JOHN SPRUNT HILL

John Sprunt Hill.

JOHNSPRUNT HILL was born near Faison, North Carolina, on March 17th, 1869. His parents, William D. Hill and Frances Diana Faison, were both descendants of families who moved to the eastern part of this State from Virginia in 1770. Here they acquired large property interests, and have ever been leaders in the community.

Hill entered the University in September, 1885, at the age of sixteen. He soon was marked as a man of unusual powers as a student, and as a man of affairs. He joined here the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, and was one of the founders of the Order of Gimghouls. He easily led his class in scholarship, graduating maxima cum laude with the Class of 1889. He delivered the Philosophical Oration at Commencement, and missed being Valedictorian by a small fraction of a point.

In the fall of 1891, Mr. Hill entered the Law School of the University, where he remained a year, leaving here to enter the middle class of law at Columbia. Soon after his entrance, he won a scholarship in law. While at Columbia, Mr. Hill joined the legal fraternity, Phi Delta Phi. In May, 1894, he was admitted to the New York bar, and in June of that year left Columbia with the degree of Bachelor of Laws.

Immediately after graduation, he became managing clerk of a prominent law firm in New York City. In January, 1895, he began the practice of law on his own account. He is now the senior member of the firm of Hill, Stureke & Andrews.

At the outbreak of the Spanish War, in the spring of 1898, Mr. Hill promptly volunteered for service, and was chosen as one of the men who composed Troop A and represented the squadron in the field. He did yeoman service in the Porto Rican campaign.

In the fall of 1900, Mr. Hill was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourteenth District of New York. In this campaign, he conducted a most brilliant canvass in opposition to the policy of the administration. He was one of the few Democratic candidates who boldly declared against free silver, and, though supporting Mr. Bryan, favored the gold standard. Although defeated, Mr. Hill ran four thousand votes ahead of the Democratic ticket in his district.

On November 29th, 1899, Mr. Hill married Miss Annie Louise, daughter of Mr. George W. Watts, of Durham, North Carolina. They now reside at No. 264 West Seventy-second Street, New York City.

Mr. Hill is prominent in the social life of the metropolis. He is a Mason, and a member of the New York Bar Association; the Reform Club, Squadron A, the Southern Society, the Colonial Club, the Spanish War Veterans' Association, and the New York Alumni Association of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. He is a member of the Brick Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Hill has always kept in touch with the University, and it was by his generosity that the Hill Prize in History was established. He was an honorary ball manager of the Commencement of 1900.

His thirty-one years have been active ones, and the brilliant success he has attained in the city of his adoption in such a short space of time speaks much for his energy and his ability.

Introduction.

WITH this issue of THE YACKETY YACK begins a new movement in the publication of a university annual. Hitherto, this has been done by the fraternities alone; THE YACKETY YACK is issued by the literary societies and the fraternities of the University. The effort has been made to make it representative of the whole life of the University. The editors appreciate the support of the student body, and take this opportunity of thanking all who have aided in this work. Good or bad, we give it to you with the hope that it may be the beginning of a permanent University Annual.

Francis Preston Venable, Ph. D.

FRANCIS PRESTON VENABLE, Ph. D., was born near Farmville, Prince Edward County, Virginia, on November 17th, 1856. His father was the late Charles Scott Venable, a member of General Robert E. Lee's staff, Professor of Mathematics, and for a long time Chairman of the Faculty of the University of Virginia.

After finishing his preparatory education in the High School of Charlottesville, Virginia, Dr. Venable entered the University of Virginia, where he graduated with high honor in 1877. For one year he was assistant in the University High School at New Orleans, after which he returned to the University of Virginia and completed a year's post-graduate work. In 1880, he went abroad and studied at the University of Bonn. After he had completed two semesters, he was elected Professor of Chemistry in the University of North Carolina, which position he filled, in a very able manner, until elected to the presidency of the institution on June 5th, 1900. The spring following the year in which he was elected Professor, he spent at the University of Göttingen, where he received the degree of doctor of philosophy.

The reputation of Dr. Venable as a chemist is well known. He has been regarded as the leader of Southern chemists. This fact is shown by his election to numerous offices in the section of chemistry of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is now a fellow of the London and German Chemical Societies.

Dr. Venable has published over sixty contributions to scientific knowledge. His most important works are, "Short History of Chemistry," "The History of the Periodic Law," and "Inorganic Chemistry According to the Periodic Law" (the latter in conjunction with Prof. J. L. Howe).

Endowed by nature with great ability, splendid opportunities coupled with close application on his part, have made Dr. Venable a polished scholar and a cultured gentleman. To this he has added the character of a Christian. Of splendid executive ability, admired and respected by all that come in contact with him, the record of his first year as president a brilliant one, it is confidently expected that the University, under the control of Dr. Venable, will continue as it has in the past, the head of the educational interests in the State.

SENIOR CLASS

Senior Class History.

THE Class of 1901 has the honor of being the first to go out from this University in the new century. We spent most of our university life in the nineteenth century: we leave, having passed only a few months in the twentieth. It is fitting to review, in part, the work done, and to say a few words of the life of the Class during the past four years.

As we look back over our four years of university life, there come up memories and associations which we are unable to keep back. We shall speak briefly of the more important events—those which have impressed themselves so indelibly upon us.

The Class of 1901 entered the University four years ago, one hundred and fifty strong. This was one of the largest classes in the history of the University. In many ways, we were like other Fresh classes which had preceded us, and not very different from those which have followed. It did not take us very long to get acquainted with some who are always willing to assist new men. There was one class which we did not wish to know that we were here, but they, too, soon found out that some new men had arrived on the "Hill," so they, in welcoming us, made special inquiry where the Fresh were from, and, in an indirect way, wished to know where each new man roomed. The medicine usually applied to Freshmen (not internally, however,) did not fail to have its effect on us. The time came for the annual watermelon feast, a collection was taken up, and we were especially invited to attend. We paid for the melons, but failed to participate in the feast. The remainder of the fall term was an uneventful one until the December examinations. When English I was reported, a new supply of red ink was ordered.

In the spring term, as it has for the past century, Washington's birthday came around, and that historic holiday found us, for a part of the day, at least, in Memorial Hall receiving our well deserved medals. As time went by, the spring examinations found us in a better condition than the fall examinations had. We were becoming accustomed to our surroundings and getting better acquainted with each other, and we breathed a little more freely, until the annual visit of the Sophomores, commencement week.

During our second year, many kinds of amusement served to break the monotony of student life. It would be an injustice to the Class to leave the impression that there was anything done contrary to the wishes of the Faculty, although we frequently have been alluded to as the "Naughty-ones." We were Sophomores, and acted as such.

When we returned for the third year, our Class was much reduced in numbers. Some had entered the professional schools—others did not return. We had left the previous year our feelings of Sophomores, and were thinking of more serious things—more serious than "Conics," even. But there were yet some things which troubled us. One was, "The Study of Ourselves," catalogued as "Psychology"; another obstacle in our way was, "The Study of the General Properties of Matter," or "The Study of Energy." No new theories were advanced, or any original ideas heard of. But the December examinations were posted, and some said :

"It is better to be born lucky than rich."

Others said :

"It is better to get a five than a six."

The spring term came and passed, and our Junior year passed into history.

With fresh courage and renewed energy, we came back to the University last September to resume our studies. There are fifty-two of us. In athletics, our men have always stood well, furnishing some of the strongest men for the football and baseball teams. On the track team, our men have aided in winning honors for the University. In the Inter-Society and Inter-Collegiate debates, we have been well represented. Intellectually, the Class is very good, having furnished a good number of men to the Alpha Theta Phi.

Now, fellow classmates, the time of parting is drawing near, and we who have spent four years at the University, standing together in victory and defeat, must say farewell. It has passed into a proverb that success is reached through failure—repeated failure has come to all. We have made many mistakes. Man, at best, only moves towards what is perfect, and the goal is reached through the lessons taught by repeated mistakes. We leave to take part in the larger world. We shall always think of our Alma Mater as the "Mecca" for North Carolina.

JUNIOR CLASS

Spring
1904
New York

Junior History.

OCCASIONALLY, in these dreamy spring-days, your Historian gets to moralizing as he looks back over his college days. What a complete little life those three years are; a life that had its birth and growth to higher powers; a life, too, that leads to another beyond it. These golden college days; they are indeed an epoch, a period in the lives of us all. We shall never see their like again.

