, and I think Mr. Hedge had about $40,000 in amount of preferred stock.

Q. What was the estimated value of all the assets of the Pacific Packing Co., as made by you and the other receivers, when the property came into your hands?—A. Well, as I stated, we made our inventory very largely—our first inventory—on the book value of the property, and it amounted, in round numbers, to a little over $4,000,000.

Q. That is, including everything, real estate——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Vessels, and all property?—A. Yes.

Q. Included bills receivable and accounts receivable, and everything?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A little over four million.—A. Yes; a little more than $4,000,000. The indebtedness was a little more than that.

Q. What was the indebtedness?—A. In round numbers it was slightly more than the book value of the assets, and of these assets I want to say to the committee that there was something over a million dollars in amount that had been pledged and were held by creditors who in effect became thereby preferred creditors and absorbed it all. The management had practically put a mortgage on everything they had outside of the mere physical property.

Q. Well, those debts which were secured in that way are included in the little over $4,000,000 indebtedness?—A. Yes, sir. So that we reduced the indebtedness the first year by—or, rather, the creditors helped us reduce it by subjecting collateral about a million dollars.

Q. Did you operate—the receivers operate the companies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long?—A. We operated the canneries for two years, 1903 and 1904. We operated, in 1903, 3 canneries in Washington, and I think 11 or 12 canneries in Alaska; we employed about 2,500 people. We also operated a line of steamships carrying United States mails between the cities of Seattle and Valdez, Alaska, and Valdez and Unalaska; we operated a fresh-fish plant at Seattle a part of that time; we operated several salteries.

Q. Have you any statement with you by which you can show the amount of money that passed through your hands in the operation?—A. Outside of the final distribution?

Q. Yes; I mean during the course of the——A. (Interrupting.) Up to the time we filed our eleventh report, the receivers of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. had received a little over $5,000,000 and had disbursed something like $200,000 less than their receipts.

Q. Well, now, let me see if I understand you. You mean the receipts to include the assets that came into your possession?—A. I mean that is the amount of money that passed through our hands, either from sale of receivers' certificates, moneys that I borrowed from banks in this city and from the Bank of California in San Francisco in excess of their holding of receivers' certificates, the amount of money that passed through our hands from the sale of properties and the sale of pack, and in the regular conduct of the business. The total amount that passed through the hands of the receivers, as I remember it—one of my reports—next to the last one I don't seem to be able to find—possibly the last one—in the court's record—was something approximating $7,000,000 in the two receiverships.

Q. In the two receiverships, you say?—A. Yes; about six million in one and about a million in the other.

Q. Now, does that $6,000,000 include this million dollars of pledged assets which was sold by the pledgees?—A. Well, now, I don't know, Mr. McCoy, whether it does or not. Of course, I could not keep these books. I had accountants to do that work, and they gave me the data very largely for these reports. It is possible that it does—I should rather think it would, because it was—of course, we scheduled all of that indebtedness and we inventoried all of that collateral. In some instances we sold the collateral—I know of a number of instances and applied the money to the payment of debts for which it was pledged. In a great many other instances—for instance we had two ships en route to New York, both of which arrived in New York within 14 or 15 days of the time when the receivers were appointed, with two cargoes of salmon—there had been large advances made to the company upon the bills of lading with sight drafts attached to them; the value of those two cargoes possibly approximated a million dollars, and that product was disposed of either by the New Jersey or New York receivers; at least I had no personal charge of it further than the money passed there and went through our accounts, showing that we had received it, as I suppose, and had liquidated this indebtedness with it.

Q. Where were the receiverships accounts kept, what bank or banks?—A. Well, we kept various bank accounts. We had an arrangement with the Bank of California, at San Francisco, under which we deposited a certain amount of funds into a sinking fund for the purpose of retiring the receivers' certificates. Our main checking account, I think, was kept at the National Bank of Commerce of this city. Possibly one or two other banks here.

Q. Now, as I have these figures here, Mr. Kerr, there was approximately $4,000,000 in value of assets that came into your hands, and some six million property value passing through your hands in the Pacific Packing Co. Would you say that the difference, the $2,000,000, was practically capital which you used in operation of the company?—A. I should think so.

Q. Is that a fair statement?—A. I should think so; yes.

Q. That is, you received and disbursed in running the company some $2,000,000?—A. Well, Mr. McCoy, the only way I can get at it: The first year we borrowed on receivers' certificates $1,250,000; we borrowed, in addition to that, before the vessels arrived here, to be disbursed, from Alaska, in the fall, from the National Bank of Commerce, I think, $225,000. I went to San Francisco and arranged for an additional credit, I think, at the Bank of California for $300,000 or $350,000, all of which we did not use, and our pack each year was of the value of over a million dollars. That was all sold and disposed of. And we realized, I suppose, out of the sales of the property—now just speaking generally, without referring to notes I have before me—a sum in cash approximating $800,000 or $900,000, which of course was distributed. Now, I have not estimated closely what that will aggregate, but it aggregates a good many million dollars—or several million dollars.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Kerr, will you briefly then go through the management of the Pacific Packing Co., just giving us the history of the receivership as concretely as you can, and what you and the other receivers did?—A. The first year of the receivership Mr. Thomas B. McGovern, who had been vice president of the corporation, and who received a salary of $25,000 a year as the head of it in Seattle, together with the general manager, who was paid a salary of $15,000 a year, had operated the canneries. The second year I operated the canneries as sole managing receiver, and I did all the work after the first year practically, in connection with the winding up of the estate—the operation and winding up of the estate of both of these corporations. As I have stated to the committee, we operated in Alaska, the first year, five or six canneries in western Alaska, and I think six or seven in southeastern Alaska. It devolved upon the receivers, of course—and we also operated these steamship lines, fresh-fish plants, etc. We also operated, in connection with Capt. E. E. Cainee, the Nome City.

Q. Being a vessel?—A. A steam vessel that plied between the city of Seattle and Nome, Alaska.

Q. But before you go further, Mr. Kerr, you might state roughly how many plants——A. (Interrupting). We had——

Q. (Continuing). Belonged to the company that were kept in operation or the operations of which were discontinued?—A. There were 19 operating salmon canneries belonging to these two companies, 17 to one of them, 2 to the other.

Q. Well, 17 to the Pacific——A. (Interrupting). Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. Those canneries were for the most part of large capacity. One of them is the largest salmon cannery in the world, with a capacity of 10,000 cases a day. We employed at these canneries—I think at the one at Bellingham we had over 1,100 people at one time. Of course we operated a large number of pound nets or fish traps in connection with that cannery. The labor of outfitting and getting our outfits forward to Alaska for the conduct of the business at the several Alaska canneries, involved a good many employees, and a good deal of activity here. After I got these outfits away for Alaska, I gave my personal attention as receiver, going from Seattle to Bellingham, where our Sound operations—from which they are conducted, and can be conducted more economically. I spent the entire summer away from my family.

Mr. HUGHES. What year was that—the first or second?

A. Of 1904, particularly. I moved the entire business from Seattle up there in 1904—the latter part of 1903 or early in 1904. In the summer of 1903, after I had gotten the outfits away to the various canneries in Alaska, as I have stated to the committee, I personally visited all the canneries in southeastern Alaska. We were operating these lines of steamships and various other enterprises that kept the receivers—both of us—engaged to the utmost limit of time.

Q. That is, you and Mr. McGovern?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was here during the whole of the first year?—A. He was here until the late fall of the first year. After that he never was back here but once, that I remember of. I devoted my entire time for almost three years to the conduct of the business of this receivership. During that time I don't think that I tried, with the exception, possibly, of the third year, a single case, and I usually try from 35 to 50 jury cases a year—and it took all my time. Now, with reference to the Pacific American Fisheries. Those canneries are on the Sound and they operate longer, as a rule, than those in Alaska. Our operations cease, so far as active operations of the canneries is concerned, late in November. Some of our contracts require the Chinese or Japanese or other labor that we had which was employed by the season, to remain with us until December 1. As soon as that work was complete, then the preparation for the next season began. To give the committee an idea of the volume of business, we paid out the first year in insurance premiums alone on our floating and other properties $75,000 in insurance premiums. It takes from the vicinity of $100,000 outside of the usual contracts for labor, etc., to outfit a vessel for one of those canneries in Alaska, and it took generally from about $40,000 to $60,000 in cash to disburse the labor on one of those vessels in the way of fishermen who fish at those various stations when the ships arrive at Seattle from the north. The matter of the detail of insurance. We had a cannery in July, 1903, at Kenai, Alaska, destroyed by fire. I personally gave written instructions to every ship captain, to every cannery foreman, to every bookkeeper in every one of those canneries, calling their attention to the various provisions of the policies of insurance, to the end that we might be protected as against the storage of gasoline and explosives and a great many other things, and while our loss at Kenai was $77,000 and we had a salvage of $2,700, the insurance companies paid our loss to the extent of a little over $75,000, just deducting the amount of the salvage. With that exception, and the stranding of one of the ocean-going tugs, which was rescued later, we had no mishaps in connection with the conduct of the business. I will state further in connection with the conduct of the business that we conducted it during two of the most unprofitable years that have ever been known in the history of the salmon business on the Pacific coast, and as the result of our operation we showed a profit in Alaska of $108,000 in 1903 and of $112,000 in 1904.

Mr. McCoy. On both or one?

A. Just in the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. I will state further that the first year our contracts had all been made by the officers of the company. The committee probably do not understand the business well enough to know that our contracts for fishermen, our contracts for Chinese labor in the canneries, our contracts for all kinds of material, are made many months in advance of the time when the vessels go north, so that we are bound by them. For instance, we undertake to pack 30,000 cases of salmon at Nushagak, and we enter into the necessary labor contracts to pack that amount of fish and we guarantee that we will pack it, and we have to pay for them, so far as the labor in the canneries is concerned, whether we pack them or not. The officers of this company had overguaranteed in Alaska to the extent that it fell 100,000 cases short. In other words, our pack fell below their guaranties over 100,000 cases. On Puget Sound they guaranteed a pack in one cannery of 300,000 cases and we packed 135,000 cases and it involved the receivers in a loss of $58,000. I conducted the business the second year myself and exceeded on our guaranties in Alaska 22,000 cases. I exceeded our guaranties on Puget Sound approximately 60,000 cases—no, 30,000 cases, so that the second year we recouped the loss on the Pacific American Fisheries that were incurred by overcontracting in 1903. Now, when we came to sell those properties for which the company paid approximately $2,500,000—and by the way, while operating as receiver I rebuilt largely the cannery at Nushagak, and we added, by way of betterments, $80,000 to the physical property. The properties of the Pacific American Fisheries Co., as well as all other properties, were sold by the master after due notice published, and otherwise, and in connection with a great many of these canneries the receivers themselves wrote many letters to men who had been engaged in the business up and down the coast. The Pacific American Fisheries Co.'s properties sold for $310,000 outside of some of the tugs—that is, the cannery at Bellingham, which was the largest. We paid in that receivership, I think, 38 per cent, a loss as against the purchase price of the properties was practically 66 per cent; the loss as against the amount we received for it, as against the amount that was paid for those canneries. The Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. owed in the city of Seattle and in this vicinity $136,000 for labor, very largely, and some material at the time the receivers were appointed. Outside of a bank or two—one at Portland, I think, that held collateral, and outside of a few individuals who held debentures under an order of Judge Hanford—all the rest of the indebtedness was practically in the hands of the parties who originally foisted the corporation on the country and under an order from Judge Hanford directing the receivers, which I procured, to pay the indebtedness for labor and material incurred within six months. I paid the entire indebtedness as a preferred claim of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. and of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co., with the exception of some fees that were due to its attorneys, Mr. McCord and myself, Judge Winn in Alaska, and Thoburn Ross in Portland, and some disputed transportation claims of the Pacific Coast Co., and some few small merchandise claims that had been in dispute. So that all but about $8,000 and that was principally fees of attorneys for those corporations, had been paid within a year—all the indebtedness was paid here.

Mr. McCoy. You speak about the labor accounts. Just what were those accounts?

A. They were largely accounts for employees upon our operating steamships, men engaged in piling and other material for the contemplated pack. We had, when I took over this receivership, offices in the Globe Building, in which we had over 30 employees. We were paying our office pay roll of the company. When I took it over, it was approximately $3,000 a month, and I reduced it inside of 60 days to less than $1,700 a month. We had these office pay rolls. Mr. McGovern had been struggling in the East with this attempted reorganization and things had drifted along here, and practically none of the ordinary labor of the corporation had been paid for several months past. I do not want the committee to understand that a majority of this $136,000 was labor, because we had on our Broad Street dock a large amount of webbing and a number of those different supplies that were assembled there primarily to outfit the vessels that were to leave in April for Alaska, and that was all paid for, and you will find in Mr. Preston's statement that various petitions had been filed in the receivership by the Seattle Hardware Co. and various parties, claiming preferential payments, and in many of those there were claims that were filed for the material that had been assembled on the dock for the season of 1903 which were covered in Judge Hanford's orders.

Q. What was the basis of their claim for preference on those things?—A. Judge Hanford had made an order in the Northern Pacific receivership many years ago requiring—in a receivership of that kind—requiring all claims for labor and material which had accrued within six months of the date of the receivership to be paid as preferred claims, and that order was made here, and I think it was entered confirmatory of an order in the New Jersey court, but I am not certain about that; but that has been the rule in this court.

Q. Is that a lien, or is that lien or preference a matter of statutory law?—A. It is a matter, as I understand it, of equity practice in the United States circuit court. I think it is a matter that lies largely within the jurisdiction of the United States circuit judge. I am not aware of any statute that is specific on that point.

Mr. Dorr. It was the rule that was established by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Fosdick v. Shall, reported in the Ninety-ninth United States Supreme Court Reports, at page 235.

Mr. Kerr. Does that fix it at six months or leave it discretionary?

Mr. Dorr. It is what is called "the six months rule."

The Chairman. It is a rule which has been in existence for many years.

Mr. McCoy. On the basis of insolvency?

Mr. Dorr. On the theory, may it please the committee, that the labor and material that have been furnished to a going concern of that kind are necessary to preserve the integrity of the plant, to keep it alive for the benefit of the general creditors, or the mortgage creditors, either. It is what is called the "railroad six months rule." I think the committee are probably familiar with it. I have had occasion to look it up lately, and in going through a great many cases I find that it is the uniform practice in all of the circuits.

The CHAIRMAN. I know of one instance where a Federal judge allowed a personal-injury claim which occurred before the receivership, on the theory that personal injuries were a necessary part of the running of a railroad.

Mr. KERR. The court refused to do that in this case.

A. (Continuing.) But we had—as the committee will observe from the reading of the data given you by Mr. Preston—we had a great many contests with creditors who were seeking to establish preferred claims—the Federal Insurance Co., Rithett & Co., the Pacific Selling Co., the Fireman's Fund, and a great many others—claims aggregating many thousands of dollars, almost sufficient in amount, if they had all been established, to have absorbed the entire returns that were received from the sale of the property.

Mr. MCCOY. How large, in amount, of those claims were defeated?

A. Practically all of them. I think the insurance claims were allowed in small part as preferred claims and in large part they were defeated, and the court held that they were common claims.

Q. Were there many unpreferred claims made which were contested and defeated?—A. There was a claim of $775,000, I think, in the form of the notes of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. which were indorsed by the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. which were asserted against both estates. They sought to get a dividend receivership. That claim was defeated—was resisted and afterwards withdrawn and it simply participated in one receivership. There were a large number of claims that were filed that were contested by the receiver and rejected; some of the contests lasted until away down in the year 1908. I know the claim of Knowles—there was one claim that was litigated through the court of appeals in New Jersey, the claim of Corby v. The Receiver. That was decided, I think, by the court of appeals in the latter part of the year 1907—growing out of the sale of a large flock of salmon; that was after the appointment of the receivers in the city of Seattle, and sold to the Northwestern Fisheries. Corby afterwards brought a suit in the New Jersey court claiming that he had brought the receivers and purchasers into communication, not claiming, however, that he had informed the receivers that he had done so, but he made the claim in the New Jersey court that he had himself negotiated with the parties who afterwards purchased in Seattle. We had given Mr. Corby a contract to pay the usual commission for the sale of these salmon in blocks of not less than 5,000 cases, I think, but reserving to the receivers the right to sell them to who ever they pleased without any claim on his part against us for a commission, but he waged that suit before Judge Lanning in New Jersey and finally before the court of appeals in New Jersey. I think that is about all—of course, we had many other contested matters, as far as claims are concerned.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Kerr, did not the Chinese contract cases come up also?

A. Yes. We had litigation that was pressed here before Judge Hanford with very much vigor by attorneys from San Francisco as well as local attorneys—Chinese firms, whose names you heard read here, I do not remember them now, which grew out of the contracts that were made by Mr. Ainsworth, the manager of the company, and myself as attorney for the company in San Francisco in the fall of 1902, for the Chinese labor at the cannery at Nushagak. We had guaranteed, I should say, 80,000 cases at that cannery and they had guaranteed to furnish the company 216 able-bodied Chinese cannery laborers, and the receivers, of course, took over that contract--had to—and when these Chinese arrived from San Francisco to take the ship from Seattle, or from the Sound to the cannery in Alaska, instead of having 216 men, they had 156 men, a force, of course, that was wholly inadequate to enable them to reach their guaranty. We gave them a guaranty of 80,000 cases, and they gave us a guaranty of 3,000 cases a day at the cannery and if they failed to come up to their daily guaranty they are penalized by this contract which we had given them, and if we failed to come to our guaranty to supply them with a pack of 80,000 cases we would have to pay a penalty also, and it grew out of this—these Chinese cases—which were very spirited and protracted in the court and which resulted in favor of the receiver.

Q. What did they claim in amount?—A. Well, there were several amounts claimed; the amount in controversy, I think, ran to approximately fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars, I think in that——

Mr. PRESTON. There is one of them for $14,000.

A. There was one of them for $14,000, I think—I forget the figures. I can get them for the committee if they want them. There was a claim of the Pacific Selling Co. that was contested bitterly, that amounted to $66,000. There was the claim of Corby, which amounted to something like $15,000; there was a claim of Knowles, formerly of the Pacific Steam Whaling Co. of San Francisco that amounted to a number of thousands of dollars, and a good many other claims.

Mr. MCCOY. You had some patent litigation?

A. The patent litigation—we had other clients—the firm of which I was a member—that were made defendants in patent litigation to which I referred yesterday. That litigation was tried out before Judge Hanford and went to the circuit court of appeals. It involved the alleged infringement by a firm of manufacturers at Bellingham—Letson, Burbee & Co.—of the Jensen patent can topper. Letson & Burbee, the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co., and the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. had all used the Letson & Burbee machines, and were sued in the United States court for large amounts of money in the way of damages for the alleged infringement. They all involved exactly the same question. The only case that was tried out, and when that was tried out, of course, the issue was tried out before both these receiverships. It was the case of the Alaska Packers' Association against Letson, Burbee & Co., and was finally decided—I think Judge Hanford held that the Letson & Burbee Co. infringed three of the claims of the Jensen patent, and on appeal to the circuit court of appeals they held that the Letson-Burbee machine infringed five claims of their patent; and after that litigation was determined in the court of appeals the receivers made settlement with the Alaska Packers' Association for the amount of damages on account of the infringement. We paid in this packing and navigation company, I think, $1,000, and we paid in the Pacific-American Fisheries Co., I think, $5,000.

Mr. PRESTON. That is correct.

Mr. MCCOY. Is Judge Hanford the patentee of a can topper, or whatever you call it?

A. I don't think he is. I don't think he is a patentee of any kind of topper. Judge Hanford, I think, at one time designed a can topper, or a machine that he thought would be a can topper, but it never did become one.

Mr. DORR. I think he took out a patent.

Mr. KERR. Did he? I didn't know that. But I know that Judge Hanford designed a machine that was calculated to place tops on salmon cans.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, that was about the time this litigation was going on, wasn't it?

A. Well, do you mean the litigation over the patents?

Q. Yes.—A. It was immediately after that. I suppose Judge Hanford devolved all his knowledge of can toppers from his study of the evidence and issues in that patent litigation—I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether he ever sold his invention to this Burbee concern?—A. I don't know it.

Q. Well, now, go ahead with this Pacific Packing receivership, Mr. Kerr; is there anything further you think of to state about that?—A. Further than this——

Q. I mean up to the time of the final distribution or discharge.—A. In regard to the depreciation of the property. We sold these properties of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. through the master in chancery, and they were offered by the master in chancery, I think, four times, and they were sold on the fourth adjournment of the master's sale outside of the cannery at Orca, and I think we had sold a little cannery at Chilcoot, and we sold the cannery at Sitkoh Bay and the machine shop and cannery at Petersburg; the rest of it was finally sold after having been offered at public vendue at four different times for two hundred and five, or seven, thousand dollars, property that cost approximately thirteen or fourteen hundred thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you finished your answer to that?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will take a short recess.

After a short recess the witness continues his testimony, as follows:

The WITNESS. I think we sold the cannery at Chilcoot for $10,000; I think we sold the Petersburg shop and cannery at $7,500; I think we sold the Chatham Straits, the Sitkoh Bay cannery to George Myers Packing Co. for, I think, $55,000, and the Orca cannery we sold for $38,500, and there were various troubles over it and litigation.

Mr. MCCOY. How do the prices received on the sale of those assets compare with the valuation which had been set upon them in the books of the company when they were turned over to you?

A. I do not think, Mr. McCoy, that we realized with all our efforts 30 per cent; I do not think we realized over 25 per cent of the actual cost price of those assets. You will understand that the business was absolutely at an ebb, where nobody was making any money in it; there had been absolutely no demand for cannery property for three years. A number of the canneries had not been operated the second year and the depreciation was very great and it was almost an impossible task to find purchasers for it.

Q. You are referring now practically to the real estate assets, at least so I understand—how did, what you might call the quick assets, in the way of stock on hand, realize?—A. Well, the quick assets when we were appointed, were all hypothecated. I think we found about $2,500 in the bank here in Seattle. I think there was a small fund in New York amounting to possibly twenty-seven or thirty thousand dollars, or something like that, but all of the salmon that had been packed had been hypothecated and they were held as collateral.

Q. And all that you had in them was the margin interest, if there was any margin.—A. That is all, and there was not any margin. We had salmon over in Europe against which the agents had made an advance of what was estimated on 80 per cent of their value, out of which we never got anything; in fact the receivers themselves in 1903 shipped 165,000 cases of red fish—the market was glutted in the United States—over to Great Britain, and we never sold a case for 12 months after they arrived there, nor did we have any demand, and the receivers themselves were advanced against them by Griffith, Deering & Co., of San Francisco, English brokers, and all we ever realized, as a matter of fact, out of the sale of this salmon was the amount of actual advances made by the brokers under the permission given us by the court here at the time we put the product on the vessels for shipment to Liverpool.

Q. How did the sale of the floating equipment result, as compared with the pack value?—A. We got better values out of the tugs, the floating properties, than we did out of the canneries. You note in the report which Mr. Preston read you that we had sold several of the small cannery tugs. We had some, probably we had six or seven tugs that were ocean going and we had a number of smaller cannery tenders. In some instances we realized considerably more money than we had inventoried them at. I think out of these floating properties we realized on an average possibly from 60 to 75 per cent of the invoice price. We invoiced them at what they were supposed to have cost.

Mr. Preston. I can't hear you at all, Mr. Kerr, and I want to hear you.

Mr. McCoy. Can you, with any close approximation, give the net results of the sales, as compared with the valuations at which they were taken over?

A. Thirty-three and one-third per cent would be including the floating properties, would be a very close approximation in both receiverships—a very close approximation.

Mr. McCoy. Is there anything further, Mr. Kerr, you want to state?

The Witness. I want to state this, further: We had some very protracted and large litigation that went to the court of appeals on a voluminous record in connection with the operation of the Nome City. You can ask Mr. McCord in regard to that; he took all the testimony and handled that case in the two courts. He can give you full information about it. Now, after we had sold these physical properties there was still left a great many odds and ends in Alaska as well as in Washington that took a great deal of the managing receiver's time here, in fact practically all my time during the year 1905.

Mr. Preston. 1905?

A. 1905. I put all my time in 1903 and 1904 and practically all of it in 1905. I was not able to get some of these contested matters closed until as late as 1908. The creditors of the packing company were scattered from Seattle to South Africa, all over Alaska, practically all over the world; there were a very great number of them; and the matter of the two distributions that were made by the receivers, small as they were, consumed a very large amount of time, and on my first distribution, after a very large amount of correspondence, there were some claimants that we were unable to locate. There resulted a lot of confusion by the manner by which the promoters down there had manipulated the bonds and had manipulated the notes and there were duplications of proofs and one thing and another, and the last few years the company was run the management simply put out in the hands of brokers in Chicago and in New York notes payable to bearer for $50,000 and $100,000 and paid heavy brokerage fees, and they were negotiated here and there, and some of those we had reason to believe had been retired, and we filed objections to some of them and found that they were retired, but it was not until just the time that the final report was filed and I was discharged that I had been able to perfect the distribution, and even then there were some small claims that were outstanding that could not be located.

Q. Now, were you discharged from both receiverships at the same time?—A. Well, now, I could not tell you without looking at the record, and I have not looked at it. Possibly I was.

Q. Approximately?—A. Approximately, I suppose.

Q. And about when was that?—A. I think it was early in 1909. I know I kept a stenographer for the purpose of taking care of the business of the packing company until some time in 1907.

Q. At what time had the properties of both companies finally been disposed of—I mean so far as the sale?—A. I think—when you say disposed of—the bulk of it was all disposed of in 1906.

Q. I mean the properties, so far as they had to do with the operation of the fisheries business; not the winding up?—A. I understand. Those properties were sold in the late winter and early spring of 1906. We undertook to dispose of them so that the purchasers might be able to operate during the next season and it was in the late fall of 1905; I think after having offered the properties three or four different times; I think probably some of the master's deeds were not made until 1906.

Q. I think that you have not stated the dividend in the Pacific Packing Co. case.—A. The Pacific Packing Co. paid two dividends; the first one of 5 per cent and the last one of 2.47.

Q. Apparently the discharge in the Pacific-American Co. was March 19, 1906.—A. Well, that would be it.

Q. And in the packing company it was February 23, 1909.—A. That is probably right. There were only six or seven creditors of that company, and its property was all here within the jurisdiction of the court, and I remember now that we closed that receivership quite promptly. But in the packing company we had—long after we sold the properties—we had contests with Wilson and somebody at Ketchikan over box shooks, and we had contests with the selling company. Griffith-Deering & Co., of San Francisco—a large claim—and Harry Knowles and a number of matters that I have forgotten, and we also had a lot of bills receivable against citizens of Alaska, parties that had scattered, and we kept after those, and finally I think made a disposition of them, or undertook to, but I don't think we ever got anything for that, but I kept endeavoring to collect those matters in until June of 1909.

Q. Have you any figures with you which show how many claims there were on open account, unsecured and not preferred?—A. Yes. I think I can give you all that data. I do not find my original inventory here, but my original inventory shows $115,000, and when I filed an amended inventory that was increased to $136,000. My recollection is it was about 135 or 140 individual creditors outside of debenture and note holders, and most all of those were residents here in this Northwest. If that is material I will hunt up my original inventory and give you the names, if you want them. Well, they are scheduled under different heads in this original inventory schedule "M," scheduling some $80,000, but the whole schedule amounted to $136,000.

Q. You say that is exclusive of note holders?—A. Yes; to people to whom the company was indebted on open accounts. The amount of demand notes outstanding was $2,366,261.

Q. Were those secured in any way?—A. No, sir. Well, no; I think those are all demand notes, and those demand notes were held very largely by J. P. Morgan & Co., by the National Park Bank, and, I think, by the Colonial Trust Co., and by parties who in large part held the debenture.

Q. And stock?—A. Well, I suppose the stock—I am sorry I can't tell you about that stock, but I can't.

Q. Of those open accounts, amounting to something like $136,000, were those preferred—many of them?—A. Those are the accounts that I stated to the committee were paid under Judge Hanford's order.

Q. Well, now, were there any open accounts to any considerable amount which were not preferred or secured?—A. No; only about $8,000, and they were principally amounts due to three firms of attorneys.

Q. And then the rest of the unsecured indebtedness consisted of these obligations on the notes which you have spoken of?—A. Of course we had a lot of indebtedness to the banks that held collateral.

Q. Of course I treat that as secured.—A. Now, some of them were not fully secured, but most of them were fully secured—I think Wells-Fargo & Co., of Portland, probably lost a little money.

Q. Have you there a summary of the figures—to put it roughly or inaccurately—in regard to the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.; have you there a summary statement showing the receipts and disbursements?—A. That is in the eleventh report—well, this is—I will read from the eleventh report—there are two reports subsequent to this. At the time the eleventh report was filed in this court, March 31, 1905, our total receipts had been $5,117,760 and our total disbursements were $5,054,195.97. Our total salmon sales had been $2,293,000, and we had on hand unsold $603,000, making practically $3,000,000 value—value of manufactured product—does that answer your question?

Q. Yes. And practically all of the business outside of some mail-carrying contracts, was this packing business?—A. Our transportation business proved to be a losing proposition, and as quick as I discovered it from the reports that were being made I took the matter up with Judge Hanford and discussed it with him personally, and I had the auditor provide me figures showing the result of the operations for a number of months, and recommended to the court that we be authorized to go out of the transportation business, and we did. We sold the vessels and stopped the losses and confined our operations to the fishing business.

Q. Now, have you the total of the allowances to receivers—name the receivers and the allowances to each?—A. I can tell you, I think, without referring to any data, about what the costs were. I think the master's fees for the sales of the property of the two corporations——

Q. (Interrupting). Well, Mr. Kerr, if you will give us one at a time, if you can.—A. I was just going to get there. Well, I will get it any way you want it. In the Pacific-American Fisheries the receivers were allowed $17,000 each, Mr. McGovern and myself. The attorneys for the receivers were allowed $10,000. In the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. case the receivers were allowed $35,000, Mr. McGovern and myself, each. Mr. McCord was allowed $16,000 as attorney for the receiver. The New Jersey court—I will have to speak from memory, because, as I told you, the books are where I can not get at them—the New Jersey court allowed Messrs. Alexander & Green, the New York attorneys of the receivers, for putting the company in the hands of a receiver down there, the sum of $5,000. My recollection is that the New Jersey receiver was allowed by the New Jersey court, I am not sure whether it was $9,000 or $15,000. I have no way of determining because, as I say, the books of the company are where I can not get at them and my report doesn't show it.

Q. In addition to the $35,000 which was allowed here?—A. Yes, sir. Here is what they did. Certain of our bills receivable were sent by me to the New Jersey receiver and they were cashed in there by him and he deducted his attorney's fees and his allowance by the court and sent out to me the balance, and it passed through our accounts, but it did not pass into my account—the account made in New Jersey—and so I can not be sure about that amount. The Alaska court allowed the attorneys for the Alaska receiver $7,500, Mr. Shackleford, and I think allowed Judge Winn $20,000; I am not sure about that, whether it was $20,000 or $25,000, I have been trying to find out. Senator Piles thinks it was $15,000, but that also was paid out of moneys that came into the hands of the receivers up there and did not go through my hands. Now, subsequently, when I came to close up this estate, long after this allowance had been made, we had a lot of matters that had taken up a very large amount of time, and there was left in my hands $1,880. It had taken me months and months to make the distribution, either one of the distributions—and in order that I might close up the estate I made a report to Judge Hanford setting forth, in a general way, the amount of subsequent work that I had been involved in, and the difficulty of distributing that small fund that was left, which amounted in many instances—would not amount to a postage stamp to one of the claimants, and it would have taken years to have distributed it, just as much time as it took to make the other distributions. Judge Hanford allowed me that balance in my hands, making my compensation $53,800 for three years of my time devoted exclusively to the business and additional compensation for work that was done after 1905.

Q. Making four years, approximately?—A. No, Mr. McCoy, I devoted practically three years of my time to the business and after that it was desultory. I discharged the stenographer and I used my own office and stenographic force.

I want to say this to this committee: Neither Judge Hanford or myself wanted the receivership to run the second year. I telegraphed to New York and refused to qualify as receiver. I was not an applicant for it, and I was assured by our clients in New York that the company would be reorganized within 60 days of the time the receivers had been appointed and that the appointment had been made preliminary to reorganization, and I was urged to qualify and to go to New York and undertake to assist in the reorganization, which I did do. I left here in the latter part of April, 1903, at the request of the two committees, one of which was headed by Herbert Satterlee, whom you gentlemen know or know of, for the purpose of attempting to assist in the reorganization of the company, and when I got there the two committees were warring among each other, and they left it to me to outline a plan of reorganization, which I did, and I remained in New York as long as possible, considering the duties I had to perform as receiver, and I notified those committees that they should get together and accomplish something or I would leave New York on a certain Friday and come back, and they never did reorganize, and I therefore remained in and, as I stated to the committee, I did not want to operate in 1904, and again they assured me that they had perfected a plan of reorganization, or it would be perfected if the plants were operated, and that fell through, and so all my time was taken up and I was taken out of my practice.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the amount of your bond?

A. I do not remember, Mr. Graham; it was not very large.

Q. Was it an indemnity company bond?—A. Yes, sir; I do not remember—I gave——

Q. I suppose it was paid out of the receivership funds, was it?—A. I think so; that is the usual custom out here. I do not know whether it was or not, but I suppose it was.

Mr. MCCOY. You have told us what was paid Alexander & Green for their services in having the receivers appointed in New Jersey; what was paid the attorneys here?

A. Nothing.

Q. For that service?—A. I don't think anything; I don't know. I think Judge Ballinger or somebody filed a petition and that we confessed, under the direction of the officers of the company, the insolvency. If anything was paid Judge Ballinger it was a small amount.

Mr. HIGGINS. Speak louder.

The WITNESS. I say, if anything was paid Judge Ballinger for that service I do not think it was over $100; I do not know.

Mr. DORR. If it is important I will look it up for the committee.

Mr. KERR. I will be glad to find it——

Mr. PRESTON. I think I can help you. I think I noticed an order in the Pacific American Co. case allowing Judge Ballinger, I think, either $300 or $500, but there was no allowance in the Packing Co. case.

The WITNESS. I do not remember now, there has been so many years elapsed; I do not remember what was paid; I do not know how that was arranged.

Mr. McCoy. Now, Mr. Kerr, we have gone quite fully into the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. case; you have not told us and given us the same detail, as I remember it, in regard to the Pacific-American case; do you remember, or have you any memoranda which will refresh your recollection as to the appraised or estimated value of the assets of that company when they were turned over?

A. Well, it was appraised about a million dollars.

The Chairman. Now, keeping that question in mind, we will postpone the answer to it until after lunch.

We will now take a recess until 1.30.

Whereupon a recess is taken until 1.30 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION (1.30 O'CLOCK).

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing. Same witness on the stand, testifies as follows:

Question repeated to the witness.

The Witness. The assets were, as shown by the books of the company, $1,100,000; the liabilities, as far as I have been able to discover them, at the time we filed this inventory on May 11, 1903, aggregated $721,391; my recollection is that there were some other liabilities that developed later, this inventory having been filed about two months after the receivers were appointed, but the liabilities of the company would approximate $800,000 with the additional liabilities that developed.

Mr. McCoy. What was that company capitalized at?

A. $5,000,000.

Q. Had they any bonds outstanding, or debentures?—A. Not at all; that company had nothing except this scheduled indebtedness—there were outstanding notes, $670,000, and certain sundry liabilities, amounting to $46,000 additional, but I would say to the committee that the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. owned and operated a shipyard at Eliza Island; they owned or were interested in a large number of pound-net or trap locations. Those locations were in the name of various subsidiary corporations.

Q. Of which this company owned the controlling interest?—A. Of which this company owned the controlling interest, and that property passed in the sale, including the shipyard and all this stock in these subsidiary corporations, in the sale of the property made by the receivers at $310,000 or $350,000; at any rate the one sale made of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co.'s assets; I can not remember all of its property, except possibly the tug Alice—I think she belonged to the packing company—but possibly a small tug or two and possibly a pile driver or two that were sold to outside parties.

Q. Those sales were at auction?—A. They were after advertisement, and made by the master in the usual way in receivership matters, after due notice at public auction; yes.

Mr. Preston. You mean the large sales.

A. Yes; the large sales. Of course the small sales and pieces of individual property like a tug or the tideland lot that we sold at Anacortes, was sold simply at private sale after notice, but not sold by the master—sold by the receivers themselves; but in each of these individual sales we procured a price approximating the cost of the property.

Q. Did you ascertain in the case of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. what the stock had been issued for or purported to be issued for?—A. No, Mr. McCoy; I was in exactly the same position with reference to that company—its records were in New York. I never saw the—I do not think during the receivership either the corporate records or the treasurer's records in either of those corporations—they have never been in my possession.

Q. How did the price received for the assets of this company compare with the inventories or appraised price at which you took them over?—A. Well, we realized from the sales of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co.'s assets $310,000, or possibly $330,000 or $340,000 all told. I would have to go through these reports in order to get for you the detail of any small pieces of segregated property that we sold. For instance, I think we had 11 pile drivers, some of them steam drivers of more modern construction. We had, in the way of scows and boats, probably over 100. Our operations were more limited under the receivership on account of the short run of salmon during the years 1903 and 1904. We found on hand a considerable amount of idle property, and occasionally we would have a chance to sell a pile driver or a scow or a boat. I know we sold a couple of scows that went to Alaska, and we converted that into money. But I could not give you the exact amount—possibly it is in this final report of the Pacific-American Fisheries—but I think it approximates $330,000.

Mr. McCoy. If it is in these reports we may get those in later on, but as long as you have approximated it, that is enough for the time being, I think. Now, what was the total amount of the cash handled in that receivership?

A. Approximately a million dollars; $975,000, I think Mr. Preston's figures show, and that omits, possibly, the last report; but it would approximate a million dollars.

Q. I thought you said the amount they were taken over at——A. (Continuing.) That is independent of the amount distributed from the sale—that is in operation.

Q. The total amount that went through your hands.—A. Of course the amount finally distributed went through our hands, and the amount finally distributed was, I suppose, something over $300,000.

Q. And that paid a dividend of approximately 38 per cent?—A. Thirty-eight per cent; yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what claims there were unsecured or unpreferred in that matter?—A. Well, I think, gentlemen, that we paid under some order that the court made in the packing company case, I think, every dollar of this $46,391 of accounts payable, and I think that was all for labor at the shipyard and labor on tugs, pile drivers, and so forth, and for webbing that had been purchased and delivered either immediately before or immediately after the receivers were appointed. You understand that we purchased—for instance, we operated, I think, 22 traps in 1903, pound nets. It costs an average of about $10,000 or $11,000 to construct and operate one of those pound nets. You know, doubtless, how they are constructed. We have leads not over 2,400 feet in length constructed of wire netting, and there had been a lot of that stuff that was bought; that extends from above the surface of the water down to the bottom, and the lines of piling are driven out from the shore to reach out into the Sound, and then there is the heart of the trap, that is built also, sometimes of cotton webbing and sometimes of wire webbing, and that inside of that and outside of it is the pot of the trap, which is a large web basket, always made of web; it is supported on piles, and which impounds the fish, and out of which they are taken. I think we had on hand something like 7,000 piling which was used for trap construction of one kind and another, and all of that wire webbing and cotton webbing and rope and stuff of that kind that was necessary for the construction. It is very expensive in the first place, and we had of that kind of stuff $45,365 worth on hand which had been assembled within six months of the date of the receivership yet unpaid for which we were required to pay as a preferred claim under the court's order.

Q. Outside of that indebtedness what was the amount of unsecured indebtedness?—A. $675,000.

Q. That was on open account, unsecured?—A. That was on demand notes.

Q. Were those in any way secured by pledges of product or anything of that kind?—A. No; no security on those at all. To meet that indebtedness and the expenses of the receivership was virtually the proceeds of the sale, $310,000, with the proceeds of the sale of a few scows and possibly one or two pile drivers. My recollection is that we discovered later on, when proofs began to be filed in these receivership matters, of notes that had been issued in New York some additional liability. We had no means when we took possession here, outside of the memory of Mr. McGovern, who had been the head of a corporation here, of ascertaining the exact amount of outstanding paper; it was not shown on the books.

Q. They kept no record?—A. Well, they had kept a record; but, as I explained to you, they had put in the hands of brokers in Chicago and New York a large amount of demand paper for sale, and where ever they could place it; two million and some odd dollars of demand notes were all negotiated in that way and they had not received yet the reports from those various brokers. They knew how much of that paper had been issued, but their books did not show how much of it had actually been placed, and it took some weeks to ascertain it.

Q. Was there any great volume of litigation in connection with the Pacific American Co.?—A. We had some litigation over trap sites, and we have had a great deal of litigation in the last 21 or 22 years here on Puget Sound over the rights secured by the statutes of this State to operators of pound nets, and questions in regard to the abandonment. Nearly all of the statutes of this State, so far as they appertain to the fisheries business, were drafted either by Mr. Dorr or by our firm, I suppose.

Q. Those were disputes over the particular locations, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; and questions of abandonment. There are a great many trap locations on Puget Sound. They may fish at a profit once in four years. The salmon run, from time immemorial, on Puget Sound has confined itself in the form of an immense run of red salmon one year. Next year will be the large year, and a very moderate run the year following that, followed by another moderate run and preceding the fourth year by a very short run. So that the owners of traps have found it unprofitable and impossible, practically, to operate many of the traps during the three short years, and under our statute, as it was for a long time, a trap had to be operated or it was deemed abandoned, and at the end of the expiration of the license there was frequently an attempt by various parties to get a location that had not been fished within the 12 months, and we had a great deal of litigation in this State over the fishery statutes, and the litigation that we had for this company was in regard to cases of that kind. We had some trouble with fish pirates that are referred to in this order, men that would go out in the night time—we kept a watchman in the night—and fish in the night when the tide is running. The salmon following toward the Fraser River, they go along with the tide, and, of course, when the tide is running the salmon are in the running tide, and they strike the lead of the trap and run into it; and there was a colony of outlaws out in that region of the State where those fisheries were that rendezvoused about a certain bay near Blaine that would descend on the traps at night, overpower the watchman, and rob the trap. Salmon were worth in the open market about 20 or 25 cents apiece, and they would take away from us in a single night from a single trap possibly salmon worth a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars, and we had those men arrested and brought before the Federal court, and some of them were sentenced to six months' imprisonment for robbing the receiver, and there was a lot of that kind of work.

Q. Where could they dispose of them?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. Where could they dispose of them?—A. They would resell them to other canneries. Every time they were able to take five salmon out of your trap it was worth a dollar to them, and they took as high as $2,000 worth in a single night out of a single trap operated by the receiver. I think only on one occasion they got that much, but we were robbed in the year 1903–4, I suppose, of salmon that in the open market would cost $18,000 or $20,000, and we had continual trouble of that kind. We kept patrol boats running for the purpose of protecting our own property and in conjunction with other operators on the Sound for the purpose of protecting property.

Q. The receivers, as I recollect it, were appointed in the New Jersey court in this matter, as in the other one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any receiver appointed in the Alaska district?—A. Gen. Winn was appointed in the packing company in the Alaska district.

Q. In this one?—A. No; this was purely Washington business; it had no property in Alaska.

Q. Was there any New Jersey receiver appointed in that matter?—A. No, sir; I think Mr. McGovern and I, although I think Mr. Hallock was—yes; he was also a receiver of this New Jersey corporation. The receivers of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. were McGovern, Hallock, and Kerr.

Q. Now, if you will state the allowances of those receivers and where made and also the allowances to the attorneys, if any allowances were made, for acting in the appointment of the receiver—state that, beginning with the allowances, if any, to——A. Do you mean in New Jersey?

Q. Yes; in both courts.—A. I do not know. In New Jersey—I will say to the committee that I filed in New Jersey and also in Alaska duplicate copies of all my reports, 13 or 14 of them. I had never known—if I had, I have forgotten—whether anything was allowed for the attorney for the petitioners in New Jersey or not; probably there was; but if it was it was paid out of money that came into the hands, incidentally, of the New Jersey receiver, and he simply remitted to me the balance, and it would appear on our books, if I could find them.

Q. Now, about the allowances here.—A. I have not had time to refresh my memory, but I do not know whether any of our reports, gentlemen, would show any allowances made to the attorney for the petitioner or not. Do you discover anything, Mr. Preston, except in the Pacific-American fisheries case?

Mr. PRESTON. There was not anything allowed, that I noticed, in the packing company case at all—in the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. case there was $250—I just noticed it during the recess—allowed to plaintiff's attorneys.

Mr. KERR. I think that that was all that was allowed in either or both of them; but Mr. McCord, when you call him on the witness stand, probably will remember exactly what it was. I know whatever it was, gentlemen, the receivers did not pay it and it was fixed by the court, because I was very careful in paying anything of that kind to protect the receivership by an order of court and to have it submitted to the court in every case.

Q. What were the allowances to the receivers and the receivers' attorneys?—A. In the Pacific-American Co. case?

Q. Yes.—A. Mr. McGovern and I were allowed $17,000 each as receivers; the attorney was allowed $10,000, and I think the allowance that was made for Mr. Hallock by the New Jersey court was made by one order to cover both receiverships; that is my recollection of it. That may be where I am confused as to the exact amount that he was paid.

Mr. PRESTON. To help along the matter at this point, the abstract which I furnished you shows an allowance to Hallock, the receiver, of $3,000, and to Alexander & Green $2,000, under one of the late dates.

Mr. KERR. I guess that is right, then. That would make Mr. Hallock's allowance in the two receiverships $12,000, $9,000 in one and $3,000 in the other one; and Alexander & Green $5,000 in one and $2,000 in the other, which makes $7,000. I think the master's fees in those two cases for a commission on the sales was something like $6,000. I think the clerk's fees of the United States court was something like $4,000.

Q. Who was the master?—A. Judge Eben Smith.

Q. Now, as to the attorneys' allowance in this district, in the Pacific-American Fisheries case———A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) What were they?—A. I said $10,000 was the amount allowed for the entire service to the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. We were paid a salary by that company of $5,000 a year. We have been paid a salary of $5,000 a year by its successor ever since, and paid it now, as attorney for that corporation.

Q. You mean that before the receivership———A. (Continuing.) Both before and after and ever since we succeeded as attorneys for the purchasers of the plant, who had been the former owners of it. We were stockholders in that property before it was sold to the packing company. That property was owned by clients of ours in Chicago,

John E. Cudahy, Charlie Counselman, Sandecker, Mr. Harris of the Alton Railroad, Deming & Gould. We sold it out to the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. They purchased it at master's sale from the receivers of the packing company. We had been attorneys for the Chicago parties for some years. They employed us—our firm—subsequently as attorneys for their fishery company, and we have been acting ever since in that capacity.

Q. Did they buy out the assets of both companies or only the Pacific-American Fisheries Co.?—A. That is all; the Pacific-American Fisheries.

Q. Substantially all the assets of that company came into their hands after the sale.—A. Substantially all of it.

Q. How about the property of the Pacific-American Co.; to whom did that go?—A. You mean the packing company?

Q. Yes; the Pacific-American Co.—A. That is the one I just was speaking of. All of its assets went, practically, to these Chicago parties who organized a company known as the Pacific-American Fisheries. Now, the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. for the most part went to the Northwestern Fisheries Co.; that was one of the subsidiary companies, under the control of the Guggenheims, as I understand it, of which Mr. Eckels, of New York, was auditor; they were engaged in building a railroad in Alaska, operating the Katalla Co. and various companies here, and they purchased those canneries and have operated them ever since under the name of the Northwestern Fisheries.

Q. Then, as I understand it, in both those instances there was nothing like a reorganization, but so far as the receivers were concerned they closed out both businesses, and those people bought them.—A. They did.

Q. And that was a clean-cut transaction—not a reorganization in any way?—A. No, sir. If the packing company had reorganized this company as I originally thought to do in New York, and husbanded its property as it was husbanded, they never would have lost a dollar, notwithstanding the fact that they never had any capital stock. The Pacific-American Fisheries, who bought this property in the year following, which was a large run, paid for the property the first year they operated it; and so in Alaska, on account of the increased demand and the higher price at which the product was sold, the Northwestern Fisheries Co. have gotten, each of those persons, out of their operation, practically all the money that was ever put in them, and they have got the properties yet.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Kerr, to what extent the controlling parties in interest in either of those companies are also the controlling parties in either of the two companies which made this purchase, as you have stated?—A. There is not a man, I don't think, now connected with the ownership of any of these canneries that had anything to do, directly or remotely, with either of the old companies. Those companies were, as I stated to you in the beginning, incorporated by parties in New York for the purpose of consolidating the business on this coast. The Pacific-American Fisheries was owned solely by Chicago parties; they acquired it as a result of the effort of a rather noted promoter out here on this coast by the name of Onffroy, a Frenchman, who got the canneries together and sold them to the Chicago parties that were embodied in the Pacific-American Fisheries and the Packing Co. The New York people seemingly acquired that company by acquiring the stock, and I do not think there is any of the stockholders of either one of those companies that were there at the time the receivers were appointed that are now interested at all or have been at any time. There may have been some in New York—I do not know. It is possible, because Mr. Herbert Satterlee, who was chairman of one of the committees of reorganization, I know, only by hearsay, however, had some negotiations with Mr. Rosene and Capt. Jarvis, who acted in connection with the Eckels interest in acquiring these properties; so that it is barely possible that one branch of the stockholders of the packing company may have gotten back into the Guggenheim organization, but I do not know. I have not followed that through.

Q. Mr. Satterlee is a son-in-law of J. P. Morgan?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do I understand you, Mr. Kerr, that the stockholders of the company were its largest creditors as well?

A. Its largest creditors as well.

Q. Who were the largest creditors, then, of the two companies?—A. The largest single creditor, I think, was the National Park Bank.

Q. The National Park Bank—was it a stockholder or its officers were the stockholders?—A. Richard Dellafield, president of the National Park Bank; he was formerly president of Dellafield, Morgan & Co., who were at the bottom of this organization. They held a very large amount of the debentures; my recollection is that he had subscribed $250,000 of the debentures—that is, the underwriter.

Q. How much of its stock did he subscribe for?—A. I do not know. I want to apologize to the committee for apparently losing my head on that matter.

Q. Of course, Mr. Kerr——A. (Continuing.) I do not know who this——

Q. Of course, you understand that if a great deal of stock was issued and was not paid for and no consideration given for it that the duty of the receiver would be manifestly to pursue the subscribers to that stock to pay what they appeared to have paid when they took the certificates.—A. No doubt; that is what we always do——

Q. And, of course, that would have manifestly changed the financial condition of the company if that had been done?—A. No doubt about it at all, and what I wanted to explain to the committee was this: I have here, if you gentlemen care to look at them—here is the final receipts from the holders of debentures, to give you an idea who those parties were—a reference to my schedules here will show you that I think 66 per cent, possibly 70 per cent, of all of the indebtedness was held by the holders of the original debenture or by banks with which the principal holders were connected.

Q. Now, have you any information that those people were also stockholders?—A. I assume that they were. I did not intend to be discourteous to the committee in the beginning. I do not know. I tried to find out. I have felt, with reference to that matter, Alexander & Green, one of the largest, or the largest of the law firms in the city of New York, were acting for the eastern receivers. They were the attorneys, as I understand it, for the company when it was organized. They had organized the company under the laws of New Jersey.

Q. And they have the custody of the books of the company?—A. They had; at least I supposed they had.

Q. And they were the ones that declined to turn them over to the receivers?—A. Well, I made my demand upon the treasurer——

Q. What is his name?—A. He was a stepson of Richard Dellafield. I called his name here this morning—Carey—he lives over in New Jersey—both in person when in New York and by letter, demanding that the books should be sent me. I wanted to find out who the stockholders were, and that was my purpose, and I was never able to get them either upon a personal demand made in New York or by letter. For some reason they withheld them from me.

Q. And of course it would have been your duty to have pursued the subscribers to that capital stock?—A. Absolutely would, and I will say to this committee that I attempted, so far as I was able, to secure a return to the creditors of this concern of every dollar through every available source whatever it may have been, and I did want to know who the stockholders were. Now, I may have been lax in it, but I expected the attorneys who organized the company and was familiar with the New Jersey statute, who were on the ground and attorneys for the principal creditors——

Q. Who were those attorneys?—A. Alexander & Green, of New York.

Q. They organized the company?—A. They organized the company.

Q. And they continued as the attorneys for the receiver?—A. And they continued as the attorneys for the receiver.

Q. And they had the custody of the books?—A. They had, so far as I know. I did not have any custody of them.

Q. Then it appears to me that it would not have been very difficult to get possession of those books.—A. All that I could do—I could not compel them to be delivered.

Q. No; but the New Jersey receiver——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Might have made demand on his own counsel.—A. The New Jersey court could have compelled Carey, who resided in New Jersey, to deliver up the books. I know that I talked to Mr. Deming, of Alexander & Green in New York. I made a number of trips to New York—for the first time in April, 1903, and asked that they get those books and send then out here.

Q. Are Alexander & Green also attorneys for the new company that was formed that took these properties over?—A. No.

Q. Who was?—A. They are a Chicago concern.

Q. Who are the firm?—A. An entirely different set of men.

Q. Will you give the name of the firm—are you willing to——

The CHAIRMAN. He means the name of the attorneys for the new concern.

The WITNESS. Out here?

Mr. HIGGINS. No; the ones that organized the Northwestern Fisheries Co.

A. I do not remember. I think—oh, the Northwestern Fisheries Co.?

Q. Yes.—A. I think Mr. Bogle is the present attorney of the Northwestern Fisheries Co. I think Mr. Bogle has been since it was organized; possibly Mr. Hartman was at one time.

Q. Was that organized under the laws of the State of Washington?—A. Gentlemen, I do not know, I am sure. I have nothing to do with it. I should rather think that it was a Maine or a New Jersey corporation, because it was New York people that controlled it.

Q. Probably New Jersey men, under those circumstances?—A. I should rather expect so.

Mr. DORR. I have a little information on that subject which I can give the committee.

The WITNESS. I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. DORR. The people who acquired this property organized the Northwestern Fisheries Co., sold it out—that is, they sold the capital stock, perhaps a year ago or such matter to an entirely different people who were located in Chicago, and the attorneys for the present company are Winston, Payne, Strong & Shaw, of Chicago, and here in this city of Seattle they have local attorneys; I think Mr. Bogle is the attorney here.

The WITNESS. That is the Booth Fisheries Co., practically.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of Mr. Kerr?

The WITNESS. I want to say to the committee, if you will pardon me, that I have here in my hand a minute book of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., and I do not want to leave the stand until the committee has interrogated me with reference to the charge that is made here in connection with the fees that were allowed Mr. McCord and myself, to the effect that it was allowed in pursuance of a prearranged and corrupt plan between us and Judge Hanford to organize some corporation. I had the record here—it does not belong to me—I brought it here.

Q. Who does it belong to?—A. I am ready to answer any questions in connection with that that this committee may see fit to ask me.

Q. Who does the record belong to?—A. The stock of this company is now owned, as I understand it——

Q. (Continuing.) That particular book, if you want to answer.—A. I was saying—I was going to tell you the stock of this company, as I understand it, has been acquired by the American Power & Light Co., and the corporate record was obtained by us from them. That company being now, as I understand it, the holders of the stock.

Q. Then it belongs to the American Power & Light Co.?—A. I think so. But I want to say to this committee now, as a part of my testimony, that that charge is absolutely unqualifiedly false, and I am ready to answer any questions which you gentlemen may see fit to propound to me in reference to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the intention of the committee to ask you to be kind enough to let the committee have the use of this book and such other books as cover that transaction, that we might go through them at our leisure.

A. I will be glad to do so.

Q. And we will be better prepared to develop that subject in the future.—A. I would be glad to.

Q. Of course it is the committee's purpose to go into it, and we will ask you to aid us in that matter also.

The WITNESS. I will be very glad to, and after a few weeks ago, in noting what those charges were, I sent for this book—this minute book—showing who were connected with it, and the original stock book and the original stock certificate book, and I will be glad to get to this committee any record of any kind that is in my power, in connection with that company, so as to give you every available means of going to the bottom of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be obliged to you.

The WITNESS. And if you gentlemen care to take this record now I will be glad to leave it with you. I wanted to explain that I borrowed it and I have not the consent of the light company to part with it permanently, but if it is the judgment of this committee that they want to take it to Washington, or any other books, I will get them down there for you.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that that will be at all likely.

Mr. MCCOY. You said you got possession of some other books besides this.

A. I have the stock book and the original stock certificate book, but that record shows you from time to time just who the stockholders were, and Mr. Preston, I think, has examined the stock book, but I will bring it up here—the original stock certificates that have been renewed from time to time and canceled certificates and any other records which you gentlemen may want.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is the company still in existence as the Hanford Power & Irrigation Co.?

A. Yes, sir. It has been the purpose to disincorporate it. The American Light & Power Co. did not succeed until within a few weeks in acquiring a small block of stock that was outstanding, and they could not disincorporate the company and formally transfer its property over to the American Light & Power Co., of course, until they acquired all that stock, and I am not certain but what a petition is filed to disincorporate it. But this power plant was acquired by S. Z. Mitchell, who was formerly with the General Electric Co., and, as I understand it, operates the American Light & Power Co. of New York, buying up all of its outstanding stock.

Q. That is the American Light & Power Co. is a branch of the General Electric Co. Is that what you mean to say?—A. No; it is not a branch, but Mr. Mitchell, who is at the head of that, was for many years connected with the General Electric Co. I suppose you gentlemen would know him, because he had been very prominent in electric light and power matters for many years.

Mr. MCCOY. What we would want to do is, if we could get possession of these books up at the hotel to go through them, and that would save a lot of time.

The WITNESS. You gentlemen can look over that record——

The CHAIRMAN. What particular name do you give this record?

A. It is the minute book.

The CHAIRMAN. And what other books of the company can you furnish us?

The WITNESS. Well, that minute book and, of course, the stock journal and the stock books are the only particular records that I know of. The company's accounts, I supposed, were kept at Priest Rapids. I never had anything to do with those. I never had them and I do not know anything about them. If the committee would have to go into the accounts, I suppose you would have to get them from over there. I never was at Priest Rapids myself.

Q. In reference to the acquisition of the property of the company—the real estate by the company—what aid can you give us in that regard?—A. This company?

Q. Yes; the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—A. Yes, I can tell you in a general way. We bought real estate from private individuals—the Filey ranch where our headquarters are located. We purchased part of the property from the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; we purchased the balance of it from the State of Washington. Over at Priest Rapids there is a valley comprising some 26,000 acres of irrigable land and the plan of this company was to develop power by diverting at the rapids part of the Columbia River, and we, of course, obtained the necessary consent of the War Department to do that, and to develop a large amount of power, I think I estimated at one time 30,000 or 40,000 horsepower, but I think the plan developed that we started on was to develop an 8,000 or 10,000 horsepower to pump the water required to irrigate 16,000 acres of land into a canal that was 50 feet above the level of the Columbia River.

Q. To pump the water from the river?—A. To pump the water from the river, the foot of the rapids, to lift it 50 feet and then send it by gravity down the course of the valley a distance of some 12 or 15 miles, and by another series of pumps to elevate the water to a 100-foot level above the mean water of the Columbia River, and by another lateral system of canals to reclaim some 10,000 additional acres of land.

Q. Do you mean by that, Mr. Kerr, that the canal would run the water into a basin, out of which you would pump it onto a higher level?—A. No, sir; we would pick it up, lift it up to a point 100 feet, and then carry our canals along that 100-foot level and water the area of land between our low-line and our high-line ditch.

Q. You would get that from the river, too?—A. We would get that from the river, too; yes, sir. We paid the Northern Pacific Railway Co. $10 an acre for the real arable land. That eastern Washington along the Columbia River is full of basaltic rock; it is the largest region of volcanic rock known in the world, I suppose. We paid $10 an acre, I think, for 7,000 or 8,000 acres that we purchased from the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; and up near the foot of the rapids there is a considerable area of land that has no particular value, that would be traversed by our ditch, and that we paid the Northern Pacific Railway Co. $3 an acre for, for 7,000 or 8,000 acres of that land. We paid the State of Washington $11 an acre—school lands could not be sold for less than $10—they were arid lands, absolutely worthless until there was water put on them. I recollect we bought those lands at public auction at Olympia, after due advertisement, and I think we acquired—I would have to look at the record to tell you the number of acres—but we acquired, I think, some 17,000 or 18,000 acres of land, a considerable part of which would become valuable fruit land when water was put upon it, and we started in to develop this power proposition at an estimated cost of $480,000. We carried the work along with purely local capital here for two or three years, and, like a great many of these enterprises, it developed that the actual cost of carrying them on was very much larger than the estimated cost. We had to resort to—I think we attempted to reorganize and increase our capital twice before the property was ultimately sold, but our theory was that by developing the power at Priest Rapids we could extend a transmission line down the Columbia River and supply the necessary power to elevate the water to the various levels along the river, and that we could develop a large empire of very valuable fruit and agricultural lands along the river, and the company that has purchased it are carrying that plan, and they have spent, I think, approximating a million and a half dollars since they acquired it in carrying out the plan. But we were not able, with the capital that we had, to do it. I think we had at one time 110 stockholders, local men, in the city of Seattle and the city of Tacoma.

Q. Has the present company begun to receive returns yet?—A. Well, we began to receive returns. We put the water in the lower ditch before we finally sold the stock out to the individual stockholders and began to receive revenues from water rights that were, and we sold a large amount of land with the water rights on it, and those sales were all made with periodical payments, generally on rather long time, because the purchasers were people, as a rule, of small means, and it takes from three to six or eight years to develop an orchard or a grape ranch and to get such return out of that character of land as will enable the occupier to support himself. We have, ourselves, developed 20 acres over there; we have an orchard on it now, I think, four years old. Outside of the cost of the land, I think we spent about $8,000 or $9,000 on that land and had no returns from it yet, but as soon as the fruit is growing probably it will be worth, probably $1,200 or $1,500 an acre.

The CHAIRMAN. There was some legal controversy as to the right of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to convey the land which you bought. I think you attended to that personally, didn't you, and investigated it and straightened it out?

A. I know, Mr. Graham, that I went on two occasions over to Tacoma and discussed with the land agent of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. questions of obtaining a contract for that land, but I am not certain whether that land has been conveyed yet. I do not remember that there was any controversy with reference to the right of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to have conveyed it.

Q. Have you any present recollection of any ground of legal controversy with reference to the title?—A. I have not. There may have been, but you see we were attorneys for this company for two years, and then Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey became attorneys for it. It may have been that we had some controversy, but I have no recollection of it now.

Q. At a special meeting of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., held at the offices of Kerr & McCord, on June 14, 1906, the minutes of which appear in the books that you have handed us, this entry appears:

> The secretary reported that the contract for the purchase from the Northern Pacific Railway of lands applied for had been checked and land descriptions found correct, and Mr. Kerr reported the legal points were as agreed upon.

Does that refresh your recollection any as to those legal points involved?—A. No; I do not remember what they were now. I might by taking——

Q. Later on perhaps you will find something which will call your attention to it.

The WITNESS. If you have anything in mind, suggest it to me; maybe you can refresh my memory about it, but I have no recollection now of any serious question connected with the title.

The CHAIRMAN. I have nothing specifically in my mind about it, only the general impression that there was such a difficulty in the way and that it was removed in some way.

A. I know this, that in the chain of title of the Northern Pacific Railway Co.'s lands there were various bonds issued, trust deeds and so on; that there was some question came up either in this title or in some other that I examined as to whether certain specific land had been released by the satisfaction of the trust deeds in the forms those satisfactions took; possibly that is what I had in mind, because I know that I discussed them with the land agent either in this case or some other case in reference to lands in eastern Washington.

Q. Do you know whether there was any litigation then pending in which the Northern Pacific Railway was a party, relative to those public lands which you received?—A. No; I do not. I have no knowledge of it.

Q. When can we receive the other books you mentioned?—A. They are in my office and I will be glad to let you have them any time you want them.

Q. This afternoon?—A. Yes.

Q. So that we might use them at our leisure?—A. Yes, sir; I will be very glad to let you have them.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Kerr?

Mr. PRESTON. I heard Mr. Kerr with great difficulty at several points——

The CHAIRMAN. He seems to let his voice drop so low that it is difficult to hear him.

Mr. PRESTON. There are one or two matters that I would like to inquire about; it is possible that I may be duplicating the record because I did not hear it well, but I will try to be brief in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; proceed.

Mr. PRESTON. The eleventh report of the receivers shows cash received to March 9, 1905, $5,117,760. The twelfth report seems to be missing from the files in the clerk's office. The thirteenth report shows cash receipts from July 11, 1905, to October 23, 1905, $212,297, making a total of $5,330,000, leaving out of consideration the twelfth report, which would therefore exclude the receipts between March 5, 1904, 1905, and July 11, 1905.

Now, my understanding that I gathered from my examination of the papers was that $5,330,000 and whatever more there may have been that would be covered by the twelfth report, included cash receipts from all sources.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would include the cash receipts from the master's sales of the assets.—A. If they had been made, it does.

Q. Yes; they were made previously.—A. Yes, sir; that would include them.

Q. So that, as I understand it, that would include the conversion into cash of all the assets of the company.—A. Of that one company; yes, yes.

Q. You spoke in your examination of Mr. McGovern having a salary; I could not understand clearly whether you meant that he had that salary while he was receiver or previous.—A. No, sir; up to the time he was appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. Previous to his receivership, $15,000 a year.

A. He was paid $25,000 a year—the manager was paid $15,000, as I remember it; Mr. Ainsworth was manager—either twelve or fifteen thousand—I think it was fifteen thousand.

Mr. McCoy. Did they get it, Mr. Kerr, or were they suspended like some others?

A. No, sir; they received it; they did not let their salaries get behind six months and more than six months, the way that some of the rest of us did.

Mr. Preston. Now, I understand from these reports that in the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. there were no allowances out here in this court to Mr. Hallock as receiver and none to his New York attorneys?

A. No; they simply took the funds they had on hand and put the allowance made in New Jersey and took their pay out of it and sent me the balance.

Q. You spoke of the allowance of the receivers in this court being $35,000 each; you mean to confine that to yourself and Mr. McGovern.—A. That is all; yes, sir.

Q. Now, was there not a very large percentage, in amount, of creditors who participated in the receivership proceedings?—A. A very large amount.

Q. Do you remember the amount?—A. Well——

Q. Now, let me ask this question——

Mr. Higgins. They were all holders of debentures, or most of them, these creditors?

A. No. When we operated the second year the signers of the petition to Judge Hanford requested that he permit the receivers to operate the canneries represented in debentures and notes over $2,500,000 at a time when our outstanding indebtedness was a little over $3,000,000. Now, there could not have been all note holders, because we had outstanding in debentures something like $1,200,000 or $1,500,000, so that both note holders and debenture holders petitioned, and they had that petition printed, under the practice of New York, and sent it out here to me. Judge Hanford was in San Francisco holding court, and by telegram they directed me to go to San Francisco and there present the matter to Judge Hanford for the purpose of getting his consent that the receivers might operate in 1904, and I did that. And you will find that was filed here on the 20th of January, I think, 1904. I can tell if I could look—if I had access to the petition—because I know who the debenture holders were.

Mr. McCoy. Your question was a little different from that, was it not, Mr. Preston—your question referred to a different period.

Mr. Preston. My question was general; it covered the entire period of the receivership. I notice in the papers I examined several occasions when there was appearances by creditors in block.

A. Yes.

Q. I mean written appearances, petitions, consents, etc., one block being $1,800,000 and the other block something $500,000.—A. Yes, sir; they appeared here—I was not present when the fees were fixed.

Q. I am not speaking of fees, but other steps in the proceedings; when the petition was made to sell out the assets.—A. Yes, sir; when the petition was made to operate the cannery also.

Q. Now, taking that figure of $2,300,000; about what percentage would that be, in rough calculation, in your mind, of the total creditors?—A. At that time we had an outstanding unpaid indebtedness of $3,100,000. I think it was practically over $2,500,000 in amount, petitioned to have the cannery operate; leaving only about $600,000 unrepresented, and that was scattered around the East, such places as Boston, and some of it in Europe. I suppose those people who were acting down there did not deem it necessary to go and pick them up.

Q. Do you mean to say that the majority in amount who petitioned for the operation of the canneries were holders of debentures?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRESTON. That is what I supposed——

Mr. HIGGINS. I understand they were both debenture and note holders.

A. They were both, but I understand, Mr. Higgins, the question asked me in my judgment whether the majority of them were debenture holders. I think they were, because I know that the American Bank, I know the National Park Bank and Mr. Dellafield, I know that the Colonial Trust Co. were among the very largest of all the creditors, and other members of the reorganization committee whose names slip me at the moment were all on that petition, and I feel very sure that the petitioners were about equally divided, possibly, between the debenture holders and the note holders.

Mr. PRESTON. Do I understand that you were not present in court when the matter of the final compensation was submitted?

A. No, sir; I never heard any discussion with Judge Hanford or anybody else about what the compensation would be; not a word.

Q. The papers here show that those creditors, $2,300,000 in amount, participated in a submission of the matter of compensation of receivers and their attorneys to the court. Were you a party to that, or have I got to get somebody else who can testify as to that?—A. No, sir; I was not present. All that I know about it is what the records show and what I was told by Mr. McCord. I did not know that the fees were to be fixed at that time, but that the parties had appeared here before the court; that a large percentage of the creditors were represented, and he reported what the court had done in the way of fixing the fees.

Q. Now tell me this, or tell the committee this, was there any criticism or objection made, that you know of, by any creditor or person interested in either of those corporations as to the allowances made?—A. Never. I never received a letter; I never heard a creditor or anybody else ever objected to it. If there were any objections made, they never came to my ears until these charges were made here. I have heard parties outside that were not interested—I remember one local paper here—thought the fees that were allowed were very large and some comment about it.

Q. I am asking you only about those that were interested.—A. (Continuing.) But from the parties in interest I never heard any objection at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. You do not know, I think you said, Mr. Kerr, whether the largest creditors of the company were interested in the Northwestern Fisheries Co. that finally at receiver's sale bought these properties?

A. I really do not know. I never saw the list of the stockholders of the Northwestern Fisheries Co. I do know that Mr. Satterlee, of New York, was chairman of one of the committees for the organization of the packing company. They appointed two committees—they were in two factions—and I know that Mr. Satterlee, from conversations I had with Mr. Rosene and Capt. Jarvis after the property was purchased, had some sort of relationship with Mr. Satterlee, but so far as I personally know there are no common-stock holders; there may be, but I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. PRESTON. Am I correct in understanding your testimony to be that all of the open accounts for labor and supplies were paid, except some back accounts for attorneys' fees?

A. Yes, sir; and a few small, petty accounts that did not amount to more than $300 or $400 outside of what was due the attorneys—possibly $500 or $600.

Q. I notice among the files an order of Judge Hanford allowing Judge Winn $7,500 on account, and with the order is attached a certified copy of a previous order made by Judge Brown in Alaska to that effect.—A. That was done, Mr. Preston, for this reason: Judge Winn, in Alaska, handled no funds. I had to go to Alaska, get Judge Brown to vacate two orders that Judge Winn had entered up there after we began our operations, one of which was that the receivers were to deposit all funds in the National Bank of Juneau, while under our agreement under which we floated $1,250,000 of certificates—and that order had been made by the Alaska court—we were required to deposit our funds in the Bank of California, and after writing Judge Brown I had to go to Juneau and get that order vacated. So that there were no moneys passed through the Alaska receivers' hands, and they sent down this certified copy of the order from the Juneau court and Judge Hanford confirmed it by order, so that I could pay it out of the funds in my hands.

Q. I understood quite clearly from your testimony that the receivership operations of the canneries were profitable before that, in the years 1903 and 1904 of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.—A. They were.

Q. Now, I gathered from the reports that the first year of the operations of the canneries of the Pacific-American Fisheries Co. were unprofitable.—A. The first year they were unprofitable, and we covered the losses the second year and made—I think our report of my auditor shows that there was a profit of something like $8,000 or $10,000 on the two years' operations; but it took pretty hard work.

Q. You speak of the master's fees allowed by the court; are they not regulated by statute?—A. Yes, sir; the master's fees, I understand, are fixed by statute at 1 per cent, and I think the clerk's fees are about a half of 1 per cent.

Q. Am I right in understanding that the first two years, 1903 and 1904, the receivership took up your entire time?—A. My entire time.

Q. And the next year?—A. The next year I kept a stenographer and I also kept in my employ for a considerable time an accountant—I forget what time Mr. Dumar left me and went to Ainsworth & Dunn, but I finally dispensed with the accountant and kept my own accounts, but I kept a stenographer during most of the year 1905.

Q. But the object of my inquiry was to find out whether most of your time, if not all of your time in 1905, or whether any considerable portion of it, was devoted to that work.—A. In 1905 it was very largely devoted to the packing company matter, although I tried several cases during the latter part of that year—I got back into the practice to some extent.

Q. Did you engage in any law practice during the years 1903 and 1904 of your receivership?—A. I don't think I tried a single case—I don't think I did anything in the office.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, was it your purpose to have Mr. McCord testify and have him examined?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I think he ought to appear.

Mr. PRESTON. Then that ends my examination. I thought if he was not going to be called I would ask Mr. Kerr some questions as to the legal services.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the record would be more complete if he should appear. Can he appear now?

Mr. KERR. Mr. McCord has an argument to make before the circuit court of appeals on Monday morning and he is on his way to San Francisco, but he will be here, probably, not later than Wednesday evening of next week.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of Mr. McCord's absence from the city, if there are some other matters which you wish to ask of Mr. Kerr——

Mr. PRESTON. No; not if we are going to have him as a witness; otherwise I was going to ask for some description of the work of the attorneys.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be entirely proper they should both do this.

Mr. MCCOY. I would like to make this suggestion, that Mr. Kerr go ahead as far as he can, and if it then occurs to you that there is anything on the legal end of it that should be said by Mr. McCord he can be called, and it is possible we can finish with Mr. Kerr this afternoon.

Mr. PRESTON. Will the committee indicate to-day——

Mr. MCCOY. I would like that you would ask Mr. Kerr along that line.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is anything in your mind——

Mr. PRESTON. I would like you to tell the committee, Mr. Kerr, as well as you can from your memory, the scope of the legal side of the services of the receiver; that is, the services performed by Mr. McCord as attorney for the receiver.

A. The two matters that took up probably the most time in consecutive days of the attorney for the receivers were the Nome City cases, the record of which is in this court and in which a large amount of money was involved and a very large amount of time was consumed. Mr. McCord can give the detail better than I can, because I was not present, except, as I think, that I was a witness in the case. The litigation that resulted over the patent in which I suppose Mr. McCord was acting not only for these two receiverships, but was also acting for a third party—there were some voluminous briefs prepared in that litigation and a very considerable amount of time taken in the trial in both courts taking the testimony. Mr. McCord appeared in a great many contests of one kind and another that came up in the receivership, as well as prepared nearly all the orders and petitions, etc. We had two personal-injury matters. The case of Fielding was reversed after the receivers were appointed. We had a man injured coming down on one of the tugs from the north and a considerable negotiation over the adjustment and settlement with him. We had litigation with the Pacific Selling Co., involving some $66,000, which was spirited. They were claiming a preferred claim against the company for that amount, the claim being made after the receivers were appointed that in some way they were the selling agents of the packing company. They had allowed $66,000 in amount of warehouse receipts belonging to the selling company to get into the possession of the packing company, and they had sold them and availed themselves of the proceeds. Their claim was finally established as a common claim. Griffith, Deering & Co., of San Francisco, were claiming damages against us on account of the alleged violation of a selling agency contract for certain Alaska canneries, being one of those long-time broker's contracts. I think they were claiming some $40,000 or $50,000. The claim of the Pacific Steam Whaling Co., growing out of transactions with the old company, that company having sold them a large amount of property in Alaska and some canneries, a lighterage plant at Nome, and some steamers of various kinds in the whaling business. There was a contest with several Chinese firms. There were contests or controversies with parties at Ketchikan—a long contest over contracts that the company had for the purchase of box shooks. There was a personal claim of Harry Knowles that was not finally ended by litigation in this court until some time in 1908. There was afterwards a very spirited contest with Corby. While that was tried by other attorneys in the New Jersey courts, of course the burden of the preparation of the defense in the case and the taking of all of the testimony fell upon Mr. McCord here. There were of course a great many—in operating all of these canneries and these various steamship lines we had numerous strikes; the waiters were called off our ships; the engineers were called out; we had labor union delegations to contend with, and Mr. McCord did a lot of that negotiating and was called upon to settle all matters practically where there were legal questions involved. My time was taken up with the operation of the cannery, and, as I stated to the committee, after the first year I was alone in that operation and I had to refer all those matters to Mr. McCord. He prepared all our Chinese and other contracts, and there are a great many of them in the handling of any one cannery. We have Chinese contracts and fishermen's contracts and agreements of one kind and another innumerable that have to be prepared by the attorneys. So that Mr. McCord was called upon by the receivers during the two years of operation almost constantly. I mean by that every week. A considerable amount of his time was taken up in the preparation of petitions and orders and the settlement of details of the business that we settled without getting into any controversy that never ran through our reports at all. We had disputes over purchasers of one kind and another that resulted in negotiations and settlements, such as business men usually have, that do not appear upon our reports because they were worked out successfully without the matters getting into court.

Mr. PRESTON. Let me ask you, too, if you can, to give the committee a rough comparison of the extent of the services performed by Mr. McCord as attorney, as one gathers them from looking through the records in the court and those which would not show up in the records.

A. Well, just to illustrate to you: We are attorneys for a number of those cannery companies now. Most of them retain us by the year. The Pacific-American Fisheries Co., one of those succeeding corporations—in one year they paid us a salary of $5,000 and they did not have a single litigated case either in the Federal or State court, and so far as that company's record is concerned it might not show that the attorneys did a very large amount of work, but we were called upon in a great many matters as counsel and made various trips to Bellingham—I suppose 15 or 20 during the year—in connection with their business. And so it was with this receivership; the reports of the receivers do not show the amount of time that the attorney put in.

Q. I am asking you to give an estimate, as well as you can, of the extent of the services performed.—A. Mr. Preston, if you were to ask me now how many days' time I put in for any of the numerous companies for whom we were attorneys last year, even if I could go to my books—because we do not keep our fee accounts out here in the West the way they do in the larger cities, where they make a note of every minute's time that has been put in, in consultation or otherwise—it is difficult for me to do so; but, for instance, in operating 15 or 20 canneries, in getting out the contracts, and in the winter we would simply send a memorandum down to the attorney of the payments and the amounts of the guaranties, etc., and direct the attorney to prepare a contract and give the name of the party, and he would have that work to do. There was a great deal of that work that took up a very considerable amount of his time.

Q. I should judge, from my examination of the files in the two cases, that Mr. McCord appeared in court perhaps a couple of hundred times.—A. I think he did. I think that he was before Judge Hanford that many times.

Q. My question is, was the work outside of the office, that does not show upon the papers, do you think, as much as that or less than that?—A. More than that, in my judgment.

Q. I am asking you for a comparative statement and not accurately.

Mr. McCoy. Take it in the litigated matters, how successful was Mr. McCord?

A. The only case that he was unsuccessful in—some of them partially successful only—was the Corby case, which you will find reported in 158 Federal Reporter. That case was lost, although the court work was done, of course, by a New York attorney, by Alexander & Green, in that litigation, although we took the testimony out here.

But in all those matters that we had before the court here I think the attorneys were entirely successful. There were some small allowances made in some insurance controversies we had; with that exception they were all successful. As I say, but for the work of resisting those demands to establish preferred claims we would have had very little to distribute.

Mr. Preston. I think you overlooked, perhaps, the patent cases; you were not successful in those.

A. Oh, yes; the patent cases. In the patent cases I think Mr. Dorr's company was pretty generous with us when they let us off at a thousand dollars. The Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. had been using, in 16 or 17 canneries, the alleged infringed machines and running from two to eight of them in each cannery; but at all events we got out of that after that long litigation at a minimum of expense.

Q. Now, Mr. Kerr, I would like to ask you this question——A. (Continuing.) They were asking, I think, something like $100,000 damages against us.

Q. (Continuing.) Whether or not the fact that you were receiver of those two companies and received thirty-five and seventeen thousand dollars as fees——A. (Interrupting.) $53,800 was the amount I received, and I think I earned it.

Q. (Continuing.) But whether or not that was a profit to you to do that, or whether it would have been more profitable to you if you had been practicing law as before and since?—A. My practice before that and since that has paid me a great deal more than that amount—more than an average of seventeen or eighteen thousand dollars. It has paid the last several years—it has paid practically twice that each year. I gave up my entire practice for the purpose of carrying on this receivership against my will.

Mr. PRESTON. I have no further questions.

Mr. MCCOY. The suggestion has been made about these records, to carry out the plans as adopted in regard to some of these other records, that it is possible to take them—to get an order of the court allowing them to go to Washington. They can be used for any purpose the whole committee sees fit and returned after that.

Mr. PRESTON. Oh, yes; but I think temporarily they ought to be returned to the clerk's office.

Mr. MCCOY. Oh, sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any witness we could proceed with now?

The committee will take a short recess at this time, and we may not be able to resume business for the want of material. During the recess we will ascertain whether we can do something more; if we can we will.

Short recess.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HUGHES. We have a witness here now; Mr. Griffiths.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Griffiths.

AUSTIN E. GRIFFITHS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Austin E. Griffiths.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. You are an attorney by profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have been how long?—A. Since the summer of 1887.

Q. Are you acquainted with a lawyer in Salem, Oreg., named L. H. McMahon?—A. I was several years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you wish to inquire of Mr. Griffiths concerning the lawsuit which Mr. McMahon testified about?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you can conduct it more satisfactorily than I can. You know the facts.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Griffiths, were you the attorney for the defendant in the case in the Federal court in which Mr. McMahon represented the plaintiff?—A. Yes; I was the attorney for both defendants in all that litigation.

Q. There were two defendants, were there? Explain to the committee, briefly, what transpired in those cases, not going into the nature of the controversy further than is necessary to explain what transpired as involving the conduct of Judge Hanford.—A. I don't know of anything that was——

Q. (Interrupting.) You might state what the action was.—A. I was going to say I don't know anything out of the way, anything exceptional, except in two matters Mr. McMahon was checked in his address to the juries. Those were the only two instances throughout the long litigation that in anywise were different from the ordinary lawsuit, and in that respect no different from a great many lawsuits where attorneys are interrupted during the course of their argument on account of going outside of the record, either by the judge or by opposing counsel.

The first case was nonsuited because it was brought against the wrong defendant. The second case, like the first, was to recover $25,000 damages for personal injury. On the argument of Mr. McMahon to the jury on the second case he was proceeding to tell the jury that employers and capitalists are utterly regardless of the life and limb of their employees and that, for illustration, the owners of the street railways in New York City got together after an ordinance or law was passed requiring fenders to be affixed to their cars and inquired of their lawyers what it would cost to ignore the laws and pay damages to persons injured by cars without fenders, and inquired of their managers what it would cost to equip their cars with fenders in obedience to the ordinance or law; and on being told that it would cost them less to ignore the law and pay damages, by their lawyers, than it would to equip their cars with fenders they said: "The people can go to hades," or words to that effect, "We will ignore the law and pay whatever damages we are compelled to pay." Just about that time Counsel McMahon was interrupted by the court, who said that this case ought to be tried and must be tried, at any rate, in his court, by the record made in this case and not by what men in New York said or did not say. Mr. McMahon apologized and went on with his argument to the jury. That was the only interruption whatever, that I know of, that occurred on that trial out of the usual run of lawsuits.

On a motion for retrial, after the presentation of a lot of affidavits and arguments, the motion was finally granted, something very, very seldom done by Judge Hanford, to grant a new trial; but the ground on getting a new trial was rather exceptional, and the verdict of $7,000 was therefore set aside. Mr. McMahon was assisted in that second trial by ex-Attorney General Stratton, of this city.

Q. Now of this city. He didn't live here at that time, did he?—A. In——

Q. (Interrupting.) At that time did he live in the city of Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. Yes; I think he did.—A. Yes; oh, yes. The firm was McBride, Dalton & Stratton. Stratton was personally in court. Do you want the grounds of the new trial?

Q. Well, not unless the committee desire it.

Mr. HUGHES (addressing the committee). Do you desire it?

Mr. DORR. If there is anything unusual.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Was there some complaint of the judge's action in that respect?—A. No; not that I know of.

Q. Why do you mention it?—A. I just was giving a succinct account of the litigation.

Q. I mean you said it was unusual, or something of that kind.—A. Well, I meant by that that during my experience of perhaps—before Judge Hanford in Tacoma and here—for 15 or 16 years, it is my recollection that new trials were very seldom got.

Q. You mention about the fact that the new trial was granted on affidavits. Was there anything peculiar in that circumstance?—A. No; we frequently get new trials—motions for new trials are supported by affidavits; but this was a peculiar thing about this motion: The defendant introduced in evidence a diagram of the machinery of the mill, its original location, to show that the plaintiff should not have been in that particular part, and so on. Well, in rebuttal the plaintiff's witnesses, several of them, said that we changed the location, and after the trial—and of course that was very serious testimony; you realize that, that that was tantamount to saying that the defendant was deliberately introducing in evidence a diagram to defend a case whereas a matter of fact that part of the mill—that piece of machinery—had been changed in its location and was located at the time of the accident at the place these witnesses said it was. Well, after the trial was over I got these several—two of these witnesses, at any rate—to go on the ground and examine the machinery and the bolting of it, and so forth, and they realized their mistake; and I got other witnesses, new witnesses who had been in the employment of that mill from the time that mill was built past the time of injury down until the time of the trial, who swore that there had never been any such change in location. So that the affidavits of those new witnesses, coupled with two affidavits of plaintiff's own witnesses, showing to the court that they were in error when they testified in rebuttal that we had changed the location of that defective machinery, led the judge to grant us a—I think that was the main reason that led the judge to grant us a new trial.

Q. Was it on any material point?—A. Oh, most assuredly yes; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How would the change of location be material? Wasn't it in the machine rather than in the location of the machine?

A. Yes; true. In the second trial they testified that this defective machinery or appliance was situated right in front of where the man was required to work as an offbearer by the live rolls, made it appear that it was necessary for him to be there and run the risk of contact with that defect—so with defective machinery; whereas our testimony and the model we introduced, and the diagram, showed that piece of defective machinery was 8 or 9 feet away from where he was supposed ordinarily to stand; and when we introduced that in evidence as a part of our case, in rebuttal these two witnesses said, "You changed it over 8 or 9 feet away" and put it right by where this man ordinarily stood to do his work. Well, when those men went back to the old mill and saw and examined the machinery on the ground, they were satisfied that they were in error, and with other witnesses it was clearly shown to be wrong testimony on their part.

Mr. MCCOY. You are mistaken, aren't you, in saying that they claimed that it was moved into the dangerous place? It was moved the other way, they claimed, wasn't it, or something of that kind?

A. No; no; no. In other words, if I am working out as offbearer on the live rolls here, and there is an imperfectly covered piece of machinery right in front of me, I am more liable to be injured in contact with that piece of machinery, because I have to work here right by it; but if that piece of defective machinery is back there 8 or 9 feet, or 6 or 7 feet, I am not supposed to be there at all, and there is less liability of my getting injured by contact with it, of course. If you are a juror, the testimony that I am required to work day in and day out opposite—right next to—this piece of alleged defective machinery would make a big difference upon your mind than if the testimony showed that it was 8 or 9 or 6 or 7 feet away, where I am not supposed to be at all. Well, these people said it was here, right by him. The real truth was it was over there, and we showed it to the court that they were mistaken. I think that was the special reason for the granting of a new trial.

On the second trial Mr. Stratton was also present and assisted, and on that second trial a Mr. Reynolds, of Tacoma, assisted me. During the argument of Mr. McMahon to the jury on this second trial, he again, in my opinion, went out of the record in addressing the jury, to inflame the jury against the defendant, and I checked him, and Judge Hanford sustained my exception to his traveling outside of the record. That was the only incident in that second trial out of the ordinary, but that is common to lawyers in the practice of cases.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. What was the demeanor of Mr. McMahon throughout these trials, aside from the two matters that you have mentioned?—A. Very—very much interested, of course, very energetic in behalf of his client; nothing out of the ordinary.

Q. What was the demeanor of Judge Hanford?—A. The same as in all cases in which I have observed Judge Hanford.

Q. Mr. McMahon has testified that Judge Hanford during that time was, in his opinion, asleep at times. Did you observe anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anything of that kind occur?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Well, engaged as you were in the trial of that case, could it very well have occurred without your knowing it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. McMahon has also testified that in his opinion Judge Hanford was at least slightly under the influence of liquor once or twice in the afternoon after lunch during that trial. Did you observe anything of that kind?—A. No, sir. The first intimation I have ever heard of that in connection with that trial.

Q. Have you, in connection with any other trial, respecting Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; not until this investigation arose. I never heard a lawyer in all my practice in this State that——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). I don't think Mr. Hughes has asked you that question, or a question requiring that answer. We have been avoiding reputation evidence.

Mr. HUGHES. You may state whether you have ever known Judge Hanford to be under the influence of liquor, either in or out of court.

A. No, sir.

Q. You may state whether you have ever known Judge Hanford, in being asleep or otherwise, to appear to neglect or to be inattentive to the business progressing before him when presiding over the court.—A. No, sir.

Q. What can you say to this committee respecting Judge Hanford's judicial ability and his judicial temperament?—A. I have always regarded the judge as fair-minded and absolutely fearless. I have observed the judge, both here and in Tacoma, in Tacoma before I finally moved to this city, for 15 or 16 or 17 or 18 years; I don't recall the exact number of years, and that has always been my judgment or opinion of the judge, although I may not agree with all his decisions. I have observed the judge in little cases and big cases, admiralty cases and law cases, equity and civil.

Q. Have you ever known of any instance where any discrimination was practiced by Judge Hanford, or shown by Judge Hanford, in favor of one class as against another, or in favor of important interests as against the weak, or in favor of the rich as against the poor?—A. Nothing of that sort whatever in any practice or observation of mine. I could give instances of my own practice, if it were necessary, indicating his interest in cases of small importance apparently and relating to mere individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? I guess that is all, Mr. Griffiths.

Witness excused.

An adjournment was here taken until 9.30 o'clock next Monday morning.

FIFTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1912—9.30 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order. Gen. Stratton, we will use you at once, as you wish to get away.

W. B. STRATTON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, please?

A. W. B. Stratton.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Stratton?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long has that been your home?—A. I have lived here about seven years and a half.

Q. You are an attorney at law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are in the practice of your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. L. H. McMahon, of Salem, Oreg.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall a case in which he and you were counsel for the plaintiff, which was tried at Tacoma, I think, before Judge Hanford——A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Some years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The case was heard more than once, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often did you participate in the hearing of it?—A. During the entire proceedings in each of the trials.

Q. There were three trials?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any recollection of any demeanor of the judge upon the bench during any of those trials that was out of the ordinary?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall at any time the judge apparently being in a state of drowsiness or sleep?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Do you recall anything unusual in his demeanor during that trial?—A. I don't.

Q. To what extent have you practiced law before Judge Hanford?—A. Well, I have been practicing in the State of Washington a little over 20 years, all the time in Judge Hanford's judicial district, and I have had the practice that an ordinary lawyer would have in the courts in his neighborhood. I have tried quite a number of cases before Judge Hanford.

Q. How long ago was the trial to which I have referred?—A. I think—the first trial of that case, I believe, was in 1906, or thereabouts, but I would not be positive about that date; but it was close to that, within a year, anyway.

Q. Have you at any time during your practice in Judge Hanford's court noticed any peculiarity in his demeanor while on the bench?—A. No. I have noticed occasionally during the trial of a long case that the judge would close his eyes, but I never at those times observed his inability to rule clearly if an objection were made at the time that his eyes were closed; he seemed to always know exactly what was going on.

Q. Have you ever observed the judge using intoxicating liquor?—A. I never have. I think I have seen him take a drink of liquor, but never more than one at one time. I have seen him take a drink of what I supposed to be liquor. I never have drank with him myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further, gentlemen?

Mr. DORR. I would like to ask him two or three questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Referring to the personal-injury case again, Mr. Stratton, do you have any recollection of any incident or incidents in the proceedings on either or both of those trials where Mr. McMahon was reprimanded by the court? If so, state fully what occurred.—A. Well, I would not say that Mr. McMahon was reprimanded during the trial of that case. While Mr. McMahon was arguing the case to the jury, on the second trial, he was discussing New York corporations. I don't know whether the judge of his own motion said to Mr. McMahon that they were not trying New York corporations and this case would necessarily have to be tried upon the evidence and record in this case; I am not sure whether Judge Hanford made that remark on his own motion or on the objection raised by the other side; I don't recall which that was.

Q. Well, was something of that kind said?—A. Yes; but I would not—I didn't consider that the judge's remarks were intended to be a reprimand.

Q. Did anything of that kind occur more than the one time?—A. In the first—in the second trial; that is all.

Q. Mr. McMahon has testified that Judge Hanford was in liquor while on the bench during that trial. What do you say as to that matter, Mr. Stratton?—A. There was not the slightest indication, to me, that the judge was in liquor. I would say that he was absolutely sober at all times.

Q. And was he attentive or otherwise to the trial as it proceeded?—A. I consider that he was very attentive; knew everything that was going on all the time; ruled clearly on all objections that were made.

Q. The statement is also made by Mr. McMahon that Judge Hanford was asleep at one time during one of those trials for a period approximating 15 minutes and he woke up with a loud snore, which was audible all over the court room. What do you say as to that statement?—A. I have no recollection of anything like that taking place in the court room while I was there, and I was there all the time.

Q. Mr. McMahon has further testified that Judge Hanford's rulings were intolerable——

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr—of course I say it for your account as well as my own—in quoting what some one has testified shouldn't you qualify it somewhat by "as you recall it," or something to that effect? I don't remember whether your language is exactly right or not. It may put you a bit wrong in the record to state it positively as his testimony.

Mr. DORR. Well, I will ask the question in this way, may it please the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is perfectly proper for you to say "As I recall it, Mr. McMahon testified so and so," but to state it as an absolute fact—you may be right, but I don't know.

Mr. DORR. Whether there was anything in Judge Hanford's attitude upon the bench during those trials, or either of them, that appeared to you to be arbitrary or intolerant in his rulings, demeanor toward the attorneys, or any of them?

A. No; my observation was that Judge Hanford was eminently fair to both sides.

Q. Do you remember the granting of a new trial?—A. Yes; I do.

Q. And do you know on what ground the new trial was granted?—A. Well, in the first trial a voluntary nonsuit was taken because the wrong party had been sued. In the second trial there was verdict, I think, of $7,000 in favor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's witnesses, most of them, were in the employ of the defendant during those trials. A motion for a new trial was made, supported by affidavits of some of the witnesses of the plaintiff and of other persons. My recollection is that the witnesses who had testified for the plaintiff in the first two trials as to the location of a piece of machinery, I think——

Q. (Interrupting.) The first trial, you mean?—A. First and second; both. A new trial was granted from the verdict in the second trial.

Q. Oh, yes.—A. Those witnesses had testified to the location of a certain piece of machinery, I think a set screw, and the different witnesses denied that the set screw was located at the place our witnesses said it was, and I think two or three of our witnesses made affidavit to the effect that in their testimony they had been mistaken as to the location of that piece of machinery and that since they had testified they had examined the machinery and were satisfied that they were mistaken, and stated that on a new trial they would testify that the machinery or set screw was located at a place other than they had testified to in the first two trials. My recollection is that——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Mr. Kerr, before leaving: In going over the stock book, or really the stock books, which you gave us we find the first one is not among them.

Mr. KERR. The first one?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. KERR. Well, I will state to the committee those are the stock books that they sent. The first one, I think, is a small certificate, and I thought they began with No. 1. I see no stock issued in that matter until, I think, in 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not quite sure, but we had the impression that there was one earlier than those you gave us.

Mr. KERR. I hardly think it.

The CHAIRMAN. And of course if there is we would like to have it too.

Mr. KERR. I will be glad to get it for you. I will state to the committee, while you call my attention to it, Saturday afternoon I went down to my office and I found certain copies of certain contracts with reference to the original organization of the company, and certain maps. Whatever I have I want to tender to the committee, so that they may look them over, and if there is anything they want to examine into they may do so.

If the committee will let me see the—what I thought was the first stock book, I will telegraph to Portland and ascertain.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you can probably tell by looking at the one we had——

Mr. KERR. I think I can.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Whether it is the first. It may be that there was some temporary record before that one.

Mr. KERR. I think, if the committee please, that this book that I hold in my hand, stock certificate No. 1, issued December 19, 1906, I think is the first stock that was issued.

Mr. HIGGINS. Notice certificate No. 2 in the book.

Mr. KERR. The journal?

Mr. HIGGINS. No, Mr. Kerr, the book that you have in your hand now—the certificate No. 2. From the issuance of that certificate it would appear that that certificate was issued in substitution of one that was formerly issued, if you will notice the mark on the stub.

Mr. KERR. Yes, I see; I see. I will find out.

Mr. HIGGINS. And the date which appears on the stub of that stock book does not correspond to the other records of the company.

Mr. KERR. All right; yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. In other words, there is a hiatus of several months.

Mr. KERR. I expect that this was what was done, although I will endeavor to find out. When we incorporated the company, under the laws of Washington all of the stock must be subscribed. My recollection, speaking offhand now, is that the original board of trustees was composed of some 10 or 12—I don't remember the exact number—each of whom had to have a certificate of stock to make them qualified, and, with the exception of Mr. Haines, subscribed for one share of the stock, and Mr. Haines subscribed for the balance of the capital stock.

Mr. HIGGINS. That all appears in the other books of the company.

Mr. KERR. What I am getting at is this: That we probably issued typewritten certificates for that original subscription, which were afterwards surrendered, and that these renewals were taken from the certificates, for example, issued to Mr. Haines. But I will endeavor to find out. If there is any other book, I will get it for the committee.

Mr. HIGGINS. If temporary certificates were issued, those would be preserved, and the natural order of things would be that they would be in the records of the company.

Mr. KERR. I understand; but we haven't had the custody of those since we turned them over to the American Light & Power Co. I will endeavor to get them.

The CHAIRMAN. One more question, Mr. Kerr: Is there any objection to the subcommittee taking those books, temporarily, with them, to submit to the full committee?

Mr. KERR. Temporarily?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and they will be sent back to you.

Mr. KERR. I will say this to you: I will get the consent of the American Power & Light Co. that you take these records with you. They do not belong to me.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is done, we will fix it so that you will have a letter in the nature of a receipt and promise of their return.

Mr. KERR. I will write to the manager in Portland to consent to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed now, gentlemen.

Last answer read.

A. (Continuing.) That those were the only grounds upon which the new trial was urged. I argued the motion for a new trial, Mr. McMahon not being present. The court granted the new trial, saying that in his opinion the location of that machinery was a material part of the testimony in the case.

Mr. MCCOY. You thought differently, did you, Gen. Stratton?

A. I argued differently. I would not say that I thought differently. I thought there was—there were—good grounds for my taking the position that it was immaterial where that set screw, or even the machinery, was located, because the man was injured on that machinery unquestionably, but it was a debatable question in my mind all the time. I did not feel that I had been mistreated when the new trial was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, did the location of the set screw—that is, the location upon the machinery in which the set screw was—shed any light upon the question of contributory negligence?

A. Why, I think probably it did. It has been a long time since that case was tried and I never have attempted to refresh my recollection, but McMahon claimed that his duties required him to work close to that set screw, where the screw protruded, and my recollection is that our witnesses fixed the location of that set screw closer to McMahon than the testimony of the defendants' witnesses did.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the plaintiff McMahon?

A. I mean McLean. McLean was the plaintiff.

There is one question that I don't think I answered fully. In the third trial of the case Judge Reynolds, of Tacoma, was with Mr. Griffiths in defending the suit, and during the argument of the case Mr. McMahon made some reference to insurance attorneys defending the suit. I think Mr. Griffiths made an objection to that remark on the ground that under our State supreme court decision the case must be taken away from the jury because it was an improper remark, and the argument was stopped for a little while; and then Mr. McMahon, after consultation with me, admitted to the jury that the defendant in this case was not insured and that he had no intention of biasing the jury by his remarks, having it inferred that an insurance company was defending the action. Judge Hanford stated that in view—before Mr. McMahon had made the remark—said that in view of McMahon's statement about the insurance attorneys he didn't know whether the case could go to the jury or not, and then Mr. McMahon made the statement that he did not intend to prejudice the jury. After Mr. McMahon and I went into the judge's chambers during a recess with Mr. Griffiths and Mr. McMahon then stated to Judge Hanford that the remark was inadvertent and should not have been made and we did not want another mistrial of the case. We wanted to do whatever was necessary, if it could be done, to cure the slip of the tongue that Mr. McMahon had made with reference to the insurance matters, and I——

Mr. DORR (interrupting). And then his statement was made to the jury as you have stated?

A. Yes.

Q. And the court permitted the case to go to the jury?—A. Yes; yes. I think in the instructions no reference was made to Mr. McMahon's statement before the jury with reference to the insurance attorney.

Q. And a verdict was returned for the plaintiff?—A. For the plaintiff, and afterwards paid by the defendant without an appeal. I think a slight reduction was made in the amount, or a remission of costs, or something of that kind; but substantially the whole judgment was paid.

Mr. DORR. That is all I care to ask.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you some other witness present?

Mr. DORR. Judge Graves.

CARROLL B. GRAVES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, please.

A. Carroll B. Graves.

Q. You live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. Have you been on the bench?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what bench?—A. The superior court of this State.

Q. When was that?—A. For the eight years following 1889.

Q. What is your present professional connection?—A. The firm of Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with the witness, gentlemen.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Graves, have you had considerable practice before the Federal courts in this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a large part of that before Judge Hanford?—A. The greater part of it.

Q. Will you tell this committee what has been the general conduct and demeanor of Judge Hanford in the dispatch of judicial business before him?—A. I have always regarded Judge Hanford as being a most excellent judge. His characteristics which peculiarly appealed to me were his ready grasp of all the salient points of the case, the retentiveness of his memory touching the evidence given during the trial of a cause, and the fact that he disregarded both the personality of attorneys and litigants and the causes, and seemed to at all times attempt to decide the cases upon principles of law involved.

Q. Have you ever observed anything to indicate that he was arbitrary or biased in his rulings or in his treatment of parties, witnesses, or counsel?—A. No, sir; nothing more than the peculiarities that attach to any man who is in a position of that character and kind.

Q. Testimony has been offered to the effect that he closed his eyes, nodded his head, and witnesses have testified to his sleeping upon the bench. Tell the committee what have been your observations before Judge Hanford in these particulars.—A. I have noticed those peculiarities after the lunch hour during the trial of a case where we were taking testimony before a jury, but in no instance that ever came under my knowledge or notice was there anything in his actions or manner that took him away from the trial of a case.

Q. By that you mean nothing that indicated that he did not attend closely to all that proceeded in the trial. Is that correct?—A. That is what I mean. Even if his eyes were closed, if any point was raised as to what the witness had testified to, or what the objection was, he recalled it and ruled upon it understandingly.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was in any measure under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I never did.

Q. Do you know one L. Frank Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has testified that he was once a member of a firm of which you were a member. When was that and for how long a time?—A. That was in the year 1905. The exact length of time that he was in the firm I don't recall. Something approximating a year or a year and a half.

Q. Was that when you first located in this city?—A. When I first came to the city of Seattle.

Q. What was the firm name at that time?—A. Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy.

Q. And when he went out of the firm what was the firm name?—A. Graves, Palmer & Murphy.

Q. In other words, he was the member who went out of the firm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time he was a member of that firm did he ever mention in the firm, to you or in the office in any way, having seen Judge Hanford upon the bench under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. To what extent have you associated with Judge Hanford, Judge, apart from your practicing before him?—A. Before I removed to Seattle in 1905 I had seen Judge Hanford—been in his court, dropped in casually, and I would meet him perhaps once a year at the State Bar Association and other occasions of that character.

Q. Are you a member of any social organization of which he is a member?—A. Yes; I believe, if I am correctly informed he is a member of the Rainier Club. I am also a member of that club, but I have not been in the clubroom for six years.

Q. To what extent have you seen the judge in the city after business hours, after half past 7?—A. After 7?

Q. At night?—A. I don't recall of having seen him except in business connected with his office. I have frequently seen him at his chambers and seen him at the court room finishing cases, charging the jury and receiving verdicts of juries.

Q. Well, those are the only opportunities you have had to observe him?—A. It was largely in connection with the discharge of the duties of his office that I have met him.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there some one else ready?

RICHARD STEVENS ESKRIDGE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Richard Stevens Eskridge.

Q. Spell the last name.—A. E-s-k-r-i-d-g-e.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Eskridge?—A. In Seattle.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How long have you been practicing?—A. Since 1896.

Q. What is your firm connection?—A. I have none.

Q. You are alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the nature of your practice—general?—A. Just a general practice, yes. The last few years I have devoted the most of my time to business rather than law.

Q. Outside business?—A. Yes. I have not given up my whole practice at all, but I mean I am not so extensively engaged as I was before.

Q. You still maintain an office?—A. Yes, sir; I have a law office—a suite of rooms—in the city.

Q. You know Judge Hanford, of course?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent have you practiced in his court?—A. Very little.

Q. What opportunity have you had for noticing the judge?—A. Do you mean in court or out of court?

Q. In court and out of court, too?—A. Well, I live on the same car line that the judge does and our families have been well acquainted for a great many years.

Q. How long have you lived in his neighborhood?—A. About three years, a little over three years.

Q. To what extent have you observed the judge in the evenings or in the nighttime coming and going from his home?—A. Well, usually I get down in the morning rather early for the judge, but I often go home at night on the same car. My family——

Q. (Interrupting.) At what hour or about what hour?—A. About between 12 and 1.

Q. In the morning you mean?—A. Yes, sir. I will state that my family not being very well often go to California, and during that time I have worked late nights myself; I have remained down town.

Q. How frequently have you seen the judge going home at those hours?—A. Twenty or thirty times.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him drink occasionally.

Q. Where?—A. At the Rainier Club.

Q. Are you a member of the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you seen him drink mostly?—A. I think he calls for beer with a supper after work at night, with the possible exception of a cocktail.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink elsewhere than at the club?—A. I don't think I ever have.

Q. When on the street car, what was the judge's apparent condition——A. Well——

Q. (Continuing.) Especially with reference to sleeping?—A. The judge is quite a hand for napping on the street cars. After working—which, I suppose, the committee have had sufficient testimony on—late at night he would come down to the Rainier Club often and sit there—the club furnishes a supper for all members—take a supper and sometimes a glass of beer with it, and then he would go to the car, wait until the last car. He would come in the club somewhere after midnight and take the last car home, about 1, and he would sit inside of the car and very soon nod, and off and on during the way would nod. I remember the first time when my family went to California I went out in the last car and the judge was sitting there apparently asleep, and we got out to—a block ahead of his house; that is, this side of his house, and I spoke to the conductor and said, "That gentleman gets off at Galer," and the conductor said, "Oh, he's a wonder," he said. "I never have to speak to him; all I do is call off the street and," he says, "he will be apparently sound asleep and he will get right up and get off the car." The idiosyncrasies of the judge's nature, you might say, or the habit of taking a nap to catch up with the tremendous amount of work he does, might lead, of course, anyone under the circumstances I just narrated to think that the judge was intoxicated; that is, supposing somebody who could detect the odor of liquor from any other odor should get on the car and sit near the judge after working and going and having a supper and a glass of beer at the Rainier Club, and see him nodding on the car, or asleep, that person might easily come to the conclusion that the judge was in a condition of intoxication, whereas those of us who know him would know that that was not the case. I remember when I first went into the judge's court I was very much impressed with the fact that he sat with his eyes closed and rather apparently was not paying attention; but I remember one case—I think Mr. Hughes was in the case, too—Judge E. M. Carr was making an address to the court and Judge Hanford was sitting with his eyes closed and Mr. Carr stopped in the middle of a sentence, looked around the court room, and stopped about three minutes, and Judge Hanford told him to sit down, that he would hear from the other side And Mr Carr said that he had not finished his remarks, and the judge told him that he had waited several minutes for him to collect his thoughts and he could not wait any longer; showing that he was very attentive to the matter in question. He appointed me one time——

Q. (Interrupting) That is the inference you drew from the incident?—A. That is the first time I had ever seen Judge Hanford on the bench, and the inference I drew then was that he was not asleep and not inattentive.

Q. On the street car it is your opinion that he was asleep and that the conductor's call awakened him?—A. No; I can't say that my opinion was that the judge was asleep.

Q. Wouldn't that be a fair inference to draw from your testimony awhile ago?—A. Yes, sir; but from other facts, that having talked to the judge on the street car and looking around and apparently seeing him asleep and then having the judge afterwards take up the subject where I left it and continue with it, I am not sure whether he was asleep or whether it is a habit he has of closing his eyes and nodding his head—sort of a rest.

Q. Do you state that on the occasions you speak of the judge took no more than one glass of beer at the club?—A. No; I will not state that. I think the usual rule they furnish a small bottle of beer, probably a glass and a half, serve that up in bottles.

Q. But members of the club take as much more as they want?—A. Oh, yes; a member of the club could have as much more as he wanted, up to his good behavior, of course, in the clubroom.

Q. And so long as he did not raise any disturbance——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) None of the servants of the club would dare refuse him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You stated that the judge's family and yours have been and are very friendly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are the members of the respective families among whom this friendship exists?—A. Well, I think that all members of both families are decidedly what you might call friendly. It is not an intimate relationship, but it is a friendship that is sort of cemented by the fact of my family having been intimately connected with the history of the State and Judge Hanford having always taken such a prominent part in all public affairs connected with the history of the State.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drinking anywhere excepting at the club?—A. I don't think I have. When I was called on the telephone I tried to think whether I had ever seen the judge take a drink anywhere else. I think, maybe, I saw him take a drink one time at dinner in Tacoma when we had dinner together, and it was at the dinner table, and I don't remember whether he took one or not.

Q. To the best of your recollection that would be the extent of it, if that happened?—A. Yes; that is, while in my presence at least, he never took—never was in a condition that would attract my attention to the fact that he did take a drink; that is, led me to believe that he took more than enough.

Q. Well, you have no recollection of seeing him drink anywhere except at the club and possibly once at Tacoma at dinner?—A. That is all to my recollection, Mr. Graham.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. What constitutes Judge Hanford's family now?—A. Judge Hanford has two daughters; his son, Mr. Edward Hanford, who has been here, and the other son, who just returned from Cornell—William Hanford.

Q. What are the names of his two sons?—A. Edward and William.

Q. Edward is his full name?—A. I don't know what his middle name is. I think Edward is his full name.

Mr. HUGHES. Edward C.

A. Edward C., maybe.

Q. In going from the Federal building or from the Rainier Club to Judge Hanford's home, how much time is consumed ordinarily in the street car?—A. About 25 minutes—24 minutes on the car—20 to 24, according to how many stops it has to make.

Q. What is the direction from the Federal building?—A. From the present Federal building?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, you go down to Second Avenue, which is one block, to take the car, or you go over to Pike Street and take the car.

Q. Referring to Second Avenue, what street do you go on?—A. Well, the cars now go up to Pine Street and then east on Pine, running on Pine to Broadway; then they go out Broadway to where Broadway diagonals into Tenth Avenue North.

Q. I have noticed——A. That is north.

Q. I have noticed, in the very limited opportunity I have had to observe this city, that there are exceedingly high grades?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And over these grades cable cars are run?—A. Yes, sir; on some of them.

Q. Now, is that a line, or does the line to Judge Hanford's home go over such grades?—A. No; the line goes up Pine Street and the steepest grade is about 3 per cent, I should say, less than the steepest grade on Madison.

Q. Are the grades steep enough so that a cable is necessary to pull cars?—A. No, sir. No; there is no cable out there. You could go home by cable by getting on at Madison and changing at Broadway and changing again out at the high school, at Broadway and Pine, but that would not be direct.

Q. The ordinary, then, and the most direct way to go from the present Federal building and the Rainier Club to your home or to Judge Hanford's home would not involve riding on a car that had a cable?—A. Well, from the Federal building the most direct way would be on the Broadway car, not going at all to Madison.

Q. I want more particularly about the cable.—A. Well, if you went from the Rainier Club the cable is one block this side of the Rainier Club, and a person could take the cable, as I say, and go to Broadway and then transfer and wait for the Madrona.

Q. They could do it. Would they, if they wanted to go home the most direct way on the street car?—A. Well, they would not if they wanted to go home the quickest way. This other way, if you made connections, would probably be a little shorter, but that is not the way that is usually taken to go out in that part of town on account of two transfers.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask a question or two.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. You frequently visit in Judge Hanford's home?—A. Quite often; yes.

Q. Speaking of your family connections, your grandfather, Gov. Stevens, and Judge Hanford were personal friends, were they not?—A. Well, Judge Hanford, I think, was pretty young for him. You see, my grandfather left here and was killed in the war, and I don't think that Judge Hanford was much more than just about started at that time.

Q. But the family has all——A. (Interrupting.) Oh, yes; since that time, you know, our family has been out here.

Q. Have you at times when you were riding home with Judge Hanford, when you observed him closing his eyes and nodding his head, entered into conversation with him?—A. Oh, yes. I never let that stop conversation with him, because I have been with him so much on the car that I am convinced now that he hears what you say to him when he is nodding his head and apparently asleep.

Q. At those times can you say to the committee of your own knowledge that he was not intoxicated, from the conversation between you?—A. Oh, I know positively that he never has been intoxicated when he has been in my company; never. I know it because we have had so much to talk over together that I would have observed it immediately.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

C. K. POE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name.

A. C. K. Poe.

Q. P-o-w-e?—A. P-o-e.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Poe?—A. I live at 1144 Federal Avenue, Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. I came here on the 30th day of June, 1907.

Q. What is your business?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of those years?—A. Here; yes, sir.

Q. Are you alone or associated with——A. (Interrupting.) Associated with H. R. Clise.

Q. What is the nature of your firm?—A. Well, general practice of law. We take everything that we get, nearly.

Q. To what extent have you been engaged in the Federal court?—A. Well, not at all; only Mr. Clise has attended to most of it. I have been associated with him in a very important case—the Washington Securities Co. The Government brought suit against the Washington Securities Co. to cancel some land patents. There was perhaps $250,000 involved, and Judge Hanford decided against us. We appealed that case to the circuit court of appeals, and it is going to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you participate in the trial?—A. I did not. It was tried by Mr. Charles P. Spooner and we were taken in as associate counsel after.

Q. So that you have not practiced or been very much in the judge's court, have you?—A. I have been up here more or less; yes.

Q. Just present and observed him?—A. Well, I have been associated with Mr. Clise here at different times, but my practice has not been extensive in this court; no, sir.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with the judge otherwise than while he was on the bench?—A. Oh, yes; I know Judge Hanford. And I used to be with Justice Holmes in Washington. I was with him a great many years, practically lived with him; and when I came out here he gave me a letter of introduction to Judge Hanford; and he didn't know Judge Hanford, but sent me to the Federal judge out here. That I presented and saw Judge Hanford, and he has known my family a considerable time.

Q. Well, where did you see the judge otherwise than in court?—A. Well, I have seen the judge at his house and seen him on the street cars going home from time, and if—there was one particular instance, if you will permit me to tell exactly what happened. I was coming down on the street car with Mrs. Poe one night and Judge Hanford started to speak to her and they conversed for some considerable time, and then all of a sudden Judge Hanford stopped talking to her, and after a moment I said, "It is very queer the way the judge has stopped, is it not?" Mrs. Poe says, "No; I have known him all my life; that is one of his peculiarities."

Q. What did you say about the judge?—A. The judge was talking to Mrs. Poe. I was just as near to him as I am to the stenographer here. We were standing on the back platform. Mrs. Poe didn't feel very well that day and she wanted the air. We were standing on the back platform, so was Judge Hanford. We were coming down town about 8 o'clock. And he started to talk to her, and suddenly he just stopped and I says, "It is sort of queer that the judge stopped that way." She said, "No; that is one of his peculiarities. I have known him for a long time——"

Q. (Interrupting.) You said something to her that elicited that answer from her?—A. I did; yes.

Q. What did you say?—A. I simply said, "Isn't it peculiar that the judge stopped?" And I understand that there has been some question here that people have said they have seen Judge Hanford on the street car and from his manner they judged that he was under the influence of liquor; and I would swear on my oath that he was as sober—well, as I am at this present moment and that if he had had any liquor on him I could have smelled it.

Q. Well, do you mean to have the committee understand you as saying that the judge, in your opinion, went to sleep standing on his feet?—A. He did not. I didn't say that he went to sleep. I said that Judge Hanford just suddenly stopped talking. He was evidently preoccupied, thinking of something. They were merely chatting on the back platform, and that was one of the instances that impressed me very much and led me to believe how some of these people could have testified the way that they did.

Q. How long did he continue in that condition?—A. Well, I would not call it "condition." He was talking there and he stopped for a few moments, and before we got off the car—he got off the car at Third Avenue—Fourth Avenue, evidently coming to the Federal Building, and he said "Good night" to us very pleasantly, and left us.

Q. How would you designate it if you would not call it a "condition"?—A. Well, I simply think that he was thinking of something else; that is all.

Q. But how would you designate it, what would you call it—stopped suddenly conversing and apparently forgot that he had been conversing or that there was anyone near him expecting him to continue the conversation—how would you designate the thing that he did there?—A. I should designate it that he had merely stopped talking and that was all, unless I would call it a condition of silence.

Q. Well, is that habitual with the judge?—A. Why, yes; I have noticed that very often in talking to Judge Handford that he seems to be a man that is preoccupied; he will go along and talk about certain things and then he—he is not a great talker; that is all.

Q. And what he did or did not at that time attracted your notice and caused you and your wife right there in his presence to converse about him?—A. Merely that she made that remark, that she had known him for years and he always had been that way.

Q. And she was quite close to him at the time and had been conversing with him?—A. No; she was not. Judge Hanford was leaning against the forward end of the car, I was standing right next to him, and Mrs. Poe was in the back platform.

Q. She was near enough to talk with him?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And had been talking with him?—A. Yes; when he got on——

Q. (Interrupting.) And his demeanor—call it what you please, conduct, condition, demeanor, whatever it was—was such as to cause you and her to talk about it?—A. Didn't——

Q. (Continuing.) Right there in his presence?—A. Didn't cause her to talk. I said, "Isn't it funny that the judge stopped?" And Mrs. Poe said "No," that "he has been that way all his life, and I have known him ever since I have been here."

Q. That sounds to me like her talking about him.—A. Well, I am merely telling you exactly what she said; I want to be perfectly fair with the committee and explain why that impressed me at the time, is all.

Q. Yes. Well, have you seen any other peculiarities in the judge at other times?—A. No; I have never seen any peculiarities.

Q. Would you call that a peculiarity or not?—A. Well, really, I have seen so many men that are that way; that when they are detained and they chat for a while, and then they stop and begin to think about more serious things, I should call it. I know that——

Q. (Interrupting.) You would not call it peculiar?—A. Well, I know this: I have known Justice Holmes very intimately, and in my experience with him I have seen him a great many times do the same thing.

Q. What was your relation with him?—A. Well, I practically lived with him when I was there. I hear from him all the time out here.

Q. You were of the family?—A. No, I am not; no relation whatever.

Q. You say you practically lived with him. What do you mean?—A. Well, I was at his house to meals all the time. When I went east a few—last March—he asked me to visit him and I used to take a great many meals with him; nearly every Sunday he, Mrs. Holmes, and myself dined at the Willard.

Q. Well, I want to know what you meant when you said you practically lived with him?—A. Well, I was there in his house some nights; very often all day long.

Q. Well, waiving Judge Holmes and others, do you say that the conduct that you described in Judge Hanford is not a peculiarity?—A. Well, I would call it a peculiarity in a way; yes.

Q. I understood you to say that you knew so many people who had it that you would say it was not a peculiarity, and you left that inference to my mind. Was that inference justified from what you said?—A. No.

Q. Well, now, I ask you again: Did you notice any other peculiarities or any similar conduct, condition, or state in Judge Hanford?—A. Well, Judge Hanford has always struck me as a man that lives with his thoughts a great deal more than a man that is dealing in the lighter things of life that is chatty, and that sort of thing.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge drink?—A. Never.

Q. Have you never smelled liquor——A. (Interrupting.) Never.

Q. (Continuing.) Or the odor of liquor upon him?—A. Never.

Q. So far as your personal knowledge extends, he may not drink any at all?—A. That is as far as I know; yes.

Q. Has your firm had any other business than the case you have mentioned in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Had a great deal. Yes, there are several admiralty cases now that are pending, involving quite a little money, in the court at the present time.

Q. Do you make any specialty of admiralty cases?—A. Well, Mr. Clise has been associated, at least has been general counsel for the Globe Navigation Co. here for a great many years and he has all that business.

Q. What is their line of business?—A. Well, they have several freighters there now. They used to have several large steamships—the Eureka and the Tampeco. They have since been sold. They now have some schooners. They used to run from here to Alaska and then on the coastwise trade along the Pacific coast.

Q. Any other of those clients——A. Well, no; no other steady clients.

Q. Well, any clients, steady or otherwise——A. Well, Mr. Denman, from California—he is an admiralty lawyer there—sent up a case about a month and a half ago; that is now pending.

Q. What was the concern that was interested in that case?—A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Who was the client interested in the business sent you from California?—A. Well, that I don't know; Mr. Clise had attended to the case exclusively for us. The name of the vessel—is a French vessel. I have really taken nothing up in it at all; I haven't attended to it.

Q. Well, has the firm any other admiralty business of considerable importance than those cases?—A. No, no.

Q. Have you any other clients who have business in the judge's court——A. (Interrupting.) Well, only that Federal cases are apt to come up at all times. We are counsel for the gas company here, and there was some suits stated with regard to their franchise, tax cases; that was some years ago; they have been dismissed and settled. You can't tell when the gas company will be in the Federal court or any other court.

Q. Is the gas company a Washington or foreign corporation?—A. It is a Washington corporation.

Q. Where do the stockholders live?—A. They are all over the country. Mr. Rufus C. Dawes, of Chicago, is one of the stockholders.

Q. Its litigation is mostly in the Federal court?—A. No; in the State court as a rule.

Q. Has it the right to remove cases?—A. Well, not to the Federal court here, because it is a Washington corporation; it is a local corporation.

Q. How many suits have been brought by the stockholders, for instance, in the Federal court——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. Have you any other large corporation clients?—A. Well, we are counsel for the Washington Trust & Savings Bank here, which i an affiliated concern with the Dexter Horton National Bank.

Q. With what bank?—A. The Dexter Horton National.

Q. Where is it located?—A. It is located in the New York Block, on the corner of Second Avenue and Cherry.

Q. It is a home corporation too, is it?—A. Yes. It is a national bank.

Q. It has——

Mr. HUGHES. The Trust & Savings Bank——

A. And the Trust & Savings Bank is a local bank; yes.

Mr. HUGHES. A local corporation?

A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And is it a branch of the national bank, or how is it affiliated with it?

A. Well, the two concerns are unified—is the word we used. There really can be no association, except they are under the same roof; their offices are the same.

Q. Have you had any litigation in Judge Hanford's court for the bank?—A. None.

Q. Your firm are the attorneys for the bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you other clients of that character?—A. Well, we represented H. O. Shuey & Co., bankers here.

Q. How is the bank organized?—A. Well, that is just merely a local bank, private bank.

Q. A private bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Your partner is engaged more in Judge Hanford's court than you are?—A. Far more.

Q. He attends to most of the business in that court?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask one or two questions.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Speaking of this first occasion that you mention, riding down town about 8 o'clock one evening, standing on the platform of the car, that was early in your acquaintance with Judge Hanford, was it?—A. Yes.

Q. And you made the observation to your wife because you were not then familiar with Judge Hanford's ways?—A. That was exactly the idea I was trying to bring out, Mr. Hughes.

Q. I think that you have left the committee in some confusion, perhaps, in your explanation. Was your question addressed to your wife one that would be audible to Judge Hanford?—A. Oh, absolutely; yes.

Q. How?—A. Oh, no; absolutely not. I said to her—I simply said, "Isn't it odd the way that Judge Hanford stopped talking there?"

Q. But naturally this committee would infer that that question, being addressed to your wife, so far as any explanation you have made before them is concerned, right in the presence of Judge Hanford, would be as audible to Judge Hanford as to your wife. What I want to know is what were the facts in regard to that. Was your question put to your wife there on the street car or after Judge Hanford left?—A. Oh, it was right on the street car; but there was a crowd of people got in, Mr. Hughes. It was right at Broadway. They separated—

we were separate and standing; she was at the back and Judge Hanford was leaning up against the forward side of the back platform. Mrs. Poe was at the back. We were talking there. Nobody was in between us when Judge Hanford stopped talking. Of course, I said nothing then. We went on chatting. When they stopped at Broadway to take on some people, Mrs. Poe and I were separated from Judge Hanford, and I simply mentioned it that way. And knowing Judge Hanford, as I have since seen him, I know exactly how it occurred.

