While the fatigued party were resting at Prairie du Chien, some of the sharp ones (specimens of whom can be found in all new countries) espying the name of the boat, Kickapoo, supposed they knew the destination of the party; accordingly two or three of them, with their grub sacks, started post haste for the banks of the Kickapoo river, looking for the most desirable points at which a large company might settle. They marked such spots as "squatter's claims" by hanging a pole on two forked sticks, a tree or two cut down and other sham work of improvement. Here these sharps settled down to eat their rations and watch for the pioneer keel-boat, Kickapoo but alas! like many another well laid scheme nothing came of it.*

FIRST EVENTS.†

The first marriage was that of William Keith and Emaline Crow, in 1841.

The first death was a child of John Allen's, in 1839.

The first school in the town was taught by Delia Bowen, in a log building on the site of the present brick school house in district No. 5, in 1841.

Elisha Warner preached in 1838 the first sermon, holding services every Sunday for some time.

ORGANIZATION.

Prior to 1872 the territory embraced within the town of Bridgeport was included in the town of Prairie du Chien. It was at this date that the city of Prairie du Chien became an incorporated city and owing to dissatisfaction in regard to taxes, the people of the southern part of the town of Prairie du Chien, petitioned the county board to be set off into a separate town; accordingly, in November of that year, 1872, this was done. The first election under the new town organization occurred April 3, 1873. John B. Davis, Charles Kahler, Lyman King, D. F. Haskins, and J. B. Davis clerks. The following officers were elected:

* Mrs. Joseph Atherton, upon whose recollections reliance has been placed concerning the history of those who came in the Kickapoo, was one of the party.

† It should be understood by the reader that the first events here spoken of have especial reference to that part of the town of Bridgeport not included in the prairie about Prairie du Chien, as these are spoken of elsewhere in this book.

Joseph Atherton, D. F. Haskins and John Bunders, supervisors; Chancey Blancher, clerk; H. C. King, treasurer; Henry Barretta, assessor; John B. Davis, W. B. Hicklin and Sylvester Ault, justices of the peace.

Officers acting in 1883: H. C. King, George Ward and Lewis Kenyon, supervisors; Henry Barretta, treasurer; Charles Kahler, clerk; William Curts, assessor; Terry Fairfield, O. E. Miller and Charles Kahler, justices of the peace.

SCHOOLS.

In 1884, the town of Bridgeport had two full and two joint school districts.

District No. 1, had a brick school house, on section 10, town 6, range 6 west, valued at $245. Number of pupils, sixty-six.

District No. 2, had a log building situated on section 6, town 6, range 5 west, valued at $30. Number of pupils, fifty.

Joint district No. 5, with town of Prairie du Chien, had a frame building situated on section 33, town 7, range 6 west, valued at $275. Number of pupils, forty.

Joint district No. 6, with the town of Prairie du Chien, also, was provided with a house in the last named town. Number of pupils from the town of Bridgeport, twenty-one.

About fourteen sections of the town were at this date attached to the independent district of the city of Prairie du Chien, for school purposes.

CEMETERY.

The town has but one cemetery; this is situated on section 10, town 6, range 6 west, and was established in 1839.

RELIGIOUS.

The town of Bridgeport has never had a regular Church organization. In 1838, Elisha Warner, one of the party who came on the keel boat Kickapoo, from Ohio, preached the first Gospel sermon listened to in the town. He preached from time to time at various places, wherever a few could be found, who wanted to be taught in divine things. He was a man who exercised a positive influence for good over the people of Bridgeport. He was a christian by precept and practice. His kind heart made all men friends. It is said of him, "the children all loved him," and one says "even the dogs liked him." He was the pioneer preacher of the town; was always ready to conduct religious services wherever and whenever people would meet for that purpose. His wife died in 1858, aged sixty-four years. Mr. Warner died in 1875, from apoplexy. Elder Brunson, who had officiated at the funeral services of Mrs. Warner seventeen years previous, performed the same services for Mr. Warner, and feelingly announced the same hymn: "There will be no more sorrow there," at closing services at the grave. The memory of Elisha Warner and his good wife is fondly cherished by all the old settlers of Bridgeport.

STONE QUARRY.

One of the most extensive stone quarries of this part of the State, is found in the northwest corner of section 15, town 6, range 6, on land originally owned by H. L. Dousman, but after a number of changes, finally came into the hands of Thomas Marsden, Sr., who began developing the same, in 1863, for the purpose of supplying stone for the State House at Madison. In 1882 the property was owned by Thomas Marsden, Jr., his father having died. Mr. Marsden, in company with Mike Menges, of Prairie du Chien, commenced to work this quarry on a very extensive scale, in 1883; the proceeds from the sale of stone during two years, amounting to $20,000, large amounts being used in the capitol at Madison, and in the famous archwork railroad bridge at Minneapolis, Minn. The proprietors of this celebrated quarry, employ the most improved methods for quarrying, loading and shipping; they use large derricks, cables and cars, by which they convey the stone on an iron track to the line of the C. M. & St. P. R. R. A large number of men are constantly employed at a shop built for the purpose, in cutting and dressing stone for shipment, on orders for finished work, which goes to all the cities and towns of the northwest.

The stone found in this quarry is a magnesian limestone, a mixture of lime and sandstone, which, upon exposure to the elements, becomes exceedingly hard, thus rendering it a most valuable building material.

WISCONSIN RIVER BRIDGE.

By an act of the Legislature in 1854 or 1855, a bridge company was organized and incorporated. E. W. Pelton was chosen president; William E. Parish, vice president; B. F. Fay, secretary; I. P. P. Gentil, treasurer; E. W. Pelton, W. E. Parish, H. L. Dousman, B. W. Brisbois and Alfred Brunson, directors. This bridge was completed in the fall of 1857. It passed into the hands of James Hall, under a trust deed, about 1865, and from him to George M. Dickinson and John Lawler. To aid in the building of this bridge, the town of Prairie du Chien took stock to the amount of $10,000, for which bonds were issued. The original capital of the bridge company was $30,000, of which $27,000 was paid up, including the bonds issued by Prairie du Chien. Upon the completion of this bridge the ferry at this point was abandoned.

VILLAGE OF BRIDGEPORT.

Bridgeport is situated on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, near the Wisconsin river, on section 11, in town 6, of range 6 west. The land upon which the village stands was originally owned by H. L. Dousman, who, in 1839, sold 300 acres to Peter Barretta, Sr. Thomas Calanan, who was the first settler on the site of the village, erected the first house, in 1855. A ferry was established in 1835, by John Brunet. In the spring of 1857, when the railroad was built to this point, George M.

Dickinson opened a general store. Shortly after this he sold to William Snell. The same year, 1857, L. O. King, B. F. Fay and George M. Dickinson, erected large warehouses and did an immense grain business. In 1863, B. F. Fay built an elevator, which he sold to W. B. Hunt and it finally came into the hands of John Bidwell.

H. C. King, of King & Barretta, built an elevator in 1868, on the site of their old warehouse; this burned in 1874 and was rebuilt the same year.

In 1861 Anton Schmidt opened a hotel, which was burned the following year.

Another hotel was built in 1865 by John B. Davis, who sold to Frank Bacon about 1871. Bacon operated the house a year and sold to C. A. Mathews. He sold to Walter Hicklin and he in 1874 to Moses Barretta, who run it till 1881 and sold to George W. Keye, who a year later sold to William P. Hill and he to A. J. Beesecker, who was operating it in 1884.

Moses Barretta opened a saloon in 1850, which in 1866 he sold to Henry Barretta, who after ten years sold to Frank Bacon. In 1881 Bacon sold to Thomas Nugent.

As before stated, George M. Dickinson opened the first store of the village. He sold to William Snell, who, in 1866 was succeeded by Coleman Brothers and they by King & Kenyon in July, 1872. Six months later Mr. King bought Kenyon out and the same year removed the stock to a new building; and in 1875 sold the building and goods to Joseph Atherton, who the next year sold to C. A. Mathews. Mrs. Carrie Mathews owned and operated the store in 1884.

In 1876 H. C. King opened a general store and in the spring of that year became associated with Henry Barretta, who in 1884 sold back to Mr. King.

"Con" Snell built a good store building and opened up a fine general stock in 1868, on the site afterwards occupied by King & Barretta. In 1872 he sold out to his brother William.

HISTORY OF CRAWFORD COUNTY.

This store together with the goods was destroyed by the same fire which burned the elevator and other property in the village on March 14, 1874. Mr. Snell rebuilt the same year, but went out of trade the following year, 1875.

Thomas Neill started a blacksmith shop in 1870, continuing until 1881.

A postoffice was established at Bridgeport in the autumn of 1857. B. F. Fay was the first post master; he was succeeded by the following in their proper order: L. O. King, T. D. Coleman, John B. Davis and H. C. King.

When the railroad was built through the village in the spring of 1857, the place became a flag station, and remained as such till 1867. The depot was destroyed by the disastrous fire that occurred on March 14, 1874, and was rebuilt the same year. The trestle work of the railroad bridge was all destroyed at the same time.

Jan. 15, 1884, the business interests of the place were as follows: H. C. King and Mrs. Carrie Matthews, general dealers; A. J. Bee-secker, hotel; H. C. King, grain dealer; Thomas Nugent, saloon; H. C. King, post master.

Bridgeport has been one of the heaviest shipping points along the line of the C. M. & St. Paul railroad, between the Mississippi and Milwaukee. Especially is this true of live stock, large amounts of which come from Grant county, over the wagon bridge, across the Wisconsin river, at this point. During the year 1883, it was no uncommon occurrence to see twelve car loads shipped per day, from this point.

PROMINENT CITIZENS.

Peter Barrette, senior, was born in Montreal, Canada, January 1800. In 1816, he came by the lakes, Green Bay, Fox and Wisconsin rivers to Prairie du Chien, and for five years worked for fur traders and others. In 1821 he married Theresa La Point, daughter of Charles La Point. (For further notice see recollections of Mrs Theresa Barrette). He was a farmer at the time of his marriage and followed farming for some years afterwards. In 1835 he took the government contract for mail carrying from Prairie du Chien to Plattville and return, three times a week. At this time he moved out from the village and locating, established a pole ferry on the Wisconsin river, about two miles below the present village of Bridgeport.

There were no highways at this time, and mail was carried on horse back. Indian trails were followed until open country was reached, then the nearest "cross the country" route taken. In 1839 this ferry was abandoned, and he bought 300 acres of land of H. L. Dousman, and the ferry property in sections 11 and 12, town 6, range 6, now town of Bridgeport. The village of Bridgeport stands on part of this purchase. He changed his mail route, and operating the ferry, put on the route passenger wagons, and extras, and operated the same until 1854, when he went out of the mail service. He had previously (in 1845,) bought a horse ferry boat at a cost of $750, in and operated the same until 1857, when the Bridgeport bridge was built. He then sold the ferry to parties at Boydtown, where it was run a short time. His residence since 1839 was on the Dousman purchase, where he had a fine farm, and where he lived until his death, Aug. 5, 1863. His widow still lives on the old homestead with her grandson Samuel, son of Lewis Barrette. Their residence is a substantial, heavy walled stone house, the walls of which were made by John Brunette and the building completed by Mr. Barrette after his purchase of H. L. Dousman of the property. The house stands on an elevation, giving a fine view of the opening of the Wisconsin valley into the Mississippi valley, and the Iowa bluffs beyond. In the family room stands a heating stove, in good condition, bought of Joseph Rolette's family in 1839. It had then been in use ten or more years. Peter Barrette, Sr., has left a long line of descendents. He had eight sons and four daughters. Susan, born Jan. 18, 1822, died in infancy; Louis, born Feb. 29, 1824, of Minneapolis; Charles, born Feb. 26, 1826, of Bridgeport; Peter, born March 7, 1829, of Prairie du Chien; Antoine, born May 20, 1831, of Prairie du Chien; Julia, born June 25, 1833, died in infancy; Moses, born Aug. 10, 1835, of Waterton, Dak.; Paul, born Sept. 22, 1836, of Prairie du Chien; Samuel, born Jan. 30, 1838, died in infancy; Henry, born July 20, 1841, of Bridgeport; Margaret, born March 5, 1844, died April 17, 1864; Philaman, born Aug. 12, 1846, died Dec. 20, 1857.

Charles Barrette is the son of Peter Barrette, Sr. He was born Feb. 26, 1826, in Prairie du Chien. He owns and resides on the Samuel Gilbert claim made about 1826. He has one of the best improved farms in the town, with good buildings. In 1849 he married Emily J., daughter of H. L. Dousman, and lived with his father the first two years after his marriage. In 1852 he moved into what is known as the mill farm of H. L. Dousman, and lived there eighteen years. In 1870 he moved to his present residence. His wife died April 8, 1874. They have had born to them eight children—Virginia, born Sept. 20, 1850, wife of Thomas Ward. Theresa, born September, 1852, wife of Exis Brothers, and died Aug. 15, 1877; Jane, born Dec. 7, 1858, wife of Chas. Brandes, of Wauzeka; Minnie, born December, 1860, of Nashua, Iowa; Susan, born in 1862, died in 1864; Mattie, born Feb. 9, 1864; May, born Dec. 15, 1865; Charles L., born in 1867, died in 1875.

Henry Barrette is the son of Peter Barrette, Sr. He was born July 20, 1841. He married Anna M. Kane, Jan. 3, 1864. She was the daughter of Bernard Kane, of Pittsburg, Penn. She was born Sept 24th, 1841. They have eight children—Lizzie O., born Nov. 14, 1864, Jennie May, born May 1, 1866; George W., born Feb. 22, 1868; Walter H., born July 28, 1870; Louis B., born Sept 6, 1872; Willie E., born and died Sept. 27, 1874; Annie V., born Oct. 9, 1876; Mary Josephine, born May 16, 1878. Mr. Barrette is a prominent citizen of Bridgeport village, has been a long time in the mercantile trade. He has held the office of town treasurer since 1878, was the town assessor five years previous, elected first term 1873, and ten years was a member of the school board.

REMINISCENCE OF THERESA BARRETTE.

"I was born in Prairie du Chien, in the year 1805. My father was Charles La Point, my mother was Susan Antaya; they were married in 1803, at Prairie du Chien. My father was born in Montreal, Canada, in 1775. In 1797, he came with two brothers, Francis and Peter La Point, by way of the St. Lawrence river, the lakes, Green bay and Fox and Wisconsin rivers, to Prairie du Chien, and for a few years following was in the employ of the American Fur Company. In their employ, father made several trips to Green Bay. The winters he spent in traffic with Indian settlements, and exchanged Indian goods for peltries, etc.; but after his marriage he went to farming. In those days, when they wanted land, all they did was to take possession of it. From that time, farming was his principal occupation, though being able to handle most all kinds of tools, and do almost any kind of work needed on the frontier, he worked a portion of the time at carpentering, and other mechanical pursuits. My mother was born the same year of my father (1775), in St. Louis. Her father Michael Antaya, in 1785, with his wife and three daughters, Susan (my mother), Josephine and Mary embarked at St. Louis in a canoe destined for Prairie du Chien. In passing the lower rapids, their canoe was upset, and only for the timely assistance of a party of Fox Indians, who fortunately were near, the whole family would have been drowned. My mother's sister, Josephine, married Sandy Simson. After his death, she married Augustus Crochier, a native of Montreal, and with whom she returned to Canada, and died there. Mary married Francis La Point (my father's brother), whose death in Prairie du Chien left her with a family of eight children. She married Michael La Point, in 1822 (he was no kin to my father and uncles), who came from the Red river of the north, was a laborer, and much of the time in the employ of the American Fur Company. By this marriage, four children were born, one of whom is now (1884) living, Mrs. Madeline Lariviere. I was the first born of my mother. My sister, Louisa, widow of Joseph Dechamp, was born in 1807. She lives in Prairie du Chien (1884). Her first marriage was to Edmund Ronche in 1823. One child, Louisa, was born to them in 1824; she is now living, the wife of Alexander Paquette, in Benton, La Fayette Co., Wis. Edmund Ronche, died in Prairie du Chien in 1826. My sister married Dechamp in 1828, who died in 1862. They had nine children; five are living: Joseph in Minneapolis, Amuabe lives in Chippewa Falls, Theresa, wife of Moses Duquette Edmund, lives in Texas, Frederick lives in Mineral Point. I married Peter Barrette, Sr., in 1821, who died Aug., 5, 1863.

From my earliest recollection, I remember Pierre La Point. He was born in Canada, about 1747, and came to Prairie du Chien in 1782. He was grand-uncle to my father, and my uncles Francis and Peter La Point. About 1784, he took an Indian maid for a wife, and to them were born four daughters: Palazee, Victorie, Susan and Theresa Palazee married a trader, named Crawford; they had two children, one son (what became of him I don't know), and a daughter named Sophie, who married an Indian trader, named Mitchell, and went to Mackinaw, never returning. Palazee separated from her first husband, Crawford, and about 1817, married Antoine La Chappelle. By this marriage, she had seven children, Theresa, Theophilus, Peter, Bernard, Frederick, Pauline, and Antoine. Theresa married B. W. Brisbois, of Prairie du Chien. Theophilus, if living, is in the Madison Insane Asylum. He was a brilliant man, and made insane by hard study. Peter lived and died in Prairie du Chien. Bernard committed suicide at the age of thirty years. Frederick is now living at Wabasha, Minn. Pauline is living at Atlanta, Ga., the widow of Dr. Beach, formerly of Prairie du Chien. Antoine is living at Winnebago agency, Blue Earth Co., Minn. To return to the other daughters of Pierre La Point, Victoria married Edward Beezan. Susan died young. Theresa married an officer stationed at Fort Crawford. Pierre La Point was physically an athletic, strong man; tall, straight, well-formed, and very active; he never made money fast, was always employed by others. Instead of giving employment, he worked much of the time for the American Fur Company, and independent traders. He disliked farming, but always made maple sugar, in its season. He died at Prairie du Chien, in 1829. Myself and my sister Louisa Dechamp are the two oldest persons living in Crawford Co., who were born within its limits."

As one of the first born of Prairie du Chien. Mrs. Barrette has seen this country pass from barbarism to civilization, the wilderness converted into lands teeming with corn and grain. The rude "dug out," give way to floating palaces on our river. Indian trails converted into steel roadways crowded with commerce, and the few score of civilized people, in the northwest swelled into millions, and to this she has contributed her full share, for, over two scores of living people of this day carry her blood in their veins, seven children, thirty-one grand children and six great-grand children.

Samuel Barrette was the son of Lewis Barrette. He was born in 1849, is one of the family of nine children—Rosanna, wife of Joseph Rule, John, Adeline wife of Frank Dunn, Louisa, Peter and Henry all of Minneapolis. Samuel Barrette was married May 30, 1883 to Adaline Hartgag, daughter of Flora Hartgag. They are living on the old homestead of Peter Barrette, Sr., with his grand mother, Theresa Barrette.

Harvey Bassett and his wife, his mother, Mrs. Catherine Craw, (widowed by the death of her second husband, Samuel Craw,) with two half sisters, Minerva and Alicia Craw, and Isaac Hill, left Fairfield Vt., May 22, 1838, destined for Crawford Co., Wis. The outfit consisted of three two horse teams and wagons, considerable household furniture, provision, etc. Seth Hill, brother of Isaac Hill, had settled in Bridgeport town a year or two previous. His representations induced the emigration of this party. They were met in Michigan by Seth Hill, who returned to this town with the party. In Illinois they were joined by Samuel Bassett, a brother of Harvey, also by another half sister, Emiline Craw. Harvey Bassett, was born in Easton, N. Y., June 8, 1808. He lived previous to coming west in Fairfield, Vt., where he married Clarrissa Warren, in 1833. His wife was born in that town, March 5, 1811. In 1838, they came to Bridgeport, and settled on section 9, town 6, range 6 west, making a very fine farm, with valuable improvements. Mr. and Mrs. Bassett had two children—Jane Ann, born July 4, 1840, and died at the age of sixteen years, and Victoria Augusta, born Dec. 1, 1846, and married, Feb. 19, 1873, to William B. Hickey. Mr. Hickey died April 30, 1881. Mr. Bassett died June 3, 1867, and his widow is still in vigorous health, and is living with her widowed daughter on the old homestead where they settled in 1838. Isaac Hill died about two years after coming here. Seth Hill lived in the county until after the war, when his wife having died, he moved to Illinois. Grandma Craw died in 1859, Emiline Craw married William Keith, and went to Missouri and there died. Minerva is living in Illinois, and is the wife of Elias S. Bowen, Alicia died in Bridgeport town, about 1863. Samuel Barrett, lived in Bridgeport many years, but died in Minneapolis, Minn., in 1872.

Joseph Atherton was born in Chesterfield, N. H., in 1813. In his early manhood he was engaged in teaching school. He came to the west in 1838, and settled in Crawford Co., Wis., in 1840. On the 8th of December, 1844, he was married to Lydia Warner, the adopted daughter of Elisha Warner, (now deceased) since which date he was chiefly engaged in farming near Bridgeport. He was often entrusted with public business for his town and county, and uniformly discharged his duties with ability and fidelity. He was a close thinker, a careful reader, and a thorough student of passing events. In his intercourse and dealings with his fellowmen he was governed by the strictest honesty and integrity. Not bigoted in any of the "isms," he was the advocate of equity and justice in public, as well as private matters. Mr. Atherton was a kind and affectionate husband and father, a faithful friend, and an excellent citizen. His exit beyond the dark confines of earth, left a sorrowing family; and threw a pall of sadness over a large circle of friends and neighbors, with whom his greetings were always warm and heartfelt. In his death, the last of the early settlers in the Bridgeport district has gone. His early neighbors in pioneer life were Elisha Warner, Theodore Warner, S. G. Basset, Elias Bowen, William Wright, Seth and Lorea Hill, Peter Barrette, Sr., Samuel and James Gilbert, Joseph Curdy, J. P. Hall, William Curts, Lyman Frost, H. Brandes and Hiram Delap, with most of whom he is now testing the realities of eternity. Mr. and Mrs. Atherton formerly resided on the fine farm now owned by H. C. King. They were the parents of seven children, three of whom are living—Mrs. Carrie A. Matthews, Emma, wife of Fred J. Bowman, of La Beau, D. T., and Joseph, residing on the home farm with his mother. The deceased children were—Martha, wife of Chancy Blancher, of Prairie du Chien, who died in September, 1870, George, who died in 1864, aged fifteen years, and Charles H. and Joseph (twins), who died in 1864, aged ten months. Mrs. Atherton is a native of Trumbull Co., Ohio, born in 1828, and accompanied her adopted father, Elisha Warner, to Prairie du Chien, in 1838, arriving in the keel boat Kickapoo. Mrs. Carrie A. Matthews owns and personally conducts a general merchandise store in the village of Bridgeport, and is a woman possessed of fine business qualifications. She is the mother of one child—Emma, born Oct. 18, 1872. Mr. Atherton died at his residence in Bridgeport, on the morning of the 6th of January, 1880, of paralysis, by which he was attacked on the 31st of December previous.

John Burrell, son of John and Catharine Burrell, was born in Cassville, Grant Co., Wis., in 1839. In 1841 he came with his parents to Crawford county, his father engaging in the manufacture of brick on section 8. In 1866 he purchased 161 acres of land on section 10, town 6, range 6 west, Bridgeport town, where he now resides. Mr. Burrell married Theresa Comeskey, a native of Canada. They have seven children, four sons and three daughters.

Mrs. Philena Anns resides on section 3, town 6, range 6 west, Bridgeport town. She is the widow of Justus Anns, a native of Genesee Co., N. Y., and born in 1814. When young he removed with his parents to Cattaraugus county, where his parents resided until their decease. Mr. Anns received a good education, especially in mathematics, of which he was very fond, and was reared to the occupation of a farmer. In 1838 he went to Indiana and engaged in teaching. He was there married, in 1839, to his present widow, then Philena Scott. In 1849 Mr. Anns came to this town, and in 1852, settled on section 3, taking 120 acres of the government, and adding forty acres at a subsequent time. He died at the homestead quite suddenly, March 13, 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Anns had ten children, seven of whom are living—John R., William H., Dewitt C., Albert A., Louisan M., Richard Roy and Jessie Jannett. Those deceased are—Martha Jane, Sarah Emeline and Ellen E.

Charles Fritsche, resides on section 9, town 6, range 6 west. Mr. Fritsche was born in Prussia, in 1836, where his father died. In 1854, his mother, with the family, emigrated to the United States coming directly to Prairie du Chien. There were four children in the family,—two sons and two daughters, Caroline, who became the wife of Antoine Brenner, and died in May, 1883, in the town of Prairie du Chien, Minnie, Charles and Henry. In 1861, the brothers purchased a tract of land of Lucius Johnson, and lived together and worked in common for a period of ten years. In 1871, they agreed to make a division of the land and since that time have owned and occupied different farms adjoining each other. They are both successful and prosperous farmers. The farm of Charles contains 180 acres; his brother has 160 acres. The farms are in a good state of cultivation; all improvements have been made by them. Charles enlisted, in 1863, as a recruit in the 1st regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. In 1864, he was transferred to the 21st regiment, where he served till the close of the war. He participated in a number of important engagements of the war, among which were the siege of Atlanta, and Sherman's march to the sea. Charles married Susan, a step-daughter of Bernard Herrold, one of the old settlers of the town of Wauzeka. She is a native of Louisville, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Fritsche have five children,—Carrie, William, Robert, Andrew and Emma. Mrs. Fritsche has four children by a former marriage. Her first husband, Charles Kuchenbacker, was also in the army; he and Mr. Fritsche enlisted at the same time, and served together till the close of the war. He died Dec, 15, 1873, of injuries received from being thrown from a wagon.

Charles Kahler, one of the pioneers of Prairie du Chien of 1856, and for many years one of the county officers of Crawford county, was born in Prussia, March 11, 1833, and is the son of William and Christiana Kahler. He was educated in his native country, and emigrated to the United States in 1855, disembarking at New Orleans, La. In the spring of 1856, he came to Prairie du Chien, and moved his family to this place the following October. For several years after coming to this city, he was engaged in the boot and shoe business. He was chosen a member of the town board for 1865-6, and was elected county clerk for the term of 1867-8, and re-elected for the years 1871-2-3-4. In 1870, for the benefit of the health of his family he removed to his fine farm of 240 acres, situated three miles southeast of the city, in the town of Bridgeport. Since a resident of this town, he has served as chairman of the town board, and is the present town clerk. Mr. Kahler was married on the eve of leaving Germany for the United States in 1855, to Eulalie A. C. Lenz. They have two sons and one daughter—Arno A., Franklin G. and Eulalie M.

George Fairfield was born Sept. 10, 1839, in Fulton Co., Ohio. He left his home for Wisconsin, on the 28th, of May, 1857, in company with his brother-in-law, George Chapman, making the entire journey with teams. They arrived in Crawford county, June 21, 1857. Mr. Fairfield enlisted in Prairie du Chien, April 27, 1861, in company C, 6th regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. His record in the army is an honorable one, and proves him to have been a brave and faithful soldier. He was known throughout the brigade as a leading spirit of personal adventure. He participated in many important battles among which were: Gainesville, second battle of Bull Run, South Mountain, Fredericksburg, the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, North Anna River and others. He was in front of Petersburg during the first part of the siege of that city. He was promoted to corporal, May 29, 1862, and by request of Gen. Bragg, for bravery at the battle of Fredericksburg, he was promoted Feb. 1, 1863, to sergeant. He twice refused to be nominated for a commission, and on the 29th of April, 1864, refused the position of sergeant-major of Camp Randall, under Maj. Dill, preferring to go to his regiment, where he received the compliments of his captain. He received a gunshot wound in the head, at the battle of South Mountain, which carried away the sagittal suture down to the cerebrum. From the effects of this wound he was confined two months in the hospital at Washington City. At Gettysburg, his canteen, filled with water, was struck by a minnie ball, while his regiment was making a charge on the 2d Mississippi. The canteen of water resisting, to some extent, the force of the ball, and diverting it from its course, doubtless saved his life. At Petersburg he was struck by the fragment of a shell, which fractured the left temporal bone. He was struck five times while in the service, with ball and shell. Soon after his last wound, he was discharged, his term of service having expired. In the military history of Wisconsin, by E. B. Quiner, Esq., the following acknowledgment is made: "To Sergt. George Fairfield, of company C, 6th Wisconsin Infantry, we are indebted for the loan of a well kept diary, from July, 1861, to the battle of South Mountain, where he was severely wounded, and during the Wilderness campaign to the assault at Petersburg, June 18, 1864, where he was again wounded." At the close of the war, Mr. Fairfield returned to Seneca, Crawford county, where he taught school for one term. On the 2d day of March, 1874, he purchased of J. F. Haskins, 100 acres of land on section 10 town 6, range 6 west, where he now resides. His farm is well stocked and in a good state of cultivation. Mr. Fairfield has been twice married. He was first married to Elnora J. Haskins, April 9, 1865. She died Feb. 18, 1880, leaving five children—Willard, Laverne, Jennie V., Lizzie L., and George E. Mr. Fairfield subsequently married Eliza J. Allen, Dec. 23, 1882, with whom he is now living.

Henry C. Maynard resides on section 1, town 6, range 6 west, where he has lived since February, 1868. He is a native of Vermont, born in 1830. When quite young he removed with his parents, Dr. David S. and Lydia A. Maynard, to Ohio. In 1859 he moved to Grant Co., Wis., his usual occupation being farming, but he was for a short time engaged in the insurance business. He married Ellen A. Hill, a native of Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y. Mr and Mrs Maynard have had three children, two of them are living—Frank A. and Carl H. Their eldest child, Marium, died aged three years. Mr. Maynard's farm contains 200 acres of land.

William Curts, Jr., son of William and Mary Jane Curts, was born on the homestead where he now resides, on section 10, town 6, range 6 west, Sept. 5, 1859. His father settled on this place in 1839. He married Eva Poff, born in Indiana in 1858. Her father, John Poff, settled in the town of Haney, and resided at Bell Centre at the time of his death. His widow lives in Readstown. Mr. Curts' father died April 4, 1861; his mother died June 21, 1862. Mr. and Mrs. Curts have one son—Marion Edward.

Lyman King with his family came from Trumbull Co., Ohio, and settled at Port Andrew, Richland Co., Wis. in 1856. He there buried his wife Nov. 28, 1857. Mr. King came to Bridgeport town in 1860, and lived with his son L. O. King, until the death of the latter which occurred in 1868. He then lived with a younger son, Theodore, until 1879. He then bought of his son, Henry C. King, forty acres of land, and built a house in which he has since resided with his only living daughter, Mrs. Jane Fitzsimmons. Mr. King is now (1884) eighty-two years of age, in good health, vigorous, strong, good memory and strong mind. His son L. O. King died in Prairie du Chien Dec. 24, 1878. He was master of the Masonic lodge and buried with masonic orders, Odd Fellows and United Workman lodges participating. Lyman King has had eleven children, George F. born 1826, Elisabeth, born 1827, died in Ohio, 1842, Jane, born 1829, Lyman O. born 1832, died Dec. 24, 1878, Henry C. born 1834, Theodore, born 1845, Sally, born 1855, wife of Franklin Bacon, died in Bridgeport 1872. Four children, in Ohio, died in infancy.

Henry C. King, is a resident of Bridgeport town and a prominent business man of Bridgeport village. Mr. King was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, Jan. 16, 1834. In 1851 at the age of seventeen he started out in life on his own account, having a brother older, George F. King, living in Mobile, Ala. He went to him, and with him remained until the spring, of 1854, learning the trade of carpenter and joiner. He then went to Galveston Texas, and went into business as contractor, for general building, doing quite an extensive business. On the outbreak of the civil war, business was suspended. Mr. King being a northern man by birth was loyal, but by adoption and business interests was identified with the south. His situation was a trying one to him, his loyalty was perhaps divided, but he always believed that the appeal to arms was unnecessary; that the ballot box could and should have settled all differences between the two sections. In 1862 under the Confederate government conscription act, Mr. King was drafted into the confederate army, and placed in the 24th Cavalry (Texas Rangers) and the regiment was placed in drill school at Shreveport, La, in July. The regiment made part of a confederate force of 10,000 men under orders for Little Rock, Ark. Later his regiment, was dismounted and the force ordered to Arkansas Post, there going into winter quarters. In January 1863 when Gen. McClelland and Sherman's forces made their attack upon the post, he was in the line of battle outside the fort. During the engagement which preceded the capitulation, Mr. King had a slight wound in his head, which caused permanent deafness in one ear. His chum was killed by his side by the same shell that injured him. After the surrender, while in line, marching to the transport of the Union fleet, hardly able to walk, he thought of the fine revolver his comrade had on his person. Leaving the line he obtained it. Soon after returning, noticing a fine looking Union officer nearing him he hailed him and sold the revolver to him for a five dollar greenback, which, in his penniless condition, was a fortune. He was taken by way of Alton to Camp Butler Ill. The severity of the weather, and change of climate brought him very low and the sickness following, with prison hospital care, came very near being his last. In March, being a little improved in health but still suffering by inward trouble in his head, caused by the wound, he began to study upon the future and concluded to take the oath of allegiance. This he did and in his old rebel uniform and the greenback in his pocket he made his way to Springfield, Ill. His health improved rapidly and he was soon at his old trade. In the meantime, by correspondence, Mr. King learned in May, that his father, Lyman King, had moved, in 1856, from Ohio to Wisconsin and was then living in Bridgeport, Crawford county. He immediately joined them and has from that time resided in this town. Mr. King owns a very fine farm, the old Atherton place, about one and one half miles from the village. His residence is upon this farm. He was married in 1869 to Mary Seaman. Four children have been born to them, only one of whom is living—Tudney V. born September, 1870, died September, 1871, Nellie, born December 1873, died March 1882, Ruba P. born April 1877, Hurley C. born April 1879, died March 1880. Mr. King is one of the prominent men of the county, is serving now (1884) as chairman of the town board. He has served five years as town treasurer—1873 to 1878.

Andrew Bailey, is the son of Henry H. and Eliza S. Bailey. He was born June 27, 1850. He was married Feb. 8, 1881, to Carrie, daughter of John D. Harp, of Cassville, Grant county. She was born June 16, 1856. Mr. Bailey is an active, wide-awake business man, is now (1884) in the employ of Henry C. King, in charge of Mr. King's general merchandise store. Mrs. Eliza S. Bailey lives in Bridgeport village. She was the daughter of Christopher and Mary Bowen, and part of her family came from Pennsylvania in the keel boat Kickapoo, in 1838. Besides herself there were two sisters and two brothers in her father's family—Elias S., of Illinois; Alfred A., died in Bridgeport, April, 1880; Delia, married Joseph Curley, and lives in Iowa; Barbara, married John Sane; she died in Illinois, June 27, 1874. Mrs. Bailey, formerly Eliza S. Bowen, married Henry H.

Bailey Jan. 1, 1845. To them six children were born—Arnold, born Dec. 20, 1845, died Aug. 15, 1847; Charles, born Feb. 28, 1848, of Grant county; Andrew, born June 27, 1850, of Bridgeport; Ara, born March 25, 1854, of Grant county; Benjamin, born Oct., 16, 1857, died in infancy; Delia, born June 19, 1859, wife of Dante Poole. A few years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Bailey moved to Vernon county, and lived near Viroqua two years, then moved to Prairie du Chien, there remaining about four years; and after two years' residence in Batwice, this county, he came to Bridgeport, remaining a short time. In 1865, they moved to Taylor's Falls, on the St. Croix river in Minnesota, and lived there about five years; returning to Prairie du Chien, and buying a place, lived there seven years. He then sold out and bought a farm in this town where he has lived most of the time since. Mr. Bailey died in this town, March 17, 1878. Mrs. Bailey is living with her son-in-law, Dante Poole. Mr. and Mrs. Poole have one child—Charlie, born March 24, 1882.

Charles A., son of Henry H. and Eliza S. Bailey, was born Feb. 28, 1848. He was married, March 27, 1872, to Annie M. Whiteside, step-daughter of John D. Harp, of Cassville, Grant Co., Wis. His wife died April 6, 1875. To them were given two children—Harry, born Aug. 13, 1874, and Glendon, born March 29, 1875. At the time of his wife's death, Mr. Bailey was a clerk in a dry goods establishment, at Prairie du Chien, and at present is engaged in farming in Grant Co., Wis. Ara W. was married January 14, 1880, to Hannah J. Ladd, daughter of Lemuel Ladd, of Grant Co., Wis., where he resides at present.

Thomas Marsden, owner of the Bridgeport stone quarry, is the son of Thomas Marsden, Sr., who began developing the quarry in 1863, for the purpose of obtaining stone for the capitol at Madison. The land on which the quarry is located was originally owned H. L. Dousman. It changed hands a number of times before.

coming into the possession of Thomas Marsden Sr., (1868,) who had been connected with the working of the same, since 1863. A description of the quarry will be found elsewhere in this work.

Thomas Marsden, Sr., was born in Lancashire, England, in 1812. He emigrated to New York in 1849, and was engaged in the marble and limestone trade at Albany, N. Y., for some time, in fact, during the greater part of his life, he was connected with quarrying and stone-cutting. He married, in England, Isabella Morrow. He died here April 20, 1874. There are three surviving sons—Thomas, James, who resides at Barraboo, Wis., and William, of Tombstone, Arizona Territory.

Thomas Marsden, Jr., was born at Liverpool, England, in Oct., 1848. He enlisted in 1861, when but thirteen years of age, in the 3d regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war; he participated in the battle of Big Bethel, one of the early battles of the war, and served under Maj-Gen. Butler for a considerable length of time. He participated in Gen. Grant's Virginia campaign; was in Butler's unsuccessful attack on Fort Fisher, and subsequently Gen. Terry's successful attack on that confederate stronghold. In the storming of Fort Fisher by the forces under Gen. Terry, his regiment, the 3d New York, lost every officer, commissioned and non-commissioned, and a private commanded what was left of the regiment, at the end of the fight. After the close of the war, he engaged in the business of marble and stone-cutting. He worked at various places—Rock Island, Duluth, LaCrosse, etc. He succeeded his father in the ownership of the quarry. His wife was Catharine Donahue. They have four children—Thomas, Mary Isabella, Winefred C. and Charles A.

Andrew J. Beesecker, was born in Monroe Co., Penn., Oct. 17, 1831, and was the son of a farmer. While young he attended school in winters and worked on the farm during the other seasons. In his twentieth year, July 4, 1851, he married Elizabeth Postens, born in the same county, Oct. 1, 1832. They made their home in that county and followed farming until 1865, in which year they came to Crawford Co, Wis., and bought a farm on section 6, town 7, range 5 west. His farm contains 188 acres, and was occupied by him, since his residence in town, until 1882, when he rented it and bought the Bridgeport hotel property and is now doing a successful business as hotel keeper. Mr. and Mrs. Beesecker have had ten children, eight now living. Alfred, born Sept. 27, 1852; Ellen J., wife of D. Valmer, born June 23, 1854; Rachel A., wife of M. In 1865 they came to Crawford county, settling in Eastman, where he has made a farm and now resides. His father had ten children, five boys and five girls: Eliza, Thomas, Mary, Ann, John, William Barney, Ellen, Bridget, Maggy and James. nia, Sarah Lindsey. She died in Crawford county, in 1873. He subsequently married Susan (Mitchell) Miles, a native of Vermont. She has seven children by her first husband, two sons and five daughters. Mr. Strayer has three children by his former marriage—George, John H. and Mary E. He is republican in politics and a strong temperance man, believing in total abstinence. By occupation Mr. S. is a mechanic and repairs all kinds of farm implements in the wood line.

Pelton, in 1853. The first improvements on the farm were made by Mr. Pelton. About nineteen transfers have been made of the whole or a part of this place, since the entry by Mr. Delap.

CHAPTER XXVIII

TOWN OF CLAYTON.

Clayton is bounded on the north by the towns of Kickapoo and Franklin, in Vernon county; on the east by the towns of Syloan and Aiken, of Richland county; on the south by the towns of Haney and Scott, in Crawford county; and on the west by the towns of Utica and Seneca, in the last mentioned county.

This town contains a portion of four congressional townships, one half of township 11, in range 3 west; also six sections in township 11, in range 4 west; and sixteen full sections and five fractional sections, in township 10, in range 4 west.

The surface of Clayton is very broken. The valleys are well supplied with springs which gush forth in all their crystal purity, giving an abundant supply of water for both stock and domestic purposes. Upon the ridges there have been improved some very good farms. Here the sub-soil is clay and is well adapted to the growing of corn, wheat and oats. In the valleys the soil is of a black loam, made from the decay of vegetable matter, a portion of which has been washed from the higher and more uneven lands. Wheat does not do well on this land as it grows too rank and is apt to lodge before it ripens.

The Kickapoo river which washes a greater portion of the western border of the town, runs through a sandy soil, well adapted to small grain and corn culture. This valley, however, requires much more fertilizing than does the ridges and other valleys of the towns. The timber of Clayton is principally oak, maple, with some ash, elm and basswood. The oak, however, is the species upon which the farmer and business man depend. There are large amounts of railroad ties cut and sent to market from out these forests. This town is also noted for the large number of hoop poles which are cut and shipped to various markets.

This town, not unlike the other portions of Crawford county, is well supplied with never failing streams, which make it a desirable place for stock business. The main water course is the Kickapoo river, which enters Clayton on the northern line near the northeast corner of section 19, in township 11, of range 3 west, running in a southwesterly course through sections 19 and 30, in township 11, range 3 west and through sections 25, 35 and 36 of the same township, in range 4 west; also through sections 2 and 11, of township 10, range 4 west, leaving the town from section 34.

Soldier's Grove creek takes its rise on section 4, in township 10, of range 3 west, and passes through sections 31 and 32, emptying into the Kickapoo river, on section 30, in township 11, of range 3 west.

Janes creek heads on section 23, in township 11, of range 4 west and passes through sections 23 and 24, uniting with the Kickapoo river on section 30, in township 11, of range 4 west.

Trout Run has its source on section 26, passing through sections 27, 28, 21, 20, 29 and unites with the Kickapoo river on section 30, in township 11, of range 3 west.

Smith creek takes its rise on section 6, of township 11, in range 3 west and passes through sections 1 and 11, of township 10, in range 4 west, forming a junction with the Kickapoo river on section 11.

Bear creek has source on section 8, of township 10, in range 3 west, passing through sections 17, 18 and 7 of township 10, in range 3 west, and sections 12 and 11, in township 10, of range 4 west.

Little Sand creek heads on section 26, township 10, range 3, and unites with the Kickapoo river on section 24, township 10, range 4 west.

Big Sand creek heads on section 20, township 10, range 3 west, and passes through sections 20 and 19, of township 10, range 3 west, and sections 25, 26, 36, 35, leaving the town from section 34, township 10, range 4 west. The eastern portion of the town of Clayton is well supplied with never failing cold spring brooks, which are utilized for various purposes.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first to effect settlement in this part of Crawford county, was Simeon Tyler, who came in 1850. He was a native of New York; he "squatted" on section 28, town 10, range 4 west, where O. P. Rounds was living in 1883. The next to locate was a Mr. Marsten, who "squatted" on section 19, town 11, range 3, west in 1852. Elias Bell came the same year, and located in the south part of the town. Another settler of 1852, was L. B. Smith.

During 1853, among the number who came in for settlement, were J. E. Campbell, who in 1884 was living at Prairie du Chien; John Jones who settled on section 30, town 11, range 4 west; John Janes, who entered eighty acres on section 11, town 11, range 4 west; Benjamin Hill took up a claim in the fall of 1852, or spring of 1853, on section 19. Other settlers of 1853 were Christopher Christopherson, who settled on section 2, town 10, range 4 west. Thomas Hoo-verson on section 35, town 11, range 4 west. Andrew Bottlerson on section 2, town 10, range 4 west.

In 1854, David Smith located on section 11, town 10, range 4 west, He died in 1866. Among others who came that year, were the following: Joseph Martin, who settled on section 11, town 10, range 3, west, who moved to Dakota in 1875; Robert Welch, John Murphy, Mathew Ryan, Henry Murphy, Morris Murphy, David Mook, David Black, J. Glover, Peter Hoffman, David Underwood, Marwood Hound-sell and B. Davenport.

Mr. Patridge, who afterward became nationally known in connection with the affair of the capture of Jeff Davis, settled in 1854 or 1855 on section 32, town 11, range 3 west. In 1884, he was living in Iowa. Richard Brannan came the same time locating on section 30, town 11, range 3 west. George and Samuel Briggs also located in 1854, on section 30, town 11, range 3, west. George A. Smith was another who settled in 1854, he claimed 160 acres from parts of sections 20, 29, and 30 of town 11, range 3 west. In 1884 he was a merchant, doing business at Soldier's Grove. C. W. Baker was another pioneer of the town, coming in 1854. He purchased the "squatter's claims" taken up by Mr. Marsten.

In 1856, Joseph Brightman came in and entered eighty acres of land on section 31, town, 11, range 3 west, where the village of Soldier's Grove now stands.

Nathaniel Woodard came the same year and entered 320 acres on section 35, town 11, range 3 west. During that year Samuel Clark claimed forty acres on section 29, town 11, range 3, west.

William Bounds came in at about the same time and entered 80 acres of land on section 3, town 11, range 3 west; also Robert Briggs who claimed land on section 24, town 11, range 4, west, came the same season. Other settlers of 1856 were: George W. Barlow, who took land on section 1, town 10, range 4; Ralph Barker who settled on section 22, of the same town and range; C. P. Bennett, section 31, town 11, range 4; Dennis Bell, who took 120 acres on section 34, town 10, range 4, west.

The following year, 1857, came S. S. Brown, who entered eighty acres on section 27, town 10, range 4 west; Joseph and Isaac Evans came the same year and entered a farm together on section 14, town 10, range 4.

During 1858, the settlement commenced in earnest and the tide of emigration has rapidly increased until now (1884) the larger part of the land that is tillable is already occupied and improved by an industrious class of people, a large per cent. of which are of Irish descent, with some Norwegians, and a few Americans who came from the State of New York

FIRST EVENTS.

Simeon Tyler, the first settler of the town, erected the first house, without any one to aid him. It was a log building 10x14 feet, on section 28, in town 10, of range 4, west.

Joseph Brightman, who, in 1884, is still a resident of the town, erected in 1856, the first frame house and barn, where Soldier's Grove is now situated.

Weddings were not common in the early settlement of this town. The good people witnessed no such event until the latter part of 1859, when Samuel Mitchell and Miss Ida Smith were united in marriage, by Joseph Evans, who was then a justice of the peace.

The first birth was that of Benjamin Hill, Jr., which occurred in the summer of 1852.

The deaths were not numerous, although occurring early in the settlement of the town, the first being Simeon Tyler, the first settler who died in 1853. His wife followed him to the grave, in about two weeks. The death and burial of James Brannan is of historical importance enough to be given in this connection. He died in 1856, in the northern part of the town, near the banks of the Kickapoo river. His remains were taken up the river in a canoe and the mourners and friends followed in skiffs and other boats, making a funeral cortege of three boats, which meandered their way around up this remarkably crooked stream to Readstown in Vernon county, where the body was interred.

The first mill within the town was a water saw mill, erected in 1856, by Joseph Brightman, near the present location of Soldier's Grove. In 1884, A. Peterson owned this mill power and another mill upon it.

The earliest religious services held in the town of Clayton were held at the house of David Smith in 1856.

The first school was taught by Miss Frank Carter, in the barn of J. H. Brightman. After teaching the school two weeks, she was compelled to resign on account of sickness, when Mary Brightman—afterwards Mrs. M. R. Tate—undertook to finish the term, being at the time but thirteen years of age.

The first Fourth of July celebration was held at Bell Centre, in 1856, and was attended by most of the people of the town

The first cemetery in Clayton, was the one known as the "Yankee Town Cemetery." This was laid out in 1861, and the first burial therein, was Mrs. Sarah Bennett, wife of C. P. Bennett.

The first orchard set out was by C. W. Baker, in 1856, who, in 1884, was still spared to eat of the fruit of his own planting and culture.

The first election in Clayton was held on the 7th day of April, 1857, at the house of David Smith, who then resided on section 1, of town 11, in range 4, west.

ORGANIC.

Clayton was organized in the spring of 1857, and the first town meeting for the election of officers was held at David Smith's, April 7, of that year, when the following were elected: Peter Hoffman, chairman; David Smith and D. Bell, side board; G. Morgan, clerk; Peter Hoffman, treasurer; Isaac Evans, assessor. The number of votes polled at the election were forty-two.

The officers for 1883, were: A. Peterson chairman; C. P. Sessman and John Severson, side board; C. W. Baker, treasurer; N. O. Peterson, clerk; William Barney, assessor; J. H. Brightman, John L. Stowell, justices of the peace; Daniel Ryan, Eben Hartly, Stephen S.

Brown, constables. Mr. Ryan failing to serve, Peter Nelson was appointed to fill his place.

EDUCATIONAL.

Much interest has always been manifested in school matters in Clayton, and its educational advantages have been fully up to the other towns of the county. In 1884, there were fifteen school buildings within the towns. The school population at this time was 855, the value placed on all school property at that date was $2955. The following gives the number of pupils in each district Jan. 1, 1884: No. 1, 55; No. 2, 29; No. 3, 30; No. 4, 126; No. 5, 85; No. 6, 40; No. 7, 75; No. 8, 50; No. 10, 38; No. 12, 62; No. 13, 36; No. 14, 63; No. 15, 59; joint district No. 9, 15; joint district No. 11, 59.

POST OFFICES.

In 1884, the town of Clayton contained five postoffices, established and located as follows: Knapp Creek, on section 12, of township 10, range 3, was established in 1869. The first postmaster was Daniel Adney, who was still serving in 1884.

North Clayton is located on section 34, it was established about 1870.

St. Phillips is located on section 16; this was established after the civil war.

Yankeetown postoffice is on section 1, established 1858.

Soldier's Grove was made a postoffice in 1866. The first postmaster was Joseph H. Brightman, who was followed by Samuel Hutchins, and he by Atly Peterson, who is now (1884) still in office.

RELIGIOUS.

There are now (1884) four religious organizations within the town of Clayton—the Catholic, Methodist, Disciples and United Brethren. The former had occasional services at a very early day. A house of worship was built in 1869, on section 22, township 10, range 3, west.

A society of the United Brethren sect was formed just after the rebellion closed; a log house was erected in which to worship, which was situated on section 26, township 11, range

3, west. This church bears the name "Mt. Zion." Rev. John Day, of the town of Scott, was the minister in charge in 1883.

About 1858, a Methodist Episcopal class was organized by Rev. Brakman, with David Gander as its leader. In 1884, that class numbered about thirty; they were then holding service once in two weeks at the school house at Soldier's Grove. The pastor stationed at Mt. Sterling had charge of the work.

ST. PHILIP'S PARISH.

No organization as a parish existed prior to 1873. Previous to that period the spiritual wants of the faithful, who now constitute this parish, were attended to by visiting friends from different sections of the surrounding country. The first priest who visited this section was Father Gaultier. He lived in Prairie du Chien, and was accustomed to make excursions, at regular intervals, through the different parts of Crawford county that required the services of a Catholic priest, he being the only one, at that time, in the county. His first visit was on July 6, 1857. The journeys were made, for the most part, on foot, and with great difficulty, through the dense woods and over the rough hills of Clayton town. Father Gaultier continued to visit Clayton for about two years, until 1859, and died a few years later in Prairie du Chien. His successor was Father O'Conor. During his attendance the little log church, begun under Father Gaultier near the site of the present structure, was finished. Father O'Coner resided at Rising Sun and paid his first visit to St. Phillips in October, 1859. Towards the end of 1862 he was succeeded by Father Murphy, who also resided at Rising Sun. Under his administration nothing of importance took place. He was a great favorite with his people, and was a successful instrument in the conversion of a great many who entered the fold of the Catholic church during his attendance. A modest monument in St. Patrick's cemetery, at Seneca, will point out to many, to whom his kind features were familiar, the spot where he is buried.

The next to take charge of the congregation of St. Philip's, was Father Montague, in the beginning of 1863. He it was who first projected the erection of a new church. The idea of a new house of worship seemed to give a new impetus to the religious affairs of the mission, and the zeal of the scattered flock was quickened, about this time, by a visit from the bishop of the newly erected diocese of La Crosse, Rt. Rev. Michael Heiss, now Archbishop of Milwaukee. During his visit a committee of three prominent gentlemen of the congregation, Matthew Ryan, James Brady and Peter Kelly, all of Clayton, waited upon his lordship and interviewed him regarding the new undertaking and the further organization of a regular parish. The prelate sanctioned the project, promising, further, that he would send them a resident pastor provided they were able to give him the necessary support. With an enthusiasm worthy their desire they gave the required assurance, and never has the bishop or his honored successor had cause to regret his promise, and the hearty good will with which the entire congregation have from year to year made good the pledge of the zealous committee, testify to the spirit of unity that prevailed among the people and that the promise made to the bishop was not without foundation. Father Montague, during his short stay, prosecuted with no little enthusiasm the new undertaking, which was brought to a successful end in November 1870, under the wise direction of his successor, Father Beau, seconded by the energetic co-operation of the committee and people; the happy event was celebrated by a mission conducted by the Benedictine Fathers of Chicago. In August, 1872, the new church was dedicated by Bishop Heiss, assisted by Fathers Vexweist and Bernard.

Father Beau, besides completing the church edifice, erected a very neat little pastor's residence.

Heretofore, St. Philip's congregation received only the attendance of visiting priests. The last of these was Father Beau, who was succeeded in February, 1872, by Rev. Father Wendelin Bernard, the first resident pastor. During his pastorate Father Bernard donated to the new church a number of utensils and sacred vessels required for divine service. He presided over the parish one year and was succeeded in February, 1873, by Rev. R. V. Steinburg. Father Steinberg was in turn succeeded by Rev. Patrick Walsh, in June, 1875, who was again succeeded by Rev. John Conroy, in May, 1876. Nothing of particular note occurred during the administration of the latter three gentlemen, the affairs of the parish running smoothly on, with satisfaction to all, as the result of a solid and thorough organization. Father Conroy died on Feb. 12, 1877, and is buried in the churchyard near the front entrance to the church. The prostrate forms of the worshipers at St. Philip's, on each succeeding Sunday at his grave, where they stop to offer a prayer, attest the high esteem and veneration which his noble and saintly qualities gained for him, and the tender affection of the people who thus piously regard his memory.

Father Conroy's successor was Rev. Bonaventun De Gory. Father De Gory belonged to the order of Capuchin Friars, in his native country, Holland, but being in delicate health, was permitted, by his superiors, to come to this country over thirty years ago. His missionary labors extended throughout the State of Wisconsin, he having belonged successively to the dioceses of Milwaukee, Green Bay and La Crosse. He was possessed of a great zeal for the erection of churches and other buildings in the interest of religion and a facility for acquiring the necessary funds and other assistance, as well as the good will and co-operation of the people was always at his command, and insured success from the beginning. It is said that he erected between forty and fifty churches in this State; for, though old and longing for the peace of a quiet and retired life again, did his customary zeal in this regard forsake not him while at St. Philip's. Understanding full well that the safety of religion, no less than the welfare of society demand that youth be instructed in religion and the principles of Christian morality instilled in their minds, with heroic self-sacrifice and apostolic zeal, he devoted his time, labor and private property to the erection of a beautiful frame school house, which he presented to the congregation of St. Phillips, in 1881. The school known as St. Francis Parochial School, was first in charge of the Sisters of Mercy, of Fond du Lac, but laterly has been conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis, of Silver Lake. The building is a two-story cottage-roof, with a capacity for eighty pupils on the ground floor, the second floor being occupied by the Sisters apartments.

Father DeGory also erected two mission Churches, St. Patricks, Scott town, Crawford county, and St. Peters, Richland county, both being attended from St. Phillips. On July 8, 1883, Father DeGory bade his sorrowing congregation adieu and a few days later left for New Jersey to visit friends. On August 1, he set sail for Europe, visiting the home of his youth, Haarlem, Holland, traveling the greater part of the continent, and spending two months in Rome, when he was accorded an audience with the Holy Father in November. He again returned to Holland, and now, from the quiet and solitude of his convent home looks back over a life of toil and untiring exertion, devotion and self-denial in the interest of his fellow men, happy in the reflection that his life was spent for their welfare, and the consciousness that the love and prayers and affections of his children follow in his seclusion.

One week after the departure of Father DeGory, his place was occupied by Rev. J. L. Fitzpatrick, the present incumbent of St. Philip's parish. Father Fitzpatrick was born in Jacksonville, Chickasaw Co. Iowa, August 25, 1858. He attended the district schools of the neighborhood until the age of fifteen when he went to Milwaukee and became a student at St. Francis' Seminary. Here he remained three years, studying the classics, English and mathematics. In June 1876, he left St. Francis and in the following September was numbered among the students of St. Josephs college Du-buque. He remained at St. Josephs two years, the first being devoted to a continuation of his former studies, the second being occupied in the study of philosophy. He then rested from his studies for one year, remaining at home, his time being occupied principally with a review of his previous studies. In September 1879, he was again back at St. Francis' Seminary with his old classmates where he prosecuted with them the study of philosophy for another year. He was now ready for the finishing study in preparation for the priesthood; this he began in September, 1880, and finished in June 1883; the course occupying three years. On July 2, 1883, he was ordained priest by Rt. Rev. Killian Flasch, at Big River, Pearce Co., Wis. Two weeks later, in obedience to his bishop, he came to St. Phillips, in charge of which he has since remained. Father Fitzpatrick is the son of Jeremiah Fitzpatrick, and his wife, Catherine Collins, both living in Jacksonville, Iowa. He is the second youngest of ten children, seven of whom are now living. Their names are—John and Timothy, both dead; Jeremiah, living in New Mexico; Ellen, died in infancy; Daniel, now in Virginia City, Nev; Ellen, Clayton, Crawford Co., Wis., Mary, now Mrs. T. Burck, Sacramento, Cal.; Patrick F, Jacksonville, Iowa, and Michael J. E. now attending the College of the Sacred Heart, Prairie du Chien.

Adjoining the church premises is the St. Phillips' cemetery. It was organized in 1857, the first person buried therein being Philip Murphy, after whom the church was named. Mr. Murphy was born in the county Wexford, Ireland, and came to this country in 1852. Her resided a few months in Chicago, removing to Rock Co., Wis., in the vicinity of Beloit, where he married Jane Cavanaugh. In 1856 he came to Clayton. He died July 4, 1857. He left two sons, now living in Minnesota. Some years later, his widow married Mr. Michael Gorman, of Clayton, where she still resides. Two of Mr. Murphy's sisters, Mrs. Mathew Ryan and Mrs. Miles Dorren, are living in St. Philips' parish, and one, Mrs. Mathew Ryan, of Sylvan, Richland county, in St. Peters'.

Among the earliest members of St. Philips' parish are to be mentioned: James Brady, Mathew Ryan of Clayton, Miles Dorren, Michael McCormick, P. McCormick, Robert Welsh, M. Garrity, Mrs. Eichorn, Richard Rowe, John Kelly, Terence Gaffany, Peter Gaffany, James Garrity, John Brady; Terence Brady, Philip Murphy, nearly all of whom are yet living, staunch supporters of the parish which they helped organize, and whose steady growth they witnessed from its infancy and favored in every possible manner.

The Disciple Church was organized in 1870 by Rev's. Buraker and Sheffield, with a membership of thirteen, who held services at the Yankeetown school house. The first officers were Amos Braman and Fletcher Canfield. The first pastor was Jacob Reinhart. In 1884 this Church numbered eighteen. At one time it numbered thirty-eight, but was decreased by death and removals.

A well conducted Sunday school has always been a strengthening arm to this Church.

CEMETERIES.

The oldest cemetery in the town of Clayton is located at what is known as "Yankeetown," below Soldier's Grove a few miles. This was laid out in 1861. In 1884 the town contained the following burying grounds: One at the Catholic church; one on section 34, town 11, range 3 west, called "Winns;" one known as the "Sugar Grove cemetery," on section 24, town 11, range 3 west, which was the most used and best cared for of any in the town; another, "Soldier's Grove burying ground," on section 25, town 11, range 4 west.

BARTO'S MILL.

In 1882 J. L. Nowlin built a steam saw mill provided with a circular saw, on section 33, town 11, range 3. He soon sold to Joseph

A. Barto, who engaged extensively in the manufacture of hard and soft wood lumber and railroad ties. This mill had a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber and 200 ties per day.

THE LOST CHILDREN.

In the summer of 1855 Mr. Patrick Padden and his three children, Mary, Edward and James (the oldest being about eight years of age), were in the forest in search of "sang" (ginseng root), which grew in great quantities throughout the valleys and hill sides, at an early day, and became a great source of revenue to the inhabitants. In their search the children got away some distance from their father and were lost. As soon as they were missed by the father the alarm was at once given about the settlement, all of which turned out in pursuit of the little wanderers. The calls for "Mary! Mary!" who was the eldest child, all seemed in vain, as no answer came back, save the hollow echo of the poor father's cry. The curtains of night were drawn in by nature and the search was continued with but little hopes of finding them alive, as the forests were alive with various wild animals, including wolves and bears.

The following morning the company was increased by men from Vernon county, near Liberty Pole, making in all about thirty, nearly all of whom had guns with them. An arrangement was made by which no one should fire his gun unless he found the children, and then this signal was to be repeated all along the line that all might know the glad tidings. Fortunately the dog had accompanied the children, but in his travels he crossed the track of a pole cat and for the time being seemed to think more of the skunk than of his precious charge, the children. Whether the dog was a complete conqueror or not, he succeeded in getting well perfumed, and then returned home. By quite an effort the party tracked the dog's foot prints to the point where he intercepted the path of the skunk, and from that point were able to mark the wanderings of the lost children by an occasional stalk of spikenard, which they had broken down.

Long before the morning sun had made crimson the eastern sky, the party in search had divided off into squads throughout a radius of many miles; and notwithstanding the solemnity of the occasion, now and then laughter was provoked by the constantly repeated words of Mr. Padden, who in his distress would say: "Well! well! well! pwhat shall I do? The bears will ate 'em up, the bears will surely ate 'em up! Pwhat shall I do? The bears will ate 'em up!" Sometime during the second day the children were found near Knapp creek, five miles away, having cried themselves into a half-wild state and were feasting on blackberries and seemed more like Indian children than those of a civilized race. To any one acquainted with the rough surface of the land in this part of the State, and a knowledge of the fact that wild beasts roamed at will through these same valleys, where had passed the feet of these young and helpless children, it will seem almost a miraculous deliverance from the jaws of death.

THE VILLAGE OF SOLDIER'S GROVE.

This thriving little mart, which in 1884 contained about 300 people, is situated on section 31, town 11, range 3. The first building erected in the place was by J. H. Brightman, in 1856. He built a saw mill at this point about the same date, these being the only buildings for a number of years. In 1866, the village was laid out by Messrs Netwick and Sime. Ten years later the grounds were legally platted. They at first consisted of four blocks, but a little later three blocks additional were platted by Mr. Severson.

The first mill was put in operation in 1856 by Mr. Brightman.

The first store was operated by Samuel Hutchins in 1866.

A flouring mill was built in 1875 by T. N. Sime, which was propelled by water power derived from the Kickapoo river, upon the banks of which the village stands.

The first hardware dealer was W. H. Smith, who began business in 1875.

The first hotel was opened by Samuel Hutchins in 1866.

The first school was taught by Mrs. M. R. Tate (formerly Miss Brightman).

The first school building was erected in 1857. This building was 24x30 feet and cost $300.

In 1884 the business interests of this village were represented by the following firms: R. S. & F. W. Smith, drugs and groceries; George A. Smith, hardware; W. W. Tate, J. L. ## KINGSTON.

This, in 1884, was a small collection of houses, though not a regularly platted village. However, considerable business interest was manifested by the few live business men who were then living there. This place is located on section 23, in town 11, of range 3 west, and was commenced in 1882, by H. E. King. A year later it contained a steam saw mill, owned and operated by J. D. Hunter, who was doing a large business in cutting lumber and railroad ties, and a blacksmith shop conducted by William Wallace.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following named persons are representatives of the bone and sinew of Clayton town. Some are pioneer settlers, and others have been here but a few years, but they are all, individually and collectively, among the honored and respected citizens of the county:

CHAPTER XXIX.

TOWN OF EASTMAN.

That portion of Crawford county known as the town of Eastman is bounded on the north by the towns of Seneca and Haney; on the east by the towns of Marietta and Wauzeka; on the south by the towns of Wauzeka and Praire du Chien, and on the west by the Mississippi river (or, more correctly speaking, the State of Iowa). It was organized in the spring of 1855. and was named in honor of Hon. Ben C. Eastman, a member of Congress from this district.

The territory embraces a part of four congressional townships—fractional sections of township 8, range 7 west; thirty-one whole sections, and five fractional sections of town 8, range 6, west; thirty-five whole sections of town 8, range 5, west, and three whole sections, together with seven parts of sections of town 8 range 4 west.

The general surface of the town is quite rough, having a ridge called the divide, between the Mississippi and Kickapoo rivers, with a few ridges extending east and west, toward the above named rivers.

The soil on these ridges, is a clay sub-soil, based on lime rock. The soil in the valleys, on either side of the divide is a "washed soil," which produces large crops of corn oats, rye, barley and vegetables of all kinds. While the soil on the ridges contains more clay, and at an early day was not considered good corn producing soil, it has of later years, proven itself well adapted to this, even claimed by some to be superior to bottom lands, on account of floods and frosts. An abundance of wild fruit grows along the beautiful streamlets, which course through the town.

The town is well watered on the west by the the Mississippi river and its branches the De Sioux and Picadee creeks. The former (that is the De Sioux), takes its rise on section 14, in town 8, of range 6, west, and unites with the Mississippi; the latter (the Picadee) has its source on section 28, in town 8, of range 6 west, passing west through sections 29, 30 and 31.

In the eastern portion of the town, there are four streams, namely: Plum creek, which heads on section 29 town 8, range 5, passing through sections 28, 27, 34 and 35, leaving the town from the north-east corner of the latter section. Otter creek takes its rise on section 9, in town 8, of range 5 west, passes through sections 10 and 11, entering Pine creek on the latter named sections, thence through section 12, of town 8, range 5, and section 18, town 8, range 4, uniting with the Kickapoo river. Pine creek enters the town on section 3, town 8, range 5, passes through sections 2 and 11, town 8 range 5, there forming a junction with Otter creek; thence to the Kickapoo, as before described. Citron creek enters the town on section 6, town 8, range 4, and passes diagonally from north-west to south-east, through the section, uniting with the Kickapoo river, on section 8, town 8 range 4.

SETTLEMENT.

The first steps toward the development of this town were made by John H. Folsom, in 1839. He located on the north half of section 25, in town 8, of range 5 west. He is a man of good education. The next year he removed to Prairie du Chien, where he took charge of the schools; he still [1884] resides there, a hale and hearty old man, with but few of his faculties impaired.

R. Lester was the next settler to enter the town; he came in 1839, and was killed by the Indians in 1843. Old Mr. Bouilett, a Frenchman, who had been a civil engineer in Napoleon's army, came about the same time. In 1841 came Aaron Hazen. He was from New Jersey. He entered 160 acres of land on section 36, in town 8, of range 5 west. Abram Hazen came on at the same time with his father, Aaron Hazen, and entered forty acres of land on section 31, town 8, range 5 west.

In 1842 Conzac Boucha and Louis Boucha made settlement in the town. The same season came Lewis Buscher, F. Duchurm and Daniel Amber. During 1843, among the number who came in were: Fred Nickerson, who claimed land on section 31, town 8, range 5; John Miller settled on section 1, in town 8, of range 5 west, and Jacob Lemmon came the same time, settling on section 18 in town 8 of range 5 west; Ira B. Stevens, and Henry Chandler came the same year, or early in the spring of 1844: In 1844 Philander Green and Louis Caya came in and commenced improving.

The first school house in the town was erected in 1848, on section 36, township 8, range 5.

The first dwelling house was built in 1838, by John Folsom, on section 34, town 8, range 5.

The first sermon preached was delivered by Elisha Warner, at the house of Aaron Hazen, in 1843.

The first death was that of William Persons, in 1843.

ORGANIC.

The town of Eastman was organized in 1855, and the first town election held April 3d, that year, at the school house in district No. 2, on section 18, town 8, of range 5 west. The following were elected as the first officers of the town: J. #### SCHOOLS.

In 1884, the town of Eastman had nine school buildings, valued at $2,500, with a school population of 550. It was then divided into twelve districts, nine full and three joint districts. District No. 1, Hazens district, had fifty-eight pupils. The school house was a frame structure, valued at $300.

District No. 2, Batavia, had eighty-nine pupils, and was provided with a frame house, valued at $400.

District No. 3, joint with the town of Haney, with school house in the latter town, had seven pupils from Eastman.

District No. 12, Pine Creek district contained forty-three pupils and was provided with a frame building, valued at $300.

RELIGIOUS.

From the earliest settlement of the town, the Roman Catholics have, from time to time held services. The earliest record shows that a priest came from La Crosse and established a mission, about 1847. In 1884, the Catholic element within the town had grown very strong, outnumbering all other sects. A commodious church edifice was erected that year, near the village of Batavia (Eastman).

In 1854 the Methodist Episcopal denomination organized a class at the school house in district No. 2; and services have always been maintained here, sometimes by a large and sometimes by a very small class. The earliest ministers in charge of this station were Elders Brunson and Springer.

The German Methodists formed a church about 1870, and in 1874, built a neat frame chapel, on section 20. They also have a burying ground in connection.

GOOD TEMPLARS' LODGE.

Eastman lodge No. 191, was organized April 29, 1880, with the following as its charter members.

In the winter of 1880-81, the membership numbered forty-nine. The lodge is still (1884) running and in a prosperous condition, being a means of great good throughout this neighborhood.

CEMETERY.

Eastman cemetery was laid out in 1859, by Robert Wisdom and L. A. Bonney, on section 6, town 8, range 6. John Wisdom, the first person interred in this cemetery, was a son of Robert and Margaret Wisdom.

THE MILL.

No community is complete without its grist mill; it matters not whether its machinery be turned by steam power, by the swift flowing, narrow stream which gushes from out the mountains side, giving motion to the old overshot wheel, so idolized by poets from time immemorial, or whether it be situated on the banks of some meandering deep stream worthy of the name river. Hence it is not out of place in this connection to speak of Winegar's flouring mill, which was erected in 1859, on section 28, town 8, range 5. This mill was carried down stream by a flood, June 14, 1868, and was rebuilt in 1870. Its size is 40x40 feet, two and a half stories in height, and is propelled by the waters of Plum creek. The cost of this mill, which has two run of stone, was about $4,000. It has a capacity of seventy-five bushels per day. In 1884 it was still being operated by its original builder, Henry Winegar, of Prairie du Chien.

HAMLET OF EASTMAN.

This is not large enough to be called a village, but more properly comes under the head of hamlet. It is situated on section 18, in town 8, of range 5 west, and contained, in 1884, two general stores, a hotel, a saloon; also a wagon and blacksmith shop and a postoffice. The place was originally started by Israel Mallory, in 1862, when he opened a store and kept an inn. In 1883 Hurlbut & Beach platted ten acres, upon which the place stands.

PERSONAL.

The following named citizens made a settlement here in the order in which their sketches occur:

James Fisher, one of the pioneer settlers of Crawford county, was born in Crawford Co., Penn., Feb. 5, 1816. He grew to manhood in his native county receiving a common school education and learning the carpenter and joiner's trade. In 1836 he came, with Elder Bronson's family, to Crawford Co., Wis., settling at Prairie du Chien. He worked at his trade some years. At the time that they came here the county extended from St. Paul on the north, to the Wisconsin river on the south, and there was no settlement outside of Prairie du Chien, in what is now Crawford county, to Lake Superior. In 1844 Mr. Fisher was elected to the territorial Legislature, which position he held until 1846, when he was elected sheriff of Crawford county. In 1849 he was elected to the State Senate, holding the office one term. In 1852 Mr. Fisher purchased 240 acres of land on section 6, town 8, range 5 west, Eastman town. He now owns 157 acres of the same land, which he has in a good state of cultivation, and on which he resides. In 1859 he was again elected sheriff of the county, and in 1861 to the Legislature, which office he held until 1865. He has been chairman of the town board for four years, and of the county board three years, was clerk of the court two years, town treasurer one year, and assessor of the town two years. While sheriff the first time Mr. Fisher traversed the county on foot from Prairie du Chien on the south, to St. Paul on the north and Lake Superior on the east, swimming the streams when necessary, and sleeping out in the woods at night. He was a member of the expedition that went up the Mississippi, in 1842, to arrest the Indian that killed sheriff Lester. Before starting many of the men had taken a little of the Indian's "fire water," and were a little the worse off for it. They were all well armed and would shoot at every Indian they saw on the banks. The Indians reported the fact to the fort and regulars were sent out to quell the disturbance. On their return the expedition stopped at a French trading post, and after getting their supper, drank whisky, got the trader drunk, and disarming him, tied him to the bed. They then drank and ate everything up that they could get. The next morning they set their prisoner free, and offered to pay him fifty cents each for damages, but he would only agree to take fifty cents for it all. Mr. Fisher married in 1861, Margaret Gordon. She died in 1871, leaving four children—Jim, Kate, Margaret and Maud.

Samuel Hazen, a son of the late Aaron Hazen, was born Aug. 16, 1830, in the State of New York, near Rochester, and when but seven years of age his parents moved to Oakland Co., Mich., where his father engaged in farming until 1841, when he removed to Crawford Co., Wis., it then being on the frontier of the northwest. His father immediately came to the town of Eastman, and entered 320 acres in section 36, town 8, range 6 west, and at the time of his death, 1860, had increased his farm to 560 acres. Samuel Hazen now owns 200 acres. 120 acres in section 36, town 8, range 6 west; forty acres in section 25, town 8, range 6 west, and forty acres in section 30, town 8, range 5 west. Samuel Hazen was united in marriage, October 1853, to Elizabeth Evans. Mr. and Mrs. Hazen have ten children—Thompson, Sarah, William and Samuel, (twins), Richard, John, George, Elizabeth, Mary E. and Phœbe. Sarah is the wife of James Kanan; Thompson married Amelia Ostrander, and Phœbe became the wife of E. Cherrier. Mr. Hazen has been quite prominent in the affairs of his town having been a member of the side board for four or five years.

Adam Steiner, a native of Crawford Co., Wis., was born April 30, 1848. He is a son of Valentine and Regina Steiner, who came to this county in 1841. ## CHAPTER XX X.

TOWN OF FREEMAN.

This town is in the extreme northwestern corner of Crawford county. It is composed of a part of six congressional townships. It is bounded on the north by Vernon county; on the east by the town of Utica; on the south by the town of Seneca; and on the west by the Mississippi river.

The surface of Freeman is very uneven like most of the county; it consists of ridges and valleys, following the general course of the streams, which nearly all run in a southwesterly course, emptying into the Mississippi river.

The productions are similar to those produced throughout the county—grain, corn and vegetables.

The streams are Cooley creek, which heads in Vernon county and flows southwest, intersecting Rush creek on section 32, in town 11, of range 6 west.

Rush creek, one of the largest streams in the town, is formed by two branches; the west branch rises in Vernon county and intersects the east branch, which heads in the town of Freeman, on section 19, in town 11, of range 5 west, and flows southwest, emptying into the Mississippi from section 1, in town 10, of range 7 west.

Sugar creek takes its rise on section 28, in town 11, of range 5 west, flows southwest and enters the Mississippi from section 16, town 10, range 6 west, about three-quarters of a mile below Ferryville.

Buck creek rises on section 7, town 10, range 5 west, and flows southwest entering the Mississippi from section 22, in town 10, of range 6 west.

Copper creek is formed by two branches, the greater of which rises on section 16, town 10, range 5, flows south and intersects the east branch on the southeast corner of section 21, in town 10, of range five west, and flows southwest into the town of Seneca.

There is an abundance of timber within the town of about the same varieties as is found throughout Crawford county—oak, maple and linn.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

At the general election held in 1857 there were thirty-eight votes polled in the town of Freeman, by the following pioneers, whose whereabouts in 1884 are stated in brief: Aaron Cooley, died on his way home from the army; D. O. White, moved to Dakota Territory; Abel Copper, died in Illinois; James Lawrence died in 1883; William E. Heal, dead; Henry Lawrence, dead; E. Naylor, dead; Herman Hulce, dead; Parley Whitney, removed; Andrew Call, removed; A. Absolom, removed; D. Sweep, removed; Elias Torgerson, dead; M. Joslin, removed; D. Sumner, dead; Dr. S. F. Huntington, dead; A. V. Hubbard, dead; L. F. Munsell, removed; A. E. Davis, in Oregon; Joseph Copper, dead; Lewis Eskerstrand, dead; John Johnson, moved to Dakota Territory; Nels Johnson, moved to Dakota Territory; T. C. Ankeny, removed to Tennessee; T. Christopherson, dead; William Hubbard, dead; David Ulery, moved to Oregon; Casper Laugh, dead; Henry Hendrickson, dead. The balance of this pioneer band were residents of the town in 1884: Thomas Lawrence, R. Knudson, William Wybum, Henry Van Amburg, E. T. Bishop, Alexander Young, John Call, D. P. Ames, Robert Mellon, John Rutter, H. T. James, Henry Van Amburg, G. L. Hutson, Martin Laugh.

Two Frenchmen, Michael and Joseph Godfrey, were in fact the first to effect a real settlement in what is now the town of Freeman. They located, in 1845, in what is the village of De Soto, a part of which is in this, and a part in Vernon county. About ten years later they sold the eighty acres they had taken up, to the mill company and in 1857, moved to Prairie du Chien. They had squaws for wives and were engaged in farming and trapping.

In 1851, David Ulery, Mr. Alcorn and Robert Linn settled on Sugar creek, the latter making a claim at what is known as the Shea place. In about two years he sold his claim to Joseph Brightman. When he left this town he started for Pike's Peak. On the way it was found that the Indians were troublesome, and he, with others, volunteered to fight them and was never heard of afterward, and it is supposed he lost his life at the hands of the savage tribes of the plains.

Aaron Cooley settled on the creek which bears his name, in 1852, on section 19, town 11, range 6 west. This farm was afterwards owned by John C. Bean. Mr. Cooley went into the army as a drummer; he was taken sick, procured a furlough and nearly reached home, but died between De Soto and his home, not two miles from his house.

Elias Torgerson settled in 1854, on section 26, town 11, range 6 west.

Ole Rosenwater and Deidrick White settled on section 30, town 11, range 5 west, in 1853. The former lives in the town of Utica and the latter moved to Dakota Territory. These two, with Ole A. Runice, who entered land at the same time, just over the Vernon county line, were the first Norwegian settlers in the town of Freeman.

Martin and Casper Laugh came in 1854 and settled on section 9, town 10, range 6 west. Casper died about 1872. Martin was still living there in 1884.

William Melton and Sanford S. Wightman settled at the mouth of Sugar creek, in 1854.

Thomas Adams settled in the town in 1850; finally moved to the town of Utica.

Nels Oleson came in about the same time, perhaps a year before, and settled on Sugar creek, where he was still living in 1884.

Other settlers of about this date were Amon Christianson, Nels Johnson, Michael Eitser and Herman Hulce.

James P. Finley and Martin Finley came in 1857. The latter moved to Iowa, where he died. Timothy Finley who came about that date was still a resident of the town in 1884.

In 1858, John Walder came to the town and was still a resident in 1884.

FIRST EVENTS.

Thomas Carlyle was the first child born in the town of Freeman. This occurred in the fall of 1855. Next was Mary Young, daughter of Alexander and Ann M. Young, born June 30, 1856. She became the wife of R. M. McAuley, of De Soto.

One of the earliest, if not the first marriage in the town, was Christian Homutt to Hannah Eitser, a sister of Henry Eitser, in the fall of 1857. The ceremony was performed by Joseph Copper, a justice of the peace.

The first log house in the town was built by Michael and Joseph Godfrey, two Frenchmen, at De Soto. James Osgood built the first frame house in 1855, at De Soto.

The first school was taught by Mary Coffin (who became the wife of Thomas Lawrence) in the summer of 1856. This school was held in a small log building, built for a hired man of Mr. Lawrence.

Many of the school buildings of this town are new and the class of teachers employed compare well with other towns of Crawford and Vernon counties.

RELIGIOUS.

There are but two churches in this town; these are both Norwegian Lutheran. The first services of this denomination in the town were conducted by the Rev. Peter Solberg, at the house of Ole A. Runice, in 1869. This sect erected the first church edifice within the town in 1875, on section 20, in town 11, of range 5 west. The first preacher was Peter Solberg, who preached for this church a number of years. He was succeeded by Rev. F. H. Carlson, who served three years and then came O. A. Oppogaard, who lived in Jackson county, this State. Their church building is a frame one, costing $600, and is the property of the "Huges Synod."

The other church edifice of the town belongs to the "Conference Synod." This is situated on the southwest quarter of section 25, town 11, range 6. It was built in 1870, at a cost of $600. The first pastor to serve this church, was the Rev. Mit Boe, who was succeeded by Rev. Nor, who remained till 1883, at the close of which year the church was being supplied from other points.

Each of these two church organizations have about twenty-five families in their connection.

CEMETERY.

At this date (1884) there is but one regularly laid out cemetery in the town of Freeman. This is located on section 26, town 11, range 7 on the farm of J. W. Lawrence. This is a very pleasantly situated ground and kept in good condition.

Another place sometimes used for burial purposes is situated on section 28, on lands donated by John Rutter. Another small burying ground is found on section 15, town 10, range 6. The Lutheran organization also have a bury-

POSTOFFICES.

The people of Freeman are accommodated by the use of three postoffices—Freeman, Ferryville and DeSoto. Freeman was established in 1867, on section 27. John H. Tower was the first postmaster appointed, and was still holding the office in 1884. Mail is received twice each week, over the Ferryville and De Soto route.

Ferryville postoffice was established in 1867, on section 16, town 10, range 6 west. S. S. Wightman was the first postmaster; he was succeeded by T. C. Ankeny, who was succeeded by Joseph Copper, and he in turn by Louis Helgerson. Then came W. F. McMasters, who was followed by W. J. Lankford.

MILLS.

There are two grist mills in the town of Freeman—Glenn Mills, and Diamond Mills. The former is owned by J. H. Tower & Son. It is situated on section 27, and was erected in 1858, by Valentine & Twiford, who operated it till 1864, and then sold to William Millins, of Pennsylvania, who employed A. Hoevert to run it. In 1884 it was the property of J. H. Tower & Son. It is a water mill, provided with two run of stone, doing a good custom business. This mill has a fall of sixteen and a half feet.

Diamond Mill is located on section 29, town 11, range 6 west, on Cooley creek. It was built by Rose & Mulkins, in 1874. In 1884 it was owned and run by W. G. Conklin, who has had thirty-five years of experience as a miller. The mill is run by water, having a head of thirty feet. It is a frame building, and has three run of buhrs.

At this date [1884] there is no saw mill in the town. The first one erected, was the property of T. C. Ankeny, built in the spring of 1856, on Rush Creek, section 24, town 11, range 6 west. After being operated for a number years it was abandoned.

The second saw mill was built by John Ruter, in 1857, and was run by him for many years.

Another saw mill was built on Rush creek, in 1859, by Valentine & Twiford, who also built the Glenn flouring mills. This saw mill was washed away by the floods in 1865.

J. H. Jewell built a saw mill on Sugar creek, in 1868, which was run for a few years, but was finally abandoned.

DE SOTO VILLAGE.

De Soto was first known as Winneshiek's Landing, from the chief by that name, who came here to trade his furs for supplies with the French traders at this point. Two French families by the name of Godfrey, located here not long after the close of the Black Hawk War. They were induced to come through efforts put forth by Col. Dousman, of Prairie du Chien. This was occupied as a trading post for about twenty years. Moses M. Strong made the original entry of the plat of the village.

Dr. Euclid B. Houghton purchased it of Mr. Strong. Dr. Simeon D. Powers, Dr. Houghton and Dr. James Osgood laid out the village in 1854. These gentlemen came hither from Port Washington. Dr. Osgood built the first house on the village plat, which was occupied in 1884 by Charles Lyttle as a residence. Dr. Houghton opened the first store.

The first building of any importance was erected by Carlyle, Dowse & Co. The lumber with which this house was built came from Black river falls, the nearest available point for obtaining lumber at that time.

The first blacksmith in the village was William N. West, who afterward moved to Minnesota.

The first cooper shop was operated by Ambrose De Lap.

The first shoemaker was Henry Fosdick. In the fall of 1855 Mr. Adam Carlyle purchased for Mr. Fosdick a side of sole leather and other stock for his shop of Ulysses S. Grant, of Galena, Ill.

The first saw mill was built in the fall of 1855 by A. B. Clapp and George Meade. This mill and all others at this point were operated by steam power. It was destroyed by fire in 1864. N. S. Cate & Co., built a saw mill in 1857. This firm was composed of Messrs. N. S. Cate, H. M. Chamberlain and Emery Houghton, who came from the State of Maine. They operated the mill until 1862, and did an extensive business, employing sometimes as high as fifty men. The mill cut upon an average 50,000 feet of lumber per day, besides shingles, lath, etc. This company also built a grist mill adjoining the saw mill, which was propelled by steam power. In 1862 these mills went into the hands of H. M. Chamberlain & Co., who in 1864 sold to John C. Davis. The stock was closed out and the mill lay idle for several years. This failure was caused in part by the failure of the New England Glass Co., of which Mr. Houghton was the financial manager. On the completion of this mill, when they had a three months' supply of logs on hand, the stock of this concern amounted to $100,000.

A shingle mill was built by C. M. and A. R. Worth, about 1865. They also sawed some lumber. After running this about four years it was converted into a grist mill and the Worth Brothers then occupied the Cate & Co's mill for about five years, during which time they manufactured large amounts of lath, shingles and lumber. In 1884 this mill was used for cutting staves and heading.

An establishment for the manufacture and cutting of files was started by A. Miller, who run it for a year or so and enlisted in the army to "suppress the rebellion," which had then just commenced. He was killed in the battle of Gettysburg.

In 1857 Capt. William Plummer & Co. engaged in the manufacture of lime and connected with their business the manufacture of hard wood barrels. They did an extensive business, although it was continued only about a year.

The De Soto brewery is owned by Charles E. Reiter, who purchased it of George Eckhardt in 1882. Mr. Reiter makes about 400 barrels of beer per annum. The building was erected by Cate & Co. in 1858 and used by them as a store. George Eckhart first utilized it for brewing purposes.

The first school in the village was taught by Mrs. Catharine P. Stevens in the winter of 1855-6. This was a private school. The first school house proper was built in the summer of 1856, in which James McDill taught the first school the winter following. This house was in use as a residence in 1884, a new school house having been built in 1872. This building was a frame structure, two stories high. The cost of this house was $3,500, and, excepting the one at Viroqua, was the best in Vernon county.

The first physician in De Soto was Dr. G. S. Sperry, who came from St. Paul in the summer of 1856. He was an excellent physician. He died in 1873.

Other physicians were Dr. G. W. Brooks and Dr. Worth. The physician in 1884 was Dr. Orlando Ewers. Others who have borne the title of doctor, though not educated physicians, were Dr. E. B. Houghton, the original proprietor of the village, who moved from this place to La Crosse, and later to St. Louis, where he died in 1862. Dr. James Osgood came in 1854 and assisted in laying out the village and finally became the owner of one-fourth of the town plat, and died in 1863. Dr. Simeon Powers, a dentist, was also owner of another fourth interest in the town site of De Soto. He afterwards removed to Sparta, where he was at the time of his death. Capt. C. B. Worth came in 1854 and remained till his death in 1875. He was also owner of a fourth interest in the village plat. His son Addison made the first lumber wagon in De Soto.

The first lawyer who practiced at this point was Addison A. Hosmer, a graduate of the Harvard law school at Cambridge, Mass. He came in 1857 and returned to that State in 1860.

From there he went into the army, and before the war closed became quite distinguished. After the close of the war he was made judge advocate, and it was he who passed sentence on the notorious Wirz, of Andersonville infamy.

Tolbert C. Ankney came here as an attorney in 1865, though he had been here previous to the war. He was associated with George McDill, who was also an attorney here at that time.

H. W. McAnley began the practice of law in 1866, continuing for a number of years.

The present attorney is George L. Miller.

The first hotel in this village was known as the Winneshiek House. It was a log house and among the first built in the place. The Bay State House was erected in 1856, by Seth Crowell and Jonathan F. Porter, who ran it for several years. Other parties who have from time to time operated this house, are: C. H. Allen, Thomas Lawrence, who had charge of the house in 1862-63, and was succeeded by Benjamin Trott; who improved the premises and who operated it till his death, in December, 1879. In 1884 it was owned and conducted by his widow, Mrs. Hannah Trott. This hotel was, without doubt, the finest in the village in 1884. It was a three story frame building, 32x45 feet, and finished in good style. The first cost was $7,000.

Mrs. Hannah Trott, proprietress of the Bay State House, De Soto, is the widow of Benjamin Trott who came to De Soto in 1859. He was born in Shuncook in the British Province, in 1816. He was brought up in the State of Maine. He came here in the milling interests of Cate & Co., and had charge of the manufacturing of shingles in the mill of this company. In February, 1864, he rented the Bay State House, which he conducted for several years, then purchased it, and continued in charge of the same, till his death, which occurred Dec. 15, 1879. He was a man highly respected in the community in which he lived, as an upright, honorable citizen. His wife still owns and conducts the hotel. Her maiden name was Hannah Bean. She was born in Perry, Washington Co., Maine. She has two children—Barbara, wife of Mr. Steele, of Viroqua, and Rebecca, wife of Robert Rice.

The next hotel was the De Soto House, built soon after the Bay State House was erected. It was built by Kurtz & Hale for a hotel and boarding house, but finally was used for a carriage and wagon shop.

The second hotel, called the De Soto, was formerly a store building and was changed to a hotel, by Edward Sweeney. This house, in 1884, was being operated by Mrs. Ann M. Miller.

The postoffice at De Soto, was established in 1855. Dr. S. D. Powers was the first postmaster, and Adam Carlyle acted as his deputy. The next to hold the office was Dr. Osgood, with J. C. Kurtz as his deputy. Dr. Osgood was succeeded by C. B. Whiting, whose deputy was Fred Carr. In 1884 the postmaster was J. H. Rogers, who was appointed in 1865. This became a money order office in July, 1878. The first order was issued to J. H. Hinds, for $38.32. The first order paid, was to Mrs. John Babcock, and was dated July 22, 1878.

The business interests of De Soto, in 1884, were in the hands of the following:

D. Abbott Steele came to De Soto, Oct. 5, 1855, in company with his brother, Alvah Steele, who remained about three years, and returned to New Hampshire. D. Abbott Steele was born in Georgia, where his parents, who were natives of New Hampshire, were then living. He has been variously engaged since coming to De Soto; in 1884, he was engaged in the furniture business.

John W. White came in the spring of 1855, and located just northeast of the village, where he still lived in 1884.

Edmund Houghton came to De Soto, April 1, 1855. He is now the earliest present resident on the village town plat. He was born in Harvard, Mass., in 1808. Served an apprenticeship in New Hampshire, to the trade of a machinist; and came here from that State. A friend of Mr. Houghton's, R. P. Waite, came with him, but returned to New Hampshire. Mr. Houghton made a location on section 10, town 11, range 7 west, where he made a claim which he still owns, but he has always made his home in the village. His wife was Nancy Bryant, a native of New Hampshire. They have one daughter—Ellen, the wife of Woodbridge Dyre.

Other early settlers of the town were: Samuel Pike, who came from Massachusetts in 1855 and remained until 1873, when he removed to Iowa. He was a painter by trade; C. B. Stevens, who was a tinner, came into the village of De Soto, in the spring of 1855, and continued to live there until 1882, when he moved to Dakota. Also, Dennis Powers, Sidney R. Gage, Hugh McDill, R. F. Lemmen, A. McDowell and Anthony Valle, a Frenchman, who enlisted in the United States army, and died at Andersonville prison.

The first meeting of the Congregational society in this locality was held Feb. 15, 1856. The society was organized at this meeting. The minister present was the Rev. L. L. Radcliffe, of La Crosse district convention. Among the number who joined the society at this time were: Charles Houghton and wife, Fannie Houghton, Mrs. Mary E. Roach, Mrs. Abbie W. Tobey (the last two were daughters of Mr. Houghton), Daniel D. Fuller and wife, Mery P. Fuller, Alexander Young and wife, Wilton E. Roach and J. F. Tobey. The first pastor was Rev. L. L. Radcliffe; the first officers were Charles Houghton, deacon, and Daniel Fuller, clerk. Rev. L. L. Radcliffe was succeeded by Rev. Alexander Parker, in 1863, and he by Rev. Peter Valentine, in 1865. The next pastor in charge was Rev. L. Bridgeman, who came in 1868 and remained till his successor, Rev. James Mitchell, came in 1871; the Rev. S. H. Thompson came in 1874, and was succeeded by Rev. William Houghton, in 1879; Rev. Charles Vaile was pastor in 1881; then came Rev. William Houghton to his second pastorate.

A church building was erected in 1859; it was built in the Gothic style of architecture, and cost the society about $1,800. The society has been supported by a good Sunday school since the time of its organization in 1859. D. Abbott Steele, who was elected superintendent of this school in 1862, was still its superintendent in 1884, having served continuously for twenty-one years. This school averages about thirty-five pupils.

The first services of the M. E. Church were held in a building built of railroad ties for a wagon and blacksmith shop, in the year 1855.

The first class was formed by Rev. T. C. Clendenning in the year 1858. The members, as near as can be ascertained, were as follows: James Lawrence and Mary, his wife; William Hemmingway and wife, and his son, George, and daughter, Mary Hemmingway, and William Wyburn.

The first minister of the M. E. Church who preached in De Soto was Rev. John Whitworth, now of Viroqua.

The M. E. Church was built in the year 1859, and removed out in the country in the year 1875, being now known as the Central Church.

The pastors of the M. E. Church in De Soto circuit have been as follows: Revs. John Whitworth, T. C. Clendenning, Mr. Lane, Mr. Smith, S. D. Bassenger, J. E. Irish, W. P. Hill, C. Bushby, Thomas Manual, H. J. Walker, D. L. Hubbard, D. Clingman, H. D. Jencks, W. W. Hurd and the present pastor, Rev. I. F. Nuzum.

The De Soto Baptist Church was organized at the house of Dr. James Osgood, Jan. 11, 1855, with a constituency of sixteen members, who adopted as theirs the New Hampshire articles of faith and covenant. The Church was duly recognized by council on the 9th of the following February. A. B. Hubbard, a member of the Church, served as its pastor with acceptance for six months, after which Rev. D. Mulhern became pastor. For a while the Church gained in membership, both by baptism and letter. In 1857 serious trouble arose which resulted in the exclusion of quite a number of members. The aggrieved, with others, holding letters from other Baptist Churches, called for a council, which was attended by delegates from the La Crosse and Winona, Minn., Churches. Although the Church was represented in the council, it refused to comply with the recommendation to reconsider its action. The council further recommended that, should the Church refuse to reconsider its action, a new Church should be formed. This was done soon after by the union of about twenty members. The new Church was admitted to the La Crosse Valley Baptist Association at its next annual meeting. Rev. D. Mulhern served as its pastor, and a few were added by baptism. Through removals its membership was reduced and its meetings discontinued, and were never revived. The first Church held occasional meetings at De Soto. In March, 1861, its place of meeting was changed to Brush Creek. Here it was prospered, at one time numbering thirty-one members. Removals and change of residence led the Church in 1868 to again make De Soto its place of meeting. Concessions were made which resulted in those living in the neighborhood, members of the second Church, uniting with the old Church. The following year Rev. S. E. Sweet became pastor and was ordained. He preached here and at other points, one of which was Harmony, where a Baptist Church was organized the following January. Rev. Sweet served the two Churches one year, when, in order to pursue further study, he went to Beaver Dam, Wis. In 1872 Rev. William Haughton became pastor, serving the Harmony Church also. He remained about eighteen months. From this time regular monthly meetings were held, with occasional preaching, till February, 1875, when Rev. N. L. Sweet became pastor. Quite a number were added to the Church by baptism. Rev. Sweet's pastorate continued four years. Since his resignation the Church has been declining. Although twenty-eight names are reported now, but very few are active members.

SOCIETIES.

Ancient Order United Workman Lodge, of De Soto, was organized June 10, 1878. The charter members were: James Lyttle, Fred Schmidt, William Davis, Philip B. Peters, George Eckhardt, B. D. Jenks, D. A. Steele. Fred A. Schlottman, Jacob Eckhardt and Woodbridge Dyre. The first officers were: James Lyttle, P. M. W; Jacob Eckhardt, M. W; P. B. Peters, foreman; B. D. Jenks, recorder; D. A. Steele, financier; W. Dyre, receiver; George Eckhardt, guide; F. A. Schlottman, overseer; F. Schmidt, I. W; William Davis, O. W; P. B. Peters, George Eckhardt, and James Lyttle, trustees. In 1884 this lodge had a working membership of thirty-two, and was in a flourishing condition. In 1884 there was both a lodge of the Odd Fellows and Good Templars at De Soto, each in a flourishing condition.

DISASTROUS FIRES.

The steam mill of Whiting & Carr was burned in July, 1865, involving a loss of over $20,000. In March, 1879, occurred the worst conflagration that ever visited the place. The cause of this fire has always remained a mystery. It originated in the general store of L. C. Larson. Eight buildings were consumed. Mr. Ingersoll sustained the greatest loss, which included two buildings occupied as a wagon and blacksmith shop, together with a fine stock of general merchandise. His total loss was about $10,000. Among those who sustained quite heavy losses were: L. C. Larson, John L. O'Kre, J. F. Allen, Fred Schmidt and John Delvin. This fire was a serious blow to De Soto, from which it never fully recovered.

THE OLDEST SHOEMAKER IN AMERICA.

In 1884 the village of De Soto boasted of a resident, who came to the place at an early date, and who by careful investigation was found to have been actively engaged more years, at the shoe bench, than any other man in the country. This gentleman's name is Patrick De Lacy, who has been constantly engaged at the bench since twelve years of age, or a period of seventy-one years. And strange to say, after these long years of stooped shouldered work, he is as erect as most young men of to-day.

VILLAGE OF FERRYVILLE.

The village of Ferryville is the only one platted within the town limits of Freeman, except a part of De Soto. Ferryville is located on section 16, in town 10, of range 6 west, on the Mississippi river. It was platted about 1858, by T. W. Tower and William McAuley and an addition made in 1867, by Watts & Dayton.

It was called Ferryville, as the proprietor intended to establish a ferry between that point and Lansing, Iowa. The charter for such a ferry line was obtained but for some reason it was never established.

Lewis Helgerson kept the first store in the place. Other merchants who located here were W. R. Hopkins and William J. Lankford; the last named was the last to sell goods in the village.

Charles Huffsmidt, of Prairie du Chien and a Norwegian firm, bought grain for a time, here. The place existed for about six years and then went into decay and to-day the passer-by can see no evidences of a village having been there.

Thomas Lawrence, although a resident of Freeman, Crawford Co., Wis., was with his father, an early resident of Vernon county, owning a farm near Liberty Pole, which was first occupied by John McCulloch, the first settler of Vernon county. His father, James Lawrence, located at Liberty Pole, July 5, 1851, and settled on the farm now owned by William Clawater. James Lawrence was born in Monmouthshire, England, in 1809. John Rutter resides on section 28, where he settled in 1855. He came with his family, however, in the fall of 1854, in company with Dorsey P. Ames, Samuel and Amon E. Davis, and located at that time. His farm now consists of 320 acres, and Mr. Rutter is one of Crawford county's most honored pioneers. He was born in Green Co., Penn., March 14, 1812. When seventeen years of age, he accompanied his father, Ebenezer Rutter, to Ohio. The following year (1830), the father settled in Athens county, where he lived till his death. John remained in that county until the date of his removal to Crawford county. He married Mary Ann Bell, a native of Washington Co., Ohio, born in 1813. She died July 29, 1883. Fourteen children were born to them—eight sons, and six daughters, five sons and two daughters are still living. Thomas C., Elizabeth, wife of Thomas De Lacy; Maria, wife of Cornelius C. Joseph E. McCrillis is one of the early settlers of Crawford county. His present location is on section 29, town 11, range 6 west, where he settled in 1874. This farm he exchanged the previous year with Eric Johnson, of the town of Utica. Mr. McCrillis settled in the town of Utica in the fall of 1855, where he entered eighty acres of land, which now forms part of the farm of Thomas Adams, of that town. Mr. McCrillis was born in the town of Topsham, Orange Co., Vt., in 1808. In 1831 he went to Massachusetts, where he worked at the trade of a shoe-maker. He removed to Providence, R. I., in 1857, and in the fall of 1838, went to Taunton, Mass. During this period he was engaged in shoe-making and peddling. From Massachusetts he removed to Vermont. They have five children—Jane, widow of William McDonald, of this town; Mary, wife of Richard McAuley; Margaret, wife of Arthur James; Martha R. and Sarah, unmarried. They lost three children by death—John, Alexander and Anna. Mr. and Mrs. Young were among the hardy pioneers of Crawford county who have made for themselves a pleasant home in this now beautiful region, which, but a few years since, was in a state of wilderness. Their recollection of the early times, when they and a few others located here, and shared each others trials and sufferings, will ever be remembered by them; nor are they ungrateful for the many blessings which have been bestowed upon them. They have a pleasant home and are passing their declining years in peace and plenty. Mr. and Mrs. Young have been for many years members of the Congregational Church, at De Soto.

Elind T. Bishop entered a piece of land on section 23, town 11 north, of range 6 west, in the fall of 1855, which farm now comprises 140 acres, with excellent improvements. He then engaged in the manufacture of combs, which he continued until the spring of 1855. At that time he went to Grant Co., Wis., and a year and half later came to the town of Freeman. He has been quite successful in growing an excellent apple, both for quantity and quality. Mr. Copper's brother, Charles, came several years later, resided here for a time, then removed to Des Moines, Iowa, where he died. His two cousins, Joseph and Abel Copper, were well known early settlers of Freeman town. Mrs. McDonald is the widow of William McDonald, and a daughter of Alexander Young, of this town. Mr. McDonald was a native of the north of Ireland, where he was born in 1833. He followed the sea as a sailor, from his boyhood till 1862, when he located in Wisconsin. He came to De Soto the same year, and afterward settled on a farm in the town of Genoa, Vernon county, where he resided till his decease, which occurred Oct. 18, 1881. Mrs. McDonald was born in the north of Ireland, Dec. 31, 1845. She has six children—Jane, Willie, Maggie, Alexander, John and Mary. She also lost two children. Mrs. McDonald's farm, which she purchased for a homestead since the death of her husband, contains 160 acres. It is a valuable farm, with good improvements.

John H. Tower is a representative citizen of one of the best known families in the northern part of Crawford county. His father, John H. Tower, Sr., was born in the town of Hingham, Mass., in 1793; his ancestors were of English nativity, and among the earlier settlers of New England. John H. early learned the trade of a shoemaker, in the meantime acquiring a good English education. When twenty years of age, he went to Albany, N. Y., and for three years was employed as a school teacher in the near vicinity of that city. During the War of 1812, he volunteered his services in the Plattsburgh expedition, but before he reached the field the battle had been fought, and he returned to his school. The district authorities on school matters were not in sympathy with the American cause and refused him further employment. In consequence of this unforeseen circumstance, he returned to Massachusetts, and at North Brookfield resumed work at his trade. He there married Phebe Poland, an aunt of the eminent Judge Luke Poland, of Vermont, and subsequently removed to Underhill, Chittenden Co., Vt., where he was engaged in the mercantile pursuits until the fall of 1853. The year previous, one of his sons, J. P., had gone out to Wisconsin, and laid claim to a tract of land in what is now Utica, Crawford county. He settled on this land, and in 1853 was joined by his father and brothers, John H. and Thomas, and their families. John H. Sr., entered land in 1854, and with the assistance of his two sons, John H. and Thomas, laid out and platted the village of Towerville. This was in the spring of 1855. Previous to this, they had erected a grist mill, on what was then the most modern plan, and it was started Dec. 15, 1854. John H. Sr., died in April, 1856, and his loving and faithful wife departed this life at Towerville, in 1860.

John H. Tower, Jr., was born at Underhill, Vt., in March, 1819. He was reared in the mercantile trade, and his present success is due in a great measure to the valuable business training he received in his father's store. He married Jane Woodruff, a native of Fairfield, Vt., born in August 1822. After coming to Crawford county, he was associated with his father in the erection of the grist mill, but about the time of its completion disposed of his interest, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He continued in trade until 1860, when he was elected sheriff, and served two years. In 1866, he came to the town of Freeman, and purchased the grist mill on section 27, town 11, north of range 6 west, which he still owns. Since coming to Freeman town, he has served as town clerk thirteen years, chairman of the town board, one year, justice of the peace ten years, and is highly esteemed as an upright, honest citizen. He has two sons—Cornelius P. and William H. The former is part owner and miller in the aforesaid grist mill, and the latter is a farmer of this town.

William Davis was born in Knox Co., Ind., in 1826. When twenty-five years of age he went to Stillwater, Minn., for three years, and in 1854 went to Vernon Co., Wis., entering land on section 4, town 11, range 5 west, in Sterling town, which he improved and on which he resided until 1872. He then came to Crawford county, settling on land which he purchased of Mrs. Joanna T. Wightman, situated on section 16, town 10, range 6 west, Freeman town. Mr. Davis enlisted in February, 1862, in the 19th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war. He participated in many of the most important battles, including Butler's operations in the vicinity of Richmond, siege of Petersburg, etc. He married Martha A. Heavrin, a native of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have had seven children, six of whom are living—Mary A., William N., George G., Alice E., Charles F. and Edwin A. Mr. Davis has been a justice of the peace of Freeman town for several years. He also filled the office of town treasurer in the town of Sterling for three terms.

CHAPTER XXXI.

TOWN OF HANEY.

The town of Haney comprises congressional township 9, of range 14 west, and is bounded, on the north, by the towns of Clayton and Utica; on the east, by the town of Scott; on the south, by the towns of Marietta and Eastman; and on the west, by the town of Seneca.

The surface of this town is the most broken of any in the county. The Kickapoo river enters the town on the northwest quarter of section 3, and takes a winding, southwesterly course to the southwest quarter of section 20, then southeast to the middle of section 34, from which section it leaves the town.

"Hull's Branch," is the second stream in size; this enters the town on section 6, and flows nearly east for two miles, then bears south and enters the Kickapoo on the section line between sections 9 and 10.

Crow Hollow creek enters the town on the northeast corner of section 12, and flows nearly west, uniting with the Kickapoo river on section 10.

Shaw Valley creek, the fourth stream in size in the town of Haney, rises on section 24, flows southwest into the Kickapoo river, on section 34. There is also a spring creek in the town, which has two branches.

The town was originally well supplied with timber; all varieties of woods being represented except pine and hemlock. The saw mills of modern times have consumed much of this timber, leaving but the second growth. Railroad ties are cut and run down the Kickapoo river in great numbers, which also lessens the supply of valuable timber within the town.

The soil within the valleys is very rich, producing an abundant crop of corn, grass and oats, while the ridges are better fitted for wheat, rye, etc.

FIRST SETTLERS.

The first settler of this town was John Haney, who, in 1844, located in what has since been styled Haney Valley. Mr. Haney entered 160 acres of land; but it appears that it was not in his name, but in the name of one Houghton, of Galena, Ills. Mr. Haney enclosed a few acres and cultivated it, but seemingly did not intend to become a permanent settler. He was of a speculative turn of mind; he brought a few goods with him for the purpose of trading with the Indians. In 1849 he left his settlement, crossed the Mississippi river and founded the city of Lansing, Iowa, where he resided till his death. Some of his family are yet (1884) residents of that place.

The land entered by Mr. Haney for Mr. Houghton, passed from the hands of the latter into the possession of J. F. Haskins.

A Frenchman named Lesserd located about 1847 on the west half of the northwest quarter of section 33. He built a house, which was the second dwelling erected in the town, Haney's being the first. Lesserd and his wife remained there a short time, when their house was burned. He rebuilt, and then sold out to James Mullaney, and moved to Prairie du Chien, where he died.

The next settlers, and indeed the first permanent ones, were James H. Kast and James Mullaney. The former settled on section 12, in the spring of 1851, and the latter entered land the same year on section 33.

In the fall of 1851, Peter M. Webb, Thomas Spencer and Quinton Nicks located in what is known now as the town of Haney. Mr. Webb died April 9, 1860. In 1884 his son still resided in the county, but his widow was in Kansas. Spencer and Nicks settled on section 11. Spencer died where he settled, Aug. 29, 1859. Nicks sold his claim to Spencer and removed to Richland county, and from there moved west.

In 1852 W. H. Bliss settled on section 3, where he made a claim and lived about two years, when he entered land on section 4.

In September of the same year, 1852, J. N. Kast settled on section 12, where he entered forty acres of land. In 1884 he was an attorney at Bell Center.

In 1853 Peter Miller settled on section 10, where he remained till the time of his death in August, 1881. His oldest son, Charles, still owns and occupies the place.

James Wilkins settled the same season, on section 24. His son, Alexander Wilkins, settled the same time on the same section. The former died in Grant county a few years ago, and the latter at last accounts was living in Iowa.

Another settler of 1853 was William Shaw, who settled on section 26, on the farm afterward owned by Anna Gibbs. Mr. Shaw returned to Indiana, from whence he came.

L. H. Alvord located on section 6, where he entered 360 acres of land. A few years later he moved to Kansas.

Peter Lansing, a Baptist minister, settled on section 13, in November, 1854. He came from Indiana; he at once entered 160 acres of land, upon which tract he lived for five or six years, when he moved over into Grant county. All speak of him as being an excellent man and a talented preacher.

Dr. Simon Alder came in at the same time Mr. Lansing did, and settled on section 24, where he entered eighty acres and lived there till 1860, when he sold out and located at Petersburg, where he lived a few years and then moved to Illinois. He practiced medicine during his stay in the town of Haney.

In 1854 Nathan Kelley settled on section 13; he still lived in the town in 1884.

Thomas Coleman was also a pioneer of 1854; he located on section 1, where he remained till the time of his death in 1861.

Another settler of 1854 was Martin Totten, who located on section 10. He finally returned to his native State, enlisted in the Union army, and was killed during the civil war.

Ferdinand Glathart, who came in the same year, settled on section 10; he too returned to Indiana, enlisted, and was killed during the war.

Ira Lawrence located the same year, 1854, at Petersburg, where he built a large frame hotel, which was still standing and in a good condition in 1884. After running this hotel several years he moved to Nebraska and there engaged in the same business.

Simeon Wilcox came in 1854, from Indiana and settled on section 10, at Petersburg, and a little later moved to the town of Freeman, where he died.

In 1855, came George W. Wood, C. D. Bellville, William Raymond, Merritt Thompson, Mr. Iceam, Alanson Taft, James J. Holden, Madison and James Alderman, Richard Reed, Martin Reed, G. Cummings, Amos Alderman, II. A. Sturges, E. S. Barnum, George Root, James Dawling, and perhaps a few whose names have been forgotten.

Among the large number of settlers who located in 1856, were: William Brickner, W. D. C. Lewis, William Shultz, George Smith, Frank Stowell, Truman B. Stowell, Henry Meyers and S. Chadwick.

FIRST EVENTS.

Mr. Haney built the first log house.

Peter Miller built the first frame house in the fall of 1854 at Petersburg.

The first child born within the limits of the town was Thomas, son of Peter and Jane Webb, born Feb. 28, 1852. He died in this town when about twenty years old.

The first marriage which occurred in the town of Haney was that of J. N. Kast and Elendar J. Webb, March 23, 1852. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Dolerhide, a United Brethren preacher. Mrs. Kast died June 20, 1874.

The first death was that of Solomon Shook, a young man who came in from Illinois. He shot himself accidentally, Sept. 1, 1853. His remains were buried on section 11.

The first ground cultivated was that of John Haney's.

Henry Crow built the first mill, a saw-mill, on section 12, situated on Crow Valley creek.

The first school was taught by Maria Wilkins in the summer of 1853. She began the term at the residence of Thomas Spencer and completed the school in a school house erected that summer. James McAdam taught the following winter. He was a soldier in the Civil War and was killed at Fort Donaldson in 1862.

The first religious services within the town were held by Rev. Dolerhide, a United Brethren minister, from Richland county. These services were held at the house of James H. Kast, on Christmas eve, 1851.

The first physician was G. Morgan, who came in about 1856; was here a number of years and then removed to Nebraska, where he finally died. He was a native of the State of New York. He was a good doctor of the old school practice.

ORGANIC.

The first town meeting in the town of Haney was held April 5, 1859, at the house of George Root, on section 21. There were fifty-seven votes cast at this election, by which the following officers were elected:

Nathan Kelley, James H. Kast, Oliver Langdon, supervisors; David Wion, clerk; Henry Crow, assessor and treasurer; J. L. Stowell, town superintendent of schools; Oliver Langdon, G. F. Bigelow and G. W. Wood, justices of the peace; C. D. Kast, Ira Miller and W. F. Harris, constables.

Of these pioneer town officers the following were deceased prior to 1884:

Messrs. Langdon, Root, Bigelow, Crow, C. D. Kast, Harris and Wion. James H. Kast, Nathan Kelley and George Wood were still residents of the town at this date; the others having removed to various parts of the country.

The election of 1883 was held April 3, at Wood's Hall on section 11. There were 110 votes polled for the following officers:

J. N. Kast, Jefferson Buckmaster, C. R. Young, supervisors; Harrison Coleman, clerk; Alanson Taft, assessor; R. F. Haskins, treasurer; A. L. Stowell, James Alderman, S. Taft and John G. Richardson, justices of the peace; Austin Alderman, R. Dowling and P. C. Kast, constables.

EDUCATIONAL.

In 1884 the town of Haney was divided into two full and eight joint school districts. Districts No. 1 and 5 are the full districts; the former has thirty-one pupils of school age; the school house is situated in Haney Valley, on section 20.

No. 5 has twenty-three pupils; the school building in this district is on section 27, in Shaw's Valley. Joint district No. 1, is provided with a building situated in the town of Clayton. The average attendance belonging to the town of Haney is three.

Joint district No. 3 has a building on section 30. This district is made from parts of Haney, Seneca and Eastman.

Joint district No. 4 is provided with a house on section 11 of the town of Haney. Number of pupils, thirty-seven.

Joint district No. 7 is made of portions of Haney and Seneca. The school building in this district is in the town of Seneca. Number of pupils from the town of Haney, six.

Joint district No. 8 has a good sized frame house located on section 33, of the town of Haney. Number of pupils, seven.

Joint district No. 9 is furnished with a house situated on section 3. The number of pupils from the town of Haney is forty-four. This is what is known as the Bell Centre school. The building in this district is the best in the town.

Joint district No. 11 is provided with a school house on section 25. Number of pupils twenty-six.

Joint district No. 12 has a poor log building, situated on section 13. Number of pupils, twenty-seven.

RELIGIOUS.

The United Brethren were the first denomination to hold services of a religious character. They were still the most numerous sect in the town in 1884, at which time they kept their meetings up at the several school houses.

The next to hold services, were the Free Will Baptists, whose society has never been very large.

The Methodists are organized into quite a strong society. They hold services at Bell Centre and Haney Valley, alternately.

A church edifice is now (1884) being erected on section 25, this is to be a Union church, built by a general subscription, to be used by all denominations.

CEMETERIES.

There are three burying grounds in the town of Haney. One of these is located at Bell Centre, on section 3. This was the first cemetery used in the town, it being established in 1854.

Another is situated in Shaw's Valley, on section 27. This also has been in use for many years. But little care is taken of these grounds, which remain unfenced and otherwise neglected.

The third place of burial is on section 25. This is of a later date, and receives more care.

The first interments made in the town, were in what is known as Crow Hollow. There are also several private burying grounds within the town.

POSTOFFICES.

There are three postoffices in the town of Haney. The first established was called Bell Centre, which has its history in connection with the village of Bell Centre.

North Star postoffice was established in July, 1864. Anson T. Cook was the first postmaster and was still serving in that capacity in 1884. The office has always been kept at the residence of Mr. Cook, on section 34. It is on the route from Wauzeka to Readstown; mail is received three times a week.

Haney postoffice was established Sept. 26, 1882. Seymour Taft was appointed the first postmaster. His commission is dated, Aug. 29, 1883. It is a special office on the route from Wauzeka to Readstown; it is supplied from North Star postoffice.

MILLS.

The first mill erected in the town of Haney, was a saw-mill, begun by James H. Kast, on Crow Valley creek, at a point on section 12. This was sometime during 1853. Mr. Kast, aided by his brother Chancey, got out the frame and made considerable progress toward the erection of the mill, when on account of ill health, James H. Kast was obliged to stop work. It remained in an incompleated condition till 1855, when the property was sold to Henry Crow, who set about completing it. Several years later he built a grist mill, a mile or so below the saw-mill. This was operated several years and finally burned and another mill erected on the same site, by Buckmaster & Morse. In 1884 this was doing a good business; at this date it was owned and operated by Jesse Buckmaster.

George F. Bigelow built a grist mill in 1857, on Hall's Branch, about two miles from the Kickapoo river. This mill was a failure, owing to the lack of a sufficient "head;" also, by reason of the dam being hard to keep in repair. But little was ever done in the way of grinding; the mill building was still standing, in 1884, as a land mark of early days.

A saw-mill was built by Horace Langdon, in 1873, on Crow Hollow creek, on section 10. He run it about two years, when the machinery was taken out, and the mill abandoned. In the fall of 1881, George W. Wood, on whose land it was situated, put in new machinery and made general repairs and the following February started the mill again, with an abundant supply of water power. Several portable steam saw-mills have been operated throughout the forests of the town, at various times, but are no longer in use.

VILLAGE OF BELL CENTRE.

Bell Centre is so called from Dennis Bell, and the fact that its site was centrally located within the town, on section 3. The site of the village is on land entered by Silas Anderson about 1852. Anderson sold to Dennis Bell, in 1854. He engaged C. D. Bellville a surveyor, to lay out the village plat, and gave him a third interest for his services. Dennis Bell sold a part of the site to his brother, Elias Bell, so that the proprietors of the plat were Dennis and Elias Bell, and C. D. Bellville. The plat was made by C. D. Bellville in August, 1855.

Elias Bell and Merritt Thompson had erected a frame store building, 16x20 feet, and opened a small general store, in June, previous to the survey of lots; this was the first building erected on the plat. The first building after the platting was done, was a shanty erected for a dwelling house for the time being. George W. Wood built it. C. D. Bellville built a cheap house, at about the same time. Late in the fall of 1855, Bellville erected a small frame dwelling, which, in 1884, formed a part of the residence of J. N. Kast. Mr. Wood also built a frame building that fall, into which he moved his family, and the following spring opened a store in the same building; therefore, he was the second merchant in the village.

The first blacksmith at Bell Centre was Jonathan O. Parker, who erected his forge and placed his anvil several years after the platting of the place. He also did wagon work. He is spoken of by the pioneers as a skilled workman.

In the fall of 1855 William Raymond purchased the interest Elias Bell had in the village site, and in the spring Dennis Bell became sole owner of the plat. He operated the store a short time and then sold to Raymond, who continued a few months longer, when the business, store and goods were purchased by George W. Wood, who was succeeded by William Raymond, in 1861. Two years later, Raymond erected a better store building across the street in the town of Clayton; and with Aaron Cook as partner, he continued in trade till 1871, when they dissolved, Raymond continuing a year longer. In 1884 he was in the banking business in Hampton, Iowa.

Isaiah Rounds succeeded Raymond in business, and operated the store till his death, when the business was closed out.

The plat of the village extends to the town line of Clayton. At first it contained ten acres; a small addition was made, on the west side, in 1856, by Elias Bell, and another on the south. Several business houses were erected, also residences, across the street in the town of Clayton.

In 1884 the merchants on the village plat, were Lewis Bros. The business was first established by H. H. Lewis, in 1873, and has been conducted by various members of the family. The village plat, in 1884, contained the following business concerns: Lewis Bros., groceries, drugs, provisions, etc.; Arthur Stowell, blacksmith; Jack Richards, blacksmith; Nathan Kelley, wagon maker; J. N. Kast, attorney; Fred Lewis, postmaster; James Russell, hotel

On the Clayton side of the village there were at this time, keeping a store, and carrying a general line of goods W. W. Tate & Co.

The first hotel in the place was kept by George W. Wood, in 1861, in the hotel building owned by William S. Waite, which was erected by Mr. Wood, in 1857, for a dwelling house.

The postoffice at Bell Centre was established early in 1856, and C. D. Bellville was the first to serve as postmaster. He was succeeded in a few months by George W. Wood, who kept the office till June, 1861, and was succeeded by William Raymond, who was followed by Isaiah Rounds; Mr. Woods was again postmaster from Dec. 1, 1870, till June, 1873, when he was succeeded by William S. Waite, who, in turn, was followed by R. E. Glover. H. H. Lewis was the next postmaster; he was followed by Fred Lewis, who is still (1884) in office.

REPRESENTATIVE CITIZENS.

The following named persons are mostly early settlers; those who have stood in the front ranks during the pioneer “battle of the wilderness,” and now behold the result of their hardships and privations. They certainly deserve an honored place in the annals of progress.

Ira F. Kast, the son of James H. Kast, was born in La Fayette Co., Wis., in 1846. He married Margaret J. Payne, daughter of Jonathan Payne. They have six children, four boys and two girls. Mr. Kast resides on the homestead which he now owns. His father was the oldest permanent resident of Haney town, coming to this town in the spring of 1851. Land had been entered by other parties before this date, but no permanent settlement made. He was born in New York State, in 1804. When twenty-two years of age he went to Medina Co., Ohio, remaining until 1845, when he went to La Fayette Co., Wis. In 1850 he came with his brother Chauncey to Scott town, this county, and in 1851 entered 160 acres of land on section 12, Haney town, where he has since resided. Mr. Kast has had eleven children, only four of whom are living—Lois C., widow of Henry Crow; Mary J., wife of B. S. Haskins; Eleanor L., wife of George Burton, and Ira F.

John G. Richardson resides on section 11, where Thomas Spencer settled in July, 1852. He is a son of William Richardson, one of the early settlers of Scott town. Mr. Richardson was born in Kentucky, Jan. 4, 1842. He enlisted in February, 1865, in the 47th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. Two of his brothers, Samuel and David, were also in the army. Mr. Richardson married Eliza, daughter of Thomas Spencer, born in Richland Co., Ill. They have six children, Mrs. Richardson's father was born in Indiana, and came to this town in 1851. He died in August, 1859. His wife is still living. Mr. Richardson's father was born in Loudon Co., Va., and came to this county in 1852. He entered 120 acres of land on section 7, where he resided until his decease in 1873. His wife died a few days previous.

William H. Langdon resides on section 20, Haney town. He is a son of Oliver and Sarah (Knight) Langdon, who settled on the farm, now owned by Oliver Langdon's heirs, in 1854. He was born in Vernon Co., Wis., Nov. 18, 1853. He married Jesse M. Thompson, daughter of Ambrose Thompson, of Seneca town. Mr. Langdon's father enlisted in the latter part of the war, in the army, but died at Madison, Wis., while waiting to be transferred to the field. His widow, now the wife of Montrose Washburn, resides in Howard Co., Neb.

Harrison Coleman was born in 1847, in Indiana. In 1855 he came with his parents to Crawford Co., Wis., and has since been a resident of Haney town. He enlisted, when seventeen years of age, in the 3d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He participated in the battles of Bentonville, and Averysboro, and was with Sherman on his march to the sea. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Alanson Taft. Mr and Mrs. Coleman have two children—Clarence and Pearl. Mr. Coleman was clerk of Haney town for 1883. He resides on section 22, this town. His father, Thomas Coleman, was born in Ohio. He died at his residence, on section 1, Haney town, in 1861. His mother died in Vernon Co., Wis., in 1877.

James Smethurst lives on section 29, town of Haney. He was born in Lancaster, England, in 1840. His father, Daniel Smethurst, came to this country while James was an infant, settling in Morgan Co., Ohio. In 1855, the family came to Crawford Co., settling on section 10, town of Seneca. His father died in 1872, and his mother in 1874. James, the subject of our sketch, was married in 1863, to Augusta Langdon. Mrs. Smethurst was a daughter of S. P. Langdon, the original owner of the village of Seneca, one of the earliest settlers of Columbia Co., Wis. James lived with his father until after his marriage, when, in 1864, he made the farm on section 10, now owned by B. Crow. Sept. 1, 1864, he enlisted in company C., 43d Wisconsin Volunteer, serving until the war ended, and the regiment was discharged July, 1865. In 1876, Mr. Smethurst, removed to Haney, buying land on sections 28, 29, 30, 31, 32 and 33, owning 577 acres, with about 300 acres under cultivation, with valuable improvements, being one of the finest farms in Kickapoo valley. They have three children—Charles, born Jan. 17, 1864; Anna E., born May 20, 1866; Ira A., born Oct. 11, 1868. Mr. Smethurst has served as chairman of town board one term, on side board two terms, and is one of the reliable men of this town.

Henry Hamilton resides on section 32, town 9, range 4 west, in what is now known as Citron valley, where he located in 1873. Mr. Hamilton's father, Lot Hamilton, is a native of Lancastershire, England, and came to this country in 1853, to find a location and make a home for his children, his wife having died in England. In 1855 he entered land on section 11, this town, and in 1856, brought over his children, Henry and James, and settled on his land. Henry was born in England, in 1840. He entered the Union army in 1864, as a member of the 1st Wisconsin Cavalry, serving until the close of the war. He was present at the capture of Jefferson Davis, and received his share of the prize money given for that exploit. In 1872 he went to Texas, but not being pleased with the country returned in 1873, and purchased his present farm. He has 450 acres of land, 270 of which he bought of Mr. Mullaney. His farm is beautifully located in the Citron valley, and is one of the best stock farms to be found, perhaps, in the State. Mr. Hamilton married Catherine, daughter of M. Fairchild. She was born in German township, Fulton Co., Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have eight children, six sons and two daughters. His father, Lot Hamilton, lives with him. Mr. Hamilton's brother, James, died while in the service of his country in 1863.

W. D. C. Lewis has resided in the village of Bell Centre since 1857. In that year he came to Bell Centre and purchased land adjoining the village, which he converted into a good farm which he still owns. Mr. Lewis was born in Shelby Co., Ind., in December, 1827. When four teen years of age, he removed with his parents to what is now the State of Iowa. His father, H. H. Lewis, went to California during the gold excitement of 1849, and from there he went to Oregon, where he died. Mr. Lewis married Abbie C. Girdler, a native of Massachusetts. They deal in groceries, provisions, drugs, etc.

Mrs. C. Eliza Biederman is a native of New Haven, Conn. She came to Haney, Crawford Co., Wis., in 1858. She has been twice married, her former husband being Dr. Justin B. McCarthy, of St. Francisville, Ill; her second one, Carl H. Biederman, of Poesnick, Prussia. Mrs. Biederman is a woman of culture and more than ordinary ability—the author of the "Soldier's Souvenir," "Photos from Life," etc. She has four daughters, one of whom was by her former marriage. Her father, Capt. George F. Bigelow, was one of the early settlers of the town of Haney, he was born in 1800, at South Egremont, Mass., and reared in North Haven, Conn. At the age of eighteen he became master and owner of a coasting vessel; was married to Rebecca Wilmot, of Darien, Conn., in 1826, and removed from New Haven to North Hampton Co., Va., a few years after, where he engaged in merchandizing, milling and manufacturing castor oil. Mr. Bigelow also built many trading vessels for his own use, employing them to convey the produce he brought to New York, and West India markets. His property being destroyed by fire, he removed to Norfolk, Va. where he established himself in the milling and manufacturing business. While here Mr. Bigelow patented an improvement in the construction of ships. In 1841, he removed to Indiana, where himself and father were engaged in merchandizing. He next removed to Lawrence Co., Ill., where he resided many years, engaged in milling, merchandizing and farming. In 1856, on account of his health, he came to Haney town and erected a grist mill on Hall's branch, but only ran it a short time, and then departed this life. His wife followed him to the "world beyond," Feb. 1, 1880. Of their four children, Mrs. Biederman is the only survivor.

Alanson Taft, Sr., resides on section 13, Haney town, where he settled March 5, 1858, having previously purchased his farm of Peter Lansing. Mr. Taft was born in Machias town, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., Sept. 3, 1817. His mother, Lucretia (McIntyre) Taft, died in New York State, and his father subsequently married Deborah Vial. In October, 1833, his father moved to Trumbull Co., Ohio, and afterwards to Ashtabula county, where he lived until his death, which occurred while on a visit at West Mission, Iowa. Alanson Taft was married in what was then West Salem town, Mercer Co., Penn., to Elizabeth Graves, a native of Pennsylvania. He removed with his family to Crawford Co., Penn., thence to Grant Co., Wis., coming from there to Crawford county. Mr. Taft has 480 acres of land in this town, 100 of which are improved. He also owns land elsewhere. Mr. Taft died July 16, 1864, leaving eight children—Absalom, Phebe, Mary, Elizabeth, Alanson, Oliver and Olive (twins), and Adelaide. They all, with the exception of two, are married, and all but one residents of Haney town.

Platt A. Lathrop resides on section 24, Haney town, where he settled in 1864, purchasing his farm of R. S. Lathrop. Mr. Lathrop was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1835. His father, Landias Lathrop was an early settler of that county, but a native of Massachusetts. Mr. Lathrop enlisted, in 1862, in the 112th regiment, New York Volunteers, and served in the army two years. He married Harriet Rossiter, a native of Chautauqua county. Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop have five children—Cassius, Ella, Jennie, Lowell and Landis, (twins.) Mr. Lathrop's farm consists of 160 acres of land, 100 acres of which are improved. It is pleasantly located, with a fine new brick veneered residence, and other valuable improvements on it.

Seymour Taft, postmaster at Haney, resides on section 24. He was born in Freedom town, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., in 1819, where he was reared. He married, in Hinsdale town, Philura Hawley, who died before Mr. Taft left his native county. He afterwards married Eudolha Morrea, who died in Pennsylvania where Mr. Taft was then living. He has four children—Lucretia, Thaddeus W., Ella and Edwin M.

CHAPTER XXXII.

TOWN OF MARIETTA.

Marietta is located in the southeastern corner of the county. It is bounded on the north by the towns of Scott and Haney; on the east, by Richland county; on the south by Grant county and the town of Wauzeka; and on the west, by the towns of Wauzeka and Eastman. It comprises all of town 8, of range 3 west, north of the Wisconsin river, and all of town 8, of range 4 west, except section 31; also a part of section 6, in town 7, of range 3 west, and a part of section 1, in town 7, of range 4 west, together with a few acres of sections 24 and 25, in town 8, range 5 west.

The Kickapoo river forms the western boundary of the town until it reaches section 31 of town 8, range 4, where it enters the town of Wauzeka. The course of the Kickapoo makes sections 3, 8, 9, 10, 17, 18, 19 and 30, fractional, and the course of the Wisconsin river makes sections 13, 14, 22, 28 and 32, of town 8, range 3 west, on the southeastern border of the town, fractional. Also section 6, in town 7, of range 3 west, and section 1, in town 7, of range 4 west. The town, not unlike most of Crawford county, is very broken, having high ridges with narrow valleys between. In the east and southern part of the town, these valleys run toward the Wisconsin river, and those on the west toward the Kickapoo river.

At an early day the ridge lands were well-timbered with white, red and black oak, hard and soft maple, basswood and some black walnut and butternut timber. The heads of the valleys were covered with a scrubby timber, with many wild plum and thornapple trees, while farther down in these valleys a heavy growth of good timber was found. The manufacture of lumber from these forests, furnished about the only means of employment among the early settlers.

The soil, is a heavy clay mixture, on the ridge land, while the valleys contain more loam. Both ridges and valleys produce good crops of small grain, grass and corn, together with the fruits and vegetables common to this latitude.

The main dividing ridge between the Wisconsin and Kickapoo rivers, is traversed by the leading thoroughfare of the town, running from Wauzeka village. It gains the summit of the ridge on section 28, town 8, range 4, crosses section 28, 21, 22, 14 and 13, then enters town 8 of range 3 west, crosses section 18 into 7, and passes northwest through section 12, in town 8, of range 4 west, and through section 1, between the town lines of the towns of Marietta and Haney. The State road between Boscobel and Viroqua runs from the Wisconsin river, on section 22, passing through sections 15, 9 and 4, to the town line of Scott into Richland creek, then follows up the valley.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Robert Boyd made the first settlement in the town of Marietta, in 1844, at what was later known as Boydstown.

William and Jonathan Wayne effected the next actual settlement; the former coming in 1846 and the latter in 1847. Jonathan settled on section 35, town 8, range 4. A few years later he, with Mike Woodard, platted Georgetown. He died in Illinois sometime after the close of the civil war.

George Lull came on the same year, 1846, and located on section 36 in town 8, of range 4 west, and remained till 1849.

During 1849 the next settlement was made. Among the number who came at this date were: Martin Seeley, who settled on section 2, town 7, range 4; George W. Harrison, who settled at Boydstown, where he died in 1859, and his wife in 1872. S. P. Kinny came the same year, remained at Boydstown till about 1858, but afterward removed to Minnesota. Among the settlers of 1850 were Lewis Wayne and Ed Rogers. Mr. Wayne settled on section 15, town 8, range 4, where he died in 1869. Mr. Rogers was a millwright by trade; he located on section 9, town 8, range 3. He died in 1858.

Guy S. Thompson, George W. Cup and O. E. Wise came in 1851. Thompson located on section 9, town 8, range 3 west. He was the first town treasurer, and held that office for five years, from 1855 to 1860. He came from Ohio to this county; he was a prominent man; he ran a tavern for a few years and finally removed to the town of Scott, where he died. Mr. Cup settled on the Jonathan Wayne farm, where he remained till his death, which occurred in 1880. Mr. Wise remained in the town till after the civil war, then moved to Colorado, where he died in 1880.

John T. Ferrel came the same year, 1851, and located on section 9, town 8, range 3, and remained a resident of the town till after the civil war. In 1884 he was living in New Mexico. He operated a ferry on the Wisconsin river at a point near where the Boscobel bridge now stands, for about two years, until he got into litigation with Mike Woodard, who ran another ferry line at that point; they "lawed" until Mr. Ferrel lost nearly all he had and then sold out in disgust, to Hiram Comstock, who ran the ferry till the completion of the bridge.

In 1852 Alonzo Ward came in and settled on section 13, town 8, range 4, where he still lived in 1884. But little, if any, increase was given to the settlement in 1853; but the year following quite a number came in, among whom were the following: Stephen Gardner, who located on section 20, town 8, range 4 west; James Posey, on section 10, town 8, range 4 west; S. S. Ferrel and his sons, John F. and James M., all of whom settled on sections 8 and 9, town 8, range 3 west. Samuel Wannemaker came in at the same time, and settled on section 2, town 8, range 3 west. He died in the Union army.

The following settled during 1855: Peter Campbell, on section 17, town 8, range 3 west; Chancey H. Steele, on section 2, town 8, range 3 west; Isaac C. Jones, on section 2, in town 8, range 3 west; John Cummings, on section 10, town 8, range 3 west; Thomas Ward, on the same section as Cummings; J. Cain, on the same section, also; L. Parce, on section 4, town 8, range 3 west; he died in the army; Warren Cheaver, on section 11, town 8, range 3 west; Thomas Shields, on section 11, town 8, range 3 west; Charles E. Wannemaker, on section 2, town 8, range 3 west. The latter now (1884) lives in Colorado; John T. Farris settled in the town in 1856, on section 9, town 8, range 4 west, where (1884) he still resides.

From this date on, the settlement increased rapidly.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first marriage within the town of Marietta was that of Robert Boyd and Eliza Wayne, in 1848.

The first death was Florence Wayne, in 1852.

ORGANIC.

The first election was held in the town of Marietta the first Tuesday of April, 1855. It was organized by electing O. E. Wise, chairman, and A. D. Allen, clerk. The following officers were elected:

S. P. Kinney, chairman, Ira L. Wayne and George W. Harrison, side board, E. Lull, clerk; Robert Boyd, treasurer; Jonathan Wayne, assessor; J. D. Jobe, school superintendent; S. P.

Kinney, Thomas Reynolds, A. D. Allen and Alvin Woods, justices of the peace.

In 1866 that part of the town west of range 3, was set off into a town called Union, and their first election held April 2, 1867, at which time the following officers were elected: J. N. Wayne, chairman; J. W. Powell and Robert Jobe, side board; S. L. Daywitt, clerk; Stephen Gardner, assessor and treasurer; S. P. Kinney, Barnet Daywitt James Posey and W. L. Wayne, justices of the peace.

In 1875 this territory was again set back, and the towns of Union and Marietta were consolidated under the old name.

Officers of 1883 were: James Patton, chairman; H. J. Foust, and Florence Williams, side board; J. N. Calloway, clerk; Stephen Welch, treasurer; James Harris, assessor; S. S. Ferrel, J. H. McDonald and A. Titus, justices of the peace.

SCHOOLS.

This town has nine full and three joint school districts

District No. 1 has a frame house located on section 16, town 8, range 3 west, valued at $250. In 1884 this district had forty pupils.

District No. 2 is provided with a frame building on section 9, town 18, range 3 west, valued at $350. Number of pupils, fifty-three.

District No. 3 has a frame house on section 12, town 8, range 3 west, valued at $250. Number of pupils, forty.

District No. 4 has a frame house on section 29, town 8, range 3 west, valued at $300. Number of pupils, sixteen.

District No. 5 has a frame house located on section 21, town 8, range 4 west, valued at $400. Number of pupils, sixty-six.

District No. 6 has a frame house on section 10, town 8, range 4, west, valued at $400. Number of pupils, forty-five District No. 7 is provided with a frame building on section 26, town 8, range 4 west, valued at $150. Number of pupils, fifty.

District No. 8 has a frame house on section 12, town 8, range 4 west, valued at $400. Number of pupils thirty-one.

District No. 9 has a frame house on section 34, town 8, range 4 west, valued at $350. Number of pupils, thirty-five.

Joint district No. 1 is formed of parts of the towns of Marietta and Wauzeka; has a building in the latter named. Number of pupils in Marietta, thirteen.

Joint district No. 11, with Wauzeka, has its school house in Wauzeka.

Joint district No. 7, joint with the town of Scott, is provided with a house in the latter named. Number of scholars from Marietta, ten.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services held in the town were conducted at the house of William Wayne, in Boydstown, in 1850.

The first religious services in the northwest part of the town were held in 1856 at the house of James Posey, by a Baptist minister named Wade. In August, 1857, a Church was formed consisting of thirty members, who afterward were under the charge of Elder Ross, and upon his removal to Minnesota, the society went down.

There are now (1884) but two religious societies within the town. The United Brethren Church, composed of two classes, led by leaders F. Smith, David Foust, William Kast, William Parrington and J. Thompson. Their pastor at this date was Rev. William A. Taylor, who was born in Grant county, in 1852, and ordained to preach in October, 1880. He had charge of ten appointments in 1884, five in the town of Marietta and five in the town of Haney.

A Methodist Episcopal class was organized in what was then the village of Marietta, in 1854. Rev. Tucker was among the the earliest preachers; he was drowned in the Wisconsin river a few years later. The first text preached from in the town was remembered by Esquire Ferrel, thirty years afterward, as being, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." Mr. Ferrel was chosen class leader at an early time, and is still (1884) doing his Christian duty in that line. This class is in the Madison district, Excelsior circuit.

CEMETERIES.

The oldest burying ground in the town is the one located at Boydstown, on section 1, town 7, range 4 west. This was first used in 1852. An infant of James and Cynthia Wayne was the first to be buried in these grounds; she died Sept. 15, 1852.

What is known as "Wayne's Cemetery" is situated on section 14, town 8, range 3 west; this was established in 1852.

In 1861 a cemetery was laid out on section 3, town 8, range 3 west. Mrs. Daniel Shaw was the first adult buried at this place. She died March 17, 1863.

In 1862 another cemetery was provided on section 10, town 8, range 4 west. The first interment was Lydia, daughter of Stephen and Eliza Gardner, who died Oct. 13, 1862.

Another cemetery called "Wayne's Cemetery" is situated on section 25, town 8, range 4 west. This was first used in 1873. Walter, a son of James and Cynthia Wayne, was the first one buried at this place.

On section 17, town 8, range 3 west, there is another cemetery, which was established in 1862. In 1884 this was a platted ground and well cared for.

A few graves may be found on section 1, town 8, range 4 west.

POSTOFFICES.

The postoffice known as Marietta, on section 9, town 8, range 3 west, was first established in 1852, with O. E. Wise as the first postmaster. It was discontinued in 1863, and again established in 1866, when Lewis Kimball became postmaster; he was followed by J. M. Calloway, who still (1884) holds the office. The name of the office is Millet.

Stuben postoffice was established June 16, 1882, on section 9, town 8, range 4 west. Henry C. C. Kast was appointed the first postmaster.

MILLS.

Lewis Wayne and Joshua Woodard erected the first mill within the town in 1850. This was a water power saw-mill, located on section 15, town 8, range 3 west, on Richland creek. It was run by some of the Wayne family till 1861, when the father, Lewis Wayne, and his four sons all enlisted in the Union army, and the mill was never after operated.

O. E. Wise and Ed Rogers built the second mill in 1851. This was a saw mill run by water power, derived from Richland creek, at a point on section 9, town 8, range 3 west. In 1867 a flood washed this mill away. The site finally passed into the hands of J. M. and J. V. Calloway, who rebuilt it. It is now (1884) owned and operated by J. V. and M. H. Calloway.

In 1856 Charles and S. L. Wannemaker, C. H. Steele, and Isaac C. Jones, built a steam saw-mill, which was operated till 1859, when fire destroyed it. It was re-built in 1861, by S. L. Wannemaker, on section 12, town 8, range 3 west; it was abandoned in 1868.

In 1857 S. P. Kinney built a steam saw-mill on Clear creek, on section 19, town 8, range 3 west, which he operated till 1864. It was finally moved from the town and run elsewhere.

William H. Main built a saw-mill, run by water power furnished by Clear creek on section 30, town 8, range 3 west in 1869. Three years later, this mill was taken down stream by the flood, and it was never replaced.

In 1876 John A. Daggion built a thirty-horse power steam saw-mill, on section 32, town 8, range 4 west. This mill was a first class saw mill, cutting all kinds of hard wood lumber, railroad ties etc.

In 1877 J. G. Allen and his son Albert, built a fine flouring mill on Richland creek, at a point on section 9, town 8, range 3 west. This mill was 36x24 feet, built of wood and provided with two run of stone. In 1882 it was burned, but with enterprise characteristic of Mr. Allen, the mill was re-built and again in operation inside of three months. With the re-building, much improvement was made in the machinery of the mill.

In 1882 James Juckian built a thirty-five horse power steam saw-mill on section 26, in town 8, range 4 west.

About 1876 Francis McSpadin built a stave mill, operated by steam power. It was located on the north bank of the Wisconsin river, near Boscobel. In 1884 it was owned and run by William McWilliams.

REMINISCENCE OF NANCY WAYNE.

I was born in Shelby Co., Ky. My father was Ledston Redmon, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was in the battle of New Orleans. My mother's brother was also in that battle. My grandfather, George Redmon, also his father, were soldiers in the Revolutionary struggle, serving nearly through the whole war. I had four brothers in the Black Hawk war. In 1828, I married Lewis Wayne, in Edgar Co., Ill. We built, and occupied the first house in Paris, the present county seat of that county. We moved to Green Co., Wis., in 1842, and in 1844 to Grant county, settling three miles below where Boscobel now stands. The widow Powell, our nearest neighbor, lived three miles up the river, on the present site of the Boscobel fair grounds. Jesse Howell, living five miles up the river, was our next neighbor. In 1850 we moved to the town of Marietta, Crawford county, settling on section 15, on Richland creek. My husband was a descendant of General Wayne, "Mad Anthony," of Revolutionary fame. Whether the Indians hated him on account of his name, or he hated them for the same reason, I do not know, but at any rate there always existed a bitter feud between them. When we lived in Green county, he met a party of about fifteen Indians one day. The foremost of them drew his bow and arrow on him, but my husband quickly covered him with a rifle, and the Indian then shot the arrow upwards. About 1854, a man named Smith, living at Fort Andrew, had two horses stolen by a band of Indians, one of them a blooded racing mare, and on account of her value, he was anxious to recover her. The Indians being equally anxious to get away with her, divided their forces; two braves, after muffling the mare's feet, mounted her and took a direct course for the Mississippi river, near the present site of Lynxville.

My husband volunteered to recover the mare, and he at once discovered the trick of the Indians. With a comrade he started in pursuit, and followed the faint trail until he left it and struck across the country, with a view of intercepting them. At this point his comrade weakened and turned back. Near where Lynxville now is on the bank of the river, my husband came in sight of the two Indians, mounted on the horse. One Indian escaped on the horse, badly wounded, but has probably long since rejoined his comrade in the "happy hunting ground." My husband returned, bearing as a trophy, the rifle of the Indian who did not escape. When I asked him if he was afraid, he said: "Yes, when it was all over, for I did not know how near the main party of Indians might be." The other wing of the pursuing party recovered the other horse, and the blooded mare was afterwards taken from the Indians. About a year after this, my husband was trailing a wounded buck near Clear Lake, on the Wisconsin bottoms, when he discovered an Indian following him. They both "treed," and my husband managed, by exposing part of his clothing, to draw the Indian's fire; then he showed himself and the Indian attempted to escape by running. He did not run far, however! A year or so later on the same ground, he met an Indian who drew his knife and made a rush for him; my husband was armed with a rifle but was willing to meet the red man on equal terms; so drawing his knife and dropping his gun, he awaited the attack. The Indian halted and offered to bury the tomahawk, if he would show him where the bones of the dead Indian were buried. This my husband was able and willing to do. Though the Indians were frequently seen skulking around, no actual attacks were made upon him after this occasion.

My husband built the first saw mill on Richland creek, in 1850, on our own land, and operated it until 1861, when he and the boys went into the army, and the mill was never started again. In November, 1860, on the day of the election of President Lincoln, my husband and two of our sons, Nathaniel and Frank, started with a barge load of potatoes, about 1,500 bushels, I think, which they floated down the Mississippi river, looking for a southern market. The barge was frozen in at Burlington, Iowa, and they were compelled to unload and bury their potatoes. They then went to Peoria, Ills., where they secured work in the coal mines during the winter months. In the spring, they returned to the barge and found that it had been badly broken up by the ice. Repairing it, and reloading their potatoes, they again embarked. They sold part of their cargo at different points. At Memphis, Tenn., they disposed of 600 bushels to rebel encampments. As the rebel sentiment was growing stronger, they were compelled to return north, leaving several hundred bushels of potatoes in the hands of commission merchants, from whom they received no returns.

Reaching home in the summer, my husband and our four sons enlisted in company K, 12th Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers. My sons were: Nathaniel, Samuel, William and Francis. I expect if they had ever reached Memphis they would have tried to get the pay for those potatoes. My sons all served the whole term of the war, and all came home alive. I came from a family always ready for war, married into another, and have reared still another!

VILLAGE OF BOYDSTOWN—DEFUNCT.

[By Mrs. J. N. Wayne.]

The first white man that permanently settled in what is now the town of Marietta, was Robert

Boyd, from Missouri. He erected a small log cabin on the banks of the Wisconsin river, twenty-five miles east of Prairie du Chien, in 1846. It was on a beautiful, sunny bank, sloping gradually to the bluff, half or three-quarters of a mile back from the river. Here he lived alone for one year, with only the red man and his dusky mate for companions. But in the year of 1847, his brother Kingsley came, and they lived together for one year. Mr. William Wayne moved his family across the river from the lead mines near Plattsville. He was welcomed by Mr. Boyd, who early the following spring married his daughter, Elizabeth. She still lives near the old place. George Wayne, a son of William Wayne, was the first white child born there. In the spring of 1848, the first steam boat, named the Wagner, landed there to purchase wood. Wayne and Boyd taking advantage of the times, and with a view of what might be, entered into partnership, considering it a good point for trade. A beautiful stream of spring water flowed down its valleys, and the prospect for mills and manufacturing looked brilliant. They had visions of a future city, and looked forward to the time when this valley would be a boom of life and prosperity. They gave it the name of Boydstown.

In the spring of 1849, several families moved in and permanently located. Among them were Morton Seeley and S. P. Kinney. They purchased land on this stream, and built a water power saw-mill, which looked very encouraging. This mill is located half a mile from Boydstown, on section 2, town 7, range 4 west. In the fall of this same year, Mr. Cornelius Seeley came with his family and purchased some land, together with the mill property. He subsequently sold it to his son, D. F. Seeley, who still owns the property, but has done nothing with it for the last four years.

The first religious services that were held at Boydstown, were in the house of Cornelius Seeley, by itinerant preachers named Hill and Dana. This same year, Johnathan Wayne came with his family of grown up children. Some of them were married and settled in this place; also came George W. Harrison, who was the first justice of the peace.

The first court held in Boydstown was a case of petty larceny, which happened in this wise. The wife of the second itinerant preacher sent here, named McSchooler, claimed to have been robbed of jewelry, ribbons, lace, etc. Suspicion rested on a young girl, who was arrested and tried, but the lost property was not recovered. This same Mrs. McSchooler was a very pretty, modest lady, and being brought into publicity, so favorably impressed the men and officers who had the naming of the new town then being created, that they gave it her name—Marietta. This was in 1853.

In the year 1849, James Anderson built a small steamboat on the Ohio river, on which he moved his family down the Ohio, up the Mississippi and Wisconsin rivers, and landed at Boydstown. A few weeks after his arrival here, his wife died, being the first death and burial in the place.

The first school was supported by subscription, and taught by Mrs. S. P. Kinney, in 1849. She was recommended by I. D. Brunson, of Prairie du Chien. The first school district was organized in the fall of 1851, and embraced all the territory in Crawford county, lying east of the Kickapoo river. It contained three settlements—Boydstown, Richland Creek and Cass, being about thirty miles in extent.

The first district school was taught by Ira Allen, of Indiana, who was also district clerk. He occupied three or four days in taking the district census. At this date, (1884) Viola Allen, grand-daughter of said Ira Allen, is teaching school on the same grounds her grand-father taught on thirty-eight years before, and is teaching the great grand-children of parents that sent to her grand-father.

“We see the same scenes our fathers have seen,
We run the same race our fathers have run.”

But to resume the history of Boydstown: In 1852 C. Bermer, a German, came from New York, and opened a store in a building which he erected for that purpose. He also purchased a large share of the town plat.

Robert Boyd started a ferry-boat across the Wisconsin river soon after his arrival, which was maintained until the construction of the Boscobel bridge.

When the railroad was surveyed from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien, Mr. Boyd supposed the line would run through Boydstown, and on the strength of this supposition the town was laid out in blocks and streets, and obtained a charter for a village. Several lots were sold and buildings erected. A respectable looking steamboat, Enterprise, Capt. Humbertson, made regular trips up the Wisconsin from different points on the Mississippi, and made Boydstown a regular weekly landing place. Among the carpenters there, were J. Barstow, brother of Ex-Gov. Barstow. He erected several buildings, among which was a large hotel. He afterward moved to Viroqua, where his wife was killed by a tornado.

But the place being left off the line of a railroad, rapid as had been its growth, the decline was still more marked. Mr. Boyd died in 1856, but lived to see his hopes vanish. William Wayne had died in 1851.

In 1856 almost the last vestage of the place had disappeared. The Bermer property was sold to Martin V. Foust, and by him to Jasper Wayne, who is improving and making a farm of the old site. Many buildings were removed, and some decayed on the grounds where they were built. One by one the inhabitants removed, until the last man, John Foust, moved away in 1883. Thus has passed from sight with its hopes and ambitions, the old land mark—Boydstown.

VILLAGE OF GEORGETOWN—THAT WAS.*

I was a resident of Georgetown during part of its palmy days. I believe it was in 1852, that Jonathan Wayne and Mike Woodward bought eighty acres of land on section 14, town 8, range 3 west, within what was afterward the town of Marietta, and platted so much of it as could be made available between the bluffs and the Wisconsin river. They gave the name of the plat, "Village of Georgetown." In 1849, Lewis Wayne and Joshua Woodward built and operated a ferry at this point, which soon passed into the hands of "Mike" Woodward. I rented and run this ferry in 1855. The growth of Georgetown was in a business way, quite flattering. The first general store was opened in 1852 by L. Brown. About a year later, George Roberts opened up a stock of groceries and liquors. David McCord, also carried about the same sort of a stock. Another dealer whose name is forgotten, operated at the same time. It took a heap of whisky to run this town in its early days, under the "Marietta Code"—the unwritten law. Our blacksmith was Samuel Wagner; our landlord was Alfred Rogers. In 1856 we had a boat yard. A Mr. Webster, from below came up here and built two large barges for the Mississippi river trade. Upon the completion of the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien railroad and the location of Boseobel, a general stampede prevailed, causing the people to scatter in all directions, and the village, buildings, people and all disappeared as if by magic. "Lib" Brown lives in the town of Scott, George Roberts went into the Union army, and after the war moved to Kansas. "Mike" Woodward is also a resident of Kansas. McCord died Jan. 14, 1884, in Boseobel; Jonathan Wayne died in Illinois; Samuel Wayne removed to Illinois. The ferry was operated till 1862, and then moved to a point about half a mile above the Boseobel bridge, which was built in 1876 at a cost of $33,000. The village site and the original purchase of Wayne and Woodward, is now held by H. Comstock on a tax deed from Crawford county.

VILLAGE OF MARIETTA—NOW GONE.

At an early day there was quite a collection of houses at what is now Millet postoffice, on section 9, in town 8, of range 3 west, at a point about where Callaway's saw-mill now stands. This was called the village of Marietta, and was indeed, quite a trading point. In 1853 Alvin Woods and William Rogers put in a large stock of general merchandise, and operated on so large a scale that the pioneers say they "failed up bad."

In 1860 George Cannon engaged in trade, he also dealt extensively in the cash product of the times, ginseng root, for which he paid out large sums of money and disposed of many thousand dollar's worth of goods. He remained only three years, and was followed by Kimball & Stover in 1866. This firm, which was the last to do business at this point, removed in 1867.

Guy S. Thompson built a tavern here which is now (1884) used by Mr. Callaway as his residence. No trace of a village has been visible here for years.

The subject of this sketch remained there until 1846, excepting about four year's absence, which was spent mostly in Vicksburg, Miss., though he made several journeys to Texas during that time, in its "Lone Star Republic" days. There he was repeatedly asked the usual question in those days, "What have you been doing in the States, that you have to come here?" Texas was then the place of refuge from justice. Mr. Callaway has been quite a traveler, has visited eighteen different States. In 1846 he came to Iowa Co., Wis., and there

In 1871, Mr. Guickan was taken out of the debris of a mill wrecked by boiler explosion, in the town of Scott, in a supposed dying condition, and for three years was nearly blind from the effect of this explosion. He was badly burned, and will carry to the grave scars received at that time. He was afterward connected with a very fine mill in Clayton town, which was destroyed by fire. Mr. Guickan is a man of great energy, and never gives up to adversity. He was born in County Letrim, Ireland, in 1847; came with his parents to America in 1855. A few weeks found the drum exchanged for a musket, and for sixteen months he could always be found in the ranks. He was then discharged as an invalid, but later entered the employ of the Government at camp Hamilton, and remained until the camp was broken up in 1865. Mr. Guickan was married in Ohio, in 1865, to Mary Robinson. One child—Charles E. was born to them in Ohio, Aug. 16, 1865. Mrs. Guickan, long an invalid, died July 5, 1877. The following year, he sold, and bought land on section 18, of Marietta, town 8, range 3 west, where he now resides, owning 220 acres. He has made valuable improvements, and has a fine orchard, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Kinder have had eight children, seven living—Alonzo, born in 1868; Charles, born in 1870; Jerome B., born in 1872; Peter, born in 1874; Willie, born in 1876; Bertie, born in 1878; Lemuel, born in 1881, and Mary, born in 1883. One son, Willie, died in 1881.

J. G. Allen was born in Posey Co., Ind., in 1815. In 1838, he married Susannah Schnee, a native of Pennsylvania. In 1845, Mr. Allen came west, settling near Wingville, Grant county, where he made a good farm and lived twenty-six years. He afterwards moved to Boseobel, and lived there about six years. He then came to Marietta. He with his son, Albert A. Allen, built a flouring mill, on Richland creek, on section 9. Allen's mill is known far and wide and has earned for its proprietors a good name. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have had seven children—Robert S., born 1844, who enlisted in the 3d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in 1863, and died in hospital in New York, March 8, 1865; Albert A., born 1847; Anna born 1849, wife of Allen Bell of Venango Co., Penn.; Gilbert L., born 1852, lives in Saginaw, Mich. September, 1877, J. G. Allen and his son Albert A. Allen, of Boseobel, came to Marietta and bought 23 acres of land, including mill site, on Richland creek on section 9, and immediately commenced building a flouring mill. In 1878, they had a substantial structure, 36x24 feet, containing two buhrs in operation. The mill was a success from the start, but, in December, 1882, the mill was destroyed by fire.

Mr. Allen and son, with characteristic energy, rebuilt on the old foundation, and were running in three months, having made valuable improvement in the machinery. The mill is a favorite with farmers and customers, doing custom work; also buying wheat and selling flour. William M., born 1857, agent at Brookfield station C. M. & St. P. R. R. Two children died in Indiana while young. Albert A. is in partnership, in business with his father. He was married in October, 1881, to Hattie Martin. They have one child—Winnie.

Henry C. C. Kast is a pioneer of the county, but has lived in this town but a short time. He was nine years of age, when his father, Chancey Kast, in 1850, settled in the town of Scott. At the age of eighteen years, Henry married Sarah E. Prater, of Port Andrew, and after marriage settled in the town of Haney. Sept. 29, 1861, he enlisted in company K, 12th Wisconsin Volunteers; while the regiment was at Camp Randall, before leaving the State, he received, while on duty, an injury to his left knee, which so disabled him as to cause his discharge. Returning home, he lived at Petersburg until 1872. Then, after a few months' residence at Port Andrew, he bought land on section 14, Haney town, living at Bell Centre, and improved it. He came to the town of Marietta, Dec. 13, 1881, and located on section 9, town 8, range 4 west, where he keeps a country store, and the post-office named Steuben, owning land near by. They have four children—Francis W., born 1863; Calvin R., born 1865; Melinda E., born 1870; Henry W., born 1872.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN—TOWN AND CITY.

After the county of Crawford had been created it was clearly seen that the people resident therein needed a town organization; so the secretary of the Territory of Michigan, William Woodbridge, then vested with the power and authority of governor, issued a proclamation forming a "township" (town), which was named the

BOROUGH OF PRAIRIE DES CHIENS.

The proclamation creating this town was in the following words:

"WHEREAS, It is provided by the ordinance of Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, which ordinance by several subsequent acts of Congress, has been applied to and now constitutes the fundamental law of said Territory of Michigan, that the governor thereof shall proceed from time to time, as circumstances may require, to lay out the parts of said Territory, in which the Indian title shall have been extinguished, into counties and townships; and, whereas it is deemed promotive of the public good at this time, that the village of Prairie des Chiens, in the county of Crawford, within said Territory, should be erected into a township for the better regulation of the internal public thereof, and for other purposes:

"Now, therefore, I, the above named William Woodbridge, do, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, constitute the whole of that tract of country comprehending the said village of Prairie des Chiens, which lies within the bounds hereinafter described, into a township to be known and called by the name of the "Borough of Prairie des Chiens," to-wit: All that country which lies within the following boundaries: Beginning at the confluence of the river Ouiconsin with the river Mississippi, thence in a line at right angles with the course of said river at the point aforesaid to the boundaries of the said Territory; thence up the said river along said boundary line to a point opposite from the entrance into said river Mississippi of a small run or creek known by name of Fisher's creek; thence up said creek four miles, or to its source if it should not be found four miles long; thence to the confluence of the river Kickapoo with the river Ouiconsin; thence along said river to the place of beginning.

"Given under my hand and the great seal of said Territory at Detroit this seventeenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one, and of the independence of the United States of America the forty-sixth.

WILLIAM WOODBRIDGE."

The borough (township or town) of Prairie du Chien continued in existence until 1828, when it was superseded by the town of St. Anthony; which included, as shown in a previous chapter, the whole of Crawford county, the dimensions of which were very large. The town last mentioned continued until 1849, when the county was divided into four towns, one of which was called the town of Prairie du Chien. It included nearly all of the county as at present circumscribed. Since that date it has been shorn of territory until in 1872 it was reduced to the present limits. It is bounded on the north by the town of Eastman, on the west by the town of Wauzeka, on the south by the town of Bridgeport and the city of Prairie du Chien and on the west by the Mississippi river and comprises parts of town 7, of ranges 6 and 7 west.

The surface of the town is very rough, except the beautiful prairie land between the bluffs and the Mississippi river, which is about one and one-half miles wide. The western part of the town is cut by numerous lagoons, setting back from the main channel of the Mississippi river. The ridges originally had good timber, but has long since given way to the axe of the settler; and where once stately forest trees grew now a second growth has sprung up. The soil is a heavy clay on the ridges, while the valleys, especially that of the Mississippi, contains a mixture of sand.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement in what is now (1884) known as the town of Prairie du Chien was made at what is called Frenchtown, a suburb of the city of Prairie du Chien, and which is located on the "Prairie" midway between the bluff and the east bank of the Mississippi river two miles north of the city. This settlement dates back nearly a century, and was first called "Pople." The name "Frenchtown" began to be used about 1850.

Dennis Courtois was the first white man who settled at this place. In 1820 he made affidavits showing himself to have been in the country as early as 1792, at which time he and his wife came from Canada.

Claude Gagnier settled on farm lot No. 13, in 1794, and died leaving a family as residents of the place.

Francois Cheneviere came in 1806 and married a half blood Indian woman. In 1810 he erected a two horse sweep power grist mill which was in use till 1838.

Piere Chelofau came from St. Louis and settled here in 1812.

In 1813 a Canadian named Le Blonde came in, married a squaw and raised a family. He died in 1843. About this date came Mr. Gollan and wife from Canada. He died at Frenchtown in 1867, and his wife died in Missouri in 1880, at the age of 103 years.

Frederick Stram, native of Switzerland came with his family in 1826. They came by way of the Red river of the north, accompanied by Joseph Boothe and a man named Merebeau with their families. The latter remained only three years, but Mr. Boothe remained till the time of his death in 1867. His widow married Modest Corden.

In 1836 Ezekiel Tainter settled on the bluff in the town of Prairie du Chien, on what is now known as the Nickerson farm.

The next to venture out and make settlement on the bluffs, were E. Putnam and John Miller.

ORGANIC.

The following is a list of the first town officers of the town of Prairie du Chien:

Alfred Brunson, chairman; Joseph Atherton, Aaron Hazen, supervisors; Theodore Bugbee, town clerk; Isaac P. Perrit Gentil, town treasurer; Isaac P. Perrit Gentil, town assessor; Alfred Brunson, town superintendent of schools; Anson B. Cay, Daniel H. Whaley, William E. Keith, constables; Wiram Knowlton, James H. Lockwood, Joseph Atherton, and Aaron Hazen, justices of the peace.

The first annual meeting was held April 3, 1872, when the following officers were elected: John Folsom, Thomas McGrath and Flavien Cherrier, supervisors; M. E. Norris, clerk; Andrew Bosch, assessor; Joseph Pinz, treasurer; M. I. Donnell, Patrick La Vell and M. Lechner, justices of the peace.

Officers of 1883: Thomas McGrath, chairman; James Norris, Joseph Wilharber, supervisors; D. H. Quilligan, town clerk; Judson Lareviere, assessor; Theodore Bay, treasurer; Thomas J. Quilligan, John H. Folsom, justices.

SCHOOLS.

At the present time (1884) the town is divided into three full and four joint school districts:

District No. 9 has an old frame building, on section 12, town 7, range 7 west. Number of pupils, forty-five.

District No. 10 has a brick house situated on section 10, town 7, range 6 west, valued at $200. Number of pupils, thirty-six.

District No. 11 is provided with a brick building on section 9, town 7, range 6 west, valued at $300. Number of pupils, thirty.

District No. 6, joint with Bridgeport and Wauzeka, has a frame house, in good condition, located on section 23, town 7, range 6 west, valued at $700. Number of pupils, eighty-three.

District No. 4, joint with Wauzeka, in which town the school house is located. Number of pupils, six.

District No. 5, joint with Bridgeport, with building in last named town. Number of pupils, twenty-five.

Sections 29 and 30, town 7, range 6 west, are attached to the city of Prairie du Chien, for school purposes.

FLOURING MILL.

The first flouring mill in all this section of the State of Wisconsin, aside from the hand mills and other rude contrivances used before the American settlement proper was effected, was constructed in 1810, by Francois Cheneviere. This was propelled by two horses and a sweep, and was used till 1818, when Col. John Shaw built a water power mill, on what is now known as the Dousman mill farm, which is situated on Mill Coulee creek, on section 6, town 7, range 6 west. It is stated by the old French settlers, that the owner of the "horse power mill" took one-third for grinding.

The mill on Mill Coulee, is the only one in the town; it was rebuilt in 1840, by Joseph Rolette, and in 1883, by George E. Jacobia. An entire new foundation was placed underneath the building, the old time overshot wheel, so moss-covered and water-soaked, taken out and a modern Turbine wheel put in and new machinery throughout, making it a very valuable mill. But little business has ever been transacted in the town, except what was carried on in a small way at Frenchtown.

Louis Stram opened a grocery store and also handled liquors quite extensively, from 1854 to 1872. He kept a hotel there for many years, while Prairie du Chien was yet in its infancy.

CITY OF PRAIRIE DU CHIEN.

This city, which is the county seat of Crawford county, is situated on the east bank of the Mississippi river, in the extreme southwestern part of the county, and is one of the oldest places in the State of Wisconsin, dating from 1781.

Before the whites (who were Canadian French) first located on the Prairie. it was inhabited by the Fox Indians, whose chief was named Dog (Chien in French); and it was from this it took its name, which was subsequently given to the village.

Of all the charming city sites in the great and far-famed upper Mississippi valley, perhaps none excels Prairie du Chien in grandeur and beauty. Surrounded as it is by the mountain-like bluffs on either side of the river, which flows on in its ceaseless current toward the far off ocean, the picturesque scenery is ever a feast to the eye.

The prairie on which the city is laid out is a sand and loam plain, about two miles wide at the south end, running north about seven miles, to a point, the whole embracing about seven sections of land. The site of the city stretches along the Mississippi river about two miles; nearly all of which affords a good steamboat landing, and averages about one and a half miles in width.

This place is situated about 300 miles below St. Paul, in Minnesota and seventy miles up the river from Dubuque and Dunlieth; is 600 miles from St. Louis and 1,800 from New Orleans by way of the meanderings of the Mississippi river, and is ninety-eight miles west of Madison and 198 miles from Milwaukee. The platting of the city shows much taste as well as practical design, the streets being laid out at right angles and the blocks of convenient size for both business and resident purposes. The river at this point is a mile and a quarter wide, including islands; the whole valley, from the bluffs on the east to those on the Iowa shore, is about three miles in width. This level plain, walled in as it is by these everlasting hills, which in many places rise into great altitude, their surface covered with a carpeting of green and scattering timber, with here and there a precipitous rock cropping out in bold relief, lends a beauty to the city and its environments, which must be seen in order to be fully appreciated.

Another prominent feature of the city is its artesian wells, which are not only curiosities but also of great utility. One of these fountains is situated within the city park and throws a constant stream of the purest, most health-giving water of any well in the world. This stream, which doubtless has its source in a distant part of the State, furnishes the city with water for domestic use, for fire protection and flows down on either side of the principal business streets, over stone gutters, which are kept clean and white by this never-failing stream, that supplies a cooling draught for both man and beast. This well attracts the attention of the stranger as he visits the city and leads him to exclaim, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever!"

Here and there throughout the city may be seen a very substantial class of business buildings and public edifices. Especially great pride is taken in the schools and church buildings of the place. These, together with the court house, which is a stone structure, situated in a charming public square, the surface of which is shaded by the dark green foliage of the pine and cedar—have come to be a pride to the people of Prairie du Chien.

This point was made the terminus of the Milwaukee & Mississippi River railroad, in April, 1857; it being the most northern point on the river to which the iron steed had found his way. In 1884, this was known as the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul line.

RECORDED PLATS.

Lower Prairie du Chien, June 14, 1856.

Extension to Union plat, March 13, 1858.

At the present time, (1884), the principal part of the city is on the high ground in the rear of the old village of St. Feriolo. What was known as the "Main Village" at an early date, lay immediately along the east bank of the Mississippi river, and is now occupied by the railroad yards, ware houses, and lumber yards.

"Lower Town" is that part of the city situated about a half mile down the river from old St. Feriolo. Here, the railroad shops are located, and other business interests, yet the principal business of the city is done on the old site of St. Feriolo, about midway between the two bluffs.

AMERICAN SETTLEMENT.

A history of the first settlement of Prairie du Chien, largely by Canadian French, will be found in a previous chapter. We here commence the narrative when the Americans began to settle very rapidly on "the prairie."

Hercules L. Dousman, who was of Canadian French origin, came to the village in 1826 or 1827, in the employ of the American Fur Company, and speedily rose to wealth and distinction. Some men who were stationed here in the military service of the United States made selection of eligible location within a short distance of the prairie, to which they returned after their term of office expired; among whom may be mentioned Edward Hughes, John McClure, J. P. Hall, and Daniel Frost. Between 1830 and 1835, the names of Tainter, Miller, Putnam and Martin, were identified with the history of this place.

In 1832 I. P. Perrit Gentil, afterwards for many years county treasurer, located here. J. F. Mills came in 1834, for the purpose of engaging as tutor in the families of Col. Taylor and Indian agent Street, but entered the quartermaster's office, and subsequently rose to distinction in civil life.

Another arrival of 1836, was Alexander McGregor, who was one of the principal men and, in that year laid out the lower village. He also established that year a ferry across the Mississippi. After laboring assiduously to build up the lower town, he removed in 1847, and became the founder of the city on the Iowa side, which bears his name.

In this year (1836) the fever of speculation, then running rampant over the country, reached this place, and property ran up to fabulous heights. Two land companies were organized, who bought up all they could get of the private land claims below the garrison, and laid it out into city lots. But failing to succeed as they wished, this part of the city remained only on paper for several years.

A man by the name of Van Dorn, from Michigan, full of the idea of Chicago and Milwaukee, came to this place and finding no land in market except the private land claims, bought up some claims on Government land not yet surveyed in the Wisconsin bottoms, which are low and marshy, and subject to annual inundations. This he platted on paper, and went east and put into stock, at $200,000, $100 per share, and imposed on many honest men, who supposed they were buying shares in the city of Prairie du Chien, for so he called his marsh. He paid for his claims in Michigan wild cat money a few days before those banks exploded. He had to leave the country, and the last heard from him he was in Texas.

In this year population began to increase. Many who were bound ultimately for Iowa and Minnesota, made this their stopping place till they could prepare their future homes. Several new houses were put up, and permanent residences made.

Among the number who came to Prairie du Chien in 1837, were Losen and Seth Hill, II. W. and Thomas Savage.

Concerning Prairie du Chien in 1857, and what its future prospects might be, the Rev. Alfred Brunson at that date wrote:

"The town plat lies two miles along the river, and runs back one and a half miles, on an average, covering an area of about three sections. But the present inhabitants, numbering about 3,000, are scattered over the equivalent of seven sections, all of which can, and probably will be occupied for dwellings and business in a few years.

"We have one large steam flouring, and one steam saw mill; we have three lumber yards; five brick yards; four lime kilns, and stone quarries without number. Several millions of brick have been made and laid up during the past season, in dwellings and large stores and ware houses. And by the aid of furnaces brick are being made during the winter at the rate of 3,000 per day, and will be ready to be laid up as soon as the ensuing spring opens.

"Three graceful churches, and one in the course of building, together with two other places of divine worship, honor the morals and religious tastes of the people. A high school and suitable number of district schools supply the wants of our children and youths for educational purposes; and an academy and several more churches are in contemplation.

"We have several lines of daily, tri-weekly and weekly stages, plying in Wisconsin, and the same from McGregor, which may be considered as a part of this place, plying in Iowa and Minnesota, all centering to this place, in view of the railroad and steamboat travel.

"The railroad is at the time of this writing, finished up to a point of twenty miles from this place, and the track is being laid at the rate of half a mile a day. The grading and bridge building keep out of the way of the rail layers, and the cars are expected to reach this place in February next.

"During the past season the steamboat arrivals have averaged ten or twelve a day, none of which were owned at this place. But arrangements are now being made by which four freight boats are to be put on in connection with the railroad, and also four daily boats expressly for passengers, to receive the passengers from the trains, and go at a speed never yet attained on this river, and ply between this place and St. Paul, and the intermediate ports. By this arrangement freight will not be permitted to lie at the depot for weeks before it will be forwarded; and passengers will not be left without beds nor be compelled to hang upon the guards to get a passage, as it has been to some extent the past season or two; one of the boats of the greatest speed is to ply between this place and Dubuque, daily.

"This place offers at this time, the greatest facilities for wholesale dealers, for manufactories, and for all kinds of mechanics and laborers. This may be seen at a glance from our position. The town site is ample for buildings, without the expense of grading, piling or wharfing, and the facilities for receiving and sending out goods, wares and merchandise, are exceeded by no place west or north of Chicago.

"Hundreds of buildings would now have been up and occupied by families and traders, if materials and men could have been at command; and as soon as these can be obtained, building will progress with great rapidity. Hence the opening for mechanics, lumber, and other materials for building.

"A foundry on a large scale is very much needed. Buildings with iron fronts are being put up, and stoves by the hundred are being sold, mill irons are in great demand, for all the country about us, various kinds of machinery are being erected, and for all these and every other kind of castings, we are under the necessity of sending below, while we have within 100 miles of us, at and near the falls of Black river, iron ore enough to supply the entire northwest with that material, which could be easily and cheaply floated down the current to this place, and strong indications of iron ore are abundant within twenty miles of us.

"People of all kinds and descriptions find ample employment; laborers are in great demand and all at the highest wages, say from $1.50 to $3, and in the opening of next spring far greater numbers of them will be required to supply the demand. Several large wholesale and retail stores, commission and forwarding houses, besides numerous dwellings were the last season added to our former stock; and these will be greatly increased in the coming year, together with several new and spacious hotels, and the depot buildings, now partly up.

"The manufacturing of plows, chairs, carriages, furniture, book-binding, etc., would find every encouragement; planing, turning and other useful machinery will find ample employment. An additional printing press is much wanted and would find a good support.

"Enterprising farmers and dairymen are in great requisition, and a better country for them the sun never shone upon. Butter, cheese, eggs, beef, pork, poultry, etc., and all kinds of garden vegetables are in great demand, and in the coming season, will be more so.

"Flouring, grist, and saw-mills are much needed, and good sites, both for water and steam power are abundant; and for a grist mill by water power, near the town, a good millwright and miller, would find good encouragement from the present proprietor.

"It is expected that in the coming season, and to increase as time rolls on, from 500 to 1,000 people will arrive and depart daily, but at present, our hotels, though of a good quality could not entertain more than 150 comfortably; hence the call for more accommodations of this kind.

"The health of the place, though it has been greatly misrepresented by those whose interest it was to do so, we affirm to be generally good; fully equal to any other on the river, and far superior to any place below us. We have had no sickness, except what was common to the country, and even at that, not as much as many other places reputed to be healthy. In all the ravages of the cholera, not a single case originated here. Visitors to the place, who were looking for a future home, have been to our cemeteries and finding so few new graves in a population of some 3,000 have come to the sage conclusion that comparatively but few die among us, and on inquiry, have found that they were mostly from causes common to human nature, and not from any local cause particularly.

"We deem it prudent to say but little. We do not claim to be prophets, nor possess the attributes of fore-knowledge. The intelligent reader can draw his conclusions from the foregoing facts, as satisfactorily to himself, as if done by ourselves. The growth of the west, though a fixed fact, can hardly be appreciated, except from actual observation. The unprecedented growth of Milwaukee and Chicago, is known to be owing to their position, and local advantages; and the principal purchases of real estate among us are from those places, who, viewing our prospects of rapid growth, from the same cause as theirs, have paid and fixed upon prices for lots corresponding with prices with them when they were about of our present dimensions, and though those who wish to purchase for speculation, as would be natural for them to do, talk as if our prices were too high—that is too high for them to expect the advance they would like to receive—yet, if they become owners, relax nothing in their high estimate of the value of their lots. But the fact, that business men from such places, are purchasing, building, and removing their families to settle among us; and the fact that business men of the highest character for enterprise and foresight, from Buffalo, New York, and other eastern cities are also coming, purchasing and settling among us, are favorable omens of the magnitude of our future position, in a commercial point of view. We are at this time ahead of what Milwaukee and Chicago were twenty years ago, and having advantages to start upon that neither of them had at that time, it is not deemed visionary to suppose that in less than twenty years, we shall be equal to what they are now.

"The above was read and adopted by a large and respectable meeting of the business men of the place, held at the Mondell House, Dec. 10, 1856, and is published at their request."

The Courier, of Jan. 8, 1857, says: "A line of steamers is building, to run in connection with the railroad from Prairie du Chien to St. Paul; that during the year past, two new brick hotels have been completed, and two others remodeled; two steam ferry boats, to cross the river to McGregor, have been purchased; one new church, erected; three splendid brick blocks, nineteen stores, two breweries, one steam flouring mill, and about a hundred dwelling houses put up, besides the extensive works of the railroad company. Five brick yards, two stone quarries, three lumber yards and one saw-mill have been inadequate to meet the demands required for improvements."

INCORPORATION.

In 1822 it was enacted by the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan "that all the citizens of this territory, inhabitants of the borough of Prairie du Chien be, and the same are hereby ordained, constituted and declared to be from time to time forever hereafter, one body, corporate and politic, in fact and in name, by the name of the wardens, burgesses and freemen of the borough of Prairie du Chien." Some of the provisions of the law were very curious; among other things a fine of $2 was assessed for allowing a chimney to blaze out at the top; $1 for hitching a horse to a fence; $2 fine for white persons to be seen skulking or sneaking about after ten o'clock at night, and $2 to $5 for "sharriveriers." The borough passed and repealed by-laws for about three years, and stopped business in 1825. The first warden was John W. Johnson; M. Brisbois and Thomas McNair, burgesses—the last were Joseph Rolette, warden; M. Brisbois and J. H. Lockwood, burgesses.

In 1872, Prairie du Chien became an incorporated city, having never been incorporated as a village, but always being governed by the town authorities, of the towns in which it was situated since the borough government, before spoken of, was done away with. A city charter was granted in April, 1872, since which time the affairs of the city have been managed in a prudent manner as is shown by the finances. Prairie du Chien can now (1884) say what few places in the State can say truthfully, that they "owe no man anything," and have funds on hand.

The following is a list of the city officers from the date of incorporation, to 1884:

1872.—Benjamin F. Fay, mayor; Nicholas Smith, clerk; Otto Georgii, treasurer; R. G. Mathews, marshal.

1873.—Same as those of 1872.

1874.—Benjamin F. Fay, mayor; W. Leclerc, clerk; Otto Georgii, treasurer; R. G. Mathews, marshal.

1875.—J. F. Williams, mayor; W. W. Seley, clerk; Otto Georgii, treasurer; A. B. Laroque, marshal.

1876.—Same as those of 1875.

1877.—Dr. John Conant, mayor; Joseph Zech, Jr., clerk; Otto Georgii, treasurer; D. L. Crawley, marshal.

1878.—Dr. John Conant, mayor; T. G. Brunson, clerk; Otto Georgii, treasurer; R. G. Mathews, marshal.

POSTOFFICE.

A postoffice was established at Prairie du Chien in 1824, with James Duane Doty as the first postmaster; he in about a year was succeeded by James H. Lockwood. In 1838 Thomas P. Street was postmaster and held the position for a number of years. Keeping the office in a little log house on Water street. The following are remembered as having served as postmasters:

John S. Lockwood, Mr. Grace, H. A. Wright, Charles Brisbois, Charles Creal, Ira Brunson, S. N. Lester, W. B. Hunt, who served under James Buchanan's administration, Fred J. Miller, who held the office during the rebellion and was followed by Edward Whaley, a major in the Union army and who lost a limb in the service during the Civil war. Mr. Whaley still (1884) is in office.

This point became a money order office in July, 1865. The first order was issued to Charles W. Clinton, in favor of Shaw & Clark, Biddeford, Maine, for $20, and was dated July 10, 1865.

The first order drawn on this office was remitted by Dragutt Scharff of Milwaukee, Wis., and payable to Julius Eakhardt, who was then in the hospital at Prairie du Chien.

The first postal note was issued to postmaster Whaley's wife at Milwaukee, in October 1883.

RAILROADS AND BOAT LANDING.

Prairie du Chien, which is the second oldest city in the State, justly claims to be the point at which has transpired the first of many important events of the past century, in the great northwest. Long before the introduction of our present system of railways, boats and ferries were employed at this point to transport men and their merchandise to the western shores of the Mississippi, that settlement might be effected on the vast and almost unlimited scope of fertile prairie lands beyond this great water course.

Milwaukee, the metropolis of the State, owes its growth largely to the fact that it is situated at the nearest accessible point on the western shore of Lake Michigan from Prairie du Chien.

Prairie du Chien was for many years the uppermost boat-landing on the Mississippi river, and it was here all the French and Indian traders of the upper Mississippi valley came for their supplies and also to exchange their game, fur and produce, for the necessities of life. Almost the entire frontage of the city is available for boat landing purposes, and prior to 1857 was indeed a busy scene of boats and boatmen. But in the early spring of 1857, a railway was completed from Milwaukee to the Mississippi, at this point, known as the Milwaukee & Mississippi River railway, but later as a part of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

The opening of the road was a great cause of rejoicing and every one felt the inspiration. When it is remembered the difficulty was experienced before this time by the residents in going to and fro from Milwaukee and Chicago, and depending, as they were obliged to do, entirely on the Mississippi river for a market, and in the winter season entirely cut off except by land transportation; it will be seen that there was much cause for enthusiasm. Its influence on Prairie du Chien and the states of Iowa and Minnesota was of a marked character, inducing immigration, and benefiting all classes of business enterprise. One newspaper states that three hundred and twenty-seven houses were erected here this year, and besides many other public improvements.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road made Prairie du Chien a division point and has a large shop and round house in that part of the city, known as "Lower Town." Their main yards and depot buildings after 1862, being located just west from the main portion of the city.

THE PILE—PONTOON RAILWAY BRIDGE.

This bridge is a part of the "transfer" line of railway spanning the waters of the Mississippi river, and connecting Prairie du Chien with North McGregor, which is situated on the Iowa bank of the stream. This invention is indeed one of the triumphs of the nineteenth century, which has attracted the attention of civil engineers and master workmen the world over, and therefore justly claims a minute description in this connection. It is the invention of John Lawler, of Prairie du Chien. It was patented by him, Aug. 11, 1874, but its construction was fully completed on the 15th of the previous April. The entire length of the bridge is 8,000 feet, crossing both channels of the Mississippi river and an intervening island at Prairie du Chien, thus connecting the Iowa and Wisconsin divisions of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway. It is constructed in two parts; the pile or stationary part, and the pontoon or movable part, consisting of two floating "draws," one in each channel, which, when closed, form an unbroken track, permitting safe and rapid transfer of trains, and when open affording a clear space of 400 feet in either channel, allowing the widest rafts and largest tows that float the river to pass with ease and safety at all times and in any kind of weather. The pile part of this bridge is of the ordinary construction, used by all railways in crossing low, marshy ground and shallow streams. The "draw" over each channel consists of one pontoon, 408 feet long, twenty-eight feet beam, four feet high and twelve inch draft. It has great buoyancy and strength, being provided with a Howe truss passing through its entire length. When trains are passing over, the draft is increased to eighteen inches. The extreme rise and fall of the river is twenty-one feet, and to overcome the variation in height of the places between the pile bridge and pontoon, aprons or movable tracks are provided, which are adjusted by means of powerful hydraulic jacks and movable blocks, which are operated by the men in charge of the bridge. The connections between the ends of these aprons and the track of the bridge is a simple device, counterbalanced by equal weights, so that one man clamps and unclamps the end of the pontoon, when swung in or out of its position. The pontoon "draws" are each attached at one end to a pile, placed twenty-eight feet back from the end of the stationary bridge, by an arm as long as the draw is wide. About this pile or pivot the "draw" swings, describing in its course an arc of ninety degrees, and when open lies at right angles to the pile, and entirely out of the channel. The "draw" openings of this bridge, are the only ones on the Mississippi river wide enough to permit a steamer and large raft to pass through in one section.

The closing and opening of each pontoon is effected by an engine of twenty-horse power, situated on the "draw," working a simple winch around which is wound a chain, the extremities of which are secured to a cluster of piles above, and below the pontoon, so fixed as to give a diagonal lead across the stream. The bridge opens with the current in one minute, and closes against the current in about three minutes, without showing any undue strain, or requiring the application of more than five-horse power. In relation to the passage of trains, it has been proved to afford greater security than the old style of draw bridges, for the pontoon is capable of floating a weight equal to six times that of the heaviest trains.

This bridge affords facilities for the passage of 1,000 cars per day, the average being, however, about 300. In speaking of this bridge, Gen. Humphrey, chief of engineers, United States army, says: "The bridge in question is exceptionally free from objection as an obstruction to navigation; it conforms to existing laws regulating the bridging of the Mississippi river, and affords excellent facilities for steamers and rafts to pass through the draw openings."

At this date (1884) the inventor and builder, John Lawler, together with his sons, still owns and operates the bridge and receives a certain amount per car from the railway company, for all freight and passenger trains which pass over the Mississippi river.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The schools and colleges of Prairie du Chien are the pride of its people; and the high type of culture and refinement found among her citizens is but the outgrowth of these educational institutions. While this is a strong Roman Catholic city, both Catholics and Protestants work in harmony in supporting the public schools.

The first school district formed here was what is known as district No. 1. This was created in 1842.

The first school was taught in a private building by Miss Rice, afterward Mrs. Jerrad Warner. A school house was at once erected. This district took in what is now the "Lower Town." About the same date, however, district No. 2 was formed, which embraced old St. Feriole, or the city proper now.

Among the earliest teachers here were Ellen Overton and A. Denio.

In 1857 a project was started by which a new school building for the "Lower Town" was to be built to take the place of the first one erected in the city. At that date there could only be raised about $300 on the "grand list" of taxable property; but the citizens not wishing to build with so small a fund, petitioned the Assembly, through the State superintendent, to allow them to levy a larger tax. The reasons set forth by the petitioners being sufficient this was duly granted them, and soon after the erection of a two-story stone building was commenced, which finally cost $4,000. This building is still (1884) in use. However, before the completion of this building the district run short of funds, but through the public spirit of Samuel A. Clark, who loaned them $2,200, the work of finishing went on.

Mr. Samuel A. Clark was elected as the first school treasurer, whose office it was, then, to collect all school taxes. He held this position for twenty-two years, from 1840 to 1862.

In 1872, when the city of Prairie du Chien became an independent corporation, it also became an independent school district, which was soon provided with its own school board and also school superintendent.

HIGH SCHOOL.

At a regular meeting of the city council of the city of Prairie du Chien held May 3, 1875, under the provisions of the amended city charter, the first board of education was elected. The following persons constituted

THE FIRST SCHOOL BOARD.

For the City at Large—John Lawler.

1st Ward—A. H. Reitemeyer.

2d Ward—William Dutcher.

3d Ward—Prof. J. Sutter.

4th Ward—John E. Sutton.

The election of the above gentlemen gave general satisfaction and their fitness for the duties imposed can be appreciated from the following endorsement published at the time:

"The city school board of education, elected at the first meeting of the new city council (May 3, 1875) are all men of unimpeachable character, and amply qualified to perform the duties devolving upon them. They are men of responsibility, well educated, and persons of excellent judgment, fully aware of the responsibilities of the positions they occupy, and sincerely desiring to promote the educational interests of this city. Let all good citizens extend to them the co-operation and assistance necessary to ensure the right results.

"The choice of Mr. John Lawler as the representative of the citizens at large upon the board of education, is a fitting evidence of the public confidence in his integrity. His broad, liberal views, and his well-known zeal in promoting the cause of education, need no better index.

"Mr. A. H. Reitemeyer, of the 1st ward is one of our most respected German-American citizens, and he is an educated gentleman of fine address.

"Mr. William Dutcher, of the 2d ward is also distinguished for the interest he manifests in educational matters. He brings years of experience, and a fund of useful knowledge to the aid of the board.

"Prof. J. Sutter, of the German-English Academy, is a talented practical teacher. He understands all the requirements of his profession. He will prove one of the best members of the board.

"John E. Sutton, of the 4th ward, was the choice of every tax-payer in that part of the city. He was formerly a teacher, has a thorough education that will insure effective work.

"Taken as a whole, the first board of education is well constituted, better than had been hoped, and the citizens have a right to congratulate themselves upon this first step in the right direction.

"The board of education will at once organize, elect its president, clerk, and city superintendent, and inform themselves fully upon all points necessary to enter rightly upon the work of organizing the city public schools under the new system.

"We have endeavored to ascertain the views of the school board in relation to the subject of a high school; and without an exception, they are all in favor of a graded high school being established."

The first regular meeting of the board of education in Prairie du Chien was held at the office of Hon. Wm. Dutcher, Monday, July 5 1875. John Lawler was elected president of the board. Prof. Thomas H. Nyhan, (since deceased) was tendered the position of school superintendent, but declined to accept. At a subsequent meeting of the board, held July 10, 1875, Prof. J. Sutter was elected city school superintendent and clerk of the board, and immediately entered upon the discharge of his duties. He was a most efficient and faithful officer. Mr. Theodore Schuman was elected to take Prof. Sutter's place on the board.

The board of education promptly visited the schools in every ward, and made a careful investigation of all the school property, school houses and modes of management then existing. They were convinced that extensive improvements were absolutely necessary. They determined to have a first-class school with competent teachers in every ward. They made known to the city council the result of their deliberations from time to time.

At a meeting of the city council held July 19, 1875. John Lawler, president of the board of education, read the following communication relative to the school question :

"GENTLEMEN : The writer upon further examination into the school affairs of this city, desires to add to what he has already stated in a former communication recommending certain improvements in school district No. 2, that the school building of that district is not, in his opinion, at all adequate or suitable for the large number of children in attendance there. The building itself, besides being too small, its ceilings being too low, and its ventilation bad, is in every other respect, far behind the essential requirements of education. The building, with its appurtenances of grounds, fences, water closets, furniture, etc., are such as tend to deprave and corrupt the tastes and morals of the young who attend there instead of tending, as the surroundings of youth always should tend, to refinement in taste and purity in morals. To remedy this evil the only true way is to erect, as soon as practicable, a suitable new building, and to supply such other reasonable and necessary wants as the welfare of the children require.

"A good beginning might be made in this direction the present year, and that, too, without increase of taxation. For we already have, as the property of the city, ample and desirable grounds for the site of a school building and sufficient funds—those known as the college funds—on hand to put the necessary new school building well under way. This much, once done, the city could probably obtain from the State, according to the provisions of chapter 42 of the general laws of 1870 such additional sum as would complete the undertaking. In this way we may almost without perceptible increase of our taxes, provide, as far as it is possible, for the wants of those children who are to depend upon the public schools of the city for instruction. These are the views which the writer entertains relative to this public school question. He expresses them for himself only, for the reason that the board of education has not, for want of proper organization, expressed any conclusion upon the subject. Should these views be in accord with yours, the writer will, if a harmonious board can be organized, do whatever he can to carry them into practical effect. Otherwise he begs to step down and out by placing his resignation at your disposal.

"I am, gentlemen, respectfully, yours,

J. LAWLER.

The common council, immediately after reading of this communication, passed by unanimous vote, the following resolution :

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this council the views expressed by Mr. Lawler, in his communication just read, are in full accord with the views of the council," which was confirmed by the unanimous vote of the council.

As an evidence of the actual condition in which the city schools were, at that time, the following extract from the journal of the council, will be sufficient :

“To the Honorable Mayor and Council of Prairie du Chien :

“GENTLEMEN : The board of education find the water closets of the school house of district No. 2, in a shamefully unsuitable condition, and recommend their destruction at once, and the building of new ones. Your immediate action will be necessary. The cost of the renewals recommended will be from $300 to $350.

“Respectfully, J. LAWLER, Pres't Board of Eeducation.”

This was also agreed to by unanimous vote of the council.

This was the first official action to improve the condition of the city public schools, and construct a high school in Prairie du Chien. Much preparatory work had to be accomplished. All the ward schools were put in first-class order. The preliminary matters arranged, the first appropriation asked by the board, $4,000, was levied Oct. 4, 1875, and on Monday, Oct. 11, 1875, the plans for the new high school were approved. This determined that the new central high school building should be erected, and the board called for another appropriation of $5,000 to commence the work. The board found upon subsequent consideration that they would require about $10,000, more than the city could appropriate for the purpose, and there was a lengthy correspondence between the secretary of State, Hon. P. Doyle, and the attorney general and the president of the school board. It was agreed that a special act of the Legislature was necessary to secure a $10,000 loan from the State. The following communication to the city council explains the whole matter :

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, Aug. 9, 1875.

“To the Honorable, the Mayor and Common Council of Prairie du Chien.

“GENTLEMEN.—The board of education begs leave to submit the accompanying correspondence between the Hon. Peter Doyle, secretary of state, and the Hon. A. Scott Sloan, attorney general, relative to the school loan desired to be made by this city.

“Since it appears that the law, in the opinion of the attorney general, cannot be construed so as to authorize the commissioners of education to make the loan, however willing they might be so to do, it is the sense of this board that it would be advisable to begin work upon the proposed new building as soon as the fund, now held in trust by the board of college trustees, shall have been placed at the disposal of the city, for there can be but little doubt that the authority to make the loan will be readily granted by the next Legislature, in the same manner that former Legislatures have authorized loans to be made to other cities for purposes similar to that of ours. And if the Legislature should refuse even, we must have the new school building, for the interests of the city demand it, and we believe the people of the city will not hesitate to vote the tax necessary for the purpose.

“Respectfully submitted,

J. LAWLER,
President Board of Education.”

A special city election was held, and the taxpayers carried it in favor of a tax to build the high school building. The money was borrowed from the State. The contract was let to Messrs. Menges & Lefeldt. And thus the first high school in Crawford county originated, and was completed under the direction of the first board of education, and to the credit of the citizens of Prairie du Chien. At this time (1884) the schools of the city are in a very flourishing condition.

There are now (1884) five school houses within the independent district of Prairie du Chien, situated as follows: First ward, a two story stone structure, built in 1857; second ward, one brick building two stories high, built in 1876, at a cost of $12,000, and a frame house, two stories high; third ward, a brick building not in use, but in good condition ; fourth ward, this contained a small one story frame building, which stands west of the slough near the river.

ROMAN CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

The people of Prairie du Chien have ever taken a deep interest in educational matters and from the earliest date have provided the best methods of teaching. Especially are the Roman Catholic people entitled to much credit for their zeal in this direction, as they have always labored to make Prairie du Chien a city of schools and colleges, the benefit of which they are finally enjoying; as but few places in the State can boast of better denominational schools than those at this point. They have two flourishing institutions of learning at this place.

The College of the Sacred Heart, conducted by the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, for the training and education of boys, and St. Mary's Institute, conducted by the sisters of the Society of Notre Dame, for the education and practical training of girls. Each of these institutions aims to give the youth of both sexes such a practical education as will enable their pupils to meet the exigencies of life, and to be useful and respected members of society. While these institutions are Roman Catholic, their doors are open alike to Catholic and non-Catholic, and as a matter of fact, the patronage is about equally divided between these two classes, which is a striking evidence of the esteem in which they are held by the public. The patronage of both institutions has outgrown their foundations, consequently the Jesuit Fathers are preparing to increase their accommodations to twice their present capacity, by the erection of a new building, the estimated cost of which is $50,000. When this improvement is completed the college property will be worth $100,000. The college at present is under the immediate control of the Rev. Father William Becker, president, who has conducted its management successfully since its establishment. The number of students in attendance from September, 1882 to July, 1883, was ninety-one.

This institution was opened in September, 1880, and chartered as The College and University of the Sacred Heart, Aug 20, 1881. The college comprises two courses of study, classical and commercial. The full course consists of six classes, to be absolved in six years. Though the college is only entering upon its fourth year, the number of classes will be complete the next session. The College of the Sacred Heart is complete in its appointments, and conducted under a wise, firm, yet mild and paternal system of government. The situation is picturesque and healthful. The building stands on rising ground commanding extensive views of the Mississippi and Wisconsin valleys and the beautiful bluffs that bound them. Taken all in all, it is one of the most attractive and beautiful collegiate properties in the entire northwest. Its president, the Rev. Father William Becker, is a thorough scholar, and a man of fine executive ability. He was born in Germany, educated in Europe, and came to the United States in 1869.

He acquired an enviable reputation, in the east, as the founder of the St. Ignatius College at Buffalo, which he conducted several years, with such marked success, that it was acknowledged by the highest authority in educational matters in New York, as one of the leading institutions of that State. He is supported by an able faculty, four of whom are of American birth, one of English and the others of German.

The college building was originally built as a large hotel in 1857-8, by a joint stock company, at a cost of $56,000. It was used as a hotel only a few years, or until the removal of the railway depot to Upper Town. During the war, it was used by the government as a hospital; next, an unsuccessful effort was made to have the State accept it as a site for a Normal school. Failing in this, its managers organized an independent college, known as the Prairie du Chien College, this institution proved a failure, financially, and was closed after a brief existence of three years. About 1873 the property passed into the hands of the Brothers of the Christian schools, a Catholic order, who opened it under the title of St. Johns' College. This Institution failed to meet the expectations of its founders, and was closed about 1876.

The property was then purchased of the Catholic Brothers, by Mr. John Lawler, who added largely to its value by substantial and important improvements, and then in his free handed public spirited way, presented it to the "Fathers of the Society of Jesus," thus making that order a present of a property, valued at nearly $50,000, while his beneficence insured to Prairie du Chien a permanent and creditable institution of learning.

St. Mary's Institute, was established in 1872. The buildings being erected for that special purpose, under the management of the chief donor, Mr. John Lawler. The Institute is conducted under the management of the sisters of the order of Notre Dame, and is presided over by a sister superior, of that order. During the vacation period of 1883, the sisters completed a dormitory, capable of accommodating 100 students. For the year ending July, 1883, the number of students in attendance, averaged seventy-five. It may be proper here to remark that in the Institute as well as the College the students comprise representatives from nearly all of the northwestern states. The system of education, under the able management of the sisters, is one that commends itself to every unprejudiced mind. This is no fashionable boarding-school, where only a superficial education is obtained; here the solid acquirements are gained that fit the students for the earnest duties of life, which in the course of events are liable to devolve upon them; at the same time, the range of studies embraces the higher branches, languages, music and art. The buildings of the Institute occupy the historic ground of Fort Crawford, the ruins of which form a picturesque feature of the landscape. The situation is elevated, and commands a magnificent view of the Mississippi river and valley, and the towering bluffs on either side.