September, 1898, ushered us into this little world—little to those beyond us, but how real and whole to us. We came silently, hesitatingly, an unknown world lay before us. We were not even a class, just ninety-six men gathering to a common goal. Among our ranks, we counted men and boys—from the smart youngsters of barely sixteen to the man who had already faced the problems of the world and found them a hard reality. Men from the east who had followed their team across eastern loam under a blazing summer's sun; men from the west who in the depths of winter had "loaded" timber down our great western divide. And yet all of them were become as little children, the newborn, the youngest of the college world. The rude elements were thrown together in the crucible. Much there was of good, much of evil; some affinity, and much dissension. What would be the outcome? Time has shown. Standing now in the third phase of college life, looking forward to the full manhood of Seniority, we can point with pride to our record and say, "All is well."

As Freshmen, our lot was not other than that of most Fresh classes. We realized in a way our newness and greenness; we may even have been ashamed of it. The Sophs harried us, the Professors laughed at us, our Class team was sorely defeated—there were none so low as to do us reverence—but yet we did not despair. The Sophs indeed suggested that we throve and flourished like a green gourd vine. The summer of 1899 passed and we came back again, but vastly changed—in bearing if not in mind. The humble guise of Freshman had dropped from us; we were Sophomores rampant; our voice was loud in the land. Our ranks had thinned, but we had blood in our eyes; our day of tribulation was past. The Freshmen trembled before our mighty raids and the Faculty, remembering perhaps their own college days, got off ragged wit about "Sophomores and other fools." We aspired to athletic honors and our team made an enviable record. In scholarship, too, though sorely tried by Conic and Chemistry, we stood well to the fore.

And now, once more the wheel has swung round; we are Juniors, upper classmen, envied by those below us. We do not claim perfection; we are even disposed to be cynical, but not of our own merits. At last our class "knows itself"; the spirit of hearty cooperation has entered. The year has not yet ended but already we can point to a fair record. The class team tied for championship; on the 'Varsity we can count such men as Carr, Roberts, Brem, and Willecox. We have faced Psychology and Junior Physics without serious disaster. Ten of our men have made Alpha Theta Phi, the honorary society,—the largest number that has ever come from one class. Klutz, who helped win last year's Vanderbilt debate, and Williams and Stern, our Georgia debaters this year, are from our ranks. And now, Senior year is close at hand and the gap that once seemed so far is almost bridged. The year has been pleasant. Perhaps, as Seniors, we may look back with ill-concealed amusement on our Junior year, and smile to think how far we are above such follies. It is strange how readily one holds the past as of little worth and fancies the present nearest perfection. But I can not trifle longer; if you are interested let me commend to you "Höfding on Consciousness." And now your Historian yields the scene. His task has been a pleasant one; his only regret is that he could not serve you better.

SOPHOMORE CLASS

History of '03.

“THE Class of 1903,” said Dr. Alderman, “is the best prepared class that has, within my experience, entered the University.” Never has the efficacy of a good foundation been more emphatically illustrated, for the Class of '03 has, thus far in its career, always and in all things excelled. The Sophomore year of this great class has been conspicuously successful. Last fall, the boys of '03 returned to the University with eyes wide open to the hardships of the course, but with eager confidence that they both could and would surmount them. That they have done so, and that they have done so gloriously, the books of the registrar abundantly attest. Horace, Demosthenes, Trigonometry—all these are things of a beautiful past. But the Class of '03 has been foremost not in the general routine of their studies alone. The debating societies have felt the weight of their eloquence. The University Magazine has profited by their literary talent. In short, the Class of 1903 has proved itself invaluable to the University in every intellectual pursuit.

But let no one think that we are a mere set of thin-chested grinds. As successful as the Sophomores have been in the intellectual, they have proved themselves equally successful in the athletic. When, in the autumn, there was a call for players on the 'Varsity football team, among those broad-shouldered, massive giants that went forth upon the field, how many did we recognize as the boys of '03! And when the pigskin, after a hard fought field, would finally be pushed heroically over the line, how often at the end of those nine enthusiastic “rahs,” would come forth the name of a Sophomore! But, though with the interest of our Alma Mater always first at heart, we lent the strongest of our material to the making of that 'Varsity which proved itself so successful, still in looking over the statistics of the class games, where can we find so many and grand victories as those of '03?

After the exciting days of football came the slow lull of the long winter months, when, by the precedent of all our ancestors, it was the privilege of the Sophomores to salt the Freshmen. And, as in all other things, so in hazing, the Class of '03 showed great spirit. Yes, many were the home "lamb babies" that, after the departure of their mysterious nocturnal visitors, by reason of a sudden change of color, would not have been recognized by their own mother. But in our dealings with the under-classmen we have always been kind and pre-eminently generous. Witness as a proof of this the fact that on the night before George Washington's birthday, even when the beneficent Faculty would have deprived them, we presented, amid great hilarity, to the more deserving of the Freshmen, appropriate medals.

Now, when at last after the long winter, our beautiful campus rejoices once more in the fresh verdure of spring, comes the season of baseball and track athletics. Looking over the field, we find the Sophomores again at their posts, and the conviction forces itself upon us that wherever is the success of our grand old University there also is the Class of '03.

Did I say '03? Yes; these are numerals which throughout life we will wear on our hearts, and of which we are justly proud—proud because we feel that our Class is both an honor to the University now, and that in years to come, through its alumni, it will prove an honor to the State—prouder still because we know that, whatever happens, whether successful or unsuccessful, the Class of 1903 will go forth into the world true Southern gentlemen, every one.

The Dialectic & Philanthropic Societies
of the University of North Carolina

RUSSELL, '04

History of the Foundation of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies.

By KEMP P. BATTLE, '49.

THE Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies are almost coeval with the University of North Carolina. Charles W. Harris, tutor of mathematics for the first term January to July, 1795, and then the first professor of that department, was an honor graduate of Princeton College, whose legal name was "College of New Jersey." There he was an active member of the Whig Society, still flourishing. He induced the students of this institution to organize what was called "The Debating Society" on the third of June, 1795. The first president was James Mebane, of Orange, afterwards of Caswell; the first secretary (then called clerk) was John Taylor, of Orange; the first treasurer was Lawrence Toole, of Edgecombe, who afterwards changed his name to Henry Irwin Toole; the first censor morum, was Richard Sims, of Warren. All were good men. Mebane became Speaker of the House of Commons. It is noticeable that he, together with the then president, Kemp P. Battle, presided over the Dialectic Society in 1848, when their new hall was dedicated. He died in 1857, leaving an excellent son, Giles Mebane, Speaker of the Senate, to perpetuate his virtues. Taylor was a merchant of Chapel Hill. Getting the Western fever, he exchanged his home, where Mr. Alexander lives, for six hundred and twenty-five acres in Tennessee owned by the University, and emigrated to that State. Toole was a highly respected planter. He was grandfather of Bishop Joseph Blount Cheshire. Sims was the first principal of the Grammar School. He moved from Warren County and I have been unable to follow him.

The objects of the Debating Society were expressed to be the cultivation of lasting friendship and the promotion of useful knowledge. The members pledged themselves under hands and seals to obedience to the society laws, and due performance of the regular exercises. The following are the names of the fathers of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies, as entered on the journal:

CHARLES WILSON HARRIS	Cabarrus
ADAM HAYWOOD	Edgecombe
ROBERT SMITH	Cabarrus
ALEXANDER OSBORN	Iredell
EDWIN JAY OSBORN	Rowan
WILLIAM HOUSTON	Iredell
WILLIAM DICKSON	Burke
JAMES MEBANE	Orange

GEORGE WASHINGTON LONG	Halifax

There was no constitution eo nomine. In its place were "Laws and Regulations," some of which are worthy of mention. The officers were a president, censor morum, two correctors, a clerk and treasurer. The president and treasurer held office for three weeks, the others for double that period.

The censor morum was clothed with powers and duties which would not now be tolerated. He was "to inspect the conduct and morals of the members, and report to the Society those who persevere in inattention to the studies of the University, in neglect of their duties as members, or in acting in such a manner as to reflect disgrace on their fellow members." This powerful office was evidently modelled on that of the august censors of Rome.

The Society met on Thursday evenings only, after supper. The members were divided into three classes. These read, spoke, and composed, alternately. There was a debate at each session, two opposing men, previously appointed, being required to open. After they finished, the others had a right to engage in the discussion, but were not compelled to do so.