Q. Then you asked that question of your wife some little time later and after other people had intervened?—A. Oh, absolutely.

Q. And in a tone of voice which would not be audible to Judge Hanford?—A. Absolutely.

Q. And her answer was likewise given in the same way?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you ever observed Judge Hanford, when in a crowded car, get off and walk?—A. Yes.

Q. Before he would reach home?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever noticed him when riding in a car close his eyes and nod?—A. A hundred times. I would not say a hundred, Mr. Hughes, but I will say a great many times. I live up the same way.

Q. Have you ever sat down and talked with him or spoken to him during the ride?—A. Yes.

Q. On such occasions as that?—A. Yes.

Q. When you conversed with him after having seen him nod, would he show any signs of any effect of intoxicating liquors by his manner?—A. Never at all.

Q. Or conduct?—A. Never. The judge always struck me as a man that talked when he felt like it and didn't when he didn't, and that was exactly the idea I wanted to bring out.

Q. Whenever you have talked with him he showed an instant appreciation and clearness of observation?—A. Perfectly.

Q. In conversation?—A. Perfectly.

Witness excused.

Livingston B. Stedman, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The Chairman. State your name to the committee, please.

A. Livingston B. Stedman.

Q. Will you spell the last name?—A. S-t-e-d-m-a-n.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside in Seattle, sir; although for the last year I have been over in my country home across the bay.

Q. How long has Seattle been your home city?—A. I arrived in Seattle the first week in August, 1890.

Q. What has been your business or profession?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. Practicing your profession?—A. Ever since I have been here. I was not admitted until September after I arrived. I came here immediately from the Harvard Law School.

Q. Are you alone in your practice or are you associated with some one?—A. Associated with H. H. A. Hastings. We have been associated since October, 1893, I think.

Q. What is the general line of your practice?—A. General practice, sir.

Q. To what extent have you business in Judge Hanford's court?—A. I think there has been seldom any time that we haven't had one or more suits pending here. When I first came to Seattle I was associated with the late Col. J. C. Haines, and his business was largely in the Federal court at that time.

Q. What is the nature of the business you have in that court?—A. Well, we have had some insurance cases that were removed to his court from the State court, pending for three or four years and finally disposed of last summer or fall, and we have had admiralty cases and general cases—damage suit cases and bankruptcy cases.

Q. In the admiralty cases whom did you generally represent—in other words, had you any navigation companies as your clients?—A. Not what you might call regular navigation companies. At one time I personally tried a number of suits for the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Co., suits in admiralty, although I am not their regular counsel; they were sent to me by Mr. Cotton from Portland, and the Port Blakeley Transportation Co. has a few scows on the Sound and a couple of tugboats, and we represented them, but we had no litigation for them in the Federal court.

Q. What other transportation companies that have litigation in his court did you or do you represent?—A. Well, more, I think, individuals than corporations.

Q. What kind of cases, Mr. Stedman?—A. Well, actions to quiet title; we have pending here now——

Q. Real estate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the nature of the real estate; what is the question involved?—A. It is really not an action to quiet title; it is rather an action for specific performance; it was removed from the State court to this court.

Q. By whom?—A. It was removed by Mr. Bronson—by Mr. Taylor; Mr. Bronson was attorney for H. C. Taylor.

Q. Is he the opposing counsel?—A. He is.

Q. What is the question involved in the litigation?—A. Well, it is an action for specific performance; the question involved is whether the defendant shall be forced to convey to our client this land in controversy.

Q. Seattle real estate?—A. Seattle real estate.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I have known Judge Hanford ever since I have been in the State.

Q. Have you any social or other relations with him than purely professional relations?—A. I have been at his house. I have met him at the University Club; he does not often frequent the club now, but when it was first organized, about 10 years ago, he would be there occasionally; and I know his son, Mr. Edward C. Hanford; and Miss Ada Hanford I have known for years, and she knows Mrs. Stedman, and she has been at our house.

Q. Your folks visit backward and forward?—A. Yes. The intimacy is more between Mrs. Stedman and Miss Hanford, really, than it is between me and the judge.

Q. You are not, I assume, a member of the Rainier Club?—A. I am not now. I was some years ago.

Q. Well, apart from those social or public occasions which you have referred to, to what extent have you been in the company of Judge Hanford?—A. I have seen him as you would meet men every day in business or at the court. I suppose I have seen him hundreds of times in his court room, and I have seen him at chambers. Some 18 years ago I had occasion to go to Spokane, I remember, to get a restraining order from him. He was holding the court there, and I was with him continually in the evening and the following day until I left Spokane to come back. I have been on excursions with him—I ought not to say with him, but on the same train, and we spent the day together at Snoqualmie some years ago. The last few years it has been pretty hard to find Judge Hanford at many social gatherings on account of his duties.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was affected by or under the influence of any intoxicating liquor?—A. I never have, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink?—A. I have no distinct recollection of that; I may have seen him take a drink at the University Club, but I do not remember ever having seen him drink.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with Mr. Stedman?

Mr. HUGHES. You have observed, Mr. Stedman, the habit of Judge Hanford of closing his eyes and nodding his head in the court room or elsewhere, have you?

A. I have, and frequently it has been amusing to myself and the older practitioners at the bar to see the younger practitioners embarrassed by his grasp of the situation when they have thought that he was inattentive.

Q. Have you ever seen him on any such occasion when he didn't rule promptly upon motions and also clearly, showing a complete grasp of all that had transpired, either motions or objections or on the close of an argument?—A. I never have.

Q. You have tried a great many cases in his court, have you not?—A. Cases and motions.

Q. A great many matters?—A. A great many matters before him.

Q. For more than 20 years?—A. For more than 20 years. When I was with Col. Haines, I was young in the practice and was sent very frequently on preliminary matters into court and, as I say, his practice was largely in the Federal court. He represented—he was general counsel for the Oregon Improvement Co. at that time, an Oregon corporation that had most of its practice in the Federal court.

Q. Ever since that time the firms with which you have been associated have always had some business pending in the Federal court which brought you into that court?—A. I do not remember a time when we did not have cases pending before Judge Hanford.

Q. Have you ever observed any incidents occurring in Judge Hanford's court when he appeared to you to have lost any part of the proceedings transpiring in his court before him?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen him when he exhibited an arbitrary or biased attitude toward the parties or counsel?—A. I never have. I have seen him sometimes when attorneys were going too far in cross-examination and harassing the witnesses stop them rather abruptly.

Q. Rather peremptorily?—A. Yes; or when they tried to improperly influence the jury in introducing testimony that ought not to be introduced, or any side play before the jury, I have seen him—I do not remember the instances now, but I have seen him reprove counsel. But it always seemed justified and merited when I have seen it.

Q. Did you ever enter into conversation with him after noticing him, out of court, sitting with his eyes closed and head drooped, to find out whether his mind was alert and active and clear when you entered into conversation with him?—A. Well, I never did it for that purpose, Mr. Hughes, but I have known of that habit of his and I have often conversed with him. Of course, I have known that while he might appear inattentive, yet it is merely appearances. Now, the occasion which I spoke of when I was at Spokane with Judge Hanford, I was young in the practice then and I never had been in Spokane before, and after I obtained the order I missed my train back to Seattle, and all that evening I was with Judge Hanford and with Judge Hermon and with Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, of Spokane, and we were playing cards the whole evening, and the next morning the judge had very little business in court—just the sentencing of of some Indians—and he said if I had nothing else to do that he would take me around Spokane, and we took street-car rides about the city, and nobody could have been kinder or more attentive to me than he was on that occasion, and yet a week afterwards I passed him right on the street and he was engrossed and apparently did not see me.

Q. He did not speak to you?—A. He did not speak to me, and now when I pass him on the street if I speak he will immediately respond, but frequently, unless I take the pains to speak to him, he will not notice me, although I have known him all these years.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. HUGHES. A young man by the name of Paul testified that he was in your office, he testified in these proceedings—and also that he was an employee in your office, and he testified to certain instances that he had observed in Judge Hanford's court when attending here to motions representing your firm. Did he ever make any complaint to you of Judge Hanford being asleep or not attentive or not understanding what was going on?

A. Never.

Q. Did he ever make any complaint or make any statement to you to the effect that he had ever seen Judge Hanford under the influence of liquor?—A. Not before he testified here the other day.

Witness excused.

JAMES B. MURPHY, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name to the committee.

A. James B. Murphy.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Murphy?—A. In Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-two years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Have you been practicing your profession during your residence in Seattle?—A. I have.

Q. What are your firm connections, if any?—A. I am associated with J. P. Wall, under the designation of Murphy & Wall.

Q. What is the nature of your business, Mr. Murphy?—A. General practice.

Q. To what extent do you practice in the Federal court before Judge Hanford?—A. I have had quite a number of cases before him.

Q. Have you any regular clients whose business is usually or always transacted in his court?—A. Early in my practice here I had a great many matters where claims were presented against steamboats; that is, cross libels and libels for repairs and supplies. I have had none of that work for a number of years—and sort of collection work. Later I was associated with Messrs. Preston, Carr & Gilman, who represented a number of insurance companies that requires Federal jurisdiction.

Q. Nonresident companies?—A. Nonresident companies.

Q. Fire, or life, or marine?—A. Principally fire; and later I have represented certain bonding companies and nonresident companies who use the Federal jurisdiction.

Q. Do you still represent those?—A. I still represent the American Bridge Co., of New York—I think its treasurer's department is in Pittsburgh—it has a great deal of work in the Federal court, being a nonresident. I represent the Title Guaranty & Surety Co., of Scranton, Pa. I have represented them for 10 or 12 years, and they have a great deal of work here. I did represent the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore. They had a great deal of work in the Federal court. I represented the Ætna Indemnity Co.; the Philadelphia Casualty Co. until it became absorbed by the Baltimore company, or some other company.

Q. Was it usual for parties suing them to bring the cases into the State court in the first instance?—A. It was.

Q. And you would remove it to the Federal court?—A. Yes; and then we invoked the Federal court in one line of cases, at least—we had been invoking the Federal court for a number of years in cases where public contracts were involved and the contractor failed, but during the performance of his contract he assigned the funds coming due under the contract, both under the Federal statute—well, there is no State statute prohibiting the assignment of funds—but seeking to establish the right of the surety prior and paramount to the assignment of claims, or the assignment of funds due under the contract, of the contractors to banks and other persons who financed them.

Q. To what extent have you participated in bankruptcy proceedings?—A. Well, not to any considerable extent; just as a general practitioner would. We have had a number of cases here. I attended to some of them personally—very largely by young men in the office. We have had several matters before Judge Hanford on appeal.

Q. Have you quite a number of cases of one sort and another pending before him now?—A. Yes, sir; I have some.

Q. How long have you known Judge Hanford? I assume since you have lived in Seattle.—A. Yes; I was admitted to his court immediately on coming into the State 22 years ago.

Q. You noticed the peculiarities of which we heard in the judge, while presiding in court, with reference to apparent napping or slumbering?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. When did you begin to notice that, Mr. Murphy?—A. I do not recall; it is probably as soon as I came here. That is my recollection. I mean—I am not clear upon it and I may not be correct.

Q. Have you noticed any change in the judge in that regard?—A. I have not. I have noticed none; that is, I am not conscious now of having noticed any; there may have been changes. I never saw the judge when I regarded him napping, in the popular sense of that term. I have often seen the judge when he was apparently resting overworked eyes, or something of that kind.

Q. Was his condition such as would justify the belief in the ordinary person unacquainted with him that he was sleeping?—A. I don't know—possibly, I being familiar with him—that is, familiar with that habit, and acquainted with him, it would not so impress me, and I scarcely noticed it, but I think, possibly, when I first discovered it, whenever that was, that it was noticeable. I never did see the judge when I thought he was asleep. I have seen him during almost the entire argument, at times, when I have been presenting some matter, have his eyes apparently closed, or his head down—that is, not looking me in the eye and not apparently attentive to what I was saying.

Q. Are you a member of any social organization of which he is a member?—A. None that I know of, except the Rainier Club.

Q. Do you meet him there frequently?—A. Well, not very frequently in the last year. I lived there for three or four years, possibly five—commencing—well, I moved away from the club onto the hill about two years ago. For a long time prior to that time—I think, possibly five years, I think, I lived there—I may be mistaken as to time.

Q. What five, approximately?—A. The five years preceding the last two years.

Q. What opportunity have you had to notice the judge elsewhere than in court and in the Rainier Club?—A. I have had very little—that is, I have observed him very little. I have been on one or two excursions that he attended; the annual bar association banquets where there was an outing and refreshments served. Aside from that I do not recall any occasion where I attended any social function when the judge was present, except at the Rainier Club.

Q. Have you seen the judge drinking intoxicants, and if so, to what extent?—A. Just before I answer that, I would say that I have met him on the street very often as men living in the same city would meet, but we just speak, and sometimes we do not do that.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I have seen the judge drink a glass of wine or take a very small bottle of wine with his dinner occasionally at the Rainier Club; nothing further.

Q. With meals?—A. With meals only. I was trying to recall as I sat at the table whether I ever saw him sitting at the table taking a drink before meals. It seems to me that I saw him once or twice take a cocktail before going up to the dining room at the Rainier Club, but I am not clear as to that. I can not say that I ever saw him at a table taking a drink. If so, it was simply a cocktail before lunch or dinner.

Q. Have you ever seen him drinking in any public drinking places?—A. I never have.

Q. Have you ever seen the judge when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have not. I never saw him when he even showed the effect of liquor.

Q. Are you the Mr. Murphy who was a member of a firm of which Mr. L. Frank Brown was also a member at one time?—A. I was associated with Mr. L. Frank Brown in the practice of law for, I think, approximately two years, under the designation of Graves, Palmer, Brown & Murphy.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with Mr. Murphy? If so, proceed.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Murphy, did Mr. Brown ever report in the office in your presence, or to your knowledge, that he had seen Judge Hanford on the bench under the influence of intoxicating liquors?

A. He did not.

Q. Did he ever report to you or in your office, to your knowledge, that he had ever seen Judge Hanford intoxicated in any measure?—A. He did not. On the contrary when we were together his comments upon Judge Hanford were always very complimentary as to his being an able jurist—that was Mr. Brown's conception of him, I am sure.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the most singular thing that when lawyers get on the witness stand they ignore all the rules of evidence. Your answer was not responsive to the question and it was improper besides—that is, the latter part of it.

The WITNESS. Well, have it stricken out then.

The CHAIRMAN. I am calling your attention to it as a matter of curiosity rather than for any other purpose.

The WITNESS. That is probably true.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Murphy, when Mr. Brown went out of your firm did the firm otherwise change?

A. It did not.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want, Mr. Chairman, to indulge in any unpleasant feature of the examination, but I would like to ask this witness, without reference to any intentional falsehood, or the want of it, to state to the committee whether Mr. Brown's observations and conclusions would be reliable as a basis of determining ultimate facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks that question should be gone into. If you wish to impeach Mr. Brown, I do not know just what the committee would say about that—the committee would have to confer, and of course he would have the right to have an opportunity to defend himself, but this sort of inferential or indirect impeachment the Chair thinks would be improper. Mr. Brown might come back at Mr. Murphy and attack his judgment.

Mr. HUGHES. I am quite willing to have him go into that question or to have you go into it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we are not willing to go into it.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you know anything about Mr. Brown's career at the bar after he went out of your firm? Has he practiced much since that time?

A. No, I think not. He went into the real estate business after leaving the firm.

Q. And a part of the time was not engaged in any business?—A. He was not; no.

Q. Do you know where he was during that time?—A. He was in the city here a part of the time, living at Three Tree Point, a part of the time too, about halfway between here and Tacoma.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The WITNESS. There is one answer that I want to clear up, if I may. I made the statement in response to an inquiry as to whether Judge Hanford was in the habit of nodding or sleeping or apparently so. I said that I noticed on occasions he would assume that attitude during the entire argument. I think it is proper for me to say that on none of those occasions did he show any want of knowledge of the point involved, but he showed the clearest comprehension of all that I had said whenever he reviewed my remarks, and often he would, showing that while his attitude may have been one apparently of inattention he heard all that was said.

Q. While you lived in the Rainier Club, you very frequently saw Judge Hanford at the club, didn't you?—A. Yes, my impression is that he was there daily and took his evening meal there—his dinner. Q. Frequently?—A. Possibly half the time, and yet I am not clear on that; it would seem that he did, as I look back at it, and yet the picture that it leaves was that he dined there about half the time, but I think I am probably mistaken.

Q. You have seen him on your return to the club after working at nights—you have seen him return as late as 11 o'clock at night when you returned to retire at night after your work in your office.—A. Oh, yes; he usually went home about the time I came in. I don't say usually went home, because he usually went home earlier than that, but he did very often—he went home about the time that I came into the club to retire—that was about 10 o'clock or a little after, or 11 o'clock. I have seen him very frequently at that time of the evening.

Q. Have you ever on any of those occasions or at any time seen him when the thought ever was presented to your mind that he was or might be in any measure under the influence of intoxicating liquor, basing your conclusion upon your knowledge of the man?—A. Never.

Witness excused.

WINFIELD R. SMITH, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.—A. Winfield R. Smith.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Smith?—A. Seattle.

Q. And you have for how long?—A. Approaching 21 years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. And you have been a lawyer how long?—A. For between 21 and 22 years.

Q. All of your Seattle life?—A. All of it.

Q. Are you practicing alone or in connection with some one else?—A. Shank & Smith—with Corwin S. Shank.

Q. What is the character of the firm's business?—A. A general civil practice.

Q. What portion of it in Judge Hanford's court?—A. A moderate amount; not a very large amount.

Q. What kind of business is that?—A. We have had litigation for nonresident parties, both plaintiffs and defendants, and we have had some connection with receivership proceedings before him.

Q. In what matters?—A. Well, I recall notably a street-car receivership quite a number of years ago.

Q. What street railway company was that?—A. That was particularly the Front Street cable, which is now merged as a part of the general system, and we were representing in that Washburn and Mowen & Co. We represented large claims for steel cables which had been furnished to the company.

Q. Was it a bankruptcy matter?—A. No.

Q. Just a receivership without a bankruptcy proceeding?—A. Yes, sir; that was prior in time to the bankruptcy act.

Q. What other cases do you recall that you have had in his court, or what class of cases?—A. We have had some, a few, insurance cases, and a few admiralty cases.

Q. Whom did you represent in the insurance cases?—A. I would say more often the company; although we sued in one instance I recall—We sued a bonding company on a bond given by them in which we represented a local concern.

Q. Where did you bring your suit, in the superior or in the Federal court?—A. I have really forgotten in this instance whether we began in the Federal court or whether it was transferred.

Q. It did get into the Federal court?—A. In the Federal court? It did get into the Federal court; yes.

Q. And in the admiralty cases whom did you represent?—A. More—I do not think that in more than one or two instances did we represent the vessel. More often claimants of one sort or another—libellants. We haven't had a great deal of admiralty practice.

Q. Have you cases pending in his court now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Many?—A. No; two or three; perhaps four.

Q. Who are your clients, or at least what is the class to which they belong? Are they corporations or individuals?—A. Both. For instance, we are representing a defendant, a local corporation here, in a patent infringement case in which we are sued; there is no prevailing rule about it either now or in times past—now one sort and now another sort of clients.

Q. Your professional activities, then, brought you into Judge Hanford's court a good deal?—A. A very considerable amount, taking the practice as a whole.

Q. To what extent have you been in the society of the judge outside of the court room?—A. A moderate amount during all of that time. Judge Hanford happened to be one of the men whom I met personally almost immediately after locating here, and I have seen Judge Hanford a number of times, and have seen him occasionally, rather rarely, out of an evening socially, and then I have been a member of the Rainier Club for some 15 years, and I have seen him there at various times of the day, and on quite a number of occasions, first and last. Then I have met him other places incidentally. I have been at bar association gatherings and banquets with him that is, when he was also present. I don't mean in company with him.

Q. I understand you—to what extent have you seen the judge drinking intoxicants, if you have ever seen him drinking any?—A. Oh, I have seen him probably take an occasional glass, not sufficiently to ever impress me at all as being particularly at all.

Q. Where have you seen him drink?—A. I would say only at the club, or possibly a social dinner when he would take a glass simply with his dinner.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink at any public drinking places or barrooms?—A. Never.

Q. Have you ever seen him when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. By no means.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Have you ever seen him in court when he was not attending to business before him, as evidenced by his rulings?

A. Never, Mr. Hughes. I have noticed those mannerisms that have been spoken of this morning, in the way of closing his eyes and rubbing his head, but I have never seen any indication of inattention or loss of conscious, wide-awake alertness.

Q. Have you ever seen any evidence of bias or partiality in his administration of justice?—A. No.

Q. Between counsel or litigants?—A. No.

Testimony of witness closed.

The CHAIRMAN. I have just learned, with some degree of surprise, that Mr. Graves was the attorney for the Harriman interests—that his firm was—and that Mr. Murphy was attorney for the Northern Pacific Railway; those gentlemen had opportunity to state those facts, I think. Why didn't they do it?

Mr. HUGHES. They certainly would have so stated had it occurred to them that it would have been important, or if they had been interrogated in regard to it. Now, the fact is that the firm of which Mr. Murphy was a member were attorneys for the Northern Pacific Railway Co., but Mr. Murphy, I do not think, ever conducted any of their business.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it comes to the same thing in the end.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, if you had directed their attention to that I am sure they would have so stated. I will be glad to call them back and have you interrogate them in regard to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I think in connection with their testimony that it ought to appear.

Mr. HUGHES. It did not occur to me when you were examining them to suggest to you to ask those questions. I am sure that it did not occur to them, because I am sure that if you gentlemen will take pains you will ascertain that neither of those men will withhold any facts from you.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly it was my fault in not making the questions inclusive enough. I think in justice to them that it should go into the record so that no one hereafter can say they did not tell the whole truth.

Mr. HUGHES. It did not occur to me. I knew that Mr. Graves had represented the Northern Pacific at one time when he was a member of the firm of which Mr. Murphy was a member, although Mr. Murphy was not regarded as the attorney for the Northern Pacific and never attended to any of its business, but Mr. Graves did. Now, in the present firm of which Mr. Graves is a member, I think Mr. Bogle is the man who represented the Union Pacific interests. I do not know whether Mr. Graves has since he has become a member of that firm represented them in any litigation, but I apprehend not. Mr. Graves's health failed him a couple of years ago and he rested for a year or two, and he has only been identified with Mr. Bogle's firm for a little over a year.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the information ought to go into the record in connection with their testimony.

Mr. HUGHES. If there is any thought that their testimony might possibly be influenced by it in any way, I think that they ought to be called back and I will ask them to come back.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Who will we call next? If you have not anybody at hand there is a Mr. Adams here who wishes to get away.

WILLIAM ADAMS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee.

A. William Adams.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Since April, 1903.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Adams?—A. At present I am in the butchering business, but before that I was a street car man.

Q. Are you running a business for yourself or working for some one?—A. I am working for the James Henry Packing Co.

Q. And before that?—A. I was street carring in Seattle before that.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Gripman on the Yesler Way Line.

Q. Is that a cable line or a trolley line?—A. That is a cable.

Q. Tell us where that line runs or ran when you were on it?—A. It runs from Second Avenue and Yesler Way to Lake Washington; it is a parallel line, running east and west.

Q. Did you run on any other line than that?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Or any other street car service than that?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. Well, I was on there from September, 1903, until February 10, I believe it was, the date.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Do you know him by sight?—A. Well, fairly by sight.

Q. How long have you known him by sight?—A. Well, since the time of the exposition here in Seattle; that was in 1909, I believe, or somewhere along there.

Q. Did you know him by sight before that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Only since that time?—A. Well, he was pointed out to me at one time during the exposition as being Judge Hanford.

Q. When he was pointed out and you identified him as Judge Hanford, had you been acquainted with him by sight—I mean, with that person before that?—A. No, sir; I had not. No, sir.

Q. What was the occasion of his being pointed out to you?—A. Well, he alighted from the car at Seventh Avenue; that is just the street going to the courthouse.

Mr. MCCOY. That crosses Yesler Way, does it?

A. Yes, sir; Seventh Avenue. And he appeared to be—his step appeared to be a little unsteady, and a passenger on the car pointed him out and said, "Do you know who that gentleman is?" And I said, "No, sir; I do not." "Well," he said, "that is Judge Hanford."

Q. Where was the car at that time?—A. Going east at Seventh and Yesler Way.

Q. You spoke of his step being unsteady; where was he walking?—A. Well, he had just got off the car and was walking north to the curb; to the side of the street.

Q. Do you know where his home is?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Even by hearsay?—A. No, sir; not even by hearsay.

Q. Was that the only time you saw him riding on the cars?—A. That was the only time to my knowledge. I had never saw the man before, and I would not have noticed him at that time only he was pointed out by another passenger.

Q. Did you notice him on the car at all?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Only after he got off?—A. Only after he got off.

Q. How far did he walk while you were noticing him?—A. Only 10 or 15 feet—not more than that—I was starting my car up at that time.

Q. Tell us a little more, if you please, about the character of the unsteadiness?—A. Well, he seemed to sway from one side to the other—kind of stagger a little—that was, I suppose, why the passenger called my attention to the fact that he was staggering a little.

Q. What time was it in the day or night?—A. Well, it was in the daytime, but I can not recall just the time; it was some time during the afternoon.

Q. Well, did you at any time form any opinion as to what his condition was?—A. Well, I can't say that I really did; but he appeared to be—well, I saw men that were intoxicated that way; of course, I don't know.

Q. Well, at the time you saw him, was that the impression or opinion that his appearance caused you to form?—A. Yes, sir; that was my opinion of it.

Q. Did you reach the conclusion that he was intoxicated?—A. Well, I can't say that. I just would say that I was positive of it, but then that was my impression.

Q. Did you see him at other times elsewhere than on the car?—A No, sir; I do not recall any other time until I saw him here in the court room.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions.

Mr. HUGHES. At the time you speak of, that was in the summer of 1909?

A. It was during the time of the exposition.

Q. That would be in the summer of 1909?—A. Well, yes, I believe it would; I am not just positive of that.

Q. Can you give us any idea as to what month it was; the exposition ran from June until September.—A. No; I do not believe I could recall the month exactly.

Q. Could you give us any idea of the time of day?—A. It was in the afternoon sometime, I don't know just what time of day?

Q. About the middle of the afternoon, or was it about 2 o'clock?—A. I can not speak positively as to that; I can not speak positively.

Q. Can you recall the name of the passenger?—A. No, sir; he was a stranger to me also.

Q. But it was he who told you that it was Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He got off at Seventh Avenue and walked north, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would lead him in the direction of the courthouse of King County, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from the point where a passenger alights from the car Seventh Avenue is quite steep?—A. All the way up the hill from the courthouse; well, after leaving Seventh Avenue; that is, after leaving Yesler Way.

Q. From Yesler Way up it is quite steep?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he went up the hill in the direction of the courthouse?—A. I could not say as to that; he had not yet reached the curb on Yesler Way when I started my car away.

Q. I understood you to say that he started up Seventh Avenue north?—A. I say he started in the direction of the courthouse on Seventh Avenue; he was crossing Yesler Way going in that direction.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Adams did you say that Judge Hanford staggered on this occasion?

A. Well, the man that was pointed out to me as being Judge Hanford, yes.

Q. I mean whoever the man was?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Just explain what you mean by staggering?—A. Well, he would step this way and stop a bit and then that way; his body would kind of sway.

Q. From side to side?—A. From side to side, to keep from falling, I suppose.

Q. You say you have seen him in court recently?—A. Well, to-day I recognized the man here that I think is the same man.

Q. In this room, you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. Is the man here now?—A. I wouldn't swear to it; no, sir, he is not here that I see. I would not swear positively that it was the man that I saw there, but I rather think it was. I am not sure; not being acquainted with him I could not swear to it positively.

Mr. Higgins. You were the conductor on this car?

A. No, sir; I was running the front end of the car; the gripman.

Q. You were attending to the motor or the cable?—A. Yes.

Q. And did Judge Hanford leave the car from the front or the rear?—A. From the front; yes, sir.

Q. So that he had to pass you?—A. Well, he came out just behind me and left the car.

Q. Was the car full?—A. Well, it was fairly loaded; yes.

Q. Do you recall whether he was going up the grade on Yesler Way or no?—A. How is that?

Q. Do you recall which way your car was going?—A. Well, I was going toward Lake Washington.

Q. Well, that is up the grade?—A. Yes.

Q. And the grade is very steep?—A. Not right at that point it is not steep; it is practically level right there.

Q. Can you tell the committee, Mr. Adams, how long probably your car stayed there?—A. Well, not over a minute.

Q. You lost sight of Judge Hanford as soon as your car started?—A. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Anything further.

Mr. Hughes. Yes, sir. You operated a car with open front and sides parallel to the gripman's stand in the car?

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. That is to say, the central part of the car was closed and the front part of the car had two seats running parallel with the car, sufficient to hold about five people, and you stood between the backs of those people operating the grip?—A. Yes.

Q. And that part of the car was entirely open?—A. On one side only. One side of that car is open and the other side the seat runs from the closed part to the front.

Q. Well, I mean the whole of the front of the car where the gripman stands is open; there are no inclosures around there?—A. It has a vestibute in front; just a wind shield in front of you.

Q. There is a glass front to the car——A. But on either side——

Q. there is a glass front, you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. But it is open on each side?—A. Yes, sir; it is.

Q. And Judge Hanford was sitting on the side seat on the north side of that car, and he got off in the direction of the courthouse?—A. No, sir; I think he was inside the car and came out just behind me and got off.

Q. And he stepped down and got off the car, off the steps of the car, while you paused there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any other passengers got off at that time?—A. No; not off the front end; I don't know about the rear.

Q. Your stop there would not be over a few seconds?—A. I say not over a minute.

Q. Well, it would not be over a few seconds.—A. It might have been a minute, but I don't think it was over that.

Q. The steps on those cars were quite high, too, down to the level of the street?—A. No, sir; they are not so very high.

Q. Is it one or two steps?—A. One step.

Q. Are there not two?—A. One step.

Q. How?—A. One step; there is one step between the floor of the car and the ground.

Q. And the running board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how high that running board is?—A. Approximately, it is about 15 inches.

Q. He stepped off from that and stepped away and seemed to have lost his balance?—A. He did; yes, sir.

Q. And you have often seen that with people, haven't you, stpping off those cars?—A. Oh, yes; I see a great many people in that condition.

Q. Have you seen Judge Hanford in this room—the same man?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Have you been here prior to to-day?—A. Yesterday I was here; yes, sir.

Q. Not yesterday, because yesterday was Sunday.—A. Saturday I was here a few minutes.

Q. Did you say you saw the man here whom you took to be the same man?—A. Yes, sir; he resembled the same man—I would not say it was the same man.

Q. Was he here on Saturday when you were here?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was he sitting?—A. Over here.

Mr. DORR. In the jury box? You are pointing in the jury box now.

A. He was right over here in one of these chairs.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean in one of the empty seats of the jury box back of you?

A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Describe the man who was pointed out to you as Judge Hanford as best you can?

A. Well, he was a man that apparently—well, I don't know how old he was——

Q. How tall was he?—A. Well, I should judge he was close to 6 feet—5 foot 11, perhaps, or 6 feet; of course, I don't know.

Q. Did he wear any beard; if so, tell what kind of a beard?—A. Well, it seemed to me that he had only a mustache at the time—I could not swear positively to that, either. You know, I didn't take particular notice of the man further than to see him walking away, as he was going away, and I noticed this unsteadiness, and I hadn't a chance to take a good enough look at the man to even swear that he was wearing a beard or not, to tell you the truth about it.

Q. Then, your knowledge depends entirely on the knowledge of this man who told you that it was Judge Hanford?—A. That is it, exactly; yes. I didn't know that it was Judge Hanford until he told me.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Witness excused.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, I think that in all fairness to the parties concerned, and in order to preserve the record for reference by the entire Committee on the Judiciary, that at the close of Mr. Adams's testimony it should be noted that Judge Hanford had not sat at any time in the jury box or in the place indicated by the witness Adams. Of course, we know that; but I think, for the purpose of the record in all fairness to all parties, that that should be shown.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose the best way to do that would be to prove it by some one and get it into the record in that way.

Mr. DORR. I think the committee would take judicial notice of that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that what you have suggested so far as I know, is true.

Mr. HIGGINS. It is true so far as I know, Mr. Chairman. I have not seen Judge Hanford sitting in the place indicated by the witness Adams this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Nor at any time during the hearings.

Mr. HIGGINS. No.

Mr. MCCOY. I was going to suggest that Mr. Dorr's statement be taken as testimony.

Mr. DORR. If there is any question about it——

Mr. HIGGINS (continuing). He has not been sitting in the jury box, that is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. I think under the circumstances the record sufficiently shows the fact, but if you wish to put in any evidence formally as to it you can do so.

Mr. DORR. But so long as the committee takes notice of that and we all agree to it, I do not think it need be proven further.

Mr. HIGGINS. If you are satisfied with the statements which each member of the committee has made, is not that sufficient?

Mr. DORR. I am satisfied with that.

Mr. HIGGINS. I mean, so far as the record goes?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

JEROLD LANDON FINCH, recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You are the same Mr. Finch who testified concerning the Heckman & Hansen matter some days ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Finch, were you in court when Mr. Battle was testifying about the Heckman & Hansen case?—A. I was.

Q. And when Gen. Metcalfe—or is it Mr. Metcalfe?—A. Gen. Metcalfe.

Q. Gen. Metcalfe testified? A. I was.

Q. They were the only two who testified about the proceedings, except in so far as the investigation of your personal conduct was concerned, were they not?—A. I think so.

Mr. DORR. No; there were others, Mr. McCoy, as having to do with that case; there was also Judge Hoyt. And also Mr. Powell.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. McCoy excluded those who were on that committee.

Mr. MCCOY. I mean outside of his own strictly personal matter.

Mr. HUGHES. The other parties that were mentioned by Mr. Finch are out of the city—I do not know whether they have yet returned—I mean Mr. Jones and Mr. Reynolds.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want them to be present when he is testifying?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not care about that.

Mr. MCCOY. Say whatever you please, Mr. Finch, in regard to the facts about which they testified, or any other branch of the Heckman & Hansen case which seems to you to need further elucidation.

The WITNESS. In the first place, I want the committee to understand Mr. Heckman's side of the controversy with reference to that $5,000 note and whether or not there was to be any security whatever given the bank.

Q. Now, for a minute; are you going to testify as to Mr. Heckman's understanding from what he told you or from what he testified about?—A. From what he testified about.

Q. Before Judge Smith?—A. Yes.

Q. And if you can, when you give his testimony, or what you remember of it, will you refer to the page in the typewritten record offered before Judge Smith?—A. Yes, sir; I will do that. Mr. Heckman testified that he was not to give the bank any security whatever, but that the bank was to take over the title to the property from the Hennegar heirs; they were to take the title to that half interest in themselves and he was to pay them for it at the rate of $1,000 a year and pay it out in five years, and gave that note accordingly. Now, you will find his evidence to that effect on page 542, line 20——

Q. You mean page 542 of the typewritten transcript of the stenographer's notes before Judge Smith?—A. That was given before Judge Smith—page 542, line 20 to page 543, line 1. I will read that, as it is short, and then I will refer you simply to further testimony on the same point. [Reading:]

> Q. What about the security?—A. There was to be a transfer of the children's interest instead of being held by the guardians of the children, it was to be held by the bank, on account of the father, the guardian for the children, was a man that was drinking considerably and done considerable annoyance around the shipyards, and always kept going back and forth more or less and bothering me, so that rather than deal with him, I thought I would deal with the bank, and the bank was to assume exactly the same arrangements which a guardian would assume from the probate court. It was merely a transfer from the guardian over to the bank.

Now the further testimony to the same effect is found at page 639, line 3 to line 14 and page 685, line 6 to line 21.

Q. That is further testimony given by Mr. Heckman?—A. Yes, sir; to the same effect. Now, I want to explain this too. Judge Battle produced a second mortgage on the property to the amount of $3,000 and called the attention of the committee to the fact that that mortgage itself showed that it was a second mortgage and that Heckman had signed it personally. That is true, and his testimony discloses that that was the very time that he discovered that there was a first mortgage on the property, and it was due to that clause which was contained in the second mortgage that he made the discovery. That is found in the evidence at page 549, line 4 to page 550, line 12. It is so long that I will not read it.

Now, even at that time he did not know, and he testified that he did not know that the note had been changed to read a 90-day note instead of a 5-year note. He discovered about the mortgage first; then he made the discovery about the note being a 90-day note later on when the bank sent him the notice to come in and take care of it. That is found in his testimony at page 550, line 27 to page 553, line 3. Now, you will find from the evidence too that Judge Ballinger and the bank, when their attention was called to the matter, agreed to fix it up——

Q. Where do you find that?—A. That is at the end of the testimony that I have just quoted to you; that is part of what I have just quoted. It was about a month after that that the schooner Alice was brought to their yards for repair under the circumstances that I have before related. Then Judge Battle placed in evidence the contract which the bank took out to Mr. Heckman for him to sign and which he would not sign. I think to make the record plain then the letter which followed the presentation of that contract next day should be placed before the committee. That is found on page 554, line 12 to line 18, and reads as follows—this being taken from the citation I have just given you in the referee's report of the evidence. [Reading:]

SEATTLE, WASH., June 13, 1901.

Messrs. HECKMAN & HANSEN, Ballard, Wash.

GENTLEMEN: Your overdraft at the close of business to-day amounts to $6,917.02, which you will please cover by 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

Yours, respectfully,

E. L. GRONDAHL, First Vice President.

That notification was written to them the next day after they had presented the contract that Judge Battle put into the evidence and which they refused to sign?

Mr. DORR. It was an assignment of their claim against the schooner Alice.

The WITNESS (continuing). It is referred to as such, but referred to as an assignment, as collateral security to some claim that the bank had against the firm. Now, the committee has before it, I think pretty well, the story then as to what occurred, namely, the suits that were brought all within a period of two weeks. I then want to call attention——

Mr. HUGHES. Pardon me, had the suit against the schooner Alice been brought prior to that two weeks or is that one of the suits?

A. That is one of the suits and it was the first one brought. Then I wish to call the attention of the committee to the schooner Alice stipulation. That stipulation in itself looks harmless, but it was the beginning of a general confiscation of the estate of Heckman & Hansen, which was completed a short time afterwards by getting possession of their property over in the State court through the receivership proceedings.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, that stipulation is an exhibit

A. It is already an exhibit in this case.

Mr. MCCOY. What number is it?

The WITNESS. I do not know, and it is not in the room this morning.

The REPORTER. That was marked "Exhibit No. 61½."

Mr. MCCOY. At any rate, it is the stipulation which provided for a sale of the Alice and that the receiver in the State court should bid in and for the application of the money.

A. That is it exactly. Now, pursuant to that stipulation all the parties concerned in the schooner Alice case enter into a stipulation by the terms of which——

Mr. MCCOY. Excuse me just a minute, Mr. Finch. You do not mean that in pursuance of the stipulation they entered into a stipulation, the terms of which——

A. No; I mean following that as an event immediately following the entering into the schooner Alice stipulation as to what was back of things, they went into the schooner Alice case and there all parties entered into a stipulation so that Judge Hanford was to render a judgment—that judgment being a foregone conclusion because of the terms of the stipulation, and which was to ultimate in Judge Hanford's rendering judgment that claims be paid in accordance with the order that I have set out at the top of page 9 of the petition in re Ballinger—I do not know what the number of that exhibit is—I would like to read that at this time, because I do not think I shall ask this committee to take with them the files of the schooner Alice case, although they were placed in evidence before Judge Hanford.

First. The costs were to be paid, amounting to	$675.15
Second. Heckman & Hansen's claim	7,305.52
Third. Scandinavian-American Bank	275.00
Calhoun, Ewing & Co	634.50
Fourth. Henry B. Klamroth	1,522.37
Fifth. Scandinavian-American Bank	332.50
Calhoun, Ewing & Co	1,667.70
Sixth. Arndt Thiele	66.65
Seventh. Heckman & Hansen	812.78
Total	13,292.17

Now, pursuant to the schooner Alice stipulation the receiver of the State court bid in the property at a figure sufficient to get it, but not to cover all of these claims; he got it at $6,000 and then turned it over to the party to be named by the bank in that stipulation, namely, A. J. Tennant, and took from the bank the credit for this overhraft.

Q. Do you mean he bid it in for the even $6,000?—A. No; that is just what I mean—it is my understanding that he bid it in for the $6,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Why do you say your understanding is—would not the record show exactly—do you mean that you are speaking from memory?

A. I think it would show, but I do mean to say just now that I do not recall it, but it is my understanding that that is it.

Mr. HUGHES. You mean by that your recollection?

A. That is what I mean.

Mr. HUGHES. That is what I wanted to get at.

A. (Continuing.) Nevertheless, they dropped—pursuant to that stiuplation—the bank dropped that suit on the alleged overdraft, so that it was equivalent to getting a credit for $7,352.52.

Q. You mean it was the equivalent of offsetting the one claim against the other?—A. That is what I mean to say.

Q. So that, as far as that claim was concerned, Heckman & Hansen's alleged indebtedness to the Scandinavian-American Bank was liquidated and paid?—A. That is true. Now, the last item is No. 7 and it shows that Heckman & Hansen were to have $812.78. That item, by the terms of that stipulation, or because they had entered into that stipulation and the bank had not been forced to bid, as it would have been forced to bid without entering into the stipulation, because of its having a $20,000 mortgage on the boat, this last item was lost to Heckman & Hansen, this $812.78.

Q. You mean that ranked last in the admiralty suit?—A. Yes, sir; and because the boat did not bring enough to pay it it was lost to Heckman & Hansen. The boat, however, would have brought enough had it not been that the bank, which had the $20,000 mortgage, was able to get it without bidding the amount of all the claims against it, and the receiver bid it in, as he did, and simply turned it over to them.

Q. In other words, your claim is that if that sale had been without any stipulation of any kind, in the regular course of procedure, that in order to have saved its mortgage on the boat, the Scandinavian Bank would have to bid enough for the boat to include this $812.78?—A. That is just my claim exactly.

Q. Otherwise it would have lost its mortagge?—A. That is just my claim exactly. Now, at the same time I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this $812.78 claim had theretofore been assigned to the Scandinavian-American Bank to secure that $650 item that has been referred to.

Q. Covered by a chattel mortgage?—A. Yes, sir. That is shown by a reference to Mr. Heckman's testimony at page 580, from line 1 to line 29. I call your further attention to the fact that the costs which the stipulation said were to be paid by taking some $889 of Heckman & Hansen's money which had been tied up in a garnishment suit, had already been paid by the receiver in the State court. That is found from the receiver's testimony at page 83, from line 8 to line 16.

Q. That is, the stipulation referred to certain indebtedness to Heckman & Hansen which had been attached or garnisheed by the bank?—A. Yes, sir; and suggesting that that fund be set aside as a special fund and that the receiver of Heckman & Hansen should turn it over to the man who was to get this boat, with which he was to pay Metcalfe & Jurey $200, and was also to pay the additional costs, but those costs, as I have just shown by reference to the receiver's testimony, had already been paid.

Q. This consisted of keeper's hire and all that sort of thing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In connection with the care of the Alice after it had been libelled?—A. Yes, sir. So that Heckman & Hansen lost that $889 cash that belonged to them. Mr. Metcalfe, the stipulation recites, was to be paid $200 of that sum.

Q. The stipulation recites that the attorneys for the libellants were to be paid that amount.—A. Well, Metcalfe & Jurey were the attorneys or proctors for the libellants. Well, Gen. Metcalfe stated the other day that he was not a party to that stipulation, nevertheless he was a beneficiary under it.

Q. Are you sure that he stated that he was not a party to it? I do not remember that he testified to that.—A. I think he said so on the stand the other day to you.

Q. May be he did; I do not remember it. But he would have to be, naturally, wouldn't he?—A. Yes. When you had that stipulation and had a colloquy with him, I think you referred to the fact that his name was not on it. I have not looked at the stipulation for years, but it is here and it ought to be in the court record.

Mr. DORR. I have that stipulation now.

Mr. FINCH. Let me take it.

Whereupon counsel hands document to the witness.

Mr. MCCOY. Is that an exhibit?

The WITNESS. Yes. 61½. Metcalfe & Jurey are not upon the stipulation, though Gen. Metcalfe's name is appended to it as a witness.

Mr. HUGHES. It is signed directly by the parties, is it not, instead of by their attorneys?

A. No, it was not.

Q. At least by Heckman & Hansen?—A. The Heckman & Hansen interest in it was carried by Larson, receiver, signing it.

Q. Now, I call your attention to the fact that in my colloquy with Judge Hanford I offered or included Gen. Metcalfe as one who I thought should be disbarred. I received the evidence which warranted me in making that statement from his connection with the various suits, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that when he entered into this stipulation he had done nothing in the case that had been brought against Heckman & Hansen, or for them, except to libel the Alice. He was paid a retainer of $350 a year, and yet when he entered into this stipulation, which was followed by others, by which he was to stipulate away all the rights of Heckman & Hansen, he received out of the proceeds at least the $200, and Mr. Jurey, on the stand before Judge Smith, said that they had received upward of $500, but he could not remember the amount.

Mr. MCCOY. Can you refer to the page?

A. I am giving that to you from memory. That is some of the evidence that was offered by my opponents before Judge Smith and which was not returned, but I came before Judge Hanford in this petition relative to the disbarment of these parties, which was filed with him before he had decided the Heckman & Hansen matters, and called his attention to what I have just stated to you in these words at the bottom of page 10:

> Metcalfe & Jurey received upward of $500 out of the deal, but testified that they could not remember how much more.

Q. So you are speaking then, of course, from your recollection of recent testimony—I mean that at that time you were speaking on a recollection of recent testimony?—A. That is true—that is true. Then I called the attention of the committee again to pages 8 to 11, inclusive, of the petition re Ballinger, to show you what I presented to Judge Hanford at that time, and just to make my story complete before the committee I will say that paragraphs 13 and 14 suggested to Judge Hanford that on December 9 following the entering into of this stipulation, the attorneys of record, without Heckman & Hansen's consent or knowledge, stipulated that judgment might be taken for want of answer in the suit brought for the foreclosure of the $650 chattel mortgage. Now, I have already showed and cited the pages of the record that that $650 mortgage was secured by an $800 claim of Heckman & Hansen against the schooner Alice which was practically owned by the bank.

Q. Now, that claim of Heckman & Hansen against the schooner Alice for $812.78 arose out of other repairs than the ones that were involved in this $6,000 transaction?—A. That is true, and it was an older claim, therefore, in admiralty proceedings, it came last.

Q. Just as the $20,000 mortgage had to come last?—A. Yes.

Q. When you say it came last, you mean it came last in these claims?—A. In the order of precedence in Judge Hanford's court, and ahead of the $20,000 mortgage.

Q. That claim for $812.78 was a claim and a lien on the boat ahead of the $20,000 mortgage?—A. That is true.

Q. But it was subsequent to these other liens?—A. That is true. Now, all the while let me tell the committee according to the evidence, the bank could have gotten the money that Heckman & Hansen owed to them if it had been willing to take it. Mr. Heckman had a friend—I am giving you now the testimony—had a friend who would advance the amount that was owing to the bank on its mortgages, though it did not include the amount of the alleged overdraft—his name was Pete Norby. Metcalfe & Jurey were apprised of the fact that Norby would pay the bank and would step into the bank's place and would take an assignment of their mortgages, and they wrote the bank accordingly. The bank refused to take its money and made a quibble over the fact that Heckman & Hansen were not paying it and that the bank would have to give an assignment of the claim. Now, that is found in the record at page 644, line 15, to page 646, line 20, and at page 583, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there other evidence tending to contradict that?

A. No, it was not met.

Mr. MCCOY. It was not met at all?

A. That is my recollection. I am willing to state very positively that it was not met at all. If, for instance, you will refer to page 644 you will find that Judge Battle took that position before the—in his examination before Judge Smith. There you will find he says, "Now, according to my proposition"—now, I am reading from page 644 at line 16.

Mr. MCCOY. That is whose testimony?

A. Mr. Heckman being examined by Judge Battle:

A. Why, according to my proposition, of course, the bank mortgages were to be paid. I offered to pay the bank mortgage several times. Mr. Jurey sent a letter over to the attorneys for the bank, Ballinger, Ronald & Battle, if they wanted to transfer the mortgages, they could get the money, could get the cash.

Q. How much cash?—A. $5,000 cash and $650 and also agree to take up the $3,000 when it came due.

Q. Who was that man?—A. Mr. P. F. Nordby.

Q. And then your attorneys addressed a letter to Ballinger, Ronald & Battle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that proposition include also that amount of these overdrafts, or claimed overdrafts?—A. Why, it included whatever money there was against the property, whether overdrafts, or mortgages, or whatever it was.

Q. I ask you, Mr. Heckman, you know what the proposition included and it will not suffice us when you say that it included everything against the property. I ask you what was specifically included in that proposition that you say your attorneys de to the bank by letter addressed to Ballinger, Ronald & Battle?

Mr. FINCH. Has not the bank or Ballinger, Ronald & Battle got that letter?

Mr. BATTLE. I do not know.

Mr. FINCH. That is the best evidence.

Mr. BATTLE. But this witness began to testify regarding the matter without the letter and I wanted just to test his recollection relative to the matter.

Then the master gives his direction and then this question:

Q. Now, what I am asking you is, what was embodied in this proposition that you say you stated to your attorneys and which your attorneys presented by letter, in writing, to Ballinger, Ronald & Battle?—A. It was embodied this much, that $5,000 and $650 which at that time appeared to be due, was to be transferred, but on account of my partner's, Mr. Hansen's condition, I could not lift the mortgage, because he was unconscious in the hospital at the time and I wanted it transferred. Then, regarding these other matters of $6,800 that was then pending in litigation on the schooner Alice, I was not in a position to touch it.

Q. Then your proposition was not to pay the mortgages, but to purchase them?—A. To transfer them was all that I could do.

Q. Purchase them, was it not?—A. Nordby agreed to take up the mortgages if the bank wanted the money.

Q. In other words, you proposed to purchase and not pay them?—A. Purchase the mortgages or transfer, but I was not to have them transferred.

I will not read further—you catch my point.

Q. In other words, the bank took the position that they would take the money, but that they would not make an assignment.—A. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear that we can not conclude your statement, Mr. Finch, before lunch, so we will now take a recess at this time.

Whereupon a recess is taken until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

2 O'CLOCK.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing. Same witness on the stand.

The WITNESS (continuing). In the testimony Gen. Metcalfe and Mr. Heckman agree that Mr. Heckman left his office, and left because he was not satisfied with Gen. Metcalfe's treatment. The immediate cause, or the event which marked the separation occurred on the 10th of December.

Mr. MCCOY. What year?

A. The year 1901. The next day after Gen. Metcalfe had, unbeknown to Mr. Heckman stipulated judgments against him in the foreclosure suits, and it grew out of Mr. Heckman being put out of his home upon an order obtained by the receiver in the receivership proceedings and his taking that matter to Gen. Metcalfe and the general telling him that he could do nothing for him. He then sought other attorneys. Mr. Reynolds was then hired and the situation as it confronted Mr. Reynolds was this, that the parties, the bank over in the State court, or some one in the receivership proceedings, were proposing to sell the property. He then filed the petition in bankruptcy over in Judge Hanford's court and obtained an injunction against the State court proceeding further. I have then related how, a few days later——

Mr. MCCOY. Do not repeat, unless it is necessary to make the connection.

A. No. I only want to get the facts well fixed in mind, that is all. I think likely from your suggestion that the committee is thoroughly familiar then with the story from then on.

I think now I would like to take up specifically Judge Battle's testimony.

Mr. HIGGINS. May I ask you a question in that connection, if Mr. McCoy does not object?

Mr. MCCOY. No.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is there anything which you have or would testify about except what occurred in Judge Hanford's court; what occurred before the committee of the bar association with reference to the Heckman & Hansen case, which does not present to your mind fairly the questions that is not contained in the transcript of testimony which the committee proposes to take with them to Washington?

A. No; if I understand your question I would answer it this way, that I have undertaken to not give a single bit of evidence relative to the case except such as was presented to Judge Hanford and which he had before him all the while.

Q. That is hardly what I want to ascertain. I asked you whether the testimony which you are about to give is not all included in the record of the testimony taken before the master in the Heckman & Hansen case.—A. That is true.

Mr. MCCOY. You were about to testify in regard to Mr. Battle's testifying before this committee.

A. Yes, sir. Now, I propose to—I thought Mr. Higgins directed his questions to what had gone before.

Mr. HIGGINS. No; I was referring to what you were about to testify to.

A. I just now want to take up Judge Battle's testimony that was given the other day in this case where he did not accurately state the facts. I want to call the attention of the committee to——

Q. And you will state the facts as they are contained in the transcript of the testimony taken before the referee.—A. Yes, sir. In the first place I think the first point where we differ, but which is not covered by my testimony heretofore, is his interpretation of the Washington law relative to receiverships. If I understood what Mr. McCoy asked him and his answer, I think that he misstated himself—I think that the judge did—in other words, if he meant to convey that our laws contemplated a receivership upon an account stated, for instance, with no equities whatever stated, I think he is wrong in that. I do not know whether Judge Battle meant to say that or not.

Mr. MCCOY. I think that he cleared that up afterwards; at any rate we can look at the statute

Mr HIGGINS. I do not think he stated that; I think he did at first, and then misapprehended the question and then he changed it later.

Mr. DORR. Was not the receivership statute copied into the record?

Mr. FINCH. Yes, sir; it was, and I see it is here.

Witness has volume of testimony given by Judge Battle before him while he is testifying.

Mr. MCCOY. It was to be, but Judge Battle finally changed his testimony from what Mr. Finch has just been stating.

The CHAIRMAN. He may pass from that incident and take up the next point.

The WITNESS (continuing). On page 864——

Mr. MCCOY. Of the record before this committee?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir Judge Battle referred to the proceedings electing the trustee as a defensive move. The man—Mr. Tennant—who caused the trustee to be elected, says on page 192 of the testimony before Judge Smith, line 29, that the purpose of it was to block Mr Heckman.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is there any other evidence in that transcript on that subject?

A. I beg pardon?

Q Was there any other testimony taken before the master on that question which would controvert that statement of Mr. Tennant's?—A. No; there was not. On page 1867——

Mr. MCCOY. Of the present record?

A. (Continuing) Of the present record Judge Battle refers to Metcalfe & Jurey having obtained a stipulation that no proceedings—or that the proceedings be stayed in the State court until the 1st of February, 1902 I do not know what he refers to there. It was on the 3d of December, 1901, that the order was taken to show cause 10 days later why the property should not be sold, and that matter was to come on about the 14th of January following, and would have come on except for Mr. Reynolds coming into Judge Hanford's court and getting that injunction. So I do not know to what Judge Battle refers.

Q. Gen. Metcalfe, you mean Judge Battle?—A Judge Battle.

Q I think a moment ago you said that Gen. Metcalfe stated that there was a stay until February.—A. Well, I mean it was Judge Battle who stated that. On page 1868 Judge Battle says that he does not know that I ever raised the question as to whether the property was sold subject to encumbrances or not. I raised it at every step where I raised any question; that is, after the property was finally sold. There is one place in the record in which Judge Battle is right and I was wrong in my testimony; that is at page 1870 and a few pages following that. It grows out of my having said here that in the proceedings before Judge Smith all the parties denied knowing Mr. Mayhew. I had said that and added that the bank denied having any part in the purchase of the property I made an error in regard to the parties knowing Mr Mayhew, and it arose this way: In the State court previously when Mayhew purchased the property there were two bids given for it, one was put in by the bank and the other by Mr. Mayhew, the bank's bid being about $14,000 and Mayhew's $24,000. Judge Ballinger, as a matter of fact, had drawn both bids and I was in the room, and there in the room everybody disavowed knowing Mr. Mayhew, and treated him and emphasized the fact that he was a stranger to the record, and then before Judge Smith, I recall, now that he calls my attention to the testimony, I undertook to see if they would still take that position, but they had turned around at that time That was the way I came to make my mistake. I have not seen the testimony for some six years

On page 1872 Judge Battle says that I had only examined one witness when the record was made before Judge Hanford. I do not think that is so very essential, but I will call the attention of the committee to the fact that the certificate from Judge Smith, which you will take with you and which is to be incorporated as a part of the evidence—you know to what I refer—shows very plainly what the facts were.

Q. It shows that it was taken out of the middle of the record.—A. About the middle, and it shows that several witnesses had testified before and they had all told the story that I was objecting to and which caused the reference to Judge Hanford——

Q. To Judge Smith.—A. No; back from Judge Smith to Judge Hanford. I also protest that the record as made by Judge Battle, and it is followed by Judge Hanford's opinion, that the position taken by those opposing the bringing of these books was because it would inconvenience the bank. That was not mentioned at all. The reason given down there was that they would not show anything contrary to the story that several prominent men in the bank had testified to, and that is shown in the certificate from Judge Smith that I have just referred you to.

Q. How about the testimony that it was offered to you at that time to permit you to go down to the bank and look at the books—now, I am referring to the period before you came back to Judge Hanford for an order that the books be produced—had they then offered to allow you to go down to the bank and look at the books as you pleased?—A. No; they had not done so at that time. They wanted me to go on record before Judge Smith and show specifically what book I wanted and what item in the book I wanted, and then they offered to either bring in that specific item or somebody would come and swear that it was not there. That is contained in the certificate referred to.

About the fact that, as Judge Battle testifies on page 1882, about when he served his motion to confirm the referee's report on the 10th of May and then the notice that it would come on the 14th of May, I wish to add to the record what has not appeared before, that I thereupon took exceptions to the motion on the ground that no party making it had any interest in the proceedings, and so forth, and that was what held it up indefinitely.

Q. And he then claiming that he represented the shipyards company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made the point that that concern not being a creditor of the bankrupt estate had no status in Judge Hanford's court?—A. That is true. Now, right while I am on that point, I was about to pass over a point that the judge made some time previously in his testimony.

Mr. McCoy. Which judge?

A. Judge Battle. The record that I made before Judge Smith, where I asked that all parties declare whom they represented, was not returned by the stenographer. It was evidently treated as a preliminary matter that was not to be reported. The first reference to the matter subsequent to that is contained on page 409 of Judge Smith's return, where I asked: "If your honor please, I want the record to show the presence of Mr. Jones"—referring to Richard Saxe Jones. Mr. Battle said: "Let the record show that Mr. Jones is present at my request."

Q. Jones being the attorney for the receiver?—A. Yes. At page 67, line 26, I took specific exception to Mr. Jones taking any part in the proceedings, because he did not represent anybody. As a matter of fact, he was present all through the proceedings and took as prominent a part as any attorney there.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, whom did it appear, from his questions, if he asked any, that he did represent?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Who did it appear, from the line of his inquiry, as to anybody that he did represent?—A. His first claim was that he came there one day to represent a witness, being Peter Larson.

Q. And what was his next claim?—A. He never made any more.

Q. Whom did you think that he represented?—A. I thought he represented himself.

Q. Did he have an interest in the result of the receivership or the determination of the affairs of Heckman & Hansen, so far as you knew?—A. He had not financial interest. He had such an interest as grew out of the charges that I have made, and he would want to cover up evidence; that was his interest.

Mr. HIGGINS. You claim, do you not, that after the receivership had been wound up, so far as the final account wound it up, that the Scandinavian-American Bank had given some $2,000 to the receiver, $1,000 or thereabouts of that money going to Mr. Jones?

A. I hadn't made any such claim. I discovered that fact down before Judge Smith.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Peter Larson was the receiver in the State court, Mr. Finch.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Hurry along, Mr. Finch.

The WITNESS (continuing). In this same connection I will refer you also to page 67, at line 26, to page 71, at line 8. Then I want to add that Judge Battle, at page 1885, was absolutely correct in his assumption that what I meant to convey was that he had noted that hearing or that I had the order for the testimony on June 7 and the order entered, or the hearing of it on June 8 was meant by the parties to have just the effect that it did, a hearing without the evidence. I wish to cite the special referee's, Judge Smith's, report to the committee.

Q. This is the final report?—A. The report recommending that the estate be not opened. At page 5 where he finds the facts relative to the alleged overdraft to be in accordance with the contention of Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Do you mean that he finds the facts to have been that the money was drawn by them on the supposition that they were being paid for their work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not that they were advances?—A. And not that it was in any sense a loan.

Q. Not a loan?—A. No. I wish next to call the attention of the committee to a fact that I overlooked on my previous testimony. You find in my first argument submitted to Judge Hanford—the first two or three pages is devoted to a review of certain matters that had occurred in his court and was meant to establish the fact that I had not falsified in some record and the word "falsified" was put in quotations. The word was put in quotations because I was throwing it back at Judge Hanford—using his own words. When I went before him on the—pursuant to the notice that all matters would be heard on the 8th.

Q. Of June?—A. Of June; yes, sir. He said on that day, in response to a suggestion of mine, when I was arguing that the evidence was not there and that it would take some little time to get it there, and that the magnitude was due to the fact that certain parties, not parties to the record, had gone before Judge Smith to get in the way of my proceedings down there, and then added that if it had not been for that Judge Hanford would not have heard from the remark that he heard relative to disbarment. He says: "Sir, you are a falsifier. That is not true in any sense of the word." That was one of the reasons that I took for taking an extension of some 10 days. I could not go on any further before Judge Hanford with his mind in that sort of an attitude, and you will find that the first four or five pages of my argument was addressed to him to show that I had not falsified, as he said. Now, I do not know that I have anything more to add, unless the committee care to have me take up Judge Hanford's opinion and show in what regard I think it did not state the facts. I presume you could do it as well for yourselves.

Mr. McCoy. Yes; we will ask you to do that if it seems to be necessary. Now, Judge Hoyt testified about some matters here the other day. What have you to say about his testimony?

A. Judge Hoyt went on the stand seemingly with the opinion that he was controverting some evidence that I had given with reference to him. I do not think that I mentioned Judge Hoyt in my evidence before his appearance. I had undertaken to avoid any reference to him, because my opponents at all times seemed to like to get behind Judge Hoyt. He is a venerable gentleman in this community and it is hard for anyone to believe that he would do anything wrong, and they want to seem to hide behind that sentiment that is here. Now, as a matter of fact, I had complained about Judge Hoyt, and what I said was the truth. I said that over in the State court, in my petition to reopen the estate, I said this, that over in the State court Judge Hoyt appeared there and opposed my proceeding. I was trying to keep that court from selling the property, and he was there, with all the others opposing the proceedings. Then I had also said that back in this court I came to Judge Hanford to get a stay of proceedings from him directed to the State court; that was before I had petitioned to reopen the estate and before it had been closed. On that proceeding in Judge Hanford's own court Judge Hoyt supported Judge Ballinger, and Mr. Jones and I had so stated. Then I made further reference to Judge Hoyt. I had said that when matters came before him as a referee, and when I had tried to set his machinery in motion, there was a certain claim presented to him—Mr. Mayhew presented a claim in the sum of $5,000, and I, jokingly, said to Mr. Tennant, who was representing the claim as an attorney—I says: "Have you brought along your dividend?" and he, not being familiar with the bankruptcy law and not knowing to what I referred, asked what I meant. This was in court. I said: "Have you brought along your dividend—the preference which you got on this claim?" Judge Hoyt then took the matter up and told Mr. Tennant that if he had taken down a dividend over in the State court or taken down any money he had received a preference. Then he asked for an adjournment, so that he could fix up his claim.

At the adjourned meeting he came in, not with Mr. Mayhew's claim again nor any reference to it, but he had the claims of these four little creditors, and I took exception to his change of front, and I asked Judge Hoyt to see the Mayhew claim, and he said it had not been filed. I knew that it had been filed and saw the 15-cent filing fee paid on it, and I took exception to the proceeding then and the change of record; so I called Judge Hoyt to one side and expressed, not as he says the dissatisfaction of my client with him as a court, but my own dissatisfaction with him, and I suggested that if he would find a way to get it to another referee that I would say nothing more, and from that conversation, without knowing how it occurred, there was a subsequent reference to Judge Worden. Now, those facts I have stated, and I purposely omitted any of them heretofore. I did not care to involve Judge Hoyt, and I did not care anything about it. But those are the facts I had stated, and they are the facts.

Q. Now, you say the notice of motion which was served on you to confirm the report of Judge Smith was served on the 10th day of May, returnable on the 14th?—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. And did you and the attorneys for the moving parties appear in court on the 14th?—A. We did not, and I do not know why. I served exceptions to their appearing in any manner.

Q. You served it on them?—A. On them.

Q. Well, did you appear in court on that day?—A. I do not recall about that specific day, but I know that there was no adjournment to the 8th and that the matter was not held up because of any adjournment of the hearing.

Q. Were there at any time in those proceedings any affidavits filed in reply to your affidavit or your petitions or whatever you filed?—A. None whatever; none whatever. Let me say right there—oh, now I must withdraw my answer, Mr. McCoy; I must explain it this way: When I presented my petition to reopen the estate I presented to Judge Hanford in chambers and told him to look carefully into it. Then I was notified by Ballinger, Ronald & Battle that the matter was coming up for hearing before Judge Hanford on a certain day. Now, in the interim between the time when that was noted for hearing and the day set for hearing there were some affidavits served upon me. I moved to strike them, because they made no issue and because they were not served by any party in interest. That matter was heard before Judge Hanford, and he refused to strike them. Subsequently I wanted to see the affidavits, and I discovered that they had never been filed, and so that occasioned a subsequent proceeding of some sort. I asked Judge Hanford or somebody that they be required to file them, so that I might have the record straight and show just what the affidavits did show or their lack of what they did not show, but they never were filed, and they were lost from the proceedings.

Q. Where is Ballard?—A. It is about 6 miles from here. It is a part of Seattle now. It is on Salmon Bay, a little inlet from Puget Sound.

Q. At the time of these proceedings was it a part of Seattle?—A. It was not.

Q. What industries, if any, were established there at the time of these proceedings which you are talking about?—A. Shipbuilding and lumber, shingle mills, etc. It is the greatest shingle-mill town in the world. It was then.

Q. It was at that time?—A. It was at that time.

Q. How close to those shingle mills or other manufacturing plants was this shipyard of Heckman & Hansen?—A. It joined them. It was right in the midst of them.

Q. And that is the place where the proposed canal from Lake Union is to come out into Puget Sound?—A. Yes, sir; it goes right by the Heckman & Hansen property—the canal does.

Q. Do you know anything about the skill or ability of Heckman & Hansen in the business in which they were engaged at that time?—A. Mr. Heckman I always considered a genius in his line.

Q. What particular branch of business was it that he handled?—A. He had to do with the drafting of plans and such things as that.

Q. Making the contracts, you mean?—A. I mean drafting the plans for the boats and then doing the outside work with reference to the business of the concern—making the contracts and financing the business, etc.

Q. And what was Hansen's part in the business?—A. He was simply doing the work in the yard, being a good shipbuilder and a good, practical man.

Q. Have you looked for that newspaper account in regard to a statement which you testified Judge Hanford made, or is reported to have made, in open court?—A. I have looked for it and, so far, have been unable to find it; but I will find it before the committee adjourns.

Q. Coming, now, to the four hearings before the committee of the bar association, to which was referred the charges against you, were you at any time notified that those who were to testify against you, or presumably were, were to appear, and were you given any notice of the time when they were to appear before the committee?—A. No; there was nothing of that sort. The notice was only a newspaper report that Judge Hanford was going to have a meeting of the bar association and that it was rumored, the paper would put it, that it had to do with the Heckman & Hanson matter.

Q. You do not understand me, I think. After the meeting of the bar was held and the committee was appointed?—A. Yes.

Q. I now refer to the hearings before that committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you at any time notified by the committee, or by anyone, that certain parties who would testify to the other side of the case were to appear and testify?—A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, did you have notice that they were to be there and given an opportunity to examine them or to hear what they had to say?—A. No, sir; and it was explained to me that the notification was purposely omitted; that there was so much feeling that the committee felt they should give their testimony by themselves.

Mr. HIGGINS. And you gave yours by yourself, too, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did have notice, of course, when the committee met?—A. No; only in this way. I would be notified to go up there and see them some evening, in that way.

Q. Well, that is equivalent, in my mind, to a notice. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Just on that point what you have testified about now. Is that when you were called up for the purpose of making a statement or giving testimony? You were then notified?

A. Yes.

Q. That does not change your testimony that you were never notified when the others were to appear?—A. It does not change it in the slightest. I never was notified when the others were to appear.

Mr. HIGGINS. And they were not notified when you were to appear, either?

A. That's true.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. DORR. Mr. Finch, referring to the paper that Judge Ballinger identified, which bears date June 12, 1901, and purports to be an assignment by Heckman & Hanson to the Scandinavian-American Bank for their claims against the schooner Alice, which I now hand you [showing document to witness], do you know that Heckman & Hanson refused to execute that document?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. It is what I have stated it is, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. An assignment of the claims of Heckman & Hanson against the schooner Alice to the Scandinavian-American Bank?—A. Yes, sir; as security.

Q. As security?—A. For the claim of the bank against Heckman & Hanson.

Q. And authorizing the Scandinavian-American Bank to proceed to collect those amounts either by libel or otherwise?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about the reason?—A. No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Why they refused to execute this assignment?—A. I do not.

Q. Now, the letter which you spoke of this morning which was written on the next day after this instrument is dated, to wit, on June 13, 1901, is the letter that demanded a settlement of their account?—A. That is the letter referred to.

Q. And that was for the same accounts that were involved in this claim against the schooner Alice?—A. That is true.

Q. Now, the fact is, then, as I get it, that Heckman & Hansen being requested to make an assignment of their claims against the schooner Alice and refusing to do so, then the bank notified them to pay those claims.—A. That seems to be the chronology of the events.

Mr. DORR. In this connection I would like to have these two papers identified as exhibits.

The CHAIRMAN. Identify them.

Mr. MCCOY. You are not going to put those in evidence along with the other papers?

Mr. DORR. I am going to offer them as exhibits.

Mr. HIGGINS. You and Mr. Finch have not agreed yet as to the papers you want to put in.

Mr. DORR. We have practically agreed on all of them.

Mr. MCCOY. Are these the same sort of papers which would be marked as "Exhibits A, B, C," and so forth?

Mr. DORR. No, sir; these should have the serial numbers.

Whereupon the documents are received in evidence and marked, respectively, "Exhibit No. 66" and "Exhibit No. 67."

Mr. DORR. The assignment now being marked "Exhibit No. 66" and the letter of the bank to Heckman & Hansen being marked "Exhibit No. 67."

Mr. MCCOY. That is the assignment which was requested and refused.

Mr. DORR. Yes, sir; the form of the assignment which was not executed.

By Mr. DORR:

Mr. Finch, is it not a fact the schooner Alice transaction, so far as the receiver was involved, were all set forth in the second report to the superior court?—A. Oh, it was referred to in there. I have not read that for a long while, but I presume it is in there; yes, sir.

Q. I hand you that report and I will ask you to refresh your recollection and state whether the full history of that matter is not set forth in that report [handing report to witness]?—A. Let me say that the reference made here to that litigation—now, whether it is the full history of that I do not know any more than you do—was something that occurred before my time. I can read it over and give my opinion if you want me to.

Q. So far as you and I could tell at this time it appears to be covered in that report?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The report shows that the receiver bought the schooner Alice for $6,000 at marshal's sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In pursuance of a stipulation that had been made, and that has all been referred to in this hearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the bank's claim against Heckman & Hensen for——A. (Interrupting.) Alleged overdraft——

Q. (Continuing.) For overdrafts——A. Had been wiped out.

Q. Had been thereby liquidated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that way Heckman & Hansen were paid for the amounts they had against the schooner Alice?—A. That is true.

Q. For this work?—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. You mean the receiver got it, don't you, Mr. Finch?—A. That is true; that is what I meant.

Mr. DORR. That is what I mean; the receiver got it.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

Mr. DORR. And the——

Mr. MCCOY (continuing). Liquidated the claim, as I understand it.

Mr. DORR. It liquidated the claim.

By Mr. DORR:

The schooner Alice was afterwards sold by the receiver for $15,000, wasn't it?—A. No.

Q. You say not?—A. I say not.

Q. Are you certain of that?—A. Why, yes.

Mr. MCCOY. I understand it was sold at receiver's sale, and after having bid it in and owning it, it was sold for fifteen thousand.

Mr. DORR. I mean he bought it from the marshal at $6,000, and then liquidated the bank's claim against Heckman & Hansen, and then he, as receiver of Heckman & Hansen, sold the schooner for $15,000.

A. That is news to me, if he did.

Q. You do not know of that?—A. I never heard of it. I would like to have known it if it had been true.

Q. I have a certificate of title signed by the deputy collector of customs of this district showing the entire title of the schooner, and it contains record of sale that I have just asked you about [showing document to witness], P. L. Larson, receiver of Heckman & Hansen, to the schooner Alice, incorporated—that seems to be an incorporation—$15,000.—A. Yes, sir; that seems to so state there.

Q. And that is an official certificate of title, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. From the customs office of this district?—A. Yes.

Q. That certificate also shows a mortgage of $20,000 on the schooner Alice?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. It shows it how?

Mr. Dorr. Just as a recorded mortgage.

Mr. McCoy. You mean the sale for $15,000 was subject to the mortgage, and the mortgage still remained a lien?

Mr. Dorr. That is the way I understand it; yes, sir. I do not understand that any of those sales affected the mortgage.

Mr. McCoy. They won't usually.

Mr. Dorr. If the mortgagee has been a party to the libel proceedings, yes, they would, but I do not understand that the mortgagee was.

Mr. McCoy. Is it not a fact that in admiralty that the man who does the last work on the vessel and libels it or sells it, that that proceeding wipes out all claims?

Mr. Dorr. Provided they are made parties.

Mr. McCoy. Regardless of whether they are made parties; it is a proceeding in rem, in which the parties do not have to be mentioned at all; is not that a fact?

Mr. Dorr. I do not understand it that way, Mr. McCoy. Of course, my understanding may not be correct; but in any event, I do not believe that that is material here, if the receiver bought it for $6,000 and later sold it for $15,000, and then if he in that way received that money to pay the claims which you mentioned this morning.

Mr. Finch. Why, yes; that is, he had an amount that would if he wanted to.

Q. These claims aggregated between $13,000 and $14,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Which you specified this morning?—A. That is true.

Q. Have you any knowledge but what they was done; have you any knowledge but what that was done?—A. Only my knowledge of human nature; that is all.

Q. And that implies that there must have been some crookedness somewhere?—A. Well, I can not imagine why he would make a profit of $7,000 and go and give it to somebody else.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Finch, that when Judge Hoyt appeared in the supreme court in connection with the proposed sale over there that he argued for a postponement of the sale?—A. I am willing to accept it that way; I do not know what his position was, but he never conferred with me and he was conferring with the other parties, and——

Q. Are you sure——A. I mean to say that at that time there was nothing that occurred that indicated that he was friendly to my position at all.

Q. Well, he was there in court with you; made the argument, didn't he?—A. Not in my favor.

Q. He made an argument in favor of postponing the sale?—A. He made an argument of some sort; I do not know what it was, but he was no ally of mine at that time.

Q. I did not ask about that; I am asking if he did not argue asking the superior court to continue that sale until the Federal court could pass upon the question of jurisdiction?—A. Well, I know it was not for that purpose, but I do not know what it was. The Federal court did not have any question of jurisdiction coming up before it.

Q. Why, that was the very question that was before the Federal court; as I understood you, when the Federal court issued the tempo rary injunction it was to determine whether it would take jurisdiction of this property; is that correct?—A. No; I do not recall now what the injunction was.

Q. Well, you have stated the injunction was to prevent the sale in the State court?—A. That is true.

Q. Until a hearing could be had.—A. I do not understand that it was until a hearing could be had.

Q. I understood right along that this hearing was had before the referee, Mr. Bowman, on the question of value.—A. There was no connection between those two things; absolutely none. That proceeding before Mr. Bowman was initiated by Judge Ballinger and Mr. Jones coming into Judge Hanford's court and initiating the proceedings. It had no connection with the injunction.

Q. Well, the injunction remained until the hearing was had as to the probable value of the property in the possession of the State court?—A. That is true.

Q. And after it was determined that the bid of $24,125 was a fair bid, then the injunction was dissolved?—A. That is true.

Q. And the Federal court refused to exercise any further jurisdiction over that property; that was in litigation in the receivership in the State court?—A. That is true.

Q. Now, was it not during that time that Judge Hoyt appeared with yourself and the other attorneys and asked the State court to refrain from making that sale until the matter could be determined by the Federal court?—A. No, sir; it was after the injunction was dissolved. I never got into the case until after that, and it was because of that very thing that it had been dissolved that I was called into the case.

Q. Then, after the injunction was dissolved, is it not true that Judge Hoyt made such a presentation to the State court?—A. Yes, sir. About three days after that, on the 6th of March, and opposed me, but what his argument was I do not recall. It is the fact that he appeared there that I complain about with reference to him.

Q. You are not willing to testify what his position was in that court?—A. I am perfectly willing if I knew, but I do not know.

Q. Well, you do know now if you claim, or do you now claim that the Scandinavian-American Bank received any more money than was proved on its claim?—A. No, sir; I do not make any such claim; I never did.

Q. Is it not customary in the trial of equity cases, admiralty cases, and other cases in the Federal court, where the evidence is taken and transcribed before the master, that the arguments will be had, then the court will read the testimony later?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Have you ever had any experience in that kind of litigation?—A. No, sir.

Mr. DORR. I think that is all, only I would like to have the abstract title of the schooner Alice marked as "Exhibit No. 68."

Document marked "Exhibit 68."

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, there was one point which I have not touched.

Mr. MCCOY. Make your statement, Mr. Finch, then I will ask you one or two questions.

The WITNESS. In my petition I charged that the Scandinavian-American Bank had conspired with the receiver to get the property, and down before Judge Smith it was incumbent upon me to show the connection of the Scandinavian-American Bank with the property; that is, to show that Mr. Mayhew was in fact the agent of the Scandinavian-American Bank. I have always claimed that I made such a showing there, but I can not very well present that to the committee in any form that I know of short of taking all the evidence that I took down there and arguing it; for this reason, it involves a circuitious system of bookkeeping there in the bank; it involves lots of very peculiar entries there.

Mr. MCCOY. You have submitted to us some books which we are to take with us, and which have, as you testified, some copies of entries which appear in the bank books?—A. Yes; there——

Q. (Continuing.) Just a minute—are those the entries which you say were made circuitously and which need explanation, or are there others?—A. Well, there are some of them—I don't know—I guess there are all of them, only that in the books there is not all the evidence that was given before Judge Smith touching these same items that were entered there. Let me say this, that the story of the bank relative to the financing of the matter in the State court was this, that J. E. Chilberg, J. W. Kelley, E. L. Grondahl——

Q. Who were they—identify them?—A. They were all officers of the Scandinavian-American Bank.

Q. Is that a National or State bank?—A. State bank. They had established a credit—that was their expression—for Mr. Mayhew by giving the bank a $30,000 note, and against which Mr. Mayhew was privileged to draw. That sounded all right, but the note that they put in evidence was one that was dated in January sometime, but never was put in record in the books of the bank until the 3d day of April, when I asked for an order from this court upon the State court that all of the moneys that it had should be brought over here. That note never having gone to record in the bank, I would have to argue, then was postdated and could not be there on the 3d of April. The various items that Mayhew spent—he began spending money in the previous December, and the checks were there, but they had tacked to them a so-called debit slip, which debit slip they said was carried simply among the bills receivable of the bank and no record made of it, and so I had to argue that if those checks of Mayhew and deposit slips, if there had been any attached at that time, were the items of Kelley and Grondahl and Chilberg, they would have been charged to such in the bank. Then, finally, when they were put on record they were charged to the account of the Seattle Ship Yards Co., and it was admitted by Mr. Grondahl there——

Q. In the testimony?—A. Yes—not Grondahl, but Soelberg, or Mr. Lane, that they did not belong to the very account they were charged to. Now, that circumstance, I recall that I stated in my argument to Judge Hanford—I do not have that argument before me, but I can show it to you and cite the record where that is shown.

Q. That argument is in evidence?—A. Yes; that argument is in evidence.

Q. And in it is contained a reference to the pages of the testimony?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, can not the committee by using that argument and having the testimony before it get what you now claim to be the situation?—A. Yes, sir; but I would have to do this then, and it is the wisest anyway. I will have to go to the records in this court here and get the exhibits which were introduced, so that you will understand them better—I think you will have to have the exhibits.

Q. All right. Do that and bring them to the committee. Now, was that all you wanted to add?—A. I might add this one point while I am speaking about that $30,000 credit. The Bowman proceedings—the reference to Mr. Bowman was to determine whether the $30,000 was an adequate price for the property, and Judge Hanford found that it was. Then the proceedings before Judge Smith—the same parties who had gotten Judge Hanford to take that view of it are the same parties who got Judge Smith and Judge Hanford to take the view that they had a $30,000 fund which they were prepared to spend for this property, and Judge Hanford was asked to confirm, and has confirmed both the reports—that $34,000 was an adequate price—at the same time they had the fund of $30,000 to spend if they had to for the property. That is all.

Q. You know who the stockholders of the shipyards company were at the time it was organized?—A. That evidence was taken there. I could get it for you.

Q. Well, if you recollect—do not testify unless you do.—A. I do not.

Q. Was it disclosed that any of the officers of the Scandinavian American Bank were also directors or stockholders or trustees in the shipyards company?—A. Yes; I know that it does, but I can not give you the amount of stock or who they were.

Q. Well, that is all. We will try to find that out in the regular way. Now, calling your attention to these items which you read this morning, giving the total of the claims against the Alice and aggregating $13,292.17, I will ask you whether any of those claims were claims solely against the Alice, not against Heckman & Hansen personally [showing claims to witness]?—A. I know what the items are, but I do not appreciate your question.

Q. I mean a man who does work on a vessel of any kind subject to the maritime law has a claim against the vessel?—A. Yes.

Q. If he does not satisfy it out of the vessel he has a personal claim against the people for whom the work was done. Now, some of these people may have been claimants against the Alice for material furnished Heckman & Hansen?—A. There is nothing of that sort in it.

Q. Now, you look at it carefully and see whether any of those people were those who had furnished labor, material, or services which went into the Alice and made a claim for that, which was also included in the Heckman & Hansen claim?—A. There is nothing of that sort involved here. Each one of those claims were claims against the boat, but they did not in anyway involve Heckman & Hansen.

Q. Now, I call your attention to Exhibit No. 66, and you were asked a few minutes ago whether this paper was not presented to Heckman & Hansen, and whether they, or one of them—at any rate, the firm—did not refuse the execute it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The paper if executed would have been an assignment of certain claims of Heckman & Hansen against the American schooner Alice?—A. That is true.

Q. In lead pencil after the words "total sum of" appears without any dollar mark the figures 8017.36, apparently $8,017.36 between the word "of" and these lead pencil figures, examine the paper and say if there ever were any other figures, and if so whether they now appear to have been erased.—A. Apparently they have been erased.

Q. Did those figures appear to have been in ink or in lead pencil?—A. I think in lead pencil.

Q. Just take a look at it—they do not strike me so—does not the first figure appear to be a seven?—A. It does.

Q. Can you make out what the second erased figure may have been?—A. I should simply guess that it was an eight; I can't make it out very clearly—I don't know what it was.

Q. At any rate there has been an erasure there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you now say that those figures erased were written in pencil or in ink?—A. I can not tell.

Q. Never mind that, any of us can guess as good as anybody else. It is clear that the first figure of those that were erased was the figure seven?—A. That is true.

Mr. HIGGINS. This is not quite clear to me; I do not see the significance of it.

Mr. HIGGINS. You claim it appears to be?

A. It appears to be.

Q. It appears to me to be a seven—we will get some experts on it with a magnifying glass. Now, in reference to the list of claims aggregating $13,292.17 the first of the claims in favor of Heckman & Hansen against the Alice is there stated to be $7,305.52, is not that so?—A. That is true.

Q. Now, you have testified that you believe that the amount $812.17, which was the claim of Heckman & Hansen against the Alice arising out of other transactions than the $6,000 transaction was wiped out by these stipulations?—A. That is true; that was my claim.

Q. Did you see anything about this certificate No. 66 that makes you believe that that amount was intended to be included in the assignment, except the lead pencil figures of $8,017.26?

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that the same paper.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; that is Exhibit No. 66.

The WITNESS. Well, the singular number is used in the assignment. It purports to assign a certain claim and demand—if there had been two that it meant to assign I should have thought it would have said "claims and demands."

Mr. MCCOY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all, all of Mr. Finch?

Mr. DORR. There are two amounts in the lists of claims which you have given that are approximately the same amounts that is written in Exhibit 66 in lead pencil, are they not?

A. Approximately so.

Mr. DORR. Not exactly, but approximately.

Mr. MCCOY. About $100 difference?

The WITNESS. About $100 difference.

Mr. DORR. Yes; that is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any witness present who is anxious to get away? Is there some one you wish to call, Mr. Dorr?

Mr. HUGHES. We are anxious to take up the Greenwood case, but Mr. Douglas has come in and perhaps we might call him. His testimony will be short.

J. F. DOUGLAS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your name to the committee, please.

A. J. F. Douglas.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Douglas?—A. Seattle, Wash.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twelve years.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. I am secretary and treasurer and manager of the Metropolitan Building Co.

Q. How long has that been your occupation?—A. About five years.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any particular line you wish to examine Mr. Douglas on?

Mr. HUGHES. He is an attorney also.

The CHAIRMAN. You are an attorney at law, are you?

A. Yes; I am an attorney. I am a partner in the firm of Douglas, Lane & Douglas.

Q. Oh, yes.—A. Senior.

Q. And are you engaged in the active practice of the profession?—A. Well, the firm is actively engaged. I don't do very much business myself.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Douglas, state briefly to the committee what opportunities you have had, by association with Judge Hanford, to know his personal habits, and whether or not he is addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.—A. Well, I think I have known Judge Hanford about seven years. I could not be sure of the date, but I think I have been a trustee of the chamber of commerce about that long and I think about the—at the time I first got acquainted with him he was a trustee of the chamber; at least I saw him at a good many meetings about that time, and then I have seen him—well, I think, every few days since I first got acquainted with him.

Q. Well, what other matters have you been associated with him in which would give you an opportunity to know his personal habits?—A. Well, I belong to the Rainier Club and I have—I attend the club pretty regularly, and I have seen him at the Rainier Club and I have seen him on the streets and I have seen him in social functions.

Q. Were you a member of the board of trustees of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition when he was a member of that organization?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. How?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you a member of the San Francisco relief committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was chairman of that?—A. Yes; I was chairman of one of the subcommittees, the housing and feeding committee, I believe.

Q. Well, he was chairman of the general committee?—A. The general committee; yes, sir.

Q. Did you have much opportunity to come in contact with him during that period of time for some weeks after the disaster?—A.

Well, I think I saw him frequently all the time that work was going on, which was probably about six weeks, I guess.

Q. Met him by day and by night both?—A. Oh, I have seen the judge frequently by day and by night.

Q. Seen him in the court room?—A. No; I have not seen him in the court room, because I don't practice in court. I don't go to court.

Q. Have you ever seen him when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you seen him when he seemed to be relaxed—to close his eyes or nod his head?—A. No; I have not seen that.

Q. You haven't seen it?—A. No.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you live in the same neighborhood the judge lives in?—A. No; I don't. I don't consider myself on intimate terms with the judge. I have met him in a business way and I have seen him a great many times, but I never have been in his home and have only known him in a social way when I have attended public functions where he has been present.

Q. And your opportunities to see him—your opportunities were casual merely, you would meet him on the street or see him at some public gathering or something of that sort?—A. Yes; I saw him in the meetings of the board of trustees of the chamber, and I have seen him, it seems to me, very frequently at the Rainier Club.

Q. Saw him there oftener than anywhere else?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen him drinking?—A. No; I never did.

Q. As far as you know, personally, he has never drank?—A. No; I would not swear that I never saw him take a drink, but I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) But you have no present recollection of having seen him?—A. No.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all; you may stand aside.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there witnesses present who have been subpœnaed or requested to come this afternoon? If so, please arise.

VICTOR CARLSON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Q. How did you get to know who he was?—A. I lived on Tenth Avenue and Newton. I generally used to see him on the street car, and I know where he lives—saw him outside his house.
Q. How frequently did you see him during those years?
Mr. McCoy. What do you say—saw him outside in his house?
A. Outside his house.
Mr. McCoy. Outside his house?
A. Well, I couldn't say. I didn't see him so very often; no.
The Chairman. What did you ride with him on?
A. Pike and Broadway
Q. From where to where?—A. From—well, one time I did'nt know when he got on there, but the first—then he went to——
Mr. McCoy. Speak a little louder.
A. Well, I have got an awful bad cold. So I rode to—on Tenth Avenue to Newton; there where I live. I lived there for three years.
The Chairman. How long a ride is that; that is, how long did it take you to go that distance?
A. Oh, it will take about 20 minutes from the city.
Q. Well, from the time——A. (Interrupting.) Twenty or——
Q. (Continuing.) That you got on and saw Judge Hanford on the car until you got off, or until he got off; how long was it?—A. Well, I didn't see Judge Hanford on that car before we got to Prospect. Then he came and wanted to get off the car.
Q. Where at?—A. Prospect and Tenth Avenue.
Q. Is that near his home?—A. Why, that is two blocks away from his home.

Q. How much nearer?—A. Why, the conductor let him off at Highland Drive; that is a block north.
Q. Whereabouts in the car did he sit?—A. I don't—I didn't see him in the car.
Q. Well, didn't you see him in the car at all?—A. I was standing on the back platform.

Q. How near to you was he?—A. About 3 feet.
Q. What was the judge's condition at that time with reference to being sober or not sober?—A. My opinion was that he was drunk.
Q. That he was what?—A. He was drunk; intoxicated.
Q. Why did you think so?—A. Why, he smelled—smelled liquor, and the action, and I saw him after he got off the car, he is walking.
Q. What action do you mean; what do you mean by that?—A. Well, he just came out and he hardly could keep his body straight he got hold with one of his hands and then down on the lower step; he stood there and drawed his water right there.

Mr. HUGHES. I can't understand the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know what you said after you said he stood there. You said something, but I didn't get it.

A. He stood on the lower step and began to draw his water, and I said——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you mean that he was standing on the step of the car and started to urinate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the car in motion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there others on the platform than you?—A. No, except the conductor.

Q. Well, what happened after that?—A. When he started, the conductor—the conductor stopped the car and let him off, and I said to the conductor, "If that had been a common man," I said, "you would have kicked him off the car," and he says, "no; the judge—I know the judge in that condition," he says.

Q. What did he do after getting off the car; did he stand there or walk on?—A. He walked on toward his home, right in the street.

Q. How far did he walk?—A. In the street?

Q. How far did he walk while you were looking at him?—A. Why, I could not say, but that is only a few seconds. The car was started, and then when we got up to Galer we could not see him any farther.

Q. What time was it?—A. Well, I imagine about 12 o'clock.

Q. At night or day?—A. At night, or after 12.

Q. When he walked on the ground after getting off the car, how did he walk?—A. Very unsteady. Walked with his head away low down and very——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you see him at any other time on a street car?—A. Yes; I saw him other times on the street car, too.

Q. Did you see him at any other time when you thought that he had been drinking or was under the influence of liquor?—A. No. I saw him when he—one time when he was nodding his head, but I never thought he was—I could not swear to it that he was in the influence of liquor then; no.

Q. You spoke of the odor of liquor from him that night?—A. I did.

Q. What kind of liquor?—A. Why, it smelled very strong. I couldn't really say what kind; maybe it was mixed with both whisky or beer or whatever—it smelled very strong.

Q. Have you ever had any litigation in the judge's court?—A. No, never.

Q. Have you ever had any business transactions with him?—A. No; never spoke a word to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. Were you ever in his court?

A. No.

Mr. HIGGINS. As a witness?

A. No. This is the first time I am in.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Carlson, when was this first occasion that you described; when did it take place?—A. Why, I think it was in 1909.

Q. What time in the year 1909?—A. Early in the spring.

Q. Early in the spring. What month?—A. It was in the spring of 1909.

Q. Well, can you give us the month in was in?—A. Why, no; I could not.

Q. Who was the street-car conductor?—A. I don't know.

Q. You rode on the car———A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Every day, didn't you?—A. Yes; but I never—it was very late, and I never took any notice to the conductor except that I spoke to him "If that had been a common man," I says, "you would have thrown him off the car." That is all the notice I ever took, and I didn't ride very often after that, either.

Q. What kind of a looking man was the conductor?—A. Well, he is a young man, with a smooth face.

Q. How long had he been on that run?—A. I don't know.

Q. Is he still on that run?—A. No; I don't think so.

Q. You don't think so.—A. But I aint been traveling very much on the Pike and Broadway there for the last two years.

Q. You think that was about 12 o'clock at night?—A. Well, around there. It was very late a night.

Q. The conductor was standing on the rear platform, and Judge Hanford———A. Where I was.

Q. (Continuing.) And Judge Hanford go off the car?—A. He got off the car; yes.

Q. Stopped the car?—A. Stopped the car just when he crossed Highland Drive.

Q. You spoke of Prospect Avenue. Was that where you said Judge Hanford called to him or spoke to him?—A. He came out just when we crossed Prospect, he came out in the back and wanted make—kind of motioned, he never said a word or anything, and he got down on the steps of the car.

Q. He came out at Prospect———A. (Interrupting.) Well, between Prospect and Highland Drive, and the conductor stopped the car and let him off at Highland Drive.

Q. Wait a minute now. He walked back through the car onto the rear platform while the car was going between Prospect Avenue and Highland Drive, the next street to the north; is that right?

Mr. McCoy. Excuse me, Mr. Hughes, that is not what he said. He said he didn't see him until he came out at the door. He didn't say he saw him walk through the car.

A. No, I didn't.

Mr. Hughes. What———

A. (Interrupting.) I didn't see him walking through the car.

Q. You didn't see him walking through the car?—A. No; I never noticed that.

Mr. Hughes. I didn't assume that that was a material fact at all. I thought of course he had to walk through the car to come to the door.

The Witness. But I didn't see him do it.

Mr. Hughes. But you didn't see him until he got to the door?

A. No, I didn't see him before he got out on the platform.

Q. But where was it that you saw him come from at Prospect Avenue? I understood you to say that he walked back there and stepped down on the step between Prospect and Highland Drive; is that right?—A. He came from the inside of the car, but I didn't see him before he went on the back platform.

Q. And that was when you were between Prospect and Highland Drive, while the car was proceeding on its way?—A. Yes.

Q. And he had motioned or spoken to the conductor, which, to stop?—A. He didn't say anything, he just went past the conductor and down on the lower step and stood there and held on with one hand and the other he started to urinate.

Q. Before the car came to a stop?—A. Before the car came to a stop.

Q. Well, did he continue until he was through?—A. He did after he got off the car.

Q. Oh, after he got off the car. The conductor stopped the car——A. (Interrupting.) Before he got to the destination he was going to.

Q. The conductor stopped the car at Highland Drive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the street just this side of Judge Hanford's house? He [referring to the stenographer] can't get a nod. "Yes," you mean, don't you?—A. Why, he—by right he lived at Galer. That is one block south of his house, Highland Drive is.

Q. Well, Galer Street does not extend on to the west?—A. Yes; it runs against his fence.

Q. Highland Drive is the first street south of Judge Hanford's house?—A. Yes.

Q. And Galer is nearly opposite, or a little north—a little north of Judge Hanford's house?—A. It runs about against his——

Q. (Interrupting.) His house is between Highland Drive and Galer?—A. Yes.

Q. But nearer to Galer. And he got off at Highland Drive?—A. Yes.

Q. Did the car go on immediately after he got off?—A. Right away.

Q. And you saw Judge Hanford stand there, did you?—A. No; he kept walking in the street toward his home.

Q. How?—A. He walked in the street toward his home.

Q. Toward his home. The streets were brightly lighted there, were they?—A. (Witness nods.)

Q. What is it?—A. Yes.

Q. Bright lights between Highland Drive and Judge Hanford's house, are there; bright street lights at that time in 1909? What is that?—A. Yes. It is light at Highland Drive.

Q. How far did you see Judge Hanford after he got off?—A. Not very far.

Q. About how far?—A. Well, I imagine about six or seven seconds.

Q. Did you have any further conversation with that conductor, so as to fix it——A. (Interrupting.) Not a word.

Q. And you can't give us any more information as to who that conductor was?—A. No.

Q. You can't fix the time any more definitely than you have fixed it?—A. No; I would not do that, because I ain't sure.

Q. You can't remember what you had been doing that evening down town, so that we could fix the time?—A. No; I couldn't.

Q. Where had you been, do you know?—A. Why, no; I don't. I never—really, I just been around the city, that is about all I know. I don't really remember any certain place I been to or anything like that.

Q. Had you yourself been drinking anything?—A. Why, sometimes.

Q. Had you, I say, that evening?—A. No.
Q. I don't care what your general habits are.—A. No.
Q. Had been around the city and had not drank any that evening?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ever try to get a job of painting at Judge Hanford's house?—A. No.
Q. Did you ever call up, repeatedly call up, Judge Hanford or his son, on the telephone, about painting his house?—A. Never.
Mr. McCoy. Do you know whether your partner ever did—the man that works with you?
A. I don't know. I don't think so, because he never said anything to me about it.
Mr. Hughes. Is there any other painter in that locality by the name of Carlson?
A. It is another painter in the city; I don't know if he is here——
Q. (Interrupting.) No; in that locality, but in that locality by the name of Carlson?—A. I don't know.
Q. Did you ever ask for the job, urging that you should have it because you lived in that locality?—A. Never.
Q. You never did. That is all.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. About the street lighting at that time up on this street: What street was it on—Broadway?—A. Tenth Avenue.
Q. Tenth Avenue?—A. Yes.
Q. What about the street lighting there; was it well lighted at that time?—A. Oh, no; I think there was only small lights.
Q. What is that?—A. I think it was—I ain't sure—I could not say that was there only all small lights or if it was arc light.
Q. Electric lights or gas light?—A. Electric.
Q. Electric lights?—A. Yes. Just about them days, the same light now as it was then. It was just before the fair.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Is there some other witness present? Is Mr. Anderson in the room—Carl Anderson? Is your name Anderson?
Mr. Anderson. My name is Nelson Anderson.
The Chairman. Please come forward. I guess you are the man we are thinking of.
Nelson R. Anderson, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:
The Chairman. Give your full name.
A. Nelson R. Anderson.
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Anderson?—A. Seattle.
Q. How long has it been your home?—A. Four years.
Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-eight.
Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Lawyer.
Q. How long have you been practicing law?—A. Four years.
Q. Have you any business connection, or are you alone?—A. I am alone. I am associated with John W. Roberts. I have no connection with him, though.
Q. You are not partners?—A. No.
Q. Are you devoting your time to anything else than the practice of law?—A. I am not.

Q. What is the nature of your practice?—A. Largely commercial law.

Q. Bringing you into what courts?—A. Sometimes into the United States district court; generally in the superior court of the State.

Q. Of course you are acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I have had—I have appeared before him two or three times.

Q. How much of the time have you been in his court?—A. I think I have only argued matters before him twice.

Q. What were they—lawsuit or bankruptcy matters?—A. They arose out of bankruptcy matters.

Q. Claims in bankruptcy?—A. Well, one case was a writ of review taken before him from the referee; the other time the issuance of a show cause order; the other time a motion was pending before him.

Q. Is that the extent of your presence in his court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity to observe the judge elsewhere than in court?—A. None at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask him?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Mr. Anderson, were you attorney for anybody in the matter of the Western Dry Goods Co. in bankruptcy?—A. I was attorney for local creditors and a number of eastern creditors in the case of the Western Dry Goods Co. v. Sutcliffe Baxter, which arose out of the Knosher matter.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you spell that name?

A. K-n-o-s-h-e-r & Co.;

Mr. McCOY. That is the Knosher concern was the bankrupt and the Western Dry Goods Co. was the creditor moving in the matter and you represented that——

A. (Interrupting.) They were the creditors; yes.

Q. Now, in that matter an order was made for the sale of the property of the bankrupt. Was that order made by the referee or by Judge Hanford?—A. I think it was made by the referee, although I don't know.

Q. Well, the record appears to show that it was. Is it the practice in this district to have the referee order sales——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Of property in the hands of receivers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is it the practice in this district for receivers to practically wind up bankruptcy proceedings?—A. I have known of some instances in which that has been done. I have a case pending now in which the receiver has made a sale of the assets and that practically winds up the estate.

Q. In those cases does the receiver also make the distribution or is there a trustee elected to make the distribution?—A. The trustee makes the distribution.

Q. So in the cases you speak of the referee, or the receiver rather, does substantially all the work and then turns the assets over to the trustee for mere distribution?—A. It sometimes works out that way.

Q. How often have you known it to work out that way?—A. Well, I have had two cases in which that has been done.

Q. What were they?—A. The case now pending in the matter of Clarence C. Lane, bankrupt.

Q. How much is involved in that case?—A. The assets sold for $1,650.

Q. Did the receiver also continue the business in that matter for any length of time or not?—A. He continued it for five or six weeks.

Q. Who was the receiver?—A. I. H. Jennings.

Q. In this matter of the Knosher bankruptcy, who was appointed receiver?—A. Sutcliffe Baxter.

Q. And did he continue the business of the bankrupt?—A. No, he did not.

Q. Did he claim that he did?—A. He did.

Q. On what did he base his claim?—A. His report is in the record. That report sets out that he had qualified, I think about noon the day of his appointment, which was the 27th day of February, 1911, and that he permitted the store of the bankrupt to continue until that evening, at which time he held a meeting of a number of the creditors and it was then decided to close the store of the bankrupt, whereupon an inventory was taken which occupied the balance of that week. The inventory began on Tuesday and was consummated Saturday, and then he made a sale of the assets along about the 15th of March, I think it was, and on the 20th of March he was elected trustee. It was on those facts that he based his contention that he actually carried on the business of the bankrupt.

Q. And did he contend on the basis of what he did after the first day, in the way of taking an inventory, or on the basis of what he did on the first day in letting the business continue until the close of the day?—A. I don't know that I ever talked with Mr. Baxter himself about it.

Q. What was the claim made in court for him?—A. His attorneys argued that the taking of an inventory and the making of a sale constituted him one carrying on the business of the bankrupt. Before Judge Hanford I am quite positive that they never argued that the mere fact that he allowed the store to remain open the balance of the day that that constituted him one carrying on the business of the bankrupt.

Q. And Judge Hanford's holding was that allowing the store to remain open and taking the inventory and selling the assets together constituted carrying on business within the meaning of the bankruptcy law so as to permit the allowances made under those circumstances?—A. Yes.

Q. That is when a man does run the business?—A. Well, now when the argument was had before Judge Hanford he simply held that Sutcliffe Baxter, as such, on those facts was something more than a mere custodian. He did not hold that he was one actually carrying on the business of the bankrupt until he signed the final order made in that case, in which he so found and held.

Q. And Judge Hanford made an allowance to Mr. Baxter as receiver on the basis of carrying on the business; that is so, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And that allowance was $2,500, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Does the bankruptcy law provide that before making an allowance notice must be given to the creditors?—A. It does.

Q. Was there any notice given in that case, as a matter of fact, to the creditors?—A. At the time that I first filed objections to the receiver's allowance and to the allowance to his attorneys, there had been no notice given. At that time $5,000 had been ordered paid and was actually paid to the receiver and his attorney, but no notice had ever been given. After I filed my objections, the court ordered notice to be given and set a certain time at which all parties making objections might be heard.

Q. Well, before you interposed any objection——A. (Interrupting.) No notice had been given.

Q. (Continuing.) No notice had been given of any kind?—A. None at all.

Q. Had the referee in bankruptcy had anything to do with the allowance?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. No application was made to him?—A. No.

Q. But the application came straight to Judge Hanford?—A. It was made directly to the judge.

Q. What is the practice in this district in that respect?—A. So far as I know, it is the universal practice to go before the referee in the first instance.

Q. On notice to creditors?—A. Yes; notice to creditors must be given.

Q. As prescribed by law?—A. Yes.

Q. And the creditors then, of course, have an opportunity to give their views as to the allowance?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have marked as an exhibit, No. 2050, being a transcript of record on petition for revision in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, the Western Dry Goods Co., a corporation, and others, petitioners, against Sutcliffe Baxter, receiver and trustee of the estate of Charles Knosher & Co., a corporation, bankrupt, and John Annisfield Co., respondents, in the matter of Charles Knosher & Co., bankrupt.

The Chairman. Let it be marked.

Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 69."

Mr. McCoy. You are familiar, Mr. Anderson, I presume, with "Exhibit No. 69?"

A. I am.

Q. At page 26 is given a summary of cash receipts and cash disbursements in the matter of the Knosher bankruptcy. That is there correctly stated, is it not?—A. I think it is.

Mr. McCoy handed Exhibit No. 69 to witness.

A. I think that is a true copy of the files. That fact is stipulated between attorneys for the petitioners and those representing the receiver.

Q. One item of the cash receipts is merchandise sales, $1,119.08. Were those the sales made on the part of the day during which the business was permitted to run?—A. I would not be able to answer that. I presume that is it.

Q. And another item is "Miscellaneous, $55,931.94." That includes the general sale of the assets?—A. In bulk; yes.

Q. They were sold at auction?—A. Yes, sir—not at auction, but special sale.

Q. I mean advertising and bids being presented?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And balance cash on deposit in Seattle National Bank of $56,486.17. That includes the proceeds of the sale of the assets?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not at any time the receiver had to bring action to collect any of the claims due the bankrupt?—A. I know of none. I don't say that there were never any.

Q. Was Sutcliffe Baxter subsequently appointed trustee?—A. He was elected trustee.

Q. I mean elected. What was the total dividend, percentage dividend, paid in the matter?—A. I think 22½ per cent have been declared up to this time, and probably a further 10 per cent dividend will be declared. I am not sure about the latter.

Q. This estate is not yet closed?—A. Not yet; no.

Q. Apparently you are wrong about the dividends that had been declared. It is 12½, isn't it, instead of 22½?—A. Well, one dividend of 12½ per cent was declared, and later a 10 per cent dividend was declared; I think that is correct. The first dividend declared was 12½ per cent; later a dividend was declared of 10 per cent. I think that is true.

Q. What was the outcome of the appeal to the circuit court of appeals?—A. Well, now, before I answer that, to make a full and complete story I think you should permit me to state that——

Q. (Interrupting.) I wish you would, please, anything you care to.—A. (Continuing.) That the compensation of $5,000 allowed to the receiver and his attorneys——

Mr. PRESTON. If I may interrupt, I have a copy of the opinion of the circuit court of appeals for your record.

Mr. MCCOY. Just as soon as Mr. Anderson gets through that we will put it in.

Mr. PRESTON. He was just telling about it now.

The WITNESS. No; I wasn't telling about that.

Mr. PRESTON. Oh.

A. The compensation of $5,000 originally allowed the receiver and his attorneys——

Q. (Interrupting.) That was equally divided between them?—A. Yes. (Continuing:) After hearing on the objections was cut down by Judge Hanford to $4,401.20, and that sum was made to cover the compensation of the receiver and trustee and the attorneys for the receiver and trustee; three thousand and some odd dollars of that sum was allowed to the receiver and his attorneys on the basis that they had actually carried on the business of the bankrupt as a going concern. On the writ of review the circuit court of appeals cut that allowance exactly in one-half, so that the receiver and his attorneys were allowed fifteen hundred and some dollars, to be divided equally between themselves. The compensation allowed the trustees and his attorneys was not objected to nor was it disturbed. It was properly allowed on the basis that the trustee was an ordinary trustee.

Mr. MCCOY. Now the opinion might go in. Just have it marked as the next number, "Exhibit No. 70." It is the opinion of the circuit court of appeals on appeal from decision of Judge Hanford in regard to allowances to the receiver in the Knosher case and to the receiver's attorney.

Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 70."

Q. Have you known of any other case, Mr. Anderson, in which a similar practice has been adopted in this district in regard to allowances to receivers?—A. You mean——

Q. (Interrupting.) I mean the pratice of making an allowance without appliction to the receiver and without notice to creditors.—A. I know of none.

Q. Have you had any other bankruptcy cases in Judge Hanford's court in which you deemed his ruling in regard to allowances either to the receiver of the trustee or attorneys for either receiver or trustee were objectionable?—A. That is the only case that I ever took before Judge Hanford.

Q. Have you been interested for anybody in any way in any such case as that I have spoken of?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you in any way ever represented an assoication in this city—credit men's association?—A. I represented them in this case.

Q. Your client then, although nominally the Western Dry Goods Co., was the what?—A. Was the Seattle Merchant's Association as it was then known, and is now known by the name of Seattle Merchants and Credit Men's Association.

Q. Is that a corporation?—A. It is.

Q. Who is the president of it?—A. E. G. Anderson.

Q. Is he a relative of yours?—A. He is a brother.

Q. Who are the other officers? Name them in the order of their importance as is usually considered?—A. Mr. F. S. Hills is the secretary and treasurer.

Q. And what is your brother's business connection?—A. He is president of the Western Dry Goods Co.

Q. And Mr. Hills' business connection is what?—A. He is the actual manager of this association.

Q. Well, now name the others and give their business affiliations as you do so, including, if you know, any directorates in other companies, banks, or otherwise; we just want to know who they are and what their business standing is.—A. Mr. Morganstern was vice president of this organization, but I think his term of office only lasted two months and another person, whose name I don't recall, was then elected vice president.

Q. Now, this question was meant to be confined to this time, not to the time when the———A. (Interrupting.) Oh, at the time these proceedings were instituted?

Q. No; at the present time, now, while you are testifying, who are they?—A. Well, I have named the officers, president, secretary, and treasurer, and I am not able to recall the name of the vice president.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is secretary and treasurer?

A. The secretary and treasurer is Mr. F. S. Hills.

Mr. HUGHES. Is Mr. O. L. Woods the vice president?

A. I think perhaps he succeeded Mr. Morgenstern, because he is of the Schwabacher———

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Woods?

A. O. L. Woods.

Q. What is his business connection?—A. He is the credit man for the Schwabacher Grocery Co.

Q. Is that the full name of that grocery company?—A. There is a Schwabacher Hardware Co. I think I gave you the full name—Schwabacher Grocery Co.

Mr PRESTON. No, Schwabacher Brothers & Co. (Inc.)?

A. Is it? Well.

Mr. MCCOY. That is called the Grocery Co.

Q. Well, who are the other officers or directors or trustees, or active men in it; who is connected with it?—A. Now?

Q. Yes.—A. Mr. A. E. Knoff.

Mr. PRESTON. Here is a list of them; perhaps that will help his memory [producing paper].

Mr. MCCOY. Now, if you will just take them up one at a time. Mr. Preston says that is a correct list [handing paper to witness].

A. This is a correct list.

Q. What is it you are undertaking to name now?—A. I am naming the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Trustees?—A. The trustees; the names of the trustees of the Seattle Merchants & Credit Men's Association. I gave you the name of A. E. Knoff. He is of the United States Steel Corporation, a subsidiary corporation called the United Produce Co., I think; I am not sure. Mr. J. W. Spangler, he is connected with the Seattle National Bank in the capacity of vice president, I think. Mr. George H. Black is president of the Black Manufacturing Co.

Q. What is their business?—A. A manufacturer of overalls. Arthur Foster is connected with the Seattle Mattress Co., I think. Le Roy E. De Long is credit man for Julius—the National Grocery Co. H. E. Jones is connected with John B. Agen & Co. H. E. Gaunce is an officer and is the credit man of J. T. Hardeman Hat Co. O. L. Woods is named as credit man for the Schwabacher Brothers Co. (Inc.), and E. G. Anderson, president and treasurer of the Western Dry Goods Co.

Q. Did this association have a dinner or a banquet, or whatever you would call it, recently at the Hotel Washington Annex?—A. I think they did.

Q. Were you at that dinner?—A. I was.

Q. And did you make any statement to the persons who were present at that time?—A. I made a brief statement of the results accomplished in the Knosher case so far as the receiver's allowances were concerned. I didn't go into the other branch of the case.

Q. Is that all that your statement included?—A. What I have testified to here?

Q. Yes.—A. My statement at that meeting——

Q. (Interrupting.) Yes.—A. (Continuing.) Included merely the statement of the results accomplished before the circuit court of appeals, and I believe I made some recommendations to these gentlemen; that is all.

Q. Well, let's see that we understand each other, Mr. Anderson. I am now talking about a statement that you made at this dinner. Did you say anything alse at that dinner except to report the results in the Knosher case?—A. Nothing, except in addition to that I made certain recommendations to this association as to the policy that they might pursue in bankruptcy matters; nothing more than that.

Q. Did you premise your remarks in regard to what policy they might pursue by any statement of facts or matters that had happened in bankruptcy other than those that had happened in the Knosher case?—A. Yes, I believe I did.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Anderson, I don't want to pump you. I was told——A. (Interrupting.) I am willing to state anything.

Q. I was told that you spoke at that meeting.—A. That is correct.

Q. I don't know what you said, and I don't want to corkscrew it. I have asked you whether there was anything and you haven't stated it, except you now say you premised certain remarks by certain other remarks. Now, it is the other remarks that I want.—A. Well, these other matters were made incidentally. I merely made a statement based on the results accomplished in the Knosher case, and then I made a statement that this case was merely illustrative of the practice in the bankruptcy court, that it was not a sporadic case where excessive allowances were made. I then referred to the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. case, in which I merely stated that there could not sensibly be a different rule in the business world from what there was in the courts, and that it was inconceivable to me that a business man would conduct the business of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. with the result that something less than 10 per cent dividends were declared, when, as I was informed, they might have realized over 50 per cent had they accepted a bid that was made at the beginning of the bankruptcy proceeding.

Q. Well, now, were you undertaking to state to them what you knew of your own knowledge?—A. No, I was not.

Mr. McCoy. Well, then, I think it would be fair to have this statement that has just gone in stricken from the record. As far as I am concerned it may remain, but I did not want Mr. Anderson, so far as I was concerned, to testify to anything that he did not know something about as a matter of fact.

Mr. Higgins. He is detailing his address at this banquet now.

Mr. McCoy. Well, I am simply saying that I don't want that unless he there stated things which he knew.

Mr. Hughes. You mean not the last statement that he made, but all that he has said relative to his remarks there, aside from the Knosher case; that was what you meant be stricken, was it, Mr. McCoy?

Mr. McCoy. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. McCoy. Had you made any examination in the bankruptcy court of the results in the McCarthy Dry Goods case?

A. None at all.

Q. Who was your informant on whose statement to you you based your statements at this dinner?—A. Mr. Sanford, who was manager of the Seattle Dry Goods Co., a wholesale dry goods store, and Mr. Starr, who is also an officer of that company, told me that they had made this bid.

Q. Now, I don't care for hearsay, but we will go at them. You were simply basing your criticisms on what they had told you.—A. And I have talked with a great many men on that subject, who were interested.

The Chairman. The statement may remain in the record as a guide for future inquiry on that subject, and with it goes the other statement that it is hearsay, and of course its value as evidence will be determined by that explanation. But it may remain in the record.

Mr. McCoy. Well, then, under the circumstances of the record, you might just as well go ahead and state all that you said at that meeting and on what you based your statements in the way of information, or, where you knew of your own knowledge, why, then make it clear what part of it was of your own knowledge.

A. Well, I also referred to the Western Steel Corporation, in which allowances were made, on information furnished me by the referee, and which he told me that ten thousand I believe had been paid the receivers, ten thousand to the attorneys for the receivers, and that probably the trustee would receive ten thousand and the attorneys for the trustee ten thousand. I had read in the paper, and I am not sure that the referee told me, that he had received six thousand.

Q. The referee himself?—A. Yes; yes. I had also read in the paper, I think, that the attorney for the petitioning creditors had received a thousand dollars and that the attorney for the bankrupt had received five hundred, as I remember, and that totaling those up with the necessary expense of inventorying, appraising, I think I made the statement that the expenses of administration in that case would approximate $50,000. I also made this criticism——

Q. (Interrupting.) Had the Western Steel Co. bankruptcy yet been wound up?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Well, then the $50,000 was the matter of expense up to the point to which it had gone at the time you were talking; is that right?—A. No; I don't think the trustee and his attorneys had been paid at that time.

Q. Well, have they been paid since?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, what was it——A. (Interrupting.) I made the statement the referee told me that probably——

Q. (Interrupting.) Oh, that they would probably get that.—A. Yes.

Q. All right, if you will finish.—A. I think in that connection I made the crticism that the receiver and his attorneys had been paid their allowances early in the bankruptcy proceedings and at a time when the laboring class at Irondale was in needy circumstances.

Q. Is Irondale where the Western Steel plant was?—A. Yes. That I thought that if there was not enough money to pay all expenses of administration and to pay the laboring classes that the laboring classes should be paid first and that the officers should wait until there was sufficient money to pay them; I thought that was the policy of the law. I think that those are the only two cases that I referred to.

Q. Well, if you know of any other cases in which you think allowances here in bankruptcy have been fairly open to criticism, or any other practices in the administration of the bankruptcy law has been open to criticism, you might state those.—A. I have nothing to state in that connection.

Q. Well, what do you mean by that——A. (Interrupting.) I know nothing.

Q. You don't know of anything else. Now, do you know of any meeting of any committee of this corporation—credit corporation—that has been held since this congressional committee began its work here?—A. Why, I was not present at such a meeting. I understand there was one.

Q. Who were present, so far as you were informed?—A. Well, as far as I know, the only person I talked to was my brother; I don't know that he mentioned anybody who was present except himself, Mr. Klock, and Mr. Goldsmith.

Q. Mr. Klock, you say?—A. Yes; K-l-o-c-k.

Q. Is he one of these trustees whose names you have read?—A. No.

Q. Who is he?—A. Why, I presume he is the Mr. Klock of the Klock Produce Co.

Q. Is he an officer or trustee of the credit association?—A. I think not.

Q. And who is Mr. Goldsmith; what is his name?—A. Why, James Goldsmith. I think he is connected with Schwabacher Bros.

Q. President of what?—A. Beg pardon?

Q. You say he is president of some company?—A. No; I don't know what office he holds. He is one of the officers of that company.

Q. Schwabacher what——A. (Interrupting.) Bros. Co. (Inc.)

Q. Is that the grocery concern——A. (Interrupting.) That is; yes.

Q. What are his other business connections?—A. Why, he is chairman of the transportation bureau of the chamber of commerce. I don't know what other connections he may have.

Q. Were you, after this meeting at this dinner at the Hotel Washington Annex, called into consultation by the credit association, whose name I don't just remember—this corporation, or by any committee of it, or by any of its officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, so far as your knowledge goes, or your information, rather, the only meeting of this association or any committee of it or any of its officers was the one at which your brother was present and Mr. Goldsmith and Mr. Klock?—A. That is all I know of at the meeting.

Q. What is the object of the Credit Men's Association, the one you have been speaking of, so far as stated in its certificate of incorporation or in its practice, do they differ any——A. (Interrupting.) Its object is to disseminate information along credit lines among its members and to secure equality in the distribution of parties who become insolvent and whose assets are wound up outside of court; to prevent unnecessary litigation on the part of certain creditors jumping in and getting ahead of other creditors. That is the principal object of the organization. It is also a member of the National Organization of Credit Men.

Q. Have you ever been present at any meeting or heard of any meeting of the association or its officers or committees at which any policy was discussed, or line of policy, in regard to keeping cases out of the bankruptcy court in this district?—A. No; I never heard the matter discussed at any meeting.

Q. Well, have you ever heard it discussed anywhere in connection with the association or its affairs?—A. Oh, I have talked with the secretary and treasurer and I know that is the principal object for which it is formed, to ask in that manner, not so much to defeat the jurisdiction of the court as to administer the estates economically. They can save the expenses of administration, and I believe that it is also their theory that they can get better prices. Their secretary is supposed to be an expert who is acquainted with parties that might buy bankrupt estates—that is, insolvent estates—and the cost of membership is very small, the charge of the association for handling such matters is extremely small, it hardly pays for itself.

Q. Do you happen to know whether this secretary, this man whom you say is an expert, was consulted in this Knosher case?—A. This party that I have just mentioned, Mr. Hills, has only been in office since June 1. His predecessor was Mr. I. H. Jennings, who has since resigned. He was consulted. The fact of the matter is that is the way I was brought into the case. Mr. Telfer, who was assistant secretary, called me up, stated that the Western Dry Goods Co. was the largest creditor in the Knosher case; that this allowance had been made; that he believed it was excessive, and would I make a report. That is a practice of the association, to retain as the attorney for the association in special matters that attorney who represents the largest creditor who is also a member of their organization, and so I reported on this case, that the allowances had been made without due process of law and that they were excessive under any interpretation of the act.

Q. Well, was this predecessor of Mr. Hills—what do you say his name was?—A. I. H. Jennings.

Q. Was Mr. Jennings also skilled in appraisals and knowledge of where he could best dispose of bankruptcy estates?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or any commercial estate?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you know whether he was consulted by the receiver in the Knosher case in regard to the value of the bankrupt's property and to the best method of disposing of it and generally as to getting a good price?—A. So far as I know he was not consulted.

Q. Has the Western Dry Goods Co. ever been in bankruptcy?—A. Oh, no.

Q. That is, still a going, solvent concern?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. What do you know about the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. bankruptcy?—A. Nothing more than I have stated; that at the beginning they were offered a bid that would have paid dividends of 50 per cent and that after the business had been conducted, I believe, for a period exceeding six months it actually paid out less than 10 per cent.

Q. And who was the receiver in that case?—A. Mr. Baxter.

Q. Did he finally sell the assets of the company as receiver or as trustee?—A. Oh, he must have been trustee. He could not have been receiver after that length of time.

Q. He could not have been receiver after six months?—A. No.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. Did I understand, Mr. Anderson, that you were the general attorney for this association?—A. I was retained as attorney to file the objections to the allowances.

Q. Allowances in what case?—A. In the Knosher case, to the receiver——

Q. (Interrupting.) And what part from the Knosher case? Does the association have a general attorney?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who acts for them in these collection and credit matters and appearances?—A. I think they have a number of attorneys that they refer small accounts to, and following the rule that I have laid down that when a special matter was before the association, they would retain the attorney of the largest creditor.

Q. Have you acted for them, as a matter of fact, in a good many matters in the last few years?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. And are continuing now to act for them?—A. I have represented them lately; yes.

Q. I wish you would fix the date of the meeting at the Washington Hotel Annex, where the banquet was held.—A. Well, it was about the 10th to the 15th of June last.

Q. 1912?—A. Yes.

Q. What was that, the annual meeting?—A. They held a monthly.

Q. That was the monthly meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were invited to be present, or did you go as a matter of course?—A. I was invited to be present.

Q. As attorney?—A. Yes.

Q. What subjects were—or what credit subjects were discussed at that meeting?—A. I was called on to make my remarks almost the first—after the secretary had read the minutes of the last meeting I was called upon to make a brief statement of the Knosher case. Having finished that, I left.

Q. Did you return?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that at that meeting you also discussed the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.?—A. I made the statement that I have repeated here at that meeting.

Q. How?—A. I made merely the statement in connection with the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. that I have repeated here. It was all a report on the Knosher case, and, as I stated, I stated to them that the Knosher case was merely an illustrative case of bankruptcy practice.

Q. I understood you to say, further, that you talked about the Western Steel Co. receivership?—A. I received that as among instances in which excessive allowances had been made.

Q. I want to know what you said, Mr. Anderson, with reference to the receiverships and your experience in the bankruptcy court and what information you gave at that meeting?—A. Outside of statements relative to the Knosher case, I made no statements, excepting those which I have here stated regarding the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. case and the Western Steel Corporation case. If you want me to repeat what I said about the Knosher case, I think I can probably do it.

Q. You were called there for the purpose of giving these gentlemen information about the practice——A. (Interrupting.) No; I was not.

Q. What were you invited there for?—A. The circuit court of appeals on June 3 had rendered its decision in the Knosher case, and I went before them to repeat or to give them a statement of what had been accomplished. Now, the Seattle Merchants' Association, or Seattle Merchant and Credit Men's Association, had taken an interest in that case because they went into it not for the purpose of making a reduction in money but to establish a precedent that would be binding on this court, and those men wanted to know what we had succeeded in doing in that respect, so I stated to them that we cut the allowances in half and established a rule that under circumstances similar to the Knosher case the court would not in the future allow double allowances.

Q. Then, in that connection you discussed the Western Steel Co. and the other cases which you have referred to?—A. I made only the statements that I have repeated to you.

Q. How does the Seattle Merchants and Credit Men's Association compare in size with other credit associations in the city?—A. There are no others except collection agencies. This association is made up of the wholesale houses of Seattle, and, as a mere incident and as one of the minor features of that organization, they run a small collection department, handling accounts for their own members only and accepting some eastern accounts which are largely forwarded to them by affiliated members of the credit men's associations in other cities.