The buildings are tasty and commodious, and fitted with the most improved modern conveniences. No pains have been spared to make this institution a model of its kind.

It would be an injustice to its most liberal patron to omit to mention the fact that the institution owes its origin, and present prosperous condition to the unbounded liberality and careful supervision of Mr. John Lawler, one of Prairie du Chien's most respected and enterprising citizens.

INDEPENDENT GERMAN SCHOOL.

On the first day of December, 1866, a number of the prominent German citizens of Prairie du Chien, met for the purpose of organizing an independent German school, where the German language might be taught, without regard to any religious creed. After preliminaries, the following officers were elected: F. Unger, R. Rosenbaum, Jacob Raffauf, M. Menges, Otto Georgii and H. Boehlke trustees; F. Unger, president; F. Rosenbaum, treasurer; Jacob Raffauf, secretary.

A constitution was adopted and the following March, 1867, the society was made a legal corporation, by an act of the State Legislature. For two years this school society held their school in a private school building of John Lawler's and in the German Methodist church. In 1868, however, they erected a neat, one story brick school building which stands just east of the court house square. This school was in successful operation until 1878, when it was discontinued. At one time the school contained seventy-five pupils, a part of whom were from American families. A tuition fee of $1.00 was required of those whose parents belonged to the society, and $1.50 from those outside. The association was made up of about thirty members, but finally has been reduced to thirteen, on account of deaths and removals.

At the present time (1884), the society exist and own their property which is not used as a school house, but leased for various purposes.

The last officers elected were as follows: M. Frederick, M. Menges, H. Otto, S. Rosenbaum, C. Leefeldt and Theodore Shuman, trustees; Henry Otto, president; M. Menges, vice-president; R. Rosenbaum, treasurer, and M. Frederick, secretary.

FERRIES.

In 1836 Alexander McGregor established a horse ferry between Prairie du Chien and the Iowa side of the river. The point of debarkation, on that side, soon received the Iowa name of McGregor's Landing, where now stands the city of McGregor.

In 1840 the United States government commenced to build Fort Atkinson, and as supplies had to reach that point from Prairie du Chien (or Fort Crawford) by way of this landing, this ferry became one of much importance to the public and of great profit to its owner, who had been granted the exclusive right to ply a ferry at this point, under a charter issued by the State.

One of the conditions in the license granted Mr. McGregor by the court, was that not more than the following rates should be charged for ferriage: One person, twenty-five cents; man and horse, seventy-five cents; wheeled carriages, twenty-five cents per wheel; horned cattle and horses, fifty cents per head; sheep and goats, six and one-fourth cents per head; mules, jacks and jennets, fifty cents per head; freight not in wheeled carriages six and one-fourth cents per 100 pounds. This ferry continued under the management of McGregor till 1856, when his energies were bent more especially in founding the city which now bears his name. He then willed the property to a relative, W. B. Gardner, who, in company with Ole Oleson, operated a short time and sold to John Lawler; he run it until the spring of 1882 and sold to H. Schlader, who has run it on a diminished scale, owing to the building of Lawler's pile pontoon bridge.

Bass & Rice operated a ferry about 1840, for the government; this was operated as an opposition line to McGregor's ferry, and only continued a short time.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Another mark of wisdom upon the part of the city is the well organized fire companies, whose vigilant eyes watch the property of the city, by day and by night, and through whose skill and watch-care the populace of the place feel secure against the fire fiend. This department, which is under the direct supervision of the city authorities, is composed of three fully equipped fire companies, the "Phoenix," No. 1, consisting of forty-three members; the "Badger," No. 2, consisting of thirty-two members; and the "Ætna," No. 3, having a membership of twenty-three; forming a grand total of 103. These companies are all uniformed and regularly equipped with the most modern fire-extinguishing apparatus, including three hand engines, the total cost of which was about $1,800. These engines are made effective by means of 3,000 feet of the best quality of rubber hose.

This department was organized in 1872, since which date, no disastrous fires have occurred within the city, except the burning of the Mondell Hotel; this being occasioned by the inferior quality of hose then in use, which gave way at a critical stage of that long-to-be-remembered conflagration.

These companies are provided with a never-failing supply of water from the artesian wells for which Prairie du Chien is so noted.

RELIGIOUS.

The earliest religious services of which there is any record was that held by the Roman Catholics in 1817, when Father Durand came and held mass, and baptized about 125 persons, all of the families of the French and mixed races. As some children of Catholic parents were found who, although nearly grown men and women, had never before had an opportunity to receive the rites of baptism, it is inferred from this that no priest had visited the post for many years prior to the advent of Father Durand. This Father left a written record behind him which is the foundation of the records of the Catholic Church at this point. The Rev. Father did not remain more than a few years, and after his departure there is no further record till 1836, when the Rev. Father Mazzucheli was sent to select a site for a church, and to lay the corner stone which he did, and the place was called the "Episcopal See." In 1839 Rev. Bishop Loras visited the place. He was followed in 1839 by Father Cretin, who remained four years and erected the first church edifice in the place. It was named St. Gabriel's Church. Father Cretin was a remarkable man. His talents and culture were only equaled by his kindness of heart, industry and deep humility. From here he went to Du-buque, and in 1850 was appointed the first Bishop of St. Paul. His death occurred at that city, Feb. 22, 1857. He was succeeded by Rev. Father Bonduel, and he by Father Ravoux and Father L. Galtier, both of whom came here with Father Cretin, and each in order were placed in charge of this congregation. Father Lucius Galtier succeeded to the charge in 1847, and remained at his post till the time of his death, which occurred in 1866. Father L. Lux was next in charge, and remained till May 26, 1867. He was succeeded by Father Koke and he by Father Abeline, Sept. 1, 1880. Father Herman Richards, of the Society of Jesus, became the pastor and held that position till August, 1883, when he was assigned to another field. While serving as pastor of this congregation Father Richards has been required to preach in four different languages, to suit the understanding of his people. The congregation numbers about 3,000 members, who all live in a radius of from seven to ten miles about Prairie du Chien. The Catholics outnumber all other denominations combined, by a large majority, and record among their members many of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of Prairie du Chien. They have two flourishing institutions of learning established here, a sketch of which is given elsewhere in this work.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY.

In 1834 the Rev. David Lowery, a Presbyterian clergyman organized the first protestant society in Prairie du Chien; it afterward was merged into the Congregational society.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Prairie du Chien was organized in 1836, by the Rev. Alfred Brunson, superintendent of the M. E. mission, of the upper Mississippi and Lake Superior. Mr. Brunson came here in the fall of 1835, from Meadville, Penn., and returned home the same autumn. In the spring of 1836 he came back with his family, purchased a farm and built a house, the materials of which were brought by boat from his old home in Pennsylvania. He soon organized a society.

Mr. Brunson says: "We reached Prairie du Chien July 16, 1836. I organized a class of ten members out of those who came with me, being the first class of Methodists ever formed north and west of the Wisconsin river. * * * I spent the winter in missionary labors at home and in the new settlements that were springing up within reach. In the winter of 1836-7, we had a gracious revival at Prairie du Chien, in which about twenty souls were converted, and in the course of the winter of 1837-8, another revival crowned our efforts under the blessing of God."

The church edifice was built about 1847. The records contain no history of the church, and as the memory of the oldest inhabitant seems to be at fault as regards any facts connected with it, our sketch must remain incomplete. The present pastor, Rev. John Knibbs has been in charge two years, and has lately been appointed to his second term. As he has had an eventful experience in this field, we append a brief mention of his life.

Rev. John Knibbs, pastor of the M. E. Church of Prairie du Chien, was born in Oxford, Eng.

land, March 2, 1826. He emigrated from England to America, in 1855, joined the West Wisconsin Conference, in 1856, and has been in active service now about twenty-seven years. In the winter of 1856-7, while a stranger in the land, Mr. Knibbs was engaged by the Rev. Alfred Brunson, to officiate at Eastman, in place of a brother minister who was prevented by sickness, from keeping his appointment. He started to travel some five miles over the hills. The snow being nearly three feet deep and covered with a sharp crust, as no road was broken, he soon lost his way, and wandered about a considerable time. His horse becoming exhausted he tied him to a tree and tried to make his way on foot. Like many others when lost he traveled in a circle and soon came back to his horse. Again he tried to make his way out only to find himself back to the horse again. When night came on he crawled into the snow for protection. The following day he tried again but with no better success. Four days and three nights were spent in these vain attempts—his feet, hands and face were frozen and he was nearly starved. At last he sighted smoke from a chimney and was barely able to reach the house. The people only supposed one foot to be frozen, which they thawed out with spring water. This foot was saved and the other that was thought uninjured was so badly effected that amputation of a part of the foot was necessary. More recently three different amputations of the limb have been made, one in 1883, nearly twenty-seven years after his exposure. Mr. Knibbs has in spite of his physical disabilities done effective work as a mission preacher. He is a man of fine ability and great earnestness of purpose. The past two years he has filled the pulpit at Prairie du Chien and at the last conference was appointed to his second term at this point. Mr. Knibbs does not feel hopeful of filling the term of his appointment, but expects to be soon retired from active service.

The Episcopal Church of Prairie du Chien has "a local habitation and a name" and but little more. The first religious services conducted by a clergyman of this denomination were held in 1836 in Fort Crawford by Rev. Mr. Coddle, the first chaplain. The parish was organized in June, 1855, by the Rev. John Egar, rector. The church edifice was erected the same year under the management of Mr. H. Baldwin. At the close of the year Mr. Egar resigned and Mr. Lyman was called to fill the vacancy. He only remained a few weeks. The Rev. Mr. Pratt filled the pulpit a few times but was not located here. Mr. Clinton was the next rector, and he served two years. He was followed by the Rev. Mr. Lloyd, who only remained nine months and withdrew. The Church was then vacant for some time, till Rev. Mr. Geirlow was chosen rector. The field had no charms for him and he resigned after ten months' service, having during his pastorate consecrated the church. Aug. 13, 1865, the Rev. Mr. Skinner was appointed rector, and after a brief career resigned on November 18th of the same year. The pulpit was vacant till 1867, when the Rev. H. C. H. Dudley filled it as a missionary, but refused the rectorship. Again the pulpit was vacant till Oct. 3, 1875, when the Rev. Dr. A. F. Samuels was called to the rectorship. Under his management the church was partially rebuilt and new interest excited. For six years Dr. Samuels labored without hope of reward; the smallness of the congregation making it practically impossible to support a pastor. Dr. Samuels retired from the ministry in October, 1881, and resumed the practice of medicine. At this writing, September, 1883, the Church is still vacant.

The First Congregational Church of Prairie du Chien, was organized under the management of the Rev. Mr. L. L. Radcliff, July 16, 1856. Names of members at date of organization: Leonard L. Radcliff, local pastor; J. S. Lockwood, A. O'Neil, P. J. Adams, James J. Langdon, B. Bull, A. C. Phillips, B. E.

Hutchinson, Walter R. Bullock and O. B. Thomas. Aug. 16, 1856, D. H. Johnson, E. G. Perry, and T. B. Moore joined; August 17, W. L. Mower and E. P. Lockhart joined. The first officers of the society were: L. L. Radcliff, president; Benjamin Bull, vice president; A. C. Phillips, secretary; P. J. Adams, treasurer; J. S. Lockwood and B. E. Hutchinson to complete board of trustees.

The church was built in 1858, under the supervision of the pastor, Mr. L. L. Radcliff, at a cost of $2,424.36.

Mr. Radcliff began as the first regular pastor of this denomination at this point, in October, 1855, sent by the American Home Mission. He was a member of the LaCrosse district convention of Congregational and Presbyterian Churches. He remained in charge of this Church till the close of 1860, when he returned to Pennsylvania, and is now preaching at Chautauqua Lake, N. Y. He was succeeded by Rev. H. W. Cobb, who was succeeded by Rev. Henry Carpenter, in 1864. Mr. J. Porter succeeded Mr. Carpenter, and filled the pulpit several years. He was said to have been the first Protestant minister that held service in Chicago. Rev. W. H. Marble succeeded Mr. Porter, and closed his work Jan. 9, 1871. Mr. C. F. Clapp was the next pastor, and served till March, 1877, when he was succeeded by Rev. A. W. Safford, who remained till the spring of 1880. The church was vacant till April 1, 1881, when Mr. Ariel McMaster, the present pastor, was chosen to fill the pulpit. The membership is fifty. Mr. Orson Jackson is the only deacon.

St. Peter's Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1862. The first pastor was the Rev. John Himmler, who was succeeded by Rev. Loren Schorr, and he by Carl Weideranders, Herman Krotzschmer, Joseph Westenberger, Johannes DeJung, and he by the present pastor, the Rev. Christian Gevers. The church was built in 1868, at a cost of $1,000. The present membership is about thirty. Among the first members were Fred Rhemhold, Fred Pagelo and Louis Scharpf. This society has a flourishing Sabbath school, which has been kept up since the organization of the society. It now has a regular attendance of sixty scholars. Louis Scharpf is the superintendent.

The Evangelical Association was organized June 26, 1864, under the management of Rev. Peter Speich, pastor. Among the first members were: Frederick Bauer, John Poehler, Frederick Ahrens, John Schulz and Carl Lang. The Rev. Peter Speich was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Ragatz, and he by Fred Kaufmann, Fred Stroebel, Louis Runkel, William Kamm, Fred Asmann, G. Schwantes, the present pastor, who entered upon his duties in March, 1883. Mr. Schwantes was a mission preacher in 1863, and held the first services of this society, in the court house, in that year. The church was built in 1865, a wooden structure, at a cost of $1,500. The trustees, in 1883, were: Fred Bauer, John Schulz and John Kauffmann.

FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The first Sunday school within what is now Prairie du Chien, was organized through the labors of Mrs. Juliana Lockwood and Miss Crawford, assisted by Dr. Edwin James, post surgeon United States army, and John H. Kinzie. This school included all denominations of both Catholic and Protestant faith, and was in operation from the spring of 1825, to the spring of 1826. It is mentioned in a previous chapter.

Degrees fourth and fifth were conferred upon Bro. Harrison; degrees third, fourth and fifth, upon Bros. T. Robertson, Wm. Robertson and L. Jackson. The lodge seemed to lack vitality, for some cause or other. The records show the last meeting to have been held May 2, 1856. It is supposed that the charter was surrendered about that time.

DRIVING PARK ASSOCIATION.

The Prairie du Chien Mechanical, Agricultural and Driving Park Association was organized Aug. 22, 1883. H. L. Dousman was elected president; O. B. Thomas, vice president; Wm. Newton, secretary; A. M. Beach, treasurer, and M. Menges, superintendent. The capital stock was limited to $10,000, about $6,000 of which has been subscribed at this writing. The association has bargained with Mr. B. F. Fay for fifty-seven acres in the northeastern part of the city, for the site, being a part of farm lot No. 35; the price to be $3,000. It is the intention on the part of the managers to proceed at once to improve the ground, and construct a first-class race course thereon.

BAND.

The Bohemian band, of Prairie du Chien, originally organized in 1870, comprised eight pieces, with Matt Chapek as leader. The band was composed of Bohemians, and was very popular. About 1877 it suspended for a while, and re-organized in 1881, with ten pieces. The following named parties compose the band: Matt Chapek, leader; M. Tehle, W. Tesar, Joseph Zeman, C. Zeman, Joseph Tehle, Matt Hanzlicek, Fred Bachelder, Charles Pion and Winzel Strauski. This band have a good outfit of instruments; are well drilled, and are widely and favorably known.

CEMETERIES.

There are, at this date (1884), four burying grounds used by the people of Prairie du Chien. These "silent cities" have buried, within their numerous vaults, a history which nothing but eternity can reveal. Within these sacred enclosures lie buried the joys and sorrows of two generations of pioneers. Here rest the remains of many a bold adventurer and frontiersman, and by his side has long since decayed the mortal part of scores of gallant soldiers. Here the pioneer has oftimes bent over the confined form of a darling child, who lived but to lisp, perhaps a single word, then was plucked like a spring flower and transplanted into a better world; others have grown to young man and womanhood, and then been laid low by disease and finally placed beneath the green sod which has been moistened by tear drops from the eyes of a dear father and loving mother, for many a year. Then in time, they too, have been subjects of disease, pain and death, and put away at rest by the side of their children so dear. Funeral procession after funeral procession has slowly coursed its way to these burying grounds and deposited the loved ones from out the home circles of this city, and monuments have been reared to their memory, until to-day, these "silent sentinels" stand one against another, as it were. The oldest of these cemeteries is one of the three Catholic burying grounds used by the pioneers. This is situated just north of the city, and contains the remains of many of the departed dead. The only public and non-sectarian cemetery in the place is located in the southeast part of Lower Town. This contains about eight acres of ground, and was laid out on land owned by John S. Lockwood, in 1842. This cemetery has been properly cared for and presents to the passer by an index of the culture and refinement of the city populace. Besides the public cemeteries, there are numerous private burying grounds in and about the city, where rest the remains of many of the pioneers of Crawford county, some of which are on the highest bluffs east of, and overlooking the city. There are also several interments on land enclosed in what is known as the officers' cemetery, on grounds reserved by the United States. This is near John Lawler's residence, and contains the bodies of soldiers and their families, who died at this point when Prairie du Chien was yet a military post.

CITY PARK.

Prairie du Chien can boast of one of the prettiest public parks in southern Wisconsin. It is located just south of Bluff street, which is the main business thoroughfare of the city. Minnesota street runs on the east, Wisconsin street on the south, the grounds being in block 90 of the Union plat. The land embraced within this beautiful park was purchased of H. L. Dousman, Jr. The principal attraction of this spot is the fountain formed by the perpetual flow of the artesian well, situated within the enclosure of the park. A very neat and substantial fence encloses the grounds, which are made charming by an abundance of choice shade trees, including some fine evergreens of symmetrical proportions.

ARTESIAN WELLS.

One of the peculiar and interesting features of the city of Prairie du Chien is its several mammoth artesian wells. To the late Judge Ira B. Brunson belongs the credit of proposing and urging the undertaking of opening an artesian well at this city. The subject was discussed by the judge in so earnest and hopeful a manner that he soon had other prominent citizens interested in the project.

The drilling of a well was commenced in the latter part of 1875, without any formal organization and before its completion, a public meeting was held (May 26, 1876) for the purpose of organizing a joint stock company.

Judge Ira B. Brunson was chosen president, and Mr. L. Case, secretary, of the meeting. A committee on organization was appointed, consisting of B. F. Fay, A. Denio and W. B. Hunt. A second meeting was held June 23, 1876, and the organization was perfected. Judge I. B. Brunson was elected president, and E. M. Wright secretary. A board of directors was chosen, consisting of B. F. Fay, Lawrence Case, T. L. Brower, H. Beach, M. Menges, I. B. Brunson and W. B. Hunt.

Articles of association were adopted, and the capital stock fixed at $10,000. The association was to be known as the Prairie du Chien Artesian Well Company. Stock was readily taken, and the work pushed to a speedy completion. The diameter of the tube is six inches, and the well was sunk to the depth of 960 feet, when a powerful stream of mineral water was struck which was found to flow at the rate of twenty barrels per minute, and with sufficient force to rise to the height of seventy feet.

An analysis of the water was made by a competent chemist with the following showing per gallon:

	Grains.
Bicarbonate of lime.....	.6222
Bicarbonate of magnesia.....	10.9739
Chloride of sodium.....	90.2007
Chloride of potassium.....	3.8064
Bromide of sodium.....	.1281
Sulphate of soda.....	12.7978
Sulphate of lime.....	15.3699
Bicarbonate of iron.....	.2318
Alumina.....	.0610
Silica.....	2.8430
Phosphate of soda.....	Trace.
Organic matter.....	Trace.

The water is said to be a powerful remedial agent in rheumatism, dyspepsia and numerous other diseases. The original cost of the well was $4,200, which was the amount of stock issued. The additional improvements, including mains and hydrants extending down Bluff street to the foot of Main, cost $2,500. A still further expense has been incurred for copper pipe for lining main pipe to the rock. The present annual income is between $600 and $700. The company, with a view of developing the business, has granted the sole right of sale of the water for a term of ten years from July 1, 1883 to Henry F. Schultz, of Milwaukee, for a nominal sum.

The present officers, (1884), are M. Menges, president; Wm. Newton, superintendent and secretary.

The well is situated on the northwest corner of Minnesota and Wisconsin streets. The surplus water is conducted to Bluff street and there divides equally and passes down the open gutters, which are paved with stone, thus presenting the curious and agreeable spectacle of two brooklets of clear, sparkling water, flowing one on either side of the principal business street of the city, while at frequent intervals open hydrants pour out a never-ceasing stream. Drinking cups and watering tubs supply the thirsty mortal or beast with abundant opportunity for quenching thirst. Two wells of this kind propel a flouring mill in the heart of the city, and Mr. T. L. Brower has another similar well at Lower Town, which throws an immense volume of water. It is situated in a beautiful private park of Mr. Brower's designing, and supplies a miniature lake. Besides the main fountain which forms so interesting a feature of the park, another fed by the well, through pipes, throws its bright waters high in the air, on the beautiful lawn that fronts the owner's residence. Still another no less beautiful fountain than Mr. Brower's, ornaments the beautiful grounds of the Dousman mansion near the river.

MILLS AND MANUFACTORIES.

The first milling done at or near the city of Prairie du Chien, was the grinding of small grain, such as wheat, peas, barley and oats. Two or three farmers would unite in the construction of a horse power mill. The buhrs were large stones cut from the granite rock, found about the city. The product of these mills was sifted by hand. The first regular grist mill within the limits of the city of Prairie du Chien, was erected by Edward Pelton in 1847.

This was a frame structure, except the engine room, which was built of brick. It was situated on the east bank of the Mississippi river, in the northwestern part of the city. It was still doing service in 1884. The original building was 50x50 feet, four stories in height and contained two run of stone. But in 1867 the property passed into the hands of J. Fameshon, who remodeled the building and provided new machinery throughout. In 1884 the mill was propelled by a sixty-horse power engine and operated as an exchange mill. In 1878 after the artesian wells of the city were pronounced a lasting success, Henry Weniger conceived the idea of securing a power sufficient to propel a flouring mill by means of two of these wells. So he opened one having an eight inch bore and one with a six inch bore. These wells were sunk 1,044 feet, and the streams give an upward force equal to the requirements of this mill, which contains two run of stone with a capacity of grinding 100 bushels per day. This is the only mill known in the world that derives its power directly from an upward stream of water, coming from the earth. This mill is located just north of Bluff street and east of the "slough."

The first saw-mill at Prairie du Chien was built in 1857, for the purpose of cutting hard wood lumber. It stood near the site of the present round house. Soon after its erection, it was burned down, and through aid derived by private subscription, it was rebuilt and continued a few months.

The next saw-mill in or about Prairie du Chien, was that owned by Stauer & Co., which was operated in McGregor for about a year, and in 1872 moved over to Prairie du Chien, in order to get more yard room in which to operate on a larger scale. This mill is one of the largest between Minneapolis, Minn., and Clinton, Iowa. Its propelling power is a 125 horse-power engine, which drives machinery sufficient to cut 85,000 feet of lumber per day. At this mill, besides the immense quantities of lumber sawed, there is one of the largest shingle and lath mills in the county.

The location of this mill is on the east bank of the east channel of the Mississippi river, just northwest from the railway depot of the C. M. & St. Paul railway, the track of which passes through the mill yard.

Most of the logs used by this mill are rafted from Stillwater and the Chippewa country; and the major part of the mill's product finds a market in Iowa and Dakota.

The first brewing done at Prairie du Chien was in 1855, by Theodore Schumann and Otto Georgii, who operated in a small wood building near the base of the bluffs, where they excavated a large cellar which was stoned up and arched over. In 1870 M. Menges bought into the company, as the successor of Fred Kalpel, who had purchased Mr. Georgii's interest a year or two before. On the 29th of April, 1872, this brewery was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $8,000, while $12,000 of its value was covered by insurance.

A few weeks after this fire a new brewery was commenced, which was still running in 1884, and known as the City Brewery. This concern fronts Church street from the westside, and is situated in block No. 1, and is the property of Theodore Schumann and M. Menges. This building is 45x160 feet, two and three stories in height. It is a stone and iron structure, erected at a cost of $23,800, including machinery. It has a capacity of 6,000 barrels per year, which finds market in Wisconsin and Iowa, where eight salesmen are constantly employed. This concern uses from 12,000 to 14,000 bushels of malt of their own manufacture, and from 1,000 to 3,000 bushels imported. It also consumes 1,800 tons of ice per season.

Harris & Benson are manufacturers of steel plows and cultivators. Their business was established in 1855, by D. G. Harris, and conducted by Mr. Harris, and various partners, till 1871, when he formed a partnership with H. J. Benson. This firm does an extensive business in the manufacture of steel plows and cultivators, of which they make several varieties. For the year 1882, they made 4,000 plows and cultivators. The senior partner has had thirty-four years' experience in the business, while Mr. Benson has devoted several years to the same line of work. Their plows and tools are sold throughout the west, and are held in high favor.

Just before the Civil war, H. H. Hall found money for Capt. Chase and Alonzo Pelton to put in operation a soap factory, which they continued to run till April, 1864, when they sold to J. D. Humphrey, of Galena, Ill., who operated successfully until Jan. 12, 1883, and then sold to Haskins & Wallan, who carried on the business until December of that year, when Mr. Haskins purchased his partner's interest; the concern then going under the name of Leroy Haskins' soap and candle factory.

No little importance is centered about industries of this character; indeed, they are the vitality of any city. Five standard grades of laundry soap are here manufactured—"Eureka," "Palm," "Old English," "Favorite" and "Economist." The capacity of these soap works is 11,000 sixty-pound boxes per annum. These soaps find market in Iowa, Wisconsin and Dakota, in which States salesmen are constantly employed. This factory is situated in one of the pioneer buildings of the city. It was formerly the "Rioletto House," kept by a Frenchman at an early day. It was next used as an office for the Indian agent, and later still, as a select school. Since 1870 this concern has been superintended by Jeremiah Cannon, an experienced soap maker.

The Vinegar works, of A. H. Reitemeyer, another enterprise of manufacturing industry of Prairie du Chien, was established in 1870, in the three-story brick business house, in Lower Town, built in 1857 for a bank. Up to 1879, the product of these works was made by use of spirits, which were imported; but at that date Mr. Reitemeyer, put in new machinery and has since produced the best grades of vinegar, by the "vaporizing process," employing spirits obtained from malt, corn and rye, purchased and extracted at his works. The capacity of these works is 1,000 barrels per year; however, the average amount produced is about 600 barrels, which is sold to the retail trade of Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

COMMERCIAL INTERESTS.

The commercial interests leading to the foundation, and subsequent development of a city, which must of necessity, receive the attention of the historian, is attended with many difficulties and uncertainties unknown to those who have never undertaken the collection of such matter. Especially is this true of a city dating back to so early a time as Prairie du Chien. Few of the early business men of the place are now living, and to the memory of the few surviving ones, years that have passed are but as fleeting hours, and the reports given by these pioneers are often at antipodes in relation to vital points, such as names and dates of those who first embarked in business. Notwithstanding these obstacles, the task has been undertaken, and the result is here given as a matter of record, to be handed down to succeeding generations, that they may know who founded the business of a city whose proportions shall increase with the incoming years, and the magnitude of its commerce outstrip the most sanguine hopes of its projectors.

In this connection it will be the aim of the historian to give, as far as possible, the names of the first representatives in each line of business, together with a brief history of their business and then in conclusion, show the advancement made by a business directory of the city in 1883.

As the earliest trading at this point, has been spoken of at length, in former chapters, in connection with the French and Indian trading post, no special mention will be made of the city's business until the American settlement commenced.

BUSINESS OF "LOWER TOWN."

The first merchandising done at this point, was carried on by John S. Lockwood, who opened a general store in 1839, and continued till about 1844, when he moved the stock to Upper Town, and a few years later died. Samuel A. Clark was the next to embark in trade in the Lower Town. He commenced in 1840, and continued until 1862 and then moved his goods to Viroqua, Vernon county, where he built a fine store building, which a few years later, he sold to Mr. John Tate, who was still in trade there in 1884.

The first hardware dealer of the place was G. C. Cone, who finally moved to McGregor, where he died. Succeeding him in this line, came Oswald & Hopkins in 1856.

Frank Jackish run the pioneer meat market of this part of Prairie du Chien.

A bank was established in 1856, under the state banking laws, by a man from Milwaukee, who continued some few years. This bank was kept in a large three story brick block erected by Allen Reed for that purpose. In 1883, this was utilized as a vinegar manufactory.

In 1857 the principal trade of the place was in the hands of the following:

T. L. Brower, wholesale and retail drug store.
Mr. Osborne, grocery store.

H. Baldwin, ship store, which he kept in the railroad depot.

Samuel A. Clark, general store.

William Hawkins, groceries and provisions.

At this date there were eight hotels of various kinds, which changed hands many times and several of these were destroyed by fire, it is supposed to obtain the insurance, which was placed upon them.

In the winter of 1862-3, the long talked of removal of the depot, to a point up the river, near what was the "Main Village" of early date, was finally effected and with this change of railroad business, all other branches of trade commenced to center at Upper Town, many of the business men removing their goods from "Lower Town."

"Lower Town" contains at this time (1884) but one store, which is operated by the pioneer, T. L. Brower.

Aside from the Vinegar works of A. H. Reitemeyer established in 1870, this constituted the business of this part of Prairie du Chien.

The C. M. & St. Paul have their round house and repair shops here, also a passenger depot.

BUSINESS OF "UPPER TOWN."

The earliest trading done here, was carried on at what was then known as "Main Village," on the island, near where the Milwaukee depot now stands. The building used was a solid, stone structure, which is still standing. This was head-quarters for the Indian traders, among whom were Dousman & Brisbois, agents for the American Fur Company.

In 1839, Edward Pelton opened up a general store.

In 1847, Thomas A. Savage and Martin Neinhardt engaged in trade; the former in a general stock, and the latter in exclusive grocery stock.

O. P. Martin embarked in the drug and grocery trade, at about the same time.

Gaillard & Famechon, began business in 1849, running a large general stock, then called and still known as the "French Store." In 1855, they erected a spacious stone building on Bluff street where Mr. Famechon is still (1884) doing business.

The first to engage in the hardware trade at this point was Mr. Frisbie, who sold to B. F. Fay, in 1857. Beach & Weber engaged in the same line in 1858.

The earliest dealer in furniture was Christopher Greeley, who commenced business in 1850, in a shop near the site of the present Commercial Hotel. This business is still (1884) carried on by his son Charles.

Horace Beach kept the pioneer agricultural store.

The first lumber dealers were I. P. P. Gentil & Dorr, who operated as early as 1856-7.

Shipley & Peas run the first livery stable, beginning about 1853.

The first to deal in clocks and jewelry was Mr. Giles, who was in trade here just before the war, and here commenced the foundation of the great fortune he has since amassed in Chicago, where he has long since been one of the noted business men.

The pioneer picture taker was Alphens Wright, who located long before the art of taking photographs was known. About 1850 was the date of his commencing to take daguerrotypes. D. A. Douglass was the second artist, who settled here. He was farther advanced in his profession, and taught Mr. Wright the process of taking both photographs and ambrotypes. He located in 1856, and continued in the business till 1865. His gallery was situated on Church street near where the city brewery was afterward built.

The first shoemaker in Prairie du Chien was a German named Sielgher, who commenced cobbling in 1842. In 1856, J. T. Christoph came from New York city and opened a shoe shop, and in 1860 added a stock of boots and shoes. He is still (in 1884) operating in this capacity.

The first restaurant in the place was run in connection with a boarding house, known as "Our House," which stood near where the French store building now stands. It was kept by John Pion, who is a native of Prairie du Chien. He was born in 1821, on the site of the present Railway House, and died Dec. 1, 1882. He had served two years in the United States army 1846-7, in a campaign against the Indians of the northwest. At one time he was counted among the wealthiest men in Prairie du Chien; but one reverse added to another till all was finally swept from him. The last twenty-five years of his life he suffered much from inflammatory rheumatism, contracted while in the army. It is said Mr. Pion was a "born gentlemen," and like most of the early French settlers, he was liberal and hospitable. His death added another to the long list of pioneers, who have been gathered to their fathers, leaving only a few of that generation who lived on this beautiful prairie, and whose chief business was "dance, sing and make merry."

Mr. Pion was married in 1850, to Anna Brisbois, a neice of Col. Brisbois, by whom he had ten children—John, Emma, Louis, Anna, Charles, Addie, Ella, Lotta, Johnny and Eddie.

HOTELS.

The hotel, as well as the grist mill, saw-mill and blacksmith shop, serves as a vanguard to civilization, going up as it does in the midst of the wild, unsettled frontier, to give shelter and repast to the explorer and home seeker. Could the foundation stones of the early taverns in the neighborhood of Prairie du Chien but speak, they would, indeed, reveal history which can never be written. They would tell of men and women of whom we know but little, they would describe the manners and customs of those who, perhaps, tarried here but a few days, or maybe give us a volume of comic incidents which occurred within the superstructure above them. Here the French and Indian traders assembled and told one another of their exploits and the dangers through which they passed in search of worldly gain among the savage tribes of Indians, whose finest hunting ground was hereabouts. They would also make mention of the marriages, births and deaths and of dances and charivaries besides a thousand other things which must have transpired in those early days around the public houses. But as these have been dumb listeners it is left for the historian to trace out, as near as possible the facts connected with the building and operation of the first hotels of the city and such additional notes concerning those of a later date as he may be able to find and then weave them together as a record of the hotels of this place.

There were several inns kept by the French settlers at a very early date; but the first record to be found of a licensed tavern was granted May 13, 1823, to John Brunet, by J. L. Findly, then county clerk. About the same time another was granted to John Dispose, and a year later, one to James Reed. These were all three small concerns, and their history, however extensive and interesting it may have been, has been lost by the flight of time; and all that is known is the facts above stated.

About 1839 Ezekiel Tainter built what was known as the Phoenix Hotel. This was on Main street, near the New York store building. In a few years Mr. Tainter sold to Edward Pelton, who operated it for a time, and from him the property passed into the hands of Mr. Keith. The next landlord was Deacon Hurd (Dennis J.), who continued for several years, and finally gave way to William Campbell, and he in turn to Alonzo Kane, who changed the name of the house to "Kane's Hotel." He conducted the house till 1861, when J. George Schweizer purchased and operated it till Nov. 8, 1873, at which time it was destroyed by fire, occasioned by the burning of Mr. Boisvert's barn, as some thought, while others concluded it must have been willfully set on fire, while the barn was yet smouldering.

About 1834 a hotel was built on Bluff street, which in 1884, was used as a private house. This was called the Prairie House; it was a story and a half building, erected by a Frenchman named Baylee. Later it became the property of H. L. Dousman, but was operated by N. F. Hurd, also by Messrs. Parvin & Campbell.

In 1839 Alexander McGregor built a very substantial, spacious hotel in Lower Town, known as the Granite Hotel. This was constructed of Prairie du Chien granite, and was a fine building. It was destroyed a few years later by fire.

In 1857-8 a joint stock company erected a large hotel in Lower Town, known as the Brisbois house. This was an immense house, built over the excitement connected with the completion of the Milwaukee & Mississippi River railroad to this point. It was too large a house to be in any sense profitable to its owner, and so was operated but a few years. Its cost was $56,000. During the rebellion it was used by the government as a hospital. Later still, an unsuccessful attempt was made to have it utilized by the State as a Normal School building; but having failed in this, its owners organized an independent college, known as the Prairie du Chien College. This proved a financial failure, and the building passed into the hands of the Catholics, who started a school therein, which also proved a failure. John Lawler then purchased the property and donated it to the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, who have added substantial and expensive improvements, and sustain one of the best schools in the State.

Another fine hotel was erected in 1856-7 by E. W. Mondel, at a cost of $40,000. This was known as the "Mondel," and was a very superior house. Among others who conducted this hotel, were, A. M. Tryon, Mr. Van Velzer and Edward Pelton, who were experienced hotel men, and won the esteem their merit deserved as good landlords. This building was a fine three story structure, situated on Bluff street, the principal street of the city. It was destroyed by fire in December, 1880, and was not re-built.

The Railroad House, on the island, is the property of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company. This spacious building was erected in 1862-3, at the time the depot was moved from its original site in Lower Town. This is a fine structure, built of Milwaukee brick, and provided with all modern appliances for the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. The cost of the building was about $35,000, exclusive of furniture. It is located within a few rods of the east bank of the Mississippi river, near the depot, and from its rooms may be seen the charming river scenery.

Among the smaller hotels of the place are the Tremont, Sherman, St. Paul and Central hotels.

The building which forms a part of the Tremont House, is a pioneer structure, being built by H. L. Dousman, in 1826-7. It stands near the river, also close to the Milwaukee depot. It first served as a residence and Indian trading post. For many years it was operated as a hotel by H. Baldwin, who added to its capacity, from time to time. In 1882 it was purchased by Walter Newick.

The St. Paul House was built in 1868, by Dennis Crehain. It is a small frame building near the Tremont and Railway Houses. Mr. Crehain, the proprietor, operated the Western House, at Lower Town, at an early day; he was also section boss seven years on the section running east from Prairie du Chien, when the road was first constructed.

The Sherman was formerly known as the Minneapolis House. This house was built in 1875 and operated in 1884, by Edward Rodgers.

The Central House is situated in the center of the business part of the city, on Bluff street. This building was built for a residence, but converted into a hotel in 1877. Its proprietor in 1884 was M. Bridenbauch. What was known as the Wisconsin House, was built by J. George Schweizer, in 1856 or 1857, as a saloon; but soon after the marriage of Mr. Schweizer, he converted it into a tavern and continued to operate it till 1861, when he purchased the Kane House.

Last, though far from being the least, is the Commercial Hotel. This is a brick business block, remodeled into a hotel in 1881, by J. George Schweizer. It stands on the corner of Bluff and Prairie streets, facing the south and east. It contains many elegant rooms on the first, second and third floors; also a fine billiard hall and bar are run in connection with the house, both of which are conducted in a creditable manner. Since Mr. Schweizer's death in May, 1882, the house has been operated by Mrs. Schweizer, under the management of her two sons, George and Charles. The Commercial has telephonic connection with all parts of the city, as well as with the city of McGregor. Another pleasing feature of this hotel, is the beautiful crystal-like stream of mineral water, which proceeds from the famous artesian well, and flows within a few feet of the office door. With all these surroundings, the stranger is made to feel at home, while he remains at the Commercial.

BANKS.

In 1837 a bank was started at Prairie du Chien called the Prairie du Chien Ferry Co. Handsome bills were issued. George W. Pine, president, H. W. Savage, cashier. It did not circulate well here, as it had no charter. It did less damage than most of the wild cat institutions of that day.

The first successful attempt at the banking business, was in 1856, when a Milwaukee capitalist, Anson Eldred, opened a banking house at Lower Town, known as the Bank of Prairie du Chien. After a few years this concern was moved to Upper Town and finally failed.

Another bank was opened in the winter of 1856-7, by Chase Bros., called the Exchange Bank. This was located on Water street. This institution was in operation a few years and then closed up, its capital being invested in other directions. Another bank known as the Exchange Bank, which is at this time, (1884) is the only bank of the place, was founded in 1872, by C. M. Seley, who sold to Aaron Denio, in 1880. The cash capital of this institution is $10,000.

FLOODS.

Prairie du Chien, situated as it is on the prairie land between the two bluffs, which form the valley of the Mississippi river, has been the scene of many great inundations, the greatest of which are spoken of in this connection.

In the month of May, 1826, a great flood occurred, at which time the river was higher than it had ever been known to the white settlers. At this point it was twenty-six feet above low water mark. The troops then garrisoned here, abandoned the fort and took possession of the higher ground east of the slough. The next remarkable flood was in May, 1859. In the vicinity of the round house in Lower Town, there were several houses, where the inmates would have been drowned had they not taken refuge in the upper story or at their neighbors. Front street was only passable by boats, and the merchants in that section were damaged by having the water fill the basements. All the islands in the river were submerged and the channel over one mile wide. The main town was indeed an island, the bridge across the slough was covered with water at both extremities and a part of it carried down stream.

Another sweeping flood occurred about the 20th of June, 1880; the Mississippi and Wisconsin rivers were then higher than they had been known for over forty years. The saw-mills and railroad companies sustained heavy losses in this flood. During this freshet assistant superintendent Collins and roadmaster Mitchell came from Woodman, a station on the Milwaukee road, about twenty miles distant, in a skiff, and found the water to be four feet over the railroad track in many places. Nine hundred feet of the track was washed away between Boscobel and Woodman, and the entire Wisconsin bottoms were inundated. The people living at Frenchtown, just north of the city, were completely surrounded by the waters of the Mississippi, and lost all their farm and garden products. On the Iowa side of the river, twenty-five miles of the Dubuque & Minnesota railroad was submerged and all trains abandoned. During this flood a party of musicians chartered a large boat of Louis Martin, and with quite a number of friends took a sail over the submerged portion of the city, the 4th ward. The musicians were: Mr. Humphreys, James Hicks,

A. K. Graves, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. McKey, Miss Jennie Morrison, Mr. and Mrs. Newman, vocalists; Mrs. Le Clerc, organist; Mr. King, violinist, and Dr. Samuels, guitar accompaniment. It is said the boat glided along over the peaceful waters, while the pale moon lent her mild light, peeping out occasionally from the scattering grey clouds, while the sweet strains of music floated pathetically over the "transient sea of waters." After serenading some friends in their half submerged houses, the boat was moored at the steps of the railway eating house, the inmates of which were greeted by a long serenade and there invited by the genial landlord, Col. Williams, to partake of the bounties of his table, after a nice little welcome speech.

The latest, the severest and by far the most extensive flood ever known to the people of the upper Mississippi valley, occurred in October, 1881. It commenced about the first of the month, and continued for about three weeks, devastating towns, cities, mills, railroads and bridges. In Prairie du Chien, the mills were all shut down, and the hands thrown out of employment. Boats took the place of wheeled vehicles for conveyance through the principal streets. The hay crop all along the Mississippi valley was ruined, and large numbers of stock were drowned.

REMAINS OF THE MILITARY POST.

There exists no point in the northwest, around which so much of historic interest clusters, as that of the city of Prairie du Chien, especially, is this true concerning the old government quarters, the remains of which have to be pointed out to the stranger, in order that he may discern that the spot was once a military post, where stood one of the most substantial and important forts along the Mississippi river. Where Ft. Crawford stood with its massive walls of solid masonry, bidding defiance to the charge of a mighty enemy, now towers the walls of the Catholic school building. Where the shrill sound of the bugle at roll call, was heard, now rings forth the convent bell. The last picket guards about these grounds have long since beat their "spears into pruning hooks and their swords into plowshares," and many of them been laid away at rest; and where they once stood guard by night, the street lamps of the city serve as silent sentinels—befitting emblems of peace.

The grounds occupied by the Fort were purchased of J. H. Lockwood and James Doty, in 1829. They consisted chiefly of farm lots Nos. 33, and 34, which contained 160 acres.

One of the early frame houses in Prairie du Chien was erected by James H. Lockwood; this house was upon the grounds purchased for the garrison and was the residence of various army officers among whom were "Zac" Taylor, then colonel in the United States army, having command of this post for a number of years prior to his promotion to the presidential chair.

After the close of the Civil war, all the government property at this point, was sold, the fort and other military buildings torn down and the material of which they were constructed, utilized for private purposes, as well as the land upon which they stood. No longer were they needed as a bulwark of defence; thus, stone by stone, the buildings were removed. John Lawler purchased the grounds about the fort; also portions of the government building. He donated the spot where the fort stood to the Roman Catholics, who erected a convent, upon the exact spot. The old flag staff from which "Zac" Taylor unfurled the stars and stripes in those early days, has been carefully preserved by Mr. Lawler, and still supports the proud flag upon all public occasions, and indeed waves "Over the land of the free, and the home of the brave." At the present (1884), nothing of note remains to remind one of the old garrison, except the building, once used as an army hospital; the stone structure previously used for the storage of the munitions of war, and the officers cemetery where sleep the heroic dead.

The hospital is a low one story stone building erected in the form of a right angle, with broad porches extending along the entire frontage. Within this hospital were performed some of the most noted surgical operations known to the profession. As one passes by this building, half in ruins, and exposed to the commons, they are reminded of other times, of days when each ward within this hospital was occupied by the sick and dying, whose groans were heard throughout the garrison. "Oh the enormity of war!" The munition buildings stand just north of the hospital. These are two story stone buildings constructed in the most substantial manner. The wood work having nearly all decayed, or been removed, the naked walls alone stand as monuments of the past.

The officers' cemetery is situated just north of the John Lawler property and is but a small enclosure, reserved by the government and cared for in a very creditable manner by Mr. Lawler, who has great respect for the departed dead: A tight board fence surrounds the graves, a number of which contain tombs of old style, provided with a brick work three feet above the ground, and this surmounted by a thick marble slab about 3x7 feet, upon which is carved various inscriptions to the memory of those whose remains rest beneath. The privates were buried at another part of the garrison grounds and when the lands were disposed of by the United States so many of these remains as could be found, were removed to the officer's cemetery and by a special act of Congress, head boards were placed by these "unknown" graves.

With each recurring spring time, the citizens of the place observe Decoration Day, and they are sure to remember these earlier graves with a peculiar tenderness and there bestow their choicest garlands.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

In the year 1814 Faribault, after whom Faribault, Minn., was named, an early trader of the upper Mississippi, was robbed of a large stock of goods at the village by the Winnebagoes. A slight earthquake was noticed this year.

1818.—Col. John Shaw built a grist-mill at Fisher's coulee four miles above the prairie where the Dousman mill now stands.

1821.—The first steamboat appeared here this year. It was owned in St. Louis and called Virginia.

1826.—In the month of May occurred a great flood of the Mississippi, the highest of more modern times. The water at Prairie du Chien reaching twenty-six feet above low water mark.

1832.—The cholera raged here severely this year, and 100 soldiers died in two weeks.

1836.—The population at this time was 850.

1837.—The county authorities levied a tax to build a bridge across the "Marais de St. Feriole." It was built between what is now the Catholic church and the Dousman residence, and floated away soon after.

1842.—The first public school was taught this year by Miss Rice, who afterward became the wife of Jerrud Warner.

1856.—During this year Alexander McGregor, built and put in operation a steam ferry boat, to ply between Prairie du Chien and the village of McGregor.

1857.—The first train of cars reached Prairie du Chien April 14; a grand reception being tendered the passengers.

1859.—On the 12th of May another inundation took place, the water being higher than had been known for ten years. The islands in the river were covered, the main town, an island and the bridge over the slough under water.

EVENTS OF INTEREST.

In July 1832, two river gamblers came up the river to this place. They had taken the small-pox somewhere below, which made its appearance on them here, and from which they died. The disease spread from them to the inhabitants and Indians. Some of the former died, but more of the Indians. In Waubasha's band, where Winona now stands, 140 died. The contagion was said to work its way west to the Missouri river, scattering death among the poor natives. The Mandan villages were said to have lost all but sixteen souls. The Winnebagoes in this vicinity died by scores and hundreds, and their remains were scattered along the river banks and in the woods, unburied, and eaten up by the wolves.

For some time prior to 1858, the towns on the upper Mississippi were known to be the lurking place of a gang of robbers and thieves, and this year the depredations that were committed in the neighborhood of the prairie, made it evident that they had come up the river to extend their business. About the 1st of May, a crowd of villainous looking fellows were observed about the town, and a few days after, an elderly man in passing through the place to his home in the country fell into their hands and was plundered of everything. Shortly after, a jewelry store in the town was broken into and robbed of property to the value of $2,000. These vagabonds were seen in the streets with revolvers and bowie knives insulting those who came in their way, and threatening "to clean out the town." The proper authorities were insufficient to discharge their duties, and the rowdies were allowed to do pretty much as they pleased. These events created a great deal of excitement among the inhabitants, and a vigilance committee was appointed, who arrested some twelve of these characters, and put them in the jail. A meeting of the citizens was called, and it was decided that something must be done to rid the town of these rascals. The prisoners were brought to the court house and examined, and it was decided that six of the principal ones should have their heads shaved and receive ten to thirty lashes on the back, and sent down the river; one of the number, a negro, was appointed to do the shaving. The sentence was duly enforced. A few of the number were discharged, on due and proper admonition, and some escaped. A report of the proceedings was drawn up and published in the newspapers.

In 1862, Austin Birge, while digging in a mound, at lower Prairie du Chien, came across some bits of bones and primitive pottery, and among them espied a larger silver coin than he had ever seen. Removing to Grant Co., Oregon, he carried his find with him, but later sent it back, so that it came into the possession of Horace Beach, who has generously presented it to the Wisconsin Historical Society. Its diameter is two and one-eighth inches; that of a dollar is one and one half inches. It weighs 776 grains, or nearly twice the weight of a dollar, which is 412½ grains. Its material is chiefly silver, though it possibly contains more alloy than the coins issued in the mints of the United States. Its obverse bears a bust, one and one half inches high, stamped in very bold relief. It was originally encircled by an inscription now almost illegible. Upon the reverse is the word merito, in letters so large that six of them fill more than an inch. This legend is in the midst of a wreath tied with ribbons. The leaves of the wreath are those of the cactus or prickly pear. This relic has a hole bored through it in the margin, so that it could be hung round one's neck. It was clearly minted not for a coin, but for a medal. No silver coin so heavy is noted in the currency of the world. The cactus leaves are a feature which points to Mexican origin. The word merito also is Spanish, meaning merit, or reward of merit. It seems to have been originally por merito.

It is noteworthy, that while merito is well preserved on one side of the medal, all the words on the other are well nigh obliterated. In the inscription which encircles the bust, the words Carlos, Espana and Indias are easily decipherable, and placing the medal upon a hot iron, all the legend may be made out as follows:

“Carlos III. Rey D'España de las Indias.”

BIOGRAPHICAL.

John S. Lockwood, a brother of Judge H. Lockwood, settled at Prairie du Chien in 1838.

He was born in the town of Jay, Essex Co., N. Y., about 1796, and removed with his parents to Champlain, N. Y., where he grew to manhood. He was married at Plattsburg, N. Y., to Margaret L. Miller. On coming to Prairie du Chien he engaged in merchandising, and was one of the early merchants of Lower Town, and afterward engaged in business at Upper Town. His wife died in September, 1839, and was the first one buried in the cemetery at Lower Town. Mr. Lockwood married for his second wife, Hannah R. Morley, born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and died in Chicago, in 1881. He died in 1868. Besides Judge Lockwood, two brothers, Ezekiel and William, have also been residents of Crawford county; also a sister, Samantha. Mr. Lockwood had eight children by first marriage, four of whom are living—Mrs. Ralph Smith, Hannah P., Carrie H. and James E. His surviving children by second marriage are—Charles R., Nettie and Lizzie B. Charles R. enlisted at the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, and on the organization of the 43d Wisconsin regiment he was promoted to a 2d lieutenantcy, and appointed to drill the 43d, which was stationed at Prairie du Chien. He served through the war, and was for some time a member of Gen. Sherman's staff.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

A jail of hewn logs (oak) with two apartments was built in 1820 or 1821, in the old village, and was burned in 1834. It was erected in the rear of village lot No. 17. The house was about 25x16 feet, and divided by the same kind of logs into a debtors' and criminals' apartments. At this old log jail, a sergeant of the 1st regiment of United States Infantry was hung, in 1828, for shooting Lieut. McKinzie of the same regiment; and in 1833 a soldier of that regiment was executed there for shooting Sergeant Coffin in the new Fort Crawford. This was the only building erected for county purposes until 1835, when the contract for a stone, combined court house and jail was let to William Wilson for $3,695. It was completed the same year. This was the first court house in the territory. Thomas Street and H. L. Dousman were the building committee. Michael Brisbois donated the lot. It was a stone building of sufficient size to have on the ground floor a room each for criminals and debtors, and two rooms for the jailor, with a court room and two jury rooms on the second floor. The taxable inhabitants then in the county were confined to the Prairie. The county was still a part of Michigan Territory and so well were the county affairs managed that the taxes were not raised more than five mills on the dollar to pay for this improvement. This was the first court house in Wisconsin. Stone offices were afterward built at a cost of $800, and occupied until the completion of the present court house. The latter edifice is situated upon the site of the first court house, the county having secured the entire block. It is a large and substantial limestone structure of three stories, with cut caps, corners and water-tables, the lower, or half-basement story containing the jail apartments and sheriff's residence. The next floor is divided into offices and jury rooms, while the upper story constitutes a capacious court room. The cost of the building was $23,800, and was erected in 1867-8. H. L. Dousman, H. Beach and William Dutcher were the building committee.

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN AS A PLEASURE RESORT.

But few, if any, localities along the Mississippi river afford better facilities and more charming attractions to the tourist and summer traveler than that of Prairie du Chien.

To the lover of the gun no portion of southern Wisconsin affords more facilities for hunting than does this location. Among the bluffs and in the woodland are found deer, partridge, quail, rabbits and prairie chickens; on the bottom lands and islands the various species of water fowl, snipe and woodcock abound in almost unlimited quantities. It has long since been a favorite resort for sportsmen from the eastern part of the State and is rapidly growing in favor since the sinking of the Artesian wells.

Fishing, in which nearly all classes take delight, is unsurpassed. The rivers abound with the finest specimens of pickerel, black bass, wall eyed pike, white and striped bass; and in the streams which flow through the coulees or ravines, especially that of Sioux coulee, large numbers of fine brook trout are taken. In the river, fishing at the mouth of the Wisconsin and Yellow rivers, that empty into the Mississippi from the Iowa side are favorite resorts.

To the geologist no portion of the northwest affords better opportunities for investigation, as a section of the rocks is here exposed to view to a depth from the surface of the bluffs of 400 feet, exposing the lower shell-beds of the Trenton, the entire St. Peter's and the most of the lower Magnesian limestone, in which are found many fine fossiliferous specimens, well preserved, and standing out in bold relief, where the strata are well separated.

To the archæologist this locality is one of the most interesting in the west, as here there are many untouched mounds upon the prairies and the points of the bluffs; and they extend all through the country, as these old denizens were fish eaters, and loved to dwell adjacent to streams of considerable magnitude. Evidence everywhere exists of the old dwellers, as large shell heaps, broken pottery and numerous utensils have been incidentally found belonging once to this people. It matters not what the object of one's visit to Prairie du Chien be, he can for a time be agreeably and profitably entertained. If he comes for health, he has the benefit of the best well water in the world, and superior medical attendance; if it is for pleasure, no pleasanter drives can be found anywhere. The summits of the bluffs, from which the most magnificent views of the Mississippi and Wisconsin are obtained, are easily accessible by carriage; if he comes for sport, hunting and fishing invites his attention, and a day's sport is always followed by good results, and if he comes for geological investigations or sight seeing the far famed pictured rocks on the Iowa side, but three miles below the city, are unsurpassed for beauty of formation and magnificent scenery. The people, too, are always willing to contribute to one's entertainment, and a more delightful society can be found nowhere.

RETROSPECTIVE AND BIOGRAPHICAL.

Over a century of years have passed into the annals of history since Jonathan Carver found upon the east bank of the upper Mississippi a small village of French fur traders, and half breeds called "Prairie des Chiens." French Canadians, seeking a more western trading point and supply depot, found here a cordial and generous welcome. The different tribes of hostile Indians were drawn to the spot by the oily tongue of the trader and alluring display of fancy colored blankets and trinkets, and brought their furs to exchange for powder, shot and whisky. John Jacob Astor founded that now extinct, but then most powerful organization known as the American Fur Company, at this point, and for years controlled the great fur trade of the north and west. Fort Crawford was erected, by our government, garrisoned by able and efficient soldiers, and "Prairie des Chiens" assumed a martial air. For three score years it boasted of being the greatest trading point in the northwest, and this assertion was well founded. American white settlers commenced pouring in about 1820, and the rapid influx of civilization drove the aboriginal inhabitants farther north and west. Churches and schools were erected on the site of former trading tents and supply warehouses, and the surprised and revengeful Winnebago was slowly and mercilessly driven back into the rapidly disappearing forests. At one time, Prairie des Chiens was almost a city when Chicago contained but a stockade and a few cabins. Now, all is changed, and the Prairie des Chiens of old, has departed forever. The present beautiful city contains a thrifty, enterprising population, and but few landmarks remain of her early glory. The pioneer settler has been "sleeping with his fathers" for years upon years, and his children's children tread where his footsteps were wont to go. But in the midst of all the business bustle and activity of the present day, the heart will sometimes turn back to "pioneer times," and wonder as to its first settlement and growth. Old time memories and associations still linger around the old fort and long familiar points on the mighty "Father of Waters," and are recalled with interest and pleasure, by the pioneers' descendants. The earlier settlers were French, and have left no record behind, of their parentage, or life pursuits, but the American settler has been more solicitous for his posterity, and in this work has transmitted to his descendants the history of a life well spent. The following personal sketches, together with those in the pioneer and reminiscence chapters, are intended to preserve this doubly valuable record, and also present the histories of those who have been largely instrumental in developing the present flourishing city. They are men known mostly throughout the whole surrounding country for their sterling business qualifications and unblemished characters.

John H. Folsom, a pioneer of Prairie du Chien, of 1836, is the son of Jeremiah and Octavia (How) Folsom, and was born Dec. 27, 1812, in eastern Maine, and until about fourteen years of age, lived in Skowhegan, Somerset county. When a lad he entered the service of a rich mercantile firm of Bath, as store boy. He was promoted to clerk, and subsequently sent to Africa, as supercargo, of the merchant ship, Transit. On his return from Africa to Bath, he quit the service of this company and went to Bangor, thence to Boston, Mass., from there to Toledo, Ohio, and in 1835, to Mt. Clemens, Mich. In January, 1836, he came to Prairie du Chien and wrote in the quartermaster's department and sutler's store, then was a book-keeper for J. H. Lockwood, until he was married. After this, he engaged in farming. He was elected justice of the peace at an early day, holding that office several years. He was chosen chairman of the town board of Prairie du Chien, being re-elected several times. He was married at Prairie du Chien, Dec. 2, 1839, to Angelina M., daughter of John B. Pion. Mrs. Folsom was born in this town, her people being among the early pioneers. They had one daughter—Caroline, who died in infancy. Mrs. Folsom died Jan. 11, 1882. Mr. Folsom has an adopted daughter—Annie J., who is the companion of his old age. Nearly half a century has passed since Mr. Folsom selected his home on these prairies. His early neighbors were the Indians and French, and in his time he has witnessed many curious scenes. His memory is clear, and of all the old settlers left, few, if any, can give so accurate an account of the interesting events that have transpired in this region in the past forty-seven years. Mr. Folsom's home is on farm lot No. 24, just north of the city.

Samuel Adams Clark located at Prairie du Chien in 1838. He was born in Whiting township, Addison Co., Vt., Oct. 22, 1810. He learned the trade of wheelwright and carriage maker in his youth, also that of blacksmith and painter, and subsequently that of carpenter and joiner, working at the latter trade for fourteen years. When twenty-one years of age he went to Westport, Essex Co., N. Y., where he resided five years. He then removed to Prairie du Chien, arriving June 18, 1838. On coming to this place he worked at the carpenter and joiner trade, one of his first jobs being on the quarters of the commanding officers of Fort Crawford. In June, 1840, he opened a general store at Lower Town, then the business center of Prairie du Chien. In 1844 he opened another store at Garnaville, Iowa, where he also bought grain. Three years later he moved his stock to Clayton, Iowa, where he carried on business for several years, building up an extensive trade. He also put up several buildings at that place and was largely interested in real estate. Six years later he removed his stock to Viroqua, Vernon Co., Wis., having previously erected a large store at that place. He was in business there five years. He also laid out the town site of Marion, Minn., erected a large store building and stocked it with general merchandise. Mr. Clark had at one time seven different stores in operation, including the original store at Prairie du Chien. He also became interested in farming, and now has 350 acres of land, the care of which occupies his principal time. He continued in the mercantile business twenty-two years, during which time he acquired the reputation of an enterprising and fair dealing merchant. Mr. Clark was also interested in railroad matters, aiding and encouraging the opening of this region to the commerce of the world. Mr. Clark was married, at Prairie du Chien, Jan. 19, 1844, to Adelia M. Richards. They had seven children, four sons and three daughters—Pamelia S., wife of Joel C. Smith, of Chicago; Cornillo, a merchant of Menomonee, Dunn Co., Wis.; Elmira, wife of George Morsey, of Moberly, Mo.; Danoin A., a resident of Missouri; Walter A., of Centralia, Mo.; Eda, wife of Edwin Paff, of St. Louis, Mo.; Ernest L., residing on the homestead. Mrs. Clark died July 16, 1870. Mr. Clark was married Nov. 9, 1873, to Frances, daughter of O. F. Reynolds, and born in Rock Co., Wis. They had two children—Mary, who died aged two years, and Adams S. The name of Adams in the Clark family came through Mr. Clark's mother, who was kin to John Quincy Adams.

Edward P. Lockart, lumber merchant, is one of the earliest pioneers of Prairie du Chien. He is the son of Robert and Sarah Lockart, and was born Jan. 20, 1816, in Chester Co., Penn. In the spring of 1839, he moved to Mineral Point, Wis. Ter., residing in that place until June, 1841, when he came to Prairie du Chien. In 1843 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Crawford county, under sheriff Robert D. Lester, who was shot by an Indian while coming down the river in his canoe. Mr. Lockart was elected sheriff in the fall of 1844, serving 1845 and 1846.

During his term of office, his jurisdiction extended to Lake Superior, and included the territory now the site of the city of St. Paul. He was chosen sergeant-at-arms of the Senate in the last Territorial Legislature, and the first in the State Senate of 1848-9. In 1852 he engaged in the lumber business near Chippewa Falls, where he had an interest in a saw-mill. In 1854 his company opened a lumber yard at Prairie du Chien, which they operated until 1857. In 1867 Mr. Lockart engaged in the lumber business alone. Mr. Lockart was married in November, 1845, at Burlington, Iowa, to Mrs. Esther A. Lester, widow of Robert D. Lester and daughter of Jesse Danley. Mrs. Lockart was born in Meadville, Penn., coming to Prairie du Chien with her parents, in 1837. They have had five children, three of whom are living—W. S., wife of B. F. Fay, of this city; Martha and Edward P. Mary died in 1880 and Robert died, aged three years. The youngest son, Edward P., is a practicing physician, and a recent graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York city.

Julius Famechon, one of the pioneer merchants of Prairie du Chien, is the son of Constant S. and Melanie (Baillet) Famechon, and was born Sept. 22, 1824, in the department of Pas de Calais, France. He grew to manhood in his native country, and in 1848, emigrated to the United States. He spent the winter in St. Louis, Mo., and in March, 1849, came to Prairie du Chien, Wis., where he formed a partnership with Augustus Gaillard in the mercantile business, starting in a small way as their means would permit. They were very successful, and their business rapidly increased. This partnership continued until the death of Mr. Gaillard, which occurred in 1864, since which time Mr. Famechon has conducted the business alone. He now carries a stock of $15,000. Mr. Famechon has extended his business interests in other directions. He is now the proprietor of the Merchant Flouring Mill at this place. This mill has three run of buhrs, and has a milling capacity of seventy-five barrels of flour per day. He has an elevator for storage, with a capacity of 25,000 bushels. He also has an oil mill, where rape and flaxseed are converted into linseed oil. Mr. Famechon is a large real estate owner. Beside his city property, he has a fine farm of 1,000 acres in Eastman town. He has been in mercantile business at Prairie du Chien longer than any one now here. Starting with limited means, he has, by strict attention to business, and by fair and cautious treatment of his customers, built up a large business. He was married, in Prairie du Chien, in 1858, to Ada Jenkins, born in Kentucky. They have two children—Julius C. and Melanie.

Charles Grelle, son of Christopher Grelle, was born in Millhausen, Alsace-on-the-Rhine, Germany, Jan. 21, 1845. He emigrated to America with his parents in 1849, coming directly to Prairie du Chien, Wis. He received a common school education and learned the cabinet maker's trade in his father's shop. After the death of his father, Dec. 27, 1880, Charles succeeded to the business. Mr. Grelle has a well stocked cabinet shop, just east of the Commercial House. He was married at Wauzeka, Wis., Dec. 29, 1854, to Caroline, daughter of Henry Streckey, born in Crawford Co., Wis. They have seven children, four boys and three girls—Charles, William, Frederick, Caroline, Mary, Emma and Edward.

Christopher Grelle was born in Hanover, Germany, Aug. 13, 1813. He learned the trade of cabinet making and became a very skillful workman. He was married in Alsace, Germany, to Louisa Riiff. They had one son, Charles, now of Prairie du Chien. Mr. Grelle emigrated to the United States in 1849, and came at once to Prairie du Chien, where he opened the first cabinet shop in that village. Mr. Grelle was an industrious and skillful workman, and carried on the business successfully, until his death, which occurred Dec. 27, 1880. Mr. Grelle was a member of the city council of 1879. He was universally esteemed and respected by his fellow citizens.

James E. Campbell, proprietor of the billiard hall and sample room, was born in Cortland Co., New York, June 27, 1835. His father, Densmore Campbell, is of Scottish birth, and emigrated to America in childhood. He is still hale and hearty, and a resident of Prairie du Chien. James was reared to manhood in the State of New York, and received an academic education. He learned the shoemaker's trade and worked at that occupation till 1849. He then went to Whitewater, Wis. The following year he came to Crawford county, and engaged in farming in the town of Clayton. He was elected clerk of the court of this county in 1849, and removed to Prairie du Chien; was re-elected and served three terms. He was next elected county clerk and served one term; then as county treasurer one term; was again elected clerk of the court, and in 1884 was serving as city clerk. Mr. Campbell was married in Cortland Co., N. Y., in October 1849, to Tacy daughter of John Van Allen. Mrs. Campbell was born at Dryden, Tompkins Co., N. Y. They have had six children, five of whom are living—Edwin R., Albert E., Fred, Charles W. and Frank. The daughter, Mary T., died at the age of two years.

He came from the east and located on a farm in town of Eastman, Crawford county, about eleven miles northeast of Prairie du Chien. He served as justice of the peace several years and was a highly respected citizen. His death occurred Oct. 1, 1880. John G., was reared on the farm. In 1872 he entered the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company as pile driving man, for five years, then served as brakeman for three years. He was subsequently promoted to conductor, and since 1882 has held the position of conductor of transfer. Mr. Steiner was married in April 1875, to Mary, daughter of Charles Lang. She was born in Crawford county. They have two children—Nellie and Clara.

Andrew Bosch was born Dec. 6, 1822 in Wurtemberg, Germany. He is the son of John G. Bosch, and was reared in his native country. In 1848 he married Barbara Schenser, and in 1851 emigrated to the United States. The first year in this country was spent in Toledo, Ohio. In 1852 he came to Prairie du Chien and engaged in farming, about three miles north of the city. He lived on his farm about nineteen years and then moved into the city, engaging in the beer bottling business in connection with Schuman & Menges, brewers. He still owns his farm of 280 acres which he has let under lease. Mr. and Mrs. Bosch had three children, one son and two daughters—Frederick, Mary and Jossie. An unfortunate mental trouble on the part of Mrs. Bosch caused a legal separation from her husband, and she returned to Germany. Mr. Bosch was married, in 1872, at Prairie du Chien, to Mrs. Catharine Bauer, widow of Charles Bauer and daughter of George Albricht. She was born in Wurtemberg, Germany. They have one child—Thuselda. Mr. Bosch is a gentleman of fine literary attainments, and has written many poems that have been published in the German press and magazines, and which have been received with good favor. His friends have advised the collection and publication of his writings in book form, but he has not felt disposed to undertake the task.

Norris in November, 1882. Coleman sold to T. B. Norris May 16, 1883, and M. E. Norris still remains in the business as manager. T. B. Norris was born at Prairie du Chien in May, 1852. Soon after the war began in that year, he enlisted for three years, as a private in company C, 6th regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, it being the first company to enter the service from Prairie du Chien. In the battle of South Mountain, Aug. 14, 1862, he was wounded by a rifle ball, which passed through his left leg below the knee, breaking the bones so badly that the hospital surgeon insisted upon amputating the limb, and it was only by persistent and determined pluck in resisting, that the wounded man saved what is now a sound and healthy leg. But it was nearly eleven months before he was able to join his regiment. Mr. Whaley was promoted to the office of 1st sergeant of his company Sept. 1, 1862, serving in that capacity up to the time the regiment re-enlisted, soon after which, July 15, 1864, he was commissioned captain of his company of veterans. In the battle in front of Petersburg, Va., he was wounded a second time by a gun-shot in the right foot. And at the battle of Five Forks, one of the last engagements of the war, on April 1, 1865, while commanding his regiment, captain Whaley was shot through the right thigh, shattering the bone and rendering amputation necessary. He was breveted major from the date of this battle for gallant and meritorious conduct. Maj. Whaley was mustered out of service in August, 1865, retiring, halt and battle-scarred, but leaving behind him a proud record, each scar and the empty pantaloons leg which he carries being an eloquent testimonial of his bravery as a soldier and a patriot. Among the battles he participated in were Gainsville and Bull Run, Aug. 28 to 31, 1862; South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862; Mine Run, Va., Wilderness, Va., May 5, 1864; Spotsylvania, Va., May 8, 1864; Laurel Hill, Va., May 8, 1864; Jericho Ford, Va., May 25, 1864; Cold Harbor, Va., June 2, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 18, 1864; Hatcher's Run, Va., Feb. 6, 1865; Gravelly Run, Va., March 31, 1865; and Five Forks, Va., where he lost his leg. On returning from the war, Major Whaley was given a clerkship in the postoffice at Prairie du Chien, and on Feb. 1, 1866, was appointed postmaster at that place, and has held the office by re-appointment up to the present time. He still cherishes his love for the gun and is very fond of hunting and target shooting, and has won the reputation of being the best rifle shot in this part of the country. On Oct. 30, 1865, Maj. Whaley was united in marriage with Adelia, daughter of William Ryan, of Harper's Ferry, Iowa. She was born in Cumberland Co., Md. William A is the only child of this union. Mrs. Whaley died June 10, 1868. He worked at his trade in Portage City, Wis., and also in Madison, Wis., and Dubuque, Iowa. In the fall of 1855 he came to Prairie du Chien and worked as a journeyman harness maker until the spring of 1856, when he bought out his employer, and has since conducted the business. The habits of industry and sobriety inculcated there have been the basis of a useful and temperate life of sixty odd years. Mr. Harris came to Prairie du Chien in the fall of 1855 and engaged in the manufacture of steel plows and cultivators and has continued the business without interruption to this date (1884). He was married in Belvidere, Ill., in November, 1850, to Charlotte Benson. They have two sons. The eldest, Albert, is married and employed as operator and station agent at Adams, Minn. He located at Dayton, Ohio, for a short time, then removed to Madison, Wis. In 1855 he came to Prairie du Chien, working at his trade for a few years, and then opening a restaurant and sample room on Main street. This venture proved successful, and finding his quarters too small for his rapidly increasing business, he leased what was known as Kane's Hotel, a large structure containing sixty rooms. He subsequently bought this property, and operated it successfully until November, 1873, when it was destroyed by fire, by which event Mr. Schweizer sustained a heavy loss. However, he had prospered so well previously, that he had become a prominent property owner. Previous to this time he had built the fine three-story brick block at the corner of Bluff and Prairie streets, now known as the Commercial Hotel, and owned and operated by his widow and family. At the time of the fire, the upper floors of this block were used for public halls, and offices, while the first floor was used for business purposes. As soon as he could get possession Mr. Schweizer, converted this building into a hotel, naming it the Commercial House. He continued in the business until the time of his death, which occurred May 11, 1882. Mr. Schweizer was widely and favorably known as an enterprising and honorable citizen. He made money in a legitimate business, and as promptly invested it in substantial improvements which benefitted the public as well as himself. He was a man of liberal ideas, and active in the cause of education. He was the first director of the German School Association, and a member of the city board of education. He also served as a member of the city council. In every position of public honor or trust, he

Wright, was then carrying on the drug business in company with his brother, Emery. On the night of Jan. 11, 1869, Emery Wright was killed, while in the act of defending the store against burglars. E. M. Wright succeeded his uncle, as his father's partner, this connection continuing until the death of his father, which occurred Sept. 11, 1872. He learned the cabinet maker's trade in his father's shops, in New Jersey, and subsequently engaged in the hard wood lumber business, in New York. In 1856 he came to Prairie du Chien, then a thriving place with magnificent prospects. He formed a partnership in the wholesale drug business with

Charles<sup>s</sup> S. Van Duzer, under the firm name of Brower & Van Duzer. In two years, this connection was dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Brower continued the business alone, and Mr. Van Duzer returned east. The latter was killed in the late war. Mr. Brower, in view of the local demand, increased his business by adding a stock of general merchandise. His business stand was a large brick building, situated on the west side of Front street, Lower Town. At this time the Milwaukee & Mississippi railroad had its depots at Lower Town, and a ferry connected Lower Town with McGregor. The bulk of Mr. Brower's trade came from the west of the river, he having a large trade with Iowa emigrants and settlers. In 1875 he moved to his present stand nearly opposite the old one. His present store is a double building, 50x70 feet, making two fine stores. His stock is about $7,000. In addition to his Lower Town establishment, he has a drug and grocery store, in Upper Town under the management of his son Arthur. Mr. Brower was married at New York city, in May, 1850, to Anna C., youngest daughter of John Battin, a soldier of the British army, who came to this country during the War of the Revolution, with Admiral Lord Howe, who appointed him, with others, as body guard to Prince William Henry, afterwards King William IVth, who was then a midshipman in the British navy, and on a visit to this country. He served during the war, and when the British troops evacuated, he had become so infatuated with America, that he was not found amongst the soldiers that returned home. He lived to the remarkable age of 100 years, and up to the last year of his life, clung to the old-fashioned costume of white stockings, and knee breeches. Mrs. Brower was born in New York city. They have had four children, one of whom is living—Arthur. Mr. Brower is an enterprising citizen, and has endeavored to improve the city and make it attractive. His own home is a model of beauty and comfort. Opposite his house, Mr. Brower has an elegant little park, containing a large fountain of mineral water, which supplies a miniature lake. Well shaded walks and smooth lawns lead to a tasty summer house. This delightful spot has been perfected by Mr. Brower in his leisure hours. It has been the ambition of his life, to make for himself and family, an attractive home. That he has succeeded beyond a doubt, would be the opinion of every one who visited that favored spot. Mr. Brower has served in various local offices. He has been a member of the board of education, almost continuously, since his location here, and for the past six years has been its president. He has also served on the county board, and in the city council. He has been a candidate for the Legislature on the republican ticket, being defeated by only five votes. His friends were too confident of his success, to make a vigorous effort.

Arthur Brower, son of Thomas L. Brower, was born in Hoboken, N. J., Sept. 10, 1856. He came to Prairie du Chien with his parents when but a few months old. The proprietor is the manufacturer of and wholesale dealer in the medicine known as McFarlane's cough and consumption cure, a popular remedy. In 1856, Mr. Jackson gave up that chair and came to Prairie du Chien, forming a partnership with Edward W. Pelton, senior member of the firm of A. Pelton & Co., and Mr. Charles Wright. This firm did an extensive business in general merchandise and produce, and for years was the most important mercantile house in Crawford county. Mr. Jackson continued in business until 1875, when he retired, and has since devoted his time to the care of his farm. He has been prominently identified with the educational interests of the county. In the early days, under the old system, he was township superintendent of schools. In 1864 and 1865, he was county superintendent of schools, and during the existence of Prairie du Chien College, from 1865 to 1870, was a member of the board of trustees. barrels of beer annually. Mr. Menges is one of the most energetic, pushing business men of the city. Outside of his brewing business he is still engaged in contracting and building, and has just closed the contract for building the basement of the addition to the College of the Sacred Heart, at this place. Mr. Raffauf now has a tasty sample room and billiard hall, nearly opposite the Commercial House, which is becoming a very popular resort for the better class of people. He was married in Paris, France, Dec. 13, 1857, to Margaretta, daughter of John Egbert. Mrs. Raffauf was born in Coblenz, Germany. Owing to Mr. Raffauf not being a citizen of France at the time of his marriage, there arose some question as to the validity of the ceremony. So on their arrival in the city of New York, they were re-married Dec. 30, 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Raffauf have six children, three sons and three daughters—Bertha, Ida, Alvina, Alexander, Frank and Max.

He took a regular course at Prairie du Chien high school, and, on the completion of his studies, resumed teaching, which profession, he has followed for the past twelve years. In the fall of 1879, he was elected to his present position, and re-elected in 1884, his second term expiring Jan. 1, 1885. He carried the county by 350 majority, the usual vote of the district being close.

Walter Newick, proprietor of the Tremont House, opposite the St. Paul railroad depot; was born in Somersetshire, England, Nov. 6, 1832. After spending two years in Canada, he came to Wisconsin, locating in Grant county, and engaging in farming there two years. He then removed to Prairie du Chien, and opened a bakery near the railway depot. Here he carried on the business about eight years, when the death of a brother in Grant county, made it necessary for him to return there to settle up the estate. He remained in Grant county in charge of his brother's property until settled, after which, he returned to Prairie du Chien. Having purchased the Tremont House, near the depot, he took possession April 12, 1883. His house is conveniently located, and his accommodations good. Mr. Newick was married in England, in February 1855, to Mary, daughter of Henry Hutlon, and born in Somersetshire. In 1866, after the close of the war, Mr. Foster went to Logansport, Ind., entering the service of the United States Express Company as messenger on the Pan-Handle railroad, being subsequently assigned to routes in Illinois, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. In 1869 he emigrated to the United States, locating at Iowa City, where he engaged in the bakery business. Subsequently, Mr. Breidenbach went to St. Louis, working at his trade winters and traveling on the river summers as cook and steward. He was married at St. Louis in December, 1875, to Mary Humpal, born in Bohemia, Austria. They had one child—William, who died from the effects of an accident when twenty months old. Mr. Breidenbach came to Prairie du Chien in 1877, and opened a bakery, which he operated five years. He then purchased the Central House, which he has greatly improved, and is making it one of the popular hotels of the city.

They have eight children, one son and seven daughters—Arthur, Emma, Ida, Amanda, Hedwig, Clara, Minnie and Lillie.

Henry Weniger, is proprietor of the Prairie du Chien Artesian Well Flouring Mill. This mill was built by Mr. Weniger in 1878, and is a novelty in its way, the sole power being derived from the upward force of two large artesian wells. These wells are 1,044 feet deep, one being of six inch bore, and the other, of eight inch, and were dug by Mr. Weniger expressly for a power for his mill. He has another, still larger in process of construction, which is expected to materially increase the power of the mill. The building is 45x60 feet, two stories high, and has two run of stones, with a grinding capacity of 100 bushels per day. Mr. Weniger has another mill of equal capacity, situated in Eastman town, this county. Mr. Weniger was born in Saxony, Germany, March 19, 1825. He learned the miller's trade in his native country. In 1850 he emigrated to the United States, locating at Logansport, Ind. In 1854 he came to Crawford Co., Wis. settling on a farm in Eastman town. In 1855 he erected the first grist or flouring mill in the county, located in Eastman town. He carried on business here successfully until the summer of 1869, when, during a tremendous freshet, his dam, mill, and everything movable in the hollow, was swept away, by which, Mr. Weniger sustained a heavy loss. He rebuilt the following season, on the same site, and now has a good mill at that point which is operated by his son, Ferdinand. Mr. Weniger began to study on some plan of obtaining a water power that would be free from the many disadvantages of droughts and freshets. The idea of the artesian well power occurred to him and he at once put the thing into practice, at Prairie du Chien. The principle of a power obtained from the earth in the natural upward flow of water has puzzled the best mechanics. Millwrights have assured Mr. Weniger that such a power, suitable for operating his mill, was an impossible thing, but he has it, and it is a grand success. Mr. Weniger was married at Prairie du Chien, in 1855, to Matilda, daughter of Charles Oswald, and born in Saxony. They have nine children, four boys and five girls—Ferdinand, Angelina, Bertha, Louis, Minnie, Ottelia, Frederick, Henry and Matilda. The two youngest are twins.

Albert Levi is the junior and managing partner of the well known and popular Philadelphia clothing house of A. Kohn & Co. The factory and wholesale rooms of this firm are located in Philadelphia. They established a branch store in Prairie du Chien in 1880, where they carry a first class stock of clothing and gents' furnishing goods, of an average value of $18,000. Mr. Levi is the son of Gabriel Levi, and was born in Philadelphia, Penn., May 20, 1858. He received a business education, and graduated from the Philadelphia High School in 1873. In 1874 he began his business career as book-keeper for an importing firm at Philadelphia, and continued with that firm until he formed the existing partnership with Mr. Kohn, and assumed charge of the business at Prairie du Chien. Mr. Levi is a young man possessed of excellent business qualifications, while socially he is deservedly popular.

Nathan H. Levi, proprietor of the Jewel Casket, is the son of Gabriel Levi, and was born in Philadelphia, Penn., Aug. 20, 1859. He was educated at the city schools and graduated at the Philadelphia High school. He served a regular apprenticeship at the watchmaker's trade in his native city, working four years as an apprentice and one year as a journeyman. He then went to Nevada and began business at Eureka. After spending one year at that point he removed to the Pacific coast, visiting the chief points of interest in that region. In 1880 he came from San Francisco to Prairie du Chien, Wis., and October 1, of that year, opened the Jewel Casket, one of the most tasty and best stocked jewelry stores in western Wisconsin. Mr. Levi started with an entirely new stock of goods, of the latest styles, and now has an extensive and valuable assortment of watches, jewelry and silverware. As he is a thorough workman in his line, enterprising and liberal in his business relations, he has secured a fair share of the trade, and is deservedly popular.

Rev. Christoph Gevers, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. Peter, was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1854. He was partially educated in his native country, and emigrated to the United States in 1877. He received a German and English education at the Northwestern University, of Waterton, Wis. He took a regular theological course at the Lutheran Seminary, of Milwaukee, graduating in 1882, and being regularly ordained a minister of that Church and assigned to his present charge.

George E. Jacobia was born in Hudson, Columbia Co., N. Y., in March, 1833. His father was a large land owner in that county, and both parents died when he was nine years old. He was kept in school, and graduated when he was fifteen years and six months of age, and at once commenced studying law. He was admitted to the bar when twenty-two, and was engaged for many years in the practice of his profession in his native State, and also employed as assistant counsel in a number of other States. Being the owner of a large farm, willed to him by his father, he kept fine stock and became very much interested in stock-raising during his practice, and as soon as he could close up his law practice and real estate in New York, he intended to start a stock ranch in the southwest. In June, 1883, he met H. L. Dousman, in St. Louis, Mo., and by an agreement he started in the pursuit of milling, farming and stock-raising four miles from Prairie du Chien. They have about 2,500 acres of land and one of the best flouring mills in the State, and will soon have one of the finest stock farms in the northwest, stocked with the finest grades of sheep and cattle; Mr. Jacobia has but few equals in stock raising. He is a gentleman and possesses the "go-aheadism" to make the enterprise a success.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

TOWN OF SCOTT.

The boundaries of the town of Scott are identical with those of congressional township 9, of range 3 west. It is bounded on the north by the town of Clayton, on the east by Richland county, on the south by the town of Marietta and on the west by the town of Haney. Its general surface, in common with all Crawford county is rough. It has high ridges cut by deep ravines leading down to the valleys of the Kickapoo river on the west and the Wisconsin on the south. The valleys in this town are quite narrow. The main ridge runs north and south, but takes an indirect course, with spur to the east and west.

The table lands were originally well timbered, with white and red oak, maple and basswood varieties together with some black walnut and butternut. In the valleys the timber is usually small, and inferior, with many thorn apple and plum trees. But following down to the widenings of these valleys, the soil is better and timber of a much heavier growth.

The soil on the high lands is clay, with loam mixed; in the valleys a clay subsoil prevails, but with more sand mixed with the loam. For production, this soil is fully equal to any part of the county. All kinds of grain and grasses grown in this climate do well on these lands. Also considerable fruit, of the more hardy varieties, is raised here.

The Boscobel road, so called, passes through the town from north to south, leading from Viroqua to Soldier's Grove and Reedstown to Boscobel. This road enters the town on section 5, passes through that section and diagonally through the west half of section 9, nearly direct through sections 16 and 21, reaching the head of Richland creek on section 21, and then follows the valley through sections 28, 29 and 33, into the town of Marietta, on to Boscobel.

This town has no villages, no stores or hotels, but abounds in hospitality. It never had a licensed liquor saloon within its borders, and is made up of an intelligent, moral class of people, whose time and attention is all absorbed in agriculture.

This town has, perhaps more good and substantial improvements in way of houses, barns, orchards, shrubbery, etc., than an equal territory in any other portion of the county.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the campaign against Black Hawk's band of Indians in 1832, which culminated in the battle of Bad Ax, in what was then Crawford, now Vernon county, on the east bank of the Mississippi, the left wing of the forces in pursuit, crossed the Wisconsin river at Muscoda and followed Knapp's creek some distance, there taking a spring branch leading to the ridge. For movement of wagons and transportation trains a road was cut through the forest, which was afterward used by the early settlers.

About 1845 William and Randolph Elliott, visited the territory now known as the town of Scott.

They came in on the military road just mentioned, and on section 19 built a small cabin, with a view of future occupancy. They each made squatter's claims by felling some trees; they visited the place at different times, in the year preceding the first actual settlement.

In 1846 the town was visited by J. R. Hurlbut, William and Elmer Russell, Anthony Laughlin and Charles F. Coalburn, all from Grant county. They crossed the Wisconsin river at Port Andrew, followed the old army trail to a point where a hunter's cabin had been built, and there spent a day in looking the county over.

Three years later, 1849, J. R. Hurlbut moved into the town, with his family, some time during the month of November. Mr. Hurlbut was preceded a few months by Burril McKinney, who settled on section 18, town 9, range 3 west. Hurlbut and his family lived with McKinney, till January, 1850, when he had a house ready for occupancy on his own claim on section 17, town 9, range 3 west, where he still lived in 1884.

Hurlbut's corners were land marks for over thirty years.

Burril McKinney settled, as before stated, on section 18, in July, 1849. He brought his family, consisting of his wife and three children. After holding his claim a year, he sold out and made various other claims, but about 1854 he moved to Richland county, where he died in the autumn of 1882.

Chancey Kast came in December, 1849, purchasing the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 18, where he built him a house, into which he moved in April, 1850. His brother, James, settled the same time in the town of Scott, but a year later removed into the town of Haney. Both of these gentlemen were living in the county in 1884.

Chancey Kast was born in Monroe Co., N. Y., June 13, 1807. His parents were Peter and Catharine (Durbar) Kast. Chancey remained in New York till twenty-one years old, when he, in company with the family, moved to Medina Co., Ohio, where he was married in 1832 to Martha Merritt. He then moved to Erie, Penn., where he remained two years and returned to Medina county, and there resided till June, 1849, when he removed to the town of Scott, this county, and located on sections 18 and 19, town 9, range 3 west. His first wife died in Ohio, in 1847, and in 1853 he married Mrs. Moody, nee Mary Breadlove, who died April 15, 1877. Mr. Kast's children were all by the first wife. They were: Jeremiah N., William F. N., Martha J., James W., Henry C. C. and Charles E. James W. was a soldier in the Civil war, in company K 12th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and died in hospital at Madison, this State, in 1865. William F. N. and Jeremiah also served in the Union army. They both lived in this county in 1884.

In the fall of 1850 William Elliott, who had made a "squatter's claim" in 1845, came to the town with his family, consisting of a wife and two children. He erected a small log cabin, near the site of the old hunter's cabin of 1845. Mr. Elliott died May 5, 1880, living the last years of his life on section 17, town 9, range 3 west.

George and Larkin Clark came in 1852, first settling on school lands, but afterward entering government lands on sections 18 and 19.

The same year (1852) William Ferguson located on section 9.

Among others who settled in the town during 1853 were: Andrew Byers and Alonzo Young, who died in 1877; also S. N. Black came that year.

In 1854 O. M. Mitchell, with his family, settled on the southwest quarter of section 4, where he still lived in 1884.

The same year Tompkins Green settled on section 34. He was the first settler on what is called Irish Ridge, making his own road as he moved in. He was accompanied by his brother-in-law, Henry Hill, who only remained a short time.

William Gilbert's settlement dates from 1854. He located on section 26.

The same year Robert Evers settled on the same section, where he was still living in 1884.

Robert Duncan settled on section 21, and J. R. Spence on section 17, where they still live

During 1855 the following came in: Charles F. Coalburn, section 16; James Turk, section 9; Jacob S. Whitaker, section 4, also E. B. Dilly on section 14. These gentlemen were all living in 1884.

In 1856, A. Slade, who was postmaster for fourteen years, at Sladesburg, settled on section 12; John P. Coleman settled on section 16, the same year. He died in February, 1883.

Charles Nutter was another settler of 1856. He settled on section 20.

Sometime during 1857, Elder Levi Ross, a Baptist minister, came from Trumbull Co., Ohio. Mr. Ross left the monument of his good work behind him. He is remembered as one ever ready in sickness to relieve, if possible, the distressed. He was a comforter to all in trouble and a counsellor for good in time of health, and in every capacity a valuable man to the pioneer settlement. He remained in the town until 1866, a hard-working, earnest Christian minister, preaching in Crawford and Richland counties. After living some years in Richland county, he removed to Minnesota, where he still did frontier work for the Master. A little later he removed to Dakota, where he died in 1880.

From 1857 on, the settlers came in quite rapidly.

FIRST EVENTS.

Burriel McKinney built the first log house (except the one found in 1845, built by hunters) in 1849.

The first frame house was erected by William Rogers in 1857.

The first frame barn was built in 1859, by Charles F. Coalburn.

The first birth in the town was that of E. Elliott, son of William Elliott, in March, 1851.

The earliest death known was that of a child of William Elliott, caused by its clothing taking fire, May 18, 1853. Its remains were buried on section 18, where a cemetery was soon plotted.

J. H. Hurlburt broke and put to crop some corn and fall wheat, in 1850. Chancey and James Kast also broke and cropped with corn, turnips, etc., and in the fall sowed fall wheat.

Dr. Cannon built the first saw-mill in 1862. It was a water power mill; never being considered a success it was finally abandoned.

The first threshing machine was brought in by Charles F. Coalburn in 1859. It was what is called the Chaff Piler, as it did not fan or clean the grain.

The first religious services were by the United Brethren in June 1853, at the house of William Elliott.

ORGANIC.

The town of Highland comprised all of what is now known as the town of Scott, and all of the towns of Clayton and Haney east of the Kickapoo river. The first town meeting was held April 10, 1855, when the following were elected town officers for the ensuing year:

In the fall of 1858, the territory was divided up, and the name of Highland dropped, and a town created known as Scott. The first election in the newly made town, was held April 5, 1859, when the following were elected:

J. R. Hurlbut, O. M. Mitchell and Charles F. Coalburn, supervisors; Alonzo Young, clerk; George E. Harrington, superintendent of schools; Luther Poland, assessor; George E. Harrington, W. J. McBurney and Samuel Wood, justices of the peace.

The second postoffice established in the town was in 1858; this was located on section 5, and kept by Isaac Teller, who is a cousin of Secretary Teller of the Department of Interior, at Washington, a member of President Arthur's cabinet. This office was named Rolling Ground. It was suspended for a few months, but re-established in 1868, and the name changed to Wheatville. William B. Walton was then appointed postmaster, and was still holding the office in 1884.

An office known as Hurlbut's Corners was established in 1861. J. R. Hurlbut was appointed postmaster, and was still acting in 1884. The name of the office was changed to Hurlbut in, 1883.

District No. 6 also has a frame house, valued at $450, situated on section 9. Here the number of pupils is seventy-two.

District No. 8 has a school house located on section 22, and is valued at $400. The number of scholars in the district is forty-seven.

Joint district No. 7 has a building located on section 34, in the town of Scott, valued at $500. Number of pupils, forty-two. The towns of Scott and Marietta comprise this district.

Richwood and Scott comprise joint district No. 8. This district has a frame building on section 12, in the town of Scott, valued at $600. The total number of scholars in 1883 was forty-nine.

Joint district No. 1, made up of parts of Scott, Clayton and Haney towns, is provided with a building situated in the town of Clayton. Number of scholars from the town of Scott, five.

Joint district No. 4, made of parts of Scott and Haney, has a school house located in the town of Haney. Number of pupils from the town of Scott, seven.

Joint district No. 11 is composed of territory from the towns of Scott and Clayton. The building is located in the town of Clayton.

Joint district No. 12, made up of parts of territory in the towns of Scott and Haney, is provided with a building in the town of Haney. Number of pupils from the town of Scott, five.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services in the town of Scott were conducted by the United Brethren, whose preacher held services at the house of William Elliott in June, 1853. These meetings were kept up once in two weeks for two years or more, and services have been kept up to the present time (1884) with a good degree of regularity. They have three classes, under the charge of Elder G. G. Nickey.

The Baptist people held services from 1856 to 1866, but never erected a church, always holding services at the school house, under the pastorate of Elder Levi Ross, supported occasionally by Elder Prouty, of Boseobel. The removal of Elder Ross in 1866 caused suspension of services, and the society has never been known as an independent organization since that date.

John Day was born near West Carlisle, Coshocton Co., Ohio, in 1824. He emigrated to Wisconsin in 1845. He resides on section 7, and is an ordained elder in the United Brethren Church. Since 1870 he has been settled in his present charge, and constantly in the work of the Church. Probably no more energetic, pushing servant of the cause can be found in the west. For nearly forty years he has been, not alone a western man, but most of the time a frontier man up and beyond the Missouri river in days of wild beasts and Indians, a pioneer in Nebraska and Kansas. Hardy, vigorous, and as full of vitality as a man nearly perfect, physically, can be, he has been, and is, a man to be most useful in rough, western, frontier life. The elder's ministerial work in this neighborhood may be mentioned in this history. In the winter of 1882-3, Elder Day officiated at the funeral of Abram Correll, the oldest resident of Crawford county, aged 106 years; also performed the same duty ten years previous for his wife—Mrs. Correll. Since his residence in the town of Scott, commencing in 1870, Elder Day has attended fifty-six funerals, solemnized thirty-six marriages, and added to the membership of his Church by baptism about forty-five. He holds regular services in six different localities in Crawford, Richland and Vernon counties; travels upon an average each year 3,000 miles; and if roads are bad, and his services are in immediate demand, leaves his team and walks, being good for fifty miles in a day's walk. He is aged sixty years, but as vigorous and hale as most men at forty to forty-five years. Elder Day was living with his second wife when he came to this town from Delaware Co., Iowa. She died and was buried in the town of Haney, March 4, 1873. Their wedded life of twenty years was not fruitful, no children being born to them, but his wife cared for and reared three children by a former wife—Elizabeth L., wife of David Patterson, of Wright Co., Iowa; Barbara E., wife of James McVeagh, a resident of Nebraska; and Sophia A., wife of Jacob Hoffman, of Green Co., Wis. On July 13, 1873, Elder Day married Martha E. Richardson, of the town of Scott. By this marriage he has had five children—Naomi J., born in June, 1874, and died at the age of four months; Norma J., born Dec. 9, 1875; John W., born March 7, 1878; Thomas J., born Dec. 3, 1880; and Daniel D., born Feb. 12, 1883.

A Methodist class was organized in 1858, and attached to Mount Sterling circuit, La Crosse district. John P. Coleman was the first class-leader, and Mrs. Jonah Glover, steward. The first pastor was Rev. William McMillan. This class was kept up till the beginning of the Civil war, when, true to their country, all the able bodied men of the class, including the pastor, enlisted. Rev. McMillan served over three years as a soldier, and during the time did much spiritual good among his fellow soldiers. After his return, he again took up his Master's work, and in 1883, was stationed at La Grange, La Crosse district.

About the time this Methodist class was formed, it built a log meeting house, near the north line of the town. Properly speaking, it belonged to both, the Methodist and United Brethren societies, as the latter aided in its erection. This class was reorganized in 1870. Rev. Bradley, of the Bell Centre circuit, supplied the class two years. They used No. 5 school house for a place of meeting. A new class was organized at the town house, with A. F. Thompson as preacher in charge for two years. Rev. J. F. Nuzum, assisted by Lew Wooley, succeeded Rev. Thompson. Rev. William McMillan came next, and he was followed by Rev. Isaac N. Adrian, under whose pastorate a new church was built in 1881, at a cost of $1,000. This edifice is located on section 16. The name of the church is Mt. Zion; the same was dedicated, Sept. 3, 1881, by J. R. Irish, presiding elder of Madison district.

Rev. Adrian was succeeded by Rev. Eli Harding who was followed by Rev. Crouch, and he by James Ford. Under the pastorate of Rev. M. Nuzum, a large number were added to the Church, who materially assisted in strengthening it, which then became a strong one.

In 1882 the Roman Catholic church completed a substantial church edifice, on section 23, which cost $1,000. The size of the building being 24x48 feet. It is surmounted by a neat belfry. About twenty-two families are connected with the Church, which is under the charge of the priest who lives in the town of Clayton.

The Christian, or Disciple denomination, have a society in the town, with a hewed log house on section 12. This society was organized just after the Civil War.

CEMETERIES.

In 1884 there were three burying grounds within the town of Scott. The oldest of these is situated on section 18, and is not well located or cared for. The first burial was John J., a child of William Elliott, who was burned to death, accidentally, May 18, 1853.

On section 16 there is a well kept and beautifully situated cemetery. This is near the Mt. Zion (Methodist) church. Dethrick Coalburn, a Prussian soldier, who fought with Blucher, at the battle of Waterloo, was the first interment; date, Jan. 1, 1856.

Another cemetery is situated at the Catholic church, on section 23. This was established in 1882. James Kane was the first person to be buried there.

STEAM MILL.

There are two steam mills in the town of Scott—one on section 20, owned by J. J. Hurlbut; this has a twenty-five horse-power engine, which runs saws, planing mill, shingle and heading machines; also turns out wagon and furniture stock.

The other mill is located on section 11. This is run by a forty horse-power engine. This was started in the fall of 1882 by H. J. Kast, who the year following sold to his father, W. F. N. Kast. This mill cuts common lumber and railroad ties.

TOWN HALL.

The voters of Scott, experiencing the inconvenience of migratory elections, concluded in 1866 to build a town house, which they proceeded to do on section 16, near the centre—a very good, substantial building costing about $400. The enterprise of the town, considering the early date of building, and the fact that few towns in the State had established a precedent, and none in Crawford county, is commendable.

CAPTURING BEARS.

An incident of the early days of Scott is given in the words of Mrs. William Gilbert, who lives on section 26:

“One spring, not long after we settled here (date of settlement was 1854), my husband was very hard at work getting a piece of ground ready for a crop. I used to help him in this work all I could. One forenoon I had been helping him, and about 11 o'clock went to the house to prepare dinner, going to the spring down a ravine a few rods, after water. I saw on my return, near the top of the ridge, coming out of another ravine, an old bear and four cubs; the cubs were as large as full grown coons. It occurred to me that if we could catch those cubs they would make nice pets, and I thought of who we could give them to, etc. But I did not stop to think long. I looked for and picked up a club, and went for them, and drove the old bear away a short distance and the cubs up a small tree. Then went to the high ground to call my husband, but before I could do this the old bear, who had kept up a whining, called the cubs down again, and I had to hurry back to keep them from going off into the woods again. This time I drove the cubs up a larger tree, the old bear walking around the tree in a circle and calling piteously all the while, and I was shouting at the top of my voice for my husband, who heard me, but was provoked at my calling him so early to dinner, as he supposed, but finally he thought, as I kept shouting, he had better come. Meanwhile I had kept pounding on the tree to keep the cubs up there. When my husband came, he took my place and I ran for a neighbor—

Stephen Grow. Upon my return with him, the old bear gave up all effort to recover the cubs and ran off, and then, with ropes, we captured the cubs and disposed of them in one way and another."

REMINISCENCE.

[By Charles F. Coalburn.]

Late in the summer of 1846 J. R. Hurlbut, William and Elmer Russell, Anthony Laughlin and myself, all residents of Grant county, visited within the present limits of the town of Scott. We crossed the Wisconsin river at Port Andrew; here we noticed the wreck of a steamer, which had been used by the United States forces in the Black Hawk war for transporting supplies. At this time the settlers of Port Andrew were utilizing what was left of the steamer, in aiding them to provide shelters for their families. We followed the road by the left wing of the troops in their pursuit of Black Hawk and his people; this road led from the ferry (which at this time was operated by two men named Andrew and Combs), up Knapp's creek, to a spring branch coming in from the northwest, following the branch up and out onto the ridge, to about the center of section 14, and thence west through sections 15, 16, 17 and 18, and to the Kickapoo. This road was used by the earlier settlers of Scott and adjoining towns in moving in, and is now the main thoroughfare, crossing the town east and west. We passed on the way up an encampment made by the soldiers. The hewn basswood tables made by the men fourteen years before were still fit for some use, with a little cleaning. When we reached the high lands, two or three days after, our dogs struck a bear trail and followed until a little "too fresh," for they overtook the animal, and one of them being part bull, had more courage than discretion, and, consequently, was badly used up. We found a small cabin near the top of the ridge, which had been occupied, we afterwards learned, by William and Randolph Elliott while hunting, and perhaps by others; here we spent the night. The next day we looked over the land, noting the quality of soil and timber, etc., and then left, favorably impressed with what we saw. Three years later Hurlbut became the first permanent settler of the town. I came back with my family in 1855. At this time wild game was so abundant as to be a nuisance. J. R. Hurlbut lost in one year fifteen hogs and a cow and calf by bears. On one occasion Hurlbut and Burrill McKinney, looking after venison in the Kickapoo valley, counted from their position, overlooking a basin in the valley, forty-two deer. As they wanted only one, it troubled them to decide what to do. One season I was troubled by a dog, owned somewhere north of us. The brute would worry and mangle my hogs. One morning, hearing an outcry by an old hog, I hurriedly siezed my gun and some loose buckshot to put on top of the bird charges in the gun, and started to kill that dog! Reaching the scene, I discovered a huge bear, dragging off the hog, then dead! The bear left the hog and stood up awaiting me! After one shot she left. By running after her I got close enough to give her the other, but I did not stop the bear! My wife and Hurlbut, who was at the house, attracted by the shooting, came over to where the bear had left the hog, and while there two more bears approached to within fifteen feet of them, unnoticed. They were probably attracted by a desire to breakfast on pork chops. My spring, a little way from the house, had a large white oak tree leaning over it. While dipping a pail of water one day, a few pieces of bark dropped into the pail. I glanced up to see the squirrel that did this work, and to my surprise saw a very large bear in the forks of the tree, directly over my head. I started to the house for my gun; the bear evidently understanding the situation, commenced moving, and attracted my attention. I saw the brute come down; this was done by rolling up like a caterpillar; he dropped about twenty feet and made good his escape.

DISCOVERY OF BUHR-STONE.

In 1846, when J. R. Hurlbut was hunting a location, he discovered a formation of rock, which seemed to him to be similar to French buhr-stone. He took a small piece back to Grant county with him, and had a miller, who was dressing up a new run of French buhrs, examine it. He first broke a small fragment off of the genuine buhr, unknown to the miller, and handed him both pieces for inspection. The expert miller tested their quality and pronounced them both inferior and worthless bits of stone. Mr. Hurlbut then revealed the fact to him, and fitted the genuine piece to its place on the buhr which he was working on. No more was done in the matter until about 1878, when George Mullikin quarried out a set of mill stones from this ledge, and these stones have now, (1884,) been in constant use ever since, and are pronounced by all to be superior to the French buhrs. Several run of these stone are now in use, and preparations are being made to quarry them in an extensive manner. This formation is to be found on sections 17 and 18, of town 9, range 3 west.

PERSONAL.

The oldest permanent settler of the town of Scott, John R. Hurlbut, was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1817. In 1822 he went with his parents to Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., and afterwards to Trumbull Co., Ohio. When twenty-one years of age, John R. left Ohio and went to Illinois, remaining one year. In 1839 he moved to Grant Co., Wis., where he purchased government land near Ellenboro. He married Nov. 20, 1845; Charlotte Coalburn, sister of Charles F. Coalburn, who settled in Scott town in 1856. Mr. Hurlbut came with a party into the town of Scott in 1846, and being well pleased with what he saw of the country, he returned in November, 1849, with his wife and three children. He had been preceded a few months by Burrill McKenney, who brought his wife and two children and settled on section 18. He built the first dwelling in the town, a log house. In July, 1849, Mr. McKenney sold his claim and the following spring moved to Richland county. Mr. Hurlbut lived with Mr. McKenney until January, 1850, when he moved into a log house on his own claim, on section 17, near his present residence. Mr. and Mrs. Hurlbut have always shown great hospitality, and the new comer and the way-farer have always found a hearty welcome at his house. He has been postmaster at Hurlbut Corners since the organization of the office, in 1861, a period of twenty-two years. He was the first representative of his town in the county board of supervisors, acting as chairman of the board. He was the first town superintendent of schools, under the old system, and has for sixteen years been county surveyor. He was also chairman of the town board of supervisors nine terms and treasurer of the town nine years. Mr. and Mrs. Hurlbut have had ten children, five of whom are living. We give their names in the order of their births—Seymour, born Aug. 28, 1865, died in the hospital at Madison, March 7, 1869; Charles H., born Dec. 23, 1847, died April 23, 1865; John J., born Aug. 8, 1849, now living in the town of Scott; Winfield Scott, born June 8, 1852, now living in this town; Robert M., born Sept. 6, 1854, now living in Dakota; Ira D., born April 7, 1856; living in Prairie du Chien, where he is associated with T. W. Lacy in the publication of the Prairie du Chien Union; Charlotte Minnie, born March 7, 1858, died April 4, 1862; Theodore W., born Jan. 18, 1860, died March 26, 1862; Albert L., born March 17, 1862, living with his parents; Reuben M., born Nov. 2, 1864, died March 27, 1865. Mr. Hurlbut still lives on the place that he pre-empted in 1850 and entered a year later. The winter of 1849 and 1850, he and McKenney lived in the town twelve miles from their nearest neighbor.

John J. Hurlbut is a son of J. R. Hurlbut, has grown up with the town of Scott, his father having located here in 1849, when John J. was but a few months old. He is a wide awake and pushing young man, supplying to the town one of its most useful industries. He owns and operates a well managed steam mill, near the center of section 20, where he cuts lumber of all kinds, suitable for general building, out of the hard wood timber still standing in abundance over much of the town. He has a planing machine, heading and shingle machines also in connection with his mill. Furniture stock forms quite a large part of his manufacture, and he also has considerable wagon stock. Mr. Hurlbut first built a horse power mill in 1877; but finding this too slow he, in 1878, changed to steam power, and still finding more power demanded, he again changed, in 1880, to a twenty-five horse power. His business is now a success financially and otherwise. Mr. Hurlbut associated with himself, in 1881, J. Barto as a partner, but he soon after bought out Mr. Barto's interest and has since conducted the business alone. The earlier part of Mr. Hurlbut's life, previous to engaging in the milling business, was spent in surveying lands in Crawford county, his father being county surveyor for a number of years, and John J. succeeding him in the business in a very able and satisfactory manner.

William F. N. Kast is the son of Chancey Kast, who came into the town of Scott the second year of its settlement (1850), and who still lives on his original pre-emption on section 19. William and his father live together, William owning a farm on the same section. He was born in Medina Co., Ohio, in 1836. He was married in 1855 to May Moody. They have had five children—Henry J., born in April, 1858, married and living in town of Haney; Isabella M., born in May 1863, died in March, 1866; Rosa, born in January, 1867; Elvira, born in April, 1868; Celia, born in 1870. Mr. Kast's wife died in 1873. He was married again in 1873 to Emma J. Sterling. Five children have blessed their union—Emmett, born in June, 1874; Mary B., born in February, 1876; Jennie, born in August, 1877; Fannie, born in October, 1879, died Feb. 7, 1881; Stella, born in September, 1881. Mr. Kast, in addition to farming, is running a steam saw-mill on section 11.

Edward C. Elliott, son of William and Celia (Breedlove) Elliott, was born March 11, 1851, in Scott, Crawford county, being the first child born in the town, and still lives on section 19. In May, 1877, he married Harriet Quick, daughter of Daniel Quick, who died May 28, 1882. Mr. Quick was born in Ulster Co., N. Y., in 1813, left home when twenty-three years of age, living at different points in the State, and part of the time sailing on the lakes. In 1843 he went to Indiana, remained there ten years, then came to Lafayette Co., Wis., from there, in 1855, to Scott, settling on land on section 18. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have three children—Harriet E., born in June, 1878; Agnes E., born in October, 1879, and Albert B., born in October, 1882. Mr. Elliott's father was one of the pioneers of Scott, having built a cabin there in 1845, which he and his brother occupied occasionally as headquarters while hunting and land-looking. They also made squatter claims, with a view to future settlement. In the fall of 1850, he built a small log house by the side of the cabin for a residence. He afterwards sold his first claim and purchased 120 acres on section 17, where he lived till his death, May 5, 1879.

Henderson Young is the son of Alonzo Young, who came in 1853 to the town of Scott, purchasing of the government the east half of the northwest quarter of section 20. He afterwards bought forty acres adjoining. Alonzo Young was town clerk for twenty years. Henderson, being the only son, succeeded to his father's estate. His grandmother, seventy-five years of age, and his sister, Rose, reside with him on the old homestead.

Robert Duncan was born in 1827, in Westmoreland Co., Penn. When quite young he removed with his parents to Ohio. In 1844 Mr. Duncan went to Ellenboro, Grant Co., Wis., where, in 1852, he married Pluma A. Jones. They have had six children, five of whom are living—Obed A., Charles A., Chauncy N., Laura A. and Ella M. Robert W. was born Oct. 3, 1869, and died Oct. 16, 1870; Charles A. and Chauncy W. are now living in Iowa. Mr. Duncan came to the town of Scott, Crawford Co., in 1854, purchasing eighty acres of land, on section 21, where he has since resided. He afterwards purchased another forty acres of Walter Blandon. He served as a faithful soldier about nine months in the 47th Wisconsin Volunteers. He served several terms on the town board of supervisors.

Robert Eyers resides on the northwest quarter of section 26, Scott town. He owns eighty acres here and also eighty acres on section 27. Mr. Eyers was born in 1822, in Wiltshire, England. He emigrated to the United States in 1843, landing at Quebec, and going to London, Canada, where he remained three or four years. He was married at St. Thomas, in 1846, to Eliza Wye. After changing residence in Canada several times, in 1850 he went to Huron, Erie Co., Ohio, remaining until 1854, when he came to this town. Mr. and Mrs. Eyers have had eleven children, six of whom are living—Louisa, wife of H. J. Marshall, residing in Wood Co., Wis.; George, also in Wood county; Henry, married and living near his father; Frank, Sannel and Sarah. The two last are twins. Emma, Lotta and Edward are buried in the beautiful little cemetery on Union Hill. One infant was buried in Canada, and one in Ohio. Mr. Eyers served six months in the latter part of the war, in the 47th Wisconsin Volunteers. He is a highly respected citizen and neighbor.

William Gilbert came to the town of Scott from Davis Co., Ind., in the fall of 1854. He was born in Huntington Co., Ind., in 1828. When he came here he purchased land on section 26, where he has since resided. The year previous to his coming he married Maria Logan. When he made a settlement, Tomkins Green was the only man living in this part of Scott (now called Irish Ridge). With Mr. Gilbert came two families named Lucas and Rore. They lived together on section 35, but after a few years left the town. Rore died later in Grant Co., Wis., and Lucas died in this county, in 1882. Mrs. Gilbert was a good specimen of the old style of pioneer women. As proof of this there can be found on another page an account of her driving off a bear, and "treeing" and holding four cubs until help came and captured them. In further proof, she has given birth to, and reared, ten children, all of whom are, at this date (1884) living—John, born in 1855; Margaret J., born in 1857; Henry W., born in 1859; Matilda, born in 1861; Abraham L., born in 1864; Ezra, born in 1867; Ella, born in 1869; Eliza, born in 1875; Nellie, born in 1877, and Lydia, born in 1879. In 1864 Mr. Gilbert enlisted in the 17th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, serving until the war closed; was a good soldier, and has always been a good citizen.

J. R. Spencer was born in 1826, in Trumbull Co., Ohio. He there married, Oct. 3, 1849, Lydia H. Kinne, also a native of Trumbull county. In June, 1851, he moved to Ellenboro, Grant Co., Wis., where he lived until 1854, following his trade, that of a blacksmith. He then came to the town of Scott, locating on section 17. Since entering his land he has bought eighty additional acres. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer have had nine children, seven of whom are living—Marion O., Warren O., Ezra N., Ida May, Laura E., Ellen C. and Lydia V. The two deceased are—Emma C. and Charles S. Mr. Spencer is one of the substantial men of his town and neighborhood. He has served one term on the county board, several terms as town treasurer, five terms as assessor, and was for six years a justice of the peace.

Charles F. Coalburn came to the town of Scott in 1855, locating on State school land on section 16, which he had purchased some time previous. His father, Deitrick Coalburn, was a native Prussian, and was a Prussian soldier under Blucher in the battle of Waterloo. Charles F. was born in Minden, Prussia, in 1826.

In 1834 he emigrated with his parents to the United States. They lived the first two years near Pittsburg, Penn. Mr. Coalburn's father being entitled to a grant of land by the English government, for services at Waterloo, and being able to obtain it only on condition that he settle on it, they, in 1836, moved to Canada to make a home. It not being desirable to remain there longer after the Patriot war, they removed, in 1838, to Trumbull Co., Ohio. In 1846 they removed to Harrison, Grant Co., Wis., where they resided until coming to this county.

Deitrick Coalburn died in 1856, being the first person buried in Union Hill cemetery. Mr. Coalburn was married in Grant county, April 27, 1851, to Mary A. Blakeslee. They have had eleven children, six of whom are living—Eliza E., wife of Robert Jones, Pocahontas Co., Iowa; Edith J., wife of A. A. Arms, town of Scott; Maria O., John E., Frederick L. and Charlotte L. Those deceased were—Eugene E., Mary E., Charles H. and Charles A. Mr. Coalburn enlisted in January, 1865, in the 47th Wisconsin Volunteers, being discharged after nine months service. He is now town treasurer.

James Turk, son of Ephraim Turk, was born in Butler Co., Penn., near Pittsburg, Sept. 7, 1822. When quite young his parents moved to Venango county, and in 1854 to Grant Co., Wis., where they lived about one year near Ellenboro. In the fall of 1855 they removed to the town of Clayton, Crawford county. In the fall of 1855 Mr. James Turk bought of the State the south half of the southwest quarter of section 9, Scott town, and he now owns 334 acres of land in the county. He was married in Venango Co., Penn., Dec. 24, 1844, to Sarah Greenleaf. Twelve children have blessed this union, nine of whom are living—Maria J., wife of M. D. Grow, of Dubuque, Iowa; Anna E., wife of John Jones; Martha M., wife of Henry Coney, Excelsior, Wis.; James M., postmaster at Sladesburg, this town; Samuel J., residing in this town; Sarah M., wife of Washington Davis, this town; Anna B., wife of James Black, Osborn Co., Kan.; Butler L., residing in this town, and Wallace who lives at home. William J., John G. and Dorcas are deceased. Mr. Turk has bought and sold much land, and has deeded about 325 acres to his children. He served as chairman of the board of supervisors in 1880 and 1882, and is now serving his third term as chairman of the town board of supervisors; is also one of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Zion, and was a soldier in the Union army during the last war.

John P. Coleman was born June 2, 1822, in Shelby Co., Ohio, and moved to Allen Co., Ind., in 1845. He was there married to Catherine Doctor, June 3, 1847; then removed to Scott town in 1856, first settling on government land on section 25, where he lived for seven years, then sold this place and bought land on section 27, where he resided until his death. He was the father of seven children, of whom five are living. Through all his hardships he tried to live a Christian life. He had been a member of the M. E. Church for forty-five years. On February 22d he was fatally injured while chopping down a tree on the side-hill. The tree in falling lodged on a high stump adjoining, and while trying to cut the log laying in that position it broke off, and before he could get out of the way it caught him and pinioned him to the ground. It was twelve feet long and measured three feet at the butt; he laid under the log for five hours before he was found; called for help but no one heard him; there was no one at home but his youngest daughter and grand-son. The daughter had his dinner ready for him and waited for her father to come home. About 2 o'clock his son, who had been to the factory with a load of bolts, returned home, and she went out to tell him about their father, when she heard him call for help. The son put his horses in the barn and ran down where his father was laying, but could not roll the log off his prostrate body. He had to go a half a mile before he could get any help. When they got him out, his limbs were frozen almost stiff. He lived about fourteen hours after being taken home. Annie H. Coleman was married in 1880 to George Phillips. W. S. Coleman resides on the old homestead.

Eli Nutter is a native of Indiana, born in 1842. He came with his father to Scott town, Vernon county, in 1856. Proudfit, his old commander, whose watchful eye noted every gallant action. Gen. Proudfit says: "I remember Churchill at the battles of Bald Hill, before Atlanta, the 21st and 22d of July, and at the battle of Ezra Church, July 28. On the 21st we lost 153 men in a successful bayonet charge, not lasting more than fifteen minutes; on the 22d Gen. McPherson the 'Bayard' of our army, was killed; all ranks did nobly and I delight to do them honor. "I remember at Baker's creek bridge, on the Sherman raid east from Vicksburg, which we repaired under fire, of both artillery and infantry. Calling for volunteers for this deadly work, Churchill was one of the first to respond, and in the work was a right hand man, in short, through the long service of Churchill up to the time of receiving at Lovejoy station the wound which disabled him, which I well remember, he was a courageous, energetic and obedient soldier, and I am glad to do him honor." The bullet received at Lovejoy station Mr. Churchill still carries near the upper part of his left lung. The battle-flag of the 12th Wisconsin is preserved at Madison, and the following named battles are inscribed thereon: Lamar, Coldwater, Hernando, Vicksburg, Jackson, Baker's creek, Hatchie, Meridan, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickarjack, Bald Hill, Ezra Church, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Atlanta, Savannah, Pacataigo, Solkahie, Owensburg, Columbia, Bentonville, and Johnson's surrender. ## CHAPTER XXXV.

TOWN OF SENECA.

Seneca is bounded on the north by the towns of Freeman and Utica; on the east, by Utica and Haney; on the south by the town of Eastman. It comprises one whole congressional township 9, of range 5 west, and a part of three other townships, namely: Nine whole sections and eleven parts of sections of township 9, of range 6, west; six entire sections of township 10, of range 5 west; and of township 10, of range 6 west, two full sections and seven fractional sections; the latter being made fractional by the course of the Mississippi river. The greatest width of the town is on its south line, where it is ten miles from east to west; the least width is about seven miles. The distance from the north to the south line of the town is eight miles.

The surface is much broken, with ravine and abrupt bluffs in many places. The principal ridge passes through the middle of the town, entering on section 31, in town 9, of range 5 west, and leaves from section 3, in the same town, passing in an irregular course, across the town. What is known as the Black river road follows this ridge. There are ridges and ravines extending from this line, east and west, the former terminating in the Kickapoo river, and the latter in the Mississippi river. In the ravines or valleys, the soil consists of a rich, black loam, due largely to the washing of the bluffs, through a long geological period. A clay sub-soil is found, both on the ridges and in the valleys. These valleys are especially adapted to raising Indian corn and vegetables of all kinds, while the ridges are more suitable for wheat and other grains. In the valleys an abundance of good water is found, but on the ridges some difficulty is experienced in getting water. There are a few fractional sections, consisting of islands, in the northwest part of the town, which are of but little real value owing to their liability to overflow.

The principal stream of the town of Seneca, is Copper creek. The west fork of this creek heads on sections 4 and 5 in town 9, of range 5 west, flows in a southwesterly direction and enters Winneshiek slough. on section 27, in town 10, of range 6 west. The east branch of Copper creek rises on section 33, town 10, range 5 west, and flows in a northwest direction, finally intersecting the west fork on section 29, in town 10, of range 5 west.

Hall's branch rises on section 10, town 9, of range 5 west, flows in a southeastern direction, leaving the town from section 36, town 9, range 5 west.

Kettle creek (or Michael's creek), rises on section 7, in town 9, of range 5 west, flows west into Winneshiek slough.

Pine creek heads on section 28, in town 9, of range 5 west, flows southeast and leaves the town from section 34, in town 9, of range 5 west.

Davidson's creek takes its rise on section 34, in town 9, of range 6 west, and flows west, entering the Mississippi river on fractional section 33.

A creek, sometimes known as Randall's creek, rises on section 24, town 9, range 6 west, and flows northwest, entering the Mississippi from section 23, just south of Lynxville.

The town was never heavily timbered. The ridges were thinly covered with a small growth of the different varieties of oak. The heaviest timber was along the Mississippi river. On the ridges where the fire has been kept out, a rapid growth of timber has taken place, so that plenty of timber for domestic use is now found. In the ravines on the west, considerable butternut and black walnut, generally of second growth, is found; also, birch, maple, linn and some other varieties.

SETTLEMENT.

The first permanent settler of the town of Seneca was Mitchel Caya, who located south of Lynxville, on section 33, town 9, range 6, in 1846. Mr. Caya entered land two years later; he was still a resident of the town in 1883, having been there thirty-seven years. A short time previous to the coming of Mr. Caya, two brothers, natives of Poland, located above the present site of Lynxville, in what was afterward known as Poland Hollow. These first comers did not remain long, neither does it appear that they intended to make it their home; they brought some goods with them from Prairie du Chien for the purpose of trading with the Indians. They cultivated a small garden spot, remained about two years, and were never heard from afterwards.

Several years passed before other settlements were made. In 1851, William Philamalee made a claim in the southwest quarter of section 10, town 9, range 5 west; this claim included the present site of the village of Seneca. He erected a log house, and sold out in 1854 to Samuel Langdon, who laid out the village.

Elihu Daggett and Reuben Randall came on in 1852; the former settled on section 16, town 9, range 5 west, where S. Andrew afterward lived. The latter settled at Lynxville, and a few years later died.

In 1854 a large number of settlers came in and made location; among them may be mentioned Nicholas Morgan, who settled on section 16, town 9, range 5 west. He removed to Yankton, Dakota Territory, about 1870.

Aaron Kook came in at the same time and settled on section 33, town 9, range 5 west.

Daniel Tichenor, who came in the fall of 1854, settled on section 3, town 9, range 5 west. He had three sons—Dealton, Alphonzo and Anson. The Tichenor family were well known in the early history of the town. The father, Daniel Tichenor, was a man much respected; he run a brick yard, and also kept an inn for a number of years. His son Dealton, a lawyer, settled on section 18, town 9, range 5 west. He went into the Union army in 1862, was taken prisoner and died at Libby prison, Richmond, Va. Alphonzo was a mason by trade; he also preached and practiced medicine. In 1883 he was a practicing physician in Iowa.

Elmer and John Graham were settlers of 1854, and were closely identified with the early history of Lynxville.

Among the number who came in for settlement during 1855 were: Robert Garvey, A. C. Russell, Pizarro Cook, John Porter and family, Daniel and James Smethurst, William Oram, Meron Robins, Ingebert Peterson, Van Amburg, Joseph Robinson, Robert Tweed and David Cummings.

At the general election in 1857, the following voters were residents of what is now the town of Seneca: James Smethurst, dead; Elihu Daggett, in Iowa; Pizarro Cook, still here; Joseph Searle, dead; Samuel Langdon, in Iowa; Daniel L. Smethurst, dead; S. W. Clark, lives in Viroqua now; Wells Briggs, still here; George D. Millet, in Nebraska; North Miller, still here; Charles Lyman, in Iowa; Samuel Robb, in the town of Utica; James A. Robb, in the town of Utica; Dealton Tichenor, died in Libby prison; J. K. Chapman, dead; William McDonald, in Nebraska; John Helegass, in Iowa; James Langdon, removed; William Dean, dead; Lucius Dean, removed. Others who were known to have been in the town at that date (1857), but did not vote, were: George Dean, Peter Young, Robert Garvey and his sons, Elmer Graham, James Deming, William Kettle, who was afterward killed in the Union army; James Rathburn, Thomas S. Shaw, dead; J. D. Reynolds, dead; F. R. Pease, removed; Henry Vanderbelt, R. K. Davidson, O. Watson, dead; Daniel True, removed; Michael Caya, here still; William Withee, dead; Michael Snell, here still; William Snell, dead; John Burton, dead; Samuel Andrew, still here; L. McCumber, dead; John Cunningham, removed; James Boyles, dead; John Graham, removed; Reuben Randall, dead; Elihu Randall, still here; Thomas Dickson, still here; William Dickson, still here; Samuel Armstrong, still here; J. S. Bigelow, still here; William Smethurst, still here; Ransom Clark, in Viroqua; John Price, who afterward removed to Missouri; William Price, who enlisted and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga in 1863; Nathaniel Price, who moved to Kansas City, where he died; David Price who died in Minnesota in 1880; Valentine Ertel, a shoemaker, who still (1884) lives in the town; Marcus Nickerson, still here; Lewis and Alfred Hand.

These all came to the town of Seneca prior to the spring of 1857.

ORGANIZATION.

The town of Seneca was organized April 7, 1857. Changes were made in its boundaries from time to time; its present limits were fixed by the addition of Lynxville in 1868. The first town meeting of Seneca was held April 7, 1857, at the house of Samuel Langdon. Joseph U. Searle was elected chairman of the town board; Ansel C. Russell and Daniel L. Smethurst, supervisors; James Smethurst, clerk; D. Tichenor, George F. Millet, Oliver Langdon and Lemuel Green, justices of the peace; Elihu Daggett, treasurer; George D. Clark, constable.

At that time the town of Seneca included that portion of the town of Haney which is west of the Kickapoo river. In the spring of 1859, the town of Lynxville was cut off from the west part of the town of Seneca, and at the same time, that part of the present town of Haney which was then a part of Seneca, was detached. In the spring of 1868, the town of Lynxville was restored to Seneca, and its present boundary established. The first town election of the town under its present boundary was held in the village of Seneca, April 7, 1868, when the following officers were elected: Wells Briggs, chairman; James Taylor and Thomas J. Brady, side board; John Mills, clerk; John Burton, treasurer; James S. Burton, assessor; Hugh Dowling and Nicholas Cron, justices of the peace; H. E. Cron, A. B. Withee and Martin Duffy, constables.

There were 217 votes polled at this election.

Officers for 1883: Robert Morris, chairman; Thomas Leary, Sanford C. Prince, side board; A. B. Withee, clerk; Furgus Mills, treasurer; James Taylor, assessor; A. B. Withee, William Watson and A. N. Searle, justices of the peace; I. L. Wing and A. C. Withee, constables.

RELIGIOUS.

There are two church organizations in this town—the Roman Catholic and the Methodist Episcopal. The first Catholic services held within the limits of the town were held at the house of Robert Garvey, on section 34, town 9, range 5 west, in November, 1855, by the Rev. L. Gaultier, a French priest from Prairie du Chien. A congregation was organized and a mission was established at that date. In the fall of the same year, another congregation was formed on Copper creek, where services were held at the house of Thomas Degnan, conducted by the priest above mentioned. In 1859 this congregation erected a log house, in which they assembled for services. This building stood on section 31, town 10, range 5 west, on the farm of Lawrence Bird, who donated the land. In 1866 a frame building was erected on the southwest quarter of section 27, town 9, range 5. Catholic services were held at both of these churches till the erection of the church edifice near the village of Seneca, which was in 1875. At this date the old log church was abandoned, and the congregations united in attending this more central location; though services are still held occasionally at the "little frame church." The Catholic people have a very pleasant and convenient place of worship. It was materially improved by Father J. J. Burns, who was their priest in 1884. The first resident pastor of this Church was Rev. Father Christian A. Verweyst, who was succeeded by the Rev. John G. Collins, and he by Rev. J. J. Burns in 1880.

The Church at Seneca is known as St. Patrick's Church, and the other as St. Peter's. These two Churches number 120 families.

Rev. J. J. Burns, pastor of St. Patrick's and St. Peter's Churches, in the town of Seneca, was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, Dec. 16, 1853. When but two years of age, his parents removed to Chickasaw Co., Iowa. He began his preparation for the Church in February, 1869, at St. Francis Seminary, in Milwaukee county, where he remained ten years, receiving that thorough preparation necessary for his present responsible duties. Father Burns was ordained at La Crosse, Dec. 8, 1879. Previous to receiving his present charge he was pastor at Rising Sun for one and one-half years.

The Methodists were the first protestant denomination to hold services within the town of Seneca. There is no record of the first preaching, but as this place was included in the Mt. Sterling circuit, the date of their first meeting would not vary much. The class books of 1864 are the earliest record that can be found. At that time the communicants were quite numerous. The following names appear on the class book of 1864: W. H. Thompson, G. H. Harrington, Helen Thompson, E. Harrington, M. Inman, E. Haskins, Thersa Clark, M. Munn, H. H. Dean, Caroline Brown, N. Mc'artney, Lucy Campbell, D. Campbell, F. Campbell, R. Campbell, A. C. Knight, Jane Knight, William Sherman, E. Sherman, T. M. Tichenor, Mary Robb, G. Root, B. Root, M. Root, L. Root, John Copper, D. Duval, E. Daggett, Jane Searle, I. Duval, P. Green, M. F. Nickerson, Margaret Nickerson, J. Low and A. Low.

Not long after this class was formed, trouble occurred in the Church, and services for the time being were discontinued, and the class divided; some removing and others attending elsewhere, and others still, united with the Congregational Church which was organized at Seneca about that time, by Elder Valentine of Mt. Sterling. Services are now (1884), held each alternate Sunday, at Seneca, by the Methodists and Congregationalists; the ministers from Mt. Sterling conducting the services of each.

The Methodist class in 1883 was quite small in comparison with its original size in 1864; the members were as follows: James Smith (leader), Eliza Smith, N. Smith, William Smith, Hannah Cron, William Sherman and Mrs. George Dean.

No protestant denominational church has ever been built in the town; religious services were formerly held at the school house at Seneca, but are now held at the Good Templars' hall, in the village.

SCHOOLS.

The town of Seneca has now (1884) nine full school districts and five joint districts.

District No. 1 had a building on the southeast quarter of section 23, town 9, range 5 west. Number of pupils of school age, thirty-seven.

The school house in district No. 2 was on the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, town 9, range 5 west. This was in fair condition and valued at $275. Number of pupils enrolled, thirty.

District No. 4 was provided with a log building on the northwest quarter of section 18, town 9, range 5 west. Number of pupils, forty.

District No. 5 has a house in the village of Seneca. This is one of the best in Crawford county outside of Prairie du Chien. It was built in 1881, at a cost of $1,000. It is well furnished with patent seats; also has numerous charts, maps, and other modern apparatus. Number of pupils in this district, ninety-seven.

District No. 9 is supplied with a house situated on the northeast quarter of section 23, town 9, range 6 west. This is known as the Lynxville school, and is about the same as the one at Seneca, though not as large. The cost of this building was $900. In 1883 the district contained ninety-three pupils.

In district No. 10 the school house is located on the southeast quarter of section 33, town 9, range 6 west. The number of pupils here is sixteen.

District No. 15 has a school building situated on the southwest quarter of section 32, town 10, range 5 west. There are fifty-three scholars in this district.

In district No. 16 the school house is located on the northeast quarter of section 33, town 9, range 5 west. It is valued at $250. Number of pupils in attendance, forty-seven.

In district No. 17 the school house stands on the northwest quarter of section 31, town 9, range 5 west. This district has twenty-nine pupils.

Joint district No. 3, a part of the towns of Seneca, Haney and Eastman, has its building in the town of Haney. There are ten pupils from the town of Seneca.

Joint district No. 7, made of parts of Seneca and Haney is provided with a building on the southwest quarter of section 1, town 9, range

5. Number of pupils from Seneca, thirty-four. Valuation of building, $125.

Joint district No. 8, made of a part of Seneca and a part of Freeman, has a school house on the southeast quarter of section 35, town 10, range 6 west. The building is poor, being valued at $25. This district has fifteen pupils from the town of Seneca.

Joint district No. 9 has a good school building on section 29, town 10, range 5 west. It was built in 1883, at a cost of $375. Number of scholars from the town of Seneca, twenty-four. This district is joined to the town of Freeman.

Joint district No. 15, with the town of Utica, is provided with a school house on the northwest quarter of section 3, town 9, range 5 west, which is valued at $350. Number of pupils from the town of Seneca, twenty-two.

GOOD TEMPLARS' LODGE.

A lodge of this order was organized in 1864 or 1865, and continued a number of years in a flourishing condition, but was finally discontinued.

In January, 1878, the charter of the present lodge Seneca, was granted. The following comprised the charter membership: M. F. Nickerson, J. P. Nickerson, George Dean, Maggie McQueen, M. D. L. Smith, Gilbert Stewart, Jacob Smith, J. K. Langdon, Emma Langdon, Joseph Stewart, Eliza Stewart, Ida McQueen, Emma Randall, Luna Briggs, Anna Smith, Bell Barber, O. Smith, James Smith, William Smethurst, Fred Brigg, Annie Withee, Charles Strong, May Marston, Andrew Withee, Linda Clark, J. Clark, R. Stewart and Charles Nickerson.

The following were the first officers: M. F. Nickerson, W. C. T.; Emma Langdon, W. V. T.; M. D. L. Smith, W. C.; J. K. Langdon, W. L.; Anna Randall, W. A.; George Dean, W. T. S.; Ida McQueen, W. T.; Fred Briggs, M. M.; Bell Barber, W. D. M.; William Smethurst, W. O. G.; Eliza Stewart, W. R. H. S.; Mrs. P. M. Dean, W. L. H. S.; James Smith, P. W. C. T.

Officers of 1882-4: William Sherman, W. C. T.; James L. Low, W. C.; Ida McQueen, W. V.; Irvin C. Peck, C.; Robert Stewart, F. S.; Mrs. Lizzie Bigelow, W. T.; Lovella Smith, I. G.; James Smith, O. G.; Willis Haines, W. M.

This lodge is at present, 1884, in a flourishing condition; its present membership is sixty-five. It has a neat, commodious hall or lodge room, and is free from all debt.

CEMETERIES.

There are, at the present time (1884), six cemeteries within the town of Seneca; all of these, however, are not used now to much extent. The principal burying places now are these: One situated on section 16, town 9, range 5 west; and one on section 13, town 9, range 6 west. The other cemeteries spoken of above, are described as follows: One on section 27, near the "little frame church," and another just across the line on section 28. Also one near Mr. Russell's place on section 18, town 9, range 5 west, and one on section 6, town 9, range 5, near the log church.

MILLS.

A grist mill was built on True creek, near Lynxville, in the fall of 1858, by James Boyles; it was a frame building, and contained one run of stone; this was a small affair, and only used for grinding corn; the old settlers in referring to this ancient mill always speak of the "corn cracker." This mill was run by S. C. Prince, for Mr. Boyles, for a few months, when it was destroyed by fire.

A steam saw-mill was built by George Millet, at Crawford City, about 1858. This only run a short time, and was removed.

A grist mill was erected in 1868, on section 34, town 9, range 6 west, by Robert Wisdom. This mill was built near the head of Pine creek. It is a frame structure, containing two run of buhrs, and is furnished with ample water power. After a few years Mr. Wisdom took a partner, Orin J. Adams. In 1883 this mill was owned by Thomas J. Wallin. At this date, it was the only mill within the town of Seneca.

FISHING.

Fishing has for many years been an important enterprise with the people of Lynxville and vicinity. John Vanderbelt and Day brothers have been among those most extensively engaged in this industry. The varieties of fish caught, are pickerel, bass and pike, but principally buffalo.

In December, 1873, one of the most remarkable catches of fish on record in the world was made by two brothers named Johnson, fish dealers from Dubuque. The draw of the seine was made in one of the little lakes, or bayous, at a point about two and one-half miles above Lynxville. The seine was drawn under the ice, and not less than 80,000 pounds of fish were taken out. However much like a big fish story this may sound to the reader, it is a well known fact, and is vouched for by a whole community of upright people. A car load of these fish, after the heads had been removed, were shipped to Dubuque, and upon their arrival in that city, the railroad company believing the car to be overloaded (more than 20,000 pounds), had it weighed, when it was found that the actual weight of fish was 42,000 pounds; and it was thought by good judges that this was only about one-half of the amount caught at the one draw.

In 1882, at the same lake, 40,000 pounds were taken at one draw, by Day and Vanderbelt. The lake where these remarkable catches were made is known as Dubuque lake, in honor of the men from that city who, in 1873, made that famous draw.

VILLAGE OF SENECA.

In 1851 William Philamalee made a claim of 120 acres of land, of the southwest quarter of section 10, town 9, range 5 west. He erected thereon a log house, where he resided with his family till 1854, when he sold his claim to Samuel P. Langdon. In 1857 Mr. Langdon engaged Pizarro Cook to survey what is now the village of Seneca; the survey for such a plat was accordingly made by Mr. Cook, and afterward by H. H. Hall, who was county surveyor at the time. The plat contains about ten acres, a part of which is on the southwest quarter of section 10, and a part of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the same section. No additions have been made to the original plat, but the growth of the village has extended beyond its limits as surveyed.

Mr. Langdon gave the name Seneca to the village at the suggestion of Nicholas Morgan, as that was the name of the town in the State of New York where he came from. On the organization of the town, it also took on the same name, being named from the village. Samuel P. Langdon, who laid out the village plat of Seneca, was a native of Massachusetts, where he was born in 1812. He was married in Boone Co., Ill., to Nancy Emory, a native of Pennsylvania. In April, 1854, he purchased of Mr. Philamalee the land where stands the village of Seneca.

This was before the day of railroads in western Wisconsin, and Seneca, being on the route between Prairie du Chien and Sparta, was quite an important point. In those days quite a hotel business was done at Seneca. His house was also the resort for land hunters, who received much information from Mr. Langdon, who was familiar with the character of the country for a radius of many miles. In the spring of 1868 he sold to D. R. Lawrence, and removed to Excelsior, in Richland county. He was engaged in milling till 1872, when he went to Lynxville, where he engaged in the grocery and drug trade. From this point he removed to Buena Vista Co., Iowa, and engaged in the stock raising business.

The store building of E. & T. Garvey being on the southern limit, Mr. Langdon sold the first lot to James and William Smethurst, who erected a store building thereon in 1858. William Smethurst also occupied a part of the building as a dwelling for his family; James was a single man and boarded with his brother. The business established at that time still continues in the same building, and is conducted by members of the Smethurst family.

Alonzo C. Knight erected the second building, which he used as a wagon shop and dwelling house.

Lewis Smith erected the third building, which he used as a dwelling and saloon.

William Philamalee kept travelers in the log house just mentioned, and hence became the first hotel man of the village. Mr. Langdon continued to accommodate the traveling public when he had succeeded Philamalee.

The first wagon maker of the place was A. C. Knight. The first blacksmith was L. P. Marston. Campbell & Sons were the first shoemakers. Daniel Smethurst, brother of William Smethurst, bought out the saloon building of Mr. Smith, and started a second store. He commenced about 1865, and continued till 1870, when he moved his stock to Postville, Iowa, where he remained in business several years, and then returned to Seneca, and died at the house of his son John. Daniel Smethurst, when he discontinued business at Seneca, sold his building and four lots to E. & T. Garvey who still own the property, which is now (1884) occupied as a residence, by Thomas Garvey. In 1861 E. & T. Garvey erected a new store, on the site of Marston's blacksmith shop, and established a general merchandizing house, in the fall of that year, which business they are still (1884) engaged in. They have always done an excellent business. Their first building was 22x50 feet, two stories high. In 1875 they sold $40,000 worth of goods. In 1872 their sales reached as high as $67,000.

Daniel Smethurst kept the first drug store in the village. He sold out to William and James Smethurst, who connected this with their other business.

The postoffice was established in 1858. The first postmaster was S. P. Langdon who was succeeded by Daniel L. Smethurst; after this came William Smethurst, who was succeeded by A. B. Withee, who served from Jan 1, 1871, to Sept. 1, 1881, a period of nearly eleven years. He was succeeded by Daniel Smethurst.

HOTELS.

As has been stated, William Philamalee kept travelers as early as 1851, and his successor also kept sort of an inn and served the public as best he could in those early days, when travelers were only too glad to eat such as was placed before them, "asking no questions for conscience sake."

Soon after the laying out of the village, Mr. Langdon put up a tavern on the site of the Kane Hotel, which is still a part of that house. Mr. Langdon ran this house a number of years, and finally sold to D. R. Lawrence, who sold to a party who did not occupy the house, but who soon after disposed of the property to Nelson Danlap, who was succeeded by Lawrence Bird, who added to the building and kept the house for some time, and then sold to Cornelius Kane, who has re-built it, and it is now known as Kane's House.

J. D. Bigelow opened a hotel in 1868, in a house erected by L. P. Marston, which he operated a year or so and sold to K. Haynes, who ran it about the same length of time and then sold to Wilson, a non-resident of the town; he rented the hotel to Alden, who kept it for about a year, when it was sold to James S. Burton, who used it as a private residence. In 1874 Mr. Bigelow built another hotel, which he opened July 1, that year, and operated the same till 1883, when he leased it to G. E. Peck.

In December, 1883, the business of the village was represented as follows: E. & T. Garvey, general merchants; Smethurst & Son, general merchants; Cornelius Kane, hotel; G. E. Peck, Bigelow Hotel; Matthew Brady, wagon-maker; Barnard Degnon, wagon-maker; Wilfred Marston, blacksmith.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The enterprise of the people of both the town and village of Seneca, is well illustrated by the number and character of their public buildings. These consist of the school house, Good Templars' Hall and Church, and a town hall. The school house was erected in 1881, at a cost of $1,000. It is a frame building, well finished both outside and interior.

Good Templars' Hall and Church was built by the liberality of the people thus connected. The land upon which this building stands was purchased and conveyed by Willis Briggs, in trust, to James Smith, George Dean and Joseph Stewart, trustees of Seneca lodge, No. 473, of Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of Wisconsin. The special condition of the deed was, that a building should be erected thereon, within a specified time, similar to the one that was built; the same to be used for a Good Templars' hall, and also as a church, free to all denominations, without respect to creed or religious belief. In accordance with this plan the people responded. The date of the indenture was Jan. 29, 1881; the building was begun the same season, but not fully completed till the fall of 1883. It is a frame building, two stories high, 24x40 feet. It cost about $1,200. The first floor is used for church purposes, and the second floor for the Good Templars' hall.

While quite a number of persons were prominently identified with this movement, it is certainly due Mr. Daniel Smethurst to say, that the successful issue of the enterprise is due largely to him, who contributed largely in both time and money, and advanced means to carry on the work of construction.

The Town Hall was purchased by the town, upon the completion of the new school building. It was removed to its present location and then fitted up for town purposes, and affords a comfortable and convenient place for the purpose intended.

VILLAGE OF LYNXVILLE.

Several villages have been, from time to time commenced along the east bank of the Mississippi between De Soto and Prairie du Chien, but Lynxville is the only one which ever amounted to any consideration. The plat of this village is on the northwest quarter of section 23, town 9, range 6 west; together with lots 3 and 4, on section 14, of same town and range; the former is on land entered by George Messersmith, and the latter is a part of government purchase, by John and James Haney. The site of the village passed from the hands of the first owners into the possession of Reuben Mink, Elmer Graham and James Boyles; these men, together with Hiram and Lyman McCumber, who soon became partners in the enterprise, laid out the village. The survey was made by Pizarro Cook, the same being completed April 10, 1857. Another village was begun about the same time by other parties, north of and nearly adjoining this plat. The former, for the sake of distinction, was called Lower Lynxville, and the latter known as Upper Lynxville; this term however, has long since been dropped, as the upper village has been absorbed by its rival.

Where the village is situated was formerly known as a steamboat landing; also Haney's Point, from John and James Haney, early settlers here. It received the name Lynxville, from the government surveyors, who were landed at this point from the steamboat Lynx, and when the village was laid out, the name was applied to that also.

The east channel of the river, at this point, makes a bend into the land, forming what is styled the "Devil's Elbow." On account of this elbow bend in the Mississippi, and the depth of water at this point, an excellent boat landing is afforded.

The first building or what afterward became the plat of Lynxville, was erected by Elmer Graham, in 1855, two years prior to the survey. He opened a general store, and continued in business for many years. He died in 1873.

J. D. Reynolds built the next house, which served as a store and warehouse; he continued in business till his death in November, 1861.

He came to Lynxville from the embryo village of Viola. He attempted to make a village site there, but upon failing to do so, cast his lot with the few pioneers of Lynxville. He was a man of good education, and an upright, honest citizen. His widow sold the property, which in 1883 was owned and occupied by John S. Kingsland, grain dealer. The next business was opened by Charles Lyman and George Sappington, who had a general store and warehouse; they sold out in 1862 and left the county. They were succeeded by L. D. Hopkins, who died in 1881. In 1883 the building was used by S. C. Prince, steamboat agent.

In 1862 Jewell, Case & Co., erected what is known as the upper warehouse. Here they conducted quite a large general merchandising business, and were succeeded in 1865 by John S. Kingsland and Lemuel Allen. Nicholas Morgan also kept a stock of goods in the upper warehouse in 1868 and 1869. Edward and Thomas Garvey, afterward of the village of Seneca, occupied this building with a stock of goods for a time. In 1883 this building was owned by Peter Young, who purchased it from J. H. Jewell.

John Davidson and John Irwin kept a stock of goods in what is now Kingsland's warehouse about 1866; they failed and left the county. Simeon Benson opened a grocery store and saloon in the fall of 1874; he finally sold out and went to Oregon. Thomas Bright engaged in business in the upper warehouse in 1875; he was later of the firm of Bright & Vanderbelt. Mr. Davidson was the first lumber dealer of the village. He afterward engaged in mercantile business under the firm name of Davidson & Irwin.

Ball & Huard were the principal lumber dealers for many years and were succeeded by C. L. Lyttle & Co.

J. L. Reynolds bought the first grain in the place.

Lyman McCumber was the first blacksmith, and Nathan Canfield the first shoemaker.

The first to entertain travelers at Lynxville was Elmer Graham. Nelson Wade also kept an inn for a time. Nicholas Morgan came next in the hotel line. He was succeeded by Charles Lyman, who erected a building on purpose for a hotel. The landlord of 1883 was Samuel Armstrong, who had been in the business since 1865. He kept a good house, both he and his excellent wife being well calculated to please the traveling public, who always find good entertainment at this house.

The postoffice was established June 21, 1858, and called Lower Lynxville. Charles Lyman was appointed the first postmaster. He was succeeded by J. D. Reynolds, Dec. 31, 1859. He was postmaster till his death, Nov. 3, 1861.

Elmer Graham came next and was finally followed by Mr. Reynolds, who served only a short time and was succeeded by L. D. Hopkins in April, 1862.

Mr. Hopkins kept the office for about ten years and then gave way to S. P. Langdon.

Then came Joseph U. Searle, during whose term of office the clerical work was transacted by N. A. Searle.

L. D. Hopkins was next commissioned Dec. 10, 1880.

The present postmaster, A. Nicetus Searle, received his commission July 14, 1883. The name of the office was at this time changed from Lower Lynxville to its present title, Lynxville.

Lynxville has always been a good trading point, and has long been known as one of the best wood landings along the river, and has had an extensive trade since 1850. Its good landing, with an abundant supply of fuel on the islands hard by, and along ridges and ravines of the main land near the river, has always been a great source of revenue and given employment to many of the settlers. A. Russell, who was in the wood trade in 1883, sold over 2,000 cords of wood during the boating season to steamers plying the Mississippi river.

The business of this village in December, 1883, was as follows :

Bright & Vanderbilt, general merchants and dealers in wood.

Searle & Vanderbilt, general merchants and druggists.

John S. Kingsland, dealer in grain, lime, salt, cement and land plaster.

Lyttle & Co., dealers in lumber and grain.

S. C. Prince, steamboat agent.

Samuel Armstrong, hotel.

VILLAGES THAT WERE.

Two villages, Viola and Crawford City, had a brief existence in this town. The former was located on the Mississippi river, about three miles below Lynxville. It was begun by J. D. Reynolds, in the fall of 1856, when he erected a store building.

In the summer of 1858, a man named Dickens, from Philadelphia, put up a three-story building, which he occupied as a residence and a store building. He put in a stock of hardware and groceries, and soon after opening, the building and stock were destroyed by fire. The fire extended to Reynolds' store, which was also consumed. Dickson left the country, but Reynolds rebuilt and remained till 1859, when he removed to Lynxville. J. C. Cole erected a dwelling house in the summer of 1858. He was a carpenter by trade, and taught school; he was also town school superintendent. After Reynolds had removed to Lynxville, Wilkinson occupied his building for a short time, in which he kept a store, but not long after removed to Prairie du Chien, and all efforts to make a town of Viola were abandoned.

In 1858 George J. Millet and Fenner Foster erected a steam saw-mill a short distance below Lynxville. A few other small buildings were put up, and the place was called Crawford City. The mill was operated two years and removed, and with it the embryo city pronounced a failure.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

The following named citizens are excellent representatives of the character and enterprise of the population of this town. They are given in the order (as near as could be ascertained) in which they made a settlement. It will be noticed that the greater portion came in between the years 1854 and 1858 :

Mitchel Caya, who resides on section 13, town 9, range 6 west, was the first permanent settler of the town of Seneca. He came here first in the spring of 1846, but did not make his entry till two years later. Mr. Caya located on eighty acres, but gradually increased the size of his farm to its present large dimensions, now comprising about 500 acres. Mr. Caya is still an older resident of the county than of this town, having come to Prairie du Chien in 1840. He was born in Canada, about 1822, of French parentage. He came from Canada to Prairie du Chien when he was in his eighteenth year. He came to Wisconsin at the solicitation of his brother, who had preceded him to Prairie du Chien two years. Mr. Caya married Rose Loyea, a native of Prairie du Chien. Her father was a native of Canada, but of French parentage, and was among the early settlers of Prairie du Chien. Mrs. Caya died June 15, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Caya had eleven children, eight sons and three daughters, ten of whom are living—Maggie, Charlie, Louis, Leander, Morris, Mitchel, Frank, John, Albert and Julia. Virginia is deceased.

Louis La Force came to this town with Mr. Caya, with whom he lived nine years, being a single man at that time. He afterwards married at Prairie du Chien, where his wife died. He then married Harriet St. German. Mr. La Force lives one mile north of Mr. Caya, where he has resided for many years. He has one child by his first marriage—Emma, and three children by his second marriage—Louis, Julia and Laura.

Louis Caya, of Lynxville, is the son of Mitchel Caya, the first settler of the town of Seneca. He was born at Prairie du Chien, in March, 1846, being about two weeks old when his parents removed to the present town of Seneca. He has been in business at Lynxville a number of years, and owns the store building occupied by T. C. Bright &

Co., which he erected in 1868, at a cost of about $600. This building is on the site of the store once owned and occupied by Benson, one of the early business men of the town. Mr. Caya has lived in the village since 1871.

Pizarro Cook resides on section 2, town 9, range 5 west. His residence in Crawford county dates from Nov. 24, 1854. Mr. Cook was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1826. In the summer of 1848, he went to Grant Co., Wis., and worked the following winter in the lead mines of that region, but returned to New York the following season, where he lived till the year of his settlement in Crawford county. ## CHAPTER XXXVI.

TOWN OF UTICA.

That part of Crawford county known as the town of Utica, is the center of three towns, forming the northern tier of towns in the county. It is bounded on the north by Vernon county; on the east, by the town of Clayton; on the south, by the towns of Haney and Seneca; and on the west, by the towns of Freeman and Seneca. Its territory is made up from congressional townships 10 and 11, of ranges 4 and 5 west; it contains about fifty-seven sections of land. The town is nine miles from north to south, and in the widest place, east and west, about seven miles. The Kickapoo river forms the eastern boundary of the town from a point on section 10, town 10, range 4, to section 33, on the south line. Fully three-fourths of the surface of Utica when cleared, will be tillable land and the remainder is well suited to grazing purposes. The southwest part of the town, near Mt. Sterling, consists of a rich black loam, which produces fine corn and wheat. The balance of the town, except along the streams, where rich sandy loam is found, consists of a clay soil, best adapted to wheat. It can truthfully be stated that for fertility the soil in Utica is not excelled in any part of the county. The Kickapoo river, which forms a part of the eastern boundary of the town, running between the towns of Clayton and Utica, is the main stream of this locality.

Tainter's creek, is the principal stream flowing through this town. It is so called from Ezekiel Tainter, one of the early settlers of the town. This stream flows into the Kickapoo river, from the southeast quarter of section 9, town 10, range 4 west. It has its source in the town of Franklin, in Vernon county, and enters the town of Utica, on section 19, and flows in a southeasterly direction to the Kickapoo. It has several branches, the principal of which are Roger's creek and Peterson's branch. The former unites with Tainter's creek, on section 29, town 11, range 4 west, and the latter uniting on section 32, town 11, range 4 west. Laraby's branch enters from the west, at a point on section 32, and Well's branch, which is quite an important stream, flows several miles before entering Tainter's creek, which it does on the west part of section 4.

Collin's creek is a small stream which enters the Kickapoo river from section 21, town 10, range 4 west.

Sugar creek takes its rise on section 34, and flows west it into the Mississippi river.

Copper creek, another small stream, rises on section 26, town 10, range 5 west, and leaves the town from section 22.

In addition to these never failing creeks, there are several very valuable springs in various parts of the town, especially in the southern portion; these give rise to little creeks which flow south into Hall's branch, in the town of Haney.

This town was never heavily timbered, but consisted principally of oak openings. A thicker growth of the different kinds of timber, has been made in many places in the town since its settlement.

SETTLEMENT.

To William T. Sterling belongs the honor of effecting the first settlement in the town of Utica. He settled on forty acres, which includes the site of the residence of William McAuley, and is described as the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25, town 10, range 5 west. The date of his coming was May 10, 1842. In July, the same year, he settled with his family on the land just described, he having erected a log house in the mean time. No other settlement had been made at that time within a radius of sixteen miles, his nearest neighbor being Aaron Hazen, who had settled in the town of Eastman.

William T. Sterling was born in Woodford Co., Ky., Jan. 29, 1808. His father, Harvey Sterling, was a native of Hagerstown, Md.; he was of English extraction. His mother was born in Holland; her father, Jacob Harper, on coming to this country, settled at what was afterward called Harper's Ferry, in Virginia. He removed to Kentucky in 1791. William T. Sterling's mother, Elizabeth Harper, was one of the three girls who volunteered to run the gauntlet to get water, during the siege, in the face of 600 Indians and 400 French, in the French and Indian War, near the "Dark and Bloody Ground." The subject of this sketch was reared in Kentucky, and when nineteen years of age (in 1827), he, in company with a party of thirteen, including Gov. Dodge, went to the mining regions of Galena, Ill., where Mr. Sterling remained till 1838. During that year he was elected to a clerkship in the Legislature known as the Burlington session. The same year he was appointed superintendent of public property and also librarian. In 1849 he was elected to the Legislature from Crawford and Chippewa counties and re-elected from the same counties. He became a resident of the town of Utica, Crawford county, in 1842. At the time he lived at Madison there were but two families living there—the Bird and Peck families. In 1840 Mr. Sterling took the census of Dane county, and he found there were but 315 persons within the county. He was married to Eliza Messersmith, who was born in Ohio in 1820, and moved to Iowa Co., Wis., in 1827. She died Nov. 15, 1880, the mother of eleven children—George H., Josephine, Napoleon B., Emmet, Francis, Clay, Emma, Laura, John Rusk, Alice and Frank. The two latter are deceased. In 1884 Mr. Sterling, who was then seventy-six years old, still retained his memory of the past to a remarkable degree. But few men living in Wisconsin date their coming so early as he. He has been a close observer of passing events throughout his long life; and few men, either from observation or reading, possess a more complete knowledge of the history of the State of Wisconsin than does William T. Sterling.

Ezekiel Tainter was the next pioneer to penetrate the wilds of this town, and here make for himself a home. He made a claim on section 5, in town 10, of range 4 west, in the spring of 1847. During the summer of 1847, settlements were made by James B. Gay and John Mitchell, on section 9, town 10, range 4 west. Ezekiel Tainter was a native of Vermont. He went to Prairie du Chien in 1838, where he kept a public house, and also furnished the garrison with its meat for a time. He lived in this town about a dozen years, and then removed to Menomonee, and there spent the remainder of his days with his son Andrew. Mr. Tainter was a man of great energy, and somewhat eccentric in his manner. He was a Methodist, and one of the most zealous workers of that sect; he was extremely pious and devotional, and withal was a man who left an impression on the history of his town that will long survive.

In 1848 Sylvester Bacon and John Collins located on section 20, town 10, range 4 west, near where Gay's mill afterward stood.

Later, the same year, a young man named McBee, made a claim a mile and half north of the Tainter claim, but only remained a few weeks. Of the pioneers above mentioned, Mr. Sterling and Mr. Collins alone remained in 1883, as the only representatives of the early settlers.

Among others who came in during 1849 was William Clark, brother-in-law of John Collins. He came from Indiana, leaving his family there till three or four years later. He entered no land, but passed the winter in the pine regions above, and summers was engaged in cutting cord wood and other kinds of manual labor. He was a man of coarse organization, and subject to intoxication. He died about 1867.

Truman H. Wilder was one of the pioneers of the town of Utica. He was born in New York, in 1814. He removed to Ohio when a boy, with his parents, and thence to Illinois, when a young man. In 1848 he came to Vernon Co., Wis., with his family. He lived one year at Liberty Pole. The next year (1849), he came to Crawford county, and entered forty acres of land on section 22, town 11, range 5 west, on which he located with his family. This farm he afterwards increased to 100 acres. He was a carpenter by trade; for twenty-five years justice of the peace of this town, and notary public twenty years. He died Oct. 11, 1870. His widow, Nancy (Carver) Wilder still owns and occupies the homestead. She was born in Knox Co., Ohio, in 1821. She has had eleven children, eight of whom were living in 1883.

During the years 1850, 1851, 1852 and 1853, but few came in for settlement. But in 1854 the tide of emigration set in and the town was rapidly settled up.

Joseph P. Tower and John Woodburn came in the fall of 1853, and settled near the present site of Towerville.

In 1854 came J. H. Tower, Sr., and his two sons, Thomas W. and J. H. Tower, Jr., together with their families. The Tower family, were all well known and influential citizens, of whom all but one had left the town prior to 1882.

John S. Rogers lives on section 25, where he settled in 1854, on eighty acres of government land. He also took up a homestead which he still owns. He is a native of Pennsylvania, but came here from Dane Co., Wis. His father also came here in 1854 and located the place afterward owned by Peter N. Peterson, where he died in 1865.

D. S. Clement settled on section 25, town 10, range 5 west, in 1865. He came to this county in 1855, entering land in the town of Freeman in 1856 and remained there till his removal to the town of Utica.

David M. Twining lives on section 28, town 10, range 4 west. He came to this town in 1854, and the following year, entered land on section 15, town 10, range 4 west, which he still owns. He is a native of Broome Co., N. Y., and is a gunsmith by trade. He served about three years in the War of the Rebellion, in the 31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Other settlers of 1854, were Edwin Thompson, Henry E. Bennett and Cyrus Bennett.

The earliest Norwegian settler of the town of Utica, was Nels Peterson, who in the spring of 1855, located on section 22, town 11, of range 4 west. A little later in the season of the same year in which Mr. Peterson settled (1855), Andrew Oleson settled on section 27, town 11, range 4 west.

H. Nephome settled that year, also, on section 34, same town and range. Mr. Nephome was born in Norway, in 1816, came to Dane county, this State, in 1854. Mr. and Mrs. Nephome have seven children—Eric, Peter, Christopher, Ann, Herman, Bertie and Maria. The three oldest were born in Norway.

The first of the Irish settlement, in the town of Utica, was made by Michael Dolan, came to Rising Sun, April 19, 1855.

John Burns dates his settlement from 1854, also. He came from Vernon county too. His brother Andrew, came at the same time, but subsequently moved to Liberty Pole.

James Wheelock came about that date, from Milwaukee, and still resides where he first settled.

Henry C. Newcomb of Mt. Sterling, is the son of P. S. Newcomb, who came to Crawford county in October, 1856. He was born in Wyoming Co., N. Y., in 1812. He came to this county, from Waukesha, this State, and purchased of Eliza Sterling the forty acres on which the village of Mt. Sterling now stands. He moved from this county to Kansas, where he died. Henry C., was born in Wyoming Co. N. Y., in 1838, and came west with his father; served three years in the army, during the Civil War, as a member of the 31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He married Susan Moon, a daughter of King Moon, who came to this county in 1858. Mr. Newcomb is a dealer in furs, and also a manufacturer of gloves and mittens.

EARLY EVENTS.

The first couple married in the town of Utica were John Mitchell and Maria Flick. The exact date of their marriage is unknown. Another early marriage was that of John Collins, who married Rebecca Clock. The next couple married were Margin Mitchell and Sarah Tainter. These weddings all occurred before 1850.

The first birth was that of Napoleon B., son of William T. and Eliza Sterling, born April 16, 1843.

The first death was that of Louisa Sterling, daughter of William T. and Eliza Sterling, who died Sept. 15, 1844. She was buried on section 24, town 10, range 5.

ORGANIZATION.

The first election held in the town of Utica, after the town had received its present boundaries, was held at the house of William McAuley, April 3, 1855. The following officers were elected:

John H. Tower, chairman; Abel Copper, William McAuley, supervisors; Joseph B. Tower, clerk; J. H. Brightman, collector and treasurer; Cyrus Peck, superintendent of schools; Clayton Rogers, John E. Howell, T. H. Wilder, T. Y. Skinner, justices of the peace; A. B. Spencer, John S. Rogers, Wilmot Marsden, constables; John Woodburn, assessor; J. D. Gay, sealer of weights and measures.

Officers of 1883: Peter N. Peterson, chairman; Ole H. Helgerson, N. A. Tallman, supervisors; George W. Davis, clerk; George B. Mitchell, treasurer; Samson Turner, assessor; L. D. Layton, J. A. Curran, A. Sears, C. R. Rounds, justices of the peace.

SCHOOLS.

The first school in the town was taught by Abigail Crillis, in a slab shed, on section 14, town 10, range 5 west, in the summer of 1856.

The next school was taught by Elizabeth McAuley, daughter of William McAuley, at her father's house; this was taught the summer succeeding the one held in the slab shed. Some claim it was in 1856, others are of the opinion that it was a year later.

In 1883 the town comprised the following school districts: Seven full districts and five joint districts.

In district No. 1 the school house is situated on section 29. The number of pupils on enrollment list, ninety-one.

District No. 3, at this date, had a scholarship of twenty-six. The district is provided with a good frame building on section 9, town 10, range 4 west.

District No. 4 is provided with a school house situated on section 2, town 10, range 5 west. Number of pupils, eighty-six.

District No. 5 includes the village of Mt. Sterling. The school house is on section 26. Number of pupils, seventy-nine.

District No. 6 has an average attendance of forty-seven. The school house in this district is located on section 1, town 10, range 5 west.

In district No. 7 the school house stands on section 11, town 10, range 5 west. Number of pupils, fifty-four.

District No. 14 is located on section 22, town 11, range 4 west. The number of pupils in this district is fifty-eight.

Joint district No. 5 is provided with a house in the town of Freeman. The number of pupils from the town of Utica is twenty-three.

Joint district No. 11 is made up of territory from Clayton and Utica. Number of pupils from the latter named town, thirty-six.

Joint district No. 13 is supplied with a poor school house on section 22, town 11, range 4 west. There are forty-seven pupils belonging to this district from the town of Utica.

Joint district No. 14, comprising parts of Freeman and Utica, has its school building in the town of Freeman. Number of pupils from Utica, one.

Joint district No. 15 is a part of the towns of Seneca and Utica. Its building is located in the former named. Number of pupils from Utica, twenty-four.

RELIGIOUS.

Besides the numerous Church organizations mentioned in connection with the village histories of the town of Utica, there are two outside of the villages—the Norwegian Lutheran Church and the Roman Catholic Church. The first Norwegian religious services in this town were held at the residences of the early settlers in 1857. The first were conducted by Rev. H. A. Stubb, pastor of Coon Prairie Church, Vernon county. The first church building erected by this denomination was a log structure, built on section 22, town 11, range 4 west, in 1859. This building was used for church purposes until the present church in the town of Franklin, Vernon Co., was built, where the congregation then attended. In 1871 the number of families belonging to the Lutheran Church having so increased, that an additional church building was required, and the distance to the church in the town of Franklin being too great for many families, it was arranged to hold religious service in the Congregational church at Mt Sterling. In 1875 the present church building was erected. It is located on section 11, town 10, range 5 west. The congregation attending this church is a large one, comprising most of the families in this town and those from other towns who find it more convenient to attend here. The cost of the church building was about $4,000.

The first Roman Catholic services in the town of Utica were conducted by the Rev. L. Galthier, of Prairie du Chien, at the house of Patrick Finnigan, on section 22, town 11, range 5 west, in April, 1855. Between thirty and forty families comprise the congregation. Rev. Galthier held services occasionally for a number of years. A German priest whose name is not remembered, also came occasionally. Another priest, Father Seife, held services a few times. In the spring of 1857, a log church was erected, and the first pastor mentioned was the first to conduct services in this church. He was an earnest, energetic priest, and was well known throughout this section of country. The first pastor who was settled over the people here was the Rev. O'Connor, who was pastor for about four years. He was followed by Rev. Patrick Murphy, who remained two or three years. Father Montagne, who came about 1879, was pastor during the building of the present church edifice, which was built the following year. This is a frame building on section 22, town 10, range 5 west. Cost, about $25,000. Then came Rev. Michael Heiss who was succeeded by the Rev. Constantine De Druste.

The next priest was Father B. DeGoey. Then came Father Collins from Seneca, who held services about six months, followed by Rev. John Collins. Then came Rev. J. J. Burns and Rev. J. B. A. Conroy, who was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Gabriel Momo.

CEMETERIES.

There are three burying grounds in the town of Utica. One of these is situated on section 25, on the farm of William McAuley. Another is located at Towerville, and the third, on sections 35 and 36, town 10, range 5 west, on the farms of Messrs. Stearns and Willet. The land constituting the first mentioned was deeded by Mr. McAuley to the school district in which he lived. The first burials there were a child of Mr. McAuley's named Allen Hess, and a German whose name is unknown, who was looking up a location; he was taken sick at the house of Mr. McAuley and there died. These interments both occurred in 1856.

The cemetery at Towerville was first used by the Tower family and afterward used by the public in general. The first burials here date to about the same time as those in the cemetery just mentioned. These two cemeteries in 1884 were being used but little, except by those who already had friends buried there.

The principal burying place of the town was first used in 1870. This ground was deeded by Messrs. Stearns and Willet, to the Utica and Seneca Cemetery Association. The first burials within these grounds were removals from the cemetery on section 25. In addition to these places of burial, there were Church cemeteries in connection with both the Catholic and Lutheran Churches; also several private burial places.

VILLAGE OF MT. STERLING.

This village takes its name from the mound so called in honor of the first settler, Mr. Sterling. This mound is situated just east of and adjacent to the place, which is located on section 26, town 10, range 5 west. The land upon which the village is platted, was entered by William T. Sterling, in the name of his wife, Eliza Sterling, in 1855. The land was sold by its original owner to Truman Folsom, in 1856; it was again transferred to P. S. Newcomb, and from him to Cyrus Bennett, by whom the village was laid out in 1858. The only building on the land contained in the plat, at the time it was laid out, was a shanty owned and occupied by Mr. Newcomb and his family. Mr. Folsom, already mentioned, erected the first building in which he lived, and also kept a small stock of goods, and consequently must be given a place as the first merchant of the place.

A man named Swift was the earliest blacksmith of the village.

In the autumn of 1868, A. E. Mills erected a wagon and blacksmith shop. He employed George Shop and A. B. Williams as wagon makers.

The first shoemaker was A. C. B. Vaughan, who was postmaster of the place in 1883.

The postoffice at Mt. Sterling was established in 1851. William T. Sterling was appointed first postmaster. He was succeeded by the following in their proper order: C. C. Bennett, Truman Folsom, James H. Jewell, Dr. Frederick Corfe, Aaron Cook and A. C. B. Vaughan, who received his appointment in 1879, and is still (1884) in office.

CHURCHES.

There were three Church organizations within the village in 1884—Methodist Episcopal, Congregational and Universalist. The first two mentioned have buildings and maintain regular services.

The first services of the Congregational Church held at Mt. Sterling were conducted by the Rev. John Sherwin in 1863. Mr. Sherwin was at that time State agent of the Congregational Church in Wisconsin. He at that time organized a society, which was called the First Congregational Church at Mt. Sterling.

Those who united with the society at that time were: Mrs. Mary Radcliffe, Joel Robb, his wife, Mrs. Jane Robb, John M. Gay, Mrs. Sarah Gay, Priscilla Gay, Isaac Rounds, Mrs. Lucy A. Rounds, Thomas Allen and his wife, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Lydia Sherwood.

First officers were: John M. Gay and Joel Bobb, deacons; John M. Gay, clerk.

The first pastor was the Rev. L. D. Radcliffe. He preached for the society about three years. He was a man well liked and of fair ability. He is now living in Pennsylvania. He was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Peter Valentine.

The church edifice was erected in 1863. It is a frame building, and cost about $2,000. Since its completion, $400 have been expended in improvements. The society at present is not a large one, many members having died and others removed. Marcus Nickerson is the present deacon, the pastor officiating as clerk. Present members, fifteen.

Rev. Peter Valentine has been pastor of the Church since Nov. 1, 1868. He is a native of Lancashire, England, where he was born in 1810. He began preaching when twenty-seven years of age as an Independent Methodist preacher, which he continued till 1842, when he came to the United States. Preached in Pennsylvania several years before coming to this State. Was ordained as a Congregational minister in 1864, in the town of Wheatland, Vernon county, by the Rev. John Sherwin. His wife, Alice Pollit, was also a native of England. They have two children, a son and a daughter.

Probably the first Methodist service held in the town of Utica, was conducted by the Rev. C. A. Wirech, in 1854, at the house of Ezekiel Tainter, but whether there was a class formed in the town as early as that date, is not certain, though it is highly probable that such was the case, as there were several Methodist families living in the town at that time.

The circuit which included this town at the time, consisted of a large area of territory, and services were held infrequently for a number of years. The second preacher on the circuit was the Rev. John Knibbs, in 1856.

The following is furnished by Rev. John Knibbs :

"I was sent in September, 1856, to the mission which included the town of Utica; I found the country new and rough, and the people few and far between. I can hardly remember where I preached first, but I think it was at the double log tavern of William McAuley, who I believe still resides at Mt. Sterling. If I remember aright, my first class was formed at Bro. Ezekiel Tainter's, or "Uncle Zeke," as he was generally known; whether a class was then formerly organized or whether, like Topsy, it "grew" I cannot now remember. We had several good Methodist members in that region, who came principally from Ohio.

"Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur, Mr. and Mrs. Tallman, Mr. Roger's family, and two brothers named Peck. There were several others whose names I do not remember. The minister appointed by the conference to succeed me, was brother T. C. Clendenning, now of Rock River Conference, but I have long since lost sight of our Church in that region of the county.

"You ask for some account of my experience while traveling the circuit in the stormy winter of 1856-7. Well, it was a very chilling experience to say the least. I began my mission work in September, and had traversed the county quite thoroughly before winter set in. I had ten preaching places, besides several classes to visit. On the 22d of December, 1856, I started from Prairie du Chien, and preached at Bridgeport in the afternoon of that day. In the evening I went to Stukeville. During the night a hard snow storm came on and I was shut in with no entertainment for myself or horse. So in the morning I started for the house of J. F. Haskins, in Haney valley, but the storm increased and a crust an inch thick formed on the snow. My horse's legs were cut and bleeding and he refused to go further, so I left him and undertook to find a house on foot; but the intense cold and darkness confused me and I wandered about during five days and four nights, at the end of which time I was nearly exhausted. On the fifth day I found Eagle Points saw-mill, Mr. Ralph Smith, proprietor. There I was received and most kindly cared for. On the eighth day, mortification having begun, my left foot was amputated, and I was taken the same day to Prairie du Chien and kindly cared for by Mr. Alonzo Pelton, Drs. Benedict and Mason, and many others. Dr. Benedict afterward said that if my system had contained a particle of alcohol, I would not have survived the first night of my exposure. Many at that time lost their lives who were exposed but one night to the intense cold. This part of my experience I have ever cherished as a valuable temperance lesson."

The Rev. T. C. Clendenning, who succeeded Rev. John Knibbs, was assisted on the circuit by the Rev. Isaac E. Springer.

The church building at Mt. Sterling, a frame structure, was the first Methodist church in the town. As late as 1867 Mount Sterling was in Batavia circuit. In 1868 it belonged to Seneca and Brookville circuit. There is no record of this church to be found extending back further than 1870, at which time the Rev. McKay was the pastor, who removed in 1872, and was succeeded by Rev. O. Burnett, who removed in 1874; then came Rev. Thomas Crouch, who removed in 1875 and was succeeded by Rev. Robert Smith, who remained two years. E. F. Bunce was appointed in 1877 but did not accept the appointment, when L. L. Wooley was appointed as supply, and Isaac C. F. Nuzem, preacher in charge, who remained till 1878 and was succeeded by William McMillan who remained one year. Rev. John Avery was appointed in 1880 and served two years. Rev. Edward McGinley was appointed in 1882, and was succeeded by Rev. James Barnett, in 1883.

In February, 1881, Rev. I. Eberhart delivered a course of lectures at Mt. Sterling on universalism. Services were held here occasionally thereafter, but no organization was effected till the spring of 1883, when a society was formed and the organization called the First Universalist Church of Mount Sterling. The society contains about thirty members.

The Rev. S. N. Cussett has preached for the society, and the Rev. A. Vedder is the present pastor.

SOCIETIES.

In 1883 there were two secret societies in the village—a Good Templars' Lodge, whose charter dates Feb. 27, 1878, and the Patrons of Husbandry, which was organized July 8, 1874.

BUSINESS HISTORY.

Truman Folsom sold the first goods in the village, and was soon succeeded by J. H. Jewell, who remained in business a number of years. He kept a general stock and built him up a fine trade from the surrounding country. Prior to 1865 the firm was known as Jewell & Case, and during that year they were succeeded by Cook & McAuley, who in turn were followed by Cook & Haggerty. In 1868 this firm was changed to J. A. Haggerty, and three years later, to Haggerty & Co. The next change was in 1880, when N. Grant became proprietor, and a year later the firm was styled N. Grant & Co. In 1882 the firm became J. Smethurst.

Brightman & Stearns commenced a general merchandising business in 1866, and closed out about three years later. This firm was succeeded in 1881 by Bennett & Haggerty, who were still in trade in 1884.

A drug business was first established at Mt. Sterling in 1860, by Dr. Fred. Corfe and E. Packard. During the Rebellion, these gentlemen both served in the Union army, and their business discontinued till the return of Dr. Corfe, when another drug house was opened under the firm name of Corfe & Sherwood; the firm later became Corfe & Packard, the latter being a brother of the first mentioned Packard. It was again Corfe & Sherwood; then Corfe alone, who was succeeded in 1881 by W. A. Sherwood, who is still (1884) in business.

The pioneer hotel of the village was kept by Lorenzo B. Layton, who began keeping what is known as the Sherwood House. He afterward built the Layton House, which he operated till his death, which occurred in 1883.

The business of the village in December, 1883, was represented as follows: Haggerty & Bennett, general merchants; Smethurst & Case, general merchants; A. E. Mills, blacksmith; A. E. Spencer, wagon-maker; A. Sears, hotel; Sherwood & Son, Sherwood House; A. C. B. Vaughan, postmaster; Mrs. C. G. Green, milliner; W. A. Sherwood, drugs; C. B. Porter, physician.

VILLAGE OF TOWERVILLE.

This little hamlet is situated on the north-east quarter of the northeast quarter of section

4. The original owners of the plat were J. H. Tower, Jr., and T. W. Tower. It was laid out by these gentlemen and their father, J. H. Tower, in July, 1854; the plat was surveyed by William McAuley. A grist mill and two dwelling houses were erected that year by the proprietors of the village. In 1855 a store building was erected by J. H. Tower, Jr., who started the first store in the place; a blacksmith and cooper shop were started the same year by G. J. Freeman. The grist mill was built on Tainter's creek, which flows hard by the village and furnishes a good supply of water for any ordinary mill power. This mill was owned and operated by J. H. Tower and his sons for about three years. It then passed into the hands of other parties, and finally became the property of Matthew Stunkard, now deceased. There lingers in and around this moss covered mill much of historic interest, as it was the first mill in Crawford county, outside of Prairie du Clieu.

A saw-mill was built in 1858 by J. P. Tower, about fifty rods below the grist mill. He owned and operated the mill till 1865, when it was abandoned. At this date, 1884, Mr. Tower lives in Dickinson, Co., Iowa.

A woolen factory was built by Edward Davis in 1859. The size of the factory was 30x50 feet, two stories in height. The machinery consisted of a custom carding machine, one broad and two narrow looms, and set of manufacturing cards. Mr. Davis operated this mill for two or three years, when it was burned. He began re-building soon after the fire, and before its completion he formed a partnership with Thomas W. Tower. The factory was finally completed; it contained a set of custom cards, set of manufacturing cards, and two jacks. The mill also had 480 spindles, two broad and three narrow looms. Mr. Davis sold his interest, before its completion, to George M. Wilber, and two years later Mr. Tower became sole proprietor, and for several years did a thriving business. He finally leased, or rather sold conditionally, to Clark Lawton; but the flames again consumed it in 1873. It was again re-built by David K. Lester. In 1883 it was owned and worked by George C. Davis, who did custom work, such as carding and manufacturing yarns.

A postoffice was established at Towerville in 1856. John H. Tower was the first postmaster commissioned. He was succeeded by his brother, Thomas W. Tower. Archibald Sears came next, and was succeeded in 1883 by Mrs. A. E. Helgerson.

For about twenty years Towerville was considered a place of much importance. Among the prominent men of the village in its palmy days were J. H. and T. W. Tower. The Tower family came here from Underhill, Vt., and were indeed men of much prominence in Crawford county at an early day. The father, J. H. Tower, died in 1856. In 1883 J. H., Jr., was a resident of the town of Freeman, and Thomas W. lived in Sumner, Bremer Co., Iowa, whither he removed in 1879. At the present date (1884) the business of the place is represented as follows:

JOHNSTOWN.

In 1860 a mill dam was built on Tainter's creek, on section 9, in town 10, range 4 west, and the frame for a saw-mill got out; but high water washed away the dam, and other losses were sustained, and the project thereby abandoned. The parties thus interested were: John Mitchell, D. R. Wilkinson, John E. Howell, J. P. Mitchell and William Restler. A store was opened by the company composed of these gentlemen; it was operated by William Restler for a time. Samuel Hutchins also run a store here for some time. This place took its name from John Mitchell, one of the above named company. But owing to the abandonment of the mill project, business was altogether discontinued.

About a half mile above, on the same stream—Tainter's creek—is the grist mill of George M. Wilbur, which was built by him in 1876. It is a frame structure 26x36 feet; has two run of stone, with an ample water power to drive all necessary machinery.

GAY'S MILL.

The first mill built in the town of Utica was a saw-mill; it was located on the Kickapoo river, on section 28, town 10, range 4 west. It was erected by James B. Gay about 1848. It was owned and operated by Mr. Gay till 1859; on the death of Mr. Gay in that year, it went into the possession of his legal heirs, and was run till about 1878, after which it was removed. This mill manufactured lumber from pine logs rafted down the Kickapoo river from the vast pine region above; and also cut into lumber the various kinds of hard timber found in the vicinity. This point on the Kickapoo river has long been an important one for milling purposes. The excellent water power found here attracted the attention of the pioneers, and it was promptly utilized by Mr. Gay, who was one of the earliest lumbermen of this county.

In 1865 the present flouring mill at this point was erected by J. M. Gay, a brother of James B. Gay, and George M. Wilbur. Mr. Wilbur owned a half interest in the mill for about two years, when he sold out to Mr. Only, a son-in-law of Mr. Gay. The mill building is a frame structure 30x40 feet, containing two run of stone, with six feet fall, and an abundant supply of water at all seasons of the year. In 1883 the building was raised from a story and a half in height to three stories. The mill is now owned and operated by Thomas W. Gay and S. H. and J. A. Robb.

This mill has always done an extensive business, and is noted for the excellence of its work. The present proprietors are energetic business men. The business of the mill is annually increasing. Improvements are in contemplation and will soon be made, which will enlarge the capacity of the mill, and give increased facilities for doing excellent work.

The term, "Gay's Mill," is used to designate quite a settlement at this point. Mr. J. Steffy has a store here, and keeps a general stock of goods. There are also several societies and a Church organization with headquarters at this place. There is an organization of the Congregational Church here dating from September, 1871. Rev. P. Valentine has officiated as pastor since its organization. The following are the names of those who united to form the society: N. A. Tallman and wife, C. R. Rounds and wife, T. W. Gay and wife, Mrs. F. G. Robb, Mrs. M. Hartwell, Mrs. S. E. Angier and Fannie D. Gay. The first officers were: C. R. Round, secretary; N. A. Tallman and T. W. Gay, deacons. The society at present consists of thirteen members.

Another organization is a Post of the G. A. R., known as O. D. Chapman Post, No. 80. It was organized April 25, 1883. The applicants for a charter were: N. A. Tallman, Edward Gray, George R. #### VILLAGE OF RISING SUN.

This village is situated on section 22 town 11, range 5 west. The original owner of the site was T. H. Wilder. The place was never platted, but lots were sold by Mr. Wilder beginning about 1867, when men named Sink and McCullough purchased lots, and erected thereon residences and a blacksmith shop. The village was named from the following incident: When Mr. Wilder first located there, it had been raining for two weeks, and the sun had not made its appearance during all that time; but the next day, the sun made its appearance, and from this the locality was named "Rising Sun." In 1868, a residence was built by John Demming, who used the basement as a saloon. Robert Herrick erected the first store, and sold therein the first goods. Herrick did an extensive business till 1871, when he failed, well off, as it is generally believed, and removed to St. Helena, Neb. Thomas Jerman was in business here about one year; he is now in the drug business at Veroqua.

Mrs. Tallman taught the three first terms of school in that place; the first term taught on subscription, getting $8 per month and boarding herself. She took her pay in anything that could be spared, even to sauerkraut or a grindstone. They were so anxious to have a school district organized, and their children at school, that Mrs. Tallman walked about half a mile with only a foot path through the snow, which was very deep and the weather severely cold, teaching in a vacated log house, with a fireplace of "ye olden time," where the face would be scorched and the back frozen at the same time.

In October, 1856, the first religious service held in the place was conducted by the Rev. John Knibbs, who held regular appointments once in four weeks, at Mr. Tallman's house, the latter and his wife being the only professors of religion in the Gay's Mill valley. On one occasion, Rev. On Aug. 13 1862, he enlisted in the 31st regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war. He was in active service during the entire term of his enlistment, being in all the battles and campaigns in which his regiment participated, his health being greatly impaired by this rough service. Mrs. Tallman lost two brothers in the war—J. D. and Stephen K. Hartwell (the latter dying in a Confederate prison), and the nephew they had taken to live with them, at the age of seventeen, gave his life for his country, having resided with them eleven years. He was buried at Cape Girardeau, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. Tallman having no children of their own, have adopted a daughter—Clara S., and opened their doors for six homeless ones. In 1860 Mrs. Tallman's mother, Clarissa Hartwell, came to live with them, remaining until

He came from there to Mt. Sterling in 1868. Mr. Mills was married to Augusta Gregory, a native of Michigan. Her father, H. S. He passed the following winter on Root river, in southern Minnesota; came to Prairie du Chien in February, 1851, and worked for William Mahan. His first location was on government land, on the line of Crawford and Vernon counties, where he resided two years. Mr. Turner was married in 1860, and lived in Vernon county eight years; served in the War of the rebellion; was mustered out June 12, 1866; moved to the town of Utica April 1, 1868, locating on section 20, town 11, range 4. ## CHAPTER XXVII.

TOWN OF WAUZKA.

The town of Wauzeka, so-called from an Indian chief, is situated on the south line of the county, on the north bank of the Wisconsin river. It is bounded by the towns of Eastman and Marietta on the north; by the town of Marietta and the Wisconsin river on the east; by the Wisconsin river on the south, and the towns of Prairie du Chien and Bridgeport on the west. This town is composed of parts of five congressional townships, all of township 7, range 4, west, north of the Wisconsin river, except section 1; all of township 7, range 5 west, north of the Wisconsin river, and fractional parts of sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, of township 6, range 5; also section 36, township 8, range 5, and section 31 of the same township in range 4 west.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad passes through the town following the course of the Wisconsin river. A station called Wauzeka is situated on sections 8 and 17, in towns 7, of range 4 west, and on north bank of the Kickapoo river about half a mile from the junction with the Wisconsin river.

The general surface of the town is very broken being a series of ridges and intervening valleys, which lead to the Kickapoo and Wisconsin rivers. The soil is a heavy clay on the ridges with more of a loam mixture in the valleys.

About three-fourths of the town was formerly heavily timbered by the various varieties of oak, maple, hickory, elm, walnut, with much basswood and ash. The greater part of the more valuable timber had been consumed previous to 1880, although in places there may still be found many of the original forest trees. The best timber to be found as this date was that of a second growth.

The Kickapoo river flows in a very crooked channel through the eastern part of the town, and along its banks grows a fine quality of sugar maple.

The Grand Gris (Grand Gray) is the next stream of importance. This flows through the southwest part of the town, and in an early day, was noted for the abundance of speckled trout which it contained. The little Kickapoo river enters the northwest corner of the town, and flows southeast, emptying into a slough of the Wisconsin river, on section 23, town 7, range 4 west. Plum creek enters section 36, in town 8 of range 5 west, flows through that section and enters the Kickapoo river on the same section.

SETTLEMENT.

From the most reliable information to be obtained, Jackson Foster was the first settler of what is now embraced in the town of Wauzeka. He came from Ohio in 1839 and settled on Grand Gris creek, and lived there several years. Both he and his wife died on the place they first settled on.

Henry Stuckey was the next to settle in the town. He came to Prairie du Chien sometime during 1838 and not long after made a claim, the greater part of which is on section 13, town 7, range 5 west. He was a single man at that time, but he began the improvement of his land, soon after erecting a log house in which he kept "bachelor's hall." In 1841 he married, and remained on the place till his death.

George Sehlund settled on section 15, town 7, range 5 west, soon after Mr. Stuckey came, probably in 1839.

About 1840, Maj. William Wright, who was a major in the Black Hawk war, settled in the town with Judge Lockwood, and established Wright's Ferry, on the Wisconsin river. A number of years later, he married, and he and his wife remained at the ferry, till their death. He died in 1856, and his wife, about one year previous to that time.

But few settlers came in for the next few years. Previous to 1847, however, L. Geitz settled on Grand Gris creek, where he built the first grist mill within the town in 1853. He died in the town some years afterward.

John Thomas, Stephen Tainter, Harvey Green, and perhaps a few others, made settlement before 1847.

In 1847 came L. L. Lathrop, who located on section 10, town 7, range 5 west, where he still lived in 1884.

Bernhard Herrold located on section 13, town 7, range 5 west. He afterwards lived in the village of Wauzeka.

In 1849 Ralph Smith settled on Plum creek, where he engaged in milling.

Morton Seeley, was another settler of 1849; he located on section 2, town 7, range 4 west. The same year he built the second saw-mill in the town. The following year, 1850, he removed from the county.

At about the same time of Mr Seeley's coming, John Thomas settled on section 15, town 7, range 5 west.

The same season, came John Miller, who settled on section 10, town 7, range 5 west. He had been a soldier in the regular army. Several years after his settlement here, he died.

John McHarg located lands by warrant in 1849, which embraced the present site of the village of Wauzeka, but he did not settle till 1855.

Philip Steinbach settled on section 32, town 7, of range 5 west, in 1850, where at the present time (1884) he still lives. He was a Mexican.

In 1851 Herman Stuckey settled on section 15, town 7, range 5 west. He purchased of John Thomas; he resided in the town till his death. The family still (1884) own the home-stand.

John Berry was an early settler in the town.

From about 1852 the town settled very rapidly; the population being mostly of a German element.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first white child born in the town of Wauzeka was Mary L. Stuckey, daughter of Henry Stuckey. She was born August 21, 1842. She became the wife of Frank Chapek.

The first school was taught in the summer of 1850 by James E. Lockwood, on section 36, town 8, range 5.

The first regular school house was built of logs in the summer of 1853, in what is now known as district No. 3.

The first postoffice was kept by Henry Stuckey; this was established in 1854. Mr. Stuckey was the first and only postmaster, as the office was discontinued as soon as the railroad was built and the village of Wauzeka started, which was in 1856.

The first saw-mill was built by John Thomas and A. M. Miller, on Plum creek, as early as 1848. The only grist mill ever built in the town was erected by L. Geitz, in 1853, on Grand Gris creek; it was destroyed by a flood in 1876, and rebuilt by Mr. Oswald. The first goods retailed in the town were sold by Ralph Smith on section 36, in town 8, range 5 west, in 1849. These goods which came from St. Louis by way of Prairie du Chien, were sold to those in the neighborhood, and also to log men in the pinceries above.

ORGANIC.

The first town meeting in Wauzeka was held April 26, 1858, at which time the following were elected as town officers for that year:

John C. Berry, chairman; John McHarg, L. L. Lathrop, side board; Joseph Burlingame, clerk; Loren Barnes, assessor; Jesse R. Pratt, superintendent of schools. The above are the only officers on the records of the first election.

Officers of 1883: O. P. Vaughan, chairman; Christopher Walters, George Benner, side board; Charles Brandes, clerk; Jacob Wilhaber, assessor; Chris Rice, treasurer; L. C. Halstead, Patrick McKillip, Jasper Wayne, and John Steinbach, justices of the peace.

EDUCATIONAL.

At this date (1884) there are three full and five joint school districts in the town of Wauzeka.

District No. 1, joint with the town of Marietta, has thirty-seven pupils, and school property valued at $320. The building is in a poor condition.

District No. 2 comprises the village of Wauzeka. The first cost of the school house in this district was $4,500. Number of pupils of school age, 149.

District No. 3 is a full district; it has a poor school building, valued at $45. Number of pupils, thirty-four.

District No. 4 has thirty-three pupils. This district is provided with a fair log house.

District No. 5 is a full district, which is provided with a good frame building valued at $350. Number of pupils, thirty.

District No. 6 is a full district, having fifty-two pupils. The school house is a log building in a fair condition, valued at $100.

District No. 8 is joint with the town of Eastman. Number of pupils, thirty-four. This district has a log house in a good condition, valued at $300.

District No. 11 is joint with the town of Marietta. It is provided with a frame school house valued at $150. Number of pupils from the town of Wauzeka, seventeen.

CEMETERY.

The only regular cemetery within the town of Wauzeka, was established on section 18, in 1872. There were a few private burying places; but most of the remains were removed to this cemetery.

MILLS.

The first mill built in the town was erected by John Thomas and A. M. Miller, in 1848; they operated this mill a year, and sold to Ralph Smith, who run it ten years, during which time he cut large amounts of native lumber, together with the pine timber found on the head waters of the Kickapoo river.

Morton Seeley built a saw-mill in 1849. This mill was operated till 1880.

A small grist mill was built in 1853, by L. Geitz, on the Grand Gris creek, which a Mr. Oswald bought in 1865. This mill was burned in 1876, and rebuilt the same year.

COPPER MINES.

In 1860 copper ore was discovered by C. N. Mumford, on the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 26, town 8, range 5 west. The plant was not developed very extensively till 1884, when Messrs. C. N. Mumford, A. Eaton and J. J. Hollister, formed a company, and were mining a paying grade of "float" copper. Ninety tons of this ore, was shipped to Baltimore, and yielded about forty per cent. copper.

VILLAGE OF WAUZKA.

Wauzeka is the only village within the limits of the town. The original plat of the village is located on the north half quarter of section 17, town 7, range 4 west. This land was located by land warrants held by John McHarg in 1849. The warrant being obtained by Mr. McHarg for services in the war with Mexico. About the time of the completion of the Prairie du Chien division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, to this point, the above mentioned quarter section of land was purchased by H. L. Dousman, who, the same season, 1856, caused the plat to be surveyed. In 1857 an addition was made to this plat, on the west, by John McHarg. This part of the village plat being on section 18. The first dwelling house on the plat was built by the milling firm of Markham, Foster & Co., in the summer of 1856. This was a two and one-half story frame building. It was owned by the company till 1880, when it was sold to Isaac Johnson. Markham, Foster & Co. also erected the first store building in the place, and sold the first goods; this store was open, ready for trade, in the winter of 1856-7. It was located on block 19, and was occupied by the above named firm for many years, and finally purchased by John Chestnut, who removed it to a location near the depot. In 1884 it was used as the postoffice building.

A steam saw-mill was completed in 1856, by Markham, Foster & C, which had a sawing capacity of 15,000 feet of lumber per day. This mill worked up pine logs, which were rafted down the Kickapoo river, as well as the native timber which was found in great abundance at an early day. Markham, Foster & Co., run this mill about seventeen years, when they disposed of the machinery. In 1865, a steam-power saw-mill was built by Esterly & Kiser, of Whitewater; the mill was finally removed to Michigan.

The Wauzeka Manufacturing Company was organized in May, 1871. B. F. Fay was made its president; George L. Scott, secretary; B. F. Fay, treasurer; Captain Ira Bisbee, superintendent. This company engaged in the manufacture of staves and other cooper stock. The mill was completed and in operation in July, 1873. It is run by steam-power, given by a forty-five horse-power engine. The full capacity of this stave mill, is about 5,000 cords of stave bolts per year. They manufacture from the native timber, oak being principally used.

About 1875, Parker, Hilderbrand & Co., erected a factory, for the manufacture of tight barrel staves; this was located on railroad land below the depot, on the south side of the track. John Parker, of the firm, had charge of the works; this mill was operated about four years. doing an extensive business; but in 1882 was removed to Aiken, Minn., on the Northern Pacific railroad.

In the winter of 1883-4, a steam saw mill was built by Curry & Co., which had a capacity for cutting 4 000 feet per day. It was propelled by a thirty horse-power engine.

A postoffice was established at this point in 1856, and Dr. Hutchinson was appointed postmaster; after several years he was succeeded by George Parker, who, after a few years, was followed by Jane Walker, and she, two years later, by Leo Oswald. Then came L. M. Culver, station agent; he was succeeded by Charles Brandes. It became a money order office Aug. 1, 1882. At the present date, 1884, Charles Brandes is postmaster, having been in office two years.

FIRST THINGS.

Markham, Foster & Co. opened the first store in the village. They also owned and operated the first blacksmith shop; it was located on the mill lot, block 14.

The first shoemaker was H. W. Silga, who came in about 1859. In 1882 he moved to Esterville, Iowa.

The first harness-maker was John Steinbach, who opened his shop in 1882.

L. M. Culver started the first general hardware store, also acted as station agent, and afterward was appointed station agent at Esterville, Iowa.

HOTELS AND OTHER MATTERS.

Charles Ozeos kept the first hotel of the place, in a building erected by John McHarg for a residence. Dr. Hutchinson afterward kept the same house, which he purchased of Ozeos. About 1865 Benjamin Wolf built a hotel, which was burned in the fall of 1871. Ira Lawrence built a hotel, which was destroyed by the fire just mentioned. James Mallery built a hotel about 1873, which was destroyed by fire a short time after it was completed. The hotels at the present time (1884) are the Ranney House and the Wauzeka House.

A boat yard was established at this place, on the Kickapoo river, about 1862, by Joseph Reynolds, proprietor of the Diamond Joe line of steamers, which ply the waters of the Mississippi river. The hulls of several steamboats were built here; also a number of barges. It was continued for a number of years, and was, indeed, quite an enterprise for the place, giving employment, as it did, to so many men who lived in the immediate vicinity.

In April, 1864, Dr. L. C. Halsted and Capt. H. Hubbel began the building of a steamer of quite large dimensions, the length being 265 feet. Mr. Hubbel failing to fill his part of the contract, the project was abandoned, and the incomplete boat sold to the Diamond Joe company, who used it as a wharf boat at the city of Dubuque.

CHURCHES.

In 1884 the village contained two church edifices—those were the German Lutheran and Roman Catholic. The former was built as a German Evangelical Methodist church, by that denomination, aided by liberal outside donations, with the understanding that it should be open for services to other denominations. By reason of removals, the Methodist class grew small, and in 1882 the building was sold to the German Lutherans, who number quite large. The first cost of this building was $900.

A Roman Catholic church was finished in the fall of 1881. This is a frame building with a neat steeple surmounting it; the cost was about $600. This church is supplied from Prairie du Chien.

SCHOOLS.

The village of Wauzeka is within school district No. 2. The first school was taught by Miss Gould, of Prairie du Chien. She commenced in a private house, owned by William Sinks. A school house was completed, however, before the term closed, and the school removed to it. The date of the commencement of this school was in May, 1858, and the school house was built by Ralph Smith. Among the early teachers in this school house were Jane Scott, sister of Robert Scott, of Prairie du Chien, Electra Washburn, James Roach, Mr. Wood, Miss Jefferson, W. A. Vaughan, Dr. Halsted and Manly Mumford. The old pioneer building, in which these just mentioned taught, constituted the town hall in 1884. In 1871 the present school house was built; it is a frame structure, 30x45 feet, with twenty-two foot studding. The building is a neat looking one, being provided as it is with a belfry and bell; it is the first object that meets the eye of the stranger as he enters the place. This school has for years been looked upon as one of the best in Crawford county. The school is not as large as at one time in its history, but still it sustains a good reputation for its excellence. Two teachers have always been employed; the first in the new building were James Malcolmson and Emma Comstock. The former was employed two years as principal, and then followed by James Smith. James Bedicheck was principal for four years, and was accounted one of the most successful teachers ever had in the village. Lizzie McHarg, Mrs. Bedicheck and Helen Smith were teachers in the primary department during the time Mr. Bedicheck was principal.

E. W. Farnham succeeded Mr. Bedicheck, and was retained for three years; he was a graduate of Lawrence University, Wisconsin, and was a successful teacher. Under Mr. Farnham were Helen Smith and Mattie McDonald. In 1883 the schools were in charge of J. F. Burgess and Miss Mattie McDonald.

A large number of young ladies have been prepared for teaching at this school; among those are: Dora Jefferson, Maggie Smith, Flora McHarg, Helen Smith, Carrie Smith, Lizzie McHarg, Mamie McDonald, Mattie McDonald, Lillie Culver, Ester Lester, Fanny McHarg, Lottie McHarg, Agnes McHarg, Cora Rosencrantz, and perhaps others whose names have not been recalled. Also the following young men have received a like preparatory course: John Fryer, William Lester and Asael Larson.

SOCIETIES.

