"THE GLORY AND SHAME OF ENGLAND."

Methonoph that dire Oppression's meed
Was by my country was;

That, queen of wrong and cruelty,
She wore the crimtoned crown.

But ah! has not her mother's gra-Half torn it from her brow? And will not her heroic child E'er long be fain to bow?

For, the's gentle bard once sung,
"Shaves breathe not Britain's air,"
I find, though called by other names,
That trembling slaves are there.

True, they breathe not the air that sk O'er meads and flowery beds; For, loaded to their lungs it comes, With dust and cotton shreds.

O, Slavery! wast thou not content With these, our bright domains, Which echo Freedom's loudest songs While millions wear thy chains?

That thon must send thy blasting breatl Across old ocean's wave, To taint the air of Britain's isle, Which once would free the slave?

Availed it not that India's plains Were darkened by thy frown, And Moslem fetters long had weighe Her hapless children down;

That Britaia, when her bauners we O'er mouutain, hill, and plain, Must hind upon her captive ones A still more galling chain?

Britain! who rescued from thy grasp Her beauteous, western isles, That ransomed thousands might rejoic In Freedom's sunny smiles!

Britain | where generous hearts are ye O'er all oppressed by thee; And pledged that Freedom's fires be be Till every land is free!

Has she forgotten despot kings, And conquerors of renown, Whn quaffed thy cap until they reeled Beneath their ponderous crown;

Until the victims of their power, With might before anknown, Upon their proud oppressors turned, And harded them from their throne?

And does she think, elate with power, Safely to wear her crown, When He, the righteous King of Kings, Beholds her with a frown?