Q. Now, from this date in June, which as I recall it you said was about the 10th, you thought——A. Tenth to the fifteenth.

Q. (Continuing.) Tenth of June this year, from that time until the time your brother told you of the meeting with Mr. Klock and Mr. Goldsmith, as far as you know the Seattle Merchants and Credit Men's Association didn't have this matter under discussion?—A. As far as I know they did not.

Q. At any rate they did not call upon you——A. (Interrupting.) They did not.

Q. (Continuing.) For any information?—A. Did not.

Q. Nor notify you to attend any meetings of their officers or committees?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say your brother is now the president of the association?—A. I do.

Q. And he is connected with one of the largest dry goods stores in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is Mr. Goldsmith?—A. One of the officers of the Schwabacher company—Schwabacher Bros. & Co. (Inc.).

Q. He is a member of the association, is he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Klock a member of the association?—A. Yes; I think so; I don't know.

Q. And all you know of the conversation between Mr. Goldsmith and Mr. Klock, your brother has told you?—A. That is all I know about it; yes.

Q. You never talked with Mr. Klock?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor with Mr. Goldsmith?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor with anybody else?—A. Nobody.

Q. Except your brother?—A. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions, gentlemen?

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to ask Mr. Anderson a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Do so.

By Mr. PRESTON:

Q. The report of the receiver in the Knosher case, which is in the printed record there (Exhibit No. 69), contains a statement of the receiver to the court that at the close of the first day's business, after consultation with creditors, it had been decided not to be advantageous to undertake to continue business further. Can you give the committee any information about that?—A. No, sir; I would like to have some. I hope the committee will ask Mr. Baxter when he is on the stand who the creditors were with whom he consulted.

Q. And you have no knowledge of the matter yourself?—A. Absolutely none. I have inquired for it, but never received it.

Q. Now, when you appeared there to move against the allowance that had been previously made to the receiver and his attorneys without notice, did you call the attention of Judge Hanford to the fact that the allowance had been made without notice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he then caused a notice to be given—he then fixed a time for hearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And caused notice to be given to the creditors——A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) At that time and place, and at that time and place you were present representing the creditors whom you appear by this Exhibit No. 69 to have represented?—A. I was there with Mr. Dovell, of Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey.

Q. I say and representing these creditors?—A. Yes.

Q. Which the Exhibit No. 69 shows you were appearing for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was there anything in the nature of a ruling there by Judge Hanford at the close of that hearing other than appears in the printed record No. 69?—A. I don't recall any ruling now. In justice to Judge Hanford I will say this, that when I argued that matter before him he said that he intended that allowance to cover the receivers' allowance and the trustees, and I thereupon called his attention to the fact that the petition which was laid before him and the order which he signed recited expressly that the allowance was to the receiver and his attorney only, and that at that time the attorneys for the trustee was before the referee petitioning for an allowance to the trustee and themselves as attorneys for the trustee. Of that fact probably Judge Hanford had no knowledge.

Q. The result of that was that Judge Hanford made a reduction in the allowance?—A. He did; yes.

Q. And that order that he made appears here in the printed record, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have spoken of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. matter. My information, Mr. Anderson, is that that was not in bankruptcy, but in equity in the circuit court. Do you know any difference from that?—A. I don't know anything about it except what I have been told.

Q. You supposed it was a bankruptcy matter at the time you made your address?—A. I supposed it was; yes.

Q. If it was not and was in equity in the circuit court, you were misinformed?—A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Which one is that, Mr. Preston?

Mr. Preston. McCarthy.

A. However—well, that is all right.

Mr. McCoy. However what?

A. Why, my opinion would not be any different; it had been in the equity department or in the bankruptcy department. The facts are the same. The actual dividends is the only matter I refer to.

Mr. Preston. Who did you get your information from about that McCarthy case?

A. Mr. Sanford, the manager of the Seattle Dry Goods Co., and Mr. Starr, also an officer of that company, who were the parties that made the bid. I have talked with other creditors. I remember at this meeting here—if you want me to go into that?

Q. Well, I was going to ask you a question. I don't care to ask you what other people told you except to get to that particular point.—A. That is all right.

Q. Were you told of the fact, if it be a fact, that the reason why the sale was not made was because the creditors themselves opposed it?—A. No; I never knew that. I never heard that statement made.

Q. You spoke about the allowance to the referee in the Western Steel Corporation case.—A. Yes.

Q. You are quite familiar with the statute——A. (Interrupting.) I think I am; yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Governing bankruptcy proceedings. Is it true, or not, that that statute fixes the referee's fees?—A. It does.

Q. And did you mean to convey the idea at the banquet that that allowance had been excessive?—A. No, no; not at all; not at all.

Q. The fact of the matter is——A. (Interrupting.) The fact is, whenever I have mentioned the referee in any public meeting or in private it has been only to praise him. I don't want to be understood as making any criticism of the referee whatsoever.

Q. Well, that allowance would be made by the court, though, would it not?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. What I want to get at is, the $6,000 allowance to the referee in that Western Steel case was within the statute, was it not?—A. Oh, I always thought it was; yes.

Q. Now, they realized, did they not, something over $700,000 from the assets?—A. I have understood that was the fact.

Q. And what is the referee's allowance by statute?—A. One per per cent, and 25 cents, I believe, for each notice sent out.

Q. You said something at the banquet about the labor claims in the Western Steel Corporation not being taken care of. You had that, I suppose, simply from some general rumor or something of that kind?—A. Well, the thing that called my attention to it particularly was, I was in attendance at the First Presbyterian Church one morning when the Rev. Matthews also made the statement and asked for a collection to take care of the laborers at Irondale, who were in needy circumstances. That was my first information on that point.

Q. Well, do you know whether they were laborers who had claims against the bankrupt estate?—A. I presume that there are no laborers at Irondale except those connected with the Irondale institution. There is no other business there.

Q. Were you advised of the fact that the order of sale that Judge Hanford—or the referee, I don't remember now which it was—made in the Western Steel case, expressly provided that the purchaser must furnish cash enough to take care of the labor claims?—A. No; I don't know anything about that.

Q. Did you make any inquiry at the office of the attorneys for the trustees in the Western Steel Corporation case to ascertain whether the laborers' claims were being taken care of or not?—A. No; I did not.

Q. Did you ascertain, in the course of your investigation of the matter, that the fees in the Western Steel Corporation case that were allowed to the receivers and attorneys and trustees and attorneys were required by the order of sale to be taken care of by the purchaser, the Metropolitan Bank?—A. I don't know whether I had heard that statement before that meeting or not. I have heard the statement, I think——

Q. (Interrupting.) Since then?—A. I don't know whether it was since or before; I don't remember.

Q. You have never examined the files?—A. I never examined the files; no.

Q. Now, at the banquet, in your remarks there, I would like to understand whether you spoke, as you say you spoke, of the Knosher case as a typical case, explaining the meaning to them by using the other two cases as showing that that was a typical case; is that the idea that you conveyed?—A. Yes; I think that is a fair inference; yes.

Q. That the Knosher case was a typical case because these two other cases were like it and made it typical; is that the idea?—A. Well, I didn't mean to convey the idea that they were similar in point that no notice had been given, but merely as far as excessive fees are concerned.

Q. I mean that.—A. Yes; I did.

Q. I believe you said that you had no information about those gentlemen who were present at the committee meeting of the Credit Men's Association?—A. Absolutely not.

Q. So that if I should read you the list of them it would not help you at all?—A. Not a bit.

Q. You just know three?—A. I barely mentioned the subject.

Q. And you know those simply because your brother told you?—A. Just alluded to them.

Q. You spoke of the Western Dry Goods Co. as being the largest creditor. You mean the largest creditor of all the creditors?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Of the resident creditors?—A. The largest resident creditor who was also a member of this association.

Q. Just locally?—A. Yes; just locally.

The CHAIRMAN. The largest in the association?

A. Yes; the largest in the association.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Where can I find the date of the appointment or the election of Mr. Baxter as trustee in this matter?—A. Well, you can't find anything in there, I don't think.

Q. Well, do you recollect what the date was?—A. He was elected trustee on March 20.

Q. And what was the date on which he had received those allowances as receiver from the court?—A. That is probably in there. I think it was along about the 13th of March. Maybe the 15th; probably the 15th, along there.

Q. Well, then, how could Judge Hanford suppose that he was making an allowance to cover both the services of the receiver and the trustee if the trustee had not been appointed?—A. Well, I can't explain that. I can't explain that. Nobody else, probably.

Q. Well, let's assume, for the sake of the argument, that the trustee had been elected at that time, but was not in court making application for an allowance, is it customary to anticipate such an application and make it at the time when the receiver is applying?—A No; it is not customary, and if I remember the bankruptcy act at this time it provides that allowances shall not be made until the estates are closed. Now, that is my recollection of the bankruptcy act. It is there in the act, or in the decisions of the courts.

Q. Well, that is, an allowance to a receiver would be made when he closed the receivership?—A. Yes.

Q. An allowance to a trustee when he closed the estate?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, this Knosher Co. was a retail dry goods business, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was in active operation on the day when the petition was filed. What was it, a voluntary or involuntary proceeding?—A. Why, on the face of it it appeared to be involuntary. I always considered it a voluntary action, because the brother-in-law of the bankrupt was one of the petitioning creditors. The ground of bankruptcy was an admission on the part of the bankrupt that he was insolvent and willing to be adjudged a bankrupt.

Q. I forget whether the bankruptcy law has been changed so as to permit a corporation to go into voluntary bankruptcy?—A. The law was changed in 1910, permitting a corporation to go into bankruptcy voluntarily.

Q. Without going through that form——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Of admitting that they were bankrupt, in an involuntary proceeding?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether there was any litigation in this matter?—A. None that I know of.

Q. I notice on page 77 of Exhibit No. 69 a statement that McClure & McClure and Leopold Stern were the attorneys for the receiver?—A. Yes.

Q. What necessity, if any, was there for having two attorneys or a firm of attorneys and an individual attorney outside?—A. Oh, there was no necessity. That is nothing unusual. Mr. Stern and McClure & McClure by combining their claims were able to elect Mr. Baxter as trustee. In consideration of that fact he detailed them as his attorneys, but the mere fact that there were two attorneys would not lead the court to increase the compensation.

Q. How can you be sure of that?—A. Well, that is the law. I don't know whether the court took that into consideration. He should take it in, and I should say that he did.

Q. Well, was there in the allowance of this $2,500 to attorneys anything to indicate how much was to go to McClure & McClure and how much to Leopold M. Stern?—A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. You might say the court was encouraging litigation over the fee, then.—A. I might—no; I would not say that.

Q. No; I say you might say, if he put it up to attorneys to divide $2,500 without saying how; there might be some trouble?—A. Oh.

Q. I didn't mean to say or intimate that Judge Hanford was doing that; I only attempted to be facetious——A. I understand.

Q. (Continuing.) And in a way I failed. I meant to say that attorneys might squabble over $2,500 if somebody didn't tell them in advance how to divide it between them, that is all.—A. Yes; I understood that.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with this witness? Are you ready for an evening session?

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, you haven't touched on the vital point in this case. If you hadn't subpœnaed me, I probably would not have brought it up, but as long as I am——

The CHAIRMAN. Speak it out now, Mr. Anderson.

A. There is another branch of this case in which Mr. Dovell and I brought an action against this John Anisfield Co., asking for an accounting and for an injunction. This petition was laid before the referee in the first instance, because the judge was absent from the jurisdiction. That matter came on to be heard pursuant to a show-cause order. Mr. Preston appeared representing the John Anisfield Co. and entered what were called objections to the jurisdiction, which were in the nature of a demurrer. The referee sustained those objections and on writ of review we laid that before the United States district court. The referee certified to the United States district court four questions, I believe, two of which were important, at least the circuit court of appeals mentions them in its decision, and those were that the petition was not properly brought because the trustee had not brought the action, and secondly, that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a proceeding summarily, that it should have been by plenary suit if at all. Those questions were before the court—before the United States district court, Judge Hanford, for decisions. At the same time we had these objections before him to the allowance of Mr. Baxter. The objections first filed were objections on grounds of law only, that the allowance had been made without due process of law and was excessive under any interpretation of the statute.

Having discovered what we believed to have been a fraud practiced upon the receiver and the court in this matter by the John Anisfield Co. conspiring with the bankrupt and with certain of its employees, we filed a new objection to that allowance, on the ground that the receiver, by his inattention, his negligence, had permitted this condition to exist. To support that allegation we filed a number of affidavits. Those affidavits were served upon the attorneys for the receiver and trustee only; none of them were ever served upon Mr. Preston who represented the John Anisfield Co. Mr. Preston himself never filed any affidavits. Neither Mr. Preston nor Mr. Dovell nor I ever argued the matter to the court. We presumed that the court having had two questions of law certified to him would decide those questions of law, but when the decision was rendered in that case he pretended to decide the matter on the merits. Now, before giving my opinion on those matters, if I could have some one go into the referee's office and get the briefs there I could soon show you that everyone understood that those affidavits were filed for the purpose of sustaining our objections to the allowance to the receiver and not in any way relating to the John Anisfield controversy. Mr. Dovell and I—everyone suspected that the circuit court of appeals would fall for such a decision as that, but in the decision which the circuit court of appeals rendered they said that the United States district judge having, as he did, decided the case on the merits, in which the petitioning creditors participated, they are not now in a position to object, that he decided the case on the merits. Since that decision has come out we have filed a petition before the circuit court of appeals asking for a modification of the opinion in that particular. The decision as it now stands would preclude us from bringing a plenary action against the John Anisfield Co. on the ground stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you get those files yourself?

A. They are in the referee's office now.

The committee here took a recess until 7.30 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

7.30 O'CLOCK.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing. Same witness on the stand.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you had access since the adjournment to the papers you spoke of, Mr. Anderson?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if you will, make whatever statement you care to about those.—A. [Referring to documents.] I think, first, I will refer to the petition for modification of the opinion, as that relates to the merits of the matter connected with the John Anisfield Co.

Q. Just to get the matter a little clear in my mind: In this petition which you have a copy of, is the situation set forth which you briefly described before the adjournment, namely, that you had raised certain law points which in any way affected the issue which had been made in that particular matter?—A. The issue of fact; yes, sir.

Q. The issue of fact?—A. Yes, sir; this sets it forth.

Q. Now, the issue of fact which was raised was as to whether or not there had been some fraud in connection with the valuation of the assets of Knosher & Co. leading to a lower price than it was contended might have been obtained if the fraud had not existed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the issue of fact?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if you will explain the law point which you raised in the matter.—A. The referee certified up four questions of law, two of which only are important. The first question raised by the referee was that the suit should have been commenced in the name of the trustee.

Q. What suit?—A. The suit of the Western Dry Goods Co. and other creditors against the John Anisfield Co., charging a conspiracy to defraud. The second question of law raised was, had the United States district court jurisdiction by summary proceedings to hear the matter. Those questions were pending before the United States district judge at the time he rendered his opinion pretending to decide the case on the merits as if evidence had been submitted.

Q. Now, there are certain affidavits printed in—what is the number of that exhibit?

Mr. PRESTON. Sixty-nine.

Mr. MCCOY (continuing). In Exhibit No. 69 of this proceeding there are certain affidavits charging fraud and other affidavits undertaking to set up facts to disprove the fraud.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those certified up by the referee in bankruptcy?—A. No, sir; those were never filed before the referee in bankruptcy.

Q. They were never filed before the referee?—A. Never.

Q. How did they come to get into these exhibits?—A. An objection made to the allowance of compensation to the receiver and his attorney; it was heard directly before the United States district judge, and naturally he sustained the allegations of those objections, and we filed those affidavits in the clerk's office; so, of course, they were in the same files that the writ of review was found in—all in the same matter. They are not classified differently; they arose in the matter of Charles Knosher & Co., bankrupt.

Q. How was the question raised before the referee on this matter of fraud—how far did that get before the referee?—A. A demurrer was sustained.

Q. Demurrer to what?—A. Demurrer to our petition.

Q. What was the petition?—A. The petition set forth that the bankrupt and certain of his employees and the purchaser at the bankrupt sale had conspired to place a false valuation—false by $30,000 on the assets down there with a view that when the John Anisfield Co., who was a part of the conspiracy, had purchased the property, that the balance was to be turned over to the bankrupt.

Q. Who had filed that petition?—A. Mr. Dovell and I had filed it on behalf of the Western Dry Goods Co., and the Seattle Dry Goods Co., and the creditors named there in the petition.

Q. Who raised the points against it?—A. Mr. Preston appeared for the John Anisfield Co. and filed what he called objections to the jurisdiction, which was a demurrer setting up that the court had no jurisdiction.

Q. And in that document he specified four points practically of lack of jurisdiction.—A. Well, I think he set them up—the referee certified four points—I believe Mr. Preston raised them all; however, it is part of the record—I do not recall it.

Q. And were those legal propositions before Judge Hanford at the time when the question of reviewing the allowances was before him?—A. Yes, sir; at the same time.

Q. They were before him on the certificate of the referee certifying those questions up for decision by the judge?—A. In the Anisfield case.

Q. For a review of the decision of the referee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you can go ahead from that point.—A. As I stated this afternoon, none of the affidavits which were filed in that case, with the exception of two affidavits filed at the initiation of the suit, which were for the purpose of obtaining an injunction, had any connection with the petition relating to the John Anisfield Co. as it stood before Judge Hanford. The affidavits that we filed were served only on the attorneys for the receiver and trustee and not on the attorneys for the John Anisfield Co., nor did the attorney for the John Anisfield Co. submit any affidavit on his own behalf, nor was there any argument on the question of the merits or of the law relating to the John Anisfield Co.'s petition before Judge Hanford.

Q. At the time when the question of allowances was up, or at any other time?—A. No; never mentioned.

Q. Now, what took place at the hearing before Judge Hanford?—A. There never was any hearing.

Q. There never was any hearing on the———A. (Interrupting.) Writ of review—it was never argued.

Q. Did anything take place in regard to this allegation of fraud?—A. Just before I pass that—I say it was never argued—briefs were submitted, however, by both parties to the court—now what is the question?

Q. Was there any oral argument?—A. Relating to the John Anisfield Co. petition—never.

Q. Was there any oral argument in regard to these affidavits of fraud?—A. There was argument on that and the affidavits were specifically called to the attention of the court in this way—I told the court that numerous affidavits had been filed and I did not doubt that he would prefer to read those in his chambers and I called his attention to them, that I had filed myself.

Q. What took place on that statement by you?—A. Well, the court did not render any opinion at that time, except to reaffirm what he had said at the former hearing, that he believed that the receiver in this case was something more than a mere custodian; that was all.

Q. I think you stated before adjournment this afternoon that there was something in this opinion of the circuit court of appeals referring to the matter and referring to you in some way or other—is that right?—A. The circuit court of appeals did not make any reference to me. Judge Hanford devoted a paragraph to me, I believe.

Q. In some opinion that he handed down?—A. In this opinion in the Knosher case.

Q. What was it he said?—A. I will have to read that.

Q. Are you reading from a copy of the record in the circuit court of appeals?—A. Yes.

Q. Which is the same as the exhibit which is here before us, No. 69?—A. After referring to, or quoting an affidavit filed here by other parties, he states—do you want me to read this?

Q. Yes.—A. On page 54 of Exhibit No. 69. [Reading:]

To corroborate this information the leading attorney for the objecting creditors has made an affidavit asserting "that he has in his possession what purports to be and is represented to him to be the true and original memorandum and data of the inventory as taken in certain departments of the store of said bankrupt; that he has compared such memorandum and data with the receiver's report and finds a variance and difference of over 100 per cent in the items covered, aggregating several thousand dollars, and that he is informed by responsible persons in position to know, that this condition was general throughout the store."

Now, skipping the next paragraph, which is not properly in here from the point of coherence, I will come to the next paragraph below that. [Reading:]

The attorney's affidavit above referred to, I must believe, would not have been made by a more experienced lawyer, for it necessarily creates suspicion as to his good faith. If the document which he claims to have in his possession were genuine and of any importance, it should have been presented to the court and an opportunity given for scrutiny instead of making it the basis of an affidavit while kept in concealment.

This opinion was handed down some time in August, or the first part of September, I think.

Q. The leading attorney in the matter referred to in the opinion was yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does not Judge Hanford somewhere else in that opinion, part of which you have just quoted, refer to the fact that you had stated in your affidavit that you had certain memoranda which you did not produce—or is that the only place in there?—A. This is the only reference he made to me.

Q. Well, I thought I read it through the other night.—A. Here he attaches an addenda to the opinion which he made at my request. I believe this opinion here was filed on July 18, 1911. The addenda—oh, no, the memorandum decision was filed June—no, July 11, 1911. The addenda was filed on the following day, in which Judge Hanford was very fair to me.

Q. Just read the addenda.—A. (Reading:)

Addenda. The attorney for the objecting creditors referred to in this decision has called upon me and exhibited to me the memorandum sheets to which reference was made in his affidavit, and has shown that he had substantial grounds for not making profert of the same as evidence, although deemed of sufficient importance to influence him and his clients in instituting these proceedings. I am convinced that he acted in good faith, but the result of my investigations as above announced must remain unchanged.

C. H. HANFORD,
United States District Judge.

Q. Now, your comment, or your criticism of both the quotations is this, as I understand it, that at that time the merits of the fraud issue were not before the court.—A. No; never, never.

Q. And that there was no call on the part of Judge Hanford, and no legal reason for construing the merits at that time?—A. Why, he could not construe them—I never presented them.

Q. Consequently the reflections on you were absolutely without warrant in law or in fairness?—A. Well, that is the way I felt about it.

Q. That is the way you feel about it now?—A. Oh, yes; as far as the young attorney is concerned, Mr. Dovell was not so very young, and this affidavit was submitted to him, or at least he read it before it was filed.

Q. And did Mr. Dovell know of the fact that you had this memorandum outside?—A. I think he did. He had never seen them, but I told him.

Q. Now, at any time while the matter was being presented to the court by oral argument, did he comment on the fact that you had been reflecting on anybody; and if so, what did he say, and tell what it was about?—A. No; he never expressed himself on that point. The opinion here, I should say, lends color to the suggestion carried by your question.

Q. Was there any time during any of those proceedings when the judge indicated from the bench his disapproval, by word or deed, of what you were saying, or the stand you were taking?—A. He never said anything from the bench. I don't know whether he, intentionally or not, but while I was arguing the case he turned his chair around at an angle of practically 180 degrees from where I stood; at least he had his back to the seat in that side of the court room, and he faced in this direction after I was talking—or at least after I commenced and as I concluded.

Q. That is, he turned his back to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what branch of the matter were you at that time arguing?—A. Well, I was arguing the matter of the allowance—I don't know whether I was referring to the affidavits on file or not. I think I was, because that was the—I am quite sure that was it, because I left that to the last.

Q. Did he make any statement to the effect that the persons charged or any persons charged in the matter were friendly to him or his friends, or anything of that kind?—A. No, no; nothing of the kind; not at all.

Q. Now, what is the status of this issue of fraud now?—A. The circuit court of appeals rendered its decision on July—June 3—and on the 3d of July I filed a petition asking for a modification of the opinion so far as that opinion held that we had—or tried this case on the merits. This petition for the modification of the opinion sets up all these matters, and I referred to them all except the fifth paragraph thereof, which reads:

> That it was never intended by petitioner herein to submit the controversy involving the $30,000 to the court, and it was never understood by any of the attorneys in the case that anything should be presented to the court on the merits.

I based that statement on statements made to me by all the attorneys in the case and on the briefs submitted in the circuit court of appeals.

Q. There has been no decision of the circuit court of appeals?—A. Not on that petition. It was only filed nine days ago.

Mr. McCoy. I now show you a paper marked "Exhibit No. 71" [showing]; have any steps other than those in the district court been taken against the persons charged with the fraud?

A. The Federal grand jury has indicted the bankrupt, E. Libbey, treasurer of John Ainsfield & Co., the purchaser at this sale, and I believe four of the employees of the bankrupt on two counts—conspiring to obstruct justice and conspiring to defraud the United States.

Q. Was there any attorney indicted by the grand jury in this matter?—A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Anderson, if there is anything else about this Knosher bankruptcy that this committee ought to know, involving irregularity in practice or any other feature of it in any way, bearing on Judge Hanford's dealings with the matter, will you state them?—A. Why, there is nothing of importance. I think this statement has some weight, however. I was told by Mr. Stern, attorney for Sutcliffe Baxter, that Mr. Baxter suggested that they appear before Judge

Hanford and ask him to make this allowance, because the allowances would be larger than if they went directly before the referee.

Q. What is Mr. Stern's name?—A. Leopold M. Stern. And then, about three weeks ago, I was talking to Mr. Walter McClure about this case.

Q. Also of the firm of attorneys representing the receiver?—A. (Continuing.) And he said that Mr. Baxter had been down there rather excited about the fact that the circuit court of appeals had cut the allowance in two, and said that the next time he was appointed receiver of the United States district court that he would conduct the business of the bankrupt long enough so that there would never be any question about his conducting it; Mr. McClure said he would not permit any such practice if he was his attorney. These statements are of some weight as throwing light upon the character of the receivers appointed.

Q. Has the corporation generally described by me as the Credit Men's Association—I do not remember the name of it—ever taken any action looking to the prevention of the appointment of Sutcliffe Baxter as receiver or trustee in bankruptcy?—A. I would not say that the association had. I remember that either on the day that the Knosher Co. was declared bankrupt or within a day or two of that time that the credit man for the Western Dry Goods Co., L. B. Jackson, told me that a number of the creditors had gotten together to protest against the appointment of Mr. Baxter as receiver in the Knosher case. I understood, too, from Mr. D. I. Smith, of Smith, Daniels & Cooler, a local wholesale house, that he had talked with Shank & Smith, who represented the petitioning creditors with a view to having one of the local creditors appointed receiver in this case. That action was taken. I know of nothing further.

Q. What is Mr. Stern's name—Leopold?—A. Yes.

Q. Anything further?—A. Well, I would prefer that you take these briefs—at least those parts of them that relate to this controversy. I do not care to rest the thing purely on my statement. There was never any hearing on the merits. These briefs demonstrate that. I would like to call attention here to—would you prefer that I would call your attention to page 6 of the brief of the petitioners filed by myself and Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey?

Q. In what proceeding?—A. In the Knosher matter.

Q. What branch of the Knosher matter?—A. Both branches; but one writ of review was taken. It was not necessary to take two. Mr. Dovell wrote the brief relating to the Anisfield Co. controversy. He says, on page 6:

> The opinion filed by the district judge indicates that the question of whether or not the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to entertain our petition (which was the question certified up by the referee) was not considered by the district judge, but he, considering only the affidavits which had been filed, assumed to settle the matter upon the merits and dismiss our petition, has not been sustained. We thereupon filed a petition for revision by this court. It will appear, therefore, that this petition for revision presents two questions.

Which I have indicated later under the head of "Argument."

> It is unfortunate that we did not have an expression of the district judge upon the matter which was certified to the court by the referee; that is, whether or not the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to entertain the petition. It was the view of the referee in bankruptcy, as expressed in his return, that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition for two reasons.

I have named those. On page 8 he says:

The referee having given this expression to his views and certified the matter to the district court, we had a right to assume that the court would pass only upon the question of jurisdiction, which had been suggested by the objections filed by John Anisfield & Co., and that if, in the view of the district judge, those petitions were not well taken, the referee would be so instructed, opportunity given to anyone interested in the estate to traverse the allegations in our petition, and that a hearing would then be had at which the petitioner would be given the opportunity to establish by appropriate evidence the allegations of the petition.

And there is a case cited there. And then it goes on:

It appears manifestly irregular that the referee having refused to consider our petition for want of jurisdiction, his action having been certified for review, the district judge should proceed to determine the matter upon the facts. We filed certain affidavits with our petition and in support thereof. We had asked for an injunction order restraining John Anisfield & Co. from selling the remainder of the bankrupt stock, which at that time they were selling at forced sale. The affidavits were filed for the purpose of making a prima facie showing to justify the issuance of such an injunctive order pending the action, and we had no right to anticipate that after the referee had taken the action he had and the matter had all been certified up, the court would permit the filing of affidavits on behalf of John Anisfield & Co. and would determine the matter finally with nothing before it but the affidavit.

Mr. Dovell does not clearly state the facts. He says "affidavits filed by John Anisfield & Co." Now, none were filed. There is no controversy on that point. Mr. Preston will admit it.

Q. Who did file them?—A. Nobody filed them.

Q. There are answering affidavits.—A. Filed by the attorneys of the trustee and the receiver.

Mr. PRESTON. Wait a moment before we pass that; you filed some affidavits in support of your petition.

A. I said that.

Mr. MCCOY. He was referring to the answering affidavits?

The WITNESS (continuing reading):

We assumed, therefore, that the question to be considered by this court is the correctness of the ruling of the referee in dismissing our petition for want of jurisdiction.

That is as far as our brief refers to the matter. Mr. Preston's brief is instructive.

Mr. MCCOY. Have you quoted from this brief now all that refers to this particular matter in regard to the fraud allegations.

A. So far as they relate to the merits.

Q. Would you think it well for the committee to have this brief marked as an exhibit, or simply take it for use if they care to examine it?

The WITNESS. There is nothing else in there that would be of any interest, except it takes up the receiver's allowance and speaks of the law in that particular.

Mr. MCCOY. We will have it marked "Exhibit No. 72." This is in the United States circuit court for the ninth circuit, "Bankruptcy of the Western Dry Goods Co., and so forth, against Sutcliffe Baxter, respondent, in the matter of Charles Knosher & Co., bankrupt. Brief of petitioners on petition for review." That is marked "Exhibit No. 72."

Q. Now, is there anything you would like to say now, Mr. Anderson, in reference to this same matter?—A. Yes.

Q. All right.—A. On page 2 of the brief of the respondent, John Anisfield & Co., the first paragraph on the page reads:

Here the witness reads from the brief of respondent, John Anisfield & Co., the portions referred to.

The WITNESS. I think I will have to modify my statement. I think Mr. Preston's brief would bear me out in the statement that he never held himself out to the upper court as claiming that the case was decided on the merits. I think the upper court might have construed this last paragraph in his brief that he believed that the case was tried on its merits; but I might say in that connection that Mr. Preston told me in his office about two weeks ago that he never understood that we were trying the case on the merits, at which I rejoined that he must think then that Mr. Dovell and I—I think I used the words—were a couple of fools. He said he would not say that, but he said he thought we got our foot into it on the appeal. Even at that time he never stated that he understood that in the lower court we had got our foot into it, but he understood that we had, by appealing two matters together, although he did not elaborate on that suggestion. I might say that I have also spoken to Mr. McClure, who represented the receiver and trustee, and that he stated to me that he always supposed that his affidavits were filed to substantiate the objections that we made to the receiver's allowance. That Mr. Stern, the other attorney for the receiver, had stated to me, calling my attention to the paragraph in the opinion of the circuit court of appeals relating to the contention that the case was tried on the merits; that that was mere dictum; that it was not binding on us, and was not of any weight and a matter of no importance.

Q. In reading the points certified, or the opinion, if that was what it was, of the referee, did not one of the findings, or whatever you call them, of the referee, hold that there was no merit in the contention of the issue of fraud—you just read it from Mr. Preston's points—you read four points, didn't you?—A. The third point suggests something of that kind, but I thought that he meant there that the compliant did not state a cause of action. That is what he orally announced from the bench, and I supposed that is what he meant by that third point.

Q. There were no other affidavits on file in that matter with the referee except the two affidavits filed to secure an injunction which you did secure?—you did get your injunction?—was there any answer to the petition controverting any of the allegations of the petition?—A. Mr. Preston's so-called objections to the jurisdiction.

Q. I mean, there was no action on the facts?—A. No; it was not traversed.

Q. There were special appearances to raise points of jurisdiction.—A. I think that is all.

Q. Is there anything further, Mr. Anderson?—A. I do not recall anything more.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Anderson, the records suggest that the Seattle Merchants and Creditmen's Association started to investigate the charges of the trustees and receivers in Judge Hanford's court, and with the view to establishing the fact that the allowances and charges were unreasonable and not within the law, and perhaps to further establish the fact that the same parties frequently occupied these trust positions; and you further stated that when they—by suggestion—when they commenced such an investigation and classification of cases that they stopped—did not continue the investigation. Now, do you know of your own knowledge to that effect? And if so, state to the committee what the facts are and what you know within your own knowledge.

A. I know nothing of any investigation started or contemplated, of my own knowledge. I might say that at this dinner at the Washington Annex that I recommended to them the appointment of a committee to wait upon Judge Hanford and express the sentiment that they had often expressed among themselves, and that committee was, I believe, appointed to cooperate with Judge Hanford. I told them at that meeting that they were partly responsible for the conditions existing here; that Judge Hanford was approached in these matters only by those most interested in securing large fees. I think at that meeting I called their attention to the Knosher case particularly and stated that the order passed up to Judge Hanford by one of the attorneys for the receiver left blank the amount of the allowance. Now the bankruptcy act pays the receiver or trustee on a percentage basis and it is the practice of the referee to generally figure out those percentages and present them to him and let him see that that is the result obtained. But in this case they presented the petition as they would present a petition where the allowances were wholly within the discretion of the court.

I think that I should say this much in justice to Judge Hanford, that the bankruptcy act had been changed six months prior to the time that this petition was filed before him and it may be that he did not know anything about it. I told them that if they would voice their objections to him that they would probably get some relief, and they appointed that committee, so far as I know from hearsay, and you gentlemen came to the city shortly after that and some of the creditors thought that—well, I don't know that some of the creditors thought it—but it was suggested to some of the creditors that they should cause an investigation to be made of the different allowances in bankruptcy proceedings, and that that matter was laid before this committee which I told you was appointed to cooperate with Judge Hanford. I do not know the results of that meeting, except that I was told there was something in the paper—that the committee had made a statement. I was out of the city at the time.

Mr. Higgins. My question was confined to any knowledge that you had yourself of such an investigation being started and then stopped.

A. I answer you no.

Q. I will ask you if you know of anybody who has any information about that; and, if so, who they are?—A. Well, I suppose the officers of this association have knowledge.

Q. I am not asking you for your supposition—what are the facts—if you know of anybody who has any information on that subject?—A. Well, one member who was present at that meeting and talked with me—that was my brother.

Q. What meeting are you referring to now?—A. The meeting at which this committee met with the idea of considering what position to take with reference to the allowances made in this court.

Q. Was that after this investigating committee had met?—A. Yes, sir; that meeting was held about the 2d day of July and before the 4th, somewhere between the 1st and the 4th day of July.

Q. And it is your understanding that they did not continue any classification or investigation with a view to developing the facts that the charges made by receivers and trustees were excessive.—A. If you strike out the word "continue" I will answer you "no;" they never started.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge why they did not start?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of anybody that can inform this committee why they did not start?—A. Well, I told you before one person that I knew that was present at the meeting where the question was at all talked about, and that was E. G. Anderson and James Goldsmith, and I believe, Mr. Clock.

Q. That is the meeting which you have already testified about?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of Mr. Anderson?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir; I would like to ask a few questions.

Mr. MCCOY. The meeting which you have just spoken of was, I understand, not a meeting to carry out the suggestion you made at the dinner, but to carry out a suggestion made by this congressional committee.

A. Well, I don't know whether the committee was appointed or had been appointed at that time; in fact, I am inclined to think——

Mr. MCCOY. The congressional committee?

A. No; the committee representing the association to cooperate with Judge Hanford; at that time, so far as I am informed, they had not been appointed. My brother told me that Mr. Perry had called on him and suggested something of the kind, that they take up the matter, and he said that he had been thinking of appointing a committee to cooperate with Judge Hanford, and Mr. Perry suggested that it might be well to take some position along initiating lines before this committee. I understand that committee then met shortly after, the same day or the next day, and that no action was taken, so far as I know—no affirmative action was taken at least.

Q. Was that at about the time that you were called before this congressional committee and they asked you to get such information as you had?—A. The committee never asked me to get any information for them. Mr. Perry came and——

Q. Did you call on this committee? A. Yes, Mr. Perry came down and told me you gentlemen wanted to see me that evening, that there was going to be before you a body of the business men, and I came up to your hotel that evening in response to that request. I never, however, told you that I was going to take up the matter. In fact I told Mr. Perry that I would not unless this association desired me to take it up, and I would.

Q. And they did not ask you to take it up?—A. I never had any communications from them.

Mr. PRESTON. I think it is proper at this time for me to call the attention of the committee to the fact that at the time of the suggestion by the committee, I secured, upon information, of course, a list of the gentlemen present at that committee meeting that the witness has referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would put them in the record.

Mr. PRESTON. I handed them up to you gentlemen and you handed it back to me to get the initials of some of them and I have not had time to get the initials, but it might as well be read into the record. Perhaps Mr. Anderson can supply the initials.

The CHAIRMAN. You might read the names.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, there was Mr. James Goldsmith, of Schwabacher Co. (Inc.); Mr. Hassen of the Centennial Mill Co.—I do not know his initials.

The WITNESS. I do not know either.

Mr. PRESTON. And Perry Polson of the Polson Implement Co., and then there is blank Anderson—that is your brother, I suppose—what is his name?

The WITNESS. E. G.

Mr. PRESTON. And Fred Fischer, of Fisher Bros., wholesale grocers, and blank Black, of the Black Manufacturing Co.

Mr. MCCLURE. I think that is George C. Black.

Mr. PRESTON. And then, blank Klock, of the Klock Produce Co.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know his initials?

Mr. PRESTON. No, sir; and Willis, of the Seattle Hardware Co., and C. S. Hardeman, of the J. T. Hardman Hat. Co. Now the record is complete.

Mr. MCCOY. What is the first name?

A. James Goldsmith, of Schwabacher Bros. & Co. (Inc.). Now you have the complete information so far as I can furnish it.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Anderson, you felt pretty aggrieved about the decision of the referee and Judge Hanford upon the petition to set aside the sale.

A. I did concerning the decision of Judge Hanford; I did not concerning the decision of the referee.

Q. Will you speak a little louder, please?—A. I say, concerning the decision of Judge Hanford, I was sore; I was not about the decision of the referee.

Q. And you are yet, are you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, the matter came before the referee upon the petition of your clients, the Western Dry Goods Co. et al.?—A. Yes.

Q. The substance of your allegation was that the purchaser, John Anisfield & Co., had been in collusion with the bankrupt?—A. Yes.

Q. Which had resulted in an under inventory of the stock of goods?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it appeared before the referee when the hearing came on, did it not, that the sale had been made by the receiver to Anisfield's agent, whatever his name was?—A. Lindstrom—a bill of sale was given to one S. S. Lindstrom.

Q. First it appeared that there had been a sale made for a less sum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that amount?—A. Something like $48,000.

Q. $48,000?—A. I think so.

Q. And that upon representation to the receiver that more could be realized on a resale, there was a readvertisement and a resale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that at that resale the bid was $57,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the inventoried—the appraised value of the stock that was sold for this $57,000?—A. The appraised value and the inventoried value are two different things. The appraised value was some thing over—something near $42,000—the inventory value was close to $70,000.

Mr. MCCOY. The inventory, you say?

The WITNESS. The inventory was about $70,000 of assets—the appraisement showed about $42,000.

Q. Whose inventory?—A. Well, now, the practice of this court is probably a little different from where you practice. The inventory is made by the receiver or trustee. In this case he employed the clerks of the bankrupt to make the inventory the same as a merchant would make it; the first year they count the merchandise and put down the yardage and put opposite the yardage on each item the cost value, and that is totaled up and presented to the court, and then the appraisers are appointed, who make their appraisement to a very large extent on the inventory as a basis of appraisement in this case showed about $42,000—a little over $42,000.

Mr. PRESTON. Was not the inventory in the neighborhood of $90,000?

A. We alleged that the true inventory was in the neighborhood of $90,000.

Q. This petition alleged that by virtue of that collusion the inventory, which should have been about $90,000, was considerably less?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It appeared that there had been $57,000 realized on this second sale?—A. Yes.

Q. It appeared, didn't it, that the receiver had reported the sale to the referee; thta he had concluded the sale?—A. Yes.

Q. That the purchaser had paid the money?—A. Yes.

Q. That the referee or the court had confirmed the sale; perhaps both?—A. Yes; both.

Q. Had confirmed the sale; that the purchaser had gone into possession?—A. Yes.

Q. Had sold about one-half the stock?—A. A large per cent, probably close to one-half.

Q. And that a $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent dividend had been paid out of that money to the creditors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Including the petitioning creditors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when Anisfield & Co. filed their objection to the jurisdiction before the referee didn't they, in their paper—whatever you call it—also call the attention of the referee to the fact that the purchaser had bought six or seven thousand dollars' worth of new goods and put it into the stock and sold it out in common with the stock?—A. I think you did; yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it not true that Judge Hoyt allowed you and Mr. Dovell to amend your petition twice?—A. Once.

Q. Well, let me see if I can not help your memory. You amended it once when we were arguing and you afterwards came in with a further amendment; don't you remember that?—A. Do you mean when we were arguing here we asked to treat it as if a certain allegation was made and then we would draw the papers.

Q. I am speaking about the time before the referee.—A. I think perhaps that is true. I remember when we served an amended copy on you—I think you must be right about that.

Q. In other words, it is true that after Judge Hoyt had given you leave to amend in a certain respect, you came in there with an amendment in another respect and I called your attention to it, but I did not object to it.—A. I think you are right.

Q. Then the matter came before Judge Hoyt upon the objections. Now, on page 96 of this Exhibit No. 69 is found his return, is it not, upon your petition for review, the return which he made to Judge Hanford of the proceedings before him?—A. On pages 95 and 96.

Q. Well, 96 is the substance of it.—A. Yes.

Q. He reports there, first as his grounds for his action in refusing to entertain jurisdiction, first, that there is no allegation of any improper conduct on the part of trustee or his attorneys.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was true; he was right about that, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Second, it was not alleged that there had been any demand made upon the trustee or his attorneys by the petitioning creditors that said trustee should proceed against John Anisfield & Co. to obtain the relief sought by said petitioner or any other relief in the interest of the creditors.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that statement of his was correct.—A. Yes; certainly.

Q. Then he goes on to say that in his opinion and allegation alleging such misbehavior or request and refusal on the part of the trustee was necessary to authorize any proceeding by the creditors, doesn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he says further that he was of the opinion that under the circumstances shown by the proceedings in the matter and the fact that no want of knowledge on the part of the petitioning creditors was alleged in any of the proceedings, they were not entitled to seek relief against John Anisfield & Co. in the summary proceedings, but should procure the same, if entitled thereto, by plenary action.—A. That is all correct.

Q. Further he was of the opinion that even conceding the jurisdiction of the court to grant the relief prayed for at the expense of the parties seeking it and in a summary proceeding, it would not be equitable for them to be allowed to do so, for the reason that in a plenary action where bonds and counter bonds could ordinarily be given by the respective parties the rights of all could be better protected.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then, again, he was further of the opinion that even if jurisdiction could be entertained in the proceeding, neither the petition nor the amended petition, considered in the light of the objections thereto and of the facts disclosed by the record in the bankruptcy proceeding, stated facts sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed for, or any other relief, and being advised, as hereinbefore stated, the undersigned made and filed the order sought to be reviewed.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your third ground?—A. I have not my own before me—I can't say. But this is all correct, you need not ask me about each particular item.

Q. Then the matter came up before Judge Hanford and you took the petition for review?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you also brought before Judge Hanford the question of the allowances to the receiver and his attorneys.—A. That was all referred to there.

Q. Well, that was at the same time?—A. Yes, sir; that was at the same time.

Q. We did not argue before Judge Hanford this petition for review orally.—A. No.

Q. But we both filed typewritten briefs, didn't we?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same were submitted to him by our common consent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at the same time there was before him the other matter of the allowance to the receiver and his attorneys, which had been orally argued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, there was not but the one case, was there—one set of files in the case?—A. That is right.

Q. It was all one case?—A. That is right.

Q. And in that case came up before Judge Hanford your petition filed with the referee and your affidavits that you filed in support of that petition as against my client; that is correct, is it not?—A. Well, there was only two affidavits filed in connection with the suit against you, and that was the two affidavits filed in the initiative proceedings made as a basis for the injunctive relief.

Q. They came up——A. (Interrupting.) With the writ or review; yes, sir.

Q. And the objections of John Anisfield & Co., bringing in this new matter about having bought new stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Judge Hanford had before him then the two matters, one the question of the allowance for the receivers and his attorneys and the other question between you and I, about the action of the referee in refusing to entertain jurisdiction?—A. Yes.

Q. Those matters were all before him in one case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One set of files.—A. Yes.

Q. You and I had never argued before him our matter orally?—A. Not at all.

Q. So that when he came to consider it he had before him our briefs and the files in the case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were all in one case.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now after your petition for review came up to the court—I do not mean on submission, but came into the court, there was filed two affidavits—what were the names of those parties?—A. Mr. Sanford of the Seattle Dry Goods Co. and Mr. Edwin London of the London Co. filed one—those are the two mentioned by the circuit court of appeals, but there were other affidavits.

Q. The Sanford affidavit is in the printed record?—A. They are all in the printed record, every affidavit.

Q. At page 137?—A. Yes, sir; that is the affidavit in question; the other affidavit is on the page opposite to that, page 136.

Q. Now the affidavit of Sanford is to the effect that he is the general manager of the wholesale department of the Seattle Dry Goods Co.; he tells about his experience; that he has read affidavits to the effect that the Seattle Dry Goods Co. or its agents had gone through the stock of the bankrupt, making careful and detailed notes of the stock on numerous occasions; that such statements are untrue; that he was not in the store of the bankrupt to exceed 40 minutes. He further says that he has been employed on many occasions and has qualifications for such work, to fix an estimate of value upon bankrupt stocks and stocks for sale in bulk generally—that is right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that after examining the quality and quantity of merchandise in the store of the bankrupt, that there was at least $80,000 to $85,000 worth of merchandise on hand, and so reported to his firm.—A. Yes.

Q. And that at the time of and for the purpose of making his bid he, or his firm, believed the receiver's report was true and correct report, and made his bid accordingly—that is, he believed it.—A. Yes.

Q. The other affidavit is on page 136.—A. Yes, sir; right across the page.

Q. That is the affidavit of Edwin London. Now, London tells us about his experience; he tells us that he examined the stock, but found it practically impossible to check it up; he estimated then and there that there was from $80,000 to $85,000 cost value of merchandise on hand; that is in that affidavit, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. So that when Judge Hanford came to consider the matter that you and I had before him and the matter of the allowance of the receivers and attorneys, he had this whole record before him?—A. All of it; yes, sir.

Q. And he rendered an opinion upon the whole matter, didn't he, in one memorandum decision?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. In that memorandum decision he reviews the question of whether upon the showing made the sale was an inadequate sale or for an inadequate price, doesn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the conclusion of his opinion he says, does he not, as follows:

Without a showing that a better price could have been obtained the court would not have vacated the sale if an application to vacate had been made before the goods had been sold by the purchaser.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing:)

When no serious injustice would have resulted. There is no such showing now, and upon the consideration of all the papers filed, including the arguments of counsel, there appears to be no substantial ground, legal or equitable, for granting the extraordinary petition to set aside the sale after a large part of the stock of merchandise has been disposed of at retail and passed beyond the reach of judicial process whereby it might be restored to the court's custody, therefore the order of the referee refusing to entertain jurisdiction will be confirmed.

Isn't that the language of his petition?—A. If you have read it, I have no doubt it is—I was not following you.

Q. Now, it would appear to me, Mr. Anderson, from the reading of this opinion, that what Judge Hanford did was to confirm the order of the referee refusing to entertain jurisdiction—do you take a contrary view of it?—A. Mr. Dovell and I took a contrary view, and the circuit court of appeals.

Q. I am trying to get your opinion, your view.—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. You are of the opinion now that that memorandum decision of Judge Hanford's was a decision of that case on the merits, are you?—A. I think that is what it purports to be.

Q. Is that your opinion, I say?—A. That is my opinion.

Q. So that a plenary suit could not be entertained now?—A. That is what I am afraid of—that is what I believe.

Q. You believe that to be true?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you took an appeal from Judge Hanford's order on both phases of the case?—A. Yes, a writ of review.

Q. You took a writ of review to the circuit court of appeals and went down to San Francisco and argued it, or Mr. Dovell did.—A. Mr. Dovell appeared there.

Q. And as far as Anisfield & Co. was concerned it was submitted on the brief which you referred to?—A. I understand so.

Q. Have you that brief here?—A. Your brief or mine?

Q. My brief.

The CHAIRMAN. Hasn't that been put in evidence?

Mr. PRESTON. No. You will get a really good brief now. I say that because it only contains a few pages.

Q. Now, in your briefs to the circuit court of appeals you complained that that language of Judge Hanford, in his opinion that I quoted to you, amounted to a decision of the matter on the merits. I believe you quoted from your brief?—A. Yes, sir; I said we assumed it, and Mr. Dovell did.

Q. And the circuit court of appeals in its opinion took the position that the case was properly decided on the merits, since affidavits on the merits had been filed by you after the matter was brought before Judge Hanford; isn't that right?—A. That is what they said.

Mr. MCCOY. Was that the fact, Mr. Preston, that affidavits on the merits were filed after it was brought before Judge Hanford, except for the purpose of attacking the allowances to the receiver?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, that is a question; they were there on file before the court, brought there by Mr. Anderson or Mr. Dovell. Now——

The WITNESS. What was your opinion of them, Mr. Preston?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I am going to tell you my opinion later in the plenary suit.

The WITNESS. Well, I hope we get to bring one.

Mr. PRESTON. I am trying simply to develop the facts of this matter.

The WITNESS. That is all we want.

Mr. PRESTON. All Judge Hanford said about it in his opinion was he reviewed these matters that are shown in these affidavits which he found before him in the files, and reviewing those he came to the conclusion and announced it that the referee was right in refusing to entertain jurisdiction—that is his exact language, is it not?

A. You read it. That is not his language to me since the circuit court of appeals reviewed his opinion. If you want me to testify about that I would like to bring it out.

Q. You have it here in his opinion?—A. Yes.

Q. He says—he uses that language in conclusion?—A. Yes.

Q. "Therefore the order of the referee refusing to entertain jurisdiction will be confirmed." Then the circuit court of appeals went further and held that the matter was decided upon the merits?—A. They affirmed the opinion of the lower court. They are better judges than I am of what he said. I might say that Mr. Dovell and I took the view stated in the brief, that the court presumed and pretended to decide the case on the merits, but neither he nor I believed that the circuit court of appeals would fall for such a decision. We expected the circuit court of appeals would look into the case de novo; we were surprised when the decision was rendered.

Q. Which do you complain of most, Judge Hanford or the circuit court of appeals?

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think you need go into that, Mr. Preston.

The WITNESS. The circuit court of appeals—I will answer the question if you will let me—the circuit court of appeals would never have rendered such an opinion had such a decision never been rendered by the lower court.

Q. The circuit court of appeals had everything before it that Judge Hanford had before him?—A. Yes, sir; they thought Judge Hanford understood the record, and like most appellate courts, they like to affirm the lower court.

Mr. McCoy. Judge Hanford did not have his own opinion before him when he reached this conclusion on this case and the circuit court of appeals did have that?

A. Why, certainly.

Mr. Preston. After the decision of the circuit court of appeals was rendered on that point, you have testified about some conversations you have had with me—I just want to ask you about those—you say that I said that I never intended to bring the matter up on the merits?

A. You said you understood that we never intended.

Q. But I called your attention, didn't I, to the facts that I stated in my brief in the circuit court of appeals, without bringing it up before you—that something of that kind was said?—A. Yes. I had no complaint to make of your conduct or of you.

Q. And that was, I believe, the occasion when you came to me and asked me to stipulate to have that part taken out of the opinion?—A. Well, I don't know that I asked you to stipulate. I asked you whether you would go with me before Judge Hanford and ask him whether he intended to decide that case on the merits, or did he use the language argumentatively, and you said you did not care whether you were there or not, that you were going to make that opinion stick if you could, and I told you I was not there to ask you to take any affirmative action.

Q. I told you that I was going to make the opinion of the circuit court of appeals stick?—A. Sure.

Q. I told you I would go with you before Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I told you I would be up there at 9.30 the next morning?—A. But you were not.

Q. I was right here?—A. Not before Judge Hanford—I waited there until half past 9.

Q. I told you I would be up here before the committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't I?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. There is one other point I would like to have you enlighten the committee on, and that is this: First, I want to ask you about the injunction—did you get the injunction?—A. That is as I remember it, Mr. Preston, that I got this injunction—I am pretty sure I did.

Q. From Judge Hoyt, the referee?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure. If we got it anywheres we got it from him—I don't know whether the record shows that or not—does it, Mr. Chairman—I can find it in a moment.

Mr. Preston. I wish you would look at me, because my recollection is to the contrary, but I would not be certain.

Mr. McCoy. I do not think there is any of this Exhibit No. 69.

The Witness. Sir?

Mr. McCoy. I do not remember seeing any record of any injunction in Exhibit No. 69.

Mr. Preston. I would be rather surprised to find one in there. Mr. Anderson was quite positive about it, and I thought I might be mistaken.

The Witness. Well, I do not see any order here in that connection; but if you looked at our petition we prayed for an injunction. I will look it up to-morrow in the files. I am quite positive there was one issued. I know that I talked to Judge Hoyt afterwards about it, and he said he doubted whether he had power to issue one; but in as much as the order to show cause was returnable in three days he thought no damage would be done and you would have ample opportunity to test it if you so desired. I do not see it in the records here.

Mr. PRESTON. I am not going to take issue with you, because I do not remember myself.

The WITNESS. It is a matter of no importance, I presume.

Q. Now, in regard to that sale that was conducted down there at the bankrupt's store on the first day of the appointment of the receiver there was considerable of a sale conducted there?—A. That afternoon?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know.

Q. Something over a thousand dollars was taken in?—A. Yes, sir; I believe the records show that; but I thought it was all day. I don't know whether it was the afternoon or all day.

Q. A considerable part of it, at least the afternoon part of it, went on after the receiver was appointed?—A. Yes.

Q. After he had filed his bond and qualified?—A. I don't know when he qualified; we always treated the matter as though he qualified at noon and permitted the store to remain open the balance of the afternoon.

Q. You do not know whether he was at the bankrupt's store during the sale in the afternoon?—A. I do not know.

Q. Now, the business of the bankrupt was continuing that afternoon?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Who was continuing it?—A. The circuit court of appeals and the employees of the bankrupt were continuing it.

Q. I am asking you?—A. I think that Mr. Baxter continued it without a doubt.

Q. He was the man who was responsible for it?—A. He was the man who was responsible for it; and it don't make any difference whether he was there or not. He had qualified, and it was the same as if he was running it.

Q. So far as that sale was a continuing business, it was done by the receiver?—A. I wouldn't say so.

Q. After Judge Hanford filed his memorandum proceedings, did you ever move to modify it in any respect before him?—A. No. I did, but not along this line—not along this line. I will take this fact. I am referring to the order entered. I never took up with him the modification until the day I spoke to you. I want to say there, now, about continuing this matter, I don't know. I believe it was the first Friday that the committee was in session.

Mr. MCCOY. You mean this committee?

The WITNESS (continuing). I went to see Mr. Preston and I asked him whether he noticed the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, in which it said that the matter had been tried on the merits, and he said that it was, and I told him that we both knew that it had not. I think I put the statement to him that I would ask him to come up before Judge Hanford and just let Judge Hanford go on record as to whether or not he meant to decide the case on the merits or did he use that language argumentatively, as goes to show that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. First, Mr. Preston said, I could go up and take the matter up ex parte. Then I told him that I would rather he would be there present, and then he said he would be up here the next morning; and I remember I asked Mr. Preston to be here at 9 or 9.15, before the commission met, before the session opened, and he said he would. I waited in Judge Hanford's chambers until almost 9.30, when he had said he must appear here, and I told him then that Mr. Preston would not object if I told him the purpose of my mission; and I put it to him plainly: Did he intend to decide that case on the merits, as the circuit court of appeals had it, or did he use the language argumentatively? and he would not say yes or no, saying that it would not be proper in him to express an opinion of what he had held in that case, that it was up to me to bring a plenary action, and that when that plenary action was before him, and that when the issues were joined, whether it was res adjudicata, then he would give his opinion; so that, as far as getting any satisfaction out of Judge Hanford there was none to be had.

Mr. McCoy. In certifying the case up to Judge Hanford on the point raised by Mr. Preston, do I understand you to say that there came up with it some affidavits made on an application for injunction?

A. Yes.

Q. What place had they in that, accompanying that certificate?—A. They had been filed in connection with our petition praying for an accounting from Anisfield & Co., and praying for an injunction against him.

Q. They had to do only with the injunction?—A. They had to do only with the injunction; they stated that on their face.

Q. And they could not be supplemental to the petition?—A. I do not know; the petition might have read "Reference is made to the affidavit hereto attached for the purpose of setting forth more fully the nature of the fraud," as it usually does—it may have been done in this case—I do not know without reading the record.

Q. Now, written arguments were filed by Mr. Preston and yourself—were the merits of the fraud issue argued?—A. I think not—I do not think it ever entered our head that they would be a decision on the merits under any circumstances like this.

Mr. Preston. I have here a certified copy of these briefs which I will present to you, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy. Those are the briefs which were submitted on the question of fraud?

Mr. Preston. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Is that what you said you were going to bring out—you were going to bring out something or other—is that what you were just testifying, as to what took place in Judge Hanford's chambers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, coming to the question of continuing the business; is it not a fact that in Judge Hanford's opinion on the question of allowances that he did not state anywhere that he considered that Mr. Baxter had continued the business?—A. His order allowing compensation, entered on December 23, expressly recites that in his opinion Mr. Baxter had absolutely carried on the business of the bankrupts.

Q. I mean in his opinion?—A. No; I do not think so.

Q. How is that?—A. I think it does not. The fact is that in the oral argument it was never suggested either by the attorneys for the receiver or by Judge Hanford that he had actually carried on the business of the bankrupt—the total argument ran that he was something more than a mere custodian.

Q. Was not the argument further that he had been very successful in getting a high bid for the property and that was the basis on which the judge thought he ought to have this allowance?—A. That probably had a moral influence.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you understand the facts to be with reference to other proof in support of the question of fraud and the facts shown in the affidavit; is there much proof which you know of aliunde of the affidavit?

A. Yes. One of the conspirators has confessed to the United States district attorney. The bankrupt confessed in the presence of three parties that he understood what was going on and that the purpose of the false inventory was to aid him ultimately. Those facts which had never been developed or put in affidavits for obvious reasons.

Mr. MCCOY. Those facts——

A. Those facts were laid before the grand jury.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know that at the time the record was made for the appeal?

A. Did I know what?

Q. Did you know what you now state, and did you try in any way to incorporate this additional evidence, by way of exhibits, or by any way—into the——A. (Interrupting.) It was impossible to get the affidavits of those parties who had conferred; they were not very anxious to divulge all that they knew. I tried to get affidavits of these parties without success—everybody was rather reluctant to produce affidavits of that kind.

Q. Did you in any way bring to the attention of Judge Hanford, either before he decided the case or afterwards, although you say you did not ask him to modify his memorandum decision, but did you in any way bring to his knowledge the additional evidence there was in support of the charge of fraud?—A. No; I think not.

Mr. MCCOY. I think perhaps Mr. Graham and you are not together on that—you brought to Judge Hanford's attention the memorandum which you had and——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) And which you referred to, but you did not incorporate it in your affidavit?—A. Yes, sir; I produced that—I didn't catch the point.

Q. Well, I didn't read the affidavits which you filed with Judge Hanford. Now, is there anything in them which might lead the court to understand that they were filed owing to the merits rather than to the question of jurisdiction?—A. I do not see how he could construe that; when this case was before him for hearing on issues of fact, on issues of law, as to whether or not he had exceeded the bankruptcy schedules, and the other four questions of law certified by the referee for an opinion, that were supposed to be an answer, sent back for further proceedings, if we succeeded in convincing him that we had a good petition.

Q. But was the matter so presented to Judge Hanford at the argument that he understood, or did he indicate that he understood that there were two separate matters before him?—A. No; I could not say that he did. We only argued with reference to one phase of the question before him, and that was the objections to the receiver's allowance. The other was never argued before him except by filing briefs which took up the points of law involved.

Mr. MCCOY. Did you file any affidavits?

A. We never served any of those affidavits on Mr. Preston, who represented John Anisfield & Co., and neither did he serve any affidavits on us—there was no exchange of any evidence between him and I.

Q. Did you file separate briefs on each of the points involved—that is, on the question of your petition before the referee, and also on the motion to set aside this allowance?—A. So far as my memory serves me, we filed but the one brief, taking up both phases. Is that right, Mr. Preston?

Mr. PRESTON. There is only one brief I find in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions? You are excused.

Witness excused.

WALTER A. MCCLURE, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Preston, you know better than we do what the witness knows. Do you care to ask?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes; I am perfectly willing to.

By Mr. PRESTON:

Q. Your full name is Walter A. McClure?—A. Yes, sir; Walter A. McClure.

Q. You are a member of the bar of Seattle?—A. I am.

Q. Have been for a number of years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your firm is McClure & McClure?—A. It is; yes, sir.

Q. Who is the senior member of the firm?—A. The senior member of the firm is my older brother, Henry F. McClure. I am the next, and then the junior member is my brother William E. McClure.

Q. The firm name, however, has only two——A. That is all.

Q. (Continuing.) McClure & McClure?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have practiced here in Seattle quite a number of years, I think?—A. I have, Mr. Preston.

Q. How many?—A. Since 1897.

Q. Have you during recent years had any specialty in the practice personally?—A. Yes; I have paid a great deal of attention to the commercial law side of our firm.

Q. Have you done quite a large amount of bankruptcy business?—A. A great deal.

Q. Are you familiar with the practice that obtains in this district in regard to allowances to receivers and their attorneys in bankruptcy matters?—A. I am.

Q. What is that practice, having in mind this point, too, the compensation being fixed by the court in the first instance, or by the referee in the first instance; is there any settled practice?—A. There is no settled practice. It is sometimes done by the court and sometimes by the referee.

Q. Is there a distinction about which one of the officers it was that appointed the receiver?—A. Well, in some instances the court or judge has fixed the fees of receivers appointed by the referee, and in other instances the referee has fixed the fees of the receiver appointed by the court.

Q. Calling your attention to the Knosher case; you were interested in that case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I notice in the record which the committee has a report by Mr. Baxter, as receiver, that he carried on the business of the bankrupt for a part of a day the first day of his appointment. Are you familiar with that fact?—A. I am familiar with that fact. It is correct.

Q. Had he qualified at any time during that day?—A. He qualified in the forenoon of that day.

Q. Gave oath and bond?—A. Yes, sir; no oath, but a bond. No oath is required.

Q. Then, do you know whether he went down and took charge of the business?—A. I personally know he took charge about 11 o'clock in the forenoon of the day he was appointed.

Q. And was that sale there for that day conducted under him?—A. It was.

Q. Do you know what the receipts were?—A. The receipts are shown in the papers. My recollection is, to be controlled by the record, that the receipts were about $1,200—$1,000 or $1,200.

Mr. McCoy. That would cover the entire day?

A. The entire day.

Mr. McCoy. Before he went there as well as after?

A. Yes, sir. There was no way of distinguishing between what happened after he——

Mr. Preston. Let me ask you, Mr. McClure: Had not the Union Savings Bank & Trust Co. had a man in the store there taking the cash as fast as it came in before that?

A. They had; yes, sir.

Q. And are you able to say whether the bank got any part of that money that was taken in that day before the receiver came, or not?—A. I am not able to say. They may have, Mr. Preston. I don't know. I can't tell just now. I could determine.

Q. I wish you would tell the committee what your recollection is of the fact in regard to the original order made by Judge Hanford allowing compensation to the receiver and his attorneys, if the matter is within your knowledge and recollection.—A. The application was filed for the allowances and Judge Hanford inquired what notice had been given and directed that notice be given to all parties on the record and the parties in interest, so far as they could be ascertained, and the matter came up for hearing the next day at 10 o'clock.

Q. What notice had been given in the meantime?—A. Everyone was notified whom we could reach. My impression is that I personally attended to the notice. From——

Q. (Interrupting.) Can you recall the different people that you notified?—A. We notified Shank & Smith.

Q. They were the attorneys for the petitioning creditor, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; and it would be impossible for me to say what creditors were notified. I knew afterwards that there were creditors who were not notified, but I didn't know they were at the time the notice was being given, or they would have been notified.

Q. Well, who was present in court when the matter came up?—A. Well, there was Mr. Shank, of Shank & Smith, and Mr. Stern, and myself, and Mr. Baxter, and I don't know whether there were others present interested in the matter or not; there were plenty of people in the court room that morning.

Mr. McCoy. Were Shank & Smith attorneys or creditors?

Mr. Preston. Attorneys for the petitioning creditor that threw the concern into bankruptcy. That is right, isn't it?

A. Yes; that is correct. The record shows that.

Q. Was any suggestion made by or on behalf of the receiver as to the amount of compensation?—A. The court asked for suggestions, and my recollection is that Mr. Stern suggested that $2,500 should be allowed to the receiver for his services, detailing at some length what the receiver had done. The court inquired of me if I had any suggestions to make, and I stated I had no suggestions to make, that the facts had been fully stated by Mr. Stern in his statement and that I would make no suggestion as to what should be done; and Mr. Shank, being interrogated as to what in his opinion should be allowed to——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is by the court, you mean?—A. Yes, sir; by the court—him as attorney for the petitioning creditors, made a statement stating that in his opinion, as I remember, he was entitled to about $300, or $250, I believe, was the figure he named.

Mr. McCoy. That was his own allowance?

A. His own allowance; yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Do you mean that he made any suggestion about what allowance the receiver should have?

A. He did not touch upon that.

Mr. Preston. The order was made then allowing $2,500 to the receiver and his attorneys?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, each?—A. Each; yes, sir.

Q. What was the fact, Mr. McClure, as to the success or goodness or want of goodness of the sale made by the receiver, comparing it with anything that had preceded it?—A. Well, I have been connected with sales of, I think, practically all of the large merchandise stocks in the city for a good many years, and with many small ones, and I think that this sale was one of the best that I have ever seen in the city or in the Puget Sound region. It brought a larger percentage, and the assets were not in first-class condition; it brought a large percentage if the lines had all been complete and the goods not shopworn—if the lines had all been up to date. I considered the sale a remarkable achievement on the part of the receiver.

Q. Was that one of the facts stated by Mr. Stern to the judge?—A. It was.

Q. Now, later, some creditors filed objections to that allowance?—A. They did; yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Anderson has testified that the court then set that for hearing and directed notice to be given to all the creditors?—A. Yes; that is correct.

Q. Was that notice given?—A. It was.

Q. The matter came before Judge Hanford, did it, at the time stated?—A. It did. The notices were sent out by the referee. At the time that these allowances were made, I think, the record ought to show we were not familiar with the amendment of 1910 to the bankruptcy act.

Mr. McCoy. What was that amendment?

A. The amendment was that allowances to receivers should be made only after notice to the creditors as shown by the proofs of debt on file as shown by the schedules.

Mr. McCoy. What was the date when that law took effect?

A. That law took effect in June, 1910.

Mr. McCoy. And what was the date of this application for allowances?

A. I think it was in January or February, 1911. I say that we were not familiar, because while I had read the amendment it had escaped my attention, and I think most everyone in the court room was of the opinion that the former law controlled, although afterwards Mr. Stern and I discussed that.

Mr. PRESTON. What had been the practice before that in regard to making allowances to receivers and trustees and their attorneys before the final winding up of the estate?

A. The course followed was a usual practice.

Q. Now, what happened when this matter came on on the notice—the second notice—to creditors?—A. As I remember the record, the case was continued from time to time; it was continued for several weeks. That, I may say, was partly—I was responsible for that, because I notified one of the counsel for the objecting creditors that I exceedingly disliked any controversy over fees, and I stated to counsel, "Take all the money that we have out of this case and let us out of it and settle the matter up; let's have no controversy over fees in this matter." I was willing to donate my services to the creditors and stop the controversy, and it was stated to me that that settlement could probably be arranged Then afterwards I was advised it could not. I spoke to Mr Anderson about the matter, expressing the same sentiment to him, and he stated that I might make such donation as I desired I said, "What then?" "Well, then," he said, "we will try the case out," and he said he wanted to know what "conducting business" meant. That was the language of the bankruptcy act. It was impossible to arrange any settlement, and so the matter continued

Q. Well, when it came on for hearing, what happened—what contention did you make to the judge about the question of continuing business?—A. Oh, we argued that question to the court The objections as to what Mr. Baxter did were argued to the court, as shown by the record, and there was a record made The affidavits on file—it was heard on affidavits—showed what he did The contention was that he was a mere custodian, and we argued the difference between a marshal or a keeper taking the store and putting a lock upon it and the receiver who went in and took an inventory and rearranged the insurance and obtained additional insurance, because the stock was not protected

Mr McCOY. Did he do that all on that day?

A No, sir. (Continuing) And adjusted claims as to that merchandise; filed a petition for sale; obtained an order of sale; when the bids came in, considered them, and ascertained that a new bid of at least seven thousand—$5,000 could be obtained ——

Mr PRESTON. Five thousand more, you mean?

A. Five thousand more; and obtained an order offering the property again for sale, and obtained a resale for an increased figure of at least $7,000—I think about seventy-five hundred. All of the matters shown by the record were argued before Judge Hanford as to the matter of these allowances, and to my mind it was conclusive that the receiver was more than a mere custodian, and it was conclusive that he had conducted the business, in my opinion, too.

Q Did you argue that to Judge Hanford, that that was a continuing business under the statute?—A. The whole proposition was argued; yes, sir.

Q. Then the other side argued contra to that, I suppose?—A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember what was said by Judge Hanford in announcing his conclusion on the matter?—A. I think that Judge Hanford took the matter under advisement to consider the affidavits that had been filed, and handed down a memorandum decision. The creditors——

Mr. McCoy (interrupting). Excuse me.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Is that the decision that is printed in Exhibit No. 69?

A. The integrity of the receiver's inventory was attacked and it was attacked on the theory in this proceeding that the receiver had been careless and negligent in permitting his employees to impose upon him with an incorrect inventory, and, of course, we had to defend him against that charge. It was untrue, in my opinion, absolutely. I want to say that the goods in the store—I never saw a stock of goods like it, and I have seen a good many. They were marked with the retail price and that was the only mark upon them. There was no wholesale cost upon the goods, and they were marked with a different proportion. Some of the goods were marked 10 per cent, some 20, and some 25, and 40, and 50, and so on, and it was impossible, from the goods themselves, to determine how the inventory should be taken, because Knosher took his inventory on the retail basis and he had a stock of goods that inventoried, according to his figures, $90,000 or $100,000 That was the retail price. The heads of the departments who had purchased those goods were all there in the store and it was necessary for the receiver to employ those same men to take that inventory, because nobody else on earth could tell how to take it. That is what he did The inventory was taken by the heads of the departments, assisted by their clerks, and the sheets passed in at the close of each day and passed up to the receiver, who went over them.

Mr. Preston. Now, was anything said by Judge Hanford at that time, after you had concluded your argument, about his having made the previous order on the supposition that it covered the entire fees for receiver and trustee and their attorneys?

A. Yes, sir; he asked that question at the time he made that $2,500 allowance, whether Mr Baxter had been elected trustee, and at the time he finally disposed of the matter, as I remember, or at the time of the argument—rather when he took it under advisement, he said that he propounded that question, because he intended that allowance to cover all allowances in the case.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. That was announced from the bench?—A. At the time the case was submitted, as I recall, Mr. McCoy.

Q. And didn't anybody get up and protest against doing a thing like that?—A. There was no reason to protest. No, sir; they did not.

Q. Against allowances to trustees at that stage of the proceedings?—A. I say that when the matter was argued, after notice had been given to the creditors, the court stated that at the time the allowance was originally made he had propounded that question whether Mr. Baxter had been elected as trustee, for the reason that it was in his mind that that $2,500 should be his whole compensation; he had been elected trustee when the allowance was originally made.

Mr. Preston. He had been?

A. He had been; yes, sir.

Mr. McCoy. Did Judge Hanford know it at the time?

A. I beg your pardon, sir.

Q. I say, did Judge Hanford know at the time when the original allowance was made that Mr. Baxter had been elected trustee?—A. He did. He asked the question and was answered in the affirmative.

By Mr. Preston:

Q. Mr. McClure, were you in the room when Mr. Anderson, who just preceded you on the stand, was testifying to a conversation held with you since the decision in the circuit court of appeals?—A. I heard his testimony this evening; yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, did he give that conversation, or the substance of it, in accordance with your recollection of it or not?—A. Mr. Anderson misunderstood me. That is not correct.

Q. What was the conversation?—A. Mr. Anderson and I were talking about what was "conducting business" and what a receiver should do, and I remarked to him that Mr. Baxter had been in a few days before and Mr. Baxter had stated that he could unquestionably have earned a fee in the Knosher case for conducting the business if he had chosen to do so, because the order of court authorized him, in his discretion, to conduct the business as receiver, and that Mr. Baxter said he would not do such a thing; he would consult the interests of the creditors; and I said, "Of course, you would not; if you did I would not be your attorney."

Q. Now, what do you know, if anything, about Mr. Baxter having consulted the creditors in that case—in that Knosher case—and being advised by them not to continue the business?—A. Just as soon on the day of his appointment as Mr. Baxter could do so, as soon as he had familiarized himself and gotten hold of the reins of that business, he consulted the creditors.

Q. Who?—A. He consulted the bank. I think that Anisfield's representative was here at the time. He consulted Mr. Smith, of Smith, Daniels & Kelleher; he consulted Mr. Stern, who had a number of claims; and I don't know who else, but I know that he consulted a number.

Q. And did he consult you, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any claims?—A. I had quite a number. I represented a bank's claim which was over $20,000 in cash, and it was agreed by all parties that it was unwise to continue the operation of the store, and the creditors asked him to close it, and he did so. That was his own opinion. Everybody agreed. There was no difference of opinion upon that question. The idea was to close the store and stop the expense. The rent was a large figure. The expenses of the store were two or three hundred dollars a day, and we wished to take an inventory at once and sell the merchandise in bulk, and that was successfully done.

Q. You say it was our wish. Which do you mean by "our"?—A. It was the wish of the receiver and of the creditors.

Q. That is, those creditors who were consulted that day?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Mr. Preston. I think I have gone over all the field that I know of, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Anything further with Mr. McClure? Do you wish to ask him?

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Who appointed Mr. Baxter receiver in this matter?—A. Judge Hanford. I would be glad to state the circumstances, Mr. McCoy, if you consider them material.

Q. Well, if there is anything you think we ought to know, Mr. McClure, go ahead.—A. Well, the circumstances were these: We represented a large amount of New York indebtedness; also the claim of the Union Savings & Trust Co. for $20,000. I discovered, to my intense astonishment, on Monday morning—we had had a man in the store for the bank—that a petition in bankruptcy had been filed, and I immediately took a claim that I had—a large New York claim—and filed a petition for the appointment of a receiver. An adjudication had been entered and Judge Hanford appointed Mr. Baxter receiver. The——

Q. (Interrupting.) What showing did you make on the application for appointment of receiver of any necessity to continue the business?—A. I made the showing that a sale—a special sale had been extensively advertised and that as I was advised that morning the store was full of customers attending that special sale; that the goods could thus be disposed of at a percentage considerably above invoice price; that there was a large operating expense and that it would be advisable to keep the good will of the business in order to hand it over to a purchaser, because I knew that McCormick Bros., of this city, were about the abandon the city as a business location on account of the failure of a business location on First Avenue, and that they could be induced to buy that as a going concern more readily than if the store should be closed up and the good will lost, and that added in my opinion at least $10,000 to the value of that store as a going concern, and that was realized when it was sold.

Q. I don't quite understand you, Mr. McClure. The business was closed down on the same day on which the receiver was appointed?—A. Well, we were disappointed in the showing.

Q. I don't understand how anything could have been added to the purchase price of the property by way of good will when the business had been closed down two or three weeks.—A. It was not closed down for that length of time.

Q. The business was closed down, absolutely stopped, on the day when the receiver was appointed, wasn't it, so far as the merchandise was concerned?—A. There were no goods sold at retail after the evening on which the receiver was appointed.

Q. The store was closed?—A. The store—the doors to the store were closed; yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, how do you claim anything was added to the good will, or rather added to the price for which the business was sold by allowing the receiver to continue the business; that is, by the court's allowing him to continue it.—A. Well, of course, when the order was made we were somewhat in the dark, although perhaps I was more fully advised than an attorney ordinarily would be, because of the fact that the bank had had a man in there for a day or two, and if that store had been shut down at once with all those people in it—the class of people that did business at that store—the good will of the business would in my opinion have sustained a severe blow.

Q. Well, was there anything realized for the good will of the business when the sale took place?—A. I think there was.

Q. Who bought the good will?—A. The purchaser.

Q. Was that sale at auction?—A. It was sold on sealed bids, in writing.

Q. Well, I mean——A. (Interrupting.) It was not sold as a separate item.

Q. Was the good will sold as a separate item?—A. It was not.

Q. Was the right to use the words "Knosher & Co." or "Knosher" sold?—A. Not included in the same.

Q. Well, then, what part of the good will was sold?—A. Well, it requires a history of the transaction to understand that.

Q. What is good will? Perhaps we can get together.—A. Good will is the name of the business for square dealing and handling certain articles, and all those intangible evidences which may be an asset of the business which is not in any way in the merchandise and other tangible property.

Q. The name to start with is the principal thing, isn't it?—A. I don't think it, always.

Q. It is one of the principal things?—A. It may be an element or it may not be.

Q. That is the name under which a business is run in your opinion under certain circumstances is no part of the good will?—A. Well, I say it may be or may not be.

Q. Well, will you explain any circumstances under which a large business is run may not be any part of the good will?—A. Oh, I think that if a concern had handled certain goods in an unsatisfactory way, treated its customers in an impolite or unbusinesslike way, that the name of that concern would be a detriment.

Q. Yes. In other words, there would not be any good name.—A. Or the location——

Q. (Interrupting.) I am coming to location. There would not be any good will, then, so far as the kindly feeling of customers toward the personnel of the establisment was concerned; that would be certain, wouldn't it?—A. That is true.

Q. Well, now then, was the location of Knosher Bros. sold, or the right to do business in that location sold by Mr. Baxter?—A. It was.

Q. Was that specified as a part of what was to be sold?—A. Yes, sir; there was a lease.

Q. Didn't you apply later on to have the lease canceled?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Doesn't that appear somewhere in the papers in the record in the circuit court of appeals?—A. Not to my knowledge. I never heard of it before. It is suggested now for the first time.

Q. Well, at any rate, Mr. McClure, you testified a few minutes ago that the rent was pretty heavy, and that was one reason for not going on with the business any longer; is that right?—A. The rent was heavy.

Q. Now, you testified that you brought this matter into court—this matter of the allowances—and that Judge Hanford directed that notice should be given. How did you bring the matter into court the first time; simply come in before the judge?—A. Yes.

Q. And file papers asking for allowances?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Q. Do you happen to have copies of those papers?—A. I do not know, Mr. McCoy, whether I have or not. They are in the record.

Q. It had been the practice, under the bankruptcy law, before it was amended—I mean in this district, before it was amended—in regard to notice to creditors on applications for allowances to receivers, to give notice to creditors.—A. Of the allowances to the recei ers?

Q. Of the application. That is, before the amendment of the law.—A. For receivers?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; it had never been done.

Q. You simply applied to the court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever apply to the referee; was there any practice of going before the referee?—A. For allowances for receivers?

Q. Yes; before the amendment of 1910?—A. It was done to both, either the referee or the judge.

Q. And you say that it was not the practice to give notice?—A. No, sir; it was never done.

Q. Was it the practice to give notice to attorneys at all?—A. No; it was not.

Q. Well, then, why did Judge Hanford raise the point at the time you applied and ask whether notice had been given?—A. Well, I have always found Judge Hanford a stickler for notices of that kind; he has frequently asked me, when I have presented orders to him, if notice had been given to the other side. He has been careful about that.

Q. The matter was put over for one day so that you could give notice to some creditor; is that right?—A. Yes; that is right.

Q. And to whom did you give notice?—A. I gave notice to the bank and to Mr. Shank, of Shank & Smith, who represented a number of creditors, and I can't tell to whom the other notice was given, because it was done orally, and I deemed the matter of no importance. I paid no particular attention to it.

Q. You were attorney for the bank yourself, weren't you?—A. I was; yes, sir. I deemed it my duty, though, always to notify my client in a case of that kind.

Q. Had any other attorneys than the attorneys for the petitioning creditors, your firm and Mr. Stern, appeared in the matter?—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. You say that the court asked for suggestions in regard to the receiver's fees?—A. That is correct.

Q. Did he ask for any suggestions in regard to attorneys' fees?—A. Both.

Q. What suggestions were made to him in regard to attorneys' fees, and who made them?—A. Mr. Stern, I think, made the only suggestion as to amount. He suggested——

Q. (Interrupting.) What did he suggest?—A. He suggested $2,500 to the receiver and to the attorneys of the receiver.

Q. And did the court ask him, or anybody, what the attorneys had done in the matter?—A. I don't remember whether he did or not. I think—my impression is, from the statement made by Mr. Stern, that he was advised as to the entire history of the case.

Q. Now, what was the history of the case so far as the services of attorneys up to that point were concerned?—A. A petition in involuntary bankruptcy had been filed by Shank & Smith.

Q. I mean the attorneys who got the $2,500.—A. A petition—an intervening petition had been filed by us for the New York creditor or creditors to whom I have referred, and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, just a minute, please—an intervening petition in involuntary bankruptcy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But I understood you to say that the petition was voluntary, and that there had been an adjudication.—A. If you so misunderstood me that was incorrect.

Q. And that to your astonishment, as I remember your testimony, you found that there had been an adjudication, and you immediately took a claim and went into court and got a receivership?—A. That is incorrect. If I stated that I want to correct it.

Q. Well, all right. State what services McClure & McClure and Mr. Stern rendered on which the $2,500 allowance was based to them at that time.—A. That is, as attorneys for the receiver?

Q. Yes; in any capacity—yes; as attorneys for the receiver. It was in that capacity it was allowed?—A. Yes. We drafted the order for the appointment of Mr. Baxter, obtained his bond in the sum of $2,500——

Q. Of course, you filed your petition?—A. Yes.

Q. And drafted the order?—A. Well, then, let me go back to the beginning as I started a while ago. I prepared an intervening petition before adjudication and asked leave of the court to intervene in the proceeding as required by the bankruptcy act. I also filed with that petition a petition for the appointment of a receiver, setting forth facts upon which in my opinion a receiver should be appointed, and I tendered with that petition for the appointment of a receiver a bond of the petitioning creditors for adjudication, which I think the court made $25,000. I furnished the bond.

Q. That was a surety company bond?—A. It was a surety company bond.

Q. Drawn by the surety company?—A. It was prepared by me.

Q. Were you attorney for the surety company?—A. I was not.

Q. All right; go ahead, then.—A. And I won't be certain about the amount of that bond. This testimony will be controlled by the record?

Q. Surely.—A. And Judge Hanford appointed Mr. Baxter, and I submitted the order for his appointment. We put him in charge, and interviewed the heads of the departments down there. And right here now I want to say that I instructed those heads of departments how that inventory should be taken. I told them to take it at the reasonable market value of the merchandise, and in the ordinary case the invoice value, if they could find out what it was. Then the inventory was prepared as fast as possible, and in the meantime I prepared a petition for sale.

On the same day I want to state, although this was a petition, a receiver appointed before adjudication, I conferred with Knosher; I got him on the phone and I said to him "You should consent to this adjudication because this business does not belong to you." And he called up Mr. Shank about the matter, and the result was that he filed an answer and adjudication was entered on that day. An adjudication having been entered and a reference having been made to the referee, a petition for sale was filed with the referee, and an order of sale entered, directing that the property be sold on sealed bids in writing at a certain date, about 10 or 12 days in advance, I don't remember exactly the time. An appraisement was had. Mr. Baxter asked me who should appraise that stock. I said "Get three of the best men in town to appraise the stock." He asked me to select some one, and I said "Who are the largest creditors?" He said "The Western Dry Goods Co. is, I find, a creditor to the extent of $5,000." I said "Get some one from there," and Mr. Kjos of that company was appointed an appraiser. The other appraiser was Mr. Doheny, of Chaesty's store, and the other appraiser was Mr. Barr, who was in the store. We obtained the appointment of those appraisers. I prepared their oath for them, and instructed them that they should attend at the store on a certain day after the inventory had been completed, and make their appraisement. I want to say at this point that our referee has perhaps stretched the law a little—wisely, too, in my opinion—in order to obtain a prompt sale of stocks of merchandise where the expense runs into the hundreds of dollars every day, and because, theoretically speaking, perhaps a petition for sale could not be filed until the inventory was on file in the office of the referee, but this petition for sale, the inventory being in process of construction, was filed before that time and the appraisement was duly made and filed and notice given of the sale by publication and by mailing to all parties interested and by posting in three or four public places of the city of Seattle, as required by the order, and at the time stated the parties appeared in this courtroom and submitted sealed bids. Those bids were opened. The highest bid was that of McCormack Bros., represented by Judge Fremont Campbell, of Tacoma, and his bid was this, substantially: "The undersigned does hereby bid 65 cents on the dollar for the stock of merchandise, fixtures, store equipment, and all assets of the bankrupt, except cash in the hands of the receiver and the book accounts." That figured up a little over $50,000. The next bid was about $46,000. The receiver and his counsel took the bids under consideration, and Mr. Libby, who was here, was disappointed that so high a bid had been received.

Q. Mr. Libby of whom?—A. Of the John Anisfield Co., because he stated that that $46,000 bid which had been put in, as I remember, in the name of a man named Shinn, would take the stock, and he asked me, outside of that rail, if a thousand dollars would be any object. I said, "No, sir; the well-settled practice of this court on sealed bids in writing is that you must put up 10 per cent more. If you want to put up $5,000 within the rule of Judge Hoyt, I will ask him to offer the property again. Still" I said, "a thousand dollars is some money, and I don't feel like throwing it away, and I will mention it to the court." And before the court adjourned I told the court, in open court, that a thousand dollars had been tendered in excess of the price and that I didn't feel like waiving that sum. Judge Hoyt said that he would not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Excuse me. You mean that he had offered a thousand dollars in excess of this higher of these two bids?—A. Yes, sir. Judge Hoyt said he would not violate the rule. He said, though, "If anybody wishes to put up a certified check for $5,000 in the possession of the receiver, as a guaranty that he will bid $55,000, I will offer the property again for sale at an upset price of $55,000, and everybody can bid." That was done. The property was—the bid was—rejected, the check for $5,000 was put up, and the property was again offered for sale, I think on the second day following, because Judge Campbell desired to go to Tacoma to consult his clients who had their main store at that place, and on the second day following, McCormack Bros. came back with a bid of $56,500, and Mr. Libby put in a bid of something like $57,000. There were no further increases in the bid, and the property was sold to Mr. Libby, or Lindstrom, or whatever the name was. And right here let me say that if McCormack Bros. had got that stock for $56,500 there never would have been a word about this matter. Now, those were the services that we performed.

Q. Now——A. (Continuing.) By a quick and expedient sale and by increasing the price of that property I considered we saved that estate at the very least $10,000.

Q. How much was saved by the increase in price?—A. Well, there was a saving there of seventy-five hundred or seven thousand, whichever was the increase; but most any other receiver but Mr. Baxter would have taken about 15 or 16 or 20 days to get ready for that sale, and it would have taken—it would have consumed a lot of money in keeping that expensive store there.

Q. Well, now, Mr. McClure, I wish you would point out to the committee what in all that you have told constitutes a legal service to the receiver and not something that any receiver is supposed to do because he is receiver and without legal advice.—A. What is a legal service?

Q. Well, you are an attorney, I believe.—A. Well, I think that the things—with due respect to the committee, you understand—I think that the things I have mentioned were legal services.

Q. Do you think that it is a service by an attorney that a bid is rejected and a higher price is obtained?—A. That is to a certain extent a business question, but there is also a legal question involved.

Q. What was the legal question?—A. The legal question was presented by the instance I have narrated, whether the court would open up the sale, and if so, on what terms, because I think that——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't quite understand now what the legal question was in that respect.—A. Well, the notice had been given that the property would be offered for sale and sold, subject to confirmation, to the highest and best bidder for cash, on a certain date, and a satisfactory bid had been received at the first and a responsible bidder had appeared offering that sum, and while it is likely true that a bidder has no rights, still we who sell stocks of goods frequently have to recognize, nevertheless, as a business question, mixed with a legal question, that they must be considered and treated fairly.

Q. Did you have to argue that proposition to Judge Hoyt?—A. Not at all. He understands it thoroughly.

Q. Then you did not render any legal service in that respect, did you?—A. Well, of course, it is a matter of opinion.

Q. Well, if you didn't argue anything before Judge Hoyt to get him to do this thing, why, then, you didn't perform any legal service in getting it done, did you?—A. I think I did.

Q. What was it?—A. Just as I stated; I can't state it more fully than I have.

Q. Well, what other legal service was there?—A. Well, to answer the question requires mainly a repetition of what I have already testified.

Q. What, of those things which you have testified to, do you consider such services as a trustee of any kind or description should pay an attorney for instead of doing himself?—A. I have never yet seen a receiver who can prepare a proper order of sale.

Q. Well, then, you consider drawing the order of sale as a legal service?—A. I consider that one of the elements; yes, sir.

Q. All right. What else?—A. Drawing the petition for sale another.

Q. Yes. What else?—A. Advising the receiver as to the conflicting questions as to whose was the merchandise in that store.

Q. And what were the conflicting questions?—A. Creditors all over this country were claiming that the merchandise in the store belonged to them, because Knosher had made such flagrant misrepresentations as to his financial condition that he was indicted and fined in the superior court of King County for those misrepresentations.

Q. Did any of those creditors come in and undertake to reclaim the goods?—A. They did.

Q. Were there reclamation proceedings in court?—A. No, sir; we headed them off.

Q. In what way?—A. We kept every article practically there in the store.

Q. How did you head that off?—A. By simply telling them they could not have the goods, and arguing the questions with them.

Q. And, in other words, these creditors came along claiming the goods, and you sat down and convinced them that they were wrong?—A. Exactly.

Q. Did they come in person or did they come by attorney?—A. Well, there were a great many traveling men here, a part in person and in part by attorneys.

Q. And who were some of the attorneys who claimed——A. (Interrupting.) I can't tell you now, sir.

Q. Were they Seattle attorneys?—A. I think they were.

Q. But no reclamation proceedings were ever started?—A. Well, now, I won't say that. There may be a few shown by the record; I am not sure.

Q. All right, Mr. McClure. Was any reclamation proceeding brought to the point where testimony was taken?—A. I don't remember any, but I would be controlled by the record. You won't make me feel disturbed about this matter, because, as I say, I was willing to donate all the fee that I had, and I would gladly do so to-day. I don't care for the money we got out of this estate; but the other side would simply not recognize anything of that kind. They said, "You donate what you wish, but we will fight you still."

Q. Did you suppose at the time this allowance was granted that Judge Hanford thought or had any reason to think that he was making an allowance to a trustee?—A. I don't know, sir. He asked whether Mr. Baxter had been appointed trustee.

Q. Were allowances to trustees at that time made on a percentage basis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the law?—A. That was the law; that has always been the law.

Q. That has always been the law?—A. Since the bankruptcy law of 1898.

Q. Did Judge Hanford, at the time when the allowance of twenty-five hundred was made to the receiver, and at the time $2,500 was allowed to counsel, have before him any figures on which he could estimate percentages?—A. Not that I know of. I don't know whether he had or not.

Q. Did he ask anything in that regard that would make it possible for him to estimate percentages?—A. Not that I know of.

Mr. PRESTON. Just a minute. May I ask if he didn't know how much the property brought at the sale?

A. Oh, he was fully informed by the return.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Well, did he ever indicate in any way that he had figured out the allowances on a percentage basis?—A. Well, I can't answer that question.

Q. What were the percentages that were allowed at that time to the trustee?—A. Six per cent on the first five hundred, 4 per cent on the next thousand, 2 per cent on the next eighty-five hundred, and 1 per cent on the excess.

Q. How many times had you applied for receivers' allowances up to that date, do you think, in all your bankruptcy practice?—A. Well, that would be a difficult question for me to answer, Mr. McCoy.

Q. Well, just roughly. Had you been in court 50 times since the bankruptcy law went into operation, on the question of allowances?—A. Oh, yes; more than that.

Q. How many times were you in court on that sort of an application in the year 1910?—A. I could not answer that. A great many times.

Q. A great many times?—A. Yes.

Q. How many between July 1, 1910, and the date this application was made?—A. I can't answer that question.

Q. Well, a number of times?—A. I think so.

Q. And had anybody ever raised the question, Judge Hanford or anybody else, in regard to the amendment of the law which fixed the requirement of notice to creditors?—A. Well, I don't know. I don't remember that they had. I don't think they had.

Q. Did you see the amendments to the bankruptcy law in the 1910 amendment soon after they were published?—A. I didn't for quite a while. It is rather difficult to get those things out here.

Q. Well, how long after the law took effect did you see the amendments to it?—A. I think I saw those amendments first late in the fall or early in the winter of 1910.

Q. Well, did you know that the law had been amended, by a newspaper account, or rumor, or in any way?—A. I don't think I did, sir.

Q. That is, you had not heard between the time when those amendments were adopted and June—probably July 1, 1910, and the early part of the winter of 1911, that the bankruptcy law had been amended?—A. Well, I may have heard something about it, but I paid no attention to it.

Q. And you practiced all that time extensively in bankruptcy?—A. Well, I had practiced a good deal. I have matters in other courts as well.

Q. I know, but as a matter of fact you did, during all that interval of six months or so, practice extensively in bankruptcy?—A. I practiced a good deal in the bankruptcy court.

Q. Do you say that it would not have been possible at any time during that interval to buy, in some book store or other place in this city, a copy of those amendments?—A. I don't say one way or the other. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Did you try?—A. I did not try.

Q. Did you try to ascertain where they could be had?—A. I don't know whether I did or not.

Q. You made no effort to ascertain what the provisions were which had been put into the amendments?—A. I can not tell you, sir, whether I did or not.

Q. Were not those amendments on file in Judge Hanford's chambers; didn't he get them?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did Judge Hanford——A. (Interrupting.) I want to say, I am not in the habit of going into the judge's chambers.

Q. Well, it is quite likely that Judge Hanford would have those amendments, isn't it?—A. Well, I don't know. I have never been a judge. I don't know.

Q. And if any attorney in Seattle would want to get them and he could not get them elsewhere, that this building would be the place where he would come to find them, and that probably Judge Hanford, the judge of the court, would be the place in the end where he would go to get them?—A. Well, my experience with the United States Government has been that you generally get things from them last. If you want them, you get them from some private source.

Q. Did Judge Hanford hold at any time that the keeping open of that place of business during the day, the day upon which the receiver was appointed, was doing business?—A. He did.

Q. Where do you find that?—A. Well, it is in the record.

Q. Well, is it in any finding of fact that he made?—A. No, sir.

Q. Memorandum decision?—A. I know of one place where it is. It is in the order of allowances, the final order that was made. Whether it is elsewhere, I don't know.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By the Chairman:

Q. Mr. McClure, was the receiver present in person the part of the day that the store was kept open under his management?—A. Yes, Mr. Graham; I think Mr. Baxter was in that store every day during all business hours from the time he took possession at 11 o'clock.

Q. I mean the day it was opened for business?—A. He was. He was there, except as I remember he was perhaps absent from the store during this consultation as to whether the doors should be kept open or closed at the end of that day.

Q. Was there any sign or indicia of any sort showing the change from Knosher to the receiver?—A. There was a sign of some sort placed upon the door the next day. Whether there was one there that day or not I don't recall, but my recollection is there was not.

Q. I am speaking entirely of the day during which he continued it open from 11 o'clock until closing time.—A. I can't tell you, sir. I don't remember.

Q. I think you stated the reason for doing that was that they had a sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a large number of customers?—A. Yes; the store was full.

Q. There was nothing to indicate to the customers, was there, any change whatever in the management?—A. Well, through—I was there and Mr. Baxter was there, and Mr. Baxter took charge of the business immediately, but how open that was to the customers I can't tell.

Q. There was no written indication, such as "Receiver's sale" or anything of that sort posted anywhere about it, was there?—A. I don't remember that there was.

Q. Well, if there was you would remember it, wouldn't you?—A. I know I prepared a notice that the receiver was in charge of the business, but whether it was that day or the next day I can't tell. I think most likely it was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Notice for what; for publication in the papers?—A. No, sir. Always we put upon the door a notice to the effect that the premises and the assets contained therein are in charge of So-and-so by order of a certain court, and all persons are notified to govern themselves accordingly.

Q. Well, now, what do you say as to whether there was any open notice which the public could see? "Almost" must be during that day.—A. Well, I am of the opinion that that notice was put up the next day; it may have been that afternoon, but I don't think so.

Q. There was nothing at all like a temporary closing of the Knosher business and a reopening by the receiver that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was the only occasion on which the receiver openly conducted the retail business there?—A. He didn't retail after the first day.

Q. What was the total amount of insurance on the stock after he had increased the insurance?—A. Why, I think that the receiver carried approximately the inventory value, about $6,500. Those are always my instructions.

Q. Well, have you any special recollection, or are you reasoning toward that——A. (Interrupting.) I am reasoning from a general rule. I don't remember about this particular case. My opinion has always been that a receiver or trustee who did not fully insure the assets he had would be liable.

Q. If Mr. Baxter had not continued the business of the store that day, would you claim that there would be any legal reason or excuse for his getting a receiver's fee?—A. I would.

Q. On what basis?—A. The bankruptcy act speaks of two classes of persons who are entitled to that fee. One is a mere custodian, and the other is one who conducts the business. There is no meaning of the word "custodian" that I know of except one who takes assets and locks them up and sees that they remain in statu quo.

Q. One of your contentions is, then, that if he had closed the store at 11 o'clock and continued in possession of the goods in the store as custodian—as receiver and custodian, so to speak—that he would be entitled to a receiver's fee?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that one of your contentions?—A. Yes, sir; and the amount of that fee would be measured by what he actually did, not to exceed the percentage for receivers or trustees; that is, the maximum amount.

Q. In this case what is the fact as to whether his receiver's fee was based upon the fact that he did run the store for a while?—A. I think that was—entered into the matter, but I——

Q. (Interrupting.) But it was not the exclusive, the full reason?—A. No, sir. I didn't consider that a very strong element. I thought it was much more important that the business, which, of course, was a losing business, should be whipped into shape; an accurate inventory taken for the first time since Knosher had had charge of the business, and so definitely ascertain what was there and the whole thing rounded in a businesslike shape and presented to purchasers in that manner.

Q. The clerks who were working for Knosher remained during the day the store was open and continued, or at least some of them continued through the work of making the inventory?—A. They did.

Q. The only additional ones were some interested experts chosen by creditors?—A. So far as I know there were no experts there in the store. I was of the opinion that the clerks took that inventory.

Q. I thought you stated that some of the creditors had representatives there during the work of inventorying?—A. Well, I don't understand that that is the case.

Q. Well, was that the appraisement?—A. That was the appraisal; yes, sir.

Q. And the appraising was done by representatives of two of the large creditors and one of the men who had been employed by Knosher?—A. Yes; Mr. Kjos, of the Western Dry Goods Co., represented a creditor, and Mr. Doheny, of Cheasty's, was absolutely independent; Cheasty's were not interested, nor was Mr. Doheny. He was simply an expert whom we employed because of his qualifications.

Q. At what stage was it determined that your firm and Mr. Stern would be the attorneys for the receiver?—A. My impression is that Mr. Baxter employed us the day of his appointment.

Q. At the time of his appointment?—A. No, sir; it was afterwards.

Q. You filed the petition for his appointment——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) You stated.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the fact that there were two firms employed to advise the receiver furnish a ground for an increase in the attorneys' fee?—A. I am sure it did not.

Q. What was the reason for the selection of two firms?—A. Well, it was a large store and both firms represented large interests. Of course Mr. Baxter can speak better for that than I can.

Q. You mean both firms of attorneys represented a large number of creditors?—A. Yes.

Q. Or a large amount of claims?—A. Yes. I think—speaking a little off the question upon that very proposition—I think that the rule that you have in the southern district of New York is a much more salutary rule, however it may work out; that it would be advisable that the attorneys of a receiver or trustee should represent no creditor; I think that would be the best ethical rule, but that is not the rule here and never has been and is not the rule anywhere in the West, that I know of. It is the rule on paper in the southern district of New York, but I have always been of the opinion that in that district it is violated in its practical effect, although it is there on paper.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. PRESTON. Just one question. I think perhaps there is a misunderstanding. Did the petition for the appointment of a receiver ask for the appointment of Mr. Baxter as receiver, or simply for the appointment of a receiver?

A. For an appointment of a receiver.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, did not the petitioner suggest Mr. Baxter as the man who would be appointed?

A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. I don't mean in the petition, but outside the petition? A. No, sir; I didn't. I told Judge Hanford frankly what the situation was and how in my opinion our rights were trampled upon, and I asked him to appoint some independent person. And I want to say, for Mr. Baxter, that I have had many receivers, and he is the best one that I have ever had.

Mr. McCoy. How were your rights being trampled on?

A. Well, I didn't know what they were going to do. I found out afterwards that they had this man Smith, of Smith, Daniels & Kelleher, in line for the receivership.

The Chairman. How were the other receivers in the matter of fee allowances?

A. I beg pardon.

Q. You recommended Mr. Baxter. Is it on account of his liberality?—A. In what respect, sir?

The Chairman. In attorney's fees, for instance?

A. Well, I don't see what Mr. Baxter has to do with that. If that is the purport of the question, the answer must be emphatically, no.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Mr. Baxter was your client, wasn't he? Wasn't Mr. Baxter your client?—A. At what time?

Q. Well, I mean you were attorney for the receiver, weren't you?—A. I was afterwards; yes, sir; after he was appointed.

Q. I mean during the proceedings; I am not taking any particular time.—A. Mr. Baxter was my client after he had been appointed and after he had applied—had employed me.

Q. Sure; that is what I mean; and from then up to the time when the allowances were applied for he was your client?—A. He was.

Q. And is it your position that a client has nothing to do with fees?—A. Not in a bankruptcy proceeding. It is entirely for the court; absolutely. The act says so and it is interpreted so. The decisions are so.

Q. Do you suppose that if Mr. Baxter in court had suggested to Judge Hanford, "Your honor, I think $2,500 is twice too much to pay in this matter," it would have had any weight?—A. Judge Hanford would have considered that like any other probative fact in the case, if that would be a probative fact. And if you practice before Judge Hanford, you will find he is absolutely independent and has his own opinions about those matters.

Q. So even over a protest from a client he would force a fee, you think?—A. That may be your interpretation, but not mine.

Q. Just one question more. You have had receivers appointed a gret many times, Mr. McClure, haven't you?—A. Well, I have had them appointed——

Q. (Interrupting.) Oh, I mean numerous times?—A. A number of times.

Q. A dozen times, we will say. Have you ever had receivers appointed who did not undertake to run the business of the receivership even for a part of a day?—A. I have.

Q. In what respect did their services as receiver in a general way differ from the services which Mr. Baxter rendered after the day on which he was appointed?—A. I beg your pardon; I don't understand that question.

Q. I say, in what respect do the services which those receivers rendered to their respective estates differ in quality from the services rendered by Mr. Baxter to this estate after the day of his appointment on——A. They differ just as the estates differ. The services of a receiver differ according to the character of the duties he has to perform.

Q. The receiver usually takes an inventory, doesn't he?—A. He should, immediately; yes, sir.

Q. And he usually increases the insurance, if necessary?—A. If necessary; yes, sir.

Q. And has the risk transferred to himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if he is going to sell the goods, he usually goes about advertising to sell them?—A. He follows the order of the court, whatever it may be.

Q. Yes; whatever it may be, and he finally comes to the point where he disposes of the goods?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was what Mr. Baxter did, wasn't it, in this case?—A. Those were some of the things he did.

Q. Well, what other things did he do besides those things?—A. Well, I have gone over that.

Q. I really don't remember your saying anything else in substance. Of course, you elaborated as to how he had the inventory made and all that sort of thing, but I mean it was an inventory after all.—A. The only purpose of my stating how the inventory was made was that an unjustifiable attack, in my opinion, was made upon it.

Q. I was not thinking about the attack that was made on the inventory, but all I had in mind was the services that the receiver had rendered. That is all.

Mr. PRESTON. In the Knosher case.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Anderson, were there any questions you desired asked the witness?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. We have not been permitting indiscriminate questioning.

Mr. ANDERSON. I only want to ask a question relating to the facts testified to by Mr. McClure.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not be better if you would leave it to-night and prepare them and submit them, and Mr. McClure could come back in the morning?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I would just simply tell Mr. McCoy.

Mr. MCCOY. What we have done in the way of practice here, Mr. Anderson, is that anybody having a question to suggest could suggest it and it comes through the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. I see.

Mr. MCCOY (continuing). As a question, instead of letting anybody ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Anderson can see that if we began that practice, we could hardly stop them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So that if you will just prepare them and submit them to the committee.

Mr. McClure, you will come back in the morning.

An adjournment was here taken until 9.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

SIXTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1912—9.40 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Gentlemen, Mr. Finch states that he is very anxious to leave Seattle temporarily on some business. Now, I suppose if there is anything further on that line in the way of rebuttal that it ought to be produced while here. He is compelled to leave to-morrow, and if there is any further evidence along that line I think you ought to produce it to-day or to-night.

WALTER A. MCCLURE resumed the stand.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. McClure, you stated last evening that Judge Hanford was a stickler for giving notice to all parties or having notice given in the case of application for allowances?

A. Well, what I meant by that was that was my experience.

Q. Well, of course, you were, I suppose, speaking from your own experience. Now, isn't it true that Judge Hanford entered the order of September 23, making allowances to the receiver, the trustee, and the attorneys, when he knew that the order in question had been changed in two material respects, namely, stating that twenty-five hundred instead of three thousand had been paid the attorneys for the receiver and trustee, and also omitting the paragraph commanding the receiver and his attorneys to repay into the registry of the court the excess sums allowed them for fees, notwithstanding that in his chambers the attorney for the petitioning creditors and yourself had agreed upon this order?—A. What was the question?

Question read.

A. I don't know, sir. My understanding of that matter was that the order as signed was the order agreed upon.

Q. When you were in court, there were some differences between you and Mr. Anderson as to the form of the order, weren't there?—A. Yes. Mr. Anderson desired an order about 10 or 12 lines long, to the effect that the allowances of the receiver and trustee were a certain sum and the allowances of the attorneys of the receiver and trustee were a certain sum; and I desired that the order contained the appropriate recitals.

Q. Well, you did disagree in court as to the form of the order?—A. My impression is, Mr. McCoy, that the matter was taken up in Judge Hanford's chambers, and after we had discussed the matter before the court, the court practically holding a session chambers, we then repaired to the outer room and the order was framed.

Q. That is, you and Mr. Anderson then framed an order——A. (Interrupting.) Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Which was satisfactory to both of you in form?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, after that was done an order was presented by you to Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir. I sent Mr. Anderson a copy of it.

Q. Before it was signed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it true that that order as finally signed was different from the form of order which you and Mr. Anderson had agreed upon?—A. I don't know that it was.

Q. Well, who prepared it?—A. It was written in our office.

Q. Well, didn't you see it before it went to Judge Hanford?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, can't you say whether or not it was different from what was agreed upon between you and Mr. Anderson?—A. I say it was the order that was agreed upon.

Q. $500 had been allowed at one time to the trustee on account of his fees?—A. And never paid; yes, sir.

Q. And never paid?—A. And never paid.

Q. When was that allowance made?—A. That was allowed by the referee. The referee stated, in making that allowance, that he would take up the case as if it were one in the ordinary course, and make allowances accordingly.

Q. What do you mean by take it up in the ordinary course?—A. Just as if it came to him as an independent proposition.

Q. Had the estate been settled at that time, or was it about to be settled?—A. It was in course of administration.

Q. Is there any provision in the bankruptcy law which permits a trustee to get his allowances in advance of the final settlement?—A. The bankruptcy act provides that trustees shall receive certain compensation based upon the moneys disbursed by them, and it fixes the rate of the compensation. I don't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Isn't it the law, as a matter of fact, that the trustee is not entitled to get his money until he has disbursed the estate or is about to disburse it?—A. Well, the law is as I have stated. It has been interpreted here that an allowance will be made in course of administration, and another allowance will be made at the close of administration. We have never interpreted the law to mean that all allowances must be withheld until the administration was closed. It may be so in other jurisdictions. That is not the rule in this jurisdiction. I think there is any positive provision upon the bankruptcy act as to that matter, since you have brought the matter to my attention.

Q. In this matter, in the Knosher case, what functions had the trustee to perform?—A. Well, the usual functions.

Q. Well, the estate had practically been disposed of, hadn't it, by the time the matter came to the trustee?—A. The stock of merchandise and the store furniture, fixtures, and equipment, and the auto delivery wagon had been reduced to money before the trustee was appointed; yes, sir.

Q. And was there anything which had not been reduced to cash before he was elected?—A. Yes.

Q. What?—A. There was a quantity of real estate, and there were book accounts as well.

Q. Did he sell the real estate?—A. He did.

Q. Now, in regard to this meeting of creditors for the purpose of determining whether to keep the place open, on the day on which the receiver was appointed and Mr. Baxter first reported as receiver, isn't it true that there were no other creditors present except Mr. Libby, representing John Anisfield, and certain attorneys, including yourself and Leopold M. Stern?—A. I can't say, Mr. McCoy. I wish that I could. But my idea was that all parties who were interested should be notified, and I was of the opinion they had been.

Q. Who undertook to notify them?—A. Mr. Baxter, as I understood it.

Q. Well, will you say that no one else was present except those that I have named?—A. I don't understand that there was any formal conference at any one place at any one time.

Q. Aside from the question of formality or informality, will you say that anybody except Mr. Libby and certain attorneys, including yourself and Leopold M. Stern, were at that meeting?—A. I will say that, as my understanding is, there was no particular meeting.

Q. Mr. McClure, you stated, and Mr. Baxter has reported, that he conferred with certain creditors on the day on which he was appointed in regard to the keeping open of the store. Now, I don't care whether you call that a meeting or a conference or a gathering or anything else; will you say that anybody else was present at that time except the people whom I have mentioned?—A. Mr. McCoy, all I wish to do is to give you the facts; I don't wish to conceal anything.

Q. I want you to answer my question. Will you state anybody else was present?—A. My idea of a conference is——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't care what your idea of a conference is, Mr. McClure. It was stated by you—to repeat, it was reported by Mr. Baxter—that he did have an interview, a conference, a consultation, a meeting, a something or other where people were together, at which they discussed the question of keeping that place open during the day. Now, will you say that there was anybody else present at that except the people who were named—whom I have named?—A. It is impossible for me to answer that question. I would be very glad to explain it. My idea of an interview with a man is to get a man on the telephone line, for one thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think that is important at all, Mr. McClure. Why is it impossible for you to answer that?

A. As I understand the question, Mr. Graham, it is asking for a particular meeting at a particular time. Now, my instructions to Mr. Baxter, and my understanding of what he did is, that he notified, conferred, interviewed all the parties in interest, either personally or by conversation over the phone, or by interviews with their attorneys, or in such other manner, means, or method as would give them the notice of the situation and would obtain from them the advice and assistance and direction he desired.

Mr. MCCOY. Was there any time when Mr. Libby, certain attorneys, including yourself and Leopold M. Stern, were present, at which any such matter was discussed?

A. I don't remember such.

Q. Were you present at all at the appraisement of the assets in the store of the Knosher Co.?—A. I was there when the figures were made.

Q. Is that the only time?—A. About 15 minutes before that time I arrived at the store and remained until the figures were made.

Q. How many appraisers were there?—A. Three.

Q. Were they there at the time you speak of?—A. They were; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not at that time there were covers over all the goods and that the appraisers did not inspect them at all, or a large part of them?—A. Well, when I went into the store there were the usual dust cloths over the stock of merchandise.

Q. Were those taken off when the appraisers were there at the time you were there?—A. They were not taken off while I was in the store, during that 15 or 20 minutes.

Q. Were you there during all the time when the appraisers were inspecting the goods on that occasion?—A. The appraisers were there when I arrived. I don't know how long they had been there.

Q. Did they leave before or after you did?—A. My impression is that they were there when I left.

Q. Was the bankrupt examined in the usual course of bankruptcy proceedings?—A. He was—that is, the officers, Mr. Knosher and Mr. Tiedeman.

Q. Those men have both been indicted, haven't they, in connection with this matter?—A. I don't know. I have heard so. I have heard that Mr. Knosher was indicted for participating in the conduct of the inventory, when, in fact, he was not in the store at any time that the inventory was taken.

Q. Have you heard, also, that Mr. Tiedeman has been indicted?—A. I think so, yes; I don't know about that.

Q. Who conducted the examination of these two men in the bankruptcy proceedings?—A. The examination was in part conducted by me. I think it was in part also conducted by Mr. Stern. Perhaps representatives of creditors also conducted the examination.

Q. Don't you know whether or not representatives of the creditors conducted the examination at all?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you discover, in the course of that examination, any indications that any fraud or irregularity had been practiced?—A. In the conduct of the business?

Q. In connection with the matter in any way?—A. No; I did not, except that there was a gross misrepresentation as to the quantity of assets on hand. My opinion of the whole business was that it might have been likened to a man walking down a crowded street in a city with his eyes shut; they had no more idea where they were going or what they were doing than if they kept no books at all.

Q. The gross misrepresentations were those made to creditors?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. Did you discover any fraud in connection with the making of the inventory or the appraisal, at that examination?—A. I did not.

Q. Or at any other time?—A. No other time. I have never heard anything tangible about that.

Q. Has the estate been closed?—A. It has not.

Q. Have you advised the trustee to proceed in the matter on the basis of any information that you have leading you to think that there was fraud in the matter?—A. I have advised the trustee, and have also repeatedly stated to the attorneys of these creditors that we desired to cooperate fully with them. If there was anything wrong with the inventory or any part of the administration, we desired to lend them all of our energy and knowledge and time, because if any body takes an inventory for me which is incorrect I want to know it and I want to see them punished.

Q. What have you done to find that out—to find out whether or not that is the fact in this case?—A. I have been able to find nothing to work upon, and have done nothing.

Q. What services did Leopold M. Stern perform as attorney for the receiver?—A. Well, he was associated with me in the case and performed, in part, the services I have already testified to. I can not say positively of my own knowledge what he did perform, but I know that he assisted in those services that I have mentioned.

Q. What arrangement did you have with him for division of fees?—A. At the time the order of allowance was made of the $2,500 Judge Hanford inquired from the bench if this allowance was to be understood to go to both attorneys, and he was informed that it was, and that was the arrangement.

Q. Well, when was that arrangement made?—A. I think it was in—there never was any positive arrangement made about it; it was simply sort of a matter of course of understanding; both firms bearing the responsibility of the administration, the compensation would naturally be equally divided.

Q. You consider this matter to have been one of sufficient importance to warrant the receiver in employing two attorneys?—A. When it means no additional expense to the State; yes.

Q. How did he know that it meant no additional expense?—A. I don't know what his knowledge was.

Q. Well, then, your answer is not an answer to my question. In this particular matter do you think that it was one of enough importance to warrant the employment by him of two attorneys?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with Mr. McClure?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McClure, I believe, possesses considerable knowledge in regard to the McCarthy matter that was spoken of by Mr. Anderson in his testimony last evening or yesterday afternoon, and I would like to ask the committee to examine Mr. McClure about that, either now or recall him at sometime, just at your convenience. I mention it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would not be best to go into it at this time, to ask him about the McCarthy matter. He will be accessible at any time, and I hardly think we ought to——

Mr. PRESTON. Will you be accessible at any time or are you going away?

A. I want to go down to Colorado, Mr. Preston, about Friday or Saturday of this week for about a week or 10 days.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we can probably use you in that matter before that time.

Witness excused.

WILLIAM MARQUAT, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name.

A. William Marquat.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 1317 Thomas Street.

Q. What is your business?—A. My business is saloon business, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Speak a little louder, will you, please?

A. My business is saloon business; 1317 is my place of residence.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood you closed your place to come here this morning; is that correct?—A. No, sir; I didn't have to close it, I have another man there taking my place.

Q. I called you out of your turn on the theory that the business was closed up.

Mr. HUGHES. What is your name?

A. Marquat.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be a calamity to you and to the public to have it closed to-day. What has your business been for the past five years?

A. Same line of business, sir.

Q. At what different places?—A. Well, sir, five years ago I worked for Mr. Southerland, in the Alaska Building.

Mr. HIGGINS. You will have to speak up.

A. I say, five years ago I was in Mr. Southerland's employ in the Alaska Building.

The CHAIRMAN. Where else have you been?

A. Ever since then I have been employed by these same people at 610 First Avenue, with the exception of this last year I have been up here at 219 Union.

Q. The Southerland bar?—A. No, sir; Southerland in the Alaska Building.

Q. Southerland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with a drink by the name of Hanford martini cocktail?—A. No, sir; not at all, sir.

Q. Do you know of such a drink?—A. Oh, I have heard it alluded to by just harum-scarum fellows coming in.

Q. If one called for such a drink, would you mix a drink for him by that name?—A. Why, it is customary with all barkeepers to try to accommodate the public.

Mr. HUGHES. How is that? I can't hear.

A. It is customary with all barkeepers, if a man comes in to ask for something—if it was a cocktail we know how a cocktail is made—the component parts of a cocktail. We will make some kind of a cocktail, and if it doesn't suit the patron of course he won't come in again, if we don't make the right kind of a cocktail; but myself I have never made one.

Q. You never made any kind of a cocktail?—A. No; never a Hanford cocktail.

Q. What are the ingredients of it?—A. I could not tell you, sir.

Q. Have you heard it called for by that name?—A. Oh, I have heard it alluded to since the trial by fellows coming in and asking me if I knew how to make a Hanford cocktail.

Q. Did you hear it before this proceeding, this hearing began?—A. I would not like to say. I don't think so.

Q. Why don't you like to say?—A. Well, because I don't know positively. It is a matter of memory, and of course I would not like to say, because I don't think I have.

Q. Well, can you tell what the ingredients of it are, as you have heard it referred to?—A. No, sir; I could not.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with this witness?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Where are you working?—A. 219 Union.

Q. What is the name of that place?—A. The Mecca saloon.

Q. The Mecca?—A. Yes.

Q. You say you have heard it called for by harum-scarum fellows coming in?—A. I have heard it alluded to by people coming in since this trial—this investigation has been going on, asking me if I knew how to make a Hanford cocktail.

Q. Did you read the newspaper account of the testimony of one Jacobs?—A. I have read very little. I have had a misfortune with my right eye since the 31st day of last March.

Q. Jacobs——A. (Continuing.) And I have read the paper very little, very little indeed.

Q. Well, a few days ago a witness testified here to having called for a Hanford martini cocktail at the rathskeller. Now, can you recall anyone calling for such a cocktail——A. Not in our place——

Q. (Continuing.) Prior to the last few days while this investigation—since this investigation has been going on?—A. No, sir; I haven't.

Q. You don't know any such a cocktail?—A. I don't; no, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Just a minute.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. How many times since this proceeding has been going on have these harum-scarums come in there and asked for a Hanford cocktail?—A. Well, now, I could not say that—it might be once, it might be five or six times, sir.

Q. Was it five or six times?—A. I would not like to say that. I have heard it alluded to only by——

Q. (Interrupting.) Several times?—A. Yes; I will say several times.

Q. Did you make any inquiry as to how it was made?—A. No, sir.

Q. I thought you said it was the duty of a saloon to cater to the public's demand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So when you hear of a new cocktail several times you don't make any inquiry as to the ingredients?—A. Well, I would if the gentleman asked me to make it for him, I would say, "How do you make this cocktail?" But if they simply——

Q. (Interrupting.) What did they say?—A. They simply came in and said, "Can't you make a Hanford cocktail?" I just laughed it off.

Q. You said a minute ago you said, "How do you make this cocktail?"—A. No, sir.

Q. That is what you said just now.—A. I would ask him, if he asked me for the cocktail—particular cocktail.

Q. Well, now, they did ask you for it, didn't they?—A. No; they simply alluded to it, coming into the barroom, just walking by.

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, before we get too far away from the Knosher case I would like to present to you a certified copy of the order reciting the meeting of the creditors and the appointment of Baxter trustee, so as to fix the date, and also that other brief I spoke of [producing].

FRED W. POWELL, having been first duly sworn, testified as followr:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Fred W. Powell—Fred William.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 2115 Thirteenth Avenue South.

Q. What is your business?—A. Barkeeper.

Q. Where are you working?—A. Saratoga bar, 812 Second Avenue.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. Four years and a half.

Q. Have you ever been called on for a drink known by the name of Hanford Martini cocktail?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of such a compound?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Did you ever hear of it before?—A. I have heard of it lately, yes, sir; the last three or four days.

Q. When did you first hear of it?—A. Oh, it is three or four days ago.

Q. Are you sure that is the first time you heard of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear of a drink by the name of the Hanford cocktail?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of that?—A. Not previous to the time I speak of, the last three or four days; last week some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with this witness?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford when you see him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he come into the Saratoga bar?—A. He has come in there; yes, sir.

Q. How frequently have you seen him there?—A. Oh, I could not say. I have seen him there several times; I would not know how many times.

Q. How often in a week; are you able to say?—A. No; I would not.

Q. When are you on duty in the Saratoga bar?—A. From 12 to 2.30 and from a quarter of 6 to 12 at night.

Q. Can you give the committee any idea of the number of times you have seen him and served him?—A. Why, no; I could not. I have been there four years and a half. I would not venture to say how many times I have served him.

Q. Is it a rare occurrence or a common occurrence?—A. No——

Q. (Interrupting.) Does he come in every night?—A. No.

Q. Or three or four times a week?—A. Possibly three or four times a week. I don't think as often as that.

Q. When he comes, is he alone?—A. Always.

Q. Can you tell the committee what he drinks at your bar?—A. Yes; I have served him with sherry and egg there.

Q. Does he always drink the sherry and egg?—A. I think that is the only thing I ever served him.

Q. Did you ever see him intoxicated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or under the influence of liquor in any way?—A. Not that I would think so; no.

Q. How?—A. Not that I should judge he was under the influence; no.

Mr. MCCOY. You would not serve a drink to a man who was under the influence of liquor, would you?

A. Not knowingly; no.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Powell.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other witnesses present on this matter now? If there are, they may be called.

W. J. KERRIGAN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your name.

A. W. J. Kerrigan.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Hotel Burlington.

Q. What is your business?—A. Real-estate broker.

Q. Do you know one George Jacobs?—A. I do.

Q. Did you make a bet with him not long ago concerning a certain drink known as a Hanford cocktail or a Hanford Martini, or something of that sort?—A. Mr. Jacobs came in my office and——

Q. (Interrupting.) First, did you make a bet with him involving such a drink?—A. Why, yes.

Q. When was it?—A. Last week.

Q. What was the wager?—A. Why, he said he could go to any bar and call for a Hanford Martini and they would serve him a Martini with an onion in it. I seemed to doubt him. And he said if they did serve it that way when he asked for a Hanford Martini, why, I was to pay for the drinks; if they didn't, he would.

Q. Did he say it about any bar or did he name a certain round of drinking places?—A. He named a number of bars down the street.

Q. Did you go?—A. I went to one bar.

Q. Where?—A. Rathskeller.

Q. And what happened there?—A. Why, they served a drink there.

Q. What did he ask for?—A. A Hanford Martini, if I remember it.

Q. Was it served?—A. Beg pardon.

Q. Was it served by that name?—A. It was; it was served—a cocktail—I don't know whether it would go by that name or not. I think the bartender served a Martini, the way I looked upon it.

Q. Well, the bet—will you tell what the nature of the bet was?—A. Well, he came in the office there and I sort of ridiculed him, and then he started to bet that he could take me to any bar, naming a number of bars, and if he called for a Hanford cocktail they would serve it to him. I looked upon the matter as if he called for a Hanford Martini they would serve him a regular Martini; they always do.

Q. But where did the bet come in?—A. Where did the——

Q. (Interrupting.) You haven't told us yet where the bet came in.—A. Why, he bet that they would serve a Hanford Martini.

Q. Well, the bet, I take it, was that if they did you lost?—A. Yes.

Q. And were to pay for the drinks?—A. That is the idea.

Q. And if they didn't he lost and had to pay?—A. Yes.

Q. Who paid?—A. I paid.

Q. Was there anything said about what was to go in the cocktail in the way of solid matter?—A. He said if an onion went in it was a Hanford Martini; if an olive went in, it was not a Hanford Martini.