This lodge numbered at one time seventy members, and has been the cause of much good; a large number of confirmed drunkards have been rescued and reformed, who still remain true to their obligations, and many moderate drinkers have been restrained from further indulgence; while others have remained faithful for a short time and then broken their obligations and gone back to their cups. But on the whole the influence of this lodge has been for general good. Jan. 1, 1884, the lodge numbered twenty-three members; meetings were then held semi-monthly, on Saturday evenings.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Ralph Smith, one of the pioneers of Crawford county, was born in 1811, in Berlin, Washington Co., Vt. In 1831 he removed with his father's family to Plainfield, in what was then a part of Cook, now Will Co., Ill., when he was appointed postmaster in 1837, and held the office three years. Soon after the arrival of the family at Detroit on their journey west, Mr. Smith, accompanied by his father and a hired man, started out on a tour of exploration on foot, with a view of finding a suitable place to locate, traveling the entire distance on foot from Detroit to Chicago, in 1831. There were no roads from Ypsilanti west, an Indian trail being the only guide to travelers, not a frame house having then been erected on the present site of the city of Chicago. His father located in Will county, and engaged in the mercantile business in Plainfield. Mr. Ralph Smith was engaged in business with his father; also built by contract a half mile of the Illinois and Michigan canal in the years 1833, 1834 and 1835. He settled in Crawford county in 1840, coming to Prairie du Chien. Soon after he leased the hotel in Lower Town, known as the Granite House, and owned by Alexander McGregor. Conducting this for about one year and a half, he leased for one year a farm of Judge James H. Lockwood. He then engaged in mercantile trade also took a contract from the government for transporting Indian annuities from Prairie du Chien to Fort Atchison, Iowa. During these years Mr. Smith was associated in business with different individuals. The firm being first known as Thomas & Smith, then Bugbee & Smith, and afterwards Savage & Smith. A. Savage succeeded Savage & Smith. Mr. Smith engaged in the lumber business, which he followed for twenty years. In 1849 he came to Wauzeka, and purchased the saw-mill on Plum creek near its entrance into the Kickapoo. In 1846 this mill was erected by Thomas and Miller, and was the first mill erected in Wauzeka. After two years he abandoned this mill and built one further down Plum creek and nearer the Kickapoo, which he run for ten years, manufacturing lumber from the pine logs, which floated down the Kickapoo from the head waters of that stream. At the end of ten years he moved from Plum creek to the village of Wauzeka, where he and Markham Foster built a steam mill, continuing in the lumber business till 1876, when he closed out his milling business, and in September, 1877, took a residence in Dakota, Moody county. During his long residence in Crawford county, Mr. Smith has been known as a successful business man, also an honorable, upright citizen. He has been twice married, first to Betsy Goss, born in Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 18, 1814, and who died in 1845 at Prairie du Chien, leaving six children, all have since died except two—Charles and Hanor. In 1847 he married Sarah L. Lockwood, born in Champlain, Clinton Co., N. Y. They have eight children—Maggie L., John L., Hardeleine, Helen M., James H., Carrie H., Marian G. and Mary N. In 1874 Mr. Smith was appointed by the Chicago & Tomah Railway Company (narrow gauge) as a trustee and still holds that position.

Frank Chapek, who resides on section 14, is a son-in-law of Henry Stuckey, who made a claim of this farm in 1838. Mr. Stuckey was a native of Prussia, born Dec. 13, 1811. He was the oldest child of his parents, and came to the United States when quite a young man. He resided for several years in the State of New York, moved from there to Pennsylvania, then to Galena, Ill. From here he went to St. Louis, coming to Prairie du Chien in 1837 or 1838. He was married in Prairie du Chien, Aug. 15, 1841, to Mary L. Herdelbrink, a native of Hanover, Germany. Immediately after his marriage he located on the farm now owned by his son-in-law, Mr. Chapek. He had erected a house and made other improvements previous to that time, being one of the well known early settlers of this town. His general business was farming and dealing in live stock, though he kept a hotel and store for some time, doing quite an extensive business during the construction of the railroad through this vicinity. The first hotel and store here were kept by Mr. Stuckey also the first postoffice, being called the Stuckville post-office. The office was discontinued when the office at Wauzeka was established. He died Nov. 20, 1880, at the homestead. Henry Stuckey from his habits of industry and frugality acquired additions to his farm, until it numbers 720 acres, the income of which supplies all his wants in his declining years. He was among the first settlers of the town, and assisted in the organization of the first school district in the town, and did what he could to foster and support the common school in which he always took a deep interest. His oldest child, wife of Mr. Chapek was born Aug. 21, 1842, at the homestead, and was probably the first white child born in the town. Mr. Chapek was born in Bohemia in 1851, and came with his parents to the United States in 1869. They have six children—Caroline Lily, Caroline Louise, William H., Frank J., Emma M. and Matthias F.

L. L. Lathrop was born Jan. 9, 1818, in Rutland Co., Vt. For some time prior to coming to Wisconsin he lived in Canada. Coming to Grant county from Canada, in 1837, one year later he took up his residence in Prairie du Chien. In 1847 he removed to Wauzeka, locating where he now lives, and owns a tract of 800 acres of land, on which has been found considerable lead ore, and investigations which he is now making promise further developments. He was married Nov. 3, 1844, in Prairie du Chien, to Samantha McCaptee, born in Chatauqua Co., N. Y. They have nine children—five girls (only two living) and four sons. In politics Mr. Lathrop is a republican, and a warm advocate of the principles of that party. He is a man of extensive reading, and though he has to a great extent lost his hearing, he is well informed on the general topics of the day.

H. L. Richmann, of the village of Wauzeka, is the son of Henry Richmann, an early settler, having settled in 1852 on section 13, town 7, range 5 west. He is one of the large farmers of this town, owning about 1,000 acres of land. H. L. Richmann is proprietor of a saloon in Wauzeka. He was born in Prussia in 1848, living at the homestead till May, 1880, when he came to the village and engaged in his present business. He married Julia Bower, of Marietta.

They have one daughter, Jennie, born Jan. 6, 1883.

John McHarg, one of the prominent and well-known early settlers of Wauzeka, was born in 1815 in Scotland. His mother died when he was a child, and soon after her death his father, with the family, moved to Ireland. When nineteen years of age, he emigrated to Canada, making his home with a brother who had preceded him by several years to America. In 1846 he went to Chicago. At that time the Mexican war was in progress, and enlistments were being made for service in the conflict. Mr. McHarg enlisted, Feb. 23, 1847, to serve till the close of the war. He was assigned to the 6th regiment, United States Infantry, and was honorably discharged, July 31, 1848, having participated in the battles of Cherubusco, Molino del Rey, Contreras and was present at the capture of the city of Mexico by Gen. Scott. He was a non-commissioned officer, filling the position of color guard. At the close of the war, he re-enlisted in the same command, which was stationed at Prairie du Chien. In 1849 his regiment was transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kan. During his second term of enlistment, which was for five years, he held the position of sergeant, and was connected with the quartermaster's department. When his time expired, his regiment was stationed at Fort Riley, which was built by the command to which he belonged. The captain of his company, Charles Lovill, gave him, on his discharge from service, the following letter, which illustrates his life as a soldier: "He has always been a faithful, steady, and excellent non-commissioned officer, in which capacity he has served his entire term of enlistment, five years. Every confidence may be placed in his integrity.

"Signed, Capt. CHARLES L. LOVILL.

"Fort Riley, August 1, 1853."

Mr. McHarg has been a resident of Wauzeka, since May, 1855. In 1849 he had secured by a land warrant, obtained for service in the Mexican War, 160 acres, which includes the present site of Wauzeka, but on the building of the railroad in 1856, he sold this quarter section to Mr. Dousman, who laid out the town. He then settled on section 17, where he has since lived, engaged in farming. In politics he is a republican. He was chairman of the town board of Wauzeka for ten years, and in 1880 was census enumerator for his district. He was married at Fort Leavenworth, while a soldier, to Fanny Ormsby, a native of Ireland, but reared in New Orleans. They have had twelve children, ten of whom are living—Ann, Rebecca, Lizzie, William, Agnes, John, Fannie, Cottie, Ormsby and Ella. Mr. McHarg and family removed to Dakota in the spring of 1884, a number of their children now residing in that territory.

When twelve years old, he lost his father, and in 1855 came to the United States, first living for two years in Fulton Co., Ohio, then moving to Green Bay. From there he went to Grant county, coming here in February, 1856, where he still resides. He was engaged in milling for many years, and for eighteen years has been head sawyer in the saw mill of Ralph Smith. Mr. Rice was married in Germany to Margaret Schuld. They have seven children, three sons and four daughters. He has been treasurer of Wauzeka since 1874, except an interval of two years. No present resident of the village was here before Mr. Rice.

They lived in New York, five years, and removed to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., in 1853, where they resided till the spring of 1860, when they came to Crawford Co., Wis., and they settled on section 35, in the town of Eastman. In 1866 Mr. Degnan bought the farm where he lives, located on section 2, town 7, range 5 west, from Emily E. Lemons. He is one of the prominent citizens of Wauzeka, being elected town clerk in 1869, he served six years; was also chairman of the town board of Wauzeka, two terms. He married Mary E. Dunne, of Eastman.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTORY.

Each year, as it rolls its resistless way along the mighty pathway of time, is fast thinning the ranks of the hardy pioneers, who, in their adventurous way, first broke the broad pathway of emigration into what is now the bright valleys and beautiful hills of Richland county. The relentless hand of death, pursuing his remorseless and unceasing avocation, is cutting down, one by one, the hardy and brave men and women who first established the "broad blaze" and footmarks of civilization and progress in this, then, great wilderness, whose only inhabitants were the cruel red man and his hardly less wild congener, the savage beast.

No tongue can tell, no pen portray the hardships and cruel vicissitudes of fortune endured in those early days by this little band of Argonauts, who, thirty-five and forty years ago, bidding adieu to the home roof-tree, in the older homes of civilization and comfort, turned their backs upon it all, many of them forever, and wandered away into the broad domain of the mighty west, there to hew themselves out, literally, homes in the vast primeval solitudes.

The weather-beaten form, the furrowed brow, the prematurely hoary locks, are sad, yet eloquent evidences, that theirs was no holiday life, while weathering the storms and turmoil of pioneer life. Penury, hardship and often absolute want were their lot, while trying to conquer dame nature and establish homes for themselves and their families in this boundless wilderness.

Let us hasten then to put down the words, as they fall from their lips, of the grandly heroic deeds done in those early days that their actions may find the niche in history which they deserve. Let their words and deeds form a monument that shall long outlast the stone or bronze which must ere long mark the place of their rest. Let their epitaph be: "They have builded better than they knew."

But before we take up the history of historic times it is the duty of the historian to record the facts as they have existed "down through the dim and misty vista of time, before man was. Therefore, it becomes quite necessary for us to ascertain something of the history of the earth beneath, as it was formed in the vast, pre-historic era, before man had lived and moved upon its surface; history not written upon the puny records of man, but grandly engraved by the hand of creation upon the rocks and granite of the everlasting hills; let us, therefore, begin at the

TOPOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTY.

Richland county, in common with nearly all the State of Wisconsin, presents many remarkable and interesting topographical features, and according to the now accepted theory, developed by patient research, of the highest authority, was once, in those far distant primeval days, buried far beneath the bosom of a broad and waving ocean. The boldly marked inequalities that mark its surface are due, in a large measure, to three different agents, acting at different times and under different conditions; these are:

1st. During that long cycle of time that existed between the emergence of the land from its bed in the vasty deep, and what is known as the drift period, the numerous streams and rivers were ploughing their beds deeper and deeper into the primeval rocks, and rendering the former level surface more and more irregular. The softer rocks being more readily eroded than the harder ones increased their unevenness, there being a constant tendency of the streams to follow the softer strata wherever the slope of the land favored, and as these run in a northerly and southerly direction generally throughout the county, the main streams have that general course. The little streams gathered into the larger ones are not unlike the branches of the forest tree as they gather into the parent stem. The erosion of this nature produced in the unevenness of the surface a symmetry and a certain system easily recognizable. As this action upon the rocks occupied the period preceding the glaciers, we, for convenience, call it the pre-glacial.

2nd. The modifications of the surface constituting the first class of topographical features were produced by running water; those of the second class, which follows next in order of time, were formed by ice, in the form of glaciers, and by the various agencies, brought into action by their melting. The work of the ice was two-fold; first, in the partial leveling of the surface by planing off the hills and strewing the finely pulverized rock upon the surface of the valleys; second, in the creation of a new, uneven surface by the promiscuous heaping up the clay, sand, boulders and gravel, thus giving the land a new aspect. Among the features produced by this movement of gigantic mountains of ice, are parallel ridges, sometimes many miles in length, having the same general direction as the ice movement; hills of a rounded, flowing contour, like many found along the shores of the Wisconsin river; half embosomed rocky ledges cropping out of the hillside, like giant battlements on titanic castles; all of which combine to form a peculiar and distinctive contour of surface easily recognizable. All these apparent freaks of nature being due to the action of the ice are therefore denominated, glacial features.

3d. Subsequent upon the subsidence of the glacial period the streams resumed their wearing action, but under different conditions, and carved out a new surface contour, the features of which may be termed post glacial or drift.

There are no evidences of any violent disruptions of the earth's crust in the county, but the region has owed all its peculiarity of aspect entirely to the above agencies.

GEOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY.

The county of Richland is situated in the southwestern portion of the State of Wisconsin, but one range of counties separating it from the line between this and the State of Illinois, and is in the second tier of counties east of the Mississippi river. It is bounded on the north by Vernon and a small portion of Sauk, the latter also forming the eastern boundary; to the south lie Iowa and Grant counties, from which it is separated by the Wisconsin river; on the west it has Crawford and Vernon counties for a boundary. The general shape of the county is almost a square, except upon the southern border, where the line follows the sinuosities of the river, and is therefore of an irregular shape. Containing, as it does, some sixteen townships, it covers, in area, 620 square miles, or nearly 400,000 acres. The general character of the land is steep, bluff hills and fertile valleys, and streams course down each dale. When the white man first settled within its boundaries, the face of the earth was covered with a dense primeval forest, and much of the county is, to this day, heavily timbered.

Great timber masses of trees cover the hillsides and the ridges, and fully supply all the needs of the community for fuel, rails and building lumber. The principal varieties are: white oak, (Quercus Alba), black oak, (Quercus Tinctora), red oak, (Quercus Rubra), burr oak, (Quercus Macrocarpa), elm, (Ulmus Americana), white maple, (Acer Dasycarpum), sugar maple, (Acer Saccharinum), white ash, (Fraxinus Americana), basswood, (Tilia Americana), pine, (Pinus Sylbesteris), white and black walnut, and cherry. These timbers support one of the principal industries of this section of country, saw-milling.

The broken face of the country, while its climatorial effects are very pleasant, modifying the rigidity of a prairie winter, does not present the advantages of Illinois or Iowa, for large capitalists who desire to open up immense grain or stock farms. The peculiar topography of this county marks out its future destiny, to be divided up into small tracts, occupied by industrious, thrifty farmers, raising a comfortable living, and each having a surplus, sometimes large and sometimes small, to spare for investment in manufactures or any other scheme called for by the recourses or progress of the country. The principal attention of the rural population is engaged in the raising of stock, and notably that of sheep, although the dairy interests are by no means small. It is claimed that the county of Richland has the elements of greater superiority, in the rearing of this class of stock, over any other part of the State; besides the abundance of water power affords unusual facilities for investment in woolen manufactories.

The geology of this section of the State is marked throughout the county by the outcrop of Trenton limestone, near or at the top of the bluffs or hills; this strata varies in thickness from a few feet to twenty, and invariably overlies a substratum of Potsdam sandstone, which is of a friable nature, and varies from a light cream or buff color, through all the gradation of shades to a reddish brown. This rock is largely quarried, and is extensively used for building purposes. The Trenton limestone is well known for its caves and the fantastic shape it often puts on where exposed to the elements. One of these curious freaks of nature is quite noted throughout this county. We refer to the natural bridge, at the town of Rockbridge, of which the following description has been written by one of the early pioneers of the county:

"Richland county boasts a natural bridge, which, though of less pretensions than the Natural Bridge of Virginia, is still a curiosity worthy of an examination. It is located in the town of Rockbridge, the name being suggested by it. The visitor, in traveling north through the town of Rockbridge, is struck with the utter abandonment of style or purpose in the distribution of the rocks and ledges, until he arrives at this bridge, consisting of a mass of rocks about a half mile in length, from thirty to ninety feet in height, and varying in width (we should judge) from three to five rods at the top, but shelving so that it is much less at the bottom. Here a purpose might be assigned, and that, the damming up, or changing from its channel the meandering west branch of the Pine river, though it heeds not the obstacle, but pursues its serpentine windings to the ledge and along its side, and seeks, successfully, for escape through an aperture beneath the massive structure, which its action and old Father Time have evidently enlarged beyond its primitive size. The arch is irregular, about ten feet high, exclusive of a narrow seam which extends far up toward the top, and some eighteen or twenty feet wide at the bottom; and has formerly been utilized by building a flume to run a grist mill."

While upon this subject, it were perhaps as well to give a description of some caves in the town of Sylvan, located on section 34, which have not been as yet thoroughly explored. One of these caves has long been known as the Bear Den, their lair, which had been supposed to be the extent of the cavern, having been often seen. The entrance to the cave, about 200 feet above the level of the creek (west branch of Mill creek), and from a sink hole of about ten feet in depth, is through an opening in the solid rock; the passage of twenty feet is high and wide enough for a man, followed by a wider one for forty feet further, after which, by change of direction, the Bear Den is reached; after this a passage of ten rods brings the explorer to a small hole, just a close fit for a man's body, through which they can climb, then making their way through a difficult passage of twenty rods, which will bring them to a round room, about thirty feet in diameter, from the center of which a small stream of water is constantly dripping. Two passages lead off from this room; the one from the left is through rock, ten rods, where a pool of pure, clear water, about two feet deep, is found; passing this, the end of that cavern is reached in about four rods; the passage leading from the right of the central room also discovers a pool of good water, larger than the other. After passing the water, at the distance of ten rods, a small opening is found, but what remains beyond has not been explored.

On the other side of the creek, from the caves above described, on the bluff, another, equally curious, has been visited. The two, or either of them, will well repay an exploration. The distance from the Centre is about fourteen miles, and it does seem curious that the citizens of that place are not more fully acquainted with these natural curiosities.

The county abounds in fine springs and pure streams of water, among the latter of which some swell to the dignity of rivers, while others rejoice in the nomenclature of creeks. Pine river, which is probably the most important, rises just over the line in Vernon county, traverses the entire length of Richland county in a general southerly direction, sometimes inclining to the eastward, watering the towns of Henrietta, Rockbridge, Richland, Buena Vista, and a small corner of Ithaca. The principal affluents are Indian, Melancthon, Soules, Hawkins, Fancy, Willow and Ash creeks, and the West branch.

The Kickapoo river traverses sections 6, 7, 18 and 19 of the town of Forest, its principal affluent, Camp creek, running from the east, westward across the whole town, and fertilizing with its waters the surrounding country.

The little Baraboo river rises in the town of Westford, flowing in an easterly direction, passes into Sauk county, crossing the county line in section 12.

The west branch of the Baraboo river just enters the county, in section 1 of the town of Westford.

Besides these rivers, several creeks of some considerable dimensions are found within the limits of the county, of which the most notable are: Knapp's creek, in the western part of Akan and Richwood; Eagle or Mill creek, which rises in the southern part of the town of Forest and flows southerly through the towns of Sylvan, Eagle and Dayton; Willow creek and tributaries, which water the eastern part of the county, and Bear creek, whose waters lave the bosom of Ithaca and Buena Vista towns, and finally empties into the Wisconsin.

SOIL, PHYSICAL FEATURES AND CROPS.

Richland county is said to be within the mineral range. In the southern part some lead ore has been found, but always in small quantities, never in large enough bodies to induce the mining of it to be extensively entered into. Iron ore is, however, present in many places, and considerably good sized leads of it have been found at several points, the most important being at or near the town of Cazenovia. There has never been sufficient development, except at the latter place, to ascertain whether it exists in very extensive veins or not. Occasional specimens of copper ore have been also found, principally in the form of float or surface pieces.

The soil, throughout nearly the whole of the county, is found to be, in the valleys, a deep black, rich, alluvial loam; in some places, however, more particularly about the river bottoms, it is quite sandy. The soil upon the upland ridges seems quite often to be a species of clay, and is claimed to be the very best land for the luxuriant growth of winter wheat. The land upon some of the hill sides is too steep for cultivation, and the narrower ridges are deemed unsuitable for that purpose, but they are very valuable for grazing purposes and for the timber. About one-fifth of the territory is under cultivation; one-half to two-thirds of the remainder may be easily tilled; while very little will be lost to the economical, thrifty and intelligent class of farmers who make it their home.

The soil and climate are well adapted to the cultivation of wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, potatoes, tobacco, hops, all kinds of vegetables, clover, timothy and other grasses, and plenty of all these are raised for home consumption, besides having a large surplus for export. Apples and grapes can be raised with more than moderate success, and all the small fruit thrive abundantly, while wild plums, blackberries, raspberries and strawberries are indigenous. An article published in the Richland county Observer, written by W. M. Fogo, thus speaks of the capabilities of the county:

"While the county is well adapted to almost everything known to agricultural economy, its best hold is stock raising. No section of the State is better adapted to it; the hills and valleys and crystal brooks affording convenient range, protection and water. Until recent years the farmers have paid but little attention to this industry, but latterly they are engaging in it extensively, and there are numerous fine herds and flocks, which are rapidly increasing in number and quality as the years roll on."

The industries of the county are: farming, in all its various forms; butter and cheese-making; lumbering, principally in fine hard woods; milling, manufacturing of various kinds, and nearly all of the varied mechanic arts and employments. There are some twenty grist, thirty saw, and two woolen mills within the county. Many good water powers exist all over the county, quite a number of which remain to be improved. The villages of the county are: Richland Centre, Lone Rock, Sextonville, Richland City, Orion, Eagle Corners, Port Andrew, Excelsior, Boaz, Viola, West Lima, Spring Valley, Woodstock, Rockbridge, Stalwart, Cazenovia, Loyd and Ithaca.

Of these Richland Centre is by far the largest, and is a thriving village and the county seat and commercial center, and is the terminus of the Richland Center branch of the Prairie du Chien division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad.

There are some thirty-three postoffices in the county, but Richland Centre and Lone Rock are the only money order ones within its limits.

CHAPTER II.

MOUND BUILDERS AND INDIAN OCCUPANCY.

The historian, looking back away down the dim corridor of time, perceives faintly in the mythical light of that far off, pre-historic period, before the red man's foot had desecrated its soil, the traces of a race who evidently peopled these hills and valleys of Richland county; a race who lived in semi-barbaric civilization, akin to that of the Aztec that Cortez found on the plains of Mexico; a race who lived and died and left no trace of their existence except the mysterious mounds and ridges that they have built or that mark the site of their ruined buildings; a race of whom no tradition even exists from which their history can be written; a people of mystery, and probably ever to remain so—the Toltecs or Mound-builders.

The high bluffs and the broad, level bottom lands along the Wisconsin river are in many places thickly dotted over with these reminiscences of a vanished race. In many localities these relics have attracted much antiquarian attention, and many theories have been advanced, plausible enough, but apparently only based upon vague speculation, accounting for their origin and purpose. The few slight traces of bones and implements, with, in some instances, pottery, are all that are left to tell us of a race that has been extinct for centuries.

In the neighborhood of Excelsior, Port Andrew, Richland City, and all along the Wisconsin river, these mounds are quite numerous, and are of various shapes and sizes; but we have failed to find that any attempt has been made to elucidate their mystery by a careful research.

During the summer of 1881, a party from Mineral Point made some research, near Lone Rock, in this county, under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, and in the interest of anthropology, of which the following account is given:

“The mounds opened were in the meadow of Mr. Loomis, two miles north of Lone Rock, where was found a group of about twenty mounds—all round, except one, which was oblong, and about 200 feet long. The land and mounds had been cultivated, but are now in grass, and no doubt, by these means, the mounds have been greatly denuded; they were in diameter the same as those above mentioned, but lower; no regular design in their position was observed, except in those farthest east, where were seven round mounds in a north and south line, with a mound to the east and west of the second mound, from the south end of the line, each mound about thirty feet in diameter, and distant sixty-six feet from center to center, thus forming a cross. The second mound from the south end or center of the cross was opened, but at the depth of four feet, they were satisfied from the appearance of the earth, that it had been opened before, and the excavation refilled, as it showed no outward signs of having been interfered with.

“Another mound to the west was then opened, and at the depth of three feet the bones of three persons were found; they were so decomposed, fragile, and near to dust that it was only with great care, that parts of them could be preserved; these bodies had been laid upon the surface of the ground, and the mound erected over them; they were doubled up at the knees and hips and laid east and west, with the head alternately each way; one of them is thought to have been a man six feet three inches, and the others of ordinary stature. Strong evidence that part of the remains had been burned, were obtained here, as also the greater part of the genuine skull of a mound builder; many bones and fragments, some charred to coal were taken from here, as also many of the teeth, which were best preserved of all.

“Another mound about 100 feet southeast of the last one mentioned, was then opened, and at the depth of two and one-half feet were found the bones of two persons of ordinary stature, in the same condition, and buried in the same manner, as those last described.”

Some idea of the antiquity of these mounds, so called, may be gathered from the fact, that some of them in various portions of the State, represent the form of a mastodon, which leads to the inevitable conclusion, that those ancient builders were cotemporary with that long extinct animal. This theory has been strengthened by the presence of mastodon bones found in the mounds. And the conclusion is reached that, either these Toltees were of earlier date than has been generally supposed, or that the mastodon or mammoth is of later.

Many other monuments of this long banished race are to be found throughout the county, but it would seem that no further effort has been made toward investigating them. Whether they were a race with all the refinements and civilization of the Egyptian or Babylonian, as has been claimed for them, or whether they had but the ruder culture of the more primitive races, remains as ever an unwritten mystery; their history has perished in the lapse of ages, and been buried under the dust of centuries.

Of their successors, the red Indian, the Scythian American, but little has been preserved. Their traditions, like the traditions of all barbarous races, border so much upon the marvelous; are so inter-warped with the myths and creations of the imagination, that what is fact and what is fable it were difficult to determine. The early French explorers in their wanderings to and fro, throughout what is now the broad domain of the State of Wisconsin, record about all that is positively known of the whereabouts of the various tribes that then had a habitation or that hunted and fished within the limits of the State.

We are told, that the earliest that is known, with any degree of accuracy, of any tribes inhabiting the vast wooded solitudes of Richland county, is, that, it was the hunting ground of a portion of the tribe of Sauks or Saes, and their friends and allies, the Ottagamies or Foxes. These tribes are of the great Algonquin family and are perhaps one of its most noted branches, and the first mention is made of them by the French Jesuit missionary, Allouez, during a voyage made by him in 1665. The valley of the Wisconsin river seems to have been a favorite locality for them. They were, as is told by the Jesuits, an industrious Nation, singularly so for Indians, and cultivated large tracts of corn lands. History still records the fact that they had quite an extensive village on the northern banks of the Wisconsin river, within the limits of this county, not very far from the present site of Port Andrew, perhaps just west, near what is now known as the Coumbe farm, as the large amount of graves of the red hunter and warrior, found upon that place would lead one to believe.

The northern part of the county was claimed and held by a portion of the Winnebagoes, or men of the sea, as the name is translated, showing that they had migrated from the shores of the great salt water in previous ages. These two tribes, with a small sprinkling of Pottawattamies, formed the bulk of the aboriginal inhabitants before the advent of the white man.

The Foxes and Saes ceded all their portion of this county to the United States, by a treaty, signed in 1804, so that they were no longer owners of any land within its limits, nor were they found in any great numbers this side of the Mississippi river, until the episode of the Black Hawk war, in 1832. However, this was, from the date of its cession to the general government, by the Foxes and Sacs, the favorite hunting ground of the Winnebagoes. These people had some settlements also in the southern and central portions of the county, according to tradition, and were for many years inimical to the Americans, having espoused the cause, and taken up arms in favor of the British, during the War of 1812-15.

In 1816, however, a treaty of peace was entered upon with them by the general government, at St. Louis; and finally, in November, 1837, the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States, all their lands east of the Mississippi river. Nothing was reserved, and it was agreed upon by the contracting parties, that within some eight months from the time of the signing of the treaty, the Indians would all move west of the "Father of Waters." This arrangement was not fully carried out, the rich forests of Richland and adjoining counties proving too strong a temptation, and many still lingered in their former home. The history of these nomadic inhabitants has been treated here in rather a cursory manner, as the full details will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Close in the neighborhood of Port Andrew, in the southern portion of the county, tradition still points out the place of a battle, between two bands of rival Indian claimants, for the right of hunting in the rich region of the Wisconsin bottoms.

Another fact in history is, that Black Hawk crossed Richland county in his retreat from the infuriated settlers of Grant and Jo Daviess counties, just before he made his last stand at Bad Ax. The trail along which he passed was plainly visible to many of the early settlers, and was followed by many of them. The trail, as seen by them, crossed the Wisconsin river near the mouth of Honey creek, then passed northward through the towns of Buena Vista, Ithaca, Rockbridge and Bloom, following one of the creek valleys.

CHAPTER III.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Coming down to what may more properly be called the historic age, it suffices to say that prior to 1838 the region now constituting Richland county was known only by a few adventurous hunters and trappers, who had pushed their way into the depths of its pristine woods in search of the game that then abounded in its solitudes.

The wide, rushing current of the tortuous Wisconsin river, together with the presence of the wild denizens of the land, had checked the flow of emigration that had peopled the region lying south of that river in the previous years. In those early days a dense forest covered the face of hill and valley, and the bear, elk, deer and other smaller game literally abounded beneath its umbrageous shades, and myriads of fish disported in its crystal streams. It was a favorite hunting ground of the Winnebagoes, who guarded it as the apple of their eye from the growing encroachments of their white neighbors, and who resented with violence the few faint attempts made to erect cabins thereon, by the few hunters and trappers that ranged its depths.

The first white man who ever attempted a settlement within its borders was John Coumbe, of whom the following account has been written by Dr. R. M. Miller, who knew him well. Of him it says: "Captain John Coumbe was born in Devonshire, England, March 25, 1808. His boyhood days, or a portion of them, were passed in the city of London, where he received his education. During the year 1828, then being twenty years of age, he, in company with his father and family, emigrated to America. They first settled in the State of Ohio. Here the young man did not stay long, for, feeling dissatisfied with that country, he pushed on, following the 'course of empire,' and finally arrived in the then pioneer city of Galena, in the fall of 1835. Early the next spring, as soon as the snows had melted, he started for the lead mines in Grant Co., Wis. Here he remained until in the summer of 1838, when he, in company with two young companions, John La Rue and Frank Hubbard by name, crossed the swift Wisconsin river in an Indian canoe, landing near where the town of Port Andrew is now located. The party at once went to work and erected a cabin for themselves, which stood about two rods east of the stone bridge in that now thriving village. Here all was then a primeval wilderness, the hunting ground of the wild Indian and the home of the hardly less savage beasts. These young men, having some idea of a settlement in their mind, christened their embryo village Trip Knock; but their hopes of then being colonists were blasted—nipped, as it were, in the bud. Just how long they tarried here cannot now be ascertained with any degree of accuracy, but finding the Indians, who, it was generally supposed, had been removed by the government to reservations west of the Mississippi river, were likely to prove troublesome neighbors, they deemed it prudent, at least, to vacate and return to the mines, thinking, no doubt, discretion the better part of valor.

“But John Coumbe had had his eyes blessed with the sight of the promised land, and he felt a strong desire to again enter upon the possession of this western Canaan. Therefore, in June, 1840, he determined to make another trial, and this time was more successful. He was accompanied on this expedition by his brother, Edward. On one of Capt. Coumbe’s first visits to Richland county, he was accompanied by a Mr. Popejoy. After landing, they located about half a mile west of where Coumbe and his companions had built their first cabin, two years before. Here John remained, a tiller of the soil, and one of the most highly respected men among the pioneers who immediately followed in his footsteps, until the day of his death, which occurred May 2, 1882. He was married in May, 1849, espousing a daughter of Thomas Palmer, one of the band of early pioneers of Richland county.”

These hardy adventurers were beyond all doubt the first white inhabitants of the county, in the sense of actual settlers. Edward Coumbe, however did not stay very long, but returned to Grant county, where he died many years ago. It has been claimed that the actual settlement of some others, preceded this last location of the Coumbe brothers, but a rigid examination of the dates given, prove indubitably, that they are entirely mistaken, and that the palm of being the pioneer of Richland county, belongs to Capt. Coumbe. The land settled on by him lies but a short distance west of the now village of Port Andrew; here the river bottom expands into a beautiful plain, two miles or more in width, and a house built on it commands a fine picturesque view of the broad river, studded with its green islands, and the broad valley stretching far away into the blue and misty distance, enclosed, as it were, within the walls of the state-ly bluffs that frown down in somber magnificence upon the beholder. All these, no doubt, charmed the early settler and made him feel that this was an earthly Eden.

In July, of the same year, Matthew Alexander came into the county, locating a claim about six miles east of the land of Coumbe, near where Eagle Corners has risen in later days. Mr. Alexander brought his family with him, and as Mr. Coumbe, who, by the way, was at that time a bachelor, has the honor of being the first white man in the county, Mrs. Alexander can also claim her just dues to being the first woman who settled in these wooded wastes.

When the frosts of autumn began to touch the leaves of the forest during that same eventful year, Wiley H. Waters, his brother, Samuel, and William Smiley, crossed the tortuous channel of the Wisconsin, landing near what is now called Orion village. These men staid with John Coumbe, until early in the spring of 1841, when the Waters brothers, determining to turn colonists themselves, located a tract of land, in true squatter style, a short distance west of the mouth of a stream called Bird’s creek. Here, these hardy pioneers commenced their labors, and erected a cabin. But let Mr. Waters tell the story himself, which can be found in the following statement made by him, and read at one of the meetings of the Old Settlers’ Association. After entering upon an account of his early years, Wiley H. Waters goes on to state that he came to Grant county in June, 1833, when he was about fourteen years of age. He stopped about three miles west of Platteville, and in 1837 or 1838, went to Iowa county and located a short distance west of Highland. In the fall of 1840 Mr. Waters, his brother, Samuel A., and William Smiley, crossed the Wisconsin river just below Muscoda, a Parish landing. At that time Matthew Alexander and family lived three and a half miles below what is now Orion. The place is now called Pilling’s Mills. Capt. John Coumbe was keeping bachelor’s cabin near his present residence. At this time Mr. Alexander and Capt. Coumbe were the only actual settlers in Richland county. Mr. Waters, his brother and Mr. Smiley remained with Mr. Coumbe during the winter of 1840 and 1841. In the spring of 1841 Mr. Waters and brother located upon a tract of land a short distance west of Bird's creek, built a log house, cultivated some of the land, and Mr. Waters' father, Thomas Waters, and family, occupied the premises for three years, and sold out to James Andrews, a brother of Capt. Andrews. In the spring of 1841 Capt. Smith and Thomas Matthews established a ferry between Muscoda (which was then called Savannah, to the best of my recollection) and Orion, which they gave the name of Richmond. They soon laid out a town plat and were the first settlers in Orion. In the season of 1841 one Robert Boyd located on Mill creek where Rodolf's mills now stand, with the view of erecting a saw-mill. He afterwards sold his interest to Capt. Stephen Estes and Thomas J. Parish. They built a saw-mill and a "corn crusher" grist mill the following year, which were the first mills in Richland county.

Hardin Moore accompanied Boyd in the spring of 1841, and located on the land which constituted part of the McClary farm, more recently owned by Marvin Briggs. Mr. Moore put up a large cabin and put in a basswood puncheon floor. He started a blacksmith shop, the first in the county. He had no family, and only one room in the cabin. That summer Mr. Moore raised some cabbage, potatoes and other vegetables. He put them in the cellar, and in the fall turned his attention to his trade, using his cabin for a shop. There were but two horses in the county, which were owned by Capt. Andrews. On a bitter cold day in the latter part of 1841, Capt. Andrews and Mr. Waters took the horses to Mr. Moore for the purpose of having them shod. One of them was taken in the cabin and held by Mr. Waters. He braced himself well, taking hold with both hands to hold steady. Capt. Andrews held up one of the fore legs while Mr. Moore took his drawing-knife (for want of something better), squared himself around facing Capt. Andrews, placed a piece of board on the floor and rested it against his shoulder while Mr. Andrews held the toe of the hoof against the board and Mr. Moore began to pare the hoof. The horse became restless and began to struggle till he finally floundered and plunged himself into the cellar among the cabbage and potatoes. After the horse became quiet, a second platform of puncheon was arranged, and with leading, pulling and boosting the horse was brought out.

In the fall of 1843 Mr. Waters, his brother, James Andrews and Vincent B. Morgan first visited Pine river valley. They came up the Wisconsin river from Port Andrew to Pine river, then up Pine river and Ash creek, and landed a short distance below where Brimer's carding mill now stands, and where they remained some time hunting bees and killing game, which were quite plenty.

About this time Samuel Swinehart, Mr. Palmer, Mr. French and Mr. Green established a logging camp on Pine river, section 22, in the town of Rockbridge, a short distance west of the present residence of W. H. Joslin. They cut and put into the river several hundred pine logs and floated them down to Muscoda. They had no team and were obliged to do everything by hand.

During the same year a trapper by the name of Knapp, also built him a cabin on the creek that now bears his name, in the town of Richwood.

These rugged and hardy adventurers were soon followed by others, who settled all along the northern shore of the Wisconsin river. Hardin Moore, Stephen Taylor, Capt. James B. Estes, Thomas J. Parrish and Robert Boyd locating in 1841; G. C. White, Thomas Andrews, his son-in-law, with his brother, James Andrews, Martin Moon and V. B. Morgan in 1842; Robert Akan, Hiram Palmer, Natbaniel Green, John Youst, Samuel Swinehart and Thomas Parrish in 1843, had penetrated up the Pine river as far as Rockbridge, and engaged in logging at that place. Mr. Swinehart gives an interesting account of these early days, and perhaps it would be as well to give it in this connection. In relating his experience to the old settlers assembled on a late occasion, Samuel Swinehart, now of Avoca, but one of the pioneers of Richland county, as noted above, goes on to relate that he first crossed the Wisconsin river Oct. 10, 1843, in a canoe, a short distance above Muscoda, landing near the mouth of Indian creek. He then made his way along the north shore of the Wisconsin to the mouth of Pine river, and pitched his camp on its east bank, but was soon compelled to remove it by the Winnebago Indians, who were inclined to appropriate everything to their own use. The latter part of October and first of November were occupied in exploring the valley of the Pine as far up as Rockbridge, where the West branch passes through the rocks. He passed through the aperture in a little canoe made of a pine log, and so light he could easily carry it on his back or pass it over or under a log or other obstruction in the river. He established a camp under the east side of the shelving rock near the southern extremity. Two hackberry trees stood close by, and upon one he cut his name. This was in November, 1843. A week or ten days were occupied in making explorations in the vicinity, the chief object being to find pine timber near the river. After satisfying himself, the next important consideration was whether logs could be floated down the Pine into the Wisconsin. In order to ascertain this, it was necessary to go the whole length of the river in a boat. For this purpose, about the 15th of November, he embarked at Rockbridge (the name he had given it) in his tiny boat to explore the river, which he found to be of good depth, without shoals or rapids—a beautiful stream, but quite crooked, having many acute angles. About the fourth day he reached the mouth of Willow creek, where he found an old Indian village, many of the wigwam poles still standing. He found places where the Indians had smelted lead ore by making a shallow basin in the ground, placing flat stones on the bottom, then the ore on the stones, and a fire on the ore. Proceeding on his journey, two days more brought him to the mouth of the Pine. On this journey he had with him his gun, two dogs, pair of blankets, a hatchet, a frying-pan and some hardtack. He subsisted chiefly on game, which was abundant. He proceeded to Galena, procured an outfit, and returned in December of the same year, accompanied by John Youst, Nathaniel Greene, Hiram Palmer and a Mr. French. An attempt was made to reach Rockbridge, by the way of Indian creek, with a sled drawn by two yoke of oxen. The snow was deep, and after a trial of two days they were obliged to turn back to Muscoda. A hand-sled for each man was constructed, and tools, provisions and camp equipments placed thereon, and the party set out in high spirits upon the ice on the Wisconsin river, and the mouth of Pine river was made with little trouble. The party went up the stream to within two miles of Ash creek; the weather grew warmer, the ice thin, and in many places the current had cut it out, rendering it almost impossible to proceed. A few days were spent in hunting coons, which were plenty. Here the party passed the holidays, which were properly observed. The bill of fare consisted chiefly of roast coon. The weather became colder and a forward move was made. From this point to the rocks on the east side of the river, a mile above where Bowen's mills now are, the journey was very laborious; the ice in many places was nearly gone, the sleds were hauled through the deep snow, over logs, through the brush and numerous swamps, but by energy and perseverance, after fifteen days of great fatigue and hardships, they reached the rocks, and it was decided to go into camp.

The next morning Swinehart assured the party they were not far from the pines, and he made a motion that the camp be left in charge of one of the dogs, and proceed to the pines, with axes, dig out a canoe, come down the river and take up the luggage. The first day they reached the pines, they found a bee-tree and after feasting on wild honey and the lunch they had with them by a huge blazing fire of dry pine, Mr. Swinehart proposed to fell a majestic pine standing near the bank of the river, which was agreed to, and the sound of the white man's axes resounded in those woods for the first time. The canoe was completed, and floated down to the camp which they found duly guarded by the dog, and all right. A camp for the winter was constructed and the party employed for the remainder of the winter, cutting the beautiful and majestic pines that were then standing thick on the high lands, and rolling them into the river. Four hundred logs as choice as ever was cut were put into the river and floated out at the breaking up of winter. Mr. Swinehart was occupied most of the time in packing supplies on his back from Muscoda, which usually took him a week to make the trip. The boom which held the logs gave way in March, the camp broke up, everything was placed in canoes and the party followed their winter's production. It took them till the 4th of July to reach the mouth of Pine river, innumerable trees which lay across the stream impeding their way, having to be cut out. They sold their logs at Muscoda, to Thomas Parish, for $1,200.

Mr. Swinehart soon returned to Rockbridge and continued to exercise possession of his claim. Harvey Cole, a lumberman of Galena, became interested in the enterprise about this time, and during the summer of 1845 a saw-mill was erected, but not completed till the following spring.

In the fall of 1845 Mr. Swinehart with a party of men opened the first wagon road from Orion to Rockbridge, and the following winter, under contract, cut out Pine river, eighteen feet wide, of all logs, trees and brush above the ice. The mill was started in the spring of 1846.

To the best of Mr. Swinehart's recollection, Mrs. Minerva Culver, the wife of Mason Culver, a millwright, who worked on the mill, was the first woman that came to Rockbridge.

Mr. Swinehart was actively engaged in lumbering at the mill and marketing its products until he sold his interest in the year 1848. Mr. Cole disposed of his interest to James Vineyard and James Moore, of Platteville. Thomas Mathews named Indian creek, Mr. Swinehart named Ash creek, by reason of the heavy ash timber upon the ridge near by. Rocky branch being the only stream running into the Pine which has a gravel bottom, it was thus given its name. What is now known as Center creek was called Camp creek, by reason of its being a camping ground; Brush creek, because it was filled with brush; Horse creek, because a horse in crossing became mired and died; Fancy creek, for its resemblance to a stream of that name in Sangamon Co., Ill.; Buck creek was near the Creeds; Sole's creek, because James Sole built a cabin and manufactured shingles in its valley.

Robert Akan, another of these advance guards of the future civilization of Richland county, has also left on record a very amusing as well as instructive account of the times which graphically depict the mode of life then in vogue. In this account, Robert Akan relates, that:

"When we arrived at Rockbridge, Nov. 5, 1845, there were sixteen men working at the mill. All the provisions had to come from Platteville, seventy-five miles away, and no road from Orion to Rockbridge. Two men of some experience were sent to blaze the trees, and three men started for Orion on November 10, to cut a road so that we could get through with a team and load. I went with the men to get the cattle and sleds, and the men at the mill commenced to cut the road to meet us. It was a good day's walk to Orion. On the third day after we got there, we had our loads on and started on our expedition to Rockbridge; camped the first night on Indian creek, at the spring where M. McIlhatten's widow lives. A deer made its appearance; three or four started in pursuit, each eager for a shot. I was the first to fire. At the crack of the gun, the deer bounded off and I lost sight of it and returned to camp, while some of the others still pursued. In about half an hour they returned, bringing the deer, which had fallen dead after running a short distance. We roasted, broiled and stewed it, and got up in the night to eat of it, and not one slice of that deer was left when breakfast was over next morning. We doubled teams up-hill and passed over to south Ash creek. At Booth's farm, one of the men found a bee-tree, and we got a wash-tub full of honey. We camped at the spring where Thompson lived. Some of the men had cut and put up hay for their teams, if all things went on all right at the mill. Some went to cutting stringers for a bridge across Ash creek, while others made puncheons for the cover, which took all day. The men went out to hunt, and one of them brought in a fine buck. Next day we camped at Durfee Bovee's farm; the timber was awful. The following night we got to Klingler's spring, this we called the Ash swamp, for the cattle mired. Got to Rocky branch the next night. Stopped there until the men cut the road to Muddy branch or Center creek, a day and a half. My partner and I went to Center creek with the men in the morning, who were cutting the road. We followed the blazes to Brush creek, and the men thought they would make it that night. We killed a deer, back of where Hurbert Dows lives, and undertook to drag it to camp, down through the brush. I thought it was five miles, so we hung it up and struck out for camp; it was dark when we got in; we could see the smoke but the brush and vines were awful to make our way through. Here our oxen went back on us; they run back to Orion. We sent two men after them, who brought them back, which took three days. We had, in the meantime, cut the road to Fancy creek, where the others met us, and there we had a jollification and a regular old pioneer drunk, as we had with us a barrel of whisky. This must not shock the extremists, for it was fashionable, in those days, to get on a jollification drunk once in a while. We got to the mill, however, all sound. The next day Samuel Swinehart and I went to Orion for provisions. They had a dance at Capt. Smith's. We got there about dark, and the boys and girls began to assemble for the festivities of the evening. The music, such as it was, was soon in full blast. Capt. Smith and another man had a jug of whisky hid in the room, where I, being tired with my days tramp, had laid down to rest. They had come in three or four times and taken a nip, but Mrs. Smith saw that they were getting full, came in and took the jug and hid it, and put in its place one like it filled with coon oil. In about twenty minutes they came in again. Captain turned the jug up and took a swig but said nothing, handing it to his companion, who also took a swallow. The first word was: 'H—l, what's this?' Captain was silent for a moment, but tasting it said: 'Coon grease?' and swore roundly. This was more than I could stand, so had to laugh outright. He went for me, but I dodged him and got into the ball room to avoid further trouble. Presently in came the men—coon grease on their mouths and beards. This second party's wife wiped it off with her handkerchief, but he was terribly mad and never forgot it; always blamed me, as I would not explain and tell on Capt. Smith's wife.

Once while living at the mill, when the Indians had run off, or killed off, all the deer and bear, so that nothing but muskrats and pheasants were left, provisions getting scarce, I started for Platteville to get a supply. I was gone longer than I had made calculation on. For four days my brother, Andrew, was left with my family; they had half of a deer, twenty pounds of flour, coffee and tea in plenty, and he could kill pheasants, if they could live on that, but he got discouraged, I had been gone so long; thought I was killed or some accident had happened to me. My wife said to him:

'You go and kill a deer and we can live for a week yet,' and added that I would be back that day. He was despondent, but took his gun and started hunting on the road to Museoda. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon he heard the driver's halloo to the team. He said that the most pleasant voice he ever heard was that teamster's at that time."

To resume the thread of the narrative; it was during the year 1844, that Myron Whitcomb, John McKinney and family, Burrell McKinney, and Peter Waggner, joined the few settlers in this infant colony and the numbers that came every year thereafter steadily increased, so that when the year 1846, had dawned upon their little world something like a settlement had been reached, although these few people were scattered over such a wide expanse of country, and among such thick timber, that each seemed "monarch of all he surveyed," for the survey in many instances, did not extend very far. These were the hardy and experienced pioneers who led the advance guard of the all conquering Anglo-Saxon, the "most powerful race that ever existed," in their onward march, to found the civilization and culture of the nineteenth century, in this land of unequalled resources, but lying then a virgin wilderness, a leafy desert, having little of outside help or support; yet the settlement grew up from the start, in that form of rugged independence and self-reliance so characteristic of the American people.

ORGANIZATION.

During the fall of 1841, and through the early winter following, the question of the organization of the county was canvassed, and the seven residents of the district, now comprising this county, meeting in "mass meeting" at Eagle Mills, drew up a petition, and signing it, sent it to the Legislature, praying that august body, that such power might be given them, to set off the county of Crawford, of which, it then formed a part, and to organize themselves into a new and separate county. This prayer was granted by the third Territorial Legislature, in an act passed Feb. 18, 1842, and signed by James Duane Doty, the then Territorial governor. By this act, Richland county was attached to Iowa county for judicial and electoral purposes, until such time as a sufficient number of people had moved into the new county, as would warrant them, in setting up a separate government for themselves. By this act, also, Abner Nichols, James Murphy and John Ray, all of Iowa county, were appointed a commission to locate the future county seat of the newly made county. After some discussion, it was determined to fix upon a point, near what was afterwards the town of Richmond (now Orion). This continued to be recognized as the county seat for several years. We are told that the name Richland was suggested by the character of the soil. What a power, that word rich, must have had over these early settlers of the county. It seems to us that they must have thought of little else, as we find Richland county, Richland town, Richland Center, Richland City, Richmond and Richwood town.

The county continued attached to Iowa county until the first day of May, 1850. When, in pursuance of an act of the State Legislature, approved Feb. 7, 1850, it was separated, and became a county by itself, enjoying all the privileges and immunities thereunto belonging. An account of this organization can be found in Chapter IV, given in detail.

ACT OF FEBRUARY 18, 1842.

FIRST EVENTS.

The matter of the first marriage that was solemnized within the limits of the present county of Richland, has, in the absence of any records, occasioned much trouble to the compiler of this history, but a careful and conscientious research, and a thorough canvass of the memories of those of the early pioneers, who still linger this side of the "bright and shining shore," develops the fact that the rite that united W. G. Parker to Emily McKinney, in the year, 1846 has the precedence in point of time above all others.

The subject of the first child born in the county, is also a mooted question, but the birth of Melinda Morgan, which occurred in April, 1843, is the earliest that can be found, and she is, therefore, entitled to the honor of being the first born of this precinct.

The first death that occurred within the same limits was a man by the name of David Petty, or Pettis; this occurred in the year 1844, at Rockbridge. It seems that Petty was the cook for the Swinehart-Akan party, then engaged in logging at that place, and who was taken sick, and took a dose of some medicine, perhaps his own prescription. This seemed to rather increase his disorder instead of alleviating it, and he grew so much worse that it was absolutely necessary for him to have the advice of a physician. But here they were, twenty miles away from a settler, and how was the doctor to be procured. At last the great big heart of the frontierman could not stand it any longer to see his fellowman suffer without trying to do something for him, so Samuel Swinehart started afoot to thread the vast forest that lay between them and the villages on the river. All day long and through the night he plunged on through marsh and mud, and on reaching the first physician, he took the back track with him. But the ministrations of the doctor were of no avail, and the man died in great agony. Determined not to bury their quondam companion in the depths of the forest, these rough pioneers hewed out a canoe from a pine log, and Wiley Waters and another man, placing the body therein, launched themselves upon the bosom of the Pine river, which was to bear them to the settlements. Long and weary must have been the ride with this corpse, as they floated down the sluggish current, and through the heavy timber that then cumbered its banks and shaded its waters. There is something wierd and ghastly in this idea of these two men drifting down the dark stream, by the light of the sun or moon, with the dead body of their companion. They reached the Wisconsin river at last, and landing at Muscoda, procured a hand sled, and finished their deed of charity by dragging the body to Mineral Point, where his friends received and interred the corpse.

The first school that was taught in the county, we are led to believe, was in the year 1847, by a man from Pennsylvania, but whose name has entirely escaped the memory of our informants. This pioneer school was held in a room of the house of Peter Kinder, in Richwood town, and is believed to have been a subscription one as no records are extant, showing the formation of a school district so early. However, in 1849, a building was erected for the accommodation of a district school on the land now owned by Mr. Garner, on section 27, of the town of Richwood, and a little west of the village of Port Andrew, and during the years 1849 and 1850 Mary Melanthey, now Mrs. Joseph Elliott, presided over its destinies, as school mistress. This is no doubt the first district school in Richland county.

The first postoffice within the limits of the county was established at a place called Sand Prairie about one and a half miles west of the village of Port Andrew, on land now owned by H. J. Clark, lying in the town of Richwood. This was about 1845, and Johnson Young was the postmaster. John Kineannon had the first contract for carrying the mail thither, we believe, from Mineral Point, and he brought it on his back, going and coming afoot, which seems to have been the usual method of travel in those days.

The business of saw-milling being a large one in the county, it would probably be of interest to say that the first structure of that description ever erected was built by Estes & Parrish, in the fall of 1841, and was located at or near the site of the mills now known as Rodolf's, on Mill or Eagle creek, in the town of Eagle.

The first preaching of the Gospel that ever took place in the county, was, possibly, performed by a Methodist minister by the name of Wheeler, in 1848, at the then rising village of Richland City. This gentleman was, at the time, a resident of Iowa county, and has often laughingly, made the remark, that "he brought Sunday over into this county, where it had never been before." Sometime during the same year, however, a Congregational minister located himself at the same place, and a more regular service was instituted. This gentleman's name was Benton.

The first grist-mill was built at Sextonville, in the years 1851-2, by Jacob Krouskop. Prior to this time the settlers had oft-times to go fifty and seventy-five miles to mill with the little grain they had to grind.

John McKinney, however, before the erection of the mill, had a small mill driven by horse power, in which he could grind a sort of corn meal. This might be called the first attempt at grinding in the county, but could hardly be termed a grist mill.

The first physician to locate within the county was Dr. Hartshorn, whose settlement at Law's or Gage's ferry, precedes any other in point of time.

The first blacksmith shop in the county was started by Hardin Moore, in the summer of 1841.

Settlements were begun in all parts of the county by the beginning of 1850, and the population by that time was, according to the census returns, between 900 and 1,000; during the next decade the flood of emigration, for which that period has been noted all over the northwest, rapidly filled up the waste places of this county, until in 1860, the government census placed the number of inhabitants at 9,732. During the late Civil War, the emigration here, as everywhere else, came to a stand still, and the large amount of enlistments from this locality, and the large death rate in Wisconsin regiments, in the field, kept down any remarkable increase in the population, until after the close of the rebellion when immigration received a new impetus, and the number of the population has steadily grown from then until the present day.

In those early days rude log cabins, scattered throughout the county, stood on little clearings, surrounded by the dense wilderness of trees that covered the whole land, as with a mantle; but in the years that have passed, these cabins have given way to fine, comfortable frame, and in many instances palatial brick residences. There are many yet living, whose eyes have beheld these wonderful transformations, but alas, many, very many of these early pioneers have never lived to realize or enjoy the full fruition of their days of toil and hardship. The roll of those whose feet have crossed the dark river is a long one. Still, in the days when they faced all the trials of a frontier life, and battled with stern nature, to keep the wolf from the door, these hardy pioneers enjoyed much pleasure in their rude way. In the language of one of these heroes of the outpost: "It is the mistaken notion of modern aristocracy, that happiness dwells only with wealth and fine equipage. Some of us can point to our log cabins, at least in memory, as our independent homes, where true content and happiness brooded over the domestic circle, and sincere gratitude gave relish to the most homely fare."

Contrast the Richland county of 1845-6 with the same as it is to-day. Then it was a dense, almost unbroken wilderness, an umbrageous desert with only here and there the scattered clearings of a few adventurous frontiersmen; and now it is largely cleared up, with good farms, fine farm houses and barns, commodious and numerous school houses and churches on every hand. In those days, the early settlers were poor in purse and struggling against fearful odds and almost insurmountable obstacles, to hew for themselves and their posterity, homes out of the forests, and all nature seemed uncongenial and seemed to turn a frowning face upon all their efforts. To-day, the inhabitants are prosperous and thrifty, and live in comparative ease and comfort. Then the "blazed" track through the woods was their only pathway or road, and the rivers and streams were crossed on the felled tree or by the still more primitive fashion of swimming; now, broad highways intersect the comty and good bridges span its streams, and comfort and luxury are seen on every hand. Then, seventy miles to mill was the rule, and now the iron horse brings the necessaries of life almost to the very door.

CHAPTER IV.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT.

The county of Richland was organized on the first day of May, 1850, and the first entry upon the records of the board of supervisors in and for the county, is in regard thereto, and is as follows:

“In pursuance of an act of the State of Wisconsin, represented in Senate and Assembly, ‘To organize the county of Richland,’ approved Feb. 7, 1850, an especial meeting of the board of supervisors, in and for said county, was held at the house of Alex. Smith, in the town of Richmond, in the county and State aforesaid, on the first day of May, A. D., 1850. Said first day of May being the day designated in said act, that from and after which, the county of Richland should be organized for judicial purposes, and should enjoy all the privileges and immunities of the other counties of the State.”

At the time of this organization, the county was divided into three towns, and the first board of supervisors who were empowered to handle the reins of the infant government were John H. Price, of Buena Vista; E. H. Dyre, of Richmond, and Adam Byrd, of Richwood. Of this board, the first named was chosen president, and John Rutan, clerk.

As the county had no court house, nor place wherein to transact even a moderate amount of business, that then occupied the attention of its officers, the board, at its session held May 2, the same year, ordered that “Marvin White be allowed the sum of $90 for the use of a house in Richmond, for one year, for the purpose of the county officials:” the same to be considered as the county court house until more definite arrangements could be made.

At the June session, 1850, a petition was presented, praying for the organization of a new town, to comprise the congressional townships 11 and 12 north, range 1 east. This petition was signed by Orin Haseltine and others. The board, in granting the prayer, designated the towns as above as an election precinct, and ordered that it be organized under the name of Rockbridge, and that the first election should be held at the house of Ira S. Haseltine, then a resident of the village of that name.

The first county road mentioned upon the records seems to have been one from Richland City to Pine river, and was made in accordance with a petition, signed by Ira S. Haseltine and others. The board appointed Orin Haseltine, N. P. Engels and John H. Price as the commissioners to locate the same. This was at the same June session, in the year 1850.

It would seem that from a lack of funds in the treasury, or some other cause, the county officers, in June, or nearly a month after their installment into office, were without any books, papers or stationery; and they therefore instructed Marvin White, the then register of deeds, to act as a special agent to purchase the necessary books and stationery, including the seals; one for the circuit, one for the county court, and one for the clerk of the board of supervisors; together with ink, inkstands and sand boxes, wafers and stamps; to be paid for out of the first moneys in the treasury of the county, for the contingent expenses of the said county.

Nov. 20, 1850, the new board of supervisors took possession of the helm of government, and the first act of their administration was to authorize James Laws to establish and keep a ferry at Briggstown, on the Wisconsin river; and at the same time established the following, as the rate to be charged for ferriage: Two horses and wagon, fifty cents; one horse and wagon, twenty-five cents; one horse and carriage, thirty-five cents; one horse and man, twenty-five cents; cattle, per head, ten cents; each foot passenger, ten cents; hogs and sheep, per head, three cents. The license granted Mr. Laws was granted for the term of three years, the first year to be free of any charge.

The weather growing chilly, and the board not wishing to retard the growing greatness of the juvenile county by freezing out its officers, instruct John J. Mathews, the sheriff, to make the purchase of a stove and pipe.

As an instance of the trouble of traveling in these early days, it is recorded that, it being necessary for the county to send a man to Milwaukee on business, the time occupied by him on the journey there and back was twelve days, the mode of traveling being by horseback.

The salaries of these early days seem to have been so small that it is a wonder that men should seek political preferment. As an instance of it, it is noted in the minutes of this session of the board, that the board allowed to J. W. Coffinberry, county judge, the munificent salary of $10 a year. They also authorize him to procure the necessary record books for his office at the proper expense of the county. The same board made an allowance of $50 per year for the salary of the prosecuting attorney. The ferry from Richmond to Museoda was also licensed, and the rates of ferriage established, by the same board, Mathews & Smith being the proprietors. It was during the same session that the board of supervisors appointed J. W. Coffinberry a commissioner for said county, to supervise the preparation of the application and proof of claimant for bounty lands granted to the soldiers and their heirs. James H. Wallace was also granted the right to establish a ferry at Richland City, across the Wisconsin river, on the same terms and at the same rates of ferriage granted the other parties.

Nov. 19, 1850, the board ordered that a tax of two and one-half mills on the dollar be levied in the county for school purposes; this was the first levy for such fund in the county, and deserves special notice as an instance of the early attention paid by the former generation to the educational status of our county. The entire levy of tax for all funds was seventeen and one-half mills on the dollar.

The first bridge built by the county of which any record exists seems to have been built by James Laws across Merriman's creek, and cost the whole of $17, and was finished and the bill ordered paid, Nov. 20, 1850.

At the May session of the board of supervisors, it being found that the quarters occupied by the county officers were too contracted, two rooms were rented of R. Barnes, in the town of Richmond, for their accommodation, at a rental of $5 per month.

At the fall session it was ordered that the sale of delinquent taxes be proceeded with; this is recorded as the first in the county of Richland.

On a petition, signed by R. McMaehan and others, being presented to the board at this session, the order was made that all of town 10 north, range 1 east, except sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36, of said town, be attached to the town of Rockbridge, as a part and parcel of the same.

The value of property in the county, as returned by the assessors, for the year 1851, was as follows:

Buena Vista .....	$44,023 00
Richmond.....	45,111 00
Richwood.....	14,801 00
Rockbridge.....	3,500 00
Total.....	$107,435 00

Of course this was much below the actual value, but some idea can be gained by these figures of the amount possessed by the early settlers in the way of worldly wealth. The tax levy for this year is given as fourteen mills for county purposes, three mills for State purposes, two and a half mills for school fund or nineteen and a half mills on the dollar for all funds.

COUNTY SEAT.

The question of making a permanent location of the county seat having now come to the front, the board of supervisors, at their meeting held July 26, 1852, had entered upon their minutes that "It is unanimously decided by this board, that Richland Centre is the proper place for transacting the business of the county." This seems to be the opening of the discussion, for we find that the same day the following resolution was spread upon the minutes: "Resolved, That the board accept of twenty village lots, and also a certain building, to be used for county purposes, of Ira S. Haseltine, in the village of Richland Centre, in accordance with a bond, dated Oct. 24, 1851, held by the county of Richland against said Haseltine. And it is also ordered that all the county business of Richland county be hereafter transacted in the said village of Richland Centre, and the officers thereof shall forthwith repair thither for that purpose."

In explanation of this action, it would seem, the next day the board passed the following:

"WHEREAS—Ira S. Haseltine has donated to the county of Richland, in the State of Wisconsin, a certain house situated on village lots No's. 3 and 6, in block 6, in the village of Richland Centre, in said county, to be used for a court-house and other purposes as said county board may direct, for and during a term of five years, from the first day of May last: Therefore, it is ordered that said house be, and is hereby designated as the said county building, for the uses and purposes as above specified. Also, it is ordered that a notice be served on the various county officers to remove the books and papers of the county forthwith to Richland Centre, the county seat of Richland county. Also ordered that the county raise $100 to furnish the new court house."

Nov. 9, 1852, the first meeting of the board of supervisors in the new court-house took place. At this session, it was ordered, that "town 10 north, range 1 east, be, and is hereby set off as a separate town and election precinct, and shall be known as the town of Richland; and that the court-house in Richland Centre be designated as the place of holding the first town meeting."

It was at the same time ordered, that towns 11 and 12 north, range 1 west, be attached to the town of Rockbridge, and the house of Orin Haseltine was designated as the place of holding the town meeting.

Either the progress of the country was quite rapid or the development of crime had increased largely, for we find, that at this meeting of the board, the salary of the prosecuting attorney was made $100 per annum, an increase of 100 per cent.

At the session of the board held in March, 1853, it was determined to build a county jail and it was decided to erect the same on lot 5, in block 14, in the town of Richland Centre, the building to stand thirty-three feet from the east line of the lot, and central as to north and south lines. The proposition to raise the sum of $300 to build the said jail, the same to be paid in three equal yearly installments, was entertained, but was finally laid over until the next meeting of the board.

At this session it was ordered, that, "all the territory embraced in towns 9 and 10 north, of range 1 west, except one tier of sections from the east side thereof, be, and is hereby set off, as a separate town and election precinct, to be known as the town of Eagle, and that Rodolf's mill, in said town, is designated as the place for holding the first town meeting."

The board of supervisors, at the annual session held in November, 1853, were presented with a bill by Amasa Cobb, the prosecuting attorney of Iowa county, for locating the county seat of Richland county, in the year 1842, when the county of Richland was attached to the county of Iowa. This bill was for some $3, and its receipt at this time provoked much indignation. After due deliberation the board made and returned the following answer:

"This board would respectfully say to the honorable board of supervisors of Iowa county that they do not find any indebtedness to said county. Said county claims having paid Abner Nichols and John Ray for making a location of the county seat, under an act to establish the county seat of Richland county, approved Feb. 18, 1842. Now, said act in section 1 describes the limits of said county. In section 2, it attaches said county, for judicial and county purposes, to the county of Iowa; gives the county commissioners, assessors and collectors, the same power over Richland county as over their own, to assess and collect the taxes thereof, in the same proportion, so that it made it, temporarily, but one county.

"In sections 3 and 4 it constituted the county commissioners of Iowa county, commissioners to locate a permanent county seat for Richland county.

"Then follows an act to organize Richland county, approved Feb. 7, 1850.

"In this law it gives the people of Richland county the right to vote for a county seat; and it does nowhere refer to a settlement between the two counties. Now, in our opinion, under the first law, we think that it was the intention of the Legislature, that Iowa county, with Richland county attached, should pay the cost of locating the county seat, out of revenue arising from property assessed in said county. And as the county commissioners of Iowa county have never heretofore rendered any account between the two counties, of what they collected, and report what they paid out, we concluded that they considered, under the law passed, that we were, as long as attached to them, but one county. Also we think it the duty of Iowa county if they thought they were wronged in this last act, to provide through their representative, some act for a settlement between the two counties. Having this view of the question, we deem it unnecessary to answer the extravagant claim set up against us; but upon this and other grounds, disallow the claim presented."

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The court-house, being two small for the purpose intended, owing to the rapid increase in population and the consequent swelling of the volume of business done at the county offices, the question of erecting new buildings began to be agitated about this time, and although nothing seems to have been done at this term of the board, still the question of court-house was quite a factor in the coming election.

The assessed value of property in the county, in 1853, was as follows:

Buena Vista,.....	$64,663 00
Eagle,.....	18,256 00
Richmond,.....	26,465 00
Richland,.....	14,685 00
Richwood,.....	20,809 00
Rockbridge,.....	13,310 00

Total,.....	$158,188 00

The rate of tax, as laid by the board this year, was fifteen mills for county fund, six mills for State purposes and one and one-half mills for school fund, or twenty-two and one-half mills on the dollar for all.

When the board of supervisors met at the annual meeting, November, 1854, the first business transacted by them was the organization of towns 11 and 12 north, of range 2 east, into a separate town and election precinct, under the name of Willow; the first election to be held at the house of R. B. Stewart.

It was also decided to erect towns 11 and 12 north, of range 1 west, into a separate town, under the name of Marshall, and the first election was ordered to be held at the house of Josiah McCaskey, on Fancy creek.

By order of the board at this meeting, sections 1, 12, 13, 24, 25 and 36, of town 10 north, of range 1 west, were set off from that town (Richmond) and attached to Richland; also the order for the organization of towns 11 and 12 north, of range 2 west, into a separate town, to be called Forest, was issued, and the residence of William Ogden was assigned as the place for holding the first election. It seems, from the records, that this was all the business that came before this board, except the auditing of the various bills and claims against the county.

Nov. 15, 1855, the new board of supervisors held their annual meeting. The first business brought before them being the matter of county buildings. It was reported to the assembled Solons that Ira S. Haseltine and his wife had deeded to the county, as a fee gift and donation, the east half of block 13, all of blocks 14 and 22, and the north half of block 23, all in the village of Richland Centre. This gift was made that the county might have a place whereon to build the said buildings. The board in accepting the deed, appointed themselves committee of the whole, to view the lots and select a suitable site thereon on which to place the structure to be known as the court-house.

Considerable wire pulling and manuevering was now displayed to determine the board to favor certain interests and to locate the buildings to suit the wishes of this or that party. James B. Cling offered to donate to the county five acres of ground, provided, that the county erect the new buildings on blocks 22 and 23. At first the board seemed to favor this, but after mature deliberation, by vote, it was decided not to accept the offer, and to leave themselves untrammelled in their choice of the site of the public buildings. By resolution, a committee was appointed for the purpose of fixing the amount necessary to be appropriated for the erection of the buildings. This committee, consisting of B. L. Jackson, Alden Haseltine and E. L. D. Moody, reported to the board next day in the following words:

“Upon due consideration your, committee are of the opinion, that, it would be advisable to appropriate the sum of five hundred dollars ($500) for the purpose of building a jail in Richland county, and would advise that the building be 18x26 feet, to be divided into two rooms. The building to be built on the block house plan, with weather-boarding on the outside and lined on the inside with sheet iron; and your committee are of the opinion that the interests of the county demands the appropriation of the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500) for the purpose of building a court-house, and would further recommend that the four lots on block thirteen (13) be under suitable regulations and at a proper time put on sale, as a means of raising a part of the fund; and would still further recommend that the court-house be built 28x36 feet, with posts twenty-one feet long, the lower story to be finished in accordance with a plan accompanying this report; and would call the attention of the board to the propriety of appointing three commissioners who shall have power, as a building committee, to award contracts, under suitable restrictions. Your committee are of the opinion that it is not necessary at the present time to raise more than one thousand dollars ($1,000) if the lots aforesaid are placed on sale at the proper time.

B. S. JACKSON, }
E. L. D. MOODY, } Committee.”
ALDEN HASELTINE. }

This report was adopted, with the amendment of making the $1,000 to be raised $500 and the building committee (to be appointed) here to be authorized to contract to pay interest on the balance on one-half the sum for one year, and on the other half two years, at seven per cent.

The following resolution was presented in relation to the matter under discussion, and in accordance with the recommendations of the committee's report, as given above.

"Resolved, That the board proceed to elect three commissioners, to act as a building committee, and their duties shall be, first, prepare a draft and fix specifications for the building of a jail and court-house on the plans reported, with such internal alteration as may be found necessary, which alterations shall not increase the cost. Next, to advertise such plans, for a period of four weeks, and upon the expiration of such time, to award the contract to the lowest and best bidder. Also, it shall be their duty to examine the work while under construction, and to accept the work when done, if it shall be finished according to contract. Such contract shall be completed as follows: The jail to be completed by the first day of October, 1856, and the court-house by the first day of April, 1857."

On the above resolution being submitted for a vote, the result was a tie, but the chairman, by virtue of his office, gave the casting vote in its favor, and it was declared adopted.

The committee appointed under it, as the building commission, consisted of Josephus Downs, Milton Langdon and B. L. Jackson. It was also,

"Resolved, That the lots in block thirteen (13), shall be advertised for eight weeks, and put up at public sale to the highest bidder, for cash, the first Monday in July, 1856; also, that the county's lots, on the west side of Pine river, be sold at the same time."

The ways and means having been provided, it was "Ordered, That the building committee be empowered to draw orders on the county treasurer, from the building fund, to pay the sum of $500 on the completion of the jail, and the sum of $500 when the said court house shall be enclosed and doors hung, floors laid and stairs built; if the work is done according to the terms of the contract."

At this meeting, also, the town 11 north, of range 2 west, was set off from the town of Forest, and ordered to be organized as a separate precinct under the name of Sylvan, and the school house in district No. 6, was named as the first town meeting place. Also town 12 north, of range 1 west, was set off from the town of Marshall and christened Bloom, and was ordered to perfect organization and vote for town officers at the house of Isaac Pizer. Town 12 north, of range 1 east, was also detached from the town of Rockbridge, and under the name of Henrietta was instructed to elect the necessary officers to complete the organization thereof, the voting place being at the house of H. B. Miller. Town 10 north, of range 2 east, and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, and the north half of sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, in town 9 north, of range 2 east, and section 1 and the north half of section 12, in town north of range 1 east, were ordered to be organized into one separate town under the name of Ithaca, and the first election was ordered to be held at Mr. Thomas' school house.

The committee appointed to investigate and audit the books of the county treasurer, reported that they had done as instructed and found all in good order, and that the treasury contained money to the amount of $725.78.

While the board were discussing the financial affairs of the county government, Israel S. Sanderson, came into the room and presented to each member of the board, a copy of the first issue of the Richland county Observer, the first newspaper published within the limits of the county. This was Nov. 17, 1855. The board immediately passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That the board tender their sincere, thanks to Israel S. Sanderson, the editor of the Richland county Observer, for his kindness in presenting them with the first copies of his paper."

Town 10 north, of range 2 west, having asked for a separate organization, the prayer was granted, and the town named Akan and the house of Martin Munson was designated as the place of voting, at the first election.

The assessed value of the entire county this year shows a marked increase, being $399,185.83.

In November, 1856, at the annual meeting of the board of county supervisors, the organization of the two remaining towns was ordered, as follows: Town 12 north, of range 2 east, to be known as the town of Westford, and the first election for town officers to be held at the house of Asa Lincoln, in the village of Cazenovia. Town 10 north, of range 1 west, to be organized and known as the town of Dayton, and the first election to be held at the residence of Henry McNelly.

The building committee, having made their report, that they had let the contract, for erecting the county buildings, to Ira Andrews whose bid was $1,325, and that he had built the buildings in accordance with the plans and specifications as laid down in the contract; the board, in accepting the edifices from his hands, passed the following resolution, by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That the county board of supervisors tender their sincere thanks to Mr. Ira Andrews, the contractor, for the faithful discharge of his duties, and for the energetic spirit and action which he has manifested in the speedy completion of the county buildings."

Much of this county lying on hillsides, and the wash of rains destroying them, the question of plank roads is found, at this time, to come to the front. In answer to several petitions asking that companies might be empowered to build such roads, and enjoy the benefits and emoluments thereof, the board appointed a committee to look into the matter. The report of the committee is given in full as it is a complete history of the plan upon which companies were formed.

"We, your committee in the matter of plank road companies, would report: That it is the opinion of your committee that it is for the best interests of this county that the prayer of said petitions, with restrictions, be granted; and your committee would recommend that Garwood Green, Joseph C. Clark and J. W. Coffinberry, of the town of Buena Vista; D. L. Downs, Charles G. Rodolf and Napoleon Graham, of the town of Richmond; R. M. Miller, Jacob Rhodes and Reuben Powers, of the town of Richwood, be appointed commissioners to draft and compile charters, open stock or subscriptions for one, two or three plank and turnpike companies.

"One road may commence at Richland City, one at Richwood and one at Port Andrew, to run northerly in the direction of such terminus, as said commissioners shall determine, with a capital to each charter not to exceed $20,000, with shares of $20, payable in cash only, by per centum or otherwise.

"If the commissioners accepted, they were to hold their first meeting at Richmond, Dec. 20, 1856, and there pass such rules for their government as suited them, so as not to conflict with any State law. Provided, however, that the commissioners shall not have any demand on this county for their services.

"It is made the duty of the said commissioners to report, in a summary manner, all their doings in the premises, except the charters by them compiled shall be reported at length to the county board of supervisors, at any regular session, for approval, modification or rejection."

It was probably at this session of the board that the name of the village of Richmond was changed to that of Orion.

At an extra session called Jan. 5, 1857, for the purpose, the board ordered the purchase of a safe for the treasurer's office.

In November, 1857, at the annual meeting of the board, the extravagance that has characterized the various legislative bodies of later days, is foreshadowed by the board voting that each member be supplied with a lead pencil at the expense of the county.

The treasurer's report, submitted Nov. 13, 1857, gives the financial standing of the county at that date:

The committee appointed to ascertain the amount of outstanding warrants of the county, reported at this session. Their report declares that there were then outstanding of warrants issued from 1852 up to Jan. 1, 1857, $1,479.27; since Jan. 1, 1857, $1,796.66; making in all, $3,275.93.

The court house at Richland Centre having been destroyed by fire in the spring of 1860, an account of which is detailed elsewhere, the board of supervisors, at a special meeting held May, 1860, passed the following resolutions in regard to re-building the same:

"Resolved, That we build a court-house 28x38 feet, the court room to be on the lower floor, with two jury rooms above; and that we also build four fire-proof offices outside the court house, each 12x16 feet in dimension.

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to receive plans and specifications and bids for the building of the court-house and county offices; said plans, specifications and bids to be received on or before the 15th day of May, A. D. 1860, and that the said committee be, and is hereby empowered to let the building of the same to the lowest and best bidder."

D. L. Downs, James Barnes and William J. Bowen were appointed the committee under this resolution, and soon made their report to the board, saying that they had made the following plan for a court-house: "The building to be built of brick, the lower story with sixteen-inch walls, the upper twelve, with one inch hollow space therein. The lower room to be twelve feet from floor to ceiling, while the second floor should be nine feet between the same. The edifice to have a common roof, about one quarter pitch, and to be covered with good oak shingles, on hardwood sheathing. To be lighted with twelve windows below and twelve above. The whole structure to be surmounted by a cupola, as on the old court-house. The court room, being on the ground floor, to be floored with bricks placed on edge; the jury rooms, with good oak flooring; all inside wood-work and finishing to be in hardwood, and to be painted with three good coats of paint."

This plan was adopted by the board, and the committee instructed to proceed with the work, by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the building committee build, or cause to be built, a court-house, 28x38 feet in size, and fire-proof buildings for county offices, for the sum of $1,200, now in the treasurer's hands, and $1,000 in county orders, and as much better and larger as they can, with the amount to be raised by the subscription of the citizens of Richland Centre; said committee to be restricted to the said sum and the said $1,000 in county orders, which are to be issued and paid to the contractor, on the completion and accepting of the building, by the county board, and that all money remaining in the hands of the committee after the buildings are finished, be appropriated for furnishing the county offices."

The contract to build the county building was thereupon signed with Ira S. Haseltine, who immediately commenced the erection of the present edifices, and completed them before the fall of the same year.

In the meanwhile it was necessary that the county officers have some place for their books, papers, and for the transaction of their business. The board appointed Alden Haseltine, Allen Tinker and O. H. Malette a committee to provide suitable rooms for that purpose, and for a temporary court room; which committee next day made the report that "They had rented the rooms of D. Pease for sheriff, clerk of the courts and clerk of the board, for $7 per month, and they had hired the Lybrand hall for the holding of court, for $3 per day, lights and fuel included, and that the register of deeds be allowed to furnish his own room, at an expense not to exceed fifty cents per week; and the proposition of Dr. Gage, to furnish a room for the treasurer free of charge, be accepted."

Matters being arranged in this manner, the board ordered that for all intents and purposes, Lybrand hall should be the county court house, for the time being.

At the next meeting of the board of supervisors, held in November, 1860, the new court house was so far completed that the assembled wisdom of the county could occupy the same for their deliberations, and the first business was to apportion the offices to the officers of the county, which was done, and the matter regulated as we now find it.

At this time a petition was presented by the citizens of the town of Richmond, praying that the name of that town be changed to that of Orion. This prayer was granted, and the town has ever since been known by that cognomen.

The citizens of Richland Centre being desirous of removing the county jail to the court house square, petitioned the county board for permission to do so, at their own expense. This was immediately granted, and the building committee ordered to expend the sum of $25 in erecting a suitable foundation therefor.

At a special session of the board, held in July, 1861, a committee, consisting of W. J. Bowen, A. Loveless and W. Ketchum, was appointed to re-district the county into three precincts; the intention being to try and govern the county by three supervisors, instead of by the rather cumbrous machinery of the chairmen of the town boards, sixteen in number. This committee made its report, and on their recommendation the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That Richland county be divided into three supervisor districts, as follows: Richwood, Eagle, Orion and Buena Vista, to be called district number one; Richland, Rockbridge, Henrietta, Westford, Wil'ow and Ithaca, to be called district number two; Dayton, Bloom, Marshall, Forest, Sylvan and Akan, to be called district number three."

Several resolutions were passed at this and succeeding sessions, in regard to the relief of the families of the volunteers then going and gone to the front, which will be found under their proper head, in the chapter devoted to the war record of the county.

The subject that so long agitated the county politics came to the front this session—the building of a new jail. A committee having been appointed to look into the matter, reported favorably upon the undertaking, and recommended that the sum of $400 be raised for that purpose, but the matter was laid upon the table for the present.

The first mention of the purpose of purchasing a county poor farm was brought up at a meeting of the county board, held Nov. 20, 1865.

At a special meeting of the board of supervisors, held July 12, 1867, and called for the especial purpose of taking into consideration the erection of a jail, competent to hold the prisoners committed to it in safe keeping, the following resolutions were adopted:

“Whereas, The jail of the county is unfit, and not sufficient for the safe keeping of persons placed therein, therefore,

“Resolved, That the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500) be raised by tax, and appropriated for the erection of a new jail; plans and specifications to be hereinafter agreed upon by this board.

“Resolved, That J. G. S. Hayward visit Prairie du Chien and Viroqua, to get plans and estimates of cost of jails at those places.”

In accordance with the above resolution, at an adjourned meeting of the board, held Aug. 26, 1867, for the purpose of deciding upon the plan, etc., Thomas Cholerton, B. C. Hallin, and J. G. S. Hayward, were appointed a committee to draft the plan and make the specifications for the edifice, and the clerk of the board was instructed to advertise in the newspapers of the county, for bids for furnishing material, delivering the same, and doing all the work necessary to complete the said edifice.

These requirements having been complied with and the bids being received, the committee, deeming none of them satisfactory, determined upon building it themselves, which they at once commenced.

The county board, at this session, make a purchase of a safe, for the treasurer's office, at an expense of $1,061.88, including freight, going on the principle, evidently, of “fast bind, fast find,” and from experience, knowing that a poor safe will not keep the money in, or the festive burglar out, invested in a first class article, which is doing good service to this day.

The county board again met in regular session Nov. 16, 1869, and a resolution of that body recites: “That it is the opinion of a large portion of the people of Richland county, that the benefit to our schools from the visitation of the county superintendent, is not commensurate with the expense incurred, and,

“Whereas, The board are in favor of an economical administration of the county government, and desire to relieve the people of taxation, when it can be done without the sacrifice of the public good, do, therefore,

“Resolve, That the county superintendent of schools be hereby requested, during his next term of office, commencing Jan. 1, 1870, not to visit the schools, and we do, therefore, relieve him of that part of his duties, and he is requested to confine his labors to holding institutes, public examinations and making the necessary reports.”

At the session of the board, November, 1870, the clerk was instructed to have a well made on the court-house grounds, for the accommodation of the county officers, and as an extra precaution for the extinguishment of fires.

All along through the records, one is struck with the singular pertinacity of the various boards, who in their desire to a more economical administration of the finances of the county, are continually memorializing the Legislature for an amendment to the act in regard to the payment for the printing of the delinquent tax lists, and other county printing, which in their opinion is much too high.

The board having found out by this time that it was a mistake in their action in regard to the county superintendent of schools, and that the lowest salary that they can pay him, according to a statute of the State, is $800, by resolution rescinded their former instruction and desired him to devote his entire time to the duties of the office.

* The assessed value of all property in the county, in 1871, is given as $2,544,824.12.

As an evidence of the growth of the county, and its improved financial condition, the report of the treasurer of the county for November, 1872, is here inserted:

The poor farm subject again comes to the foreground, during the session of the board of supervisors, held November, 1874, but it seems there was a division of opinion upon the subject, and the more advanced thinkers had to give the matter up for the time being, finding themselves in the minority.

A resolution was also introduced, offering to donate the sum of $500 toward the town's sinking an artesian well in the court-house square. This produced considerable debate and was, when action was taken thereon, voted down.

Jan. 1, 1875, the board of county supervisors, in order to clear up the books and offices of the county officers, made the sale of all the tax sale certificates, remaining in the possession of the county, to James L. McKee, for the sum of $2,500, or about fifteen per cent. of their face value. This was considered at the time a very good price, as many of them were of quite ancient date, and others, no doubt, were illegally assessed and consequently were of no value.

The assessment rolls for 1875 show that there were then in the county, assessable, 365,898 acres of land, at an assessed value of $1,824,471; town property valued at $187,700. There was also of live stock, owned by the community, 5,308 horses, 15,612 head of horned cattle, 225 mules and donkeys, 22,625 sheep and 13,681 swine. The personal property assessable was valued at $711,223.

It was at the session of the board of supervisors, November, 1879, that a petition was presented, from the ex-soldiers of Richland county, for permission to place a memorial monument to their dead comrades in arms, in the court house square. The prayer was granted with the usual liberality of the board, and a place pointed out as the most appropriate, but from some cause or other the monument has not been erected yet. It has been suggested that, as so many Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic have been organized in Richland county, it would be fitting and proper that they take the matter in hand, and not let the dead heroes be forgotten. He who died with arms in his hands and his face to the foe, should have his name revered and his monument raised that men may see, lest they forget his deeds and death in defense of liberty and right.

When the board of supervisors met in special session, May, 25, 1881, Mr. Blackmer, of Burlington, Iowa, appeared before them, showing the Pauly system of steel-clad cells for jails, and the board, after fully understanding the merits of the invention, determined upon equipping the Richland county jail with them, passed a resolution adopting it and appointing the chairman, A. S. Ripley, J. D. Haring and George E. Bennett, clerk of the board, a committee to prepare and sign the contract with the party, and also to superintend the work of putting in the cells. The sum of $3,200 was also appropriated to defray the expense of the same.

In November, 1882, at the annual meeting of the board, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, By the county board of supervisors of Richland Co., Wis, that Homer J. Clark, the county clerk; Irvin Gribble, the county treasurer; D. L. Downs, O. F. Black, J. L. McKee and J. H. Miner be, and the same are hereby appointed, a committee to consider and devise plans, and procure estimates for the erection of a new court house in this county, and report their proceeding to the county board at its next annual session in 1883."

At the annual session held in November, 1883, this committee made a lengthy report, in which they recommended that a court house be erected upon the site occupied by the present county buildings. They thought the building should be about 45x90 feet in size, two stories and a basement in height, and estimated that it would cost about $20,000. The report continues that the strongest reasons for a new court house, that have been presented to the committee, were: "First, That the present building is not adequate to hold the necessary persons in attendance at court; such as witnesses, juries and parties; for evidence of which Judge Mills, in 1867, condemned it and rented Chandler's Hall for a term of three weeks; and in 1879 Judge Cothren rented Krouskop's Hall at a cost of $10 per day; and at the last term of court the room was intolerable by reason of being so small that it would not hold the crowd, and many persons were compelled to stay away, while others stayed outside the doors and windows. Second, That the records of the county are unsafe and exposed to fire. No person's title to land is secure, and endless litigation would grow out of the titles, tax titles, judgments, mortgages and other matters of record, in case of the destruction of the records."

It was also further stated "that all the estates of deceased persons, and all the rights and titles devised through the settlement of the same by the county court are now resting in wooden pigeon holes in a small wooden building surrounded by other inflammable buildings."

After considerable discussion it was decided to lay the report aside for the consideration of some future board of supervisors. But at the same time the matter was partly compromised by appropriating from the county treasury the sum of $600 for the erection of a small office for the county judge. This building was begun immediately after the board adjourned, and finished about Jan. 1, 1884. It stands just north of the other county buildings.

At the same session, the board fixed the salaries of the various county officers for the years 1884 and 1885 as follows: county treasurer, $800; county clerk, $800; County superintendent, $800; district attorney, $400; clerk of court, $600.

POOR FARM.

It is not to be wondered at, that the hardy pioneer of these grand old forest lands, in his desperate struggle for very existence with the forces of adverse nature, should be ever ready to extend a willing hand to the poor and needy brother man, whose needs and necessities exceeded his own, when we consider that his own condition was but one remove from that of penny and want. The many deeds of kindness, the thousand acts of brotherly charity, done in those early days by the hardy band of immigrants, who first essayed to hew themselves out homes in the vast primeval forest of our county, are borne upon the page of no earthly annals. But the memory of their charity exhales around them like the sweet incense upon the altar. "The poor ye have with ye always" fell from the lips of the Incarnate Son of God coupled with the injunction of "help one another," and the promise that "whosoever gave unto these poor, were it but a cup of cold water" should be particularly blessed. And when we look around us and mark the fortunes of our forefathers, we know that they, many of them at least, have "gathered of life's fair sheaves," through the blessing of giving to their failing, fainting fellow creatures. Never once did the primal set-tlar hesitate to share his last crust with the poor and necessitous; never once did the cry of the widow and orphan fall upon deaf ears, but heartily and readily was the provision made for their comfort, and they were not suffered to linger in abject poverty and want. Many a deed, done in the dark by those rugged sons of toil, should be engraved in letters of gold, were they but known; but the dark mantle of time has covered them up to our finite sight, and earthly annals will never bear their impress, but let us hope that in the hereafter their good deeds may be returned to them.

After the organization of the county, the various towns took measures for a more regular and sustained effort for the relief of the poor and needy; and as the number of those seeking relief necessarily grew greater as the population increased, the members of the county board thought that by concentrating these charities it could be performed more satisfactorily and at a less expense. In pursuance of this idea a resolution was adopted by the board of supervisors, Nov. 20, 1865, which after stating that, "being desirous of ascertaining whether a majority of the people of the county wish to abolish the distinction between town and county poor, and purchase a poor farm," it was determined to submit the same to a vote of the qualified voters of the county at the next general election. The estimates made at this time showed that the probable cost of the purchase would be about $5,000. This was accordingly done, but the people of the county seemed to think that the old way was preferable and declined to sanction the measure, and the matter was allowed to rest, for the time being.

In 1870 the matter again came to the front, and after much discussion the following resolutions were adopted on July 20, of that year.

"Resolved, That economy and duty demand the adoption of a county poor system, and the abolition of the present town system.

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to make inquiry, of other counties, relating to the county poor system, procure estimates of cost of farm and buildings, and report to this board at its next meeting.

Under this resolution, the chair appointed T. C. Clark, J. S. Elsworth and Vincent Harter, as the committee.

For some reason this committee failed to make any report, as far as the records show, and on Nov. 14, 1871, another committee was appointed for the same purpose, consisting of five members: J. S. Ellsworth, Jacob Brimer, William J. Bowen, O. H. Mallette and P. H. McCarthy. The gentlemen, after due consideration, returned two reports, the majority one being in these words:

"We, the undersigned, a committee appointed for the purpose of taking into consideration and reporting upon the subject of abolishing the distinction between the town and county poor system, beg leave to report as follows:

"We would recommend that the distinction now existing between the town and county poor system, be abolished, and that all poor persons in the county be supported at the expense of the said county.

Signed,

J. S. ELLSWORTH.

W. J. BOWEN.

J. BRIMER.

O. H. MALLETTE."

And the following resolution was placed before them for action:

"Resolved, That the distinction between the town and county poor, in this county, be, and the same is hereby abolished."

This was, on motion, referred to a committee, consisting of William Dixon, James Washburn and J. W. Jones, who, after due deliberation reported that they labored under too great a difficulty in procuring any reliable data, upon which to base an opinion in regard to the different systems, and recommended that the matter be taken into consideration by the committee of the whole. On the reception of this report, the board, by vote, laid the subject on the table, from whence it was not taken during the balance of the session.

The subject seems to break out chronically, all along through the records about this time, for we find, that at the November session of the board, 1875, another resolution was presented, abolishing the town system of taking care of the poor.

The minority report was signed by P. H. McCarthy, and dissented from the opinion of his colleagues.

Nothing further was done in the matter, however, and the question was left in abeyance, until in November, 1873, when a resolution was introduced, at a session of the board of supervisors, to adopt the county system of taking care of the destitute and penniless of the county; but the vote, when taken, was against its adoption, being ten against the measure and seven in favor. This was for many years the vexing question, and opinions were so divided upon the utility and economy of it, that it seemed impossible for it to be accomplished, but its friends never once gave up but upon every and all occasions brought it up for consideration.

The next year, November, 1874, it was once more presented to the board.

"Resolved, That the board should purchase a poor farm for the support of the poor and needy of this county;" but action on the matter was again indefinitely postponed.

There is an old proverb, that "constant dropping of water will wear a stone," and it is recorded, that, at the session of the board, held November, 1877, a resolution was finally adopted abolishing the town poor system and substituting the county relief plan; the clerk of the board being also instructed, at the same time, to file the resolution with the register of deeds. The towns were, however, instructed to take care of their own poor, at the expense of the county, until the board had provided suitable buildings for the reception of such indigent persons.

The first superintendents of the poor were also appointed by this board, Nov. 19, 1877, and were: A. M. Grumbeck-r, T. C. Clark and L. M. Thorp. The salaries of these officers were affixed, as being, $2 for every day of actual service, and mileage at the rate of six cents for every mile of actual travel. At the same time the following was adopted:

“Resolved, That the sum of $2,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated by the board of supervisors of Richland county, to make part payment on a county poor farm, and to provide suitable buildings for said farm.” It was also “Resolved, By the board of supervisors of Richland county, that the superintendents elected by the said board to purchase a poor farm, and erect suitable buildings thereon, for the use of the county poor, be, and they are hereby instructed not to purchase or locate said poor farm within two and a half miles of any village in said county.” A tax was also ordered to be levied of $2,500, for the support of the paupers for the ensuing year.

At a special session of the board of supervisors, held Feb. 6, 1878, the superintendents of the poor made the following report :

“We, the superintendents of the poor for the county, most respectfully report to your honorable body, that under the directions and resolutions of the board passed in November last, we have spent several days in viewing places and situations, and are unable to procure a suitable and advantageous location for a county poor farm outside the limits prescribed for the location of the same; and we most respectfully submit for your consideration the recommendation that the restriction be removed.

“Second, that the $2,000 appropriated for purchasing a poor farm, we deem inadequate for the purpose, as it necessitates the following expenditures :

“First, to make first payment on farm; second, erecting necessary buildings; third, for furnishing the house; fourth, to stock the farm;

fifth, to purchasing implements and seeds; sixth, to paying overseer and labor on the farm. We, therefore, most respectfully recommend that the $2,500 appropriated at the last session for the support of the poor, be placed at the disposal of the superintendents to meet the above expenditures. All of which is most respectfully submitted.

A. M. GRUMBECKER,
L. M. THORP,
T. C. CLARK,

Superintendents of the poor.”

On motion, the report was received and the recommendations contained therein adopted by a unanimous vote of the board, leaving to the judgment of the superintendents the location of the poor farm, and placing at their disposal the money asked for.

T. C. Clark having tendered his resignation as superintendent of the poor, S. P. Kanable was elected in his place.

The land for the farm was then purchased by the superintendents, and consists of the north-west quarter of section 36, and the north-east quarter of the northeast quarter of section 35, in the town of Bloom, and contains 200 acres. The price paid was $5,000, of which amount $1,000 was paid down, and the balance was to be made in two equal payments, in one and two years. The date of the purchase was March 9, 1878. The contract for digging the cellar, for the house, for the use of the indigent wards of the county was let to William Akan, Ira Monroe and W. H. Waters; who agreed to do it for the sum of $250. The contract for the frame erection was let to William Shepherd, whose bid for the same was $1,700. The following may be of some interest as showing the manner of outlay of so much money, by the so-called servants of the people.

Robert N. McKay was appointed the first overseer, at a salary of $500 per year.

At the same session the board passed a resolution deeming it, in their judgment, better to have one than three superintendents, and proceeded to an election. John A. Meeker was chosen as such, to act for the term of one year.

In 1879, as is learned by a report made to the board, there were nineteen inmates in the county poor house, and the average cost per head was $46.17 per annum, or about eighty-eight cents per week. The total cost of running the farm and poor house was $1,879.60, and the products were valued at $1,557.27, leaving but a small deficit.

At the annual meeting of the board, the method of attending to the poor farm and the inmates thereof by one superintendent, not proving satisfactory, a change was again made, and three superintendents were appointed, who now hold that office: John A. Meeker, A. S. Ripley and Thomas Sippy.

The present overseer of the poor at the farm is Philip Warren, who has held that position for the past two years.

From the report of the examining committee made to the board of supervisors, dated Nov. 17, 1883, it is learned that at that time there were seventeen inmates on the poor farm; the whole number of weeks attendance by paupers at the poor house during the year just closed, was 780; the cost of maintaining each individual upon the farm per week was $1.86; amount paid overseer per year, $500.

CHAPTER VI.

POLITICAL STATISTICS.

In this chapter is given the vote of Richland county for every general election held from the organization of the county until 1884, inclusive, so far as can be ascertained from the records. It will be noticed that there is no report of an election in 1883. By an act of the Legislature, passed during the winter of 1882-3, it was provided that all State and county officers should thereafter be elected in "even years." Therefore, those officers who would otherwise have been elected in 1883, hold over one year.

The first election held within the limits of Richland county was in April, 1850, when the first county officers were chosen. The following is the list, although no record is in existence to show the number of votes polled, or where the election was held: John Rutan, county clerk; Marvin White, register of deeds; A. B. Slaughter, clerk of the courts; D. H. Byrd, county treasurer; John J. Mathews, sheriff; J. W. Coffinberry, county judge, and John H. Price, E. H. Dyre and Adam Byrd, members of the board of supervisors.

The election of Nov. 5, 1850, was the first held in the county of which there is any record. At this election the total number of votes cast was 158, divided as follows:

The record states that the following county officers were elected: John Rutan, county clerk; A. B. Slaughter, clerk of court; Levi Houts, register of deeds; D. H. Byrd, county treasurer; J. W. Coffinberry, county judge; John J. Mathews, sheriff; John Stone, prosecuting attorney; James Appleby, surveyor and William Kincaannon, coroner.

The election July 15, 1851, was a special election, at which only eight votes were cast, electing John J. Morland to fill the office of prosecuting attorney, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of John Stone.

In November, 1851, the board of canvassers, having decided that the election held this year was not in accordance with the law, rejected all returns. "No election had taken place," was entered upon the records, and the old officers held over.

CHAPTER VII.

NATIONAL, STATE AND COUNTY REPRESENTATION.

In this chapter it is the design to trace the history of each of the county offices from the organization of the county to the present day, and also to mention the name of every citizen of Richland who has served the Nation, State or county in an official capacity. As far as possible, sketches are given of the various gentlemen. There has been much difficulty connected with obtaining material for biographical sketches of those who have died or moved from the county since their official services were performed. Where the mention of men who were prominent in their day, is short, it is because of the meagre material to be secured.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Upon its organization, Richland county became a part of the Second congressional district. Orsamus Cole was elected to represent this district in November, 1849, and served in the Thirty-first Congress. Mr. Cole is the present chief justice of the supreme court of Wisconsin.

Benjamin C. Eastman succeeded Mr. Cole as congressman from the Second district and served in the Thirty-second and Thirty-third Congresses, or from 1851 to 1855.

Cadwallader C. Washburn next represented the Second district, and served in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses, from 1855 to 1861. He afterwards became governor of Wisconsin.

In November, 1860, Luther Hanchett was elected to succeed Gov. Washburn. He died Nov. 24, 1862, and Walter McIndoe was elected to fill out the balance of the term. At this time Wisconsin had three representatives in Congress.

By the census of 1860, it was found that Wisconsin was entitled to six representatives in the National House, and upon the State being re-districted, Richland county became a part of the Third congressional district. Amasa Cobb, of Mineral Point, first represented the new Third district. He was elected in 1864, and re-elected in 1866 and 1868, serving in the Thirty-eight, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses.

J. Allen Barber succeeded Amasa Cobb, as congressman from the Third district, being elected in November, 1870, and re-elected two years later.

In November, 1864, H. S. Magoon was elected congressman from this district, and served in the Forty-fourth Congress.

In November, 1876, George C. Hazelton, of Boseobel, Grant county, was elected to represent the Third congressional district, and being twice re-elected, served six years or in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses.

In November, 1882, Gilbert M. Woodward, of La Crosse, was elected congressman from this district, and is the present incumbent of the office.

RICHLAND COUNTY IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Richland county first appears as being represented in the Legislature at the third session of that body, which convened Jan. 9, 1850, and adjourned Feb. 11, 1850. At this time this county was associated with Crawford and other counties, as the third senatorial district, and was represented by James Fisher, of Prairie du Chien. In the Assembly, Richland associated with Iowa county and was represented by Moses M. Strong, of Mineral Point. Mr. Strong was elected speaker of the House. He was considered at that time one of the finest lawyers in the west.

The fourth session of the Legislature convened January 8, and adjourned March 18, 1851. At this time, Richland, with other counties, was represented in the Senate by Levi Sterling, of Mineral Point. Charles G. Rodolf, of Highland, served Richland county in the Assembly. Mr. Rodolf was for many years identified with the development of Richland county, and is often noticed in this volume. He now lives at Museoda.

The fifth session convened January 14, and adjourned April 9, 1852. Levi Sterling, of Mineral Point, was still in the Senate. Luman M. Strong, of Highland, represented the county in the Assembly.

The Legislature convened for its sixth session on the 12th of January, 1853, and adjourned April 4, 1853, until the 6th of June following, for the purpose that the Senate might sit as a court of impeachment and the Assembly be present to prosecute the trial of Levi Hubbell, judge of the second judicial circuit, against whom articles of impeachment had been exhibited, charging him with acts of corrupt conduct and malfeasance in office. For this purpose the Legislature again convened on the 6th of June, and adjourned finally on July 13, 1853. Levi Sterling, of Mineral Point, in this Legislature, represented the district of which Richland county formed a part. In the Assembly the county was served by Henry Conner, then, as now, of Port Andrew.

The Legislature convened for its seventh session Jan. 11, 1854, and adjourned April 3, 1854. Levi Sterling was still in the Senate from this district; Nathaniel Wheeler was the assemblyman. Mr. Wheeler was a Methodist preacher, who at that time lived in the town of Buena Vista, where he was a very early settler. He remained there until just before the breaking out of the war, when he left the county. He is spoken of as having been a popular and influential man in those days.

The eighth session of the Legislature began on Jan. 10, 1855, and adjourned April 2, 1855. The district to which Richland county was attached, was represented in the Senate by Hon. Amasa Cobb, of Mineral Point, one of the most able lawyers in the State, and afterward a member of Congress. Hon. D. L. Downs, now of Richland Centre, represented this county in the Assembly.

The Legislature convened for its ninth session Jan. 9, 1856; took a recess from March 31, 1856, to September 3, and adjourned finally Oct. 14, 1856. Amasa Cobb still represented this district in the Senate. In the Assembly, Robert Akan served Richland county. Mr. Akan came from the eastern States and at a very early day settled with his family upon a farm a short distance northwest of Richland Centre. There he remained until 1875, when he sold his place for $5,000, and removed to Webster City, Iowa. He was a genial, pleasant fellow, and was well liked by his neighbors.

The tenth session of the Legislature convened January 14, and adjourned March 9, 1856. L. W. Joiner, of Wyoming, represented the district, of which Richland county formed a part, in the Senate. Robert C. Field served Richland county in the Assembly. Mr. Field came to Richland City as early as 1850, and located upon a farm about a mile north of that village. He remained there for about ten years, when he removed to Trempealeau county in the northern part of the State, and represented that district in the Senate. He died there in 1876. He was a very active business man, and spent most of his time in trading and bartering. He would buy anything he saw, and sell anything he owned.

The eleventh session of the Legislature convened January 13, and adjourned May 17, 1858. Lemuel W. Joiner, of Wyoming, still represented this district in the Senate. In the Assembly, Richland county was for the second time served by Charles G. Rodolf, of Orion.

The twelfth session convened January 12, and adjourned March 21, 1859. At this time, Charles G. Rodolf, of Orion, was in the Senate, and William Dixon, of Lone Rock, in the Assembly.

The thirteenth session of the Legislature convened Jan. 10, 1860, and adjourned April 2, 1860. C. G. Rodolf was still in the Senate. Jeremiah L. Jackson, of Viola, had succeeded William Dixon as assemblyman. Mr. Jackson still lives in the town of Forest.

Gage, of Richland Centre, served the county in the Assembly.

Hon. William Ketchum was born at Jericho, Long Island, May 24, 1819. In 1851 he came west and located at Richland City, where for many years he was engaged in the lumber business. He served his two terms in the State Senate with honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He was always relied upon for his integrity and uprightness in all his official acts. His home remained at Richland city until the time of his death which occurred Sept. 14, 1879.

Richland county, according to the census taken in 1870, was entitled to two representatives in the Assembly. They were William Dixon, of Ithaca, and George W. Putnam, of Ash Ridge. J. H. Waggoner, a former resident of Richland county, was chief clerk of the Assembly during this and the two following sessions.

The twenty-sixth session convened January 8, and adjourned March 20, 1873. Henry L. Eaton, of the town of Buena Vista, was still in the Senate. In the Assembly, Richland county was served by Norman L. James, of Richland Centre, and George W. Putnam, of Ash Ridge.

The Legislature convened for its twenty-seventh session January 14, and adjourned March 12, 1874. George Krouskop, of Richland Centre, had again been elected Senator. In the Assembly, Richland county's representatives were Joseph B. McGrew, of the town of Richland, and Phillip M. Smith, of Marshall.

This Legislature met in extra session June 4, 1878, for the purpose of completing the revision of the statutes, and adjourned June 7, 1878. Archibald Campbell, of Middleburg, was Senator from Richland county. The assemblymen from Richland were Philip M. Smith, of Richland Centre, and Joseph M. Thomas, of Lone Rock.

The Legislature convened for its thirty-second session January 8, and adjourned March 5, 1879. The representatives from Richland county were the same in this as in the preceding session, except that J. M. Thomas, of Ithaca, had succeeded P. M. Smith, in the Assembly.

The thirty-third session of the Legislature began in January, 1880, and closed in April, 1880. J. B. McGrew had been elected State Senator, and took his seat at the opening of the session. The Legislature convened in January, 1881, for its thirty-fourth session, and adjourned April, 1881. Mr. McGrew was still in the Senate. B. M. Jarvis, of the town of Westford, and John H. Case, of the town of Eagle, served the county in the Assembly.

The thirty-fifth session of the Legislature began in January, and closed in March, 1882. This county at that time was associated with Iowa county as a senatorial district, and was represented by W. C. Meffert, a harness-maker, who lived at Arena, in Iowa county. The assemblymen from Richland county in this session were James Washburn, of the town of Rock-bridge, and George H. Tate, of the town of Forest.

During the winter of 1852-3 an act was passed by the Legislature changing the terms of office of senators from two to four years, and assemblymen from one to two years. The number of assemblymen was lessened, and Richland county was only entitled to one representative in the lower house. It was also provided that thereafter sessions of the Legislature should be held biennially. Senator Meffert held over from the former election. C. Thomas was elected assemblyman.

COUNTY CLERK.

John Rutan was the first county clerk for the county of Richland. He was elected at the organization of the county, in April, 1850, and was re-elected in November of that year. Mr. Rutan was among the first settlers at Richland City, where he was clerking in a store when elected to the clerkship. Soon after the expiration of his term of office he left the county. He was a married man; had a fair education, and in those days was considered a prominent man.

In November, 1852, Hascal Haseltine was elected county clerk and served one term. Mr. Haseltine was a native of Vermont, a member of the Haseltine family who settled at Richland Centre and founded that village. Hascal settled with his family upon what has since been platted as the Schoolcraft addition to Richland Centre. He remained in the county for a number of years and finally removed to Missouri, where he still lives.

David Strickland, of Richland Centre, succeeded Mr. Haseltine, being elected in November, 1854. His deputy was Israel Janney, who at that time was register of deeds.

In November, 1856, Charles D. Stewart was elected county clerk and served two years.

By the election in November, 1858, D. Glazier Pease, became county clerk, and made an excellent officer. Mr. Pease is still a resident of the town of Richland.

C. H. Smith succeeded Mr. Pease as county clerk, being elected in the fall of 1860. He served two years.

In November, 1862, G. L. Laws was elected clerk of court, and being re-elected in 1864 and 1866, served six years. Mr. Laws was a native of Illinois. At an early day, as early at least as 1850, he came to Wisconsin with his parents, and settled in Richland county, upon the Wisconsin river, at a point which took the name of "Law's Ferry." About 1860, Mr. Laws moved to Richland Centre and taught school here; when the war broke out he went into the service. At the battle of Williamsburg he lost a leg, and after partially recovering, in the hospital, he returned to his Richland county home, and was soon afterward elected county clerk. For some time he was associated with W. M. Fogo in the publication of a paper at Richland Centre, and was also a partner of C. H. Smith in the real estate and abstract business. He remained here until 1879, when he removed to Nebraska. He is now register of the United States land office at McCook, in that State. Laws was a man of more than ordinary education and business ability, and while like all men he was unfortunate in some respects, yet he is spoken of by all as having been a prominent man, and one who made many friends.

W. H. Pier was the successor of G. L. Laws, being elected in November, 1868. In 1870 and 1872 he was re-elected, serving the same length of time as Mr. Laws. Mr. Pier is now engaged in the banking business at Richland Centre.

In the fall of 1874, Jesse G. Bunell, then of Westford, but now of Richland Centre, was elected county clerk. In 1876 and in 1878 he was re-elected, serving three terms.

George W. Putnam was elected county clerk in November, 1880, and served the regular term of two years. Mr. Putnam is still a resident of the town of Marshall, Richland county.

By the election in November, 1882, Homer J. Clark became county clerk, and is the present incumbent, making one of the most thorough and efficient officers the county has ever had.

CLERK OF COURT.

The first clerk of court for Richland county was A. B. Slaughter, who was elected in April, 1850, and re-elected in November, 1850, and 1852. In 1853 he was elected county judge and held that office for three successive terms. Judge Slaughter was a Kentuckian by birth. He came to Richland county in 1848-9 and settled in the town of Richwood. A few years afterwards he moved to what is now the village of Orion, where he remained, coming to Richland Centre to attend to the duties of county judge, until after the close of the war, when he removed to Kansas, where he still lives. Judge Slaughter was a man of a good deal of natural ability, which was supplemented by a good business education. He was kind hearted, benevolent, genial and pleasant, and a man of the strictest sense of honor. Politically he was a democrat, but he was not aggressive or dogmatic in his political belief, nor much of a politician, according to the generally accepted meaning of the word.

C. D. Bellville succeeded Judge Slaughter as clerk of court, but did not serve but a short time. Mr. Bellville came to Richland county from Indiana and settled with his family upon a farm in the town of Richwood. When elected clerk of court he came to Richland Centre to attend court. Later he removed to the town of Sylvan and remained there for a number of years. When the war broke out he went into the service and his family returned to Indiana. He settled in that State when the war closed and it is presumed still makes it his home.

A. B. Slaughter succeeded Mr. Bellville as clerk of court. He is noticed elsewhere at length.

In November, 1856, John S. Wilson was elected clerk of court and served one term. He afterward became a member of the bar and engaged in practice at Richland Centre, Lawrence Van Dusen was elected clerk of court in November, 1858, and served two years. He also became a member of the bar and engaged in practice.

J. L. McKee succeeded Mr. Van Dusen by the election in November, 1860. He is still a resident of Richland Centre.

In November, 1862, Milton Satterlee was elected clerk of the court and served one term. Mr. Satterlee is still a resident of Richland county, now making Woodstock his home.

D. S. Hamilton succeeded Milton Satterlee. He was elected in November, 1864, and re-elected in 1866. D. S. Hamilton was originally from the State of New York, but he came to Richland county directly from the southern part of Wisconsin in 1854. He located in Richland Centre, and among other lines of business which at times he followed, he engaged in the practice of law before justice courts. He was married while here and remained until about 1873, when he removed to Readsburg, Wis., where he still lives.

James Lewis was the next clerk of court, being elected in November, 1868, and re-elected in November, 1870. He afterward read law; was admitted to the bar, engaged in practice, and served one term as district attorney.

Michael Murphy, of Richland Centre, succeeded Mr. Lewis. He was elected in November, 1872, and re-elected in 1874 and 1876, serving six years. He is the present district attorney for Richland county.

In November, 1878, Homer J. Clark the present county clerk, was elected clerk of court and served one term.

George E. Bennett, the present affable and efficient clerk of court, was elected to succeed Mr. Clark in November, 1880, and was re-elected in 1882.

REGISTER OF DEEDS.

Marvin White had the honor of first filling the office of register of deeds for Richland county. He was elected at the organization of the county in April, 1850, and served until the qualification of his successor, who was elected in the fall of the same year. Marvin White was a mechanic who had settled in the village of Richmond in 1849. He was a single man and boarded "round among the folks." He remained until 1852 when he went north.

In November, 1850, Levi Houts, of the present town of Orion, was elected register of deeds and served two years.

C. M. McCorkle succeeded Mr. Houts, as register of deeds, being elected in November, 1852. Mr. McCorkle has settled with other members of that family, at Sextonville. He was a man of delicate health and before his term of office as register of deeds had expired, he died of consumption. In accordance with his wish, expressed before his death, the body was buried on the tall bluff near his former home. Mr. McCorkle is remembered as a man of excellent character, and one who was well thought of among the pioneers.

Upon the death of Mr. McCorkle, Israel Janney was appointed to fill the vacancy and in November, 1854, was elected for the full term, and was re-elected in 1856. Mr. Janney is now a resident of the town of Rockbridge, Richland county.

In November, 1858, Andrew J. Page was elected register of deeds. In 1860 and 1862 he was re-elected, serving six years. "Jack" Page, as he was usually called, came to the county at an early day, and settled with friends on Willow creek. He was a cripple, having through some misfortune lost the use of his limbs, so he had to be carried about. When elected to office, or possibly a short time previous, he moved to town. He died a short time after being elected for his last term as register of deeds. Mr. Page was a man of a great deal of ability. His appearance was odd, even painful; his head being very large in proportion to the size of the body, and his legs dangling lifeless, almost sent a chill of pity to all who saw him.

Politically Mr. Page was originally a democrat, but in later years he became a republican.

Upon the death of Mr. Page, John S. Wilson was appointed register of deeds by the Governor, and in November, 1863, he was elected to the office for the balance of the term.

In November, 1864, Milton Satterlee was elected register of deeds. Mr. Satterlee came from Indiana and settled at Woodstock at an early day. When elected to office he removed to Richland Centre, and lived there until after the expiration of his term, after which he returned to his former home, where he still lives.

A. Loveless succeeded Mr. Satterlee, being elected in November, 1866, and re-elected in 1868. Mr. Loveless came from the State of New York and settled in the town of Forest, Richland county, as early as 1858. He was an elderly man at the time of his removal here, and had quite a large family. J. A. Loveless, a son of his, still lives, and is a prominent man in the town of Forest; and a daughter is the wife of Van S. Bennett, the State senator from Vernon and Crawford counties. When elected register of deeds the old gentleman took up his residence at Richland Centre, and remained there until a short time before his death in 1871. A. Loveless is said to have been one of the most upright and honorable men who have lived in the county, and probably no better idea can be given of the esteem in which he was held than to repeat the words of an early settler in speaking of him: "He was kind, benevolent, honorable, of urbane manners, a man in every sense. You could not exaggerate his worth to a community, nor the esteem in which he was held." Mr. Loveless was a republican, but dabbled but very little in politics. He was badly crippled with rheumatism.

John D. Funston succeeded Mr. Loveless as register of deeds. He was elected in November, 1870, and served one term. Mr. Funston is still a resident of Richland Centre.

In November, 1872, David Sommers was elected register of deeds, and being re-elected in 1874, served four years. Mr. Sommers came to Richland county at an early day, and settled upon a farm in the present town of Sylvan. When the war broke out he enlisted, and lost one arm in the service, after which he returned to his former home. When elected to office he removed to Richland Centre. Shortly after the expiration of his term of office he sold his place and removed to Dakota; returning again to Wisconsin, he settled in Vernon county, near the Richland county line, where he still lives.

Reuben Sutton was the next register of deeds. He was elected in November, 1876, and re-elected in 1878.

In November, 1880, W. H. Rennick, of the town of Henrietta, was elected to succeed Mr. Sutton, and served one term.

Reuben Sutton was again elected register of deeds in November, 1882, and is the present incumbent.

COUNTY TREASURER.

The first treasurer of Richland county was D. H. Byrd, who was elected in the spring, and re-elected in November, 1850. Mr. Byrd came to Richland county with his parents, in 1847, and settled at the head of what has since been known as Byrd's creek, in the town of Richwood. D. H. Byrd afterwards married a daughter of Matthew Alexander, whose family was the second to locate within the limits of the county. When elected treasurer, Mr. Byrd moved to Richmond City, then the county seat, and remained until about June, 1852, when he removed to Oregon, where, it is thought, he still lives.

In November, 1852, Dr. Jacob Brimer was elected county treasurer, and being re-elected in 1854, served two terms. Dr. Brimer is still a resident of Richland Centre.

A. H. Bush was the next county treasurer, being elected in November, 1856. Mr. Bush was a native of the State of New York. He came to Richland county at an early day, and settled upon a farm within the present limits of the town of Ithaca, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and also taught school. When elected to office he removed to Richland Centre, and later became closely identified with the temperance movement, at one time being the highest officer of the Good Templars' Lodge in the State. A few years later he returned to his farm and became a local preacher for the Baptist Church. He remained in the county until about 1874 when he removed to Nebraska, where he still lives, having since served one term in the Legislature of that State.

In November, 1858, Dr. D. L. Downs was elected treasurer and served one term. He is the present county judge.

E. M. Sexton succeeded Judge Downs, being elected in November, 1860. He is noticed elsewhere at length.

In November, 1862, James L. McKee was elected treasurer and served one term. Mr. McKee is still a resident of Richland Centre.

C. H. Smith was elected county treasurer in November, 1864, and being re-elected in 1866, served four years. Mr. Smith was a prominent man in the county in the decade between 1860 and 1870, and was identified with many public interests and enterprises. At one time he was quite wealthy, but like thousands of others throughout Wisconsin, a large proportion of his worldly goods vanished in the great hop panic in 1868. He moved from here to Windom, in Cottonwood Co., Minn., where he was elected to represent his district in the State Senate. In 1880 he removed to Worthington, Minn., and upon the resignation of Hon. J. P. Moulton as receiver of the United States land office at that place, Mr. Smith was appointed his successor to that responsible position. At about the same time, Mr. Smith was also appointed field agent of the Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul & Omaha Railroad Company, succeeding Ex-Gov. Stephen Miller. He has been honored with many other positions of trust by his Minnesota fellow-men, and has in every way proved himself worthy of their suffrage.

In November, 1863, William H. Joslin was elected county treasurer, and in 1870, he was re-elected. The following biography of Mr. Joslin was published in the Wisconsin Blue Book. "William H. Joslin, (Rep.) Richland Centre, was born Sept. 25, 1829, in Ypsilanti, Mich.; had a common school education; is a farmer; came to Wisconsin in 1841 and settled at Madison; settled in Richland county in 1848; has held various local offices and was sheriff of Richland county in 1859 and 1860; county treasurer in 1869-70-71 and 1872. Recruited a company, commissioned captain Aug. 16, 1862, assigned to company B, 25th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. Sent to Minnesota to guard the frontier against Indian depredations. Went south February, 1863; stationed at Columbus, Ky., till June; ordered to join Grant at Vicksburg; returned to Helena, Ark., remained till February, 1864; accompanied Sherman on his expedition, returned and joined the grand army at Chattanooga, May 5, 1864. Participated in the battles of Resaca, Dallas, Kennesaw, Nick, Jack, Decatur, Atlanta, Jonesboro, with Sherman in his march to the sea, also his march through the Carolinas and through to Washington; participated in the battles of Salkehatchie and Bentonville. Commissioned major, Aug. 25, 1863. Brevetted lieutenant-colonel, March 13, 1865. Was elected assemblyman for 1880, receiving 957 votes against seventy-eight for Lunenschloss, and 464 for H. W. Fries. Is at present assistant superintendent of public property, a State appointment.

J. F. Walker succeeded Mr. Joslin as county treasurer, being elected in Nov. 1872. Mr. Walker is still a resident of the town of Richland.

In November, 1874, Charles Wesley Peckham of the town of Bloom, was elected county treasurer and served two years.

H. L. Burnham, of the town of Ithaca succeeded Mr. Peckham. He was elected in November, 1876, and re-elected in November, 1878. Serving four years.

Irvin Gribble, the present county treasurer, was elected in November, 1880, and re-elected in November, 1882. Richland county never had a more capable, obliging and satisfactory officer than Mr. Gribble makes.

SHERIFF.

John J. Matthews has the honor of having been the first sheriff of Richland county. He was elected at the organization of the county in April 1850, and re-elected in November of that year for the full term. Mr. Matthews was among the very earliest settlers in the county, and as his name frequently occurs in this volume it is unnecessary, in this connection, to speak of him at length.

R. C. Hawkins was elected sheriff in November, 1852. Mr. Hawkins came to Richland county at an early day and settled with his family at Richland Centre, which remained his home until after the close of the war. In the spring of 1861 he raised a company of volunteers which was mustered into the service as company H, of the 5th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and Mr. Hawkins was elected captain. The company left Richland Centre, May 26, 1861. Shortly after the close of the war Mr. Hawkins removed to Woodstock where he lived until taking up his residence in Dakota, in 1876. He now lives in Sioux Falls, D. T., and is county judge of Minnehaha county. Mr. Hawkins, was a large man, slow of movement, but jolly and whole-souled in disposition.

In November, 1854, George C. White was elected sheriff and served two years. Mr. White was among the first settlers in the town of Richmond having settled upon a farm a short distance from the present village of Orion, at a very early day. There he remained until the war broke out when he enlisted and was killed in the service. He, with several others, getting into close quarters, surrendered to the enemy and were shot while in irons. Marvin White was a man of a good deal of intelligence and ability and was well liked by all the early settlers He was an active man in politics being what was then termed a democrat "dyed in the wool."

In November, 1856, L. M. Thorp, of the town of Richwood was elected sheriff and served one term.

William H. Joslin succeeded Mr. Thorp, by the election in November, 1858, and served one term.

E. L. Moody was the next sheriff, being elected in November, 1860. Mr. Moody was a native of the State of New York. He came west at an early day and settled with his family upon a farm in the town of Westford, Richland county. When elected to office he removed to Richland Centre and remained until the time of his death, which occurred in 1862. Two of his daughters now live in the town of Forest. He was a man of upright character and held the respect of all.

Upon the death of Mr. Moody, A. S. Neff was appointed to serve the residue of the term. Mr. Neff is still a resident of Richland county.

In November, 1862, Joseph McMurtrie was elected sheriff and served one term. Joseph McMurtrie was born in St. Clair Co., Ill., in 1832. When he was nine years old the family removed to La Fayette Co., Wis. In 1843 the family scattered, and until 1856 Joseph spent most of his time in Iowa county. During the year last mentioned Joseph settled in Richland Centre, and engaged at blacksmithing. He remained there until 1871, when he removed to Cottonwood Co., Minn., where he still lives.

In November, 1864, L. M. Thorp was again elected sheriff, but did not serve out the full term.

Hiram Welton was appointed sheriff upon the resignation of Mr. Thorp, and served out the balance of the term. Mr. Welton came originally from Ohio but direct from Indiana, in 1852, and settled upon a farm about two miles south of Richland Centre. He lived there until the time of his death in 1873. His widow and several daughters are living in Kansas; and one son W. W. Welton, lives at Sextonville. Hiram Welton was held in high esteem by all who knew him; being a man of the most strict integrity.

In November, 1866, Joseph McMurtrie was again elected sheriff.

J. B. McGrew, then of the town of Richland, succeeded Mr. McMurtrie as sheriff, being elected in the fall of 1868. Mr. McGrew now lives in the town of Marshall, and has been a prominent man in political and all public moves.

In November, 1870, Capt. W. C. S. Barron of Richland Centre, was elected sheriff and served two years.

R. D. Robinson was elected sheriff in November, 1872, and served a like term. Mr. Robinson now lives in Chicago.

In November, 1874, Capt. W. C. S. Barron, of Richland Centre, was again elected sheriff.

G. N. Matteson was elected sheriff in November, 1876 and served one term. Matteson came from northern Ohio, and settled at Richland Centre, in 1856. For a number of years he was engaged in running a general merchandise store. He was a dentist by profession, and practiced from 1868 until elected sheriff. He is still a resident of Richland Centre.

D. S. Noble, of the town of Marshall, succeeded Mr. Matteson as sheriff, and served two years.

In November, 1880, Harry Busby was elected sheriff, and served until the time of his death, in January, 1882. Mr. Busby came originally from the State of New York. He located at Richland Centre, in 1871, and followed his trade, painting, also running a livery stable, until elected sheriff. His death occurred while attending an entertainment in the hall. His family still reside in Richland Centre.

W. C. S. Barron was appointed to succeed Mr. Busby and filled out the residue of the term.

A. D. Lane, the present sheriff, was elected in November, 1882.

COUNTY JUDGE.

The first county judge of Richland county was J. W. Coffinberry, who was elected upon the organization of the county, in April, 1850, and re-elected in November of the same year. In 1851 he resigned. Judge Coffinberry was known as C. Bre, after 1856. He is treated more at length in the bar chapter.

Upon the resignation of Judge Coffinberry, David Strickland was appointed his successor, and served the remainder of the term. Judge Strickland also receives more extended notice in the chapter upon the bar.

In November, 1853, A. B. Slaughter was elected county judge. He was re-elected in April, 1857, and April, 1861, serving twelve years. Judge Slaughter was a native of Kentucky; but at an early day he settled in Lafayette, Ind., where he became judge of the municipal court. In 1848 he came to Richland Co., Wis., and settled in Richwood. In 1850 he removed to near Orion, where he remained until 1868, coming up to Richland Centre to attend to the duties of his office. In 1868 he removed to Missouri, then to Kansas, where he still lives. Judge Slaughter was the kind of a man who made every one his friend; he was a genial, pleasant, whole-souled man, highly esteemed by all, and had but very few if any enemies. Politically, he was a democrat.

James H. Miner, succeeded A. B. Slaughter as county judge, being elected in April, 1865. He is noted at length in the bar chapter.

In April, 1869, Henry W. Fries was elected county judge. He was re-elected in 1873 and 1877, serving until the time of his death in February, 1880.

Judge Henry W. Fries was of German descent, his father, Rev. Henry Fries having come from Germany and settled in Union Co., Penn., where Judge Fries was born in 1813. He remained there until 1858, when he came west and settled in Richland Co., Wis. Here he remained until the time of his death, which occurred on Feb. 14, 1880. He left a wife, a family of ten children and an only brother. He had gathered about him many strong friends. He had by his social and affable ways, as well as by his strict integrity won the confidence and esteem of all the citizens. He was well liked as a public officer, noted for those sterling virtues which go to make up an independent and fearless man, and yet had but few, if any, enemies. In his official acts he was impartial, conscientious and particularly careful of the rights of the widow and the fatherless, and it is conceded that the probate business of the county was never better or more impartially discharged.

Upon the death of Judge Fries, D. L. Downs was appointed county judge, and filled out the residue of the term. In April, 1881, he was elected for the full term and is the present incumbent, giving excellent satisfaction to both the bar and the county at large.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

As all of the gentlemen who have held this office from the organization of the county until the present time, have been lawyers, and therefore treated at length in the chapter devoted to the bar, it is only necessary in this connection to give their names and the years in which they were elected. They are as follows:

John J. Moreland, 1850; John Stone, April, 1851; David Strickland, 1852; H. A. Eastland, 1854; James H. Miner, 1856-58; A. P. Thompson, 1860; H. A. Eastland, 1862-64; John S. Wilson, 1866; Oscar F. Black, 1868-70; James Lewis, 1872-74; Eugene C. Wulfing, 1876-78; Kirk W. Eastland, 1880; Michael Murphy, 1882.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

The change of the educational system, from town to county superintendence, has been treated in another connection.

The first county superintendent of schools of Richland county was Rev. J. H. Mathers, who was elected in November 1861, and served two years.

In November, 1863, W. C. Wright was elected superintendent of schools, and served one term. Mr. Wright was a lawyer, who, at that time was located at Richland Centre.

In November, 1865, Van S. Bennett, now of Rockton, Vernon Co., Wis., was elected superintendent of schools. He was born in Medina, Ohio, March 15, 1836. He received an academic education. His parents removed from Ohio to Wisconsin in 1846, settling in Medina, Dane county; thence to Jefferson county in 1852, and to Richland county in 1855. In September, 1861, Van S. enlisted in company I, 12th Wisconsin Infantry, as lieutenant; was promoted to the captaincy in May 1862, and was honorably discharged in November, 1864. In 1866 he removed to Rockton Vernon county, where he still lives. He was three times chairman of the county board of Vernon county; was a member of the Assembly in 1869-70 and is the present senator from Vernon and Crawford counties.

G. W. Putnam, of the town of Marshall, succeeded Mr. Bennett, as school superintendent of Richland county. He was elected in November, 1867, and re-elected in 1869, serving four years.

William J. Waggoner, of the town of Forest, was elected superintendent of schools in November, 1871, and was re-elected in 1873.

David D. Parsons was the next superintendent of schools. He was elected in November, 1875, and re-elected in 1877 and 1879, serving six years. Mr. Parsons was an Englishman by birth, but grew up from boyhood in Richland county. He received a good education and became a school teacher, which profession he was following at the time of his first election. He remained here some time after the expiration of his term of office, and then removed to Missouri, where he still lives, engaged in farming. He made an excellent officer; although he labored under the great disadvantage of poor health.

In November, 1881, W. Scott Sweet was elected superintendent and is the present incumbent. Through a change of the law, requiring all county officers to be elected in "even years," Mr. Sweet's term of office is three years, or until Jan. 1, 1885.

COUNTY SURVEYORS.

James Appleby was the first county surveyor, and had held the office most of the time since the organization of the county. He was first elected in April, 1850, and was re-elected in 1852. Mr. Appleby walked to the southern part of La Fayette, Co., Wis., to obtain a compass and other necessary apparatus, paying $80 therefor, and carried the same back with him. The first survey made by him was on May 17, 1850. It was laying out a road for the town of Richmond, which is now in the town of Eagle. The road began in the village of Monongahela (now defunct) and ran nearly due north, terminating at the quarter post between sections 25 and 26, town 9 range 1 west. Mr. Appleby's second work was surveying and platting the village of Port Andrew, for Thomas Andrew, on May 30, 1850.

In November, 1854, Loreman B. Palmer was elected surveyor and served one term. Mr. Palmer was raised in Fauquier Co., Va. In 1845 he came west and located in LaFayette Co., Wis., remaining there until 1848, when he came to Richland county and settled on a farm in the town of Eagle. There he remained until the time of his death in 1880, and his family still occupy the old homestead. Mr. Palmer was not a practical surveyor when he came to the county, but was taught the business by his brother-in-law, James Appleby.

Joseph E. Irish was elected surveyor in November, 1856 and served two years. Mr. Irish came from Ithaca, New York, in 1852, and settled with his parents at Sextonville, Richland county. At that time Joseph was hardly twenty years of age. He worked at odd jobs for some time, then learned surveying and followed that quite extensively. He remained at Sextonville for many years, marrying Lucy Britton. During the war he began preaching, and for several years thereafter was an itinerant; finally settled in Eau Claire. He was appointed register of the United States land office, at that place, and later was elected to the State Senate. After serving his term in the Senate he was appointed presiding elder of this, Methodist Episcopal Church district, and for four years acted as such; then being elected president of the Appleton College, which position he still holds. Mr. Irish is a man of much natural as well as acquired ability, and holds the respect and esteem of all who know him.

In November, 1858, James Appleby was again elected surveyor and served two years.

D. Hardenburg succeeded Mr. Appleby by the election in November, 1860.

In November, 1862, C. D. Bellville was elected surveyor and served two years.

D. Hardenburg, of Lone Rock, was again elected in November, 1864, and was re-elected in 1866 and 1868.

At the November election, in 1870, the candidates for surveyor, James Appleby and T.

Borland, each received an equal number of votes. Upon casting lots James Appleby was the fortunate man. He refused to qualify and Mr. Hardenburg, therefore, held over until the November election, 1871, when he was elected for the balance of the term. Mr. Hardenburg is still a resident of Lone Rock, in the town of Buena Vista.

James Appleby was again elected surveyor in November, 1872. He is the present incumbent, having been re-elected in 1874, 1876, 1878, 1880 and 1882.

CORONER.

This is an unimportant office, and but few who have been elected to it have qualified. The following is a list of the gentlemen who have been chosen to the office, showing the years in which they were elected:

William Kincaannon, 1850; Orin Haseltine, 1852; Ira S. Haseltine, 1854-56-60-62; A. S. Neff, 1864; A. Haskins, 1866; H. Collins, 1868-70; George Jarvis, 1872-74; W. M. Fogo, 1876; John H. Carswell, 1878; D. O. Chandler, 1880; Norman L. James, 1882.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE COURTS OF RICHLAND COUNTY.

When Richland county was organized it became a part of the fifth judicial circuit. The first term of court was held by Judge Mortimer M. Jackson, in a rented building at Richmond (now Orion), commencing Sept. 11, 1850. There was but little business transacted. John J. Moreland was admitted to the bar after an examination by Amasa Cobb and Charles Dunn. There was no issue to be tried by petit jury. The grand jury found no presentments.

The first grand jury empaneled in Richland county, was composed of the following gentlemen:

*Israel Janney, Lattimore Rennick, John P. Irish, Thomas H. Daugherty, Starling McKinney, Loman Parmer, O. L. Britton, Daniel H. Byrd, B. B. Sutton, William Mathews, Samuel Fleck, Stephen Finnell, Nathaniel Greene, George Goff, Thomas Mathews, Lucius Campbell and E. M. Sexton.

Terms of circuit court were subsequently held at Richmond, in April, 1851, September, 1851, and April, 1852. In September, 1852, court convened for the first time in Richland Centre. Since that time terms of court have been regularly held, with a very few exceptions, every spring and fall.

In 1852 Montgomery M. Cothren was elected circuit judge to succeed M. N. Jackson. In April, 1858, he was re-elected and served for twelve years continuously.

*[Note.—It is a fact well worthy of note, that Israel Janney, who was a member of the first grand jury, was also a member and foreman of the last grand jury empaneled in the county prior to the abolishment of that system].

At the fall term of court in 1857, there were some twenty-seven cases brought against Michael Carmichael, and a large number against Peter Meehan, of Richland Centre, for selling liquor without a license. They were convicted on some of the charges and acquitted on others. There had been a temperance crusade inaugurated at Richland Centre. One of the lawyers made the board of health of the village believe they had the right to order the abatement of liquor saloons, if they thought it injured the health of the community. They thought so and accordingly ordered that the saloons be closed up. The order was resisted. The temperance element thereupon acted under the order of the board of health and executed it, demolishing the dram-shops and pouring the liquor into a convenient pond. The parties who had a hand in the affair were prosecuted for damages; they got a change of venue and took the case to Grant county; from there it was carried to Dane county; and finally the papers were stolen or lost and the cases were dropped. These cases were the first of a series of liquor litigation which appear upon the record, cropping out every now and then, until within a very few years ago. In the history of Richland Centre will be found an extended account of the temperance movements of that place, from which most of the liquor cases came.

In August, 1858, the case of Arnest Herrlitz vs. Elizabeth Herrlitz, for divorce, appears on the records. The attorneys were James H. Miner and D. B. Priest for the plaintiff, and A. C. Eastland for the defendant. The case, in itself, involved merely the general grounds for divorce: desertion and quarreling; but it came to a tragic termination. The notice of trial was served April 13, 1859, and between that time and the June term of court the plaintiff was murdered. Herrlitz lived in a little cabin in the town of Dayton. On the fatal evening, just after dark, he heard some one at the window, as though they were trying to find the entrance. He went to the door to tell them to come in, and just as he opened the door the cowardly assassin shot him. He did not see who did it; but lived long enough to go to his brother's, a half a mile distant, and relate the particulars. Squire Durnford was employed to look up the facts, and enough was found to lead to strong suspicions, but not sufficient to justify the arrest of any one. No arrests were made, and the matter finally dropped from the public mind as new matters arose to draw away the attention. The matter still remains shrouded in mystery, although in the minds of Herrlitz's friends the bare hope remains that eventually "murder will out."

The case of Ransom and Sophia Ragan vs. Samuel and Sidney Simpson, was only remarkable in point of the length of time it was in litigation. As the oracle says, "way back in 1856" the Ragans loaned money to the Simpsons, and secured it by taking a mortgage upon some real estate in the town of Ithaca. In 1858 this action was brought to foreclose the mortgage, and recover the money or property. Every possible defense was made; the case was put over several times; then compromised for a time; recommenced; continued; then abandoned, and on and on; this and repeat, remaining in the courts or out, barely long enough to begin a new action, until the spring of 1883, when Samuel Simpson was finally ejected from the land. All of the attorneys of Richland county were at different times engaged upon one or the other side of the suit, besides many from adjoining counties, and several distinguished lawyers from Madison. The amount of the mortgage was spent several times by both parties in prosecuting and defending their cases.

This early records of the circuit court have not been preserved—some having been burned and others lost. The earliest records which are in the hands of the clerk of court commence with the term of court beginning May 9, 1859. At this time Judge Cothren was on the bench. The record states that "the sheriff, W. H. Joslin, opened the court by proclamation." There was considerable business to attend to at this term and court remained in session for several days. The sheriff returned the venire for a grand jury, and the following gentlemen were empaneled: W. J. Bowen, A. Mullendore, R. C. Field, Jacob Yoder, T. Whiteraft, William Chamberlain, D. M. Donnell, H. J. Morrison, D. L. Hubbard, John Chitwood, James A. Sharp, Henry Collins, George Norman, Sr., J. G. S. Hayward, Thomas Snyder, W. P. Lewis, H. Conner, M. D. Hankins and Roswell Hamilton.

When the court ordered that the petit jury be called, the following gentlemen answered to their names: Demas Wherry, William Satterlee, L. Rennieke, Sidney Rose, L. Thompson, C. Sharp, F. M. Stewart, J. Manley, John Barret, William Robinson, E. Combs, G. D. Lybrand, D. Williams, R. Barnes, James Brinley, George Krouskop, B. Graves, D. D. Mosher, C. Devoe, John Fry, E. C. Walker, L. C. Gonchehour, D. O. Chandler, John Jewell, Samuel Clayton, G. P. Derrickson and W. M. Murlin. The record continues that the following were excused: "A. Nudd, because he was a member of the bar; William Janney, M. Whitecomb, Wallace Joslin, George E. Hale and George L. Dyke had gone to Pike's Peak, and J. M. Calloway on account of his privileges as a postmaster."

At this term of court J. S. Wilson, Charles D. Stewart and William Farlin were admitted to the bar. The examining committee consisted of James H. Miner, A. C. Eastland and George L. Frost.

In 1860-1 political influence was brought to bear upon the Legislature by those who were dissatisfied with M. M. Cothren as judge, he being a democrat while this county was heavily republican, and particularly by the temperance element, and Richland county was taken from the fifth judicial circuit and attached to the La Crosse circuit.

In June, 1861, I. E. Messmore, of La Crosse, held the term of court here, and then drops forever from the records.

Hon. George Gale, of Trempealeau county, presided over the term of court held in November, 1861, and continued upon the bench until succeeded by Hon. Edwin Flint, of La Crosse, in 1863. Judge Flint held his first term of court here in June, 1863.

The case of Wildy Rickerson vs. J. L. McKee, an action on promissory note, which was tried at the April term of court, 1863, attracted wide interest. The following is a brief account of the cause of action: In the summer of 1862, the defendant, J. L. McKee, was nominated for county treasurer by the republicans of the county. E. M. Sexton, who was county treasurer at the time, announced himself as an independent candidate for the office. It seems that Mr. McKee, to secure his own election, gave to Sexton his promissory note for $300 in consideration of the latter's withdrawing from the field and throwing his influence toward the election of the former; the note being given on Sunday. Mr. McKee was elected to the office by a majority of 246 over his opponent, Thomas C. Clark, and E. M. Sexton received seventy-eight votes. He then refused to pay the note, claiming that Sexton had worked against him, and thrown his influence toward the election of Mr. Clark. In the meantime, however, before the note became due, Mr. Sexton disposed of it and it came into the possession of Wildy Rickerson, as an innocent purchaser. Mr. Rickerson brought suit on the note in circuit court to recover the amount due, employing as his attorneys Eastland & Eastland. James H. Miner, D. B. Priest and J. Allen Barber were the defendant's lawyers. The plaintiff relied upon the fact of the note being prima facie evidence of debt, and its being in the hands of an innocent purchaser. The defendant's attorneys set up three strong grounds for defense: 1st. The note being given on Sunday. 2d. Want of consideration. 3d. It was against public policy. After a long and hard struggle, every point being taken advantage of, the case was decided in favor of the plaintiff, Mr. Rickerson, who recovered a judgment for the amount due on the note.

The case of Samuel Wood vs. Samuel Patrick, which was tried at the September term of circuit court, in 1863, was an interesting one to the citizens of Richland Centre. Dr. O. H. Wood had owned the property where Hon. James H. Miner now lives. He sold it to Samuel Patrick, taking in part payment his note, secured by a mortgage on the property. The mortgage was never recorded and both note and mortgage was sold to Samuel Wood and subsequently disappeared mysteriously. In this action Samuel Wood sought to foreclose the mortgage and recover the amount due on the note. Samuel Patrick appeared as a witness on his own behalf, and swore that he had paid the note and destroyed the mortgage. Mr. Wood swore that the documents had been lost or stolen, and it appeared so conclusively that the latter was the case that Mr. Wood recovered the amount due, and in default thereof took charge of the property. He subsequently sold the same to James H. Miner, who still lives there. A bill of indictment for perjury was soon afterwards found against Samuel Patrick by the grand jury and he left the country. He has never returned.

In 1864 Richland county again was attached to the fifth judicial circuit. Hon. J. T. Mills succeeded M. M. Cothren as judge of the circuit, and held his first term of court in Richland county in April, 1865. Judge Mills served twelve years upon the bench and gave excellent satisfaction.

The case of Patrick Quinn vs. Harvey Marshall, is cited as a sample of a class of cases which arose during the war. It seems that after one of the President's calls for men to go into the service, Marshall was drafted. He reported at Prairie du Chien. Patrick Quinn was a "substitute broker" at that place, and for a certain amount procured a substitute for Marshall. The latter refused to accept the substitute which he had bargained for, and Quinn employed Haselton & Dutcher as attorneys and brought this action for about $400 damages. James H. Miner was retained by the defendant. A change of venue was secured and the case was brought to Richland county for trial in May, 1866. The case was warmly contested, and was postponed several times, until finally Marshall compromised the matter by paying Quinn $25 and the case was dropped.

In October, 1868, the case of George Carmichael vs. Andrew Elang and Martin Banker was disposed of. It attracted a good deal of attention, on account of the principles and rights of the parties which it involved. George Carmichael lived upon a farm on Sun Prairie, in Dane county. Mr. Elang, for a long time, was his hired man. Mr. Carmichael gave to Mr. Elang a tract of land containing forty acres, telling him that he could live upon it and give a mortgage of $300 in payment thereof. No money was paid. The mortgage was not recorded, as Mr. Carmichael had no doubt of Mr. Elang's honesty. For a long time Mr. Elang occupied the place and nothing was said about the mortgage. Finally, a man named Hawkins, who lived in the neighborhood, discovered the actual state of affairs. He went to Mr. Elang and succeeded in trading some other property for the forty acres. His next move was to sell the forty acres to Martin Banker, the co-defendant. Mr. Carmichael then brought this action to recover the amount of his mortgage. The defense was upon the grounds that the mortgage was not upon record and that the defendant Martin Banker had no notice of it; that the mortgage might be the fruit of a collusion between Mr. Elang and the plaintiff. But it was shown that Martin Banker knew of the existence of the mortgage, and the plaintiff recovered judgment. The attorneys in the case were James H. Miner for the plaintiff, and Eastland & Eastland for the defendants.

At the April term of court in 1869, the case of E. M. Sexton vs. Richland county first came up for trial. The attorneys were Eastland & Cothren for Mr. Sexton, and O. F. Black, district attorney, and James H. Miner for the county. This case was one of the most important that has ever arose in Richland county. The plaintiff held the office of treasurer of Richland county during the years 1861 and 1862. In November, 1861, he had an accounting and settlement with the board of supervisors. A committee of three members of the board examined his books, and found both the debits and credits so erroneous and confused (some errors being in his favor and others in favor of the county), that they rejected the books and ascertained the receipts of the office from other sources, and required him to produce proofs from other sources than his books of all disbursements allowed. They reported to the board that he had received $25,677.13 (giving the items) and had disbursed $26,592.46, "for all of which," they stated, "we find satisfactory vouchers and evidences that it had been paid;" and, after detecting one error in the footings, they found due the plaintiff a balance of $618.33. The board accepted the report and settled with the plaintiff upon the basis thereof; and at the end of 1862 had a full and satisfactory settlement for that year. In 1863 the county board discovered mistakes in the plaintiff's books, threatened him with a suit, and, for the purpose of protecting his bondsmen, he deposited with the clerk of the board money and securities amounting to $1,000; at that and under the circumstances Mr. Sexton admitting that he owed the county. In 1866 he demanded a return of this deposit, on the ground that he did not owe the county anything; and a return being refused he brought this action to recover the amount so deposited. Eastland & Cothren were retained by the plaintiff, and James H. Miner and Oscar F. Black appeared on behalf of the county. When the case came into circuit court it was referred to A. Durnford. The investigation before the referee consumed twenty-five days, and he reported as a part of his finding, that the defendants (the supervisors) had failed to establish, by evidence, that there was any mistake in the settlement of 1861; that "they had failed to prove that the vouchers which they produced in support of their defense did not, but ought to have entered into said settlement;" and that "a large number of the vouchers between towns and the county, which constituted the basis of the settlement of 1861," had been lost; so that it was impossible to ascertain whether any mistake occurred in that settlement or not. The referee, therefore, reported that there was due the plaintiff, from defendants, said sum of $1,000 with interest. Upon the report of the referee coming into circuit court, the attorneys for the county took exceptions to it and moved the court to set it aside. After a very lengthy argument, Judge Miner, for the county, speaking for three hours upon the point, the court found as facts: 1. That the defendants had established by evidence that there was a mistake in the settlement of 1861. 2. That they had proved that the vouchers entered in support of the defense did enter into that settlement. 3. That if any vouchers had been lost, their contents were proven by other documentary evidence equally worthy of credit (specifying them, or some of them). 4. That at the time the plaintiff deposited the $1,000, he was indebted to the defendants in a still larger sum. Judgment was accordingly rendered in favor of the defendants (the county) for costs.

Mr. Sexton appealed the case to the supreme court, where the judgment of the circuit court was affirmed; the decision being announced at the January term 1870. As the case attracted wide attention and has now become a standard case of reference, the opinion of the supreme court regarding it, is here presented. Chief Justice L. S. Dixon and Justice Orsamus Cole, agreed in affirming the decision of the circuit court; but Justice Byron Paine dissented from their decision. Both sides are presented:

"By the court—held: That settlement of county treasurer with county board, is not conclusive:

"1st. That the court might go behind such settlement, even after a lapse of six or seven years.

"2d. That upon satisfactory evidence of a mistake in such settlement, and that there was a balance due from the plaintiff, judgment was properly rendered against him, notwithstanding an alleged loss of vouchers used upon such settlement; especially where he did not show what those vouchers were, and for what purposes the amounts named therein were paid."

Justice Paine in his dissenting opinion claimed:

"1st. That the settlement should not be set aside without clear and positive proof of mistake.

"2d. The facts that the board, in such settlement, charged plaintiff with a larger amount of receipts, as well as credited him with larger disbursements; that his own books were then regarded as incorrect, both in debits and credits, and he was required to produce vouchers for all credits allowed him; and that these vouchers have since in part perished, forbids the setting aside of such settlement without the clearest proof of mistake; and the proof here is insufficient."

The case of Andrew Soldusky vs. T. P. and C. C. Derickson, at the spring term, 1870, was an important one. The parties had got into some quarrel over land difficulties, and the Dericksons assaulted Soldusky, beating him very badly with a pitch fork, as he claimed. He was laid up for a long time by the injuries received, and upon his recovery he commenced this action for damages. The jury gave him a verdict for $800, but this was reduced by the court to $650, which amount was paid by the defendants. The attorneys in the case were Cothren & Black for Andrew Soldusky, and Eastland & Eastland for the Dericksons.

The case of Robert Akan vs. Alfred Parfrey and Dexter E. Pease, was first tried at the April term of court in 1870. This case was afterward carried to the supreme court, and has now become one of the most important standard reference cases in the Wisconsin reports. The history of the case is as follows: The defendants Parfrey and Pease, in 1865, built a dam across Pine river, at Richland Centre, for the purpose of raising water to work their water mills. The dam caused the water to overflow Robert Akan's land above the dam, and he claimed damages. The defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff $200 a year for three years, for damage to the plaintiff's land, and the parties entered into a written agreement in the form of a lease, the plaintiff agreeing to take $200 per year for the flowage, and the defendant's agreeing to pay the same. At the expiration of the lease, the defendants continued to occupy the plaintiff's land without his consent. In February, 1870, the plaintiff brought an action against defendants under the mill-dam act of the State, for the purpose of having his damage assessed. The case was tried at the April term of circuit court in 1870, and the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess the damage at $800, which shall be in full of all claim and demand for injury done to the plaintiff's lands at the present height of water, estimated at six feet and five inches;" or, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess the damages to be annually paid the plaintiff by the defendants at the sum of $100, which shall be paid so long as the dam shall be used by the defendants or their assigns, at the present height of water, estimated at six feet and five inches, unless a re-assessment of damages shall be made herein, commencing from the expiration of the lease. James Tuttle, foreman jurors." The verdict was received and allowed by the court and recorded. The defendants moved to have the verdict set aside, and for a new trial, which was overruled by the court. On May 4, 1870, the plaintiff made his election of the alternative verdicts to take the $800 gross damages. The defendants failed and neglected to pay the plaintiff the $800, or secure the same; whereupon the plaintiff asked for judgment of $800 against the defendants, which the court refused to grant. This question of whether the plaintiff was entitled to judgment was carried to the supreme court at the June term, 1871, and determined against the plaintiff. Up to this time the case had been managed by A. Durnford, and Cothren & Black for the plaintiff, and Eastland & Eastland for the defendants; but at this time James H. Miner took charge of the plaintiff's case, and managed it to final termination, assisted a portion of the time by M. M. Cothren. On Aug. 14, 1872, the plaintiff served upon the defendants a written notice, reciting the substance of the proceedings in the case and demanded that the defendants reduce their dam, which they refused to do.

On Aug. 16, 1872, the plaintiff brought an action upon the verdict rendered in April, 1870, and demanded defendant's dam be abated or reduced, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff and judgment and decree entered to the effect, that in case the defendants failed to pay the plaintiff the $800 with interest and costs within sixty days, the sheriff should reduce the dam so that the water would not overflow the plaintiff's land. From this decree the defendants appealed to the supreme court, asking that the same be reversed and a new trial granted. The whole controversy in the case was in regard to the form and sufficiency of the verdict. The defense contended: "That the verdict on which the action was based, to be valid, must find all the issues in the case and settle all matters controverted. That the mill-dam Act provided that 'if it shall be alleged in the complaint that the dam is raised to an unreasonable height, the jury shall decide how much, if any, the dam shall be lowered, and shall state such decision as a part of their verdict.' That the complainant in the former action, alleged that the dam was raised to an unreasonable height, but the jury failed to find anything upon that point." "Under this verdict," continued the defense, "we find an insuperable difficulty in determining the height of the water defendants have a right to maintain. Defendants contend that they have a right to keep the water up to the height it then was, though above the height estimated by the jury, while plaintiff contends that the water shall be reduced to an absolute standard of six feet and five inches. But if six feet five inches is fixed as the standard, then the verdict must also fix the place where the measurement is to be made, and fix it, not by inference merely, but so as to be definite and unequivocal; and this it utterly fails to do." In answer to the objection that the former verdict was based upon an estimated height of water of six feet five inches, the plaintiff's attorneys contended "that the plaintiff could take no advantage thereof, since in the event of his bringing another action, the allegation and proof of a greater height of water would not be sufficient to maintain his action. He would also be obliged to allege and prove that the height had been raised above what it actually was at the time the former damage was estimated, and that he was injured thereby. And this is just what the plaintiff would be required to prove in a new case, if the height of the water in feet and inches had not been mentioned in the verdict. Plaintiff declares, in the election itself, that it is an election to take $800 for his damages, and what is stated about the six feet and five inches can have no other meaning than to throw light upon the estimated height of water at the time the damage was estimated. In the event of the defendant's paying the $800, plaintiff would be estopped from claiming anything more, unless he could clearly show that the water had been actually raised upon his land by defendant's dam to a greater height than it was when the former damage was estimated." The whole gist of the contention will at once be seen from the sides taken by the parties. After a very warm contest, and lengthy argument, the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the circuit court, deciding in favor of the plaintiff, Robert Akan.

The case of Jacob W. Lybrand vs. James and Santippa Ann Haney was at the fall term of circuit court in 1871. The prominence of the parties, the amount involved, and the elaborate opinion given by the supreme court when brought before that tribunal, renders the case important and of interest recalling the taxes and tax titles of earlier days. The case was managed by James H. Miner, attorney for plaintiff, with W. E. Carter as counsel; and Eastland & Eastland for defendants. Mr. Haney was the owner of large tracts of land in the southwestern part of the county, upon which he neglected to pay the taxes. The lands were sold year after year by the county for taxes. Mr. Lybrand purchased the lands at the tax sales. Mr. Haney failing to redeem the lands within three years after the respective sales, Mr. Lybrand obtained tax deeds of the lands, ten in all, upon nine forty acre tracts. The first deed was dated Aug. 11, 1865, and the last May 20, 1870. Before bringing the action to quit the title and fully obtain the lands, Mr. Lybrand proposed to Mr. Haney to quit claim the lands to him upon his paying the tax, costs of sale, and one-half of the accrued interest. This offer was not accepted, and Mr. Lybrand brought this action, setting forth the facts of the non-payment of the taxes, that deeds had been issued to him, giving a copy of each deed, and asked a judgment that he be judicially declared the owner, and that James and Santippa Ann Haney be barred and foreclosed of all right and equity of redemption. The defendants demurred to the complaint upon several grounds; among others that as to the deeds of 1865 they were barred by the statutes of limitations, and that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was argued before the circuit court, Judge Mills presiding, and overruled. From this ruling the defendants appealed to the supreme court. At the January term, 1872, the case was argued before the supreme court, by A. C. Eastland on the part of Mr. Haney, and James H. Miner for Mr. Lybrand. The ruling of the circuit court was sustained; but the court went further and held that no cause of action could be based upon deeds issued more than three years before the time of bringing the action. By this ruling, Mr. Haney was relieved from depositing the amount of tax, interest, costs and charges due upon the lands, which he was required to do before he would be permitted to serve and file his answer to the complaint, so that the plaintiff could accept and release the lands, or refuse and test the validity of the tax deeds, and take the lands. Mr. Haney made the deposit of something over $300. Mr. Lybrand accepted the money and released the lands, upon Mr. Haney's paying the costs, about $100, besides $50 in the supreme court.

About the only trial of any importance at the April term in 1872, was that of the State of Wisconsin vs. John and George Quackenbush. Oscar F. Black appeared for the State, and James H. Miner for the defendants. John and George Quackenbush had been arrested in December, 1871, for stealing a large quantity of hops from Alpheus Smith, on Willow creek. Upon preliminary examination they were held to bail, and in default thereof, remanded to jail. They laid in jail all winter, waiting for their trial before the circuit court. They had been troublesome guests for the sheriff, who found it necessary to chain them to the floor of the jail to prevent them from doing mischief. When the trial finally came off they were found guilty, but they came so near proving that the hops were of no value that the judge imposed only the light fine of $25, and astounded the bar and spectators by directing the sheriff to give the prisoners the limits of the county until the fine was paid.

The case of Jaquish vs. the Town of Ithaca, appears upon the calendar for the October term of circuit court in 1872. It was an action to recover damages for injuries to the person and property, suffered by the plaintiff by reason of a defective bridge, parcel of a highway in Ithaca, the defendant town. Eastland & Eastland, with Cothren & Lanyon, were attorneys for the town, and George C. Hazelton and O. B. Thomas appeared for Mr. Jaquish. It appears that during the afternoon of March 8, 1871, the plaintiff attempted to drive a team of horses across the bridge in question, but the horses broke through or ran off the bridge into the water, and one of them was drowned, and the other soon after died from the injuries. The stream was usually very small, but at the time of the accident was so much swollen by rain and melting snow that the water ran over the bridge. The plaintiff claimed, and the testimony tended to prove, that in consequence of his exposure and exertion in endeavoring to rescue his horses, his health was seriously and permanently impaired. Therefore he brought this action for damages. A change of venue was taken to Vernon county. The most important points that were argued in the trial were, as set by the defense: When a highway has suddenly become deficient or out of repair, through some action of the elements, the town is not liable for resulting injuries, without notice and time to repair the defect; that when a party seeks to recover damages of another for an injury caused by the carelessness or negligence of the agents or servants of the other, he must himself be entirely free from contributory negligence. That plaintiff knew the condition of the bridge, and acted carelessly and negligently in attempting to cross it. It was not denied that the bridge was out of repair when the accident happened, but it was claimed that it had suddenly become so but recently before the time, by reason of a freshet in the stream; and that sufficient time had not elapsed thereafter, and before the accident, for the town authorities to repair it, or guard travelers against the danger. But there was evidence tending to prove that the town authorities had notice of the defect in the bridge. It was undisputed that the chairman of the board of supervisors of the town passed over the bridge on the same afternoon, and before the accident to the plaintiff, and saw that one end of some of the plank was loosened from the stringers. Upon this point the court held that notice of the defect to that officer, who was one of a board charged by law with the care and superintendence of the highways and bridges in the town, was notice to the town. There was considerable evidence tending to prove that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed directly to the injury; but still there was other evidence to prove that he exercised reasonable care to avoid the injury. The jury, after a full hearing found for the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $700. The defendant then moved for a new trial, which motion was overruled. The defendant appealed to the supreme court for new trial, where the judgment of the circuit court was affirmed. One of the reasons urged in the higher court why a new trial should be granted, was that the damages were excessive; that except about $125, they were merely speculative. Upon this point the supreme court's opinion was as follows: "The testimony tends very strongly to show that the exertion by the plaintiff in rescuing his team, his exposure to the elements, and his agitation, all the direct result of the defect in the bridge, produced epilepsy, which disease was developed soon after the accident, and from which the plaintiff still suffers. The probability is that he will never recover. He describes himself as a wreck both in mind and body, and the testimony of the physicians is that the disease usually terminates in paralysis and mental imbecility or total idiocy. It is probable that about $500 of the damages were awarded for personal injuries. If the jury in the lower court found (as we presume they did find) that the epilepsy with which the plaintiff has been, and still is afflicted, was and is the result of the accident, the damages awarded are very moderate. Indeed, it would seem that the plaintiff and not the defendant is the party who may justly complain of the award."

The case of F. S. Hall vs. Aschel Savage, tried at the April term of court in 1873, evoked considerable interest, especially among the farmers. Mr. Savage lived in the town of Sylvan. It seems he sold a yoke of oxen to F. S. Hall, the plaintiff, and took $10 to bind the bargain, agreeing to deliver the oxen at Viola, at a specified time, three or four weeks distant. Shortly after this bargain was made, one of the oxen was taken sick. Mr. Savage took care of and tried to cure it, and did partially recover. At the appointed time, however, he took the oxen to Viola and delivered them to the plaintiff, receiving therefor the amount agreed upon. In a few days the ox died. Mr. Hall then secured the services of Cothren & Black, as attorneys, and commenced an action to recover the amount paid for the ox. James H. Miner was retained as defendant's attorney. The point involved was whether the payment of the $10 so far completed the sale that any loss thereafter would fall upon the party buying or upon the one who sold. The case was first tried before Justice A. L. Wilson, of Richland Centre, where it was decided in favor of the plaintiff, he recovering a judgment for the amount paid for the ox. Mr. Savage appealed the case to circuit court, where it came to final trial at the April term, 1873. After a sharp contest on both sides, the decision of the justice's court was reversed, and judgment was rendered for the defendant.

At the April term of court, 1875, the case of State vs. Charles Holbrook and Buchanan Nicks was tried. The whole northern part of the county were interested in this case, although the case itself involved but little. It seems that the boys and young men, in the vicinity of Woodstock, had got into the habit of having a "good time," as it is expressed, at church, Sunday school, and other meetings of like nature. Their fun was not vicious, but provoking, such as throwing paper wads, laughing and carrying on generally. This was in vogue there for several years until it became intolerable, and then steps were taken to put an "effectual stop" to it. The first case was brought in December, 1874, against Charles Holbrook, Buchanan Nicks, Abner Hammond, Luther Waldsmith, Joseph Orr, O. M. Neff, and Lyman Clark, before Alden Haseltine, justice of the peace. James Lewis appeared for the prosecution and James H. Miner, for the defense. The trial was a long one, lasting four days, and was attended by a very large concourse of people. A large number of witnesses were examined. It seems that all of the defendants were dismissed except the first two, and these were found guilty, the fines and costs amounting to $86. Judge Miner appealed the case to the circuit court, and again appeared for the defense. Oscar F. Black prosecuted the case in circuit court. The case was disposed of at the April term, 1875. The boys had been arrested under the provisions of section 1, chapter 145, laws of 1866, which is as follows:

"Every person who shall, at any time, willfully interrupt or molest any assembly of people met for the worship of God, or any member thereof, or persons when meeting or met together for the performance of any duties enjoined on or appertaining to them as members of any religious society, or any wedding party, or other company or assembly of peaceable citizens, or for the recitation or performance of oral instruction in vocal music, within the pale of such meeting or out of it, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $20 nor less than $5."

Judge Mills, in his charge to the jury, defined what the law contemplates as "willfully molesting public worship, etc." The following quotation from the charge will show his interpretation of the law:

"It cannot be regarded as a molestation or interruption in view of the above law, for a person to leave his seat in a quiet and orderly manner, go out, and return again. But boisterous and noisy demonstrations with tongue or feet, such as every reasonable person should know would interrupt and molest the exercises of the meeting, would render the defendant liable to the penalty of the law, if guilty of such conduct. Gestures and grimaces calculated to attract the attention of and disturb the audience would be such an interruption as is contemplated by the law. All peaceable and lawful assemblies, equally with religious societies, are under protection of the law.

"It is your business to determine whether the evidence shows such conduct on the part of the accused or the contrary.

"I do not think the evidence against Buchanan Nicks sufficient to go before the jury."

The jury found Holbrook guilty, and he was fined $10. The other defendant was discharged.

The case of State of Wisconsin vs. N. H. Austin, upon the charge of perjury, was the most important case tried at the October term in 1875. N. H. Austin was a money lender, a man about fifty years of age, and a former resident of Richland Centre. He came here from Ironton, remained for a number of years, and in 1873 returned to the place of his former residence. During the summer of 1872, while in Richland Centre, he made one loan and a trade with a Mrs. Frank, and secured the two notes which were given, by a mortgage on a farm. When the time expired, he commenced fore closure proceedings. She set usury as a defense, and succeeded in defeating Austin. A short time afterward, Austin was indicted for perjury, and upon a change of venue the case was brought to Richland county for trial. John Barker, district attorney for Sauk county, and J. W. Lusk, prosecuted the case; and Oscar F. Black and W. E. Carter appeared for the defendant. The indictment or complaint charged that the defendant was guilty of perjury in swearing that there was no usury taken for a loan made by him to Mrs. Frank in September, 1872. Austin claimed that he loaned Mrs. Frank $56, July 8, 1872; that she also bought a hop press in September, 1872, for which she gave another note for $60. The Franks claimed that the note given July 8, was for the hop press, and the one in September for the loan. In these statements laid the gist of this action. Both sides swore to their statements. Eighty witnesses were examined. Hon. Alva Stewart, circuit judge of the circuit to which Sauk county is attached, and most of the members of the Sauk county bar appeared as witnesses. The defense relied upon proving the truth of Austin's statements. It was shown that the hop machine was patented by Mr. Brockway, of Richland Centre; that the first that he had manufactured was not completed until the 28th of August, 1872; that the regular price of them was $60, conforming exactly with the note given in September, 1872. Therefore it could not have been delivered on the 8th day of July, because it was not in existence at that time. The case was bitterly contested on both sides. The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty."

One of the amusing little incidents of the trial was: The counsel for the defense had proved that Austin had held the offices of justice of the peace and assessor of his town for many years; that he was a member of the Methodist Church, and an earnest exhorter. This was to give the defendant standing before the jury. When they came to the closing arguments, J. W. Lusk, as fine an appearing man as ever addressed any jury, in answer to the charge of counsel for the defendant, that the prosecution was malicious, in getting such distinguished lawyers, said, stooping down toward the defendant, "I have no enmity nor the slightest ill feeling against Austin," who was a little, shrimped up old man, "but I could earnestly say, may the Lord have mercy on his soul!" "Hold on! Mr. Lusk," exclaimed Judge Mills, from the bench, in his fine, screechy voice, "if Austin is an exhorter he had ought to answer, 'Amen!'"

In April, 1876, the case of C. Cooper & Co. vs. F. G. and T. C. Rodolf, was tried. It attracted a good deal of interest, both on account of its being warmly contested, and because it involved a nice point of law. The plaintiffs were engaged in manufacturing, or at least, handling saw-mill machinery. They sent an agent to the defendant to sell their goods. Messrs. Rodolf contracted for a saw-mill outfit with this agent. The contract, after setting forth the style and size of the different pieces of machinery, read, "and also a carriage twenty-four or thirty feet in length." The design was that the agent should learn which was wanted and then scratch out the other; but this was neglected in this case. In due time the goods arrived, and the "carriage" was found to be twenty-four feet in length. Messrs. Rodolf resisted payment for the goods, and when action was brought, set up among other points for defense, that the contract had not been fulfilled. The question then was: In a contract of this character, which of the parties had the right of choice. After a full hearing, the court held that the party who was first to act, or, in other words, the party who was to make the first move toward fulfilling the contract, had the right to choose, where the contract contained an alternative clause. Therefore the plaintiffs recovered.

The trial of the case of State of Wisconsin vs. Hugh Boyle, for assault with intent to kill, excited a good deal of interest at the October term of circuit court in 1876. It involved several very nice questions of law and fact. Hugh Boyle had been upon a spree for several days at Lone Rock, and when in this condition he was a very violent man. He had eaten nothing for almost two days. On the evening of the second day, he was sitting in a saloon beside Andrew Campbell, when suddenly he sprang to his feet, and, without any provocation, drew a revolver and fired at Campbell, exclaiming, "I'll blow you through!" He was soon secured, and this action was brought in the name of the State, charging him with an assault with intent to kill. The fact of assault was very evident, but the question was raised by the defense whether drunkenness excused it, and whether a drunken man could form an intent to kill. The defense did not claim that drunkenness excused the assault, but it was claimed that drunkenness did excuse that class of crimes where there must be not only a general intent but a specific intent to do the criminal act. In the course of trial it was argued upon this point, that the mind must be capable of forming the intent, and if Boyle was so drunk as to be incapable of entertaining the specific intent to kill, although he intended to injure, the crime of assault with intent to kill was not made out. That men are punished either according to the gravity of the intent combined with the act, or according to the gravity of the act combined with the intent, and, that a small act with a grave intent constitutes a great crime, or a great act with a small intent constitutes a grave crime. That, further, as the act of killing did not take place, the prisoner could only be punished for his intention, which he was too drunk to entertain. The attorneys interested in the case were E. C. Wulging, James Lewis, James H. Miner and W. E. Carter for the prosecution, and Eastland & Son and O. F. Black for the defendant. After a full hearing the jury returned a verdict of "guilty of assault" only. The judge fined Boyle $100, but instructed the sheriff not to collect the same in case it would embarrass the defendant!

At the same term of court a large number of the cases of farmers against the railroad company, upon appeal from the damages allowed by the commissioners appointed to appraise the lands, appear on record. The major portion, if not all, of these cases were compromised.

The case of R. C. Rounsavell vs. Elihu and D. G. Pease, was one of the most important civil actions tried at the October term of circuit court in 1876. The facts in this case, as near as they can be learned from conflicting statements, were as follows: Elihu and D. G. Pease were proprietors of a store at Richland Centre. One day an agent for a sewing machine company called at the store to get Mr. Pease to take the agency of the machines. Mr. Pease had his team at the door in readiness to go to Rockbridge. He told the agent that he would take the agency, but had no time to look over the contract which the agent produced. The agent prevailed upon Mr. Pease to sign the contract, however, and said he would fill it out afterward and leave a copy of it at the store. Mr. Pease claimed that he understood that he was merely taking the agency of the machines. The contract which he signed, however, when the blanks were filled, proved to be an order for a certain number of machines. In due time the machines arrived. Mr. Pease was not successful in selling the machines, and refused to pay for them. The company then brought this action on the contract. The attorneys were Miner & Wulging, for the plaintiff, and O. F. Black and Eastland & Son, for the defendants. The court after a full hearing, held, and so instructed the jury, that if the blanks in the contract had not been filled out as agreed it was not binding. The jury took the view that the blanks were not so filled out, and Messrs. Pease received a judgment for costs. The case was carried to the supreme court and the decision in the circuit court was affirmed.

The case of Griffin vs. the Town of Willow, came up for trial at the fall term of court in 1876. It was an action by Daniel Griffin and wife for injuries to their persons which they alleged they sustained by reason of the defective highway. The evidence showed that at the place where the accident occurred, a ditch and break-water ran diagonally across the road, and that upon Griffin driving his wagon into this ditch, the axle-tree was broken, the wife was thrown from the wagon, the horses ran away, and both the plaintiffs sustained personal injuries. J. W. Lusk, of Sauk county, brought the action for damages; but not having time to try the case he left it in the hands of James H. Miner, E. C. Wulging and James Lewis, for trial. M. M. Cothren and O. F. Black appeared on behalf of the town. The case was warmly contested and the jury disagreed, being equally divided. A new trial was had in the spring of 1877, when J. W. Lusk was present and managed the case himself. In the meantime, Mr. Cothren had become circuit judge and took his place upon the bench. Lusk was advised to take a change of venue, but he thought he would receive as good treatment from Cothren as any other judge. O. F. Black and W. E. Carter, this time defended the town. Again the case was warmly contested; but Cothren in his charge to the jury and admission of the evidence, left the plaintiff no chance; so the defendant received a judgment for the costs. Lusk carried the case to the supreme court, where the judgment of the circuit court was reversed and the case came back to circuit court in Vernon county for a new trial. The matter ran along for some time, and finally the case dropped from sight.

The case of Thomas J. Whitcraft vs. Town of Rockbridge, was one of the most important cases upon the docket for the fall term of court in 1876. James H. Miner and E. C. Wulging appeared on the part of the plaintiff, and Oscar F. Black for the defense. Mr. Whitcraft, in company with others, was in a wagon crossing the Pine river in the town of Rockbridge, when the old "rickety" bridge gave way, and in the fall Mr. Whitcraft was badly hurt. He was laid up for some time, and his injuries were of such a nature that possibly he might never fully recover from their effects. He made a proposition to the town of Rockbridge to settle the matter for $250, but the town refused to give that much. He therefore began suit against the town for $500 damages. The road upon which the defective bridge was located was one which had been formally adopted by the county. This was done to legalize an act of the board of supervisors, in appropriating a small amount from the county funds to be applied towards repairing this particular road. The defense of the town in this action was based upon this fact. The defense set forth that the road in question was a county road; had been formally adopted by the county; and if any injury resulted from its being out of repair, the county must be liable, not the town. But after an exciting trial the jury viewed the matter in a different light, and gave Thomas Whitcraft a verdict of $316 and costs, amounting in all to $452.83.

In April, 1876, Hon. M. M. Cothren was again elected circuit judge, and served until January, 1883.

At the April term of court in 1877, the case of State of Wisconsin vs. Thomas McClary and Hugh Brooks first came up for trial. This was probably the most important criminal case that has ever been tried in Richland county. A great deal of feeling was engendered over the case, and it has been difficult for the historian to arrive at the true state of facts; but as near as they can be gleaned, the history of the case was as follows:

Many years ago, Hon. Charles G. Rodolf erected a valuable grist-mill on Mill creek, in the town of Eagle. Mr. Rodolf was very popular, and his mill gained a very large patronage. One morning, in 1868, while the employees of the mill were at breakfast, the mill was discovered to be on fire. All efforts to save it were futile. The mill was burned to the ground, and very little was saved. Various conjectures were advanced at the time as to the origin of the fire. Mr. Rodolf soon rebuilt his mill, and one night about 12 o'clock, when it was well nigh completed, the mill was again discovered to be on fire, and this time some one was seen running from the mill. The party who discovered the fire went up stairs and there found an old glass-box partly filled with rags, shavings, papers, and other combustible material, all on fire. This was extinguished. Mr. Rodolf suspicioned one of his neighbors, had him arrested, taken before a justice of the peace at Richland Centre, and held to bail. He was afterwards indicted by the grand jury. Subsequent developments, however, proved that this party was entirely innocent, so the case was dropped. The work on the mill progressed. It was finished, and continued to run until the night of Feb. 6, 1876. Upon this memorable night, for the citizens of that vicinity, at between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock, it was again discovered that the mill was in flames. It was totally destroyed, together with about $1,000 worth of wheat and flour, which was in the mill. The day after the mill burned the Rodolfs came to the conclusion that the mill had taken fire from the stove, which was in an office adjoining the mill. Two prominent and, it seems, plausible reasons were given for this. One was, a snow had fallen early in the evening before the mill burned, and no tracks could be found the next morning; the other reason was, the unsafe condition of the stove. In the spring of 1876, it was whispered around the neighborhood that Thomas C. McClary had stated that he had burned the first mill and had threatened to burn the other. The Rodolfs picked up scraps of evidence, and it was reported they had offered a large reward for information regarding the burning of the mills.

Hugh Brooks, one of the defendants mentioned, told Rodolf that Thomas McClary had hired him (Brooks) to burn the mill, agreed to give him $500, and had given him $5, and that he (Brooks) had burned the mill. Brooks soon after stated to another party that he had not burned the mill, nor had Mr. McClary hired him to, but there was money in it which he could make easier than by hard work. Brooks was arrested in July, 1876, and was locked up in jail, without any examination or order of commitment. At about this time the sheriff and C. G. Rodolf went to Spring Valley, Minn., to apprehend Mr. McClary, he having removed there in November, 1875. The friends of McClary sent Scott Kincannon to advise McClary what was being done. After full consultation, Kincannon and McClary's attorney at Spring Valley advised him to keep out of the way for a while, and in the mean time find out what they could. The sheriff and Mr. Rodolf returned without Mr. McClary. During the hot days of August, Mr. Brooks got restless and fled. He was again arrested and lodged in jail and remained there until Nov. 1, 1877. While in jail Mr. Brooks told several persons that he had burned the mill. This he afterwards denied; said he did not burn the mill, and stuck to it, so swearing upon his final trial, and claimed Rodolf hired him to so state. Mr. McClary's friends paid Mr. Kincannon liberally for his trouble, time, expense and counsel; and from the part he had taken it was supposed he knew the whereabouts of Mr. McClary. Mr. Rodolf sent for Mr. Kincannon to call and see him at Muscoda. Mr. Kincannon said he had sympathy for Mr. Rodolf's family, and in consideration of the $103 paid and $97 to be paid, he told Mr. Rodolf the whereabouts of Mr. McClary. F. C. Rodolf, by the aid of this information, arrested Mr. McClary in Illinois and brought him back to Richland Centre, in irons, in March, 1877. Mr. Brooks and Mr. McClary were taken before a justice of the peace, and after an examination, Mr. Brooks was remanded to jail, and Mr. McClary held to bail in the sum of $12,500, to await trial. Mr. McClary's bail was afterwards reduced by court commissioner Durnford to $6,000 which was furnished.

At the April term, 1877, they were proceeded against by the State jointly, upon information, for arson. Mr. McClary's friends saw at once that his being associated with Mr. Brooks would be a sad blow for the defense. But how to get Judge Cothren to give separate trials was a question. A successful plan, however, was devised. Mr. Brooks made an application for a change of venue, setting forth in his affidavit that he feared he could not get an impartial trial in this circuit on account of the prejudice of the judges. The change of venue was accordingly granted, and the case of State vs Hugh Brooks was taken to Dane county for trial. The attorneys were O. F. Black, E. C. Wulfing and George C. Hazelton, for the State, and James H. Miner, James Lewis, Eastland & Son and Dutcher & Brooks, for the defense. The trial at Madison was a long one, some forty witnesses being in attendance. The most important point raised in the trial was over the admission of testimony. Mr. Brooks had admitted before a justice of the peace that he had been hired to, and did burn the mill. The defense objected to the admission of this as evidence, on the ground that it was a confidential statement made to an officer of the law. The point was hotly argued and the judge sustained the objection. But during a recess for dinner he consulted one of the criminal lawyers who was in the city, and when court again convened he reversed his former decision and allowed the admissions of Mr. Brooks to be introduced. This placed Mr. Brooks in a bad position before the jury, and he could expect no leniency. If he had not burned the mill, as he claimed in his defense, then he was guilty of trying to get Mr. McClary in prison by false swearing, and if his former statements were true, then he was guilty. After being out a short time the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the judge sentenced him to five years in the penitentiary.

The final trial of the State of Wisconsin vs Thomas McClary, for complicity, took place at the fall term of circuit court in 1878, in Richland Centre. The trial excited great interest and was attended by a large concourse of people from all parts of the county. A great number of witnesses were sworn and examined. The testimony in a great measure was the same facts that have been related. Mr. Brooks after having made his first confession, that Mr. McClary had hired him to burn the mill, denied it, and stated that Rodolf had hired him to make the confession and throw the blame upon Mr. McClary, in the hope of forcing money from him (McClary). This was taken advantage of by the defense. Throughout, the case was managed in a most able manner upon both sides, not a stone being left unturned. The charge of Judge Cothren seemed to leave no hope for the defense, as will be seen from the following extracts from the charge, which will also serve to throw some light upon parts of the testimony introduced: Judge Cothren said to the jury: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant had a grudge against Rodolf, the owner of the mill, and had made threats that the mill should be destroyed, it justifies the conclusion that the defendant was under the influence of motives that might reasonably be supposed sufficient to prompt him to hire a person to burn the mill.

"If you find from the evidence that he employed, directed or counseled Hugh Brooks to burn the mill, you should find him guilty of the offense charged in the information. Brooks has been judicially found guilty of burning the mill. * * It was not the result of an accident. You will consider the conduct of defendant in going from place to place to escape arrest, leaving his family and having letters directed to him under an assumed name. Such conduct usually attends consciousness of guilt. Such conduct is not consistent with the possibility of innocence. It is inconsistent with the probability of innocence, and if not explained upon some reasonable hypothesis, which renders it consistent with his innocence, it raises a strong presumption against him of guilt. You will consider the statement made by Mr. Kincannon (if you believe that the defendant made it) that he only paid Mr. Brooks $5 when told that they would prove he paid Mr. Brooks $50, and give it such weight as you think it deserves. You will consider the statement made to Tuck Rodolf when arrested (if you believe that it was made) that if it had been twenty-four hours later he never would have got him in this world, and give it such thought as you deem it entitled to. And in the same connection you will consider the statement made to the sheriff, George Matteson, that if he had got his money before Tuck got hold of him, he would have given them a bigger chase, and give it such weight as you think it deserves. It is established that Hugh Brooks fired the mill. If you believe that James McKinney went with Mr. Brooks at the time the mill was fired, and believe that defendant had told Mr. McKinney that he had hired Mr. Brooks to do the burning, and had asked Mr. McKinney if he would do it in case Mr. Brooks failed, your belief from the evidence will lead to the result that the defendant is guilty, as charged in the information. If you believe from the evidence that Mr. McKinney went with Mr. Brooks at the time the mill was fired, and believe that he was induced to go with Mr. Brooks upon Mr. Brooks' representation that the defendant had employed him to do it, and had agreed to pay him $500 for doing it, and finding in connection with the evidence, will justify you in finding the defendant guilty, though you should doubt that defendant had told Mr. McKinney that he had hired Mr. Brooks, and doubt that defendant had asked Mr. McKinney if he would do it in case Mr. Brooks failed. It is possible that Mr. Brooks never burned the mill. But we are not in this case to look for that possibility for the purpose of engendering a doubt. He has been tried and found guilty.

That settles the question that he was at the mill and fired it. To raise any doubt upon that subject would require the clearest and most convincing proof that he did not do it. Every question involved in the idea that the burning might have been caused by a defective stove, that there was doubt about his doing it, on account of tracks in the snow not having been found, and his absence from the place of burning was passed upon in that case. You will take the fact that Hugh Brooks burned the mill as a fixed fact, and take that for your starting point, unless you are satisfied, from the evidence, that Mr. Brooks did not do the burning. Was the defendant accessory to the burning? Mr. Brooks in the beginning, charged that Mr. McClary employed him to do it. Mr. McClary fled. That is a circumstance. It is claimed that defendant, when informed of the charge, did not deny the charge. That is a circumstance. It is claimed that he made statements, inconsistent with his innocence, to Mr. Kincannon, to Tuck Rodolf and George Matteson. You are to judge. James McKinney says that he was present when the mill was burned. It is shown that he was in the neighborhood and might have been present. He is shown to be a man of bad reputation for truth and veracity. It does not follow that because his reputation is bad that the jury are bound to disbelieve what he said. A bad man may tell the truth. It is for the jury to say whether they believe him or not. Is his statement confirmed by others? They are to consider his manner of telling his story. His apparent intelligence and suavity, his means of knowledge, the interest he can have for telling a falsehood. Would he be likely to accuse himself of a heinous crime if it were not true? They are also to inquire whether the defendant is shown to be a man likely to confide in such characters as Mr. Brooks and McKinney. Did he associate with them? Was he here in Richland Centre eating at Mr. McKinney's house at the time Mr. McKinney said he was? Had the defendant boasted of a previous burning and threatened a subsequent one? Is Mr. McKinney's statement consistent with the fact of burning, and with his relations to the defendant and Brooks? If it is, and has inherent evidences of truth in itself, and fits in with all of the circumstances of the case and harmonizes with them, it may afford the jury the most incontestable evidence of the defendant's guilt. You are to pass upon the credibility of every witness, and are the sole judges of whether any one is to be believed. Mr. McKinney is brought upon the stand by the public prosecutor. He is solemnly sworn to tell the truth. There is no apparent reason for supposing that he has any pecuniary interest in telling a falsehood. No reason apparent for his entertaining feelings of personal hostility towards the defendant. He has every reason for shrinking from branding himself as a midnight incendiary. The presumption is that one will not falsely accuse himself. When he does inculpate himself does it not indicate that he testifies as one feeling the solemn obligations of his oath? It is your duty as reasonable men to believe or disbelieve? It is claimed that there is doubt of McKinney's statements, arising from tracks not having been found leading to or from the mill. To make this a ground for doubt you must be satisfied that there was such an examination made for tracks, as to very satisfactorily establish the fact that their were not any tracks made, when they must have been made if Mr. McKinney's statements are true. To warrant you in convicting you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty. The doubt must be reasonable and not merely imaginary. It must be such as to lead you to say my conscience is not satisfied of his guilt. Mere pity ought not to deter you from finding according to your convictions. Society in bringing criminals to justice, acts upon the principle of self defense. Let the guilty go free from the sympathy or soft heartedness of juries, and it is difficult to say who is safe or whether property possesses any value. The jury is clothed with the defense of the public when passing upon the guilt of the guilty. If from the whole case you entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, you will acquit him. If you have no reasonable doubt of his guilt you ought not to be deterred from any mere sentimentality from saying guilty."

After delivering his charge to the jury, Judge Cothren turned to the sheriff and ordered him to take the defendant in charge, and place him in jail, this notwithstanding the fact that he was under bail. The jury retired; the judge and a few others went to supper, but the major portion of the crowd hung around the court house in feverish excitement. In a short time the bell clanged! Every one rushed to the court house to hear the verdict, scarcely any one, not even the defendant or his attorney, even hoping for a verdict of not guilty. But in this they were mistaken; for, notwithstanding the charge of the judge, the verdict when read was not guilty! The old court house never before or since witnessed a scene like that which was then enacted! The judge ordered the defendant released and almost every one went to their homes feeling that justice had been done. Thus closed probably one of the most important criminal cases that have passed into the history of Richland county.

The case of N. H. Sliter vs. Luke Dean and Giles Cook, which was tried at the April term of court in 1879, attracted considerable attention. Sliter was a Baptist preacher; a small, bright, dapper fellow of a sensitive, mercurial temperament, and a good speaker. He preached in the town of Sylvan, where he had a large congregation. One Sunday, in the fall of 1878, he made some remarks which a young man, who was in the audience, took offense at, and deemed personal. After the services were over, the young man walked up to the pulpit and threatened the preacher with bodily harm. Sliter shoved the young man back. The affair produced great excitement at the time; but for several months nothing was done regarding it. In the meantime the young man had left the State. Finally, at the end of this time, Luke Dean, who was an elder in the Church and a local preacher, prevailed upon Giles Cook to procure the arrest of Sliter upon the charge of the assault mentioned. Sliter was arrested in Richland Centre. He he was taken before 'Squire Webb, of the town of Sylvan, and remained under arrest all day and part of the night awaiting trial, but the prosecution put in no appearance and the case was dismissed. Sliter then commenced this action against Luke Dean and Giles Cook, for malicious prosecution, to recover damages. The Church in Sylvan, where Dean was a member, and also the Church at Richland Centre, where Sliter occasionally preached, were divided in sentiment over the affair. The trial in circuit court was had at the April term, 1879, and was an exciting one. The attorneys were Black & Burnham for Sliter, and Miner & Berryman and Ex-Judge Mills, for the defendant. After a full hearing the jury returned a verdict of $270 for Sliter. Mr. Sliter afterward abandoned the pulpit and began reading law. He now lives somewhere in the northern part of this State.

In April, 1882 George Clementson was elected judge and is the present incumbent. The Fifth district now embraces the counties of Richland, Grant, Iowa, La Fayette and Crawford. Terms of court are held in April and October each year.

CHAPTER IX.

THE BAR OF RICHLAND COUNTY.

There is probably nothing of more interest in this history, to the general public, than the history of its bar, past and present. In this chapter, as far as possible, are given sketches of every attorney who has practiced in Richland county.

THE BAR OF THE PAST.

Among those who have practiced before the courts of Richland county in the past, and who have been resident lawyers, were the following: John J. Moreland, A. C. Eastland, J. W. Coffinberry (or C. Bre), A. P. Thompson, E. M. Sexton, Byron W. Telfair, Josiah McCaskey, D. B. Priest, William F. Crawford, Amos Nudd, Charles G. Rodolf, John S. Wilson, Lawrence Van Dusen, C. D. Stewart, W. C. Wright, W. S. Black, James Lewis, E. C. Wulfinf, George Jarvis and A. E. Stroud.

Among others who have been members of the bar, but not actively engaged in the practice of law, were: William McFarland, W. H. Downs, Josephus Downs, Ira S. Haseltine, Hascal Haseltine, George C. Wright, A. B. Slaughter, Robert Akan, G. W. Hadder, D. S. Hamilton, C. D. Bellville, Le Roy D. Gage, R. R. Hamilton, W. F. Hart, E. Livingston and E. C. Hammond.

All of the early settlers agree that John J. Moreland was the first lawyer to locate within the limits of Richland county. Mr. Moreland came here from Indiana as early as 1850, and settled at Richmond (now Orion). He was one of the first prosecuting attorneys of the county, and remained at Richmond until 1853, when he moved to the northeastern part of Iowa. Mr. Moreland claimed to have been in practice prior to coming here. He was not a man of education by any means, but was possessed of good natural ability and tact, and while here he had his share of the practice before justice courts. His present whereabouts are unknown, not having been heard from since the close of the war.

A. C. Eastland was born in the State of New York in 1820. His early life was spent upon his father's farm. When about twenty-one years of age he began the study of law in Michigan, and was admitted to the bar at Kalamazoo when twenty-four. He located at that place and began the practice of law, remaining about four years when he left there. In 1852 he came to Richland Co., Wis., locating at Sextonville. For several years he was engaged in a saw-mill enterprise and then came to Richland Centre and resumed the practice of his profession. For a number of years he was alone, after which he was in partnership with his brother, H. A. Eastland. A. C. Eastland was first married at Kalamazoo. He married his second wife at Sextonville. He remained in Richland Centre until 1881, when he moved to Muscoda, Grant Co., Wis., where he still lives. He was a man of a great deal of both natural and acquired ability, a well-read lawyer and an able speaker. For many years he was considered one of Richland county's most able lawyers.

J. W. Coffinberry came to Richland county in 1849, from Michigan, and settled with his family at Richland City. He was elected the first county judge of the county, but resigned in 1852. During 1852 and 1853 he kept a hotel and real estate office in Richland City, and was quite a prominent man in public affairs. In 1856 he had his name changed by the board of supervisors from "J. W. Coffinberry" to "C. Bre." It was always a mystery why he took this step. The only reason he offered the board for the change was, that the sound of the name "Coffinberry" when simmered down was really nothing more than "C. Bre." He remained in the county until just before the war broke out when he moved to Kansas, he and his wife having separated. His sons having got into the stock business pretty extensively, he now lives with them. Mr. Coffinberry, or perhaps, more properly Mr. Bre, did not engage in active practice when he first came to the county, but after resigning the office of county judge, and having his name changed he devoted a good deal, if not all, of his time to the profession. He was a man of a good deal more than ordinary education for those days, and a man of much ability. He was affable and pleasant in his manners, and held the respect of the early settlers.

A. P. Thompson was an eastern man. He was a graduate of the Albany Law School, New York, and came west to pass through pioneer life and secure a foothold in his chosen profession as the country developed. He first located in Sank county and began practice, but in 1852 came to Richland county and settled in Richmond, now Orion. He was at that time about thirty-five years old, and was married while there. He remained at Richmond for about fifteen years, when he removed to Grant county, where he still lives. He served Richland county as district attorney for several years. He was an able and close lawyer, a good speaker, and a man of much more than ordinary acquirements.

E. M. Sexton came from New York State at a very early day, and settled where Sextonville was afterward laid out. The village was platted by and named after him. He served the county and town in which he lived in various offices. He was admitted to the bar at an early day, and devoted some of his time to the practice of law, but never had more than a meagre business. In 1874 he removed to Barron Co., Wis., where his home remained until the time of his death, in 1878. He had a fine legal mind, and was one of the best counselors the county has ever had. He held the respect and esteem of all, and his death was mourned by a large circle of friends.

Byron W. Telfair became a member of the Richland county bar in 1854. He came from New York, being a graduate of the Albany Law School, and located at Sextonville. He had been admitted to the bar prior to his removal west, and brought a small library with him. His professional life dates from his arrival, for he at once began practice, and continued until the war broke out. At this time he enlisted and went into the service, serving with distinction, and finally becoming captain of his company before his discharge. Upon the close of the war he returned to his Richland county home, and again took up the practice of law, remaining until his death, which occurred in 1872. His wife and one child survived him, and a few years later they removed to the northern part of the State, where they still live. Byron W. Telfair was a man of much energy in anything he earnestly undertook, yet he lacked the necessary application to study which must always be a component part of a successful disciple of Blackstone. He was an earnest and forcible jury advocate, and withal, fairly successful at the bar. He never had much circuit court business, but before the justice court, on nearly all trials in his part of the county, he had one side or the other. He was a democrat in politics.

Josiah McCaskey was a native of Scotland. He came to Richland county as early as 1852, and settled with his family on Fancy creek, in the town of Marshall, and through his influence a postoffice was established at that place, with himself as postmaster. He remained there until 1874, when he removed to Taylor county, where he died in 1879. Josiah McCaskey was a noted character in Richland county. He was educated in Scotland, and came from the old "blue stocking, Presbyterian stock;" but while studying Greek, as he said, he became converted from the Presbyterian to the Baptist doctrine, and was always thereafter a man of strong religious tendencies. He was a man of high moral character, a great lover of books, and a self constituted guardian of the people, always being upon the alert to detect fraud in persons serving in official capacities. He was a very accurate surveyor and an active politician. He was not a very good speaker, but what he had to say he delivered in "sledge hammer style." In the practice of law he was never very active aside from trials in justice court.

Daniel Badger Priest became a member of the Richland county bar in June, 1855. He was born March 9, 1830, in Putnam Co., Ind. His father, Fielding Priest, who emigrated from Kentucky at an early day, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Indiana, was a man of great force of character, acknowledged ability and unsullied reputation. The early life of Daniel was spent upon his father's farm, attending school during the winter months. He completed a liberal education at the Asberry University. He chose the profession of law for his life calling, and even before arriving at his majority was well and favorably known to many of the prominent men of his native State. In the fall of 1850 he emigrated to Fort Snelling, Minn., near where St. Anthony now stands, and pre-empted 160 acres of land, remaining until the following spring. In 1852 he located for the practice of law, at Monroe, Wis., and soon afterward married Lucy Farrow, of Kentucky. Up to the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska act and the repeal of the Missouri compromise, he was a democrat. But in 1854 he was a delegate to the congressional district convention, held at Mineral Point, and with a number of others he dissolved his connection with that party, because the convention refused to endorse Congressman Eastman in his opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska act. In June, 1855, he removed to Richland Centre and remained in the active practice of law until 1861, when he removed to Viroqua, Vernon county. During his residence of seven years at Viroqua, he was twice elected to the office of district attorney, served two terms in the Assembly, and also discharged the duties of the office of assistant assessor of Internal revenue for Vernon county. He was also one of the editors of the Vernon county Censor. In March, 1869, Secretary Washburn tendered to him the appointment of minister to Naples, which he declined, and accepted the appointment of collector of Internal revenue for the sixth district of Wisconsin. In 1869 he removed to Sparta, Wis., where he was connected with the editorial department of the Sparta Eagle for some time. Sparta remained his home until the time of his death, Sept. 6, 1870. While Mr. Priest was a resident of Richland county he made a great many friends. He was always prominent in all public moves and enterprises, and was a leader among men. When he came here in June, 1855, Richland Centre was without any educational facilities at all. He at once took hold of the matter, worked up an interest, and through his influence, to a very large degree, a school house site was secured and a building erected. He was ever a champion of public interests and educational progress. When the news of the death of Mr. Priest was received, a meeting of the bar was held and resolutions of respect and regret were passed. At this meeting Hon. James H. Miner, in an address regarding Mr. Priest, said: "I became acquainted with Mr. Priest in August, 1855, and formed a law partnership with him in November following, which continued for more than thirteen years. I count myself happy in having formed his acquaintance and receiving the benefits of his presence. * * * If we are to count the length of life by what is accomplished, he lived long; for he accomplished much. Some have done more; but the ten thousand times ten thousand have done less. His faults were scarcely perceptible through his many virtues. He was solid and steady, inflexibly just, incapable of using any falsehood, flattery or deceit. Neither elated with honors nor disconcerted with ill success, he now fills an honored grave."

William Crawford came to Richland county in 1855, and settled upon a farm in the town of Ithaca. In 1856 he moved into Richland Centre, and began the practice of law, becoming a partner of lawyer Frost, of Mineral Point. He had never read very much law, but was a man of much more than ordinary intelligence and information, and had very good success at the bar, before the circuit court.

Amos Nudd came from some of the New England States and settled with his family at Richland Centre, in 1856. The first winter of his residence in Richland county he was engaged at teaching school, after which he went into the real estate and loan business with L. D. Gage, and began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar, and began practice, but only kept his "shingle" out a short time, when he removed to Wanpon, Iowa, where he engaged in the manufacture of pumps. He still lives there. Mr. Nudd was a man of high moral character and strict integrity, and held the respect and esteem of all. While he never became very prominently identified with the bar of Richland county, he had very bright prospects for future success in the profession, being a man of ability and education. He had a very excellent and intelligent family, his wife being the sister of George James.

Charles G. Rodolf came to Richland county at a very early day, and became a prominent man in all public affairs. He settled at the village of Orion, where he engaged at general merchandising. He began the practice of law in 1855, and was interested in much of the legal business in early days. He was very successful as a lawyer, well read in the law, and a fair speaker, although his language was quite broken his native German accent being plainly noticeable. He now lives at Muscoda, in Grant county.

John S. Wilson came to Richland county with his parents in 1853, and settled at Richland Centre. John S., for a number of years, followed teaching school and clerking in stores. In 1856 he was elected clerk of court, and while in this office he read law, and was admitted to the bar. After the expiration of his term as clerk, he opened a law office as partner of Amasa Cobb of Mineral Point, and remained in practice until the war broke out, when he raised a company, became its captain, and went into the service. After the close of the war he returned to Richland Centre, and again opened a law office. He remained there for a number of years, when he removed to Kansas, where he is still in the practice of law. While here Mr. Wilson did not have a very large law practice, but with that in which he was interested he was fairly successful. He did a large pension business, and it is thought made money. While here, in 1857, he was married to Jane Hamilton.

Lawrence Van Dusen came originally from the city of New York. In 1854 he located at Milwaukee, Wis., and two years later came to Richland county and settled upon a farm north of Richland Centre. In 1858 he was elected clerk of court, and during his term of office he studied law and was admitted to the bar. About the time the war broke out he began practice and remained until the spring of 1863, when he removed to Iowa. He afterwards engaged in the practice of medicine, was on the road for a time, and his whereabouts at present are unknown. Mr. Van Dusen was a very shrewd and able politician, having been brought up in Albany, N. Y., where his father was clerk of court and a democratic leader. He was a man of polished manners and of great ability; everybody's friend and a scheming money-maker.

Charles D. Stewart was admitted to the bar in Richland county at the May term of circuit court in 1859. Charley Stewart, as he was familiarly called, came from the State of New York at an early day and settled on Willow creek in the present town of Willow. In November, 1856, he was elected county clerk, and moved to the county seat. He served one term in the office, and during that time began the study of law. In 1859 he was admitted to the bar and engaged in the practice of law in the northern part of the county, locating in the town of Forest. He remained there until the time of his death which occurred in 1873. Mr. Stewart was possessed of a good education, made a good county official, a fair lawyer, and was a prominent man in his part of the county. He was a jovial, pleasant fellow, and, it is said, would rather laugh than eat.

W. C. Wright came to Richland county as a lawyer in 1860 and settled at Lone Rock. He had been in practice before coming here and was a very well educated man. He was a hard-worker, and a good speaker, when he had time to prepare himself. He had a fair practice and was very successful at the bar. After practicing law for several years he gave it up and began preaching for the Baptist Church. For a number of years he was located at Richland Centre, and the Baptist church at that place was erected during his pastorate. He finally moved to Madison and has subsequently changed his religious doctrine from the Baptist to the Unitarian faith. He still lives in Madison, where he is engaged at preaching and also teaching music, as he is a very fine musician.