It was the duty of each of the class, whose turn it was to "read," to hand in a query, then called "subject of debate." Out of these one was chosen by the Society.

By "reading" was meant the reading aloud an extract from some book, not an original essay. Of the other members, some declaimed memorized extracts, others read aloud short essays of their own composition.

Two votes were sufficient to negative an application for membership. The term, "black ball," was not used. The new members were required to promise "not to divulge any secrets of the Society."

It was made dangerous to "take umbrage at being fined," and to "denote it by word or action." If the fine was decided to be correct the offender was forced to pay twenty-five cents as a penalty for squirming. There is no record as to how much sour looks or facial contortion was held to be "denoting umbrage" by "action." Laughing and talking were not punished unless they interrupted a speaker. The wearing of hats was forbidden, although usual in the English Parliament, but the president, at least of the Dialectic Society, was required to preside with covered head for many years.

The admission fee was twenty-five cents. Three months' unexcused absence required new admission. A member could leave the Society without asking its consent, but could not be readmitted on any terms. Joining was not compulsory.

The first motion ever made in the Society was for the purchase of books. It passed unanimously.

The first speech was by James Mebane, who sustained the affirmative of the first query ever debated in the University of North Carolina; "Is the study of ancient authors useful?" He was answered by Robert Smith. The classics won the victory by a vote of the Society.

At the second meeting, June 11th, 1795, it was agreed to admit no more new members. A great moral question was then discussed; "Is the truth always to be adhered to?" The decision was that "breaches of faith are sometimes proper." It appears from a subsequent entry that the right to deceive an enemy in war caused this decision.

THE CONCORD SOCIETY.

On the twenty-fifth of June, 1795, Maurice Moore moved that the Society be divided. The motion was laid over for one week and on July 2d was taken up and carried. The new organization was called the Concord Society. No reason appears on the journal for the division. Tradition says, and there is probability in it, that the movement was caused by party feeling, which was hot throughout the land, and doubtless entered to some extent these cloistered precincts. Jeffersonian democracy claimed to be the peculiar champion of "Universal Brotherhood" and popular freedom. The name "Concord," and its substitute "Philanthropic," and the addition of "Liberty," to the motto of the other Society, Love of Virtue and Science, seem to support the tradition that the chief members of the new Society were inclined to follow Jefferson, rather than Hamilton.

A second reason was, I think, dissatisfaction with the powers and duties of the censor morum. The office was omitted at first in the new body, and when after many months it was restored, its duties were confined to the behavior of the members in Society. Even this proved unsatisfactory and the name was changed to vice-president.

For some weeks it was allowable to be members of both societies, which met in the same room on different nights. The first student, Hinton James, and the sons of Judge Moore, Maurice and Alfred, belonged for a while to both. When duplicate membership was forbidden they elected the new.

The journals do not give an official list of the "fathers" of the Concord Society. After careful investigation, I think that the following can be relied on:

HINTON JAMES	New Hanover
RICHARD EAGLES	New Hanover
GEORGE W. LONG	Halifax
WILLIAM C. ALSTON	Halifax

JOHN TAYLOR	Chapel Hill
WILLIAM MCKENRIE CLARK	Martin County
DAVID GILLESPIE	Duplin
EDWIN JAY OSBORN	Salisbury
EVAN JONES	Wilmington
NICHOLAS LONG	Franklin County
JAMES PAINE	Residence unknown
ALEXANDER McCULLOCH	Halifax
DAVID EVANS	Edgecombe County
HENRY KEARNEY	Warren County
THOMAS HUNT	Granville County
LEWIS DICKSON	Duplin County
JOHN BRYAN	Sampson County
LAWRENCE ASHE DORSEY	Wilmington
JOSEPH GILLESPIE	Duplin County

The records of the Dialectic Society show that the following remained in the Debating Society, their full names and residences having been already given: Messrs. Harris (Tutor), Houston, Toole, H. and F. Burton, R. Smith, Bennchan, Kinchen, Sims, Haywood, Ruffin, James, Green, A. Osborn, W. Dickson, Sneed, J. and E. Pettigrew, H. Davie, Mebane, M. and A. Moore. Of these, James and the two Moores soon joined the Concord Society and J. Pettigrew followed a year afterwards.

The above statement shows that Maurice Moore may be considered the father of the Concord Society. He was a man of bright parts; was a member of the Legislature from Brunswick, and as such made an eloquent appeal in behalf of his Alma Mater, threatened with destruction by hostile legislation. He challenged to a duel, Governor Benjamin Smith, who had reflected on his father, Judge Alfred Moore, and shot his antagonist in the hip. Afterwards he removed to Louisiana and stood high as a citizen and as a planter.

The first meeting of the Concord Society was on August 10th, 1795. David Gillespie was the first president, Evan Jones, the first treasurer, Henry Kearney, the first clerk. The first debaters were George W. Long and Henry Kearney on the question, "Which is best, an Education or a Fortune?" Long supported the affirmative, and it is consistent with the honorable career of the Society that the decision was by a vote of the house in his favor.

The two bodies worked efficiently and uneventfully for about a year when it occurred to the members of both that their names were not of sufficient dignity.

On the twenty-fifth of August, 1796, in pursuance of a motion made by James Webb, of Hillsboro, a week previously, the name "Debating" was changed to "Dialectic," a word of the same meaning, derived from the Greek. Four days afterwards, on the twenty-ninth of August, 1796, Philanthropic, likewise of Greek origin, replaced Concord, on motion of David Gillespie. This Gillespie was a thoughtful and influential student. He was strongly recommended by the Faculty for the United States engineer service and did good work for our Southern harbors. James Webb was afterwards an eminent physician of Hillsboro, N. C., ancestor of numerous worthy citizens.

The fundamental laws, afterwards called constitutions, of the two societies, were much alike. In the Concord, for a short while, members were admitted by a majority vote, but if the applicant was under fifteen years of age a two-thirds vote was required. It was not long, however, before the strict rule of the old Debating Society was adopted.

A short statement of the regular work of the two societies may not be uninteresting.

As to declamation, we miss Patrick Henry's "Give me Liberty or give me Death," because his biographer, Wirt, had not then written it. In its place were Cicero's invective against Varres, Demosthenes against Philip, Micipsa against Jugurtha, and Brutus over the body of Lucretia. No extract from Otis, Adams, Henry, R. H. Lee, Rutledge or other Revolutionary statesmen, was given, nor was any selection from the great English orators. The ancient classics ruled the day.

The "Readings" were from histories, poetry, the Spectator and the like, generally very serious. Indeed, David Gillespie once chose for his exercise an extract from the preface to Murray's Grammar. Occasionally a comic piece was produced, for example, "The Stuttering Soldier"; "The Bald-headed Cove"; "Anecdote of Miss Bush."

Not many of the subjects of the compositions are given. I notice "Oratory," "Eloquence," "Unpoliteness" (not Impoliteness), and "Industry."

The subjects chosen for debates, and the decisions of them by votes of the members, throw greater light on the intellectual attitude of the students.

Public education was decided to be of more value than private, and the schoolmaster than the preacher. Modern history was voted of more value than ancient; and the French language, than Greek and Latin. On the query, "Does travelling improve the mind?" is the following curious entry by the clerk. "As the question intended for debate is not thinkable, the opponents coincided in opinion. The debate was therefore not a good one, but after the regular question we debated on this question, 'Does a man with a competency, or he who is in a very affluent station enjoy most happiness?'" The vote sustained Solomon that a competency was preferable. It sounds strange that it was seriously debated whether "corporal punishment should be introduced into the University?" the verdict being adverse. It must be remembered that there were many small boys in the Grammar School, then a part of the University, and we learn from contemporary letters that they were often troublesome to their elders.

On questions of religion and morals the decisions were usually orthodox. The Bible was sustained as the word of God; polygamy and temporary marriages were pronounced evil, and suicide never right, even Lucretia being stigmatized as blameable. The thief was voted as worse than a liar, but he was allowed to be satisfied with his nine-and-thirty on the bare back, and to escape hanging. It was mercifully agreed that a minister of the Gospel might accept money for his services. Lovers of fun should be comforted by the vote that "Moderate fortune and good-humor are preferable to a large estate and bad disposition." Other decisions were that "Health is better than riches"; that "Love of mankind is more prevalent than love of money"; that "Man is happier seeking his own approbation"; that "the Immortality of the soul is not deducible from reason"; that "Beasts have no souls." It is certainly notable that high-spirited Southern young men, in the wild days of the French Revolution, "debated with warmth, but could not come to a conclusion on the question, 'Is it justifiable to kill one who is threatening one's life?'"