Q. What?—A. He said if an onion went in it was a Hanford Martini; if an olive went in, it was not.

Q. And what went in?—A. An onion.

Q. Did you go to any of the other bars?—A. No; that is the only bar.

Q. Well, was it due to your economical spirit or your desire not to drink too much?—A. I just wanted to be satisfied.

Q. Why didn't you go to the other bars?—A. I didn't have time. I had a dinner engagement.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with the witness?

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Did you ever have a Martini before at the Rathskeller?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often—as you wanted them?—A. As I wanted one.

Q. Did you ever get one served with an olive in it?—A. No.
Q. What did you get served in it?—A. An onion.
Q. Is that the custom and practice of that bar to serve Martini cocktails with an onion in it?—A. Always has since I have been there.
Q. Where did the practice of serving onions in cocktails, which is an innovation to me, come from, do you know?—A. No, I don't.
Q. Do you know whether or not it is due to the influence of Alaska on Seattle?—A. It might be.
Mr. HIGGINS. I have heard that said. I don't know what the fact is. That is all.
The CHAIRMAN. After we leave here they may put in nutmegs.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. Just a minute. Where is that Rathskeller?—A. It is on Second Avenue, in the Baillargeon Building.
Q. Is that the only place in Seattle that goes by that name?—A. I believe it is.
Q. Have you ever taken dinner there?—A. No, I haven't.
Q. You say that whenever you order a Martini cocktail there you get a cocktail with an onion in it?—A. Yes.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Well, you do in other bars, don't you, Mr. Kerrigan, in Seattle?—A. I should think so, from what I understand.
Q. How does the Rathskeller compare with your refreshment and irrigation parlors in Seattle?—A. I consider it one of the best bars in town.
Q. Has the reputation of being a first-class place?—A. First class; yes.
Q. Has a very large restaurant on the second floor?—A. Yes.
Q. On the main street of the city?—A. Yes.
Q. And would be regarded as one of the best places of that sort in the city, would it?—A. It would.
Mr. McCOY. If you asked for a dry Martini, or dry cocktail, whatever you would call it, you would get an onion in it then?
A. Yes; I think you would.
The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with the witness?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. How long have you known this man Jacobs?—A. Oh, possibly the last three years.
Q. Do you know anything about his habits?—A. You mean his personal habits?
Q. As to drinking?—A. Why, I believe he drinks plenty.
Q. Have you ever drank whisky at a bar with him?—A. I don't believe I have.
Q. Did not also suggest, in this same conversation with you, that if he called for a Hanford whisky you would get Monogram whisky?—A. That is what he offered me.
Q. Do you know whether it is a fact that he frequents the bars that he named?—A. Yes.
Q. Do you know whether or not it is a fact that he always himself drinks Monogram whisky, or generally, at least?—A. I could not tell you that.

Q. Did you know at the time that the Rathskeller bar was accustomed to serving a dry Martini with an onion instead of an olive?—A. I have always seen it served that way.

Q. Did you "fall" for this bet innocently or just good naturedly to treat the man to a drink?—A. Just to buy the man a drink, as a matter of fact.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Well, now, a minute. What was it you said to him about his testimony here?—A. Oh, I kind of ridiculed him on testifying against Judge Hanford, because I didn't favor it.

Q. Why didn't you favor it?—A. Because I didn't; that is why.

Q. Well, why not?—A. Well, I would not care to go into details on it.

Q. Well, what did you tell him?—A. What?

Q. What did you say to him?—A. I told him I thought he was very foolish to give up his business to bother with the Hanford trial.

Q. What did you mean by that?—A. Why, I thought that it would be better for him to attend to his own business and let other people take care of——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you know that he was subpœnaed to come here?—A. He told me; two or three different times I met him he said he had been subpœnaed.

Q. Did you say to him that the fact that he testified here might make it bad for his business?—A. I said I thought it would.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. Why did you think that?—A. What?

Q. Why did you think that?—A. Why did I think it?

Q. Did you think the people of this community would injure any man who was telling the truth, who was a man of character? Did you mean to convey that idea to this committee?—A. A man should tell the truth.

Q. You don't mean to convey——

The Chairman (interrupting). That is not in answer, quite, to the question. The question was, Do you think that telling the truth in this matter would injure him in his business in the community or might do so?

A. No; I don't think so.

Mr. Hughes. You know this man Jacobs pretty well, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you willing to answer the question that you objected to make the answer or make the answer that you objected to making awhile ago? You said you preferred not to go into the details of your reasons.—A. Well, I will tell you; I didn't go into any details; I just thought off hand, in a way. I haven't read the case deeply, considered it, but, as a matter of fact, I thought he was foolish.

Q. Well, do you care to tell the committee the reasons why you thought so?—A. Well, there were no general reasons; only my personal feeling.

The Chairman. Did you say to him that you thought it would hurt his business, or words to that effect?

A. Words to that effect, in a general way.

Mr. Hughes. Do you know whether he is in business?

A. What is that?

Q. Do you know whether he is in business at all?—A. He always seems to be busy.

Q. Do you know what he does?—A. Yes.

Q. Aside from what you have already told, what does he do?—A. He is a real estate broker.

Q. Have you ever known of his selling any real estate?—A. Well, I think he is working, trying to sell it, trying to trade it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Is he a real estate owner?

A. No; an agent.

Q. You don't know whether he owns any real estate or not?—A. I don't know as to that.

Witness excused.

W. E. KEYES, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name to the committee.

A. W. E. Keyes.

Q. Mr. Keyes, you live in the city?—A. I do.

Q. What is your business?—A. Café business.

Q. Where?—A. At 1415 Third Avenue; 1415 and 1417 is the right number.

Q. Were you a party to the bet you have heard mentioned a moment ago?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you know Judge Hanford?—A. I do.

Q. Have you had a call at your place for a Hanford cocktail?—A. Never, that I know of.

Q. Or a Hanford Martini?—A. Never.

Q. Do you know anything of that drink? Did you ever hear of it before?—A. Never until this morning in here.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. Where is your place of business?

A. Third Avenue. I presume the questions given was when I was at 812 Second Avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. My question covered everything. Did you have knowledge at that place of a Hanford Martini?—A. Never.

Q. Did you at any time anywhere?—A. Never.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Where is 812 Second Avenue?—A. Mehlhorn Building.

Q. When were you there?—A. Not in the last four months. Previous to that time nearly four years.

Q. What time of day were you on service?—A. Various times, as the shifts were changed from time to time.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford in that place?—A. I have.

Q. Have you ever seen him there when he appeared to you to be in any degree under the influence of liquor?—A. Never.

Q. Do you know the man named Jacobs, sitting back on the third row?—A. I was talking to him awhile ago. I never knew him as Jacobs before. I have known him a long while.

Q. Is he a patron of the bars where you have been?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall what kind of a Martini he drinks?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Do you recall what kind of whisky he drinks?

The CHAIRMAN. The question assumes quite a little, Mr. Hughes.
Mr. HUGHES. Well——
A. Which, Mr. ——
Mr. HUGHES. Have you seen him drink at the bars where you were?
A. Who, Mr. Jacobs?
Q. This man Jacobs; yes.—A. Yes; I believe I have.
Q. Do you recall what kind of whisky?
The CHAIRMAN. It is a pretty strong assumption to assume that he does drink whisky. I have not heard any testimony of that fact.
Mr. HUGHES. Well, a man that drinks at the bar——
A. (Interrupting.) I could not recall any particular time.
The CHAIRMAN. I drink at the bar, but I usually take buttermilk. There is no necessary conclusion from drinking at the bar that he drinks whisky.
Mr. HUGHES. I don't think it would be a very violent assumption that Mr. Jacobs does.
The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think so, because I know nothing of Mr. Jacobs and his habits, and I think he is entitled to the same consideration as any other man.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Well, does he drink whisky at your bar?—A. I could not tell you, sir.
Q. Do you know what he does drink there?—A. No; I could not tell you. The different times—I presume beer and buttermilk, and I have seen him in there quite a number of times and I know I have served him, but with what particularly I could not tell you.
Q. Did you ever serve him with whisky there?—A. Well, I would imagine so; but I could not swear to it.
Q. What did he call for; do you know? Did he call for Monogram whisky?—A. No; I don't—I would not really remember. At that particular place customers don't ask for any particular brand; they ask for whisky or——
Q. (Interrupting.) How?—A. I don't remember of them calling for any particular thing.
The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?
Mr. MCCOY. Did you see Judge Hanford drink any alcoholic liquor at this place—it is the Mehlhorn, is it?
A. I have served Judge Hanford with sherry and egg, but nothing else ever.
Mr. MCCOY. You would not serve any intoxicants to a man who was drunk, would you?
A. Not if I knew it; no.
Mr. MCCOY. That is all.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further? That is all, Mr. Keyes.

Witness excused.

C. HOLDEN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name, if you please?
A. C. Holden.
Q. Clarence?—A. Yes.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Burlington Hotel.
Q. What is your business?—A. Automobile tires.
Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. Why, about two months.

Q. Do you recall one night last week being present when a wager was entered into between a Mr. George Jacobs and Mr. Kerrigan who was on the witness stand awhile ago?—A. I do.

Q. Were you present?—A. I was.

Q. Did you witness the bet?—A. I did, yes.

Q. What was it?—A. Why, simply as Mr. Kerrigan stated, that Mr. Jacobs said that he could go in a bar and get a Judge Hanford Martini and it would be served with an onion instead of an olive. Mr. Kerrigan thought that he could not do it, and they went over to the rathskeller and proved it.

Q. Who won?—A. Mr. Jacobs. Mr. Kerrigan paid for the drinks.

Q. Was there anything said about going to the other saloons named?—A. Mr. Jacobs said he could go to any bar that he might want to pick out. He named over something like six or seven bars.

Q. Did they go?—A. No; simply to the rathskeller.

Q. Why, if you know?—A. Well, it was late and we both had to go to dinner. It was simply to settle the question, that was all. It was not for the purpose of drinking.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. You didn't think it was for the purpose of giving Mr. Jacobs a drink, you thought it was for the purpose of settling the question, did you, on the bet?—A. That is all.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. Did you joke with Mr. Kerrigan about his falling so easily for a bet of that kind, afterwards?—A. No; there was not anything said about it, as I can remember.

Q. What?—A. There was not anything said about it, as I can remember. I didn't pay much attention to the bet while it was being made.

Q. Had you ever drank at the rathskeller before?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you ever drank a Martini cocktail there before?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Hughes. That is all.

Witness excused.

Mr. Hughes. You asked to have Mr. Graves come back and I apprehend it is a very short matter. He is a busy man.

The Chairman. Mr. who?

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Graves. You remember you asked to have him come back.

The Chairman. Well, I think this witness will be very brief.

Govnor Teats, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Please state your name.

A. Govnor Teats.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Teats?—A. In Tacoma.

Q. How long have you lived at Tacoma?—A. About 22 years.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Law.

Q. You have practiced your profession all the time you have been in Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Since December, 1890.

Q. How intimately have you known him?—A. Well, you can't say that I knew him intimately. I have practiced constantly before the court since that time.

Q. Where?—A. Where?

Q. Yes.—A. In Seattle and Tacoma.

Q. To what extent have you had an opportunity of observing the judge elsewhere than in court?—A. Not very much.

Q. Have you noticed any peculiarities in the manner of the judge's presiding in court?—A. Well, he has one peculiarity, of going to sleep.

Q. To what extent does he indulge that peculiarity?—A. Well, sometimes you think he is asleep and think he does not know what you are talking about, or what you are examining our witness on, and then you will find out that he does, and I don't know of only one instance where I knew that he did not.

Q. That he did not follow——A. (Interrupting.) That he went to sleep absolutely.

Q. When and where was that instance?—A. That was in September, 1909, in the trial of a case. I was examining a witness and during the examination a juror wanted to go to the closet. He got up and he says, "I want to go to the closet." I says, "Go on." He went out to the closet. He came back. Just as he sat down the judge woke up.

Q. What effect, if any, did the juror's request have on the judge when he made the request?—A. Well, the judge was asleep. He didn't know anything about it.

Q. And in what tone did the juror speak?—A. Well, the juror was the farthest juror, as I remember, from me, and he would be next to the closest juror to the judge. I think there is a pillar about possibly something like that [indicating], but the juror was in this direction [indicating].

Q. And how far away from him, in feet?—A. Oh, I suppose about 10 or 12 feet.

Q. Did he speak in such a tone that the judge must have heard him had he been awake?—A. No question about it, because he hears everything when he is awake.

Q. How long was the juror gone; that is, how much time elapsed from the time the juror made the request until the judge woke up?—A. Well, I could not say. The juror got up, walked out, like going out of this door, going around to the closet, a distance possibly of 60 or 70 feet, came back out of the closet and back into the juror's seat.

Q. Was it as much as five minutes?—A. I would judge between—about that time. I know that we sat there for the juror to come back.

Q. Why did you interfere, Mr. Teats, and tell the juror to go?—A. Because I saw the judge was sound asleep. I thought so, and if he was not he would wake up and take the matter in his own hands, as he generally does.

Q. Do you recall any other instances when he seemed to you to be asleep, or nearly so, while on the bench?—A. Well, there was a period of time there about that time during that term and for about two or three years, and I asked what was the matter with the judge. I had a great many cases to try. Sometimes I would be before the judge for a month at a stretch, and in the argument of motions for new trial he would seemingly doze off. I thought he was sick. I know he would go onto the bench and try to keep awake, and he was a pitiful sight to me; and I never saw but this one instance where I really knew that he did not know what was going on absolutely.

Q. Well, if this hadn't occurred would you have known absolutely then?—A. No; I don't think so.

Q. What difference was there in his apparent condition at that time and some of the other times to which you refer?—A. Well, for instance he would come about like this [illustrating]. If I was that way I would not hear very much, but Hanford seems to be a little different; but on this particular occasion, and I saw it in other cases when I was not trying cases and didn't pay any particular attention—it was none of my business—but on this particular occasion he got so sound asleep that his chin dropped down onto his chest.

Q. Have you seen Judge Hanford drink intoxicants?—A. I think once or twice.

Q. Have you ever seen him when you thought he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I don't think so.

Q. What time in the day was it that the incident concerning the juror occurred?—A. It was at the time he generally goes to sleep. Right after noon, and I think it was overeating and possibly an indulgence of something else. Generally this sleeping period of his is right after noon; possibly 2, half past 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock.

Q. Have you noticed any change in his condition during the years you have known him in the respect you have mentioned?—A. Yes; now, since that—the last two years I have noticed that he does not doze off like he used to. There was a period there of two or three years that I thought he ought not to sit on the bench at all in the trial of a case, but we didn't have any judges. I thought possibly he was sick or overworked. I am not intimately acquainted; I don't associate with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Teats, you say you thought he was probably sick and you asked what was the matter with him. Did you find out?—A. Why, I found out from the clerk, who told me that the judge was working pretty hard; that he would overeat at noon and get drowsy.

Q. Didn't you also find out that the judge was suffering very severely from hemorrhoids?—A. No.

Q. Bleeding piles?—A. No; I didn't go into—I asked Sam Bridges, the clerk, I asked him, I says, "What's the matter with the judge the last year? He goes to sleep so much." And he said that he was not well; that he would undoubtedly eat too much at lunch—generally after lunch, you know—and first he would take a cocktail and then—which would whet his appetite up, and eat too much.

Q. Well, did you never in any of those inquiries learn that he was and had for a number of years been suffering very severely with hemorrhoids?—A. No.

Q. So that it was often difficult for him to sit upon his seat?—A. No; I didn't hear of those.

Q. And did you not know that a couple of years ago he had an operation, which accounts for the difference you have described since that time?—A. Well, really, I don't know whether I did or not, Mr. Hughes. Judge Hanford and I have what I call not been very friendly. We haven't been as intimate as other judges. Sometimes

I speak to him and sometimes I don't; sometimes he speaks to me and sometimes he does not.

Q. But that is a habit of his with all attorneys?—A. I don't know whether it is or not. I know it was with me. And I never paid any attention to him, only as a judge. I was not interested in Judge Hanford only as a judge to try my cases.

Q. You usually represented the plaintiffs in personal-injury cases?—A. Always in those kinds of cases. Never the defendant.

Q. You had a very large personal-injury practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Perhaps larger than any man in western Washington, didn't you?—A. Well, I have all I can do.

Q. And that has been a large part of your business, Governor?—A. Yes, sir; in the Federal court.

Q. And that practice has been to represent cases that you believed upon investigation to be meritorious cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Governor Teats, I want to ask you whether in your experience before Judge Hanford the poor have had as fair an opportunity as the large interests or corporations defendants?—A. When we first started out some 14 years ago on these cases, it was a pretty hard proposition to go up against Judge Hanford, and it cost so much to go to the circuit court of appeals, but of late, since the circuit court of appeals has practically abolished the matter of the nonsuit, why, it is not so hard a matter.

Q. Can't you answer my question directly?—A. Well, now——

Q. Have you any reason to say——A. (Interrupting.) Well, now, that is just an opinion.

Q. (Continuing.) That Judge Hanford has not been entirely fair in ruling?—A. He is so considered among people; that is, not fair with the injured poor.

Q. I am asking you as a lawyer, not a layman?—A. Well, I am talking myself; my own sentiment. That is my own sentiment, that you have got to have a mighty clear case before Judge Hanford to get by the court.

Q. He always gives you a fair opportunity to make your record, and rules——A. (Interrupting.) Always.

Q. (Continuing.) According to——A. (Interrupting.) Always, he will——

Q. (Interrupting.) You are satisfied that his rulings are in accordance—pardon my interruption.—A. Always, as far as preparing the record is concerned. He does everything in his power to prepare a record, but, mark you, a record in the Federal court is a different thing than in the State court.

Q. Well, his rulings are according to his convictions as to the law, don't you think? Don't you so state to this committee?—A. Yes—his convictions; yes.

Q. Haven't you been very uniformly successful in his court?—A. Yes, because if there is any way of getting a case out of his court without it is a dead cinch I would not take it there.

Q. But that is not in answer to my question.—A. Yes, it is.

Q. I say, haven't you been uniformly successful?

The CHAIRMAN. He answered "Yes."

A. I said yes; and that was the reason why.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. What is your experience with Judge Hanford in the matter of new trials where a verdict has gone for the plaintiff in personal injury cases and a motion made by the defendant for a new trial?—A. I have never known him to give a new trial.

Q. You have never known him to grant a new trial. You speak——A. (Interrupting.) That is, in my cases.

Q. You speak about making up the record and say that the record in the Federal court is a very different matter from making up a record in a State court. Will you explain to the committee just what you mean by that?—A. That is a matter of expense—a matter of expense. It costs so much to go to the circuit court of appeals as compared with the State courts. You can take an ordinary case in the State courts for all the way from $50, where there is a record, where there is a trial, to $150. The same cases in the Federal court would cost from three to ten times as much.

Q. Well, now, explain just why, Mr. Teats, will you?—A. Why, it is the printing of the record and the fees that are charged.

The CHAIRMAN. And the distance?

A. Beg pardon?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the distance cut any figure?

A. The distance has nothing to do with it. It is a matter of record.

Mr. McCOY. You are simply speaking of those disbursements which are taxed as costs in the suit?

A. As costs, yes.

Q. Well, now, is there a more voluminous record required in the circuit than in the State court?—A. No, the record is about the same; but in making up my record in the—from the circuit court, I would first get the stenographer's notes. That was the original cost usually; is the original cost in the State court.

Q. Is that more in the Federal court?—A. That is the same in the Federal as in the State. Then I take that and boil it down, and get a synopsis, and Judge Hanford has always maintained that practice. Then that synopsis must be printed, of course. That is extra from the State court, you understand. Then, of course, your briefs are a little bit more.

Q. Well, now, I don't quite understand what you mean by a synopsis. Do you mean that take questions and answers and reduce them to the narrative form?—A. Narrative form and cut out the trash.

Q. And is that not done in the State-court practice?—A. That is not done, because it is more work, and when you have paid for your transcript, that is the end of it; you can just take the whole—the original transcript with the—up to the court.

Q. Printed?—A. Not printed, no.

Q. You simply take your record, typewritten?—A. The typewritten transcript—that is, the transcript of the testimony as gotten out by the stenographer goes to the supreme court in the State court.

Q. Is that the principal thing that makes the difference in the cost? A. I think that is the principal thing—that and the printing and the fee. In the State court it is only $5 for an appellant, $2 for the defendant or respondent, and in the circuit court of appeals—$25, I think, for the appellant.

Q. Who regulates the printing or the place where the printing is to be done of these records?—A. That is regulated here now under the practice.

Q. What is the practice in that respect?

Mr. HUGHES. It is an act of Congress recently passed.

The WITNESS. Yes, a new act of Congress passed regulates it.

Mr. McCOY. Is that covered in the new judiciary law?

A. Yes.

Mr. DORR. No, it is a separate act.

Mr. HUGHES. It is a separate law, which was recently passed.

Mr. McCOY. I supposed they had the same practice here they had elsewhere; that the clerk would make up the record and have it printed.

Mr. DORR. Yes.

The WITNESS. That is the old act.

Mr. HUGHES. The clerk of the court of appeals, under the rules of the Federal court, had the printing done. The local clerk got up the transcript of the record, and it was sent to the court of appeals and the clerk of the court of appeals had the record printed, and the rates were always higher than you could procure it to be done for elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with Mr. Teats?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Gov. Teats, do you recall a few years ago Judge Hanford appointing a committee to prepare a law to simplify the practice upon appeal and to reduce the very great and unnecessary costs of appeal, particularly in the making up and transscribing and printing of the record and briefs, which law was prepared and submitted to Congress, but which Congress did not pass?—A. No; I don't remember that.

Q. You don't remember that?—A. I was not on the committee and I didn't pay any attention to it at all. You see we have been playing second fiddle, you know, for a long time, on account of having no judge over our way, and matters like that would come up before the bar here, I suppose.

Q. Well, it was a matter taken up by Judge Hanford some five or six years ago.—A. Yes; I know, but generally that would be a matter here locally.

Q. No; it was not, however.—A. Wasn't it?

Q. When was this case that you have spoken of, when the juror went out, when you say Judge Hanford was asleep?—A. That was in September, I believe—September term; the July term was adjourned over to the September term, 1909.

Q. And what was the title of the case?—A. The title of the case was McElwain v. The Tacoma Railway & Power Co.

Q. Who was defending them?—A. I really don't know. They were changing lawyers about that time and I don't remember who the lawyer was.

Q. Do you sometimes bring your cases in the first instance in the Federal court, or always in the State court?—A. No. Generally in the—just as I said before, if it is a case where the facts are so plain and the questions involved are such that there would hardly be any question about the Federal court, I would bring them directly in the Federal court. To try a case I think it costs about the same in the Federal court, possibly a little less. You have no jury fee to pay.

Q. You are governed very largely by in which court the established rules best fit your case, aren't you? In other words——A. (Interrupting.) To a certain extent.

Q. In other words, there is not an entire unanimity of decisions in the Federal court and our State court on certain questions; is not that true?—A. That is true.

Q. In personal injury questions?—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. And you select the Federal court when the decisions upon certain questions that are involved, or the rules of law that are established and govern that court, are more favorable to your client?—A. Yes.

Q. And in the State court, when the rules of law applicable to the particular facts in your case are more favorable in it?—A. You have to do that.

Q. One of the principal advantages to the plaintiff in the State practice, however, is in the fact that it requires only 10 jurors to render a verdict, while in the Federal court 12 are required; is not that true?—A. That is one advantage.

Witness excused.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, since we have requested Mr. Murphy and Judge Graves to come back, upon your suggestion, and as it will take but a moment, I would like to ask that you use them now. They are busy.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

CARROLL B. GRAVES, being recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Graves, when on the witness stand the other day you gave us a description of a number of your corporate clients. Do you recall whether you told us all of them?

A. I recall that I did not mention any, if I am correct in my recollection.

Q. Well, then I have confused you, Mr. Graves, with some other witness.—A. Yes sir.

Q. Would you tell us now, if you please, what clients in the way of large corporations you have or have had?—A. I never had but one that I recall. For five years I was representing the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in Seattle.

Q. What years?—A. How is that, sir?

Q. What particular years?—A. 1905 to 1910, as I recall it. Then I was out of the practice for about two years and went into the practice last fall with the firm—became a member of the firm of Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle. That firm is—was representing and is now representing the Oregon & Washington Railway Co.—Railway & Navigation Co.

Mr. MCCOY. I didn't hear that.

A. It was representing at the time I went into the firm and is now representing the Oregon & Washington Railway & Navigation Co.—Railroad & Navigation Co.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it, a combined concern having railroad and navigation interests?

A. Well, I really don't know. So far as I know, they only operate a line of railroad in this State, and that is as far as our inquiries go. I don't know whether they operate any boats or not. I have not given that branch of the business any particular attention. We are engaged in a general practice, and that is one of the clients of our firm.

Q. Have you other clients interested in interstate traffic of any kind?—A. I know of one other. I think there are several, but I only know of one other and that is the Alaska Steamship Co.

Q. Is that one of the Alaska syndicate properties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Owned by the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate?—A. That I don't know. I can not——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, you know it is commonly known by that name, is it not?—A. I am not able to state. I have only been connected with the business for a period of a few months, and I have given my attention chiefly to other matters.

Q. Its business is in the carrying trade between Alaska and the States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you the attorney for the Northern Pacific when the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. was organized?—A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't it organized during the period between 1905 and 1910?—A. Well, it may have been. I may have been attorney—if it was, I was attorney at that time; yes.

Q. As I recall, it appears from the evidence that there was some legal question involved as to the title of certain lands conveyed by the railroad company to the irrigation and power company. Did that matter come under your observation at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of it?—A. I had no knowledge of any such matter.

Q. On the part of the railroad company who would probably look after that question at that time?—A. Well, if it was a matter of lands it would probably be looked after by the general offices at St. Paul.

Q. Well, do you know the individual who would probably have charge of it?—A. I could not unless I knew the date. It would be probably the land commissioner.

Q. The transfers, I think, had been made in 1906, 1908, and 1909. Would that help you any?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about that whatever. I have no knowledge of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions with Mr. Graves?

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. During the period, Mr. Graves, that you have mentioned, when you were attorney for the Northern Pacific, did that company have any actions or legal matters pending in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. A great many?—A. Not a great many; not as many as in the State courts, but then a considerable number.

Q. Involving matters of considerable importance?—A. Not very great importance. The cases that I had before Judge Hanford were mostly personal-injury matters. I don't think there was any judgment involving more than about $5,000 that we had before Judge Hanford's court. The most considerable litigation of the Northern Pacific was in the State courts at that time.

Witness excused.

JAMES B. MURPHY, having been recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Murphy, when you were on the witness stand a day or two ago, you were asked to tell us about your professional connection with corporations of one sort and another. Did you tell us all your professional connections in that regard?

A. I did not.

Q. What ones were omitted?—A. Why, I don't know what ones were omitted. That is, I don't pretend now to be able to recall all the corporations we may have represented, or that the office may have represented. My attention has been called to the—since I came into the court room—to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. being a client of the office.

Q. At what time?—A. Between 1905, and I think until possibly October of 1911—from the beginning of 1905, I think.

Q. During your connection with the——A. (Interrupting.) Or the fall. I can't say as to the time in 1905.

Q. Do you recall having anything to do with or being consulted about the transfer of certain lands from the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. I was not.

Q. Can you tell us who on the part of the company would have charge of matters of that sort?—A. I can not. It would be mere conjecture. If I were to suggest a name, it would be James A. Kerr, of Portland, but that is simply a conjecture. I understood that Mr. Kerr was looking after some land-office matters, and also matters pertaining to interstate commerce.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Murphy, let me interrupt.

A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Haven't you got the initials wrong; isn't it James B. Kerr?

A. James B., possibly; yes, James B. Kerr, of Portland, but I knew very little about the matters of the Northern Pacific. To prevent the absorption of the office force by any particular line of work, we found it necessary to divide up the work and Judge Graves and Mr. Palmer attended almost exclusively to the Northern Pacific work. If I gave it any attention it was when those gentlemen were out of the city or when they were unable to give it attention; so I know very little about the Northern Pacific work.

Q. Do you know whether the company maintained a land office or a land agent in this section?—A. I think it maintained a land office or land agent in Tacoma.

Q. And who had charge of it?—A. I don't know.

Q. Is there anything further, Mr. Murphy, that you wish to add in reference to your clientage?—A. Why, nothing suggests itself to me as material. As I say, I have not pretended to give you a list of our clients.

Q. Well, I don't think we intended to ask for that.—A. There may be——

Q. (Continuing.) Except as to those clients who are interested in interstate commerce at one time and another.—A. Yes.

Q. And that had the right to remove causes to Judge Hanford's court or bring them in that court?—A. Yes. Well, I gave you a number of clients that had that power, I recall.

Q. Do you recall others?—A. I recall one instance now where we represented a private individual who was sued in the Federal court, the plaintiff being a foreigner—that is, in the court in Tacoma—but I do not recall anything now that I didn't give in a general way.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Murphy?

Mr. HIGGINS. And were your firm, in 1906, Mr. Murphy, attorneys in Seattle for the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?

A. It was. Judge Graves was looking after it specially.

Mr. MCCOY. Who just testified, you mean?

A. Beg pardon?

Q. Mr. Graves who just testified?—A. Yes.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. Did your firm have more to do than appearing for the railroad in causes which were brought in the State and Federal courts?—A. Well, we had to attend to matters of franchises before the city council, matters of rights of way, but I think little more than that.

Q. At that time was the Northern Pacific Railway Co., do you know, disposing of any of its land grants?—A. I knew nothing of it, if they were.

Q. Well, were you consulted about any disposition of that land grant?—A. I was not; knew nothing of it; didn't know that they were making transfers.

Q. Well, if a transfer of nearly 9,000 acres was made in the State of Washington——A. (Interrupting.) It might have come to my——

Q. (Continuing.) Comparatively near Seattle, you would have known it, wouldn't you, as attorneys for the railroad?—A. It probably came to my attention as a citizen, not noticing particularly about it. Since you have mentioned here the matter of the Hanford Irrigation Co. acquiring land, I do remember the time when it did acquire lands. I was not aware that they were acquiring them from the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and the only information I had concerning it was newspaper reports—that is, from the daily press.

Q. But you did not know that they were acquiring nearly 9,000 acres from the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. I did not until you now suggest it or until you suggested it a few moments ago. I may have seen it in the paper at that time—that they acquired it from the Northern Pacific. If I did, it passed without particular notice.

Q. If you happen to know, Mr. Murphy, to whom probably of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. would be referred legal questions arising out of the transfer of any of their lands, I wish you would tell the committee.—A. I do not, further than their general officers were at Tacoma. The general counsel for the Pacific coast, or for this division, as I understand it, including Washington—or the western part of Washington, anyway—was at Tacoma.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Grosscup, for some time, and Judge Reid.

Q. Who was it in 1906?—A. I don't know. Judge Grosscup or Judge Reid.

Q. Either one or the other?

Mr. HUGHES. Grosscup.

A. Grosscup in 1906; yes. Mr. Grosscup or Mr. Reid had been general counsel for the Northern Pacific during all of the time we represented——

Mr. HUGHES. General western counsel?

A. Western counsel for the Northern Pacific during all the time we represented it at Seattle. Their main offices were not here; their main offices were in Tacoma.

Q. That is a brother of the late or the former Judge Grosscup of the Chicago district, isn't it?—A. I don't know.

Mr. HUGHES. He is, if you wish to know.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, I supposed he was. What are his initials?

Mr. HUGHES. B. S.

A. E. S.?

Mr. HUGHES. B. S.

Mr. HIGGINS. Where does he live now?

A. At Tacome; engaged in general practice there.

Q. And is he still general counsel for the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?—A. He is not. Judge Reid now represents them, unless he has been very recently succeeded.

Q. And I understand you to state, from your knowledge as an attorney of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., that matters involved, or any legal question involved, in the transfer of railroad lands to parties would be in the natural order of business submitted to the general counsel for this section?—A. Yes; or to the land-office department of the Northern Pacific, and I state that without any definite information upon the subject. That is just a——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you happen to know who the general counsel for the Northern Pacific Railroad—I mean, for the entire system—was in 1906?—A. Mr. Law, wasn't it?

Mr. DORR. Charles Bunn.

A. Beg pardon?

Mr. DORR. Charles Bunn.

A. Mr Bunn.

Mr. HIGGINS. How do you spell it?

A. B-u-n-n.

Q. And he was located where?—A. At St. Paul. As I have stated, I had nothing to do with the Northern Pacific business except in emergency cases, and that was very seldom, when everybody else was away. So I am not acquainted with the men who managed the concerns of the company here, nor particularly with the personnel.

Q. And since the Hanford Co. has been referred to this morning, you recall that you did see some mention of it in the local newspapers at the time?—A. Yes.

Q. That is all the information that you have about it?—A. Yes; it is; but I don't recall that the newspapers reported it was purchased from the Northern Pacific. I don't know.

Mr. MCCOY. Were you ever a stockholder in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?

A. I was not; never.

Q. Were you ever asked to become one?—A. I never was. If I was, it was simply in some circular letter that did not attract my attention, but I don't think I was ever asked. I was never approached to buy stock by anyone.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Murphy, Mr. Hughes?

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Judge Graves was in fact the member of your firm who represented the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. The Northern Pacific, and attended to its matters personally when he was present, and after——

Q. (Interrupting.) And no other member of the firm except when he was unable to attend to its business?—A. Well, Mr. Winders attended to a great deal.

Q. Was he a member of the firm?—A. He was not. After Judge Graves became ill in January of 1910 and went to California for his health, from then on, about nine months, I gave the company's business more attention, but placed it on Mr. Winders as much as possible, and then Mr. Winders finally assumed all the work. Mr. Winders——

Q. (Interrupting.) And succeeded Judge Graves when he resigned?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you are not a partner of Winders?—A. No. Just for a few months, until we got the matters settled and he got his room.

Q. All the business represented by your firm or by Judge Graves, of your firm, was that arising in the city of Seattle, brought in the courts in this city, either State or Federal?—A. I didn't catch your question, Mr. Hughes.

Question read.

A. No; as I understand it our territory included all north of Pierce County to the Canadian line, but——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is, King County and the counties north?—A. North; yes.

Q. Within the northern——A. (Interrupting.) Snohomish, Skagit, and Whatcom.

Q. Within the northern division of the western district of Washington?—A. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anyone to suggest here?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; Dr. Allen has come here. We want to ask him just one or two questions.

JACK VIDLER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name.

A. Jack Vidler.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Vidler?—A. Milton Apartments, Seventh Avenue.

Q. What is your business?—A. Barkeeper.

Q. Where?—A. Rathskeller, on Second Avenue.

Q. Were you in when some testimony was offered a while ago relative to a certain bet——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) About what was known as a Hanford cocktail? Were you in the room at that time?—A. Why, I knew nothing of a bet, but I know a Hanford cocktail, a Hanford Martini, was asked for.

Q. That was by Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Kerrigan, was it?—A. Yes; as I see them now.

Q. And which called for the drink?—A. I don't remember which one.

Q. What did he call for?—A. A Hanford Martini.

Q. What did you give him?—A. I gave him a Martini cocktail.

Q. Won't you give us some—I don't want to steal your trade; but tell us, please, the ingredients?—A. Orange bitters, French vermuth, and gin.

Q. Did you hear any discussion there about the nature of the bet?—A. No; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further with this witness?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask a question or two.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Was that cocktail any different from the regular Martini cocktail that is served in your saloon?—A. No; it was not.

Q. The Rathskeller?—A. Exactly the same.

Q. Why did you serve that cocktail when he asked for a Hanford Martini?—A. Well, he asked for it; in a laughing way he asked for a Hanford Martini. I never heard of a Hanford Martini, so I simply made him a Martini cocktail. Mr. Jacobs has often called for a dry Martini served with an onion, and I made him the same thing.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. If any person that you had never seen before came in and asked for a dry Martini, what would you give him?—A. I would have given them the same as I gave Jacobs—vermuth and gin and orange bitters.

Q. With an onion in it?—A. Yes; with an onion in it.

Q. Suppose they asked for a sweet Martini, what would you give them?—A. Well, I would put gum and orange bitters and gin and vermuth.

Q. And an onion?—A. No; I would not serve an onion in a sweet Martini.

Mr. HUGHES. A little louder.

A. No; I would not serve an onion in a sweet Martini.

Mr. HUGHES. A little louder.

A. No; I would not serve an onion in a sweet Martini.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Hughes, who do you want?

Mr. HUGHES. Dr. Allen.

H. E. ALLEN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name, please?

A. H. E. Allen.

Q. You live in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You belong to a profession, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. Physician and surgeon.

Q. How long have you practiced your profession?—A. This is the fifteenth year; a little over 14 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, you had better ask the doctor. I don't know just what you want to bring out.

Mr. HUGHES. I will make it as brief as I can.

Q. Dr. Allen, testimony has been offered here respecting a meeting at the Alhambra Theater at which Dr. McCormick delivered an address, and where, also, Judge Hanford sat upon the platform and made a short talk at the close or near the close of the evening's entertainment at the Alhambra. Were you on the platform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford there on the platform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear him speak?—A. Yes, sir; I did.
Q. After the exercises there the doctors, I believe, went over to the Washington Hotel and had a little supper and an entertainment for Dr. McCormick. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. At the supper table who sat by your side?—A. Judge Hanford was on one side of me.
Q. Did you engage in conversation with him?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, from all you saw of Judge Hanford that evening, state to this committee whether he was in any degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors when he came under your observation?—A. I don't think there was the slightest suspicion of his being under the influence of liquor. I saw no signs of it whatever.
Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Witness excused.

JOHN C. WHITLOCK, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:
The CHAIRMAN. Give your name, please.
A. John C. Whitlock.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Seattle.
Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Nearly 23 years.
Q. What is your business, Mr. Whitlock?—A. Lawyer.
Q. In the active practice of your profession?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you alone or are you associated with some one?—A. Alone.
Q. Have you always been?—A. I have.
Q. To what extent does your practice bring you into the Federal court?—A. Very little.
Q. Has it at any time?—A. It has.
Q. When did you have business in this court?—A. It has been several years now since I have had any; about six years, I think.
Q. What was the nature of the business you had in court?—A. It was a civil action brought against a client of mine. I think now it was transferred from the State court to the United States court; I am not sure about that.
Q. Was your client an individual or a corporation?—A. It was a corporation.
Q. What one?—A. The Calhoun-Kraus Mill Co.
Q. Well, prior to six years ago did you have much volume of business?—A. No, sir.
Q. In Judge Hanford's court?—A. No, sir; I had occasionally business.
Q. You are acquainted with the judge, of course?—A. I am.
Q. What is the nature of your acquaintance with him?—A. Well, I have a speaking acquaintance and I know him, but I am not anyways intimate.
Q. Have you any social connections or relations——A. (Interrupting.) None in the world.
Q. (Continuing.) With the judge?—A. None in the world.
Q. Have you observed any peculiarities in the judge's manner of presiding in court?—A. Why, I can not say that I do. I have never found any fault with Judge Hanford in the decision of his cases which I was interested in.
Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when in your opinion he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. Once.
Q. When?—A. This year, some time.

Q. What time, as near as you can fix it?—A. Well, it was in the springtime this year. I can't fix the date.

Q. Where was the place?—A. It was on Second Avenue in the city of Seattle.

Q. On the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please tell the committee the circumstances.—A. I was coming up north, the east side of Second Avenue going north, and I saw Judge Hanford coming diagonally across the street from the west side of Second Avenue to the east side, and his gait and his looks was so noticeable that I stopped and looked at him; turned and watched him go off down the street.

Q. How near to him were you at any time?—A. Oh, I was as near as that column there.

Q. That would be about how far, in feet?—A. Well, about 15 feet, I should judge.

Q. Describe his appearance.—A. Well, he did not seem to be very steady on his feet, and from his complexion I judge—I would say that he was under the influence of liquor of some kind.

Q. To what extent?—A. Well, I can't state how——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, what would you say as to whether or not he was intoxicated?—A. I would say that he was somewhat intoxicated.

Q. What time in the day or night was it?—A. It was in the afternoon, as near as I can remember.

Q. Were there other people on the street; and if so, about how many?—A. Oh, there was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Whether there were many or few?—A. A great many.

Q. Do you know whether others noticed him besides yourself?—A. I do not.

Q. How far did he go while he was under your observation?—A. Oh, I suppose he went a half a block. I turned and watched him. It struck me—he struck me——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you speak to him or he to you?—A. No, sir; neither one.

Q. With reference to his being unsteady on his legs, tell us more fully, if you can, what you mean by that?—A. Well, he did not walk with a firm step.

Q. How was he with reference to going from side to side or walking in a direct line?—A. Why, he did not go from side to side, but he didn't walk as firmly and uprightly as I have seen him.

Q. What was it in his face, if you can tell it, that led you to the conclusion you reached?—A. Well, I can only answer that by saying that from his complexion I judged that he was drinking some. There is something about a man's face when he is under the influence of liquor that is not there at other times.

Q. Have you at any other time seen him when in your judgment he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Whitlock?

By Mr. PRESTON:

Q. Mr. Whitlock, you said, if I understood you right, that you had no fault to find with Judge Hanford, so far as his decisions were concerned in any case that you had?—A. In which I was interested.

Q. He has decided cases against you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And decided them for you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you speak impartially of all of them?—A. I do in that respect.
Q. What is your opinion as gathered from observation as to Judge Hanford's fairness as a judge and his integrity?—A. My own observation of Judge Hanford is that he is fair and that he is upright in his dealings.
Mr. PRESTON. That is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you one that you can call now?
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Hartman.

JOHN P. HARTMAN, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name, please?
A. John P. Hartman.
Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Hartman?—A. Here in Seattle.
Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I have lived in this city over 16 years; in the State over 21.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Lawyer.
Q. In the active practice of your profession?—A. During the time; yes, sir.
Q. And still?—A. Yes, sir; I have been in the active practice for nearly 30 years.
Q. Are you alone now or are you associated with some one, Mr. Hartman?—A. I am alone, and have always been in the practice here, save about two years I had a partner in Tacoma when I first came to the State.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, you know better and can get at it quicker than I what you want with this witness.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Hartman, I wish you would inform the committee what opportunities you have had for observing Judge Hanford in the court room; that is, the extent of your appearances in the Federal court before Judge Hanford?—A. During the time I have lived in the State, a little over 21 years, I have practically if not all that time had cases pending in the United States court, have been in and out in the various proceedings that might be had in these cases, and had occasion to observe others when I have been in the court room; usually in attendance upon motion days, and not infrequently at Tacoma, as I have some business yet in the term there. I have also seen Judge Hanford off the bench, in social ways or in a passing way about town, on the trains, about the clubs, places like that, or in banquets, so that I have seen I think a great deal of Judge Hanford during the twenty-odd years that I have known him, and that I have had more or less of an acquaintance with him in meeting him in these various ways. I became acquainted with him the first month that I came to the State of Washington, was introduced to him in a way that he remembered me and the acquaintance has grown from that day—not a close intimate acquaintance, but such as a lawyer would sustain with a judge whom he knows in the professional and social capacity.

Q. Some testimony has been offered here as to Judge Hanford's habits upon the bench, his mannerisms and idiosyncrasies. What can you say in respect to them and also as to the attention which he has given to litigation pending before him while presiding?—A. Judge Hanford's attention to business has been all that I could expect of any judge and equal to that of any judge whom I have ever been before. He acts very quickly, with greater dispatch than I think the majority of trial judges and has been uniformly courteous, decides cases with a clearness, or decides points that may be raised emphatically and clearly, and has given, I think, always very careful consideration to both sides in any case that I have had before him. Of course we are not always all satisfied with the rulings, nor I haven't been; I have gone to the circuit court of appeals.

Q. The point I had reference to more particularly was what has been testified to by various witnesses as to a habit of closing his eyes, dropping his head, when on the bench.—A. I have seen Judge Hanford often, very often, apparently go to sleep; that is, he would close his eyes; I would not say it was further than an appearance of sleeping, and, to start with, it was somewhat embarrassing to me, but I soon learned that that did not interfere in any way with the conduct of business, because when the decisions came or the rulings at any time, I became absolutely certain, as Mr. Teats had said, that Judge Hanford knew everything that was going on, and I finally reached the conclusion it was his way of concentrating his mind more perfectly upon the business in hand when he closed his eyes. I have seen him do the same thing in social intercourse, I have seen him do the same thing when listening to speeches at banquets, for instance, and I have become convinced, and am now, that it is his way of concentrating his mind, because Judge Hanford does concentrate remarkably well. I knew also that Judge Hanford worked very late, probably more so than anyone connected with the local profession in this city, and I have known him to work late myself. I do work at nights a great deal and I have often found him working after I would quit myself, particularly when his office was down in the old building; as I would go by that in leaving my own, I have seen him there after midnight at the time when I would quit, often; I have gone in there and seen him; I have seen him come out of his office the same time I would and we have walked around together to our cars, sometimes take a walk to the top of the hill, to Broadway—have done so a great many times with him—get a little exercise after we had worked late.

Q. You have also met him socially at the club and elsewhere?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford, either on or off the bench, when in your opinion he was in any degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors?—A. I have never seen Judge Hanford in any way under the influence of liquor, so far as I could observe, and I would observe him probably more closely than I would a man in private life. I have never seen any suggestion of intoxication.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Hartman?

Have you seen him drink, Mr. Hartman?

A. I have seen Judge Hanford on occasions at banquets and at very few times in other—the club—never anywhere else—take a drink, I should judge a cocktail. I am not an expert on those matters, but about the same way as most men whom it has been my privilege to know in public life, occasionally drink with a friend.

Q. Have you ever seen him drink anywhere else than at banquets and at the club?—A. I never have.

Q. That was the Rainier Club, was it?—A. Oh, I think, the Rainier Club, and possibly occasionally in the Arctic Club. I have seen him there in the Arctic Club.

Q. Are you a member of both of those?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? That is all, Mr. Hartman, thank you.

The WITNESS. Thank you, sir.

Witness excused.

ALEX M. WINSTON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

A. My name is Alex M. Winston.

Q. Were you subpœned as a witness?—A. No, sir; I was requested to come here by Mr. Hughes; that is the message that I got through another lawyer?

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live at Spokane.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How long have you worked at your profession?—A. Twenty years.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, you can probably ask the witness better than I.

Mr. HUGHES. Are you acquainted with Judge Hanford?

A. I am.

Q. How long and how intimately have you known him?—A. I have known him well since the fall of the year 1888.

Q. Have you appeared frequently in Judge Hanford's court?—A. Often—the first case I ever tried in my life was tried in his court, in Spokane.

Q. What do you say as to his attentiveness to judicial business being conducted before him?—A. It is remarkable. I know of no judge whose attention seems to be always, to use the common expression, "on the job," or who rules so quickly and fairly as Judge Hanford. He dispenses—I have noticed him—the same amount of business in perhaps half the time that our trial judges do in the State courts.

Q. Have you ever seen him when he appeared to you to be asleep upon the bench or not comprehending the business conducted or prosecuted before him?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. I have seen him often in that way when it would appear to the ordinary person so, often—his habits—with his head somewhat bent forward and down, seems to be half dozing.

Q. In your opinion was he, in fact, at such times inattentive to what was going on, or asleep so as not to be able to follow the proceedings?—A. He always knew what was going on.

Q. How do you know that; why do you say that?—A. Oh, I can recall one particular instance, in the fall of 1893, when he was in the trial of a case that I was then defending, when that same thing occurred, and the United States marshal testified on the witness stand that he had given a dollar to an Indian to go and procure whisky for a third person, and when that incident came up in the testimony, Judge Hanford simply raised up and took the examination of the United States marshal, whose name was Klock, as I recall it distinctly to-day, in hand, concluded it himself, and I defended the case, and he won my case for me, I might say, by his examination of this United States officer.

Q. Have you always noticed on such occasions when objections were made, or any occasion arose for the court to rule, whether or not he ruled promptly and with a clear conception of what preceded?—A. Always.

Q. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was in any degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors; in any measure intoxicated?—A. Never.

Mr. HUGHES. Take the witness. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you get a great deal into Judge Hanford's court?

A. I used to be considerably in his court when he held court at Spokane, before the creation of the new judicial district.

Q. What line of business?—A. Trial of lawsuits, sir.

Q. I mean what general line of litigation?—A. I am in the general trial of lawsuits. My business, a large part of it, perhaps half of it, is in trying cases for other lawyers.

Q. Counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any one kind of case which you tried more than another—personal injury cases?—A. No.

Q. Personal injury cases?—A. No; I have tried personal injuries, I have tried criminal cases before him, I have defended a couple of murder cases—murders committed upon the Indian reservation—before him. I have been in equity proceedings before him.

Q. Just a general practice?—A. I am just in the general practice. I have no specialty, sir.

Q. Have you had before him any case in which interstate commerce corporations were interested?—A. Interstate—corporations engaged in interstate commerce?

Q. Interstate commerce.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?—A. Personal-injury cases.

Q. For the corporation or the plaintiff?—A. Never, sir. I have never had any employment from corporations—I have always been against them.

Q. Always on the plaintiff's end of the case?—A. Always on the plaintiff's end. But I may say that on perhaps a half a dozen occasions I have accepted individual employment in particular cases, but I don't accept retainers from——

Q. (Interrupting.) But at any rate, generally speaking, your practice is not as attorney for interstate corporations at all?—A. I am not now and never have been attorney for any public service or interstate corporations, save in the way that I have said—that I have accepted employment in individual cases.

Q. Not particularly so?—A. No, sir; except it may come and pay me my price, the same as though for a private man.

Q. We all like to get our price?—A. Yes, sir.

Witness excused.

NELSON R. ANDERSON, being recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Anderson, tell what took place in the Knosher case in regard to the preparation of the form of an order to be entered on the question of allowances, between you and Mr. Walter McClure?

A. Mr. Dovell and I prepared an order to be signed by the court and Mr. McClure prepared one which he thought ought to be signed, and we appeared before Judge Hanford and he was unwilling to sign either one, and we finally agreed upon an order to be signed. We took Mr. McClure's order, struck out certain lines, and then with pencil marks, marked him what we had agreed upon and told Judge Hanford the conclusions we had reached. This was in his chambers and in the anteroom off his chambers. Mr. McClure and I then left the chambers and walked down the street together, and he said that he would prepare the order and we would go up the next morning and have it signed. The order that I had already prepared contained a paragraph that the receiver and his attorneys should repay into the registry of the court all sums in excess of that which the court had finally fixed upon.

Q. In what amount?—A. Well, it was something like $600, I believe. It was about $300 on the part of the receiver and about $800 on the part of the attorneys. The receiver had received $2,500 and the attorneys for the receiver and trustees had received $3,000. I also insisted and Mr. McClure agreed to it in the presence of Judge Hanford that the order to be entered should recite that they had received $2,500 at attorneys for the receiver and $500 as attorneys for the trustee, to which it was agreed between us that those two items, along with the rest of the order, should go into the order to be prepared and signed the next day.

Q. That is, reciting that they had been received and ordering their return?—A. Yes, sir. The next day I heard nothing more of the matter until about 11 o'clock, when the office boy from the office of McClure & McClure gave me a copy of an order which he said had previously been signed by Judge Hanford. I did not look at the order immediately, because I was busy, but about 5 or 10 minutes of 12 o'clock I read the order over, and I noticed that the order had been changed in two respects; that it did not contain the paragraph requiring the receiver and his attorneys to repay into the registry of the court the sums in excess of the amount allowed them by the court, nor did it recite that the attorneys in question had received three thousand, but did recite that they had received twenty-five hundred. I immediately called Judge Hanford up on the phone, and called his attention to those facts, and Judge Hanford said that he would personally see to it that the money was paid back into court, and he further said that the paragraph had been left out by Mr. McClure, and Mr. McClure had called his attention to the fact, and he supposed that it had been left out because Mr. McClure thought it would be some reflection upon him to have such a recital in the order in question. I think that was all there was to it.

Q. Did Mr. McClure or Mr. Stern contend before Judge Hanford that the fees of the trustee should be any larger than the—should be double, for instance?—A. The original order which I have referred to as being prepared by Mr. McClure recited that the trustee was one carrying on the business of the bankrupt, and was, therefore, entitled to double compensation. The trustee performed no functions except to collect the accounts receivable, to sell certain parcels of real estate, and to disburse the funds on hand, and Mr. McClure thought that those facts constituted him one carrying on the business of the bankrupt as a going concern.

Q. Had there been any order permitting the trustee to carry on the business?—A. Not at all. There was no business in the hands of the trustee. The business had been closed out. The assets of the bankrupts, consisting of a stock of goods, real estate, and merchandise, together with fixtures and leasehold interests, had previously been sold. There was no business.

Q. Do you happen to remember whether the leased premises occupied by the bankrupt was sold at this sale by the receiver, or at any time?—A. I have always understood so. I would not positively state the fact to be so.

Q. Did you know how long it had to run?—A. I am under the impression that it did not run a great while, but I will say this in connection with that, that McCormick Bros., who were the second highest bidders, were very anxious to secure that location, because they were forced to leave their old location on First Avenue, and they were very desirous of getting this location on Second Avenue, and took that fact into consideration in their bid; at least, I had been so informed by Mr. Burke, the manager of the McCormick Bros.

Q. Did Anisfield go into possession of the premises and carry on the business after purchasing it?—A. They did.

Q. Are they still there?—A. They conducted the business about six weeks, I believe, and then sold the store to McCormicks.

Q. Sold the lease, you mean?—A. Sold absolutely everything.

Q. Everything. That is all.

The WITNESS. Now, Mr. McClure was under the impression that the order had not been changed. I would say in that connection that the same afternoon that the order was entered I went to his office and told him I was unable to understand how a man like he was could have an order entered without first serving a copy upon the attorneys for the opposite side, nor could I understand how he would change an order after its having been once agreed upon. Mr. McClure then first stated, as stated here, that the order was not changed, but he afterwards stated that he had called up Mr. Stern and Mr. Stern thought that those were irrelevant matters, and that they decided to leave them out. So I think Mr. McClure understood the facts.

Mr. MCCOY. Yesterday you testified that during a conversation you had with Mr. McClure, with reference to a conversation that he had had with Sutliffe and Baxter. I believe you were in court when he was examined about that conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. You heard his testimony, did you not?—A. I did.

Q. Do you wish to change your testimony?—A. I do not.

Q. In view of what he testified?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you reiterate your testimony?—A. I reaffirm it.

Mr McCOY That is all

The WITNESS It may be, as Mr McClure says, that I misunderstood him, but I can remember now that either the same day or the next day I repeated his conversation to others, and I think put it in the form of a letter to people that were interested in this matter, in which I stated the matter as I have stated it on the stand

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Any further question?

Mr PRESTON. I would like to ask whether there was any financial difference to the bankrupt estate resulting from the signature on the order as you are testifying to as it was signed than if the one you say you had agreed upon had been signed?

A. No difference, if the attorneys in question refunded the money into court in accordance with the order of the court Judge Hanford said he would personally see to that matter I don't mean that——

Q. (Interrupting.) You have no doubt it has been done?—A. I don't question it. I don't know whether it has been done or not

Mr. McCOY. Now, Mr Preston, these might as well go in, I suppose.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. The next exhibit, whatever it is, will be the certificate of John P. Hoyt as referee in the Knosher bankruptcy case, as to the Sutcliffe Baxter as trustee

Paper in question was marked "Exhibit 76"

Mr. McCOY. Then the next exhibit will be the brief of the receiver and trustee in case No. 2050, United States circuit court of appeals, in that same appeal in which the other exhibits, at least the other briefs, have already been admitted

Paper in question was marked "Exhibit 77."

A recess was here taken until 1 30 o'clock this afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess All parties present as at former hearing

F. W. BURPEE, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. State your full name to the committee?

A. Frank Watts Burpee.

Q Where do you live?—A. Bellingham.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer—machinery manufacturer.

Q Any particular line?—A Making a specialty of salmon-canning machinery and shingle machinery.

Q How long have you been in the business?—A Since 1896.

Q. Were you ever involved in any litigation over the validity of any of your patents?—A Yes; once

Q Explain the litigation —A. It was the can-topper machine, on which we had a patent. The Alaska Packers' Association claimed an infringement on the patent owned and used by them and brought a suit against us in Judge Hanford's court.

Q. What was the decision in the case?—A They claimed that there were six claims of their patent infringed by us. Judge Hanford rendered a decision that three claims were an infringement by us, and three were not an infringement by us.

Q. How long did he have that matter under consideration after the trial and before the decision?—A As I remember, it was in May the case was before him and he handed down the decision in December, about seven months later.

Q. During that time did he have in his possession any models of your machine?—A. He had a full-sized working machine of ours; he also had a full-sized working machine of the Alaska packers; he also had two full-sized working models of machines prior to the one granted to the Alaska packers that we had put in as exhibits during that time.

Q. Who were the attorneys on both sides of that patent litigation?—A. Kerr & McCord were our attorneys looking after the business interests and M. A. Wheaton, of Wheaton & Kellogg, of San Francisco, was our patent attorney.

Q. You mean that Kerr & McCord appeared of record as your attorneys, but that the case was tried by M. A. Wheaton?—A. Mr. Wheaton acted as an expert in patent cases and John Miller, of San Francisco, was an expert patent attorney, called by the Alaska Packers, and I think it was Dorr & Hadley were the counsel looking after it in the court here. I am not certain about that, but I think they were.

Q. After the decision of the case by Judge Hanford did you have a talk with Mr. McCord in regard to an invention which Judge Hanford had made covering the same line of machinery?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. McCord asked me to drop in and see him, and he told me that during Judge Hanford's consideration of this case an idea had occurred to him by which this work could be done in a different way from what he had seen and a way that would not infringe any other patent, and he had applied for a patent on that, and he wished to see me regarding that.

Q. That Judge Hanford or Mr. McCord wished to see me?—A. That Judge Hanford wished to see me.

Q. Well, what took place?—A. Well, he said he would arrange a meeting that I might see Judge Hanford, and he wished me to come in again. When I called later he said he had word from Judge Hanford. I am not certain whether he said he had a letter or a telephone message, but Mr. McCord had a paper in his hand that he appeared to be reading from, and he said—he made it appear that the judge said: "Of course, I have no use for an invention of this kind, and unless Mr. Burpee wishes to see me with a view to purchase my invention I do not wish to take the necessary time to explain the machine to him." Then Mr. McCord—I tried to find out from Mr. McCord if he knew anything as to the principle upon which the machine worked, and he did not pretend to know very much about it. There is a distinct difference between the machines we manufacture and the machine manufactured by the Alaska Packers, in that our machine was what is called a continuous-motion machine, while the machine of the Alaska Packers was an intermittent-motion machine. In our machine we could do double work than we could do with the Alaska Packers' machine, and I wished to find out whether his machine was on the continuous-motion plan, as ours was, or on the intermittent-motion plan, as was the machine of the Alaska Packers. He said he thought it was the intermittent.

Well, I told him it would necessarily, then, be a slower machine, and I told him the Alaska Packers' patent only had a little over a year to run when the patent would expire, and I did not think I would consider it at all. I told him that I did not think that Judge Hanford, in his position, would be capable of getting up a machine to do that work, not having had any experience along that line. I did not have any confidence in it at all. And then again I did not think that he should be in that business, and I didn't want to have anything to do with him or his machine, or any part of it. Mr. McCord asked me to go with him to see Judge Hanford in the meantime. I told him also that I had a scheme by which I thought the machine could be made to do the work and would not infringe the claims decided by Judge Hanford as being infringed, and I told him that I had the drawings with me for the change that I proposed to make. So he asked me to go with him to the judge's office and to explain the matter to him. We came into Judge Hanford's office.

Q. Where?—A. I think in this building; I am not certain. This is the Federal Building?

Q. Yes; in the courthouse, at any rate.—A. It was in the judge's office, anyway; it was not in the court room—in his private office, and Mr. McCord did most of the talking. He told the judge about what I had told you now; that I did not care to take up his machine or do anything with it, and he told him also that I had some plans of a change that I proposed to make in my machine, and I took out the plans and the judge looked them over very carefully. He seemed to be considerably interested, but he did not express an opinion one way or the other; he did not show me his machine and did not explain his machine to me at all—he just dropped it.

Q. That was all that took place in that office?—A. That is all I recall to mind just now.

Q. Do you know whether or not Judge Hanford obtained United States letters patent for his invention?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Have you ever seen a copy of the drawings and specifications?—A. I sent and got a copy of the Patent Office, a copy of the drawings and specifications and I went through it very carefully.

Q. You don't happen to remember the number?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Well, about when was it?—A. Well, about the year 1903–4—it would be one of those two years, probably 1904.

Q. Have you ever seen a model or a sample of the invention which he made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you see it?—A. At Bellingham, in the cannery up there. I first saw it in the machine shop of the Pacific American Fisheries—it is the Pacific American Fisheries now—I think it was called the Pacific American Fisheries Co. then. That cannery at that time was owned by the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co., but was in the hands of a receiver.

Q. Who was the receiver?—A. Well, it was Mr. Kerr, and I think there were two others—I have forgotten their names.

Q. McGovern?—A. McGovern.

Q. And Hallock?—A. I have forgotten. I saw the machine there and I saw it in the cannery afterwards, and I saw it in the machine shop of the cannery company, and I saw it in the cannery afterwards, and I saw Judge Hanford in there looking at it at one time.

Q. When it was in the machine shop was it in the process of being manufactured?—A. It appeared to be; yes, sir. There appeared to be something being done to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of Mr. Burpee?

Mr. McCoy. Just one thing more. Cross appeals were taken to the circuit court of appeals from Judge Hanford's decision by the litigants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the outcome of that was what?—A. The claims decided against were upheld in the circuit court of appeals, and if I remember right, one claim that was decided not to be an infringement was decided to be an infringement by the circuit court of appeals, making four claims infringed.

Mr. Dorr. That is, Mr. Burpee, your company appealed from Judge Hanford's decision to the circuit court of appeals?

A. Yes.

Q. And the circuit court of appeals affirmed his judgment?—A. Yes.

Q. And even went a step further by including, as you remember, by including one other claim?—A. Yes, sir. The Alaska packers also appealed from Judge Hanford's decision.

Q. As to those claims that were disallowed?—A. Yes.

Q. But Judge Hanford was fully sustained by the circuit court of appeals?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, when was it that the letters patent were issued to Judge Hanford, if you know, with respect to the time of this litigation; was it not away after it was concluded in this court?—A. How?

Q. I say was it not some time after it was concluded in this court?—A. I don't think so; I would not be certain about that, because the litigation started in 1901 and before it got through the court of appeals we applied for a rehearing and did not get it—it was 1904.

Q. I say after it was concluded in Judge Hanford's court—I am not speaking of the appeal to the circuit court of appeals.—A. Well, I don't know as you would just consider it to be concluded in Judge Hanford's court.

Q. After he had rendered his judgment decree?—A. After that I understood that he had to assess the damages.

Q. I understand that, too.—A. Which would not come on until after the court of appeals was through—until after Judge Hanford had rendered his decision. Yes; I know that.

Q. After he had rendered his decision that his patent was issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember how long?—A. No; I don't remember exactly; it was some months afterwards, anyway.

Q. You do not mean to have the committee understand you as saying that during the progress of this litigation before Judge Hanford's court that he ever tried to sell you his patent, do you?—A. Not until after he had rendered his decision; but after he had rendered his decision I understood he had to assess the damages.

Q. Yes.—A. I didn't like his wanting me to purchase his patent. I had no faith in it—but the thought struck me that it might pay me to do it—it might lessen the amount of the damage.

Q. Did Judge Hanford ever offer that patent to you?—A. No, sir; nothing more than what I told you.

Q. Well, that was what McCord told you?—A. That was what Mr. McCord told me and I came to his office with Mr. McCord on the subject after McCord explained to him that I didn't care to purchase it, and explained to him why I did not care to purchase it.

Q. And this was when and where?—A. Oh, it was a month, I should say, after handing down his decision—it was within a month or two months at the outside.

Q. Where was it?—A. Seattle. I was talking to McCord in his office down on Pioneer Square.

Q. McCord was one of your attorneys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did McCord say to you?—A. He said that Judge Hanford—in the first place he told me that Judge Hanford wanted to see me regarding his invention. He didn't say what he wanted to see me for, or what it was about, or anything at all about it. When I called the second time he said that he got word from the judge and that the judge did not care—unless I wished to see him with a view to purchasing his invention, he did not wish to take the necessary time to show it to me.

Q. Now, what else—what else was said?—A. Well, I told him, as I have just been telling the committee here, that I did not want to buy his invention at all.

Q. That you did not want to buy it?—A. I did not want to buy it. I didn't think he was competent to get out a machine to do the work.

Q. Was that after Judge Hanford's patent was issued?—A. No; it was before his patent was issued.

Q. Sir?—A. It was before his patent was issued. He told me that the judge had applied for a patent on his invention.

Q. It was after he had applied for the patent, but before it was issued?—A. Before it was issued, yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, the damages which you are talking about had been assessed long before this by stipulation?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure about that?—A. I am sure about that.

Q. When the original injunction was applied for it was then arranged what the damages would be—so much a case?—A. That was to the canneries—we were not packing fish.

Q. To all those who were using the machine?—A. Yes, sir; but the damages which the Alaska Packers sustained by us manufacturing the machine was not assessed.

Q. But Kerr & McCord, as attorneys representing all the defendants, stipulated originally that the damages would be 5 cents a case, didn't they?—A. That was after the time I was talking—that came up after the time I had this talk.

Q. Wasn't that done when the suit was brought?—A. No, sir.

Q. Originally?—A. No, sir.

Q. When the injunction was asked for?—A. There was no injunction asked for—it was a case in equity.

Q. No injunction asked for?—A. Not in the start.

Q. You are sure about that?—A. Absolutely sure.

Q. Absolutely sure?—A. Absolutely sure.

Mr. McCoy. Just a minute—did you ever read the bill of complaint in the suit against you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you remember that there was the usual prayer for an injunction in it?—A. There may have been—but there was no injunction—there was no injunction put on it.

Q. Pending the suit?—A. Pending the suit—I may be mistaken about being absolutely sure about the petition being asked for, but there was no assessment beforehand as to any damages that we would be liable to.

Q. You were not enjoined pending the trial?—A. No.

Q. Pending the litigation?—A. No.

Q. There was one suit against you as a manufacturer of the machine?—A. Yes.

Q. And then there was an entirely separate suit against one of these canneries users of it?—A. I do not think that suit was started until after the judge had rendered his decision—I don't think the suit against the canneries was started until after this conversation took place.

Q. At any rate there were two separate and distinct suits——A. Certainly; I think there were more. I think there was a suit for each different cannery, I think. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Dorr, Mr. Burpee is going to be here until the midnight train, and if you wish to contradict him in any way, or give any different evidence, if it is possible to get Mr. McCord this afternoon to testify on this matter, the committee would like to have you do it.

Mr. Dorr. I understand Mr. McCord is on his way home from California and will arrive here to-morrow evening. He is down in San Francisco engaged in an argument before the circuit court of appeals yesterday. I was informed by Mr. Kerr to-day that he was on his way back to Seattle and would not be here until Wednesday, or late on Tuesday night.

Mr. McCoy. Then my request can not be complied with.

Mr. Dorr. I would like to ask Mr. Burpee if he does not recollect that there were some six or eight of those suits against the various cannery companies?

The Witness. I think there were.

Q. All involving your patents?—A. All involving our patents.

Q. And your company was back of the whole thing?—A. We were manufacturing the machines and selling them to the different companies.

Mr. Hughes. He did not answer your question.

The Witness. No; the companies were not back of the suits—I did not just understand the question—the company was not backing the suit—we paid for all our litigation.

Mr. Dorr. You were back of the patents?—A. We were manufacturing the machines.

Q. That those people were charging you with having infringed?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was this conversation with Mr. McCord and Judge Hanford?—A. In Judge Hanford's office.

Q. Where was the office?—A. I think it was in this building.

Q. What room in this building, if you remember?—A. I could not say that. We came in and we went to his office.

Q. What year was that?—A. January, 1903; January or February, 1903.

Q. Now, was that the time you made an application in court to dissolve the injunction because you claimed you could change your manufacture?—A. I don't think we made an application to dissolve the injunction.

Q. What was your object in changing your style of manufacture?—A. We did not want to infringe the clause that Judge Hanford had decided was infringed.

Q. You advanced a claim in court, didn't you, that by substituting some other device you could avoid the efficacy of the decision?—A. I think that was brought in among some other cases, but I don't think that was brought in in our case.

Q. Well, you were the manufacturer?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't you advance the theory, at least, that by changing your style of machine you could avoid the infringement?—A. After Judge Hanford had rendered the decision?

Q. At some time in the proceedings, I do not know just when.—A. I don't think so; I think that from his decision we took the appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

Q. But before that, and when the litigation was pending here, didn't you attempt to avoid the effect of Judge Hanford's preliminary injunction?—A. I don't think there was any preliminary injunction granted or given at all. There was no injunction that I know of at all except one injunction enjoining us after Judge Hanford rendered his decision.

Q. Don't you know that there was a conditional injunction that unless the users put up royalties equivalent to the amount of the stipulated damages the injunction would go?—A. Yes, sir; but that came up after this conversation, though; I am certain of that.

Q. After the conversation?—A. Yes. As I remember it, it was the following spring. This was in January or February, and along late in the spring an injunction was applied for to restrain those canneries from using the machine.

Q. That was done when the suit was filed, wasn't it, Mr. Burpee?—A. No, sir; I don't think so. I don't think it was done until after Judge Hanford had rendered his decision.

Mr. McCoy. As I understand it——

Mr. Hughes. Mr. McCoy, will you permit me to suggest that we could get the papers here and let him come back again, and we can get the exact facts from the records.

Mr. McCoy. I do not think there is any question between Mr. Dorr and Mr. Burpee. If Mr. Dorr will indicate what suit he referred to it will be clear enough. The witness testified that in the suit against him there was no injunction pendente litem; now Mr. Dorr is asking him about injunctions in the suits that were brought against the users of the patents, and I think it likely that even if successful in the suit against the manufacturers, and in those suits, that an injunction pendente litem would issue for the asking; but his testimony has been right through that there is no injunction and he is not saying anything different now. He is testifying to his recollection.

Q. Did you hear the trials or proceedings that the canneries were defending?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with that litigation except testify?—A. I didn't even testify.

Q. You didn't even testify—you do not remember of the attorneys and do not know anything about the stipulations and had nothing to do with the suit?—A. I knew of it, but it came to me.

Q. I mean, you didn't know anything about it except in a general way——

Mr. DORR. As a matter of fact, your suit was the only one that was ever tried out, was it not? Is it not a fact that that was the one that involved the validity of the patents?

A. Yes, sir, that was tried out; I am not certain of the other suits that I spoke of, though, whether they paid damages or not.

Q. The others were withdrawn or withheld, so far as the final determination was concerned, depending upon the result of your case?—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. So that, pending the result of your case, after the decision and while the appeal was pending——

A. That is what I understand.

Q. (Continuing.) You know whether those other suits were instituted before Judge Hanford's decision in that case?—A. I don't think they were.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that we get the records.

Mr. DORR. I do not want to educate this witness. I want to hear from him. I know and I will state to this committee that this witness is absolutely wrong in his statements.

Mr. MCCOY. Then the records will show.

Mr. DORR. Yes, the records will show that, but I do not want to educate him in advance when he states so positively about these things.

The WITNESS. I would like to withdraw that part of my statement that I was positive there was no injunction applied for, but I will say this, there was no injunction granted before Judge Hanford gave his decision.

Mr. DORR. Well, wasn't it because those damages were stipulated? A. No.

Q. And paid?—A. No—you mean damages with Letson and Burpee.

Q. No, I mean damages for the people that were using the machines in the operation of their canneries.—A. You are talking about one thing and I am talking about another.

Q. Those were the only people who were using the machine at that time—canneries—you ceased to manufacture them, didn't you?—A. We changed the machine and we manufactured the machine in a changed form. After the injunction we ceased manufacturing—after we were enjoined—but I do not think we were finally enjoined until the court of appeals rendered their decision.

Mr. DORR. I will try and be prepared later in the afternoon to produce the records in those cases. Will it be possible for you to be here to-morrow, Mr. Burpee, when Mr. McCord returns?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. You have heard me state that he is out of the city to-day?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you be here to-morrow?—A. I will, if it is necessary.

Q. Did you come voluntarily or were you subpœnaed?—A. I was subpœnaed. I gave no information to this committee voluntarily.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the last answer?

A. (Read by the stenographer.)

The WITNESS. That is, I am not right in that.

Mr. MCCOY. The committee were informed that you had had some litigation and we wrote a letter to you—well, I won't be sure of that either——

The WITNESS. Well, I got a letter from the committee asking me——

Mr. MCCOY. Asking you for the information, and you gave the information, and then we issued a subpœna?

The WITNESS. That is the idea.

Mr. MCCOY. But who told us that you ever had this litigation? I haven't the slightest information.

The WITNESS. I don't know either.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you through with Mr. Burpee at this time?

Mr. DORR. With the understanding that he will come back.

The CHAIRMAN. You may stand aside. Be here to-morrow after lunch.

Witness excused.

F. H. PETERSON, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your full name?

A. Fred H. Peterson.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Peterson?—A. I live in Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Since April, 1884.

Q. What is your business?—A. Practicing law.

Q. Are you a member of any firm of lawyers, or are you alone?—A. I practice law with Mr. MacBride, Philip D. MacBride. It is Peterson & MacBride is the firm name.

Q. I suppose you know Judge Hanford during the years you have been here?—A. I have known him since April, 1884.

Q. Practicing in his court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. Well, simply like most attorneys do—right along, an admiralty case once in a while, a bankruptcy case or a civil case.

Q. Have you at any time seen Judge Hanford when, in your opinion, he was under the influence of intoxicants?—A. I have.

Q. When?—A. Well, upon a number of occasions. For instance, I have seen him on the Broadway car, that is the car that runs from the center of the city out to where he lives—he was on the car upon several occasions, particularly the latter part of 1910 and also 1911.

Q. Take the first one that you mentioned, in the latter part of 1910 and put your mind on it. What kind of a day or night was it?—A. It was somewhere between 10 and half past 11.

Q. At night?—A. At night; yes.

Q. What direction were you going?—A. Judge Hanford lives somewhere near Galer Street and Tenth Avenue north, and I was going to Tenth Avenue north and Decker Street, which is about six or seven blocks farther north than where he lives.

Q. Which of you was on the car first?—A. My recollection is that I was on the car first.

Q. Were there many others on the car?—A. Yes.

Q. What was it that first attracted your attention to the judge?—A. Well, the judge came into the car, and it was evident that he was under the influence of liquor. He took his seat and went to sleep, and when the car stopped at Galer Street, where he was in the habit of getting off, the conductor waked Judge Hanford, and then helped Judge Hanford off the car, and led him to the entrance to his place.

Q. How far?—A. Approximately 40 to 50 feet.

Q. Did he have to help to get him from his seat to the door of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he need it?—A. I think so.

Q. Did he need any help from the car to the gate?—A. Well, that is a question of opinion; I think as a matter of courtesy the conductor helped him along.

Q. Did you see him after the conductor left him?—A. No; the car went on and it was dark, of course.

Q. Well, what would you say, Mr. Peterson, his condition was on that occasion?—A. Well, he was under the influence of liquor, and considerably so.

Q. I suppose that if a man takes a single drink he would be more or less under the influence of it; but what would you say as to whether or not you would call him intoxicated?—A. Well, of course, there are different degrees of intoxication. Some people think they are not intoxicated unless they have difficulty in lying on the floor without hanging on; he was undoubtedly considerably under the influence of liquor.

Q. Take the next occasion that you have in mind; locate it as nearly as you can in point of time?—A. Well, I can not say the day nor the week, for that matter, but I know that I have seen Judge Hanford on a number of occasions under the influence of liquor when I was going home on the car at night. I lived in that locality for between three and four months, and after that I did not travel on that car late at night.

Q. Could you tell the committee on any of those occasions he attracted the attention of others on the car than yourself?—A. Well, of course, I am not able to say, except that there were others who could see it as well as myself.

Q. Have you seen him otherwise than on the street car when, in your opinion, he was more or less intoxicated?—A. Well, I have; but I think that was generally at bar association meetings, where I think everybody who was a member has a constitutional right to get full if they want to.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, were they all full?

A. Well, your question is what?

Mr. HIGGINS. Read it.

Question repeated to the witness as follows: "Were they all full?"

A. At bar associations? Oh, no; not all.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee about how many times you have seen him on the street car intoxicated?

A. I think I have seen him under the influence of liquor at least a half a dozen times on the street cars.

Q. Within how long a period of time?—A. Within from four to five months.

Q. Have you seen him on any occasion but the first one you have told of, when he had help to get off?—A. Only one occasion that there was any help offered him or accepted.

Q. Had you practiced in his court to any considerable extent?—A. Well, off and on, and several cases went to the circuit court of appeals, and of course there were bankruptcy cases and admiralty cases. I have had a case—an admiralty case—disposed of about six weeks ago here in this court.

Q. The point I want to get at is whether you are familiar with Judge Hanford when he is not intoxicated so that you can compare him with himself?—A. Oh, I have known Judge Hanford for 28 years; I presume it would be safe to say I have seen him on an average of three times a month during all that time, sometimes daily.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. HUGHES. When did you say you lived out in that locality?

A. In October, from October 16, 1910, until the 1st of February, 1911.

Q. And during that time did you frequently go home late at night?—A. My usual home-going time would be about 9.30 to 10 o'clock; once in awhile I would be attending lodge or some business would keep me late in the office and I would be delayed perhaps until 10.30 or 11 or 11.30.

Q. On several occasions you saw him appear to be asleep in the car?—A. Yes; that, of course, is quite a common occurrence with him—with Judge Hanford—to go to sleep.

Q. Knowing him, did you sit down and talk with him on any of those occasions?—A. I did, upon a number of occasions.

Q. Did you find that he was perfectly alert and clear in his conversation as soon as you talked with him?—A. Sometimes he was all right in every respect and he had no liquor or anything, and at other times, of course, it was different.

Q. When you talked with him, you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he enter into conversation with you as he does at other times?—A. Sometimes; when I would see him there I would take a seat alongside of him and enter into conversation.

Q. Well, he always talked to you intelligently and clearly when you did, didn't he?—A. As a rule, when he spoke he would speak clearly and intelligently.

Q. Who was the conductor whom you have told the committee assisted him on one of those occasions off the car into his gate?—A. I do not know; I did not inquire of any name, nor was I interested.

Q. How?—A. I was not interested in inquiring the name of the conductor, nor did I.

Q. You do not know him—you could not designate the man in any way?—A. I don't know.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. You said, as a rule, Judge Hanford talked in a normal way when you would talk with him on the car—how did he talk when there were exceptions to all the rules?

A. Well, I do not wish to be understood that Judge Hanford is what you call a chronic drunk. I have seen him many a time there when he was perfectly sober, and if he had taken any drink it was not noticeable and I did not know it, so that we would naturally presume that the man had not taken a drink, and at those times he would talk the same as always. Judge Hanford is peculiar in a way. Now, for instance, he is inclined to go to sleep on the street car; well, I have often done that myself, many times. That is nothing against any man, and yet at other times, and particularly on that one occasion, he was certainly seriously under the influence of liquor, and other occasions where liquor was noticeable; and very frequently when he was sitting alone in the seat I would take a seat alongside of him and sometimes he would continue the conversation and sometimes he would not. However, that is a peculiarity of Judge Hanford, and would not necessarily indicate that there was anything wrong with him. For instance, he and I had offices adjoining from the 1st of January, 1885, until the 1st of January, 1888—three years—and I really never became intimately acquainted with Judge Hanford. I was in his office and he was in my office; I would sometimes, as a matter of courtesy, do notary work for him and he would do it for me, and yet we were always distant in all those years. He is very peculiar in a way, and I have no doubt that some people might think when he was on the car that he was under the influence of liquor when he really was not. And this habit of going to sleep—I say now that I have done that myself on the car—many times have dropped to sleep on the car—that is nothing against the man, but I have seen Judge Hanford under the influence of liquor, and in fact he and I have been in saloons together, and he has taken a drink and I have taken a drink there, but usually I don't take any intoxicating drinks—I take a glass of buttermilk, or a glass of water, or something like that.

Q. You have taken other kinds of drinks with him?—A. No, sir; I have never drank with Judge Hanford.

Q. I thought you just said that you had been in saloons and drank with him?—A. Well, he was drinking by himself, but I would be there with friends for instance; but I never knew Judge Hanford to take a drink with anybody.

Q. You take a drink of liquor sometimes?—A. No.

Witness excused.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Finch is in waiting and owing to the suggestion you made this morning, I would like to put him on the stand for a moment for his accommodation.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; you may do so.

J. L. FINCH, recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr desires to ask you some questions, Mr. Finch.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Finch, you have several times spoken about the Scandinavian-American Bank paying money, or advancing money, that went to the receiver and the receiver's attorneys in the Heckman & Hansen case. I want to be clear as to whether you mean by anything which you have stated or intimated that that was the bank's money that they were paying out to the receiver, or is it money that was deposited by or belonging to the estate?

A. I mean to say that was the money of the Scandinavian-American Bank that was being paid to them.

Q. You mean to say that the Scandinavian-American Bank paid the receiver's fees out of its own funds without recoupment?—A. I mean to say just this—if you will allow me to take that petition in re Ballinger.

Q. Certainly [handing paper to witness].—A. I mean to say, sir, that out of the sum of $2,006.45 that you are referring to the receiver paid out to various parties a total of $570.30, the parties mentioned being creditors of the receivership, not of Heckman & Hansen, and the balance of that money he divided up between himself and the attorney for the receiver, Richard Saxe Jones, Mr. Jones getting $940 and the receiver himself taking the balance of the fund, which was $496.15.

Q. Well, did that money belong to the estate or was it the bank's money?—A. I can only answer that——

Q. I wish you would answer my question. [Question repeated to the witness.]—A. I can only answer that by giving you the facts about it. I do not know whose money it was. It is a matter of law.

Q. What I am trying to get at, Mr. Finch—I think it will appeal to you very simply—it is the question of whether the money that was paid to the receiver and the receiver's attorney came out of the estate eventually, or did the bank contribute that money?—A. As I said before, I could not answer that question, but I can tell you the exact facts about it and you can draw your own conclusions.

Q. Well, you do not know whether it was money that was paid out by the bank, for which it did not recoup itself, or whether it was money that eventually came out of the estate?—A. No; I can not answer that; not because I do not know the facts, but because you are asking me for a conclusion. I can give you the facts very straight if you want them.

Q. I am asking you now whether there was any of that money paid at any time except by the order of the court?—A. I do not know that either, but I can give you the facts.

Q. Well, on that point could you give me the fact as to whether the money that went to the receiver and the receiver's attorney was ordered paid to them by the superior court?—A. I know that there was an order granted by the superior court that Mr. Larsen should pay his attorney out of the fund that he was supposed to have, but which fund he did not have.

Q. Well, he got it later, didn't he, when the property was sold?—A. Well, I will ask you whether he did. I will tell you the facts and then I will ask you whether he did. I can't answer it any better than that. Will you let me state, Mr. Dorr, that the receiver——

Mr. DORR. I want to interrupt you, Mr. Finch, to make my question clear, if it is not, to you, and it is simply this: I want to know—I want your statement to the committee as to whether any of this money that you say was paid out by the bank to the receiver and the receiver's attorneys eventually was contributed by the bank, or was it money that came out of the estate of Heckman & Hansen and was paid under orders of the court?

A. It is a matter of conclusion; I do not know. I can give you, though, the exact facts and you can determine that for yourself.

Q. Are there any facts in that connection except what you have already given?—A. Oh, yes; there are lots of them. I have explained to you and to the committee that the question of whether or not the Scandinavian-American Bank bought in this property is a matter of argument which would take several days to show from the evidence that was offered, because it is so involved in intricate bookkeeping.

Q. That is not what I am inquiring about—as to whether the bank's bookkeeping was intricate or not. What I am trying to find out is whether you contended that the bank paid out any money for the administration of this estate, as a bank or otherwise, apart from the funds that were derived from the sale of the property.—A. Well, then, I will answer your question in the affirmative; they did. There were no funds derived from the sale of the property.

Q. You make that statement now, that there were no funds derived from the sale of the property?—A. I put that this way: That when the receiver said he had money he did not have a nickel.

Q. Well, did he have it later at any time?—A. No; he was discharged. But let me explain now. The books in the State court were straightened by the Scandinavian-American Bank going in there after the receiver was discharged and putting in a certain fund to square things there; but the receiver never had a nickel. He didn't have enough to pay the expenses of the receivership.

Q. Mr. Finch, your petition in the Federal court shows that the receiver had on hand $24,000.—A. My first petition, and I gigged back on that on my amended petition when I discovered the facts. I supposed he did, because I relied on the State court records.

Q. Now, let me understand you. You contend that there was no money ever realized by that sale?—A. No, sir; but I claim that the receiver never got a cent of it, and he was discharged before he ever got a cent of it.

Q. Whether he got it himself or not, did not the money go into the registry of the court?—A. It certainly did.

Q. And was not the money paid out under the orders of the court?—A. It certainly was.

Q. And did not those orders of the court include the money that went to the receiver and to the receiver's attorney?—A. No, sir; it never mentioned it; not that amount.

Q. It never mentioned it?—A. Not that amount. I put it this way: I can not recognize it. There is no order that takes cognizance anywhere of an item of $2,006.45 which was paid by the bank to the receiver the day that he was discharged.

Q. Do you want to state to the committee that the bank paid out that two thousand odd dollars of its own funds to the receiver or the attorneys, or don't you?—A. I want you to understand that they paid it to the receiver and then the receiver disposed of it as he saw fit and the bank paid that money out of its own funds.

Q. And didn't get it back?—A. Oh, I don't know what they got back. I don't know. The intricate workings between the parties—I don't know whether they were ever made good or not.

Q. You know the difference between the bank's losing this money and advancing it and recouping out of the funds?—A. Yes, sir; exactly. The bank didn't lose a cent; the bank was a big winner in this matter, if you want to put it that way.

Q. That is your contention?—A. The bank is out nothing.

Q. And in nothing?—A. Oh, it is in a lot.

Q. You stated yesterday that it just collected what was due it.—A. I beg pardon?

Q. You stated yesterday that it just collected what was due it—what was owing to it.—A. I beg your pardon, but I didn't mean to say anything of the sort. I meant to say that after they took all these parties' property they forewent all claims against them; I mean to say in that sense that they collected their money.

Q. That is, by taking the property; that is what you mean?—A. That is, by taking all the property of Heckman & Hansen. They never said another word about what Heckman & Hansen owed them.

Mr. DORR. That is all I wanted to ask you.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Finch, what you mean the committee to understand is that the whole proceeding was so manipulated that you were never able to discover the inside of it, do you not?

A. That is true; and I mean to say this: That while I do not know exactly what it was, I know what it was not. It was not a proceeding in good faith.

Q. Now, are you prepared to draw any distinctions—fine distinctions—between the bank and the bank's officers profiting—the bank profiting on one side and the bank officials profiting on the other?—A. Hardly, no; in this case I would be willing to draw this distinction and I would not even say it was a question of the officers profiting—it was the bank itself. They tried to foist upon Judge Hanford and Judge Smith the story that it was the officers of the bank, and I have charged them with perjury in that regard and have been willing to prove it. It was because I said to them before Judge Smith that they were a gang of liars and that I would make them the sickest crowd that ever attempted to foist a job of perjury on the court, and then I asked Judge Smith for the certificate back to Judge Hanford in which he should incorporate my remarks there so that Judge Hanford should be fully advised that we had the fireworks in Judge Hanford's court. Now, you will find that in the certificate which is before you, which is, under your directions, made a part of the evidence of Judge Smith.

Mr. MCCOY. That is all, Mr. Finch, but I wish you would remain in court if there is going to be any more testimony on this matter. Mr. Finch, this matter won't, apparently, come up now, but if you will be where you can be reached if it comes up again—in any event, please be here in the morning at half past 9.

Witness excused.

MANLY B. HAYNES, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. HIGGINS. State your full name.

A. Manly B. Haynes.

Q. And you reside where?—A. Seattle.

Q. How long have you lived in Seattle?—A. Twenty-two years.

Q. You are the M. B. Haynes that was interested in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. I am.

Q. What is your present business?—A. I am in the real estate and land business.

Q. How long have you been engaged in that business?—A. Since 1904—over eight years.

Q. And before that?—A. I was in the banking business.

Q. In Seattle?—A. I was officer in the Seattle National Bank up to that time.

Q. What relation, Mr. Haynes, if any, do you bear to Judge Hanford?—A. I married his daughter.

Q. I want you to tell the committee what Judge Hanford's family consists of at present.—A. Two sons.

Q. What are their names?—A. Edward C. and William B.

Q. Where are they living?—A. Both are here.

Q. In Seattle?—A. The younger one is a college student and has just returned; he has been in Cornell.

Q. Those are the only sons?—A. The only living sons.

Q. And has he any brothers?—A. Judge Hanford has three living brothers.

Q. What are their names?—A. A. E.—that is, Arthur E. Hanford and Clarence Hanford, and Frank Hanford.

Q. They live in Seattle?—A. All live and are in business here.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is their business?—A. Frank Hanford is in the fire insurance business. Cap Hanford is an attorney and an abstract lawyer; Clarence Hanford is a member of the firm of Lowman & Hanford.

Q. What is their business?—A. Wholesale stationery and publishers and printers.

Q. Mr. Haynes, I have before me the minute book of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. Were you interested in the formation of that company?—A. I had considerable to do with starting it.

Q. Well, just what did you have to do with starting it?—A. I first visited that district below Priests Rapids, in the valley of the Columbia River, in 1904.

Q. How far is Priests Rapids from here?—A. In an air line 150 miles.

Q. On the line of what railroad?—A. There is no railroad there. The Milwaukee railroad crosses about 11 miles above Priests Rapids—crosses the river.

Q. When did you visit that property—you say in 1904?—A. For the purpose of securing a piece of land.

Q. For yourself?—A. For myself. I was much interested, and became interested with some other owners and through a local engineer.

Q. What do you mean when you say you became interested with other owners?—A. Owners of land.

Q. And did they live in Seattle?—A. Some of them lived here and some in Tacoma.

Q. Who were they?—A. There was E. H. Guye, who took the trip with me, and Dr. Raymond; and there was a Mr. Todd and Mr. Cover, of Tacoma, and Mr. Curtis, of Seattle.

Q. You may continue.—A. Through Mr. Owens a prospectus was drawn up and surveys were made for an irrigation scheme.

Q. Who drew the prospectus?—A. He and I together drew it; he gave the engineering figures and features. That is one prospectus; there were others.

Q. You say he and you—who was the other?—A. Mr. Owens, the engineer.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. He lived here.

Q. Is he here now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir. He had a profile map of the country. He had a survey of the rapids which he had made when he was previously in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad. We got our data from that and worked on the scheme for a year trying to interest some New York parties to help us promote the irrigation scheme.

Q. When did you complete your prospectus in conjunction with the engineer that you have mentioned?—A. We had one completed in the winter of 1904–5—the one in which we worked with the New York people—it was not successful in dealing with outside people, and I confided the project to Judge Hanford and told him what we had and I asked him if he thought we could not interest local capital and organize a local company.

Q. When was that, if you can fix the date approximately?—A. That was in the fall of 1905.

Q. What did you then, briefly, Mr. Haynes, contemplate doing?—A. Contemplated filing on that water power at Priests Rapids.

Q. You were considering the formation of a corporation, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; for that purpose.

Q. You were, in connection with the formation of that corporation—you were endeavoring to finance it, were you not?—A.

Q. Now, what did you propose to do after you got your corporation organized and financed?—A. We proposed to purchase the land that could be irrigated under the project, build the works, complete the ditch, and sell the land.

Q. Did you take up the financial feature of it with more than one person in New York?—A. Oh, yes; with quite a number of persons in New York.

Q. With more than one or with more than one association of persons?—A. We worked through one broker only.

Q. And upon your failure to arrange with that broker for the necessary funds to finance the company you say you brought it to the attention of Judge Hanford?—A. I did.

Q. And that was in the fall of 1905?—A. 1905.

Q. What did Judge Hanford say to you?—A. He said he thought we could raise the money here at home to at least start the scheme, and we called a meeting and outlined the project.

Q. Called a meeting of whom?—A. Of people whom we thought would be interested.

Q. Where did you hold that meeting?—A. The meeting was first held in Judge Hanford's offices—I think the first one.

Q. In the Federal building?—A. Down in the old Federal building.

Q. Who was present?—A. Myself, the judge, Mr. Owens, Mr. Todd, Mr. Cover, Mr. McCord, and Mr. James B. Howe.

Q. Now, just a moment—is that W. R. Todd?—A. W. R. Todd.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is—at that time he was a merchant in Tacoma. I think he has sold out now.

Q. He is now living in Seattle?—A. He is living in Tacoma.

Q. Well, you and the judge and Mr. Todd and Mr. Owens and Mr. McCord—was Mr. McGraw there?—A. Yes; John H. McGraw was there.

Q. Who else?—A. I can not remember all the names, but the company was started, and the subscription list was——

Q. Just a moment; this was the meeting where you had the general discussion of your plans?—A. That is all.

Q. And the purpose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did that meeting decide to do, if anything?—A. They authorized me to secure title to the water power at Priests Rapids.

Q. Before you had organized the corporation?—A. Before we had organized—well, now, not that; please strike that out; they authorized me to secure an option——

Q. And all of this was before you had made any——A. (Continuing.) On the land.

Q. Before you had made any arrangements for the organization of the corporation?—A. We immediately incorporated.

Q. Well, didn't you, as a result of that meeting in Judge Hanford's office, agree to incorporate?—A. Yes.

Q. And I will read from the minutes of the meeting of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. and see if you recall these to be the first articles of association which you entered into [reading]:

We, the undersigned, do hereby agree with each other and promise to become associated together to form a corporation for the purpose of utilizing the water of the Columbia River and the water power at Priests Rapids for irrigation and industrial purposes; that we will subscribe for at least one share of the capital stock of such corporation or such additional shares as may hereafter be agreed upon. Ten per cent of the par value of the stock shall be paid for by the subscribers in cash immediately upon the completion of the organization and the remaining 90 per cent shall be subject to calls from the trustees of the corporation.

Seattle, Wash., October 19, 1905.

Did you sign that, Mr. Haynes? You can look at it if you wish to [showing minute book to witness].—A. Yes, sir; that is my signature.

Q. How long after this preliminary meeting did you sign that agreement that I have just read?—A. I think it was signed at that meeting. I can't tell whether it was signed then or immediately—I think, perhaps, the papers were drawn up later.

Q. Then you had some talk with those men that were at Judge Hanford's office before these articles were signed?—A. Yes, sir; we had worked it up. We had told them what the intention of the company was and asked them to come if they were interested.

Q. You mean you and Judge Hanford, after discussing with Mr. Owens, the engineer, just what your project involved——A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had talked it up with your friends, and as the result of that talk they met in Judge Hanford's office and signed the articles of agreement which I have just read. Is that what you want the committee to understand?—A. That is correct.

Q. Is it a fact that all the persons whose names appear on these first articles of association were present at Judge Hanford's office at that time?—A. I think it is safe to say they were.

Q. I will read them—Kerr & McCord?—A. Yes.

Q. Which one of the firm of Kerr & McCord?—A. Both of them.

Q. They were both there?—A. Both of them.

Q. Had you had some talk yourself before that meeting with Mr. Kerr or Mr. McCord about the company?—A. I don't think that I had talked with them until afterwards. I think the judge asked them to come, and I can not remember talking with them until after that meeting.

Q. C. H. Hanford is the next name which appears there. Of course he was there; it was in his office?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And W. B. Haynes?—A. That should be M. B. Haynes.

Q. You were active in getting them together at that meeting.—A. Yes.

Q. W. R. Todd?—A. Yes.

Q. His signature appears to be "Per J. W. C."—A. That was his partner, Mr. Cover.

Q. He signed under Mr. Todd and then John W. Cover?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Cover's business was what?—A. He was in the land business.

Q. John H. McGraw—was he in the land business?—A. He was in city real estate business.

Q. What do you mean by being in the land business as being distinguished from being in the city real estate business?—A. His business was more in dealing in lands throughout the State, while Gov. McGraw's was mostly, exclusively city real estate.

Q. And C. H. Smith?—A. He was there.

Q. He was present?—A. Yes.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is the president and manager of the Central Coal Co., vice president of the Washington Trust Co., interested in many companies as a capitalist.

Q. Companies of what nature?—A. Real estate and investment companies.

Q. Land companies?—A. City real estate mostly.

Q. And James B. Howe, that is the attorney?—A. The attorney, Mr. Howe.

Q. The partner of Senator Piles?—A. He was there.

Q. H. K. Owens, that is the engineer?—A. That is the engineer that I spoke of.

Q. And Frank Hanford, that is Judge Hanford's brother?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Alfred Raymond?—A. That is Dr. Raymond who had land over there, that I spoke of.

Q. He had a small tract near Priests Rapids?—A. No, he had a half a section and still has it in the district.

Q. Well, you would call half a section a small tract as compared with what you afterwards acquired.—A. Well, there is 320 acres in half a section, and that's quite a good sized piece of land.

Q. But as compared to nearly 20,000 acres—well, I don't care to pursue that matter—G. A. Birch, he was there?—A. He was there.

Q. What is his business?—A. Real estate.

Q. In Seattle?—A. In Seattle.

Q. Does he have any other business?—A. Real estate and insurance.

Q. P. J. Gorman.—A. Mr. Gorman was there.

Q. So it is a fact, is it not, Mr. Haynes, that it was understood at that meeting by all those present just what was proposed?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And it is not too much to say, is it, that you had met there for the purpose of forming a corporation to develop this power and to irrigate this land near Priests Rapids?—A. That is true.

Q. And the preliminary conferences, which were held before the signing of these articles of incorporation, had occurred some time between the time when you failed to get the New York parties interested and the time when these articles of association were signed?—A. Yes.

Q. I notice, Mr. Haynes, at the next meeting for preliminary organization which follows in the minute book the meeting of October 19, 1905, that Messrs. Kerr & McCord and James B. Howe were appointed to draw up articles of incorporation.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by both of those persons the name selected for the company was "Priests Rapids Irrigation & Power Co."?—A. Yes.

Q. That was determined as the name of the corporation at that meeting?—A. We were not allowed to use that name.

Q. That is not what I am asking you, sir.—A. Your record is true.

Q. Now you can make any statement you may wish to make.—A. We were not allowed to use that name because we found that another company had already incorporated under that name.

Mr. HUGHES. May I explain that the law of this State prohibits a corporation to be organized taking a name which has been appropriated by another corporation?

Mr. HIGGINS. Don't you think that most every State in the Union makes similar provision?

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I thought I would call the attention of the committee.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, the record shows what was done in this case. Now you may make any explanation you may wish, Mr. Haynes. You say that you were not allowed to use the name of Priests Rapids.

A. The name which was first chosen we were obliged to abandon and selected the other name later on.

Q. Well, what was the other name?—A. That name was the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., after Judge Hanford.

Q. And that name was continued——A. To the present time.

Q. And is the name now of the company which is carrying on the operations there at Priests Rapids.—A. It was.

Q. Where were your offices, Mr. Haynes—your first offices?—A. The first offices in the Alaska Building adjoining Mr. Owens' office; later on we secured temporary offices in the Haller Building and finally the offices were in the Seattle National Bank Building right over the Seattle National Bank on the corner of Columbia and Second.

Q. And later on they were in the Mutual Life Building.—A. No; Columbia and Second, over the Seattle National Bank, that two-story building.

Q. And they never were in the Mutual Life Building?—A. We have our preliminary meetings.

Q. You understand my question. It will shorten the proceedings if you will make direct answers to my questions. I will give you an opportunity to explain afterwards.—A. Meetings were held in the Mutual Life Building in the offices of Kerr & McCord before we had offices of our own.

Q. Following the signing of the articles of associations, Mr. Haynes, the ordinary steps necessary under the laws of the State of Washington were followed, I assume, to prefect your organization, and in December 26, 1905, you subscribed to 2,492 shares of stock [showing book to witness].—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand that it is agreed that the committee may take this book with them to Washington, as they have taken a transcript of the testimony, for instance, in the Heckman & Hansen case.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Kerr stated that he would get the consent from the present owners of the company.

Mr. PRESTON. It is my understanding that the papers should go, but I got that understanding from you gentlemen.

Mr. HIGGINS. I got it from what Mr. Kerr said here or some others.

Mr. HUGHES. I have no doubt that he has made such an arrangement.

Mr. HIGGINS. At the time, Mr. Haynes, that you subscribed for the 2,492 shares of stock what property did it own in real or personal estate—I mean as nearly as you can recall?

A. What is the date of that subscription?

Q. December 26, 1905.—A. They had no deeds; they had no property, nothing but options.

Q. Well, upon what property did it have options?—A. Two hundred acres near Priests Rapids needed for the power site; a filing on the water in my name and negotiations were begun and finally completed to purchase about 18,000 acres of land.

Q. Let us take up the matter of the options. At that time you say that they had those two options, one for the 200 acres for the power site and the other was what?—A. The other was a water filing. I can say that that was all the assets we had to start with.

Q. You had not at that time taken any steps to secure the unsurveyed island in the Columbia River?—A. It took nearly a year to get that. We did not have that permit at that time.

Q. Which was the first property which you acquired after you had organized?—A. I bought the location which is at present occupied by the power and the canal at Priests Rapids.

Q. That was 200 acres which you had the option on at the time you organized?—A. Two hundred and twenty acres.

Q. There were also a number of individuals who had quarter sections and half sections?—A. There was a great deal of private land; yes, sir.

Q. And when was that acquired; soon after you got the 200 acres?—A. The company did not buy but about 600 acres from individuals. Most of the land was secured from the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and State.

Q. How was the State land secured?—A. Purchased at public auction.

Q. As provided by your statute law?—A. As provided by law.

Q. That means to the highest bidder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under a sale that is conducted and authorized or advertised as prescribed by your Washington law.—A. In open competition.

Q. Where was the sale held?—A At Prosser, the county seat.

Q. Did you bid the land in?—A. I did.

Q How many bids against you?—A. About 16 bidders.

Q All bidding for the same property?—A No; it was ordered up in 160-acre units The bidders were allowed to purchase or bid, and a great many outsiders bought land at that sale; we bought all the land they didn't buy

Q At the time of your organization of your corporation you knew of this sale of State lands?—A No, sir; that was a year later; we ordered the land up ourselves for sale.

Q So you did not organize your corporation in contemplation of the purchase of the school lands?—A. I don't understand your question.

Q. I want to know the fact.—A. I don't understand your question.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Yes, sir; that was part of our scheme—was to purchase the school lands.

Q I understood you to say in answer to my question, Mr. Haynes, a short time ago, that you did not know of the intended sale of those school lands at the time that you organized your corporation.—A. I did not say that, Mr Higgins.

Q Well, did you know?—A. We ordered the land up.

Q. How?—A We ordered the land up for sale. We petitioned that it be ordered for sale

Q That was because of my unfamiliarity with your local land laws—won't you explain to the committee what you mean by saying you ordered it up?—A The land, most of it, was under lease, which gives the leaseholder the first permission to order that land up—it amounts to kind of an option. We first purchased these leases from the owners, and then we went to the State land office and filed a petition in regular order, and, after being duly advertised, the land was sold at auction.

Q Under your law do you understand that anybody could have ordered it up except the lessees of the land?—A. They can now, but land that is leased——

Q I want to know what they could do in 1904–5 —A. The terms of the lease provide that only the leaseholder could order it up.

Q And you bought——A We bought those leases

Q And went to the land office in the State of Washington and petitioned for the sale —A. Yes.

Q And what price did you give for that land?—A. The minimum price is $10; some of it was sold as high as $23 an acre.

Q Did you have competition in the sale of that land?—A. Just as I have before stated

Q. For the identical tracts which you purchased were there other people that bid against you?—A. Yes.

Q And that applied to all of the tracts?—A. It certainly did.

Q That you bought from the State of Washington?—A. It certainly did.

Q I have here, Mr. Haynes, a document which Mr Preston has furnished to the committee, a report of the Washington Auditing Co., at 731 Central Building, Seattle, Charles A Johnstone, manager; he made an audit of the books of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., didn't he?—A. That was some years later.

Q I don't care when it was; I want to know if that is the fact, if at any time he did it?—A. Yes, sir; I remember it being done, Mr. Higgins

Q. (Showing document to witness) Can you identify that land there as being the land that was sold under the circumstances and at the time that you have told the committee—I am referring now to the land which in the auditor's report is indicated as having been purchased on March 1, 1906, from the State of Washington?—A. I can not follow the descriptions.

Mr. Higgins. Well, I do not expect there is any controversy about the fact—you can not from the memorandum here identify the land?

A. No, sir.

Q. There is no description of the land, only stating the amounts and the average; now, how long were you in acquiring the leasehold interest on that State land?—A. I had options on them before starting in—before this agreement to incorporate.

Q. How long were you in securing those options?—A. It represented over a year's work in securing the options and reports on the State land and on the Northern Pacific Railroad land. I did not work steadily at it but it represented off and on, a year before I had everything secured.

Q. Did Mr. Owens work with you?—A. As engineer.

Q. Did he work with you?—A. He did.

Q. Who else?—A. Mr. Todd and Mr. Cover.

Q. Who else?—A. We did all the work of securing the land.

Q. I am referring now to the work that was done in getting the option—you understood my question?—A. Yes. The judge helped us to get the Northern Pacific Railroad lands—to get an option on them.

Q. My question is, and I think it was reasonably plain, it related entirely to the work of securing the options before you organized the corporations; now I want to know who aided you in securing those options on the leasehold interests?—A. You say on the leasehold interest of the State land?

Q. Yes.—A. You confine it to the State land?

Q. Yes.—A. The names I have given, namely——

Q. You have given so many names, and seem to have been so confused.—A. Mr. Owens, Mr. Todd, and Mr. Cover and myself.

Q. And that covered the period of how long a time?—A. As I say, the preliminary work took a year—it was not all securing options.

Q. What other work was done except securing options in the year before you met in Judge Hanford's office and signed the articles of association.—A. Making the surveys and maps of the land and the contour lines.

Q. You did not have anything to do with that—that was done by your engineer, Mr. Owens.—A. I know, but that all had to be presented to our prospective investors.

Q. Well, the work that you and Mr. Owens and the other two that you have mentioned did was all the work——A. That was all.

Q. In the way of acquiring land, preparing to acquire land, in the way of options, that was done before the first meeting of organization.—A. I have mentioned the names.

Q. You understand my question.—A. I understand the question.

Q. Is that the fact?—A. That is the fact.

Q. Do you happen to remember who the first trustees were of the Hanford & Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. There were nine trustees.

Q. Suppose I read them; it may shorten my inquiry, and I assume they are correct—J. H. McGraw, president.—A. That is right.

Q. W. R. Todd.—A. He was vice president.

Q. He was vice president?—A. Yes.

Q. W. B.——A. That should be M. B. Haynes, that is myself.

Q. James B. Howe, James A. Kerr, H. K. Owens, C. H. Hanford, and George A. Birch.—A. That list is correct.

Q. That is the full board of trustees.—A. Yes.

Q. At the time you acquired the State lands did you take up the smaller holdings of 160 up to 480 acres that were held by individuals? A. We bought only one piece from individuals that I remember.

Q. Well, let me refresh your recollection a little—you bought a piece from William Filly?—A. That is the power site.

Q. And you bought a piece from W. B. Todd.—A. That is the other piece.

Q. You had a piece there in your name in your own name, din't you?—A. I did not sell it to the company.

Q. You had a piece there?—A. I still have it.

Q. It never was acquired by the company?—A. It never was acquired by the company.

Q. And the company never bought any land from you?—A. The company never bought any land from me.

Q. How about I. B. Armstrong?—A. He still has his land, as I remember—now please strike that out—he sold it.

Q. He sold it to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. No, sir; he did not; we did not buy his land.

Q. And A. M. Buck?—A. I do not remember that name; I do not know anything about that.

Q. W. C. Gilbert?—A. I do not remember that name; is he an original owner?

Q. Well, do you remember E. C. Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he sell some land to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why, this report of the auditor, Mr. Haynes—and I am reading from that—shows that lands were purchased from those people during the years 1907 and 1908, and you were then actively identified with the management of the corporation, were you not?—A. I might have been, but I can not remember, Mr. Higgins; if you would give me the descriptions I might know what it was.

Q. Well, there are no descriptions.—A. The amounts.

Q. In this memorandum of land purchases which the auditor of your company made from March 1, 1906, to July 6, 1909—you were with the company in 1909, were you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And what other land aside from the State land and the smaller holdings did the company acquire?—A. It acquired what land there was that belonged to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Q. And what was that land?—A. It was all arid land. It was classified in three classes—the A class, the B class, and the C class land. The Northern Pacific Railroad gave the company a contract to sell them that land on a payment of one-sixth down and one-sixth each year, providing they would irrigate the land and put in the improvements and irrigate the land, and in case of the failure of the company to do that the land would revert to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. and all payments would be forfeited.

Q. That all appears in the deed from the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.?—A. You have a copy of it, have you?

Q. I am asking you if that does not all appear in the deed from the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. It all appears in the original contract of purchase; I don't think it appears in the deed.

Q. Was the Northern Pacific Railway Co. at that time disposing of lands in this section of the State?—A. They would only sell to people who would agree to improve them on such a contract as I have outlined.

Q. What had been the improvements, before your company was started, near Hanford?—A. Absolutely nothing; there were only about three settlers in the valley.

Q. The nearest improvement and the improvement nearest in point of time to where your company operated?—A. Do you mean in an irrigation scheme?

Q. Yes.—A. The nearest one was Kennewick, 35 miles down the river.

Q. In what direction?—A. Southwest. The Sunnyside Valley is 30 miles to the west of the Hanford Valley; Wenatchee is 60 miles north, in the valley of the Columbia River.

Q. Those were lands all of which had been irrigated before your company had started?—A. All developed, irrigated districts.

Q. That is, before 1905?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you call on the local land agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad about this land?—A. I did.

Q. Tell the committee when and what conversation you had and who you called with and all that occurred at that time.—A. My first call on Mr. Plummer, the Northern Pacific Railroad land commissioner, was unsuccessful. He outlined the policy of the railroad company to aid development companies, and he said if we would form our company and raise a sufficient capital to show our good faith that they would give us a contract to purchase the land.

Q. When did you call on Mr. Plummer first?—A. I can not figure the date; some time in 1905.

Q. Some time after you got your corporation started you called on him at his office in Seattle?—A. His office is at Tacoma.

Q. Who was with you at that time?—A. I was alone.

Q. Did you call as the result of some vote of the board of trustees or were you seeking information?—A. No, sir; I called to get information.

Q. Well, what followed that call on Mr. Plummer?—A. I asked Judge Hanford if he thought that the company could secure those lands.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. And he told me that he would do all he could to help me get them, and I do not remember the judge calling himself.

Q. Well, what did you do after you had this talk with Judge Hanford?—A. After that, myself and Mr. C. J. Smith and Mr. James Kerr made a trip to Tacoma and called on Mr. Plummer, apprising him that the company had been organized and that the capital had been raised and asked him if he was willing to enter into negotiations with us for those lands.

Q. That was sometime in the winter or spring of 1905?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are sure about that, are you?—A. I can not be sure of dates.

Q. Well, can you fix the year?—A. It was after the preliminary organization of the company.

Q. Well, that was in October, 1905—now, how soon after that was it that you and the other gentlemen you named called on Mr. Plummer?—A. It was within 60 days after that.

Q. Within 60 days?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, what was the result of your call at that time on Mr. Plummer?—A. Mr. Plummer said that he would draw up a contract, and asked us to go over his reports of the land and to agree on the prices.

Q. Mr. Plummer said he would draw up a contract?—A. A contract of purchase.

Q. A contract of purchase?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Plummer say to you that he had the power to draw the contract?—A. He did not. He said that that would come from his—from the president of the road or some higher authority, and he afterwards succeeded in getting it ratified.

Q. When did he succeed in getting it ratified?—A. I can't tell.

Q. How soon after?—A. The date of the contract will show when we got it.

Q. Now, Mr. Haynes, we will get along very much better if you will answer my questions.—A. I have not got the correct dates in my memory.

Q. Well, let me refresh your mind a little—the date of the first meeting of the organization of the corporation was in December, 1905, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you called upon Mr. Plummer yourself, upon your own initiative, as far as this committee knows, as you have stated, and you were not able to get, or were unable to make an arrangement with Mr. Plummer for a contract.—A. I did not try to; I only called for information.

Q. As soon as you got the information you called upon Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Within 60 days after that you called upon Mr. Plummer again.—A. The three of us that I mentioned called on Mr. Plummer.

Q. And Mr. Plummer said to you that the contract of sale could be made—now, was the contract of sale agreed upon with Mr. Plummer in the presence of those three gentlemen at the time you have stated? Was it carried out as agreed in your talk with Mr. Plummer in Tacoma that day?—A. Not in its entire details. We had to have another meeting and agree on prices and on the classifications of the land.

Q. With Mr. Plummer?—A. With Mr. Plummer.

Q. Well, when did you call on Mr. Plummer with regard to the prices and the classification of the land?—A. That was all consummated——

Q. I am asking you when you called—if you didn't call, that is an answer to it.—A. I can not tell those dates. Most of it was done by correspondence. The three of us called once; Gov. McGraw, the president of the company, went to see him once, and it was consummated mostly by correspondence.

Q. But you did call on him again?—A. I called on him several times.

Q. You have named twice; now, when was the third time?—A. I have had business off and on with Mr. Plummer a great many times; I can not tell.

Q. Now, Mr. Haynes——A. I can't tell the dates.

Q. Well, you know whether or not you called on him after everything was arranged but the prices and the classification, don't you?—A. Well, I did not call on him again about that contract until we got the contract.

Q. Nor write to him?—A. I wrote to him very frequently.

Q. Have you got those letters?—A. I have not; I think they are on file. I was the secretary at that time.

Q. They are on file where?—A. With the company's files.

Q. Copies of them were kept?—A. Yes.

Q. Was your correspondence with him after the second meeting with reference to the classifications and prices of the land?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that the only question that was open then between you and Mr. Plummer in regard to the sale of this land?—A. That and the prices was the only question.

Q. There were two questions after you had called on Mr. Plummer the second time with those three gentlemen that were not decided. One was as to the prices and the other as to the classification. Now, were there any other questions?—A. None that I know of.

Q. What report did you make, Mr. Haynes, to the company as the result of your call upon Mr. Plummer?—A. We recommended the purchase of the lands at the best possible terms.

Q. That meeting and the contract for the sale was made as the result of the letters which passed between you and Mr. Plummer. You did not see him about this particular contract after the time that you called on him with the three men that you have named?—A. I don't think that I called at his office again before we got the contract.

Q. How did you arrange about the prices and the classification?—A. "A" class land is considered the best——

Q. I didn't ask you the prices. I say, how did you reach that arrangement?—A. Upon his report and my report. He had his cruisers' report on that land, and I had cruised it all myself, and we agreed.

Q. Who were his cruisers?—A. Regular employees of the Northern Pacific land office.

Q. Who were they?—A. I don't know.

Q. I assumed that they were employees of the Northern Pacific Railroad.—A. I don't know who they were. The reports that he had were made nearly 20 years ago.

Q. And he took those reports?—A. He used them; yes, sir.

Q. Well, who is your cruiser?—A. I cruised it myself.

Q. Alone?—A. Yes.

Q. No one assisting you?—A. Well, I had a driver; one man with me a part of the time.

Q. Well, who were they?—A. A man by the name of McLaughlin and a Mr. Guye, and on another trip Mr. Cover was with me.

Q. I read, Mr. Haynes, from the meeting of the trustees of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. on April 3, 1906. The purpose of the meeting, as stated by the secretary, was to have the board of trustees authorize the purchase of the Northern Pacific Railroad land by contract on the following terms:

Five thousand three hundred and eighty acres, at $10 per acre: 8,760 acres, more or less, at $3 per acre, on the 10-year plan—that is, one-tenth down and one-tenth each year with interest at 6 per cent. It was moved by C. H. Hanford that contract on terms stated be approved by the board and the executive committee was instructed to immediately call a stock subscription of 25 per cent to secure funds to make first payment on contract with Northern Pacific Railroad. Motion carried. It was moved by H. K. Owens that Judge Hanford and M. B. Haynes be instructed to open negotiations with N. P. R. R.—

That, I assume, is the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

for purchase of 8,000 acres of land lying east of the river. Motion carried.

What question was there then to be determined, Mr. Haynes, with reference to the purchase of this land?—A. We did not carry those instructions out.

Q. That is not my question, sir.—A. I didn't hear your question.

Mr. HIGGINS. Then read it, Mr. Reporter. [Question repeated to the witness.]

Mr. MCCOY. Now, what question was there then to be determined with reference to the purchase of this land?

A. The price and the value—I mean the question of the price and the question of the classifications, I want to say.

Q. But both appear to be classified; both the price and the classification appear in the report which you made to the board of trustess. I hand you the minutes [showing] in which you will note that you made a report as to the number of acres and the price per acre. It is stated in there that there is 5,380 acres at $10 per acre and 8,760 acres, more or less, at $3 per acre.—A. We were not able to carry out that contract; that never was carried through; it never was consummated.

Mr. HUGHES. Which contract?

A. This one mentioned there in the minutes.

Mr. HIGGINS. This report which you made to the trustees?

A. The Northern Pacific would not agree to it.

Q. You recall that meeting of April, 1906?—A. Indistinctly; I remember such a meeting was held.

Q. I have allowed you to refresh your recollection by reading the minutes; and you made a report on the number of acres and the price per acre?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I want you to explain to the committee why at the same meeting that you were reported as to the number of acres and the price per acre of lands to be purchased from the Northern Pacific Railway Co. that you and Judge Hanford were instructed to open negotiations with the Northern Pacific Railway Co. for 8,000 acres east of the river.—A. That is in a different district, this 8,000 acres, and this price was not agreed upon by the Northern Pacific people; they would not accept that proposition.

Q. They would not accept that proposition?—A. No; and they would not sell that land—that 8,000 acres across the river.

Q. Well, I assume that the records are correct; that you and Judge Hanford were appointed a committee to open negotiations for the purchase of that land; now, state to the committee what you did as the result of it.—A. Judge Hanford saw Mr. Plummer and Mr. Plummer told him they did not want to sell the 8,000 acres across the river, and they could not sell it at the price mentioned here at which they authorized us to go ahead.

Q. Did you see Mr. Plummer with Judge Hanford?—A. I did not. I never called on Mr. Plummer with Judge Hanford.

Q. What did you do as the result of the vote of the trustees?—A. Those instructions, you mean?

Q. What did you do toward carrying out the instructions of the trustees in their meeting of April 3, 1906?—A. It is very indistinct just what I did in following those instructions, but I remember speaking to Mr. Plummer here and he gave me an offhand answer, that we need not apply for the lands across the river. That 8,000 acres east of the river that Mr. Owens referred to was not our original project; it was outside land.

Q. How do you know that Judge Hanford called on Mr. Plummer?—A. He told me that he did.

Q. Did he tell you the result of his talk with Mr. Plummer?—A. He did.

Q. What were they?—A. I beg pardon?

Q. What was it?—A. He said that he refused to sell that land across the river and he refused to sell it at the prices which I have recommended.

Q. What prices had you then recommended for that land?—A. They are mentioned there in that resolution.

Q. I want to know what your recollection about that is, if you have any?—A. $10 for the best land and $3 for the other.

Q. Had you at that time, or had the company, acquired any Northern Pacific land at all?—A. I had bought a piece.

Q. How?—A. I had purchased a piece from them.

Q. My question was if the company had; it may have included you, but I want to know if the company had?—A. The company had not.

Q. What report was made to the trustees, Mr. Haynes, by the committee that was appointed to open these negotiations?—A. I do not remember that any written report was made, except that we found out that they would not consent to it.

Q. That is, following the meeting—after the appointment of the committee?—A. I do not think we made any written report; if we did it should be on the file.

Q. The next meeting of the trustees appears by the minute book was on the 23d of May at 3 p. m. in the offices of Kerr & McCord.

Present: James A. Kerr, C. H. Hanford, James B. Howe, G. A. Birch, H. K. Owens, and M. B. Haynes. It was moved, seconded, and carried that the engineer, H. K. Owens, be authorized to put a surveying party in the field to complete survey of lands to be irrigated.

What lands did that refer to?—A. All lands that could be irrigated, regardless of the ownership.

Q. Regardless of who owed them?—A. Regardless of who owned them.

Q. That is, that would be the Northern Pacific lands or in the neighborhood of Priests Rapids?—A. And the State lands and the private-owned lands.

Q. Then, on June 14, I want you to read the resolution of Judge Hanford.—A. (Reading):

Judge Hanford offered the following resolution, which was seconded and unanimously carried: "Resolved by the board of trustees of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., That the contract for the sale of this company of lands, aggregating 12,730.05 acres in Yakima and Benton Counties in the State of Washington, tendered by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. for the aggregate price of $96,063.21 on the terms and conditions set forth in said contract, be and the same is accepted, and that the president of this company be and he is hereby authorized and instructed to sign said contract in duplicate in behalf of this company and affix its corporate seal thereto, and to deliver one of said duplicate copies to the vendor upon the receipt of a copy legally executed by said vendor."

Q. What is the date of that, Mr. Haynes?—A. June 14, 1906.

Q. Then you acquired, or the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. acquired, on the 22d of June, as appears from the report of the auditor which was furnished us, on the 22d of June, 1906, 12,690.4 acres?—A. That was the first purchase, yes.

Q. That was acquired as the result of this report?—A. Yes; after considerable negotiations that was the final result.

Q. Have you given to the committee now all the negotiations which occurred before the acquiring of this first land?—A. I think as far as I am concerned, I have.

Q. Well, as far as anybody else is concerned that you know of?—A. I remember Judge Hanford telling me that he had called on Plummer once with regard to the instructions of the resolution given in the minutes, and he told him offhand that they did not want to sell that land.

Q. You have already told us about that.—A. That is the only time that I can remember that Judge Hanford told me that he called on Mr. Plummer. I never called on Mr. Plummer.

Q. You have been active in locating the land and active in interesting people in the formation of the corporation and you were then the secretary of the corporation?—A. I was.

Q. And you had cruised the land?—A. I had.

Q. You had estimated the value of the land for irrigation purposes and you were familiar generally and quite specifically with the different questions involved in the acquiring of the land?—A. I was.

Q. What legal question was submitted to Mr. Kerr?—A. Regarding what?

Q. This land.—A. Mr. McCord attended me at the land sale of the State land as my adviser.

Q. I am speaking now of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.'s land.—A. I never consulted Mr. Kerr—he may have——

Q. What legal question, whether you consulted him or not?—A. I do not know of any, Mr. Higgins.

Q. Then I will ask you to explain this entry in the minutes of June 14, 1906, if you are able to [reading]:

The secretary—

That is you?—A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing).

reported that the contract for purchase from the Northern Pacific Railway of lands applied for had been checked and land descriptions found correct and Mr. Kerr reported the legal points were as agreed upon.

Did you confer with Mr. Kerr at that?—A. It must be I did, although I do not remember it.

Q. The firm of Kerr & McCord were the attorneys for the company at that time, were they not?—A. Yes; I do not know whether he examined the abstracts or not, but he saw that everything was in legal form.

Q. Well, if you do not know I won't ask you specifically.—A. I can not remember.

Q. So you do not know?—A. I can not remember of that, Mr. Higgins.

Q. In your prospectus, Mr. Haynes, which was the basis for the formation of this corporation, how much land did you contemplate the company's acquiring?—A. At least two-thirds of the land in the district which could be irrigated.

Q. That gives no idea to the committee.—A. In acres, it amounted to nearly 28,000—nearly.

Q. That was your original plan at the formation of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You acquired this 12,690 acres on the 22d of June. Why didn't you get the balance of nearly 9,000 acres at that time?—A. We did not have the money to buy it with.

Q. You say you did not have the money?—A. The company did not have the money. They got what they could with the money that was appropriated to buy land.

Q. You had, at that time, issued a call of 25 per cent of the stockholders?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you had subscribed to the 2,492 shares that was afterwards distributed?—A. Sold by subscription.

Q. Who sold the stock?—A. I had charge of the subscription list, and all of us worked on it.

Q. Who; Judge Hanford?—A. Judge Hanford and Gov. McGraw.

Q. And Judge Hanford's sons?—A. No, sir; his son was not here at that time.

Q. His brother Frank?—A. Frank and Clarence.

Q. And Gov. McGraw?—A. And Gov. McGraw.

Q. And Mr. Kerr?—A. Mr. Kerr and H. C. Winn and W. R. Rust, of Tacoma. There was a list, finally, of 130 stockholders.

Q. That is to say, the men you have named and as many others as you could get to assist in the sale of the stock were solicited to do it, and they did?—A. They did.

Q. Shortly after that the company considered the making of contracts for the power plant?—A. After they had purchased the land they contracted.

Q. They made contracts after that?—A. They made contracts to do the work; yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Plummer when the company acquired the second tract of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.?—A. Please explain what you mean by the "second tract"?