Winfield Scott Black was born in Montgomery Co., Va., in 1848. He came to Richland county with his parents in 1854, and settled on Willow creek. He received a good education, taking a commercial course at the Chicago Mercantile College, and attending the State University at Madison. In the spring of 1869 he began reading law with his brother, O. F. Black, of Richland Centre, and was admitted to the bar in the fall of 1870. He at once began the practice of law in partnership with his brother, and this relation was maintained until the fall of 1875, when W. S. went to Minneapolis as collecting agent for O. P. Baker & Co. In 1872, Mr. Black was stricken with paralysis, but partly recovered and was soon able to attend to business again. In January, 1876, he returned to Richland Centre, from Minneapolis, and died March 22, 1876, from pleuro pneumonia, the effects of the stroke of paralysis he had received. In 1870, Mr. Black had been married to Alla L. Downs, and one son, Buford, blessed this union. The widow and child are still residents of Richland Centre. W. Scott Black was a young man of more than ordinary promise, and had the prospect of becoming an honor to the profession. He was bright and keen, a good speaker, and a well read lawyer. He was unusually energetic in everything he undertook.

James Lewis grew up from a young man of twenty-two, in Richland county, having come here at an early day with his parents from Indiana, and settled in the town of Richwood. He afterwards married a daughter of L. M. Thorp, of the western part of the county, and settled down to farming. In 1868 he was elected clerk of court, and two years later was re-elected. In 1862 he had settled at Port Andrew where he read law, and began practice. Upon the expiration of his term of office he located at Richland Centre, for law practice. In 1872 he was elected prosecuting attorney, and in 1874 was re-elected, serving four years. For a number of years he was in partnership with W. E. Carter, of Platteville, and they made a good firm. A few years ago Mr. Lewis removed to Nebraska, where he is now county judge of Greeley county, in which county he resides and has a large farm. James Lewis was a sound lawyer; he was not an eloquent nor even a fair speaker, but he was quick to see a point and was abundantly able to tell "what he had to say." He was what in the profession would be termed an "equity lawyer."

E. C. Wulging was one of the most promising young attorneys who have ever belonged to the Richland county bar. He was of German descent, and came to the county at an early day, settling with his parents upon a farm in the town of Orion. He afterwards came to Richland Centre, and took a thorough course of reading with O. F. Black, and in 1873 was admitted to the bar. For several years he was in partnership with Hon. James H. Miner, after which he was alone. In 1876 he was elected prosecuting attorney for Richland county, and being re-elected in 1878, served four years, making an efficient officer. He married Kate Downs, daughter of W. H. Downs, of Richland Centre. Mr. Wulging remained here, acquiring a good practice and making money, until 1882, when he went to Mitchell, Dak., where he is still in practice. He made many friends here, and all speak of him as a young man with the very brightest of prospects for the future.

George Jarvis came here a young man, with his parents, and settled in Richland City. He afterward moved to Richland Centre, where he became justice of the peace. He thus became pretty well posted in law and conversant with the detail of practice and was admitted to the bar. He remained here until 1882, when he went to Minnesota, where he engaged in the milling business. While here he devoted a good deal of his time to pension matters.

A. E. Stroud was a lawyer that located at Lone Rock but a few years ago, and after remaining two years, he left the county. He now lives in Milwaukee, where he has become justice of the peace in one of the city wards.

THE BAR IN 1884.

In 1884 the bar of Richland county was composed of the following gentlemen: H. A. Eastland, James H. Miner, Oscar F. Black, Kirk W. Eastland, F. W. Burnham, J. H. Berryman, Michael Murphy and Thomas A. Johnston, all of Richland Centre, and actively engaged in practice. In addition to the above the following gentlemen are members of the bar but are not engaged in practice: David Strickland, S. H. Doolittle, A. Durnford and H. W. Eastland, of Richland Centre; Newton Wells, of the town of Eagle; L. M. Thorp, of Excelsior; and Dr. R. M. Miller, of Port Andrew.

H. A. Eastland is the oldest lawyer residing in the county. He located and hung out his shingle at Sextonville in April, 1851. He practiced law at that place for about ten years, then came to Richland Centre, where he has since been engaged in a general law and collection business. Mr. Eastland was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., April 4, 1816. In 1833 he emigrated with his parents to Michigan, where he studied law and was admitted to the bar. In 1847 he came to Wisconsin and practiced law at Prairie du Sac, until he came to Richland county. He voted with the republican party from its organization until 1876, since that time he has voted the National greenback ticket. He is an active temperance worker. The only office he ever held was that of district attorney. In October, 1851, Mr. Eastland was married to Mrs. Isabelle A. Pierce nee. Briggs. They have two children—K. W. and H. W.

R. W. Eastland is a son of H. A. Eastland. He was born in Richland county, Oct. 5, 1852, and educated in the schools at Richland Centre, and subsequently read law. In 1875 he was admitted to the bar and has since devoted his attention to the legal profession. He is a republican, politically, and has been district attorney, and is at present town clerk. He was married Dec. 23, 1877, to Margaret Ostrander, daughter of D. B. Ostrander, of Sextonville. They have one child—Vera B.

Alexander Black was born in Montgomery Co., Va., Feb. 17, 1800. His early life was spent on a farm, and through his own efforts he succeeded in obtaining a good education. He was married at the age of twenty-five, to Elizabeth McDonald, who was of Scotch descent, but born in Virginia. Mr. Black held the office of county surveyor in his native State for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Black reared a family of twelve children. The oldest son, Harvey, was a soldier in the Mexican War, and subsequently graduated in the medical department of the University of Virginia. He then, in 1849 or 1850, went to Chicago, purchased a horse, and on horseback went to Green Bay; thence to Mineral Point; purchased land in Richland county, and went to St. Joseph, Mo.; then returned through the southwestern States to Virginia. The entire trip from Chicago was made on horseback. In 1854, Mr. Black, accompanied by his son, Oscar F., came to Wisconsin to see the land which Harvey Black had purchased. They were, however, intending to go to Texas, but on arriving at Richland county they were so well pleased with the location that Mr. Black purchased a large tract of land on Willow creek, and soon after moved his family from Virginia, and here engaged in farming until his death, which occurred Sep. 17, 1872. His wife died May 27, 1880. The children living are—Harvey, a physician in Blacksburg, Va.; Ellen, wife of James Spickard; Margaret, unmarried; Elizabeth, wife of George Krouskop; Amanda, wife of William Krouskop; James A., Oscar F. and J. Q. Scott Black came with his parents to this county and educated himself for the legal profession. He married a daughter of D. L. Downs. His death took place March 22, 1876. Charles Black died in August, 1856, aged sixteen years.

O. F. Black was born in Virginia, June 1, 1840. He came with his father to Wisconsin in 1854, and the first season broke land and raised a crop of corn. During the next five years, assisted by his brother, he broke 400 acres with ox teams. He was educated at the academy at Richland City, at Albion, and at the University at Madison. In the fall of 1861 he commenced to read law, with John S. Wilson as preceptor, and afterwards with J. H. Miner. In 1863 he was admitted to the bar. He then read law with H. W. & D. K. Tinney, of Madison, one year, then taught school six months at Muscoda. In the fall of 1864, he stumped the county for Gen. George B. McClellan for the Presidency, in joint debate against D. L. Downs and others. He then clerked in the quartermaster's department at Memphis, Tenn., until the following spring, and since 1866 has given his attention to the legal profession. He now has a good practice. Mr. Black is fond of traveling. He has crossed the plains four times, and has visited nearly all portions of the United States. His politics are democratic. He has served two terms as district attorney, and is a member of the F. & A. M. June 16, 1875, Mr. Black was married to Ida Burnham, daughter of Dr. S. Burnham. They have one daughter—Virginia.

Alfred Durnford is a native of England, born in Peekham, near London, May 1, 1818. His father, Andrew Montague Isaacson Durnford, was lieutenant-colonel in the Third Guards, British army, and the family was consequently not permanently settled at any given place; but resided in various parts of Great Britain and Ireland. Alfred Durnford was educated for the legal profession, and for a number of years was engaged in parliamentary solicitorship. In 1840 he united in marriage with Annie Smith, and in the fall of 1854 emigrated to the United States. He stopped at Milwaukee until the spring following, then came farther west and became one of the early settlers of Richland county. He purchased land on section 2, town of Dayton, and engaged in farming. But as he was admitted to the bar soon after coming to the county, he gave considerable of his time to the practice of law, and as his practice increased he left the farm and removed to Richland Centre and gave his entire attention to the legal profession until 1880, when on account of failing health he retired from practice, and now resides in the north part of the village, where he owns thirty acres of land, and is pleasantly located. He became associated with the democratic party soon after coming to America, and still adheres to its ranks, but has never taken any further interest than to perform his duty as an enlightened citizen. He was court commissioner for several years, and has served as justice of the peace. His religious convictions are with the Presbyterian society. Mr. and Mrs. Durnford have reared eleven children, five now living—George, Harriet, now Mrs. J. M. Shireman; Rosa, now Mrs. Lewis James; Edward II. and Frederick W.

James H. Miner is numbered among those who settled at Richland Centre when that now thriving village was in its infancy, his residence in that place bearing date Aug. 31, 1855, since which time he has given his attention to the legal profession. During the spring of 1856 he was chosen town superintendent of schools and served the people in that capacity one year. In the fall of 1856 he was elected district attorney and held the office for two terms. In 1862 he was deputy United States assessor of revenue. In 1865 he was elected county judge and served one term. In 1870 he represented his district in the Assembly. On the 26th day of July, 1876 he was appointed postmaster at Richland Centre and held the office until May, 1881. He served as a member of the State Industrial school for boys at Waukesha in 1880 and 1881. He has been court commissioner of the United States district court since 1872. He served as president of the village board one year and is now a member of the same. He took an active part in securing the railroad at Richland Centre and was one of the directors of the same. Thus it can be seen he has continually held positions of trust and honor, which fact among many others indicates his ability, and he is to-day justly honored and esteemed by his fellow men. Judge Miner was born in Lockport, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1830. His father Luthur Miner, was of Welch extraction and a farmer by occupation. His mother Eleanor (Grant) Miner, was of Scotch descent, but was born in Delaware. The early life of the subject of this sketch was spent on his father's farm and when eight years old he removed with his parents to Hillsdale Co., Mich., where he received an academic education and taught school. At the age of eighteen he commenced the study of law with Judge E. H. C. Wilson and subsequently continued with Judge Orsamus Cole. In 1852 he came to Wisconsin, taught school in Grant County, and in April 1855 was admitted to the bar, on the 12th day of May 1855, at Volga city, Iowa, he was married to Sarah Ann Dunn, who was a native of Alleghany Co., N. Y. The following winter he taught school in Richland Centre and was the first male teacher employed. The children are—Berkie, the first graduate of the Richland High school, and now the wife of J. H. Berryman; Grant L., Freddie J. (deceased), Carrie and Minnie. Judge Miner in politics was formerly a whig and now acts with the republican party, is a member of the Masonic fraternity having served as Master of Richland Lodge, No. 66, of which he was a charter member.

On the 22nd of February, 1876, the republican State convention nominated Mr. Miner, as one of the presidential electors, and remained as such nominee until in October, and then tendered his declination for the reason that subsequent to the nomination he had been appointed postmaster of Richland Centre, which rendered him ineligible. The declination was accepted by the central committee, and Dr. D. L. Downs, of Richland Centre, was placed upon the ticket to fill the vacancy, and was elected.

J. H. Berryman is a member of the law firm of Miner & Berryman. He was born in Lafayette Co., Wis., March 31, 1854. His parents were John and Mary A. (Retallach) Berryman. His early life was spent upon a farm. When he was twelve years old, his parents removed to Jo Daviess Co., Ill. He was educated at the Normal school at Galena, and afterwards taught school. In 1876 he went to Madison, where he acted as assistant State librarian, and also read law; afterwards read law in the office of Lewis, Lewis & Hale, and in November, 1878, was admitted to the bar by the circuit court. In June, 1879, he graduated from the law department of the State University. His residence at Richland Centre, dates from November, 1878. Oct. 30, 1880, Berkie Miner became his wife. They have one daughter—Mary Edith. Mr. Berryman is a republican in politics, and village attorney. Himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

F. W. Burnham, of the law firm of Black & Burnham, is a son of H. L. and Susan (Lowell) Burnham. He was born in Addison Co., Vt., June 25, 1853; came with his parents to Wisconsin in 1856. He helped till the soil until eighteen years of age, then took a course at the La Crosse Business College. In the fall of 1875, he commenced to read law with O. F. Black, a preceptor, and in 1877, was admitted to the bar, and has since been a member of the above named firm. Politically he is a republican. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F.

PRESENT COUNTY OFFICIALS.

Michael Murphy, district attorney, is a native of Ireland, born Feb. 2, 1846. His parents were Daniel and Elizabeth (O'Brien), Murphy. The family came to America in 1850, and first stopped in Westchester, N. Y. In 1854 they came to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Willow, Richland county, where they engaged in farming until 1872. The parents now reside with the subject of this sketch. The children living, are—James, Kate, Michael, Daniel and Eliza. Michael helped till the soil with his father, and received a good common school education and subsequently taught school. In the fall of 1872, he was elected clerk of the circuit court, and held the office six years. During that time he studied law, and was admitted to the bar of Richland county. In 1880, was admitted to practice before the Supreme court of the State. In the fall of 1882 he was elected district attorney and entered upon the duties of the office Jan. 1, 1883. His politics are republican.

In the county clerk's office at this time may be found Homer J. Clark, who was elected to this position in the fall of 1882, and entered upon his duties January 1, 1883. Mr. Clark is a genial, whole-souled gentleman, affable and accommodating, ever ready to serve any one who may have business in his office, and the people of Richland county certainly exercised good judgment in their selection of an officer to this position. As a public man he has proved himself a satisfactory officer, having served several years as town clerk of Richwood, and one term as clerk of circuit court, and was assistant enrolling clerk, General Assembly, 1882. He is a Royal Arch mason, and in politics a republican. Mr. Clark is the only son of Edmund and Sally (Benson) Clark; was born in Schuyler Co., N. Y., on the 20th day of April, 1848. He was left motherless when four years old, but subsequently his father married again, and in 1856 the family came to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Richwood, Richland county, and engaged in farming. Homer received a good common school education, and afterwards taught a number of terms. He made farming a business, and at this time, in connection with his father, owns about 350 acres of land. On the 23d day of October, 1873, he was married to Ada McNelly, daughter of Dr. Henry McNelly. They have two children—Nora and Hattie.

W. S. Sweet, the present county superintendent of schools, is not an old resident in the county, but a gentleman well qualified for the position he occupies. His parents, Abijah and Maria (Rhodes) Sweet, reside at Spring Green, and it was in the district schools of that vicinity, that he acquired the rudiments of his education, and at the age of fifteen years, taught his first term of school. Being a poor boy, he could not afford to educate himself at once, so he continued teaching, during the winter season, and attending school in the summer. In this way he attended one term at the State University, and afterward, several terms at the State Normal school, at Platteville. In the spring of 1875, he was chosen principal of the schools at Lone Rock, and in the fall of the same year, took charge of the grammar department of the schools at Richland Center. One year later he was chosen principal of said schools, which position he held for four years. In 1880 he passed the State examination and was granted a State certificate. In the fall of 1881 he was elected to the office he now holds, and entered upon its duties on the first day of January following. Mr. Sweet is the author of a book entitled "The Polity of Home Government," which supplies a long felt want in the schools. By the aid of this text book the pupil may become well-versed in the duties of local affairs, thus fitting himself to become a useful and better citizen. Winfield Scott Sweet was born in Dodge Co., Wis., Jan. 31, 1854, and has always been a resident of the State. Aug. 24, 1876, Jennie C. Fries, daughter of the late Judge Henry W. Fries, became his wife and they now have two children—Bula and Bessie. Mr. Sweet is politically a republican, and in religion, a believer in the Baptist faith.

R. Sutton, register of deeds, is a native of Ripley Co. Ind., born Sept. 3, 1843. He is the third of the five sons of A. M. and Jane M. (Wilson) Sutton. His early life was spent upon his father's farm. When the Civil War broke out, he at once enlisted in company A, of the 37th Indiana Volunteer Infantry; re-enlisted in 1863, and served until August, 1865, when the regiment was mustered out of service. He participated in all of the engagements of his regiment and returned home in good health and without a scratch. At the close of the war, he resumed farming, and in 1867, had the misfortune to cut one of his legs with an ax, crippling himself for life. In 1870 he came to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Eagle, Richland county, and followed farming until the fall of 1876, when he was elected to the office he now holds, and in which he is now serving his third term. He is an accommodating officer, and well fitted for the position he occupies. In politics he is a republican, and has served several years as town clerk of Eagle town. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is present secretary of Richland Lodge, No. 66. Mr. Sutton has been twice married. In 1869 to Mary Gault, who died in 1871, leaving one son—Emmett. In 1873 Eunice E. Beard became his wife. By this union, three children have been born—Ellen R., Maud I. and Clyde E.

The funds of Richland county are now in charge of Irvin Gribble, who is serving his second term as county treasurer. He was born in Somerset Co., Penn., May 9, 1841, his parents being John and Rebecca (Kanable) Gribble. In 1844 the family removed to Clinton Co., Ind., and in 1854 came to Wisconsin, and settled in the town of Kickapoo, Vernon county. The father owned land in Richland county but on account of water privileges built his cabin in the county of Vernon, and engaged in farming. About the year 1869 the parents removed to Viola, where the father died in April, 1875. The mother is yet living, and now resides with one of her sons. Irvin Gribble assisted his parents on the farm until October, 1861, when he responded to the call of his country, and enlisted in company I, of the 12th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, re-enlisted Jan. 4, 1864, and served until Aug. 10, 1865, when the regiment was mustered out of service. Mr. Gribble was chief clerk in the inspector general's department on the day Gen. James B. McPherson was killed. Returning from the army, he resumed farming. He was at one time chairman of the town board of Forest, and at another time treasurer of the same. In politics he is a republican, and in 1880 was a delegate to the State convention, where he cast his ballot and used his influence in favor of James G. Blaine for a Presidential candidate. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Gribble, in 1872, was married to Sarah Bender, daughter of Elias E. Bender, and now has five children—Lina, Elsie, Ella, Willard and Myra.

James Appleby, the present county surveyor, and pioneer settler of the town of Eagle, was born in county Durham, England, Nov. 27, 1828. At an unusual early age he was sent to the common school, which he attended until eleven years of age. He was then sent to Kirby Academy. When thirteen years old, he, in company with his parents, emigrated from Yorkshire, England, to America, coming directly to the territory of Wisconsin, and locating in that part of Iowa county now known as La Fayette county. His father made a claim on a tract of mineral land, at that time held in reserve by the Government. As soon as the land came into the market he purchased it. He erected his house nearly on the site, where a few years before the first lead furnace in that part of La Fayette county was built. Here the subject of our sketch, at the early age of fourteen, engaged in teaching as private tutor for the family of James Murphy, Esq., teaching for him two years, and again engaged for Capt. Matthew Williams during one winter, in the same capacity—in the intervening time attending the district schools in his neighborhood. He was married in 1846 to Susanna C. Palmer. She was born in Shelby Co., Ky. He went to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., and engaged as clerk in a general store, remaining there until the spring of 1849, when he came to Richland county and settled in what is now known as the town of Eagle. He made his home in that town until 1863, when he removed to Richwood, purchasing land on sections 4 and 5, town 8, range 2 west. He erected a good frame house on section 4, and still makes that his home. Mr. Appleby has been county surveyor for seventeen years. His first official survey was made in 1850, for the town of Richmond. It was for a road, and commenced in the middle of Commerce street, village of Monongahela, and extended north past Rodolf's mill and terminated at the quarter section corner stake, between sections 25 and 26 of town 9, range 1 west. He has been superintendent of schools for the town of Eagle, one year, and assessor for the town of Richwood, two years. Mr. Appleby is a member of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, belonging thereto about twenty-six years, and has filled many important places in his Church, being granted license, by his quarterly conference to preach, being quarterly conference secretary for several years, was recommended to the annual conference, accepted, and given license by Bishop Glossbrenner, of Virginia, to preach, passed the several examinations required and ordained as an elder in said Church. He has filled the office of secretary of the Wisconsin Annual Conference. He has been appointed to and filled the most important committees of his conference, and was elected a delegate to the last general conference of his Church, of which privilege, however, he did not avail himself. Notwithstanding his many and arduous duties and labors, he can always find time to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. It would almost seem unnecessary to add that Mr. Appleby is a strong temperance man, upon which he can truly say "I nurse my wrath to keep it warm." Mr. and Mrs. Appleby have nine children—Mary S., J. Marshall, Martha E., Arthur W., Laura L., Emma F., Luther L., Annie V. and Lelia F. Mr. Appleby is well known in all parts of the county, and enjoys, to the fullest extent, the respect and confidence of the people.

Daniel Lyman Downs, M. D., is a native of Trumbull Co., Ohio, born on the 2d day of December, 1824. His father, Lyman Downs, a native of Connecticut, was a shoemaker by trade, followed farming to some extent, and for a number of years was engaged in buying butter and cheese on the Western reserve. He would sell his butter and cheese in Cincinnati, then go east and buy clocks, which he would sell in the southern States; then buy horses and return to Ohio, and having disposed of them at a remunerative figure would invest the proceeds in butter and cheese. His mother, Esther (Woodward) Downs, was of Scotch descent, and was born in the State of New York. In 1832 the family removed to Michigan and in 1838 to Belvidere, Boone Co., Ill., and settled on a farm. Here the subject of this sketch helped till the soil, attended school a part of the season and at the age of seventeen entered the Belvidere Academy, where he took a two years course. He then commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Daniel H. Whitney, attended lectures at the Rush Medical College, and in 1847 commenced practice as a physician at Millville, Jo Daviess Co., Ill. In the fall of 1849 he associated Molby Ripley as a partner and engaged in a general mercantile and drug business. During the month of February, 1850, accompanied by his partner, he came to Wisconsin, and about the middle of this month they made their first appearance in Richland county. They located at Orion, purchased property and established themselves in business, removing their stock of goods from Millville. About this time Dr. Downs, failing in health, left his partner in charge of the business, and took a trip to the Pacific coast, engaged in mining in California until February, 1852, then returned to Orion, and in April, 1853, sold his interest in the store to his partner and resumed the practice of medicine. In 1858 he was elected county treasurer, removed to Richland Center and served the people in that capacity one term. He then purchased the drug business of F. P. Bowen, and in 1860 furnished the necessary capital to build a tannery in this place which was the second enterprise of this character in the county. In January, 1865, he sold a half interest in his drug business to F. P. Bowen, and enlisted in the 46th Wisconsin regiment, and served as assistant surgeon until mustered out. He then again attended to his drug trade until 1878, when on account of failing eyesight, he sold his interest in the business to his partner. In February, 1880, he was appointed county judge as successor to H. W. Freis, and in the spring of 1881, was elected for a full term. Dr. Downs, in politics, was originally a democrat, in 1860 voted for Stephen A. Douglas, but in 1864 cast his ballot for Abraham Lincoln, and has since been a republican. In 1855 he represented his district in the Assembly, and in 1876-7 was a member of the Senate. He has been a member of the county board for many years, and has often been chairman of the same, holding, meanwhile, various minor offices of public trust. He is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the G. A. R. Thus it can be seen that Dr. Downs was one of the early pioneers, and has been one of the most active citizens of the county, and no man within its borders has the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens to a greater degree. Mrs. Downs, formerly Mary D. Cowen, is a native of Illinois. The children are—Hubert L., Allie, J. Lee, Minnie L. (deceased) and Eno L.

CHAPTER X.

EDUCATIONAL.

History has furnished no lens powerful enough for us to discern the beginning of the school system, if system it can be called, that in the dawn of human intelligence first undertook to instruct the young. It appears like some fixed star which is lost in the nebulae of mythology, and is obscured from our eyes in the misty past. We are told of schools of astronomy in Babylon, at least 3,300 years before the Christian era, schools of medicine and science in China but little later. Schools were one of the institutions of Egypt in the time of Moses, and the schools and lyceums of Greece date back to the seige of Troy. But little is known of the mode of teaching in these early days, and, it is not until in the fifteenth century, that anything like an intelligent effort seems to have been made toward the instruction of the masses.

In our own time and country the history of education has been a varied one. The Puritan had no sooner established himself on the wave-washed, stormy coast of New England, than he planted the precious seed of the district school, whose foundation was so solid, whose roots were so deep and far reaching that it secured so strong a foothold, the storms and trials of two centuries and a half have never disturbed, nor interrupted its course, nor loosened its hold in its native soil. The system of district schools, as these mighty reformers planted and nourished it, has endured and does endure to this day in the land where they first raised the banner of universal education.

This system, with such modifications as were suggested by the difference of time and circumstances, was brought from that far away land of our forefathers, by them when they turned their faces toward the setting sun; and some of the precious seed, so sown, has found a lodgment in this, our noble State of Wisconsin.

For many years after the settlement of Richland county, each town had the absolute control of the schools within its limits, and the town superintendent of schools was one of the most important of its officers. It was not until 1861, when the system was changed and the school districts put under the authority of a county superintendent of public instruction. The gentleman who has the honor to first fill this position was J. H. Mathers, who was elected November 5, the year above mentioned. He was succeeded after two years service, in 1863, by W. C. Wright, who also held it for two years. The succeeding superintendents were: V. S. Bennett, G. W. Putnam, William J. Waggoner, David Parsons and W. Scott Sweet, who at present, presides over the destinies of the educational system of Richland county.

It has always been the endeavor to choose such men for this position as were best fitted by nature and education, for the situation, and a highly commendable system has been the outgrowth of this foresight.

As has been said, the first school taught in the county was that opened in 1847, in a room of Peter Kinder's house, in Richwood town, and from that small beginning has grown and ramified into the present full tree of education.

No district is complete without its school houses; in the county are now some 130 buildings used for that purpose, covering an investment of about $40,000, and employing about 210 teachers, who have enrolled in the neighborhood of 7,500 scholars. Behold, from how small a beginning great results may follow.

In 1875 there were enrolled in the various schools of the county 5,429 scholars, out of a total population of 7,094, between the school ages of four and twenty. At that time 127 teachers were employed, and the schools of that period are spoken of as being in fine condition; but those who have lived in the county from an early date say that the last eight years have seen a remarkable improvement over that. This is partly due to the active exertions of W. S. Sweet, the present superintendent, who, to a liberal education and strong natural abilities, brings an earnest desire to raise the standard of excellence and quality of the educational status.

The number of scholars enrolled in the various school districts of the county, during the year 1879, is here given by towns for convenience of reference:

Akan, 323; Bloom, 536; Dayton, 440; Buena Vista, 340; Eagle, 454; Forest, 383; Henrietta, 364; Ithaca, 455; Marshall, 385; Orion, 272; Richland, 663; Richwood, 626; Rockbridge, 492; Sylvan, 434; Westford, 468, and Willow, 380; or a grand total of 7,029 in the whole county. There were at that time, 127 schools, taught by 203 teachers, who were paid salaries that averaged, for males $28.48, and for females $20.34.

The school buildings were valued at $37,821, without the apparatus and fittings therein contained. Most of the buildings were in good state of repair, and the county superintendent in his report for that date speaks quite proudly of the efficiency of the corps of teachers.

Teachers' institutes are held annually, and occasionally semi-annually, with a good attendance.

A teachers' association is also one of the institutions of the county, which meets weekly for the discussion of educational topics and, also, for mutual improvement. Nearly all the teachers in the county are members of it; but many are deterred by distance, and the duties attendant upon their profession, from a regular attendance. One of the out-growths of this pleasant re-union has been

THE TEACHERS' LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

This is an association which was organized in the year 1875, for the mutual improvement of the teachers of Richland county. The idea is to have a library which is distributed in some twenty different localities in the county, from which the members can take out volumes to read; these books are changed from place to place twice every year, so as to give all a change of pasture. The society has now about 150 members, and has accumulated the nucleus of a fine library already numbering some 428 volumes. The members are required to pay $1 on joining, and an annual due of twenty-five cents thereafter. The matter has received the support of all those interested in educational progress, and bids fair to be a large factor in the near future in the school system. The management is advised by the county school superintendent, W. S. Sweet, who is president, and who finds no labor too hard or onerous, if it will result in good to the cause he has the interest of, so much at heart.

Many of the items relating to the early schools and the later and present status of the educational interests, having been made mention of in the history of the various towns, have been omitted here to avoid useless repetition. By a reference to these, it will be found that there this subject has received the full consideration which it deserves, a subject we all have the deepest interest in, for it has most truly been said that "the public school system is the palladium of our liberties."

CHAPTER XI.

GOVERNMENT SURVEYS.

From the field notes of the surveyors and the Government plats, many items of interest are obtained. These sources furnish the facts presented in this chapter.

The town lines in Richland county were run by William Burt, Lucius Lyon, Joshua Hathaway and J. E. Witcher, in the years 1839, 1840 and 1845, mostly in 1840.

The sectional lines were run by Orson Lyons, Harvey Parker, Sylvester Sibley, Alvin Burt, Joshua Hathaway, Robert D. Lester, James M. Marsh, Willard Barrows, Charles Phipps, Garret Vliet and A. L. Brown, in the years 1833, 1839, 1840, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1846 and 1852. The first surveying was done by Harvey Parker, who ran the sectional lines in the southwestern part of Richland county in February, 1833.

The last general surveying was done by Charles Phipps, who surveyed the towns, Marshall and Sylvan, May, 1852.

Town 8 north, of range 2 east (sections 1-5, 11 and 12, in the southeastern part of Buena Vista), was surveyed by Sylvester Sibley, February, 1833. He was assisted by James Videto and A. L. Cotton, chainmen, and Noah Brookfield, ax-man. Was re-surveyed by Alvin Burt, assisted by Reuben Fenick and John S. Byrne, chainmen, and Anson B. Morey, marker.

Town 9 north, of range 2 east (sections 1-6 and the northern half of sections 7-12, is in the southern part of Ithaca; the southern half of sections 7-12 and the whole of sections 13-16, constitute the main part of Buena Vista), was surveyed by Alvin Burt, assisted by Reuben Fenick and John S. Byrne, chainmen, and Anson B. Morey, marker, June 1842. The bluffs in this town are high, abrupt, rocky points and ridges, thinly timbered with a stunted growth of black and white oak, with a thick undergrowth of aspen, hazel brush and vines. On the bottoms it is thinly timbered with bur, black and white oak, with aspen and willow underbrush, and near the margin of the streams with maple, elm, ash, aspen, alder, linn, etc. On sections 22 and 23 is a growth of pitch pine.

Town 10 north, of range 2 east (main part of Ithaca), was surveyed in 1843 by Robert D. Lester, who was assisted by Joseph Atherton and S. P. Folsom, chainmen, and James Hall, marker. This town is generally hilly and broken, land good in the ravines; on ridges soil is thin and light, well watered by pine springs and small streams, thinly timbered with black and white oak, elm, linn, aspen and hickory, with an undergrowth of oak, hazel and poplar bushes.

Town 11 north, of range 2 east (Willow), was surveyed in the fourth quarter of 1855, by James M. Marsh, assisted by William Clearland and Joseph Stone, chainmen, and James Anderson, marker. The face of the country in this town is very broken, consisting of high precipitous sandstone bluffs, in height from ten to 150 feet, covered with a heavy growth of aspen, elm, linn, sugar cherry, white and black oak. The country is well watered by springs. The streams are rapid. The east branch of Pine river, south branch of Honey creek and the south branch of Baraboo river have their source in this town.

Town 12 north, of range 2 east (Westford), was surveyed in 1843, by Gilbert Vliet, assisted by J. Vliet and C. T. Seregimbe, chainmen, and C. Webster, marker. This town lies in the "divide" between the Baraboo and Pine rivers. It is for the greater part heavily timbered, the timber being of good quality, large and thrifty. The land is principally undulating, of good quality, well adapted to farming, the principal objection being a want of water, though where found it is of a superior quality.

Town 8 north, of range 1 east (northern part of sections 4 and 5 in the southwestern part of Orion), was surveyed by Sylvester Sibley, United States deputy surveyor, assisted by James Videto and A. L. Cotton, chainmen, and Noah Brookfield, ax-man. The survey was commenced February 19, and completed March 4, 1833.

Town 9 north, of range 1 east (sections 2-11, 14-23, 23-35, the main part of Orion; section 1, and the northern half of section 12 is in the southwestern part of Ithaca; southern part of section 12 and the whole of sections 13, 24 and 36 is in the western part of Buena Vista), was surveyed in March, 1833, by Sylvester Sibley, assisted by James Videto and A. L. Cotton, chainmen, and Noah Brookfield, ax-man. Was surveyed by Alvin Burt, June, 1842, assisted by Reuben French and John S. Byrne, chainmen, and Anson B. Morey, marker. In his notes Mr. Burt says: "This town is mostly broken and hilly. The ridges are high, narrow and rocky, timbered thinly with white and black oak, with a thick undergrowth of oak, hazel, aspen, dogwood, hickory brush and vines. The ravines are mostly narrow, deep, and timbered with white and black oak, elm, linn, aspen, sugar and ironwood."

Town 10 north, of range 1 east (Richland), was surveyed by Robert D. Lester in 1843. Was assisted by Joseph Atherton and L. P. Folsom, chainmen, and James Hall, marker. This town is generally hilly and broken. Land generally poor, well watered by the Pine river and its branches. West of the river it is well timbered with white and black oak, elm, linn, aspen, hickory and elmwood, with an undergrowth of hazel, dogwood, and prickly ash, on the highland. In the ravines, in which the streams run, alder, prickly ash, thornbush, etc. East of the Pine river there is principally a second growth of poplar, burr-oak, ironwood, hickory, ash, hazel, dogwood, grape vines, etc. Pine river is a stream about sixty links in width, with a quick current of two feet in depth, sand bottom, shores low and of the same kind of soil.

Town 11 north, of range 1 east (Rockbridge), was surveyed by William Clearland, assisted by Joseph Stone, chainman, and James Anderson, marker. The face of the land in this town is very broken, soil sandy and poor. The timber consists of a heavy growth of white and black oak, linn, elm, sugar, aspen, ironwood, and some pines on the bluffs in the immediate vicinity of Pine river, with a heavy undergrowth of grape-vine, briar, prickly ash, etc. The water in this town is very good, consisting of excellent springs. Pine river flows nearly through the center of this town from north to south.

Town 12 north, of range 1 east (Henrietta), was surveyed April, 1845, by James M. Marsh, assisted by William Clearland and Joseph Stone, chainmen, and James Anderson, marker.

Town 8 north, of range 1 west (northwestern half of section 1 and the northern part of section 2, is in the southeastern part of Eagle. Eastern half of section 1 is in the southern part of Orion), was surveyed May, 1833, by Sylvester Sibley, assisted by James Videto and A. L. Cotton, chainmen, and Noah Brookfield, ax-man.

Town 9 north, of range 1 west (sections 1-35 and the western half of section 36 is the main part of Eagle. The eastern half of section 36 is in the southwestern part of Orion), was surveyed by Orson Lyon in 1840. He was assisted by Truman Carter and S. D. Kirkpatrick, chainmen and Thomas Cox, ax-man. The soil of this country is broken and hilly; second and third rate. Excepting the southern part along the Wisconsin river, where it is nearly level, and is first rate and second rate land. The tract is from one to two miles in width on the southern part of the town. The whole is well timbered with linn, oak, sugar tree, ironwood, aspen, etc., with an undergrowth of the same, and prickly ash, plum, thorn and crab apple on the creek bottom.

Town 10 north, of range 1 west (Dayton) was surveyed in 1843 by W. Barrows, assisted by W. V. Anderson and Edward Fitzpatrick, chainmen, and William P. Easley, marker. This town is much the same in character as town 10 north, of range 2 west (Akan), very hilly and broken. The soil in many places is thin and unfit for cultivation. The timber in general is good.

Town 11 north, of range 1 west (Marshall), was surveyed in 1843 by W. Barrows, assisted by William Vandover and Edward Fitzpatrick, chainmen, and William P. Easley, marker. Was re-surveyed May 1852, by Charles C. Phipps, assisted by Edwin Fossett and Jeremiah Hurley, chainmen, Edward Stever, ax-man, and C. F. Mathias, flagman. The surface of this town is very hilly. In the eastern part it is poor, third rate, in the western part it is first and second rate. The timber is of the first quality, and stands very thick on the ground.

Town 12 north, of range 1 west (Bloom), was surveyed in 1845, by A. L. Brown, assisted by Alexander Anderson and Joel M. Higgins, chainmen, and James Anderson, marker. The most remarkable feature about this town is its great quantity of water. At the source of almost every stream there is a bold and seemingly never failing spring. The timber is chiefly sugar, maple, linn, and elm. There seems to be wild game of every description, with the exception of the wild turkey.

Town 8 north, of range 2 west (sections 2 and 8 are in the southern part of Richwood), was surveyed by Harvey Parker, February, 1835. He was assisted by L. O. Bryan and W. Smith, chainmen. Was re-surveyed by Orson Lyon, May, 1840. He was assisted by Freeman B. Gordon and S. D. Kirkpatrick, chainmen, and Isaac Vanderburgh, marker.

Town 9 north, of range 2 west (main part of Richwood), was surveyed in 1840, by O. Lyons, assisted by Truman B. Gordon and S. D. Kirkpatrick, chainmen and Isaac K. Vanderburgh, marker. This town is hilly, second and third rate, excepting in the southern part where there is a strip of land from three-fourths to one and one-half miles in width, that is rolling, with some first and good second rate soil. The whole is well timbered with oak, linn, sugar tree and ironwood; also some butternut and black walnut.

Town 10 north, of range 2 west (Akan), was surveyed June, 1843, by W. Barrows, assisted by William Vandover and Edward Fitzpatrick, chainmen, and William P. Easley, marker. The surface of this town is broken and hilly; with one or two exceptions there is not level land enough to make a good farm. There is a ridge of good timber land. The soil generally is good. The timber is mostly sugar tree, linn and white oak. Would make a good sugar camp.

Town 11 north, of range 2 west (Sylvan), was surveyed by W. Barrows, assisted by William Vandover and Edward Fitzpatrick, chainmen and William P. Easley, marker, in 1843. Was re-surveyed in 1852, by Charles Phipps, assisted by C. Fossitt and Jeremiah Hurley, chainmen, Edwin Steever, ax-man, and E. F. Mathias, flagman.

Town 12 north, of range 2 west (Forest), was surveyed in December, 1845, by A. L. Brown, assisted by Joel M. Higgins and Alexander Anderson, chainmen, and James Anderson, marker. The tops of the ridges in this town, notwithstanding their great elevation, are generally not too rolling for cultivation. Judging from the timber, which is large, very tall and thick, also from the kind, namely: first, sugar maple; second, linn; third, elm and ash; fourth, black, white and bur oak, the soil must be very good but not more than one foot deep, with a substratum of yellow clay. The bottoms are generally wet and unfit for cultivation. They are timbered with elm, with an undergrowth of alder.

CHAPTER XII.

REMINISCENCES OF EARLY DAYS.

In this chapter are given the personal experiences of pioneers of Richland county. These articles are written or related by the pioneers, and when written, the compiler has in no case attempted to change the style of the writer, it being the design to show the peculiarity of the writer, as well as to record the facts narrated. The expressions of an individual in writing show his character and peculiarities as plainly as his features painted upon canvass, or printed from steel or stone.

These sketches relating to personal matters will show the disadvantages under which the hardy pioneers procured the homes which now seem so comfortable. Whatever of romance adhered to the hardy colonist was abundantly compensated for by hard work. Contrast the journey of that devoted party through the roadless and bridgeless tract between Chicago and their destination, with a party on a like journey to-day. Instead of weeks of labor and toil, privation and suffering, with cold and hunger, a seat is taken in a palace car in the evening at Chicago; an unexceptional supper is partaken of without leaving the train; the passenger retires upon a downy couch, and in the morning awakens to find himself at his point in southwestern Wisconsin, having lost no time by the journey. Those who enjoy these blessings would be less than human if they were not filled with gratitude to these early settlers, who paved the way and actually made the present condition of things possible. At that time the confines of civilization were on the lakes; Chicago had not many thousand people; Milwaukee was just beginning to be a village, and Madison was a mere vidette, and an outpost of civilization. There was nothing in the now wealthy region of southwestern Wisconsin except the intrinsic merit of the location, to attract people from their more or less comfortable homes in the eastern States, or on the other side of the water. The hope as to the future, which "springs eternal in the human breast," was what lured them on, and, although, those that came were usually regarded by the friends they left as soldiers of fortune, who, if they ever returned at all, would indeed be fortunate; they were a sturdy race, who realized the inequality of the struggle in the old States or countries, and resolved to plant themselves where merit would not be suppressed by tradition.

The men who came were, as a rule, enterprising, open-hearted and sympathizing; they were good neighbors, and so good neighborhoods were created, and they illustrated the idea of the brotherhood of man more by example than by quoting creeds. With a bravery that never blanched in the presence of the most appalling danger, they were nevertheless tender, kind and considerate in the presence of misfortune; and their deficiency in outward manifestations of piety was more than compensated by their love and regard for humanity. And if their meed of praise is justly due to the men, and it certainly is, what shall be said of the heroic women who braved the vicissitudes of frontier life, endured the absence of home, friends and old associations, whose tender ties must have wrung all hearts as they were severed. The devotion which would lead to such a breaking away, to follow a father, a husband or a son into the trackless waste, west of the great lakes, where gloomy apprehensions must have arisen in the mind, is above all praise. The value of the part taken by the noble women who first came to this uninhabited region, cannot be over-estimated. Although by nature liberal, they practiced the most rigid economy, and often at critical times, preserved order, reclaiming the men from despair during gloomy periods; and their example of industry constantly admonished him to renewed exertions; while the instincts of womanhood, constantly encouraged integrity and manhood.

EARLY DAYS IN THE TOWN OF ORION.

[By Levi Houts.]

Richland county was held by Iowa county until organized as a county. Was sub-divided by Iowa county into two towns: 1st, Richmond, which includes all the territory from the Wisconsin river north on the congressional line, range 1 east, of the 4th principal meridian, to the north line of the county; thence west along said line to the northwest corner of township 12, 2 west; thence south from said corner on the congressional line to the Wisconsin river; thence east along said river to the place of beginning, including now, Orion, Richland, Rockbridge, Henrietta, Bloom, Marshall, Dayton, Eagle, Richwood, Akan, Sylvan and Forest. 2d, Buena Vista, which included all the territory from the Wisconsin river, commencing at the congressional line on said river, range 1 east, of the 4th principal meridian; running thence east along said river to where the congressional line, range 2 east crosses said river; thence north along said line to the northeast corner of township 12, range 2 east; thence west along said line to the northeast corner of township 12, range 2 east; thence west along said line to the congressional line, range 1 east of the 4th principal meridian, thence south on said line to the place of begining, including what is now Buena Vista, Ithaca, Willow and Westford.

The first election held for town officers in the town of Richmond, was on the first Tuesday in April, 1849. The said election was held at the house of Matthew Alexander, on section 33, town 6, range 1 west, now in the town of Eagle. The house (a log one, or double log) was situated on the bank of the Wisconsin river near the place where the Pilling's saw-mill later was situated. The officers who conducted said election were John R. Smith, Myron Whitcomb and Reason J. Darnell, as inspectors of said election; George C. White and Nathaniel Green, clerks. The following were the town officers elected at said election: John R. Smith, chairman; Adam Byrd and William Kincannon, supervisors; John Nipple, town clerk; Stephen Finnel, collector or town treasurer; Walter B. Gage, assessor; Marion White, superintendent of schools; William Thompson, E. H. Dyer, B. B. Sutton and Matthew Alexander, justices of the peace; Nathaniel Green, William White and Daniel H. Boyle, constables; L. B. Palmer and William White, overseers of highway. The persons elected were all qualified as such officers. John Nipple, town clerk, died before the expiration of his office, and A. B. Slaughter was appointed in his place. Also Mr. Slaughter resigned and Levi Houts was appointed to fill the unexpired term of said office and made out the first tax list for said town.

The record of the first county officers elected, you have in the county clerk's office, therefore will not give their names here. After their election they had to go to Mineral Point in Iowa county to qualify. Your unfortunate subscriber hired a team and took the said officials to Mineral Point to be qualified, and it is needless to say that they, the said officers, had to stop at Highland over night on going, in order to view the beauties of the place, inspect the whisky and buck the faro bank. On the next day we got to Mineral Point and it took them two days to qualify and inspect that village, etc., therefore I was four days making the trip, and $3 out of pocket. I had agreed to take them for a fixed price. John J. Matthews was the sheriff and he collected the tax on the list I made out.

As to the first settlers in the then town of Richmond, it will be hard to determine; I would refer your honorable committee to John Comb and Myron Whitcomb. I believe that they come as near giving that point of information as any person. I came into the county Sept. 10, 1849. I must say like the man fiddling told the Arkansaw traveler: "These hills were here when I came and so were men, women and children, situated here and there in the forest in log houses, and seemed happy and contented." Their meat they had in abundance by killing the bear, the deer and moose, and for sweet they had the bees and had all the honey by cutting the trees; corn they raised for meal and homony; potatoes and garden vegetables they raised. The flour they used was generally bought at Galena, in Illinois, and hauled here. One of these pioneers would start to Galena with an ox team loaded with honey, bear and deer, trade his load for flour and groceries, and that would supply a number of families for a time. There was a sociability between those pioneers that is now gone among the things that are past. There was no lawing one against the other. The people held as a sacred law to themselves to follow the golden rule one toward the other. Now and then a little bad whisky helped a fight and that settled the matter. I would like to here give the name of some of those pioneers; some are dead and some are still living, who, in the pioneer settlement of this county, were men whose characters were not blemished, and we still have some of them living with us, and the golden light of justice and right between their fellow men is still shining. But I suppose when they let their minds wander back to the early settlement of this county, and think of the times then in the wilds of nature and then pass on year after year, change after change to the present time, they will express—the wilderness is blooming and turned as by magic into beautiful fields and costly houses instead of the log houses, and the great strife now is to get money—honest or dishonest. He says in his mind, where is the sociability we had in the early days? Then if a man killed a deer or bear, and if his neighbor was out of meat, he would divide and in turn it was paid back without laws. But now it is law and confusion, compared to what it was in the early pioneer days. The man who has a few more dollars than his neighbor looks on him as a poor a scamp, and that sociability existing in early days without regard to wealth is gone. Methinks you will behold a deep sigh heave in the breast of that pioneer. For fear of making this a personal matter, I forbear giving names.

As to the history of the first roads and mills, at now Rodolf's mills, Rockbridge mills and a corn cracker at now Brimer's woolen factory, I will not give in this. The first school house in the then town of Richmond, was located in now Richwood, not far from M. Whitcomb's. I leave them to Combs or Whitcomb to report that and their first teacher. The next was in the now village of Orion (all log houses). The first teacher in the school house in the village of Orion was Mary Malanthy (now Mrs. Joseph Elliott, of Port Andrew). In the summer of 1846, and in the fall and winter of 1849, your writer taught three months' school in the same house and enrolled eighteen scholars, a few of them over twenty years of age.

As I have already written considerable matter, such as it is, I will stop, hoping others will furnish more and better information than I have given. Should I endeavor to make a personal matter of all the pioneers at a certain time, and then go on to describe the continued changes of persons coming into the county so far as my knowledge would permit, and their usefulness in building up the county, I might leave some out and then they would be offended; or if the locating and building up of villages in the county and their now delapidation, cause, etc. I do not expect to be able to attend your meetings. It matters but little to me in the future if I am permitted to live in seclusion among the hills of Richland county the remaining days of my life.

MORE ABOUT ORION.

[By William Wulfing.]

Before the town of Orion was organized and adorned with its present name, it was, at the time I came to Wisconsin, May, 1849, a part of the town of Richmond, and after the adjoining towns in the east, and Eagle in the west, had taken considerable, and not the poorest part of the territory that should by right belong to her, left it, as it is at the present day, one of the smallest and poorest towns in the county. Probably to compensate for the wrong done to the new town, the name of one of Heaven's brightest constellations was adopted. Its history to the present day would likely be one of troubles and difficulties, occasioned by the many miles of roads and numerous bridges, but the energies of some of her earliest settlers has conquered the same, and the town has never, to my knowledge, been involved in lawsuits on account of the condition of her roads and bridges.

The ferry across the Wisconsin near Avoca, was at that time run by a Mr. Gage who, with his family and one Dr. Hartshorn, resided on the bank of the river in this county, near the place where James Laws, a few years after, settled, and who succeeded Gage as ferryman; it was from this place that I struck out for Ash creek, and found there a small settlement, and tired of travel, bought a piece of land and made one of the number of early settlers. I found then here about twenty residing in the town; now, about ten have gone to their resting places and the balance taken Greeley's advice.

It is perhaps superfluous to say much of the life we have led in those early days; the hardships in a newly settled country are almost alike in all places; our troubles were not who should sell our produce but where to buy. We had no grist mill nor stores on this side of the Wisconsin river, neither a postoffice, and our nearest trading point was Franklin, in Iowa county, now Highland, until a store was started in Orion and Jacob Krouskop built his grist mill on Willow creek. This gave us at the same time a bridge across Pine river near the mouth of Ash creek, and Mr. Banks, of Sextonville, took a contract from government to run a weekly mail from Sextonville to Prairie du Chien and back, and an office was established at Ash creek and Orion, so that we once more were in communication with the outer world. The clearing of land and chopping and hauling saw logs to the mill, constituted the most work in winter, and hunting deer and other game during the fall, of which most settlers in a new country are fond of, was much practiced and gave a great deal of sport and some profit to the settlers, who late in fall generally took their deer to Platteville and other places to trade for their winter provisions. There was great harmony among the first settlers and it did not require much to make them feel contented; it seems every one was inclined to be sociable. I remember once we had a gathering at my home, when the whole settlement was present, and although we had only a room of 16x18 to dance in, with Jeff Shaver as musician, sitting in one corner on an empty saurkraut barrel, and assisting the fiddler with his feet, the smaller children by the dozens laying up stairs on beds and floors, you can hardly find a jollier set than there was that night in the humble cabin. Among the hunters occurred sometimes laughable incidents. On a general election day, in November, a crowd of us went to the village, also a bear which one of our number, a tall and easy going fellow, had shot the day before; the man starting for the woods and leaving his dog, he was too young to be of any service, at home, ran up all at once to Mr. Bear laying under a fallen tree, he fired at him instantly and retired quickly. The dog who had followed unbeknowns to his master hearing the report of the gun, came running towards him, and the man thinking he had missed his game and was pursued by the bear, made long strides towards home, where man and dog arrived at the same time. Not being sure how things really were, he got one of his neighbors to go with him to the spot where the shooting took place and there found bruin dead in his lair, being shot through the brain. The man was rallied a great deal on the way the next day, especially by the fellow who went with him after the bear. In a few days we had a light sprinkling of snow, and both these men being out with their guns, after having killed a deer, struck the track of a bear, which following, they found their game in a small cavern. Holding a council of war, they agreed that one should take a pole and rake Mr. Bruin in the ribs, thereby inducing him to come out, when the other standing on the rock above, would shoot him. Following this plan they got the bear to rush out and the man on the rock firing instantly, hit him, breaking his lower jaw. The enraged brute went for the man who had done the poking, who run lustily down hill and finding the bear was gaining on him, took to a small ironwood tree, hollering and screaming all the time for help, until the other, who was the same man who had been bored about his running away from his own dog, came up and shot the brute, thereby releasing the prisoner and having the laugh on his own side.

Of physicians, we had only a small supply in 1849, namely the aforementioned Dr. Harts-horn who stayed only a few years and then left, looking for a place where the folks were less hardy. Later the town had some good physicians, D. L. Downs, Dr. Howe, J. H. Tilly and Jacob Brimmer. Lawyers did not fare very well in the town of Orion. A. P. Thompson settled in the village at an early day, and although the adjoining towns kept him more than Orion, he at last left in disgust and has had no successor.

It was several years before a preacher came among us to show us the way we should go. The first offer we had came from a lawyer residing in an adjoining town, who volunteered to come over every four weeks and preach to us and save us if possible. We held a council, and being a little dubious if the pulpit be the right place for an attorney, concluded not to accept his kind offer and take our chances. In a few years several churches were established and some worthy preachers came among us. Five buildings were erected and used as places of worship; one of them is situated near the northern town line for the use of the United Brethren Church, and Jacob Brimer, Durfee Bovee and James Howard are the men who contributed mostly the means necessary. On section 3, near Henry Segrist, the German Methodists have a nice building for worship, their pastor residing on east side of Pine river. Next is the Christian church near Henry Wilson on Ash creek, whose pastor is Rev. J. Walworth, through whose exertions, aided by David Wiker, Hezekiah Jones, Abram Miller and others, the church was built and is flourishing. The elder is much respected by his followers, but we owe it to posterity to record that they accuse him of baptising and catching fish at the same time on a certain Sunday, but if the truth has to be told, the fishing was accidental and only the suckers, which came up the Elder's leg, between pants and lining, is to blame. The German Lutherans have a substantial building near D. Wiker's; their pastor residing at Boaz. The members of the Methodist Church have erected a house of worship on Oak Ridge, near S. S. Blake's, who is one of its leading members.

The schools in the early days of Richland county and under the system then in vogue, did not give the scholars the advantages they now enjoy. The few children were scattered over a large territory, roads often bad and the means of the settlers limited. Then the method of giving the examination of teachers to the chairman of the town board did not work well in many instances, and was often light on the teachers and hard on the chairman. The method of requiring the teacher to "board round," as it was called, was also often annoying to both parties. I know of one instance where the teacher had to sleep with five of his scholars in one bed, the mother claiming that this would greatly assist the young ones to acquire knowledge, and the teacher could not convince her of her error.

Of industrial establishments, the town has only the woolen factory of Jacob Brimmer, on Ash creek, which is a great accommodation to wool-growers and of benefit to the whole community. W. H. Stewart is one of the best mechanics and has a widespread reputation, is also very successful as a raiser and keeper of bees. Thomas Mathews and Levi Houts have expended much time and labor digging for lead mineral, and although they had some success, the quantity found was too small to make it a paying job and so abandoned it. In the mercantile business were engaged in the village of Orion, Downs & Ripley, Rodolf & Graham, Berry Ferris, Clements & Wait, Miller & Edwards, St. Randall, Dan Clinginsmith, Jacob Dosch, and at the present day, A. Crosby and W. H. Dawson. Orion had at one time a lively trade, but the building of the M. & P. C. railroad, and the erection of the bridge across the Wisconsin river, took the largest part away and left her struggling in the sand. She also had the misfortune to lose the court house, and was only lucky in declining the proposal of Mr. Moore to make a donation of several thousand dollars, towards erecting the bridge.

It speaks well for the town of Orion that in a space of thirty years no serious crimes are to be recorded. The only instance of an aggravated nature, was the burning of the dwelling house of C. G. Rodolf, by a deluded German, whereby the family of Mr. Rodolf, he himself was at the time a member of the Assembly in Madison, was brought in great danger, and the German was sent to Wanpun for seven years. Of the men who watched over the interests of the town as supervisors thereof, I name D. L. Downs, Jacob Brimmer, J. H. Tilly, David Wiker, W. H. Stewart, Dan Clinginsmith, but for the faithful service rendered the town, Levi Houts stands at the head, who for the last thirty years, almost without interruption, has served as town clerk, and who at the present day, would give a more comprehensive history of the town than any other man.

I have tried to give a brief sketch of Orion's history, and as I write from memory only, omission of many things of interest are natural, and I hope will be excused and errors corrected.

REMINISCENCE OF EARLY DAYS IN ROCKBRIDGE.

[By A. Haseltine.]

About the year 1840, a company from Mineral Point penetrated the forest up Pine river for the purpose of lumbering, a small pinery having been discovered there, from which the river takes its name. They located and built a saw-mill on the northwest quarter of section 10, in town 11 north, of range 1 east, about twenty-two miles from the mouth of said river, with the intention of rafting their lumber on the Pine to the Wisconsin river. They were unfortunate both in damming the stream at the mill and in keeping it clear for rafting below, so that their enterprise nearly proved a failure. In 1850 the mill property was purchased by Orrin and I. S. Haseltine who immediately thereafter, moved in from Black Earth, cutting their road on the east side of the river from Sextonville. At that time it was all government land, except the quarter section on which the mill stood. The Haseltines immediately commenced entering lands chiefly for the timber, and constituted themselves emigrant agents to encourage settlers to take up and improve farming lands.

In the spring of 1851, towns 11 and 12, one east and one west, were organized as a town and named Rockbridge, from the natural bridge over the west branch of Pine river near the mill. Fourteen votes were cast at the first town meeting. Orren Haseltine was elected chairman and Alonzo Decker, town clerk. No party feeling marred the harmony of the meeting. They undoubtedly elected their best men, for nearly every one had an office. Several cabins were built and settlements commenced this year. Amasa Hoskins, Seth Butler, John Pool, Jacob and William Dairy, on section 22; Augustus Hoskins and Orion Satterlee, on section 18; Reuben Hancock and German Tadder, on section 17; Hiram Tadder on section 20, of town 11, 1 east; Joseph Marshall and A. P. Hide, on section 13, town 11, 1 west. In 1852, town 10, 1 east was annexed to and made part of the town of Rockbridge. Orren Haseltine was elected chairman and Robert Hawkins, town clerk. Number of votes cast sixteen. Roads were laid this year from Pine river mill to Amasa Hoskins' and thence to Cass & Pound's (now Bowen's) mill; also from A. Hoskin's up Fancy creek across section 30 and 19 to town line; also from Richland Centre to Willow creek.

In 1853, town 10, 1 east, was set off and organized as the town of Richland, leaving Rockbridge its original limits of four townships. O. Haseltine was elected chairman, and F. M. Stewart, town clerk. The following is the poll list at the general election in November of this year: Hiram Tadder, O. Satterlee, R. M. DeLap, Harvey Gillingham, John Marshall, Alden Haseltine, Joseph Marshall, F. M. Stewart, Moses Laws, A. Aikin, O. Haseltine, Augustus Hoskins, G. Tadder, A. G. Decker, Seth Butler, Daniel Hoskins. Sixteen general settlements were commenced this year in town 12, 1 east. The first of whom were W. W. Garfield, on Soles creek; A. Sires on the West branch and W. H. Joslin on the east branch of Pine river. Settlements were also commenced in town 12, 1 west, by Isaac McMahn and others, near where Spring Valley now stands. At the spring election 1854, forty-two votes were cast. Alden Haseltine was elected chairman and F. M. Stewart, clerk. Roads were surveyed and laid out this year, up Fancy creek, up both branches of Pine river, and across from both branches to Fancy creek, in the whole about forty miles.

In April 1855, towns 11 and 12, 1 west, having been set off from Rockbridge, were organized by the name of Marshall, leaving Rockbridge to consist of towns 11 and 12, 1 east. The number of votes cast at the spring election was thirty-three. Alden Haseltine was elected chairman and J. W. Chinch, clerk. In April 1856, town 12, 1 west, was organized by the name of Henrietta, leaving to Rockbridge its present limits, town 11, 1 east. J. S. Scott was elected chairman and Hiram Freeman clerk; number of votes polled thirty-eight. The first school district was organized in 1853 by Abner Aikin, town superintendent. The settlement of this town has not been rapid but steady. We have now 1,200 inhabitants; 515 children of school age and about 240 voters and settlers on every section. (Written in 1879.)

EARLY HISTORY OF FOREST.

[By Salma Rogers.]

In the years 1854 and 1855, the town of Forest was comprised of the towns 11 and 12, range 2 west, now known as Sylvan and Forest. The first town meeting of the joint towns was held at the house of William Ogden, in Sylvan, April 3 1855; fifteen votes polled at that meeting; was duly organized by the election of the following officers of the meeting: Elijah Austin, chairman; Silas Benjamin, William Wood, associates; E. B. Tenny, Asahel Savage, clerks. At the same meeting the following officers were duly elected for the ensuing year: E. B. Tenny, chairman; R. J. Darnell, William Wood, associates; Levi C. Gochenaur, clerk; William Ogden treasurer and Asahel Savage, assessor.

In the year 1855, the town was divided; the geographical town 12 retained her political name of Forest, and town 11 assumed the political name of Sylvan. The first town meeting held in the town after the division was made, was held at the house of John W. Ambrose, on the first day of April, 1856. R. J. Darnell, presided as chairman; Salma Rogers and Cyrus D. Turner, as associate supervisors; Levi C. Gochenaur, clerk. At said election the following officers were duly elected for the ensuing year: Jesse Harness, chairman; William Mathews and J. V. Bennett, associate supervisors; Hartwell L. Turner, clerk; Levi Kanable, assessor; Andrew Carpenter, treasurer; Harvey C. Goodrich, Jeremiah D. Black, Salma Rogers, justices of the peace; William Clift, Emanuel P. Bender and George Pitsenborgner, constables.

In the year 1852, in the month of April, the first piece of land was entered, it being the southeast quarter of section 33, town 12 north, range 2 west, by Alexander Barclay, now owned by Charles Marshall. On July 2, following, Mr. Barclay was drowned in the Wisconsin river at Orion. The first settlers in the town were Daniel and William Bender. Daniel Bender entered his land, it being the northwest quarter of section 33, town 12 north, range 2 west, in the month of April, 1854, and built his house, the first that was built in the town, on the 12th day of May, the same year, and moved with his family into the house on the 15th, and buried his wife on the 24th day of May, 1854, this being the first death that occurred in the town. Ten persons were present at the burial and only two of that number were resident of the town. The fall of 1854 the town was settled very rapidly.

On Sept. 20, 1854, H. L. Turner, William Turner, Cyrus D. Turner, Salma Rogers and J. Lyman Jackson, settled at Viola, in the Kickapoo valley; Laal and William Clift came to the Kickapoo valley, June 8, 1854, where Laal Clift now resides. Cyrus D. Turner laid out and platted the village of Viola. In October, 1854, Levi Kanable and David Johns settled in the southwestern part of the town, and in the same month, John W. Ambrose, Jacob K. Ambrose, Levi C. Gochenaur, Jacob P. Neher and R. J. Darnell, settled in the southeast part of the town.

The first marriage in town, was that of George Chroninger and Nancy Smith, solemnized by Oliver Guess, justice of the peace, Aug. 27, 1856.

The first sermon was preached by Edwin Buck, on the second Sunday in April, 1856, at the house of R. J. Darnell. The text was, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

The first school superintendent was R. J. Darnell, and the first school teacher examined for a certificate was Helen Jackson, who taught the first school in the town of Viola, in the summer of 1855.

The first saw-mill built in the town, was that of Adam Shambaugh's, built by Salma Rogers in the year 1857, on the south branch of Bear creek.

The first merchandise was sold by Cyrus D. Turner, at Viola, in October, 1854.

In July, 1851, the first road was laid through the town; it was a country road running from R. J. Darnell's in a westerly direction across the town to the county line on the west. R. J. Darnell, Adam Bird, John Price, commissioners, and James Appleby, surveyor. On June 7, 1855, the first town road laid through the town, was from Viola through the valley of Camp creek to R. J. Darnell's by E. B. Tenny, chairman, R. J. Darnell and William Wood associate supervisors and L. B. Palmer, county surveyor.

The estimated number of votes at this date is some over 200. The town has thrived and prospered by dint of hard labor; her forests have fallen before the hardy sons, large fields have been opened and her soil yields her golden harvest and makes glad the hearts of the husbandman.

HISTORICAL JOTTINGS OF SYLVAN.

(By George H. Babb.)

The town of Sylvan (congressional town 11, range 2 west of fourth principal meridian) is situated in the western part of Richland county.

It is bounded on the east by the town of Marshall; on the south by the town of Aken; on the west by the town of Clayton in Crawford county, and town of Kickapoo in Vernon county; on the south by the town of Forest, in Richland county, of which it was an integral part until April, 1856, when it was separated from the town of Forest, and organized into a separate town, by the election of officers on April 1, 1856. First election was held at what was then known as Ogden school house. E. B. Tenny, William Wood and Horace Cook were elected first town board of supervisors; Lyman Matthews, clerk; and William Ogden, treasurer.

The first settlement was made in 1853, E. B. Tenny and William Ogden being the first permanent settlers. The immigration steadily but slowly increased for a year or two, owing to the difficulty of procuring provisions, having to haul them over rough roads from Orion, on the Wisconsin river, a distance of about twenty miles. But when the town was organized, in 1856, there were thirty-two votes polled, and in November, there were forty-nine votes polled. From that time the population rapidly increased.

The town of Sylvan is pleasantly situated, being alternated by ridges and valleys, which are very productive. It is also well watered, a creek called Eagle creek (Mill creek) runs along its eastern border, and the West branch of Eagle creek runs along its southern side. A long stream called Elk creek rises near the center of the town and runs to the northwest into the Kickapoo river; together with numerous rivulets and springs, some of which are very large; it is thickly set with timber of the following varieties: White oak, bur oak, red oak, basswood, ash, hard and soft maples, butternut and some other varieties. At the time it was organized it was almost an unbroken wilderness; since then the improvements have kept apace with population. In 1855 Mr. O. Guess built a saw-mill on Eagle creek and run it by what is called a flutter wheel, which supplied the immigrants with lumber to a great extent. Since then it has been rebuilt, and the flutter wheel replaced by an overshot and the sash saw by a rotary saw.

In 1855 there was a small grocery store stationed at what is known as Sylvan Corners, by a Mr. Nixon; since then it has passed through several hands and each time enlarged. At this time it is owned by Mr. William Henthorn and is enlarged into a respectable dry goods store, the only establishment in the town of this kind.

Whilst the citizens were subduing the forest they were not neglectful of their mental culture, and as soon as districts could be formed, they began to build school houses; though rude, they answered the purpose for which they were intended. The first school taught in the town was taught by Miss Olive Matthews. When we look back upon the crudeness of the common school system under the town superintendency and compare it with the present advanced state of the schools we are astonished that men could not see these things before. One instance of an examination under the town superintendency: A young lady went to be examined. The examination in arithmetic was: Add  $\frac{1}{2}$   $\frac{1}{4}$   $\frac{1}{8}$   $\frac{1}{16}$  together, which was done very quickly, that was all the examination there was on that branch. The superintendent remarked to the writer that "she is pretty sharp;" this is only a specimen of examinations of those days.

It would perhaps not be inappropriate here to notice some of the natural scenery. There are in some localities bold rocks cropping out from the points of hills that have pillars of rocks on them that rise to the height of twelve or fifteen feet above the level of the hill; upon which if you take your stand, gives you a view of the surrounding country which is delightful and picturesque. There is a locality known as the Big Rocks on section 16 which is very singular in appearance. The ground rises gradually from the north for about thirty rods, when it abruptly breaks and forms a perpendicular wall of about 100 feet in height, then runs to the south in a gentle slope, forming quite a valley. There are in the south part of the town three caves of considerable size, one of which has been explored to a distance of one-fourth or one-third of a mile, and as far as explored consists of three rooms, each one of which is 50x150 feet. They are all hung with stalactites, and have stalagmites rising from the bottom, of various sizes and shapes, which give it truly a grand appearance.

REMEMBRANCES OF EARLY DAYS.

[By A. L. Hatch].

The welcome a settler now receives is very different from that we received as actual settlers upwards of twenty-five years ago. Those who came before the terrible winter of 1856-7 were welcomed with mild and fruitful seasons, abundance of wild game in the woods, and we supposed that much of it run about all roasted, ready to eat! Leastwise some such stories were afloat in the east when we came here, and as we didn't find any, we presume it must have been here before we came. Then those fellows had choice of all the land; provided they were as smart as other speculators who eagerly gobbled up the whole batch that was of any great value.

After a time these old chaps got pretty well started, and then they turned around in this welcoming business and welcomed every greenhorn who brought plenty of cash and bought slices of their land at five times its first cost.

But woe! woe! to the poor devil who came here in the fall of 1856, and especially if he had a family and was obliged to pass through that terrible winter with its rains and snows, when the mercury congealed at times with the intense cold, and the four feet of snow had its four crusts of ice. There was hardship, suffering and privation that winter among the poor, and few were wealthy here in those times. This winter was the collapse of the land speculation, after which many men from the burden of their taxes were actually land poor. Added to this there was the financial crisis of 1857, that sent the wild cat banks into space and dissolved much of our currency into thin air.

Thus we see that many of us had to make our homes here under these discouraging circumstances. I have seen the time when a sack of bran was valued as much for food as a sack of Parfrey & Pease's best, patent, fancy, super-extra flour would be to-day; when it was very common for families to subsist a week or a month on two or three articles of diet, and happy was the man who could have pork and potatoes at the same meal. Everything that would do for food was utilized that terrible winter. Even the poor deer, worried and bleeding from the pitiless ice crusts of the snow, starved and frozen were mercilessly slaughtered. Those who came to Wisconsin from the east usually brought with them two things: one was a lively remembrance of the plenty they left, the other a big appetite. It was wonderful what a great amount of food we found necessary to acclimatize us. How hungry we were. Father bought a hog that winter, that was actually so poor it would hardly fry itself, yet it was the sweetest pork I ever tasted.

What a big effort we made to grow hosts of garden vegetables in 1857, and how abominably wet the season was. How smutty the wheat was. Didn't we have shady bread that winter? We toiled in the fields, we grubbed alders, hoed corn, mauled rails out of tough logs, cut firewood from knotty old oaks, hunted cows in Uncle Sam's log pasture, and sometimes, especially when it was stormy, it was terribly long. May be we perfumed our breath with a leak, scraped the wild beans from our clothes with a case knife, and picked the wood ticks out of our hair.

Ox teams were the fashion then, so much so that you could count all the horses on your fingers a whole town might possess. Father, who at that time had a blacksmith shop in Loyd, shod ninety-five yoke of cattle in one winter.

Curious old tools we had in those days, and everybody was jack-at-all-trades. We mended our plows, patched up our wagons, and cobbled our own boots and shoes. Many of our dwellings were made with fire places of sticks and clay, the floors of the house of "punchons," or split logs, the roof of "shakes" (long split shingles). In such dwellings as these, many of our mothers and sisters toiled, and no doubt imbibed many lessons of skill, industry and economy that more recent homes do not afford. Our home-made clothing was washed by their hands, with home-made soap; and home-made clothing meant that made with needle by hand—very few affording a sewing-machine then. Economy was rigid. Many are the pairs of pants we have seen made from grain sacks; one year they were very fashionable.

Then business developed with the country, and new excitements roused us to new actions. What lots of money was made in digging ginseng. For a year or two it was a great thing. Then we had sorghum introduced, and we all got rich—in a horn! No, we waited for that until 1868, and went into hops and got busted.

Well, we began way back in those early times to build school houses, make roads and bridges, organize churches, societies and associations. We have built mills, shops and factories. Our villages have grown until they teem with all kinds of useful pursuits that the country may need. We have also built our homes among the hills of Richland, where once forests were growing. We have no regrets that our county was not settled among stirring scenes of war and tragedy. It is better, far better, that our settlers were devoted to the arts of peace. We have had our quaint old characters, our religious revivals of many kinds, our political excitements, our business struggles, our spelling schools, debating schools, singing schools, and more than this we have had our 4th of July celebrations, our Christmas festivals and New Year's jollities, and many of these are freighted in memory with interesting accidents, incidents and reminiscences.

THE PIONEER SCHOOL TEACHER.

[By G. L. Laws.]

I remember him; he came to our house as he "boarded around," bringing with him his Saratoga, (a red silk handkerchief containing all his worldly effects), a clean shirt of unbleached muslin and wide collar of same material, a razor, brush and "strop," and a strap for the boys. I say "he" because girls and old maids were not permitted to teach in those days, because they were supposed to be mentally and physically incompetent.

The pioneer teacher was a sort of John the Baptist, and he not only firmly believed in the doctrine of Solomon, that "sparing the rod spoils the child," but he religiously practiced it, and he executed the law on the prophets, ranged round the room, in rows, on benches. To me, through remembrance, the "oil of joy" of even these days has a taste of leather strap in it. The pioneer teacher's edicts were like the laws of the Medes and the Persians—unchangeable, but not those of the tyrant, Caligula, hung so high that nobody could read them. They contained no inkhorn phrases of doubtful mean, but were in good plain English and were read aloud every Monday morning, with such additions as the previous week's experience had proven necessary. Among them was one that "each scholar should come to school regularly at 9 o'clock, with face and hands clean washed and head clean combed."

It was once the custom to bar teachers out on holidays and make them treat. An occurrence of this kind once took place in southern Illinois where a young man from Ohio came out west to "keep school." The school house was a log one, batten door hung on wooden hinges. The chimney was of logs lined with stone for a few feet up, then finished with clay and sticks, which latter in this case had fallen off. Twenty or more young men and boys and a few girls assembled early Christmas morning and barred the door. The teacher came and was refused admittance till he treated. He tried the door, then walked off briskly, for apples and candy, the boys thought. He soon returned with an ax and butcher knife, took off his coat, leisurely rolled up his sleeves, chopped the door off its hinges and entered, ax in one hand and knife in the other. No Arnold Winkelreid was there among these boys, "to make way for liberty and die." There was no way of escape except over the burning hickory logs in the fire place, and out over the top of the fallen chimney. The larger boys dropped out over the top of this chimney as fast as one could get out of the way of another, and each took the "route step" for home. The smaller boys from under benches surrendered unconditionally and were allowed to retain their jack knives and other side arms.

In a different view the early teachers of Richland Centre may be counted pioneers, and my heart wakes to the pulse of the past as I run over the list. To four, perhaps the most faithful good and true, "school is dismissed:" Mary, Emma, Cordelia and Betsey, have "climbed the golden stairs."

"School is out." The coasters, the skaters, the group on the green, and the flowers brought fresh every morning as tokens of friendship and love, are not, to them. Those who remain will love the old school house in the autumn.

THREE WORTHIES.

[By J. M. Reid.]

John Fogo was a Scotchman, with all the sturdy virtues and some of the weaknesses of the people of his nationality. He was a man of strong passions, which (alas for the weakness of human nature) sometimes got the better of him; yet he was of quick sensibilities, of generous impulses and of a kindly heart. He was a warm and a truly trusty friend, but fearless and outspoken against what he considered wrong. He had no sympathy with the weak sentimentalism of the present day, which apologizes for any rascally transaction, thus "putting bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter," confounding the distinctions between virtue and vice. His legal knowledge, for a man in his station, was considerable, and this, coupled with strong common sense, made him a reliable public officer and a useful counselor to his neighbors. He was gifted with a remarkable memory and (what does not always accompany a good memory) good judgment. His memory enabled him to retain historical facts remarkably well. History indeed was his delight, especially the history of his native land. Few men were better informed in regard to the political and ecclesiastical history of Scotland.

He had quite a taste for theological learning. He had been quite well instructed in childhood (for he came of a goodly house), and in Kilmarnock and Pittsburgh he had opportunity of hearing some of the first preachers of the age. He was also well read in the old divines of the sixteenth century. He was ever a lover of the sanctuary, and gave devout attention to the various services of sermon, psalm and prayer. As many times as I have preached before him, I do not remember a single instance in which his attention flagged.

He was a most genial and instructive companion. Some of the most pleasant memories of my sojourn in Wisconsin, are of the long winter evenings, spent by the "chimla lug" of his humble home, in cheerful conversation with him and his "guid wife." History, poetry and religion, as well as the common topics, was our theme until it was time to "tak the bukes," which in a Scottish household means to have family worship.

Alanson Clark was a man of considerable information, and of a pure and upright life, being highly respected by his neighbors. He was a very kind man and of a sociable disposition. He may have lacked in firmness and decision of character, which, as a philosopher has said, is apt to be the case with natures thoroughly kind. His tastes lay in a different direction from the other two. While they were men of war from their youth, engaging with a will in the disputes that arose about town, county, State and National affairs, Mr. Clark was more like Jacob, a plain man dwelling in tents. He took but little part in the stormy contentions arising out of questions agitating the neighborhood or the country. His name was identified with the Church; he was the friend of Zion and of Sabbath schools; his brethren recognizing his merits, elected him to the responsible position of ruling elder, the duties of which he discharged both in Ohio and Wisconsin. His gifts and graces shone particularly in public prayer. I have heard few men engage in that exercise more to edification than Mr. Clark. His prayers were humble, solemn, and sound in the faith, and enriched by scriptural quotations. He had a deep and abiding sense of eternal things. He spoke often on the shortness and uncertainty of life, and of the importance of being prepared for death. He has gone to his grave like a shock of corn fully ripe. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Josiah McCaskey was a man of good natural parts and superior intelligence. I believe he was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and had the firmness (to put it mildly) we might expect, for the Scotch-Irish are a doggedly, obstinate race, which I may say without offence, remembering "the rock whence I myself was hewn." He was a great stickler for forms, and desired all things to be done according to the laws made and provided, whether in matters ecclesiastical or civil. This, let us hope, resulted not from a fault-finding disposition (for he was equally severe on the false steps of friend or foe), but from a desire to have the forms of law preserved. Owing to his knowledge of law, there were not many in the neighborhood a match for him except Mr. Fogo. In him he found a "foeman worthy of his steel." Their controversies at town meetings and other public gatherings were long and fierce, but did not destroy their friendship for each other. Sometimes they discussed Church matters, and then there would be an exchange of rigorous English (and Scotch), but all ending in good part. Mr. Fogo used to good-humoredly call him an "auld Ishmaeleete," because his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him.

Not only had he no sympathy for mistakes and negligence in conducting public business, but anything like corruption in office was apt to bring him up to a white heat of indignation. Had he been President, official delinquency would have found no mercy at his hands, and it would be no fault of his if the morality of our civil service was not brought back to the state of purity characteristic of the "better days of the Republic."

He was well acquainted with the Scriptures, and had some knowledge of the original language in which the New Testament was written. He once sent me a roll of papers entitled "Field Notes of a Surveyor," which proved to be Greek criticisms on the New Testament. Many of his annotations were judicious, and though not of great importance, tended to throw some light on the sacred text. In the early days of my ministry at Fancy Creek, he used to sit before me with his Greek Testament in his hand, imitating the Bereans in "searching the Scriptures whether these things were so." But soon something was said or left unsaid, or done or left undone, which gave offence and he absented himself. Few things in this world pleased him, either in Church or State. He had looked so much at the dark side of human nature that he had almost lost faith in mankind. Poor man! He had his troubles here. Let us hope that, through those Scriptures which he professed so highly to revere, he at length found peace. Though it may be said of him, "Pancis lacrymis compositus es." With few tears thou wert laid to thy rest, yet, let us forget his infirmities and remember his virtues.

Thus have passed away three worthies—representatives of the olden time, in integrity and real worth. Let us avoid their mistakes and imitate their excellencies, and let us be admonished by their departure that we too shall die and not live. Our heads will soon be silvered, and crow's feet be found in our temples—the fore-runner of death—for man goeth to his long home and the mourners go about the streets.

EARLY TIMES IN RICHLAND COUNTY.

[Author Unknown.]

In 1851, by act of the Legislature, the county seat was located at Richland Centre, which is on the north side of Horse creek, supposing the county to be square, but by counting the fractions on the south side of the county it brings the geographical center on the north end of section 28, town of Richland, on land which the writer hereof bought of Uncle Sam and on which he lived three years. The above statement is necessary to show the cause of the eight years war. That war carried on with much bitterness between Romulus, the founder, and the exasperated Sabines. It is said that Romulus promised lots, free, to those who would vote to confirm the act of the Legislature referred to above, and thus succeeded in locating the village of Richland Centre. John Price, then chairman of the county board was succeeded by a Mr. Tracy when new life and energy was given to the Sabines by the removal of Charley to Mill creek and the assistance of Robert and A. M. S. John Mathews was then sheriff and fought the county seat question to the bitter end.

In 1851 I first sat foot on the present site of Richland Centre, near sun down, and a more tired and hungry paddy than I was, you never saw. A smoke, and to my great joy, over the river by the side of the bluff was a log cabin occupied by a Connecticut Yankee by the name of Bacon. He told me he once had a pre-emption on the quarter, now the county seat, and that he had sold it to Romulus for $25. Bacon was an honest man but a very green Yankee.

In the summer of 1852, was built the little court house where now stands Hugh Boyle's blacksmith shop. The old building is now Schmidt & Lawrence's fruit store. During the same summer, part of the American (now Richland) House was built, and with the whole block, was sold to A. S. Neff in 1854, for $1,200. This was the first substantial purchase in the new city. In 1852, Judge Coffinbury resigned, and David Strickland was appointed county judge, by Gov. Barstow. R. C. Hawkins was elected sheriff in 1852, but did not enter upon the duties of his office till 1853, which compelled John Mathews to attend court in the "Centre" one day. Passing the office of the clerk of the court one cold, stormy day, I heard a pounding inside and my first thought was that the Sabines had taken possession of the ark of knowledge and the throne of justice, and were preparing to carry it away on their shoulders, so I rushed in and found the county judge seated on a high stool, A. B. Slaughter, clerk, at the desk and John Mathews trying with a very dull ax, to split an oak knot to fit in an eighteen inch stove. They all looked cold, and I offered to cut enough wood for two fires for twenty-five cents, but they all confessed, in open court, to want of funds and I believed them and left them shaking with the cold.

The winter of 1853 gave a new turn to affairs. The Legislature was petitioned to bring the school section into market and lay it off into lots which was done and a day appointed for the sale of lots to the highest bidder. This measure made more stir in Richland county than is made by the civil rights bill in Congress. In the spring of 1853 was held the first town meeting in the town of Richland at which Asa J. Sheldon was elected chairman, McMann, clerk, C. McCarthy, treasurer and Hascal Haseltine superintendent of schools.

REMINISCENCE.

[By J. H. Waggoner.]

[The following reminiscence appeared in the Richland county Republican, on July 1, 1869, under the head of "Fifteen Years Ago."]

Fifteen years ago to-morrow (July 2, 1854), the family of C. Waggoner, of whom the writer was one, hauled up at the hotel of Richland Centre, then kept by Col. I. S. Haseltine, after a tiresome journey by rail, steamer and stage, from the eastern part of Ohio. The railway between Milwaukee and Madison was then new, and as rough as new. The trip from Madison was made in nearly two days by livery conveyance. All the surroundings observed in this then new country were very different from those of the home just left. The rude cabins, the rough roads, the wild scenery, were in striking contrast with the comfortable dwellings, the well worked roads and the placid surface of eastern Ohio. But the change was little lamented by "we boys." Our "range" was much enlarged, and we enjoyed the freedom of the hills, though the luxuries of the former home came only with the developments of after years.

The first celebration of the National Anniversary in Richland Centre was on the second day after our arrival here. The first flag unfurled to the breeze in this valley was that which waved here on the 4th of July, 1854. The first "liberty pole" implanted in the soil of the village was that from which the stars and stripes floated on the 4th of July, 1854. A glorious day seemed that 4th of July. No 4th has seemed more grand since. A handful of people, comparatively, participated in the observance of the day; but they were nearer to each other than now—there were no internal dissensions. The good of one was the good of all. The people of the surrounding country and the people of the village were one. All sought the aid of the lowing cattle for purposes of pleasure or labor, and the fat of the land, wherever found, was common property.

At that time Richland Centre was comprised of part of August Schmidt's building, then used as a court house; of what is now the "old part" of the American House, where travelers were entertained by Mr. Haseltine; the building now belonging to Le Roy Humbert, west of Austin's corner (then south of the same corner and occupied by S. H. Austin with a small stock of goods); a small building in what was afterward known as the Hamilton settlement, belonging to and occupied by Sidney Rose; the main part of the now Grant House, then unfinished and occupied by Hascal Haseltine; the building now occupied by George H. James, then occupied by a Mr. Sheldon, in the front room of which a little store was soon opened, and the house now belonging to W. J. Waggoner, on the east side of the village, then occupied by Dr. Gage, where also was the post-office. During the summer several dwellings were erected, among them one by the head of our family. Little improvement was made during two or three years following, but soon thereafter immigration gave the village and adjacent country a respectable population; from which time to the present the growth has been sure if not rapid, with every promise of ultimate good cheer for all the people.

Though the village of Richland Centre has grown from a handful of people to nearly 1,200 in fifteen years, with wealth nearly an hundred fold advanced over the increase of population, it is apparent to all that greater advancement might have been made. But how, has not been demonstrated, unless the experience of the past be demanded to guide the effort.

Great as have been the improvements in the village, considering its embarrassments, the county at large bears off the palm. Bounding from a population of but 900 to over 15,000, it has developed in wealth and substantial improvements far beyond the county seat. Valuable farms and fine dwellings, thrifty villages with excellent manufacturing establishments, dot its length and breadth. As a whole, though not enjoying all the advantages of many other sections of the State, we doubt if its advancement has been greatly surpassed by any other. Our quick soil, splendid timber, pure water, and healthy climate, offer inducements to settlers not always combined.

EARLY DAYS IN RICHLAND CENTRE.

[By James H. Miner].

Richland Centre in 1855, contained a population of about 200 souls all told. At this time no county buildings had been erected, neither church or school house, although the county seat had been located here several years before.

Orion, then called Richmond, had a school house and maintained a good school. Richland city had shown a degree of enterprise in building an academy and maintaining an institution of learning which deserved a better fate than befell it. After a few years the village ceased to grow and its commerce went to Lone Rock on the railroad. The academy failed. Silsby, the principal had gained, by his successful management of the school, a well deserved reputation as an educator of eminent attainments.

At Richland Centre, in 1855, the subject of securing a school house site and erecting a school building took a definite shape. The annual meeting, of that year, was a stormy one. The party favoring the locating and building the house finally prevailed. The public school interest received lasting and substantial aid from Mr. Priest's untiring efforts. And it was mainly owing to his exertion, that his friend Israel Sanderson was induced to establish the Observer, the first newspaper in the county. The first issue of the paper was one of the marked and important events in our history. The county board was then in session (November, 1855), and some of the first copies were distributed to the members, and when the carrier presented each member a copy, the business of the county was suspended until the paper was read and favorably commented upon. The paper soon became well established.

The political campaign of 1856 received the consideration its importance demanded. In October, a republican mass convention was held, and addressed by C. C. Washburn, who was then a candidate for reelection to Congress; Judge Jackson, and the witty and humorous Mohawk dutchman, Vinton. The meeting was well attended, and Fremont, the Presidential standard bearer strongly endorsed.

The democratic mass meeting was afterwards held, and was addressed by Judge Crawford, candidate for Congress, against C. C. Washburn. The meeting was well attended, and James Buchanan and Judge Crawford, were enthusiastically supported by their party.

The people of this county were deeply interested in the contest at Madison during the winter of 1856, between Governors Barstow and Bashford. Aside from the question of which was elected, and whether the supreme court, a co-ordinate branch of the State government, had the authority to determine the controversy, our member of assembly, Robert Akan, who was elected by a peculiar turn of political affairs, was a strong supporter of Gov. Barstow.

A large proportion, however, of the people of the county firmly believed that Gov. Bashford had been really elected, and were his firm supporters. The supreme court were of the opinion and declared him elected and he was installed into office.

The severest winter known since the first settlement of the county was that of 1856-7. It was during this winter that the bold and adroit John J. Shoemaker, an adventurer, came among us. He made his appearance, representing himself to be a man of great wealth, and looking for a location to lay out a town and build an academy. He went into the northern part of the county and platted a village, on the west branch of Pine river, calling it Marysville. He then went to Chicago and purchased a large saw-mill on credit, and at great expense hauled it with teams from Lone Rock, some thirty-five miles, to Marysville, where he set it up. He also purchased at the same place a $10,000 stock of goods with which he opened a store in Richland Centre. Before his bills in Chicago fell due, he had disposed of a large share of the goods for cash, he obtained credit everywhere, and in the latter part of February, left the country with a valuable team and several thousand dollars, the proceeds of a few months scheming.

In the fall of 1857 the contest over building a school house was renewed with greater vigor than before. Several meetings were held, and a tax of $2,000 was finally voted toward a school house, which was placed upon the tax roll. It was found impossible for a large majority of the tax-payers to pay the tax in money, and an expedient was resorted to. A building committee was appointed with power to receive building materials or labor, at a price to be fixed by the said committee, for which they gave a receipt, which was taken by the town treasurer in the place of money, and these receipts were taken by the district in its settlement with the treasurer.

The price allowed by the committee for clear basswood or linn lumber was $7 per thousand. The old school house, 34x52 feet in dimensions, and two stories high, now stands a monument of the generosity and public spirit of a majority of the citizens of the village, during the most depressing financial time in the history of the present generation. It has been in almost constant use ever since, and is in a good state of preservation yet.

The people of the county took a deep interest in the political contest of 1860, and when it merged into the stern realities of war, with one accord they determined to sustain the government. At an early day a public meeting was held at the court house and strong resolutions were passed, expressing the will and opinion of the people. Company II., of the 5th Wisconsin Infantry, was raised, and quartered in the village for some time, supported by the volunteer contributions of the citizens.

On the 21st of May, orders were received to report at Madison. The citizens gathered and expressed a deep feeling in their quiet words and anxious countenances.

At this time the mail was taken by stage from Lone Rock every morning and arrived here at 11 o'clock. The driver, on reaching the outskirts of the town, blew a tin horn to announce his arrival. The citizens would soon begin to assemble at the postoffice and hear from the boys and the news from the seat of war. A copy of a daily would be handed out the first thing on opening the mail pouch, which would be read to the crowd.

From this time forward the record shows the temper and patriotism of the people of the county. From a population of only 9,732 in the county in 1860, enlistments were made during the war, nearly equalling two regiments.

Considering all things, the people of Richland county have shown an enterprise and industry in the development of the resources of the county, unsurpassed in the settlement of the State.

Churches and school houses have been erected and supported in every part of the county, and all by the settlers, out of their hard earned money, as very few men located among us with surplus means, and the accumulation of wealth has sprung from the development of land and country.

B. C. Hallin, now one of the members of the county board of supervisors, tells the following story, that illustrates, better than anything else can do, the stuff of which the noble pioneer women, who first settled in Richland county, were made of. Mr. Hallin was absent on business, his wife sat down by a window to rest. Looking out to see where the child was, that was playing in front of the house, she espied what she thought was a large dog making its way through the wild pea vines that interlaced the heavy growth of timber near the house. A searching glance soon revealed the fact that the intruder was a large brown bear. To rush out and save the child was but the work of a minute. Mrs. Hallin, having secured her offspring, turned to where she had her dog, a large English mastiff, chained up, and loosing his collar, sent him to grasp ple with his bearship. The dog made for him and a lively tussle ensued. The place of the combat was upon the declivity of a small hill at the bottom of which run a small creek, and in their struggles the two animals rolled into the water. The brave woman picked up the ax, which lay convenient, and running down to the place of combat, sought to assist her dog. But here she found matters in so much of a mixed state that she could not strike the bear for fear of hurting the dog. Watching her chance, however, she at last saw the chance she was looking for, and a well directed stroke of the ax soon gave the quietus to bruin and ended the battle. When the combat was ended she called to her assistance a neighbor, who helped her to skin the beast, and drag the carcass to the house. A numerous family of children have all been cradled in this trophy of their mother's nerve and pluck. Hallin winds up his story, which is well authenticated, by saying that the bear came just in the nick of time, for there was no other meat in the house, and his bones were pretty well polished before they got through with him.

THE RICHLAND, UNION CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

[By Rev. John Walworth.]

In the early settlement of this county there were many of the different denominations and religious organizations of the eastern States, represented by the emigrants located here, and among them were a number of the members of the Christian Church from Ohio, Indiana and eastern States.

After the excitement and trouble of the war of the Rebellion, and our soldiers that were spared had returned home, the members of all societies saw and felt the duty of a better organization for the moral and religious instruction of their families, and the better order of society generally.

In accordance with this sentiment, a meeting was held at district No. 8, in the town of Sylvan, on May 5, 1866. After devotional exercises and mutual consultation, it was unanimously,

Resolved, That the moral and religious wants of the community requires of us a better organization for the more successful and efficient performance of our work as ministers and members of the Church of Christ."

After which the following ministers (all of whom presented good credentials of their ordination and correct standing in their respective churches): Jacob Felton, of the town of Aikin; Jacob Mark, of Marshall; John Walworth, of Richland Centre, and John Poff, of Sylvan, and delegates from two Churches or congregations, proceeded to organize this conference by electing Rev. J. Walworth, president and Rev. J. Mark, secretary. After which the following formulated principles in substance were adopted as the basis of the faith of this conference:

The Bible is the inestimable gift of God to man, and contains in its teaching, all that is essential to direct man in his duty to his God, his neighbor and himself; and, therefore, the only authoritative rule of faith and practice for man.

That all men have a God given right and duty to read, search and interpret the Scriptures according to his own best judgment, using such aids and helps as are accessible to him. That every man is accountable to God for his actions, and for the use which he makes of his life and the blessings bestowed upon him.

That the Divine law fixes and promises a reward and blessing to the righteous in this world, and eternal life and happiness in the life to come, and that the same Divine law fixes and ordains an adequate retribution for sin of every kind, in this world and the world to come.

That the Lord Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, the son of God, the only medium between God and men, and the only name given under Heaven to man whereby he can be saved.

That the name Christian, designates the character of the disciple of Christ, and is therefore the only appropriate and scriptural name given to the true believer and the Church of Christ.

That in all Nations and ages, every one who fears God and works righteousness, is accepted by him, and is therefore entitled to a membership in the Church of Christ by virtue of a Christian character.

That all divisions among true Christians and persecutions for a difference of opinion is unauthorized by the Bible, and contrary to the true spirit of Christianity.

That all true Christians should be united in fellowship, in all gospel ordinances, in all good works and charity.

The form of ecclesiastical government of this conference and the Churches connected with it, is Congregational.

This conference has peacefully and without ostentation labored on, mostly in rural districts, until at its last annual session held at the Bethel church, in the town of Orion, October, 1883, the reports showed its membership to be twenty-one ministers, seventeen churches and about 300 communicants, with ten or more houses of worship. It has never received any pecuniary aid from abroad, but has a home missionary society with a permanent fund of about $300, and is ever active in the Sunday school work and the cause of temperance. Its officers elected at the last session are: Rev. John Walworth, president; Rev. C. M. Poff, M. D., vice-president and Rev. Jacob Mark, treasurer.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

[By Rev. J. H. Mathers.]

There are three Presbyterian churches in connection with the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, Richland City, Richland Centre and Fancy Creek—organized in the order here given. The Rev. Joseph Adams, of Dane county, occasionally crossed the Wisconsin river to preach to the few Presbyterians who had found their way to the frontier settlements of Richland county.

He was somewhat advanced in years, and had the care of a farm near Hayworth Ferry, so that his time was occupied with other interests, and after the organization of a Church about 1855, he retired from the field. For a short time, Rev. William McNulty supplied the little Church. In January, 1855, J. H. Mathers arrived in Richland Centre, with a view to supply this Church for a few months, and then continue his journey westward. E. P. Young and his son, David B. Young, and Richard Strubble, were the ruling elders, and upon them, with the help of J. H. Morrison, at a later date added to the eldership, and a few others, depended the maintenance of our feeble Church.

Richland Centre, in the summer of 1855, was in the very infancy of its existence. Its entire population, before the inflow of that season, did not reach two score, I believe. The immigration of that year, however, gave it a new impulse, and as the county seat, it attracted population more rapidly.

The first religious services, I think, were held in Richland Centre, by Rev. William Smith, a Congregational minister who resided at Sextonville. He held his services in the store-room of Mr. Langdon. In the fall of that year my attention was directed to the place by the settlement there of several Presbyterian families—the Waggoners, Wilsons and Youngs. My first service was held in a room occupied as a grocery store by W. H. Vinton, in the house now known as the American Hotel. At the next appointment our services were held in an upper room of the same building, fitted up and used as a ball-room. This room was generously placed at my disposal by Mr. Herschel Hazelton, who owned and occupied the building, and who had no sympathy with the doctrines taught by the young minister. In this room, in February or March, 1856, the Presbyterian Church was organized by the Rev. Bradley Phillips, of Mineral Point (the preacher in charge being simply a licentiate and not an ordained minister). Caleb Waggoner and E. P.

Young (formerly of Richland City) were elected ruling elders, and our services were subsequently held in a school house, and then in the court house, and finally, after much tribulation, in the building now occupied by the congregation, this house was finished in February, 1858, and for years was the only church edifice in Richland Centre. It shows the primitive condition of the town, that when the Church was organized, there was not a school house within its limits. A small building, which had been designed for a dwelling, was purchased by the district and fitted up for school purposes. Here the school meeting was held which determined to build the large frame building in the eastern part of the town. This first house was afterward purchased by C. D. Stewart, and by him converted into a dwelling as originally intended. Now it is in contemplation to erect an edifice which will cost $30,000.

TOWN OF MARSHALL.

The Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek, in the town of Marshall, was organized in the fall of 1857. Rev. J. H. Mathers was the first Presbyterian minister who preached within the limits of this township. The first sermon was preached in the house of Daniel Noble, on Fancy creek, in August or September, 1855, and for some time thereafter regular services were held at the dwellings of Alanson Clark and Daniel Noble.

The Church was organized a couple of years or more after their services were first introduced. A meeting was called for the purpose at the house of Alderson Clark, and after due considerations it was determined by the Presbyterians of the neighborhood to place themselves in formal connections with the Church of their fathers. Alanson Clark and Daniel Noble were elected ruling elders, and about eighteen or twenty others entered into covenant, as the Church of Fancy Creek. Among the names that now seem to me as connected with this enterprise, either as members or supporters, are Clark, Noble, Fogs, Benton, Smith, Hart, Wanless, McDonald and Morrill. There was no church building at that time in the township. Our ordinary services were held in the rude houses of the earlier settlers, and our communion services in the larger buildings, which the increasing crops rendered necessary for their storage. I remember now that the sacrament of the Lord's supper was dispensed on the threshing floor of "Squire" Joe Marshall's barn, which was kindly placed at our disposal by its generous owner. On another occasion the barn of Mr. John Hart sheltered us from the fierce rays of a summer's sun. Afterward the school house opened for our use. At a Congregational meeting held in Marshall's school house on Jan. 28, 1861, it was determined to build a log house 28x30 feet, for the use of the Church, and arrangements for preparing the logs etc., were made at the same time; the building was erected during the summer of same year, which is now about to give way to a neat and substantial frame building.

The relation of the pastor, J. H. Mathers (under whose ministry the Churches of Richland Centre and Fancy Creek were originally gathered), was broken by his removal to Pennsylvania in the spring of 1864.

Rev. J. M. Reid was the immediate successor of Mr. Mathers, but his health was finally broken and he was compelled to lay aside entirely the duties of the ministry. In 1877 his friends in Richland Centre were shocked by the tidings of his tragic death near Congress, Ohio. He was crushed to death beneath the wheels of a loaded wagon which he was driving. He was a man of fine ability. He was a resident of Richland County for eight or nine years.

Rev. Joseph H. Mathers was the first Presbyterian minister who permanently located in Richland county. His ministry began there on Feb. 1st, 1855, and terminated in April, 1864. J. H. Mathers was born on Aug. 5, 1832, at Mifflintown, Juniata Co., Pa. His parents were James Mathers, a leading member of the bar of Juniata county, and Jane Hutchinson, a daughter of Rev. John Hutchinson, for nearly forty years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Mifflintun and Lost creek. Mr. Mathers graduated at Jefferson College, Cavensburg, Penn., on Aug. 7th, 1850, and at the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., in May, 1854. He was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Huntingdon, in June of the same year, and a few months there after began his ministry in Richland Co., Wis. In October, 1856, he was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry by the same body. On Dec. 2, 1856 he was married to Sarah E. Jacobs, of Mifflintun, Penn., who shared with him the toils and joys of life until Nov. 8, 1869, when she passed to the rest of Heaven.

In 1860 the existing order as to the superintendency of the common schools, was adopted, and J. H. Mathers was elected the first county superintendent. The change was a very great one, and perhaps for the time worked to some disadvantage. The standard of scholarship on the part of the teachers was elevated, but some whose attainments were comparatively limited, but whose aptness to teach compensated for this deficiency, in a measure, were excluded from the schools. There was, in consequence, a scarcity of teachers, and in some instances really less competent teachers were placed in charge. In a short time, however, educational interests were adjusted to the new order, and undoubted advance in the right direction has since resulted from the change. It would be wearisome to dwell at any length upon my experience as county superintendent.

A leading business center at the time of my first removal to Richland county, was Krouskop's store and mill. Any history of that region would be defective which did not give a prominent place to Jacob Krouskop and his family. The old gentleman was then really in his prime. A sturdy, upright and shrewd man of business, he accomplished much in the building up of his new fortune and in advancing the general interests of the community. His influence was felt not only in business circles, but he was recognized as a leader in religious enterprises—was an earnest and consistent member of the M. E. Church for many years. His mill and store attracted an extensive trade, whilst his home was a centre of social influences widely felt. His oldest son, now Hon. George Krouskop, the banker, was just embarking in business, whilst "Doe" was in his youth, not as yet having the opportunity to develop the talent which has since made him an important factor in the commercial history of Richland county. But you will have of course, a full biography of the father and his sons, all widely known in the county, and indeed the State in which they reside.

The Black family must also occupy a conspicuous place in such a history. Alexander Black was a man of rare courtesy, intelligence and integrity. Being prematurely grey, he had a more venerable appearance than his age would really suggest. It was always a pleasure to visit his hospitable home on the Willow, and enjoy the delightful society of this cultivated gentleman and his family. He possessed the courteous manners of the Virginian, and his intelligence always rendered him a most agreeable and entertaining companion.

The eccentric E. M. Sexton, the founder of Sextonville, was a notable character. He was among the very earliest settlers. His eccentric manners sometimes possibly offended those who did not know him well. My relations to him were exceedingly pleasant, and I have the tenderest remembrance of the man. He was greatly crushed when the tidings reached him that his only son had been slain in battle. He never fully recovered from that blow.

The Brush's, the Foxes, Field's, Bremer's, Devoc's, Derriekson's, Young's, Morrisons, Wheeler's, etc., were all prominent families in those early days, and many of the descendants are still conspicuous citizens.

Israel Janney was, in 1855, the clerk of the county. His name is closely identified with the social and political history of the times. His residence originally in Buena Vista, was transferred to Richland, and for years he was a citizen of the county seat. His reminiscences of Richland county will be especially rich. The "Pike's Peak" excitement took away many of our citizens, and for a time Mr. Janney disappeared from the county. His return was a satisfaction to his friends, as it was an advantage to society.

BY MRS. CYRUS D. TURNER.

Three young men, Hartwell, Cyrus and Jerry Turner left Stykesville and Sheldon, Wyoming Co., N. Y., about the 1st of May, 1854, and came west, making explorations for government lands, intending to go into the Bad Ax river valley; they stopped for a time at Mr. Wilson's, at Kickapoo Centre, to rest. Hartwell took lands on Camp creek and some in Vernon county. Cyrus took lands in Richland and some in Vernon. Jerry took a tract in Vernon, which he afterwards traded for the farm of Mr. Richards near the town plat of Viola.

These men returned to New York, where Cyrus and Jerry remained until September.

A short time after they had returned home, Hartwell returned and entered more lands, and with him came Lyman Jackson. Mr. Jackson entered lands where Mr. Sommers' residence now is, and Hartwell and Jackson both built log buildings, Jackson on said premises and Hartwell near the mouth of Camp creek. Then Hartwell again returned to New York. Mr. Jackson remained here expecting his family to come on in company with the Turners. The 1st of September five families came: William Turner and wife; Hartwell, wife and two children; Cyrus Turner and wife and two boys; Salma Rogers and wife and two children; Lyman Jackson's wife and two children; Jerry Turner, John Fuller and Asa Patten.

We came around the lakes to Milwaukee, and from there with our own teams. Our journey was altogether a pleasant one until we left Richland Centre, then a town invisible, and entered the woods, with sometimes a road and sometimes not. Crying children, tipped over wagons and camping out, sitting up on chairs for fear of snakes, helped fill the programme of our journey; many walked as long as strength lasted rather than peril the lives of the little ones which they carried in their arms and on their shoulders.

Cyrus Turner looked over his land entries and proceeded to lay out a town line, his first survey did not please him, and he again made another plat which is now a part of the city property, although some of the streets have been fenced up for many years. The first thing to be done was to excavate a log for a canoe with which to transfer travelers from shore to shore of the Kickapoo, which was fordable where the Waggoner's mill now stands.

House building was yet in its infancy here. The Gothic, Ionic, Doric orders of architecture are but little known; the style of which all the principal buildings here are composed may be termed "Kickapooric," for several sprang into existence about this time, which consisted of rolling logs up on to each other so as to enclose a square pen until the required height was obtained when the structure was covered with split boards, called "shakes" in western vernacular, which are nailed on by placing poles across them, thus making a very picturesque roof and a well ventilated attic. The space usually inclosed is about 18x20 feet or about the size of your dining-room. This is the house of the pioneer, this little room is the kitchen, dining-room, pantry, bed-room, nursery, and frequently the up-stairs and down cellar for a family of about a dozen members; into this are stowed beds, chests, dishes, boxes, babies, pots, kettles, and all the trumpery and paraphernalia, and you can easily imagine what a paradise of commotion it is; there cannot be much of coveting for all are on an equality, even in taking pleasure rides after ox teams and faring sumptuously upon wild game or mush and milk, or the most dainty dish of all, batter, warm griddle slap, pan cakes with pumpkin butter or wild honey. Our first religious sermon was preached in this pioneer building by Mr. Neher, of Forest, and in the summer of 1855 a little log school house was erected near the county line, and in a remote part of the town plat. Here our Sabbath school was organized, a library from the American Sunday School Union was procured, and we did well, notwithstanding all our difficulties; trees were chopped down, corn and potatoes planted, if disposed to indolence the melodious music of the mosquito or the silent aches of our limbs reminded us of action, by fighting mosquitoes or rubbing our rheumatic limbs, or pass the time in shaking our superfluous flesh off.

William Mack, a half breed from the Picatonic country, now appears among us. He bought out the store of D. C. Turner, and built a wooden structure, which is now attached to Mr. Tate's store. With Mr. Mack came Mr. Goodrich and family. Mr. Goodrich built a plank house on block three, which is still standing. Here his little daughter, Libbie Goodrich, died. This was the first death. She was buried near the house on the said lot, near the southern line of the street, where her grave is indistinct.

In the fall of 1857 Mr. and Mrs. Keith, teachers in the Brown school of Chicago, spent their summer vacation in Viola with the family of D. C. Turner. In three days after their return to Chicago, Howey Willie Turner, D. C. Turner's oldest son, was a corpse. Here appears Dr. Gott, of Viroqua, for the first time; yet his skill was of no avail. This child's death was a crushing calamity upon his family.

Mr. Keith, Howey Willie and Freddie Turner were buried on the mound between the residence of Charley Tate and Nelson Buegor's store for several years, but disinterred in 1869, and removed to the Viroqua cemetery, along with the remains of William Turner.

In the year 1857 Viola Mack was born, and received a lot in block three for her name.

This year also D. C. Turner bought out Mr. Mack, and commenced buying ginseng, which business he followed for eight successive years. Buying and clarifying and drying was also largely carried on by James Turner and Henry Livingstone, from Kentucky.

D. C. Turner built another store, and the old Mack building was used for a dry house. The store then built is now a part of H. C. Cushman's.

In the fall of 1856 Harry Turner and family, Mr. Gill and family, Mr. Loveless and family, Amos Fuller and family came on. Harry Turner bought out Lyman Jackson; Mr. Gill bought out the tract of land Jerry Turner had entered and now resides there. Amos Fuller went to blacksmithing, got sick of the country, and went back in the fall of 1867. In the fall of 1859 Henry M. Keith and family came here and bought the pioneer home of Mr. Hull. Mr. Keith had been obliged to resign his situation in the Brown school of Chicago on account of ill health. He received a death blow from a band of ruffians in that school building, an account of which the papers of Chicago detailed in full particulars. Mrs. Keith taught our school one summer, before her husband's death, which occurred Feb. 18, 1861. In the winter of 1859-60 our school house was made lively frequently from time to time, in which Jerry Turner and Van S. Bennett figured largely.

1858-9.—About this time several acres of land were given by C. D. Turner for a cemetery on the mound east of the new school house, where Mr. Clark now resides. This did not suit and became outlawed. Mr. Keith, consequently, was buried and removed, as before mentioned.

1860-1.—The second pioneer house was removed, and the residence Mr. Cushman now occupies was erected. John Fuller left for California. Mrs. Keith left for the Chicago school again. General political excitement prevailed; the war was upon us; consequently no improvements were made for some time.

Jerry Turner enlisted; was 2nd lieutenant, then first, then captain of company H, 5th Wisconsin Infantry. Here is an extract from Benjamin Lawton's letter, as written to Harry Sherme's family: "He fell while charging on Mary's Hill, back of the city of Fredericksburg. He was struck in the head by a large ball; I think it must have been a canister shot, for it made a hole about the size of a canister shot. He was shot so dead that he did not move. He was a brave and noble soldier. We mourn his loss and always will. He has been the main stay of company H, ever since we came out. When the captain fell I staid with him and took care of his body, which I agreed to do when I first came out; I told him I should stand by his side until the last, and I have done so. I tried my best to get his body embalmed and sent to you; but I could not for want of an ambulance to get it carried it to Falmouth. Our quarter-master assisted me all he could, but it could not be got, for everything in the shape of wagons was used to bring the wounded off the field, so we had to bury him in the city." He was killed May 3, 1863. He made us his last visit on his thirty-first birth day, the 16th of February before his death.

Company I, of the 12th Wisconsin Infantry, was organized and drilled here until ordered to headquarters. Hartwell Turner was captain of this company. While this regiment was in Leavenworth he was very sick. C. D. Turner, his brother, went to and staid with him till he could be brought home.

From 1861 to 1864 it was only war, war, war, until scarcely an able bodied man was left in the town of Forest, in 1865. D. C. Turner was quite sick, was drafted, and Dr. Terhune, of Viroqua, reported for him, as he was under the doctors's care for sometime, until he was able to go to Boscobel, prepared to furnish a substitute, but was not accepted. From this time more or less sickness followed. He gave up the mercantile business and sold out to Mr. Tate. In 1865 Mr. Harrington and family, John Bryant and C. Ward came. N. D. Ward, of the 2d Wisconsin Cavalry, returned from Texas.

Of the five original families that came to Viola in 1854, only two are here now—Salma Rogers' and H. L. Turner's. Of the twenty persons, or children, of that time, there are still living: Salma Rogers and wife and two children; Mary Bews, of Deadwood; Frank Rogers, of Viola; Hartwell Turner and wife; Lyman Jackson, wife and son, of Oregon, Wis.; Helen Jackson Drenn, of Centralia, Ill.; Dewitt C. Turner and his mother, Greenfield, Mo.

These are deceased: William Turner and wife, Cyrus D. Turner and son, George Turner, Alice Turner Waggoner, Jerry Turner and John Fuller.

BY ISRAEL JANNEY.

Pine river runs the entire length from north to south, through the central portion of the county. On the west side of the river was a heavy forest with a thick undergrowth of brush, extending for miles with no roads or bridges. We were without communication with the western settlements, only by the difficult route of crossing the Wisconsin river and traveling down to the village of Muscoda, there re-crossing the river and following the trail the western settlers made to their homes, the only entrance for the early settlers of the western part of the county. There was a good highway from the above village to Mineral Point, and also to Galena, where the emigrants by water landed that were looking for homes in Wisconsin; and those that made their way by land from Illinois, Indiana, southern Ohio and further south, generally found their way to Mineral Point.

This accounts for the settlements in the western part of the county, being generally composed of people from the above named States, while the eastern portion of the county was reached from the east by the way of Sauk Prairie and Helena. The result was, the eastern portion of the county was settled by the inevitable Yankee; a close, industrious and enterprising settler, with the milk-pail on his arm, ready to milk the first cow he could secure, and also a foreign emigration working their way westward from the eastern States and cities. I will here state the Yankee, with the cow, has been a large and important factor in the improvement and development of the rich resources of our county.

Robert and William McCloud, with their families, emigrated from Hardin Co., Ohio, in the year 1845, to Wisconsin, having previously purchased a tract of land near Muscoda without seeing it. After arriving at the above named place and having examined their purchase, they found it worthless for agricultural purposes. They remained in the village of Muscoda during the fall and winter of 1845-6, looking at different parts of the country, hunting and buying furs that were found in the northwest at that time, such as the beaver, otter, fisher, martin, mink and bear. The above named animals were numerous. Robert McCloud was a general agent for a fur company located at Perrysburgh, Ohio, and his agents traveled as far north as St. Paul. In the spring of 1846, Robert and William McCloud moved upon farms they had selected on the east bank of Bear creek, in town 9 north, of range 2 east. Robert broke up about eighty acres, planted corn, potatoes and garden vegetables, and William broke and planted about forty acres. They had good crops, and when my brother, Phinneas Janney, and myself moved into the above named town in the fall of 1846 we found the McClouds comfortably situated with good log houses. Robert had sown four bushels of winter wheat, which was without doubt the first sown in the county. They were the only families in the eastern half of the county at the time we moved in, except some parties that were engaged in building a saw-mill on Pine river, where the village of Rockbridge is located.

Mineral Point was our postoffice for a time, and later, Franklin or Highland in Iowa county. Our supplies had to come from Mineral Point.

Richland county at this time was a wilderness, where the Indian and wild beasts of the forest roamed at will; such as the lynx, elk, deer, bear and wolf; the three latter were very plentiful. Our animal food consisted chiefly of the deer and bear meat. The hunting of them was a very pleasant and exciting exercise, as well as profitable. Fish were very plentiful in the small streams. We found trout and the larger varieties in the Pine and Wisconsin rivers. They furnished fine sport and amusement in securing, as well as an important article of food; and the hunting of the wild bee was interesting and profitable. They were very plentiful and yielded a large amount of honey, which took the place of sugar and syrup for all sweetening purposes, so that we were not without some amusement and pleasure to mix with the troubles and trials incident to pioneer life. About three weeks after our arrival, Philip Miller, a very promising young man, died of typhoid fever, which cast a gloom and sorrow over the small settlement; and we were admonished of the truth, notwithstanding our journey of hundreds of miles, that the messenger of death was near, and would find us sooner or later.

The winter of 1846-7 was one of the coldest and hardest that I have experienced in the county; the snow fell very deep, and soon after thawed sufficiently to form a heavy crust that would almost bear a man up; but about the time he would straighten up, down he would go, and would continue to repeat it for a short distance, until he found himself played out. The result was we had to keep close quarters, and had often to eat what we called Irish supper—venison, potatoes and salt. We had an early spring. It turned warm and remained so; and it was not long until we laid aside our troubles caused by the winter, and were delighted with the prospects the country presented. The bold bluffs and beautiful valleys, with their cool springs, brooks and creeks, with the surrounding forest, made up a view beautiful and grand; and the thought occurred that there were none to dispute our right to this beautiful country. But we were disappointed; the red man of the forest made his appearance with claims, and gave us considerable trouble; and on several occasions we were compelled to collect with our families at one house, for safety and protection, until the Indians were disposed of.

The McCloud brothers had been absent for several days from the village, early in the spring of 1846, looking at different parts of Richland county, and on their return home, found the people of the village in a fight with the Indians. They were called on for help, and responded by hurrying to the scene of action. There were four of the Indians killed and one wounded by the McClouds. The Indians then fell back into a heavy undergrowth of pine timber, taking their dead and wounded with them. The whites called a council and decided to send a messenger to Gov. Dodge, and runners to the different settlements for help, believing the Indians would renew the conflict as soon as they could collect their forces. By morning there were a large number of whites on the ground, and fully as many Indians. They seemed determined on mischief. But the whites acted strictly on the defensive until they could hear from the governor, which was soon answered by his presence in person; and after a careful investigation of the facts, he sustained the people in what they had done and complimented the McClouds very highly for the brave and decisive action they took in the matter. The Indians were sent to their reservation by Gov. Dodge, with orders not to remove; but the orders were often violated and they gave the different settlements more or less trouble, but more particularly the McCloud settlement; they were determined to have the scalps of those two men, and made many attempts to secure their object; and the number they lost in the raids they made will probably never be known. They finally disappeared and left the McClouds to enjoy their new homes in peace. A few words in reference to the McCloud family.

Judge William McCloud, the father of Robert and William, was one of the early pioneer settlers of Champaign, Logan and Hardin counties in Ohio. The family held a prominent place in the hearts of the early settlers in the above named counties; was respected and esteemed by all who knew them. Robert and William McCloud having grown up in the midst of the greatest warlike Indian tribes of Ohio, with such opportunities for studying the peculiar traits of character of the Indians, well qualified them to meet their Indian troubles in this county with the success they did. Mrs. Elizabeth McCloud, the mother of Robert and William, after the death of her husband, came to this county and remained with her children and friends until her death, which took place at James D. Key's, in the town of Buena Vista. She was a lady of fine intellect, highly cultured and of excellent memory. She had been a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, and was one of the true Christian mothers of the past.

The next addition to our small settlement was Mary J. Janney, now Mrs. William Willey, of Fancy creek, born Dec. 12, 1846, daughter of Israel and Elizabeth Janney. In the spring of 1847, W. H. Janney located on the farm now owned by J. W. Briggs; and Amos Merser settled on land east of David Young's farm, but shortly afterward sold out and located about four miles northeast of Lone Rock, in Sauk county where he now resides.

In the fall of the same year there were two men with their families, one by the name of Parshall Smith and the other Cyrus Cline, moved in and settled on Bear creek.

In the fall of 1848 Jonathan Ingram and family, Samuel Long with his family, and many others, moved into the town. Our first election was held in November at the house of Robert McCloud, and I think there were thirteen votes polled. Up to 1849 we had never seen or hear of an assessor or tax collector. We certainly ought to have been happy.

Nathaniel Wheeler moved from the State of New York, to Dane Co., Wis., in the fall of 1848. He settled in town 9 north, of range 2 east, on the farm now owned by David Young. He was the first Methodist preacher in the town. Mr. Wheeler served one term in the State Legislature from this county. He left this county many years ago, and when last heard from was living in the State of New York, as a Baptist minister. He had evidently changed his religious views.

B. L. Jackson was the first local preacher of the same Church, and settled in the same neighborhood in 1848. They organized a class about the same time in a log school house, a short distance from Samuel Long's residence. Mr. Jackson was an itinerant preacher in the M. E. Church for a number of years, and was then transferred to an Iowa conference.

Rev. G. G. Nickey was one of the pioneer preachers of the United Brethren Church on Fancy creek, and under his preaching they have increased in strength and numbers, and at the present writing are strong and prosperous.

CHAPTER XIII.

WAR FOR THE UNION.

If there is any one thing, more than another, of which the people of the northern States have reason to be proud, it is the bright record they made during the dark and bloody days of the war of the Rebellion. When the war was forced upon the country, the people were quietly pursuing the even tenor of their ways, doing whatever their hands found to do—making farms or cultivating those already made, erecting homes, founding cities and towns, building shops and manufactories—in short, the country was alive with industry and hopes for the future.

The people were just recovering from the depressions and losses incident to the great financial panic of 1857. The future looked bright and promising, and the industrious and patriotic sons and daughters of the free States were buoyant with hope—looking forward to the perfection of new plans for the securing of comfort and competence in their declining years of life; they little heeded the mutterings and threatenings of treason's children in the slave States of the South. True sons and descendants of the heroes of the "times that tried men's souls"—the struggle for American Independence—they never dreamed that there was even one so base as to dare attempt the destruction of the Union of their fathers—a government baptised with the best blood the world ever knew. While immediately surrounded with peace and tranquillity, they paid but little attention to the rumored plots and plans of those who lived and grew rich from the sweat and toil, blood and flesh of others; aye, even trafficking in their own offspring. Nevertheless, the war came, with all its attendant horrors.

April 12, 1861, Fort Sumter, in Charleston bay, South Carolina, Major Anderson, U. S. A., commandant, was fired upon by rebel arms. Although base treason, this first act in the bloody reality that followed, was looked upon as the mere bravado of a few hot heads, the act of a few fire-eaters whose sectional bias and freedom-hatred was crazed by excessive indulgence in intoxicating potions. When, a day later, the news was borne northward, on the wings of the telegraph, that Anderson had been forced to surrender to what had at first been regarded as a drunken mob, the strong patriotic souls of the people of the north were startled from their dreams of the future, from undertakings half completed, and made to realize, that, behind that mob, there was a dark, deep, well organized purpose to destroy the government, rend the Union in twain, and out of its ruins erect a slave oligarchy, wherein no one would dare question their right to hold in bondage, the sons and daughters of "sunny Africa." But "they reckoned without their host." Their dreams of this Utopia, their plans for the establishment of an independent confederacy, were doomed from their inception to sad and bitter disappointment.

Immediately upon the surrender of Fort Sumter, Abraham Lincoln, the President, who, but a few short weeks before, had taken the oath of office as the nation's chief executive, issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 volunteers for three months, being misled by uninformed counselors as to the magnitude of the task before him. The last word of that proclamation hardly ceased to vibrate along the telegraph wire, before the call was filled. Men and money were poured into the lap of the General Government with lavish hands. The people who loved their country—and who did not—could not give enough. Patriotism thrilled and pulsed through every heart. The farm, the shop, the office, the store, the factory, the bar, the pulpit, aye, even the college and school houses offered their best men, their lives and their fortune in defense of the unity and honor of their government and flag. Party lines were ignored or lost sight of and bitter words, spoken in the moment of political heat, were forgotten and forgiven, and joining hands in a common cause, northern democrat, republican and conservative repeated the oath of America's soldier-statesman, "by the Great Eternal, the Union must and shall be preserved."

But alas, 75,000 men were not enough to subdue the rank rebellion. Nor were ten times that number. The war continued to rage, and call succeeded to call, until, to the doubting heart, it looked as if there were not men enough in all the northern States to crush these traitorous foes within the limits of our own glorious land, helped and aided as they were by traitorous friends across the ocean. But to every call for either men or money, there was a ready and willing response. And it is the boast of the people that, had the supply of men fallen short, there were women brave and daring enough, aye, even patriotic enough, to have offered themselves a willing sacrifice upon their country's altar. Such were the impulses, motives and actions of the patriotic sons of the north, among whom the loyal sons of Wisconsin made a conspicuous record, and the boys from Richland county were not in any wise behind in the movement to preserve the life of our government.

The county government made such appropriations as seemed to them proper and right for the support of the families of those who volunteered; and of these matters we will treat first. Immediately upon receipt of the President's proclamation, the citizens of Richland county proceeded to recruit a company, but, owing to the distance from the seat of war, could not get them accepted under the three months' call, and the Scott Guards were mustered in under the first call of three years.

The first action of the board of supervisors, in regard to the volunteers then going and gone to the front, was at a special session held July, 1861, when the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the families of non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, mustered into the service of the State or of the United States, in pursuance of any law of this State, being residents of this county, in addition to the pay provided for the rank of soldiers of the rank aforesaid, shall receive the sum of $4 for four months, to be paid only to the families that really need it; and that such appropriation be paid by the county treasurer upon the presentation of a certificate of a justice of the peace of said county, to the effect that the applicant is of the class above specified, and in need of said appropriation."

At its November session, the same year, the board, the time for which the previous resolution provided having expired, appointed a committee to make and report to them an order making an allowance to the families of the volunteers. In accordance with the above instructions, when the committee made its report, the board appropriated the sum of $2,500 to meet the expenses of the partial support of the families of volunteers, to be applied under the direction of the board. It was also determined that it should be the duty of the town boards, when an application was made to them for relief, by the family of a volunteer in the United States service, to inquire into the case, and if necessary, to provide such aid and draw orders on the county treasurer, who was instructed to pay them.

Jan. 13, 1862, the board of supervisors made the following order:—"That the families of non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates mustered into the service of the State or of the United States, being residents of this county at the time of their enlistment, in addition to the pay provided for soldiers of the rank aforesaid, receive from the county the sum of $1 per month during their service; that families having children under twelve years of age, receive the sum of $1 per month for each child, in addition to the sum aforesaid, this allowance to date from Nov. 20, 1861."

The board also passed resolutions defining how, when and where the applications for this relief shall be filed and paid, and rescinds any and all actions of previous boards of supervisors.

At a special session of the board of supervisors held March 4, 1862, the following resolution was adopted:

"WHEREAS—There is no money in the treasury with which to redeem the orders issued to the families of volunteers, and whereas, the families are realizing but about one-half the amount therefrom, it is therefore

"Resolved, That it is deemed for the best interests of all concerned that the act passed at January session, for the relief of families of volunteers be, and the same is, hereby declared repealed."

The calls for more men, more victims to the unholy demon of war, now became more frequent and soon there were no young men left in the county to bear the brunt of war's fierce struggle, and yet some must go. And when the call for 300,000 more came in December, 1864, some steps must be taken to fill the county's quota, and a meeting was held in the court house at Richland Centre to take such steps, as seemed advisable, toward that object. The meeting was organized by the selection of Le Roy D. Gage, as chairman, and D. Downs as clerk.

When the meeting was opened, N. L. James moved the appointment of a committee on resolutions, which was carried, and Robert Akan, Norman L. James and C. H. Smith were appointed the said committee. (The committee reporting a majority and minority report, and both being lengthy, and neither being adopted, both have been omitted). However the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That every man liable to the draft be requested to pay $25 for the purpose of procuring volunteers, and $3 for the purpose of paying the taxes of all enlisted men now in the service incurred by a town tax for war bounty purposes; and that the town board of supervisors be petitioned to hold at the earliest practicable day a town meeting for the purpose of voting for or against a tax of $200 for each volunteer properly credited to the town.

Voted, That C. H. Smith be, and he is hereby authorized to receive and receipt for the $28 requested from those liable to the draft; and that he is authorized to pay out of money so received the sum of $300 for each recruit properly credited to Richland town.

Voted, That J. H. Miner, D. E. Pease, J. B. McGrew and D. L. Dows are hereby appointed as a committee to call upon all subject to the draft and urge the payment of the $28 recommended by meeting.

Voted That the names of those paying the $28, as requested, be published in The Observer.

Voted, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in The Observer.

Nearly every one liable to draft met this demand upon them and the quota was filled. It was discovered after the peace, that the State of Wisconsin had furnished a considerably greater number of men than was her proportion, and Richland was one of the counties which had a greater number on the credit side of the account.

But two men had the honor to serve in the three month's service, from Richland county, and these were, Jesse S. Miller and William Worden.

The first man from Richland county that was killed in the late war, was George Hamlin, a son of Charles Hamlin, of Richland Centre. This young man laid down a precious life on the altar of his country, at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, April 2, 1862, and was at the time a member of the 11th Ill., Infantry, although a resident of this county.

In almost every one of the regiments that left the State for active service in the field, were some of the brave boys of Richland county. The first company that was raised in the county exclusively, however, was the Scott Guards, who enlisted in the spring of 1861, when the first flush of patriotism burned throughout the land. This company was assigned to the 5th regiment and given the letter H as its designation. During its four years the company saw much active service and the history of the gallant 5th will not suffer by comparison. On mustering into the service of the general government, the regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, its first active duty commencing in the spring of 1862, when they were placed in the front and right nobly did they their devoir, taking a foremost part in the battle of Williamsburg. Arriving on the field about ten o'clock, skirmishers were thrown out to the front and left, the regiment crossing Queen's creek and taking possession of the enemy's earthworks on the right. Here they again formed in line, three companies being deployed as skirmishers, facing the second work, of which the regiment also took possession, suffering severely from a galling fire, which the enemy opened from three other works on the front and left. The regiment again advanced about four hundred yards, two companies being sent forward to support the line of skirmishers, the remainder of the regiment supporting a battery which had taken a position near some low farm houses, and were engaged in shelling the enemy's works.

This position was maintained until 5 o'clock in the afternoon when vastly superior forces made a retrograde movement highly necessary. Col. Cobb, in his official report, says :

"In falling back to the point indicated, the regiment was immediately unmasked by the buildings, and found itself in front of the enemy's center; a heavy regiment, afterwards ascertained to be the 5th North Carolina, which was supported on either flank by other troops, all of whom advanced rapidly, concentrating upon us a rapid and heavy fire. The regiment fell back in good order, every man loading as he retreated, wheeling and returning the fire of the enemy, with the rapidity and coolness of veterans. In this way they fell back to the line of battle of the brigade, which had already formed, taking position in the center, a space having been left for that purpose. A charge being then ordered, the whole line moved forward with a shout and a well directed fire, driving the enemy before them like chaff, they fleeing in wild confusion, leaving the field, over which they had just pursued the retiring line of the 5th, literally strewn with their dead and wounded, and leaving their battle flag behind them, which was captured by a member of the regiment.

This charge turned in our favor the wavering scale of battle. For this they received the thanks of Gen. McClellan.

Gladly would we follow all the movements of this gallant regiment, of which the boys of Richland formed a part, did but space allow. How they struggled at Spottsylvania, the seven days conflict on the Chickahominy, at Rappahannock, Sailor's creek, Winchester, Petersburg, Mary's Heights, Fredericksburgh and other famous battles.

In the battle at Mary's Heights, the 5th Wisconsin headed the famous charge which carried a part of the almost impregnable Mary's Heights at Fredericksburgh. Greeley says, “Braver men never smiled on death, than those who climbed Mary’s Hill on that fatal day.” The one gleam of success in that gallant but disastrous fight, was the capture by the 5th Wisconsin of a rebel battery. All else was failure where “we had reason for sorrow but none for shame.”

We have inserted here an account of the charge at Rappahannock Station, made by this famous regiment and its twin mate, the 6th Maine, as it is thought to be the only true and most graphic account of one of the most heroic actions of the war, at the request of a number of the men of company H, of the 5th.

A FAMOUS ASSAULT.

[By J. S. Anderson.]

On the 6th of November, 1863, the Army of the Potomac lay in camp in the vicinity of Warrenton, fronting the confederate army, commanded by Gen. Lee, which occupied the line of the Rappahannock river. A short time previous, Lee had repeated against Meade the tactics and strategy which had been so successful against Hooker and Pope, and passed around the right flank of the army of the Potomac. He had compelled Meade to fall back nearly to the vicinity of Alexandria.

Meade selected a position in the neighborhood of Centreville, and Lee, finding his antagonist had pursued a cautious and judicious course, and was ready to confront him upon ground of his own choice, fell back to the line of the Rappahannock, destroying the railroad and all other public property in his path. Meade, smarting at having been out-maneuvred, and anxious to deliver a return blow, followed him a little to the south and east of Warrenton, striking the enemy a sharp blow at Bristoe Station, but failed to bring him to battle. Both armies rested near the line of the Rappahannock, Lee holding the fords and crossings of the river.

On the evening of the 6th of November, 1863, orders were issued to fill up to the maximum with ammunition, to have three day’s cooked rations in the haversacks and be ready to march at day-break. Always prompt, the bugle sounded at the headquarters of “Uncle John” Sedgwick, the grand old commander of the sixth corps, just as the sky began to redden in the east.

The first division of the sixth corps led the advance; the third brigade, commanded by Gen. David Russell, and consisting of the 5th Wisconsin, 6th Maine, 49th and 119th Pennsylvania regiments in front. The 49th Pennsylvania led the entire column. After passing the picket line about two miles out, a line of skirmishers was thrown out to the front and flanks of the column, and in this manner marched without opposition until about 2 o’clock, P. M., when at a distance of two and a half miles from the river, a small party of cavalry was struck.

They fell back without seriously attempting to oppose the advance, contenting themselves by observing our approach. We soon arrived near the range of hills bordering the river and the head of the column turned to the left so as to pass down the river. We marched down and parallel with the river, nearly to the railroad and connected with the advance of the fifth corps, under Gen. Warren, which soon after came up in force. The second division of the sixth corps, as it came up, deployed by the right and supported a couple of batteries, which took position on a height from which the rebels could be seen in medium shell range. The enemy were found to be strongly entrenched on the same side of the river, on which we were, holding a tete de pont back of which was a pontoon bridge.

Their works consisted of several strong forts. On the south side of the river, immediately in our front, on commanding ground, was an elaborate redoubt pierced for four pieces of artillery, and containing two twelve pound Parrott guns taken originally from Milroy, at the capitulation of Winchester. Further to the rebel right, at a distance of six hundred feet, was a smaller redoubt, containing two three inch guns, said to have been taken from us, one at Antietam, the other at Chancellorsville. This redoubt was on ground a little lower than the first, and commanded the approaches along the line of the railroad and the river below. The two redoubts were connected by a strong line of rifle pits, and to the rebel left of the larger work, an elaborate and carefully constructed line of breastworks extended up the river and parallel with it for a long distance.

On the further side of the river, on a high hill, that dominated the whole, was a strong fort, in which were planted several heavy guns, I should judge field 32-pounders, and further up, on the same side of the river, a smaller redoubt.

These works were fully manned. In the works on the side of the river facing the federal troops there were two entire brigades. "Stone-wall" Jackson's famous old brigade was there, and with them also were the famous Louisiana Tigers. This Louisiana brigade was commanded by Brig. Gen. Hayes, who as senior officer commanded all the forces on that side of the river. The other brigade was that of Gen. Hoke, who commanded a brigade of three large regiments, the 6th, 54th and 57th North Carolina. They were the flower of the rebel army. Well dressed and splendidly equipped, they no doubt considered themselves a match for any equal number of men in the world. The Louisianians occupied the two redoubts and the rifle pits connecting them and a small party of the line to their left of the larger redoubt, directly in front of the pontoon bridge. The line to their left was held by the North Carolina regiments. Our troops took some little time to deploy and form the desired connections with the fifth corps. As soon as the lines were formed, the skirmishers of the 49th Pennsylvania were called in and the entire right wing of the 6th Maine, under Maj. Fuller, deployed as skirmishers, with orders to push the rebel skirmishers back inside of their works if possible. This was quickly and gallantly done, the artillery aiding in the work, and the men lay down behind stumps, fallen trees, hillocks, and any object which afforded shelter, keeping up a sharp but desultory fire on the entrenched line of the enemy.

In the meantime several batteries had taken position on the ridge in front of the infantry lines and had opened a heavy cannonade on the enemy's entrenchments. Shot and shell flew like hail through the forts on both sides of the river, but without any perceptible effect; the enemy's infantry would lie down in the rifle pits while the storm passed over them, perfectly protected. The artillery, shielded by the heavy curtains of earth, could not be silenced.

Gen. Russell, who commanded the first division of the sixth corps that day, solicited permission to make an attempt with his brigade to carry it by storm. The desired permission was given by Gen. Wright, who commanded the corps that day, in place of Gen. Sedgwick, who had charge of the entire right wing of the army, and preparations were immediately begun. It was trying ground for a charge. Between our lines and the enemy were two long ranges of hilly ground, with several hundred yards of broken declivity between, at the bottom of which was a small stream.

The storming party selected consisted of the left wing of the 6th Maine, and the entire 5th Wisconsin. They were to be supported at some distance by the 49th and the 119th Pennsylvania. Just as the sun touched the horizon the left wing of the 6th Maine deployed on the summit of the first ridge, in the form of a strong skirmish line. The 5th Wisconsin formed a hundred yards behind them, and the whole moved forward.

When the 5th Wisconsin reached the little creek I have spoken of, two or three shells whizzed above the heads of the regiment and burst close by. In another moment the regiment would be under fire. There was an ominous growl along the line, and a half stop. "What is the matter, men?" cried an officer.

“We’re not loaded ; you’re taking us in with empty guns,” cried half a hundred voices. Some officer riding in the rear, I think one of Gen. Russell’s staff, cried out, “Forward ! Your orders are to depend entirely on the bayonet.” The only answer to this was the deepening of the hoarse murmur along the line and the rattling of the ramrods. Nearly every man had bitten off a cartridge, and was trying to shove it down his rifle barrel as he marched in line. Finally, Col. Tom Allen, who was riding in front of the regiment, had his attention called to the confusion, and ascertaining its cause, thundered out : “Halt ! Load at will, Load !” “Be quick, men,” Col. Allen added. “Don’t cap your guns,” cried out the same staff officer from the rear again, “rely entirely on the bayonet.” The only answer was a half contemptuous growl, accompanied by the clicking of gun locks all along the line, as the bright pieces of copper were fitted to the tubes.

“That fellow must think we’re a pack of greenhorns,” the writer heard one of the men say.

The rifles being loaded, the line moved quietly and rapidly forward. The delay caused by loading had considerably increased the interval between the 6th Maine skirmishers and the line of battle. These gallant fellows had pushed fearlessly forward until they came up with the skirmish line formed by the right wing of the regiment, and the two thin lines together rushed headlong on the enemy.

There were less than 370 of them, officers and men, and they had charged nearly ten times their number. The audacity and impetuosity of the attack was such that the enemy recoiled for a moment before it, but seeing how small was the number of their antagonists, they sprang back to the attack and the work became hot.

No better regiment than the 6th Maine ever marched. They had never known defeat, they had never failed to break the enemy in a charge, nor to well back the waves of attack from the front. Between them and the 5th Wisconsin there was a peculiar affection. The men of the two regiments had fraternized from the first. They were together all through the war and had helped each other in many a hard spot.

They had a right to expect that the 5th Wisconsin would not fail them, and they did not. As soon as the 5th Wisconsin passed over the crest of the second ridge, behind which they had loaded their guns, they became exposed to artillery fire. A number of shells were thrown at them, most of which passed over their heads. The deepening shades of the twilight and the rapidity with which they marched down the open slope disarranged the aim of the gunners so that they suffered little or none from this cause. As they came nearer the whistling rush of canister greeted their ears and the regiment broke into the double quick. As they clambered over the swampy river the crackle and roar of musketry burst forth in their front, and as they climbed the bank on the other side they could see the Maine boys clinging to the parapets of the redoubts, or standing in little groups of twos and threes, at the very edge of the breastworks, with their bayonets at a charge, or loading their guns and casting anxious glances to see if help was coming. They were falling thick and fast. Then arose from that line of battle a terrible shout. It was not the usual charging cheer. It was a yell of rage, a shout of encouragement, an imprecation of vengeance all in one. Only one shout and then a terribly significant silence. They had no breath to waste. Knapsacks and haversacks were thrown right and left, and through the storm of bullets rushed the 5th Wisconsin to the rescue. A stalwart lieutenant of the 6th Maine leaped on the parapet of the large redoubt and shouted, “For God’s sake, 5th Wisconsin, hurry up.” The call was not needed. In another instant the line of battle reached the rebel works. The greater part of the 5th Wisconsin rushed over the parapets into the larger redoubt, the remainder swept down the rifle pit to the left and threw itself into the smaller one. They emptied their rifles right and left among the enemy, the muzzles sometimes touching the bodies of their opponents.

Men were found dead next morning with their flesh scorched with powder. A terrible and indescribable struggle ensued. It was "hand to hand and foot to foot." The men from Maine and the men from Wisconsin, without a semblance of organization, fought side by side. The Louisianians, cut off from the pontoon bridge, and with a deep river in their rear, fought desperately. Muskets were seized and torn from the grasp of those who held them, and men grappled and fought with their fists. Inside the large redoubt the melee was frightful. The rebel artillery men stuck by their guns to the last, and fought savagely with rammers, hand spikes, swords or whatever was at hand. A handsome, curly haired young man of the 6th Maine, who curiously enough bore the name of Jeff Davis, killed one of the rebels with a blow so terrible that the stock of his rifle was swept off, and the skull of his opponent shattered to fragments. The next instant he himself fell shot through the head. Sergeant Joe Goodwin, of company A, 5th Wisconsin, and one or two others of the regiment, wheeled one of the captured cannon around to the rear of the traverse on the left of the redoubt, and seeing a line being formed near the pontoon bridge, apparently to charge back upon the fort, hurled among them a double charge of canister intended for us, breaking them up and driving them away from the bridge. As he put his shoulder to the wheel to run the gun back, he fell, shot through the heart.

These two regiments carried on this terrible and unequal struggle for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in that time sixteen out of twenty-one commissioned officers, and 123 out of 350 enlisted men of the 6th Maine had fallen, and of the 5th Wisconsin, seven officers and fifty-six men were killed or wounded. Without commander, without organization, the men fought doggedly and desperately on. Lient. Col. Harris, commander of the 6th Maine, lay in the ditch with his hip shattered. Col. Tom Allen, of the 5th Wisconsin, partially crippled in one arm by an old wound received in battle when with the Iron Brigade, was struck in the other arm with a rifle bullet, when he had nearly reached the works. Major Wheeler, then next in command, just recovering from an old wound received at the storming of Fredericksburg Heights, fell mortally wounded, near the foot of the slope. Horace Walker, of company A, senior captain of the regiment, fell dead with a rebel bullet through his brain, near the right angle of the large redoubt. Capt. Ordway, of company D, next on the list, fell headlong from the parapet, killed, as he was cheering on his men. Thus the four senior officers of the regiment were struck down. Near Walker, lay dead the gallant Capt. Furlong, of the 6th Maine, who had hitherto passed through all the battles of the regiment unhurt. He was a large, handsomely built man, and was known through the brigade as "the big captain." A warm hearted, genial fellow, he was brave as a lion, and fairly worshiped by his men.

Inside the fort, and a little to the left of Ordway, lay Lient. McKinley, of the 6th Maine, with his brains blown out. Around him too, lay half a dozen of his men, who had followed him to the death. Thus it was all along that terrible line. The air was filled with a medley of shouts, shrieks and groans, calls to surrender, yells of defiance, imprecations and curses, and through and above all other sounds the unceasing crash and rattle of musketry. The artillery on both sides was silent, for federals and confederates were so mingled together that they could not tell friend from foe.

That portion of the storming party which had passed to the left of the larger redoubt swept down the rifle pits to and beyond the smaller redoubt, crowding the enemy back inch by inch, toward the river at their right flank and rear. As they were broken up they would pass up toward the pontoon bridge, thus strengthening their fellows in the fight, going on around the larger redoubt. A number of them, however, were cut off, and attempted to escape by passing out of their works at the extreme right and wading the river near the abutments of the railroad bridge. Here a terrible affair happened. The water was up nearly to their armpits, and as they were in the stream the Union soldiers, mad with the rage of battle, pushed down to the water's edge and poured a pitiless fire upon them. Many sunk, wounded, in the water, with a bubbling shriek, losing thus whatever chance of life was left after the bullet had done its work. The horrors of the situation struck even the battle maddened soldiers, and suspending their fire, they shouted to the confederates to come back and surrender. The greater part of those in the river started back to surrender, but when they came near the shore an officer stepped from behind a stone abutment and ordered them to return again, enforcing his order by flourishing his sword. The men again wheeled around in the water and began splashing their way to the opposite shore, and again the pitiless hail of bullets was showered upon them. At last they gave up the attempt and sheltered themselves behind the ruined abutments of the bridge, where they cried out for "quarter," and about seventy-five surrendered.

I have no means of knowing who the officer was that prevented his men from surrendering sooner, and thus kept up the useless slaughter, but I have reason to believe it was Col. Goodwin, the commander of the Louisiana brigade, who surrendered afterwards with his men.

Meanwhile, and as soon as a lodgment had been effected on the enemy's works, Gen. Russell had sent back to bring up the 49th and 119th Pennsylvania in support. There seemed to be an almost interminable delay in their coming up, and staff officers were sent in quick succession to hurry their movements. At last they came, and with a cheer the 49th and the greater part of the 119th went up to the assistance of their comrades. They were none too soon. The rebels had prepared for a last desperate attempt to regain the large redoubt, from which an incessant storm of bullets was sweeping the pontoon bridge, striking down all who attempted to escape.

They had gathered in force as near to the bridge as they dared. A part of the force on their left, which had not been closely engaged, was brought up to assist the disordered ranks of the Louisianians, and a hot enflading fire had already been opened on the overtaxed forces in and around the large redoubt. This fire, passing through the thin and shattered ranks of the 5th Wisconsin and 6th Maine, smote full on the right wing of the 119th Pennsylvania and threw them into disorder. Many of them cast themselves into the dry ditch at the foot of the slope, and added to the horror and confusion of the moment by returning the fire of the rebels, regardless of the fact that a line of their own comrades was between the two fires. They were, in a moment, however, gallantly rallied by their major and led up in line with the rest.

And now the lines thus reinforced swept on. The rebels pushed to the river's brink, threw down their arms by scores, and were sent to the rear. The enemy were entirely swept away from their extreme right up to the large redoubt and along the rifle pits to a point in front of the pontoon bridge.

The last stroke was now given. Gen. Russell at last seeming to realize the fact that he had led his brigade into a battle against large odds, had sent orders to Gen. Upton, commanding the second brigade of the same division to charge with two of his regiments on the right. That officer selected the 5th Maine and 121st New York regiments, and forming them in line of battle behind the crest nearest to the rebel lines, ordered them to pile up their knapsacks and all other superfluous weight; and then marched rapidly forward. As they neared the rifle pits they received a scattering volley of musketry. "Steady! forward men! don't fire a shot," shouted Upton, and with a ringing cheer, forward they go over the rifle pits, with a rush, crowding the enemy to the river bank, where they surrendered, and now the conflict is over. The sullen prisoners were marched to the rear. Some few escaped up the river in the darkness, which by this time had settled down like a pall. A few stray swimmers plunged into the water, and swam over to tell the tale to their comrades across the river. The rattle of the musketry died away into silence, and soon the lanterns were flashing over the field as the sad work of gathering up the wounded was begun.

What were the results? The crossing of the river was seized and a lodgment made on a salient point of Lee's general line, which compelled him to fall back to the line of the Rapidan. Four guns with caisson and ammunition, five limbers with full complement of battery horses, all complete; one stand of colors, 500 prisoners, and many hundred stand of small arms, were taken by Russell's brigade alone. Two strong redoubts were taken by a line of battle not much heavier than an ordinary skirmish line. To the two regiments of Upton there surrendered over 1,100 prisoners, with seven stand of colors. Most of these were from the regiments which had been broken and driven from their positions by Russell's brigade, and escaped from them only to fall into the hands of Upton's men.

When it is remembered that the entire strength of Russell's brigade was 1,549, officers and men, and that all these results were accomplished by them, assisted only by two regiments of another brigade, against more than double their number, thoroughly prepared in a chosen position, I think I am warranted in saying that the achievement is without a parallel in the history of the war. The confederates fought under the eye of Gen. Lee, who stood with Gen. Jubal Early in the fort on the opposite side of the river, and was a witness of the disaster to his forces. The chaplain of the 54th North Carolina, in an account of the battle written by him to the Richmond Examiner, three days after, said: "The brigade (Hoke's) is almost annihilated; the 54th has only one captain left, with five lieutenants and fifteen men remaining. The fragments of the brigade are now collected under the command of Lieut. Col. Tate, of the 6th, and attached to the Louisiana brigade. These fragments now number about 275 men."

The meed of praise was given to the 6th Maine and 5th Wisconsin for this unparalleled feat, by all who witnessed it, and had it not been for the desperate tenacity with which they clung to the earthworks they had stormed, until the supports came up, the attack must have resulted most disastrously to our troops. Nor can I close this already too long account more fitly than by quoting from the general order issued from brigade headquarters the second day of the battle:

"Officers and soldiers:—Your gallant deeds of the 7th of November will live in the annals of your country, and will be not the least glorious of the exploits of the Army of the Potomac. To have carried by storm with a mere skirmish line and a feeble support in numbers, powerful earthworks, a strong natural position manned by the flower of the rebel army and strengthened by artillery, would be an achievement that a division of our forces might well feel pride in, but it was not too much for the gallant sons of Maine and Wisconsin."

After a long term of service, having, many of them, re-enlisted as veterans, the regiment was mustered out at Madison, July 20, 1865.

Company D, 11th Wisconsin Infantry, was organized in September, 1861, and first went into camp at camp Randall, where the men were mustered into the service of the United States, with Jesse S. Miller, as captain. The 11th regiment was attached to the second brigade, under Gen. Hovey, in Gen. Steel's command, and under orders to proceed south, passed through Missouri to Arkansas. Its first engagement, of any note, was at Bayou Cache, July 7, 1862, when companies D, G, H, and I, held in check a vastly superior force of rebels, until the arrival of reinforcements. After this conflict the regiment arrived at Helena, on the 13th. In October they returned to Pilot Knob, Mo., where they remained in camp all winter. March 13, 1863, embarking at St. Genevieve, they soon landed at Memphis. From this point they were sent to Milliken's Bend, La., and were assigned to a position in the second brigade, fourteenth division of the thirteenth army corps.

When the morning of the 1st of April dawned, it found the 11th leading the advance, and at Anderson Hill, near Port Gibson, Miss., they encountered the enemy and after a warm engagement, which proved no "April Fool business" the rebels were driven back in dire confusion. On May 15th, they took part in the battle of Champin Hills, and the following day cut off the retreat of the "boys in gray" at Black river bridge, where there was a warm contest, the boys of the 11th taking upward of a thousand prisoners, and a regimental stand of colors, as trophies of their valor.

On the 19th the regiment was found in the trenches before Vicksburg, and they participated in that terrible and fatal charge made on the 22d of May. They were employed quite actively in the days of siege that lay before that place, and took a part in the ceremonies of the surrender on the glorious 4th of July, 1863. Immediately after that event, the regiment received marching orders and started for Jackson, taking a prominent part in the "second Teche campaign" and going as far as Opelousas. Returning over almost impassable roads and through mud and mire they took shipping at Algiers, on the 19th of November, for Brazos Santiago, Texas, where they received orders to reinforce the forces under Gen. Banks, at Arkansas Pass. While here, fresh orders were received sending them to Fort Esperanza, were they arrived too late to assist Gen. Washburne in reducing the enemy at that place. Three-fourths of the regiment having re-enlisted, they were relieved from duty on February 11th and mustered in as veterans on Feb. 13th. Those who did not see fit to re-enlist were transferred for the balance of their term of service to the 33d regiment. The veterans in accordance with the custom of the war department, were allowed to return home on furlough of thirty days, and they reached Madison, March 21st, and received a magnificent ovation from the hands of the State authorities and citizens of that city.

Having enjoyed themselves to the top of their bent, they returned, leaving the State on the 25th of April, and proceeded to Memphis. They afterward took part in the various expeditions in northern Mississippi and Alabama, and always received the commendation of their commanders for good and efficient service. The regiment was mustered out at Mobile, Ala., Sept. 4, 1865, and reached home on the 18th of that month and year. The company from Richland passed through many vicissitudes in its career with the regiment, losing many officers by death and resignation, so that Henry Toms, who left only as a corporal came back the captain, more by the law of promotion than for any gallant deeds, for where all were heroes none could be called the bravest and most gallant. They left many of their comrades sleeping in southern graves, to be remembered and talked of when the shades of night have settled over a resting world, and whose names are enshrined in every patriotic breast.

Company II, of the same regiment was partly raised in this county, and marching shoulder to shoulder with their comrades of company D, passed through the same experiences and participated in all the honor that hangs around the banners of the gallant 11th, a braver regiment than which never left the Badger State. Company I, 12th Wisconsin Infantry, was also raised in the county of Richland, which was intensely loyal during the entire course of the war. This fine regiment was mustered into the service during the fall of 1861, at Camp Randall, Madison, and Col. George E. Bryant made colonel. They left Madison, the 11th of January, 1862, with orders to report at Weston, Mo. They participated in all the engagements that led up to the siege of Vicksburg and were in at the submission of that rebel strong-hold, the reduction of which has been called "the crowning glory of the war in the valley of the Mississippi."

John Walworth

After the fall of that place, they were ordered to Natchez, Miss., where they remained until the 22d of November, 1863, when they proceeded by steamer up the Mississippi, and landing at Vicksburg, marched thence ten miles, northeast to Bovina station, where they went into camp on the 26th, as guard to the railroad near the Black river. Under orders to join an expeditionary force under Gen. Gresham, they broke camp at Bovina on the 4th of December, and proceeding down the river from Vicksburg, landed early in the morning of the 6th, at Natchez. Here they joined the other forces assigned to the expedition, and immediately marched in pursuit of Wirt Adams' rebel command. Failing to discover any considerable force of the enemy, they returned on the 8th to Natchez, remaining in camp at that place until the 21st, when they again marched on a scouting expedition to Fayette, Miss., from which they returned on the 23d, and went into camp on the Pine Ridge road, near the fortifications. Embarking at Natchez on the 23d of January, 1864, they landed at Vicksburg on the following day, and marching thence ten miles in a northeasterly direction, encamped on the 25th, at Hebron, where the 12th was re-organized as a veteran regiment.

Of 667 present with the regiment, 602 had been in the service upwards of two years, the remaining sixty-five having joined by enlistment since its organization. Five hundred and twenty of those whose term of service permitted re-enlisted, and were again mustered into the service for three years. Of the others, forty-eight promised to re-enlist on the expiration of two years from their respective dates of enrollment.

On the 3d of February, they left camp at Hebron, accompanying the celebrated Meridian expedition under command of Gen. Sherman. On the following day, they took part in the action at Bolton, Miss., with a loss of three killed and four wounded. The enemy was forced back a distance of two miles across Baker's creek, where the regiment repaired and held the bridge, until relieved on the morning of the 5th by the arrival of the third division. With the advance of the expedition, they marched through Jackson, Hillsboro and Decatur, to Meridian, and thence to Enterprise and Quitman, destroying the railroad track, bridges, store-houses, and other rebel property on their route. Returning by way of Decatur, Canton and Black river bridge, they re-entered camp at Hebron on the 4th of March, having marched in thirty-one days about 416 miles. The veterans of the regiment left Hebron on the 13th of March, and embarking at Vicksburg, proceeded up the Mississippi to Cairo, Ill., and thence by rail to Madison, Wis., where they arrived on the 21st. After a public reception at the capital by the State authorities and members of the Legislature, they remained at Camp Randall until the 31st, when the men received their pay and dispersed to their homes, in the enjoyment of veteran furlough.

The veteran 12th left the regimental rendezvous at Camp Randall on the 30th of April, and arrived on the 3d of May at Cairo, Ill., where they were joined by the non-veteran portion of the regiment, which had been left at Hebron, Miss. Accompanying the forces of Gen. Gresham, they embarked at Cairo on the 10th, with the first brigade, to which they had been transferred, and proceeding up the Tennessee river, landed on the 14th at Clifton, Tenn. They left Clifton next day, marching by way of Huntsville and Decatur, Ala., and Rome, Ga., a distance of nearly 300 miles, they joined the Army of the Tennessee, with Gen. Sherman's forces, at Aekworth, Ga., on the 8th of June. They moved forward to Big Shanty on the 10th, and next day formed line of battle, and charged two miles through the timber, capturing the first skirmish line of the enemy in front of Kenesaw Mountain, before which the regiment was constantly employed in picket and fatigue duty, with frequent engagements with the enemy, during the remainder of the month, sustaining a loss of thirty-four men in killed, wounded and missing.

Participating in Gen. McPherson's celebrated movement to the right of the army, they moved from position before Kenesaw Mountain on the evening of the 2d of July, and marching during the night by a circuitous route, took position near the Chattahoochie river, at the mouth of Nickajack creek. On the 5th, forming a part of our line, they advanced towards the creek, driving the enemy from a strong line of rifle pits and forcing him across the stream, to his main works. They fortified the point thus gained and advanced the picket line to the bank of the creek, occupying the position until the night of the 8th, when bridges were built and the skirmish line thrown across the stream, and established in rifle pits on the opposite bank. During the succeeding night, the enemy abandoned his entire works on the right bank of the Chattahoochie and fell back to the south side of the river. At this time the regiment was transferred to the first brigade, third division, seventeenth army corps, with which they were afterwards identified. On the 17th of July, they were again put in motion towards the left with the Army of the Tennessee. Crossing the Chattahoochie at Roswell's Mills, they passed through Decatur, on the Georgia railroad, six miles northeast of Atlanta, on the 19th, and crossing the railroad which they destroyed at this point, advanced on the following day towards Atlanta. Forcing back the enemy's skirmishers, as they advanced, they bivouacked in line during the night, and on the 21st, as part of a storming party, carried a high fortified ridge in front, about four miles from Atlanta, which they held, although suffering severely from an enfilading fire on the right, repulsing the enemy's repeated attempts to recover the position. In this action the 12th captured forty-eight prisoners and 500 stand of arms, sustaining a loss during the day of 154 in killed, wounded and missing.

During the night, the rebels evacuated their works on the right, which were next morning occupied by our troops. About noon, the enemy in great force fell upon the left of the line, outflanking and forcing back the fourth division, which held the extreme flank of our army, and pushing rapidly forward to position in rear and within 300 yards of the works occupied by the 12th Wisconsin. While passing forward to the assault, the sixteenth corps, which arrived at this juncture on the field of battle, fell in turn upon the rebel rear, and with the seventeenth corps, succeeded in capturing nearly the whole of the attacking force. The general commanding the brigade having been wounded early in the action, Col. Bryant took charge of the brigade, Lieut. Col. Proudfit assuming command of the regiment. During the conflict, the heroic 12th fought oftentimes in two wings, back to back, with the enemy on both fronts and one flank, one wing of the regiment being unprotected with works. They held their own, however, but the rebels continued the engagement outside of the works on the left and point of the ridge during the night, fighting often over the embankment at a distance of eight or ten feet, until near daylight, when they retired.

In the general movements of the army, as it closed upon Atlanta, they marched on the evening of the 26th, with the Army of the Tennessee around the rear of the Army of the Cumberland, which they joined on its right the next day, advancing by the left on the city. Having taken part in several skirmishes, as they advanced, the regiment bivouacked in line for the night. Next morning the forward movement was continued until at the noon halt; the rebels attacked the fifteenth corps, then about two miles in advance. The 12th, which was immediately ordered to their rescue, advanced on the double quick and outstripped all other re-enforcements, arriving just in time to meet and check the onset of the confederates, which had succeeded in outflanking our troops. Taking their position on the right, they were soon joined by other bodies of men, and "the battle was on once more" and raged with great fury until sunset, when the "Johnnies" withdrew from the field, their successive charges on our lines having met with great slaughter.

Next day the 12th was relieved, and for a change was set to doing picket and fatigue duty in the trenches before Atlanta, constantly exposed to the rebel fire until the 26th of August, when they set out with the Army of the Tennessee, marching toward Sand-town, on the right, but next day their direction was changed to the southeast, and on the 27th they arrived at Fairburn. Having destroyed the Atlanta & West Point railroad at this point, they again took up the forward movement, and on the 31st of July, they arrived at Jonesboro, twenty-two miles from Atlanta, on the Macon & Western railroad, having been engaged in heavy skirmishing as they took up their position, and they formed in line between the seventeenth and eighteenth corps. Shortly after noon, the enemy attacked in heavy force, and after a severe battle, were repulsed, our troops occupying the ground during the night. During the battle at this point, on the 1st of September, the regiment occupied position on the extreme right of the seventeenth corps and sustained but slight loss. Next day they marched in pursuit of the enemy, who had retreated during the night, leaving his wounded, with many stragglers, upon the field. Having advanced six miles to Lovejoy, where the rebels had occupied a new position, strongly fortified, the regiment was ordered forward and drove the enemy's skirmishers from a wooded hill, upon which they had been posted, to the main force, when line of battle was formed, in which the regiment retained position until the 5th. At this date, they marched on the return to Atlanta, near which they went into camp on the 8th, and remained until late in the fall.

But it would be needless to give all the history of this one of Wisconsin's most famous regiments, for it is well written in all the general histories of the war. Suffice it to say that after participating in all the campaigns around Atlanta, it took its way with the rest of Sherman's forces in that unparalleled march to the sea, and was, on the conclusion of hostilities, mustered out July 16, 1865, having suffered, while in the service, a loss of fifty-nine killed in action, thirty-two who died of wounds and 202 of disease.

Company B, 25th Wisconsin Infantry, was organized in July 1862. And on the 14th of September, at Camp Solomon, at Lacrosse, they were mustered into the service of the United States, with Col. Milton Montgomery as the head of the regiment and Captain W. H. Joslin as the commanding officer of the company. On the 19th of September they left the State with orders to report to Gen. John Pope, at St. Paul, Minn., to aid in suppressing the Indian difficulties in that State. After contributing to the preservation of tranquillity among the settlers, and airing the festive red-skin, they returned to the State and went into quarters at Camp Randall, where they arrived Dec. 18, 1862. Leaving there Feb. 17, 1863, for Cairo, whence they were taken to Columbus, Ky., and from there to join the army in the vicinity of Vicksburg. The regiment participated in the fatal mistake made by Sherman when he undertook to take the Yazoo bluffs, and had better success in the rear of Vicksburg. Here they remained, taking a hand in the trials and labors of that sanguinary siege, losing many a man from the diseases incident to that swampy ground. They enjoyed the spectacle of seeing the banner of the so-called Confederacy lowered from the heights of the city and the stronghold of strongholds delivered unto their keeping.

They soon received marching orders and proceeded to Helena, Ark., where they remained employed principally in provost duty, until the 1st of February, 1864, when they embarked, and proceeding down the Mississippi, landed on the following day at Vicksburg. Marching with the celebrated Meridian expedition, under command of Gen. Sherman, they left that place on the 3rd, and moving across the State of Mississippi, reached Meridian on the 14th. After waiting here for two days the march was resumed, and the regiment arrived on the 26th at Canton, having marched a distance of 275 miles from Vicksburg. They left Canton on the 1st of March, and marched to Vicksburg where they again went into camp, and remained until the 13th, when they again embarked, going up the Mississippi river to Cairo, arriving there on the 20th. Here they received orders to proceed to Columbus, Ky., and had proceeded part of the way when they were countermanded and they were ordered to return, which they did. Re-embarking they proceeded up the Tennessee to Clump's landing, where they landed and bivouacked for the night. On the following day they marched thirteen miles to Purdy, Tenn., having met and routed a body of rebel cavalry under Col. Wisdom. They returned to the transports and the next day resumed their progress up the river. On the 2nd of April they landed at Waterloo, Ala., and marched thence to Decatur, where they had a sharp skirmish with the enemy on the 17th. At this point the regiment was stationed for guard duty until May 1st, when they started on a march through Huntsville, to Chattanooga, Tenn., arriving there on the 5th. They immediately moved forward to join our forces under Sherman and formed into line at Resaca on the 9th of May, under the fire of the rebel guns.

From this time until the evacuation of Resaca, they were constantly under fire. They participated in the battles of the 13th, 14th and 15th of May. After the decamping of the "boys in gray" they were pushed forward in pursuit, skirmishing every day until the 26th, when within two and one-half miles of Dallas, when forming in line shortly before noon, they were engaged in skirmishing until evening, when they advanced through Dallas, which had been abandoned by the enemy, and bivouacked for the night a short distance south of the town. On the 27th, they advanced to the front, and were engaged during the three following days in heavy skirmishing with the enemy, repulsing his attacks upon the picket line with heavy loss.

They occupied position in the front line until the 1st of June, when they were withdrawn from the trenches before daylight, and participating in the general movement to the left to turn the rebel position at Allatoona Pass, marched six miles to Pumpkin Vine creek, near which they bivouacked for the night, and on the afternoon of the following day changed position a mile to the right, where they were attacked by the enemy's batteries, which were soon silenced by our artillery. Crossing the stream on the 3d, they advanced four miles, and having erected breast-works during the night, occupied the position until the afternoon of the 5th, when they moved four miles to the right. Next day they were again put in motion, and passing through Ackworth, encamped nearly a mile from the town, remaining until the 10th, when they advanced four miles, accompanying the army of the Tennessee in the movement to break the rebel lines between Kenesaw and Pine mountains. On the following day, taking the lead of the second brigade, they advanced two miles to the railroad, where line of battle was formed with the enemy on their flank and front. While holding this position, company C was detailed at three in the morning of the 12th, to build rifle pits in front, which they finished by daylight, and next day company D was employed in opening a road through the woods in their rear for more convenient access to the teams. In the evening companies C, H and K, occupied the front line of rifle pits, and on the 15th, companies B, D, F, G and I were thrown forward on the skirmish line, under command of Lieut. Col Rusk, the balance of the regiment taking possession in the evening, in the front line, whence they afterward moved forward to support the picket line against the anticipated advance of the enemy.

The enemy having abandoned his line on Lost Mountain, on the 17th, they advanced on the 19th across the rebel works in their front, and in the afternoon, advanced still farther towards Kenesaw Mountain, establishing position on the crest of a hill, which they proceeded to fortify. Here they were engaged in siege and fatigue duty, constantly exposed to the enemy's fire, until the morning of the 3d of July, when they were put in motion to accompany the movement of the Army of the Tennessee, on the right of our forces. Marching on the road between Kenesaw and Lost Mountains, they advanced three miles, where they constructed breastworks, and were ordered to support a battery, under heavy fire from the rebel artillery. They subsequently occupied the works in their front, which were abandoned by the enemy, and on the 5th continued the movement to the right. Marching on the Sandtown road, they encamped in the evening two and a half miles from the Chattahoochee river, remaining until the 7th, when they advanced two miles towards the river. They again moved on the 9th, and passing through Marietta, where they bivouacked for the night, forded the Chattahoochee on the following day, going into camp on the south side of the river.

Participating in the general advance of the army, they marched at noon on the 17th, and crossing the railroad next day, passed through Decatur on the 19th, encamping on the right of the Army of the Tennessee, in rear of Gen. Logan's command, on the following day. On the 21st, with a section of artillery, they moved back to Decatur, under orders to guard the flank of the army trains, and next day companies B, E, F and I, of the 25th, with four companies of an Ohio regiment, moved forward on a reconnoissance, the enemy having been reported in heavy force on their front. Companies D and G being detached on picket duty, the remaining companies, C, H and K, with a battery of artillery, under command of Maj. Joslin, were left in charge of the camp. The enemy having advanced in greatly superior force (two divisions of Wheeler's corps), Col. Montgomery's command fell back to camp, and after a gallant resistance, the whole force retired to the town, and subsequently half a mile beyond, where the advance of the rebels was finally checked. The train was saved, but the regiment sustained a loss of fifteen killed, fifty-seven wounded, twenty-five missing, and three prisoners, among the latter of whom was Col. Montgomery, who was also severely wounded. On the 23d, having buried the dead, and provided for the wants of the wounded, they marched through the town, and proceeding two miles on the Atlanta road, erected breastworks, and bivouacked until the 25th, when they advanced three miles, encamping in line, protected by breastworks.

They were thenceforward constantly occupied in the active duties of the siege, until the evening of the 26th, when they were put in motion, accompanying the movement of the Army of the Tennessee. Continuing the march, they struck the Atlanta and West Point railroad near Fairburn on the 28th, and having spent the next day in destroying the road, they resumed the march, on the morning of the 30th, and advancing towards the Macon railroad, bivouacked for the night near Jonesboro. They were next day present at the battle of Jonesboro, but were not actively engaged. On the 2d of September, they moved forward eight miles in pursuit of the retreating enemy, when they fortified a position near Lovejoy Station, and remained until the 6th, at which date the return march was commenced. They arrived on the 8th at East Point, six miles from Atlanta, on the Macon & Western railroad. They followed the flag and fortunes of that incomparable soldier, W. T. Sherman, to the sea, and were finally mustered out of the service June 7th, 1865.

THIRTY-SIXTH WISCONSIN INFANTRY, CO. II.

This regiment was recruited under the call of Feb. 1, 1864, for 500,000 men, was rapidly filled to the maximum, and organized under the superintendence of Col. Frank A. Haskell, previously adjutant of the 6th Wisconsin, whose muster into service as colonel dates from the 23d of March. After a short time employed in acquiring familiarity with their duties as soldiers, they left Camp Randall on the 10th of May. From Washington they proceeded on the 16th to the front, taking position on the 18th in the first brigade, second division, second army corps, the movements of which they have since accompanied.

It would be doing gross injustice to the gallant conduct of this, as well as other Wisconsin regiments, to attempt a detailed statement of their services, in the absence of the data furnished by a regimental report, but we will simply say that after participating in all the battles of the Army of the Potomac and James, and adding fresh laurels to the wreath of Wisconsin, they were mustered out July 12, 1865. A criterion of the trials of the regiment is the losses incurred while in the front, and is given by the official records as follows: Killed seventy-nine, died of wounds, forty-seven, died of disease, 170, and mustered out from physical debility and wounds, 214.

FORTY-SIXTH WISCONSIN INFANTRY, CO. II.

This regiment was organized and recruited under the call for volunteers for one year. The date of the muster-in was March, 1865. It participated in all the campaigns in Alabama and Tennessee, and was mustered out Sept. 25, 1865.

SIXTH WISCONSIN BATTERY.

The 6th Wisconsin Battery was principally recruited in the county of Richland, by Henry Dillon, of Lone Rock, afterwards elected captain, and Samuel F. Clark, of Prairie du Sac, afterwards senior 1st lieutenant; though it drew volunteers from the adjoining counties of Grant, Iowa, Dane and Columbia. It was the first to receive its full quota of men, and instead of being numbered as the 6th, it should have been the 1st; but those in charge by some inadvertence failed to follow the prescribed line of "red tape," it failed to get its appropriate number.

The organization was perfected at Lone Rock by the election of officers, on the 25th of September, 1861. Henry Dillon was elected captain, S. F. Clark and Thomas R. Hood 1st lieutenants, and John W. Fancher and Daniel T. Noyes 2d lieutenants. Capt. Dillon was a veteran of the Mexican War, having been a member of the celebrated Bragg's Battery, officered at the time by George H. Thomas, T. W. Sherman and John F. Reynolds, all of whom were afterwards major-generals in the Union army. Lieuts. Clark and Fancher had seen service, having been members of the 1st Wisconsin Infantry—three months' volunteers.

The battery was ordered to rendezvous at Camp Utley, Racine, and left Lone Rock on the 30th of September. At Racine it was mustered into the United States service on the 1st of October, by Capt. Trowbridge, U. S. A. Here it was expected the battery would soon be equipped and sent to the front; but this hope proved to be a futile one, as weeks passed and the troops were not even uniformed. The thought of having to spend the winter in common army tents, exposed to the rigors of a Wisconsin winter, was not a pleasant one. The troops were poorly supplied with blankets, and the approach of winter brought much suffering; but kind friends at home were not unmindful of the comforts of the battery boys, and from thence they were soon amply supplied with clothing. Despite the forbidding aspect of camp life in winter, there were too many attractions in the city for time to pass heavily, so the winter passed pleasantly and rapidly, and the approach of spring brought marching orders.

Left Racine on the 15th of March, 1862, for St. Louis, at which place stopped but two days, and proceeded under orders to New Madrid. Arrived at the latter place March 21st, and was temporarily assigned to Gen. John M. Palmer's division of Pope's corps. The siege of Island No. 10 was then in progress; and the battery being still unequipped for the field, was placed in charge of heavy guns at points along the river, to prevent re-enforcements or supplies from reaching the besieged army; and here they were engaged in several brisk skirmishes with the rebel gun boats.

After the surrender of Island No. 10, Capt. Dillon equipped the battery from a park of guns that had been left by rebels in their flight from New Madrid; and being furnished with horses, the organization was at last equipped for the field, though it remained in New Madrid, on garrison duty, until May 17th, when it embarked on transports, under orders, and proceeded up the Tennessee river to Hamburg landing, at which place it arrived on the 23d, and on the 26th moved to the main line investing Corinth, where, being assigned to Gen. Jeff. C. Davis' division, took up a position with Pope's besieging forces. After the evacuation of Corinth, joined in the pursuit of the retreating forces as far as Boonville, then returned to Rienzi, where it remained on garrison duty during the summer. Broke camp at Rienzi, October 1st, 1862, under orders to report to Gen. Hamilton at Corinth. Took part in the battle of Corinth, October 3d and 4th, going into battle with ninety-three effective men, and sustaining a loss of five killed, including one lieutenant, and twenty-one wounded. After the battle, had the ranks repleted by a detail of twenty-five men from the infantry, and joined in the pursuit of the retreating enemy, returning to Corinth on the 11th. Left Corinth November 2d, marching by the way of Grand Junction, Davis' Mills and LaGrange to Moscow, Tenn. Participating in the general southward movement of Grant's army, passed through Holly Springs and encamped at Lumpkins' Mills; thence followed in pursuit of the enemy, who, having been flanked by a column under Sherman, were evacuating their works on the Tallahatchie and retreating southward. Went as far as the Yocona river, south of Oxford, Miss., when the sacking of Holly Springs, cutting off the base of supplies, caused a retrograde movement. Returned to Lumpkins' Mills, whence one section under Lieut. Clark was sent to Memphis, as escort to a supply train. The remainder of the battery returned to Holly Springs, and thence moved to LaFayette, Tenn., where it was rejoined by the section under Lieut. Clark. On the 2d of January, 1863, went into winter quarters at Buntyn's Station, five miles east of Memphis. Embarked at Memphis, March 1st, and proceeded down the river to Grand Lake, Ark., but returned and encamped on a sand bar opposite the head of the Yazoo pass, four miles below Helena, Ark., whence moved as a part of the Yazoo pass expedition, moving down the pass on transports as far as Greenwood, being nine days in the descent. Disembarked April 3d, and the next day one section under Lieut. Clark moved out and opened on the rebel fortifications. Being ordered to return, re-embarked that night, and early next day set out on the return, reaching the former rendezvous on the 9th of April. Re-embarking on the 13th, proceeded down the river to Milliken's Bend, La. Left the latter place on the 25th, and marched across the peninsula, arriving at the river below Grand Gulf on the 30th. Crossed the river May 1st, taking up the line of march for Port Gibson, the advance being then engaged at Thompson's Hill.

The battery was placed in a position to prevent a flank movement, but did not become actively engaged. On the 2d, pursued the retreating enemy through Port Gibson, as far as Bayou Pierre, where further progress was checked by a burning bridge. The pursuit was resumed the next morning, the enemy making a stand near Willow Springs, where the battery silenced a rebel battery.

The enemy was driven across Black river, burning the bridge after them. On the 9th, resumed the march toward Jackson, participating in the battle of Raymond on the 12th and Jackson on the 14th, sustaining a loss of two wounded at the latter place.

Left Jackson next morning for Vicksburg, retracing our steps as far as Clinton, and on the 15th were again engaged on the hotly contested field of Champion Hills, sustaining a loss of two wounded. Followed the retreating forces to Black river, they destroying the bridge after them. Crossed the next day, and on the 19th reached the enemies fortifications surrounding Vicksburg. Took up a position at once and opened fire, being actively engaged every day during the siege, sustaining a loss of one killed and seven wounded.

After the surrender, remained in camp at Vicksburg until the 12th of September, when embarked on transports and proceeded up the river, under orders to re-enforce Gen. Steel at Little Rock, disembarking at Helena on the 15th. Little Rock being evacuated, remained in camp at Helena until the 26th, then embarked and proceeded up the river to Memphis. Left Memphis October 6th, under orders to report to Gen. Sherman at Glendale, Miss., from which place moved with the fifteenth army corps by the way of Inka, Miss., Florence, Ala., and Winchester, Tenn., to Chattanooga, arriving at the latter place on the 20th of November. Crossed the river above Chattanooga with Sherman's forces on the 24th, moving with the advance, and the same day one section was planted on the summit of Mission Ridge—the guns being drawn up by ropes—maintaining this position and being actively engaged throughout the battle of Mission Ridge. Joined in the pursuit on the 26th, following as far as Graysville, Ga., then returned to Chattanooga, where the guns were turned over to the ordnance officer, having been condemned as worn out in service, prior to leaving Vicksburg.

Left Chattanooga December 2d, and returned to Bridgeport, where remained in camp until the 22d; then moved to Larkinsville, Ala., remaining there from the 26th of December to the 7th of January, 1864; then marched for Huntsville, where on the 9th went into winter quarters, here being equipped with a new battery of 12-pound Napoleon guns. Remained in Huntsville, on garrison duty, until June, one section being in the meantime sent to Whitesboro, on the Tennessee river, where they occasionally exchanged a few shells with the rebel forces on the other side. Left Huntsville on the 22d of June for the front, where active operations were in progress for the reduction of Atlanta; moving by rapid marches to Stevenson. Left Stevenson by railroad on the 30th of June, reaching Kingston, Ga., on the 2d of July, and went into camp. Left Kingston July 11th, and next day took up a position in the fortifications on the Etawah river, near Cartersville, where it remained during the summer.

Those of the original organization who had not re-enlisted under the call for veteran re-enlistment, left Cartersville on the 26th of September, under orders to proceed to Madison, Wis., to be mustered out for expiration of service. Reached Chattanooga and found the railroad track was torn up and in possession of a rebel force; so remained in the cars at Chattanooga a week, leaving on the night of October 3d, and reached Madison on the 10th. Here on the 10th day of October, 1864, the old organization was mustered out of service.

After the departure of the "boys of '61" the company was re-organized as a four gun battery by Lieut. Simpson, the rolls indicating two commissioned officers and ninety-six members, forty of whom were re-enlisted veterans. But the force in camp numbered but thirty-four men. For the next month the battery continued to garrison Fort Etawah subject to all the activities, dangers and uncertainties incident to an outpost in front of manœvering armies. Their railroad connections were continually being broken, their commissary supplies being very limited, both horses and men subsisted largely on the country, which was infested with guerillas and rebel cavalry.

The terrible battle of Altoona Pass fought on the 5th of October was within sight and hearing of Fort Etawah, the battery was held in readiness but was not called into action. Immediately after the battle Lieut. Simpson was despatched to Nashville for fresh horses and such other supplies as would put the battery in moving condition. Failing in this mission, on the 1st of November, there remaining twenty-three horses fit for service, they were turned over to the 12th battery, and on the 10th of November the battery proceeded by rail to Nashville, arriving in time to take an active part in the defense of that town against Hood, who invested the city soon after their arrival. Without horses and guns of their own, the men were ordered from point to point, manning guns that were stationed by mule teams. Superintending the construction of artillery defenses, bearing muskets, handling ammunition, etc. etc. This campaign exposed the men to much suffering and many privations. Not until after the decisive battle of December 17th and 18th did they go into permanent quarters near Fort Gillem. Capt. Hood assumed command of the company, Nov. 29. On the 17th of February 1865, the company was ordered to Chattanooga and went into permanent quarters with the artillery reserve corps of that department. The company was filled up with with a transfer of about fifty men mostly from the 3d and 8th Wisconsin batteries and were fully equipped as a mounted battery, and were kept busy with camp and drill duties until the 26th of June, when they were ordered to the State to be mustered out—whence they immediately proceeded under Capt. Simpson, who assumed command on the resignation of Capt. Hood, May 21st. The company arrived in Madison, at 6, P. M., July 3d, whereupon the entire command "broke ranks" without orders. Very many of the boys were able to reach their homes in time to celebrate Independence Day. On July 6th, the company re-assembled at Madison and were formally mustered out of the service.

SECOND WISCONSIN CAVALRY

This regiment was organized March 12, 1862, with a total muster of 1,127 men, under the command of Col. C. C. Washburn, who was afterwards promoted to the rank of brigadier general; was engaged in the campaigns in Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. The movements of cavalry regiments are very difficult to follow, owing to the detached duty they are called on to perform. But it can be said of the 2d, that it never faltered when duty called, nor hesitated to follow when lead by its officers. The regiment was mustered out November, 1865, having lost during its campaigns: Killed in action, sixteen; died of wounds, four; died of disease, 265; died of accidents, 8; and a large loss by reason of discharges for disability.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE HONORED PIONEER DEAD.

In this chapter it is not the design to mention or to give a sketch of all the deceased pioneers of Richland county, but to briefly sketch the lives of some of those who have been called hence, to whom it has not been convenient to refer at length in other connections. Yet many of those who are here noted, of necessity receive attention elsewhere, as their deeds have indissolubly connected their names with the progress and development of Richland county, and therefore all matters treated of in this volume. Sketches of old settlers who are deceased, which do not appear in this chapter, will be found elsewhere, either in the town or general county history.

PIONEER DEAD.

Alexander Sires died at the residence of F. M. Stewart, in Henrietta, on the 11th of April, 1869, aged about seventy-three years. Mr. Sires was one of the first settlers in the northern part of Richland county. He laid out the village of Siresville, now Woodstock, and it was first named after him.

E. P. Young, one of the pioneers of Richland county, died at Richland Centre on the 24th of June, 1870. E. P. Young was of Quaker parentage. He was born in the State of New Jersey, in 1798. When about eleven years of age he emigrated with his parents to the then "far west," and settled in Knox county, Ohio. Here he continued to reside until 1852, when he removed to Richland City, Wis. Three or four years later he came to Richland Centre, where he spent the evening of his days. When about thirty years of age, under the ministry of that eminent divine, Rev. James Scott, he united with the Presbyterian Church, and for nearly forty years, at Frederickstown, Ohio, at Richland City and Richland Centre, he was a ruling elder in the house of God. He held the respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends, and his death, while not unexpected, was sincerely mourned.

On the 11th of December, 1870, John Worth, an old and highly esteemed resident of Ithaca, died.

David Jaquish died at the residence of his son in Madison, in April, 1875. Mr. Jaquish was a pioneer and a veteran. He has served as a soldier in the war of 1812. For over twenty years his home was in Richland county, at the time of his death, being a resident of the town of Ithaca. He was eighty-three years old.

On Saturday, May 22, 1875 D. A. Johns, of the town of Eagle, after getting into his wagon to drive home from Richland Centre, was taken with an apoplectic fit. He was carried home the same evening insensible and died the following day, May 23, 1875. Mr. Johns was seventy-seven years of age, and had been a resident of Richland county for twenty-two years. He was an industrious peaceable citizen, much esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances for his social qualities and uniformly upright life. He left an aged wife and several children. Thus passed to his rest another of the pioneers of Richland county, whose industry had provided a good home for his family, and left an example worthy of memory and imitation.

Died—on the 30th of August, 1875, Michael Ghormley, one of the oldest settlers in the town of Henrietta, aged seventy-nine years. He left a wife in her eighty-sixth year, one son, James Ghormley, and many other relatives and friends to mourn his loss. He was beloved by all who knew him. He was noted for his piety and Christian example, and died as he lived—a Christian.

Morris Sexton died in the town of Buena Vista, March 1, 1876, of paralysis, aged sixty-two years. Mr. Sexton was a native of the State of New York. He came to Wisconsin in 1849, and made a settlement at what is now known as the village of Sextonville, the place being named in honor of him as its founder. He erected and opened the first house of public entertainment on the Black river road north of the Wisconsin river. There his native energy and enterprise found ample opportunity for development in making improvements, laying out roads and inducing emigration. Being well adapted to pioneer life, he seemed much attached to its excitements and highly enjoyed its various duties and responsibilities, and secured the confidence and esteem, by his uniform kindness and liberality to the needy, of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Though past the meridian of life, he still fondly cherished the remembrance of his pioneer experience and as infirmity and reverses had cast a shade over his prospects he naturally sought sympathy with nature in the hope of finding again some of the bright days of his pioneer life, and in 1873 he removed to Barron county in the northwest part of the State. About three weeks before his death Mr. Sexton came here in company with his wife to visit his old home and many friends. Here his health which had been for some time impaired, entirely failed, and, as stated, he died on the 1st of March.

During the early part of September, 1876, the following pioneers died:—Alexander Chisholm, and Mrs. M. Copenheifer, of Fancy Creek, and Willis P. Breese, of Orion.

Miles Randall died in the town of Willow, Jan. 9, 1877, aged fifty-seven years. Mr. Randall was one of the early settlers of the county, having moved here with his family in 1855. He had been an invalid for seven years previous to his death, and had not been able to even feed himself.

Henry B. DeHart, of the town of Bloom, died on the 3d of January, 1877, aged seventy years. Mr. DeHart had been a resident of the town of Bloom for about twenty-two years, having with his family located there when it was a wilderness, and had cheerfully borne the burdens incident to pioneer life. He was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. He left a mother-in-law, eighty-one years of age, and three sons.

Jacob Simons died at his residence near Sairs mills, July 14, 1877, aged eighty-five years. "Father" Simons, as he was called, was born in the State of New York. He came to Wisconsin in 1842 and became a resident of Richland county. He had been a professor of religion for sixty-three years, of the Disciple Church. He was a consistent Christian, lived what he professed, and died in the assurance that his work on earth was well done. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. His funeral took place at Woodstock and was conducted by Rev. G. G. Hamilton.

John C. Davis, another of the pioneers, died in the town of Rockbridge, Oct. 14, 1877, aged fifty-one years. Mr. Davis resided in this county for over twenty years. In 1864 he went into the army, was assigned to company K, 17th Wisconsin regiment, and went with Gen. Sherman in his march to the sea. While in the service he contracted a disease from which he never recovered and which was evidently the cause of his last sickness and death. Mr. Davis was much esteemed by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

William H. Downs died Nov. 5, 1877. Mr. Downs was born near Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1819, and had only such opportunities of education as the new country afforded at that time; but these he improved to the best advantage. He made choice of the carpenter and joiner's trade as his occupation, and in early life he settled at Bellefontaine, Ohio, and resided there while he remained in that State. In 1855, in company with a number of other families (most of whom are still residents here), he came to this county with his family, and located where Richland Center now is, and took an active part in all the improvements and interests of the growing town, which at times seemed destined to struggle hard for even a subsistence, but in all these trials and hardships he was always actively engaged for the general good, hopeful and cheerful. In 1861, when the War of the Rebellion was inaugurated and a call was made by President Lincoln for volunteers to preserve the Union, Mr. Downs was among the first to enroll his name to defend the flag of our Nation and perpetuate our constitutional compact. He was assigned to the 25th regiment of Infantry, in which he soon received the appointment of quartermaster, in which capacity he served about three years, much to his own credit and the general satisfaction of the regiment, showing excellent qualification for the office. In the second year of the war he consented that his only son should enroll his name as a volunteer, and was received as a drummer; but Eddie's career was only a few months, for he died in camp quite suddenly from some disease which seemed not to be fully understood by the surgeons. This was a sad and heartfelt bereavement to the family, and especially to Mr. Downs—a sacrifice which he laid upon the altar of his country that few could appreciate, a sacrifice of priceless value, and doting parents only could realize its magnitude. The loss of his only son and the long exposures of camp life were obviously preying upon the health and constitution, which had until then seemed to be proof against all hardships, and it was necessary to seek for rest and some recuperative process to sustain life, and he accordingly returned to his home, but he never seemed to regain that strength of body and vivacity of mind which were so peculiar to him in former years. The seeds of disease were evidently sown in the constitution, which medical skill could not eradicate. The community was greatly startled and thrown into profound sorrow Monday, Nov. 5, 1877, at the news that one of the oldest and most prominent citizens had passed away very suddenly while sitting in his chair. While it was well known that he was in feeble health, and that he might pass away at any time, none anticipated that his disease would culminate so suddenly. But two days before his death he was about as usual. He seemed to realize his feeble condition greater than did any who surrounded him, for in his memorandum of the previous Thursday he wrote: "My last day at the office." And true enough it was the last! Some years before, he had a partial stroke of paralysis, from which he never fully recovered, and since which time he had been subject to bad spells. Mr. Downs has held several offices of trust, with honor to himself and profit to his fellow citizens. For some years he held the office of postmaster in this village, and soon after his return from the army he was elected as justice of the peace, not more by the sympathies of his fellow citizens than a conviction of his unquestioned integrity and qualifications for the discharge of the duties of the office, which he held until his decease. In the several relations of life Mr. Downs was much esteemed. As a neighbor he was kind and obliging; in his friendships, true and charitable; in his family, considerate and indulgent. His home was a sanctum of rest. Though not a member of any particular Church, he was a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines and promises of Christianity, and often expressed a consoling prospect of that better life where sorrow, disease and death never reach the happy spirits of the redeemed. His funeral was largely attended. The interment was conducted by the Masonic order, with its usual services and ceremonies, as he was for many years a worthy and esteemed member of that ancient and honorable fraternity.

Jacob Krouskop died at the residence of his son-in-law, J. L. R. McCollum, in Sextonville, Feb. 7, 1878. One by one the old land marks of the county passed away. Jacob Krouskop was born in one of the eastern States in 1800. He passed the most of his early life in Bellefontaine, Ohio, from whence he came, in the spring of 1851, with a large family to Richland Co. Wis., and settled at Sextonville. With characteristic energy, he erected a saw-mill there, the first in that region, and soon afterward a grist mill. In speaking of him, Rev. J. E. Irish, who had known him since his first settlement in Wisconsin, said:

"At that time the entire region where Richland Centre now is, was an unbroken wilderness. Bringing with him the experience and fruits of a laborious life in Ohio, Mr. Krouskop was prepared to lay more broadly the foundation of a goodly estate here, and the result has been far more satisfactory than has fallen to the lot of most men. His prudence and sagacity, together with that of his faithful wife, who lingers on the shore behind him, were crowned with ample success. His enterprising sons and sons-in-law, known far and near as successful business men, have continued to seek his counsel in his declining years.

"Mr. Krouskop has been a member of the M. E. Church for over half a century. On his removal west, he united his religious fortunes with the feeble society at Sextonville, with which he has ever since been connected. His aid and counsel have always been of value. Not of a very demonstrative nature, yet in the social meetings with his brethren his heart often melted with tenderness as he talked of Jesus, and his power to save. His last sickness was short and painful, but with an unfaltering trust in Jesus' blood, he went hence.

"The funeral was an occasion of great interest and was attended by a very large concourse. The circle of relatives alone was large enough to nearly fill the church, while the citizens turned out en masse to testify their respect to his memory. The writer was called from a distant field of labor to preach the sermon, having been an acquaintance of the family since their first settlement in the State.

"Father Krouskop was laid to rest in the peaceful cemetery among the hills, side by side with some of his kindred who had passed on before him, and in near proximity to others with whom he had often worshipped in this changing world. Together, we trust, they now rejoice before the throne."

Zachariah Hale died in the town of Orion, on the 6th of March, 1878, aged fifty-three years. The deceased was born in Marion Co., Ind. He came to and cast his lot with friends in Richland county in 1856, and resided here until the time of his death. His amiable disposition and unflinching integrity gained for him many friends. He left a large circle of relatives to mourn his loss.

Martin Banker died in the town of Rockbridge, on the 14th of March, 1878, aged eighty years. Mr. Banker was another of the pioneers of the county, having settled here in 1853.

Capt. J. G. S. Hayward, an old, well known and prominent citizen of Richland county, died at his home in the town of Eagle, on the 3d day of May, 1878. Mr. Hayward was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 11, 1819. He emigrated to Wisconsin in 1854, and settled in the town of Richwood, now Orion. He soon after removed to and settled in the town of Eagle, where he lived until the time of his death. He was one of the most useful and highly esteemed citizens. "The death of so good a man is always to be regretted." Mr. Hayward was ever ready to help all the interests, either public or private, in his neighborhood. He embraced the faith in Christ in 1843, and since that time he has exemplified the Christian life, which enabled him to bear his afflictions without a murmur, and to meet death without a struggle. He left a wife, two children and five grandchildren to mourn his loss.

Daniel Householder died at his home, in the town of Bloom, in August, 1878. Mr. Householder had lived in Richland county almost a quarter of a century, coming here from Ohio in about 1854. At the time of his death he had reached the extreme old age of ninety-nine years.

Henry J. Smith died in the town of Richland, on the 30th day of September, 1878, aged fifty-nine years. He died of a cancer, after lingering and suffering intensely for eight months. Mr. Smith was one of the early settlers of the county, having settled here in 1851. He was an industrious, peaceable and respected citizen, and his memory will be long cherished by his many friends.

Joshua Ewing died in the town of Sylvan, Jan. 26, 1879, of heart disease, aged seventy years. Mr. Ewing was born in Maryland; but he came west at an early day and settled in Richland county. He was a member of the Methodist Church for nearly half a century, and was a man who held the respect and esteem of all. He left a large family to mourn his loss.

On the 29th of January, 1879, in the town of Rockbridge, Morris Freeman died, aged seventy-six years. Mr. Freeman was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., where he remained until 1846, when he came to Wisconsin and settled for a time in Waukesha county. In 1855 he removed to Richland county with his family, and located in the town of Rockbridge, where he lived until the time of his death. He raised a family of six children, five of whom survived him. As a neighbor, a friend and a worthy citizen, he was much respected, and, as was said in his obituary, "as he leaves us, we feel deeply that another land-mark and pioneer of the county has passed to that land from whence no traveler returns."

On the 6th of April, 1879, James Dowling, an old and highly respected citizen of the town of Westford, was killed by an accident. His son was cutting down a tree, Mr. Dowling being near by. When the tree fell a limb struck him on the back of the head, killing him instantly.

Thomas Kinney died at his residence in Richland Center, on the 6th of April, 1879, aged seventy-seven years. Mr. Kinney was one of the early pioneers of Richland county. He was born in Nova Scotia in 1801. He moved to Canada West in 1838, to Waukesha Co., Wis., and to Richland county, where he has since lived, in 1853. He left an aged companion and several grown children. He was a highly respected citizen.

Cornelius McCarthy, an old citizen of Richland county, died at his home in the town of Henrietta, on the 14th of September, 1879. Mr. McCarthy was a resident of the county for twenty-seven years. During the war he served with distinction in the army, and was severely wounded in the battle of Bayou Cache, Arkansas.

Martin Munson, aged sixty-two years, died at his residence in the town of Akan, Oct. 21, 1879, after having been confined to his bed for over two months. He was born March 1, 1817, in Norway; emigrated to this country in 1849, and in 1850 settled in the town of Akan, Richland county, where he lived until the time of his death. His early days here were a life of toil and hardship. Accompanied by two other families, they drove their teams as far as Port Andrew, and from there carried their household goods, including stoves, some seven or eight miles, as it was impossible to drive the team through the woods. His death was widely regretted. He was held in high esteem not only by his own countrymen but by all who knew him.

William W. Garfield died at his home in the town of Henrietta, on the 25th of October, 1879, aged seventy-two years. Mr. Garfield was a native of Vermont, but came west at an early day, settling with his family in Richland county in 1853. He was a man of sterling integrity and worth, in every walk of life which he trod.

The Richland County Republican, in announcing the death of Joseph Benton, Sr., a pioneer, which occurred July 14, 1880, makes the following expressive remarks:

"The old citizens of Richland county are fast passing away. Within the past three or four years a very large per cent. of the early settlers of the county have passed to that other and brighter shore. The latest death which we have been called upon to announce, is that of one of the best men who ever crossed to America's shore—Joseph Benton, Sr., who died at his residence in the town of Marshall, July 14, 1880, after a protracted illness of twelve months, who had reached the ripe age of seventy-seven years and two months. Mr. Benton was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, April 20, 1803; emigrated to America in 1834, settled in Ohio, and lived there until 1855, when he removed to Wisconsin and settled on Fancy creek, town of Marshall, Richland county, where he resided until the time of his death. He was one of the early pioneers of the county, and contributed his means and energy to develop the resources of the county. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and died with the hope of a better life beyond the confines of time. The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. M. Leonard. A large concourse of his neighbors followed him to his last resting-place, thereby showing their appreciation and respect for his memory. He leaves three sons and one daughter, and an aged widow, to mourn their irreparable loss."

"John Fogo, one of the pioneer settlers, and a well-known citizen died at his home on Fancy creek, on Friday, Sept. 1, 1876. Mr. Fogo was born in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1799, and was at the time of his death about seventy-seven years of age.

"He received the elements of a good education in the parish school, which he attended until twelve years of age. He was then apprenticed as a weaver, and while learning his trade he enjoyed, among other means of improvement, free access to the parish library, of which he made good use, storing up its contents in a memory wonderfully retentive. Gifted with a mind of extraordinary capacity, which was thus cultivated to the highest degree, and in the broadest sense of education, at that period he laid the foundation of his great knowledge of history, both ancient and modern, which remained with him until the day of his death.

"He came with his parents to America in 1820, and settled in Columbiana Co., Ohio, and was among the early pioneers in that section. At the time of his settlement in Ohio, it was a new and wild country—the foot-prints of the savage were barely cold.

"He removed to Wisconsin in 1853, bringing with him a large family of young children, and settled on Fancy creek, where he has ever since resided, and again passed through the labors and struggles incident to opening up a new country. He was preceded in his settlement on Fancy creek by only three or four families. From that time he has been well known in the county. By his neighbors he was honored and beloved, and he was held in great esteem by all who knew him. He has repeatedly been honored by his fellow-townsmen with many offices of honor and trust. He aided in the organization of the town of Marshall; was its first chairman, which office he held for sixteen years consecutively, always being elected without opposition.

"During his whole life he has been a constant attendant upon the preaching of the gospel in the Presbyterian Church, in which he was born and baptized. In that Church he has been a member in full communion for a number of years past. He always had a firm conviction in the divine inspiration and truth of the Scriptures, and believed in their inculcations, in order to sustain pure society and a prosperous government. In the close of life, by faith in God, through the Scriptures, he found submission to the Divine will, with peace and joy. Mr. Fogo was remarkably genial in his disposition, and his society was highly prized by those who delight in conversation that is intelligent and full of information. Many persons have enjoyed his company for an hour, or hours in a very pleasant and profitable manner.

"He leaves to mourn his loss, a companion, with whom he lived nearly half a century. Also eight sons and daughters, all of whom, except one living in Minnesota, are settled in families in the neighborhood, and were around his dying bed.

"The deceased was a great sufferer for the past few years, but his final end was free from pain and suffering. He passed away as calmly as the falling asleep of an infant.

"Thus has passed away, at the ripe age of nearly four score years, another of our early pioneers—a man whose honesty and integrity was religion, and whose greatest heritage to his descendants is his exemplary life and untarnished honor."—[From the Richland county Republican and Observer.

In the Republican and Observer of Feb. 10, 1881, appears the following item which explains itself:—"We notice an announcement of the death of W. P. Furey, who will be remembered by the older residents of the county, as the founder of the first democratic paper published in the county—The Democrat. This paper, we believe was established in 1859, and was published for about a year. The senior editor of the Republican and Observer, W. M. Fogo, set his first type under the direction of Mr. Furey. After he left here he went to Darlington, from there to Iowa and thence back to Pennsylvania, his native State. For years we had lost track of him. Following is the notice of his death referred to:

"We regret to announce the death of William P. Furey, of Altoona, Penn., which occurred at San Antonio, Texas, in January, 1881. Mr. Furey was originally from Mauch Chunk, Penn., and was a printer by trade. He came west in 1858, and worked for a short time in Darlington, in a printing office which was started there before it was made the county seat. During the winter of 1858—9 he went to Warren, Ill., and worked for a few months in what is now the Sentinel office, and it was while there we first became acquainted with him. He afterward married a sister of Rev. Mr. Safford, now of Darlington. After remaining a number of years in the west he went back to Pennsylvania and engaged in the publishing business at Altoona. About a year ago his health began to fail, being attacked by that dread disease consumption. A month or two ago, accompanied by his wife, he went to San Antonio, Texas, hoping that the salubrious climate of that part of the country might prove beneficial to him, but he had hardly reached the place before the grim messenger called for him."—(Platteville Witness, Feb. 3, 1881.)

Jonathan Totton, one of the old settlers of the town of Marshall, died quite suddenly on Feb. 14, 1881. Mr. Totton was born in Washington Co., Penn., in March 1802, and was therefore nearly eighty years of age at the time of his death. He removed to Ohio at an early day, and in 1855 came to Richland Co., Wis., and settled on Fancy creek where he remained until the time of his death. Mr. Totton had been a member of the Disciple Church for over forty years. He was a very conscientious, upright and honest citizen, and highly esteemed by his neighbors and friends.

Isaac McMahan, an old citizen of the town of Bloom, died March 14, 1881, after a painful illness extending over a period of three years, of cancer. Mr. McMahan was born in Ohio, and at the time of his death was seventy-four years of age. He was truly a pioneer of Richland county, having removed here and settled in the town of Bloom in 1853.