The auspicious beginnings of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies are worthy of their distinguished careers of usefulness and honor. Thousands of men eminent in all the walks of life have had, and now have, grateful memories of the benefits received by participation in their exercises, and the friendships contracted among the members.

The Non-Fraternity Element.

IN the agreement for the publication of THE YACKETY YACK, it was expressly stated that the Non-Fraternity element of the University should be represented, as a class. This was but just as they make up a large part of the student body, and are recognized as a separate class quite as much as the other societies.

The intention of the editors was, at first, to give a group picture of them. The large number rendered this impracticable. We must be content with a short sketch of what they are.

As will be seen, this part of the student body takes its name from the fact that the men who make it up do not belong to the Fraternities. It must not, however, be thought that all men who do not belong to the Fraternities are Non-Frats. There are some who stand on the slippery middle ground. There is no regular organization; but whenever it is necessary in the different classes, organization can be brought about at once.

Unfortunately, University politics has become a race between Frats and Non-Frats. It is here that the whole University becomes most conscious of the existence of a strictly Non-Fraternity party. They have quite their share of the Class officers. The officers of the Class of '01 are distinctly Non-Frat; likewise, the officers of the Class of '02 are also Non-Fraternity. The officers of these two classes have been Non-Frat since their Sophomore years.

But it is not merely in class elections that this weight is felt. In every phase of University life where men excel, Non-Fraternity men are found. Many of the strong men sent out of the University were Non-Fraternity leaders. Among others may be named J. O. Carr, of the State Assembly; J. E. Alexander; J. C. Eller, whose untimely death we mourn; Allsbrooke; the Van Nappens; Herman Harrell Horne, now of Dartmouth College, and D. B. Smith. At the head of this list we should properly place C. B. Aycock.

In oratory and debate, the Non-Fraternity men have taken the lion's share. On the inter-collegiate debates, of the eight men sent up against the Georgia boys, six have been Non-Frats; of the four men on the Vanderbilt debate, two have come from this side of the house. All four of this year's inter-collegiate debaters are Non-Fraternity men.

They have been only a little less conspicuous in inter-society debates. For this year, in the Soph-Junior debate, one-half of the debaters were Nons. In the Junior-Senior debate, three of the four men belong to this side. All four of the Commencement debaters are Non-Fraternity. Both literary societies are largely under their control.

Their record on the athletic field is not quite so good as on the platform. Still, on the University's Roll of Honor will be found many a good name that is on the Non-Frat list.

In scholarship, Non-Fraternity men start handicapped by reason of the fact that a large majority of them have not had the advantages of good preparatory schools. One or two years at the University serves many to rise above this disadvantage. Of the ten or twelve strong men of the Senior Class, one-half are Non-Frats. The same is true of the Junior Class. In the two lower classes the showing is not so good, owing to this lack of preparation.

Probably the best showing is made by the Non-Frats in the winning of medals. The Mangum Medal and the Representatives' Medal are considered the two highest. In the last eight yearly contests the Mangum Medal has been carried off six times by Non-Frats. In the last seven yearly contests for the Representatives' Medal (it was abolished in 1900) it was won six times by Non-Frats.

It is not the purpose of this paper to vaunt the Nons—only to tell what they are doing. They are known quite as well by what they do not as by what they do. They do not dance, not because they would not like dancing, but because they do not know how. They do not wear dress suits, not because they would not look nice, but because they have none. They do not go into society largely, not because they could not carry themselves with grace and ease, but because society does not send for them. They do not sport, not because they have no sporting blood, but because they know by experience the worth of a dollar. They do not root, because it is beneath the dignity of a man.

ORGANIZATIONS

The word "ORGANIZATIONS" is centered within a rectangular frame. The frame consists of an inner white rectangle and an outer border filled with a dense stippled pattern. Six vertical black lines extend from the top and bottom edges of the frame. Each line is topped or bottomed with a small, stylized floral or leaf-like decorative element.

THIS Society was first incorporated in 1833, the corporators being James Iredell, David L. Swain, Alfred Moore, Joseph S. Jones, Louis D. Henry, Isaac M. Avery, Joseph A. Hill, William D. Mosely, and Richmond M. Pearson. When Governor Swain was president of the University he organized the Society, and was president of it until his death, in 1868.

The Society was reorganized in 1875, and regular meetings have been held ever since. Many interesting papers have been read at these meetings, and many have been published in the University Magazine. During the present year the James Sprunt Monograph, No. 2, contains copies of nearly thirty letters of Nathaniel Macon, and one of Willie P. Mangum.

The present president is Kemp P. Battle, LL. D. His predecessors have been David L. Swain, LL. D.; Rev. William Hooper, D. D., LL. D. and John Kerr, LL. D.

THIS Society was organized in October, 1885, by Dr. Thomas Hume, Professor of English, for the purpose of stimulating research into the greatest of the world's dramatists, and also of making comparative studies in dramatic literature. Members of the Senior and Junior Classes are ex officio entitled to membership in the Club, and other students are admitted on application to the executive committee. The Club has made some publications and needs a permanent fund to be able to make more. It has had an exceptional success for sixteen years, standing for honest, systematic work and literary culture.

Young Men's Christian Association.

IN MAY, 1860, the Christian students at Chapel Hill met and adopted a constitution modeled after that of the Young Men's Christian Association of the University of Virginia, which was written by an accomplished Christian student there, now one of our honored professors. The first president of our Association was James Kelly, '60. A. Hill Patterson was secretary. The aims of the order were set forth in the preamble to the constitution :

“We, the undersigned, desiring to promote Christian sympathy and brotherhood, and to advance the moral and religious welfare of the students of this institution and of others around us, and impressed with the importance of united effort in accomplishing this object, have formed an association.”

But in one short year the dark war-cloud, so long brewing, burst upon the quiet college town and drew the best blood of our University into its whirling vortex. Two-fifths of the officers and committeemen of the infant association sleep in soldier graves, martyrs to love of country. In 1876, a reorganization was effected; Arthur Arrington was president. Among the workers till 1886, Eugene L. Harris and J. H. Southgate are prominent. Mr. Harris especially was enthusiastic and successful. After leaving here he devoted his life to the work, and is now a most beloved advisor of our Association and leads our personal workers' band.

The above-named gentlemen, with a few others, were consecrated and effective leaders in the religious movement, and raised a high standard of Christian character and service. Then came a decline. In March, 1886, the state convention met at Chapel Hill. Seven or eight places were represented. L. D. Wishard addressed the delegates and nominated the new professor of English, Dr. Hume, as chairman of the State executive committee. After this time money and men returned to the Association, the University especially feeling the impulse. From this point started the interest in the Student Volunteer Movement, which resulted in the dedication of a large number of young men to the foreign field, like W. L. Wilson, George Worth, and Lacy Little, preceded by R. T. Bryan, all students of ours.

The Association has lived through many trials, and is now in a prosperous condition. During the present year an office and reading-room has been furnished and adorned with beautiful pictures, the gifts of our friends. About fifty men are in Bible classes, with daily study of the Word. Several are working in the Sabbath schools of the community. A chapel on the University farm has been erected and a Sabbath school organized. The Association is in the hands of God-fearing, earnest, Christian men. May our Young Men's Christian Association grow and prosper.

University Record.

THE University Record was established in 1896 by the Faculty and students of the University. The purpose of this publication is to give a complete record of the more important events of University life. It also aims to keep the Alumni in communication with the University and thus bind them more closely to their Alma Mater. The Record is now in its fifth volume and its value to the University has been eminently demonstrated. It is issued quarterly under the management of a committee appointed by the Faculty.

Journal of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society.

THE Journal represents the Science Department of the University of North Carolina. It was established by the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society in order to publish the results of scientific investigation in the laboratories of the University. It is now in its seventeenth volume. The first was published in 1884 under the management of Professors Graves, Philips, and Harris. The University of North Carolina is the only institution of the South that has maintained a publication of this kind and it has done much to bring before the world that great Southern chemist, now President of the University—Dr. Venable. The Journal has now over four hundred exchanges from twenty-five different countries, some of which are published by the most important scientific societies of the world. The Journal stands as a memorial of what the University has contributed to the world's stock of scientific knowledge and is a worthy monument of the great man whose name it bears.