Q. Well, according to your own records, you bought three tracts of land from the Northern Pacific Railway. The first tract was 12,690 acres, on June 22, 1906. Now, is it not true that you bought, at a later time, some additional land?—A. The land was purchased—that was after I had held official position with the company.

Q. When did you cease to be an official connected with the company?—A. I was secretary for the first year only.

Q. Do you mean to say that these other two tracts of land were acquired when you were neither a trustee nor any other official of the company?—A. They were acquired when Mr. Earles was president, during the——

Q. Answer my question directly.—A. No; I was not connected with that sale, and I do not know anything about it.

Q. Were you connected with the company?—A. I had stock in the company.

Q. Were you a trustee?—A. No; I was not a trustee at that time.

Q. How much stock did you have at that time?—A. Eighty shares.

Q. What do you know about the negotiations for the purchase of the two additional tracts?—A. I do not know. I did not know there was but the one additional purchase; that is, between ten and eleven thousand acres additional.

Q. How do you happen to know that there was one additional?—A. Because I knew that Mr. Earles had purchased it when he was president of the company.

Q. My question is, What do you know about the negotiations for the purchase of that land?—A. I know that in my first negotiations with Mr. Plummer I outlined all the sections which I thought the company ought to buy; and while we never had an option on that additional land, it was later purchased.

Q. That is to say, that the later purchase was included in the negotiations which you had made with Mr. Plummer?—A. My own were not negotiations.

Q. Well, you can characterize them as you want to.—A. I did not agree with him on the prices, or anything of the sort, but I told him that I thought he ought to save them and give the company the first chance to buy them.

Q. Now, tell the committee, Mr. Haynes, what was done after the land was acquired and the contracts were made?—A. They let the contract for building the main canal and the laterals and the pipe lines; they let the contract for putting in the electric-power plant at Priests Rapids. All of it was finished inside of two years.

Q. The town was established?—A. The town site was selected and they began to sell land in 1908.

Q. What was the town?—A. The town was named after Judge Hanford—it is called Hanford to-day.

Q. What is the post office of Hanford?—A. It is Hanford at present.

Q. I notice at a meeting of the 18th of November, 1907, that Judge Hanford reported that it was impossible to secure a post office by that name, but I understand from your testimony that it was afterwards brought about.—A. There was a small post office by the same name which they succeeded in having discontinued and got the name of the post office for this place.

Q. When were the unsurveyed islands of the Columbia River acquired?—A. Immediately following the organization of the company. As I say, it took nearly a year to get our permit from the War Department at Washington.

Q. Who owned the lands and what was done in acquiring them?—A. The rocks in the middle of the rapids were unsurveyed, and to build our dams and wing dams, we had to connect up with those islands, to divert the water into the power canal. To secure our title, to make it satisfactory to the prospective bond buyers, we secured from the War Department at Washington a permit to use those islands for power and irrigation purposes.

Q. And you did get such a permit?—A. The company still has that permit; yes, sir.

Q. Who undertook to get that, Mr. Haynes?—A. Senator Piles assisted us.

Q. Did you have charge of that?—A. As secretary I attended to the correspondence.

Q. And also on the permit for the construction of the dam from the War Department, who looked after that?—A. I conducted the correspondence myself and through the representatives of this State in the Senate.

Q. Who was Mr. William Filey?—A. Filey was the owner of a ranch at the Rapids that we purchased and where now stands the power house of the company.

Q. Did he have any connection with the company as employee?—A. None whatever—he was a settler.

Q. He was there before your company?—A. He was there first and he had a very nicely improved ranch and we had to buy it.

Q. And you did buy it?—A. We bought it and paid $20,000 for it.

Q. You found some difficulty, Mr. Haynes, in financing the company?—A. We did.

Q. What was done by the trustees toward financing the company after they had sold the stock, as you related?—A. The bond issue was authorized and most of it was underwritten—$200,000 of it was underwritten.

Q. By Mr. Chilberg?—A. By prominent men and bankers here in the city.

Q. Was Mr. Chilberg one of them?—A. Mr. Chilberg subscribed to some of the bonds.

Q. And who is he?—A. He is an officer of the Scandinavian-American Bank.

Q. And what other local bankers?—A. Mr. J. W. Clise.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is the president of the Washington Trust Co.

Q. And what others?—A. Judge Thomas Burke subscribed personally, and many other stockholders.

Q. What others, if there were any others—you can refresh your recollection from any memorandum which you have?—A. I have a list of the bond subscription here, if you wish it.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like it. [Document is handed up.] Now, give me those who undertook to underwrite the issue.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were those the original subscribers?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask whether this inquiry relates to the original bond issue or to the five hundred thousand?

Mr. HIGGINS. I will ask you now, Mr. Haynes, with reference to the first bond issue of the company.

A. There has only once been one bond issue.

Q. Mr. Hughes just was talking about and discussing some other bond issue and you say there was only one.—A. There was only one.

Q. Mr. Hughes was the attorney of the company at one time, wasn't he?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I was.

Mr. HIGGINS. Are you sure about that—it is not important—but the records of the company appear to show that——

Mr. HUGHES. The reason I made the suggestion was, you asked about the company being in financial difficulties and I understood him to answer your question in regard to the original bond issue.

Mr. HIGGINS. I asked him what was done in the way of financing the company after the stock was sold and then he spoke of this bond issue. Now, I understand from the witness that there was only one bond issue; is that true?

The WITNESS. That is true; only one bond issue.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that a fact, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. There was an original bond issue, and then the company came into trouble; it was the time when I was attorney and my firm was employed about two years after its organization for a period—I don't remember how long.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, that is all disclosed by the record, I suppose.

Mr. HUGHES. During that time there was financial difficulties and additional moneys were raised.

The WITNESS. It was raised by increasing the stock and not by an additional bond issue.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who assisted in the sale of the second issue of the stock? Was the stock sold by the trustees or was it sold through brokers or by bankers, or what method was taken to dispose of the second issue of stock?

A. The stock was sold by popular subscription after we had raised nearly half of it, and a commission of 5 per cent was paid on some of the subscriptions; I do not know just how much that amounted to.

Q. When you say it was sold by popular subscription you mean that the officers and trustees and stockholders of the company solicited their friends to buy it?—A. That is what I mean; yes, sir.

Q. What was the amount of the second issue?—A. The second issue was $250,000, and a year later they increased the capital stock to $750,000.

Q. That would be the increase of $500,000.—A. An increase of $500,000.

Q. You continued, Mr. Haynes, as identified with the company until it was disposed of?—A. I was one of the last to sell out; I find that I have no interest at the present time.

Q. Who negotiated with you for the sale of your stock?—A. Parties in New York who purchased it through Mr. McCord.

Q. Of the firm of Kerr & McCord?—A. Of Kerr & McCord; yes, sir.

Q. Who were the parties who purchased it?—A. The parent company is the American Power & Light Co.

Q. Of New York City?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are now owning and operating the company?—A. They own and operate the company, and they own all the stock.

Q. What attorneys did the company employ during the time that you were one of the trustees?—A. Kerr & McCord.

Q. What others?—A. Some work was done by A. E. Hanford and Mr. Hughes, I believe, but Kerr & McCord were——

Q. And what others?—A. And Mr. Howe—James B. Howe.

Q. Of the firm of Piles & Howe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What others?—A. That is all that I can remember.

Q. And those gentlemen were also stockholders, were they not?—A. All of them.

Q. Judge Hanford, during that time that you served with him on the board of trustees, always attended, didn't he?—A. He was more interested than anybody and never missed a meeting.

Q. He was active both in the development of the company and in the financing of it?—A. He was.

Q. He assisted in the sale of its securities?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As well as in the acquiring of the lands which you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you happen to know whether Judge Hanford was the manager of the company?—A. I think he was temporarily manager while Mr. Gorman was East at one time; Mr. Gorman was the second president that we had.

Q. And was his son, E. C. Hanford, actively engaged in prosecuting the work of the company?—A. He was the first manager; he served a year.

Q. Who succeeded him?—A. Mr. T. J. Gorman was elected president and general manager the second year.

Q. Who succeeded him?—A. Mr. Michael Earles was president and general manager for two years.

Q. Michael Earles lives here?—A. Yes.

Q. In Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is a contractor and lumberman. He built the works at Priests Rapids for the company.

Q. You mean by a lumberman that he operates a mill or sells timberlands?—A. He has operated a mill; he is now a large timber owner in this State.

Q. At time of the organization of the company you had options on the leasehold interest in the State lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you stated that those were the only options that you had except on some very much smaller tracts?—A. Except the Filey's land at the Rapids.

Q. So that the State lands and the Filey's land was not Northern Pacific Railroad Co. land; you did not have an option on the Northern Pacific Railway land at that time?—A. No, sir; we did not.

Q. Did you ever have one on the Northern Pacific Railway Co.'s land?—A. No, sir; not until we finally consummated the contract.

Q. The contract was not preceded by any agreement to transfer, though?—A. It was not.

Q. How does the price, if you know, which you were able to get the land at from the Northern Pacific Railway Co. compare with the price which other irrigation companies have had to pay for similar lands in that section?—A. Under many projects the land has been sold for a less price. I do not know of any irrigation projects where land has been purchased at prices exceeding $20 an acre.

Q. Well, had there been some project where a greater price was paid than in this?—A. Only this: I know of a price of $40 an acre having been paid at Richland; that is the highest amount I have known the company to pay—a company to pay.

Q. What company paid that?—A. The Richland—now, just a minute—it was the Lower Yakima Irrigation Co.

Q. And when was that acquired?—A. I think it was in the year 1906.

Q. How much land was then acquired?—A. About 2,000 acres.

Q. Now, this paper which you have handed me, entitled "Bond subscription," is the list of those who subscribed to the bonds of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think that ought to be marked as an exhibit.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 78."

Q. You acquired, or the company did, 21,450.76 acres of land from the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.; do you happen to remember the number of acres?—A. That is about right—the total amount purchased, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. That is about right.

Q. For $1,833,300.03.—A. The records will show. As I remember, that is the consideration.

Q. These bonds were issued and sold, were they not?—A. All of them.

Q. The entire issue?—A. The entire issue.

Q. And sold as the result of subscriptions which you handed to me?—A. Yes.

Q. And the names which appear upon that list took the company bonds and paid the money for them?—A. All of them purchased the bonds. That is not the entire list, but the rest will show later. That is the first underwriting, I think. That is a little over $200,000.

Q. The second underwriting was undertaken by Mr. Chilberg.—A. No, sir; Mr. Earles—his bank took the most of it.

Q. What was his bank?—A. The American Trust & Savings Bank.

Q. Does the contract made for the second issue appear in the minutes of the company—do you happen to know?—A. It must be, but it was during Mr. Earles's administration and he consummated the sale of the rest of the bonds.

Q. Well, I will call your attention to the entry in which it appears that Mr. Chilberg was undertaking to take care of the second issue, although it may have been the first.—A. Mr. Chilberg took the amount he subscribed for and no more.

Q. Is it not a fact that he undertook to take care of the entire issue?—A. No. It may be that he made an effort, but he did not succeed—several did that I know of.

Q. Is it not a fact that he conferred with the trustees about taking the bond issue?—A. I do not remember that he did, Mr. Higgins.

Q. And made a report to the trustees?—A. I do not remember it.

Q. It is my recollection, Mr. Haynes, that that is the fact; and if I can find it or ascertain just where it appears in the record I will call your attention to it—now, who was Mr. H. C. Henry?—A. A railroad contractor that built the Milwaukee railroad.

Q. Built the Milwaukee railroad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Lives here in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What bank is he connecteed with?—A. The Bank of Commerce and the Metropolitan Bank.

Q. It appears that he also undertook to assist the company in financing its capital stock?—A. Mr. Henry and Mr. Earles and Mr. Rust, of Tacoma, were the principal subscribers; when we increased the capital stock they took the most of it.

Q. That was underwritten by them, you mean, they agreed to pay the company a certain price and dispose of the stock themselves?—A. Of the balance of the $500,000 of second issue, they took the most of it.

Q. If you can state—and you may have this if you wish [handing book to witness], now answer if you can, if it was as the result of this resolution—I am reading from the minutes of August 3, 1908. [Reading:]

The following resolution was offered by C. H. Hanford:

"Moved, That the board of directors accept the proposition made by Mr. H. C. Henry to take the entire issue of increased stock amounting to $500,000 at the price of 60 cents, on or before the 1st day of September, 1908, on condition that Mr. Henry loan to the company $500,000 on bonds of the company to the amount of $10,000 as collateral security; and that the committee be appointed to negotiate with Mr. Henry to allow other stockholders to take part of this issue at the same price that is paid by him and to such amount as they may desire, not exceeding to any one stockholder an amount equal to his present holding of stock in the company; and that the president and secretary call a meeting of the stockholders of this company before the 1st day of September or as soon as such meeting can be held after Mr. Henry has signified his intention to take up the option, to ratify the contract."

Do you recall that resolution?—A. Yes, sir; but it was not carried out on those lines. A different deal was made later on.

Q. And Judge Hanford was a committee to carry out the later deal as appears, I should judge, from the minutes of this same meeting. [Reading:]

Said motion being duly seconded by E. S. McCord, was carried by the unanimous vote of the trustees present. President Gorman then appointed C. H. Hanford and E. S. McCord to act with himself as a committee named in the foregoing resolution.

A. That is true, they worked it together.

Q. But that particular resolution which I read was not carried out?—A. Was not carried out, although they later sold that stock and Mr. Henry was one of the largest purchasers.

Q. Judge Hanford continued his relations with the company up to the time that the American Light & Power Co. purchased the entire company?—A. He was a trustee during all that time.

Q. He was also a stockholder?—A. Yes, sir; he had 10 shares of stock.

Q. He never had any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you would not say that as against the records of the company, would you, Mr. Haynes—that is your recollection of it, as I understand you?—A. To my recollection that is all he had—that was his original subscription.

Q. Are you able to tell how much his son had?—A. I don't think he ever had any.

Q. I refer to E. C. Hanford.—A. He was not one of the original subscribers and I do not think he ever held any stock.

Q. Is A. E. his brother or son?—A. He is his brother.

Q. Did he have 50 shares?—A. That's right.

Q. And you held 80?—A. That is right.

Q. Hanford & De Veuve—is that the stationery company?—A. No, that is Frank Hanford—that is the insurance company.

Q. That is his brother?—A. That is another brother.

Q. And who is C. Hanford?—A. That is Clarence Hanford, of the firm of Lowman & Hanford.

Q. And what relation is he?—A. A brother.

Q. What other relations of Judge Hanford besides those you have mentioned, and yourself, held either stock or bonds in the Hanford Irrigation Co.?—A. I can not think of any others than those we have given.

Q. Judge Hanford was also a subscriber to the bond issue, wasn't he, in addition to his stock?—A. Yes.

Q. And he assisted in the sale of those bonds with the others?—A. Yes, sir; he was always——

Q. He was always active and enthusiastic?—A. He was always enthusiastic over the development scheme.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Did the company ever hold any options from the Northern Pacific Railway Co., Mr. Haynes?—A. Not properly speaking, options—they never held any options.

Q. Contracts of sale?—A. Contracts of sale; yes, contracts of sale which resulted in negotiations.

Q. I understood you to say in the early part of your testifying that the conditions of the Northern Pacific Railway Co.'s contract did not appear in the deed which the Northern Pacific Railway Co. made; did I get that right?—A. I said I did not think they did, because the terms says that the land must be watered and the money spent for the improvement of the irrigation before they get the deed—before the railroad company gives the deed.

Q. Well, is that why you believed that the condition did not appear in the deed; that it had to be complied with before the delivery of the deed—is that right?—A. That is my reason; yes, sir.

Q. As I recollect, you testified—you say that Judge Hanford told you only once that he had called on Mr. Plummer, and further, that that was the only call that he had ever told you of his making on Mr. Plummer—did anyone else ever tell you that Judge Hanford had at any other time called on Mr. Plummer; in other words, was that the only call by Judge Hanford on Mr. Plummer that you ever heard of in any way?—A. Well, that was what I intended to say.

Q. That is a fact, is it?—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. Where were these second and third tracts, or, as you seem to remember it, the second tract, which was purchased from the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?—A. It was higher land, above the first ditch.

Q. Which side of the river was it on?—A. The same side of the river.

Mr. Hughes. How?

The Witness. The same side of the river, and higher land above the ditch.

Mr. McCoy. Do you mean on the same side as the 8,000-acre tract?

A. Yes.

Q. You say there had previously been a post office named Hanford?—A. Yes; a post office here in the suburbs had taken that name.

Q. The suburbs of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir; but after extending the city limits they discontinued that post office and we used the name over there.

Q. What was sold by the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. to the American Light & Power Co.?—A. The stock of the company.

Q. You mean the certificates of stock?—A. They took all the certificates of stock—all the entire issue.

Q. Now, we seem to have some books here which seem to have in them a lot of cancelled certificates which I think the committee understood were those which were surrendered at the time of the transfer to the American Light & Power Co.; is that right—those are the ones?—A. I don't think so—I think those are just transfers. I think they still hold the original certificates.

Q. Did the American Light & Power Co. pay the same price to each stockholder?—A. No.

Q. For one share of stock?—A. No; but it did not vary very much. The largest owners of the Hanford stock took in exchange stock in the parent company.

Q. That is, took stock in the American Light & Power Co.?—A. Yes, sir. Others had the option to do the same or to take the cash; and that was finally consummated; they bought the last piece here less than a year ago, and the average—they paid from 85 cents to par value.

Q. What did Judge Hanford do with his stock?—A. He turned his in to the American Light & Power Co. and, I think, took stock in that company.

Q. What became of the bonds?—A. Some of them are still outstanding.

Q. Did the American Light & Power Co. undertake to buy them in?—A. They have not bought all yet—they have purchased some of them.

Q. They are doing that as you understand it—they are endeavoring to buy in all the bonds?—A. They are not offering anything for them now; they are evidently going to take them all in when they get ready.

Q. Now, what is this document which you have in your hand?—A This is Exhibit No. 78

Q. Being a list of those who took and paid for bonds?—A. A partial list.

Q. A partial list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what was the date of the underwriting, regardless of when the money was paid?—A. $200,000 was underwritten before they started in on the work, and that was 1906, in the winter of 1906.

McCutcheon, physician, $1,000; Ellis Fletcher, real estate, $1,000; A. C. McGinnis, real estate, $1,000; William Clark, merchant, $1,000; G. W. Bullard, architect, $500; L D. Campbell, physician, $2,000; G. C. Schlump, merchant, $1,000; George J. Smith, $500.

Q What was he?—A I don't remember. R. J. Davis, merchant, $1,000; J M. Ashton, attorney, $1,000; J. J. Totts, capitalist, $5,000; F. H Huggins, capitalist, $10,000.

Q. That completes the list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you any list of those who subsequently became bondholders?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know where we can get that?—A. Mr. Earles's bank bought the rest of the bonds—I do not know whether he bought them in the bank's name or not.

Q. You mentioned one name here of somebody who was connected with the Milwaukee railroad, who was that?—A. The first one, Mr. Flewelling—he is now the land commissioner of the Milwaukee.

Q. What is the name of the railroad?—A. The Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound.

Q. Does that road run into Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From Milwaukee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or from Chicago?—A. From Chicago.

Q. Was he a stockholder?—A. He had $5,000 worth of stock; yes, sir.

Q. And is there any other, or was there any other railroad official or employee who was a stockholder?—A. No one except Mr. H. C. Henry, the man who built the Milwaukee railroad.

Q. Was he connected with the Milwaukee road except that he practically built it?—A. Not in an official way, except as a contractor.

Q. Was all the stock of the company paid for in cash?—A. The first issue was all paid for in cash at par.

Q. And how about the second issue?—A. The second issue was sold at 60 cents.

Q. You said that the Northern Pacific Railway Co., through Mr. Plummer, stated that it would not sell the 8,000 acres, or any acres on the east side of the river—what led it to change its mind in that respect?—A. They never said they would sell it to us—we applied to buy it.

Q. Well, wasn't it sold to you later?—A. No; that was not the land that was sold to us later. The land that was sold was on the same side and above the present canal.

Q. Where was the land that was bought in the first instance from the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; some 12,000 acres?—A. That is all under the first canal that was constructed.

Mr. DORR. Which side of the river?

A. On the west side.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, the land that was bought on the east side of the river subsequently, the second or third purchase, whichever it was, was included in Mr. Plummer's refusal in the beginning.

A. No, sir; the company never yet have bought any on the east side of the river.

Q. I misunderstood you then—I thought you said they had bought on the east side of the river.—A. That resolution there gave you that idea; but it never went into effect. The resolution was for to try to purchase it because they thought the company could use it in the future and it was a fine body of land, but the railroad would not sell it to us and it was afterwards decided it was inexpedient to purchase it.

Q. You are certain, Mr. Haynes, that all this stock was paid for in cash by the people who appeared to be original stockholders in the company.—A. It was all paid for in cash at par, with the exception of in some cases a 5 per cent commission was paid.

Q. But regardless of the price at which it was sold, it was all paid for in cash by the parties.—A. It was all paid for in cash by the parties. There was no promotion stock. Nobody got any promotion stock.

Q. You paid for your own in cash?—A. I did.

Q. Did you draw any salary from the company?—A. I was paid for my first year's work in assembling the assets and in helping to organize the company, and after that I never held any salaried position.

Q. And what did you get for that?—A. $5,000.

Q. Do you know when that was paid to you?—A. I don't know just the date.

Q. I mean about?—A. It was paid in the winter of 1905.

Q. Do you know whether Anna M. Chilberg is the wife of the Mr. Chilberg about whom you have testified as being a bondholder?—A. I do not know the relation. He bought some for a sister, I think for an investment—he bought some bonds—I don't think it was his wife.

Q. I mean the stock?—A. I don't think—I can not tell you the relationship, Mr. McCoy, of Anna Chilberg to J. E. Chilberg.

Q. The Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railroad Co. was an owner of 50 shares of stock, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; that was in Mr.

Flewelling's name and afterwards they transferred it to the name of the company.

Q. Do you know when that was acquired?—A. They were one of the first subscribers.

Q. Who is F. M. Crawford—that name appears here in the list of stockholders as of July 1, 1909.

Q. What is the amount, Mr. McCoy?

Q. Ten shares.—A. That is one name that I don't remember—I don't remember who that was.

Q. Who is F. R. Hill, who appears to own 50 shares?—A. He is a physician in Tacoma.

Q. What is Hill's cereal company, which also appears to own 10 shares?—A. That is a concern in Tacoma—run by a brother of this Dr. Hill.

Q. Who is James Reid, 20 shares?—A. I don't remember him, I think he lived in Tacoma.

Q. Do you know whether he is an attorney or not?—A. I think not—if he was I think I would know it.

Q. Who is David Hill, who seems to own 10 shares?—A. I can not remember those names.

Q. Is he a lawyer in Tacoma?—A. I think that there must be—there are some names there that I don't know—some subscribers I don't know—I can't remember ever having met them.

Q. Who is John S. Winn?—A. He is an army officer.

Q. Where does he live?—A. Well, he was stationed in Alaska the last that I heard of him.

Q. Is that the name of one of the receivers of the fisheries companies, John S. Winn?—A. No, sir; he was an Army officer stationed at Fort Lawton at the time he made that subscription.

Q. What is the Independent Improvement Co., 10 shares?—A. It is a company which McClure & McClure held their investments—they are their attorneys.

Q. The attorneys in this city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did they become subscribers?—A. They were among the first subscribers.

Mr. Higgins. Mr. Haynes, I hand you what was given to the committee by Mr. Kerr as the first stock book of the company, which does not appear to be dated until some months after the stock was authorized and the sale of which was solicited—do you happen to know whether there is any other stock book than that—I mean before that one.

A. None before this.

Q. Were there temporary certificates issued?—A. Temporary receipts were given as payments were collected.

Q. And as the stock was fully paid permanent certificates were issued beginning with the book which you hold in your hand.—A. That's right.

Q. Do you know whether or not the corporation, the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—whether its corporate existence is still maintained?—A. It is.

Q. Is has an office in Seattle?—A. Portland, now.

Q. Portland, Oreg.?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who the present officers are?—A. Guy W. Talbot is president, H. M. Walthew, vice president and manager—I don't know the names of the other officials or officers.

Q. Well, I think there is a young man in the room who can furnish the information, as I am informed.

The WITNESS. I will refer you to Mr. Walthew for that.

Q. Did all the stockholders of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. that were associated with you as stockholders sell out about the same time?—A. Not at the same time; it took about a little over a year to consummate the deal before they gathered in all the stock.

Q. The American Light & Power Co., as I understand it, eventually acquired all the stock.—A. It finally acquired all of it.

Q. So the present officers of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. are the representatives of the American Light & Power Co.?—Yes, sir.

Q. Acting for them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McCOY:

Q. What part, if any, did Judge Hanford take in bringing about the sale of the stock of the Hanford Power & Irrigation Co. to the American Light & Power Co.?—A. He had nothing to do with it.

Q. What part, if any, did he take in inducing stockholders to make the sale or transfer?—A. All that I know is that he got up at the annual meeting and said that he favored it and was going to turn over his stock.

Q. When did Richard A. Ballinger become a stockholder in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. He was one of the first subscribers.

Q. What is the firm of M. Francis Ashton, of Tacoma?—Q. I think he has an office of his own. I don't know of any firm.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that the witness is mistaken. I think that is the wife of James M. Ashton, as I am informed by Mr. Walthew; and I think that is correct.

Witness excused. Whereupon a recess is taken until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

JULY 16, 1912.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

MANLY B. HAYNES resumed the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with Mr. Haynes, Mr. Hughes.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Haynes, the property of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. is situated how far, or was at the time of the organization of the corporation or the acquisition of its properties, from any railroads?—A. The lower end of the project was 35 miles from the Northern Pacific Railroad; the northern end was a little more than 60 miles from the Great Northern. At the time we started it they were the only two railroads, and the district was between the two.

Q. And what is the length of the project; that is to say, from Priest Rapids to the lowermost region, which would embrace lands acquired and owned by the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. A stretch of about 25 miles.

Q. The pumping station, however, was some miles below the power station, wasn't it?—A. Sixteen miles from the power house.

Q. And the lands lay between there and the 25-mile limit south?—A. Yes.

Q. Or a distance of about 10 miles?—A. We had some lands above the pumping station. The stretch included in the irrigable lands was about 25 miles.

Q. But there were some lands, a few lands, above near Priest Rapids?—A. Yes.

Q. You spoke of other lands that had been purchased at a higher price for irrigation purposes, at Richland. Where is that with reference to the Northern Pacific road and the Yakima Valley?—A. It is at the mouth of the Yakima River, and the water right is right across the river from Kennewick; they take it out at the same rapids. It was started—there was a small ditch in there, but it was promoted a year later than our scheme.

Q. The question I asked you still miss, I think, Mr. Haynes, and that was how near that land was to the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. Within 8 miles.

Q. All of it?—A. The farthest of it; some of it was within 4 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Q. And that was a known or tried district at that time, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are some districts that are not successful under irrigation and others that are, I believe, in this country; is that true? I mean for fruit purposes.—A. Some places the land is more desirable than others, and you might say that all irrigation schemes are unsuccessful. I make that including the Government schemes. They are not successful from a financial standpoint.

Q. You need not go into that question. I had reference to this question, whether certain places along the Yakima River lands had been tested under irrigation and found to be good fruit lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also along the Wenatchee River?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And other lands in other localities, although in the same valleys, tested and found to be unsuccessful?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. You mentioned two railroads and said they were the only two there at the time. Has there since been another one built?—A. The Milwaukee road has been built since we started that scheme.

Q. And how close to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. property does that come?—A. It crosses the river 11 miles above the power station.

Q. That is the nearest it comes?—A. And they are building at present—building a branch into the district, which is the first railroad that we will have.

Q. That is right into the district of the Irrigation & Power Co.'s property?—A. They are planning to build clear to Hanford; yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether or not there was any correspondence between the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. The deal for the purchase of the land was mostly consummated by correspondence.

Q. With whom in the railroad company?—A. Mr. Plummer's office.

Q. In Tacoma?—A. He is the land commissioner at Tacoma.

Q. You testified that Mr. Plummer that contract would be drawn up, but that it would have to be ratified by the president or some high official of the Northern Pacific. Do you know what official, if any, did ratify it?—A. It was referred to Thomas Cooper. He was then the land commissioner at St. Paul; and I think he conferred with President Elliot about it.

Q. And then the contract was signed?—A. Then it came back approved; yes, sir.

Q. Well, did the Hanford Co. have any correspondence with the St. Paul office of the——A. (Interrupting.) Not directly.

Q. (Continuing.) Or the land office of the——A. (Interrupting.) Not directly.

Q. Do you know whether Judge Hanford saw any of the officials or employees of the Northern Pacific except Mr. Plummer?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Well, have you heard that he did?—A. No, sir; I can't find out that—the correspondence was mostly with the company direct, and they dealt with us just as they would with any other company after being satisfied that the money had been raised and we were responsible and could put in the improvments. Not until then would they sell us those lands.

Q. Well, was there any correspondence between the Hanford Co. and the Northern Pacific Co., if you know?—A. None that I know of, except through Mr. Plummer. We made our application to him, and further than that I don't know of any other correspondence; and if there was, I would have known of it, I think.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Plummer has to refer all contracts to the St. Paul office, or are there any contracts which he is authorized to consummate without reference?—A. Yes; I think he can make sales on the schedule price, but for large deals like this I think he always get the approval of his chief, Mr. Cooper.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. How much power did your company propose to develop?—A. The machinery that was put in first consisted of two 900-kilowatt generators, which is about 2,750 horsepower. The capacity of the canal was such that we could increase that to get possibly 8,000 horsepower. We bought the machinery for two units first, and that was ample for—and its disposition, it is ample to furnish power and water for all the land that has been developed so far and it has operated very—has operated continuously ever since we installed it.

Q. What use is made of that power?—A. The power is used to operate electric pumps 16 miles distant. They raise the water 50 feet into a main canal, and from there a distributing system carries it some 16 miles down the river and irrigates land under that system—under that canal.

Q. Do you also furnish light to the people in the locality?—A. They have their transmission lines all through the district; it furnishes light and power for all uses. The plant has been a success, as far as the development shows and proves. This is the fourth year that it has operated, and for the settler who had improved land under it the plant has furnished ample water, and results show that it is a success as far as the original scheme was carried out.

Q. Well, the maximum power in the Priest Rapids, as controlled by this company, has not been developed yet.—A. Only a small fraction of it.

Q. And such power as you did generate there was used, and is being used, to furnish power for the pumps to raise the water and to furnish, in addition, lights and power to the people in that vicinity?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom did you have the contracts for the power besides those, the purchasers of the land?—A. You mean for the sale of the power?

Q. Yes.—A. We sold it to nobody but irrigators and settlers in the district, up to the time our company controlled it. The present company, however, have extended out transmission lines to different parts of the State and are selling it for industrial purposes.

Q. That is the American Light & Power Co.?—A. The American Power & Light Co.

Q. The power is conveyed from the Hanford plant to their transmission line and then distributed?—A. Yes; this Priest Rapids power is just one of, I think, four operating power plants that they own, and they are all tied up under one transmission system that extends from Moses Lake, in the Beverly district, on the north, to Pendleton, Oreg., and Walla Walla, on the south, and Yakima district, all of——

Q. (Interrupting.) All, however, plants in the State of Washington?—A. The valley is all included in this State. They have extended, however, their transmission lines to Pendleton, Oreg.

Q. Do you happen to know whether or not they have plants on the Pacific slope outside of Washington?—A. None this side of the Cascade Mountains.

Q. Do they also operate irrigation plants in connection with the power distribution?—A. I think more power is sold for irrigation purposes than any other.

Q. But do they make contracts for electric power?—A. All the——

Q. (Continuing.) Apart from irrigation contracts?—A. All the cities in the valley are served with this power; they are lighted with it. What mills there are there are operated by this company.

Q. What mills there are in Hanford?—A. I mean—there are none at Hanford, but there are at Yakima and Kennewick and Walla Walla.

Q. Are there any industries at all at Hanford?—A. Not yet.

Q. And in contemplation?—A. Nothing but development of the land. There are, I presume, over a thousand settlers in there now.

Q. Did you, while connected with the company, endeavor to get any industries located there?—A. Well, we didn't get that far. We had troubles enough in financing our company and getting it started.

Q. But did you try to?—A. I didn't get that far; no, we didn't—we realized that we could not do that without a railroad, and the next thing was to get a railroad.

Q. So you didn't even consider it?—A. We never tried to sell power for industrial purposes.

Q. That is hardly what I asked.—A. You asked me if we expected to get industries at Hanford.

Q. Exactly.—A. No; we didn't, because we realized that we had to get the railroad first and thought something would come later.

Q. Did the board of trustees never consider, as far as you know, the matter of getting industries to locate there?—A. I don't think they ever did. I don't know of anything of the kind. I know it is impracticable.

Q. If they did you did not know of it?—A. I didn't know of it.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. Did the company acquire from the Federal Government anything in the nature of a monopoly there?—A. No, sir. They acquired this permit to use the unsurveyed islands in the rapids, which permit was revocable any time that the Government wished to improve the navigation, and it was the same kind of a permit that a company or railroad has to get when they build a bridge across a navigable stream—revocable at any time that the Government saw fit, and that is all the title they have to-day.

Q. Have they, by virtue of their ownership of land, acquired any monopoly—practical monopoly—in the power?—A. They have not. They do not own the land across the river.

Q. Is the land across the river just as available for a power plant as——A. (Interrupting.) It may not be so cheap or convenient, but it is possible to develop much more power by taking and filing and appropriating water on the other side. We chose the side that was the most economical and within the means of the company.

Q. Is there anything like a waterfall there or is it just——A. (Interrupting.) A total fall of 78 feet in about 9 miles—about 8½ miles. It is the breaking of the river through the Saddle Mountain Range. The greatest fall is in the last 2½ miles, and that is where we built the plant. The possible energy of that stream has been variously estimated by the Government engineers as being something over 100 horsepower—I mean 100,000 horsepower—but our scheme has used only a fraction of that.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Mr. Hughes, who have you here now that we can call?

Mr. Hughes. I believe you wanted to recall Mr. Kerr this evening. He came for that purpose.

The Chairman. Oh, yes; Mr. Kerr is here.

James A. Kerr, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. Mr. Kerr, you were one of the signers of the articles of association in December, 1905, which contemplated at that time the formation of what was then known as the Priest Rapids Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. I was. I drew the articles.

Q. You drew the articles?—A. I did, yes.

Q. You were present when they were signed?—A. I rather think I was. I think I was one of the—possibly one of the incorporators; I am not certain.

Q. Your recollection is that they were signed in the office of Judge Hanford in the Federal building?—A. Well, gentlemen, I have been trying to think where the first meeting was held. Possibly it was at Judge Hanford's office in the Federal building. I never heard of the proposition until—I think it was the day before this meeting was called.

Q. Who called it to your attention then?—A. Well, it was either Judge Hanford or Mr. Haynes, and I am inclined to think it was Judge Hanford asked me if I would not attend the meeting; and at that meeting, when we got there——

Q. (Interrupting.) And told you then, Mr. Kerr, what the meeting was for?—A. In a very general way only. The conversation was very brief. I didn't have any idea of just what it was until the evening the meeting was held, when Judge Hanford made a statement in a sort of informal gathering of some twenty, or between twenty and thirty, I should think, gentlemen, a good many of whom I knew and some few from Tacoma whom I did not know.

Q. Well, who were those that you knew?—A. I think from Takoma there was Mr. Todd and Mr. Cover, whom I had never met up to that time; Mr. Fogg, whom I knew; Dr. Hill, I think. I don't remember the names of the other gentlemen from Tacoma. From Seattle there was Gov. McGraw, C. J. Smith, Mr. Burch, Mr. Owens, I rather think Senator Frink, Mr. Haynes, Judge Hanford, possibly some of Judge Hanford's brothers, I am not certain, and there were—I can't recall the names of all of them. I have tried to remember them, but I don't remember all of them.

Q. Frank Hanford was there, wasn't he?—A. I think he was. I could not be sure about it, but I rather think he was. I think Clarence Hanford was there, at least.

Q. Well, at that meeting, Mr. Kerr, were the general purposes and objects of the corporation explained?—A. I can remember this, gentlemen, very distinctly, about that meeting: When we got to that meeting Mr. Owens, an eminent engineer of quite wide reputation, was there, as I remember it, with a survey—a blue-print map upon which there was located the proposed high and low line ditch, and he had also the document which I handed to the committee or handed to counsel to hand to the committee, which was an estimate of the cost of the installation of this power pumping plant, the construction of the main-line ditches.

Q. You mean something in the nature of a prospectus?—A. It was sort of a prospectus. I suppose you gentlemen have it. I found it among my papers and I——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, I don't know that we have.

Mr. McCoy. What we had was a black and white print of some kind.

A. Well, I have brought to you gentlemen all the papers that I could find, and I handed to Mr. Hughes a sort of a prospectus; but if you will follow me just a moment I will state what occurred. That was the first knowledge I had of what the real enterprise was.

Mr. Higgins. Who explained it then?

A. Judge Hanford, as I remember, and he explained it in about this way—I can remember some of the things he said: He went on to state to the gentlemen who were assembled there that over at Priest Rapids, or below Priest Rapids, there was a valley containing some 26,000 or 28,000 acres of land that could be readily irrigated from the Columbia River; that this tract of land was located at an altitude of about 400 feet above sea level; that it was in a sort of a cul de sac; that the Rattlesnake Hills were on one side and White Bluffs—large high bluffs—on the other side of the Columbia River; that the temperature had been kept by a farmer who resided there in the valley. And I was over there once, I remember we stayed——

Q. (Interrupting.) When were you over there?—A. I was over there, I think it was in November. Mr. Hughes was with me.

Q. Of what year?—A. I think it must have been 1905, although I may be mistaken about that. At least it was before any work was done.

Q. If it was November, 1905, that would be the month before this meeting when the articles of incorporation were signed?—A. Well, then, gentlemen, it must have been later than that, because——

Q. Was it before or after this meeting in Judge Hanford's office?—A. Oh, it was long after that meeting, because that is the first time I ever heard of it. He told me that the temperature that was kept there, or at least that the temperature was kept there during the winter for 15 or 16 years and showed that the thermometer in that little valley had never reached zero; it was a very temperate climate in there. That while the snowfall was quite heavy on the hills around Yakima and the surrounding hills that it was a rare thing that any snow fell in there. That the land was peculiarly adapted to fruit raising. I remember that he contended that it was as good fruit land as that at Yakima or that at Wenatchee. He also stated that there could be developed, with great economy, power, by a diversion of the water on the falls—on the rapids—I think 30,000 horsepower was the estimate that was made. I remember he also stated the fall from the head of the rapids down to where the power plant would be built. My recollection now is that was stated eighteen to twenty-three or four feet, I don't remember just the exact amount.

I remember that he explained to the gentlemen who were assembled there that in his judgment and in the judgment of engineers that that work of reclamation and the development of that power could be perfected within a limit of $500,000; that when it was perfected, that by extending a transmission line down the Columbia River there were large areas of rich volcanic ash land along the river that could be supplied with water by pumping, and that the excess power that would be used—that developed under this plan could be used down the river as far down as Walla Walla, I think, about 110 miles, or something like that. I know that Judge Hanford contended that by the expenditure of this amount of money it could not only be invested profitably, but that we could build a sort of a new inland empire along the Columbia River by the reclamation of lands.

Q. This was all explained at the meeting?—A. That was all explained at this meeting. That may not be very material, gentlemen, but that was all gone into. Well, there was a sort of an informal discussion there. My recollection——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you concluded Judge Hanford's explanation of the proposition?—A. Well, I have not stated all that he said. I can say this, gentlemen, that he was very enthusiastic over the far-reaching possibilities of the development.

Q. What did he say, Mr. Kerr, after discussing the temperature and other things that you have mentioned, as to the acquiring of the land?—A. I remember that it was explained at that meeting—and I having had to do with securing our rights from the War Department, and so on—it was all verified later—that there were a large number of leases that had been executed by the State of Washington to various parties. I remember that Todd & Cover had a number of these leases. I remember that Mr. Haynes had some of those leases; that a man by the name of Curtis had some of those leases; Dr. Raymond, a surgeon and physician of this city, I think had one of those leases; and that we could acquire those leases, and I learned afterwards that these gentlemen who held these leases were the ones that caused this preliminary survey to have been made and preliminary estimate to have been made.

Q. But you did not expect, in the development of the company, to rely upon acquiring those leasehold interests——A. Not alone.

Q. (Continuing.) And afterwards get lands from the State of Washington, did you?—A. Not alone, gentlemen. Judge Hanford stated also that there could be acquired—I think every other section probably through there belonged to the Northern Pacific, that was all within——

Q. (Interposing.) Was the matter of acquiring Northern Pacific lands discussed at the first meeting?—A. I think it was mentioned at the first meeting that those lands could be acquired. I don't think the price at which they could be acquired was discussed at all, but that it was possible to acquire them. I understood further at that first meeting——

Q. (Interrupting.) But, Mr. Kerr——A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Mr. Kerr, the statement was made that the proposition could be financed for $500,000, you say?—A. My recollection—I am speaking entirely——

Q. Is that true?—A. Yes; that is my recollection of it. But I was going to supplement that by saying to you gentlemen that my recollection is now, speaking from memory, that the irrigation engineer's estimate of the entire cost was possibly $20,000 less than that.

Q. But that was Judge Hanford's estimate of the amount of money that would be needed?—A. Yes.

Q. To perfect this development?—A. Yes, sir; and I have an idea that was based on this estimate. Have you that estimate, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. What is it?

A. Did you give the estimate that I gave you, of Mr. Owens, to the committee?

Mr. HUGHES. I gave all the papers you handed me immediately to the committee; I passed them right up.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, I have no doubt that we have them, but I don't seem to have it before me now. I have no doubt that we did receive it and it is among these papers on my desk now.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. But, Mr. Kerr, in preparing for the incorporation of a project of that sort, and in making estimates of costs which are worth anything, it would be very necessary to know something about the price at which the land could be acquired, wouldn't it?—A. Now, I am not certain whether that included the price of the land or not. It certainly would, if that included the price of the land.

Q. That would be an essential part of the cost?—A It would.

Q (Continuing) Of an undertaking of that kind?—A Yes; no doubt, if that estimate included the purchase price of the land, and I suppose the estimate of Mr. Owens would indicate to you whether it did or not

Q Well, the facts are that Mr. Owens's maps were maps of land—A Yes Well, they showed, of course, the location of the land; the maps showed the location of the ditches.

Q. Do you remember whether they showed all the lands which were subsequently acquired by the company?—A I suppose so; I think they would, because they—I would think they would necessarily do so.

Q Have you repeated all the statements that you desire to make as to the first meeting?—A. Oh, substantially all that I remember now. In connection with the land, I would like to say, Mr Higgins, that I went to my office to-day and looked through all of my letter files, letter-press copy books, for the purpose of being able to inform the committee with reference to the inquiry you made the other day about the question that was raised about the title Those lands of the Northern Pacific were all a part of the original Northern Pacific land grant. I stated to the committee the other day that I thought the question was raised with reference to the sufficiency of the satisfaction of one of the trust deeds I was unable to find——

Q. (Interrupting) One of the trust deeds?—A One of the trust deeds secured an issue of bonds on the Northern Pacific lands In the chain of title of the property there were put upon the Northern Pacific lands after the land grant and during the building and operation of the Northern Pacific, as I remember it, four different mortgages or trust deeds. I had purchased, with three other gentlemen, a large amount of Northern Pacific land in 1902, and in examining the title at that time Mr Newcomb, an attorney in this city, who was then a clerk in our office, had discovered what he regarded as a serious defect in the form of one of those satisfactions. I remember distinctly now that at the time that record was made and I had learned that the——

Q (Interrupting) What record are you referring to now?—A The record in the minute book that shows that the question of the title of the Northern Pacific lands was referred to me personally.

Q. That is to say, you are referring to the report as to which the minutes of the corporation show a certain legal question?—A That is the one.

Q. The acquiring of the land of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. was referred to you and that you made a report upon it?—A Yes Now, I was trying to find, gentlemen, that report I thought it would be in my letter-press copy book, but in thinking it over I remember distinctly that the question that was raised—that I raised in the meeting and caused that to be referred to me, grew out of the fact that we had had discussion and, as I remember it now, I procured a subsequent instrument of release for some 30,000 acres that four or five or six of us purchased on the same side of the river about 50 miles south, in 1902, and that I went over to Tacoma and talked to Mr Plummer, the land agent of the Northern Pacific Railway, and he satisfied me while in Tacoma that all of that issue of bonds which were issued under Henry Villard had been retired, and while I have been unable to find the copy of the record, if it was a written report, I know I reported that the title to the lands was unclouded anyhow. I wanted to help the committee get that matter straightened up, and hence I made those efforts to enlighten you in reference to that record. But that, I am sure, is the explanation.

Q. You were the attorney for the company?—A. We were attorneys——

Q. (Interrupting) And drew up the articles of incorporation?—A. Yes; we were attorneys for two years Then I retired from the board of directors, and subsequently, I think the next year, Mr. Hughes's firm were attorneys, and we then again became attorneys; but I——

Q. (Interrupting) And you continued as the attorney?—A. Yes; we continued.

Q. Up to the time that the control of the company passed to the American Light & Power Co.?—A. Yes, sir; and we are still attorneys for the American Light & Power Co., the successors in interest of this company. But I have very little knowledge, gentlemen, about anything that took place in connection with the properties after I ceased to be on the board of trustees. I have——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is, after the American Light & Power Co. acquired the interest?—A. No; after September, 1907. I got into conflict with Mr. Haynes and Judge Hanford somewhat about it and I—Mr. Smith and I became very much alarmed quite early. We spent about $75,000 before we had begun to build any plant, and we got into disagreement with the other members of the board about the expenditures and got alarmed about the finances of the thing, and I retired.

Q. How much stock did you sell, Mr. Kerr?—A. How much what?

Q. How much stock did you sell?—A. Sell?

Q. Yes.—A. Not a share; not a share. I never asked a living soul on earth to buy a share of that stock. I bought and paid for $2,500 of stock in the company originally, and my partner $2,500 originally, but no—never——

Q. (Interrupting.) How many bonds did you sell?—A. Not a bond of any kind. I took no interest whatever in the sale of any stock or bonds. I went into that as I have gone into 40 or 50 other corporations, as an investment, and I got out of it just exactly what everybody else got out of it, with one exception: Some of the people that held on got more than I did. I took a part of my money back and took stock in the American Power & Light Co. for the balance.

Q. Well, you may recoup by your attorneyship in that company.—A. Well, I will try to.

Q. There was a good deal of legal work to it, wasn't there?—A. There was——

Q. (Continuing.) In the beginning of the Hanford Light & Power Co.—or Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. Not much work to do.

Q. There was a good deal to do, wasn't there?—A. Oh, yes; there was some work to do. We had to procure the rights to divert the waters of the Columbia River, from the War Department.

Q. Well, that didn't involve very much, Mr. Kerr?—A. Oh, no; not that alone, but there were——

Q. (Interrupting.) That didn't involve much—telegraphing Senator Piles or your Representatives in Congress?—A. No; it involved more than that. I had had occasion to acquire rights to obstruct the public waters of the United States and was familiar with the situation and I prepared the petition, a copy of which you have.

Q. But the license which was issued to your company by Assistant Secretary Oliver—Assistant Secretary of War Oliver—was in the regular form, was it not?—A. I could not tell you now, Mr. Higgins, whether it was regular. The department——

Q. (Interrupting.) What was there about that particular thing that required——A. (Interrupting.) Nothing.

Q. (Continuing.) Very much time?—A. It was just one of the details.

Q. That is what I wanted, because I have looked the certificate over.—A. It did not involve us in any great labor.

Q. What else was there that required time?—A. There was some titles and various matters connected with the company. We were consulted about it very, very frequently—drawing contracts for construction and for the purchase of material.

Q. Did you draw the contract of sale between the Northern Pacific Railroad and this company?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Was it submitted to you before it was accepted by the Hanford Co.?—A. I have no recollection that it was, whether we had or just what the contract was, but yet we may have drawn it; I don't know. I suppose the Northern Pacific drew it—their attorney.

Q. That is the usual practice, is it?—A. That is the usual practice.

Q. And it is usual practice also for the grantee to accept their deed or not at all, isn't it?—A. Well, they generally—if you get anything from them you have to take what they give you.

Q. I make that observation as applied to all railroads; not the Northern Pacific particularly.—A. Yes; I think that is true.

Q. Were you consulted by Mr. Haynes at the time he called on the land agent in Tacoma?—A. I have no recollection of it.

Q. Were you consulted by Judge Hanford at the time that he called upon the land agent of the road at Tacoma?—A. No, sir; no, sir; I had nothing to do with securing title to the land.

Q. Or by the man who succeeded Mr. Haynes—I don't just recall his name now—as secretary of the company?—A. Mr. Walthew?

Q. Walthew, is it?—A. Walthew.

Q. Walthew.—A. I have no recollection of it; may have been.

Q. You have stated to the committee all that you can recall which was involved in the legal questions submitted to you with reference to the Northern Pacific lands?—A. Absolutely. Absolutely there was no other question that came up in reference to that title or, in my judgment, that could have come up in reference to it, because there had been no clouds on the title of this land grant of the Northern Pacific.

Q. Who checked the land descriptions, Mr. Kerr?—A. I beg your pardon.

Q. I say, who checked the land descriptions?—A. You mean the school lands or the railroad lands?

Q. The Northern Pacific lands?—A. I don't know. I have no idea.

Q. You don't know?—A. No; no.

Q. That would be the work of an engineer rather than a lawyer, anyway?—A. Yes; I suppose the engineer checked that. I had nothing whatever to do with the acquirement of the lands. I think

Mr. McCord went over at the time the school lands were advertised and sold, but I didn't.

Q. You called on Mr. Plummer once?—A. I called on him with reference to the matter of the satisfaction of the old mortgage made under Villard.

Q. Did you call on any of the other officers of the Northern Pacific Railway?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either in the State of Washington or in any other place?—A. Nowhere. I didn't know them.

Q. What?—A. I was not acquainted with any of them. I knew that attorney for the Northern Pacific, Mr. Grosscup, at Tacoma, and I had met Mr. Plummer several times; I knew him when I saw him; had a very casual acquaintance with him; and I went in to cal on him on this particular occasion, I remember, while in attendance on court over at Tacoma.

Q. Did Judge Hanford, upon his return from calling on Mr. Plummer, make a report to you?—A. No, sir; I don't know when Judge Hanford went to Tacoma. I have no idea when he went to Tacoma.

Q. You know whether he made any report to you about any attempt to purchase the Northern Pacific Railroad lands?—A. He made no report to me that I know of. He made a report, I suppose, to the board of trustees at some time.

Q. You were then a member of the board of trustees?—A. Oh, yes; I was a member of the first board of trustees and the second one also.

Q. Do you recall what the report was, if one was made?—A. I do not. Probably—I have a general recollection that the price that was reported to that meeting was $10 an acre for a certain area of land, and the land up near the headworks—that was rough and where rock was exposed more or less—I think was $3 or something of that kind; and I remember that Mr. C. J. Smith and myself at that meeting of the board of trustees both contended that the price at which that land was quoted was above what it was worth, and I felt so then and I feel so now—above its actual value.

Q. Had you been in irrigation projects before this time?—A. I am interested in the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Had you been before this time, before 1905?—A. I think one. I think I was in one. I am not certain. Let me see. No; not before that; afterwards. I am interested in the Olympic Power Co., which is developing a large power plant now in the Olympic Peninsula at the Elwah, and I am interested in the Horn Rapids Irrigation Co., that succeeded to the Lower Yakima Irrigation Co. at Richland, down the river some 35 miles, I suppose, from this plant.

Q. You can not furnish, Mr. Kerr, any information to the committee relative to the acquiring of the lands of the Northern Pacific by the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., except as they are contained in the minutes of the company and as you have already stated?—A. That is absolutely all I know about it.

Q. That is to say you state to the committee that you have no knowledge as to how they were acquired, except as the deeds speak for themselves, other than what you have narrated you found when you examined your letter book. Is that the fact?—A. That is all. I have a knowledge, of course, that we did acquire them, but as to the negotiations I was not present; knew nothing about them whatever. I did examine the titles. I expect I examined the contract.

Q. And you are unable to give this committee any information relative to a discussion in the board of trustees as to the acquiring of these lands?—A. Any further, gentlemen, than I know that the price at which these lands could be acquired was made the subject of discussion in that committee, and that Mr. C. J. Smith and myself both contended that the price at $10 an acre for that land was, in our judgment,in excess of what it ought to be purchased for. I had purchased lands at $2.75.

Q. And you voted for that resolution, didn't you?—A. Well, we were only two gentlemen of nine on that board of trustees and——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, it appears——A. (Continuing.) And I suppose I did. I generally have yielded in all boards—and I am connected with a great many—to the large majority.

Q. Well, it appears, Mr. Kerr, from the minutes of this Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. that at a number of meetings the trustees had under consideration the acquiring of these lands from the Northern Pacific Railway. It further appears that one resolution was adopted for the acquiring of certain lands east of the river. The fact is, as appears now, that the lands acquired were west of the river.

Q. It further appears that covering quite an extended area that this entire question in its different phases was before the board of trustees, and I ask now for information as to whether or not you are able to give this committee any more information as to the acquiring of that land and as to the negotiations looking toward its acquirement?—A. Gentlemen, I am speaking entirely from memory. I know that at one time the question--that Judge Hanford brought before the meeting the question of acquiring lands on the east side of the river. I know that we did not acquire those lands. I know that Judge Hanford desired that we acquire lands above the 100-foot lift or level, and those lands were not acquired. Now, how many times these land questions were discussed I don't remember, but I know that I opposed personally acquiring any land above a lift of 100 feet, and I opposed also the acquiring of any more lands than were embraced within the original propositions for the reclamation of 26,000 acres of land, and I put it upon the ground that the company that we were investing or seeking to invest local capital in it and that all of these development schemes that I had had anything to do with exceeded in their cost the estimates, and I became alarmed very early about the ability of all of us to finance it. I know I opposed a scheme to build transmission lines; it would cost us $3,000 a mile, first to Pasco and then down to Walla Walla, and got in a rather heated discussion with Judge Hanford and Mr. Haynes both in reference to it. I was looking——

Q. (Interrupting.) But, Mr. McCord——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) The resolution for the acquiring of the land east of the river while it was adopted, as appears by the minutes of the meeting, by unanimous vote, never got beyond that point. Do you know why?—A. I don't. I was not under the impression that we had—that we had adopted a resolution to purchase any lands east of the river. There was lying east of the river a tract of several thousand acres of land, across the river from Priest Rapid. I don't say, Mr. Higgins, that it is not in there. I don't remember it.

Q. I understand you.—A. Because, while I produced those books, I have not read those minutes through to refresh my memory.

Q. I was going to call your attention, if I can find it, to such a resolution. At the meeting, Mr. Kerr, of April 3, 1906, at which J. H. McGraw, U. R. Todd, M. B. Haynes, James B. Howe, James A. Kerr, H. K. Owens, C. H. Hanford, and George A. Burch, trustees, were present, "It was moved by H. K. Owens that Judge Hanford and M. B. Haynes be instructed to open negotiations with the Northern Pacific Railroad for the purchase of 8,000 acres of land lying east of the river."—A. I remember that was up.

Q. I was in error about it, because I think I referred to it as a resolution——A. Passed.

Q. (Continuing.) For the purchase of lands when, as a matter of fact, it was an instruction to a committee to acquire it if possible.—A. Well, I know this, Mr. Higgins, that I opposed that resolution and the purchase of that land. Now, you may find a record made there that I did not vote against it. I probably did not vote at all.

Q. Well, the facts are that a majority of the board and trustees did.—A. They probably did.

Q. Now, do you know why it was not acquired?—A. I don't know, gentlemen, why it was not acquired.

Q. Mr. Kerr, I will ask you one or two more questions in reference to this matter and then you will be excused. Your firm continued as the attorneys for the company until about what time in its history?—A. You mean this company?

Q. For the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. Up to the time the stock was finally all acquired by the American Power & Light Co. and then we——

Q. (Interrupting.) No; but in the first instance, in the first instance?—A. Oh, in the first instance. For two years until the second election—that is, September, 1907—I think you will find the record then shows that we dropped out and Messrs. Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey succeeded and they served for a year; then we were reemployed; I think served from that time on.

Q. Was your reemployment before or after the company voted an increase in capital stock?—A. I think it was after the—I think it was after the stock was increased, and we kept getting more money into the concern and our work was all costing us—what was estimated to cost us $480,000 cost us three quarters of a million and we didn't have the high line ditch in either. And it kept involving us in more money all the time, so that there was finally—I think we acquired some additional part of that increased stock so that Mr. McCord and I, I am sure, had $26,000 invested in this company at the time the stock was purchased by these other companies.

Q. What was the floating debt of the company, do you remember?—A. Mr. Higgins, I am not familiar with that but I should think it was at least eight hundred—the debt?

Q. The floating debt?—A. Oh, the floating debt. Several hundred thousand dollars.

Q. How was that secured?—A. It was not secured at all, simply carried it along among us.

Q. You were not able to get credit for that amount of money without a note?—A. Oh, I had nothing to do with the manner in which—with the execution of the notes; I was not on the board and

I don't really know how that was carried. I suppose it was carried in the form of notes probably.

Q. Where were the notes discounted, do you know?—A. There was no—I don't think there was any discount on the notes. You see we purchased our machinery from the Allis-Chalmers Co. I know we owed them a considerable amount of money at one time, and we kept cutting them down. I think they had our notes. I think Mr. McCord and I finally settled that matter up as sort of mutual arbitrators between the company and the Allis-Chalmers Co. I don't remember just how it was paid, but it became necessary, finally, for Mr. Michael Earles, who was the contractor that was building—who really took the work on force account—we could not get any contract for the construction of the dam—the power station nor the dam and station, nor the building of the ditches, and we had to let a force contract to Mr. Earles to do that work, and we paid him the cost of the work and 10 per cent, and we became indebted to Mr. Earles in quite a large sum of money and he filed a lien on the property for—I don't know—over a hundred thousand dollars a good deal.

Q. How much?—A. I think one hundred and thirty-five, maybe one hundred and sixty or seventy thousand dollars; quite a large amount. And Mr. Earles was a client of ours, also had been for many years, and Mr. Earles came in with the rest of the gentlemen here who had put their money into it and put his shoulder under the wheel and took a large block of this preferred stock in satisfaction of his claim, and he became in that way a heavy stockholder in the company. It was just one of those matters that a lot of men here and in Tacoma went in. We didn't expect to be involved in a large amount, and we all went out light. We took some money and we took stock in the Power & Light Co. to get out of it.

Q. Were you an indorser on any of the notes?—A. Not at all; no, sir. I never signed a note in my life, I don't think, for anybody.

Q. The indebtedness which you referred to was to the Allis-Chalmers Co.?—A. The Allis-Chalmers Co. and to Mr. Earles?

Q. And Michael Earles?—A. Yes; and Michael Earles. That was the principal indebtedness we had, and this land indebtedness, this land—school land and the railroad land was all bought on—I think payments made so much each year for 10 years possibly. We had those fixed charges to take care of, and under those contracts we would forfeit our payments if we did not keep them up, so we had certain fixed charges of that kind in the way of payments maturing on land that had to be taken care of, and we sold—Mr. Walthew could tell you more about that than I—I know there was a lot of land sold over there and we sold water rights and one thing another, and sold town lots and collected some revenue, but, notwithstanding all that, we became very much involved.

Mr. McCoy. How heavily did you get in this, Mr. Kerr?

A. $26,000, gentlemen, I think is what we got into it finally. That is just about $21,000 more than we ever expected to.

Mr. Higgins. Did one man acquire the options on the stock of the Hanford Co. at the time its control passed to the American Light & Power Co.?

A. I think that stock was bought up by Mr. Talbot, who is the manager of the American Power & Light Co. at Portland, I think practically all of it at par; that is, they paid either the total amount in money or a large part of it in money and a small part of it in stock with the exception of a block of stock that was owned by Hanford & De Veuve I think, and that was the last block out, and I think they paid more than par for that, but they finally did acquire it all.

Q. Did he acquire this stock himself or through a broker?—A. Oh, now, it was all acquired direct by his dealing with the various stockholders, and I think they were all treated exactly alike. Possibly in some instances they paid all money, par, for the stock, and in other instances some of the stockholders were willing to take part of their—par value for their stock in money and part in stock. I know we took some stock in the American Power & Light Co. that is now quoted at about 75 cents on the dollar.

Q. Do you recall, in connection with the acquiring of the control, a man by the name of Mitchell?—A. Oh, I have known Mr. Mitchell since 1890; yes, sir. Mitchell is at the head of the American Power & Light Co. in New York.

Q. Well, it has been testified that he was active in acquiring this stock?—A. Well, I suppose they meant, Mr. Higgins, that his company was active. They did acquire—his company acquired it all.

Q. But the witness who referred to that, Mr. Kerr, did not even know the name of the company that had acquired it.—A. Mr. Higgins, Mr. Mitchell has not been in Seattle, I don't think, but once in the last 15 years. I was attorney for the General Electric Co. 22 years ago when Mr. Mitchell was then located at Portland.

Q. Are you now the attorney for the General Electric Co.?—A. No, I am not, and I think it was Thomson-Huston Co. then, afterwards merged into the General Electric Co.; but Mr. Mitchell has been in New York for many years and has only been out here at long intervals, and he personally never acquired any of the stock.

Q. Are you the attorney for any of the large eastern electric companies, like the Westinghouse or the General Electric?—A. No, I am not. We are attorneys for—like everybody in the general practice—for a great many corporations and for a great many individuals.

Q. Most attorneys are?—A. Yes. We have a great many companies employing—who pay us a salary, but we are not in the exclusive employ, to take our time, by any one company.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think that is all, Mr. Kerr.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, are there any other witnesses that you can use now?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Kerr is a witness on the Melovich case. Now, I am disappointed in that record that I brought in to you. I have just had a chance to look it over and it is quite deficient. I am going to satisfy that deficiency some way or other, I won't say how, because I don't know; but at the same time Mr. Kerr is so insistent upon getting away, and he will be so busy to-morrow getting ready to go away the next morning, that I suppose, perhaps, I should suggest to you gentlemen that you put him on in that case now, if you will.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you in mind the things that you desire to ask him?

Mr. PRESTON. I was just going to ask him—I think he understands the grounds of criticism of that case, and I am just going to ask him to tell gentlemen in his own way about the matter covering those points.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you may do so.

JAMES A. KERR, being recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kerr, he desires to ask you concerning the Melovich case, now that you are here.

By Mr. PRESTON:

Q. Your firm was attorneys for the defendant in the Melovich case?—A. Yes, sir; I tried that case the first time.

Q. Personally?—A. We were attorneys for one of the casualty companies that was the insurer of the Stone & Webster people. We are not attorneys for Stone & Webster. We only appeared on the record in that case as attorneys for Stone & Webster because of the insurance.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who are the attorneys here of the Stone & Webster Co.?

A. I think Farrell, Kane & Stratton, are they not?

Mr. HIGGINS. I don't know.

A. I am not certain. I think they are. I think that is the name.

By Mr. PRESTON:

Well, now, Mr. Kerr, I wish you would tell the committee in your own way, in narrative form, what happened on that first trial in its bearings upon the way the case came up before Judge Hanford upon the motion for a new trial; that is, the motion following the first verdict, the verdict on the first trial.—A. The issue, gentlemen of the committee, in that case, under the pleadings as you will observe them—the issue of negligence was predicated upon the failure of the defendant to have guarded a set of cogwheels. The way the action was originally brought, they undertook to draft the complaint so that they could bring the action under the statute that we have in this State which——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you refer to the factory act?—A. The factory act, which requires all cogwheels to be guarded. And in the trial of the case they were required to make an election whether they would proceed at common law or proceed under the statute. The appliance that was being used was a machine for washing the gravel that was being used for the construction of the foundation for a power plant at Snoqualmie Falls; it was a detached machine for gravel washing. The same kind of a machine, excepting that it was operated on a railway car, was held by Judge Rudkin, at about the time the case was tried, not to fall within the terms of the factory act. But at all events the plaintiffs therein elected to proceed, upon my motion, at common law. At common law the courts of the several States of this Union and the Federal courts, without a single exception, had held that it was not negligence in the absence of a statute or, in other words, at common law, to operate cogwheels unguarded. I interposed, at the close of the plaintiff's testimony in that case, a motion for a nonsuit or directed verdict—a motion for nonsuit upon the ground, substantially, that the plaintiff had failed in his proofs, in that he had proven no actionable negligence. It was an admitted fact—the admission was made at the beginning of the trial—that the cogwheels were not guarded and that he had assumed the risk, and upon the further ground, as I remember it, that he was shown to have been guilty of contributory negligence. That was in the middle of a jury term in this court. Judge Hanford had many other jury cases set. Judge Hanford, after I stated to him, as I have stated to you, the rule of law, and after I had requested the court to permit me to read to him a very recent case from the eighth circuit court of appeals an opinion written by Judge Sanborn and concurred in unanimously by the other judges, which held that in the case of a woman 19 years of age, working within 9 inches of open cogs, she could not recover at common law by reason of their not having been guarded, Judge Hanford stated that the rule of law that I invoked was well settled and that he realized that there was not a State court, nor had there been any Federal court—I had decisions from the Supreme Court of the United States—that held that it was negligence at common law to operate cogs unguarded, but that in a case which he cited, which was tried in this district before him and before the court of appeals in this circuit, he thought had virtually held, in this circuit at least, that the question as to whether cogs ought or ought not to be guarded was a mixed question of law and fact upon which a jury might be called upon to pass, and that at all events, having a jury here, he would not take the time to hear me present the authorities but would hear me on motion for a new trial, and consequently overruled my motion for a nonsuit, and we put in our testimony and, as I remember it, I made the usual motion at the close of all the testimony for a directed verdict, which was not discussed, the court having ruled as I have indicated to you.

On the argument of the case, notwithstanding the fact that the sole issue of law was the question of whether we were guilty of negligence in failing to guard the cogwheel, the attorney for the plaintiff had contended before the jury that we were negligent in not having instructed this Slav, who was a man, as I remember it, of 28 or 30, or possibly more years than that of age, and he complained also that we were guilty of negligence because the platform upon which he stood was too narrow and it was too low. The proof showed that this plaintiff had gone up to oil the bearings of the shafting that carried these two cogwheels; that from the edge of the cogwheels out to the bearings on either side there was a distance of 16 inches, and he had stood on the right-hand side, with his face within 8 or 9 inches of the cogwheels, to oil the bearings on one side, and without shifting his position on the platform he had reached his arm over the rope and running cog for the purpose of oiling on the other side, when the cogwheels caught the sleeve of his jumper and took his arm off. I went from the trial of that damage case in this court the next morning into a trial of a damage case in the superior court that took my time for two days. My recollection is that——

Q. (Interrupting.) Let me interrupt you there. I was distracted. Did you tell the committee about the range of argument before the jury?—A. Yes, I have stated that.

Q. Excuse my interrupting you.—A. Now, I directed a clerk in the office to prepare the motion or petition for a new trial. Under our State practice we are required to file that petition within two days, and my recollection is that Mr. Ivey in our office dictated the petition. I am not entirely clear about that, but that is my recollection. I asked him to prepare the petition upon the usual statutory grounds. I contended, upon the question of damages in my argument to the jury in that case, that under this compensation act of this State, which had been enacted but had not yet been put in force, that the Legislature of the State of Washington had fixed the maximum amount of recovery for that class of injury at $1,500. A verdict was returned in the case for $12,352. I didn't notice until I came to argue the motion for a new trial before Judge Hanford that in dictating the petition they had overlooked the statutory ground that the verdict was excessive.

I contended before the court, in my argument for a new trial in that case, the verdict was over eight times the amount of value of that kind of an injury as fixed by our legislature; that the verdict was grossly excessive; and I contended that under the Federal cases and under the Federal practice, and with the large discretion with which the Federal judiciary were vested, and in the interest of the administration of even-handed justice, that it was the duty of the court, the verdict being grossly excessive, to set it aside. I also contended, in the light of the fact that argument had been made that we were guilty of negligence in not having instructed this man, when that was not an issue, that we were guilty of negligence in not furnishing sufficient or a wider platform, which was not an issue made by the pleadings; that the use of the word by Judge Hanford in his instructions, "If you find the defendant guilty of any negligence," that the jury could have predicated its verdict upon the contention that we ought to have instructed this man because he was a Slav and did not understand the language very well—the English language—or, perchance, that the platform ought to have been wider. This piece of machinery was located—they were building in a canyon of the Snoqualmie River and this particular piece of machinery was elevated above a place where this fellow was running a little motor that was operating it a number of feet. He had to go up a ladder to get to it. And I felt in that case, and I feel now, under my knowledge of the Federal practice and the wide discretion that the Federal courts have, in the light of my belief, that it is the duty of a court of justice to administer even and fair-handed justice in the trial of any case in court to permit us to try that case again.

Now, Judge Hanford made his ruling there and it will be before you, because it was being taken down, and I had a copy of it that I gave to Mr. Preston, and I think he filed it with the instructions that he gave you, but in some way we overlooked that in the exception to the general instructions of the court upon the question of negligence. I overlooked it, I suppose, because of my hurry to get into the trial of the other case, and I overlooked it and took no exception. Now, there is that case, gentlemen, exactly as it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you call the court's attention to the word "any" in the instruction given?

A. I did not at the time. In the Federal court we are supposed to enter upon the record our exceptions to the court's instructions immediately after the retirement of the jury, and that was the practice in the State court here for many, many years until the legislature, I think the session before the last, possibly, provided that we could file our formal exceptions to the court's instructions at any time before the motion for a new trial was actually passed on. But I did in my argument, and not only that, I filed a brief in support of my contention that this instruction was broad, in the light of the argument which had been made and in the light of the actual issue which was being tried. Now, that is all there is to that case.

Q. Was there any evidence offered in support of the proposition which plaintiff's attorney argued as to the insufficiency of the platform?—A. There was evidence offered on that point, as I remember it. The transcript is here somewhere. It was ruled out by the court. It was held to be immaterial evidence, but the argument was still made to the jury.

Q. Was the argument excepted to at the time it was made?—A. I do not remember whether it was or not. I do not believe it was. I very much dislike to interrupt any attorney in the argument to the jury. My recollection is that I did not except to it at the time.

Q. Well, your practice permits of an amendment to a declaration after the verdict, so as to conform to the proof?—A. In equity cases our statute provides for amendments to conform to the proof. I do not remember any provision of the statute which would permit a man after he had got a verdict upon immaterial evidence to amend his complaint so as to make it conform to the proof.

Q. In most of the older States, if the proof is in the record the declaration may be amended at any time before judgment?—A. Before judgment; that is, where there is no exception to it—that is, where there is no objection interposed.

Q. Yes; if the proof went in without objection?—A. Yes, sir; but the straight issue we tried was the issue I have indicated to the court. The case was subsequently tried and a verdict of $4,000 was rendered in it, and I think that is approximately as large a recovery for that kind of an injury as our supreme court will sustain.

Mr. PRESTON. I think that verdict is for $4,200.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the $4,000 verdict permitted to stand?

A. Yes, sir; it was permitted to stand on the second trial of the case; but I think, gentlemen, that the verdict in that case ought not to be allowed to stand. This man was earning, I think, about $2.50 per day, and I can not believe there can be much disagreement about the excessiveness of the verdict.

Q. I am not sure as to the impression I have, but I have the impression that he was earning $3 per day, and that he was 23 years old—I may be wrong——A. My recollection—of course, I have not refreshed it—was that he was 28 years old, and my impression was that he earned $2.50; but even if it was $3 a day. I have tried, gentlemen, a great many of those personal injury cases—30 or 40 of them a year—and I think I know that a verdict of $4,000 in that kind of case is at least an average, if it is not above the average, verdict for the loss of an arm in the case of a man drawing that amount of wages.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Kerr, you said there was a transcript of the evidence of that first trial, too, somewhere?—A. I gave the transcript of the evidence. I had it in our office, and I gave it to Mr. Bolster—the transcript of the evidence on the first trial of the case—and somebody has it.

Mr. MCCOY. I think we have it; we have that up at the hotel. I would have brought it down if I thought we needed it.

Mr. DORR. I passed it over to the committee early in the session.

Mr. PRESTON. I just wanted to know where I could get it for you gentlemen. Now, there is here—and I think I have this also for you—an oral decision on motions for judgment non obstante veredicto and for a new trial.

The WITNESS. Yes; that was the character of the motion I prepared in the alternative.

Mr. PRESTON. This is the oral decision, not the motion.

The WITNESS. Yes; but I prepared a motion in the alternative, as I remember it, or directed it to be done.

Mr. PRESTON. I show you this [handing document to witness].

The WITNESS. This is the decision. We have appealed that case to the Supreme Court, and with all due regard to Judge Hanford, if this committee will go over that case you will find that the court of appeals of this circuit—if you will follow this case—they will hold that there is no actionable negligence at all. I felt aggrieved over this case myself.

Mr. MCCOY. When was the occasion when Judge Hanford was said to have stated that the verdict was five times too much?

A. I suppose that was in response, gentlemen, to the argument that I made there that under the compensation act this verdict was three times, practically, the value of that kind of an injury, as fixed by our legislature.

Mr. PRESTON. Won't you tell the committee what that was, and what the occasion of it was—that is what Mr. McCoy is inquiring as to, and that is what I was going to come to.

A. Well, the compensation under the compensation act for that kind of an injury as fixed by our legislature in its wisdom, or lack of wisdom, is at $1,500, and this verdict for twelve thousand and odd dollars and eight times $1,500, and then I think it was $362 in addition to the $12,000, was the amount of the verdict; so that there was that amount added to it over and above of the amount of the recovery as fixed by our legislature.

Mr. PRESTON. The question I asked you I do not think you understand——

Mr. MCCOY. Just while we are on that point. But the compensation act has other features in it which control the amount.

The WITNESS. I realize—this is only a comparison.

Mr. MCCOY. And the theory of it is—I suppose—I never saw your act here—that such losses are industrial losses and should be charged against the business?

A. Yes, sir. I advocated that act myself, and it is working beautifully in this State, too.

Q. So that the fact that the legislature fixed $1,500 for an injury of this kind, taken by itself, has not any bearing on the $12,000 verdict?

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). That act is intended for and relates to accidents under circumstances where the injury might be entirely the fault of the employee and the employer entirely without blame.

The WITNESS. It is only by rather liberal analogy that it can be used at all; but I think the courts had considered it in connection with those recoveries.

Mr. MCCOY. They ought not to on any logical basis.

The WITNESS. I felt that it was a legitimate matter for the court to consider. Of course, we lawyers disagree about those things sometimes.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, I would like to have you tell the committee what it was that Judge Hanford said on this other occasion. I have heard something said about his using the expression "three or four times too much," but it does not appear in this oral decision—this memorandum decision.

Mr. MCCOY. I am sorry that we have not got it here; but we have up at the hotel; a copy of something or other which I supposed was taken stenographically in the court.

The WITNESS. Well, I can not recall—you have that case, I say, and I can't recall——

Mr. PRESTON. Then, I do not want to ask the question. If we have it in written form I will try to locate it.

The WITNESS. I think the committee have it, because it was exhibited to me; and if Mr. McCoy says he has that stenographic report——

Mr. PRESTON. Well, that was all I wanted to do, gentlemen; I wanted to get it for you, gentlemen. If you have it I do not want to get it from the witness.

Mr. HIGGINS. There is something of that kind appeared here in that Perry affidavit [handing affidavit to witness].

The WITNESS. That is practically what was said. What is stated in this affidavit is practically what Judge Hanford said in ruling on the motion.

Mr. MCCOY. What did Judge Hanford mean, if he is correctly quoted, in saying—he referred to the plaintiff and said, "He was able-bodied and lost his arm, it is true; but in keeping with other cases he got five times as he should." Now, what did he mean by saying "in keeping with other cases"?

A. I do not know, gentlemen, just what that language refers to there. I did not stop to analyze it and I could not tell you what it refers to. The other part of it manifestly refers to the court's view that verdict is excessive.

Mr. HIGGINS. Of course, it ought to appear that that is not Judge Hanford's decision. It is a statement that appears in the Perry affidavit, so that there will not be any confusion in the record.

Mr. HIGGINS. My question was: "If he is correctly quoted."

The WITNESS. I do not know what those words could refer to, gentlemen.

Q. We had some discussion when this case was up once before, Mr. McCoy, as to whether or not on appeal the appellate court does not take into consideration the entire charge and not single out any one phrase or paragraph in the charge, which, considered by itself, might probably be held to be erroneous. Is that the law of this circuit?—A. There is no question in the world but in my view of those instructions, under the authorities that I cited in my brief and in the light of the contention that was made in the argument to the jury, that the use of the word "any" would have been sufficient to set the verdict aside in the court of appeals.

Q. Then, the court of appeals does, I presume, like most courts I have heard of, take into consideration the entire charge and say that if on the whole charge the jury could not have been misled by this phrase or sentence, they won't set aside the verdict for error. Isn't that the law?—A. Well, I am not advised as to whether all you gentlemen are lawyers or not.

Mr. HIGGINS. We think we are.

The WITNESS. I believe you are; but out in this State, at least, our supreme court has decided for years practically all damage cases upon the peculiar facts of a given case, and if the court, upon the entire record, feels that the verdict is right they generally use some such phrase as that for the purpose of making a disposition of it. In other words, I have tried a good many cases where I would take voluminous exceptions to the instructions of the court, and the supreme court—I remember I have two or three cases in mind now, one in which the court was convulsed with laughter when I read the instructions of one of our trial courts here—and yet the supreme court, on the entire record, held that the case ought to be affirmed, and they found a way to get around without ruling out that instruction. So that you can hardly say in any given case that they will apply it in our State courts. It has been applied in cases that I know of in the Federal court. But I planted myself on the proposition, and I think as a lawyer it is right, that in this first trial of this Melovich case, taking into consideration what occurred on the trial, taking into consideration the excessive amount of the verdict, that the court ought to have set aside that case, that verdict, in the interests of justice. It is not any more unfair to give one party a technical advantage, where the verdict is excessive, than the other, and I have tried a number of cases where the court has set verdicts aside on the ground that the verdict itself was insufficient. That is not as common as where it is excessive, but I have known frequently our superior court to hold, in the last three years, that the verdict should have been greater than it was or none at all, and they have set it aside and given a new trial.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that we are wandering pretty far afield.

The WITNESS. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else?

Mr. MCCOY. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. That seems to be all.

Witness excused.

W. T. DOVELL, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Preston, do you wish to interrogate the witness or not?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Dovell, you are a member of the bar here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A member of the firm of Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the case of Greenwood, a minor, against the Puget Mill Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you represent the defendant upon the trial of that case?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. There were how many witnesses in that case on behalf of the plaintiff to the circumstances of the accident?—A. My recollection is that if there was anyone in addition to the plaintiff himself that there were not more than one or two others; I can not be positive about that, as to how many witnesses there were after the circumstances. There were witnesses, of course, as to his condition; that I remember

Q. Was the testimony taken down in shorthand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you recognize that [showing] as to whether or not it is a copy of the transcript of the plaintiff's testimony?—A. Yes, sir; I remember that being from my office.

Mr. PRESTON. Gentlemen, I have here a transcript of the plaintiff's testimony in that case; something which you have not had yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Can we have it to use tentatively, as we have taken so much other matter?

Mr. PRESTON. Certainly.

Testimony marked "Exhibit D."

Mr. PRESTON. I have here what purports to be a stenographic report of Judge Hanford's remarks on granting the nonsuit and I wish you would identify that if you can [showing].

A. I presume this is a correct transcript of the remarks of Judge Hanford. I recognize the material portion of it.

Q. I think I have a copy of it which came from your office—perhaps you can recognize that?—A. Well, I recognize the material portion of this as being a specification by Judge Hanford of the grounds on which he granted the nonsuit.

Q. It has been testified here that upon the trial of the case that Judge Hanford was to some extent—I will not say how extensively—inattentive to the case, by being asleep on the bench, or perhaps drowsy—I do not remember the testimony exactly. I want to ask you to tell the committee what your recollection is about that or as to that.—A. That is not true. My recollection is that Judge Hanford was at all times properly attentive. My recollection of the trial is that it only consumed one day, or a portion of one day, and I am quite certain that Judge Hanford was not during any portion of that time inattentive.

Q. Now, you recall, do you, that Judge Hanford granted the order to set aside the nonsuit?—A. Yes, sir; and I recall the circumstances and the reasons for which it was granted.

Q. Those are stated there—what were the reasons? They are not stated there.—A. This states his ruling on the——

Q. On the nonsuit?—A. On the application for the nonsuit. Now, after the nonsuit was granted, a motion for a new trial was filed by the plaintiff and the statement was made to Judge Hanford that if an opportunity were given them to amend, that they could state a cause of action with which they would make their proof consist. I contended, in opposition to that, that there had been, as Judge Hanford ruled, a complete failure of proof—that their action was then entitled to be dismissed.

The said ruling in granting the nonsuit is as follows (Exhibit No. 78½):

It was Judge Hanford's view, which he expressed at the time, that if the action was dismissed, there having been a nonsuit, they could begin an action again that he believed it would be more just to them and more economical if he permitted them to amend their complaint—after he took off the nonsuit—and he granted the new trial, setting aside the order granting the nonsuit, with the understanding that they would be permitted to amend, instead of having to go out of court and begin an action over again.

Mr. McCoy. He had no right to do that, did he?

A. A perfect right—their suggestion that they could amend their complaint and state a cause of action, and make their proof correspond to that statement.

Q. Didn't they claim at the time the motion was made for a nonsuit, that the complaint should be amended so as to conform to the proof?—A. No; they did not, as I recall it; they did not at that time.

Q. Was the judgment of nonsuit entered?—A. Now, Mr. McCoy, it may be possible that some such suggestion was made at the trial.

Mr. Preston. You mean at the hearing of the motion?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. I am asking you at the trial?

A. It was either one time or the other—it is likely that this record would show, if that suggestion was made. If this record here does not show it, then it was not made at the time of the trial.

The Chairman. Even if it were, the judge controls the judgment of the court and could set it aside during the term.

The Witness. Yes, sir; and the judgment was set aside, of course, during the term in which it was rendered.

Mr. McCoy. Would you consider that as certainly good practice?

A. I was averse to the application of that practice in this particular case, because it was made against me, but I can not say that it is improper practice.

The Chairman. It is not certainly improper, where other rights do not intervene, if the judgment was entered in which rights of a third party were interested, a case might arise of that kind, but ordinarily I think it is true in every jurisdiction that the court controls the judgment during the term.

Mr. Preston. I think in our superior court, where we have no terms, the rule is even broader. We have no terms in our superior court; they are always in session under the Constitution, and the court grants a new trial after a nonsuit or not according to the facts.

Mr. McCoy. For error in the granting of the nonsuit, but not simply to give the man another chance.

Mr. Preston. I think they do that, too. We are pretty liberal on those things in our practice.

The Witness. The representation was made, I recall, to the court that this boy was poor; that he was impoverished and that he lacked the money to begin a new action. I remember that representation being made, and I think it was upon that representation Judge Hanford decided to grant the new trial rather than to send him out of court to begin his action over again. That was my understanding of it.

Mr. Preston. I want to go a little further, if you please. Then, after the order was made granting a new trial, do you recall having interposed a motion for judgment on the pleadings?

A. Yes; after the amended complaint was filed, and the answer was filed to that complaint, then they filed a reply, and before I filed a motion for judgment I demurred to that reply. Judge Wheaton, who was sitting here then, sustained my demurrer to that reply and dismissed the action.

Mr. McCoy. Let me see if I get that. They served this complaint and you answered it, and they served a reply and you demurred to the reply?

A. No, sir; an amended complaint.

Q. They served an amended complaint and you answered it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Setting up new matter, and then they replied to the new matter and you demurred to the reply?—A. Yes, sir. That reply contained an admission that this boy had received, I think, $120 which had been used by him, and which was not returned. I demurred to that reply and Judge Wheaton sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. Now, the rules of the court provide that there shall be, I think it is, three days allowed after the demurrer is sustained for amendment, and Judge Wheaton inadvertently dismissed the case without allowing them the three days to amend. They then made the application to Judge Hanford on his return here to vacate the order of Judge Wheaton dismissing the action, and Judge Hanford did vacate the order.

Mr. Preston. Now, right there, Mr. Dovell; what, if anything, was brought there to the court by the plaintiff's attorneys in regard to his being able to amend his reply further as a reason for urging that the court reverse Judge Wheaton?

A. He urged, as I recall, that he had a right under the rules to amend his reply, and that the action should not be dismissed until he had been given the opportunity. But, then, he filed an amended reply; but my recollection is that it was substantially the same as his former reply and had the same defect, in that it admitted the receipt and the retention of the $120.

The Chairman. But it also showed the nonage of the plaintiff?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you contend that the minor would be estopped from bringing and pursuing his action, his right of action, because the minor had received a sum of money from the defendant?—A. Yes, sir; after the rules laid down by the circuit court of appeals, that was unquestionably the law. In the case, I think it is the case of Price v. Conners, my recollection is that in that case the money had been received by a man when he was in an intoxicated condition.

The Chairman. Well, that was a voluntary act of his, for which he was entirely responsible, just as he might be prosecuted for a crime committed in that condition. That is very different from a person who is under a legal disability not of his own making.

The Witness. I am inclined to believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal courts fail to make that distinction in our circuit, anyway.

The Chairman. There is a vast difference between a minor and an intoxicated adult as to their legal rights.

The Witness. I think the view taken by Judge Wheaton and the view taken by Judge Hanford in this matter consists exactly with the doctrine laid down in two cases that I now recall by the circuit court of appeals in our circuit.

The Chairman. But that would not represent the weight of authority.

The Witness. It represents the controlling authority in this circuit—I mean the circuit court of appeals of our circuit would be controlling, of course, of Judge Hanford and Judge Wheaton, sitting in this district.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, if they took the view you expressed, that the same reasoning would apply to a man who was intoxicated and to a person, a minor of tender years, but if I were the court I would make a good, clear distinction between those two sets of facts, so as not to be bound by the circuit court of appeals in the Greenwood case. Proceed.

Mr. PRESTON. After this amended reply was filed, did you renew your motion for judgment on the pleadings before Judge Hanford?

A. Well, I made a motion for judgment on the pleadings then.

Q. And he granted that?—A. Judge Hanford?

Q. Yes. Do you remember anything about his remarks?—A. I remember Judge Hanford said something to the effect that he would follow the ruling of Judge Wheaton inasmuch as he did not believe it proper that one judge should lay down one rule in the court and another judge another rule.

Q. Now, Judge Hanford was criticized by Mr. Brown, a witness here, along this line—he took the position first, or he stated first that Judge Hanford had passed on this question originally, and then Judge Wheaton decided it another way, and then Judge Hanford followed Judge Wheaton—to make myself clear, his point of criticism was that Judge Hanford had ruled on that question in favor of the plaintiff; then Judge Wheaton had ruled on it in favor of the defendant, and then Judge Hanford ruled on it in favor of the defendant. Now, tell the committee, if you will, your recollection as to whether or not Judge Hanford had passed on that question.—A. There was a demurrer to the original reply, which was filed. I am unable to recall now whether or not that was argued, but in any event that first reply did not, as I recall it, set up as clearly the facts as to the receipt and retention of this money by the boy, or his guardian, upon which point the demurrer was finally sustained.

Mr. PRESTON. I think that is all the questions that I have to ask Mr. Dovell in regard to the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MCCOY. Well, I will ask you, Mr. Preston, are you going to have all the pleadings in this case?

Mr. PRESTON. You have it all—you have Judge Wheaton's memorandum decision, and everything before you.

Mr. MCCOY. We have the complaint and the answer and the reply and the demurrer, then the amended complaint, and the whole business.

Mr. PRESTON. You have everything there was in the clerk's office—you have a copy of it.

Mr. MCCOY. And this paper which Mr. Dovell has?

Mr. PRESTON. This is the stenographer's report of Judge Hanford's ruling, and the nonsuit motion—that has been put in.

Mr. MCCOY. And has the testimony of the plaintiff also been put in?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes; that is marked "Exhibit No. 78." Did you make the testimony which I just handed you an exhibit, also, at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it ought to be printed in the record; but it may go in with the others as an aid to the committee.

Mr. PRESTON. I will explain to you why I thought it would be well to have it in, because, as I read the testimony and read the pleadings, there could not be, to my mind, two opinions about its being a case of entire failure of proof and not of variance, and that is why I think it would be material.

Mr. MCCOY. I remember now in going over with Mr. Brown the point. In my mind it was not whether there was a complete variance but whether it had been argued that there was a variance, and Judge Hanford took the view that there was not and practically overruled himself on that.

Mr. PRESTON. His opinion here shows that he regards it as a total failure of proof, and the evidence shows that it was. I have here, in the same action, a certified copy of the petition, the bond of the guardian, and the order appointing the guardian in the superior court, which I will offer in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the controversy with reference to the facts of the guardianship at that time?

Mr. PRESTON. I will explain it to you, if I may. You will remember that Mr. Brown's testimony was this: First, that the order appointing the general guardian was that because no notice had been given, and I think that is the correct position. Then he made the point, and I remember Mr. McCoy interrogating him along that line, about whether the guardian had authority to make a compromise without the order of the court, and he said that that power did not exist either, and the trend of his testimony, as I have it in mind, was that that settlement, or alleged settlement, for $500 was made without the authorization of the court. Now, these records that I have here show that that was the ground of the appointment of the guardian; that there was a claim which the boy had against the Puget Mill Co., his employers, and that that could be settled for $500 and asking for the appointment of a guardian with power to make that settlement, and that is the materiality of this document. There has been some argument made previously that does not appear in these papers, but Mr. Brown's claim is that the settlement was made on the same day, but before the order was made.

The petition for appointment of the guardian is marked "Exhibit No. 79."

Mr. MCCOY. The plaintiff's testimony in the Greenwood case is to be taken by the committee for such use as the entire Judiciary Committee wants to make of it, including the printing, if they desire to have it printed.

Witness excused. Whereupon the proceedings are adjourned until to-morrow morning, July 17, 1912, at the hour of 9.30 o'clock.

SEVENTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1912.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. MCCOY. Here is a transcript of the testimony in the case of Melovich against Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, to be taken to Washington under the arrangement previously made, to be used as the while Judiciary Committee sees fit to use it.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit G."

Mr. McCoy. And here is what purports to be a copy of those remarks the court made. That could be marked in evidence.

The Chairman. Mr. Preston, have you anything urgent this morning?

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Preston, when you get ready to take up the Peabody case, will you try to have the corporation counsel here?

Mr. Preston. I have him on my list; he and his assistant.

The Chairman. Mr. Baxter, are you ready this morning in pursuance of the request made of you a few days ago?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Perhaps you had better take the witness stand.

Sutcliffe Baxter, being recalled, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Mr. Baxter, when on the witness stand before you were requested to make a compilation of summary——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Of the various cases in which you had acted as receiver——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) And as trustee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the knowledge you now have, would you please recite those cases in the order of time?—A. I will commence with the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co., I believe. [Witness refers to paper.] May I just refer to the records?

Q. Yes, sir; you can use your minutes to refresh your recollection, and give a list of the cases at this time.—A. A list of the cases at this time?

Q. In the order of time.—A. Now, let me see. I don't know whether—the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co. was the first; then the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.

Q. What was the second one?—A. McCarthy Dry Goods Co. Emil Carnoil. The William Walker Co. And Alice C. Dowle, I think I omitted to give you the name of Alice C. Dowle in my statement the other day. The Knosher Co., Western Steel Corporation, and C. G. Ingalls.

Q. Making in all how many cases?—A. Eight cases.

Q. Now, going back to the first one of those—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Give us the results of the summary you have made about it.—A. Shall I give you the date of the appointment of the receiver?

Q. Yes, you might?—A. I was appointed receiver on the 8th of October, 1904. I took possession of the assets of the concern at that time. The inventory at the time—shall I read this off in detail or just give you the aggregate of it?

Q. Just for a moment will you let us look at the paper you are using and see?—A. Yes, sir [producing paper]. I believe I stated to the committee the other day when I was on the witness stand here that in all these cases where I was appointed receiver I had been elected trustee. I find, however, that in this case Mr. Walter McClure was elected trustee. I conducted the business for about three months.

Mr. McCoy. This is a statement of the administration of Sutcliffe Baxter as receiver in the matter of the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co. Just mark that as an exhibit.

Paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 80."

Mr. Hughes. I was just thinking, Mr. McCoy, whether that might not convey an erroneous impression.

Mr. McCoy. I have read the indorsement that he put on it.

Mr. Hughes. Well, it is a statement made by him of the main facts in the receivership.

Mr. McCoy. Yes.

Mr. Hughes. But it might convey the idea that it was his statement as receiver in the case. That is what I was thinking. I know that that was not the purpose.

Mr. McCoy. No; it is the paper which the witnessed produced as the result of our request the other day, giving a summary.

Mr. Hughes. I thought, Mr. McCoy, that it might convey the impression in the record that it was his statement filed in the case as the receiver, but it is all right, I think, with the explanation.

Mr. McCoy. He stated that he produced it.

Q. How long do you say you carried on this business of the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co.?—A. From the time of my appointment as receiver down to the last of December; practically three months.

Q. Was the business carried on at a profit by you?—A. Yes, sir; I think there was a profit there.

Q. About how much profit was shown?—A. I can't say that—there was no inventory taken at the time of my surrender to the trustee. The business had been conducted by the receiver at the request of the creditors, who were trying to reorganize the institution and held it in the hands of the receiver pending their attempts to reorganize. They did reorganize about the last of December and took the property over as a whole.

Q. What did the trustee have to do in the matter?—A. He simply took possession of the property from the receivers and I suppose turned it over to the creditors' committee. I really don't know, I didn't——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did the trustee get any fee in the matter?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. I notice here an allowance to Metcalfe & Jurey, attorneys for the receiver, of a thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What services did they render as attorneys, what legal services?—A. They had—they were attorneys for the receiver during the period of the management of the business by the receiver.

Q. What were the services they rendered? Were there any suits out against anybody?—A. No, I think not.

Q. Were there any difficult questions of law in the matter?—A. Nothing that was really difficult, so far as I know.

Q. I notice that R. S. Jones, the attorney for the bankrupt, gets an allowance of $600. What was that for?—A. He was attorney—one of the attorneys in the case. I will state that all those allowances were made by stipulation of all parties in interest.

Q. Yes. I understand that, but what were the services which R. S. Jones, attorney for the bankrupt, rendered?—A. Such services as were necessary for the attorney of the bankrupt to render. I don't know exactly what he did do.

Q. Did R. S. Jones render any services after you were appointed receiver?—A. Not that I am aware of in particular.

Q. So far as you know, did he do anything except prepare the schedules—was it a voluntary or involuntary bankruptcy?—A. I think it was involuntary.

Q. Who filed the petition of the creditor, do you know?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Was Mr. Jones attorney for that creditor?—A. I think so.

Q. Well, then, why is it he appears as attorney for the bankrupt, did he resist the adjudication?—A. No, sir; there was no resistance of any adjudication, so far as I remember, in the case. It was all done in a friendly manner by the—as I said before, an attempt of the creditors to reorganize it, which they finally did do and took the property over under a reorganization.

Q. And so far as you know Mr. Jones did not do anything except prepare the schedules in bankruptcy?—A. Oh, I don't know anything in particular about what he did further than act as attorney for the parties he was representing.

Q. I notice an allowance of $1,800 to various attorneys stated to be attorneys for petitioners and creditors. Have you the items of those allowances, or of that aggregate amount?—A. I have not got it with me. The items are on file in court in the case, I presume. Those allowances were all agreed to by all parties in interest.

Q. What was the reason for the receiver turning the estate over to a trustee and then having the trustee turn it over to the reorganized organization? In other words, why could not the receiver have turned the property right over to those who had reorganized the business?—A. I believe the purchasers who reorganized to have a trustee's title to it rather than a receiver's title.

Q. They considered a receiver's title somewhat doubtful?—A. I think so. I believe that was the understanding at the time, I think.

Q. Who appointed you receiver in it?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. You are sure it was not the referee who did it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has the referee ever appointed you receiver?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection.

Q. Have you a copy of the stipulation by which the allowances were arranged for?—A. No, sir; I have not. It is on file in court, though; I saw it the other day.

Q. Will you kindly get it for us after you get through testifying?—A. Will they allow me to take it out of the court files?

Q. I think perhaps the clerk will allow it to come in here, won't he?—A. Well, perhaps so.

Mr. HUGHES. I will attend to it, if you want it.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Baxter said he saw it the other day. He might easily lay his hand on it.

Q. What is the next case?—A. The McCarthy Dry Goods Co.

Q. Have you a similar statement in regard to that?—A. Yes, sir; a summary statement here, I think [producing].

Q. The McCarthy Dry Goods matter was not in bankruptcy?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were appointed receiver in an action in the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit, in an action entitled the

H. B. Claflin Co., a corporation, against the McCarthy Dry Goods Co., a corporation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were appointed and qualified as receiver on September 13, 1907.—A. I believe so; yes, sir.

Q. When did you finally account and when were you discharged?—A. In about September, I think, or October, in the following year. I may not have been discharged for some time afterwards, but the business was sold, if I remember correctly, in September.

Q. I notice in the statement you have furnished that you were made allowances in December, 1908, May, 1909, and July, 1909, so I take it that you did not get your discharge until July at any rate, 1909?—A. I presume that is about correct. It took some time to settle up the estate after the stock was finally disposed of.

Q. You think that the stock was disposed of in September, 1908?—A. I think so; that is my recollection of it.

Q. Who were the attorneys for the plaintiff in that matter?—A. McClure & McClure.

Q. And who were the attorneys for the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.?—A. As the corporation or as the receiver's attorney?

Q. No, the company itself?—A. I don't just remember now who the attorney for the company was, but McClure & McClure were the receiver's attorneys.

Q. You have no recollection of who represented the defendant?—A. I don't recall for the moment.

Q. Who was the largest creditor, as you remember it?—A. I think the plaintiff in that case was the largest creditor.

Q. Who was the largest creditor in Seattle?—A. The Western Dry Goods Co., I think. Now, I am testifying from memory about these matters. If you want the facts, I have got them here amongst these figures and can dig them out.

Q Well, I didn't mean to pin you down to an exact figure, but the Western Dry Goods Co. was among the largest creditors in Seattle?—A Yes, sir; I think so.

Q Your bond was $25,000?—A. I think so.

Q Well, now state anything that you care to in regard to the administration of that estate.—A. When I was appointed receiver, we endeavored to dispose of it and it was advertised for sale during the legal time, whatever that was, under sealed bids, and when the time came for opening these bids there was only one bid submitted, that of London—Edwin London—of about $24,000.

Mr PRESTON What is that?

A. Of about $24,000, which we rejected and submitted the matter to Judge Hanford, and he sustained the refusal to sell at that price and stated to us—to Mr. McClure and myself—that if we could get an offer of $60,000 for it he would authorize the sale We got into consultation with Mr. Stone, of the Stone-Fisher Co , who appeared to be rather anxious to buy it but hadn't put in a bid for it at all, and he commenced by offering us, I think it was, $40,000 He finally, after lunching together, increased his bid to $65,000 This we submitted to Judge Hanford, with the recommendation that the bid be accepted. Immediately some of the creditors——

Mr. HUGHES (interrupting). Mr. Baxter, pardon me. The noise is so great that it is difficult to hear. Speak as distinctly as you can. The noise is great.

Mr PRESTON. Before you pass that, would you describe more fully Mr Stone's bid? I think there was some element of contingency in it.

A. Oh, yes. Mr. Stone's bid was for $65,000, $10,000 cash and $15,000 payments every 15 days, I think, thereafter until finally paid for. This was without any security at all. We were expected to turn the stock over to him on the payment to us of $10,000 and take the credit of the concern for the future payments.

Mr. McCOY. Just a minute. Who represented the Stone-Fisher Co. in that negotiation?

A. Mr. Stone himself, but there was a consultation held in Stone-Fisher's office where other persons of the firm were present, or other members of the corporation were present

Q. Well, go on—or before you answer further, what was the business of the Stone-Fisher Co.?—A. The Stone-Fisher Co. are retail dry goods merchants here

Q Similar——A (Interrupting.) A department store. A similar business to the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.

Q All right, go on, Mr. Baxter —A. The bid was submitted to Judge Hanford and objected to by several of the creditors, so Judge Hanford set a hearing for the case for the afternoon of the day I think at 4 o'clock, if I remember correctly, or about 4, and I think in this room, I am not very certain; and at this meeting, Mr. Stone——

Q (Interrupting.) What is Mr. Stone's full name? A. I don't remember it.

Q Well, go on. At the meeting——A. At the meeting Mr. Stone made a statement of why he was anxious to buy the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. I don't think he said exactly that he wanted it as an outlet for some of his own surplus stock, but I presume that was it. However, the creditors opposed the sale—such creditors as were present opposed the sale. Mr. Stern, who represented the preferred stockholders, also opposed the sale, and Judge Hanford refused to have the sale made.

Q. Well, the bid of $40,000 which Stone-Fisher Co. made, was that contingent in any way, or conditional on being allowed to pay down a part and the rest of it by installments? A. It was all installments except $5,000. He proposed to pay five thousand cash on a bid of forty, and the remainder on credit

Q. And you say they wanted to do this without giving any security of any kind? A. Yes, sir.

Q This business was operated at a loss, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir, after the first two months.

Q How heavy was the loss, in merchandise I mean? A. Well, after the Christmas eve business fell off from the rate of sixty-odd thousand dollars a month to less than $20,000 a month, with an expense account during the two months preceding Christmas eve of about, I think, $10,000. After the first of the year the expense account was reduced to something less than eight thousand a month, and with sales running from twenty to thirty thousand dollars a month there was a dead loss staring us in the face every day.

Q. That is, beginning early in the year——A. That is, beginning on the first day of January—1909, is it?

Q. 1908? A. 1908; yes.

Q. Was the business run at a loss every month from that time on until you closed up in September? A. Why, no; I think there was some months where our sales ran up to forty-five or fifty thousand dollars, where perhaps we made a standoff or a small profit.

Q. What was the total loss in the running of the business? A. Oh, is must have been thirty or forty thousand dollars.

Q. While you were conducting the business, did you buy new goods?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did you employ; who was familiar with the dry-goods business under you?—A. I employed the old manager, Mr. Sheehan.

Q. Why did you employ him?—A. Because he was manager when I took possession and I found him a very competent young man, as near as I could judge of him, and he was very highly recommended to me by others.

Q. He had been running the business at a loss before you were appointed receiver?—A. He had only been superintendent there a very short time. They changed superintendents, I think, three or times within the preceding year or a year and a half.

Q. I find from the statement that you have furnished the committee that there was cash on hand, when you took over the business, amounting to $787.42?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that including that and up to June 24, 1909, you received in cash altogether $481,531.26?—A. That is correct, I believe.

Q. Does that amount which I have just read include the amount received when you sold the business out in bulk in September, 1908?—A. I think so. I will state that included in those receipts there, in the first month's receipts, is $50,000, is it not, there? That $40,000 of that fifty was money borrowed from the National Bank of Commerce in order to enable me to take up goods that were stopped in transit and lying in the terminals here at the time.

Q. When you took over the business you made an inventory and inventoried the merchandise at $93,562.17, fixtures at $24,948.52?—A. Yes.

Q. Making $118,510.69?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other assets were there?—A. That was all except some book accounts. I think there were some book accounts.

Q. There does not appear here to be any statement of book accounts or accounts or bills receivable. Were there any such?—A. There were a few of them.

Q. Well, have you anything in your papers to give the total amount? What I want to know is what the amount of the assets was.—A. Let's see if I can find it here. No; I didn't bring up those inventories. These are copies of the monthly cash reports—cash statements. My inventory, I didn't bring up with me; I didn't know that I would be called upon for it.

Q. Well, I will ask to have you give me that, unless you can state now, with some degree of closeness, what assets there were in addition to the $118,510.69 which I have just read?—A. There was not anything of importance except a few book accounts. I don't know now; it was a small amount, it appears to me, and some insurance policies.

Q. You mean fire insurance policies.—A. Fire insurance policies.

Q. Well, you have to keep those running?—A. Yes, sir; but the unearned portion of the premium was an asset at the time.

Q. Well, the companies earned the premium, didn't they?—A. Later, yes.

Q. So you didn't realize anything on the insurance policies?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, would you say, then, that the total assets did not exceed $120,000 when you became receiver?—A. What is the total there, a hundred and what——

Q. $118,510.69.—A. Oh, it would be about one hundred and twenty.

Q. What were the liabilities?—A. One hundred and sixty or seventy thousand dollars, I think.

Q. Not to exceed one hundred and seventy, is that right?—A. General creditors, yes. There was a lot of preferred stockholders.

Q. Well, that is not a liability of the company until after the creditors are paid. I mean the liabilities to creditors.—A. I am sorry I didn't bring the inventory up with me. I thought I had them all here, but I haven't. If I would be allowed to run down to my office and get it I can give you the exact figures.

Q. Well, I wish you would, Mr. Baxter, when you get through here.—A. All right.

Q. Now, you received, in allowances for your services as receiver, in all $7,250.45?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was allowed to the attorneys for the receivers $2,200?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do those include all the allowances that were made to anybody in the matter?—A. Includes all the allowances made to myself as receiver and to the attorneys in the case.

Q. Well, were allowances made to anybody else?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. To any attorneys for creditors?—A. I think not.

Q. The dividend paid in the matter was 3½ per cent; is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is all that the creditors ever realized on it?—A. It is.

Q. Why did you continue running the business after you discovered it was running at a loss?—A. We were endeavoring to sell the business as a going concern, and were in correspondence with a Mr. Strain more particularly, of Great Falls, Mont. He was figuring with us for several months there with a view of buying it, and was over here once or twice, and finally came over some time in—I think during July—when he expected to consummate the purchase of the business as a going concern, and while here he received a telegram from his bankers, he told me, who had promised him the money before he left there, that things were in such shape, had taken a sudden turn in Great Falls, Mont., were in such shape that they could not possibly let him have the money, so that part of the deal fell through.

Q. Had you agreed with him on the price?—A. No, sir; not exactly. We were talking generally about it.

Q. Well, had you approximated a price?—A. Yes; he was going to take it at, I think, 55 or 60 cents, I don't remember, on the inventory to be taken.

Q. What was it that took all those months in the way of negotiation with him? Why couldn't they have been closed up in a month?—A. Oh, simply because he could not come through—could not prepare himself to make a definite offer for it, and we were hoping all the time that things would pick up, but they didn't. As I have stated before, our sales in November were something over $60,000 and in December about $65,000, if I remember correctly.

Q. Sixty-five in November and sixty-one in December.—A. Oh, was that it? Well, it was over $120,000 in that two months, and those—that was down to Christmas eve, and while it takes in the remainder of the month down to the end of December, yet the sales fell off on Christmas eve to—commencing the following day, I think—$400, with an expense account of over three, and the sales continued to fluctuate between about $20,000 and thirty for several months there. I think there was one or two months they ran up to about fifty, perhaps, but in all those months when we were doing a business of less than twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars a month we were losing money very rapidly and could not get out of it.

Q. You closed out the business in September, 1908?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you sell all the assets at that time?—A. Sold the remainder of the stock and fixtures and the unpaid—I suppose the unearned—fire-insurance premiums, and I think all of the property was sold at that time. There may have been some for book accounts; I don't remember. The cash statement on file in court will show, at any rate.

Q. Well, was it the business that was done—did you do business on credit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Hadn't you at that time collected all the outstanding accounts that were in existence at the time when you took it?—A. I think we had collected all that were collectible.

Q. Well, now, when you sold out the business in bulk in September, 1908, what property, aside from the cash receipts, was left in your have inventoried, if we had inventoried it, probably seven or eight hands?—A. Oh, the remnant of the stock there, I suppose it would thousand dollars—nine thousand, perhaps, somewhere along there.

Q. What stock?—A. The remainder of the unsold stock.

Q. I thought you said that in September you closed out everything?—A. We had been running a sale down to the final closing out of it and I sold the remainder of the stock in bulk, with the furniture and the fixtures, the whole thing.

Q. Fix a date at which you had converted all the assets of that company into cash?—A. Why, I can't fix a date without referring to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Fix the month. I don't mean the day, but the month?—A. I have my cash account here for the month, if you would like to have me fix it definitely. I don't remember.

Q. I want you to state to the committee the day or month when you had finally converted all the assets of that concern into cash.—A. (After examining papers.) It was on September 9.

Q. What year?—A. Of 1908.

Q. Well, now, the statement which you have handed to the committee shows cash receipts in October, 1908, $139.20. What was that for?—A. Cash receipts, $139.20?

Q. October, 1908.—A. October, 1908. The balance of cash on hand on the 1st of October, 1908, was $10,231.19. Then I collected balance on safe, $75; interest from M. A. Ward, 40 cents; interest Eaton, Crane & Pike Co., $7.23; H. J. Sheehan, his account in full to date, $8.25.

Q. These were small items of account. Now, the receipts in November, 1908, were $955.28. What was the largest receipt in that aggregate for?—A. Was that in February, did you say, 1909?

Q. No; November, 1908. Just in a general way how did that——A. (Interrupting.) We sold merchandise. Merchandise sold to Stone-Fisher for invoices of George Spire, Harold Leather Goods Co., Eaton, Crane & Pike Co., amounting to $1,304.36; sold to them at 37½ discount less a freight allowance, $755.44.

Q. What were the cash receipts in April for—1909?—A. April, 1909?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't seem to have the cash statement here for April. I don't remember. I haven't got any cash statement here for April, 1909.

Q. Well, it is put down here, cash receipts from February, 1909, to April 30, 1909.—A. Oh. Well, that was included in this November statement, was it not? No cash receipts from November to February, 1909, and I haven't got any statement here apparently subsequent to this of February 8, 1909. If you will let me have that copy, I can probably refresh my memory and I can explain it.

Q. There is nothing stated here except just the amount. Then there is cash receipts from April 30, 1909, to June 24, 1909, $1,500. Do you remember what that was?—A. No, I don't remember.

Q. At any rate those items from September, 1908, to June, 1909, were simply clearing up the tag ends of the business; is that right?—A. That is right, sir.

Q. I find that on December 15, 1908, you were allowed $500; May 13, 1909, a thousand dollars; and July 20, 1909, $2,650.45, for your services?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much salary did you pay to this man who was employed by you to run the business?—A. Mr. Sheehan?

Q. Yes.—A. $300 a month.

Q. And what part did you take in running the business?—A. I was in the office, attending to the paying of bills, and superintended the office generally—the correspondence.

Q. Had you any other business at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were giving your time exclusively to this business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What experience had you in selling dry goods?—A. I was manager of the largest store north of Seattle, within the boundaries of the United States, on the Pacific coast, from 1870 to 1875—a general merchandise store.

Q. What kind of a business did they do?—A. General merchandise.

Q. Who did they do business with chiefly?—A. With the settles around the country there, and coal miners. I was in the employ of the Bellingham Bay Coal Co. at that time.

Q. In the employ of what?—A. Of the Bellingham Bay Coal Co., as manager of their store there.

Q. Were you ever in the liquor business?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When was that?—A. That was in Seattle.
Q. When?—A. Oh, from 1876—commenced business in Seattle in January, 1876, and was in the liquor business several years; I don't really remember how many; five or six years, I think.
Q. Were you ever a settler amongst the Indians?—A. Yes, sir. Not a settler exactly. I was a trader.
Q. When was that?—A. That was in the eighties; I think from about 1880 to 1885 I was a trader on the Neah Bay Reservation.
Q. Was that the time you were employed in this store that you tell about?—A. No, sir.
Q. What was your position in that store that you tell about?—A. At Neah Bay?
Q. No; where you were employed yourself?—A. I was the owner of it, under the name of the Washington Fur Co., a corporation.
Q. Washington what?—A. Washington Fur Co.
Q. Is that the store in which you say you were doing general merchandizing?—A. We were doing general merchandizing there; yes; but the store I was first telling you about was at Bellingham Bay, at a place called Seahome, now the heart of the city of Bellingham.
Q. Who ran that store?—A. The Bellingham Bay Coal Co.
Q. And who did they deal with?—A. With the settlers in the country there, and coal miners. They were running a coal mine and supplied their own employees out of the store.
Q. And that was all, wasn't it, substantially—one of these company stores?—A. Yes; company store; a general country store.
Q. How large a business did they do?—A. They were doing about—we were carrying a stock there of $40,000 to $50,000 and turning it over about twice a year.
Q. And what was your position?—A. Manager.
Q. Did you have the buying of the goods and all that?—A. I had the ordering. The buying was done in San Francisco by the San Francisco office.

Witness was withdrawn for the present.

EUGENE G. ANDERSON, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. What is your full name, Mr. Anderson?
A. Eugene G.
Q. And you live in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what is your business?—A. The wholesale dry goods business.
Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. I have been connected with this business since January, 1908.
Q. That is in Seattle all the time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you a member of the Seattle association of credit men—is that the name of the corporation?—A. The Seattle Merchants' Association, an association of credit men.
Q. And what is the purpose or object in general of that?—A. It is to conserve the assets of the men that get their affairs in such a shape, and it is really organized with the idea to keep the accounts out of bankruptcy courts in order to conserve the assets.

Q. What committee or body of that organization is in active management of it, the board of trustess?—A. We have a board of trustees, and then we have an adjustment bureau committee. The board of trustees have charge of the business, but they rather delegate the work, which is handled by a sort of a board or committee to handle those matters; but anything that affects the by-laws of the whole institution, other than the adjustment bureau, is taken up before the trustees.

Q. What office, if any, do you hold in the association, Mr. Anderson?—A. I am president of the association at this time.

Q. Has there been a meeting of the trustees within the last three weeks?—A. No; well, let me see——

Q. Formal or informal?—A. I don't know that there has been a meeting of the trustees.

Q. Well, has there been any meeting of any of the members of that association at which you were present, at which meeting the fact that this congressional committee was here from Washington making an inquiry into charges against Judge Hanford——A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that meeting held?—A. Well, now, that meeting took place possibly 10 days ago.

Q. Who were present at it?—A. Well, I might say, in explanation of that committee that met, that it was formed under the following conditions: We had our regular meeting at the Washington Annex here a short while ago——

Mr. HIGGINS. That was on the 10th of July?

Mr. MCCOY. June.

Mr. HIGGINS. Tenth of June?

A. Well, it was along about that time. Probably might have been the 7th or 17th; I rather think it was probably the 17th.

Mr. HIGGINS. Some time in June, was it?

A. Some time in June; yes. That was our last meeting for the summer, and we were taking up some matters then in bankruptcy that were of interest to not only the association here but to the credit men throughout the United States, and that is this Knosher case. We had a report from one of our attorneys in that, giving us information regarding the results of our litigation along that line. At that meeting it was suggested by one of our members that a committee be appointed to confer with the judges of the Federal court to see if we could not get closer cooperation and to have a committee of our representative business men appointed, who, if they suggested a receiver for any particular case, or trustee—a man of experience—why, the creditors, naturally, who are interested in the assets of the company to be conserved, would be the men that would be likely to pick somebody that had had experience enough and was capable in conserving those assets and not dissipating them, and with that idea they instructed me, as the president of the company, to select a committee to go before the judges of the Federal court and see if we could not get closer cooperation, and to eliminate the getting men that were not so capable in handling such affairs, and we would thereby get better results. That is what we were after entirely; that is why we conduct that expensive organization down there—merely to conserve the assets and to keep the individual in business.

Now, how this committee happened to be called at that particular time was that I was called as one to come before you—asked, rather, and inasmuch as this committee had already been appointed, and several of our organization had been called upon under similar circumstances——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). When you speak of this committee, what do you mean, the national committee?

A. The congressional committee. I was called by yourselves, or somebody connected with you, to appear before you and to give some information of some sort, because it was specified, but I felt that inasmuch as a committee of that kind, appointed not in connection with this case or your investigation, but for our individual good or our good collectively, that it was the proper thing to bring it before that committee and to take up the matter and to let them give an expression of what they felt—how they felt about it.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, now, Mr. Anderson, when you met this congressional committee it was suggested to you that we had been told that there were complaints against the results of bankruptcy proceedings, and we suggested to you that you have this committee of the credit men's association compile the figures in regard to such cases as there was serious complaint about and submit the result of your compilation to this committee—that is what we requested, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.—A. However, it was not just that way, because the committee at that time had really not been appointed; I had been authorized to appoint it, but in view of this call from your committee for information, I felt it my duty to name this committee, and I thereby selected twelve or thirteen, I forget how many, I think it was thirteen, really to act on that committee and to meet and to talk over the situation and we met——

Q. (Interrupting.) All the committee you appointed met?—A. The 13? Well, there was a few possibly didn't—one or two or three, I don't remember. Anyway they have the list of the committee as appointed, at the association, and you could get the complete list there if necessary.

Q. That has been submitted to us, I believe, and we have it.—A. I don't know about that. That was my——

Mr. PRESTON. The list of those present was submitted to you?

Mr. MCCOY. I mean those present, yes.

The WITNESS. That was the occasion of the meeting.

Mr. HIGGINS. I want to know who were present. If it already appears in the record, I won't ask you to repeat it.

Mr. MCCOY. We already have in the record, haven't we, the list of those names?

Mr. PRESTON. I read them to you there, I think each one on the committee. You remember we were short some initials.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. I don't know whether they were filled in later or not.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Anderson's brother supplied those initials when he was on the witness stand, as I recall it.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Anderson, the meeting was held, was it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And state to the committee what took place, what was said, and what if anything was done?—A. Well, it was the general sense of the meeting, to this effect, as I recall the situation——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, I prefer, if you can, that you will tell us who spoke at the meeting and what was said by each one who did speak?—A. Well, there was considerable talking going on there and I think the expressions were general and I would rather prefer to answer in a general way.

Q. Well, I am sorry that we can't yield to your preference. We would like to have you state specifically what was said. I will ask you, what did Mr. Goldsmith say? He was at the meeting.—A. Well, let me see. I am supposed to answer everything that is asked me, am I?

The CHAIRMAN. It is your duty to do it, if you can.

A. Well, in that conversation in—I just merely ask that—I didn't know but the representative——

Mr. MCCOY. You are here under subpœna, aren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not volunteer to come here?—A. No. I might say, in that regard, I did not volunteer to come, from the fact in presenting the matter—I will state what I presented to this committee, as I am a member of all committees according to the by-laws: I merely told the committee that this matter had been presented and that it might be advisable that we employ an attorney to merely present to this investigation committee the facts in the various cases that they were interested in, and that might be acceptable to you instead of having the individuals themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The specific question has been asked you, what Mr. Goldsmith said.

A. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you don't mind, I think Mr. Anderson's statement having been preliminary, might better be given further.

A. That is what I thought. And that as far as individuals were concerned that I don't—I didn't believe that it was necessary for the individual to go there without being subpœnaed. If the committee wanted to hear from the various individuals, it would put the individual in a better light and under different conditions if he were subpœnaed and would be called upon to testify. However, it was a matter for the committee to decide whatever action they felt was necessary; that we had some matters that had come up in the bankruptcy court which had not been satisfactorily settled, the assets seemingly have been dissipated instead of conserved, and that was our object—to conserve them—and if we were in a position, as we understood, like the courts in New York were cooperating with the merchants there, to rather get that cooperation and influence of assisting in getting proper trustees, that we could probably overcome a great deal of this. Now, we hadn't tried that and we hadn't even gone before the judges of the Federal court to get that support. The expression of some was to the effect that inasmuch as this was a socialistic movement, been created through that cause——

Mr. HIGGINS. What was that, conserving the assets of the bankrupts?

A. No; inasmuch as this action here of investigation was created through a socialistic movement, that it was unfortunate that possibly the association was called into it, that the socialists would take credit for any action that might be taken, and that any position that——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). Were those views that you expressed in your preliminary statement?

A. No; pardon me; I am getting into somebody else's views there. Let me see if I can—well, I could not attach that, although that was a part of the—I could not attach that directly to the individual that——

The CHAIRMAN. That is, you don't remember who it was that expressed those sentiments?

A. That expressed them? No; I could not just exactly attach that, but there was a sentiment to that effect, and that the information that we had and the cooperation that we wanted might be better attained after this investigation had been made, and to get this cooperation go before the judges, whatever judges were there, and that was why this committee was formed, not to take any action on this particular condition of investigation but to form for a closer cooperation; therefore that committee seemed to feel that they were not authorized to go ahead and take any action, it was a matter for the individual to use his own pleasure and his own disposition until the committee were called upon to go ahead along the line of their appointment, that is, for going before the judges and asking for this consideration.

Q. That is Harold Remington's suggestion, isn't it?

Mr. HIGGINS. How is that question?

Mr. MCCOY. I say, that is Harold Remington's suggestion that you were acting on there?

A. Well, I think he is probably the cause of that action being taken with the New York merchants.

Mr. HIGGINS. Who is Harold Remington?

A. If I understand, he is quite an authority in bankruptcy matters.

Mr. MCCOY. He used to be a bankruptcy attorney in Detroit, and he is now attorney for the National Credit Men's Association.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, come down, Mr. Anderson——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). Just a moment. Do you mean that you were acting under his suggestion when you appointed the committee to confer with the judges?

A. Well, I don't say that; no. I merely state that in the east I got the information through the Credit Men's Association there that they were having—as Mr. Remington is the national—is attorney for the national association and is closely cooperating with the New York association, they have got an understanding with the judges there to the effect that a certain committee appointed by this association, when they suggest a man to take charge of a case in bankruptcy, whether it is receiver or trustee, that the judge is only too glad to cooperate with them, and that he immediately accepts such men as they suggest and they stand responsible for those men being capable.

Mr. MCCOY. Well, now, to get away from that aspect, I want, Mr. Anderson, to come right down to the discussion of the suggestion made by this congressional committee to you and get back to my question. What was it, in detail, that Mr. Goldsmith said at that meeting?

A. Well, Mr. Goldsmith's attitude was this——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't want his attitude, I want what he said, and I want it in just as close detail as you can remember his words.—A. Well, Mr. Goldsmith merely stated—or went on to explain the great work that Judge Hanford had done here and the great amount of work that he had been compelled to do, which took a great deal of his time both day and night; that the Government had not given him any relief and that there had been times in the history and the life of Seattle when Judge Hanford had stood out as a man in cases here where it required a man of considerable nerve, and I disrecall—I think it was some Chinese affair that was here, and he told them what they could do and what they could not do.

Mr. HIGGINS. At the time of the Chinese riots?

A. I think that was probably it. That was before my time. And that he felt like it would be very unjust in the merchants here to go ahead and to take some position against the judge without having first taken these matters up with the judge, letting him know how the merchants and the individuals feel who are connected with these cases, and asking him for this cooperation, and that he felt that it was not right for us to take the position. I think that is——

Mr. MCCOY. What else did he say about Judge Hanford?

A. Well, he spoke about Judge Hanford's probably going to excess in liquor, that he didn't doubt but what the judge, in order to keep himself physically able to stand the strain, had taken more or less drinks; that he didn't know about, he was just speaking of the matter in a general way—he knew that criticism was up—and he presumed that with all of the terrible strain that he had had to go through with in handling these great cases and the work that came before him, that he might have felt it necessary to take stimulant, as a great many others do when they come to a strain of that kind.

Q. Well, what else, if anything?—A. Well, he stated that he did not take any position that we didn't have grounds that we wanted to take up with the court to try to get improved and more cooperation; he wanted to act on the committee, but he felt that the committee was not called upon to take any action at this time, which it was not. I told him that was a fact, and therefore the matter rested that way. If they were subpœnaed, it was up to the individual to give such information as was wanted in any case, or anything else.

Q. Did he say anything about the possible effect on any individual who might volunteer to give information to this congressional committee?—A. I don't know that Mr. Goldsmith made any statement of that kind. I don't doubt but what there was some expression of that kind given there.

Q. Well, if you remember, who did express any such belief?—A. Well, the expressions were general and they were the—only the general expression made any impression on the individual there, just the general situation. I could not say definitely about anybody making that expression. I don't know that they did. I know the expression was made, but I don't think it was made by one. It may have been made by several, don't you know, but I could not say definitely.

Q. That is your recollection, that it was made by several?—A. Well, I think it could easily be by two or three, but I could not absolutely—I could not say definitely who it was. Naturally I suppose that there may have been a feeling in the minds of everybody to that effect; that condition was there, but whether it was said or whether it was not said, it is the same thing, it don't make any difference.

Q. I wish, Mr. Anderson, that you would try to give us any definite statement along that line that you heard there?—A. Well, I have certainly given you everything that——

Q. (Interrupting.) I mean along the line of not wishing to cooperate with this congressional committee for fear of consequences. Can't you state some definite statement that was made?—A. Oh, as far as any consequences was concerned, it was merely a matter of an individual coming up voluntarily in a matter of this kind. No, I could not give you anything of that kind. If I could I would give it to you.