Myron C. Pease, an old and esteemed citizen of Richland Center, died of typhoid pneumonia, on the 18th of April, 1881. Mr. Pease was born in Weston, Vt., April 17, 1842. He came to Richland Center with his parents in 1857, and resided here until the time of his death. In 1864 he was married to Emma, second daughter of C. W. Huntington, and his widow and two children survive him. The Republican and Observer in speaking of his sad death said: "Mr. Pease has been actively identified with the business interests of Richland Center, ever since he has been old enough, and has pushed steadily forward mastering the small details as well as the more comprehensive affairs of a large and growing business. For a while he was associated with his brothers in the retail trade, but afterwards engaged in the wholesale notion business for himself, for a number of years. At the time of his death he was traveling for a Chicago wholesale house. The same warm, generous, impulsive nature, which as a school boy made all who knew him, love and admire him, was manifested in his associations; for with advancing years his genial qualities became broader and deeper until it became almost an unwritten law in the business and social circles in this community that Myron C. Pease was the soul of honor. Ever ready with a kindly word, or his purse, he was never appealed to in vain for a good cause. To his family and friends and indeed to all, this character was like sunshine, and by its truth and brightness, it was a guide. To all men he was the same and to those who were in trouble or in need and appealed to him, he gave good counsel and what assistance was needed, for his was a helping hand."

Samuel Davis, an old and honored citizen of the county, died at his home in the town of Ithaca, April 17, 1881, of paralysis of the heart, aged eighty-one years. "Father" Davis, as he was usually called was born in Washington county, Penn., Oct. 27, 1799. He moved to Wayne Co., Ohio with his parents at an early day, and in March, 1845 removed to Indiana. He removed from that State to Wisconsin, ar-iving at Spring Green, June 13, 1855, and during the same year he moved to Willow creek, Richland county, where he resided until the time of his death. Father Davis was a good neighbor and an honorable citizen.

Mrs. Thomas Mathews, one of the very earliest settlers in the county died at her home in Orion on the 23rd of August, 1881. Mrs. Mathews was born in Illinois in 1825, and came to Wisconsin in 1839. In 1840 she was married to Thomas Mathews, who survives her, and in 1842, they settled in Orion, where they have since lived.

William Recob, an old and respected citizen of the town of Eagle, died on the 9th of September, 1881, of paralysis, with which he had been afflicted for over four years. Mr. Recob settled in the town of Eagle in 1854. When the call was issued for volunteers at the breaking out of the Rebellion, Mr. Recob was among the first to respond, and left his home and family, like thousands of others, to save his country and government. He served his term faithfully, and received an honorable discharge. He was present at the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox, and received injuries from which he never recovered, but the effects continued to increase on him with advancing age until he was rendered entirely helpless, and continued so until death relieved his sufferings. His funeral was attended at Pleasant Hill church by a large number of sympathizing friends. The services were conducted by Rev. John Walworth, the sermon being founded on Job xix., 24-25, the text chosen by the deceased.

Randolph L. Carver, postmaster at Port Andrew, was found dead at the water's edge of the Wisconsin river. The facts elicited at the coroner's inquest, in regard to his death, were substantially as follows: Mr. Carver arose early in the morning, ate his breakfast, waited upon several callers at the postoffice, talked with several persons, and was apparently in usual health. He was last seen alive walking toward the river with an ax in his hand. In less than ten minutes afterward his son saw a railroad tie floating in the water. He went down to get it out, and found his father lying with his feet in the water—dead. Others saw him at almost the same instant. The verdict of the jury was that he died of heart disease. Mr. Carver was an old and respected citizen. He settled at Port Andrew in 1854, and was postmaster for over twenty years. He was always obliging in the discharge of his official duties, and was ever willing to lend a helping hand to those in need. He was fifty-eight years old. He left a wife and three children to mourn his sudden death.

In 1849 Mr. Wallace brought his family to the United States, locating in Ohio, where they resided until 1853, when they came to Richland Co., Wis. In 1865 the wife and mother died, since which time the old gentleman had resided with his son, John Wallace, of Lone Rock.

At the outbreak of the war in 1861, he joined, upon its organization, the company known as the Richland Plowboys, and which afterwards became company D, of the 11th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He remained with the company until compelled by disease to get a discharge, and took part with the regiment in the campaign in Missouri and Arkansas, in the summer of 1862. After his discharge he returned home and again took up the pursuits of civil life. For a number of years prior to his death he was unable to do any kind of labor, owing to disease and infirmities. He was an honest man—lived respected and died regretted.

The following is a list of the pioneers who died during 1881: William Akan, William Re-cob, Myron C. Pease, Mrs. Thomas Whiteraft, Mrs. John Fogo, Mrs. Clarisa Shaanon, Amos Poff, German Tadder, R. L. Carver, C. W. Jones, Elizabeth Allen, Ann Finnegan, Emma M. Har-ter, Mrs. Samuel McMillan, Almeda E. Gress, Samuel Davis, Mrs. H. H. Barnard, Dama Dewey, Peter Welsh, Mrs. W. F. He moved with his family to Richland county in the spring of 1855 and settled in the town of Orion, where he resided until the time of his death. munity for many years. His aged and estimable partner in life passed to that other shore ten years in advance of him. Mr. and Mrs. McMillan reared a family of four sons and five daughters. Two sons were killed in the army; one has since died, and the other, Joseph, is still a resident of Orion. The daughters are—Mrs. James McClaren, Mrs. John Rue, Mrs. Joseph Privott and Mrs. S. Sherman, of the town of Orion; and Mrs. D. E. O. Bird, of Dakota.

1852, he was married to Sarah A. Vanpool. He lived two years in Belmont Co., Ohio, and then removed to Richland county, where he remained until the time of his death. He left a wife, twelve children, eight grandchildren, seven brothers and sisters and many kind friends to mourn his death.

CHAPTER XV.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

As to who was the first disciple of Galen and Hippocrates to locate in the pristine days of Richland county's history, has been a work of much difficulty to gather, but a desire for historical accuracy, and a diligent research in the annals of the past, have developed the fact that, Dr. Hartsborn has the honor of being the pioneer of that profession. He came into Richland county as early as 1848 from Illinois and settled at what was then called Gage's (later Law's) ferry, on the Wisconsin river. He remained until 1850 or 1851, when he left for parts unknown.

Dr. Henry McNelly was the second physician to locate within the limits of Richland county. Dr. McNelly was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1821. In 1830 he removed with his parents to Clinton Co., Ind. In 1843-4 he studied medicine, and until 1849 he practiced in Indiana. July 4, 1849, he started for Wisconsin, and in August of the same year he located in Orion, Richland county. Here he remained many years, practicing his profession, but moved to the village of Richland Center in 1861 and remained there a short time, removing from thence to the southern part of the county again. He is now in Dakota.

Dr. D. L. Downs located at Orion in February, 1850. That place remained his home until December, 1858, when he removed to Richland Center, where he still lives. He has been a very prominent man in all public affairs; has held various offices of trust and is the present county judge.

Dr. Jacob Brimer came to the county during the year 1850, locating at Orion, where he remained until the fall of 1873, when he removed to Richland Center, and has continued to reside there ever since, in the practice of his profession.

Dr. Charles B. Pierson located at Richland City in 1851, where he remained until 1865. He was assistant surgeon of the 38th Wisconsin Infantry during the late unpleasantness. He now resides at Spring Green, Sauk Co., Wis., and is a gentleman of culture and a physician of much prominence.

Dr. Bailey located at Sextonville, and Dr. L. Nichols at Richland City, and Dr. Sippy near Ithaca, during the year 1853. In 1854 Dr. LeRoy D. Gage came to Richland Center as the postmaster, but practiced the profession of medicine at the same time. He was the first physician in the village in point of time. He remained at that place until August, 1870, when he ended a useful and valuable life by committing suicide.

Dr. Byers also made his appearance in the county during 1854, locating at the county seat, where he remained until 1858, when he, thinking to better his condition, moved to Baraboo.

In the same year a Dr. Carpenter settled at the town of Rockbridge.

Dr. Wallace located at Richland Center during the fall of 1855, but staid in the county but about six months.

In 1856 Dr. Drewett came to Richland Center but remained only until the next spring.

Dr. Henry Priest came to Richland Center in 1857, and remained there until 1862, when he returned to Greencastle, Ind., from whence he had come. During the same year Dr. Castle located at Lone Rock, and Dr. O. H. Wood at the Center. The latter gentleman remained in the county some years; was a surgeon in the 23d regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, during the Rebellion; removed to Missouri on its close, and was killed by a railroad accident near Brookfield, Mo., March 1, 1881.

A Doctor McLane, located at Richland Center in 1856 or 1857, but on account of poor health was compelled to give up practice, after about six months, and left the county.

Dr. E. W. Beebe was a very prominent physician who made his appearance at the county seat during the year 1859. Here he remained until 1864 when he went to Evansville, and in 1879, removed to Milwaukee. He is now noted as one of the most eminent specialist physicians in the State, treating all diseases of the eye and ear.

Dr. W. W. Stewart came to the Center in 1863, staid but one year and returned to Loyd. He is now located at Lake Shetock, Wisconsin.

Dr. A. W. Bickford, made his debut in the county at Richland Center in 1864 and has continued in constant practice ever since. The doctor is well known as a very public spirited citizen and has been a member of the village board and held other offices, and is now traveling in California for the benefit of his health, which has suffered by a too close application to the most arduous of professions.

Dr. McIntosh became one of the physicians of Richland Center in 1863, and remained for some time.

Dr. G. R. Mitchell, now a resident physician came to the Center in 1869.

Dr. H. J. Wall first located in the village of Richland Center in the fall of 1875, and the present moment still finds him there, enjoying a lucrative practice.

Dr. J. E. Marsh came to the Center in April, 1882, remained about six months and then left. He is now located at Medford, Wis.

TOWN OF BLOOM.

The town of Bloom in 1884 had five physicians; Drs. O. Houts, Mrs. Field and Adam Shambaugh, located at Spring Valley; and Drs. J. H. Helm and A. B. Cole, who are located at West Lima.

Dr. O. Houts is a native of Richland county, born Nov. 11, 1852, in the town of Orion. He has always been in the county, and is among the best of the medical profession. In 1869 he commenced reading medicine with Adam Shambaugh, commenced practice in the town of Forest the year following, where he remained until 1880, when he removed to Spring Valley, where he is now located, and deservedly has a lucrative practice. In 1876 he was married to Anna Shambaugh, who was born in 1851. They have had two children—Virtner, who died in 1879, and G. W. J., now one year old. In 1880 Mr. Houts attended the Bennett Medical College, of Chicago, from which institution he is a regular graduate. His parents, Levi and Sarah Houts, are among the pioneer settlers of Richland county, now living in the town of Orion, and are mentioned more at length in the history of that territory. The doctor now has a pleasant location in Spring Valley, and is fully engaged in the practice of his chosen profession; has the respect and confidence of the public generally.

Adam Shambaugh, one of the early settlers, of Richland county, was born Feb. 12, 1817, in Cumberland Co., Penn., where he resided five years, when his parents removed to Montgomery Co., Ohio, and resided there until 1826; thence to Fountain county, and remained only three years; thence to Tippecanoe Co., Ind., where he learned the joiner's trade, and received his schooling. He studied arithmetic eleven days, and grammar seven days. This constituted his school education; yet by perseverance and industry, Mr. Shambaugh has acquired for himself a good education. In 1854 Mr. Shambaugh moved to Boone Co., Ind., where he engaged in merchandising two years and then removed to Richland Co., Wis., and first settled in the town of Forest, and entered 120 acres of land on section 2, which he sold in 1857, and removed to the town of Bloom, and there engaged in farming, merchandising, preaching and practicing medicine. Mr. Shambaugh has a complete stock of drugs, also a one-half interest in a dry goods and general store, in company with A. Householder. Mr. Shambaugh was married in 1850 to Sarah Shambaugh, who was born Dec-22, 1825, in Perry Co., Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Shambaugh have one child—Sarah A., who is now the wife of Dr. O. Houts. Mr. Shambaugh has been a member of the United Brethren Church for the past fifty years and has been preaching for the past thirty-five years, and has practiced medicine since 1856, since he came to Richland county. Mr. Shambaugh has converted over 2,500 persons to a belief in religion; and has been a great benefactor to the people of Richland county, in many ways. He has taken one family paper fifty years in succession.

Dr. John H. Helm was born Sept. 7, 1842, in Delaware Co., Ind. He lived in his native county till 1857, then removed to Warren county. He lived there for two years, following farming; thence to Atica, Fountain county, and clerked in a grocery store in 1859; thence removed back to his native county, in the spring of 1860, farming till June. He then went back to Atica, and stayed till the spring of 1861, when he moved back to his native county. He began going to school, in Granville, Ind., his birth-place; remaining there till March, 1862, when he went to Muncie. He attended school, till the last of June. He worked at farming, plowing corn till wheat harvest came, and then followed harvesting until about July 8. Mr. Helm then enlisted in the 84th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was promoted to the rank of 1st sergeant, and honorably discharged in 1865. He began to read medicine Sept. 2, 1865; reading till the fall of 1866, when he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, to attend a course of lectures on medicine, reading with Dr. John C. Helm. In the spring of 1867 he began the practice of medicine in his birthplace, practicing one year; then farmed two years, and in the spring of 1870, resumed his practice till Sept. 28, 1870 when he went to New York city to attend medical lectures at the University of New York, where he graduated Feb. 21, 1871. He then returned to Granville and continued his practice another year. He then removed to Eaton, in the same State, and remained two years; thence to Muncie, and lived one year thence to Anoke, and remained another year, when he returned to Muncie, stopping about eighteen months; thence came to his present location in the town of Bloom, where he has a remunerative practice. He was married in 1866 to Naoma Powers who was born in Henry Co., Ind., in February, 1843. They have three children—Isaac C., Mark and Arthur C.

He was but eleven years old when his pioneer life began in Clinton Co., Ind., where his parents had moved. Here he assisted his father in clearing a farm and made his home until 1840, when he was married to Julia Ann Widner. He had previously learned the cooper trade and continued to work at that in Clinton county, until 1851. He then came to Richland county, and settled in town 9, range 1 west, now known as the town of Eagle. His father had given him a piece of land on section 23, and he purchased another tract on section 24 and there erected a log house. Here he continued to work at his trade in connection with farming until 1862, when in July he enlisted in the 25th Wisconsin, company B, and went to Minnesota, where the regiment remained until winter; then went south. His health was not good and he was assigned to duty in the field hospital, where he was general superintendent. He was discharged July 16, 1864, from Harvy hospital, Madison, and returned home. He was unable to do any manual labor for more than a year, but continued the study of medicine which he had taken up before the war. His experience in the hospital had been a great help to him, and soon after his discharge he commenced practice, and as a physician has been quite successful. He is of the eclectic school. His wife died a few days before he was discharged, leaving six children,—William H., Rachael M., Hannah J., Samuel, Lafayette and Lydia. His second wife, to whom he was married Aug. 3, 1865, was Sarah B. Blackledge, who was born in Tippecanoe Co., Ind. She left two children, one of whom is now living—Woodford. In 1864 went to Tomah, Monroe Co., Wis., where he practiced till 1876; from thence to Viola, Richland county, where he now resides. Dr. Goyer owns a house and three lots in the village. He was married to Ann Amelia Goddard, in 1855. She died in 1865, leaving two children—George M. and Julia L. He was again married in 1866, to Carrie E. Bradley. She was the mother of five children, four living—Iolo E., Nettie M., Charles B. and Marcus A. Fannie R. died in 1870.

TOWN OF HENRIETTA.

Dr. J. B. Hitchcock, of Woodstock, represented the medical profession in this town in 1884.

J. B. Hitchcock, M. D., is the only practicing physician in the town of Henrietta. He located at Woodstock in 1880. He is of the homeopathic school, and received his diploma from the State University of Iowa. He is the son of Jason and Polly (Hurd) Hitchcock, and was born in Boone Co., Ind., Feb. 12, 1849. When he was but eleven months old his father died; his mother continued to live in Boone county until 1853, when she came to Richland county in company with her parents, who settled in the town of Orion. One year later she was married to William Collins, and settled in the town of Henrietta; remained there two years and then returned to Orion. Here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, receiving his early education in the district school, supplemented by two terms at the high school in Sextonville. When he was twenty-two years old he bought a tract of land in the town of Orion, and engaged in farming, occupying his leisure time in study. In the winter of 1878-9, he went to Iowa and entered the medical department of the State University, at Iowa City. In the spring of 1879, he came to Woodstock and commenced practice, returning to Iowa in the fall to complete his course of study in the State University. He received his diploma in March, 1880. He then returned to Woodstock, purchased a house, and has since followed his chosen profession at this point. He was married in 1872 to Melissa, daughter of Hezekiah and Sally (Marsh) Jones. In 1884 the medical profession was represented in this town by Drs. Asa McCollum and Miss Ada Lamson, who were located at Sextonville, and Dr. Osman Cass, who was located on section 19.

Osman Cass, M. D., was born in the town of Stanstead, Province of Quebec, Canada, June 26, 1826. He was the son of a farmer and his younger days were spent in assisting his father and going to school. At the age of nineteen, he went to Lowell, Mass., and engaged in a woolen mill, the Middlesex corporation. He remained there but a few months and returned to Canada. He purchased land and improved a farm in the town of Clifton, where he resided until 1854. He started, in the spring of that year, for Richland county to visit his brothers who had preceded him here. Being pleased with the country, he concluded to make it his home. He spent the summer with his brother, Colby. In the fall he went to Pine river and worked with his brother James in his mill, and in the spring of the year following, moved with him to Ithaca. He soon after entered land on section 21, on which he lived one year, then sold out and purchased land in section 20, where he remained about a year. He then again sold out and bought his present farm, which is pleasantly located on section 19, town of Ithaca. It is well watered by Willow creek. He has erected good frame buildings and has a pleasant home. He has been twice married—first to Julia Cass, March 11, 1846. She was born in Stanstead county, Province of Quebec, Canada, Aug. 18, 1827, and died June 6, 1846. His second wife was Harriet Hicks, a native of Sherbrooke county, born June 8, 1830. They are the parents of three children—Emma, Ella and Lydia. Dr. Cass has always been an extensive reader and careful student. In selecting reading matter, he has chosen those books which would give him the greatest amount of useful information, making a specialty of medical works. About 1870, his health failing, he employed a number of physicians, but they failed to relieve him. He then decided to begin the practice of medicine, with himself for a patient. He was successful in recovering his health, and since that time has continued to practice that profession and been generally successful. As a citizen he enjoys the confidence and respect of all good citizens.

TOWN OF MARSHALL.

Dr. Hugh Morrow, who was located on section 13, was the only physician in Marshall in 1884

TOWN OF ORION.

In 1884 the representative of the profession in this town was Dr. Truax, who was located at the village of Orion.

LONE ROCK.

Dr. R. L. Telfair was the only physician located at Lone Rock, in 1884.

R. L. Telfair was born at Cairo, Green Co., N. Y., in 1832. His father, William Telfair, G., was also a physician, and a native of Scotland; he was educated in the City of Edinburg, and came to the United States at the age of about twenty-five years, and was for forty years a practicing physician of Cairo, in the Catskill mountains of New York. He came to Richland county in 1855, and lived at Sextonville till his decease, in 1857. His wife still lives at Sextonville. Dr. R. L. Telfair began the study of medicine with his father, at the age of sixteen years. He graduated at the Albany Medical College, Dec. 27, 1853. He married Theresa C. Dexter, born at Cairo. They have two surviving children—Brouson A., now a student of medicine, born at Cairo, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1854, and Robert L., Jr., born August, 1877.

They lost their second son, Frank A., who was a student of medicine and a fine physician. He was fatally poisoned in the dissecting room of Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill., and died in May, 1881, aged twenty-one years and ten months. He had nearly completed his medical course.

RICHLAND CENTER'S PHYSICIANS IN 1884.

In 1884 the medical profession was represented in Richland Center by Drs. Jacob and B. F. Brimer, G. R. Mitchell, H. J. Wall, F. P. Casey and M. Lovering.

Jacob Brimer, M. D., located on section 21, Orion, in the spring of 1850, and as he has given his attention to the practice of medicine since that date, he is now the oldest resident physician in the county. He now resides on section 2, Orion, but has an office at Richland Center where he can be consulted each day. Dr. Brimer is a native of the State of New York, born in Rensselaer county on the 15th day of August, 1815. He was left motherless when but a small child, and he then resided with Elisha Bovee, with whom he removed to Cayuga county and ten years later to Erie county where he helped till the soil. A few years subsequently he removed with the family to Boone Co., Ind. He there prepared himself for the medical profession, and in 1850 came to Wisconsin. He was elected county treasurer in 1852, serving four years, and at various different intervals has held local offices. Dr. Brimer is plain and unassuming in his manners, has a large office practice, and is highly respected. His wife was formerly Elizabeth McMannis. They have reared seven children—John N., Sarah Ann, William M., Benjamin F., Jacob B., Mary E. and Harvey B.

Dr. Benjamin F. Brimer is a son of Dr. Jacob Brimer and he was born in Boone Co., Ind., Jan. 20, 1849. He came with the family to this county, and at an early age commenced the study of medicine with his father as preceptor. He also attended medical lectures at the Bennett College of Chicago, and since 1872 has given his entire attention to his profession. He has principally an office practice and makes a specialty of treating chronic diseases. They have two daughters—Edith and Maggie. Mr. Brimer is a member of the I. O. O. F.

G. R. Mitchell, M. D., represents the homeopathy school of the medical profession and may well be called one of the leading physicians of the county. He located at Richland Center in 1873 and is meeting with marked success. He was born in Rock Co., Wis., March 19, 1848. His parents were C. J. and Charlotte Mitchell. The father now resides at Evansville, Wis. G. R. Mitchell received an academic education and in 1869 commenced the study of medicine with Dr. E. W. Beebe, of Evansville (now of Milwaukee), as preceptor. In 1871 he entered the Hahneman College, at Chicago, where he attended until the spring of 1872. He then attended the Homeopathic College at Detroit, Mich., graduating at that institution in June, 1872. He then had charge, as principal, of the schools at Albany, Green Co., Wis., from whence he came to Richland Center. Dec. 25, 1872, Dr. Mitchell united in marriage with Laura E. Dodge, daughter of Dr. J. Dodge, of Green county. They have two children—Nellie and Fred. The doctor is a member of the M. E. Church, also of the Temple of Honor.

H. J. Wall, M. D., is a native of Ithaca, N. Y. He was born July 12, 1843. His father, John Wall, was a native of Bristol, England, and a merchant tailor. F. P. Casey, M. D., located at Richland Center, in April, 1882. He is a graduate of the University of Buffalo, N. Y., and consequently entitled to the confidence granted him by the public. He was born in Sandusky City, Ohio, April 29, 1857, and early in life commenced the study of medicine. Dr. Casey is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

TOWN OF RICHLWOOD.

In 1884 this town had four representatives of the medical profession: Drs. R. M. Miller, of Port Andrew; O. Ross, J. C. Wright and J. T. Coates, of Excelsior.

Dr. R. M. Miller visited the county in 1849, and with his brother, L. N. Miller, as partner, established in 1851 a general store at Port Andrew. But Dr. Miller did not bring his family until the spring of 1852. He then settled at said place and gave his attention to the practice of medicine, which in those days was very hard on a physician, as the country was but sparsely settled and there being no roads, the making of long trips was very tedious. In 1854 his property was destroyed by fire. In 1859 he started a drug store at Boscobel, and run the same one year. He then spent one year in Canada. Returning home he assisted Capt. Rowley to recruit a company of men for the United States service, and went with them to Racine, expecting to enlist himself, but one day while driving under a leaning tree on a side-hill, his wagon slipped and so crushed his body between the wagon and tree as to fracture every rib, and he was thus unable to leave the house for one year, and when he was again able to walk about, he found that he was two and a half inches less in height than when he was injured. He again resumed practice. But in 1872 he found himself well advanced in years and in poor health, and thus retired from practice. He never took much interest in politics, although he served as justice of the peace for over twenty years, and never had a case appealed from his docket. R. M. Miller was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, in 1811. His father was a native of Pennsylvania, and a contractor and builder by occupation. Mr. Miller assisted his father until nineteen years of age, then went to New Orleans. Three years later he went to Galena, Ill., where he continued the study of medicine, which he had commenced with Dr. John Watson in New Orleans, with A. T. Crow & John Stukle & Johnson, preceptors in Galena. He afterward opened a store at Shellsburg, where he was the first merchant of the place. He was also the first merchant at Mifflin, Iowa county. In 1837 he married Elizabeth Phlager. She was a daughter of George Phlager. She was born at Fort Snelling, Minn., in June, 1821, and was thus the first white child born in that State. They reared twelve children, seven of whom were living in 1883—Alva G., Augusta, Frank D. O., Nathan B., George F. and Minnie B. Dr. Miller has been a member of the I. O. O. F., since 1840; he joining lodge No. 5, Galena, Ill., the second year of its organization. After coming to Wisconsin, he became a member of Eureka lodge, No. 73, Muscoda.

J. C. Wright, M. D., a leading physician of Richland county, son of I. J. and Catherine Wright, was born in Richland county, March 19, 1859. He attended the common schools until thirteen years of age, then took a three years' course at Muscoda. He went with his parents to Tennessee, and while there took a scientific course at the Edwards Academy, at Greenville. Returning to Muscoda, he was engaged in the drug trade a short time, then roughed it in Dakota one season. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. G. F. Gay as preceptor. He afterwards entered the Rush Medical College, where he graduated in 1882. He commenced practice at Excelsior soon after leaving college. He was employed by the board of health in 1883, and served as secretary of the Southwestern Wisconsin Medical Association. Dr. Wright is a well qualified physician and deservedly has a remunerative practice. Being a cautious and affable gentleman he has a good many warm friends. Although young in years, his growing practice indicates his professional ability, and a future of prosperity seems before him.

TOWN OF SYLVAN.

Drs. Luke Dean and E. S. Stebin represented the medical profession in this town in 1884, the former being located near Sylvan Corners, and the latter on Mill creek.

TOWN OF WILLOW.

In 1884, the only medical practitioner located in this town was Dr. E. P. Kermott, of the village of Loyd.

CHAPTER XVI.

RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH LINES.

Between the years 1838 and 1841 the territorial legislature, of Wisconsin, passed various acts, chartering several railroads. None of these corporations thus created, however, assumed any shape, with the exception of the Milwaukee & Waukesha Railroad Company, which after hanging fire for several years, was finally incorporated during the year 1847. The commissioners named in its charter assembled, Nov. 23, 1847, and elected the first officers, in accordance with the provisions of the act in question. Dr. L. W. Weeks was named president and A. W. Randall, secretary.

The books, for the subscription of stock, were first opened in the early part of February, of the following year, but from the lack of funds, incident to a new country, it was not until April 5, 1849, that the necessary amount of stock was subscribed for, or requisite fund raised.

During this time, in 1848, the charter had been amended, authorizing the embryo company to build a road to the Mississippi river, the terminus to be located in Grant county, and, in 1850, the name was changed to that of the Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad Company.

After the company was fully organized, active measures were, at once, taken to push the new enterprise forward to a steady completion. The city of Milwaukee loaned the corporation its credit, and, in 1851, this pioneer railroad of the State of Wisconsin, had reached Waukesha, twenty miles from Milwaukee. In the spring of 1852, Edward H. Broadhead, a prominent civil engineer from the State of New York, was put in charge of the work, as chief engineer and superintendent.

Under his supervision the work of building was urged onward—reaching Milton in 1852—Stoughton in 1853, Madison the year following, and in 1856, the iron rails were laid to Lone Rock in this county. The railroad was pushed on to the Mississippi river, reaching that stream at Prairie du Chien in the fall of 1857. The company after many trials and tribulations, incident to a new railroad in an unsettled country, in 1859 and 1860, defaulted the payment of interest on its bonds; a foreclosure was made, and a new company, called the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien Railroad Company, took its place, in all its rights and property.

In 1867, the road, through a change of name, became the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad line and that company still operates it.

Having drawn the above sketch of the great through line that traverses a small portion of the territory of this county, in a cursory manner, as in a manner explanatory of the following we approach the building of what might be called an entirely Richland county enterprise.

THE PINE RIVER AND STEVENS POINT RAILROAD.

This road owes its inception and completion to the public-spiritedness and business tact of the residents of the county seat of the county, and has been the means of a large increase in the value of real estate and business facilities of the entire county.

As early as April 28, 1857, there was a movement made looking to the bringing of a railroad from Lone Rock to Richland Center, but the plan seems to have been abandoned on account of the then financial embarrassments of the whole country, during the panic of that year.

The whole scheme was held in abeyance until in the fall of that year when it was again agitated but nothing was done in a practical way toward the matter, and like the former project it too was allowed to drop. At various times afterwards some talk was made but nothing more was done in the premises until in 1870, when a charter was granted by the legislature to incorporate a company for the building of a railroad—narrow gauge, wooden or iron rails—with the above name. In pursuance with this charter, which bears date of Aug. 5, 1872, the first meeting was held August 20th, of that year, and the following directors were elected: George Krouskop, Joseph L. De Hart, John Walworth, Norman L. James, D. E. Pease, D. L. Downs, D. O. Chandler, A. C. Eastland, J. M. Adams, Charles G. Thomas and David Hardenburg. The officers elected were: George Krouskop, president; D. L. Downs, treasurer, and A. C. Eastland, secretary.

At the time of the organization of the company it was not contemplated to build the road by their own unaided efforts, but simply to make such surveys as were necessary to ascertain the feasibility of the route and demonstrate to some other railroad company this fact, as an inducement that that company would build the road for them.

But during the summer 1875, the plan had so far undergone alteration as to develop into an arrangement to build a narrow gauge railroad by individual subscription, and to be supplemented by the subscriptions of the towns traversed by the line of the road and which would be most benefited thereby.

Stock subscription books were accordingly opened and stock subscribed by most of the residents of the village of Richland Center and town of Richland. The town, by vote, took stock to the amount of $19,000; and about $5,000 in stock was subscribed by parties outside of the town.

The contract for grading the roadbed and surfacing the same, and laying maple rails, was let at some $400 per mile, the work to be finished and the road to be in running order by June 25, 1876.

The road was to be narrow gauge, thirty-six inches between the track, laid with maple rails,  $3\frac{1}{2} \times 5$  inches in diameter. All the road was laid with maple rails except three miles of switches and side tracks which were laid with iron rails.

In December, 1875, the engine was purchased, and also some flat cars for construction purposes. The locomotive was bought of Porter, Bell & Co., Pittsburg, Penn., at a cost of $5,000. It weighed ten tons, and was a perfect model for one of the class to which it belonged. It was hauled across the country from Lone Rock to Richland Center upon logging trucks, and was used for construction purposes from Richland Center south.

The road soon was carried to completion and was ready for business on the 1st of July, 1876, when the first passenger train ran through from Richland Center to Lone Rock. It had then cost about $66,508.10.

In the summer of 1875, the second set of directors and officers were chosen. The directors were: George Krouskop, A. H. Krouskop, D. O. Chandler, D. E. Pease, J. M. Adams, N. L. James, J. L. DeHart, W. J. Bowen and A. C. Parfley. The officers elected were: George Krouskop, president; A. H. Krouskop vice-president; N. L. James, general manager; D. O. Chandler, treasurer; and A. C. Eastland, secretary.

On the 27th of August, 1878, a meeting of the stockholders was held, and the following were elected directors to succeed those above mentioned: J. W. Lybraud, John Walworth, J. L. McKee, F. P. Bowen, J. L. DeHart, James H. Miner, Jacob Brimer, A. C. Parfrey and A.

W. Bickford. At the election of officers of the company, the following were chosen: Jacob W. Lybrand, president and general manager; A. W. Bickford, vice-president; J. L. McKee, treasurer, and W. H. Pier, secretary. This was the last set of officers and directors that were elected.

The road continued in operation under the home company increasing its business, and finally arriving at what might be called a paying basis until May 26, 1880, when it was sold to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R. company. The directors obtained some $56,000 as the price, which paid the indebtedness of the company and paid fifty cents on the dollar, on all original stock, except the $19,000 stock subscribed by the town of Richland, which had been sold at a nominal price and canceled. At the time of the sale the narrow gauge road was in excellent working condition. The entire length of the road having been laid with iron track, except about three miles. The Milwaukee company at once proceeded to make the road entirely iron rail, and the following year altered the track to the standard width of all their roads, and it is now a fully recognized branch of that monster corporation.

THE PONY TELEGRAPH.

This was another wholly Richland county enterprise. In 1874, Charles W. Towsley, telegraph operator at Lone Rock, conceived the idea of constructing a telegraph line from Richland Center to Lone Rock. He accordingly made a proposition to the people of Richland Center, that if they would patronize him and pay for a certain amount of telegraphing in advance, he would construct and manage the operation of the line. Tickets, which were called "franks," were issued, and were handled the same as stock of a joint stock company; only differing in this, "that the holder of a frank was entitled to telegraph out the amount shown upon the face of the frank, and was not entitled to dividends." The people of Richland Center took hold of the matter with a vim, and many of the enterprising citizens took $5, $10, and some as high as $150 worth of the franks. At least $700 was raised in this way at Richland Center. The line was ready for operation in September, 1874, and Mr. Towsley placed operators at Richland Center and Sextonville. The enterprise met with marked success and gave the best of satisfaction to its patrons.

When the narrow gauge railroad was built, this line of telegraph was used for railroad business, notwithstanding the fact that the wires followed the wagon track, and shot across fields and creeks, the nearest way possible to Lone Rock, regardless of the course taken by the railroad.

When the narrow gauge railroad was sold to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Company, in 1880, it ended the existence of the Pony Telegraph as a Richland county enterprise.

CHAPTER XVII.

DARK DEEDS.

Crime, like every vice, has always, more or less, disgraced the annals of every community, and without entering upon a relation of minor actions, or mi-demeanors, that have occurred, from time to time, it is intended here to only give an account of a few of the more important events of that nature that have transpired.

The records of a community are so seldom preserved for posterity that the task of getting at all the facts is a difficult one. Could we have access to that book where time records the acts of man, it would be an easy task to write a true history of the past. But when in antiquarian research, we are compelled to rely in part upon the memory of the living, treacherous at the best, oftentimes known only to the relator by tradition, it becomes an arduous task, and is often, by the force of circumstances, inaccurate. Memory cannot always be relied upon, especially in reference to dates, and hence the accounts herein have been taken mostly from the files of the papers of the county, supplemented by such facts as have been gleaned from the conversation and relations of the older settlers.

MURDER OF ARNEST HERRLITZ.

The first murder committed within the limits of Richland county was that of Arnest Herrlitz, in the spring of 1859. Herrlitz lived alone in a little log cabin in the town of Dayton. He was a married man; but a short time previous he and his wife had separated, and he had commenced proceedings in the circuit court for divorce. On the fatal evening, in the spring of 1859, he was sitting in his cabin, when he heard some one at the window as though they were trying to effect an entrance. He went to the door for the purpose of showing in whoever it was, and just as he opened the door, the cowardly assassin shot him. He did not see who did it, but lived long enough to go to his brother's, a half mile distant, and relate the particulars, when death relieved his suffering. 'Squire Durnford was employed to look up the facts and enough was learned to lead to strong suspicions, but not enough to justify the arrest of any one.

MURDER OF BENJAMIN SUTTON.

This was the next crime of importance committed in Richland county. Benjamin Sutton, was an elderly man, but recently returned from the seat of the "war between the States," then raging, having been a member of the 11th regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He was engaged in keeping a small grocery or saloon at Port Andrew, in Richwood township, and while engaged in sweeping off the sidewalk in front of his place of business, about 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 4th of December, 1862, was shot by an assassin with a rifle.

It seems, from the evidence in the case, that Milton Hubanks had a quarrel with Sutton, said to have grown out of the treatment of Sutton's daughter by Hubanks, and out of this had sprung up a deadly feud, and Sutton had made many threats to shoot Hubanks on sight. On the morning in question, the latter concealed himself in the house of James Haney, within six or eight rods from Sutton's place, and locating himself near a window overlooking the door of that person's place, loaded his rifle with the intention of shooting him. It has been urged in extenuation that he was goaded on to this act by the threats of his enemy and the advice of some friends, on whom he relied, but whose warmth of feeling had warped their judgment. Here at the window, he waited until the old man made his appearance, and then deliberately taking aim shot him down, the ball passing through the abdomen, making a fatal wound. Sutton fell to the ground, and while lying there the dastardly assassin again shot him; this time the ball passing through the arm and entering the breast of his victim.

Sutton lingered in great agony for some hours, in spite of the strong efforts of Dr. R. M. Miller to alleviate the pain, and died before the following morning.

Hubanks was arrested and brought before a jury and they adjudging him guilty of manslaughter only, on account of the extenuating circumstances, he was sentenced for a term of four years to the penitentiary. After serving two years he was pardoned.

KILLING OF EDWARD LIVINGSTON.

This sad affair occurred in the same neighborhood as the one just related. Livingston was a remarkably smart young man; a lawyer, and when sober, a gentleman of polished manners. One evening, while half drunk, he went to the house of an old man named Crozier, and attempted to get into bed with Mrs. Crozier. A violent quarrel and struggle ensued between him and Mr. Crozier, and during the encounter they got down upon the floor, when Mr. Crozier, who had succeeded in snatching a knife, stabbed the intruder fatally. The coroner's jury, at the inquest which was held over the dead body, exonerated Crozier from any blame and the case went no further.

MURDER OF MRS. WALLACE.

One of the most atrocious crimes, one that has seldom been paralleled anywhere, was committed within the limits of Richland county in 1868. A simple recital of the crime, and the swift, sure vengeance that overtook the fiend who committed it, is all that space will permit in this connection. The following account of the affair is from the able pen of Hon. J. H. Waggoner:

"It was during the forenoon of Thursday, Sept. 24, 1868, that a floating rumor upon the streets of the village said that the body of a woman had been found near the house of Patrick Wallace; that her head had been eaten by the hogs, and her body otherwise mutilated by them. Soon afterwards word was brought that the wife of "Pat" Wallace had been murdered, and that he had discovered the body, after a night of care and anguish, brooding anxiously over the cause of her absence. An inquest was at once called, and justice Farlin and sheriff McMurtrey, accompanied by several citizens, made all possible haste to the scene demanding their official attendance.

"All agree in the statement that a more revolting spectacle never met their eyes, and the record of a murder more horrid in its execution had never passed under their notice. Some of them were men whose form had stood in the red front of fierce battle, who had looked upon death in all its ghastliest shapes; some were men whose silvery locks betokened the snows of many winters that had settled there; all were accustomed to scenes and conversant with descriptions of terrible violence. But there the man of stoutest nerve and hardihood quailed like weak children at the terrible sight that lay before them.

"A jury was impanelled, and the testimony of neighbors concerning the then mysterious affair duly taken. A physician was also called, who carefully examined the body and testified concerning the probability of death from the wounds inflicted.

"The examination of the body disclosed a most horrid murder, terrible in its conception, but barbarous and fiendish in the execution. The head had been cut off, a deep gash cut into each side of the body, the flesh of one arm almost cleft from it, a fearful cut in the calf of one of her legs, and all these marks clearly indicated the use of a murderous ax as the weapon of her taking off. A little search soon brought to light this instrument, all clotted with blood and hair, and the blades of which (for it was a double bitted one) fitted in the gashes made in the body. Only the lower jawbone and teeth could then be discovered, although the skull was afterwards found, the certain marks of the ax deeply penetrating each side of it. The body where found—a distance of twenty rods from the house, and toward the house of her father-in-law—was tracked by the blood which streamed from the murderous, gaping wounds. Through a cabbage patch adjoining the house, over two fences and through the belt of woodland, until life was extinct or nearly so, had this much to be pitied woman almost bounded, followed by a fiend whose crime would shock the very demons of hell itself. Blood was oozing from her at every step, and precious life was being sacrificed at the instigation of a soulless wretch, lured on by the hope of possessing a few paltry dollars—the hard earned dollars of another. On investigation, the little money of the victim was found to have been taken, and also a coat and pair of pantaloons belonging to the husband. With these facts brought before them, the jury at once rendered a verdict indicating the foulest murder and pointing out the perpetrator.

“The testimony of the husband, relatives and friends, left no doubt as to the identity of the committer of the dark deed. This was John Nevel, a boy of about fifteen years of age, the son of a nice, quiet and respectable farmer who resided in the town of Dayton, about six miles west of the village of Richland Center. This lad had, within the past four years, developed a precocity in almost inconceivable depravity beyond degree, both in his inclination and actions, but, in all charity to the boy, let it be said that his mind was not well balanced, and some said that he was quite imbecile. Although guarded and surrounded by an honest, anxious father and friends during this time, he had committed all manner of depredations within his power, or that could suggest itself to a willfully wicked mind. He had the reputation of being troublesome, disobedient and ungovernable. Yet, until within a few days before committing the crime for which his life was the penalty, his deeds of sin and wickedness were mostly confined to petty thefts and disorderly brawls, of which many are reported.

“But the crime which led to or suggested the final one was perpetrated the day before. In a fit of brutal devilishness, he committed an unmentionable crime upon a little girl of eleven years of age, the daughter of a neighboring farmer, and so inhumanly treated her that her life was endangered. This fearful exhibition of criminal propensity was enacted in the presence of the little brother of the innocent girl, and both he and his sister were threatened with death, if they should resist him, or divulge the shocking crime. Complaint was soon made, and a warrant issued for Nevel's arrest, but for some unexplained and unaccountable reason, its service was delayed. Had this warrant been served upon him immediately after its issue, and he taken into proper custody, the murder of the following day would have been prevented. But apprehending arrest, he was fleeing the county, and in his course—the road to crime having opened to him its broadest avenues—it was seemingly without remorse that he could perpetrate any deed or crime, no matter how devilish.

“The murdered woman, Mrs. Anna Wallace, was the daughter of John Joice and wife of Patrick Wallace, all industrious, peaceable, respected citizens of the town of Marshall. The residence of Mr. Wallace was about four miles from that of Mr. Nevel, the heartbroken father of the guilty boy, and about ten miles from the village of Richland Center. Mrs. Wallace was only about twenty years of age, and had been married only six months. Endeared to her family and friends by her virtues, her accomplishments and her winning manners, as well as the common interests of a nationality noted for its clannish love for one another. and of Church, her tragical death cast a gloom over the entire community, and brought tears to eyes unused to weep. That any life be taken, is enough to arouse the indignation of the coldest of humanity, but when to murder is added such diabolical atrocity and butchery, it seems as if every heart must be fired with hatred and thoughts of vengeance; the latent feeling will spring to the surface, and men will become brutes and worse than brutes, and do dire deeds that may prove the subject of life-long regret to them afterward.

“From the testimony developed at the examination, it seems that Patrick Wallace, the husband, had gone to the Center early Wednesday morning, on business, and did not return until in the evening. Mrs. Wallace was alone, and had evidently, just concluded her morning work when the butchery took place. She had been trying to earn a little money by picking hops during the three or four weeks prior to the evening preceding the awful day, and had a small sum of money about her, the result of her praiseworthy industry. That morning, young Nevel had called at the house of John Wallace, Pat’s father, which is about eighty rods from that of his son, and inquired if Pat had any revolver or other firearm to sell. Mrs. Wallace replied that Pat owned nothing of the kind, and that he had gone to Richland Center with a load of wheat that same day. Nevel had been seen a few miles from the neighborhood of the dire calamity, with blood on his face. He had been stopped and questioned about what he was doing and where he was going, and he replied that he had ‘a scrape with a girl,’ and was leaving the county. Having no suspicion of the real status of the case and the terrible tragedy, the questioner passed on, Nevel pursuing his way in a different direction.

“At the close of the inquest the pursuit of the murderer was vigorously instituted. At noon of Thursday, twenty-four hours after the crime, John Barrett, constable; Sylvester Keplar, Benjamin Ewers and John Wallace, the father-in-law of the unfortunate victim, started in pursuit of this fiend in human shape.

“In speaking of the pursuit and subsequent arrest, the testimony of Mr. Keplar, an eye witness and active participant, is given, as the best and most graphic picture of the scenes and incidents. He says:

“We started about noon for the house of Nevel’s father, and at Sylvan Corners, six miles distant we had word of the object of our search, John Nevel. He had purchased a little powder here and had inquired the road to Readstown. We followed in that direction, and when near Readstown. We learned that he had stopped there on Wednesday night and had attended a dance; had slept at the hotel, but had eat neither supper or breakfast there; he had left in the forenoon, first inquiring the road to Ferryville, a landing about eight miles below De Soto. He also made several inquiries about the State of Iowa, and said that he was going to that State, to attend school. He had bought a new hat and a knife at Readstown, and wore two hats from there to Ferryville. He had left Readstown, as has been said, in the morning, and also, made some inquiries respecting Towerville, the next village. On reaching the latter place, he stopped long enough to make the purchase of some crackers and a tobacco box.

“He reached Ferryville landing about sundown, Thursday, having traveled from Wallace’s there on foot, a distance of about forty-five miles, in a day and a half.

“Before entering the town, he put on, over his own clothing, the coat and pantaloons he had stolen from Wallace’s house, after the murder had been perpetrated. He went into the post-office and there left his old straw hat and old vest, and going out obtained lodging at the house of Mr. George Copper.

“We reached Ferryville about eight o’clock, just a few minutes after Nevel had gone to bed. He was still awake. Making known our business to Mr. Copper, we were shown to his bedside, and at once arrested him. We found the stolen property in his possession, and took charge of it; also a double barrellled pistol, some powder and caps, a couple of knives and other things he had bought on the road. We found but $4 in his possession, he having squandered the balance. Barrett and myself sat up with the prisoner during the night. We accused him of the crime, but he persistently denied any knowledge of it. His story was that he had bought the clothing of a man he had met between Pat Wallace’s and Ewer’s; had paid $5 for the articles, and on investigation had found some money in the pocket. When morning had dawned, Barrett went with the prisoner to the postoffice, and got the clothing he had left there, which he acknowledged were his. We had previously examined the vest and found blood upon it.

“We left Ferryville, on our return, at 8 o’clock, Friday morning, and stopped at Tower-ville for dinner. Up to this time he had refused to make any confession. We had but four horses, (being horseback), and we let the prisoner ride and walk with us, alternately. However, after we had started from the latter place, Nevel riding Barrett’s horse, I rode up beside him and commenced a conversation with him, exercising all my ingenuity to draw from him a statement of his crime. I was well rewarded, for within an hour’s ride from the town, he confessed to me that he had murdered the woman. He said that he had shot her and then cut her with the ax.”

“This confession he afterwards repeated to the others of his captors, after some little hesitation. In reply to their numerous inquiries, which they propounded to him, he gave the particulars of the crime, which corroborated most of the facts, as elicited at the inquest, and further along entered upon a relation of the details in full.

“He said, that after his conversation with the elder Mr. Wallace, which is given elsewhere, he went to Pat’s house, knowing that Mrs. Wallace had been picking hops, and must have some money in the house, and he having a $5 bill, wanted it changed. This Mrs. Wallace, with her usual kindness of disposition, was willing to do; but, in making the change for him, she brought her pocket-book to the door and he saw that she had some more money in it, and the demon of avarice took possession of him, and he made up his mind to kill her and get possession of it. The little sum for which this remorseless fiend was willing to shed the blood of an innocent woman, was not above $15 or $18.

“He watched where she put the pocket-book containing the money. She then seated herself in a chair between the stove and the door, with her back toward him, he standing at the door. He then went on to relate, that when he cocked the pistol, to shoot her, he held his hand over the trigger, to prevent her hearing the click of the lock. Taking deadly aim at the unsuspecting woman, he fired. After he had discharged his pistol, the ball entering at the back of her head, she jumped up, looked at him intently for a moment, and started for her father-in-law’s house, on a run. Seeing that she might live, he seized the ax, which was close to the door, and followed her. She had a little start ahead of him, and he told that he could not overtake her until she fell. He then, on coming up with her, struck her several times with the ax about her head and body. He was a little frightened by this time, and did not know how many times he did strike her.

“Having cut and beaten her, with the ax, until he was sure she was dead, he returned to the house, secured the money and clothing, and started for the Mississippi river, with the intention of going into Iowa.

“To test his sense of the horror of the crime, he was asked if he thought he would do the like again. He replied that he thought not. The question was then asked him, that if a friend asked him to help him by murdering some one, what would do. He said that he would help him.’

“On Saturday the prisoner was brought to the county seat. The excitement, by this time, was intense, and the village streets were thronged with the relations and friends of his victim, the people of an outraged community. The preliminary examination was held at the courthouse. An immense crowd filled the edifice and many were unable to obtain entrance. But court was quietly opened, and counsel for both State and prisoner appeared. A motion, by the counsel of Nevel, to continue the examination until Monday was sustained. No other measure of importance transpiring, the court was dismissed. The crowd then quietly dispersed, and the prisoner was lodged in the county jail. This was about 2 o’clock. Soon after the examination, the funeral cortege passed through the streets. The train of buggies, wagons and pedestrians made the largest procession of the kind ever witnessed in the streets of the town. The almost insane husband, the nearly distracted relatives and friends of the deceased, presented a spectacle that thrilled the hearts of every onlooker. During the exercises at the cemetery, the village was almost deserted. At the grave the upper lid of the coffin was raised and the mangled neck of the corpse, with the bared jawbone and teeth, were all that could be seen. (The head was not found until the following Monday, when it was interred in the same grave with the body.) The sight of these ghastly remains was enough to chill the blood, and many turned away from the open coffin, with revenge stamped upon their lowering brows.

“Up to this time, no demonstration had been made, which looked to certain violence to the murderer, though fears were entertained by many, who, as was afterwards proven, had strong grounds for their belief.

“From the grave to the courthouse square, about 4 o’clock, marched, with hurried and determined step, the people who had sustained the severe loss, and whose blood was aroused to a fearful fever by the terrible butchery. A consultation in the square, which lasted but a few minutes, resulted in a united and fierce rush for the door of the jail. The mob was well supplied with revolvers, as well as with ropes. The proper officers who met them at the door, warned them of their peril, and did all that men could do to stem the now furious tide that ebbed and surged around them, but in vain. All who sought to defend the law or protect the prisoner were swept aside, like the straw upon the incoming billow, by the intensely infuriated mob. The door was soon broken down, the prisoner seized, and, in less time than it takes to pen this sentence, the soul of the miserable wretch was launched into the “sweet subsequently,” there to meet a fearful retribution before a just and omnipotent God. He was taken to a tree near by, his body swung in the air and all was over. Immediately after the consummation of the violence, the crowd slowly dispersed, wending homeward slowly, and quiet once more reigned supreme.

“The body of the boy was taken possession of by the authorities, who immediately handed it over to the parent and friends of the family, and received burial from the hands of those who had loved and cared for him in infancy. His victim’s and his own body lie, with but the fence between, in the cemeteries of Richland Center.

“The ringleaders of this violation of the law, were afterwards indicted by the grand jury, but the sentiments of a large portion of the community being with them, the cases were never prosecuted and the matter was allowed to drop where it was”

MURDER OF MRS. COLEMAN.

During the month of July, 1882, the whole community was horrified at hearing of an atrocious murder of an old lady in the town of Akan. The following account has been compiled from newspaper files of that date and contain a full and complete history of the tragedy. It would seem that Mrs. Sabina Driskell, known more commonly by her first husband's name of Coleman, and who came from Butler Co., Penn., about 1878, and has been living with her son, Martin Coleman, on a farm on section 30, in the town of Akan, and known to the neighbors as the McDermott place.

Martin owned a small farm of forty acres, on section 21, on which place he was building a house and had in some crops, (this place was about two miles from where he lived.) The son's story, as he related it, was as follows:

On Wednesday, July 19th, he started for his farm, as usual, to work. Just before leaving the house, however, his mother requested him to go to the village of Excelsior, about six miles distant, to get some groceries which were needed. He made the remark that he did not want to lose a day from his work in the corn. She then told him that she would go up to the farm and work in the field while he went to town on the errand. This met his views and he started to his work, with the understanding that he should leave the hoe in a pile of lumber, so that he could find it.

From his account it appears that he worked until noon, and then went to his uncle's, Michael Hernan, about a quarter of a mile from his own farm, to dinner, according to his usual custom. After dinner he started for Excelsior, as he had promised his mother he would. In going there the road took him by his home, and stopping there, found his mother had gone and the house locked up. He forced an entrance, by pulling out the staple in the door, which was fastened by a padlock. He went up stairs to get some money, which he had forgotten in the morning, and had left in his pants pocket, but finding it gone, he supposed that his mother had taken it, or put it away for safe keeping, so he did not worry about it. Not having any money, he did not go on to town to make the purchase contemplated, but waited for his mother to return.

However, she did not return that night, and, in his account, he said that he did not think strange of that, but supposed that she had staid at his uncle's, as she had sometimes done before. In the morning he started out, and went to the uncle's place, and on inquiring found that she had not been there. On his arrival at his farm he found that she had been there and had done three or four hour's work in the corn, but could see nothing of either her, or the hoe, both having mysteriously disappeared. Thinking nothing of this he went back to his uncle's and borrowed a hoe, with which he worked until the dinner hour. On arriving there he seemed to be surprised at her continued absence, and told his uncle so, saying that he could not find her at all.

In the afternoon, he went home and finding that she had not returned thither, during his absence, he instituted inquiries among some of the neighbors, who, in reply, said that they had seen nothing of her. He now began to be alarmed at her prolonged absence. Toward evening Mr. Hernan, himself and some of the neighbors, took a lantern, and went out in search of her, going up on the ridge for that purpose, but found no trace of her.

On Friday morning the search was resumed, and the following account of the events of the morning, are taken from the testimony of James Brady, given at the inquest subsequently held, and being the words of an eye witness, can be relied upon.

In the words of Mr. Brady: "We commenced the search of her quite early, and I was placed in charge of the investigation, and placed the men, as I thought best, so as to take in a strip of about thirty feet wide."

The party went all around the field, but without finding any trace of the lost woman. Brady then placed them across the ravine, from bluff to bluff, and the search was extended as far as Gorman's field. Young Coleman, or his uncle Hernan, then suggested that perhaps she had gone to Chicago. Brady then asked Martin if he had missed any of her good clothes, in the house. His reply was that he had not, and, what was more, probably could not miss them. The suggestion was then made to search the house, and investigate the matter there. The three went to the premises, leaving the balance of the neighbors engaged in the prosecution of the search, and giving them word to go on to Hernan's to dinner and to await there the return of the three.

On their arrival, they went into the house, and after a rigid examination, Coleman declared that his mother's best clothes hung on a nail and were not missing. There was a tub on the floor, with some clothing in it, to soak, and it was remarked that a woman that left things in that shape, evidently left with the intention of an early return. Then it seemed first to dawn upon their minds that some foul play was, probably, at the bottom of the whole business.

After a short consultation, the search was recommenced, and this time in dead earnest, and while carrying it on in Gorman's field, one of the owner's boys asked Martin if he had thrown any logs into a hole over there, pointing out a certain part of the land. This put them on the true scent, and under the guidance of the youth, the hole was sought for and found—a hole evidently made by an upturned tree, and some logs found therein were discovered to have traces of blood on them, as were also some pieces of rock. After a prolonged search in every direction, a trail was struck, and followed up and the mutilated form of the murdered woman was found at the head of the ravine, covered with rocks and rotten logs, so that it was nearly hidden from sight.

The head was bruised and cut as if with some sharp instrument, the clothing was torn, and quite a number of wounds were found on one arm and on the head. The body was carefully removed to the house of M. Hernan, and the coroner summoned and a jury impaneled before Squire Pucket, of Excelsior.

Before many days had elapsed, in spite of the feeling to the contrary, a strong suspicion began to enter the minds of the majority of the people, that the unknown party who had committed the dastardly deed was no other than her son Martin, and that this was more than a common murder.

The circumstances surrounding the case caused the officers to make the closest investigation. On searching the premises lately occupied by the accused and his supposed victim, they found the tub of water, before mentioned, to have the overalls and overshirt of the young man in it to soak. These garments were secured, and were dried, and on being submitted to chemical analysis, the marks of what was supposed to be blood was found to have been upon them. These things and many little incidents drew suspicion upon him and he left for other climes. Immediately upon his flight becoming known, sheriff Barron detailed marshal Spangler to pursue him and bring him back. He was followed to Lynxville, on the Mississippi river, where he had taken a boat, going north. After some delay he was followed, and in the course of the next day, was found near Lake City, Minn., at work for a railroad company near that place. He was arrested and brought back to meet his accusers, and was lodged in the county jail. Next day he was brought before D. L. Downs, the county judge, for examination. The evidence being purely circumstantial, and not very strong, and nothing positively proving his connection with the murder, he was simply bound over in bonds of $1,000, to appear at the next term of the court, to answer the charge.

At the meeting of the court, no further evidence having been found against him, or any other parties, the district attorney entered a nolle pros. to be entered on the case; and the case dropped, leaving the punishment of the criminal to the just and sure vengeance of the great Tribunal, where all crimes must be answered for at last. Coleman, upon his discharge, left the country, and disappeared from the knowledge of the people of Richland county.

KILLING OF EPHRAIM DOCKERTY.

The Richland County Observer, of Oct. 12, 1882, contains a graphic description of the next terrible tragedy, which occurred at Sextonville, in Ithaca town, Oct. 5, 1882, from which we quote, by kind permission.

After relating, how that excitement ran high in that village, when the news of the event was received; how the whole community was shocked; the article in question goes on to state that this was the second case of the taking of precious life in the county in ninety days; and that this has no mystery attending it, as it was a clear case of murder in self-defense, or justifiable homicide. The Observer then goes on to say:

"The particulars of this unfortunate affair, as we collect from reliable sources, are, that Ephraim Dockerty, the victim, some fourteen years ago, married a widow, who owned a farm near Sextonville, and who had a family of two sons, Arthur and Samuel, and one daughter. They have lived together all these years, the sons helping to carry on the farm, and at times working out. The family has, however, lived unhappily for years, and strife and contention have been rife and continuous between Dockerty and the boys.

"During last winter, matters in the domestic circle became so unpleasant that some kind of a division of property was made between Dockerty, his wife and the boys. He was given a team and wagon, on the condition that he would leave and not return to molest them. He took his departure for Dakota some time during last April, and it was hoped that the family and neighborhood was rid of him for good. But the old saying, that "a bad penny always returns," proved true in this case, for about the latter part of September he returned to Sextonville. Here he talked hard, and made threats against the boys and the family, saying that he was going to stay with the family, and similar remarks.

"He camped in the neighborhood for several days after his return, and did not visit the family until Sunday, October 1st. On that day he was seen to go there, and knowing that he was desperate, several men followed him to the house. None but the women of the family were at home. He made no disturbance, but asked for the youngest child, which he took into the street and played with for some time. He soon sent in for the child's clothes, evidently with the intention of taking it away. Mrs. Dockerty went out and took the child in her arms, when Dockerty took it from her by force. The other parties then interfered, rescued the child and returned it to its mother. Dockerty drew a revolver and made violent threats. In the meantime Arthur, one of the boys, returned, when some words passed between them, not very amicable, Dockerty threatening to take his, (Arthur's) life. The boy very quietly told him that he did not want any fuss, and that as he (Dockerty) was not welcome there, it would be best for him to leave.

This advice Dockerty, finally took and went away, and quiet reigned once more. By the advice of friends, who were aware of Dockerty's desperate frame of mind, young Arthur Van Dusen procured a revolver with which to defend himself, if need be.

"Nothing further occurred until Tuesday, October 5th, when Dockerty went to the place, put his team in the barn, and spent the afternoon quietly in the house. Samuel was at home but Arthur was absent. However, when the latter returned in the evening, his team being heated by travel, he wanted to put the horses into the barn, so the old man's team was taken from thence and tied to the wagon. This "riled" Dockerty up, and he arose and said he was going. The boys helped him hitch up his team and he got on his wagon to start. He turned to Samuel and said "you'll get scorched financially for this." Arthur spoke up and said that he "ought not to make such threats," whereupon Dockerty reached for his revolver, saying that he would shoot him. At this Arthur drew his revolver and fired, the bullet going through the old man's cheek. This apparently stunned him and he climbed from the wagon and tried to keep on the opposite side of it from the boys. The team, however, moved on and left the man and boy facing one another, within a few feet of each other.

"Dockerty had his revolver up and the hammer half cocked. At this Arthur again shot, the ball taking effect in Dockerty's head, killing him instantly.

"Arthur Van Dusen then went into town and telling the story of how it was done, delivered himself a prisoner into the hands of the officers of the law. The day following, an inquest was held before 'Squire Barnard, with a jury composed of prominent citizens. The examination was conducted by H. A. Eastland, for the State, and Oscar F. Black on the part of the defense. The full facts in regard to the killing were brought out, and on reviewing them and investigating the matter thoroughly, they agreed on a verdict of justifiable homicide. The verdict seems to have met with universal satisfaction and approval."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE PRESS.

There is no instrumentality, not even excepting the pulpit and the bar, which exerts such an influence upon society as the press of the land. It is the Archimedean lever that moves the world. The talented minister of the gospel, on the Sabbath day, preaches to a few hundred people; on the following morning his thoughts are reproduced more than a thousand fold, and are read and discussed throughout the length and breadth of the land. The attorney at the bar, in thrilling tones, pleads either for or against the criminal arraigned for trial, often causing a jury to bring in a verdict against the law and evidence in the case. His words are reproduced in every daily that is reached by the telegraphic wire, and his arguments are calmly weighed by unprejudiced men and accepted for what they are worth. The politician takes the stand and addresses a handful of men upon the political questions of the day; his speech is reported and read by thousands of men for every one that heard the address. Suddenly the waters of one of our mighty rivers rise, overflowing the land for miles, rendering thousands of people homeless, and without means to secure their daily bread. The news is flashed over the wire, taken up by the press, and known and read by all men. No time is lost in sending to their relief; the press has made known their wants and they are instantly supplied. "Chicago is on fire! Two hundred millions worth of property destroyed! Fifty thousand people rendered homeless!" Such is the dread intelligence proclaimed by the Press. Food and clothing are hastily gathered, trains are chartered, and the immediate wants of the sufferers are in a measure relieved.

The power for good or evil of the Press is to-day unlimited; the shortcomings of the politician are made known through its columns; the dark deeds of the wicked are exposed, and each fear it alike. Indeed, the controlling influence of a Nation, State or county is its press.

The local press is justly considered among the most important institutions of every city, town and village. The people of every community regard their particular newspaper or newspapers as of peculiar value, and this not merely on account of the fact already alluded to, but because these papers are the repositories wherein are stored the facts and the events, the deeds and sayings, the undertakings and achievements, that go to make up final history. One by one these things are gathered and placed in type; one by one the papers are issued; one by one these papers are gathered together and bound, and another volume of local, general and individual history is laid away imperishable. The volumes thus collected are sifted by the historian, and the book for the library is ready.

The people of each city or town naturally have a pride in their home paper. The local press, as a rule, reflects the business enterprise of a place. Judging from this standard, the enterprise of the citizens of Richland county, is indeed commendable. Its papers are well filled each week with advertisements of home merchants and of its business enterprises.

REPUBLICAN AND OBSERVER.

Richland County Observer.

This paper was established in November, 1855, in the then new village of Richland Center by Israel Sanderson, and was the first in Richland county. The first issue made its appearance on the 20th of November, being a six column folio, very neatly made up and well printed. But little of the matter was editorial, it being mostly clipped from eastern papers. At the mast-head was placed the following: "A county and family newspaper; independent in all things, neutral in nothing."

The following is a list of the local advertisers in the first issue: D. B. Priest, W. F. Crawford, David Strickland and D. S. Hamilton, attorneys; S. W. Wallace, physician; L. D. Gage, land agency; Albert Nell, American Hotel; O. H. Northrup, wagon-maker; L. D. Gage, drugs; Milton Langdon and I. Janney, nursery; Milton Langdon, S. H. Austin, L. Dillingham and J. S. Wilson, general merchandise goods.

The only local items in the first paper relate to the marriage of Charles R. Nelson and Melinda A. Hawkins, and to the death of Louisa M. Austin, Helen L. Bowen and Thomas C. Carlton.

A lengthy salutatory was presented in the first issue, by Mr. Sanderson, from which the following is an extract:

"CITIZENS:—Having sought a location for the establishment of a public newspaper in your young and prosperous county, it is with pleasure that I announce to you, that with your aid and the blessing of good health, henceforward will be published at Richland Center the Richland County Observer. That this county is now advanced in wealth and population sufficient to keep in tolerable existence a well conducted public journal there can hardly be a doubt; but it must not be expected that the labors and exertions of its editor and proprietor alone can accomplish so desirable an end. Every man who feels for the welfare of his home and county, should remember that unless the county in which he lives can support a newspapaper, his property cannot be greatly enhanced in value, or his county respected; and hence to accomplish this, in so new a county, it is necessary for him to subscribe for his home paper, and advertise if he need to, previous to sending his money elsewhere, for such purposes. * * * I hope to meet with sufficient encouragement to enlarge the paper at the end of six months, which can only be done by the interest taken in it by the citizens of the county."

In regard to the mails of the county, showing the disadvantages under which the pioneer paper labored, the editor in the first issue makes the following remarks: "Until there is a different mail arrangement than the present, the readers of the Observer cannot reasonably expect to find news in its columns from Madison, except by chance, much short of a fortnight old. By reference to the notice published in another column, it will be seen that the mail service from Richland City to this place is badly arranged. Why two mails should leave Richland City for Richland Center the same day, we are at a loss to divine. This arrangement gives but one mail a week from that place."

The notice regarding the arrival and departure of mails referred to, was as follows:

"From Highland, Iowa county, by the way of Richland City and Sextonville, arriving at Richland Center every Wednesday, at 6 p. m. Leaves Richland Center for Highland every Thursday morning, at 6 a. m.

"Viroqua mail, by the way of Bad Ax, Kickapoo, Forest and Fancy Creek, arrives at Richland Center every Tuesday, at 11 a. m. Leaves for Richland City the same day, at 12 m., returning on Wednesday at 11 a. m., and leaving for Viroqua same day at 12 m.

"Mails for West Branch and Siresville arrive and depart every Wednesday, at 12 m."

In the second issue the following direction is given as to "where the Observer may be found": "Office in Mr. Charles Nelson's store building, back room. Entrance through the gate."

The only marriage notice in this issue is that of George Krouskop to Elizabeth Black. The ceremony was performed Nov. 22, 1855, by Rev. Alfred Brunson.

The second issue also contained an interesting description of Richland county, from which the following extract is gleaned:

RICHLAND COUNTY IN 1855.

"It is true that in 1850, from all that could be ascertained, the aggregate population of Richland county was but 993 inhabitants! To such as are not acquainted with the fact that the census of 1855 shows the population has increased to the almost incredible number of 5,584, it would be almost beyond belief, were it not known how rapidly some new regions of country in the United States have been settled. If it should increase at the same ratio for the next ten years, that it has for the last five, it will rank high among the counties of the State in population and wealth. Already it has a people that are making themselves respected abroad for their intelligence and enterprise; for, from a wilderness, where the Indian still found a hunting-ground, in five or six years they have made some parts of the county assume the appearance of having been settled a quarter of a century, whereas it is probably not more than twelve years since the first house was built within the boundaries now known as the county of Richland. This is, without doubt, one of the best watered and timbered counties in the State. There is sufficient water-power to be found on the streams to propel a vast amount of machinery. The streams are rapid, and hence great inducement is extended to the capitalist and machinist; and we hope, before many years, to see the locomotive traversing our valleys to take the lumber from our mills (to the counties almost timberless, in other parts of the State) which scores of saws have made. The county is divided by heavy ridges of land extending along the streams. These are covered with excellent timber, and are believed to be our best lands for the production of small grain, as the valleys have generally yielded the best corn, potatoes, etc. As far as proper experiments in the culture of all kinds of crops suited to this climate have been made, the soil has yielded immensely. It is a sandy loam, and consequently the seed expands into the plant with great rapidity. Fruit trees grow well, and the peach in particular, which gives great hope that the soil and situation of the country are suited to make it vigorous and productive."

The following sonnet to the Pine river appeared in the second issue of the Observer. It was written by Jane Hamilton, afterwards Mrs. John S. Wilson:

SONNET TO PINE RIVER.

Thou gently rolling stream,
 Round which trees and shrubs combine,
 How pleasantly the sun's bright beam
 Upon thy waters shine.
 Ah, how I love to gaze
 Upon thy waves so bright,
 And listen to thy murmurings
 With pleasure and delight.
 And as the sun is setting
 Behind the western hill,
 Thy course keeps onward moving,
 So gentle and so still;
 That one might almost wish to stay,
 To guide thee on thy happy way.

Israel Sanderson continued the publication of the Observer until 1858, when he was succeeded as editor and proprietor by J. Walworth. Mr. Sanderson removed to Platteville, Grant Co., Wis., where he established the Grant County Witness. He remained connected with that paper a year or two, when he drifted into southern Illinois, where he still resides. Mr. Sanderson was a man of ability, and a clear and forcible writer.

J. Walworth remained in charge of the paper until about 1864, when J. H. Waggoner became editor and proprietor. During 1864 and a portion of 1865 Mr. Waggoner was alone; after which, for a time, was associated with his brother, William J. Waggoner. He then again conducted the paper alone until in July, 1866, when he sold the office and good will of the paper to the firm of Walworth, Fogo & Hoskins—en personnel, J. Walworth, W. M. Fogo and J. M. Hoskins. This firm at once took charge of the paper and got out the issue dated July 5, 1866, enlarging it to an eight column folio, and otherwise much improving it. In speaking of their reasons for enlarging, the editor, Mr. Walworth, says: "The paper has so steadily grown in popular favor that it has by force of necessity become necessary to enlarge it to its present fair proportions. Friends have flocked to its support in such numbers that limits more confined than those to-day presented would not contain their favors. The Observer is the largest county paper published anywhere in western Wisconsin, between Madison and the Mississippi river."

On July 26, 1866, J. M. Hoskins retired from the partnership, and the firm became Walworth & Fogo. Mr. Hoskins was a bright and talented young man. He is now (1884) engaged in the banking business, and is postmaster at Sioux Rapids, Iowa.

Messrs. Walworth & Fogo continued the publication of the Observer until Aug. 1, 1867. During this time journalistic heat in Richland county reached its maximum. An opposition paper called the Live Republican had been started by Ira S. Haseltine and J. H. Waggoner, and the sharp thrusts, and the sarcastic articles which were passed, and the bitterness which existed between these two papers gained them a State reputation.

On Aug. 1, 1867, Walworth & Fogo sold the Observer to Messrs. C. H. Smith and G. L. Laws. The latter firm then bought up the Live Republican, the opposition sheet, and consolidated the two under the name of the discontinuing the publication of both the old papers.

Smith & Laws continued the publication of the "consolidated papers" for sometime, and were finally succeeded by James H. Waggoner and George D. Stevens, as Waggoner & Stevens. This firm remained editors and proprietors until 1870, when Mr. Stevens retired from the firm, leaving Mr. Waggoner sole editor and proprietor.

James H. Waggoner continued the publication of the Republican alone until in December, 1873, when W. M. Fogo purchased a half interest in the paper and the firm became Waggoner & Fogo. In September, 1874, G. L. Laws purchased J. H. Waggoner's interest, and the firm became Fogo & Laws.

Fogo & Laws conducted the paper until April 1, 1876, when O. G. Munson purchased G. L. Laws' interest in the same, and the partnership then formed, as Fogo & Munson, still continues. In January, 1881, Fogo & Munson purchased the material and good will of the Observer and consolidated it with the Republican changing the name to the under which title the paper is still published. The office of the Republican and Observer is equipped with a Potter cylinder press, with a capacity of taking 1000 impressions per hour, run by steam, and two job presses. It occupies the first floor of a fine two-story brick building seventy-four feet deep, which was erected by W. M. Fogo, in 1883.

The Republican and Observer, through all its changes of management, has occupied a high position in journalistic circles of the State and has been recognized as a prominent and influential newspaper, not simply as a local or provincial journal. It has always taken and maintained a leading position in the discussion of State and National affairs and all the current topics of the day. Under the enterprising management of its present proprietors it has attained a large circulation, wields a powerful influence and has extended and advanced its former State wide reputation. As a county paper, it is one of the ablest in the State, and is the just pride of the people of Richland county, who accord it a liberal support, and claim it as one of the permanent institutions of the county.

W. M. Fogo, senior editor of the Republican and Observer, is a son of John and Jane (Dreg-horn) Fogo, and was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, on the 18th day of June, 1841. He came with the family to Wisconsin in 1853, where he worked upon a farm until 1859, when he commenced work as apprentice in the office of the Richland County Democrat, of which W. P. Furey was at that time editor. He received as liberal an education as the common schools of his native State, and the then new Richland county afforded. On the 12th day of December, 1861, he enlisted in company F, 2d Wisconsin Cavalry, and served one year, when he was discharged on account of sickness. Regaining his health, again in August, 1864, he re-enlisted and was made Sergeant Major of the 42d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served with that rank until the regiment was mustered out at the close of the war. Returning to Richland Center he resumed newspaper work as one of the proprietors of the Richland County Observer. One year later he removed to Calumet county and established the Calumet Reflector, which he published one year. He then went to Iowa and soon afterward purchased an interest in the Howard County Times. In 1873 he returned to Richland Center, and has since been one of the proprietors of the Richland County Republican.

Mr. Fogo is an able editor; as a writer he is pungent and to the point, wasting no time trying to display what he can do, and under the management of himself and Mr. Munson, the Republican and Observer has become one of the leading county papers of the State. In addition to the foregoing, Mr. Fogo has served as bookkeeper and assistant clerk in the Wisconsin Assembly, and for a number of years has been secretary of the Richland County Agricultural Society, and is now Secretary of the Old Settlers' Association of Richland county. He is a Royal Arch Mason and highly esteemed and respected as a citizen. In 1866 he was united in marriage with Amelia St. John. They have two children—Emma C. and Stephen W.

THE LIVE REPUBLICAN.

This newspaper sprung into existence in 1866, as a result of disaffection and dissention in local politics. Ira S. Haseltine and James H. Waggoner were the founders. The first issue made its appearance in December, and was a seven column folio. As the sixteen years that have passed since these facts transpired, have so healed all differences that it is now considered as a joke, it will be interesting to notice some of the inside press history of that day.

From the cradle of the Live Republican, until it dropped from existence, there was the most bitter feeling and enmity between it and the Observer. It seems that in the fall of 1866, Ira S. Haseltine was nominated for member of the General Assembly by the Republicans, after a hard fight and a bitter opposition. Some of the Republicans were very much dissatisfied with the nomination. In commenting upon the result of the convention, the Observer presented an article which was really the cause of the Live Republican's establishment. In the course of the article the Observer remarked—referring to Mr. Haseltine—that it was “better to submit to an unwelcome necessity, than to sacrifice a single vote on national issues.” This made Haseltine very wrathful, and he accordingly established the Live Republican, in partnership with J. H. Waggoner, in December, 1866, as has been stated.

As a sample of the respects which were passed between the two papers, “in an editorial way,” an extract is presented which appeared in December, 1866. It is unnecessary to state in which paper this particular extract was published; for in those days the papers contained as bad and even worse articles every few weeks. The one editor, referring to the other, says:

“The young fledgling over the way, with a grand flourish of its brazen trumpet, publishes the above garbled extract from the * * *

which as a sweet morsel it rolls under its forked, glazy, slimy, copperhead tongue! You long-haired, long-eared, foul-mouthed, swarthy faced, whining, niggardly mule; you old stench of putrid rottenness, plagues and boils, why don't you publish the article in full and not garble it to suit your own contemptible purposes? It didn't look well, did it? ! ! — * * —!

The Live Republican continued in existence until Aug. 1, 1867, when it was sold to C. H. Smith and G. L. Laws, who also purchased the Observer at the same time. These two papers were consolidated under the name of Richland County Republican. A history of the latter paper has already been given.

THE OBSERVER.

In 1876 J. H. Waggoner established the second Observer. The first issue of this paper made its appearance on the 21st of December, 1876, as a six column quarto. It was very neatly gotten up and well edited, J. W. Waggoner being one of the finest writers the county has had. In presenting his paper to the public Mr. Waggoner, under the customary head of salutatory, said:

"With charity for all and malice toward none, as God gives us to see the right, the Observer greets every person to whom it may come. The paramount condition of existence is daily labor. Scarcely less imperative is the decree that mind and body be harmoniously employed to crown that life with happiness. The training of the boy will in most cases determine the pursuit in which the man is to reap his measure of contentment and success. January 14, 1856, I was installed as printer's devil in the office of the Richland County Observer, then a six column folio of a few weeks' existence; and in 1864 and 1865 I was its editor and proprietor. During more than one half of the twenty-one busy and eventful years that have been marked on the dial of time since the advent of the Observer, I have been identified with the struggles and prosperity of the local newspaper. The experiences of these years have decided my life labor."

In regard to the politics of the new paper Mr. Waggoner said:

"The Observer will be republican. I accept the progressive, liberal and humane policies of the Republican party as the fundamental ideas under which the republic is to be prospered and perpetuated. But this faith does not carry with it the blind sanction of every measure, nor the reckless endorsement of every man labelled 'republican.'"

James H. Waggoner remained connected with the Observer as long as it was continued, being associated at different times with C. E. and C. J. Glasier, as publishers, and with N. B. Burch upon the editorial staff.

In January, 1881, Fogo & Munson, the proprietors of the Richland County Republican, purchased the material and good will of the Observer and consolidated it with their paper, the Republican, changing the name to the Republican and Observer, as has been stated.

SATT'S PINE RIVER PILOT.

This was the odd title of a newspaper established at Richland Center in the fall of 1880, by M. F. Satterlee. It was a small paper, but sharp, and rather aggressive in its policy. The publication of the paper was continued until the spring of 1881, when it ceased to exist. Mr. Satterlee had been brought up in the county, his father having lived here for many years. After the Pilot ceased publication, the young man left the county. Satterlee is now at Neillsville, Clark county, where he is publishing a paper under the still odder name of The Owl.

THE RICHLAND DEMOCRAT.

This paper was established at Richland Center by Otis H. Brand in 1880. The first issue made its appearance on the 13th of August. It was an eight column folio, and was neatly printed and well edited. Mr. Brand was induced to come here by the Democrats of this vicinity, who deemed a paper of their creed necessary. He continued the publication of the paper until during the succeeding winter of 1880-1, when he was closed out by the sheriff, with a mortgage which he had given upon his office. After being closed out, as soon as he could settle his business affairs, Mr. Brand moved to Janesville, where he now occupies a responsible position upon the staff of the Daily Recorder.

The office of the Richland Democrat was sold by the sheriff, in January, 1881, and the material and office fixtures were bid in by Jerry A. Smith. The material was again put in shape and a paper was started, which has finally become

THE RICHLAND RUSTIC.

Jerry A. Smith got out his first issue Feb. 5, 1881, retaining the name of Richland Democrat. The name was afterward changed to The Democrat and Farmer, and finally in June, 1881, to the Richland Rustic, which name it still retains.

The Rustic was run as an eight column folio for a long time, and during the winter of 1883-4 was enlarged to an eight column quarto. The subscription price of the paper is only seventy-five cents per year, making it, as Mr. Smith can claim, the largest paper on earth for the price. It has a large circulation.

Jerry A. Smith, who is still the editor and proprietor of the Rustic, was born at Janesville, Wis., in 1858. His parents, M. C. and Bianca (Allen) Smith, still are residents of Janesville, where his father is among the most wealthy and prominent merchants and citizens. Jerry A.'s home remained at Janesville, save several years spent in travel, until 1880, when he came to Richland Center. He received a liberal business and general education, and this, having been supplemented by a wide business experience, it is unnecessary to say that he has made the Rustic a success in every way, and is abundantly able to continue the standard the paper has reached.

THE RICHLAND COUNTY DEMOCRAT.

This was the first democratic paper started in the county. It was established by William P. Furey in 1859, and was a neatly printed seven column folio. The paper continued in existence for about one year, when it died for want of patronage. The material was then purchased by J. Walworth, and added to the office of the Observer.

William P. Furey was originally from Bellefonte, Penn., and was a printer by trade. He came west in 1858 and worked for a short time in a newspaper office at Darlington, Wis. During the winter of 1858-9 he went to Warren, Ill., and worked for a few months in what is now the Sentinel office. After which he came to Richland Center and established the Richland County Democrat. After remaining a number of years in the west, he went back to Pennsylvania and engaged in the publishing business at Altoona. In 1880 his health began to fail, being attacked by that dread disease consumption. In January, 1881, accompanied by his wife he went to San Antonio, Texas, hoping to benefit his health, but had hardly reached the place before he died. He was a man of a great deal of both natural and acquired ability, and a very able and brilliant writer, and speaker.

THE ZOUAVE.

This was the title of a paper established at Richland Center about 1863, by E. M. Gregory & Co. It was a six column folio, devoted to the interest of soldiers and literary matter, more than to local and general news. The editor was Mrs. Bloomer, whose literary nom de plume was "Lisle Lester." The publication of the paper was continued only for a few months.

Mrs. Bloomer, left the county upon the discontinuance of the publication of the paper, and finally drifted out to California, where she still lives, having married a prominent lawyer in San Francisco. She was an active and intelligent business woman, and a tasty and pungent writer. Mr. Gregory left Richland county at the same time and went to the northern part of the State. His whereabouts are now unknown.

THE SENTINEL.

This paper was established at Richland Center in the fall of 1867, by J. Walworth. Shortly after selling his interest in the Richland County Observer, and the discontinuance of that paper, Mr. Walworth went to Fond du Lac and purchased the material with which he founded the Sentinel. The new paper was an eight column folio, and was well gotten up. Mr. Walworth continued the publication of the Sentinel for three years, building up a lucrative business. He then rented the office to E. Pickard, who managed the paper for some time and then its publication was discontinued.

THE INDEPENDENT.

This paper was started by J. Walworth, in the spring of 1872, using the press and material formerly in the Sentinel office. The first issue of the Independent was dated March 15, 1872. It was a seven column folio with patent insides. J. Walworth was editor and M. F. Satterlee and Frank Johnson, publishers. Mr. Johnson was local editor. The terms of subscription for the new paper fixed $1.50 per year, if not paid in advance; $1.25 per year when paid in advance.

The following extract from the salutatory, which Mr. Walworth presented in his first issue of the Sentinel, contains the outlined policy of the paper:

"Honestly dissenting from the practical policy of the present (Grant's) administration, we take our humble position with the many thousands of as good, intelligent and patriotic Republicans as ever held an office, or cast a vote for Gen. Grant, who are now in favor of a reform of the government, a change in its policy, economy in its expenses and honesty in its officials, and are ready, all over the country to fall into line and labor arduously for the good of the whole country, instead of a mere party."

Mr. Walworth continued the publication of the paper for several years, the Sentinel becoming an influential and prominent organ. He finally gave Chas. B. Walworth a one-half interest in the office and the material and fixtures were moved to Boscobel and used in the establishment of the Dial, at that place.

THE RICHLAND UNION DEMOCRAT.

This newspaper was established at Richland Center in January, 1884, by Flickner & Cook. The first issue made its appearance Jan. 4, 1884, as a six column quarto, being neatly printed and well filled with local and general news. The name of Levi H. Cook appears as editor and P. Flickner as publisher. In presenting their paper to the public, addressing the "citizens of Richland Center and the county at large," the editor says:

"We present you this day with the first issue of the Richland Union Democrat, a forty-eight column newspaper, which we propose to publish hereafter every Friday afternoon.

"In presenting this paper to the public, we will say: it will be the endeavor of the Democrat to keep its readers posted on all points of general interest of the day; also, to advocate such measures as may tend to the advancement and upbuilding of the place, and to promote the welfare and prosperity of its citizens and the county at large.

"Politically the Democrat will be what its mast head indicates—a straight-out-and-out democratic journal—an exponent of pure democracy. Believing the best interests of the country demand a change in the political management of the governmental ship, it will labor to obtain this end, and defend the party and its rights with all the ability it possesses; yet while it so labors, it desires the existence of friendship's bonds and the unity of peace.

"Its local department will contain a variety of news from the surrounding townships, as well as items of home interest.

"For the benefit of our farming patrons we will publish a complete market report which will be corrected weekly before going to press. In a word, no pains will be spared to make the Democrat a first-class local paper. Our advertising columns are open to all, we reserving the right to reject what we may consider 'objectional matter.'

"In conclusion we will say we have come to stay, and with this understanding shall expect all who are interested in the enterprise to come to the front at once and subscribe, especially all true democrats who have the cause at heart and wish to see that party once more in the ascendancy. We need a change, the people demand it, and are bound to have it if all will do their duty. We expect to do ours, but in these days of improvement the old 'one horse power' is all out of use, and nothing but a united effort, a 'long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether,' is going to accomplish the end in view.

"Again we say, we are here to stay, our outfit is our own, is paid for, and with the aid and support that we shall naturally expect, will endeavor to keep the same from under the sheriff's hammer.

"We shall aim to place our paper on a high moral basis, and in so doing it will not be unlikely that occasionally we may publish that which may appear to some objectionable, while to others it would be just the right thing in the right place. Being honest in our convictions, whatever we do will be done with an eye single to the best interests of the party in the soon coming campaign.

"In matters of difference of opinion as regards party polity, we generously and courteously grant that privilege, and shall expect the same with the same generosity and forbearance.

"With the encouragement already manifested we ought to swell our list to 800 or 1000 by the first of April."

At the masthead appears the significant sentence: "Bring again to the field the daring alacrity of Jackson." The Union Democrat has a well equipped office; having a Prouty power press with a capacity of taking 800 impressions an hour; excellent job presses and latest styles of type. The Union Democrat starts out under able management and with very flattering prospects for the future.

Peter Flickner, senior member of the firm of Flickner & Cook, was born in New Jersey, in 1819. His parents, Jacob and Hannah (Young) Flickner, were of German descent. His father, in early life, was a weaver, but in later days followed farming. Peter Flickner remained in New Jersey until about thirty-one years of age, when he came to Wisconsin in what is now Walworth county. There he went into the wagon-making business, remaining for two years, after which he returned to New Jersey, and spent a couple of years there. While on his return west, on April 5, 1855, he was married to Mary Young, at Xenia, Ohio. Upon his re-arrival in Wisconsin he settled at Delton, Sauk county, and again engaged in the manufacture of wagons. Delton has remained his home most of the time since. Mr. Flickner is an educated man, affable and pleasant, and possesses the elements to make him popular among all with whom he comes in contact.

Levi H. Cook, junior member of the firm of Flickner & Cook, and editor of the Union Democrat, was born near Oconomowoc, Wis., on the 6th of July, 1849. His parents were Martin S. and Mary E. (Remington) Cook; his father being a carpenter and mechanic by trade. When Levi H. was three years of age his parents removed to Iowa and settled at Volga City. There they remained until 1861, when they returned to Wisconsin and located at Horicon, Dodge county. The father there enlisted in company C, 29th regiment, Wisconsin Infantry, and went into the service as sergeant. The family remained at Horicon until the father's return in 1865. At this time the mother died, and Levi H. left home, going to Leroy, Wis., where for three years he was engaged at doing chores and attending school. After that time he went to Fond du Lac City, where he was engaged in the paper mills, and remained until twenty-two years of age. While there he was married to Sarah M. Hubbard, of Oakfield, Wis. After leaving Fond du Lac, he was engaged in the ministry for the Advent Christian Church. In 1880 he located at Delton, Sauk county, and followed his profession until 1882, when he established the Mirror Lake Echo, a newspaper at that place, and conducted that paper for one year. In January, 1884, in company with Mr. Flickner, he established the Union Democrat, as stated, and is now a settled resident of Richland Center. Mr. and Mrs. Cook are the parents of three children—Morton R., Fred L. and Alva W.

LONE ROCK PILOT.

A paper of this name was established at Lone Rock, in the year 1875 by M. F. Satterlee, being printed in the office of the Richland County Republican, and circulated at Lone Rock. Its publication was continued about one year.

With the exception of the Pilot, all the papers that have ever been published in the county, were published at Richland Center.

CHAPTER XIX.

TOWN OF AKAN.

The town of Akan is one of the western tier of Richland county's towns, the second from the south, embracing congressional township 10 north, of range 2 west. It is bounded on the north by the town of Sylvan; on the east by Dayton; on the south by Richwood; and on the west by Crawford county. The surface of the town is well watered by Mill and Knapp's creeks, and their numerous tributaries. The valleys are very fertile and in many cases the ridges furnish excellent farming land. Wherever an enterprising farmer has taken hold and cleared land, a good and profitable farm has rewarded him. As yet there is considerable unimproved land in the town, which will probably in the near future be cleared and brought under cultivation.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Akan was effected in the spring of 1851 by Martin Munson, Ole Johnson and John Torgerson, a party of Norwegians, who came from Dodgeville. Martin Munson entered land on sections 26 and 27, where he erected a log cabin and commenced improvements. This was then on what might be called the extreme frontier, and many travelers on their way westward were entertained in Munson's little log cabin. Mr. Munson was an industrious and thrifty man and accumulated considerable property. He remained here until the time of his death, and his widow now lives on section 27.

Ole Johnson entered the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 35. He died there on the 18th of March, 1855. His widow married Christian Jacobson and still resides in the town.

John Torgerson remained but a short time and then returned to Dodgeville. Two years later he came back and entered the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 33, where he still lives.

Nels Hanson, who also came with this party, settled in the town of Richwood where he still lives.

B. C. Hallin, a native of Ireland, came here in 1852 and entered land on sections 17 and 18, but did not settle here until 1854. He now lives in the town of Richland.

William Elder, a Virginian, was an early settler in the southern part of Richland county. He made a business of showing the pioneers land, and did a great deal toward the settling up of this region. In 1855 he settled on section 3, in the town of Akan. He resided in the town for a few years, then went to Crawford county and later removed to Dakota territory where he died. He was with the government surveyors when they surveyed the town of Akan and was noted as a great hunter and an extra good marksman.

David Woodruff came here in 1854 and settled on the southeast quarter of section 3. In 1875 he sold out and moved to Dakota. He now lives in Otter Tail Co., Minn.

James Brady, a native of Ireland, came in 1854 and settled just over the line in Crawford county. In 1861 he purchased land on section 19, this town, where he has since resided.

Lewis Deitder, a native of Germany, came here in 1854 and settled on section 25, where he still lives. He was accompanied by his father and three brothers. For a time they all lived together, the father and one of the brothers dying here. The rest are still residents of the county.

George Hall, an Irishman, and a veteran of the Mexican War, came here in 1853 and entered 160 acres on sections 19 and 20. He remained about two years, then sold out and left. The locality in which he settled has since been called Hall's bottom.

William Anderson, a native of Indiana, came in 1854 and settled on the southwest quarter of section 30. He remained about three years and then returned to Indiana.

A Scotchman named Penny came in 1854 and settled on the northwest quarter of section 27. He improved a farm and remained for several years, when he went to Minnesota.

William Smith, an Englishman, came at the same time and located on section 21. He went to Minnesota with Penny.

Samuel Yager was an early settler in the town of Eagle. In 1854 he came to Akan and located on the southwest quarter of section 21. He was a veteran of the Mexican War. He was a cabinet maker by trade and put up a shop, in which he manufactured chairs, bedsteads, etc. When the war broke out, he enlisted and served until its close. Having ruined his health in the service, soon after his return he sold out and removed to Excelsior, where he still lives.

Joseph Dunson came in 1854 and settled on section 23, where he cleared a farm and lived for some years. He afterwards removed to Richwood, where he died.

Horace Waite, from Ohio, came here in 1855 and settled on the northwest quarter of section 3. He cleared a small tract of land and remained here about three years, when he sold out and went to Orion, where he engaged in the mercantile trade. During war times he went to Canada. He now lives at Muscoda.

Esec Spreig came from Illinois in the fall of 1854, and settled on the northeast quarter of section 4. Four or five years later he sold out and returned to Illinois.

Zenas W. Bevier, a native of New York State, came here in 1855, from Rock Co., Wis. He entered 120 acres of land on section 2, and lived here until the time of his death.

Frank Morningstar, a German, came here in the fall of 1855, and settled on section 2. He cleared a good farm and made this his home until he died.

Mathew Ryan, an Irishman, also came in 1855. He settled on section 3.

Jefferson Smith came here from Illinois in 1855, and settled on the northeast quarter of section 6. He cleared a small tract of land and remained here about twelve years, when he removed to Richwood. He is now dead.

Julius Jenks also came from Illinois during the same year. He settled on the northeast quarter of section 8, where he remained for some years and then went to the mountains.

William Percy came in 1855 and claimed the northeast quarter of section 9. He afterwards sold his claim and left the country after a short stop.

Jacob Lawrence purchased Percy's claim and improved it. He lived here until 1875, when he sold out and removed to the town of Eagle. He is now in the mercantile trade at Eagle Corners.

John Chitwood, a native of Tennessee, came from Indiana in 1855 and settled on the northeast quarter of section 5, where he lived until the time of his death. He raised fifteen children, and the widow and a number of children are still living in the county.

Patrick Hines, a native of Ireland, came in 1855 and settled on section 30, where he still lives.

William Dobbs, a native of Tennessee, came here from Lafayette Co., Wis., in the spring of 1855, and entered 360 acres of land on sections 5, 6, 7 and 8. He lived here for a number of years, and then went to the Black river country. He afterwards returned and settled in Richwood, where he died in 1876. Two of his sons are still living in the town.

Henry Bailey, a native of Rhode Island, came in 1855 and settled on section 7. He now lives in Nebraska. Two of his sons are still residents of this town.

David Clancy, a native of Ireland, came in 1855 and entered land on section 15 where he still lives.

James Bachtenkircher, a native of Ohio, came to this county from Indiana in 1855, and located in the town of Sylvan. In 1878 he moved into the town of Akan, and is still a resident.

Squire Shaffer, a native of Ohio, came here in 1856 and settled on the southwest quarter of section 1, where he still lives.

F. A. Harsha, a Kentuckian, came here from Iowa county in 1856, and settled on section 36, where he still lives.

John Kelly, a native of Ireland, came here from Madison in 1856 and settled on section 18, where he still lives.

William Core, a native of New Jersey, came here from Orion in 1856, and purchased land on section 24. He was the first settler in the locality known as Core Hollow, it being named after him.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in district No. 1 was taught, in 1856, by Martha A. Funson, at the residence of Zenas W. Bevier. In 1857 a temporary log school house was erected by the district, in which Sarah Wood was the first teacher. In 1868 this building was destroyed by fire, and the present house was erected upon the site.

The first school house in district No. 2 was erected in 1860, of hewn logs. The first term of school was taught by Charity Williams, on the subscription plan. She "boarded round." This school house was used until 1881, when the district erected a frame building on the northeast quarter of section 9, about forty rods west of the site of the old building. Nettie Harris was the first teacher in the new house.

The first school in district No. 3 was taught by George Watson, in the winter of 1856-7, in a house belonging to William Dobbs. A few years later a log school house was erected on the southwest quarter of section 5. In 1869 the present school house was erected on the southeast quarter of section 6, of hewn logs. Cordelia Daggett was the first teacher in this building.

The first school house in district No. 4 was built in 1859, of logs, and covered with shakes. It was located on the southeast quarter of section 18. J. J. Brown was the first teacher. This building was used until 1880, when the present school house was erected near the old site. Alice Hallin was the first teacher in this house.

The first school in district No. 5 was taught in a house belonging to D. F. Coates, which was located on the southwest quarter of section 22. Mary Ann Fay and T. J. Ellsworth were among the first teachers in the district. The first school house erected was a log one, which was located on D. F. Coates' land. The present school house is located on the southwest quarter of section 15.

The school house in district No. 6 was erected in 1861. It is of logs, located on the northwest quarter of section 24. Amelia Van Alstine was the first teacher in this house. Belle Glass is the present teacher.

The first school in district No. 7 was taught by Annie Humbert, in D. D. Evans' house on section 36. In 1866 a log school house was erected on the northwest quarter of section 36. This house was used but a few years when a neat frame building was erected on the same site.

The first school in district No. 8 was taught by Susanna Bolton, in a little log school house located on the southeast quarter of section 33.

The school house is now located on the south-west quarter of section 27.

The first school house in district No. 9 was a log one erected on the northeast quarter of section 31, during the war. Maria Maroney was the first teacher. The first school house was destroyed by fire a few years after its erection, and the present frame house was built on the old site.

RELIGIOUS.

At an early day the Methodists held services in the northeastern part of the town, and a class was organized that flourished for several years. Prominent among the members were David Woodruff and wife, Mrs. Polly Crothers, Mrs. Esther Barnes, and Elijah Austin and wife. Rev. Prince was the first preacher, and after him Revs. Hafus, Walker and Elihu Bailey at different times officiated. The class only remained in existence for a few years, and then, as some of the members moved away, it was dropped.

The United Brethren organized at the school house shortly after the discontinuance of the Methodist class. Most of its members had belonged to the M. E. class. Rev. Potts was the first minister for the United Brethren class. Among the ministers who have filled the pulpit since are Revs. Young, Wright, Snell and Haskins. This class was continued for several years.

In 1873 the Christians organized a church in the school house of district No. 3, under the management of Revs. Jacob Felton and Lewis Himes. Among the first members of this church were Albert S. Bailey and wife, Mrs. Amanda Ross, Michael McMillan and wife, Isaac Ferguson, William Fosnow and wife, John Beaman and Wilson Slayback and wife. John Beaman was elected the first class leader. This class met at the school house for about two years, and then merged with the Harmony Church. Revs. Himes, Felton and Pucket were among the pastors of the church. A Sabbath school was organized at the same time as this church, with John Beaman as superintendent. It met weekly and had a good attendance.

AKAN POSTOFFICE.

This postoffice was established in 1856, with Zenas W. Bevier as postmaster. The office was kept at his house on the northeast quarter of section 2, and was on the mail route from Muscoda to Viroqua. Mr. Bevier was postmaster until the time of his death in 1861. D. D. Woodruff was then appointed postmaster and the office was removed across the line to the town of Sylvan. He was succeeded by Perry Dayton, and then in order came Mrs. Zenas Bevier, Mrs. William Smith, Edgar Harvey and William M. Bevier, who was the last postmaster. He resigned in 1877 and the office was discontinued.

BRADY'S POSTOFFICE.

This postoffice was established in 1868. James Brady was appointed first postmaster and has kept the office ever since at his residence on section 19. At first the office was on the route from Richland Center to De Soto, and mail was received once each week. At present it is on the mail route from Muscoda to Sugar Grove, and mail is received once a week from each way.

SAW MILLS.

In 1856 Isaac Miles erected a saw-mill on section 30. A dam was thrown across Knapp's creek and the mill was equipped with an up and down saw. He ran the mill for a few years and then sold to A. Wright, of Muscoda, Grant county, who rented the mill to different parties. Anthony Tracy is the present owner of the property, but the dam has gone out and the mill is no longer in use. This mill was not a success.

About 1853 a man named Barnes settled on the southwest quarter of section 12. He here erected a saw-mill, deriving the power from Mill creek. It was furnished with an up and down saw. It was a small affair, and was only run for a few years. The old frame is still standing, a monument to an unsuccessful enterprise.

During the war, William Osborne erected a flouring mill on the west branch of Mill creek, being aided in the enterprise by the citizens in the neighborhood. This was shortly after the Boaz mill had been burned, and Rodolf's was the nearest mill for this neighborhood. Mr. Osborne built a dam of brush and dirt, which set the water back and sent it through a race, which carried it to a spring under the bluffs. The outlet of the spring formed the tail race. A small frame building, boarded up and down with pine lumber was erected and one run of buhrs was put in. The mill did a good business until the mill at Boaz was rebuilt, soon after which Osborne traded the property to Edgar Harvey, of Richwood, for a farm. Mr. Harvey operated the mill for a time, and then disposed of it. Since that time it has changed hands frequently, and has not been running constantly. The present proprietor is William McRobbins, who has repaired the building and refurnished the mill. It still has one run of buhrs and the necessary machinery for doing good work. A saw-mill equipped with a rotary saw has recently been attached.

STORES.

At an early day, J. J. Brown, a school teacher, opened a store on section 7. He purchased his stock of goods of Pease & Baker, at Richland Center. His means were limited, and for a time he worked under disadvantages. He did a credit business, often trusting parties whom other merchants refused; but he was a shrewd business man and a good collector, and made money rapidly. In a short time he removed to Excelsior and opened a store there. He is still in trade there, and is one of the most substantial merchants in the county.

James Brady opened a store at his home, and for about ten years kept a general stock of goods and did a good business. At the end of this period he closed out, and has since devoted his time to farming.

ORGANIC.

The town of Akan was created by the county board of supervisors at the November session, 1855. It was organized at a town meeting held at the house of Martin Munson, April 1, 1856. The inspectors of the election were Zenas W. Bevier, Henry Miller and Julius C. Jenks. George Barnes was clerk. The following were the first town officers elected: Supervisors, Zenas W. Bevier, chairman, Rawley Crothers and Votany Butman; clerk, G. R. Barnes; superintendent of schools, Zenas W. Bevier; treasurer, William Anderson; justices of the peace, William Anderson and G. R. Barnes; constables, William Elder and Joseph Dunson; assessor, William Elder. There were twenty-eight votes polled at this election.

At the annual town meeting held at the Center school house April 3, 1883 there were 114 votes polled, and the following officers were elected: Supervisors, James Bachtenkircher, chairman; John Huffman, Levi Pierce; clerk, A. M. Turgasen; treasurer, George Armstrong (appointed); assessor, C. E. Clarkson; justices, James Bachtenkircher, J. L. Puckitt, A. D. Dennison and F. M. Shafer; constables, G. W. Hartman, Tim Kelly and W. H. Helm; health officer, Robert Webb.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following personal sketches will show who are the wide-awake, energetic citizens of this town, and of whom too much cannot be said:

John Turgasen became a pioneer of 1853, and, although then possessed of no means, has been very industrious, economical, and exhibited such excellent management, that he is now considered one of the wealthiest farmers of Richland county. He was born in Norway, Jan. 21, 1824. Like the greater portion of his countrymen, he passed his earlier life on the farm and at school. In 1849 he emigrated to America, landing at the port of New York. He started for Wisconsin, going up the Hudson river to Albany, thence by the Erie canal to Buffalo, where he took a lake steamer for Milwaukee. From thence he went to Dane Co., Wis., and three weeks later to Dodgeville, where he obtained employment in the mines and at the smelting furnaces. In 1851 he came to Richland county, but did not then effect a settlement. He returned to Dodgeville, where he remained two years. He then removed his family to Richland county, and entered land on section 33, of town 10 north, of range 2 west. He has never removed from his first settlement, but during the years that have elapsed, has added little by little to his possessions and has been blessed beyond his earlier expectations. He has a beautiful home, and his family are surrounded by all the comforts of life. Mr. Turgasen was married, in 1849, to Annie Frederick, who died in May, 1857, leaving two children—Thomas L. and Anton M. His second and present wife was Helena Hanson, to whom he was married in 1858. Mrs. Turgasen is a very estimable lady, and highly respected by her large circle of acquaintances.

Lewis Dobbs, son of William and Mary (Helms) Dobbs, pioneers of the town of Akan, was born in Lafayette Co., Wis., March 14, 1850, and was five years old when he came to Richland county with his parents. Here he grew to manhood, assisting his father upon the farm and attending the district school. He was married in May, 1876, to Lucina, daughter of James and Eliza (Peters) McWilliams. She was born in Ohio. Soon after marriage they settled on their present farm on Knapp's creek, on sections 7 and 18. They have three children—Nettie, Ole and George.

John Kelly, an early settler of Akan, was born in the parish of Egles, county of Tipperary, Ireland, in 1821, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1848 he left his native land and came to America, landed at New York, and from there went to Fort Washington, a point ten miles distant, where he obtained employment on a railroad, then in process of construction. He continued working there eight months, then went to Ohio and engaged in farming a short time, then to Bedford, and worked on the Pittsburg & Cleveland railroad two years, thence to Akron where he was employed on the Clinton extension two years. He next purchased two pairs of horses and engaged in teaming at Hudson, three months. He then came to Wisconsin and was first employed in railroading near Waukesha. He continued in that business until 1856. By this time he had saved enough of his hard earnings to purchase a home. He came to Richland county in the fall of that year and bought eighty acres of timber land on section 18. He constructed a rude shelter of poles, and covered it with "shakes." Then commenced cutting logs with which to build a more permanent abode, into which they moved when completed. He brought two horses, a colt and seven head of horned cattle with him. The following winter being a very severe one, his horses, and all but two of his cattle perished, leaving him without a team. During the winter he had cleared some land, and the following season he chopped in seed and raised a crop of corn and garden vegetables which served to keep the wolf from the door during the following winter. For such provisions as he was obliged to buy, he had to go to Orion and Muscoda, and could hire them brought as far as Excelsior; the remainder of the distance, he packed them on his back. In spite of all these hardships he kept up courage, and worked away and his good judgment and industry combined have made him successful in life. He is now the owner of 240 acres, about 150 of which are under cultivation. A neat and commodious frame house has taken the place of the log cabin of pioneer time. He is engaged in raising grain and stock. He now keeps from thirty to forty head of cattle and 150 sheep, besides other stock. Mr. Kelly was married in 1850 to Sarah Monohan, also a native of Tipperary, Ireland. They have seven children—Timothy, Bridget, Sarah, Maria, William, John and Francis.

John H. Rizer, a pioneer settler of Dayton, was born in Pittsburg, Penn., Feb. 10, 1830. His father was an edge tool maker in that city. In 1835 the family moved to Maryland and lived four years; thence to Tippecanoe Co., Ind., where his father purchased land and engaged in farming. Four years later his father died, leaving a wife and six children, the youngest an infant of six months. Six months after the father's death the mother died and the children became scattered. At the age of sixteen the subject of this sketch engaged with a tinner in Lafayette, Ind., to learn the trade. He served three years, then worked on a farm in Tippecanoe Co., Ind. He was married March 23, 1852, to Mary E. Berry, born in Warren Co., Ohio, Nov. 2, 1827. He then rented a farm in the same county until 1854. In that year they started for Wisconsin with an ox team, taking their household goods and provisions with them, and camping at night by the roadside. After traveling seventeen days they arrived in Richland county. He entered land on section 20, of town 10, range 1 west, now known as Dayton, camping in the woods till they built a log cabin. In 1860 he, like many others, became excited with the so-called gold fever and started for Pike's Peak, where he was engaged in mining and prospecting a few months. He then returned to Richland county and purchased timber land on section 12, town of Akan, where he claimed a farm and built a good frame house. In 1882 he bought a farm on section 11, moved there and engaged in the dairy business, which was a new departure in that town. His example has since been followed by some of his neighbors. In 1882 he milked nineteen cows; in 1883 twenty-five. His farm now contains 302 acres, 180 of which are tillage and pasture land. It is well supplied with good water from a never failing spring, and being good grazing land is well adapted for a dairy farm. Mr. and Mrs. Rizer have three children living—Marquis D., Lorena and Clara, also an adopted son, Willie. Mr. Rizer is of a genial, pleasant disposition and generally popular in the neighborhood in which he resides.

James Brady was a pioneer of Crawford county, where he settled in 1854. He is a native of Ireland, born in the parish of Kilshere, county Meath, in August, 1826. Here his younger days were spent on the farm, and in the subscription school, where he received a liberal education. In 1850 he bid adieu to his native land and sailed for America. He landed at New York and engaged at work in the machine shops of the Empire Stone Dressing Company, and remained there until 1854, when he came to Crawford county as before stated. He came on the cars to Madison, thence by stage to Highland, then started on foot to seek a home. He crossed the Wisconsin river at Port Andrew, on the 4th of July. He entered land on section 24, town 10, range 3 west, now known as the town of Clayton. He then returned to Madison and remained until October, when he hired a team to convey him to his western home. He thus had transportation as far as Martin Munson's in the town of Akan, at that time, the end of the road. He then procured an ox team and proceeded on his way. He camped on Knapp's creek while he built a log cabin, moving into it as soon as possible, and commenced clearing, and the following year he planted four acres of corn, and in the fall sowed four acres of wheat on ground that never had been plowed. He worked his land without any team until 1857, when he bought a yoke of steers. He lived on this farm until 1861, then purchased land in Akan, on section 19, with some improvements, and lived on it until 1874, when he erected a frame house 20x30 feet, and two stories high. In 1882 he made an addition 20x30 feet, with a stone basement under the whole. He also has a frame barn 30x40 feet, with a stone basement. He now has 260 acres of land, 140 of which is cleared and farmed. He is largely engaged in raising grain and stock. He has always taken a lively interest in town and county affairs. He has served as town clerk six years, as treasurer six years, and as chairman of the board five years. He has also been postmaster of Brady's office since it was established in 1868. He has been twice married, first in 1853, to Ann Torney, who was born in county Meath, Ireland. She died in 1861, leaving two children—Katie and Mary. His second wife to whom he was married in 1867 was Mary J. Hagerty, she was born in Honsdale, Penn. They have had nine children—Teresa J., James, Thomas F., Martha J., Margaret, Rosanna, John J., Louisa and Edward. The latter died in infancy. His second wife died July 28, 1883, and was buried in St. Philip's churchyard, in Crawford county.

C. E. Closson, the present assessor of the town of Akan, is a native of Sweden, born June 9, 1822. He attended school as soon as old enough, until fifteen years of age, then engaged to learn the trade of dyer, at which he worked until 1849, then came to America, landed at New York, and immediately started for Chicago, going up the Hudson river by steamboat, thence on Erie canal to Buffalo; thence by steamboat to Chicago, where he remained two and one-half years, then went to Kane Co., Ill., and remained until 1855, when he started with an ox team, accompanied by his family, for Wisconsin. They took household goods and provisions with them, camping out in true emigrant style. After three weeks of travel they arrived in Crawford county. He entered land on section 3, of town 9, range 3 west, now known as the town of Scott. The family lived with a neighbor until he could build a log cabin. He continued clearing land and farming until 1862. He enlisted in August of that year in company G, 33d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south, served until after the close of the war, and was then discharged with the regiment. Among the battles in which he participated are Nashville and siege of Vicksburg.

He was with Banks on his Red river expedition, and engaged in the battles of Pleasant Hill, Tupelo and Spanish Fort. While in the army he received a sunstroke, from the effects of which he has never fully recovered. He was promoted to rank of corporal in 1863, and to sergeant soon after. Upon returning, he resumed farming in Crawford county until 1866, then sold out and purchased his present farm on section 33, where he has since lived. He was married in 1848 to Martha Linsten, also a native of Sweden, born Jan. 19, 1822. They have had six children, five of whom are now living—Frank, William, Lizzie, Maggie and Andrew. The first child, called Elizabeth, was born on the ocean, Sept. 22, 1849. She died in Chicago Sept. 22, 1850. Mr. Closson is educated in English as well as in Swede, and has held offices of trust in the town. He has been a member of the town board, and is now serving his fourth term as assessor, twelfth term as district treasurer, and has always performed the duties thus imposed upon him to the satisfaction of the people.

Robert Webb came to the town of Akan in 1868, and purchased the northwest quarter of section 5, which was at that time timber land. He immediately began clearing, and now has seventy acres of cleared land, and one of the best farms in the town. The log cabin, in which the family lived eleven years, has been replaced by a good frame house. He was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., Sept. 5, 1825. When he was seven years old his parents moved to Ohio, and settled in Geauga county, where his father died two years later. At the age of sixteen he went to Cleveland, and was there employed by B. Harrington two years. Mr. Harrington was the possessor of a large library, to which the subject of this sketch had access, an opportunity for improving his mind and advancing his education which he did not fail to take advantage of. He returned to Geauga county and remained two years. He came to Wisconsin in 1845, and located in Rock county, purchased land in the town of Magnolia, improved a farm and lived there until 1853, when he sold, and moved to Green county. He purchased property in the village of Albany and opened a livery stable; also practiced as a veterinary surgeon, in which he was successful. He dealt largely in horses and in real estate. In 1868 he sold his interests there and came to Akan. Mr. Webb is a man of intelligence, and is well informed. He served several years as special deputy sheriff of Green county, and as constable of the village of Albany. He has served four years as justice of the peace in the town of Akan. He has been twice married, first to Lydia A. Dunbar, a native of Oneida Co., N. Y. She died March 7, 1864, leaving three children—Sarah J., Elizabeth A. and Charles S. He was again married Dec. 31, 1866, to Elizabeth Mackey, who was born in Union Co., Penn. By this union there are two children—William E. and Cora A.

James Bahtenkircher, an early settler in the town of Sylvan, was born in Claremont Co. Ohio, April 15, 1835. When he was eleven years old, his parents emigrated to Clinton Co., Ind. His father was born in Germany, but was brought to America by his parents when only a year old. He grew to manhood's estate in the city of Philadelphia, receiving a good education in both English and German, and became a teacher by profession. The people in that part of Clinton county in which he settled were mostly of German descent, and he here engaged at his profession. The subject of this sketch received a liberal education, and remained with his parents until 1855. He then came to Richland county and located in the town of Sylvan. He did not, however, settle permanently, being at that time unmarried, but engaged in hunting and amusing himself generally. He killed many deer and other smaller game. At the end of one year he returned to Indiana and engaged with a carpenter and joiner to learn the trade, with whom he served two years. He then returned to Sylvan and worked at his trade two years. In 1860, in company with Michael Snyder, he started for Pike's Peak, traveling in a wagon drawn by a pair of oxen. At Council Bluffs they purchased a supply of provision for a year. After fifty-two days travel, they reached Central City, Col., where he worked at his trade until November. He then yoked his oxen and started on his return to Sylvan. He was united in marriage in the spring of 1861, with Sarah A., daughter of Hezekiah and Hannah (Sayers) Slaback, early settlers of the town of Sylvan. She was born in Tippecanoe Co., Ind. In 1862 he bought land on section 30, of Sylvan, and was engaged in farming during the summer and in teaching school in the winter. In 1864 he sold his farm and purchased land on section 29, where he lived until 1869. Then becoming excited by the so-called western fever, sold his land and removed to Kansas. He made a claim in Wilson county and engaged in farming, also worked at his trade until 1872, when he returned to Richland county and rented land in the town of Akan, until 1877. He then purchased his present farm, which is located on section 8. Mr. and Mrs. Bahtenkircher have four children living—Dolphus, Fred, Frank and Nettie. Mr. Bahtenkircher is a man who possesses the confidence and respect of the community. He has been, and is still prominent and influential in public affairs. He served as clerk, assessor and justice of the peace, in Sylvan, and has been justice of the peace in Akan, since his residence here, and is now chairman of the town board.

Edgar Ward, an early settler of the town of Sylvan, was born in the town of Underhill, Chittenden Co., Vt., Feb. 27, 1837. He was there reared to agricultural pursuits. At the age of seventeen he went to Worcester, Mass., and spent two years in farming. He came to Wisconsin in 1855, and lived in Grant county till 1860; then came to Richland county and settled upon land on sections 19 and 30, of the town of Sylvan, which he had purchased the previous year. Upon this land was a small log cabin, into which he moved his family, and immediately commenced clearing. In 1863 he had cleared fifteen acres. He enlisted in December of that year, in the 33d Wisconsin, company B, and served until the close of the war, when he was discharged with the regiment Sept. 29, 1865. He participated in the following battles: Tupelo, Nashville, Spanish Fort, and other minor engagements. At the time of his discharge he was afflicted with sore eyes, which continued to grow worse, and at times he was obliged to confine himself in a dark room, and finally lost his sight entirely, but has since partially recovered it. He continued to occupy his farm in Sylvan until 1880, when he sold out, with the intention of going west, but changing his mind, he purchased his present farm, located on section 10, town of Akan. He has since bought other land, and now owns 140 acres. In 1883 he built a frame barn 30x40 feet. He was married in 1860 to Amy Stevens, who was born in Pennsylvania, July 20, 1843, and died Aug. 15, 1863, leaving two children—Lincoln L. and Amy. Mr. Ward was again married in March, 1864, to Rosanna McCord, a native of Mercer Co., Penn., born June 14, 1833. She was formerly the wife of Madison Ward, who died in the United States service, Sept. 29, 1863, at New Orleans, leaving four children—Reuben, Laura, Susan and Rosanna. By the last union there are two children—Columbia and Edgar E.

CHAPTER XX.

TOWN OF BLOOM.

The town of Bloom embraces congressional township 12 north, of range 1 west, and is in the northern tier of Richland county's civil subdivisions. It is bounded on the north by Vernon county; on the east by the town of Henrietta; on the south by Marshall and on the west by Forest. The surface of the town is broken and hilly. One main ridge extends through the western portion of the town from north to south, while on each side of this are smaller, or connecting ridges, extending to the east and west. On the ridges the soil varies; in some places being a rich black loam, and again, a yellow clay; and all is very productive. In the valleys the soil is a rich dark loam. In seasons of high water the valleys are in places overflowed, and farmers often lose a portion of their crops. The town is well watered, making it a desirable and profitable locality for stock raising. The most important stream is the West Branch of Pine river which rises on section 5. On its way through the eastern part of the town it is joined by six spring tributaries.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Bloom was made, in 1853, by Isaac McMahan, who, during that year, came and entered 120 acres of land on section 23. He was followed, the same year, by Daniel Householder, who entered 320 acres of land on section 35. He owned this land until the time of his death in 1879. He was ninety-nine years of age.

Edward Morris came during the same year and entered eighty acres on section 26.

John Rogers came in the spring of 1853 and entered land on section 18. He improved the land during the following summer, and then returned to Indiana, where he died shortly afterward.

Israel Cooper came at about the same time and entered 240 acres, a part of which was on section 26. He erected his house on that section.

In 1854 Reuben Selby came and entered 160 acres on section 36. He now lives in Kansas.

Thomas Siers came at about the same time and entered 160 acres on section 25.

Isaac Pizer came in 1854 and bought land on section 26. He laid out the village of Spring Valley and remained a few years when he removed to Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. In 1872 he sold out and started for Oregon; but when three miles from Sacramento City, he fell from the cars and was instantly killed. His wife went on to Oregon, married two years later, and now lives in California.

Thomas Borland came in 1854 and settled on section 2, where he still lives.

John Jewell came during the same year and located on section 1, where he still resides.

Josephus Downs came in 1854 and entered land on the northwest quarter of section 22. He was a lawyer. He remained here for several years, then moved to Dane county; but a few years later returned and died on the old homestead.

farm and made this his home until the time of his death, which occurred in 1881.

James A. Jones came in 1854 and settled on section 25. He now resides on section 35.

J. M. Hurless came at about the same time and entered 160 acres of land on section 5. He now resides on section 6. His brother, Henry, came the preceding spring and entered 160 acres on section 19.

Samuel Downs came in 1855 and bought land on the northwest quarter of section 14. He now lives in Kansas.

Nathan Ford, a native of New Jersey, came in 1855 and settled on the southeast quarter of section 10. He died Jan. 15, 1884.

Joseph Phippen came at an early day and settled on section 30, where he lived for a number of years. He is now a resident of the town of Forest.

In the fall of the same year Charles Peckham and his sons, Charles and Alexander, came and settled on section 26. William Peckham came at the same time and located on section 34.

William Pizer came in the spring of 1855 and entered 160 acres of land on section 26.

Joseph Householder came in 1855 and entered 160 acres of land on section 33.

The same year Henry De Hart and his two sons, J. L. and Daniel V., came. The father purchased land where the sons now reside.

Philip Almon came in 1856 and settled on section 7. He is now dead.

David Todd came in 1856 and bought land on section 6. In 1879 he sold out and went to California.

During the year 1856, and from that time until the war broke out, the settlement of the town was quite rapid, a great many of the incomers being from Ohio and Indiana.

FIRST THINGS.

The first house within the present limits of the town of Bloom was erected in 1853, by Isaac McMahan, on section 23.

Neefe's mill was originally erected on section 36, in 1857, by James and Z. Jones. Then, as now, it was located on the west branch of Pine river. In 1879 Charles A. Neefe rebuilt the mill and still owns and operates it. It is equipped with an improved circular saw, planer, matcher, lath saw, ripper and cut-off saw. Its capacity is 7,000 feet per day. The mill does excellent work and is having a good business.

The first religious services in the village were held at the residence of C. W. Peekham, by a Presbyterian minister, in 1856. There are now two church organizations in the village—the Methodists and Disciples.

The first physician to locate at this point was Dr. A. Shambaugh.

The first drug store was established by T. K. Gray.

THE VILLAGE OF WEST LIMA.

This village was platted on sections 5 and 6, in 1875, by Joseph L. and Daniel V. De Hart and David H. Todd. It lies just twenty miles from Richland Center and twenty miles from Union Center, the nearest railroad points. The village originally contained four blocks, or forty-eight lots. Three additions have been made to this one by J. L. and D. V. De Hart, in 1878, of two blocks; one by Job M. Hurless, in 1878, of two blocks; and one by J. L. De Hart of two blocks.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The early pioneers and prominent citizens of the town of Bloom, deserving of mention, are as follows:

Jobe M. Hurless, one of the pioneers of Bloom, was born in Pendleton Co., Va., May 15, 1831. His mother died when he was but six months old. He remained in Virginia until 1833, in which year his father removed to Clinton Co., Ind., where he died in 1842. Our subject then went to Carroll county, and lived with Dr. Courier some years, and from thence to Howard county, same state, where he was married March 5, 1853, to Cynthia Trobough, a resident of Carroll county, but a native of Greene Co., Tenn., born June 20, 1836. Mr. Hurless then engaged in farming and on Sept. 17, 1854, departed for Wisconsin, and arrived in Richland county, town of Bloom Oct. 5, 1854. He there entered 160 acres of land on section 5, and was forced to cut his road through the woods three miles to get in with a team, and had to haul his provisions from Orion, a distance of thirty miles. He has since increased his land to 620 acres, of which 200 acres are under cultivation.

Mr. Hurless on his arrival in the town of Bloom possessed only $300, but by hard labor and successful speculations has acquired a competence. Mr. and Mrs. Hurless have seven children—Martha M., John M., Henry M., Ivan M., Hattie A., Zettie and Orrin O. Martha was married in 1870 to T. P. Burt, and John M. was married in 1880 to Emma Stumbaugh. Martha has five children—Adie, Lulu, Etta, Elsie and Ivan M. John has three children—Odas H. and a pair of twins—Allen C and Bessie M. Mr. Hurless has also an interest in a general merchandise store in West Lima, but devotes the greater portion of his attention to stock raising.

James A. Sellers, one of the early settlers of Richland county, was born June 22, 1817, in Perry Co., Ohio, where his early life was spent, obtaining his education in the common schools. In 1844, he was married to Caroline Melick. They are the parents of nine children—Jonas M., Mary I., John W., William A., Naomi A., Lucy E., Emma A. and Bessie. Mrs. Sellers died April 7, 1882. Jonas is now married to Nora Downs; Mary is the wife of J. D. Allbaugh; J. W. is married to Mary J. Cushman, and Lucy E. to Marion Allbaugh. In 1855, Mr. Sellers moved from Knox Co., Ohio, to Green Co., Wis., wintering there in 1856 and 1857. In 1859, he came to Richland Center, and in August to the place where he now resides, town of Bloom, and entered 120 acres of land on sections 26 and 27, which he has reduced to ninety-two acres. He also owns a house, lot and grist mill in the village of Spring Valley. Mr. Sellers has been a deacon in the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1869.

W. R. Peckham, one of the leading farmers of Richland county, is a native of Jefferson Co., Ohio, where he was born in 1841, and there lived until 1855 when he moved to Richland Co., Wis., with his parents. They entered 160 acres of land on section 34, town of Bloom. Mr. Peckham now lives on section 23, where he owns 200 acres, is engaged in farming and buying stock for the market. He was married Oct. 26, 1865, to Catharine Allbaugh, who was born in Carroll Co., Ohio, April 20, 1847, where she resided until 1861, when she came to Richland county, town of Bloom, with her parents. They now have four children—John A. Logan, Milo E., Marian S. and Bertha M. Mr. Peckham was a member of the 25th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged in June, 1865. He was assessor of the town one year. His father, William Peckham, was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, in 1804, and died in the town of Bloom in 1881. His mother, Matilda, was born in 1809, also in Jefferson Co., Ohio, and died in the town of Bloom in 1883. Mr. Peckham has the respect and confidence of his fellow-men and may be classed among the best citizens of the county. He has always adhered to the principles of the republican party and is a pronounced member of that organization. Mr. and Mrs. Peckham are both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Joseph Herbert was born in the town of Marshall, Richland Co., Wis., Dec. 25, 1855, and since his birth, has been a resident of the county, excepting three years spent in Vernon county. He is now engaged in general blacksmithing and the manufacture of wagons in the village of Spring Valley, and is the proprietor of the only hotel in that place. He was married in 1876 to Mary E. Stewart, who was born in Black River Falls, Jackson Co., Wis., in 1857. They have three children—Rena M., Mertie C. and Milton M. His father, Peter, was born in 1801, in Canada; emigrated to the United States in 1845, settled at Fort Clinton, Ohio, and in 1854 came to Richland county and located in the town of Marshall, early in the settlement of that territory. His mother, Elista, was also a native of Canada, born in 1803, and died in Viola, Richland county, in 1881.

John J. Jewell, one of the most prominent business men and farmers of the town of Bloom, was born in Carroll Co., Ohio, in 1828, where his youth was spent, and he received such education as he was able to obtain in the district schools of his native county. In 1855 he moved to Vernon Co., Wis., settled in the town of Union, remained six months, then moved to the town of Bloom, Richland county, where he purchased 800 acres of land, which he has since reduced to 500, located on section 1, where he now resides, and is engaged in farming, merchandising, loaning money and buying and selling stock to a large extent in Richland and Vernon counties. He was married in 1854 to Catharine Borland, who was born in the State of Pennsylvania, in 1830. They have seven children—David W., R. R., Enoch, William K., Ezra, John J. and Mary E. William K. is now married to Sarah E. McBain and Mary E. to Lemon T. Smith. When Mr. Jewell came to this country, it was a wilderness; and pluck and energy were necessary elements for success. Remote from mill and market, without roads or easy methods of transportation, with little food and poor shelter, settlement in those days meant for a while almost hermitage, and all honor is due such men and women as Mr. and Mrs. Jewell, who by sacrifice and effort assisted in putting in motion a series of events, which have made possible the development of so goodly a land. Sometimes it would seem a place has thus been purchased at a cost beyond estimation, but they have lived to enjoy a home honestly gained, a competence fairly won, and are among the best class of Richland county citizens. Mr. Jewell has business qualifications beyond most men, which, combined with economy, energy and good judgment, have enabled him to outstrip others in the accumulation of wealth, until now he is in possession of a sufficiency for every enjoyment during his declining years.

Charles A. Neefe, a native of Germany, was born Jan. 1, 1834, and emigrated to the United States with his parents at the age of two years. They first settled in St. Louis Co., Mo., where they remained eight or nine years, then removed to the lead mines of Grant Co., Wis., remaining until 1846, when he came to Richland county and settled in the town of Orion. Mr. Neefe has been a resident of the county ever since. He now owns 110 acres of land and a saw-mill, and is now doing a thriving business. He was married in 1857 to Nancy M. See, who was born Jan. 7, 1836, in New York city, and came to Richland county in 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Neefe are the parents of five children—Maria, Christina, Emma, Frank and Frederick. Maria is now the wife of Elliot Jones; and Christina, of Hughey Clark. Mr. Neefe enlisted in 1861 in the 6th Wisconsin Battery, and was discharged in 1864. While in the service he was injured by the premature discharge of a gun, of which he was first gunner. In 1859 he went on a gold hunting expedition to Pike's Peak, and was successful only in getting financially ruined. He, in company with three others, returned to Omaha, Neb., on foot. There, one of his comrades sold his gun for enough money to procure them passage to St. Joseph, Mo. At that point Mr. Neefe took a twenty-dollar piece, which he had saved, and paid their fare to Prairie du Chien, Wis., and having nothing to pay for food, he sawed wood for the cook of the boat, and so paid his own and his companions' board. On arriving at Prairie du Chien he tried to sell his gun to get his sick comrade home, but could get only $3 and a glass of beer for it. He accepted the offer, however, sent his comrade home and returned to his home himself, arriving in Richland county a poorer but wiser man. He has never left the county since without money enough to bring him home. Mr. Neefe was formerly a democrat; since the war, however, he has been a republican, but is not so bound to party but that he can and does vote for the best man.

Mahlon Stewart, one of the pioneer settlers of the town of Bloom, was born Oct. 16, 1827, in Pittsburg, Penn. In 1827 his parents moved to Galley Co., Ohio, where he resided until 1852, when he removed to Jackson Co., Wis., where he remained until 1857, and then removed to Richland county and settled on section 35, of the town of Bloom, where he entered forty acres of land and engaged in farming until 1863, when he removed to the State of Minnesota and remained until 1864, when he returned to the town of Bloom and purchased eighty acres of land on section 35, where he now lives. In August, 1852, Mr. Stewart was married to Ruth Clark, who was born Oct. 16, 1830, in Jefferson Co., Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have eight children—Rachel J., William, Mary E., James, Edward, Martha, John and Emmett. Rachel is now married to James Zimberlee, William to Emma Davis, Mary E. to Joseph Herbert, James to Ella Bailey, and Edward to Addie Barnhart. Mr. Stewart was a member of the 46th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company H, having enlisted in 1864, and was discharged at the close of the war.

Thomas J. Edwards is a native of the State of Missouri, born in Cooper county, Feb. 16, 1817. In 1825 he moved with his parents to Davis Co., Ind., where he grew to manhood and learned the tanner's trade. In 1839 he moved to Clinton Co., Ind., and remained until 1854, then went to Orion, Richland Co., Wis., and purchased 190 acres of land in Eagle town, and engaged in merchandising as clerk for Rodolph & Graham. In 1861 he enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin, and was discharged in 1863, having been promoted to the rank of second lieutenant, company H. He now owns 104 acres of land in the town of Bloom, on section 32. He was married in 1844 to Hannah Gray, who died the same year. He was again married Dec. 7, 1845, to Abigail Hayes. They have had eight children—Hannah J., Asa J., Mary C., Joseph A., May, Ida S. and Edwina E. (twins), and Claribel. Hannah, Asa and Ida are now deceased. Mary C. is the wife of Benjamin Black; May is the wife of James Seeley; Edwina E. is the wife of Robert J. Drake; and Joseph A. is married to Jane L. Guthrie. Mr. Edwards has held the office of town treasurer of Orion ten years.

F. G. Hills, a native of New York, was born in Lewis county, in 1827, where he spent his youth and learned the trade of a wheelwright. In 1855 he came to Richland county, and worked at his trade in Richland Center until 1875, when he moved to Nebraska, and there resided for six years. From thence he removed to the town of Bloom, and opened a blacksmith and wagon shop in Spring Valley, where he is doing a good business. He was married in 1852 to Miss C. J. Hubbard, born in Lewis Co., N. Y., in 1833. They have two children—Herbert and Nellie. Herbert was married to Emeline Peckham, and Nellie is now the wife of John Miller. Herbert is the father of four children—Charles, Delbert, Henry and Clara. Nellie is now the mother of three children—Eugene, Frank and Nora.

James H. Stewart was born in Richland Co., Wis., Feb. 15, 1859, and has lived in the town of Bloom ever since. Mr. Stewart is the son of Mahlon and Ruth Stewart, who came to Wisconsin in 1852, and now lives in Bloom on section 35. Mr. Stewart was married in the year 1880 to Ella Baily, who was born in 1861 in Williams Co., Ohio, and came to Richland county in 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have one child—Evert A. Mr. Stewart now owns a house and two lots, and is engaged in the manufacture of wagons and general smithing, in the village of Spring Valley.

J. W. Bradshaw, one of the prominent business men of Spring Valley, was born in Wayne Co., Ill., in 1847, where he made his home until 1870, when he moved to Richland Co., Wis., locating in the village of Woodstock, engaging in the mercantile trade there, and continuing until 1876, when he sold his stock and purchased a farm, which he managed until 1883, when he again engaged in merchandising, locating in Spring Valley, town of Bloom, where he carries a fine stock and has a good trade. He was married in 1870 to Lora A. Walser, a native of Edwards Co., Ill., born in 1854. They have four children—James E., Ines, Una and Walser. Mr. Bradshaw was a soldier in the late war, having enlisted in 1863 in the 61st Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged in 1865. His father, James, was born in Kentucky in 1800; went to Wayne Co., Ill., in 1830, and entered a farm, upon which he lived fifty years, and left a Christian record excelled by none in his county. His mother, Matilda, was born in 1804, and died in Wayne Co., Ill., in 1853. In addition to the care of his own business, he always finds time, and esteems it a great pleasure, to assist in bearing the burdens of building up Christian and benevolent causes of his place.

B. F. McCord was born in Mercer Co., Penn., in 1826, where he resided until 1842, when he moved to Grant Co., Wis., and engaged in general work until 1859, then moved to Lee Co., Iowa; remained one year, and returned to Grant Co., Wis. In 1866 he moved to Texas, remained two years, and returned to Grant county. In 1873 he moved to Des Moines Co., Iowa, remained two years, and came to Richland Co., Wis., and started a carding and spinning mill. In 1882 he moved to the town of Bloom, built a mill on section 4, where he had purchased forty acres of land and is doing a good business. He was married in 1859 to Lucinda Ayer, who was born in Rock Co., Wis., in 1842. They have seven children—Blanche, G. W., Jenette, Rebecca, Andrew, Mary and E. D. Mrs. McCord died in the town of Bloom, in June, 1882. Blanche is now married to Charles Knightman.

CHAPTER XXI.

TOWN OF BUENA VISTA.

This town forms the southeastern corner of Richland county and embraces portions of three congressional townships. Three whole and six fractional sections comprising this town, lie in township 8 north, of range 2 east; three whole, one-half and one fractional section of township 9, range 1 east; and twenty-four whole and six half sections of township 9, range 2 east. The town of Buena Vista is bounded on the north by the town of Ithaca; on the east by Sauk county; on the south by the Wisconsin river; and on the west by the town of Orion. The south and southwestern portions of the town, including in fact nearly one-fourth of the area, is made up of a level prairie. The soil is sandy and moderately productive. It is well adapted to growing Indian corn and sorghum. The soil being warm and light, melons grow in abundance here; and the production of water melons, particularly, has occupied a great deal of the farmers' attention for a number of years. The first in the town to raise and ship melons upon an extensive scale was Ezekiel Elliott. He began in 1863 and followed the business for a number of years, shipping from $1,000 to $1,500 worth annually and one year the shipments amounted to $2,000. In 1872 J. W. Fuller engaged in the business and for four years his melon revenue was $400 annually. He still devotes a good deal of his attention to the cultivation of melons. Others who are now raising and shipping this product are: Harvey Layton, John Smith, Isaac Fan and Aaron Lee.

The valley of the Pine river, in the western part of the town, is very fertile and contains many fine farms. The northern part of the town is hilly but well adapted to grazing. The greater part of the eastern portion of the town is included in Bear creek valley, which, with its tributary, the Little Bear creek valley, forms one of the finest farming regions in the State.

The principal streams that traverse the town are Pine river and Bear creek. The former rises in Vernon county. It enters the town of Buena Vista by way of section 7, town 9, range 2 east, and flowing nearly due south, makes confluence with the Wisconsin river on section 31. Pine river is the most important stream that flows through Richland county. In this town its average width is seventy feet. Bear creek rises in Sauk county. It enters the town of Buena Vista from Ithaca, by way of section 11, town 9, range 2 east, and flows nearly south to the center of section 35, thence southwesterly to enter the Wisconsin river on section 4, town 8. One of its tributaries, Little Bear creek, enters the town on section 24, from Sauk county, and flows west to join Bear creek on section 23.

The ridges in the northern part of the town were originally heavily timbered; the principal varieties were white and black oak. West of Pine river there was a heavy growth of timber consisting principally of elm, basswood, oak, black walnut, butternut and ash. The valley of Bear creek was also covered with timber of the varieties mentioned, but the growth was not as heavy as that west of Pine river.

Two lines of railway pass through this town, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad and the branch to Richland Center.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Buena Vista, was made in the fall of 1845 by Robert and William McCloud. They emigrated to Wisconsin from Hardin Co., Ohio, in 1844, and stopped with their families in the village of Muscoda. In the fall of 1845 Robert McCloud located a farm on the east bank of Bear creek, the northeast quarter of section 35, now owned by Rev. S. B. Loomis. He began improvements at once. At the same time his brother, William McCloud, located a farm about one half mile further south. In the spring of 1846 they removed their families to the new homes, from Muscoda.

In the fall of 1846 Israel Janney and his brother Phineas came to this town. Israel located on the west half of the northwest quarter of section 34 on land which is now owned by R. L. Moore, James Moore and Leonard Button. Phineas Janney located on the west half of the northeast quarter of section 28, town 9, range 2 east, land now owned by D. B. Young.

The following, from the pen of Israel Janney, graphically describes their settlement :

"In the fall of 1846 my brother Phineas and myself, with our families, left Logan Co., Ohio, for Wisconsin, and on the 27th day of September we crossed the Wisconsin river with our families in an Indian canoe, about one mile above the mouth of Bear creek, at a point since known as Hurst's ferry. Before crossing the river, we found it necessary to send our teams back by the way of Highland and Dodgeville to Helena. At this point there had been a shot tower erected, and the company operating this tower owned a flat boat for their own convenience, and they were engaged to ferry our teams across the river. We were landed on the north bank of the river near where Spring Green is now located, and traveled across the prairie to Bear creek. I mention these facts to show the inconvenience of traveling in the early settlement of the county."

In the spring of 1847 William Janney, a brother of Israel, located on section 34, where J. W. Briggs now lives. The next settler in the town of Buena Vista was Amos Mercer, who also came in the spring of 1847. He was from southern Illinois. He settled on the west half of the southeast quarter of section 28, town 9, range 2 east, on the farm now owned by A. Harter. Mr. Mercer is a prosperous farmer of Sauk county.

In the summer and fall of 1848 there were a number of locations made in this town. Delos Matteson, J. W. Briggs, Samuel Long, Jonathan Ingram, E. B. Beason, Jonah Seaman, (Mr. Seaman came with the McClouds in 1845, but returned to Illinois, and came back again in 1848.) I. H. Wallace (proprietor of Richland city), C. W. Morris, George Reed, Nathaniel Wheeler, who bought out Phineas Janney ; J. W. Coffinberry, who settled on section 30, but soon after removed to Richland City. William and Cyrus Kline settled on the northwest quarter of section 23, and the north half of the northeast quarter of section 22, town 9, range 2 east, on what is now known as the Eaton farm. John P. Smith settled this year on section 22, on the farm now owned by Charles Daley. Emanuel Wallace, a brother of John Wallace, of Lone Rock, also came in 1848 and settled on section 14, on the farm now owned by Susan Halsey. B. J. Hopkins located on sections 24 and 13, on land now owned by A. Davis and Levi Runyan. Moses Brown and Sterling McKinney located this year on section 36, on land now owned by L. V. Loomis and Edmond Meade. Brown is in Chippewa county, this State ; McKinney is dead. Other early settlers, George L. Dyke, Stroud, Luther Evans, Holland Allen, Elias Thomas, George Woodard, Edmond Meade, on section 25, where he now lives, John Daley. A man named Perrine located on section 12, town 8, range 2 east, in 1851. He sold to the railroad company the plat of Lone Rock village. He had several grown sons, one of whom was Dr. Perrine. A singular fatality attended this family, five of whom died soon after coming here. The family removed to Minnesota.

HISTORICAL EVENTS.

The first marriage in this town was that of Edwin Erwin and Elizabeth McCloud, the latter a daughter of Robert McCloud. The ceremony was performed in 1850 by Rev. Nathaniel Wheeler. The couple now reside in Texas.

The first death in the town was that of Philip H. Miller, which occurred Nov. 19, 1846. He was twenty-seven years of age, a son of Isaac and Elizabeth (McCloud) Miller. He died of fever induced by exposure in hunting. The remains were buried on what is now the farm of Hon. L. G. Thomas, but were afterward removed to the cemetery at Sextonville.

The second death in the town was that of Mrs. Sarah J. (Miller) Janney, a sister of Philip Miller, which occurred March 21, 1847. She was the wife of Phineas Janney.

Another early death was that of Adelbert H. Briggs, son of J. W. and Melissa Briggs, which took place March 7, 1849. The child was three and a half years old.

The first school in Buena Vista was taught by Mrs. Emily Matteson, wife of Delos Matteson, in the summer of 1850. The school was kept at the residence of Mr Matteson.

The first school house in the town was a log building erected on the northeast quarter of section 32, in 1849. Margaret Ingram was the first teacher here.

The first sermon was preached by Elder Nathaniel Wheeler, in the fall of 1848, at his residence.

POSTOFFICES.

There are four postoffices in the town of Buena Vista. The first established was at Richland City and a history of it will be found elsewhere. The history of the Lone Rock postoffice is also given in its proper place.

The second postoffice in the town was established in 1854, with Moses Brown as postmaster and the office at his house on section 36. It was on the mail route from Sauk City to Prairie du Chien. This office was discontinued at about the time the postoffice at Lone Rock was established.

Dixon postoffice was established in June, 1880, with Mrs. Helen Eaton as postmistress. The office is located on section 22. It was named in honor of William Dixon.

Gotham postoffice is located at Richland City station. It was so named in honor of Capt. M. W. Gotham, who has been postmaster since the establishment of the office in July, 1882.

EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

The town of Buena Vista is well supplied with schools, and educational facilities here are equal to any of the towns in Richland county. There are five districts and two joint districts. The total number of children of school age in the town is 340; of which the average attendance is 272.

District No. 1 includes Richland City. It has fifty-eight children of school age. The building is a frame one in good condition.

District No. 2 is usually called "Young's district," and has thirty-four pupils. The building is a frame structure located on the southeast quarter of section 29, which was built many years ago. In early days this was known as the "Friendship school house."

District No. 3 includes the village of Lone Rock.

District No. 5 has a building located on the northeast quarter of section 19, and has a school population of thirty-seven. The building is an old frame edifice, which was erected a number of years ago.

No. 6 is a joint district; including territory in the town of Orion. The school house is a neat frame building located on section 28. That part of the district in Buena Vista has a school population of twenty-eight.

District No. 8 has twenty-five pupils. The school house is a small red frame building located on section 23.

District No. 10 has a neat frame building located on section 35. The number of pupils in the district is thirty-four.

No. 1 joint embraces but little territory in Buena Vista, only four pupils belonging to this town. The school house is located in the town of Ithaca.

CEMETERIES.

There are two public burial places now in use in the town of Buena Vista. One is located on the northwest quarter of section 34. This cemetery was laid out in the fall of 1853. The first burial was that of Lucius Tracy, who died April 6, 1854. There are others buried here who died in the town at an earlier date and were removed here from other burial places. Among the latter is Eliza, wife of John Seaman, who died Oct. 15, 1853. She was accidentally shot by William McCloud. The other public burial place is known as Lone Rock Cemetery, and is situated on the northwest quarter of section 12.

The first burial place in this town was on the farm of Robert McCloud, and the first burial was that of Philip H. Miller. This was used as a public burial place for some years, but most of the bodies have been removed to the two cemeteries mentioned. Another early place for the burial of the dead was at Richland City; but burials at this place have also been discontinued. Another place of burial was on the farm of Abijah Davis on the northwest quarter of section 3. L. G. Thomas has also a family burial place on his farm.

THE NAME OF THE TOWN.

The town of Buena Vista was so named at the suggestion of Mrs. J. W. Briggs. The name, Buena, had been suggested, it is said, by a returned Mexican soldier, who had probably become somewhat familiar with Spanish names during his army experience in Mexico. Mrs. Briggs suggested that the name would be incomplete simply as Buena, and thought that Vista should be added. Her suggestion was followed, hence the present name of the town.

BEAR CREEK VALLEY.

The eastern part of the town of Buena Vista includes Bear Creek valley, which is one of the finest sections of country to be found in the State of Wisconsin. From the point where Bear creek enters the town to its place of exit into the Wisconsin river, includes a distance of about six miles. The average width of the valley is about one mile. In the early history of the town wheat and other cereals were grown in great abundance; but for a number of years this valley has been devoted extensively to grazing and dairying.

There are two cheese factories in this valley, within the limits of the town of Buena Vista, which do an extensive business. L. G. Thomas is the pioneer in the cheese making business in the State of Wisconsin. He began in 1865, and for many years did an extensive business.

In 1867 George Carswell and his brothers, John H. and Nathaniel, began the manufacture of cheese, using that year the milk of about 100 cows. They ran a private dairy till 1873. The business was conducted for a number of years by George J. Carswell & Son, J. A. Carswell being associated with his father in the business. That is still the style of the firm, Fred E. Carswell being the junior member. The present factory was erected in 1882. This is one of the most complete factories to be found in the State. The size of the building is 24x45 feet; its full capacity of cheese is 1,500 pounds per day. It is furnished with all the modern improvements, and its facilities for rapid and excellent work is not excelled. During the year 1883 this factory manufactured into cheese the milk from 400 cows. The following is a statement of its product for three consecutive years:

1881—Cheese, 100,000 pounds, value $10,500; butter, 3,000 pounds, value $900; total, $11,400.

1882—Cheese, 120,000 pounds, value $12,000; butter, 4,000 pounds, value $1,200; total, $14,000.

1883—Cheese, 160,000 pounds, value $17,000; butter, 5,000 pounds, value $1,500; total, $18,500.

The Eaton cheese factory was erected, in 1871, by H. L. Eaton. During the first year the factory used the milk of about 200 cows. The establishment now has a capacity of manufacturing 700 pounds per day. An unlimited amount of cold spring water runs through the factory from a spring a few rods distant. In the spring of 1878 the factory was purchased by J. M. Thomas. During the years 1882 and 1883 the milk from about 500 cows was regularly consumed. At present the greatest number of cows furnished by any one patron is sixty. They are kept on the factory farm. There are nine patrons who furnish from twenty-five to forty cows each. These are Messrs. Brace, Fredrickson, Van Arnan, Burnham, Ellsworth, Winterburn, Greenback, Wade and Thomas. Five patrons furnish from fifteen to twenty-five cows each—Runyan, Webley, Brainard, Dixon and Southard.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

During the winter of 1848-49, the town of Buena Vista was organized by an act of the Legislature, and on the first Tuesday in April, 1849, the electors of the town met at the house of I. H. Wallace in Richland City, and organized by choosing J. W. Coffinberry moderator and C. W. Morris, clerk. The polls were opened and twenty votes were cast. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, J. W. Coffinberry, chairman, Israel Janney and Jonathan Ingram; clerk, C. W. Morris; assessor, Phineas Janney; treasurer, Samuel Long; justices of the Peace, N. Wheeler, J. W. Coffinberry, O. L. Britton and J. W. Briggs; inspector of Schools, E. B. Beason. The returns were taken to Mineral Point, Iowa county.

The town officers of Buena Vista in 1883 were as follows: Supervisors, J. Q. Black, chairman, William Krelmer and J. W. Southard; clerk, R. R. Eldred; treasurer, William Furguson; assessor, C. E. Braec; justices of the Peace, J. W. Fuller, L. D. Goodrich and W. E. Lewis; constable, A. S. Lee.

RICHLAND CITY.

The village of Richland City—once of considerable importance—is located on the southeast quarter of section 31, town 9, range 2 east. The original proprietors of the village plat were Isaac Wallace and Garwood Greene, who laid out the village in 1849. In 1851 A. C. Daley became an equal partner with Wallace and Greene in an addition that was made that year. This addition was laid out on the north side of the original plat, and was known as Wallace, Greene and Daley's addition to Richland City.

Wallace made the original claim as government land, and had erected a log house on the plat. Garwood Greene erected a house in the fall of 1849, which was purchased and occupied by Henry Clayman in the spring of 1850. Mr. Clayman used this as a dwelling house and a shoe-shop, he being the first shoemaker in the village. Ezekiel McIntyre was the first merchant. D. Osborne was the second. The latter coming here with a very small stock of goods. He was quite successful and built up an extensive trade. He is now in Tennessee. Mr. McIntyre kept the first store in the log house that Wallace had built, previous to the laying out of the village. He began in the fall of 1849. In 1852 he built the store building now occupied by D. P. Nichols as a store and postoffice.

Peter Haskins was the first blacksmith in the village.

The first physician was Dr. Hartshorn. Other physicians were C. B. Pierson and L. H. Nichols.

Samuel Tyler was the first wagon maker. He has long since died. Other early mechanics were Chester Goodwin, cabinet maker; John Hooper, blacksmith; Christian Spidel, now of Richland Center, was the first jeweler; Capt. Henry Dillon and John Wyker were the first tailors.

The school house in the village was erected in 1853.

In 1853 an academy was established at Richland City, Professor Silsby being the proprietor of the enterprise. The people assisted materially in the erection of a substantial building and were to receive their recompense in tuition. This school was in operation for about four years. The building has since been moved to Spring Green where it is now used for school purposes.

The postoffice at Richland City was the first in the town; it was established in 1854. Postmasters have been as follows: John Rutan, Dr. Pearson, Dr. Hadder, Mrs. Bangham, W. F. Lewis, Henry Eddy, T. E. Lewis and the present incumbent, D. P. Nichols.

The first hotel was kept in a log building, by Bangham & Co. This house was burned in 1855. Jacob Haanxhaurst built a hotel on the site of the log hotel burned. This building was erected in 1856, and was called the Valley House. It was afterward removed to Lone Rock where it is now known as the Haskell House. J. W. Coffinberry also erected a hotel here about 1855. This was afterward used as a boarding house for the academy. It is now used as a farm house near Spring Green. Another hotel was erected at about the same time by Joshua Simpson, which is also a dwelling house at Spring Green.

The first mill was a steam saw-mill erected in 1855 by Ephraim Brown. William Ketchum soon afterward bought one-half interest. They ran the mill for a number of years. It was afterward conducted by other parties but its use was discontinued in 1870. The pine timber which was used was rafted down the river from the pineries above, and an extensive business was done. This mill supplied the surrounding country, for a radius of many miles, with lath and lumber. The mill also was used to manufacture into lumber the oak and other timbers in the vicinity. A steam grist and flouring mill was erected in 1854 by Henry Rowell. This mill contained four run of stone and did an extensive business for a number of years. Rowell owned the mill for about a year, when it went into the hands of other parties. This mill proved to be of too great magnitude to be profitable in this location, and was finally removed to Milwaukee.

Richland City was for a number of years an important point. Until the completion of the Prairie du Chien branch of the C., M. & St. P. Railroad, in 1856, steam-boats plied the Wisconsin river as far up as Portage, and Richland City was the most important landing on the route. But the completion of the railroad put an end to the traffic on the river, and from that time business in the village rapidly diminished.

Among the men who were engaged in business here, from 1849 to 1856, the following may be mentioned: G. Greene, land dealer and merchant; William Ketchum, milling and merchandising; Daniel Osborne, general merchant; J. C. Clark, general merchant; George Rowell, merchandising and milling; William F. Lewis, Horace Thompson, Thomas Lewis, William Carl and others. Some of the above, however, were engaged in business later than 1856. At present, the business of the village is represented by D. P. Nichols, merchant and postmaster, and H. M. Boek, wholesale liquor dealer.

LONE ROCK.

The village of Lone Rock had its origin in the advent of the Prairie du Chien branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, and the decision of the railroad company to establish a station at this point. The railroad was completed to this place in October, 1856. The name of Lone Rock was given to the station because of the remarkable pile or mound of sandstone rock located just south of the eastern part of village, on section 13. It is not known positively by whom the name was first applied to this mound of Rock, but it was probably first so called by the early raftsmen on the Wisconsin river, who, impressed by the singularity of the lonely rock on the prairie, gave it the name to designate a point on the stream down which they floated, the rock being but a short distance from the left bank of the Wisconsin river.

In the fall of 1856 what is known as Lone Rock City was laid out by Ray, Dean, Burrell and Cook. This plat comprised the southeast quarter of section 12, town 8, range 2 east. At about the same time, what is known as Lone Rock village, consisting of eighty acres adjoining Lone Rock City on the north, was laid out by Dr. J. N. Cassell. Two other additions were made at about the same time—one of forty acres by A. C. Daley, on the west of Lone Rock City; the other by Daniel B. Allen, of forty acres joining Lone Rock village on the east. The latter is in Sauk county. At the time Lone Rock was laid out there was but one building upon the plat. This was a log house in what became Lone Rock village, occupied later by Mr. Calder, the first blacksmith. A number of buildings were erected in the fall of 1856.

J. O. Phelps, the first merchant of Lone Rock, erected a store building on the corner of Richland and Oak streets. This building, though remodeled, is now owned and occupied by J. C. Bancroft as a general store. Mr Phelps is regarded as the first merchant of Lone Rock, although Joseph Wade kept a few groceries for sale before Mr. Phelps had completed his building. J. O. Phelps was a native of Seneca Falls, N. Y. Before locating here he had been to California, where he had acquired some means. He kept a good general store, was an active, wide-awake business man, and generally liked, although somewhat eccentric. He removed from here to Sauk county, and died at Spring Green a few years ago.

During the same fall, 1856, Lorenzo Boronghs kept a store for A. C. Daley, in Daley's addition.

Samuel F. Honn was another merchant who started in 1856. He died at Boscobel a number of years ago.

Several new buildings were erected during that fall, and a number were moved from Hurst's Ferry.

Henry Paddleford opened the first hotel, in a building which he brought from the ferry. This was called the Union House. It was kept successively by Mr. Paddleford, J. W. Brooks and S. F. Honn. The building is now occupied as a dwelling house. Mr. Paddleford is now in Texas. In the early history of the village, hotels were also kept by Joseph Wade and Garrett Cruson; the latter kept what was known as the City Inn.

M. Waters built one of the early hotels here. He purchased a building erected by Flanders for a lumber office, to which he made an addition, and opened it to the public as the American House. He ran it for some time, and then sold it to Mr. Mullen and O. Malley, who ran the hotel for several years.

The present hotels are the Haskell House, the Commercial House and the Sherman House. The Haskell House was brought here from Richland City, in 1865. It was known at that place as the Valley House. It was built at Richland City in the early history of that village, by a man named Hauxhaurst. It was purchased, taken to pieces, brought here and re-erected by Eaton and Craig, and called by them the Sheridan House. It was run by Platt & Putnam, for some time and then by H. Brainard. It was also conducted at different times by Messrs. Page, Bell, Corbin, McDonald and Dyke. It was finally purchased by the Towsley Brothers, and by them run as the Towsley House. H. W. Haskell rented the hotel for a time, then purchased it and gave his name to the hotel, by which it is at present known. The present landlord of the Haskell House is A. B. Hill, late of the Commercial House.

The building used as the Commercial House was built at Point Boss. It was bought a few years since and removed to its present location. It was first used as a hotel by A. B. Hill, now of the Haskell House. It is still owned by A. M. Woodbury, who purchased and brought it to the village.

The Sherman House was built in the fall of 1856. The building is now owned and kept as a hotel by Mrs. Dudgeon.

The first school in the village was taught by Ellen M. Wesley, in the upper part of the building erected by Dr. J. N. Cassell, for a drug store. The school began in the fall of 1856 and continued for five months. Miss Wesley is now the wife of J. W. Fuller, of Lone Rock.

Garrett Cruson was the first carpenter. A number of others came at about the same time. Mr. Cruson now lives at what was Hurst's Ferry.

The first physician in the village was Dr. J. N. Cassell, who came in 1856. He remained here a number of years, when he removed to Chicago, where he died. His remains were brought here for burial. The second physician was Dr. R. L. Telfair, who is still a resident. Other physicians who have practiced here in the past are: Dr. McKinnon, Dr. Dodge, Dr. Stoddard, Dr. Pinkerton Dr. Charles E. Houghman and others.

The first drug store was kept by Dr. J. N. Cassell. Dr. R. L. Telfair opened the second drug store in 1857, and has been in the business most of the time since.

In 1857 Dr. R. L. Telfair erected the first warehouse in the village. At about the same time Charles Putnam, from Boston, erected a warehouse and commenced dealing in grain. He was in trade for several years, and then removed to Chicago.

The first jeweler was H. A. Harrison. The present one is Lorenzo Borroughs.

But few of the business men of Lone Rock, who started with the growth of the town in 1856-7, are still in trade. The following are the names of men and firms who have been in business here, but now removed or retired: Phelps Bros., Platt Bros., S. F. Honn, Daniel Osborn, Saul Hirstine, William Shafer, J. L. R. McCollum, John Litle, J. M. McDonald, W. G. James, David Dudgeon, who died here, and others.

The Lone Rock grist mill is located on Bear creek, on the northeast quarter of section 3. The mill site was originally owned by J. W. Briggs. In 1857 Henry Rowell purchased it and erected the mill in 1858. The mill is an important institution of the town and has done a large business for many years. It is a frame structure, three stories in height above the basement. It was run by Henry Rowell and his brother Daniel until 1863 when they sold to B. and G. Harter who conducted it until 1877 when it went into the hands of Mr. Miller, of Madison. The mill still does an extensive business and is noted for the excellence of its work.

POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice at Lone Rock was established in the fall of 1856, with Henry Paddleford as the first postmaster. He held the office about one year and was succeeded by Zebulon W. Green, who held the office for several years, and was succeeded by R. S. Eldred; after Mr. Eldred came Dr. R. L. Telfair who held the office for several years. R. S. Eldred then again was postmaster and was succeeded by J. C. Baneroft early in 1869. In the fall of 1869 Abraham Wolf was appointed and has held the office since that time. The office was made a money order office in July, 1874. The first order, for $8 50, was drawn by C. E. Brace. The first two orders were paid to Harriet Jenkins; amount of first order drawn, $5.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school house in the village was erected in 1857. It was a frame building and is still standing, in use by the primary departments of the school. In 1864 a much larger building was put up at a cost of about $2,500. It was two stories high, 34x52 feet in size. On April 1, 1865, when the house was about completed, it was struck by lightning and entirely consumed by fire. In the spring of 1866 another building, somewhat larger than the one burned, was ready for occupancy. This, with the first house erected, afford the school building accommodations at the present time.

The school was graded in 1866 when the new building was first occupied.

In 1875, in accordance with the law then recently passed for the establishment of schools of a higher grade, a high school was established. The first principal of the high school was H. W. Hewett, who remained one year. Mr. Hewett's successors were: I. A. Sabin, who was here one year; Mr. Hill, one year; Thomas

Morrow, three years; W. S. Sweet, the present county superintendent; and A. Wood, who succeeded Mr. Sweet in 1882. For a number of years the high school was a decided success and secured a high reputation for its excellence, but the expense of supporting so high a grade of school proved to be too great a burden on the people and it was abandoned in 1882.

The present principal of the graded school is L. H. Baneroft. The present number of pupils is 116.

FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.

There are four fraternal organizations at Lone Rock: The Masonic, I. O. O. F., Good Templars and G. A. R.

Daniel Platt, R. L. Telfair and Henry Dillon. The lodge flourished for a time, but became so depleted during the war, from enlistments and other causes, that it was discontinued. It was resuscitated Jan. 17, 1868, by T. W. Fuller, J. C. Bancroft, Edward Cruson, James Finn, John Wallace, Timothy Maroney and C. C. Line. The above are the names that appear on the new charter, granted in 1868. Of the first organization, Z. W. Green was the first noble grand; and the first noble grand of the second organization was J. #### PERSONAL SKETCHES.

Among the following personal sketches will be found those of the most prominent and representative citizens of the town of Buena Vista:

One of the earliest settlers of the town of Buena Vista is Samuel Long; his settlement dating from August, 1848. Mr. Long's residence is on section 29. He was born in Indiana Oct. 9, 1816, but was reared in Illinois, where his parents, Jacob and Katharine Long, removed when he was a child.

His father came here in 1853 and settled on section 20 where he lived till his decease in 1863; his mother died seven years later. The parents of Mr. Long had four children; one son, John, died in Illinois. There are two daughters, Elizabeth and Anna; the former is Mrs. Green McCaim, a widow who resides in Iowa. Anna is the wife of Alfred Kuykendall of this town. Samuel married Francis Ballew a native of Kentucky. They have four children—Katharine, wife of William B. Brown, Charles M., graduated at Rush Medical College in the class of 1878; he is now practicing medicine at Osakis, Douglass county, Minn. Albert is a student at the State University, and Alice lives at home. Mr. Long's farm contains 160 acres.

Leonard Button is one of the early settlers of this town, the date of settlement being July, 1849. He located on section 34, his present home. By energy and industry he has secured a good home.

D. P. Nichols was one of the early settlers of Richland City, and is the present merchant and postmaster of that once active and important village. He came here in 1850, a short time after the village was platted. He was born in Essex Co., N. Y., in 1827. His father, Amasa Nichols, removed with his family to Richland Co., Ohio, in 1835, where he resided till his decease. Mr. Nichols learned the trade of tanner and currier, which occupation he followed for five years. He afterwards engaged in the business of carpentry, which he followed for some time after he came to Richland county. He ran the Richland City ferry for eight years, and afterwards engaged in the grocery business. He enlisted in 1862, in the 19th regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in which he served eleven months, when he was discharged for disability. He re-enlisted in 1864 in the 4th Wisconsin Battery, light artillery, in which he served till the close of the war. After the war, he was variously engaged till 1880. In May of that year he engaged in mercantile business. He was appointed postmaster, Oct., 2, 1883. Mr. Nichols has been twice married. His first wife, Mary Clayman, was born in Ohio and died here in 1865. His present wife was Sarah Bills. He has three children by his first marriage—Orilla, Bell and Nellie.

James D. Keyes has been a resident of the town of Buena Vista since May, 1851. He has resided where he now lives, on section 16, since the spring of 1856. He has 330 acres of land, most of which was school land, which he obtained from the State. He was born in Bedford Co., Va., in 1825, but removed to Ohio with his parents, when ten years old, where his father died soon afterward. Mr. Keyes was married in Ohio to Maria B. Miller, a daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Miller. Her father died in Ohio, and her mother afterward married Jacob Krouskop, one of the well known early settlers of Richland county. Mrs. Krouskop is still living at an advanced age. Mrs. Keyes is a niece of the noted pioneers, Robert and William McCloud. She was born in Logan Co., Ohio, in 1822. Mr. and Mrs. Keyes have had seven children, four of whom are living—William McCloud, Charles B., James M. and Eliza A. Philip died in 1861, Jacob in 1854, and George D. in 1868.

William Krouskop resides on section 20, town of Buena Vista. He is a son of Jacob Krouskop, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. Krouskop was born in Logan Co., Ohio, in 1836, and came to this county with his father in 1851. His farm was entered by Philip Miller, whose death was the first that occurred in the town. It was purchased of Robert McCloud by the father of the present owner, Jacob Krouskop, in 1848, several years before the latter settled in the county. William Krouskop has owned the farm since 1857. It formerly contained 160 acres, but now has 310 acres. Mr. Krouskop now has an excellent place, and his improvements are among the best in the town. He is engaged quite extensively in feeding and shipping stock. He learned the trade of miller at his father's mill at Sextonville, and followed milling for a number of years. His wife was formerly Amanda Black, a native of Virginia.

Mr. Krouskop possesses the necessary qualifications for a successful business man, has accumulated a competence, and has a good reputation among his fellow men.

John Wallace, merchant at Lone Rock, came to Richland county in the spring of 1849, and has been a permanent resident since 1851, when he helped erect a mill at Richland City, which was the first mill built at that point. In 1854 he settled on his land in the town of Itbica, which he had entered in 1849. He has lived at Lone Rock since May, 1861.

Alfred Kuykendall settled on section 20, in 1853, where he still lives. He is a native of Illinois. His wife was Anna Long, a sister of Samuel Long of this town. They have four children—John, Mary C., Jacob and Elizabeth. John enlisted Aug. 9, 1864, in company I, 38th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Captain H. H. Coleman, and served until the close of the war. He participated in several important engagements in the vicinity of Petersburg, Va. From the spring of 1865, until the close of the war, he was on detached duty and was honorably discharged in July, 1865. John Kuykendall owns a farm on section 13, where he now resides.

Henry J. Morrison lives on section 17, town 9, range 2 east, where he settled in 1853, purchasing his farm of eighty acres of Israel Janney. He at once commenced improvements, breaking twenty-seven and one-half acres that season, and erecting a log house, in which he lived with his family during the summer of 1853; but he returned to Morrow Co., Ohio, in the fall of that year, where he taught school the following winter, returning in the fall of 1854. Mr. Morrison was born in Knox, now Morrow Co., Ohio, in 1824, where he was reared. He received a primary education at the common school, after which he attended the Martinsburg Academy, in Knox county, and was for a time a student of the Miami University, in Butler county. Much of his life has been spent in teaching, which he began in 1849, and taught one term in his native State, before coming west four terms in Illinois. He has taught eleven terms of school in the town of Buena Vista, and six terms in other parts of the county, four in Waukesha county, one in Ozaukee county. In 1850 Mr. Morrison came to Richland county and spent some weeks, but felt that he should not like the place for a home. He wished to go to Bloomington, Ill., but on arriving at Hanover, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., his team gave out so he could go no farther. He then rented a small farm near Hanover, and took the village school for the winter, farmed in the summer, taught a six months' term the next fall and winter. He again visited Richland county in the spring of 1852, and seeing the great improvements that had been made in the meantime, and getting pretty well over the "blues" from which he suffered very much in 1850, he thought this county would do for a new home; so he returned in 1853, and purchased as before stated. He has added an eighty, and again a forty, and the farm now consists of 200 acres. In 1874 Mr. Morrison rented his farm and removed to Waukesha, for the purpose of giving his children the advantages of the school of Carroll College, of that city, where he lived with his family three and one-half years, and where four of his children graduated. He was married in June, 1848, in Ohio, to Sally Ann Fox, who was born near Mansfield, in that State. They have seven children, all of whom are well educated and promise to be useful and respected members of society. They have all gone out into the world from the paternal roof. The names of the children are—Walter L., Thomas G., Mary C., Robert T., Emma E., William H. and Ella J., five of whom are now teaching school.

Alfred Kuydendall resides on section 20, town 9, range 2 east, where he located April 20, 1853. He was born in Vigo Co Ind., Dec. 20, 1823. He lived in his native county and in Clark Co., Ill., until thirty years old. He was engaged for a number of years boating on the Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He came to Richland county as before stated in 1853. He went first to the State of Iowa in search of a location, visiting what is now some of the finest parts of that State, but finally came here and bought his first land, eighty acres, of Jacob Long. Like most of the early settlers he was poor when he came here. He soon erected a frame dwelling, which he still occupies. His farm at present contains 120 acres, nearly all of which is improved. His wife was Anna Long, daughter of Jacob Long, who was born in Clark Co., Ill., Dec. 19, 1823. They have four children, two sons and two daughters—John, Mary, wife of David Henry; Jacob and Elizabeth, wife of Milo Beekwith. Mr. Kuykendall's father died in Vigo Co., Ind, in 1834. His ancestors were from Holland. He removed to Indiana from Kentucky.

George J. Carswell has been a resident of the town of Buena Vista since 1853. In March of that year he bought of E. M. Sexton 160 acres of land on section 26, town 9, range 2 east, where he settled with his family the following September. Mr. Carswell was born in the town of Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., Dec. 5, 1823. He was a resident of the State of New York until he came to Richland county. His father, Benjamin Carswell, was a native of Massachusetts and died when his son was four years of age. Mr. Carswell married Louisa Matteson, born in Otsego Co., N. Y. She is a sister of Delos Matteson, one of the well known pioneers of Richland county. He settled in the town Buena Vista in 1848 and died in 1857. His widow now lives at Lone Rock. Few among the pioneers of Richland county have been more successful than Mr. Carswell. He began life poor, and by energy and industry has secured a competence. His farm contains 400 acres of excellent land, and his improvements are not excelled in the town of Buena Vista. Socially he is a genial, intelligent gentleman; he has an excellent memory and is well informed on the early and later history of Richland county. Mr. Carswell was elected town supervisor in the spring of 1855; he assessed the town at an early day; was chairman of the board for the years 1866-7 and again in 1879. For a number of years Mr. Carswell has given much attention to the subject of draining. For the past twenty years he has been engaged in raising the Devon breed of cattle. He has now a herd of 100 cows, sixty of which are thoroughbred Devons. Probably a finer herd of cows cannot be found in the State than is possessed by Mr. Carswell. Mr. and Mrs. Carswell have three children, all of whom were born in this town—John A., born Oct. 29, 1854, Fred. E., born February, 1861, and George A., born March, 1867.

James A. Bills resides on the northeast corner of section 30, where he settled in 1853. He came to Richland City the previous autumn, where he resided with his family the following winter. He purchased eighty acres of his farm from Jonah Seaman; eighty acres from A. C. Daley, and forty acres from C. C. Woodman. His farm now contains 210 acres. He was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., in 1819. When a boy, he removed with his parents to Genesee Co., N. Y., and thence to the State of Pennsylvania. He was married in Erie county, of the latter State, to Permelia Emerson. After his marriage, he removed with his family to Kane Co., Ill., where he lived seven years, coming here from that county. Like many other settlers, Mr. Bills came into the county a poor man, but by industry and economy, has secured a pleasant home and a competency. Mr. and Mrs. Bills have had twelve children, four sons and eight daughters. One son and seven daughters are still living—Alonzo, born in Illinois in 1846; Mary, wife of Wesley Southard; Emma, wife of Foster Teeple; Jane, wife of Philip Bixler; Clarissa, wife of William Gewalt; Ellen, wife of E. Davis, in Colorado; Etta and Hattie. They lost one son, William, in the army during the War of the Rebellion. He was born Feb. 28, 1848. He enlisted in company A, 36th

Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was killed at Cold Harbor, Va. He was but sixteen years old at the time of his death, and although so young had already proved himself a brave soldier on the field of battle. He was killed by a confederate sharp-shooter, while conveying water to his comrades.

Abijah S. Davis came to Buena Vista in the fall of 1853, where he purchased a quarter section of land of Mr. Coffinberry. He was born in Canada, Aug. 2, 1824, where he lived until he was sixteen years old, when he left his home and came to the then territory of Wisconsin, locating in Dane county, where he lived many years. He purchased and improved a farm in Sun Prairie, in that county, which he afterwards sold, and located in the town of Berry, in the same county. He went to California in the early days of the gold fever in that State, where he engaged in mining, and was quite successful. He came to Richland county soon after his return from the land of gold. Mr. Davis is one of the successful farmers in the town of Buena Vista. He was married to Thankful A. Bresse, a native of Canada. They have had four children—W. H., A. S., deceased; Walter J. and Sallie A., also deceased. Walter J. Davis, who now owns the homestead where his father settled in 1853, was born on the old homestead in 1854. His wife was Lizzie Winterburn. They have two children—Benjamin U. and Abijah N.

William McNurlen resides on section 18, where he settled in 1854, purchasing his farm of George Mathews, upon which he has since made all the improvements. He was born in Greene Co., Penn., in 1814, where he lived until twenty years old, when he went to Richland Co., Ohio, thence to this county in 1854, during the month of July. He was married in Ohio to Willomine Trumbo, born in Tuscarawas county. They have had twelve children, eight of whom are now living—Rebecca J., Thomas J., Hannah J., William Allen, Wilson S., Lewis C., Chapman and Preston. They lost two sons, John and Andrew, in the army during the War of the Rebellion. The former was a member of the 19th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and died at Norfolk, Va., in 1862. The latter belonged to the 36th Wisconsin, and died of starvation in the confederate prison at Saalsburg, N. C., in 1865. Thomas also served in the army during the the Rebellion, in the 19th Wisconsin. Mr. McNurlen's farm now contains 200 acres.

John A. Carswell is the son of George J. Carswell, and was born at the homestead in this town Nov. 29, 1854. He resides on section 26. Forty acres of his farm was entered by E. M. Sexton and purchased by G. J. Carswell. He purchased eighty acres of his farm from N. Carswell, and 100 acres from Harry Pier, having, altogether, 220 acres. Like a number of successful farmers of Bear river valley, Mr. Carswell is giving his attention to dairying, and like his father, possesses a fine herd of Devon cows. He is a practical dairyman, having learned thoroughly the business of cheese manufacture. He was educated at the high school at Lone Rock, which, for a number of years, was an institution of high merit. After leaving school he had charge of his father's farm for five years. He settled on his present place in 1878. He was married to Abigail, daughter of V. Brainard. She was born in Virginia. Her father formerly resided on section 26 of this town, but has returned to Virginia.

Levi Runyan resides on section 13, town 9, range 2 east, where he settled in April, 1855. He was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., but was reared in Herkimer county, and brought up to the business of agriculture. He has made nearly all the improvements on his present farm. His father, John Runyan, was born in Otsego county, and came to Richland county with Levi in 1855. They purchased 160 acres and settled on the west eighty. The father died in Buena Vista, Dec. 24, 1874. His wife, the mother of the subject of this sketch, died in New York. There were six children of the family who came to Richland county, only three of whom are now residents. Mr. Runyan was married in New York to Maria Lane, who died in Herkimer county. They had one child—Aliee. His second wife was Susanna Shontz, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in Crawford county in 1863. They also had one child—John S. Mr. Runyan's farm now contains eighty acres.

L. G. Thomas, one of the well known settlers of the town of Buena Vista, is a native of Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he was born in 1807, but was reared in Otsego county, that State. He was brought up to agricultural pursuits, but previous to coming west was engaged in the mercantile business for a period of seventeen years. He has been a resident of Buena Vista since 1856, coming here directly from the Empire State. He purchased the farm on section 35, where he now resides, of A. C. Daley. Mr. Thomas was the pioneer in the business of cheese making, which has now become an important industry in Richland county. He began the manufacture of cheese in 1865, with the milk of about 100 cows, including those of his own and neighboring farmers. He continued the business for about ten years, increasing the amount of milk manufactured into cheese to the product of 200 cows, manufacturing during the last years of his continuance in the business, an average of 40,000 pounds a year. His factory was the first cheese manufactory erected in the State. Another industry in which Mr. Thomas has been largely engaged for many years, is the raising of broom corn and the manufacture of brooms, which he still continues. He is also engaged in grain buying at Lone Rock. Mrs. Thomas, formerly Dolly Catlin, is a native of Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have had four children, two of whom are living—Henry C. and L. G. Jr. The former resides in Sauk county. The latter, who resides with his father, was born in the town of Winfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., in 1839. Including his farm in Sauk county, Mr. Thomas has about 390 acres of land.

William F. Lewis has been a resident of Richland City since 1856. He was born in Rush Co., Ind., in 1824. His father, A. T. Moore; Mary, wife of E. B. Taylor, of Topeka, Kan.; Isadora, wife of R. J. Miller, of Lincoln, Neb.; William G. at Topeka, Kan.; Earl E. and Bertha A. learned the trade of carpenter and joiner, which business he followed for a number of years. He erected a number of the early buildings of Lone Rock including the present residence of A. H. Tyler, also rebuilt the store of G. W. Platt which was afterwards occupied by Platt brothers, merchants, who were in business at this place a number of years. They were formerly from Scranton, Vt., and are now in Iowa. Mr. Bancroft has been twice married; his first wife was a native of Marathon, Cortland Co., N. Y., and died in the village of Marathon, Cortland Co., N. Y. His present wife was Delia A. Reynolds, a daughter of F. C. Reynolds, who came to Wisconsin in 1846. He was for four years president of the agricultural society of Richland county, and has done much toward promoting the interests of agriculture by his advocacy and support of advanced methods in farming. Mr. Carswell is a man of positive opinions, and is always found on the side which he believes to be right. Politically, he was an abolitionist, of the Gerrett Smith school, and knew well that advocate of universal freedom. He was also personally acquainted with John Brown, and was at the convention at Syracuse, in 1859, where, with Gerrett Smith and others, he contributed to a fund for the purchase of arms for John Brown and his sons to enable them to defend themselves against the border ruffians of Kansas. He has lived to see the extreme views

he advocated on the slavery question, prevail. He is as strong a foe to intemperance as he was to the institution of human slavery. His father died when he was twelve years of age, and he resided for many years with his mother and the younger children of the family; marrying quite late in life, Mary Lutin, a native of Germany. Like most of the farmers of Bear creek valley, he is engaged in dairying, keeping from thirty to thirty-five cows. Mr. Holcomb was born in Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y. He is of New England ancestry, his grandfather being a native of Litchfield, Conn. His father, Albern Holcomb, was born in Litchfield, N. Y. A. W. Towsley, station agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company at Lone Rock, has occupied the position since October, 1868. The road was completed to this place in the fall of 1856, when a small frame depot was built, to which, in 1866, quite an extensive addition was made, and all was burned in 1881, having caught fire from the sparks of an engine. The present depot building was commenced immediately and is one of the finest on the road. It is a frame structure, veneered with Watertown brick. But two agents have been in charge here since the completion of the road to this point; the first was William Craig, who remained until 1868, when he was succeeded by Mr. Towsley, who has been a resident of Wisconsin since 1835, when his father settled at what was then Southport, now Kenosha. Mr. Towsley's railroad experience commenced on this road in 1860. He began as brakeman, and in the fall of 1861 attained the position of conductor, in which capacity he acted until he assumed the duties of his present position in 1868.

When twenty-two years old he directed his attention to the study of medicine, which he practiced for twenty-two years in his native State, his residence being in the town of Antrim, Guernsey county. Since coming to Wisconsin, he has been engaged chiefly in agricultural pursuits, although he has practiced medicine to some extent. His farm contains 250 acres, and is very pleasantly located. His father died here, at the residence of his son, in 1882, at the age of eighty-seven years. He was a native of Maryland. Dr. Moore was married to Margaret McCartney. three years old, his father, Michael Wolf, emigrated to the United States with his family, and settled in the State of Michigan, where his wife died in 1850. He removed the same year with his family to Dane Co., Wis., and in 1857 came to Richland county. Abraham did not come to Richland county with his father, as at the age of eight years he was bound out to a man by the name of J. G. Walbridge, in whose family he was to reside till eighteen years of age. On Oct. 18, 1861, before he had attained that age, he enlisted in company G, 11th regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He continued in the army till March, 1863, when he was discharged for disability, occasioned by sickness. While in the service, he marched through southern Missouri and Arkansas, participated in the battle of Cotton Plant, July 7, 1862; was with the regiment at Helena, and at Oldtown Landing, on the Mississippi river, where so many of our troops sickened and died. Here he was taken sick, but returned with the regiment to Ironton, Mo., where he was sent to the hospital, and discharged March 24, 1863. He returned from the army to the town of Ithaca, where his father had settled in 1857. Recovering his health, he re-enlisted Aug. 24, 1864, in company I, 38th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, joined the army at City Point, Va., and was in the trenches in front of Petersburg during the following winter. On April 2, 1865, he took part with the regiment in the charge on Fort Mahone, where he was severely wounded, losing his left leg and the index finger of his right hand. He was discharged in the hospital at Washington, Sept. 6, 1865. After his return to his father's, in the fall of 1865, he attended school at Sextonville three terms. Hugo M. Boek, wholesale dealer in foreign and domestic liquors, established business at Richland City in the fall of 1869, where he has quite an extensive trade, amounting to upwards of $30,000 annually. Of the stock sold, about two thirds is shipped from his store in Richland City, and the balance including principally the cheaper grades of goods are shipped to his customers directly from the distillers. He keeps constantly on hand a large stock of the best class of liquors, and handles a large amount of California wines. He also manufactures a very fine wine from the common wild grape. So extensive is his trade in this particular line of goods, that the amount manufactured depends only upon the amount of supply of grapes. When the season is favorable, he obtains a sufficiency to make from 1,500 to 3,000 gallons annually. This wine, on account of its actual intrinsic worth and purity, is obtaining quite a reputation, and is unquestionably a very fine article, and compares favorably with the very best California productions. Mr. Boek is making improvements in his business facilities as the growth of his trade demands. He has a fine residence, erected in 1879 at a cost of $3,500. He is a lover of fine horses and has some excellent specimens of the Hamiltonian breed, of which family he makes a specialty. He is a native of the city of New York. When a young man, he went to the city of New Orleans, where he was engaged as a bookkeeper. His experience in his present business began in the south. He had charge for a time of a distillery at New Orleans and also at Mobile. His father was a tobacconist in the city of New York, and in early life, Mr. Boek learned that business, but going south he finally drifted into the liquor trade. His wife is a native of Mobile, Ala. They have five children—Edward, who is in Colorado; Joseph, at home; Hugo, a student at Prairie du Chien College; Sidney, at home, and one daughter, Mary, at home.

Wallace and Eli Ellsworth reside on section 10. The farm is owned by the former, and contains 295 acres. It was purchased by their father, Loring D. Ellsworth, in the spring of 1867, and by him sold to Wallace. Loring D. Ellsworth now resides at Spring Green, Sauk county. Wallace was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., in 1852. He came to Wisconsin in the spring of 1874. He married Eva Perkins, a native of Herkimer county, who died Oct. 3, 1880. Eli E. Ellsworth was born in Herkimer county, in 1857. He came to Wisconsin in the summer of 1874, and was for some time engaged as clerk, and afterwards as express messenger for the American Express Company, by whom he was employed until December, 1882. He married Alice Case, daughter of Mariner Case. She is a native of Connecticut.

George L. Sargent, of Richland City, was born at Charlestown, N. H., April 30, 1828. He removed when a child to Rochester, Sangamon Co., Ill., and came to what is now Lafayette Co., Wis., in 1840. He was one of the early engineers on the upper Mississippi; in fact he may be said to have followed that occupation on the upper Mississippi river and its navigable branches from 1845 to 1875. He put in the machinery of the steam flouring mill, which was erected in Richland City in 1854, for Henry Rowell. In 1876 Mr Sargent went to Colorado and engaged in mining and erecting machinery. He returned in December, 1882. He is a thorough practical engineer of large experience. But few engineers are now living who navigated the upper Mississippi as he did nearly forty years ago. His wife was Sarah C. Robinson, born in Morrow Co., Ohio. She was a daughter of Hiram Robinson and a step-daughter of Henry Clayman. Her mother, Hannah (Ward) Clayman, lives with Mr. Sargent. She has reached the mature age of eighty-three years. Mr. and Mrs Sargent have one daughter—Viola E., wife of William A. McNurlen.

CHAPTER XXII.

TOWN OF DAYTON.

The town of Dayton embraces congressional township 10 north, of range 1 west. Although this was not the first settled town in Richland county, it contains some of the best farming land in this region. Much of the land is heavily timbered, except where cleared by the energy and industry of the settlers, and the surface contour of this town, like the balance of the county, is hilly and broken. There are many farms here under a high state of cultivation, and there are many good and substantial farm buildings. The soil here is a rich dark loam, except on some of the ridges where a tendency to clayeyness is visible. The ridges raise the best wheat. It is all well adapted to raising the cereals common to this latitude, and vegetables grow in abundance. The surface of the town is well watered by Mill creek, Fox branch, Horse creek and their tributaries. The first mentioned, Mill creek, is the most important stream in the town, and furnishes good water power.

There is only one village within the limits of the town, Boaz, which is located on sections 19 and 20.

The first blacksmith shop at Boaz was opened in 1857 by Conrad Kierns, who remained about ten years. He was then succeeded by Stephen Bailey.

The first wagon maker in the village was Peter Kierns, who occupied the same building as his brother, Conrad.

The next wagon shop was established by W. J. Woodruff and E. S. Fessenden. They sold to Jerome Cross.

The first hotel at Boaz was opened by Lewis Berry in 1870. Charles Pierce was the second landlord.

The Boaz House was erected in 1859 by M. Ripley, who occupied it for a number of years as a store and dwelling. In 1874 the property was purchased by George H. Starr, and in connection with his harness shop he ran this as the Starr Hotel. In 1876 he was succeeded as landlord by D. J. Conklin. Then, in succession, came Ira Campbell, James Sheffield and W. M. Bevier.

The postoffice at Boaz was established in 1858 with M. Ripley as postmaster. The various postmasters have been as follows: M. Ripley, J. T. Barnes, John Ewers, J. T. Barnes, J. W. Briggs and F. O. Smith. Mr. Smith, the present postmaster, was appointed in 1881.

The first school in Boaz was a subscription school, taught in a building owned by Reason and James T. Barnes. In 1857 a log school house was erected, in which John Dunstan was the first teacher.

In 1883 a school house was erected at a cost of $1,400. It is a fine two story building, 28x78 feet. Kittie Delaney has the honor of being the first teacher in this house.

The Boaz mills is the most important establishment in the town. The land upon which the mills are located was entered, in 1854, by Reason Barnes and his son James T. In 1855 they commenced the erection of a saw-mill which was ready for operation in September, 1856. It was furnish with an "up and down saw." In 1857 M. Ripley became a partner and in 1858 they added a grist-mill. In 1861 Mr. Ripley withdrew. In March, 1869, the mill was destroyed by fire, but was at once rebuilt. The saw mill has been furnished with circular saws and machinery for the manufacture of wagon stock. The flour mill has two run of buhrs and all other machinery for making first-class flour. It is run as a custom and merchant mill, and has a liberal patronage. The power is derived from Mill creek, which at this point furnishes eight feet head of water. In 1871 Reason Barnes died, and the firm changed to Barnes Bros. & Co., en personnel, J. T. and W. M. Barnes and J. W. Briggs. In 1874 J. W. Briggs withdrew and the firm became Barnes Brothers. Thus it continued until 1883 when W. M. Barnes became sole proprietor.

In an early day preachers of different denominations paid frequent visits to Boaz. Among the number was Rev. Todd, a Presbyterian, from Sextonville. He did not organize a church here.

Elder Knapp, a Methodist preacher from Buena Vista, organized a class at the school house at an early day. He was well liked here, and the class flourished under his charge. Members moved away, however, and it was finally discontinued.

At the present time there is only one religious organization at Boaz, the German Lutheran. This society was probably organized as early as 1858. Rev. Wachtel was one of the first preachers. The society met to worship in different private houses until 1871, when they erected a church edifice. The society now numbers about thirty members. The present pastor is Rev. William Endeward, of Muscoda.

VILLAGE OF DAYTON CORNERS.

In 1857 Lorenzo Woodman and James Hafus, laid out some lots and blocks on the southwestern part of section 14, and the northwestern part of section 23, to which they gave the name of Dayton Corners. During the same year a post-office was established here under the name of Ripley Postoffice, with Lorenzo Woodman as postmaster. Mr. Woodman served until the time of his death, and then C. C. Walker became postmaster. He was succeeded by James Hafus and the office was finally discontinued after an existence of about two years.

At an early day Peter Fall opened a blacksmith shop on the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 13. During the war he sold out and moved away. He did general repair work, mostly sharpening plows and grub hoes. His son Samuel opened a shop soon after the old gentleman had sold out, on the northeast quarter of section 13, and remained for several years.

Edward Bassett came to Dayton Corners in 1857, and bought a lot of Lorenzo Woodman on the southwest quarter of section 14. He erected a frame building 20x30 feet in size, and put in a stock of general merchandise. He remained in trade about four years, when he closed out and moved to Ohio.

The first school at Dayton Corners was taught in 1857 by Eliza Bevier, in a house owned by C. C. Walker. During the summer of the same year a school house was erected in that village, which was used until 1881, when a frame house was built on section 15.

The Dayton Corner's Methodist Episcopal Church started with the organization of a class in 1856 at the house of Lorenzo Woodman, by Rev. John Walker, who was then located at Sextonville. Among the members of the class at its organization were the following: Lorenzo Woodman and wife; Simeon Gravatt and wife; Joseph Wheaton and wife, and Joel Berry and wife. Lorenzo Woodman was the first class leader.

A United Brethren class was organized at an early day at the house of Peter Fall, on section 13. The class met for worship at the residence of Mr Fall for a number of years. At present there is an organization that has a partially completed church edifice on section 23. Thomas Ewing is class leader.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Francis M., son of Uriah and Christiana (Barnes) Patch, early settlers of Richland county, was born in Licking Co., Ohio, in December, 1837. He came to Richland county with his parents at the age of fifteen. He was united in marriage in March, 1863, to Esther Thompson. They had one son—James F., born May 21, 1864. In 1864, Mr. Patch enlisted in the 8th Illinois Cavalry, company H, and joined the regiment at Washington a few weeks later. He served until the close of the war, and was discharged with his regiment at St. Louis in 1865. He then returned to Dayton and purchased land on section 2, which he has improved, and where he still lives. The death of his wife occurred while he was in the army. His second wife, to whom he was married Jan. 1, 1866, was Charlotte B. (Ladd) Harris, widow of Abraham Harris. Two children have blessed this union—Francis R. and Henry T. B.

Rev. Abraham Harris, (deceased), son of John and Mary (Short) Harris, was born in Devonshire, England, in August, 1832. He came to America with his parents. He was united in marriage to Charlotte B. Ladd, March 27, 1852. She was a native of Orange Co., Vt., and was born March 18, 1832. Soon after their marriage they united with the Baptist Church. His early education had been sadly neglected and he learned to read after his marriage. In 1855 they came to Richland county, town of Marshall, and located on section 28. At the organization of the Church of the United Brethren, both he and his wife became members, and he was soon after licensed as a preacher of that denomination, and devoted his time entirely to the Church. He had charge of Churches in Richland, Sauk, Vernon and Crawford counties. His death occurred Oct. 17, 1862. He left a widow and six children to mourn his loss. One of the children has since died. The five remaining are—Mary E., Martha J., J. Freeman, Sarah M. and Eldora J. Mrs. Harris is now the wife of Francis M. Patch and resides in Dayton.

Capt. Roswell R. Hamilton was born in Madison Co., N. Y., in 1826, and is the son of Tilley and Sarah (Orcut) Hamilton. He resided in his native State until twenty-one years old, then, in company with a brother, came to Rock Co., Wis., where he worked upon a farm. In 1854 he came to Richland county, and in 1855 settled at Richland Center, where he served as town treasurer. In September, 1861, he enlisted in company F, of the 2d Wisconsin Cavalry, went into camp in December, at Camp Washburn, Milwaukee, and was mustered into service in January, 1862. His regiment first went to Camp Benton, Mo., thence to Jefferson City, from there to Springfield, and about the 1st of June started for Helena, Ark., where the regiment brigaded with the 5th and 11th Kansas regiments. He received a wound in the hand at Augusta, Ark. From Augusta they moved to Helena, Ark., and December, 1862, was at the taking of the Arkansas Post. In February, 1863, they removed to Memphis, and scouted in the southern part of Tennessee and northern part of Mississippi. In June, 1863, they moved to Snyder's Bluff, near Vicksburg, where they were placed between Grant's and Johnson's armies, and after the surrender of Vicksburg, followed Johnson's army to Meridian, after which they fell back to Vicksburg, and went into winter quarters at Red River. On July 1, 1864, they made a raid on Jackson, Miss., had seven days' fight, and were driven back, the confederate forces numbering 5,000 men, while the union forces had barely 2,500 men. They fell back to Black river, obtained reinforcements, with which they forced the enemy to retire. In December, 1864, they made a raid on Vaughn Station, Miss., destroyed a railroad bridge across Black river, and fell back to Yazoo City. On the 4th of December, while reconnoitering, they were overpowered by the enemy and driven back, during which time Capt. Hamilton was injured by the falling of his horse; thence from Yazoo to Vicksburg; thence to Memphis, where on Feb. 6, 1865, Capt. Hamilton was mustered out of service, his time having expired, and his injury unfitting him for further military duty. In 1881 he moved to his farm on section 13, town of Dayton, where he owns eighty acres. He was united in marriage in Rock Co., Wis., in 1849, to Eliza Rose. Two children blessed this union—Ira J. and Albert S. Mrs. Hamilton died, and Capt. Hamilton was again married, June 4, 1865, to Mary Bailey. They are the parents of one son—D. Vance.

William Robinson, deceased, pioneer of Richland county, first settled near Sextonville in the year 1853. He bought eighty acres of land on section 4, town 9, range 2 east, now included in the town of Ithaca. He remained here but one year, then sold out and removed to town 10, range 1 west, now known as the town of Dayton. He entered the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 34, built a log house and leased a portion of the land. In 1866 he purchased unimproved land on section 26 of the same town. This was his home until the time of his death. He was a native of Anderson Co., Ky, born July 5, 1805. When a young man he emigrated with his parents to Indiana, and located in Washington county. Soon after they removed to Carroll county, where he engaged in farming, but, like many others, the fever and ague troubled him, and after living there three years he removed to Kosciusko county. Here he purchased timber land, erected a comfortable log house, and cleared a farm. In 1852 he visited Richland county in company with Dr. Sippy, made a short stay, then returned to his home and remained until the following spring, then sold his farm, packed up his goods and started overland, accompanied by his family, and settled near Sextonville, as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were the parents of eleven children, six of whom are now living—Eliza J., Elizabeth, James H., Francis M., Erasmus P. and Samuel Edwin. The youngest son now occupies the homestead. James H. and Francis M. purchased 172 acres of timber land on section 35. They have ninety acres of it cleared and improved, and it is one of the best farms in the town. They have erected a large frame house, and other necessary farm buildings. Their mother makes her home with them. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson both joined the Presbyterian Church soon after marriage. As there was no Church of that denomination in Dayton, he joined the United Brethren Class, and was a member of Otterbein Church at the time of his death, which occurred in the spring of 1875.

Henry Robinson, deceased, an early settler of the town of Dayton, was born in Anderson Co., Ky., in September, 1805. He was joined in marriage to Sarah Farmer. In 1829, in company with his brother William and some others, he emigrated to Indiana and settled in Tippecanoe county, near the line of Clinton county, and was one of the pioneers in that section of the country. He remained there about ten years, then removed to Kosciusko county; he was also an early settler there. He then purchased timber land, cleared a farm, and made that his home until the fall of 1854, when he sold out and started for Wisconsin, traveling overland, bringing his family and household goods along. After three weeks travel he arrived at the home of his brother William, at Pleasant Hill, in the town of Eagle, and there spent the winter. In the spring of 1855 he removed to Dayton and entered land on section 28, as before stated, remaining here until 1871, then sold and moved to Boone Co., Neb., where he died two years later. His wife died in 1876. They were the parents of eleven children, six of whom are now living.

Their son, William F., now resides on section 29. He was born in Anderson Co., Ky., in September, 1828. He purchased land on section 4 of the town of Eagle, and lived there until 1862, when he came to Dayton and purchased eighty acres of land on section 29, in the portion of the town known as Fox Hollow. He has since that time purchased other land, and his farm now contains 180 acres. He has engaged in raising grain and stock. He entered land on section 25, town 9 north, of range 1 east, now known as the town of Orion, upon which he erected a hewed log house, and cleared forty acres of land. Six years later (1856) he sold this land, and coming to town 10 north, of range 1 west, now called Dayton, purchased a tract of land on section 6, erected a log house and made various substantial improvements. He made that his home until his death, which occurred on Christmas day of 1863. Mr. Miller was married Feb. 16, 1853, to Angy E. Goff, daughter of George and Mary Goff. ## CHAPTER XXIII.

TOWN OF EAGLE.

The town of Eagle embraces nearly all of congressional township 9 north, range 1 west. It is bounded on the north by the town of Dayton, on the east by Orion, on the west by Richwood, and on the south by the Wisconsin river. This is about the finest agricultural town in Richland county. While some portions of it are upon the rich bottoms of the Wisconsin river, much of it is broken and hilly; bluffs, interspersed with rich lowlands and valleys; the home of luxuriant grasses and golden grain. The surface of the town is well watered by Eagle creek and its numerous tributaries, making this an excellent stock raising region. Many of the farmers devote a good deal of attention to this branch, and the result is highly gratifying. The only village in the town is Eagle Corners.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first permanent settler in the territory now comprising the town of Eagle was Mathew Alexander, a native of Kentucky. He had been a sailor on the great lakes, and came from that region to this county in 1840. He entered lots 1 and 2, on section 33, and lot 4, on section 34, where he made some improvements, and remained until 1852, when he sold out and removed to Brownsville, Minn. The greater portion of the time which he spent here he was engaged in lumbering and rafting.

It is believed that the first claim in the town of Eagle was made, in 1839, by Robert Boyd and Monroe Fleming. During this year they came from Iowa county and claimed the southwest quarter of section 26, covering the excellent mill privilege on what is now called Mill creek. They made no improvements except to cut four poles and lay them "claim fashion." They did not attend to their claim close enough and it was jumped in 1841 by Thomas J. Parrish.

In 1841 Hardin Moore, a native of Kentucky, came here from Grant county and made a claim of the southwest quarter of section 34. He was a single man; did not enter his land, but erected a log cabin and made a little clearing. A few years later he sold his claim, and boarded with Mathew Alexander for a time. He was a natural mechanic, and would often shoe horses for the settlers. He receives attention in the general chapters of this volume.

Thomas Palmer and his sons, Loreman and William, came here in 1848. The father entered the east half of the northwest quarter of section 32, where he lived until the time of his death. Loreman entered the east half of the northwest quarter of section 32, and lived there until he died. William entered the east half of the northeast quarter of section 32. He lived there for some years; then sold out and removed to Missouri; but returned after a short stop, and has since died.

Mr. Miller settled on the southeast quarter of section 23. His son John, with his family, came at this time and settled on section 13, afterwards removing to section 23. Sharp located on the southeast quarter of section 14, where his widow still resides. In October, 1849, James and Andrew Miller, brothers of William, came to Richland county and located in the town of Orion. James was a bachelor. #### HISTORICAL EVENTS.

The first birth in the town was that of Rossanna, daughter of Delila (Alling) Hessler, born Feb. 19, 1847. She is now the wife of Albert Brenaman, and lives on Bird's creek.

Another early birth was that of Joseph, a son of Joel and Susanna (Bradbury) Doughettee, born July 5, 1850. He is now living in Missouri.

The first child in the town born of Norwegian parents was Jennie, a daughter of George and Annie Shelbern born Jan. 4, 1854.

The first marriage in the town was that of Mark Bird to Lucinda Alexander, in 1848. They settled in Oregon, where she died and he still lives.

Another early marriage was that of Daniel Bird to Maria Alexander, in 1850. The ceremony was performed by T. H. Doughettee, justice of the peace, at the residence of the bride's parents on section 33. They settled in Oregon, where they were still living when last heard from.

The first death in the town—or one of the first, at least—was that of John Richardson, in 1850. He was attempting to cross the mill-pond about a mile north of the mill, in search of deer, and was caught in the brush and drowned. His body was recovered in a short time, and buried on section 27. He was a single man, and had come from Massachusetts. In company with a man named La Rue, he had a claim on section 27.

The first election in the town, and some claim in the county, was held at the house of Mathew Alexander, in the southeast quarter of section 33, in the fall of 1848. There were nineteen votes polled.

MONONGAUELA.

In 1844 (some claim 1845) the commissioners of Iowa county appointed James Murphy and two others to select a county seat of Richland county. They came and selected the northwest fractional quarter of section 2, town 8, range 1 west, now included in the town of Eagle, for the prospective seat of justice. About one year later Francis A. Hill surveyed a village here, laying out lots and blocks. It was named Monongahela. For a time Ambrose E. Parrish ran a saloon here, but everything connected with the village has long since passed away.

ORGANIC.

The town of Eagle was organized in 1853. The first town meeting was held in April of that year, when the following named were elected officers: Supervisors, C. G. Rodolf, chairman, Josiah Newburn and Thomas E. Hesler; clerk, L. B. Palmer; treasurer, James Appleby; school superintendent, G. D. Sharp; justices of the peace, Thomas Palmer and Josiah Newburn; constable, William Sharp; assessor, L. B. Palmer; overseers of highway, David D. Miller and John Thompson.