MISCELLANY

Ye Coy Co-ed.

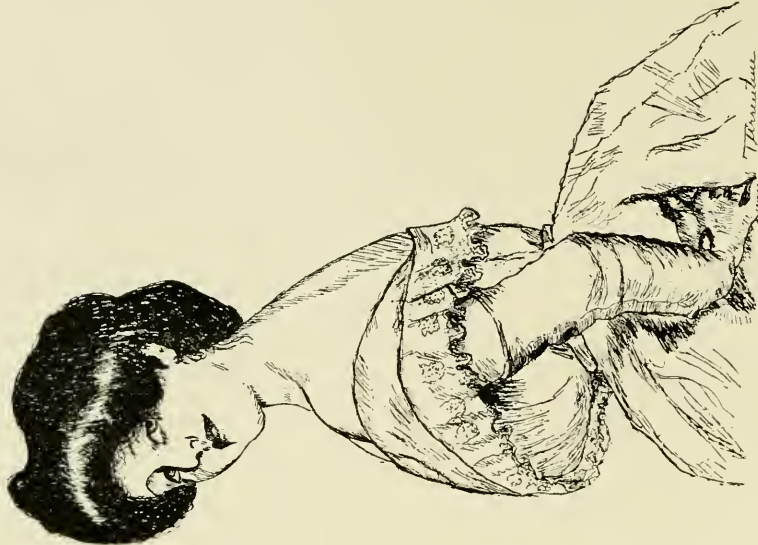

Ye coy Co-ed,
She sat and read,
Although the low-descending sun
Long since proclaimed the day was done,
And shadows dark,
In Battle's Park,
Were slowly gathering one by one,
And still she read,
Ye coy Co-ed.

Ye Co-ed heard
A little bird
Go fluttering thro' the trees o'er head,
And raised her eyes
Toward the skies.
It was a bat! Oh, thing of dread!
She shivered there
Ye Co-ed fair.

Ye Co-ed sighed
And vainly tried
To pierce the shadows deep'n'ing 'round.
A sound quite near,
Fell on her ear!
A snapping twig. Oh, joyful sound!
And an arch speech her lips prepare.

In glad surprise,
She raised her eyes,
To greet the twilight stroller there;
With an arch look
Up from her book,
And an arch speech her lips prepare.

And then—ah, then!—
Up spoke Old You!
“Good evening, ma'am, 't is growing late,
Do you perchance some friend await?”
And quick and low,
She murmured, No!
Ye Co-ed's heart was full of rage,
A tear fell on the unread page.

A Second Voyage to the Land of Labooter.

SYNOPSIS OF INTERVENING INCIDENTS.

VI. My stomach demands that I depart from Labooter.

VII. Urged by a desire of viewing the new things, I return.

CHAPTER VIII.

ON my arrival, I found the whole city in a ferment of excitement. A bloody struggle had just taken place between the forces of Labooter and those of the bordering lands. I inquired concerning the matter and learned much of the antecedents of the place. It would seem that once Labooter had constituted a valuable portion of the neighboring country's soil. But certain seeds called denominational seeds had been sowed in the outside land, which seed would not take root in Labooter soil. The two lands had been involved thereupon in a brawl and the end of the brawl was permanent separation and endless border feuds which were continued year by year. And once each year the natives of the surrounding parts selected for themselves a fixed number of champions who were always able to break through the fortifications and reach the capital. But despite their vehement hostility they were always received and welcomed with such humility that they felt ashamed and having required certain of the chief inhabitants to wallow in dust and lick the same from their boots they then withdrew. It astounded me to learn of such subserviency but I could not by words overcome the power of the established tradition.

I was therefore silent till one of the citizens who had known me on my former visit addressed me with words of gratification and told me much news. To my deep regret I learned of the death of Lord Alderhomme who had been chief of the projectors at the Labooteran Academy.

He had been succeeded by his nephew Venpossum, Duke of Chemlab, who, as my friend told me, had shown himself in all respects, both in splendor of dress and in attendants and in mildness of ruling so far superior to all his predecessors that the Academy had been bestowed upon him as his own in personal right.

As I had known the Duke's uncle, and indeed the Duke himself on my former visit, I felt emboldened to seek his presence. On being ushered into his office of state I found there a heavy strong man with sloping shoulders. He faced about at once on my entrance and I recognized my acquaintance Duke Chemlab, now Lord Venpossum. He gave me a most hearty welcome, and immediately accosted me with this question, which he averred had troubled him much: "Are hard students selfish; and are athletes unselfish?"

On my replying that I thought not; since the athlete's benefit to his fellows, even under the most approved modern methods of avoiding fulfilment of signed agreements, could last but six years; where the students prepared himself for a useful life of fifty years—on my replying thus, he at once agreed and reversed a former decree issued to the contrary effect. I then gladly accepted his courteous offer to escort me round the various buildings.

He led me first past an awkward, red-brick house which I remembered to have seen before. To my surprise I learned that the spaces between the thick buttresses which jutted out at six-foot intervals all round the establishment were now used at will for temporary hitchings of the many asses that belonged to his estate.

We next passed the beginning of a new house which he asserted was being erected as accommodation for students whose arrival was fixed for the fourteenth of September, 1987. This seemed to me a most wise measure of foresight and we passed on.

After passing by another half-completed building, which I was informed was to be used as a bank and repository for the earnings of all those who had ended a course in the Academy, we sought rest within a certain new building of marble, white and dappled with gray. Of this house the Lord Venpossum and his retinue seemed very proud. All within was still as death, the dwellers there being all, though it was now twelve of the clock, fast in sleep. I learned to my astonishment that here all spent the night in labor or revellings and the day they passed in slumber. I also noted a certain Ethiopian janitor who walked slowly and gently about upon shoes with rubber soles, never making so much as a sound, save only when one called. He then emitted a strange guttural cry and hastened quietly to the call. And, too, I observe that the smooth polished walls were cracked from top to bottom with a great crack. On inquiring the reason for this crack I was told that the house had been constructed in great haste since it must needs be completed before a certain date.

Moreover I learned that, carefully as this building was ordered, when on certain days of festivity the inmates roused themselves and went forth to view the joys, then certain vultures flocked to the upper windows of the house and watched from afar the process of the joys, seeking to smell the fragrance of the particles of meat and rich food which were devoured by those who paid to have their part. Occasionally, it was said, these vultures even swarmed upon the palisade which inclosed the space allotted to the participants in the joys. This procedure was much resented; but since these vultures were even more low-spirited than the average, the matter could not be rectified.

We then retired from the house and repaired to the Duke's office of state. He here told me of the achievements of a student in the Academy who had drawn up a code of morals accepted by the entire corps of students. Among the laws drafted in this code was one appertaining to the matter of cheating. Cheating was defined to be a lying method of securing good marks without work done. "Provided said practice was carried on between the fourteenth day and the twenty-first day, inclusive, of May." Another strangely consistent law bore reference to theft. "Theft," said the law, is the wilful removal of another's property without his or her consent, whether said property be held in partial ownership by remover or not. Provided: that if said theft be made upon books or magazines owned by the Academy the theft is not theft. Provided further: that the wilful removal of any lamps, apparatus or any material whatsoever, except material in the form of coin, be not theft." One matter more was of interest. "It shall be the duty of no one to enforce these laws. And so long as a man remains a student in this Academy he shall be exempt from all laws, except those contained in this code, whether said laws be moral, religious, mental, or physical."

Lord Venpossum then imparted to me much knowledge of a general nature. Through the window he pointed out to me a rich, green field across which ran a muddy streak of path, ruining its beauty. This path was, he said, made by the trappings of a certain ass called "Junius the More Fresh," which trotted daily across the field and paused only at night, and once each week during the day, at which pause he brayed vociferously. A certain stenographer took notes upon his brayings and having interpreted them, published a newspaper devoted exclusively to this matter and to the manipulations of a club called the Tremble-arrow Club.

He lastly told me to my astonishment of a certain lieutenant of his estate who all his life had struggled to create something out of nothing and without external agency. This was not clear to me and I hesitated to disturb him by many questions. These and many other matters of importance and interest he courteously revealed to me and I retired from his office feeling glad at heart to have made this second voyage to Labooter.

A Commencement Dilemma.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

RICHARD SHEPARD A Junior in love with Miss Harlowe
NED BREWSTER Shepard's roommate
HENRY STEPHENS A friend
EDITH HARLOWE A commencement belle
MARY PERRY A young lady from the College town

ACT I—SCENE I.