Q. Was it stated there, or not, that Judge Hanford was in the habit of resenting any criticism or anything of that kind?—A. No, I think not. I can almost say positively not.

Q. Was there anything said to the effect that he was in the habit of resenting and showing his resentment at any attacks on his friends?—A. I have heard such criticisms.

Q. But was anything said at that meeting to that effect?—A. There may have been, but I could not attach that to anybody there.

Q. You say there may have been. Was there?—A. I could not answer that.

Q. Well, is the impression now in your mind that there was something to that effect said at that meeting?—A. I don't think there was anything said there to—any more than you hear in a general way, and I could not say whether I heard anything of that kind there or whether I heard it just in common expression.

Q. Well, you have no recollection at all as to whether——A. (Interrupting.) No.

Q. (Continuing.) That condition was expressed by anybody or hinted at by anybody at that meeting?—A. I could not say positively about that.

Q. How long did the meeting last?—A. Possibly three-quarters of an hour or an hour.

Q. The net result of that was that that committee decided, as you have stated, not to cooperate in any way with this congressional committee?—A. Not as a committee; no.

Q. Not as a committee?—A. Not as a committee; yes, sir.

Q. That you would leave it to this committee to issue such subpœnaes as they saw fit to?—A. That was the idea; yes.

Q. Was that conclusion based, or stated to be based, upon the fear that any member there that the committee had that unless they were compelled to come by virtue of a subpœna their testifying might result unfavorably to them in any way?—A. Well, I think there was a feeling manifest there to the effect—one of the feelings was, as I indicated in the beginning, that it was a socialistic movement, and there was considerable feeling that Judge Hanford's action, as there is always a conclusion reached, whether it is from newspaper articles or otherwise—to the effect that the judge was right in his decision in this disfranchisement, and there was also that feeling, which you can appreciate, I believe, of the individuals coming out and taking a position in a case of this kind in a matter of this importance.

Q. Now, did your committee suggest or did anybody suggest at that meeting that somebody be sent to this congressional committee to ascertain whether the committee was appointed merely because of the action of Judge Hanford in the Olsson case?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. That is the case involving the disfranchisement?—A. Not to my knowledge. No; I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the committee have knowledge that the congressional committee were instructed to inquire into Judge Hanford's conduct along all lines?

A. I don't know whether——

Q. That it was not confined to the Olsson case?—A. I told them I had gotten the impression that it was to be a general investigation and was not based on that, but there seemed to be an idea there that that would be given credit for it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did the committee discuss the question, if they were opposed to socialism, as to whether the best way to oppose it was to deny it apparent justice?—A. I don't think that phase of it went into it. It was just merely that outward condition.

Q. It could not be killed off that way, by denying it a fair hearing or fair treatment—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand you, when the meeting came together in the first instance there was sort of a general understanding that it would take some action in the way of coperating with the congressional committee, but that after you talked the subject over the members of your committee generally came to the conclusion that their individual interest might suffer if they did that?—A. I don't know that; I don't know that that expression was made; it might have been there, but not necessarily made.

Q. It was not a concrete expression, but it was the general understanding there was there. Nobody stated that in that way, but was that the concrete understanding?—A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) That if you did volunteer to aid the congressional committee, you might do it at the risk of your individual interests?—A. No; no. The committee did not feel called upon to take any position, inasmuch as it was appointed for a different object, merely to get cooperation and to intercede with the judge. However, as individuals they were interested and as an organiza ion. Had it been the board of trustees acting in the matter, that question may have come up for settlement and some action taken, but inasmuch as they were merely appointed for a certain purpose that they did not feel called upon to take any action. Therefore——

Q. (Interrupting.) You have already stated, as I understand you, the discussion took the form that such action on your part as was proposed—that is, action volunteering assistance to the congressional committee—might result injuriously to the members of the committee and the association which you represented. I clearly understood the drift of your answers to Mr. McCoy to mean that much. Was I right?—A. I have stated to you the conversation that took place there, and you may be right in some instances, as far as individuals were concerned, but not as a committee.

Q. The interest of the business men is to prevent bankruptcies, if possible?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Every bankrupt estate, if the stock be a large one, demoralizes the trade in the city where it takes place?—A. Well, you have an illustration here of the—not the conserving of assets, just stated prior to my coming to the stand, where they had 80 per cent of assets and they paid us 3½ per cent, and we are trying to eliminate that.

Q. In what case?—A. In the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. I think that was the figures shown there.

Q. Well, I suppose it is a general rule that when there is a large stock of goods in bankruptcy the purchasers of such goods are very apt to go there rather than to the stores that are doing the general business?—A. Well, it all depends on how they are run. Naturally there is a whirlwind to start with, but it usually takes men of experience to operate corporations of any kind.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. How long has your association been organized, Mr. Anderson?—A. Possibly 15 years; I don't know exactly.

Q. How long have you been president of it?—A. I have only been president of the association this year.

Q. It is affiliated with what national organization?—A. Seattle Association of Credit Men.

Q. What national organization? Is that the name of the national organization?—A. No, the national—the association of credit men—National Association of Credit Men.

Q. Is there any other national association?—A. No.

Q. The meeting that was held in June was the regular meeting of the association?—A. The regular monthly meeting, yes.

Q. Had there been notice given to the members of the association that the matter of the appointment of a committee to confer with judges would be considered?—A. No; that was a matter that came up in the meeting.

Q. Who brought that up?—A. Mr. Fred T. Fischer proposed the—I think, however, I suggested the matter to him.

Q. Fred T. Fischer moved the adoption of the resolution?—A. Of Fischer Bros.

Q. Was there a record kept of the vote?—A. Yes.

Q. I wish you would bring that. Have you that vote?—A. Sir?

Q. Have you a copy of that vote with you?—A. Well, it was a majority vote. Well, very much of a majority vote. It carried.

Q. And your secretary recorded the vote?—A. Oh, yes—not by the individual, but as an organization.

Q. I mean the text of the resolution which was adopted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was recorded in the minutes of the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you bring that to the committee?—A. Yes, sir; I can.

Q. The purpose of that committee, Mr. Anderson, was to act on the suggestion of the national organization to confer with all of the United States judges in this section of the country?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Well, then, what was it?—A. Merely an idea that presented itself there. It was suggested by myself, Mr. Fischer sitting near to me, and after we had heard the expression there of one of our attorneys, in the Knosher case——

Q. (Interrupting.) You mean your brother?—A. Yes. [Continuing:] Why, I leaned over to Mr. Fischer and asked him if it would not be a good plan for us to cooperate here with our judges and try to get a similar arrangement. I told him that this arrangement was in New York and—no; I got up after the report of the attorney.

Q. I think that is exactly what I said.—A. No; you asked whether that was not a suggestion from the national association.

Q. Well, why did you do it?—A. Simply we wanted this cooperation. The attorney gave this report of the Knosher case and what results they had attained.

Q. How did the suggestion come to you that such action should be taken?—A. Well, I got it when I was in New York. I addressed it——

Q. (Interrupting.) You got it from the national association?—A. No. No; this was a meeting of the New York association. I addressed the association there in February.

Q. That is the New York State Association?—A. The New York City, and they told me there that they had this cooperation there. And when the attorney had gotten through talking about this Knosher case, I leaned over to Mr. Fischer and told him the situation they had in New York, and why couldn't we get a similar arrangement here. He thought it would be fine and he said he would bring the matter up and make a motion, which he did.

Q. And you will furnish the committee a copy of that motion, will you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you called on the committee at their rooms at the Washington Annex?—A. No, sir.

Q. I mean the congressional committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. You talked with members of the committee?—A. Somebody purporting to have been representing the committee, yes, sir.

Q. And after that talk, Mr. Anderson, what did you do, if anything, toward bringing the matter before this special committee which you appointed?—A. I appointed the committee and called it together, as already stated.

Q. And hadn't the committee been appointed before that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Hadn't the committee that was authorized in the meeting of about the 10th of June been appointed before this congressional committee came in?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, so after you had talked with members——A. (Interrupting.) I might say this, the committee was appointed the day we met, called up by phone and got there as an emergency matter

Q. What was the date of that?—A. Whatever the date was. The report of the association will show, if you want that.

Q. When was the committee appointed?—A. At the date we met. I don't know.

Q. But it was after this congressional committee had come to Seattle?—A. Oh, yes, after I had been approached in the matter, and the committee had been called together from the fact at that time that I had been requested to appear before the committee.

Q. You appointed this committee authorized by the motion of the meeting of June 10, after you had conferred with members of this committee or somebody representing them?—A Yes, sir.

Q. And how many meetings has that committee held, Mr. Anderson?—A. Just one.

Q. That is the one that you are relating?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What action did it take?—A. Merely as I have stated.

Q. Well, was there a formal vote passed?—A. I presume there was; yes.

Q. Who was the secretary? Did you have one?—A. Yes; Mr. F. S. Hills was the secretary and Mr. C. S. Wills, the treasurer of the Seattle Hardware Co., acted as chairman.

Q. Were there records kept of that meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you see that the committee has the record of that meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that committee adjourn without day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Considered its duty performed under the resolution?—A. No; the committee is still intact.

Q. How?—A. The committee is intact, to be called at some future date.

Q. So it is——A. (Interrupting.) To act in the matter in which it was appointed to act.

Q. It has not been discharged?—A. No.

Q. Nor made any report to the power appointing it?—A. That was at the meeting.

Q. Well, to the association?—A. The matter is on record.

Q. I didn't get your answer.—A. I say, the matter is on record; what you have asked for here.

Q. Did this committee make a report to any subsequent meeting of the credit men's association?—A. No.

Q. Or the trustees of the credit men's association?—A. No; there will be no meeting until September——

Q. (Interrupting.) Now, what industries, Mr. Anderson, were represented upon that special committee that you appointed?—A. Well, it was pretty general. The manufacturers—shoe manufacturer, he happened to be unable to come; however, he is one of the committee; a mattress and furniture factory, hardware, groceries, wholesale produce; there was kind of a general committee of the representative lines; a banker was on the committee; he was unable to be there, but he was a part of the committee.

Q. Well——A. The idea was to touch all the various branches of our mercantile life.

Q. And it did, in fact, you think?—A. Well, I think it did. That was the object.

Q. Now, at that meeting, as I understand you to say, reference was made to estates which had not been conserved?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who brought that before this special committee?—A. That was the object of our association.

Q. I understand; but what member of the committee brought that up for discussion?—A. I don't know. I might have brought it up myself. I would not say. I have brought it up a great many times.

Q. What estates, Mr. Anderson, have not been conserved?—A. Well, naturally we think of the ones that we are particularly interested in.

Q. I wish you would give the committee the names of them.—A. We, as has been stated here, were one of the largest—I don't know, we may have been the largest creditor of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.

Mr. PRESTON. You mean of the local creditors?

A. Yes. Of course, there were other large creditors—foreign creditors.

Mr. HIGGINS. Give the names of all the estates which you have in mind, which you know as a fact have not been conserved in the administration of the Federal bankrupt law.

A. Well, I would only speak knowingly of two cases and of one only in part, and that is the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. and the Charles Knosher Co. The McCarthy Dry Goods Co. failure took place prior to my coming here to Seattle, but I had all the advantages of the loss after I came.

Q. Those are the two that you had in mind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any more that you had in mind?—A. Any more that I knew of, do you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Anything that I had—it would be just a matter of hearsay.

Q. Well, while that was under discussion in that committee, what other gentlemen mentioned estates that had not been conserved?—A. Oh, I don't know. The discussion came up regarding this Western Steel affair, how the receivers——

Q. (Interrupting.) The committee have the papers and propose themselves to make an investigation, unless you want to state it. It was the Washington Steel.——A. Western Steel.

Mr. PRESTON. You have the papers in that, Mr. Higgins.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Preston misunderstood you. You said you had the papers in that.

Mr. HIGGINS. I said we had the papers in that and proposed ourselves to take it up, unless Mr. McCoy wants him to make some statement.

Mr. PRESTON. You have no personal knowledge of the affairs of the Western Steel Co., have you?

A. Only a matter of hearsay.

Q. You are not a creditor of the Western Steel Corporation?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are not a stockholder?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or holder of security?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor interested in any way?——A. Not at all; no, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) In its affairs, either before the trustee was appointed or after the trustee was appointed, at any time?—A. Not at any time.

Q. I wish you would state to the committee all other estates which you know, either by hearsay or in any other way, were brought to your attention as president of the Seattle Credit Men's Association, or that you heard any members of the Seattle Credit Men's Association, or that you have heard any business men in Seattle, or elsewhere, that were in the jurisdiction of Judge Hanford's court, name the estate that had not been conserved, either of your own knowledge or those that you have heard other business men speak of?—A. Well, the only cases that I know come to my mind particularly——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't ask you for your own information, but for facts that you had related to you or cases that you had mentioned to you by business men in this community?—A. Of course, the only case that would make any impression on the individual would be the case that he was interested in particularly himself, or some big case that would rather make an impression from that standpoint, and the only——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is an explanation of your answer. Please answer the question, if you can?—A. Well, that is the only answer I can give you, is the ones I have already named, and this fish concern which I see by the paper you are already investigating. The others were all just a matter of general conditions. I don't know whether——

Q. (Interrupting.) That is, you want to say to the committee that in your position as president of the Seattle Credit Men's Association, and during your association with one of the largest dry goods stores on the coast and in touch with credit affairs of Seattle, that you can only furnish to the committee the names of the three—that is, the Knosher case, the McCarthy Dry Goods, and the Western Steel and the Fisheries proceeding?—A. I think that is all that I can state definitely.

Q. And there were no other cases except those four that have ever been brought before your association?—A. Might have been a great many. We don't take up cases there to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Won't you name them, if they were?—A. If I could I would.

Q. But you are not able to——A. Not able to.

Q. (Continuing.) Name more than four?—A. I would name every one of them if I could give them to you.

Q. You don't favor a repeal of the bankruptcy law, do you?—A. Not in the least. I want it simply cooperated with and acted for the conservation of these estates.

Q. Well, what do you mean by "conservation of estates" and "cooperation"?—A. Well, we want to get something out of them; we don't want them all—we don't want the attorneys and the receivers to get all the money and when it comes down to the people that have got the money in it and are making the loss, to lose it all.

Q. You have the opportunity, you understand, to appear on the matter of allowances?—A. We probably are at fault in some of those conditions.

Q. But you understand that you do have that opportunity?—A. Yes.

Q. And has your association arranged with its attorney or attorneys to appear in all bankruptcy cases?—A. I think they have not; I think probably they have been a little lax in that regard.

Q. That was not what I asked you. I asked you if they did, not why they didn't.—A. I can't say prior to my being in office just what action they have taken. That would be our action from this time on.

Q. Well, do you now; have you since——A. (Interrupting.) What?

Q. Has the association since you have been president?—A. As far as my knowledge is concerned, we have.

Q. In what cases?—A. Well, really I am not interested—I want to give you an explanation——

Q. (Interrupting). I want your best information.—A. Now, of course, you think that my being president, that I am in touch with all of it. We have special committees that handle each case, of the houses interested, and therefore it never comes to my knowledge at all. That is it.

Q. I wish you would suggest to the committee, then, the names of the men in the association who would have a greater knowledge of particular cases than you would have.—A. Well, any particular case that comes up before the creditors interested, a committee of the three largest creditors have that in charge; they go ahead with their investigation, and the conduct of the assets of that concern or individual, and whatever they do is the best knowledge.

Question read.

A. Well, the secretary. However, we have made a change in secretaries. The secretary would be in touch with all cases.

Q. What is his name?—A. F. S. Hills, the present secretary; the former secretary was Mr. I. H. Jennings.

Q. Anybody else?—A. Mr. George H. Telford, who is the assistant secretary.

Q. Anybody else?—A. Mr. George H. Black, of the Black Manufacturing Co., was the former—he was formerly connected with the association as president. He may know some individual cases.

Q. Anybody else?—A. Mr. Chester E. Roberts was the president prior to that time. He may have some individual cases. Of course, you have got the entire membership there, if you want to—each one may have an individual experience. All the representative houses are——

Q. (Interrupting). Have you stated all that you can—that you think have information of cases where estates have not been conserved?—A. As far as I know, yes.

Q. In the administration of the bankruptcy law?—A. Yes.

Q. It has been suggested, Mr. Anderson, that your committee—and it so appears in the record, perhaps, by suggestion—that your committee, or that a committee of your association, was to present to this congressional committee cases in which they thought that by reason of allowances of trustee fees or attorney fees bankrupt estates had not been properly administered, and that through intimidation or other means that committee was persuaded not to collate those facts, a suggestion, possibly, which might mean something in the nature of a conspiracy on the part of your association to withhold from this committee the true state of facts relative to the administration of the bankrupt law in this jurisdiction.—A. That is absolutely not a fact; no such understanding, or anything else.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to ask Mr. Anderson a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Do so.

Mr. PRESTON. I think I can be brief.

Q. When you had your committee meeting, somebody—I am not clear whether you said it was yourself or somebody else——A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing.) Referred to certain unsatisfactory cases in bankruptcy. Will you tell the committee what cases were there named by name?—A. Well, I think I have spoken of the only ones that came directly to my particular knowledge and the only ones that have been taken up. Of course it had to be a very serious case before we will take up a question and push it to a conclusion.

Q. I don't believe you quite understood me. I asked you which cases were named by name at your meeting.—A. Well, whether there were any particular cases named or not, our association has had up the Knosher case, and possibly that would be the one that would be named, and also the one of the Western Steel that was named. That is the only one I could say was named at that meeting.

Q. Now, can you state now and will you state the name of any other bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding in Judge Hanford's cour concerning which you have heard criticism, other than the four cases which you have named, the McCarthy Dry Goods case——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). He has already stated that he could not, that all he knew was these four cases; that those were the only cases that he could tell of his own knowledge or of hearsay.

The CHAIRMAN. You may answer Mr. Preston's question.

A. Those are the only ones that I have on my mind. The others would be just passed over, would not make any difference to me one way or the other.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, can you name now any other case——

A. No other.

Q. (Continuing.) That you have heard a cirticism on?—A. No.

Q. Sir?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, as I understand, the practice of your association is that when there is a failure the three principal creditors interested in that particular failure become the committee to handle it for the association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or rather for the members of the association?—A. For the ones interested.

Q. Yes. So that each failure has its own committee from your body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does each of those committees select an attorney for the purposes of that particular case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that attorney acts in the matter, in that particular matter, in court, that particular phase of it.—A. In connection with the committee.

Q. Sir?—A. In connection with the committee.

Q. Is it the general rule or custom that that attorney named by this committee of the case becomes attorney in the case for the trustee, if it is a bankruptcy case?—A. You mean becomes trustee?

Q. Yes.—A. Attorney for the trustee.

Q. No; attorney for the trustee.—A. Well, I think that would naturally follow and usually is the custom.

Q. That is the general rule?—A. Unless there is some reason for change.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about Mr. Goldsmith's attitude, to see if I correctly understood it.

Mr. PRESTON. If the committee will permit me to put the question in that way?

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. PRESTON. I understood you to say that Mr. Goldsmith in his remarks referred to the public services that Judge Hanford had rendered to the community?

A. The matter of loyal spirit, nothing else.

Q. Also referred to the arduous labors that he had performed—— A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) As a matter of common knowledge in the community?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then took the position that in so much as your association had never gone to Judge Hanford before the congressional committee came here to criticise him, that it was not just the right thing to send a committee to go before the congressional committee?—A. Yes.

Q. That is the sum and substance, boiled down, of this attitude, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir. That was the expression he made and seemed to be concurred in by all members of the committee—or, I say all, I mean all but one.

Mr. McCoy. All but one, you say?

A. Yes.

Mr. Preston. Then, as I understand it, the matter was also referred to that this committee had been appointed for the purpose of securing future cooperation?

A. Yes.

Q. And that this particular matter that was then brought before them was outside their functions?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Preston. I will ask first if the committee would deem it proper for me to inquire from Mr. Anderson who the gentleman was who approached him, claiming to be your representative. I don't want to ask it if you think it ought not to be asked.

Mr. McCoy. Yes; personally I don't care.

The Chairman. The committee has no objection.

Mr. Preston. Did you understand me, Mr. Anderson?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was it?—A. John Perry—I think it was John—anyway the attorney.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. What did he say to you?—A. John?

Q. Yes.—A. He merely asked——

Q. (Interrupting.) I mean as far as this committee was concerned?—A. He merely asked if the committee were interested in getting all information regarding cases of all kinds in a general way, that they would be very glad to have an expression from the business men regarding lines that they had heard rumors of in bankruptcy matters. I think I have——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is there a Mr. Klock who was on your committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he at this meeting of the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he had been to the committee, hadn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean he had met with this congressional committee in person and was not approached through Mr. Perry in any way?—A. Yes; as far as I know. I don't know anything about Mr. Perry. He said that he had been here.

Q. Well, at any rate, he had met with this committee?—A. Yes.

Q. And he stated to your committee at that meeting what the attitude of the congressional committee was toward this whole matter?—A. Absolutely.

Q. As nearly as you can recollect, state what he repeated, what conversation he had had with this congressional committee.—A. Well, it was merely to that effect, that they were trying to secure all information they could regarding all matters and that he thought it was the proper time for the business men to come out and give such information as they had, so as to assist the committee.

Q. That is, to assist the congressional committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he the man who dissented from Mr. Goldsmith's views?—A. Well, Mr. Klock, as I have stated—there was one that did not have that same feeling as indicated by the meeting and by the various members, and voted no. I think the vote was unanimous, with the exception of the one.

Q. Well, who was he?—A. That was Mr. Klock.

Q. Now, the impression you left on my mind in testifying in answer to my question was this: That Mr. Goldsmith meant to indicate to your meeting there that in view of Judge Hanford's services to the community as he had stated them, it would be a pity for your committee to render any assistance to the congressional committee.—A. No. No; he took the position in the first place that our committee was not appointed for that purpose, therefore we should take no action, and it did not seem to him that as an association that we should take any action, and that was the general expression. But Mr. Goldsmith's attitude was a matter of praise for the service that had been obtained, but it was in no way along the line of intimidating the individual as far as it personally went.

Q. I didn't say "intimidating."—A. Yes.

Q. I wish you would get that out of your mind. I don't presume you gentlemen could be intimidated.——A. No; I didn't mean to infer——

Q. (Continuing.) But what I said was that Mr. Goldsmith said, in substance, that it would be a pity to cooperate with this congressional committee——A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) In bringing out anything that might affect Judge Hanford——A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) In view of his services to the community.—A. No; I could not say that.

Q. Well, then, what connection did his statement of Judge Hanford's services in the community, in the matter of Chinese riots and what not, have to do with the matter at all?—A. A matter of sentiment, I expect.

Q. Isn't that just exactly the point, that it was treated from a sentimental point of view, and the clear intimation was that it would be a pity, sentimentally to do anything that might seem hostile to a judge or a person who had rendered such service to the comminuty?—A. I expect there is a good deal in that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all with Mr. Anderson?

Mr. MCCOY. There is just one question more:

Q. You say that you came to Seattle, Mr. Anderson, and inherited the disaster of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about—of your personal knowledge that is—about the attempt to get a bid for the assets of that concern?—A. At the beginning?

Q. At the beginning?—A. No.

Q. Do you know anything about the—when was it you came to Seattle?—A. January, 1908.

Q. At that time the business was being carried on by the receiver, wasn't it?—A. The McCarthy Dry Goods Co.; yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what do you know about the carrying on of the business from the time you came here?—A. Well, I know it was losing money all the time it was run, continuously.

Q. Did you know that from time to time as it was losing money?—A. Why, I think we were aware of that fact.

Q. Did you make any protest against the carrying on of the business?—A. Only with the receiver.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. Well, I had very little connection with the receiver. Of course I was getting in touch with our business at that time, and I found a great many things to take my attention, but I recall one or two occasions where I had a talk with the receiver to the effect that I felt that the business could be disposed of and show a larger return of dividends to the creditors if they would sell it out, dispose of it.

Q. How early after tour arrival in Seattle was it that you made any such suggestion?—A. Oh, along in the spring.

Q. Did you know anything about the attempt to sell the assets to some man from somewhere, Montana or Salt Lake City, or somewhere else?—A. No.

Mr. McCoy. What was his name?

Mr. Baxter. Mr. Strain.

Mr. McCoy. Somebody named Strain?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of that before?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever conferred with about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any creditors who were?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other creditors who ever complained to the receiver against continuing the business?—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether the credit men's association, or its secretary, or anybody connected with it, ever undertook to have him discontinue the business?—A. No; not to my knowledge.

Q. Well, have you ever heard that any such thing was done?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Higgins. What business is Mr. Klock in?

A. Produce—wholesale produce.

Q. You will bring the commitete vote, will you, Mr. Anderson?—A. The committee would be—yes; you want the list of the names of the committee that were there?

Q. No; the votes that you took a memorandum of.

The Chairman. The resolution and vote.

A. Merely. Yes; we will be very glad to bring that to you.

Mr. Preston. Roll call?

Mr. Higgins. No; I don't care who voted, but I want to know what the vote was.

The Witness. Yes.

By Mr. Preston:

Q. Mr. Anderson, did the Western Dry Goods Co., your concern, sell the receiver of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. goods during the receivership?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A considerable quantity of them?—A. Well, quite a good many, I have an idea.

Q. Forty or fifty thousand dollars in all, perhaps?—A. I would not say.

Q. Give us your best recollection of the aggregate amount.—A. Well, I would not know whether it was twenty or fifty.

Q. It may have gone to 50?—A. Might have; I doubt it.

Q. You were paid spot cash for those by the receiver?—A. Whenever they were due.

Q. You speak of making a protest to Mr. Baxter, as receiver, about longer continuing the business, and you said it was some time in the spring of 1908. Does your memory serve you to make a more definite statement of the time?—A. No; I could not say. I presume it was along anywhere from April to—along about April, I would suppose; along in there somewhere.

Q. Were you two together alone at the time or was some one else present?—A. Well, the vice president of our company at one time was with me when I saw Mr. Baxter, P. J. Smith.

Q. You spoke of making a protest. Did you make more than one?—A. Well, possibly in the way of—I think there was probably twice that we took the matter up.

Q. Once you were alone with him?—A. Well, I would not say whether I was alone or whether Mr. Smith was there both times.

Q. Once Mr. Smith was with you?—A. Once or twice.

Q. Just what did you say to him? You call it a protest?—A. Well, I merely took the position that I thought the assets of the business could be better conserved by disposing of that stock. In fact, we had a party then that might have been interested at a reasonable figure. I think it is—my recollection was that we could have paid about 25 per cent on the liability at that time—the remaining liability.

Q. If you could have sold?—A. Yes.

Q. If the receiver could have sold. Now, does your memory serve you as to Mr. Baxter's response to your protest or suggestion, whichever it may have been?—A. Well, he did not seem to be agreeable to considering a proposition of that kind. That was the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did he give any reason to you?—A. Well, I suggested to him that might be disposed of, but he thought he could handle it longer and dispose of it to better advantage. That was the conclusion that he reached.

Q. You came here in January, 1908?—A. Yes.

Q. The 1st of January?—A. Twenty-seventh.

Q. How long was it after you came here that the first conversation with Mr. Baxter to which you have referred occurred?—A. Well, I would not say. It was sometime in April or later.

Q. Who was this party that you had in view of buying the stock?—A. Buying the stock?

Q. The possible purchaser of the stock?—A. Why, it seems to me it was a fellow by the name of Hubbell, the Hubbell Bros.

Q. Were they in business up here——A. They were on Pike Street at one time.

Q. Seventh and Pike?—A. Somewhere up in there; yes.

Q. Now, wasn't it possible that that conversation took place in the fall of 1908, instead of the spring, as you say?—A. Well, the assets at that time, as I remember it, would bring about 25 per cent on the price that I thought would be reasonable in the condition of the stock.

Q. Well, now, wasn't it in the fall that that conversation took place?—A. No; I would think it was more, as I have stated, in the spring of the year, along in April or May; somewhere along there.

Mr. PRESTON. I think that is all, Mr. Chairman.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. You were asked, Mr. Anderson, something about the objections of business men here to the administration of the bankruptcy law. Is not one of your strong objections to this scheme of double administration, where you put a receiver in, or where the court does and the court makes an order that he may run the business, and that he runs the business, and he gets these double allowances of receiver, practically, and then having done all the work practically of the winding up of the estate, except the distribution, he turns the estate over to the trustee, who in a number of instances is himself, and again gets fees out of it as trustee, and that attorneys' fees are paid to attorneys for the receiver, who in turn become attorneys for the trustee and again receive fees in that capacity, although as trustee the individual practically does nothing except take money in one hand and pass it out by the other?—A. Absolutely. That is the abuse that is being made of it.

Mr. Preston. May we have how many cases of that kind you know of?

A. I have already indicated the only ones that I call to mind.

Mr. Preston. That is all.

Mr. McCoy. Well, do you know whether or not that is the complaint which is generally made by business men in the city?

A. That is the—that is the abuse that we all have foremost in our minds when we try to keep it out of these courts; otherwise, we would be glad to put it in the bankruptcy court. That is the natural place for it to go.

Q. Do they make complaint also against the business ability of those who are appointed receivers?—A. Absolutely.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. That is, they want a dry goods man to administer a bankrupt estate of a dry goods merchant?—A. Well, we don't think a man ought to be appointed when he———

The Chairman (interrupting). Will you please answer?

Mr. Higgins. Is that their view?

A. Well, naturally he would be a man of practical experience.

Q. They want a grocer to administer the affairs of a bankrupt grocerman?—A. They want a practical man, business man that———

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, that is the general view of your association?—A. Absolutely.

Q. Do you know of a jurisdiction in the country where it is done?—A. I am not familiar with other conditions.

Mr. McCoy. Well, you would be willing to take a business man in active business and with good experience and ability even if he did not happen to be in the particular line in which the bankrupt was, wouldn't you?—A. If he had shown himself capable and gotten results in a business way, had a good business experience, why, it is a matter of horse sense.

Witness excused.

Mr. Preston. I notice Mr. Goldsmith here in the room.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the sense of the committee that we continue sitting until 1 o'clock and take a short recess at this time.

Short recess.

JAMES S. GOLDSMITH, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. HIGGINS. What is your full name?

A. James S. Goldsmith.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Seattle.

Q. What is your business?—A. Wholesale grocer.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. Are you a member of the Seattle Credit Men's Association?—A. Our firm is.

Q. How long have you been?—A. Since it started.

Q. You were a member of a special committee that was appointed some time in June, at the monthly meeting of the Seattle Credit Men's Association?—A. I was not appointed at the Seattle Credit Men's Association.

Q. Well, I don't keep in mind the name of your——A. I will explain that matter by saying that I knew nothing of the action of the association. The first intimation I had was when Mr. Anderson rung me up on the telephone.

Q. What did he say?—A. Mr. Anderson said that he wanted me to act on a special committee to see if we could not get into closer relations with Judge Hanford regarding trusteeships and bankrupts matters.

Q. Did you tell him first that you would serve?—A. I told him first I would not, would not.

Q. Did you afterwards serve?—A. Yes; I afterwards served with him.

Q. How many meetings did you have?—A. One.

Q. Where?—A. Merchant association rooms.

Q. When?—A. Tuesday, three weeks ago yesterday.

Q. Three weeks ago yesterday?—A. Yes, sir, 5 o'clock.

Q. Who called that meeting?—A. Mr. Anderson.

Q. How was it called?—A. As far as I was concerned, by telephone.

Q. And did Mr. Anderson call your attention to any particular matter that that meeting was to consider?—A. No, sir, except to get in closer relations with Judge Hanford regarding trusteeships and bankruptcy matters.

Q. Well, to carry out the purposes for which you understood this committee was appointed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you may state in your own way, if you will, what occurred at that meeting, and what this committee finally concluded, if it considered anything?—A. I went to the meeting at 5 o'clock and was the first one present. The other members gradually came in. I think within 10 minutes they were all there. Do you want the names of the others?

Q. Yes; you may give them. I think they all appear in the record. You heard Mr. Anderson's testimony?—A. Part of it.

Q. Well, you agree with him as to who were present?—A. Well, I don't know who he said were present.

Q. Well, you may state them.—A. Mr. Wills, Mr. Fischer, Mr. Hardiman——

Q. Give the initials, if you can?—A. I haven't them. Mr. Klock——

Q. That is H. L. Klock, isn't it?—A. I don't know what his initials are.

Q. And C. S. Wills?—A. Mr. Anderson, Mr. Hassen——

Q. That is Eugene G. Anderson, president of the association?—A. Yes, sir. Perry Polson, Mr. Black—I don't know his initials—and myself.

Q. George C. Black, isn't it?—A. I think it is. J. S. Goldsmith. I think that we started the discussion really before the meeting opened. Mr. Klock was present and stated——

Q. (Interrupting.) You mean by that that there was informal talk?—A. Yes, sir, before the meeting opened, as they came in. And Mr. Klock stated that this meeting had been called for the purpose of assisting the committee in preferring charges against Judge Hanford. I immediately said that the meeting had not been called for that purpose, and, as far as I was concerned, I was not in it; that if any individual wanted to assist the committee, that they were at perfect liberty to do so, but that as far as I was concerned I wished to take no part in it. Then the discussion went on and Mr. Klock said that while the committee was here he felt it fair to assist them and that something was due the fair name of Seattle to help this committee out. He said that he had talked to the committee regarding this matter and that the committee were quite anxious to get information from the merchants.

Mr. McCoy. You mean the congressional committee?

A. The congressional committee; yes, sir. And I said I didn't see what charges could be brought up against Judge Hanford. And Mr. Klock said there was the case of the Hanford Irrigation Co., that Judge Hanford had obtained this land in a rather secret way. I said—he said that he had furnished a man some money to go over there and buy some of this land.

Mr. Preston. Who had?

A. Mr. Klock had, and then when the man went over there he found he was unable to buy any of this land.

Mr. Higgins. From the Hanford Irrigation Co.?

A. From the State.

Q. Well, are you able to state, from the Hanford Irrigation Co., the railroad, or the State?—A. From the State. And I said I didn't see what Judge Hanford had to do in that matter, that Commissioner Roff, land commissioner of the State, had that in charge, and if there was anything wrong about it, he probably was the responsible man. Well, then he went on about some other matters——

Q. (Interrupting.) This was all in your informal talk?—A. Yes, sir. Then——

Q. (Interrupting.) I wish you would indicate, if you continue, when the meeting was called to order.—A. Yes.

Q. So that we may know what particular discussion was informal and what after the meeting was called to order?—A. When Mr. Anderson suggested that Mr. Wills act as chairman, and that Mr. Hills act as secretary, which was carried. Then the discussion again was rather informal, everybody saying what they thought about the matter, and I said some more things regarding the whole situation, that I had known Judge Hanford for something like 25 years——

Q. (Interrupting.) Who suggested at that point, Mr. Goldsmith, as I understand him now, after your meeting had organized and the secretary had been appointed, who stated the purpose and object of the meeting called together?—A. Mr. Anderson.

Q. And what did he state them to be?—A. Well, that this meeting had been called for the purpose of working closer on bankruptcy matters and that the committee was out here investigating matters in a general way and that it would be an opportune time for us to take these matters up with the committee.

Q. He stated that this congressional committee, or some one that they suggested, had invited your association to cooperate with them in an attempt to produce the facts?—A. Well, I judged only from my own impression.

Q. Have I stated fairly the substance of what he said?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. You may go on.—A. Well, Mr. Anderson stated the purpose of this meeting, and I said I thought in fairness to Judge Hanford, as long as we never had made any complaint to him, that it would be fair treatment to him, that it would be only right for us to take these matters up with him before taking it up before this committee; that nobody had ever suggested this before, and that as far as acting on that committee I would be only too glad to do so any time that the committee wished to go to see Judge Hanford. I would be glad to be one of them; that I thought it was only a matter of justice to Judge Hanford to approach him on the subject and discuss it with him before going to any one else. I also said that if Judge Hanford was impeached, why it would not be necessary to take it up with him; if he was not impeached I would be glad at any time to go before him and take these matters up with him.

Q. Then what followed?—A. Then general conversation still continued, and I made reference to having known Judge Hanford some 25 years; that his name had always been one of honor in this city; that he had always been considered thorough; that he had a lot of ability, and that the Government for many years had refused to give him any assistance; that one day he had to be an expert in mining law, the next day in criminal law, the next day in admiralty law, and that he had worked practically night and day, and that I had not—I didn't think the Government had treated him fairly in that matter.

Q. You meant what by that?—A. By rendering him more assistance at any time when he needed it here.

Q. You meant an additional judge in this district?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Continue.—A. Then the matter was discussed along those lines. Finally, Mr. Hassen, of the Centennial Mill Co. made a motion that the committee take no action in this matter. I think Mr. Fisher seconded it. It was carried by a vote of, I think, six or seven to one. I am not sure whether Mr. Anderson voted or not. Mr. Klock voted "No." The balance of the members voted in favor of it.

Q. What was the motion?—A. The motion was made that the committee take no action in this matter.

Q. This matter referred to what?—A. Referred to preferred charges before the congressional committee.

Q. Were Judge Hanford's personal habits a matter of discussion before your committee?—A. Not to any extent. Mr. Klock said the congressional committee were not interested in that part of the matter.

Q. As I recall Mr. Anderson's testimony, it was to the effect that either you or somebody else commented on Judge Hanford being under the influence of liquor.—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you hear any one?—A. I don't remember of having heard any one say anything about that.

Q. Now, what was urged, Mr. Goldsmith, as a reason for the committee's presenting facts to this congressional committee?—A. It was urged that as a matter of justice to Judge Hanford that if we had any complaint to make that we should have taken it up with him before or at any time previous to this congressional committee coming out here.

Q. Well, I think you have told the committee about that. There were gentlemen present who took a view contrary to yours, weren't there?—A. I think Mr. Klock did. He was the only man who spoke to any extent.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that Judge Hanford was not fit to be a judge on the bench.

Q. Well, I want particularly to know with reference to the administration of the bankruptcy law in this district.—A. The question came up about the Knosher case. I said that that was a matter of court records, that that was clearer than anything that we could develop, and if the congressional committee wanted the full record they probably could get it from the circuit court of appeals better than we could furnish it to them; but I had no knowledge of that matter myself, we were not a creditor, not interested in it to any extent, and I knew nothing about it. Something was said about the Western Steel, and I said I knew nothing about that, the details of it, and I think, with the exception of those two cases, they were the only ones mentioned.

Q. Well, was there at that meeting a general discussion about the administration of the bankruptcy law?—A. Not to any extent; no, sir.

Q. What particular cases were discussed in addition to the Knosher case?—A. I think the Western Steel was the only one, and I think there was some reference made to the Northwestern Fisheries Co.

Q. What others?—A. That is all.

Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Goldsmith, as a business man of this community for many years, if you will furnish this committee with the names of estates in the bankruptcy court which you think ought to be the subject of investigation by this committee.—A. I do not know of any.

Q. Either of your own knowledge, gained as creditor or as stockholder, or of any that you have heard other business men discuss other than the three cases that you have mentioned?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or the two cases, the Knosher case and Western Steel. You know, at any rate, the McCarthy dry goods case was——A. (Interrupting.) I know nothing about that.

Q. Was it mentioned at this meeting?—A. I don't think it was.

Q. The suggestion has occurred in our records, Mr. Goldsmith, that would indicate, perhaps, that a conspiracy existed on the part of the members of your association, and the business men in general in Seattle, to suppress the truth with reference to the administration of bankruptcy law. Now, what is the fact, if you know?—A. The fact is that there is absolutely no conspiracy, no attempt at concealment; that half of the time the chief troubles of bankruptcy matters are the result of inattention of the creditors themselves.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean that they do not take sufficient interest in the bankruptcy matters after it has once passed into the hands of the court to follow it up.

Q. Does Judge Hanford allow creditors to appear in court in hearing on allowances?—A. I imagine so.

Q. Do you know?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever appear?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody that ever did?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody that has ever been refused an opportunity to be here on the question of allowances?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any more, Mr. Golsdmith, about the administration of the bankruptcy law in this district which would give rise to complaint on the part of business men or anybody else as to allowances to attorneys and trustees and receivers other than you have testified to to-day?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. If so, I wish you would state it now.—A. I do not.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further interrogation?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MCCOY:

Q. Did you ever hear of any complaint of the administration of any proceedings in Judge Hanford's court?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was your object in narrating to this meeting, if you didn't know, the services of a public nature which Judge Hanford had been connected with or performed in this community?—A. Well, I felt this way about it; that this meeting had been called for a specific purpose, and after I had gotten up there I found that it was the idea of one or two of the members to entirely change the purposes of the meeting; that in a previous matter which I had undertaken I had arrived at the same results as I would in this meeting, and for that reason I felt that having been asked to that meeting for a certain purpose, and then having another matter come up entirely foreign, that I had not been treated entirely fair, and when this question came up of the first charges by the association—this was not an executive meeting, it was a committee meeting called for a certain purpose—that it was not fair to Judge Hanford to take the matter up at that time. Having known him in this community for that length of time, I certainly thought I was justified in saying what I knew about him.

Q. What possible objection could there be to taking up that matter before this committee?—A. Nothing, excepting that I believed that when you have anything to do with a man, to go to that man first before you go to anybody else.

Q. Have you any idea how long it would take to reach the impeachment stage of this matter, if it ever should be reached?—A. I did not give that a thought.

Q. Well, then, when you said, as I believe you say, that you would wait and see whether he should be impeached or not, you hadn't any idea how long that would take?—A. No, sir; because I believed Judge Hanford was working heartily in accord with the merchants of this city, and would be glad to do anything that they recommended.

Q. But your suggestion was that you had better not go to him until it was determined whether or not he was to be impeached?—A. Yes.

Q. That might take a long time?—A. All right; then we could afford to wait. We had waited longer than that.

Q. You say you think that the trouble has been here that attorneys, or creditors, did not take enough interest in bankruptcy matters to protect themselves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why do you think that has been so?—A. Because the way some of the meetings have been attended.

Q. Why do you think it is that they do not take an interest?—A. Simply because of their inattention to those matters.

Q. Well, that is stating the same thing over, that they dont' take an interest because they don't take an interest.—A. Yes.

Q. Why do you think it is that they are inattentive?—A. Well, I can't say that, I can only speak from our own experience, that when a meeting is called you attend it and some other people don't. Now, what their reason for not attending that meeting is, I don't know.

Q. What is the name of your concern?—A. Schwabacher Bros. & Co. (Inc.).

Q. Has it ever been indicted in the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir; twice.

Q. For what?—A. Under the pure-food law.

Q. Both times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the first charge?—A. I think for adulterated extract in Alaska—shipping some adulterated extracts to Alaska.

Q. What was the outcome of that case?—A. We were fined $25 and costs.

Q. By whom?—A. By Judge Hanford.

Q. What was the second case? But first, was there any trial?—A. It was in open court; the hearing was in open court.

Q. Well, did your firm plead guilty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was on that plea that you were fined $25?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the second instance?—A. I think for the same reason. They were both technical cases, as most of these pure-food cases are.

Q. And what was the outcome in the second case, did you plead guilty there?—A. We pleaded guilty and were fined $25.

Q. Twenty-five in both cases?—A. Yes, sir. That is the usual fine all over the United States.

Q. What was the maximum penalty under the law?—A. I really don't know.

Q. Is there any provision for imprisonment as well as fine?—A. I could not say.

Q. You are sure that both cases were under the pure food and drug act?—A. I know they were; yes, sir.

Q. How long after the first case did the second case come up?—A. Both at the same time.

Q. And fines were imposed on the same day?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. What were you charged with?—A. Why the pure food law is so technical that it is almost impossible for a wholesale grocer to comply with it in all cases. We were charged with shipping some—I think some lemon extract to Alaska, when it was not marked properly.

Q. A case of misprinting, was it?—A. Yes.

Q. How long ago was it?—A. I think the shipment occurred about a year ago, but only within the last six or eight months has the Government had some inspectors in Alaska looking up some of these matters.

Q. That is, both of these cases came up within a year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who has been your attorney?—A. Mr. Preston.

Q. Mr. Preston?—A. Harold Preston; yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. Was not one of them a case involving the adulteration of olive oil?

A. Oh, I think one was extract and the other probably was some cottonseed oil which was branded salad oil.

Mr. PRESTON. Both cases of misprinting?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask any questions?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, if you please.

Q. The olive-oil case was a case where the department's ruling had been later decided by the court of appeals to be erroneous?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And shortly after the decision—I don't mean our court of appeals—shortly after that decision the department reversed its ruling and prosecuted a number of merchants in Seattle, wholesalers, in regard to selling cottonseed oil as olive oil.

The CHAIRMAN. Might you not just as well state it into the record. What is the use of asking Mr. Goldsmith those questions. He is not a lawyer, is he?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, he knows those facts, because I went over them with him.

Mr. HIGGINS. There is no objection to your stating them yourself.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee would rather have your statement than his on questions of law.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, my understanding of the matter, then, I will state, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Do so.

Mr. PRESTON. That the wholesalers had been doing that and that the department's rulings were favorable to it. Then a case came up—the department's ruling was changed, and a case came up in the Federal court in the East somewhere and there was a specific ruling in that case that the branding of the products of cotton seed as oil, of cotton seed as oil, was a misprinting, the court taking the position that the term "salad oil" had come in the course of years to mean an oil made out of the olive only.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, Mr. Goldsmith, were there not a number of merchants prosecuted at the same time for the same charge here?

A. There were.

Q. Was your company's fine any different from theirs?—A. No sir.

Q. The amount of it?—A. Exactly the same.

Q. At that meeting of the committee, was anything said there by any gentlemen present in regard to the willingness, or unwillingness, of any man present to have Judge Hanford pass upon any case in which he was interested?—A. Yes; I said that so far as I was concerned I would be perfectly willing to have Judge Hanford pass on any case that we were interested in in any way; I had sufficient faith in his ability and justice to think that he would decide the law as he found it. I think the majority of the members there said that they were of the same opinion.

Q. Now, you mention the Northwestern Fisheries. I think you got the name of the company wrong. You refer, do you not, to the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co.?—A. Yes. The Northwestern were the successors to the Pacific.

Mr. HIGGINS. Perhaps it ought to go into this record at this point, so that there won't be any question that that is the fisheries case that the committee have already taken up.

Mr. PRESTON. That is the fact, is it not?

A. Yes; this name that I mentioned was the successor.

Mr. HIGGINS. I presume that you know more about what the committee has taken up than Mr. Goldsmith does.

Mr. PRESTON. The committee examined into the case of the receivership of the Pacific Packing & Navigation Co. and the Pacific American Fisheries Co. and there is evidence before the committee that the properties of those insolvent companies, when sold by the receiver, ultimately become the property of the Northwestern Fisheries Co.?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. The case or action in which Mr. Kerr was receiver?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. That identifies it.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, give the committee a statement, in a general way, of the magnitude of your business—of your concern; the grocery part of it—Schwabacher Bros. & Co., grocers—in comparison with other institutions in the Pacific Northwest, in the same line of business?

A. Well, I think we do the largest grocery business on the Pacific coast—straight grocery business.

Q. Wholesale?—A. Wholesale grocery business.

Q. Have you also a hardware company owned by the same interests?—A. Yes, sir; we have a Schwabacher Hardware Co., with practically the same stockholders as the grocery company.

Q. That is located where?—A. It is located in Seattle.

Q. What kind of business does it do?—A. It does a wholesale hardware business.

Q. Now, one more question: In regard to the statement that was made there to the committee, was it a statement that the association was desired to present all the facts in regard to the bankruptcy matters to the congressional committee, or was it that the association was desired to furnish evidence derogatory to Judge Hanford in that connection?—A. Well, I imagine now——

Q. No; just state what was said. I don't want your imagination about it.—A. Well, the only man who spoke—spoke strongly on this matter—was Mr. Klock.

Q. Yes?—A. He spoke quite strongly on the matter on account of, I thought, having talked to me committee on it, and he felt that it was the duty of the association to bring up all these various charges against Judge Hanford in reference to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did he so express himself?—A. He so expressed himself in reference to these banruptcy matters. Mr. Anderson was the only other who spoke along the same line, and he talked entirely on the question of the Knosher case.

Mr. PRESTON. I think that is all.

Witness excused.

BENJAMIN S. GROSSCUP, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Give your full name, Mr. Grosscup.

A. Benjamin S. Grosscup.

Q. Do you live in Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are an attorney at law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long have you lived in Tacoma?—A. 21 years.

Q. Is the Northern Pacific Railroad one of your clients?—A. 22 years.

Q. And have you any professional connection with the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. I was once counsel for the Northern Pacific Railroad. My first connection with the Northern Pacific Railroad was in connection with the receivership. In 1895, 1894–95. On the reorganization of that company I became western counsel and served in that capacity until November, 1909, and I have no connection with the company now.

Q. When did your connection cease with it?—A. November, 1909.

Q. Do you recall, during your connection with it, any matter of the sale of lands by the Northern Pacific to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. I recall going over a contract and some negotiations connected with it. I did not have—it was not a part of my duty to have anything to do with the sale; merely the legal end of the contract.

Q. Do you remember any question with the road at the time as to the company's title to the land?—A. No; not as to the company's title.

Q. Was there any question of law involved in the transaction which affected the title?—A. No; not as to the title.

Q. What was the question involved?—A. The only questions involved were the mere form of the contract, and as far as I was concerned, the putting in shape what the parties had agreed upon.

Q. Have you a copy of the contract with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What information can you give us now about the nature and terms of that contract?—A. So far as I recall it was simply a sale of land to the Hanford Irrigation Co., with a condition that they should within a stipulated time, I don't remember how long, irrigate it and put it upon the market. The main point was that it should be irrigated in connection with other lands that were not owned by the company. It was the practice of the company, all the time I was connected with it, to secure the development of desert lands by irrigation; a sale of land was almost universally connected with the condition of irrigation; that is, of irrigation land—irrigible land.

Q. Are you familiar with the prices at which the company was then selling land in that vicinity?—A. I could not say. I know that a sale was made in that same vicinity, farther down the river, of what was known as the Northern Pacific Irrigation Co.'s holdings. The Northern Pacific Irrigation Co. was a company formed by the Northern Pacific and owned exclusively by the Northern Pacific. And about this same time, or a little later they sold the stock of the Northern Pacific Irrigation Co. to Mr. Fector and Mr. Rudkin and some of his associates who are still continuing the business.

Q. Well, when they sold that it was more or less improved, was it?—A. Well, an estimate was made of the value of the stock upon both the improved and unimproved land. There was about 15,000 acres of unimproved land.

Q. Well, had they a fixed price at which to sell unimproved land at that time?—A. No; there was no fixed price.

Q. How was the price determined in any particular place?—A. It was determined by the land commissioner, Mr. Cooper——

Q. (Interrupting.) Do you know of any other sales——A. (Continuing.) Which was conditioned upon the plans of irrigation and location and a thousand and one things that would influence price.

Q. Do you know of any other sales of unimproved land in the vicinity of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.'s property at that time?—A. I know of a sale that was made by the Northern Pacific Irrigation Co., after it was purchased by Mr. Fector and Rudkin and their associates—a sale made to Mr. John Davis, Mr. Struve, and Mr. Browns, and some other gentlemen of Seattle, who formed the Lower Yakima Irrigation Co., lands farther down the river.

Q. When was the conveyance made from the company to those grantors with reference to the time of the conveyance to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. I think about two years later, about that.

Q. Was the character of the land substantially the same in both cases?—A. Well, in a general way, yes.

Q. And the facilities for irrigating, were they about alike?—A. In a general way.

Q. What was the price paid by the other parties?—A. I think the price was from $2.50 and $10 per acre, graded, depending upon the character of the soil and difficulty of irrigation.

Q. Was it entirely within the discretion of the land commissioner at what figure any particular land would be sold within those limits?—A. I think not.

Q. How was that determined?—A. Determined by the executive committee.

Q. You mean of the railroad?—A. Yes, by the executive committee, I think. However, as a matter of practice the land commissioner's judgment usually controlled.

Q. Have you some files with you which shed some light on this matter?—No; I haven't. I didn't know I was to be called upon on that subject.

Q. Who is land commissioner who would know?—A. Mr. Thomas Cooper, of St. Paul.

Q. Is there anyone in this State who would have knowledge of that subject?—A. The western land agent, Mr. G. H. Plummer, might know.

Q. At Tacoma?—A. Yes.

Q. Where are the files which would reveal the fact about this transaction?—A. The Hanford Irrigation Co.?

Q. Yes.—A. I think very likely Mr. Plummer would have them, but I am not sure about it. There is no secret about it any where.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand. Anything further?

Mr. HIGGINS. What authority would Mr. Grosscup, as the local land agent at Tacoma, have as to the disposition of these arid lands?

A. In a deal of that magnitude he would merely have clerical authority.

Q. He would simply act as he has been——A. (Interrupting.) Yes; his work would be clerical.

Q. Pass the papers on to some one at the general office?—A. Yes.

Q. He would not be vested with any discretion?—A. I think none whatever.

Q. Either as to price or terms?—A. Or whether the deal would be made at all.

Q. It would all be dependent upon the general officers of the company?—A. Yes, in a deal of that magnitude.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to ask Mr. Grosscup anything?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Grosscup, you are acquainted with Governor Teats, an attorney of your city?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall defending a case in which he represented the plaintiff in the Federal court, before Judge Hanford, about three years ago, I think?—A. I recall a case which I suppose is the one you refer to, the case of Anna McElroy against the Tacoma Railway & Power Co.

Q. There appears to be some question in the records here as to whether he referred to the case of McElroy—the title McElroy against the Northern Pacific—or McElwain; the defendant was the Tacoma Railway & Power Co. Was there ever but the one case of McElroy against the Tacoma Railway & Power Co.?—A. There is only one McElroy case. I looked over my docket this morning and——

Q. (Interrupting.) What about McElwain?—A. There is a McElvain case, but that has been commenced since my connection with the Tacoma Railway & Power Co. ceased. I have not been attorney for the Tacoma Railway & Power Co. since March 1, 1911, and there was no such case during the time that I was attorney for them.

Q. When was this case of McElroy tried?—Let me ask you if the McElvain case was commenced in the Federal court?—A. I am informed that it was not, but I was not attorney in the case, it is since—the case was commenced in January of this year.

Q. When was that case of McElroy against the Tacoma Light & Power Co. tried before Judge Hanford?—A. The Tacoma Railway & Power Co.?

Q. Yes.—A. Tried in 1909. Commenced the year previous.

Q. Tried before the court and a jury in the year 1909, was it?—A. The Federal court in Tacoma.

Q. Who presided over the court?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. You defended—you represented the defendant?—A. I tried the case for the defendant.

Q. And Govnor Teats for the plaintiff?—A. For the plaintiff.

Q. Govnor Teats testified that during the trial of that case Judge Hanford fell asleep for some considerable time, the time measured by this event; one of the jurors got up and in a tone of voice which should have been distinctly audible in the court, announced that he desired to go to the closet; that the court did not heed, but was asleep; that Govnor Teats told him to go on, and that he went—told the juror to go on, and that he went to the closet and returned, consuming in all approximately five minutes of time, and that at the time of his return and taking his seat the court woke up. Will you state to the committee what are the facts in respect thereto?—A. I am certain that if anything of that kind had occurred I would have remembered it. I am also certain that I would not have permitted anything of that kind to occur without an exception, while I was defending the case. I have no recollection of anything of that kind occurring, and I am perfectly satisfied that it never did occur.

Q. What happened to that case?—A. That was a very short case, as far as a trial before a jury was concerned. It involved almost entirely a question of the mechanism of some overhead structures, and upon the testimony of an expert witness, direct examination of that expert witness, I looked up at the court and I remember very distinctly what was not infrequent at all with Judge Hanford, that he had his eyes shut and head down. I was examining the witness on cross-examination very carefully and quite anxious that a few things that might not be entirely apparent should not be lost sight of. Being a mechanical case, I made my examination with great care, and also with the intention of disclosing—of concealing from the witness the purposes of some of my questions. At the conclusion of the case I made a motion for a directed verdict, on the ground that the accident was the result, exclusively, of the negligence of a fellow servant. Mr. Teats argued—Judge Hanford announced that he would hear from Mr. Teats. Mr. Teats argued the questions, the motions, and then Judge Hanford reviewed the testimony with entire clearness and fullness and showed that he appreciated every word of the testimony in the entire case. He directed a verdict in the case, which was entered. He subsequently filed a motion for a new trial, or petition for a new trial——

Q. Govnor Teats did?—A. Yes, sir. In the petition for a new trial there is no suggestion of impropriety of the court—I have the record here—and that motion for one reason or another, I can't explain why, has never been disposed of; it is still pending.

Mr. McCoy. What is the title of the case, Mr. Grosscup?

A. McElroy—Anna McElroy against Tacoma Railway & Power Co., case No. 1400 of the Tacoma files. I have the files here. I want further to say—I am going to volunteer this—that I think it is necessary—I think I have been before Judge Hanford 500 times in litigation in western Washington, in court, and I have never seen the slightest indication of intoxication, and I have never known an instance where he did not fully and fairly appreciate just exactly what was going on in court and keep the closest track of it. I have noticed this in the preparation of bills of exceptions and various matters in review and motions for a new trial, and it has been the occasion of impressing me as peculiar how he kept track from his memory with the testimony of witnesses, and I dare say there is not a lawyer who has practiced before him that has ever been able to impose on him or the opposite party by anything false in a bill of exceptions or in a statement of facts that is to go to an upper court. His memory about cases is perfectly surprising, as you all know, gentlemen.

Q. You have spoken of the court room. Have you ever seen Judge Hanford under the influence of liquor anywhere else?—A. I have not. I have never been an associate of Judge Hanford in a private way and know very little of his private life. We have not been companions at all. As I have said, I don't see how a man could live a dissipated private life and do the thorough work that he has done on the bench. It is utterly beyond my comprehension; and I say this not as a friend of Judge Hanford, because I have never been a friend.

Q. Some mention was made by the committee in interrogating Gen. Ashton when he was upon the witness stand, of a tide-land case tried before Judge Hanford in Tacoma. You were the attorney for one of the parties in that litigation, for the plaintiff, were you not?—A. I was special attorney general in that case, appointed by the Attorney General of the United States, to take care of whatever interest the Government might have in it.

Q. And the decision of Judge Hanford was adverse to the contention of the complainant in that action with whom you were associated?—A. He held that our complaint did not state a cause of action, and our complaint stated all we had to state, so——

Q. (Interrupting.) Mr. Grosscup, to clear up any possible question that might arise, did you defend any other case for the Tacoma Light & Power Co. in the year 1909?—A. The Tacoma Railway & Power Co., you mean?

Q. Tacoma Railway & Power Co., which was prosecuted by Govnor Teats?—A. Oh, I think I did. I defended a good many cases for this company, and he had a good many of them for the complainant.

Mr. HIGGINS. In that connection, Mr. Hughes, my notes taken at the time that Mr. Teats testified show that the case was McElwain, w–a–i–n, I got it, against the Tacoma Railway & Power Co.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The WITNESS. I looked up this morning, Mr. Higgins, I just looked up—I was telephoned to about this matter last night. The McElwain case was commenced in the State court and has never been in the Federal courts, had no connection with it at all, because it was commenced since I left the employ of the company.

Mr. HUGHES. There was no case of Taft or any similar name except the one you have testified to, was there?

A. Well, I deducted my docket and found there is no case of McElwain occurred ——

Q. (Interrupting.) Or McElwain?—A. Or McElwain, or anything of that kind, commenced prior to the 1st of March, 1911.

Q. But there was a case of McElroy?—A. McElroy, yes. That was a case of considerable note, too.

Q. Now, was there ever any case in which Govnor Teats was representing the plaintiff and you the defendants in which any such an instance as I described a while ago of a juror leaving during the period when the court was apparently asleep and taking no notice of the fact, as I stated a while ago?—A. I am entirely certain there was not.

Q. Such an instance as that would have impressed itself upon your memory?—A. It certainly would.

Q. Has there ever been any instance when there was any evidence afforded by any facts occurring at the trial to show that Judge Hanford, when his eyes were closed or his head nodding was in fact lost in sleep?—A. As I have said, I have never known a time during any proceeding in court when he did not, when it came time to act, show entire alertness. I have seen him lots of times with his eyes shut.

Q. You testified to that. What I meant to call out was——A. (Interrupting.) And I am certain that the incident that you repeat never occurred.

Q. What I meant to inquire about was, whether any extrinsic fact occurred, such as audible sounds from Judge Hanford, or any episode in the course of the conduct of the case, which would evidence that he was asleep?—A. If that sort of thing had occurred, I would have remembered it.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions? That is all.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in recess until 4 o'clock. We hope to sit a couple of hours after that.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

SUTCLIFFE BAXTER, recalled.

Mr. MCCOY. Do you recollect where you left off in your testimony?

A. I was requested to produce the inventory of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co., that was the last business, I think, that Mr. McCoy asked me about.

Q. That was the last thing in the way of figures that was asked for—what were the figures that I asked for this morning?—A. You asked for the inventory, I think, of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.

Q. I wanted, not the details, but the footings.—A. The footings of it.

Q. You may read them—what were the assets and what were the liabilities?—A. Do you want me to read them off in detail?

Q. Just the footings.—A. The merchandise inventory footed up $84,022.43, to which was added freight and drayage 10 per cent—$8,422.24; total, $92,467. I want to say, however, that that percentage of 10 per cent added for freight and drayage was an excessive rate. I do not think that the average rates of freight and drayage would exceed 4½ or 5 per cent, but that was the figure they had been carrying it at up to that time.

Q. And the liabilities were how much?—A. The liabilities---I don't know whether I have got the totals here or not—the liabilities were, capital stock, $200,000.

Q. No, I mean the liabilities to creditors.—A. Bills payable, $20,500——

Q. Just the totals.—A. The total liabilities, less that $200,000, would be $117,594.51. And what next—do you want the available assets here?

Q. What is that?—A. $117,594.51. Well, now, that doesn't appear to me to be right—oh, yes, I think it is right.

Q. What is that?—A. $117,594.51 liabilities.

Q. What were the assets?—A. The assets?

Q. Yes; I mean the total valuation of the assets.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighty-seven thousand and something?

Mr. PRESTON. Eighty-four thousand and something.

A. The merchandise assets—the merchandise inventory, rather—the total assets, did you say?

Q. Yes.—A. The merchandise is $92,424.67, to which ought to be added for the cash sales, September 13, 14, and 20, $1,137.50, making a total $93,562.17, inclusive of freight and drayage.

Mr. PRESTON. Inclusive of what?

A. Inclusive of freight and drayage, which I think was a very excessive rate; but that is the rate at which they had been carrying it on their accounts up to that time.

Mr. McCOY. Was that the valuation as contained in the reports which you made to the courts?

A. Yes, sir; those are the copies of the court's report, as far as I know—I made the reports monthly.

Q. The dividend was 3½ per cent?—A. Yes.

Q. Now take up the William Walker Co., Mr. Baxter.—A. All right, sir. Have you got the copy of the William Walker Co. statement there?

Mr. PRESTON [hands document to witness]. There are some pencil memoranda there that I want to call attention to.

Q. Is this a bankruptcy matter?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you carry on the business of the William Walker Co?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was it you were appointed trustee—October 22, 1908?—A. You have the date there; I don't remember.

Q. It is what is stated here?—A. Yes, it is what is stated there—that report's correct so far as I know.

Q. And you were subsequently appointed or elected as trustee?—A. I was subsequently elected as trustee by the creditors.

Q. And discharged as such in November 23, 1909?—A. I presume that is correct.

Q. And what was being done in the estate from October, 1908, to November, 1909?—A. I was thinking of closing up the estate and paying the dividends—we paid two dividends, I think—in winding up the estate under the orders of the referee.

Q. When did you sell the assets of the bankrupt?—A. The inventory was taken, the sale advertised, and the entire property sold, I think, on the 15th or 16th day from the time I took possession.

Q. That would be, approximately, the middle of November, 1908?—A. I presume so.

Q. You said here in this statement which you have handed that the assets were sold to Stone-Fisher Co. for $19,500.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you as receiver and trustee, you said here, swelled the total assets coming into your hands as trustee to the sum of $2,177.11; do you mean by that that you, by collections, added that amount to the assets, or that you sold the bulk of the assets for $19,500 and in addition collected about $2,000 more?—A. Yes; part of that was book accounts receivable and there are two or three very small invoices that were sold to the Stone-Fisher Co., and that probably are included in that amount.

Q. Now let us see if you understand me correctly—were the total assets that came into your hands $40,200?—A. Is that merchandise?

Q. For all purposes.—A. If I had a copy of it I could follow it—I could follow this a little better. [Mr. Preston hands copy to witness.]

Q. What was the total amount of the assets which you received in that matter?—A. This statement does not appear to give it. This was prepared last night and I didn't get possession of it until this morning. It was prepared by Mr. Oldham, the attorney in the case, but I have an inventory of it here, I think, and I can show it from the inventory.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McCoy, do you mean assets or cash?

Mr. MCCOY. Well, practically I mean cash—what is the total amount of cash that came into your hands?

A. The total amount of cash?

Q. Yes.—A. Would be $21,707.11.

Q. And the liabilities were how much? The unsecured claims $52,038.57.—A. Yes.

Q. How much did the secured claims amount to?—A. I do not think there were any secured claims; that is my recollection of it.

Q. In this allowance I notice that McClure & McClure, the attorneys for the bankrupt, got $200; what is that for?—A. As attorneys for the receiver and trustee—no, that is for attorneys for the bankrupt.

Q. That was for preparing the schedules and filing the petition, I presume?—A. Yes.

Q. And the allowance to the attorneys for the reciever and trustee amounted to $600.—A. Yes.

Q. I notice an item, cash and expense John P. Hoye, referee in bankruptcy, $300.—A. That was the referee's charges and fees under the bankruptcy act, I presume.

Q. Do you mean that under the bankruptcy act the referee in bankruptcy is able to get an increase of payment over his regular fees in the sum of $300 on an estate of $21,000?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Don't you know——A. (Interrupting.) Well, I don't know that it is my business to know—the referee ought to know—I don't realize that it is for me to say whether he is or not.

Q. Don't you think that as receiver of the assets——A. (Interrupting.) The referee under the bankruptcy act is allowed certain compensation stated in the act.

Q. Now, my question to you is this: Don't you ascertain, as receiver, or as trustee, whether the amounts claimed by the referee are the legal amounts?—A. No, sir; it is not part of the trustees' business, so far as I understood it.

Q. Are you not trustee for the creditors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not your duty to see that no more money is paid out than the law permits?—A. It is my duty, as I understand it, to pay out any moneys ordered to be paid out by the court. The referee in this instance being the court.

Q. Suppose, in this case, the referee had allowed himself $10,000, what would have been your duty?—A. Well, I think I probably would have looked into a $10,000 charge.

Q. How is that?—A. I say that probably I would have looked into a $10,000 charge and ascertained whether I was authorized to pay it out or not.

Q. What were the dividends paid in this matter?—A. Two dividends were paid, one of 10 per cent and one of 25 per cent, being a total of 35 per cent.

Q. Now then, I want to know what you were doing between the 22d day of October, 1908, when you were appointed, and the 23d day of November, 1909, when you were discharged as trustee?—A. I was—I paid the two dividends in that time; I do not remember how far apart they were, and the final report and my discharge was not made evidently until that time—I do not know why it should not have been made immediately after the payment of the second dividend and the closing up of the estate. Possibly there was some delay there that I do not know but the dividends were all promptly paid when ordered paid.

Q. Now, the next one that you gave was the Dowell case.—A. Alice C. Dowell; yes, sir.

Q. This was an involuntary bankruptcy.—A. Yes.

Q. And you were appointed receiver on December 1, 1910?—A. I think so.

Q. And on December 31, 1910, you filed your report showing that you had received—that you had sold the goods for $3,915, and that with other receipts that the total that came into your hands was $1,401.22 in cash?—A. Yes.

Q. December 21, 1910, you were allowed $350 for your services as receiver?—A. Yes.

Q. And a like amount was allowed to your attorneys?—A. Yes.

Q. Who were your attorneys?—A. Mr. Stern was the attorney in that case, I think.

Q. What is his first name?—A. Leopold M. Stern.

Q. January 4, 1911, the adjudication in bankruptcy took place—that's right?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Well, I am reading here from your report.—A. That statement is correct, I believe.

Q. January 18, 1911, you were elected trustee and January 19, 1911, you filed your report showing that as trustee there had come into your hands the sum of $3,021.36?—A. Yes.

Q. Later you declared two dividends, 15 per cent each, and the estate was closed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. February 22, 1911, the trustee received $75 on account of services and commissions as trustee, and on June 20 an additional sum of $26.40 for services and commission, and on June 22, 1911, the attorney for the receiver was paid $125 for his services, and on June 20, 1911, an additional sum of $75 was paid for services as attorney for the trustee and the estate was closed—that is right?—A. That is correct, I believe.

Q. And in this matter when you were elected or appointed receiver you found the goods of the bankrupt in the hands of the sheriff?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you persuaded the sheriff to turn over the goods to you as receiver?—A. The sheriff did turn them over to me as receiver under orders of the Federal court here when I was appointed receiver.

Q. You said here that you persuaded him to turn them over to you?—A. Did I use the word "persuaded?"

Q. Yes.—A. Then I would say that there was a deputy sheriff in charge when I went there and I had to have him negotiate with his principal by telephone before he delivered possession to me.

Q. There was a great deal of litigation with the men who had attached the goods in the superior court.—A. Yes.

Q. And which finally resulted in it being found that you were entitled to the goods as receiver?—A. Yes.

Q. The goods in this matter were inventoried at $7,139 and were sold at $3,915?—A. I desire to state in that case——

Q. Well, that was what is stated here.—A. Yes, sir; these figures are right.

Q. All right; now what were you going to say?—A. Mrs. Dowell had undertaken to sell that stock of boots and shoes to a Mr. Greenbaum for $1,200, and put him in possession of it. The creditors attacked the sale to Greenbaum and attached it, and that accounts for the sheriff being in possession. On this stock of shoes that had been sold by the bankrupt for $1,200 I realized those figures that I have testified about.

Q. The Knosher case, we have gone over that, or do you wish to say anything in addition in regard to that?—A. How's that?

Q. The Knosher case has already been taken up by the committee, with Mr. Anderson on the stand. Mr. Preston, do you wish to go further with the Knosher case?

Mr. PRESTON. Offhand, I would say no—I may think of something—yes, sir; there is one matter that I wish to ask about the Knosher case.

Mr. MCCOY. Just one moment. I want to ask a question or two about that. It appears in the papers before this committee, Mr. Baxter, that you claim, in some proceedings in the district court that on the afternoon or on the same day at which you were appointed receiver of the Knosher Co., you conferred with creditors in regard to keeping the business going through that day; will you now state to the committee with whom it was that you conferred?

A. Well, there is a slight mistake in that report. I was not present at this meeting at all, but Mr. McClure and Mr. Stern told me they had been in conference with several of the creditors and reported to me that evening that they had decided to close the store, and on that information the store was closed. I was not present at the meeting at all. There is where those witnesses before, I think, have perhaps made a mistake.

Mr. PRESTON. Did you consult with any persons yourself?

A. No, sir; Mr. McClure and Mr. Stern were the only ones who consulted with the creditors, so far as I remember.

Q. With creditors?—A. Yes.

Mr. MCCLURE. Where were you during the day on which you were appointed?

A. I was in the store all day.

Q. And your testimony is that neither Mr. McClure nor Mr. Stern nor anybody else came around to see you on that day in regard to continuing the business.—A. That day, that evening, just before I closed the store that evening they told me of having been in consultation with those creditors and they had decided the best course to pursue was to close the store, and next to take an inventory, which I did the next morning.

Q. Well, before that interview with McClure and Stern had you had any interview with them previous, on the same day?—A. With Stern and McClure?

Q. With Stern and McClure.—A. I suppose I had seen them during the day, yes. I think they were there when I took possession—my recollection is that they went into the store with me in order to take possession.

Mr. McCoy. That is all I want to ask.

Mr. Preston. Well, that is the same matter I wanted to make inquiry about.

The Chairman. That is all, is it?

Mr. McCoy. Now, take up the Western Steel Co.

The Witness. Mr. Preston, you have a copy there?

Mr. Preston. Yes.

The Witness. I have only that one here and I would like to have it in my possession while I am testifying here.

Mr. McCoy. The name of the bankrupt is the Western Steel Corporation.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that a bankruptcy matter?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you appointed receiver?—A. Lester Turner and myself were appointed receivers.

Q. When was that?—A. I don't think I have got the date here of that appointment.

Q. What year and what month?—A. It was September 13, I think, last year, 1911.

Q. Who appointed you?—A. Judge Hanford.

Q. Did the order appointing you give you permission to carry on the business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any statement made to Judge Hanford to indicate the advisability, or otherwise, of continuing the business?—A. There was. There has been no continuation of the business. That is the manufacturing part of the business, for the reason that it was closed down at the time of the appointment of the receivers. Mr. Turner and myself went down to Irondale and took possession of the property and commenced to take an inventory there. To that extent the business has been closed down, but to this further extent we have been closing up and winding up its affairs, selling steel and converting the property into cash. We have still got 122 tons of steel on hand unsold yet.

Q. What was the nature of the business carried on by the bankrupt?—A. The manufacture of steel at Irondale.

Q. You said you were appointed when?—A. September 13, I think, or the 12th or 13th.

Q. 1911?—A. 1911; yes, sir.

Q. Has there been any meeting of the creditors of the bankrupt?—A. Oh, yes; there was a meeting of the creditors when the trustees were elected.

Mr. PRESTON. May I interrupt you? The record which you have shows quite a number of meetings of trustees and quite a contest at one time and another.

The WITNESS. There was one or two meetings of creditors, I think, prior to and at the election of the trustees.

Q. When were the trustees elected?—A. The trustees—I do not remember. The record there shows; I haven't got it at all.

Q. In what month?—A. It was within—it must have been the following month, early in October, I think.

Q. That was at a meeting of creditors.—A. Yes.

Q. Who were elected trustees?—A. Myself and Lester Turner and Edgar Ames.

Q. Who is Mr. Turner—where does he live?—A. He lives in the city ordinarily, but he is out of town just now. He is over at Lake Crescent.

Q. And Mr. Ames—who is he?—A. Mr. Ames has lived in town. I don't recall now what business he is in, except that he is connected with some of these tide-flat deals down here, but I don't know to what extent.

Q. Were either of those men connected with the business in any way?—A. No, sir.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McCoy, those dates are down there at the bottom of the last page.

The WITNESS (interrupting). The receivers were appointed—may I testify about this now?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. The receivers were appointed October 12 and qualified——

The CHAIRMAN. The receivers or the trustees?

Mr. MCCOY. Qualified October 13, 1912.

The WITNESS. My prior witness was September. I think this is an error here. We were appointed in September, were we not?

Mr. PRESTON. I do not know. The records here will show. I do not know when.

The WITNESS. I think there is an error in the month in this report.

Mr. HUGHES. It was October.

The WITNESS. Then the receivers were appointed October 12, 1911, and qualified October 13. The Western Steel Corporation was adjudicated bankrupt October 26, 1911, and receivers discharged and trustees appointed December 12. 1911.

Mr. MCCOY. I notice in the statement which you furnished the committee that the receivers' certificates were issued amounting to $2,500.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were those for?—A. That was to raise money enough to pay the current expenses of the plant at Irondale and to pay the taxes—and the plant at Ashland. Our expenses for the Seattle office at that time were about twelve or thirteen hundred dollars a month, if I remember correctly, and this money was borrowed for that purpose and for the purpose of paying some other claims. I do not remember what now. There was another trustee's certificate issued on December 28 for the purpose of raising money in order to pay the taxes on the Graham Island property in British Columbia. We borrowed on that certificate $3,000, which, with the money we had already in the bank, enabled us to pay those taxes, amounting to four thousand and some odd dollars. I do not remember the exact amount now. Perhaps it shows here $4,074, which was cabled to Graham Island about the last day we were under an option, or under an extension rather of 90 days, on a payment amounting to $62,000 we were to have paid on the Graham Island property on the 1st of January, and we got the payment postponed for 90 days, bringing it down to the 9th of March. In the meantime we had to raise money to pay the taxes before the 31st of December or the whole deal was off. We tried every bank in this town to raise $4,000 and we could not get it, until finally Mr. Turner arranged it with the First National Bank.

Q. What was the necessity for the receivership in that matter?—A. In the Western Steel matter?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, a suit was commenced in the bankruptcy court, and the custom is always to appoint receivers, I believe, in bankruptcy cases the first thing where there is very much property to be handled.

Q. What are the functions of a receiver under the bankruptcy law?—A. As I understand it, to take possession of the bankrupts' properties and——

Q. In all cases?—A. I think so, under the orders of the court to take possession of the property of the bankrupt's estate.

Q. In other words, do you think that under the bankruptcy law every time there is an adjudication in bankruptcy there must be a receiver appointed?—A. I do not know. That is up to the courts and to the attorneys—that is not for me. I am not a lawyer, sir.

Q. On there was a sale of some of the property of the bankrupt and what was sold was bought in by the Metropolitan Trust Co. Was that the Metropolitan Trust Co. of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did that sale include?—A. It included all the properties of the Western Steel Corporation, except the book accounts and bills receivable and some steel lying on the docks here, that was hypothecated to various banks and others in town here.

Q. And was the property sold at auction?—A. Under sealed bids.

Q. What?—A. Sealed bids.

Q. Sealed bids after adveritisement?—A. Yes.

Q. The purchase price paid was cash $80,000 and the balance of the bid, namely, $647,010, was paid by surrender and cancellation of first-mortgage bonds against the property—is that right?—A. Yes, sir; $2,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds were surrendered and canceled.

Q. And that, of course, did not come into your hand as cash at all?—A. This $647,000?

Q. Yes.—A. No, not as cash, no—we did not handle the money.

Q. Between October 13 and December 13 you received on account of compensation as receiver, $500 as receiver, and Mr. Turner received $500?—A. Correct.

Q. I find here an item under those two dates "Administrative expenses; payments made on secured loan and allowances—what were those allowances?—A. I could not explain them from memory. This statement is "Allowances per contra entries," if you will allow me to go to the court records, the statement is on file in the court.

Mr. PRESTON. I have copies of all these receiver's reports and trustee's reports.

Mr. MCCOY. What I was wanting to find out was whether or not those were allowances to the receivers or their attorneys.—A. No, sir; no part of it.

Q. Under date of December 14, 1911, to January 13, 1912, there are some items, and again the words "as allowances per contra entries"—were those allowances to receivers, trustees, or attorneys?—A. No, sir; no part of it at all. Simply the current expenses of the conduct of the business and such other payments as were necessary to be made, which you will also find in the detail statement filed in court on January 13 of this year.

Q. Then under dates of January 14 to April 2, 1912, I find two allowances, one to Mr. Turner as receiver, $4,500, and one to you as receiver, $4,500.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that estimated on the basis that you had carried on the business?—A. That was the remainder of the allowances made to us by Judge Hanford as receivers with the consent of the bankrupt's attorneys; he allowed us each $5,000. We had drawn $500 prior to this time on account, and after the sale to the Metropolitan Trust Co. we were paid the balance of $5,000—$4,500 each.

Q. What I am asking you is whether that is figured on the percentages specified in the bankruptcy act?—A. I presume it will be when it comes to a final settlement.

Q. Well, this seems to be the balance of your compensation as receivers.—A. Well, there is a question involved there—I do not know whether it was the entire compensation or not. I think it was understood at the time that it was to be the entire compensation, but if it is not in there—if we do not agree to accept it as entire comepensation, we have not received all we are entitled to as receivers' fees under the bankruptcy act.

Q. Those allowances were figured on the basis that you had received and disbursed $647,010, being that part of the bid of the Metropolitan Trust Co., which was met by surrender of the first-mortgage bonds, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; including that item we have handled $848,757.80, down to May 31.

Q. I notice here an allowance of a thousand dollars to Leopold M. Stern and A. W. Buddress, attorneys for petitioning creditors—what was that for—drawing petitions and filing the schedules?—A. It was an allowance made to the attorneys representing the parties who commenced this suit against the Western Steel Corporation—the petitioning creditors.

Mr. PRESTON. In order to avoid confusion, Mr. McCoy, the records show that those were only two of the three—the Metropolitan Trust Co. was the third one, and the order allowing compensation to the attorneys for the receiver, who were the same as the attorneys for the Metropolitan Trust Co., contained in it a condition that they should not be paid anything as attorneys for petitioning creditors, so that this item represents the other two petitioning creditors.

Mr. MCCOY. Have all the labor claims against the bankrupt been paid?

A. Not quite all. All have been paid that have been filed and proven to be in proper shape. The total labor claims paid, down to May 31, is $23,602.27. There remain total labor claims filed, unpaid because of defective proof or because of the filing of conflicting claims, eleven, in amount $463.60. The total number of claims filed and payment refused because not entitled to priority under the provisions of the bankruptcy act were twelve, amounting to $2,848.90. Those claims—I desire to state that those claims that are not paid are in the hands of the trustee's attorney and are on file in the referee's court and are awaiting final proof satisfactory to the attorneys and the referee.

Q. This statement which you have furnished us is practically only a cash statement, is it not?—A. That is all.

Q. I understood you to say that you had some tangible assets on hand.—A. We have about 122 tons of steel left unsold yet. We have been selling it as rapidly as we possibly could—we had several thousand tons of it to commence with.

Q. That is all that remains to be converted into cash of the bankrupt's assets?—A. I think it is practically all.

Q. Well, was that the condition of affairs on April 2, 1912, which appears to be the date on this statement you furnished us, when you filed your last report as trustee?—A. I don't understand you.

Q. I say, was that the condition at the time when you filed the report on April 2, 1912, namely, that you had on hand only a little unsold steel?—A. Oh, we had more than that at that time.

Q. I mean a comparatively small amount.—A. At that time we had, on April 2—now, let me see—oh, we must have had five or six hundred tons, perhaps, at that time.

Q. To come down to just what I am after; how much should there be added to the figures here in order to bring this account down substantially to date, namely, the total receipts, $867,114.45—now, what should there be added to that?—A. I could not tell you offhand. We have been selling this steel mainly for account of lienors; it was pledged to the banks here and nearly all of it pledged, and we have now sold enough of it to clear it up—to clear up all our indebtedness to the bank except the Seattle National Bank. The Seattle National Bank stands to lose, I think, twelve or thirteen hundred dollars because of the insufficiency of the security which it took for advances of money to the Western Steel Corporation.

Q. In what shape was the pledge of this steel to those banks?—A. In the form of warehouse receipts, I think—either warehouse receipts or bills receivable; I do not remember; warehouse receipts, I believe.

Q. Well, a warehouse receipt would indicate that they owned it.—A. Well, banks usually do own things until they get their money out of them.

Q. Who had warehoused the goods—didn't it belong to the bankrupt?—A. No; the property belonged to the bankrupt; only the warehouse receipts were naturally offered to the banks as collateral security for loans.

Q. Was that material that they had manufactured and stored in warehouses?—A. Yes.

Q. And held the receipts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then the bankrupt pledged the warehouse receipts to the bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To get the money?—A. Yes,sir; that was all done before the receivership. There was a small lot of steel there—I do not remember how much—something over 100 tons that was not pledged, but all the remainder of it was pledged to some bank or other.

Q. Then, so far as any money which would be coming in to the bankrupt's estate, there would not be any on account of sales of steel between April 2 and date; in other words, whatever you sold was only sufficient to pay in part the claims against it?—A. We estimated when we get this steel all cleaned up we will have a net out of it over and above the liabilities to those various banks of somewhere from two to four thousand dollars; we can not tell until we get it all cleaned up, but there will be a net surplus.

Q. And when you have it cleaned up in that way that cleans up a sale of all the assets, does it?—A. I think so; yes, sir. There are some book accounts yet, perhaps, but they do not amount to much, and since this statement was made we have collected a promissory note from Jamison & Co. of this city for, I think, $6,200, or something like that—$6,200, if I remember correctly, and some interest.

Q. In other words, when you get through, you expect to add about $10,000 to this showing here, being about $4,000 for the steel and $6,000 for the note?—A. Yes, sir; not less than that.

Q. And that will be all?—A. As far as I know at present.

Q. Now, at the meeting of creditors for the purpose of electing a trustee, were you present?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there any discussion over the number of trustees who should be appointed?—A. Yes, sir; it was put to the vote of the creditors present as to whether one trustee should be elected or three. Under the bankruptcy act, as I understand it, it provides that in the event of the election of more than one trustee that three shall be elected, and the creditors by vote decided to have three trustees.

Q. Who held—what attorney held, if he held—any powers of attorney to vote at that meeting sufficient to control the election?—A. I think Bausman & Kelleher really controlled the election.

Q. Who is that?—A. Bausman & Kelleher, attorneys for the Metropolitan Trust Co.

Q. That is, they controlled——A. There were other attorneys here; Mr. Colman from Port Townsend, and I do not remember who now, but there were several attorneys present representing other claimants—labor claims, etc.

Q. Was there any particular protest over the election of three trustees?—A. No, sir; not anything definite.

Q. Well, this statement seems to be in such shape that it can be used as an exhibit, I think. You have not paid any dividends in this matter, or have you?—A. The Western Steel Corporation?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. What are the total liabilities of the company?—A. The company is capitalized at $20,000,000.

Q. I do not mean that.—A. The liabilities—the book liabilities—amounted to something over $1,400,000, inclusive of the $600,000 to the Metropolitan Trust Co. and $350,000 to James A. Moore. The remainder of it is scattered around.

Q. State, if you can, what the secured indebtedness was.—A. The Union Savings & Trust Co. was about $14,000, I think. The Seattle National Bank—I don't know—I think it was about $3,000; I am not certain about that. The Arlington Dock Co. was owed, I think, some four or five hundred dollars for storage and wharfage and labor and so forth, in handling the steel down there on the dock. That was about all the secured creditors that I recall.

Q. Does that include the creditors who were secured by the warehouse receipts?—A. Yes, sir; the Union Savings & Trust Co. and the Seattle National Bank.

Q. In addition to that there was a $2,000,000 mortgage?—A. There was a $2,000,000 mortgage, but the bonds had never sold; the bonds had been issued in New York as collateral security for this loan of $600,000 of the—the loan of the Metropolitan Trust Co.—there never was a bond sold.

Q. Was the total indebtedness under that mortgage then a loan of $600,000 with interest?—A. Under the bonded—under the bonds, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; $600,000.

Q. There was a first mortgage securing an authorized issue of $2,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the entire issue of bonds was pledged to the Metropolitan Trust Co., of New York, for a loan of $600,000.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, with the interest on the loan, was all that was due to any bondholder and any pledgee under those bonds?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McCoy, there is a fact in the record which is quite significant, which I think you would like me to tell you.

Mr. MCCOY. You may do so.

Mr. PRESTON. It appears that the Metropolitan Trust Co. undertook to foreclose that pledge and did have a sale of the $2,000,000 bonds; it bought them in in the name of an individual, and the Metropolitan Trust Co. undertook to take his place on the basis of a $2,000,000 creditor. More than that, that reduced the $600,000 indebtedness only slightly in making that sale and that matter came up in contest; the trustees filed objections to that sale and that claim and the referee, after a hearing, held that that sale was not a good sale, and thereafter the Metropolitan Trust Co. was treated only as a creditor to the extent of its actual advances.

Mr. MCCOY. In other words, they attempted to claim the deficiency claim, I presume.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. That is, they sold the bonds pledged for some sum?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. Under the terms of the note?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes.

Mr. MCCOY. And left a large deficiency against the Western Steel Corporation and then they undertook to come in and claim under that?

Mr. PRESTON. To claim under the bond issue for $2,000,000 and the deficiency, which was something over $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the amount at which they bid in the $2,000,000 bond issue?

Mr. PRESTON. $25,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. That was the amount that was realized, you mean, on the sale of the bonds by the Metropolitan Trust Co.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir, but it was ascertained at that hearing that that purchase was made in the interest of the trust company and on the contest it was all wiped out as a sale and when the trust company became a bidder and allowed to apply its indebtedness as cash in the bid, it being a preferred creditor, it was required to surrender not only the note for $600,000 but also the $2,000,000 issue of bonds and they were all canceled. The record shows quite a spirited contest there.

Mr. HIGGINS. The $2,000,000 bond sale was set aside altogether?

Mr. PRESTON. The $2,000,000 sale was set aside altogether and the bonds required, by order of the court, or the referee, I forget which, to be surrendered for cancellation absolutely by the trust company.

Mr. HIGGINS. And that left the trust company a creditor to the extent of about $600,000?

Mr. PRESTON. $650,000. They had some interest upon the $600,000 for nearly a year, I think, and then under the terms of their agreement they were allowed some considerable sum for expenses of attorneys or something of that kind, in the proceeding. I did not examine into the proceedings of it, but I know it appeared as $650,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. Following the figures which Mr. Baxter has gathered, loosely, here is the impression that that made on me—the amount realized from the assets was in the neighborhood of $877,000, and that the amount of the liabilities was $1,400,000; that would make the assets, in the aggregate, 62½ per cent of the liabilities, and it appears that no payment has been made—now why—no dividend.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I think I can explain that; you see this claim of the Metropolitan Trust Co. absorbed all of the assets. It was a preferred claim. The assets were sold to it. It was the purchaser at the trustees' sale. It was allowed to use as cash this preferred claim of theirs for the full amount of the bid, except that they were required to pay in cash $70,000.

The CHAIRMAN. $80,000.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I think $70,000 was the correct amount of the first requirement. Then the order also required them to hold themselves in readiness to pay $7,000 more for the purpose of clearing up the expenses of administration and the labor claims—the preferred labor claims—there would be nothing left for the general creditors on the face of the papers as I have acquainted myself with them. The preferred claim had absorbed the assets. I am not speaking of these warehouse receipts as preferred claims here; I am speaking only——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). You mean preferred labor claims—when you say preferred claim you mean the trust company's claim?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir. There were some preferred claims here such as the banks which had the warehouse receipts as collateral—I was not referring to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The banks' claims were specific liens on certain property of the steel company?

Mr. PRESTON. That is my understanding of the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. And this specific property was not subject to the lien of the Metropolitan Trust Co.

Mr. PRESTON. No; there was quite a lot of property that was not subject to the lien of the mortgage, which is described in the papers in groups, the mortgage property is included in groups 1, 2, and 3, and it is the bulk of the property. Then the first order of sale directed a sale only of that property that was covered by the mortgage; then there was a subsequent order of sale made upon petition or recital, I can not state to you definitely now from memory, that they could not make the sale of that alone, but it would be necessary to sell the whole. and then a subsequent order of sale directed the sale of all the property. They were permitted to use the indebtedness, $650,000, or whatever the correct amount might be of it, except that they must bid $70,000 in cash besides and must stand ready to put up $7,000 more in cash. Now, I do not think my statement to you is accurate; it is only a bird's-eye view of it as I gather it.

Mr. McCoy. Well, of course, the net result of the contest against the Metropolitan Trust Co. was not much of anything, because even if they proved their whole claim there would not be anything left to pay it with. [Here Mr. Preston hands document to Mr. McCoy.]

Mr. McCoy. This is a statement of receipts and disbursements of the receivers and trustees in the Western Steel Corporation as per trustees' report filed in the United States district court on April 2, 1912, with other memoranda in regard to the matter on the last page.

Document marked "Exhibit No. 81."

Mr. Preston. I have in the Western Steel Corporation case the same kind of a typewritten review of all the files that I made in the other case. It may be useful to you if you would like to have it to go right with this.

Mr. McCoy. This is a good place to have it go in.

Mr. Preston. I will have to send down to my stenographer for it.

Mr. McCoy. Well, we will call it exhibit No. 83 and it will be the summary statement by Mr. Preston compiled from the papers in the matter of the Western Steel bankruptcy on file in the clerk's office.

Document to be furnished is here given the exhibit number as "Exhibit No. 82."

The Chairman. Anything further on that Western Steel matter?

Mr. Preston. I would like to ask Mr. Baxter to describe to you in a brief way the work which the receivers had to do. I think there was considerable of it, but I am not familiar with the details of it.

Mr. McCoy. Unless they are claiming compensation on the basis of carrying on the business it does not make any difference how much work they did, except that what they did in the matter would have some bearing on the allowances to attorneys, but aside from that the receiver's compensation would be limited to just the straight receivership fees for taking and holding the property and turning it over.

Mr. Preston. Mr. Bausman tells me that it was not based on the theory of carrying on the business.

Mr. McCoy. Do you think it makes any difference what they did then?

Mr. Preston. No; I did not know what the fact was myself until this moment.

Mr. McCoy. Of course, if there is anything to be brought out to show on what basis the allowances to attorneys was made that might be important, but I imagine you have stated now in that contest with the Metropolitan Trust Co. the bulk of the litigation.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Bausman is here; he was the attorney and he can be examined. I would not undertake to say what he did.

The CHAIRMAN. If he cares to testify on that and you think it is important.

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to have him do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is the best place to have it go in. You can step aside Mr. Baxter.

Witness excused.

FREDERICK BAUSMAN, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. McCOY. Will you give your full name to the committee?

A. Frederick Bausman.

Q. You are an attorney practicing law in Seattle?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. You were attorney for the receivers of the Western Steel Corporation?—A. Yes; I was attorney and also attorney for the petitioning creditor, the Metropolitan Trust Co., of New York.

Q. Were you the only attorney, or was your firm the only attorney of the receivers?—A. No, sir; there was a substitution made later, when our interests for the creditors whom we represented began to conflict, and I requested the receivers to get other counsel, and I withdrew. I say now, to be accurate—as the receivers, yes, I was the only attorney for the receivers. What I speak of as a substitution occurred after the trustees in bankruptcy were elected; then I later withdrew from that relation.

Q. What allowance did you receive as attorneys of the receivers?—A. $10,000.

Q. Did you present to the court any affidavit setting forth your services on which that allowance was based?—A. I presented what is called a petition, a short summary petition, stating that I desired to have it fixed at that time. At that juncture we were transferring the assets from the receivership to the trustees, and I desired to have my fees fixed; I think it was about that time. They were not, of course, paid at that time, but they were fixed by the court. In this petition I do not recollect that I set up the nature of my services; I referred to the services as disclosed by the records of the court, and petitioned for a fixed allowance. On that the court fixed an allowance of $10,000, and he made our firm waive all claim to fees as attorneys for the petitioning creditors, which we did. Now, do you wish to know what the services were to the receivers?

Q. Yes; just in a general way.—A. I must give you, first, a brief idea of the estate. This Western Steel Corporation had assets in Canada, in Nevada, and in several counties of this State. Those assets were of a—some of them—very unexplored nature, and some of them a very involved nature. They required a very great deal of examination by counsel. Every day during the period of the receivership from one to two members of our firm were constantly engaged in that business. Now, the concern had offices in Seattle—had a large suite of rooms in a place called the Arcade Annex, on Second Avenue, and there had very voluminous files and documents and title papers, and what not. Those papers had to be examined with a great deal of expedition. We had two principal assets. One was a plant across the Sound here at a place called Irondale, and the other a tract of land exceeding 20,000 acres on what is known as Graham Island, in British Columbia. That tract was held under option only; the Western Steel did not have the direct option. It owned—the Western Steel did—seven-eighths of the stock of a British corporation known as the Western Coal & Iron Co., Limited, and the Western Coal & Iron Co., Limited, had an option upon all those claims on Graham Island.

Q. Was that property supposed to have any ore in it that was usable by the steel company?—A. It was supposed to have large deposits of coal, which were then, and have been since, entirely unexplored, and it had also what was considered a large tract of timber, the value of which also was unknown. The timber was cruised, but the coal was unexplored. The option rights were in the Royal Bank of Canada, at Victoria, under its terms, an abrupt option by which all rights expired on certain definite dates. We had to make ourselves exceedingly busy to see, first, the chain of title by which, if we made those payments, whether it would be worth while to make them and safe to make them, and, of course, had frequent consultation with the British or Canadian lawyers, as well as investigation on our own account. The receivership lasted from the 12th day of October to the 12th day of December, and then followed the election of the trustees. During this time, I think, the services were exceedingly constant and exceedingly interesting and studious. We did not know where those assets were. We found that the concern had kept no systematic set of books.

During the first two months the Western Steel Corporation kept no books at all; for a year it kept only a check book and some sort of a journal, I believe, and a vast mass of papers had to be examined to see what claims could be collected on, and what the rights of various people were in respect to this property. At Irondale everything was in confusion. Of course the insurance was in a disordered and perilous state—the men were unpaid, and of course they besieged our offices with various supplications and applications and it was all a very sad mixed up business. I can not conceive of doing more continuous work than we did for those receivers. Of course the receiver had to consider getting out receiver's certificates for some money to pay taxes with and pay the services of clerks and persons who were in charge of the property at Irondale which, of course, could not be neglected because it was a little iron plant there, and we had a very hard time in getting money because there was no cash, and nobody seemed disposed to lend money on these precarious assets. I think the receivers consulted us a dozen times a day—every day—on some point involving those titles and those claims and questions of liability of various persons and how we could get information from various sources. I think—I can not think of being more continuously employed; in fact I never have been more continuously employed by a receivership of a court than I was by those two receivers. If your court is inclined to do it, and you desire me to give all my testimony relating to the Western Steel and the appointment of the receivers I would be very glad if you will let me do it now, because at the close of the week I want to go away. I do not think that it would take very long.

Mr. McCoy. There is just one question that occurs to me and that is as to the necessity for the two receivers.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you leave the point you are now on, I want to ask you this question. As I understand you, a great deal of the work which you were continuously employed in doing was not purely legal work?

A. I think it was, practically none of it, Mr. Chairman, but what took on a legal aspect. For instance, the receivers would come in in a rush and say, "What is necessary to be done to preserve our titles to such and such properties—such and such persons make claims upon this, that, and t'other thing, and had we better release that or the other piece of property?" A good deal of it was personalty, and whether we wished to release it or let it go required a good deal of consideration, and then claimants would appear claiming they were secured and the question was whether the receivership should immediately dispute that claim or acknowledge it.

Q. Were any suits actually brought?—A. Any suits?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not recollect whether any suits were brought or not—I don't think so, no—I don't think we brought any suits.

Q. Well, were any brought against you?—A. No.

Q. In which the title to some of this property was disputed?—A. The title—during the receivership I do not think any suits were brought at all, no.

Q. Were the receivers so timid that every time anybody announced they had a claim that they came in and put you to so much trouble running the matter down on the mere verbal pretense of the claim?—A. No, sir, they did not; they showed no timidity at all, so far as I could see.

Q. Then what was the necessity for all the work which you spoke of so long as there was not any concrete legal claim made in a legal way?—A. Well, I can readily answer that by saying it would strike me with astonishment if they had not sought lawyers daily. There was a great mass of confused title there. They had to assert or yield their position about various things. They had to decide many questions as to the propriety and liability of this about people whose property they were claiming. We had, for instance, a great mass of real estate there. It was claimed that that property had never passed to the Western Steel Corporation. We claimed on the other hand that it had; that it had not gone to a syndicate composed of the former stockholders.

Q. It does not take a lawyer long to prepare to make a claim, does it?—A. No, sir; but if he has a great many things to examine it takes long.

Q. Well, he can very safely make a claim without much examination?—A. That may be, but I can only decide upon the fact that the receivers, who seemed to be very intelligent men, although they had not both been appointed at my instance, seemed to think that they should consult their lawyers every day.

Q. For how long a time were you acting as attorneys of the receivers?—A. Two months. [Addressing Mr. McCoy:] I think you were asking me a question there when he interrupted me.

Mr. MCCOY. About the necessity for the two receivers?

A. The receivers were appointed upon my application. I asked for one receiver, and Judge Hanford appointed two.

Q. Did you name the person whom you would like to have him designate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that?—A. I named first a Mr. Edgar Ames, of Seattle, and Judge Hanford, after some consideration, decided he would not appoint him.

Q. Who is Mr. Ames?—A. He is the gentleman whom subsequently I caused to be elected trustee after the election of trustees, or at the election of the trustees.

Q. Did you name him because you thought he had some particular qualifications for the place?—A. I named him because the Metropolitan Trust Co. in New York had asked me to nominate him.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is a business man here of some means and possibly what you might call of some wealth; he is interested in tide lands here and is one of the officers of what is called, I think, the Seattle General Contract Co.—a man very well known to us, and we preferred him for receiver. When he was rejected, I requested the appointment of Mr. Lester Turner. The judge acceded to that and added Mr. Sutcliffe Baxter.

Q. Well, now, do you think that there was any necessity in the world, or the slightest desirability, of having two receivers in that matter?—A. Why, I did not think so; no.

Q. It was not a matter of any tremendous complication?—A. Yes; it was a matter, Mr. McCoy, of very great complication as far as that is concerned.

Q. I mean so far as the receivers were concerned—any complications that might appear to be in the matter would be such as would be referred to an attorney for solution, were they not, no matter whether there was one receiver or twenty?—A. Oh, yes; I think so. We wished but one receiver. I asked for one receiver.

Q. And there was not any business to be carried on?—A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, the receiver in this matter was practically nothing more than a custodian of things that nobody could put into his pocket or run away with, namely, a steel plant and some real estate and some steel and some office furniture and things of that kind, and it was practically, for all purposes, a custodianship, wasn't it?—A. Yes; though I think, perhaps, we should be fairer than that.

Q. I want to be fair. I am only stating what the record shows.—A. I do not mean that you are unfair, but I think I should be fairer—I am rather inclined to your conclusion, but at the same time I think I should have to concede more than that. To put it plainly, the estate was in this condition; somebody had applied for a receivership in the State court. I held this large claim of six hundred and odd thousand dollars of the Metropolitan Trust Co., and I, after seeing this receivership in the State court, or after the application for one, rather, which from time to time was put off on various grounds, I decided the corporation was bankrupt and applied in bankruptcy and nominated Edgar Ames. Mr., or Judge, Hanford did not find Mr. Edgar Ames acceptable, and then I nominated Mr. Turner. He accepted Mr. Turner and added Mr. Baxter. I did not think of two receivers at all; as far as that is concerned, it did not occur to me at all to have two receivers. I just suggested Mr. Turner, and he added on that other name.

Q. In other words, at that time you did not think that there was any necessity for two receivers, did you?—A. No, sir; you may put it that way, that I didn't think anything about it at all—I just asked for a receiver—in other words, I would have been satisfied with one receiver, certainly.

Q. Do you know of any possible objection that could be made to Mr. Ames as receiver on the score of fitness and responsibility and respectability?—A. There is only one answer that I can make to that. Of course I did not or I would not have suggested his name, and my clients would have been very angry with me if I had suggested an improper man.

Q. In other words, he was a man of fine reputation and good business ability and an ample financial responsibility.—A. Well, now——

Q. Who was Mr. Turner?—A. Mr. Turner was formerly president of the First National Bank.

Mr. HIGGINS. If you had the appointment of the receiver, as judge, and responsible for his appointment as receiver as the United States judge of the district court, you would hardly have appointed Mr. Ames, in view of the relations between the Western Steel Corporation and the Trust Co. of New York and the contest which subsequently followed and under the conditions and circumstances surrounding their relations, would you?—A. Yes.

Q. You would?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that because you recommended him to the court—because you would not recommend an improper man?—A. I would suggest that because the receiver is but a temporary officer; he gives way to the trustees elected by the creditors, and there is nothing that he can decide; he has to be the custodian of the property, and, as Mr. McCoy suggested, an able collector and protector of the property, but there is nothing he can decide.

Q. Do you say to this committee that at the time you recommended to Judge Hanford the appointment of Mr. Ames as the receiver that you had not also in your mind the intent to have him appointed as trustee?—A. I certainly would have recommended him as trustee, yes.

Q. Now, I asked you if you did, because you qualified your answer by stating that he had no duties to perform and was a mere custodian. Now, I understand you to say, sir, that you would have also suggested his appointment as trustee?—A. Yes, sir; because he would have a good deal to do then, and as receiver——

Q. And the relations that existed between your trust company client in New York—between them and Mr. Ames and the controversy which subsequently developed and which, as was apparent to anyone at the time would develop, would not have offered to your mind—if you were charged with the responsibility, as judge, to make the appointment, any reason why Mr. Ames should not have been appointed?—A. No, sir; I have a most perfect answer to make to that.

Q. Your answer is "No"?—A. It is not "no"—it is an answer that I can not make by yes or no.

Q. You can make any answer you wish to.—A. I will be glad to make it. Mr. Ames had no relations with the trust company of New York; he was simply personally known to Herbert Parsons, the New York counsel of the Metropolitan Trust Co., and he had told us if we applied for a receiver that he should be very glad if it would be Mr. Ames.

Q. Now, Mr. Bausman, do not let you and I beat around the bush about this thing.—A. Yes.

Q. He was recommended, wasn't he?—A. Yes.
Q. By the New York attorney?—A. Yes.
Q. That is what I say—of the trust company?—A. Yes.
Q. And it was because the New York attorney of the trust company had recommended him that you——A. (Interrupting.) That I suggested.
Q. That you suggested him to Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; because he was a man of high standing and excellent character.
Q. Now, if you want to get into the ethics of things, as a judge and if these facts had been presented to you, you think it would be eminently proper to appoint Mr. Ames?—A. Why, yes; I think a court very frequently should appoint receivers at the suggestion of the largest preferred creditors.
Q. And also trustees?—A. He does not appoint trustees—they are elected by the creditors.
Q. Well, that is a matter within the jurisdiction of the court?—A. No, sir; it is not within his jurisdiction.
Q It may be?—A. It can not be; it is absolutely within the power of the creditors by vote.
Q. Is it possible for the court to remove an improper appointee?—A. No. sir.
Q. Or to control in any way the appointment of the trustee?—A. No, sir. The creditors constitute a little republic and they vote themselves, or remove the receivers if they do not like them and appoint their own trustees at the election.
Q. For any misadministration of the estate the trustee is not then responsible to the court?—A They are responsible on their bonds and responsible to the creditors and the court has nothing to do with them.
Q. The court does not review his action?—A. He may review his action as there is a judicial appeal, as he does in other cases.
Q. As a matter of fact he reviews his entire action?—A. He reviews it only as creditors take exceptions and appeal—he can not remove him as an officer.
Q. As a matter of fact, he can review his entire action and entire administration of the estate?—A. He can review that just as he can review the action of any other body, but his controversies are brought into court; he is not an officer of that court; he is a trustee elected by the creditors. The receiver is an officer of the court and that is why the court fixes the receivers——
Q. And if you are attacking the action of the trustee appointed in bankruptcy under our Federal bankruptcy law, you are attacking him in the Federal court, are you not?—A No; you can attack him in the State court. The act specially imposes that.
Q. But as a practicing lawyer you ordinarily attack him in the Federal court?—A. Yes, sir; I might, but I have also brought suits against them in the State court.
Q. You have done many things besides doing that——A. But I am very clear he is not an officer which the Federal court can remove. Mr. Ames was in every way qualified for the position. I had no complaint, however, when he was not selected, and then I spoke of Mr. Turner, who had no relations with us; that is, with our client, with the trust company—they did not even know who he was when he was appointed.
The Chairman. Any further questions with Mr. Bausman?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McCoy asked Mr. Baxter a question as to whether there was any emergency in the bankrupt's affairs that justified the appointment of the receiver. You know that pretty well, whatever it may have been; state it.

A. Yes. Shall I proceed on that?

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

A. Why, yes; there was every reason why in this estate there should be a receiver. If we did not have receivers we had to wait—if we didn't have the receiver we had to wait until there should be a meeting of the creditors, that would take a month or more—and if we would take a month or more before there would be this custodian of any kind—there was this plant Irondale liable to destruction; no legal guardian there for it and there would be its assets liable to be carried off and dismembered by anybody who chose, and it seemed to be preeminently a case for a receivership. The bankrupt made no fight on the question of bankruptcy and it was adjudicated a bankrupt and it made no attempt to remove the receiver. The assets were subsequently appraised at $440,000. The liabilities, counting the claim of the Metropolitan Trust Co. as a secured claim and not as a claim independent of the ownership of the bonds, were I think about $1,400,000. At the sale the Metropolitan Trust Co. took all the assets by virtue of its first lien. It bid all the bonds and paid in cash some seventy or eighty thousand dollars. Now, if you will permit me to add in this matter of the fees. My clients paid those fees to the court. Permit me, if you will, voluntarily to say this, if there is any exception to it—they bore the burden and they never have complained. They held the first lien upon all this property, barring some loose personalty on which they had no lien.

The CHAIRMAN. But did they realize the full amount of their lien?

A. They realized it fully except having to take over the assets on the lien—assets which they regarded as very bad indeed and one of which is subject to the option claim of $200,000, or at the time of the bankruptcy, $250,000.

Q. The point, then, is, at the sale or in any other way there could not be enough cash or money realized to pay their claim and leave anything over for other creditors, so that other creditors did not suffer even if you did get liberal attorney's fee?—A. Because the assets were worth so much less than their claim that there could not be any possibility of anybody bidding, either in separate lots or in the whole—for it was offered in both ways—any amount which would approximate $600,000; the approximation was $440,000, and their claim alone was $650,000. Of this fee of the receivers and of our firm they, of course, were apprised. They made no objection at all, and as far as I know it was satisfactory to them, and there was no objection to it. And in answer to your question I would say that I can not now conceive the possibility that any creditor got a dollar less by virtue of the fees. They formed but an insignificant part of the burden which was already vastly greater than the visible assets which we had to take over.

Mr. HIGGINS. How long had the plant been in operation?—A. It had been in what they call operation about a year or two, but it never had been in continuous operation.

Q. What was its capital stock?—A. Its capital stock was $20,000,000, of which I think five was preferred and fifteen common.

Q. What was the preferred stock—accumulative dividends?—A. I do not know what it was, because this being in bankruptcy, of course we have no right to assess the shareholders and it did not interest me.

Q. Well, did you act as attorney for the company before it went into the hands of a receiver?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or for the trust company at the time the bonds were taken over?

A. No. Perhaps I did not understand it exactly—at the time the bonds were taken over?

Q. I refer to the bonds taken by the trust company of which Herbert Parsons was attorney.—A. I had nothing to do with that. That had been done in New York at an auction sale.

Q. When did you come into the concern as the attorney for the trust company?—A. About the first week, I think, in September. In other words, a month before the receivership, that is also a month before the petition in bankruptcy—September, 1911—it may have been the first or second week. Mr. Parsons came out here from New York and he brought with him evidences of the note and of their having purchased the bonds at auction sale and we held this claim against the company for nearly a month before we put it in the hands of the receiver.

Q. It was their own auction sale?—A. Yes?

Q. Which they held under the authority of the pledge that was given at the time the bonds were deposited as collateral.—A. Yes. He showed me those papers. It constituted a notice of one month given to Mr. James A. Moore in writing, the president of the company here, if he didn't take care of the lien in the month they would sell the bonds.

Q. Who promoted the steel company?—A. A man by the name of James A. Moore.

Q. Of Seattle?—A. Of Seattle; and he took out a large proportion of the stock himself by turning over certain assets of old companies preexisting. This occurred about the beginning of the year 1910. The company then led a fitful existence and operated intermittently during 1910 and stopped somewhere about the 1st of August, 1911; then in September the trust company lawyer came out here and put the claim in our hands. Then we held it a month seeing if we could not get some satisfaction in it and during that time applications were made to the State court for receivers by various people and the company fought them and finally, about the 12th of October, I think it was, we petitioned in bankruptcy for the bankruptcy of the corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was it you suggested that we should inquire of you about in addition to this?

The WITNESS. Just about what we have been going over—at first you limited it——

The CHAIRMAN. Then we have covered the ground?

The WITNESS. I rather think so, unless counsel has something.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything to ask, Mr. Preston?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes. Do you wish the committee to understand that the receivers were inactive and had not much to do?

A. Oh, no; they were very active. They were at their offices every day and during the full hours of the day. They had a bookkeeper there, two bookkeepers—a bookkeeper and an assistant bookkeeper and a stenographer, and were going through those voluminous files and data as far as I could see all day long and apparently keeping up a vigorous correspondence and communication with people whom they thought had relations with the company and endeavoring, I think, with a great deal of diligence, to ascertain the relations of all claims presented to them.

Q. And what was your observation of Mr. Baxter, speaking first of the impression he created on you, as to his capability and efficiency and honesty?—A. Well, Mr. Baxter struck me as exceedingly diligent. He did at one time render a very valuable service, but I am not able at this juncture to say whether that was during the receivership or the trusteeship, but I think it was during the receivership—services aside from what he was doing every day, during which he seemed to me to be very busy—service that was of great moment to the estate. It was in relation to this asset that I call Graham Island. This Graham Island asset is the one which I have described to you as owned by a British corporation. The British corporation stock I think I told you was owned to the extent of seven-eighths by this bankrupt steel corporation here, but the Western Coal & Iron Co. (Ltd.), the British corporation, had no title to Graham Island, but only an optional right to acquire it. It had paid previously $150,000 and it had yet to pay $250,000 with some interest. Now, one of those payments of $50,000 was coming due January 1, 1912, or say, December 31, 1911, and the holders of that stock—the holders, or I should say the owners of that property, rather—Graham Island—were unwilling to extend the option. Now, it was plain that the bankrupt corporation and its receivers and trustees would not have the money to pay it on the 31st of December.

The CHAIRMAN. You have substantially told us that already.

The WITNESS (continuing). Well, he went over there and it seemed to me he did very good work, and he got the extension to April 1, which enabled the bankruptcy court finally to save that asset.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, I want to ask you the question, Do you know whether that was the result of some personal acquaintance or influence of his own?

A. I do not know that of my own knowledge, but he told me that it was largely due to friendships of past years with certain people in Victoria who were interested in those properties; that in that way he was able to get an extension.

Q. When I asked you about the emergency reasons for the appointment of the receiver, you mentioned several. I seem to remember, in my looking over the papers, that there were some reasons urged also in regard to Mr. Moore's handling of the assets—just briefly, if there is anything of that kind.—A. Well, Mr. Moore was the president of the bankrupt, and we regarded him as a very unreliable man, to put it mildly, and we regarded it as deeply essential to the preservation of the assets that they should be immediately taken charge of by that court. There were many reasons for that; among them was the fact that some of the properties were still in his name and not yet conveyed to the corporation—the evidences of title to those scattering properties were such as might disappear—they were scattered in many counties and in the State of Nevada and in the Dominion of Canada, and were in very involved relations, and the preservation incidental to every bit of evidence relating to those things was of the highest essential—in the highest degree essential. I should have regarded it, gentlemen, as very wrong if the court had not appointed a receiver of that property.

Q. Now, Mr. Bausman, at the time of the allowance of the fees to the receiver and receiver's attorneys and trustees' attorneys, were you a participant as attorney for the trust company?—A. In which—the trustees——

Q. Yes.—A. I served as attorney.

Q. I say, were you a participant to the proceedings, representing your clients, the Metropolitan Trust Co.?—A. Afterwards, when the controversy arose between my clients and others, I resigned and other counsel was appointed to represent the receivers from that time on—the trustees.

Q. You did not get my question.—A. (Continuing.) And then we debated certain legal points. Up to that time there had been no conflict and it was expected there would be none, because my client had offered to reorganize the company at its own expense, if all the creditors would join with it, and save delay, to keep the plant from going to ruin. There was a vote on that in which a majority in number were with us, but the Standard Oil Co. came in and fought us, joined by the First National Bank of this city. They resisted this right of ours to use the whole issue of bonds in the right of ownership, and contended that we should only have the right as collateral; and they opposed the whole voluntary organization scheme, and then I resigned.

Q. Mr. Bausman, you do not understand my last question. The point I was getting at was this: When those different allowances were made to receivers, attorneys, trustees and attorneys, were you not on the ground participating in the proceedings leading up to those allowances, by virtue of your representation of your client, the Metropolitan Trust Co., or, to put it more directly, did your client, the trust company, or you for them, ever make any objection to any of those allowances?—A. Oh, no, sir; just as I told these gentlemen, they were perfectly satisfied with the fees, as far as I know.

Q. Your testimony, I thought, related more particularly to your own fees.

The CHAIRMAN. He included the other also.

The WITNESS. They did not object to the receivers' fees.

Q. Did Judge Hanford, in declining to appoint Mr. Ames, and appointing Mr. Turner and Mr. Baxter, announce any reason that operated on his mind for it?—A. In appointing Mr. Baxter——

Mr. PRESTON. No, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, answer.

Mr. PRESTON (continuing). Appointing Mr. Baxter jointly with Mr. Ames.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. The conversation that ensued between Judge Hanford and myself is almost exactly as follows: After he rejected the appointment of Mr. Ames I suggested Mr. Turner. He finally said yes, that Mr. Turner was highly qualified, or words to that effect, but, he said, there ought to be another—that he had always found himself that the most efficient results were obtained not by picking out receivers miscellaneously on the suggestion of lawyers, but by picking a man whom he said had gotten results before and understood the procedures and the way to handle estates.

Mr. McCoy. He didn't happen to mention the McCarthy estate, did he?

The Witness. No, sir; he did not mention anything about any particular estate to me; he made that remark. I made no observation in respect to that. He said, "What is wrong with having two receivers, why not have two receivers." I said, "That is a matter I leave entirely to your honor." He said, "I think it would be well to have two receivers," and I think he said then, "I will appoint Mr. Baxter." At any rate he did appoint Mr. Baxter.

Witness excused.

Sutcliffe Baxter, recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. McCoy. Is there anything more that you want of anybody else to testify about the Western Steel case, so that we can get it all into the record at this place.

Mr. Preston. No other witnesses that I know of.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Baxter, I believe there was one more case which you mentioned, the Ingalls case.

A. C. J. Ingalls; yes, sir; C. J. Ingalls.

Q. This is the matter of C. J. Ingalls, bankrupt?—A. Yes.

Q. That was a jewelry store and you were appointed. The adjudication was on the 26th day of January, 1912—voluntary bankruptcy.—A. That is right.

Q. The schedule of liabilities amounted to $2,950.78; wage claims, $60; and other indebtedness, $2,890.78. The scheduled assets were valued by the bankrupt at $1,600, the cost price being stated as $739.16; fixtures scheduled at $454 and claimed as exempt; and also a lot of book accounts; now what was the total of the amount scheduled?—A. The book accounts were about $450.

Q. What was the total amount of the assets set out in the schedules; you made an inventory?—A. Yes.

Q. Showing the original cost price of the assets of the bankrupt at $3,114.29?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then in February, 1912, you were elected as trustee, and in the same month you filed your report as receiver, showing receipts amounting to $35 and disbursements $35.30.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The disbursement being car fare and assistance in taking inventories, and stenographic services, and typewriting inventories, and services of the keeper, and the receiver's bond, etc. Did you sell the stock as receiver or as trustee?—A. I think as trustee.

Q. It was sold February 19, 1912?—A. Yes, sir; I had been elected trustee before that time.

Q. The stock was sold for $1,557?—A. It was appraised at $1,557.

Q. It had been appraised at $1,557?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you sold it, or you received bids for it, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you rejected the bids, did you?—A. We rejected the first set of bids.

Q. And March 6, 1912 on a resale you accepted the highest bid, which was $985?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On April 5, 1912 you declared a dividend of 5 per cent—the total amount of assets that came into your hands was $1,045?—A. Correct, sir.

Q. That estate has not been distributed, has it?—A. No, sir; only one dividend has been paid. The papers are in the hands of the attorneys now and it is up to the referee—I don't know whether there was any other dividend.

Q. How much money is there remaining in your hands?—A. About $460.

Q. $465?—A. $465; yes, sir.

Q. Were you authorized by the order appointing you receiver to conduct that business?—A. I don't remember as to that, I did not conduct it at all. I had an inventory taken and sold it out as quickly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions about that, Mr. Preston?

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to ask you, Mr. McCoy, if it is the purpose of the committee to append as part of your record all these statements as to the bankruptcy matters.

Mr. MCCOY. Oh, no; I think I have taken the essential figures out of them—the Western Steel bankruptcy was in the shape of a cash statement, but these others are narrative, and I think I have taken out all the figures in there and simply putting them in that way.

Mr. PRESTON. You spoke of a meeting of the creditors in the McCarthy estate held before Judge Hanford at which the question came up as to whether the Stone-Fisher bid, part cash, and part on installments, should be accepted.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or what should be done?—A. Yes.

Q. Now you say there were creditors there and that is about as far as you went into it—were there any number of creditors there in person or by attorneys, or both?—A. There were some creditors there in person and others were represented by attorneys; most of them were represented by attorneys, though, generally.

Q. Speaking roughly of the percentage of creditors, what percentage were represented there?—A. A considerable percentage, I could not state positively, or even approximately.

Q. Was there considerable of a gathering there?—A. Yes, sir; I think there were some dozen or 15 people there, or, 20 perhaps.

Q. Were there not most of the creditors represented by attorneys in the proceeding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were those attorneys present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any of them that were absent from that meeting?—A. I do not think they were; as far as I know they were all there.

Q. Were the creditors insistent that the bid be not accepted and that the business go on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it not shortly after that that the slump in business occurred here in Seattle, the falling off in business generally, I mean—I do not mean that McCarthy business alone. A. Yes, sir; commencing in 1908 the business was poor.

Q. I am not speaking of the McCarthy business.—A. Generally business was very poor throughout the year 1908; yes, sir.

Q. Now, some suggestion has been made that the continuance of that business so long, for so many months after it devoloped that it was not paying expenses, was perhaps not the right thing; what, if anything, had the creditors to do with that continuance of the business?—A. Well, I do not know that the creditors had much, if anything, to do with it. We were trying to sell it, and finally after reporting to my attorneys and the creditors here that the thing was losing money, and losing money very rapidly, there was a man by the name of Hubbell, up here on Seventh and Pike Streets, who got into communication with Mr. Anderson, of the Western Dry Goods Co., and they conceived the idea that they wanted to buy it and came up to the store and asked whether if I could furnish them with an inventory of it. I told them that I could furnish them an estimated inventory based on the last preceding inventory, less the sales taken from the stock and plus the purchases, and on that basis, while they never made a definite offer for it, they did intimate that they would pay me enough for that stock and fixtures and the whole outfit to leave the receiver in debt ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

Q. Now, when was that Hubbell proposition made?—A. It was the latter part of the summer; it must have been in July or August; I think July, perhaps.

Q. Now, did you carry on that losing business because you wanted to or because you could not get rid of it?—A. No, sir; I was opposed to conducting the business at all from the start. I wanted to sell it. I was trying to sell it, because I could not——

Mr. McCoy. You could put it up at auction.

A. You could put it up at auction.

Q. And you could not possibly have come out any worse, hardly even if you had given the assets away.—A. We could not have foreseen those things; at least I did not.

Mr. McCoy. I think myself it is very objectionable for receivers to be running a business. That is my own view of it. I think no receiver ought to be allowed to run a business except on an absolutely clear showing; that is, bankrupt business.

Mr. Hughes. You mean bankrupt business?

Mr. McCoy. Or any kind of business.

Mr. Hughes. This was not a bankruptcy proceeding.

Mr. McCoy. Any kind of a proceeding.

Mr. Hughes. I agree with you.

The Chairman. It was insolvency.

Mr. McCoy. The best thing to do is to sell it out and let the other fellow run the business.

Mr. Preston. You were asked and you testified that at one time you were in the liquor business a number of years. Now I will ask you what kind of liquor business were you in?—A. The wholesale liquor business.

Q. Here in Seattle?—A. Here in Seattle.

Mr. Preston. Mr. McCoy, you asked me to get the stipulation fixing the fees in the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co. Now I have got the original files here and I would suggest that the quickest way to get it into the record is to read it in.

Mr. McCoy. Yes; will you do that?

Mr. Preston (reading):

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the petitioning creditors, by their respective counsel—the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co., by Richard Saxe Jones, its attorney; the Washington National Bank, a corporation, by Messrs. Kerr & McCord, its attorneys; the Washington Trust Co., a corporation, and John Schram, principal creditor of the Seattle Paint & Varnish Co., by H. R. Clise, their attorney; and Sutcliffe Baxter, by Messrs. Metcalfe & Jurey, his attorneys—that in pursuance of a certain oral agreement fixing the compensation of the receiver, Sutcliffe Baxter, Esq., and his attorneys, Metcalfe & Jurey, and Richard Saxe Jones, as attorney for the bankrupt, and McClure & McClure, Pipes & Taft, and John G. Gray, attorneys for the petitioning creditors, that the compensation of the said receiver and attorneys is hereby stipulated as follows—

And here follow the exact amounts as set out in the statement which you read from and I will not read those. And then it proceeds:

It is further stipulated that an order may be entered herein by the court, allowing the compensations herein named and directing the payment by Sutcliffe Baxter, receiver, of said amounts to the parties so entitled thereto.

Dated the 23d and 28th days of December, 1904, and signed by those different attorneys recited in the order. You do not need the signatures, I guess.

Mr. McCoy. Those are all attorneys, Mr. Preston?

A. Oh, yes.

Mr. Preston. Now, in the Walker estate, according to your statement there, your allowance was $500?