Craigo, Horatio Cornwall, Frank Ward and John Bovee; constables, H. M. Hardy and John Dillon.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school house in district No. 1 was erected in 1856. It was built of hewn logs, and located on section 10. The first school was taught by Newton Wells, the term commencing Jan. 1, 1857. About 1868 the school house was burned and a temporary building was erected on the northeast quarter of section 9 which was used until 1876. At that time the present neat frame building was erected at a cost of $450. Mary Hamilton was the first teacher in the present building. Lillie Wood was the teacher in 1883.

The first school house in district No. 2 was erected in 1857—a frame building on the northwest quarter of section 32. Harriet Hunger was the first teacher. In 1870 the building was sold and is now used as a stable. During the same year the present school house was erected on the southwest quarter of section 29, the site having been donated to the district by George Kite for a term of ninety-nine years. Olive Craigo is the present teacher. This is known as the Kite district.

No. 3 is known as the "Eagle Corner's district." The first school house in this district was a log one located on section 28, erected in 1858. Frances Prevett was the first teacher. The school house was afterwards moved to Eagle Corners and was in use until 1868, when a frame building was erected in which Alexander Breneman was the first to teach. Frank Giles is the present teacher.

The first school house in district No. 4 was erected on the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 6, in 1858. Francis Gault was the first teacher. The old school house was used until 1882, when the present house was completed. Katie Dorgan was the first teacher in this building and Ida Allison is the present teacher. This is usually called the "Gault district."

The first school in district No. 5 was taught by L. M. Thorpe in a log building, erected by the neighborhood for the purpose, on section 23. The building was in use until after the war, when the present school building was erected on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 24. Mary Edwards was the first teacher in the present building. This is generally known as the "Pleasant Hill school house."

The first school house in district No. 6 was erected on the southeast quarter of section 11, in 1857. Frances Prevett, now Mrs. James Sharp, was the first teacher in this building. The present school house was erected in 1880. It is a neat frame building located on the southwest quarter of section 12. Martha Potts was the first teacher in this building.

The first school house in district No. 8 was erected in 1856 [or 1857] on the northwest quarter of section 35. John Hendricks was one of the first teachers in this house. This building was afterward removed to Rodolf's mill where it was used until 1880, when it was destroyed by fire, and the present house was erected near the old site. Miss I. Rhodes was the first teacher in this building, and Henry Brenaman, the present.

The first school in district No. 9 was taught by Wilson Crandall in the winter of 1861-2 in a vacant log house located on section 21. In 1862 a school house was erected on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 21. It was erected of Basswood logs, and it was from this fact that this locality took the name "Basswood." Enos Cornwall was the first teacher. The present school building was erected in 1867, and Alexander Brenaman taught the first school within its walls. Charles Cronwall is the present teacher.

MILLS.

In 1839 Robert Boyd and Monroe Fleming came here from Iowa county and made a claim of the southwest quarter of section 26, including the excellent mill site on what is now called Mill creek. This was probably the first claim taken within the limits now comprising the town of Eagle. They made but little improvements, and in 1841 the claim was jumped by Thomas J. Parrish. Boyd and Fleming were lumbermen and raftmen. Boyd afterward settled in Crawford county, where he laid out the village of Boydstown.

In 1841 and 1842, Thomas J. Parrish, in company with a Mr. Estes, erected a saw-mill upon the site—the first in the county. An old fashioned "up and down saw," together with one run of stone for grinding corn, was put into the mill. In January, 1848, the mill was destroyed by fire. Mr. Parrish had died a short time previous to this, and the property was sold to Henry Moore. He rebuilt the mill and furnished it like its predecessor with an "up and down saw" and one run of stone. In 1852 C. G. Rodolf purchased a half interest, and shortly afterward a rotary saw was put in. Mr. Rodolf bought Mr. Moore's interest, and in 1857 and 1858 erected a substantial building, 30x40 feet in size, putting in two run of stone. It was run as a custom and merchant mill, flour being shipped to Milwaukee and other large markets. In January, 1869, the mill was destroyed by fire. Mr. Rodolf rebuilt immediately, erecting a building 30x40 feet in size, and two stories in height. Two run of buhrs were put into the mill, and all other machinery in use in that day. In February, 1874, this mill was burned. The interesting litigation which grew from this is treated at length in the chapter upon "courts." In 1877 Frank G. Rodolf, a son of Charles G., purchased a half interest in the property, and they erected the present mill, which is 34x46 feet in size, three stories in height, and stone basement. The mill is equipped with four run of buhrs, and all other necessary machinery for the manufacture of first-class flour.

In 1852 Simon Sharp and Henry Miller erected a saw-mill on section 13, and equipped it with an "up and down saw." The power was derived from Hoosier creek, a dam of brush and earth being constructed. In 1853 Sharp & Miller sold to Oliver Miller. He operated the mill until 1867, when he sold to Isaac Thompson and John McCormack. Mr. Thompson purchased McCormack's interest in 1870, and ran the mill until 1876, when he abandoned that mill, and, in company with S. C. McClintock, purchased a steam mill and set it up near the old water power. Mr. McClintock purchased his partner's interest in 1882.

RELIGIOUS.

In 1854 John Crandall, a Baptist preacher, held services at John Thompson's house on section 23. He was a pioneer in the northern part of the county, and was instrumental in the establishment of a number of religious organizations in this region; but he did not organize a society here.

The first Methodist class was organized at the house of Josephus Cooper, on section 28, by Rev. Hyatt [or Rev. Schoonover, as some claim]. The following were among the members: Josephus Cooper and wife, Henry Miller and wife, Mrs. C. Thompson and William Cooper. Josephus Cooper was the first class leader. The class was in existence but a few years.

Preachers of different denominations have preached at the school house in district No. 6. Rev. Mathers, the pioneer Presbyterian, was among the first to preach here.

In 1857 a Methodist Episcopal class was organized here by Rev. John Walker. The following were among the members of this class: Gideon Miller and wife, James Lewis and wife, and Mrs. M. Young. Gideon Miller was the class leader. This class flourished for some time, holding meetings in the school house. During the war it suspended, as some of the members moved away. Revs. Knapp, Blackhurst and Barlingame were among the pastors who served this class.

Pleasant Valley Christian Church was organized at the Basswood school house in the winter of 1866-7. Rev. Jacob Mark was the preacher. The following were among the first members: Horatio Cornwall and wife, W. H. Cooper, Mrs. Keplogle and two daughters, William Briggs and wife, and son Marvin. During the summer of 1866 a successful protracted meeting was held at which fourteen were baptized. The society met at the school house for some years. In 1874 they erected a neat frame church at Eagle Corners, at a cost of $650. The church now has about twenty members. J. B.

Newburn is the present clerk. Rev. James Keeper is the present pastor.

The Pleasant Hill Presbyterian Church was organized in 1851 by Rev. William Smith, from Sextonville, at the old log school house on section 23. The following were among the early member: George D. Sharp and wife, Cyrus Sharp and wife, Mrs. Mary Sharp, William Robinson and wife, William Miller and two sons, George and John Miller and wives, Mrs. Sarah Perrine, Mrs. Abraham Beard and Henry Dawson and wife. The following were elected elders—George D. Sharp, William Robinson and Cyrus Sharp. Rev. Smith preached for the society one year. Among those who have filled the pulpit since that time are Revs. Overton, Laughlin, Conley, Smith, Pinkerton, Francis, Sherwin and Sparrow. Rev. Thomas Murphy is the present pastor. The society met for worship in the school house until 1854, when they erected a frame church on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 24. The society has flourished and now has about ninety members. The present elders are: William Robinson, William Irving McCoy, Monroe Robinson, Thomas M. Miller and D. W. Bear. Monroe Robinson is the clerk.

A sabbath school was organized in connection with the Pleasant Hill Presbyterian Church at an early day, with George D. Sharp as first superintendent. He was followed by D. A. Hurlbert, who held the position until the time of his death. Monroe Robinson is the present superintendent; the school meets every Sunday.

United Brethren Church Humility Chapel. This class was organized by Rev. George Kite soon after the war. The following were among the first members: Alexander Shannon and wife, Clarissa Shannon, Sarah Evans, Sarah Endicott and Susan Dillon. Alexander Shannon was the first class leader. The following are among the pastors who have filled the pulpit here: Revs. Mebbit, Potts, Young, Whitney, Pound, Day, Taylor, Bovee and Giffen. Rev. Wood is the present pastor. In 1882 the society commenced the erection of a church edifice which was dedicated Sept. 9, 1883, by Bishop Weaver, of Toledo.

CEMETERIES

Dawson's cemetery was surveyed by James Appleby in September, 1881. It is located on the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 26, and contains eighty-eight blocks, eighty of which contain ten lots each, and eight five lots each. The first burial here was of the remains of Mrs. Henry Dawson, who selected the spot before she died.

Pleasant Hill cemetery, on section 23, is under the control of the Presbyterian Church. The land was donated by William Robinson and set aside for this purpose in 1851. The first burial here was of the remains of George W. Miller, who died Aug. 30, 1855.

EAGLE CORNERS.

James Harvey was the first to engage in mercantile trade at Eagle Corners. He opened his establishment in 1879.

J. Lawrence and son opened their stock of goods in 1882.

C. C. Taylor was the first blacksmith, opening a shop in 1878-9. This branch is now represented by Jacob Stetler and William Ware.

William Smith was the first wagon maker, opening here in 1876. This was the first business established at the "Corners."

Eagle Corners postoffice was established in February, 1870, with J. B. Newburn as postmaster, and the office at his house. It was on the route from Muscoda to Excelsior, mail then being received once each week. John A. Lawrence is the present postmaster, keeping the office at his store.

Eagle Lodge No. 313, I. O. O. F., at Eagle Corners, was organized on April 18, 1883. The following were the charter members: James Richardson, Horatio Cornwall, James Lewis, Oliver Shepard, Cassius M. Collins, Jacob Stetler, James Tisdale, John M. Craig, John Goff, William Ware and Lewis Craig. The first officers elected were: James Richardson, N. G.;

John Goff, V. G.; Oliver Shepard, secretary; Horatio Cornwall, warden; James Lewis, conductor; C. M. Collins, treasurer. The lodge meets at Lawrence's hall, Eagle Corners.

BASSWOOD.

Robert W. Peters was the first to engage in mercantile trade at Basswood. In 1869 he put a stock of goods in the one room of his dwelling, opening a country general merchandise store. A few years later he put up a building 18x26 feet in size, and took in John Blickenstaff as a partner. Six months later he sold out to his partner, and a few weeks afterward bought the establishment again. He continued the business until 1873, when he closed out his stock.

The next to engage in business here were McIntire & Eleston. Mr. McIntire soon bought his partner's interest. In 1883 Joseph S. Peters purchased an interest, and now runs the store. Mr. McIntire is in trade in Muscoda.

Norman W. Bennett established a blacksmith shop here in 1879, erecting a two-story building. He has since done a flourishing business.

In 1881 R. C. Brown and C. F. Wallace put in operation a steam saw-mill, which is still running.

The United Brethren Church was organized at the Basswood school house in December, 1865, by Rev. George Kite. The following were among the members: James Willey and wife, Charles Johnson and wife, William Warren and wife, Mrs. Thomas Goff and Mrs. William Briggs. Charles Johnson was the first class leader. Among the preachers who have held services here are the following: Revs. Young, Potts, Day, Taylor, Bovee, Whitney and Hood. At present no regular services are held.

The Basswood cemetery was laid out in 1861, on section 16. The land was donated by Thomas Hardy and Mrs. Francis Kepogle, each giving half an acre. The first burial was of the remains of a child of Thomas Hardy. The ground has never been surveyed, and the cemetery is free to all citizens of the town. At a meeting held for the purpose, James Lucas, Charles Johnson and Thomas Rummery were elected trustees. Subscriptions were solicited and money raised to fence the grounds.

Basswood postoffice was established in 1869. Jacob Bear was appointed first postmaster, but before he got his commission he sold his farm and moved away. James Lucas was therefore appointed in his stead. Robert Peters was the next postmaster, keeping the office at his store. The next was Joseph Stanley, who kept the office at his house on section 9. Robert Peters succeeded Mr. Stanley. He has deputized his son Joseph, and the office is kept at his store.

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

Among the early settlers and the residents of to day in Richland county, there are none more noted for their energy, enterprise and thrift, than those in the town of Eagle.

Frank G. Rodolf was born at Centerville, Iowa Co., Wis., March 3, 1847. His early education was received in the public schools of Richland county and advanced by a two years term at the State University at Madison. In 1865 he, in company with A. Schmidt, engaged in the mercantile trade at Richland Center. In 1866 he purchased his partner's interest and continued the business there until 1868, then moved to Eagle and opened a store near the mill. In 1869 he purchased an interest in the water power of his father, erected a saw-mill and engaged in the lumber trade. In 1872 he closed out the mercantile business and devoted his attention to his mill and farm. In 1876, in company with his father, he erected the flour mill of which he is sole manager. He is also quite extensively engaged in raising stock and hogs. He has the largest hog house in the county. It is 24x100 feet, and two stories in height. He usually keeps about 150 hogs and fifty head of horned cattle. He was joined in marriage, in 1868, to Mary Riel. She was born in Sandusky, Ohio. They have five children — Winifred, Charlie, Frank, Idell and an infant.

Thomas Goff (deceased) son of George and Mary (Manear) Goff, early settlers of Richland county, was born in Randolph Co., Va., May 16, 1828. He was but two years old when his parents emigrated to the territory of Arkansas, where they lived three years, then moved to Missouri and settled in Washington county and remained until 1848, when they came to Wisconsin and located in Richland county, which was at that time a new country, and was attracting the attention of emigrants. The subject of this sketch lived with his parents until his marriage, June 12, 1855, to Sarah Wood. She was born in Randolph Co., Va., within two miles of the birthplace of her husband. They had never met, however, until after coming to Wisconsin. At the time of his marriage, he settled upon land that he had bought on section 15, town of Eagle. It was heavily timbered, and he has cleared a good farm, which is watered by Mill creek. It is well adapted to raising both grain and stock. His death occurred on April 5, 1881. He left four children — John, Adeline, Emmet and Andrew. Andrew was born Jan. 20, 1865, and died Aug. 24, 1881. Mrs. Goff and her son Emmet occupy the homestead.

William Miller, (deceased), the first settler of Hoosier Hollow, was a veteran of the War of 1812. He was born in Anderson Co., Ky., in January, 1795, and was married to Charlotte Dawson, a native of Anderson county. In 1829, with two or three other families, they started for Indiana, taking their household goods on flat boats, floating down the Kentucky river to the Ohio, down the Ohio to the mouth of the Wabash river. At that point their boats were attached to a steamer and towed up stream as far as Lafayette. From there they continued their journey over land to Clinton county, where they located and were pioneers. They purchased government land, improved a farm and resided there until 1849. In that year Mrs. Miller died, and Mr. Miller went to Richland Co., Wis., where he entered large tracts of land in town 9, range 1 west, now known as the town of Eagle. He built a house on the southeast quarter of section 23, and returned to Indiana. In September of that year he came back to Wisconsin with his family. Some of his children who came with him were married, and he settled them upon land that he had entered for them. Mr. Miller and his family were members of the Presbyterian Church and assisted in the organization of the Pleasant Hill Church. He died in 1879. His son John was born in Kentucky in 1818. He was married in Indiana to Hannah J. Hayes, a native of Ohio. They came to Richland county with his father in 1849, and settled on section 13, where they lived a few years and then traded for a farm on section 23, where they lived until the time of his death which occurred in 1865. He left seven children, six of whom are now living—Thomas M., James L., Mary E., Leoma C., Jefferson H. and William H. Thomas M., the oldest son now living, was born in Clinton Co., Ind., Feb. 25, 1844, and was five years old when he began pioneer life in Richland county. He assisted his father in the clearing of a farm, and attended the pioneer schools. He was married in 1867 to Rebecca I., daughter of George and Rebecca Slater, pioneers of Richland county. She was also a native of Clinton county. They first settled on section 23 and later on section 34. In 1875 he bought a farm on section 24. A portion of this land was cleared and upon it was a frame house partly completed. He completed the house and has since cleared quite a tract of land, and is engaged in raising stock and grain. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have three children—Edith I., John L. and Joseph G.

William Cooper, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in Butler Co., Penn., March 21, 1801, where his youth was spent. He was married in 1823 to Martha Clark, also a native of Butler county and born in April, 1802. He purchased a tract of land and cleared a farm, living on the same for six years, when he sold out and engaged in selling goods on the road for two years. He then worked on the Chenango canal three years, when he went to Ohio and was employed on the Maumee canal one year, then went to Indiana and engaged in farming one year in Clinton county. In 1849 he made his first visit to Richland county and purchased the east half of the northwest quarter of section 11. After a short time he returned to Indiana and remained until 1850. Then with a team, accompanied by his family, and taking their household goods along with them, started for their new home. At that time there was no settlement in the neighborhood of his land, and he purchased another tract on section 26, cleared a portion of the same and remained there until 1869, then sold out and moved to Muscoda, and made a contract with the Government to carry the mail between Muscoda, Readstown and Viroqua, and was thus employed four years. For the past few years he has made his home with his son William. He is now eighty-three years old and retains his faculties to a remarkable degree. His wife died in June, 1857, leaving twelve children, six sons and six daughters. Three of the sons served in the Union army—John Wesley enlisted in the fall of 1862, in the 20th Wisconsin, company H, and went south, and died while in the service, at Springfield, Mo., March 23, 1863. William H. was born in Mercer Co., Penn., June 25, 1836, and came to Richland county with his parents. He was married July 9, 1857, to Amy Eliot, who was born in Darke Co., Ohio, Oct. 17, 1840. In 1863 he settled on his present farm. He enlisted in February, 1864, in the 14th Wisconsin, company K, went south and joined Sherman at Big Shantie, Ga. He served until Oct. 9, 1865, when he was discharged at Mobile, Ala. The following are among the important battles in which he participated: "Big Shantie, Baker's Ridge, Atlanta, Ezra Church, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Nashville and Spanish Fort. While in the service he lost his health, and has never fully recovered, but has devoted his time since his return in improving his land. He has three children—Isaiah L., Thomas W. and Lucy A. His brother, Thomas M., enlisted in 1861 in the 5th Wisconsin, company H. He was sixteen years old at the time, served sixteen months and was discharged on account of disability. Here the subject of this sketch commenced pioneer life and spent his early days. He was married Feb. 7, 1847, to Rebecca Beard, a native of Washington Co., W. Va. In 1850 he visited Richland county and entered land on sections 22 and 23, and returned to Indiana. During the fall of the same season, in company with Abraham Beard and Joseph Hays he started for his new home accompanied by his family. They came overland with teams which was the usual mode of travel at that time, bringing household goods and provisions with them, camping out wherever night overtook them. Upon arrival, he at once erected a log cabin, and commenced clearing. A few years later he built a frame house. In 1861 he sold this farm and bought another on section 34, where he made his home until the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1862. Mrs. Slater died July 4, 1880. There are six of their children now living—Rebecca J., William J., Harriet M., Julia E., Sarah L. and George R. William J., was born in the town of Eagle, Feb. 21, 1852, and here grew to manhood, receiving his education in the district schools, advanced by two terms at Beloit College. He was married Sept. 11, 1877, to Endora Dosch. She was born in in the town of Richwood. They have two children—Della and Don Juan. George R. was born, also, in the town of Eagle, Feb. 21, Joseph Powell was one of the early explorers of Richland county, having come here in 1851, at which time he remained about ten weeks, and returned to his home in Indiana. He made the trip overland. At this time he purchased land on Blue river, in Grant county, and, having made up his mind to settle there, he loaded his household goods in two wagons, and taking seven or eight horses and a lot of stock, started for Wisconsin. After five weeks' travel, camping out on the roadside at night, he reached Richland county. He spent a short time with Alonzo Carson, in the town of Richwood, while he built a house upon his land, into which he moved on Christmas day. He cleared quite a tract of this land, and lived there five years, when he sold and bought timber land in Watertown, near his first farm, of which he cleared quite a large tract, and resided there until 1866, when he sold and came to Eagle, and purchased his present farm, which is now one of the best in the "banner town" of the county. It is located on section 30, and has seventy-two acres under cultivation. He has erected a good frame house and other buildings. He has been twice married, first to Rebecca J. Carson, Dec. 30, 1849. She was born in Tippecanoe Co., Ind., and died in April, 1881, leaving five children—John C., Margaret A., Amy J., Mary C. and Asher T. He was again married Nov. 15, 1883, to Martha J. Sullivan, widow of Abram Elliott. She has one child by her former marriage—Bertha May. Mr. Powell was born in Gallia Co., Ohio, May 18, 1823. When he was eight years old his parents moved to Indiana, and were early settlers in Tippecanoe county. His father purchased land a few miles from Lafayette. He was a baker by trade, and opened a shop in that town. His father died when he was eighteen years old, after which he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits in Tippecanoe county until 1851.

William Robinson, a well known early settler of the town of Eagle, is a native of Kentucky, born in Franklin, six miles from the State capital, Oct. 23, 1808. Here his early days were spent. The subject of this sketch returned to Kentucky in the fall of 1832, and was married in Anderson county to Rebecca Richardson, and came back to Clinton county and began clearing a farm. In 1850 he came to Richland county with the Miller brothers, to assist them in moving here. He was at that time favorably impressed with the country, and, although it was a wild, unsettled region, inhabited by Indians and wild beasts, he thought it must become settled at no distant day, and he entered 160 acres on section 24, the northeast quarter. In 1852 he sold his farm in Indiana, and started with his family for their new home. They took two wagon loads of goods and two pairs of horses. They reached their destination after traveling fourteen days and moved into a vacant log house near by until he could cut logs and build one on his own land. As soon as it was completed, he commenced the clearing of a farm. The next year he purchased land adjoining his, on the northwest quarter of section 24, and there, in 1855, erected the first frame dwelling in the town, the same that he still occupies. It is a commodious, two story building, and has always been kept in good repair. He has also built a good frame barn and other buildings. His farm is located in the neighborhood known as Hoosier Valley. Mrs. Robinson died May 18, 1860, leaving seven children—James, Silas, Sarah J., Benjamin, Monroe, Mary and Ann. The following June he started, taking his family and a pair of horses and a wagon, which held their household goods, and camped at night by the roadside. His wife and oldest daughter drove the stock, while he attended to the horses. They were twenty days in making the journey. On reaching their destination, they remained at his brother's until he could build a cabin. The family lived in this cabin several years, when he built a frame house, which was consumed by fire in 1875. He then erected his present dwelling. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born Dec. 2, 1814. When but two years of age he had the misfortune to be bitten by a snake, and in consequence was a cripple for fourteen years, and not being able to work, he improved the time by studying, and thus obtained an education. When he was seventeen year old, his parents removed to Ohio and settled in Muskingum county, which at that time was attracting the attention of settlers, and there the subject of this sketch began his pioneer life. Thomas J. Rummery, for the last nine years treasurer of the town of Eagle, is a native of England, born in Sussex county in 1835. When he was six years old his parents came to America, and settled in Cuyahoga Co., Ohio. His father purchased a farm in the town of Royalton, and there the subject of this sketch passed his younger days, obtaining his education in the public schools. In 1863 he came to Richland county and engaged in teaching, soon purchasing timber land on section 16, town of Eagle. He has since cleared a farm of about seventy acres, and erected a neat frame house and barn. His place is pleasantly located in the neighborhood known as Basswood. He was married first to Rosaline Johnson, who was born in Huron Co., Ohio, and died in 1873, leaving one child, who died three months after the death of its mother. He was again married in 1878 to Mary, daughter of Hubert and Mary Mathews. She was born in the town of Eagle, where her parents were early settlers. They have one child—Martha Gertrude.

George W. Waller first settled in Richland county in 1863, about the middle of April, having at that time purchased, in the town of Sylvan, 360 acres of land, partially timbered, with about fifty acres under cultivation; cleared forty or fifty acres, erected good buildings, and lived there until the spring of 1882. He then sold out and moved to Mill Creek, in the town of Akan, where he remained until fall, then purchased his present farm in the town of Eagle, which is pleasantly located in what is known as the Bethel school district, and is well improved. Mr. Waller was born in Green Co., Penn., Sept. 4, 1812. When about four years of age his parents emigrated to Ohio, and settled in Monroe county, where they were among the first settlers. There he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the subscription schools, fitting himself for a teacher of the same kind of school—sitting on a slab bench or stool, and writing on planks put on pins drove in the walls slantingly, and windows covered with greased paper; a fire-place, with a rousing big log heap fire. He was married March 8, 1838, to Sarah Johnson, born in Monroe Co., Ohio, March 25, 1819. In that county he purchased 200 acres of land, cultivated about 100 acres, and made that his home until 1863, when he sold out and came to Richland Co., Wis., as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Waller are the parents of seven children—Rachel, Sarah, Mary, David N., Deborah, Elizabeth and Susanna.

D. W. Bear started a blacksmith shop near Rodolf's mill in 1876. At that time he erected a building 20x31 feet. Since that year he has built on additions, until he has quite an extensive shop. Horse shoeing at first formed a considerable part of his business, but he has since given up that branch, and attends to general repair work in all its branches in wood and iron, and manufactures buggies. His shop is furnished with all the tools and machinery for this class of work. In 1883 he added to his business a stock of hardware, and later a stock of groceries. He was born in that part of Marion, now known as Richland Co., Ohio, April 9, 1848. When he was but an infant his parents emigrated to Wisconsin and located in Spring Green, Sauk county, where they were pioneers. His father purchased 100 acres of land and improved a farm, and five years later died there, and his widow married again after fourteen years. He cleared a farm and remained there until 1856, then came to Richland county and entered land on section 17, town of Eagle, and commenced clearing a farm. He enlisted March 12, 1862, in company I, 19th Wisconsin. He died the 27th day of the same month at Racine, Wis. His body was brought home and laid to rest in Basswood cemetery. His wife was left with six small children to provide for. She was equal to the emergency, and these children are now all grown to man and womanhood. Mrs. Roth has purchased additional land and now has a comfortable home. The names of the children are—Sarah E., Eliza J., Milton H., Rachel M., Daniel and Frances. ## CHAPTER XXIV.

TOWN OF FOREST.

The town of Forest forms the northwest corner of Richland county, being composed of congressional township 12 north, range 2 west. It is bounded on the north and west by Vernon county, and on the east and south by the towns of Bloom and Sylvan respectively. The surface of this town is very broken and uneven, the Kickapoo river traversing the northwestern portion. Some portions of the valley of this river is excellent farming land, having a soil of rich black loam, made up chiefly of washings from the surrounding hills. It is well adapted to raising all cereals common to this latitude, and being well watered it makes excellent pasturage for stock. The Kickapoo river enters the town by way of section 6, and passing through sections 6, 7, 18 and 19, leaves through the latter section. This stream furnishes splendid water power privileges, which have to a large extent been improved. South branch of Bear creek has its source on section 2, and flowing northward leaves the town by way of the same section. Camp creek enters the town from the east and flows across the center of the town to empty into the Kickapoo. These streams have many spring tributaries, some small, while others are of considerable size, which abundantly water territory more remote from the larger streams. Upon the higher and more uneven lands the soil is made up of a clayey loam; the original soil of black loam having by the action of the elements been largely washed into the valleys.

When five years of age, his parents, Oliver and Henrietta (Adams) Guess, removed to Wisconsin, and became pioneer settlers in Sylvan town. Albert W. passed his early life in Richland county, assisting his father on the farm and in the latter's mill, and attending the district school during the winter seasons. When seventeen years of age, he went to Richland Center, and served an apprenticeship of two years at the blacksmith trade. The two years following, he traveled in Minnesota and Iowa, working at his trade at various points in those States. Returning home, he erected a blacksmith shop on his father's farm, and there worked at his trade until the fall of 1869. He then came to Viola, and in the spring of 1870 rented a shop, and, in connection with his trade, engaged in the manufacture of wagons, buggies and cutters. In July of the same year he purchased the buildings, and the land on which they were located, which comprised lot 3, of block 1, Hull's addition to Viola. In 1881 he erected a large and substantial frame building which he opened as a hotel. He carried on the blacksmith and wagon trade until 1882, since which time he has devoted his time to the patrons of the Viola House. This hotel is conveniently arranged, neatly furnished, and enjoys a fair patronage from the best class of travelers. Mr. Guess was married May 12, 1870, to Mary E., daughter of Isaac and Savilla Phifer, and a native of Indiana. They are the parents of three children—Georgie, Harry and an infant.

He received a common school education, and at the age of thirty emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in Richland county, town of Forest, section 20. He and his brother, Daniel, built the first building in the town, which was a log house of small dimensions, and constituted the dwelling place for both families. Mr. Bender entered a farm of eighty acres, on section 20, where he now lives. He now owns 280 acres. He was married in 1848 to Mary Barnett, who was born in Somerset Co., Penn., in 1828. They have two children—Ephraim and Henry. The latter is now married to Rachel Taylor. Mr. Bender was a member of the 11th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. Mr. Bender, believing it "not good for man to be alone," married again, in 1852, Elizabeth Wisner, who died in 1853, leaving one child—Mary J. His third wife was Margaret Reel. Her death occurred in May, 1851, and was the first death in the town of Forest. He was married to his present wife, Mary A. Fall, in 1855. Their union

Mail is now received three times each week.

MELANTHON CREEK POSTOFFICE.

Melanthon Creek postoffice was established, in 1856, with Cornelius McCarthy as postmaster. The office was kept at the residence of the postmaster, and mail was received once each week from Rockbridge. The postmaster's sons, Thomas G. and Patrick, carried the mail. Two years after its establishment the office was discontinued at Mr. McCarthy's request.

MILL.

In 1856 Bronson Greaves erected a building for a flour mill, on the northeast quarter of section 17. However, he did not complete it, and during the war Herman Stoddard purchased the building, and put in machinery for carding wool and pulling and finishing cloth. In 1868 he sold to Daniel Priest, the present proprietor. The power is derived from East Pine river, which at this point furnished six feet head of water. Originally a timber dam was built, but this has been replaced by a substantial stone and earth dam.

VILLAGE OF WOODSTOCK.

The village of Woodstock is located on the southwest quarter of section 31. It is pleasantly situated and is surrounded by an excellent country. The merchants are mostly young men who are enterprising, and the village bids fair to become a prominent rival for the larger portion of the trade of the northern part of Richland county.

The village of Woodstock was laid out in 1855 by Quinton Nicks and Milton Satterlee. The surveyor was Joseph Irish.

The first merchant here was James Calloway, who opened a general merchandise store in 1855. Since that time a great many have been in trade here for a longer or shorter period.

In 1883 there were four stores, kept by J. E. Mason, A. W. Travers, Samuel Ferguson and a joint stock company, of which A. S. Neff is president, and Ella Dickerson secretary.

The first blacksmith shop in the village was started by Daniel Storms. He now runs a shop at Richland Center. There are now two blacksmith shops at Woodstock.

In 1864 L. B. Madden started a small tannery here for the purpose of tanning skins for the manufacture of gloves and mittens.

In 1857 Chambers & Wilson, from Lacon, Ill., erected a wash and dry house for the purpose of drying ginseng. They brought bacon and flour from Chicago, which they traded for ginseng, getting it by the wagon loads, and for some time doing an extensive business.

In the vicinity of Woodstock there is good material for making brick. H. N. Holbrook put up and burned the first kiln of brick.

The first death in Woodstock was an infant child of Dr. Byers, who located here in the fall of 1856, and remained during the following winter.

The second death was that of Elisha Satterlee, aged seventy-three years. He was living with his son Ossian at the time.

The postoffice was established at Siresville in 1854, under that name. Milton Satterlee was the first postmaster. In 1855 it was removed to the southwest quarter of section 31, and the name changed to Woodstock; Mr. Satterlee being re-appointed postmaster. At the present time Mrs. J. E. Mason is postmistress, her husband as deputy having charge of the office. Mail is received daily, the office being on the route from West Lima to Richland Center.

The Woodstock mills were built in 1857 by Stephenson & Calloway. The power was derived from the west branch of Pine river, a log dam being constructed. The mill stood upon the south bank of the stream. A Mulley saw was put in and common lumber was manufactured. In 1857 the firm erected a grist mill, near the saw mill, putting up a two story building 20x50 feet in size, and equipping it with one run of stone. The mill commenced operations in 1858. In 1859 John Meeker purchased Mr. Calloway's interest in the property. In 1864 Mr. Stephenson sold his interest to James Jones, who a short time afterward sold to Moses Meeker. In 1878 John A. Meeker purchased Moses' interest. At the present time the proprietors are Moses Meeker and his son R. D. Meeker. The saw-mill continued in operation until 1878. The old log dam was replaced by a frame one, which in turn has been superseded by a stone dam. Eight feet head of water is secured at this point, and it is never failing. The mill does custom work.

In 1869 Henry T. Walser erected a grist-mill near Woodstock on the west branch of Pine river. The building is two stories high, 25x36 feet in size. A dam of stone was built which furnishes six feet head of water. The mill does custom work. It contains two run of stone, and all necessary machinery for the manufacture of first class flour.

The Methodist Church at Woodstock was organized in 1857 by Elder Brainard. The first members were Henry Travers and wife, James M. Calaway and wife, Alexander Sires, Sr., and wife, Thomas Mason and wife, Mrs. William Hook and William Sires and wife. Mr. Mason at that time was a local preacher and afterward joined the conference. James M. Calaway was the first class leader. Among those who have preached here since the organization of the class are the following: Elders Hawthorn, Brahman, McMillan, Sackett, Brothers, Bradley, Kilbourn, Mead, Bryant and Wheaton. A. S. Neff is the present class leader. The class has flourished and is now in good condition. In 1871 a neat church edifice was erected just east of the village, in which they now meet for worship.

A Disciple Church was organized here in 1856 by Elder Merrill, with about twenty members. Quinton Nicks and family were among the prominent workers in this Church.

THE VILLAGE OF YUBA.

This village is located on the southwest quarter of section 6. It was laid out in 1856 for Edward Pinick. Joseph Irish was the surveyor, and proposed the name of "Pinick," but "Yuba" was finally chosen. Mr. Pinick sold a number of lots but no business start was made until several years later.

The first business enterprise here was a saloon opened by Joseph Baranek in 1875.

The first store here was established by Burgess Fowler in August, 1880, in the same building that had been formerly occupied by the saloon. In 1882 Mr. Fowler erected a building, 24x44 feet in size, two stories in height. The upper story is used as a tenement; and the lower is occupied by the general merchandise store.

The first blacksmith shop was opened by W. Wheden in 1881. H. A. Renick is the present blacksmith.

John Jewell started a general merchandise store in 1882.

E. E. and J. H. Potts erected a building in 1883, for the purpose of a hardware store.

In 1856 Edward Pinick erected a saw mill on section 6. The power was derived from Pine river, the water being carried to the mill by means of a race, half a mile in length, securing seven feet head of water. An old fashioned "up and down" saw was put in. Joseph Baranek bought this mill and ran it until 1879, when he erected a new mill a short distance below the old one. The new mill is furnished with a Mulley saw, and does custom work.

The Yuba flour mill was erected in 1882 by R. D. Meeker and Frank Baranek, on section 7. The power is derived from the east branch of Pine river. The race through which the water is carried to the mill is seventy rods long, and ten feet head of water is secured. The building is a frame, two and a half stories in height and 24x36 feet in size. The mill is furnished with two run of stone, two bolting chests and all necessary machinery for doing first class work. It does custom work and most of the time is run to its full capacity.

Yuba postoffice was established in 1857, with Edward Pinick as postmaster. The office was kept at the house of the postmaster on section 6. When Mr. Pinick moved away, John Fowler was appointed postmaster, and kept the office at his house on section 7. In 1880 he was succeeded by his son Burgess, who kept the office at his store in Yuba. The office is on the mail route from Rockbridge to Hillsboro, and mail is received three times each week.

VILLAGE OF HUB CITY.

During the summer of 1854 James Ghormley put up a saw-mill on section 34. He put up a frame building and threw a brush and dirt dam across Pine river. In 1855 he made an addition to the building and put in one run of buhrs for grinding corn and wheat, and a bolting machine for the manufacture of flour. In 1860 he erected a two story frame building, 20x40 feet in size, and put in one run of buhrs for making good flour. A few years later he added another run of stone, and about 1867 he put up a new saw-mill which he equipped with a circular saw. Mr. Ghormley ran the mills until 1876, when the property was purchased by Hon. George Krouskop. In the winter of 1881-2 he sold to T. G. Mandt, of Stoughton, Wis. The saw-mill has been enlarged and a planing mill added. A dry-house 60x200 feet in size has also been erected, and the enterprise has become one of the most important of Richland county's industries.

In 1882 a village was platted here under the name of Hub City. It now contains about twenty dwelling houses, aside from the numerous mill buildings.

A postoffice was established here in 1882 under the name of "Stalwart," but this has since been changed to "Hub City." The first postmistress was Mrs. Frank Pollard. Hiram Hernstein is the present postmaster. The office is on the mail route from Rockbridge to Hillsborough.

The first store in the village was started by T. G. Mandt in 1882.

BIOGRAPHICAL

Lattimore Renick was one of the earliest settlers of Richland county. He arrived in what is now the town of Orion, in a snow storm, on the 17th of October, 1848. That fall he commenced the building of a saw-mill on Ash creek, for William Thompson, and completed it in 1849. In 1852 we went to Richmond village, bought a piece of land and engaged in farming, and also worked at his trade, which was that of carpenter and joiner, remaining there until 1856 when he moved to Henrietta and purchased timber land on section 6 and immediately began to clear a farm. He broke his first two and a half acres with a hoe. He has since purchased adjoining land, and now has 120 acres on sections 6 and 7. He has built a commodious hewed log house with a frame addition, and has made it his home until the present time. Mr. Renick is a native of Kentucky, born in Barren county, Oct. 7, 1813. In his youth he was apprenticed to a cabinet maker to learn the trade. After serving three years he started on foot and alone for Louisville, arrived there and soon found friends and employment as carpenter, and being a good workman he was never out of work. He remained there till 1841, when he went to St. Louis, but stopped there only a few days and then made another move, this time toward the north, halting at Mineral Point where he worked for a time at his trade, and from thence to Madison, where he was employed to work on the territorial capitol, remaining there until 1844, when he returned to Mineral Point and was engaged to construct the fluted columns of the court house. In 1845 he went to work at mining at Mineral Point and continued in that employment until 1848, when he came to Richland county. He was married in 1845 to Lucy, daughter of Carlos and Mary (Bostwick) Joslyn. Eleven children have blessed this union, nine of whom are now living—Mary L., Henry, Margaret, James W., Francis A., Harry, George S., Addie and Susie. The oldest daughter, Mary, married Isaae N. Bingham, of this county. Emma married William F. Bingham, of this county. She died in October, 1880, leaving one child, Edith, who has since made her home with her grandparents. Margaret E. is the wife of John W. Fowler. Mr. Renick has an extensive acquaintance in different parts of the county, and is respected by all. He is a well read man and has a good recollection of past events. He has been prominent in town and county affairs, has been a member of the county board and has filled nearly all the offices in the town in which he has lived, besides having served as an officer in the school district a great part of the time since its organization. He was also one of the first grand jurors of Richland county.

William Cratsenberg, one of the earliest settlers of Richland county, was born in Lewis county, town of Denmark, State of New York, in August, 1821. His father, Nicholas Cratsenberg, was a native of Montgomery county, York State, and one of the early settlers of Lewis county. The subject of this sketch was here brought up, receiving a liberal education in the public schools. When quite young he commenced to work in his father's tannery, learned that trade, and a few years later the trade of boot and shoe making. He was married in 1845 to Catharine Rich, also a native of Lewis county, where he purchased a farm of 100 acres, and engaged in dairying. In 1851 he sold out and started west to seek a home. He came on the lakes to Milwaukee, and then with one horse and a wagon started for Richland county, coming directly to the town now known as Ithaca, and entered land on Willow creek, on section 18, where he commenced building a log house. He harvested wheat on the shares and that same fall had to haul his grain to Iowa county to find a mill for grinding. The following spring moved into his new house, and raised his first crop of corn in 1852. In the fall of this year (1852) he went to mill at Black Earth, Dane county. The year following he sold this place and moved to Sextonville, where he purchased town property and engaged in the boot and shoe trade. Two years afterward he purchased the tavern well known as The Ark, conducting the same until 1858, then sold out and bought timber land on section 28, town of Henrietta; here he built a log house and stables and immediately commenced to clear a farm. In 1880 his stables were struck by lightning and destroyed, together with stock and farming utensils. The frame house in which he now lives was built in 1879. His first wife died in February, 1849, leaving two children—Deett and Dowite. His second wife, to whom he was married April 10, 1851, was Louisa Burdick, a native of Lincoln, Chenango Co., N. Y., born June 15, 1827. By this union there were five children—Nicholas Leroy, Celinda E., James B., Adam A. J. and Eugene S. Mr. Cratsenberg assisted in the organization of the town of Ithaca, and proposed the name which it still bears.

Patrick H., son of Cornelius and Ellen (Galagher) McCarthy, pioneer settlers of Richland county, was born Dec. 5, 1845, in the province of Ontario, Canada. The next spring his parents removed to Milwaukee. When he was seven years of age, his parents removed to Richland county, locating in the town of Richland, where they remained until 1855, and then removed to the town of Henrietta, where the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, his time being employed in going to and teaching school and farming. In March, 1864, he enlisted in company D, 38th Wisconsin. His company formed a part of the Army of the Potomac and was immediately sent to the front, where it was engaged in many of the important battles from that time until the close of the war; including the charge of Petersburg, June 17 and 18, 1864, and the siege and capture of that city. He was discharged May 25, 1865, and returned home, where he engaged in teaching and farming. In 1867 he was united in marriage to Catharine Drea. She was born in Cleveland, Ohio. Nine children were born to them—Robert, Emmet, Catharine J., Cornelius E., Ellen L., William B., James F., John P., Francis A. and Mollie. In 1868 he purchased a tract of land on section 13, cleared up a farm and erected a nice lot of buildings, where he now makes his home. Mr. McCarthy has been quite prominent in town and county affairs. He has served as town clerk, chairman of the board and justice of the peace; the latter at the present time.

John A. Meeker, the present proprietor of the Woodstock flouring mill, is a native of Ohio, and was born in the city of Cincinnati June 21, 1823. When he was quite young his parents moved to Galena, Ill., where his father had received a land grant from the government and engaged in the business of smelting lead, and was the first person to establish an enterprise of that character at that point, which has since become an extensive and lucrative business. In 1834 his father moved to Wisconsin and located near Mineral Point, Iowa county. Here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, making his home with his parents and assisting at the smelting works, until twenty-one years of age. At this time, 1851, desiring to make a start for himself, he concluded to leave the paternal roof and seek his fortune. Full of energy and enterprise he started for California, not as the trip is made in these latter days by methods of easy and comparatively safe transit, but by the tedious, dangerous journey across the plains with ox teams. This journey occupied 120 days, but at length he arrived at his destination and engaged in mining until 1853, when he returned home by way of Nicaragua. He then purchased prairie land and improved a farm which he sold in 1859. That same year he came to Woodstock and bought a one-half interest in the mill property which he now owns and has since made this his home, and milling has been his business except in 1863 when he went to Pike's Peak and remained until the fall of 1864. He has been twice married—to his first wife Matilda W. Stevens in 1848 who was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, and died in 1876, leaving three children—Robert D., Amy E. and Alice. His second wife was Amanda Biehl, born in Edwards Co., Ill. They have one child—Winifred W. Mr. Meeker's father's name was Moses, and he was born in Essex Co., N. J., in 1790. His parents were poor and he was obliged to work for himself and make his own fortune as best he might. When young he learned the potter's trade. He was energetic and industrious, and devoted his leisure time to reading and study and afterward practiced medicine, and later engaged in the manufacture of white lead in Cincinnati. He was a leading Mason and assisted in the organization of the first lodge in the State of Wisconsin. He was a member of the territorial Legislature, and a delegate from Iowa county to the first constitutional convention in Wisconsin. He died in Lafayette county in 1865. Thus it may be seen the subject of this sketch is from a sturdy, energetic stock, and he retains those eminent characteristics to a marked degree. He is a man of generous impulses and pure motives, and has the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen, and can truly be classed among Richland county's best citizens.

William W. Garfield, deceased, the pioneer settler of Henrietta, was born in Windham Co., Vt., March 9, 1807, where his childhood and youth were spent. He was married April 1, 1830, to Fannie Willard, who was born in Weathersfield, Vt., April 16, 1804. Five children were born to them—William, John M., Eliza A., Addison and Caroline. They remained in Windham county until 1852, when they started for the west to seek a home. He left his family in Waukesha while he came to Richland county to select a location. He entered land on section 35, town 12, range 1 east, now in the town of Henrietta, and returned to Waukesha and spent the winter. In the spring of 1853 he took his family and started with an ox team for their new home in the then unbroken wilderness. They were about two weeks on the road, and on their arrival moved into a hunter's cabin, in which they lived one year. He then built a frame house, which was afterwards burned, when he built another, which was his home until the time of his death, Oct. 25, 1879. Mrs. Garfield died May 5, 1878. Their oldest daughter is the wife of Demas Wherry. The youngest daughter died July 11, 1865, at home, of small-pox contracted while teaching school at DeBello. Their oldest son, William, was teaching school in New Jersey at the time of the removal of the family to Wisconsin, but joined them in 1854, and afterwards taught here. He died four or five years later. John M. was born in Windham Co., Vt., March 17, 1833. He came to Wisconsin with his parents and lived with them until 1861, when he was married January 20th to Nancy A. Judkins, daughter of Joel Judkins, an early settler of Rockbridge. He settled at the time of his marriage on his present farm, which he had pre-empted in 1854. He has cleared a good farm and built a frame house and barn. He enlisted on Feb. 14, 1865, in the 46th Wisconsin, company E, and went south, served until after the close of the war, and was discharged Oct. 6, 1865. He was a member of the first board of supervisors of the town of Henrietta. Addison was born April 24, 1838. He came to Wisconsin with his parents and remained with them as long as they lived, and he now occupies the homestead. He was married in 1876 to Julia, daughter of William and Bethany (Carey) Jordan, early settlers of Greenwood, Vernon county. They have two children—Frederick and James A.

Carlos Joslin, in June, 1847, pre-empted the southeast quarter of section 9, town 9 north, range 1 east, of the 4th principal meridian, now Orion, and in September of the same year removed his wife and three children from Mineral Point to this place. He resided on his pre-emption but one year, when he sold to Frederick Schurman, and then entered the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 10, in the same town. Here he toiled to improve the land, and, in common with the rest of the early settlers on Ash creek, endured the hardships and enjoyed the pastimes of pioneer life. In 1853 Mr. Joslin moved to the north part of the county and became one of the early settlers in the town of Henrietta, where he still resides, an aged and respected citizen. Mr. Joslin was born in Chittenden Co., Vt., Nov. 30, 1805. His parents died when he was but a small boy, and he subsequently resided with his guardian, with whom, in about 1819, he removed to the State of New York. In 1825, near Rochester, he married Mary Bostwick, a native of Canada. In about 1828 he emigrated to Michigan, and in 1841, came to Wisconsin and first settled at Madison, where he resided until November, 1846, then removed to Mineral Point, whence he came to this county. Mr. and Mrs. Joslin have five children—Lucy H., now the wife of Lattimer Renick; William H., James W., Mary A., now the wife of O. Carl, and Albert E.

Thomas J. Leatherberry, one of the early settlers of Richland county, is a native of Ohio, born in Jefferson county, in January, 1829, where he made his home until 1854. In that year he came with his parents to Rockbridge. In 1855 he entered land on section 20, town 12, range 1 east, now known as Henrietta. He did not, however, settle upon this land, but soon traded it for property at Richland Center, and rented land on section 17. In 1860 he traded his village property for land on section 15, the east half of the southeast quarter. He has since purchased the south half of the southwest quarter of section 14, and his farm now contains 160 acres. He was united in marriage in 1858 with Maria, daughter of George and Mary (Welsh) Norman. Eight children have been born to them—Leroy D., George J., Henry W., Joshua S., Dora E., Mary J., Robert G. and Lillie J.

Demas Wherry, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in Washington Co., Penn., Nov. 14, 1824. When he was one and a half years old his parents moved to Ohio and settled in Carroll county, where his younger days were spent in going to school and working upon the farm. He first visited Richland county in 1853, and entered land on section 31, town 12, range 1 east, now known as Henrietta. He remained a short time, and returned to Indiana, where he lived until 1854, then came back to Wisconsin and settled on his land and began improving it. He soon sold it, however, and purchased other land on sections 5, of the town of Rockbridge, and 32, of the town of Henrietta, where he has cleared a farm and built a large frame barn and a good frame house. He has been twice married, first in 1851, to Elizabeth Nickilson, who died a few years later, leaving one child—Elizabeth; and again, in 1858, to Eliza A., daughter of William M. and Fannie (Willard) Garfield. They have seven children—Irving L., Lillie M., Rose, Nettie, John, Bert and Alice. Mr. Wherry has been prominent in town affairs, and has held many of the different offices. He has been chairman of the board, assessor, superintendent of schools and town clerk.

Bronson Greaves, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in Fairfield, Franklin Co., Vt., Sept. 8, 1818. When he was young his parents moved to the State of New York and settled in Malone, where he grew to manhood's estate. He was employed in a saw-mill, where he learned to be a sawyer. In 1849 he started west to seek a home, came to Richland county and entered land on section 27, of town 11, range 1 east. He was then a single man, and did not settle upon the land at that time, but went to what is now the village of Rockbridge, and worked in Mr. Hazeltine's mill one year, then went to Black Earth, Dane county, and from there to West Bend, where he remained until 1851, when he returned to New York State. In 1852 he came again to Dane county, and rented a saw-mill at Black Earth. He was there married, in the fall of 1853, to Julia F. Hubbard, who was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., July 20, 1830. In the spring of 1854 they came to Rockbridge, and settled upon his land. They built a frame shanty and lived there two years. They then moved to town 12, range 1 east, now known as Henrietta. He had previously entered land on section 17, of that town. The same year he commenced building a grist-mill, but, his health failing, he was obliged to abandon the project, and he devoted his time to his farm, where he lived until the time of his death, which occurred

March 10, 1874. He cleared a good farm and erected good frame buildings. Mr. and Mrs. Greaves were the parents of three children—Mary J., David E. and Norman D. Mary J. is now the wife of Oswald Palmer, and lives on section 21. Mrs. Greaves and her two sons occupy the homestead. Mr. Greaves was a good business man, honest in all his dealings, and much respected in the community. He had filled various town offices, and was known as a good citizen.

Albert S. Neff, one of the prominent men and pioneers of Richland county, is a son of Samuel and Mary Neff, and was born Sept. 9, 1821, in the town of Chaplin, Windham Co., Conn. Here his younger days were spent upon a farm, and in obtaining such instructions as opportunity offered in the public school. At the age of eighteen he commenced to learn the trade of plasterer, mason and brick layer, serving two years in Norwich and one year in Hartford. He then came to Milwaukee where he worked as journeyman three years. He then engaged as contractor and builder two years, after which he removed to Watertown, Jefferson Co., Wis., and there engaged in the same business until 1855, when he came to Richland county, purchased the hotel property in Richland Center, and named it the American House. He kept hotel six and a half years, and then traded it for land on section 31, of the town of Henrietta, where he has since engaged in farming. Forty-one acres of his land is south of the village, adjoining the plat, and seventy-one acres north of the plat. Mr. Neff has cleared quite a tract of this land. He has built a large frame house and barn and other buildings. Being neat and commodious, he has one of the pleasantest residences in the county. He has been prominent in both town and county affairs. He has served as under-sheriff, six years, and has also been deputy sheriff, chairman of the town board, justice of the peace, besides filling various other offices. He was married in 1845 to Mary, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Dillon)

Manning. Mr. Neff has the confidence and esteem of his fellow men and is numbered among the best class of Richland county's citizens.

Rev. Thomas Mason, (deceased) one of the pioneer preachers of Richland county, was born in Pennsylvania in 1818. He commenced preaching in Richland Co., Ill., and was married there in 1847 to Almira Bradshaw, a native of Wayne Co., Ill. He continued preaching in Illinois until 1855, when he came to Richland Co., Wis., and settled on section 30, of town 12, range 1 east, in the present town of Henrietta. He immediately joined the Northwestern Conference, and was appointed to the West Branch circuit. In 1857 he went to Salem, La Crosse county, and preached one year, then to Mendota, where he remained two years, then to Augusta, in Eau Clair county remaining there two years, next to Galesville in Trempeleau county. He then enlisted as private in the 14th Wisconsin, company D, and went to the front. He was killed at the battle of Corinth. He had been appointed chaplain of his regiment, but had not taken the position at the time of his death. He left a wife and six children to mourn his loss. The children are—Shadrach, Elijah, Sarah, Mahala, Maggie and James E. The two eldest sons, Shadrach and Elijah, were in the same regiment and company with their father. Shadrach was severely wounded in the same battle in which his father was killed. He was discharged on account of disability, and returned home. He soon re-enlisted and died in the service. Elijah served till the close of the war, and is now living in Illinois. Mrs. Mason is now the wife of Henry T. Walser, a resident of Woodstock.

James Edward, son of Thomas and Almira (Bradshaw) Mason, was born in the town of Henrietta, Feb. 28, 1861. He attended the district school, and later, the seminary at Elroy, and the high school at Sextonville. At the age of twelve he entered the employ of William Bradshaw as clerk. He continued in the same employment, excepting the time spent in school, until 1881, when he purchased the stock and good will of William Bradshaw and has since been engaged in trade. He keeps a good stock of dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, glass ware and crockery, notions, etc. He was married in 1881 to Viola, daughter of Simon S. and Mary (Ambrose) Blake, who was born in the town of Orion. They have three children—Ray and Roy, twins, and Chester.

George Norman, Sr., one of the pioneers of Henrietta is a native of England, born in Somersetshire, July 17, 1811, where he spent his younger days. At the age of twenty-one he left his native land and came to America, and settled in the province of Ontario. He purchased land in what is now the town of Ora. Upon this land, which was heavily timbered, he built a log house and cleared a farm, and lived there until 1850. He then sold out and came to Wisconsin, settled in Jefferson county, where he brought property in Watertown, and lived there until 1855. In that year he came to Richland county and entered land on section 20, of town 12, range 1 east, now known as Henrietta. He built a log house and then began clearing his farm. He occupied the log house until 1859, when he built a neat frame house, in which he now lives, on section 17. He was married in 1834 to Mary Welsh. They have eight children—George, Robert and Maria, twins; Joshua J., Caleb H., James, Thomas and Mary J.

Their eldest son, George, was born in the town of Ora, province of Ontario, Jan. 22, 1837, and came to Wisconsin with his parents and assisted his father in clearing a farm. He enlisted in 1863 in the 11th Wisconsin, company D, and went south. He was discharged with the regiment in September, 1865, and returned home. He was married in 1868 to Elizabeth, daughter of Quinton and Susan (Morrell) Nicks. Four children have been born Joshua J. Norman was born in Ora, province of Ontario, June 3, 1840. He came with his parents to Wisconsin and lived with them until 1862, when he enlisted in March, in the 12th Wisconsin Battery, and went south. He participated in the following engagements: Corinth, Iuka, Vicksburg and Chattanooga and was with Sherman on his march through Georgia to the sea and through the Carolinas, taking a part in most of the battles of that noted campaign. He returned home at the expiration of the time for which he enlisted. He was joined in marriage in August, 1869, to Margaret Householder, a native of Ohio. They are the parents of six children—James B., Daniel I., Elgin S., Mary L., Rollie R. and Arthur J. Mr. Norman's farm, where he settled at the time of his marriage, is located on section 32, of the town of Henrietta. He has a good frame house and a log stable 20x90 feet. Sixty acres of the farm are cleared and under cultivation.

Robert M. Stockwell, one of the early settlers of Richland county, is a native of Vermont, born in Chittenden county, March 7, 1829. When he was seven years of age his parents moved to Washington Co., Vt. and here he grew to manhood's estate, obtaining his education in the district school. He was married in 1855 to Amelia D., daughter of Benjamin and Amelia (Hazelton) Davis, who was born in Mooretown, Washington Co., Vt. They remained in Vermont until 1856 and then came to Wisconsin and first located on Fancy creek, where he rented a farm. In 1861 he purchased timber land on section 21, town of Henrietta, built a log cabin, into which his family moved, and he then commenced clearing his present farm. In November, 1863, he was drafted in the 37th Wisconsin, company H, and joined the Army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg, and served with the regiment until the close of the war, and was discharged July 27, 1865. He may well be considered one of the most successful farmers of Richland county. His farm now contains 260 acres. In 1883 he erected a neat frame house. Mr. and Mrs. Stockwell have five children living—Eli, Carlos, Ezra, Lelah and Abbie.

Henry Travers, an early settler of Henrietta, is a native of Indiana, born in Posey county, Dec. 22, 1827. At the age of eleven he removed with his parents to Wayne Co., Ill., where they were among the early settlers and the subject of this sketch began his pioneer life. His father purchased wild land, which he assisted in clearing. He was married in 1851 to Sabrina Bradshaw, a native of Illinois. He purchased land in Ramsey township, Wayne county, and lived there until 1857, when he sold out and started with two pairs of oxen and a wagon to seek a home in the far west. His family accompanied him, and he drove thirty head of stock. After traveling twenty-one days they arrived at Woodstock. He purchased timber land on section 30, town of Henrietta, and immediately began clearing. The family lived in a log house until 1873, when he built a good frame dwelling. Mr. Travers has been three times married. His first wife died March 19, 1876, leaving seven children—Arthur, Mary, Ella, Orilla, Emma, Willie and Ina. He married again, in 1878, to Nancy Silbaugh, a native of Ohio who died in 1880. On Dec. 24, 1875, he was married to Rosa Hoyt, a native of Ohio. One child blessed this union—Harry, born May 30, 1878. In 1880 Andrew Snyder became his partner in business and the firm is now known as Travers & Snyder. They keep a general stock of dry goods, notions, groceries, boots and shoes, hats and caps and farming implements and repairs for the same. They are also produce shippers and live stock brokers.

He sold the following year to John Clarson, and moved to Henrietta, purchased land on section 32, and built a frame house. He cleared a portion of the land and lived there until 1861, when he traded for land on section 5, town of Rockbridge. He cleared some of this land, built a log house and frame barn, and remained here till 1867, when he returned to Henrietta and settled on section 17.

Here he erected another log house and a commodious frame barn. In 1881 he bought the Perry Brown farm on section 18, and now makes that his home. Upon this place there is a nice frame house, built by Perry Brown. Mr. Stowell has built a frame barn upon this farm making the fourth built by him in the county. He has some of the best improvements in the town. He is a native of the State of New York, born in Rensselaer county, March 3, 1830. When he was twelve years old his parents moved to Onieda county, where he attained his majority. He was married Dec. 29, 1849, to Martha R., daughter of Holsey and Sarah (Vannetar) Carpenter. When he was nine years of age his parents moved to Richland county and he commenced learning the miller's trade in his father's mill at Woodstock. He was engaged in 1862-3 in brickmaking at Woodstock. In February, 1865, he enlisted in the 50th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, but was sent as a recruit to company D, 7th Wisconsin, and joined the regiment in front of Petersburg, remaining at the front until March 28, when he was taken sick and sent to the hospital. He lost his speech and did not regain it for three months. He was honorably discharged in June, 1865, when he returned home. In 1868 he went to Milwaukee and worked in a machine shop ten months, he then returned to Woodstock and engaged in milling two years and next to Richland Center, where he worked as sawyer in Parfrey & Pease's mill. He then returned to Woodstock and again engaged in milling, remaining there until 1882, when he built his present mill. Mr. Meeker is a natural mechanic and readily turns his hand to anything in that line. He has been employed to quite an extent in the capacity of millwright. He was married in 1872 to Elizabeth, daughter of Demas and Elizabeth (Nicholson) Wherry. They have three children—Jessie R., Lee and Alice.

He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in York county. In the fall of 1855, taking his family, he started with two teams for Wisconsin. They carried their own provisions and camped on the way. After four weeks' travel they reached Sauk City, where they spent the winter. In the spring of 1856, he went to Sauk Prairie and engaged in farming, remaining there until February, 1861, when he came to Henrietta, and settled on land on section 7, the south half of the northeast quarter, which he had purchased in 1857. He has cleared quite a piece of this land, and built a good frame house and barn. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler have two children—Winnie J. and Willie A.

John W. Ferguson is one of the successful farmers of Henrietta. In 1866 he purchased the first land he ever owned. It was in the town of Bloom, consisting of forty acres. He did not settle upon it, however, but soon sold it and bought eighty acres on section 30, town of Henrietta. He cleared a part of this land, built a log house and lived there until 1870, when he sold it and purchased eighty acres on section 19, where he built a good frame house and a large granary, and he now makes this his home. His father purchased timber land, cleared a farm and lived there until the time of his death. It was here that the subject of this sketch grew to manhood. When he was seventeen years old, his father built a saw-mill, in which he was employed five years. He then purchased the mill, and built a flour-mill, which he operated in connection with the saw-mill for six years. At the end of that time, he sold out and engaged in mercantile business. Three years later he sold the store, and built another mill in Edwards county, which he operated until 1866, when he came to Richland county and located at Woodstock and engaged again in mercantile business, which he continued until 1869. He then sold out and built the mill which he now operates. He has been twice married—first, in 1844, to Patsy Doty, a native of Indiana. They had nine children, six of whom are now living—Martin, Rebecca, Solomon, Harriet, Lori and Hiram. Mrs. Walser died in 1866. Mr. Walser's second wife was Almira Bradshaw, widow of Rev. When he was but eleven years old, his parents came to America and settled in Vernon county, town of Union, where he grew to manhood, obtaining an education in the district school. He was married in 1867 to Josephine Plachetka. They remained in Vernon county one year, and then came to Richland county and bought timber land on section 5, town of Henrietta, and immediately began clearing a farm. ## CHAPTER XXVI.

TOWN OF ITHACA.

The town of Ithaca lies in the eastern tier of Richland county's sub-divisions. It comprises the territory of township 10, range 2 east, and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, and the north half of sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of township 9, range 2 east, and also section 1 and the north half of section 12, township 9, range 1 east. Unlike most of the towns in the county, originally there was but little timber in Ithaca. The Indians, when this was their home, set fires yearly that stripped the surface of its vegetation. What timber there was in the town was at the head of the smaller valleys, or "pockets," except quite a heavy body of timber on Pine river, and some scattered along on the banks of other streams. Since the advent of the whites a flourishing growth of timber has sprung up and now covers the unimproved lands.

The town is well watered by Willow creek and its tributaries. The creek enters the town from the north by way of section 4, and flows in a general southwesterly course across the surface of the town, to finally make confluence with Pine river. Little Willow, the main branch of the creek just mentioned, enters Ithaca from the north by way of section 6, from thence it passes through sections 7 and 18, a corner of 19, to section 20, where it flows into the Willow. Pine river touches but a small portion of this town. The celebrated Bear creek passes through the southeastern part of the town. It enters section 36 from Sauk county; takes a general southwesterly course through sections 1 and 11, and touches section 10 on its way to the town of Buena Vista. There are several tributaries to this beautiful stream, fed by springs.

Ithaca is one of the best towns of Richland county. It was settled with an enterprising and thrifty class of people who took hold of such industries as the county seemed to them to be best adapted. An instance of this is found in the dairy industries, in which this town leads most of the towns in the county. Some of the best land in the town was first thought to be unfit for agricultural purposes on account of its wet and marshy appearance. Especially was this the case in the Little Willow and upper part of Big Willow and Bear valleys. These lands have been sufficiently drained by cultivation, and here, at the present time, are to be found some of the best farms in the town.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler within the limits now comprising the town of Ithaca was Orrin Britton, a native of New Hampshire. He came here from Fort Atkinson, Jefferson Co., Wis., in the summer of 1848 and entered the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 8, town 9, range 2 east. E. M. Sexton came with him and entered a large tract of land including the present site of the village of Sextonville. Orrin Britton erected a log cabin on his land, using split puncheon for the floor and shakes to cover the roof. The party then returned to Jefferson county. In December, 1848, Britton returned, accompanied by his family, consisting of himself, wife and six children. The teams then went back to Fort Atkinson for other goods and provisions, and upon their return to Richland county Jacob Essyltine, his son Roderick and Alonzo Britton accompanied them. This party had been employed by E. M. Sexton to build him a house. During that winter they boarded with Britton's family, who at that time were the only residents of Ithaca.

In the spring of 1849 E. M. Sexton and R. B. Stewart came from Jefferson county, accompanied by their families. Mr. Sexton moved his family into the house which had been erected for him on the northeast quarter of section 7. He made this part of the county his home for several years, then removed to Barron county. In 1876 he came back on a visit. He was sick at the time and told his friends that he had come back to die. He lived but a few weeks, his death occurring at the house of friends in the town of Buena Vista. His remains lie buried in Sextonville cemetery.

R. R. Stewart lived for a time in Sextonville, then settled in the town of Buena Vista. In 1853 he located in the town of Willow, where he still resides.

Orrin Britton soon bought and entered other lands in the neighborhood. He remained there for three or four years, when he sold out and removed to the LaCrosse valley.

James Bank, a native of England, came here in 1849 and settled on the southeast quarter of section 31. On the 19th of July, 1852, he sold this farm to Dr. Sippy and moved to Bear valley, where he located on the southwest quarter of section 2. In 1855 he sold out again and removed to Sextonville where he opened a hotel and also contracted to carry the mail. He died there a few years later.

A Mr. Whelpy was the first settler in that part of Bear creek valley now included in Ithaca. He came here as early as 1849, and settled upon the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 36. He erected a log cabin and covered the roof with sod. He remained until 1857 when he sold to H. L. Burnham and left the country.

In the fall of 1848 Thomas Derrickson and John Walker came from Indiana. Mr. Derrickson located a land warrant on the southeast quarter of section 30, town 10, range 2 east, and still occupies the farm. John Walker entered the northeast quarter of section 31. He was a Methodist exhorter, and for a number of years he preached in the neighborhood and tilled his farm; then sold out and moved to La Crosse. He now lives in Dakota.

Samuel Metcalf also came from Indiana in 1849. He entered the northeast quarter of section 30. He lived there until 1853, when he sold to Anthony Thomas and removed to Illinois.

F. G. Robinson came here from Indiana at about the same time as did Metcalf, and settled on the southwest quarter of section 20. He made that his home for about one year, when he sold his place to Rolland Bush and returned to Indiana.

Joab Enos came here from Green county in 1849 and claimed the southeast quarter of section 17. He sojourned here but a few years, selling out at the expiration of that time and removing to California.

William Butler, an Indian half-breed, from the reservation in Onondaga Co., N. Y., came here in 1849 and claimed the northwest quarter of section 9. He soon sold this claim and entered the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 29. In November, 1852, he traded this land to Isaac P. Welton, receiving therefor a pair of horses, harness and wagon, and $45 in gold. In December, of the same year, he moved to section 16 where he spent a few months, and then moved to the town of Willow. In the history of that town will be found an account of the settlement there.

John Lawrence, a native of New York State, and a son-in-law of William Butler, came with Butler, and entered the north half of the northeast quarter of section 17. In the fall of 1851 he sold to Amasa Grover, and moved to the town of Richland. He lived there a few years, then returned to Ithaca and lived on section 18 for a time, when he went west. A man named Hademan came here at the same time as Butler and Lawrence, and lived with Butler until 1852, when he started with Enos for California, and died on the plains.

In March, 1850, Charles Devoe, a native of the State of New York and a blacksmith by trade, came and settled on the present site of the village of Sextonville. He entered land on section 5, town 9, range 2 east. He worked at his trade and followed farming, remaining until the time of his death.

Alfred H. Bush and James H. Boyd came with Devoe. They were both sons-in-law of Devoe, and natives of New York State. Bush bought land on section 20, and lived there for a short time, then moved to section 30. In 1872 he moved to Franklin Co., Neb., where he now lives. He was a school teacher by profession, and had served as superintendent of schools in Lewis Co., N. Y. After he had been here some years, he became a preacher in the Congregational Church. He was prominent in town and county affairs, and served as county treasurer. He has represented Franklin county in the State Legislature, and is now mail agent on the B. & M. R. R. Boyd took a claim on Little Willow creek and erected a board shanty. He spent the summer there, then disposed of the claim and afterward bought the south half of the northwest quarter of section 5, town 9, range 2 east, and lived here until 1881, when he sold and moved to Jackson county, where he now lives.

Joseph Post, a son-in-law of Charles Devoe, came here from Walworth county in 1850 and entered land on section 4. He made his home here until the time of his death. Some of the children still occupy the old homestead. He was well liked and had the confidence of the people. He filled most of the various offices in the town and was chairman of the board for several years.

Lucius Campbell, a native Vermont, came here in 1849 and entered land on section 6. In 1852 he sold out and returned to Jefferson county.

In 1850 Peter Mickel, a native of New York State, came to Sextonville, and remained until 1853 when he went to the LaCrosse valley. In 1861 he returned to Sextonville, and has since made this his home.

In 1850 James Goodrich came here, with the intention of engaging in merchandising. He remained only a couple of years and then removed to Nebraska.

John Perry, a native of New York, came in 1850 and entered land on section 17, which included the mill privileges. He remained here about five years, when he sold out and went to Iowa, where he died a few years later.

William Beemer was also one of the settlers during 1850. He was a native of Ohio, and after looking around a little he entered the southwest quarter, and the north half of the northwest quarter of section 1, town 9, range 1 east; also the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 36, town 10, range 1 east. He erected a frame house on the northeast quarter of section 1, which at that time was the only house between Sextonville and Richland Center. Here he opened a tavern, and hung a sign bearing the words painted in black letters: "Pine River House!" This was a favorite stopping place among travelers for many years. Beemer remained there until 1861 when he went to Illinois, and the famous old Pine River House became a thing of the past.

In the fall of 1850 Mr. Rowley, an Englishman, came to the town of Ithaca and squatted on the northeast quarter of section 5. He made no improvements except putting up a log cabin; and in 1852, accompanied the Enos party to California.

Roland Bush, a native of Hampden Co., Mass., came here from the State of New York in 1850, and purchased 329 acres of land. He now lives on section 19.

Amasa Grover, a native of New York, came from that State in the fall of 1851, and purchased the north half of the northeast quarter of section 17, where he still resides.

At about the same time Dr. Asa McCullom, a native of Ohio, came from Massachusetts, and purchased the north half of the northwest quarter of section 8, adjoining the plat of Sextonville. He is still an honored resident of the village.

Robert Clement, a native of Ireland, came here from the State of New York in 1851 and bought land on section 10, town 9, range 2 east. He improved a farm and lived here until the time of his death.

In the spring of 1851 Jacob Krouskop came from Ohio and settled on section 6, town 9, range 2 east. He remained a resident of the town until the time of his death, Feb. 7, 1878.

RELIGIOUS.

The first mass in the town of Ithaca was held by Father Max Gardner, at the house of William Misslich, in November, 1856, and this finally resulted in the organization of St. Mary's Catholic Church. Father Gardner was at that time a resident of Sauk county, and knowing there were people here in the wilderness without a spiritual advisor, he started out on foot and alone for this little German settlement. He was gladly welcomed and the people gathered at the house of William Misslich, as stated. There were four children baptized at this time—Agnes, daughter of Albert and Mary A. Misslich; Henry, a son of Peter and Mary Wertzel; Gertrude, daughter of Joseph and Barbara Bodendine; and Maggie, daughter of Jacob and Catharine Weitzel. It was decided to build a church, and subscriptions were solicited. There were but few families here at that time. The male members were—William Misslich and his three sons, Albert, Paul and Anthony; Joseph Oschner, Andrew Muller, Jacob Weitzel, Henry Axsenmacher, Peter Weitzel, Casper Brewer and Joseph Bodendine. Money was subscribed to the amount of $139, and a small building was erected on the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 14. Father Max Gardner was the first to say mass in the church. Father Wendel Bernard was the first resident pastor. In 1864 a parsonage was built. It was an unpretentious frame building, with two rooms, and cost $337, beside work done by the members. Father Bernard was succeeded on Christmas, 1865, by Father Theophilus Bean, who had charge until May, 1872. In 1869, through his influence, a commodious stone house was erected for school purposes and as a home for the sisters in charge. It is a two and a half story building, well furnished. There are two large rooms on the ground floor, which are used for school purposes, while the sisters occupy the upper part.

Father Bean was succeeded by Father Francis X. Heller, who remained until Oct. 17, 1874, when Father A. Mendl became pastor. In May, 1875, he was succeeded by Father Michael Heiss, who remained until 1878. In January, of that year, Father Henry Koenig, the present pastor, took charge.

The parsonage, as stated, when first built contained two rooms. A few years later an addition of two rooms was made. In 1883 Father Koenig erected a commodious two story frame house, adjoining the old part. To show how the Catholic Church has prospered, it is stated that Father Bean had charge of seven different Churches, beside several appointments at private houses. Two of these Churches were in Sauk county, one in Crawford, and the rest in Richland. St. Mary's Church started with eight families; it now numbers eighty-five families, and owns property valued at $15,000. Father Koenig also has charge of the Church at Richland Center, being assisted in his labors by Father Joseph Bush.

Father Henry Koenig, the popular pastor of the St. Mary's Church, was born in the city of Heiligenstadt, Prussia, Germany, Oct. 7, 1835. He studied first in his own native city, and finished his education at the city of Rome. He went to Ireland and was ordained as a Catholic priest at Carlow College, on the 9th day of May, 1859. After a sojourn of a few weeks in Ireland he came to America, and was assigned to a Church at Mishawaka, St. Joseph Co., Ind. He remained there seven years, and then went to Wilmar, Pulaski county. From there he went to Kansas, and returning east located at Toronto, Canada, where he remained until taking charge of the St. Mary's Church, in January, 1878. Father Koenig's parents never came to America. His father died Jan. 29, 1882, at the ripe old age of eighty-three. His mother is still living in Prussia, seventy-five years of age. He has a sister that is teaching in Ursoline Convent, Jeffersonville, Ind.

The Bear Valley union church was erected in 1874, by the people in the vicinity. It is a neat frame structure and cost about $2,400. It is located on the south half of the northwest quarter of section 11, town 9, range 2 east. The church is free to all denominations. There is no organization, but Rev. S. B. Loomis preaches here. He is liberal in his views, and his sermons are listened to with interest.

Adjoining the church grounds is a cemetery, which was laid out in 1860. An association was formed in the neighborhood for the purpose. The first officers were: A. G. Burnham, president; J. G. Carpenter, treasurer, and J. M. Thomas, secretary. The officers of the association in 1883 were: Benjamin Winterburn, president; William Dixon, treasurer, and J. M. Thomas, secretary.

A Lutheran Church was organized in 1862 at the school house on section 30 by Rev. Simon Spyker. It had fourteen members, as follows: Samuel Davis and wife; Samuel S. Davis and wife; Samuel Stofer and wife; J. G. Marden and wife; Harriet Cass, Rosanna Spyker and O. V. Davis. Rev. Spyker has been the pastor of this Church since its organization. In 1869 it changed its form of government and became a Congregational Church. For several years they met for worship in the school house, but since the erection of the union church, services have been held there. The society now has forty-three members. The present deacons are: O. V. Davis, S. S. Davis and O. R. Jaquish. The trustees are: S. J. Freeborn, O. V. Davis and C. A. Hatch.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in the town was taught in The Ark in 1851 by Susan McCaw.

The first school house in this town was built in 1851 in the present village of Sextonville. The rafters and studding were made of hewn tamarack poles. Margaret Ingram taught the first school.

School district No. 1 embraces the village of Sextonville, and a history of it appears in connection with the history of the village.

The first school in district No. 2 was taught in a log house, owned by William Harris, on the northwest quarter of section 1, town 9, range 2, in the summer of 1855. The teacher was Mary Dyke. During the same summer a substantial frame house was erected on the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter section 2. Isaac Peckham was the first teacher in this building. In 1859 the district was divided and a log school house was built on the southeast quarter of section 26, in which Jane Giles first wielded the ferule. Two or three years later the school house was removed to the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 36, where it remained several years and was then moved to the northwest quarter of section 36. It was in use here two years, when the territory was again attached to district No. 2. Arthur Ochner is the present teacher.

School district No. 4 is a joint district. The first school house in this district was erected in 1852 on the northeast quarter of section 30. Cordelia A. Bush was the first teacher. There were eight scholars in the district at the time. The old school house remained in use until during the war, when a larger house was erected on the old site.

In 1859 a portion of the district was set off and a school was taught in Joshua Crapser's granery, on section 28, Belle Britton being the teacher. In 1859 a school house was erected on the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 28. Sarah Telfair was the first teacher in this house. This district was known as No. 11, and its organization continued in existence until 1875, when the territory was attached to other districts and district No. 11 was abolished.

District No. 6 is also a joint district. The first school house in this district was erected in 1856. Dr. Sippy and Abel Reagles gave the lumber and all of the neighbors turned out and put up the building on the southwest quarter of section 4. Charlotte Smith and Rebecca McCloud, now the wife of Valentine Stoddard, were the first teachers. The old house was in use but a short time when it was replaced by a larger and more expensive building. Edward Long was the first teacher in this building. The present teacher is Johanna Stoddard.

In joint district No. 5 the first school house was erected in 1860, being located on the east half of the south west quarter of section 6. Mrs. Helen Smith was the first teacher. The school building has since been moved to its present location on the east half of the northwest quarter of section 7. J. W. Manley is the present teacher.

The first school in district No. 7 was taught in Amasa Grover's granary by Sarah Etta Perrin in 1855. There were less than a dozen scholars in attendance. The following spring the district erected a frame house on the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 17. Miss Perrin was also the first teacher in this house. This building was used for school purposes until 1877, when a new house was erected. Della Welton was the first teacher in the new building. Frank Smith is the present teacher.

The first school house in district No. 10 was a log one erected in 1861 on section 14. Milton Derrickson was the first teacher. This house was used until 1869, since which time the district has rented a room of the St. Mary's congregation at Keysville.

The first school house in district No. 12 was built in 1860. It was of logs, and located on the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 2. Olivia Hays was the first teacher. #### RICHLAND COUNTY NURSERY.

This nursery was started in 1868 by S. J. Freeborn, at his home on section 20. In 1871 he was joined by A. L. Hatch, and a partnership was formed between these two gentlemen for carrying on the business. At this time the nursery was removed to sections 22 and 27, where sixty acres were purchased, forty of which were improved. Since that time other tracts of land have been purchased until they now have 160 acres, the most of which they use. Both of these gentlemen have separate orchards, aside from the nursery, Mr. Freeborn having 3,500 trees and A. L. Hatch, 2,000. The firm has been very successful in their business, and much credit is due to them for their energy and enterprise in the establishment and prosecution of this beneficial and much needed industry.

TWIN BLUFFS POSTOFFICE.

This office was established in June, 1883, with Charles Pierce as the first postmaster. He keeps the office at his house near the station. The office receives four mails per day.

KEYSVILLE POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice bearing this name was established in April, 1872, and Paul Misslich was commissioned postmaster. It was then on the Lone Rock and Le Valle route, and mail was received three times each week. It is still on the same mail route, but mail is now received daily. Mr. Misslich is still postmaster and keeps the office at his house on section 14.

BEAR VALLEY POSTOFFICE.

This office was originally established in Sauk county at an early day, taking its name from the creek of that name. About 1860 the office was moved to the town of Ithaca, and John Price was commissioned as postmaster. He kept the office at his house, on section 36. The office at that time was on the mail route from Lone Rock to Ironton, and mail was received twice each week from both ways. Mr. Price in a few years was succeeded by John A. Shontz, as postmaster, who is the present incumbent. The office is kept at his house on section 36. Mail is now received every day.

THE VILLAGE OF PETERSBURG.

In 1855 Peter Haskins laid out a village on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 25, to which he gave the name, Petersburg; suggested, it is presumed, by his first name.

Shortly afterward a Mr. Beard bought three village lots and opened a grocery store, and in connection made the sale of whisky a specialty. After he had run the business for a year or so, he was taken sick with the typhoid fever and died.

There was no other sign of business life here until after the close of the war, when A. Dederich opened the store, which is still in operation. He now runs a wagon, blacksmith and shoeshop, and also keeps a public house at this point.

In 1871 Joseph Ochsner, John Little and David Dudgeon erected a flour mill on the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 36, adjoining the site of the village of Petersburg. They put up a building, 26x38 feet in size, two stories high, and equipped it with three run of buhrs and other necessary machinery for making first-class flour. The dam was built of earth and timber and secured seven and a half feet fall of water. Joseph Ochsner and Boorman are the present owners of the property and they rent it. It is now run as a custom mill.

THE VILLAGE OF NEPTUNE.

Dr. Joseph Sippy platted a village on the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 4, in 1855, to which he gave the name of Neptune. At the time there was a log house upon the site belonging to Daniel Gwin.

In 1854 Stephen Ragles opened a store here in a building that he had erected for the purpose. He soon made an addition to the building and opened a tavern called the Neptune House. In 1856 he closed up his business and went to Sextonville.

The Neptune postoffice was established in 1854, with Dr. Joseph Sippy as postmaster. The office was named by the authorities at Washington. It was on a route from Sextonville, and mail was received once each week. Dr. Sippy was succeeded as postmaster by R. J. Taplin, and then came John Sippy. The latter gentleman resigned and moved away, and as no one would accept the office it was finally discontinued.

In 1853 Dr. Sippy commenced the erection of a saw mill at Neptune, which was completed during the following year. It was furnished with an "up and down saw." A dam of brush and dirt was thrown across Big Willow creek, which secured six and a half feet fall of water. In May, 1866, Rufus Taplin bought the property and has run the mill since that time. The dam has been washed out several times since then, but the present substantial stone dam, which was built by Mr. Taplin, bids fair to be permanent. In 1883 he added a feed mill which is quite a convenience to the people in the vicinity.

In 1862 Rev. Thurston, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, preached at the school house in Neptune and organized a class with about twenty members. Among them were the following: Joseph W. Jaquish and wife, David Jaquish, Mrs. Olive Dupee, Dr.

Joseph Sippy and wife, Nathan Jaquish and wife, and Julia Weston. Joseph W. Jaquish was elected class leader. Among the pastors who at times presided over the little society were Rev. C. Cook and Mr. Harvey. As time rolled by the members moved away and died, and finally the class dropped out of existence.

THE VILLAGE OF ITHACA.

This is a very pleasantly located hamlet on section 17. It has never been platted; but business houses have collected about the spot and it is now a good point for trade, being surrounded by a wealthy and prosperous class of farmers.

In 1865 James Spickard opened a harness shop on the present site of the village. This was the first sign of business life at this point. In 1865 Mr. Spickard opened the first store in the village, keeping groceries, dry goods and a general assortment of merchandise. He is still in trade here. Mr. Spickard only continued to run his harness shop for two years.

Samuel Stover, in 1867, opened the second harness shop and is still in business.

The first blacksmith was William Krouse, who opened a shop at this point in 1867. He was in business five or six years, when he was succeeded by D. W. Bear, a first-class workman. Mr. Bear was in business here about four years. He is now located at Rodolf's mill, in the town of Eagle, and is doing an extensive business, running a hardware and grocery store in connection with his blacksmith shop. The shop at Ithaca changed hands several times within a year, and then George Bear bought it and continued in business until the fall of 1883, when H. H. Spyker, the present blacksmith, purchased it.

In 1876 John H. Davis opened a shoe shop in Ithaca, doing custom work and repairing. In 1877 he purchased a building that had been used as a wagon shop and furnished and remodeled it for a shoe shop. In 1883 he put in a stock of groceries, crockery, glassware and notions, and is still in business.

In 1881 William Morrison established a cheese factory in the village, which has been in successful operation since.

C. W. Davis commenced in mercantile trade here in 1872, and still continues.

The Ithaca postoffice was established in 1857. James McMillan was appointed postmaster, and kept the office at his house on the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 17. James Spickard succeeded Mr. McMillan as postmaster and removed the office to his house on the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 17, and later to his store. In 1871 he was succeeded by William Davis, and a few months later Mr. Spickard was again appointed postmaster. In 1874 he was succeeded by C. W. Davis, the present postmaster. The office is kept at Mr. Davis' store.

In 1853 Wyatt Perkins commenced the erection of a saw-mill on the southwest quarter of section 17. The power was derived from the Big Willow, a dam of grass and dirt being thrown across the stream, securing about five feet fall of water. The mill was equipped with a perpendicular saw. Perkins was a Vermont man. He had lived in Dane county, this State, for a few years, and had floated down to Richland county in a boat on the Wisconsin river. He had no money at all. When he started down the Wisconsin river an ax was the only tool which he possessed, and the boat being capsized, this was lost. When he arrived at Ithaca John Perry gave him the mill privilege, upon the condition that he would build a mill there. For some time Perkins and his family, consisting of a wife and two children, lived upon boiled wheat, they came to such straitened circumstances. But he commenced work on the mill, using borrowed tools, and completed it about two years later. After he had got out the frame, he mortgaged the privilege and so got the machinery. Even after he got the mill in running order, he was not very successful, as he was inclined to be indolent, and did not attend to business closely. He ran the mill about five years, when he sold it to James R. McMillan. He then went to Columbia county, and, when the war broke out, went into the army and died while in the service. He was a great talker, was well educated and an intelligent man. He frequently preached in this neighborhood. Immediately after buying the property, Mr. McMillan erected a grist mill, adjoining the saw-mill, putting up a building 30x40 feet in size, and two and a half stories high. Two run of stone were put in and the other necessary machinery. He ran it as a custom mill until the close of the war and sold soon afterward to Alfred Parfrey. Five or six years later the property was purchased by James Black, who tore out the old dam, put in a stone one and erected a new building, two stories and a basement in height. Two run of buhrs were put in. In 1878 Frank B. Koleman bought the property and is the present owner.

THE VILLAGE OF SEXTONVILLE.

The village of Sextonville is pleasantly located in the southwestern part of the town of Ithaca, on sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, town 9, range 2 east. Being situated on Willow creek, and in close proximity to Pine river, water power sufficient to propel a vast amount of machinery can be easily obtained. The village is surrounded by some of the best and most valuable farming and stock raising territory in the county, which is a guaranty of permanent and ever increasing trade. The Richland Center branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad passes just west of the village. Twin Bluff station being located on the northeast corner of section 12, town 9, range 1 east.

The village was platted in January, 1851, by E. M. Sexton; the surveyor being Oscar Briggs from Sauk county. The plat as then drawn laid upon sections 5, 6, 7 and 8. There were five buildings upon the site at that time. The first was a log house erected by Mrs. Marinda Lonsdale, and was located on lot 2, block 17. There was also a small frame house that belonged to the same party located on lot 4, block 8. The third was a small one story frame building which had been erected in 1850 by James Goodrich, located on lot 6, block 23. He put in a stock of goods and was in trade here a short time; then moved to section 7, where for some time he was engaged at his trade—carpentering. His next move was to Nebraska, where he became a prominent man. The building in Sextonville which he erected is still standing as part of the hotel. The fourth building upon the site was a blacksmith shop which had been erected by Charles Devoe. The fifth was located on lot 1, block 29. It was a frame building erected by Luther Irish, in which he opened the first permanent store in the village. He commenced business here in January, 1851, buying his goods in Milwaukee, and having them hauled here with teams. He was a good business man and made money as well as friends here. In 1855 he closed this store and was intending to build a larger store and carry on a larger business. He went to La Crosse valley that year on a visit and died while there. His loss was severely felt in the community. The new bell in the Methodist church first tolled for his funeral. He left a wife and infant son. His widow is now the wife of Peter Mickle. His son now lives in Barron Co., Wis.

Daniel Osborne was the next to engage in trade here, occupying the Goodrich building. He kept open for a few months during the year 1851, and then removed to Richland City.

The next to engage in business here was Henry Leonard, a native of New York State. He came here in 1852 and opened a tinshop in the Goodrich building, manufacturing tin-ware and selling stoves. He was a good salesman, and did well as long as he "stuck to his text"; but after a time he engaged in the cattle trade and was not successful in this line. He now runs a tin shop in Trenton, Mo.

The next to engage in trade here was Henry Mitchell, a confectioner by trade. In 1853 he opened a general store and kept there about one year.

In September, 1855, Willard H. and Charles G. Thomas opened a general store in the Mitchell building, located on lot 2, block 29.

In 1856 N. A. Hawks opened a store here. In the fall of that year he sold to E. M. Sexton and Andrew McCorkle, who carried on the business until the spring of 1857, when William McCorkle bought them out. About the same time Willard H. and Charles G. Thomas dissolved partnership, Charles G. taking the goods. He and William McCorkle formed a partnership and put their stocks of goods together. They are still in trade here, and are probably the oldest firm doing business in the county.

The first drug store in the village was opened in 1854 by Martin Britton. He afterwards added groceries, and was in trade here until 1857, when he sold to Robert Essyltine, an estimable young man. On account of ill health, Mr. Essyltine was unable to attend very strictly to business. In 1858 he sold to Dr. Asa McCollum, who is still in trade.

Charles Devoc established the first blacksmith shop here, in May, 1850. He erected a frame shanty on what afterwards became lot 8, block 22.

The first harness maker in the place was Albert Shebly, who opened a shop here in about 1860. He continued in trade for about two years, when he entered the army and remained in the service until the close of the war. He then again opened his shop here and ran it a short time, when he sold to David Wood. Mr. Wood ran the shop here and at the mill until 1882, when he closed out and moved to Richland Center.

Henry Smith was the first shoemaker. He worked at cobbling in the winter and at carpenter work in the summer. Phineas Janney was the first to open a shoe shop. He opened in 1852 and remained but a short time.

In 1855 George Krouskop erected a building near the mill and opened a general merchandise store. He was afterwards joined in the business by his brother, A. H. Krouskop, and they were in trade here for a number of years.

In the spring of 1882 J. L. R. McCollum, Joseph McCorkle and C. G. Thomas established a cheese factory in the building formerly occupied by the Krouskop brothers. It was furnished with all the necessary machinery, and the factory has been in successful operation since.

Sextonville cemetery was surveyed in 1852 by Joseph Irish on section 5. The land was donated by Charles Devoc. The first burial here was of the remains of Mrs. George Reed.

The first hotel in this part of the county was kept by E. M. Sexton in the building that was erected for him in the winter of 1848-9. He made an addition to it and had it raised, making of it a two-story building, seventy-five feet in length. This building for years went by the name of "The Ark," and was well known throughout this region. Mr. Sexton was a popular landlord, being of a jolly disposition and always cracking jokes. The hotel did quite a business; dancing and other parties were held here, which were largely attended. Mr. Sexton sold to Samuel Bristol, and he to William Cratsenberg. It afterwards changed hands several times, and was finally destroyed by fire.

The first hotel on the village plat proper was erected by Hiram Z. Britton in 1851. It was located on lot 7, of block 16. It was a small building at first, but he soon made additions, and kept tavern until 1856. Since that time there have been several hotels kept in the village. The Parker House, the only hotel in the village at present, is kept by George Hoke. It was first opened in 1873 by George Parker, who purchased the property at that time. He rebuilt and added to the house and kept it until 1881, when he sold to the present proprietor.

MILLS.

In 1851 E. M. Sexton erected a saw-mill on the southwest quarter of section 6, throwing a dam of brush and dirt across Willow creek, thus securing seven feet fall of water. The mill was equipped with an "up and down" saw, which for years awoke the echoes of the neighboring wood with its busy hum. The mill was built for Jacob Krouskop, who, in 1853, erected a three story grist-mill building adjoining the saw-mill. He put in two run of stone and all other machinery for the manufacture of flour. Jacob Krouskop sold to his son, George Krouskop, who added another run of stone and other machinery, making it a merchant and custom mill. He sold the property to Fleisher & Wolf, who ran a short time and then Wolf sold his interest to Mr. Turnutses. The latter gentleman, about one year later, sold to William Sherman. In 1870 C. G. Thomas purchased Fleisher's interest, and the firm became Thomas & Sherman. They immediately rebuilt both grist and saw-mills, and repaired the dam. In 1871 Thomas sold half his interest to William McCorkle. The firm is now Sherman, Thomas & McCorkle. The mill now has three run of buhrs and all the necessary machinery for manufacturing first-class flour. It is run as a custom and merchant mill. New machinery has been placed in the saw-mill, which now does a splendid business. It is equipped with three saws and a planer.

In 1852 David J. Eastland began the erection of a saw-mill on the northwest quarter of section 7, town 9, range 2 east. The mill was completed in 1853. The dam was constructed of stone, brush and earth. The water wheel was a screw wheel, fourteen feet in diameter. The power was derived from Pine river. The water was carried to the mill through a race sixty rods in length, and a tail race of the same length. They used an "up and down saw." The mill was in operation for about twelve years.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious meetings in the town of Ithaca were held in the old building known as "The Ark," by Rev. Chaffee, a Presbyterian minister. He organized a Presbyterian class here, the following being among its first members: Charles Devoe and wife, A. H. Bush and wife, Samuel Long and wife, Richard Struble and wife, Emanuel Allace and wife, John Ingraham and wife and Mr. Fox and wife. Charles Devoe was elected deacon. This class met for worship in "The Ark" until the school house was erected, and then met there for a few years. Some of the leading members moved away, and finally this class was united with the Congregationalists.

About 1859 a Congregational Church was organized at Sextonville. It included as members: Arvin Burnham and wife, Wareham Burnham and wife, J. C. Stockton and wife and Mrs. Susan Tapin. Arvin Burnham and wife were elected deacons. This class flourished but a short time. In 1867 it was reorganized by Dexter Cleary, agent for the American Home Missionary Society for southern Wisconsin. The following were among its members at this time: Arvin Burnham and wife, Wareham Burnham and wife, Franklin Hapgood and wife, Amelia L. Perry, Harriet K. Bush, William H. Davis, Mary A. Post, A. H. Bush and wife, Charles Devoe and wife and John C. Stockton. Arvin Burnham and J. C. Stockton were elected deacons. The class met for worship in the M. E. church until 1868, when they erected a church edifice on lot 8, block 24, in the village. Rev. A. H. Bush was the first pastor. He was succeeded after about a year by Rev. Simon Spyker, who is the present pastor. The present deacons are Arvin Burnham and E. E. Pratt.

A Methodist Episcopal class was organized in Sextonville at an early day, and in 1856 a church edifice was erected on block 31. Rev.

William R. Irish was one of the first preachers. Among those who have filled the pulpit for this denomination since are: Revs. William Harvey, G. W. Nuzum, A. D. Chase, C. Cook, William Hill, H. J. Walker, Thomas Mamiel, W. F. De Lap, D. W. Couch, W. R. Irish, W. J. McKay, Thomas Crouch, J. Trewathe and O. B. Kilbourn. Rev. J. D. Tull is the present pastor. Jonathan Knapp is the present class leader. There is a Sabbath-school in connection, of which Clinton Bush is superintendent.

SEXTONVILLE POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice at Sextonville was established in 1849, with E. M. Sexton as postmaster. It was then a special office and mail was received once a week from Highland, in Iowa county. The neighbors acted as mail carriers, oftentimes going on foot, carrying the mail sack on their backs. About 1853 a mail route was established from Madison, west through Sextonville, and a mail carrier was furnished by the government. A man named Ragers acted as mail carrier. In 1854 a route was established from Highland to Richland Center, by way of Sextonville. David McFarland was mail carrier. Soon afterward a route was established from Sauk City to Prairie du Chien, by way of this office, with James Banks as mail carrier. When the railroad was completed to Lone Rock, a route was established from that place through Sextonville to Richland Center and the other routes were discontinued. E. M. Sexton was succeeded as postmaster by Luther Irish, then in succession came Martin Britton, Robert Essyltine, William McCorkle, Edwin Devoe, William Irish, Mrs. Lamberson and Horace H. Barnard. Mr. Barnard was appointed in 1876, and is the present postmaster.

EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

The first school house in the town of Ithaca, as well as the village of Sextonville, was erected in 1851. The rafters and studding were of hewn tamarack poles. The first teacher in this house was Margaret Ingram. This house was in use until 1860, when a two story building was erected. The citizens had resolved to have a high school and the services of Prof. Henry W. Glasier, then teaching in Richland Center, were secured.

In the fall of 1860 the first high school in the county was taught at Sextonville. Under the able management of Prof. Glasier the school was a decided success, and became established upon firm footing. Succeeding Prof. Glasier as principal, the following have served: David Parsons, Timothy Moroney, J. G. Lamberson, N. E. Carver, E. E. Fowler, Mr. Farnham, G. E. Marshall and R. J. Porter. In 1882 the district erected a building, 40x60 feet in size, two stories in height; with a front entrance, 10x20 feet, and back entrance, 10x16 feet. The grounds occupying six lots on block 21. The cost of site and building was $3,500. In 1883 the corps of teachers was as follows: Prof. H. W. Glasier, principal; Della Welton, teacher of intermediate department and Anna Lamson in primary department. In 1883 a new move was taken, and special instruction is now given in languages and music, by Prof. Hemmersback. Much credit is due to the efficiency and energetic management of Prof. Glasier, in building up and making a success of the high school enterprise, and many of the best business men of Richland county received their education here.

FIRST EXHIBITION BY THE SEXTONVILLE HIGH SCHOOL.

At the close of the first term of the Sextonville High School, Nov. 15, 1860, the first school exhibition was given at the Methodist church in that place. The church was crowded, and it was a decided success. As nearly all who took part in the exercises have friends and relatives scattered over the county, many of whom attended the exhibition, a verbatim copy of the programme for the evening is here presented:

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

The following personal sketches represent the early pioneer and prominent citizens of the town of Ithaca :

Orrin L. Britton, the pioneer settler of Sextonville, was born in Westmoreland, N. H., in 1811. When he was twelve years old, his parents moved to Jefferson Co., N. Y. where they were pioneers. There the subject of this sketch spent his youth and was married in 1830 to Annie Pratt, who was born in Jefferson county in 1811. They continued to live in that county until 1844, then moved to Wisconsin, making the journey overland with a pair of horses and wagon. They were six weeks on the road, after which they arrived at the village of Jefferson, Jefferson county. He first rented land a few miles out of town. In the spring of 1845 he bought timber land in the Rock river woods, moved there and cleared a few acres, then sold and hired to E. M. Sexton to drive a peddler's wagon from near Fort Atkinson, which he continued until 1848, at which date he came to Richland county. His wife died in 1857, leaving eight children. He was married again two or three years later to Mary J. Rice. They have one child, and now reside a few miles from Black River Falls, in Jackson county.

James Southard, deceased, a pioneer of Richland county, was a native of Vermont, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits. He was married to Emily Pickett, also a native of Vermont. They removed to New York and settled in Chautauqua county, where he bought a farm. They lived there until 1850 and again started westward, coming then to Richland county, where he entered the northeast quarter of section 11, the southeast of the southwest of section 12, town 9, range 2 east, the northwest of the southwest of section 30, the north half of the southeast of section 25 and the northeast of southwest of section 25, town 9, range 1 east. He settled with his family on section 25 of the town of Buena Vista. He made the journey from New York with his family by canal to Buffalo, from thence by the lakes to Milwaukee, the remainder of the distance by team. He had built a log cabin into which they moved, and he immediately commenced to improve his land. In 1854 he met with a sudden and violent death. He was digging a well, assisted by his son Morone. They had reached the depth of twenty-five feet, when the banks caved in killing them both. He left three children—James W., Ransom E. and Florence A.; who is married and lives in Iowa.

Ransom E. Southard was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in April, 1838; came to Richland county with his parents and here grew to manhood's estate. In 1867 he settled on his present farm on the northeast quarter of section 11, where he lived with his mother in a small frame house which he had moved from Richland City. He was married April 18, 1868, to Harriet, daughter of Ira and Mary (Cook) West, early settlers of Richland county. She was born in Wayne Co., N. Y. Mr. Southard now owns 200 acres of land, 100 of which are under cultivation. He has erected a large frame house and barn, and is engaged in dairying and stock raising.

Hon. J. L. R. McCollum, son of Asa and Hadasap (Kingsbury) McCollum, was born in the town of Leicester, Worcester Co., Mass., Jan. 4, 1842. He was but six years old when his parents emigrated to Wisconsin, and nine years old when they came to Richland county. Soon after their arrival here he went to Wiotā, La Fayette county, to live with a brother-in-law, who was engaged in mercantile trade; in a short time he went with him to Elkader, Iowa. In both of these places he attended the public schools and assisted his brother-in-law in the store, and later attended Bryant & Stratton's Business College in Chicago, from which institution he graduated and received a diploma. This instruction was afterwards supplemented by a course of study in the Sextonville High School, of which he was among the first graduates. When twenty-one years old he engaged in the mercantile trade in company with A. H. Krouskop near the mill in the town of Ithaca. In 1865 he went to Lone Rock, following the same business, and dealing in live stock quite extensively. In 1877 he settled on his present farm, located in the Pine river valley, on section 12, town 9, range 1 east, now included in the town of Ithaca. This is one of the model farms of the county; is under a high state of cultivation, and has upon it excellent improvements. He is engaged in raising grain and stock and in dealing in live stock and railroad ties. He was married in 1864 to Eliza, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (McCloud) Krouskop. Three children have blessed this union—Charles L., Dock C. and Elmer E. Mr. McCollum is a prominent man among the best class of Richland county citizens, and was elected to the Assembly in 1875 and 1876, serving the people faithfully. He has the confidence and esteem of his fellow men, and would be a desirable acquisition to any community.

His father, Asa McCollom, was the first doctor at Sextonville. He was born in that part of the northeastern territory, now the town of Windsor, Morgan Co., Ohio. His father, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Scotland and brought to America by his parents when five years old, and settled in North Carolina, where he grew to manhood. He was a stirring patriot of that day and enlisted during the War for Independence in the American army. Was taken prisoner by the English forces and sent to Nova Scotia, where he remained for some time. After he was liberated he was married to Lucy Fordyce, a native of Massachusetts. Her parents were loyal to the Crown, and during the war had emigrated to Nova Scotia. After his marriage he returned to the States and immediately started for the northwestern territory. At that time there was considerable trouble with the Indians and they consequently stopped at Redstone, now Brownsville, east of the Alleghanies, three or four years or until the Indian difficulties were in a measure settled, and they were for a time more peaceable, when they moved on and settled in the northwestern territory as before stated. Asa, the father of the subject of our sketch, made his home with his parents until eleven years old, when his father proposed to give him his time summers, and he could attend school winters, to which he agreed. He remained in that section of the county until eighteen years old, then joined an older brother in Illinois, and engaged with him surveying and farming three years, when his brother built a tavern in Vandalia. He continued to live with him one year longer and then returned to Ohio and engaged with another brother in a cabinet manufactory. They carried on that business there three years, when he sold out and went to Massachusetts. He there located in Worcester county, and commenced to work as carpenter and joiner, and later as contractor and builder.

Here his health failed, and going to Boston, he entered an infirmary, and was there during the cholera epidemic. As soon as he was able, he was employed as an assistant, and here he commenced the study of medicine, not theoretically, under an M. D., but practically amid actual surroundings, which gave him an experience very valuable and superior to any school. Soon after his return to Leicester, a child in the neighborhood was stricken with that dreadful disease, cholera, and he was called upon to prescribe. This was his first case, and in it he was successful. He soon afterward erected a large building, opened an infirmary, and there continued the practice of medicine until 1848, when he came to Wisconsin and located at Fayette, in La Fayette county, practicing medicine there until 1851, when he came to Richland county and purchased land adjoining the village plat of Sextonville, and immediately commenced the practice of his chosen profession. In 1858 he purchased a drug store and has since followed that business, and at the present time is the oldest druggist in the State. He was married in 1828 to Hadassap Kingsbury, who was born in that part of Oxford, now known as Webster, Worcester Co., Mass., Sept. 10, 1802. They have six children—Lucy, now the wife of Spencer Ellsworth, now living in Lacon, Ill.; Lauraine, now the wife of Charles Schellenger; Van Buren, Curtis, Julien Lee Roy and Lewis Cass. As an M. D. he belongs to the reformed botanical school. Politically he adheres to democracy as it was, but has not voted for a President since Buchanan, and is not in sympathy with that organization as it at present exists.

Lucius Tracy (deceased) a pioneer of Richland county, was a native of the Green Mountain State, born in 1798, where he obtained a liberal education and became fitted for a teacher. He went to New York State and engaged in teaching. While there he made the acquaintance of Polly McDowl, who became his wife. She was born near Elmira, N. Y. They went to Pennsylvania and settled ten miles from Erie City, where he purchased a farm. They lived there until 1851, then started west to seek a home. Richland county was then attracting the attention of settlers and thither they came. He bought the northwest quarter of Buena Vista, built a frame house and commenced improving the land. His death occurred in 1854. He left a wife and eight children to mourn his loss. Mrs. Tracy died in 1878. Five of the children are now living—Arza C., Alexander D., John V., Jane and Flora A. During the short time that Mr. Tracy lived at Buena Vista he formed many acquaintances, and was respected by all who knew him. By his death Buena Vista lost one of her most honored citizens.

Amasa Grover, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in the town of Hume, Allegany Co., N. Y. When he had arrived at a seasonable age he was sent to the district school where he acquired a fair education. His father was a miller by trade but did not always have occupation at that business and at times engaged riving and shaving shingles, and Amasa when not in school assisted his father at such work. When he was thirteen years old his father rented a mill in Cold Creek village, and Amasa was placed in charge of it. He operated that mill one year when the family removed to Cold Creek village, when two years later his father died and the family removed to Erie county. The subject of this sketch was then sixteen years old and the oldest of six children, and the support of the family devolved to a great extent upon him. He engaged in farming three years and a half then returned to Allegany county with the family and engaged in teaming, drawing coal and iron from Rochester, a distance of sixty miles. He followed this business one summer then purchased a lot in Mixville and built a house for his mother. He then engaged with a blacksmith to learn the trade, and served two years, then bought the shop and carried on the business one year. About this time he joined a co-operative society, remained a member a few months and then withdrew having lost all his property. He then went to the town of Pike, which was in that part of Allegany, now Wyoming, county, opened a shop at Patch Corners where he worked at his trade two years, then went to Loon Lake, Steuben county, and run a shop two years, then opened a shop in Cohocton where he remained until 1851, when he determined to go west and try farming. He started in September of that year for Wisconsin, departing with his wife and three children from Danville on a canal boat, going to Buffalo and thence on a steamboat to Milwaukee where he hired a team for $25 to take his family and household goods to Richland City and they arrived there on the 17th of October. Then he rented a cabin, moved in, and with his rifle on his shoulder started on foot in search of land. He went up Pine river to Fancy creek, followed that stream up some distance and then went across the country to Roekbridge, and down the river to Sextonville without finding a place to suit him. At Sextonville he met James Goodrich, who informed him that he had a desirable piece of land to sell, and wanted him to go and see it. To this he assented and they started on foot. This was the Lawrence place located on section 17, the north half of the northeast quarter. There was a log cabin on the place and twelve acres improved. Mr. Grover was pleased with it and made the purchase, paying for it $300. He was, however, obliged to go Beloit for the deed, and they hired a team together for this purpose, returning they stopped at Janesville and bought a stock of provisions for the winter. He then moved to his new home with his family and arrived in November. He immediately started a blacksmith shop, the first in that part of the county north of Sextonville, and engaged in farming and work at his trade. The family lived in the log cabin five years when he erected a small frame house. The commodious house now occupied by the family was built in 1881. He also built a frame barn thirty feet wide and ninety feet long with a shed attached sixty feet in length. He has engaged in raising grain and stock. He also carried on the business of blacksmithing until 1880. He is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, a great reader and well posted on the current events of the day. He has filled offices of trust in the town, having been elected assessor for the town of Buena Vista in 1853 which at the time included territory extending from the Wisconsin river to Vernon county. He has since been elected to that office in the town of Ithaca. He is at present a member of the board of supervisors. He has been twice married, first in 1845 to Fidelia Tichenor. She was born in Genesee Co., N. Y., and died in 1848, leaving three children—Hiram, and twins, Fidelia and Amelia. His second wife to whom he was married in 1849 was Arvella Armstrong; she was born in the town of Cohocton, Steuben Co., N. Y. Twelve children blessed this union, eleven of whom are now living—Elizabeth, James, Madena, Alpha, Janett, Mary, Martin, George, Gilbert, Amasa and Evert.

George Hoke, son of John and Jemima (Antisdell) Hoke, was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., in August, 1840. When he was eleven years old, he came to Richland county with his parents, with whom he continued to reside until 1863. In November of that year he enlisted in company H, of the 37th Wisconsin, went into camp at Madison, and in the spring of 1864 went to Virginia, and joined the Army of the Potomac. He was severely wounded at the battle of Petersburg June 18, 1864, in consequence of which, he lay in the hospital eight months. He then joined his command and participated in the more important battles, before Richmond and Petersburg, until the close of the war. He was discharged with the regiment July 26, 1865, after which he returned home and engaged in farming. In 1866 Eliza Parker became his wife. She was born in the State of New York. He continued farming in Hoke Hollow until 1868, then removed to Sextonville and commenced to learn the cooper's trade. In 1871 he took a contract to carry the mails from Sextonville to Cazenovia, which he continued one year, then sold out and again engaged in farming. In 1877 he opened a hotel in Sextonville, which he named the Sextonville House. In 1878 he went to Lone Rock and kept hotel one year, then returned to Sextonville, and in 1881 purchased the Parker House property, where he is now engaged in hotel keeping. Mr. and Mrs. Hoke are the parents of two children—Alma L., who is a teacher in the public schools, and Nettie A.

S. I. Freeborn, horticulturist and apiarist, first came to Richland county in 1851, with his brother-in-law, James M. Cass, with whom he lived, being unmarried at that time. Soon after his arrival he engaged in the lumber business, in company with a man named Barber. They went up Pine river, cut the timber and rafted it down the stream. They had at one time 2,200 logs upon the river. He was married in 1859 to Elvira Howe, a native of Canada. Two years later he settled on his present farm, on the northeast quarter of section 20, town 10 north, range 2 east. In 1856 he bought twenty colonies of bees of Green Mayfield, which were the beginning of the apiary he now owns. At present he has 320 colonies. He sold, in 1882, 28,000 pounds of honey. In the nursery business, he is the pioneer of this place. He has met with decided success, and has made large sales, for a new enterprise, and the stock being as represented, gives satisfaction and an increasing demand may be expected. In 1862 he associated A. L. Hatch in this business. They have at present, a nursery stock of 150,000 trees, an orchard of 4,000 trees and a general stock in proportion. Mr. Freeborn is a native of New York, born in Chautauqua county, April 30, 1833. His father died when he was ten years old. Soon after, his mother was married to Thomas Pound, and the family removed to Crawford Co., Penn., where they lived until 1847. In that year they emigrated to the territory of Wisconsin and located in Dane county, making the trip in thirty days, traveling overland with teams. The subject of this sketch remained with his parents a short time, then went to Blue Mound, where his brother had charge of a stage station. He assisted him there in the care of the horses, two seasons. At the age of sixteen he went to Helena and engaged in ferrying on the Wisconsin river, two summers. During that time he ferried many persons across the river, who became settlers of Richland county. Mrs. Freeborn died in 1872, leaving three children—Arvilla, Elma and Ernest. In 1873 he was married to Hadassah Spyker. Two children have blessed this union—Simon A. and Lorena. Politically, Mr. Freeborn belongs to the republican party, having been identified with that organization since its formation.

James M. Cass, a pioneer of Richland county, was born in the town of Stanstead, province of Quebec, Canada, March 24, 1808. His grandfather was a native of New Hampshire, and had emigrated, in company with eight others, to Stanstead, then a wilderness. Here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the common schools. He was married Feb. 19, 1829, to Mary Taplin, who was born in Stanstead county, Feb. 12, 1809. He built a house near his old home, where he lived two years, then moved to the homestead and remained till 1835, when he came to the States, located in Ohio, near the Pennsylvania line and there formed a partnership with a mill owner and operated a flouring mill three years, then moved to Wellsburg, where he engaged in the same business. From there he went to Crawford county, and in company with a cousin built a mill, which they operated about three years, successfully. He then sold his interest. In 1847, accompanied by his family, he started with teams, overland, for the territory of Wisconsin. After thirty days travel they arrived in Sauk county, and settled in what is now the town of Spring Green. He was chairman of the first board of supervisors of that town, and gave the town its name. In 1851 he came to Richland county and purchased a claim on section 3, town 10 north, range 1 east, now in the town of Richland. He entered this land and then returned for his family. They started with two teams loaded with their household goods. There was no regularly traveled road in those days, and their progress was necessarily slow. They reached Beemer's Tavern in time for dinner, after which they again started, but had gone only a little distance when one load of their goods tipped over. They quickly re-loaded and started on, but before reaching their destination, the other load capsized causing another delay. They reached their cabin after dark, much fatigued by the day's journey. In one of the loads was some honey which, when the load tipped over, was spilled, rendering a number of household articles very sticky and sweet. The next day the wild bees scented the honey and came swarming around to gather it. I. S. Freeborn, who had come with the family, noticed them, and knowing something of the habits of bees, made up his mind that their abiding place was not far distant. He persuaded Mr. Cass to start with him in search of it. They soon found two swarms from which they gathered 150 pounds of honey. Not long after this, Mr. Freeborn started out in search of a shoat that had been missing for several days. He had not proceeded far, before he discovered a bear. He raised his gun and fired, but it was nearly dark and the bear was partly concealed in the brush. He hurried back for lights and assistance. On returning, they found the bear dead. A team was procured and the bear drawn to the house. As soon as Mr. Cass got fairly settled, he commenced building a saw-mill on Pine river. He constructed a stone and brush dam, procuring a fall of six and a half feet. The mill was furnished with an up and down saw. He operated it successfully four years, then sold to William Bowen, came to Ithaca and purchased his present farm, located on the northwest quarter of section 21. The place was first occupied by William Butler, an Indian, who had built a log house upon it. They lived in that a few months, when they replaced it by the frame house they now occupy. Mrs. Cass died in 1840, in Pennsylvania, leaving four children—Osman, Almina, George W. and Walter T. Mr. Cass was married again in June, 1840, to Esther A. Freeborn, who was born in Niagara Co., N. Y., March 28, 1821. Mr. Cass is an enterprising intelligent man, and has filled offices of trust in the town.

William McCorkle, an early settler in Richland county and a member of the oldest firm now in business in the county, was born in New York city, Jan. 1, 1819. As soon as old enough he attended the city schools. During his school days here an incident occurred which has always been remembered. The occasion being a visit to this city in 1825 by La Fayette. The school children, desiring to do him honor and express their appreciation of his attention, arranged themselves in line, while the hero reviewed the ranks in soldier style, except that occasionally he would place his hand upon the head of some of the children expressive of his affection for them and indicative of a well formed physiognomy. The subject of this sketch was among those thus selected, and honored by the great La Fayette. Soon after this his parents moved to Long Island and settled in the town of South Hampton, Suffolk county. He remained here with his parents until about fifteen years of age when he went to New York city where he was employed as a clerk in a dry goods store three years, then went to Port Jefferson, L. I., and clerked there three years. He then concluded to go on a whaling voyage and made that his calling until 1855. During this time he sailed around the world six times and was once wrecked on the coast of South America. The vessel went to pieces on the rocks and about one-third of the cargo lost. He spent about four months in South America, viewing the country and having a good time generally. He then took passage for New York on an English brig. Meanwhile his brother Andrew had come to Wisconsin and stopped for a short time in Sauk county and in the spring of 1851 had come to Richland county. William, accompanied by three other brothers, Samuel, Robert and Charles, concluded to give him a surprise in his new home, and started for Richland county. Andrew was at this time a single man, and boarded at the well known tavern called "The Ark." The brothers found on their arrival that he had gone out looking for land. They waited patiently several days. He was finally seen coming down the road and the brothers stood behind the door. As he came up William stepped out and greeted his brother, who was much surprised to see him. By the time he had partially recovered his surprise another brother stepped out, then another, and finally the fourth, "for God's sake," said Andrew, "is the whole family here?" William remained in Richland county for a short time, then removed to Long Island, and went on another voyage. He joined in marriage, Oct. 14, 1856, with Harriet F. Topping, who was born in the town of South Hampton, Suffolk Co., L. I., July 27, 1837. In the spring of 1857 he returned to Richland county, and located in Sextonville, purchased village property and engaged in mercantile trade. In 1857 the firm of McCorkle & Thomas was formed and is now the oldest firm doing business in the county. Mr. and Mrs. McCorkle have had two children—Eugene W., born July 15, 1857, and Lillian, born Nov. 23, 1861, and died Nov. 14, 1868. Andrew remained a resident of Sextonville several years. He was married to Rebecca, daughter of E. M. Sexton. He now resides in Webb City, Mo. Charles and Robert both settled in Richland county. Charles was a young unmarried man, intelligent and enterprising. He had filled offices of trust in the town and county; was at the time of his death, register of deeds. Robert lived here some years then removed to Lloyd where he is interested in a flouring mill. Samuel returned to Richland county some years later and engaged in mercantile trade at Lloyd.

George W. Cass, son of James M. and Mary (Taplin) Cass, was born in Ohio, Feb. 19, 1836, and was fifteen years old when his parents settled in Richland county. He was married in 1859 to Margaret J. Beaver, daughter of Christian and Catharine Beaver, and a native of Mifflin Co., Penn. He then went to Spring Green and purchased a farm, lived there one year, after which he returned to this county, and settled in the valley of Little Willow, on section 7, land that he had bought in 1856. It was then in its natural state, mostly covered with brush. He now has 120 acres of the 160 under cultivation; has erected good frame buildings and has altogether a pleasant home. Mr. and Mrs. Cass are the parents of six children—Mary, Charles, Jennie, Frank, Nellie and Lucy. Jennie died March 7, 1883, of diphtheria.

Joseph Sippy, M. D. (deceased), one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born near Harper's Ferry, Va., in March, 1791. His father was a native of France and came to America with La Fayette during the War for Independence. He left home without the consent of his parents, and was not mustered into service until his arrival in America. After the declaration of peace he settled in Virginia and was there married to Lucretia Johnson, who was born in Fredericksburg, Va. When the subject of this sketch was seven years old his parents moved to Pennsylvania and settled in Beaver county, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the subscription schools. He was a stirring patriot and volunteered in the War of 1812, served a short time when he was honorably discharged, and soon after was married to Martha Cogswell. Her mother was a sister to Gen. Gates, of Revolutionary fame, and was born in March, 1796. In the year 1813 they emigrated to Ohio, making the trip with one horse, without a wagon, packing upon the back of the horse their household goods, including bedding and camp kettles.

Such a method of transportation at this day would indeed seem slow and irksome, and shows that these persons must have been of pluck and energy. They made their way to the Cuyahoga river in Cuyahoga county and remained a few months. It was at that time an unhealthy country and consequently he moved and settled in the town of Granger, Medina county, where they were early settlers. They lived there a few years and then moved to the town of Hinkley, in the same county where he commenced the practice of medicine, and also having purchased eighty acres of land carried on a farm. In 1836 he sold out and again started west and this time settled in Fulton Co., Ind., where they were again pioneers. A history of Medina county, published subsequently, makes particular mention of this pioneer, as he was a prominent representative man. In Indiana he made his chosen profession a business and had a lucrative practice. This country also proved to be somewhat unhealthy and in 1852 he concluded to again change location, and accordingly made a visit to Richland county, coming from Indiana on horseback. Thinking this would be a desirable, healthy country, he returned to Indiana, and in September of that year, returned with his family and settled on section 31. He was not well pleased with this place but bought it on account of the improvements. As soon as he was comfortably settled he started, accompanied by his son, Thomas, to explore the valley of Willow creek. There was no road and they went prepared to cut their way through. At night they camped under the protection of a shelving rock on section 9. The road now runs under this same rock. Isaac Welton had been following their trail and overtook them at this place, and the next morning, leaving the team, they started on foot. Mr. Sippy at this time selected three forties of land—the south half of the west quarter of section 4, town 90, range 2 east, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 4; he afterward bought additional land adjoining land near by until his place was increased to 600 acres. He lived on section 31 two years, then removed to section 4, and commenced improvements on his land. He laid out the village of Neptune, erected a saw mill and made this his home until the time of his death which occurred in September, 1870. His wife died in July, 1880. He had quite an extensive practice in the county, and was well and favorably known. Seven of his children are now living—Minerva, who married Menzies Manley (deceased), she now lives in Sanborn, Iowa. Hannah, widow of H. L. Welton now living in Kansas. Martha, wife of John Stockton now living in Richland Center. Lydia, wife of Daniel Dodge, now living in Kansas. Precilla, wife of Abel Ragles now in this town. Rebecca, wife of Valentine Stoddard now living in the town of Willow, and Thomas. The latter is the only son and now occupies a portion of the original homestead, where he has a farm of upwards of 300 acres and is extensively engaged in dairy and stock farming. He was born in the town of Hinkley, Medina Co., Ohio, April 3, 1835. The year following his father removed to Indiana, where his younger days were spent in school, on the farm and in his father's store. He came to Richland county with his parents and made his home with them until 1857, when he was married to Laura E. Welton. Her parents were natives of York State, but she was brought up in the State of Ohio. He then settled on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 4, where he lived until 1870, then moved to the southwest quarter of the same section. He has erected a good frame house, a frame barn with stone basement and now has a good farm well improved. He has been a member of the board and is at present town treasurer, and has been justice of the peace—the latter office he has held almost continually for eighteen years, and during all this time it is remarkable that none of his decisions have ever been reversed, or a change of venue taken or asked, which fact in itself speaks volumes for the good judgment and honesty of this settler. Mr. and Mrs. Sippy are the parents of two children—Asher Francello and Bertram W; a daughter named Cora died when three years old. These people were true pioneers and endured the hardships and inconveniences of such a life. Remote from mill and market, various methods were devised to meet the necessities of life. In the absence of a mill Dr. Sippy's large mortar, with a wheel for a pestle, did the work of grinding for the neighborhood. Thus the people of that day met every difficulty, overcame every obstacle, and in consequence a goodly land with every convenience may here be found, where within comparatively a short time a wilderness prevailed.

Elijah Nourse, (deceased) a pioneer of Richland county, was a native of New Hampshire, born in Bedford, Hillsborough county of that State, in 1797, where he was brought up on a farm. His wife was Mehitable Towns, who was born in Hillsborough county Nov. 24, 1798. Soon after marriage they emigrated to Orange Co., Vt., and settled in the town of Topsham, and remained until 1836, then moved to Washington county of the same State, and located in Moretown where he purchased a farm, which he improved and lived upon until 1839. He then sold out and started for the territory of Wisconsin, traveling with teams to Buffalo, put teams and wagons on board steamboat for Detroit, where they embarked and completed the journey to Kenosha, (then Southport). Here their eldest son, William, was taken sick and died. They lived there one year only and then went to Ohio making the trip overland; remained one year and returned to Wisconsin, passing through Chicago on the way, which was then a mere hamlet. He located in Rock county, where he purchased a tract of land, now in the city limits of Janesville, on Rock river, upon which was a slight improvement, including a log cabin, the first ever built on Rock river in that county. The location proved unhealthy, and four of their children sickened and died. In 1852 he sold his farm and came to Richland county; purchased the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 6, town 9 north, range 2 east, now included in the town of Ithaca, there improved a farm and erected a good frame house. Mr. Nourse was an industrious man, a good farmer, and in comfortable circumstances at the time of his death which occurred April 3, 1877. His wife died Feb. 23, 1877. Their son Franklin, the only one of their children now living occupies the homestead, and since his father's death has carried on the farm. He has built a large frame barn with a stone basement, and the place is now one of the best improved in the county. Franklin Nourse was born in Topsham, Orange Co., Vt., March 12, 1830, and was never separated from his parents for any length of time. In 1856 he visited his native town and there, February 25th, was married to Hannah Fellows, also a native of Topsham. They have five children—Ella, Dora, Lilla, Frank and Lulu.

Menzies Phelps Manley, one of the first settlers on Little Willow creek, is a native of Connecticut, born in the township of Tolland, Hartford county, March 6, 1829. When six years of age his parents emigrated to Ohio and located in Medina county, township of Brunswick, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving his education in the pioneer schools which at that time were very crude, compared with our present system of common schools. The school house itself being a rude log structure, with a fire place in one end. The benches consisted of split logs, flat side up, with four legs. When twelve years old, his parents removed to Indiana and located in the village of Akron, Fulton county. Here he remained with his parents for three years, when they removed from the village of Akron, on to a farm three miles east. On this farm he remained for three years assisting his father in agricultural pursuits. During these three years, at times the whole family of eight were stricken down with ague. Phelps being the main stay of the family, was obliged to work, when weak nature said "go to bed." Plowing day after day, having no support save the plow handles. In the month of April, after he was eighteen years of age he hired out to Messrs. Kent & Elam, who were proprietors of a brick yard, which was located a mile and a half south of Rochester, the county seat of Fulton county. Here he worked until the 1st of October, off-bearing brick from the moulder. His regular days work being 5,000 brick. During the next winter, 1847-8, he was engaged in cutting cord wood for John Elam at twenty-five cents per cord. The next summer he attended masons on the court house at Rochester. In the fall of 1848, in company with a young man by name of John Shamp, he went to Niles, Mich. Not finding any work at that place, they went to New Buffalo, their only guide being the survey of the Michigan Central railroad. Their effect on this journey consisted of an extra shirt done up in a bandanna handkerchief, and $1.50 in money apiece. Still they were proud to say they sponged not a meal of victuals or a night's lodging from any one. At New Buffalo they worked in a steam-mill until the 1st of June, when they returned to a point eight miles from New Buffalo, on the Michigan Central railroad. Here they worked for the railroad company until the following June, cutting cord wood, making ties and clearing track for the grade. In June, 1849, he returned to La Porte Co., Ind., and hired out to a farmer by the name of Charles W. Henry, who lived on Stillwell prairie. Here he worked till the fall of 1852, when he took his span of horses and went to Fulton county to see his parents, who were still living near Akron. While at home he purchased forty acres of land, paying the sum of $1.25 per acre. This piece of land he sold after locating in Richland county. In September, 1852, he started for Richland Co., Wis., taking with his team a load of goods for Dr. Sippy, who emigrated to Richland county at that time. They were a month on the road and brought forty head of cattle with them. Soon after his arrival he traded his team to I. P. Welton for eighty acres of land—the south half of the southwest quarter of section 32, town 10, range 2 east. This team consisted of two beautiful dapple grays, and were highly prized by Mr. Manley. Mr. Welton traded them to an Indian by the name of William Butler, who kept them for twenty years. They lived to a great age and till perfectly white. They were at one time owned by Berney M. Jarvis, of Cazenovia. Mr. Manley did not settle on this land, but sold it to his father, who settled on it in the fall of 1853. In October, 1852, Mr. Manley engaged with James Cap in his saw-mill as sawyer. Soon after going to work he injured his foot on the saw and was not able to resume until March following. He worked in the mill for Mr. Cap until the spring of 1854, when he rented the mill and operated it for one year. In June, 1853, Mr. Manley, in company with Daniel, Benjamin and Addison Rance, West Southard and a man named Page, started out to look for land. Leaving Dr. Sippy's place, they followed up Little Willow creek to the head, thence down the Alwood hollow, and camped for the night on the spot where Mr. McCorkle's flouring mills now stand. During the afternoon West Southard got lost. His companions remained up till late in the night, firing guns at intervals and keeping up a bright fire to attract his attention; but finally becoming discouraged with their efforts, they rolled up in their blankets and went to sleep. The next morning the lost one put in his appearance. He had chanced to find his way to Benjamin Smith's cabin, as had many other wanderers before him. The old pioneer gladly gave him the much needed advice and sent him on his way rejoicing. Manley did not select land on this trip, but was favorably impressed with Little Willow valley. The bottom lands of Little Willow at that time were wet and swampy, but he concluded that by a little drainage they could be made tillable, and in June, 1854, he entered the south half of the northwest quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 6, town 10, range 2 east. In 1856 he sold the last named forties to his two brothers, Asa and Joseph Manley, who divided the two forties lengthwise the line, retaining the same to the present time. In the fall of 1854 he built a rude lumber shanty and lived in that till the following February, when he moved into the house in which he now resides. In 1869 Mr. Manley bought forty acres of land (the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter—remainder of description the same as before mentioned). Of this 120 acres, ninety-five are improved—the balance retained for wood and other purposes. Mr. Manley was married to Harriet (Hamilton) Tompson on March 26, 1854. They have seven children—George S., J. Willard, Flora L., Cora A., Dora J., David F. and Albert E. The oldest child, George S. is married and living on a farm at the mouth of Little Willow. For the greater part of the last five years Mrs. Manley has been confined to her bed with nervous prostration. Six of their children are now at home to take care of and assist their mother in her illness.

Mathias M. Smith, a pioneer of Richland county, was born in Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., Feb. 23, 1827, where his early life was spent in school and on the farm. When he was nineteen years old, his father sold the farm upon which he had lived for fifty-three years, and removed to Bedford, Cuyahoga Co., Ohio, where the subject of this sketch remained until he was twenty-three years of age. He then started out to see something of the world. He visited the cities of Cincinnati and St. Louis, then went to Illinois, and engaged in farming in Greene and Jersey counties. From there, he went to Hancock county, in the same State, where he was employed by a Massachusetts firm to sell clocks in the States of Illinois and Iowa, in which business he continued about a year. He then returned to Bedford, Ohio, and Dec. 24, 1852 was married to Elizabeth Thomas. She was born in Hamilton, Madison Co., N. Y., Feb. 20, 1831. In the spring of 1853, they started for Wisconsin. They came from Cleveland to Milwaukee on the lakes; from thence by team to Sextonville. Here they stopped for a time with Mrs. Smith's father, Anthony Thomas, and also with her brother, Willard H. Thomas, who lived on section 8, in town 10. He built a temporary frame building, 14x18 feet in size, in which the family lived until 1861, when he erected a good frame house which they still occupy. Mr. Smith, in company with James B. Smith, his brother, who came from Ohio in 1858, owns 265 acres of land, of which 120 acres are improved. They have engaged in raising grain and stock, and of late years have kept a dairy. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have five children—Frederick A., James W., Kate B., Frank M. and Annie E.

William Lunenschloss, the pioneer German settler of the town of Ithaca, was born in the city of Cologne, (which then belonged to the French Empire) Nov. 23, 1816. He obtained a good education in the schools of his native city, attending three terms at a high school. He then engaged in the grain trade. At the age of twenty he entered the army and served one and a half years, after which he resumed his former occupation. In 1852 he took passage in the steamship "City of Glasgow," bound for America, landed in Philadelphia and went directly to Milwaukee, where he remained two months. From there he went to Dodge county and engaged in buying grain and other farm produce until June, 1854; then, accompanied by his family, started with a pair of horses for Richland county. He bought 120 acres of land on section 16. The family moved into a vacant log cabin on section 22 and lived there three months. In the meantime he erected a small frame house on the northeast of the southeast of section 16. He commenced farming by raising grain and stock. In 1867 he engaged in the culture of hops, and is the only man in the town who has continued that industry. He, however, has made it a paying business. He has erected a neat cottage house, enclosed the yard and beautified it by the planting of ornamental trees and shrubs. He has two stables, one log and the other frame, a hop house and granary. The latter is 20x50 feet. In 1875 he engaged in the hop trade, buying in Wisconsin and selling abroad. In 1878 he removed to Richland Center and bought grain until 1882, when he returned to his farm. He was married in 1852 to Eliza Thernes, also a native of the city of Cologne. They have four children—Frank, Charles B., Eliza and William.

John A. Shontz was one of the pioneers of Ithaca, having come here in 1854, accompanied by his brother, Loren Shontz. They purchased land on section 36, town 10, range 2 east, now included in the town of Ithaca. They erected a small frame house and commenced improving the land. They were both unmarried at that time, and a sister kept house for them. In 1856, John A. returned to his home in Pennsylvania and was there married September 23, to Rebecca McFadden, who was born in Crawford Co., Penn., Nov. 2, 1832. He then came back to Wisconsin with his bride. Loren then returned to his eastern home, made a short visit, then went to Missouri, where he was taken sick and died. Mrs. Shontz was very homesick, so, in 1857, they rented the farm and returned to Pennsylvania, where Mr. Shontz engaged in the lumber business until 1862. In that year they came back to his farm in Richland county, where they have since resided. He has built an addition to the house, and a frame barn with a stone basement. His farm now contains 200 acres, all fenced and improved. It is located in Bear Valley. Mr. Shontz was born in Crawford Co., Penn., Jan. 25, 1828, where he was brought up on a farm. He obtained his education in the common schools. At the age of eighteen, he engaged in the lumber business in company with his brother, buying standing timber and having it manufactured into lumber and shingles. He was thus employed until the date of his coming to Ithaca. Mr. and Mrs. Shontz have four children—Lola, Kate, Clara L., Florence H. and George M. Mr. Shontz is postmaster of the Bear Valley postoffice.

William Misslich, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in the city of Cologne, Rhine province, Prussia, in 1795. Here he attended school in his younger days, and later, devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. He was married in 1823 to Agnes Heinen, who was born in Rhine province in 1793. In 1850 they came to America and settled first in Waukesha Co., Wis., where he bought forty acres of land. He improved this land and lived upon it until 1855. In that year he came to Richland county and settled upon section 14, town 10, range 2 east, now known as the town of Ithaca, where he lived until the time of his death in 1868. Mrs. Misslich died in 1878. His son Albert was born in Rhine province, Prussia, in 1831, came with his parents to America and remained with them until 1851. He then went to California, making the trip overland, with an ox team, and was five months and twenty-two days on the road. He returned in 1855 by water, crossing the isthmus at Nicaragua, joined his parents and came with them to Richland county. He entered land on sections 13 and 14, where he resided about fourteen years, then moved to his present location on section 26. In 1855 he was married to Mary Weitzel, a native of Rhine province. They have nine children. Mr. Misslich has taken a lively interest in town and county affairs. He is the present chairman of the town board of supervisors, which office he has held six years. Their son, Paul, was born in Rhine province, Oct. 14, 1834. He obtained a good education in the common schools of his native country and was seventeen years old when he came with his parents to America. He lived with them until his marriage, Nov.

27, 1858, to Elizabeth Bodendine, also a native of Rhine province. They are the parents of six children—William, Agnes, Albert, Margaret, Mary and Anna. Mr. Misslich has always been engaged in agricultural pursuits. His farm is located on section 14. He has been postmaster of the Keyesville postoffice ever since its establishment in 1872. He is also notary public, having been appointed by Gov. Smith, in April, 1880.

Isaac O. Smith was an early settler in the town of Buena Vista, having come there in 1855. He purchased 215 acres of land on section 10, town 9, range 2 east, upon which he erected a small frame house and made other improvements. He resided there until 1867, when he bought the "Lawrence" farm, located on the northwest quarter of section 2, town of Ithaca. He has built a large frame barn and frame house, and is engaged in raising grain and stock, also keeps a large dairy. Mr. Smith was born in Brook Haven, Suffolk Co., L. I., in November, 1823, where he spent his childhood, helping upon the farm and going to school. At the age of fourteen he went to sea, and sailed before the mast until he was twenty-one years old. He then became master of a vessel and followed the sea until 1855, then being tired of a seafaring life, concluded to become a farmer, and came to Richland county. His surroundings prove his success in that business. He has been twice married, first in November 1857 to Jane E. Lawrence, a native of New York. She was born in August, 1838, and died in Buena Vista, Sept. 4, 1858, leaving one son—Charles M. He was again married, June 19, 1867, to Flora A., daughter of Lucius and Polly McDowl Tracy. She was born March 22, 1841, in Erie Co., Penn.

J. G. Lamberson, dealer in real estate and live stock, came to Richland county with his parents when a boy. Here his younger days were spent in acquiring an education. He enlisted in December, 1863, in the 6th Wisconsin Battery, went south and served in Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, until the close of the war. He was honorably discharged at Madison, in July, 1865. He returned to Sextonville, entered the high school and graduated, after which he engaged in teaching in Sylvan, afterwards in Richland City and Sextonville. In 1868 he engaged in mercantile trade in the latter place. He carried a general stock and did a thriving business, which he continued until 1878. During the time he also dealt in live stock, which business he still continues. He was born in Elkhorn, Walworth county, territory of Wisconsin, Aug. 27, 1846, and came from there to Richland county. He was married in December, 1872, to Jennie Ward, a native of DeKalb Co., Ill. They have four children—Mabel, Albert, and Lelia Maud and Laura Blanche, twins. Mr. Lamberson is what may be called a self-made man. Starting in life with a good mind and sound body as capital, he has, by perseverance and industry, accumulated a considerable property, now owning 1,000 acres of land in the county, mostly worked by tenants, and is among the best class of business men. He early appreciated the advantage to be derived from securing a good education, and bent his energy to obtain the same, which, having secured, he put into practical use, and his indomitable energy, combined with good judgment, have made him a successful man in all his undertakings. Courteous and affable in his manner, he is deservedly popular among his fellow-men.

William Simpson, an early settler of Ithaca, was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1827. When he was four years old, his parents removed to Carroll Co., Ind., where they were early settlers. His father purchased timber land which William assisted in clearing. He resided with his parents until 1848. In October of that year, he was married to Rachel Morrison. She was born Aug. 15, 1829, in Pennsylvania. They removed to Will Co., Ill., where he rented a farm and lived until 1856, then taking his family and his household goods loaded upon a wagon, started overland for Wisconsin. After traveling nine days they reached their destination in the town of Buena Vista, now the town of Ithaca. His father several years before had laid out three patents, on one of which William moved. It comprised eighty acres of land on section 30, and his brother had built a small frame house for him, into which the family moved. Since that time he has built a commodious frame house and barn. His farm, which is well watered by Willow creek, is well improved and enclosed. Mrs. Simpson died May 16, 1858, leaving three children—Mary E., Sarah R. and Robert A. March 31, 1859, Mr. Simpson was again married to Lucinda McNamar, who was born in Lewis Co., Va., March 31, 1840. Eight children have blessed this union—William R., Joshua D., Marshall L., Elijah E., Frederick N., Harry E., Edward G. and George H. The second Mrs. Simpson died Jan. 6, 1881.

Abel Ragles is a native of Pennsylvania, born in what was formerly Mercer, but now Lawrence county, Jan. 23, 1824. When he was five years old his parents moved to what was then Medina, now Summit Co., Ohio. At the age of thirteen he went with a neighbor to Indiana to assist in driving cattle. He remained with this man in Fulton county one year, then engaged to work for his uncle, Dr. Sippy, with whom he lived until twenty-one years old. He was then married to Priscilla, daughter of Joseph and Martha (Cogswell) Sippy. His father-in-law gave him a tract of land in Wabash county, which he improved and lived upon until 1854. In May of that year he sold his farm and came to Wisconsin in search of a location. On the 10th of June he entered a tract of land on section 4, town 10, range 2 east, then returned to Indiana, gathered his crops and remained until fall, when he removed his family to their new home. They came overland with teams, bringing their household goods and provisions and camping on the way. They were sixteen days on the road. They first rented a small shanty in which they lived a few days, in the meantime, with the assistance of the neighbors, he erected a rude log cabin into which they moved. During the following winter their supply of provision ran very low and it was necessary to do something to "keep the wolf from the door," so Mr. Ragles and his neighbor, Henry Short, whose stock of provisions was in about the same condition, started, each taking a load of lumber, to go to Sextonville, where they tried in vain to sell or trade their lumber for provisions. Mr. Ragles, however, bought two bushels of corn and a bushel of beans, and Mr. Short two bushels of corn. They returned, arriving at Mr. Ragles' about midnight tired and hungry, having eaten nothing since morning. The family had gone to bed hungry, but they got up and Mrs. Ragles hastily cooked some of the beans which they ate with a relish. In June, 1857, his corn crop was cut off by the frost and the prospect was gloomy indeed. About that time there became a demand for ginseng and he and his family went to work with a will to gather it. At this employment they soon earned enough to put them out of the reach of want for the time being. In fact it proved a turning point in their fortunes, from which they prospered and were soon able to build a small frame house, and later, a frame barn, which was destroyed by fire a few years afterwards together with all its contents, hay, grain and some stock. He has built another barn and a large frame upright part to his house. He is the owner of 202 acres, eighty of which are well improved, and is engaged in raising grain and stock, also keeps a dairy. Mr. and Mrs. Ragles have eight children. The eldest three, Martha, Thomas J. and Annie J. were born in Indiana; Hubert S., Clarence J., Robert B., Emma and William are natives of Richland county.

Samuel Jones came to Wisconsin in 1855 but did not immediately locate in this county. He was born in Greene Co., N. Y., July 13, 1820, where he was reared upon a farm, and obtained his education in the common schools. He was married Aug. 24, 1845, to Mary A. Vantassel, also a native of Greene county, born Dec. 10, 1826. He purchased a farm in his native county, town of Cairo, where he lived until he came to Wisconsin. He then sold his farm, and, accompanied by his family, made the journey by rail, to Madison, where he hired a team to take them to Dover, Iowa county. He engaged to work upon a railroad bridge which was then being built across the Wisconsin river, near Spring Green. He was thus employed until the fall of 1856, when he came to Richland county. He purchased 120 acres of unimproved land on sections 5 and 6, town of Ithaca; erected a log house upon section 6 and immediately began improving his farm. A few years later he built a good frame house. In 1868 he bought his present farm, located on the south half of section 6. To this place he moved his frame house and built a frame barn. He has engaged in raising grain and stock, and, like many others, at one time tried hops. He has been successful in his undertakings and is now the owner of one of the best farms on the Little Willow. His wife died June 11, 1882, leaving five children—John W., George W., Samuel Eugene, M. Eva and Paul H. Their eldest child died at the age of three years, and another in infancy. Mr. Jones has since been married to Elizabeth Schoonover, widow of Elias Tanner. She is a native of Ohio.

Horace L. Burnham came to Richland county in 1856. He purchased the northeast of the southeast quarter of section 36, town 10, range 1 east; also eighty acres adjoining in Sank county. On the first was a log cabin with a sod roof, into which he moved, and soon after replaced the sod roof by one of shingles. He has since erected a neat cottage house and frame barn. He has resided here since that time, with the exception of the four years that he served as county treasurer, which he spent in Richland Center. He is a native of the Green Mountain State, born in Addison county, July 12, 1828. He obtained his early education in the district school, and afterwards attended the academy at Bakersfield, Vt., one term, also one term at Knox College in Galesburg, Ill. After completing his education he engaged in teaching school winters, and farming the remainder of the year. In 1850, Susan C. Lowell became his wife. She was born in Orange Co., Vt., Feb. 13, 1830. They resided in Addison county until 1857. Mr. Burnham has been prominent in administrative affairs of both town and county, having been superintendent of schools of the town of Ithaca, a member of the town board, town treasurer ten years, and county treasurer four years. Mr. and Mrs. Burnham have four children—Alice, Frank W., John W. and Herbert F.

Benjamin Winterburn, an extensive farmer in the town of Ithaca, came here in 1857 and purchased the northwest quarter of section 11, town 9, range 2 east, upon which was a log cabin and some small improvement. He engaged in raising grain a few years, but of late, has been engaged in the dairy business. He is the owner of 440 acres of land, 260 of which are under cultivation; and has good frame buildings, including a commodious house, barn, granary and other farm buildings. Mr. Winterburn is a native of England, born near London, March 1, 1830. When he was five years old, his parents emigrated to America and settled in Pittsburg, Penn. At the age of ten years, he left home and went into the country to live upon a farm, where he grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the district schools. He was married Oct. 26, 1856, to Mary J. Phillips, who was a native of Alleghany Co., Penn., born Sept. 18, 1836. They remained in Pennsylvania until they came to Richland county in 1857. Mrs. Winterburn died Nov. 26, 1872, leaving six children—John H., Elizabeth J., Anna B., Benjamin F., Jennie and Ralph. In 1875 Mr. Winterburn was again married to Cynthia J. McKittrick, who was born in Oswego, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1838.

Hon. J. M. Thomas came to Richland county in 1857. He first lived in the town of Buena Vista, for three years, when he purchased eighty acres of his present farm, located on section 1, town 9, range 2 east, included in the town of Ithaca. There was a little improvement on this land at the time, consisting of a log cabin and stable, with thirty acres under cultivation. He has improved this place and added to it until his present farm contains 335 acres. The buildings are good substantial structures, and the grounds are made attractive and pleasant by shade and ornamental trees. This farm is situated in the justly celebrated Bear creek valley, which has been settled to a great extent by men, who, like himself, were reared in the dairy districts of New York State; came to this county and following the same business, have been successful, and made this valley the richest part of the county. This section of country seems admirably adapted to this industry, and those engaged in it, find it a profitable investment, and no one branch of trade tends more to develop the resources of the county. Mr. Thomas was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., Aug. 23, 1829, and spent his younger days at school and on the farm. As soon as he had obtained sufficient education, he commenced teaching, and followed that occupation during the winter season and farming in the summer. In 1855 he came to Wisconsin, traveled through the eastern and southern part of the State, and made his first visit to Richland county, after which he returned to his native county and remained until 1857, when, as before stated, he came to this county. He has been twice married, first in March, 1858, to Ellen J. Eaton, who bore him two children—Jennie and Libbie. Jennie was born April 12, 1860, and died Dec. 10, 1870. Mrs. Thomas was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., April 28, 1838, and died June 7, 1867. His second wife was Adelia E. Reynolds, widow of Cornelius Young, who was also born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., June 28, 1827. Mr. Thomas has been one of the prominent representative men of the county, has been chairman of the board a number of terms, and was chosen in 1869 to represent his district in the Assembly, was elected again in 1878 and re-elected in 1879, serving with honor to himself and satisfaction to his constituency. His father, Henry Thomas, was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1795, and was there joined in marriage, in 1827, to Jane Mott, who was a native of the same county, born in 1794. Meanwhile he moved to Herkimer county and settled on a farm, where his wife died in the fall of 1860, leaving two children—Joseph M. and Maria. The latter was born Nov. 29, 1833, married C. E. Brace, settled in Bear Valley and died in 1870. His second wife, to whom he was married in 1861, was Dorcus Searing. She was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1809. They remained in Herkimer county until 1867, then came to Richland county and make their home with J. M. Thomas. They are both members of the Society of Friends, and at an advanced age, are in good spirits and in the enjoyment of good health. The subject of this sketch is a republican politically.

Anthony Dederich was the first German settler in that part of Bear Creek valley lying in the town of Ithaca. He came here in July, 1862, and purchased two lots in the village of Petersburg. Upon one of these lots was a frame shanty, in which the family lived two months while a frame house was being built. He opened a wagon shop and worked at his trade. Two or three years later he established a blacksmith business, and about the same time opened a store with a general stock of goods adapted to the country trade. He also enlarged his residence and has, for some years, entertained travelers. He is also quite an extensive land holder, owning upwards of 400 acres and is engaged in farming. Mr. Dederich is a native of Prussia, born Sept. 17, 1822, in the village of Florsheim, Rhine province. He attended school steadily from the age of six to sixteen. He then commenced to learn the wagon maker's trade of his father. At the age of twenty-one he joined the army and served three years in the engineer corps, building pontoon bridges, after which he resumed work at his trade until 1848, when he was again called upon to serve his country, but at the end of a month was discharged. In 1849 he came to America, landed in New York September 14, and came directly west, stopping at Milwaukee where he worked one year at his trade, then went to Madison and worked as journeyman six months. He then opened a shop and established business for himself, continued two and a half years, then went to Cross Plains and there opened a shop, and remained until he came to Petersburg. His wife was formerly Mary Schafer, a native of Rhine province, Prussia. They were married in 1851, and are the parents of ten children—Margaret, Gertrude, Peter, Adolph, Anthony, Dennis, Joseph, Francis, Gerhard and Remizius. Dennis has operated a shoe shop since 1853 with good success.

Joseph C. McCorkle settled in Richland county in 1862. He purchased a farm on section 6, town 9, range 2 east. In 1866 he bought timber land on section 12, of town 9, range 1 east, included in the town of Ithaca, erected a small frame house and immediately commenced clearing his present farm. He is now the owner of 300 acres, 150 of which are in a good state of cultivation. This is one of the choice farms of the county. He has erected a frame house 17x32 feet, and two stories in height. Mr. McCorkle is a native of the State of New York, born in the town of South Hampton, Suffolk Co., L. I., Sept. 7, 1834, where his younger days were spent. When eighteen years old he started on a whaling voyage. He made two voyages and was absent from home thirty-three months each trip. He was married May 14, 1862, to Letitia, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (McCloud) Krouskop. Five children have been born to them—Carrie Belle, William Stanley, Jacob Clark, Samuel Clyde and George Krouskop.

Hon. William Dixon was an early settler in the town of Ithaca and a native of England, born in Beverly, Yorkshire, Oct. 27, 1808. In 1817 his parents emigrated to America and landed at Philadelphia July 11th of that year, where they remained two years. In that city the subject of this sketch attended school a short time, and then engaged as errand boy in a map publishing house. From there he went with the family to Trenton, N. J. His father was a weaver by trade, and there William commenced to learn the business of his father. In 1827 they again moved, going to New Hartford, Oneida Co., N. Y., where he engaged to dress yarn in a cotton factory, remaining there until 1836, when he went to Lockport, where he set up 1,000 spindles in a cotton factory and afterwards took charge of a weaving room until 1840, when he worked on the Erie canal a few months, taking charge of a gang of hands; thence he went to Rochester and took charge of a weaving room in a factory there. Meanwhile he had purchased a farm in the town of Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., upon which he settled in 1841, making that his home until 1854, when he started for Wisconsin, coming by railroad and boat as far as Stoughton, thence by stage to Signet postoffice, in the town of Buena Vista. He rented a farm in that town and remained there until the spring of 1855, then moved to land he had purchased on section 1, town 9, range 2 east, now included in the town of Ithaca. He erected a small frame house and immediately commenced improving the land. This farm is pleasantly located in Bear Valley, where he now has seventy acres well improved, has built a large addition to his frame house, erected a good barn and other convenient buildings. Mr. Dixon has been a man of fine executive ability, and as a consequence has been prominently identified with the history of this county. The people, having confidence in his ability and integrity, have kept him almost continually in office. In 1856 he was elected justice of the peace, an office he yet holds. In 1858 he was elected chairman of the town board, and has been chosen for that position a number of times since. He was elected to the Assembly in 1858 and again in 1872. He was appointed notary public by Gov. Randall in 1859, and has held the position continually since. Thus it may be seen he has made an acceptable public man, and being in every way qualified for these positions, he has given general satisfaction. He was married in 1830 to Philea, daughter of Benjamin Carswell, who was born in the town of Argyle, Washington Co., N. Y., Jan. 24, 1810. Two children blessed this union—Benjamin and Adelina. Benjamin was born Oct. 28, 1830, and died June 21, 1845. Adelina was born Feb. 11, 1833, married Jacob Runyan and died in the town of Ithaca Feb. 6, 1861. Mr. Dixon was formerly a whig, but has been connected with the republican party since its organization. He went to Madison on foot to take part in the organization in the State, and has ever since been prominently identified with its history in this section of the country.

D. B. Ostrander opened a hardware store in Sextonville in 1880, the first in that village. He keeps a general stock of hardware and agricultural implements. A tinshop, furnished with the necessary machinery for making all kinds of tinware, is connected with the store. Mr. Ostrander is a native of Oneida Co., N. Y., born Aug. 12, 1823. When he was ten years old his parents removed to Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. There he attained his majority, spending his time working on the farm and in attending school. At the age of twenty-two he went to Oriskany Falls and worked in a woolen-mill. Three years later he became a partner in the business, and remained there, in all, seven years; then sold his interest and returned to Cattaraugus county, where he engaged in farming and afterwards at the carpenter and joiner's trade, remaining there until 1864. In that year he came to Richland county and purchased a farm in Little Willow valley, section 18, town of Ithaca, which, four years later, he sold, and bought a farm in the town of Richland, where he remained two years, then went to Ithaca and engaged in mercantile trade two years, after which he purchased his old farm on section 18, of Ithaca, living there until 1878, when he removed to the village and sold his farm soon after. In 1880 he came to Sextonville, as before stated, purchased land and erected a commodious frame house. Mrs. Ostrander was formerly Margaret German, a native of Wales. They were married in 1848 and have three children—Eugene E., Edward G. and Cynthia M.

Levi J. Lincoln (deceased) settled in the town of Ithaca in 1865. He purchased a farm on section 5, on which he at first built a small frame house, and afterwards a large frame house and frame barn. He resided here until the time of his death, July 27, 1877. He was an industrious man and owned 280 acres of land. From an obituary, written by an unknown friend and published in the Republican and Observer, we extract the following: "He was a man of marked individuality, active and positive in his undertakings. For conspicuous virtues, he commanded the esteem of his fellows; as a teacher in the public school of his district, for five consecutive winters, he won the approbation and grateful recollection of his pupils; as a testimonial of their respect and affection, the children of the neighborhood marched in a band to the grave. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Loomis. His remains were consigned to their last resting place in Neptune cemetery, to which they were followed by a large concourse of people." The following letter appeared in the next issue of the same paper: "I would add this tribute to the memory of Mr. Lincoln, notice of whose death appeared in your last issue. He was one of the noblest of God's works, an honest man, and a useful one. He was always the first to lend a helping hand to those in distress. A man of first-class intellect, good heart, and great independence and force of character. His views on all subjects were freely expressed. He had faults, like the rest of mankind, but they were overbalanced by his many virtues." He was a native of Connecticut, born in the town of Windham, Windham county, March 4, 1830, where he grew to manhood, spending his time in working upon the farm and in school. When he arrived at a seasonable age he began teaching school winters, being engaged in agricultural pursuits the remainder of the year. He was united in marriage with Fannie E. Allen Aug. 22, 1852. She was born in the town of Scotland, Windham Co., Conn., Nov. 3, 1829. He came to Wisconsin in 1856 in search of health. He located at Blooming Grove, Dane Co., Wis., where they remained until 1865, then came to Richland county and settled in Ithaca. They have four living children—Oscar B., born in Connecticut, Aug. 31, 1854; Abraham, born in Blooming Grove, Dane county. His birth occurred Oct. 19, 1860, in the midst of that exciting Presidential campaign, when Abraham Lincoln was first running for President, and he was immediately named for the future President, Abraham. The news at once spread, and the newspaper reporter, ever on the alert for items, heard that Abraham Lincoln had arrived in town, and that he was a relative of Levi J. The next issue of the Madison Democrat contained the following item: "Abraham Lincoln arrived at Blooming Grove, this county, Thursday evening last, on a visit to his friend and relative, Levi J. Lincoln, of that town." The youngest son, Pearl, was born in the town of Ithaca. Cora is the second child, and now the wife of Frank Bowen, of Richland Center. Abraham, although but seventeen years old when his father died, undertook the management of the farm, which he has since carried on with signal ability. Mrs. Lincoln is a lady of education and refinement, social and entertaining in conversation, and well fitted to shine in any circle of society. Edward L. was the fourth child, born at Ithaca, March 29, 1867, and died March 9, 1871. When Mr.

Lincoln was twenty-one years of age he sustained a fracture of the left hip joint, which impaired his health, and was the primary cause of his seeking a new location in the west. His death was the result of this fracture, although he regained his health so as to be able to labor most of the time.

Mrs. Mathias Joseph Schmitz came to the town of Ithaca from Fond du Lac county, in 1867. She bought the northwest quarter of section 1, town 9, range 2 east, upon which there was small improvement including a log cabin and stable. She has, since that time, with the assistance of her children, improved the land, erected a large frame barn with a stone basement, also a commodious frame house which is now occupied by the family. Mrs. Schmitz is a native of Prussia, and there grew to womanhood. In 1846 she left her native country for America and located in Fond du Lac county, where she was married in 1848 to Mathias Joseph Schmitz. He also was born in Prussia and came to the United States in 1846. He purchased land in Fond du Lac county, improved a farm, making his home there until the time of his death, which occurred Oct. 16, 1864. He left a wife and eight children to mourn his loss. The names of the children are—Katie, Annie Mary, John E., Celia, Gertrude, Margaretta, Helena and Susanna Eva. John E. manages the farm.

Alexander B. Grafton settled on section 6, town of Orion, in September, 1867. Upon this place was a small tract of cleared land, and a log cabin, in which he lived a few years and then erected a frame house. In 1882 he sold this place and bought the farm he now owns and occupies. It is located on section 8, town of Ithaca, and includes the "Britton" homestead, the first place settled in the town. The farm contains 155 acres, ninety of which are improved and enclosed. He has a good frame house and barn and other farm buildings. Mr. Grafton was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Jan. 2, 1833. His early life was spent in his native State, where he attended the common school and worked upon a farm. In 1860 he engaged with a photographer to learn the art. He was thus employed until 1862, when he enlisted, August 20, in company D, 126th Ohio Volunteers and went to Virginia and joined the Army of the Potomac. He served until the close of the war, participating in many engagements, among which were the following: Martinsburg, Manassa's Gap, Kelley's Ford, Loenst Grove, Winchester, Cedar Creek and the battle of the Wilderness, where he received a gunshot wound in his arm, May 6, 1864. He was sent to the hospital at Washington, D. C., where he remained a few days. He was there granted a furlough of thirty days, at the expiration of which, he returned to the hospital. On August 30th, he returned to his command and found the regiment in the midst of an engagement near Mine Run. After this he participated in several engagements, the most important of which was the battle before Petersburg, where he was again wounded, on April 2, 1865. He was sent to McClellan Hospital, Philadelphia, from whence he was honorably discharged, May 31, of the same year, and returned to his home. He first visited Richland county in 1866, and at that time purchased the land upon which he afterwards settled, in Orion. He returned to Ohio and there, July 4, 1867, he was married to Catharine A. Morrow, a native of Jefferson county. The following September they came to Richland county and located permanently. They have one son, William M., and an adopted daughter, Martha May. Mr. Grafton is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause and a member of Valley Lodge of I. O. G. T.

Rev. Henry Koenig was born Oct. 7, 1835, in Heiligenstadt, Prussia, Germany. The home of his birth had about 6,500 inhabitants. His childhood days were spent in that city, and now it is only with fondest recollections that he thinks of those early days. After absolving the gymnasium in his birthplace, he went to Rome, Italy, to study philosophy and theology. Here he was ordained priest, May 9, 1859. He soon afterwards started for America, landing in New York city, Oct. 3, 1859. He labored in his ministerial duties in La Fayette and Mishawaka, Ind., for about twelve years. Then in Louisville, Ky., Rochester, N. Y., Leavenworth, Kan., Toronto, Canada and Cumberland, Ind., for about five years; and since Jan. 1, 1877, at Keyesville, Richland Co., Wis.

CHAPTER XXVII.

TOWN OF MARSHALL.

This town embraces congressional township 11 north, range 1 west. It is bounded on the west by the town of Sylvan; on the north by Bloom; on the east by Rockbridge; and on the south by Dayton. The town is inhabited by a purely agricultural population, and has no villages of any importance. In 1880 the census gave Marshall a population of 991. It has 167 farms, all in a high state of cultivation. The surface features here are very similar to those of the balance of Richland county's towns.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first permanent settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Marshall was made in 1852. During the spring of that year John G. and Simon Marshall, natives of Jefferson Co., Ohio, came here and entered 160 acres of land on sections 3, 4, 9 and 10. In the fall of 1852 their mother, then a widow, came, accompanied by two sons, Mahlon and George. They lived together until 1855, when Simon died, and soon afterward the mother was taken sick and went to live with her daughter, Mrs. John Hart, where she died Dec. 25, 1855. John G. went to the mountains and engaged in mining for a time; then returned and settled on the southwest quarter of section 6. He now lives in Tennessee. Mahlon died in 1879. George now occupies a portion of the old homestead.

A. P. Hyde came here from the State of New York in 1851, and claimed the east half of the northeast quarter of section 24. In 1853 he sold the claim and moved to Richland Center. He now lives in the town of Rockbridge.

In the fall of 1853 William Minett and John Graham, natives of England, came from Rock Co., Wis., and made the first settlement on Horse creek, in the town of Marshall. William Minett entered land on section 35. John Graham, for himself and others, entered land on sections 34 and 35. The two then returned to Rock county and remained until October, 1854, when they came back accompanied by Thomas and Charles Graham and James Ward. Mr.

Minett settled on the land which he had entered and still lives there. John Graham settled on the east half of the northeast quarter of section 34, where he improved a farm, erected a stone house and lived until after the close of the war. He now resides in the town of Henrietta. Thomas Graham settled on the southwest quarter of section 35 and is still a resident. Charles Graham and James Ward both settled upon the farms on section 35, where they still live.

Thomas Knouse came from Ohio in 1854, and located on section 4. A few months later he sold to Jacob Ream and moved away. Ream came from Indiana. He remained here several years, then sold out and removed to Nebraska.

Martin Copenhefer, a native of Ohio, came from Indiana in 1854 and entered land on section 3. He improved a farm and lived here until 1880, when he sold his property and moved to Spring Valley.

Edward Pinnick, a native of Ohio, came here in 1854 and settled on the northeast quarter of section 6. Two years later he sold out and removed to the town of Henrietta, where he erected a saw-mill and laid out the village of Yuba. He has since removed to Nebraska.

R. Brewer, a native of Vermont, purchased the land which Pinnick had claimed, on section 6, in the town of Marshall. He cleared about twenty-five acres and lived here until 1866, when he sold out and removed to the town of Dayton where he still lives.

The first settlement on what is known as English Ridge, was made by James Brightman, a native of England, who came here from Walworth county in 1854, and entered land on sections 27 and 34. He settled here in the spring of 1855, but a few months later sold to John McKy and moved to section 28. Mr. Brightman now lives in Richland Center.

In the fall of 1854 John Anderson, a former sailor, came here from Walworth county, and entered land on section 28. He shortly afterward sold to James Brightman and removed to Illinois. He now lives in Iowa.

John Donegan, an Irishman, came from Illinois in 1854 and entered a tract of land on section 34. After a time he was appointed postmaster of the Buckeye postoffice, he got into trouble, was convicted of robbing the mails and sent to the State penitentiary at Waupun. Upon his release he removed to Janesville.

Among those who came in 1855 and secured homes were the following: Daniel Slusser, Henry Kepler, Alanson Clark, Joseph Kerby, George Davis, William Coulter, T. Knapp, Joseph Moon, William Richards, John and Abraham Harris.

Daniel Slusser came from Indiana. He located on section 9, where he remained a few years, then sold out and removed to his former home.

Henry Kepler was a native of Pennsylvania, but came here directly from Ohio. He entered land on section 30, where he still lives. His son, William F., came at the same time and entered land on section 31. His home is now on section 30. Joseph, another son, lives in the town of Marshall, and Sylvester, another, resides at Boaz.

Abraham Elliott was another early settler. He came from the southern part of the county in 1859 and located on section 17. A few years later he sold to Joseph Berkshire.

FIRST THINGS.

The first birth in the town was that of Maria, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (McCannon) Marshall, born April 25, 1852. The girl grew to womanhood and married William Russell, of Carroll Co., Ohio. Her husband is dead, but she still lives there.

Probably the first death in the town was that of Simon Marshall, who died in the summer of 1855. On the 25th of December, 1855, his mother, Mrs. James Marshall, died. They were both buried on section 9.

Joseph McCoy, a native of Pennsylvania, was the first blacksmith in the town. He opened a shop here in 1856 and did horse shoeing, general repair work and manufactured plows. He remained here until 1857, when he went to Vernon (then Bad Ax) county. When the war broke out he enlisted and died in the service.

The first mercantile business in the town was carried on by Joseph Marshall, who sold goods for George Kronsop, and also handled ginseng.

MANUFACTURING ENTERPRISES.

In 1855 Thomas Marshall erected a saw-mill on the northwest quarter of section 14. The power was derived from the north branch of Fancy creek, the water being carried to the mill through a race a quarter of a mile in length. An old fashioned "up and down" saw was put in. The mill could only be run during warm weather, and did but little business in the five years of its existence.

In 1857 William Saltsman erected a saw-mill on the southwest quarter of section 19, equipping it with an "up and down" saw. The power was derived from Mill creek. The water was carried through a race 130 rods in length. The mill commenced operation in November, 1858, and continued until 1870, when it was destroyed by fire. Mr Saltsman rebuilt the mill and put in a circular saw. In 1880 he sold the property to William Kepler, who put in new machinery, built a log dam and changed the race so that it is now only sixty rods in length.

In 1868 Sylvester Kepler erected a carding mill on the northwest quarter of section 31. The power is derived from Mill creek, a dam having been constructed of logs and stone, securing six feet head of water. The mill is furnished with a carding machine and picker, and is operated during the summer seasons.

In 1871 [or 1872], John and J. G. Ewers erected a flour mill on section 31 of the town of Marshall. A two story frame building was erected, and the mill was equipped with one run of buhrs and the other necessary machinery for the manufacture of flour. Mill creek furnishing the power by which the mill is run, a dam of earth and lumber having been constructed which secures eight feet head of water. It is run as a custom mill.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in the town of Marshall was taught in 1855 by Susan Wanlass, now the wife of John Blair, in a small log building erected for the purpose by the people in the neighborhood. It stood on land owned by Joseph Benton, on the southwest quarter of section 14. The building was put up at a "bee." The floor was made of puncheons, the roof of bark and the building had no door. Only one term was taught in this building. In 1857 a house was erected of hewn logs on the northwest quarter of section 13, in which Mary Marshall taught the first school. This building was used until 1868, when a frame house was erected on the southwest quarter of section 13. J. H. Ewing taught the first school in this building. This is a "union district."

The first school house in district No. 2 was erected in 1856 on section 4. This building was also put up by a "neighborhood bee." The roof was covered with shakes. William McMillan was the first teacher. The house was moved to the northeast quarter of section 9, where it was in use until 1883, when a neat frame building was erected on the southeast quarter of section 4. Robert R. Benton taught the first school in this building.

Joint district No. 1 embraces territory in the towns of Marshall, Bloom and Rockbridge. It was organized in 1866 and a log school house was erected on the southeast quarter of section 2. John Mathews taught the first term of school in this house. In 1882 a large frame building was erected on the old site in which William E. Gillingham was the first teacher.

The first school in district No. 3 was taught by John B. Covil in 1866 in a small building erected for the purpose. This building was a primitive affair. Posts were driven into the ground and plank nailed to them; while the roof was covered with plank. But one term of school was taught in this building. The second term was taught by G. W. Putnam in his log house. In 1867 a substantial hewn log building was erected on the southeast quarter of section 6, in which G. W. Putnam was the first teacher.

The first school in district No. 4 was held in the pioneer log cabin of William Saltsman, on the southwest quarter of section 19; the teacher being Benjamin Doudna. This was in the winter of 1860-1. During the following year a school house was erected on the southeast quarter of section 19, in which Elam Bailey taught the first term of school.

The first school house in district No. 8 was erected in 1857, on section 27. Amanda Creed was the first teacher. The old school house was in use until 1866, when the present school building was erected on the southwest quarter of section 27. Cordelia Daggett was the first teacher in the present school house.

The first school house in district No. 9 was erected in 1857. It was a hewn log building, located on the southwest quarter of section 29. Martha J. Clark was the first teacher. This school house was used until 1866, when a frame house was erected on the northwest quarter of section 32, in which Mary Ward taught the first term of school.

RELIGIOUS.

During the year 1857, religious services were held at the house of Joseph Kerby, by Rev. Thomas Mason, from Woodstock. A Methodist Episcopal class was organized here with about seventeen members, among whom were the following: Joseph Kerby and wife, and daughter Rachel, Lewis Huff and William Saltsman and wife. The class kept up their organization for a few years only, meeting at private houses and at the school house on section 29. James Lake and Elder Walker were among the preachers who served the class.

United Brethren Church of Pleasant Valley. Services of this denomination were held in an early day at the house of J. H. Hindman, on section 2, and also at the residence of Richard Hampton. Among the first members of the Church were Joseph Benton, Jr., and wife, J. H. Hindman and wife, Richard Hampton and wife and Harvey Gillingham and wife. In 1859 a log church edifice was erected on the northeast quarter of section 2. A few years later this building was moved further south, but on the same section. Here the congregation worshiped until 1881, when a neat church edifice was erected on the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, at a cost of $2,000. Rev. Nathaniel Smith was one of the first preachers for the society. Since then the following have filled the pulpit: Revs. Howard, Mabbitt, Sutton, Kite, Reed, Alderman, Pound, Bovee, Whitney, Elder Nickey and J. W. Reed. The latter is the present pastor. In 1884 Elias Gillingham was class leader and the society numbered 126 members. There is a Sabbath school in connection with this Church, which is in flourishing condition. Thomas Gillingham is the present superintendent.

English Ridge United Brethren Church. The first meetings of this denomination were held at the house of John McKy in the fall of 1857. Jeremiah Payne was the first preacher, and under his administration a class was organized with about nineteen members. Among the number were the following: Abraham Harris and wife, Mary Richards, Jacob Hoffman and wife, and John McKy and wife. A. Harris was the first class-leader. The class met in various private houses until the school house was built, when services were held in that. In 1879 they erected a frame church edifice on the southwest quarter of section 27. Among those who have preached for this class are the following: Revs. George Kite, James Howard, G. H. Mabbitt, Henry Smith, A. W. Alderman, L. Pound, E. Bovee, A. J. Hood, A. Whitney and G. G. Nickey. Rev. J. W. Reed is the present pastor and Joseph Moon is the class leader. The class now has a membership of about forty.

The Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek was organized at the house of Alanson Clark, June 11, 1859, by Rev. J. H. Mathers. The following is a complete history of the Church from its organization. It was published in the Republican-Observer, Jan. 17, 1884:

“Through the assistance of Messrs. Angus Smith, L. T. Janney and P. M. Smith, who have compiled the same from the Church records and gathered from those living within the bounds of the Church at the time of its organization, we are enabled to publish the following history and incidents of the Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek, from its inception down to the present, embracing a period of almost twenty-nine years. From a letter received by Mr. Angus Smith from Rev. J. H. Mathers, the first Presbyterian minister in this region, who organized this Church and preached to it for several years, and who is still held in grateful remembrance by the people, which was intended to be read on the occasion of the recent dedication of the new church, a full account of which was given in this journal last week, but which was not received in time, we make the following extract. He says: ‘In June, 1855, I heard of a family of Presbyterians on Fancy Creek by the name of Noble; I started in search of them. I went to the county seat and inquired of Israel Janney, register of deeds; he knew nothing of them but directed me to Mr. Waddell, near the mouth of Fancy Creek. He informed me that a man of that name had staid with him one time when on a trip to Orion for supplies. He directed me to ‘Squire Joe Marshall, of Fancy Creek, for information. He knew the family and gave directions by which I might find them. I wandered through the woods by a path, and my attention was attracted by a company of men raising a house. I then little imagined that in that log cabin which this more pretentious house was to supercede, the Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek would afterwards be organized, but it was so. It was Mr. Alanson Clark’s house which the neighbors were engaged in raising.’ We give these few extracts to show how new the country was at that time and the difficulties Mr. Mathers had to contend with. He found the family he was in search of, and who are now life-long friends. Rev. J. H. Mathers preached at Mr. Noble’s and Alanson Clark’s every three or four weeks until the year 1859, at which time, previous notice having been given, those friendly to the organization of a Presbyterian Church assembled at the house of Mr. Clark on the 11th of June, 1859, and adopted measures to secure such an organization. After a sermon preached by Rev. Mathers, the following persons united in the formation of a Church to be known as the Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek, to be in connection with the Presbytery of Dane, now Wisconsin River Presbytery: Alanson Clark, Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, Nancy Clark, John K. Polk, Mrs. Catharine Polk, Daniel Noble, Mrs. Margaret Noble, Mrs. Jane Fogo, Mary Wanless, Mrs. Eliza Merrill, T. M. Ocheltree and Mary McDonald by letter; and Mrs. Ann Marshall and Mrs. Mary Caddell on profession of faith. An election of ruling elders was entered into, which resulted in the choice of Alanson Clark and Daniel Noble, who were set apart on the next day, being Sunday, June 12, 1859, to that office in the presence of the congregation. On July 16, 1859, the session met at the call of the moderator, Rev. Mathers, and Daniel Noble was chosen clerk of session, which office he held for many years. Mrs. Lilly Clark was admitted to membership by letter at this meeting.

Of the original fourteen members at the formation of the Church there are only five living. Their names are: John K. Polk, who is very old and feeble, not able to attend Church; Daniel Noble, Mary Wanless, who is now Mrs. Mary Clark, Mrs. Eliza Merrill and Mrs. Mary Caddell.

“The first persons baptized after the formation of the Church, according to records, was Mrs. Mary Caddell and her infant children, Sydney and Rachel. The first communion was administered to the Church Sunday, July 17, 1859.

"On March 19, 1860, there was a congregational meeting held at the house of Alanson Clark for the purpose of electing trustees to take charge of the temporalities of the Church. Rev. J. H. Mathers was chosen president, and A. Clark was chosen clerk. The election resulted in the choice of Daniel Noble, T. M. Ocheltree and Angus Smith. The persons present at this, the first congregational meeting were: A. Clark, Elizabeth Clark, Nancy Clark, John Clark, Alexander Clark, John Fogo, John Hart, Daniel Noble, D. McDonald, Donald Smith, John K. Polk, Joseph Benton, Sr., Archibald Wanless, Mrs. Susan Blair, John Blair and John Wanless.

"Sometime during the spring of 1860 the question of the location of a church site and cemetery was taken into consideration, resulting in the choice of the present location. A meeting was held Jan. 28, 1861, at Marshall school house, to adopt measures for erecting a church. It was determined to build a hewed log church, 26x30 feet, and to meet on the 7th day of February to cut and hew the logs. On the day set, the people cut and hewed the logs and Messrs. Angus Smith, Harvey Marshall and Wallace Fogo-hauled them to the site. Sometime in June, 1861, it was raised and enclosed as fast as possible. Afterwards it was used for services during the summer and partly completed late in the fall, but was not fully completed for one or two years. Before the erection of this church services were held at the private houses of A. Clark, Daniel Noble, John Fogo, Henry Merrill, John Wanless, J. K. Polk, and sometimes in the barns of Joseph Marshall and John Hart, and later in the old log school house near where the United Brethren church now stands, on land then owned by Joseph Marshall."

The log church was located on the northeast quarter of section 14. This building was used until the summer of 1883. In July, 1883, the society commenced the erection of a large frame church near the old site, which was soon completed. It is 30x50 feet in size, eighteen foot posts, and is valued at $2,000.

The Church has had for its pastors since its organization, Revs. J. H. Mathers, who was its pastor for several years, J. M. Reid, Peter Dougherty, Lemuel Leonard, John Irwin, T. G. Pearce and H. G. Denison, who is now supplying the pulpit in connection with Richland Center. All the pastors are still living except the lamented Mr. Reid, who lost his life in a runaway accident in Ohio several years ago. The present elders are Angus Smith, Daniel Noble and L. T. Janney. L. T. Janney is clerk.

At an early day a Sabbath school was organized in connection with this Church. Carrie Morrow is the present superintendent.

The Ash Ridge Regular Baptist Church was organized Aug. 9, 1873, by Rev. N. L. Sweet, with six members. The following were the first members: G. W. Putnam and wife, Mrs. Mary E. Emery, Mrs. J. M. Marshall, Mrs. A. A. Hutton and George H. Putnam. G. W. Putnam was elected deacon, and George H. Putnam clerk. This took place at the school house in district No. 3. The society continued to worship at the school house until 1877, when a hewn log church, 20x28 feet in size, was erected on the southeast quarter of section 6. Rev. George D. Stevens was the first regular pastor. Succeeding him came Revs. N. H. Slater, E. J. Stevens, W. S. Sweet, Elder Chapin and Alfred Prouty. The latter is the present pastor. The class has flourished, and now has twenty-five members.

A Sabbath school was organized in 1871, at the school house, with G. W. Putnam as superintendent. He has since held that position. The school meets every Sunday, and has an average attendance of twenty.

In the fall of 1882 Rev. Elihu Bailey organized a class at the Lowry school house, on section 19. There were fourteen members, as follows: B. H. Thomas and wife, Francis Harris and wife, Mrs. Joseph Berkshire, Martha Robbins, W. F. Myers and wife, William T. Blazer and wife, Francis Lowry and wife, and David Reid and wife. B. H. Thomas was chosen class leader, and Francis Harris, steward. Soon after organization the class erected a log church building on section 20. Rev. Bailey has been pastor since the organization of the class. There is a Sabbath school organization in connection with this class, of which Martha Robbins is superintendent.

MILL CREEK POSTOFFICE.

Mill Creek postoffice was first established in the town of Sylvan, with Thomas A. Merrill as postmaster. A few years later Henry Kepler was appointed postmaster, and kept the office at his house on section 31 in the town of Marshall. The office was on the mail route from Tomah to Muscoda, mail being received twice each week. R. H. Bond succeeded Mr. Kepler as postmaster and kept the office at his residence, on section 25, in the town of Sylvan. The next postmaster was Alvin S. Bailey, and the office was removed to section 34, in the town of Marshall. John Ewers succeeded Mr. Bailey and kept the office on section 36, in the town of Sylvan, at his residence. L. D. Bailey was the next postmaster, and again the office was removed to the town of Marshall. John G. Ewers succeeded Mr. Bailey and is the present postmaster.

FANCY CREEK POSTOFFICE.

This postoffice was established in 1856. Josiah McCaskey was appointed the first postmaster, but was succeeded very soon after his appointment by Joseph Marshall. Mr. Marshall received his commission in September, 1856, and was authorized to remove the office to "Marshall's Mill." Mail was received once a week from Richland Center. Since that time the following have served as postmaster or deputy-postmaster, of this office—Josiah McCaskey, Joseph Marshall, John Hart, Friend Morrison, Mathew R. Smith, M. C. Davis, William Gross and M. C. Davis. The last named was postmaster when the office was discontinued in 1882.

BUCKEYE POSTOFFICE.

This postoffice was established in 1856. William Bailey was appointed first postmaster and kept the office at his house on section 20, mail at that time being received once each week from Muscoda. A few years later John Donagan was appointed postmaster, and moved the office to section 34. After a time the postmaster got into trouble. He was indicted and convicted of robbing the mails and was sent to the penitentiary at Waupun, and the office was discontinued.

GILLINGHAM POSTOFFICE.

This postoffice was established in 1881. Hugh Morrow was appointed postmaster and still keeps the office at his store, on section 13. The office is on the mail route from Richland Center to Viola, mail being received tri-weekly.

Benton; treasurer, J. B. Coulter; assessor, Isaac Doudna; justices, J. Benton, Elihu Bailey and G. W. Putnam; constables, E. Turnipseed, Frank Doudna and Joseph Jones.

CEMETERIES.

The cemetery in connection with the Presbyterian church was laid out by Rev. J. H. Mathers during the war. The first burial here was of the remains of a daughter of William Smith, who died in 1862.

In 1876 Thomas Borland surveyed an addition to the cemetery. A tax of $2 was levied on each lot to raise money to fence the grounds and keep the same in repair. The cemetery contains seventy-four lots, each one rod square.

The present officers of the cemetery organization are: P. M. Smith, Alexander Smith and Henry Merrill, trustees; P. M. Smith, clerk.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

In the following biographical sketches are to be found some of the oldest pioneers of Richland county.

William J., son of Daniel and Margaret P. (Iregham) Noble, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, July 16, 1841. He came to Richland county with his parents, where he remained until November, 1862, when he enlisted in company F, 2d Cavalry. He was badly wounded at an engagement near Yazoo City, Miss., and was sent to Washington Hospital, at Memphis, where he remained four months. He was discharged with the regiment at Austin, Texas, Nov. 15, 1865, returned home and resumed farming. On Feb. 4, 1878, he was married to Deliah, daughter of Martin and Elizabeth Copenhefer. They have one child—Ella A. He occupies a portion of the old homestead on section 3.

Lot T. Janney, eldest son of Israel and Elizabeth (Miller) Janney, was born in Logan Co., Ohio, May 4, 1842. He came to Richland county with his parents, and here received his education in the pioneer schools. In 1864, he went with his father to Colorado, where he remained for three years, then returned to Richland county. He was married in April, 1869, to Maggie, daughter of John and Jane Fogo. They have three children, all of whom are now living—John, Mary and Wilburtie. Mr. Janney was engaged in farming until 1881, when he bought a steam saw-mill, which he put in operation in the town of Marshall. In 1883 he disposed of this property and engaged in mercantile trade in the same town.

William Janney, a pioneer of Buena Vista town, was born in Loudon Co., Va., Oct. 7, 1815. When he was but fourteen years of age his parents removed to Ohio. When he was seventeen years old he commenced learning the tailor's trade at Monroe, Mich., and served four years, and then worked at the trade as journeyman, in Logan Co., Ohio. In 1847 he came to Richland county, and made a claim in what is now the town of Buena Vista, and remained two years, then sold and returned to Ohio. In 1852, he again came to Richland county and remained until 1859; four years of this time he was a clerk in the register's office. In 1859 he went to California and spent a few months, then returned to Ohio and remained three years. He then came to Richland Center, and opened a tailor shop, which he run one year, then sold out and went west and spent several years in Colorado, Iowa and Nebraska. He now makes his home with his nephew, Lot M. Janney, in the town of Marshall.

Joseph Marshall, a prominent man of Richland county, and the pioneer of the town of Marshall, which territory bears his name, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, March 25, 1820. His father was a large owner of timber land, and the subject of this sketch spent considerable of his time clearing portions of the same, while his brothers were employed in farming. He was married in April, 1851, to Margaret McCannon, a native of New Brunswick. The day following they started west to seek a home, embarked on a steamboat at Wellsville and came to Muscoda, and the next day started in company with Alexander Bartley to seek a desirable location, but the land in that vicinity did not suit him. The party showing him the country inquired what kind of land he wanted, to which Mr. Marshall replied, "I want land where there is plenty of wood and water." "Well" said the man, "we will have to go back into Richland county, where you can not clear a farm in a life time." This remark, intended to deter him from going thither, did not have that effect; he had cleared two farms, and freely understood all about it. So the following day, with Mr. Bartley, started on foot for the wilds of Richland county. They were informed that there were two men, Amasa Haskins and Jule Preston, living in the northern part of the county, engaged in bear hunting. Toward night they chanced to find a log cabin, roofed on one side only, and a place cut out for a door, the only evidences of an intended habitation. Mr. Marshall suggested that the night be spent at this place, but Mr. Bartley said "nobody lives here." "Then" said Mr. Marshall, "there will not be anyone to put us out," and they accordingly took peaceable possession. A few minutes afterward, Mr. Preston, the owner, returned in company with his wife. The travelers asked if they could stop all night, and found they were welcome, and soon they were partaking of a supper of corn bread and venison, with an appetite and relish known only to tired and hungry men. This cabin was located on what is now section 29, town of Rockbridge. In the morning Mr. Preston started out to show them land, and Mr. Marshall selected the north half of section 13, town 11, range 1 west, and the same day returned to Muscoda. Not wishing to lose any time, the next day he purchased a cow, and the day then following hired a man with a team to transfer his goods, while he and his bride trudged along on foot, driving the cow; arriving at Mr. Preston's cabin they remained over night, and the following morning he took an ax and started for his land, but could not find it and returned. The next morning a man by the name of Meeks, who was stopping at Amasa Haskins, hitched up his horses, loaded up the goods and provisions, and accompanied by Mr. Preston, they started for the land. Arriving at Amasa Haskins, and, finding the team too heavily loaded for the condition of the roads or lack of roads, they left the goods in a fence corner, covered them with shakes, and proceeded on their way, cutting a road as they went, and finally reached their destination.

Here a rude shelter of brush and poles was hastily constructed, and pioneer life commenced in earnest. Mr. Meeks fed his horses some corn brought along for the purpose, and what they did not fully clean up, was gathered by Mr. Marshall and used for seed. He immediately commenced clearing and chopped in the seed. He thus raised a small crop of corn, potatoes and garden vegetables. They continued to live in their improvised covering, if covering it could be called, until fall, then erected a log cabin with puncheon floor and shake roof. That same fall he went to Sextonville with George Hancock to purchase provisions, and on their way back discovered a pile of lumber on the site of the present village of Richland Center, which Ira Hazletine had left there to make good a claim to the land. At that time a few furrows ploughed were the only evidences of improvement.

Mr. Marshall was soon after elected justice of the peace. Among the law cases in his court one is referred to as indicative of primitive methods of administering justice. German Tadder had shot George Hancock's dog and the latter thought he must be made to suffer the legal penalty, and came to Squire Marshall for advice and methods of redress, insisting that he was the proper officer and must advise him accordingly. Marshall was not much learned in law and tried to have him drop the matter, but all such attempts to dispose of the case proved unavailing, and he finally asked Hancock if he was able to handle this disturber of the peace; receiving an affirmative reply, he summed up the case and gave the following characteristic verdict: "Then give him a damn good licking the next time you get a good chance," which disposition of the case seemed satisfactory, and Hancock went away. A few weeks after Mr. Marshall had a barn raising and the people for miles around came together, among them were Tedder and Hancock, meeting here for the first time since the advice had been given; they there and then settled the matter with their fists, Hancock coming out victorious, and they were ever afterward good friends. In 1854 Mr. Marshall went to Galena with a load of goods for a family who were removing back to Illinois. Edward Pinnock sent by him to get a barrel of whisky, and having purchased the same he started on his return. Night coming on he applied at the house of an Irishman for accommodations, but they positively refused to entertain him—said they had nothing to eat and no place for him to sleep. Pleading was of no avail, he must go on. "Well," says Mr. Marshall, "have something to take with me," and he led the way to the wagon. He had already tapped the barrel and had a straw ready. The man and woman each mounted the wagon and took turns at the straw. It was then their hearts were softened and they asked him to spend the night, in fact, he was welcome as long as he had a mind to stop. Soon after this Mr. Marshall was called upon to marry a German who lived in the town of Forest, but refused to tie the knot, saying he did not know how. "Yes, you must," says the Dutchman, "because you vas a shustice mit der berce." "No," says Marshall, "I never attended but one marriage in my life and that was my own." "Vell," replied the Dutchman, "Mr. Darnell has been married couple of times, you come mit us to him and he tell you all about it." So they took supper and started on a tramp of nine miles. The road led them by Pinnock's and Mr. Marshall suggested to the Dutchman that he take along some whisky. "Yaw, by shiminy, if I had a schug," says the Dutchman. They called at Pinnock's and Marshall borrowed a coffee pot, which the Dutchman had filled with whisky and they proceeded on their way, calling at Mr. Darnell's for instruction. The wedding did not occur until morning, when the couple were made happy by being pronounced husband and wife. Mr. Marshall was an industrious, hard working man, and spent but little time hunting. He cleared the greater part of his 320 acres of land, lived there a number of years, and then purchased another place on sections 13 and 14, where he erected a frame house, and lived in it until 1882, when he built another near by, which he now occupies. He has lived in Marshall continuously since his first settlement, except nine months spent in Colorado in 1860. Mrs. Marshall died in August, 1865, leaving five children—Maria, Elizabeth, Lydia, Thomas and Josie. His second wife, to whom he was married in 1867, was Nettie Starrett; she was born in Washington Co., Vt. In February, 1865, he was drafted into the service, went to Madison, and performed guard duty until the close of the war.

George L., son of James and Maria (Gillingham) Marshall, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, Oct. 28, 1839. At the age of thirteen, he came to Richland county with his mother and settled in town 11, range 1 west, now known as Marshall. Three years later, his mother died, and the home circle was broken. He continued to live in the neighborhood, and was employed in farming summers, and attending school, winters. In May, 1861, at the first call for "three years" men, he responded by enlisting in company H, of the 5th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and with the regiment, joined the Army of the Potomac, serving until August, 1864, when he was honorably discharged. He took part in the following engagements: Williamsburg, seven days before Richmond, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Rappahannock Station, Fredricksburg, battle of the Wilderness and before Petersburg. When discharged he returned to Marshall and resumed farming. He was joined in marriage in 1865 with Elizabeth, daughter of Daniel and Margret (Dreghorn) Noble, and settled upon the homestead on section 4. Mrs. Marshall died in 1869, leaving one child—Allen. In 1874 he was again married to Harriet, daughter of Martin and Elizabeth Copenhefer. They have two children—Clara and Ella.

John Fogo, Esq., one of the pioneer settlers, was born in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1799. He received the elements of a good education, in the parish school, which he attended until twelve years of age. He was then apprenticed as a weaver, and while learning his trade he enjoyed, among other means of improvement, free access to the parish library, of which he made good use storing up its contents in a memory wonderfully retentive. Gifted with a mind of extraordinary capacity, which was thus cultivated to the highest degree, and in the broadest sense of education. At that period he laid the foundation of his great knowledge of history, both ancient and modern, which remained with him until the day of his death. He came with his parents to America, in 1820, and settled in Columbiana Co., Ohio, and was among the early pioneers in that section. At the time of his settlement in Ohio, it was a new and wild country—the foot-prints of the savage were barely cold. He removed to Wisconsin in 1853, bringing with him a large family of young children, and settled on Fancy creek, where he again passed through the labors and struggles incident to opening up a new country. He was preceded in his settlement on Fancy creek by only three or four families. From that time he was well known in the county. By his neighbors, he was honored and beloved, and was held in great esteem by all who knew him. He was repeatedly honored by his fellow-townsmen with many offices of honor and trust. He aided in the organization of the town of Marshall; was chairman, which office he held for sixteen years, consentively, all ways being elected without opposition. During his whole life he was a constant attendant upon the preaching of the Gospel, in the Presbyterian church, in which he was baptized. In this Church he was a member in full communion for a number of years. He always had a firm conviction in the divine inspiration and truth of the Scriptures, and believed in their inculcations, in order to sustain pure society and a prosperous government. At the close of life, by faith in God, through the Scriptures, he found submission to the divine will, with peace and joy. Mr. Fogo was remarkably genial in his disposition, and his society was highly prized by those who delight in conversation that is intelligent and full of information. Many persons enjoyed his company for an hour or hours, in a very pleasant and profitable manner. His death took place on Friday, Sept. 1, 1876, leaving to mourn his loss, a companion, with whom he lived nearly half a century. Also eight sons and daughters, all of whom, except one, residing in Minnesota, were around the dying bed. Mr. Fogo was a great sufferer for several years, but his final end was free from pain.

Thomas Graham, one of the pioneer settlers of Horse creek valley, is a native of England, born in Cambridgeshire, Dec. 8, 1831, and where his younger days were spent. In 1851 he was married to Elizabeth Martin, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Malpress. She had previously been married to William Martin, who died in 1850. Two children were born to them—Sarah and Mary J. Sarah died Dec. 24, 1854; Mary J. died Dec. 4, 1883. Thomas and Elizabeth Graham started in 1851 to America, in company with his parents. They landed in New York and immediately proceeded west. At the city of Buffalo they were obliged to stop, on account of the illness of his mother, who had been taken sick on board ship. She continued to grow worse and died in a few days. The bereaved family continued their journey to the west, until reaching Wisconsin, they stopped at East Troy, and remained a short time, and the subject of this sketch obtained work on the Chicago & Milwaukee railroad, then moved to Palmyra, and remained one year, and next to Rock county, living there till 1854. In that year they came to Richland county. He and those that came with him were obliged to cut three miles of road before they got to the farms which they now own. Mr. Graham entered land on section 35. He first built a log cabin, then set to work to clear the land. This part of the country at that time was a "howling wilderness," but soon other settlers came in who like him set to work to clear the land and make for themselves homes. He has lived to see a well developed country, supplied with good schools and churches. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Graham—Maria S., Celina S., Alzena E., John T. and Alice L. All of whom have been well educated, some receiving their education in a district school, and some at college. Alzena was born May 13, 1856, and died at the home of her parents June 7, 1883. Mr. Graham has been an industrious, hard-working man, has cleared quite a large farm. His pioneer cabin is replaced by a two-story hewed log house, which is located on sections 34 and 35. His son, John T., was born in the town of Marshall, April, 1859, and has always made this his home. He was married in 1880 to Martha Bannister, a native of Milwaukee. They have one child—Oscar G. His farm joins his father's on section 35. On June 11, 1883, a cyclone passed through the farms of Thomas and John Graham, Jr., destroying a large amount of timber. Large trees were uprooted and torn to pieces by the storm.

Charles, son of John and Susanna (Poole) Graham, was born in Cambridgeshire, England, Jan. 16, 1834, and came to America with his parents. They at first located at East Troy, but remained there only a short time, going from there to Palmyra, Jefferson county, where he engaged in railroading for one year. They then removed to the town of Milton in Rock county, where his father rented a farm. In 1852 his father died, and in November, 1855, he came to Richland county and located on section 35. He was unmarried at the time, and boarded with his brother-in-law, James Ward, until 1858. He was married in that year, to Sarah E. Stanbaugh, who was born in York Co., Penn. He built a hewed log house, which four years later was consumed by fire with all of its contents. The neighbors generously turned out, and two days later, another hewed log house was erected, in which the family resided until 1882, when he built the neat frame house which they now occupy. Mrs. and Mrs. Graham have six children—James C., Charles W., Lydia F., Arthur E., Lucy E. and Sarah E.

William Minett was born in Cambridgeshire, England, April 11, 1828. Here he grew to manhood and was reared to agricultural pursuits. At the age of twenty-one he left his native land and came to America. He went to Onondaga county in the State of New York, and there remained for ten months employed in teaming. He then came to Wisconsin and located in Walworth county, and was married in 1852 to Mary A., daughter of John and Susanna (Poole) Graham. He came to Richland county in 1853 and entered land in town 11, range 1 west, in the present town of Marshall, and then in the following year settled here. He at first built a cabin of round logs, which in 1869 was replaced by the neat dwelling which he now occupies. He also built a frame barn 30x45 feet, a granary 20x30 feet, with a stone basement and a sheep shed 16x72 feet. June 11, 1883, a cyclone visited this place and demolished the barn, granary and sheep shed, leveling them to the ground. Mr. Minett, with his accustomed energy, immediately set to work and rebuilt them. He has been a successful farmer. He has purchased land adjoining his farm until it now contains 300 acres, nearly 200 of which are cleared. Mrs. Minett died in 1863 leaving six children—Eliza, George, Charles, Sarah, Emma and Frank. Mr. Minett was again married in 1864 to Maria A., daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Richards) Moon, and widow of Albert Carlton. Six children have blessed this union—Joseph C., Josie, Irving J., Walter A., Minnie L. and Robert W. Mrs. Minett has one son by her former marriage—Albert V. He is now a student at Western College, Toledo, Iowa, where he is preparing for the ministry.

Benjamin W. Queen (deceased) was born in Luzerne township, Fayette Co., Penn., Sept. 11, 1823, and was one of the pioneers of Richland county. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving a liberal education in the public schools. The account book which he used in school, such as was common in those days, is now in possession of his family, and is prized highly as a memento of the past. He was married in 1850 to Mena A. Barclay, who was born in Fox township, Carroll Co., Ohio, March 26, 1824. They settled in Fayette Co., Penn., where they remained until 1854. They then started to seek a home in the west, traveling by steamboat as far as Galena, Ill. They accomplished the remainder of the journey to Richland county by team. He had previously entered land on section 8, town 11, range 1 west, now the town of Marshall, and had a log cabin built into which the family moved immediately upon their arrival in the month of May. He commenced clearing at once, and that year raised a small crop of corn, potatoes and garden vegetables. He remained here and continued clearing and farming until 1865. In March of that year he joined the 11th regiment, company G, Wisconsin Volunteers, and died in the Marine Hospital at Mobile, Sept. 2, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Queen were the parents of eight children—Elizabeth G. and Mary S., born in Pennsylvania; Phebe C., James B., Sarah E. and Joseph B.; Virginia A. and Benina died in infancy. The four daughters now living are well educated, three of whom have been teachers in the public schools. The farm contains 240 acres and is carried on by the sons, who make their home with their mother and are engaged in raising grain and stock. Mr. Queen was a member of the democratic party, and up to the time of his death adhered firmly to its principles.

Archibald Wanlass, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in Wood Co., Va., May 12, 1823. When he was two years of age his parents moved to Wheeling where his father, who was a quarryman, worked at his trade, remaining there six or eight months, then removing to Guernsey Co., Ohio, where he worked for one year, and thence to Harrison county, where his mother died. He was then seven years old. His father next removed to Carroll county, where he grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the district schools. When he was twenty-three years of age he went to Jefferson county, and was there employed in farming for two years, then went to Belmont county, thence to Richland county in 1851. After a short visit he went to Illinois, where he spent the winter. In the spring of 1852 he again visited Richland county and entered land on section 5, town 11, range 1 west, now known as Marshall. He was a single man at the time, and did not immediately settle here, but returned to Ohio, where he remained until fall, then, returning to his land, commenced clearing. In the spring of 1853 he put in his first crop of corn and potatoes. After planting he returned to Ohio. It was in the fall of 1854 that he came to Richland county and settled permanently. He was married in October, 1855, to Ruth A. Totten, who was born in Carroll Co., Ohio, June 13, 1836. Ten children have been born to them—George, William, John, Jonathan E., James, Archibald, Lona Belle, Nora Maud, Christina Mary and Winnie K. Mr. Wanlass has taken an interest in town and county affairs. He has filled offices of honor and trust in the town and county, and was chairman of the first board of the town of Marshall.

John Hart, deceased, one of the pioneers and representative men of Richland county, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, March 17, 1826. Here his childhood and youth were spent, his time being occupied in going to school and working upon the farm. He was married in 1844 to Eleanor Marshall, who was also born in Columbiana Co., July 2, 1824. They remained in Ohio until 1854, when they came to Richland county. He entered timber land on section 11, town 11, range 1 west, in the present town of Marshall. The first tree cut on the place was for the pioneer log cabin, afterwards replaced by a neat frame house. He also cleared a large farm and erected a large frame barn. Here he lived until the time of his death, April 14, 1876. He had lived to see the wilderness in which he settled transformed into a finely improved and cultivated country, with good schools and churches. Mr. and Mrs. Hart were the parents of ten children, five of whom are now living—Maria, Thomas, Millard Fillmore, Caroline and Georgia. Maria is now the wife of James Truesdale. Georgia is married to Frank Doudna. Millard Fillmore occupies the homestead with his mother. He was born in 1855, July 15, and was married in 1877 to Olive, daughter of John and Elvina (Steele) Truesdale. They have one child—Julian G. Mr. Hart while living had the respect and confidence of his fellow men to a remarkable degree, and his death was a loss not only to his family but to the community and county in which he lived.

