Why Multimedia?

- Discover the world through images, sounds or videos
- Support different learning styles
- Contribute your own media files
- Create a free multimedia knowledge base

Goals

Here are our goals for fiscal year 2013-14:

- improve viewing experience
- enable seamless contributions
- develop curation / feedback tools
- help editors add files on articles
- support campaign organizers

Summer Goals

Here are our goals for Q1 2013-14:

- Planning (define vision, inventory + backlog)
- Development (build a few useful features)
- Research (identify important needs from both new and power users)
- Hiring (recruit 2 engineers, + part-time designer, researcher + community liaison)
- Legal (license MPEG4 video codec)

Summer Features

Here are key features we are considering this summer:

- Media Viewer (see images in large size, on the same page)
- File Notifications (release Echo on Commons)
- File Feedback (rating tool, compare 2 pictures)
- Upload Wizard (fix bugs, refactor code)
- GLAM Tools (GWToolset)

More summer tasks

Here are our other tasks we plan to for Q1 2013-14:

- Architecture Audit
- Commons Research
- Multimedia Roundtables
- Design Tools + Displays
- Plan better integration with Wikipedia
- MPEG-4 Codec licensing

John Harrison Clark

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

John Harrison Clark or Changa-Changa (c. 1860–1927) was an adventurer from the South African Cape who effectively ruled much of what is today southern Zambia from the early 1890s through to 1902. Unassisted by any government, he arrived to the country in about 1887, reputedly as an outlaw, and assembled and trained a private army of Senga natives, which he used to drive off various bands of slave-raiders. He took control of a bloc of territory on the north bank of the Zambezi river called Mashukulumbwe, became known as Chief "Changa-Changa" and, through a series of treaties with local chiefs, gained mineral and labour concessions covering much of the region.

Starting in 1897, Clark attempted to secure protection for his company. The company took little notice of him. When a local chief, Changa-Changa, Clark had secured his concessions while passing himself off as a chief, he collected hut tax for at least two years, with no authority or military power, and did so in 1902. Clark then farmed for about two years in the late 1910s to Broken Hill, where he became a prominent landowner in Northern Rhodesia. Remaining in Broken Hill for the rest of his life.

File Curation

Purpose:

- Curate new files to identify useful media for Wikipedia
- Make it easier to tag files or nominate them for deletion

Users:

- All Commons patrollers (and Wikipedia curators?)

Features:

- A list where editors can preview files that need to be reviewed
- A review tool that helps editors curate files more easily
- Repackage existing tools in a better UI ('Nominate for deletion')

File Feedback

Purpose:

- Surface useful files, rated by quality

Users:

- Commons or Wikipedia users

Features:

- A quick rating tool to tag files that seem useful
- Can be thumbs-up/down -- or compare 2 images
- Sorting / filtering tools for ranking lists or galleries by rating