A. Yes.

Mr. Preston. That is one thing which you overlooked in reading it into the record. I noticed one or two things, and I thought I would supply them.

Mr. McCoy. Yes; I thought he stated $500; however, if there is anything of that kind to be cleared up you might do so.

Mr. Preston. In the Dowell case——

The Witness. Alice C. Dowell——

Mr. Preston. The total cash received is $4,101.22. You gave in the amount that the stock sold for, but there was a few hundred dollars more which you passed over; then, there is the statement in the Walker Co. case that the commission and expenses of John P. Hoyt, referee in bankruptcy, was $300; do you know what the expense items were?

A. I do not; I do not think I ever saw any of the figures of it other than the order to pay the $300—in other words, to issue a check for $300 for compensation and expenses of the referee.

Mr. Preston. I think that is all the questions I have.

The Chairman. What is your age, Mr. Baxter?

A. I was 70 years of age on the 11th of November, last.

Q. Have you any personal connections which brings you pretty close to Judge Hanford?—A. I am not related to Judge Hanford at all. I have known him very well for 40 years and over. He was my attorney for 12 or 15 years prior to his appointment to his present position.

Q. Did you know whether the late Gov. McGraw was largely responsible for the judge's appointment to his present position?—A. I do not know that he was. I presume he was. Mr. McGraw was in politics in those days, and so——

Q. Your family and Gov. McGraw's are connected in some way?—A. My son married the governor's daughter.

Q. When were they married?—A. Some 11 or 12 years ago—about 12 years ago, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, Mr. Baxter, tell us what you know of your own knowledge about Gov. McGraw's being responsible for the appointment of Judge Hanford to the Federal bench.

A. I do not know anything of my own knowledge in the matter. I simply know that Judge Hanford and Gov. McGraw have always been very great friends—strong, close friends.

The CHAIRMAN. Personally and politically?

A. Personally and politically; and I supposed, as a matter of course, the governor was instrumental in obtaining that appointment.

Mr. PRESTON. You spoke of Gov. McGraw. He was not governor of the State until long after Judge Hanford was appointed to the bench?

A. Long after Judge Hanford was appointed—over 20 years, or 22 years ago, if I remember right.

The CHAIRMAN. But the governor was the greatest personal and political power in the Territory or the State?

A. I would hardly say that he was the greatest; he was a great political power.

The CHAIRMAN. He was among the greatest, if not the greatest?

A. I think so; he was a very strong man.

Mr. MCCOY. Now, Mr. Preston, I wanted to ask you at what stage of the Knosher case you came into the bankruptcy proceedings?

Mr. PRESTON. It was some time between the 20th of April, 1911, which is the date upon which there was filed with the referee the petition of the Western Dry Goods Co. and others to set aside the appraisement and sale of the stock, and the date upon which I, on behalf of Anisfield & Co., filed objections to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to entertain that petition, and that date was April 25. I can not be more definite than to say that it was between the two dates that I was first employed.

Mr. MCCOY. Your appearance was for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court to proceed on the petition of the Western Dry Goods Co.?

A. Yes, sir. My objection was that the remedy was by plenary suit; and that the bankruptcy court under the circumstances existing could not entertain jurisdiction to give any such relief sought.

Mr. MCCOY. One matter more, and that is in regard to the indictments against the Schwabacher Bros. grocery concern for violation of the pure food and drug act. They continued to sell the objectionable articles after the circuit court of appeals had decided that the department was wrong in its ruling, didn't they?

Mr. PRESTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. MCCOY. And whatever you may say in regard to any moral guilt in the matter, they were guilty under the law, after the law had been declared?

Mr. PRESTON. They were technically guilty, and I so advised them, while I did not think the decision was right. I am not presumptuous enough to set up my opinion against that of the circuit court of appeals—that it would be followed in other courts in this circuit, and that they were technically guilty.

Mr. McCoy. They continued, after the circuit court of appeals decision, to get rid of their surplus stock, in violation of law?

A. That is my understanding of the fact.

Whereupon the further proceedings are adjourned until to-morrow morning, July 18, 1912, at the hour of 9.30 o'clock.

EIGHTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1912—9.45 A. M.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, before leaving the Western Steel matter, knowing that you would like to keep your subjects close together, I have here the documents in that case furnished by the referee upon your precipe, which, if you wish them, I think you would like have go in at this point before going off on another subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you examined them?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir. They are covered by the referee's certificate.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the receiver's and trustee's reports in the Western Steel cases?

Mr. PRESTON. They are certified to under the certificate of the referee and referred to by their exhibit numbers which he puts on the back of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it your thought that they would go directly into the record or that we would take them in a collateral way?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, sir, I did not have any thought on it. Whatever you wish to do, of course we wish to do in the matter. They will be of assistance to anyone in an inquiry in that case. The other matter, Mr. Graham, is simply a certificate descriptive of the volume of the records in the referee's office in that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports and papers referred to by Mr. Preston will be made alphabetical serial exhibits to accompany the record, but not as a part of it at this time.

Documents marked "Exhibit H."

H. L. KLOCK, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Klock, you are a member of the Seattle Merchants & Credit Men's Association.

A. I am; or rather my firm is.

Q. Your firm is?—A. My firm is.

Q. Are you one of the trustees of the association?—A. Why, I am not one of the trustees, I am one of a certain committee.

Q. Were you appointed by Mr. Anderson, president of the committee, on a special committee which was constituted in pursuance of an action taken at the recent monthly meeting or dinner up there at the Hotel Washington Annex?—A. I am.

Q. Did you meet with some other members of that committee on the call of Mr. Anderson recently and when it took up for consideration some charges against Judge Hanford?—A. I did.

Mr. PRESTON. Speak a little louder, please.

The WITNESS. I did.

Mr. McCoy. At that time you had a conference with this congressional committee, didn't you?

A. I did.

Q. And they had requested you to endeavor to get the association to cooperate with the committee in getting together any facts in regard to the complaints of the administration of the bankruptcy law, didn't you?—A. Well, they asked for facts regarding excessive receiverships and attorneys' fees regarding Judge Hanford's court, and they asked for information from the Merchants' Association and Credit Men. I was asked if I would put them in touch with such parties.

Q. Now, state as nearly as you can recollect what took place at this meeting of the committee appointed by Mr. Anderson—it had only one meeting, hadn't it, so far as you know?—A. Only one meeting only.

Q. What took place at the meeting?—A. The meeting was called by request to have the committee decide whether they cared to take part in preparing evidence and presenting it to your committee or not. Do you want me to tell what happened there?

Q. Yes, tell what was said and what was done about anything, if anything was done there.—A. Well, to begin with, there was a meeting held, I think, on the 17th day of June in the Washington Annex, being a monthly meeting of the Seattle Merchants & Credit Men's Association. At this particular meeting an attorney by the name of Anderson whom I believe is a brother of Mr. Anderson who is the president of our association. Mr. Anderson recited in detail that evening some of the grievances coming out of these receiverships and he made a special mention of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. and the Western Steel Co., the Knosher Dry Goods Co.—whether there were others or not—I think not—but he mentioned those in particular. He recited the fight that the Association made against the excessive charges in the matter of the Knosher Co.—how that the matter had been carried to San Francisco.

Q. To the circuit court, you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. The circuit court of appeals?—A. Yes, sir, and that they had succeeded in getting this fee cut down something like $2,500 or $3,000. He recited the matter of assets of $80,000—or 80 per cent, rather, in the McCarthy Dry Goods case, where they had been eaten up in court costs to the amount that there had been paid to the creditors a sum in the neighborhood of about 5 per cent only. After reciting several other matters in connection with these excessive receiverships the meeting proceeded with its other work, and at the conclusion a man by the name of Fred Fisher of Fisher Bros. moved that the committee—made a motion that the committee be appointed to wait upon Judge Hanford and Judge Hoyt and request that the creditors in the future be consulted as to who would be receivers. What led to this motion was that there was a certain party had been a receiver in each one of those three particular cases and that that party had received exorbitant fees.

Q. Who was it—Sutcliffe Baxter?—A. Sutcliffe Baxter.

At this stage Mr. Finch interrupts the proceedings as follows:

Mr. Finch. Mr. Chairman, will you pardon an interruption?

The Chairman. Is this for the record?

Mr. FINCH. Yes, sir, if you please.

The CHAIRMAN. Suspend for the moment.

Whereupon Mr. Klock, the witness, is temporarily withdrawn from the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it, Mr. Finch?

Mr. FINCH. I want to complete the record that the committee has asked me to make relative to the exhibits which you are to take with you. I would like to have the committee have a complete set of files in the State court in the receivership proceeding. I have a complete set that have been compared and I have tendered them to Mr. Dorr and I think that he acknowledges them to be copies. I have in my hand a list of those exhibits, it being a transcript of the State court appearance docket. I would like to have that list marked in some way just so that the committee can have it for reference. Then the files I also offer at this time, being those two packages [showing]. Then I would like to have you have——

The CHAIRMAN. Are they the original court files?

Mr. DORR. Copies.

Mr. FINCH. No, they are copies of the original court files. Then I would like to have the committee have in their possession certain exhibits that were introduced before Judge Smith and which are among the court files here in this case. I have no way of supplying copies of them and I suppose the committee will have to take the originals.

Mr. DORR. We will make copies, Mr. Finch, if you wish.

Mr. FINCH. Very well, just so they are true copies. What I mean by that is that they show the indorsements and the cancellation marks and such items as that.

Mr. MCCOY. Can not those originals go with us?

Mr. FINCH. I do not know why they could not.

Mr. MCCOY. I have always found that where you have stamps and check marks and what not on them that it is much more satisfactory to have the original check marks than any copy of them.

Mr. DORR. Then I will suggest that we make copies and leave the copies here in the court records.

Mr. FINCH. Very well.

Mr. MCCOY. How many are there that you want to go?

The CHAIRMAN. Have you made a list of those which could accompany them, so that it might be known that all you have mentioned go along with us?

Mr. FINCH. I have not made such a list and I would like to dictate it at this time into the record, as my time is so short.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; you can dictate it right into the record.

Mr. FINCH. The first one is a certified check of M. F. Mayhew to Peter L. Larsen, $21,712.50, dated March 7, 1902.

Mr. MCCOY. Let each of these be marked with the alphabetical serial letters, and this will be "H," and they will be marked "H–1" and "H–2," and so on.

Mr. FINCH (continuing). The second is a certificate of deposit signed by H. F. Lane, cashier, payable to Peter L. Larsen, receiver, $21,712.50, dated March 12, 1902. [Document marked "Exhibit H–2."]

The third is another certificate of deposit signed by J. F. Lane, payable to Peter L. Larsen, receiver, $19,706.05, dated March 24, 1902. [Document marked "Exhibit H–3."]

Fourth is a certificate of deposit signed J. F. Lane, cashier, payable to order, C. A. Koepfli, clerk, and Peter L. Larsen, receiver, for $20,064.77, dated March 24, 1902. [Document marked "Exhibit H–4."]

Fifth is a check signed by M. F. Mayhew, payable to cash for $150, dated April 17, 1902. This is the original check of the one which I put a photograph copy in of. [Document marked "Exhibit H–5."]

Mr. DORR. The one that was paid to C. A. Reynolds.

Mr. FINCH. Sixth, a check signed by Peter L. Larsen, receiver, payable to the Scandinavian-American Bank, $338.45, dated 3/24, 1902. [Document marked "Exhibit H–6."]

Seven—then I offer as No. 7 six deposit slips, all of them dated April 3, 1902.

The CHAIRMAN. Please pin them all together. [Deposit slips are pinned together and marked as "Exhibit H–7."]

Mr. FINCH. That, I think, gentlemen, is all that I care to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. These will go in with the other alphabetical exhibits.

Mr. DORR. In addition to that, may it please the committee, we desire to offer certain exhibits from the Federal court records, a list of which I have prepared; it includes those exhibits which were offered during the progress of the taking of the testimony of Mr. Finch and other witnesses on this subject, and some additional documents.

The CHAIRMAN. It was taken from the record in Judge Hanford's court?

Mr. DORR. Yes.

Mr. FINCH. That is satisfactory, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. DORR. And my suggestion is that the lists be combined as one list, showing all the Heckman & Hansen exhibits on one paper, if that is agreeable to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Let them go in that way as one exhibit under one letter. They can be arranged in that way.

Mr. DORR. Now, Mr. Finch, before you leave, there is one item on this list that you supplied, dated March 23, reading "enter"—or "ent," which I take to be "enter"—"enter". C. A. Heckman gave notice of appeal. I find no record of any paper of that kind.

Mr. FINCH. That is due to the fact that this list is a copy of the State court appearance docket, and it would simply mean that that was noted as an entry in the book and it would not mean that it was a file.

Mr. HUGHES. Was this a notice in open court?

Mr. FINCH. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. A notice of appeal given in open court?

Mr. FINCH. Yes. The record may show that on this date, March 22, Mr. Heckman gave notice of appeal.

Mr. HUGHES. In open court?

Mr. FINCH. In open court.

Mr. HUGHES. That is, notice of appeal from the superior court to the supreme court.

Mr. FINCH. Yes. You will find that there is also a record of that in the order on the fourth report of the receiver.

The CHAIRMAN. If that notice was given I suppose it was the duty of the clerk to make a minute of it.

Mr. McCOY. One thing more, Mr. Finch, in regard to that newspaper account of Judge Hanford's alleged remarks—have you been able to locate it?

Mr. FINCH. I have not yet, but I still think I shall get it. I know it so well—I had a copy of the paper for five years in my possession and I have got a very distinct mental photograph of it, and while I have leafed a number of books of the Star I have not found it yet. There are some copies of the Star missing from the files over in the Star office. It may have been there, but it is in existence and I will get it.

Mr. McCOY. I suggest that when you get back to Seattle, if you get hold of that, that you can have a conference with Mr. Dorr about it and make some sort of agreement so that we can find out whether or not Judge Hanford did make those remarks. The quickest way would be to ask him, I presume. I think you can arrange to send it on to us under some sort of stipulation.

Mr. DORR. Very well.

Mr. FLINCH. Very well.

Mr. DORR. Before you retire from the room I would like to have you identify the book which I now hand you, as the ledger of Heckman & Hansen [handing book to Mr. Finch].

Mr. FINCH. I would be unable to do that. I never saw it. I tried to get the books of Heckman & Hansen, and I could not get them.

Mr. DORR. Can not you tell whether or not that is Heckman & Hansen?

Mr. FINCH. No; I can not myself. I have never seen it.

Mr. DORR. It seems to have been used as an exhibit in the hearing.

Mr. FINCH. Well, I will say, now that you have called my attention to a mark there, that that would lead you to conclude that it had been. The mark being the usual stamp put on by Judge Smith, but not containing his signature as is contained on all the other exhibits, I will say that one day some parties came in there with a load of books when I had not time to go through them, and I never got an opportunity to go through them. I do not know what sort of a record was made any more than I know that in this transcript of the testimony there is a long complaint made about my failure to get access to the Heckman & Hansen books and the books of the receivership.

Mr. DORR. This is a book, Mr. Finch, that I found among the exhibits in that case on file in this court, and can not you tell from an inspection of that book whether it is their ledger?

Mr. FINCH. Why, I can only do what you can do, Mr. Dorr. I do not know that it is not—it is not in the handwriting of either Mr. Heckman or Mr. Hansen.

Mr. DORR. Probably not.

Mr. FINCH. And so I would not know any more about it that you know.

Mr. DORR. Now, I am expecting to call some witnesses from the Scandinavian-American Bank, and I recalled Judge Battle, in our endeavor to further throw light on this subject. I wish to make that statement to you now, before you leave.

Mr. McCOY. When are you coming back, as nearly as you can tell?

Mr. FINCH. So far as I know, it will take me 10 days in all to do what I am about to do.

Mr. MCCOY. I presume there will be further testimony given in the Heckman & Hansen matter, and when you come back I should like to have you ask Mr. Dorr, or whoever has the transcript of the additional testimony, to be allowed to use it and read it and then write a letter to Mr. Graham, as chairman of the committee, so that we may determine whether we need to have you testify any further or not in regard to it.

Mr. DORR. I shall be very glad to show him the record.

Mr. MCCOY. It is a matter that is brand new to us, and we can not tell the significance of any of the testimony without Mr. Finch's help.

Mr. DORR. I will state to the committee that I will undertake to arrange all these exhibits in chronological order, first the exhibits in the State court, and following that the exhibits in the Federal court.

Mr. MCCOY. Any labor-saving device that you adopt will be approved by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with the witness now.

Whereupon H. L. Klock is recalled to the stand and resumes his testimony, as follows:

Mr. PRESTON. Before proceeding with this witness, Mr. Chairman, you asked me to get a copy of an address made by Judge Hanford at the exposition here at Seattle on the subject of conservation. As I informed Mr. McCoy, I asked Judge Hanford and he says he does not think he made any speech at Spokane; he has not any recollection of it; if he made one it was extemporaneous and short and he has no copy of it. He thinks he did not make one. I have, however, here a copy of the proceedings there at Spokane—a printed copy.

Mr. HIGGINS. That was on conservation?

Mr. PRESTON. No; it was the irrigation congress; and you gentlemen have leave to use this if you wish, except that it requires an explanation. There are a couple of pages of it that have been cut out. A full copy can be obtained. This is what Judge Hanford has. Those two pages are some part of an address made by Mr. Pinchot there, which have been cut out for some other use, so that there will be no suspicion attaching to the missing two pages. We can get you, somewhere, if it can be got, a complete copy.

Mr. MCCOY. We can get it in Washington—you need not bother about it.

Mr. PRESTON. I will let you have it, so that you can read it over if you wish.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, let us proceed. We are using up a good deal of time.

Mr. MCCOY (addressing the witness). Mr. Klock, I think you had not gotten beyond the point where you were telling us about this meeting at the credit men's association at the hotel, and a motion having been made to appoint a committee; was that where you stopped?

The WITNESS. About there.

Q. Will you continue from there?—A. This committee, or rather Mr. Anderson, reserved the privilege of appointing that committee later. After meeting with your committee and being requested to have this information presented, I called upon Mr. Anderson, of the Anderson Dry Goods Co., and put the matter up to him regarding presenting our grievances to your committee, and suggested that he and his brother act together, inasmuch as his brother had handled these matters. Mr. Anderson claimed that he did not care to act alone in the matter, and thought it better to see the other members and have a conference and take it over. Later I met Mr. Fred Fisher of Fisher Bros.—this was the same morning—and recited to him the request of your committee.

Q. By the way, that request included a suggestion that your association employ some attorney to make this compilation.—A. I believe that is correct.

Q. All right. You saw Mr. Fisher, and what took place?—A. Mr. Fisher—well, I asked him if he would agree to meet with your committee that evening, and he suggested that he did not care to be responsible for what was said or done alone, and he thought it would be better, too, for the association to go, or rather the committee—and accordingly Mr. Fisher called up Mr. Anderson on the phone and suggested to him the calling of this meeting. Later in the day I was notified over the phone that there would be a meeting at 5 o'clock at the Seattle Merchants and Credit Men's room in the Polson Building and to call there at once. I got Mr. Anderson on the phone, and I asked him what was the object of the meeting, and he recited that it was regarding the call of the committee for this—for presenting such information as they might see fit before your committee and to come at once. I begged to be excused, but he insisted on my coming. I did so. Do you wish me to continue there with the meeting?

Q. Yes; tell us all that happened; all that was said as nearly literally as you can, otherwise the substance of it.—A. When I called at the room not all the committee was present. I believe there was 9 or 10 members of the committee, or something in that neighborhood. When I entered Mr. Goldsmith was present and made the remark——

Q. What is his first name?—A. I think his name—his initials are J. S., if I am not mistaken—he represents the Schwabacher Bros. And Mr. Goldsmith and myself entered into somewhat of an informal discussion before the other members present, and a little later Mr. Anderson——

Q. What was said by you and Mr. Goldsmith at that time, as nearly as you can recollect?—A. Why, I told Mr. Goldsmith that your committee had asked for such information as we might have regarding these receiverships and bankruptcy proceedings and Mr. Goldsmith suggested that if any of us saw fit to volunteer that information it might be all right, but he did not think it wise to act as an association.

Q. Did he say why he did not think it wise?—A. Well, a little later in the meeting Mr. Goldsmith made this remark, that if the association would drop these proceedings and not take any action in it that he felt confident that he could go to Judge Hanford himself and succeed in righting the grievances which we had; that he thought he could induce Mr. Hanford to appoint such receivers as we might ask for. The meeting proceeded officially after Mr. Anderson had asked Mr. Wills to act as chairman. The discussion became general and nearly everybody took part. The principal part of the discussion was between Mr. Goldsmith on the one side and myself on the other. Mr. Goldsmith said he thought it unwise to take such action—we could accomplish more by going to the judge as an association, or individually, reciting our grievances to him and ask him that those receivers or trustees be appointed as requested by the creditors. Referring to the Western Steel Co. and Mr. Baxter, as trustee, Mr. Goldsmith remarked that, inasmuch as the creditors to the amount of 60 per cent were principally Eastern people, that we were not interested so much here locally; that Mr. Hanford had acted within, possibly, the bounds of which we and he himself would act; that if he saw fit in a case of that kind he would appoint a friend of his own and that it was not so necessary to interview the local creditors when their amounts were in the minority. He also went on to state that while the old man, referring to Judge Hanford, I suppose, may have had his faults, that he was not much worse than some of the other Federal judges. But one special remark that he made was: "I must admit that the old man has, possibly, outlived his days of usefulness, nevertheless I would be willing to try a personal case before him"—or a case of my own before him—that while the old man may have taken a drink occasionally, that a man doing the heavy amount of work and working at night it was necessary to take a stimulant, and he did not think it necessary to censure a man for doing so; that we were entering into a fight that was being brought about by the Socialists—it was their fight and not ours; that we could right our grievances by going before the judge and making known the same to him. When he made the remark regarding the old gentleman's age and some of his shortcomings, I asked Mr. Goldsmith why Mr. Hanford had not resigned and saved all of us the inconvenience of being called in the matter, and thus saving his friends humiliation and saving the Government the expense of investigation, by resigning. He stated that it did not look well to have the judge resign at this particular time, especially under fire; that it was practically admitting his guilt to do so, and that the judge was not doing any more than any other man should do under the circumstances—he should fight it through; that we were not interested other than in bankruptcy proceedings. I think to this remark I replied that there were other matters of public interest, especially some State school lands over there on the Columbia River, that as a singular coincidence certain parties succeeded in having those school lands placed upon the market, and that a peculiar incident was that Judge Hanford and his associates knew of the time of the sale of those lands that were advertised in a certain out-of-the-way paper; that the public at large did not know about it; and to this I also further added that I thought a man unfit to sit upon the bench who would either take part in, lend or allow his name to be associated with any transaction of this nature which tended to defraud the educational fund of posterity out of its rightful belongings. He blamed our State land commissioner, Ross, for some of these actions and apparently seemed to be of the opinion that it was not very generally known and that this information was practically without foundation—that he had never heard of it before.

Other members spoke either for or against, but the consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was a Socialist fight and not a merchants' association fight, and one party made the remark that if we succeeded in impeaching Judge Hanford that the Socialists would claim the credit and that the credit would be given to them instead of to the merchants, and the proper course for redress would be to go before the judge after this thing had all blown over and ask the judge to rectify the grievances we had asked for. There was also stated that the judge had rendered much valuable service to the community and it was not right for a business man to take part in this fight or attempt to produce evidence against the old man; that he had been a citizen for twenty some years and he had went through many a fight that was for the benefit of the community and it would be better for the association to wash its hands of the affair. The matter was put to a vote on a motion that we take no part in this matter as a committee. The motion prevailed, and it was so ordered.

Q. You have stated substantially all——A. It was a running argument that was participated in generally. I think I have recited the principal things that were brought out. There may have been other remarks made that I do not call to mind now that I may later.

Q. Did anybody say anything to the effect that if action were taken by those who were there that it might, if adverse in any way to Judge Hanford, result unfavorably to them?—A. Well, not directly. I think Mr. Goldsmith made this remark, that we would not stand in good favor with the judiciary to take action in this matter. That is not exactly the words of Mr. Goldsmith, but to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. PRESTON. Did you make the statement there, in relation to the school-land matter, that the sale of those school lands over near Hanford was a deprivation of the school children of the present and future of their heritage?

A. I made the statement that I did not think a man fit to sit as a judge on the bench who would either take part in, lend or assist, or allow his name to be associated with any proposition which tended to defraud or deprive the educational fund of posterity—that is substantially the words that I used.

Q. Did you make the statement that I have asked you about?

The WITNESS. Will you kindly repeat it?

Question repeated to the witness.

A. I did not make it in those words; no.

Q. Did you make it in substance?—A. I think that I drew the inference that the man who would do that was unfit for the judiciary.

Q. Did you also make the statement there at that meeting that you individually had furnished some money to a man to go and buy some of those school lands, but that because they were sold to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. your man did not get your share of this heritage, or words to that effect?—A. I made the statement that I loaned $325 to a certain party who had come to me and asked me to keep the matter as a secret and he would let me in on the proposition; that Hanford and his crowd had succeeded in getting a certain amount of the State school land being advertised in an out-of-the-way paper and the same would be placed on the market and there would be very few bidders there. I might add further that I also told this man at the time that I did not care to take any part in it, that I had so much land that I was land poor.

Q. I did not ask you what you told the man; I am asking you what you said at this meeting.—A. Well, I have answered the question as fully as you wish?

Q. You have not answered it directly—if you can't answer it, you can say so.

The WITNESS. Will you repeat the question again?

The CHAIRMAN. Just restate the question, Mr. Preston.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. No; I did not make words to that effect, because I had no share in the matter whatever.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, you say that Mr. Goldsmith said there, or that Mr. Goldsmith there at that meeting blamed Mr. Ross, and then you followed that, as I caught your testimony, by a statement that he said he did not know anything about the facts in the matter—he, Goldsmith.

A. I think that is correct.

Q. Now, was not the statement that Mr. Goldsmith made, that that was a matter which was in charge of the State land commissioner, Mr. Ross, and that if there had been any dereliction in duty that it was Mr. Ross's dereliction, or words to that effect?—A. I think that is probably the statement.

Q. And was that the statement that he made from which you deduced the conclusion that he blamed the commissioner, Ross?—A. I think possibly you are correct; yes, sir.

Q. Did he make the statement there that Judge Hanford, in his opinion, had outlived his usefulness?—A. Yes, sir; that is practically the statement Mr. Goldsmith made—"Well, I must admit," or rather "admit," I forget just whether he said "must admit" or "admit," I am not sure as to that, "outlived his days of usefulness"—I would not say whether he said "had possibly," "may," or "has."

Q. Did he say or use the words "outlived his usefulness?"—A. "His days of usefulness."

Q. Did he use the language———A. Let me add there—I think he said "as a judge"—I think that was added, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Did he use any words to the effect that Judge Hanford was not much worse than other Federal judges?—A. In substance he did.

Q. Did he say there that this committee was a committee appointed to effect cooperation between the Merchants & Credit Men's Association and the Federal court, and that it was outside of the scope of the committee's appointment?—A. Outside of what?

Q. (Continuing.) The scope of the committee's appointment to gather evidence for the congressional committee?—A. I think he said it was not proper or would not be wise—now, I am not sure as to the exact words he used.

Q. Did he say it was outside of the scope, or did he say that in effect?—A. I would not say that he used the word "scope" or not; I do not remember positively.

Q. Well, did he use words to the effect that it would be going out of the province of that particular committee?—A. It was practically to that effect. I think he said "unwise," if I am not mistaken.

Q. Now, you say that he said that he, individually, would be willing to have any case of his submitted to Judge Hanford for decision.—A. He did.

Q. Did he also say that he thought every man in the room would be willing to have his own case or his firm's case submitted to Judge Hanford?—A. That was not at the time I was there—anyway, I did not hear that remark myself.

Q. Would you say that it was not made?—A. Well, it may have been made, but I did not hear it.

Q. You were right there, and you heard everything that was said, didn't you?—A. Well, it was a general discussion, of course, and I was listening more especially to Mr. Goldsmith's talk, because Mr. Goldsmith and myself probably sat as close to each other as you and I, and facing each other, and it was principally between ourselves that the argument took place.

Q. If Mr. Goldsmith made a statement of that kind which escaped your hearing, did you hear others in the room assent to such a proposition?—A. I did.

Q. What is your business concern?—A. Principally wholesale butter and eggs.

Q. Here in Seattle?—A. We manufacture, as well as job.

Mr. HUGHES. Manufacture butter and eggs?

A. We manufacture butter.

Mr. PRESTON. What is the style of your firm?

A. The Klock Produce Co.

Q. You do business here in Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you yourself ever make any investigation of the facts in the McCarthy Dry Goods case?—A. I did not.

Q. Or in the Knosher case?—A. I did not.

Q. Or in the Western Steel case?—A. I did not.

Q. Were there any other cases mentioned at this meeting than those three?—A. In a general way there were. Personally I made this statement myself——

Q. Excuse me; we will get along better if I can get you to answer my questions.

The CHAIRMAN. His answers seem to be relevant; as I understand it, you are asking for anything that was said, and if he said it it was relevant.

Mr. PRESTON. My question was whether any other case than those three were mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the way he is starting out may lead to an answer to that very question, but if you wish to change it you may do so.

The WITNESS. I asked some of the members present if we had ever received any returns satisfactory out of any of the cases we had in the bankruptcy court, and some of them claimed they had received some returns, but I do not know of anybody who claimed they had received satisfactory returns.

Q. Did you ever—was your concern ever interested in the bankruptcy proceedings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In which ones?—A. Why, in what is known as the Labor Union and the Wagner Post and Austin Bros.

Q. Is that all one case, or two cases?—A. No, sir; three separate cases.

Q. The Labor Union——A. The Labor Union Cooperative. I might add here that our claims, as well as other business houses' claims, are assigned to the association, and the association carries those claims through in order to save the business man from making trips to appear in court and from having several different attorneys. It is done as a matter of economy and saving time.

Q. Go on and sate the next. You said the Labor Union Cooperative?—A. I think another was the Marysville Mercantile Co.

Q. And the next one?—A. Did you get Austin Bros.? That is the only four that I remember of our firm having any interest in.

Q. The Labor Union, the Marysville Mercantile Co., Austin Bros.—now, what is the fourth?—A. Wagner & Pass.

Q. Was there a receiver in any one of those four cases?—A. I think Mr. Jennings acted as receiver for the Wagner & Pass.

Q. Mr. Jennings was then the secretary of your association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was he also elected as trustee?—A. I can not say. I did not follow those matters through in detail.

Q. Was there a receiver in the other three or any of them?—A. I can not tell you. I would refer you to George Telfer and I. H. Jennings.

Q. Do you know who was the receiver or trustee in the Labor Union Cooperative case?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the Marysville case?—A. I do not.

Q. In the Austin Bros. case?—A. I do not.

Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, in a great many bankruptcy cases Mr. Jennings, the representative of the association, was the receiver and trustee or receiver or trustee?—A. In the cases I was interested in, which were small cases, I think Mr. Jennings did.

Mr. McCoy. You think he got the little cases?

A. Yes. This statement was also brought out at that meeting that night that the practical object of our association was to expedite matters, to save ourselves, individually, trouble, and that we had always interested ourselves in keeping cases out of the bankruptcy court; that we usually could bid them good-by when they left our hands.

Q. Was that acquiesced in by the people generally?—A. I made that statement myself and no one objected to it.

Q. I wish you would state to the committee in full what you stated at this meeting in regard to the sale of those school lands and your advancing money on whatever conditions you did.—A. I stated that I understood——

Q. First state what you stated at this meeting.—A. Well, I stated that I understood there was 66,000 acres of land belonging to the State school fund over on the Columbia River—I think this was in Benton County—had been advertised in an out-of-the-way paper, and that as a singular coincidence the people connected with the Hanford project know about this sale, and they had men on the ground the day that the sale was made. and that there were very few people there outside of their representatives to bid in this land, and then I made the remark, as I stated, about the judge——

Q. Now, come to the part where you stated something about some money of yours that had something to do with the transaction.—A. A party had come to me and stated——

Q. I mean state what was stated at this meeting about it.—A. As nearly as I can remember, in substance, I said at this meeting that a party had come to me and borrowed $325 with which to make the initial payment on 160 acres that he bought over there—well, that was the statement that I made at this meeting—and the other statement was relative to the deal between the man and myself.

Q. Did you state that he did not succeed in getting his allotment?—A. I stated that he did get the allotment; that he got 160 acres of land for which he was afterwards offered ten or eleven thousand dollars for it, and this land was bought for $1,700.

Q. Now, state to the committee all the facts in regard to your transactions with this man, what he said to you and what you said to him.—A. That is, outside of the committee meeting?

Q. Outside of the committee meeting; yes.—A. At the time that this sale was made and just previous to it, a party came to me who was an intimate friend and asked me if I did not want to go in on a little land speculation; that he had got next to a sale that was going to be pulled off over here by Judge Hanford and his crowd, and that it had been advertised in an out-of-the-way paper, and there would be very few people there, and he said, "If you come in on it and get on the ground you can buy yourself rich," or something to that effect. "You can get some land that is worth two or three hundred dollars an acre for a nominal sum—the land was appraised at $10 an acre and could not be sold for less than that." After going over the matter with the gentleman I recited the fact to the man that I had more land than I cared for, and I was land poor, and I did not care to make any further investments. He said then, "All I know is that you will never find a proposition like it again in your life, and you better come in," and he spoke in a rather detrimental manner of the gentlemen interested in it, and used profane language, and he said that if they were going to get in on it that he was not going to see them get it all; that he was going to get a piece of it or they would pay what it was worth; and when he returned he told me he got a dandy piece of land over there, and he said he had cleaned up a nice little sum of money on it; and I talked with him last night and he told me he had been offered $12,000 since for this 160 acres.

Q. What is his name?—A. E. G. Sutton.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives out on Twentieth Avenue—he is in business on Weston Avenue.

Q. Now, you did not put any money into the scheme at all or attempt to become interested in it?—A. Not only what I loaned this gentleman, as a friend?

Q. How much did you loan him?—A. $325.

Q. And he states to you that he bought, with that, 160 acres.—A. He made his initial payment.

Q. And that he has to make nine other payments; is that the arrangement?—A. That is my understanding.

Q. Do you know how much the total bid came to?—A. $1,700, he told me at the time.

Q. At the time?—A. Yes; that is, on the 160 acres.

Q. And he stated to you last night that the land was worth what?—A. He said he had been offered $12,000. I asked him if he was not foolish for not accepting it, and he said no; that it was worth twice that.

Q. Do you know how much land has been improved by irrigation ditches?—A. I do not.

Q. By irrigation or what not, in the meanwhile?—A. I do not.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. Did he mention the name of the out-of-the-way paper in which the land was advertised?

A. I think he said it was the Benton County—some Benton County paper.

Mr. Higgins. The advertisement appears in the records—in the minute book of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—a copy of their advertisement was attached as a memorandum of the land that was purchased.

The Chairman. Does it give the name of the paper in which the advertisement appears?

Mr. Higgins. I do not know.

Q. Where is that county?—A. I think Benton County is one of the Columbia River counties.

Q. The sale itself took place at Olympia?—A. No; it took place over there.

Q. On the land to be sold?—A. There, or near abouts.

Q. And where, from that, is this paper published, if you know?—A. I can't tell you.

Mr. Hughes. If you will pardon me one suggestion, I think you will get a little more light by examining the law of the State, because the sale had to be conducted in conformity with the statute regulating the sale.

The Chairman. You may inform us in that connection what is the statutory provision with reference to determining when school lands shall be sold.

Mr. Hughes. I will get the statute for you. I can give you my recollection, but I would prefer to get the statute for you and have it accurate, because that is the only valuable information.

The Chairman. If the statute provides when the land is to be sold and in whose discretion the sale is to be ordered, and those things, we would like to have that statutory information.

Mr. Preston. I think you will find that the statute requires the publication to be made in the county in which the lands are situated.

Mr. McCoy. Does anybody know what is the custom covering the advertising of sales of school lands, whether they are merely advertised in the locality or in the county where the land is situated or whether the practice is to advertise pretty generally throughout the State or outside the State?

Mr. Hughes. My recollection is that the law requires the advertisement to be in the county.

Mr. McCoy. I want to know what the custom is regarding the sales of school lands, and does anybody know whether they have ever been advertised elsewhere than in the locality.

Mr. Preston. I can not answer you as to that.

Mr. Hughes. The custom is to post notices in the office of the county auditor of the county where the land is situated and to advertise it in a paper published in the county and make the sale at the courthouse of the county where the land is situated; that is my recollection as to the law.

The Chairman. As a matter of fact, or practice, it is quite apparent, I think, that in land of that character where purchasers are apt to come from a distance of thousands of miles, that good, or reasonably good, business methods would require more advertising than in the local county.

Mr. HUGHES. I think that the land commissioner should confine his conduct in the matter to the law which regulates his action, to the law in regard to advertising and in regard to the interests of those who have a leasehold of the land under leases issued by authority of the statute, but I would prefer to get the law as it was in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. In this connection we should put into the record those provisions of the statute which apply to the sale of school lands and then we can find elsewhere, if we can, what is actually the custom or practice, what it has been with reference to determining what lands should be sold and how it should be advertised.

Mr. HUGHES. I think I have a book which was put out by the land commissioner's office in which the laws and regulations are compiled, and I will submit it to you.

Mr. PRESTON. I submit, if you want to know what the custom is that we can get Mr. Ross to come down—we can phone to him over long distance, I do not think you need subpœna him, he will come—he is the State land commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. We ought to have, I think. Any further questions of Mr. Klock?

Witness excused.

CHARLES S. WILLS, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. State your full name to the committee.

A. Charles S. Wills.

Q. What is your business?—A. Treasurer of the Seattle Hardware Co.

Q. You have been in the court room and have head Mr. Klock testify, haven't you, just now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without asking particular questions, I will ask you the general question to please state to the committee, as nearly as you can recollect, in detail where you can, in substance where you can not, what was said at the meeting of the committee appointed by Mr. Anderson about which he has just testified.—A. I will have to explain that I was not there when the meeting—when they first arrived—I was about 25 minutes late. Shortly after I arrived, or when I arrived, Mr. Klock and Mr. Goldsmith were having a discussion, and the subject they talked about at that time was the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. land about which Mr. Klock has just testified. I had heard this remark that Mr. Klock made about the lands, and Mr. Goldsmith questioned him, and Mr. Klock admitted that it was only hearsay, and I paid no further attention to the matter. And then the meeting was called to order and I was made chairman of it, and the resolution was introduced by Mr. Hassen that no action be taken at this time. It was seconded by Mr. Goldsmith, the ayes and noes were put, and it was carried with one dissenting vote—Mr. Klock voting no. That was all there was to the meeting, that I know of.

Q. Then we understand you, Mr. Willis, to mean that when you came there the thing was substantially over except this talk about the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—A. Yes, sir; substantially over.

Mr. HIGGINS. You were chairman of the meeting?—A. I was.

Q. The meeting was not over then? It was not organized until you arrived?—A. You understand they met informally, and they were talking, and after I came there it was organized.

Q. What was the motion?—A. That no action be taken at this time.

Q. On what?—A. On the resolution that had been adopted at the Credit Men's Association at the previous meeting.

Q. Which one?—A. I do not know the exact resolution. At that meeting I did not attend the dinner, but came down about half past 8, and that part of the proceedings had been dispensed with.

Q. Did you call this meeting together?—A. I was appointed as a committeeman by Mr. Anderson, and upon my arrival they organized and I was nominated as chairman, and I called it to order.

Q. This talk between Mr. Goldsmith and Mr. Klock was before the meeting convened?—A. Before the meeting convened.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further?

Mr. PRESTON. Was there any discussion of the motion after the meeting was called to order?

A. None to speak of, Mr. Preston.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Wills.

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. Judge Hanford sent in to me a newspaper clipping purporting to give part of his remarks on another occasion out at the exposition.

GEORGE D. BLACK, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. What is your full name?

A. George D. Black.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am president of the Black Manufacturing Co.

Q. Is your company a member of the Merchants' & Credit Men's Association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you appointed by Mr. Anderson on a committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In pursuance of the resolution adopted in the meeting in June?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard Mr. Klock testifying this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, referring to the meeting about which he testified and in which the committee appointed by Mr. Anderson met, state, if you can remember, about what was said and what was done.—A. I was called up over the phone by Mr. Anderson, telling me that I was appointed on this committee, and I told him I did not think I could be there. About an hour after that the girl called me up at the headquarters and told me that they were waiting for me, so I came there just before the resolution was voted on. I did not hear any discussion, except Mr. Goldsmith was talking—they were all sitting around the table informally talking. Mr. Goldsmith said that Judge Hanford had been here a long time, and so forth, and he did not think that we should take any action as an association, but if anyone wanted to furnish the information that the committee desired that they were at perfect liberty to do so. Mr. Cobb said that he thought now was the opportunity for us to remedy the wrongs which had been existing a long time, and Mr. Hassen got up then and offered the resolution that we take no further action at the present time; and it was voted on, carried, and we adjourned.

Q. Can you give any more in detail what Mr. Goldsmith said than you have here?—A. I only heard just a part of his remarks. I was there just a few minutes before the resolution was voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions with Mr. Black?

Mr. HIGGINS. What complaint have you got to make, Mr. Black, of specific cases in which the bankruptcy law has not been well administered in this district?

A. I do not quite understand you.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Well, the only complaint I have to make is the excessive fees.

Q. In which cases?—A. Well, the Knosher case particularly; that is the only one I know anything much about in detail.

Q. Can you give the committee any other cases than the Knosher case?—A. Nothing except hearsay. It has been discussed. We heard a good deal about the Western Steel, the McCarthy Dry Goods Co., and all those things.

Q. Any way, by hearsay or in any other way?—A. No; I can not recall any at the present time.

Q. You have not yourself any information about those cases which you referred to which you can give to the committee?—A. No; I do not know as I have any information any more than——

Q. If you have any I wish you would give it.—A. The information—you can get all the information from the secretary and the assistant secretary of the old Merchants' Association, who has the records—the cases are always turned over that we possibly can turn over. The members of the association turn over their claims to the association and they handle them.

Q. You refer to the present organization or to an independent and different one?—A. No; the present organization has just been in existence just a few months. It was previously the Merchants' Association, and the Credit Men's Association, and the Merchants' Association consolidated.

Q. What is the name of the secretary that you say has the information about the Knosher case?—A. I. H. Jennings and Mr. George F. Telfer.

Q. Both of Seattle?—A. Both of Seattle.

Mr. PRESTON. Were you present so as to hear anything that was said there by Mr. Goldsmith or anyone else in substance to the effect that those present would be willing that any controversy of their own should be submitted for decision to Judge Hanford?

A. I heard Mr. Goldsmith say in the latter part of his remarks that he would be willing to serve on any committee to go before Judge Hanford and talk over the matter of appointing receivers acceptable to the merchants. It may not have been those exact words, but that was the substance, as I understood it.

Q. Perhaps you did not understand my question right. There is evidence here before the committee that Mr. Goldsmith at that meeting made the statement that he or his company would be willing to have Judge Hanford pass upon any controversy in which they were interested, and he thought that the others present felt the same way.—A. I was not present; I got there late.

Q. That did not occur when you were there, if it occurred at all?—A. No, sir.

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, if you are going off on some other subject we would like to call Mr. Goldsmith in regard to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a witness here waiting—Mr. Starr.

W. E. STARR, being duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. HUGHES. Before you commence, Mr. Starr, will you be kind enough to speak out loud so that we can hear you.

Mr. MCCOY. What is your full name?

A. W. E. Starr.

Q. What is your business?—A. Dry goods department store, superintendent at Stone-Fisher Co.

Q. Your concern is a member of the Merchants & Credit Mens' Association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you an officer or trustee of the association?—A. No, sir; simply a member.

Q. And you have heard some testimony here about a committee this morning—were you a member of that committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about that?—A. I was there when the committee was appointed.

Q. I mean about the meeting of the committee?—A. No, sir; I do not know anything about that.

Mr. MCCOY. I think Mr. Starr was called on another matter, and he can be excused for the present.

Witness temporarily excused.

J. S. GOLDSMITH, recalled, testifies as follows:

Mr. PRESTON. Calling your attention again to the meeting of the committee of the Merchants & Credit Men's Association, did you make a statement at that meeting, either before the meeting convened or afterwards—that is, either before the meeting organized or afterwards, in effect that Judge Hanford was not much worse than other Federal judges?

A. Not exactly in those words.

Q. Just what was it?—A. I said that Judge Hanford compared favorably with the Federal judges all over the country; that he was fully as good as any of them, and I could see no difference between his rulings and decisions and the other Federal judges that I knew.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not this almost a verbal repetition of what he testified last night?

Mr. PRESTON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection is that he said substantially that last night when he was on the witness stand.

Mr. HIGGINS. This is in the nature of impeachment—contradiction.

The CHAIRMAN. He has no right to call witnesses to contradict some other witnesses, where this witness has stated the same facts here before; repetition is not contradiction.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not think that that was brought out yesterday, to my mind.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you think so you may go on, but avoid duplicating his testimony.

Mr. PRESTON. I have no desire to duplicate any of it. I asked the question because I thought it had not come out before; I do not intend to go over that again except in one or two points that seem to me from my memory had not come out before.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. PRESTON. Did you on that occasion say something about Judge Hanford having outlived his days of usefulness as a judge?

A. I said that some people evidently thought that Judge Hanford had outlived his usefulness as a judge and that he should be cast aside like an old horse. I said that I did not think so, but that I thought he was fully capable of handling all the cases that came before him, and then I made the remark that I made in my testimony yesterday.

Q. You mean the remark about your willingness to submit cases to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you stated in your testimony yesterday, and I do not want to repeat it, that others assented; can you recall now which others present gave assent to that last statement which you have referred to?—A. I think that Mr. Wills did, and I think that Mr. Perry Polson did, and I think that Mr. Fischer did.

Q. Did you at that time make a statement that you personally could go to Judge Hanford—either that statement or in substance or effect—that you personally could go to Judge Hanford and correct any abuses that your association complained of?—A. I said that I felt if a committee from the merchants' association would go to Judge Hanford and put the matters in their right light, that he would take them up and adjust them to their entire satisfaction.

Q. You have not answered my question. Did you say that you personally could do it?—A. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. PRESTON. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other witnesses present in connection with that meeting of the Merchants and Credit Men's Association? If so, please rise and make your presence known.

Witness excused.

PERRY POLSON, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. State your full name to the committee.

A. Perry Polson.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am president of the Polson Implement Co.

Q. Your company is a member of the Merchants and Credit Men's Association of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were on this committee appointed by Mr. Anderson, about which you have heard the testimony here this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Klock testify?—A. Well, I came in——

Q. Well, you know what the meeting is that we are talking about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state to the committee what took place at that meeting, what was said, and state when you arrived, and all about it, as you recollect it, going into detail as much as you can, and where you can not give detail give the substance.—A. I was a few minutes late.

The meeting had not been exactly called to order when I arrived, and I heard Mr. Klock discussing the matter.

Mr. PRESTON. Speak up louder, please.

A. (Continuing.) And Mr. Goldsmith and others speak at that meeting. The committee, in the first place, as I presume you know, had been appointed.

Mr. McCOY. We have gone all over that. What I would like to have you do is to state fully, but as briefly as possible, just what took place when you got there—what was said. We know all about the arrangements for the meeting and what led up to it.

A. Well, the question seemed to be whether this committee should go before your committee, as a body, as a representative of the merchants, or not, and it was decided there to not go before this committee—this investigation committee—as a body.

Q. Now, what did Mr. Goldsmith and what did you say and what did Mr. Klock say and what did anybody else say at that meeting, as nearly as you can recollect it on that matter—what did Mr. Goldsmith say—what did you hear him say?—A. Well, Mr. Goldsmith said that personally he was not in favor of going as an association.

Q. What did he say about Judge Hanford, if anything?—A. Well, he said that Judge Hanford had been on the bench for a long time, was possibly getting somewhat old and possibly a little feeble, but he had been overworked, he thought, and that his rulings and decisions, he thought, had been up to the standard at least, comparing with other judges throughout the United States, and that at this particular time he did not think that we as a body should take it up as an association.

Q. What did he mean by "this particular time," if he said?—A. Well, I presume that your committee being in session here to investigate Judge Hanford's conduct, that he did not think it was right or proper for the Merchants' Association as an association to go before this body.

Q. Did he or did he not say anything to the effect that Judge Hanford, in his opinion, possibly had outlived his usefulness?—A. Well, I can not say. I do not think so—I do not think that he had outlived his usefulness—he admitted, I think we all agreed practically that Judge Hanford was getting to be quite an old man and had been overworked and a very hard worker.

Q. How old do you think he is?—A. Well, I don't know; I suppose he is a man of 60 or 65 years old, at least.

Q. You do not call that old in Seattle?—A. Well, it depends on the man's physical life—some men are old at 50 and some men are not very old at 80—there is a large difference.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Klock say anything about the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. Yes; I heard that mentioned.

Q. Well, what do you recollect that he said?—A. Well, I think he said that the judge was connected with that company, but he did not know in what capacity he was connected with it; and I gathered the idea that about all Mr. Klock knew about it was that it was called the Hanford Power & Irrigation Co., and that there was a connection there, but what the connection was I do not think Mr. Klock knew.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Goldsmith testify a minute or two ago?—A. Yes.

Q. What is your recollection as to what he said about going to Judge Hanford in regard to the abuses, or alleged abuses, of which complaint had been made?—A. Well, he stated that he thought if we were to go—if the committee was to go before Judge Hanford or Judge Hoyt, or any of the courts, as far as that is concerned, and make our complaints known, that they would be remedied.

Q. Did he suggest that a movement on that ground had better be postponed until after the results of the hearing before this congressional committee were known?—A. Well, I do not think that he did that, but there was a motion made that no action be taken at the present time—that is, that the committee defer going to the judges with their complaint until later.

The CHAIRMAN. Any furher questions?

Mr. PRESTON. Do you remember, Mr. Polson, something being said by Mr. Goldsmith to the effect that he and his company would be entirely willing to have any controversy in which they were interested submitted to Judge Hanford for decision?

A. Yes, sir; I think he made that statement.

Q. And did he say that he thought others present would feel the same way?—A. Well, I do not know as to that; but that is very likely.

Q. And did some others there assent to that proposition?—A. There didn't seem to be any objection—there were no objections raised.

Q. Did you say anything on the subject yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say about it—I mean about the matter that I am speaking of—that is, about the willingness to submit your controversies to Judge Hanford for decision?—A. Well, I agreed to that, and spoke along that line.

Q. What did you say?—A. That I thought we should make our complaints known to the judges and take them up with them; and I stated that in insolvency and bankruptcy cases it seemed to be the fashion in the United States and all over the country that lawyers and courts would take about all there was left and the creditors usually got very little. The organization had been formed for the purpose of handling delinquent estates without having those estates go into the court and be eaten up. Now, we thought that by working together with the judges, or rather getting the judges to appoint our association whenever possible, whenever our members insisted—have the secretary of our association made receiver when possible; at least give the creditors a chance to say who they wanted for receiver, and we think that we can save the creditors, and in many cases the bankrupt, quite a sum of money by so doing.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not answer your question.

Mr. PRESTON. I was asking what you said about the proposition as to whether or not you and your company would be willing to have Judge Hanford pass upon any controversy in which you were interested.

A. I did not say anything about that, but what I have just stated is a part of what I said as my argument in favor of our going direct to the judges with this proposition.

Q. Now, would you be willing to have Judge Hanford the judge in a case in which you were interested or your company?

The CHAIRMAN. That is bordering on a field that we have been avoiding absolutely—the matter of character evidence.

Mr. PRESTON. I would not have asked the question except that the record was in such shape——

The CHAIRMAN. This has been gone into only because it is a part of the res gestae, but you are now going into it independently, and it is character evidence, and I think it ought to be avoided.

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to explain a little further. My idea was this: My recollection is that Mr. Goldsmith said that he would be willing and that others agreed to it, and that, among others, he thought that Mr. Polson was one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. And the witness has just said that he was not.

Mr. PRESTON. And Mr. Polson said that nobody dissented from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness has told you specifically that he did not make any remark of that kind, and then you asked him, independently of the meeting, whether he would do so and so, which is the point that I think that you should not go into.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Preston, you stated that when we were through with this branch of the case and before we would take up another that there was some matter that you wanted to call the attention of the committee to. We are ready to call Mr. Plummer now—if there is anything which you want to call our attention to.

Mr. PRESTON. I think it was those records which I got in there—I can not recall anything else now—I think it has been substantially accomplished. I was asked by Mr. McCoy to get track of the stenographic report of what was said to have taken place at the Dreamland Rink meeting. I have information that such report is in the office of the United States district attorney, under Mr. McLaren's custody. He is right at the end of the hall here.

Mr. MCCOY. When we come to that let us have it in the record and have the man who took it here to prove it.

Mr. PRESTON. Do you want the reporter also to testify to the accuracy of it?

Mr. MCCOY. I think it would be the wisest.

GEORGE H. PLUMMER, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you the subpœna which was served on you?

A. Yes, sir [showing].

Q. State your name to the committee.—A. George H. Plummer.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Plummer?—A. Tacoma.

Q. What is your business?—A. Western land agent of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Since 1901.

Q. What are the duties and powers which go with that position?—A. I have under my charge the sale of land of the railway company within the States of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon.

Q. And you have had during the years you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The subpœna asked you to bring with you all letters, correspondence, contracts, and papers passing between the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. and the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in your possession and under your control. Have you done that?—A. I have, sir.

Q. Will you please submit those papers to the committee?—A. It is rather a voluminous bunch of papers [hands bundle of papers to the committee].

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Plummer submits to the committee a large volume of papers and has kindly consented during the lunch hour to go through those papers with the committee. Until that is done we can not question him with a purpose. Mr. Plummer, you may stand aside for the present, and after lunch we will need you again.

Witness temporarily excused.

GEORGE H. STONE, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Mr. McCOY. State your full name to the committee.

A. George H. Stone.

Q. You are the president of Stone-Fisher Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a dry goods concern in the city of Seattle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wholesale or retail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wholesale and retail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Sutcliffe Baxter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any dealings with him on behalf of your corporation, the Stone-Fisher Co., in regard to the possibility of purchasing the assets of the McCarthy Dry Goods store from him as receiver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State, if you can, when you first began to negotiate with him for a possible purchase?—A. The possibility of a purchase was taken up in the ordinary routine of such proceedings, which was through the publication of the receiver of the fact that there was a certain stock known as the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. that inventoried so and so and that bids would be received on a given date when accompanied by a certain percentage of the bid with a certified check. There was no direct communication between the receiver and ourselves in any other than a purely official—in his official capacity as receiver, and I have forgotten the details following, as it was several years since.

Q. Excuse me a minute, I want to get a memorandum which Mr. Baxter gave up here yesterday in the McCarthy Dry Goods case. [Mr. McCoy examines memorandum.]

Q. You or your corporation, Mr. Stone, did put in a bid in response to these advertisements or notices?—A. As I recall it we did, in the usual course; yes.

Q. The statement is made—or in a statement submitted to this committee by Mr. Baxter he states that Mr. Stone, of that company, referring to the Stone-Fisher Co., took the matter up in person and he first offered $40,000 for the stock; is that your recollection of it?—A. My recollection is that special offers or negotiations were made in the presence of Judge Hanford at the time he requested or set aside for any special considerations that might be offered.

Q. Did you at first, if you recollect, offer $40,000 for the goods on some terms?—A. I prefer not to state definitely because of the fact that my memory is somewhat hazy on that particular question of definite offers of definite amounts.

Q. Mr. Baxter, in his statement submitted to the committee, adds: "Then he raised his bid to $44,000." Have you any recollection of doing that?—A. I have a recollection of there being quite a continued consideration from within our own organization regarding the amount, and that an increased amount was offered after our first sentiment on the matter.

Q. Mr. Baxter further states: "The receiver kept negotiating with him (meaning yourself) until finally Mr. Stone, in the forenoon of October 15, 1907, said that he would pay $65,000 for all the assets except the moneys in the possession of the receiver, said offer being conditioned that the same be accepted that day, and he made the further requirement that the purchase price be paid $10,000 in cash and $15,000 on the 15th day of each month thereafter, and that the assets should be delivered on the day he made the bid." What is your recollection as to that?—A. My recollection would be that that is substantially right, and the only possible question that might arise, without definite memory to guide, as I have none and made none, and made no records in the house which can be produced that I know of—but my idea would be that the conditions of immediate delivery did not obtain, but I do not consider that that is vital one way or the other, as there is not any particular reason that I now can see why the delivery should be made within 24 hours. Although I do think now, as I think into the matter further, that we were close to the holiday season when the question of time would be vital because of reasons which would naturally occur to all, that purchases before the holiday season are very much freer naturally than afterwards.

Q. How about the terms of payment, $10,000 cash and $15.000 a month?—A. Well, I think that, without definite figures, I think that may be substantially right.

Q. At any rate, it was on the basis of a cash payment and the balance in subsequent payments periodically?—A. I think that is right.

Q. Now, was that bid brought to the attention of Judge Hanford, so far as you know?—A. The fact of having appeared in the court room, as I before stated, when the question of whether or not our bid should be accepted, and possibly others that were considered at the time, should be accepted or not—will you please repeat that question again to me.

Question repeated to the witness.

A. Yes; the fact of the opportunity having been presented by the judge for anyone to appear and reveal their attitude with reference to the purchase, and several attorneys representing different interests having been present and arguing in favor of and also against a confirmation of the sale at that time or the announcement of the sale, would lead me to believe that perhaps even previously to the occasion, possibly—it is not vital one way or the other that I can see—previously it may have been taken up with the judge, but at that time it was thoroughly aired, something like possibly an hour having been given to the occasion and arguments pro and con.

Q. Were you in court at that time when this matter was argued for an hour or so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what your recollection is of the objections, in substance, that were made to the acceptance of your bid; in other words, why did not all the creditors agree to accept it, as far as they stated?—A. I think one of the attorneys represented Chicago interests and stated at that meeting that a representative of he Chicago house was en route to Seattle and desired—or that the house he represented desired—a postponement or delay of a confirmation of the sale until the arrival of the representative—and some encouragement was given. I will withdraw the encouragement feature. I will withdraw that, if you please, that last feature. I do not know that there was any encouragement given, but I think the appeal was made on the sense of fairness that the sale be postponed until large creditors should have an opportunity to protect their own interests so far as might be possible, and the reason you asked still further the reason why, as I recall it, that the sale was refused. If I recall it correctly the court state—and in this I must have the latitude of memory there, because a possible mistake——

The CHAIRMAN. Your best recollection.

A. My best recollection is the fact that it was stated, possibly in the interests of all creditors and especially the large one, that the postponement should be made and that the offer that we made was refused—the postponement was made and the offer not accepted.

Q. Now, Mr. Stone, have you now, as nearly as you can recollect, stated the only objections that were made at that time to the acceptance of your bid?—A. I certainly do not recall anything that occurred at that time that would lead me to think that there was any other reason.

Q. Then I will ask you specifically, Was the question raised at that time that your bid did not include an offer to secure in any way the deferred payments?—A. I do not recall that the question of security entered into it in any way.

Q. Assuming that the question had been raised, were you in a position to give security—your concern—for the deferred payments?—A. We were in this position as a house—that we did not know what our credit is at the banks; we do not have the cash in the bank to draw a check for it; we had perhaps something like three-quarters of a million dollars in dry goods that was not obligated in any way. We operated strictly as cash people. If we want to use the bank we feel at perfect liberty to do it at any time to the extent of our desires. I only had to say that we, as I see it now, would have felt at liberty to have said to the court, if the question of postponed payment or payments was vital, we could give them the cash.

Q. And this opening of the bids having been just before the holidays—during the holiday selling season—was, of course, the most favorable time for the sale of the assets, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you consider your bid in amount compared with the value of the assets for which you bid?—A. Our intent was to do this, to bid beyond our actual opinion—beyond our opinion of the actual value of the stock—and in bidding beyond it was based on this fact: It was at a season of the year when we desired, naturally, as any jobing house would, perhaps, to move through retail channels, or any other legitimate channels, as many of our goods as we possibly could. The plan of proceedings was what usually obtains in such cases, that to distribute the goods at the place where they were located and under the flag or banner of the bankruptcy sale or receiver's sale, and it was our intent and plan to supply the store with goods at substantially wholesale figures—retail at wholesale figures—which would be very cheap to the public and legitimate, we believed, and yet so advantageous to them that we could move a liberal amount of goods, and hence, we reasoned among ourselves, that we could afford to bid a certain amount because of that, and that was one reason why our bid was raised from the previous figure that had been named as our opinion of the actual value of the stock.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions of Mr. Stone?

Mr. HUGHES. The receiver recommended the acceptance of your bid, didn't he?

A. I would not like to say positively that he did or did not. I do not recall. I think the attitude, if I remember correctly, the attitude—I will state frankly that the attitude of the receiver was not unfavorable to our bid. I think it was congenial and natural in every way, but there was nothing I can recall now specifically one way or the other.

Q. And did not put in a written bid, a sealed bid, did you?—A. I think, if I recall it accurately—I do not like to state just what form of bids went in; there was a good many bankrupts' stocks in the air at that time and we have been pretty liberal buyers in the past—and the specific instance, and not having to give the matter any considerable thought I do not like to state in just what position the bids went in, but I would say this, however: Very naturally, of course, our bid would be in writing—that is, our bids were submitted with other bids. As I recall now, other bids had gone in before, and not being accompanied by certified checks had gone in and the court retained the privilege of postponing the sale, and the court postponed the sale after we had put in our bids, and this matter came up subsequently, if I remember right. I do not like to state.

Q. To refresh your memory, is it not true that the receiver, Mr. Baxter, and Mr. McClure came to your office, and it was there that you finally raised your bid to $64,000?—A. I think that is right.

Q. You know Mr. McClure, of the firm of McClure & McClure?—A. Very well; yes, sir.

Q. And you know Mr. Baxter very well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have had conversations with Mr. Baxter from time to time in which the question of your bid and the price you would pay were discussed?—A. Yes, sir; and as I previously stated that our conferences had been nothing outside of the official capacity of the receiver, and I wish it to be understood that way—there is nothing to reflect on Mr. Baxter or the Stone-Fisher Co. that we were in cahoots in any way.

Q. You know Mr. Baxter as receiver was striving to interview persons who would be likely purchasers?—A. I think he exercised the diligence and efforts—he put forth all the efforts that a faithful receiver ought to put forth to get the largest amount for the stock possible.

Q. And in that capacity and in that way he interviewed you at different times?—A. I think there was once or twice in the office, and I do not know whether I may not have met him—I met him sometimes on the street and would halloo to him on the street, and he would say, "Are you going to be bidders," and I would say, "Yes, perhaps."

Q. On this occasion, when you finally decided, after having discussed it in your own office with your own company as to your bid, you had a conversation with the receiver and Mr. McClure in your office and there stated that you would make a bid upon the terms which you have already stated?—A. I think that is substantially correct.

Q. No one in this community questions the credit of your house—of the Stone-Fisher Co.—but let me ask you this: Is it not true that at that time we were operating under receiver's certificate—I mean bank or clearing house certificates through the banks—in other words, wasn't it after the panic of 1907 had put the banks to the necessity of issuing clearing-house certificates and cash funds were very difficult to secure?—A. I remember the incident of the clearing-house certificates clearly. With reference to the relation of that particular period to the McCarthy Dry Goods bankruptcy I am not clear.

Q. Perhaps you can recall it by the time. Do you remember that it was in the fall of 1907 and the fore part of 1908?—A. If the dates are identical, I will be very pleased to change the wording of my answer a few moments since by saying that if the dates are identical and we were at that time operating under the clearing-house certificate feature we would not feel at liberty to have asked our bank for one cent.

Q. You do recall, if you refresh your mind, that the period when the clearing-house certificates were being used was in the fall of 1907 and the winter or early part of the year 1908?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after you had informed Mr. Baxter, the receiver, and Mr. McClure, his attorney, in your office that you would make this bid you were advised that the matter would come up before Judge Hanford at a stated time, were you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And it was in this court room, wasn't it—or it was in the old court room, I think?—A. I don't recall.

Q. At that time it must have been in the old court room at the corner of Fourth and Marion Streets—but there were a number of people present, Judge Hanford being on the bench, were there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And among those present were stockholders or preferred stockholders of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you recall the persons speaking on behalf of the preferred stockholders objecting to the making of this sale at that time?—A. No, sir; I do not recall that.

Q. You do not?—A. I do not recall that.

Q. Do you recall that some of the creditors other than the one you referred to as the Chicago house which you mentioned also spoke at that time?—A. I have a faint memory that they did, but the only one that I recall as having represented any considerable amount or having made any considerable impression on my mind was the gentleman representing the Chicago house.

Q. You do not remember that certain attorneys representing other creditors spoke there?—A. Yes; quite a number of them.

Q. Don't you recall that they objected to the confirmation or the making of the sale?—A. Yes, sir; I think their attitude was rather against the confirmation of the sale.

Q. Now, try to refresh your memory, because I know you will give us the facts as you recall them. Can not you recall that some one speaking on behalf of the preferred stockholders also objected to the making of the sale?—A. Possibly if the name was given to me I might recall it.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Leopold M. Stern?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember his speaking in opposition to the making of the sale?—A. Yes, sir; but in connection only with the Chicago house—I do not recall that he mentioned the stockholders.

Q. You do not recall that he expressed the objection of the preferred stockholders?—A. No, sir; he may have done so, but I do not recall it.

Q. Mr. Stone, you recall, do you not, that the action that was taken at that time in turning down your bid was based upon objections of creditors or preferred stockholders or both—that is to say, it was based upon objections made there by parties who had the right to object if they saw fit?—A. I do not know that I would like to undertake to interpret the thought of the court.

Q. I am not meaning to ask you for that, except as it was expressed by the court.—A. There were reasons, possibly ample reasons, presented why the sale should be postponed. Perhaps I am safe in saying that the reasons would seem to appeal to a court, but just what the motive or thought was, of course, I can not tell.

Q. You do not recall what the judge said at the time in announcing his decision.—A. No. I was trying to recall it as the committee asked the questions a while ago, and while I do not recall it, the only leading thought presented clear enough to even clothe it in my own words—I was trying to do that.

Mr. McCoy. Mr. Stone, Mr. Hughes asked you something about the condition of the money market then, and the fact that you were using at the same time out here—the banks were using those clearing-house certificates and what not—was there anything in that situation that would have prevented the receiver from dealing with you on terms of perfect safety in regard to payment?

A. Perhaps I am justified in giving my opinion of the matter.

Q. That is what I am asking you for.

Mr. Hughes. If what you want is a statement as to whether they were insolvent or not—I never meant to include that in my questions of the witness.

Mr. McCoy. No, not at all; but you asked some questions as to the discussion between Mr. Baxter and Mr. McClure with Mr. Stone, that is in regard to the clearing-house certificates; at any rate you mentioned the clearing-house certificates, and I supposed it was because of some connection with the matter.

Mr. McCoy. Now, was there anything, Mr. Stone, so far as the matter of the clearing-house certificates were concerned, whether they were being used at that time or at any other time, which would have prevented a satisfactory arrangement with Mr. Baxter for the payment of those goods to the amount of your bid by the Stone-Fisher Co.?

A. Possibly you will pardon me in answering that question to deviate the least bit from a direct answer, yes or no.

The Chairman. You may have the opportunity this time, because you have not done it yet.

A. The question of how far a court, in realizing upon property in the hands of the court may be permitted to deviate from a direct cash consideration would enter in, and I would like to answer that only in this way, as it is passing upon our own credit, that I would simply say that had I had the distinguished honor of sitting in the chair of Judge Hanford I think I would have felt perfectly safe in assuming that an organization fixed just as we were at that time would meet their obligations precisely at the minute that they agreed to meet them.

Q. Well, I will put it a little more specifically. Suppose the proposition had been put right up to you, Mr. Stone, "We must have the cash or the equivalent of cash for this $60,000 bid," what would you have done?—A. Now, that the particular date and conditions are fully made familiar, I would have to say that I do not know what we would have done. It is hard to say. It was a time when the matter of $60,000 was not flying about on the streets here for every good house to pick up.

Q. I do not mean what would you have done in regard to complying with the absolute cash payment, but I mean what would you have done to satisfy the court, or offered to do to satisfy the court and Mr. Baxter, as a careful receiver, not what you would really tender as payment?—A. Had I been in the court I would have requested this, to have made it absolutely safe for the court, "That we, as a court, will insist on placing our cash here in that building and as the stock is distributed and realized upon a cash sale, we will retain the amount to the extent that you are obligated as the sales are made."

Q. That would have been satisfactory to you, would it?—A. That would have been satisfactory to us, surely.

Mr. HUGHES. Did you make any such proposition as that?

A. No, sir.

Witness excused.

W. E. STARR, recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. McCOY. What is your connection and how long has it existed with the Stone-Fisher Co.?

A. I have been a member of the board of directors and connected with them for about eight years and acting as superintendent.

Q. You have been sitting in court while Mr. Stone has been testifying before this committee.—A. Yes.

Q. And you heard what he testified about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You appreciate, of course, the scope of the questions that were asked him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you anything to say which will in any way supplement what Mr. Stone has said to the committee in regard to this McCarthy Dry Goods matter and the bid, etc., or to vary it in any way?—A. I think that as I have been sitting here and following what took place—I was present in the court room—I do not think I can add anything to what Mr. Stone has said. I think that his recollections of what took place on the part of the court and on the part of ourselvers as bidders is very correct.

Q. That is, you will substantiate his recollections of what took place in court.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you any recollection of the question having been raised at any time, either in court or anywhere else, as to the perfect ability of the Stone-Fisher Co. to make good this bid of $60,000 in cash, or by way of security if the payments were deferred as proposed?—A. I do not think any such proposition of security ever was put up beyond a note signed by a certain number of the majority owners of the business.

Q. And was that proposition put up?—A. I do not remember that any proposition other than the usual course with merchandise notes.

Q. Were you present at any interview or interviews with Mr. McClure, of the firm of McClure & McClure, and Mr. Baxter in regard to your bid or the bid of Stone-Fisher Co.?—A. I do not. I remember that the proposition was made, but I can not swear that I was present in the office at the time.

Q. Have you heard at any time of any question being raised or suggested against this bid because of the possible fact that it might have to be pair for in clearing-house certificates, or what not?—A. No, sir; not before to-day.

Q. This is the first time you ever heard that suggestion made?—A. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES. Have you heard that suggestion made here to-day?

A. Not unless it has cropped out in the evidence.

Q. Have you heard it crop out in the evidence in any way?—A. Only as a suggestion.

Q. Only as involving the question of the ability to pay cash at that time. Now, I want to say now for the benefit of this committee, there is no question that I ever meant to suggest as to the solvency of the Stone-Fisher Co., or their ability to pay, or their credit at all. I only asked certain questions of Mr. Stone as proper cross-examination because I thought he was overlooking a financial condition existing here at that time.

Mr. MCCOY. I understood your question leads up to this proposition that a receiver's only duty is to receive cash, and my questions were directed exactly to the same thing—now, is not that the point, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not understand, Mr. McCoy, that that is the point. The ground on which I understand the sale was rejected—that the creditors and preferred stockholders objected to it—I have not understood at all that it was based on the ground that this proposed purchaser was not able to meet his obligations or that a satisfactory arrangement could not be made with the purchaser, but it was objected to because the creditors and preferred stockholders objected.

Mr. MCCOY. Then, I misapprehended your question about the clearing-house certificates. I won't ask you to explain it.

Mr. HUGHES. I saw a good opportunity to let the committee know what the conditions financially were here at that time and thought that might throw some light on the result of the McCarthy Dry Goods receivership.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will take judicial knowledge of that fact, I can not——

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask one question? Your bid was not submitted in writing, but orally, was it?

A. I could not testify regarding that.

Q. Do not you recall that, Mr. Starr, you made an oral statement in court at the time?—A. I remember the oral statement, but whether that had been preceded by a bid I could not say.

Witness excused.

The CHAIRMAN. On account of the large volume of correspondence to be gone through the committee will take a longer recess for lunch than usual—we will take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Whereupon a recess is taken until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON'S PROCEEDINGS.

JULY 18, 1912.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

FREDERICK T. FISCHER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. McCOY. Your full name, Mr. Fischer?

A. Frederick T. Fischer.

Q. And your business?—A. Wholesale grocer.

Q. Of what firm?—A. The firm of Fischer Bros.

Q. Your firm is a member of the——A. Seattle——

Q. Yes; if you will give the name?—A. Seattle Credit Men's & Merchants' Association.

Q. You were appointed on a committee of that association by Mr. Anderson, the president?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Klock testify this morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was a meeting of that committee held some time this month, I believe?—A. I think it was; yes.

Q. It was possibly in June?—A. Yes; within two or three weeks.

Q. A meeting at which it was suggested to the members of the committee that this congressional committee had asked for some form of cooperation; do you remember that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you at that meeting yourself? Did you get there——A. (Interrupting.) I was a little late getting in there, Mr. McCoy, and stayed until the end.

Q. Well, if you will state, as nearly as you can remember, in detail, or substantially where you can't remember the details, any remarks that were made by anybody at that meeting, and particularly what Mr. Goldsmith said and what Mr. Klock said?—A. Why, I think the purpose—or the meeting was called merely on the suggestion of Mr. Klock, I believe, to confer together with an idea of being called before the committee through the instigation of Mr. Perry, as I recall it, and during the course of the meeting general conversation ensued, and we thought that the matter in hand was more or less irrelevant to the matter at the present time. The gist of the conversation was that there was no immediate hurry for this matter to be taken up, and it was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, what was said, Mr. Fischer, as to complying with the request or suggestion of this congressional committee for cooperation?—A. Oh, that the committee should not be called upon as a body, but should be—if they were called upon to testify individually, why, all right.

Q. Well, did you hear Mr. Goldsmith make any statement at all?—A. I heard Mr. Goldsmith make some remarks.

Q. What did he say?—A. I don't remember exactly what the remarks were in his own language, but the purport of the remarks were that he had known Judge Hanford for a great many years and esteemed him very highly, and knew that he was a very hard-worked man, and that he felt that this investigation ought not to be brought just at the present time. I think that was about along the line of the remarks.

Q. Well, can't you give us a little more in detail what he said?—A. Why, I think that—exactly what he said, do you mean? I couldn't tell that quite, Mr. McCoy; it has kind of gone out of my mind.

Q. Well, I would not expect that you would remember the exact words, but the substance of each phase of his remarks. Now, you have stated that he said what he did say about Judge Hanford. What else did he say about him?—A. He said that he had known him for many years and considered him to be a man of excellent reputation in every way; that his habits were good: occasionally he might take a little drink; and that question had been brought up, I believe—been referred to or something—and he merely mentioned that he thought he was always very temperate in that respect, and I think also he said that the judge was getting a little old, or words to that effect.

Q. Did he say anything in substance to the effect that he thought the judge perhaps had or was about to reach the full limit of his period of usefulness?—A. Why, some language along that line; yes, sir; words to that effect.

Q. Do you remember hearing Mr. Klock say anything about the Hanford Irrigation Co.?—A. Mr. Klock did make some remarks in regard to that.

Q. Do you remember what they were?—A. Why, I could not tell you exactly, because I don't think I was paying very close attention, but it was quite—it was of quite an intricate nature, explaining the legal sides of the case, which at the time I didn't pay much attention to, because I thought it was irrelevant.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

Mr. Hughes. I would like, with the permission of the committee, just to ask a question or two, and if it is not objectionable I will ask it in leading form, for the purpose of doing justice to members of this association.

The Chairman. Ask him.

Mr. Hughes. Mr. Fischer, was there anything said there that either expressed or implied an unwillingness on the part of the members of this association as individuals to give any information that they might possess to this committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any intimation there that they should in any way interfere with the work of this committee or subvert its efforts to get at the truth?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything further than an intimation or suggestion adopted finally by the committee, that the association as an association, or its committee appointed for another purpose, should not act officially in the matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it not suggested there and assented to by everybody that as individuals they should all feel at liberty to give any information they might possess——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) That they were called upon to give, but not to act as an official body?—A. Yes, sir; that was the case.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. MCCOY. Was anything said there to the effect that it might not be for the best interests of anybody a member of that committee to take any part in this congressional inquiry?

A. I don't recall any such remarks; no, sir.

Witness excused.

CHARLES F. PETERSON, being recalled, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What are your initials?

A. Charles F.

Q. You are the same Charles F. Peterson who testified before the committee one day last week?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time you were asked with reference to the name of some person who you said was with you on a certain occasion near the Washington Hotel, I think, when you saw Judge Hanford. I may not state the facts correctly, but do I recall to your mind what you testified then and the fact that you promised to consult the records of the hotel to get the name of the person who was with you?—A. That was in regard to a date—in regard to the date that I was supposed to have seen Judge Hanford drink in the Rainier Grand Hotel.

Mr. MCCOY. Your testimony was that you were on your way to meet this person.

A. Yes; at the Colman Dock.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, have you obtained the information that you promised the committee you would get?

A. I think I have. The date was January 27.

Mr. HUGHES. Of what year?

The CHAIRMAN. Of this year?

A. Of this year; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

By Mr. DORR:

Q. Who was the person, Mr. Peterson?—A. That I met?

Q. Yes. sir.—A. Mr. O. A. Wadenstein.

Q. Of Tacoma?—A. Well, he is representing F. S. Harmon; that is, he has charge of their wholesale furniture business here in the 1500 block on First Avenue south.

Q. Is he there now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And January 27, 1912, is the day that you say you saw Judge Hanford in the Rainier bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Rainier Grand Hotel bar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You fixed the time when you were on the stand before as November, I think?—A. Was that all?

Q. Sir?—A. Is that all I said?

Q. I thought you fixed it——A. I said November, December, or January, and I was under the impression that I could have referred to the register of the Washington Annex Hotel and find the date that he was here.

Q. Now, you are certain this is the correct date?—A. I certainly am.

Q. That was on Saturday?—A. Yes, sir.

Witness excused.

F. W. BURPEE, being recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Burpee, do you wish to make any correction of or addition to the testimony that you gave the other day?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. You may state what.—A. In reply to a question from Mr. Dorr as to the date at which I met Judge Hanford——

Q. Yes.—A. (Continuing.) I think I stated it was January or February, 1903.

Q. Yes.—A. I would like to state that it was in April, 1903, instead of January or February. It was in January or February that I first heard regarding Judge Hanford's invention.

In reply to Mr. Dorr's question as to where I met Judge Hanford, I may say that I asked of Mr. McCord at that time where Judge Hanford's office was, and he told me it was in the Federal Building. I had just received a letter from the committee in which they said this investigation was being held in the Federal Building, and for that reason I took this to be the same place, but on leaving this building I saw that this was not the same building, but it was in the building then known as the Federal Building.

Mr. HUGHES. Pardon me for the interruption. That was at the corner of Fourth and Marion, in this city?

A. I am not very positive.

Mr. HUGHES. Just across from the Rainier Club?

A. I am not very positive as to positions in this city. I am not just acquainted with those blocks, but it was a building known at that time as the——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Its location is in the record six or seven times now.

Mr. HUGHES. There have been three different locations. I was simply fixing the time. That would be the location at that time?

The WITNESS. At that time.

Mr. McCOY. You say you don't know anything about where it was; you know it was the Federal Building?

A. Yes.

Q. Just what was your information?—A. Mr. McCord told me his office was in the Federal Building.

Q. Have you, since you testified, looked up the question about the patent to Judge Hanford?—A. Yes.

Q. I will read from the statement that you have handed to me and ask you whether this is correct: The "'Title of the invention is 'Machine for operating on cans or other receptacles. Inventor, Cornelius H. Hanford. Number of patent, 748,368; issued December 29, 1903. Application for patent filed July 18, 1903.'" Those details are correct, are they?—A. As I copied them from the Gazette.

By Mr. DORR:

Q. You fix this time as April, 1903?—A. April, 1903.

Q. And when was the application for patent made?

Mr. McCOY. July 18, 1903.

Mr. DORR. Then this would be before the application for patent?

A. Before the application was filed, but I understood that he was applying for a patent on his invention, but before it was filed.

Q. You stated the other day, as I recall it, that it was between the date of the application and the date that the patent was issued that you had this conversation?—A. I understood that an application was being made for a patent. Since I have found that the application was filed with the Patent Office in July.

Q. Well, and because you have so found you fixed——A. (Interrupting). I wish to correct that.

Q. You want to correct your statement?—A. Yes; I want to correct that.

Q. You say the conversation that you had was before the application for patent was filed?—A. I wish to correct any statements that I find are not correct.

Q. I understand, but you say now that your conversation with Judge Hanford was before he applied for the patent?—A. That is what the record shows.

Q. And you still say that the Judge wanted to sell you that patent?—A. I do.

Q. He told you so himself?—A. No.

Q. How?—A. No.

Q. Did he ever intimate any such thing to you?—A. No.

Q. Did he ever talk to you at any time about selling that patent to you?—A. No.

Q. You were there solely to consult with the court, in conjunction with your attorney, as to the suit that was involved?—A. No.

Q. Sir?—A. No, sir; I was not. I was there to see the judge regarding his invention.

Q. You went there to see the judge regarding his invention?—A. Yes.

Q. And he never offered to sell it to you and you didn't offer to buy it?—A. From Mr. McCord I was given to understand that he wanted to sell it to me, and I went with Mr. McCord to his office in connection with that matter, and he explained to him that I did not want to purchase it.

Q. Did you explain to Judge Hanford that you didn't want to purchase it?—A. No; I didn't.

Q. Sir?—A. No; I didn't. Mr. McCord explained it.

Q. I want to get right at the conversation that you had with Judge Hanford.—A. I went with Mr. McCord to Judge Hanford's office, and Mr. McCord explained to him that I did not wish to purchase his invention; that I had made certain changes to my machine by which I thought I had avoided infringement of the claims he had decided were infringed, and I was manufacturing the machine as so changed, and that it was only a short time before, or a little over a year before, the patent belonging to the Alaska Packers would expire, at which time we would be able to manufacture our own machine, and for those reasons we did not care to purchase his invention. It was for that reason we went to see Judge Hanford.

Q. Are you sure, Mr. Burpee, that this occurred in April, 1903?—A. Yes.

Q. You have refreshed your recollection and——A. (Interrupting.) I have seen a copy of a letter I received from Kerr & McCord at that time, which fixes that date.

Q. About this same matter?—A. About this same matter.

Mr. McCoy. Have you got the copy with you?

A. Yes.

Mr. McCoy. Let me see it, please.

Witness produces paper.

Mr. McCoy. Do you want to look at this, Mr. Dorr, before it goes in?

Paper referred to was handed to Mr. Dorr.

Mr. Dorr. This letter seems to be dated April 13, 1903?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, can you fix the time of this interview?—A. I am not certain as to the exact date. I am of the opinion that I was informed by Mr. McCord, by telephone or some other way, that the judge was not able to be—would not be able to get back at that date, that he was delayed by trains or something, I have just forgotten what, and that it would be a day or two later. I am of the opinion that it was about Tuesday instead of—I met Judge Hanford the following Tuesday instead of Sunday as asked for in that letter.

Q. Had the judgment been entered against your firm in this patent litigation at that time?—A. By Judge Hanford; yes.

Q. It had been?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were enjoined from manufacturing the machines according to the plans that you had been manufacturing them on?—A. We were enjoined from manufacturing the machines containing the claims decided by Judge Hanford that were infringed by us.

Q. You were then seeking some way to avoid that decision, were you not?—A. I was trying to build a machine in which those claims would not be infringed.

Q. And you heard of this invention some way—Mr. McCord had told you?—A. Yes.

Q. Or somebody else—sir?—A. Yes.

Q. And you wanted to investigate it, to find out whether it was practicable?—A. I had tested it out as far as the practicability was concerned before this date.

Q. You had tested out the Hanford device before that?—A. I hadn't seen the Hanford device; I knew nothing of the Hanford device.

Q. I say, you wanted to find some device that you could use that would avoid the patent that you were infringing upon?—A. I had devised a scheme and I had my plans made and was building and changing the machine that had been built to this plan.

Q. I say, that is what you were engaged in at that particular time?—A. Yes.

Q. To find some scheme for avoiding the patents that you were adjudged to have been infriging?—A. Yes; and I brought down drawings of the plan that I was working out with me at that time and showed them to Judge Hanford at that time.

Q. Well, that had nothing to do with the previous litigation, so far as the validity of the patents were concerned, Mr. Burpee, had it?—A. I didn't just understand your question.

Q. I say, these matters had nothing to do with the litigation as to the validity of the patents that were involved in the suit?—A. No; I don't think they did.

Q. That was all settled long before?—A. Well, it was settled in Judge Hanford's court, but it was at that time before the court of appeals; it was not settled in the court of appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. You remember that Mr. Burpee testified the other day that while the matter had been decided by Judge Hanford it was then pending in the court of appeals and that the damages for the infrigement would not be fixed until the court of appeals had decided the case.

Mr. DORR. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. And the question of damages was still pending.

Mr. DORR. Yes; I remember that he so testified.

Mr. DORR. And the matter of damages was settled by a stipulation between the parties, ultimately, was it not?

A. Later, yes; in 1904.

Q. The judge had nothing at all to do with that?—A. No.

Q. It was an agreement outside of court?—A. Settled outside of court.

Mr. MCCOY. In 1904?

A. 1904.

Mr. DORR. I think that is all I want to ask him.

Mr. MCCOY. I would like to have that marked. Where did you get this copy, Mr. Burpee; who furnished you this copy of this letter?

A. I really got it from Mr. McCord.

Q. This is a copy of the letter that you received from Kerr & McCord at that time?—A. I believe it is.

Q. Then, the letter is dated Seattle, April 13, 1903, and is addressed to Messrs. Letson & Burpee, Fairhaven, Wash., or at least the copy shows that, and is signed by Kerr & McCord. Letson & Burpee was your firm?—A. Yes.

Q. That is all, Mr. Burpee, unless you want to say something else.

Paper above referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 84."

GEORGE MCINTYRE GIBBS, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Please give us your full name.

A. George McIntyre Gibbs.

Q. And you live where?—A. British Columbia—Vancouver.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am president of the British Columbia Drilling & Dredge Co. and managing director of the Queen Charlotte Island colleries.

Q. Are you familiar with any of the properties formerly belonging to the Western Steel Co. and located in Canada?—A. Yes; I am by the reports of the men I have had working on it and also from the reports of some of the most celebrated engineers of the United States.

Q. Is that on what is called Gorhams Island?—A. No; Graham Island.

Q. Have you ever visited the property yourself?—A. No; but my men were working on it at the time that the Western Steel went into the receivership.

Q. Did you have any conference or conferences with the receivers of the Western Steel in regard to the sale of the property?—A. I attended the creditors' meeting and urged as hard as I could to delay the matters until they could investigate the case a little thoroughly. It was at that time in the winter time. It was Crown-granted land—20,000 acres. They had 600,000,000 feet of timber on it. It was worth at least 50 cents a foot and would probably——

Mr. HUGHES (interrupting). A thousand, you mean?

A. Or a thousand, I mean. Will be worth, likely, a great deal more in the near future with the building of railroads. I have been bringing out coal which I paid for after the company went into the receivership, as the men were not out. The coal—Mr. Hays, late general manager for the Grand Trunk Pacific, said it was as fine coal as he had ever seen under the conditions—it was only 20 feet down in the ground. I had samples of the coal out here.

Q. Well, did you state these facts at that meeting?—A. I stated those facts as far as I could. I raised the objection at the creditors' meeting that there should be a little bit more delay in order to ascertain the true facts of the case. The 20,000 acres of Crown-granted land, as farm land, after the trees are taken off, is worth a consideration.

Mr. HUGHES. A little louder.

A. I say, the 20,000 acres of Crown-granted land—Crown-granted land in Canada—the timber may be exported while licensed timber can not be, which is of considerable advantage if we want to ship timber into the United States. The Crown-granted land, or at least the licensed coal lands—I staked 38,000 acres on Graham Island about two years ago, and I have got a million-dollar company in which we are developing now and which we have a sale on bond in the old country, and that is valued at $20 an acre; so that the Crown-granted coal lands, of which we got the specimens of coal of the Western Steel, ought to be worth a great deal more. I think that the Crown-granted lands of the Western Steel ought to be worth, at the very least, $30 an acre. The timber ought to be worth at least $300,000 and the farming lands, after the timber is taken off, must be worth a certain amount; and I think any sane person would say that at the lowest valuation it is worth $700,000 at the time it went into the receivership.

Q. And you urged these objections at the meeting there?—A. I urged these considerations at the creditors' meeting here.

Q. In Seattle as——A. (Interrupting). Yes; I raised the point with Mr. Bausman, if I may mention his name in his absence, that the Metropolitan Trust, before making a loan to the extent of $600,000, might place out good valuators; and I asked if he knew what valuation he put on them, because it is not likely a loan company would make a loan of such magnitude as that without thoroughly investigating, and he replied that sometimes loan companies made mistakes; and I asked him in this case if the loan company had made a mistake, and he said he didn't think so. So I think all these should have been a lot of preliminary investigation. Of course he put up the claim that the property was deteriorating, that the men at Irondale were not being paid their wages, and the creditors would not be paid in full unless they accepted certain terms.

Q. Did you urge at that meeting, or at any time, to these people that in order to permit a prospective bidder to make up his mind intelligently how much to offer for the property there ought to be delays so as to give him a chance?—A. Yes, I did; and they came back with the report: "Well, who is going to put up the money?" And I stated that the year before I put up $59,000 to save the Graham Island property, or at least a portion of that, and $9,000 of which was not yet paid, so I borrowed from the Bank of Vancouver at that time and I got extensions on the rest of the property. I only had a day's notice to do that, and I said I thought in saving the property a year ahead that some consideration ought to be shown instead of rushing it right into the receivership.

Q. Testimony has been given here that dates for the payment of some option installment was about to come around and that Mr. Baxter, one of the receivers, went up to Canada and through his efforts got the extension. Do you know anything about that?—A. Yes; I know all about it. Mr. Baxter came to my office. I had gone through the same thing and got the extension the year before. I told Mr. Baxter what I did and he went over and got the extension.

Q. So that it was not a herculean task?—A. Well, I would not say that, I could not—I think it was—in all fairness to Mr. Baxter I think it required diplomacy, because it is harder to do things the second time than it was the first.

Mr. McCoy. That is all.

By Mr. Higgins:

Q. You spoke of Mr. Bausman. What is his full name?—A. Who is that?

Q. Bausman?

Mr. Dorr. Bausman?

A. Bausman, an attorney here.

Mr. Higgins. What is his full name?

A. Well, I don't know who he is.

Mr. Dorr. Frederick Bausman, a witness who testified the other day.

Mr. Higgins. Well, I wanted to be sure that was the same gentleman.

The Witness. Yes; he was representing the Metropolitan Trust and I think got a fee of $10,000.

Mr. Higgins. And he was also attorney for the receiver?

A. For the receiver; yes, sir.

Mr. Higgins. Mr. Chairman, in connection with Mr. Bausman's testimony and from discussion that has been engaged in during this hearing as to the power of the court over trustees in bankruptcy I hand the reporter a few sections of the bankruptcy law, which I have marked and which I would like to have copied into the record; also the rules established by the United States Supreme Court which make very clear some questions which seem to have been in doubt. Mr. McCoy may want to make a statement in that connection.

Mr. McCoy. I won't say anything further than that my friend, Mr. Higgins, has found the sections which substantiate my claim as to the jurisdiction of the court at the election of a trustee.

Mr. Higgins. The United States bankruptcy law, page 30, section 26; page 30, section 27; page 35, section 44; page 35, section 47; page 37, section 50, subdivision C. And, then, under "General orders in bankruptcy," adopted and established by the Supreme Court of the United States November 28, 1898, section 15, page 58; section 17, page 59; and section 25, page 63.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be incorporated in the record.

The sections above referred to read as follows:

Section 26, page 30:

Arbitration of controversies.—a. The trustee may, pursuant to the direction of the court, submit to arbitration any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate.

b. Three arbitrators shall be chosen by mutual consent, or one by the trustee, one by the other party to the controversy, and the third by the two so chosen, or if they fail to agree in five days as to their appointment, the court shall appoint the third arbitrator.

c. The written finding of the arbitrators, or a majority of them, as to the issues presented, may be filed in court and shall have like force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

Section 27, page 30:

Compromises.—a. The trustee may, with the approval of the court, compromise any controversy arising in the administration of the estate, upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the estate.

Section 44, page 35:

Appointment of trustees.—a. The creditors of a bankrupt estate shall, at their first meeting after the adjudication, or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after it has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside, or a discharge revoked, or if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, appoint one trustee or three trustees of such estate. If the creditors do not appoint a trustee, or trustees, as herein provided, the court shall do so.

Section 47, page 35:

Duties of trustees.—a. Trustees shall, respectively, (fig. 1) account for and pay over to the estate under their control all interest received by them upon property of such estates; (fig. 2) collect and reduce to money the property of the estate for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest; (fig 3) deposit all money received by them in one of the designated depositories; (fig. 4) disburse money only by check or draft on the depositories in which it has been deposited; (fig. 5) furnish such information concerning the estates of which they are trustees and their administration as may be requested by parties in interest; (fig. 6) keep regular accounts showing all amounts received, and from what sources, and all amounts expended, and of what accounts; (fig. 7) lay before the final meeting of the creditors detailed statements of the administration of the estate; (fig. 8) make final reports and file final accounts with the courts fifteen (15) days before the days fixed for the final meeting of the creditors; (fig. 9) pay dividends within ten (10) days after they are declared by the referees; (fig. 10) report to the court, in writing, the condition of the estates and the amount of money on hand, and such other details as may be required by the court, within the first month after their appointment, and every two months thereafter, unless ordered by the court; (fig. 11) set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report the items and estimated value thereof to the court as soon as practicable after their appointment.

b. Whenever three trustees shall have been appointed for an estate the concurrence of at least two of them shall be necessary to the validity of their every act concerning their administration of the estate.

c. The trustees shall, within thirty days after the adjudication, file a certified copy of the decree of adjudication in the office where conveyances of real estate are recorded in every county where the bankrupts own real estate not exempt from execution, and pay the fee for such filing, and he shall receive a compensation of fifty cents for each copy so filed, together with the filing fee, shall be paid out of the estate of the bankrupt as a part of the costs and disbursements of the proceedings.

Section 50, subdivision C, page 37:

c. The creditors of a bankrupt estate, at their first meeting, after the adjudication, or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside, or a discharge revoked, if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, shall fix the amount of the bond of the trustee; they may at any time increase the amount of the bond. If the creditors do not fix the amount of the bond of the trustee, as herein provided, the court shall do so.

Section 15, page 58:

Appointment and removal of trustee.—The appointment of a trustee by the creditors shall be subject to be approved or disapproved by the referee or by the judge, and he shall be removable by the judge only.

Section 15, page 58:

Trustees not appointed in certain cases.—If the schedule of a voluntary bankrupt discloses no assets, and if no creditor appears at the first meeting, the court may direct that no trustee be appointed; but at any time thereafter a trustee may be appointed if the court shall deem it desirable. If no trustee be appointed as aforesaid, the court may order that no meeting of the creditors other than the first meeting shall be called.

Section 17, page 59:

Duties of trustee.—The trustee shall, immediately upon entering upon his duties prepare a complete inventory of all the property of the bankrupt that comes into his possession. The trustee shall make report to the court, within twenty days after receiving the notice of his appointment, of the articles set off to the bankrupt by him, according to the provisions of the forty-seventh section of the act, with the estimated value of each article, and any creditor may take exceptions to the determination of the trustee within twenty days after the filing of the report. The referee may require the exceptions to be argued before him and shall certify them to the court for final determination at the request of either party. In case the trustee shall neglect to file any report or statement which it is made his duty to file or make by the act, or by any general order in bankruptcy, within five days after the same shall be due, it shall be the duty of the referee to make an order requiring the trustees to show cause before the judge, at a time specified in the order, why he should not be removed from office. The referee shall cause a copy of the order to be served upon the trustee at least seven days before the time fixed for the hearing and proof of the service thereof to be delivered to the clerk. All accounts of trustees shall be referred as of course to the referee for audit, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court.

Section 25, page 63:

Special meeting of creditors.—Whenever, by reason of a vacancy in the office of trustee, or for any other cause, it becomes necessary to call a special meeting of creditors in order to carry out the purposes of the act, the court may call such a meeting, specifying in the notice the purpose for which it is called.

By the CHAIRMAN. I wish to ask you one question more, Mr. Gibbs? Are you a stockholder in the Western Steel Co.?

A. Both a stockholder and a creditor.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

The WITNESS. There is one question that—may I ask?

The CHAIRMAN. You may make any statement you please about the matter.

The WITNESS. Don't you think it would be fair that the Metropolitan Trust Co. should give the report of the valuators?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we may take that up when we get back to Washington. Will you give the names of those valuators now?

A. No. I don't know them. I may have met them but I don't know who they were. I sent——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Do you know whether they were western people or whether they were eastern people?

A. I could not tell you. There were a great many valuators who used to come in and value the property. You see Mr. Moore in order to float the bonds was turned down time and time again, and he had to send fresh valuators. I don't know that any properties have been more valued in Canada than the Western Steel Corporation.

Q. It is safe to say that they had an appraisal and that that apparently justified a loan of $600,000, but we will find that out—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did they have property worth twenty-five millions?

A. Well, that question has been raised several times. If there is as many tons of coal in it as the prospectus says, it is worth a hundred million.

Mr. HIGGINS. It was capitalized for twenty-five million, wasn't it?

A. It was capitalized for twenty million, fifteen million preferred—or five million preferred and fifteen million common stock.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of it has ever been issued?

A. Well, I could not tell you; I don't know. That part I don't know. But I was trying to develop the property, and I did so at my own expense, to find out what coal was in there, to save the stockholders.

Mr. HIGGINS. You promoted the company?

A. I beg pardon.

By Mr. HIGGINS:

Q. You promoted the company?—A. No; Mr. Moore promoted the company.

Q. You owned some lands that were sold to the company. did you?—A. No; I simply put in my money and tried to protect the stockholders who were interested in British Columbia.

Q. How much money did you put into it?—A. I put in—well, we raised $200,000 the first time that they came up to see us. I financed I guess about—I guess of that amount there must have been $100,000 in cash.

Q. The rest of it in coal land?—A. No; the rest were notes. some of which are pending.

Q. Were they paid?—A. Some of them were taken up by the parties. But none of them are in the banks anyway; there are none of them in the banks anyway.

Q. You mean the parties that made notes to the company?—A. The parties gave notes and they were sent back to British Columbia and were discounted there, and you see these parties took them up.

Q. They had to pay the notes?—A. Yes; it has been inferred that there was a certain amount of stock given out, you know, but we paid for what stock we got in British Columbia. But what I wanted to do was to try to develop. I know the coal is there, because I have got other interests there, and we are bringing it out. Prof. McCoy, of Bakersfield, has given one of the best reports for the national banks in the States, and if it is of any use I can send down the report.

Mr. MCCOY. I wish you would. We would like to see it.

A. He was sent by one of the national banks in Chicago; and we have a report on the coal.

Mr. MCCOY. Will you mail a copy, please?

A. I will be very pleased to.

Mr. HIGGINS. You had some doubt in your mind about the valuations placed on that property by the New York Trust Co., didn't you?

A. Well, no—oh, no; I supposed that the valuation was very much in excess of the loan. I don't think that any trust company in the world would make a loan unless they were at least worth $1,500,000, across the continent.

Q. Did you think that the Metropolitan Trust Co.——A. (Interrupting.) I thought that the——

Q. (Interrupting.) Did you think the values by the Metropolitan Trust Co. were too high or too low?—A. I thought the valuation of the Metropolitan Trust Co. must be greatly in excess of $600,000 and that they should not have forced the issue so quickly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What I understand you to mean is that you would like to know just what they were?—A. What their valuators put on them.

Q. You assume that when they made a loan of $600,000 on property of that character, largely speculative in its value, that the report must have been vastly in excess of the amount they loaned?—A. Yes.

Q. And you would like to know what the report was?—A. I would like to know what it was.

Q. It is a matter of curiosity?—A. I have heard that they intended—I don't know about this, but one of the rumors that floats around—that they intended to form a new company for eight hundred thousand; that at the present time a company has been formed in the East, called the Occidental Iron Co., to take over the assets of the—to take over this mortgage from the Metropolitan Trust, so evidently they can sell it for—that is a million-dollar company.

Q. That is, if what you have heard is true?—A. Yes; that is the newspaper report about the Occidental Iron Co.

Mr. HIGGINS. Do you happen to know who was suggested by Mr. Bausman as the receiver for the company?

A. No; I never heard that Mr. Bausman made any suggestion. That part I don't know. In fact, I never heard until to-day that Mr. Bausman had made a suggestion, but he may have.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want to ask him?

Mr. HUGHES. I have not yet discovered the materiality of this inquiry, but it seems to be material, and I would like to ask just a question or two.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Were you one of the parties that sold the Graham Island property to the Western Steel Co. or to Mr. Moore?—A. No; I had nothing to do with it.

Q. Had you been interested in it before Mr. Moore secured the purchase?—A. No; the only interest that I had was borrowing $19,000, nine thousand of which I have not got back yet.

Q. Well, you meant to take——A. (Interrupting.) To save it; to save it from going to the original owners.

Q. Why were you interested in that?—A. Well, because we had—the steel company would have lost it the next day, and I was interested to a considerable extent in the stock of the company, and I didn't want this $20,000,000 asset going away.

Q. You never had had any interest in this property?—A. I never——

Q. (Interrupting.) Or in selling it to——A. (Interrupting.) No; I never made a cent out of the Western Steel Corporation at any time. I paid my way——

Q. (Interrupting.) I think you misunderstand my inquiry. You had no interest in this property, no knowledge of it, and were not a party in any way to selling it to Mr. Moore?—A. None. That was before my time.

Q. Do you know what Mr. Moore purchased it for—what his contract price was for it?—A. I think he had—I think about $350,000, but that was a great many years ago.

Q. Well, not so very many years.—A. About six or seven. The property up in Vancouver, you know, has trebled in three years.

Q. Yes; Vancouver has been a very thrifty place. We will all agree to that, but I am talking about Graham Island, which is some hundred miles north.—A. Yes.

Q. Some 300 miles north, isn't it?—A. Yes. No; it is about five north.

Q. Five hundred miles north and entirely undeveloped, isn't it?—A. No; I——

Q. That is, I mean the island is practically uninhabited?—A. Oh, no; that was three years ago. The settlers are pouring in there. We have got a $100,000,000 railroad running within 60 miles of it.

Q. Well, the railroad is coming to Port Rupert, of course?—A. Yes; that is 60 miles from Graham Island. Of course that makes a big difference. If I may say so, that the United States Government at Washington has offered to take all the British Columbia coal we can sell them, so that gives a market.

Q. We don't want to go into a comparison of the policy of the United States Government as compared with that of the Canadian Government.—A. I see, but it is the value of the lands I want to show.

Q. (Continuing.) It might not be interesting. That is all.

Mr. McCoy. The trouble is, Mr. Gibbs, that they come down here and win golf championships and they don't want you to take anything else up there.

The Witness. Well, my only interest in the thing is to get some of my money back and some of the stockholders'; and if I can do that by developing and showing that they have a lot of coal there, I think I have done some good for the public.

Witness excused.

The Chairman. Is there any other witness whose testimony is brief who is anxious to get away?

D. Irvin Smith, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. McCoy. What is your full name, please?

A. D. Irvin Smith.

Q. What is your business?—A. Wholesale dry goods.

Q. Give the name of your firm.—A. Smith, Daniels & Keller.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to make any complaints about the administration of bankruptcy law in this district?—A. Well, in a general way I might say yes.

Q. Have you ever on any specific occasion made any complaints in mettings or what not?—A. Complaints to who?

Q. To anybody, to your fellow business men.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the occasion?—A. Why, the Knosher case in particular.

Q. Were you interested as a creditor in that case?—A. I was.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the McCarthy Dry Goods case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you have to do with that?—A. I was a creditor.

Q. Did you take any active interest in the handling of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what you did in that matter?—A. Well, the McCarthy case, as I recall, came up during the panic of 1907 and I didn't take much interest in the case until I heard that a local corporation was going to make a bid for the stock, or, rather, for the assets of the corporation, which I didn't think was adequate, and I went up to see Mr. Walter McClure and stated my position to him, asked him what action could be taken, and he told me that the case was coming up that afternoon before Judge Hanford and if I would go before the courts or have an attorney to go before the courts and make a protest, that the judge would no doubt be influenced by it—make a protest representing the local creditors, and that was done.

Q. You mean you retained some attorney to do it, or you went yourself?—A. No; I went up to see Mr. Gleason, who was one of the large creditors, and he called in his attorney and we had several claims there, probably a total of $30,000, and Mr. Kane, as I recall, was the attorney. He went before the court, representing these claims, and opposed this sale, and the judge listened to it and rejected the bids and ordered the store opened by the receiver.

Q. Ordered what, you say?—A. Ordered the store opened and started the business to going by the receiver. The business at that time was closed up.

Q. The business had been shut down?—A. Yes; oh, yes; the business had been shut down for two or three weeks, probably a month, six weeks; I don't recall how long.

Q. And when was that, do you recollect?—A. That was between the time that the receiver was appointed and up until they got bids on the stock. They could not sell it at that time on account of the conditions that existed.

Mr. McCoy. I think that you are mistaken about the business having ever been shut down. Isn't he, Mr. Baxter?

Mr. Baxter. The business was closed down for a week or ten days, something like that, immediately after the receivership.

By Mr. McCoy:

Q. The fact is, Mr. Smith, that the business was run almost continuously from the time of the appointment of the receiver. Mr. Baxter now says it was shut down for about ten days. Now, when was it these bids were received, do you remember?—A. Well, the business was closed, as I recall it, immediately after Mr. Baxter took possession of it, and remained closed until these bids came in——

Q. (Interrupting.) When was that, do you recollect?—A. No; I have no recollection about that.

Q. Whose bid was it you objected to?—A. Stone, Fisher & Lane's, as I recall it.

Q. What was the amount of the bid?—A. About $60,000.

Q. And what was the basis of your objection?—A. We thought that the stock would bring more than that, didn't think it was a fair price for the business.

Q. You thought it would bring more than that in bulk or retail?—A. Either way.

Q. Well, now you had a meeting of these creditors, and was some attorney retained to appear before Judge Hanford and make the protest that you thought should be made?—A. No; we didn't have a meeting. I went personally and saw the largest creditors. This happened, as I recall, in the morning, that I went to see Mr. McClure, and the case was to be heard at 2.30, so I went personally to see some of the creditors and they gave me their verbal permission to use their names, and we merely made a memorandum of that and Mr. Gleason requested Mr. Kane to go before the courts.

Q. Mr. Kane being an attorney or a——A. An attorney.

Q. And your information is that he did go before Judge Hanford and made the objection which you people felt should be made to it?—A. I was in court myself and——

Q. Oh, you were there yourself?—A. I was there myself and heard him make the objection.

Q. And that was the basis of the objection—that the price was not adequate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your estimation of the value of the assets that were included in the offer of the Stone-Fisher Co.?—A. I hardly get the question.

Q. You complained that the price offered by the Stone-Fisher Co. was not an adequate price. What, in your judgment, would have been an adequate price?—A. Well, as I recall it, the Stone-Fisher Co. offer was about 55, probably 60 cents on the dollar, and the business was a going business at that time, and being a creditor we wanted to get the most out of it possible. I was probably a little sanguine about it, but I was of the opinion that we should have got 75 cents. The stock seemed to be appraised on a fair valuation.

Q. Well, at this time when you made the objections you were right in the midst of the panic of 1907, were you not?—A. Yes, sir. That was one reason for it.

Q. One reason for what, the failure?—A. No; for making the objections. We thought if we could open the store and run it as a going business and make expenses for a few months conditions would change and more likely to find a buyer who was willing to pay a better price for it than the Stone-Fisher Co. were.

Q. Is not 60 per cent a pretty high average of realization on bankruptcy estates?—A. Not prior to that time it was not, for a good location. The location was the principal asset at that time.

Q. Your judgment is, or your experience is, that bankruptcy estates, where the business is well located and a reasonably good stock nets more than 60 per cent?—A. Well, there is all kinds of conditions that govern those things.

Q. I mean under conditions similar to this?—A. As a rule; yes.

Q. Did you confer at any time with the receiver in regard to running the business after it was being run for a while?—A. Well, yes.

Q. When, if at all, did you reach the conclusion that the business ought to be closed down?—A. Oh, probably six or eight months after that.

Q. The testimony is that it was sold out in September.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The subsequent year?—A. The subsequent year.

By Mr. HUGHES:

Q. Mr. Smith, what concern did you say you were connected with?—A. Smith, Daniels & Keller.

Q. You are now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been?—A. Two years.

Q. And prior to that time with what company?—A. Western Dry Goods Co.

Q. At the time of the McCarthy business you were connected with the Western Dry Goods Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The McCarthy dry goods store had, previous to its insolvency, been a large and very well known institution in this city, hadn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I suppose that that was one of the factors that you had in mind in believing that its name and business should be continued until a favorable season for disposing of it, was it?—A. That and the question of location.

Q. The location of the business was also in the trend of rapid business growth and particularly retail business?—A. That and the fact that at that time there could not be had a room or a business place on Second Avenue, hardly, for any price, for retail purposes.

Q. Now, let me ask you this further question: Was it not generally believed in this community, on account of good crops and good prices, that the panic of 1907 was necessarily only a temporary matter and that there must of necessity be an early return of prosperity?—A. That was our impression.

Q. And that was what influenced you in thinking that it was better to have the business continued by the receiver until this temporary depression passed over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Kane did appear there at this meeting before Judge Hanford and did voice the objection of the local creditors that you have referred to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was an express objection to accepting the bid of Stone, Fisher & Lane?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether he or any one else expressed the objection to the confirmation of that sale, or the acceptance of that bid, on behalf of the preferred stockholders of the McCarthy Dry Goods Co.?—A. No, sir; I have no——

Q. (Interrupting.) You don't recall as to that?—A. I have no recollection as to that.

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, here is that exhibit that was to go in—the Western Steel.

Mr. MCCOY. This is that one you drew up.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes; it was to go in as a part of that. I just got it completed.

Mr. McCoy. This statement, Mr. Preston, which you have furnished the committee is a synopsis prepared by you of the papers in this court in the receivership or bankruptcy of the Western Steel Corporation.

Mr. Preston. That is only the papers in court, not those in the referee's office.

Mr. McCoy. Yes, in the court.

Papers referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 84."

George H. Plummer, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. Higgins. State your full name.

A. George H. Plummer.

Q. You reside where?—A. Beg pardon?

Q. Where do you live?—A. Tacoma.

Q. What are your business connections?—A. I am western land agent of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Since 1901.

Q. What are your general duties, Mr. Plummer?—A. I have charge of the sale of lands of the railroad company in the States of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon.

Q. The Northern Pacific Railway?—A. The Northern Pacific Railway Co.

Q. Does the authority to close contracts for the sale of railroad land, Mr. Plummer, rest with you, or is it necessary to submit it to some other official of the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?—A. The sale of lands that are not on the market for sale under a regular price list must be submitted to the land commissioner at St. Paul before the sales can be made.

Q. To the general land commissioner of the road. And are you able to state, from your own knowledge and experience, whether he has to submit propositions for the sale of such lands as you have indicated to anyone? If so, you may name him.—A. I don't know that there is any limit placed upon his authority to make sales, but I do know that it is his custom to take up the matter of sale of all large blocks of land with the president, Mr. Elliott.

Q. Mr. Elliott—what is his full name?—A. Mr. Howard Elliott.

Q. Who is the executive officer, Mr. Plummer, of the western district of the Northern Pacific Road, located in this vicinity?—A. At this time, do you mean?

Q. Or of a date in 1905?—A. In 1905 the chief executive officer here, I think, was Mr. C. M. Levey. He had the position of third vice president.

Q. He had offices in Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir. The headquarters—the western headquarters of the company are in Tacoma.

Q. He had offices in the same building that you had offices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was the general offices of the western division of the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Perhaps you know where Mr. Levey is now?—A. Mr. Levey is at present in San Francisco.

Q. And by whom he is employed?—A. I believe he is connected with the Santa Fe road. I am not certain about that.

Q. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe?—A. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Reilroad.

Q. What, in a general way, Mr. Plummer, were Mr. Levey's duties?—A. He was in charge of all matters pertaining to the operation and maintenance of the railroad on this end of the line—that portion west of Paradise, I think, was the division at that time—Paradise, Mont.

Q. And did his duties include a supervision over your duties as well?—A. Why, not directly; no, sir. I reported usually to Mr. Cooper on all matters that pertained to the sale of lands, except in some cases where there were traffic matters involved and then I took up questions with Mr. Levey before submitting the matters to Mr. Cooper at St. Paul.

Q. That is, Mr. Levey had charge of the general operation, construction, and maintenance of the railroad, subject, of course, to the control of the general office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this part of the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the three States that you had?—A. Well, his district was not the same as mine. The western district in the land department constitutes the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, while the operating division is a little different. That, I think, at that time was Paradise, Mont., though I am not certain about that; it might have been west of that point.

Q. How long have you known Judge Hanford, Mr. Plummer?—A. Why, I think our acquaintance extends back 10 years.

Q. How frequently have you seen him in that period of time?—A. Only semioccasionally; not often.

Q. Where?—A. In both Tacoma and Seattle.

Q. Where in Seattle?—A. At his office in this building.

Q. In the Federal Building, do you mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean in his chambers?—A. In his chambers; yes, sir.

Q. At any other place in Seattle?—A. I have never met him anywhere that I remember, except I have seen him up at the Rainier Club.

Q. Are you a member of the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any other place than his chambers and the Rainier Club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, in Tacoma where would you meet him?—A. He has been in my office in the Headquarters Building, in Tacoma, and I also met him once, at least, in the Tacoma Hotel.

Q. Have you met him at any other place than at Tacoma and Seattle?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. You were directed in a subpœna issued by the committee, Mr. Plummer, to bring with you all of the correspondence and records and copies of correspondence—in general, all papers in your office at Tacoma in connection with the transfer of certain lands by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to C. H. Hanford, the Hanford Irrigation Co., or that in any way were involved in that transfer of land. Have you done so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have them in the room now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Won't you state to the committee when and where and under what circumstances the matter of the transfer of lands by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to either Judge Hanford or the Hanford Irrigation Co. was first called to your attention? You can refer, if you wish, to any papers that you brought with you.—A. [Witness refers to paper.] The negotiations with the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. are eight in number——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, now, you said negotiations. You meant transactions, I take it?—A. Transactions; yes, sir.

Q. And, to amplify, you refer to contracts which were made by the Northern Pacific Railway Co?—A. Contracts and leases. There were eight transactions, including contracts and leases.

Q. For railway lands?—A. For railway lands; yes, sir.

Q. What were these lands, Mr. Plummer?—A. They were lands either lying below or connected with the Hanford irrigation project.

Q. No; but so far as the railroad was concerned, what was the nature of the lands, and how did they get into possession of them?—A. The lands—the major portion of the lands came to us under grant from Congress, the act of July 2, 1864—March 2, 1864. It is the original grant from Congress to the Northern Pacific. The balance of the lands, containing a very small area, however, were lands that were selected with selection rights under the act of July 1, 1898; but principally they were lands that came to us under the original grant.

Q. They were arid lands?—A. They were arid lands; yes, sir.

Q. All of them?—A. Yes, sir; unproductive, without water.

Q. How near were these lands that it appears subsequently your railroad deeded to the Hanford Co. to your railroad?—A. I should say, without knowing, about 40 miles from our nearest point.

Q. What station?—A. At Kennewick. I will have to refer to the map to see——

Q. You may do so.—A. (Continuing.) Whether that—well, I haven't a map that shows that whole district. It may be that the line at North Yakima, running between North Yakima and Ellensburg, is closer to the land than 40 miles.

Q. Your railroad was the nearest railroad to any of that land?—A. No, sir; the Milwaukee is nearer.

Q. Was it in 1905?—A. No; not at that time.

Q. The Milwaukee was——A. (Interrupting.) The Milwaukee was not built and I don't know that it was surveyed at that time.

Q. When was the Milwaukee built?—A. The Milwaukee was built about three years ago.

Q. Through that section?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of there being eight transactions. Explain to the committee what you mean by that.—A. There were eight separate transactions. Some of them—two of them—cover the greater portion of the land sold to the irrigation company, including approximately 21,000 acres of land. The other six—six other transactions—are for small tracts, or rights of way, that were either sold to them direct or else, as in one case, through a Portland party—that is, we sold one of the tracts to a Portland man and he transferred the contract to the irrigation company, and the deed was finally made by the Northern Pacific to the irrigation company.

Q. About how many acres were in that contract?—A. [Witness refers to papers.]

Q. Well, without taking the time for you to look it up, it was less than a hundred?—A. Well, I can give you the exact acreage. [Referring to papers.] That was 80 acres.

Q. Now, Mr. Plummer, reverting to the time when that matter was first called to your attention, I wish you would tell the committee when and who first spoke to you about the proposition of developing that section through irrigation.—A. Judge Hanford first took up the matter of purchase of lands in 1905——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, was it first called to your attention by Judge Hanford or by some one that you supposed had been sent by Judge Hanford?—A. It was first taken up by Mr. Drake—J. C. Drake, of Tacoma. He made an application on behalf of Judge Hanford to——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is that James C. Drake, the present United States marshal at Tacoma?—A. James C. Drake, the present United States marshal.

Q. What was his position then?—A. I am not certain, but I think he was United States marshal at the time.

Q. In 1905?

Mr. Dorr. He was clerk of the court.

A. Well, I beg your pardon.

Mr. Hughes. Clerk of the court?

Mr. Higgins. Clerk of the court; he was not United States marshal.

Mr. Hughes. He was prior to that time United States marshal. At that time I don't think he held any office.

A. Well, that is my mistake. I thought he was still United States marshal.

Mr. Higgins. Have you any acquaintance with Mr. Drake?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you before 1905?—A. Yes, sir; I have known him for 15 years.

Q. Well, what, if anything, did he say to you in reference to making a contract for the sale of these lands?—A. Mr. Drake told me that Judge Hanford wanted to buy two sections of land on the Columbia River, with a view of irrigating them, his plan being to put in a small pumping plant to cover these lands which lie adjoining the river, and can, I think, be irrigated with a very low lift, and I then took up the matter with Judge Hanford direct and told him, by letter dated June 19, 1905——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, did you do that as result of your talk with Mr. Drake?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the suggestion come from him that you communicate with Judge Hanford?—A. I don't remember that; it is seven years ago, and I don't remember, and I have nothing to show in the files whether it was his suggestion or whether I did it of my own volition.

Q. The fact is that you did write Judge Hanford?—A. I did write to Judge Hanford on June 19.

Q. And up to the time you had written that letter you hadn't talked with Judge Hanford about acquiring these lands?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or he with you?—A. No, sir. I had no——

Q. (Interrupting.) And you had received no letter from him?—A. No, sir; not prior to that time.

Q. I wish you would read, if you please, that letter.—A. The letter is dated:

JUNE 19, 1905.

Hon. C. H. HANFORD, Seattle.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Drake has advised me of your desire to purchase that portion of sections 23 and 25, township 13 north, range 27 east, lying west of the Columbia River; but I regret that on account of instructions from our board of directors to withdraw from sale the lands owned by the company in eastern Washington, I am not in position to sell them. Moreover, they lie below the extension of the Sunnyside Irrigation Canal and are a part of a block of lands which we have reserved from sale, expecting that they might be used in connection with that project. I desire, however, to accommodate you in this matter, if it is possible, and am willing to submit the matter to Land Commissioner Cooper, with the request that he ascertain whether or not the board will approve the sale of these sections, and I will be glad also to recommend that he make the sale, though I don't know that this will be of any effect unless the lands are not tied up. However, I shall be glad to do what I can to get released and if possible make a sale. I explained to Mr. Drake that these lands are not particularly valuable in their present condition, and in fact from our examiner's report I should judge they are suitable only for grazing. If you are unacquainted with the character of the soil, I should be glad to let you examine our field notes, from which you can determine whether you care to purchase them. If you expect to call here, please phone me before coming over, as I am frequently out of the city.

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

Q. Do you desire to make any explanation of that letter? If you do, you can at this time.—A. Why, no, sir; excepting that it is our custom always to deal with the original or the real applicant, and so I took the matter up direct with Judge Hanford to find out what his plans were, and did not negotiate any further with Mr. Drake.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford after sending that letter—have a personal talk with him?—A. I don't think I did. There is nothing in the files to show that I had any talk with him. He acknowledged and replied to my letter and confirmed the application made by Mr. Drake in his behalf.

Q. Now, let's see. You want, Mr. Plummer, as I understand you, to preserve your original files?—A. I would like to do that; yes, sir.

Q. Who belong in your office at Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you indicate so that the stenographer may take it, not only read the letter, but read what appears as printed on the letter, indicating where the letter was written—that is, it is on the official stationery of the judge of the district court?—A. The original was——

Q. Dated in the judge's chambers?—A. The original was on the—yes; the original of Judge Hanford's reply, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes.

Q. That is the reply to the letter which you wrote?—A. Yes.

Q. Consequent to Mr. Drake calling on you?—A. Yes, sir; that is on the district judge's official stationery.

Q. Read just what appears as printed on there.—A. This letter is not dated, but it is headed "Chambers of United States district judge, district of Washington. Corner Fourth Avenue and Marion Street, Seattle, Wash."

Q. Read the letter, please.—A. (Reading:)

Mr. G. H. PLUMMER,
Western Land Agent, Northern Pacific Railway Co.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for your letter of the 19th instant, received through my friend, Mr. Drake. In confirmation of his application in my behalf, I will purchase the portions of sections 23 and 25, township 13 north, range 27, on west side of the Columbia River, at $2.50 per acre, if your company will sell the same to me at that price. I have trustworthy information in regard to said lands. It is not very good for grazing and most of it is flooded at times of extreme high water and will never be worth taxes unless some new scheme can be discovered for making it productive. I have a scheme in my head and I want the land to experiment upon. If successful, the railway will be benefited indirectly many times the value of this land. If I fail, the land will be well sold. Therefore I hope that the interest of the company, as well as any desire the officers may have to accommodate me, will prompt them to grant my application.

Yours, truly, C. H. HANFORD.

Q. What followed, in order, in that transaction, with Mr. Cooper?—A. I transmitted that application to Mr. Cooper and advised him of——

Q. (Interrupting.) Have you a copy of the letter which you sent to Mr. Cooper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you read that, Mr. Plummer, let me ask you if you had heard from Mr. Drake or Judge Hanford or from anybody who had called upon you personally to discuss this transaction?—A. Why, so far as the file shows and so far as I can remember, there was no talk with Judge Hanford. I simply——

Q. (Interrupting.) Was there a talk with Mr. Drake?—A. I don't think so; no, sir.

Q. Was there a talk with Mr. Haynes?—A. I don't remember that I knew Mr. Haynes at that time. I don't think Mr. Haynes had anything to do with this transaction.

Q. Was there a talk with Mr. Owens?—A. Not that I remember.

Q. You know Mr. Owens——A. (Interrupting.) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) Who was afterwards the engineer of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that letter of Judge Hanford's, Mr. Plummer, will you tell the committee what is meant by his reference to the desire of the officials of the road to accommodate him or aid him, whatever the language might be there—what that refers to?—A. Why, only that there was a very large district there lying on the west side of the river from Priest Rapids down to Kennewick that had never been developed, and nobody had had the nerve to go in there and experiment with the land with a view—to the extent of spending money on an irrigation plant, and we were very glad to have somebody do that experimenting. That was the interest that we had in mind in encouraging this proposition of Judge Hanford's, that if he would go ahead and make a test of the irrigation possibilities that we would be very glad to assist him. At that time you must remember that irrigation didn't have the standing that it has now; that is, irrigated lands did not have the standing that it has now.

Q. We won't go into that phase of the inquiry just now. Did you know then that Judge Hanford was contemplating considerable development near Priest Rapids? A. Only from what he suggested in this letter, that he had a scheme in his head for a larger development. I don't remember whether it was before or after this letter that I read that I talked with him about the larger project.

Q. Now, this letter refers to a very comparatively small tract, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir; only 795 acres; that is the two sections on the west side of the river that he applied for; that is the first application he made to us and that was made in 1905.

Q. Well, those two sections were necessary in order to control the power at Priest Rapids?—A. No, sir; they had nothing to do with it.