Daniel Noble is one of the pioneers of Richland county. He is a native of Scotland and was but ten months old when his parents left their native home and came to America, settling in Columbiana Co., Ohio. Here his childhood and youth were spent. His education was obtained in a subscription school, that being the only opportunity at that time. He was married in 1838 to Margaret Dreghorn, also a native of Scotland, born in Kelmarnich, March 21, 1814. They remained in Columbiana county until 1854, then came to Richland county and entered land in town 11, range 1 west, now the town of Marshall. They came by water as far as Galena, taking passage at Wellsville, Ohio, on the steamer Minnesota Belle. They were twenty-one days in reaching Galena, where they embarked with teams, for Fancy creek. On their arrival they stopped with a neighbor for a short time, while he selected his claim and built a log cabin. The first year he rented a small piece of cleared land and raised a crop of corn and vegetables. He raised the first crop on his own land in 1855, and sowed the first wheat in the fall of that year. He lived upon the farm until 1878. In the month of September of that year, he met with an irreparable loss in the death of his wife. Since that time he has made his home with his son, Daniel L. He still owns his farm, which contains 320 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Noble were the parents of six children, two now living—William and Daniel L. His son Daniel L. was born Oct. 20, 1848, and was married Dec. 29, 1870, to Annie, daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (McDonald) Smith. Three children have blessed their union—Daniel Alexander, Margaret E. and Mary L. After his marriage, he lived on section 3, for three years, then located upon his present farm on section 24, and lived in the pioneer log cabin until 1883, except two years, 1879 and 1880, when he was elected sheriff and removed to Richland Center, when he built a large frame house. He is an enterprising man and is engaged, not only in farming, but is dealing in stock. He has taken a lively interest in public affairs and has served as town clerk, and in 1878 was elected sheriff of Richland county, discharging his duties in a manner satisfactory to his constituents. William J., the older brother, now lives on the old homestead. He was married to Delilah Copenhefer, during the winter of 1879. They have had three children, one now living—Emma Alice.

William Richards, (deceased) one of the earliest settlers of English Ridge, was born in Cambridgeshire, England, Sept. 6, 1816. He was married Jan. 19, 1846, to Mary Minett, who was born in Cambridgeshire, July 11, 1823. In 1850 they came to America, landed at New York and came directly to Wisconsin and located in Walworth county, remaining there until 1855, when they came to Richland county and settled on section 27, of the town of Marshall. Here he cleared a farm and built a log cabin, which, a few years later, was replaced by a frame house, in which he lived until the time of his death. He was an enterprising and industrious man, respected by all who knew him. Mr. and Mrs. Richards are the parents of seven children—William, John, Sarah, James, Ella, Harriet and Lucy. Ella died March 13, 1881, aged twenty-three years and five months. The family still live at the homestead.

Hon. J. B. McGrew, one of the prominent representative men of Richland county, was born near Smithfield, Jefferson Co., Ohio, Jan. 28, 1829. His education was such as could be obtained at that time in the district school, which he attended as opportunity offered until he was fifteen years old. Meanwhile his father had leased a flouring mill on Yellow creek, and Joseph at the age of fifteen years, was engaged therein, and, giving strict attention to business, soon learned the milling trade. Here he remained about four years; continued milling business until after twenty-one years old, when he rented a farm on Cross creek, in Jefferson county, and remained two years. During the time he formed the acquaintance of Maria E. Brown, a very estimable lady, and a native of Wayne town, to whom he was united in marriage on Dec. 21, 1854. Miss Brown was a lady of refinement and education, and was a teacher in the public schools. During the spring of 1855 they removed to Wisconsin and pre-empted land on section 30, town of Richland, Richland county, where they commenced pioneer life by building a log house and making preparations to "open up" a farm. In a short time he removed to Sextonville, where he was taken sick with ague. This had a discouraging effect, and after about four weeks of "chilling and shaking," a sensation known only to those who have had actual, personal experience with this disease, he sold his claim and returned to Jefferson Co., Ohio. Here his experience in his father's mill proved an available resource, and he rented Wood's flouring mill, on McIntire creek. This business was continued here until the spring of 1857, when he removed to Mereer Co., Ill. Meanwhile he was not altogether satisfied, a taste of the western country having given him an appetite for a larger experience. His thoughts continually wandered to the State he had visited, and consequently, in about a year, he returned to Richland county and bought eighty acres of the same land he had previously pre-empted, erected a house, and went to work putting the land in preparation for a farm. In the spring of 1861 he again removed to Sextonville, and was engaged in George Krouskop's mill for four years, then returned to his farm, having purchased an additional eighty joining. In 1880, having a good opportunity, he sold out and again returned to Ohio, with the intention of purchasing a flour mill, but, for some reason, the owner concluding not to sell, he immediately became a permanent resident of Richland county, and purchased a farm on section 8, town of Richland, which he sold in 1882 and bought the McKy farm, consisting of 200 acres, and has since added forty acres, all of which is located in the town of Marshall, where he now resides. Mr. McGrew has been a man of intelligence and sterling qualities, which could not but be appreciated in any community where he resided. He was not an office seeker, but on account of intrinsic merit and personal popularity, he was, in 1873, elected to the Legislature, and in 1879 was a member of the Senate. He has filled those places, and minor offices from time to time, with honor to himself and credit to his constituency. He was chairman of the town board nine years, was sheriff in 1868, was chairman of the county board in 1872, was under-sheriff in 1870, and assessor in 1866. Thus it may be seen he was eminently popular and successful as a public man. The people were unanimous in their wish to be represented by him in the Assembly, and so expressed themselves at the polls. Being careful and painstaking in all matters of interest to the public, perfectly free from egotism, and determined in his opposition to any measure calculated to abridge the rights of the people, his participation in public matters, earned for himself an enviable reputation, and, indeed, his entire action proved eminently satisfactory. Mr. and Mrs. McGrew have reared six children, four now living—Ella S., Mary B., Lizzie K. and Jay B. Eva F., a twin sister of Ella, was born Sept. 5, 1857, and died Sept. 10, 1878. Maggie H. was born July 16, 1859, and died April 24, 1879.

Joseph Moon was one of the first settlers on English Ridge, having come there in the fall of 1855. He had previously entered land on section 27. He has cleared a good farm and erected a neat frame house, in which he is now living. He is a native of England, born in Cambridgeshire, in May, 1812. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and in 1835 was married to Sarah Richards, also a native of Cambridgeshire, born in June, 1815. In 1851 they left their native land for America, taking passage in a sailing vessel. They were six weeks in crossing the ocean, and landed in New York in December of that year. They spent the winter in Buffalo; and removed to Wisconsin in the spring. He rented a farm in Walworth county, where they remained until 1855, then came to Richland county. Nine children have been born to them, four of whom are now living—Maria, (now the wife of William Minett), John R., William and Arthur. Mrs. Moon died June 18, 1880. Their son, William, was born in Cambridgeshire, England, Aug. 7, 1845, and came to Richland county with his parents and lived with them until the time of his marriage in 1874 to Sarah McKy, who was born in Tippecanoe Co., Ind. They have three children—Nellie Z., Jay W. and Louie C.

William Coulter, one of the early settlers of the town of Marshall, is a native of Ohio. He was born in Clinton county, Sept. 27, 1815. His father was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died while in the United States service, in 1815, four months previous to the birth of the subject of this sketch. When he was two years of age his mother was married to Amos Wilson, and continued to reside in Clinton county where he grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the district school. At twenty-two years of age he left home and went to Indiana and located in Delaware county. He was married there to Barbara Babb, who was born in Clinton county, March 4, 1817. He purchased land in Delaware county and improved a farm. In 1855 he came to Richland county and entered land on section 7, town of Marshall. He then returned to Indiana and remained until August, 1856, then, in company with his family, started with a pair of oxen and a span of horses for their new home, taking their household goods and cooking utensils with them. They camped out upon the way and arrived at their destination after three weeks of travel. They first moved into a log cabin in Sylvan, while he could erect one on his land. The following winter, while Mr. Coulter was absent from home, one of the children informed Mrs. Coulter that there was a deer near by. She armed herself with the rifle and went out and shot it. When her husband returned he found her and the children engaged in skinning the animal. Mr. Coulter has since cleared a large farm and the log cabin has been replaced by the neat frame dwelling, which they now occupy. Mr. and Mrs. Coulter have four children—Calvin W., John B., Smith G. and Eli S. John B. is still living at home with his parents and he is the present town treasurer.

Joseph Benton, Sr., (deceased) one of the early settlers of Marshall, was a native of Scotland, born in Aberdeenshire, April 20, 1803. His wife, whose maiden name was Janet Davidson, was a native of Banffshire, born in 1806. In 1834 they emigrated to America and settled in Jefferson Co., Ohio, where they bought and improved a farm, living there until 1854. They then came to Richland county and purchased timber land on section 13, town 11, range 1 west, now known as Marshall. Here he improved a farm and lived until the time of his death, which occurred July 14, 1880. He left four children—Joseph, George, Robert and Margaret, now the wife of Olney Hoskins. His widow still occupies the homestead.

Joseph Benton, Jr., was born in Elginshire, Scotland, Nov. 19, 1826, and came to America with his parents when in his eighth year. He grew to manhood in Jefferson Co., Ohio, obtaining his education in the public schools. In 1852 he came to Richland county and entered land on section 14, town 11, range 1 west, now known as Marshall. After entering this land he returned to Ohio, where he was married in 1854 to Jane Russell, a native of Jefferson county. In 1855 they started for their new home in the far west, traveling by rail as far as Warren, Ill., the nearest railroad station. The remainder of the journey was accomplished by team. He first built a log cabin, which by mistake was located on land that did not belong to him. Soon after he built a hewed log house upon his own land. In 1875 he erected the neat frame house in which he now lives. They have three children—Robert K., Rebecca J. (now the wife of Arthur Moon) and James. Mr. Benton is a man of sound judgment and has the respect and confidence of his fellowmen to a remarkable degree. He has been successful as a farmer, and now owns a good place in the fertile valley of Fancy creek.

Levi Peckham (deceased,) was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Sept. 12, 1829. Here his younger days were spent upon a farm. In 1849 he was united in marriage with Mary Clark, who was born in Jefferson county, Nov. 12; 1830. They continued living in Ohio until 1855, at which time they came to Richland county, locating in town 12, range 1 west, now the town of Bloom, and living there until 1861 when he purchased a tract of land on section 2, town of Marshall, and immediately commenced clearing his present farm. March 17, 1865, he was drafted into the service, and went to Madison where he was taken sick and died May 16 of the same year, leaving a wife and seven children—Caroline D., Hugh C., William S., Orrin S., Matthew, John W. and Levi R. Orrin died at the age of eleven. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Peckham has carried on the farm successfully, and with the aid of her children cleared a large tract.

George Davis, one the early settlers of the town of Marshall, was born in Loudoun Co., Va., in August, 1823. When he was twelve years of age his parents moved to Ohio and settled in Knox county. Here he grew to manhood and was married in 1850 to Margaret Kerby, born in Knox Co., Oct. 25, 1827. In 1855 they started west to seek a home and came to Richland county, making the journey overland with four horses and a pair of oxen, bringing their household goods with them. They worked and camped on the way, and after four weeks travel reached their destination. He entered land on section 30 of the town of Marshall as before stated. Here he first erected a log cabin covering it with shakes, and split puncheon for the floor. He lived in this humble abode for several years, then erected a frame house in which he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are now the parents of two children—Joseph E. and Harrison O. Joseph E. was born Jan. 7, 1852, went to Richland county and grew to manhood in the town of Marshall, receiving his education in the district school. He was married in 1877 to Mary L. Queen. He built a hewed log house on his father's farm and lived there until 1883, when he bought a farm on the northeast quarter of section 29. He has three children—Grace L., Myron C. and Minnie M.

Henry Merrill, a pioneer settler of Fancy creek valley, was born in Stark Co., Ohio, March 5, 1826. When he was five years old, his parents moved to Carroll county. His father, there purchased timber land and cleared a farm, in which the subject of this sketch assisted him. Taking advantage of the opportunities then offered, he received a fair education. He was married Aug. 25, 1847, to Eliza McNelly. She was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., Feb. 23, 1824. He bought land in Carroll county and remained there until 1855, when he settled on his present farm in Richland county. In coming here he traveled by rail as far as Warren, Ill., which was then the nearest railroad station. There he hired a horse and sled and completed the journey. He first built a rude cabin of round logs, covered it with "shakes" and made puncheon for the floor. This humble abode was his home until 1866, when he erected the frame house he now occupies. Mrs. Merrill was one of the first members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Merrill, though not a member of the Church, lends willing aid, and was one of the committee in charge of building the new church. Henry McNelly, a nephew of Mrs. Merrill, was reared by her, she having had charge of him from the tender age of eleven months. He was married in 1875 to Salina, daughter of William and Mary (Thompson) Francis. They have two children—Lester Everett and Francis Clark.

Henry Kepler, one of the pioneers of Marshall, was born in Greene Co., Penn., in February, 1811. When he was ten years old, his parents emigrated to Ohio, and settled in Columbiana county, where he grew to manhood. While a young man he was engaged in a mill, and learned the trade of carding and cloth making. In April, 1834, he was married to Jane Patten. She was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Jan. 27, 1814. They lived in Pennsylvania until 1838, then moved to Ohio and settled in Columbiana county. They remained there three and a half years, then removed to Meigs county, remaining there until 1855, when they started west to seek a home, taking with them a yoke of oxen, a span of horses and two wagons; also household goods and cooking utensils. They camped by the way. After traveling forty days, they arrived at Mill creek, and settled on land that he had entered a few months previously. He at first built a round log house, and later one of hewed logs, which in a few years gave way to the frame house which he now occupies. Mr. and Mrs. Kepler have had three sons born to them—William F., Joseph and Sylvester. The oldest son, William F., came to Richland county with his parents and has always lived at the homestead, and is one of the most extensive farmers in the town. He built on this farm the second frame barn erected in the town, which is still standing, and in good repair. He has since erected another frame barn, also a large frame house which is one of the finest residences in the county. He was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Dec. 18, 1834, and was three and a half years old when his parents moved to Ohio, where he received a liberal education in the district schools. When he was fourteen years of age he was engaged in a shop and learned to make spinning wheels. He continued to work there three or four years, then engaged in carpentering. In 1854 he went to Mississippi, where he spent the winter, working at building a cotton-gin and feed mill, returning in the spring, and in company with his father, came to Richland county and selected the site of their present farm. For a few years after coming to Marshall, he worked at his trade as carpenter. In the year 1860 he erected a barn and tannery for Judge Fries at Richland Center. Many of the spinning wheels in the county were made by him. In 1880 he purchased the saw-mill on Mill creek, of Mr. Saltsman, put in new machinery, and now operates the same as a business. He has been twice married. His first wife was Rachel Kerby, who bore him two children—Elmer and Almond. His second wife was Mariam Bailey, daughter of Isaac and Martha Doudna, who died in 1881, leaving one child—Isolla.

Thomas Parsons, the subject of this sketch, was born in London, England, May 12, 1812. His father died when he was but eight years old, and he was sent into the country to live, where he grew to man's estate. He came to America in 1841 and located in Canada, where he made the acquaintance of Mary Harris, who was the daughter of John and Mary Harris, and to whom he was married in the year 1843. In 1844 they moved to the State of New York and purchased a home in Onondaga town, Onondaga county. There he was employed on public works, remaining there until 1856, and then coming to Richland county. Here he purchased a tract of timber land on section 28, built a house and continued to reside there until the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 25, 1876. He was a very industrious man, and had the satisfaction of leaving his family provided with a good home. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons have had nine children born to them, five of whom are now living—William, David, George, Jane and John. Mrs. Parsons was again married in 1876 to James Ward, who is also a native of England, born in Cambridgeshire in 1820. He had come to America in 1851 and located in Wisconsin, living in Walworth and Rock counties until the fall of 1854, when he came to Richland county and settled on section 35, town 11, range 1 west, in the present town of Marshall, where he still resides. He has been three times married. The first time, in 1841, to Maria Graham who died a few years after his settlement in Richland county. Three of her children are living—Edward, Alfred and Angeline. His second wife was Annie Dunford. She died in 1871, leaving five children—Alice, Rose, Carrie, Annie M. and Ellie.

William Saltsman was born in Knox town, Jefferson Co., Ohio, Dec. 5, 1810. He was among the pioneers of the town of Marshall, coming there in 1856. His early life, until he was seventeen years of age, was spent upon a farm, and he improved such opportunities as offered to gain an education. At that age he was apprenticed to a shoemaker to learn the trade, served three years, then worked as journeyman two years. He then engaged with an uncle, farming during the summer season, and in a saw-mill winters, which he continued eight years. In the month of March, 1835, he was married to Kesiah Maple, who was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio. He went to Iowa in 1842, and remained for a short time; returned to Jefferson county and purchased a farm in Salina town, which he sold in 1852 and went to Hammondsville, where he was employed in a warehouse until 1856, at which date he came to Richland county, as before stated, and settled upon land on section 19, in the town of Marshall. He made the journey as far as Davenport by rail, thence by boat to Prairie du Chien, and from there in a wagon to Muscoda; at that place they hired a conveyance to take them to their new home. They stayed at the house of Samuel Groves, in the town of Sylvan, until a round log cabin could be built. The same year he commenced building a saw-mill on Mill creek, which he completed the following year. He continued to operate this mill in connection with farming until 1880, when he sold out there and bought his present home, an improved farm, and good frame house and barn, located on section 10.

Lyman Hart, a pioneer of the town of Marshall, came here in 1856 and purchased 160 acres of heavily timbered land on section 1. He first built a log cabin in the valley, and commenced with his ax to "hew out" a farm. In 1862 he erected a comfortable frame house, at that time considered quite elegant, frame houses being then the exception. It is pleasantly located on a ridge near the center of his farm. He has engaged in the raising of stock as well as grain, and been quite successful as a fruit grower. Mr. Hart is a native of Columbiana Co., Ohio, born July 24, 1824. He was brought up on a farm, and obtained his education in the common schools. In November, 1851, he was married to Sarah Clark, a native of Jefferson county. They resided in Columbiana county three years, when they removed to Jefferson county and lived there until 1856. They then came to Richland county, traveling by rail as far as Mazomanie, then the nearest railway station, where he hired a conveyance to take them to Richland Center. The remainder of the journey was performed with an ox team. They remained with the family of Alanson Clark until the cabin was completed. Mr. Hart is, and always has been, a republican.

Isaac Doudna, the present assessor of the town of Marshall, first settled there in 1861, having purchased land on section 28. In 1864

he rented his farm and went to Missouri, with the intention of locating there. His family were not satisfied, and consequently they returned in the fall of the same year. In the spring of 1865 he purchased land on section 21, which place has since been his home. He is a native of Ohio, born in Belmont county, Aug. 31, 1810, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving his education in the subscription schools. He made his home with his parents until twenty-two years old, when he was married to Martha Peebles. She was born in Prince George Co., Va., Nov. 19, 1814. He then purchased a farm in the town of Warren, where he made his home until 1861, when he came to Richland county and settled in the town of Marshall. They have eight children living—Deborah, John, Thomas, Euphemia, Isaac, William, Frank and Edgar. The eldest son, named Benjamin, was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Nov. 20, 1840. He enlisted in the army in June, 1862, in the 20th Wisconsin, company K. He was transferred to company G, and was killed at the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., Dec. 7, 1862. Their son, John, who now has a farm on section 19, also did valiant service in the Union army. Their son Frank lives on the old homestead and carries on the farm. He was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, in July, 1856; was married Oct. 29, 1882, to Georgia, daughter of John and Elanora (Marshall) Hart. They have one child—Leon Hart. The youngest son, Edgar, was born in Missouri. Mr. Doudna had filled the office of assessor in Ohio, so the duties were familiar to him when called upon here. This office he has filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people for many terms. He also has held the office of justice of the peace. Politically he is a democrat. Religiously he may be called a Liberal, and has no connection with any Church.

John Truesdale was one of the early explorers of Richland county. He first visited here in 1852 and entered land on section 25, town 11, range 1 west, now known as Marshall. He tarried but a short time and returned to Mahoning Co., Ohio. Two years later he moved to Pennsylvania and lived until 1858, when he returned to Ohio, and remained until 1863. He then came to Marshall and settled on his land. He was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Dec. 2, 1814. While he was quite young his parents removed to Mahoning Co., Ohio, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits. He at first attended a subscription and afterward the public school, and acquired a fair education. He was married in 1842 to Elvina Steele, also a native of Beaver Co., Penn. She died in 1858, leaving five children—Joseph C., James R., and twins John O. and Olive, and Charles C. Olive is now the wife of Millard F. Hart. His present wife, to whom he was married in 1863, was Adeline Young, who was born in Ohio. They have two children—Emma Rena and William C.

W. O. Allison settled in Richland county in 1865. He first purchased land on section 10, where he lived until 1872. He then bought land on section 16. In 1880 he purchased his present farm, which contains 240 acres, located on section 4. It is watered by Fancy creek. He was born in Belmont Co., Ohio. His father was a carpenter and lived in different places, working at his trade, until 1850, when he went to California and spent two years, then returned and purchased a farm in Belmont county. In 1860 he disposed of this property and removed to the village of Fairview, where he resumed work at his trade. The subject of this sketch made his home with his parents until 1861, when, at the first call for troops, he became inspired with patriotism, and, his parents being unwilling, he ran away from home and enlisted in company K, 17th Ohio Volunteers. After serving four months and five days he was discharged with the regiment and returned home. The 4th of October, of the same year, he again enlisted in the 74th Ohio, company K, and immediately went to the front with the regiment and served until the close of the war. Among the many engagements in which he participated are the following: Fort Henry, Nealy's Bend, Stone River, Tullahoma, Hoover's Gap and Missionary Ridge, all in Tennessee. He was with Sherman on his ever memorable march through Georgia to the sea, thence through the Carolinas to Washington, participating in the many hard-fought battles of that exciting campaign. He had veteranized Feb. 4, 1864 and was soon after appointed corporal, serving until the close of the war. He was not sick a day of the time and was discharged July 10, 1865. On his way home an accident occurred on the railroad, he was caught between two cars and held there for one and a half hours. His leg was broken and he was otherwise badly bruised, and in consequence was laid up for several months. Mr. Allison has been twice married. His first wife was Sarah Penter, who was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, and died in 1872, leaving two children—Ida and James. His second wife was Agnes Pippin, who was born in Tippecanoe Co., Ind. His parents were early settlers of the town of Bloom.

Hon. Philip Smith settled on his present farm in 1867. It is located on sections 13 and 24, in the Fancy creek valley. He was the son of Alexander and Elizabeth (McDonald) Smith, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, Sept. 23, 1836, where he was brought up to agricultural pursuits, obtaining what education he could as opportunity offered in the public schools. In 1855 he visited Richland county, remained a short time, and returned to his former home where he remained a number of years and then started for the mountains. He visited Colorado, Utah, California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. After this extended trip, and considerable experience with much travel, in 1865 he returned to Ohio. The following year Janet N. Smith became his wife, she was also a native of Columbiana county. After this important event of his life he moved to Pennsylvania and engaged in mercantile business in the oil regions. Here he remained but a few months when he came to Marshall as before stated.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had seven children—Emma A., Eliza M., Elizabeth J., Maggie B., Edson A., Anna B. and Burkie Mabel. The first child, Emma A., was born Feb. 8, 1867, and died July 5, 1882. Mr. Smith is a public spirited man and has filled many positions of trust and honor in the county, and is at this time chairman of the town board. He has twice represented his district in the Legislature, being elected to that position in November, 1873, and in 1877. His second election was a public endorsement of his course and position, and was a well deserved compliment to a worthy man.

Wm. A. Balsley was born March 4, 1847, in Washington Co., Penn. When six months old his parents, John S. and Julian Balsley, removed to Fox township, Carroll Co., Ohio, in the year 1865. Mr. Balsley joined the Presbyterian Church of Mechanicstown and Jan. 3, 1872, was married to Annie K. Twaddle, by the Rev. H. Y. Seepeier, at the residence of Wm. Kelly, Jr., a resident of Jefferson Co., Ohio. His wife was a member of United Presbyterian Church, of Yellow Creek, Ohio, with which she united when fifteen years old. On March 24, 1872, they boarded the cars at Salineville, Ohio, and on March 28, 1872, arrived at Lone Rock, Wis. On the 26th they took the stage to Richland Center, and in April, 1872, both united by letter with the Presbyterian Church of Fancy Creek. They removed to an old house on H. Marshall's land and lived there till June 17, 1872, and then moved into a cabin on land which Mr. Balsley had purchased. It was located on section 21. They lived there till May 18, 1883, then removed to their present residence. They are the parents of five sons, four living—John K., W. L., Addie J., and C. B. The second son, J. M., died at the age of two months, and is buried in the Fancy Creek grave yard.

Edmund B. Looker came to Richland county in 1872, and settled in the town of Marshall. He purchased the northeast quarter of section 6, about twenty-five acres of which was cleared.

He has now seventy acres cleared. The farm has been rented the greater part of the time, while he has lived at ease. He is a native of New York city, born Feb. 13, 1811. When but an infant, he was taken in charge by his grandparents, who lived in the town of Orange, Essex Co., N. J., gaining his education in a subscription school. When he was eleven years of age his grandfather died, and he found a home among strangers. At the age of twelve he was apprenticed to a shoemaker to learn the trade. After serving six years, he worked as a journeyman until the age of twenty-one, when he went to Cumberland Co., Penn., and opened a shoemaker's shop and continued the business for twenty years. He then moved to Ohio and settled in Fulton county, upon land having water power upon it, in the town of Gorham. Here he built a saw-mill which he operated. He also cleared a farm. At the end of eight years he sold out, removed to Indiana, and purchased a farm in Union township, Adams county, also a sorghum mill, and engaged in making syrup, living there until 1872, at which date he came to Richland county. In 1835 Mr. Looker went to New York city on a combined business and social trip, making the journey the greater portion of the way on foot. He returned by steamboat and rail, traveling on the only railroads in the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In the fall of 1853, he made a trip to northwestern Ohio by his own conveyance, being twenty days on the journey.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

TOWN OF ORION.

The town of Orion lies in the southern tier of towns the second from the east line of the county, and is bounded on the north by Richland; on the east by Buena Vista; on the south by Iowa county, from which it is separated by the Wisconsin river, and on the west by Eagle. It embraces the territory of congressional township 9 north, range 1 east, except the eastern tier of sections; and also that portion of township 8 north, range 1 east, which lies north of the Wisconsin river. The surface of the town is rather broken and inclined to be hilly; yet there are many fine farms here and an abundance of natural timber. A large part of the town is upon the rich bottom lands of the Wisconsin river, and no finer scenery, nor more fertile, fruitful land can be found. The census of 1880 gave the town a population of 733. There are 102 farms here in a good state of cultivation.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlers within the limits now comprising the town of Orion were: John R. Smith and his son-in-law, Thomas Mathews, the former a native of Kentucky, the later of Tennessee. They came from Grant county, in October, 1842, and claimed fraction No. 6, town 8, range 1 west, and fraction No. 5, town 8, range 1 east, entering the land two or three years later. After they had entered the land, they sold a half interest to Orrin E. Barber, and laid out the village plat of the present village of Orion. The plat then laid upon fraction No. 5, town 8, range 1 east, and contained fourteen blocks of eight lots each. This was the initial step of founding the village. Its history is treated at length in the proper place.

R. J. Darnall, a native of Kentucky, came in 1843, and located in Orion, entering land on section 19. He engaged in mercantile trade and also improved his farm. In 1856 he removed to the town of Forest, and for some years kept a hotel. He now lives in Illinois.

William Thompson, a native of Kentucky, came here from Missouri, in 1846, and made a claim on sections 14 and 15. He did not prove up on this place, but entered land on section 2, where he erected a saw-mill. In 1858 he sold out and removed to Kansas. He now lives at Blue Rapids, Marshall Co., Kan., where he is engaged at farming.

William Mathews, a native of Illinois, came at about the same time as did Mr. Thompson. He entered land on section 32, where he lived for several years. He now lives in Missouri.

Green Mayfield, a native of Tennessee, came here from Iowa county in 1847, and made a claim on section 4, entering the land a few years later. He settled there in March, 1848, and still occupies the place.

David Mayfield, also a native of Tennessee, came from Grant county in June, 1847, and entered land on sections 3 and 10. He improved the farm and made this his home until 1883; when he sold out; he now lives at Richland Center.

Carlos Joslyn, a native of Vermont, came here from Mineral Point in 1847 and settled on the southeast quarter of section 9. In 1848 he sold this place and removed to the southwest quarter of section 10, remaining a resident of the town until 1853. He now lives with his son-in-law, L. Renick, in the town of Henrietta.

W. H. Joslyn, a son of Carlos Joslyn, came here in 1848, and was a resident of the town until 1852. He now lives in Richland Center. He has held many positions of public trust and responsibility, and is a prominent man in county affairs.

In July, 1848, a party of Germans, consisting of Henry Sigrist and Henry and Frederick Scherman, came prospecting for land. After selecting land they returned and brought their families in August, of the same year. Henry Sigrist entered the south half of the southwest quarter of section 3. Henry Scherman selected land on sections 2 and 3, where he cleared a farm and lived until the time of his death. Frederick Scherman purchased land of Carlos Joslyn, on section 9, where he remained until the time of his death.

Walter Gage, a native of the State of New York, came here in 1849 and entered fraction No. 2, on section 34. He started a ferry there which, in 1850, he traded to James Law. Mr. Law erected a large frame house upon the land, which at that time was the largest house in the county. The place took the name of "Law's Ferry," and for years this was a land-mark to all settlers in this region.

Levi Houts, a native of Indiana, came here in 1849 from Muscoda, and entered land on sections 3 and 10, town 9, range 1 west. He now lives on section 31, town 9, range 1 east.

John Mainwaring, a native of Wales, in company with his two sons, Daniel and John, came here from England, in 1849. Daniel died in April, 1850. The son, John, bought a claim from John Mathews on the southeast quarter of section 33, and entered the land. He lived there two years, then returned to England. In 1865 he came back and bought land on section 27, where he now lives. The father settled on John's land, on section 33, where he lived until 1865 when he went to live with his son, where he died in 1876.

Charles N. Kneefe, a native of Germany, came here in 1849 and settled on sections 14 and 15, having entered the land previous to this time. He lived there for several years and is now a resident of Dane county.

Alanson Hurd, a native of the State of New York, came at about the same time and settled on the northwest quarter of section 3. He lived there a short time and then removed to the southeast quarter of section 10. He now lives in Vernon county.

Reason Barnes, a carpenter, by trade, came here in 1849, but in a short time removed to Boaz.

Dr. Jacob Brimer, a native of the State of New York, came here in 1851 and located on section 21. His home is now on section 2.

John Henry Demmer, a native of Germany, came here from Milwaukee in 1853 and purchased a claim of Alanson Hurd on section 3. He entered the land from the government and still makes it his home.

Peter Bobb, a native of Maryland, came here from Pennsylvania in 1854 and purchased land on section 32, where he still lives.

Hezekiah Jones, a native of Kentucky, came here from Indiana, in 1854. He selected land on section 10, where he still resides.

In the spring of 1854 Abram Miller, a native of Kentucky, came from Indiana and bought land of the Joslyns, on section 10. He still occupies the place.

Henry Wilson, a native of Butler Co., Ohio, came from Indiana in the spring of 1854 and bought land on section 9, where he still resides.

Frederick Schmidt came from Germany in 1854 and bought land on section 16, where he lived until the time of his death.

Simon S. Blake, a native of Pennsylvania, came at about the same time and entered 120 acres of land on sections 17 and 18. He erected a log house on the latter section, improved a farm and still lives here.

James Lewis, a native of Ohio, came in 1854 and located on section 7, where he still resides.

John Bobb, a native of Pennsylvania, came here in the spring of 1855 and bought land on section 32, where he cleared a farm and erected a neat house and barn. When the war broke out, he enlisted, and died in the service. The only child he left, a son, now lives in Nebraska.

John Hamilton, a native of Pennsylvania, came from there in the spring of 1855 and located in the village of Orion, where he still lives.

After this time the settlement became more rapid, and the vacant land in the town was soon taken by an enterprising class of pioneers who have all done their share toward developing the natural resources of the town. Many of these are noticed elsewhere, so it will be unnecessary to make further reference to them in this connection.

FIRST THINGS.

The first birth in the town of Orion, as well as the first in the eastern portion of the county, was that of Mary Mathews. She was born Nov. 13, 1843, and was a daughter of Thomas and Catharine Mathews. She married Sanford Miller, and remained in Orion for a number of years, then removed to the town of Forest, where she died in 1870. She left three children, two of whom are now living at Reedsburg.

The first child of German parentage born in the town, was Henry, a son of Henry and Caroline Sigrist, born April 24, 1849. He is now married, and is still a resident of the town.

The first marriage in the town was that of Joseph Parrish to Catharine McClellan, the ceremony being performed by J. R. Smith, a justice of the peace. They were a runaway couple from Muscoda. They lived in Orion for a time, then moved to Muscoda. The husband finally died in the town of Eagle, where he had been keeping a saloon.

One of the first deaths in the town was that of John Nipple, who died in about 1850. The remains were buried in the cemetery at Orion.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in district No. 1 was taught by Mrs. David Mayfield, at her house, in 1851. Mrs. Alanson Hurd taught the next term of school. In 1853 a log house was erected on section 10. This school house was in use for several years, and was then replaced by a neat frame building.

The school house in district No. 4, which is located on section 8, was erected in 1858. David Wacker was one of the first teachers in this building.

The first school in district No. 5 was taught in 1858 by Simon S. Blake, in a frame building erected during the same year on the eastern part of section 19. During the war the organization of the district was abandoned and the territory was attached to other districts. In 1865 the district was re-organized and a hewn log school house was erected, in which Sarah Gaston was the first teacher. In the winter of 1881-2 a new building was erected in which Julia Thompson taught the first school.

The first school in district No. 7 was taught by Lucita Law during the war. The district had purchased a building that had been erected for school purposes on section 34, but there were then but few settlers in the neighborhood, and they could not support a school, so the building was sold to district No. 7 to raise money to pay the teacher. The building was moved to the southwest quarter of section 32, where it was used for school purposes until 1880, when a neat frame building was erected a quarter of a mile east of the old site. Ada Bobb was the first teacher in the present house. Minnie Lawrence is the present teacher.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services in the northern part of the town were held in the old log school house on section 10, by Rev. Mr. Pryor, but no organization was effected at that time.

Rev. Josiah Burlingame preached in the same building and held protracted meetings in an early day. He organized a Methodist Episcopal class, among the first members of which were: Green Mayfield and wife; Alanson Hurd and wife; Charles Frye and wife and David Mayfield and wife. Charles Frye was chosen class leader. For a time the class met for worship in a building on section 4, which belonged to Green Mayfield, and later in the school house on section 8. Revs. Hall, Cook and Chase were among the pastors who served the class. During the war some of the members went into the service, while others moved away and, for a time, meetings were discontinued. Some years later Rev. Brakeman re-organized the class at a meeting held at the school house on section 8. The following were among the members who joined at that time: Simon S. Blake and wife, Charles Bobb, Charles Frye and wife, Randolph Sandlin and wife, Andrew Crawford and wife and Andrew Shane and wife. Charles Bobb was chosen class leader. The class met for worship in the school house until 1871, when they erected a hewn log church edifice on the southeast quarter of section 7. Among the pastors who have filled the pulpit for the class are: Revs. Jackson, Smith, Crouch, Waldron, McGinley, Sackett, Burnett, Clifton and Med. The last named is the present pastor.

At an early day a Sabbath school of this denomination was organized at the school house on section 8, of which Charles Frye was the first superintendent. J. W. Shane is the present superintendent.

The first meetings of members of the German Evangelical Church were held at the house of Henry Sigrist, in about 1852. Rev. Riegel, from Sauk county, was the preacher. Rev. Schnake organized a class in the log school house, soon after it was built. Among the first members of the class were: Henry Sigrist and wife, Henry Scherman and wife, Charles Kneefe and wife, Fred Scherman and wife and William Scherman and wife. Henry Scherman was the first class leader. Meetings were afterward held in a vacant log house on section 3, which was purchased. In 1869 the frame building which they now occupy was erected on the old site. Rev. Nesh is the present pastor.

A Sabbath school was organized at an early day, of which Henry Scherman was the first superintendent and held the position for many years. Henry Flemme is the present superintendent. The school meets every Sunday, and has a large attendance.

There is also a cemetery under the management of this society, which is located near the church.

The German Lutheran Church was organized in 1857, at the Ash creek log school house, by Rev. Rolock. Among the first members were: Philip Daniel Berger and wife, Henry Demmer and wife, and Frederick Smith and wife. Several others joined soon after the organization was effected, and services were held in the school house for a number of years. A substantial log church, however, has been erected, in which services are now held.

MILL.

In 1848 William Thompson erected a saw-mill on section 2. The power was derived from Ash creek, and the mill was equipped with an old fashioned "up and down saw." Machinery for grinding corn was soon added. It was a small affair, but was a great convenience to the settlers in those days. Caleb Merris, a resident of the town of Ithaca, once came to the mill to have some corn ground, and, on his return, he told the neighbors that it was the "smartest" mill he had ever seen. He said that "as soon as it got through with one kernel, it would go right to work on another." Mr. Thompson sold out in 1858 to Jacob Krouskop, who erected a carding mill, and in 1864 Jacob Brimer purchased the property.

OFFICIAL MATTERS.

The town of Orion was first called Richmond, the name being suggested by Thomas Mathews. In 1856 the name was changed to Orion.

The first election in the town of Richmond was held at the house of Mathew Alexander in the fall of 1848.

The town of Richmond was organized at a town meeting held at the house of Thomas Mathews in April, 1849, at which time the first officers of the town were elected. John R. Smith, Myron Whitcomb and R. J. Darnall were chosen inspectors of the election. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, John R. Smith, chairman, Adam Byrd and William Kincannon; clerk, John Nipple; collector, Stephen Finnell; assessor, Walter B. Gage; superintendent of schools, Marvin White; justices of the peace, William Thompson, E. H. Dyer, B. B. Sutton and Mathew Alexander; constables, Nathaniel Green, William White and Daniel H. Byrd; overseers of the highway, L. B. Palmer and William White.

At the annual town meeting held at the school house in district No. 1, on the 3d of April, 1883, W. M. Brimer, Abram Miller and Christopher Ford were chosen inspectors, and Levi Houts and William H. Dooley clerks of the election. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Supervisors, W. M. Brimer, chairman, Herman Bremmer and Henry Emshoff; clerk, Levi Houts; treasurer, W. H. Dooley; assessor, John Emshoff; justices, W. H. Palmer and John Flamme; constables, Chris Berger, Lewis Miller and Thomas Owens; sealer, W. H. Palmer. At this meeting it was voted that a town house be erected, but no money was appropriated for the purpose.

VILLAGE OF ORION.

The first settlers on the plat of the village were John R. Smith and his son-in-law, Thomas Mathews; the former a native of Kentucky, the latter, of Tennessee. They came from Grant county in October, 1842, and claimed fraction No. 6, town 8, range 1 west; and fraction No. 5, town 8, range 1 east, entering the land a few years later. After they had entered the land they sold a half interest to Orrin E. Barber, and they laid out the plat of the village of Richmond, now Orion. It was then located on fraction No. 5, town 8, range 1 east, and contained fourteen blocks of eight lots each. About one year later Mr. Barber sold his interest to Smith & Mathews, and shortly afterwards Thomas Mathews purchased his partner's interest and became sole proprietor. In the fall of 1842, Smith & Mathews started a ferry. The first boat was a platform on two canoes, and for some time the only business the ferry had was the transportation of hunters. When it was necessary to convey a team across the river, the horses were made to swim and the wagon was loaded on the boat.

In 1843 they built a flat boat, and a number of years later, when travel increased, a more expensive boat was built by Mr. Mathews, which was run by horse power. He continued to operate the ferry until the bridge was built, in 1870.

The first man to sell goods on the site of the village was Ephraim Dyer, who kept a small stock of groceries, notions and whisky; the latter being a staple article in those days. Mr. Dyer had in 1849 erected a one story frame building for the purpose—the first store building in the village. He remained in trade about one year, when he sold his building and moved a small portion of his goods to Highland, Iowa county.

Molbry Ripley and Dr. D. L. Downs purchased the Dyer building. They made an addition to it and put in a large stock of general merchandise, including groceries, dry-goods, hardware, crockery, glassware, drugs, and, in fact, everything in general use in this region at that time. They continued in business for a number of years. Dr. Downs now resides in Richland Center, and is probate judge of Richland county. Mr. Ripley after leaving Orion engaged in trade at Boaz and died there.

The first building erected on the village plat was put up by Smith & Mathews in October, 1842. It was a log building about 16x18 feet in size and stood on fraction No. 6. Main street is now located over the site.

The first frame dwelling house in the village was erected by Thomas J. Dayton in 1847-8. He opened the first hotel in the village and kept it for a number of years. The building is still standing, having been greatly improved by additions, and has been run as a hotel the most of the time since its erection. Jefferson Miller is the present proprietor.

The first blacksmith was John Nipple, who opened a shop in 1844. Thomas Mathews furnished him with a shop and the necessary tools. A few years later Nipple died and was succeeded by Thomas Palmer, who continued in business about two years, then sold out. Since that time there have been various parties here in this line, but at present the village is without a blacksmith.

About 1854 William Roush started a tin shop. He remained in business until the war broke out, when he enlisted, and later settled in Iowa.

The first school in the village was taught by Mary Melanthon (now Mrs. Joseph Elliott) in a log building erected for the purpose. The second school was taught by Levi Houts in the same building.

The first religious services in the village were held at the house of Thomas Mathews, as early as 1845. The first preacher was Moses Darnell, a Baptist clergyman from Grant county. He preached here but a few times and was followed by a Methodist preacher from Pedlar's Creek. The first organization was effected by the Methodists.

The inhabitants of Orion were at first supplied with mail from Muscoda until 1851, a messenger being employed to carry the mail and leave the same at Downs' & Ripley's store. In 1851 the postoffice was established with M. Ripley as postmaster. The following have served as postmaster since that time: Messrs. Roush, Byrd, Sims, Miller, Clingensmith and Dawson. The latter is the present postmaster.

The village was first named Richmond, but when application for the establishment of a postoffice was made it was found that there was another postoffice of that name in the State, and the name of Orion, which was suggested by Judge A. B. Slaughter, was adopted.

PERSONAL.

While the following personal sketches are not made up entirely of pioneers of this county, you will find among them some of the oldest settlers in the county.

Capt. John Smith was born in Kentucky, about 1790, and there grew to man's estate. While yet a young man he moved to Illinois. He there enlisted in the Black Hawk War and served as captain. He was married to Elizabeth Holliday, who was also a native of Kentucky. He worked at his trade, which was that of millwright, in Illinois until 1838, when he moved to Wisconsin and located in Iowa county, and there engaged in the lead mines, remaining there until 1841, then removed to Grant county, and settled in Muscoda, where he worked at his trade. He was employed on the first mill ever erected in Richland county, on Mill creek, to which county he came in 1842, remaining here till the time of his death, which occurred in 1851. He left a wife and two children—Catharine, the wife of Thomas Mathews, and Benjamin M., who now lives in the town of Forest. Mrs. Smith afterwards married K. J. Darnall, and died in the town of Forest.

Thomas Mathews, son-in-law of J. R. Smith, and with him the pioneer settler of Orion, was born in Tennessee May 7, 1814. When he was three years of age, his parents moved to Illinois and settled in Montgomery county, where they remained but a short time, then removed to Morgan county, and thence to McDonough county. Thus, as will be seen, his younger days were spent in a new country, where the opportunities for acquiring an education were very limited, yet such as there were he improved, and, being naturally studious, improved his evenings, which he spent at home, and in that way acquired sufficient knowledge for practical purposes. He lived with his parents until 1836, then came to Wisconsin and worked in the lead mines in that part of Iowa now known as La Fayette county. He remained there two years, then to Platteville, Grant county, and engaged in mining one year, and from there to the Pickatonica diggings, Iowa county. In the year 1840 he was married to Catharine Smith, and moved to Muscoda. In company with J. R. Smith he took a contract to build a dam across Mill creek for Parish Mill. They continued to live at Muscoda till 1842, moving from there to Richland county, settling on the site of the present village of Orion, and built the first log cabin in the town. Their cabin, though an humble one, was where strangers ever found the "latch string out," and many procured food and shelter there. Mr. Mathews has been engaged in various enterprises. Among others he has kept a hotel for several years. He was the first white man to go up Pine river in a canoe as far as the natural bridge. He also, in company with J. R. Smith, cut the first road from the Wisconsin river to that place.

William Dooley was one of the first explorers of the Pine river valley. This was in the spring of 1845 and he was engaged at Galena by one Coles, to come to Richland county and assist in building a mill. At this time he was but eighteen years old, and was thus starting out in life, full of vim and energy and bent on securing if possible a fortune, or at least a competence. He was promised $18 per month for his services, and faithfully performed his part for one year, when to his dismay he found himself cheated out of every dollar so honestly earned. This was discouraging for a beginning, but with characteristic pluck he commenced work in the woods getting out lumber and rafting down the river. By this sort of perseverance and with commendable economy under adverse circumstances, he succeeded in accumulating enough money, so that in 1848 he was able financially to enter some land, and at once sought a location, making selection on section 32, town 9, range 1 east, now known as town of Orion. He continued at work in the lumber regions until 1852. When Mr. Dooley first landed in this section of country, it was indeed a wilderness, inhabited by Indians and wild beasts of the forest. A man's life was not always considered safe, particularly when offense had been given the "noble red man." On one occasion the Indians concluded to go to Muscoda, and stealing a "dugout" at Orion, crossed the river. The whites followed to the town and got into a quarrel with them which resulted in the killing of two Indians and wounding three others. The shooting was done by the McLoud boys from Richland Center. Mr. Dooley received information immediately concerning this unfortunate occurrence, and well knowing the nature of the Indian, was troubled as to the best course to pursue. Every settler except Dooley and Petty left their homes and went to Muscoda, remaining four or five days. These two parties, not knowing what moment a return might be made, or what time the Indians might proceed to wreak vengeance by destroying life and burning property, bringing desolation and disaster to the settlement, were not in a desirable situation, yet they "held the fort," and came out all right. In 1849 the Swinehart's, Hazeltine's, Hessler's, Hawkins and Waters brothers came, which made quite an addition to the settlement, making life more safe and pleasant. Mr. Dooley was married June 9, 1852, to Sarah, daughter of James and Lucinda (Calhoun) Laws, and settling on his land, devoted his time to clearing and farming. The same season he purchased more land adjoining, located on section 5, town 8, range 1 east, which had been previously entered by John Nipple. He now has a large, well improved farm, a commodious frame house, a large frame barn, and is in the full enjoyment of a nice home, honestly and fairly gained. He was born in Madison Co., Ky., May 9, 1827. When he was six years old his parents removed to Missouri, where he remained until his eighteenth year, when he went to Galena and spent two months in mining, then came to this county as before stated. Mr. Dooley is a man much respected by the community, and his reputation for honesty and integrity is second to none. Mr. and Mrs. Dooley are the parents of eight children—William Henry, Lucinda, Mary Ella, Adella A., Eldred S., Ida A., Lu Etta and Gilbert E. Mary Ella is now the wife of Patrick Fay, a teacher in the schools at Richland Center. All the other children are still living at home.

David Mayfield and wife, on the 20th day of June, 1845, located on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 3, town 9 north, range 1 east. They had just removed from Platteville. The only neighbors they had on Ash creek at this time were William Thompson and family, but they had chosen this as their future home, and concluded to make the best of it. It being late in the season when they arrived in the county, they could not raise any crop but potatoes, but this was a very important crop to the pioneers, as it furnished them a goodly portion of their winter supply of food. In the fall of 1845 Green Mayfield and family, a brother of David Mayfield, arrived from Platteville and settled where he now resides but there was no further increase in the settlement until 1847 when the Joslin family arrived. Mr. Mayfield continued farming until 1883, when as he found himself advancing into old age he sold his farm of 164 acres for $2,500, removed to Richland Center and retired from active life. David Mayfield was born near Nashville, Tenn., in August 1807. In 1811 the family removed to Indiana and one year later to Illinois where the mother died in 1818. The subject of this sketch then came to Wisconsin, and followed mining until 1834 then engaged in farming at Platteville. In 1837 he married Martha Arterbury, she died in 1841. He subsequently married Almira Woods and by this union five children have been born, two now living—Rosa, now the wife of August Larson and Delia Mayfield, now in Nevada.

Green Mayfield a representative man and early settler of Richland county began his pioneer life in infancy, his parents having emigrated to Illinois while he was quite young and when that was a new country. Here they remained but five years when they again took a journey westward locating in that part of the territory of Michigan since embraced in the State of Wisconsin and in Grant county, where he grew to manhood. In 1832 when he was fourteen years old he enlisted in the service of the United States and served through the Black Hawk War, returned to his home at the close of that conflict and engaged in mining. He was joined in marriage with Maria Keister Aug. 9, 1841. She was born in Posey Co., Ind., Nov. 9, 1823. They settled near Pedlar's creek and engaged in mining a few months, then moved to Bee town at which point he followed the same business, his wife assisting. Mining here not proving a remunerative enterprise they soon moved and settled on a claim he had previously made near Platteville. Here they were unfortunate in that both were attacked with fever and ague, and it took all their earnings to pay the doctor's bills, and he at last sold out to close up. In July, 1846, he came to Richland county in company with his brother David, being pleased with this section of the country he concluded to make a settlement and returned for his wife. The great trouble with him was a lack of money, and he hardly knew which way to turn to make necessary arrangements, finally he went to a merchant with whom he was acquainted in Platteville told him he was going to Richland county and wanted enough supplies to last him until fall when he would pay him with venison and honey. The merchant knowing him to be an honest man provided him with the necessaries of life and they started for a new home in Richland county, using his brother's team to move a few household goods, their only possessions. Arriving at the ferry kept by Mr. Mathews he told him he did not have any money to pay his way over, "Never mind" said Mathews, "I will put emigrants across for nothing for we want this country settled." They then made their way to his brother David's where they spent the summer. He made a claim on section 4, did not immediately move to it; but made their home with this brother until the following March, when having erected a small log cabin they moved into it on their own place. Meanwhile he had been successful in his hunting expeditions, and had paid up his store bill, but as yet had no money with which to enter his land; therefore he continued hunting, killed large numbers of deer and bear, and for them found a ready market at Platteville, the saddles of venison bringing two dollars and a half and the pelts from fifty cents to one dollar. He tanned and dressed deer skins with which he made clothing throughout—coat, pants, cap and moccasins. Many incidents of thrilling interest are remembered in connection with the early experience here of Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield. Starting out one day for the purpose of killing a deer, his dogs started a large bear which ran up a hill the canines in close pursuit. When on the summit the dogs caught and furiously attacked "old bruin," and in the fight both bear and dogs came rolling down the hill together. At the bottom foothold was again secured and the bear and dogs seemed bent on getting away. Finally they drew near where Mayfield was standing, and one of the dogs caught the bear by the ear, when he raised up embraced the dog and began to hug as only a bear can. Finally they fell to the ground, when Mr. Mayfield approached and with a knife, having a blade twelve inches long, stabbed the bear on the opposite side, when he released his hold and started away with the knife in his side. The gun was empty and there was no other way than to use a club, which weapon was used with good effect, and securing the knife cut his throat putting an end to his existence. This is one among the many similar adventures of this pioneer. In the course of a few years he had accumulated money enough to enter his land, when he devoted more time to clearing a farm. In August, 1862, he enlisted and joined company B, 25th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. The principal battle in which he was engaged was at Kinston, North Carolina. While he was in the service of his country, his wife, assisted by her two daughters and a small son carried on the farm raising good crops. He was discharged with the regiment in June, 1865, and returned home. His industrious family, had already planted the farm in corn, and in the fall he gathered 1,500 bushels. For some years he did not have a team of his own and used his brother's. At the present time we find him with a well stocked farm, comfortable frame house, large frame barn and 445 acres of land, besides other claims. He has always been enterprising, and among the first and most influential in establishing schools and Churches. Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield both joined the M. E. Church at the time of its organization in Orion. They are the parents of three children—Sarah M., now the wife of Jeff. Wilson, who lives in Crawford county; Maria A., now the wife of Joseph McMillen and Elijah G. The latter was born in the town of Orion, Jan. 16, 1853, and was married in 1875 to Dreatz Powells, and two years later settled on his present farm on section 9. They have three children—Cyrus L., Miles and one not named at this date.

Frederick Sherman (deceased) a pioneer of Richland county, is a native of Germany, and was born upon the banks of the Rhine, May 11, 1812. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, spending his younger days in school. On attaining his majority he joined the army and served in the cavalry four years. He came to America in 1848; landed in New York and came directly to Milwaukee and was there married to Carolina Banner, who was also a native of Germany. He immediately started with his bride for their new home. He purchased eighty acres of land and entered another eighty on section 9, town 9, range 1 east, now known as Orion. Here they endured the hardships of pioneer life, and lived to clear a good farm and build a comfortable frame house. His death occurred in March, 1879. Mrs. Sherman died in 1856, leaving three children, two of whom are now living—Louisa and Herman. He afterwards married Maria Rilling. She has one son—August. Herman was born in the town of Orion, April 30, 1852. He received a common school education, and lived with his parents until 1870, when he enlisted in the 17th regiment, United States Infantry, and served on the frontier five years. He was in the campaign on the Big Horn river, in 1873. After his discharge from the service he returned home and resumed farming, and in 1876 was married to Leah Lewis, who was born in the town of Richland. He then settled upon his present farm, which is a portion of the old homestead. He has improved the place and built the frame house which they now occupy. They have one child—Jennie.

Henry Schuerman was born in Germany, upon the banks of the Rhine, March 22, 1818. His younger days were spent in school, where he acquired a liberal education, after which he engaged in farming. He came to America in 1848, landed at New York and came directly to Richland county, thus becoming one of its pioneers. He entered a large tract of land there on sections 2 and 3, town 9, range 1, town of Orion. In the spring of 1849 he went to Watertown and was there married to Sabilla Jorris, also a native of Germany, and started immediately with his bride for his new home in the wilderness, where he had already commenced clearing. The nearest point at which they could obtain provisions was in Iowa county, and also the nearest mill. He was obliged to cross the river in going there, and sometimes the water would rise while he was upon the other side, and he would be obliged to wait several days before he could cross to return home. At times the neighborhood would become short of breadstuff and they were obliged to grate corn to make it into meal. Mr. Schuerman was an industrious man, and cleared a large farm. His pioneer log cabin, which was sixteen feet square, he remodeled by building an addition to it, and weather-boarding and painting it, so that it has the appearance of a frame house. It is probably the oldest building used for a dwelling, in the county. He built a frame barn, 40x60 feet, with a stone basement, and planted an orchard, and was one of the few successful fruit growers in the county. His death occurred April 26, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Schuerman were the parents of six children—Katie, Annie, Eliza, Emma, George and Henry. Mrs. Schuerman and her two sons now live at the homestead.

Henry Sigrist was a pioneer of Richland county, coming here in 1848. He entered land on section 3, town 9, range 1 east, in what is now the town of Orion. He built a log cabin 16x32 feet in which he lived till 1862, when he built the frame house in which he lives at present. He is a Prussian by birth, born Oct. 12, 1823. He attended school until fifteen years of age, when he engaged in a wholesale house to learn the business, serving two and a half years, at the end of which he received a certificate, showing him to be a proficient clerk. He then secured a situation in that capacity at a town 200 miles distant, where he was employed two years, then was employed upon a farm two years after which he entered an agricultural school, which was under control of the government. He studied there for two years. In 1848 he was married to Caroline Shulte, a native of Prussia, and immediately sailed for America, landed in New York and came directly to Milwaukee. Here Mrs. Sigrist was taken ill. He took care of her until she was convalescent and then started forth in search of a suitable place to locate. On reaching Richland county, he made a selection of land and returned to Milwaukee for his wife who was sufficiently recovered to bear the journey, and they started for their new home in a wagon, and reached their destination at the end of five days. They have lived to witness a great change in the country. What was then a wilderness, is now a cultivated and prosperous neighborhood, occupied by an industrious and thrifty class of people. A good school house and church are close at hand. He at first built a log cabin, 16x32 feet. Sept. 28, 1861, he enlisted in the 6th Wisconsin Battery and the spring of 1862 went to the front. He took part in many of the most important engagements of the war. Among them were: Jackson, Champion Hills, Port Gibson, siege of Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge, and Corinth. He was honorably discharged at the expiration of the time for which he enlisted. During his absence his wife had the frame house, in which they now live, built. Mr. and Mrs. Sigrist are the parents of six children—Henry, Eugene, Emma, William, Ida and Bertha. Since coming to America Mr. Sigrist has learned the English language and by extensive reading in that, as well as his own language, is enabled to keep posted upon all subjects.

James Laws, for many years proprietor of the well known Laws' ferry, was born in North Carolina in 1801. When he was seventeen years old his parents removed to Illinois, and were early settlers in Richland Co., Ill. He was there married to Lucinda Calhoun, who was born in South Carolina and was a relative of John C. Calhoun. Her parents moved to Kentucky when she was about one year old, and a few years later to Indiana, thence to Illinois. In 1845 Mr. Laws moved to Wisconsin and located in Iowa county, where he entered and improved land until 1849, when he traded it for the ferry he managed so long. His death occurred in April, 1865, while in Illinois on a visit. His wife died three years later at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Doolley. They were the parents of eleven children, six now living—Sarah, Henrietta, Ida, Gilbert L., Lucetta and Caroline.

John Mainwaring, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in the town of Swansea, Glamorganshire, South Wales, May 28, 1821. Here he attended the public schools until he was fourteen years of age, when his parents moved to Edinburgh, Scotland, where he was sent to an advanced school for some time. His father, who was a stone mason by trade, and master of the art, was engaged upon the Edinburgh, New Haven and Leith railroad, then in process of construction, as superintendent of the mason work, and the subject of this sketch was called from school to assist his father in his work. He was employed there for two years, when his parents moved to Caermarthen, South Wales, where his father, by the death of an uncle, had fallen heir to property, consisting of a stock of marble, a shop and tools, his uncle having been a marble engraver. The father carried on the marble business for a while, then, having a call from a railroad company, left the business in charge of his son, who continued it till he was twenty-five years of age. He then joined his father, who had taken a contract to construct a piece of railroad, which they completed in 1848. In the spring of 1849, in company with his father and brother Daniel, he left his native land and came to America, coming directly to Wisconsin and entering land on section 33, town 9, range 1 east, now the town of Orion. After remaining here two years, he returned to his native land and remained till 1861, being there employed as road master on the railroad that he helped to construct. In 1861 he started on his return to his western home, crossing the Atlantic in the noted steamer, Great Eastern, and making the trip in nine days. He left England May 1 and arrived in Orion on the 15th. He lived upon his land on section 33 until 1865, when he sold it and purchased 160 acres on section 27, upon which were about twenty acres of cleared land and a log cabin. He immediately began clearing and putting out fruit trees, and otherwise improving. He has been successful as a farmer, has purchased adjoining land, and now has 320 acres, of which 125 are cleared. He has erected a frame barn and a commodious stone house. He was married June 4, 1854, to Eliza Rees, who was born in Caermarthen, South Wales, Dec. 13, 1831. Nine children have been born to them—John, Lillian, Edward, Mary, William, Thomas, Frank, George and Laura Eva. The older four children were born in England. Mr. Mainwaring is a man of intelligence, well educated, and well informed upon all subjects.

William Henry Dawson, the present postmaster of Orion, was a pioneer of the town of Eagle, where he settled in the woods in September, 1849, entering the northeast quarter of section 26. He was born in Switzerland Co., Ind., June 19, 1825. When he was four years of age his parents emigrated to Indiana and settled in Clinton county, where they were among the pioneers. Here his father purchased a tract of heavy timber land from the Government, with the intention of clearing a farm, but in one month after his arrival there he sickened and died, leaving a widow with five small children to maintain. She proved equal to the emergency, and, with the aid of her children, raised corn, wheat, oats and flax. The latter she spun and wove into cloth, selling what she did not need in her family. The subject of this sketch, as soon as he became old enough, assisted his mother in her laborious task. He took advantage of the time in winter by attending a subscription school, and acquired an education sufficient for the duties that have followed. His mother died when he was eighteen years of age. After that time he was engaged in the manufacture and sale of tobacco until the fall of 1849, when he was married to Sarah, daughter of William and Charlotte Miller. One week after marriage they started for their new home in Wisconsin with a pair of horses and wagon, taking with them household goods and provisions. They camped out by the way, and after arriving at their destination, lived in their wagon until a log cabin could be built. That being completed, he immediately commenced clearing a farm. The following winter, provisions being scarce, he took a job of chopping and splitting rails, and split 2,000 for $10 and paid the whole sum for one-half of a hog, the whole hog weighing 200 pounds, obtained at Avoca, or the site where Avoca now stands. In July, 1861, he enlisted in the 11th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, company D, and was mustered into the service as second lieutenant; went south and served nine months, then, on account of disability caused by an attack of pleurisy, he resigned and returned home and resumed farming. In 1865 he came to Orion, bought a small stock of drugs and commenced mercantile business. The following year he was appointed postmaster, and has held the office since that time. In 1873 he bought a store building 24x40 feet and two stories high, and having an ell 18x24 feet. The ell is used for a dwelling. He has greatly increased his stock of goods, and now keeps a stock of general merchandise. He still owns his farm in Eagle, which he rents. Mrs. Sarah Dawson was born in Kentucky, March 24, 1823, and died Jan. 13, 1880. He was again married in June, 1881, to Sarah Rebecca, daughter of Peter and Margaret Bobb.

Henry Emshoff, an early settler of Richland county, is a native of Germany, born in Hanover, June 26, 1826. He was sent to school until he was fourteen years old, then was engaged in tilling the soil of his native land until the year 1852, when he emigrated to America, coming directly to Waukesha Co., Wis. Here he hired out to work upon a farm, and remained till 1854. In August of that year he started with his hard earned money to seek a home for himself, and coming to Richland county, purchased timber land on section 14, in that part of the town of Buena Vista now known as Ithaea. He then returned to Waukesha county, and was married on the 19th of August to Mary Handel, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, born Dec. 7, 1836. They started for Richland county immediately, traveling by rail to Hanover, Ill., where they procured a team and finished their journey. He moved into a vacant log house, in which they lived till spring, then upon his own land he erected a booth, in which they lived while he built a log cabin. He cleared a portion of his land and lived there until 1865, when he sold out and purchased land on sections 14 and 15, town of Orion, where he has since lived. As a farmer he has been very successful. On his arrival here, his sole capital consisted of good health and willing hands. He now owns 400 acres of land, 150 acres of which are under cultivation, also a large stock of cattle, horses, sheep and hogs. He has built two frame barns and a neat frame house, and made other improvements, and is one of the most extensive farmers in the town of Orion. Mr. and Mrs. Emshoff have six children—John H., William C., Emily L., Charles G., Henry A. and Matilda M. Mr. Emshoff is a member of the town board, and has been twice re-elected. Their son, John H., is the present town assessor. He was born in the town of Ithaca Dec. 11, 1857. His younger days were spent in assisting his father upon the farm and in attending school. He was married in 1880 to Etta, daughter of Hezekiah and Sallie (Marsh) Jones, and settled at that time on his present farm on section 11. He has built a good frame house and has a pleasant home. They have one child.

William A. Hitchcock, son of Jason and Polly (Hurd) Hitchcock, was born in Boone Co., Ind., July 14, 1844. When he was but six years old his father died. He came to Richland county, with his mother, in 1853, and here grew to manhood. He lived with his grandparents, with the exception of one year, until 1860, when he went to Texas and was there engaged in railroading and blacksmithing till 1866. In that year he was married to Zizina Edwards, who was born on Galveston island Oct. 2, 1846, and returned to Orion with his bride. They lived upon his grandfather's place one year, then removed to his mother's farm on section 8, where he built a blacksmith shop and worked at the trade, and helped to carry on the farm. In 1874 he settled on his grandfather's place and has since made that his home. His farm is well improved and he has a good frame house and barn. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock are the parents of four children—Nellie M., Myron L., Georgia E. and Jason W.

James Lewis, an early settler of Orion, was born in Preble Co., Ohio, May 9, 1820. His father was a native of Delaware and his mother of Kentucky. They were pioneers in Preble county. Here the subject of our sketch grew to manhood taking advantage of such opportunity as afforded in those days to acquire an education. His mother died when he was but fourteen years of age. Four years later his father married again and removed to Indiana, but he still remained in Preble county and was their joined in marriage to Anna E. Nelson. She was born in Salem Co., N. J., March 14, 1824, but for several years lived in Philadelphia. They removed to Illinois and settled in Mason county where they remained until 1854, then came to Richland county and bought land on section 7, town 9, range 1 east, now known as the town of Orion. Game was at that time quite plenty and included deer and bear. He was quite a hunter and killed many deer. One morning his two sons, John and Joseph, went out to look for the oxen and run across seven bears, one of which took after them. Their father had told them that a bear could not climb a small tree and so they made for a sapling and both made quick time in climbing it. The bear came to the tree and gnawed the bark. The children called aloud for assistance but did not attract attention for some time as danger was not apprehended; but as their cries continued their mother called the dogs and started. At the approach of the dogs the bears left, the mother running up in season to see them in their retreat. The children then came down from their lofty retreat more scared than hurt. Mr. Lewis has since cleared a good farm, erected a good set of buildings and now has a comfortable home. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are the parents of three children—John M., Joseph W. and Sarah E.

Hezekiah Jones, one of the well known early settlers of the town of Orion, came here in the fall of 1854 and purchased land on section 10 of Carlos Joslin and his son William H. At this time there were two log cabins and a small clearing, which constituted the entire improvement. Since that time a great change has been wrought, a large farm has been cleared, a commodious frame house erected, a large frame barn built, and at this time Mr. Jones has one of the best improved farms in the town. He is a native of Kentucky, born in Harrison county, Sept. 26, 1815. When he was eighteen years old his parents emigrated to Indiana and located in Boone county, where in fact his pioneer life began. His father had purchased eighty acres of timber land on which they settled, but only remained there a short time when he purchased 160 acres near by and moved on to it. He made his home with his parents until of age, when he was married to Sallie Marsh, a native of Harrison Co., Ky. Her parents were also early settlers in Boone county. They settled on the land his father had first purchased. In 1849 he sold this farm and purchased improved land, consisting of eighty acres, upon which they made their home until 1854, when he sold out and started west with five horses and two wagons containing their household goods. They camped out on the way, and after three weeks on the road arrived in Richland county. They stopped with Robert Hurd a few days and then moved into a log cabin which was their home for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are the parents of thirteen children, eight of whom are now living—Eliza J., Louisa A., Lorinda M., Martha E., Mary E., Melissa A., William Jasper and Jonathan P. Mr. Jones is not a politician in any sense, but votes the republican ticket when, in his judgment, good men are nominated.

Abram Miller, an early settler of Orion, began his pioneer life in infancy. When he was but one year old his parents moved to Marion Co., Ind., where they were among the pioneers. Here his early life was spent, and as soon as large enough, he assisted his father in clearing a farm. He lived with his parents until 1854 when he came to Wisconsin to seek a home, and purchased land on section 10, town 9, range 1 east, now in the town of Orion. He commenced immediately to fell timber preparatory to clearing a farm. He was unmarried at the time, but in 1856 he was married to Lonisa A., daughter of Hezekiah and Sallie (Marsh) Jones. He enlisted in 1862 in the 25th Wisconsin, company B, and went to the front, participating in many important battles. He was with Sherman in his "march to the sea," and through the the Carolinas to Washington. He was twice wounded at the battle of Atlanta, on the 22d of July, 1864, and was honorably discharged with the regiment. June 7, 1865, when he returned to his home and resumed his work at farming. A humble log cabin was their home until 1871, when he built the commodious frame house now occupied by the family. He has been largely engaged in raising grain and stock. In 1883 he engaged largely in raising poultry, building a henery at a cost of $500 and enclosing a yard of four acres. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have four children—Martha J., Mary E., Elizabeth A. and Emma L. Mr. Miller always has been identified with the republican party.

Simon S. Blake, an early settler in the town of Orion, is a native of the Keystone State, having been born in that part of Bedford now known as Blair county. Until he was fourteen years old, his time was spent in school and on the farm. He then engaged with a merchant tailor to learn the trade, here he served three months, then part of the time went to school and part of the time worked with his brother at the blacksmith business until about seventeen, then enlisted in the service of the United States for the Mexican war. His parents was opposed to this and as their consent could not be obtained he was sent back. He then engaged with his cousin to learn the trade of ax-making and was thus employed until twenty-one years old, when he engaged in teaching. In the fall of 1852 he went to Ohio and spent the winter in Ironton and vicinity, then went to Arkansas and engaged in the lumbering business for seven months, and then returned to Pennsylvania, and taught a four months term of school during the winter. In the spring of 1854 he came to Richland county and entered 120 acres of land on sections 17 and 18 of the town of Orion, and went to the village of Orion where he engaged as clerk in a store. He was married Jan. 18, 1855, to Mary Ambrose. She was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn. He left the store in the fall of 1855, teaching a three months school at Pleasant Hill, town of Eagle. The following spring they settled on his land and commenced to clear a farm. He early paid attention to fruit culture and now has a fine apple orchard, consisting of Tolman sweets, Golden russets, Snow apples and Red Astrachan. His farm is pleasantly located on Oak Ridge, and is well improved. He was a soldier in the Union army, having enlisted Aug. 20, 1862, in the 25th Wisconsin, company B, and going south spent his time in different places until May, 1864, when they joined Sherman at Resaca, Ga., and fought their way on to Atlanta. He was severely wounded at Decatur, Ga., the 22d of July 1864, was sent to the field hospital and later to the Harvey hospital at Madison. He was discharged March 20, 1865, and returned home. He has been elected to offices of trust and honor, at different times; has been chairman of the board, justice of the peace and was once elected assessor but refused to serve. He was United States census enumerator for the town of Orion in 1880.

John Miller settled in Richland county in 1854. He took a homestead on section 31, town

10, range 1 east, in the present town of Richland. Here he cleared a farm and resided till 1874, when he sold out and moved to section 5, now Orion. He is a native of Germany, born in Mecklenburg Swerin, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He came to America in 1847 and located in Waukesha county, where he remained till 1854, when he came to Richland county, as before stated. He has been twice married. His first wife was Helena Bonsash, who died in 1874 leaving three children—Mary, Lewis and Sarah. Their son, Lewis, now owns and occupies a farm in Ash creek valley, section 6, town of Orion. He purchased the land in 1866. It was then heavily timbered, but he has now the greater part of it cleared and in a good state of cultivation. He built a large frame house which, with all its contents was burned in 1877. He then built another, two and a half story frame house, which is probably the largest house in the town. The family moved into this house July 4, 1878, and dedicated it with a party on that day. He was born in Mecklenburg Swein, April 18, 1841, and came to America with his parents, with whom he made his home until 1861. In August of that year he enlisted in the 6th Wisconsin Battery, and went south. He participated in the following engagements: Corinth, Jackson, Champion Hills, Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain. After serving three years and one month he returned home and resumed farming. He was joined in marriage in 1867 to Catharine, only daughter of John Henry and Eva Demmer. He first purchased land on section 31, of the town of Richland, but did not improve it as he soon sold it and bought his present farm, which is one of the best on Ash creek. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of seven living children—Mary A. E., George F., Dora E., Clara H., William H., Ella M. and Jacob W.

Frederick C. Schmidt (deceased), was one of the pioneer settlers of Orion. He came here in 1854 and purchased land on section 16, and commenced clearing a farm, but his life was spared only a few years and he died on the 19th of April, 1860. He was a German by birth and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In his youth he learned the milling trade, which he followed for some years. He was married Feb. 13, 1835, to Christina Kruger. Four children have blessed this union—Frederick C., August, Annie and Emily. Mrs. Schmidt occupied the homestead a few years, then moved to Richland Center where she bought property, and lived till the time of her death, May 28, 1883.

John Henry Demmer, a pioneer of Ohio, was born in Germany in May, 1808. When a young man he learned the trade of ship builder, in which business he was engaged until 1848, when he left his native country and came to the United States. He first located in Milwaukee where he was employed as carpenter and joiner. In 1853 he came to Richland county and purchased a claim of Alanson Hurd on section 3, entered the land and immediately began clearing. He has since devoted the greater part of his time to his farm, working occasionally at his trade. He was married in 1833 to Eva Engleman. She died in 1870 leaving five children—Herman, Frederick, Catharine, John and Jacob. Their oldest son, Herman, was born Nov. 14, 1835, and came to America with his parents and continued to live with them till 1861. That year he was joined in marriage to Annie, daughter of Frederick and Christiana Schmidt. He enlisted in September, 1861, in the 6th Wisconsin Battery, and served three years and one month. He participated in the following engagements: Corinth, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain. After his discharge he returned home and settled on section 17, where he had purchased a tract of timber land. He cleared a farm and built a log house, which he weather-boarded and painted, giving it the appearance of a frame house. In 1882 he rented this farm and moved to his wife's parent's home on section 16, the place formerly owned by Frederick C. Schmidt. Here he erected a fine frame house. Mr. and Mrs. Demmer are the parents of five children—Emma, Henry, Frank A., Mary and Ada. Mr. Demmer has held the office of treasurer in his school district since 1867.

Philip Daniel Berger, one of the early settlers of Orion, was born in West Baden, Germany, Aug. 24, 1815. He was united in marriage with Catharine Elizabeth Miller, in the year 1828. In 1848 they emigrated to America, and first settled in Wyoming Co., N. Y., and bought a farm in the town of Bennington, where they remained two years and then decided to remove farther west, so he sold his farm and came to Wisconsin, locating on Rock prairie, in Rock county. In 1855 he decided to make another change, and coming to Orion purchased land on section 10. On this place there was a log cabin, constructed after the most approved back woods fashion. The roof was covered with "shakes" fastened on with poles and withes, no nails being used. He cleared a farm and built a more substantial dwelling, and made this his home until his death, which occurred in 1871. Mrs. Berger died in 1867. They left seven children—William, Phebe, Christian, Sophia, Henry, Mary and Margaret. William was born in West Baden, June 14, 1829. He came to America with his parents and made his home with them until 1860. In that year he was married to Euphemia Laing, a native of Scotland, and settled on land that he had previously purchased and where he has since resided. He has good frame buildings, including house, barn and granary. Christian also was born in West Baden, May 22, 1829. He was sent to school in Germany four years, and at nine years of age came to America with his parents, with whom he lived till 1861, when he enlisted September 9th, in the 6th Wisconsin Battery, which was stationed at Racine until February, 1862, when it moved south. Among the more important engagements in which he participated are the following: Riddle's Shop, Champion Hills, siege of Corinth and Vicksburg. At the siege of Corinth he was severely wounded in the knee and spent nearly six months in the hospital. He rejoined the regiment at Memphis. He was again wounded at Vicksburg, and in consequence suffered the amputation of his left arm and the thumb of his right hand. He was honorably discharged on the 29th of August, 1863, and returned home. In 1865 he was married to Elizabeth Brewer, a native of Highgate, Vt. Although unable to perform any manual labor, Mr. Berger has carefully and successfully managed the farm, and now has one of the finest improved places in the county. It is the homestead where his father first settled. He has built a nice frame house and a large frame barn. They have one child—Letha Annie. Christian Berger politically belongs to the democratic party.

John Flamme came to Orion in 1857. He purchased a tract of land on section 3, upon which there was a small clearing and a rude log cabin. Since that time he has cleared a large farm and erected a neat stone house and now has a comfortable home. He is a native of Prussia, born Feb. 3, 1823. He attended school until he was twelve years old, and was then apprenticed to a blacksmith to learn the trade; after serving three years he worked as journeyman till 1852, when he left the old country and came to America, and first located in Naperville, Ill., where he worked at his trade till 1857, when he came to Richland county. He was joined in marriage June 12, 1878, to Bertha Groth, and settled on the farm where he still resides, on section 2. From that time until 1883 he divided his time between the farm and his trade. Since that date he has devoted his whole time to the farm. Mr. and Mrs. Flamme have two children—Charles and Lydia Amelia.

Christian Burwitz is a native of Germany, born in Mecklenburg Swerin, May 20, 1829. He spent the time until the age of fourteen in attending school, and then assisted his father in herding his large flocks of cattle and sheep, which he continued to do until the year 1857, when he left his native home and came to America, landed at New York and came directly to Wisconsin and engaged in farming in Waukesha county for two years. He then moved to Milwaukee and bought stock two years, then returned to Waukesha and resumed farming. In March, 1865, he enlisted in company I, 48th Wisconsin Volunteers and went south. He was discharged in February, 1866, returned home and remained in Waukesha until the following April, when he came to Richland county. He has comfortable buildings and altogether a pleasant home.

CHAPTER XXIX.

TOWN OF RICHLAND.

The town of Richland is all of that territory comprised within the limits of congressional township 10 north, of range 1 east, and is the second from the east line of the county, in the second tier from the south. Like the greater part of the county, the general physical features are high bluffs and wide valleys; the central part of the town being a beautiful long flat vale, lying on both sides of the Pine river. The extreme fertility of this and the contiguous valleys, early induced settlers to locate within its limits. The first man who made a settlement within its boundaries was a Mr. Bacon, who located his farm on the northeast quarter of section 20. Here he erected his primitive cabin, built of logs from the giants of the forest, who had waved their leafy arms in the face of the storms of centuries, and that had stood in serried ranks around the site of his humble abode. This cabin stood on the west side of the Pine river, near a spring of water, about a half mile southwest of the present court house. This was in the summer of 1848.

Mr. Bacon and his wife were from Massachusetts or New Hampshire, and were seemingly out of their element in the new country, among the hills and forests of Richland county. During their stay, some four years, their cabin was the stopping place of those hardy pioneers and emigrants passing up and down the river, then the only highway to the settlements on the Wisconsin river. They were the only settlers between the Rockbridge mills and Ash creek, and they seemed always glad to entertain their visitors and guests. They were people of considerably high culture, and their good cheer, together with the violin, which Mr. Bacon handled with some skill, made their cabin a pleasant resting place for the weary traveler upon the way from the mill to the river. The Pine river men of that day will bear them in remembrance with much pleasure, and no doubt often think of them, when taking a retrospect of their lives. Mr. Bacon and his wife, however, being unaccustomed to frontier life, became restless, and finally after a stay of about four years he sold out their claim to Robert Akan, and returned to their native State and Richland county knew them no more.

Elisha Bovee was the second settler in the town. A sketch of his life appears elsewhere in this volume.

A Mr. Mederis was apparently the next settler in the town, he having located on section 8, near the spring on the west side of Pine river, about 1849. His cabin stood about a mile and a half north of what is now the business portion of the village of Richland Center. He had a wife and several children, and here he resided with them for about two years, when he, too, became dissatisfied and moved on westward.

In 1850 William Farlin and his wife made a settlement in the town of Richland, but in what part is not now accessible.

In 1850 James Blundell, Richard McMahan and Luman Thompson also located claims in the town, and in May, 1851, John Waddell settled upon the northeast quarter of section 5.

The latter gentlemen had come into the county the previous year, 1850, in October, but had stopped temporarily, at or near the site of the present village of Richland City. He relates that his only earthly possessions when he landed in this "neck of woods" was "seven children, a cow and calf, two pigs, a dog and twenty-five cents in silver." However he settled himself down and proceeded to hew out for himself an abiding place. He was a native of West Virginia, where he was born Feb. 23, 1811, but from a child of three years of age was raised in the State of Ohio. His endeavors toward providing himself and family with a home were crowned with success, and he yet lives upon the land on which he first located on his entrance into the town, a monument of the sturdy avant courreur of civilization, the western pioneer, who, with his ax in his hand and backed with no wealth but royal good health and indomitable courage, plunges into the western wilds and there conquers out the family roof tree and form the refuge and stay of his old age. After Mr. Waddell, the settlements were so numerous that it would be impossible to individualize.

During the fall of 1851 James Cass built a saw-mill on the site of the present one owned by W. J. Bowen, on section 4. A little settlement sprung up around, and in the early part of the year 1854 a postoffice was established here, the first within the limits of the town, and called Florence, and of which Mr. Cass was the first postmaster.

The population having by this time increased to such a number as to warrant such action, the board of supervisors of the county, by a resolution passed Nov. 15, 1852, ordered that the town of Richland be set off and organized as a separate township and election precinct. In accordance with this, the first election for township officers was held April 22, 1853, from which date may be dated the organization of the town. The officers elected at this time were: Asa G. Sheldon, chairman, David Bovee and Ira An-draws, supervisors; John McManus, town clerk; Cornelius McCarthy, town treasurer; Hascal Haseltine, town superintendent of schools.

The election board was composed of the following gentlemen: Ira Andrews, John Waddell and Durfee Bovee.

After the announcement of the result of the election and the people had had time to settle after the arduous duties of election day, the new town officers came together, and among other ordinances passed, was one on ways and means, levying a tax of seven mills on the dollar, to be devoted to road purposes; this was the first act of the new board and was passed by them at their very first meeting. In May, 1853, the town board, feeling the need of controlling the sale of intoxicating liquors, granted a license to S. H. Austin, of Richland Center, allowing him to deal in the ardent spirits, but not permitting any other to do so within the town limits.

The first saw-mill erected in the town is believed to be that one erected by James Cass, in 1851, as no record exists of any prior to that date.

Among the first thing to be established by our forefathers, when planting their infant colonies in these western wilds, was the school house, and, as early as the summer of 1851, an institution of learning was opened in a room in the dwelling house of Mr. Blundell, on what is now known as the Elisha Bovee farm. This school was taught by Margaret Gillam, now Mrs. William H. Joslin, of Richland Center, and was the first in the town.

The present officers of the town were elected April 3, 1883, and are as follows: B. C. Hallin, R. A. Ross and W. B. Brown, supervisors; Kirk W. Eastland, clerk; Samuel C. Hyatt, treasurer; J. L. McKee, assessor; John Walworth and Richard Davis, justices of the peace; J. W. Liek, W. F. Fogo and Charles Hole, constables; Jesse G. Bunell, sealer of weights and measures.

DISCIPLE CHURCH.

In about 1855 Elder Searholt, of Reedsburg, Sauk county, organized a society at what was then known as the log school house, near William H. Miller's residence. The first regular pastor of this society was Rev. Gray, and the following named were among the first members: James Snyder and family, W. H. Miller and family, Mrs. Marks and family, Campbell Miller and family and Thomas Snyder and wife. Rev. Gray was in turn succeeded by Revs. Martin, Colton, Hamilton, Hurd and Kidd, who is the present pastor. The society held its meetings at school houses until they erected their present church edifice, located on section 27. It is a wooden structure, 30x45 feet in size, and cost $1,200. The society has been prosperous, and at one time its membership was nearly 100. The present membership is about seventy-five. There is also a good Sabbath school kept up by the society.

There is a cemetery located near the church. The ground occupied by it was donated for burial purposes by Hiram Welton. The first body interred here was Hiram Welton, who donated the land.

BOWEN'S MILLS.

These mills comprise one of the most important of Richland county's industrial enterprises. The mills are located on section 4, the power being derived from Pine river. The property was first purchased by R. C. Field, but a man named Dart had a claim on the same. Neither of these men, however, made any improvements. In the fall of 1851 the property was purchased by James M. Cass and George Pound. They improved the water power and in 1853 had a saw-mill in operation. Mr. Cass then became sole proprietor, and in 1854 sold to William J. Bowen for $3,100, which amount was paid in gold. Mr. Bowen soon associated himself with his brother, F. P. Bowen, and in 1855 the sash saw was taken out and a rotary saw put in. This was the first saw of this kind in the county. They also added a feed mill. In 1858

F. P. Bowen withdrew from the business, but in 1867 re-purchased a half interest, and they then erected the flour mill. It is a wooden structure, 30x50 feet in size, two and a half stories high, and basement. Three run of stone have been placed in the mill, and it does custom work. In 1872 W. J. Bowen again became sole proprietor, and has since operated the mill alone.

RICHLAND CENTER.

This is the shire town of Richland county. It is situated not far from the center of the county, on sections 16 and 21, in the town of Richland, on the east bank of Pine river. The Richland center branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway connects the village with centers of commerce and affords excellent marketing facilities. The town is surrounded by some of the finest and most productive agricultural and stock raising lands in the southern part of the State, which is a guarantee of a permanent and ever-increasing trade. By all who have ever visited the place it is remarked as being an extraordinary business point, the streets being always crowded and the merchants ever busy. Besides other advantages, the Pine river, on the banks of which the town rests, furnishes a most excellent water power, which although improved to a considerable extent, has not been fully utilized. There are many substantial brick buildings to be seen upon the main thoroughfares, and the village site is dotted with many elegant dwellings, many of them costly and of considerable architectural pretensions. There are several neat church edifices, and a sufficient number of buildings for educational purposes, and county business. An abundance of shade trees adorn the streets and with the natural groves, in which each residence is embowered, add greatly to the beauty of the place. The location is exceedingly healthy, and the society is of the most refined and desirable character.

THE BEGINNING.

During the month of July, 1849, Ira S. Hazeltine and his father, Orrin Hazeltine, arrived at Sextonville, and on horseback continued their journey to Rockbridge. The country was then unsettled and entirely roadless; but by the use of a small pocket compass they found their destination. Here they found a saw-mill which had been erected on the northwest quarter of section 10. This quarter section was the only land that had been entered within the limits now comprising the town of Rockbridge. The Hazeltines purchased the saw-mill, and then leaving their horses at the mill, by means of a slab raft they floated down Pine river in search of water powers. They soon arrived at the point just west of the present site of Richland Center. They were well pleased with the water privilege at this place, and also the prairie near by, and decided that this would be an excellent place for the site of a future city. In October, 1849, Orrin Hazeltine brought his family from Black Earth, and Ira S. brought his family from Waukesha; both families settling at Rockbridge. They were accompanied by Luman Thompson and Henry Smith, with their families; the "men folks" intending to work at the mill. In the spring of 1850 Ira S. Hazeltine, leaving his father at the mill, took his wife and babe and visited friends in the eastern part of the State. Sometime during the same year Ira, in company with two brothers, went to view the water power they had discovered in the present town of Richland. They viewed the place from the hill side west of the present mills, and after Ira had portrayed the beauties of the small prairie, the value of the water power, and other natural advantages, and the probability that at no far distant day a flourishing village could here be built, which, from the fact that it was near the geographical center of the county, would become the county seat, he requested his brothers to purchase the land from the government. But his brothers replied: "Ira, you are so fanatical; this country is so rough that it cannot be settled, and there can never be a town at this point." "Well," answered Ira, "If you are afraid, I will take it up and play it alone." Accordingly I. S. Hazeltine soon afterward purchased of the government a quarter section of land at this point. In June, 1851, he employed R. C. Field to survey the land into lots and blocks.

Thus were the initial steps toward the founding of Richland Center made. In 1853, Schoolcraft's addition to the village was laid out, embracing all of section 16. Ira S. Hazeltine made an addition in 1856. Orrin Hazeltine made an addition later, embracing all that portion of the village lying south of the court house square.

Prior to the platting of the village a "session law" had been passed defining the boundaries and authorizing the organization of Richland county, and providing further that at the general election held in November, 1851, the votes of the people should determine the location of the county seat. At this time the county business was being transacted at Richmond, now Orion. There were four voting precincts in the county—Richmond, Richland City, Richwood and Rockbridge. The number of votes polled at Richland City on the county seat question was 108; of which 103 were in favor of Richland Center and five scattering. At Richwood there were forty-eight votes polled, twenty-four being for Richland Center and twenty-four for Richmond; at Rockbridge sixteen votes were polled, all being in favor of Richland Center. The number of votes cast at Richmond is unknown; but it is claimed that in the whole county Richland Center received a majority of forty-eight votes. But here arose a difficulty. The session law provided that the place receiving a majority of the votes should be declared the county seat; but it did not state who should canvass the votes. However, John Rutan, clerk of the board of supervisors, by virtue of his office, called to his assistance two justices of the peace as canvassers, choosing A. B. Slaughter, of Richmond and O. L. Britton, who resided near Sextonville. These gentlemen met, and after receiving the returns from the various precincts, canvassed the vote and made the following report :

“We have received the election returns of the different precincts—Richmond, Richland City, Richwood and Rockbridge—and they are so informal, both in form and substance, that we cannot ascertain the true will of the people, and we hereby declare that there was no election held pursuant to law.”

Such a report as this, as will be readily seen, did not please Mr. Hazeltine, so he requested John Rutan to get the returns from A. B. Slaughter and bring them to his residence, which he did. Mr. Hazeltine copied the returns and report of the board of canvassers in full, and had John Price, chairman, and John Rutan, clerk of the board of supervisors, certify that his copies were true and correct copies of the originals. Mr. Hazeltine then went to Madison and left his certified copies with William A. Barstow, secretary of State. These were presented to the State board of canvassers, with a request that they make a statement of the result, which they did. This statement was presented to the Legislature, and an act was passed, entitled “An act to declare the county seat of Richland county.” That became a law and Richland Center became the county seat. But the county supervisors, four in number, were divided in their opinion and only two could be persuaded to meet at Richland Center. As three was necessary for a quorum, no business could be transacted until a constable was sent after a third supervisor. After some delay, however, they all met and after viewing the location expressed themselves as highly pleased, and said the place had been misrepresented to them as a frog pond.

Before going to Madison, Mr. Hazeltine had made the proposition to the people that on condition that the county seat was located at Richland Center, he would deed to the county twenty-four village lots; twelve to be selected by the county and the remainder by himself. The county selected block 14, and the east half of block 13. Mr. Hazeltine selected for the county twelve lots west of the mill pond. He also agreed to furnish a building for a court house for five years, and let the county have the use of the hotel, in compliance with his proposition.

Thus the county seat question was settled, and, although for a time some show of bitter feeling and envy was apparent, this has all died out long, long years ago, and to-day, all concede that the location could not have been better.

BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT.

The first store opened on the village plat was by S. H. Austin. He opened a stock of general merchandise in 1854 and remained in the trade about ten years. He was a good business man and was very successful.

In the fall of 1854 Charles Nelson started the second general store in the village, and remained in trade about two years.

The third store was started by A. H. Holden in the summer of 1855.

In the fall of 1855 G. H. James opened a general store which he ran for several years.

In 1856 Short & Downs opened a general store. They soon dissolved partnership and Short carried on the business for a time; then sold to August Smith. Mr. Short died shortly afterward.

The first business of any magnitude at Richland Center was established by J. W. Lybrand and J. L. McKee. They opened up in May, 1857, with a stock of general merchandise valued at $4,500, which was soon increased to $6,000. In 1859 they commenced dealing in ginseng, paying for the same with cash and goods. During the year 1859 they purchased upwards of 30,000 pounds. In 1860 Mr. McKee withdrew from the firm and Mr. Lybrand was joined in trade by his son, G. D. Lybrand. In 1861 G. D. Lybrand withdrew and J. W. Lybrand became sole proprietor. His stock of goods was increased to upwards of $40,000, and he did quite a wholesale business, supplying most of the country stores in the northern part of the county. Late in 1863 he sold to George and A. H. Krouskop. This firm carried on the business a few years when A. H. Krouskop sold to George Krouskop, but soon afterward purchased the business and carried it on alone for a number of years. Charles Craig is his present partner.

J. J. Shumaker started a mammoth store in 1857. He had purchased the goods on credit and after remaining to take charge of considerable money he fled to Kansas.

The first hardware store was established in 1856. The business was carried on until 1868 when it was closed out.

The second hardware store was opened in 1862 by G. H. James & Co. The firm afterward became James Brothers, and in November, 1881, D. G. James became sole proprietor and still continues the business.

D. O. Chandler established business in 1867 and Strang & Doudna have been in the hardware business since 1878.

The first drug store in Richland Center was opened by L. D. Gage. In 1858 he was succeeded by Dr. H. C. Priest who sold to Caleb Waggoner. In 1859 F. P. Bowen purchased the business and sold to D. L. Downs in 1861. In 1865 Mr. Bowen re-purchased a half interest and the business was carried on under the firm name of D. L. Downs & Co., until 1879 when F. P. Bowen became sole proprietor. In October, 1879, Mr. Bowen became associated with H. B. Allen, as partner, and in March, 1883, Mr. Allen became sole proprietor.

The drug business of Burnham & Burnham was established in 1874 by O. J. and W. A. Burnham. In October, 1881, W. A. Burnham withdrew from the business and in March, 1883, J. W. Burnham became a partner, since which time the firm has been Burnham & Burnham.

The drug business of I. A. Cleveland was established by him in May, 1881.

Dr. J. Brimer & Sons have been engaged in the drug business since 1873.

The first millinery business was established by Mrs. D. Rice in 1856. The receipts for the first two weeks were just ten cents. But Mrs. Rice did not despair and her trade soon increased to such an extent that in 1867 her purchases amounted to $5,000. She continued in business until 1882.

The first wagon shop was opened in 1856 by O. H. Northrup, who put up the first wagon made at Richland Center.

Daniel Rice was the first man to export live stock from Richland Center. He commenced dealing in live stock in 1856, and continued for about four years.

The abstract books of Richland county were commenced in 1858 by L. D. Gage and A. Nudd. Mr. Gage afterward owned them alone until 1864 when he sold to Smith & Laws. In 1873 they were purchased by W. H. Pier, who still owns them.

The first tannery was built in 1857 by Jeduthan Jones. Mr. Jones sold to other parties and it was operated about six years when it was destroyed by fire.

The second tannery at Richland Center was erected in 1860 by D. L. Downs and H. W. Fries. In 1862 Mr. Downs sold his interest to F. P. Bowen and subsequently H. W. Fries became sole proprietor. In about 1867 Mr. Fries sold to his sons, A. S. and J. C. Fries, who operated the tannery until 1876, when it was destroyed by fire. In 1877 J. C. Fries rebuilt, and in 1882 he became associated with L. E. Brewer as partner. The firm is now Fries & Brewer, and their business is the largest of the kind in the county.

The first cabinet shop at Richland Center was opened in 1858, by William Wilson. After a time A. L. Wilson purchased an interest, and the firm was finally succeeded by William Hill and A. L. Wilson. In 1884 there were three furniture stores and cabinet shops in Richland Center. Henry Toms established his business in 1865; August Larson in 1880; and the business of Dove Brothers was started in 1881 by E. A. Dove and J. A. Logan.

Pratt Brothers, in 1878, established their business of house, sign and carriage painting, paper hanging, etc. They also keep for sale, paints, oils, glass and wall paper.

William H. Downs established an ashery in 1857-8, and operated it successfully for several years, manufacturing potash, etc.

D. E. and D. G. Pease established an ashery the following year, which they ran for several years.

The first brick made at Richland Center was from a kiln burned by D. Rice, Sept. 20, 1856, at Richland Center, and from this small beginning has grown quite a large industry. John Waddell burned the first kiln of brick in the town.

The first brick edifice erected in the village was likewise a production of Richland Center hands, having been built in that interesting village by Samuel Wright, for his own use and occupancy, in the fall of 1857. He and a party by the name of W. A. Mason, laid up the walls themselves, and otherwise furnished the house, which was a small tenement. In the following year another house was erected by Mr. White.

The first celebration of the national anniversary, in Richland Center, was held July 4, 1854. The first unfurling to the breeze, in the valley, of our glorious "meteor flag," was at that date, and the first liberty pole erected in the Pine river valley was erected then that it could uphold the "banner of the free."

It has been said by one who helped to make that day's rejoicing a success, that "no fourth has seemed more grand since. A handful of people, comparatively, participated in the observances of the day; but they were nearer to each other, than now."

Among others who have been prominently identified with the business interests of Richland Center are the following: Dr. D. L. Downs, D. E. Pease, J. W. Lybrand, D. G. Pease, G. H. James, M. C. Pease, W. H. Downs, William Short, William Nelson, S. H. Austin, William Baker, N. H. Langdon, James Holden, A. H. Floten, J. Jones, N. W. Bailey, G. Hill, George Matteson, Mr. Spooner, A. L. and W. H. #### HOTELS.

The second building erected on the site of the future metropolis of the county was built by the proprietor of the town, Ira S Hazeltine, and became perforce of circumstances the tavern of the district, and was christened by its landlord, Mr. Hazeltine, the American House; it became a general resort for citizens and travelers alike, and, for a long time, was the only house beneath whose roof the weary could find rest. Mr. Hazeltine continued the popular landlord of this hostelry until he was succeeded in a couple of years by A. S. Neff. In November, 1862, after raising the general tone of the house, and after building large additions to the primal building, Mr. Neff sold out his interest to William H. Hook, of whom it is said that his vigilant watchfulness earned for the hotel and village a good name far and wide. Sept. 29, 1857, Mr. Hook was succeeded by G. H. Dyke and afterward by J. W. Smith, who removed to the newly built Park Hotel. Several changes now followed in quick succession, for, in consequence of the change in the location of the business center, and the erection of new hotels, the house ceased to be so lucrative as formerly. The name had been changed from the more pretentious American House to the more local one of Richland House. Around its hallowed walls clung many of the memories of pioneer days, and, to very many people in the county, it was the first resting place for their weary heads, the first shelter they knew, when they had newly arrived in Richland county. On the 22d of February, 1877, it was consumed by fire and then passed away one of the old landmarks of pioneer days. Mrs. Haskell was the last landlady.

In 1854 was built the Union House by Hascal Haseltine, who was its landlord for some time. Other landlords were: Amasa Haskins, Messrs. Greene, Ingalls and Ingram Rolf. In 1867 it was kept by T. C. McNelly. After many vicissitudes this hotel passed into the hands of Luckey & Co., who changed the name to the Center House. In 1877 Mr. E. Rolfe, the owner, repaired the building, made additions, transforming it into the building now known as the Central House. For three years after its transformation Mr. Rolfe played the part of the jolly host of this first-class hotel, and was well known throughout this and the adjoining counties. The building is large and commodious and is well fitted up for the benefit of the traveling public. In March, 1881, the present landlord, O. P. Peck, purchased the entire property, and is now (1884) making large additions and repairs preparatory to a thorough refitting of the whole establishment, and a stronger effort for the patronage of the commercial travelers.

In 1873 the society of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows commenced the erection of a three story building on the southeast corner of block 5. The size of the building was to be 24x50 feet. The ground floor was to be used as a store, and the upper story to be used as a lodge room. Before the building was completed it was badly damaged by a heavy wind storm and as the society was not in financial shape to refit it, the property passed into the hands of D. O. Chandler and W. D. S. Ross. These gentlemen at once refitted the building, enlarged it to the size of 50x65 feet, and built it three stories high. In December, 1874, the spacious building was opened to the public for hotel purposes and christened the Park Hotel, on account of its close proximity to the court house park. The first landlord was J. W. Smith, who furnished the house and ran it about three years. He was succeeded by C. Tryon and in May, 1883, C. W. Slocum became landlord. In November, 1883, S. J. Smith & Son took charge and are the present landlords. The property is still owned by Chandler & Ross.

POSTOFFICE.

The inhabitants, wishing to have proper mail facilities, petitioned the general government to that effect, and instead of the postal department sending the commission to some party then a resident of the village, Leroy D. Gage, of Antioch, Ill., was appointed to the office, which was established during that year, 1854, literally "bringing the office on his back," as it has been expressed by some of the early pioneers. Mr. Gage held this position as postmaster until in the spring of 1861, when, upon the change of administration consequent upon the elevation of Abraham Lincoln to the chief magistracy, W. H. Downs was appointed his successor. The latter gentleman held the commission for the transaction of the postal business of the town until 1866, when G. L. Laws was inducted into the office and held the position until 1876. He had for his immediate successor, J. H. Miner, so long identified with the interests of the village, and in fact, of the county. In 1881 the present postmaster, D. G. James, was appointed to fill the office. The latter gentleman has now for his deputies J. G. Bunnell and Carrie Sherman.

During the first few years after the establishment of the village, the growth was quite slow, owing, in some respects, to the mistaken policy of the proprietor, Mr. Hazeltine.

PUBLIC HALLS.

Chandler's hall is a fine large room 24x100 feet in dimension, and fitted with stage accessories and good scenery. The building was erected by D. O. Chandler, finished and ready for business in November, 1866. It is kept in good repair by that progressive citizen.

Bailey's Opera House was commenced in 1883, the first brick being laid on the 15th of August. It was dedicated on the 27th of December, 1883, by the Masonic fraternity, with a festival and dance. The building is 32x126 feet in size, and the opera room is fitted with a commodious stage and convenient drawing and side rooms. Much credit is due to the proprietor, Henry T. Bailey, for his energy and enterprise in carrying through the project, and giving to Richland Center an opera house second to but few in this part of the State; and the hall is justly the pride of the citizens as well as the owner.

BANKS.

The story of the banking institutions of Richland Center is but a short one and soon told, and commences in this wise:

The want of sufficient money in all communities has had a tendency to retard the development and growth of the country, and hamper many commercial transactions that would otherwise benefit the individual and society at large.

Therefore, very early in its history the business men of the incipient city attempted to initiate a bank. Dec. 16, 1856, witnessed the organization of such an institution, with the title of the Pine River Valley Bank, and the following officers elected to effect and perfect the organization and opening of the same for business: Israel Janney, president; D. B. Priest, cashier; Caleb Waggoner, J. J. Shumaker, Leroy D. Gage, Jacob Brimer, W. H. Downs, James H. Miner and A. J. Straight, directors. The bank was instituted under the State laws of that date, and was to be based on real estate as security. The books for subscription were opened at the office of the cashier, who was to receive the same and issue certificates of stock, and at whose office the constitution and by-laws of the association could be seen, and information in regard to it given. The financial panic of 1857, that followed so soon after its inception, however, blighted its prospects and the whole thing was allowed to collapse, and the bank never opened its doors for business. After this no regular banking house was opened in the county seat, or, in fact, in the county, although many of the merchants and others transacted in a small degree the business usually done by banks. Thus the town was without a monetary institution until the initiation of the banking house of George Krouskop. Krouskop's bank is one of the solid institutions of the county. It is the oldest bank at Richland Center, having been established by George Krouskop in 1870. The bank is a private enterprise, being owned and operated solely by Mr. Krouskop, and has a capital of over $50,000. Its corresponding banks are: Milwaukee National Bank, of Milwaukee, and Merchants' National Bank, of Chicago.

The Richland County Bank is the outgrowth of the abstract and collection business of W. H. Pier, and became a fixed fact in 1883, in which year Mr. Pier erected his present bank building. This building is of brick, 28x60 feet, two stories high, and is one of the best constructed buildings in the county. The bank is still in its infancy but has good prospects. Its corresponding banks are—Merchants National, New York; Preston, King & Co., Chicago; and Houghton Bros., Milwaukee.

INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISES.

In 1855 Ira S. Hazeltine, who then owned the water power, built a saw mill at the point where the present mill now stands, and the same fall erected a mill to grind corn and feed and some grist, but it was but a poor affair at best. He continued the proprietor of these mills until July, 1860, when the elder Parfrey rented them of him, together with the water power, and run them until in 1863. A. C. Parfrey and J. C. Nichols purchased the property and rebuilt the grist mill and built a new saw mill. In 1870 Parfrey and his partner, Pease, who had bought out Nichols' interest, commenced the erection of a new dam, and the present fine merchant and grist mill. This is a large structure, substantially built, 50x60 feet in dimension, four stories high, with a warehouse addition of 24x50 feet, having a storage capacity of some 18,000 bushels of wheat. The mill has nine run of buhrs and three sets of rollers, and all the most modern improved machinery and has a capacity of making 1,000 barrels of flour per week. This mill cost some $26,000 to build and equip. They have also a fine saw and planing mill, which is in constant operation, and capable of making 10,000 feet of good hard wood lumber per day. The interests represented by this gentleman—for it is entirely owned and operated by A. C. Parfrey, at present—is one of the most important in the county. The flour from this mill enjoys a high reputation and the brand of "Parfrey's Choice" needs no recommendation to the careful housewife.

The first steam mill at Richland Center was that known as the Shumaker mill. It was formerly located in the town of Rockbridge. It was purchased by John Walworth and moved here in 1860. He sold an interest to Amasa Haskins, and a few years later the mill was burned to the ground. Upon the same site another mill was erected by Smith, Laws & Walworth. Hattleberg & Johnson soon afterward purchased Mr. Walworth's interest and the business was conducted under the firm name of Smith, Laws & Co. They engaged extensively in the manufacture of lumber and furniture—principally bedsteads. They built flat boats and sent their goods to St. Louis by water. On one of these trips Mr. Laws purchased a steamboat and came back with it. Upon his arrival at Richland Center he met with a grand ovation, the citizens presenting him with a gold-headed cane, in honor of the occasion. The saw mill continued in successful operation until 1871, when it was destroyed by fire.

The saw mill on the west side of the river is now operated by Norman L. James. In connection with the mill Mr. James runs an extensive wagon factory, having furnished the mill with all the necessary machinery. The establishment furnishes steady employment for about thirty hands.

In 1865 A. C. Parfrey erected a bedstead factory. In 1868 he associated D. E. Pease as partner and operated the business until 1871, when it was discontinued. The factory, while it was in operation, furnished employment to from sixteen to thirty-five hands, and was an important industry in Richland Center.

In 1873 Parfrey & Pease established a stove factory, which was operated with good success by them for about four years, when the business was discontinued.

In 1876 William Hill erected a small planing mill near his residence. This proved to be too small, and in 1880 he erected his present mill, which is 30x50 feet in size, besides engine and boiler rooms. The mill does an extensive business in planing, turning, scroll sawing and joining work.

In 1883 A. H. Kronskop erected a large steam saw-mill near the Parfrey mill. It is equipped with all the latest patterns of machinery, first-class engine and other accessories.

ARTESIAN WELL.

The village board, as early as 1875, agitated the question of boring an artesian well for the purpose of increasing the facilities for extinguishing fires and for the supplying of good water generally. But nothing definite was reached until February, 1876, when a contract was entered into by them with Maurice O'Conner and Daniel Canfield, of Venango, Penn., who engaged to drill a well on lot 3, in block 8; the said well to be tubed its entire length, which was not to exceed 1,000 feet; and the price agreed on and put into the contract was $3 per foot.

These gentlemen at once set to work and soon had a hole in the ground, but when they had reached the depth of 744 feet the drill encountered igneous rock, in the form of granite, and knowing that no water veins exist in that the matter was given up for the time. Water was reached long before that depth had been attained, but no flow. The well now stands with the water in it up to within a few feet of the surface, and a project is on foot to put up a system of waterworks, having for a base of supply this artesian well, as the supply of water is inexhaustible. One or two other attempts have been made in the county to get a flowing well, with like results.

VILLAGE GOVERNMENT.

In September, 1866, a movement was put on foot to secure the incorporation of Richland Center, as a village, under the statutes of the State. And was so incorporated in October of the same year. The first meeting of the trustees of the newly organized village was held Feb. 1, 1867, in the room over D. L. Downs' store. The officers who were present were as follows: D. L. Downs, president; D. E. Pease, G. H. James, C. Waggoner, John Fitzgerald, C. H. Smith and L. D. Gage, trustees; after the organization of the board, they proceeded to elect Fred. H. Tuttle, clerk; J. L. McKee, treasurer and Thomas Cholerton, marshal. The board then appointed a committee consisting of D. L.

Downs, L. D. Gage and C. H. Smith to draft by-laws and to make a design for the village seal. The first ordinance passed by this august body was one for the prevention and extinguishment of conflagrations in the village.

1867—The officers elected were: D. L. Downs, president; G. H. James, C. Waggoner, John Fitzgerald, C. H. Smith and L. D. Gage, trustees; Fred H. Tuttle was re-appointed clerk and J. L. McKee, treasurer. Joseph McMurtrey was also appointed marshal and R. R. Hamilton, street commissioner. In October, however, Fred. H. Tuttle resigning his position as clerk, and McMurtrey that of marshal, Gilbert L. Laws was appointed to the former, and Peter E. Brewer to the latter office. We have a report of the village finances for the year as filed by the treasurer March 23, 1868, by which we may find the following.

Cash received from various parties.....	$233 80
“ paid out on orders .....	102 80
“ balance in treasury.....	$131 00

1868—James H. Miner, president; D. E. Pease, Caleb Waggoner, A. B. Weigley, W. H. Downs, James Tuttle and Gilbert L. Laws, trustees; James H. Waggoner was appointed clerk; James L. McKee, treasurer; Peter E. Brewer, marshal; G. I. Morton, street commissioner, and W. H. Hook, pound-master.

McKee, treasurer; J. W. Leik, marshal and pound-master; Seth Bayse, street commissioner. In November the village board, by resolution, declared the office of marshal vacant, and appointed Erastus Rolfe to fill the vacancy. It was this board that succeeded in instituting the present fire department, and purchased the apparatus therefore.

1870—Dr. A. W. Bickford, president; W. H. Downs, G. N. Mickle, C. H. Smith, James Tuttle, A. Durnford and H. T. Bailey, trustees, who proceeded to appoint the following officers:

James Fogo, marshal; W. H. Downs, clerk; J. L. McKee, treasurer; E. Rolfe, pound-master.

1871—J. L. McKee, president; Norman L. James, W. H. Pier, G. N. Mickle, A. S. Fries, W. F. Tuttle and H. Freeman, trustees; who appointed W. H. Downs, clerk; N. L. James, treasurer; E. H. Liscum, marshal and G. N. Dyke, pound-master. During the administration of this board, a ballot was taken at the fall election whether the village should surrender its charter as an incorporated village, which was defeated by the vote of the qualified electors, there being 109 against such surrender, and sixty in favor of it.

1872—D. G. James, president; D. H. Burnham, H. Freeman, Henry Toms, G. N. Mickle, George N. Matteson, and A. B. Weigley, trustees; W. H. Downs was appointed clerk; Henry Toms, treasurer; A. Crosby, marshal and N. G. Leonard, street commissioner.

Alice Pease was appointed clerk, (this being the first instance on record of a lady holding that position); Elihu Pease made treasurer; J. L. Fogo, marshal, and Seth Bayse, street commissioner.

1875—H. W. Fries, president; George Krouskop, J. L. McKee, N. W. Bailey, John Walworth, George N. Matteson and Warren C. S. Barron, trustees; E. H. Liscum, village constable; Kate G. Downs was appointed clerk; George Krouskop, treasurer; E. H. Liscum, marshal and J. L. Sweet, street commissioner. This board, in the interests of temperance, fixed the license for saloons at $125 and for drug stores $40. Permission was also given by the board this year to the railroad company to use certain streets of the village for their tracks.

1876—H. W. Fries, president; George Krouskop, John Walworth, J. L. McKee, N. W. Bailey, George N. Matteson and Warren C. S. Barron, trustees; James Tuttle, police justice; R. D. Robinson, constable. Kate G. Downs was appointed clerk; George Krouskop, treasurer; E. H. Liscum, marshal; S. C. 1877—A. G. James, president; T. Hart, J. W. Lybrand, John Wertz, A. S. Fries, J. F. Walker and James Tuttle, trustees; W. H. Downs, police justice; R. R. Hamilton, village constable. Kate G. Downs was re-appointed clerk; F. Walker made treasurer; E. Stevens, marshal and street commissioner. During the administration of this board there was a second movement to vacate the incorporation of the village, and a resolution to submit the matter at a special election was passed by the board. In July, 1877, the election was held, in accordance with the above ordinance, and again defeated, the vote standing: For dissolution, 46; against dissolution, 137.

1878—Warren C. S. Barron, president; Jacob W. Lybrand, John Brimer, D. O. Chandler, Aug Schmidt, N. W. Bailey and John Walworth, trustees; Seth Pennell, police justice; A. D. Laws, village constable. The contest this year was one of the most exciting that has occurred for a number of years past, on account of the element of temperance in the matter. For the past two years it seems that there has been license granted to several saloons to deal out intoxicating liquors, and the friends of temperance determined to make a strong effort and turn the scale and have no licenses granted. A strong prohibition ticket was placed in the field and elected, as given above.

The ladies were out in force, and worked from early in the morning till the polls were closed, distributing tickets and soliciting votes for the no-license ticket. The effect of their labors was manifested in the result, and they felt highly elated over the success which crowned their efforts, as victors naturally do.

The majorities for the no-license ticket ranged from sixty-seven to eighty-nine, and were by far the largest given on either side of the issue in many years. Several of the gentlemen whose names were on what was known as the license ticket, declared that they had not given consent to the use of their names, and would neither qualify nor serve if elected, and they voted the other ticket, thus swelling the majorities.

The first regular meeting of the new council was held May 14, 1883.

A petition was presented to the board, signed by a number of young men, requesting that no license be granted for the running of billiard tables, which, being read in full, was referred to the committee on judiciary, who, after a short deliberation, submitted the following report, which was adopted:

"We, the committee to whom was referred the petition and remonstrance requesting that no license be granted for keeping billiard tables, and remonstrating against such license and against the sale of intoxicating liquors, have had the same under consideration, and most respectfully report the following and recommend its adoption:

"WHEREAS, Considering the large majority of votes giving expression of their views at the recent election upon the issue well understood, whether license or no license should be granted, and in compliance with that expression and the large and respectable petition signed by the young men and others of the village, against the granting of license, therefore:

"Resolved, That the board grant the petitioners their request, and it is further

"Resolved, That no license be granted to any person for the keeping of billiard tables, pigeon-hole alleys or bowling saloons within this village."

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

At a meeting of the village board, held Aug. 16, 1869, a bill was brought up appropriating the sum of $300 for the purpose of purchasing a Babcock chemical engine for the extinguishment of fires. Although this bill was then laid upon the table, from it may be traced the present efficient fire brigade that is always on hand when the demon of destruction sweeps with fiery besom through this beautiful village.

Although the first attempt had failed, however, its friends did not falter but pressed the matter and on Nov. 23, 1869, succeeded in having the trustees pass the bill to purchase a United States chemical engine. At the next meeting thereafter held Dec. 13, 1869, the trustees, by ballot, elected Henry St. John, foreman, and William Tuttle, assistant foreman, with full power to raise and organize a fire company. At the same meeting measures were also taken that all the necessary fixtures should be purchased to run the engine and help the company in the discharge of their duty. It would seem from the records that the chemical engine was purchased and arrived, but for some reason it did not meet the wants of the community nor the wishes of the board, and it was returned.

Jan. 10, 1870, however, the village board passed a resolution to purchase as a substitute for it a second-hand Button & Blake's hand engine, in good repair, at a cost of $750, and 300 feet of hose suitable for the use of the same and also a resolution to purchase of Richards & Herbert a hook and ladder truck, at a cost of $120, and a hose reel to carry the hose to the seat of conflagration. This being done, in February, 1870, there was duly organized the Richland Center Engine Company and the Richland Center Hook and Ladder Company, and all the implements for the extinguishment of fires were placed in their hand, and for the safe keeping of which they pledged themselves and also agreed to drill in the use of the same. The town board thereupon appointed A. W. Bickford as chief engineer of the department and that gentleman has the honor of being the first to enjoy that dignity.

To the honor of the village board be it spoken that they took all measures to make this a most efficient department, and in furtherance of this in May, 1870, they signed a contract with M. D. Hankins, by which he agreed to build several cisterns at the intersection of such streets as were thought most advisable. Three were built under this contract, but it seems from some later remarks upon the records that they had not prove quite as satisfactory as was desirable, as several more were afterwards built of brick or stone, one near D. O. Chandler's store being let under contract to G. A. Tuttle for $225. This was in the summer of 1873.

In the early days of the new fire brigade the engine, trucks and reel were kept in various barns and buildings rented for that purpose but in December, 1870, and January, 1871, an engine house was built by the board for the use of the department at a cost of some $300. In 1871 and 1872, A. W. Bickford was re-elected to the office of chief engineer. During this latter year some more hose was purchased and the engine house was removed to lot 3 in block 8, which had been purchased for the purpose by the village board of J. W. Lybrand for the sum of $175.

The engine company by this time numbered some thirty members and the hook and ladder company fifteen. These were all, in consideration of their services in the fire brigade, exempt from paying poll tax or doing jury duty.

In April, 1873, the mode of choosing the officers of the department was changed, passing from the hands of the village board to that of the companies themselves, subject, however, to the confirmation of the trustees of the village. Under this rule the officers chosen were as follows: W. F. Tuttle, chief engineer; F. M. Ott, assistant engineer; H. Toms, treasurer; G. N. Matteson, secretary.

In 1877 J. M. Adams was the head of the fire department.

In the year 1878 the officers of the department were as follows: David G. James, chief engineer; Benjamin Brimer, assistant; Henry Toms, treasurer; W. H. Pier, secretary; George Jarvis, fire warden.

The year 1879 witnessed the re-election of the entire board. The officers above mentioned seemed to give such satisfaction that no change was made until 1881, when we find the following as the list of officers of the department: D. G. James, chief engineer; George N. Matteson, assistant; F. P. Lawrence, secretary; H. Toms, treasurer; George Jarvis, fire warden.

At the annual election in May, 1882, the following officers were elected: W. H. Pier, chief engineer; H. T. Bailey, assistant engineer; H. Toms, treasurer; D. G. James, secretary; O. G. Munson, fire warden.

The department is a very efficient one and is well equipped with good apparatus and the "boys" are the pride of the village. The present officers were elected in May, 1883, and are as follows:

W. Harry Pier, chief engineer; David G. James, first assistant engineer; H. R. Brewer, second assistant engineer; George Jarvis, fire warden; I. A. Cleveland, secretary; Henry Toms, treasurer.

FIRE RECORD.

The village has but little cause to lament the usual large proportion of fires that occur in most communities, none that have occurred within its limits assumed any magnitude.

The first buildings burned in Richland Center were the dwelling houses belonging to Phineas Janney and Samuel Fries. They were both occupied by their families. The first fire of any importance was the burning of the court house, which occurred in April, 1859. Among other distressing fires that have occurred were the following: Burning of J. Thompson's house, Jones' tannery, Walworth's steam saw-mill, Smith, Laws & Co.'s saw-mill and furniture factory, Fries' tannery, American Hotel, Jones' shoe shop, Bayles' blacksmith shop, John Heeran's marble works, engine house, the Austin building, Daniel Rice's store, the railway depot and A. H. Krouskop's block.

The following is an account of the two most important fires that have occurred in Richland Center, as gleaned from the newspaper accounts published at the time. The first on the list was the

BURNING OF THE DEPOT.

About 2 o'clock in the morning of Sunday, Oct. 8, 1882, two quick reports in succession, or as nearly together as to almost seem one, and loud as a cannon's roar, awakened every sleeper and shook every building in Richland Center. The startled citizens on being so rudely torn from their peaceful slumbers, in quick haste donned their clothing and sallied forth in hot haste to inquire the cause. Ere many of them had gathered and with pallid cheek and quivering lip had asked the momentous question, the sonorous peal of the great fire bell resounding through the trembling air, told the fast gathering throng that the red fire fiend danced in their midst, and his infernal altar smoked with the incense he delights in.

Excited crowds soon filled the streets, all hastening in the direction from which the lurid flames lit up the village, and made the surrounding bluffs look like the mythical hills of brass.

It took but a short time to make the discovery that the depot of the Pine River branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad was a prey to the devouring element. In the short space of time which elapsed between the reports and the arrival of the fire brigade the flames had got under such headway, that it was impossible to arrest their mad progress and save the building or any of its contents. The safe belonging to the express company was indeed pulled from the fire, owing to the exertions of the firemen, and its contents saved, but this was about all.

Investigation showed that the reports were caused by the ignition of two kegs of gunpowder that were in the depot at the time. The roof of the building was blown off by the force of the explosion and fire thrown in all directions.

The work of the flames was swift and sure, and in an incredibly short space of time the spot where the building stood was marked only by a mass of smouldering ruins. In addition to the loss of the depot and its contents, the baggage car and one or two freight cars that stood near on the track were badly scorched and damaged before they could be removed. The passenger coach, however, escaped with but slight damage.

CONFLAGRATION OF KROUSKOP'S PALACE DRY GOODS STORE.

Between the hours of four and five o'clock in the morning of Friday, Jan. 28, 1883, the village of Richland Center was again visited by the demon of fire, which with a flaming besom swept out of existence one of the chief ornaments of the city nestled among the hills.

At the hour mentioned above, the loud clangor of the fire bell broke upon the affrighted ears of the sleeping inhabitants of the village dissipating their little remaining slumbers. The wild alarm soon brought the whole town upon the streets. It was found, on inquiry, that a fire had been discovered, shortly before, in the frame grocery store of A. H. Floaten, on Center street, in close proximity to A. H. Krouskop's mammoth brick block, and by the time the fire department had arrived on the ground the fiery element had gathered such headway that it was plainly evident to all that all effort to subdue it was in vain, and that the edifice was doomed to destruction.

The extreme cold weather had frozen the valves of the engine and some valuable time was wasted by that unfortunate circumstance, upon their arrival upon the scene of action. While the firemen were making strenuous efforts to remedy this, and straining every nerve to get the apparatus to work, the flames spread to the frame building north of the one where the fire originated, also occupied by Mr. Foaten, and thence north to the building tenanted by W. H. Pier, as an abstract office. The main efforts of the hook and ladder company was directed toward pulling down the Pier building that endangered the remaining portion of the row. For some time it was feared that all their efforts were unavailing, and that the flames would leap the narrow distance, to the next building, and the whole business portion of the town would be devoured by the insatiable monster.

But fortunately there was no wind to fan the fire and help it spread and this fact, added to the almost superhuman efforts of the firemen, and it might be said, the whole number of the inhabitants as well, and that the roofs of all the buildings were deeply covered with snow, kept the fire in due limits, and its further progress was arrested in that direction. All this time great volumes of flames, fed by the combustible nature of Floaten's store and stock, of which a considerable quantity of coal oil formed a part, rolled up against the side of Krouskop's block, heating the iron cornice and setting fire to the rafters underneath the roof, and joists of timbers running around back of the cornice. The engine, having by this time been put into good working order, stream after stream of water was poured directly upon the devouring element, but with very little visible effect.

Owing to the height of the building, the engine could not throw a stream up to the cornice with force enough to be effective. The fire still kept creeping insidiously onward at this point in under the roof. A number of men were inside fighting the flames with pails of water, and after the efforts of the firemen were found to be useless outside, the hose was taken up through a window in Black & Burnham's law office, and an attempt was made to reach the attic with it and turn a stream of water against the flames, but the attempt miscarried and the whole scheme abandoned.

Still being unwilling to give the matter up, the firemen went along the hall on the second story and extinguished the fire that had caught in the windows and casings, on the north side of the building. The fire in these rooms had been previously put out several times, but the heat was so intense that the wood-work rekindled almost as soon as they were cleared of the fire. Those inside finding how futile were their puny efforts against this hydra-headed giant, and seeing no possible chance of saving the building, reluctantly retired, and left the magnificent structure to its fate.

Hushed now was the clamor, and all stood spell-bound, like the sailor as he watches the fast sinking vessel he has just left, watching the gradual triumph of the element over the boasted work of man. The flames now had an unmolested chance and their progress was swift, sure and deadly. With terrible steps the invader stole downward from the attic to the second floor, stair by stair, then onward to the first floor, devouring all on its way, and then as if deeming it still not enough went still downward in its irresistible march even into the cellar. As each floor, with its timbers and contents gave way and fell crashing to the one below, the flames rolled higher and higher and danced in infernal glee over the wreck and ruin below.

By seven o'clock the element had exhausted its force, and what was a few hours before a superb building was a heap of smouldering ruins and tottering, ragged, smoke scorched walls. Parts of the latter had to be battered down as their wrecked state imperiled the passers-by and some have since blown down, leaving an unsightly wreck, a blot upon the face of the fair village.

During the progress of the conflagration, the explosion of a keg of powder in the store of A. H. Floaten created a lively sensation, as there were people in the building at the time engaged in carrying out goods, and the proprietor was, even then, engaged in a search for the powder and was within a few feet of it when it exploded. The glass in the windows of the buildings opposite was nearly all shattered by the concussion. Much of the goods in both buildings were saved, but in a damaged condition.

Various conjectures as to the origin of the fire were rife, at the time, but it seems to be the general opinion that it caught from a defective flue in the Floaten store. The loss can safely be put down as fully $75,000, on which there was an insurance of $48,700.

An account of this Krouskop block will not be out of place in this connection, as the structure was the pride of the citizens of the village and of the county generally, as well as of the owner, and was said to be the finest building of the kind in the State, west of Milwaukee. The block was 44x125 feet, with a wing 34x74 feet in dimension, all two stories high, and was built of pressed brick, with cut stone trimmings and handsome iron cornice. Large plate glass windows adorned and illuminated the front, and all the interior wood work was executed in hard wood, principally walnut. Mr. Krouskop commenced the erection of the edifice in 1876; the material he had been collecting for ten years previously. It was finished during the year 1877, and he moved into it in January, 1878, and occupied it at the time of its destruction.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

In May, 1857, Michael Carmichael opened the first saloon in the village of Richland Center, and which was known as the "Bowling Saloon," and shortly afterwards was followed by Patrick Meehan, who opened a rum shop in the midst of the town. At the time no licenses could be or were granted to these parties, who thus commenced their business in open defiance of the law. The wildest excitement now seized upon the law abiding portion of the community. The following call for a temperance meeting was conspicuously displayed all over town on small posters, early in July:

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Those ladies and gentlemen of Richland Center and vicinity, who are in favor of using all legal means to suppress the liquor traffic in said village, will meet at the court house, this (Tuesday) evening, July 14, at 7 o'clock.

We quote an account of the affair from the columns of the Richland County Observer, of that date, as better reflecting the feelings of the community, than can be shown from anything written at this distant day. Says the reporter to that paper:

"There was considerable excitement in this village on Wednesday and Thursday, of last week, on account of the continued unlicensed sales of spirituous liquors, which are constantly occurring in the Bowling Saloon, and in the house of Patrick Meehan.

"Notice had been given on Tuesday evening that there would be a meeting on Wednesday morning, for the purpose of considering what further policy should be pursued to suppress the traffic. This meeting was attended principally by women, and there was manifested by some of them a determination to do something rash, if no other means could be suggested whereby the curse could be stayed. Several gentlemen having been called to speak, and they having spoken, and contended that law only should be employed to abate the nuisance, the project of doing violence was put to rest, as in the exercise of good sense, every such notion ought to be.

"Why any body here has ever thought of mob violence, to suppress the unlawful sales of ardent spirits, is because our statute requires that the quantity and quality of the liquor sold, shall be set forth in the complaint; and the difficulty of obtaining this evidence here for the commencement of a suit is so great, that these grogeries have sold their drinks with impunity, until they have become "public nuisances, sources of filth, and causes of sickness," without exaggeration. This matter being perfectly plain to the observing mind, A. C. Eastland suggested that a complaint might be made to the board of health of this town, and that he thought they possessed sufficient power, by law, to remove all nuisances, which are sources of filth, or causes of sickness. This idea being perfectly reasonable to those assembled, it was determined to call a meeting of the members of the board of health and let them examine into the matter, if one other movement would not effect the desired end. And that was to adjourn until four o'clock, P. M., and then meet in the court house, from which place, it was voted, that the citizens should proceed, in procession, to the whisky shops under the direction of a marshal and assistant, headed by a lady and gentleman, who were selected to speak in behalf of the citizens. The meeting then adjourned. As a committee had been appointed to go to every house in the village to notify the inhabitants of the design of the meeting, at four o'clock, and invite them to be present, almost every body turned out, though the thermometer indicated nearly 90 degrees, Fahrenheit. After the meeting had come to order, and the object of it stated, the procession was formed and it proceeded at once to the Bowling Saloon, under the charge of W. H. Downs as marshal and George H. James as assistant. On arriving at the saloon, Michael Carmichael, who asked them in to take something, was addressed by Mrs. Eunice Holden, and was followed by Alfred H. Bush. They remonstrated against the unlawful traffic and plead in behalf of humanity, amidst constant interruption. Without effecting any thing by persuasion, the procession left, well satisfied that kind words and good reasoning were of no avail. Arriving at the house of Patrick Meehan they addressed him, and found him but little or no more susceptible to the influence than Carmichael.

"As a meeting of the board of health had been called, on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, a great number of citizens presented a complaint against these houses as nuisances, and asked their action upon the same. These liquor shops being unlicensed, and it having been shown that the liquor dealt out was a cause of sickness and a source of filth, and that its effect produced both annoyance and damage to the citizens of the town, it was adjudged by the board, after a thorough examination, that the complaint was well grounded, and they have issued the following notice for its removal:

STATE OF WISCONSIN, }
 RICHLAND COUNTY, } ss.
 TOWN OF RICHLAND.

At a meeting of the undersigned, members of the board of health in and for said town, began and holden at the court house therein, a quorum being present, and it appearing to said board that the sale and use of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, within said town, is a public nuisance, source of filth and cause of sickness, therefore, it is ordered by said board, that no person hereafter sell, or in any way dispose of intoxicating liquor, within said town, to be used as a beverage; and that all intoxicating liquors now in said town, kept for sale as a beverage, be removed therefrom, under the pains and penalties of the statute in such case made and provided.

Given under our hands this 9th day of July,
 A. D. 1857.

B. R. HOWLAND,

S. W. PICKARD,

E. P. YOUNG,

B. L. JACKSON,

Board of Health in and for the town of Richland.

"This movement may be considered as something new under the sun—may be considered as a wrong construction of the intention of the statute; but so far as the letter of the law is concerned, it is fully in accordance with it; and, the law ought to be, henceforth, interpreted as our board of health have seen fit so to interpret it. It would then be better than the Maine law; and, on this subject the State would not soon need to have legislation for the further regulation or suppression of the traffic."

As has been said, these men were engaged in a nefarious business, without any license, and they paid no attention to the notification of the board of health. After waiting twenty-four hours for them to remove the offending liquors, the members of the board made a personal call upon the men, and made a request of them to remove them or cause them to be removed, to neither of which requests would they listen, and showed an ugly spirit of resistance. Allowing the matter to rest over night, that it might sink into their minds, and finding in the morning no signs that they were making any preparations to obey the mandates of the law, a warrant was placed in the hands of the sheriff, and on Wednesday, July 15, the town board accompanied that officer and his posse to the saloon of Carmichael, and all the liquor found therein was taken out and poured upon the ground, which soon drank it up. No riot or resistance seems to have been met at this place, but all submitted with the best grace possible to the visit of the officer of the law, who but did his duty in executing the warrant. The nuisance being abated at this place, the procession, for it had swelled to that degree, proceeded to the saloon of Patrick Meehan, but did not find the man with any peaceable intentions. On perceiving them he ran up stairs, where he had conveyed the bulk of his stock of liquor, and, standing behind a barricade at the head of the stairs with his wife, presented at the approaching officer a gun, a revolver and a single-barreled pistol, and swore with terrible oaths that he would blow out the brains of, or do other deadly injury to, the sheriff or any other man who dared to attempt to storm his castle. The sheriff, finding that it might prove a dangerous job, evidently thinking discretion the better part of valor, incontinently left with all his posse, and Meehan was left victor of this bloodless field for the time being. A warrant was now issued for the arrest of the man for resisting an officer, and put into the hands of Constable Matteson, who, watching his opportunity, found him away from his house and brought him before Justice Young. William F. Crawford, who had been appointed court commissioner at the previous term of the circuit court by Judge Cothren, acted as Meehan's counsel. He demanded that his client should not be tried or examined before Justice Young, but at once offered to give a recognizance for his appearance at the next term of the circuit court. This demand being denied by 'Squire Young, who betrayed no great willingness to be ousted of his jurisdiction, Crawford repaired to his office and issued the following summons:

STATE OF WISCONSIN, }
RICHLAND COUNTY. }

To E. P. Young, Justice of the Peace of Richland County, Wisconsin:

Sir:—You are hereby notified that I have this day liberated Patrick Meehan, who was brought before you on the 16th day of July, A. D. 1857, on a charge preferred against him for resisting an officer while in the execution of serving legal process.

You are further notified to send, without unnecessary delay, the recognizance, and all the papers in the case, to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Richland County, Wisconsin.

Given under my hand, this the 16th day of July, A. D. 1857.

WM. F. CRAWFORD,
Court Commissioner Richland
County, Wisconsin.

But E. P. Young, on receiving this notice, could not find the authority for it, and therefore refused to deliver up the prisoner, and proceeded with the examination. After a hearing of the case, Meehan was required to give bail for his appearance at the next term of the circuit court. This he refused to do, and was committed to jail.

His attorney, Crawford, then sued out a writ of habeas corpus, before himself as court commissioner, for the liberation of his client, but the sheriff questioning Crawford's power or authority under the circumstances, refused to serve the writ. Crawford finding himself defeated in every move went to work writing out other mandatory documents, but met with no better success and finally seeing no better plan to liberate his friend and client, went security for his appearance himself, on which Meehan was liberated.

In the meantime it seems that the sheriff and town board, taking advantage of Meehan's absence, sent the deputy sheriff, Elmore, with a posse, some of the board going with them, to his house, to destroy the obnoxious liquors. They proceeded to the place, but on entering the premises were met by the determined opposition of Meehan's wife, who stood at the head of the stairway with a gun in her hands, declaring that she would shoot any man who had the temerity to attempt to come any further, or try to ascend the stair. Elmore commenced to parley with her, while she stood, like Helen McGregor in her fortress, defying them. Finding remonstrance and entreaties were fruitless, and goaded on by the bystanders, he made a movement forward with the intention of storming the stronghold, thinking that there was more bluster on her part than that she would really shoot. But he had "reckoned without his host," for scarcely had he taken a few steps than the amazon presented her weapon and discharged it, causing considerable confusion and a masterly retreat on the part of all the lookers-on.

Her intention to hurt was good, but in the excitement and anger of the moment, her hand trembled and she had missed hitting the officer or any one else. As soon as she saw that her aim had been futile, she snatched up another gun, seeing which Mr. Howland, one of the members of the board, called for weapons, and a rifle and revolver were handed to him. Cocking the rifle, he told her to lay down her arms and surrender or he would shoot. The woman weakened and surrendered and the officers marched in and took possession. A wagon was procured and all the liquor found in the house was taken out and placed upon it and driven to the banks of the Pine river. Here had congregated quite a number of people, of both sexes, to witness the destruction of the stuff. Barrel, keg and bottle were taken from the wagon and emptied into the swift current of the river, mingling with its waters the fiery liquid. After this had been completed, Meehan's wife was also arrested and placed under bonds to appear by the side of her husband, at the bar of the circuit court.

As soon as Meehan had recovered his liberty, he laid in a fresh supply of liquor, but was arrested and fined some $40, and the next day arrested and fined the same amount, and finding that it was likely to prove an expensive matter, he deserted the town, leaving Richland Center to enjoy the proud consciousness of having no saloon in its midst, as Carmichael had surrendered and given up his business.

EDUCATIONAL.

In the summer of 1853 the first school in the village was taught in the court house building by Sylvia Hazeltine. Calista Hazeltine taught a term of school in the same place during the summer of 1854. In 1855 Sarah Thomas taught in a building owned by Ira S. Hazeltine.

The first gentleman to teach in the village was James H. Miner, who began teaching a term in December, 1855, in the same building that had been occupied by the school taught by Sarah Thomas. The building was small and inconvenient, and without any lath and plaster on its walls, and as the winter was an unusually severe one, the scholars suffered from the inclemency of the weather. Mr. Miner informs us that in the middle of the winter, the supply of wood, for the stove, gave out, and rather than abandon the school, he with his own hands chopped up the pole fence that surrounded the lot on which the school house was built, and kept up the fire in that way. And even with this the stove was always surrounded by shivering urchins, who complained, that while their face was warm their backs were freezing. In the fall of 1857 the question of building a more comfortable and commodious school house came to the front, and the contest between the high tax and low tax parties displayed more acrimony than is usual in communities over the educational matters. However, owing to the personal exertions of D. B. Priest, Israel Janney, J. H. Miner and other well-known friends of education, the town voted a tax of $3,000 to erect a suitable building. This tax was assessed by the regular assessor and placed upon the tax roll, but, as it was well nigh impossible for many to raise the money to pay this tax, the building committee made arrangements to receive it in material or labor at a fixed price and their receipts were taken by the town treasurer on such tax at their face value. Under these conditions the present frame structure was erected during the year 1858. It is 36x52 feet in dimension and two stories high, and is a good substantial building, with three apartments, in which the three lower grades are taught.

Ira S. Hazeltine, one of the most prominent antagonists of the measure of voting the tax, refused for a long time to pay his assessment, but finding that he would have to, came to the committee after the building was all finished, and wanted to supply lumber, this, having no further use for, they declined and the matter rested for a time, when he went before the county board, and with the assistance of the then district attorney, persuaded that body to cancel the tax certificates and charge the tax back to the school district.

In 1868, this school having been outgrown by the wants of the district, a movement was put on foot to build a larger and more commodious one. Several meetings were held and at one of these town meetings the citizens voted to levy a tax of $2,000 toward building the school house, and work was at once commenced on the structure. The edifice was finished during 1869, and is a large roomy building and complete in everything except room, for the ever-increasing population make it quite necessary to have more room, although both school houses are kept running. This building cost $4,500, and is in two apartments, and is under the personal supervision of H. R. Smith, who is the principal of all the village schools. The roll of teachers in 1883 were: H. R. Smith, high school; P. H. Fay, grammar; Mary McKay, Mary Spyer, M. Lawrence and Miss Vedder. There are at present 362 children enrolled and the average attendance reaches 289, which is quite a respectable figure when we take into consideration that 152 of the scholars are quite small, being in the two lower grades.

In 1879 Miss Peck, from Milwaukee, started a kindergarten under the supervision of the school board.

In this connection it would be well to say that the schools are of a high grade and a complete course through the high school prepares the pupil for entry into the State University at Madison without any further studies.

The high school was established by vote of the qualified electors of the district, in 1875, and the first pupils to graduate therefrom were Miss B. D. Miner and L. C. Thorpe. The former was a daughter of Judge Miner, and now the wife of J. H. Berryman, a lawyer of Richland Center. The present board of school control is composed of D. L. Downs, J. D. McKee and O. J. Burnham, clerk. At a meeting held in July, 1883, it was voted that $15,000 be raised for the purpose of erecting a new school building, and a site containing five acres, located in the Schoolcraft addition, was secured.

RELIGIOUS.

For some years after the settlement of the village, adverse circumstances kept the erection of any church edifice from being consummated. But as early as March 27, 1857, some stir was made in the matter toward the building of a union meeting-house, where all could worship. Committees were appointed, but, for various reasons, the scheme was abandoned. In May, 1857, the Presbyterians, who had organized a society that month in the village, determined to take the matter in hand and put up a place of worship for themselves. But means were scarce, and some time was necessarily spent before the matter assumed a shape justifying the letting of the contract. But that day did at last dawn when the committee, of which Caleb Waggoner was chairman, we believe, that they could see their way clear to the end. William and A. L. Wilson took the contract of building the structure, which was finished during the same year, 1857.

Services were held during the fall, under the ministrations of Rev. J. H. Mathers, the first pastor of this little flock. At the opening of the church there were but nine members of the society, but the attendance from the first was very fair and favorable. Mr. Mathers was succeeded by Rev. J. M. Reid, a faithful laborer in the "vineyard of the Lord," but whose health at last broke down and he was forced to retire in 1866. For some little time after his removal the fold was without a shepherd, but a Rev. Mr. White came and took temporary charge of them for about six months. Rev. G. J. E. Richards was installed as pastor in the summer of 1876, and remained in charge only about a year, when he, too, on account of poor health, was obliged to leave, and was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Winn for a short time. Since that time Rev. Mr. Benson has spent two years as a faithful laborer in this field, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Pierce, who took charge in January, 1880, and remained until January, 1883, when he terminated his connection with the society, and Rev. Mr. Winn, from Madison, supplied the pulpit until the summer 1883, when Rev. Dennison, the present pastor, took charge.

Possibly we may have made some omissions in the list of the pastors, or some little inaccuracies may have crept in, but the fault has been occasioned by the great difficulty encountered by us in our efforts in collecting the material for our facts, having mainly to rely upon the memories of those to whom we looked for the proper data. The church edifice is a neat frame structure and cost $1,100, and is yet in use, and answers very well the purpose for which it was erected. When the building was erected a bell was secured through the exertions of J. W. Lybrand. He solicited aid from his merchant friends in the city of New York, and after raising the money, placed it in the hands of Rev. J. H. Mathers, who purchased the bell.

It weighs 402 pounds and cost twenty-nine cents per pound.

METHODIST CHURCH.

Although the Presbyterian society were the first to erect a church edifice, still they were not the first to be organized into a society. As early as 1855 the Methodists had organized a class, and had held regular meetings, thus being the pioneer Church of the town. The first pastors were not regularly stationed ones, but were of that itinerant class, called circuit preachers, and a Mr. Wheeler is believed to be the first to exhort this little band of Christian men and women who had determined to raise a Church in the wilderness. In 1859 the first regular pastor assumed charge, the Church being then made a station of the Methodist Church, having been heretofore only supplied by circuit preachers. Among those who have preached here since are: Revs. Brainerd, Walker, Nuzum, De Lap, Cook, Hill, Chase, Brooks, Manuel, Irish, McKay, Sturgis, Burnip and J. D. Tull. Rev. A. L. Tull is the present pastor. The church edifice was commenced in 1872, and was completed early in 1873, being dedicated on the 2d of March, by the Rev. Mr. Fal-low. W. H. Downs was the first class leader, A. B. Weigley is the present one.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

This society was organized in 1866, and for a few years worshiped in the court house under the ministrations of the Rev. W. C. Wright, who was the first pastor, to whom the society owed its inception. He was an able, energetic worker in the ripe fields of the Master, and was not afraid to put his hands to the plough. This little band of Christians determined to erect a building in which to worship and in the same year set about the task, digging the excavation for the foundation walls. There were not many moneyed men in the congregation and contributions came in slowly and the work on the church was suspended from time to time for want of funds, so that it was not until the summer of 1870, that it was finished. Sunday, Nov. 1, 1870, the church was dedicated by W. C. Wright, formerly pastor, assisted by Revs. J. W. Fish, of Fox Lake, Rockwell and Phillips. Rev. G. D. Stevens was the pastor of this Church for some years and was instrumental in the completion of the church. The church edifice is a fine large structure, 36x60 feet in dimension, and built of brick on a foundation of stone, with a high, light and roomy basement, which is used for school purposes. Instead of having the building put up by contract, the board of trustees, the first the Church had, consisting of the following gentlemen: O. W. Gibbs, S. B. Pennell, J. S. Wilson, G. D. Stevens and G. L. Laws, determined to erect it themselves, which they did. The cost of the edifice was about $6,000, and is the finest building of the kind in the county. The Church has been without a pastor for some time, but W. S. Sweet supplies the pulpit occasionally.

ST. THOMAS CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The first mass was said to be held at the house of Patrick Meehan, in 1858, by Father Manderger, from Linden. Services were not held regularly, and sometimes three months passed without meetings. Father Francis Stokes, from Mazomanie, Father Murphy, from Crawford county, and Fathers Corney, Walsh and Bernard, held services at different times in private houses. In 1866 L. D. Gage donated ground for a church and cemetery, and soon afterward Father Bean, then pastor at Keyesville, erected a small church. In 1872 Father Francis Heller had the building enlarged to its present size. Father Heller was succeeded by Father A. Mendl, Aug. 10, 1874. In November, 1874, Father Heiss became pastor, and on the 16th of January, 1878, Father Henry Koenig, the present pastor, took charge. The Church has flourished and is now in excellent condition.

CEMETERY.

In 1854 a committee, consisting of C. W. Huntingdon, Charles Nelson and others, was appointed to lay out a cemetery ground, and they, for some unaccountable reason, selected a piece of ground on a rocky knoll, section 16, in Schoolcraft, which was seemingly the most unsuitable place in the whole valley for that purpose. A rocky, stony soil, into which the spade could only go for some three or four feet, and that only by the severest labor; exposed to all the elements in the worst shape imaginable. The site selected did not meet the views of the people of the village, who naturally wanted a more beautiful and convenient ground. In the spring of 1856 a meeting of the citizens was called to devise means to change the location of the burial ground. This subject for a while engrossed the whole population, and much deliberation and wrangling ensued. Some half a dozen public meetings were held, and at last an organization was effected and a committee was appointed to select the spot for the future cemetery. The committee reported that they had selected block 29, in the addition to the village known as Schoolcraft's, which was adopted and the necessary improvements made to secure the grounds and beautify the last resting place. The cemetery lies on the slope of a gentle acclivity facing the west, and is most beautifully laid out, dotted with evergreen and deciduous trees, and beds of lovely plants and flowers. The first officers of the association were: Caleb Waggoner, president, and James H. Miner, secretary and treasurer. The sale of lots and all business connected with the cemetery now lies in the hands of W. Harry Pier, who is the present secretary and treasurer.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CEMETERY.

When in February, 1859, L. D. Gage gave to the Church of this communion the ground for a church, he donated sufficient land for the cemetery, which is attached and lies just north of the grounds owned by the Richland Center Cemetery Association, and is also beautifully laid out and well kept. Here in consecrated ground lie the bodies of those who have died in full accord with the Church. The cemetery is, as usual, under the control of the priest of the parish.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS.

Richland Lodge, No. 118, was instituted at the village of Richland Center, Jan. 17, 1861, with eleven charter members, as follows: George Krouskop, D. S. Hamilton, F. P. Bowen, J. H. Waggoner, James H. Haskins, W. M. Fogo, J. H. Harrington, Joseph B. McGrew, Henry T. Bailey, Oscar F. Black and A. H. Krouskop. George Krouskop was the first noble grand of the lodge.

The lodge now numbers fifty-two members, and is in a fine, flourishing condition. They have a hall, which is fitted up with the paraphernalia of the order, and holds a fine library belonging to the lodge. This latter is a pet hobby of W. C. S. Barron's, the grand patriarch of the State, who is a member of this lodge, who instituted the same by soliciting the members to each donate what books they could. They all entered into the scheme and a nucleus was formed; donations were also solicited from other grand officers, who all responded freely, notably J. B. Ostrander and John G. Clark; Hon. George C. Hazleton, the ex-member of Congress from the district, has also placed the lodge under obligations for donations of books. The present officers are: George Clark, N. G.; A. W. Maly, V. G.; John Brimer, secretary; Seth Butler, treasurer.

Richland Encampment, No. 40, was instituted Jan. 8, 1871, with the following charter members: J. M. Adams, D. G. James, J. B. McGrew, G. W. Jarvis, N. L. James, W. C. S. Barron and John Hazel. The first officers were: Norman L. James, C. P.; J. M. Adams, H. P.; George Jarvis, S. W.; W. C. S. Barron, J. W.; D. G. James, T., and J. A. Hazel, scribe. The encampment meets in the same hall as the lodge, as do all the lodges of the order in the village. A large average attendance and the interest betrayed in the work show a healthy state of the organization. The present officers are: A. W. Maly, C. P.; Seth Butler, H. P.; W.

Collins, S. W.; Monroe Vreeland, J. W.; J. Bass, scribe; J. H. Van Riper, treasurer.

Brasted Uniformed Degree Camp, No. 6, was instituted Feb. 7, 1883, with the following charter members: William Collins, Seth Butler, M. Vreeland, F. H. Tuttle, G. J. H. Van Riper, M. Brodwright, John Brimer, A. G. Tuttle, A. W. Maly, W. C. S. Barron and J. Bass. The officers are: W. C. S. Barron, commander; G. J. H. Van Riper, vice commander; John Brimer, officer of the guard; W. Collins, secretary; Seth Butler, treasurer.

Amanda Lodge, No. 75, Rebecca degree, was organized and instituted Dec. 1, 1882. The following are the charter members; Brothers, W. C. S. Barron, John M. Hennon, George M. Clark, William Collins, F. C. Pennell, Seth Butler, S. Penoyer, J. M. Brimer, M. Brodwright, W. F. Doudna and A. S. Hayes. Sisters, Amanda Barron, Josie Clark, Alice Collins, R. Pennell, Margaret Butler, Fannie Penoyer, Nancy Brimer, Mary Doudna, Sarah Hayes and Delphinia Hennon. The officers are George Clark, N. G.; Fannie Penoyer, V. G.; Seth Butler, treasurer; Josie Clark, P. secretary; S. Penoyer, recording secretary.

ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN.

As this is a comparatively new order, a brief account of its origin and object may not be inappropriate in this connection. On the 5th day of November, 1868, some fourteen gentlemen assembled at Meadville, Penn., and organized the first lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. The motive that prompted them was a pure and unselfish one, and their plan of operations is the very best to carry out the purpose for which the order is intended—that of "charity, hope and protection." From the date of organization the order grew slowly, until July 4, 1870, when the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania was instituted at Meadville, in that State. The order then began to extend into all the different States and now is fully recognized in nearly every State and territory.

It is a benevolent order, not unlike the Odd Fellows, helping the widow and orphan and helping the sick. A distinguishing feature is the insurance, a payment of $2,000 to the heirs of a deceased member at his demise. The money is raised by assessment on the members and the life insurance is thus furnished at the actual cost.

Center Lodge, No. 70, of this order, was instituted at Richland Center, in July, 1879, by A. H. Taisey, with the following charter members: Seth Butler, I. S. Hazeltine, A. S. Hayes, Cyrus Tryon, John Winn, Charles Speidel, B. Dodge Bailey, Robert Bailey, Jr., James Jones, Arthur D. Lane, James Kinney, Albert Schmidt, D. B. Sommers, James S. Smith, M. B. Burtch, W. C. S. Barron, A. W. Maly, Samuel C. Hyatt, A. G. Tuttle, Homer J. Clark, D. L. Noble, A. M. Stratton, A. P. Clayton, P. S. Brewer, S. St. John, Albert Herple, Arthur Culver, D. E. O. Bird, John Huston and W. H. Waters.

The following were elected the initial officers of the lodge: Warren C. S. Barron, W. M.; D. L. Noble, financier; Homer J. Clark, receiver; S. St. John, overseer. The present officers are: W. C. S. Barron, P. M. W.; A. S. Hayes, M. W.; Seth Butler, overseer; Samuel C. Hyatt, financier; John Winn, receiver. Meetings are held every second and fourth Friday's of each month, and a large attendance is noted. This lodge is in a fine flourishing condition, and is growing rapidly in the estimation of the general community and already numbers among its members, many of the very best citizens of the town.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The first temperance society in Richland Center was organized in the fall of 1856, and of its institution the following has been gathered:

At a gathering of the ladies belonging to the sewing circle of that village, Mrs. Israel Sanderson, the wife of the editor of the newspaper, introduced the subject of temperance and it was discussed in all its bearings, and it was determined to form an association for the promulgation of the doctrine of total abstinence. A meeting being soon after held, a large number were present and the organization was perfected and the following officers chosen: Mrs. Israel Sanderson, president; Mrs. James H. Miner, secretary. On the 26th of December the following preamble and resolutions were adopted in lieu of a constitution, which were signed by the parties whose names are appended below, as evidence of their membership:

LADIES TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

"WHEREAS, We, the ladies of Richland Center, knowing well the evils that result from the sale and use of spirituous liquors, and as this demoralizing traffic is becoming so very common in our midst, and as the temperance men of this community have so far found it impossible to sustain a prosecution against the sale of liquors, without license, we consider ourselves and families in personal danger, and as we feel that something must be done, for the present and future welfare of this community; therefore, we do hereby pledge ourselves to the following resolutions, to wit:

"Resolved, That we will not, from this date, trade at any establishment which is known to be directly or indirectly engaged in the traffic of spirituous liquors, as a beverage.

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed, whose duty it shall be to immediately call on the town board of supervisors and the district attorney and request them to prosecute every individual, to them known, who sells intoxicating liquors in violation of law.

"Resolved, That every female of the age of fourteen and upwards, in the village, be requested to join our league and sign these resolutions.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, with our names, be published in the Richland County Observer."

GOOD TEMPLARS.

A lodge of this order was instituted at Richland Center, in February, 1857, by George Jarvis, of Richland City, acting as deputy for the district, assisted by Mr. Hawley of Madison. Dr. O. H. Wood was installed as worthy chief templar, and Mrs. Wood as worthy vice templar. The names of the charter members, so far as we have been able to obtain, are as follows: Mrs. Eliza James, Alonzo G. James, Mrs. Sarah A. Miner, Amos Nudd, Mrs. L. A. Nudd, Caleb Waggoner, G. H. James, Mrs. Eliza James, C. W. Huntington, B. R. Howland, William Wilson, Ira S. Hazeltine, Augusta Hazeltine, George Young, Mrs. Nancy Waggoner and A. H. Bush. This lodge ran until in 1862 or 1863 and was known as Excelsior Lodge, No. 36, I. O. G. T., it then gently expired and the town was without an organization of the order until the organization of the present one, known as Fidelity Lodge, No. 237, I. O. G. T., and which was instituted in accordance with a charter, dated Jan. 23, 1877, with the following charter members: George Jarvis, Susan Smith, Eliza A. James, Josie C. Downs, Mrs. M. H. Shurtleff, Frank E. Smith, Maggie W. Lybrand, Emma Liek, Stephen J. Smith, Kate G. Downs, O. W. Gibbs, G. N. Mickel, Emma Tuttle, Charles F. James, Mary L. Bundy, F. H. Tuttle, Sarah Jarvis, A. G. Lybrand, Fannie Jarvis, Edward Gibbs and W. J. McKay. The first officers chosen were: George Jarvis, W. C. T.; Maggie W. Lybrand, W. V. T.; O. W. Gibbs, P. W. C. T.; F. H. Tuttle, W. F. S.; Kate G. Downs, W. S.; Michael Murphy, W. A. S.; Eliza James, W. T.; W. J. McKay, W. C.; G. W. Mickel, W. M.; Mary L. Bundy, W. D. M.; Emma Liek, W. I. G.; Charles F. James, W. O. G.; Susan E. Smith, W. R. H. S.; Emma Tuttle, W. L. H. S. The lodge holds its meeting each week, in what is known as Templars' Hall, which is occupied, in common, by all the temperance organizations. There is a large membership and good attendance, and no doubt helps materially in the good temperance work done in the town.

There is also a juvenile lodge of temperance known as Star of Hope Temple, No. 71, which was organized March 15, 1878, and meets in the same hall as the other temperance organizations. P. H. Fay was instrumental in its institution, and remains at present the superintendent. Quite a lively interest is taken by the children, in the work, and under the head of "good of the order," much pleasant amusement is brought out.

A new lodge of good templars was organized early in May, 1883, at the Pine River church, which, although not in the town of Richland Center, lies but about two miles from it, and in this township. It was named Pacific Lodge, No. 256. Meetings are held every Saturday evening and a pleasant time had. The following is a list of the officers: Edwin Glasier, W. C. T.; Mrs. William Starkey, W. V. T.; John Glasier, W. S.; Arthur Glasier, W. F. S.; Robert Clements, W. T.; R. Davis, W. C.; Ella Davis, W. M.; Elmer Davis, W. G.; Maud Miller, W. S.; Mrs. Phil Miller, W. A. S.; Mrs. R. Clements, W. D. M.; Ellen Cook, W. R. H. S.; Libbie Wilkins, W. L. H. S.; James Davis, lodge deputy.

Richland Temple of Honor, No. 192, was organized Aug. 3, 1878, with the following charter members: H. St. John, S. Sherman, F. E. Smith, M. L. Sherman, W. H. Waters, R. J. Wilson, C. Waggoner, J. M. Waggoner, Frank Walworth, W. W. Welton, A. B. Weigley, J. H. Weigley, E. A. Weigley, C. Weigley, Sidney Arnold, Samuel Arnold, Seth Butler, George W. Barry, Daniel Barry, F. W. Burnham, A. A. This organization is in quite a flourishing condition, and it is but just to say, that, to the work of the order is due the present state of prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the village. A large membership gathers in the hall of meeting. The present officers are: Oliver G. Munson, W. C. T.; A. J. Kinney, W. V. T.; O. W. Gibbs, W. R.; George M. Clark, W. A. S.; N. H. Dillingham, W. F. R.; Charles Speidel, W. T.; Aaron Sharp, W. U.; O. H. Northrup, W. D. U.; M. Lovering, W. G.; S. Porter, W. S.

MILITIA.

During the latter days of the great civil war between the States, a strong effort was made to organize a company of what was then termed "home guards," probably because they stayed at home, and Aug. 26, 1864, a company was formed and organized, under the high-sounding and euphonious name of "Richland County Union Badgers." About sixty-four were enrolled in the organization. E. H. Liscum was elected captain, and George Jarvis and J. M. McMurtrey first and second lieutenants. From all that we can gather this company did not prosper very well, and Capt. Liscum resigning, Elam Bailey was elected in his stead. After a little time, however, the organization gave up the ghost and there has been no attempt to revive it as yet.

WOMEN'S CLUB.

This association was organized in June, 1882, by the ladies of Richland Center. The object of the society is, as laid down by the constitution, "to suggest and develop plans for social, intellectual, industrial, educational and philanthropic interests, to the end that we may have better homes, better health, better charities, better laws, better service for humanity and God." At the date of the organization the following officers were elected: Mrs. Julia A. Bowen, president; Mrs. G. N. Matteson, Mrs. M. McMurtrey and Mrs. Georgia James, vice presidents; Mrs. Laura James, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Victoria Layton, recording secretary. #### SOCIETY OF THE SIXTH WISCONSIN BATTERY.

Among the associations of the county, that of the 6th Wisconsin Battery must not be forgotten. This society was organized in its present shape Oct. 3, 1876, when the "boys of the battery held a re-union at Spring Green.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The W. H. Bennett Post of the Grand Army of the Republic was organized on the 26th of May, 1882, N. B. Hood, of Henry Dillon Post No. 24, assisted by comrades of the same post officiating. The following named were the first officers and charter members: D. G. James, commander; Irvin Gribble, senior vice commander; B. C. Hallin, junior vice commander; George Jarvis, O. Henry Bennett was born Oct. 25, 1837, in the town and county of Medina, Ohio. He came with his parents in 1846 to the territory of Wisconsin, and settled in Dane county. He removed to Jefferson county in 1852 and to Richland county in 1855. In 1861 he enlisted in company H, 5th Wisconsin, as a private, from which he was promoted to the 25th for gallantry in action at the battle of Williamsburg, Va., and in McClellan's calamitous engagements in front of Richmond in 1862. His frankness, geniality and companionable qualities are well known by all his comrades and the citizens of Richland county. Mr. Bennett was one among many others who gave up his life in a southern prison that his country might be saved. It was in honor of this brave man and the kindly recollection of days gone by, that the G. A. R. Post of Richland Center was named. The name of no comrade will be longer remembered by the boys of the post than that of W. H. Bennett.

HAY SCALES COMPANY.

The following report of a meeting explains itself, and will be an interesting article to all who participated, as the fact of the existence of the Hay Scales company has almost been forgotten:

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

The subjects of the following personal sketches, are, for the larger portion, of those who came to the town and city of Richland at an early day, and have watched with tender care for many years the growth of their favorite town and city.

James J. Soule came to the county in June, 1848, and first stopped at Rockbridge, where he worked in a saw-mill. He also run lumber on the Pine river. About two years after settling in the county, in partnership with W. H. Joslin, he purchased of James Baxter a claim in town of Henrietta, and engaged in making shingles. Nov. 2, 1851, he married Fannie M. Thompson, daughter of Aaron B. and Lydia Thompson. On the 22d of the same month, they went to Henrietta and made a settlement with the nearest neighbor three miles distant. Two weeks later, they were driven away by the Indians, and removed to Rockbridge, where they lived until the following spring. Then in company with another family, they moved back to Henrietta, and resided there till the fall of 1852, then moved down Pine river. In 1855 they settled on Little Willow, and there lived for one year. Then removed to Yellow river, and a year later to Pine river valley, where the family has since resided. The farm is located on section 10, and consists of eighty acres. Mr. and Mrs. Soule are the parents of eight children—Harriet E., David F., Emma A., Louisa E., George W., Mary E., Luella and William F. Mr. Soule was born in La Fayette Co., Wis., Feb. 1, 1828. His parents were John L. and Hannah Soule. He resided in his native county and in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., previous to coming to Richland. Politically he is a democrat. Mrs. Soule was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., and accompanied her father to Richland county in May, 1851.

Major W. H. Joslin was born in Ypsilanti, Mich., on the 5th day of September, 1829. He came with his parents to Wisconsin, but did not come to Richland county until 1848, which was one year after the family had settled on Ash creek. In 1852 he married Margaret M. Gillan. She is a daughter of Charles and Clarinda Gillan, and was born in Illinois, but came with her parents to Wisconsin when two years of age. One year after marriage Mr. Joslin settled in the town of Henrietta, and engaged in farming until 1858, in which year he was elected county sheriff. He then removed to Richland Center and served the people one term, when he again resumed farming. He subsequently spent one year in Colorado, but his family did not leave the county. In August, 1862, enthused with the patriotism for his country, he raised a company of men of which he was chosen captain, and in September following, mustered into service as company B, of the 25th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. One year later Capt. Joslin was promoted to major, which rank he held until June, 1865, when he was mustered out of service and by brevet was given the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Returning from service he again engaged in farming, and in 1868 was elected county treasurer and served as such for two consecutive terms, then again returned to the farm, also followed milling at Bowen's mills. In 1880 he represented his district in the Assembly, and since January, 1882, has been assistant superintendent of public property at Madison. But his family resides at Richland Center. Thus it can be seen that Major Joslin has been prominently connected with the interests of the county for a quarter of a century. He was a brave soldier, an efficient officer, a good citizen and has a host of friends. In politics he has acted with the republican party since its organization. He is a Royal Arch Mason, and a member of the G. A. R. and a Knight Templar. The children are—Mary A., now the wife of John W. Bowen; Frank W., James G., Henry C. and Hattie C., twins, Susie B. and May.

Elisha Bovee, a minister in the United Brethren Church, was born in Boone Co., Ind., March 13, 1840, and was but nine years of age when his parents emigrated to Richland county. Here he grew to manhood, receiving his early education in the pioneer schools. At sixteen years of age he united with the United Brethren Church, and when eighteen years of age, commenced preaching. He remained at home with his parents until twenty years of age, assisting his father on the farm. In the meantime he was diligently pursuing his studies. When twenty-three years of age he was married to Victoria Potter. She was born near Toronto, Canada. When twenty years of age, with Elder Potts as his assistant, he associated on Rutland circuit in Dane, Green and Rock counties. In 1867 he and his wife entered Milton College where they studied three years. He then went to Elroy as missionary to build up a cause which was then in its infancy. His work there was in Monroe, Juneau and Vernon counties. He labored there three years; during that time the Elroy Seminary was established and Millard's Prairie church was also built. From Elroy Mr. and Mrs. Bovee entered Western College, in Iowa, and studied there one year. They returned to Richland county and he was appointed in charge of Richland Circuit for three years. During this time there were about 500 conversions made and about 300 of this number joined the United Brethren Churches of this circuit. He was then elected presiding elder of the east district Wisconsin Conference. He had charge of Bird's Creek circuit one year. Since that time he has been engaged as an evangelist with marked success; laboring in Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. In his work he has been ably assisted by his wife. She is a lady of great natural endowment and refinement, well educated, is a graduate of Western College and of the Northwestern Business College. She is well known as an expert in penmanship and can show some of the finest specimens of ornamental flourishes and pen portraits ever produced in Richland county. While at Elroy she was, for one year, in charge of the commercial department of that school, and has served as a private tutor a great deal of the time. She is at present president of the Woman's Missionary Society for the United Brethren Church for the State of Wisconsin.

William Schurman resides on section 36, and his real estate comprises 400 acres, with as good improvements as can be found in the county. He is engaged in dairying, and keeps about sixty cows. He manufactures creamery butter and Sap Sago. Mr. Schurman is a native of Germany, born in Duisburg on the river Rhine. In 1849 he married Caroline Weegmann, soon after emigrating to the United States and became one of the pioneers of Richland county. He first resided on Ash creek, but his brother had entered a part of section 36, town of Richland, sometime previous. Mr. Schurman also owns the only one-half share of Sextonville mills. It can truly be said that his life has been a success. Mr. and Mrs. Schurman have reared six children, five of whom are now living. Their eldest son, Henry, was killed in the Sextonville mill when about twenty-five years old. The family are members of the Evangelical Association. Two daughters have married clergymen, and one son is preaching the gospel.

William Wulfing arrived in Richland county on the 25th day of May, 1849, and soon purchased the west half of the northwest quarter of section 16, town 9, range 1 east, of the 4th principal meridian. Here he erected a log cabin and commenced pioneer life and continued tilling the soil with considerable success until 1876, when he rented his farm to his son, removed to Richland Center and has since given his attention to the office of justice of the peace. He is a democrat in politics, and while a resident of Orion served as town treasurer nine years and several terms as justice of the peace. Mr. Wulfing was born near the river Rhine in Prussia, was bred to mercantile life, and April 16, 1844, married Constance Sigrist. In 1849 he emigrated to the United States and settled as above stated. Mr. and Mrs. Wulfing have reared twelve children, ten now living—William, Eugene, Frank, Richard, George, Constance, now the wife of Charles Hoole; Mary, now the wife of M. L. Babb; Henrietta, now the wife of Clark Brown; Emily, now the wife of Norman Bennett, and Theodora.

Durfee Bovee, to whom belongs the honor of being the first settler in the territory which now comprises the town of Richland, made his first visit here in 1848, and at that time entered eighty acres on the southeast quarter of section 34. He then returned to Boone Co., Ind., and in June, 1849, removed his family, wife and three children, to Wisconsin and took up their abode on the land which he had previously entered. It was covered with thick brush and timber and they had an extensive experience of pioneer life, before it was brought under cultivation, but Mr. Bovee was equal to the emergency, and persevered, until he now owns 240 acres, and a comfortable residence with good surroundings. Mr. Bovee was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., Feb. 27, 1812, and resided in his native State until 1836, when he emigrated to Indiana, when in 1837 he married Anna Duncan. He then followed farming in Boone county, until he came to this State. Mr. and Mrs. Bovee have reared five children, four of whom are now living—Elisha, Mary, now the wife of D. C. Wood; Samuel and David W. Their religious connections are with the United Brethren Church.

Hon. Ira S. Haseltine was born July 13, 1821, at Andover, Windsor Co., Vt. His ancestors were of English origin. He received a common school and academic education. At the age of sixteen he removed with his parents to Waukesha Co., Wis. After one year upon his father's farm he taught school three years, then studied law in Milwaukee with D. J. A. Upham. He taught school in Natchez, Miss., became a public lecturer upon scientific and reformatory subjects, and spent about ten years in this field of labor. He was married Jan. 1, 1846, to Augusta Thomas, in Waukesha Co., Wis. In 1850 he purchased land in Richland county where he surveyed and platted the village of Richland Center. In July, 1854, Mr. Haseltine was a delegate from Richland county to the first republican State convention held in the United States at Madison, Wis. In 1867 he was elected by the republican party to represent the county in the assembly. In the winter of 1870 he went south and located upon a farm near Springfield, Greene Co., Mo. His home is now at Dorchester, Mo. In 1876 Mr. Haseltine was a candidate for Congress on the Peter Cooper ticket and made the first canvass of the sixth congressional convention as a greenbacker. In 1880 he was made the nominee of the greenback convention at Carthage on the 27th of May, and was elected to the 47th Congress. In 1882 Mr. Haseltine was again a candidate for Congress and was defeated by Robert W. Fyan, democrat.

John Waddell was one of the first settlers in the northern part of Richland county, coming in 1850 to Richmond City, where he bought a lot and erected a small house and spent the first winter. In the spring of 1852 he moved to the site of his present farm on section 5, town of Richland, at that time an unbroken wilderness, built a log shanty, which he covered with bark, split puncheons for the floor, and furnished with home-made furniture. The bedstead was made of poles and a bed-cord manufactured out of bark. The first season he cleared a small tract of land and chopped in garden seeds, thus preparing for the winter. The first three or four years he had no team and his breaking was all done with a hoe, and the most of it by his wife and children, while he was away at work, earning money with which to pay for his land. His industry has been rewarded and he now has a good farm and a comfortable, well furnished frame house, and can spend the remainder of his life in ease and comfort. Mr. Waddell is a native of West Virginia, born in Pocahontas county, Feb. 20, 1811. When he was two years old his parents moved to Ohio and settled in Gallia county, which was at that time a new country. Thus the subject of this sketch became a pioneer in his infancy. He grew to manhood there and Sept. 26, 1833, was married to Sarah Hughes. She was born in Gallia Co., Ohio, Dec. 15, 1816. He had previously purchased land in Perry township, of that county, and there he settled at the time of his marriage, where he remained three years, then traded for a farm in Raccoon township. In 1848 he sold his property in Ohio, came to Wisconsin and claimed government land on Sauk prairie, Sauk county, where he lived one year, then went to Baraboo woods and made a claim and erected a house. One year later he traded this property for a small tract of land on Sauk prairie, built a house, which was burned a few weeks later with most of its contents. He then rented a house in which he lived until the fall of that year, 1850, when, as before stated, he came to Richland county. Mr. and Mrs. Waddell reared eleven children—Myron, Jane, William A., Margaret, Virginia, George A., John H., Thomas, Charles H., Mary and Nathan. John H. was born in Gallia Co., Ohio, in 1846. He enlisted in January, 1862, in the 19th Wisconsin and went south. At the battle of Fair Oaks he was taken prisoner and confined in Libby prison a while, then transferred to Salisbury, N. C., was taken sick while in prison, and died at the Marine hospital, at Annapolis, soon after being exchanged. George was born in May, 1844. He enlisted in the fall of 1861 in the 11th Wisconsin, company B, and participated in seventeen engagements. He contracted disease while in the service from which he died in 1868. Sept. 26, 1883, was the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Waddell. That day they were surprised by a large number of their friends, who assembled to celebrate their golden wedding, and congratulate them on account of such an extended and happy union, and wish them still a happy continued experience so much enjoyed. A celebration of their diamond wedding was a consummation devoutly to be wished. On this festive occasion were present forty children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The aged couple were the recipients of many valuable and useful gifts. A supper was served to which all did ample justice and the day will be long remembered by all present.

Henry Collins, a native of Ohio, was born April 27, 1827. When five years old he removed with his parents to Tippecanoe Co., Ind. He served as a soldier in the Mexican War. He afterwards resided in Clinton Co., Ind., where he became acquainted with Mary Dawson, who, May 6, 1846, became his wife. In December, 1851, he came to Richland county and became a resident, living near Orion two years, then moved to the town of Dayton. In April, 1860, he went to Pike's Peak and remained until December, 1861, when he returned to his family. In the spring of 1862 he responded to the call of his country by enlisting, and was assigned to the 1st Missouri Light Artillery. At the battle of Corinth he was so injured as to be discharged, in October, 1862. He returned home and remained long enough to regain his health, then re-enlisted in company F, of the 43d Wisconsin regiment, and served till the close of the war, after which he lived upon his farm, but was unable to perform hard labor. He died Feb. 7, 1875. He was politically republican, and held the offices of justice of the peace and assessor. Mrs. Collins was born in Clinton Co., Ind. Her parents were Charles and Mary (Miller) Dawson. She married Mr. Collins, as before stated, and was his faithful companion through life. They were the parents of thirteen children, five of whom arrived at adult years. William F., John D., Calvin L. and Mary May are now living. Charles M., the eldest, enlisted with his father, Sept. 4, 1864, being at the time only seventeen years old. He served as drummer, and died at Clarksville, Tenn., Jan. 6, 1865.

Hon. George Krouskop, one of the pioneer settlers of Richland county, was born in Bellefontaine, Logan Co., Ohio, May 12, 1832. His parents were Jacob and Elizabeth (McCloud) Krouskop. He spent the early part of his life in Ohio, his father's family removing to Richland Co., Wis., in 1851. They located near the village of Sextonville, where his father built a grist and saw-mill, the grist-mill being the first one erected in the county. George Krouskop received a good education in the common schools of his native State, and supplemented this by a thorough academic course at the Geneva College in northern Ohio. His first trip to Richland county was in 1850, when only eighteen years of age. He spent the summer of that year prospecting in this region, but returning to his old home in Ohio in the fall, he became so favorably impressed with the apparent natural advantages and then undeveloped resources of Richland county, which was at that early date in its wild and uncultivated state, that he resolved to make it his future home. When the family came here in 1851 he returned with them. For a year or two he was engaged alternately in teaching school and running his father's saw-mill. In 1854 he embarked in the mercantile business, and laid the foundation for a successful business career by establishing a store on a small scale near the Sextonville mills. Shortly afterwards he purchased the mills, and continued these enterprises until 1865, when he removed to Richland Center, where he also engaged in the mercantile business for a number of years. In 1870 he opened a bank. Mr. Krouskop has always taken a leading part in all public enterprises and improvements which would advance or develop the material resources of the town and county, and has aided them liberally both by his influence and ample means. He was one of the originators and projectors, as well as one of the principal stockholders in the Pine River Valley & Stevens Point railroad, an enterprise that was built wholly by home capital. He was president of the company for several years. Politically, Mr. Krouskop is a democrat. He has served two terms as State Senator in the Wisconsin Legislature, representing the district composed of Richland and Crawford counties, and was each time elected by a handsome majority over his opponent, and in a district that usually gave a large republican majority. Mr. Krouskop was married Nov. 25, 1855, to Elizabeth Black. They have two children—William E., unmarried, and Eliza A., who married J. Robert Coumbe, of Excelsior, Richland Co., Wis.

John Klingler, a native of Kentucky, born Nov. 28, 1810, came from Marion Co., Ind., and on the 23d day of June, 1852, settled on the southwest quarter of section 27, Richland, and there engaged in farming until his death, which occurred May 6, 1874. He left a wife and five children—Orlow, Martha, now the wife of George W. Miller; Rachel, Frank and John. Mrs. Klingler and her son Frank still reside at the homestead. Orlow Klingler, oldest son of the above, was born in Marion Co., Ind., Aug. 10, 1833. He came with his parents to Wisconsin, and on the 6th of September, 1855, was married to Rachel J. Miller. Aug. 13, 1862, he enlisted in company B, 25th Wisconsin, and served until the regiment was mustered out of service. Since the war he has been engaged in general farming and now owns 235 acres, with first class improvements. Mr. Klingler votes the republican ticket, but takes little interest in political affairs. The only civic society of which he is a member, is the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. and Mrs. Klingler have one daughter—Sarah I.

John Fay is a native of Ireland, born in the town of Gort, county Galway, June 1, 1818, where his childhood and youth were spent. He came to America March 17, 1849, and first settled at Wyoming, Wyoming Co., N. Y. Then on the 16th day of February, 1851, he was united in marriage with Johanna Quinlin, born in Roscrea, county Tipperary, Ireland, June 21, 1823. On the 18th day of October, 1852, they emigrated to Wisconsin, and after living one year at Mineral Point, came to Richland county. On Feb. 16, 1854, Mr. Fay purchased the farm of John T. Higgins, which contained eighty acres, and is located on section 22, Richland town, where he now resides. His farm now contains 120 acres. He is in comfortable circumstance and free from debt. Mr. Fay has spent his life in tilling the soil. He takes a great interest in the education of his children, and is known as an honorable citizen. There are five children living—Thomas J., Francis, Mary B., Emma L. and Josie M.

Sidney Rose came to Richland Center in the fall of 1854, and purchased one-half of block 50, and one-half of block 51. There was a house upon this property, which was built by a

Mr. Hyde, of whom he purchased it. Mr. Rose was a mason by trade, and did the mason work upon the first court house of Richland county. In 1861 he enlisted and served in the regimental band of the 6th Wisconsin regiment eleven months, when that organization disbanded. He has since followed his trade. He was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., Jan. 20, 1818, where he learned his trade, and in 1842 was married to Caroline S. Hamilton, daughter of Fillery Hamilton. In 1844 they came to Wisconsin and lived in Rock county, from whence he came to this county. He now resides in Henrietta, where he owns a farm of 140 acres.

D. O. Chandler, a prominent and representative man of Richland county, settled in the town of Willow in March, 1853, and was there engaged in farming until 1858. He then established a general mercantile business at Loyd, and carried on the same with marked success. In 1865 Mr. Chandler in order to increase his business removed to Richland Center, erected his present store building, and since 1867 has been engaged in the hardware trade. He also owns a one-half interest in the Park Hotel property, and considerable real estate in town lots and farming land. As a business man he has been energetic and enterprising, and these characteristics, coupled with good judgment, have caused him to make good investments, and thus his business career has proved successful. As a gentleman although blunt, and speaking his mind freely when occasion requires, he is pleasant, affable and agreeable, and has many friends. He is a native of the State of New York, born in Hamburg, Erie county, on the 10th day of April, 1828. He was educated to mercantile business, and in 1852 married Hannah Van Vlack of Cattaraugus county, and the year following emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in Richland county as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler have eight children—Austin J., Eurotus M., Alice J., now Mrs. William Collins; Grace, now Mrs. F. P. Lawrence;

Grant, Lola, May and Gay. Politically Mr. Chandler is a republican, with radical temperance principles. He has often been elected to local offices and always discharged his public duties with honor to himself and satisfaction to the people. He has always been a public spirited man, and a citizen such as benefits a town and county in which he resides. The only society of which he is a member is the Temple of Honor.

Daniel Rice purchased property at Richland Center during the month of August, 1853, and the spring following removed his family from Logan Co., Ohio. For two years he was engaged in the manufacture of brick, then he dealt in live stock, making the first shipment from the county. He remained in this business until 1860, when he engaged in general mercantile trade, and pursued this avocation for twelve years, when he retired from active business life. Mr. Rice was born in France in 1822, but was brought to the United States by his parents when an infant. His early life was spent in Pennsylvania. In 1838 he went to Ohio and followed railroading, learning during his sojourn in that State the trade of machinist. In 1849 he was married to Delia Ladden. They have one daughter—Mollie, now the wife of F. G. Rodolf. Mrs. Rice was the first person to engage in the millinery business in Richland Center, an account of which appears in this volume elsewhere.

William F. Collins, son of Henry Collins, was born in the town of Dayton, Richland Co., July 13, 1854. He received a common school education. October 8, 1877, he married Lottie J. Bryant. She died, leaving one child—W. H. He was again married, Nov. 29, 1882, to Alice J. Chandler. His residence is just outside the village, on section 16, where he owns seventy acres. He is engaged in dairying and selling milk in the village. Mr. Collins is a member of the I. O. O. F.

J. L. McKee is numbered among the pioneers of 1854, having arrived in April of that year, at Richland City. He was then an unmarried man, and worked the first season for $14 per month. The next season he taught school for $25 per month. In 1855 he was married to Mary Simons, daughter of Col. Royal Simons. He then removed to Orion, and in February, 1856, came to Richland Center. In 1857 he engaged in general merchandising with J. W. Lybrand, sold out in 1859, and in 1860 was elected clerk of the circuit court and served two years, then as county treasurer two years. In 1865 he established a general mercantile trade and continued the same until 1878, when he closed out to A. B. Weigley, since which he has lived a retired life. Mr. McKee was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Sept. 3, 1829, and resided in his native State until he came to Wisconsin. His wife died Dec. 13, 1861. Nov. 19, 1863, he married Mrs. Kate Casebeer nee Laden, and they have had four children born to them, but one of whom is now living—Frank W. Mr. McKee has been a member of the republican party since its organization. He is a Mason, and served as treasurer of Richland Lodge, No. 66, fifteen years. He was also treasurer of the company which owned the railroad before it was purchased by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company. He is a man of ability, and a good citizen.

B. C. Hallin made his first visit to the county in the summer of 1852, and purchased 160 acres, located on sections 17 and 18, in what is now the town of Akan. He built a log cabin and returned to Millville, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., and followed his trade, stone cutter, until 1854. He then removed with his wife to this county and thus became the first permanent settler of the town of Akan. They experienced many of the hardships of pioneer life. Their log cabin was without a floor for eighteen months, and Mrs. Hallin did not see a white woman for the same period. Their principal food was game, of which there was an abundance. This state of affairs did not long continue, however, for they soon raised vegetables and grain. Mr. Hallin would go away from home and work at his trade, thus earning money to buy clothing for his wife and babies. In 1864 he enlisted in company A, 36th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, was wounded at the battle of Petersburg, June 18, 1864, and in consequence, had to suffer the amputation of his left arm at the shoulder. While still in the hospital he was nominated by the democratic party for the office of register of deeds, but was defeated with the remainder of the ticket. Returning home he was, however, elected to several town offices at one time, and thus did about all the public business of his town. In 1865 he sold his property and purchased 160 acres of land on section 18, Richland town, where he erected a neat stone residence and has good improvements. He spends most of his time in working at his trade. In 1880 he established a marble business at Richland Center. He is a famous joker, and on being asked how he could cut stone with but one arm, he replied, "I take the chisel in my teeth and strike my head with the mallet." Mr. Hallin was born July 15, 1826, in the county of Kerry, Ireland, on the same street on which the father of J. L. Sullivan was born. His father was a marble cutter. He was educated at Killarney, and at the age of seventeen emigrated to the United States and first followed his trade in the city of New York, for about five years. He subsequently went to Carrollton, Ind., where he assisted in building some large factories, and was married to Gwenny Davis, who was born in Wales, but came with her parents to America when only four years old. She is a woman of great courage and well adapted to the pioneer life which she has passed through. One example of her heroism is sufficient to illustrate her disposition. One day, while sitting in the door of the cabin, with her babe playing at her feet, she noticed a large bear drinking at the spring near the house. She at once bade her large New Foundland dog to "seek him," which he proceeded to do without delay, but the bear, being very powerful, was about to overcome the dog, when Mrs. Hallin seized an ax and buried its edge deep in the flesh of the ferocious creature, killing it instantly. Just at that moment, W. H. Joslin, the county sheriff, drove up, and skinned the bear and Mrs. Hallin soon had a nice piece of the meat over the fire to cook for their dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Hallin have reared a family of twelve children, all of whom are living—Thomas J., Kate, Owen E., Oscar, Harry, Alice, John, Lucy, Bertha, Irene, Arthur and Emmett. Mr. Hallin is at present chairman of the town board and a member of the G. A. R.

J. C. Stockton settled in Richland county in 1854 and engaged in farming on Willow creek. In 1857 he removed to section 26, Richland town, and continued farming until 1881, when he sold out, moved to Richland Center and is now living a retired life. Mr. Stockton is a native of Ross Co., Ohio, born Feb. 24, 1815. His father died when he was six years old, and his mother, with her children, removed to Tippecanoe Co., Ind. The subject of this sketch was married in 1840 to Martha Sippy, and in 1854 came to Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Stockton are the parents of six children, three of whom are living—A. W., Lydia A. and J. W.

F. P. Bowen came to this county with his brother, W. J. Bowen, in September, 1854. They purchased the saw mill and water power, which is now known as "Bowen's mill." In the fall of 1855 they rebuilt the mill, put in a circular saw, the first in Richland county, and operated the same until 1858, when F. P. Bowen sold his interest to his brother, and in 1859 succeeded Dr. H. C. Priest in the drug business. In 1861 he traded the drug business to D. L. Downs for his interest in the Richland Center Tannery. This property he sold about two years afterwards, and in 1865 purchased a half interest in the drug business of D. L. Downs, and owned the same until March, 1883. In 1867 Mr. Bowen re-purchased a half interest in the mill property and, with his brother, built the flouring and grist mill, known as "Bowen's mill," with which he was connected for five or six years. In 1871 he commenced dealing in live stock, in which business he is now extensively engaged. F. P. Bowen was born in Vermillion Co., Ill., April 5, 1835. In 1836 the family removed to Green Co., Wis. The parents, William and Electa (Phelps) Bowen, came to Richland county in 1855. The father died in 1858, and the mother in 1871. Mr. Bowen, in 1860, was married to Margaret Turner. She died in 1866, leaving two children—Hellen and Mattie. In 1868 he was married to Mrs. J. A. Wait, nee Busby, and by this union there are six children, four of whom are living—Charles F., Alice, Dwight and F. P. Mr. Bowen took an active interest in building the railroad, as he does in all public enterprises. He is a republican in his politics, and a member of the A. F. & A. M.

W. J. Bowen, one of the prominent and representative men of Richland county, was born in Vermillion Co., Ill., July 8, 1825. He came with his parents to Wisconsin in 1836. In December, 1854, he was married to Mary Thorp, then of Green county, but a native of Pennsylvania. He then came to Richland county and purchased the property since known as Bowen's mills, and of which he is still the owner. A history of this mill and his connection with it appears elsewhere. Mr. Bowen has been an enterprising, successful business man, and now owns over 500 acres of land in one body, has a comfortable home and good improvements. He also has other property, among which are five dwelling houses occupied by tenants. Mr. Bowen is in politics a republican, and has held several local offices of trust, is a member of the A. F. & A. M. The children now living are—John W. and Frank. Edward H. died at the age of five months, in 1872. Mr. Bowen lived with his parents in Green county until 1850. In April of that year he started for California overland, and there remained until September, 1852, engaged in mining. Thence he went to Australia, where he landed in December, and remained about thirteen months, thence to Peru, South America, landing in the month of April, where he remained until the following August, exploring for gold, but did not find it. He then came to New York by way of Panama, and thence in fall of 1854 to the farm where he now lives.

Jeduthan Jones is one of the early pioneers of Richland county. He settled at Richland Center in October, 1854, coming from the Western Reserve, Ohio, and was accompanied by his wife. He at once purchased 200 acres of land and commenced making improvements. He also worked at his trade, that of shoemaker. In 1857 he erected a small tannery, which he sold a few years later, and it was subsequently destroyed by fire. He continued work at his trade and resided in the village until 1865, when he removed to his farm, which is located on section 28, and has since given his undivided attention to farming. He now owns 120 acres, which are well improved. Jeduthan Jones is a native of Ohio, born Sept. 10, 1818. His parents resided on a farm. He was united in marriage in 1844 with Laura Graham, who was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y. They have reared two children—Hattie and Fred. Hattie died at the age of twenty. Fred resides with his parents.

Caleb Waggoner first became identified with the interests of Richland county in 1854. In the spring of that year he came from Ohio to Richland Center, and located on the corner now owned and occupied by H. T. Bailey. He brought with him a small stock of goods, which he soon closed out, and then purchased the drug business of Dr. H. C. Priest, which he sold several years subsequently to D. L. Downs. He was then engaged in general merchandise with his sons as partners many years, and then dealt to a considerable extent in real estate. He was the fifth son of William and Sarah Waggoner, who were pioneers in eastern Ohio, and was born near the village of Richmond, in Jefferson county, Sept. 18, 1813. He had seven brothers and four sisters, nine of whom are yet living, four of them older than he was. He died Oct. 16, 1883, at the residence of his brother, Dr. Joseph Waggoner, in Ravenna, Ohio. He was among the best class of Richland county citizens, and the following, clipped from the Republican and Observer, is a brief account of his last days and death:

“The ten children had participated in a family reunion at the old home farm on the 19th of September, and the deceased was extending his visit among his numerous relatives and friends at the time of his death—reveling in the atmosphere of pure affection and pure friendships, from which he well knew he would soon be severed. He had not been in vigorous health for many years, and his friends observed with alarm his rapid decline the past two or three years. Only a short time before his departure for Ohio he suffered a severe and threatening illness, resulting from over anxiety and care for his unfortunate son, Joseph; but under the inspiration of once more greeting his brothers and sisters and other relatives at the old fireside and under the parental roof, he seemed to acquire a new lease of life, and none of the participants in that memorable occasion were more active or buoyant than he. Ninety-two of his kindred were there present, among whom were his son William J., and grand child Rena, of Viola, in this county, and his son James H., with his wife and two children, of Eau Claire. The latter had returned to their home, but the former were yet with their father, and William was at his bedside when he passed away. He complained first of distress about the heart and of being cold, but was soon relieved of uneasiness, slept well during the night, and was about as usual the following morning, but toward evening the messenger of death returned, and a little after midnight he breathed his last, among loving friends who did everything that could be done to prolong his earthly life. The immediate cause of his death was paralysis of the heart; but the ravages of time had prepared the frail body for the final summons, and his life went out calmly and peacefully as the sun recedes from sight.

His mind was clear to the last moment, and his last words were characteristic of the earnest, honest and thoughtful man he was: 'I have no regrets or censures. The end must soon come, and I am ready. Let all live so that we may meet above.'

"In the morning following his death his son at Eau Claire was telegraphed to meet friends who would accompany the remains to Chicago. This he did, and conveyed them home. A large number of the old friends and neighbors of the deceased had assembled at the depot, with carriages and hearse, to receive the body and convey it to the home on the hill side, in which he had spent the three last decades of his life. His funeral obsequies were in harmony with the tenor of his life—void of ostentation or display, and remarked for their singular appropriateness. The services were conducted at his late residence by the Rev. H. G. Dennison, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this village, of which Mr. Waggoner was a ruling elder, and with which he was closely identified from the hour of its organization to the time of his death. By request of his friends the services were brief, but deeply impressive, and his remains were as quietly followed to the grave by many who had loved and esteemed him in life, and who would cherish his memory in death. From the moment of the announcement of his death to the hour of the performance of the last sad rites, his bereaved family were touchingly assured of the profound and almost sacred regard in which the husband and father had been held. Sympathy for the widowed was never more generously, yet delicately expressed, nor was it ever more sensibly appreciated. The survivors of the family of the deceased are the widow, to whom he was married on the 9th of February, 1839, and four sons—William J., James H., Edwin B., and Joseph M. all of whom are well known here, but are now residents of other parts of the State.

"The life of the deceased, as a citizen of Richland Center, was like an open book, and he was personally known to nearly every citizen of the county. He came here when there were but a half dozen houses in the village, and when the population of the county was correspondingly small. Being a reticent, unassuming man, he was not always accorded the credit due him for promoting enterprises in which the public was interested, for he was ever generous and zealous in behalf of all of those interests which mark communities for moral worth and material prosperity. He was positive in his convictions, radical in his support or defense of them, and uncompromising with what he believed to be wrong. In all his relations with his fellow men he sustained the Christian character he professed, and left an example which will assert its influence for good upon the conduct of those who witnessed it, even to succeeding generations. The simplicity of his character was its grandeur. No epitaph could do mortal man greater honor than that. Truly a good man has gone from our midst, whose loss is reverently deplored, and who will not be forgotten so long as the sons and daughters of his friends and neighbors inhabit the earth. His rest in his eternal home should be all that his faith and hope had pictured—the joys and peace of one whose greatest aim was to do right and win the crown. The loved ones he left behind do not doubt that a blessed rest awaited him."

Thomas J. Whitcraft was born in Stark Co., Ohio, March 26, 1828. He received a common school education, and resided with his parents on the farm until seventeen years of age. He then formed a partnership with Frank Paul, purchased 600 head of sheep, took them to Kane Co., Ill., where they sold, making a good profit out of the transaction. Mr. Whitcraft then returned to Ohio and dealt in live stock for a period of seven years, and accumulated several thousand dollars; but he also entered into a contract to furnish a large number of hogs, and in fulfilling his contract lost the fortune he had saved. He therefore came to Wisconsin and in 1854 purchased eighty acres of land in this county, located on section 27, town of Richland. He purchased the land on time, agreeing to pay $240 with twelve per cent. interest, and thus commenced life anew. The land was unimproved, but he at once erected a log cabin and soon had his farm well under cultivation. Besides farming, he also dealt in horses, buying in this county and selling them in Minnesota. He now owns 260 acres and is in moderate circumstances. May 5, 1853, Mr. Whitcraft married Emma S. Miller. She died Sept. 24, 1881, leaving four children—Evangeline Edward, Jasper B. and Durell. Mr. Whitcraft is a republican, has held the office of town assessor, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Ammi Shireman was born in Virginia, in September, 1825. When a young man he went to Indiana and engaged in farming. In December, 1847, he married Jane Jones, daughter of John B. Jones, Sr. In 1854 he came to Wisconsin and was engaged in farming until 1861, when he enlisted in company H, 5th Wisconsin, and served thirteen months, when he was discharged on account of physical disability, since which he has been a resident of Richland Center, and is at present engaged in the restaurant business. Mr. and Mrs. Shireman have five children—John M., James M., Thomas A., Emma and Ella. J. M. Shireman, son of the above, was born in Indiana April 22, 1849, and came with his parents to Wisconsin. He learned the harness trade, and in 1873 established himself in business. In September, 1874, he was married to Harriet Durnford, daughter of Alfred Durnford, and they now have five children—Minnie L., William H., Charles, Rollin and Perey.

I. J. Wright settled in Richwood, town of Richwood, in 1855. He purchased about 300 acres of land and engaged in farming. When the Civil War broke out he enlisted in the service and served as second lieutenant until mustered out. In about 1873 he sold his farm and removed to Muscoda. He afterwards spent three years in the State of Tennessee, when he again settled at Muscoda. Mr. Wright was ordained as a preacher of the Gospel in the United Brethren Church, and for some time served as a circuit preacher, but later in life he only preached on special occasions. He was an influential citizen and served as chairman of the town board for several years. He had considerable knowledge of law and often served his neighbors as a valuable counselor. Mr. Wright was married three times. First, to Miss Toney; she died, leaving three children. He next married Mrs. Catharine David nee Miller; she died, leaving two children—Martha and J. C. His third wife was Mrs. Martha Hamil nee Miller, she being a sister of his former wife.

T. M. Hart was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, April 12 1851. He is a son of John and Eleanor (Marshall) Hart. In 1854 the family came to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Marshall, Richland Co., Wis., and engaged in farming. Here the father died in 1876. The mother still lives on the homestead. Of the seven children, five are living—Maria, now Mrs. James Truesdale, M. Caroline, Georgiana, now Mrs. Frank Doudna, T. M. and M. F. T. M. was educated in the common schools, also taught school. In April, 1874, he commenced keeping books for James Bros. and continued with them until the firm dissolved partnership, since which he has acted in a like capacity for N. L. James. Mr. Hart was married in 1875 to Abbie Draper, daughter of James Draper. She died in June, 1882, leaving one child—Mirah.

In 1853, as stated elsewhere in this book, Mrs. McGay became the wife of S. W. Pickard, and her son, the subject of this sketch, assumed the name he now bears. Mr. and Mrs. Pickard had one son, born Dec. 17, 1855, who in the third year of his age was accidentally killed by the fall of a tree, cut by his father. The subject of this sketch came to Richland county in August, 1855, and settled on section 29, Richland town, where he had entered land a few years previously. He was engaged in farming until his death, which occurred Oct. 18, 1874, while he was attending services at the Presbyterian church at Richland Center. It was occasioned by apoplexy. A large portion of the insurance business in and about Richland Center is transacted by Capt. W. C. S. Barron, who took his first agency here in 1866, and now represents a number of companies, giving his entire attention to the business. He was born in Troy, N. Y., on the 3d day of August, 1830, his parents being Warren and Ruth (Purinton) Barron. The family removed to Providence, R. I., where the father died in 1834. The mother subsequently married Thaddeus Cook; she died in Massachusetts about 1869. The early life of Warren Clark Sherman Barron was spent on a farm, but he also learned both the trade of shoemaker and tailor. In 1850 at Billingham, Mass., he was married to Amanda Thayer, and was engaged in livery business until 1855, when he left the city and started for the western frontier, and soon arrived in Waukesha Co., Wis. In 1856 he came alone to Richland county, and in November of that year purchased the south half of the north-west quarter of section 35, in the town of Westford. Here during the summer of 1857 he had erected a log cabin, 18x20 feet, with a shake roof, removed his wife and child from Waukesha county, and on the 2d day of December commenced pioneer life in earnest in their new home. This was a disagreeable time of year to commence "roughing it." The house was comparatively not by any means a palace, and to one not accustomed to such surroundings, considerable pluck was necessary, an ingredient not lacking in the character of the subject of this sketch, and by dint of much stamping of feet and rubbing of hands he kept from freezing and came through all right. On the 12th day of August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in company B, 25th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. Soon afterward he was appointed orderly, and on the 25th day of August, 1863, was commissioned second lieutenant, was promoted to the position of first lieutenant, and on the 20th day of December, 1864, became captain of the company, with which rank he was mustered out of the service on the 15th day of June, 1865. Capt. Barron participated in all the engagements of his regiment, was a brave soldier and always had the respect and confidence of his command. After these series of events he returned to Richland county, and since 1868 has resided at Richland Center. Politically he is a staunch republican, having voted with that party ever since its organization. In 1858 he was elected town superintendent of schools, which position he held until the office was abolished. In 1868 he represented his district in the Assembly, and from that date until January, 1883, was connected with the office of sheriff, having twice been elected, once appointed to fill a vacancy, and at different intervals acting as deputy; he has also been president of the village board. The subject of this sketch is a large, well built man of commanding appearance, courteous and affable to all, has a large acquaintance and many warm friends. He is a Royal Arch Mason and was master of Richland Lodge, No. 66, four years. He is chief patriarch of the I. O. O. F. in the State of Wisconsin; past-master in the A. O. U. W. and a member of the G. A. R. Mr. and Mrs. Barron have one son—Frank O.

H. T. Bailey, a prominent business man of Richland Center, had a good situation in the city of New York, which he left in 1857, and agreeable to the advice of Horace Greeley started west to seek his fortune and grow up with the country, and in a short time, made a pause at Richland Center; here he found that money did not grow on the bushes, and desirable situations were not found every day. He was not of that sort, however, to sit down and complain, but determined to do something, even if not so congenial to his tastes or advantageous to his pocket-book, he was bound to do something, even if it would pay nothing more than his board. Such persons are not long without employment of some kind, and his first position was that of "hostler" for Albert Neff. Having graduated here with honor to himself, he engaged in "sawing wood." In 1858 he concluded to return to his eastern home, and consequently started in that direction, but Milwaukee was the extent of his journey thither, for here he turned about and came again to Richland Center, and entered the employ of A. B. Weigley as clerk. Subsequently he held similar positions for different persons until 1869, when he formed a partnership with his brother, N. W. Bailey, purchased a small stock of goods of J. L. Brown and engaged in business. He became sole proprietor in 1878, and has since increased his trade to such an extent that he now carries one of the largest stock of goods in this part of the State. His present store building, erected in 1883, at a cost of $15,000, is one of the best in the county. The subject of this sketch, Henry Thompson Bailey, was born in Connecticut, Jan. 27, 1838, his parents being Alvin and Lury (Neff) Bailey. They were also natives of the same State. His early life was spent on the farm, but when sixteen years old, he went to the city of New York, and commenced mercantile life as clerk in a grocery and provision store, from whence he came westward as before stated. Mr. Bailey is very much of a gentleman, affable, courteous and pleasing to all, and one of the best business men in the State, as his record abundantly testifies. Politically he is a democrat. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Richland Lodge No. 66, the chapter and commandary at Boscobel, and consistory at Milwaukee; he is also a member of the I. O. O. F. July 31, 1861, Mr. Bailey was married to Medora Huntington. She died Sept. 15, 1882, leaving two children—Henry T. and Milo H. Milo H. died Feb. 18, 1883.

In 1850 he went to California overland, with a party consisting of thirty-seven people and six teams. When about half way across the plains, the party divided in six squads. He remained with the party three days, when he, with two others, took a mule from the team, loaded their baggage on him, and thus finished their journey; having been on the road five months, and making the greater part of the way on foot. He engaged in mining until the following December, when he started on his return, this time by water and across the isthmus. After returning home he ran his father's farm for one year, then took a contract of quarrying stone for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. He was thus engaged about one year, when he took a contract to construct a portion of the road, which took about one and one-half years. He then went to Barnesville, in Belmont county, where he purchased a flouring and saw mill, which he operated until 1856, when he removed to Richland county and bought land of Nathaniel Wheeler, on section 28, town of Buena Vista. He occupied this farm twelve years, when he purchased land on section 29, same town, and made that his home until 1883, when he removed to Richland Center. He still owns and manages his large farm of 600 acres, and which is well stocked and equipped with a good set of buildings, including, besides a large frame house, a barn 30x80 feet, with a stone basement. Mr. Martin has for several years been extensively engaged in dealing in live stock as well as farming. He was married in 1854 to Hulda A. Henderson, who was born in Belmont Co., Ohio. They have had four children—James W., Nellie, Mack and Hattie, the latter now dead.