[Ballroom during the February German. Between the dances MISS PERRY and SHEPARD engage in conversation.]

SHEPARD: "Why, Miss Perry, you ought not to think of leaving Chapel Hill before Commencement is over."

MISS PERRY (Coyly): "You know the students don't want me to stay to Commencement for I have been here all the year. At the finals they'll be paying attention to their special friends and I'll be entirely forgotten."

SHEPARD (Flatteringly): "That you'll not! I'll stand by you and see that you have a good time; I wish you'd stay. Why can't you? I'd like to take you to the T. N. E. German on Thursday of Commencement week."

MISS PERRY: "Oh, Mr. Shepard! that is simply lovely in you! But you know—(Pausing a moment) Well, I'll decide right now to stay, but you must remember your promise to see that I have a good time. I am sure I'll not be left if I can count on you to—"

Enter BREWSTER AND STEPHENS.

BREWSTER: "Miss Perry I think you have promised me the pleasure of this dance."

Exeunt MISS PERRY AND BREWSTER.

STEPHENS (Turning to Shepard): "Say, Richard, have you seen anything of my partner—oh, I see her now over yonder. (Starts off and then comes back and speaks hurriedly) By the way, I got a letter from Miss Boteler last week and she says that if she does not go to Kentucky in June she is coming to commencement. If she comes I am going to make her engagements. She asks me to save the T. N. E. for you. It seems from what she writes that you made this engagement last commencement. Please keep it open until I hear from her again."

SHEPARD (Confused): "No,—I—yes—er—that is— but let me tell you some—"

STEPHENS (Interrupting): "Excuse me, my partner is calling me; I'll see you again." (Hurries off.)

SHEPARD: "But, Stephens—He's gone now. (Turning) That girl ought to know—(Pauses a moment, then in consternation) Well, I'll be durned." [CURTAIN.]

SCENE II.

[SHEPARD'S room after the dance. SHEPARD takes off his coat and, in deep meditation, seats himself on the bed.]

SHEPARD: "Two engagements for T. N. E.! I wonder if—"

Enter BREWSTER.

BREWSTER: "Shep, here are two letters that came for you this evening. I put them in my pocket intending to give them to you at the dance but I forgot them until just now."

[BREWSTER hands SHEPARD two letters in blue envelopes, sits down and begins to undress. SHEPARD, still frowning, takes the letters.]

SHEPARD: "Thank you. (Aside, as he looks at one of the letters) Miss Boteler's writing. I guess she is going to remind me of that T. N. E. engagement I made with her about ten years ago (Tears open the letter, reads, smiles and looks much relieved). Ned, Miss Boteler says she is going to visit a school friend in Kentucky and can't come to commencement." (Still smiling.)

BREWSTER: "No doubt, that will be very pleasant for Miss Boteler but why are you so happy over it?"

SHEPARD (Getting serious and pretending to look much concerned): "Oh—I—I—er—I am not—I am sorry she can't be here, too. I should like very much to have an engagement with her."

BREWSTER: "But what about your girl? Is she coming this year?"

SHEPARD: "This other letter is from her. Let me see what she says (Reads aloud): 'Since you have assured me that it will be no trouble for you to fill out my card for the finals, I shall accept your offer to do this and you may have for yourself the engagement you ask for—I know I shall enjoy the T. N. E. german which'—um—er—that 's all. She 'll be here; (Smiling broadly) I 'm in luck! I was afraid she was not coming, but as soon as I told her I 'd give her a full card of engagements she said she 'd come and let me take her to the last german of the week."

BREWSTER: "But don't you think this is a little late to begin making engagements? Most of the boys have had their engagements made for a month, especially for the society dances."

SHEPARD: "That 's all right—I 'll get 'em made O. K. I 'll give you the T. N. E. with her, right now."

BREWSTER: "I am sorry, Shep, I can't take it. All of my engagements are made. There are no T. N. E. engagements open, Stephens tells me, but I 'll help—"

SHEPARD: "Oh, pshaw; Stephens doesn't know what he is talking about. Of course, I can get Miss Harlowe's card filled without any trouble. I 'll sit down at once and write her to that effect."

BREWSTER: "Well, I hope you are not mistaken." (Shepard sits down to write and Brewster continues to undress.)

[CURTAIN.]

ACT II—SCENE I.

[Commencement. Ballroom during President's reception. STEPHENS and BREWSTER engaged in conversation.]

BREWSTER: "Have you seen Shepard lately? He is in a bad way."

STEPHENS: "No, what 's the matter?"

BREWSTER: "The poor fellow's girl is here and he can't get all her engagements made. When she wrote him she was coming to commencement, he had made only one engagement, his T. N. E. Now that is the very one still unfilled and he has told her she is going to every dance."

STEPHENS: "But doesn't she see from her card that she has no partner for T. N. E.?"

BREWSTER (With a sympathetic smile): "No, poor soul that he is, when she wrote him a week ago to send her a list of her engagements he ran all over college trying to make the unfilled engagement. 'T was all in vain, and, holding to the forlorn hope that something would turn up on commencement, he pretended to be very indignant and wrote her a letter saying that if she had trusted him to fill her card she ought not to question his ability to select her the right kind of partners."

STEPHENS: "Then he had to 'fess up' when at last she got here?"

BREWSTER (Laughing): "No, for the last day and a half he has been giving her the names of her partners one at a time, always pretending to have left the full list in his other coat. Here he comes now."

Enter SHEPARD.

SHEPARD: "Have either of you a T. N. E. engagement open? No, I remember now, I have asked you about this before. (Confidentially) Fellows, this thing troubles me. I must make that date for my girl. I have seen every T. N. E. in the place, students and visitors, and every one is engaged. I wish you fellows would keep your eyes open and let me know if you hear of anything."

BREWSTER: "We'll try to help you. But say (Winking at Stephens) have you told Miss Harlowe that I want to take her to the Pi Sigma hop to-morrow?"

SHEPARD (Hesitatingly): "Yes—no—that is not yet. I'll tell her next time I see her—. Yonder's Wakeley; let me see if he has made his T. N. E." (Shepard dashes off.)

STEPHENS: "He is in a bad fix."

BREWSTER: "Hard luck!"

[CURTAIN.]

SCENE II.

[Senior Ball. Enter SHEPARD and MISS PERRY.]

MISS PERRY: "I took your advice, Mr. Shepard, and remained here for the dances. (Shepard looks bored) The boys are just as lovely as they can be. I am having such a good time! And to-morrow I am going to that lovely T. N. E. with you. Not every girl, I hear, goes to the T. N. E."

SHEPARD (Unenthusiastic): "Yes. I shall claim the pleasure of that dance with you."

MISS PERRY (Still gushing): "You ought to be very happy, Mr. Shepard, for I see you have a special friend here."

SHEPARD (With a frown): "Yes, very pleasant."

MISS PERRY: "What a charming girl she is! Who is going to take her to the T. N. E. in the morning?"

SHEPARD (With an attempt at cheerfulness): "Oh, don't you worry about her. She 'll be there, you can count on that."

Enter BREWSTER AND MISS HARLOWE.

MISS PERRY: "Here she is now with Mr. Brewster."

BREWSTER: "Miss Perry I have your name on my card for the next dance, I hope that is right."

MISS PERRY: "Yes; and you were telling me, Mr. Shepard, your next dance is with Miss Harlowe. (Significantly) That is very pleasant." (They exchange partners.)

Exeunt MISS PERRY AND BREWSTER.

MISS HARLOWE (Hesitatingly): "Mr. Shepard, you have not told me yet who is my partner for the T. N. E. german."

SHEPARD (Turning pale then stammering weakly): "I—er—I was—I have—er—the fellow I made your engagement—had to—er—I mean, got sick at the last minute and had to go home but—I—er—I am going to ask you—er—if I may take his place. I know I have—er—one with you already but can't you let me have this one too—? You know—" (Looks more embarrassed and comes to a dead stop.)

MISS HARLOWE: "Certainly, Mr. Shepard. (Innocently) "Who was it you said got sick?"

SHEPARD: "Oh—er—er—Mr.—Mr.—(Stephens rushes up followed more slowly by Brewster.)

STEPHENS: "Miss Harlowe this is my senior waltz with you. Let us begin with the music."

Exeunt STEPHENS AND MISS HARLOWE.