Q. Now, you may read Mr. Cooper's reply.—A. No; my letter to Mr. Cooper.

Q. Oh, your letter to Mr. Cooper, yes.—A. My letter to Mr. Cooper is dated July 13, 1905. (Reading:)

Mr. THOMAS COOPER, Land Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: United States District Judge C. H. Hanford desires to purchase that part of section 23 and 25, township 13–27 east, lying west of the Columbia River, embracing 795.55 acres. He intends to install a pumping plant to irrigate the lands, and seems very anxious to procure them. I have explained to him that these lands lay below the proposed extension of the Sunnyside Canal, which the Reclamation Service is now investigating, and that all of our holdings in that vicinity are held up for that purpose. I desire, however, to accommodate him if it is possible to do so without detriment. In view of the conditions of our holdings in that vicinity, I judge that there will be no objection to selling, providing the lands are not tied up by agreement with the Reclamation Service. You will observe from the map inclosed that we own nothing along the river except sections 3, 23, and 25 in township 13–27, and should we make the agreement with Mr. McKeand referred to for sections 3 and 5 it will still leave the lands left in solid form. I am of the opinion that the lands bordering the river in this vicinity will be irrigated from the river some time to come, as it will be——

Mr. MCCOY (interrupting). Will be or will not be?

A. "Will be." That means that if the lands were developed at all that they would be irrigated from waters from the Columbia River, rather than from an extension of the Sunnyside Canal, which meant the building of possibly 100 miles of ditch.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, "will" is used as synonymous with "must."

A. Yes; might better have been used. (Continuing reading:)

as it will be some years before the canal is constructed, and, moreover, the distance from the ditch to these lands is very great, and it is therefore probable that they will be the last lands under the canal to be irrigated.

That is referring all the time to the extension of the Sunnyside Canal. (Continuing reading:)

In view of the circumstances and the fact that Judge Hanford desires to purchase, I thought that you will give special consideration to the matter. He has offered $2.50 an acre and expects to get the lands at that price.

Then Mr. Cooper wrote back.

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that the close of the letter?

A. That is the close of the letter. I beg your pardon. (Continuing reading:)

Yours, very truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Why did you think he would give special consideration to it?—A. To Judge Hanford's application?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, only because of the fact that he was going ahead with this possible development there to determine the possibilities, and also that I figured that like any other prominent man taking hold of a thing of that kind, that we would be glad to aid him and sell him the lands.

Q. The fact that he was a judge of the United States district court——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir; not at all.

Q. That is what his prominence consisted in largely, wasn't it?—A. Why, not only that; no sir. I have always believed that Judge Hanford was a factor in the upbuilding of this part of the State.

Q. But he had been a judge of the United States district court for 23 years?—A. Yes.

Q. And is now.—A. And had been identified with a good many improvements—matters that were connected with the development of this side of the State, and he was taking hold of the other side.

Q. Well, I will ask you, Mr. Plummer, to state fully just what you meant when you wrote to Mr. Cooper that you thought that special consideration would be given. You may explain as fully as you desire.—A. I have no other explanation to make than that. If it had been any other prominent man, Gov. McGraw or any other man who had been prominent in matters here in Seattle in the development of the city, it would have had exactly the same meaning that I intended here.

Q. How long before that time was it that you sold any land of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in that vicinity?—A. Sold any of the Northern Pacific lands?

Q. In that vicinity; yes.—A. I don't remember that we had made any sales there prior to that time. I can't say, Mr. Higgins. I don't remember what time before that date the last sale had been made.

Q. What is the nearest point to Priest Rapids project at which you had sold lands before that?—A. There was a block of land sold a few miles north of this property, up the river——

Q. When?—A. Sometime before, but I don't remember the date. I think——

Q. (Interrupting.) How large a tract?—A. About five or six sections. I think it was sold before I was made western land agent.

Q. What was the price?—A. I have not any idea.

Q. You never have heard?—A. No, sir; I never had occasion to look it up, and I could not make even a wild guess.

Q. Take up the next letter in order there, Mr. Plummer.—A. The next letter is from Mr. Cooper, in answer to my letter, dated July 18, 1905.

Mr. G. H. PLUMMER,
Western Land Agent, Tacoma, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 13th instant, advising me of the application made by Judge Hanford to purchase that portion of sections 23 and 25, township 13, range 27 east, lying west of the Columbia River, on which he desires to install a pumping plant for irrigating the same. We have agreed with the United States to withhold from sale all of our lands underlying an extension of the Sunnyside Canal until such time as the Reclamation Service has completed its investigations in the Yakima Valley and determined whether it will undertake an irrigation project in said valley under the reclamation law. It is expected that the field investigation will be completed this year and a conclusion reached by the Reclamation Service next year. For the reasons stated, to wit, the agreement that we have made with the United States, we are precluded from considering Judge Hanford's application, which otherwise we would be very pleased to do, and you will please explain to him the situation.

Yours, truly,

THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner.

Q. Did you explain to Judge Hanford the situation?—A. I wrote him a letter.

Q. Well, in the meantime did you have a talk with him?—A. Not that I remember.

Q. Or with Mr. Drake?—A. I don't remember it; no, sir.

Q. Or with anybody that purported to represent Judge Hanford in this transaction?—A. No. sir.

Q. You can't recall——A. (Interrupting.) I don't recall of having had any talk with anyone in connection with it.

Q. You didn't know at this time just what the plans of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. that were in prospect were, did you?—A. I did not; no, sir; and I don't—I don't think that——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, who first explained their plans, Mr. Plummer, to you?—A. My recollection is that Judge Hanford first explained their plans to me.

Q. And where?—A. In my office.

Q. In Tacoma?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present, if anybody, besides you and Judge Hanford?—A. I don't remember.

Q. That was some time subsequent to the letter which you are about to read now, was it?—A. I would like to refer to that next file in connection with that [witness referring to papers]. Yes, sir; this is prior to the time that the Hanford irrigation plans were explained to us.

Q. You may read.—A. This is my letter to Judge Hanford advising him of Mr. Cooper's decision, dated Tacoma, Wash., July 22, 1905.

MY DEAR SIR: I submitted your application to purchase sections 23 and 25, township 13–27 east, to Mr. Cooper, and am advised that on account of the fact that we have agreed with the United States to withhold from sale all of our lands underlying the proposed extension of the Sunnyside Canal, we are precluded from considering your application. This is the question to which I referred in my talk with Mr. Drake, though I was not certain that we had made an agreement with the Government, but Mr. Cooper informs me that the Reclamation Service had arranged to investigate that district with a view to constructing an irrigation canal if a feasible project can be found, and he has agreed to reserve from sale all of our holdings until they have determined whether or not they will undertake a project there. I regret, therefore, that we are not in position to accommodate you in the matter, which under other conditions we should be very much pleased to do.

Yours, very truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

It is addressed to Judge Hanford, Seattle.

Q. You signed that letter, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford subsequent to the writing of that letter? I mean in connection with this transaction.—A. No, sir; I have no recollection, nor have I any notes that would tend to show that I had any talk with him following that letter.

Q. Was that acknowledged by Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Read, the same as you did before, if that is the fact, indicating to the reporter the stationery, etc., that was used—whatever appears printed on the letter.—A. Yes; this is printed on the official stationery of the district judge. Shall I read the heading?

Q. Read it.

A. (Reading:)

CHAMBERS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE,
District of Washington,
Corner Fourth Avenue and Marion Street, Seattle, Wash.

MR. G. H. PLUMMER.
Western Land Agent Northern Pacific Railway Co.

DEAR SIR:

The date is July 25, 1905. [Continuing reading:]

Your favor of the 22d instant received. Although I am disappointed, I wish to thank you for the consideration given to my application. I now renew my application to purchase the same land when your company shall be free from the obligation of the existing agreement with the Reclamation Service. If you will sell me an option I will pay taxes on the land and will enter into a binding agreement to not obstruct or embarrass the Government in any way whatever, and to convey gratis so much of the land as may be required for right of way and for reservoirs, and any other work pertaining to the Government scheme. Presumably the Government does not wish to impede experimental efforts to improve barren land, if protected against hold-ups by speculators and appropriators of water.

Respectfully, C. H. HANFORD.

Q. He refers to what he is willing to do. That had not been referred to in any former letters, as I recall it, that you have read.—A. Yes; I wrote in my letter to Mr. Cooper that he was going to install a pumping plant to irrigate the lands. That was the——

Q. (Interrupting.) After reading that letter, is not your mind refreshed to the extent that you can say that you had at that time some talk with either Judge Hanford or somebody representing him?—A. Only the talk that I had with Mr. Drake when he first made the application.

Q. Did Mr. Drake go into the purposes and objects that the judge wanted the land for?—A. Why, I don't think he did. I am not clear on that.

Q. Did Mr. Drake discuss the terms and conditions?—A. I am not clear about that. There is nothing in the file to show that I had any talk with anyone in connection with it excepting Mr. Drake, and I don't know that he explained the terms. You see, it is seven years now, and I can't remember what the conversation was.

Q. Of course, you understand, Mr. Plummer, that your testimony is confined to the letters. If you can supplement it with your recollection of conversation——A. (Interrupting.) Yes; I would be very glad to give you anything in connection with it that I can remember, but a good deal has transpired since then, and I don't remember the details of it.

Q. What followed the sending of the last letter that you read?—A. In response to that letter from Judge Hanford, I wrote him on July 28, 1905:

HON. C. H. HANFORD,
Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of 25th. I suggest that we leave this matter in its present shape until the end of the year, when, if you will bring the subject up again, I will then advise you what the prospect is of the Reclamation Service entering that field——

Q. (Interrupting.) What is the date of that letter?—A. July 28, 1905. [Continuing reading:]

I will make notation on our plats of our correspondence, but you had better call the matter to our attention, say, January 1 next, when the Reclamation Service will have completed its investigations. It will not be necessary for you to pay the taxes in the meantime. Our agreement with the Reclamation Service is such that we could not grant you an option, and, furthermore, under our rules we are prohibited from entering into agreements of this kind on lands that are otherwise tied up and therefore not in the market. Under other conditions I would be glad to favor you in the matter.

Yours, very truly, WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Did you send a copy of that letter to the general offices of the company?—A. Did I send a copy?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Either to Mr. Levey or to Mr. Cooper?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was the attorney for the Northern Pacific in this section at that time—Mr. Grosscup?—A. B. S. Grosscup, I think.

Q. Up to this time did you confer with him about any legal question that might be involved in this transaction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what followed, either in your recollection or by any correspondence?—A. The next was another letter to Judge Hanford, dated September 4, 1905——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, in the interim didn't you see Judge Hanford?—A. I don't think so. I don't remember—unless there is some reference to a talk with him in this letter; no, sir.

Q. Well, read it.—A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., September 4, 1905.

Hon. C. H. HANFORD, Seattle, Wash.

MY DEAR SIR: I met Mr. Cooper at Spokane on Saturday and discussed with him the question of sale of the two sections in township 13–27 east, and he informed me that although these sections are embraced in the agreement with the Reclamation Service it is unlikely that anything will be done there for some time, and Mr. Cooper thinks that we will be able to get these sections released from the agreement. As already explained to you, the Reclamation Service has asked us to withhold all of our lands, and while we desire to aid them in every way in making their investigations, and to this end have reserved from sale all of our lands, I explained to Mr. Cooper that you expected to install a pumping plant and if successful would irrigate these lands and thus obtain the same results. I have procured from Mr. Cooper authority to make the sale, and he will straighten the matter up with the Reclamation Service, if necessary; therefore you may complete the application blank inclosed herewith and forward to me with amount necessary to cover the first payment, $332, if you desire to purchase same under contract, or if you prefer to pay all cash, the total consideration at $2.50 per acre is $1,988.90. The area of the two sections west of the river is $795.55. I am glad that this matter has been arranged as you desire.

Mr. MCCOY. Seven hundred and ninety-five acres?

The CHAIRMAN. Acres and hundredths of acres?

A. 795.55 acres.

Mr. MCCOY. You said dollars.

A. Beg your pardon, it should be acres. (Continuing reading:)

I am glad that this matter has been arranged—

you have got that.

Yours, truly, WESTERN LAND AGENT.

A copy of that was furnished Mr. Drake. The——

Q. (Interrupting.) Why did you send the copy to Mr. Drake?—A. Merely because he had taken up the matter in the first place with us.

Q. More than once?—A. I don't know whether Mr. Drake spoke to me about it afterwards or not, I can't remember that. There is nothing in the files to show whether he did or did not.

Q. About how often does Mr. Cooper, your general land agent, come to Tacoma in the ordinary course of the administration of the railroad's affairs?—A. He comes not at stated periods at all; sometimes three or four months elapses, and sometimes six months.

Q. Had you seen Mr. Cooper with Judge Hanford about that time?—A. I don't remember that, and I don't think so. I don't think they——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, at the Tacoma Hotel or elsewhere, had you talked with Judge Hanford when Mr. Cooper was present?—A. There was one meeting—one conference that we had, Mr. Cooper and I with Judge Hanford, at the Tacoma Hotel, sometime in 1906 I think it was, along in May, 1906.

Q. When did you arrange as to the price for this acreage? It was $2.50 an acre as you state in your letter to Judge Hanford.—A. The price of $2.50 an acre was suggested by Judge Hanford in the letter which I read, and that offer was transmitted to Mr. Cooper and was accepted by him.

Q. That was the price suggested by Judge Hanford that he would pay?—A. That he would pay; yes, sir.

Q. And that price was acceptable to the company?—A. Yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. And in consequence of that letter to Judge Hanford the transaction was closed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a contract of sale, agreement for deed was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between the Northern Pacific Railway Co. and Judge Hanford?—A. Yes, sir.

G. Have you another letter at hand there that was written by Judge Hanford?—A. The next letter was written by Judge Hanford inclosing the application——

Q. (Interrupting.) I wish you would not only indicate the style of the letter written by Judge Hanford, but also in copies which you have in your files showing when copies were sent to Mr. Elliott and Mr. Cooper. There are in some of your copies such notations, are there not?—A. There are some letters that copies were sent to—no; that letter that you refer to. that copy was sent to Mr. Elliott, was written by Mr. Cooper when he was on the coast and he sent a copy to Mr. Elliott.

Q. Yes; I was in error about that. That was Mr. Cooper's letter.—A. Yes; that was Mr. Cooper's letter. But I never sent copies of any of the letters to Mr. Elliott. I may have sent some to Mr. Cooper.

Mr. Hughes. Does that refer to the letter of Mr. Cooper already mentioned or some other letter?

A. No, sir; that is another letter, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HIGGINS. A subsequent letter.

Mr. HUGHES. You were about to read Judge Hanford's reply.

A. Judge Hanford's reply was dated September 7, 1905. [Reading:]

Mr. G. H. PLUMMER, Western Land Agent, N. P. Railway Co.

SIR: Your favor of the 4th instant received and I thank you for favorable action on my application. I return herewith the formal application to purchase parts of sections 23 and 25, township 13 north, range 27 east, and my check for first payment amounting to $332. A scheme is now being promoted to organize a company with sufficient capital to install a large pumping plant to raise water from the Columbia River to irrigate a district which will include this land. If the organization shall be completed this fall, with stockholders and officers worthy of confidence, I will make a contract with them for water; otherwise I will install a pump for experimental use next spring.

Yours, truly,

C. H. HANFORD.

Q. That is on the official paper, the same as the other letters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I will ask you now the general question whether all the correspondence that you had with Judge Hanford relative to his purchase of railroad lands was on the official stationery, indicating it was written in the judge's chambers of the United States district court at Seattle?—A. I can't say that without looking through the entire files. I didn't note that as I went through.

Q. I will ask you to indicate it as you read Judge Hanford's letters.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The examination will show it to be the fact, as near as I have been able to examine the files.—A. All right. With that letter was an application for the purchase of the lands, and subsequently a contract was entered into in the name of Cornelius H. Hanford for the lands in question, providing for the payment in six installments.

Q. Was that the usual contract for the sale of such lands?—A. That is our usual five-year contract plan.

Q. Was there anything unusual in the contract different than the Northern Pacific Railway Co. ordinarily made for the sale of such land?—A. No, sir; it is on the regular printed form.

Q. A general form?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That contract was paid up in full, however, before it matured and was assigned on December 5, 1906, to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., as to the lands in section 25–13–27 east, and the deed was issued to the irrigation company, dated December 10, 1906.

Mr. HUGHES. For the land in 25?

A. For the lands in section 25 only.

Mr. HUGHES. Pardon me; may I just interrupt?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. What other lands, what other sections, were embraced in that contract?

A. Two sections, 23 and 25.

Q. Twenty-three and twenty-five. I had it 23 and 5.—A. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will you furnish, Mr. Plummer, to the committee, at the hotel, at the Washington Annex, sending it to Mr. Graham, a copy of that contract, when you reach Tacoma?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And certify to its being correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Reference is made in that letter of Judge Hanford's—the last letter which you read—to a scheme for irrigation. Did you then know what that was?—A. I don't remember, but I think that is the first intimation we had of the plan to organize a larger company.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Plummer, that was called to your attention either about that time or a little later in some other way than by that letter, was it not?—A. That is the first mention we have in the files of the formation of the larger company.

Q. Well, now, apart from the files, what is your recollection as to when and who first called the plan of the Hanford Irrigation Co. to your attention?—A. My recollection is that the plans were first outlined to me by Judge Hanford at the time he made the application for the purchase of the large block of lands, about 12,000 acres. That is my best recollection.

Q. Now, I have inquired of you, Mr. Plummer, as to the first contract that was made by Judge Hanford with the Northern Pacific Railway Co. for these lands. If there is any other fact that you desire to state in connection with the letters which you have read, I wish you would do so, and all facts which you can recall now with reference to this one transaction, either of talks that you had with Judge Hanford personally or Mr. Drake or with anybody else?—A. It is not likely that I had any talk with Judge Hanford about this sale. It was an unimportant matter compared with the larger trade——

Q. (Interrupting.) But did you then know at the time that there was to be a larger trade?—A. No, sir; no, sir. It was merely the matter of sale of a couple of sections, with a promise on Judge Hanford's part that he would install a pumping system.

Q. But that was to be an experimental system?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And very small?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the nature of not a large development in any sense at all?—A. No, sir; merely an experiment to see whether the land could be irrigated at a reasonable cost.

Q. Well, was that a suggestion that one corporation would do the irrigating and another corporation develop the land, provided his experiment proved successful?—A. I don't know as I understand that question. What is that?

Q. Was it suggested to you when Judge Hanford told you of his plans to carry on an experimental irrigation plant that if his plans to carry on that experimental irrigation plant were successful that it might be feasible to carry on a development there which would develop a very much larger area of the Northern Pacific lands than he had purchased?—A. Why, I don't think the larger proposition was taken up with us nor considered at that time—at the time this sale of the two sections was made—and I don't know whether the judge had any plans for larger development in mind at all.

Q. Or whether anybody else did?—A. Nor anybody else; no, sir.

Q. Have you told the committee all you know about the way that the first tract of land was acquired?—A. Yes; I have told you all I remember about that transaction.

Q. Will you hand Mr. Hughes the file which you have just been reading, in order that he may look it over, in case he wants to ask you any questions in reference to it?—A. Yes. [Witness handing file to Mr. Hughes.]

The committee here took a short recess.

GEORGE H. PLUMMER on the stand.

Mr. HIGGINS. When did Judge Hanford and Mr. Copper, with you, if at all, talk about the acquiring of a larger tract of land?

A. As near as I can recollect that was in 1906. [Examining papers.]

Q. Well, did they talk with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. In Tacoma.

Q. What was said?

Witness examines papers.

Q. Can't you give your recollection without——A. (Interrupting.) My recollection is that Judge Hanford outlined to us the plans that he then had in mind for forming the large company for the irrigation of about 25,000 acres of land below a feasible lift, and in connection therewith the construction of a power plant, which was afterwards carried out.

Q. What was said by Judge Hanford at that meeting as to getting additional lands from your company?—A. He told us that if he went ahead with his plans he would want to acquire the lands owned by our company below the canal.

Mr. HUGHES. Below the proposed canal, you mean?

A. Below the proposed canal.

Mr. HIGGINS. When was the appointment, or how was the appointment made for you and Judge Hanford and Mr. Cooper to meet to discuss this matter?

A. I don't remember that, but it is probable that I told Judge Hanford that Mr. Cooper would be in Tacoma on a certain date and suggested that he arrange to meet us at that time.

Q. Well, that suggests that you had before that had some talk with Judge Hanford about this same matter.—A. Very likely.

Q. What did Mr. Cooper say in response to Judge Hanford's suggestion that he wanted some more railroad land to carry out his irrigation project?—A. That is contained in a letter——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, apart from the letter, won't you give me your recollection of it? We will have the letter later on.—A. No, I can't, Mr. Higgins, I can——

Q. (Interrupting.) For how long a time did the interview last?—A. I don't remember that, but it was quite short.

Q. Was an arrangement made at that interview for a subsequent meeting with Mr. Cooper?—A. No, sir: I don't think so. As I recollect it, Mr. Cooper told Judge Hanford that when he had his plans perfected to take the matter up with me and agree with me upon the lands to be sold to the irrigation company and to try if possible to reach an agreement as to price, all of which was to be submitted to Mr. Cooper for his approval, and possibly that of the president.

Mr. HUGHES. Possibly that of what, did you say?

Mr. HIGGINS. Possibly that of the president.

The WITNESS. Possibly that of the president.

Mr. HIGGINS. Had you discussed with Mr. Levey at that time the matter of the sale of these lands to Judge Hanford?

A. I don't think so; no, sir.

Q. You did, however, subsequently?—A. I did later; yes, sir.

Q. Now, I wish you would fix the date, if you found the letter that you were looking for—the date of that meeting of Mr. Cooper and Judge Hanford and yourself?—A. (After examining.) I have no record in the file, but it is probable that it was some time prior to January 22, 1906, because Mr. Cooper wrote to Judge Hanford from St. Paul advising him of his conference with the officials of the Reclamation Service.

Q. We will take that letter up and have it read in the regular time. That is the way you fix the date after looking through your letter file?—A. That is the way I fix the date, yes.

Mr. HUGHES. What is that date?

A. January 22, sometime prior to that date.

Mr. HIGGINS. Before that time, not after that time. How are you able to say that it was at the Tacoma Hotel?

A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Why do you say it?—A. I don't know. There were two meetings that Mr. Cooper and I had with Judge Hanford, one at the Tacoma Hotel and one in my office, but I can't say which one. They were two about two years apart, as I recollect it.

Q. Neither do you want to say that those were the only two meetings that you had with Judge Hanford about just at that time, do you?—A. That is all that I remember that we had with—that is Mr. Cooper and I had with Judge Hanford.

Q. How did you happen to call upon Judge Hanford at his chambers in the Federal building?—A. As I recollect it it was on account of the fact that the Reclamation Service wanted to know——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, it was with reference to this project, was it?—A. Oh, yes; yes, sir; with reference to this project, and had——

Q. (Interrupting.) You also met Judge Hanford on occasions at the Rainier Club?—A. I simply—I didn't meet him there—I simply saw him there.

Q. Well, you saw him there?—A. That is all.

Q. And discussed this matter with him there?—A. No, sir; I don't believe that I ever discussed it—discussed the matter with him there.

Q. Well, he called also at your office a number of times——A. (Interrupting.) And he called at my office; yes, sir.

Q. As you have testified. Now, you may read the letter that you have indicated that opens the transaction for the acquiring of 12,690 acres. Is that correct?—A. 12,690.05 acres. [Reading.]

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 22, 1906.

Judge C. H. HANFORD, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I was at Washington, D. C., last week, and there discussed with the officials of the Reclamation Service and the Washington congressional delegation the entire situation with reference to irrigation projects in the State of Washington. The situation now is that the Secretary has approved the Teton project; also the purchase of the Sunnyside Canal, conditional that a satisfactory adjustment of water rights in the valley is effected; also that the claim of the State to the Carey lands is disposed of either by the State withdrawing its claim or by an adverse ruling of the Secretary——

Q. (Interrupting.) The Carey lands refers to the Carey Act?—A. Yes, sir; lands under the Carey Act which the State had previously selected. [Continuing reading:]

Provided these conditions are met, the Reclamation Service will commence in the Yakima Valley, and ultimately, when funds are available, they will undoubtedly take up and construct the Leadbetter Canal, and will also construct the necessary storage reservoirs on the Yakima and its tributaries.

I should say here that—this is not in the letter, but I should say in regard to the Leadbetter Canal that that is a canal that was designed to divert the water from the Yakima River at a point near Prosser and bring it around the easterly end of the Rattlesnake Hills and to cover all of the lands lying between the Columbia and the Yakima Rivers and including these lands that now lie below the Hanford Canal, and it was in connection with that that we reserved all of these lands, at the request of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. HUGHES. Would that include all of the lands below the lower ditch, or only those south of ——— Mountain?

A. That includes all of the lands below the Hanford project.

Q. Including that 20,000 acres?—A. Including the 25,000 acres under their canal that is already constructed.

Mr. HIGGINS. You mean the 25,000 acres that was subsequently acquired by the Hanford Co.?

A. Well, they didn't acquire all of the 25,000 acres; they acquired 12,000 of it from us, and the balance were the lands that did not come to us. We got, of course, only odd sections——

Q. (Interrupting.) The balance of them were school lands?—A. No, sir; the balance were Government lands, but the school lands only constituted one-sixteenth of the total. The school lands are sections 16 and 36 in each township—only got 2 sections out of 36 under the enabling act.

Q. You don't understand that the Hanford project included any Government land, do you?—A. No; they could not acquire the Government lands. The only way the Government lands could be acquired was by settlement under the homestead law or the desert act, under which they could be taken up by actual settlers.

Mr. DORR. I think some of those lands were granted lands for normal-school purposes, as distinguished from the school lands, sections 16 and 32, that the witness is referring to.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, that is a matter we have no——

A. (Interrupting.) That is something——

Mr. HIGGINS (continuing). Information about.

A. (Continuing.) That I have no information about.

Q. And had nothing to do with?—A. No, sir.

Q. And neither did the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?—A. No, sir; not a thing.

Q. Continue with your letter.—A. (Continuing reading:)

If, however, the conditions referred to are not met, then the Reclamation Service wish to take up the Priest Rapids project, covering both sides of the river, that being the only other project in the State of Washington that they consider at all feasible. Therefore the Reclamation Service desire us to withhold any disposition of any of our lands that would be affected by the Priest Rapids project until it is determined whether that project will be taken up, which in turn will be determined by whether the conditions in the Yakima Valley are met or not met.

My understanding is that the adjustment of water rights in the Yakima Valley is well in hand and in all likelihood will be disposed of within a very short time, and I also understand that the State land commissioner is now in Washington in the interests of the State with reference to the Carey lands, and that that question will also be disposed of shortly. My judgment, from all I heard in Washington, would be that the conditions as to the Yakima Valley projects will be met within a short time and the work commenced. If I am correct, then the United States will do nothing with the Priest Rapids project at this time and probably not for many years to come. As long as the Reclamation Service has determined that it will not take up the Priest Rapids project, we have concluded to deal with your company with reference to our lands underlying your project, accepting the fact that the sale to your company of these lands will take away some acreage that would be covered by the Leadbetter Canal, but it is not considered serious because of the large acreage that will be left and because of the location of the lands under your your project. The question of price and terms upon which we will sell the lands to your company has not been determined, as it was thought best to leave that for negotiation between your company and western land agent Plummer. It might be well, in order to save time, for your company to take up that question with Mr. Plummer now, in anticipation that the United States will not go on with the Priest Rapids project, and Mr. Plummer will be advised to deal with your company accordingly.

Yours, very truly,

THOMAS COOPER, Land Commissioner.

After reading that letter, if your recollection is refreshed at all as to what was discussed in your meeting with Mr. Cooper and Judge Hanford?—A. Yes; we no doubt discussed and explained fully to Judge Hanford the situation regarding our agreement with the Reclamation Service, which was explained that we——

Q. (Interrupting.) I don't care to have you repeat the letter, but any fact which the letter does not state that is recalled to your mind?

A. No, sir; I don't remember anything else.

Q. Well, did Judge Hanford explain to you in detail just what he proposed in his irrigation company?—A. I don't know that he did.

Q. Did he state who were interested with him in that company?—A. I don't remember that; no, sir.

Q. Did he indicate to you in any way how he proposed to finance it, or what his general scheme of promotion was?—A. No, sir; he might have stated that he proposed to take in some moneyed men here—local men that would put up the money to put this through—which was afterwards done.

Q. You know, then, as a matter of fact, that the company was formed a long time before the date of that letter?—A. I don't know when the company was formed.

Q. That is a fact?—A. It is a fact. I didn't know that. I didn't know that.

Q. When did you talk with Judge Hanford after that letter which you have just read? Let me see that file.

Witness hands file of papers to counsel.

Q. Are you able to answer my last question, Mr. Plummer?—A. Not without referring to the file; no, sir.

Q. Well, here is a letter from Mr. Cooper to you, dated January 22, 1906. Read that in the record [handing papers to witness].—A. (Reading:)

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 22, 1906.

Mr. D. H. PLUMMER, Western Land Agent, Tacoma, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith copy of letter to Judge Hanford which explains itself. If this company desires to take up negotiations with you on price and terms of our land that will be covered by their project you may proceed to do so. As to price, that properly should be determined by what they can afford to pay, taking into account the cost of watering the lands and their value when watered. As to this I have no information whatever, so that I can not even make a suggestion. I am satisfied, however, that the company would not care to sell these lands at less than $2.50 per acre, and I should hope it would figure out so that we could get at least twice that price and as much more as they will stand. You will, of course, understand that the price must finally be approved by the executive committee. Discuss the matter fully with Mr. Levy and keep him advised of the negotiations.

Yours truly,

THOMAS COOPER, Land Commissioner.

Q. Who was the executive committee then of the Northern Pacific Railroad?—A. Well, that is something I don't know. I think, however, that Col. Clough was chairman of that committee and Mr. Lamont, I am not sure.

Mr. McCOY. What Mr. Lamont?

A. Daniel S. Lamont. He was vice president of the Northern Pacific at that time.

Mr. HIGGINS. When did you subsequently learn more in detail as to the plans of the Hanford Irrigation Co.?

A. I can't tell that without looking at the files.

Q. Approximate it?—A. I think following that letter I took up the matter with Judge Hanford, or else he took it up with me—no, I first got from Mr. Haynes, as I recollect it, without refreshing my memory, a plat showing the lands that they would be able to irrigate from their proposed system, and then took up the matter with——

Q. (Interrupting.) Is that the letter of January 23 that you got from Mr. Haynes, dated Seattle, January 23, 1906, addressed to you and signed by Mr. Haynes—is that the letter you referred to [handing letter to witness]?—A. That letter is addressed to Mr. Cooper and signed by Mr. Haynes.

Q. Yes; I am in error about this, it is addressed to Mr. Cooper.—A. Yes, sir; I think that was the next letter in the progress of the negotiations.

Q. Won't you read that letter, Mr. Plummer.—A. (Reading:)

SEATTLE, January 23, 1906.

Mr. THOMAS COOPER, Land Commissioner, N. P. Railway Co., St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Your letter to Judge Hanford regarding his application dated November 4, for Northern Pacific lands below described, has been referred to me, Judge Hanford requesting me to supply you with further information regarding the purposes of our company. Our company is organized for the purpose of irrigating lands on the banks of the Columbia River by hydroelectric power, and the company intends to increase its power capacity and extend its business, as the demand increases, to the lands in the valley of the Columbia River, possibly to a distance of 100 miles. Similar power plants to the one which we intend to build have been built and operated successfully in California until the business has grown to the extent that according to Government reports four times the area is under irrigation by power than was formerly irrigated by gravity. Nowhere can conditions be found more favorable for this business than is afforded by the water power of Priest Rapids and the rich lands lying within an easy lift on the banks of the Columbia River. The water power on which our company has filed is ample for purposes of irrigating all lands for which application has been made, and sufficient over to transmit to the thickly settled Yakima Valley, Sunnyside, Prosser, and Kennewick District. Later it is the intention of the company to promote and operate electric railroads. It is not our intention to in any way embarrass the operations of the Reclamation Service Applications for these lands were not made until Engineer Noble, of the Reclamation Service, told the writer that the Government would not consider a reclamation scheme on the west bank of the Columbia River, the Government not being empowered to sell power commercially, and their estimates of the cost of this project were too high to be considered. Hoping that these additional facts may aid you and hasten favorable action on our application, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

M. B. HAYNES, Secretary.

Q. That is addressed to Mr. Cooper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how it happened that Mr. Haynes should write that letter to Mr. Cooper after Mr. Cooper had in a former letter referred the matter to you?—A. No; I don't, except that I presume he wanted to advise Mr. Cooper of their plans, as he has done in that letter. The only matter that he was to take up with me was——

Q. (Interrupting.) Had he talked with you at that time?—A. I don't remember about that. I don't think so; no, sir.

Q. Your recollection of just what occurred, Mr. Plummer, is limited to the correspondence that you had at that time?—A. Very much. Very much, Mr. Higgins. I have—as I say, it is a good many years since this happened, and I don't remember much of the details, but the details are all in this file; the correspondence had between Mr. Cooper and myself is very complete.

Q. You can't explain to the committee how Mr. Haynes wrote that letter to Mr. Cooper——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) When Mr. Cooper had left the matter with you to investigate?—A. No; I can not.

Q. When was it that you made some investigation as to the financial resources of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. That was a long time after the negotiations started. The investigation, or rather the inquiries, that I made were with a view of determining whether or not they were going to be able to carry out that feature of the contract which required the construction of the canal within a certain time, and the expenditure of $200,000 on the irrigation project. The contract contained such a provision, which was made a part of the consideration.

Q. That is, you were subsequently advised of who was financially interested in the Hanford Irrigation Co., and you made, from those that you understood were financially interested in the company, inquiries as to its responsibility?—A. Yes, sir; I talked with Mr. Michael Earle and also W. R. Rust at Tacoma, both of whom were stockholders.

Q. Who is W. R. Rust?—A. He is the manager of the Tacoma Smelting Co.

Q. Did he tell you that he was a stockholder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got your information from him?—A. The information I got from him at the time was——

Q. (Interrupting.) No; but you got your information as to his holding stock from him, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who from?—A. My remembrance is that Mr. Haynes told me who the parties were interested in the project.

Q. Did he submit to you a list of the stockholders?—A. Not that I remember; no, sir.

Q. It appears that on January 27, 1906, Mr. Cooper replied to Mr. Haynes's letter, that being dated at St. Paul. I want you to read that.—A. (Reading:)

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 27, 1906.

MR. MANLEY B. HAYNES,
15 Schuerman Block, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 23d instant, in reference to the Priest Rapids irrigation project. As I explained in my letter to Judge Hanford, we can do nothing definite about this until the United States has decided whether it will take up the Priest Rapids project or not, but I suggested in my letter that in order to save time you might take up the negotiations as to price and terms of sale, if one is made, with Mr Plummer, and this I think you had better do unless you prefer to wait until we are in a position to say definitely that we will sell.

Yours truly,

THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner.

Mr. Cooper sent me a copy of that letter.

Q. That appears on the letter which you have just read?—A. Yes, sir; it says "this is copy to Mr. Plummer with copy of Mr. Haynes's letter, to which there is a reply attached."

Mr. McCOY. What was the date of the letter in which Mr. Haynes said that he had been satisfied on inquiries of some Government official?

Mr. HUGHES. January 23.

A. That was January 23, 1906.

Mr. McCOY. That was a letter to Mr. Cooper?

A. That was a letter to Mr. Cooper, to which this letter which I have just read was a reply.

Mr. HIGGINS. Have you then had a talk with the Hanford Co.'s engineer?

A. No, sir; I don't think so.

Q. Here is a letter, which I will ask you to read, from Manley B. Haynes, 15 Sheurman Block, First and Cherry, Seattle, giving date February 3.—A. Dated:

FEBRUARY 3, 1906.

D. H. PLUMMER, Northern Pacific Land Office, Tacoma.

DEAR SIR: Judge Hanford wishes me to let you know that he will be in Tacoma on Monday, and wishes to call on you while there.

Yours, truly,

M. B. HAYNES.

Q. Did you answer that letter?—A. (After examining paper.) Apparently not; no, sir.

Q. Well, did Judge Hanford call on you as a result of that letter, or whether or not as a result of it, as a matter of fact he called on you at about that time?—A. It appears that neither Judge Hanford nor Mr. Haynes called on me, but——

Q. Well, did you call on him at Seattle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or at Tacoma?—A. No, sir; I don't think so—because there is a letter—the next letter is——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, without reference to the letters which you have before you, are you able to state you saw at about that time and discussed this project with him?—A. I am not able to say; no, sir.

Q. Well, do you know whether you did at any time?—A. And discussed with him. Now, just wait a moment. Let me go back here. [Examining paper.] I did discuss the matter with Judge Hanford some time between February 3 and February 12, 1906. In my letter to Mr. Cooper of the latter date——

Q. (Interrupting.) Well, where did you have this talk with him?—A. Presumably in my office.

Q. Well, can't you——A. (Interrupting.) I can't say that.

Q. (Continuing.) Divorce yourself for a moment from your letters, and see if you can't recall——A. (Interrupting.) No, sir; I could not.

Q. (Continuing.) A prominent citizen calling on you on a project of this kind?—A. No, sir; we have a good many prominent citizens calling at my office, and this is six years ago. I can't tell.

Q. Not a good many Federal judges, however?—A. No, sir; we have a good many prominent citizens calling.

Q. (Continuing.) In Seattle and this section. Well, you are not able to state that——A. (Interrupting.) No, I am not, Mr. Higgins. Evidently we got together, because on February 12, 1906, I wrote Mr. Cooper that I had discussed the matter with Judge Hanford.

Q. Well, inasmuch as you have got along, we will leave it until after dinner and discuss it further.—A. All right.

Q. If you will allow me to take your files.

Adjournment was taken until 7.30.

EVENING SESSION.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to recess. All parties present as at former hearing. Same witness on the stand; examination resumed as follows:

Mr. Higgins. Just before the recess, Mr. Plummer, I called your attention to a letter from Mr. Haynes to you asking for an appointment for Judge Hanford to talk with you, and as I recall it you fixed, approximately, some time after that that Judge Hanford did see you about these lands; now I want you to state to the committee what was said and done at that meeting.

A. I met Judge Hanford, but I do not remember whether it was at my office or elsewhere. But at that meeting we discussed the matter of the price of the lands that were—a list of which was given me by Mr. Haynes, and as I recollect it an agreement was reached on a price of $10 per acre for the lands that were irrigable from the proposed canal and $3 per acre on the lands that were nonirrigable, either on account of the character of the soil or because of the fact that they were above gravity irrigation—that is, irrigation by gravity from the ditch. There was then left to be determined——

Q. Before you get on that, how did you determine whether the lands were irrigable or not?—A. That was to be determined by a joint examination to be made by representatives of the two parties, as I recollect it.

Q. Who was to represent the railroad in that examination?—A. Sir?

Q. Who was to represent the railroad in that examination?—A. Well, that examination was not made, but it was intended at the time that I should appoint an examiner to go over and look over the lands and classify them into the two classes, the irrigable and nonirrigable lands.

Q. Did you have in your employ an engineer for that purpose?—A. He is not an engineer, but I have a man who is very familiar with irrigation and irrigated lands.

Q. Who was the man that you intended to make that examination at the time of your talk to Judge Hanford?—A. Well, I do not know. I have two or three men, but it is probable that I should have put Mr. Benson on that work if he had been available.

Q. And whom did you understand was to represent the Hanford Co.?—A. I do not know, as we did not get to that point where the joint examination was to be made. I do not know that they appointed a man, at least there was no man appointed for the purpose, because we found another method of classifying the lands without having the joint examination made.

Q. But you knew who their engineer was, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. At that time had you had any talk with him?—A. I do not think I had.

Q. Who was he?—A. I think Mr. Owens—Henry K. Owens—was engineer at the time.

Q. At that time had you made any inquiry as to the financial responsibility of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. Didn't you satisfy yourself of their ability to perform any contract that they signed with you before you had finally concluded to recommend that a contract be made?—A. No, sir; we were satisfied from the—from Judge Hanford's statement to us that he was able to go ahead and complete the ditch, that he could do so, and the fact that he was willing to agree to have a clause put in the contract that if he did not construct the ditch and spend $200,000 within a certain time that he should forfeit the contract, and the money that he had paid was evidence, satisfactory evidence to us, that he was—that he had made such arrangements as would enable him to go ahead.

Q. That is to say, you considered the sale of the land upon his personal statement?—A. Yes, sir; and the fact that he was willing——

Q. Now, upon any representations which he made to you as to the responsibility of the people whom he proposed to associate with him in the company?—A. We did not look into that matter.

Q. What led your company, Mr. Plummer, if you know, to finally conclude to dispose of this 12,000 acres?—A. The fact that the company was willing to go ahead and construct the ditch, place the lands under irrigation, and offer them for sale, and——

Q. Well, so far as your knowledge went and so far as you know as to the knowledge of any of your associates in the Northern Pacific Railway Co. were concerned, they had no assurance of the ability to do that except Judge Hanford's willingness to undertake it?—A. And the fact that he was ready to pay the first payment, which was quite a large amount, and also that he was willing to submit to a clause in the contract that they would spend $200,000 within the limited time, which was two years—if you will allow me to look at that contract——

Q. What was the means to be taken by the Northern Pacific Railroad to check up the expenditure on the irrigation plant to determine whether or not $200,000 was spent?—A. They were required, under the contract, to spend within two years from the date of the contract $200,000, and when the time came when the two years had elapsed, or about that time, I called upon them for a statement of the work that they had done, and I had kept in touch with the work; my examiners were in that vicinity from time to time and they reported to me on the progress of the work and I had a recollection that the Reclamation Service, or rather one of the engineers of the Reclamation Service, had been in that vicinity, and I think I had a talk with him about it.

Q. Who was it?—A. Mr. D. C. Heney.

Q. From where?—A. His headquarters were in Portland.

Q. Oregon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he now connected with the Reclamation Service?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. His office is in Portland, but he is not connected with the Reclamation Service. I do not know what his business is now—whether he is connected with any other concern or not.

Q. What phase of the matter did you discuss with him at that time?—A. The work that had been done, and I also talked with him about the—now let me see—at that time I was going to say that I talked with him about the relinquishment of the lands by the Reclamation Service; but that was before that time; it was not at that conference that I had with him that I discussed that matter.

Q. To enable your road to make this contract with the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., did the Reclamation Service have to make some releases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now was that release evidenced by assignment?—A. No, sir; it was a release that was made by Director Newell.

Q. Is that recorded in the auditor's office?—A. No, sir.

Q. As a deed of real estate would be?—A. No, sir; it was not necessary, because the arrangement we had with them was an agreement whereby we were to reserve all of our lands within districts that the Reclamation Service was investigating with the view of possible irrigation, and they had a blanket agreement that covered all of our lands, no matter where located, that we knew the Reclamation Service was engaged in examination work.

Q. Did you take that matter up yourself with the Chief of the Reclamation Bureau in order to get it released?—A. No, sir; Mr. Cooper did.

Q. You mean your general land agent?—A. Our land commissioner.

Q. And that is what he refers to in his letter about having been in Washington conferring with Mr. Newell?—A. Yes, sir; and I think there is a copy of Mr. Newell's letter in the file in which he stated that the Reclamation Service had decided not to construct a canal there.

Q. Suppose you find it and read that at this point, if it is there.—A. I do not see it in this file.

Q. Can you supply it?—A. I think it is probably in the other file; I will see [examining file]. I do not see it. That was done about the first part of April, for I have a telegram here from Mr. Cooper dated April 3, 1906, in which he says——

Q. Read the telegram just as it is in the evidence.—A. (Reading:)

ST. PAUL, April 3, 1906.

G. H. PLUMMER, Tacoma:

No reason, so far as Reclamation Service is concerned, why you should not go ahead and make deal with Judge Hanford subject to approval. What is the status of negotiations?

Q. That is dated Washington, D. C.?—A. No, sir; that is St. Paul. I am quite sure there is a copy of a letter from Director Newell in this file, but I am not able to locate it.

Q. Without taking any more time now, Mr. Plummer—if you find it after you get back to your office I wish you would be good enough to send the committee a copy of it.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To go back to the meeting you had with Judge Hanford after you had received the letter from Mr. Haynes requesting an appointment for Judge Hanford, as I understand you, Judge Hanford then explained what he proposed to do.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did not at that time indicate to you any persons who were associated with him in the project?—A. I do not remember that he did.

Q. The result of that talk was that the irrigable land was to be sold at $10 an acre and the nonirrigable at $3 an acre.—A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you in your files a letter that follows that in sequence?—A. I have a letter which I wrote Mr. Cooper explaining my conversation and the agreement that I made with Judge Hanford, subject to approval.

Q. Did you at that meeting make an agreement?—A. Yes, sir; I reached an agreement.

Q. Have you a copy of the agreement which you then reached with him?—A. No, sir; that was not put in writing, except in the form of my letter to Mr. Cooper.

Q. That agreement was subject to the approval of Mr. Cooper?—A. Yes.

Q. In your letter to him after you talked to Judge Hanford that is the only memorandum you have of that agreement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you read the letter?—A. I will read the letter. This is dated:

TACOMA, WASH., February 12, 1906.

Mr. THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of January 22 about sale of lands in Yakima County to Judge Hanford, in discussing the matter with him in a preliminary way I named a price of $10 an acre for the good lands below the ditch and $3 per acre for lands not irrigable, with which will be included any lands too rocky for irrigation and those lying above the ditch. They informed me that out of a total of 32,000 acres commanded from the 100-foot lift, about 7,000 acres are waste lands or too high to be reached. These figures included, of course, the entire area and did not refer to N. P. ownership only. They are to furnish me a map showing surveys, from which I will figure the exact area owned by us. The price of $10 per acre may seem high, but I found that their estimate of cost of placing water on the land is $15 per acre, and they can at this rate afford to pay our price. Their estimate is probably too low, but any cost less than $25 per acre will warrant an expenditure of $10 for the land. It is probable that they will ask us to enter into a contract which will be conditional upon the Reclamation Service deciding not to take up a project to irrigate the same lands, and this will be submitted for approval later. In the meantime our negotiations are subject to your approval.

Yours, truly.

Q. I notice in that letter that you use the language "They informed me" and "they are to furnish me." Whom did you refer to?—A. The irrigation company.

Q. Had you then had any talk with anybody except Judge Hanford about the irrigation company?—A. I may have talked with Mr. Haynes, but I do not remember it. It is possible that I talked with him in connection with the list and the map that he furnished me, but I do not remember that.

Q. Don't you think, Mr. Plummer, that you talked with Mr. Haynes later on with reference to the purchase of 8,000 acres lying east of the river?—A. It may be. I think that I discussed this matter of this sale with Mr. Haynes also, but I am not sure about it.

Q. That is, you think you discussed the sale of the land at this time, west of the river, with Mr. Haynes?—A. These lands are all west of the river; all of them.

Q. Well, did Mr. Haynes call on you, either with Judge Hanford or with Mr. Owens or with anybody else, about the purchase of 8,000 acres east of the river?—A. Why, no; not at this time. The sale of the 9,000 acres came two years later, and was not discussed at all at this time.

Q. Well, that is west of the river?—A. All the lands are west and south of the river.

Q. The 9,000 acres which you refer to were west of the river?—A. Both the 9,000 and the 12,000 are west of the river.

Q. Don't you know that the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. were considering the purchase of lands east of the river?—A. On the east side of the river?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not remember if they were.

Q. You are not able to say whether or not they called on you—by using the word "they" I mean either Judge Hanford or Mr. Haynes or Mr. Owens or anybody that represented themselves to be interested in the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—calling on you for the purchase of 8,000 acres of land on the east side of the river?—A. Well, it is possible; it has slipped my memory if they did.

Q. That would be, even with the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., quite a sale of land, wouldn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large an acreage does the railroad company have to dispose of to get it into a class where you would regard it as large for them?—A. Well, it depends on the course that the negotiations take. Now, they may have discussed with us the matter of the purchase of 8,000 acres, but it never reached any point where it was necessary to start a file on the subject, and, of course, it is not likely that we would make any record of it.

Q. You say they may have; of course, that implies they may not have. Now, do you know anything about it yourself?—A. No; I do not remember about it.

Q. On or about this time that this occurred—that you had the talk with Judge Hanford?—A. No, sir; I do not remember about it.

Q. In regard to the purchase of the land on the west side of the river?—A. No, sir; I do not remember about it; they may have discussed that matter with us.

Q. What followed your letter to Mr. Cooper? By the way, do you know Mr. James A. Kerr?—A. I have met him; yes, sir; of Kerr & McCord?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; I met him.

Q. Where?—A. In Tacoma, and also at his office. I had some dealings with him on an irrigation matter on the lower Yakima Canal; it had nothing to do with this case.

Q. You did have a talk with him about the transfer of these lands to the Hanford Co.?—A. No; I have no recollection of Mr. Kerr having anything to do with this matter.

Q. That was not quite what I asked you.—A. Talked with Mr. Kerr about the transfer of these lands?

Q. Yes; anything in regard to that?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of that.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Cooper and Mr. Kerr had any conferences about it?—A. I do not think so; I do not know.

Q. Did you meet any of the trustees of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. and discuss with them the terms upon which this sale might be made?—A. No, sir; unless Mr. Haynes was a trustee—Mr. Haynes or Judge Hanford. I discussed it with them.

Q. Well, they were both trustees; but you have spoken of seeing them. Mr. Haynes at that time was the secretary of the company.—A. Yes.

Q. I wish you would state what that letter refers to [showing document to witness]. Is that from Mr. Newell?—A. That is not direct from Director Newell, but it is from Mr. Sweigert.

Q. That is the letter from the Reclamation Bureau which enabled your company to make this contract with the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Releasing it from the Reclamation Service; is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Won't you read it, please?—A. This is from the Reclamation Service office at North Yakima, Wash., and is dated June 8, 1909, and is addressed to Mr. S. H. Plummer——

Mr. Hughes. That would not be this release, because this was 1906.

The Witness. Now, let me see; this is the release of the second batch of lands in the second list.

Mr. Higgins. That is the lot that was afterwards acquired?

The Witness. The second lot that was sold to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.

Q. Leaving that for the moment—Judge Hanford told you, didn't he, that the price suggested in your interview with him, the $10 an acre and the $3 an acre, depending on the classification of the land, was too high?—A. Why, I do not remember that he said it was too high. We agreed on that rate.

Q. What did he say about it?—A. I can not remember the conversation, but we agreed at that time that the price should be $10 an acre for the irrigable land and $3 an acre for the nonirrigable land.

Q. Now, Mr. Plummer, didn't he in the course of that conversation in reference to terms, sometime during the conversation, say to you that your prices for your land was too high.—A. I can not tell you, Mr. Higgins, that matter is six years old and I do not know what he said. Heavens and earth, I can not remember a conversation that was six or seven years old—I have to refer to the files.

Q. I can remember one that is two hours old.—A. Perhaps you can.

Q. Refer to the files, if you want to.—A. All right; is this the file here? You will have to allow me to refresh my memory with the files because I can not remember the details of a conversation that I had six or seven years ago—it is simply impossible. Now, that letter that I have read for the record that I wrote to Mr. Cooper on February 12, 1906, would lead me to believe that that price was acceptable to Judge Hanford, depending, of course, upon the classification of the lands. Now that is all I can say about that.

Q. That is to say that you finally, in the course of your talk with Judge Hanford, indicated that those were the figures at which the land could be purchased.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the conclusion of that interview you reported to Mr. Cooper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the interview can you recall what your discussion was with Judge Hanford about the price and about the classification?—A. About the classification, the arrangement that I had and my recollection is really made up from the file, that the understanding was that we were to have the lands classified, as I stated, by representatives of the irrigation company and the railway company. Now, Judge Hanford expressed the opinion, as I find it in one of my later letters——

Q. Expressed the opinion in this interview that we are talking about?—A. Now, if you will allow me to read this letter it will—it shows just what the—the information that I got from Judge Hanford, whether it was in an interview or in a communication I do not know; if it is a communication it is in the file here, but the letter is dated April 10, 1906, and is addressed to Mr. Thomas Cooper, land commissioner, St. Paul.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith form of contract which I propose to use in the sale to Judge Hanford's irrigation company of lands below its canal. I have left the description and consideration blank. As a complete list of the lands has not yet been made up, and it will probably be necessary to have an examination made of the lands to determine whether they are in the $3 or the $10 classification. They have accepted our price of $10 per acre for good lands lying below the canal and $3 for the rocky lands below the canal and those above irrigation. Judge Hanford furnished me a map, showing the lands in the two classifications, and out of 12,700 acres he estimates about 7,100 in the $3 class. This is a larger proportion than I anticipated, and I think it will pay us to have an examination made and classify them accordingly. Will you please look over the form and advise me if satisfactory. I have thought it better to make a straight contract of sale, with a stringent provision for cancellation in case they failed to complete works, rather than to make an agreement of sale later after they have started construction. They are ready to go to work immediately, and from what Judge Hanford tells me I feel satisfied that they have the money and ability to carry it our and are simply waiting on us. They will purchase on five-year contract, one-sixth down and balance in five equal annual installments. I have not yet submitted this form to Judge Hanford, as I desired you to pass on the same before doing so, and I would be glad if you will wire me after you have looked it over so that I can submit the form to him immediately. The total area of lands which we expect to include, according to Judge Hanford's classification, is as follows: Irrigable below the canal, 5,580 acres; poor lands below the canal and area above irrigation, 7,149 acres; total, 12,729 acres.

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

P. S.—The above was written on the 10th instant, and was held awaiting an opportunity to talk with Mr. Levy. I have not yet been able to see him, however, as he has been very busy since his return from California, but I will take it up with him at first opportunity and advise you of his approval.

Q. You did take it up with him, didn't you?—A. I then took it up with Mr. Levy and Mr. Levy approved it. Now, as I have suggested there, the area of the poor lands to go into the $3 class was very much larger than I expected, so that I insisted on making the classification—the joint classification, as I had arranged with Judge Hanford, instead of taking his classification, but before we got to that I learned that the Reclamation Service had made a classification of all of the lands and that I could probably get their map, which was in considerable detail. They had classified it into three separate groups—first, second, and third class—all of the lands in this district by 40-acre tracts; so I took up the matter with the Reclamation Service, as is shown by the file here, and procured a copy of that map, and before doing so I made an arrangement with Judge Hanford that we would both of us accept the classification as made by the Reclamation Service. Neither one of us knew what that classification was, but we agreed that we would both accept and abide by it. Now, when we got that map and figured up all of those lands we found that instead of there being more than one-half of the acreage in the poor-land class, which was to go into the sale at $3 an acre, according to Judge Hanford's classification, that there was about one-third of the lands that were classed as the third-class land, and two-thirds went into the $10 class. Then it was that Judge Hanford demurred and said that at that percentage the average price——

Q. (Interrupting.) When you say he demurred, what do you mean?—A. Well, he demurred to the price—he objected to the price.

Q. He thought it was too high, then?—A. He thought the price was too high, and he objected very seriously to going on with the proposition because he said that the average price per acre that they would have to pay for the land in that classification was very much greater than they had figured on, and when I came to look into the matter carefully, in view of that additional information we had, I felt the same way about it, and I so advised Mr. Cooper, and I recommended to Mr. Cooper that we leave the price of the better lands at $10 an acre, but reduce the price of the poor lands to $1 per acre, and Mr. Cooper objected to that and so wired me, but he said in his message that as it would doubtless cause me some embarrassment because I had already discussed this matter with Judge Hanford and agreed with him, subject to Mr. Cooper's approval, on the dollar rate——

Q. (Interrupting.) Subject to Mr. Levy's approval.—A. (Continuing.) To Mr. Cooper's approval, not Mr. Levy's approval, but to Mr. Cooper's approval—that he would let the dollar rate stand, and the sale was finally made on that basis, and the acreage as it finally worked out, based upon the Reclamation Service classification, was the first and second class lands, which were sold at $10 an acre and amounted to 9,294.24 acres, and the third-class land, which went in at the dollar rate, 3,395.81 acres. Now, that is the whole story in regard to the classification of the lands.

Q. Was it Mr. Cooper that advised you to refer to Mr. Levy in the first conference?—A. Yes, sir. The reason that——

Q. (Interrupting.) When you and Judge Hanford had reached a different price, did you take it up with Mr. Levy?—A. Yes, sir; I discussed the matter with Mr. Levy.

Q. And was Judge Hanford present then?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. Do you know whether Judge Hanford ever took the matter of the price on the first large purchase up with Mr. Levy?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Well, what was it you talked with Mr. Levy?—A. The reason why the matter was discussed with Mr. Levy was largely a traffic matter, because we had in mind at that time that we might build a railroad up there if this irrigation scheme were carried out and the land settled up, as we all hoped it would be, that there would be a large amount of tonnage there that might attract a railroad into that district, and, as a matter of fact, we did later survey a line from our main line near, or west of Kennewick up through Richland and to Hanford, and then along the river to a connection with the Milwaukee, known as the Kennewick Northern Railway. That line was surveyed and the maps filed, and the right of way was procured over a part of the line.

Q. I find here in your files this memorandum:

TACOMA. June 11, 1906.

MR. G. H. PLUMMER:

I have initialed and return to you herewith proposed contract with Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. received with your memo. of June 9.

C. M. LEVY.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that refer to the first purchase?—A. Yes, sir. That is one of our customs, that when a contract passes through any of our officials they initial the contract so that it is always there for reference.

Q. Is the memorandum which you refer to, and that is referred to by Mr. Levy of June 9, among these papers? Mr. Levy says: "Have received a contract with your memoranda of June 9."—A. It is probable that I merely made a lead-pencil memorandum, sending it up.

Q. Well, is it among these papers?—A. I do not see it here.

Q. If it is, will you please read it?—A. No, sir; the memoranda of that date is not here.

Q. What legal services, if any, were involved in the transfer of this land to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., by your railroad?—A. The clause relating to the construction of the ditch was a special clause that was prepared, I think, in my office, and submitted to our attorney.

Q. Who?—A. Mr. Grosscup, for approval as to its form.

Q. Any unusual legal questions involved in that, different than ordinarily arise in the transfer of land?—A. No, sir; there was only that question as to the form of that clause which I wanted to be sure was binding on the company and that if they failed to construct the canal and spend the $200,000 that we could cancel the contract.

Q. You might read that letter [showing].

A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., June 9, 1906.

HON. C. H. HANFORD,
Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith duplicate copies of contract for sale of lands lying below your proposed canal, which I believe is now in proper form. Will you kindly have the agreement executed by the proper officials of your company and return same to me with amount of first payment, $16,063.04, when I will have the agreement executed by the land commissioner.

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. How soon after that did Judge Hanford tell you who was associated with him?—A. I can not say; I do not know that Judge Hanford told me who was associated with him. It may have been Mr. Haynes.

Q. Well, did Mr. Haynes tell you about that time?—A. I can not say when it was that I was told.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Rust, Mr. W. R. Rust, he is the manager of the——A. Tacoma smelter.

Q. Is that the American Smelter & Refining Co.?—A. Why, it is one of the Guggenheim smelters.

Mr. HIGGINS. At this time I think it might as well go in the record that it appears from the minute book given to the committee by Mr. Hughes, that the W. R. Rust——

The CHAIRMAN. You mean given to the committee by Mr. Kerr?

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Kerr brought the book to Mr. Hughes and Mr. Hughes furnished it to the committee—that Mr. W. R. Rust was a stockholder of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., holding 933½ or 933⅓ shares; he subsequently discussed with you, did he not, Mr. Plummer, the financing of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. when it was in financial straits.

A. At a time when they were not making progress I called up Mr. Rust on the telephone and asked him about their affairs and he told me that arrangements were then being made to procure additional funds to go ahead with the completion of the ditch.

Q. He told you that he was personally interested in seeing that funds were provided and the thing was financed?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that he did.

Q. Well, is it or not true that upon his assurance, you made the second contract—I mean by that his assurance of the responsibility of the company.—A. No, sir; I could not say that. We knew that Mr. Rust——

Q. Well, did he give you such assurance except on the telephone?—A. No, sir; he gave me no assurance excepting just what I have said; that he and some other stockholders were going to supply additional funds to complete the ditch, and, as I say, I had some talk also with Mr. Michael Earles, whether before or after that time I do not remember, but I made some inquiry and was satisfied that they were going ahead with the completion of the canal.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Higgins, you read into the record from the stock journal of the company the stockholdings of Mr. Rust; didn't you read what his stockholdings were after this reorganization instead of prior to that time?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes; I do not mean to say that it appears from the minute books of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. that Mr. Rust at this time was a stockholder in any 933⅓ shares, but that at a later time he held that amount.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. At this reorganization which the witness referred to he took a large amount of additional stock.

Mr. HIGGINS. Well, the date was about the 21st of September, 1909, nearly three years after the first large tract was acquired, the records of the Hanford Co. will disclose, I think, that he was not at that time a large stockholder. Now, will you read that letter [showing letter to witness]?

A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., July 3, 1906.

Hon. C. H. HANFORD,
Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith duplicate original of Washington contract No. 6769 for the sale of lands lying below your proposed canal, duly executed on the part of this company. When the contract was returned to me after being executed by your company I discovered on rechecking the original figures that an error had been made in the area of nonirrigable lands in section 1, township 13, range 26 east W. M., which I found totaled 85 acres instead of 125 acres, as originally reported. I have, therefore, corrected the contract, reducing the total area 40 acres and changing the consideration to read $96,338.21 instead of $96,378.21. As the remittance received has been applied as down payment, the deferred payments of principal and interest have been reduced proportionately.

Q. That was signed by you?—A. Signed "Yours, truly, Western Land Agent" and my signature.

Q. I note here a letter from Mr. Thomas Cooper, dated St. Paul, Minn., July 10, 1906, to you, correcting some totals—I do not suppose that it need appear in the record.—A. No, sir; that was merely some errors that were made in figuring up the total area that was sold to them; that is all.

Q. You subsequently acknowledged that letter to Mr. Cooper and advised him that he is correct and that the error was made in making the extra copies to accompany the reports?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you read that letter, please [handing letter to witness]?—A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., March 12, 1907.

Hon. C. H. HANFORD,
United States District Court, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request when here recently, I hand you herewith a copy of list showing classification of lands sold to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. on June 22, 1906, under Washington contract No. 6769.

Yours, truly.

Q. Do you recall what your conversation with Judge Hanford was at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or who came with him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Or where you met him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Or whether he came by appointment or you requested him to come?—A. No, sir. The probability is that he merely called and asked me for a copy of the list which I had prepared showing the classification of all the lands in each section, and there is a copy of that list there, and doubtless it was a copy of that list I gave him.

Q. Was it the habit of Judge Hanford to call at your office before this land sale was taken up?—A. Why, he was in my office two or three times, I do not remember how many, perhaps four or five times, in connection with this—possibly four or five times in connection with this trade.

Q. He had been there before 1906, hadn't he?—A. How?

Q. He had been there before 1906, had he not?—A. Well, he was there—I saw Judge Hanford in connection with that first sale which was made in 1905.

Q. But before that it was not an unusual thing for Judge Hanford to drop into your office before 1905, was it?—A. I do not remember that Judge Hanford was in my office before this irrigation matter came up—before the purchase of these two sections; no, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not know that I care to place in the record the correspondence that Mr. Plummer had with Mr. Haynes as to the progress that was being made in the construction of the irrigation ditch and the power plant, succeeding the acquiring of the first tract of land.

Mr. HUGHES. If that is intended as a question to me, I will state that I have not examined it; if you desire me to answer you, I would say that I have not examined it, Mr. Higgins. That batch of correspondence which you now have I have not seen at all, and my only suggestion would be that such correspondence as would throw light on this transaction should go into the record, and what does not appear to you as throwing light on the transaction it would be useless to encumber the record with; but not having seen it, I can not make any suggestion as to whether it should go into the record or not.

Whereupon Mr. Higgins reads some samples of the letters referred to, and which it is concluded not to put into the record.

Mr. HIGGINS. After the first tract was acquired, Mr. Plummer, and during the summer of 1907, it is true, is it not, that the work was commenced on the irrigation ditch and the plans of irrigation had been commenced?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do toward following the work; did you go out there yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford frequently and ask him about it?—A. I talked with Mr. Haynes, and, as a mater of fact, I did not take any steps toward ascertaining from them about their compliance with that feature of the contract requiring construction until the time limit was about up, and then I called upon them for a showing as to what they had done, and I was satisfied they had complied with that feature of the contract.

Q. Well, your file of the letters shows that you had, in the summer of 1907, considerable correspondence with Mr. M. B. Haynes, who was then the secretary of the company, as to the proper construction to place upon the contract, and also as to the progress of the work.—A. I think that was in reference to the issuance of deeds, Mr. Higgins; wasn't it?

Q. I think on both.—A. Was it? I do not remember that, of course.

Q. You might read that; that is one with reference to the issuance of deeds [handing letter to witness].—A. I think that all was in connection with the issuance of deeds. [Reading:]

TACOMA, WASH., July 29, 1907.

Mr. M. B. HAYNES,
Secretary Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: Referring to recent correspondence about the matter of issuing deeds for lands sold to your company under Washington contract No. 6769, I submitted these matters to the land commissioner and am just in receipt of advice from him authorizing the modification of your contract to the extent that after your canal has been constructed and you are ready to deliver water we will issue from time to time, as desired, special deeds for tracts of not less than 160 acres. For the first 10 deeds so issued no charge will be made, but after that an arbitrary charge of $10 will be made for each deed applied for, to cover clerical expenses incident to the preparation of same.

Mr. HIGGINS. You may state, Mr. Plummer, what you mean by "special deeds."

A. The use of the words "special" there is merely this: That under the contract they were only entitled to a deed for the entire block of land sold upon the completion of contract, but under this modification of the contract they were entitled to receive deeds from time to time for 160 acres or more in advance of the completion of the contract.

Mr. HUGHES. But upon payment of the full price of that particular tract?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; on payment of the full price of that particular tract.

Mr. HUGHES. That was for the purpose of aiding in the sale of minor tracts.

A. Yes, sir; that was for the purpose of aiding the development of the property.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is to say, when a settler took a contract and he wanted a clear title, there was a provision whereby that particular small tract which the settler acquired could be released from the general contract which the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. had with the Northern Pacific Railroad?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the fact?—A. Yes, sir; that is the fact. We frequently find in contracts of this kind that parties who want to make extensive improvements do not want to do so upon lands that they hold under a contract which is based on another contract, and therefore the irrigation company wants to be in a position to obtain a title from us and then make either a deed and a mortgage, or to give them a contract based upon a title which they hold.

Q. Now, will you read that letter [handing letter to witness]?—A. (Reading:)

HANFORD IRRIGATION & POWER CO.,
Seattle National Bank Building, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIRS: I beg to call your attention to the fact that the payment due on your contract No. 6769, June 22 last, has not yet been made, and request that you arrange to make payment of same, including interest to date. Be good enough to advise me by return mail in regard to this matter.

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Did Judge Hanford call on you after the receipt of that letter?—A. I do not remember, sir. I will have to look at the file.

Q. And you do not remember whether Mr. Rust did, either?—A. No, sir.

Q. There does not appear from your files anything which would indicate that that letter was replied to, or else I am in error by reason of my unfamiliarity with your files.—A. I can tell when the payment was made and I can see there whether they complied with the demand or not. On October 23, 1908, which was about a month and three-quarters after my letter, they paid interest amounting to $3,853.21, and on November 19, 1908, they paid the installment of the principal that was due on June 22, which was $16,055.04 with interest.

Q. Do you find a letter which accompanied that remittance?—A. No, sir; I do not find the letter that accompanied that remittance, and it is more than likely that the treasurer or secretary——

Q. I won't ask you for your speculation, if you can not recollect about it.—A. Well, there are only two ways that we could have gotten it; one is to send it by mail and another is to send it by messenger, and if it came by mail it would be in this file, but if it came by messenger it would be delivered to us in the office.

Q. That is, by way of argument—it may or may not be.—A. There is a statement in the files showing the payments and the dates they were made and how they were divided, principal and interest.

Q. Here is a letter dated September 2, 1908, from Mr. Walthew, acknowledging your letter to him of August 31, 1908, in which you call his attention to payments due and in which he assures you "that the men with whom we are dealing are possessed of ample funds to take care of all the obligations of the company, but the details necessary to be arranged have occupied considerable time, so that the matter has not as yet been finally closed." And then another portion intervenes, and then this language: "We appreciate very much the courtesy which your company has extended us in this matter, and trust you will favor us until our present deal can be put through. Very respectfully, Hanford Irrigation Co., Wm. Walthew, secretary." That does not refresh your memory at all?—A. No, sir; except that we held it open for them for a month or two.

Q. Under date of September 3, 1908, Tacoma, Wash., appears a letter to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle National Bank Building, Seattle, Wash., this letter being from you, in which you acknowledge the former letter which I have just quoted from and in which you state that you are pleased to learn "that you have succeeded in carrying out your plans for providing necessary funds to carry the work to completion." That does not afford you any means of recollecting just how that payment was made, and by whom?—A. No, sir; that does not throw any light on the payment. The payment was made later.

Q. You do not know whether it was the subject of negotiations personally or telephonic or in any other way?—A. No, sir; it is customary to allow a little time on our payments, and that is what we did there. The payment was only four months behind.

Q. Is that a usual thing on your contracts?—A. Yes, sir; with a concern that is developing the property, going ahead in good faith and trying to carry out all the other features of the contract, we were very lenient with them.

Q. Do your contracts provide a forfeiture in the case of nonpayment in a given time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long is the time provided in the contract?—A. It immediately becomes forfeitable at the option of the railway company.

Q. Forfeitable on due date of any payment?—A. Yes, sir; if the payment is not made; if either the payments of principal, interest, or taxes are not made on the date when due, the contract is forfeitable.

Q. You may read that letter—I do not know what application it has [handing letter to witness].—A. (Reading:)

HANFORD IRRIGATION & POWER CO.,
Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIRS: I am in receipt of your letter of the 13th instant requesting deeds for about 3,500 acres of land now contained in your Washington contract No. 6769 on payment of principal and interest which is due June 22 last, amounting to approximately $20,300. I have given this request consideration and can not see my way clear to recommend the issuance of the deeds. Under the terms of your contract no deeds are to be made until the contract is paid up in full and until the entire irrigation system is completed and in successful operation, but this was later modified by letter to the extent that we would issue deeds for lands underlying the constructed and completed canals on payment of the full purchase price, and providing, of course, though not stated in the letter, that the contract is in good standing.

Upon payment of the amount due last June, one-half of the total consideration in the contract will have been paid. In other words, one-half of the price of the lands will have been paid, but as you ask for deeds for more than one-third of the irrigable lands, which it is to be presumed are of a value greater than the average of all lands under the system, the conveyance of those lands free from under the contract would materially lessen our security, and ordinarily we would not make the deeds without payment of the full amount of the purchase price—that is, $10 per acre—but in view of the circumstances I will recommend to our land commissioner that we make deeds for the lands applied for upon payment of the balance of the purchase price for such lands after the contract has been put in good standing. When the installment due June 22 has been paid, approximately $5 per acre will have been paid on account of all lands. If you will then pay the balance at $5 per acre for the lands to be conveyed, I will attempt to secure authority to make the deed.

Trusting this will be satisfactory to you, I am,

Yours, truly,

G. H. PLUMMER, Western Land Agent.

Q. Are you able to supplement that letter with any recollection that you have of the circumstances?—A. Why, no, sir; that is all there is to it, as is shown by the correspondence. They made a request for 3,600 acres—a conveyance of 3,600 acres.

Q. Read that, please [showing letter to witness].—A. (Reading:)

DEAR SIRS: Replying to your letter of the 22d instant I expect to be in Seattle on Tuesday the 27th instant, and will try to arrange to see Judge Hanford at that time.

Yours, truly,

Q. Did you see him?—A. I will have to look at the file. I do not think I did—I do not remember seeing him—that was on the 22d. No; I did not see Judge Hanford at that time; for on November 9, 1908, I wrote Mr. Walthew, secretary of the company, that "I regret that I did not see Judge Hanford when in Seattle on the 28th ultimo. I tried to reach him by telephone to make an appointment, but was unsuccessful."

Q. Is that all of that letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you may read the rest of it.—A. I will read the balance of the letter. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., November 9, 1908.

Mr. HUGHES. You are now reading the whole of the letter?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; the whole of the letter now. (Reading:)

Mr. WM. WALTHEW,
Secretary Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 5th instant, and regret that I am not authorized to depart from the conditions of the contract, and the letter of July 29, 1907, with respect to the conveyance of lands before the contract is completed, but I am willing to take up the matter with the land commissioner in view of the urgency of the situation. When the matter of making deeds was laid before the land commissioner some time ago it was contemplated that no deeds would be made unless the contract was in good standing, and I do not know whether he would feel like making the conveyance of the portion of the lands while the contract is in its present shape, as this is contrary to our rules.

I have, however, submitted the matter to him to-day, and will advise you of his decision as soon as received. I regret that I did not see Judge Hanford when in Seattle on the 28th ultimo. I tried to reach him by telephone to make an appointment, but was unsuccessful.

Yours, truly,

Mr. HUGHES. Pardon me, but both you and the witness, Mr. Higgins, are reading the name as "William Walthew"; I think that is a mistake—it should be H. M. Walthew.

The WITNESS. We discovered that afterwards. His signature was not clear and we wrote his name as "William" for some little time before we were able to read his writing.

Mr. HIGGINS. It is "H. M.," but it looks very much like "Wm." as he writes it?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Judge Hanford at a later time, Mr. Plummer?—A. I may have seen him after that correspondence, but I can not recall it. I think I can tell by looking over the files.

Q. Your recollection of the conversation is always limited to your letter file?—A. We are doing a great deal of business in our office. We are selling, some years, 7,000 or 8,000 acres of land and some years more than that, and we are constantly busy from morning till night, and those things that run for five or six years I do not attempt to remember. As a matter of fact, I have gotten so that I carry everything by memoranda and I can not recall a conversation held that far back.

Q. Or any circumstances connected with it—I assume that is true also?—A. No, sir; that is not true.

Q. I say, or any circumstances connected with it?—A. In connection with the sale?

Q. In connection with any conversation that you may have had?—A. Why, certainly I can, yes, sir; I can remember some circumstances. I have reported some of them and I have testified to some of them that I do remember, but as to saying, without looking at this file, that between certain dates I had a conversation or a conference with Judge Hanford it is impossible for me to do so.

Q. You may read that letter [handing letter to witness].—A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., November 9, 1908.

Mr. THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: The Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. desires to get deed for lots 6, 7, 8, 9, and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 1, township 13, range 25 east, embraced in contract W, No. 6769, containing 253.35 acres. The contract makes no provision for issuance of deeds, but you authorized me to make deeds for tracts of not less than 160 acres on payment of the full amount of consideration. These lands are in the nonirrigable class and were figured in the contract at a dollar per acre. The contract is in arrears, the payment due June 22 last, amounting to $16,055.04, being unpaid. The interest, however, amounting to $3,853.21, was paid and extension was granted on the principal. I have, therefore, advised them that no deeds could be issued until the contract is put in good standing. They are, however, anxious to secure this deed for the reason that they intend to use it in connection with negotiations for land in the adjoining section which they require for site for their pumping plant. In view of the circumstances, I recommend that we make this deed on payment of $1,000, to be applied on the contract. Judge Hanford recently informed me that they were arranging their finances satisfactorily and would put our contract in good standing, and Mr. Rust also told me that he and some others interested were putting up the necessary money to place the company in good shape, and I would like to encourage them to the extent of making this deed so that they can go ahead with their plans for building the pumping project. Do you approve?

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Are you able now to supplement that letter with any recollection of yours as to any talk with Judge Hanford about the financing of the company?—A. No, sir; except that—no I do not remember the conversation had with Judge Hanford at that time. I can not recall the details of it. I remember my talking with Mr. Rust, because I called him on the telephone for the purpose of finding out what was being done toward getting the necessary funds to complete the ditch.

Q. You wrote Mr. Cooper that Mr. Rust also told you that he and some others interested are putting up the necessary money; do you recall who the "some others" were that Mr. Rust spoke of?—A. He spoke of Mr. Earles, I believe.

Q. From your file, Mr. Plummer, I find that that letter of the 9th of November, 1908, was or that your recommendation in that letter was approved by Mr. Cooper in a letter to you dated from St. Paul.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you wrote Mr.—it appears here as "William Walthew," who was the secretary of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., advising him that Mr. Cooper had approved, and requesting that a check be sent—you may read that letter into the record [showing letter to witness].—A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., November 25, 1908.

Mr. H. M. WALTHEW,
Secretary Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I have your yetter of the 23d instant, and have figured out the amount to be paid by your company for deed 3,338.93 acres described in your letter in the event the land commissioner will approve my recommendation to make conveyance upon payment of the balance of consideration due for the particular lands applied for. As I explained to you when in Tacoma, it is our custom to require purchaser to pay the whole amount of consideration without regard to any payments previously made, or, in other words, in addition to the regular annual payments due under the contract, but in view of the conditions explained to me, I am willing to recommend to the land commissioner that we waive our rule and accept the balance of the consideration for particular lands applied for.

Q. Did you then refer to the conversation which you had with Judge Hanford and Mr. Rust and which you indicated in the letter to Mr. Cooper?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. As being the conditions explained?—A. No, sir. I think that was a conference that I had with Mr. Walthew. I have a recollection that Mr. Walthew came over and took this matter up with me personally, but this refers, I notice, to a letter of the 23d—this refers to the letter of the 23d.

Q. Give the date of it.—A. November 23, 1908; in which Mr. Walthew, on behalf of the irrigation company, made application for a deed to a number of descriptions aggregating approximately 3,300 acres.

Q. Is that all that you desire to say—I think I interrupted you in the reading of it.—A. (Continuing.) I was looking this over to see what representations he made here about the lands. I called his attention to the classification here, and it was with reference to his representations in regard to that classification that I agreed to recommend to the land commissioner that we make the deed. To go on with the letter. [Continuing reading:]

I am willing to recommend to the land commissioner that we waive our rule and accept the balance of the consideration for the particular lands applied for. Under the classification adopted at the time sale was made 394.10 acres of land applied for are within the $1 class and 2,944.83 acres are within the $10 class, as shown in the statement below.

And then follows the statement of all of the lands, explaining the classification, the summary of which was 394.10 acres at $1 and 2,944.83 acres at $10, a total of $29,842.40, the balance then to be added to that—a balance of one-half to be paid in order to secure deed—$14,921.20. [Continuing reading:]

After crediting the payment recently made on account of the contract, one-half of the total consideration has been paid, and there is, therefore, payable at this time $14,921.20 in order to secure the deed. You will understand that I have no authority to make this arrangement with you, but am willing to submit it to the land commissioner, and if you are prepared to make your payment I will submit it to him at once and advise you promptly of his decision.

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Will you read the letter submitting it to the land agent [showing letter to witness]?—A. (Reading:)

TACOMA, WASH., November 30, 1908.

Mr. THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: The Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. desires to procure deed for 3,339.93 acres of land contained in their contract W, No. 6769. They have sold a considerable portion of this land and some of the purchasers are willing to pay out in full and take their deeds, while it is proposed in other cases to make deed and take back a mortgage which can be sold. Financial arrangements have been made to carry the project along, and they are now attempting to put it in good shape. I advised Judge Hanford that if they would pay the balance of the total consideration due for such lands I would recommend that we make the deed. You will observe by the statement inclosed that they have exactly one-half of the total consideration for all lands contained in the contract, the price of which was $10 for the irrigable lands and $1 per acre for the lands which could not be irrigated either on account of the fact that they were above the ditch or the soil too poor for cultivation. I also inclose herewith a copy of my letter of 25th instant to Secretary Walthew, which explains situation. We have agreed to give them deed for 160 acres or more on payment of the full amount of consideration, and the only question to decide is whether we will make the deed on payment of the balance of the consideration instead of the whole amount. I am in favor of aiding them in this matter, and recommend that we make deed, and if you approve kindly have same executed, and if you will advise me by wire I will deposit consideration $14,921.20 now held in our suspense account.

Yours, truly, WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Will you read Mr. Cooper's reply?—A. Mr. Cooper's reply was in the form of a telegram, dated St. Paul, December 19, 1908.

G. H. PLUMMER, Tacoma:

Your letter of November 30 re deed to Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. The President approves issuance of deed, and it will be executed and sent you in due course.

THOMAS COOPER.

10.17 a. m.

Q. Whereupon you wrote Mr. Walthew, advising him to that effect in the letter dated December 21, 1908, as appears from your file. I find letter of September 24, 1909, that is to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., Hanford, Benton County, Wash.; your former letters were addressed to them at Seattle.—A. Yes, sir; at Seattle.

Q. (Continuing.) In which you call attention to certain amount of principal remaining unpaid on the contract, $17,566.—A. I think that was about the time they moved their offices over there to Hanford.

Q. When you wrote the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., at Hanford, from Tacoma, under date of March 30, 1910, accepting a payment of one-half of the total amount still unpaid on June 22, 1910, with interest up to that date, and the balance on June 22, 1911; and as it appears from your letter the total amount unpaid on the contract is $17,566.98, and you agreeing to accept $8,783.49 and extend the due date on the balance for one year.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This seems to be a calling down by Mr. Cooper of you.—A. I do not know whether I want that in the record or not.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think it had better go in.

The WITNESS. Very well. Shall I read this?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

The WITNESS (reading):

ST. PAUL, MINN., June 16, 1910.

Mr. G. H. PLUMMER,
Western Land Agent, Tacoma, Wash.

DEAR SIR: Among other papers received with your letter of the 11th instant is a contract with the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. for my signature. This contract is dated June 18, 1909, so that it is practically a year old. Nevertheless it is sent for my signature, without any explanation of the delay. Obviously this is an unusual occurrence, and there must be some explanation, and the explanation should have accompanied the instrument. It should not be necessary for me to take time, which I can ill afford, writing a letter of this character.

Yours, truly, THOMAS COOPER, Land Commissioner.

Now, I want to get my reply into the record, if you will allow me to read it.

Mr. HIGGINS. You may do so [handing letter to witness].

The WITNESS (reading):

TACOMA, WASH., June 20, 1910.

Mr. THOMAS COOPER,
Land Commissioner, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 16th instant, regarding contract with Hanford Irrigation & Power Co., I did not think it necessary when sending this contract for execution to make any explanation regarding the delay. They had first deferred execution of the contract on account of pending negotiations for sale of the property. You will remember that those negotiations ran along for some time, and it was intended, in case the sale was made, to have the purchasers execute the contract. After those negotiations were ended they overlooked signing the contract, although we repeatedly called their attention to it. I finally advised them that the matter must be settled up at once, and Mr. Earles then came over and signed the contract. There was no objection to the terms, and it was simply a matter of delay, for the reasons stated—an oversight on their part that the contract was not completed. We frequently send contracts to you the execution of which has been delayed by the purchaser, and I did not think that this particular case required any explanation; otherwise I would have attached a memo. explaining the situation.

Yours, truly,

WESTERN LAND AGENT.

Q. Were you at that time negotiating also with the American Light & Power Co.?—A. I do not remember that it was that time; but we had some negotiation.

Q. I saw a notation or a memoranda in your files of the correspondence between the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. with the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.—A. That was a notation that I made after talking, I believe, with Mr. Earles, who told me that an option for 90 days had been granted to the American Light & Power Co. on the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co.'s properties.

Q. Under what date?—A. The memorandum is dated June 18, 1910. I do not know what the date of the option was.

Q. Perhaps this further explains the notation with reference to the American Light & Power Co. It appears in the letter dated Tacoma, Wash., June 23, 1910, and signed by you as the western land agent, and to Mr. Thomas Cooper, land commissioner, St. Paul, Minn., referring to the two contracts that the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. have with you for the purchase of land, and referring to the option which Mr. Earles was given on the majority of the stock of the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. and the American Light & Power Co., and asking that the payments due by the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. ought to be allowed to await the determination of the option.—A. Yes, sir.

After a conference with the witness, it is arranged that he will return on Saturday, July 20, to complete his examination by the committee on another branch of the investigation.

Mr. HUGHES. There are a few questions that I might ask him now, if you like.

The CHAIRMAN. You may.

Mr. HIGGINS. Of course, you understand that as to the second large tract there are a few letters which should go in there. It is not my purpose to examine Mr. Plummer as to any of the eight tracts, except the two largest ones—the one that he has already testified about and another of about 8,000 or 9,000 acres. The one I have just examined him about is the 12,000 acres, and he returns by Saturday, and we will examine him as to the 9,000-acre tract at that time.

Mr. HUGHES. The lands in sections 23 and 25 on the Columbia River are fractional sections, because they join the Columbia River.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And part of them were subject to overflow in the flood waters of the Columbia River?—A. So it was stated to us by Judge Hanford.

Q. The flood waters of the Columbia River, in that portion of the river, occur in spring and early summer, do they not?—A. Yes, sir; usually in June, I think.

Q. Due to the melting of the snows in the mountainous headquarters of the Columbia River?—A. The overrapid melting of the snows after a very heavy snowfall in the winter.

Q. That fact would diminish rather than increase the value of those lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Plummer, was the price at which those lands were sold by you to Judge Hanford less or more than the usual customary price for like lands similarly situated?—A. Well, that is rather hard to say. The fact is that at that time if a responsible person came to us with a proposition to put in a pumping system down in that section we would have been very glad to have sold them the land at a very nominal price in order to get him started on an experiment.

Q. Up to that time comparatively little had been done in the way of attempting to irrigate the lands immediately adjoining the Columbia River by pumping?—A. Yes, sir; in fact anywhere; there were very few pumping systems in this State anywhere.

Q. Ones that were put in on a very large scale with hydraulic power, such as was afterwards proposed at Priests Rapids, would be impracticable except upon the very low levels near the river?—A. Yes, sir; that is the point. You see the gasoline engines using cheap fuel had not been perfected and there had been no other system except steam power, and the cost of moving the fuel up there was so great that it would exceed the value of the land—the cost of getting the water on the land would be so excessive that a man could not afford to go in there and develop it.

Q. How far was this land below Priests Rapids—those two pieces in sections 23 and 25——

Mr. HIGGINS. You do not mean to say, Mr. Plummer, that the gasoline engine had not been perfected in 1906–7?

A. It had not been perfected for using cheap fuel as it is to-day. Oh, yes; the gasoline engine had been perfected, but then not to the extent that it is to-day, where cheap fuel can be used.

Q. By cheap fuel you mean gasoline?—A. No—well, I mean—I mean to say the gasoline engine, or rather I mean the crude-oil burner, that is the cheapest fuel that we have now for operating small units of pumps. To answer your question about the distance, Mr. Hughes, I do not know exactly, but it must be about 30 to 35 miles below Priests Rapids.

Q. Following the river in a direct line, about 20 to 30 miles?—A. Following the river in a direct line, possibly 25 miles.

Q. You spoke of a body of land that had been sold long previously on the east side of the river, of the Columbia River, about 5,000 acres; that was east or northeast of Priests Rapids, wasn't it, in the flat at the bend of the river, opposite the rapids and lying north of the Hanford project, or north of the lands embraced in the Hanford project?—A. No, sir; the lands that I spoke of that had been sold prior to the time that I took charge of the office were on the same side of the river as the Hanford project; that is, the south or west side, but the areas I do not remember, and, as I say, I do not know anything about that trade, because I did not handle it.

Q. I thought there had been a body of land sold to some Spokane parties north or east of Priests Rapids, and that you might know of it.—A. East or north of Priests Rapids?

Q. East of the river and lying perhaps a little north of Priests Rapids.—A. You have reference to what is known as the "Two Spot" ranch, that was owned by Col. Ridpath.

Q. And Senator Turner and others?—A. And Senator Turner and one other man—there were three of them interested in it. That is quite a valuable ranch on the east side of Priests Rapids; that is, opposite the Hanford power canal—it has nothing to do with this.

Q. It is a little north and on the east side of the river?—A. Yes, sir; a little north and on the east side of the river.

Q. Do you know what price that land was sold at?—A. No, sir; that was sold before my time.

Q. Now, the 8,000 acres were in that same flat on the opposite side of the river from the power plant of the Hanford Irrigation & Power

Co., and opposite Priests Rapids?—A. Well, that is a matter that I have no recollection about. If, as suggested by Mr. Higgins, that the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. made an inquiry or an application for those lands, I do not remember about it.

Q. As a matter of fact, they never actually attempted to carry on negotiations for them?—A. No, sir.

Q. If they had any purpose at any time, so far as you are advised, it was abandoned before negotiations were taken up with your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the price at which the lands were sold to the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. less than the price at which similar lands were sold to other companies? In other words, what I want to inquire is whether a different price was made to this company than would have been made to any other company or was made for like properties for like undertakings?—A. The price that we sell the lands to irrigation companies for depends on a number of things. First, the character of the soil, the expense of irrigating—I mean by that the cost of the project, the pumping project and the canals, also the distance from transportation is an element in fixing the price, and when I took the matter up with Judge Hanford about the price I had authority from Mr. Cooper to sell it as low as $2.50 an acre; but when I was discussing the question, one of the big elements of the value of the land, which was the cost of the project, with Judge Hanford, I found that his figures were only $15 an acre for constructing the ditches on the power plant, and I concluded that they could afford to pay us $10 an acre for the lands, so I simply suggested that price to Judge Hanford and talked that over with them, as I remember it, and he was satisfied to accept that price, $10 an acre, for the lands that were irrigable. Of course, as I have explained in my previous testimony, that the question of the value of nonirrigable lands came up later, and we made a reduction there from $3 an acre to $1 an acre.

Q. As a matter of fact, you afterwards discovered that the cost was much greater than was originally figured?—A. Well, I figured, as I wrote——

Q. I mean the cost of the irrigation project per acre.—A. Yes, sir; as I wrote Mr. Cooper that I thought their price of $15 an acre for irrigating the lands was altogether too low, because I did not think they could irrigate them for that. I had no special information about it, but then I go on the general principles that irrigation engineers generally figure much too low—the Government has found that out, and all other irrigation companies have—so I raised their price to $25 an acre and I still felt that they could afford to pay us $10 an acre for the land, making the price——

Q. That is, you raised the estimate in your own mind of the cost of irrigating the land $20 an acre?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still thought they could afford to pay you ten?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, you subsequently learned that it cost them much more than $25 an acre, didn't you?—A. Well, I don't know what it did eventually cost them.

Q. Did you ever abate the price at all in consequence of the added cost to this company of placing water upon the land?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HIGGINS. But you did abate the original price which you made on the land?

A. Yes, sir; on account of the larger area of the $10 lands. That is explained in the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. In fixing the price on these lands did you take into consideration at all the power possibilities that went with it?

A. No, sir; it was purely an irrigation proposition with us, without reference to any investment that they might have on the development of power or any return that they might make on the development of power.

Mr. HUGHES. None of your lands carry with them any right to take off the water from the rapids so as to give any power privileges? You do not sell any property of that kind, and did not, to the company? They bought that from others, didn't they?

A. I sold them a right of way for their power canal——

Q. Yes——A. Oh, do you mean riparian rights?

Q. Yes. You had no lands which you sold to the company that carried riparian rights at the points where they could divert the water from the falls?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or gain or acquire power?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But would the ownership of that land at the valley and the ownership of the power plant located at the falls—in other words, would a power plant there owned by a company who did not own the land be of equal value to them as it would be to the company that did own this land?

A. Well, it all depends on what kind of an agreement they had the land under. If they had a long-time lease of sufficient number of years to protect them in their investment, it would be just as good as holding the title.

Q. But the company owning the land could very well take into consideration the advantage which would come from owning the power plant there, too, and on that consideration consent to pay a somewhat increased price for the land? It would be worth more both for tillage and accessibility for power than if the rapids were not there?—A. Yes, sir; it would introduce another element of value into the property.

Q. And if the valley were a populous one, a very considerable element of value?—A. Yes, sir. In this particular case we did not own the land that controls the water power, and part of it was Government land and a portion of it was within an odd section, but we had previously sold the odd section to some sheepmen in connection with a sheep range that lies up back of it; but I did reserve, and I might here explain one of the transactions that we had with the irrigation and power company. I did reserve in my sale of the lands to that sheepman, Mr. J. C. Lloyd—I reserved a right of way for an irrigation and power canal, not because I had any idea that it would ever be constructed, but I thought it was along the river and that possibly some time in the future they might construct a canal, so I put the reservation in this contract, and when the Hanford Irrigation & Power Co. wanted to construct their power canal I fell back on that reservation, and in order to assist the Hanford company I compelled this sheepman to release his interest that he had in it, and then we conveyed that right of way that we had reserved to the Hanford Irrigation Co.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Plummer, the Government, prior to entering into this contract, had abandoned the undertaking to extend the Leadbetter Canal, so that it would be possible to irrigate any of those lands embraced in the Hanford project, hadn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequently developments have disclosed on the part of the Government that there is not sufficient water to undertake that larger scheme involving the Leadbetter Canal, so that but for the project of pumping the water by power from the Priests Rapids the irrigation of this body of land and the adjacent lands would be impracticable, wouldn't it?—A. I would not want to say that it is impracticable, because the Government has entered upon the policy of storing water at the headwaters of the Yakima, and have already impounded a large amount of water in one or two lakes—the Kachess Lake, and I think they are now doing work on Kachelas Lake. There are two other lakes that are susceptible of improvement for storage reservoirs, Cle Elum Lake and what they call McAllister Meadows; and I believe that when those four storage reservoirs are completed that there will be sufficient water for all of these lands, but that is going to take a great deal of money, and I do not believe the development will be made for a large number of years, so that when we speak of feasibility here I should say that the most feasible way to irrigate the lands is by pumping from the Columbia River, because that can be done immediately, and the lands can be developed and the pumping plant paid for, and the land will pay for itself many times over before it could be irrigated from the lakes at the headwaters of the Yakima River. So that I think the most feasible way of irrigating these lands is by pumping from the Columbia River.

Q. One other question, Mr. Plummer: Some reference has been made to Mr. Rust, and his name connected in some way with the bogy name of Guggenheim; now, is it not true that Mr. Rust——

Mr. HIGGINS (interrupting). The witness was the one that introduced the bogy name of Guggenheim. I asked him if Mr. Rust was the manager of the American Smelting & Refining Co.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not true that Mr. Rust sold to the American Smelting & Refining Co. his interest in the Tacoma smelter, and after this time?

A. Well, it may be, Mr. Hughes. I have no information about that. When Mr. Higgins asked me whether he was connected with the American Smelting & Refining Co. I did not remember whether that was the Guggenheim properties, but I merely suggested it was the Guggenheim interests.

Mr. HUGHES. I think it would be proper enough to say it if it were the case. I merely want to eliminate any such possible thought——

A. Yes, sir; I had no intention of making any misstatement in regard to that at all. It was simply to identify the smelter.

Q. You do know that Mr. Rust sold to the American Smelting & Refining Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And simply remained by contract for a year or two years, I forget which, as president of the company to conduct its operations after selling his interest?—A. My testimony was that Mr. Rust is the manager of the Tacoma Smelting Co., which I understood to be one of the Guggenheim properties.

Q. Well, it was bought by them after this time, wasn't it?—A. Oh, after the time that we were speaking about—well, that might possibly be; yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. In 1906 Mr. Rust was manager of the Tacoma smelter, was he?

A. He was manager of the Tacoma smelter, and I believe a large owner in the smelter himself, and I do not know what date it was sold—what date it was that he sold his interest—but I knew that he had sold his stock.

Q. Is he connected now with the concern?—A. Yes, sir; he is still the president of the smelter company, I guess; or at least he has the active management of it and lives in Tacoma.

Mr. HIGGINS. Then the record will show that it was Mr. Hughes who referred to the Guggenheim bogy and not you.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other files concerning this matter——

A. No, sir.

Q. In the transactions with the company anywhere else than in your possession?—A. No, sir. There are the originals of my letters to Mr. Cooper at St. Paul, but that is all.

Q. You referred in one of your answers to Mr. Higgins to where a certain file might be; that if it came by the mail it would be in this file, but if it came by messenger it would be in another file.—A. No, sir; I mean to say that if the remittance came by mail it would be attached to this file, but if it was sent by messenger there would be nothing to show it in these files. It would be merely shown in our remittance record at Tacoma—just a book which we keep of moneys that come across the counter and are not sent in by mail.

The CHAIRMAN. You state the fact to be, then, that all the files concerning this transaction are here?

A. Yes, sir; all of them.

The CHAIRMAN. We will expect you back at 9.30 Saturday morning.

A. KOLAR, recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Kolar, you had a conversation with a witness named Anderson after he had testified in this matter, didn't you?

A. Yes; well, not after he testified—previous to his testifying.

Q. Well, was that in regard to his testimony here?—A. Well, no; it was regarding a prospective witness and also what he stated. That was on a Saturday; that was on the 29th of last month.

Q. After you testified you left Seattle for a few days, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. And didn't you see in the newspaper some reference to something about a witness, what a witness said about you, calling you a stool pigeon, or something of that kind?—A. I didn't see him at all about that.

Q. I say didn't you see that in the newspaper?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, who was that witness?—A. That was Elmer Anderson.

Q. Now, then, at any time, either after you testified or after he testified, did you have a conversation with him?—A. Well, I didn't have a conversation with him from the time—let me see, on the 1st, that was the morning he was going to come here the next day to testify.

Q. Well, that was after you had testified?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, what was your conversation with him then?—A. Well, I talked to him first concerning what he knew about Judge Hanford, concerning liquor. He said, "Why, I know the old," and he mentioned a vile name. "I have served him ever since I have been here with benedictine," and he said, "if you can see your people"—I suppose he meant my boss—"and arrange with them that I can get a trip to Chicago out of this, at least $150, why I will come over and testify, and I will make the judge look a dirty deuce in a deck." I says, "Have you got any corroboration of that?" And he says, "Well," he says, "it occurred several times before the Frenchman"— he meant the other bartender—"but," he says, "he would not testify." I says, "Why would you want a trip to Chicago?" "Well," he says, "if I ever testify and tell the truth I could not stay around here any more—around the city." So that evening I left there and saw him on Monday morning—no, saw him on Monday evening, and I came in with a man by the name of Brown. I met him out on the street and I invited him to go in there and have a drink with me, and so he went in there and Elmer Anderson was just getting off the shift. He must have been subpœnaed in the morning, or probably that day, and was red in the face and said to me—called me a vile name and said, "After you get information from me and you cause me to lose my job—I am going over to-morrow to testify and to show you people up, you see if I don't." Now, that was in the presence of this Mr. Brown and also a few others there. I didn't pay any attention to whom those others were.

Q. That was all that conversation?—A. Yes, sir; that was all that conversation. So he came over the next day and I was not here when he testified, but I was on my way out east to stay there until yesterday morning.

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

Mr. HUGHES. Are you still working for the Burns Detective Agency?

A. I have ever since I was in the city here.

Q. Were you away from the city in their service?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are still under pay from them now?—A. I am.

Q. Have you ever been convicted of any offense?—A. Convicted of any offense?

Q. Yes; been in jail?—A. I don't know whether that means when I was in jail over there roping murderer Clark.

Q. Roping a murderer?—A. Yes; on that Barr murder case.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you went to jail purposely?

A. Yes.

Q. To be near and interviaw some one accused of homicide?—A. Yes; for murder; yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Never any other way?

A. No; and then also in Montana, in the same kind of a charge—in a bank robbery.

Mr. MCCOY. The same purpose, you mean?

A. The same purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all.

Mr. HIGGINS. Following the practice that has been followed in the past, I think it is only fairness to Mr. Anderson, he being the witness that Mr. Kolar contradicted, to give him an opportunity to take the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this intended for the record?

Mr. HIGGINS. That is for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hughes, do you desire Mr. Anderson brought in?

Mr. HUGHES. I should think it would be due to Mr. Anderson. He was not our witness. We had not had anything to do with Mr. Anderson.

Mr. HIGGINS. He was subpœnaed by the committee, I think.

Mr. DORR. I think he ought to be subpœnaed.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire it, Mr. Higgins? If you wish it, he will be brought in—if you desire it.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think it is only fair.

The CHAIRMAN (addressing the sergeant at arms). Mr. Brennan, woll you be good enough to see that Elmer Anderson gets a subpœna or request to attend, or you can notify him of what Mr. Kolar has said?

Whereupon an adjournment was taken until to-morrow morning, July 19, 1912, at 9.30 a. m.

NINETEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

JULY 19, 1912.

Continuation of proceedings pursuant to adjournment. All parties present as at former hearing.

WALTER A. MCCLURE, being recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. McClure, you were attorney for some of the people interested in the McCarthy Dry Goods Co. failure?

A. I was; yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the committee what occurred at the time the Stone & Fisher bid came in for consideration?—A. Yes. In order to get at that clearly, I think it will be necessary to state a little history chronologically, if the committee will permit. The assets were offered for sale in the regular way and the only bid received was that of the London Co. of something like $24,000, grossly inadequate, considered so by everybody; and it was a very large store and a very expensive concern, and I came to the courthouse and addressed Judge Hanford as he was about to go off the bench, telling him the situation and stating in detail all the facts in connection with it, and we discussed the matter there. He finally said—he asked me if I thought that I could obtain a purchaser, and I told him I saw no reason why I could not; and he said, after considering all of the facts of the matter, that if the receiver and his counsel could get a bid of $60,000 the court would approve the sale, unless there were objections offered by the parties in interest. And we went to work on the matter; I did nothing else for quite a little while; I was very anxious about that store; and Mr. Stone, of the Stone-Fisher Co., we succeeded in interesting him in the matter. He jockeyed with us. He started in at $40,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was this?

A. Mr. Stone, of the Stone-Fisher Co.; and we kept negotiating, continued our negotiations over several days, as my recollection runs, and finally we obtained from him a proposition in the morning of a day that he would pay $65,000. The question of his company's financial responsibility of course never entered into the matter, but he made the proposition that he would pay $10,000 in cash and the balance was to be paid $15,000 every 30 days. Of course I knew what that meant; he meant that he would simply borrow from the bank $10,000 and the balance he would get out of the assets, and he would get his thirty thousand back, too. It simply meant his practically buying the store for $10,000. The offer was made conditioned on immediate acceptance, and as soon as the offer was received I repaired to the courthouse and Judge Hanford was hearing something in regard to the railway commission; and he said, from the bench, that he would hear me at 4 o'clock that afternoon. And we notified everybody that the hearing would be at 4 o'clock that afternoon. I had forgotten that many of the creditors saw me, until I heard Mr. Smith's testimony here yesterday, and that recalled to my mind the fact that as soon as I told him about that, as a representative of the Western Dry Goods Co., he came up to my office and talked with me quite a while about the matter. The burden of his conversation was that the business ought to bring a good figure, and he thought $65,000 was too low. I am not sure, but my impression is I also talked with Mr. Gleason, of the American Savings Bank & Trust Co. At any rate their attorney——

Mr. PRESTON (interrupting). How much of a claim had that bank, approximately?

A. About $20,000.

Q. Proceed.—A. At any rate, their attorney telephoned me about the matter—Mr. Kane—and he was present in court at 4 o'clock. Judge Hanford suspended this rate commission hearing and took the matter up. I made as complete a statement as I was capable of as to the situation.

Q. Tell who were present and what percentage of creditors were represented.—A. Mr. Stern was present; Mr. Gray was present—Judge Gray; Mr. Smith, of the Western Dry Goods Co.; Mr. Kane, representing the bank. Of course Mr. Stone was there. While he had no rights as bidder at all, I asked him particularly to be present, because I wanted the court to fully understand his proposition. There were others present. I suppose from—oh, there must have been two dozen people. As to the proportion of the indebtedness, it is difficult for me at this time to state, but I would say that at least $40,000 and perhaps $60,000 was represented at that meeting. I know that we were particular to notify everyone whom we could reach in the city who had a claim or every representative of a claim here. I stated the proposition to the court and Mr. Kane addressed the court in opposition to the acceptance of the bid, stating that he was speaking for the bank. He said that he was also speaking for the Western Dry Goods Co., although he was not their regular counsel; Mr. Smith had applied to him and asked him to state his views upon the matter. Mr. Stern asked that the matter be held over for a few days. The——

Q. (Interrupting.) Stating the reason?—A. Yes; he stated the reason to the effect that some of the preferred stockholders were about to send or had sent a representative from Chicago, and perhaps from New York also, but it remains in my mind that he spoke of the Farwell Co., of Chicago—John B. Farwell & Co.

Q. Was this person that was coming out here, or these persons that were coming out from the East—did he say they were expected to bid?—A. No; he did not. He said that they were coming out to investigate; and it should be understood in that connection that there had been war among these preferred stockholders for several years, ever since McCarthy's death, in fact, but there was nothing tangible in connection with that; it was merely a repetition of what had been before in connection with that business as to the attitude of the preferred stockholders. I was very much astonished, because I considered that an extraordinarily good bid. In fact I had always found the Stone-Fisher people good bidders. If I could interest them in a stock, they would pay what was a good figure. And a question having been raised as to the kind of bid that was adduced, I asked the court, in Mr. Stone's behalf, for him to be given an opportunity to explain, and he made a statement in court as to the bid.

Q. What position did you and receiver take in regard to that sale there before the court?—A. Oh, we asked that the bid be accepted, and I felt so confident that it would be accepted—it seemed to me that a credit man who could not accept that bid would be—well, a consummate ass, I would call him, if the committee will pardon me for the expression.

Q. What, if anything, was said there about a delay—about holding Mr. Stone or Stone-Fisher's bid in abeyance for a few days?—A. The only thing that was said about that proposition was what was stated by Mr. Stern as to a representative of the preferred stockholders coming out for the purpose of investigating.

Q. I know; but did he ask that the Stone-Fisher bid be held in abeyance?—A. No.

Q. (Continuing.) Pending the arrival of this man?—A. No; I don't remember that anything of that kind was said.

Q. Did any question come up about whether it was necessary—whether the Stone bid would stand good for any length of time?—A. That bid was made to be accepted that day.

Q. What was said there before Judge Hanford about it?—A. That was the statement made.

Q. By whom?—A. Made by Mr. Stone. I stated the same thing, because that was my understanding of his position. I never heard that questioned until this minute, if it is questioned.

Q. What was the position taken by the creditors there—was there any creditor there favoring the acceptance of that proposition?—A. No creditor.

Q. What was the position, then, of the creditors in regard to that proposition—was it one of opposition to the acceptance of the bid?—A. All who expressed themselves were opposed.

Q. To the acceptance of the bid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Judge Hanford say anything at the conclusion of the matter?—A. He simply said, "The bid is rejected on the opposition of the creditors, the parties in interest."

Q. Did he say anything there about whether or not, in his opinion, the receiver and his attorneys would be able to get soon a better bid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, now, the sale was rejected and the business then was opened up as a going concern?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been testified here that after the 1st of January the business began losing money and continued in that condition until the fall, I believe. Why was it that that condition was allowed to go along in that way so long as September?

Mr. PRESTON. I believe, Mr. McCoy, wasn't it, September, the date of the sale?

Mr. MCCOY. September; yes.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes; until September.

A. The idea of these creditors and parties in interest, as expressed to me, was that that business should be sold in bulk; they desired to keep it as a going concern, to be turned over as a complete business.

Q. Well, why didn't you sell it, then, in bulk?—A. We made many attempts. That business caused me many a sleepless night. Couldn't do it. Mr. Strain came here from Montana. Every clew that I could learn of I followed up with diligence; could not sell it in bulk. At the beginning of the year 1907 there was a freight blockade in this country; it took in some instances six months to get stuff through from the East, and in the fall of 1907 the goods that should have theretofore been in the merchants' stores months before were arriving, and every merchant was stocked up to the limit. We could not interest any of them in the purchase of the business.

Q. Now, is there anything else about that McCarthy dry-goods matter that you have in your knowledge or recollection that would be of interest to the committee—the congressional committee?—A. I don't know of anything, Mr. Preston, except I am always, always have been and always shall be, exceedingly reluctant to operate a business by a receiver or trustee; I think it is the most foolish thing that an officer can do, except in those instances where the operation of the business is the business; but I think that a receiver or trustee who operates a business, mercantile concern or anything of that kind, is making a great mistake. It has always been my opinion, based upon years of experience.

Q. Now, Mr. McClure, this morning you called my attention to a feature ofthe decision of the court of appeals in the Knosher case that had escaped my attention.—A. Yes.

Q. Will you explain it, just to call their attention to it?—A. Yes.

Q. They will read the opinion themselves. I don't want you to rehearse the opinion.—A. The decision of the court of appeals in the Knosher case reduced the allowances made by the lower courts one-third. The order, however, of the lower court was that the allowances made by that court were in full of all allowances to the final closing of the estate. The opinion of the court of appeals, as nearly as I can understand it, is that the allowances made by that court are the allowances up to the date of the entry of the order of allowance in the lower court, and I don't know—and I would be glad to have the eminent lawyers constituting this committee tell us whether that means that further allowances should be made. As I say, I don't want any, I tried to get rid of what I had, but the opinion of the court of appeals tends that way, if words mean what they ordinarily mean.

Mr. PRESTON. That is all the questions I desire to ask Mr. McClure.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. I would like to have Judge Hoyt examined for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the judge present?

Mr. PRESTON. I will get him.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Dorr, while we are waiting—and Mr. Preston, while we are waiting—the addresses which you handed the committee, made by Judge Hanford on the subject of conservation, may as well go in the record at this time, one of which is reported in the Post-Intelligencer of September 23, 1909, and the other copy furnished by Judge Hanford, with the resolutions adopted by the meeting at which the address was made.

Mr. PRESTON. I wanted to say that Judge Hanford furnished also a newspaper clipping.

The CHAIRMAN. Mark those, Mr. Reporter, in order numerically, as exhibits, and let them go in the record.

Papers referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 85" and "Exhibit No. 86," respectively.

JOHN P. HOYT, being recalled, testified as follows:

Mr. PRESTON. Judge Hoyt, I think it was on yesterday—it was on yesterday—I asked you to make such an examination as you could of the referee's records so as to be able to inform the committee as to the extent to which the local association of the merchants and the credit men, or either, were voiceful or influential in naming their own representative as receiver and trustee, or either, in bankruptcy estates. Give the committee such information as you have been able in that time to gather.

A. With the other business—I was holding court all of yesterday afternoon and I only had an opportunity to glance at my appearance docket and such like. I took, therefore, as a sample, No. 10 of my—I keep a flexible-cover appearance docket—No. 10, of which I have filled 20, assuming that that would be fairly representative—and I examined those, the cases recorded in No. 10, and I find that it covered from January to October, substantially, in 1908, if I remember rightly. During that time there were trustees appointed in about 30 cases. Of course there were more cases brought than that, but, as your committee is aware, under certain contingencies no trustee is appointed and the matter is reported back without the appointment of a trustee. I understand that in some districts they appoint a trustee in each case, but that has not been the rule here, to appoint where there was no estates and no creditor appeared; the practice has been to report them back without the appointment of a trustee. In the 30 cases I find that Mr. Jennings, who was secretary of the Merchants' Association at that time, and the acting manager, was appointed trustee in 11 cases and was receiver in the larger number of them.

Q. The larger number of the 11, you mean?—A. Yes; and that where the—and Mr. Telfer, who was the assistant secretary and general manager of the association, was appointed in several; I didn't have time to see—in at least three or four cases during the time; and I found that in several of the other cases, noticeably quite an important case which by some reason came to me from Lewis County, because the larger creditors were here, Schwabacher Bros. & Co. being one of the larger, that appointment was made while—and one of the members of the firm of Schwabacher Bros. & Co. was appointed. The practice—I might say, for the information of the committee, I don't know that the practice here has been as it has been in other districts. I came in—had no precedents when I commenced and have not had much opportunity to consult outside precedents except as they have appeared in the reports of the courts—the practice here has always been the referee has never yet attempted to control the personnel of the receiver or trustee, never in a single instance. I have considered that bankruptcy law designed that the creditors should control that, and that it gave them the right absolutely to control the trusteeship, and that consequently the best policy was to allow them to control the appointment of receivers; and when the petition was filed making it appear that a receiver was necessary I have always allowed the one—allowed the creditors, petitioning creditors or others—to suggest a receiver, if I found that it was necessary that there should be one, and I have in every instance appointed that one, reserving the right always to inquire as to their competency and efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. In how many instances were custodians appointed instead of receivers?

A. I never have appointed a custodian as such.

The CHAIRMAN. In how many cases did you have anyone, under any name, take care of the property until the creditors selected a trustee, without having a receiver?

A. That practice has never prevailed here. In a few instances where it did not—in a few instances where it appeared to me clearly that there was no—that there was no reasonable necessity for a receiver, often where there was personal property I have authorized the bankrupt himself to lock the door and bring the key and deposit it with the referee or the court, and that is the only way aside from the appointment of a receiver, in this district, so far as I know, at least in my court, there has been any attempt to have possession of property excepting by the appointment of a receiver. In a few cases the marshal has been named as acting receiver. I could not say in how many. I don't think there has been more than a dozen cases in the 14 years, but what, where receivers have been appointed, I have appointed them.

Mr. MCCOY. Where do you find any rule in the bankruptcy law, Judge Hoyt, for the appointment of a receiver by the referee?

A. Well, that is—it has been assumed here. Judge Hanford, at an early—in fact I guess at my suggestion, as I knew he was hard at work—he made an order under that clause of the bankruptcy law which provides that the referee may be clothed with such jurisdiction of the judge as the judge sees fit to clothe him with, with certain exceptions which are familiar to your honor. I see you are familiar with the bankruptcy law. You remember there are three or four things that the referee can't do, but aside from that under the statutes he may, as I understand it, be clothed with the power to do anything that the judge could do, and that has been the practice in this district, for the referee in—I suppose that Judge Hanford has taken—has not in more than a dozen cases taken jurisdiction for the purpose of appointing a trustee. I know so far as——

Q. (Interrupting.) A receiver?—A. A receiver, I mean. Never, so far as I know, excepting the receiver was appointed before adjudication. Of course before adjudication it has been—excepting the judge was absent—I have never thought the referee was clothed with power to appoint a receiver except in the absence of the judge, to conserve the property under that clause of the bankruptcy law.

Mr. HIGGINS. You will agree that in a number of contingencies the court has the appointment of the trustee, will you?

A. Of course if the creditors fail to appear and the schedules show the necessity for the appointment of a trustee, as I take it, it is the duty of the referee to apoint a trustee.

Mr. HIGGINS. But the court also under certain contingencies——

A. Well, you mean the judge of the court?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

A. (Continuing.) As distinguished from the referee?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

A. He may of course appoint—the act specially clothes him. Of course anything the referee can do he can do, and more. The judge, of course, has a right to review all the referee's actions and act at his own instance in reference to any matter which would ordinarily come before a referee. That is as I understand the statute.

Mr. PRESTON. Judge Hoyt, speaking generally from your recollection, what would you say to the committee as to the extent of participation by the Seattle Credit Men's Association, or merchants association, or either of them when they were separate in the naming of receivers and trustees? You have spoken of one volume. Now, I ask you, from your recollection, in a general way, what you have to say?

A. They did; those whom they were supposed—who were supposed to represent them have practically—have done it in practically all cases. As was disclosed, I think by the testimony here, they had an organization of the three larger creditors, controlling the selection of an attorney in the matter, and the attorney, acting in pursuance of that article of their association, has in nearly every instance, excepting where—a few cases where nearly all the creditors were in the East—has in nearly every instance controlled—made the suggestion as to who the receiver should be, and he has been appointed, and they have elected the trustee; in fact, I believe there has never been a receiver appointed but in one instance, in the 14 years, by me as referee, who was not afterwards elected by the creditors at the first meeting to succeed himself as trustee. In one or two other instances he declined to act, and in one there was a contest and he was—the receiver was defeated at the election.

Q. Have you any recollection of these Seattle creditors or these Seattle associations of creditors having selected Mr. Sutcliffe Baxter as the man they wanted as receiver or trustee?—A. I could only speak with certainty in one case and that was the case of—I am very poor to recollect names—Dowle, I think the name was—Alice C. Dowle—was that the name?

Mr. McCoy. Dowle he called it; D-o-w-l-e.

The Witness. D-o-w-l-e; that is the way he was spelled. I don't know how you pronounce it. In that case Mr. Baxter was appointed by Judge Hanford at the express request of those who were attacking the sheriff's attachment proceedings. It seemed to be necessary, to prevent attaching creditors' rights accruing, that somebody should be appointed, and I know that the attorney who was acting for the majority of the creditors told me that he suggested that Mr. Baxter be appointed, and he was appointed.

By Mr. Preston:

Q. Now, you have been speaking very largely of what occurred before you as referee. What knowledge have you as to whether Judge Hanford——

A. (Interrupting.) Well, my best recollection is as to that, that in very few instances—I don't think it would exceed a dozen in the 14 years—has Judge Hanford appointed receivers. It has become a practice, whether rightfully or wrongfully, to go to the—when there was an adjudication for the attorneys securing the adjudication to apply to the referee if they desired a receiver, and the referee has acted in the appointing of a receiver.

Mr. McCoy. I would suggest that for all interested in those matters here it might be well to look up the law on that. I should think a very doubtful title might be gotten from a receiver appointed by the referee. I never had occasion to look it up.

Mr. Hughes. What?

Mr. McCoy. I say I should think a title received through a receiver appointed by a referee in bankruptcy might be a doubtful thing to have.

The Witness. The title does not come from the receiver, as you have narrated; the title is generally conveyed, except in a few instances, by the trustee.

Mr. McCoy. Have you had cases where——

A. (Interrupting.) Yes; there has been quite a good many sales. I don't know but I ought to on my own motion say a word as to that. Conditions are peculiar here. Rents are, as it seems to me, exorbitant, and there is no doubt but what that provision of the statute which authorizes sales as an emergency has been given at least full force here, but it never has been done excepting, so far as I know, excepting at the request of the leading creditors when they were, the great bulk of the creditors were represented; but never has a sale been made by the receiver against the protest of a single creditor. We have found here that estates yielded the best results the sooner the sale was made after the adjudication, and in the interest of results a practice has grown up here, and has been used to a considerable extent, of making sales by receivers of merchandise stocks—no other of course—where it was thought that a much better price could be realized, and I perhaps—my experience has been that to allow the business to be run by the court as a retail business has been destructive of the rights of creditors. I have only allowed it, I believe, in about three cases since I have been referee—have allowed the business to be continued by retail—and in every instance I have been disappointed as to the result. We have got better results by selling at once, if we got a fairly decent offer for the property.

Mr. PRESTON. Now, I didn't get to complete my question to you. What I wanted you to tell the committee was—I don't know what your knowledge of it is; maybe you have none; if so, you will say so—as to whether Judge Hanford, in those few cases in which he has appointed receivers, he, personally, had done so after the local creditors have had their hearing and had their influence upon him.

A. A representative of the local creditors has always done that, I think, from what they say to me—the representatives. As I say, this person—that is, where the local creditors are interested—the person who represents the association is selected by this committee of three and he is the one that takes the proceedings; and in every instance he has been heard by Judge Hanford, judging from his own statements to me, before the appointment of a receiver.

Q. Well, do you know whether Judge Hanford has appointed receivers that they desired?—A. Well, I can't speak with certainty as to that in all cases, but I know in some cases he has appointed—I can't say with certainty whether in all cases he has appointed receivers suggested to him or not. He may have pursued a different policy from what the referee has.

Mr. PRESTON. I have no further questions.

Witness excused.

Mr. PRESTON. May I call Mr. Shaffner now in the Scobey case?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. PRESTON. Would the committee like me to give you a little short statement of that case to aid you in hearing the testimony, or have you had a chance to go over the record that you have there?

Mr. MCCOY. We haven't; at least I haven't.

Mr. PRESTON. I think in one minute I could help you some, if you desire.

WALTER SHAFFNER, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Preston, ought we to have, in the interest of expedition, the corporation counsel here while this testimony is being given?

Mr. PRESTON. He is here; that is, the assistant is here.

Mr. MCCOY. The one who had charge of the case?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Tucker here. He was employed also on the other side of the case.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. I purpose to call them all.

Mr. MCCOY. Yes; all right.

Mr. PRESTON. Now I can help you in one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. If you would make a succinct statement of it, it would help us greatly.

Mr. PRESTON. The suit was a suit by a nonresident taxpayer, a citizen of another State.

The CHAIRMAN. Just state what suit.

Mr. PRESTON. The Scobey suit, to obtain an injunction against the recall election that was being put under way. The complaint contained allegations, first, that the amendment to the city charter which provided a means for future further amendment to the city charter was not lawfully adopted in accordance with the constitutional law; second, that the amendment made pursuant to that mode prescribed by which the recall feature was brought into the city charter was not legally adopted; third, that a recall petition had been circulated and filed with the city comptroller, who is the accounting officer, you might say, of the city, and the complaint alleged that under this amendment to the city charter which established the recall system in the city government, there were necessary 8,671 signers, and accompanying those signers or each slip or petition as it came in—each sheet was required to have an affidavit of some person that the signatures of all those who signed it were their genuine signatures and I think that they were qualified electors—I am not quite certain about the last; anyhow it will come out later.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. PRESTON. The complaint alleged that the comptroller was about to certify to the council that this petition contained 8,671 names; that there were 11,000 purported signatures to it, and that his office force was not sufficient to properly check that petition and he was going to file it without properly checking it; that he was going to certify that there were 8,671 good signatures to it; that at least 300 of those signatures, a part of which he was going to count to make up his 8,671, were forgeries; that quite a number of others, I think 800 of them—eight, five, or eight, you will pardon me if I am not accurate in that figure—of the signers, of the signatures, were obtained by false representations by the solicitors, one representation being that the documents they were asked to sign had something to do with an election to obtain a museum site or art gallery site for the city, another that the petition they were asked to sign was a petition requiring some means of double tracking of some of the street railroad system here in the city, and that of those signatures so fraudulently obtained, a number were being counted by the comptroller in his 8,671; that a great many of the signatures were obtained by paid solicitors in the employ of a public welfare league, I think it is called, an association here in town in opposition to Mayor Gill; that those paid solicitors were out on the street corners, had obtained signatures from utter strangers, not knowing them, either their qualifications or their identity, and yet were making the affidavit, and upon that solicitor's affidavit, made in ignorance of the truth, the comptroller was counting those names also, or a part of them, in his 8,671. Then there was a general allegation that there were not 8,671 genuine signatures. That is my recollection of the allegation; I can't state it as it was from memory. It was also alleged that the tax levy for that year had been based upon estimates upon hearing and that this recall petition was then being circulated and the members of the council well understood that there was an attempt to have a recall election and that they had made no levy for that purpose, and that any city fund in existence, any money out of which this expense of election, alleged to be $15,000, could be paid, had been exhausted and that the comptroller and the city council—and I should have said that the members of the city council were also defendants in this action—were going ahead and use city money to cover this $15,000 expense, which they were not legally entitled to use and must therefore divert from some other fund, the other fund being a fund not legally applicable to that purpose.

Upon the presentation of the complaint an order to show cause was made and served upon the defendants, requiring them to show cause at a certain day—I forget the date—it was seven or eight days I think ahead, or maybe three or four, I don't remember now—why the temporary injunction prayed for in the bills should not issue. Now, on that day the defendants came in, represented by the corporation counsel, and filed their demurrer to the bill, attacking the jurisdiction of the court, and also the general ground that there was no equity in the bill, and that they were not entitled to the relief demanded, and so forth. And upon that hearing briefs were filed, largely upon the question of jurisdiction, by both sides—typewritten briefs—and they are in your transcript; the question seeming to be whether the taxpayer who did not allege an interest in the funds equal to the $2,000 requirement of jurisdiction could maintain a suit, or whether, on the other side, the amount of money involved, the $15,000, was the test of jurisdiction as to amount. Judge Hanford overruled the demurrer to the jurisdiction and granted the temporary injuntcion.

Mr. McCoy. That is, an injunction pendente lite.

Mr. Preston. Pendente lite. We call it a temporary injunction here.

The Chairman. The district attorney is here now.

Mr. Preston. Have you that document for the committee?

Mr. McLaren. Yes; I have it [producing paper].

Mr. Preston. Mr. Shaffner, you were one of the attorneys for the complainant in the Scobey suit, and also in the O'Connor suit?

A. I was.

Mr. Preston. I should have stated that the O'Connor suit, which you have, was another suit just like that, filed the same day, containing the same allegations, except the allegation that O'Connor's property holdings—he being a citizen of New York State—in the city were——

The Witness. In the neighborhood of $250.000.

Mr. Preston (continuing). $250,000 in value.

Mr. McCoy. What is the name of this witness?

Mr. Preston. Shaffner.

Mr. McCoy. What is his full name?

Mr. Preston. What is your full name?

A. Walter Shaffner.

Q. You are an attorney here in Seattle?—A. I am.

Q. Were you one of the attorneys for the complainant in the Scobey case?—A. I was.

Q. Were you present in court and did you take part in the argument before Judge Hanford upon the demurrer?—A. I did.

Q. What if anything was said by Judge Hanford, either in the course of the argument of the demurrer or at the time of his ruling upon the demurrer, in regard to a plea or answer?—A. Well, as I remember, in the morning when the matter was first called, on the suggestion of Mr. Tucker, I believe, or possibly of Mr. Calhoun, both of whom appeared for the defendants, the argument was at first confined solely to the jurisdictional points and we argued that all morning, and as I recall it, on the convening of court in the afternoon, Judge Hanford orally announced his determination of the jurisdictional feature.