H. W. Eastland is a son of H. A. and Isabelle A. Eastland. He was born at Sextonville, this county, Oct. 5, 1856. He was educated at Richland Center. He spent one year in Dakota. In May, 1882, in partnership with F. S. Pennell, he established a grocery, provision and crockery business, in which he is engaged at the present time. In May, 1881, Katie Speidell became his wife.

He then built a planing mill and machine shop, which he has since operated. Mr. Hice was born in Holmes Co., Ohio, Oct. 5, 1827. He learned his trade and followed the same in his native State until 1854. He then went to Milwaukee, from whence he came to Richland Center. He was married in 1850 to Margaret Schoonover, who died in October, 1861, leaving three children—Mary (deceased), Maggie, now the wife of Charles Green, and Joseph W. In 1865 he was again married to Mrs. Sarah Williams, and they have one son—Junius. Mr. Hice in politics is a republican.

J. W. Lybrand is a native of Philadelphia, Penn., born Feb. 4, 1813. He removed with his parents to Mt. Vernon, Ohio, in 1823, spent his early life on a farm and in 1833 was married to Levina E. Simons, a daughter of Col. Royal D. Simons, who was in active service during the War of 1812. They had two sons—George D. and Franklin G., both now deceased. After his marriage, Mr. Lybrand engaged in general merchandising. In 1842 he changed to hotel business, continuing the same until 1848. He also served as county treasurer, four years. In May, 1857, he came to Richland Center, for the purpose of establishing his son in business, when he associated J. L. McKee as partner and established a general mercantile business. Mr. Lybrand did not intend to become a resident of the place, and for three years claimed Ohio as his home, but he soon became attached to the country, and in 1859 purchased his partner's interest, took in his son as partner, and the firm became J. W. & G. D. Lybrand. This firm carried on a large jobbing trade, thereby supplying most of the stores in the northern part of the county. Mr. Lybrand also dealt largely in real estate. His son, George, accompanied him to Richland Center, in 1857. He was married to Maggie W. Lybrand of Philadelphia. They had born to them, two children, a son and daughter—Rollin C. and Cornelia D. Lybrand, both of whom are married and living in Richland Center. Rollin C., is engaged in the mercantile business and with John Echelberger (the present husband of Mrs. M. W. Lybrand), compose the firm of Echelberger & Lybrand. When the Civil War broke out G. D. Lybrand enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin, and J. W. Lybrand continued the business alone until 1866, when he sold out to George A. and A. H. Kronsokop, went to Chicago and engaged in commission business, and for a number of years his trade amounted to $1,000,000 annually. After the Chicago fire in 1871, his family returned to Richland Center, and in 1873 Mr. Lybrand sold out and also returned. In 1878 he again engaged in general merchandise, and continued in the business until January, 1883, when he retired from active business life. When the railroad was built here Mr. Lybrand took stock to the amount of $1,000, and afterwards became the principal stockholder. He was then chosen president and general manager, which position he held until the road was sold to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Company. Mr. Lybrand was formerly a democrat, but when the Civil War broke out he joined the republican ranks, and has since voted with that party. He has, however, taken but little interest in politics since coming to Wisconsin. He is an active temperance worker, and a member of the Temple of Honor. He has been successful as a business man, and is a gentleman of many good qualities. He is a member of the Chicago Board of Trade.

Joseph Knight was a native of England, born Sept. 29, 1828. April 11, 1851, he was married to Rose Anna Horan. They soon emigrated to the United States, and first settled in Altoona, Penn. He was there engaged in the construction of railroads. His faithful wife boarded men who worked with him. He continued this occupation at Altoona one year, then at Marietta, Ohio, three years, and at Roseville a short time. He came to Wisconsin in 1855, spent one summer at Elkhorn, the following winter at Madison, two years at Monroe, then went to Rosemount, Minn., from whence he returned to Wisconsin and settled on section 10, Richland, where he had previously purchased eighty acres of land. Here he spent the remainder of his life. He died Dec. 23, 1874. Mr. Knight was a firm believer in the Christian religion, and read his Bible daily. He took an active interest during the Civil War, and did all that was in his power to do by furnishing money to aid the cause, but did not enlist on account of his family of small children. He never sought worldly honor, and often refused to become a candidate for public offices. Mrs. Knight still resides at the homestead, and now owns 120 acres with good improvements. She reared eight children—Frances (deceased), Mary Ann, Sarah Ann, Johanna, Susan, Rose Ann, George E. (deceased) and Dora.

Rev. John Walworth was born at Big Sodus Bay, Wayne Co., N. Y., on the 28th day of July, 1804. His ancestors emigrated from London, England, about the year 1765, some of whom located in Virginia and others in Herkimer Co., N. Y. From these latter originated all of the name in the State of New York. His father was a pioneer in the early settlement of western New York, and took a very active part in the military operations of the time with the Indians and commanded a regiment of volunteers at the battle of Fort Erie, in the War of 1812. At the age of seventeen John was sent to Norwich, in Chenango county, for the purpose of obtaining an education, where he remained about six years, and then returned to western New York, where he was for several years engaged in school teaching and other literary pursuits. During this time he was married to Sylvia Lambson, of Hampden Co., Mass. Soon after this, in company with a number of others, he emigrated to the then territory of Michigan, arriving there in time to take part in that ludicrous appeal to arms by the young Gov. Mason in calling out the militia of the territory to prevent the governor of Ohio from taking possession of a certain strip or piece of land lying along the Maumee river, which was subsequently named Lucas county, in honor of the governor of Ohio. Mr. Walworth chose the ministry as his profession. But in looking over the creeds and confessions of faith of the several denominations with a view of Church membership, he found it very difficult to reconcile them with each other, and still more difficult to reconcile them to the teachings of the Scriptures. His next effort was to find which of the creeds was the nearest or most like the Bible in its teachings. This earnest research for truth continued for several months and was quite perplexing for a while, but the question occurred, Upon what authority do these many confessions of faith stand? The answer was plain—they are but the opinions of uninspired men, a mixture of truth and error, and claim the credence of the world only by virtue of the votes of synods or the decrees of councils. These votes can not change error into truth, nor truth into error. With the confessions and creeds of ten or more of the largest and leading denominations in this country, and in Europe, before him, the thought occurred, why not leave all these formulas of human opinion and take the Bible alone for your guide? There was something satisfying in the thought, which soon culminated in a resolution to take the Bible as the inspired word of God, as man's best and only safe rule of faith and practice, which teaches us that in every Nation, and every age, he that fears God and works righteousness is accepted by him. On this broad religious platform he commenced his ministerial labors and has continued them as health would permit for near fifty years. Mr. Walworth has never labored in the interest of any sectarian organization, but rather to lead and help men to lead an upright and pious life, and all true Christians to unite in charity and every good work. He has mostly lived and labored upon the frontiers, and endured the hardships of a pioneer life. As to the success or efficiency of his labors, the communities that have seen, and the thousands that have participated in them can best judge. In 1840 Mr. Walworth came to Illinois and traveled four years as a missionary, but the unavoidable exposure to cold and storm had so impaired his health that at the end of that service he was compelled to relinquish this arduous labor, and in 1846 he removed to Monroe, Green Co., Wis., when he subsequently became proprietor and editor of the Monroe Sentinel, a weekly county paper, of the democratic persuasion. By constant labor the Sentinel soon gained a large circulation, for that day of newspapers, in Green and the adjoining counties. At this time the encroachments of the slave power upon the courts of justice upon free territory, and the capture of both political parties in the enactment of the fugitive slave law, and the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, had thrust upon the people very grave questions in regard to the fate of freedom in this country, or under our government in the near future. The Sentinel was the first democratic paper in the State that came out emphatically against the aggressions of the slave power, and the legislation of both democrats and whigs in the interest of slavery. After consultation with many persons of all political parties it was agreed to publish a call for a people's convention, without respect to previous affiliation, to be held at the capitol in Madison, July 13, 1854. This call was published in the Sentinel and a good number of other papers, and was much more largely attended by leading men from nearly all parts of the State than had been anticipated. Mr. Walworth was chosen president of the convention, and though there was perfect freedom of speech and expression of individual opinion, it was orderly and for the most harmonious. The convention proceeded to the full organization of the republican party by the adoption of a platform of freedom, and appointment of a State central committee and other officers. About two years after this Mr. Walworth had so far regained his health that he accepted a call to a pastorate in the cities of Lewisburg and Northumberland, Penn., but a few months of pastoral labor brought on the former complaint, the bronchitis, which prevented his continued labor, and though very pleasantly situated, he found it necessary to relinquish his charge. In 1858 Mr. Walworth located at Richland Center, having purchased the office of the Richland County Observer, which brought him again into politics, in which he advocated the principles of the republican party with fidelity. He took a deep interest in the cause of temperance, frequently lecturing on the subject, and in 1860 he was elected G. W. Chaplain of the order of Good Templers of the State. In 1862 he was elected to the Legislature, also again elected in 1863. As the repeated calls came from the President for volunteers, many of our citizens left their homes and families to defend the Union, and it was not strange that one who had so long, and so successfully advocated the principles of human freedom should, though somewhat advanced in age, be willing to go to the field of contest, to help his fellow patriots in the defense of freedom, and our national existence, and at the organization of the 43d regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, in the fall of 1864, Mr. Walworth was elected chaplain of the regiment, and soon left the State for active service in the State of Tennessee. This regiment was first ordered on to Johnsonville on the Tennessee river, then to Clarksville on the Cumberland river, then after the battle of Nashville to Elk river and Doehard near the city of Winchester, at the foot of the Cumberland mountains, on the Chattanooga railroad. At this place they received the intelligence of the surrender of Gen. Lee, which caused great joy, but it was soon changed to sorrow by the news of the assassination of President Lincoln. The mingled emotions of the deep sorrow, and determination to avenge his death, though visible upon the countenances of both officers and soldiers, could not be expressed in words. Orders were received that at every regular post a funeral service should be held on the day of the President's burial. Arrangements were accordingly made, and at the appointed hour the regiment, with many other soldiers and citizens, marched to a convenient place prepared for the purpose, led by the band rendering a most pathetic funeral dirge, when the chaplain, Mr. Walworth, made a very appropriate address founded on 1st Samuel 20, 3. A most reverent solemnity prevailed in the large assemblage. This discourse was, by request of the citizens, repeated on the following Sabbath, to a large congregation of citizens and soldiers at the Presbyterian church in the city of Winchester. There were perhaps 1,000 colored people, freed slaves, within the lines for protection. These people requested of the commanding officer to have this discourse repeated to them, to which he kindly assented, and arrangements were made. The band gave good music, but they requested to sing one of their own peculiar style, to the great gratification of the soldiers. As the discourse drew near the conclusion, these poor homeless creatures gave unrestrained utterance to their grief, which, though somewhat ludicrous in form, still showed evidence of being most sincere and heart-felt. Frequent exclamations of sorrow, such as "Massa Lincoln is dead, yes Massa Lincoln is dead, he is our friend, de Lor sent him to free us," swinging their hands, and weeping like children. Since the close of the war Mr. Walworth has resided at Richland Center, except a few months devoted to a southern tour to Texas and the Gulf of Mexico. He has regularly supplied the pulpit of a congregation on the Sabbath, besides other frequent calls for his professional services. And now far advanced in age, and suffering from the effects of exposures and injuries received while in the army, is quietly endeavoring to fill up the remnant of a laborious and useful life, in hope of an honorable discharge, and the unfailing reward of fidelity to duty to God and his fellow man.

Capt. Henry Toms is a native of England, born Aug. 6, 1829. He resided in his native country till 1853, then emigrated to the United States and first stopped at Lyons, N. Y., where he worked at the cabinet trade. He subsequently removed to St. John's, Mich., from whence, in 1859, he came to Wisconsin and located at Richland Center. He was engaged in the manufacture of fanning mills until 1861, then enlisted in company D, of the 11th Wisconsin. He was at first commissioned corporal, but was soon promoted to the rank of captain, and served as such until the regiment was mustered out of service. Returning to Richland Center, Capt. Toms established the furniture business, which he has since conducted. He is the oldest cabinet maker and furniture dealer in the village. He is a member of the A. F. & A. Parfrey, and they have seven children—Clara, Ada, Henry, Edwin, Josie, Emma and Arthur.

H. W. Glasier, principal of the Sextonville High School, has been a resident of Richland county since 1859. He was born at Factory Point, Bennington Co., Vt., May 25, 1828. When but five years of age his parents removed to the town of Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y., and there resided for three years. They then removed to Ohio, making the trip overland. After three weeks' travel they arrived at Twinsburg, Summit county, where they located for one year, then removed to Franklin Mills, now called Kent, in Portage Co., Ohio. When fifteen years of age he accompanied his father and another man on a fruit tree grafting expedition to the south. They embarked on an Ohio river steamboat, and at Cincinnati took on board their scions, and then shipped for Mill's Point, Tenn., where they disembarked, and with a team that had been taken along, commenced the business part of their journey. They traveled through Nashville and Lexington; thence to Covington and Maysville (all in Kentucky), and from the latter point followed the Ohio river up to Wheeling, W. Va., where they crossed the river and drove toward Cleveland, ending their journey in June, after a profitable and pleasant trip. The following season the three duplicated the journey. In the fall after he was seventeen years of age, Mr. Glasier resolved to teach school, and started on foot in search of a situation. He walked twenty-three miles and made an engagement to teach in the town of Solon, Cuyahoga county, at $12 per month and "board around." He continued teaching until 1859, with the exception of one year in the marble business. In 1853 he was engaged as principal of the Bedford (Cuyahoga county) school. In the spring of 1859, after coming to Richland county at the solicitation of the citizens of Richland Center, he rented a room in that village, furnished it with the necessary apparatus, and opened a select school. This movement proved a complete success, and the school was continued until the fall of 1860. At that time he was visited by the school board from Sextonville, and engaged by them to teach in that village, and immediately transferred his school to that point. Since his removal he has taught twelve and a half years' school in Sextonville, and has also been professionally engaged at Lone Rock, Boscobel, Muscoda and Highland. Prof. Glasier believes that a man is never too old to learn, and for some years he has been a constant student. In April, 1851, he was married to Jane Elizabeth Bosworth, a native of New York. These parents have been blessed with nine children—Willis H., Fannie E., Cora A., Charles J., Edwin S., Johnson J., Arthur B., Gilson G. and Edith L.

W. W. Baker was born in Ohio in 1840, and resided in his native State until twenty years of age, then came to Wisconsin and settled at Richland Center. Here he at first clerked and subsequently was engaged in business, being a member of the firm of Pease & Baker. In 1863 he married Vira L. Pease. In 1868 he left Richland Center and engaged in the lightning-rod business at Columbus and Cincinnati, Ohio, New York, and still later at Chicago, where his death took place March 1, 1875. Mrs. Baker returned to Richland Center, and in the fall of 1879, in partnership with Mrs. Fidelia Pease, established a general mercantile business of which Mrs. Baker is now the sole proprietor, and is carrying on the same with marked success. Mrs. Baker is the mother of four children, two now living—Rena V. and W. W.

E. Pease settled at Richland Center on the 11th day of April, 1860. He had just arrived from the State of Vermont where he had been engaged in dairy farming, and, as he had about $16,000 in cash, he loaned money, and for several years did quite a brokerage business. He now owns a large number of cows and sheep, which he has let on shares to farmers about Richland county. Mr. Pease was born in Bennington Co., Vt. in 1803, and in 1832 married Lucinda Glasier. He was a poor man but got a start in life by selling goods around Boston, and then engaged in dairy farming in Vermont, in which business he met with marked success. Mr. and Mrs. Pease have reared five children—

Dexter E., D. G., Vira L., Myron C., deceased, and Clarence N., deceased.

W. F. Doudna, of the firm of Strang & Doudna, was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Feb. 22, 1854. His parents are Isaac and Martha Doudna. A. C. Parfrey, proprietor of the Richland Center mills, is a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Crane) Parfrey. He was born in England, Jan. 31, 1839. He learned the milling business in his native country, and in 1857, with his parents, emigrated to the United States, and came to Richland county. In 1863 he became interested in the mills of which he is now the owner. In 1864, in partnership with J. C. Nichols, he built an upright saw-mill on the opposite side of the river from the grist-mill, and in 1865 changed it to a rotary mill, and has since operated the same, or had it leased to other parties. In 1865 he built a bedstead factory, which employed from sixteen to thirty-five hands, but discontinued the business in 1871. In 1871, with D. E. Pease as partner, he erected a stave factory and the present flouring mills which they operated with good success four years; they then discontinued the stave factory business on account of the scarcity of timber. Thus it can be seen that Mr. Parfrey has been one of Richland Center's most enterprising and wide awake citizens. Before the railroad was built to the village, Mr. Parfrey paid as high as $9,000 in a year for hauling freight, flour, lumber and bedsteads to Lone Rock, and his business amounted to $131,000 annually. He is unpretentious in his manners and a shrewd business man. In October, 1865, Margaret A. Fries became his wife. She is a daughter of Judge H. W. Fries. They have had seven children born to them, six of whom are now living—E. H., Rena, Jennie, Maggie, Charles and Henry.

In April, 1864, he returned to Richland county and purchased the Ithaca mill, which he operated until his death, which occurred in 1867. He left a wife and four children—Mary Ann, now the wife of Henry Toms, A. C., Youngs (deceased) and Fred. Mrs. Parfrey died in January, 1883. Mr. Parfrey was a native of England. He was a miller by trade, as was also his father. He married Elizabeth Crane. In 1857 they emigrated to the United States and spent the first winter in Milwaukee, then settled in Dane county, from whence they came to Richland Center.

Obadiah Driskill was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., Nov. 8, 1840. His mother died in 1844, and his father subsequently married again. In 1848 the family moved to Michigan. The subject of this sketch, however, did not remain there, but returned to his native State, and lived there until 1855, then went to Illinois, and at Chicago in 1861 enlisted with "Barker's Dragoons" for three months. At the expiration of that time, he enlisted in company B, 8th Illinois regiment. He was wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, and discharged from service, Aug. 2, 1862. In 1863 he came to Richland Co., Wis., and Jan. 18, 1864, enlisted in company A, 4th Wisconsin Cavalry, in which he served until April 15, 1866. Thus it can be seen that he was determined to serve his country to the best of his ability. Since the war he has been a resident of this county, and has been extensively engaged in dealing in live stock. For two years he carried on a general store. In 1883 he established a livery business at Richland Center, and now carries on the same. He was united in marriage, May 26, 1866, with Mary Reed. They have two children—Luella and Benjamin. He was commission clerk and tobacco inspector until October, 1863. He has given attention to tilling the soil and now owns 335 acres of land, with excellent improvements, and his location for a farm is one of the best in the county. Mr. Crumbecker was born in Carroll Co., Ohio, July 14, 1829. His parents, Isaac and Hannah Crumbecker, were natives of Maryland, but settled in Ohio many years ago and engaged in farming. This latter enterprise proved a great misfortune, for, on the 30th of January, 1880, while feeding the machine, his right hand came in contact with the cylinder and was so badly mangled that amputation above the wrist was necessary. After meeting with this misfortune Mr. Spangler left the farm and removed to Richland Center and for two years served as deputy sheriff. Returning to Dodge county, he sold his property, went back to New York and in July, 1864, enlisted in company E, 20th New York Cavalry, and served until mustered out of service at the close of the war. He then came again to Wisconsin and lived in Dodge county until 1867. Mr. Fowler has been identified with the republican party since its organization. In his religious views he is liberal. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler have had five children born to them, four of whom are now living—Frank, Edgar E., Irwin S. and Chester A.

Frank Sanford came to Richland county in 1867, and purchased a tannery located west of Richland Center, and operated the same about three years, since which time it has been idle. Mr. Sanford was not engaged in any regular business until 1878, when he built a livery and feed barn and established a livery business, which he sold out in February, 1879, and re-purchased in 1884, and has since carried on an extensive livery business besides operating the stage lines between Richland Center and Viola, West Lima and Cazenovia. Mr. Sanford was born in Mercer Co., Penn., Dec. 14, 1830. The family in 1833 removed to Michigan, where the father died in 1845, and as the family were left in moderate circumstances, the subject of this sketch worked at various employments during the summer seasons, and attended school winters. He went to Galena, Ill., in 1848, and in 1851 came to Wisconsin and had charge of a lead furnace until 1856, when on account of failing eyesight, he spent a season in St. Louis. In 1857 he returned to Mineral Point and engaged in the livery business. In 1862 he went to Idaho and worked at mining four years, then again returned to Mineral Point, where he was employed in the tanning business, coming from thence to this county in 1867, as before stated. The subject of this sketch was married in 1873 to Miss C. A. Derriekson, and now resides on section 12, town of Richland, where he now owns 200 acres. His farm at the time of his purchase was unimproved, and covered with timber. Mr. Harring is politically a republican, and has been a member of the town board, four years, and chairman one year. After the war he spent some time, as well as money, in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, kept hotel in Ohio, constructed five miles of railroad in Illinois, manufactured mining tools in Indiana, and was subsequently in Chicago, from whence he came to Wisconsin. He is now engaged in a general blacksmith business at Richland Center. Mr. Smith is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Whitney Smith is not an old resident of the county, but there are so many historical incidents connected with the history of his parents that a short sketch will prove of interest to all. Whitney Smith was born in the town of Wilkes-Barre, Wyoming Valley, Penn., July 14, 1804, his parents being Jonathan and Anna (Truesdale) Smith. His grandfather, William Smith, was a native of Connecticut, and a ship builder by occupation. He accumulated quite a fortune, married and reared a family of children, and then removed to Wyoming Valley, where he purchased property and soon had good improvements. But alas, one day they were surprised by the Indians, compelled to flee from their home, and before they were out of sight the buildings were in flames. The family suffered terribly, as it was obliged to pass through the swamp known as the "Shades of Death," and travel a distance of sixty miles before reaching a white settlement. They returned to Connecticut, where they resided until peace again prevailed in Wyoming Valley, when they again removed thither, but no sooner had they become nicely settled than the Indians again drove them from their homes and destroyed the property. None of the family were killed, but forty prisoners were taken, and among the number was Jonathan Smith, who was then a boy of fifteen years. The Indians soon commenced killing the prisoners, and as young Smith did not choose to be shot down like a dog, he started to run down the hillside, but he soon saw himself surrounded by Indians and so halted. Thrice the savages threw tomahawks at him, but he dodged the weapons. At last the chief of the tribe appeared, and stated that as the boy had been shot at three times, a gun snapped three times, and a tomahawk thrown at him three times, it was plain to be seen that he was protected by the Great Spirit, and it would surely be death to any Indian who would take his life. He was then taken with the tribe, and at last, on account of his bravery, was adopted as the chief's son. He remained with the tribe five years and six months, and the manner of his escape was thus: The Indians were about to hold a war dance, and on such occasions they partook freely of whisky, and it was their usual custom to kill a prisoner; therefore, as young Smith was the only captive, he was somewhat afraid that, notwithstanding his being a great favorite of the tribe, in a fit of drunkenness they might kill him, so he asked permission of his mother, the chief's wife, to go to Montreal, near which place the tribe was encamped, until the war dance was over, and was granted the permission. He went to said city, dressed and painted in true savage style, and passed along the streets without any one taking any particular notice of him. At last he met a negro, to whom he related his experience. The negro informed an officer, who at once laid plans to release Smith from his bondage. He accordingly had Smith appear sick, and when the chief's wife came after him, Smith pretended to be very sick and in great agony, whereupon the officer told her that the boy was sure to die, and that she had better make what she could out of him. She at last consented to release her claims for two gallons of whisky, which was granted her, and Smith returned to his friends, and afterwards again resided in the valley where he was taken prisoner. Whitney Smith served an apprenticeship at the tanning trade, and then engaged in the business. He subsequently carried on a mercantile business in his native town, where he was married. In 1836 he emigrated to Illinois, and settled in what is now Stark county. He gave the name to the town of Wyoming, in that county, and was postmaster at that place for several years. In 1844 he came to Wisconsin and located at Mineral Point, was at first engaged in mercantile, and afterward in tanning business. In the fall of 1876 he removed to Chicago, and in the spring of 1878 came to Richland Center, where he is now living a retired life. Mr. Smith has been twice married, the second time, Feb. 28, 1849, to Anna Maria Clemes. She is a native of England. They have reared four children, only one of whom is living—Frank C., who is now assistant professor of chemistry and mineralogy in the university at Ann Arbor, Mich. Mr. Smith is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is one of the elders. William Smith and family were driven from their home in Wyoming Valley by the Indians three times. The family twice returned to Connecticut, and upon their return William Smith died before the Indians made the last raid.

H. B. Allen, druggist, bookseller and grocer, is a son of Harvey and Fannie E. Allen, and was born in Walworth Co., Wis., Dec. 20, 1846. He commenced mercantile life as clerk at the age of thirteen, and in 1862 went to Beloit, where he learned the drug business. In October, 1879, he came to Richland Center and purchased a half interest in the business of F. P. Bowen. In March, 1883, he became sole proprietor, and is now doing a leading business. In 1869 he was married to Neatie Shue, daughter of Ira T. Shue, of Beloit. They have two children—Frank H. and Lottie G. Mr. Allen is an enterprising citizen, a republican in politics, a Knight Templar in the Masonic fraternity, and a member of the I. O. O. F.

L. W. Baxter represents the profession of dentistry at Richland Center. He located here May 18, 1880, at which date he opened his office in the Krouskop block, where he remained until the same was destroyed by fire. His office is now pleasantly located on the second floor of the Pier block, and is supplied with all conveniences to do first-class work. Dr. Baxter was born in Waukesha Co., Wis., June 15, 1853. He received a good common school education, and assisted his father in tilling the soil until 1879. In that year he commenced the study and practice of his profession under the guidance of Dr. G. A. Sinclair, of New Lisbon, with whom he continued until he came to Richland Center. He was married Jan. 8, 1882, to Alice Burnham, daughter of H. L. Burnham.

W. J. Hillman is permanently located and engaged in photography in Richland Center. He established this business in October, 1881. Mr. Hillman was born in the State of New York, April 17, 1849. The family soon removed to Massachusetts, and in 1856 went to Cannon Falls, Minn., where the mother still resides. The father died in 1861. Mr. Hillman enlisted at St. Paul, Minn., April 3, 1865, being scarcely sixteen years of age, and was assigned to the 2d Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, going south April 12 and joining the regiment at Washington. He was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 14, the war being over. He then returned to Minnesota, and spent the time in farming and going to school until twenty years of age, teaching school two terms. Since that time he has devoted his attention principally to the art of photography. He is a skilled artist and successful in his business. He was married in 1871 to Caro W. Barnes. They have two children—Mabel, born June 6, 1875, and Charles, born Aug. 14, 1878.

C. W. Slocum, the former landlord of the Park Hotel, became connected with the same in January, 1882, and served as its clerk until the following October. He then had charge of a hotel at Owatonna, Minn., four months, when he again returned to the "Park", and in May, 1883, became proprietor. Mr. Slocum was born in Windham Co., Vt., Oct. 22, 1857. He is the son of James and Margette (Robinson) Slocum. In 1856 the family emigrated to Wisconsin and settled at Mazomanie, where the parents still reside, and here the subject of this sketch helped till the soil until he embarked in the hotel business. He is courteous and accommodating, and under his management the "Park" became a favorite with the traveling public. His connection with said hotel ceased about Nov. 1, 1883, when he removed to Ipswich, Dak., and is there engaged in the same business.

CHAPTER XXX.

TOWN OF RICHWOOD.

The town of Richwood forms the southwest corner of Richland county, embracing township 9 and a portion of township 8, range 2 west. The southern portion of the town is comparatively level and the soil is somewhat sandy. This portion of the town includes what is known as Sand Prairie. North of this the surface is somewhat diversified, in some places being quite rough. As a whole, however, Richwood is among the very best towns in Richland county.

Knapp's creek enters Richwood by way of section 6 and traverses the entire length of the town on its way to the Wisconsin river. It furnishes numerous water privileges, several of which have been improved. The creek derived its name from a trapper of that name, who had a cabin a few miles from the mouth of the creek, and followed hunting and trapping through this region before the territory was inhabited by permanent settlers. He returned to the county once, after John Coumbe had settled within the limits of Richwood, for the purpose of getting some traps that he had buried on a former visit. This is about all that is known of the man. No one knew from whence he came or whither he went. Byrd's creek traverses the eastern portion of the town. These streams, with their numerous spring tributaries, furnish an abundant supply of water for farming and household purposes, as well as power for driving a vast amount of machinery.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler within the limits now comprising the town of Richwood was John Coumbe, the first actual settler in Richland county. Mr. Coumbe first came to the county in 1838 and erected a log cabin on section 35, town 9, range 2 west, but as the Indians were rather numerous and as Mr. Coumbe did not admire them as his only neighbors he returned to the south side of the Wisconsin river, and again the territory which now comprises Richland county was uninhabited by any white person. In 1840, however, Mr. Coumbe again crossed the river and took up his abode in the cabin he had erected two years previously, and here he gave his attention to agricultural pursuits until the time of his death. He was a good neighbor and an honored citizen.

Edward Coumbe came to the county shortly after his brother, John, and settled on Sand Prairie. He remained there until 1848, when he traded his property to Thomas Elliott, and returned to Grant county. He was elected a delegate from Richland county to the first State convention, called to draft a constitution for the State of Wisconsin, which assembled at Madison on the 5th of October, 1846.

John McKinney came in 1841 and selected land on section 27, bringing his family in the fall of the same year. Mr. McKinney was a valuable citizen and neighbor; for instead of hunting, fishing and trapping, he at once commenced improving his land and raising food upon which to subsist. He obtained a small set of buhrs, with which, by means of a horse power, he ground not only his own corn, but also that of his neighbors. He was a native of Virginia, and came of an industrious and honest race, but he was an unsuccessful manager or poor financier. He resided in the county about eight years, then moved to the south side of the river for the purpose of educating his children. He afterwards returned to the county; but his death occurred at Muscoda in February, 1882.

Peter Kinder, a native of Kentucky, came here in 1844 and located on section 26, where he lived until the time of his death. He was a successful farmer, a good neighbor and gained a large circle of friends as well as the respect of all who knew him. In early days he was noted as a public benefactor. No one in need ever went to him in vain, and his uniform kindness and feeling for others became almost proverbial.

Adam Byrd was also one of the first settlers in the town. He was an Ohio man. He located on section 28 near the creek which bears his name, and erected the first saw-mill in the town of Richwood. He remained here about twelve years when he removed to Oregon.

Vincent B. Morgan and George C. White also came at a very early day. Morgan was a native of Georgia, and was a good natured, whole-souled fellow, weighing about 225 pounds. He took a claim on section 31, but never did much farming, preferring to hunt and fish. He died here in 1853.

George C. White was a Pennsylvania German, and had the usual good qualities of that class of people, industry and good management. He located on section 34, where he lived until the war broke out, when he and his only son enlisted in the 11th Wisconsin regiment and both fill soldier's graves. Mr. White was one of the first to fill the office of sheriff for Richland county.

D. M. Shore settled in Richland county on the 30th of August, 1846, and one year later came to the town of Richwood and settled on section 26. Here he lived, following farming, until his death, which occurred in 1883. He was born in Kentucky in 1816; moved with his parents to Illinois, where he was married to Nancy J. Parker, and from thence came to this county as stated.

E. Ash came here in 1848 (or 1849) and located on the northwest quarter of section 27. He resided here about seven years when he removed to Iowa. He only improved about twenty acres of his farm here.

George Rea came at about the same time and lived with O. Carson until 1851, when he purchased the northeast quarter of section 20. This was his home for about thirty years when he removed to Kansas. He now lives at Springfield, Mo. -

Rev. William H. Hoskins was the first minister of the gospel to settle in Richland county. He represented the United Brethren denomination. In 1853 he came here and settled on Sand Prairie and preached at Crow Hollow, Sand Prairie, Spring Green, Lone Rock and Pea Ridge (now Sandusky), a circuit of sixty miles in length. He traveled on horseback, making each appointment every two weeks. In 1854 he purchased forty acres of land on section 17, erected a saw mill and thus laid the foundation of Excelsior. Later he became superannuated as a preacher and engaged in farming. Mr. Hoskins was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Sept. 11, 1817. In 1838 he was married to Mary Winton, came to Wisconsin and settled in Dane county, coming to Richland county in 1853, as stated.

After this time the settlement was more rapid. Many more of the old settlers are treated at length in other connections.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first death in the town was that of the wife of James Moore. Her remains were buried on the southeast quarter of section 53, on land afterward owned by G. M. Clark.

The first marriage in the town was that of Daniel Byrd to Harriet Parker.

The first religious services in the town were held at the house of Edward Ash on section 27. Rev. William Kanoyer, a United Brethren, officiated.

The first birth that occurred in the town was that of Melinda Morgan, whose nativity in April, 1843, entitles her to the laurels of being the first child born in the county as well as town.

The second marriage in the county also occurred here on this pioneer ground. This was the marriage of W. G. Parker to Emily McKinney, in the spring of 1848.

The first frame barn in the town was erected by Myron Whitcomb in 1852. The lumber was sawed at Rockbridge and the shingles were shaved and nearly one half an inch in thickness. New siding was put on the barn in 1883 but the roof was still in good condition. The barn is 40x50 feet in size with 16 feet post. The timber was framed by Noah Titus and consisted solely of pine.

The first house erected in the territory which now comprises the town of Richwood, was also the first in the county. It was the log cabin erected by John Coumbe, in 1838, on section 35.

The first horse team brought into the county were brought into the town of Richwood, in 1841, by Thomas Andrews.

The first brick residence in the town of Richwood was erected in 1855 by Henry Miller, on section 26. This building was enlarged in 1879, by S. B. Marsh, to a two story building, and in 1883 it was the only brick residence in the town.

The first mill in the town was built by Adam Byrd, on Byrd's creek. Its history will be found elsewhere in this volume.

The first postoffice in the town was established on Sand Prairie, in 1848-9, with Johnston Young as first postmaster. Several years later the office was removed to Port Andrews, and Dr. R. M. Miller was commissioned as postmaster. He was succeeded in turn by William Harper, L. Janney, R. L. Carver and J. R. Carver, the latter being the present incumbent. Mail is received tri-weekly from Muscoda.

The first orchard in Richland county was set out by Myron Whitcomb, in this town, in 1851. The trees were purchased from Henry Conner, who had brought them from Indiana. This first orchard numbered fifty apple trees, but they soon withered and died. But Mr. Whitcomb did not despair, and the next year he purchased 800 trees, 100 of which he set out himself and the balance he sold to the neighbors. The majority of those set out by him lived and he now has a good orchard.

The first chestnut trees were set out by Edward Clark.

INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISES.

Knapp's creek, on its passage through section 20, furnishes an excellent water privilege; eight feet head of water. Alonzo Carson was the first to utilize and improve this power. He purchased the property in 1855 and erected a saw-mill. In April, 1866, a freshet washed the mill away, and he at once rebuilt. In 1868 or 1869 he sold to Avery & Langdon, and in 1870, A. H. Avery became sole proprietor. In 1871 he built a grist-mill, at a cost of about $5,000, equipping it with two run of buhrs. Mr. Avery died in 1879, and the property was soon afterward purchased by B. F. Washburn. Samuel Yeager owned an interest in this property for several years and operated a chair factory in connection.

The Ellsworth Mills are located on section 6. They were erected by J. S. Ellsworth in 1856, and are still his property, but since 1876 they have been operated by his son, M. D. Ellsworth. The mills do general sawing, planing, matching, and band-sawing, the principal products being material for wagons and agricultural implements.

In 1867 Thomas J. Ellsworth erected a tannery near Ellsworth mills, and operated the same for about ten years.

In 1848 Melendeth Whit settled on Byrd's creek, and put in shape a device for crushing hominy. It was so arranged that by the use of a water-wheel a weight would be raised and let fall into a wooden mortar. In the mortar about a peck of corn could be placed, and this would be crushed to meal in a day's time. The only trouble Mr. Whit complained of was that the crows would occasionally carry off the corn before it was ground.

Adam Byrd came to Richland county in 1844 and settled on section 25, in the town of Richwood, near the creek which bears his name. He erected the first saw-mill in the town, and had the same in operation in 1845. The property subsequently passed into the hands of John Coumbe, who in turn sold to Coleman & Carver. These gentlemen erected a new mill, but as they became somewhat financially embarrassed, John Coumbe again became owner of the property. In 1865 David Dewey, in company with two other gentlemen, purchased the property, but Mr. Dewey soon became sole proprietor. In 1875 he built a steam mill, using some of the machinery that had been used in the old water mill, which is now in disuse. The steam mill is driven by a twenty-horse power engine.

The first buhrs for grinding corn in the county were brought into the town of Richwood, in May, 1846, by John McKinney. They were run by horse power.

In 1879 H. B. Ellsworth leased the water privilege which Knapp's creek furnishes on section 17, and set a carding mill in operation. He afterward added a saw-mill and general wood-working department, manufacturing broom handles, table legs, sled runners, etc.

RELIGIOUS.

The Christian Church was organized at the school house of district No. 4, in 1878, with Revs. M. Sheffield and Jacob Felton, officiating. Among the first members were S. B. Marsh, wife and child; William Ritchie and wife; J. W. Jones and wife; Mrs. Jane Shores, D. Field, Emma Richardson and Mrs. Howland. The church is in good condition, the pastors have been: Revs. Lewis, Hines, Martin and Buroker.

The Norwegian M. E. Church is located on section 12. It is a log building which was erected in 1862, but the society was organized sometime previous to that time. Among the first members were: H. G. Collier and family, George Sheldon and family, Andrew Anderson and family, Ole Paulson and family, Ole Johnson and family, A. Bergam and family and John Olson and family. The first pastor was Abe Knudtson.

CEMETERIES.

The first cemetery in the town was laid out on the southwest quarter of section 35, the land being donated by John Coumbe. The first body interred here was that of James Carson, whose death took place in 1851. The coffin was made by James Jones, or, as he was usually called, by English Jones.

Wright's cemetery is located on section 24, upon land which was donated by I. J. Wright.

Sand Prairie cemetery is located on section 34. The land was donated by Edmund Clark.

Shore's cemetery is located on section 26. Coates' burial ground is located on section 5. There is also one burial ground on section 5, one on section 2, one on section 11, and another on section 29.

FIRST PUBLIC SCHOOL IN RICHLAND COUNTY.

The first school board elected in the county consisted of J. R. Smith, Thomas Matthews and Jackson Darnell, who, in 1848, took steps to erect a log school house at Orion. Mr. Darnell started out in search of a teacher and soon employed Mary F. Mulamphy, now Mrs. Joseph Elliott, of Highland, Iowa county, to teach a term of three months at $23 per month. She, on the 5th of June, of said year, came to the county. The school house was not yet completed, but as it was necessary to commence immediately in order to receive the public money, Miss Mulamphy opened school at the house of J. R. Smith. In a few weeks, however, the school house was completed, and the school then had more room. As the new building had seats around the edge of the room and the desks consisted of boards laid on pins driven into the wall, so that when the students were writing they were obliged to face the wall and thus turn their backs to the teacher; but the school progressed finely and the students, twenty-five in number, were greatly benefited by attending. The teacher gave good satisfaction and was thus employed to teach the second term in 1849.

RICHWOOD SCHOOLS.

The first school in this town was taught at the house of Peter Kinder in 1848-9. This was a subscription school. William Durren was the teacher.

The first public school in the town was taught during the same season in a log school house located on the northeast corner of section 35. Elizabeth Conner was the teacher.

At an early day a man named Hunter taught a subscription school on Sand Prairie.

In 1857 Richwood had four schools.

In 1884 there were ten schools in the town, all in successful operation, having comfortable school buildings. One of these is a free high school at Port Andrew.

OFFICIAL MATTERS.

The first election in this region was held at the house of Matthew Alexander in 1847, to choose delegates to the constitutional convention. There were thirty-eight votes cast, there being scarcely any restriction upon the right of suffrage.

On April 2, 1850, was held the first election for town officers in Richwood, it having just been organized as a separate town and election precinct. The meeting was held at the house of Peter Kinder and resulted in the choice of the following officers: Adam Byrd, William Kincaannon and Samuel Fleck, supervisors; Johnston Young, clerk; Myron Whitcomb, treasurer; George C. White, superintendent of town schools; W. R. Kincaannon, assessor; V.

B. Morgan, overseer of the poor. Johnson Young, Alvin B. Slaughter and Mark A. Byrd were elected justices of the peace, but only Young qualified and gave bond of $500, having for sureties G. C. White and V. B. Morgan. At the same election Alonzo Cave and John Coumbe were chosen constables. Although no record exists of the number of votes cast at this election, at the ballot taken June 4, same year, we find twenty-six votes taken.

The present officers of the town, elected in the spring of 1883, are: Supervisors, L. M. Thorp, chairman, W. R. Garner and Chris. Peterson; clerk, E. J. Langdon; treasurer, John Brown; assessor, James Appleby; justices, Henry Conner, C. J. Moore, W. H. Haskins and N. B. Miller; constables, T. C. Wallace, Thomas Ellsworth and Orrin Jones. Since the organization nothing has occurred to mar the tranquility of Richwood's official career. Good men have been chosen to fill the offices and public matters have been efficiently cared for. Among those who have been prominent in town affairs and have filled town offices are the following: Thomas Ewing, Henry Connor, H. F. Coates, Levi Persinger, I. J. Wright, I. N. Miller, J. D. Doseh, Nathan Winton, L. M. Thorpe, R. S. Carver, John Coumbe, S. B. Marsh, J. H. Tilley, J. W. Jones, H. J. Clark, R. N. Young, J. S. Ellsworth, Robert Buchanan, B. F. Washburn, J. S. Clark and W. R. Garner.

PORT ANDREWS.

This village was named in honor of Capt. Thomas Andrews, who settled on the southeast corner of section 35 in 1841. He afterward kept a small store and succeeded in having the postoffice moved to this place from Sand Prairie. In 1850 he laid out four blocks of village lots. On the 14th of November, 1854, the plat was enlarged by what was known as the Andrews & Miller addition, which contained fourteen blocks, some of which, however, were fractional. In 1856 Port Andrews had grown to be a flourishing, wide-awake village, with several stores, shops, groceries, saloons, schools, churches, etc; but the railroad was built on the south side of the river, steamboats ceased to ply the river, and the place gradually ran down, until in 1884 the place had almost become a thing of the past, containing only two stores, a blacksmith shop, shoe shop, high school and church.

The first school at Port Andrews was kept by Thomas Andrews.

The second store was opened in 1850 by R. M. and I. N. Miller in a small building which had been erected by William Kincannon.

The third general store was kept by Palmer & McClure.

The first blacksmith here was Hardin Morse.

In an early day every house was open to strangers and travelers. The first hotel was opened by Mr. Isham. He sold to Joseph Elliott.

The first school house in Port Andrews was erected in 1854.

The first religious society organized at Port Andrews was the Methodist Episcopal, which denomination effected an organization in 1854. Meetings were held in the school house.

Thomas Andrews, usually called Capt. Andrews, was born near Quincy, Ill., in 1823. His parents were natives of Ireland but were reared in South Carolina. The father died and the mother married again, and in 1830 came to Wisconsin and settled near Mineral Point. Here Thomas followed mining until 1841, when he crossed the Wisconsin river and settled at the port which afterward took his name. Capt. Andrews served as pilot on the river and afterward purchased the boat Wisconsin. He next built the Zouave, which he traded for the Minnehaha. He spent the most of his time upon the river until the time of his death, March 22, 1880. He was a man of but little education, and in after life often regretted the fact. He was a good citizen and was respected by all. On the 4th of June, 1848, he was married to Charlotta Coumbe, a sister of John Coumbe. They reared three children—Mary, Christa and Elizabeth S.

EXCELSIOR.

The first man to cut brush for the purpose of improving in the vicinity of Excelsior was W. H. Haskins. In 1854 he purchased the southwest quarter of section 16, at which place Knapp's creek furnished an excellent water power, and here he erected a saw-mill. The place was named by W. H. Coates on the same day on which the frame work of the grist mill was erected. A postoffice was established in 1857 and Knowlton & Coates kept a general store, but there was not much of an impetus given to the growth of the place until 1867, in which year the village was platted. Myron Whitcomb and Samuel Noble laid out four blocks on the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 16, and C. C. Whitcomb and J. M. Craig laid out eight blocks on the southeast quarter of section 17. C. C. Whitcomb subsequently made an addition of two blocks. The village is pleasantly situated on the west side of Knapp's creek, which furnished two excellent water privileges at this point. It is surrounded by a good farming country, and its growth, although not remarkably rapid, has been steady. In 1884 the village contained four general stores, one grocery store, one drug store, one grist mill, one saw-mill, one carding mill, one harness shop, one shoe shop, two blacksmith and wagon shops, one furniture store, postoffice, public school, one hotel, one millinery store, lodges of I. O. O. F., I. O. G. T., and G. A. R. and a Methodist Episcopal Church organization.

The first store at Excelsior was opened by Knowlton & Coates.

R. P. & W. Matthews opened a store in 1866 and closed out in 1868.

William McKitrick opened a store in November, 1866. The year following he sold to Henry Henthorn, who closed out in 1869.

The first furniture dealer here was William Howell. He established business in 1881, and in 1882 was succeeded by John S. McKinney.

The first blacksmith at Excelsior was William Haskins, who opened a shop here in 1867. Henry Couey opened a shop in 1869. C. J. Moore opened a wagon and carriage shop here in 1879.

The first harness shop was opened by R. Buchanan, Jr., in 1870.

B. F. Washburn established a general mercantile business in September, 1870, T. P. Logan being his partner for about four months.

The general merchandise business of Logan & Coume was established by T. P. Logan and J. Robert Coume, in 1878. They are thorough business men and have a large trade.

J. J. Brown engaged in the general merchandise business in 1871.

In February, 1883, E. Dosh purchased the dry goods department of B. F. Washburn's store, and established business.

Dr. J. T. Coates was the first to open a store devoted exclusively to drugs. In February, 1882, he sold to D. M. & O. F. David. The firm is now David & Co.

B. F. Washburn opened a wagon shop in 1873 and employed men to run it. In 1876 he sold to Couey & Pearson. The shop is now owned by B. F. Washburn.

In 1878 a newspaper was started at this village by Ira D. Hurlburt. This paper was greenback in proclivities and was called The Excelsior Press. It was not a successful venture, and collapsed after running along for about ten months' time. Mr. Hurlburt is now connected with the Prairie du Chien Union.

In 1870 C. C. Whitcomb erected a dwelling, which he afterwards enlarged and opened it to the public as the Excelsior Hotel. This was the first regular hotel in the village, although this was not upon the village plat. Mr. Whitcomb was landlord for some time, then leased the property. In 1883 L. E. Atkinson was landlord.

The first school in the village of Excelsior was taught by Elder Harvey in the winter of 1867-8, in C. C. Whitcomb's hall. William Durren was the teacher. The following summer the first school house in the village was erected. Annie Fay was the first teacher in this house.

In 1880 the people of Excelsior, needing more school room, erected a two-story school house at a cost of over $1,000, and have since employed two teachers. The first principal was Prof. Keys. He was succeeded in turn by Profs. Clark, Jacobs and Huff.

The postoffice at Excelsior was established in 1857, with D. C. Stewart as the first postmaster. Mail was received once each week from Orion. Mr. Stewart was in turn succeeded by William Coates, H. F. Coates, George Powell, Daniel Noble, R. P. Matthews, L. J. Harvey, B. F. Washburn and T. P. Logan. The latter is the present postmaster. The office became a money order office in August, 1882. The first order was drawn Aug. 9, 1882, by Robert Buchanan, Jr., in favor of Benjamin Young & Son, of Milwaukee, for $20. The first order paid was to S. M. Buchanan. During the year ending Aug. 1, 1883, there were 234 orders issued and thirty-nine were paid. The income of the office was about $200. Mail is received three times each week from Muscoda, and once a week from Sugar Grove.

In 1854 W. H. Haskins purchased the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 16, at which point Knapp's creek furnishes an excellent water power. Here Mr. Haskins erected a saw-mill, equipping it with an old-fashioned sash saw. He sold the property to Rouse & Chapman, and they sold to Knowlton & Coates. In 1856 and 1857 these gentlemen erected a grist-mill, and on the day the frame was raised Mr. Coates suggested "Excelsior" as the name by which the place should be known in the future. In 1864 Myron Whitcomb and Samuel Noble purchased the property and operated the same until 1871, when Mr. Whitcomb sold his interest to W. G. Moshier, who, in January, 1873, became sole proprietor. In November, 1881, Mr. Moshier sold to A. M. Stratton, who improved the property so as to make it the best in this part of the county. The saw-mill is also owned and operated by Mr. Stratton. The old sash saw has been superseded by a rotary saw, and the machinery is in good order. The grist-mill has two run of stone, and is run as a custom and merchant mill.

Richwood Lodge, No. 276, I. O. O. F., was organized March 5, 1878, with the following officers and charter members: James Lewis, N. G.; James Bachtenkircher, V. G.; A. H. The post in November, 1883, had a membership of fifty-three, and held its meetings on the first and third Saturday evenings of each month. William Wright, the gallant young soldier in whose honor the post was named, was a son of I. J. Wright, and was born in the State of Ohio. He came with his parents to Richland county and assisted in tilling the soil. When the Civil War broke out he enlisted in company B, 25th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until mustered out of service. Returning home, he attended school at Sextonville. He united in marriage with Mary Barnes, and was subsequently engaged in farming until his death. Mr. Wright was a whole souled, good hearted fellow, surrounded by a large circle of friends. His name was chosen as the name of Post No. 51, at the suggestion of Edward Doseh, who was his "chum" in early life.

The Excelsior Cornet Band was organized Aug. 25, 1881. The following are the members thereof: C. S. #### BIOGRAPHICAL.

In giving biographical sketches of the early settlers and prominent citizens of Richland county, we find none more deserving of special mention than the following well known citizens of Richwood:

C. C. Whitcomb, son of Myron Whitcomb, was born in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., Oct. 3, 1843. When only a year old, he came with his parents to the town of Richwood, Richland county. His early life was spent in assisting his father to till the soil, and afterwards in learning the trades of carpenter and wheelwright. He was considered a good mechanic. In 1863 he enlisted in the United States service and served in the quartermaster's department until May 1, 1864, at which date he was discharged, on account of sickness. Returning home, he, in partnership with J. M. Craigo, purchased the southeast quarter of section 17, a portion of which they afterwards laid out in town lots, that now constitute the site of Excelsior. They were also engaged in merchandising from 1867 to 1868. Mr.

Whitcomb then purchased his partner's interest, and closed out the merchandise in 1869, to Thomas Andrews. In 1874 he built the Excelsior House, and kept hotel until June, 1882, then leased the property. He afterwards traveled in the west for about a year. He was married Dec. 25, 1868, to Mahala Engert. They had two children, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Whitcomb live in Excelsior at the present time.

Peter Kinder deserves particular mention among the pioneers of Richland county, for no man was more beloved and respected than he. His home was ever a welcome retreat for the weary stranger, and many a settler has had occasion to thank him for kindly service in time of need. Strong and resolute himself, he seemed to impart those characteristics to persons with whom he came in contact, not only giving them encouragement by words of cheer, but without money or charge, assisting them in cutting roads, building cabins, securing food and attending to their every want. It may be truly said of him that he was entirely free from selfish motives in these acts of kindness. He came here at a time when some more selfish persons took advantage of the situation to assist themselves, when an opportunity offered, and might have made money through the misfortunes of others; but any such action was entirely foreign to his nature, and his life was one of unbounded liberality and kindness, extending not only among his neighbors and friends, but to all whom he might render assistance, in times of poverty, danger or affliction. He was a native of Kentucky, born near Louisville, Feb. 7, 1799. His father was a farmer, but he commenced active life as an engineer on boats, on the lower Mississippi river. He was married to Mrs. Sarah (Parker) Hartwell, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and then followed farming in his native State, whence he removed to Indiana, and one year later, to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., where he was engaged in mining until 1845, in the spring of which year, with his family, consisting of wife and two children, he came to Richland county and purchased a claim on section 26, Richwood town, and was here engaged in farming until the time of his death, which occurred Feb. 7, 1873. Peter Kinder was twice married, first, to a Miss Meek, who died leaving five children. His second wife died in June, 1875, leaving two children—Julia, now Mrs. J. W. Jones, and Solomon, who was born in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., Nov. 17, 1844, but as his parents came to this county in 1845, he may be called a Wisconsin boy. He lived with his parents until their death and now may be found at the old homestead. He was married Dec. 10, 1863, to Mary E. Elder, a daughter of Frank Elder. They have had six children—William, Lissie, Alice and Ida, now living; Mary J. and Ora deceased.

Myron Whitecomb, in 1844, came to the county and soon selected land on sections 26 and 35, which was claimed by another man whom he had to pay $150 to release his claim. In January, 1845, he brought his family, wife and three children. His personal property consisted of an old horse, an old cow, an old sow and three pigs and twenty-five cents in cash; thus he started his pioneer life. He was a good shot with a rifle, and in tramping over the hills he became well acquainted with the country, so that he proved a valuable assistant to newcomers who wished to enter land. The first year he raised five acres of corn, a few potatoes and a small amount of other eatables. He gave his principal attention to farming and as he was industrious and economical, he soon found himself in moderate circumstances. But this required toil and he was obliged to withstand numerous privations. June 12, 1852, he raised his barn, which was the first frame barn erected in the county. From 1864 to 1870 he owned a half interest in the Excelsior mills and is now one of the well-to-do farmers of the county. Mr. Whitecomb was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Aug. 30, 1817. At eighteen years of age he bid his parents good by and for several years traveled in various parts of the United States.

He hewed the first stick of timber for the capitol building of the State of Texas. In 1840, in Tippecanoe Co., Ind., he united in marriage with Margaret Ann Carson. He then followed farming one year in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., then came to Iowa Co., Wis., from whence he came to this county. In 1870 he visited his native State, which he had left thirty-six years previous. He is a democrat in politics and has served as township treasurer. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a man who does strictly as he agrees. He is not a large man, but well developed, strong and very active. He was one of the appraisers of the school lands in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Whitecomb have nine children—Margaret A., Charles C., Alonzo L., Rebecca, familiarly called Doll, Sarah E., Delia A., John M., George W. and William G.

William M. Kincannon was one of the early pioneers of Richland Co., Wis. He was born in Washington Co., Va., in the year 1800. When eleven years old his parents moved to Tennessee, where he learned the tanner's trade. He was united in marriage to Lucy B. Collinsworth of Knoxville, Tenn. He then moved to Alabama where he was engaged in the tanning business four years. He then moved to Frankfort, Ill., where he was engaged at his trade for eleven years. He removed from there to Alton, where he engaged in coal mining several years. He removed from Alton to Lafayette Co., Wis., in 1841, and followed mining for lead till 1847. He removed to the town of Richwood, Richland Co., Wis., where he intended to erect a tan yard, but finding the bark of an inferior quality, he abandoned the project and engaged in farming till the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 27, 1857. Mrs. Kincannon was born in Tennessee, in 1803, and in 1884 resided in Richwood town. They reared ten sons—George C., who preceded his father to Richland one year, went to California in 1849, and died in Placerville, Cal., in 1850; one son died when three years old; Louis C. died in 1855, aged twenty-two; Andrew I. died in 1858; James C., M. Crayton, Marion M. and the twins are still living, with the exception of James, in Wisconsin. William K. went to California in 1852, came back to Wisconsin in 1856, returned to California in 1857, was last heard from in Idaho in 1864. The Kincannon boy's grandfather's were both in the Revolutionary War.

Marion M. Kincannon was born in Alton, Ill., in 1839, and came with his parents to Richland county, in 1847, and has since resided in the town of Richwood. He is a farmer by occupation. In 1870 he was married to Ellen Stelle. They have five children—Calvin, George C., Manie, Archibald and William. In 1865 Mr. Kincannon enlisted in company B, 49th Wisconsin, and served until June 24, when he was discharged on account of sickness. He is a musician and often plays for dancing.

Joseph Elliott, a representative and prominent citizen of Richland county, was born in Sangamon Co., Ill., Nov. 1, 1829. In 1835 he removed to Lancaster, Grant Co., Wis. He came with his parents, Thomas and Sarah Elliott, to Richland county, in 1848, where he has since resided. In 1851 he was married to Mary Mulamphy. In 1859 he engaged in general merchandising at Port Andrews, which he continued until 1874, then settled on his farm, which contained 240 acres. His improvements are the best in the town. His residence is large and convenient, and surrounded by a natural grove of oak. He is engaged mainly in stock farming. He is a democrat in politics, but takes no interest farther than to vote. He would make a good public officer, but never places himself in the way of anything of that character. Of the eleven children, seven are still living—Jennie, Caddie, Adelia, Kansar, Gilbert A., Alice and Charles Elden. Mr. Elliott is a man who has the respect of his fellow-men to a remarkable degree. His reputation for honesty and integrity are undisputed and he has many friends.

Randolph Elliott was born in western Tennessee, Sept. 14, 1827. He came with his parents, in 1836, to Wisconsin, and in 1848 was married in Grant county, to Moramic Sperry. Then he came to Richland county, and settled on what is called Sand Prairie. In 1850 he removed to Crawford county and lived in the town of Scott twelve years. Returning to Richland county, he resided in the town of Richwood until 1874, then with his family emigrated to California and remained three years, then again returned to this town. The children are—William D., Ella, Mary Etta, Joseph W., Francis M., Gilmour W. and Reuben F., who was born in California in 1874.

H. B. Ellsworth is a son of J. S. Ellsworth, and was born in Licking Co., Ohio, in 1850. When quite young he came to this county with his parents. Exhibiting considerable ingenuity, he run his father's mill several years, when he went to La Crosse and took charge of a saw in a mill which he run two years. In 1879 he leased a power on section 17, and built a mill in which he is running a carding machine, saw-mill and general woodwork. He is also the inventor of the combination Ellsworth clothes rack, crib and table. Mr. Ellsworth has been married three times. His first wife died leaving two children—Amy and Cora. His second wife left no children. His third wife was formerly Maggie Winton. They have two children—Verne and Carrol.

Alonzo Carson, deceased, became a resident of Wisconsin about 1845. He lived about two years on the south side of the river, then came with his father to Richland county and purchased land, but soon returned to Indiana. In 1850 he came back to Wisconsin and settled on section 34, Richwood. In 1851 Eliza J. Armstrong became his wife. In 1855 he purchased a water-power on Knapp's creek and built a saw-mill which he operated about five years; he then leased the property. The mill was afterwards washed away by the floods, but Mr. Carson at once rebuilt and sold it to Mr.

Langdon. He then returned to his farm, but two years later moved to Boscobel, where he died in 1876. Mr. Carson was born in Ohio, Dec. 6, 1822. When five years old he moved with his parents, Lott and Margaret Carson, to Indiana, and resided in Tippecanoe county, from whence he came to Wisconsin. Mrs. Carson was a daughter of John and Elizabeth Armstrong. She was born in Muscoda, Grant Co., Wis., April 1, 1832, and came to Richland county in 1848. Mr. and Mrs. Carson were the parents of seven children—Carrie C., wife of Lysander Matthews; Maggie E, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Sarah, the wife of John Stoddard; Rebecca I., George L., Addie M. and Hubert K. Soon after Mr. Carson's death, the family returned to the homestead, where they now reside. Mr. Carson was a good citizen, enterprising, honest in his dealings, and respected by his neighbors. He left his family in good circumstances.

Nels Hanson was one of the first Norwegians to settle in the county, and as he has kept pace with the times, he is now one of the leading and influential men among the people of his nationality. He came here in 1850, and purchased forty acres of land on section 2, Richwood, erected a log cabin and a small shop in which to work at blacksmithing. He was the first and only blacksmith who located in this vicinity for many years. He was industrious and economical, and so was able, from time to time, to add acres to his farm until he now has 220, with first-class improvements. His religious connections are with the Lutheran Church. He donated land and it was through his efforts that a church of that denomination was erected. Mr. Hanson was born March 23, 1818. He learned his trade and followed the same in his own country until 1849, when he emigrated to the United States, leaving Norway June 9, and arriving in New York August 8. He immediately came on to Wisconsin, arriving at Highland October 8. He united in marriage with Carrie Larson. They have four children—Magnus, Nettie, Guss and Charles.

Henry Miller (deceased) was a native of Kentucky. He united in marriage with Margaret Sharp, and in 1828 removed to Tippecanoe Co., Ind. He was a farmer by occupation. He came to Richland county in 1851, becoming one of its pioneers. He settled on section 26, where he died in 1860. Mrs. Miller died Oct. 10, 1883. They were the parents of seven children, four of whom are living—Mary Jane, wife of L. M. Thorp; Martha Ann, wife of Rev. J. J. Wright; Rebecca, wife of S. B. Marsh, and Andrew J. Mr. Miller was a consistent Christian, having been a member of the Presbyterian Church for thirty years. He was a charitable, industrious and honest man.

Hon. Henry Conner was the first man elected to represent Richland county in the State Assembly. He was the candidate of the democratic party, and his opponent was Sexton. He served the people one term and gave good satisfaction, but has since had but little to do with politics. He has, however, held the office of justice of the peace almost continually for thirty years, also served as chairman of the town board. Mr. Conner was born in Virginia in 1793, learned the tanner's trade, and in 1827 united in marriage with Jane Colton. In 1832 he moved to Ohio and one year later to Johnston Co., Ind., from whence he came to Wisconsin and has since been engaged in farming in the town of Richwood. He is a Presbyterian in his religious views, and a man who has the esteem of all who know him. His wife died Oct. 23, 1878. She had given birth to nine children, five of whom survived her in life—William H., Mary E., Margaret S., Rebecca C. and Nancy A.

L. M. Thorp first visited Richland county during the month of May, 1849, and spent a little time looking over the country. On the 2d day of June following he entered 160 acres on section 24, Richwood town, so that he was among the pioneers in making selection of a location. He then returned to Indiana. In 1851 he brought his family, consisting of a wife and three children, and settled on the land he had entered, making the trip with teams. In 1854 he removed to section 6, where he accumulated a large body of land and became a well-to-do farmer. Upon his arrival in the county his earthly possessions consisted of one team and wagon, and $100 in cash, so it may be concluded he was an industrious man and a good manager. After securing his provisions for the winter he found himself with but $5 in money, and nothing coming in, as is always the case in a new country the first year, so he taught school and spent what time he could upon the farm, and thus made a start in life. At one time he was extensively engaged in the culture of hops, which promised large returns, but prices unexpectedly declined to such an extent as to involve him in serious loss. Discouraging as was the result of this enterprise, he did not falter or spend any unnecessary time in complaint, but with characteristic energy pushed forward and recovered himself from pecuniary difficulty. Mr. Thorp was a member of the first republican convention held in the county, and was prominently identified with that party until 1878. Being a man who thinks for himself, he was among those who could not be held by party ties, and since that time, governed by high and honorable motives, he has acted independently of party. He has held from time to time positions of trust, and in 1856 was elected county sheriff, and again elected to the same office in 1862. He was a candidate on the greenback ticket, in 1878, for member of the Assembly, and made a good canvass, polling a strong vote, but was nevertheless defeated with the rest of that ticket. The subject of this sketch was born in Connecticut, Dec. 24, 1816, where he received a good education and taught school thirty-nine terms. In 1840 he went to Indiana, where in 1847 he was married to Mary Jane Miller, a daughter of Henry Miller, who settled in the county in 1852. Mr.

and Mrs. Thorp have reared eleven children—Janette, Julius C., Henry M., Lawrence M., who died at the age of twenty-four years; Mary J., who died at the age of twenty-two years; Octavia, who married A. H. Floaten; James A., Louisa, Levina, Ida M. and Florence. In addition to other good qualities, Mr. Thorp is a temperance worker and a woman's rights man. He is not a narrow minded bigot. A man of his calibre and thought could not well be such, and his religious views are liberal. When the county seat removal question was agitated, Mr. Thorp, feeling that Richland Center was the proper and desirable place, worked for its location at that point, and through his influence one-half the vote of the town was cast in favor of such removal.

Levi Persinger settled in the county in 1851 and soon purchased land on section 17, where he made improvements, and in 1858 located on the same. He continued farming and now owns 240 acres. From 1861 to 1883 he acted as mail carrier, and although the country was rough and the roads bad, yet he never missed having the mail reach its destination at the appointed time. Mr. Persinger was born in Virginia, in 1816; moved with his parents to Cincinnati when nine years of age. From Ohio he went to Indiana and in Johnston county, in 1838, Christena Brunnemer became his wife. The children are—Margaret, Levi, died at the age of thirty-five years; Catharine, died at the age of thirty-three years; William, Joseph and Mary. Politically he is a republican. Mr. Persinger is a member of the I. O. O. F.

J. S. Ellsworth was a native of Vermont, born in August, 1808. He learned the shoemaker's trade, moved to Ohio and thence, in 1852, came to Wisconsin and settled in this county, and followed farming, also kept a small store at Independence, between Lone Rock and Richland City. In 1856 he purchased a water power on Knapp's creek and built the Ellsworth mills and operated the same until 1882, then moved to Benton Co., Mo. He was twice married, first to Didama Buxton. She died in Ohio leaving two children—Diana and Oliver. He then married Amy B. Stockwell, and by this union reared three children—Thomas J., M. D. and H. B. Politically he is a democrat.

M. D. Ellsworth was born in Ohio in 1847 and came with his parents to this county. He assisted his father on the farm and about the mill until 1876, since which he has operated the Ellsworth mills, of which mention is made elsewhere in this book. In 1875 he was married to Miss A. L. Hodgins. They have three children—Fannie, Lelia and Mabel.

Thomas J. Ellsworth was born at Johnstown, Lieking Co., Ohio, April 20, 1842. He came to Richland county with his parents in the spring of 1851. He remained with his father until the summer of 1859, when he left home to seek his fortune elsewhere, taking the advice of Horace Greeley to "go west, young man." He brought up in Kansas and was at Fort Scott at the breaking out of the Civil War, engaged in carrying the mail from Fort Scott to Greenfield, Mo. He enlisted in August, 1861, in company B, 6th regiment, Kansas Home Guards. The company was mustered out of the service March 7, 1862, and on the 9th of the same month he enlisted in company F, of the 2d Ohio Cavalry, for three years or during the war. Becoming disabled in the right knee, while drilling on horseback, he was discharged at Columbus, Ohio, where the regiment had been sent to remount. He then came home, sick and a cripple, and with little hopes of getting well, but thanks to a good constitution not broken down by bad habits, and plenty of the article called grit, he did get well enough to be drafted in the fall of 1864, but he had broken his leg a few weeks before, while engaged in getting out saw logs for his father. As soon as the bone was healed sufficient to pass muster he again enlisted, this time in company H, 44th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Capt. Houtz's company, in which he served as corporal and was detailed as company clerk, but before he had served one month another accident overtook him and his leg was once more broken, this time in a playful scuffle with a comrade, and he was again sent to the hospital where the surrender of Lee at Appomatax found him, and he was sent home under the general order discharging all men in hospital. In the year 1867 he started a tannery in the town of Richwood, in which he was fairly successful, but failing health forced him to quit hard labor so he quit the business, having by honesty, industry and fair dealing acquired sufficient of this world's good to be comfortably situated at present. In the year 1875, on the 30th of May, he was married to Mrs. Ellen (Cosgrove) Burns, by whom he has one child—Ada Augusta, aged eight years. In politics he is independent, having taken quite an active part in both the democratic and greenback parties, and in 1880 was the candidate on the tickets of both those parties for county clerk, but party spirit run very high and he could not overcome the large republican majority in the county; yet he had the satisfaction of running ahead of his ticket in both his own town and that of his opponent. He favors free trade, free schools, free religion and free men, and plenty of greenback legal tender money. In religion he is a pronounced materialist; his motto, "do good."

Jeremiah Dingman is another early pioneer, he having chosen Richland county as his residence in 1853. He was an unmarried man, and thus worked for various parties until 1861. He then enlisted in company H, 11th Wisconsin, and served three years and three months. Returning home, he purchased eighty acres on section 25, and in 1866 united in matrimony with Permelia Bergham, and has since followed farming as an occupation. The children are—Emmett F., Pearl and Edmund C. Mr. Dingman is a member of the G. A. R.

Y., July 8, 1843, and came with his parents to Berlin, Wis., in 1854. He enlisted in 1862, in company G, 32d Wisconsin, and served until the regiment was mustered out of service. Returning home, he, with H. Searles, raised a part of a company, which was assigned to the 50th Wisconsin, and served until June, 1866. After the war he engaged in milling at Lemonware, Wis., where he remained three years, then spent a short time in Iowa, after which he came to Richland county. Mr. Stratton was married in 1865 to Jessie Buck, and about a week afterwards returned to the ranks of his regiment. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Stratton are—Ella G., Cassius M., May Belle, Robert T. and Guy L. Mr. Stratton is a good business man, courteous to all, and highly respected.

David Dewey, one of the pioneers of 1854, settled on section 2, town of Richwood, where he entered eighty acres. One year later he removed to Sheboygan county and there engaged in operating saw-mills about three years, then went to the State of Ohio and continued in the same business. In 1860 he returned to Richland county and lived for a short time on the land he had entered, then removed to Port Andrews and served as engineer on river boats until 1865, when he purchased the mill property on Byrd's creek, of which mention is made elsewhere. Mr. Dewey was born in Rutland Co., Vt., May 5, 1833. When he was very young the family moved to Ohio. At the age of sixteen years he left his father's farm and commenced work in a saw-mill. He also served as fireman of a railroad engine. In 1854 he went to Iowa, and there was married to Ann Dudgeon. The same year he came to this county. After leaving St. Paul Mr. Clark went to Lansing, Iowa, and there took more thorough instruction in the art of making jewelry, and Oct. 12, 1871, he moved back to Richland county, where he now lives, and has established a business second to none in the county, for the repairing of watches, and manufacture of jewelry. Returning to his native State, he resumed teaching school and also read law, but his health failing, he was obliged to abandon his studies. In 1869 he went to Indiana, and two years later came to Wisconsin. He at first lived in Grant county and there, in 1877, he was married to Sophrona Sabins. He then came to Richland county, located in Excelsior, and has since followed the trade of carriage and wagon-maker. Mr. Moore is a believer in the Christian religion, and was formerly a member of the Baptist Church. He is a republican in politics and a member of the fraternity of Good Templars. In 1883 he was elected a justice of the peace.

O. F. David was born in Grant county, Nov. 26, 1858. His parents were Isaac F. and Cicelia (Rework) David. His early life was spent on his father's farm and attending district schools. When sixteen years of age he entered the high school department at Museoda, where he took a four years' course. He then followed civil engineering in Dakota two years, after which, in February, 1882, with his brother,

D. M. David, as partner, he established a drug business at Excelsior, the firm name being D. M. & O. F. David, which, in July, 1883, was changed to David & Co. Mr. David is a member of the fraternity of Odd Fellows, and is well qualified for the business in which he is engaged. Nov. 24, 1883, he was united in matrimony with Maria Noble. She is a daughter of Samuel Noble.

CHAPTER XXXI.

TOWN OF ROCKBRIDGE.

This territory comprises township 11 north, and range 1 east, and is bounded on the north by Henrietta, on the east by Willow, on the south by Richland, and on the west by Marshall. Like all towns in this section of the county, the surface is much broken, and hills, rocks and abrupt breaks are quite common. The scenery is varied and interesting. Among the more prominent natural features of interest is the rock bridge spanning the Pine river, an account of which appears in the general history of this work. Immense ledges of rock, forming sometimes a perpendicular wall of great height, rise abruptly from the highway; beautiful springs of pure, limpid water gush from the hills, and, playfully leaping from terrace to terrace, furnish ever-flowing streams, gratifying to both man and beast. The people of the town have, with characteristic benevolence, provided watering troughs near the roads and easily accessible, through which this sparkling water flows, affording an opportunity for the weary or heated horse to slake his thirst and the traveler to refresh himself. So abundant are these never-failing fountains that hardly a quarter section of land is without its unstinted supply. The soil is variable from a dark loam to a light sand in a small part of the town, but in most places there is a mixture of the proper consistency to furnish most excellent farming lands, so that agriculture is the main pursuit. However, the farmers in many instances are adding little by little each year to their herds, and in a short time the stock industry will be the leading feature among agriculturists. In this respect Rockbridge already compares favorably with other towns, and a glance at the report of the County Agricultural Society will show a goodly number of premiums awarded Rockbridge citizens for superior stock. Formerly this town was abundantly supplied with a heavy growth of most excellent timber, but her forests have been reduced by the woodman's ax until good timber is becoming valuable. It is settled by a thrifty class of people, mostly American, a few of whom are of Scotch descent.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

This is the oldest settled town in the northern part of the county, the first move in that direction having been made by Samuel Swinehart in 1844, when he made a claim on the present site of the village of Rockbridge and built a cabin of poles. He sold this claim to Harry Coles, a resident of Galena, Ill. In the spring of 1845 he (Coles) hired some men at Galena to come to this place and build a saw-mill. The names of the men were: William Dooley, James Baxter, David Pettie and Mr. McCann, all single men, and David Currie, with his wife and two children. He was a cripple, and expected to board the men. The single men started with one team and wagon, and Mr. Currie and family with another. They drove to Muscoda, and crossed the river to the present site of the town of Orion. The following day, accompanied by Capt. Smith and Thomas Matthews, they started to cut a road to Rockbridge. They attempted to follow a ridge, thinking it would prove a continuous elevation, but in this they were disappointed, and had proceeded but a few miles when they found themselves on the point of a bluff, where they camped for the night. In the morning Coles, with two or three others, started out to find a passage, but as none could be found they took the back trail, following the road they had cut the day before back to the river. They then concluded to leave the teams and make the trip by water, and accordingly embarked in canoes, as they were called, but, more properly speaking, they were "dug-outs." They thus proceeded up the Wisconsin river to the mouth of the Pine, thence up that stream to their destination. It took them a week to make the trip. Near the mouth of Rock creek the banks of the river had evidently been cut away, presenting the appearance of a ford, and upon inquiry they ascertained from the Indians that at that place the troops crossed when in pursuit of Black Hawk. The first thing done after their arrival was to build an addition to the Swinehart cabin, then work commenced on the mill. Capt. Smith and Thomas Matthews were employed to get out timbers for the frame, and a team being a necessity, the first road up the river to the natural bridge was cut. It was on the west side, and winding around the bluffs and swamps, was much longer than the present one. The mill was not completed for nearly a year, and soon after Coles sold to Moore & Akan. He then went away and his whereabouts were unknown. It is supposed that he went to the Mexican War. He was a dissipated man of ill-repute, and was generally considered a rascal. The men whom he hired by the month never received pay, and from some of them he borrowed money which he failed to return. Mr. Currie was determined to have his pay and sent a sheriff from Jo Daviess Co., Ill., to levy on property, starting himself on horseback to attend the sale and bid on the property. He was met at the Pine river ford by a band of "bullies" who would not let him cross, and as no one attended the sale it was not effected, and the men to this day remain unpaid.

This was aggravating and discouraging. The men had worked hard, and some of them even Sundays. They were, at the time of going into the woods, entire strangers, but soon became fast friends. Provisions would often run quite low, and then all would start out in search of game, which fortunately was abundant, and many deer and bear were killed and devoured by the little colony. Honey was plenty, but of milk and butter there was none. The first cow of the country was still in the future. In the spring of 1846 David Pettie was taken sick. One of the party went to Highland in Iowa for a physician, but he came too late, and Pettie was soon dead. A consultation was held to determine what should be done with his body. It was thought by them that this country would never be settled by white people, that as soon as the timber was stripped off the land would be left to the Indians, and it would be barbarous to bury him in such a place, so his body was taken down the river and interred on land adjoining the town site of Orion. At this time the Winnebago Indians were numerous in this section and made frequent visits to the camp. Like most Indians they were fond of whisky and ready to trade anything in their possession for "fire-water." This man Cole once traded with a squaw giving two pints of whisky for a good heavy Mackinaw blanket. She had a tin cup holding a pint, which he filled and passed to her, which she drank at once, taking away the other pint for a reserve, when she might again be thirsty. They never visited the camp, without going to the natural bridge for worship, as that was regarded by them as a work of the Great Spirit.

In 1849 Orrin Hazeltine and his son Ira came here from Waukesha county. They were natives of Vermont, and purchased the mill property and some land in this vicinity. Here Orrin made his home until the time of his death. Ira now lives in the State of Missouri.

It is frequently difficult to obtain satisfactory information concerning the early settlement of a town. There is often a difference of opinion as to dates and events. As good a history of Rockbridge's early settlement as could be obtained in addition to that already given, is here presented, and the dates are mentioned whenever there is a good degree of certainty as to their correctness.

Francis M. Stewart was an early settler. He lived at Rockbridge a while and then settled on the southwest quarter of section 8. In 1854 he sold out and afterward lived in different parts of the county.

Isaac Talbot arrived in 1851, and located on section 32. He made his home here until after the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted and died in the service.

W. K. Smith came from Kentucky in 1854, and bought the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 30. He also enlisted and died in the army.

Thomas Gray and his son Daniel came as early as 1853, and settled on the southeast quarter of section 6, where they remained until the breaking out of the "Great American Conflict," when the old gentleman went to Minnesota, and Daniel, who was by profession a clergyman, returned east.

In 1850, Seth Butler, a native of New York, came here and made a selection on the northeast quarter of section 19. He remained about two years.

Buddington Kinyon, a native of Rhode Island, was first seen here in 1855. He settled on section 6, and still lives within the boundaries of that territory.

Donald Smith, a native of Scotland, came in 1854 and purchased land on section 18, and made it his home until the time of his death. His family still occupy the homestead.

Zenas and Ossian Satterlee were originally from Ohio, but came here from Illinois in 1851. Zenas entered land on section 20, where he made some improvements and remained about two years, then returned to Illinois. Ossian entered land on section 18, and lived here until 1854, when he sold to Donald Smith and went to Henrietta. The season that he made this move, J. H. Little came and entered the west half of the northwest quarter of section 6, where he improved a farm and remained until about the close of the war, then removed to the town of Marshall. He now lives in the town of Bloom.

The year following, Hugh Booher came, and settled on the northeast quarter of section 8. In 1860 he went to Pike's Peak and spent the summer. He then returned and soon after removed to Green county.

In 1854 James Coffin arrived and made settlement on the northeast of the southeast quarter of section 17. He remained until war times, then removed to section 16, and a few years later to "Steamboat Hollow," where he died in 1882.

Lyman Creed was an early settler, and made selection on the south half of the southwest quarter of section 30. He now lives in the town of Richland. The same season, section 31 received a settler by the name of Thomas Castello, who yet occupies the same place.

In 1855 Jonathan R. Fullington, a native of Vermont, entered land on section 3, which he sold one year later to Morris Freeman and took up his abode on section 1, where he now lives.

Robert Monteith came from Richland Center about the same time and located on section 3. He remained but a few years, then sold out and went north.

In 1854 another Vermonter made his appearance, by name of Samuel Coleburn. He selected a home on the northeast of the southeast quarter of section 9. He was noted for telling remarkably large stories. He remained a number of years, and at last accounts was in Iowa.

J. L. Spears was from New York, and came here during the fall of 1855, settling in the village of Rockbridge and later on section 10.

Amasa Hoskins was a prominent early settler, and came here as early as 1850, from Illinois. He located on the northwest quarter of section

29. He remained in the town several years and then removed to Iowa, and has since been reported dead.

Jules Preston, a native of York State, came the same year and settled on section 29, and remained two years. He was a very hospitable man, and travelers were always welcome. He sold this claim in 1852 to John Poole, and returned east.

In 1851 William Dary came from Illinois during the summer, and entered land on sections 28 and 29, where he cleared a farm and lived until war times, then he sold out and went to Sylvan, where he may now be found.

Daniel McDonald came from Ohio in 1852 and entered the northwest quarter of section 19, then he returned to Ohio. In 1855 he came again and made settlement. He started with a pair of horses on the 15th day of October and arrived the 15th day of November. Meanwhile a neighbor had erected a log house for him, into which he moved and lived until 1880, then built his present frame house.

Peter Waggoner, of Pennsylvania, came here from Ohio in 1854 and entered land on section 32, where he cleared a farm and lived a number of years. He died in January, 1883.

Alden Hazeltine, formerly from Vermont, arrived in Rockbridge town in 1853, and entered the northwest quarter of section 15 and bought four lots in the town of Rockbridge. He made his home in the village until the time of his death, which occurred in February, 1883. His widow now lives in Richland Center.

In 1854 John S. Scott, formerly of Pennsylvania, came here from Dane county and entered land on section 2, town 11, range 1 east. He then returned to Dane county and spent the winter. In March, 1855, he returned with the intention of settling on his place, but could only get as far as Rockbridge, as there was neither road or bridges. He therefore bought lots in the village, built a small frame house, where he lived until 1862, when he made settlement on his present farm, on the northeast quarter of section 2.

Samuel Holloway was quite an early settler, and died in April, 1855.

John Poole, a native of Pennsylvania, came in 1852 and located on section 29, where in 1857 he died. His widow is now the wife of Hiram Tadder, and lives on section 21.

From Vermont in 1854 came Hiram Austin, and purchased land on sections 15 and 22, where he lived until the time of his death, which occurred in 1869.

Henry Waggoner, of Ohio, came from West Virginia in 1855 and made selection on section 32 and cleared a farm. He now resides on section 33.

During the fall of 1854 Richard L. White arrived from York State and entered land on section 3. He spent the winter in Avoca, and made a settlement on his place in 1855, where he now lives.

In 1851 Jacob Dury, of Virginia, came from Illinois and located on the northeast quarter of section 29, where he lived about ten years, then sold and removed to Sylvan, where he has since died. His widow is again married and still lives in that town.

The year following came among others Nicholas Pool, who was born in Ohio. He came direct from Illinois and bought land on section 29, town 11, range 1 east. He now lives on section 21.

The year previous (1851) also found Daniel Hoskins, a native of York State, on his way here from Ohio. Upon his arrival he stopped with his son Amasa. He is now dead.

George W. Hancock, a native of Pennsylvania, came here from Dane county quite early in 1850, and first lived on the southeast quarter of section 19. In 1852 he bought the northeast quarter of section 17, and cleared a part of the land. He continued to live there two years and then moved to the southeast quarter of section 8, where he lived a short time, then went to Vernon county where he has since died.

Reuben, a son of George W. Hancock, came here from California during the fall of 1852. He was not married and at first made his home with his father. In a short time he took unto himself a wife and settled on the northeast quarter of section 17, and built a log house and erected the first frame barn in the town, and probably the first in the northern part of the county. This was in 1853. He died the year following and was buried on the farm. His widow is now the wife of George Fogo.

In November, 1851, German and Hiram Tadder, natives of Vermont, came from Dane county. Hiram first settled on section 20, but now lives on section 21. German settled on the southeast quarter of section 17 where he cleared a small piece of ground, remained a short time and then sold out and bought land on section 28. He enlisted in the army where he contracted a disease in consequence of which he drew a pension. In 1867 he sold his farm and removed to Richland Center, where he died some years later.

Zenas Saterlee, a native of Indiana, came from Illinois in 1851, and located on the southwest quarter of section 20. He entered the land, made some improvements, remained two or three years and then sold out and returned to Illinois. Zadok Hawkins bought the farm and lived on it a few years, then purchased land on sections 29 and 32 which he occupied until 1875, when he died. The family are now scattered through various parts of the country.

In September, 1851, Abel P. Hyde of York State came from Dane county and first settled on section 24 of the town of Marshall. Two years afterward he removed to Richland Center and remained until 1855 when he made his first settlement in Rockbridge on section 21. His home is now on section 10.

The same year (1855) Morris Freeman, formerly of Herkimer Co., N. Y., came here from Waukesha county and settled on section 3. He died in the village of Rockbridge in 1879. In 1854 another settler came in who made a settlement on the southeast quarter of section 8, where he still lives. His name is Samuel Marshall and he is a native of Jefferson Co., Ohio.

Daniel Hinemon came from Dane county in 1855 and located on section 28. He now lives in Sauk county.

Henry Leatherberry, from Jefferson Co., Ohio, came in 1854, and located on section 20, where he lived two years. He then moved to Henrietta, where he had bought land on section 8. He died there on the 19th day of December, 1882.

Daniel and James Snow, natives of New York State, and Jefferson county, came here from Dodge county in 1857 and settled on section 1, where Daniel still lives. James moved to the village in 1868, where he keeps a hotel, and is at present agent for the Singer Sewing Machine Company. About this time others came in from various sections of the country, but enough has been given to show the general character of the early settlement.

ORGANIC.

The town of Rockbridge was first organized in the spring of 1851. The first meeting was held at the village in a building owned by Orrin Hazeltine. At that time the following officers were elected: Jules Preston, Asa Sheldon and Amasa Haskins, supervisors; A. E. Decker, clerk; Julius Preston, Amasa Haskins and Orrin Hazeltine, justices of the peace; Robert Hawkins, assessor. The amount of tax raised from the levy of this year was $20. Illustrative of the difference between an election held then and now, in point of number of votes cast, a complete list of all persons voting at the election held in September, 1853, is here given. This was two years after the organization of the town, and while it comprised a larger extent of territory than now: George W. Hancock, Samuel Haloway, John Pool, Reuben Hancock, John Marshall, John Jeffrey, Alexander Sires, Francis M. Stewart, Moses Laws, Daniel Haskins, Alonzo E. Decker, Seth Butler, Abner Aiken and Orrin Hazeltine.

The town assumed its present boundaries in 1856. The annual town meeting was held at the house of Alden Hazeltine, April 21, 1856, and the following officers were elected: J. S. Scott, chairman, Daniel Hineman and Samuel Marshall, side supervisors; J. R. Fullington, justice of the peace; Gaylord Freeman, superintendent of schools; Hiram Austin, treasurer; Hiram Freeman, town clerk; Hiram Tadder, assessor; Joel P. Tadder and M. A. Davis, constables; Hiram Tadder, sealer of weights and measures.

At the annual town meeting held at the town hall April 3, 1883, the following officers were elected: Harvey Fogo, town clerk; James Washburn, chairman, Samuel Hendricks and D. W. Huntington, supervisors; George Hines, assessor; Augustus Hoskins, Noble Lieurame and James Washburn, justices of the peace; H. W. Cate and George Collins, constables; L. N. Herington, treasurer.

EDUCATIONAL.

The schools of this town may be called in fair condition. Some improvements could be made to advantage, yet no person can complain that an opportunity is not here afforded for obtaining a good education. There has been some school quarrels and unpleasant dissensions, but as a rule, the "department of learning" has received its share of attention. As early as 1853 a school district was organized in the western part of the town, and a school taught by Jane Hazeltine in a house that was built by Zenas Saterlee, on the southwest quarter of section 20. Two or three years later, a school house was built on the northeast quarter of section 29. In this house John Lewis was the first teacher. There seemed to be considerable dissension among the citizens of this district, and in a short time the school building was burned; another was soon erected, but was not allowed to stand, and soon afterward went up in smoke. The territory included in this district is now attached to other districts. A history is here given of the different school districts, so far as reliable information could be obtained.

In No. 1 the first school was taught by Adelia Hazeltine and Persis Hazeltine, in a slab shanty, on the village plat, in 1853. This was a subscription school. The only scholars in the district were the children of Orrin and Alden Hazeltine and Jacob Halloway. The teachers took turns, keeping the school one week each at a time. School was taught in private houses until 1856, when a frame house was built, in which Sarah J. Smith was the first teacher. The present school building was erected in 1879, and in it Delia Knapp was the first teacher. The school at this time, (1884), is under the management of Laura Jenkins.

During the winter of 1856-7 the first school house was built in district No. 3. It was located on the southwest of the northwest quarter of section 27. Gaylord Freeman was the first teacher. The district continued to use this building until 1872, when a frame house was erected on the old site, in which Jemima Menamar was the first teacher. This position is now held by Maggie Welsh.

In district No. 4 there was a log school house built in 1858, located on the northeast quarter of section 17, and that winter the first school was taught by William H. Lawrence. This building was in use until 1883, when a neat frame house was erected near the old site, in which John D. Fogo first taught a term of school.

In district No. 5 the first school was taught by Phebe Skinner in 1857, in a log house belonging to Peter Waggoner. It was located on the northwest quarter of section 32. Two terms were taught in this building. In 1858 a log school house was built on the northwest of the northwest of section 32, which was in use until 1882, when a frame house was built on the southwest of the northwest of section 32. Mary Kennedy was the first teacher there. The present teacher is Mamie Foley.

In district No. 7 the first school was taught by Wilson Saterlee, in a house belonging to Elihu Pease, in the town of Henrietta. This was in 1857. About 1859 a commodious building was erected on the northwest quarter of section 5, on the town line, but in Rockbridge town. In that house Joel Judkins was the first teacher.

In district No. 9 the first school was taught in a log house belonging to Bronson Greaves, in the northeast corner of section 22. This was in the winter of 1859-60, and the teacher was Lucy Smith. She is now the wife of James Snow. In 1860 a log house was built on the same quarter, and within its walls, Amy McMurtry first kept school. In 1881 a large frame house was built on the old site, in which Abbie Joslyn was the first teacher. In district No. 10 the first school was taught by Lucy Snow, in a log house belonging to J. S. Scott, located on the northeast quarter of section 2, in 1866. That same fall a school house was built on the northwest of the northeast quarter of section 2. Lucy Snow was the first teacher in the house. Bridget Kennedy is now employed as instructor in this district.

In district No. 11 the first school was taught in a log house belonging to Nathan Schoonover, in the winter of 1868-69, by Jemima McNamar. In the fall of 1869 a log school house was built on the northeast quarter of section 31, in which Florence Washburn taught the first school. In 1883 a frame house was erected on the northwest quarter of section 34, at a cost of $460.

RELIGIOUS.

The actual first time when a religious service of any character was held in this town cannot be determined. If the first party of settlers who went up Pine river in 1845 ever held any religious meeting, they have not left a record of it. Prayer meetings were occasionally held years afterward in different places, but the pioneers of Rockbridge were without Church privileges for many years, and many of its inhabitants of the present day go outside the boundary lines of the town to attend Church.

A Methodist Episcopal class was organized at the house of Henry Leatherberry on section 20, in 1854, by Rev. Buck. Henry Leatherberry and wife, John Poole and wife, John Waddel and wife, Elizabeth and Margaret Leatherberry were among the members. Henry Leatherberry was class leader. Meetings were held in private houses until the school house was built. The society continued in existence a few years when some of the members moving away, it disbanded or "died out." In 1856 the first religious service in the village of Rockbridge was held in a slab shanty. The exercises were conducted by Rev. Hughart, a Methodist divine. Ministers of different denominations preached there from time to time, but no organization was effected until 1879 when a Methodist Episcopal class was formed by Elder J. T. Bryan. The following were among the members: Lyman Hazeltine and wife and R. L. White and wife. The society has not flourished and meetings are held only occasionally. During the winter of 1857-8, Rev. Timby, a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held a religious meeting in the school house on the northwest quarter of section 29, and organized a class. Seth Butler and wife, John Waddle and wife, Israel Janney and wife, Mrs. John Poole, James Cofran and wife, and Solomon Pruner and wife were among the members. Solomon Pruner was the class leader. They were supplied by preachers from Richland Center, but during the war the organization became very nearly, if not quite, extinct.

POSTOFFICES.

Janney's postoffice was established in 1870, and Israel Janney was the first postmaster. He kept the office about one year, when upon his resignation Angus Smith received the appointment, and kept it at his residence on section 19 about three years, when at his request it was discontinued. It was on the route from Richland Center to Viroqua and mail was received three times each week.

Buck Creek postoffice was first established the same year and P. M. Clark appointed postmaster. The office was kept at his house on section 22. It was on the route from Richland Center to West Lima and mail was received every day. Two years later it was discontinued. In March, 1881, it was re-established with Mrs. Ann Clark, widow of P. M. Clark, as postmistress. She has the office at her store on section 22. There is a tri-weekly mail.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

An early birth in this town was a son (Daniel) to Amasa and Jane (Murdoek) Haskins, born in January, 1850. He is now married and lives in Buena Vista.

Reuben Hancock was among the first to die, which event occurred in July, 1854. He was buried on his farm on the northeast quarter of section 7.

The first steam saw-mill in the county was put up in this town by J. J. Shumaker & Co., in 1856, and was located on the northwest quarter of section 29. It had a number of saws, and lathes, fence pickets and lumber were manufactured. In 1857 Israel Janney purchased this mill, and sold it in 1863 to John Walworth, who two or three years later moved it to Richland Center, where it was afterward destroyed by fire.

The first wedding united the destinies of Wallace Joslyn and Emeline, daughter of Luman and Mary Thompson. This occurred in May, 1851, in the village of Rockbridge.

In 1854 a grist-mill was built by Alden Hazeltine, on the west side of the river near the natural bridge. The power was derived from the west branch of Pine river. A dam was built at the mouth of the tunnel, and a head of ten feet was thus obtained. It was furnished with one set of buhrs for grinding corn and cracking wheat. The people came to this mill for many miles around and it did a flourishing business.

VILLAGE OF ROCKBRIDGE.

This is the only village in the town and was laid out by Ira Hazeltine in June, 1851. It is located on the northwest quarter of section 10. The saw-mill and the first frame house were already built. The postoffice was established here in 1855, and D. E. Pease was the first postmaster. He kept the office in his store. He was succeeded by Alden Hazeltine, who held the office until the time of his death, when his son Lyman, the present incumbent, was commissioned. When first established it was on the route from Richland Center to Fancy Creek, and was carried horseback. At this time (1884) it is on the route from Richland Center to West Lima and has a daily mail. There is also a mail to Hillsborough three times each week.

Dester E. & D. G. Pease opened the first store in 1855; they kept a general stock and had a good trade. They continued in business three or four years, and then moved their goods to Richland Center. The village was then without a store for some years. M. H. B. Cunningham engaged in trade here in April, 1867, first keeping store in a building owned by D. G. Pease. In 1870 he put up a building 22x40 feet.

The first blacksmith was Abner Aiken, and his shop was built with poles, and his anvil placed upon a stump. He was engaged at work in the saw-mill and did not do much work in the shop. That business is now represented by George Collins and Orson Devoc.

The traveling public were for years entertained by Alden Hazeltine at his private residence. Ira Campbell opened the first hotel in 1876 and called it the Rockbridge House. In 1877 he sold to T. J. Smith who was landlord until 1879, when he left and the property fell into the hands of a party in Kansas. In 1880 Stephen Smith bought the property.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Israel Janney, one of Richland county's pioneers, was born in Loudoun Co., Va., Oct. 17, 1820. When he was but four years of age, his parents moved to Logan Co., Ohio, and there purchased 250 acres of land. They lived there but three or four years, and returned to Virginia, where they lived until 1830. They then moved to Detroit, Mich., and there his father died in 1833. His mother, with her eight children, returned to Ohio and settled upon the land which his father had previously purchased. Here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood. Taking advantage of the facilities then offered, he acquired a fair education. He was united in marriage on the 3d of December, 1840, to Elizabeth Miller, who was born at Fort McCarty, Hardin Co., Ohio, May 20, 1824. He then settled on land which he had inherited from his father's estate in Logan county. He lived there till 1846, and then came to Richland county, which was then an almost unexplored wilderness, inhabited by Indians and wild beasts. He located in township 9, range 2 east, now known as Buena Vista. He first made a claim on a quarter of section 32 or 33, of town 9 north, of range 2 east, now occupied by the cemetery, and to the west of the Matteson and Button farms, built a log house, broke and fenced about twenty-five acres. present farm. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of four children—Hugh Wiley, Matilda C., Cyrus Newton and John M. Mr. Anderson has been a member of the town board, clerk of school district, and served a number of terms as school director.

Enoch Gray, one of the early settlers of Richland county, is a native of Maine, born in Waldo county, June 2, 1835. He received a common school education. When young he learned the cooper's trade. Then he again gave his attention to farming, cleared a good place, built a good frame house and made it his home until the time of his death, which occurred in March, 1880, leaving a widow and two sons. The eldest son, James T., lives in the town of Henrietta. He was married in 1873 to Emma, daughter of Thomas C. Clark. His farm is located on section 31, in sight of the old homestead. The younger son, George Benjamin, occupies the old homestead with his mother.

They were both single men at this time and kept "old batch," in a log house with a "shake" roof, which they erected on the southeast of section 1, until 1859. That year, on the 4th of September, Daniel was married to Annie, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Robinson) Simpson, early settlers of Henrietta. Mrs. Stuart and her two daughters now occupy the homestead.

William Wiley was a pioneer at Milwaukee, having settled there as early as 1835. At that time Milwaukee was but a small settlement, and people traveled from there to Chicago on foot, carrying their provisions on their backs. He remained there until 1859, when he came to Richland county and purchased land on section 20, of the town of Rockbridge, and commenced to clear a farm. He was joined in marriage, in 1862, to Mary, daughter of Israel and Elizabeth (Miller) Janney. They lived in a log house until 1871 when he built the good frame house in which they now live. He purchased land on Fancy creek, on sections 19 and 30, in the town of Rockbridge, and adjoining land on sections 24 and 25 in the town of Marshall. He built a frame house on section 19, and unfortunately, located it too near the creek, so that when the water was high it was surrounded, and the family were obliged to leave in a boat. The house was moved to its present location on higher ground. Mr. Chisholm cleared a large tract of land and made this his home until the time of his death, Sept. 8, 1876. He was a native of Columbiana Co., Ohio, born in January, 1827. When a young man he learned the trade of stone mason, at which he worked some years.

CHAPTER XXXII.

TOWN OF SYLVAN.

The town of Sylvan lies in the western tier of Richland county's sub-divisions, and embraces the territory of congressional township 11 north, range 2 west. It is bounded on the north by the town of Forest, on the east by Marshall, on the south by Akan, and on the west by Crawford and Vernon counties. Like most of the county, the town of Sylvan has a pleasing and diversified surface, being made up of alternate ridges and valleys, both of which are very productive when brought under the dominion of the plow. The town is well watered. Mill creek runs along its eastern border, and the west branch of the same along the southern border. Elk creek rises near the center and traverses half of the town, running in a general northwesterly course. These water courses, together with the numerous rivulets and springs—and some of the latter are quite large—furnish an abundant supply of water for all farm, dairy and household purposes. Much of the town is quite heavily timbered, the principal varieties being white, burr and red oak, basswood, ash, maple, both hard and soft, and butternut. Of course, like all of Richland county, the town of Sylvan at the time of settlement was an unbroken wilderness, and the face of the earth was covered with the primeval forest of centuries growth; but the ax of the hardy pioneer soon cleared the place for his farm, and the improvements have kept pace with the rapidly increasing population.

George H. Babb, in a letter in the Observer, says of the natural scenery of the town:

“There are in some localities bold rocks cropping out from the points of hills, that have pillars of rock on them that rise to a height of twelve or fifteen feet above the level of the hill; upon which, if you take your stand, gives you a view of the surrounding country, which is delightfully picturesque.

“There is a locality known as the big rocks, on section 16, which is very singular. The ground rises gradually from the north for about thirty rods, when it abruptly breaks and forms a perpendicular wall of about 100 feet in height, then runs to the south in a gentle slope, forming quite a valley. There are, in the southern part of the town, several caves of considerable size, one of which has been explored to the distance of a third of a mile; and all are beautifully hung with stalactites, and have the floors covered with rising stalagmites of all sizes.”

They were unfortunate on the way, one of the children being run over by the wagon near Chicago and some of the oxen took sick and died. The trip consumed six weeks. When they arrived in Sylvan they lived under the wagons until a log cabin, 12x14 feet in size, was erected on section 28. Mr. Williams remained upon this place for about fifteen years, when he moved about three miles east, and purchased the mill property now owned by Oliver Guess. ## CHAPTER XXXIII.

TOWN OF WESTFORD.

The town of Westford forms the northeastern corner of Richland county, embracing the territory of township 12, range 2 east. On the north and east it is bounded by Sauk county, while the towns of Henrietta and Willow lie to the west and south. The general surface of the town, in common with the rest of the county, is of a hilly nature, although but a small share of the land is unfit for cultivation. The town is well settled with a good class of people, who are well to do, thrifty and intelligent. The town is watered by the upper Willow and in part by the Little Baraboo river and its tributaries. Both of these streams head in this town.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The honor of the first settlement in this town belongs to Allen Perkins, a native of Madison Co., N. Y. He came here from Walworth Co., Wis., in 1848, and entered a large tract of land in Westford, including the present site of the village of Cazenovia. He settled here in 1853 and erected a house on the southeastern part of section 12. In 1865 he sold all his interest in the village of Cazenovia, and moved to Missouri. In 1867 he settled in Laeledge county, that State, where it is thought he still lives engaged at farming. Allen Perkins was an honest man, and held the respect of all who knew him.

FIRST EVENTS.

One of the first marriages in the town was that of William Burman to Eliza Russell. The ceremony was performed in 1856, at the residence of the bride's parents on section 14, by Frank Jones, justice of the peace. 'Squire Jones was "new at the business," and fearing he might have made some mistake, he afterward called on the parties at their home to rectify the mistake if any had been made.

The first birth in the town was that of George Barron, son of William and Charlotte (Woodford) Barron, in January, 1857. He was killed at Otter creek, Eau Claire Co., Wis., when about sixteen years old, by a stroke of lightning.

The second marriage that took place in the town, was that of Simeon Lincoln to Jane Kline, which took place in 1857, at the residence of the bride's parents. Rev. Augustus Hall officiating.

In the earlier days it was a great hardship to go within a mile of Baraboo to mill, a distance of thirty miles, and many tell of taking six and seven days to make the trip, having such poor cattle from want of fodder, that no faster time could be made. Wild grass, and that of a poor quality, would not make cattle strong enough for hard work, and it was all the hardy pioneers had to give them.

In 1858 breadstuffs became scarce in this region. Allen Tinker and Cyrus Stowe, members of the school board, took money from the school treasury, giving their notes for the same. They then employed a man to go to Spring Green for corn, which was then selling for eighty-seven cents per bushel. This relieved the wants of the people and all was settled up satisfactory.

Dr. J. M. Flautt, a native of Ohio, was the first physician to locate in the town. He came here in 1858 and located on section 15, where he remained until during the war.

ORGANIC.

The town of Westford was organized in April, 1857, at a meeting held at Lincoln's store, in the village of Cazenovia. The following were the first officers elected: William Burman, clerk; Allen Tinker, chairman of town board of supervisors; Moses Bible and John Russell, associate supervisors; Zachary Clary, treasurer; Allen Perkins and Frank Jones, justices of the peace.

chairman, (he moved from the town and Allen Tinker was appointed) John Donahoe and Andrew Johnson; Converse Pierce, Allen Tinker, Andrew Johnson and John Frye, justices of the peace; Thomas Moody, constable; Converse Pierce, treasurer.

DUREN'S MILL

In 1868 William Duren erected a saw-mill on the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 14, on the Little Baraboo river. The mill is equipped with an up and down saw, a circular saw for cutting off, a rib saw and a felly saw, making three circular saws and a band saw. A turning lathe was also put in. The mill manufactures stock for wagons, sleighs, harrows, etc. A dirt and stone dam was thrown across the river, giving eight feet fall of water. Upon the completion of the saw-mill, Mr. Duren put in one run of stone for grinding feed.

EDUCATIONAL.

Lettie Smith was the first teacher in this building.

The first school in district No. 2 was taught in a log house belonging to John Donahoe, on section 22, in the winter of 1856-7. The teacher was George Flautt. In 1857 a log school house was built on the northeast quarter of section 22, in which James Brown taught the first school. During the war a frame house was erected upon the same site, and in this building Peter White taught the first school. A few years later this school house was moved near the church, and has since been moved to its present location on the southeast quarter of section 22.

The first school in district No. 8 was taught in Allen Perkin's log building across the stream north of Cazenovia, by William A. Perkins.

In 1869 a two story frame building was erected on the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 11, at a cost of about $1,500. This building is still in use.

About 1860 a school house was erected in district No. 5, on the northeast quarter of section 19. Kate McCarthy was one of the first teachers in this building. Several terms of school were taught in this house when the district was split up, and the territory annexed to other districts. #### RELIGIOUS.

The first mass for the German Catholic Church in Westford, was held at the house of Jacob Marts, and said by Father Gaertner, then a resident of Sauk City, who had charge of several counties in this part of Wisconsin. The first resident priest was Father Bernerd. He was succeeded by Father Beau, then came Father Metzler and finally Father Grosse, the present priest. For a time the German Catholics worshiped in the Irish Catholic Church; but in 1858 and 1859 they erected a church on section 14. In 1883 the society were making preparations to build a frame structure, with brick veneer, 40x90 feet in size, to cost about $5,000. The congregation now numbers about seventy German families.

St. Bridget's Catholic Church, of Westford. Father Sthale was the first priest to visit the Catholics that form the congregation of this church. He was here first in December, 1855, and held mass at the house of John Donahoe. He induced the people to build a church. In 1856 the erection of a log church on the northwest quarter of section 22, was commenced which was completed in 1857. Father Sthale was the first to say mass in this edifice. The log church was in use until the present edifice was completed in 1881. It was dedicated in September, of that year. Father John B. Metzler was the first to hold mass in this church, and it was mainly owing to his exertions that the new church was erected. The congregation now numbers about fifty Irish families.

Near the church is the cemetery of this congregation. Dennis Murphy, who died in April, 1856, was the first buried here. His wife was interred near him in July, following. The land originally belonged to John Donahoe, who donated five acres to the church, and the cemetery was regularly platted in 1863. It was dedicated by Father Bernard a few years later.

CAZENOVIA VILLAGE.

The land upon which the village of Cazenovia is now located was entered in 1848 by Allen Perkins. The village was surveyed in February, 1855, by Solon Rushmore, for Mr. Perkins. The first frame house upon the site was erected by Samuel Colby, in 1854. The first log house was erected by the Lincoln brothers the same year. In this building they opened the first store in the village. They remained in trade but a few years.

Richard Mann was the next to engage in trade here. He remained but a short time, when he sold out and removed to Sauk county.

Alois Fiecks bought out Mann and carried on the business alone for one year, when he sold a half interest to Sebastian Wenker. They continued in trade five months, when Wenker bought the Stowe property. This was in 1866. Mr. Wenker took his share of the stock and set up the business on his newly acquired premises. In 1877 he erected a building, 22x46 feet in size, two stories high.

The first blacksmith in the village was Cyrus Stowe, who opened a shop here in 1855. He remained here but a few years, when he removed to Sun Prairie. Allen Tinker was the next blacksmith. He opened a shop here in the spring of 1858, and is still in business.

For many years Cazenovia was without a hotel, and the traveling public were taken care of very satisfactorily by Allen Tinker. In 1875 J. W. Thompson opened the first hotel. He was landlord until March, 1876, when he sold to Mrs. Carrie M. Atkins, who is still the proprietor.

Andrew J. Stibbins was the first shoemaker to locate in Cazenovia, opening a shop here in 1855. He remained but a few years. Henry Bushman, the present shoemaker, commenced business in 1868.

The first millinery establishment here was opened in 1867 by Addie Boyd, at the house of Allen Tinker. She ran the shop but a short time. This branch of trade is now represented by Ida Nuss, who opened her shop in 1881.

Dr. J. J. Worthy, was the first resident physician at Cazenovia, locating here during the war. He remained a number of years.

INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISES.

Allen Perkins erected a saw-mill in 1853, the power being derived from the south branch of the Little Baraboo river. The mill was equipped with an "up and down saw," and for several years did a good business. The dam was built with log cribs, filled with dirt and stone. The first dam was washed out before the war. It was replaced by another dam, which soon followed the first dam down the stream. Mr. Perkins then sold the power and mill to George Jarvis.

In 1854 Allen Perkins started a grist-mill, erecting a large building and equipping it with one run of stone. Mr. Jarvis bought this mill with the other property. While Mr. Jarvis owned the mills the dam went out once; but he quickly repaired it. In 1866 Mr. Jarvis completed the present mill. The building is 30x50 feet in size, two stories high. It is furnished with two run of stone, and all the necessary machinery for the manufacture of first-class flour, while the water power is one of the best in the State. B. M. Jarvis is the present proprietor.

CAZENOVIA POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice at this place was established in 1856, with Cyrus Stowe as postmaster. He kept the office at his house. It was then a special office, and the mail carrier was paid by subscription from the citizens. Mail was received once a week from Sextonville, and later from Ironton. In 1883 mail was received three times each week from Richland Center and daily from Le Valle. Allen Tinker succeeded Mr. Stowe as postmaster. Then in succession came: M. O. Tracy, George Jarvis, Edward Kimber, J. C. Spencer, B. M. Jarvis and Wenzel J. Hanzlik. Mr. Hanzlik is the present postmaster, and keeps the office at his store. He was appointed June 28, 1883.

RELIGIOUS.

The first Methodist Episcopal preacher was Rev. Augustus Hall, who, in 1857, preached at Lincoln's store. He organized a class there with twenty-six members. Among the members were—Ludger Phoenix and wife, Allen Tinker and wife, Andrew Tinker, John Russell, Mrs. Henry Fuller, Nathaniel Camp and wife, George Perkins, George Montgomery and wife, William Y. Barron and wife, Mary J. Russell, Mary J. Tinker, W. C. Osborne and wife, Sarah J. Low, N. R. Kline and wife, Clara Perkins, Levi Lincoln and wife, and James Kinney and wife. Allen Tinker was the first class leader. Rev. Augustus Hall was the first pastor. He lived in Sauk county and had several charges in this region. The following named ministers have at different times preached for the class at Cazenovia, since Rev. Hall: Rev. E. Yocum, the first presiding elder; Revs. S. D. Bassinger, W. D. Atwater, R. M. De Lap, Mathew Bennett, M. F. Chester, W. W. Wheaton, J. T. Bryan, Mr. Conway, J. J. Walker, Mr. Dudley, George Tyacke, R. W. Nicholas and H. D. Jencks. Rev. Jencks, the present pastor, resides at Ironton and has charge of four classes: Ironton, Cazenovia, Sandusky and Washington. He holds services at Cazenovia once every two weeks. The Cazenovia class met at the school house for worship until 1878, when they erected a frame church on the southeast quarter of section 12. Rev. George Tyacke was the first minister to hold services in this building. Allen Tinker was the first leader of the class, and held that position for many years. Ludger Phoenix is the present leader. The class now has fourteen members. A Sabbath school was organized at about the same time as the class, with Allen Tinker as superintendent. The school meets every Sunday. Frank Phoenix is the present superintendent.

In 1857 a Wesleyan Methodist class was organized, at Lincoln's store, by the Rev. Mr. Wood. It had about twenty members, among whom were—Jonathan Wright and wife, Cyrus Stowe, Henry Fuller and wife, and Daniel Carr and wife. As none of the members of this class are now living in the town, a full history of it cannot be collected. The class only continued in existence a few years.

IRON INTERESTS.

In 1874 Joseph Culver, from Madison, came to Westford, secured the services of Joseph Moll, and leased land from him and also Joseph Dresen and John Cobbledick, on sections 2 and 3.

Mr. Moll was employed to prospect for iron ore, commencing first on the northwest quarter of section 2. They soon found ore sixteen feet below the surface of the earth. In the fall of 1875 a shaft was sunk on section 2, about forty-eight feet deep, and afterward several other shafts were sunk near by. In 1876 a company was formed, consisting of Joseph Culver, Gen. Lund and James Gunn. The company continued operating the mines, and piled up the ore upon the ground. The vein became larger as they progressed, and finally Culver, Lund & Gunn sold out their interests to the Iron Ridge Iron Company, of which Leonard Bean was president. This company built a furnace at Cazenovia, and during the the summer of 1877 erected a foundry. Numerous shafts were sunk on sections 2, 3, and 4, and large quantities of good ore were taken from these shafts. The Iron Ridge Iron Company carried on the business until 1879, when they stopped work, and about one year later sold the buildings to C. E. Bohn, of Ironton, who converted it into a stove factory, for which purpose the buildings are still used.

CAZENOVIA CEMETERY.

The cemetery at Cazenovia was laid out in July, 1862, by Josiah McCaskey, surveyor. It was laid out under the supervision of the town board of supervisors. The land was donated to the town by Allen Perkins. Mrs. Gad Pomeroy was the first person buried here.

The same year he came to Wisconsin and located at Janesville, where he was engaged in farming and blacksmithing until 1850, when he started for California overland, and arrived at his destination at the end of six months. He worked in the mines there until 1853. In that year he returned to New York State by the way of the isthmus of Panama, remained five months, then went again to California and resumed working in the mines, which he continued until 1855, then came back to New York, and after stopping there a short time came to Richland county and settled on section 1. In 1863 he bought a house and lot in Cazenovia and moved his family there. After making them comfortable in their new home he enlisted in company I, 3d Wisconsin Infantry, went south, joined Sherman at Chattanooga, was with him on his march to the sea and to Washington, participating with his regiment in the many important battles of that campaign. He was discharged at Madison, Wis., at the close of the war, and returned to Cazenovia. Since that time he has worked as brick mason, and plasterer also as carpenter and joiner. Mr. and Mrs. West have three children—Thomas, Warren and Birtle.

Allen Tinker, one of the pioneers of Richland county, was born in Chenanga Co., State of New York, April 2, 1815. When he was but ten years old his parents died. He made his home in the same county until sixteen years of age when he moved to Otsego county and was there married in 1835 to Betsy Montgomery who was born in that county Dec. 29, 1812. Here he engaged in farming until 1843 then worked with a blacksmith at Cannonsville, Delaware county, to learn the trade and there continued until 1849 when he emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in Jefferson county, erected a shop at Koshkonong, where he worked at his trade till 1855, when he came to Richland county and settled on section 9, township 12, range 2 east, now known as Westford with the intention of becoming a farmer. He built a blacksmith shop for his own convenience, but people came from miles around with work and he was kept busy at his trade. In February, 1857, he went to La Crosse and spent a few weeks. During his absence the town of Westford was organized and he was chosen chairman of the board. In the spring of 1858 he moved to Cazenovia built a shop and has since worked there at his trade. He has been prominent in public affairs and filled many offices of trust and honor, and is at this time justice of the peace. He has always taken a great interest in school and Church affairs, and was among the first members of the M. E. Church at this point and for many years class leader. Mr. and Mrs. Tinker are the parents of three children now living—Andrew M., Mary J. and William Henry. The oldest son, Andrew M., was born in York State, Feb. 24, 1839, and came to Wisconsin with his parents. When a young man he learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. He was married in 1859 to Mary J. Russell and settled in Cazenovia. He served during the war in the 42d regiment, company I. He now lives in Eau Claire county. Charles M. was born in York State, Oct. 4, 1845, and made his home with his parents until 1861, when he enlisted in the 3d Wisconsin, company F, and went south. He died in the service at Fort Scott, Kan., Nov. 24, 1862. William Henry was also born in York State, March 27, 1847, and was eight years old when he came to Richland county with his parents. He commenced when quite young to learn the trade of blacksmith with his father. He enlisted in March, 1865, in the 50th Wisconsin, company H, and went south. He was discharged July 25, 1865, from the hospital, where he was sick. He then returned home and resumed work at his trade, which he has since followed, excepting eight months in 1881, during which time he was in the employ of a Milwaukee firm selling groceries on the road. He was married Nov. 5, 1871, to Nellie Nichols, a native of York State. They have five children—Amasa L., William H., Fred A., Maud I. and Luella. They also have a daughter Mary J., the wife of Joshua Bible, who lives in Sank county, near Cazenovia. Allen Tinker politically belongs to the democratic party, but is not so bound by party ties, as to always vote for any candidate regardless of his personal fitness for the position, but is among those who exercise the right of suffrage intelligently, and always votes the democratic ticket, when good men are brought forward. He cannot be considered a politician in any sense, and never solicited man's vote, either for himself or other persons. Electioneering for office is a thing of which he never was guilty, although an honest public servant whenever entrusted with public office in any capacity.

Joseph Moody, an early settler in the State of Wisconsin, was born in Summit Co., Ohio, Sept. 12, 1821, where he received a common school education. When he was seventeen years old, his parents moved to Hancock county and he made his home with them until 1841, in which year he was married to Sarah Milledge, who was born in Franklin county. In 1844 he came to Wisconsin and settled in Waukesha county, purchased forty acres of land which he occupied until 1848, then he traded it for a land warrant, which he placed on land in Mt. Pleasant, Green county, which was at that time a new country. He improved a farm, which, in 1858, he traded for timber land in the town of Westford, on section 34. Here he cleared a valuable farm, planted an orchard, and is one of the few successful fruit growers in the town. He built a two story log house, a large frame barn and was engaged in raising both grain and stock. He enlisted Aug. 14, 1862, in company B, 25th regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and went to Minnesota to meet the Indians, remaining there until February, 1863, then went south and joined the 16th Army Corps. He was with Sherman on his march to the sea, and through the Carolinas to Washington, participating in the many battles of that ever memorable campaign. He was discharged with the regiment at Washington June 7, 1865, and returned home. He was an exemplary citizen and prominent in town affairs, filling many offices of trust—having served as assessor and chairman of the board. Mr. and Mrs. Moody were the parents of eight children—Sophronia, Elizabeth J., Lewis C, William B., Louisa V., James B., Thomas F. and Ephraim L. In the early part of December, 1883, Mr. Moody was stricken down with a complication of diseases, and suffered greatly from the outset, until the night of Jan. 25, 1884, when surrounded by many friends and relatives, the soul took its departure, and on the 27th, the body was conveyed to its final resting place, under the auspices of the I. O. O. F., assisted by the G. A. R.

His regiment was discharged Aug. 9, 1865, when he returned to Ironton and resumed working at his trade as moulder. He remained there until 1877, when he came to Cazenovia to take charge of a store for E. & N. G. Blakeslee. He has continued in the same business until the present time, and has built up an extensive trade. He was married on the 10th of February, 1861, to Kate M. Dressen, a native of Prussia. They are the parents of eight children—Joseph W., Annie T., Martin H., Frank W., Hattie E., Eva M., Katie M. and William A.

John Keane, town clerk of Westford, first came to Richland county in 1862, and purchased land on section 36. At that time much of the land of the town was owned by speculators, who employed him to act as agent for their sale. Being extensively acquainted, he soon disposed of considerable land, and in the meantime partly improved his own, which he sold in 1867, and purchased his present farm on section 25. Mr. Keane is a native of Ireland, born in county Clare, in December, 1829. Here his younger days were spent on a farm and in school. His father died April 22, 1883, at the age of eighty-seven. His mother is still living. The town of Westford owes much of her prosperity and early settlement to Mr. Keane, through his earnest and upright manner in selling lands and bringing in settlers.

Sebastian Wenker, merchant at Cazenovia, came to this village in December, 1865, and purchased a one-half interest in the store of A. Fix. In March, 1866, they dissolved partnership, Mr. Wenker becoming sole proprietor. He is a good business man and has been successful in building up a large trade. He still continues business here and carries a good stock of goods. He was born in Alsace, when it was a part of France, Aug. 20, 1833. He was born in the town of Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., Oct. 11, 1832, where he grew to manhood. in Green county one year, then moved to McHenry Co., Ill., where he bought a farm of 120 acres. In 1866 he sold out and came to Cazenovia, as before stated. He was married in 1855 to Ellen E. Coon, also born in Erie county. They have one child—Glen Irving. His father, Dryden Pierce, was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1805. When he was two years old his parents emigrated to York State and settled in the town of Hamburg. she was married Oct. 11, 1877, was Thornton Lee Atkins. One child—Nellie May—was born. Mr. Atkins was born in the town of Garnavillo, Clayton Co., Iowa, in 1848. His father, whose name was Elial Atkins, was a native of Vermont, settled in Dubuque, Iowa, in 1845, and moved from there in 1848 to Garnavillo. He then went to Madison, Wis., and was employed by his uncle to assist him in well drilling. He remained there two years, and then procured a set of drilling tools and returned home, since which time he has made a business of well drilling in Richland, Sauk and Juneau counties. ## CHAPTER XXXIV.

TOWN OF WILLOW.

This is a full congressional township, being 11 north, range 2 east of fourth principal meridian. It is bounded on the north by Westford, on the east by Sank county, on the south by Ithaca, and on the west by Rockbridge. It is well watered by Big and Little Willow creeks and their tributaries, which flow through the town in a southerly direction. It is principally an agricultural town, and has many good farms both in the valleys and on the ridges. There is considerable waste land on account of abrupt breaks, but in this particular it compares favorably with other portions of the county. Unfortunately the early records of the town have been lost, and a list of the officers could not be obtained. The following is a partial list: E. L. D. Moody, chairman, John Hake, side supervisor; Hiram Hitchcock, clerk; Hiram Britton and John Shaw, justices of the peace; Cyrus Stowe, treasurer; D. O. Chandler, superintendent of schools. The officers for 1883 were as follows: John R. Smyth, chairman, J. A. Mercer and C. C. McNamar, side supervisors; Antone Rollet, clerk; T. J. McNurlin, assessor; Albert Hake, treasurer; Marion Hart, Matthew White, Samuel Doolittle and J. O. Frye, justices of the peace.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Many interesting features cluster around the first settlement of a country. Among the many difficulties, privations and hardships always attending the first development, there are bright spots along the pioneer life, standing out sometimes in bold relief against a background of darkness and distress. The mutual helpfulness, almost universal kindness, and interest in each other's welfare apparent in those days, were things to be the more appreciated as time passed on. The social circle, although necessarily limited as to numbers, had not its present limit as to classification, and the disagreeable formalities of the present day were unknown. A treatise on etiquette was not a necessity in every family, and the peculiar twist of a handkerchief, or fold of a shawl, were not matters requiring especial thought and careful manipulation. Comfort and happiness were untrammelled by fashion and formalism. In such respects many in later days have had occasion to wish for the good old times.

The first settlement in the town was made in June, 1852, by John Hake, a native of York State, who came here from Rock county. Previously two of his sons had been here and entered land on the southeast quarter of section 4. This locality now bears the name of Hake Hollow. Here Mr. Hake cleared quite a farm, and lived a number of years. He died at Sextonville in December, 1883.

The next settler was Benjamin Smith, who came into the town for the first time when Mr. Hake moved here with his family. He selected land on section 23, where he still resides.

D. O. Chandler, now a prominent citizen of Richland Center, was among the earliest settlers of this town. He was a native of Erie Co., N. Y., and came here from Buffalo in 1853, and settled on section 9, where he entered 160 acres and cleared about forty. In 1859 he removed to Loyd and engaged in mercantile business until 1865, when he removed to Richland Center and engaged in the hardware business.

Another settler of 1853 was Henry Cushman, from New England. He settled in Hake Hollow, remained a short time and went to Iowa.

Jacob Fellows and Byron Telfair came the same year and settled on section 2, where they erected the first cabin in the north part of the town. They made some improvements, and in 1854 sold to Ephraim Moody. Fellows moved to Loyd and bought an interest in a saw-mill, in which place he died a few years later. Telfair was a lawyer, and a brother of Dr. Telfair, of Lone Rock. He settled in Buena Vista, enlisted in the army and contracted disease, from the effects of which he died a few years later.

The next year (1854) Russell Carpenter came from York State and settled at Loyd. He was by trade a clock-tinker, and kept boarding-house. In 1864 he removed to Sauk county, where he was living at last accounts.

Another settler of this season was Ephraim Moody, a native of Ohio. He emigrated from Green county and settled on section 2. He was a land speculator, and was elected county sheriff; removed to the county seat, where he died in 1861.

From the same county, about the same time, came August Lampher and located on the northeast quarter of section 1. In 1859 he removed to the Kickapoo. In 1861 he enlisted in the army and served until the close of the war. At last report he was in Nebraska.

Section 10 received a settler this year in the person of Dr. Hitchcock, from Greene county. He was a practicing physician and quite an elderly man. He sold out to Joseph Stout, a native of New Jersey, and in 1855 removed to Reedsburg.

During the winter of 1854-5 Alonzo Burdick came from Dane Co., N. Y., and settled on section 2. He died in 1868. His widow now lives in Viola.

west quarter of section 1. He has cleared a farm, which he still owns.

Patrick Smlth, a native of Ireland, came here in 1855 and bought land on section 23, where he lived a few years, and moved west.

Valentine Stoddard, a native of Connecticut, came here from New York State in 1854 and bought land on section 31, where he settled the following year, and still lives.

Daniel Stoddard, also a native of Connecticut, came from New York in 1854 and settled on section 30. He was an old bachelor and by profession a school teacher. He died in February, 1868. His widow still occupies the homestead.

The next year, during the month of September, Watson A. Hatch came from New York State and settled in the village of Loyd, where he now lives.

Amos Stafford also came in 1856 from Chenango Co., N. Y. He came in the fall and spent the winter in Loyd. The following spring he settled on section 26, where he lived a few years, then traded his farm for forty acres on section 15. He there built a mill, put in a turning lathe and manufactured household furniture. He was a natural mechanic, a good workman, and continued in that business some time and cleared a farm. He died here during the war.

John Rosenbaum and Aaron Bowman came from Ohio in 1856 and located on section 1, where they made a little improvement and remained a few years, then moved to Westford.

New York State furnished another settler this year in the person of Daniel Graves, who made settlement on the southeast quarter of section 10. He enlisted in the army and contracted a disease from which he died soon after his return. There is one son now living of this family who, at last accounts, was in New York State.

Edward M. Alward, a native of New Jersey, came here in 1853 and entered land on sections 18, 19 and 20. He did not settle, however, until 1857. He now lives on section 16.

Bartholomew Shea is a native of Ireland and came here in 1855 and located on the southeast quarter of section 20, where he still lives.

Samuel Fuller was from Ohio and came from Green county in 1855 and settled on section 5, where he now lives.

Ralph Ward, an Englishman, came to Willow as early as 1854 and selected a home on section 9. After a few years he removed to Iowa, but has since returned, and now lives on section 7.

Another early settler was William Butler, a half-blood Indian, formerly from Onondaga Co., N. Y. He came from Ithaca probably about 1853 and settled on the southwest quarter of section 31. He was quite an elderly man and had a white woman for a wife. He was a good farmer and quite industrious. He was, in common with all of his race, very fond of hunting, and among his exploits during one winter killed seventy deer. He cleared quite a farm and remained here a number of years. He was quite a character in his way and served in the War of 1812. He drew a pension during his declining years and lived to the mature age of ninety-nine years. He had but one child, a daughter, now dead. There are two grandsons now living in Dakota.

Another early settler was Jefferson Shaver, a native of Kentucky, and of African descent. He first came to the county in 1852 and lived in the town of Ithaca two years. In 1854 he came to the Little Willow valley. He had bought eighty acres of land, one-half of which was in the town of Willow and the other in Rock-bridge. He first built a house on the town line. His present house is on section 31, town of Willow.

David Wood arrived here in 1854 and settled on the southwest quarter of section 29, where he died. Two of his sons entered the army and sacrificed their lives in the cause of their country. The rest of the family are scattered and their whereabouts unknown.

Harvey Wells and Henry Short came in 1855 and settled in Wheat Hollow, where they improved farms. They removed to Nebraska in 1870.

Preserved Wheat came from Michigan in 1855 and located on section 28. The valley in which he lived took his name and is called Wheat hollow. About 1870 he sold out and at last accounts was in California.

A man from New York State, Henry H. Butts, came here in 1856 and located on section 23, where he still lives.

Mrs. Jane Warren came from the same State the same year and died here in 1862.

In 1855 John Drought, a native of Ireland, came. He was from Jefferson county and settled in the village of Loyd. He had purchased land on section 15, which he still occupies.

In 1855 there was a settler came here by name of John Romack. He made his selection on section 25, where he cleared a farm and lived some years. He is now dead.

The same year Joseph Stout came from New Jersey and settled on section 10. He is now dead. His sons Merritt and Jonathan now occupy the homestead.

Myrus Ramsdale, a native of Vermont, was also a settler of 1855, and selected the southwest quarter of section 10. He was a blacksmith, worked at his trade and cleared a farm. He died about 1872, and the whereabouts of his family are unknown.

Another settler of this year was Romine Shaw, a native of Alleghany Co., N. Y. He located on the northwest quarter of section 15, and remained until 1864, when he returned to York State, and now lives in Cattaraugus county.

An earlier settler was I. A. Chandler, a native of Erie county, who came probably as early as 1853, and made a claim on the southwest quarter of section 9. In 1855 he sold out and worked at his trade of carpenter at Pike's Peak. He is now in Texas.

EDUCATIONAL.

The citizens of Willow town have not been unmindful of the educational wants of the children within her borders, and have provided from time to time, necessary facilities for imparting instruction, and giving all an opportunity to receive a fair education. The town is now divided into school districts calculated to meet the wants of the people. Some changes might be made to advantage, which would better accommodate some sections, and in these matters the wants of the people being duly considered, changes will doubtless be effected in time. As early as 1857, a school was taught in a log house located on the southeast quarter of section 9, and owned by D. O. Chandler. This is called district No. 4 and Annie Fellows was the first teacher. A number of terms were taught in this building. In 1866 a log school house was built which is still in use. Margaret Larey was the first teacher in the new building. The same year a school was commenced in what is called district No. 7, and was taught by Jemima Hake in a log building belonging to John Hake, located on the southeast quarter of section 34. The same year a school building was erected, and painted a bright red after the custom of those days. It was located on the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 34. Anna Fellows was the first teacher in this building. The house has since been sold and is now used for a wagon shop in Ithaca. In 1872 the present house was built, located on the southwest of the northeast quarter of section 34, and Clara Campbell taught the first school therein. The teacher at this time (1884) is Nallie Railton. Before these schools were organized, Mr. A. Hitchcock taught in what is known as district No. 1. This was in 1855, and the house was located on block 4, of the village plat of Loyd. The same year a frame building was erected on block 3. In this house Charlotte Smith was the first teacher. In 1876 a new house was built on block 10, in which Mary Cass taught the first school. The teacher for 1884 was Lizzie Markham. That same year (1855) in what is called district No. 2 a school was taught by Harriet Smiley in a log shanty owned by E. L. D. Moody, located on the southeast quarter of section 2. The year following the first school house was built in this district and Velisa Godfrey was the first teacher within its walls. She had previously commenced a term in Mr. Moody's barn, but completed it in the school building. In 1882 a more commodious house was erected and furnished at a cost of $600. Margaret A. Anderson was the first teacher in this building. In 1884 a school was here being taught by James B. Moody. The first school taught in what is called district No. 5 was by Emily Grover in 1859, during which year the house was built, located on the southwest of the northwest quarter of section 23. This building was burned in 1867 and the present house erected on the old site. In the latter building Edward Long was the first teacher. District No. 6 was organized in 1859 and a school building erected the same year, located on the northwest quarter of section 31. Mary Worth was the first teacher. In 1880 the district sold this house to Valentine Stoddard, and built a new house on the southwest quarter of section 30, where John Stevenson was the first teacher. This building is supplied with modern furniture, and the school in 1884 was under management of Hessie Railton. In 1858 a school building was erected in district No. 10, on the southwest of the northwest quarter of section 7. It was constructed of logs, and Cordelia Wood was one of the first teachers. Afterward another log house was built on the southeast quarter of section 6 in which Jemima McNamar was the first teacher. In 1879 this house was burned and two terms of school were taught in David Wildermuth's hop house. In 1880 a neat frame house was built on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 8, in which Lillie Wood was the first teacher.

RELIGIOUS.

The spiritual wants of the people of Willow have not been altogether neglected, although many, in an early day, very much desired Church privileges beyond what they were able to obtain, and as a consequence Churches were organized, societies formed, and the attention of the people directed toward matters which appertained to their spiritual welfare. Prayer meetings and occasional services were held in some of the houses of the early settlers, and as to the date of the first meeting of such a character, there is some difference of opinion, and it is uncertain at what place or by whom the actual first meeting was held. The historian ascertained dates, and facts, so far as they could be given, and the same are hereby presented: During the winter of 1857-58, revival meetings were held at the school house in Loyd, conducted by different preachers, and quite a number of the people were converted. The ministers were of the United Brethren order, among whom were: Rev. Frederick Outcalt, James Howard and G. G. Nickey. The latter was a presiding elder. At the close of this series of meetings, a class was organized with about thirty members. The following were among the members: Amos Stafford and wife, W. A. Hatch and wife, Joseph Stout and wife, T. R. Rollins and wife, George Wright and wife, John Shaw and wife, Edward Long and wife, Levi Stafford and William Shaw. Edward Long was chosen class leader and W. A. Hatch steward. The following named preachers administered to the spiritual wants of this class: Frederick Outcalt, James Howard, Revs. Harrison, Smith, Sutton and Alderman. During the preaching of the latter meetings were discontinued.

In 1856 Rev. Kilbourne, of the M. E. Church held services in different parts of the town but did not succeed in effecting any organization. The first United Brethren society organized in this section of the county, was at the residence of Moses Bible, on section 35, town of Westford, in the spring of 1857, by Rev. Frederick Outcalt. The class contained fifteen members, among whom were the following: Moses Bible and wife, William Smelier and wife, James French and wife, John Frye and wife, John Clary and wife, William Thornburg and wife, Henry Trobough and William Carr and wife. James French was class leader. They met for worship in the Moody school house on section 2, town of Willow, for some years, but now hold meetings at the Block school house in the town of Westford. In January, 1884, they were making preparation to build a church to be located on the southeast quarter of section 2. The class now numbers about thirty members, and Ashbury Smelier is class leader. There was another organization of this denomination affected at the residence of David Wood, on section 29, in 1858, with eight members. Among the number, were: David Wood and wife, Moses Call and wife and Alpheus Smith and wife. David Wood was class leader, and during his life the organization was continued, but disbanded soon after his death. About the same time Rev. Outcalt organized another class in "Hake Hollow" with the following members: Cornelius Hake and wife, John Hake and wife, A. Vanallen and wife, George Hake and wife, and Mr. Romaek and wife. John Hake was the class leader. This society continued in existence about four years, by which time, most of the members had moved away. The Christian Church of West Willow, was organized about 1870, by Rev. William Cammick. The following were among the members: J. R. Davis and wife, Samuel Jones and wife, Enoch Gray and wife and Mary and Rachel Davis. J. R. Davis was elder and clerk. Enoch Gray was class leader. In 1881 the society purchased the school house in which it was organized, and continued to hold service in that building. Among those who have preached there are the following: A. Rogers, David Wood, John Walworth and James M. Keepers, the present pastor. George Jones clerk, and J. R. Davis deacon. They have preaching regularly once a month. In 1874 Rev. Thayer, a United Brethren preacher, organized a society at Ezra Reagles' house with five members, as follows: Ezra Reagles and wife, F. L. Smith and wife and Rosanna Beggs. Ezra Reagles was class leader and F. L. Smith steward. This society continued to hold meetings in private houses until 1877, when a log church was built, on the southwest of the southeast quarter of section 7. The following named pastors have preached to this society: Rev. Potts, McReynolds, Aldrich, Mabbitt, Young, Snell and Erwin, the present pastor. This organization has flourished, and now numbers seventy-three members. Jesse Hatch is the present class leader and Ezra Reagles steward. A Sabbath school was organized in 1875, with Harrison J. Kirkpatrick as superintendent. This school flourishes during the summer months only. In 1878 Rev. F. B. Moulton, from Ithaca came to Loyd and preached in Rollet's hall. He continued to supply the pulpit here from time to time, until 1880, without any organization. In February of that year, he held a series of protracted meetings, at which time considerable interest was manifested, and a Free-Will Baptist Church was organized with fourteen members, as follows: J. W. Burnham and wife, with three children, A. Rollet and wife, with two children, J. W. Roberts, with his wife and son, and J. W. Bryant and wife. J. W. Burnham and J. W. Bryant, were chosen deacons, and J. W. Roberts, clerk. Mr. Moulton is still pastor of the society. In connection with this Church there is a Sabbath school, of which J. C. Hatch is superintendent.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

The first birth in the town of Willow was that of Lucy Lorain Smith, a daughter to Benjamin and Phæbe (Price) Smith, born in December, 1852. She was married to Albert Tuttle, and died in Richland Center in November, 1876, leaving two children.

The first death was that of H. Z. Britton, who died at the village of Loyd in 1855, where he was buried, but has since been removed to the cemetery.

MILLS.

About 1867 Daniel W. Dodge built a saw-mill on the northwest quarter of section 34, having an "up and down" saw. The dam was built of timber and dirt. In 1871 he sold this property to Augustus Taplin, who operated it for four years, when it reverted to Mr. Dodge, and was burned the same year. He immediately rebuilt, and it is now owned by Davis & Poole. It is furnished with a muley and lathe saw, and the proprietors are doing a fair business. Earlier than this, in 1855, John Wood erected a saw-mill on section 15, on Willow creek. It was constructed on the old pattern, having an "up and down" saw. In a few years he sold this property to Mr. Sexton, who in 1868 sold it again to Samuel McCorkle, and he in turn to Robert McCorkle, who put in a circular saw. In 1879 he sold a one-half interest to his brothers, Samuel and William. The new firm built a grist-mill with two run of stone, and put in all necessary machinery for the manufacture of first-class flour.

CEMETERY.

In 1860 a cemetery was laid out in this town by the United Brethren Church society, on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2. The site had been used as a place to bury the dead previously. The first interment on these grounds consigned to the earth the remains of Edeline Clary in 1859. At that time the land was owned by James French, who a few years later deeded it to the United Brethren society.

VILLAGE OF LOYD.

This the only village in the township, and was platted in 1854 by R. B. Stewart and E. M. Sexton. Joseph Irish was the surveyor and gave the village its name. It is located on the northeast of the northwest quarter of section 22. There was at the time one log house within the limits of the plat, erected by E. M. Sexton, for the accommodation of the men at work on the saw mill, which was built by Stewart & Sexton in 1854. About two years later Stewart sold his interest in the mill to E. M. Sexton, who in turn sold to Samuel McCorkle in 1868, who tore down the old structure and built a new and better mill.

The first store in the village was opened by Nelson A. Hawks in 1855. He kept a general stock and had a good trade. He remained only about one year and removed to Sextonville. He was followed in business in Loyd by E. M. Sexton and he in turn by J. W. Lybrand. D. O. Chandler was the next to engage in trade at this place.

W. A. Hatch opened a blacksmith shop in 1856 and continued the business until 1873. Previously a Frenchman had put up a shop to make the irons for the saw-mill, which was closed about one year after the completion of the mill. This branch of business is now represented by Frederick Moyes, who commenced in April, 1876.

A man named Veard opened a blacksmith shop in 1855, and continued some years, when he removed to Fancy creek, and is now dead.

POSTOFFICE.

Loyd postoffice was first established in 1855, with H. Z. Britton as postmaster. He was succeeded by R. G. Carpenter, then W. A. Hatch was commissioned who was followed by D. O. Chandler. In 1865 Antoine Rollet was appointed and has since held the office. At first, mail was received weekly from Sextonville. Now there is a daily mail, the office being on the route from Richland Center to Cazenovia.

R. B. Stewart, a pioneer of Richland county, first settled here in 1849 when he entered land on section 19, of town 9, range two east, now included in the town of Buena Vista. He made some improvements and remained here until 1854 when he sold out and came to what is now known as the town of Willow, purchased land on section 22, and in company with E. M. Sexton platted the village of Loyd and erected a saw-mill. He operated this saw-mill two years then sold out and engaged in farming. His farm is located in Willow creek valley, on section 22, and contains 160 acres, and is well adapted to raising grain and stock, in which business he is engaged. He has erected a good frame house and barn. He was married in 1849 to Helen L. Sexton. They have four children—Laurentine, Charles, Robert and Edward M.

Daniel Murphy, son of Daniel and Elizabeth (O'Brien) Murphy, early settlers of Willow was born in county Meath, Ireland, Feb. 2, 1849. When he was eighteen months old his parents emigrated to America and located in York State for a short time and then came to Richland county, where he grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the public schools. He was married in 1874 to Nora, daughter of Bartholomew and Mary (Fahan) Shea. They have two children—Nellie and Winifred. At the time of his marriage he settled on his present old farm on sections 2 and 3, which contains 330 acres. He has given his attention to raising grain, stock and dairying. His wife has earned the reputation of being a first class butter maker.

James French was one of the pioneers of Willow, coming here in September, 1854, and entering forty acres of land on section 2, where he built a log house and commenced to clear a farm. He was successful, has since purchased more land and built a hewed log house with a frame house addition, 16x20 feet, also has a log barn 30x50 feet, and is now engaged in raising grain and stock. He was born in Greene Co., Tenn., Nov. 11, 1823, where he was married in 1842 to Margaret Lonas also born in Greene county, Sept. 29, 1823. They remained in Tennessee until Oct. 11, 1853, when the entire family consisting of six children started in one wagon drawn by one span of horses, containing themselves and household goods, to seek a new home. They went to Indiana and stopped in Clinton county until September, 1854, when they again loaded up and started for Wisconsin. They carried provisions with them and camped along the road arriving in Richland county in twenty days. His property then consisted of the team, one cow and $40 in money. For the first few years they experienced many hardships, incident to this country at that time, but by energy and industry they at last secured a comfortable home, and are now well prepared to spend their declining days in comfort. Mr. and Mrs. French were the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are now living—Stephen A., Martha, John W., Sallie C., Margaret E., James A. and Darwin P. These are all married except the youngest. Mr. and Mrs. French are both members of the United Brethren Church. Mr. French is not a member of any political party, but exercises the right of suffrage intelligently, voting for whom he considers the best man.

Jules Francois, one of the early settlers of Richland county, is a native of France, born in March, 1838. In 1853 he left his native land in company with an uncle and came to America.

They spent two or three months in Illinois, then came to Wisconsin and spent the winter in Janesville. In the spring of 1854 he came to Richland county. His uncle (J. B. Poinset) entered a large tract of land in town 11, range 2 east, now known as the town of Willow, on sections 19, 21, 22, 27 and 28. Here they built a log house and commenced to clear a farm. Mr. Poinset was a bachelor and a man of good education. He died here in 1875. The subject of our sketch was married in 1867 to Clara Sawyer, who was born in York State. They had two children—Josie and Kola. He now has a farm of 220 acres in Willow creek valley. In 1870 he erected a frame barn and in 1873 a large frame house. He has one of the best farms in the town.

John Wright, one of the pioneer settlers of Willow, first came from Ohio in 1844, and located in that part of Iowa now known as Lafayette county, where he engaged in mining until 1850, then went to Greene county, and settled on land which he had entered in 1846. Here he built a log cabin and improved a portion of the land remaining until 1855, when he sold out and came to Richland county. He purchased 500 acres of land, a part of it in Rockbridge, the remainder in Willow. He erected a log cabin on section 26, town of Willow, and has since made this his home. Here he has cleared a farm, built a frame house and barn, and is now engaged in raising stock and grain. He is a native of York State, born March 20, 1819. When he was six months old, his parents moved to Ohio, and settled in Richland county, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the district schools. In 1839 he moved to Illinois and lived in Jackson county until 1844, when he came to Wisconsin as before stated. He was married in 1863 to Rachel Smith, a native of Ohio. She died Sept. 7, 1883, leaving six children—James, Joshua, Mary, Katie, Francis and Jesse.

Valentine Stoddard, one of the pioneers of Willow, is a native of Connecticut, born in Litchfield, July 25, 1810. When he was five year old, his parents emigrated to Ontario Co., N. Y. They made the journey in the winter season and took their household goods upon a sled drawn by two pairs of oxen, and were thirty-one days upon the road, a distance of 300 miles. His father purchased a farm in the town of Richmond, and here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood. He was married in March, 1833, to Joanna Davison, a native of Ontario county, and purchased a farm in the town of Canadice, where they lived until 1855. In that year they came to Richland county and settled on section 31. He first built a log cabin and then began clearing his present farm, which is situated in Little Willow valley. He has cleared and fenced seventy-five acres, erected a large frame house and other buildings. His wife died in February, 1859, leaving eight children, six of whom are now living—Jane, now the wife of George McCrossin; George, now living in Kansas; John, Harlow and Jesse live in Richland county; Jennette, the wife of Seth Frost, lives in Michigan. Mr. Stoddard was married the second time in 1860, to Rebecca Sippy, daughter of Joseph and Martha (Cogswell) Sippy. She was married in 1850 to Robert McCloud, who died in 1852, while on his way to California. He left one child—Laura, now the wife of Monroe Slater. There is one child by the last union—Frank.

David Wildermuth was one of the early settlers in Willow, having moved here with his family in the spring of 1856. He was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, Jan. 17, 1803. He was the son of David and Elizabeth (Wagoner) Wildermuth, both natives of Pennsylvania, and early settlers in Fairfield county where they located in 1777. There were but thirteen families there before them. Here the subject of our sketch grew to manhood, receiving his education in a subscription school, as this was before the days of free schools. He was married in 1831 to Annie Newkirk, born in Fairfield county, March 3, 1814. In 1835 they started overland with horse teams for the then far west, and located in Coles Co., Ill., which was at that time on the frontier. Here he purchased land which he improved, remaining until 1845, when he again loaded up his goods, and driving to Wisconsin settled in that part of Iowa county now known as Lafayette county. He purchased land in what is now known as Fayette town. Here he engaged in farming and mining and lived until 1855, then removed to the State of Iowa remaining till the fall of that year when he returned to Fayette and lived until the spring of 1856, when he started with ox teams for Richland county, where he had entered land. He has since cleared a farm, erected buildings and now makes this his home. Mr. and Mrs. Wildermuth are the parents of six living children—Edwin C., Eli M., Clarissa, Cordia, Louisa and Daniel.

John Salisbury, one of the early settlers of Willow, was born in Summit Co., Ohio, May 11, 1828, where he was brought up on a farm, receiving his education in the public-schools. He was married the 14th of March, 1850, to Rosanna Willey also a native of Summit county, born May 10, 1828. They remained in this county until 1856, then started west to seek a home. He purchased land on the southeast quarter of section 35, built a log house in the woods, took his ax and commenced to clear a farm. In 1864 he purchased land on the southwest quarter of the same section which had been entered by Henry Cushman. He moved on to this place and occupied the log house built by Mr. Cushman until 1883, when he built the large frame house he now occupies. He has been an industrious, hard-working man, and this, combined with good judgment, has now placed him in easy circumstances. He has 280 acres of land, a good frame barn and other needed buildings for stock and farming tools. In February, 1865, he was drafted in company D, 11th Wisconsin, and went south to Montgomery, Ala. In June he was taken sick and the following month taken to the hospital. As soon as sufficiently recovered he was granted a furlough and came home. He was discharged at Madison September 29, and went to Ohio on a visit; returning soon after he resumed farming. Mr. and Mrs. Salisbury are the parents of six children—Nancy, Ida J., Laura, Adeline, Nellie and William S. Nancy died March 17, 1852, aged one year, one month and three days.

George N. Mickel first came to Richland county in 1856 and stopped at Neptune with friends a short time, then, leaving his family there, he went to Minnesota to seek a home and made a claim near Glencoe in McLeod county, erected a small house, and spent the winter there. In the spring he returned to Neptune for his family, but finding them in poor health delayed. Meanwhile, his claim in Minnesota was jumped, and he concluded to settle in Richland Center, where he engaged at Lis trade of boot and shoemaker until 1861, when he enlisted in company D, 11th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry and went south. He was twice severely wounded at the battle of Cache river, in Arkansas, July 7, 1862. He was sent to the hospital at Jefferson barracks, near St. Louis, where he slowly recovered and was honorably discharged on account of gunshot wounds Feb. 3, 1863, and returned to Richland county. As soon as he was able he engaged in mercantile business, in company with his brother, C. G. Mickel, keeping a general assortment of dry goods and groceries, boots and shoes, leather and findings. His health was poor and two or three years later he sold his interest in the business and returned to New York State, visiting friends and relatives, remaining there nearly a year, when he again returned to Richland Center, where he lived until 1881. His business meanwhile was of a speculative nature. In 1881 he purchased a farm on section 27, of the town of Willow. This place is situated in the Willow creek valley and is well improved, having a nice frame house and barn. He is a native of New York State, born in Rensselaer county, in May, 1829. His father, Andrew Mickel, was also a native of the same county, and was a volunteer in the War of 1812. When the subject of this sketch was twelve years old his parents, with their family of twelve children, six boys and six girls, moved to Lewis county, which, at that time, was but sparsely settled, the nearest school house being three miles. Here his father died and two years later his mother again married. He then started out for himself. Going to Collinsville he engaged with Dean Hoodly to work for his board and schooling. Here he remained one year, then went to Forestville, Chautauqua county, where he engaged with Dr. Sexton as clerk in his store, remained there one year, then worked with William Gardner, a boot and shoemaker, to learn the trade and remained with him two years, then returned to Lewis county and worked at his trade. In 1852 he opened a shop in Peach Orchard, Tompkins county, remaining in business there until 1854, when he sold out and removed to Illinois, spent two years in Livingston county, and from there came to Richland county, as before stated. He was married in 1853 to Maria Hodges. They have had five children—Adella, Edwin, Burt, Minnie and Gracie.

Edward M. Alwood, one of the early settlers of Willow, was born in Morris Co., N. J., in 1821. Here his younger days were spent in school and on the farm. While yet quite young he took charge of a boat on the Morris canal and engaged in freighting between the Lehigh coal mines and New York city and continued this business for some years. In 1853 he came to Wisconsin and entered land in township 11, range 2 east, now known as the town of Willow. However, he did not settle here until 1857, when he erected a log house and stables. He has since built a large frame barn and in 1883 erected a two and one-half story frame house of commodious dimensions and good appearance. His farm now contains 440 acres. He formerly engaged in raising hops, but of late years has turned his attention to grain and stock. He was married in 1860 to Mary Stout. They have two children—Henry and Sarah.

Samuel Cline, one of the early settlers of Willow, was born in Marion Co., Ohio, May 22, 1825. When he was eleven years of age, his parents moved to Indiana when they were early settlers of Cass county. Here the subject of this sketch began his pioneer life. The family remained in Cass county four years, then moved to Illinois and settled in Coles county where they were again among the pioneers. He remained with his parents for a short time, then returned to Indiana, and was there married, in 1847, to Celia A. Gates, a native of Ohio, Darke county. They remained in Indiana until 1854, when they came to Wisconsin and spent two years in La Fayette county, coming to Richland county in 1856. He purchased land on section 6, of township 11, range 2 east, in the present town of Willow, and immediately began clearing a farm. He lived in a log house until 1870, when he built the frame house he now occupies. Eleven children have been born to them, of whom three are living—Edward, Henry and Stephen.

William Murray, another early settler of Willow, was born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, Sept. 22, 1827. When a young man he engaged to learn the trade of stone mason, he served three years, then worked as journeyman one year, then in 1852 came to America and lived in Connecticut, New York and New Jersey until 1855, then came to Madison and worked at his trade until 1858 at which time he settled on his present farm on section 31, town of Westford and and section 6, town of Willow. This land he had entered in 1855. He first built a log house on section 31, where he lived until 1868 when he erected a neat frame house on section 6. He is now quite an extensive farmer, raising grain and stock. He was married in 1855 to Jane D. Rea, from Forfershire Scotland. They have eight children—John, William, Ella, Nora, Charles, George, Frank and Myron.

Ezra Reagles purchased the land on which he now lives, in 1857. He did not settle on it however, until 1861. He then built a log cabin 12x14, with a dirt and stick chimney on the outside. This humble abode was his home until 1868, when he built a small frame house, to which, three years later, he built a large addition. He is a native of Ohio, born in Medina county, in 1834. When he was six years of age, his parents moved to Indiana and first lived at Wolf Lake then in Kosciusko county, and afterward in Wabash county. Here he was married in 1861, to Susline Mayewinkle, and two weeks later came to Richland county. Mrs. Reagles died in March, 1877. He was again married March 18, 1878, to Mary E. Lewis, a native of Pennsylvania. They have three children—Clyde A., Mary O., Tartar A.; also an adopted son, Hiram E.

John R. Smyth, the present chairman of the board of supervisors of the town of Willow, settled here in 1863, purchasing at that time his present farm on section 23. It had upon it then about twenty acres of cleared land and a small frame house. He now has 120 acres under improvement, has built two large frame barns and a commodious frame house. He has engaged in raising both stock and grain. His farm is one of the best in the town. He is a native of Ireland, born in county Cavan, Nov. 12, 1830. His family were believers in the Episcopal faith. His younger days were spent in school and on the farm. In 1849 he left his native land and came to America, located in Washington Co., N. Y., town of Argyle, and lived there two years, employed in farming summers and in attending school winters. He then went to Hadley, Saratoga county, and worked upon a farm summers, and at lumbering winters, until the year 1863, when he came to Willow. He has taken a lively interest in town and county affairs, and has served several terms as chairman of the town board. He has also been treasurer in the school district several years. He was married Nov. 27, 1860, to Eliza Brien. They have six children—William H.,

Maggie A., Joseph L., John R., Edward J. and Dora N.

Edward Markham first came to Richland county in 1868. He was directly from England, where he had been engaged in a bakery, and knew nothing about farming. He first rented land in the town of Rockbridge three years, then purchased forty acres in the town of Richland. Two years later he traded this land for his present farm on section 34, town of Willow, where he has since made his home. He was born in Buckinghamshire, England, Nov. 6, 1834. When quite young, his parents moved to Bedfordshire, where he was brought up and educated in the public schools. At thirteen years of age he was apprenticed to a baker to learn the trade and served seven years. He then established himself in that business, in the town of Ampthill, remaining there until 1868, when he sold the business and rented the premises, came to America and settled in Richland county, as before stated. He was married in 1863 to Lucy Brightman. She was born in Bedfordshire. They have had six children—Henry, Lizzie, Charles, Arthur, James and Kittie. Henry, the first born, died when fourteen months old.

James Johnston was a soldier in the Union Army. He enlisted Dec. 23, 1863, in the 1st Wisconsin Cavalry, company E, and went to Nashville, Tenn., and from there to east Tennessee, where he joined Sherman's command in February, 1864, and started with him on his march through Georgia, participating in many important engagements on the way to Atlanta. In a charge at Burnt Hickory, Ga., May 26, 1864, his horse was shot from under him and he was himself severely wounded, a rifle ball having passed through his right lung. He was in the field hospital for a time, and was then taken to Marietta, Ga., and from there to Nashville, Tenn., from there to Joe Holt hospital at Jefferson, Ind.; from there to Prairie du Chien, Wis., where, under skillful treatment, he partially recovered and was advised by the physicians to join the invalid corps. This he declined to do, and went to the front and joined his regiment, although not sufficiently recovered to do active duty. He was with the command on the Wilson raid to Macon, Ga., and was discharged with the regiment July 19, 1865, and returned to his home in Sauk county. July, 1865, he purchased his present farm, which was then but little improved. He has since cleared quite a tract of land, erected a fine frame house, granary and log barn, and now has a comfortable home. He was born in the province of Ontario, Canada, Oct. 14, 1842. When he was very young his parents came to the United States and lived in York State two years, then came to Dane Co., Wis., remained there two years, thence to Rock county. In 1856 they went to Sauk county and settled near the county line of Richland county, and here he remained with his parents until the time of his enlistment. He returned to the parental roof at the time of his discharge, making it his home until the time of settlement in Willow. He was married in 1871 to Julia A. Wright, a native of Ohio. They have three children—William H., Florence, Adelle and James F.

John Leiber settled on his present farm in 1872. It is located on section 32. He is a native of Germany, born Nov. 10, 1829. He attended school until fifteen years of age, and then worked upon a farm. At the age of twenty-one he came to America and engaged as helper in a blacksmith shop in New York city, remaining there until 1853, when he went to St. Louis and lived one year, and from there to Chicago, where he engaged as blacksmith in the Illinois Central railroad shops, and has continued in that employment the greater part of the time ever since. He was married in 1855 to Elizabeth Perry, a native of Chillicothe, Ohio. She was first married, at the age of eighteen, to Thomas Dye, who died in 1852, leaving two children—Charles W. and Julia N. Mr. and Mrs. Leiber have eight children—Thomas Henry, Fredolin, Joseph A., Frances, Elizabeth H., Augusta J., Christina F. and John W. Since purchasing the farm, Mr. Leiber has continued to work in Chicago, leaving his family in charge, his eldest son taking the lead in managing the farm. They have erected good frame buildings, and have engaged in raising stock and grain.

Benjamin B. Brownell first came to Richland county in 1855, and entered land on section 3, town 11, range 2 east, now known as the town of Willow. He, however, did not settle here until 1872. He has since cleared thirty-five acres of land, built a two-story hewed-log house, a good stable and other out buildings. He was born in Monroe Co., N. Y., Feb. 24, 1831. When he was two years old his parents moved to Wyoming county, where his father died when he was eight years old. He remained with his mother four years, and then went to live with a neighbor, who agreed to board, clothe and school him in consideration of the work he could do. He remained there four years, and then came to Wisconsin with a friend who lived in Green county. He had no money, but his friend paid his expenses, he agreeing to work for him to pay it back. The second summer he worked at farming for $10.25 per month, and out of his wages saved enough to enter forty acres of land. He remained in the west four years, three of which were spent in Wisconsin and one in Illinois. He then returned to New York, remained two years, after which he returned to Green county and rented his brother's farm one year. He next went to the pines and engaged in lumbering two winters, and building rafts on the river in the summer. In 1859 he started for Pike's Peak, but was taken sick at Leavenworth, Kansas, and came back to Green county and resumed farming. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the 31st Wisconsin, company F. The regiment went to Kentucky, where they performed garrison duty at Fort Halleck. In July, 1863, they were sent to Tennessee, to guard the railroad from Nashville to Tullahoma, where they remained till July, 1864, then joined Sherman at Marietta, Ga., and were with him on his grand march to the sea and through the Carolinas participating in the many important battles of that noted campaign. He was discharged with the regiment in July, 1865, and returned to Green county, rented land and lived until 1872, when he came to Willow. He was married, Jan. 6, 1860, to Sallie Brayton, who was born in La Porte Co., Ind. Two children have been born to them—Frank E. and Mary P.

Jehiel W. Roberts settled in Willow town in November, 1875. He purchased timber land on sections 14 and 15, where he built a good log house and has cleared quite a tract of land. He was born in the town of Locke, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Jan. 2, 1815. He was there brought up on a farm, securing his education in the district school. At sixteen years of age, he was converted, and one year later joined the regular Baptist Church. When he was twenty years old, he commenced to learn the cooper's trade, and a few years later went to Steuben county in the same State. He was there married, May 18, 1841, to Sarah Ann Smith, born in Steuben county, Nov. 29, 1820. From there they moved to Otsego Co., N. Y., where they lived two years, thence to Delaware county, remaining there until 1853, thence to Wisconsin and settled in Koshkonong, Jefferson county, where the husband engaged in farming and worked at his trade. He there received license to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He remained in Jefferson county until 1875, when he came to Willow as before stated. At this time there was a M. E. class at Loyd, which he joined. When the greater part of the members had moved away, this organization became extinct, and he joined the Free Will Baptist Church at Ithaca, and was there licensed as a preacher in that denomination, Nov. 15, 1879. When afterward an organization of this character was effected at Loyd he took letters from Ithaca and became a member there. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have six children—Edwin, Albert, Charles, Melissa, Wesley and George C.

John W. Willis settled on his present farm in 1879. It is located on section 13, of the town of Willow, and contains 160 acres, eighty of which are cleared and in a good state of cultivation. It was formerly occupied by Rev. Timby, and is considered one of the choice farms of the town. He is native of Missouri, born in Lincoln county, May 8, 1830. In 1839 his father, James Willis, with his family, consisting of a wife and five children, came to Wisconsin and settled in Grant county, where they were among the pioneers. Here the subject of this sketch spent his younger days assisting his father in clearing a farm. He was married in 1850 to Mary Jordan, a native of Posey Co., Ind. One year later, his father died and he took charge of the farm. In 1879 he sold his interest there and came to Richland county and located as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Willis are the parents of eight children—Mahala, Armilda and Serilda, twins, Castela, George M., Abraham, Melissa and John W.

CHAPTER XXXV.

EARLY EVENTS IN RICHLAND COUNTY.

BY JAMES H. WAGGONER.

A fervent "God bless you!" rings in my ears, and I again witness a leave-taking of thirty years ago, as I essay, hastily, to recall incidents and events of the intervening period for the selection of a few for the History of Richland County. It was near the close of a beautiful day in June, at the home of my grandfather, in eastern Ohio—where my father was born and reared to man's estate. Good-bye had been said to brothers and sisters and other relatives, and to the companions and friends of youth and manhood. The last good-bye of a dutiful son to an aged and honored father was to be said and the final farewell of the father to be uttered. As they lingered at the gate, with uncovered heads, hand clasped in hand for the last time, the silver locks and benign countenance of the elder and the reverent deference of the younger conspired with the glorious sunset and the beautiful surroundings of a happy and comfortable home to make a picture which none could witness and forget. To my boyish mind, and to my senses of maturer years, it expressed the full measure of paternal and filial affection, subordinated to implicit trust in the Most High.

BIOGRAPHY.

Caleb Waggoner, the fifth son and one of twelve children of William and Sarah Jackson Waggoner, was born September 18, 1813. His father was a pioneer in Jefferson county, Ohio. The patent for the land, then covered with giant oaks, of which he and his sons in due time made a valuable farm and attractive home, was executed by President Madison, under date of May 8, 1806. There were no schools in my father's childhood and only winter evening schools maintained in his advanced youth, and of books there were few; but he acquired a practical knowledge of the rudiments, which served him well in a long and useful life. When he attained his majority he had mastered the trade of wagonmaker, which was then more intricate and important than now, as every considerable village sustained a wagon and carriage factory, with a master mechanic at its head. He subsequently learned also the trade of watchmaker and jeweler.

In 1837, Feb. 9th, he married Nancy Jenkins, daughter of Solomon and Sarah Jackson Jenkins, also pioneers, and who still survive him. They made a home in East Springfield, erecting a dwelling house which yet stands as a land mark of the village, and for some years my father successfully conducted a wagon and carriage factory. Many of the older residents in that vicinity now proudly exhibit the work which came from his shop. Failing health however obliged him to relinquish his chosen vocation, and for a time before coming west he was engaged in merchandising in the village of Salem, a few miles from Springfield.

In the winter of 1853-4, a younger brother, who had been one of a small party to penetrate the wilds of Wisconsin to purchase government lands, returned, with glowing accounts of the western El Dorado. The glittering prospect was alluring to a man with growing family, for which he cherished fond hopes. My father at once bought of his brother one of the two tracts of land in Richland county purchased by the latter, and a few months later looked over his new possession and bought more land and several village lots in the then new plat of Richland Center. On July 2, 1854, about a week after the incident depicted in the opening paragraph of this article—he returned to the Center, with his family and personal effects, and from that day until he was summoned to the Beyond, of which he entertained cheering hopes and joyful expectations, it was his home. Of his participation in the earlier and rapid development of the village and county, more will be said elsewhere.

My father was not a man who could seem to be what he was not—not a man who could be plausible in defiance of his convictions. While he was ambitious of the approbation of others, he could not subordinate the promptings of right or duty to the acquirement of favor or regard. Perhaps he was sometimes over-jealous of his convictions or too tenacious of the right; but if a fault, it is rare enough to be regarded as a virtue. It however served to disqualify him for that public recognition which waits upon fortuitous circumstances and happy combinations and defeated his aspirations—two or three times expressed—to become county treasurer. Nevertheless, he was frequently assured of the esteem of his neighbors—in both his old and new homes—by being called to the discharge of the duties of the town and village offices, such as supervisor, assessor, justice of the peace, trustee, etc.

In domestic life, he was a model of tenderness and consideration, and in social and business relations an exemplar of integrity and honesty. For half a century, he was a consistent professor of religion, most of that period a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, and for nearly thirty years one of its ruling elders. His active interest and participation in the affairs of the Presbyterian Church of the Center dates back to its organization and the erection of the neat little edifice which stands as a monument to the zeal and liberality of its handful of founders. His diffidence and abhorrence of ostentation sometimes put him at disadvantage, but he never faltered in his aim to do unto others as he would be done by. I contemplate his whole life with reverential pride and profound satisfaction.

On the 13th of September, 1883, in company with his son William and the latter's little daughter Rena, he set out for a second visit to the relatives and friends still living in Ohio, and particularly to participate in a family reunion at the old homestead on the 19th of that month. There were present on that occasion seventy-five of blood kindred, of whom five were his brothers and four his sisters—the youngest of them being 54 and the oldest 78. My brother William and daughter and myself and wife and two daughters were among those so highly favored.

It was while he was yet enjoying the sweet communion with relatives and friends, but with the purpose of returning home the week following, that he was unexpectedly stricken down. He died at the home of a brother, Dr. Joseph Waggoner, in Ravenna, on the night of the 15th of October, with expressions of love for all and firm reliance in the promises of his Redeemer. He had passed the allotted three score years and ten by twenty-seven days—the last anniversary of his birthday having occurred the day before the ever-memorable family reunion. His son, William, was also present at his death, and nothing of which medical skill or fraternal affection was capable was wanting to prolong his days or contribute to the peacefulness of the flight of his spirit. On the evening of the following Thursday, as the sun was going down, his body was laid at rest in the Richland Center cemetery, which he had been active in providing for such sad uses, after appropriate obsequies, conducted by the pastor of the Church in the Center to which he had sustained much the same relations as did his father before him to that which for so many years stood in the churchyard where his body was laid at rest soon after the removal of my father to Wisconsin, and which we together visited only three short weeks before he was called to his eternal home.

COMING WEST—RICHLAND CENTER IN 1854 AND AFTERWARDS.

THE PREPARATION AND THE JOURNEY.

The families of the pioneers in Richland county know what it was to "come west." Every member was an active participant in the preparation. The experience was almost universally the same. Sacrifices of property were cheerfully made; the auctioneer was permitted to sell, at any price, articles of greatest value in the new home, and persistently watched lest he should "knock down" a ponderous bureau or high-post bedstead; every available helper was employed in packing the reserved household effects, and the anguish of parting with aged parents and loved friends was assuaged by the bright expectations for the future.

The journey from Salineville, Ohio, to Richland Center, in 1854, was tedious and tiresome for my father and mother, with their four children—the youngest a babe and the oldest fourteen years of age. The railway was exchanged for the steamboat at Cleveland and resumed at Detroit, to be again exchanged at Chicago and again resumed at Milwaukee. A very rough track was then laid between Milwaukee and Madison, and from Madison the journey was concluded by livery. The midnight ride over the insidious corduroy, at Madison, between the depot and the old United States Hotel, at the east corner of the capitol park, was a new experience, and sufficiently aroused us all to pass the remainder of the night in vigorous defense against a new found enemy—the mosquito.

The journey from Madison afforded a succession of surprises. Wild as were the sights at the outset, they were tame in comparison with those nearer the Center. The rude log houses and the breaking-plows to which four yokes of stags were hitched—the latter urged on by honest yeomen well up in the vernacular of "Big Jack Small"—were as evidences of advanced civilization, in comparison with the blazed and little-trodden track through the dense forest between Sextonville and the Center.

ARRIVAL AT THE CENTER.

The sun was receding from sight, behind the bluff which marks the western limit of the village, and the valley—with its half-dozen houses and profusion of hazel-brush and scattering diminutive oaks and poplars "arrayed in living green"—was a beautiful and impressive prospect. But there was an other sight in store for us, which surprised us most. It was Sunday evening, and we had left a land not only rich in its products and abounding with creature comforts, but had parted from a people indoctrinated in religious precepts, among whom reverence for the Sabbath was a cardinal virtue. Here was gathered all of the available force of the new settlement—a score of men, half a dozen yokes of stags, and a joiner's kit—employed in the construction and erection of a Liberty Pole, the first to bear our country's flag, two days later, on the seventy-eighth anniversary of American independence, in the political capital of Richland county.

AS IT WAS ON JULY 2, 1854.

A dozen structures in all greeted the eyes of the new comers. They were the two public houses, (one the original part of the American House which was destroyed by fire in 1874, and the other the original part of the now larger Peck's Hotel, the former then kept by Ira S. Haseltine and the latter by Hascal Haseltine); the little store and dwelling of S. H. Austin, near the site of the brick dwelling yet known as the Austin House, now one of Mr. Walworth's collection of tenement buildings across the street; part of the flouring mill, now used for other purposes, on the original or main channel of Pine river, and a frame made to serve the purposes of a saw-mill, close beside it; a rude blacksmith shop nearly opposite Austin's store and a small dwelling on the east side of the same block (that in which the Krouskop buildings stand), belonging to Ralph Neff; the main part of the present Tom & Jerry store, then near the present site of Pier's wagon shop, used for county purposes; the log house not long since removed by H. T. Bailey, stood nearly in front of his new dwelling, then occupied by David Stickland; a smaller log house on the site of Mrs. M. C. Pease's residence, occupied by a hunter, by the name of Wilson, whose two children, after his death, some years later, were adopted by Albert S. Neff; the little cottage at the foot of the East bluff, until within a few years undisturbed, occupied by Dr. L. D. Gage as a residence, and from which he also distributed Uncle Sam's mails and dispensed physic; a smaller dwelling in the southwest, the home of Sidney Rose; and the dwelling opposite Hascal Haseltine's public house (lately moved a little south of its original site by Dr. Mitchell), owned and occupied by a Mr. Sheldon, a brother-in-law of the Haseltines.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

When my father had decided to locate at the Center, he contracted with one Albert Standard to construct the building but recently removed by H. T. Bailey to make way for his new store. It was to have been completed before our arrival, but part of the material only was on the ground. Father at once brought to the aid of the contractor, in the capacities, respectively, of excavator, mason and joiner and plasterer, that never-to-be-forgotten patriot and politician of Irish birth, Cornelius McCarthy; R. C. Hawkins, whose pre-emption claim of a quarter-section east of the village father had bought; and Robert Akan, so long the owner of the fertile quarter-section at the mouth of Brush creek, and who was elected to the Legislature of 1856,—and the new home was soon made ready for occupancy. A couple of years later father bought the improvement begun at the foot of the bluff by D. B. Priest, and completed it; and it was ever afterward his home, and is yet the home of my mother. The building first erected by him underwent little change, except from natural wear and decay, during the twenty-nine years it stood where Bailey's store now is.

An incident in house-furnishing in 1854 will illustrate the inconveniences of that period: The Casses, at the mills which soon afterward became the property of the Bowen's, and which bear the name of the latter, manufactured plain wood-bottom chairs. Father, William, Edwin and myself made the expedition on foot, returning with as many chairs as we could well carry. The rests were frequent, and particularly agreeable under the shade of the little trees in the vicinity of the Catholic Church site.

RAPID GROWTH OF THE CENTER.

Until the effect of the financial depression of 1857 became general, the population of "the little nest among the hills," as Amos Nudd described the Center, was rapidly increased by immigration, and its growth in buildings kept pace with the increase of population. Conspicuous among the settlers of that period were D. B. Priest, James H. Miner, Amos Nudd, B. J. Tenney, George H. James, Alonzo G. James, Rev. J. H. Mathers, W. H. and A. L. Wilson, William Hill, A. S. Neff, Israel Sanderson, Daniel Rice, John S. Wilson, G. N. Matteson, A. C. Eastland, W. H. Downs, C. W. Huntington, L. Dillingham, Charles Nelson, Patrick Meehan, James Holden, James Moroney, J. S. Thompson, and others. Each filled a place and performed a part in the growth and development of the village.

C. WAGGONER AS A PIONEER.

It was in the earlier days of the Center that my father erected, besides the dwelling houses already mentioned, the two store buildings on what is now known as the Hill corner, the smaller of which he occupied for several years for merchandising. He was also one of the largest contributors, if not the largest, to the erection of the neat little edifice of the Presbyterian Church, which yet stands as a monument to the religious zeal and pecuniary generosity of the handful of Presbyterians who had become residents of the village as early as 1855-6. He was also actively identified with the efforts which resulted in the erection of the White School House—the crowning event of that period.

On leaving Ohio, it was his purpose to engage permanently in merchandising. With that view, the building he first erected was planned, and he forwarded a good assortment of dry-goods and notions for the trade of the new settlement. But my mother strenuously opposed that purpose, not without reason, and after disposing of the first stock, he bought and sold real estate for a time. As a merchant, in Ohio, he had been more generous to others than just to himself. A larger number of guests were seated at our tables than at the tables of the village hotel—a circumstance which imposed heavy burdens upon my mother, besides absorbing the profits of trade. He bought and sold lands at small margins, and helped many of the settlers north of the Center to the best selections. I well remember the advent of the Wagners, of Horse creek, between whom and my father's family—partly on account of the similarity of the names—perpetual good will has existed. They soon admitted into their name the additional letters, g-o, making it Waggoner, probably because it was so spelled by those who had become more familiar with father's name. I also remember the "flittings" of Elijah Barto, Moses West, and others, of whose services in the development of the county I would gladly make mention, but forbear, for want of time, and because others will probably discharge that duty. I must however remark that Moses West seemed to me so small in stature that I wondered what he could do with the monster trees that covered the eighty on which he settled.

The hard times of 1857 caught my father with a large amount of real estate—unimproved lands and village lots—bought at the advanced prices made by the boom of the few years previous, from the effect of which he never fully recovered. With no productive property and little income from any source, he experienced for some years all that was meant by hard times. Money was scarce, taxes were high, and there was almost universal despondency. When buyers could be found at all, he sold from time to time tracts of land to pay taxes on what he had left until his holdings were materially lessened and of no greater relative value than when the hard times set in. In that crisis, the prudent and excellent management of household affairs by my mother was invaluable, and served to tide us over to better times.

AN HISTORIC BUILDING.

One of the first of the buildings erected after our arrival was that known as the Pease & Baker store. It was put up near the middle of the west side of the same block, by J. S. Thompson, and was the model for subsequent improvements. It was christened by a 4th of July ball, which was attended by a large number of the pioneers of the county, many of whom are yet living to enjoy the comforts obtained by the labor of their own hands. As I remember it, it was a fascinating and much enjoyed social party.

The next remarkable incident associated with it was a county convention of the republican party, over which the now venerable, but then as white-haired, 'Squire Dixon presided. The struggle for the party favors was protracted until midnight, and every boy in the village, as well as his father, was awakened to deep anxiety concerning its labors. That convention made politicians of many persons who were thereafter more or less prominent in the politics of the county.

A little later one J. J. Shoemaker opened in it—using every available nook and corner—a large and attractive stock of merchandise. His also was the genius which sent a steam saw-mill north of the Center, to a point he called Marysville, afterwards Janney's Mills, on Fancy creek. But J. J. Shoemaker was too large for the occasion, so to speak. His career was brief—too brief for his creditors, but profitable, it was thought, for himself. He "vanished" between two days, and the Richland Center eye hath not since seen or its ear since heard of him. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good." The wind which brought J. J. Shoemaker to Richland was probably not exceptional; yet no regret has been expressed that small shadows only of the genius he displayed have since darkened the horizon of the village. One of these appeared soon after his departure, and may be mentioned in this connection. That was Sam McCulloch, who figured as a grocer and dazzled the eyes of the girls. (Criminated by the "stubs" which he coaxed from George Lybrand, he was a stunner, and possibly the girls obliged him to neglect his business so that the sheriff soon took charge of it for him. He "kept store" in the front room of G. H. James' house.

TWO SCHOOL HOUSES.

The first public school was kept in the upright part of the present dwelling of Alfred S. Fries, and was taught by a niece of I. S. Haseltine. The room—neither lathed nor plastered—was used for Sunday schools, religious services, and other public gatherings. Not a few stormy discussions over religious differences, or the policy of the new community respecting affairs of Church, took place there; and it is possible that differences which divided the people for years afterwards were first manifested there.

The second school house was the upright also—and also without lath or plaster—of the present dwelling of Mrs. Maria Lawrence. Judge Miner, then a new-comer, at the threshold of his useful and honorable career in Richland county, was the teacher of the school of the winter of 1855-6. The room was crowded to its utmost capacity with restless, fun-loving boys and girls—the future men and women of the village and county. That winter was cold, and piles of wood were required to make the room habitable. The James boys and the Waggoner boys, Henry Wood and his sister, the children of Ira Haseltine, P. E. Brewer, "Jimmy" Moroney and "Johnny" Agin, the Huntington girls and the Nelson girls, and Leroy and Josie Gage, "Melick" Hankins and Matt. Neff, and others, were there, with less interest in their books, perhaps, than in the frolics natural to the surroundings. But the teacher skillfully banded the incongruous elements and obliged each to drink from the fountains of knowledge. There were occasional rebellions, led by a daring captain—"a little but old-looking fellow," with irrepressible tenacity of purpose; not wicked, but persistently mischievous, often with painful results to others. Oft repeated entreaty and mild persuasion having failed, the schoolmaster at length summoned to his aid a bunch of well selected hazel brush, with the announcement that all should be sacrificed in the interest of good order. The belligerent bade defiance, and made fight; but he succumbed ere the bunch was half used up, and became one of the most obedient of the school. That use of the rod was timely and salutary. Thereafter it was much easier to control that school.

The upper floor, besides being used as a school room the next summer, was the lodge room of the Masons, faithfully patronized by William Short, Dr. Gage, W. F. Crawford, Miner, Priest, "Indian" Butler, and other old settlers.

The first floor was used for public meetings of all kinds. There Perry A. Dayton first revealed to the young ideas the beauties of his magic-lantern and discoursed to an awe-stricken throng upon the mysteries of the solar-system, by the aid of his well-worn planetarium. There the itinerant phrenologist examined heads and taught that the man as he should be could be made from the boy. There, too, the entertaining teacher of music chalked the long and short notes on the blackboard and taught the receptive mind "John Brown had a little Injun," "Scotland's burning, etc.

Perhaps the most noteworthy of the notable events of that epoch, within those weather-boarded walls, was a lecture on woman's rights by Lucy Stone Blackwell, who was accompanied by her husband. Next in importance was a "lecture," one Sunday, by a colored man, for his oppressed race. Richland Center was positively anti-slavery in sentiment, and the colored man received a cordial welcome. Amos Nudd chaperoned him, and at the appointed hour tenderly introduced him to the waiting audience. That advance-guard of emancipation took a text from the Bible—"Faith, hope and charity; but the greatest of these is charity." He bounded like a quarter-horse over Faith, revelled a moment only in the realms of Hope, to find—with the apostle—that "the greatest of these is Charity," of which he himself was in particular and distressing need. Priest and Rice and Crawford "caught on," as the boys now say, and passed their hats, collecting a small amount for the crafty Ethiopian. His "lecture" was thus closed in less than five minutes, but he had accomplished his object, and the audience laughed heartily over the sell.

THE WHITE SCHOOL-HOUSE.

The "children of school ages" had outgrown the little red school house before another was provided. A protracted struggle preceded the erection of the White School-House—at the time regarded by some as many years in advance of the necessities of the village. The champions of the movement were Messrs. Priest, Miner, my father, Rice, and the James's, with Priest as chief spokesman. Several meetings were held and the forces on both sides were skillfully manipulated. Each successive meeting was an interesting and exciting debating-school, in which wit and humor, sarcasm and invective, were permitted full play. But the end came, and a little later the new school house, which proved to be none too large.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first church edifice erected in the Center was that unobtrusive little one still used by the Presbyterian society. The Rev. J. H. Mathers, a home missionary of that society, had been preaching in the hall belonging to Hascal Haseltine, and there organized the Richland Center Church, in the winter of 1855-56. The church building was erected the following summer, at a cost of about $900, contributed in material, labor and money. The Wilsons and Mr. Hill did the carpenter work, and they and my father were among the largest contributors—half a dozen in all bearing fully half the expense. Mr. Mathers was also a liberal contributor of money as well as of time. He preached also to congregations at Richland City and on Fancy Creek.

A FEW PERSONALS.

None of the early settlers are more kindly remembered than the young Presbyterian minister and his much esteemed wife, and their return to Pennsylvania, ten years later, was deeply regretted by a circle of friends co-extensive with the boundaries of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Mathers were essential to the enjoyment of every social festivity, and Elder Mathers was an important factor in every public gathering. He was the first county superintendent of schools, and first and foremost in almost every public enterprise. His horse "Sam" was known all over the county, and respected for his own good qualities and those of his owner.

A writer of history is not permitted to speak of the living and present in terms of praise, but I will transgress the unwritten law so much as to say, that of the pioneers of the Center, no other has acquired a wider or better influence, or been more deservedly honored, than James H. Miner. The esteem and confidence reposed in him by his fellow-citizens, expressed through the ballot box and otherwise during his thirty years of active participation in public affairs, will sustain the highest commendation of which words are capable.

The removal of D. B. Priest, to Viroqua, soon after his settlement in the Center, was an irreparable loss. No man, in so short a time, acquired so strong a hold upon his associates, and no other has bequeathed to the political lore of the county so rich a fund of campaign anecdotes. One might disagree with Priest, but he could not dislike him. He was generous to a foe and unalterably faithful to a friend.

It would afford me much pleasure to extend this list—to include many other names to me known to merit particular mention for invaluable services in the development of the village. Indeed I would like to include also the names of many deserving friends in other parts of the county; but this I must forego, assured that the names of all such will be duly enrolled in this History by others.

ABATING THE SALE OF LIQUORS AS A NUISANCE.

At one time, in the early day, Pat Meehan, on the J. L. Fogo corner, and Michael Carmichael, at the bowling-alley near the Sid Rose house, as vendors of intoxicants, were persistently besieged by most of their neighbors to forsake their calling. Appeal and numerous legal prosecutions had been unavailing. At that juncture, A. C. Eastland came to them with a new doctrine, which he expounded with so much ability as to enlist the co-operation of almost the entire community. It was that of "abating the sale of intoxicating liquors as a nuisance," under the authority of the board of health. The then venerable E. P. Young, a Presbyterian elder, and the Rev. B. L. Jackson, pastor of the Methodist Church, at that time ex-officio members of the board, became his zealous coadjutors and trusted lieutenants. The lodge of Good Templars was also committed to the doctrine. A deputy sheriff (David Ellsworth) was armed with the proper order and fortified by an indemnifying bond. With a small posse, he laid hold upon Meehan's "spirits" and moistened the ground with them, but not without conflict. The ball of a rifle in the hands of the good-wife of the supposed offender against the peace and dignity of the State of Wisconsin inflicted a flesh wound in the arm of the valiant deputy. I will leave it to others—perhaps to Mr. Eastland himself—to finish this story, except to say that the sale of intoxicating liquors was "abated as a nuisance" for a few days only.

Michael Carmichael was more diplomatic. He yielded to the entreaties of the ladies. One beautiful summer morning, followed by the brave men and flanked by the ever-watchful boys, the ladies of the village, led by Mrs. James Holden—a lady of fine presence and superior tact—marched upon his establishment. He received them with gracious courtesy and patiently listened to the address by Mrs. Holden—to quit the traffic and claim his place among the best and foremost of good and useful men, etc. In response, he declared his willingness to do and to be, according to the request, but protested that he could not, in justice to himself, make the proposed sacrifice of his stock. Negotiations were promptly concluded for its purchase, and the soil of the Hamilton settlement received a baptism of fire-water. But Carmichael's retirement from the unhallowed vocation was of short duration.

THE PRESS OF THE COUNTY.

RICHLAND COUNTY OBSERVER.

A thrill of delight pervaded the new village of Richland Center one day in October, 1855, when the material from which the Observer was to be printed was unloaded at the back door of Nelson's store, now the corner building of Walworth's collection of tenement houses. Only those who lived in that period can fully appreciate what a publication of a newspaper at home then meant. The inhabitants of a new-born town could not then read at breakfast the news of the preceding day, or at their suppers learn from the evening papers what had transpired in the busy world while they were employed in their pursuits of the day not yet ended. "Patent insides" and "plate" were yet unknown, and newspapers could not be planted at every cross roads as easily as now.

The founder of the Observer—at first a six-column folio—Israel Sanderson, was a man who could overcome obstacles. I shall never forget a phrase in his salutatory. He “started the Observer,” he said, “without a bonus or the promise of one.” Bonus, short as it is, was a big word, but Mr. S.’s use of it furnished an index to his character. He was positive in his convictions, courageous and independent in support of them, and above all superior to that belittling sort of financial help which too often curses the press. An inventory of the printing material he bought and brought to the Center, rather than be under obligations to any one, will impart a knowledge of the man, besides being interesting in a specific way: The press for the paper was the only article which had not been cast aside by others. It was a first-class Adams, and is still in use, in Mineral Point. He had collected the type from a cast-off dress of the Chicago Tribune, and he produced as good work from it as has ever been shown in the county. His job press was a Ramage, of small size—an invention of long ago. It too had seen its best days, but Mr. Sanderson did good work on it. He was an excellent printer and a versatile editor.

In order to follow the Ramage—then as now an historic thing—to its present post of service, a digression will be timely.

The Ramage and much of the original outfit of the Observer—then part of the Observer newspaper office—became my property ten years later. About nine years after that (in 1874), I “retired” the Ramage, but subsequently intrusted it to a friend and former foreman—C. F. Trevitt, a justice of the peace at Blanchardville, LaFayette county, who is yet, I believe, printing on it justice court blanks, etc.

Mr. Sanderson sold the Observer, in the summer of 1857, to J. Walworth, with whom he had been associated in business in Monroe, who published it until November 19, 1863. By him it was then sold to Gilbert L. Laws, Samuel C. Hyatt and William J. Waggoner—the latter my elder brother. Those gentlemen had been in the army. Neither was a practical printer, but they were fast friends and hard workers, and did well with the enterprise while they were connected with it.

On May 12, 1864, I purchased the interest of Mr. Laws, and a week later my brother and I purchased Mr. Hyatt’s interest. Thereafter, until July, 1865, the Observer was published by W. J. & J. H. Waggoner. At that time, by exchange of joint mercantile and newspaper interests, he became merchant and I the sole proprietor of the Observer. My first intimate knowledge of or personal interest in the newspapers of the county, however, dates back to January 14, 1857, when I entered the Observer office as “printer’s devil.” When Sanderson sold to Walworth, I remained with the latter a few months—climbing from “devil” to “foreman,” by the change. My contract with Mr. Sanderson will indicate something of the changes of a quarter of a century, particularly in the matter of apprenticeships to trades: For the first year I was to be “boarded” and clothed; for the second, to receive $5 per month instead of clothing; for the third, $7 per month instead of clothing. But at the end of six months Mr. S., who had voluntarily expended in that time four dollars for clothing for me, also voluntarily advanced my compensation to $4 per month, for the remainder of the year, instead of clothing; and with Mr. Walworth’s advent, a month or two later, I obtained the remuneration per month promised for the third year! I should also observe here that at the time of acquiring proprietary interest in the Observer, in 1864, I was yet in the army (on duty at Madison as acting quartermaster for the then active recruiting service), and took little or no part in its vexatious responsibilities until I became its sole proprietor, the following year.

My first experience as editor and publisher of the Observer was destined to be brief. October 26, 1865, I sold it to W. M. Fogo and J. M. Hoskins, on account of the recurrence of inflammation of the eyes, which has twice since driven me from newspaper work. Those gentlemen admitted Mr. Walworth to the partnership, from which Mr. Hoskins soon retired, and Walworth & Fogo continued the publication until August 8, 1867, when the Observer was consolidated with The Live Republican—the two papers taking the name Richland County Republican.

RICHLAND COUNTY REPUBLICAN.

The first issue of the consolidated paper, under the new name, was made August 15, 1867. The consolidation, owing to peculiar circumstances, entailed upon me a financial burden of which I did not see the end for five years. During that period I was the editor and manager and half-owner of the Republican. C. H. Smith and G. L. Laws were half-owners a few months, to be succeeded by Geo. D. Stevens, whose interest I bought November 28, 1872, and was again sole proprietor.

On December 11, 1873, I admitted W. M. Fogo into partnership, and Waggoner & Fogo conducted the business until September 1, 1874, when I was again compelled to relinquish newspaper work. I sold to G. L. Laws, who was succeeded a couple of years later by O. G. Munson. The Republican was published by Fogo & Munson until January 1, 1881, when it was consolidated with the Observer, the consolidated papers taking the name—the Republican and Observer.

THE REPUBLICAN AND OBSERVER.

Fogo & Munson became and have since remained the editors and proprietors of the consolidated papers, representing the only continuous publication in the county dating back to that cold November evening, in 1855, when Israel Sanderson issued the first edition of the Observer. The Republican and Observer is double the size of the parent, and is otherwise vastly improved upon the Richland County Observer of 1855. It is creditable alike to the publishers and the widely and favorably-known commercial mart of which it is a faithful representative.

RICHLAND COUNTY DEMOCRAT.

The election of a democrat or two to county offices invested with printing patronage encouraged the founding, late in the fall of 1857, of the Richland County Democrat, by Wm. Pitt Furey, a zealous and able champion of democracy. The residence of the editor and the office of the democrat were in the main part of the Bulard dwelling-house, which then fronted north, on the same lot. But Richland county afforded poor picking for two papers; besides, it was radically republican in political sentiment, and the Democrat yielded up the ghost with the expiration of its lease upon the public printing. During its existence, however, a ferocious struggle was made for the county printing, which was two or three times afterwards imitated—with positive damage to the interests of the publishers and actual loss to the patrons of the local newspapers.

THE ZOUAVE.

Soon after the demise of the democrat, the material on which it had been printed was used in the publication of The Zouave, by a Mr. Godfrey. A lady whose pseudonym was Lisle Lester, and who had considerable reputation for literary work, was the editress. That paper was also short-lived.

THE RICHLAND PRESS,

by D. T. Lindley, was the next newspaper venture, with the same printing material for its basis. The initial number was issued November 1, 1860, and it was typographically neat and spicy in its local news. It soon surrendered, however, to the inevitable, and the printing material which was practically responsible for the inception of the two papers last named was thereafter sold to Prairie du Chien and Mineral Point parties, thereby abridging the opportunities of ambitious printers and others in Richland county to wield the pen, pro bono publico, for some years to come.

THE LIVE REPUBLICAN.

A combination of circumstances conducive to mutual interest in the enterprise made Ira S. Haseltine and myself editors and proprietors of The Live Republican, the publication of which was begun December 13, 1866, and terminated August 8, 1867, by consolidation with the Observer. As the republican nominee for the assembly, in the fall of '66, Mr. H. was spoken of as "an unwelcome necessity" by the Observer—the avowed republican organ. That made him—notwithstanding his election—ambitious of a seat on the editorial tripod, and I was desirous of resuming newspaper work. After we had decided upon uniting forces, and when I was on the way to Mazomanie to purchase the printing material for the office, we chanced to meet under the little tree which yet stands, I believe, on the knoll in the Sextonville road near the Hiram Welton house, on either side of which a wagon track is maintained. "What shall we name our paper?" he enquired. I had not got that far, and replied accordingly. "What do you say to calling it The Live Republican?" he then asked. The name seemed to me to be at once appropriate and talismanic, and it was unanimously adopted! Mr. H.'s characteristic contributions to the paper, and his industry and zeal in canvassing for it, did much to establish it; but with the consolidation before mentioned, he went out of the newspaper business.

RICHLAND COUNTY SENTINEL.

In 1869, (about two years after the consolidation of the Observer and The Live Republican), Walworth & Fogo began the publication of the Sentinel, of which Mr. Walworth retained control until the printing material of the office was transferred to Boscobel, two or three years later, when Mr. W.'s connection with the press of the county ceased. Mr. Fogo soon retired from the Sentinel, and his place as associate editor and manager was afterwards filled in turn by E. E. Pickard, C. B. Walworth, and perhaps others. The Sentinel was the oracle of a local "retrenchment and reform" party and made a vigorous fight for the county printing and the county offices. It is within the recollection of the people of the county that the newspaper war of that period was not well calculated to promote the Christian virtues. I may say this because I was one of the combatants, and because I have long since forgiven and repented of what should have been left out of print.

A LONE ROCK PAPER.

For some months in the years '75-6, Fogo & Laws issued from the office of the Republican a paper for circulation in Lone Rock and vicinity, called the Lone Rock Pilot, of which J. W. Fuller was the local representative. The enterprise was creditable to all concerned in it, but not remunerative enough to become a permanent thing.

THE OBSERVER.

After two years of rest and restlessness, I again enlisted in journalism by founding The Observer, the first number of which was issued on December 21, 1876. The venture was a marked success. The Observer achieved a larger circulation, and did a larger business, the first year, than I had previously been awarded in my newspaper experience in the county, in a single year. It was published a little more than four years, when it was consolidated with the Republican, as hereinbefore stated. In its fourth year I admitted N. B. Burch to a proprietary interest, and he was the responsible publisher and the local editor. C. E. and C. J. Glasier were its printers and publishers the third year, and I the owner, as I had been from the first. I was the responsible editor throughout the four years; but having, at the end of its first year, been appointed to the position of chief clerk of the State land office, at Madison, to the duties of which I gave personal attention, I necessarily availed myself of the assistance of others in the local and business departments of the paper until the consolidation was made which relieved me of a burdensome care and undoubtedly terminated my connection with the press of Richland county. Mr. Burtch and the Glasiers, and others, labored with zeal, in their several relations to the paper, for which those named were compensated by generous patronage. I have not forgotten that a few friends made contributions of labor and goodwill which placed me under life-long obligations.

LATER-DAY NEWSPAPERS.

Brief mention of the later-day newspapers will be required to complete this sketch.

The Richland Rustic of to-day, by J. A. Smith, as I remember the chain, is the successor to the Richland Democrat of '79 or '80, which took the place of Sat's Pine River Pilot, started in the spring of '79. Sat (M. Fletcher Satterlee) received his first lessons in the art preservative in the Observer office, in 1864-5, and was employed at various times in the newspaper offices in the Center. He is full of wit and humor, and a first-class pressman and printer. But the odds were against him and he was obliged to quit the field in a few months, leaving it to Otis H. Brand to publish for a short time the Richland Democrat. Mr. Smith gathered up the fragments and soon established the Rustic, which is abundantly able to speak for itself.

There was started, in Excelsior, in 1879, a small paper—The Teacher's Press, I think—by Ira D. Hurlburt. Its circulation was local and it did not long survive the vicissitudes of journalism. After a short time it wandered into the greenback fold, and died with its party.

The Richland Union Democrat is a recent and the last of the newspaper ventures of the county. As I have seen but a single issue, I can say only that it made a good appearance and gave promise of long life.

POLITICAL AND OTHER DISTINCTIONS.

Of course, every newspaper in the county, dead or alive, was and is "devoted to the interest of the people;" and that all have deserved well of the people, and have exerted a vast influence, is attested by the recognized industry, sobriety, intelligence and prosperity of the inhabitants of the county. But, according to the spirit of the age, each was and is more or less pronounced in political opinions. I have already indicated the political proclivities of most of them, but the value of the history of the past will be increased by a brief classification here. The Richland County Observer, The Live Republican, the Richland County Republican and The Observer, were advocates of the principles of the republican party, as is The Republican and Observer of to-day; the Richland County Democrat and the Richland Democrat were, as is the Richland Union Democrat, democratic in politics—the names indicating their political complexions. The Zouave, the Richland Press and Sat's Pine River Pilot, like the Richland Rustic, floated non-partisan flag, as did also the Lone Rock paper; the Richland County Sentinel, with republican predilections, championed certain local projects; and the Excelsior Teachers Press drifted into greenback company, as before stated.

UNRECORDED NAMES.

Mr. Sanderson was efficiently and ably assisted in founding the Richland County Observer by William Nelson, who, as a printer and counselor, rendered invaluable service. He was Mr. S.'s brother-in-law—a young man of enviable physical perfection and mental powers. His robust frame, his indifference to conventionalities, and his iron will, attracted favorable comment. Very soon after Mr. S.'s sale of the Observer, he also departed. He was also Mr. S.'s lieutenant in founding the Grant County Witness, at Platteville, in 1859, and in 1860 he and I published, for six months or more, the Wisconsin State Rights, at Monroe. He bore an honorable part in the war for the Union—being brevetted captain for heroic conduct; was a prisoner of war for eighteen months—enduring the privations which killed hundreds and even thousands of his fellow prisoners. After the Viroqua tornado, in 1865, he became the editor of the Vernon County Censor, was elected to the state senate in 1871; became editor of the LaCrosse Leader (daily and weekly) in 1873, and was appointed United States marshal of Utah in 1875. He resigned that office in two or three years and has since been editor of the Salt Lake Tribune.

The connection of my brother William J. with the press of the county was not limited to the period heretofore mentioned. During two or three winters of my absence, when chief clerk of the State senate, at Madison, he had immediate charge of the Republican office. He has twice been county superintendent of schools, and for some years past has been merchant, miller, farmer and postmaster at Viola. My brothers Edwin B. and Joseph M. were also valuable helpers of the county newspapers. Edwin B. has also been interested in an Iowa paper, and in 1877-8 was editor and publisher of the Whitehall Times, in this State. He was also in his country's service—enlisting when eighteen years old. With a large number of fellow-soldiers, some of them also from Richland, he was made a prisoner of war at the battle of Atlanta, Georgia, and endured seven months of the cruelties and hardships of Andersonville and Florence. He was commissioned a lieutenant of his company about that time, but of course could not be mustered. Joseph M., when able to work, was a superior compositor and a faithful and zealous helper.

Jay Hamilton, who had learned the trade in the office of the Republican, was for a short time local editor of that paper and afterwards for a short time local editor of The Observer.

SUBSEQUENT CAREER AND PRESENT WHEREABOUTS OF THE EARLIER-DAY JOURNALISTS.

Soon after leaving the Center, Israel Sanderson founded the Grant County Witness, at Platteville, employing the same industry, prudence and courage that served him so well in founding the Richland County Observer. A few years later, he established a job-printing office in the city of Decatur, Illinois; and when next and last I heard from him, he was engaged in market-gardening in Du Quoin, Illinois. About that time, D. B. Priest, who had moved to Sparta, became the owner of the Sparta Eagle. He tendered to Mr. Sanderson such interest in the enterprise as the latter might desire. Mr. S. replied, in substance, that he "was not then and never expected to be again poor enough to resume journalistic work." Only those persons who have spent the better years of their lives as faithful and honest editors and publishers can correctly interpret and feelingly appreciate the sentiment underlying Mr. Sanderson's reply.

William P. Furey, of the Democrat of '57, afterwards published a paper in Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, and was two or three times an officer of the Pennsylvania assembly—democratic, of course. My impression is that he died some years ago. The "Lisle Lester" of The Zouave went to California, where she added to her reputation as a writer. I am unable to say more of her, or anything of Mr. Godfrey, the publisher of The Zouave.

D. T. Lindley has had a varied experience, always to his credit as a printer, and mostly in Northwestern Wisconsin. He is now and has been for some time the editor and publisher of the Elroy Tribune.

Of Mr. Walworth and the others who are yet living in the Center, or not far away, I will not be expected to make particular mention, as each is entitled to and will certainly be accorded due prominence elsewhere in the History of Richland County.

Several months prior to the expiration of my term of office at the state capitol, viz., in July, 1881, I bought some shares of stock in the Free Press Company, of the city of Eau Claire, with the purpose of becoming the editor of the daily and weekly issues of the Free Press. In due time, I moved to this city, to make it my permanent home, and for the last two years have discharged the duties incumbent upon the president of Free Press Company and the responsible editor of the Free Press. I have also largely increased my original interest in the Free Press property, and it seems more than probable that Time with his scythe will find me here, by the desk in the inner sanctum on which this contribution to the History of Richland County has been written by the hand of another, at my dictation.

I believe this sketch of the press and the other historical matter herewith contributed, under various headings—although drawn almost entirely from memory—to be substantially, if not precisely, accurate. In writing so much of detail, I have yielded to the urgent requests of many old friends, whom to serve is a personal gratification.