BREWSTER (To Shepard who is standing as if dazed): "I have just spoken to a fellow who was here about ten years ago about an engagement with Miss Harlowe. He is a little old for dancing, but in your dilemma I thought you'd not have objected to a one-legged war veteran, so Miss Harlowe goes to the german —"

SHEPARD (Brightening): "Good, and he said —"

BREWSTER: "But hold on. He said he made his own engagement to-night (Shepard groans and begins to look sick) but his classmate, John Hillman, may come in to-morrow morning. The trouble, however, is that the morning train is sure to be late —"

SHEPARD: "Then it's no use, Ned, for—I—I have told her I'd take her myself."

BREWSTER: "Man alive! I thought—What about Miss Perry?"

SHEPARD (Turning green): "Old boy, I'm feeling pretty sick (staggers). Here, give me your arm. Help me to a carriage. (They walk slowly to the door.) Ah, I am so sick! Ned, look after my partner. Tell her I had to leave very abruptly will you and —" (Staggeres out the door.)

[CURTAIN.]

ACT III—SCENE I.

[Next morning. SHEPARD'S room. SHEPARD in dressing gown, sitting in easy chair with his head tied up. Enter BREWSTER.]

BREWSTER: "Ned, are you feeling better now?"

SHEPARD: "Yes, thank you, but I have been very sick. After you left me last night I was very much worse. The doctor came and had to work on me a long time—I tell you I was sick!"

BREWSTER: "Suppose you stay in your room this morning and save —"

SHEPARD (Quickly): "I thought that would be best. Save my strength for to-night. Won't you get the janitor to carry these two notes?" (Brewster looks at the addresses on the two notes as he moves towards the door.)

BREWSTER (Aside, with a wink): "My dear Misses Harlowe and Perry, I am very sorry I am too unwell to go with you to T. N. E., this morning! I'll tell Stephens about this."

[CURTAIN.]

SCENE II.

MISS HARLOWE on right conversing with STEPHENS. SHEPARD in foreground, still pale and sickly, staring abstractedly into space.]

MISS PERRY: "Oh, Mr. Brewster, I had the most dreadful scare this morning! I had an engagement with Mr. Shepard for the T. N. E. When I was ready and waiting for him, at the last minute a note came saying that he was too sick to leave his room. I was dreadfully disappointed, for this was the first engagement I made after I decided to stay to commencement. A few minutes later a note came from Mr. Wakeley saying that his partner was sick and asking me to go with him. I was his second choice you see but —"

BREWSTER: "You were indeed fortunate. (Aside.) If she only knew!"

Exeunt MISS PERRY AND BREWSTER.

SHEPARD (Starting): "Surely Ned's not going to let the cat out of the bag! (Moves as if to go after Brewster but overhears Miss Harlowe talking to Stephens and stops.)

MISS HARLOWE: "After having one partner for T. N. E. get sick, then my second partner, Mr. Shepard, got sick. When I had given up hope of getting there an old friend of mine, Mr. Hillman, who came in on the morning train, hearing of my misfortune, came to my relief."

STEPHENS (Calling to Shepard): "Shep what made you sick last night?"

SHEPARD (With a sickly smile): "I have been working pretty hard and I guess the excitement of Commencement was too much for me."

STEPHENS: "Excitement? Whoever— (With a significant laugh.) Yes; you are right. Over-strain on your nerves, eh?" (Shepard turns and walks thoughtfully up and down the room.)

Exeunt MISS HARLOWE AND STEPHENS.

SHEPARD (After a pause): "I am glad the girls didn't miss the german. (Pause.) Suppose this thing should get out? (Another pause.) I don't believe Stephens and Ned will give me away."

[CURTAIN.]

I.

Oh, the wild west wind is swinging
Soft in the aspen tree,
And the rapturous boughs are singing
With the secret of love bringing
Over the western sea.
And the song that the wind is singing
Is the song I would sing to thee.

II.

Oh, the lark with his song is filling
A world for his mate in the lea,
The air is throbbing and thrilling
With heart-beats uttered in trilling
Glad in the love to be.
As the lark with his song is filling
I would fill all the world for thee.

III.

Oh, the stars in their spheres are singing
The song of eternity ;
They utter their souls in the ringing
Its life to the universe bringing
God's secret of life to be.
As the stars in their spheres are singing
I would utter my soul to thee.

The Annual Festival of the Sophomores.

MORON, XIII.

1. And it came to pass that the twenty-second day of the second month in the first year of the reign of Gordon was approaching. Then did the men who are called Sophomores rise up and bethink themselves.

2. The day of rejoicing set apart by our ancestors will soon be upon us. Let us celebrate it fittingly.

3. Let us award medals to the men of the Freshmen, that this festival may be remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city.

4. Then spake he of the curly hair: "Knowest thou not, O Sophomores, that a certain tribe called Faculty will set upon us, yea, and tear us limb from limb if they see us celebrating this day of feasting and gladness?"

5. "So let us spring a march on them. Let us hold our day of gladness on the day before. Let us capture the men of the Freshmen before they see fit to depart from the land." And it was so decreed.

6. So on the night of the twenty-first, that is the day before he who is called George Washington was born, did the Sophomores capture the men of the Freshmen and drag them to the slaughter-pen on the third floor of the palace which was built by he whom men call Julian S. Carr.

7. The first man to receive a medal was Bohannon. On an unsteady box did he climb. And great was the risk and peril in getting on the box for certain of the Sophomores did make it unsteady and wobbly.

8. And the great high muck-a-muck of the Sophomores said: "Bohannon, I have the honor to award you the first degree big-fool medal; guard it well." Then the rejoicing was great till even the walls shook and the skylight blew out. And Bohannon became baptized and rejoiced exceedingly thereat.

9. And Hunt received the second degree big-fool medal and was baptized with water thrown swiftly through space.

10. And Henry Lee received the dog-faced man's medal and a voice cried out: "Bark like a dog, Freshman." And Henry said: "Bow—wow—wow."

11. Next, Sifford climbed upon the trembling box and received the tenth degree big-fool medal. "Raise your right hand and swear that you are the biggest fool in college," cried he with the perpetual smile. And Sifford did so.

12. And Bass, the "Bull-Tamer," and Stewart, the "Dirty Man," received their medals and great was the rejoicing thereat, for the awards were appropriate.

13. And Cox was declared the "Lord High Proprietor of the Campus."

14. And Catlett, Stanes, Winston and Hoskins received honorable mention.

15. Now a grand ball was the next thing on the programme and the Freshmen were told to dance. And they danced. But not all danced.

16. Those who would not dance were baptized. Yea, they were wet, even to the skin. And water was poured down their necks. And they shivered, for the water was cold.

17. Thus ended the day of feasting and rejoicing. And thus were the customs and manners of the ancestors of the Sophomores perpetuated and honored.

18. And that the events of this day may live in the memory of all men for all time, this chapter has been written. And these things are so, for can they not be found in the Tar Heel?

Our Animals.

AMONG other things which are essential to a great institution of learning, we of the University of North Carolina are very happily possessed of a large menagerie. Wild beasts which have been partly tamed only by the most careful training, are daily seen traversing our wooded campus. These animals at times have fierce encounters, as was the case a few days ago, between a bull and a pug. It is needless to say who was the victor in this ferocious clash, most vivid and exciting.

We will first, in describing our large zoo, name the bulls in order of their size: "Bull of the Woods," Galloway; "Bull of the Senior Class," Stokes; "Bull of the Library," Bernard; "Bull of the West," Jones; "Bull Johnson," also known as "Sword Swallower;" also a "baby bull" by the appellation of "Bully Jones."

Young bulls, commonly known as "steers," are very rare hereabouts and are seen only about once in Weeks.

Dogs are also scarce, though we have several dog-faced men. Among the pug family, "Pug" Hartley is included, and "Lee" should be enlisted. "Keno" Gant is the champion dog of the Hill, and has not as yet met his match. The "Dog-faced Men" have elected, for their president, "Loe-Joe" Ramsay.

"Rabbit" Turrentine, "Bear" Davenport, "Monkey" Hoskins, "Pony" Stern, "Mink" Cunningham, "Rooster" Webb, "Buck" Urquhart, "Cub" Sawyer, and "Lamb," who has many sheepish ways, are each in a class by themselves and need only brief mention here.

Before closing I would like to mention a great novelty, in the person of a "human steam engine," known as "Too-Too" Fred Bynum. This machine attaches chairs to its body, in a South Building room, and flies at great speed, without even applying the regulation anthracite.

The "heavenly twins," of noble pedigree, are a marvel indeed. These, together with the "Christmas gifts" and the squirrels, which have just arrived, complete the long roll of our zoo.

Suffice it to say in conclusion, that there is great danger from these beasts on account of lack of cages. I suggest to the next Legislature, that an extra appropriation be made for purchase of said cages. It will ensure both the safety and welfare of pedestrians and zoo.

The following notice appeared on the bulletin board, but the high-minded Christmas Gifts refused to respond:

“Christmas Gifts, please meet at half-past four
 On the steps in front of the Alumni door;
 President Smathers will be there in full force,
 And Vice-President Gray on hand, of course.
 Be sure and wear your most pleasant look,
 For the purpose is to have your picture took.
 Be on hand, sure, at the stated hour—
 By order of the secretary,

“J. FRED BROWER.”

The Champion of 1901.

The Seniors one bright afternoon,
With grave and reverend look,
And charming pose, and Sunday clothes,
Had their Class picture took.

Now, did their grave demeanor strike
All spectators with awe?
Oh, not a bit—it drew their wit—
Oh, how they worked their jaw!

One guy was there amid that throng
(We will not call his name);
In matchless brass and ceaseless gas
He put them all to shame.

But do the mighty Seniors not Object when he begins?
No, not at all; both great and small
They're hacked and wear dry grins.

But, ah! He gets too personal
At last! With fearful frown
And accents hoarse and fierce, of course,
Bro'er X doth call him down.

Full boldly forth before the throng
He strode, his stern eyes flashing:
"It's moved," he said, "and seconded,
That I give that man a thrashing."

The mighty Seniors rise as one,
And pride shines in each eye:
"The Champion of Nineteen-One!
Hurrah for him!" they cry.

Then Y, for so we'll call him, did
Not hesitate or stay.
He came ahead, and boldly said:
"Well, I'll meet you half-way."

They fall together, X and Y,
Like windmills fly their arms:
No skill or might enters this fight
(They both were raised on farms).

The picture-man was horrified;
He tried to stop the bout,
But when his hat was crushed quite flat
He speedily drew out.

The scrap soon gets monotonous—
Their skill is not admired:
With willing heart they're pulled apart,
For each was getting tired.

Each combatant was satisfied—
Each one had made his bluff,
And each was pleased to get released
Before the scrap got rough.

But ah, alas! what evil tongues
Are in this world of sin!
The crowd doth gey both X and Y
Till each one bluffs again.

Next morning at the well they meet.
X challenges full soon:
“We’ll have it out,” he says, “about
The well this afternoon.”

That evening at the well was met
A crowd. Such a collection
Has not been seen thereat, I ween,
In Bill Jones’s recollection.

Courageous Y waits on the scene
For bold X to arrive.
He looks like to the fierce Bosco,
The one that eats them alive.

“But where is X? Why don’t he come?”
The crowd begin to cry.
And then they cheer, for X draws near,
But slowly draws he nigh.

Two friends of his are hanging on.
To keep him off they try:
We must admit they managed it
Exceeding easily.

If only peacemakers are blessed,
It then must be allowed,
A small per cent. was then present
Of blessed folks in that crowd.

For two men strive to cool down X
And two men work on Y.
The crowds look on with open scorn
And bitter taunts apply.

But see! The cause of peace prevails.
Each one doth thus agree:
“Well, I am go’n’ to let him alone,
If he don’t fool with me.”

Now, to conclude, I’ll tell the truth
To you (I trust you love it):
’T is to be feared that each was skeered
And the other one glad of it.

A Model Recitation.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF SENIORS WHO ARE EXPECTING TO TEACH.

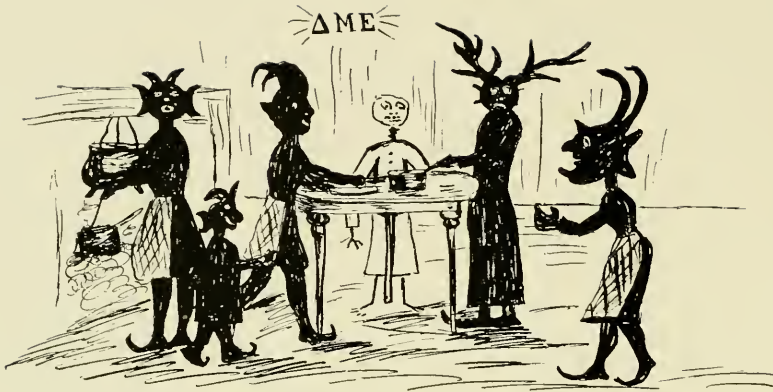

R. A—, will you continue with the lesson? Go on, we are waiting on you. Have you a book? (Mr. A—. “No, sir.”) Then you must either get a book or leave the class; what! wish to recite without a book? I hope people will not help others to be rude or I will have to be personal. You are strange people to me. There were only two men who began to applaud when that man came in, and the rest of you must follow their example;—the whole class is a fake. Brains in your feet need exercising instead of in your head. You men on next to the back seat yonder, chew the end of reflection. Before high heaven, you all are playing fools; I am ashamed of you—you are janitors to a prejudice. Mr. B—, will you please answer that question. What! Didn’t understand it? Why, that’s funny; it was loud enough to be heard all over the room. Mr. C—, were you able to hear that last question, where you are sitting over there in that corner? (Mr. C—. “Yes, sir.”) Well, I knew it was loud enough;—the method of the teacher was perfect, but you won’t pay attention. Now, just look at that man snoozing over there at that post! The class disgusts me; I am ashamed of you—you are acting the farce. Now, three or four over there must giggle. I’d hoot the eternal powers and the eternal decencies, and stop that fool giggling. Can’t we wake up? My method was perfect and you make me lose this valuable time—you are more amused at the teacher than at the lesson. We have a set of fools making fun at their teacher. It is an ignorant crowd who will allow it—you have not the public spirit to put it down—I don’t know a man in here that I would trust to public feelings. Now, let’s continue with the lesson. What’s Tennyson’s method? etc., etc., etc. Now there are just two men over there who are not paying attention. I wish you would stop writing there—it bores me to death to see some one trying to take down what I say—I will stop and wait for Mr. C—to stop writing. Now, let us continue the lesson: ‘Heroes are great men, etc.’ Mr. C—, will you answer that question! Won’t you please go on—I don’t hear you—go on, please—go on! I can’t get an answer, but get a giggle from most of you. What a farce the class is! Yes, giggle over there; I have you spotted and will call you out by name in a moment. You ought to be slapped down—slapped down with arguments. Now, you are sneaking—sneaking behind the number of the class. The teacher has been trying to get your attention for the last fifty minutes, and you see how useless it is to teach without the whole attention. Now won’t some one please answer! Now here is an allusion to the Divine Book, but this don’t appeal to some of you—the ones that were playing baseball on last Sunday—some of you haven’t a bit of religion. Oh, my God! I feel sorry for you that lie abed until noon on Sunday while God’s divine service is going on. I am ashamed of you; ‘get up and get!’ I’d rather be a Pagan! (Bell rings) Just one moment before I dismiss the class, I want to make just one statement: That if any of you have missed a recitation you get a five on that work, and you must stand a special examination on the second Saturday of the month. I didn’t make the rule—it was made by the faculty—and you are required to comply with this rule; your grade is five if you ignore it. Also all those who have not handed in that essay which was assigned to you, and all those of the second section of the conference who did not meet the teacher on the first Saturday of the month, will be allowed until the first of next month in which to do this work.

An Inkling!

Just to give you an idea of our facilities: We have orders in hand, for completion within about sixty days, of one class of work, about fifteen Annuals for Colleges and Universities. They will average about 250 pages each, or a total of about 3,750 pages of printed matter. We handled nearly this many last season without failing to keep a single promise as to date of delivery, and our regular day-in-and-day-out work is going on just the same.

What in the world to give a friend?

College men know and the New Haven Union says, apropos of term-end with its good-byes: "The question of what in the world to give a friend at parting seems to have been solved by the publication of

Songs of All the Colleges which is alike suitable for the collegian of the past, for the student of the present, and for the boy (or girl) with hopes; also for the music-loving sister, and a fellow's best girl."

"All the NEW songs, all the OLD songs,
"and the songs popular at all the colleges;
"a welcome gift in any home anywhere."
